The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"The Government of India have not said that. I am telling the Honourable Member what the Government of India have said. I am not going into the merits of the thing for the reason that my knowledge of Calcutta is very small and probably my Honourable Friend's knowledge is not much greater. What I am saying here is, here is a tax proposed, it was put before the Government of India who vetoed it. If you pass the tax and pass the law, they will have no other alternative but to veto the whole Bill and the whole Bill will have to go. By the time this order of the Government of India came, the Select Committee had begun its sittings and it was put before the Select Committee and it decided to defer to the wishes of the Government of India. I am mentioning these facts to show why it was dropped. For these reasons I cannot accept the Honourable Member's proposal. I cannot go into the merits. I cannot say it is unreasonable, because if I say it is unreasonable, you will ask why did you propose it."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR:—"When did this order of the Government of India come?"

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"July 1918."

The Hon'ble Sir FRANCIS SPRING:—"When I thought of speaking on this amendment, I intended strongly to support this taxation. The Honourable Member has not spoken on the merits of the taxation. It has all the merits that a tax should have. It does not cost anything to collect, its incidence on the individual is small, and its results are quite valuable. I was not aware at that time that the Government of India had already made a pronouncement in regard to the principle of a terminal railway tax. I never heard of this pronouncement of theirs before, and have not the slightest hesitation in saying that it is an extraordinarily short-sighted and wrong pronouncement. Had I been with the Government of India, I certainly would never have consented to such a pronouncement as this. So far as I understand, they have allowed it in Calcutta. The principles which the Government of India have quoted as justifying the levy of such a tax do not apply to Calcutta. It is not a pilgrim centre any more than Madras. I am told that when we send up the Bill for acceptance by the Government of India they have no power of throwing out one clause, but have either to accept the whole Bill or throw it out. I do not therefore wish to press my views."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"I wish to say a word, Your Excellency. The Government in their memorandum, dated 21st July 1913, drew the attention of the Corporation to the unsatisfactory stage of their financial position. In reply to that the Corporation recommended this terminal tax as one of the sources which may be tapped. I have just heard the Honourable Member quoting from the Government of India resolution disallowing this provision, apparently supposing that Madras was not a place of pilgrimage. But may I remind the Honourable Member in charge that Triplicane and Mylapore are centres of pilgrimage, and if they are to be satisfied on that ground we can satisfy the Government of India that these are well-known places of pilgrimage. If the seat of the Government is not itself a place of religious pilgrimage, it is a place of pilgrimage for many other purposes. If the test is to be whether it is a place of pilgrimage, I think Madras can satisfy that test. San Thomé is a place of pilgrimage for Christians. It has been the seat of a very ancient saint and so also is Little Mount. In fact it is the worst of the places of pilgrimage. Perhaps the Government of India are not aware of it. May I not urge upon this Government if this Bill goes with the support of this Government with an explanation added, may we not hope not only hope but expect, having regard to the volume of opinion in favour of such imposition, the Government of India would give their sanction to this tax and not wreck the Bill? Will they not think of the consequences? They have also, I suppose, some sense of responsibility. Will they throw out the Bill simply on that ground of their opposition to the terminal tax? If they are likely to throw out the Bill, are we to be frightened? I rather think the Government of India will realize their responsibility if the Bill goes in this form and they may see that this is a tax which cannot be objected to at all in principle. Madras wants to show that the Government of India's opinion does not stand in the way of this Council forming its own opinion in this matter."

The Hon'ble Mr. T. RICHMOND:—"May I inquire whether there are any precedents of the local legislature passing a Bill containing measures not approved by the Government of India and the Government of India vetoing the whole Bill?"

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"I do not think there is any precedent."

The Hon'ble the Rev. G. PITTENDRIGH:—"I would agree with the Hon'ble Sir Francis Spring that all our efforts should be made to secure this particular provision. I was the more anxious to give my support to this motion because I was compelled to vote against the last motion as it would not be in the interests of temperance. But as my friend the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar suggests, is there no method of bringing pressure to bear upon the Government of India in a matter like this? That is what I wish to ask. It is possible in any way to bring the views of this Council forcibly to bear on the Government of India or on the Viceroy so that this tax may be secured."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. KRISHNA RAO:—"May I say a word in reply? The only objection which has been urged against this proposal is that the Government of India have opposed it and that they would veto the whole Bill if the Council should pass this amendment. I make an appeal to this Council that in the passing of a Bill of this description, we should express our opinions freely and frankly as to whether we are satisfied with the measure and whether it is salutary. We may express our opinion as to the desirability or not of imposing this tax. Even the Government of India have stated that in the case of some centres of pilgrimage, it will be justified. The Hon'ble Mr. T. Ranga Achariyar has pointed out that we can even make out a case that this is a place of pilgrimage, and that we can appeal to the Government of India. I do not wish to put the case on that ground. I will place it on a higher ground. If this Council situated as it is, representing various interests and communities, should deliberately come to the conclusion that, in the best interests of the Corporation, a terminal tax should be levied with the sanction of the Governor in Council and the Governor-General in Council, may we not hope that the Government of India will reconsider their position and accept our request? Are we to suppose that the Government of India will be so unreasonable as to take the view, that simply because subject to their sanction and that of the Governor in Council, we have added a terminal tax, the whole Bill with 400 and odd sections and several schedules should be thrown away? I do not think they would take such an unreasonable view. If that misfortune should happen, I do not think we should shrink from our responsibility and from facing that misfortune."

The Hon'ble Sir GORDON FRASER:—"I want to ask one question before we vote upon this amendment. Does this amendment rank like the previous one, if this one is passed, will it be hung up for a long time?"

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"There is no good of our saying that the Government of India will be reasonable. We do not know if they will take this view; we have already consulted them and they have given a plain answer."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR:—"May I know whether it is with reference to the Madras Corporation that that reply was given?"

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"This Bill deals only with Madras."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"We have clearly consulted them on this matter and they have vetoed it. We have no doubt as to their opinion. That is a fact the Council must take into consideration. If the Bill will not be allowed to be passed into law, with that provision in it, there is no use. We have already consulted the Government of India in the matter and we are bound to accept their decision. It is a question whether it is worth while for this Council to vote in favour of such a motion."

The amendment was put and lost.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT :—"I understand that the Hon'ble Sir Francis Spring is going to move amendment No. 56."

The Hon'ble Sir FRANCIS SPRING :—"I shall move it as an amendment to clause 102."

Clause 98 was allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Clause 99.

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR :—"The amendment which I have the honour to move runs thus :—

"In clause 99 (2), after the words 'section 102' add the following words :—'and subject to a maximum of twenty per cent in all.'

"This relates to the property tax which is to be levied by the corporation in order to carry on its work. Your Excellency, the proposal according to the Select Committee is that the corporation should have power to put any percentage of tax on house and landed property in the city. 'It is given full self-government.' That will be the answer which the Honourable Member in charge will give when he rises to reply : 'Here it is, look at the gift we are making to the corporation ; we are giving them full liberty to tax themselves as they like.' But when it comes to fixing the pay of the commissioner you say : 'No, we will put the limit.' When it comes to fixing the pay of the Revenue Officer and the Health Officer you say : 'We will put a limit.' No liberty there. As to signing contracts you say : 'We will give the power to the commissioner.' He may sign any number of contracts up to Rs. 10,000. 'He will set the tune, you, corporation pay for it.' That is really the effect of all the sections which we have passed. Any number of contracts up to Rs. 10,000 and Rs. 50,000 will be passed by the commissioner and by the Standing Committee of seven members respectively. We have been trying to enhance the sources of revenue, but unfortunately you will notice that every one of the suggestions, although accepted in principle, on account of technical objection was vetoed. Of course, we are unable to carry any suggestion to improve the financial resources of the corporation.

"It is now admitted, as I just now read,—as early as 1913—, that Your Excellency's government recognized the stringency of the financial condition. That is well recognized by everybody, and I need not dilate upon that point ; but what is the taxation which is left ? The property tax. The property tax in this town, if you trace its history, has always been subject to a maximum beyond which the corporation cannot tax itself. It has always been subject to a maximum one of the Municipal Acts that we know. It is so in Bombay and Calcutta, and also in the district municipalities. Everywhere a maximum is fixed, beyond which the local body cannot tax itself. The Government are very wise in that. They know perfectly well that the resources other than the property tax are limited. But on the other hand they are throwing an unlimited burden on the corporation which the corporation is not to control, but somebody else appointed by the Governor in Council. He is to have full control ; he must have money and therefore he has to get it. He will say when the budget comes : 'I have passed a project and I have sanctioned estimates and I have entered into these contracts ; the Standing Committee has passed it, here is the budget, sanction it.' The corporation has full control over the budget, subject to the provisions of the Act. The corporation will have therefore to find the money for financing the obligations incurred by others. You say : 'We give you unlimited powers, go on ; why are you afraid ? You may tax yourselves 10 per cent or 20 per cent or 30 or 60, 70, 99 or 100 per cent.

12TH FEBRUARY 1919.]

(Mr. Ranga Achariyar ; Mr. Yaqub Hasan.)

It will be impossible to go beyond 100 per cent. Tax yourselves to bleed yourselves. You go on raising. The Governor in Council will come down under the extraordinary powers and say, carry this out ; we give you a special engineer ; we will send for him from England, we will give you a special health officer, carry out improvements ; we will give you a special sanitary engineer, to cleanse the Cooum, so that the city may be quite free and good for all of us. The occupiers will grumble. We give you unlimited powers to tax yourselves. That is the gift which this Bill is making. I want to make it perfectly plain to the Government that the only gift of responsible government is this liberty to tax ourselves. We get a free constitution, a good constitution, namely a lower franchise which is an important education as Your Excellency said a few minutes ago. But what about the functions and powers that we will have, it will be worth while to look.

"As I pointed out, there has been a maximum limit all along. It was 5 per cent when the first charter was given to the Madras Corporation in the 18th century. We are a very ancient corporation. Then again it was 6 per cent ; then 7½ per cent ; afterwards 10 per cent, 16 per cent and now 18½ per cent. That is the limit which we have now reached. It will be interesting for the Council to know the total revenue realized by the corporation under this new Act, Lord Curzon's gift of 1904, how our revenue stood and how the property tax stood and how we have been progressing at a terrible pace in imposing this taxation on houses. I want to take the Council for a few minutes into my confidence. I shall give the figures of the total revenue, the revenue from property only and the incidence of the tax on the population—

"So in the space of nearly 13 years from Rs. 1-13-7 per head of the population it has risen to Rs. 4-8-9. At a recent open air meeting of the rate-payers of the city, one vernacular speaker put it rather humorously that if the Government give the municipality liberty to tax themselves, there is always a tendency to go up and never come down. So he asked very pointedly the municipal commissioners among the audience whether we came to a reduction at any time. We had to confess we had never exercised our liberty in that direction. We always exercise it in the upward direction and never in the downward direction. That is the tendency of all tax gatherers and of every one who wants to collect the tax for one purpose or other and it is so in the case of everybody. The answer of the Honourable Member will be 'we give you full liberty.' As a practical man I will ask him whether it is in his experience that there ever was a reduction. The only example of reduction was in the salt tax on account of the volume of public opinion, and again it was raised. That is the only tax I remember where any tax was ever reduced. But be that as it may, I have to point out that the present percentage is a high percentage and we are not giving them any other source of revenue. On the other hand, the burden thrown upon them is very great. If you are not giving them any other financial resources, you are asking them to bleed themselves, and may I add they will have to bleed themselves to death if the burden is to be thrown merely upon the house-owners. I do not think it would be right to throw the burden on the corporation. I do not think it is right not to fix the maximum when the corporation has all along been objecting to this liberty being given. It is not safe to leave it to them. After all, we commit the rate-payers numbering three lakhs to the tender mercies of a small body with liberty to tax them as they like. The Hon'ble Mr. Thonger pointed out, when the Bill was introduced, that if you leave the property in a state of uncertainty, nobody will be able to know what the tax will be next year and you will be discouraging people from investing in property. As Mr. Govinddas and Chathurbujadas said the other day, he was himself trying to dispose of his property. Speaking for myself if this Bill is going to become law, I would dispose of all property in Madras and buy property elsewhere. I am sure people taking a business view will certainly do that. It will be absolutely mischievous to leave it without any statutory limit. I propose a reasonable limit : can you ever tax any property more than 20 per cent of its value, which is 1½ per cent more than the existing limit ? We began, I think, with 5 per cent and now I say let us give them liberty to tax themselves up to 20 per cent. We do not want this freedom. Freedom for what ? Freedom for killing ourselves ? We do not want it."

The Hon'ble YAQUB HASAN SAHIB Bahadur :—"I beg to second this amendment. Till a few days ago, I was against this maximum being imposed on the taxation. I was of opinion that confidence should be placed in the members of the corporation that they will not raise the tax on property beyond the limit up to which it can bear. If you place this maximum on this taxation, it will mean that we have no confidence in the councillors of Madras. We are afraid that some day they will raise the taxation to 50 per cent on property, especially when there will be more of the poor classes of people in the corporation and not so many moneyed people or property people in it. The danger may be that these people who do not have property may raise it to a large extent. That will mean want of confidence. So till recently I was of the opinion that there should be no maximum fixed on the taxation limit; whether it is property tax or any other tax, freedom should be given to the Council. But now I find that our resources are not adequate and the corporation is not to be given liberty to raise revenues in any other way. The result will be that the property tax will have to be raised whether we like it or not. It has this liberty. The Government themselves will call upon us to exercise that liberty and raise the tax and then we will be compelled to do it. If this limit is placed upon the property tax, we cannot go beyond that, and we will have to find some other source for raising our income and then we will have to come before the Legislative Council to amend this Act in order to find other sources of revenue. From this point of view I support this resolution which I was reluctant to support before."

(Mr. Yaqub Hasan ; Mr. Krishna Rao ;

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. KRISHNA RAO:—"Your Excellency, the only possible argument that may be advanced by the Hon'ble Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar in opposing this amendment is that there ought not to lurk in the mind of anybody any sort of suspicion against the corporation, when it is given a free hand in the matter of imposing the property tax. No other argument can be reasonably suggested. But before that aspect of the question is considered, we may take a comprehensive view of the frame-work of the whole of this Act. I would ask the Hon'ble Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar to tell us if this Act has been so framed as to give the Corporation large and unrestricted powers, or whether it is in respect of this particular question only that it is proposed to give it unlimited and unrestricted powers. I for one would have been in a position to support the view taken by the Select Committee to give the corporation absolute liberty to tax, if the Act had been so framed as to make the corporation a really self-governing institution so as to enable it to regulate its own expenditure freely and collect all its taxes, not this tax alone, but other taxes also, according to its pleasure. But the Act has not been framed on that footing. The Act is not calculated to make it a really self-governing institution in this respect. As the Honourable Mover of the amendment said, it is hedged in with so many limitations and conditions and it is to be governed by a commissioner appointed not by the Corporation, but by the Governor in Council who will have independent powers; and limits have been prescribed for the salaries of various officers; the maximum and the minimum limits have been prescribed for profession tax; and scales of fees have been prescribed for tolls and for taxes on animals and vehicles. When limits have been prescribed in the case of all other taxes provided for in the Act, on what different principle can it be suggested that a limit need not be suggested so far as the property tax is concerned? If the corporation were left a little more free in the matter of taxation, if other sources of revenue were also shown to the corporation, I can understand the reasonableness of giving it a wide latitude in this matter. How does the matter stand at present? The corporation after considering this question at considerable length made a number of suggestions for the improvement of its financial resources; and the suggestions include a number of taxes, a tobacco duty and other things, but they have not been accepted. Their financial resources have not been improved. If in the case of the property tax no limit is prescribed, there is a real danger that owners of property will be seriously prejudiced and handicapped. In respect of other sources, they have not been able to succeed in inducing the Government to give them a free hand. They cannot undertake big works. A perusal of the last administration report of the Corporation shows that they have various schemes of expenditure. The Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar has often pointed out that it is in a state of bankruptcy, and that without the help of large Government grants they cannot get on with their work. In these circumstances, the Corporation will be placed in an unfortunate and miserable position. The question is whether the important works that they have undertaken, the drainage and the water-works are to be stopped to the detriment of the rate-payers or whether they are to push up the house property tax beyond all reasonable limits so as to harass the rate-payers. That position will be very unfortunate. They will have either to stop these works or increase the tax though it be oppressive. That position will be an unfortunate and miserable position. It is but desirable that they should not be placed in that position for any length of time. For this reason it is desirable to fix a limit."

The Hon'ble Mr. J. H. THONGER:—"The last time I had an opportunity of speaking on this matter was when the Bill was originally introduced in this Council. This matter received the careful consideration of the Trades Association and we were strongly averse to a maximum not being fixed. We came to that conclusion purely as a body of business men. In carrying on our business we think it reasonable to fix prices so that everybody knows what he has to pay. Similarly in this case of property, a man should know what his tax is, because it affects him and his chances of disposing of his property. We cannot find a ready market for property if overhanging it there is uncertain taxation. We cannot find a ready market strongly support the adoption of this amendment. I may say, however, that I realize that even if we fix a maximum of 25 per cent, there is nothing to prevent the Corporation making it a myth by adopting an arbitrary valuation. But that is a matter which we can control."

The Hon'ble Dr. T. M. NAYAR:—"My Lord, the proposal in this Bill seems to have taken quite a new turn, because until very recently the proposal with regard to taxation and the liberty of municipal bodies to tax themselves was contained in the recommendation of the

(Dr. Nayar ; Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar.)

Decentralisation Commission, which is thus summarised in the famous Montagu-Chelmsford report: "The Decentralisation Commission recommended that municipalities should have full liberty to impose and alter taxation within the limits laid down by law, but that where the law prescribes no maximum rate, the sanction of an outside authority should be required to any increase." That was the prevailing opinion that there should be a maximum either fixed in the Act or there should be a superior sanctioning authority for raising the tax beyond that maximum limit, beyond the then existing limit. Then they go further and say: "It is hoped that nearly all boards will contain substantial elected majorities and in their case it is proposed to accept the Commission's recommendation though indebted boards should still obtain the sanction of higher authority before altering a tax." The principle of that will be accepted by any public authority who has to deal with the question of public finance. If a municipal board is indebted, if it has borrowed largely, it must have borrowed on the credit of something, that is on account of its tax, and if it is based on property tax, the stability of that property tax, and this tax must be maintained. If the maximum of that taxation is liable to be altered, without proper scrutiny, without superior control, the stability of the value of this tax will fluctuate. Therefore the Montagu-Chelmsford report rightly points out that indebted bodies should obtain the sanction of a superior authority before altering the maximum. If that principle is accepted—and it will be a very unfortunate if the Government depart from that principle—then you will have two very unfortunate alternatives. Either you should fix a maximum in the Act or every time the Madras municipality alters the rate it should obtain the sanction of the local Government. One of these alternatives is inevitable. If we have to choose between the two, I should prefer a maximum in the Act, because the Act once settled after proper discussion in a Council like this is more secure than the fluctuating opinion of the local Government in which the individual members change and their individual views on questions might change, and from year to year their opinions might vary. In order to have a steady view of the question, I should prefer to have a maximum limit. We have heard the expression of the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar's opinion and also the opinion of some other landlords in Madras that if the maximum taxation is left unsettled, they would rather sell their house property in Madras than subject themselves to this. I can quite understand that. A man when he purchases a house must have some idea of what maximum taxation is going to be. In every country it is more or less known what the maximum is going to be. Here it is going to be unlimited and for investing your money you must know what you will have to pay. This is an absolutely unjustifiable position for the Government to leave the corporation in. I thought this was the commencement of home-rule for the corporation, but home-rule cannot come in one corner. It only comes with regard to maximum taxation. I strongly object to the principle of this provision. The Madras Corporation has got a very big debt of about Rs. 70 or 80 lakhs and if all of a sudden you have no limit, there will be depreciation of house property, and there will be depreciation in the value of the tax. I do not think we have a right to do that. If the Government want to do it, you must first pay these debts and then raise fresh debts on the clear understanding what these taxation proposals are likely to be. Otherwise, you will not be acting quite honourably to the people who have invested in municipal debentures."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"I do not quite follow that argument."

The Hon'ble Dr. T. M. NAYAR:—"The argument is if you allow this, the property value deteriorates, and if that deteriorates, the amount of revenue deteriorates, and it is on the strength of this revenue you raise debts; and therefore you are sure to depreciate the value of the property on the strength of which you have borrowed which is not justifiable. It is contained in the summary of the Montagu-Chelmsford Report that indebted boards should obtain the sanction of higher authorities before altering the tax."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"For reducing it."

The Hon'ble Dr. T. M. NAYAR:—"For altering it. Alteration implies also reduction. The control of higher official authorities is necessary for that. The Government of Madras have been quoting the opinion of the Government of India freely when we proposed something which they disapproved, saying how can we give you that; now we propose something which they approve and I hope you will not start with your insubordination in this particular instance."

The Council then adjourned for a short interval.

The Council re-assembled at 3 p.m. and the discussion on the amendment No. 58 was resumed.

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"My task in opposing this amendment has been rendered very easy by the fact that the Honourable Mover has been so good as to anticipate and say what the objections are which I am likely to raise. It gives me great pleasure to say that he has anticipated me in quite a correct way. My objection really is that this is a matter which might well be left to each local body to decide for itself. Whatever we may do otherwise, the property tax will for a long time to come be the backbone of the finance of municipalities. It will be the main thing and all the other things will be merely subsidiary things. That will be the main thing whether you like it or not. That being so, I think this is a departure in the right direction. To leave it to each local body to determine up to what rate it should go, is a move in the right direction. The Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar has told us how from time to time the corporation went on increasing this tax. I think he gave us a

THE MADRAS CITY MUNICIPAL BILL, 1918.

(Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar ; Mr. Ranga Achariyar ; [12TH FEBRUARY 1919.
Mr. Siva Rao.)

number of figures saying that this went on increasing from so much to so much. Throughout this period, when this increase has been taking place, there has been this maximum. There has been this safeguard throughout the period when he complains that the property tax was being recklessly increased."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR :—"It would have gone even beyond if there were no maximum."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR :—"The existence of the maximum having given the Honourable Member so little protection, it is a matter for consideration whether he may not give the alternative of no maximum a trial. It may be that the circumstance that there is no maximum will sober the corporation in a way which the existence of the maximum has failed to do. When once the legislature puts a provision in the Act that we can tax up to a limit, the responsibility of the corporation is diluted. Suppose you put a maximum of 25 or 30 per cent, if you put a maximum, it has to be an outside maximum and not what the corporation can immediately do. It would mean what, for a period of 10, 15 or 20 years during which the Act is likely to be in operation, is likely to be the rate at which they may impose this property tax. That being so, it has to be put in at a rate which would provide for all reasonable contingencies. Suppose we now put it at 25 per cent. It means that hereafter it is open to those members of the corporation who want to raise it to say, 'there is no use of your saying that the Madras rate-payer cannot pay 25 per cent. The law says that we are able to pay up to 25 per cent.' That is our reason for having no maximum, that it will bring home to the corporation and the rate-payers a sense of responsibility which, to some extent, would be removed by the legislature taking upon itself this task of fixing a maximum as proposed. Also may I point out that under the new constitution, as it will soon be, we will have 50 councillors of whom 30 will be elected on a largely extended wide franchise, by all the various divisions, and of the remaining 20, 11 will be elected by institutions. In other words, we will have 41 out of 50 who owe their seats in some form or other to the citizens. Most of them will be property owners. It is a matter for consideration whether a council so constituted is likely to go forward in excessive zeal for putting on extra taxation. That is so far as the council is concerned. What about the Government? Suppose you put a maximum. The Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar says 'here is the Government continually asking us and pushing us to go forward.' Would you not be in a better position to resist this pressure if you had no maximum than if you had a maximum? If you had a maximum, the Government can tell the corporation, 'go to the maximum imposed by the law,' but if there is no maximum, the whole field is open to you and you can at any stage cry 'halt.' I am simply saying that the very argument urged by the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar is an argument for having no maximum. It will sober the members of the corporation and it will enable the rate-payers to put pressure upon them and to some extent it will strengthen their hands against the Government if there is no maximum than if there is a limit. If the maximum is to be put, it will have to be fairly high. I feel bound to oppose the amendment as put by the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar, namely, to fix a maximum and also to fix it at 20 per cent."

The Hon'ble Mr. P. SIVA RAO :—"Your Excellency, I strongly support the amendment moved by the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar. The issue before us is whether it is desirable to fix a maximum in regard to the property tax. I was wondering, when I went through the whole scheme of the Bill, when the other provisions of the Bill were so very illiberal when restrictions were placed upon this or that, why Government should have given complete autonomy in the matter of taxation regarding house property. That is what puzzled me most, and I was trying to find out a solution for it. Now I find solution for it in the speech of the Honourable Member in charge. He said at the outset that the property tax being the sinews of municipal finance, we must apply the principle of self-determination and so each local body, each municipality should have the power to determine for itself whether it can impose any amount as it liked. Now that means: I cannot help thinking to myself that this unlimited power, unlimited latitude given to the municipal corporation will have very untoward effect especially under the present circumstances. The corporation is in sore want of money. It has been brought to our notice that the corporation is heavily indebted and under these circumstances, if this dangerous latitude of raising the property tax to any extent is to be given to members of the corporation, is it likely that they would use the power discreetly, considerately and in the interests of the rate-payers of the town? There is always a temptation to raise it especially when the law allows it; and when they cannot keep up normal standards of expenditure, there is always a temptation to fall back upon this source of revenue which has been described by the Honourable Member in charge as the backbone of municipal finance. Your Excellency, members of the municipal corporation should be placed beyond all temptation. It is already a heavy burden on the rate-payers of the town."

"In the interests of the rate-payers I protest very strongly against any unlimited power being given to the corporation. Turning to the policy laid down by the Government of India and within the limits laid down by the law, local bodies including city municipalities should have the power to levy taxation and they are strongly in favour of limits to be laid down by the statute. I do not see any reason whatever why that policy should be deviated from in this case."

12TH FEBRUARY 1919.]

(Mr. Siva Rao ; Mr. M. Ramachandra Rao ;
Mr. Richmond.)

There is also one other consideration, the risky investment and the tendency that the townspeople have been already showing, to part with their house property. I do not want to repeat what has been said, but it is highly desirable to impose a maximum limit. Otherwise, it will be giving a dangerous power to the commissioner. It will be a dangerous latitude. It is an opportunity given to them to poison themselves and to kill themselves."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO :—"My Lord, I have only to make a few observations with reference to what has been said by the Hon'ble Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar. I believe if he is consistent he should have insisted that there should be no maximum for other taxes also. Honourable Members will see that of the taxes mentioned, in section 98, in regard to the taxation on the companies, Schedule IV mentions the maximum limit up to which the assessment is permissible. Honourable Members will see at page 76, Schedule IV, where it is said that the company shall be assessed on the following scale :—More than 20 lakhs, Rs. 1,000; more than 10 lakhs, but less than 20 lakhs, Rs. 500, and so on. There is a sliding scale. Then this is also laid down in section 110 that the maximum limits are fixed under Schedule IV. Then again in regard to profession tax, the limits within which it is open to the commissioner or the corporation to levy the tax on professions have also been fixed and the maximum has been fixed at Rs. 500 and there is a sliding scale up to Rs. 30. I ask the Honourable Member as to why it has been considered necessary to limit the powers of the corporation in regard to the taxation of companies and in regard to the taxation on professions. Why was this that this superfluous liberty has not been thought of in regard to those sources of taxation which are incorporated in the Act? Then again, in the case of taxes on carriages and animals, tax on motor-cars, the maximum has been fixed. I ask why was this limit fixed on the powers of the commissioner. Therefore it seems to me that this idea that the corporation should have the utmost liberty and that only in the case of house-tax and not in the case of a tax on professions, not in the case of a tax on companies, not with regard to taxes on animals, shows that the Honourable Member does not seem to be consistent in his advocacy of conferring this liberty on the Madras Corporation. If he wishes to be logical, it is perfectly open to him to suggest that in the case of the three taxes also, namely, tax on companies, tax on professions and tax on vehicles, it might be left to the corporation to fix it on any scale they like. Therefore, My Lord, the logical application of this principle has not been carried out with reference to the other taxes and it is a perfectly legitimate complaint that in the case of house property any increase which the corporation may aim at should be found from owners of houses. I am convinced that the result will be that whenever the corporation goes to the Government with a request for a Government grant, it is open to the Government to say 'you have not put up your tax to the limit which we consider reasonable and therefore we shall not pay you the grants you ask for.' It has happened several times. I do not say in the case of the Madras Corporation but in the case of mufassal municipalities."

"I shall also like to point out that there is on the agenda, a proposal of the Hon'ble Sir Francis Spring who wishes to limit the liberty of the corporation to tax the Port Trust. I should very much like to know what the attitude of the Hon'ble Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar will be and whether he will be a party to curtail the liberty which he wishes to confer on the corporation with reference to the Port Trust. I shall hear his argument at the proper time and I shall not be justified in asking for the Honourable Member's attitude just now. My Lord, the Hon'ble Doctor Nayar has already pointed to the report of the Decentralization Commission and I may perhaps also refer to the two subsequent resolutions of the Government of India on local self-government, one in 1915 and one in 1918, which seem to suggest that in the interests of the persons who invest money in municipal debentures, it may be necessary to provide for outside sanction in the case of house-tax. I would not weary the Council by referring at length to the observations made in this resolution, but they are substantially in agreement with what has been stated by the Hon'ble Doctor Nayar in the Reform Report. Therefore, My Lord it seems to me that this idea of having no limit is one which seems to be inconsistent as evidenced by other taxation proposals in the Act itself. I think there is considerable force in the observations of the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar that some limit should be placed."

The Hon'ble Mr. T. RICHMOND :—"Your Excellency, I feel strongly that the amendment is a sound one. I am afraid that the Honourable Member in charge of the Bill is unduly sanguine regarding the future personnel of the corporation. He has enfranchised every tax-payer and every tax-payer is eligible to be a councillor. Theoretically he may expect an ideal council, but from a practical point of view, I am afraid, in the present conditions of Madras, his expectations are doomed to disappointment. I am afraid the move is a retrograde one. I do not know if the Honourable Member in charge of the Bill has gone through contested elections in Madras. If he has gone through any he would know the difficulties and trouble the candidates have even with constituencies containing a few hundred members. But when you are asked to deal with thousands as the future councillors of the corporation are invited to do, I fear many of the members who are now on the corporation and men like them are not likely to come forward as candidates. Either the enfranchisement will be a dead letter or you will have in the corporation some men of the class of tavern-keepers, or grocers with no stake in the city and with very little or no interest in immovable or house property. What these men may do with these large powers in their hands it is difficult to foresee. It is possible that the extension of the franchise may only be a paper one, but if it is really going to take any effect, you will probably find an entirely different class of persons coming into the corporation. So I would ask my Honourable friend to pause, and ask him to consider whether the words 'not yet' which he has so often used do not apply in the particular instance. By giving the highest extension of the franchise which he could possibly give in the case of both voters and candidates, and by giving the corporation at the same time the unrestricted power of taxation, I think, the Honourable Member in charge of the Bill is going at a breakneck speed in the matter of municipal reforms and I do not know where we will be landing ourselves. It is a sound provision that there should be some maximum laid down in the matter of house property taxation. I support the amendment moved."

The Hon'ble Mr. K. CHIDAMBARANATHA MUDALIYAR:—"May I inquire if there is any precedent for such unlimited power in any Municipal Act in India or in any civilized country? May I ask the Honourable Member in charge to tell me that?"

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"No maximum in Europe."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"Your Excellency, I can mention a few facts to enlighten the Council as to what people we are dealing with, in whose interests we are proposing this. There are 49,911 houses in the city, of which 14,422 are under Rs. 5 assessment, 13,799 under Rs. 15 assessment and 9,796 under Rs. 30 assessment, so that we have the bulk of the houses all under Rs. 30 except about 11,000. The houses of the annual value of Rs. 30 and upwards are only 11,895. All the rest are poor houses. You must remember that nearly 40,000 houses are under Rs. 30 assessment. In dealing with this point, we have to pay income-tax on house property. That is now one anna in the rupee, 6½ per cent. Some will have to pay 2 annas and what with the super-tax, not only this 2½ per cent of municipal rate we have to pay income-tax on house property and that also should be taken into account. I ask, is there any source of income which can be reasonably taxed to the extent of 20 per cent with all these extra burdens on it? To go beyond 20 per cent will be absolutely impossible to bear. If you add the income-tax and various other burdens, which will be thrown upon the owner, you will find it will come to 30 per cent and I do think that it is very hard indeed if you leave such unlimited and high powers in the hands of the corporation. I should have reduced it to 15 per cent, but I thought that there was no chance of anybody accepting it at present and therefore for the present I am content to have it as 20 per cent. I hope a day will come when we will have other sources. I had hoped till day before yesterday that there would be other sources of taxation. Those hopes were dashed to the ground; absolutely no hope at all of finding any other source of local revenue is given, but on the other hand, what has been happening? When the Bill was introduced in 1916, Government came forward with certain additional proposals with a terminal-tax, with a surcharge on income-tax and all that is dropped and in 1918 when they introduced the Bill, they took away timber and firewood. Now the Select Committee restored timber and firewood. Government propose to take away firewood so that our existing resources are taken away and no new resources are given and then this wonderful corporation is tied hand and foot in the case of the profession tax, in the case of the company tax, in every other tax, but it is given full liberty for house-tax. I think it is a merciless campaign against house property in this town. Under these circumstances, I enter my most emphatic protest. May I appeal to Your Excellency to give liberty to the officials to vote according to their conscience at least as regards this clause?"

The Hon'ble Mr. J. C. MOLONY:—"I should like to state a few facts to dispel any fears which the Council may feel at the picture which the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar has drawn for Honourable Members. He has given a lurid picture of the progress of this tax but I should like to state what has been done. I think all Honourable Members who know the corporation would agree that in the first place the increase in the old house property tax was the result of a revision made by Mr. Raghavayya when he was the Revenue Officer. I think most people will agree that before that revision taxation of large buildings was altogether inadequate, and that Mr. Raghavayya fixed what was no more than a fair taxation. Now the increase of which the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar complains so much merely represents Mr. Raghavayya's valuation. Mr. Ranga Achariyar imagines that the valuation is purely hypothetical but it is not so. It is based on the actual rent derived. The assessment is by the Revenue Officer and every tax-payer has a right of appeal and many do appeal and appeals are heard by a board which consists of the president and two of the elected commissioners. I may say that as a matter of fact, as a matter of office practice, I have never taken part in any decision, but the decision has been left to the elected representatives of the people. About 99 per cent of the appeals are unsuccessful because obviously the appeals are against what is obviously correct. There is another detail in the picture of the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar which I want to wipe out and that is the picture of the commissioner dragging the helpless corporation into extravagance. Surely we are all agreed that the commissioner is a servant of the corporation. He can only expend money sanctioned in the budget. He is given liberty to spend it but he cannot levy taxation of his own accord or enter into any projects or expenditure of his own accord and come to the corporation and say 'find me funds'; funds must be provided first. Then a great deal has been said arising from the expression that property tax is the backbone of taxation in Madras. What is the good of contesting an obvious fact? It is. What is the harm in saying that? It is said that Government will come and force the corporation to run up the property tax to an impossible maximum. They will say 'we will not give you a grant unless you have this taxation raised.' I have been for some time in the corporation and occasionally it has been my painful duty to disagree with the Government, but I think 4½ years is sufficient to convince me that Government collectively are a rational body. Why should they behave in this extraordinary fashion? As to the fact that townspeople are parting with property and that the value of property is going down, that is ridiculous. If he will come round and see the records of my office, he will see it is climbing up at an appalling rate. Nobody is frightened by this increase in taxation."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"They hoped to get it remedied to-day."

The Hon'ble Mr. J. C. MOLONY:—"They must have been very confident. The Hon'ble Mr. Richmond seems to think that the corporation will embark recklessly on expenditure. Expenditure on what? Expenditure is for the benefit of the rate-payers. If the rate-payers do not want anything let them not send representatives who want to spend. It is taking the money from the people and giving it back to them in the way of improvements. The last objection is why property tax is unlimited while every other tax is limited. I do not know the official explanation for this, but it struck me, and it is obvious from the figures given yesterday, that the property tax is paid by the majority. The majority being the electors, the majority can protect themselves but the minority require protection against the majority."

The Hon'ble Sir GORDON FRASER:—"Your Excellency, I should be glad to know whether at this stage I am in order if I move an amendment that '25' be substituted for '20' per cent. I cannot help thinking that 20 per cent is too low if a maximum is fixed. Twenty-five per cent is a fair safeguard for the interests of property owners who in future with the business men of the corporation will have things all their own way. Twenty-five per cent is a more reasonable figure than 20 per cent."

The Hon'ble Mr. E. F. Barber seconded the motion.

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR:—"It re-opens a very wide question."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"Will I be in order if I move that the profession tax be fixed at 25 per cent of the income?"

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"That does not arise. The position of the Government has been stated. I am anxious to give effect to the wishes of the Council so far as I can. There are two questions before this Council; first of all, whether a limit shall be fixed and secondly, what that limit should be. The Hon'ble Sir Gordon Fraser has expressed his view that he does not agree with that limit. It will be convenient for the Council to consider it."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"If I may say one word, at present they are paying 18½ per cent and the limit of 20 really means stoppage of all development. You take it with that percentage and there the whole matter ends. I cannot accept that. As a matter of fact, the debate went more upon the general ground whether there should be any limit or not and I feel bound to point out to the Council that the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar not only wanted a limit but wanted to stand practically where we are. How far will 1½ per cent take you? It would really give you no increase of revenue. Apart from the main question, as to whether there should be a limit or not, there is a great deal to be said both ways, but as my Hon'ble Friend Mr. Richmond said, my estimate of what the corporation would be was possibly ideal and optimistic. Theoretically, I quite see I may be wrong, but I am equally certain that if the Council is now going to put it at 20 per cent it will be necessary to bring in an amending Bill. I want you as practical men to consider whether in proposing a maximum, we should not put it at a fairly high figure. I do not want to force my ideas upon anybody; when so many people intimately connected with the corporation, who know Madras very much better than I, all tell me that it is very unwise to have no limit and not to leave it there; I am prepared to defer to that. I do not want to force my wishes but I am bound to point out that if you accept 20 per cent you really make no provision for any development of any kind. You have largely to increase all other sources of revenue. I would appeal to the Council to take a more reasonable view of the thing and if the Council want a limit, to put it at some rate which will make it reasonably workable. What is the object of saying 20 per cent? I do not want to intervene at this stage. I am sorry I intervened at all."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"I would not rule out the amendment of the Hon'ble Sir Gordon Fraser. Let me see what happens to this amendment."

The amendment No. 58 was put and lost.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"The amendment is rejected, 20 voting against and 18 for it. I do not know if the Hon'ble Sir Gordon Fraser wishes to move his amendment."

The Hon'ble Sir GORDON FRASER:—"I wish to move the amendment 'Provided that the consolidated rate shall not exceed 25 per cent of the annual value'."

The Hon'ble Mr. K. Chidambaranatha Mudaliyar seconded the amendment.

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"Your Excellency, let me at once say that so far as I could see this amendment is very much more in what I would call the region of practical politics than the one proposed by the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar. I have no doubt that some, at least of those who voted against his amendment felt that if you tie the hands of the corporation by fixing it at 20 per cent it will seriously prejudice the work of the corporation. All the general objections that I have raised to 20 per cent should apply to 25 per cent also. I do not want to say that I have changed my mind about it, but I would leave it to the Council to decide as they think best. Whatever may be the rate, the idea underlying the limit seems to me theoretically unsound. I therefore feel bound to mention that for consideration; but so far as I am concerned, I am entirely in the hands of the Council. If they prefer to have a limit and provide 25 per cent to meet all practical needs, I shall raise no objection."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"May I take a formal objection to this amendment. This was originally proposed in the original Bill of 1916 and it was sent up to the corporation and the corporation rejected it. And then it came forward in this Bill without any limit. The question before the Council was whether you should put that limit or not and they have decided that question. I submit there has been no notice of this amendment of the Hon'ble Sir Gordon Fraser and it is not an amendment which arises out of my amendment. If it was, he should have moved it before vote was taken on my amendment. I submit therefore this amendment is out of order. He should have given notice of his amendment."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"Strictly speaking, notice would have been preferable, but as we have just been considering the limit of 20 per cent, the only difference between the Honourable gentleman's amendment and the amendment of the Hon'ble Sir Gordon Fraser is a question of figures. I hardly think it would be right to deprive the Council of the opportunity of considering it. I do not rule it out of order."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"I object to this amendment. In fact, as the Honourable Member in charge of the Bill stated already and the Hon'ble Mr. Molony as president of the corporation, also told us, it is driving the corporation to-morrow to raise it to 25 per cent. That is what will happen, whereas now, if liberty is given to the corporation, they will resist any attempt to raise the tax. They can go up to Government and say: 'you have deprived us of all sources of revenue, you want us to put on our house-tax,' and they may say 'we will not do it'. Their hands will be strengthened in making the appeal to the Government of India about which the Hon'ble Sir Gordon Fraser was so anxious in connexion with the licence duty. We will be depriving that by the Hon'ble Sir Gordon Fraser's amendment. Government's hands will not be strengthened about the licence duty, if you put it on the statute book that you can raise it to 25 per cent. With what face can the local Government go to the Government of India and ask them for a portion of the excise revenue? When we hope to get the terminal tax and that promise was elicited by the Hon'ble Sir Gordon Fraser,

12TH FEBRUARY 1919.]

(Mr. Ranga Achariyar; Mr. Venkatapati Raju;

if you go and put on this additional burden, the Government of India will say 'let them exhaust their resources which the law has given them and then we shall consider whether the amendment is necessary.' I am afraid the Hon'ble Sir Gordon Fraser has not given that thought to this very important question which it deserves. He must remember that the matter was fully discussed on two or three occasions by the corporation and the corporation felt that it would be an unjust burden thrown upon the house owners to make it go up to 25. You will find it impossible to get the corporation to consent to raise it to 25 per cent. They consented to go up to 20 per cent simply because the present financial resources are not sufficient. By accepting the amendment, you will be placing the corporation in a most awkward situation. You will simply ask the corporation to put it at 25 per cent. I dread it; in the name of the corporation I appeal to you not to consent to this amendment."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. VENKATAPATI RAJU:—"Your Excellency, I oppose the amendment of the Hon'ble Sir Gordon Fraser. It is a surprise that the Government could accept such a proposal, because we consider that the taxation of 25 per cent is preposterous in any event. When we refer to the other schedules, a person drawing in Madras Rs. 5,000 per mensem or Rs. 6,000 has to pay only Rs. 1,000. That is one-sixtieth whereas you want the landholder to pay one-fourth of his income. Is it a fair share? When you go to the other schedules you can easily see why the Hon'ble Sir Gordon Fraser is interested in the suggestion. He wants ample income, so that other persons may not be taxed. Persons who own houses are different from those who carry on other professions and therefore perhaps it is easy for others to suggest 'do not impose a tax upon those who get monthly salary or upon companies who make lakhs and lakhs, but do what you can with the house property and impose this high limit.' Government have once rejected the amendment and let us leave it to the good sense of the corporation. 'Once we impose a limit, they will be driven to raise the taxation. Our complaint is, the profession tax is very low. It is not even half a per cent whereas in the mufassal property tax is 16½ per cent. We should raise it to 25 per cent. We are paying a land tax of 40 or 50 per cent. I earnestly appeal to the Government to leave the matter as it is without helping one party or the other."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"If I may say one word, there is no reason why we should not give a friendly decision in regard to it. The Council has rejected the former amendment for the good reason that it rejected the former limit. The question is whether the Council wishes that the Government should depart from their attitude of not fixing a limit and adopt the limit of 25 per cent proposed by the Hon'ble Sir Gordon Fraser. I can understand, while there is a desire to impose some limit, I can understand perfectly well the attitude of property owners. There seems to be an apprehension on the part of those who have spoken for property owners in Madras that unreasonable and unfair prejudicial taxation might be imposed upon property under this clause of the Bill. Now what the last speaker said is very true. There are general objections which guided the Government in coming to that attitude, there are general objections against fixing a maximum. It is not the case that in all cases of local taxation, a maximum is fixed. Reasons are these: in the first place, if there is a maximum of 25 per cent, that is to say for this Council to fix a maximum of 25 per cent whatever the Council may say, would be taken as an indication that in the view of the Council and in the view of the Government, 25 per cent is not an unreasonable maximum, and that it is a just maximum to be fixed for the present. That is the implication of our fixing the maximum, whatever we may say to the contrary. The fact that the Council has passed this Bill with a maximum limit of 25 per cent would be taken as an indication to the public outside and to any party outside or inside the corporation as meaning that 25 per cent is in their view a reasonable limit at the present time. That is the one strong objection to fixing a limit and it has prevailed in arguing this question in other places that it is undesirable without full knowledge of the circumstances and without having examined the circumstances and knowing the elements of doubt and uncertainty that may affect the question, that is the decision in other places as well as here, there has been a hesitation to fix the maximum. The second objection to fixing the maximum, the Honourable gentleman has already suggested, the Hon'ble Mr. Venkatapati Raju has suggested that there is a tendency to follow up the implication. We have mentioned the limit and the tendency is to work up to the maximum, so that it is really a question whether or not we would be wise in fixing a maximum. My Honourable friend has indicated that we merely want to do the wisest thing under the circumstances and I suggest that in arriving at a decision, let us remember that on the whole, people will act reasonably. Government, whoever are in the Government, will take a reasonable view of the situation. Suppose there is no limit of taxation, if they see that the corporation is acting unwisely in taking some steps, it is open to the Government to check the development of such unreasonable action. If, on the other hand, the corporation themselves find that the house property is going down, that their own assessments which they levy, are being affected by the weight of the taxation, that itself will be a self-acting check upon any such tendency, as feared by the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar. I quite allow that his fears are reasonable. It is proper that they should be given expression to here and it is quite proper that the Council should give due weight. What we should try to do is to arrive on a balance of opinions and judgments at the right decision. I must say that we may expect public authorities to act reasonably in the future as they have done in the past. I am strongly in favour of the Government adhering to the present position and not imposing any limit in the Bill. I think on the whole, it would be the safest and the wisest course. There is a great deal to be said for the other position."

[12TH FEBRUARY 1919.]

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"At page 121 of the Council rules, it is said that where the local Government have to accept a change of principle, they will have to obtain the sanction of the Governor-General. The principle accepted by the local Government is not to put any limit. The change of principle will have to be submitted to the Governor-General."

The Hon'ble Sir GORDON FRASER:—"Under the conditions I withdraw my amendment."

With the permission of His Excellency the President the amendment was withdrawn.

The following amendment standing in the name of the Hon'ble Mr. A. S. Krishna Rao was not moved:—

59. At the end of clause 99 (2) add the following proviso—

'Provided that the consolidated rate shall not exceed 20 per centum of the said annual value and shall not be less than 10 per centum of such value, except in virtue of local exemptions granted under proviso (a) to section 102.'

The Hon'ble Mr. K. RAMA AYYANGAR:—"I do not propose to move amendment No. 60."

With the permission of His Excellency the President, the following amendment was withdrawn:—

60. In clause 99 (3) add at the end 'subject to an appeal to the Standing Committee whose decision shall be final.'

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"I would not press amendment No. 61."

With the permission of His Excellency the President, the following amendment was withdrawn:—

61. To clause 99 (3) add as proviso—

'Provided that in cases where the property is wholly occupied by the owner the valuation so determined shall not be subject to revision within seven years of such determination.'

Clause 99 was allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Clause 100.

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"I have an amendment No. 62, but I propose to adopt the Hon'ble the Advocate-General's amendment No. 62 A."

The Hon'ble the ADVOCATE-GENERAL:—"If the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar will move that amendment of which I gave notice, I will accept it."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"Instead of my amendment, I move the Hon'ble the Advocate-General's amendment No. 62 A:—

62A. After the words 'from year to year' add the following:—

'less a deduction of 10 per cent of such annual rent and the said deduction shall be in lieu of all allowance for repairs or on any other account whatever.'

The Hon'ble the Advocate-General accepted the amendment.

The amendment was put and agreed to.

Clause 100 was allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Clause 101.

The Hon'ble the Rev. G. PITTEDRIGH:—"Your Excellency, I propose amendment No. 63:—

'3. In sub-clause (b), after the word 'hospitals' add the words 'dispensaries and buildings used for educational purposes.'

"Clause 101 gives certain exemptions from the property tax. I propose to add to them 'dispensaries and buildings used for educational purposes.' With regard to dispensaries, a few years ago, it seems to me, that under the old Act, the Act at present in operation, dispensaries were not taxed, but some time ago a Revenue Officer seems to have discovered that they were not included under the word 'hospitals' and I am aware of a certain dispensary that has paid the tax recently. It appears to me that dispensaries are exactly in the same position as hospitals. If hospitals are charitable institutions, so are dispensaries. I therefore move that the exemption be granted to dispensaries.

"The second part of my amendment is: 'buildings used for educational purposes.'

"You will remember, those of you who took any notice of the draft Bill, that in the draft Bill educational buildings were exempted and then after consideration by Government, the exemption was withdrawn. Here again it seems to me that we are in exactly the same position as hospitals. The vast majority of educational buildings are, viewed in one sense, charitable institutions. That is to say, the management has put in a very large amount of money in order to run this for the benefit of the city and the presidency as well. I have heard no real objection put forward to the exemption. They are exempt in the district municipalities. They are exempted in Bombay and I see no reason why they should not be exempted in Madras. The only reason that has been urged is that the city must have money; I grant that. But it must get money in a legitimate way. I do not think that this particular method of getting money from a charitable institution is a legitimate way. I also have heard it said that there would be difficulty in ascertaining exactly what buildings are used for educational purposes particularly in the case of elementary schools. I do not think that the Revenue Officer will have any difficulty in fixing what portion of a building is used for an elementary school. I know in one place a hall is used for religious purposes and that is exempt, but the dispensary which is another part of the building has to pay a tax. I do not think that the Revenue Officer will find any difficulty in ascertaining which portion of the building should be exempt from taxation. The question is so familiar to us all that I do not think it is necessary for me to speak at length on the subject. I beg to move the insertion of these words."

The Hon'ble the Most Rev. AELEN:—"With Your Excellency's permission, I should like to move an amendment. We might say 'dispensaries and buildings solely used for the purposes of primary education'."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"I second the Hon'ble the Archbishop's amendment."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. VENKATAPATI RAJU:—"I second the amendment of the Hon'ble Mr. Pittendrigh. So far as the first portion is concerned, I do not think there would be any difficulty because by a mistake the word 'hospitals' has been copied from the old Act. Under the District Municipalities Act, both hospitals and dispensaries are exempted. Section 63 of the District Municipalities Act uses the words 'hospitals and dispensaries.' Therefore, when exemption is made for hospitals where in-patients are treated, there is no reason why exemption should not be made with reference to dispensaries where out-patients are treated. The other question is how far educational institutions have to be exempted. As a matter of fact, all educational institutions are exempted in the districts even where a portion is used for residential purposes. I do not know under what particular section they are exempted. What is stated in section 63 of the District Municipalities Act is: 'and other buildings or lands to the extent to which they are used for public, charitable or religious, but not residential purposes.' That is the reason why they are exempted. Somehow or other I do not know whether these words convey that meaning, but Government have issued a Government order to the effect that all educational buildings should be exempted. It may be said without fear of contradiction that whether primary or secondary or, much more, collegiate education, they are being run at some expense. No body is making any profit, whether it is the Pachaiyappa's College or the Christian College, apart from any Government college on which the general tax-payers' money is spent. Therefore, it is purely a charitable or a public purpose in that sense. When we are exempting it throughout the Presidency I do not see why we should include it in the metropolis. The Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar is anxious for money, but at the same time we have to provide proper means of securing it and not by taxing educational institutions which are providing education for our children which is so very necessary for our progress."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"In seconding the Hon'ble the Archbishop's amendment, I wish to say a few words."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"The Hon'ble Mr. Molony wishes to say a few words on the amendment."

The Hon'ble Mr. J. C. MOLONY:—"As regards the Hon'ble Mr. Pittendrigh's amendment I would oppose the amendment as regards dispensaries. Dispensary in Madras does not bear the interpretation that it does bear elsewhere, a small out-hospital maintained for gratuitous relief, but a great many buildings are returned as dispensaries which are run for private profit. As regards buildings used for educational purposes, the strong argument against that is that the municipality cannot afford to exempt them. It means a loss of over Rs. 1,13,000 to the municipality and the municipality cannot afford it. I would also point out that it is not proposed to tax these buildings for the first time. They have been taxed under the existing Act. I have not noticed any great complaint that education suffered thereby. These are succinctly my arguments against the amendment of the Hon'ble Mr. Pittendrigh."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"I quite appreciate the difficulty about the word 'dispensaries.' I think if this amendment is carried, we will have to define what a dispensary is so as to include things which are in the nature of hospitals. As regards institutions for primary education, they stand on a different footing. In fact, it has been an accepted principle. But so far as local rates are concerned, the Sunday schools and the voluntary schools should be exempted. It is also recommended by the Royal Commission on local taxation that they should be exempted. They say that while they are generally against any exemption of particular institutions, they allow the exemption in the case of Sunday schools and other voluntary schools; because primary education is one of the primary duties thrown upon the corporation. So, when other bodies are carrying on that duty, they should be exempted from taxation. As regards other educational buildings, I quite agree that they should not be exempted. In fact, the Royal Commission said: 'As a general principle, we are of opinion that absolute exemption of particular properties from liability to rates is inadvisable.'

We think that no further extension of the principle of exemption should be permitted. Sir N. B. Poland also said: 'I am against all exemptions, etc.' That is what they said. The whole thing as regards the general proposition of the Hon'ble Mr. Pittendrigh is this:—The difficulty will be that we are supplying water which is used by these educational institutions, we are raising a tax for water, for drainage, for lighting, and all these are payments in exchange for commodities supplied. How can you claim exemption? There is no reason for exemption. I cannot see on what principle you can exempt educational institutions. There are institutions which exist for the public good ; for instance, the mills which are encouraging industries. On the same ground, they may have to be exempted because they encourage indigenous industries. While I object very strongly to any exemptions of buildings used for educational purposes, I am in favour of exempting the primary schools. After all, if they are going to be free schools, it would not be right to tax them."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT :—"I will put the Hon'ble the Archbishop's amendment."

The Hon'ble Mr. J. C. MOLONY :—"I should not object to the exemption of primary schools were it not so difficult in many cases to recognize such places as schools. Frequently we try to take over the management of so called elementary schools ; we find them in all sorts of places, in buildings part or parts of which are used as dwelling houses. If this exemption be put on the statute book I foresee endless claims and endless difficulties. A well established primary school managed by Government or by a religious foundation is of course easily recognized ; but such schools are usually in sanitary places where they enjoy municipal amenities. I do not think that they can complain of paying their share of taxation towards such amenities."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR :—"May I have a word of explanation to modify the effect of what the Hon'ble Mr. Molony has said ? He points out that there would be difficulty in working this exemption. I wish to point out that the same difficulty may arise in regard to temples, one part of which may be a temple and the other a living abode. I hope the advantage of having these exemptions will not be overlooked by the Council by reason of this difficulty."

The amendment of the Hon'ble the Archbishop was put and lost.

The amendment of the Hon'ble the Rev. Pittendrih was put and lost.

Clause 101.

The Hon'ble the ADVOCATE-GENERAL :—"I beg to move amendment No. 63A on the supplemental agenda.

63A. Omit 'and' at the end of sub-clause (c) and insert 'and' at the end of sub-clause (d) ; and add a new sub-clause (e) as follows :—

"(e) Any building or land the annual value whereof is less than eighteen rupees and the owner whereof has no other building or land assessed to the property tax."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. Ranga Achariyar seconded the amendment.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT :—"I understand it is acceptable to the Council."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO :—"I should like to know with reference to this clause why the Island is included in this clause. I merely wish to know the existing state of things why this exemption has been extended to the Island, whether this is the first time that the Island is exempted from taxation or whether it is already exempted."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT :—"We have really passed that stage. My Honourable Friend will be able to explain it."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO :—"Has Your Excellency put the clause ?"

His Excellency the PRESIDENT :—"No."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO :—"This raises a question of principle under the District Municipalities Act."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT :—"Before you rise, we will settle the amendment."

The amendment No. 63A was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Dr. T. M. NAYAR :—"Will the Honourable Member kindly explain what clause (d) means ?"

His Excellency the PRESIDENT :—"It is too late."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR :—"I thought that the Hon'ble Mr. Ramachandra Rao was addressing himself on clause (d)."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT :—"Will the Advocate-General be good enough to explain the clause ?"

The Hon'ble the ADVOCATE-GENERAL :—"In England, the property of the Crown is generally exempted. So far as this exemption is concerned, this exempts lands which are really the Government. Lands which do not produce any income are exempted. So far as buildings are concerned, they are not exempted. There was a doubt as to the old law whether the exemption should apply to waste lands in the occupation of Government. In order to settle that doubt, and in order to make it clear, in a large city like Madras, areas like the Island, the bed of the Cooum, the bed of the Buckingham Canal and the bed of the Adyar and sea-shore, all this unproductive property which are really useful to the public and which do not directly produce any revenue to Government should be exempted. So far as further exemptions are concerned, Honourable Members will notice that the exemptions are of other properties of 12TH FEBRUARY 1919.] (The Advocate-General ; Dr. Nayar ; the President ;

Mr. M. Ramachandra Rao ; Mr. Ranga Achariyar.)

Government, 'not being buildings as may, from time to time, be notified by the Governor in Council with the consent of the corporation.' So far as any other property is concerned, Government will not be able to exempt them unless the corporation consents to that. It was considered that in these cases it would be simply fictitious value to the corporation if you say that these are lands in the occupation of Government, are in the rateable occupation of Government and they should be therefore assessed on the principle of a hypothetical tenant. Whatever contribution Government will have to make, they will make on the administrative side. They do not stand on the same footing as buildings or other property used by Government, which are within the beneficial occupation of Government. These are lands which are as much used for the benefit of the public generally and which do not yield any income directly to the Government."

The Hon'ble Dr. T. M. NAYAR :—"My Lord, this is the first time I hear that the Island is a useless waste land. It is a very clever classification to put the Island along with the bed of the Cooum and the river Adyar. If you are following ordinary principles which govern the situation of lands within municipal limits, all lands ought to be taxed. If it is of absolutely no good, permit people to build on it and then it will be of considerable good to the city. Here is the very best land in the whole of the City of Madras and Government prohibit any building on it and at the same time do not pay any tax on the land. It is one of the most unfair arrangements and therefore I beg to move to omit the word 'Island' in clause (d)."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT :—"I cannot accept the motion. I allowed the question to be asked. There is no amendment on paper on the subject and I do not think it will be in order."

The Hon'ble Dr. T. M. NAYAR :—"Then I will have to vote against the whole clause."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO :—"I wish to say a few words."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT :—"You cannot speak."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO :—"I wish to oppose the whole clause."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT :—"The Honourable Gentleman asked for an explanation for sub-clause (e)."

The Hon'ble Dr. T. M. NAYAR :—"I asked for an explanation for sub-clause (d)."

The Hon'ble the ADVOCATE-GENERAL :—"I am sorry I misunderstood it."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR :—"There is not one statement of the Hon'ble the Advocate-General."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT :—"I cannot allow discussion on the statement of the Hon'ble the Advocate-General."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO :—"I wish to oppose the whole clause."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT :—"I have not put the whole clause. I cannot allow discussion on it, because we had no notice of it. I did not know till we passed it what the Hon'ble Dr. Nayar wanted. I now put that clause 101 stand part of the Bill."

The Hon'ble Dr. T. M. NAYAR :—"On that, could we not talk ?"

His Excellency the PRESIDENT :—"Yes. You have already spoken."

The Hon'ble Dr. T. M. NAYAR :—"About the whole clause ? Could not Your Excellency allow us to speak on the whole clause ?"

His Excellency the PRESIDENT :—"Certainly."

The Hon'ble Dr. T. M. NAYAR :—"I object to the whole clause as I have no alternative but to do so. My chief objection to clause (d) is : I think Government are perfectly unfair in getting one of their most valuable lands exempt from taxation. We had a pretty long discussion in the Council both yesterday and to-day all through which Government stood in the way of additional sources of revenue for the corporation and the only one instance in which they had come and acted, so far as the revenues of the corporation are concerned, is in knocking off the duty on firewood. The net result of Government action up to this time has been to deprive the corporation of its duty on firewood and add nothing to the resources ; and here is a case of an attempt to get a most valuable piece of land exempt from taxation. It is an absolutely unfair act. It is almost as unfair as the manner in which licence fees on premises have been taken away from the corporation. I am quite sure that if I do not now raise a protest, the Hon'ble Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar may come forward and say that gentlemen connected with the corporation did not raise a protest against it. I wish to raise my most emphatic protest against this attempt to get the Island free of tax and I am quite sure my other non-official colleagues will join with me."

The Hon'ble the ADVOCATE-GENERAL :—"The buildings on the Island will pay taxes."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO :—"As has been stated by the Hon'ble Dr. Nayar my objection is entirely to clause (d). It raises a very important principle. So far as I know, under the District Municipalities Act, every inch of land within the municipal limits, whether it belongs to the Government or to any railway company or whether it is occupied by the permanent way is liable to local taxation. My Lord, I may say that in the municipality of Rajahmundry, the railway company refused to pay the law tax on the permanent way. I had to fight it out and take it up to the Government of India and ultimately it was decided that every inch of land, to whomsoever it may belong, vacant or occupied by houses, is liable to local taxation unless it is expressly exempted. In that view, we have been taxing Government poramboke lands in municipal limits. We have a big parade ground in Ellore which we are taxing. If this means any deviation from this principle at all, it means that all vacant land belonging to the Government from which they do not derive any immediate profit and which is potentially valuable, would not be subject to local taxation. It is in that way I look at this question and when I saw the Island being exempted from taxation along with the bed of the Buckingham Canal and the Cooum, I was surprised. I did not derive any light from the report of the Select Committee on this matter as I expected I would. As regards the sea-shore, I would like to know whether buildings like the Marine Aquarium should be exempted."

(Mr. M. Ramachandra Rao; the President; Mr. Rajagopala [12TH FEBRUARY 1919.
Achariyar; Mr. Ranga Achariyar;
Mr. Chidambaranatha Mudaliyar.]

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"The clause says, 'not being buildings.'"

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO:—"I would oppose this, unless we have some clear explanation as to the reasons which induced the Government to place these properties under the exemption clause. It is certainly not fair to local authorities that the Government should take protection from local rates for their own property. That is the point. I therefore strongly object to this clause."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"The point brought about by the Hon'ble Mr. Molony was that this whole thing was within the military boundary of Fort St. George, but it is not very clear whether the whole military portion is exempt from taxation."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"Not all."

The Hon'ble Mr. K. CHIDAMBARANATHA MUDALIYAR:—"May I know whether these lands are taxed?"

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"So, we are exactly where we stand."

The Hon'ble Mr. K. CHIDAMBARANATHA MUDALIYAR:—"May I know."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"If the Honourable Member will allow my Honourable Friend to make his explanation and if he finds anything inadequate, I am sure my Honourable Friend will be glad to add to it at the end of his observation."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"I think it will require full explanation. I think I could give a pretty long explanation of it. The Council may remember that the Bill as it was introduced here and as it went into the Select Committee contained these exemptions in what was then clause 113. That clause stated: 'the following buildings and lands shall be exempt from the property tax:—(a) property vested in the Trustees of the Port of Madras under Madras Act II of 1905; (b) places set apart for public worship and either actually so used or used for no other purpose; (c) hospitals; (d) burial and burning grounds included in the list published by the Commissioner under section 338 (3) of this Act; and (e) public land.' That was in the Bill as it went to the Select Committee. We considered this question at great length and we found that the definition of public land would be unworkable. I shall read the definition of public land. Public land means: 'all such properties as the Government may, from time to time, notify as public land for the purposes of this Act and includes the Island, the People's Park, the bed of the Cooum, the Buckingham Canal, and the sea-shore.' In the Select Committee it was pointed out that in one section to say that public land shall be exempted from all taxation and to define public land to be such land as may be notified by the Governor in Council as public land from time to time would, in effect, give the Government power to exempt themselves from municipal taxation by an executive order. It was to restrict that and to bring the claim of the Government within reasonable limits that this clause was put in. We felt that a general claim of Government to exemption of what was called public land was untenable. We also felt that to define public land accurately and to distinguish things which, as my Honourable Friend has pointed out, are really not remunerative and to exempt them from taxation, would not be possible. We also felt that it would not be fair to the corporation to reserve any power to the Government by an executive order to bring in any land under the term 'public land' and thereby to exempt it. I simply give this to enable the Council to understand how this thing came in. What we were faced with was the fact that we have certain areas which really are giving no revenue of any kind. Should the Government pay any tax upon them? The bed of the Cooum was one of such things. The bed of the Cooum is public land according to the original definition; that is, the property in the bed of the Cooum vests in the Government. The point was whether the corporation could assess the bed of the Cooum, say for land tax; similarly the bed of the Adyar, the bed of the Buckingham Canal and the sea-shore; and along with that we considered that the Island was an area in which though the property may theoretically vest in the Government, it is really open to everybody. It is not exactly an area on which it would be fair to impose any assessment. Having said that, we took great care to add 'such other property not being buildings as may from time to time be notified by the Governor in Council with the consent of the corporation.' That is to say, if anything else is to be exempted, it will not be exempted as in the original Bill by an executive notification of Government but the exemption will come in only if the corporation agrees to it. So that, this whole clause 101 came into being in that way. The Hon'ble Mr. Nayar and others wanted to know how it came into being. If you want to know the genesis of this clause you will have to see the clause in the previous Bill which went to the Select Committee which was very much wider, and upon this clause as it stands, I take my stand. I have no hesitation in taking my stand. There is no meaning in asking that the Island, the bed of the Cooum, the Adyar and the Buckingham canal shall be taxed. It is true that theoretically the property in these areas vests in the Government, but is it the correct thing to tax them for it? Who gets the beneficial enjoyment of these things? The whole of the sea-shore vests in the Government. Do you want to impose a property tax on the sea-shore? A great deal has been said about the Government escaping taxation. I am pretty certain that, so far as exemptions are concerned, they are very much less in this Bill than what they were in any previous stage. I have given all the explanation that I could in this matter and let me remind the Council that at present, we are dealing with the question whether clause 101 shall or shall not stand part of the Bill. Honourable Members say: 'we feel such an amount of reprobation over this question of the Island that we are prepared to drop the whole clause.' If you do so, buildings used for public worship will be taxed, hospitals and burial-grounds shall be taxed. It is a matter for consideration whether assuming that there is a certain amount of divergence of opinion in regard to the Island, whether the divergence is so great and your feeling against giving exemption to the Island is so strong, that you are prepared to throw out the whole clause and omit the exemption of other things also. That is a matter for consideration by the Council."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR:—"Your Excellency, I wish to oppose this being passed into law. In the first place, referring to the principle of the matter, I really think that the matter of principle is of sufficiently great importance to throw this section overboard to-day. When the third reading comes up another section might be put in and no irreparable injury will be done. I do not want to take up the time of the Council by going into the reasons, but I shall proceed to point out a matter of law. I think the Hon'ble the Advocate-General correctly interprets the intention of the Government that they do not want the buildings on the Island to escape taxation. If that is the intention of the Government what we have enacted is just the reverse of it. If we go to a Court of Law, they would not take the Hon'ble the Advocate-General's opinion but they would only look at the clause as it is. The clause states 'the Island, the bed of the Cooum, the river Adyar, the Buckingham canal, etc.'—all these are specific things. All these are exempt and then it is said 'such other property of Government not being buildings, as may from time to time be notified by the Governor in Council with the consent of the corporation.' Now the phrase 'not being buildings' comes in to modify the phrase, 'such other property' and it does not qualify the previous five items of property pointed out. You cannot say 'the Island not being buildings, the bed of the Cooum not being buildings, etc.' In the case of the bed of the Cooum and the river Adyar and the Buckingham canal, they are not buildings. But with regard to the term 'Island' we shall have to take the dictionary meaning of the term and 'Island' will include ordinarily whatever buildings there are on the Island. If this goes before a Court of Law, a Court of Law would exempt all the buildings on the Island. The Hon'ble the Advocate-General said that this was not what was contemplated. On that principle, we have to vote against it, because the wording of it runs against our intentions. I therefore vote against it."

The Hon'ble Mr. K. CHIDAMBARANATHA MUDALIYAR:—"In spite of the lengthy speech of the Honourable the Member in charge in regard to this section, it has not been made clear why any land which is being taxed at present is being exempted from taxation under this new clause."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"I can answer that question. No land is exempted, none whatever; I can give the assurance on behalf of Government. There need not be any violent antagonism on this matter, because really we are all agreed in the principle of the Bill. The Hon'ble the Advocate-General will surely take note of the criticism as to the phraseology and will not be slow in making any correction necessary."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"I shall have the question of exemption in mind."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"It will be necessary to define the term 'Island'."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"I shall have the question of exemption in mind."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"These points will be considered in the light of the remarks offered by the Honourable Gentlemen."

The Hon'ble Mr. P. SIVA RAO:—"Your Excellency, I have one doubt in the matter. Clause (e) of the draft Bill as was pointed out, included public land. I do not think that public land means Government land, but here I see 'all such other property of Government not being buildings, as may from time to time be notified by the Governor in Council with the consent of the corporation.' Power is reserved to the Government to notify hereafter that certain lands situated within the limits of the corporation shall be exempted and there is a safeguard ; I do not see any necessity for a provision like this, because under the scheme of this Bill, the municipal corporation has the power to tax all buildings and lands. There is no exemption either in the District Municipalities Act, or in the City Municipal Act as it now stands which makes any exemption in favour of lands owned by Government ; for instance in the mufassal we have been taxing dharkast lands of the Government, waste lands within municipal limits I do not think ; there should be no doubt about it. I have no personal experience and I do not know if the Island is productive, apart from buildings thereon. If they are of productive value, they should be taxed, but even the waste lands should be taxed because though they may not fetch anything now, they may have a saleable value and they may fetch a high price. There is no reason why Government lands, lands at the disposal of the Government situated within the municipal limits should be exempted."

(Mr. Siva Rao ; the President ; Sir Francis Spring.) [12TH FEBRUARY 1919.]

Clause 101 was allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Clause 102.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT :—" Will the Hon'ble Sir Francis Spring move amendment No. 56. I believe an agreement has been come to."

The Hon'ble Sir FRANCIS SPRING :—" Your Excellency, I wish to move the following amendment :—

56. To the proviso to clause 102 add the following :—

(d) In the case of lands and buildings vested in the Trustees of the Port of Madras the property tax leviable in any year shall not exceed four per centum of the gross earnings made by the Port Trust in that year."

" In rising to propose the amendment that stands in my name I would like to make it clear that the Port Trust does not take up the position of objecting to any taxation which may be imposed on it. For in bringing the Trust nominally under taxation the legislature is in reality taxing not the Trust but, ultimately, the public goods which pass through its hands. For the Port Trust has no income except what it derives from the said goods and, under the Act to which it owes its existence, it is bound to levy such dues on the goods which it handles as will suffice to cover all the expenses incurred in the handling, whether for interest and repayment of debt, or for working expenses, or, as is now proposed, for municipal taxation.

" It is a function rather of the Chambers and Associations representing mercantile interests than for the Port Trust to guard local trade from undue taxation. It became desirable therefore to ascertain whether these public bodies are satisfied that the dues which the Port Trust will be compelled to impose on their merchandise, in consequence of the new municipal taxation of its property, shall not be such as will injure trade or drive it away. Doubtless Sir Gordon Fraser and Mr. Thonger will speak to this point later. I may mention, however, at this stage that I have the assurance not only of my own Board, on which there are members of the Southern India Chamber, but also of the Madras Chamber of Commerce and of the Trades Association that, in principle, the taxing of the Port Trust, and of course, through it, the goods that it handles, is not objected to.

" I accept it whole heartedly that the municipal corporation of a city built on a port has a perfect right to levy such taxation as shall enable it adequately to perform its municipal duties ; and as already explained, it is a matter of little consequence, so far as goods are concerned, whether such taxes are levied directly by the city or indirectly by a property tax on such a body as the Port Trust. But if I am asked to suggest an agency whereby such taxation may be levied most conveniently, most cheaply, and without undue harassment, I cannot conceive a better agency for such levy than the Port Trust. For already we have all the machinery perfected for levying our own dues on the tonnage of goods passing through our hands, and all we have to do in order to recoup ourselves for the taxes which the Corporation has need of and desires to impose on us is slightly to alter our schedule of rates. Thus the additional dues are collected with the very minimum of interference and harassment. In other words the harbour premises form a sort of bottle-neck through which every ton of the goods passes in and out under permit of certain documents, now familiar to all merchants, which ensure the payment of the Trust's own dues, and it will be no trouble at all to the Trust to enhance these last slightly so as to recoup itself for its new municipal taxation. Moreover there will be no additional cost for collection.

" As I have tried to explain, the Port Trust has no logical reason to offer against its acting as collector. But, in the interests of local sea-borne trade in general, it cannot entirely divest itself of concern lest the sum total of its charges for handling the trade of the Port, including the new municipal charges, should reach such a figure as to embarrass that trade unduly. It is not easy to say what proportion of its value would be likely to embarrass the trade unduly. At present it costs a ton of goods about as much to pass through the port as it would cost it to get carried over 60 miles of railway. In view of its good name in all shipping and mercantile centres throughout the world, the Trust does not want this 60-mile figure to become, say, 70 miles or 80. It therefore has been inquiring what proportion, roughly, the municipal taxes, paid by other ports, bear to these ports' total collections, and has ascertained that in Rangoon and Calcutta they come to about 4 per cent and in Bombay and Karachi to a smaller percentage. But if the Legislature does not see fit to impose an upper limit on the taxation of the Madras Port Trust property which has cost over three crores of rupees, the incidence on trade may conceivably become so heavy as to be injurious.

(Sir Francis Spring ; Sir Gordon Fraser ; Mr. Thonger ; Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar.)

" It therefore has suggested itself that it will not be unfair to the trade of the Port if legislation is made to provide that the property tax, levied by the municipality under clause 102 of its new Act, shall not in any case exceed 4 per cent of the Trust's whole collections. Hence my amendment. Then if the total annual collections are, as just now at the end of the war, 14 lakhs, the property tax payable must not exceed Rs. 56,000 per annum. Later, when 20 lakhs a year are collected by the Trust it will have to pay Rs. 80,000 per annum. These figures ought not, I think, to embarrass trade unduly.

" I ought to mention here that the Trades Association have suggested a higher figure, 5 per cent."

The Hon'ble Sir GORDON FRASER :—" I would like to second the amendment proposed by the Hon'ble Sir Francis Spring. The tax will of course fall on the trade of Madras, but that cannot be helped. We ought to consider it a fair tax to impose. The question was fully considered by the members of the Chamber of Commerce and provision is embodied in the Bill limiting the taxation to be imposed and then the Chamber as a body and individually are quite unanimous that taxation should be levied on the Port Trust premises. The prosperity of Madras is largely dependent upon its trade in competition with Bombay. From the debate we had yesterday afternoon, on the half per cent import tax, I thought Honourable Members did not fully realize how very severe the competition of Bombay was with Madras. I am sorry I cannot give the exact figures. But Honourable Members would be surprised to learn how very close to Madras, Bombay goods can come and under-sell Madras, due simply to cheaper sea-freight from foreign countries to Bombay as compared with Madras. It would be a great pity to tax the Port Trust premises so as to interfere in any serious way with trade. On the other hand, the principle that we are admitting is quite correct. There are warehouses within the Port Trust premises and if they were not there, goods would have to be stored on the premises outside and in many ways taxation is all right. One point on which I do not agree with the Hon'ble Sir Francis Spring although I am supporting his amendment as it stands is in the rates of tax to be imposed and in this respect I differ very considerably from the Hon'ble Mr. Thonger. The Hon'ble Sir Francis Spring has mentioned that the Madras Trades Association suggested a higher figure than 4 per cent. The Hon'ble Sir Francis Spring has given the Calcutta rate and the Bombay rate. Bombay works to 2·3 per cent. The Port that we are competing with is Bombay. We do not compete with Calcutta. If we are going to put a rate higher than Bombay, we are going to impose a much greater hardship than Bombay. I cannot very well now press for the reduction of the rates, for 4 per cent being reduced to 2½ per cent but I would deprecate very strongly any attempt to increase the rate above 4 per cent."

The Hon'ble Mr. J. H. THONGER :—" Your Excellency, the duty imposed upon me by my Association is to make a small amendment and that is that the Hon'ble Sir Francis Spring's proposal of 4 per cent should be increased to 5 per cent. If that is done it will receive the support of the Trades Association. As a matter of fact, in the opinion of the Association, a port like Madras ought to be able to bear its reasonable portion of the taxes of the city and there is absolutely no reason whatever as far as we can see to exempt it or that the Port Trust of Madras should not bear its own share of the taxes as any other business concern. We have had an assurance from the Hon'ble Sir Francis Spring and the Hon'ble Sir Gordon Fraser that to do so would unduly handicap the Port Trust in their work and the prosperity of Madras would suffer. That being so, we must hold the scales even between the corporation which wants money and the Port Trust which cannot pay more than a certain maximum without adversely affecting the prosperity of the Port. The other point that the Trades Association has asked me to mention is that the question of assessment should receive careful consideration. They are of opinion that the Port Trust must be assessed in the same way as it is treated in Bombay. Bombay taxes buildings of every description which are in the Trust. What I wish to point out is that the higher the assessment the more we shall receive, as the revenue of the Port Trust increases."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR :—" Your Excellency, the Council is aware that under the law as it now stands the Port Trust is exempt from all taxation and that was in the Bill which went to the Select Committee. This is one of those instances in which the Select Committee went in favour of the corporation. We said that we would not permit this exemption to continue and so we struck it out. But since then, inquiries made have shown that in other places where Port Trusts are liable to taxation, there has been considerable friction between the municipal authority on the one hand and the port authority on the other in regard to the taxation leviable on the latter. This is a matter of some anxiety to Your Excellency's Government because we have taken upon ourselves the responsibility of the liability for removing the exemption which now exists. In doing away with the exemption we do not want to open wide a contest between two important bodies like the corporation on the one hand and the Port Trust on the other. At that time the Hon'ble Sir Francis Spring brought forward a proposal that he was willing to accept the taxation of the Port Trust and that he would prefer that there should be no loop-hole for any contingency of wrangling between the two bodies and this particular device which he has proposed is intended to prevent it. I say nothing as regards the particular detail whether it should be 4 per cent or 5 per cent, but I would only point out that so far as I could see, this proposal is practically the best means that I can think of to prevent a possible conflict hereafter ; otherwise in assessing the harbour, what is the basis upon which you can go. If you apply the ordinary basis for other assessments, you can only assess the buildings ; you cannot do more ; but if you assess buildings only, you will probably aspect of the question that it would be inflicting serious loss on the corporation; while it would be a serious loss upon the corporation, it would not be a serious loss on the Port Trust. What they imagine is that Madras trade will be affected by this small modicum of Port Trust dues being enhanced. What will happen? The Port Trust is not going to pay out of its pocket. It puts on its dues and spreads it on the goods brought into Madras and eventually the consumer, the Madras citizen pays for it. We are willing to take that burden. It will affect the profits of the merchants. It may or it may not; but I only anticipate the possibility. Even that we are not to take into consideration; on the other hand, it is not likely to affect the Port Trust. On the other hand, in civilized countries they are going upon the principle of not exempting local public property. There was a time when local public property was sought to be exempted on various grounds, but the prevailing view now is, as recommended by the Royal Commission on local taxation, that they should be taxed. This is what they say: 'That special properties such as railways, canals, mines, tramways, docks, telephones and gas, water, and electric light works should be valued in the first instance by a valuer appointed by the valuation authority.' When that is the view which has found acceptance in civilized countries, here with a bankrupt corporation without additional resources we are asked to be deprived of one of the chief items of revenue. It was there till 1905. There was no complaint. It is not a case of putting on. The Honourable Member is wrong in supposing that it is new. It was there till 1905. There was no complaint. Let it be restored. It is not a case of putting newly. I know the Honourable Member can find arguments whichever view he chooses to accept. If he took the other view, he would have carried greater weight in the Council, but unfortunately I do not occupy his position; and therefore my words go in vain. However, I enter my most emphatic protest against this method on the part of the Government of accepting recommendations made by influential persons and neglecting the representations made by rate-payers and their representatives."

The Hon'ble Dr. T. M. NAYAR:—"My Lord, the question that we are discussing now reminds me of what took place in the earlier days of the introduction of municipal institutions into India. It was then suggested that the proper method of municipal taxation would be a taxation on house property levied at a certain percentage of the annual rental value. It was then pointed out that in Northern India, there were a number of Rajas and Nawabs, come down in worldly possessions, but still living in magnificent palaces which their ancestors had built and therefore if they were assessed at the annual rental value, they would be absolutely unable to pay the municipal assessment and the Government of India accepted that view. That, I understand, is one reason why in many parts of Northern India they prefer octroi duties to taxation on house property. The Government of India, however, decided that so far as Southern India is concerned, there was to be no octroi duty but there should be plenty of duty on house property. Here comes the Nawab come down in life with his magnificent palace who wants an exemption from the duty on house property. He is willing to pay the octroi duty and therefore we are asked not to assess the actual annual rental value of their buildings but to have a certain percentage of their income."

The Hon'ble Sir FRANCIS SPRING:—"The tax will be based on the annual rental value, but only limited to 4 per cent of the Trust's gross collections."

The Hon'ble Dr. T. M. NAYAR:—"If the tax is to be a certain percentage of the annual rental value of the buildings owned by the Port Trust, it would be alright. What we have to do is with the percentage of the income of the Port Trust."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"The amendment makes it quite clear. It says it should not exceed 4 per cent. My Honourable Friend explained that there was constant irritation between the municipality and the Port Trust otherwise, and therefore they came to some agreement."

The Hon'ble Dr. T. M. NAYAR:—"There must be an assessment on lands and buildings and the moment you assess it, you must forget it and you must concentrate your attention on the 4 per cent of the earnings. I cannot reconcile that with the principle that is in the Act. If the Port Trust are to be assessed according to the property tax laid down, they ought to pay a percentage of tax which the corporation will have to fix hereafter, whether it would be 25 per cent or 35 or 45 per cent on the annual rental value of their buildings. As to what percentage of their income it will be, it is a matter for private consideration by the Port Trust and this Council or the corporation ought to have nothing whatever to do with it. My Lord, it has been stated that in other ports such a principle has been accepted. I do not say anything of their enactments, but what is now attempted here is to introduce a consideration like that in an enactment and I strongly object to it. If you have a clause like this introduced into an enactment, it vitiates the whole principle of the property taxation, but if it is to be a private understanding between the Port Trust and the corporation they are at perfect liberty to come to that understanding and this Council at this stage of the consideration of the Bill need not consider that point at all—whether certain remissions are to be given for warehouses which are not utilized or which warehouses are to be assessed or not. Those are considerations of details with which this Council at this stage cannot have any concern whatever. I am surprised, absolutely surprised that the Government have agreed to accept this amendment. It is not as if the corporation is wanting to assess the Port Trust which is newly started before it has made its way and before it is in a position to know what its income is. From the very commencement of the Harbour Trust up till now, it has not been assessed, not because property was exempt from taxation but because the Madras Port was defined to be outside the limits of the municipality. The boundaries of the municipality were defined in that way and in that clever way it has evaded taxation till now. It cannot say that the corporation wants to put the tax on an infant institution which it could not reasonably bear. They have had a very long start indeed and at this time, it is exceedingly unreasonable to say that they cannot stand their fair share of taxation. Every one of the arguments advanced by the Hon'ble Sir Francis Spring can be advanced in favour of the occupants and owners of houses which are assessed. You showed no consideration whatever to their interests. In the case of a large number of people who might be living in good houses, but yet whose income would not correspond to their living in the big house you make no inquiry whatever; and there is no provision anywhere for making an inquiry to find out what proportion of the income of the occupant of a house will his municipal tax be. It will be interesting if that inquiry is followed up. There is no such suggestion. It is reserved to this apparently well-to-do public body to come and claim such remission. I can only strongly object to it. The principle is so very bad and this action of the Government coming on the top of the evening of a day which has got a very bad history so far as the attitude of the Government towards the financial resources of the corporation is concerned, this is one of the worst days we have had and coming at the top of the evening of such a day, the acceptance of a principle like this is exceedingly bad and it can only drive to one conclusion that Honourable non-official members who were all along to-day trying to get more financial justice done to the Madras Corporation, will after this evening have to reject this Bill absolutely and take the very first opportunity they have of upsetting the whole of this Bill. If the Montagu-Chelmsford Report is to be trusted, they will have such an opportunity very early because they say that the proper time for legislating for the constitution of local bodies is when provincial autonomy has been granted and when the provinces have been reconstituted. You will have provincial autonomy here and when this Provincial Government is to be reconstituted, I hope Honourable non-official members will take the very first opportunity of introducing a City Municipal Bill and then dealing with all these conditions in the way in which they deserve. With this protest, I oppose the amendment proposed."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"I should like to give the last speaker some information. I think he said if I followed his words correctly that we have no evidence that the arrangements quoted in the case of Bombay and Calcutta and Rangoon and other ports are embodied in the enactments. So far as I am informed that statement is not correct. The conditions prevailing in the port of Bombay are contained in the Bombay Port Trust Act. In Calcutta those conditions are contained in sections 59 and 68 of the Calcutta Port Trust Act. Again in Rangoon, section 46 of the Burma Act of 1910 deals with the conditions of Rangoon. So far as I am informed, these are all embodied. I have not had much time to examine the subject."

The Hon'ble Yaqub Hasan Sahib Bahadur:—"May I ask whether it is in the Municipal Acts?"

The Hon'ble Dr. T. M. NAYAR:—"No, nothing in the Municipal Act. I meant Municipal Acts."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"The Honourable Member mentioned enactments, by which I thought that he meant that these were private arrangements of which there was no record. I may say these arrangements are contained in the enactments in the Port Trust Acts of different ports. I only wish to give information to the Council. Because it is wrong that they should go under the impression that as has been rather suggested in the debate, the matter was unauthorized and illegitimate private arrangement. It is only an accident that this calamity which the Honourable Gentleman fears should fall upon this Council at the end of a day of tragedy as he would describe it. But he would allow me to say: I think the position of Government has not really been fairly considered. Experience shows that elsewhere—I am not alluding to Madras—it has been necessary to adjust the relations of the corporation and the Port authorities and surely it is not an unreasonable precedent to follow in the case of Madras. That is the sum total of the whole proposal and that is what is apparently done under the arrangement when compared with the arrangement prevailing in Bombay and Karachi. A generous arrangement has been made in the interests of the corporation by placing a limit to be placed on the earnings of the Port Trust. It is only the first step and we all hope that the relations between the corporation and the Port Trust will continue as they have been to be entirely friendly and co-operative and it will be surely quite possible as years go on to adjust these relations if any further adjustment is required. I am afraid I cannot get up with the strong feelings with which some Honourable Gentlemen expressed to this Council on these matters. We are really here dealing with business matters; we are all desiring to do justice to all the interests concerned. I hope I have not gone too far in allowing liberty of debate, but I am only anxious that the field of the subject matter of each proposal shall be put before the Council. I would not stand longer between them and the division. I will put the amendment on the paper to the Council."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. KRISHNA RAO:—"There is the Hon'ble Mr. Thongar's amendment that 5 per cent be substituted for 4."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"The Hon'ble Sir Francis Spring proposed 4 per cent and the Government gave their consent to it. The Hon'ble Mr. Thongar suggested 5 per cent."

(Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar; Mr. Krishna Rao;

find that it would be very much less than the amount of 4 or 5 per cent. There are only two alternatives; either you must say that the only things you would assess would be buildings, or if you want a return equivalent to the total outlay you must put it on the ground of percentage of the gross earnings. I quite see that in regard to the property tax this is a novel principle; but I would ask you to consider that the position is also novel and the remedy has to be novel. Here the Port Trust has been in existence for a long time paying no tax and the Legislature is bringing it within the purview of municipal taxation. While we are anxious that it should contribute a reasonable share to the revenues of the corporation, we are equally anxious that there should be no temptation on the part of the corporation to pile up the assessment so as to injure Madras trade and give the trade of other ports a sort of advantage over local trade. Figures were obtained as to the percentage of gross earnings which prevail, and as pointed out by the Hon'ble Sir Gordon Fraser, it varied from 2 to 4 per cent. The Hon'ble Francis Spring said he would put it at 4 per cent and, unless some other device of a more satisfactory nature is shown to us, the Government feel bound to accept the suggestion. I say all this without prejudice to the question as to what the exact rate should be at which the taxation should be imposed."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. KRISHNA RAO:—"Your Excellency, though the Government have been able to accept the new departure implied in this amendment, I regret I cannot support this amendment. I find it difficult to support it, because it introduces a principle contrary to the principles which have been so far accepted by this Council. We have been discussing amendments calculated to fix the limit for the levy of the property tax. It was under consideration as to whether there was to be a maximum limit of 20 or 25 per cent; it was pointed out that it might be left to the good sense of the corporation to prescribe what limits would be proper without any attempt to fix a limit. I am not in favour of fixing a limit on the lines suggested—4 per cent of the gross earnings. That is one reason. Another reason is that all attempts made to increase the financial resources of the corporation have failed and that the Select Committee with full information have come to the conclusion that the Port Trust might be taxed. I cannot see the reason for reducing the resources of the corporation to any extent. It was pointed out by the Hon'ble Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar that if buildings are taxed, it will be much below 4 per cent. It may be so or it may not be so; but whatever it might be, we might leave it to the corporation authorities to take a broad and liberal and reasonable view and assess it properly. They are also interested in the proper working of the Port Trust upon which the welfare of the Presidency depends to a large extent. Let us hope that they would discharge their duty properly and that they would not be unreasonable in assessing those buildings."

"Another reason is while dealing with another clause, we found it unnecessary to exempt educational buildings which are being exempted in the mufassal municipalities. When the Hon'ble Mr. Molony pointed out that it would fetch one lakh to the corporation, notwithstanding our sympathy for education we voted for educational buildings not being exempted. Then an amendment was moved at least to exempt buildings used for primary education. We have all of us the interests of primary education at heart; and we are all anxious that at the earliest opportunity there should be free primary education and as far as possible, compulsory education. Notwithstanding our anxiety in that respect the council was not able to vote for the exemption of even primary school buildings. When we have now done so, we will create a very unwholesome departure if we introduce a new principle in the case of the Port Trust. For these reasons, I oppose the amendment."

The Hon'ble Yaqub Hasan Sahib Bahadur:—"I am as anxious to safeguard the interests of trade and commerce as my Honourable friends, the Hon'ble Sir Gordon Fraser and the Hon'ble Mr. Thonger. But still I do not see that in allowing this provision to remain in this Bill as it is, the interests of trade will in any way suffer. If the Hon'ble Sir Gordon Fraser had shown by reference to facts and figures that the value of building properties in the possession of the Port Trust is so much and that if we assess it, at that rate, it will give so much, and that the value of the imports and exports is so much and the tax divided on the value will work out so much per ton, he would have been able to convince us whether that imposition per ton on the import or export will really drive away trade to Bombay. He has not done that. If he had taken the trouble at least to convince himself and find the rates per ton, he will have found that the rate per ton will be so little that it will never affect trade or commerce. Steamer freight is much cheaper than railway freight. Compared with the railway freight from Bombay to Madras this addition will make very small imposition on steamer freight. From that point of view, we may rest assured that we are not doing any harm to the trade or commerce of this town by this imposition. Another reason for my opposing it is that the Hon'ble Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar said that we are introducing a novel principle. It means this: you may tax other buildings at a certain percentage, but you should not tax the Port Trust buildings at the same percentage. That means it is giving them partial exemption instead of the total exemption that they have been enjoying so long, or in other words, instead of taxing them on the buildings, we simply share their earnings, and take 4 per cent out of them. I do not understand under what head of taxation it can be brought. It must be either the property tax, in which case it must be subject to the same conditions as other property taxes, or you bring in some new sort of taxation and say that whatever the earnings of the Harbour Trust are, let them pay 4 or 5 per cent of it to the Corporation. That will introduce a new principle. Is it equitable

(Mr. Yaqub Hasan; Mr. Ranga Achariyar;
the Advocate-General.)

that the corporation should have a share in the earnings of the Harbour Trust? If it is equitable, in the case of the Harbour Trust, why should it not share the earnings of railways and other companies also? It is a very dangerous principle. Let the Harbour Trust be taxed as any other property is taxed. Let the corporation officers and the Port Trust come to some sort of understanding. Let them say 'such and such buildings may be taxed, as actually used for storage, etc.' The walls, piers, etc., that are not used for storage need not be taxed. We can come to some arrangement by which the Port Trust is not made to bear more than it can bear."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"I want the Council to realize the extent of abandonment which the Government are prepared to make as to the resources of the corporation by accepting this amendment. I must express my surprise that the Honourable Member in charge of the Bill should have accepted this amendment. He showed no indication in the Select Committee of any such inclination and I cannot resist the suspicion that powerful influential support has been gained for this amendment which has secured this support at this late stage of the Bill. The property of the Port Trust is valued at 224 lakhs and at the present rate of 18½ per cent it will give 2½ lakhs of revenue to the corporation. What is it that is sought to be done by this amendment?—to deprive it of 2 lakhs of revenue which it would legitimately have; by accepting this amendment of the Hon'ble Sir Francis Spring, he told us that it would have to pay about Rs. 60,000. As I have said already, the attitude of the Government in this matter has been that while it has been solicitous to earn the good will and the friendship of powerful interests, the poor house-owners are left in the lurch because they have no powerful or influential support. I must say that most emphatically in this place that if the house-holder had such influential support, probably the provisions which have been introduced to throw the burden upon him would have received much greater consideration at the hands of the Government than they have received. If the Government had seen their way to accept that innocent amendment of the ½ per cent duty, if the Hon'ble Sir Gordon Fraser had seen his way to accept that amendment, I would have gladly supported this amendment but they stood firm and they would not listen to the reasonable request; but now they say everything pinches trade or traders. He rightly fights for it; why should he not join hands with other people whose toes are trodden upon by this Bill? I ask for impartial treatment of all people. Those that represent trade have been successful in reducing the burden upon themselves, but they have not joined hands with others in reducing the burden on house property. On the other hand, the Hon'ble Sir Gordon Fraser thought that 25 per cent would be reasonable. How does it lie in his mouth to say that 4 per cent is reasonable in this case? Are you going to calculate the income of the house-holders? Will you calculate his income from property? Take the investment he has made on the property and give him the return; but you do not take the trouble to do that. You say that you would have an automatic rule, say 20 per cent or 25 per cent. Take railway companies; are they not serving the trade of Madras? Why should provision not be made also in the case of railway companies which are a company as well as the Port Trust; that the tax on their buildings and lands should not exceed 4 per cent? Surely, what is good for the Port Trust is good for the railway company also. Take again the Buckingham Mills and the Carnatic Mills and various such other industrial concerns. Why should you not say 'we shall not impose a taxation by way of property tax which would exceed 4 per cent of the income'? Where should we be if we introduce this novel principle, this novel objectionable procedure, while the Honourable Member in charge showed no inclination to consider this amendment? Why should we accept it now when amendments after amendments made in the interests of rate-payers have been rejected with scorn? I enter my most emphatic protest against this way of dealing with the interests of the vast rate-payers. I cannot suppress my indignation at this attitude of the Government in favour of this amendment and against the amendments brought forward on behalf of the rate-payers of the city."

"My Lord, up to the Act of 1904 and even when the Act of 1904 was enacted, there was no exemption of the Port Trust property, but by a side way as it were, in enacting the Port Trust Act, they go and exempt them without any notice to the corporation."

The Hon'ble the ADVOCATE-GENERAL:—"The Honourable Member is incorrect. Section 129 of the Madras City Municipal Act exempts wharves and jetties connected with the harbour of Madras."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"That is a quite different thing from buildings with which we are concerned. I have it before me and the Hon'ble the Advocate-General might have waited with patience. I was just going to refer to that very section. The whole of the property vested in the Port Trust was exempted from taxation by one stroke of the pen, in an altogether different Act unconnected with the Municipal Act. I am quite aware that in section 129 to which the Hon'ble the Advocate-General referred, there is an exemption for public piers, wharves and jetties connected with the harbour of Madras. That does not affect us. Would you have it now like that? On the other hand, property is put to most bone-affecting use, and we are giving facilities to the harbour. If you see the Bill, the house-holder is sick and we are giving facilities to the harbour. He is to get water at the discretion of the Commissioner whereas to not to get drinking water. It is made mandatory that he should supply water. It gets a priority on the Port Trust, it is made mandatory that he should supply water. It gets a priority on the water-supply. We do not grudge it, but then to claim compensation is absolutely fallacious and objectionable in principle and I would also ask the Honourable Member to consider this

Mr. Siva Rao; Mr. M. Ramachandra Rao.) [13TH FEBRUARY 1919.]

The Council re-assembled at 11 a.m.

His Excellency the President:—"The Council will now proceed to consider the remaining clauses of the Madras Agricultural Pests and Diseases Bill. I think we came to clause 10 last time. Is that not so?"

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"We have done clause 9."

Clause 10.

The Hon'ble the ADVOCATE-GENERAL:—"I beg to move amendment No. 18 on the agenda. It is a consequential amendment, in order to make it clear that the 30 days time is allowed from the date of service of the notice and not from the date of the notice. I move that in clause 10 for the words and figure 'sub-section (2)' the words and figure 'sub-section (1)' be substituted."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. Y. G. Campbell seconded the amendment.
The amendment was then put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble the ADVOCATE-GENERAL:—"I now proceed to move amendment No. 18-A on the agenda, viz., for 'the date of', read 'the service of'."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. Y. G. Campbell seconded the amendment.
The amendment was put and agreed to.

Clause 10 as amended was allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Clause 11.

The Hon'ble the ADVOCATE-GENERAL:—"I beg to move that for the words 'according to' in clause 11, sub-clause (1), the words 'not exceeding' be substituted. This is in order to bring out the meaning of the section quite clearly. In sub-clause (2) of section 9 which the Council has already passed and added to the Bill the Council laid down that for trees destroyed, the compensation should be not exceeding one half the value thereof, for plants destroyed, not exceeding two-thirds of the value. In sub-clause (1) of clause 11, the words 'according to' would lead to a certain amount of ambiguity and it is proposed to remove it by adopting a similar phraseology: 'At rates not exceeding the rates in section 9'—that will be the one-half rate and the two-thirds rate will make the meaning clear. That is a purely verbal amendment and it does not affect the sense of the section."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. Y. G. Campbell seconded the amendment.
The amendment was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur V. K. RAMANUJA ACHARIYAR:—"I do not move amendment No. 20 on the agenda standing in my name. It is now unnecessary."

With the permission of His Excellency the President, the following amendment was then withdrawn, viz., that for the word 'rates' be substituted 'limits' in the fifth line.

Clause 11, as amended, was allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Clauses 12 and 13.

Clauses 12 and 13 were allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Clause 14.

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur V. K. RAMANUJA ACHARIYAR:—"I do not propose to move amendment No. 21 standing in my name."

With the permission of His Excellency the President, the amendment was then withdrawn, which was:—"Omit the clause."

The Hon'ble Mr. P. SIVA RAO:—"I do not propose to move amendment No. 21-A on the agenda standing in my name; because the matter has been concluded under clause 7."

With the permission of His Excellency the President, the amendment was then withdrawn, which was:—"Omit the clause."

Clause 14 was then allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Clause 15.

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur V. K. RAMANUJA ACHARIYAR:—"I do not propose to move amendment No. 22 on the agenda."

With the permission of His Excellency the President the following amendment was withdrawn:—"Omit the clause."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO:—"My Lord, there is an amendment standing in the name of the Honourable the Raja of Ramnad which I shall move. As amended, the clause will read:—"If any person, without lawful authority or excuse (proof whereof shall lie on him) contravenes a notification under section 3 (b) of this Act prohibiting or restricting the removal of any plant from one place to another, he shall be deemed to have committed an offence under this Act." The object of this amendment is to exclude cases where lawful excuse is available for the contravention of the notification under section 3 (b) which prohibits the removal of plants from one place to another. It is quite possible, Your Excellency, that the notification may not be known to the person and there may be other lawful excuses which may be available to him the proof of which must be on him. The Honourable the Advocate-General referred the other day to the interpretation of a section in the Indian Penal

13TH FEBRUARY 1919.]

(Mr. M. Ramachandra Rao; Mr. Siva Rao;
the Advocate-General; Mr. Venkalapati Raju;
Mr. Krishna Rao.)

Code and stated that lawful excuse was always available to a person in criminal courts under the exceptional circumstances mentioned therein. At the same time, it seems to me, my Lord, that this would be an indication to the Magistrates trying the offence that unintentional contravention of the notification under section 3 (b) should not be punishable. That is the reason for this amendment. I may also point out that the fact that there is lawful excuse ought to be proved by the accused under this amendment. I trust, therefore, that this small amendment will be accepted—viz., to add the words "without lawful authority or excuse (proof whereof shall lie on him)".

The Hon'ble Mr. P. SIVA RAO:—"Your Excellency, I beg to second this amendment. This is one of the necessary safeguards that we insist on to mitigate the rigour and the drastic nature of the provisions of this Bill. As regards what the Hon'ble the Advocate-General has said that these will be covered under the general exceptions of the Indian Penal Code, I am certainly of opinion that it will not come under that. The 'general exceptions' only excuse a man for doing a thing which he is justified by law in doing or which he is bound by law to do. I do not think lawful excuse would ever come under the general exceptions of the Indian Penal Code. There is this provision that the onus of proving lawful excuse would lie heavily on him who sets it up. I therefore strongly appeal to the Council to accept this amendment."

The Hon'ble the ADVOCATE-GENERAL:—"Your Excellency, the amendment proposed by the Hon'ble Mr. Ramachandra Rao is certainly a most unworkable amendment. First of all, there is no definition of what is meant by lawful authority or lawful excuse. Where are we to go for a definition? Are we going to define the circumstances under which this 'lawful excuse' is to be allowed? Is ignorance of law an excuse? The notification may be issued and may have been assented to and the Act may have come into force, but is ignorance of law to be held an excuse? What is 'lawful authority'?—these words are of the vaguest character, and it simply throws on the Magistrate the responsibility of deciding what is lawful excuse or authority, without any kind of help given to him to decide one way or the other. It really gives the accused no protection. He does not know what is lawful excuse. Is poverty to be pleaded? Are the orders of the master to be pleaded? Are the orders of the managing member of the family to be pleaded? Most of the Honourable Members are lawyers and I would appeal to them that to introduce such words when you want to enforce an obligation and to penalise the breach of it, will simply stultify the whole law. No attempt has been made by either of the Honourable Members to state what are the cases for which this provision is needed. I do not suggest that the word 'excuse' is covered by the general exceptions in the Indian Penal Code. If any excuse is open to him, which is covered by the general exceptions of the Indian Penal Code, that will enable him to exculpate himself, but otherwise he will be liable for a breach. Honourable Members will remember that in the City Municipal Act there is section 420 which says: 'Whoever contravenes any provisions of the law; it does not make any saving in favour of lawful authority or lawful excuse. There is a similar section in the Act of the Indian Legislature dealing with the importation of infected plants into India. There are no such words there as suggested now. It will be opening a very wide door, without enabling the Magistrate to guide himself as to the cases in which he is required to apply these words, 'lawful authority' or 'lawful excuse' and I therefore oppose this amendment."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. VENKATAPATI RAJU:—"Your Excellency, the Hon'ble the Advocate-General pointed out some difficulties; but I do not see any force in any one of them because ignorance of law is never pleaded anywhere as an excuse. But the Honourable the Advocate-General has pertinently asked the question, 'What are the cases to be covered by this?' The Hon'ble Mr. Sadasiva Bhat has mentioned that there are religious scruples for a particular community in obeying the Act in every particular. Does the Hon'ble the Advocate-General want a man to be prosecuted if he cannot do a thing on account of his religious scruples, if he cannot carry out the order? Unless some such provision is made, I think there is a defect in the Bill. I appeal to the Government and the Hon'ble the Advocate-General to suggest some method of excusing such persons as have religious scruples to carry out the orders of Government."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. KRISHNA RAO:—"Your Excellency, the amendment moved by the Hon'ble Mr. Ramachandra Rao having been opposed by the Government, I do not see that there is any chance of its being accepted by this Council. I would suggest a milder amendment which, I believe, will meet with the acceptance of the Honourable mover of the resolution and also of the Government. I would suggest that in the place of 'without lawful authority or excuse' the word 'wilfully' may be introduced before the word 'contravenes'. The Hon'ble the Advocate-General drew attention to parallel legislation. I find that in the Ceylon Pests Bill—section 9, they introduced the word 'wilfully'. That word gives some indication as to some intention being necessary before a man is prosecuted and dealt with. We are considering parallel legislation in dealing with this matter, and the only appropriate legislation that I could refer to is section 9 of the Ceylon Pests Ordinance of 1907. They use the word 'wilfully' in that section. Though it does not go to the length to which my Honourable friend's amendment would go, that would at least provide the necessary safeguards; and it is only in very proper cases of wilful contravention, that a man can be convicted. With these words, I suggest the amendment: and the clause as amended would read 'If any person wilfully contravenes a notification under section 3 (b), etc.'"

(Mr. Narasimha Ayyar; Mr. Ranga Achariyar; Mr. Rama Ayyangar; the Advocate-General; Mr. M. Ramachandra Rao.) [13TH FEBRUARY 1919.]

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR:—"Your Excellency, I beg to second this amendment and in seconding it, I wish to say one word. It is possible that a man might carry a lot of things, might carry a lot of articles for manure and in that lot he might carry unawares a thing which is prohibited. For instance, let me take the illustration of the villagers who carry a lot of plants for manuring purposes. They take all sorts of bushes for manuring purposes. Suppose in the huge cart that carries these things, there is a bit of water-hyacinth and suppose the transport of water-hyacinth is interdicted. What becomes of this poor fellow who takes all sorts of plants for the purpose of manure and in the midst of it a water-hyacinth also? Is the man to be convicted and fined Rs. 50 because he did not take care to find out that some part of the plants was interdicted plants? It will be an act of inhumanity to condemn such a man to punishment. I do not think it is the object of the Government to punish a man for what he carries unawares. It is only to prevent such a sort of thing that the word 'wilfully' is introduced. If the Government and the Honourable the Advocate-General see eye to eye with us, they will see the reasonableness of introducing the word 'wilfully.' Are we really creating a technical offence? It may be said in regard to technical matters much detail is not necessary. But in this case, the technical matter is to be an offence. Are we going to penalise a bit of oversight? I support this amendment."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"Your Excellency, I think it is a case of real difficulty that is pointed out by this amendment. I would say that under section 19 the rule-making section, the Governor in Council may frame rules providing what shall be deemed to be sufficient lawful excuse for the purposes of the section. That I think can be done. We cannot foresee what the difficulties are that may arise. It is a new Act, it is an experimental measure and even the department cannot foresee what difficulties might occur. They suggested difficulties and one real difficulty has been pointed out, namely, the religious scruples of a certain community, which must command some weight. That is not provided by this Act. There may be other cases in which there may be similar excuses for which the Governor in Council may have to provide. I therefore submit that by retaining the words 'without lawful excuse' we may define lawful excuse from time to time by rules to be framed by the Governor in Council, thus leaving it to the Government to decide what is lawful excuse and to provide for hard cases. I therefore make this suggestion to the Government."

The Hon'ble Mr. K. RAMA AYYANGAR:—"My Lord, this creates a technical offence—"If any person contravenes the notification, etc." The intention to contravene must be in a case of this kind an element of the offence. It is not a case in which intention may be presumed in almost all cases; in fact, most of the offences relating to offences against the State or against public convenience, in most of these cases the intention will have to be shown. We are creating a new law and we are making the breach of it penal. In such cases, it is only very proper that we do not depend merely on the technicality of the offence. Unless the spirit of the notification is contravened, I think the action ought not to be punished. One instance or other may be now thought of and pointed out. I quite see that the Hon'ble Mr. Narasimha Ayyar has pointed out one, but I do not know if it is possible to think of all the possible excuses unless we sit together and discuss each of these excuses. Ordinarily the object of the section ought to be to penalise the intention to contravene, especially when we have to deal with a lot of illiterate people who have to be controlled by such notifications. This is a technical offence and it must be that the spirit of the offender must be against the notification. If it be merely by forgetfulness or ignorance or any other cause, it must be open to the magistrate to decide the intention and not merely to punish the man for a technical offence, especially in a case of this sort in a country like this. I have been pleading for the omission of this provision altogether, but since the offence has been allowed to stand, it must be made as innocuous as possible. I submit that the intention to contravene alone must be brought under the section and not mere non-compliance with the notification."

The Hon'ble the ADVOCATE-GENERAL:—"Your Excellency, I submit there is really no necessity for amending the section in either of the ways suggested. This is merely a technical offence and just as in the case of the Madras Adulteration Act and the Madras City Municipal Act, the contravention of a by-law is punishable with a fine. There is no need for criminal intention. It is the disobedience of the notification that is made punishable. I do not see what other kind of criminal intent is necessary. There is no other ingredient in the offence. We would have to define the offence in some other way in order to make mens rea essential. Honourable Members will notice that I have given notice of an amendment or rather that the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar has given notice of an amendment and it is likely to be accepted that prosecutions under this Act are not to take place without the sanction of the District Collector. That will certainly provide an ample safeguard to prevent the Act from being abused. This is merely for the protection of the whole community at large. Honourable Members, I presume, do not want that offenders should really escape. What they want is that the working of the Act should be as wisely controlled as possible. For that the provision will be made that the sanction of the District Collector is a pre-requisite to the launching of a prosecution. The magistrate will go into the merits of the case and if he finds that it is simply a technical dereliction he may simply warn him and he is not bound to punish him."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO:—"My Lord, I have nothing further to say than that the Honourable the Advocate-General has persuaded himself, I believe, that this Act will at once become unworkable if the word 'wilfully' as suggested by my Honourable friend Mr. Krishna Rao, or any other words suggested by Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar are accepted and introduced here. The whole point is whether for the purposes of punishing a man for contravening a notification under section 3 (b) mens rea is necessary. I believe that a notification will be published in the district gazettes and many ignorant ryots may be transporting plants without knowing anything of these notifications. In some cases, this will really work hardship and this rule of punishing people who unintentionally transgress the notifications should not be embodied in the Bill. If the Honourable Member says that it will be unworkable I am certain that no amendment is likely to be accepted in this Council. We are as anxious as the Honourable Advocate-General is, to make the Act workable and to see that it is worked for the purpose for which it is intended. I want that we should provide for cases where unintentional transgressions should not be punished. Looking at the illiteracy of the villagers, it may be that the notification may not reach every villager, and I consider that it would be proper to give discretion to the trying magistrate to decide whether it is intentional or unintentional transgression. This is all that I wish to do. My Honourable friend says that the whole Act will become unworkable."

The Hon'ble Sir FAIRLESS BARBER:—"May I ask for an explanation. In what way would religious scruples have to be observed in the removal of plants from one place to another?"

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"I have followed this discussion very closely. I am not able to judge of the legal aspect of the question, but I think the practical aspect is this: It is not really with the ignorant villager that we are dealing, but it is the man who makes some profit by selling the diseased plants and thereby nullifying or vitiating the whole Bill. That is the man we are afraid of. It is not the occupier."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO:—"Under section 3 (b) any person who removes the plant, not necessarily for the purpose of profit or trade, from one place to another is contemplated."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"I know that. It is the man who is going to make a profit that we have to think of. The innocent man will be protected in the District Collectors' action being necessary. No one is going to administer this Act by making a crusade against innocent people. I am inclined to accept the judgment of the Honourable the Advocate-General and I can say no more about it."

The Hon'ble Mr. K. RAMA AYYANGAR:—"You practically prohibit the magistrate from considering the intention of the cultivator."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR:—"Before it is put to the vote, may I request your Excellency whether we could give effect to the Honourable the Advocate-General's statement, i.e., whether we could make a provision enabling the magistrate to warn the accused."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"We must deal with the amendment as it is on paper before the Council."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. KRISHNA RAO:—"May I ask Your Lordship to take votes on my amendment suggesting the addition of the word 'wilfully'?"

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"Yes."

The amendment was put and lost.

The Hon'ble Mr. K. RAMA AYYANGAR:—"I claim a poll."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"I assure you that the records will become confusing. I just took the vote to indicate the opinion of the Council. I do not think we really need a poll."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. KRISHNA RAO:—"I have the honour to move that in clause 15 the following words be omitted:—"In addition to confiscation and destruction of the plant in respect of which the offence was committed." The section as it stands reads as follows:—"If any person contravenes a notification under section 3 (b) of this Act prohibiting or restricting the removal of any plant from one place to another he shall be deemed to have committed an offence under this Act. Any one convicted by a magistrate of such an offence shall, in addition to confiscation and destruction of the plant in respect of which the offence was committed, be liable to fine not exceeding Rs. 50, or in default to simple imprisonment for a period not exceeding ten days."

"If the amendment I move is accepted, the result of it will be that a man convicted by a magistrate of an offence under this section will only be liable to be fined, but he will not be further subjected to confiscation or destruction of the plant. The reasons for moving this amendment are these. We have rejected in the first place, amendments calculated to make intention an ingredient of the offence. We have not allowed its being made an offence, the offender being punished only when he contravenes the notification without lawful excuse or authority nor have we qualified the same by the insertion of the word 'wilfully' which will signify some intention. As matters stand at present, any one who knowingly or unknowingly, not knowing that any notification has been issued, contravenes the notification, he is liable to be punished under this section. Therefore, there is no justification for his being subjected to the further penalty of confiscation and destruction of the plant in respect of which the offence was committed."

(Mr. Krishna Rao ; Sir Alexander Cardew ;
Mr. Ranga Achariyar ; Mr. Venkatapati Raju ;
Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar.)

"The second reason which I wish to urge is this. I request Honourable Members of this Council to examine the previous sections of this Act. Nowhere is destruction of the plant or confiscation of the plant provided. One reading the section would assume from the use of the words 'confiscation and destruction of the plant' in the section providing for the punishment, that it has been already provided for in the previous portion of the Bill; but it is not so. It might be suggested, that there is a provision under clause 5 and the following provisions for such steps being taken. Section 5 as amended by this Council reads as follows:—'Any officer duly empowered under section 17 in this behalf may enter on any land or water within the notified area in order to ascertain (a) whether any insect pest, plant disease or noxious weed is there present, and (b) whether the prescribed remedial or preventive measures or both as the case may require have been taken.

"The inspecting officer may enter upon any land and take whatever steps are required in order to ascertain whether any preventive or remedial measures have been taken and if he finds that no such measures are taken, it is open to him to pursue the other remedies provided for in the Act. Therefore I would suggest that, if under the section it is contemplated that he should destroy the plants or take other steps, the provisions of sections 5 and 6 are sufficiently comprehensive and that there is no necessity for any new provision for destruction or confiscation in section 15 of the Act. If it is argued by the Hon'ble the Advocate-General that there is no provision for confiscation or destruction of the plant, if it is argued that section 15 is the only section which would give power for confiscation or destruction of the plant, I would request the Council to consider whether there is any use in having that provision in section 15. It states that the penalty of confiscation and destruction of plants is only to come into operation in cases of conviction and not in other cases."

The Hon'ble Sir ALEXANDER CARDEW :—"What about section 9?"

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. KRISHNA RAO :—"My Lord, I submit that section 9 has no application to this case. If I am only informed in reply that section 9 applies, I have no grievance, because the man will get compensation; but because I anticipate that the Hon'ble the Advocate General will suggest that the provision as to destruction and confiscation in other sections would not apply, I move this amendment. If he says that this will come under section 9, I will not press it. My fear is—"

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR (interrupting) :—"What is the good of the Hon'ble the Advocate-General saying it? The Act will have to be construed by Judges."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. KRISHNA RAO :—"If section 9 provides for it, there is no necessity for providing for this in section 15. It is useless to introduce this provision. It is only in case he contravenes the notification, the Collector sanctions the prosecution of this particular person, and the magistrate finds the man guilty and convicts him, that this destruction and confiscation will come into operation. If provision is not made earlier, what is the use of thinking of the destruction or confiscation of the plant after an elaborate trial and conviction of the person? Even under the special law, the sentence of a magistrate is appealable to a higher Court. It may take a year or six months before the case is finally settled. Is it suggested that we should wait for this period before the destruction or confiscation could take place? I have no doubt whatever that these words should not find a place in this section, from whatever standpoint it may be viewed. I therefore move for the omission of these words. This penalty is unnecessary. If it is provided for otherwise, it is superfluous. If it is not provided for otherwise, it is useless. I therefore suggest that Your Excellency's Government would accept this amendment."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. VENKATAPATI RAJU :—"Your Excellency, I have great pleasure in seconding this amendment. I may respectfully submit that this clause which is asked to be omitted is either superfluous or mischievous. It is superfluous because under section 7 as soon as a person fails to carry out the orders of the inspecting officer, the officer appointed can carry out remedial measures, and the Hon'ble Sir Alexander Cardew has suggested that compensation is provided under section 9. If you are satisfied with these provisions, why do you want to add to them? It only means as if an additional power is contemplated. There is no such thing as being convicted of an offence if his property is confiscated. He will be convicted of an offence because it is declared to be an offence. We cannot have the postponement of the destruction of the article till some months after; it must be done immediately. The person cannot plead that his property is confiscated and therefore he should not be convicted. Therefore my submission is that these words can be advantageously omitted without any detriment to the provisions already existing."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR :—"May I say a word before the Honourable Member in charge speaks? I am afraid my Honourable friends are labouring under a mistake in regard to clause 15. What it aims at is an order by a magistrate for confiscation and destruction. It is very usual in the case of noxious foods and drugs, when you take a man before a magistrate, to order the destruction of a drug; because it is noxious. It is more for the protection of the public that the magistrate has to pass the order. Although that is not made clear by the language of the section, yet that is what I believe is intended. In that view, I do not think my Honourable friend should raise any objection."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR :—"Does the Honourable gentleman withdraw?"

[13TH FEBRUARY 1919.]

(Mr. Krishna Rao ; Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar ;
Sir Fairless Barber ; Mr. Siva Rao ; the President ;
Mr. Narasimha Ayyar.)

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. KRISHNA RAO :—"I should like to know if it is the intention of the Government that the magistrate should pass the order under the Criminal Procedure Code."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR :—"Your Excellency, as pointed out by the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar, there is some amount of confusion. Reference to section 3 (b) will show that there are two kinds of things contemplated, namely, prohibiting or restricting the removal of a plant from one place to another—that is one—and then, prescribing such other preventive or remedial measures as may be necessary. We get a number of sections afterwards dealing with this question of prescribing other preventive or remedial measures. Section 15 goes back to the first portion of section 3 (b), namely, prohibiting or restricting the removal of a plant from one place to another. If a man is caught in doing so, he will be taken before a magistrate, he will be hauled up before the court and he will be convicted and, as pointed out by the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar, we cannot allow the infection to spread. We must destroy the stuff. Otherwise, the poison will spread. I do not quite see what the Hon'ble Mr. A. S. Krishna Rao's difficulty is. The section simply says: 'Any one convicted by a magistrate' is subject to confiscation and destruction of the property. It seems to me very clear. It is only after conviction that this liability arises. I wholly endorse the explanation put forward by the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar and I think there is no need to amend the section at all."

The Hon'ble Sir FAIRLESS BARBER :—"I should like to ask the Honourable Member if this does not take into consideration the question of the plant being summarily destroyed by an agricultural officer."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR :—"No, because that will give the agricultural officer the right of judgment. It is the magistrate who has to decide it."

The Hon'ble Sir FAIRLESS BARBER :—"While the disease is spreading?"

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR :—"No; the diseased plant is taken and secured."

The Hon'ble Mr. P. SIVA RAO :—"Your Excellency, I wish to assure the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar that we are not under any misapprehension as to the scope and aim of section 15. There are two matters provided in section 3; first, the Governor in Council may declare that in a certain area in which certain conditions may arise, they may prohibit by notification the removal of any plant from one place to another on the ground that it may spread some plant disease. If in contravention of such a prohibition, any one carries the plant from one place to another, he is liable to be punished under section 15 in addition to being fined Rs. 50, or in default, he is liable to imprisonment for ten days; there is the additional penalty of confiscation and destruction of the plant. The issue before us is: is this additional penalty also to be allowed, whether the plant which is sought to be removed in contravention of the prohibition is liable to be confiscated and destroyed? I would ask: whether the owner is entitled to compensation in such cases. When the plant is diseased or affected by insect disease and plant disease, under section 9 compensation is given according to a certain rate. Why should not compensation be given in such a case as this? Clause 4 says: 'Any plants not being trees, some or all of which are affected by the insect pests or the plant disease, but which are grown so closely together that it is not ordinarily practicable to treat each plant individually,'—even in that case, the clause provides for compensation not exceeding one-half the value."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT :—"We are not discussing compensation and I think it would be wrong to introduce it."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR :—"It is totally irrelevant."

The Hon'ble Mr. P. SIVA RAO :—"It is not irrelevant for this reason because no compensation is provided for in a case like this. I think this provision is too hard and too stringent."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR :—"Because there is no compensation, the Honourable Member proposes to rectify that by allowing this infected plant to be retained without being destroyed and allowing it to go round the country. That is the Honourable Member's proposal."

The Hon'ble Mr. P. SIVA RAO :—"The Honourable Member in charge is not trying to meet my contention. I was urging that because no compensation is provided for in a case like this, this additional punishment of confiscation and destruction of the plant should not be provided. That is my submission."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR :—"I wish to add one word. I do not think it is right to say that the question of compensation should not be considered in this connexion, because it is of the utmost importance that if equity requires it some compensation should be awarded. We must remember that section 15 deals with transport; section 14 dealt with the other case of preventive measures. In respect of mere transport which may be even unintentional, we find not only a penalty put in, but also a provision for confiscation and destruction without making adequate provision for compensation. In previous clauses, compensation has been extended to cases of plants which are likely to be infected and which are not completely infected. Even in such cases, under section 9, we have provided for compensation; but we wish to omit compensation in a case of this sort. If the present section is passed as it is, it will mean that we distinctly wish to omit compensation in a case coming under section 15. Section 15, I repeat, is stated to be technical. A mere absent-minded man may be carrying an article, the transport of which is prohibited and he may contravene the rules and then he is liable to this punishment and his property which may be very valuable indeed will be destroyed."

(Mr. Narasimha Ayyar ; Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar ;
Sir Fairless Barber ; Sir Francis Spring ;
Mr. Krishna Rao ; Mr. Thonger ; the President.) [13TH FEBRUARY 1919.]

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR :—"Infected plant?"

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR :—"For the so-called infected plant we are providing for compensation in other cases. Are we not to provide for compensation here also?"

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR :—"The plant in respect of which the offence was committed"—that is what the section says."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR :—"In section 9 even such plants as Government choose to destroy,—even for them compensation is provided. If in addition to the circumstances which bring the case under section 9, we find that a man is transporting some plants, what is there in the additional circumstance of transportation which should deprive a man of the right to get the value, if any, of his property?"

The Hon'ble Sir FAIRLESS BARBER :—"Your Excellency, in the interests of sanity, I should like to oppose this amendment. If a man transports about the country some infected plant, he is allowed to do so without being punished. The fine is limited to Rs 50 and he may receive compensation. It is tantamount to giving him compensation if these words are left out. I therefore oppose the amendment."

The Hon'ble Sir FRANCIS SPRING :—"Whom are we going to compensate under section 15? Is it the cartman? He has no property in the plants which he is carrying about. He has no right to compensation for them."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. KRISHNA RAO :—"May I say a word in reply? I may assure the Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. Rajagopala Achariyar that no one has suggested or is willing to suggest that a plant which is infected ought not to be destroyed. I am prepared to go further. My complaint is that as suggested by the Hon'ble Sir Fairless Barber, provision has not been made for the destruction of the plant immediately after it is found to be infected. That is why I suggested in the course of my remarks that the destruction of the plant after a protracted inquiry and conviction and probably after the decision of the appellate court, will not be useful. If provisions are inserted for the destruction of the plant immediately after infection, it will be quite another thing. I object to the provision so far as this section is concerned. If as pointed out by the Hon'ble Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar, the idea is that the magistrate may pass the order confiscating the property, why should we depart from the provisions of section 517 of the Criminal Procedure Code so far as that question is concerned. I believe we have to be governed by that section. I would ask the Hon'ble the Advocate-General to inform this Council if the powers conferred on a magistrate under section 517 of the Criminal Procedure Code, as to the trial of the offence and the disposal of the property can be taken away without the special sanction of the Government of India. Section 517 says :—"When an inquiry or a trial in any criminal court is concluded, the court may make such order as it thinks fit for the disposal of any property or document produced before it or in its custody or regarding which any offence appears to have been committed, or which has been used for the commission of any offence."

"I accept the statement made by the Hon'ble Mr. P. Rajagopala Achariyar that the section refers to an order by a magistrate. The magistrate has been given the discretion to pass such order as he thinks fit; if he thinks it necessary to destroy it, it is open to him to do so. Why should we take away that discretion vested in him under section 517 of the Code and why should there be this injunction that the plant is liable to destruction and confiscation?"

The Hon'ble Mr. J. H. THONGER :—"May I be allowed to take part in the discussion at this stage?"

His Excellency the PRESIDENT :—"If you please."

The Hon'ble Mr. J. H. THONGER :—"I wish to draw the attention of the Council that in the case of tobacco special regulations ought to be created for the transport of tobacco from one place to another. The experience that we have had is that tobacco pests cannot be efficiently dealt with in the fields. I do not know whether there is anything peculiar about tobacco, but it is a practical impossibility to deal with it in field when it is growing. I would, therefore, like to suggest, if it is possible, that some amendment may be added to this clause that, in the case of tobacco leaf, when there is a pest-killing apparatus in the place to which the tobacco leaf is being transported, transport restrictions shall not apply. There are two cures for the evil in the case of tobacco; I think I need not go into details. There is one particular gas mixture which will kill the weevil if the tobacco is treated in a hermetically sealed room, but it will not kill the egg which is the root of the trouble. But there is a more powerful gas which kills the egg as well. We have installed this apparatus at Dindigul, but we cannot instal it in the fields. We have got to get the tobacco into our godowns. Thousands and tens of thousands of weevils get into the factory, but it is of comparatively rare occurrence for one to get out."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR :—"Prohibition or restriction of removal is there."

13TH FEBRUARY 1919.] (Mr. Thonger ; Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar ; the Advocate-General ; the President ; Mr. Ranga Achariyar.)

The Hon'ble Mr. J. H. THONGER :—"Many district officers may not know that there is the pest-killing apparatus. It is not every cigar manufacturing firm that has got this apparatus."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR :—"All this will be taken into consideration when Government issue the notification."

The amendment was then put and lost.

Clause 15 was then allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Clause 16.

The Hon'ble the ADVOCATE-GENERAL :—"Your Excellency, I move amendment No. 24-A in the second supplementary agenda. I move that in part III these two following clauses be inserted as clauses 16 and 17."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT :—"Is it not better to move one clause first?"

The Hon'ble the ADVOCATE-GENERAL :—"Yes. I move that the following clause be inserted as clause 16 :—

"16. Where an occupier destroys any trees or plants in obedience to a notice issued under section 6, he may be granted compensation in accordance with such rules as may be made under this Act."

"Honourable Members will have noticed that compensation is provided for in clause 9 of the Bill where, after notice has been issued by the inspecting officer to the occupier to carry out the destruction of the plants where that is the prescribed measure, the occupier fails to carry out that measure, within the time prescribed, the inspecting officer enters on the holding and destroys the plants; and then the occupier is declared by clause 9 of the Bill which has been passed to be entitled to compensation not exceeding certain rates and a machinery is provided for valuing. This clause which I now move empowers the Government to pay compensation to occupiers where, in obedience to the notice issued by the inspecting officer under clause 6, the occupier destroys the plants or trees. It is not necessary that he should disobey the order and allow the inspecting officer to enter on the land and destroy the plant. He may himself be willing to destroy it and in such cases, whenever circumstances render it desirable, there must be provision to pay compensation to occupiers for the destruction of plants. At the same time, it will be impossible to do so by settling the details in the statute, as provision will have to be made for safeguarding public revenue; otherwise, the occupier will claim that he has destroyed a greater number of trees than he has actually destroyed, and the particulars will not be available to the person who has to value them after these trees are destroyed. Therefore, some machinery will have to be devised for the purpose of preventing extravagant claims of compensation being made on the part of the tenant and for the purpose of recording evidence prior to destruction as to the condition of plants before destruction. For this purpose, general power has been taken to make rules for settling all the details. Power is taken, therefore, by this clause to pay compensation to such occupiers as obey the notice of the inspecting officer, but as regards all details, the matter is left to be settled by rules. It is for this purpose that this clause is incorporated and I beg to move that this clause be added to the Bill."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. Y. G. Campbell seconded the amendment.

The amendment was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble the ADVOCATE-GENERAL :—"I beg to move that the following be added as clause 17 to the Bill. 'Notwithstanding anything in this Act, no compensation shall be payable for any noxious weed destroyed.' For instance, lantana may be regarded as a plant and the wording of this Act may perhaps enable a shrewd occupier to claim compensation for the destruction of such noxious weeds as lantana which have really no value. Section 9 provides for compensation for plants only where the plants have value at the time of destruction. It is possible that this is unnecessary; but it is better to make it clear that noxious weeds are not made the subject of compensation. It is for that purpose I move that this clause be made part of the Bill."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. Y. G. Campbell seconded the amendment.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT :—"I will put this clause which is merely consequential."

The amendment was then put and agreed to.

New clauses 16 and 17 were allowed to stand part of the Bill.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT :—"Clause 16 of the printed Bill now becomes clause 18. Clauses 16 and 17 have been added to the Bill as proposed."

Clause 18.

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR :—"Your Excellency, I beg to move amendment No. 25 on the agenda. It will be to clause 18 as now amended. The amendment will be to clauses 18 (1) and 18 (2). Your Excellency will permit me to move them one by one. I move that the following be inserted as clause 18 (2) : 'No prosecution under this Act shall be commenced without the previous sanction of the District Collector, which sanction may be given by him after inquiry.' The previous discussion on the various sections as to whether it was desirable to make it an offence and if so, whether it should be wilful default that must be an offence, must have brought to the notice of Honourable Members that we are providing for a technical offence, and as it is, the Act will have to be worked with great care. In order to provide safeguards, it is suggested that before any prosecution is undertaken, the sanction of the District Collector will have to be obtained. So far as the latter portion is concerned—'which sanction may be given by him after inquiry'—I am willing to substitute the word 'notice' for the word 'inquiry' in the last portion. No doubt judicial officers do not give sanction without notice, but executive officers do not give notice. We are dealing with an executive officer. A list of agricultural offences will be sent up by the Agricultural department in a village or a taluk or a firka and the District Collector sitting in his chamber would merely pass orders sanctioning them. That sort of thing should not take place. Therefore, instead of the word 'inquiry' I will substitute the word 'notice'. I do not think I need say much. I propose this amendment."

13TH FEBRUARY 1919.] (Mr. Ranga Achariyar; the Advocate-General; the President; Mr. Venkatapati Raju; Mr. Krishna Rao.)

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. Krishna Rao seconded the amendment.

The Hon'ble the ADVOCATE-GENERAL:—"I am instructed by the Government to say that it may be accepted if it stops with the word 'District Collector'."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"Why do they want to stop there?"

The Hon'ble the ADVOCATE-GENERAL:—"Your Excellency, I wish to suggest that the words referring to notice, or referring to an inquiry, are wholly unnecessary. If the sanctioning authority is the District Collector, he can take such steps as he likes. My Honourable friend knows that in ordinary cases no notice is necessary for sanction. We are enacting a provision as a safeguard. We are not laying down any limitations and we are not saying that evidence should be taken. Nothing is said in section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code for instance about the necessity for a notice. I would suggest to the Council that the Honourable Member's intentions will be fully given effect to if he stops with the words 'District Collector.' It is wholly unnecessary for him to put in the other words. We do not say that the Collector should give notice or that he need not give notice. It all depends upon the urgency of the prosecutions. Supposing the prosecution must be immediately commenced, notice may not be necessary. There may be other cases in which further materials may be necessary and in which notice may be given. It is not necessary to put on any unnecessary words. It is entirely a matter for his discretion to give or not to give notice."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"Does the Honourable gentleman accept what the Hon'ble the Advocate-General has said?"

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"The explanation given by the Hon'ble the Advocate-General forces me to stick to my amendment."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. VENKATAPATI RAJU:—"The Hon'ble the Advocate-General stated that he was going to accept the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar's amendment, because where there was a justifiable excuse, the District Collector would not give sanction. The agricultural officer will say that the man has disobeyed his instructions. There are District Collectors who will issue notice before sanction is given, but there are others who will avoid the trouble and will only put their signatures under the office-note. How is this at all a safeguard unless the Hon'ble the Advocate-General is prepared to accept that that must be after notice. If there is notice, the party will come and explain what justifiable necessity there was by way of defence, either a religious scruple or anything of that sort. Otherwise, this safeguard would be of no avail."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"My Lord, the very object of sanction will be frustrated if the man is not to be given notice. I cannot contemplate that any case would be so urgent that the District Collector would not find it necessary to give notice. The Hon'ble the Advocate-General has stretched the point too far. The thing is done and the man has to be prosecuted. Afterwards everything will take place. If it is a case of the judicial officers being entrusted with this, I would not insist on this; but executive officers are not accustomed to give notice beforehand and they would not do it ordinarily. Unless the statute makes it compulsory they would not do it. Although section 195 does not make it obligatory to give notice, the High Court expects judicial officers to give notice and it is done. How is the officer to know what excuse the man had? How is he to know that he was a Jain or a Buddhist or that he was laid up with influenza? I do not know why the Government should insist upon the omission of this proviso. It is a necessary proviso. As far as other protections are concerned, Government would not accept them. This is quite a harmless addition and I do not think that there is any reason against accepting it unless the object of the Government is that the Collector should pass orders of prosecution sitting in his chambers on a list of cases suggested by the Agricultural department. If that is going to be the order, we had better get rid of the whole proviso altogether. I know a case where a proposal was made before an executive officer suggesting two alternative proposals with reference to a subject and the officer said 'ordered accordingly'; and the officer below him had to ask him again which proposal was ordered. That sort of thing should not take place in a matter like this."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. KRISHNA RAO:—"May I request this amendment to be split up?"

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"The Honourable gentleman has not accepted the Hon'ble the Advocate-General's offer. Therefore I am bound to put the whole thing."

18TH FEBRUARY 1919.] (The President; the Advocate-General; Mr. Ranga Achariyar; Mr. Narasimha Ayyar; Mr. M. Ramachandra Rao.)

The amendment was then put and lost.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"Will the Honourable gentleman move sub-clause (3) which now becomes sub-clause (2)?"

The Honourable the ADVOCATE-GENERAL:—"I beg to propose the following words be added as sub-clause (2) in section 18 of the Bill:—"No prosecution under this Act shall be commenced without the previous sanction of the District Collector'."

The amendment that these words be added was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"I am glad they see the justice of it at least now. Your Excellency, I now move that the following be inserted as sub-clause (3) of section 18:—"No prosecution under this section shall be commenced after three months from the date of the alleged offence.' This is a familiar and a usual provision under such Acts. In various Acts, this provision will be found. Last year, we passed the Prevention of Adulteration Act, Act I of 1918, and in that Act, section 19, we provided that 'no prosecution shall be commenced after three months from the commencement of the Act.' In the Indian Merchandise Marks Act, section 61, there is such a provision; in section 9 of Act I of 1873, the Wild Elephants' Preservation Act, six months' time is allowed; in the District Police Act, 'three months after the Act complained of'; in the Steam Boilers Act, six months after the date; in Act III of 1888, the City Police Act, it is provided that no prosecution until after three months should be launched; in the Salt Act, it is six months, and in an early Regulation, V of 1816, three months from the date of complaint. In the Madras City Municipal Bill which we are now considering, there is a provision made providing for three months or six months as the case may be for starting a prosecution. It is a very necessary safeguard. The department should not take hold of stale offences. It is a very usual provision and I commend this amendment for the acceptance of the Council."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR:—"I second this amendment. I believe a verbal alteration might be made—substitute 'no prosecution under this Act' instead of 'no prosecution under this section.' But I believe both are practically the same. Under this section really means 'under this Act'."

The Hon'ble the ADVOCATE-GENERAL:—"I oppose the amendment. This is unnecessary. Now that the Council have passed the amendment requiring the sanction of the District Collector for prosecution, it is necessary to reject this amendment. It will take some time to obtain the sanction of the Collector. He will have to make an inquiry and it is not possible for the inquiry to be over within three months before the sanction is obtained. Another reason why it cannot be accepted is that under clause 6 of the Bill, the inspecting officer gives notice to the occupier asking him to carry out certain measures within a specified time. The offence is committed after the period lapses. The Bill gives a right of appeal to the appellate authority against the order of the inspecting officer. Now that appellate authority may simply confirm the decision and may not allow the appeal. The commission of the offence may date from the expiry of the last day given by the inspecting officer in cases in which the appellate authority merely rejects the appeal. The appeal may take sometimes two or three months, and therefore this period of three months fixed by the Honourable Member would be certainly unworkable. There might be other reasons, why the Collector or the department concerned, should have some time to make inquiries. By putting in a time limit, I do not know if the Honourable Member is really benefiting the occupier. He will be compelling, by putting this shorter time limit, the department to resort to prosecutions; whereas the time will expire in three months they will have to be on the alert and apply in every case for sanction for prosecution without allowing the occupier any time. Suppose the occupier carries out a measure after the time specified in the inspecting officer's notice still a technical offence is committed. But yet the department may not bring forward a prosecution; the Collector may think that it is a fit case in which though a technical offence has been committed, as the prescribed measure has been carried out, there is no necessity for a prosecution. The occupier may carry out such measures after three months. The time must therefore be much longer than three months. This is really against the interests of the occupier and it will compel the department to resort to prosecutions. I do not know if the Honourable Member presses this amendment."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"I am sorry I cannot understand that view of the matter. The difficulty pointed out by the Hon'ble the Advocate-General was in a case of appeal in which the appeal was dismissed. It is only an imaginary difficulty, because section 7 permits the appellate authority to prescribe further time. Where an appeal has been preferred, it will have to be done within the time which is allowed by the appellate authority. I do not see any difficulty. I want to avoid even the chance of a stale prosecution. I dare say the District Collectors will consider this when giving sanction; but I want a statutory limit within which such offences may come up before a court. There may be other difficulties which will arise in case the prosecution is launched before courts. In legal Acts, it is usual to provide such a time limit. It is always a statutory principle. The same reason might have been urged against all those Acts. But I do not see why the Advocate-General did not advance the same argument when passing the Madras Adulteration Act in July last. I do not see why the Hon'ble the Advocate-General objects to it. I therefore press it on principle."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO:—"Might I suggest the substitution of the word 'six' for the word 'three' before the word 'months'?"

(Mr. Ranga Achariyar; Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar; [13TH FEBRUARY 1919.
the Advocate-General; the President;
Mr. Ramanuja Achariyar; Mr. Siva Rao.)

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"I accept it."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"I would accept it as there is ample time."

The Hon'ble Mr. Ramachandra Rao's amendment was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble the ADVOCATE-GENERAL:—"The wording is 'under this Act'. Is it not?"

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"Yes."

This was put and agreed to.

Clause 18, as amended, was allowed to be added to the Bill.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"Original clause 17 becomes clause 19."

Clause 19 was allowed to stand part of the Bill.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"The original clause 18 becomes clause 20."

Clause 20.

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur V. K. RAMANUJA ACHARIYAR:—"I do not propose to move amendment No. 26 on the agenda standing in my name."

With the permission of His Excellency the President, the amendment was then withdrawn which was:—"Omit the clause."

The Hon'ble the ADVOCATE-GENERAL:—"I beg to move amendment No. 27-A on the supplemental agenda that after the words 'under this Act' the words 'except those conferred by sections 3 and 19' be inserted. 'Section 19' in the amendment should be 'section 21' now. The section as amended will run as follows: 'The Governor in Council may by notification in the Fort St. George Gazette delegate all or any of his powers under this Act, except those conferred by sections 3 and 21, to the Director of Agriculture or, any other officer or to any local authority or the President or chairman of any local authority. The Select Committee recommended that this power of delegation should be retained, but after the report of the Select Committee the Government of India have ruled and recommended to the local Government to omit the power under section 3 from the scope of delegation which is empowered by clause 20 of the Bill, the reason being that for the sake of uniformity it is necessary that the power should be with the central Government; the power of prescribing the various diseases and the remedies and the power of notifying the areas—these should be in the central Government; and as no one local authority is competent to trespass upon the areas of other local authorities, it seems right in principle that the power should not be delegated to any local authority. That is the reason why this power under section 3 should not be delegated. So far as the reference to section 21 is concerned, which is now printed as clause 19 of the Bill, it is the clause by which the rule-making power is taken by the Governor in Council. It is only appropriate that the rule-making power should be retained in the hands of the central Government and should not be delegated to other authorities. For these reasons, I move this amendment in clause 20'."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. Y. G. Campbell seconded the amendment.

The Hon'ble Mr. P. SIVA RAO:—"Your Excellency, if clause 3 is out of the purview of clause 18, it would be meaningless to retain this provision."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"Which provision? Is it the whole clause?"

The Hon'ble Mr. P. SIVA RAO:—"Yes, the whole clause. It was contemplated by the Select Committee that there was a possibility of the Governor in Council delegating the whole of their functions under clause 3 and this clause was proposed. I would ask in all humility the Hon'ble the Advocate-General what other powers the Governor in Council may delegate to the local authority."

The Hon'ble the ADVOCATE-GENERAL:—"Appointing inspecting officers and valuing officers and Government may delegate this power. That can be delegated to the local authority."

The Hon'ble Mr. P. SIVA RAO:—"Then it is possible that the appointment of inspecting officers may be delegated to the local authority. That is a very small concession and I do not think the provision was inserted for that purpose. The inspecting officer was one appointed and I do not think that anything is gained by delegation of the power to the local authority and by the local authority being permitted to appoint inspecting officer or valuing officer. As regards the merits of the amendment, I am strongly of opinion that the working of this Act as in other countries may be left for some time at least according to the discretion of the Governor in Council to the local authority. I request my Hon'ble friend Mr. Ramachandra Rao to say whether it is not so in other countries, as he is well-versed in comparative legislation—whether it is not so in the legislation of other countries that local authorities are entrusted with the working of such measures. If that is so, where is the harm in retaining such a provision? If local authorities gain more experience, the Governor in Council may think of delegating those powers. After all the Governor in Council may not decide to entrust them to local authorities. It is left to their sweet will and pleasure. Therefore I oppose the amendment. Clause 18, as I originally said, loses all its force. It only means that the local authority would have power only to appoint inspecting officers. It will lose all its primary meaning and it is better to drop this clause if clause 3 is to be taken out of its purview."

13TH FEBRUARY 1919.] (Mr. Narasimha Aiyar; Mr. M. Ramachandra Rao;
Mr. Krishna Rao; the President.)

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR:—"I noticed the same defect as the Hon'ble the Advocate-General. I wanted the insertion in the original section of the rule-making power about notification. I do not know if it may not be desirable to give the District Board President of Salem, for instance, power to issue urgent orders re transport to Hosur and Nanakkal taluka. Suppose in one place some pest is spreading—say the coconut pest—the question is whether it is not desirable to have power in the local authority to prohibit transport. You may gain experience and put it in later on."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO:—"My Lord, this clause is the usual delegation clause which empowers the local Governments to entrust their functions to other local authorities. As to how far this power should be carried out is a question which has to be considered. I am entirely at one with the Hon'ble the Advocate-General in proposing to create an exception in favour of clause 3 and also in regard to clause 21. Both are well-known exceptions. The power of sub-legislation is entirely with the Local Government and it is not usual to entrust it to any other authority. No doubt, local authorities have power to make by-laws, but the power of sub-legislation must be with the local Government. As regards section 3, my honourable friends should realize that section 3 is the section which puts the Act in motion. As to whether that power should be delegated to any other authority, or whether it should remain with the central authority is a matter to be considered. This power can only be exercised after the advice of the Government Agricultural department and their officers who will declare the pest, is an insect pest or a plant disease, and I submit that no local authority in this country whether district boards or the municipalities have the necessary facilities, independent of the question of principle involved, to put the Act into motion. They have no expert advice in regard to matters relating to the notification of the diseases which should be dealt with in section 3. The question was considered in the Select Committee as to whether the local boards should be entrusted with the working of the Act or whether the Act should go further. The other sections, namely, sections 7 and 17 relate entirely to the administration of the Act after the Act is put into force by the local Government in a particular area. Therefore, I submit this proposal to reserve power to the local Government to put the Act in motion is in accordance with the course of legislation elsewhere. Even in England, the Board of Agriculture first of all makes a notification as is contemplated in section 3 and it is only then that the local authorities are asked to carry out provisions of the Act. I think there can be no question whatever that the proposal of the Hon'ble the Advocate-General to amend this section is entirely sound."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. KRISHNA RAO:—"Your Excellency, though it is quite true that so far as the powers under section 21 are concerned, they cannot be delegated I cannot myself see why the provision already made by the Select Committee so far as section 3 is concerned should be taken away. My Hon'ble Friend Mr. Ramachandra Rao has in supporting the amendment suggested no reasons why any provision should not be inserted in the Act for that purpose. I am prepared to concede that it will take some time before local bodies can maintain the necessary establishment and make themselves ready to put this Act into operation. All that the section lays down is that 'the Governor in Council may, by notification in the Fort St. George Gazette, delegate all or any of his powers under this Act to the Director of Agriculture or any other officer or to any local authority or to the president or chairman of any local authority'. It gives power to the Governor in Council to consider the circumstances of each locality and to find out whether the local body concerned is in a position to obtain the necessary expert advice and put the Act into operation before the powers are delegated. There is another reason for my objecting to this amendment; and it is on a question of principle. The Select Committee which paid considerable attention to this subject, considered the circumstances of various localities and inserted this new clause. It gave power to the Governor in Council to delegate those powers which are necessary, either to the Director of Agriculture or to the local authorities. It is under the most extraordinary circumstances that the Government of India should give a direction like the one suggested by the Hon'ble the Advocate-General. The chief reason that the Hon'ble the Advocate-General suggested was that the Government of India objected to the delegation of the powers under section 3. If the Council are agreed that the recommendations of the Select Committee may be approved and that the powers of delegation may be retained so far as section 3 is concerned, I think that the Council will be justified in making a further representation to the Government of India. Whatever may be the result of the amendment, I hope the Council will not construe from the Hon'ble Mr. Siva Rao's speech that if this amendment is to be accepted, we shall not have this power of delegation recognized even to a limited extent. I would therefore suggest to the Council that though the powers retained in the section after the amendment is accepted are very little, though the local body can in that case only appoint inspecting officers or valuing officers, it encourages the principle of delegation and that we should support the clause as it is even though the amendment is accepted. We should not ask for the deletion of the whole clause. There may be difference of opinion, but let no one think of deleting the whole clause."

The amendment was then put and agreed to.

Clause 20 (new) was allowed to stand part of the Bill.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"Clause 19 as it originally stood becomes clause 21 now and the Hon'ble the Advocate-General wishes to move an amendment."

(The Advocate-General; Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar; [18TH FEBRUARY 1919.
Mr. Kavalappara Muppil Nayar.]

The Hon'ble the ADVOCATE-GENERAL:—"Your Excellency, I move that at the end of sub-clause (d), the following words be added: 'and the methods and conditions of valuation of trees and plants'. The reason for that amendment is that in sub-clause (c) of clause 9, which we have already passed, we say that for the purpose of sub-section (3) value shall mean the value of the tree or plant at the time of its destruction. It is impossible especially in the case of plants to lay down clearly the methods of valuing in the Act. Timber trees may have to be valued in one way according to market value and it is easy enough; in the case of fruit trees, the capitalising of the income may be one way of valuing them, in the case of other trees expert valuation may be necessary. In the case of plants especially, there may be difficulties which would arise and for all these purposes, it is proposed to add these words in order to make it perfectly clear that the general rule-making power extends to this also: Sub-clause (d) runs: 'prescribing the procedure to be followed in making an award under section 11.' I propose to add the words at the end of this sub-clause: 'and the methods and conditions of valuation of trees and plants'."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. Y. G. Campbell seconded the amendment.
The amendment was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble the ADVOCATE-GENERAL:—"After clause (d) of section 21, which has just now been passed, I move that the following be added as sub-clause (e): 'Providing for payment of compensation under section 18 and for all matters connected therewith.' This is a simple amendment merely consequential upon clause 18 which includes compensation to be paid to occupiers, who, in obedience to orders issued under section 6, destroy the plants or trees. I therefore move this amendment."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. Y. G. Campbell seconded the amendment.
The amendment was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble the ADVOCATE-GENERAL:—"Your Excellency, I propose amendment No. 28 (b) on the second supplementary agenda, that the old sub-clause (e) of new clause 21 be re-lettered as sub-clause (f). I also move, Your Excellency, amendment 28 (c) on the type-written agenda that: from sub-clause (f) of clause 21, as re-lettered the words 'under sections 6 and 12' be deleted."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. Y. G. Campbell seconded the amendment.
The amendment was then put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble the ADVOCATE-GENERAL:—"I propose amendments Nos. 28 (d) and 28 (e) on the typewritten agenda that old sub-clause (f) of new clause 21 be re-lettered as sub-clause (g) and old sub-clause (g) of new clause 21 be re-lettered as sub-clause (h)."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. Y. G. Campbell seconded the amendment.
The amendment was then put and agreed to.

Clause 21 as amended was then allowed to be added to the Bill.
The preamble was then allowed to be added to the Bill.

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"Under Rule 51, I beg to move that the Bill as amended be passed into law."

The Hon'ble the Advocate-General seconded the motion.

The Hon'ble Mr. K. K. R. KAVALLAPPARA MUPPIL NAYAR:—"Your Excellency, I do not propose to detain the Council with any long observation. I just wish to make one or two general remarks. As I said at an earlier stage, I fully realize the necessity for such an Act—and I have wholeheartedly supported it. I can see that in the conflict of interests between the community and the individual, the latter must generally give way in spite of the hardship. I welcome this Act—though I must say it is necessarily on the principle of adopting the lesser of two evils. But, I wish, at the same time, to draw the attention of Your Excellency in Council to the very grave dangers that may arise from the delegation of so very high and almost arbitrary powers. Hence, a word of caution to the department which I believe has had up till now practically no experience in work of the sort proposed. We have, for instance, to be careful of these experts when they wish to take to now pastures or when even unable to control perhaps private feelings they rush to issue ill-considered leaflets on most complicated and controversial questions—like land tenures. I also request that due consideration may be had on this aspect of it and necessary instructions, to be sympathetic in the exercise of their new powers, issued to the inspecting authorities along with all notifications.

"I next wish to refer to a communication to the Council on the present subject from a member of the public from my part of the country. The communication insinuates probable hardship from Jaumis. I do not propose to argue it out, if that gentleman's object is simply to drag before the Council the irrelevant, and I hope that once-for-all-dead-question—alleged tenancy troubles. I may at once say that in Malabar it has always been our particular misfortune that whenever any unpleasantness or evil takes place it is at once put down to the score of the Janmi; and any new attempt at this old game shall not surprise me in the least. As regards, however, relief for his loss, the tenant can always claim his legitimate share of the compensation when awarded under section 11 or section 18. I really cannot see where room for any complaint lies."

(Mr. Krishna Rao; Mr. Siva Rao.)

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. KRISHNA RAO:—"Your Excellency, at the final stage of the passing of this Bill, I may be permitted to make a few remarks. There is absolutely no doubt that the Bill which is now to be passed into law is a wholesome measure calculated to remedy a serious evil, though it must be admitted that both the Government and the non-official public have found considerable difficulties in dealing with a measure of this description. This is a legislative measure which is comparatively new; and in passing this measure, there have been several complications and difficulties which had to be solved. The Bill which is now to be passed into law, I must frankly confess, throws very serious responsibilities upon occupiers and confers very wide and extensive powers upon inspecting officers. It is on a gradual adjustment of the work to be done by both these different sets of persons, that the success of this measure will largely depend.

"I may now draw the attention of the Council to some of the important provisions of this Bill the most important of which is what is put down in section 4. Immediately after a notification is issued under section 3, it is made the duty of the occupier to carry out within the notified area, the preventive and remedial measures prescribed in the notification. It has not been possible owing to various difficulties to think of providing for compensation for the owner who carries out remedial or preventive measures at that stage. It is later on to be found out whether an adequate remedy can be provided. Again under clause 5, we find that the officer empowered under clause 17 may enter the land and take such action as may be necessary though it is not possible to define what sort of action he may take and to what extent he may take the action and whether damage or loss will be caused thereby. It has not been possible for us to make provision for such a contingency. But I may draw the attention of the Council to the amendment of the Hon'ble the Advocate-General which, as provided in clause 6, has given considerable relief. Section 6 as amended by the Select Committee made it incumbent upon the inspecting officer to call upon the occupier by notice in writing to carry out the prescribed remedial or preventive measures within a time to be specified in such notice. The alteration of the word 'shall' into 'may' has given considerable relief. It indicates that it is unnecessary for the inspecting officer under those circumstances to take such drastic measures as the one suggested in section 5 or 6, though it gives him a discretion to do so. There will be a number of cases in which the executive officer will be justified in taking the remedial measures or the preventive measures of his own accord if that would work hardship upon the poorer classes. So far as this Bill is concerned, it has not been found feasible or possible to make such detailed suggestions; but there will be hundreds of cases in which the occupiers will have to be protected. It will be the duty of the Government not merely to put the provisions of the law into operation, but to take the responsibility of dealing with these insect pests and diseases and carry out the necessary operations. It is only to the extent that the occupiers can be really held responsible that these provisions can be put into operation. In other cases where there is general insect pest and so forth, the Government should themselves come to the relief of the people concerned. As to the duties of the inspecting officers, they have a very grave responsibility to discharge. We find in the corresponding provision of the Ceylon Pest Act they appoint a Board and all proceedings are taken in the name of the chairman of the Board; but so far as this Act is concerned, we have given necessary powers to the inspecting officer appointed by the Government. It will be difficult to work out these provisions to the satisfaction of all the people concerned, unless these aspects are borne in mind by Your Excellency's Government when rules are framed for the purpose under section 21.

"Under section 21, rules have to be framed prescribing the methods of publication of descriptions of insect pests, plant diseases and noxious weeds and of the treatment to be followed. In prescribing the methods of treatment, after taking the expert advice of the officers of Government, it will be necessary to so frame the rules as to cause as little dissatisfaction as possible to the people. May I venture to suggest that in an important case of this description, in dealing with a legislative measure which is new, it is desirable that the rules, as soon as they are framed, are published for criticism so that all persons concerned may have an opportunity to make representations? If they are unnecessarily drastic and if they are likely to cause hardship to individual land-owners, it may be possible to bring the defects therein to the notice of the Government. I think it is only then that it would be possible to bring it to the notice of the Government. I am sure that both the Government and the public are really anxious to deal with this evil and to put it down; but we must avoid all unnecessary hardship by the rules. I venture to suggest now that a motion has been made for passing the Bill into law, that that aspect will be borne in mind. Though this is a new measure, though there are drastic provisions and though some people are likely to be put to inconvenience, it is on the whole a wholesome measure. It must be given a fair trial to see how it will develop. I have no doubt that the Bill deserves to be supported."

The Hon'ble Mr. P. SIVA RAO:—"Your Excellency, I wish to make a few remarks before this Bill is passed into law. Even when it was introduced in this Council, I expressed my misgivings whether this measure will be a desirable one to achieve the object for which it is proposed. All of us most heartily sympathise with the object of this Bill; so far as it seeks to prevent the spread of insect pests and diseases from one place to another, it has our warmest sympathy. But there seems to be some difference in the methods of carrying out this object. It raises a serious doubt in my mind whether all these drastic powers are necessary or desirable in the present state of the country; or in other words whether there is likely to be more evil

(Mr. Siva Rao; the President; Mr. Ranga Achariyar; [13TH FEBRUARY 1919.
Sir Fairless Barber; Mr. Rama Ayyangar.]

than good resulting from this measure. There is no doubt that these measures are very drastic in their nature. We do not know who the inspecting officers will be, their qualifications are yet to be prescribed as also those of the valuing officers or of the assessing officers and the appellate authorities. The poor ryot is entirely in the hands of these scientific experts, if I may call them so, scientific faddists. They may devise any measures which are best suited in their opinion to prevent the evil and then the poor ryot or occupier is bound at the threat of criminal prosecution to carry out such measures. I entirely disapprove of the penal provisions in the Bill. I am one of those who wish that the Bill had stopped short without giving the inspecting officers power to enter upon the land and to carry out the requisite measures. I quite see that some legislation was necessary, but if legislation had gone on these lines, the inspecting officers had been vested with some power to enter on the land it would have been all right. In this case, the poor owner or occupier, whatever the extent of his holding may be, whatever his means may be, whether he is a poor man or is in a position to carry out those measures or not, he is enjoined by law to carry them out. Otherwise, he is threatened with prosecution. There is absolutely no provision made in the case of a poor man who has no means of carrying out the measures. Suppose a man owns a few cents of land and the measures suggested are far too disproportionate. He may give up the holding instead of carrying out the measures; but now he is not left to relinquish the holding, but he should carry out the provisions. Otherwise, he is sentenced to pay a fine of Rs 50. Again, there is absolutely no provision for remission in part or in toto. In spite of our best endeavours in this Council to carry out the amendment that the Collector should have the power to remit it, Government have not accepted the amendment. I do not want to detain the Council very long, but I hope there may not be any abuse of these powers, that executive authorities will work the provisions of the Bill in a sympathetic manner and try to make it as popular as possible instead of abusing their powers under this Bill."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. Ranga Achariyar rose to speak.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"I think we may pass the Bill. I do not think it is necessary to speak further. It is for the Council to decide."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"Your Excellency, I only wish at this stage to emphasize the very shrewd observation made by my Honourable friend, Mr. Muppil Nayar. The tendency of the Englishman is to place too much faith in the expert and in the case of a measure like this, in dealing with the welfare of a population like the agriculturists, I would ask the Government to move slowly and not to place implicit faith in expert advice. We know experts. There are experts and experts and we know how they differ. One expert condemns what the other has done when he comes on the field. That is one word of caution. By this Act, a beneficent measure has been enacted. I hope it will turn out to be a beneficent measure for the welfare of the agriculturists, but at the same time there are provisions there which may be worked to the harassment and annoyance of the ryot and that can only be prevented by a close and strict watch being kept from the central authority. Whoever is in charge of the Agricultural department on behalf of the Government will have to keep a close and strict watch on the working of this Act, and after it is worked for some years, I dare say the whole machine will work all right. But till then I would ask your Excellency's Government to take stock of the experience of the people in this country in these matters, pay more value to the experience that they have got than to the advice of the experts who are mere novices in agriculture."

The Hon'ble Sir FAIRLESS BARBER:—"I only wish to thank the Government for the great trouble they have taken in passing this Act."

The Hon'ble Mr. K. RAMA AYYANGAR:—"Your Excellency, I want to say only one word in connexion with this Bill. I feel that the Government have tried to meet the difficulties raised as much as possible. I feel also that when an enactment like this is drawn up there will have to be put down general clauses which must be inserted for its proper and efficient working. But as I have observed at the time the Bill was introduced, too much ought not to be made of the opinions of experts. I should very much like that, immediately, the department is now asked to state in what cases they feel they are satisfied that orders must be issued to destroy crops or anything of the kind. I know very often when they issue orders for the destruction of crops those crops spring up all right in the course of a month or two. Unless they are perfectly sure of their orders being safe, they ought not to be issued. Changes in the season are often to be noticed and that is a thing that the expert officers do not take enough notice of. The officers want to destroy the plants already suffering from the disease when if they wait for some time the plants would be all right a few days later. I have asked many times the officers of the department and when they are close pressed they say 'we are ourselves in the same position as you are.' My Lord, under these circumstances, I only want that the Government should immediately get information as to in what they can give a definite answer that the only course is that the plants should be destroyed. In other cases it will be better to leave it more to the locality and the people than to expert opinion alone. Only one other point I would urge and it is this: Government must not for some time think of prosecutions and the penal clauses ought not to be enforced at all. There is really no necessity for applying them. The whole Act must be worked as if there were no penal clauses at all."

13TH FEBRUARY 1919.] (Mr. Chidambaramathu Mudaliyar; Mr. Suryanarayana Rao; the President; Mr. Ranga Achariyar.)

The Hon'ble Mr. K. CHIDAMBARANATHA MUDALIYAR:—"Your Excellency, I wish to say a word in this connexion. It must be the endeavour, the constant endeavour of the Local Government to make the working of this Act as little irksome as possible. This Act provides for certain measures of relief being taken under exceptional conditions and under dangerous circumstances. I believe the Government will really make the people feel that such is really the case in the actual working of it by providing safeguards and by making rules which would really answer the purposes for which this Act is going to be accepted by this Council."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. SURYANARAYANA RAO:—"My Lord, I have only a few words to submit in this connexion. With regard to the wholesomeness of the measure, there are no two opinions; I entirely agree with that. But in the working, I fear that the whole thing entirely rests with the inspecting officer and he can do anything in this matter. I feel that considerable power has been entrusted to the inspecting officer. He can issue the notice, he can remove the plant, and he can do anything and I do not think sufficient check is provided over the inspecting officer. Probably the inspecting officer will be of the rank of the revenue inspector. I do not know if we can have an inspecting officer of a higher rank. The higher the rank the better it would be to see that these occupiers are not improperly harassed. I therefore request Your Excellency's Government to kindly see that in framing the rules, the inspecting officers are men of proper rank, that there is sufficient check over them to see that there is no corruption, because everything suffers by corruption, and if the inspecting officer is corrupt, he can get money out of the ryot and do whatever he likes. He can fleece money or condone anything that the people do."

"Then with regard to prosecutions, the Hon'ble the Advocate-General was pleased to introduce the provision that the sanction of the District Collector is necessary and my Honourable friends the non-official members have fought for it. I was neutral. I do not think it is a blessing, because we know very well what generally happens in all these matters. It is generally a stereotyped order that is obtained. I would rather wish that that clause is deleted altogether. I would rather have the other clause that the prosecution should be finished within three months or rather started within three months. Three months is a wholesome provision, but the sanction of the District Collector is only illusory and very little comes out of it, because we know these orders are passed as a matter of course and where the inspecting officer places a particular matter before the District Collector and asks for sanction, I am sure the District Collector will not refuse it in the ordinary course of things, because he will not know the other side of the case. I do not think therefore that there is much in that sanction, but however my Honourable friends wanted it and there is that clause. With these observations, I have no objection to the Bill being passed into law."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"I shall now put the motion. I am sure my Honourable colleague is very grateful to all the good advice given and also to the very kind acknowledgment made by the Hon'ble Sir Fairless Barber."

The motion was then put and agreed to and the Bill was passed into law.

After the Insect Pests and Diseases Bill was over, the consideration of the City Municipal Bill was taken up on Thursday at about 1 o'clock.

THE MADRAS CITY MUNICIPAL BILL 1918.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"We begin with clause 104. I will call on the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar to move his amendment No. 64 on the paper."

The amendment was as follows:—

"Add the following as proviso to the clause:—
Provided that where the assessed premises, or roads, or bridges are in the occupation of a Tramway or Telephone Company the property tax, if any, shall be paid in the manner provided above, by such company."

Clause 104.

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"Honourable Members will notice that the clause which we have just added to the Bill, namely clause 103, is the pivot on which the whole financial portion of the Act goes. It says: 'The property tax on buildings and lands shall, subject to the prior payment of the land revenue, if any, due to the Government thereon be a first charge upon the said buildings or lands and upon the movable property, if any, found within or upon such buildings or lands and belonging to the person liable to such tax.' Clause 104 makes the property tax include the tax on buildings and lands, payable by instalments by the owner of the assessed premises, in two equal instalments, each instalment being payable within 15 days after the commencement of the half year to which it relates. It is a well-known method of bringing down to local rates the tramway companies, the telephone companies and other companies who occupy the road by putting lines there, and occupy roads and bridges. As the section stands, it will be noticed that it is only the owner of the assessed premises who will be liable. In the case of roads and such other places, we cannot claim anything. We cannot say that the tramway company or the telephone company are the owners of the assessed premises and therefore under the Act, they will escape all liability to local

(Mr. Ranga Achariyar ; Mr. Ramanuja Achariyar ;
the Advocate-General ; Mr. Rama Ayyangar ;

more attention to the Tramway Company than to the general principle. There is the Telephone Company which is paying nothing to the Corporation, but the company is making a large revenue and they are occupying bits of roads here and there, carrying their wires to and fro and why should they not be made to pay something? It is a very well-known form of taxation, it is called special property and it is specially valued. As regards railway companies, they have one mode of valuation, but as regards other properties namely, tramways, electric lighting works, mines, docks, telephone companies, etc., they are classes of properties which are taxed at local rates, and they have a special mode of assessment. The mode of assessment is different from the ordinary one. It is a well-known method of raising taxation for local purposes. As the law we are enacting now is not for the present company, but is one to enable the corporation to levy rates why should we confine our attention to the present tramway company and say how poor it is or how poor it was? I think it is beside the point. It is an acceptable principle of legislation to tax such companies as occupy bits of roads and beneficially occupy bits of roads. That is the point. So long as there is beneficial occupation of such lands, they ought to be liable to local rates. What the local rate is to be may depend upon various considerations. Let us not confound ourselves merely by taking the tramway company's case. Even in regard to the case of the tramway company, I expect they are flourishing now and they will flourish very soon. Even they would not find any difficulty and I have safeguarded my amendment by adding the words 'if any'. We may trust the commissioner and the executive to whom we give power, we may trust to his exercising his discretion wisely and properly."

The amendment was put and lost.

Clause 104 was allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Clause 105.

Clause 105 was allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Clause 106.

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur V. K. RAMANUJA ACHARIYAR:—"I beg to move amendment No. 65:—

65. In clause 106 (1) omit the words 'in writing' in the sixth line."

The Hon'ble the ADVOCATE-GENERAL:—"I accept it."

The amendment was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur V. K. RAMANUJA ACHARIYAR:—"I beg to move amendment No. 66:—

66. In clause 106 (2) omit the word 'written' in the third line."

The Hon'ble the ADVOCATE-GENERAL:—"I accept it."

The amendment was put and agreed to.

Clause 106 as amended was allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Clauses 107 to 116.

Clauses 107 to 116 were allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Clause 117.

The Hon'ble Mr. K. RAMA AYYANGAR:—"I beg to move amendment No. 67:—

67. In clause 117 (1) add the word 'used' after the words 'has been kept.'

"There is a difficulty in introducing this section—tax on carriages and animals. In the case of animals their keeping itself is use. But in cases where they are preserved to be used, the question whether they are used or not becomes of importance. I find in the present section 150 of the Act of 1904 there is power not to tax unused carriage though it is a taxable carriage. Suppose in the course of a half year, the owner of a taxable carriage loses his animal and could not find another, but keeps it in his house or stable which already pays a rent to the municipality and why should the keeping of the carriage be taxed? The previous position will be maintained by putting the word 'used.' I submit, My Lord, the present position of the law may be restored."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. Venkatapati Raju seconded the amendment.

The Hon'ble Mr. J. C. MOLONY:—"I oppose the amendment. It would be perfectly impossible to work a provision which raises the question whether a person is merely keeping his carriage or using it. It will lead to endless disputes. I submit that this amendment is entirely unworkable."

The amendment was put and lost.

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. KRISHNA RAO:—"I do not move amendment No. 68 in my name."

13TH FEBRUARY 1919.] (Mr. Yakub Hasan ; Mr. Ranga Achariyar ; the President ; the Advocate-General ; Mr. Rama Ayyangar.)

With the permission of His Excellency the President, the following amendment was withdrawn:—

"68. In clause 117 (1) omit the proviso."

Clause 117 was allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Clause 118.

The Hon'ble YAKUB H. SAN SAHIB Bahadur:—"I beg to move amendment No. 69:—

"69. Omit sub-clause (a)."

"In section 118 it will be found that the carriage and animal tax shall not be levied on carriages and animals belonging to the Government. I do not see why carriages and animals belonging to the Government should not be subject to the same tax as carriages and animals belonging to private individuals are subject to, and therefore I move that this sub-clause be omitted."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"I second it. The corporation passed a resolution urging on me to support it in this Council."

The amendment was put and lost.

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. Ranga Achariyar claimed a poll which was taken with the following result:—

"70. Add the words 'charcoal and coal' after the word 'firewood' and at the end of the first proviso 'and in the case of coal and charcoal Rs. 2 per ton'."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"There is one amendment on the first paper in the name of the Hon'ble Mr. Rama Ayyangar and an amendment in the name of the Hon'ble the Advocate-General in the supplemental agenda. I propose to take first the Hon'ble the Advocate-General's amendment."

The Hon'ble the ADVOCATE-GENERAL:—"My amendments are consequential upon the amendment we carried with regard to clause 98. They are:—

(a) In the heading to the clause omit the words 'and firewood.'

(b) In clause 129 (1) omit the following words:—

'and firewood'; 'in the case of timber'; 'in the case of firewood six annas per ton'; 'or firewood.'

(c) In 129 (2) and (3) omit the words 'or firewood'."

The amendments were put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Mr. K. RAMA AYYANGAR:—"My Lord. . . ."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"Your amendment will run 'timber, charcoal and coal'. Have we not imposed a tax on charcoal and coal?"

rates. It should not be the policy of the legislature to exempt such companies from liability to local rates and therefore it was when the Government published their first draft in 1916, they put in section 120 and they had a proviso to that section which is now section 104—there is a misprint in the amendment which may be noticed—‘provided that where the assessed premises are roads or bridges in the occupation of a tramway or telephone company the property tax, if any, shall be paid in the manner provided above, by such company.’ The object of this proviso is to make them liable to these local rates. Where such companies occupy the roads or bridges or other portions of such public property as may be vested in the Corporation or in the Government, they should be made liable to tax. Therefore this proviso was introduced in the 1916 draft Bill and somehow it disappeared in the 1918 draft and I tried to introduce it in the Select Committee and they would not accept it. The reason assigned was that we have entered into contract of the mileage rate with the Tramway Company but we have certainly entered into no such contract with the Telephone Company. Even in regard to the Tramway Company we must impose the liability to local rates; this must be taken into consideration in fixing the mileage rate. Simply getting hold of the subsisting contract between the Tramway Company and the Corporation, we must not omit to enact a provision in the statute book for the purpose of levying these rates. There may be other companies than the Tramway Company and the Telephone Company and in all such cases, we must make provision. As is well known, we have entered into a very unfortunate bargain with the Tramway Company. The matter was not carefully scrutinized when the first Tramway Order was accepted by the local authorities and sent up to the Government. They escaped with a very light rental and if we also prevent the Corporation from levying the rate on such people who are making profit, it would not be right. I therefore propose this amendment.”

The Hon'ble Mr. K. Chidambaramudaliyar seconded the amendment.

The Hon'ble Dr. T. M. NAYAR :—“My Lord, I have some doubt whether a tramway company or a telephone company occupying part of a land will ever become liable to pay any municipal tax, because the roadway is vested in the Corporation and as such it is free from any municipal taxation. Therefore any occupier of such roadway will not become liable to pay any tax. What they will be liable to pay is a rent and that should be dealt with under different provisions. I think there will be some legal difficulty if we now say that the Tramway Company are liable to pay taxes for the roads they occupy. It will be impossible to enforce it. I am quite at one with the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar that a proper rent ought to be charged on them and collected, but I doubt whether it can come under this provision.”

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR :—“Your Excellency, I would take up the last point mentioned by the Hon'ble Dr. Nayar which is that he doubted whether we can say in regard to the Tramway Company or the Telephone Company that it is the owner of that bit of land over which the line actually runs and thereby impose upon the company a property tax. So far as the legality of it is concerned, if this thing is passed, it will be legal, that is to say if this Council says as proposed by the Honourable mover that, where the assessed premises are roads or bridges in the occupation of a tramway or telephone company, the property tax if any shall be paid in the manner provided above by such company.”

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR :—“Permanently occupied by posts and pillars, etc.”

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR :—“If the Council says that, it will be law, and liability will be fixed on them, but whether it will be a good law or a reasonable law is a different matter. Law is law whether it is a reasonable one or not. That is the point raised by the Hon'ble Dr. Nayar. I would base my objection on a somewhat different footing. Assuming that you could in some way increase the tax paid by these companies, whether in the present conditions it would be wise to do so—that is the question. The Honourable Member seems to think that at present the Tramway Company—that is much more important than the Telephone Company—escapes all liability to local taxation. Is it escaping all liability to local taxation? I have got before me a statement of the local taxation which the Tramway Company is now paying which comes to Rs. 11,000 per annum.”

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR :—“Is it property tax?”

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR :—“Rs. 1,984 for property tax; from the extension in Broadway, etc., Rs. 5,300.”

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR :—“That is rent.”

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR :—“Yes. It is rent. But rent for what?—rent for using your road. The Honourable Member's proposal is that by some manipulation of the law, you should say that in addition to that, the company are the owners of that bit of land over which they go and thereby levy a property tax on them. The vehicles, the cars pay taxes and the amount works out to Rs. 11,000. If these are going to be increased under the new law, in some cases we may be more than doubling the liability. It is open to you in regard to further extensions to increase your rent. Then they are liable to company tax which is also being increased. The chances are that what they are contributing to the municipal revenue will under the Bill be greatly increased. The question for the Council to consider is whether we should go further in this direction by passing this piece of legislation which the Honourable Member proposes. I am quite aware that there are parallels elsewhere to this particular proposal which the Honourable Member makes. But what is the position so far as the Tramway Company is concerned? We want very badly a large extension of the tramway system. Facilities for communication to the poorer classes of the population are extremely limited and the extension of the tramway system is badly needed. I find that the Tramway Company, since the year 1904 when the tramway was re-constructed up to the year 1917 for which we have got figures, was paying an average dividend to the ordinary shareholders of 3.82, that is, less than 4 per cent. If you now introduce this law and take more from them, what would be the result? It will reduce their dividend and they would not have any motive to extend their lines and you would really be doing a positive disservice to the poorer classes of the population. It is not people like my Honourable Friend Mr. Ranga Achariyar or myself that use the tramway. It is the poorer classes of the population whose convenience we have to look to. If we pass this, I am sure it will be a serious set-back to the development of the tramway system in this city and I can conceive of nothing more unfortunate to the city than that. It is not a case in which the company is making a fabulous profit and we have let them off easily before and we must try to get more. They are getting less than 4 per cent. It will be straining the law after what has taken place to put in this provision in regard to the tramway. That bit of road over which they run their cars is open to other people also. It is not in their exclusive occupation and they maintain that bit of road and they pay the tax on cars, though their cars do no damage to the road.”

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR :—“They do considerable damage to the track they maintain and the track is always kept in water and the adjacent track is always a pool of water and the Corporation has to keep repairing it eternally.”

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR :—“The Corporation may well be thankful that they are not called upon to keep in repair 50 per cent of the road. I put it on the wider ground; I think it is a mistake with regard to a company like this to do anything which will act as a set-back to its development. I therefore oppose this proposal.”

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR :—“What about the Telephone Company?”

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO :—“My Lord, I have considerable hesitation in supporting this proposal, mostly on grounds of legality of this provision in section 104. Sections 98 to 102 and section 103 relate to the property tax. I take it that this can only be levied from the owner. In this case, the particular portion of the road let to the company belongs to the Corporation. My Honourable Friend proposes to levy on the lessee a property tax, on a property which has been let by the Corporation; whether that position is one which is consistent with the scheme of this Act is the question. It may be that my Honourable Friend may have other kind of taxation that may be devised, but so far as this particular property tax is concerned, it is one about the legality of which I have very grave doubts. It is quite easy to find parallels but I do not know whether it is called the property tax. Under the District Municipalities Act, we have had cases where plots of land belonging to municipalities have been let to various individuals for the purpose of construction of huts and the question arose whether we can impose a tax on the huts constructed on buildings on the lands belonging to the municipality and it was eventually held that it was not possible to do so. I do not know if my Honourable Friend is satisfied that this comes within the section, for the property tax under section 103 takes precedence of land revenue, and it is the first charge on buildings and lands and upon the movable property. My Honourable Friend says that the taxes paid to the municipality are a first charge upon his own lands. If my Honourable Friend can devise other ways of tapping the Madras Tramway, we shall be prepared to support him, but otherwise we find a great deal of difficulty in this proposal.”

The Hon'ble Sir GORDON FRASER :—“I just want to say one word in opposition to this amendment. It is said that the Corporation made a bad bargain with the Tramway Company. Personally I cannot see it at all. I do not know if the Honourable Member who moved this amendment has really gone into the history of the Tramway Company since its initiation. The Tramway Company started and I think I am right in saying that it has been re-constructed on two occasions, certainly on one. I think of the original people who went into this business and provided the tramway for Madras, very few of them have anything left to show for it. The Tramway Company took this risk very much to the benefit of the Corporation. It may be that the Corporation could have worked this scheme quite differently but when people talk of a bad bargain made by the Corporation, I certainly do not agree with them; I think that the benefit is all on the side of the Corporation. If there is one body of people who made a bad bargain, it is the original people who took shares in the Madras Tramway Company.”

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR :—“In the answer given by the Honourable Member in charge, the question of the legal difficulty was raised but we need not pursue it. Unless it is beyond the competence of this legislature, I do not see how the question of legality comes in at all. It is entirely within the competence of this legislature. As regards the suitability of it, I am afraid the issues have been confounded by paying

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"No."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"If we pass this we can impose it."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"The Honourable Gentleman should have raised this question when the taxation clauses were taken."

The Hon'ble Mr. K. RAMA AYYANGAR:—"Your Excellency said that consequential amendments might be made."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"Clause 98 as passed does not provide for a tax on charcoal and coal. It is that which gives the power to the corporation to levy this tax. The Honourable Member has not brought it up there and he proposes to bring it up now under section 129. Clause 129 lays down the procedure."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"My Honourable Friend is quite correct."

The Hon'ble Mr. K. RAMA AYYANGAR:—"Clause 98 is a general clause in which the power to tax is taken and in the details we say how it is proposed to tax. I wanted to give an amendment into Your Excellency's hands, but just before that the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar said that a certain section would have to be reserved till a subsequent section was amended. Your Excellency ruled that it was unnecessary to retain it, but that if the latter is passed, these could be consequentially amended. On that I did not oppose the passing of section 98 simply on the understanding that Your Excellency gave that ruling."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"I may help my Honourable Friend. What I said was that section 55 as to the period of office of councillors, elected and appointed, might be reserved because the Hon'ble Sir Gordon Fraser had an amendment which would necessitate an amendment to section 55 which was carried. Your Excellency said that if that was so, it could be amended."

The Hon'ble the ADVOCATE-GENERAL:—"That clause was put and carried."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"That does not mean final addition."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"I am sorry if any misunderstanding on my part has prevented any Honourable Member from putting his amendment. The point is the Honourable Gentleman gave no notice of an amendment to clause 98 and no amendment having been inserted in clause 98, the amendment which he now proposes to clause 129 is out of order. There is no power in the Bill to tax charcoal and coal and therefore it will be quite meaningless for the Council to embark on the discussion of the Honourable Gentleman's amendment which he now proposes. I have no choice but to rule it out of order. I again express my regret. I am not conscious of having suggested to the Honourable Member that this was the proper place to raise the question. I do not recollect that it was ever put to me, but if it was ever put to me, I regret having misled the Honourable Member."

The Hon'ble Mr. K. RAMA AYYANGAR:—"I have no voice in the matter except to place what I feel in the matter. It is patent that I have not given notice of an amendment to section 98, but I have given notice of an amendment to section 129. It need not have been placed on the agenda and His Excellency could have forwarded the amendment without placing it on the agenda. It was placed on the agenda and it meant that the consequential alterations may be made. There was an occasion for me when I could have opposed section 98 being passed, but by the ruling which was given in respect of another section that was put and passed, I was bound by a ruling of that kind. It is for Your Excellency to decide; in fact I do not think that Your Excellency would like to cut off argument or the position being placed before the Council. It is only a consequential amendment to be made, it might have been rectified before the office, it might have been rectified by me and the occasion when I could have rectified it was lost to me under the circumstances I mentioned."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR:—"I would make a request to this Council that we should not set up a precedent on a matter of this sort. Unless there is anything of a rule omit considering it. There is nothing in the Act or in the rules. I have not discovered one section warranting the position that the amendment should be excluded. There is no sort of antagonism between the provision previously passed and this. There is no rule that if we pass Bill consisting of 400 sections, there may be omissions of all sorts. When we are taking a big will require to be shaped, and we cannot possibly pass this in a day or two. I am quite sure that these anything on clause 98 which negatives the position taken by the Hon'ble Mr. Rama Ayyangar. There is nothing to say that we should not tax charcoal and coal."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"I was anxious to hear everything that could be said, but this is really a matter upon which I must take the responsibility. It is obvious. There are gentlemen whose legal knowledge is greater than mine and I should be sorry to say that they should contest the position which is this. If you want to put charcoal and coal into this clause section 129, we shall have to go back and amend the clause 98. That will be the consequence. I am obliged to rule the Honourable Gentleman's amendment out of order."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR:—"So that I may be better guided, may I know under what rule it is done?"

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"I had to decide points of order. The chairman has to decide points of order. I do not know which rule it is."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"Rule 50."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"There is obviously no other alternative."

The amendment was ruled out.

The following was the amendment which was dropped:—

71. After clause 134 which will be 133 after renumbering, insert the heading 'Duty on Goods' and add the following as clause 134:—

"The Governor in Council may make rules not inconsistent with the Act for regulating the collection of the duty mentioned in clause (h) of section 98, and pay them to the corporation after deducting the expenses incurred, if any, by the Government or by the Madras Port Trust in the collection thereof."

The following amendments were dropped:—

72. The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. KRISHNA RAO:—"After clause 137 add the following as clause 137-A:—

- (1) The terminal tax on railway passengers shall be levied on the tickets of all passengers travelling by rail from any place more than 15 miles from the boundary of the city to any railway station in the city.
- (2) The rates at which the tax should be levied on each class of ticket shall be determined by the Council, provided always that they shall not exceed the maxima laid down in part IV-A of schedule IV.
- (3) The tax shall be collected as a surcharge on fares by the administration of the railway by which the passengers are carried.
- (4) The Governor in Council may make rules not inconsistent with this Act, regulating the collection of the tax, the payment thereof to the Corporation and the deduction of any expenses incurred by railway administrations to the collection thereof.

73. The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"Number existing clause as clause 137 (1).

Add as clause 137 (2) the following:—

74. The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRAIAH:—"Add the following as clause 138 and renumber all the subsequent clauses:—

Terminal tax.

- (1) The terminal tax on railway passengers shall be levied on all passengers arriving in and departing from any railway station in the city by rail provided that the Governor in Council may by notification in the Fort St. George Gazette exempt passengers so arriving from and departing to stations within a radius of not exceeding 25 miles from the city.
- (2) The rates at which the tax shall be levied on each class of ticket shall, subject to the sanction of the Governor in Council, be determined by the Council provided always that they shall not exceed the rates laid down in part IV-A of schedule I.

[13TH FEBRUARY 1919.]

- (3) The tax shall be collected by the railway administration in such manner as may be decided by the Governor in Council.
- (4) The Governor in Council may make rules for regulating the collection of the tax and the payment thereof to the Corporation and for determining the charges for the collection of the tax, if any, to which the railway administration may be entitled.

Clause 137 was allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Clauses 138 to 146.

Clauses 138 to 146 were allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Clause 147.

The Hon'ble Mr. K. RAMA AYYANGAR :—"I move the amendment No. 75.

"75. After the words 'any one of such persons' add the words 'who is in the possession of the debenture or security.'

"The section runs :—"When two or more persons are joint holders of any debenture or security issued under this Act, any one of such persons may give an effectual receipt for any interest or dividend payable in respect of such debenture or security, unless notice to the contrary has been given to the corporation by any other of such persons.' The words 'who is in the possession of the debenture or security' should be added at the end. My only submission is that we will be contravening the provision of the Negotiable Instruments Act. When anybody produces a debenture or a security it is better that this clause is not exercised as excluding the other. It may be that one man gives possession to another on conditions which we may not realise and yet he may go to the municipality and draw the money. The effect of it will be that the person in possession may have legal remedies. I thought this matter may be placed before the Government."

The Hon'ble the ADVOCATE-GENERAL :—"The amendment is unnecessary. When two persons hold a debenture, each of them can give notice to the corporation not to give money. Therefore, the joint holders are protected. The corporation could be equally protected by obtaining a release from one of the joint holders. The introduction of the words 'who is in the possession of debenture or security' would lead to a very difficult process. The clerk of the corporation may have to administer the Act and he may have to find out who is in possession of the security or debenture. The holders can easily protect themselves by giving notice to the corporation. Unless both of them want to claim, the corporation can obtain a valid discharge by paying money due under it to either of the two persons. This will introduce the necessity for ascertaining who is in possession and we would have to distinguish between possession and custody and we would have to entrust it to the petty clerk to decide it."

The Hon'ble Mr. K. RAMA AYYANGAR :—"Others may give notice. I do not want to take away the provision as to notice. I cannot understand the objection of the Hon'ble the Advocate-General. If there are two joint holders, both of them are in joint possession though one of them has the physical possession."

The amendment was put and lost.

Clause 147 was allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Clauses 148 to 152.

Clauses 148 to 152 were allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Clause 153.

The Hon'ble Mr. K. RAMA AYYANGAR :—"I move amendment No. 76.

"76. Add at the end of sub-clause (1) the words 'necessary for such payment.'

"That is again for the notice of the Government. I want that only the amount necessary for payment should be attached and nothing more."

The Hon'ble the ADVOCATE-GENERAL :—"It is absolutely unnecessary. The section is quite plain. Section 153 says :—"If any money borrowed by the corporation from the Government, whether before or after the commencement of this Act, or any interest or posts due in respect thereof, be not repaid according to the conditions of the loan, the Governor in Council may attach the municipal fund or any part thereof'. It is wholly unnecessary. They are not going to attach for six pies, six lakhs of revenue."

The amendment was put and lost.

Clause 153 was allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Clauses 154 to 166.

Clauses 154 to 166 were allowed to stand part of the Bill.

[13TH FEBRUARY 1919.] (Mr. Krishna Rao ; the President ; Mr. Ranga Achariyar ; Mr. M. Ramachandra Rao ; Mr. Molony.)

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. KRISHNA RAO :—"I think we may begin after lunch."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT :—"I may make one announcement. In the case of the Agricultural Pests and Diseases Bill, it is quite possible to see that printing of the Bill was corrected in all particulars. We should be finishing in a few days this very large and long Bill and it will not be possible and I do not think that it would be wise to say that this Bill should be passed into law at the same moment when we finish the consideration of the last clause. So, for the purpose of very careful scrutiny of the Bill, in regard to punctuation, printing, etc., I propose to suggest to the Council that it would conform to the needs of discussion that the actual passing of the Bill into law should be deferred to the next meeting of the Council."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR :—"When will that be?"

His Excellency the PRESIDENT :—"Tuesday, the 11th of March. That is the date which has been indicated for purposes of convenience. When we meet then, we can take the business of simply requiring formally the passing of the Bill into law. That will also give an opportunity to Government of bringing any special points that may arise."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO :—"And also to us, I believe."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT :—"I do not propose that there should be any general discussion except the ordinary discussion provided by the rules. If there is anything which Government wish to lay before us, we shall be guided by the ordinary rules in that matter."

The Council then adjourned for a short interval.

The Council re-assembled at 3 p.m., when the discussion was resumed.

Clause 167.

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. KRISHNA RAO :—"I have the honour to move amendment No. 77 :—

77. In clause 167 (1), substitute 'Standing Committee' for 'Commissioner'.
"Section 167 reads thus : 'Without the permission of the commissioner, no building, wall or other structure shall be newly erected and no street or railway shall be constructed over any municipal water-mains.' I suggest that in sub-clause (1) of this section, instead of the word 'commissioner' the word 'standing committee' might be substituted. It will be remembered that this clause which is not in the original Bill was introduced in the Select Committee after some consideration. In the second sub-clause the principle is practically recognized that in the case of buildings, walls or structures erected or any street or railway constructed, the approval of the standing committee will be necessary before the commissioner can cause the same to be removed. What I suggest is only an extension of that principle. In the case of works affecting water-mains it is desirable that the permission of the standing committee is secured in the first instance. There need not be much difference between the provisions in the first part of the section and the second part of the section; and the amendment does not suggest that it should go before the corporation however important the work may be, but only before the standing committee which consists of seven members with a quorum of three. If the matter is urgent, it would not be difficult to secure a meeting of the standing committee even at short notice. In view of the importance of these buildings constructed on municipal water-mains, the permission of the standing committee is required before those works are undertaken. There need be no difference between sub-clause (1) and sub-clause (2)."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. Narasimha Ayyar seconded the amendment.

The Hon'ble Mr. J. C. MOLONY :—"I oppose the amendment. This is really a matter of executive detail. The Honourable Gentleman who moved the amendment has spoken entirely on the importance of the buildings constructed on water-mains. But municipal water-mains in relation to the whole city are very much more important; in deciding whether a building can remain or not the commissioner must rely upon the expert advice of the engineer. There is no other person who can be consulted and it is impossible to leave a detail like this to a deliberative body like the standing committee. It is not a question of policy at all; it is a question of executive detail."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR :—"On the reason given by the Hon'ble Mr. Molony, the section should run : 'The commissioner with the permission of the engineer.' How the commissioner is in a better position than the standing committee to take the advice of the engineer, I cannot understand. Unless we act on the principle that if he happens to be a civilian, he is all-knowing and therefore he can act on the advice of the expert much more easily than the standing committee. It must be remembered that municipal water-mains run not only through public land, but also through private land. The Hon'ble Mr. Molony knows perfectly well that municipal water-main runs through Hyde Park, which is private property. I do not know how the owners consented to allow the mains to run through their property. It must have been in the early days when people did not know their rights. It is more or less an interference with private rights of property and in such a case to leave it to the sweet will and pleasure of this commissioner who will act in his executive capacity is not right. The owner has to exercise his right over his own property, but the Hon'ble Mr. Molony suggests that it should be left to the sweet will of the expert officer. As it is a matter interfering with private rights of property it must be left to a responsible body like the standing committee and not the commissioner who is always ready and willing to act upon expert advice."

The amendment was put and lost.

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. Ranga Achariyar claimed a poll.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"Ring the bell."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"I do not think that the members who came now should take part in the vote. They have not voted already. Let us have a snatch vote at least on one point."

Clause 172.

The Hon'ble Mr. K. RAMA AYYANGAR:—"I move amendment No. 81:—

81. In sub-clause (a) add the words 'for a continuous period of two months.'

"My Lord, it is only to avoid any mischief by the subordinate officers who may on report cut off water-supply for a premises when a man goes out for a few days; when he returns he would find that he would have to apply to the commissioner or some one else for the water-supply. If the water is wasted, we have a right to exemption. But to cut off water-supply and then restore it would be a matter of difficulty."

The Hon'ble Mr. J. C. MOLONY:—"I oppose this amendment strongly. The reason given is hypothetical mischief by some subordinate. When you leave the house vacant, the amount of water wasted is somewhat surprising. I once had to pay for water; it was in a period when I was away for ten days and my servant left the taps open and used almost twice the water that I would have used in a month. There is no reason to suppose that the corporation subordinates are always oppressing the people, and that to turn off water and to turn it on will be a matter of difficulty. It is not right to keep water on when the house is vacant, and while the rate-payers are paying for the pumping engines."

The Hon'ble Mr. K. RAMA AYYANGAR:—"It is not as if he keeps the tap open and goes away. The question arises where it is unoccupied and where the water is not used. If it is used wrongly, there are other provisions. For mere non-occupation of a house it is not right to stop water."

The Hon'ble Mr. J. H. THONGER:—"We must penalise the waste of water, which is very scarce."

The amendment was put and lost.

(Mr. Rama Ayyangar; Mr. Molony; Mr. Krishna Rao; Mr. Ranga Achariyar; Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar; the Advocate-General.) [13TH FEBRUARY 1919.]

The Hon'ble Mr. K. RAMA AYYANGAR:—"I move amendment No. 82:—

82. Delete sub-clause (b).

"My submission is that the non-payment of the tax ought not to be a reason for cutting off supply. They will wish to take advantage of that provision when the taxes are collected; I do not suppose it can be, because they have a right to have the tax. There should not be this right to punish people if they do not pay the tax by cutting off their supply especially when the municipality is bound to see that water which is contaminated is not used. It will cause so much difficulty to the public. If want of payment of tax interferes with the privileges of citizenship, it should not be allowed. It is not that the man is allowed to appropriate the money; all the money is collected mostly. I submit it is not proper to have a provision like that."

The Hon'ble Mr. J. C. MOLONY:—"I oppose it strongly. This is a provision which has existed for a long time and this is the only method of dealing with recalcitrant tax-payers."

The amendment was put and lost."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. KRISHNA RAO:—"I do not move amendment No. 85."

With the permission of His Excellency the President, the following amendment was withdrawn:—

85. In sub-clause (b) substitute 'fifteen' for 'thirty.'

The Hon'ble Mr. K. RAMA AYYANGAR:—"I do not propose amendment No. 83."

With the permission of His Excellency the President, the following amendment was withdrawn:—

83. In sub-clause (c) insert the words 'for two weeks' after the words 'occupier continues.'

The Hon'ble Mr. K. RAMA AYYANGAR:—"I move amendment No. 84:—

84. Delete sub-clause (f).

"Sub-clause (f) says: 'If any pipes, taps, works or fittings connected with the corporation water-supply are found, on examination by the commissioner to be out of repair to such an extent as to cause waste or contamination of water.' That is again a punishment which will entail people being disturbed of their rights. Each house-owner cannot decide such questions and the municipal corporation would be the only capable body, because they entertain an establishment to see that this kind of wastage does not take place. Cutting off the water-supply is another kind of punishment. I want it to be deleted."

The Hon'ble Mr. J. C. MOLONY:—"I oppose that also. We have found by long experience that this is the most effective way to repair leaky taps. We issue notice to repair, but people take no notice in 99 cases out of 100. When we send a man to cut off supply his mere arrival is enough to make them take notice."

The amendment was put and lost.

Clause 172 was allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Clauses 173 to 187.

Clauses 173 to 187 were allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Clause 188.

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"I move amendment No. 86:—

86. In line 2, after the word 'cattle-stand' add the words 'choultry, theatre, railway-station, dock, wharf, or other place of public resort.'

"It is only an addition of a few other places similar to the one in the section. I think such a provision is necessary. The section would read, as proposed, the commissioner may, by notice, require any owner or manager of a market, cart-stand, cattle-stand, choultry, theatre, railway station, dock, wharf, or other place of public resort within such time as may be specified in such notice to provide and maintain for the separate use of persons of each sex latrines of such description and number and in such a position as may be specified and to keep the same clean and in proper order."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"I accept it."

The Hon'ble the ADVOCATE-GENERAL:—"The word 'or' before the word 'cattle-stand' may be deleted."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"Yes."

The amendment was put and agreed to.

Clauses 188 as amended was allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Clauses 189 to 204.

Clauses 189 to 204 were allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Clause 205.

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"I move amendment No. 87.

87. In sub-clause (d) insert at the commencement the words 'with the special sanction of the Standing Committee'.

(Mr. Ranga Achariyar ; Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar ;
Mr. Krishna Rao.) [13TH FEBRUARY 1919.]

"It is rather an important provision. It defines the powers of the commissioner. It says that the commissioner may subject always to such sanction as may be required under chapter IV—that is about financial powers—lay out and make new streets, etc. Sub-clause (d) says that he 'may widen, open, extend or otherwise improve any public street'. I propose to add that it should be done with the special sanction of the standing committee. It is rather an important power. Difficulties have arisen in my own experience where the president wanted to widen the street. Widening means also cutting off plots removing various other things which he may consider to be projections. I had to intervene in several cases like that in my division where proposals were made by the president in order to carry out these proposals and in one or two cases I prevented him from doing so. I think it is necessary in such a case that the special sanction of the standing committee should be taken."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"I confess I have some difficulty in following the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar. He has apparently no objection to the commissioner laying out and making new streets, constructing bridges and sub-ways, turning, diverting or permanently closing any public street or part thereof, but he objects to the commissioner widening, opening, extending or otherwise improving any public street. I could understand the Honourable Member proposing that the other things should receive the sanction of the standing committee but he wants a special sanction for this purpose. I would ask the Honourable Member to notice the words 'Subject always to such sanction as may be required under chapter IV'. Chapter IV limits the powers of the commissioner to purchase land and to enter into contracts. There is always a general control in the budget and I do not see any reason to distinguish between the function that he has to perform under clause (d) to which the Honourable Member objects and the function that he has to perform under clauses (a), (b) and (c) which he apparently accepts. I would rather not make any change. I would therefore oppose the amendment."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"I quite realize my Honourable friend's difficulty because he has had no practical experience of municipal matters that I have had. I make no objection to clauses (a), (b) and (c) because no building will be affected, but where he has to widen, open or extend or otherwise improve any public street, he has to interfere with the existing structures. The Honourable Member has overlooked that in clause (c) it requires the special sanction of the Council and the Government because it is a serious matter—permanently closing a public street. Therefore, with reference to widening, opening and extending, it will be interfering with the existing structure which will have to be done with due consideration to the requirements of the locality. I know one case where a very influential commissioner who happens to own a house at a corner of the street in Komaleswaranpet wanted to demolish the neighbouring houses to have carriage access for his motor car and carriage and the thing was about to be carried when I had to intervene and prevent it being done. The commissioner will have a lot of routine work to do and some engineer will put up a notice and he will simply say 'ordered'. All this state of things will be avoided and it is very unsafe to leave a power in the hands of a commissioner, but if it is put before the standing committee, they will look into the matter more carefully. Why not trust to the discretion of the standing committee in such a matter as that when you are doing a thing which will entail interfering with other people's property? What is this trust in the commissioner and distrust in the standing committee? It is that spirit which I object to. The spirit in the whole of this Act is 'trust the commissioner who is my nominee, but do not trust the standing committee or the council who are not my nominees'. I therefore strongly urge this amendment."

The amendment was put and lost.

Clause 205 was allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Clauses 206 to 210.

Clauses 206 to 210 were allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Clause 211.

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. KRISHNA RAO:—"I move amendment No. 88—

88. In line 1 substitute 'Standing Committee' for 'Commissioner' and substitute 'it' for 'he'.

In line 3 omit the words 'with the sanction of Standing Committee'.

"The principle underlying this amendment is just the one underlying the amendment moved by the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar which has just been rejected by the Council; but each proposal has to be judged on its merits though I have not the slightest doubt that it is likely to share the same fate.

"The clause reads thus:—'The commissioner may, upon such terms as he thinks fit, allow any building to be set forward for the purpose of improving the line of a public street and may, with the sanction of the standing committee, by notice require any building to be so set forward, etc.' The Council will notice that, in the clause as it is, the sanction of the standing committee is required in the case of buildings set forward in the case of reconstruction or new construction, in the case of buildings set forward to improve the line of the street. The commissioner is given full discretion upon such terms as he thinks fit to allow any building to be set forward for the purpose of improving the line of the public street. I think it is somewhat anomalous that when the desirability of obtaining the sanction of the standing committee was found necessary in the latter part, it was thought not necessary in dealing with the former portion. If my first amendment is accepted, the other amendment suggested in that clause will be consequential. The main object of this amendment is just to create a greater sense of responsibility in the members of the standing committee and not to make it understood that the commissioner can, even on important matters, act on his own sole discretion. The object is well-understood and the questions are not so difficult as to be beyond the purview or the comprehension of the members of the standing committee. If the commissioner is going to act upon the advice of expert officers, those expert officers are available to the members of the standing committee; and let us give the members of the standing committee some credit for common-sense and sound judgment. Unless the policy is to be that we should not go an inch further beyond what is recommended by the select committee, and that no attempt should be made to take away the powers proposed to be given to the commissioner by the select committee or to add to the powers proposed to be given to the standing committee—unless that is the policy to be pursued, I have not the slightest doubt that this is a proper case in which your Excellency's Government should interfere and substitute the words I propose."

13TH FEBRUARY 1919.] (Mr. Krishna Rao ; Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar ; Dr. Nayar ; Mr. Narasimha Ayyar ;
Mr. M. Ramachandra Rao.)

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"I may mention that this is a new thing. We take it from the Bombay law and it is literally followed. I may mention why we put it like that. We felt that it would be as well that this thing of allowing buildings to be set forward should be in the hands of the commissioner who would be less amenable to influence than in the hands of a number of people who can be more amenable and upon whom pressure may be more easily put. There is the contingency of struggle such as we have in mufassal municipalities. People have the tendency to come more and more into the streets and roads and we considered that and said that the commissioner 'may, upon such terms as he thinks fit, allow any buildings to be set forward for the purpose of improving the line of a public street'; so that if a man wants to come forward, it is the commissioner who shall decide. If he is required to put his building forward, that will require the sanction of the standing committee. It is only in the case of reconstruction or new construction that that is contemplated. That is intended to bring houses into line. How it is going to work in practice I have no idea. We have taken it from the Bombay law, we have followed it pretty closely and I would leave it there."

The Hon'ble Dr. T. M. NAYAR:—"Does it apply to all streets or only to streets where building lines have been defined?"

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR:—"It applies to both cases."

The Hon'ble Dr. T. M. NAYAR:—"If it only refers to cases where the building lines have been fixed, the cases will be very few, but if it is to be applied to any building in any street, you want greater check."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"As the thing is worded it will apply to any street."

The Hon'ble Dr. T. M. NAYAR:—"What does coming forward mean? Coming forward to what place?"

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR:—"To the line where it is prescribed."

The Hon'ble Dr. T. M. NAYAR:—"I want it to be explained because it will make a world of difference between the two cases."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO:—"Section 208 lays down clearly the procedure for prescribing the street alignment and 209 deals with restrictions on erection of or addition to buildings within street alignment or buildings line. So it is a continuation of the same thing. Section 210 refers to setting back projecting buildings or walls. It is not quite clear whether it is within the street alignment. The Hon'ble Dr. Nayar wishes to know whether the commissioner's power to allow buildings to be set forward is in streets where street alignments have been settled as under section 208 or whether it is a general power in any street where street alignments have not been made. In one case the matter has been settled by the publication of the street alignment survey and there should be no objection to allow the commissioner to deal with it."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"Now that this explanation has been given to me, I am thankful for it. Reading sections 208 to 211, there is very little doubt that it refers to streets where building lines are settled. Section 208 prescribes the power to prescribe the building line; section 209 deals with restriction on erection of or addition to buildings within street alignments or building line; section 210 refers to setting back projecting buildings or walls and section 211 to setting buildings forward to improve the line of street. The whole thing contemplates, as the Hon'ble Mr. Ramachandra Rao has pointed out, the line having been laid down, the commissioner to work out the details."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO:—"Might I add the words 'within street alignment'?"

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"Is it necessary? If it is necessary I shall bring up the amendment."

(Mr. Ranga Achariyar ; Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar ; [13TH FEBRUARY 1919.
Mr. Krishna Rao ; Mr. Molony.]

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR :—" I would suggest the addition of the words 'where action has been taken under section 208'."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR :—" I will make a note of it and bring up the point again if necessary."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. KRISHNA RAO :—" I only wish to point out that the Hon'ble Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar has practically confirmed the apprehensions raised by the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar that members of the standing committee will not be in a position to appreciate the difficulties and that the commissioner who can act for himself will be in a better position to deal with the question. He incidentally referred to the working in mufassal municipalities. I feel it my duty to point out that there are various occasions where corporations have acted properly and refused permission for setting forward. If the Hon'ble Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar will examine the question, he will find that there are a number of instances in which municipalities refused to grant permission. We find the Collector or the revenue officer asking us to reconsider it though the municipality refused permission. We must not go under the impression that these corporate bodies will be influenced by such things."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR :—" I did not press that ; let us go on the merits."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. KRISHNA RAO :—" No hardship will be caused even if this power is vested in the standing committee."

The amendment was put and lost.

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. KRISHNA RAO :—" I do not move the latter portion of the amendment that in line 3 of the clause, the words, 'with the sanction of the standing committee' be omitted, because it is consequential."

Clause 211 was allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Clauses 212 to 214.

Clauses 212 to 214 were allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Clause 215.

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR :—" This is rather an important innovation that we are making in the Act. I ask the careful attention of the Council to this question. I gave my support to it in the select committee ; it was I who suggested this provision, but the select committee have made it more stringent on the suggestion of the Hon'ble Mr. Molony. Here we have this difficult question of open spaces being built upon without sufficient provision being made for streets. They build houses recklessly under the present law ; we found it difficult to enforce the opening of new streets where open spaces are built upon. There are several places where proper approaches were not laid to the satisfaction of the corporation authorities. Therefore such a provision was necessary. I gladly welcome the provision, but at the same time it must be remembered that this provision, encroaching upon the rights of owners of property, should not be made too stringent. There are cases which the executive will have in view in which slums and par-cheris are located. The lands are owned by one individual or by several individuals. Under this section power is taken by the executive to require them to provide for streets. If we leave it without restriction as to width of the streets and other details, the executive may say 'we want a forty-foot-wide street or a twenty-foot-wide street.' In some cases it will be impossible for the owner to provide for such a wide street. Whereas it is necessary to improve the locality, it should not be a burden on their owner. Therefore I propose that in regard to these streets the ordinary provisions as to the width of the streets should not apply, but in view of the circumstances of each case, I propose that—

89. After the word 'roads' in line 5 and before the word 'giving' insert the words 'of such width and dimensions as the standing committee may by general or special order prescribe.'

" They will be able to know the circumstances of the locality and they will judge as to what is to be the proper width. Having regard to the position of the owner and the various other considerations which will be taken into account, the width may be fixed. I have suggested 11 feet, following the English Act, in the case of small places where huts are situated and 20 feet in other cases. But, however, I thought it was wise not to insist upon any particular width, because it may vary from place to place and persons to persons. Therefore, I want the discretion to vest in the standing committee to prescribe the width and the dimensions of the road affecting rights of property and it should not be left unprovided for ; it should not be left to any uniform standard. It is better to leave it as it is so that the standing committee will, according to my amendment, have the discretion to prescribe the width by a general or special regulation."

The Hon'ble Yaqub Hasan Sabih Bahadur seconded the amendment.

The Hon'ble Mr. J. C. MOLONY :—" I beg to oppose the amendment. Section 215 deals with private streets. Section 216, clause (5) says : 'No person shall lay out or make any new private street without or otherwise than in conformity with the orders of the standing committee.' The standing committee is the sanctioning authority. So I do not see the point of the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar."

13TH FEBRUARY 1919.] (Mr. Ranga Achariyar ; Mr. Molony ; the President ; Dr. Nayar ; Mr. M. Ramachandra Rao.)

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR :—" He cannot make a street without such sanction, but they cannot fix the width. There is the general law of the 20 feet width and the 40 feet width and I say it should not apply to these cases."

The Hon'ble Mr. J. C. MOLONY :—" The width of a street shall ordinarily be not less than 40 feet and in the case of huts 20 feet."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR :—" In this case we ought to give the discretion to prescribe the width to the standing committee. When you want to go and improve the par-cheris it will facilitate the executive action ; instead of creating opposition in the locality, you know the practical difficulties of improving slums. The owner is unwilling to help the execution in improving the slums, because it interferes with his space. The question of width must be left to the standing committee. There must be facility for improving the slums. As it is, we cannot enforce these things. As we are taking power to compel a man to keep a space from which he can make money, if you compel a man to leave a space of 20 feet where there are 20 huts, it is hardly necessary to have such a wide street. It is hardly wise to insist upon it."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT :—" The point of difference seems to be, if I may explain it, I do not think the Honourable gentleman has caught it, those responsible for the Bill consider that those powers are already provided in the Bill and therefore the Honourable Gentleman's amendment is superfluous."

The Hon'ble Dr. T. M. NAYAR :—" My Lord, there is a still deeper question involved. The Honourable Member's amendment wants to give the standing committee power to decide the width of roads which ought to be fixed by the Act. It is dangerous to leave it to the standing committee or to the commissioner or even to the corporation. They are all more apt to listen to sentimental appeals than sanitary considerations. Therefore, from time to time they may relax the rules. I think it is exceedingly dangerous to allow a standing committee or the corporation to fix the width of roads. I quite agree that so far as hutting grounds are concerned, they require special consideration because it would be impracticable to lay the same rules as to width of roads for hutting grounds. Once our general principle that the height of a building should not be more than the width of the street is accepted, it is all right. But I think hutting grounds should be dealt with in a different manner. The real difficulty would arise not in connexion with hutting grounds but in connexion with private property. I strongly oppose giving the standing committee or any other authority power to reduce the standards laid down in the Act."

The amendment was put and lost.

Clause 215 was allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Clauses 216 to 229.

Clauses 216 to 229 were allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Clause 230.

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO :—" My Lord, the two amendments to section 230 standing in my name relate to building regulations. Honourable Members will see that under clause (1) of section 230, the Governor in Council has the power to make rules for the regulation or restriction of the use of sites for building and for the regulation or restriction of building. Sub-clause (2) of section 230 says : 'without prejudice to the generality of the power conferred by sub-section (1), clause (a), rules made under that clause may provide, etc.' My first amendment proposes that these words shall be re-placed by the words mentioned in the first of my amendments, namely :—

90. Omit sub-clause (a) of clause 230 (2) and substitute the following :—

'that land on which it is proposed to construct buildings and the site surrounding them should be raised to a level to be fixed by the council.'

" My Lord, the object of my amendment is this. These words 'no insanitary or dangerous site shall be used for building in the section' are too vague. I really cannot understand what is meant by 'no insanitary or dangerous site.' A site may be sanitary one day and insanitary another day. There is nothing inherently impossible in making an insanitary site sanitary. I am not able to appreciate the use of the word 'dangerous.' We do not know how any site can be dangerous otherwise than as being insanitary. So much for the clause as it stands. As regards my suggested amendment it lays special stress on one circumstance which has always occupied the attention of municipal councillors and that is the undesirability of constructing buildings whose level is not satisfactory. I therefore propose that the Governor in Council may have the power to frame general regulations as suggested herein that the land on which it is proposed to construct buildings and the site surrounding them should be raised to a level to be fixed by the council."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT :—" If the Honourable Gentleman will allow me to interrupt him for a moment, as it is worded, the amendment places some Honourable Members of Council in some difficulty as to voting. This amendment is not really alternative. It does not seem to be an alternative to the clause which he wishes to omit. I might be quite in favour of both. I cannot put it as the Honourable Gentleman proposes it shall be put. I shall have to put the two propositions separately."

(Mr. M. Ramachandra Rao ; Sir Francis Spring ;
Dr. Nayar ; Mr. Ramanuja Achariyar ; the President.) [13TH FEBRUARY 1919.]

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO :—" My Lord, it is quite open to take that course. My difficulty was in allowing these words to stand there. I should be equally satisfied if this clause namely 'lands on which it is proposed to construct buildings, etc.' as suggested in my amendment is put in or not. But I lay great emphasis upon it because under the by-laws and regulations of other municipalities in England a great deal of attention has been paid to regulations for the purpose of compelling owners to raise the level of building sites in the surrounding lands. I might refer to some of the rules there which are elaborate. Probably it is unnecessary. But it seems to me that in building regulations one important matter has to be insisted upon and that is its being properly raised before the general building operations are started. I do not see any other clause which empowers general regulations to be framed in this respect. I might invite the attention of Honourable Members to some of these regulations."

The Council may, by such regulation, (i) prohibit the erection of dwelling houses or the adaptation of any buildings for use as dwelling houses or any defined area or areas of such land, (ii) regulate the erection of dwelling houses or the adaptation of buildings for use as dwelling houses on such land or any defined area or areas of such land, (iii) prescribe the level at which the underside of the lowest floor of any permitted building shall be placed on such land or any defined area or areas of such land and as to the provision to be made and maintained by the owner for securing efficient and proper drainage of the buildings either directly or by means of a local sewer into a main sewer of the council."

"The essential portion of these regulations is to take care in the earlier stages not to commit the council to a policy of permitting buildings in low-lying lands. The power proposed to be conferred under the general powers is to insist upon certain levels in certain localities. That is how I understood these words: 'no insanitary or dangerous site shall be used for building' applying essentially to buildings which are difficult of drainage, where it is not possible to maintain proper levels for the construction of dwellings. I thought it would be an improvement to replace these words by the words I suggest, but if there is any difficulty in carrying out the object, I have no objection to the words remaining as they are and my words being added to the clause."

The Hon'ble Sir FRANCIS SPRING :—" The raising of the level does not necessarily make it sanitary. Both are equally necessary."

The Hon'ble Dr. T. M. NAYAR :—" I consider the amendment absolutely unnecessary. The clause as put in the Bill is quite comprehensive and covers all the cases contemplated by the amendment. If that is not sufficient, sub-clause (c) says that he can prescribe the level and the width of the foundations and the level of the lowest floor and the stability of the structure. That would answer the purpose. I strongly object to the clause as it stands in the Bill being cut out, because it confers wide powers on the Governor in Council to frame regulations. I have no objection to the Hon'ble Mr. Ramachandra Rao's amendment being put in, but it is absolutely unnecessary. The clause as it stands covers all possible cases."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur V. K. RAMANUJA ACHARIYAR :—" I oppose the amendment, because the Hon'ble Mr. Ramachandra Rao gave only one case of a site being dangerous or insanitary. We get applications for buildings on made up soil and sanitary authorities sometimes object and say that buildings shall not be allowed. That case will not be covered by this. I would leave the Bill as it is."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT :—" I put it to the Council. Clause 230 (2) (a) as it is in the section, I shall put first."

Clause 230 (2) (a) as in the Bill was put and allowed to stand part of the Bill.

The Hon'ble Mr. Ramachandra Rao's amendment No. 90 was put and lost.

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO :—" I beg to move to add the following :—

'Add the following to sub-clause (d) of clause 230 (3): "and the purposes for which the building is proposed to be used."

"Clause (d) as it runs is that these regulations may provide for the number and height of stories composing a building and height of rooms. I propose that the applications for buildings also should contain the information as to the purpose for which the building is proposed to be used. Sometimes, My Lord, I have seen application for buildings made without any definite purpose for which it is going to be used being stated, with the result that houses have been built and have been afterwards used for the storage of goods and sometimes for residential purposes; it all depends on the way in which the building is proposed to be used—if it is only a shop, or for the storage of grain or for residential purposes. It seems to me that to have the building application without definite information as regards the definite purpose, will not be a complete application. Sometimes I have seen residential houses turned into factories."

The Hon'ble Dr. T. M. NAYAR :—" I beg to second this amendment. We have had definite cases in Madras where applications came without stating the purpose for which the building was intended. When an application was put in for a building in a locality where it was forbidden to have a market, the application was for a building and the building was completed and then the question came for licensing the building to be used as a market. I refer to the Choolai market."

Mr. Rama Ayyangar ; Mr. Thonger ; Mr. Narasimha Ayyar.)

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR :—" I accept the amendment."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR :—" I am afraid it will cause hardship. What the Honourable Member proposes is this: the section says that rules may provide for the following matters, and clause (a) says 'information and plans to be submitted together with applications for permission to build.' Clause (d) says 'number and height of stories composing a building and height of rooms.' The Honourable Member proposes that clause (d) may prescribe also the purpose for which the building is proposed to be used. The rules may say that the building erected may be used for a particular purpose. As is well known, circumstances change in each locality. It may be a flourishing trading centre at one time, it may be a fashionable residential quarter one day, it may change another day; therefore if you compel the owner and say 'that it must be used for a particular purpose' it will be unduly hard. The instance which the Hon'ble Doctor Nayar gave as to the application for a market, etc., is a rare instance. You could not build a house and use it as a market. You cannot convert a house into a market. The authorities there must have been sleeping when they allowed the building to go on, when they knew perfectly well that the building was for a market. There are special regulations and they can provide for it. I do not think that the municipal law should unduly interfere with the liberty of the people in using their property. Tondiarpet, I know, was a very fashionable locality before, but now it is not considered to be so. So also it will be with regard to trade. It will be tying down the hands of owners for all time to come."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO :—" No."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR :—" It will, because your wording is to add 'and the purpose for which the building is proposed to be used.' If you include it under clause (a) I would have no objection but you want to include it as part of clause (d). That means that the by-law shall say 'you shall put it to this use.' That is what you propose; it is not merely for the information of the officials concerned, but you say that the rules may prescribe the purpose for which the building may be used. That will be the result. I therefore strongly oppose the amendment."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur V. K. RAMANUJA ACHARIYAR :—" Government have accepted the amendment rather quickly and probably it is useless to say anything."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR :—" We are all open to conviction."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur V. K. RAMANUJA ACHARIYAR :—" If a person specifies some purpose for which he wants the building and after the building is constructed it is used for some other purpose, what are we to do? Are we to ask him to destroy the building? No powers are given under this Act for compelling him to use it for a purpose for which it is designed."

The Hon'ble Mr. K. RAMA AYYANGAR :—" If any such power is to be given, provision should be made that he must be allowed to change as the municipality permits. When it is a question of building a house or other construction, there is no reason why its use must also be made a binding term. It requires consideration. If it is put in at all, it will have to be reconsidered with reference to other sections."

The Hon'ble Mr. J. H. THONGER :—" I wish to oppose the amendment. The point brought forward by the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar is exceedingly sound. I have known very many cases in which buildings put up for private houses are afterwards found suitable for shops. I do not see any use in stating in the first instance for what purpose the building is to be used later on. I therefore think the amendment should not be accepted."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR :—" I wish to offer a suggestion. I think there are considerations on both sides. One instance which came up to my mind was this: there was the question of a building put up on the roadside by a few Muhammadan gentlemen. They professed that it was intended to be a residence and it was permitted by the municipality on the ground that it was to be a residence. Very soon, the residence ceased to be a residence and became a house of prayer. No one can take exception to its becoming a house of prayer. But what followed was that the occupants of it began to raise objection to other people going in processions, or taking dead bodies along with beat of drums, etc."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR :—" That is provided for elsewhere."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR :—" The rules may insist upon information. You may get the information as to the purpose of the building but suppose there is a change, then it is a difficult question. With reference to that, I think we might empower municipal councils with the necessary checks to pass regulations in respect of the use of buildings for other than domestic purposes. For domestic purposes, checks are undesirable but for all other purposes regulations are necessary. Suppose in the midst of dwelling houses it is suggested that a house is to be used as a grain-store. In towns in these days of plague when even Madras is visited with plague, it is very essential to keep grain-stores away from residential quarters. Grain-stores should not be in the midst of residential quarters. When once the purpose is not residence, the municipality may be empowered to issue rules as to the use to which the building may be put; as to the occupation of a house for domestic purposes, no rules are necessary."

[13TH FEBRUARY 1919.]

The Hon'ble Yaqub Hasan Sahib Bahadur:—"This will not serve the purpose which the Honourable Mover has in view. If it is put in, it will mean that every application will give more than one purpose. The applicant will say that it is required for domestic purposes and also for a business or for a godown. He may put all sorts of purposes that he may imagine that it may some day be put to, so that later on the municipality may not say 'you have deceived us and taken the permission.' Now there are rules that so much open space should be provided in the case of domestic houses and if the building is to be used as a warehouse, that provision is not necessary. Such information is generally put in connexion with applications. It will serve no useful purpose if we add this."

The Hon'ble Mr. J. C. Molony:—"Your Excellency, I submit that a rule of this kind is practically an impossibility. As the Hon'ble Mr. Yaqub Hasan says, an applicant will put in anything, and we can never prevent anything. It is really unworkable."

His Excellency the President:—"There is a great deal of doubt about it and I think we need not press it."

The Hon'ble Sir Gordon Fraser:—"One speaker referred to a dwelling house afterwards being used for the storage of grain. That is one point that I refer to in my amendment No. 128 where I propose that such storage of grain should be licensed by the municipality. That will cover the point of the Hon'ble Mr. B. V. Narasimha Ayyar."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. Ramachandra Rao:—"I do not wish to press it. I only wish to point out to my honourable friends that I was dealing with the case of a person who comes with an application to build to the corporation office, which has the duty of checking plans and the estimates for the building, to find out whether the building is in accordance with practical requirements. I only wanted that in such cases the purpose for which it is intended to be used may also be given. I think an application for a grain-store may be prepared differently. With regard to storage, the ventilation and other things are quite different from those with regard to the dwelling house. I was dealing with an application, so that full information may be before the sanitary officers of the corporation."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. Ranga Achariyar:—"There are by-laws for that purpose."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. Rajagopala Achariyar:—"It is hardly worth while pursuing the discussion. I venture to think the discussion we have had is enough."

Clause 260.

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. Ranga Achariyar:—"This relates to precautions in the case of dangerous tanks, wells, holes, etc. The section says: 'The commissioner may, by notice, require the owner to fill in, remove, repair, protect or enclose the same so as to prevent any danger therefrom.' I propose:—

98. In line 4 of clause 260 (1) after the word 'owner' and before 'to' insert the words 'or person having control.'

"If Honourable Members will turn to section 263, we have provided for serving a notice on the person having the control. Therefore I propose after the word 'owner' we may insert the words 'or person having control,' so as to enable the commissioner to require the person having the control to do the needful."

The Hon'ble the Advocate-General:—"I do not think the amendment is necessary. I think it is not consistent with the principal section. What is really done is that if the owner of these places is not to be found, then the commissioner himself can do it. There is no necessity for leaving these things to the occupier or to the person having the control. If Honourable Members will look at sub clause (2) it says: 'If immediate action is necessary, the commissioner may himself, before giving such notice or before the period of notice expires, take such temporary measures as he thinks fit to prevent danger and the cost of doing so shall be recoverable from the owner in the manner provided in section 387.'

"If you give notice to the person having the control, would you be able to recover the cost of it from him? You must give notice to such a person from whom you would be able to recover the cost in case he commits default. It is for that purpose that the liability is thrown on the owner in the first instance, but if the owner is not found, then the commissioner can himself do it. I think that is a sufficient safeguard."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. Ranga Achariyar:—"I will tell you why Government oppose it. I must place the history of this matter. I thought Government would accept it. The real difficulty arose in connexion with the cess-pools under the control of Government. For instance, in the Spur Tank, they have made a number of holes where water stagnates and they continue to create nuisance all round the locality. The Corporation has been time after time issuing notices to the Government, but they pay so little attention to it. So also in Choolai

(Mr. Ranga Achariyar; Mr. M. Ramachandra Rao.) [13TH FEBRUARY 1919.]

we had a lot of difficulty in filling up a pond belonging to Government; whereas we have been taking steps against private owners mercilessly calling upon them to fill ponds and tanks, we have been unable to compel the Government to do it. Who is the owner? Therefore we want to be in a position to serve it upon the person who has the control so that we may take steps to remove such nuisance. For that purpose this is needed. If persons having control do not do it, you will recover the cost from the Secretary of State. That is the position that will occur. There are also other public authorities that have such land, for example, railway companies; all along the railway line, they have low-lying land where water stagnates and infects the surrounding locality and who is the owner upon whom we may serve the notice? Under sections 263 and 264, we have provided for it. The difficulty pointed out by the Hon'ble the Advocate-General as to how we are to approach the owner did not arise in sections 263 and 264. I think we are serving the notice upon the person having the control and we are recovering the cost from the owner. It is for that purpose that the words 'or persons having control' should be introduced in this section also."

The amendment was put and lost.

Clause 260 was allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Clauses 261 to 272.

Clauses 261 to 272 were allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Clause 273.

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO:—"My Lord, this section 273 is an important section which gives the commissioner powers of dealing with insanitary buildings. There is one provision specially which requires consideration and after giving notice of the amendment*, I went into the circumstances under which this provision was inserted in this Bill. As this is an important matter, I should like to briefly explain the position taken up under clause (3). This clause says: 'When any building is entirely demolished under this section and the demolition thereof adds to the value of other buildings in the immediate vicinity, the owners of such other buildings shall be bound to contribute towards the compensation payable to the owner of the first-named building in proportion to the increased value acquired by their own property. My Lord, before clause (3) there are two other clauses which give the commissioner ample powers to deal with insanitary buildings, with buildings which obstruct percolation or the free passage of air, what are called obstructive buildings under the English Act, and various other powers are also given under clause (2) as regards the circumstances which would enable a person to claim compensation. I was anxious to find out how this provision came to be inserted and I looked up to the notes on clauses on the first Bill published in 1916 and I found from it that this was modelled after section 33 of the English Housing of the Working Classes Act. Under the English law, if a municipal authority wishes under that section to demolish a building which obstructs percolation or air, or which will add to the comforts of the neighbouring house-owners, they have a right to ask the municipal authorities to demolish the building. The demolition is undertaken on the report of the medical officer and if, as a matter of fact, the building is demolished we have to consider the question as to how the site on which the building stood is to be disposed of. The provisions of section 33 of the English Act are to the effect that in regard to the site of the demolished building, the local authority has the option of keeping that site and paying compensation unless the owner signifies his intention to keep the site after demolition. All these safeguards are to be bound in that section, namely, it gives the option to a local authority to keep the site and pay compensation to the owner or leave the site to the owner, in which case he may not get the compensation but he would only get the compensation for the materials and the demolition of the building. None of these safeguards are to be found in this section, but power is given to the commissioner to order the demolition of the building and there is no provision anywhere here as to how the owner of the site on which the demolished building stood is to be compensated. I suppose it is expected that after the demolition of the building the site is to be kept vacant for the benefit of the neighbours without compensation. Is that a reasonable position to take? Therefore it is I drafted the amendment of which I gave notice to the Hon'ble the Advocate-General that when the building is demolished, the corporation shall have power to purchase the land unless the owner thereof declares within one month after the service of notice under sub-clause (1) that he desires to retain such land after demolition. This follows entirely the provisions of section 38. I explained my difficulty in voting on this clause. I do not find sufficient protection for a person whose building has been demolished, because he is obliged to take the site and keep it vacant without any compensation. I do not consider this a fair transaction. He must have the option to keep the site if he likes, but if he insists the Corporation must pay not only for the demolition of the building but also for the vacant site, dispose of it, or if it is necessary to keep it, it must keep it. The result is that after the building is demolished, the owner is obliged to keep the site vacant, without re-constructing any building upon it because it has been demolished for the purpose of making it much more agreeable to the neighbours."

"My Lord, the second difficulty that I feel about this section is that after demolishing the building, it gives power to the commissioner to call upon the neighbouring owners to contribute towards the compensation to the owner of the first-named building, namely, the demolished building, in proportion to the increased value acquired by their own property. In regard to this matter also, I find considerable difficulty. In the first place, there are no provisions in the

* 99. Add the words "to the extent of one-half" between "contribute" and "towards."

(Mr. M. Ramachandra Rao; the President;
Mr. Ranga Achariyar.)

section that before a building is demolished, any of the neighbouring property owners who may be asked to contribute are consulted. It may be that the commissioner may demolish a building costing Rs. 10,000 and after demolition go and ask everybody else to contribute towards the compensation which has been paid. Therefore, there is no sufficient protection to the neighbours before they are called upon to make the rateable contribution. And, therefore, I propose that another clause should be inserted that when notice is issued under sub-section (1) the Commissioner shall, before ordering demolition, issue notice to such persons as may be called upon to contribute. Otherwise, it is open to the commissioner to demolish the building absolutely without any notice to the persons who may be called upon to contribute and then ask all of them to make a rateable contribution in proportion to what might be considered the increased value of their holdings. That also is not a fair arrangement and we must consider the parallel provisions under section 38. The third objection to this clause is: Is it fair if the Commissioner takes it into his head, in what he considers to be for the sanitary well-being of the neighbours, to demolish the building and ask all the neighbouring land-owners to pay the entire cost of that demolition? I do not know under what parallel provision this contribution of the whole cost is being asked for. If we are to go by the provisions of the Town Planning Act, section 65 says: If as a matter of fact, such increased value is given by some such thing as is proposed here, the betterment rate is one-half. That is the extent of contribution is limited to one-half. After all the demolition is undertaken not necessarily in the interests of the persons who surround the site, but in the general interests of sanitation. We must go by some rule in the matter. I find this rule is entirely arbitrary. I may perhaps refer to section 98 of the Town Planning Act of 1906 which says: where by making a town planning scheme, any property is increased in value, the residents there if they make a claim, within the time limited by the scheme, within three months, they shall be entitled to recover from any person whose property has so increased in value, one-half of that increase. I ask the Honourable Member whether it would be a fair proposal to entrust this power to the commissioner to destroy the building absolutely without reference to the persons who may be called upon to contribute and then empower the commissioner to ask other people for contribution to the extent to which the municipality may be damaged by way of compensating the owner. Therefore I submit that if this power is to be used fairly to all parties concerned, we must go on some principle and I think there is no other principle than that embodied in section 58 of the Town Planning Act which contains the principle of betterment as well as the principle of betterment. We are dealing with the question of betterment and I submit that, if by the destruction of any building, the neighbouring properties are increased in value, what is the basis upon which you would ask these men to contribute? This section says they should contribute in proportion to the increased value of the cost of demolition. It is somewhat difficult on the date of demolition to find out what that increased value is. In regard to the town planning scheme, it takes two or three years to get increased value to neighbouring properties; however, that is a matter to be worked out in practice."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"How does it differ from the English Act?"

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO:—"Section 58 says that the betterment rate is confined to one-half, that is, the contribution from the neighbouring properties to any town planning scheme should be limited to one-half the increased value."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"This is to contribute towards the compensation."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"Is that provision carried to insanitary buildings? We are talking now of insanitary buildings."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO:—"That is so. I want to know the principle on which the building may be demolished without any reference to the persons who may be called upon to contribute and then empowering the commissioner to levy the contribution,—I take it to the whole compensation paid by the corporation to the owner of the demolished building."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"The amount of compensation is limited to the increased value acquired by their premises by reason of the demolition. You must first determine the increased value of their premises."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO:—"There are two questions to be considered; first there is a building which has been demolished and the man whose building has been demolished, gets full compensation for the materials and the site, because that site cannot be built upon again."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"It may be."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO:—"That is a point to be argued. He gets full value from the corporation."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"Such as it is."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO:—"How is the money to be recovered? Is it to come from the general funds of the corporation or are the neighbouring land-owners, owners of neighbouring sites, to be asked to contribute towards this compensation?"

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"They may not be asked to contribute anything."

THE MADRAS CITY MUNICIPAL BILL, 1918.

(Mr. M. Ramachandra Rao; the President;
Mr. Molony; Mr. Ramanuja Achariyar; Dr. Nayar.) [13TH FEBRUARY 1919.]

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO:—"I do not read it in that way."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"If their premises had acquired no increased value, they will not be asked to contribute."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO:—"The owners of such other buildings, it is said, shall be bound to contribute in proportion to their increased value."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"If there is no increased value, they will not pay anything."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO:—"My Lord, I take it that the demolition is undertaken with the object of bettering the locality. The commissioner is asked to undertake the demolition in order to clear the obstruction and improve the general sanitary condition; it is only under those circumstances that the commissioner is empowered to demolish the building. That being so, there is a later section which says that compensation is to be recovered, a Judge of the Small Cause Court is to hold the inquiry and decide what the increased value to the neighbouring property is. It seems to me if my Honourable Friends who live in Madras are satisfied with this as it is I should not quarrel. But I feel very great hesitation in giving my vote to a section which seems to vest in the commissioner powers of demolition of buildings and the power to call for rateable contribution—we do not know to what extent—from the neighbouring owners of property in order to recoup the corporation for the expenses they might be put to by the compensation. If that is so, we must know the circumstances under which such contributions can be called for. I take it, so far as I can see, there is no principle and if we are to go by the town planning principles, the valuation has to be to a certain extent. I do not know the principle on which this section is based. I cannot see from anything which has transpired in the Select Committee as to how this provision is proposed to be worked and how that has been drafted. All that I can see is a reference to section 38 of the Housing of the Working Classes Act, which contains certain safeguards and also contains provisions to compensate the person for the site, if he so chooses and throw the site on the corporation, to compel the corporation to take the site also. I should like to have some light thrown on the subject, as it seems to me a one-sided arrangement as it stands."

The Hon'ble Mr. J. C. MOLONY:—"I am opposed to this amendment. I am sorry I have been totally unable to follow the Honourable Member in a great deal of what he said. He seems to have gone very far from the exact wording of the amendment that we are dealing with. We are dealing with insanitary and dangerous buildings—if these are taken down and the owners of neighbouring property are benefited such owners should pay. To say that they should pay only one-half means that the general tax-payer should pay the other half. The corporation is not a body that has money of its own. It is a body which lives on what it gets from the general tax-payer. So, you make the general tax-payer pay for the benefit of a particular property owner. If a house is in a dangerous condition, we take it down. The site is available, there is nothing to prevent the owner from building on the same site. If you want to take the site also, you must pay for it."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur V. K. RAMANUJA ACHARIYAR:—"The Hon'ble Mr. Ramachandra Rao has confused himself and confused us by a reference to the Town Planning Act. This section refers to insanitary buildings and dangerous buildings. In such cases, the commissioner should have the power to act at once and when the buildings are destroyed, it is unnecessary that the site of the buildings should be acquired by the municipality. It would be at the disposal of the owner and he may build again, and there is reference to re-construction in clause (4) and therefore compensation is to be paid only for the building so far as it is valued at the time of demolition. As regards obtaining the contribution, it is only when there is an increased value for the neighbouring houses that contribution is obtained. There is no reason why people who are benefited should not contribute. We have been fighting for financial contribution and there is no reason why the corporation should make a present of one-half the costs. The Hon'ble Mr. Ramachandra Rao said that gentlemen in Madras may do as they like. But in the mufassal it would work hardship. I, as chairman of a municipality in the mufassal for six years, would have welcomed a provision like this in the Municipal Act. We have no power of demolishing a building and recovering the costs. If this power had existed, I would have been very glad. When the Act is amended, some provision like this, I hope, will be introduced. The cost of demolition and the compensation to be paid stand in the way of many insanitary buildings being destroyed. If we can obtain compensation from people who have benefited, it will strengthen the Chairman's hands in the improvement of insanitary buildings."

The Hon'ble Dr. T. M. NAYAR:—"I do not accept the amendment of the Hon'ble Mr. Ramachandra Rao, my Lord. I think I have an amendment to suggest, I have not given notice of it but I will indicate the nature of it and Government can consider whether it is worth accepting. The Hon'ble Mr. Ramachandra Rao has dealt with two cases separately, the cases of the owner of the insanitary building which is demolished and secondly the case of the neighbours who have benefited by the demolition. It is just as well to take the two cases and consider them separately. So far as demolition of an insanitary building is concerned, this Act here provides for a process which has been going on for some considerable time in Madras. The corporation has from time to time acquired insanitary buildings, demolished them and opened up congested areas and improved the localities. There has been no difficulty whatever in dealing

(Dr. Nayar; Mr. M. Ramachandra Rao;
Mr. Ranga Achariyar; the President.)

separately with buildings and sites except in the case of hutting grounds; in the generality of other cases, buildings and the sites belong to the same owner and they are acquired together and when the building is demolished, the site becomes the site of the corporation for them to deal with as they think fit. In the majority of cases, they are required to be left as open space. The only class of cases where buildings are owned by one and the land by others, is the case of the hutting grounds. Perhaps the practice in the mufassal is different and hence all the confusion and the difficulty that my Honourable Friend felt. Here there is no difficulty at all. I should consider that the corporation should, in all cases, keep the land after demolition because in the majority of cases, they will be required to keep them as open spaces. If you erect another building, you will not relieve the congestion even if it is more sanitary and there will not be sufficient improvement to the locality concerned. I do not anticipate any difficulty.

"Then the other section, which is newly come into use, is that the owners of property in the immediate neighbourhood who have been benefited by this demolition, should contribute in some proportion towards the improvement that has been effected. That, as a general proposition, nobody will dispute. The difficulty arises when we proceed to lay down the methods of deciding as to what contribution they should pay and collecting it from them. I myself believe that it will be unfair to ask them to pay for the cost of the acquisition and the demolition. What we have to consider is, to what extent they have benefited? We must see that if they benefited to a certain extent, then we may levy contribution from them proportional to the benefit which they have received. That would be a very satisfactory way. In these congested localities, we may sometimes have to pay fairly high prices for our acquisitions. Suppose we pay Rs. 5,000 in a congested locality and acquire an insanitary building and grounds and demolish them, the surrounding small houses in that locality—we do not expect any rich people to live in that locality—may have received a benefit to the extent of a couple of thousands. On that basis, to ask them to contribute Rs. 5,000 would be unfair. Therefore, the only amendment I would suggest is that in settling the principle of betterment, we should collect from the surrounding owners who have benefited, one-half of what they benefited. That would be a very equitable proposition. Then arises the question, how are you to decide as to what their benefit is? For that purpose, we cannot do better than follow the English Act. The English Act says, unless the parties come to an amicable understanding within a certain time, the question shall be settled by one arbitrator to be appointed by the local Government and in this case, it will be the Small Cause Court. Either the parties must amicably settle it, the corporation and the owners who are benefited must amicably settle it or the question must be settled by the arbitrator appointed by the local Government who is the Chief Judge of the Small Cause Court. I would not levy from them more than one-half. To levy the whole of it is unfair. That is my solution, my Lord."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO:—"That is my amendment."

The Hon'ble Dr. T. M. NAYAR:—"You have this."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO:—"That is another point."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"I also strongly support the amendment that what we levy from the neighbours should not exceed one-half of the improvement; following the English Act, one-half of the amount of that increase."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"I suggest that Honourable Gentlemen need not take the analogy of the English Town Planning Act; we are dealing with insanitary buildings."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"But the principle of what we should levy from the neighbours is the same, whether it is the town planning or any other scheme. I do not think we can impose against their will more than one-half. I support the amendment to that extent."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO:—"The amendment standing in my name No. 99 is to add the words 'to the extent of one-half' between the word 'contribute' and the word 'towards'. It means that the levy from the neighbours would be limited to one-half."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"The Honourable Gentleman's intention is quite plain."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO:—"One-half the increased value. What I seek is that the contribution should be limited to one-half the increased value. My Honourable Friend Doctor Nayar, so far as I have been able to follow him is agreeable to that amendment. As regards the rest of the debate, my Honourable Friend Doctor Nayar says that the site on which the demolished building stood should be kept vacant. My Honourable Friend Mr. Ramanuja Achariyar says that it may be built upon afterwards. I would add 'to the extent of one-half the increased value.' All that I want is that this compensation should be limited to one-half the increased value."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"Before I put it may I say one word? It is really to emphasise to the Council the warning given to one or two Honourable Members that we should not apply to this clause the analogy of the Town Planning Act. In town planning, you may destroy perfectly sound and wholesome buildings for the purpose of running a new street or laying out a plan of your town or a section of a town. It is quite natural in that case that there should be a strict limitation on the compensation to be leviable or contributable by owners. In this clause, we are dealing with insanitary buildings, the congestion of slums. I would ask

(Mr. Ranga Achariyar ; Mr. Rama Ayyangar ;
Mr. Narasimha Ayyar ; Mr. M. Ramachandra Rao ;
the President.) [13TH FEBRUARY 1919.]

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR :—"I repudiate the suggestion on behalf of the Corporation. We recognize him in many ways."

The Hon'ble Mr. K. RAMA AYYANGAR :—"The only question is in recognizing him in this Act, we recognize him only for the purpose of punishing him. What expenditure is sanctioned by the Government in those cases has been declared to be irrelevant by the President. I do not think it is in the interests of the hakims or the vaidyans to provide for this prosecution."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR :—"The Council may remember the discussion about the Medical Registration Act and what attitude the public in general took about the disabilities imposed on the practitioners of indigenous systems. With reference to this, I would point out that we are here affecting the indigenous practitioners in two ways. There is a provision for imposing professional tax on hakims and making them pay sums of money. Again in clause 330, the duty is imposed upon them, the violation of which entails penalty. We have done two things, we recognize them for the purpose of the professional tax and we recognize them for the purpose of saying that they are medical practitioners to help the Corporation in certain ways and if they do not, we will punish them. We say that they will be fined Rs. 50. In one way it has a very good effect, that we make our attitude clear about indigenous systems of medicine. That is the only system on which millions of our people depend. There is a Tamil proverb which gives it very beautifully: 'ஆகியவர்களுக்கு அகலுதல் கடுமையானது'."

"The man is brought in for all disadvantages. That is the case with regard to the hakims and vaidyans. Other medical officers come in for good emoluments and for the issue of certificates, but hakims and vaidyans come in for the profession tax and are responsible for notifying the existence of diseases. There is a penalty. We are clearly showing our attitude to the indigenous practitioners."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO :—"I had absolutely no intention of reviving under this amendment our old controversy about the Ayurvedic and Unani systems of medicine. I may say during the last influenza epidemic at Ellore, on account of the shortage of qualified medical practitioners, we had to fall back upon ayurvedic medical men. I tried my best to find out who the existing hakims and vaidyans were and I sent out all my men to find them out and I made a regular gathering of them to see what they are like and what their knowledge of this extremely infectious disease was. I do not know whether the Hon'ble Mr. Molony would call influenza an infectious or an epidemic disease. I had very great difficulty in making out a list of them. We wanted to see whether we can give them any general directions in fighting this epidemic in the place. We found it extremely difficult. Every one gathered gave us all sorts of explanations about the disease which were unacceptable with the result that they would not recognize influenza as an epidemic disease or as an extremely contagious disease. Their method of treatment was examined; their explanations were unacceptable. To lay the duty of reporting infectious diseases on men whom I had met there appeared to me to be somewhat a difficult task. In view of my experience, I found it rather difficult to consent to this thing; I mean no disrespect to any gentlemen practising this system. There are qualified hakims and qualified vaidyans who are trusted by the people but there are many others who may come under the statutory definition of hakims and vaidyans. Therefore, to penalize them and prosecute them for not reporting the disease appears to me to be rather hard. I recognize the existence of such a provision in the old Act, but in view of my own experience, I think it is wrong to retain it now."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT :—"There is a great deal to be said in favour of what the Honourable Member has said. But there is such a provision in the existing Act and it has not operated as a hardship."

The amendment was put and lost.

Clause 330 was allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Clauses 331 and 332.

Clauses 331 and 332 were allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Clause 333.

The Hon'ble Mr. K. RAMA AYYANGAR :—"I move amendment No. 102 :—

102. In sub-clause (c) of clause 333 (1) insert as (proviso 1) after the words 'removed to the said hospital or place' the following :—

'provided that he shall not so remove if the person suffering or any one in charge of him agrees to segregate the person in the manner required by or subject to the conditions imposed by the Commissioner or any by-law of the municipality.'

"In section 333 there are three clauses. (1) 'If in the case of any person in a hospital, it appears to the officer in charge of it that such person is suffering from a dangerous disease, or if in the case of any other person, it appears to the health officer or assistant health officer that such person is suffering from a dangerous disease, etc.' The word used is 'dangerous'. I could not very well follow it. The dangerous disease may not be infectious disease. The section continues: 'and is without proper lodging or accommodation, etc.' It was 'or' in the previous case and not 'and'. In each of these cases, it is suggested that action should be taken. The third clause says: 'is without medical supervision directed to prevent the spread of the disease.'

13TH FEBRUARY 1919.]

(Mr. Rama Ayyangar ; Mr. Molony ;
Mr. Krishna Rao.)

It may be that supervision by a non-registered medical practitioner may be brought under clause (c). It may be declared that any medical practitioner other than a registered medical practitioner will not be able to have the medical supervision directed to prevent the spread of the disease. In such a case what is suggested is: 'if such officer in charge, health officer or assistant health officer as the case may be, considers that such person should be removed to a hospital or other place at which patients suffering from such disease are received for medical treatment, this is important—he may remove such person or cause him to be removed to the said hospital or place.' That is, if any person in Madras suffers, in the opinion of the health officer or the assistant health officer or the officer in charge, from any one of those conditions he is unprotected by any one of those conditions, he can order the removal of that person to one of those places and that is again limited to the hospital or to the place where people are taken for medical treatment for such disease. In the case of plague camps, there may be such a question arising though it has been since held that it is unnecessary so to remove. In other cases, it may be that such a removal may be necessary. Whatever may be the status of the individual, power is given to remove that person either to the hospital or to the place where medical treatment is given. I believe the municipality provides camps. The question is whether power should be given to the Corporation to remove everybody bodily to that camp. It has often been said that the removal to a plague shed has been more the cause of the death of the man than anything else. In fact, I know in the case of most influential persons, people that can command anybody and will be able to use influence, this may not work hardship. Either the disease would not be known or the disease might not be capable of being found out by these officers but in the case of the poor people or people of the middle classes, it may be that one wants to remove him to a place which is defined there. The question is if any condition is imposed upon that person, whether he would take care that the patient is properly kept segregated. Will there be any necessity to remove him? I do not think that any provision to remove him to a particular place should be made universal. All that the law should make provision for is to see that the interests of the public are served and unnecessary irritation should be avoided. We have known that much of what was done at the beginning of plague regulations was found later on to be unnecessary. People who had the power, exercised it in excess of what was required and it created much commotion. I thought it was necessary to restrict this matter where a sufficient safeguard will be undertaken by the persons in charge of such patients to see that they are properly segregated. You should not have a provision in such a vague form which will apply to all people, but will be applied in different ways to different people."

The Hon'ble Mr. J. C. MOLONY :—"I oppose this amendment. The Honourable Member seems to have entirely forgotten two things in dealing with these sections. The first is that these restrictions are imposed both in the interests of the person who is removed and in the interests of his neighbours. He seems to imagine that for some curious reason, the municipality, that is to say, the health department will deport people to camps and hospitals and other places simply for the pleasure of doing so. I will ask him to consider what that means. Some body said that if you deport poor people, it means that there are a lot of discontented poor people in the hospital and it means expenditure of municipal money. If we can by any possible means leave people in their houses we leave them. If there is any reasonable means of segregating a man in his own house without danger to his neighbours, we are only too glad. It saves a lot of worry, it saves a sense of responsibility, it saves the necessity of taking care of him in the hospital and it saves the cost of feeding. In a great many cases, however, such segregation is absolutely impossible. The amendment which the Honourable Member proposes as a kind of safeguard is nothing. A person will agree to do anything, but the question is: can he do it or will he do it? A person may say he will segregate his patient, but you will find after a day or two he has not done so. We should be taking away a power from the municipality which they have no means of misusing and which is only for the protection of the general public."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. KRISHNA RAO :—"Your Excellency, I regret that I have not been able to follow the opposition to the amendment. All the reasons that have been urged tend to support the motion made rather than tend to defeat the motion. It is pointed out that the municipality is not going to be very unreasonable, and that it is only in cases where it is dangerous to segregate a person in his own house, this procedure will be adopted. May I remind the Hon'ble Mr. Molony that this provision evidently suggests that we shall not so remove him if he agrees to act in the manner required, or subject himself to the conditions imposed by the Commissioner or by any by-law of the municipality. It gives complete discretion to the Commissioner to prescribe conditions and suggest in what manner he should be segregated. I think the Hon'ble Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar will correct me if I am wrong. The plague regulations recently introduced have effected a change even in regard to most dangerous diseases. I believe it has been provided that wherever possible, segregation should be in one's own house. They have relaxed the rigidity of the rules. While such is the case, I fail to understand why this proviso should not be inserted in this clause which does not ipso facto give the right in the person to be segregated, but simply says that he should do so in the manner required and subject to the conditions prescribed by the Commissioner. When there are these safeguards, I cannot see what reasonable objection there can be to the amendment being accepted."

The amendment was put and lost.

Clause 333 was allowed to stand part of the Bill.

(The President; Mr. Ranga Achariyar; the Advocate-General; Mr. M. Ramachandra Rao; Mr. Krishna Rao.) [13TH FEBRUARY 1919.]

you to pause before you apply to such conditions, conditions that are contemplated under the Town Planning Act. At the moment, I can only recollect one such. If you limit the contribution leviable from an owner of an insanitary dwelling house, it will be directly to his interests to have the conditions of these dwellings deteriorate until it pays him to have a demolition taken up by the corporation and compensation paid to him. I would therefore deprecate it. I quite understand the Honourable Member's motive. I do not think we have lost anything by this discussion. It is a very important and responsible duty which is laid upon the corporation. I do not regret any attention paid to it; we have had an interesting discussion. I do think the Council would be wise in not inserting the provision on the analogy of the English Town Planning Act. This is after all purely experimental and it is always possible to amend provisions if they operate harshly. There is no reason to presume that they will operate harshly at present. I would therefore put the amendment to the Council."

The amendment was put and lost.

Clause 273 was allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Clauses 274 to 298.

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"There is the omission to define a lodging house. I only wish to point out that in section 279."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"There is no amendment on paper."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"I know it. I only wanted to say that we have not defined the lodging house."

The Hon'ble the ADVOCATE-GENERAL:—"No definition of a lodging-house necessary."

Clauses 274 to 298 were allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Clause 299.

The Hon'ble the ADVOCATE-GENERAL:—"I beg to move amendment No. 100-A:—"

'100A. Omit all the words occurring after the words 'by the commissioner'.

"The Hon'ble Mr. Ramachandra Rao has given notice that the words 'or where milk is stored' should be added. It is not necessary to specify certain conditions and not all conditions. That is the main reason. The condition of the cows outside the city is going to be a condition which I insist upon. I therefore move that all words after the word 'commissioner' in the second line of sub-clause 2 be omitted."

The amendment was put and agreed to.

The following amendment standing in the name of the Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. Ramachandra Rao Pantulu was not moved:—

"100. Add the following at the end of clause 299:—"or where the milk is stored."

Clause 299 as amended was allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Clauses 300 to 329.

Clauses 300 to 329 were allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Clause 330.

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO:—"My Lord, I propose that this explanation as to the duty or obligation of medical practitioners to report dangerous and infectious diseases which is proposed to be extended to hakims and vaidyans under this explanation be omitted. My amendment is:

'101. Omit the explanation.'

"It has been stated in this Council several times that hakims and vaidyans are very ignorant men. Perhaps they are or they are not. We need not at all discuss that question just at present, but the point is that this section lays on medical practitioners the duty of reporting infectious diseases and I submit that in my judgment it is not desirable to lay this injunction upon those persons. Certainly it is not at all possible for them to know what are infectious diseases, what are epidemic diseases and what are endemic diseases. Persons better informed than the ordinary hakims and vaidyans are not quite clear as to what the endemic diseases and the epidemic diseases are. If you are going to lay this obligation on them, I think it must be preceded by a process of education of all the hakims and vaidyans of what is an endemic disease, what is an epidemic disease and what is an infectious disease. I do not wish to lay this obligation on them because, I am certain that if we do that, we will be exposing them to unnecessary prosecutions in a matter for which they are ill-equipped. While we are loathe to recognize their usefulness I do not think it is right to subject them to penalties such as those laid down in this section. On these grounds, I propose this amendment."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. KRISHNA RAO:—"I second this amendment. It is not desirable that these obligations should be laid upon them so long as nothing has been done to improve their position and to encourage them. It is difficult to say who is responsible and to what extent. I think Your Excellency's Government are aware of the feeling in the country so far as hakims and vaidyans are concerned. There is a feeling which I find it difficult to suppress. What could be done and should be done on behalf of the Government to encourage them has not been done; and before anything is done to improve their lot and encourage their position it is not desirable that we should lay this obligation upon them. In addition to this objection, I will point out that there is no registration law. It will be difficult to prepare elaborate lists as to the persons who come under this description. Therefore I strongly second this amendment and I hope the Government would accept it."

The Hon'ble Mr. K. CHIDAMBARANATHA MUDALIYAR:—"I am surprised at this provision in the Bill. I strongly support the amendment proposed by the Hon'ble Mr. Ramachandra Rao in the interests not only of the hakims and the vaidyans but also in the interests of the people at large and of the Municipal Corporation also."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"I am sorry, my Lord, I cannot share the feelings expressed by my Honourable Friends. It seems to me that the suggestion is more in anger at the attitude taken by the Government."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO:—"I must explain it is not at all due to that feeling."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"It appears to me that it cannot be in the interests of the hakims and the vaidyans. Whatever attitude the Government may take, I may assure my Honourable Friends here that the Corporation has not neglected the hakims and the vaidyans. We are supporting institutions where hakims and vaidyans are trained, and we rather want to give them a status by this Act than take away that status. On the other hand, we are giving a status, a statutory position. I ask my Honourable Friends to consider that aspect of it; you cannot have the benefit without the responsibility, you cannot have the benefit without the burden. Let them share the responsibility with other medical practitioners of reporting to the Corporation dangerous and infectious diseases. Most of these patients are in the hands of hakims and vaidyans. Unless you bring them under control, there is no use asking the Government or asking the local body to support them. I would earnestly ask my Honourable Friends to withdraw that."

The Hon'ble Mr. K. RAMA AYYANGAR:—"Is any expenditure towards institutions sanctioned by the Government?"

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"That does not arise."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur V. K. RAMANUJA ACHARIYAR:—"I also oppose the amendment. Government may regard the hakims and vaidyans as quacks; but we want their services to be fully utilized in reporting the outbreak of infectious disease. They know what is plague, what is cholera, etc. I therefore oppose this. They may not know what is an infectious disease, what is an epidemic disease or what is an endemic disease."

The Hon'ble Yaqub Hasan Sahib Bahadur:—"This clause says: 'If any medical practitioner becomes cognizant of the existence of any dangerous disease in any private or public dwelling in the city he shall inform the Commissioner, the Health Officer, the medical registrar of the district, or the sanitary inspector of the division with the least practicable delay.' If hakims and vaidyans are also considered medical practitioners and are asked to inform the Commissioner, you must know who these hakims and vaidyans are. I do not know about vaidyans, but so far as hakims are concerned, any scholar of Arabic is considered a hakim, because medicine forms part of the study in Arabic. Every Moulvi or scholar in Arabic is considered to be a hakim. Some are practising medicine and others are not. But even those who are not practising may practise some time. How will you bring the charge home if hakims and vaidyans fail to inform the Commissioner of the existence of this disease? How can you catch hold of him and how can you say he is a hakim or he is not a hakim? He will say he is not a hakim. How are you going to punish him for failing to do his duty? It is unworkable. The Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar says that we are going to give him a status by this Bill. I do not know what status there is in it. If you, for example about plague or cholera, accept a certificate of a medical practitioner certifying that a person has not died of cholera or plague, I can understand it. I ask you, is the Corporation prepared to accept the certificate of a hakim that a person has not died of plague? If you are not going to accept their certificate, why should you compel them to notify in these instances? I think it would be very unworkable if it remains as it is for the simple reason that we have no lists of hakims. We will have to bring in another provision and say that no person should practise as hakim or vaidyan unless his name has been registered or unless a licence has been given to him. Then alone we will know who the hakims are and we can then enforce this provision. As it is, we can as well do away with this provision."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"It is in the existing Act and I think we may continue it."

The Hon'ble Mr. K. RAMA AYYANGAR:—"Your Excellency, I have not been able to understand the argument of the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar. He wants to put it in and says that it is recognizing his status. As far as I can see it is recognition only for prosecutions. He says he wants to benefit them. The only effect will be to prosecute him when he does not do his duty. That is the only form in which you recognize him. You do not recognize him in any other way."

The Hon'ble Mr. K. RAMA AYYANGAR:—"I do not propose to move amendment No. 103." With the permission of His Excellency the President, the following amendment was with-

I do not know what the Honourable Gentleman who takes interest would suggest."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. KRISHNA RAO:—"We will finish at about 1 p.m. to-morrow."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"If that is so, we will warn the contractor that lunch would not be required. If that is to the convenience of the Council, we will resume discussion at 11 o'clock to-morrow."

53. (1) Subject to the provisions of section 54 a councillor shall cease to be a councillor if he—

- (a) is sentenced by a Court as described in section 52, sub-section (1), clause (a);
- (b) becomes of unsound mind, a deaf-mute, or a leper;
- (c) applies to be adjudicated or is adjudicated a bankrupt or insolvent,
- (d) subject to the proviso to section 52, sub-section (1), acquires any interest in any contract made with or work being done or to be done for the corporation except as a shareholder (other than a director) in an incorporated company;
- (e) is employed as paid legal practitioner on behalf of the corporation;
- (f) accepts employment as legal practitioner against the corporation;
- (g) is appointed to any office or post referred to in section 52, sub-section, (1), clause (b), sub-clause (iv);
- (h) is declared to be disqualified by a judicial order passed under section 71, and still in force;
- (i) ceases to reside in the city; or
- (j) fails for three consecutive months to attend the meetings of the Council.

“Under the circumstances mentioned above, a person ceases to be a commissioner. This fact will come to the notice of the president and the president will declare his seat vacant. But if it is not brought to his notice and the councillor acts as councillor and takes advantage of the ignorance of the President in this matter, then alone this clause comes into operation. But it is extremely unlikely that a person who has ceased to be a councillor according to section 53, will come in and act as a councillor except under a misapprehension. Perhaps he may think that he is not disqualified. If a person absents himself for three consecutive months, he ceases to be a commissioner under sub-clause (i) (j) of clause 53. But, if the person comes there to attend a meeting in the fourth month, you will prosecute him for doing a highly illegal thing by saying that ‘you have ceased to be a commissioner and yet you come to the fourth meeting to attend it with a sinister motive’. It will be absurd to prosecute him simply on that account. Again, if he is declared by a judicial order to be disqualified to be a commissioner, and then if he goes and attends the meeting—nobody who has any self-respect will go and attend the meeting, but if he goes there—there is the president to bring this clause 53 into operation and prevent him from acting as a councillor. I think it is absurd to keep this clause as it is, as it does not help in any way. So much has been said about contractors and councillors that there will be councillors behind the contractors who will go into the corporation to try and help the persons in whom they are interested. To prevent them from doing so, the clause without these words will be quite enough. We cannot imagine that a councillor, who is behind a contractor, when he ceases to be a councillor, will go to a meeting and will be able to exert his influence at that particular meeting and use it for the benefit of the contractor. I cannot imagine what necessity there is for the retention of these words. I do not see why the Honourable the Advocate-General is anxious to withdraw his motion. I am for these words being removed from this clause.”

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR :—“I think we must carefully consider the words proposed to be omitted—‘Or acts as councillor when disqualified under section 53’. This relates to disqualification arising not only from interest in contracts but from various other causes. Merely acting as a councillor, I do not suppose that any Honourable Member wants to make a crime, I do not think that we are anxious to make honest mistakes crimes. While we must provide that wilful acting is a crime, we must take care that honest mistakes are not made a crime. I think the object that all of us have in view will be attained if Your Excellency will kindly attend for a second and consider another amendment whereby we will alter the language thus—‘Or wilfully or knowingly acts as a councillor when disqualified under section 53’. (At this stage His Excellency the Governor was holding a consultation with the Honourable the Advocate-General.) Section 53 provides for a person becoming of unsound mind and he will not be likely to know that he has become of unsound mind. (At this stage there was a pause in the remarks of the Honourable Member.)”

His Excellency the PRESIDENT :—“Will the Honourable Gentleman continue his remarks?”

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR :—“I want to address my remarks to the chair.”

His Excellency the PRESIDENT :—“Pray continue. I am listening to the Honourable Member.”

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR :—“I am now proposing an amendment. I want the attention of the chair.”

His Excellency the PRESIDENT :—“By all means.”

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR :—“I propose, Your Excellency, that it will not do to omit these words altogether. I wish to suggest that it must be wilful action on the part of a councillor that must be made a crime. I, therefore, introduce the word ‘wilfully’ before the word ‘acts’. If a person wilfully acts as a councillor when disqualified under section 53 he will be punished; it is the wilful acting in contravention of the provisions of the Act that should be made a crime. I think it is necessary to have this amendment as it will meet all the requirements of the case.”

14TH FEBRUARY 1919.] (Mr. M. Ramachandra Rao; Mr. Ranga Achariyar; Sir Gordon Fraser; Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar; the Advocate-General.)

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO :—“I think there is a good deal to be said in favour of the retention of this clause. Every case of disqualification will be disputed by the councillor concerned or any other councillor. I take it that there are a number of cases of the disqualification to which the section will apply. Let us take the worst case of a member of the Madras Corporation becoming of an unsound mind—I hope that there are none there at present and there will be none there hereafter. But assuming that one of the sitting councillors becomes of an unsound mind, that unsoundness of the mind has to be established, because it may be contested by the person himself or a reference has to be made to the Small Cause Court and the question of unsoundness of mind will have to be established. It is only then that the disqualification will be established; till then it seems to be impossible to decide that question. Simply because some members of the Madras Corporation think that one of their colleagues is of unsound mind, how is it possible to say that the man is disqualified. Then take the case of a person who ceases to reside in the city. That is a disqualification and that has to be established. That is a question of fact. It may be that some members of the Corporation think that by continual residence outside the city, the disqualification has been established and that becomes a question of fact which has to be decided by a judicial decision. Under the scheme of this Act any person who is aggrieved and who says that the disqualification has not been established has got a right to obtain the decision from the Small Cause Court. My Lord, again, there is a familiar case of a person failing to attend three meetings. He comes to the fourth meeting without knowing that a disqualification is attached to him. Therefore, it seems to me that this provision that a person should not be punished until the disqualification is established should be retained and that the disqualification should be established by a judicial decision as provided in the Act and that is a very sound one. There are many cases in which unintentional transgressions of similar provisions have resulted in penalties, and there are always provisions for the establishment of the question of disqualification if there is a penalty attached to it. Therefore, My Lord, it seems to me to be wrong to give up this amendment, to leave the words as they are and to say that a person can be punished for the disqualification before the disqualification is established. I do not object to the section being suitably amended if a councillor votes in contravention of section 54 or acts as a councillor when the disqualification is established on a reference to the court. Then there should be no difficulty in providing a penalty. It is purely a question of fact as to whether a disqualification is established; I think therefore it is better to leave out the words as suggested in the amendment and to say that this penalty can only be incurred where the disqualification has been established as provided under this section.”

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR :—“Suppose he is under the honest belief that he is not disqualified until a reference is made to the court and the court declares that he is disqualified, do you make it a crime?”

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO :—“Until he is disqualified by the court it seems to be wrong to subject him to the penalty. That is the point. My Honourable Friends are more or less looking at sub-clauses (c) and (d) relating to contracts.”

The Hon'ble Sir GORDON FRASER :—“May I explain that they are the only clauses we are referring to. We would suggest that section 358 should refer to clauses 52 (1) (b) (iii) and 53 (1) (d) which relate to interest in a subsisting contract, etc. If this were done it would exclude all points referred to by the Hon'ble Mr. Ramachandra Rao and would only refer to the two clauses relating to subsisting contracts.”

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR :—“What about the legal practitioner?”

The Hon'ble Sir GORDON FRASER :—“That is known to everybody; but that point does not arise here. The trouble only arises in connexion with this particular clause relating to people interested in contracts. If the sub-clauses I have already referred to in clauses 52 and 53 are provided for in clause 358 that will answer my purpose.”

The Hon'ble the ADVOCATE-GENERAL :—“Your Excellency, I am sorry that there is some misconception. I do not mean that clause 358 is an unwholesome provision; and it ought to be maintained in all its figure. All that I suggest is whether so long as sub-clause (3) of clause 54 remains—‘pending such decision such person shall be deemed to be qualified’ the scope of clause 358 is not restricted to cases where that decision has been arrived at and therefore it is not of sufficient value to retain it. It will only apply to cases where after the decision is arrived at a person acts as a councillor. I think that it should apply to cases even before a decision of the Small Cause Court is arrived at. It is more a criticism upon sub-clause (3) of clause 54 than a plea for the omission of these words in clause 358. But as the Select Committee recommended it, I suggested this amendment. But as the feeling of the Honourable Members is that it is necessary to retain these words I may point out to Your Excellency in Council that this is a wholesome rule which is contained also in section 46 of the Local Government Act of 1877. It says that if any person acts as a councillor when disqualified or votes when prohibited by this section, he shall be liable to a fine not exceeding £50. I do not agree with the Hon'ble Mr. Ramachandra Rao nor with the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar in thinking that there will be any difficulty in working this section. If the disqualification is real there ought to be a penalty provided for it. I thought that as the clauses stand there was not sufficient scope for clause 358, but as the general feeling is for the retention of these words I adhere to the withdrawal of the amendment.”

(Mr. Krishna Rao ; the Advocate-General ; Sir Gordon Fraser.)

[14TH FEBRUARY 1919.]

The Council re-assembled at 11 a.m., when the further consideration of the Madras City Municipal Bill, 1918, was resumed.

Clause 358.

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. KRISHNA RAO :—"I have an amendment,* Your Excellency, for the omission of this clause ; but there is another amendment to the same clause in the name of the Hon'ble the Advocate-General in a modified form. I think, I would rather allow that amendment to be moved first."

The Hon'ble the ADVOCATE-GENERAL :—"Your Excellency, I beg to move that the following words be omitted in clause 358 : 'Or acts as councillor when disqualified under section 53.' The reason for this amendment may be briefly stated. Clause 54 of the Bill provides : '(1) whenever it is alleged that any person who has been elected or appointed as councillor is disqualified under section 52 or section 53 and such person does not admit the allegation or whenever any councillor is himself in doubt whether or not he has become disqualified for office, such councillor or any other councillor may, and the Commissioner, at the request of the Council, shall, apply to the Chief Judge of the Small Cause Court.' (2) The said Chief Judge after making such inquiry as he deems necessary, shall determine whether or not such person is disqualified under section 52 or section 53 and his decision shall be final.' Then follows this important sub-clause '(3) pending such decision such person shall be deemed to be qualified.' This was a novel provision which was in the Bill as introduced and the Select Committee decided to retain it. It means that the ordinary jurisdiction will be ousted and the only way in which the question of disqualification can be decided would be by an application by the councillor concerned or any other councillor or the Commissioner to the Chief Judge of the Small Cause Court ; and pending such reference to and decision by the Small Cause Court, the person said to be disqualified shall be deemed to be qualified. It would be inconsistent under section 53 till the decision of the Small Cause Court is arrived at. It will not be advisable to allow two sets of decisions to remain. Even if this clause is retained it is of no use, because he must be deemed to be qualified till the decision of the Small Cause Court is ascertained. There is no case of a person disqualified acting as a councillor, except in case, where a councillor persists in his acting as such after the decision of the Small Cause Court is pronounced. It can only refer to a small number of cases where after a decision of the Small Cause Court Judge a man persists in taking part as a councillor. It seems unnecessary to provide for it. There is sufficient protection against a disqualified councillor acting as a councillor. It seems, therefore, to be wholly undesirable and unnecessary that he should be punished with further fine. The other part of the section may remain as it is and I beg to move that the words which I read out may be omitted."

The Hon'ble Mr. H. G. Stokes seconded the amendment.

The Hon'ble Sir GORDON FRASER :—"What penalty is there for a councillor who sits on the Corporation, after he acquires an interest in any contract or work done with the Corporation?"

The Hon'ble the ADVOCATE-GENERAL :—"There is no penalty."

The Hon'ble Sir GORDON FRASER :—"In that case, your Excellency, I strongly oppose the amendment for the omission of the words 'or acts as councillor when disqualified under section 53.' I think it is most illogical that this portion of clause 358 as referring to clause 53 should be withdrawn. We had a great argument on section 53 and the principle that is there strongly advocated found favour with this Council ; and I think every one in the Council acknowledges the correctness of the principle. Under clause 53, there is no doubt that every self-respecting merchant, European and Indian, will immediately withdraw from the Corporation, immediately he becomes interested in any contract or work done with the Corporation ; and it is equally certain that the particular class of contractors aimed at by this Bill will not withdraw. If he is gaining any advantage from any influence that he can use on the Corporation, he is going to stay on the Corporation as long as he possibly can, and there are many ways in which he can get round this clause. I am very sorry now that I did not move my amendment, as I think that a declaration of interest would have acted as a particular safeguard. Now these unscrupulous contractors can very easily arrange for their contracts to be put through in the names of their subordinates. So it really comes to this : that a person, a merchant trader or industrialist with any self-respect resigns, while the other class of contractor at whom section 53 particularly aims does not resign. As soon as it is found out that he has an interest in a contract, under clause 53 all that can be done is to ask him to resign. There is no penalty attached to it. I say that the penalty should be a very severe one indeed. I think that it would have been advisable if my amendment had been discussed and accepted, for a severe penalty would have been attached to it. Presuming that clause 53 stands good and the amendment is rejected, if a councillor is elected holding an undisclosed contract, he does not come within the penalty clause of 358. Clause 53 says 'acquires any interest in any contract made with or work being done, etc.' That is acquiring an interest after a person becomes a councillor. But if he is elected while holding a contract this clause does not seem to apply. My argument is that clause 358 removes the only safeguard which the Corporation has against the particular contractor aimed at by clauses 53 and 54. Therefore I oppose the amendment."

* "104. Omit the clause."

14TH FEBRUARY 1919.]

(Mr. Thonger ; Dr. Nayar ; Mr. Suryanarayana Rao ; the Advocate-General ; Mr. Yaqub Hasan.)

The Hon'ble Mr. J. H. THONGER :—"Your Excellency, when I made my motion a few days ago it was said that we should establish a principle and this was one of the safeguards named. The general opinion of this Council was that the principle in question must be stated and the Hon'ble the Advocate-General gave it as his opinion that a business man was always so keen that he could not resist temptation of doing business with the Corporation, and the safeguards under the Act were not sufficient to keep him under control. I do not, therefore, understand the principle of the Government now endeavouring to reduce these safeguards. The Council having, to all intents and purposes, debarred the leading business men in Madras from taking office as councillors now seeks to reduce the safeguards against those who may come in. That is not a sound position. The attitude of business men in this connexion has not been properly understood. We welcome any safeguard that is made ; we would like to make it as strong and as stringent as we can. We are interested in the integrity of the Corporation, and welcome any safeguard that may be introduced and not want any modification of existing safeguards. A man may act as a Councillor though he himself may know that he is in reality disqualified, but if he deliberately disregards that fact, he ought to be punished with a fine, especially when the Small Cause Court has decided that he has abused his privilege. If the intention of the Government is to withdraw this amendment I would suggest the addition of clause 52 as a penal clause, so that if a man puts himself forward for election and does not disclose his contract he incurs a penalty. Business men welcome all safeguards. But if you withdraw this clause you are doing so not for the benefit of respectable business men, but for unscrupulous men."

The Hon'ble Dr. T. M. NAYAR :—"I entirely agree with the remarks of the Hon'ble Sir Gordon Fraser and the Hon'ble Mr. Thonger. We decided the other day not to permit any one who had an interest in a Corporation contract to become a councillor. But by withdrawing this clause here, you permit a man to become a councillor and as long as he abstains from voting on the contract in which he is interested he does not come in under any of the penal clauses, and thus he escapes altogether. That, of course, would be all right if our restriction was intended for an honourable class of contractors, for, the other provision in the Act, that they have no business to come into Corporation, is sufficient, but you have to deal with a set of unscrupulous contractors acting as councillors and they will be exactly the class of people who would take advantage of your amendment now. They would abstain from voting and they would probably absent themselves on the day their question is taken up and they would come up the next moment to the Corporation and begin their wirepulling at the Corporation office. Therefore, it is fatal to the clause which we added prohibiting any one who has any interest in a contract from becoming a councillor to carry this amendment ; it would be wrong to carry this amendment. I go further and agree with the Hon'ble Mr. Thonger that some penalty ought to be provided against a councillor remaining as a councillor without disclosing the fact that he has an interest in any contract with the Corporation. The practice to which allusion has been made of putting forward a dummy as a contractor is an exceedingly common one in the Madras Corporation. As a general rule when we see the name of a new contractor we very often ask--who is it that is behind him. I have done my best on several occasions to trace the substantial man behind the dummy. Sometimes we are able to discover him and sometimes not. It may happen that behind him there may be councillors but these are undetected crimes with which we cannot do anything ; but that is no reason why in the Bill a penalty could not be provided against a man when he is detected. If a man is detected he ought to be punished, and what is more it should be definitely laid down here that it is a crime and it should be punished. I therefore agree with the Hon'ble Mr. Thonger that a penal provision should be added. I hope that the Government will appreciate the necessity for it, and add it of their own accord."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. SURYANARAYANA RAO :—"Your Excellency, I wish to have this provision retained. I am not for deleting any portion of this clause 358. The Hon'ble the Advocate-General wishes to delete a portion of it. But I am not for deleting any portion of it. It is a matter of common occurrence, common experience and common knowledge that generally these councillors appear behind somebody's name which is put forward. I am aware of instances where chairmen of municipalities are participators in contracts and some ignorance is put forward as the person holding the contract, whereas the contract is really for the benefit of the chairman himself. I, therefore, strongly oppose the deletion of any portion of this clause."

The Hon'ble the ADVOCATE-GENERAL :—"I beg to withdraw the amendment, having regard to the opinion expressed by the Honourable members. They ought to know the necessity for this provision."

The Hon'ble Yaqub Hasan Sahib Bahadur :—"I am for the amendment which has been discussed and I feel that it should not be allowed to be withdrawn. In the Select Committee I took up the very position which the Hon'ble the Advocate-General has now taken up. I said that these words should be omitted from this clause ; but he did not see it in the light I presented and these words were inserted. Afterwards a clearer vision seems to have come to the Advocate-General, and he has now thought it proper to bring forward an amendment to omit these words. He ought to have stuck to his amendment in spite of the little opposition that has been raised. I think the position that he has taken up is a very proper one. It is not proposed that the whole clause should be omitted as understood by the other speakers, but it is only these words that he proposed to omit--'or acts as councillor when disqualified under section 53.' A reference to section 53 will show that a councillor becomes disqualified under certain circumstances. Section 53 says :—

(Mr. Yaqub Hasan; the President;
Mr. M. Ramachandra Rao; Mr. Narasimha Ayyar;
Mr. Ranga Achariyar; the Advocate-General;
Sir Gordon Fraser; Mr. Thonger.)

[14TH FEBRUARY 1919.]

The Hon'ble Yaqub Hasan Sahib Bahadur:—"Your Excellency under the rules if an Honourable Member who moves an amendment withdraws his amendment it is open to another member to take up the amendment and move it."

His Excellency the President:—"The Honourable Gentleman will see that we might pass an amendment round the whole council in that way. To effect the Honourable Gentleman's wishes he can vote for the non-withdrawal of the amendment while others may vote for the withdrawal of the amendment. If the Honourable Gentleman carries the Council with him, his object will be achieved."

The Hon'ble Yaqub Hasan Sahib Bahadur:—"The matter should not end with the reply of the Honourable the Advocate-General. It should be open to other members to speak."

His Excellency the President:—"That is not the issue raised by the Honourable Member. If the Honourable Member wishes to address the Council I may inform him that he has already done so. But if he wishes to address again he is at liberty to do so. The issue raised by the Honourable Gentleman is whether or not he should be permitted to move the amendment."

The Hon'ble Yaqub Hasan Sahib Bahadur:—"Again I appeal to the Council to retain these words and to accept the amendment as proposed by the Hon'ble Mr. Ramachandra Rao."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. Ramachandra Rao:—"I agree with the Advocate-General in thinking that sub-clause (3) of clause 54 affords sufficient protection and in the face of that sub-clause there should be no difficulty. That sub-clause says 'pending such decision such person shall be deemed to be qualified.' If a person is aggrieved and has any doubt about the disqualification he has got the right of reference to the Small Cause Court. Till that decision is given he shall be deemed to be qualified and the penalty for disqualification will arise only after the Court's decision is arrived at. That is a view which is certainly open to be taken under clause 54, and I agree with the Hon'ble Advocate-General on that point. I do not think that there is any difficulty at all."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. Narasimha Ayyar:—"I wish to have some information. The Hon'ble the Advocate-General has not referred to the suggestion of the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar for introducing the word 'wilfully' before the word 'acts.' As pointed out by the Hon'ble Mr. Ramachandra Rao and the Hon'ble the Advocate-General in cases submitted for decision there is no difficulty at all; but there may be cases in which there is no reference as to whether a person has an interest in a subsisting contract, or whether a person has ceased to be a partner in a firm which accepts a contract with the municipal corporation. Suppose I and others are partners of a firm which has a contract. In that case the addition of the word 'wilfully' might perhaps be convenient."

The Hon'ble Mr. T. Ranga Achariyar:—"I beg to propose the insertion of the word 'wilfully' before the word 'acts.'"

The Hon'ble the Advocate-General:—"The addition of the word 'wilfully' is unnecessary, because it would make the section unworkable. A man cannot be said to be disqualified, when he is deemed to be qualified. If a person acts as a councillor after the Small Cause Court declares him to be disqualified what more wilfulness can there be?"

The Hon'ble Sir Gordon Fraser:—"Before the debate is closed may I ask the Hon'ble the Advocate-General if he will consider the desirability of adding clause 52 before clause 53 in clause 358. I do not ask him to decide this point now, but I ask him to give it his consideration. I think this clause ought to be made applicable to a man who is appointed a councillor while holding a contract."

His Excellency the President:—"If I may say so, logically the Honourable Gentleman is perfectly right; but I think the provision is superfluous. However, that is my own feeling. I hope the Hon'ble the Advocate-General will be able to answer that point. Logically it may be necessary to hold it water-tight; but I do not think it is necessary."

The Hon'ble the Advocate-General:—"I think it is unnecessary to have the wording suggested. It may be necessary for logical symmetry but in practice it is not necessary. If it is a case of election there may be disputes and they will be brought to the notice of Small Cause Court and a decision will be pronounced thereon. Whereas in the other class of cases where a man, after he becomes a councillor, becomes subsequently disqualified there is far greater danger of the matter being overlooked."

The Hon'ble Mr. J. H. Thonger:—"I disagree with the Hon'ble the Advocate-General and I again wish to ask the Council to put every possible restriction upon businessmen interested in contracts from becoming members of the corporation and to put every possible penalty upon men who seek election without disclosing their interest in contracts. The integrity of businessmen has been attacked by the Hon'ble the Advocate-General to some extent and we do not wish any safeguard to be withdrawn. The stronger we make it the better we shall be pleased as businessmen."

His Excellency the President:—"If I may say a word we all understand and the Council has understood the position taken up by the representatives of business in this matter. They have thoroughly put their position before the Council and we need not therefore labour the point. We need not take up the position that there is any particular weakness in Madras that should render necessary the safeguards which are thought necessary elsewhere. If you consider the position for a moment you will find that the legislation we have undertaken is on lines which are quite usual and which have been found practically wise elsewhere. We have merely followed those lines in our Bill. I should myself deprecate going any further than is necessary and unnecessarily labouring the point. Here we have a perfectly usual procedure laid down and a usual machinery which has been found practically sufficient elsewhere. I should suggest that there is no reason why we should go any further here in Madras. Our legislation follows the ordinary lines. We have made it perfectly clear that there is nothing special or particular about our Presidency. I should be inclined to advise the Council to make the matter rest where it is."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. Narasimha Ayyar:—"May I give one legal reason why Honourable Members behind me should let the matter rest where it is. Clause 52 deals with candidates; and clause 53 deals with those who become councillors and the section that we are now dealing with is in regard to councillors and not in regard to candidates. Under clause 52 except under sub-clause (5) the person dealt with is the candidate and not the councillor. It is, therefore, rather incongruous to deal with that clause in discussing clause 358 and therefore the Hon'ble the Advocate-General is right."

His Excellency the President:—"The amendment of the Hon'ble the Advocate-General is that the words 'or acts as Councillor when disqualified under section 53' be omitted."

The Hon'ble the Advocate-General:—"I beg to withdraw the amendment."

His Excellency the President:—"We have to record in our proceedings what takes place. I shall therefore first put to the Council whether or not the Council are in favour of the withdrawal of the Hon'ble the Advocate-General's amendment. Will the Council give leave to withdraw the amendment?"

The motion was put and agreed to and the Hon'ble the Advocate-General then withdrew the amendment with the permission of His Excellency the President.

Clause 359.

Clause 359 was allowed to stand part of the Bill.

The Honourable Gentleman does not wish, I understand, to move this amendment."

[14TH FEBRUARY 1919.]

Clause 394.

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR :—"I beg to move that in sub-clause (2) of clause 394 the words 'fine or' be inserted before the word 'costs.' This amendment deals with the disposal of fines and other sums of money. It raises a very important question for which I ask the consideration of the Council. There are two things which are sought to be surrendered by the amendment made by the Select Committee to the original draft. In the first place, your Excellency, it involves a change of principle in the Bill as introduced into the Council and this Government should have taken the previous permission of the Government of India before accepting that amendment under the rule referred to by your Excellency the day before yesterday. The change of principle here involved is whether the fines levied under municipal and local Acts should not be appropriated to municipal funds. On the advice of the Hon'ble the Advocate-General on a technical point he seems to think that it is ultra vires of this Council to make such a provision. I think he is wrong. On a question like this as it involves a departure in principle from the established policy of the Madras Government and the other Governments, the previous sanction of the Government of India should have been taken. The history of this provision will show that the policy of the legislature, as I shall presently point out in dealing with such fines levied under municipal and local Acts has been to treat them as part of municipal funds. I need only refer to some of the local Acts. Section 286 (3) of the District Municipalities Act, IV of 1884 makes over fines, penalties and compensation for municipal offences to the municipality. Sections 445, 447 and 450 of the Madras City Municipal Act of 1884 make over municipal fines to the municipal funds. Section 454 of the City Municipal Act of 1904 does a similar thing. Section 54 (iii) of the Madras Local Boards Act similarly deals with fines levied under the Act. Section 28 of Cattle Trespass Act I of 1871, (Imperial Act) says that all fines may be appropriated as compensation for loss or damage. Section 8 of the Hackney Carriage Act, XIV of 1879 (Imperial) provides for fees levied under the Act to be credited to municipal funds. Sections 250 and 545 of the Criminal Procedure Code enact the same principle whereby fines collected may be utilised for paying compensation to accused for frivolous complaints, etc. Section 19 of the Cantonments Act, XV of 1910 distinctly provides for several sums being placed to the credit of the cantonment fund. Fines levied under section 545 of the Criminal Procedure Code, section 34 of the Police Act, V of 1867 and section 156 of the Army Act—all these Acts provide for fines being appropriated to the cantonment fund. Section 279 of the Indian Companies Act, VII of 1913 provides for fines being made payable towards costs of the complaints. There is also a similar provision to section 13 (1) of the Indian Merchandise Act. Section 52 (2) of the Bengal Local Self-Government Act, III of 1885 provides for the constitution of district funds out of the fines imposed and levied under the Act, so also section 56 of the same Act provides for the union fund. Section 104 (1) of the Calcutta Municipal Act, III of 1889 provides for the constitution of a general fund to which are credited all fines, etc., realized in cases in which prosecutions are instituted under that Act. Section III of the Bombay City Municipal Act of 1888 provides for the constitution of fund which includes fines imposed by magistrates for offences under that Act.

"I can also enumerate other Acts where provisions are made whereby fines collected on account of municipal offences are credited to municipal funds. The Bill of 1916 and the Bill of 1918 contained this provision that all fines levied under section 414 should go to municipal funds. You know that the Government of India sent their remarks on the Bill; they did not take exception to the fines being paid over to municipal funds, but the Select Committee has acted on the advice of the Advocate-General on a technical point; but I submit that this Council ought not to surrender its prerogative, apart from the loss to which the corporation funds will be put to. I think that the fines collected—the Hon'ble Mr. Molony will bear me out—amounts to a decent sum of Rs. 6,000 or 7,000 a year. That is no doubt a small matter in itself, but what I attach greater importance to is the fact that this Council is deprived of its prerogative and privilege by virtue of this attempt made by the Advocate-General to say that these Acts are ultra vires—that the Acts in force for such a long time are ultra vires because they contravene section 21 of the Government of India Act. Section 21 of the Government of India Act you will find printed on page 14 of the book which lies before you. The provision therein contained is not a new one; it is as old as 1858. This provision is taken from the wording of the Act of 1858—that is to say it gives power to the Secretary of State in Council to appropriate the revenues of India, the revenues of India being taken to include fines and penalties. That is an executive action. That power of sections dealing with legislatures. Under section 67 (2) you will find that it is assumed that the legislature has power to deal with the public debt or public revenues of India, but only does not affect section 21, to deal with public debt and public revenues of India, but only condition to be satisfied is there must be the previous sanction of the Governor-General. As regards the local legislatures they stand on a better footing, because 79 (3) (a) does not include of India being omitted, though we find such a reference in section 67. In Ilbert's book in dealing with the corresponding provision of the Government of India Act of 1858, provision corresponding to section 21 of the Government of India Act, it is stated on page 187 'questions have been raised as to the powers of the Indian Legislature to appropriate by Indian Acts to specific objects provincial or imperial sources of revenue such as ferry fees and other tolls, process fees, rates on land, licence taxes and income-taxes, but a strict view of the enactment in the Act of 1858 would be inconsistent with the general course of Indian legislation and would give rise to inconvenience in practice.' It is by accepting this doubt created by the Hon'ble the Advocate-General, we are now asked to cast to the winds all legislative enactments passed all these long years; and I submit that it would not do to root them all out without a proper reference to the Government of India, who will arrive at their decision on the advice of their legal advisors on the point. The proper business procedure would be to obtain the opinion of legal advisors from elsewhere and not to act on the opinion of the Hon'ble the Advocate-General, which will have the effect of rendering several Acts of this legislature and various other Acts of the legislature of this country ultra vires. It would be presumptuous on our part to declare all the Acts ultra vires; but we should act in consonance with precedent and practice rather than upon the advice of the Hon'ble Advocate-General. The Government of India having permitted this provision to remain in the original Bill, it is not competent to this Council to deal with it, in the manner that we are asked to do. Under the very rule under which we are asked to act, you will find the following provision on page 121 of the Madras Legislative Council manual.

"7. (1) Where, after a Bill has been introduced in a local Council whether as an exceptional measure dealt with under rule 5 or otherwise, an amendment is proposed in it which the local Government is prepared to accept but which, owing to its being outside the principle of the Bill as introduced or for any other reason, it considers that it cannot accept without a reference to the Government of India, the requisite steps should be taken to delay the progress of the Bill through Council pending the result of a reference to the Legislative Department of the Government of India.

"As regards the amendment introduced by the Select Committee, I submit that it contravenes the principles of the Bill as introduced with the sanction of the Government of India and the principles accepted by the legislature in the other provinces and the Imperial legislature. I may point out as regards the scope of the legislatures of the country, the matter was considered in connexion with the City Municipal Act. In the matter of importing timber in 25 Madras the late Sir V. Bashyam Ayyangar, an eminent Judge, considered that it was within the province of the local legislature to deal with the prerogative of the Crown. This legislature is given that power to deal with all laws in connexion with Government land. So long as no power is expressly taken away, I submit that it is within our competence to pass any law, it is merely throwing away our privilege and our power by yielding to the suggestion made by the Hon'ble the Advocate-General. I beg therefore to propose this amendment."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. KRISHNA RAO :—"I beg to second this amendment. I do not think that there can be any reasonable doubt about the principle underlying this amendment. It suggests that fines levied for prosecutions under the municipal Acts should go to municipal funds; and it is a long and well recognized and well established policy about which there cannot be any the slightest doubt. We have been providing so many penalties; and schedules VII and VIII contain a list of various sections under which prosecutions may be launched and fines may be imposed. It must be the duty of everyone in this Council as also of Your Excellency's Government to see that these fines are made over to the municipal fund. The other objection that may be urged as anticipated by the Honourable Mover is a technical difficulty—a legal riddle, if I may so call it—raised by the Hon'ble the Advocate-General. I do not think that so far as that difficulty is concerned, there will be many obstacles in getting over it. The examples of various legislative enactments which have been passed from time to time incorporating such provisions must convince every one in this Council that upon a true construction of the Act, it does not apply to cases of this description. The mere fact that in the definition of 'public revenue' the word fines has been also included, cannot lead us to the necessary conclusion that it applies necessarily to the other provisions. Even assuming for the sake of argument that there is some force in the argument of the Hon'ble the Advocate-General, I would suggest that in the application of a well established and recognized principle there ought to be no difficulty in applying for the sanction of higher authorities if such sanction is necessary."

The Hon'ble the ADVOCATE-GENERAL :—"The Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar's amendment is to insert the words 'fine or' before the word 'costs' in clause 394 (2) of the Bill. But it raises really two important questions—firstly the question as to the competency of the Legislative Council and secondly the question of principle whether a local authority should have a direct pecuniary interest in the prosecution. Dealing with the question of the competency of the Legislative Council, I may assure Honourable Members of Council that I am personally loathe to circumscribe to the slightest extent the powers of this Council. I should be most reluctant to cast the slightest doubt whatever upon the powers of the local legislature; and if I felt any doubt as to the matter, I should certainly agree with the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar as to the interpretation to be put upon the Government of India Act. It is only where I have confidently come to the conclusion with such light as I possess that the interpretation I put upon it is beyond all reasonable doubt—it is only then it is my duty to advise the Government and the Council that it is beyond the power of the Council. I should not in any doubtful case say that this Council had no power,—that will not be my duty; and Honourable Members will certainly not credit me with any desire to overstep that province, which I have endeavoured to make clear.

THE MADRAS CITY MUNICIPAL BILL, 1918.

(Mr. M. Ramachandra Rao; the Advocate-General; [14TH FEBRUARY 1919.
Mr. Ranga Achariyar; Dr. Nayar.)

sections 21, 79 and 80 what is the true construction of the powers of this Council? So far as I know, section 21 relates to the control of expenditure by the Secretary of State. This section provides the legal basis for all of our financial codes. The Civil Service Regulations and various other codes which lay down the respective powers of the local Government, the Government of India and the Secretary of State owe their authority to this section 21. It is under this section that our financial codes which lay down restrictions on various authorities administering the public revenues in India are framed and the Secretary of State is the final authority over this expenditure. That is the object of section 21 namely that every pie of revenue raised in this country is subject to the administrative sanction of the Secretary of State and as I have already submitted, I find on an examination of this question that the legal basis of all our financial codes is traceable to section 21 which finally vests this power in the Secretary of State and by a process of decentralization these powers have been delegated to the local Governments and the Government of India in various degrees. That is the object of section 21.

"When we come to deal with the powers of the legislatures they are contained in quite a different chapter and Your Excellency will see that under section 80 (2) it is open to any Member of any local Legislative Council to introduce with the previous sanction of the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Chief Commissioner any measure affecting the public revenues of the province or imposing any charge on those revenues. How does the Hon'ble the Advocate-General say in the face of section 80 (2) that no local legislature has any power to impose any charge on public revenues?"

The Hon'ble the ADVOCATE-GENERAL:—"I did not say that. On the other hand I said distinctly that it has a right to impose a charge upon the revenues but I objected to its making a grant or appropriation of any specific revenue or assigning specific revenue."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO:—"We are merely juggling with words."

The Hon'ble the ADVOCATE-GENERAL:—"That is to say you may start an institution which may cost Rs. 50,000 per annum. No particular revenue is assigned. If the money is forthcoming, the Government may assign the money to it. But you cannot assign a particular revenue or a share of particular revenue to any particular purpose. That is quite different. The real objection is that under section 79 (4) the local legislature has not power to affect an Act of Parliament."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"Affect' has been construed to mean 'alter'."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO:—"It is merely understanding the wording of the section. Here is section 80 (2) which says it is open to any Member of a local Legislative Council to introduce with the previous sanction of the Governor any measure affecting the public revenues of the Province or imposing any charge on those revenues. If my Honourable Friend says that this is a part of public revenues, here we have an express provision which says that any Member of the local Legislative Council has power to introduce any measure with the previous sanction of the Governor affecting the public revenues or impose a charge on the public revenues. There seems to be no use in continuing this discussion, I regret very much that after the Bill was introduced in 1918, if it was necessary to ascertain opinion elsewhere, Your Excellency's Government have not taken the steps necessary for the purpose. It is a matter of some importance. Those who represent local bodies do not wish that this matter should be dealt with by executive order or that this appropriation of fines which are the legitimate sources of prosecutions should be given to us by executive order. We want this to be guaranteed in the statute. As this affects not only the Madras Corporation but also the mufassal municipalities and local boards and every local authority which is discharging its duties in this country, it is a matter of serious consequence and I trust that this provision would be inserted. I would risk the rejection of this Bill if on account of this provision the Bill should be rejected by the Government of India. I feel very strongly that the construction of the Hon'ble the Advocate-General is not correct and we do not share the views which he has expressed in the matter."

"The last point which my Honourable Friend has raised is as regards the tendency or facilities or rather predilections to increasing the prosecutions for the sake of increasing the income. I wish the Hon'ble the Advocate-General had not suggested it as a reason. I can say from my own experience that municipal authorities have not indulged in these prosecutions for the sake of augmenting the revenues. I rather think it is the other way. They do not institute prosecutions which ought to be instituted and to suggest seriously that if this provision is there it would mean a temptation to local authorities to undertake more prosecutions than they ought to is to ignore the facts entirely. I entirely support the motion of the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar and I trust that every non-official Member of this Council will support us in this matter."

The Hon'ble Dr. T. M. NAYAR:—"My Lord, after listening to the elaborate legal arguments on both sides, on the one side of the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar and on the other of the Hon'ble the Advocate-General, I have come to the same conclusion, as Mr. Bumble did on a famous occasion, that the 'law's a hassle'. Instead of going into the technical details of this legal question, what I wish to ask the Council is to take a practical common sense view of it. Whether the Indian legislatures have the right to appropriate these revenues or not, may be an unsettled question, there may be grave doubts. But they have been going on doing it in the past and if the Government of India or the Secretary of State had any serious objection to that, they would have taken some steps in the past to prevent their doing so. I think the common-sense view is admirably summed up here in Ilbert's book where he says: 'Questions have been raised as to the powers of the Indian legislature to appropriate by Indian Acts to specific objects, Provincial or Imperial sources of income, such as ferry fees and other tolls, process fees, rates on land, licence taxes and income-taxes. But a strict view of the enactment in the Act of 1858 would be inconsistent with the general course of Indian legislation and would give rise to inconvenience in practice.'

"That I think is the practical view for ordinary common-sense men to take. If that were not acted on, it will certainly give rise to inconvenience as it will in this instance. I am more concerned with the few rupees that the corporation may gain than about all the legal enactments that have been quoted here. In the past the corporation has put forward a humble plea that when fines are imposed by magistrates on people who commit nuisance on public highways the fines should be handed over to the corporation with a view to the corporation utilizing that money in building public urinals. The suggestion is a quite practical one and to a certain extent it has been acted upon. This is a wonderful new interpretation which the Hon'ble the Advocate-General has put forward. It is very learned and I submit to it. But there is one practical difficulty; it will put us in a position of inconvenience and therefore I ask this Council to proceed in a practical businesslike way and continue as we have been doing in the past and if the Secretary of State is going to act on the point suggested by the Hon'ble the Advocate-General, let them proceed by a writ of mandamus or certiorari and then we shall meet that position. For the present the Council may take a practical view."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR:—"Your Excellency, I think we in this Legislative Council are the makers of law and we should not characterize our progeny (by any analogy) as long-eared beasts; as to the main question, I think it is certainly much safer to delete this particular portion and to set about our work in a regular constitutional way. We have not the previous permission referred to in the section. We must get that permission and then at a later stage introduce the provision."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. SURYANARAYANA RAO:—"Speaking for the mufassal I think this word 'fines' must be retained. With regard to the observation of the Hon'ble the Advocate-General that there will be a temptation to encourage prosecutions, I submit that in launching prosecutions we are only wasting time and money. When we launch a prosecution we have to pay our prosecutor and our lawyer and we have to incur so much expenditure and we have to employ special men to attend the court for the prosecution. It is waste of time and money, and I assure this Council on behalf of the mufassal municipalities that prosecutions are only launched when they are absolutely necessary to teach a lesson to those who have offended against the municipal law. Prosecutions are not launched simply to get a few rupees."

"On the question of principle when the district municipalities have the benefit of these fines, certainly one would be very sorry to lose the privilege all at once by the interpretation of the section by the Hon'ble the Advocate-General. I think common sense and convenience lend support to the view that fines should properly belong to the municipality."

The Hon'ble Sir GORDON FRASER:—"I am afraid the legal point is beyond me, but I do think the corporation are entitled to the money and so I support the amendment."

The Hon'ble Mr. K. RAMA AYYANGAR:—"Your Excellency, on this point I have already dwelt on the previous occasion and I do not want to repeat it. I am of opinion that when we have no objection raised by the Council of India and when it has been sanctioned to be introduced in this Council with this clause, it is not for us to go behind it in any event whatever may be the position of the law. I am not of opinion that the proviso in section 21 would not apply to this case. The words are 'a grant or appropriation made in accordance with provisions or restrictions prescribed by the Secretary of State in Council with the concurrence of a majority of votes at a meeting of the Council shall be deemed to be made with the concurrence of a majority of such votes.' Even in that view it may be taken that sanction was given to this when it was sent in that form and the Bill was sanctioned. That is enough for our purpose. We ought to take these fines as appropriations to the municipality leaving it to be questioned afterwards if any question arises."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"I only wish to say a few words. My amendment has certain merits. At any rate the Honourable Member who introduced the Bill in 1916, Sir P. S. Sivaswami Ayyar thought that clause 415 (2) was not ultra vires. That clause ran as follows: 'Any fine or costs imposed or assessed by a magistrate by virtue of this Act shall on recovery be paid to the corporation to be by them applied for the purpose of this Act'. The Act of 1904 for which Sir John Wallis was responsible contained that provision and the Bill of 1918 contained the same provision in section 414 (2). I have stated that this has been the established provision in all the prior Municipal Acts, 1884, 1878, 1869, so that this is an old prerogative, and when a departure is sought to be made I thought it would be sought to be justified on a broader ground than on the mere suggestion that an energetic commissioner would be enthusiastic enough to add to the resources of the corporation by launching prosecutions. Has there been any such complaint for this century and more? I am surprised that "In the next place, it will be equally my duty to point out when occasions arise, however convenient a proposed course may be, if it is clearly beyond the law laid down in the Government of India Act when the Council would not be well advised in overstepping the limits laid down and I should not flinch from the discharge of that duty, however personally reluctant and diffident I may feel in advising this Council on a matter like this.

"Previous legislation on many matters has been referred to. Honourable Members, especially those amongst them who are lawyers, are fully aware that the Government of India Act was only recently consolidated. Till then the Statutes relating to India were scattered, and I presume that attention was not always paid to the Statutes in all cases; we know perfectly well that many a statute has been declared to be ultra vires and there is no use therefore merely referring to the fact of legislation as an authority for the position that whatever has been legislated upon in some Council so far, must be taken to have the same authority as decisions. We know that there was no question raised and settled, when the Government of India Act was to be enlarged; it is for the courts of justice to pronounce an opinion on the matter and no debates in the Legislative Council upon the matter have been referred to by the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar nor has he referred to a single decision in the Indian Law Reports of either the High Courts or of the Privy Council, showing that this question was ever raised in those cases and decided adversely to the view I seek to maintain. Honourable Members are fully aware that in many cases, implied decisions on facts and law are given in courts of law and they are not relied upon as authorities when the question is not raised and when there is no definite pronouncement upon the question. I ask that the same principle should be applied whenever the analogy from other Statutes is sought to be drawn. We do not know the circumstances under which the provisions were inserted. I can well imagine the class of cases mentioned by the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar, responding to section 21 of the Government of India Act which says 'the expenditure of the revenues of India, both in British India and elsewhere, shall be subject to the control of the Secretary of State in Council, and no grant or appropriation of any part of those revenues, or of any other property coming into the possession of the Secretary of State in Council by virtue of the Government of India Act, 1858, or this Act, shall be made without the concurrence of a majority of votes at a meeting of the Council of India. Provided that a grant or appropriation made in accordance with provisions or restrictions prescribed by the Secretary of State in Council with the concurrence of a majority of votes at a meeting of the Council shall be deemed to be made with the concurrence of a majority of such votes'.

"Suppose there were rules made by the Secretary of State with the concurrence express or implied of a majority of votes at a meeting of the Council of India, permitting such things to be done, then the legislation in those particular cases would be intra vires and it would be within our power to do so. Supposing the Secretary of State had authorized the grant or appropriation to one province of the revenue in the case of particular things, there is absolutely no harm in the legislature embodying that provision in an Act. What is contained in the Government of India Act is not an absolute prohibition; it is only a prohibition subject to this condition that this should not be done without the concurrence of a majority of votes. If there is a concurrence of a majority of votes of the Secretary of State in Council to the procedure proposed to be adopted, there the matter ends. We do not know the history of the pieces of legislation that were referred to; and we do not know all the points that will be raised in dealing with this question. Therefore to rely upon these Acts is, I submit, not a really weighty consideration which should prevail with the Council in pronouncing judgment upon this purely legal question.

"On the other hand may I appeal to Honourable Members to be consistent on this point? So far as this Council is concerned, it was only last year in connexion with the Madras Prevention of Adulteration Act this Council voted against a similar proposition which the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar brought forward—the transfer of fines to the local authorities. This Council upon a division came to the conclusion that they should not be so made over; and the only question that was then raised was this legal question which I raised and which was fully dealt with and fully debated upon on the last occasion, and then you had the judgment of this Council. I would therefore ask Honourable Members to abide by the decision of the Council until a superior authority advises us otherwise. Res judicata in regard to decisions of legislative assemblies is quite as wholesome a thing for public interest as res judicata in regard to decisions in courts of justice, and there is no use rearguing a question like this. I go further and say that I find that the very author quoted by the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar, Sir Courtney Ilbert, is my authority for the position I have advocated. All that he says in that book is that it will lead to inconvenience. That is what I say—that it does lead to inconvenience; and the remedy for it is to get the Government of India Act amended or to get the Secretary of State to pass a resolution allowing the grant or appropriation of fines by local bodies. That is the proper procedure—that is the way to do it and not to take upon ourselves a power which we do not possess.

"Then, Your Excellency, as regards the merits of this question I would only refer to sections 20 and 21 of the Government of India Act. Section 20 (3) says:—

"The expression 'the revenues of India' in this Act shall include all the territorial and other revenues of or arising in British India, and, in particular—

(i) all tributes and other payments in respect of any territories which would have been receivable by or in the name of the East India Company if the Government of India Act, 1858, had not been passed; and

[14TH FEBRUARY 1919.] (The Advocate-General; Mr. M. Ramachandra Rao.)

(ii) all fines and penalties incurred by the sentence or order of any court of justice in British India, and all forfeitures for crimes of any movable or immovable property in British India; and

(iii) all movable and immovable property in British India escheating or lapsing for want of an heir or successor, and all property in British India devolving as bona vacantia for want of a rightful owner.

"Therefore fines do form part of the revenues of India. Section 21 says 'No grant or appropriation of any part of those revenues, or of any other property coming into the possession of the Secretary of State in Council by virtue of the Government of India Act, 1858, or this Act, shall be made without the concurrence of a majority of votes at a meeting of the Council of India'. Then as regards this grant or appropriation, you propose to appropriate wholly specific fines, fines which are leviable in respect of prosecutions which may be instituted under this Bill and you grant these fines to a particular body. It is a specific appropriation and a specific grant, it is not simply a general charge on the revenues of this Province up to a certain amount. The only power which the local Legislature has under section 80 is to impose a general charge upon the revenues of the Province leaving it to the executive Government to make the allotments of revenues. Otherwise it means that every year when we pass the budget it is perfectly open to the Legislative Council to appropriate any income it likes in whatever fashion it pleases. Why should this power be confined only to fines? Every part of the revenues of India, every part of the revenues of this province can be voted away by the Legislative Council; and yet we know that it has no power to do that and it cannot make an appropriation except to the extent that the budget permits. It has simply to pass the budget without affecting the grants in the budget except to the limited extent prescribed by the Financial Rules. That is a point beyond dispute. Therefore I submit, Your Excellency, that I shall be failing in my duty if I do not advise the Council with all deference to the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar and the view that he represents that it is impossible to say that the fines are not a part of the revenues of India and it is impossible to say that a clause like the one he wants to introduce assigning these fines is not a grant or appropriation of specific revenues and is not a general charge on the Provincial revenues. I submit that it is not desirable to arm, assuming this Council has the power to enable them to do so, the local authorities with this power of taking over these fines. You give them thereby a direct pecuniary interest in prosecutions. It may be that an energetic councillor or an energetic commissioner may try to augment the revenues of the corporation by such prosecutions."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO:—"May I know whether the Hon'ble the Advocate-General has suggested this on his own responsibility or on the responsibility of the Government that those who are entrusted with prosecutions for offences committed would embark on prosecutions with a view to augment their revenues if the fines are made over to them. That is the reason which he gives for not assigning the fines to the corporation."

The Hon'ble the ADVOCATE-GENERAL:—"I said that that was one of the dangers. As regards the question raised by the Honourable Member I may say that whenever I speak here I speak on behalf of Government."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO:—"My Lord, there seems to be no use in continuing this debate. Whatever reasons we may adduce for the purpose of showing that the Hon'ble the Advocate-General has not taken the correct view, all the same Your Excellency's Government is bound by that advice though we are not. I fully recognize that. But to say that this question was settled by a vote of this Council last year is entirely to forget the conditions under which votes are taken in this Council. If the Hon'ble the Advocate-General is asked in this Council to get up and support the position of Your Excellency's Government he has behind him 24 or 25 certain votes and a few more uncertain votes. I do not wish to go into that matter, but the Hon'ble the Advocate-General cannot seriously suggest that this question was seriously argued last year and decided and therefore this matter is one which is concluded by a judgment of this Council under the circumstances under which votes are taken here. Therefore it is necessary, in the interests of what we consider to be the powers and prerogatives of this Council, to lodge a protest every time this question is raised.

"I regret, my Lord, to say that though this question was raised last year and although this Bill of 1918 received the assent of the Government of India before it was introduced into this Council this question should still remain unsettled. I should like to know whether Your Excellency's Government at the time of obtaining the sanction of the Government of India for the introduction of the measure ever found any difficulty in regard to this section or whether the views of the Government of India were ascertained on the legal aspect of the question. After obtaining the permission of the Government of India with the section as it is now sought to be incorporated in the Bill the Hon'ble the Advocate-General has thought fit to suggest a doubt. I know my Honourable Friend far too well, is a great man for suggesting doubts and for setting them at rest. I know his legal ingenuity, but on the present occasion I cannot help stating that he has overshot the mark.

"The question Your Excellency has to consider is whether all the legal enactments undertaken all these years by the Government of India and by every local legislature in this country are against the terms of the Government of India Act, 1915, or the enactments replaced by it. I cannot think so. If the Hon'ble the Advocate-General now suggests a doubt for the first time in the face of all these enactments, I must say while I admire his courage I think that he should see there is another side of the question. The other side of the question is this. Reading occurred by a particular officer (whether Councillor or Chairman I shall not say) having neglected his duty. The Council was seriously perturbed and we paid a handsome fee to the Advocate-General for his opinion and asked him what we could do and whether the officer was liable under section 259. We got the opinion that he was liable but there were difficulties as to limitation. I think the provision is a wholesome one and the fact that it is so rarely used shows how loath we are to take action."

With the permission of His Excellency the President the amendment to omit the clause was withdrawn.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"If we are going to sit here long it is better that we adjourn for luncheon. I think we had better examine the paper. We took a rather sanguine view. Will Honourable Gentlemen tell me which amendments are going to be moved?"

[His Excellency was informed that amendments Nos. 111, 112, 113, 115, 116, 117, 118, 121 to 128 were going to be moved and that amendments 119 and 120 will not be moved and 114 might probably be accepted by the Government.]

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"I think it is clear that we cannot finish even the main portion of the Bill before 2 p.m. What is the convenience of the Council? No arrangements have been made for lunch. We can however make arrangements. We can adjourn and meet here at 3 p.m. Shall I order luncheon at 2-30 p.m. Members will feel it convenient to get away. It will require all our expedition to finish it by 4 p.m."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"I do not press the first portion of amendment No. 111, to substitute 'one year' for 'three years.' The Honourable Member gave me some information about limitation and I do not press for the one year period. But I move the proviso. That is a safeguard that no such suit shall be instituted unless it is recommended by a resolution of the Council passed at a special meeting called for the purpose and supported by the votes of not less than thirty-three councillors. I borrowed it from the provision with regard to the removal of the Commissioner and I think it is a necessary safeguard. I therefore propose it."

"The amendment which was moved was to add the following proviso to clause 400:—
'That no such suit shall be instituted unless it is recommended by a resolution of the Council passed at a special meeting called for the purpose and supported by the votes of not less than thirty-three councillors.'"

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"I must object to it. This is essentially a thing which should not be left to the council itself. The councillors are working together and suddenly to call a certain number of them to hand up a certain member to be proceeded against is rather putting too great a strain on them. It will render the whole thing nugatory. This is a thing which should be left to the Governor in Council to decide. I would strongly deprecate the change proposed."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"I do not press it."

With the permission of His Excellency the President the amendment was withdrawn. Clause 400 was allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Clauses 401 and 402.

Clauses 401 and 402 were allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Clause 403.

The Hon'ble Mr. K. Rama Ayyangar had given notice of an amendment to delete this clause.

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO:—"I will move the amendment for the Hon'ble Mr. Rama Ayyangar. This is a provision which empowers police officers to arrest any person committing an offence against any of the provisions of this Act or of any rule, by-law or regulation made under it. My Lord, at present I admit, there is no machinery for working, for the detection of offences except what is done by the municipal officers as well as police officers."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"This is an old provision."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO:—"I move it because he has asked me to move it."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"It is a very old provision."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO:—"I am quite aware of it."

The amendment fell through for want of a seconder.

Clause 403 was allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Clauses 404 to 411.

Clauses 404 to 411 were allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Clause 412.

The Hon'ble the ADVOCATE-GENERAL:—"Your Excellency, I beg to move amendment No. 112-A which runs as follows:—

In the proviso to the clause between 'may' and 'be held' insert 'notwithstanding anything in sub-clause (5) of clause (b) of sub-section (1) to section 52.'

14TH FEBRUARY 1919.] (The Advocate-General; Sir Gordon Fraser;
Mr. Ranga Achariyar.)

"The object of this amendment is to make it perfectly clear that even a man who is at present a commissioner may be eligible for election even if the election is held before the Act comes into force—in order to make it clear that the existing members of the corporation are eligible. If they are already councillors they would not be nominated or elected before the term expires. That is the present rule. That is also the rule which is inserted in clause 52. One may say that clause 52 deals with councillors under the new Act. But it is better to make it perfectly clear that the prohibition which exists against a person whose term of office has not already expired being elected before the term expires will not stand in the way of the first constitution of the Council, and therefore this provision is sought to be inserted."

The Hon'ble Mr. H. G. Stokes seconded the amendment.

The amendment was put to the Council and agreed to.

Clause 412 as amended was allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Clause 413.

The Hon'ble Sir GORDON FRASER:—"Your Excellency, I move the amendment standing against my name:—

113 'Delete the last eight lines of sub-clause (b) commencing with "and for ascertainment by lot" to "constitution of the council under this Act" and substitute a new sub-clause (c) as follows:—

'The first term of office of the newly elected and appointed councillors under this Act shall, notwithstanding anything in section 55, terminate on the first day of the month of November following the completion of two complete years of office, and thereafter a new council shall be appointed and elected as provided for in section 55.'

'Substitute (d) for (c)'. "

"This section of the Bill is very complicated, but there is a principle involved. One finds the principle very cumbersome. The idea is that ten commissioners shall be elected each year. There will be a partial election continually going on each year to the extent of one-third of the elected commissioners. Personally I think that that system is very cumbersome indeed. There is one argument that may be brought forward in favour of it; that to some extent it provides a certain amount of continuity of policy. You always have twenty commissioners left on the council, ten only retiring for election. On the other hand the better argument against it is that the council on these lines is liable to get into a groove and a triennial general election would be far better. It would at any rate prevent the working of the council on stereo typed lines. Another point is that a triennial general election would have a very strong educational value which at present under the present system of ten commissioners retiring annually is entirely lacking. The triennial election would certainly promote a considerable amount of public opinion and it would make the electors generally take very much more interest in the affairs of the corporation than the present system. Under the present system when an election takes place no one except the candidates is interested. One triennial general election would certainly promote very considerable interest among the electors. The result will be very probably there would be much larger polling than we get at present in small elections held every year. In the Bombay Act sections 22 and 23 provide for triennial elections. Section 22 reads 'general elections of councillors shall be fixed by the commissioner, subject to the provisions of section 23, to take place triennially on such days in the months of January and February as he shall think fit'. Section 23 says 'The ward elections shall be fixed to take place simultaneously for all the wards'. I think that system is very much better than the one proposed in this Bill under clause 413."

"The question was carefully considered by a special committee of the corporation on the 13th September and the committee then decided that the system of general election and appointment should find preference to the proposed system of an annual election of one-third of the elected commissioners. At the general meeting of the corporation to consider the recommendations put forward by the special committee the recommendation of that committee was unanimously approved by the corporation as a whole. The question was again considered by the corporation at the general meeting held about a fortnight ago and at that meeting my amendment as on the paper was put before the corporation and there again it was passed unanimously. I cannot see therefore why there should be any reason for not arranging that there should be a general election every three years, and I hope that the Council and Your Excellency's Government will accept the amendment as it stands and give the city a general triennial election instead of the system proposed under clause 413."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"I beg to second this motion. It is a question of the balance of advantage and disadvantage. Upon a careful consideration of both sides we have come to the conclusion that the amendment is the proper procedure to adopt. It would ensure all the fifty people whether they be elected by institutions or divisions or appointed by the Government going to their respective constituencies at one time. I think general questions of policy or principle will then be taken care of by the electorates. I think on the whole this system of ten people going out one year and ten in another year will not rouse sufficient interest in the rate-payers, whereas a general election at one period would rouse public interest in the corporation's affairs and the candidates also would have to woo the constituency with greater care. I therefore strongly support the amendment."

such a justification came for the omission of the word 'fines.' As regards the legal point, as the Hon'ble Dr. Nayar has said, this is not the place where we can debate the question of law. I think we had better follow our precedents, not the immediate precedent which the Hon'ble the Advocate-General referred to where for the first time he discovered this. It is not a safe precedent at all. It was the introduction of a new provision that was objected to in the Prevention of Adulteration Act. What we object to now is the removal of an existing provision. Let it not be quoted as a precedent, I am rather surprised that the head of the profession should elevate the decision of the Council in the way in which it is given here to the level of res judicata."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"Your Excellency, I confess that to some extent I share the Hon'ble Dr. Nayar's feeling of doubt in regard to the legal question. I shall, in the first place, clear a small misapprehension. The Hon'ble the Advocate-General pointed out that there was a danger of a thing like this being worked somewhat recklessly—the tendency, for instance, for prosecutions being rushed for making money. He did not charge any particular local body or say that the evil has manifested itself in this country. It has not manifested itself in this country, but it has manifested itself in other countries, and there is no reason why it should not manifest itself here. That may be a small matter."

"The main question is the legal question, whether it will be within the power of this Legislative Council to accept the amendment of the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar. So far as that thing is concerned, I venture to respectfully point out, with all deference to the other distinguished lawyers whom we have here, that the Hon'ble the Advocate-General is the chief Law Officer of the Crown and he sits here and advises us in regard to matters of law. He is bound, whatever may be the consequences of it, when he sees a particular thing being proposed which he thinks is not legal, to say so, and so far as the Government are concerned, they are bound to accept his advice. In view of what I am now going to say I wish it to be distinctly understood that so far as the point of law is concerned we see no reason to depart from the view he has taken. We are anxious that it should not be taken that we depart from his view. Knowing him as I do, on a question of law he must be in the right, I have no doubt about it. But at the same time there are several elements which make the position uncertain so far as this thing is concerned. Firstly unlike the case of the Prevention of Adulteration Bill this is an old provision which has been there for a long time. Secondly this thing has gone up to the Government of India and they have not objected to it, and from that we are entitled to draw the conclusion that so far as they are concerned they would not veto this legislation on this ground, because this is an old provision. I take these things into consideration and if it is the wish of the Council generally to accept the risk and put the provision in, you may do so, but I wish it to be distinctly understood that the Honourable Members accept the responsibility for that course of action. The Hon'ble the Advocate-General has advised you in regard to the law. You tell him: 'we accept your advice but notwithstanding what you say, this thing has been there for a long time, it has been working all right; nobody has found fault with it; the Bill has gone to the Government of India and they have accepted it; we will accept the risk of its being vetoed and all the work that we have done till now being wasted.' If you accept that risk, do so. We do not want to stand in your way. But I wish it to be understood that you do it at your own risk."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. SURYANARAYANA RAO:—"I hope Your Excellency's Government will support it."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"This Bill will go up in the same way as other Bills go up."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"I understand the Honourable Gentlemen's amendment is accepted by the Council."

The amendment was put and agreed to.

Clause 394 as amended was allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Clauses 395 to 399.

Clauses 395 to 399 were allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Clause 400.

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"This is a new provision which we have got in section 400. I objected to the whole provision in the Select Committee, but as it has got in I want to minimise the evil arising out of it. It is imposing a new liability and a risky one. On the question of its policy I ask the Council to consider it very carefully."

"400 (1) The commissioner and every councillor shall be liable for the loss, waste or misapplication of any money or other property owned by or vested in the municipal corporation, if such loss, waste or misapplication is a direct consequence of his neglect or misconduct and a suit for compensation may be instituted against him by the council with the previous sanction of the Governor in Council or by the Secretary of State in Council."

"(2) Every such suit shall be commenced within three years after the date on which the cause of action arose."

"I want to propose that the whole section should be omitted and failing that I want to introduce the safeguard that his own colleagues who are the persons who know best might judge of the matter, just as we put in a provision in the case of the commissioner. I propose first of all that the whole section be omitted. It will be a risky thing to allow such a provision to stand and it will be very difficult to work in the first place. What has to be proved is 'such loss, waste or misapplication is a direct consequence of his neglect or misconduct, and a suit for compensation may be instituted against him.' It includes the commissioner and every councillor, it will necessitate poll being taken in almost every case of voting; supposing some three years previously he had recorded a vote in a particular way he would have contributed to the loss. It is a difficult question. It is a new provision. We have no corresponding provision elsewhere. Therefore I propose that this should be deleted. It will lead to a great deal of trouble and unnecessary annoyance to people doing honorary work."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. KRISHNA RAO:—"I second the amendment."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"I oppose this amendment. The amendment is to omit the whole of clause 400. This clause provides that 'the commissioner and every councillor shall be liable for the loss, waste or misapplication of any money or other property owned by or vested in the municipal corporation, if such loss, waste or misapplication is a direct consequence of his neglect or misconduct and a suit for compensation may be instituted against him by the council with the previous sanction of the Governor in Council or by the Secretary of State in Council.' The Honourable Member says he views the existence of this provision as likely to produce unheard of consequences. May I point out that this thing exists in the District Municipalities Act of 1884, section 259 of which runs as follows: 'Every municipal councillor shall be liable for the loss, waste or misapplication of any money or other property belonging to the municipal council, if such loss, waste or misapplication is a direct consequence of his neglect or misconduct, and a suit for compensation may be instituted against him by the municipal council or by the Secretary of State for India in Council.' We are simply reproducing in the City Municipal Bill the provision which exists in the law governing the constitution and working of district municipalities and which has been there from the year 1884. It has not been alleged that that law in the mufassal has worked any hardship. There is no reason to believe that it will work any hardship here. After all, what is it that is said? The commissioner shall be liable for the loss, waste or misapplication of any money, etc., if such loss, waste or misapplication is a direct consequence of his neglect or misconduct. Firstly there must be loss or waste, and secondly it must be due to his misconduct; thirdly it must be a direct consequence of his misconduct. Am I to understand that there need be any hesitation in making an officer of the position of the commissioner responsible for the loss caused to the corporation by his misconduct when such loss is a direct consequence of that misconduct? I do not see any justification for the extraordinary tenderness on the part of the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar for the misconduct of the councillors. I know the commissioner is a paid officer. He gets a large salary and if that man misconducts himself and the loss is caused as a direct result of his misconduct it is but right that he should pay for it. In regard to the councillors generally I know they are doing unpaid work, but if a man takes up the work of a member of a local body like that, he must do so on the understanding that he will do the work properly and that if on account of his wilful misconduct any loss is caused he must pay for it. This will keep out people who want to be in the local body and to do no work and to allow things to drift. I should consider that this thing which we have put in, following the District Municipalities Act, is an eminently wholesome thing to prevent wrong doing. We have provided that such suit must be instituted with the previous sanction of the Governor in Council or by the Secretary of State in Council. That itself gives you a very large amount of protection. It is not any man that can run in the commissioner or the councillor. We will consult our Law officers whether there is a prima facie case, and even that does not conclude it; the courts will have to decide it. They will insist upon proof of misconduct and proof of loss and they will insist upon proof that the one is a direct consequence of the other. There need be no hesitation therefore in retaining this clause. I oppose the Honourable gentleman's proposal to delete it."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"I am thankful to the Honourable Member for drawing my attention to section 259 of the District Municipalities Act. May I know whether there was any occasion when that section was called in aid?"

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR:—"May I give the reply?"

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"Let the Honourable Gentleman wait."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"I do not want to give names but a case did come before me. It was an extremely good case, but unfortunately the Advocate-General advised us that the period of limitation had just passed and we did not proceed further. I intended to utilize that case against the amendment for the reduction of the period of limitation, but he has anticipated me."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"However, I have the satisfaction of knowing that my Honourable Colleague on my right (The Hon'ble Mr. A. Subbarayalu Reddiyar), who has distinguished himself as chairman of a premier municipality for many years did not know the existence of such a section. That shows how unnecessary it is, if from 1884, that is for nearly 35 years, one case came up and that was barred by limitation. I do not know if it is necessary to retain such a provision."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR:—"I think my Honourable Friend will be well advised to withdraw the amendment. I can state certain facts in connexion with one municipality where I held the office of chairman where we discovered that very serious loss had

[14TH FEBRUARY 1919.]

The Hon'ble Dr. T. M. NAYAR :—" I beg to heartily support the amendment. The only possible reason for proposing such a clause as 413 is that a certain number of members who are conversant with the affairs of the corporation should always be on the Corporation. It is for that purpose that partial elections are held in certain bodies. So far as the Madras Corporation is concerned, at no time has there been an occasion when all the old members went out of the corporation. Even after the Madras Municipality came out as the Madras Corporation in 1904, when the municipality ceased to exist as such and first elections were held for the corporation, I do not think that more than 25 per cent of new members came in. All the others who came in were old commissioners. There has been very little change in the subsequent elections. As far as possible they continue old commissioners, and there is no danger whatever of the corporation after any election being left without any old members whatever. There is a good deal of force in what the Hon'ble Sir Gordon Fraser and the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar said that small by-elections do not rouse sufficient interest in the constituencies and educational value on the electorate is a great thing to be had in view. A general election would have that educational value and would rouse interest, much more than partial elections in the minds of the electorate. There is no object in having a thing like that. It is a device which is usually introduced into new bodies, but the Madras Corporation is an exceedingly old body. It is the oldest municipal body in India, it has showed continued existence of a steady character and there is no necessity to introduce a safeguard which is usually intended for infant institutions. I hope the Government will see their way to accept the amendment and to institute triennial elections."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR :—" A verbal amendment may be needed in case it is accepted."

The Hon'ble the ADVOCATE-GENERAL :—" The whole of this amendment is out of order. There is no appointed councillor. So far as appointed councillors are concerned they are for three years. The partial annual election is only with reference to the divisional commissioners. Therefore the reference to the appointed councillors must go out. What would be necessary is to omit those words and not to ask that these appointed and elected commissioners should remain in office for the first two years and then the whole number of them should go out in three years. So far as the appointed and institutional commissioners are concerned, they hold office for three years under clause 60. It is only the thirty divisional commissioners who hold office for three years from 1st November to 1st November, and it is only in respect of the divisional commissioners clause (b) of section 413 proposes this annual partial election instead of a general election once every three years. Therefore the amendment is out of order in that it asks that the appointed councillors should be in office only for two years."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR :—" There is no difficulty. If you introduce the words 'and section 60', it would be all right. They hold office up to the November of the second year; then their office will terminate, and then they will be appointed and then they will hold office for three years. So also the elected commissioners. There is really no difficulty at all. All the people who come in under the new law: their office will terminate on the first day of the month of November following the completion of two years of office."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT :—" The Honourable Gentleman has been dealing with the words; we are settling the words. We have been debating on the principle, let us settle the principle and then deal with the words."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR :—" The drafting may be considered. But so far as the issue on the merits is concerned, this question has been under the very careful consideration both of the Government and of the Select Committee."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR :—" We voted against it, myself and the Hon'ble Sir Gordon Fraser."

The Hon'ble Sir GORDON FRASER :—" It was carried by one vote."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR :—" I shall not now say who was right or who was wrong, I will come to it later. I only say it was considered very carefully. I can quite see the point put forward by the Hon'ble Sir Gordon Fraser, the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar and the Hon'ble Dr. Nayar that what they propose will have an educative influence. What they aim at is that when there is any particular policy which the corporation is pursuing, the general rate-payers should have an opportunity of showing their disapproval by one fine morning dislodging all the thirty councillors and putting in a new set of people, this idea, along with the framers of the Bill and the majority of the Select Committee, thought was that there is also the other need for maintaining some sort of continuity of administration. Suppose the corporation or the commissioner at any time had to do something which was necessary though temporarily unpopular. There is a chance of the whole lot of them having to face the rate-payers and at one stroke being turned out and then a completely new set of men will come in. There is that danger. It is not a wholly imaginary one. I will now take the other policy which we favour. If only ten men go out, twenty will be there and the fresh people will be represented by one-third of the strength of the divisional commissioners. I rather think, without in any way deprecating the point of view put forward by the other side, in the case of a local body especially in the present condition of affairs when the rate-payers have yet to be educated to a high sense of their responsibility, and when we are going to lower the franchise and going to bring in a much larger number of voters on the register, whatever one may hope of them later on, for some time at any rate they will be apt to be swayed by the passing cries of the moment, passing passions, and it is as well that the machinery should not be liable to be turned upside down by a single election. That was what we had in view. I may say that Sir P. S. Sivaswami Ayyar who framed this Bill and the District Municipalities Bill attached great importance to providing some safeguard against any very sudden changes taking place in the constitution of the local body. That is what we had in view, and while I can quite understand the general principles upon which Honourable Members who think otherwise proceed, I think in our country just now, in the present conditions of the local bodies, the balance of advantage is in favour of this system by which one-third of the councillors go out in one year and another one-third the next year and so on. My Hon'ble Friend the Advocate-General points out that the same principle is in force under section 23 of the Local Government Act and I would on the whole advise the Council to leave it there and not to make any change."

14TH FEBRUARY 1919.]

(Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar; Mr. Yaqub Hasan; Sir Gordon Fraser; the Advocate-General.)

The Hon'ble YAQUB HASAN SAHIB Bahadur :—" When Your Excellency was about to put this thing to the vote without giving an opportunity to the Members of the Government to speak on it, I thought that the Government were prepared to accept it. But now I find that they are not going to accept it. If the Hon'ble Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar had only given his first reason for opposing it, that it was well considered by the Select Committee and therefore it ought not to be changed, that is of course the reason which has prompted the Government to stick to the Bill throughout and that reason is good enough in throwing this away also. But when he went to the other reasons he has only given himself away, because the other reasons brought forward are not such as to strengthen his hand in the rejection of this amendment, if his rejection is to depend on reasons. One reason given by him is that if this amendment is adopted the whole corporation will at one stroke be sent out and a new set of members will come in and they will not be able to keep up the continuity of policy."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR :—" I spoke of the thirty divisional commissioners."

The Hon'ble YAQUB HASAN SAHIB Bahadur :—" Yes. So far as the appointed councillors are concerned, we want them also to go out. There is greater reason for their going out than in the case of elected commissioners. No body is ever constituted at the end of its term entirely anew. Always some members do come back and there are some new members, some fresh blood. He said suppose the commissioner wanted to do something really harmful to the corporation, he would just wait for this opportunity for the whole commissioners to go out and the new councillors to come in. I think he will find that he is disappointed. Some of the old commissioners will come in. Even if they do not, he will find his disappointment will be greater, because fresh blood will come in and he will find that the councillors will be able to bring fresh energy into the matter as it is the custom that a new broom sweeps well. The new councillors will be able to tackle the question better than the old fossilised councillors who would have been used to the ways of the commissioner."

" I feel there is another additional advantage in these triennial elections in addition to the advantages mentioned by the Hon'ble Sir Gordon Fraser, the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar and the Hon'ble Dr. Nayar. That is, in a partial election the councillors sometimes exert their influence on behalf of the candidates who present themselves for the partial election; and that influence is not always good. They wish to bring into the council councillors who they think will be useful to them in the corporation and whom they wish to add to their party. The clique of twenty persons in the corporation will always try to bring other ten councillors who are likely to join them in the council. Their authority and influence is very effective and it will be exerted in these elections. If all the thirty councillors are to be elected at one time, they will be busy with their own elections and they will not meddle with the other elections. That is a strong point in favour of triennial elections proposed by the Hon'ble Sir Gordon Fraser. I hope the amendment will not be thrown out. The reasons given for throwing it out are not such as to commend themselves to me."

The Hon'ble Sir GORDON FRASER :—" If it is acceptable, I should like to make a small amendment. I would suggest the omission of the words 'and appointed.' This will meet the objection put forward by the Hon'ble Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar and also probably the legal objection put forward by the Hon'ble the Advocate-General."

The Hon'ble the ADVOCATE-GENERAL :—" If the point is carried all that is necessary is to omit all the eight lines and the amendment will be made. All that is necessary is to omit all the words from 'and for ascertainment by lot.' If you omit those words, every councillor goes out of office every three years, because section 55 dealing with the divisional commissioners says the first of November and section 60 which deals with the appointed commissioners says three years from the date of appointment. This is an exception in the case of divisional commissioners only. I think no amendment is necessary. The only thing necessary is the deletion of the last eight lines beginning with the words 'and for ascertainment by lot' up to the end."

THE MADRAS CITY MUNICIPAL BILL, 1918.

(Sir Gordon Fraser; the President;
Mr. Ranga Achariyar; the Advocate-General.)

[14TH FEBRUARY 1919.]

The Hon'ble Sir GORDON FRASER:—"Your Excellency, if I am in order I will propose the deletion of the last eight lines, all the words after the words 'under this Act' except the last word 'and'."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"There is really an amendment in the earlier part of this clause which we must not cut out by settling anything in regard to sub-clause (b). We are discussing the merits. On the merits I have listened to the debate, and if you will allow me to say so it will be a great pity that the Council should commit itself to this proposal. It is a general provision which applies to local authorities in England. It is a most common procedure, and so far as I have followed the remarks of the Honourable Member responsible for the Bill, this was put in as a natural advance in the development of municipal government for the City of Madras. If I may say so, a municipal body like the corporation is really an administrative body, it is not a legislative body. It is an administrative body administering the powers which it gets from the statute. It is of the highest importance that the machinery should work smoothly and that it should have at its disposal such fund of experience and knowledge as the city can provide. Though it is quite fair to bring in the analogy of general elections to legislative bodies, these analogies are not precise, because they are not dealing with the same material. The municipal corporation has not got a very wide view of policy. It is really an administrative body which has to carry out the duties, as I have already said, imposed on it by statute. Merely as a matter of convenience it has been found elsewhere that it is a wise provision that the elected commissioners should go out by instalments. Thereby you acquire and maintain at the disposal of this Council that fund of experience and information which contributes to the smooth working of the machinery. We are developing under this Bill the system of standing committees. You will have to recollect these standing committees have to be manned. We must give them the best chance of working and I doubt very greatly whether this Council is very wise in rejecting the scheme of the Bill. I have not been able to get all the statutes in England to refer to and to quote to the Council. But I have the Local Government Act of 1894 which establishes urban councils and rural district councils all over England and under this the term of the council shall be three years, and if the district is divided into wards one-third of the councillors shall go out every succeeding year. That is just the principle we have here. I have a doubt—I do not wish to pledge myself unless I have chapter and verse to quote—that is the general municipal practice, and really this was put into the Bill as an instalment of that advance in municipal development, development in municipal government which the Bill represents as a whole. I should be inclined very much to urge the Council to adhere to the proposal in the Bill. As a matter of fact questions of impulse come up in elections. There is not much to choose between electing councillors every three years, the whole of them, and electing one-third each year, because it can always be said that electing one-third gives an opportunity for the expression of opinion every year on municipal government as conducted by the municipal authorities. I would not attach a great deal of weight to the other argument on the other side for the reason I have already given, that the corporation is a business administrative body. It has to carry out and discharge the responsibility imposed upon it by statute, and it has very little to do with questions of a legislative character. Here is the Municipal Corporations Act of 1882, and here I find a similar provision. I was confident that it was so but I did not want to give it without chapter and verse. It is the main Act on the question which applies to the municipal corporations in England. Here we have the term of office of councillors shall be three years, the ordinary election of councillors, and every year one-third of the whole number of councillors shall go out of office and their places shall be filled by election."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"There we have no system of appointed and institutional commissioners."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"It is quite true."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"Here so far as appointed councillors are concerned—"

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"That is what we are advancing to in this country, when there will be a larger proportion of election. It is a pure matter of experience. The original Municipal Corporations Act was passed in the year 1834 or 1836 and from that date to the year 1882, here is the fruit of fifty years' experience in this Act. I cannot help advising the Council that they would be wise in accepting the Bill as it is at present in this respect."

The Hon'ble Sir GORDON FRASER:—"I am sorry I cannot withdraw the amendment. It is the unanimous opinion of the corporation put forward on three separate occasions."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"I quite see there are two different views."

The amendment was put to the Council and lost.

The Hon'ble the ADVOCATE-GENERAL:—"I beg to move the following amendment:—"

"In sub-clause (a) add at the end after the word 'and' the words 'until they so come into office the president, the commissioners, and the standing committee appointed or elected under the Madras City Municipal Act, 1904, shall have all the powers and be subject to all the duties respectively of the commissioner, the councillors, and the standing committees under this Act.'"

"Clause 413 (a) contemplates that the president and the existing commissioners and the members of the standing committee may hold office after the commencement of this Act."

[14TH FEBRUARY 1919.]

(The Advocate-General; the President;
Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar; Mr. Krishna Rao;
Sir Gordon Fraser; Mr. Ranga Achariyar.)

After the Act comes into force, all the powers and duties are expressed with reference to the commissioner, with reference to the four standing committees and with reference to the council. Therefore it is necessary to continue to invest the existing officers of the corporation with the new powers under this Bill, and for that purpose these words are sought to be added. They are merely consequential. They are merely an attempt to carry out what is expressed at the beginning of that clause, namely, that the president, the commissioners and the members of the standing committee shall continue in office after the commencement of the Act, till the new council, members of the standing committee and the commissioner come into office."

The Hon'ble Mr. H. G. Stokes seconded the amendment.
The amendment was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble the ADVOCATE-GENERAL:—"I beg to move an amendment to sub-clause (b):—"

"In sub-clause (b) omit the whole of the clause following the words 'on the first day of November' firstly occurring and substitute the following figures and words:—"

"1920 and of ten more such seats to be vacated on the first day of November 1921 and the councillors elected for the twenty seats so ascertained or the councillors elected in their places in casual vacancies shall hold office until the first day of November 1920 or the first day of November 1921 as the case may be, and the remaining ten divisional councillors shall continue in office until the first day of November 1922 and."

"This is to make it perfectly clear what is proposed to be done. As the clause stands, there may be some difficulty in case the Act comes into operation and the new council is constituted before the 1st November 1920 or soon after the first November 1920. There may be some difficulty in understanding what is meant by the word 'year'. 'Year' is defined to be the financial year. Therefore it is proposed to make it perfectly clear that the first ten out of the divisional commissioners should go out of office in 1920, and the second ten in November 1921, and the remaining ten go out of office in November 1922. What is abstrusely expressed is put in concrete form, and it removes the ambiguity. It does not matter whether the Act is brought into force on the first November or afterwards."

The Hon'ble Mr. H. G. Stokes seconded the amendment.

The amendment was put and agreed to.

Clause 413 as amended was allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Schedule I.

Schedule I was allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Schedule II.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"In regard to schedule II the Hon'ble the Advocate-General has an amendment and there is also an amendment standing in the name of the Hon'ble Mr. Ramanuja Achariyar."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"The Hon'ble Mr. Ramanuja Achariyar's amendment is a verbal amendment and I accept it. I formally propose it."

"The amendment ran as follows:—"

"114. In rule 9 (1) for the word 'their' in the first line, read 'its'."

The Hon'ble the Advocate-General seconded the amendment.
The amendment was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. KRISHNA RAO:—"I beg to move amendment No. 115—"

"115. In rule 7 (2) substitute 'twelve' for 'fifteen' and 'fifteen' for 'twenty'."

"This is a question affecting the quorum in the meetings of the Council. According to the rule as amended by the Select Committee, 15 shall form a quorum for the general meeting and 20 for a special meeting. It will be seen that the number is unnecessarily high when compared with the present Municipal Act and also other Municipal Acts. According to the present Act, section 78, in a corporation consisting of 36 commissioners including the president, 7 is the quorum for a general meeting and 10 for a special meeting. I find that in the original Bill of 1918, the quorum was 10 out of 43 for a general meeting, and 12 out of 43 for a special meeting. Even if it is reduced in the manner suggested from 15 to 12 and from 20 to 15, it will be found that the percentage is much higher than that provided for in the original Bill of 1918 of in the existing Municipal Act. I have worked it out so far as the question of proportion is concerned. Twelve out of fifty is certainly more than 7 out of 36."

The Hon'ble Sir GORDON FRASER:—"I second the amendment proposed by the Hon'ble Mr. Krishna Rao. In doing so I would point out that 20 seems to be an unnecessarily high figure."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"For a special meeting."

The Hon'ble Sir GORDON FRASER:—"You may have a meeting of 25 and a majority of 19 and a minority of 6. It is possible that six members may leave the meeting and then the meeting will have to be adjourned. I certainly think that 15 and 20 are too high."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"I am sorry I have to disagree with my Honourable Friend. I think the proposal of the Select Committee is sound, especially in a body of fifty in the City of Madras. We have never found any difficulty for want of a quorum."

(Mr. Ranga Achariyar; Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar; [14TH FEBRUARY 1919.
the Advocate-General; the President; Mr. Krishna Rao; Mr. M. Ramachandra Rao; Rev. Pittendrigh.)

and the figure fixed by the Select Committee will suit very well. It is a necessary safeguard when we are entrusting responsible affairs—although the responsibility conferred is very little all the same we ought to have this quorum, otherwise there will be danger. I therefore strongly support the Select Committee's recommendation."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"I agree with the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar and oppose the amendment."

The amendment was put and lost.

The following amendment which stood in the name of the Hon'ble Sir Gordon Fraser was not moved:—

'In rule 7 (2) substitute "twelve" and "fifteen" in lieu of "fifteen" and "twenty" respectively.

The Hon'ble the ADVOCATE-GENERAL:—"I move amendment No. 116-A. It runs thus—'In schedule II, rule 15, for the first sixteen words substitute the following:—

"In any case in which two or more standing committees have passed conflicting decisions, and such conflict has not been adjusted or otherwise dealt with by a conference of such committees or a joint committee as provided in sub-section (1) to section 20, the commissioners shall."

"It is merely consequential on the amendment which was made to section 20 (1) and by which power was taken by regulations to appoint a conference or joint committees. It is only a change in the wording of this clause so as to bring it in consonance with that."

The amendment was put and agreed to.

Schedule II as amended was allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Schedule III.

Schedule III was allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Schedule IV.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"The Hon'ble Mr. Ramanuja Achariyar's amendments are merely formal, mere matter of drafting."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"He does not press them."

The following are the amendments of which notice had been given by the Hon'ble Mr. Ramanuja Achariyar and which were not moved:—

117. In rule 23, omit the words "in writing" in the first line.

118. In rule 28, clause (e), omit the words "in writing" in the first and fourth lines.

The Hon'ble the ADVOCATE-GENERAL:—"I beg to move amendment No. 116 (B)—

'In schedule IV, part III, between "every" and "motor bus" insert "tramcar"."

The Hon'ble Mr. H. G. Stokes seconded the amendment.

The amendment was put and agreed to.

Amendments Nos. 119 and 120 which were as follows were not moved:—

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. KRISHNA RAO:—

119. After Part IV, add the following as Part IV-A:—

The terminal tax on railway passengers shall be levied on their tickets at rates not exceeding those shown in the following table:—

For first-class tickets, single	...	...	2 annas.
For second or intermediate class, single	...	...	1 anna.
For third-class tickets, single	...	...	6 pies.

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO:—

120. After Part IV, add the following as Part IV-A:—

The terminal tax on railway passengers shall be levied on their tickets at rates not exceeding those shown in the following table:—

For first-class tickets, single	...	...	2 annas.
For second or intermediate class, single	...	...	1 anna.
For third-class tickets, single	...	...	6 pies.

The Hon'ble the Rev. G. PITTENDRIGH:—"I beg to move amendment No. 121—

'In class VI under rule 8 of Part II, alter "30" and "20" into "15" and "10" respectively; in class VII, "12" and "8" into "6" and "4"; and in class VIII "5" and "4" into "3" and "2"."

"In the lower salaries the incidence of this tax is extremely heavy. Here on a salary above Rs. 500 and less than Rs. 750 the professional tax is a minimum of Rs. 20 for a half-year. It will be an extremely heavy tax on such salaries. It is felt still more in the salaries lower than this. The figures I propose are the figures that are paid to-day. If you go to the higher salaries the taxes may rise in proportion. But it seems to me in the lower salaries these taxes are too heavy."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. Krishna Rao seconded the amendment.

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"I oppose it. It will upset the whole scheme. The value of the rupee has gone down from what it was in 1904. We want money very badly. I strongly oppose the amendment."

14TH FEBRUARY 1919.] (Mr. Ranga Achariyar; Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar;
Mr. M. Ramachandra Rao; the President;
Sir Gordon Fraser; Mr. Molony; the Advocate-General.)

The amendment was put and lost.

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"I beg to move amendment No. 122—

'To rule 13 of Part V add the following proviso:—

"Provided that in cases where the half-yearly instalment of a tax does not exceed Rs. 15, it shall be always open to the commissioner to exempt the applicant before admitting the application from the prepayment of the tax as required in clause (b)."

"This relates to the prepayment of tax before a man can appeal against the enhancement. The law requires that he has to pay the tax before he can appeal. It has been felt a great hardship in several cases. I propose to give power to the commissioner to exempt people when the amount of the tax does not exceed Rs. 15 from prepayment. In such cases it will be hard to compel the assesses to prepay the tax. It often causes hardship in the case of poor widows and poverty-stricken people. To compel them to prepay the tax is really to deprive them of the right of appeal. I therefore propose to entrust this discretion to the commissioner."

The Hon'ble Mr. K. Chidambaranatha Mudaliyar seconded the amendment.

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"I would accept it; it is only giving a discretion to the commissioner."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO:—"In the mufassal municipalities considerable objection is taken by the auditors. There must be some discretion. The rule must be certainly prepayment, but the commissioner must have power to relax it where it is not advisable to insist on it. Especially when there is a period of limitation, I have felt it hard to reject the appeal on the ground that the tax is not prepared. I would strongly support this amendment."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"My Honourable Friend is quite willing to accept it."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"The word 'always' may be omitted."

The amendment with the word 'always' omitted was agreed to.

The Hon'ble Sir GORDON FRASER:—"I beg to move amendment No. 123:—

In rule 13 (a) (i) of Part V, substitute 'thirty days' for 'fifteen days' in first and fourth lines.

"The rule is any assessee who is dissatisfied with the assessment of any tax under this Act other than the transfer duty and the tax on timber and firewood may make an application in writing to the commissioner for the revision of such assessment stating the grounds of his objection thereto; and the time allowed is 15 days. I do not think that the time given is sufficient. Rule 13 (a) (i) and 13 (a) (ii) go together. Amendment No. 124 is with regard to the latter, I should like to speak on both at once. In Madras we have sometimes long periods of holidays and I take it that they would count in the period of notice. That is one of the reasons why I think the time is short. Therefore I move these two amendments."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. Krishna Rao seconded the amendment.

The Hon'ble Mr. J. C. MOLONY:—"I beg to oppose it, My Lord. The present Act allows only 15 days. I think really for a person who takes a sufficient interest in or who is sufficiently aggrieved by the professional tax 15 days is quite sufficient. If he will not bestir himself within 15 days he will not bestir himself within 30 days. There has been no complaint."

The Hon'ble Sir GORDON FRASER:—"Your Excellency, the Hon'ble Mr. Molony has referred to the demand for the tax, but under rule 13 I do not think it is the case of demand. Demand will come later. It refers to rule 2 (i) of schedule IV. 'When the registers are complete in respect of any division or part of a division, the commissioner shall give public notice stating where, and between what hours, such registers may be inspected'. The demand may be quite a different matter. In the case of personal demand I think the time would be sufficient, but in the case of public notice I do not think the time is enough."

Amendment No. 123 was put and lost.

Amendment No. 124 which ran as follows:—

In rule 13 (a) (ii) of Part V substitute 'ten days' in lieu of 'seven days' was put and lost.

The Hon'ble the ADVOCATE-GENERAL:—"I beg to move that the reference to firewood be omitted in this schedule."

The Hon'ble Mr. H. G. Stokes seconded the amendment.

The amendment was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Sir GORDON FRASER:—"Part of my amendment No. 125 has already been accepted. The Government have gone further than my amendment. I fix the amount as five, the Government have fixed Rs. 15. I think my amendment is included in the amendment which has been accepted. I withdraw the amendment."

(Sir Gordon Fraser; Mr. Ranga Achariyar; Mr. Molony; Mr. Krishna Rao; Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar; Mr. M. Ramachandra Rao.) [14TH FEBRUARY 1919.]

With the permission of His Excellency the President, the Hon'ble Sir Gordon Fraser withdrew amendment No. 125 which was as follows:—

In rule 13 (b) of Part V after sub-clause (b) and before 'Explanation' add the following proviso:—

'Provided that the commissioner may at his discretion admit any application without prepayment of the tax and shall do so when the amount of the tax does not exceed Rs. 5.'

The Hon'ble Sir GORDON FRASER:—"I move amendment No. 126."

In rule 15 (a) (ii) of Part V substitute 'twenty days' in lieu of 'fourteen days'.

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"I second the amendment."

The Hon'ble Mr. J. C. MOLONY:—"I beg to oppose it, Your Excellency. First of all I submit 14 days is sufficient. Again this will cause delay in the presentation of the appeal."

The amendment was put and lost.

Schedule IV as amended was allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Schedule V.

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. KRISHNA RAO:—"Your Excellency, I have the honour to move amendment No. 127 which is 'omit sub-rule (c) of rule 5'. I draw the attention of the Council to page 94 in the draft Bill. This is not found there. The Select Committee newly introduced this clause. The Select Committee say 'we have included in the category of incidental objects of expenditure the payment of out-of-pocket expenses incurred bona fide by Councillors in the discharge of any special duties entrusted to them'. I wish that the policy which has hitherto been pursued by Municipal Councillors with the idea that they have been doing honorary work is continued and that this new system is not introduced. It is not in the original Bill, but the Select Committee thought it fit to introduce this provision. There is no necessity for it and there are difficulties in working it."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"May I explain why it was introduced? Here councillors are sent to inspect houses in respect of the payment of tax and other things. Sometimes they have to go to the Red Hills and there are various other cases where they incur out-of-pocket expenses. It is purely out-of-pocket expenses which will be covered. The Corporation motor car is sent but sometimes it is not available. For such purposes only this is intended."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"As one of the members of the Select Committee responsible for putting it in, I quite see the point; at the same time there is danger as pointed out by the Hon'ble Mr. Krishna Rao in a provision like this."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO:—"This will be necessary because several times Municipal Corporation's representatives will have to go to conferences as happened last time in the case of the Municipal Conference here. At that time several municipalities asked the Government to permit their representatives to come here travelling at the expense of these bodies. Assuming that any representative of the Madras Corporation is invited to conference in Bombay or Calcutta for the study of municipal questions, I should like to know under what head any expenditure such as that would be inserted here. What happened last time was, as Your Excellency is well aware, that several municipalities asked that their representatives should come to Madras and attend the conference. I had to make a special reference to validate the expenditure incurred in travelling, as it was considered a matter of policy, and that expenditure was not validated. The corporations should be permitted to send their representatives to go and attend conferences or study municipal questions, and I would rather keep it than do away with it. There is a qualification that it should be in the discharge of special duties entrusted to them."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"I may be permitted to say that on the whole the balance of advantage is in favour of omitting the provision. I say that all the more readily, because I was one of those who had a part in putting it in. After all any small expenditure in doing public work can be provided for by rules elsewhere."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO:—"Where?"

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"Why do you want to put it in the Act?"

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"Under what rule can it be done? All the purposes for which municipal funds will be spent are set out here."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"It must be out-of-pocket expenses and it must be bona fide actually incurred and it must be a special duty. Personally I would vote for the deletion of this provision."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. KRISHNA RAO:—"Since some of my non-official friends are under misapprehension about it, I may say that I do not say that councillors who are called upon to go and attend municipal conferences should not be paid travelling allowances. For that there is a provision, though the special sanction of the Government is necessary. Why put in a provision which is calculated to effect that object in an indirect manner? If it is the object of the Council to allow members of the municipal corporation to have a carriage allowance, it is desirable to put it in direct form. We know that under the District Municipalities Act the Secretary may draw some allowances. If it is intended that for the purpose of inspection, they should be in a position to draw some allowance, it is desirable that some specific provision is made; but to bring it indirectly under out-of-pocket expenses is not correct. These have to be defined carefully and subjected to various restrictions. This is not direct. While I agree with the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar that councillors who are expected to do honorary work and who in the discharge of their duty incur expenses for the purpose of inspection should be paid remuneration, I have objection to this form of providing for it. If that is an object of expenditure let us say that municipal councillors should be paid some sort of allowance for inspection and other work. So long as this provision is not calculated to attain that object, I am not for it."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"One word, Your Excellency. It appears to me we are pushing Puritanism with a vengeance. I quite recognise the value of voluntary work, but at the same time I do not understand this objection to a very limited provision made carefully and in a guarded way for out-of-pocket expenses incurred bona fide in the discharge of special duties. What is the use of travelling out of the clause and suggesting that under the guise of this they may recover this expense and that? It is protesting too much. I am strongly for retaining this clause. Occasions really arise when we have to put people on special duty. People might refuse to take that special duty on account of the cost involved on it. I do not think it will do any harm, on the other hand it will be a useful provision. I do not think any mischief is done by retaining this clause."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"We may continue the existing provision."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"We all vote for the amendment."

The amendment was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"The consequential arrangements will be made by the Secretary."

Schedule V as amended was allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Schedule VI.

The Hon'ble Sir GORDON FRASER:—"Your Excellency, I have the honour to move amendment No. 128:—

Omit the following:—

'packing, pressing, cleansing, preparing or manufacturing by any process whatever—pottery, candles, cement, dyes, leather, soap, sugar, sugarcandy, clothes, flour, silk, paper'; and add to the list shown under the heading of 'storing, packing, pressing, cleansing, preparing or manufacturing by any process whatever'—"pottery", "candles", "cement", "dyes", "leather", "soap", "sugar", "sugarcandy", "clothes", "flour", "silk", "paper".

Add the following proviso:—

"Provided that no licence shall be necessary for storage only of the above commodities in limited quantities as fixed by the Commissioner from time to time."

"Schedule VI gives a list of purposes for which premises may not be used without a licence. There are two lists and the difference between the two lists is simply the omission of the word 'storage' in the second list. I think it is a great mistake, because the corporation should have the right of saying where any commodity of any kind should be stored in bulk in the city. There are many reasons. The main reason is one of health. It would be a mistake to allow any private individual to store sugar or sugarcandy or flour in any part of the city he likes. He may have godowns built in parts where they are not desirable. The proviso at the end of my amendment says 'provided that no licence shall be necessary for storage only of the above commodities in limited quantities as fixed by the commissioner from time to time.' That gets over the difficulty of small quantities stored by retail traders for sale and also by private individuals for their own consumption. The Hon'ble Mr. Narasimha Ayyar yesterday mentioned the point of plans being submitted for a house and the building being used for storing grain. The objection would be taken later on if it were used only for storing grain. It is evident that there are objections to it and I think it would be advisable if the word storage were added. My amendment is that the second list should also be included in the first list."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. Krishna Rao seconded the amendment.

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"Your Excellency, I am sorry I have to oppose the amendment. The object of the amendment will be to compel a licence to be taken out for the storing of pottery, candles, cement, dyes, leather, soap, sugar, sugarcandy, clothes, flour, silk and paper. Really there is no harm done except in the case of, even according to the Hon'ble Sir Gordon Fraser, sugar and sugarcandy and flour. I think he mentioned only those instances. I know his objection relates to all but he illustrated his objection by reference to sugar, sugarcandy and flour. In the case of sugar and sugarcandy, as Your Excellency knows, there are many petty shops scattered all over the city where they have to sell it and therefore to store it for that purpose. It would be a hardship upon these retail dealers to compel them to take out a licence. So also in the case of flour. In remote places like Royapetta, or Teynampet and such other places these shopkeepers have to store these things for their daily vending. It is a departure which the Honourable Member is proposing. I have not heard of any complaint arising from the present practice and it would not be right to accept this proposal.

"I quite agree that so far as leather is concerned, in the case of storing leather there may be necessity for a licence and leather may be included in the first portion. But with regard to all the rest, I oppose the amendment as it would interfere with petty dealers and it would interfere with the convenience of the people. I do not think any licence is necessary for storing them. Therefore, Your Excellency, I shall move an amendment so far as this is concerned to omit 'leather' in the second portion and include it in the first portion."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"I think it will be wise before he moves the amendment—it will be for the convenience of the Council and the progress of the debate that the attitude of the Government on the main amendment should be known before he moves another amendment."

The Hon'ble Mr. J. C. MOLONY:—"Your Excellency, I beg to oppose the Hon'ble Sir Gordon Fraser's amendment. The chief reason is these items do not form a whole in which you can lay down abstract principles, but you have to consider them separately from the point of view of practical convenience. They were considered very carefully in the Select Committee and we have passed the Schedule in this way from such experience as we have gained. We do not want to extend this licence system. I do not want to do anything which involves the extending of licences to premises which will be so numerous as to result in an oppression to the people and a worry to the municipality. Nobody could say that this is a perfect category, but it is the best we can get now. There is one slight alteration which the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar would propose and which I would support. The Hon'ble Sir Gordon Fraser's proposal is to add all these items en bloc to the first portion. I would oppose it from the experience gained in licensing."

The Hon'ble Sir GORDON FRASER:—"In reply to the criticism on my amendment I would just like to say that I specially referred in my opening remarks to the petty traders and pointed out that the proviso in my amendment gave ample protection in that respect and that it was open to the commissioner to declare from time to time what limited quantities of these commodities could be stored without a licence. I again say that I consider that the corporation should have complete power in deciding where any article—I do not care what it is—in bulk should be stored. I say in bulk and not in small quantities. I would ask your Excellency to put them separately."

The first portion of the amendment, i.e., the whole of it except the proviso, was put and lost.

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"I want to include 'leather' in the first portion and to omit it in the latter."

The Hon'ble Sir GORDON FRASER:—"Actually tanned leather is the least harmful."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"I propose that in schedule VI in the first portion after the word 'horns' and before the words 'lime shells' the word 'leather' be inserted, and that the word 'leather' be omitted in the second portion."

The Hon'ble Mr. J. C. MOLONY seconded the amendment.

The Hon'ble Yaqub Hasan Sahib Bahadur:—"I beg to oppose it."

The Hon'ble Mr. J. C. MOLONY:—"If there is to be opposition, I may be allowed to state my reasons. It is a matter in which the standing committee and the corporation have expressed a strong opinion. What we hold is the leather trade is profitable. What we find is there has been a strong move in turning residential quarters into leather godowns, and the standing committee have expressed a strong opinion on it. We are constantly beholding people being driven out for storing leather."

The Hon'ble Yaqub Hasan Sahib Bahadur:—"The Hon'ble Mr. Molony is entirely wrong. This second clause says that packing, pressing, cleansing, preparing or manufacturing cannot be done as far as leather is concerned without a licence. The only question is with regard to storage. If this amendment is carried, it will mean that leather cannot be stored. As far as manufacturing is concerned, it cannot be manufactured as the clause stands. The difference between these two lists is that storing is omitted in the second case and it is included in the first. There is no harm in storing leather in the city. Leather is tanned skin or tanned hide. Raw skin and hides according to the first list cannot be stored without a licence, but in the second list leather can be stored. There is no harm in storing it. If this amendment is carried it would mean that even in a shop like Messrs. Spencer & Co., or Oakes & Co., or Chambers & Co., leather and other kinds of leather goods will not be allowed to be stored. It may be said that in the raw state skins and hides are a nuisance in one way or other and their storage may affect the health of the locality. But by no stretch of imagination can it be said that skin or hide, when it is prepared, manufactured and turned into leather, is dangerous to health. Therefore I oppose this amendment."

14TH FEBRUARY 1919.] (Sir Gordon Fraser; Mr. Molony; Mr. Narasimha Ayyar; Mr. Thonger; Mr. Ranga Achariyar; the President; Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar.)

The Hon'ble Sir GORDON FRASER:—"The Hon'ble Mr. Molony fully confirms my view and supports me in the reasons that actuated me in putting forward this amendment. He states that there have been considerable complaints from residents against leather godowns being erected in residential quarters for storage of leather."

The Hon'ble Mr. J. C. MOLONY:—"The Hon'ble Sir Gordon Fraser has not correctly stated what I said. I stated that residences are being evacuated by landlords and these residential quarters are being turned into leather godowns."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR:—"This seems to be a totally irrelevant consideration now."

The Hon'ble Sir GORDON FRASER:—"I misunderstood the Hon'ble Mr. Molony. I thought the complaints were from residents, but he says the complaint is that the landlords are turning the houses into leather godowns. If that argument is of any use in the case of leather, it applies with equal force to the other articles. Really that argument has no weight."

The Hon'ble Mr. J. H. THONGER:—"I would explain that this clause was reconstructed at my suggestion. In the first instance the idea in my mind was that retail dealers should be protected from the necessity to take out licences. So far as my firm is concerned we have got a dozen licences for storage of leather, candle and other things which we stock in small quantities. If you are going to transfer it back to the first list, we will have to take out a licence for a small quantity of leather kept for making boots. If the Hon'ble Sir Gordon Fraser's proviso which protects the retail trader is accepted, I have no objection."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"I do not see how anybody is affected by merely taking out a licence. It is merely to enable the corporation to know where it is stored."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"The question is whether the word 'leather' should be inserted between the words 'horns' and 'lime shells.'"

The amendment was put and agreed to.

The consequential amendment to omit 'leather' in the second portion was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"I propose that the word 'cloths' be omitted in the second category. It has got in by mistake."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR seconded the amendment.

The Hon'ble Mr. J. C. MOLONY:—"I wish to explain that what we want to put in is cloth-dyers and not those who weave cloths. The Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar will subsequently propose an amendment for that purpose."

The Hon'ble Sir GORDON FRASER:—"I oppose it, Your Excellency, I think the corporation should have power to license the premises where the packing, pressing, cleansing, preparing or manufacturing of cloths is done."

The amendment was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"With Your Excellency's permission I propose that the words 'dyeing cloths' be introduced in the schedule after 'casting metals, gilding, electro-plating.'"

The amendment was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR:—"I would suggest a small matter for the consideration of the Government. In respect of the spread of plague, it has been discovered that it is a great source of danger if grain is stored on a large scale. Infection remains there for a long time. We must have some means of licensing and regulating such places. So in the Madras Municipal Act we should have some means of checking the storing of grain beyond a certain quantity. There will be no attempt to check the storage of small quantities of grain. I would suggest the word 'grain' be added after the word 'fish.'"

The Hon'ble Mr. J. H. Thonger seconded the amendment.

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"The whole of this list is revisable by notification from time to time."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR:—"Is this unimportant?"

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"This particular thing was considered and we thought it would be difficult to work it."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR:—"Then I do not press it further."

The Hon'ble Sir GORDON FRASER:—"I beg to move the proviso formally. I may be permitted to substitute the words 'Standing Committee' for 'Commissioner'."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"I think the word 'only' there goes out as consequential on the previous amendment."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"Should not some one say who is to control the limited quantities?"

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"The same people who issue the licences."

(Mr. Ranga Achariyar; Mr. Molony; the President; [14TH FEBRUARY 1919.
Mr. Yaqub Hasan; the Advocate-General;
Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar.]

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"It may be fixed by the standing committee."

The Hon'ble Mr. J. C. MOLONY:—"It is better to have one person."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"That will be settled by the by-laws and regulations."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"I do not think it is a matter with which the Council need concern itself. It is intended to safeguard the petty dealers."

The proviso in the Hon'ble Sir Gordon Fraser's amendment was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble YAQUB HASAN SAHIB Bahadur:—"I move that the word 'packing' be omitted."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"Where does the Honourable Gentlemen want to omit it?"

The Hon'ble YAQUB HASAN SAHIB Bahadur:—"In the second portion. First there is 'storing, packing, pressing, etc.' At the bottom of the page there is 'packing, pressing, cleansing, etc.' I want the word 'packing' to be omitted in the second portion for this reason. The pottery, candle and other things will be for sale in the shops in the city in unlicensed places; licence is wanted only for places where these are manufactured. Where they are for sale they will sometimes have to be packed. Packing sugar and candles should not be subjected to the licence, nor paper nor silk. Packing of any of these things is not dangerous. Why should licence be taken simply for the sake of packing in the shops? A shop which is selling candles now would have to take a licence for that place simply to pack candles there. I think it was not the intention and the word has crept in by mistake. I think no harm will be done by omitting the word 'packing'."

The amendment fell through for want of a seconder.

Schedule VI as amended was allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Schedule VII.

The Hon'ble the ADVOCATE-GENERAL:—"Reference to firewood wherever it occurs may be omitted in this schedule."

This amendment was put and agreed to.

Schedule VII as amended was allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Schedule VIII.

Schedule VIII was allowed to stand part of the Bill.

The Preamble.

The Preamble was allowed to stand part of the Bill.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"The Bill is now complete except in one matter which the Government have undertaken to consider and should they deem necessary the attention of the Council at the next meeting will be drawn to it. That is the question of the Island and the Cocum in clause 101 (d). That sub-clause may have to be brought before the attention of the Council. That is the only question that will be left."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"Liquor shops?"

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"The undertaking in regard to the licence fee was that the Government of India would be addressed. There is no alteration in the Bill. Therefore it will not come before the Council. The only other point that may have to be brought before the Council is what I mention. The Bill will be before the next meeting on the motion that it be passed into law. I think that concludes our business. I think we ought to express our acknowledgments to the Hon'ble Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar and the Hon'ble the Advocate-General for their labours in this matter. I cordially thank them and the Council too. It has been really a little bit of heavy work and I should like to say how much indebted the Government are for the careful examination and attention which has been given by the Honourable Members to the details of this very heavy and long piece of legislation."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"May I be permitted to say a word about the labours of the select committee? They met almost from day to day for two or three months, and I have no hesitation in saying, at considerable inconvenience and sacrifice of time. Many of them are business men. The Government and the Council are much obliged to them for the way in which they have contributed to the Bill."

The Council then adjourned sine die.

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur S. R. M. Annamalai Chettiyar.

2 Q.—Now that hostilities have ceased and peace is in sight, will the Government be pleased to take the necessary steps for the total abolition of the passport system and for the restoration of the original freedom to persons desiring to voyage to places in the Straits Settlements, the Federated Malay States and French Cochinchina for business or for other purposes?

Taluk boards in which the privilege of electing presidents is to be granted.

5 Q.—Now that the cessation of hostilities is freeing more steamers for their normal purposes, will the Government be pleased to take the necessary steps to get restored as early as possible the Madras-Rangoon weekly steamer service for passengers, cargo and mails?

Restoration of the Madras-Rangoon weekly steamer service.

5 A.—This Government have no control over the movements of shipping and are unable to give any indication of the prospects of an early resumption of the weekly mail service to Rangoon, having in view the fact that the strain of demobilization on the world's shipping resources is almost equal to the strain imposed by war conditions.

24 A.—In February 1917 the Masulipatam Municipal Council applied for a grant of Rs. 60,000 for the improvement of certain storm water drains. The Council was asked to renew the application after revising the plans and estimates as recommended by the Sanitary Board in their Resolution No. 514 S, dated 31st August 1917. The Council has not yet renewed its application for a grant.

Water-supply scheme for Narasaraopet and Peddapuram.

25 Q.—Will the Government be pleased to state in what state of progress the schemes for the improvement of the water-supply for Narasaraopet and Peddapuram are and when they are likely to be finally sanctioned?

25 A.—The scheme for the water-supply of Narasaraopet is under execution by the Public Works Department. A full-power test is now being made. A sum of Rupees 14,000 has been spent on the works, and a sum of Rs. 24,800 has been provided for expenditure in 1919-20. Publication of Mr. Tampoe's reports on the agricultural practices in the Godavari Western delta.

27 A.—The Government have not yet received the Special Officer's report and are not in a position to decide whether it will be expedient to publish the papers before orders are passed. The inquiries made in 1916 and 1917 were inconclusive owing to the nature of the seasons in issue and it was therefore found necessary to continue the investigation in 1918.

28 A.—The draft Elementary Education Bill prepared by the Local Government is now under the consideration of the Government of India.

The Hon'ble Mr. L. DAVIDSON:—"The Government do not consider it desirable to give any information on that point."

Memorial from the employees in the Government Press, Mount Road.

31 A.—The memorial in question has been received and is under the consideration of the Government.

32 Q.—(a) Will the Government be pleased to state whether they have received petitions for extension of the Malabar Tenants Improvement Act to the Nilgiri district? From whom? (b) Will the Government be pleased to state what steps they have already taken or intend to take for the alleviation of the distress particularly in the matter of supplies and prices of rice, dholl, pulses, chillies, vegetable-oils and kerosene oil?

9 A.—(a) Yes.

(b) It is impossible to include in the answer to a question any adequate account of the steps taken and proposed to be taken on a matter of such complexity, but a statement will be made on these points in the Council in connexion with a resolution on the agenda.

Requests of the Ryotwari Landholders' Association to relieve distress.

10 Q.—(a) Have the Government perused the proceedings of a meeting of the Ryotwari Landholders' Association held in Madras on the 10th February 1919 under the presidency of the Hon'ble Mr. Chidambaranatha Mudaliyar published in the morning edition of the Madras Times of the 17th February 1919 embodying resolutions requesting Government—

(1) to start test relief works in various places, particularly in the dry tracts,
(2) to remove the inter-district restrictions to the export of grain,
(3) to fix the maximum prices of food-grains in suitable areas and to open in urban and rural centres grain shops for selling grain to the poor, and
(4) to suspend collection of kist in dry and wet tracts where there has been a failure of rain or water-supply and consequent non-cultivation or serious failure of crops, with a view to eventual remission after inquiry?

10 A.—(a) The Government have now perused the proceedings of the meeting of the Association referred to.

(4) In areas adversely affected by the monsoon, action is being taken as regards suspension or remission of revenue in accordance with the rules contained in Board's Standing Orders Nos. 13 and 14.

Scarcity of kerosene oil.

11 Q.—Are the Government aware of the great inflation in the price of kerosene oil in many localities, and will the Government be pleased to state the causes that have led to this distress and the steps they intend to take to remedy the same?

11 A.—Yes. The chief cause that has led to the shortage of the stocks of kerosene oil is the reduction owing to the war in the amount of shipping available for the transport of oil to this Presidency. This cause has been lately made serious by one of the few available steamers having been temporarily put out of use by an accident. It is, however, believed that improved shipping arrangements will shortly enable the transport of kerosene oil to India in total quantities nearly equal to those of 1916-17.

Rules for the regulation and control of the sale of kerosene oil were issued in the Kerosene oil order which was published in notification No. 36, dated 24th August 1918, at page 913 of the Fort St. George Gazette, dated 27th August 1918.

Shooting of eight Mappillas by the Police.

12 Q.—(a) Are the Government aware that Special Police Force and a section of Anglo-Indian Force from Malappuram (Malabar) shot and killed eight Mappillas and wounded one at a Kalam recently?

(b) Will the Government be pleased to make inquiries and place on the table information as to the killing of these men?

12 A.—The preliminary reports received by the Government show that the Mappilla outbreak referred to commenced on the early morning of the 7th February not far from Malappuram. The fanatics, who were nine in number, were led by an ex-convict actuated by feelings of strong personal enmity against certain Nambudris and others whom he believed to have done him injustice. They set out with guns, knives and other weapons including dynamite and began by murdering five Nambudris, wounding a sixth person and burning part of a temple. Proceeding in the direction of Pandalur they committed two more murders and burnt a number of houses and at least one more temple, after which they took up a strong position in a farm-house, where by the evening of the same day they were rounded up by a small cycle section from the Malappuram Special Police. Reinforcements arrived during the night including a detachment brought from Calicut by the District Magistrate and the District Superintendent of Police and early next morning the District Magistrate decided to send to Malappuram for a field-gun to dislodge the fanatics from their stronghold as it could not have been rushed without risk of heavy loss of life to the police and all endeavours to bring about a surrender had proved useless. The District Magistrate warned the Mappillas that the gun had been sent for and would be used against them if they did not come out and give themselves up, but they refused to entertain the idea of surrender and announced their intention to meet their adversaries face to face and die fighting. The gun arrived about 3 p.m. in charge of a section of the Anglo-Indian Force and a few shells induced the fanatics to throw open the doors of the gate house in which they were crowded together: simultaneously they burst into the customary chant and discharged a volley. After a brief exchange of rifle-fire the farm-house was stormed and it was found that of the nine occupants eight had been killed and the ninth was wounded so severely that on the following day he died.

The formal inquiry into this outbreak is not yet complete but when the final official report has been received the Government will consider the question of publishing papers.

33 A.—The attention of the Board of Revenue and of all Conservators and District Forest Officers has been drawn to the discussion that took place on the Honourable Member's resolution about the provision of drinking water for cattle-grazing in the reserved forests. A provision of about Rs. 20,000 has been made in the budget for 1919-20 for the purpose.

(b) whether they have made or would make representations to the Government of India or the Railway Board for abolition or reduction of such rates during times of pressure like the present?

37 A.—The Government are aware that railway rates necessarily raise the price of food-grains which have to be carried by rail. Representations on the subject were made to the Railway Board in December last and as a result the rates over the Bengal-Nagpur Railway for grain were considerably reduced. The Railway Board have also directed that the railway surcharge of 2 pies per maund should not be levied in future on food-grains covered by a certificate from the Director of Civil Supplies or carried under the authority of the Foodstuffs Commissioner.

The Hon'ble Sir ALEXANDER CARDEW:—"I do not know whether the Honourable Member has seen the Government Order referred to in the first part of the answer to question No. 62. That Government Order shows the facts of the case and that is intended to be the reply to clause (b) of the Honourable Member's question."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"I have read that Government Order only this morning. I do not know whether any memorial was sent at all."

The Hon'ble Sir ALEXANDER CARDEW:—"What is the Honourable Member's question?"

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"Was any memorial submitted?"

(d) Will the Government be further pleased to state whether the principle or rule, if any, observed in his case was observed in similar cases which came up to the Government later? If it was not so observed, will the Government be pleased to state why it was not so observed?

47 A.—(a) The Government called for a report in April 1918 from the Board of Revenue whether more effective measures can be devised for preventing encroachments on porambokes. The Board's report has been received and is under the consideration of the Government.

Will the papers on the subject be placed on the table?

49 A.—The Madras City was surveyed in 1854—64 and resurveyed in 1895—97, but many defects were afterwards discovered which prevented the proper maintenance of the land records of the city and a resurvey of the city was therefore ordered in 1914.

The Government do not consider it necessary to place the papers on the table.

50 Q.—Will the Government be pleased to lay on the table the papers on the subject of the experimental registration of vital statistics in selected typical areas, for which provision has been made in the civil budget estimate for 1919—1920?

54 Q.—(a) Is it a fact that the district co-operative banking unions are now required to keep in hand cash equivalent to half the deposits to be paid during the year?

(b) If so, will the Government be pleased to reconsider their orders in view of the fact that unions have to finance societies which depend greatly on them for their needs?

(c) Will the Government be pleased to at least modify the rule so as to require that district co-operative banking unions should keep in hand cash equivalent to the deposits to be paid by them during the month?

54 A.—(a) No. Central banks are required to keep available in an easily realizable form a sum sufficient to meet half the fixed deposits falling due during the ensuing year, but this sum need not be in cash.

(b) & (c) The question of the standard of fluid resources will be considered on receipt of the final orders of the Government of India on the recommendations of the Imperial Committee on Co-operation.

55 A.—The Government will inquire.

56 Q.—Considering the vast difference in the modes of cultivation in the Agency tracts and in the plains, will the Government be pleased to start an experimental agricultural farm at a suitable place in the Vizagapatam Agency?

56 A.—A similar proposal made by the Collector of Vizagapatam has been recently investigated by the Government, but owing to want of trained staff it was found impracticable to adopt it.

57 Q.—Will the Government be pleased to consult the Collector of Vizagapatam and the Divisional Officer of Koraput in view to reducing the arrack shops in parts of the Vizagapatam Agency where people are averse to their existence?

57 A.—The Board of Revenue consults the Collector every year before approving the list of arrack shops to be opened. The number of arrack shops in the Vizagapatam Agency has been reduced from 1,063 in 1901—1902 to 218 in 1918—19, and it is proposed to open only 123 shops for 1919—20. The Government have no reason to think that shops exist in places where people do not want them.

58 Q.—Will the Government be pleased to state what steps have been taken by the Educational Department to check the spread of cigarette or bidi smoking among school boys?

58 A.—In 1914 the Director of Public Instruction issued a circular to all Inspectors and heads of secondary and training schools requesting the heads of educational institutions to prohibit boys from smoking in the school premises or in the playgrounds.

60 A.—The Government have as yet heard nothing from the Railway Board but will make inquiries.

On the Indian Civil Service Association, its objects and aims.

61 Q.—Will the Government be pleased to state
(i) whether they are aware of the existence of the 'Indian Civil Service Association' in this Presidency; and

(ii) Will the Government be pleased to state

(a) whether any such memorandum was really sent up; and

(b) if so, whether the transmission of the memorandum is not opposed to the regulations governing the conduct of the public servants in this Presidency?

(iii) Will the Government be pleased to lay the said regulations on the table and also to take such action as it deems necessary in order to prevent the members of the said service joining in an agitation against the Reform scheme?

62 A.—(i) The attention of the Honourable Member is drawn to G.O. No. 115, Public, dated 6th March 1919, which has been placed on the Editors' Table. From the papers therein recorded, the Honourable Member will observe that the draft memorandum in question did not purport to have been sent up by the members of the Indian Civil Service in this Presidency to the Government of India and the Secretary of State but was headed 'A rough draft intended as the basis of a memorial' and was circulated in a letter marked confidential which expressly stated that 'the document enclosed had not yet been cast in the form of a memorial but was intended only as a rough draft.' The memorandum was not published by the Indian Civil Service Association but published by New India without permission or authority of the association. The covering letter was not published.

(ii) (a) & (b) The draft memorial has not been sent in by the Indian Civil Service Association or by any member thereof.

(iii) There is no rule prohibiting Government officers from forming an association for the protection of the interests of their service nor is there any rule prohibiting them from consulting together regarding the preparation of a memorial to the Government, but by rule 5 of the Petition Rules every officer in civil employ wishing to petition the Government should do so separately.

Pension to teachers and other servants of local bodies not benefited by the Provident fund scheme.

(b) Will the Government be pleased to sanction some scheme of pension in their case?

63 A.—(a) The Government do not consider that the Provident fund fails to benefit servants of the kind referred to.

(b) The Government do not propose to take the action suggested.

Import of rice into Kurnool from Kistna.

64 Q.—(i) Are the Government aware that there is a great shortage of rice in the town of Kurnool?

(ii) Will the Government be pleased to instruct the Director of Civil Supplies to allow the export of rice from the Kistna district to licensed dealers in the Kurnool town?

11TH MARCH 1919.] (Mr. Siva Rao; the Zamindar of Serugada.)

(iii) (a) Is it a fact that the Kurnool merchants purchased large stocks of rice in Ellore between the 1st and the 25th of January last for import into the town of Kurnool and that the application for wagons made to the Director of Civil Supplies for the purpose was refused by him?

(b) If so, will the Government be pleased to instruct the Director to sanction the requisite number of wagons for the purpose?

64 A.—(i) The Government do not possess special information regarding the town of Kurnool but are aware that the price of rice is very high there, as in many other places.

(ii) The export of rice from the Kistna district to licensed dealers in Kurnool town is already permitted up to 5,000 bags a month and 1,600 bags have been actually certificated for the Kurnool district since 2nd February.

(iii) (a) & (b) The Government are not aware of the circumstances under which the purchases referred to were made and therefore cannot undertake to interfere with the orders of the Director of Civil Supplies.

65 Q.—(a) Will the Government be pleased to state what amounts have been sanctioned or spent in the current and in the previous three years for removing the silt from and otherwise repairing the Tungabhadra channels in the Hospet taluk in the Bellary district, and how much has been sanctioned in the coming year?

(b) Will the Government be pleased to sanction liberal allotments for the purpose in view of the large amount of silt to be removed from the said channels?

65 A.—The Government are not in possession of the information desired. The channels in question are controlled partly by the Public Works Department and partly by the Revenue Department, and so far as the Government are aware, there is no reason to suppose that the provision made for the purpose is inadequate. If any application for additional grants should be made by the local officers, it will receive full consideration.

The Hon'ble the Zamindar of Serugada.

66 Q.—The Oriya District Association, Ganjam, and Hitaishini Samaj, Parlakimedi, waited on and placed the grievances of the Oriyas before His Excellency the Governor during his recent tour in Ganjam. Have the representations received the consideration of Government as promised?

66 A.—The representations made on the occasion in question are under consideration.

67 Q.—Considering the paucity of Oriyas in the public service and that vacancies in Government appointments are few and far between, will Government be pleased to reserve certain higher posts in all departments for Oriyas in the district of Ganjam and Jeypore Agency?

67 A.—It is a rule of long standing that educated Oriyas should be employed as much as possible in the Oriya-speaking parts of Ganjam and the same principle is applicable to Jeypore, but its application is necessarily limited by the fact that an Oriya cannot be employed in any post unless he possesses the qualifications required for it. No reservation of particular posts for Oriyas can be sanctioned.

68 Q.—Considering the absence of Oriyas in the higher posts of the Salt Department, Ganjam, will the Government be pleased to appoint a qualified Oriya as Assistant Inspector of Salt in Ganjam?

68 A.—Appointments of Assistant Inspectors in the Salt, Akbari and Customs Department are made by the Commissioner who will consider the claims of Oriyas if qualified men are forthcoming.

69 Q.—Considering the language difficulty at present experienced in the administration of Oriya girls' school, will Government be pleased to place all the Oriya girls' schools of Ganjam and Vizagapatam districts under one Oriya Assistant Inspector of Schools?

69 A.—The Government do not see their way to entertain the proposal.

70 Q.—Considering the paucity of Oriya deputy tahsildars in Ganjam and Jeypore Agency, will the Government be pleased to appoint a few Oriya graduates as deputy tahsildars in the Oriya tracts?

70 A.—One Oriya graduate has recently been appointed a probationary deputy tahsildar and if suitable candidates appear on future occasions, their claims will be carefully considered. Promotion to the grade of deputy tahsildars from lower grades is in the hands of the Collectors.

(The Zamindar of Seruguda.)

[11TH MARCH 1919.]

Measures for the relief of distress in Goomsur.

71 Q.—Are the Government aware of the total failure of paddy, ragi and greengram crops in Goomsur division of Ganjam district by reason of the past drought and present destructive rains?

Will Government be pleased to grant

- (i) remission in case of wet, rainfed and dry lands in the division; and
- (ii) takkavi loans on a large scale so as to enable ryots to buy seed grain and other agricultural equipments for the next paddy crop and overcome the widespread distress due to the very high prices of foodstuffs and the scarcity of grains?

71 A.—The Government are aware that there has been considerable failure of rainfed crops in Goomsur and the Collector is taking action in the matter. The grant of remission will be regulated by Board's Standing Orders Nos. 13 and 14 and any sums that may be required for takkavi loans will be made available. A special establishment for promoting the grant of loans has already been sanctioned for the Goomsur taluk. Further measures will be taken when necessity arises.

Grant for the construction of a bridge on the Mahanadi near Aska.

72 Q.—(1) Are the Government aware that the Government grant sanctioned for the construction of a bridge on the Mahanadi near Aska (Ganjam district) has not been utilized by the District Board, Ganjam, owing to war?

(2) Considering the famine conditions prevailing in Ganjam, will the Government be pleased to order the immediate commencement of the work as a remedial measure against famine?

72 A.—(1) Yes.

(2) No. The work would not be suitable for famine relief and is not included in the list of works selected for that purpose.

Opening of an experimental farm and school for Oriyas in Ganjam.

73 Q.—Will the Government be pleased to open an experimental farm and a school for agricultural training of the Oriyas at some convenient Oriya centre in Ganjam?

73 A.—The Government intend to open a farm in Ganjam as soon as possible and the needs of the Oriyas will be considered in selecting its site. Until the farm has been started and an adequate district staff has been employed, it will not be practicable to open a school for Oriyas.

Constitution of Jeypore as an Oriya district.

74 Q.—Will the Government be pleased to state what steps have been taken to constitute Jeypore as a separate Oriya district?

74 A.—The Government have under consideration proposals for the constitution of the agency tracts of Vizagapatam into a separate district to be called the Jeypore district but, as at present advised, they do not contemplate forming a separate Oriya district out of the Jeypore estate.

Transfer of certain zamindaris from the Chicacole Taluk Board to the Parlakimedi Taluk Board.

75 Q.—Will the Government be pleased to take away the Oriya zamindaris of Nandigam, Tekkali and Tarala from Chicacole Taluk Board and include them in the proposed Parlakimedi Taluk Board for the sake of administrative convenience?

75 A.—The Honourable Member's suggestion will be considered when the area of the Chicacole Taluk Board is re-constituted.

Oriya to be the court language of the Chatrapur division.

76 Q.—Will the Government be pleased to declare Oriya the sole court language of the Chatrapur division?

76 A.—The Honourable Member is referred to the answer to question No. 104 at the meeting of the 13th August 1918.

Reservation of certain elective seats on the Berhampur Municipal Council for Oriyas.

77 Q.—Will the Government be pleased to reserve a certain number of elective seats in the municipality of Berhampur for the Oriyas in proportion to the Oriya population of the town?

77 A.—The Government regret that they cannot take action in the manner suggested.

Provision of a special subsidy for the Oriya middle school at Berhampur.

78 Q.—Will the Government be pleased to make provision of a special subsidy for the Oriya middle school at Berhampur now started and maintained by private enterprise so that the municipality might assume its management?

78 A.—The question will be considered if and when the Berhampur Municipal Council moves in the matter.

The temporary secondary school for Oriyas at Berhampur to be made permanent.

79 Q.—(1) Are the Government aware

(a) that the strength of the temporary secondary classes at Berhampur is never below the sanctioned strength for the three years, 1916, 1917 and 1918,

(b) that this is the only secondary grade training school for the Oriyas in the Presidency, and

(c) that during the recent years owing to the opening of new high schools the number of matriculates or school final men requiring secondary training is increasing,

(The Zamindar of Seruguda.)

[11TH MARCH 1919.]

(d) that since the school is intended solely for the Oriyas it requires only a small staff as at present and get on with the same cost of contingencies of the permanent elementary school now attached to the secondary section, and

(e) that the school in its present condition with its manual work class recently sanctioned by the Director of Public Instruction is complete and needs only permanent retention without any extra expenditure?

(2) In consideration of the above facts will the Government be pleased to convert the temporary secondary school into a permanent institution for the benefit of the Oriyas?

79 A.—The strength of the secondary training class, which has decreased from 23 in 1916 to 10 in 1918, does not at present justify the consideration of the suggestion made in the question. The higher elementary training class in the school has, however, recently been made permanent.

80 Q.—At the informal conference held during His Excellency the Governor's recent visit to Berhampur, regarding the proposal to raise the local college to a first-grade college it was represented to His Excellency that what the Oriyas urgently needed was the ear-marking for them a few of the scholarships now allotted for the general education of the backward classes. His Excellency then promised consideration of the suggestion. Will the Government be pleased to state whether the matter has received the favourable consideration of Government and with what result?

80 A.—The suggestion will be remitted in due course to the Director of Public Instruction for examination.

81 Q.—(a) Are the Government aware of the absence of the technically qualified Oriyas in the Presidency?

(b) With a view to supply the want, will the Government be pleased

(i) to institute half a dozen scholarships in the Engineering school, Vizagapatam, for the benefit of the Oriyas irrespective of their age,

(ii) to institute half a dozen scholarships in the Medical school, Vizagapatam, for the Oriyas, the value of such scholarships being increased as in the case of students of Ceded districts?

81 A.—(a) The Government are aware of the fact.

(b) (i) Out of nine scholarships awarded in the School of Engineering, Vizagapatam, three are reserved for Oriya students. The question of increasing the number now awarded and of modifying the rules governing the grant of the scholarships will be considered after some experience has been gained of the working of the present system.

(ii) The Honourable Member's attention is drawn to the answer to question No. 108 asked at the meeting of the Legislative Council held on the 13th August 1918. The Government will consider whether the provision for Oriya students can advantageously be increased.

82 Q.—(a) Are the Government aware that students not knowing a word of Oriya are enjoying the concession rate of school fee?

(b) Will Government be pleased to restrict the concession to Oriya students who have taken up Oriya or Sanskrit in their school course?

82 A.—(a) The Government have no information.

(b) The Government are not prepared to impose such restrictions in the case of Oriya students.

83 Q.—Will Government be pleased to institute two scholarships of Rs. 15 each tenable in the School of Arts, Madras, as an encouragement to the Oriyas who have hitherto not joined the school for want of any facilities for them?

83 A.—There are now 80 open scholarships available in the School of Arts. The Government are not prepared to reserve any of these scholarships as suggested but reasonable consideration will be given to qualified Oriyas in allotting them.

84 Q.—Are the Government aware of the difficulties of training Oriya vaccinators required for service in Ganjam and Jeypore districts?

Will the Government be pleased to ask the Sanitary Commissioner to permit such men being trained in the local hospitals and dispensaries of Ganjam as a special case?

84 A.—The Honourable Member is referred to G.O. No. 1843 L., dated 22nd December 1916, which deals with the points referred to by him. The Government Order has been placed on the Editors' Table.

85 Q.—In view of the utter want of Oriya munsifs in Ganjam, will the Government be pleased to suggest to the High Court the desirability of appointing one or two qualified Oriyas to meet the wants of the community?

85 A.—The Honourable Member's suggestion will be remitted to the High Court for consideration.

Scholarships for Oriyas in the Berhampur College

Scholarships for Oriyas in the Engineering and Medical schools, Vizagapatam.

Concession rate of school fee to Oriya students.

Scholarships for Oriya students joining the School of Arts.

Training of Oriya vaccinators.

Appointment of Oriya munsifs in Ganjam.

(The Zamindar of Serugada; Mr. Rama Ayyangar.) [11TH MARCH 1919.]

Transfer of the Additional Munsif's Court at Berhampur to Aska.

86 Q.—(a) Are the Government aware there has been an appreciable decrease in the number of cases filed in the several Munsifs' courts in Ganjam rendering retention of the Additional Court at Berhampur scarcely necessary?

(b) That in consideration of the additional trouble and expense involved in attending the Additional Munsif's Court, Berhampur, for the people of Aska Munsif's jurisdiction specially and those of other jurisdictions generally will the Government be pleased to transfer the Additional Court to Aska or else abolish it altogether?

86 A.—(a) The Government sanctioned the retention of the Additional District Munsif's Court at Berhampur in December last after a full consideration of the statistics of institutions and pendency.

(b) Under section 5 of the Madras Civil Courts Act, 1873, the location of District Munsifs' courts is a matter for determination by the High Court to whom a copy of the question will be communicated.

Appointment of an Oriya Prosecuting Inspector of Police for Ganjam district.

87 Q.—(a) Are the Government aware that after representations in this Council by the Hon'ble Raja of Dharakota, Government were pleased to appoint an Oriya Prosecuting Inspector of Police for Ganjam district?

(b) Now that that officer is under orders of transfer to Vizagapatam agency, will Government be pleased to appoint another Oriya Inspector in his place?

87 A.—(a) Yes.

(b) The officer who has taken the place of the late incumbent knows Oriya.

The Hon'ble Mr. K. Rama Ayyangar.

Arrangements for the cheap supply of food-stuffs.

88 Q.—(a) Will the Government be pleased to state

(i) where in India or in this province the following articles sell cheapest:—

- | | | |
|--------------|---------------|-------------------|
| 1. Rice | 5. Bengalgram | 9. Tamarind |
| 2. Gingelly | 6. Horsegram | 10. Cotton seeds; |
| 3. Blackgram | 7. Dholl | |
| 4. Greengram | 8. Chillies | |

(ii) what the rate is at which it sells per rupee in Madras measures or weights; and

(iii) what steps may be taken to procure them to the districts of Madura, Ramnad and Tinnevely?

(b) Will the Government be pleased to state whether the Director of Civil Supplies has made any arrangements within the last six months to send to the abovementioned districts all these articles from places at which they sell cheaper than in the said districts and, if so, how much of such articles have been so sent and where?

(c) Will the Government be pleased to arrange that the Collectors of districts do get information from the Director of Civil Supplies from time to time in respect of the prices of the said articles and make them publish the same once a month in some public places as also the steps to be taken to procure them?

88 A.—(a) & (b) The Honourable Member's attention is drawn to the weekly price lists published in the Fort St. George Gazette and other official gazettes which show the prices for certain of the articles mentioned. Information regarding the others is not available. The Director of Civil Supplies has made extensive arrangements during the last six months for the import into the Presidency of some of these articles, especially rice, from Burma, Bengal and elsewhere, and large quantities have been imported; but it is impossible to say how much has been sent to the three districts named because such import is in private hands and goes on by road as well as rail.

(c) As prices fluctuate from day to day, the Government do not consider that the publication of prices once a month as proposed would be of much practical advantage.

Particulars regarding the organisation of the Police force.

89 Q.—(a) Will the Government be pleased to state

(1) the total number of police stations and outposts now opened in the Presidency outside the metropolis;

(2) the number of sub-inspectors employed;

(3) the highest number of sub-inspectors attached to the big stations;

(4) the number of deputy superintendents and assistant superintendents now in service for the mufassal;

(5) the number of them who are in charge of subdivisions?

(b) Will the Government be pleased to state if finally it is proposed to place sub-inspectors directly in charge of subdivisional officers or under circle inspectors?

(c) Is there any proposal to create a separate prosecuting staff, investigating staff and staff to attend the other police duties?

11TH MARCH 1919.]

(Mr. Rama Ayyangar.)

(d) What is the total number of constables proposed to be allotted to each station and what extra staff of head constables and constables is proposed to be kept in the mufassal in the Presidency over and above those in the police stations?

89 A.—(a) (1) & (2) The Honourable Member is referred to columns 7, 22 and 23 of Statement D appended to the Police Administration Report for 1917.

(3) The Government are not in possession of precise information. Every police station is placed in charge of a sub-inspector who, if necessary, is assisted by additional sub-inspectors, and the general principle underlying the allocation of sub-inspectors is that, if the number of investigations in a police station exceeds 100 per annum, there should ordinarily be an additional sub-inspector for each 100 in excess.

(4) & (5) The information asked for is available in the 'Monthly List of Gazetted Officers of the Police Department.'

(b) The Government are not yet in a position to make any definite pronouncement on the point.

(c) & (d) There is already a separate police prosecuting staff which has been strengthened in some measure recently. No proposals such as those referred to by the Honourable Member are under the consideration of the Government.

90 Q.—Will the Government be pleased to reduce the cost of taking encumbrance certificates from Registration offices, in view of the fact that recently the Civil Rules of Practice have been modified so as to require encumbrance certificates even for cases of sales of immovable properties in execution when the amount to be realized is only Rs. 100?

Reduction in the cost of encumbrance certificates.

90 A.—The Government will inquire.

91 Q.—Will the Government be pleased to order a change in the jurisdiction of the Srivaikuntam Munsif's Court, Tinnevely district, so as to include all the villages near it within a radius of five miles such as Pudukudi, etc., on the southern side of the river?

Jurisdiction of the Srivaikuntam Munsif's Court, Tinnevely.

91 A.—Under section 11 of the Madras Civil Courts Act, 1873, the power to modify the local jurisdiction of District Munsifs is vested in the High Court to whom a copy of this question will be communicated.

92 Q.—(a) Will the Government be pleased to state at what stage the proposal to construct the anicut across the Chittar river near Gangaikondan in the Tinnevely district and excavate a channel to irrigate Sivalaleri and other villages, stands at present?

Construction of an anicut across the Chittar river, Tinnevely district.

(b) Have plans and estimates been prepared?

(c) Will the Government be pleased to expedite the work?

92 A.—The Government are not aware of any such proposal.

93 Q.—(a) Is it a fact that the Public Works Department in the Tinnevely district demand that the works of constructing bathing ghats in the river Tambraparni and its branches by the union panchayats should be entrusted to them for execution and want 25 per cent of the cost of construction for the supervision charges called "centage charges" even in cases where the local boards have efficient engineering staff?

Local boards to be permitted to carry out certain works instead of the Public Works Department.

(b) Will the Government be pleased to order that such works may be left to the local boards themselves?

93 A.—The Government have no information on the subject, but if the Honourable Member will furnish particulars of the case or cases to which his question refers, they will ascertain the facts and consider whether any relaxation of the existing rules relating to contribution works is feasible and expedient.

94 Q.—Will the Government be pleased to extend the appointment of non-official presidents to the taluk boards in the districts of Madura, Ramnad and Tinnevely?

More non-official presidents of taluk boards to be appointed in the districts of Madura, Tinnevely and Ramnad.

94 A.—The Government have carefully considered the question and do not propose to extend the system further at present.

95 Q.—(a) Are the Government aware that the District Board of Ramnad propose to give effect to the following by-law from the 1st May 1919?—

Suspension of a by-law passed by the Ramnad District Board.

"From and after the date which the District Board of Ramnad may notify in the district gazette, no bandy or other vehicle shall carry logs of timber, out-stone or cotton, on any road in the district maintained from the local fund unless it has tyres of at least 3" width" and that there is no similar by-law in the neighbouring districts?

(Mr. Rama Ayyangar ; Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar.) [11TH MARCH 1919.]

(b) In view of the extreme hardship that this rule may cause to the poorer population in that and in neighbouring districts in these days of high prices of foodstuffs and iron materials, will the Government be pleased at least to put off by a year or two, the date on which the by-law is to come into force?

95 A.—In February 1917 the Government approved and confirmed a by-law adopted by the Ramnad District Board to regulate the width of tyres of carts carrying logs of timber, cut-stone or cotton on local fund roads. If, as understood from the question, the district board contemplates bringing the by-law into effect from the 1st May 1919, the Government are not prepared to interfere with the local body's discretion in the matter. There is no similar by-law in the districts of Madura and Tinnevely.

96 Q.—(a) Is it a fact that the readings observed of the water-supply in the Arakulam Odai near the Periyakulam tank in Ottapidaram taluk, Tinnevely district, are sufficient for the supply of that tank without detriment to the other ayacut?

(b) Will the Government be pleased to issue immediate orders to improve the water-supply of the Periyakulam tank by the proposed channel?

96 A.—The question whether the Periyakulam tank can be supplied without prejudice to vested interests awaits the results of the gauging observations for 1918 which are due from the Superintending Engineer. If on an examination of these observations it is found that there is sufficient supply for the tank, orders will be issued for the preparation of an estimate for the work.

97 Q.—(a) Is it a fact that in the village of Perungulam in the Tinnevely district it is proposed to levy a tax on pandals put up for protection from the sun and rain in front of the houses?

(b) Is it a fact that they (the people) have been allowed putting up pandals for a long time past and the same recognized as such in 1905 by the Tahsildar of Srivakuntam in his R. Dis. No. 355 of 1905?

(c) Will the Government be pleased in the circumstances to issue orders that no tax shall be levied against the mamul in respect of the said pandals in that village?

97 A.—The Government have no information.

The Hon'ble Mr. K. RAMA AYYANGAR:—"With respect to question No. 97, will the Government be pleased to send for information?"

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"Is not that a matter for the local board? It does not seem to be a matter of sufficient importance to justify our calling for the information unless the Honourable Member has got any specific reasons for thinking that it is necessary that we should intervene. If he can write to us and tell us the reasons why he wants that, I will gladly consider the matter."

98 Q.—(a) Is it a fact that the chairman of Rajapalaiyam union invariably refuses to permit the public to attend the union meetings?

(b) Is it a fact that the Ramnad District Board President has not interfered in such action of the union chairman in spite of that being brought to his notice?

(c) Will the Government be pleased to issue orders that the public must have free access ordinarily to all meetings of the union?

98 A.—(a) & (b) The Government have no information.

(c) The Government see no reason to intervene.

99 Q.—Will the Government be pleased to state what steps have been taken in regard to the copy of the petition forwarded by me with my letter No. 14, dated 24th January 1919, to the Chief Secretary, Government of Madras, regarding cow-killing in the reserved forest limits near the municipality of Tuticorin in Tinnevely district?

99 A.—The original petition was returned under rule II (1) of the Memorial rules governing the case, because it did not appear that the signatories had made any application for redress to the local authorities.

100 Q.—(a) Is it a fact that more than twenty appointments in the various grades of the subordinate collegiate service have remained unfilled since July last?

(b) In view of the fact that the Government of India and the Local Government have repeatedly recognized that the status of the collegiate staffs needs to be improved materially, will the Government, for the present, be pleased to insist at least on timely promotions that may be possible to be given them?

(c) In view of the recommendations in the Public Service Commission Report will the Government be pleased to take immediate steps to raise the minimum salary in the collegiate service to at least Rs. 125 as in the case of Bengal?

Improvement of the water-supply of the Periyakulam tank, Tinnevely district.

Tax on pandals in the Perungulam village, Tinnevely district.

Meetings of the Rajapalaiyam union panchayat to be public.

Cattle-shooting in the reserved forests near Tuticorin.

Promotions in the Educational service.

11TH MARCH 1919.] (Mr. Rama Ayyangar ; Mr. Suryanarayanamurti Nayudu.)

(d) Is it a fact that where vacancies in the Indian Educational Service have occurred and members of the provincial service have been thought fit to act therein, they have done so without receiving any additional allowances at all? Will the Government be pleased to sanction allowances where the acting appointments have entailed additional arduous duties as in the case of Principalships?

100 A.—(a) There have been some vacancies but not as many as stated in the question.

(b) No vacancy remains unfilled longer than is necessary in the public interest.

(c) & (d) The questions herein raised will be considered on receipt of orders in regard to the reorganization of the Educational Services in India.

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur K. Suryanarayanamurti Nayudu.

101 Q.—(a) Will the Government be pleased to state the number and mileage of irrigation channels in the zamindari areas of the Godavari delta to which ancient water is supplied for wet cultivation?

(b) Are there proposals before Government to acquire some of them from the zamindars in order to improve them and to introduce the pipe system for better regulation of water; if so at what state does the matter lie?

101 A.—(a) The information is not available.

(b) The Chief Engineer has under consideration certain proposals for remodelling the Dugguduru channel, Godavari Eastern division, belonging to the Raja of Pithapuram, which involve the acquisition of the channel and the provision of pipe sluices.

102 Q.—Will the Government be pleased to state whether estimates for improving the drains in the Godavari Eastern and Central deltas have been sanctioned by the Government of India and if so what allotments are made for expenditure during the working season of the current fasli?

102 A.—The Government of India have sanctioned three estimates which contain provision for the improvement of drains in the Godavari Eastern and Central deltas, viz.—

(i) improvements to the Kovvur-Manjair junction canal,

(ii) improvements to the Ainapur drain, and

(iii) improvements to the Tuliabhaga drain.

The allotments provided in the budget of the current financial year ending on the 31st March 1919 were respectively Rs. 40,000, Rs. 50,000 and Rs. 6,000 while for the first item a further provision of Rs. 22,000 has been included in the budget estimates for 1919-20. As item (ii) was not considered to be of imperative urgency, the current year's grant was surrendered in compliance with a request from the Government of India to postpone expenditure on such public works as were not of an absolutely urgent character, especially new works not yet commenced.

103 Q.—(1) Will the Government be pleased to state (a) whether it is true that the Superintending Engineer, II Circle, has submitted proposals for the closure of canals of the Godavari Western delta for three months or more instead of one month as at present;

(b) whether the Collector of Kistna and the Agricultural Department have been consulted in the matter and whether they are agreeable to the proposal;

(c) whether opportunities have been given to the ryots, merchants and public associations of that delta to express their views on the desirability or otherwise of the proposal?

(2) If so will the Government be pleased to lay the correspondence on the table?

103 A.—(1) (a) & (b) No definite proposals for the closure of the canals of the Godavari Western division for three months or more have been received by the Government; but it is understood that the Superintending Engineer, II Circle, has proposed to the Collector that, from and after the year 1920, one-fourth of the canals in the delta should be closed each year to second crop, all the canals and channels in the remaining three subdivisions remaining open to second crop.

(c) A number of memorials have been received from ryots in the delta advocating the system of closure referred to in the previous paragraph.

(2) There is no correspondence to be laid on the table now. It is understood that the Collector has not yet given his opinion on the Superintending Engineer's proposal.

104 Q.—Will the Government be pleased to state the number of Public Works Department Subdivisional officers in Godavari, Kistna and Guntur districts in charge of irrigation works, and the area of jurisdiction of each of these officers?

104 A.—A statement * giving the information asked for is placed on the table.

Irrigation channels in the zamindari areas of the Godavari delta.

Improvement of drains in the Godavari Eastern and Central deltas.

Closure of canals of the Godavari Western delta.

Number and jurisdiction of subdivisional officers in charge of irrigation works in certain districts.

(Mr. Suryanarayanamurti Nayudu.) [11TH MARCH 1919.]

Transfer of the office of the Superintending Engineer, I Circle, from Dowlaisweram to Vizagapatam.

105 Q.—(a) When and for what reasons was the office of the Superintending Engineer, I Circle, transferred from Dowlaisweram to Vizagapatam?

(b) Has the attention of Government been drawn to resolution No. VI passed at the Ramachandrapur Taluk Conference held on 15th December 1918 in which the necessity of placing the three Gōdāvari deltas under one Superintending Engineer and to this end of re-transferring the headquarters of the Superintending Engineer to Dowlaisweram has been urged?

(c) Will the Government be pleased to give due consideration to that important suggestion made in the interests of delta irrigation?

105 A.—(a) The transfer was directed in 1895 on the joint recommendation of the two Chief Engineers, Colonels Pennycuik and Drake Brockman, who considered that on administrative grounds Waltair was the more suitable headquarters.

(b) & (c) The Government received and examined a copy of the resolution referred to, but did not consider that there were sufficient reasons to take the action suggested.

Modification of rules for the supply of water for the crops in the Gōdāvari deltas.

106 Q.—With reference to paragraph 5 of G.O. No. 3248, Revenue, dated 14th September 1918, will Government be pleased to state whether the Public Works Department (Irrigation Branch) have been directed to suitably modify the rules regarding the supply and distribution of water for first crop so as to facilitate early transplantation in the Gōdāvari deltas? If not, will they be pleased to do so now?

106 A.—The advantage of early transplantation of first crop is fully recognized, but the Government are not aware of any modification of the rules for the supply and distribution of water for first crop in the Gōdāvari delta which would in any way facilitate earlier transplantation than at present. To ensure earlier transplantation, the monsoon must set in earlier and the river begin to rise earlier.

Devarapalli irrigation project.

107 Q.—Is it a fact that an irrigation scheme called the Devarapalli project was investigated by the Public Works Department a few years ago in the Gōdāvari Central delta to bring about 1,000 acres of dry land under wet cultivation and estimates got prepared for Rs. 70,000? If so, what delays the project being taken on hand yet?

107 A.—A scheme known as the Devarapalli project underwent preliminary investigation some years ago. The Chief Engineer doubted the practicability of the proposals then formulated and they remained in abeyance pending completion of the remodelling of the delta channels. The Superintending Engineer was subsequently authorized to resume the investigation in general orders directing that preference should be given to those schemes which presented the best prospects of success. The Government have no information what progress has been made with this particular project but will inquire.

Creation of a separate taluk board for Razole taluk.

108 Q.—(a) Will the Government be pleased to state whether representations have been made to them by the people of Razole taluk protesting against the resolution of the Gōdāvari district board which decided, in recommending the reconstitution of the Rajahmundry taluk board into two units, that the revenue taluk of Razole should be divided into two portions for local fund purposes, one portion of it being added to the new Rajahmundry taluk board and the other to the new Amalapur taluk board?

(b) If so, will they be pleased to sanction the creation of a separate taluk board for the Razole taluk as prayed for by the people?

108 A.—(a) Yes.

(b) The request will be considered before final orders are passed.

Restricting the possession of country spirits by private persons.

109 Q.—With reference to rule 2 of the rules for the transport and possession of liquor framed under section 55 of the Madras Abkari Act, will Government be pleased, in order to minimise temptations to drink, to reduce the quantity of country spirits which one person can possess at a time from 8 to 3 drams?

109 A.—The Government will inquire.

Amendment of section 88 of the Indian Registration Act.

110 Q.—Will the Government be pleased to state what orders have been passed on the suggestion of the Gōdāvari District Association contained in its letter No. 8, dated 16th January 1918, to Government to the effect that rule 184 framed under section 88 of the Indian Registration Act be so amended as to operate in the case of non-official presidents of district boards who stepped into the place of Collectors of districts who were hitherto ex officio presidents of those boards?

110 A.—The Gōdāvari District Association was informed that, with reference to section 88 of the Indian Registration Act, rule 184 could not be so amended as to exempt non-official presidents of district boards from personal appearance in registration offices.

[11TH MARCH 1919.]

(Mr. Chidambaranatha Mudaliyar.)

The Hon'ble Mr. K. Chidambaranatha Mudaliyar.

111 Q.—Will the Government be pleased to state in what stage the proposals for improvements to the Ayyavayyanar in the Mayavaram taluk of the Tanjore district stand at present and how and when they may be expected to be carried out?

Improvements to the Ayyavayyanar in the Mayavaram taluk, Tanjore district.

111 A.—An estimate amounting to Rs. 1,12,000 for improvements to the Ayyavayyanar is under scrutiny in the office of the Chief Engineer for Irrigation. The Government are not at present in a position to say whether, and if so when, the project is likely to admit of execution.

112 Q.—Will the Government be pleased to state in what stage the proposals for improvements to the Cauvery from below the Mayavaram bridge to the sea stand at present and how and when they may be expected to be carried out?

Improvements to the Cauvery from below the Mayavaram bridge.

112 A.—An estimate amounting to Rs. 1,92,000 for improving the Cauvery from the Ayyavayyanar infall to the sea is now under scrutiny in the office of the Chief Engineer for Irrigation. The work cannot be put in hand until it has received the sanction of the Government of India.

113 Q.—Will the Government be pleased to state in what stage the proposals for improvements to the Pokku vaikkal in the Canvery delta stand at present and how and when they may be expected to be carried out?

Improvements to the Pokku vaikkal in the Canvery delta.

113 A.—An estimate for this work was sanctioned in May 1916, but execution has been postponed because it is not of an urgent nature and at present rates the cost of making the iron shutters required would be excessive.

114 Q.—Will the Government be pleased to state to what extent improvements to the Vettangudi drainage, Shiyali taluk, have been carried out and, if anything remains, how and when they may be expected to be carried out?

Improvements to the Vettangudi drainage, Shiyali taluk.

114 A.—The proposals made in connexion with the Vettangudi drainage comprise improvements to (1) the Vali odai, (2) the Sithanaiperumal drain and (3) the Mudavanar drain. The first item has been practically completed. An estimate for the second was sanctioned by the Government in December 1917, but the work has not been started, as the necessary land has not yet been acquired. The proposals relating to the Mudavanar drain [item (3)] will be considered after the results of the improvements to the other drains are known.

115 Q.—Will the Government be pleased to state the steps, if any, taken by them to ascertain public opinion regarding the indigenous systems of medicine, the placing of them on a scientific basis and of adding to their usefulness, and lay on the table papers giving the views of the public and the Government on the matter?

Placing the indigenous systems of medicine on a scientific basis.

115 A.—The Honourable Member's attention is drawn to the debates on resolution No. IV moved by the Hon'ble Mr. T. Ranga Acharyar at the meeting of the Legislative Council held on the 13th August 1918, which contain the views of the Government on the subject of the encouragement of indigenous systems of medicine. The special duty of Doctor Koman for the investigation of drugs has since been extended up to the end of 1919.

116 Q.—Will the Government be pleased to lay on the table statistics regarding the area under cultivation during 1918-19 up till now and the normal area under cultivation for the period and the estimated outturn therefrom with the normal outturn under the principal foodgrains (a) dry and (b) wet in each district of the Presidency?

Area under cultivation and the normal outturn under the principal foodgrains.

116 A.—The Government are not in possession of the statistics asked for.

117 Q.—Will the Government be pleased to state what steps, if any, they have taken or propose to take to check the general rise in prices now prevailing?

Steps to control prices.

117 A.—A statement on the subject will be made in connexion with a resolution on the agenda paper.

118 Q.—(a) Is it a fact that the merchants of Tirumulavāsal, Tanjore district, petitioned to Government praying for the cancellation of the agreement existing between the South Indian Railway and the British India Steam Navigation Company and in reply were informed that no benefit would be secured to them by the cancellation and that the Government cannot issue orders compelling steamers to call at the port of Tirumulavāsal?

Cancellation of the agreement between the South Indian Railway and British India Steam Navigation Company.

(b) If so, will the Government be pleased to insist on the cancellation?

118 A.—(a) Yes.

(b) The Government have more than once considered the question and they are not prepared to move in the matter.

(Mr. Chidambaranatha Mudaliyar.)

[11TH MARCH 1919.]

Scarcity of kerosene oil.

119 Q.—(a) Is the Government aware of the serious hardship the general public and particularly the poorer among them are put to on account of the scarcity of kerosene oil?

(b) Has the Government ascertained the real causes of this scarcity and what steps, if any, have they taken to relieve the situation and to restore normal conditions?

119 A.—(a) The answer is in the affirmative.

(b) The Honourable Member is referred to the answer to question No. 11.

Price of oilseeds and restriction of their export.

120 Q.—Is the Government aware that the price of oil-seeds is prohibitive and people find it hard to procure them, and if so will the Government consider the desirability of restricting the export of oil-seeds at least till the supply of kerosene oil resumes its normal proportions?

120 A.—Under the Import and Export of Goods Act, 1916, this Government have no power to restrict the export of goods from India, and the control is in the hands of the Government of India. It is doubtful whether, in the interests of the ryot population, the prohibition of the export of oil-seeds which the Honourable Member advocates, is advisable.

Steps taken in
failure of the season.

121 Q.—Will the Government be pleased to state what steps, if any, they have taken, or propose to take, to face the situation caused by the abnormal failure of the season during 1918-19 in the affected areas?

121 A.—While it cannot be said that the monsoons in 1918 were a complete failure there was a very considerable deficiency in the rainfall of some districts more especially in the districts of Ganjam, Gōdāvari, Kistna, Guntūr, Kurnool, Bellary, Anantapur, Cuddapah and Salem. As soon as it was evident that the position was such as to give cause for anxiety the Government ordered very careful inquiries to be made with a view to starting relief operations where necessary. The result of these inquiries can be briefly summarized as follows:—

In Gōdāvari district it was for a time apprehended that famine operations would have to be instituted in the Nugur and Bhadrachalam taluks and arrangements were made for the necessary establishment and funds. But recently the Collector has reported that conditions are not as bad as they were thought to be and that famine operations are not at present necessary. The position in other parts of the district is under consideration. In Bellary the failure of crops was reported to be limited to parts of three taluks and the Collector does not apprehend that even in these taluks there is sufficient distress to make relief operations necessary at present. The situation is being met by an expansion of departmental works. In a small portion of Salem district it was reported that famine operations were urgently necessary and orders were actually issued for the opening of test works, but the situation improved considerably as the result of the rains which fell in December and on the recommendation of the local officers famine-relief operations have been postponed for the present. There was some anxiety in the Chittoor district but recent reports show that special measures are not necessary for the present. The situation is being watched. The Collector of Vizagapatam has reported that relief measures may be necessary in one portion of the district and inquiries are being made as to the degree of distress which prevails and the likelihood of operations under the Famine Code being required. The only district in which famine relief is actually in operation is Ganjam. Test works have been opened in the Chokkapad khandam and in the Goomsur taluk and a considerable number of people are either attending the test works or are in receipt of gratuitous relief. The Government are making very careful inquiries into the situation in those districts where anxiety is felt and famine relief will at once be provided wherever it is found necessary.

Arrangements have also been made for the extension of operations under the Agriculturists' Loans Act and a special establishment for this purpose has been sanctioned for the Goomsur taluk in the Ganjam district. The Board of Revenue is also calling for reports as to the necessity for suspension or remission of dry assessment in those districts which have been adversely affected by the season.

Special committees for the supply of foodgrains.

122 Q.—Will the Government be pleased to consider the desirability of suggesting to local boards and municipalities the formation of special committees of officials and non-officials to ascertain the needs of their respective areas in foodgrains and other chief commodities and suggest the best means of supplying them?

122 A.—The Honourable Member's attention is drawn to G.O. No. 2258, Revenue, dated 13th June 1918, directing the constitution of emergency committees in each district. One of the functions of these committees is to advise the Collector, and through him the Director of Civil Supplies, as to the state of supplies in the various parts of the district and the need for priority over the railways for the replenishment of depleted stocks. These committees already serve the purpose mentioned in the question and the Government consider it unnecessary to form any fresh committees.

11TH MARCH 1919.]

(The Raja of Ramnad; Mr. Davidson;
Sir Alexander Cardew.)

The Hon'ble the Raja of Ramnad.

123 Q.—With reference to my resolution moved in the Council on 4th April 1918 regarding the publication of the proposals relating to the location of the headquarters of the Ramnad district, and accepted by Government, will the Government kindly state when they propose to publish the same?

Headquarters of the Ramnad
district.

123 A.—The Government have received various proposals but have not yet arrived at a decision regarding their publication.

The Hon'ble the RAJA OF RAMNAD:—"With reference to question No. 123, am I to understand that the Government will eventually publish the proposals about the headquarters of the Ramnad district?"

The Hon'ble Mr. L. DAVIDSON:—"The answer says it has not yet been decided when the proposals will be published. It is not every proposal that will be published, but the proposals which the Government consider prima facie to deserve consideration will be published."

124 Q.—With reference to the resolution moved by the Hon'ble Mr. A. S. Krishna Rao in the Council on 4th April 1918 recommending an economic inquiry in selected areas, and adopted by the Council, will the Government kindly state what steps they have taken in the matter?

Economic inquiry in selected areas.

124 A.—The Government consider that the present time is not appropriate and that the present circumstances are not suitable for the inquiry contemplated. No steps have therefore been taken in the matter.

125 Q.—With reference to the statement made by the Hon'ble Sir Alexander Cardew at the last meeting of the Council, that the plans and estimates for the Ramnad hospital are not ready, will the Government kindly state when they propose to have them ready and start the building work?

Plans and estimates for
hospital.

125 A.—The plans and estimates for the hospital will be dealt with as soon as the Surgeon-General is in a position to forward them to Government. Their submission has been delayed by Major-General Giffard's deputation to the Medical Committee and the Government regret therefore that they are unable to say definitely when the building work will be started.

126 Q.—(a) Will the Government be pleased to state

(1) whether they have, since the assumption of the zamindari from the lessees of Sivaganga, leased or propose leasing any ayan or devasthanam village; and

villages in the zamindari of Sivaganga.

(2) if so, for what period?

(b) Will they kindly give the names of such villages as they propose to lease, and also state if such leases will be publicly auctioned?

126 A.—The management of the estate is in the hands of the Court of Wards and the Government are not in possession of the information asked for.

The Hon'ble the RAJA OF RAMNAD:—"May I know if the Government will kindly call for information from the Board of Revenue, the Court of Wards, and publish it?"

The Hon'ble Sir ALEXANDER CARDEW:—"Yes, I have no objection to call for information."

127 Q.—Will the Government kindly take early steps to reduce railway fares and freight, now that the demand of the Army Department on the railways must have been considerably decreased?

Reduction of
and freight.

127 A.—As stated in the answer to question No. 37, steps have already been taken to reduce railway rates and some reduction has been effected, while considerable reduction has been effected in steamer freights. It is not possible at present to go further, nor is the Honourable Member correct in assuming that the demands of the Army on the railways have diminished so far as to have any appreciable effect on the available supply of wagons which is still very short. It should be remembered that the demands in connexion with demobilization are still heavy.

128 Q.—Will the Government kindly arrange with the South Indian Railway to increase railway service by running a few more trains for passengers and goods at least in the main line on the South Indian Railway?

Increase of railway service in the main line of the South Indian Railway.

128 A.—A copy of the question will be communicated to the Agent of the South Indian Railway, but the Government fear that no substantial improvement in the train service can be effected until material for repairs and additions to rolling-stock are received, which they believe is being arranged for as rapidly as circumstances permit.

(The Raja of Ramnad; Sir Alexander Cardew; Mr. Krishna Rao.) [11TH MARCH 1919.

Completion of water-works at Ramēsvaram. 129 Q.—Will the Government kindly state when they expect to complete the water-works at Ramēsvaram, what the total amount of the estimate is, and what portion of it has been spent till now?

129 A.—The Government hope it will be possible to complete the water-works at Ramēsvaram during the year 1920. The total amount of the estimate at present stands at Rs. 1,99,892 and an expenditure of Rs. 1,28,232 had been incurred to end of January 1919.

Management of the Sivaganga zamindari. 130 Q.—Will the Government kindly state if the District Collector gave notice to the Zamindar of Sivaganga and thus afforded him a reasonable opportunity to prove his fitness for the management of the Sivaganga zamindari as required under section 13 (i) of the Court of Wards Act, Act I of 1902?

130 A.—Yes.

Appointment of a Government officer as manager of trust institutions in the Sivaganga zamindari. 131 Q.—Will the Government kindly state how the Government or the Court of Wards have appointed a Government officer to be the manager for the direct and personal management of trust institutions in the Sivaganga zamindari?

131 A.—Section 63 of the Court of Wards Act precludes officers of Government from being entrusted with the direct and personal management of the religious affairs of any temple, mosque or other religious establishment or endowment. The Government officer who has been appointed manager of the trust institutions in the Sivaganga zamindari is not entrusted with such duties.

The Hon'ble the RAJA OF RAMNAD:—"Are the Government quite certain that the Government officer appointed by Government is not exercising control over the religious establishment or the endowment?"

The Hon'ble Sir ALEXANDER CARDEW:—"The Honourable Member's attention is drawn to the answer. I cannot give further information."

(b) Will the Government be pleased to state whether they intend to appoint any, and if so how many, Deputy Superintendents of Police by direct recruitment during the next three years?

139 A.—(a) Out of 41 permanent appointments, 21 are now held by promoted Inspectors, 6 by officers transferred from other departments and 14 by officers directly recruited for the posts.

(b) It is impossible to make any forecast, but as the rules at present stand not less than half the total number of appointments must be held by promoted Inspectors.

140 Q.—(a) Is it a fact that the Government of India have called for the proposals of the Local Government on the recommendations of the Indian Industrial Commission? Representatives of Indian commerce to be consulted regarding the recommendations of the Industrial Commission.

(b) Will the Government be pleased to consult the representatives of Indian commerce and Indian trade before submitting their proposals to the Government of India?

140 A.—(a) The Government of India have called for the views of this Government only on the proposals made in the Report of the Indian Industrial Commission for the establishment of Imperial and Provincial departments of Industries.

(b) In answering the above reference, the Government do not consider it desirable to delay action further by again consulting the representatives of Indian commerce and trade on the proposals, having in view the fact that the Commission itself conducted an exhaustive inquiry before formulating its views.

143 A.—As at present advised the Government have no such intention.

144 Q.—Will the Government be pleased to state when the Government propose to order the construction of a suitable building

(a) for Queen Mary High school in Vizagapatam; and

(b) whether they propose to construct a hostel also along with it?

144 A.—The question of acquiring a site for the school is now under consideration and that of constructing a hostel will be duly considered.

(Mr. Suryanarayana Rao; Mr. Yaqub Hasan.)

[11TH MARCH 1919.]

(b) Was it at the order of the District Magistrate that the firing was done?

(c) Was any attempt made to arrest them or compel them to surrender or at worst to disable them?

(d) Had the Mappillas any firearms with them at the time they were surrounded and how many?

(e) Is it a fact that when "six shells were fired against the house" in which the Mappillas were hiding, it "induced the men to come out" and as soon as they came out "a volley was fired" at them?

(f) Is it a fact that "the injured fanatic captured alive died in the local hospital" and "his body also was burnt in the taluk cutcherry" with those of his companions?

(g) By whose orders were the dead bodies of Mussalmans burnt instead of being buried?

(h) Is it a fact that the authorities were informed previously of the trouble that was brewing there but no notice was taken?

(i) What was the real cause of the outbreak?

(j) Is it true that there has been agrarian discontent and misery in the taluk due to the paddy being held up and other aggravating causes?

(k) Is it a fact that a resolution of a public meeting held at Manjeri about the prices of foodstuff was returned by the District Magistrate "without even noting it"?

(l) Is the outbreak attributed to religious fanaticism and, if so, what was the immediate cause of provocation?

146 A.—(a) to (j) & (l) The Honourable Member is referred to the answer to question No. 12. Pending completion of the inquiry the Government are not prepared to give any further information on the subject except that the bodies of all the slain Mappillas were burnt in pursuance of magisterial orders authorized by the Mappilla Outrages Act, 1839, and in accordance with the practice usually followed on such occasions.

The Mysore Darbar undertook to supply 1,400 tons of pulses including gram in each of the months of January and February but the full quantity promised has not been received. The stocks expected to arrive in the near future cannot be stated with certainty as the matter is under correspondence with the Darbar.

(b) The Tank Restoration Scheme covers the investigation and execution of the necessary works in the whole Presidency and particulars of the works done are published in the annual administration reports. Investigation is now in progress in nine districts and will shortly be resumed in a tenth. Four special divisions have been constituted for the purpose and investigation is also in progress in two ordinary divisions.

161 A.—Experiments in the cultivation of Egyptian cotton have been tried with little or no success and have consequently been abandoned. Of the American cottons, Cambodia has given good results and, with a view to devoting special attention to the improvement of this crop, the Government have recently sanctioned the establishment of a farm in the Coimbatore district. The Government do not consider it necessary to grant any facilities to ryots for the cultivation of this cotton, other than the help now being given by the Agricultural department.

The results of these investigations are available in the various departmental publications and all possible steps are taken to popularise the knowledge contained in these publications. Advice is freely given to all ryots who apply for it. The Government have not so far employed any special organization for the study of the industrial side of sugar production, but in connexion with the recommendations of the Industrial Commission the question will receive consideration.

163 A.—(a) The Government maintain a leather trade school with which a small model tannery and leather finishing shop are combined. This institution is in full work.

THE MADRAS CITY MUNICIPAL BILL, 1918.

The next item on the agenda was the further consideration of the Madras City Municipal Bill, 1918.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"I have to inform the Council that it had been intended to take the business in this order, in its natural place on the agenda paper; but we have received a communication from the Government of India relating to some of the minor changes in regard to the control by the Army Department over the Esplanade and other such matters and I think it will be convenient that the Council should have the copies of the consequential amendments which will be necessary and which will be moved by the Hon'ble the Advocate-General. They are being type-written with the utmost expedition and they will be placed in the hands of the Honourable Members during this sitting. We will take the Bill as soon as possible either to-morrow or the day after, after the Honourable Members have had full opportunity of perusing the amendments. They are purely matters relating to the Army Department's control over the Esplanade. I propose now with the leave of the Council that we should proceed to discuss the resolutions. At a convenient moment we will take up this Bill."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"Will your Excellency permit me to make a suggestion? I have arranged for my work in the hope that this Bill will be over to-morrow. May I request your Excellency that it may be taken up to-morrow?"

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"We will certainly consult the Honourable Gentleman's convenience. I am sure the whole Council will be glad to do so."

Resolutions on matters of general public interest.

RESOLUTION RE COMMITTEE TO INQUIRE REGARDING THE DISTRIBUTION OF NECESSARIES OF LIFE.

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR:—"Your Excellency, the resolution I have the honour to move runs thus:—

"1. This Council recommends to His Excellency in Council that a committee consisting of officials and non-officials should be appointed to inquire immediately into the grievances of the public regarding the distribution or supply of kerosene oil, paddy and other necessities of life."

"As Honourable Members would notice, the subject is a very vast one. I have here specifically mentioned paddy and kerosene oil; and besides these, other necessities, by which I mean the specially important ones, are also included. Therefore it will be noticed that it is a very complicated subject that we are now dealing with. In point of fact, that is one of the reasons why I recommend the appointment of a committee instead of calling on the Council to offer their decision on the spot. I shall point out in this matter that we have a very urgent duty to perform."

"I will take the specified subjects first, namely, paddy and kerosene oil. In this Presidency, paddy is the article which is most constantly in requisition as food for the vast masses of the people, and I will take up paddy first. It has been repeatedly brought to our attention in the columns of newspapers that there is a widespread, I may say even acute distress on this question. People find that the price of rice has gone up; not only well-to-do people who use good paddy but also poor people who use only inferior Rangoon rice have begun to feel the pinch. Prices are so very high that various institutions have been obliged to think of re-arranging the rates of payment for their staff. We unfortunately notice to-day the Tramway strike which is not unconnected with the subject we are now discussing. This question therefore of relief in regard to high prices is a very important matter, and I therefore need not tender any apology for taking up the time of the Council on this subject. The feeling upper-classes of people is that there are all sorts of persons who come forward with moves with other there are few who can point out specifically the exact causes of the distress and fewer still who can point out any redress. On this matter, it is almost common knowledge that the chief causes of the trouble now felt are the failure of the monsoon and the export of paddy from places where they are wanted to various other places for various reasons. These two causes in themselves would account for our trouble. The failure of the monsoon is well known. In the several districts which usually have surplus stock, there has been less than the usual production though luckily in some districts there is a surplus. Some of the Presidencies in India are deficit provinces. Even Rangoon which is usually a surplus province has suffered slightly by the failure of the monsoon, but still there is a surplus. These causes are fairly well understood; but there are other causes about which people are not so clear; e.g., the exact extent to which the failure of the monsoon has operated. As for the export to various other places, there are various doubts entertained. For instance, it is believed that to help our brave soldiers in Mesopotamia, we have to send a good portion of our paddy. Nobody grudges that. In fact our brave men deserve it more than we do, but there is a feeling that the paddy is going away from the country."

(Mr. Narasimha Ayyar.)

"Then comes the question as to the effect of these two causes and other similar causes. Stocks are held up in some places and popular suspicion naturally magnifies the holding up. The people believe that others are stocking their grains. Merchants even according to ordinary business habits, hold up, but there are speculators who find their opportunity in the present economic trouble and they issue vast orders. Persons who hitherto did not care to take large stocks have tried to take up large stocks in the hope that they can amass immense profits out of the necessities of the poor and the rich. These and other similar causes are roughly known to be the causes which have occasioned the trouble."

"One remedy which most people thought of was the control of prices, worked by the control of transport and a department for the control of foodstuffs generally. The Government have not accepted that, but we have a department of control established. Unfortunately that has by no means ended our troubles. The first idea was that since the prices are fixed and people are prevented from exporting paddy away from places where they are wanted, everything would be in good order. But experience points out that control is more or less satisfactory on paper, but in practical working, proves unsatisfactory. That has been forcibly brought to our attention by certain recent events. In spite of the efforts of the Control department, we find in various places prices are so high and the panic has risen so high that riots have been attempted. For instance, in Calicut the other day we read in the newspapers that there was very nearly a riot in connexion with the price of paddy. Some poor fellow went up and was told that the prices had gone high and he threatened to loot and a number of persons ran up to the beach where bags were stored up and it required all our resources of law and order to restore peace. That is one incident which shows the way in which the wind blows. I am quite sure most of the Honourable Members here know the full extent in their own locality of the grievance. For instance, I may mention that my land agent who stores my grain at Gobichettipalayam reported to me that unless I took away my grain from the place where it was stored and took great care of it, he was afraid that looting would take place. In Gobichettipalayam the people cannot be depended upon to maintain law and order. There was a man who was himself on the grain committee and he told me that the authorities to avert such troubles required that each of the landowners should make a special sacrifice and sell paddy to the grain committee for the purpose of distribution at something like 50 per cent of the proper price, so that the poor people may get rice at the proper rate. In spite of the precautions taken in that direction, there is a scare of looting which is not unfounded in view of the incidents which have happened in other places. I mention only these two cases of Gobichettipalayam and Calicut to show that the trouble is pretty widespread. Honourable Members would have noticed that about 8 or 9 questions are now on the question paper in respect of the high prices and the scarcity of kerosene oil and the other troubles that I have just now mentioned. Therefore, it is quite clear that in spite of the department of control, we have to notice the fact that there is unequal distribution and there is such a sudden rise of price and pretty sharp distinction between district and district which draws our attention naturally. Then the question arises as to what should be done. That something should be done all are agreed. What exactly is the thing to be done, I can hardly find even two or three friends talking about it can agree. That is the reason why I have asked for the appointment of a committee; but there are some matters on which there will be more or less agreement."

"Take the first question as to the exportation from the province by reason of the general shortage. I am glad to see that the correspondence has been published by this Government in answer to the request for information which I made. That shows that this Government have taken a very proper view of the needs of this Presidency. Though the Government of India may not have understood the difficulties with which we are faced in this Presidency equally with some other provinces, I am glad that this Government have asserted the importance of our controlling the transport of paddy and other food-grains from this Presidency. So far, it is a matter for congratulating this Government."

"But further, partly perhaps by reason of the Government of India's views and partly by reason of the Madras department of control and the Madras Controller, we have got inter-district restrictions, and that seems to be an eye-sore and a grievance with a certain number of people. They point to the fact that whereas you find new rice sold in one place at 3 measures for a rupee, in the next place across the border it is sold at 2½ measures. Such sharp differences naturally provoke people and cause a certain amount of dissatisfaction and they also provoke them to break the laws as to transport. Naturally they try to get the grain over surreptitiously without permit or licence. In spite of the law to the contrary, they proceed to have a surreptitious transport of grain from one district to another. This tends to demoralization, and the other restrictions imposed by the Controller are sought to be evaded with an easy conscience. I found in dealing with this question of high price of paddy and rice in Salem the late Collector, Mr. Legh, was hard put to it to see how he can satisfy the public and prevent the scare about looting. He sent for certain merchants and one of them frankly told him that he knew how to oil the wheels of the Controller's office. He said that with the expenditure of Rs. 100 he was able to get a permit on the pretence of sending it to Malabar and that he was able to induce the railway authorities to deliver it en route at Salem. The Collector was rather astonished at the ingenuity of the merchant. But the merchant was unabashed. Such demoralization is very undesirable and that is one of the things which if possible we should avoid."

"Next I may point out besides inter-district restrictions there are also restrictions in connexion with the import of paddy or rice from our chief source of supply, Rangoon. With

838 RESOLUTION RE COMMITTEE TO INQUIRE REGARDING THE DISTRIBUTION OF NECESSARIES OF LIFE.

(Mr. Narasimha Ayyar.)

reference to Burma rice we have had a lot of complaints last week against the injustice of the Controller. A large number of merchants have written to the Controller and last night a telegraph peon woke me up at about 12 o'clock and put a telegram into my hands which complains of a lot of injustice by the Controller. The big European merchants are given licences and are given a large tonnage and those that applied in January and February are told that there is no space in steamers. That is one sort of complaint from the standpoint of the merchant. I am not just now concerned with the standpoint of the merchant, though we should remove the injustice rankling in the minds of any person if we can possibly do so. Then we have had complaints put forward by the consumer. The consumer has got this complaint to put forward, namely, that if a large tonnage is allowed only to a handful, then this handful wish to dispose of the paddy they get in the way most convenient for their own purposes if not for the reason of a large profit, at least in ways they find easy for disposing of the articles. The consequence is that these persons who dispose of the import largely do not sell it in retail but pass it on to others, so that, though there is the rule of the Controller that the profit should not be more than 8 annas on each bag, still what happens is the bags pass from one hand to another and when the rice reaches the consumer he has to pay the profits of two or three men at least over their transactions. That is the complaint of the consumer and he points out that it would be much better instead of allowing a small group of five or six people a share of the tonnage—I am told that Madras is allowed ten thousand tons import from Rangoon—instead of centering it in the hands of a few, if it is distributed in the hands of ten or twenty people there will be a certain amount of competition among them which will cut down the prices. Therefore the consumer is entitled to point out that the policy complained of by the traders in this telegram and in the press is really a policy which ought to be condemned in the interests of the consumers also.

"In that connexion there are persons who suggest that the redress for this is for the Controller not to trouble himself with the space but to leave it to various persons to whom he distributes the licence and let them arrange with the companies concerned reserving to himself only the issue of licences. That is a matter which has also to be considered though I am not quite sure how it would work. I have mentioned in connexion with Burma rice various grievances. There are some people who feel it so keenly that I have no hesitation in putting them forward for the consideration of the Honourable Members. They wish to cut the Gordian knot and to abolish all control. They say let us not have the Controller's department. In theory it is all right; you try to control the transport by getting information as to the stocks available for each month or fortnight from each locality. In theory it is satisfactory, but they point out what information does the Controller get as to the stocks? He depends upon the various district officers. These depend upon the taluk and firka authorities, till at last some one sends information which is not supervised. That is the way in which the information comes and is clearly defective. It may be answered that there is nothing that is not defective in this sub-lunar existence, but some contend that the unreliability of this information as to the stocks is so great that very little purpose is served by acting on it. I do not know whether you can support such a position, but it is a thing which has been put forward by men who have thought over the matter and it deserves consideration.

"With reference to other points—I have just now dealt with the figures as to stock—the machinery of control is said to be defective. For instance, the Controller controls those who apply for Burma rice and who get stocks straight from Rangoon. He issues an order that they should not sell it at more than half a rupee profit on each bag. But the control is not now effective to prevent a number of others taking the articles from those who import them in the first instance and passing them on. There is no effective control over the retail sale. It must be remembered in this connexion that the Rangoon rice imported into the port of Madras is sent to the interior and there is no control in the interior as to the exact price at which it is to be sold in the interior. In some places no control is attempted at all. They point out that there is very little good in trying to control and impose any restriction on the first purchaser; it is a waste of labour. They point out that the intended effect fails for another reason also. The Controller does not go and see how exactly the various persons who get paddy deal with it. For instance Rangoon rice is attempted to be sold for Rs. 11-8-0 according to the orders of the Collector—I am not quite sure of the correct figure. The man who imports it mixes it with other qualities of rice, Nellore rice or Bezwada rice, and passes the mixture off as Nellore rice or Bezwada rice. In that case what sort of control is possible? That is a contention put forward by those who urge the abolition of control.

"Then there is the fact which I already hinted at, namely, that the control is too expensive and too vexatious. I have heard it expressed by a very large number of persons that the department of control causes a lot of harassment and vexation, and in point of fact half a dozen persons told me that unless the wheels are thoroughly oiled in the staff which the Controller is supposed to control you cannot get anything. In respect of kerosene oil one man told me that by way of Christmas present he has had to spend a large amount, some thousands of rupees. It is said that the Controller's office is too costly a department to deal with. It is only rich people who know how exactly to oil the wheels who can get along. By reason of applying oil to the wheels freely they naturally have to raise the price; they have to profess when the Controller inquires of them that they sell at the prices laid down by him. I do not suggest that the Controller himself is to blame, I do not wish any such impression should be caused. The Controller cannot possibly control everything. So many offices are full of this very unfortunate system of tipping or extortion, whichever you may call it. If we turn round and blame those who give money that it is their vice, that they are weak people, we shall be forgetting one thing. We should take note of existing difficulties and instead of idly blaming people for defects which exist we should so arrange our institutions and proposals as to cause the least amount of hardship or inconvenience. There is no use of blaming these people. There is no use of saying: why do you people go and offer bribes? Why are you anxious to get rice? Is it possible to work this department of control without an unduly large amount of this sort of lubrication? It is not merely the demoralization that is involved in these cases but also the necessity for the man who pays the tips to raise the price and that surreptitiously for making up his loss. He cannot sell rice at the proper price.

"These are some of the reasons urged by those who contend that this department of control has no place and that it should be abolished. I am not myself of opinion that all control should be abolished. If it is possible to discover some means by which the work of the department can be controlled with some success, we should try it. I do not think at present it is an impossibility, although I find several Honourable Members with whom I have discussed it differ from me. Anyhow this is a matter which has to be considered in all its aspects. So many other reasons and so many other considerations arise. Questions of gram, cholam and ragi have got various other aspects because the information as to stocks is not quite as easily obtainable with reference to the minor food-grains as with regard to rice. Therefore there are various considerations which arise which ought to be discussed and decided by the committee which I am proposing.

"Then again there is one very important matter which I will touch upon to show what the committee should consider, and that is the extent to which the railway freight adds to the price. That is a very important matter. I have frequently heard it said that most of these railway companies are Government property and a large number of railways earn a lot of profit out of the transport of food-stuffs. The outturn, the increased price of food-stuffs therefore really goes into the pockets of Government. Is it not proper that the Government should remember what they did years back? For instance when there was a famine in the north an order was issued that fodder should be carried free or at nominal rates. Similarly in the existing pressure why should not the Government forego their share of the profits arising from the carrying of food-grains? For instance in Negapatam the railway servants complained to the railway department that a good portion of the high price they had to pay was really the profit of the department that a good portion of the high price they had to pay was really the profit of the railway company and the railway company agreed to forego their profit and to transport the food-grains for the benefit of the railway staff free of freight. Similarly the proposition has been put forward that the Government may do the same to the poor ryots who form the large majority of the people in the country. Though some rich people may also benefit, it is virtually the poor people that will be benefited largely. We should take care that the speculator does not profit. That is one of the matters to be considered by the committee.

"I have already taken a good portion of my time and I have dealt with the question of grain. With regard to kerosene oil somewhat similar considerations arise, though for various reasons there are very different considerations also existing. In respect of kerosene oil it may be pointed out that people may take to other forms of lighting, candle, gingly oil, ground-nut oil, but that is not the case with rice. A man accustomed to rice will not change it for maize or millet. With regard to kerosene oil I may point out that the trouble is felt everywhere. If you read the newspaper you will find there is trouble about kerosene oil in one place or another every day and there is breaking of heads sometimes. In Salem I saw persons who had gathered in large numbers breaking bottles in their rush for the oil and when I inquired, I was told that the agent who was selling at the controlled price did not give more than a quarter bottle. Consequently there were people buying oil at one end of the town where there is no control, at As. 8 a bottle. When I went to other places 16 miles off, Valapadi on the way to Atur, a merchant there told me he had to pay As. 8 and another had to pay As. 12 and even then he could get only one bottle. There was an impression that somehow there was something wrong. But when I sent word to the man who was supplying all the oil, I found he had stocks and he adopted some procedure which I could not understand by which he refused to sell his oil. He was selling sometimes red inferior oil and not superior oil. Just as I was leaving Salem the day before yesterday I learnt that every person who went up to him got the oil at the fixed price. I do not know if that was the effect of this resolution. If that is so I would like to move the resolution every day. But I know that on a previous day people had to wait at the door of the agent the live-long day and had to go away without taking oil. I am glad to point out that the local authorities adopted a very excellent device. The sub-magistrate was asked to supervise the sales, he sat up for an hour or two and in his presence directed the sales to go on. On one occasion in spite of the order that only half a bottle should be sold, a woman was able to get a whole bottle instead of half a bottle by passing an extra two annas. That shows the defects of control. Even directly under the nose of the sub-magistrate tipping goes on. It is not possible for the sub-magistrate to spend the whole day in that way. That is only one illustration of the problem of unequal or improper distribution, and it shows the defects of control also. Whereas the sub-magistrate could help only 500 people, out of a population of 50,000 in Salem, to get their daily supply, many others were left without any arrangement. I do not suggest that as many magistrates should be appointed as there are thousands of people in each place. This has led several of my friends to come to the conclusion that if there is to be control it should be on a socialistic basis widespread and such as might delight the heart of socialists. That is full and direct control. I do not know how many members would subscribe to such a doctrine. If that is considered impracticable, the cry is raised abolish all control in

CAUSED BY HIGH PRICES.

(Mr. Rama Ayyangar.)

[11TH MARCH 1919.]

"I find in Madras both from the press, and my discussion with the merchants elicited the same information, that when Rangoon rice is supplied, some people forward it to some other district centre. For example, I met one yesterday who was sending to Kurnool and other places. There was considerable difficulty in getting transshipment. Again there are people like Binny & Co. who try their level best at Madras to sell to the best advantage of poor people. But the fact remains that most others who could do similarly to help the people in the mufassal do not get the necessary quantity of rice, owing to difficulties of transshipment from one place to another.

"Then the question naturally arises whether, when this Government have no control according to the answers given and the discussion had at the previous meeting, when this Government have no control over the tonnage available, it is possible to place restrictions so as to allow the purchase only by a few individuals. The question that I definitely raise, my Lord, is whether when we are not in complete command of the tonnage and when the whole transshipment depends upon steamers or the railway, the latter of which can be controlled only to a small extent—whether it is proper to restrict the import to a few individuals who are disposing of it. Messrs. Best & Co. explained in one of their communications that when they heard that steamers from Rangoon had space they took advantage of the occasion and tried to do what they could. But my submission is if the whole Presidency is not to be starved it cannot be left in such a condition. Two things must be done. It may be that the Government charter some steamers or get a few trucks completely under the control of the Government for the movement of food-stuffs and gram and other grains to places where there is need. This portion I confine to transshipment. As has been argued very ably in the last discussion, it will not be possible to control the prices except at the source of supply, where there is a surplus; it can be controlled there and to the extent it is controlled it may be utilized. The question of transshipping them falls mainly upon a responsible body like the Government. Applications from merchants both in the mufassal and the metropolis may be invited to be disposed of according to the needs of several areas and at certain rates. It may be a pure business in the matter of disposal of bags to the merchants and to the areas which need them. The Director of Civil Supplies or the Controller of Food-stuffs, whoever it be, will have to send enough quantity to several stations in the mufassal where there is railway communication or arrangement otherwise for transshipment. The supply should be controlled both by tonnage and railway truck.

"If then it is possible by this arrangement to see that places where there is a deficit of grain or pulses are provided with a sufficient quantity, the question arises what shall the Government do, if from mufassal stations we have not got such a demand by the wholesale purchaser and we could not send them to such places. Then the next question arises for the Government to consider what steps to take where in particular district centres there are not enough pushing merchants who will advance money and see that the articles are carried to their markets. When that question arises, my Lord, I propose a solution. The solution I suggest is this: 'a central committee be appointed with one or two members selected in each district to help the supply of grains, pulses, chillies, etc., to places where they are scarce and are selling at abnormal rates by opening shops or making other arrangements.' Continuing from the place where I left this idea the Government by their ability to transship will be able to send stock to places where there is demand. In the case of districts which have not got such merchants to take it, the Collectors of these districts will be instructed to apply for the quantity needed of each of these grains and gram, and the Collector with the help of the municipal councils or the boards may be asked to just have some funds from the banks near which will enable them to take them to several places on first demand. I do not want the Government to incur any loss in respect of the matter. I want it to be done purely as business; and the taluk boards with the assistance of the divisional officers, tahsildars and sub-magistrates may be able to place them within the easy reach of the masses, by either giving a small commission or days' wages for retail sales by merchants, or opening shops in places under the control of Government officers to distribute it at the rate fixed by the Government. These rates will vary in different places according to the distance of the locality to which the grains and other things are sent as the transshipment charges will vary. Even for that the question arises whether it can be immediately taken charge of by the department. So far as we have worked for the last six months and more, apparently whoever applies and manages to get the licence—after he has got it—it may be that his profit is limited to 8 annas per bag, but once it leaves his hands it may go to a retail seller after passing through six hands and altogether another Rs. 3 may be added and the person that takes it for vending it to the masses may put any price he pleases. That is the experience of the past. Something must be done to remedy it. Therefore I propose a central committee in Madras, not of many members—I do not think it will be useful to have a large committee—but a few members official and non-official, and the Director of Civil Supplies may be at the head of that committee and the Collectors also may choose for each district one or two members who may either directly take charge or at least learn the market and communicate with the committee in Madras for the quantity required in each article to that district. These members and the Collector must take a leading part for the mufassal stations. They together will manage to send it to the areas where they are most needed. As has been explained in the discussion in November, I have not been able to disagree with the Government and state that we should act upon any principle but that of business. So long as there is competition and there is capacity for anybody to manage transshipment without the intervention of the Government, it will not be possible to create a market which may be satisfactory and may be called satisfactorily controlled.

(Mr. Rama Ayyangar; Mr. Venkatapati Raju.)

Therefore, it is, my Lord, the main control of the Government must come by way of chartering ships and by way of having control over the railway transshipment. The particular details I have referred to will enable every part of the province to have the benefit of such control. As it is, I may explain how it is a failure. Suppose Messrs. Best & Co. are able to take hold of 30,000 bags and sell at Madras nearly 10,000 bags and send a few thousand bags to one or two people in the mufassal. They cannot do more than that. There is no knowing whether the vendees from the mufassal will act up to their instructions, especially till it reaches the ryots. The opening of shops in Madras is quite right. It is easily controlled by them. They cannot take greater responsibility. The only body that will be able to take charge of this business and manage it properly will be the Government and they should so distribute it among the districts and leave it to so many individuals, not one or two. When it is fixed so much for Madras, it must be given to so many individuals, that the matter would work itself automatically and would not allow scope only for certain hands to work in such a big city as Madras with 7 or 8 lakhs of population. Therefore divide it into parts. The first relates to having control of stock where they are available, the second to distribution both in mufassal centres and rural areas and the metropolis. When that is divided like that, any extra quantity may be disposed of according to the needs which may arise. Anything over that may be left to the merchants for them to deal with as they please. But this committee with all the instructions that the Government may be able to give will be able to arrive at a satisfactory conclusion as to the quantities of each grain and pulses needed and the effect will be that every place will be supplied with enough quantity. Cotton seeds, gingelly seeds, black-gram and horse-gram are not available in some places either because of the badness of the season or the failure of the crops owing to the failure of the rains. There are no products in some districts. The southern districts suffer very much. Even if it is one measure per rupee they are purchasing it now. Is it not time for the Government to try and interfere? I say that funds should be allotted to relieve the distress. It has been accepted by the Government and put forth that in some places famine relief is needed. I am not referring to that at all in this resolution. I am only referring to enabling local bodies or other bodies which may be accepted by the Government to purchase these goods on allotment of funds. After all the Government may not lose much except probably half a per cent or so in the complexity of the transactions that might arise in having to pay extra establishment that may have to be entertained; the rest of it may be done on business lines. I have no doubt that every District Collector would act on it. Some of them are anxious to do it; they are willing to devote extra time for relieving this distress. They may be called upon to help the Government in this matter and the whole business will be done excellently. There is no use of leaving it in the position in which it has been till now. Four months ago probably we could have said, 'we shall wait and try'. The present condition is quite otherwise. The matter has become urgent and should be taken up by the Government at once. Though I do not specially refer to the transshipment question as a question of the first importance, I submit that the Government may take steps to alleviate the distress on the lines I have suggested."

RESOLUTION RE REMOVAL OF INTER-DISTRICT RESTRICTIONS ON TRANSPORT OF FOODSTUFFS.

The Hon'ble Mr. B. VENKATAPATI RAJU:—"As Your Excellency has suggested I take this opportunity of moving my resolution as well—

'XVII. This Council recommends to the Governor in Council that the Government be pleased to issue instructions to the Director of Civil Supplies to remove the inter-district restrictions of transport of foodstuffs between the adjacent districts of the British territory in this Presidency.'

"My Lord, in this matter both the Government and ourselves are in the same situation. They know the seriousness of the situation; they know the dangers and difficulties, and both are helpless. The Government are helpless, because they cannot find any means whatever to bring down the prices or to supply foodstuffs where the difficulties are noticed. It is therefore the duty on the part of every one of us to co-operate with the Government and to see how best to meet the situation. Therefore we will treat it not as a controversial measure but as a matter of ventilating our grievances so that we can find out what possible light we can throw on the present conditions. We cannot overlook the fact that the present situation is brought about by exporting a large quantity of foodstuffs without considering whether our province has enough of it and they found at the last moment that we have been sending large quantities out of the country which we cannot afford so much so that even the Government of India have thought it necessary to import wheat from Australia. But they have taken no serious step and I think we must sympathise with the Local Government when they said that if every other provincial Government wants any quantity and applies for a supply to the Government of India if the Local Government are not to be consulted on that particular matter, then practically they will take away whatever is wanted without considering whether we have enough to spare. When we have not enough I think not only the Government but the people should rise and complain that no other Government should interfere with the foodstuffs in our province unless our wants are satisfied. Probably on behalf of the Government of India, their agents say they would consider the situation, but I think it is a far cry from a province like this to a respect of kerosene oil. Both the extremes seem to be dangerous. It is for that purpose I am recommending a committee to consider what is the proper course to be adopted in regard to kerosene oil. The shortage of kerosene oil is brought about artificially in several places. There are three companies supplying kerosene oil and unfortunately they happen to be practically in the hands of one and the same man. That is the case in Salem. Several people told me there was too much of oiling the wheels going on, and it was absolutely impossible for any one to sell at the price fixed because so much had to be spent on oiling the wheels. The people have been asking me to recommend to Government that they should direct all sales to take place on stated days in the presence of a responsible officer, who should see to the distribution of a large number of tins. There are numerous suggestions put forward, but I do not wish to take up the time of the Honourable Members.

"It appears to me that the scare of looting in the case of paddy and some other food-grains has already spread to various places. Although the Government say there is no information about the breaking of bottles or the breaking of heads in answer to my question, it is a fact which Honourable Members may take from me that there have been such disturbances in connexion with kerosene oil. In order to avoid this scare of looting, it is highly necessary that there should be a committee appointed. For these reasons I would recommend the appointment of a committee consisting of officials and non-officials. My proposition is connected with Resolution No. IX which my Honourable Friend Mr. Rama Ayyangar moves and he has got some additional suggestions as to the opening of shops and having a committee with gentlemen from various districts. My resolution is in no way opposed to the resolution of the Hon'ble Mr. Rama Ayyangar or the resolution of the Hon'ble Mr. Venkatapati Raju No. XVII which also bears upon this. I have already dealt with the removal of inter-district restrictions so that sharp differences might not exist across the border. These three may be discussed together and voted upon one after another."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT :—"The Honourable Gentleman has anticipated me that these three resolutions should be discussed together though there may be different votings. Will the Hon'ble Mr. Rama Ayyangar move the second resolution?"

The Hon'ble Mr. K. RAMA AYYANGAR :—"Let somebody else second the resolution."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. SURYANARAYANA RAO :—"I second the resolution. I shall give my experience in my district. We are finding considerable difficulty in obtaining food-grains. The Hon'ble Sir Alexander Cardew has paid a visit to Vizagapatam. We feel convinced that of all the districts ours is the worst. That is the only conclusion we can come to. We find lot of difficulty. I think if all the restrictions are removed we will get on better. There is a wrong impression in the minds of several that there is not paddy sufficient to supply Ganjam district and therefore that no paddy should be allowed to come out to Vizagapatam. Similarly the Collector of Gōdāvari is under the same impression, and he does not allow paddy in very large quantities to Vizagapatam. For several years Vizagapatam was relying on the supply of paddy from Ganjam. It never produces any large quantities itself. Even now there is an abundant supply in the Ganjam district but the Ganjam Collector does not allow these supplies to come to Vizagapatam. Some time back two or three merchants were licensed to sell paddy. The consequence was that one or two men have a monopoly of selling and they dictate their own terms. The result is that the price of paddy became very high when it came to Vizagapatam. Again restrictions have gone so far that no passes are now allowed for any paddy to come from the Ganjam district to the Vizagapatam district. Have matters stopped there? No; on the other hand paddy is still coming from Tilaru and other places to Vizagapatam. The rice is being brought clandestinely by carts and the consequence is there is tipping throughout the whole of the journey in order that the bandy may go without being seized by the policeman. Eventually the burden is thrown on the consumer. By the time the rice comes to Vizianagram the first merchant who buys the grain makes his own charges and when he brings it to Vizagapatam he makes another charge and if the paddy is taken to Anakapalle he again charges an additional amount, and the consequence is that by the time the rice comes to Anakapalle he will have incurred exorbitant charges and all these fall upon the consumer. Your Excellency's Government have tried the experiment of imposing restrictions. Let us see how the problem would work during the next six months without restrictions. At Cocanada rice is selling at 6 to 7 seers. At Vizagapatam we cannot get 3½ seers. The price has gone up to 25 rupees per bag whereas in Cocanada it is Rs. 16 or Rs. 17 per bag. The prices are rising day by day at Vizagapatam, and the poor people are wholly unable to buy paddy. The experiment of getting rice from Gōdāvari was tried for some time. We are not allowed to get that beyond Yellaman-chili and the consequence is we had to bring it by bandy, unpractices have to be resorted to, and again the burden is falling upon the consumer. It is an anomaly that while rice is selling at 6 seers in Ganjam or Gōdāvari we cannot get at Vizagapatam half the quantity."

"With regard to kerosene oil my Honourable Friend Mr. Narasimha Ayyar has given a description. We are feeling the same difficulty with regard to kerosene oil, and unless the Government interfere in the matter, I do not think there is any security for anybody, and riots will take place again. We were threatened the other day that there would be riots. With these words I second the resolution."

RESOLUTION RE MEASURES FOR THE RELIEF OF DISTRESS CAUSED BY HIGH PRICES. 841

11TH MARCH 1919.]

(Mr. Rama Ayyangar; the President.)

The Hon'ble Mr. K. RAMA AYYANGAR :—"Does Your Excellency propose to have the other resolutions discussed now?"

His Excellency the PRESIDENT :—"Yes, if the Council find it convenient."

RESOLUTION RE MEASURES FOR THE RELIEF OF DISTRESS CAUSED BY HIGH PRICES.

The Hon'ble Mr. K. RAMA AYYANGAR :—"I will move my resolution. It runs as follows:

'IX. This Council recommends to the Governor in Council that immediate steps be taken by allotting funds to relieve distress caused by the high price of foodstuffs in the Presidency and to attain that end a central committee be appointed with one or two members selected in each district to help the supply of grains, pulses, chillies, etc., to places where they are scarce and are selling at abnormal rates by opening shops or making other arrangements.'

"My Lord, it will be seen from the wording of my resolution that I have not taken objection to the position as far as it has gone. Within the last one or two days we have got the correspondence between this Government and the Government of India published in the newspapers. We did not ourselves get a copy of the Government Order before we started. At least I did not get it before I started from my place. That apparently explains the difficult position that this Government occupy after the matter was particularly placed before the Government of India. Apparently the Government of India also feel that in the circumstances of the whole country the matter has to be carefully sifted and a conclusion arrived at. Under these circumstances after I read the Hon'ble Sir Alexander Cardew's statement last November in this Council—I was absent from that meeting—I felt that the whole thing was being carefully watched and I felt also that in spite of all the steps that had been taken, the position was not at all in any way improved and to the best of my powers I considered the question and I thought I could place this resolution before the Government and the Council.

"In fact it is so very difficult to decide whether to fix the price, the maximum price in all places in the province where there is a good supply of each of the articles I have referred to. Apparently the Government of India are against putting up such restrictions in respect of other articles than rice, wheat and gram. But in respect of gram as far as I have been able to gather, there has been no attempt to fix the price at the source of gram. Naturally therefore, if what my Honourable Friends have told me is correct, much of it has already been exported from the province. It is so probably with chillies also. With all that we are at a portion of the season when we could not have exhausted all our supplies. We may be able to do a little more to see that within the province as much is done as possible in respect of these three heads. Cholan and other crops—I do not know whether they will come under this or not—apparently the wording of the Government of India's order would exclude. However, I submit as the last reply by telegram of this Government shows the strong representation and feeling that is expressed that control may be necessary, it may be acceded to by the Government of India. I dare say everything will be done towards that. My submission is we should consider whether in respect of rice and other articles which have been to some extent controlled we have had the position clear and satisfactory. My Lord, I think even during the last discussion it has been pointed out by the Hon'ble Sir Alexander Cardew that he was not sure whether the benefit actually reached the masses. I can for my part say that it has certainly not reached the masses except where one or two gentlemen out of philanthropy undertook to supply as per the terms of the Government Orders and gave relief to a few persons in a number of centres. In the mufassal specially in the rural areas it has not been possible to give any relief. In fact I have been very closely observing the condition of the market in Madura and the surrounding places and in Ramnad also. Paddy was sold at 5 measures the day before yesterday in the Madura market. That means they cannot give more than 2½ measures of rice per rupee. I know there is one gentleman in Madura who has got a few bags of Rangoon rice and he sells them at four measures a rupee. In spite of that as soon as the paddy is harvested it is removed by the merchants from the thrashing floor subject to the shrinkage that might result. They have been removed at six measures per rupee. Therefore I only make the suggestion that they boldly come to purchase this, because they find that the interior is not at all touched by the arrangements made and they feel sure that they can immediately take them into the interior and dispose of them at less than what they bought at the Madura centre. The same is the position in other places also. It sells almost at the same rate in Tinnevely where we have the Tambraparni area. The yield is poor everywhere. Apart from that, that which is produced in the Periyar area or the Tambraparni area has to be disposed of. There is enough supply for the immediate needs of the field at that very high price and to take them as I have explained, to purchase them on the field at that very high price and to take them to the interior for sale. I have no doubt that they sell immediately. If they keep it they could not sell the paddy at four measures because there will be greater shrinkage. Therefore, my Lord, it completely proves one statement of mine that it has not actually reached the interior and we have not been able really to create a sense of satisfaction or of security in the minds of the people to any extent."

TRANSPORT OF FOODSTUFFS.

(Mr. Venkatapati Raju.)

place like Delhi, because there are other provinces which are very near and they can bring pressure or influence sooner than we can from this distance. All the same there is this difficulty. When the Government of India's order says that the provincial restrictions should be removed when the Director of Civil Supplies wants it, it is all the more necessary that my suggestion should be given due consideration, because if we are unnecessarily placing restrictions from district to district and we are accumulating it in one district or other district, then they would take it away from that district to another province. It is just like our accumulating our balances and the Government of India taking the money away. Therefore we must first of all provide the best means of supplying foodstuffs in the districts.

"So far as Vizagapatam is concerned, I may mention to the Government that it is in a most deplorable state. We are against restrictions and even the District Collector is anxious about it. A deputation waited upon him only a few days ago, and he was pleased to state that he was appealing to the Government that some sort of permission should be given to the people of Vizagapatam to import rice from Ganjam and Gōdāvari and that the inter-district restrictions should be removed. He states that he was ordered to keep up the restrictions. But unfortunately these restrictions have got a contagion; not only between district and district but between taluk and taluk these restrictions were introduced. In taluks where there is a deficiency there is trouble. Within a short distance from the Vizagapatam district rice is selling at Rs. 6-8-0 or Rs. 8-8-0 whereas in our place it is double that price. How to meet the situation? Vizagapatam is placed in an unfortunate position because Gunupur and Palkonda, which generally give large quantities of paddy have got an opening at Amadalavalasa and Tilaru in the Ganjam district. We cannot get it. If they go to Amadalavalasa and Tilaru the Ganjam Collector says 'it is our property, you cannot take it.' There are other taluks where the crops have failed for want of timely rain. Is there any method of relieving the situation? The only method as suggested by the Hon'ble Mr. Suryanarayana Rao is to remove all restrictions, because the more restrictions you place the more trouble you are causing to the consumer without intending it. The restrictions are good in themselves but in their application they create a lot of hardship. Supposing you impose more restrictions to make it more effective, additional prices will be paid by the middleman in order to circumvent these rules and all this will be charged on the consumer. Some of the Collectors express their inability to combat that evil. They know perfectly well and I think even the Government know by this time that so much black-mailing is going on and they are unable to overcome that difficulty. When you prevent it by rail they take it by cart. If you keep half a dozen constables, the people will pay something to every one of them with the result that you will only enhance the price for the consumer. Some of these restrictions, Your Excellency, are only on paper, because they are more observed in the breach than in the observance. This Government have restricted the price in the Gōdāvari district; it must not exceed Rs. 12-8-0. That is the rule on paper, whereas if you go to Tuni you will find they are selling at Rs. 15-8-0. I do not think our Government are singular in this respect, because when our merchants went to Calcutta to purchase rice for the consumption of Vizagapatam though the price in the Government Order in Calcutta is Rs. 5-8-0 they were really selling it at Rs. 6-8-0. These merchants are required to apply to people who are supposed to have licences and these people say that they have no stock. The only way to get the stock is to increase the price and you get any amount of stock. If you stick to Government restrictions, you would not get a single bag. That is the case in Tuni. In Cocanada, locally they are selling at Rs. 8-8-0 whereas they sell it at a lower rate in certain other places. I do not think that the Government do not see all the difficulties but they find some difficulty how to meet this evil. My suggestion is, on the general question, whatever may be the view of the Government so far as the Northern Circars are concerned they should be grouped together and there should be no restriction so long as the foodstuffs are controlled within those four districts without exporting to other presidencies or other places which are not British territories. If that is done, we can more easily supply the foodstuffs to poor people.)

"The way in which the licences are being given is causing much havoc. Whatever be our intention, the actual effect is you restrict it to a few people and the necessary consequence is they will raise the price. Give it to as many people as there are applicants, provided they satisfy the local authorities that they would observe the restrictions imposed by the Government or the local authority. If you are satisfied that the man is a merchant who is prepared to obey and carry out the behests he should be given irrespective of his class whether he belongs to a particularly favoured class or not. We should give it freely to all persons who are prepared to observe the conditions.

"With regard to kerosene oil we cannot blame the companies themselves, because they are prepared to place at our disposal the necessary quantities wanted at the necessary centres. The trouble comes only with reference to the retail sale. B forms are given. Whenever a person goes, the dealer charges a high rate and sells it to him. Even when we have enough quantity, it is not properly distributed among the residents. Therefore we must combat the evil by stopping the middleman whose intervention unnecessarily increases the price. That can only be achieved by removing the inter-district restrictions.

"When the Hon'ble Sir Alexander Cardew came to Vizagapatam the difficulties were placed before him and he promised that he would consider them favourably. I respectfully submit that the District Magistrate who is responsible for the peace of the district is also of the same opinion. When all the people complain that it should be done, I hope the Government will be ready to come to our aid and see that a proper supply is made. From Gōdāvari district a certain quantity was allowed to be imported to Vizagapatam, not to the whole district but only to two taluks. I say whatever be the quantity, let that quantity be distributed to the whole district. But that is not done.

"I want also to bring another matter to the consideration of the Government, because I say it is rather outrageous that when we have to import rice from Calcutta to Waltair we have to pay railway freight of Rs. 1-12-0 per bag. Now if we are clever enough and take it 20 miles beyond Waltair to Anakapalle, we have to pay only 14 annas per bag. What is this absurdity? When we take to a shorter distance we have to pay double. Are not the Government aware of it? Perhaps it may be due to the fact that the Bengal-Nagpur Railway has some understanding with the Madras Railway Company. The merchants are complaining that they could not bring rice to Waltair because they would be benefited if they take it anywhere else.)

"The Government made a concession with regard to the supply of fodder by railway. Why not the same concession be given for the supply of foodstuffs for human beings? It may not be in the hands of local Government but if they press on the Government of India the present hardships which the people are undergoing and which are brought about by the former action of the Government, I think the Government of India would come to our help and see something is done. They may show similar concession with reference to human beings as they did with reference to fodder for animals. Therefore, My Lord, I do not propose to take any more time, I say that this requires serious and sympathetic consideration of the Government."

The Hon'ble Sir ALEXANDER CARDEW:—"Your Excellency, the Hon'ble Mr. Narasimha Ayyar in beginning his speech referred to this matter as one of great complication and importance, and I quite agree with him on both points. I am glad to have an opportunity of placing before this Council a statement as far as I can of the facts as known to the Government and of the position as we see it at present; and in doing so, I should like to disclaim any desire to dogmatise upon the rights and wrongs of this question because they are of great difficulty, but I merely put what seems to me to be the most reasonable inference from the facts before this Council in order that they may consider what conclusions should be drawn from them.

"The Government are quite aware of the seriousness and gravity of the present position in this Presidency and the whole matter has been and is constantly before their consideration. We know perfectly well that these immensely high prices which are unparalleled in the history of the Presidency even in the worst famines must be causing immense hardship and immense pressure to many classes of the population. Some classes have no doubt succeeded by getting larger wages in meeting to some extent these high prices; but those people who are not in a position to extract higher wages from their employers or who are on fixed incomes cannot fail to suffer very great distress, and the whole position causes us very grave apprehension. In regard to the Government employees, at any rate, the Government have endeavoured to do something to meet the position. As the Council is aware, special allowances have been given to all employees on Rs. 50 and under, and as the answer to one of the questions shows, between 90,000 and 100,000 people will benefit to some extent by that concession. But of course that is merely evidence that the Government recognize the facts of the position, know how much people must be suffering, sympathize with them and would do everything in their power to remove the suffering.

"Madras is almost always dependent upon imports; but this year the position is very much worse than it has been for a long time. The figures for cultivation are published every month in the Fort St. George Gazette. Roughly as far as I can see from the latest figures up to December, there was up to that date, a deficiency of no less than 660,000 acres under wet cultivation and 9 million acres under dry crops. These are enormous figures and they must represent at a rough calculation something like a couple of million tons of foodstuffs which are in deficit in the Presidency. Then in addition to that great deficiency in crops, unfortunately the same thing has occurred even in a worse form in other provinces. I believe that in the whole of India there is a shortage of something like one million tons of food. That estimate is based on the ordinary rates of consumption which no doubt will be reduced and must be reduced by the pressure of high prices; but in the whole of India there is an enormous shortage of food owing to bad season.

"It has been suggested that it is due to prior exports. But it is obvious that you cannot interfere with the exports in a good season because there may be shortage if a bad season should occur. The Government of India recognize the position and they have arranged for the import of 200,000 tons of wheat from Australia, and they hope to get a larger quantity up to half a million tons. But up to the present, they have succeeded only in securing 200,000 tons and that alone is a large quantity to move and involves the use of twenty steamers which is a serious undertaking. In the meantime, Bombay, Hyderabad and other parts of India are suffering greater distress than we; the prices are higher in Bombay than in this Presidency. As to Hyderabad, I have no figures, but I fear things are very bad indeed there. So that it is an all-India problem and every one who considers it, must consider it from the all-India standpoint.

"Now the chief source of supply is Burma; Bengal supplies a certain quantity of surplus. But our chief stand-by is Burma. Burma produces a large quantity of rice and has got probably something like 1½ million tons to give to India. But it is obvious that Madras cannot claim an undue share of that quantity. We cannot expect the Government of India to allow Madras to have more than its share while Bombay is being starved. We are obliged to recognize taking the whole conditions together, we can only claim a reasonable share of the supplies from Burma.

846 RESOLUTION RE REMOVAL OF INTER-DISTRICT RESTRICTIONS ON TRANSPORT OF FOODSTUFFS.

(Sir Alexander Cardew.)

[11TH MARCH 1919.]

That share is determined by the Foodstuffs Commissioner and that share has, I believe, been placed at 25,000 tons a month. I do not think my figures are entirely correct; they are not quite complete because imports by rail are not available for a month or two after the month closes. There are no figures for imports by rail after December, but apparently since September a net quantity of 150,000 tons have been imported into Madras, if you deduct such exports as took place in the early months. These imports will go a little way to make up the deficiency but Honourable Members will see the position is one of short supply throughout India and in Madras it is a matter of short supply and the other considerations are minor ones, such as hoarding. The real cause of the high prices, the ultimate cause, as far as I can judge, is short supply.

"Can the Government do anything to remedy this? There are two points of view on this. One point of view would be in favour of removing all State control. It is contended that State control is ineffective, that it interferes with the usual channels of trade and checks private enterprise and that it creates—that is the chief argument against it—artificial differences in price levels in different parts of the country. State control must to some extent be ineffective. It cannot be perfect, it can only be partially effective. Now, I should like to ask the Council to look at some facts regarding State control. When we had the last discussion in November what was the price of rice in Rangoon at that time? The Burma unit is 100 baskets of 75 lb. each, that is, 7,500 lb. The price of that unit before Mr. Gubbay began his operations was Rs. 435 and it has been fixed by him at Rs. 335. As Honourable Members know from what they see in the newspapers the prices have been lower than Rs. 335, Rs. 325 and so on. So that it may be stated to be almost certain that State control in Burma has immediately reduced the price by over 20 per cent, from Rs. 435 it has come down to Rs. 335 per unit. Then take the case of freight. In November the freight was Rs. 42 per ton—the freight from Rangoon to Madras. That freight was in no sense inflated, because we are told that steamers could easily do better by leaving the Indian waters, and by either going to the Far East or to Europe they would probably earn higher freights. The only way in which reduced freight has been obtained has been by the direct exercise of official control and intervention. So long as the Controller of Shipping exercises control over shipping, the Government will be able to order them to go to certain ports and follow a certain course of business and they have been able thus to reduce this freight. The freights have been reduced from Rs. 42 to Rs. 26 per ton. This is the second instance in which official control has produced material result without which we should be much worse off than we are. But for the official control, prices would have gone to Rs. 500 per unit. The merchants in Rangoon are grumbling a great deal that they are not allowed to make the maximum profit which they would otherwise be making. The result of official interference has been to reduce the cost of Rangoon rice from Rs. 15 per bag landed in Madras to Rs. 11-11-0 which makes a difference of between three and four measures per rupee. I suggest on that statement that it is impossible to accept the attitude of those who say 'do away with all control and leave it to private enterprise'. That would be possible if private enterprise had a fair field to operate and if there were plenty of steamers to move grain and plenty of railway stock. Then no doubt those restrictions would be superfluous. But unfortunately neither of these conditions at present exist. We cannot expect in three or four months to make up for the enormous losses in steamers due to sinking by German submarines. Although all the building yards are hard at work, it will take many months before we can get normal conditions. With regard to the railways we are equally badly off. The war no doubt is over, but I may read from a letter of the Agent of the South Indian Railway, where he says:—

'It seems to be the general idea amongst the public that because the war is over normal conditions have automatically resumed. But such is far from being the case. We have not yet received any stores for repairs and maintenance of our locomotives and rolling-stock; and although under the instructions from the Railway Board we cabled Home indents some months ago, we have not yet received any intimation of when we may expect to receive materials so that we are in just the same condition as we were in during the war with the disadvantage that the engines and stock have been running longer and are therefore in more need of repairs.'

"Thus there is not really a fair field for competition. It seems to me as far as I can see that control must be maintained for the present.

"Then comes the question of control inside India as apart from the control in Burma—control over distribution in India. As Honourable Members have seen from the papers published, the Government of India would like to sweep away this control. They take the line that you have only to put in as much food as you have got and leave it to natural causes to determine who shall get it. The Madras ryotwari landholders take that sort of view. They have sent a memorial asking that all control should be removed. I see in the newspapers that some Madras merchants want the same thing. They want the removal of all control. On that matter, I want to draw the Council's attention once more to facts, because they are the only things which can hardly be doubted. Until the 25th of January the removal of dry grains, Government of India, in the letter which has been published, have cancelled that on the ground that it produced artificial and unequal distribution. By that, I understand that one province had cheaper dry grains than another province. What has been the result? We cannot yet tell what the final result will be, because it has not been in force long enough. It has been in force only for a month. But take the case of Anantapur. The price of ragi there was 9-3 annas per rupee a year before. On the 25th February it was 7-9. In Cuddapah the price was 8-6 and now it is 7-3. In Godavari it has gone up from 11 to 9-8. Cholan in Vizagapatam has gone up from 9-7 to 8-7; in Anantapur from 8-3 to 6-9; in Cuddapah from 8-6 to 7-4 and so on. I have got the prices of cumbu. It is to the same effect. I had a visit yesterday from the Collector of Anantapur, Mr. Raghavayya, and he says the district is swarming with Bombay merchants who are buying in all directions for export to Bombay. I submit to the Council that two conclusions follow from this. One is that this control was to some extent effective. It prevented the province from being drained of supplies by another province which was able to pay more. It is clear that it tended to do what the Government of India say, viz., to produce an artificial unequal level of prices. The result of the removal of the restriction is to level up the prices all over the country. I think there can be very little doubt that that is the effect of these restrictions whether between provinces or between districts. It simply means that they check the moving of grains from those districts which are fortunate enough to have stocks to those which have not, and consequently those which have not got stock suffer and those which have benefit. It seems to me that it is merely a question whether or not you should remove these restrictions and leave it to the wealthiest parts of the country to take as much supplies as they can buy or whether you should try by exercising control to prevent that effect. For instance, in Bombay, they have made large profits from cotton and they are able to pay higher prices than we. The man with the longest purse can buy foodstuffs. In the same way inside the province Coimbatore has done very well in cotton and the Coimbatore ryot is able to pay higher prices and to attract grain into his district. For instance, supplies are sent by rail all the way to Nilgiris; after they reach the Nilgiris by rail, they are taken down the ghat and brought by carts to Coimbatore. That produces speculative buying and an unnecessary tendency on the part of merchants to send grain to points where they can get the highest prices. They send it to one point one week, and if they can get a higher price elsewhere they send it to another point next week. That seems to me to be the objection to the removal of the restriction within the province which the Hon'ble Mr. Venkatapati Raju advocates as much as to the removal of the restriction beyond the province. The control is not perfect; it does not prevent hardship and the corruption that he refers to; but it does, on the whole, prevent speculative buying and the sending of grains to and from towns, keeping some districts better off than others. To remedy that, the Director of Civil Supplies is here. He is intended to send grain and to give larger orders for export to certain districts.

11TH MARCH 1919.]

(Sir Alexander Cardew.)

"The Hon'ble Mr. Venkatapati Raju—it is a most natural thing, I can quite understand his feeling in this matter—says that the District Magistrate of Vizagapatam complains of the high price in that district and wants to get larger supplies from Godavari. But we have letters from the District Magistrate of Godavari saying that if we do not do something to stop the export of grain from his district he will not be responsible for the peace of the district; people see grain going out, which causes the price of grain to go up in the district artificially and he cannot agree to any further reduction of his stocks. So that, one must set the feeling of one district against that of another. Very naturally each of them looks at it from its own point of view.

"Therefore, as far as I can see at present, I deprecate the removal of these restrictions because that would make matters worse than they are. Some Honourable Members have said, 'we have tried this and it has failed. Let us try something else'. We cannot make dangerous experiments in that fashion, because it may result in serious trouble. The very fact that Honourable Members are in such disagreement on the question shows how doubtful it is. The Hon'ble Mr. Rama Ayyangar is strongly in favour of control. Other Honourable Members like the Hon'ble Mr. Venkatapati Raju would like to sweep it away, and though their opinions are based upon local conditions on the whole it seems to me there are reasons for the maintenance of this measure of control over distribution and thereby indirectly over prices which are sufficient to justify us in keeping to it.

"Then the further question arises whether the Government ought to go further. The natural feeling which has been repeated to me again and again is that the Government ought to do something, that it should go further and control prices. We have been asked to fix prices in each district. Thus the Madras Ryotwari Landholders' Association with what seems to me to be slight inconsistency proposes on the one hand that we should fix prices and on the other that we should remove the control between districts. Can we fix prices? It is quite easy in Rangoon where you are dealing with only exports by sea. You can see that no ton of grain shall go out except at the price you have laid down. Is it possible to do it here? I again draw attention to the facts as far as we know them. I am going on newspaper information which unfortunately is not always reliable, but what I understand from newspapers is that the Government of Mysore attempted the control of prices of dry grains. They said no one should sell above their price. That attempt I believe has failed. The ryot when he was told that he was not to sell above a certain price, refused to sell at all. The Mysore Darnar sent people into the highways and by-ways to commandeer stocks, but they could not get it. I believe that the reason why we cannot get from them the promised supply for the Wynad is that they are not able to get stocks. Fixing the price there is quite a failure. I understand from a recent communication that the Government of Mysore are now withdrawing their attempt at control. That is a valuable piece of experience. It shows how difficult it is even in a compact area like Mysore. Again we are trying to control the price of kerosene oil here. It is a comparatively easy thing to control the price of kerosene oil because it all comes from Burma by sea and it is all in the

TRANSPORT OF FOODSTUFFS.

(Sir Alexander Cardew; Mr. Narasimha Ayyar.)

hands of three or four companies in Madras which have not raised their prices, so that the supply is entirely under control at the source. Yet, when it reaches the consumers, as far as we know, there has been a complete failure—I would not go so far as to say complete failure but there has been a marked failure—in many parts of the Presidency to control the price. The machinery used by the firms in Madras is they have several agents up-country and we have fixed the prices at which the agents should sell the oil. But when other persons buy the oil they put on any price they like and the consumer is not benefited. The consumer is benefited in some parts, but at any rate it has not been so great a success as we hoped.

"In the case of grain, would not the difficulty be infinitely greater because you have got immense stocks in the country and there is no possibility of controlling at the source? There are large stocks all over the villages and it would hardly be practicable. You will have to fix different prices in every town and almost in every village, and supposing you fix it too high, what happens? The Government are then said to have been abetting profiteering and abetting the exploitation of the unfortunate consumer. If you fix the price too low, then the ryot refuses to sell and holds back his stock. It seems to me that the effect of fixing prices would be to force the Government to commandeer the stock and distribute it just as the Mysore Government did. The result would be worse than what we have got now. Last November, the Government issued a Government Order in which we suggested the possibility of municipalities buying supplies and retailing them without any profit or any loss, but at cost price. But I am not aware of any municipality which has done it except one case. I met the Chairman of the Kodakanaal municipality the other day, he told me he had had a certain quantity of grain up and he sold the whole of it within 20 minutes of its arrival and the whole thing yielded a profit of Rs. 1-8-0. He felt sanguine that he would be able to do it again although he is 50 miles from the railway. I do not see myself why it should be impossible. We have now got the assistance in this matter of Messrs. Best & Co., who, I understand, have undertaken to send grain up-country to municipalities without asking for payment in advance, thereby enabling the municipalities to pay at their leisure after sale and thus removing the difficulty about pre-payment, on the condition that it is sold at 4 measures per rupee. That only applies to Rangoon rice. That seems to be the most hopeful thing that we have yet elaborated. If we can get enough quantity of Rangoon rice and send it to municipal councils and get them to sell it at a fair rate which leaves a small profit, then with the help of a responsible firm like Messrs. Best & Co. it is the best thing that could be done. I would commend it to the chairmen of municipalities in the hope that they will try the scheme and see whether that scheme does not work.

"The great difficulty is the smallness of our supplies from Burma. Several references have been made in this connexion to the arrangements for import. I should like to remove any misapprehension on that point. There seems to be an impression among the public and probably among some members of the Council that something in the nature of a monopoly has been created. The Hon'ble Mr. Narasimha Ayyar, I think, said that there was great complaint among consumers regarding this matter of licence for imports. He said it should not be given to a few but to ten or twenty. He evidently thought that it was given to a small number. I have got a list of licensed Rangoon importers. The number of such merchants in Madras is 21 for March and 20 for April; another 40 in Cochin and a certain number in Calicut; about another 20 in Negapatam and a still larger number in Tuticorin and the same in Calicutore."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR (interrupting):—"May I ask for information as to how many there were in January or February in Madras?"

The Hon'ble Sir ALEXANDER CARDEW:—"It must be rather more than 20 in January from the look of the figures, it must have been about 30. I am not sure if we should be wise to go further than what the Director has done. It might be better to reduce the number and to fix half a dozen importers. I have no firm opinion but I am not at all sure that these people who import 200 tons would not be better eliminated, and a smaller number selected with more stringent conditions as regards the sale. When you have 20 people importing 200 tons each, there must be difficulty in looking after them. The Southern India Chamber of Commerce might be asked to nominate three or four merchants from among Indian merchants and we might ask one or two Europeans to take it up, so that the import and the distribution might be brought under more stringent conditions. I am not at all inclined to increase the number of importers, I am rather inclined the other way. Some approach to monopoly seems to be the only way in which the rice will reach the consumer at the price at which the Controller intends it should. That however is a doubtful point.

"The next question is with regard to kerosene oil. Here I am afraid again we are up against the undoubted fact of inadequate supply, though I am not in possession of all the facts in regard to the causes of the inadequacy of the supply. In the months of November, December and January the quantity sold averaged somewhere about 170,000 units of 8 gallons. In February it suddenly fell to a little over 1 lakh of units. The kerosene oil firms with whom I have had some communication are not clear as to the causes of this, whether it is the other cause, one real cause is the reduction in shipping. I am told that no less than 50 per cent of the American tank steamers were sunk by German submarines in the course of the war; nearly half of their fleet of tank steamers were sunk. The Asiatic Petroleum Company which depends on the Anglo-Saxon Steamship Company lost 33 per cent of their ships. That must necessarily reduce the supply and therefore increase the price. I am very much afraid that it is beyond the power of the Government to do much in the matter. I am glad, however, to be able to say that the American firm hopes that there will soon be an improvement and that two steamers are expected this month with a fairly large supply for the West Coast while another steamer is expected before long in Madras. If that arrives, it will substantially remove the inconvenience. If tank steamers increase, the position will be relieved. The position is thus more hopeful than in regard to grain.

"The first resolution I have to deal with is the proposal to appoint a committee, but before referring to that, let me refer to the other two resolutions. As regards the resolution of the Hon'ble Mr. Venkatapati Raju, I think the trend of my remarks will have shown that I cannot agree at present to the removal of the restrictions from district to district. I think on the whole we should continue this method of trying to remedy the evil. Then the Hon'ble Mr. Rama Ayyangar suggests a committee which should sit in Madras and have mufassal representatives. I am not prepared to say that mufassal representatives may not be useful and I will return to the point. Thirdly, the Hon'ble Mr. Narasimha Ayyar has proposed a committee. I do not think a committee would be a useful procedure in this matter. Last August or about then, the Government appointed a committee to assist the Director of Civil Supplies and it is a matter of disappointment to me to see that no use has been made of that committee and that it has not met."

The Hon'ble Mr. R. B. WOOD (interrupting):—"May I explain? That committee was replaced by a committee of rice merchants which met every fortnight and was more useful in dealing with shortages in different places."

The Hon'ble Sir ALEXANDER CARDEW:—"I am much obliged to the Hon'ble Mr. Wood for the information; but at any rate, there is reasonable ground for dissatisfaction on the part of the members of the old committee who were not told that they were to be regarded as functus officio. The Government propose to reconstitute that committee which was appointed last year and to remove to some extent those members of the committee who represented the question of priority in transport. It was at that time mainly a question of transport by railway, which is no longer so important. The Government think it would be well to reconstitute that committee and to provide for its meeting regularly. If it meets, I see no reason why the Hon'ble Mr. Rama Ayyangar's idea that a certain number of mufassal representatives should be put on it who might wish to come up to Madras and see the Director of Civil Supplies from time to time on the subject should not be accepted. This is the proposal which the Government make. In addition to this, we contemplate the holding of a conference early next week of those interested in the subject in Madras and certain officers and non-official gentlemen from the mufassal. I have received an application from the Madras Mahajana Sabha offering to send a deputation. We are going to send a letter to them to send certain representatives in order that the question may be fully talked over. On the same day we will have an opportunity of discussing with half a dozen Collectors and non-official gentlemen who will represent different parts of the Presidency. It will give us the opportunity that is sought for by the Hon'ble Mr. Narasimha Ayyar's committee. That being so, I feel sanguine that he will consider that the object of his resolution is practically met by this step which we propose to take. Though we do not accept it in terms, we provide the machinery which will enable us to give effect to it. I hope with this explanation he will be able to withdraw his resolution."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR:—"May I know the difference between the committees suggested by the Hon'ble Sir Alexander Cardew and this committee?"

The Hon'ble Sir ALEXANDER CARDEW:—"If the Honourable Member thinks there is no difference, that will remove his difficulty in withdrawing."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR:—"I do not think there is."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"My Lord, I am sorry to say that I am one of that committee referred to by the Hon'ble Sir Alexander Cardew just now. I was hoping to hear that we were going to meet every week or every fortnight to discuss the serious situation, but I received no intimation whatever of any meeting after I was appointed as early as October last. I wrote to the Director of Civil Supplies whether there was any meeting with- out my knowledge and he was kind enough to inform me that he would inquire and find out whether there were any informal meeting held without my knowledge but there was no formal meeting held. Now the Hon'ble Mr. Wood has told us that because there is this sub-committee, the Madras emergency committee, sitting in Madras so far as Madras City is concerned, he thought there was no use of calling this committee which was appointed for the whole presi- dency. I have made my protest to the Director of Civil Supplies for not calling a meeting of that committee, and I have suggested that frequent meetings of that committee would have saved the situation somewhat.

"There is no doubt that the situation is growing worse and worse. From the remarks made by the Hon'ble Sir Alexander Cardew he seems to think that the present state of things may be allowed to continue. We have worked the present arrangement for some time and we cannot say that we can look with satisfaction upon the results achieved by the arrangements proposed and carried out. Therefore there is something wrong somewhere. I quite admit that it is a very difficult and complex question. It is very difficult to arrive at a conclusion as to what should be the proper remedy, but at the same time it is but right that the several persons who are interested in the question should meet frequently and take proper steps then and there.

850 RESOLUTION RE REMOVAL OF INTER-DISTRICT RESTRICTIONS ON TRANSPORT OF FOODSTUFFS.

(Mr. Ranga Achariyar.)

11TH MARCH 1919.

I therefore strongly urge on the Government whatever the constitution of the committee, there should be a committee in Madras of well-informed people on the subject who will take stock of the situation as it arises and advise the Government as to what steps can be taken. I therefore strongly urge the first resolution moved by the Hon'ble Mr. Narasimha Ayyar which the Hon'ble Sir Alexander Cardew is prepared to accept in a certain form. I am glad the Government are accepting it in that form.

"The Hon'ble Sir Alexander Cardew made mention of the Madras Ryotwari Landholders' Association and their recommendation as to the removal of inter-district restrictions. I am afraid he was rather labouring under a mistake that that association recommended the removal of restrictions outside the province. We did not suggest that. We suggested only that the inter-district restrictions might be removed. At the same time, as will appear if Honourable Members look at question No. 10, we also wanted to fix the maximum prices of food-grains in suitable areas and to open in urban and rural centres grain shops for selling grain to the poor. These two recommendations may appear somewhat inconsistent and we felt the difficulty, ourselves. But at the same time we thought that, if the Government or if some local body or some co-operative society could be called in aid to open grain shops and we fixed the retail price, it would improve the situation in these areas and prevent profiteering.

“ That profiteering goes on cannot be denied. Notwithstanding the noble efforts made by my Honourable Friend Sir Gordon Fraser in this matter who sells rice at Rs. 12 per bag before it reaches the railway station for export to the outside it passes through three or four hands and by that time the price comes to Rs. 14 or 15. I have heard of instances in which such things have happened and verified them.

“How to prevent this state of things is a matter for consideration. The Government have not taken any steps to prevent it. It is quite true that in the City of Madras we may be able to control the prices by opening shops as the corporation has done. And now that Messrs Best & Co. have opened shops and others may come forward to open shops in Madras we may be able to control the prices somewhat. But in the districts outside Madras the difficulty is felt much more. Whether these inter-district restrictions really do any good I am not at all sure. But I do think it will be a safe measure to adopt to remove these inter-district restrictions and to keep up the restrictions as to export outside the province to Hyderabad, Bombay or Ceylon or Mysore. At the same time unless we are in a position to give facilities for transport, the mere removal of restrictions will not suffice. That is again a matter in the hands of the Government. The Government must bring pressure to bear upon the Railway authorities just as they exercise pressure for military purposes. I suppose the condition of the 41 million people of the presidency is of equal importance and if the Government can commandeer railway wagons for military purposes, why should they not also commandeer railway wagons for this purpose and make an equal distribution? No doubt some relief has been given in the matter of steamer freight between Rangoon and Madras, and I leave it to my Hon'ble friend Sir Gordon Fraser and others to say whether further reduction cannot be effected. But in the matter of railway freight it should be reduced. Something has been done on the Bengal Nagpur railway line. Why a similar relief should not be given by the reduction of the railway freight in other railways should be considered seriously. It would afford great relief, that were done.”

"But the great point which troubles those who think about this question is how to prevent this rise of prices after the thing leaves the wholesale importers and before it reaches the consumer. It requires very careful consideration and I do think it may be necessary to do what we have done in the case of kerosene oil. Notwithstanding the difficulties which faced us we fixed the retail price according to each locality and according to the available supply in each locality, and also what may be rendered available, by the Government stepping in. No doubt it is a serious and difficult task and a responsible task and requires great labour. But that should not deter the Government from adopting such a step. I am afraid that unless some such step is taken, the rural parts will suffer, and they are already suffering very largely. In some places the people are not able to get rice at even two measures per rupee. On some days they have to buy at one or one and half measures per rupee. This is very hard upon the people who the Hon'ble Sir Alexander Cardew referred to as persons with fixed incomes. The persons most affected by the rise of prices in the various commodities are those earning Rs. 25 to Rs. 150 per mensem.

“The causes are well-known. The recent report issued by the Agricultural department refers to the lesser area cultivated, the lesser yield per acre and the large reduction in the quantity of paddy produced in the province. I was rather surprised to see the answer to question No. 16 to-day in which the Hon'ble Mr. Chidambaramatha Mudaliyar asked for district-wise information. The Government reply is ‘we are not in possession of the information.’ I see that the Director of Agriculture has published that information in a report although it is confined only to rice and does not deal with other grains. I dare say he will be able to furnish that information as regards the other grains also. I do not know why the Government say that they are not in possession of that information. I have looked at the figures contained in that report. It contains a mine of information and shows how each district is situated. With that information before the Government I think it would be possible for them to fix the prices in each locality. They have also an agency, which they can utilize, in connexion with the Revenue department and can devise beneficent measures for the relief of distress in those parts.

11TH MARCH 1905. MR. ANIMAS

"The other question I will refer to is the question of licences. I entirely disagree with the Hon'ble Sir Alexander Cardew when he says that he would prefer a monopoly in the matter of issuing licences. Unless the Government take the distribution when once it is received in Madras, or some other agency takes the distribution, from the wholesale importers to all the various merchants, retail and otherwise, this thing would not work at all. The danger which I apprehend is this. Here are a regular body of people who have been trading in rice, and by allowing a monopoly in the hands of three or four people you are sure to kill that trade. When once you kill that trade, as soon as that monopoly is removed these people who now import rice will disappear from that trade; they will continue only so long as the protection is afforded, otherwise they will disappear, and it will be difficult if not impossible to revive the rice trade in the hands of the old people. It will not be wise. I say it will be entirely unwise to kill that trade. Dangerous consequences are bound to follow when once you stop the usual traders. When you stop them by giving monopolies to a few individuals, when the time comes to remove the monopoly and these restrictions—I hope the time will soon come when normal conditions will be restored—that day we will regret the step we now take, because these people will have been driven out of the market and new people will not come in easily. That is the aspect of the question which I ask the Government to seriously consider. Therefore we recommend that, so far as the question of licence is concerned, let the old system continue, and let as many people import rice as possible. Why should the imports be confined only to importing by steamers? Why should not coasting steamers be called in aid? So long as facilities are given in Burma for buying rice we can encourage imports into the province by means of not only steamers but by means of various native crafts which were in use and which I understand the merchants are willing to use provided the difficulties are removed. I understand there are now difficulties in putting rice in such crafts. If that is so, I think the Government ought to interfere and facilitate import of rice into the province by means of such coasting vessels. I think the difficulty of steamers which is great may be reduced and minimized. I am for extending the system of licence to as many people as apply. What is the object in fixing 200 tons or 2,000 tons? Who can afford amongst us to put Rs. 30,000 or Rs. 50,000 or Rs. 1 lakh or Rs. 2 lakhs? We are not all Messrs. Best & Co. How many Indian merchants are there who can afford to put so large an amount in the trade? Therefore I think it is almost folly if not crime to fix such high quantities in the licence. I would encourage all people who are accustomed to import; otherwise this danger is bound to arise, namely, we will be killing the trade which will be a serious thing indeed and which one day we will have to regret. I therefore submit that these points should be kept in view. I am glad that the Hon'ble Sir Alexander Cardew has acceded to the request of the Mahajana Sabha to receive a deputation of people in this connexion. I dare say both the public and the Government will be mutually informed by the discussion on a matter of such vital importance to the people of the country."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur A. SUBBARAYALU REDDIYAR :—“ Your Excellency, I rise to give information to the Council and the Honourable Member in charge regarding what the municipality or district board can do towards giving relief to the poor in regard to foodstuffs. In the Cuddalore Municipal Council we set apart Rs. 10,000 for the purpose and about a fortnight ago agreed with my Hon'ble Friend Mr. Ahmad Tambi Marakkayar to supply me 1,500 bags free of profit within a week's time. Till about a week ago we had got 300 bags. At that time the price in the market of the country rice was 2½ or 3 measures per rupee. I began to sell my rice at 3½ measures, excellent rice, small mill rice. The result was within two days the market price fell to 3½ measures a rupee. The same may be done by the district board.”

Hon'ble Khan Bahadur A. T. G. M. AHMAD TAMBİ MARAKKAYAR SAHİB Bahadur :—“ I have been giving information to this Council. I would have been the

The Hon'ble Khan Bahadur A. T. G. M. AHMAD TAMBI MARAKKAYAR SAHIB Bahadur:—
 "I should like to give further details and information to this Council. I would have been the first man to sympathise with and support this resolution had it been brought in a business-like manner. I am sorry that the whole question has been mixed up, and I cannot for a moment agree to the proposition made for the wholesale withdrawal of the restrictions imposed on importers of rice from Burma or the issue of licences. As a merchant myself I fully understand the whole situation. Had it not been for the help of the Government in controlling the price in Burma as the Hon'ble Sir Alexander Cardew said (here is the original licence schedule No. 1, the price of small mill rice in Rangoon has been fixed at Rs. 325 and big mill rice at Rs. 346 and special quality at Rs. 358 and three stars at Rs. 371-8-0 and two stars at Rs. 386) we should not have been able to import Burma rice at a reasonable price. For broken rice also the price has been fixed. Nobody in Rangoon will purchase anything at over and above that rate, nor could the mill owners sell over that rate. As stated by the Hon'ble Sir Alexander Cardew the price was Rs. 435 last October and now it is reduced to Rs. 335. Had it not been for this restriction I am afraid that speculators will have brought the price to Rs. 500 per 100 baskets taking undue advantage of India which has failed in crops and the prices would have gone double and treble and would be famine prices. That is the first and foremost benefit that we enjoy by the restriction. First of all Burma is the only place that can help us now.

"With regard to the question of issuing licences it is not proper to find fault or damn the course the department of the Director of Civil Supplies that their action is unjust or illegal on anything of that sort. As a matter of fact they have a regular system of issuing licences and

TRANSPORT OF FOODSTUFFS.

(Mr. Ahmad Tambi Marakkayar; Mr. Ranga Achariyar.) [11TH MARCH 1919.]

they have very able European officers and also two Indian officers of Deputy Collector's grade. One is Mr. Sunlara Achariyar and the other Mr. Huris. They have got local knowledge thoroughly and they make all inquiries as to the prices and the position of the merchants and they have been careful in issuing licences to reliable persons. The issuing of licences is based on their previous position, and they are issued to those who are called established merchants and not to each and every one who has never been in the market as a tradesman. As a matter of fact I know a large number of so-called merchants who are applying for licences now. I can quote thousands of applications pouring in and hundreds of men coming to me and asking me to endorse them as a member of the emergency committee, and one or two vakils who are members of the committee do it as a profession. If they apply for a licence and it is refused such people begin to write in the newspapers criticising the conduct of the Director of Civil Supplies and the regular merchants, the established merchants who have got licences and are willing to carry out the rules and the regulations laid down by the Director of Civil Supplies. It is due to mere jealousy on the part of those merchants who apply for and do not get licences against those who get it. It is due to selfishness that they begin to write all sorts of things in newspapers and find fault with everybody. After all the business conducted by the Director of Civil Supplies is a perfect one. The licences are granted on the following conditions:—

(1) 'He may not buy rice of the 1919 crop in Burma at more than the maximum price fixed by the Government of India as per Schedule No. I appended.'

(2) 'He shall sell all rice he imports at a maximum rate of profit of 8 annas a bag of 2 maunds (paddy 4 annas per two maunds). The maximum prices at which a bag of 2 maunds of the whole rice of the 1919 crop and 2½ maunds of the broken rice should be sold by the licensed importers are noted in Schedule No. II.'

(3) 'He may sell the imported rice to the retail traders in his port and to any trailer outside at the net profit of 8 annas. But the price charged to the retail dealer must in no case be raised by previous sales from wholesale to wholesale merchant.'

"Some of the Honourable Members remarked that the article passes through six or seven merchants and therefore the price goes up. I do not believe that such kind of thing is practised here. Every control is being exercised in parts where there are emergency committees formed and the Revenue Department are sending their tahsildars and deputy tahsildars throughout to bankahalls to get information about retail sales and purchases. I have been asked to send a sale account, what is called a weekly report for the bags sold,—how many bags are landed and sold, the price and the consignee and the particulars. I have given them to the Divisional officer of my place. I do not think any malpractice is being done when such check is being exercised by the Revenue Department over the licence-holders. Even assuming that there are malpractices done, I am quite sure if such check is continued it will put a stop to all those malpractices."

"Then, Sir, as to appointment of a committee of officials and non-officials, the Hon'ble Sir Alexander Cardew admitted it may do some good, but all the same there is everywhere an emergency committee and they can put a stop to such practices."

"With regard to the remarks made by the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar against the views given by the Hon'ble Sir Alexander Cardew, I think that by giving a monopoly to one or two or half a dozen respectable firms and giving them licence to import goods and by getting an agreement and a guarantee that such respectable firms would sell only at the limited prices fixed by the Controller—I am sure that will work very well rather than giving licences throughout to every one who has never been a merchant and who is not a tradesman, but horsekeeper or book-binder who applies for a licence. You say that Messrs. Best & Co. are getting a licence or Mr. Ahmad Tambi Marakkayar is getting a licence. How can a stranger get a licence when he is not a professional merchant? The Director of Civil Supplies is not sitting quiet, he is not sleeping or blind. He will only give the licence to people whom he believes to be responsible. If such a thing is done and continued I am sure it will do more good than to give a licence to every one as my Honourable Friend suggested."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR (interrupting):—"I said those who are in the trade. Those who are not in the trade are now rushing forward."

The Hon'ble Khan Bahadur A. T. G. M. AHMAD TAMBİ MARAKKAYAR SAHIB Bahadur:—"Messrs. Best & Co. are traders and a man selling a basket of rice is also a trader. The Director of Civil Supplies says established merchants and importers of grain should be licensed. If such things are taken into consideration the system will work splendidly."

"Look at the situation of the control of shipping. I do not know whether the Government of Madras have power to get more steamers, as the whole question is in the hands of the Home Government Controller and he is authorized to control at Bombay. It is this officer that Mr. Cardew said, the whole of India suffers from famine and the Government of India have a Bombay and other places where there is famine. So we cannot expect to import any amount of grain and to get any amount of steamers in Madras. No doubt it is a very good idea. But famine is staring us in the face and many poor people are suffering, and I am sure that the Government of Madras will appeal to the Government of India to give us a bigger share than what they have decided to give us in the way of shipping. The Hon'ble Sir Alexander Cardew said that had it not been for Government control the freight would not have gone down from Rs. 48 to Rs. 26. I do not know the correct figure. Another remark of my Hon'ble Friend Mr. Rama Ayyangar is that the Government should charter steamers and keep certain wagons for the purpose of carrying food-grains. As regards chartering, it is needless to do so as the whole control is in the hands of Government and they can always command upon the railway authorities, and the chief goods-clerk and the stationmasters and we had to pay a certain amount of remuneration and we had to depend upon the good-will of the railway employees. But since the Director of Civil Supplies has begun to grant certificates to all the merchants who are bona fide traders, they can apply to the emergency committee or directly to the Director of Civil Supplies who will give them a licence quoting the railway wagons and the certificate number and so on. When we are in need of wagons we quote the number of the licence and apply for wagons. These licences have been distributed according to the numerical numbers and these are found in the railway company's office and if merchants apply for wagons and quote the number they get them. I do not think the Hon'ble Mr. Rama Ayyangar's suggestion as to control over the wagons is necessary."

"With regard to the remark of the Hon'ble Mr. Venkatapati Raju about other Governments interfering with and taking away our stock, I quite agree with him. Had it not been for the control exercised upon the export of food-grains from our Presidency to the Straits and Ceylon the prices would have gone up to Rs. 30 or Rs. 40, whereas now it is Rs. 16 to Rs. 18 per bag. I have not got much experience of the other districts. A certain amount of control of the Director of Civil Supplies prohibiting other Governments taking away our grains to their benefit is necessary. In one of the Government of India's orders they say wherever Indians are situated, it does not matter whether in a foreign country or in a colonial country the Government of India must supply rice for the benefit of Indians in that country. But it has not been carried out; I believe that has been done from the extra crop in Burma and not from this part. In one way we must be thankful to the Government for prohibiting such exportation."

"I think, my Lord, I have said what I had to say. Finally I have no objection, as my Hon'ble Friend Mr. Narasimha Ayyar has moved, to having a committee as modified by the Hon'ble Sir Alexander Cardew and getting the views of such committee as to how to do and what to do to minimize the difficulties that the people of this country are undergoing for want of foodstuffs."

"With regard to the question of the removal of control I strongly oppose the motion. I am in favour of continuing the control and carrying it on for some years. Last time I said one year, now it will be for another year more because we will have difficulties for one year more. Unless we have such control there will be greater difficulty."

The Council then adjourned at 3 p.m.

The Council re-assembled at 3 p.m.
The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. KRISHNA RAO:—"Your Excellency, it has been fortunate that there has been no difference of opinion between the Government and the non-official members of this Council regarding the main principle underlying this resolution. It must be stated that it is an important and vital question which has been engaging the attention of the public and of the Government for some time past and that some attempts have been made to alleviate the suffering and the misery of the people in the various parts of the Presidency. Though something has been done in that direction and some attempts have been made, it must be stated that there is much more to be done before the problem can be said to be satisfactorily solved. There are various difficulties attending upon this question, but notwithstanding these difficulties there is a way of solving this problem by making continued experiments though it may be that some mistake might be discovered in the working out of any scheme evolved for the purpose. We are glad to find that the Government, when they found that the inadequate stocks of dry grains in this Presidency were being exported outside even without their being consulted in the matter, raised their voice of protest against it and they found that unless immediate measures were taken to put an end to that system no useful purpose would be served. At present the two questions which are now engaging the attention of this Council in this debate are whether it is or is not desirable to continue the inter-district restriction on traffic and secondly whether it is or is not desirable to impose any limit to the prices of grains and other necessities of life."

"So far as the first question as to the removal or continuance of inter-district restriction is concerned, I am very strongly of opinion that the restrictions should be continued until normal conditions are restored. Nobody would suggest for a moment that as a matter of abstract principle there should be any such restrictions. But we have to meet the facts as they are. We have to realize that at a time when stocks are quite insufficient throughout the Presidency on account of inadequate cultivation and there is an inadequate supply of grains, some remedial measures are necessary. Therefore not being guided by any such theoretical considerations it is quite necessary that we should continue these inter-district restrictions for the present. It is true that even among non-official members of this Council there is some difference of opinion regarding this question. Districts which depend for the supply of grain upon other districts might naturally take one view, and districts which will be called upon to supply other districts might take a different view. If my Hon'ble friends Mr. Venkatapati Raju, Mr. Suryanarayana Rao and Mr. Ranga Achariyar have suggested the removal of inter-district restrictions, they have placed before the Government the opinions of those districts in the Presidency which depend upon their districts for their supply. The only remedy is that an accurate stock-taking must be made, and if there is any surplus available in any particular district after meeting the necessities of that district certainly it must be in a position to supply food-grains to other parts of the Presidency. As a first preliminary measure accurate statistics as to stocks must be maintained, and then according to the discretion of the Director of Civil Supplies the further transport of food-grains must be regulated. With these safeguards I would suggest that these restrictions may be allowed to continue.

(Mr. Krishna Rao.)

"That now brings us to the other question as to the desirability of fixing the maximum prices of food-grains. Notwithstanding the objections which have been urged I think for some time at least it is desirable to impose a maximum limit on the price of food-grains. The Hon'ble Sir Alexander Cardew has been good enough to point out to us that in the Mysore State where they tried this experiment they have not succeeded in producing any desirable or satisfactory results, and that they have considered it necessary to drop it or abandon it. It is suggested that there may be difficulty in securing success unless the Government go a step further and take charge of all the stocks on their own responsibility. But how do we stand at present? The prices of grains and consequently of rice in the various parts of the Presidency have reached a level beyond which it is impossible for any person to think of going if persons are allowed to live at all. It will be remembered even when this question was raised in this Council in April last, the Hon'ble Sir Alexander Cardew was good enough to tell us that there might be a stage when prices would reach a level beyond which they ought not to go. I would only ask if so far as the important commodities are concerned we have not reached that stage at present, whether it is not desirable to fix the maximum limits on prices in at least certain centres of supply. It is pointed out in the course of the debate in November last that it is not desirable or possible to fix the maximum price so far as the consumers are concerned, but you must first get at the source of supply. It is only in pursuance of that principle that the maximum price was fixed so far as Rangoon rice is concerned and it was pointed out that other sources of supply might also be dealt with in a similar manner. The order was issued recently so far as Godavari and Kistna are concerned fixing the maximum limit, though it may be suggested that notwithstanding the imposing of certain restrictions on traffic persons might evade those circulars and rules and that they may not serve any useful purpose.

"I would on this occasion venture to place before this Council the state of things in the Nellore district which is, I must state, in a very unfortunate predicament at present. It is not one of those districts which depend largely on other districts for the supply of the principal food-grains, but still it will be found that the price of rice has been for some time at something between 2½ and 3 measures, generally 2½ measures, and that the price of paddy which was in the worst famine years Rs. 76 to Rs. 80 is now Rs. 113 per putti. It is somewhat extraordinary that in the district where there is a fairly good supply of paddy the prices have gone up by leaps and bounds and that it has not been possible for either the poorer classes or the middle classes to purchase rice or paddy within any reasonable terms. It may be asked what are the causes which have led to this state of things. It is no doubt very difficult to answer that question, but some attempt will be made by me to solve that problem. In some districts, particularly Kistna and Godavari, some restrictions on traffic have been imposed; but so far as Nellore is concerned, at least so far as the supply to other places is concerned, temporary restrictions were asked for but not allowed. It will be remembered the Government will be in possession of that information—that on the recommendations made by the emergency committee at Nellore the Collector of that district suggested some time last year that at least temporarily, to enable the restoration of normal conditions, to enable the regulation of prices within reasonable limits, there may be restrictions on exports, and he was not able to induce the Government to take that step. An attempt was made subsequently by the people to take various steps to alleviate the suffering of the poor classes by opening cheap grain shops, but such temporary palliatives cannot serve any useful purpose for any length of time. I may assure this Council that they did so on the persuasion of some responsible non-official gentlemen and even officials with the hope that something would be done in course of time to regulate the prices and to place matters on a more satisfactory footing. They tried it for some time; they sustained some loss and they gladly bore it thinking it would be only for a temporary period. But when they found that prices were going up even then, they had no other alternative but to close these grain shops. I know since then within the last three or four months the poorer classes as also persons of the middle classes have persisted in giving as much trouble to the Collector as possible by worrying him so often as to the necessity for restricting the traffic or regulating the price so as to make it possible for them to get paddy or rice, but so far they have not been in a position to succeed. I mention this to show that even in a district which is not so much wanting in grain and which does not largely depend on other districts for its supply the prices have gone up to such an extent that persons find that the distress is keen and acute. It is a problem which should be considered as to the directions in which regulation can be thought of. Possibly there is a mistaken impression that the district possesses stocks far in excess of its requirements. If that is the impression of the Government, I have not the slightest doubt that it is a mistake. I believe that the Collector furnished some statistics and figures tending to show that, taking the whole yield of the district into consideration, there is not any large quantity in excess of the requirements, and there is necessity for imposing restrictions. I hope that the Hon'ble Sir Alexander Cardew would, when he considers all the aspects of the question, try to find out a way of coping with the situation.

(Mr. Krishna Rao; Mr. M. Ramachandra Rao.)

and alleviating the distress which actually prevails in that district. May I point out to the Council that the Collector of the district finds it difficult to meet the people or to give a satisfactory reply as to alleviating the distress and my position is even more miserable. When I meet people I am not able to satisfy them as to what is actually being done. I would impress on Your Excellency's Government the urgent necessity to do something to remedy this sort of thing.

"It has been said, my Lord, that one of the remedies for dealing with this state of things is the appointment of a committee which would help the Government with specific suggestions regarding the control of prices or transport of paddy and other necessities of life. The Hon'ble Sir Alexander Cardew was able to fall in with the proposal to some extent, and he said he intended to call a conference and that he proposed to reconstitute the old committee and add to it some district representatives. There is considerable force in the remarks of my Hon'ble Friend Mr. Ahmad Tambi Marakkayar who said there are emergency committees in the districts and they might do useful work in that direction. I think it is well to consider how these various committees may be co-ordinated and made to work. It will be conceded, I believe, without any difference of opinion that a central committee sitting in Madras consisting also of district representatives must be supplemented by the efforts of district committees organised for that purpose. They are well informed in the matter and these district emergency committees consisting of various merchants, traders, purchasers and consumers would be in a position to supply very useful information and their advice and assistance would be very useful. It would therefore be necessary not merely to appoint a central committee consisting of district representatives but also to do something to add to the usefulness of these emergency committees and to encourage them and induce them to give valuable advice and assistance on this important question. When at the meeting held in November last I asked the Government whether the emergency committees would not be consulted this was the reply given to my question and this will show that it is necessary to enlarge the functions of this emergency committee. When I asked whether the Government would be pleased to consult emergency committees regarding the necessity to control the prices of food-grains the reply was—

"The Honourable Member's attention is drawn to G.O. No. 2258, Revenue, dated the 13th June 1918, in which the formation of emergency committees was decided upon. It was there stated that the principal duty of these committees would be to bring home to the people of the district the need for economy, for avoidance of unnecessary demands on the railways, and for use of home products instead of imported supplies. It was added that the local experience of the members would enable them to advise the Collector and through him the Director of Civil Supplies as to the state of supplies and the need for priority certificates, but it was no part of the duties of the committees to advise regarding the necessity to control the prices of foodstuffs, and no reference was made to them on that question."

"With these restrictions the emergency committees would not be in a position to offer any valuable advice or assistance and their suggestions would not be so much necessary now as to the necessity for economy when persons are actually finding themselves in a state of starvation. They would be really doing useful work if they can be instructed to meet periodically and after suggestions as to the state of the stocks in their districts, and how far they can be regulated and how far they should be transported and as to the regulation of the prices of foodstuffs. That will be the first step to be taken and in carrying out the intentions of the Government even as expressed by the Hon'ble Sir Alexander Cardew—there is no doubt that he is really anxious to do something substantial to relieve the situation—I think the first thing to do is to improve these emergency committees and make them really representative of the variety of interests and make them really useful bodies to offer advice. Having done that I would suggest, 'instead of having representatives upon the mere suggestions of Collectors, give some responsibility to the emergency committees and give them the opportunity of nominating one of their representatives to sit upon the central committee and to offer information'. I think if that is done very useful work can be done. The Government need not be afraid that the committee will be unwieldy because it is not all the members that will come. When the emergency committee feels that there is a special grievance which should be placed before the central committee, then only will its representative come to Madras, I would suggest that so far as the important question is concerned, the Government have really appreciated the gravity of the situation when they said that they would appoint a committee to inquire into this matter. But if that committee is to be of any real use, they must have as the basis of their work district emergency committees and not consider merely the things which take place in the metropolis. You must give the emergency committees an opportunity of having their representatives on the central committee. It is only then that it would be possible to do something."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO:—"My Lord, the Hon'ble Sir Alexander Cardew's full and comprehensive statement on the question has given us an idea of the difficulties of this problem. We fully appreciate the efforts which Your Excellency's Government have been making to improve the situation of this province. I may also say that we are greatly indebted to the district officers who have to meet the situation in the districts from day to day and who have an anxious time in keeping order and peace under these very trying circumstances. Perhaps, my Lord, I may say that during the last one year there has been practically not a week in which the Collector and the divisional officers in my district and the neighbouring districts have not been constantly finding out the state of things and trying to meet the situation as best as possible. After stating that, my Lord, I must say that the situation as disclosed in this Council has revealed many interesting points. One of these is as regards imports from Rangoon. The Hon'ble Sir Alexander Cardew has stated that the imports into this province from Burma have been fixed at 25,000 tons per mensem. The first question is whether this can be increased. I do not think that any number of committees, whether emergency committees in the districts or central committees in Madras or any number of committees, are likely to improve the situation in that respect. I disapprove of the appointment of committees, unless we induce Mr. Gubbay or the Government of India to increase this quantity fairly to meet the requirements of this province.

(Mr. M. Ramachandra Rao.)

"As regards the export of dry grains, I have perused with great interest the correspondence between the Government of India and Your Excellency's Government, and I must emphatically protest against the action of the Government of India in withdrawing the restriction which had already existed with reference to dry grains. I must also state in this Council that the situation is very grave; that hundreds of merchants from Bombay and the western presidency have invaded the coast districts; they are receiving numerous telegrams from their constituents to purchase at any cost all the gram that is available and all the foodstuffs that are available, bengalgram, greengram, and everything that is available, and the result now is there is the greatest possible apprehension in my part of the country as regards pulses and cereals which are necessary for the sustenance of the people. As regards the prices consequent upon the withdrawals of the restriction, I have in my hand a statement of the price list in Rajahmundry, Cocanada, Guntur and various other centres. I only wish to read the Rajahmundry price list on the 1st March 1918 and the 1st March 1919—

	Prices in 1918.			Prices in 1919.
	RS.	A.	P.	RS.	A.	P.

"Chillies, garlic, ghee and jaggery have gone up tremendously. Therefore my Lord, in addition to asking the Government of India to increase the quantity of rice that could be brought from Burma, I venture to submit to Your Excellency's Government the necessity, the absolute necessity of restoring the prohibition which already existed. I am afraid we are doing it too late; most of it has gone and our efforts must now be directed to at least getting from other presidencies some of these pulses and cereals so much in demand by the people. I have seen from the circulars of the Director of Civil Supplies that a supply of 2,000 tons is available from the United Provinces. As regards Hyderabad I do not know. I have seen several passports to merchants in Hyderabad for certain quantities of rice going to Hyderabad from our districts, but at the same time the Hyderabad authorities have taken the greatest precautions not to allow any dry grains into our Presidency. I do not know what the facts are. I should like an inquiry to be made into the question as to whether we are allowing a certain quantity of rice to go to Hyderabad without any corresponding supply of dry grains to us. That is the second point which I wish to urge upon the attention of the Hon'ble Sir Alexander Cardew,—whether we should not ask the Government of India to restore this prohibition and also get these dry grains from other presidencies either in exchange for what we give them or otherwise arranging for their importation.

"I say, Your Excellency, the situation is so bad that every day I am taxed by the ryots who say that the Government have taken precious care to control the price of paddy in the Gōdāvari, Kistna and Guntur districts, but at the same time they have not taken care to fix the price of gram and other dry grains which they greatly want. They wish to know why restrictions are placed upon certain food-grains and not upon others which they have to purchase at three or four times the former cost.

"There are two or three other points to which I would invite the attention of the Honourable Members. Several of my Honourable Friends believe in the removal of inter-district restrictions. I take the opposite view. The reason is this. As has been pointed out by my Hon'ble Friend, Mr. Krishna Rao, my friends come from districts which have to import from outside. I come from a district which has to supply them. That does not make any difference at all in this matter. I may say from my knowledge of what is going on in my part of the country there are hundreds of merchants from Bellary, Kurnool, Coimbatore, from eight or nine districts which have been assigned to our district, these people are coming and purchasing grains unnecessarily at prices fixed by the Director of Civil Supplies on the off-chance of their being permitted to export the foodstuffs. I may assure my Honourable Friends that the moment these inter-district restrictions are abolished, the district which can pay most money will purchase all the supply and the other districts will have to go without them. Bellary will suffer the most. The present method of control gives the Director of Civil Supplies an opportunity of distributing what is available among the various districts in proportion to what he considers to be their needs. It may be the method is wrong or it may be capable of improvement, but so far as the general question is concerned, I think my Honourable Friends who are so anxious to have rice from our district will find that they will have none if these restrictions are removed. One or two districts will purchase the whole rice available and it will be very difficult to dislodge the merchants from the possession of their stock. I should think, my Lord, that though the inter-district restriction should not be taken away, at the same time I think that the present inter-district restriction regarding each district as one unit is capable of improvement, I have corresponded with the Collectors of two or three districts and they seem to hold different opinions. The Collector of Kistna does not believe that it would be to the advantage of Kistna if this restriction is removed. The Collector of Gōdāvari wants it to be removed because he can get a little more. There are very many difficulties and if it is possible to reconsider this question of reorganizing the grouping of districts it is a question which has to be seriously considered. The materials are not perhaps available at present.

"I endorse my Honourable Friends' statement that the present method of control has greatly added to the opportunities for corruption. There is a great deal of corruption of subordinate officials especially in Kistna and Gōdāvari on the borders of Hyderabad dominions. Plenty of stuff is going surreptitiously. The village officials and the police are bribed and everybody who can make something out of these men is making something. Even between Gōdāvari and Kistna there is some difficulty at present. As Honourable Members are aware the Kistna district is situated between two rivers and there is absolutely no method of controlling the transport as regards the rivers either on this side or that side. No doubt the village officers are supposed to be guarding the rivers. With all these it is a very good time for the lock superintendents and the Public Works Department officials to permit boats through the locks and head sluices. I have been told the consideration is as much as one rupee per bag which is not at all bad. I have been making very careful inquiries as to why in the Kistna district paddy should sell at Rs. 7-8-0 while it should be Rs. 8-8-0 on the other side of the border across the river and I am told that the difference is due to these illegal charges. The lock superintendent has to be paid as also the transport charges. They make a pretence of going to Palkole whereas really they take it through the Vizeswaram lock for supplying it at Rajahmundry. The consumer has to pay for all these charges. The question is bristling with difficulties. But the removal of the restriction is a subject which must be more seriously examined than is possible in this Council. I am not so optimistic like my Honourable Friends as regards removal. It is quite possible that the districts which depend upon our districts may suffer at the end. It is possible that all this may get into the hands of one or two districts.

"Then I should like to say a word about the control of prices. In this matter I take a view different from my Honourable Friends. I can say from my experience of what is going on with regard to kerosene oil in Ellore and the surrounding country, the price has been fixed at so much per bottle, at so much per tin and so much per gallon, but what is happening is that the wholesale merchant who imports it at Ellore gets a consignment of three hundred tins a week, he disposes of one hundred in the town and two hundred to a number of passport-holders at the regulation price. But there would be about 70 or 80 of them and each of them purchases two or three tins, and whenever a man goes to these people they say the stock is exhausted. The result is the people have to pay 4½ or 5 annas per bottle, though the price is regulated and fixed at 2 annas. Otherwise these smaller dealers refuse to part with it on the ground that the stock is exhausted. It is absolutely impossible to check this unless we have a host of subordinate officers and I am afraid that the control of the prices of foodstuffs would be exactly on the same footing as controlling the price of kerosene oil. Looking to what has been taking place in regard to kerosene oil, I am not at all sanguine about fixing the prices of foodstuffs.

"My Lord, I have already detained the Council. The subject is so complicated and there are so many considerations that I venture to think that the committee which has been indicated by the Hon'ble Sir Alexander Cardew may be able to suggest palliatives. I am not at all certain that a great deal could be done by such a committee. We have first of all to improve our imports, both dry grains and Burma rice, and then we have to regulate not only the distribution of the foodstuffs but also of the available foodstuffs; we have to perfect the existing machinery for distribution. In this connexion I wholly endorse the statement of my Hon'ble Friend Mr. Subbarayalu Reddiyar that an attempt should be made to secure the distribution through local bodies. We may as far as possible try to get rid of the middleman. Whatever we may do we may be perfectly certain that the present situation is such that everybody who has a chance of making money will make it. Notwithstanding the defects of management by local bodies, I would rather trust the distribution by the local bodies at a fixed cost than distributing it by middlemen. The Hon'ble Sir Alexander Cardew has stated that no municipality has applied for help in this matter or made any suggestions. I was reading in the newspapers, my Lord, that the Calicut Municipal Council resolved to ask for a loan to have the necessary funds for purchasing grains. I remember having read in the newspapers that the Government declined to give a loan. Therefore it seems to me, my Lord, that to expect the local bodies to put their normal revenues in the purchase of foodstuffs is out of the question. They must get an advance for the usual monthly turn over, it may be Rs. 50,000 or Rs. 60,000. If they have that it is possible to open grain shops; otherwise I do not expect the municipalities to open such shops or to raise a loan in the open market. Therefore, my Lord, I hope that all aspects of the question will be examined. I have no doubt that the situation is likely to become much more acute than now. I am somewhat more pessimistic than my Honourable Friends, and I think that it is absolutely necessary that the Government should do whatever they can as early as possible."

858 RESOLUTION ~~RE~~ REMOVAL OF INTER-DISTRICT RESTRICTIONS ON TRANSPORT OF FOODSTUFFS.

(Mr. Siva Rao ; Sir Gordon Fraser.)

[11TH MARCH 1919.]

The Hon'ble Mr. P. SIVA RAO—"Your Excellency, it was on a very unfortunate day that the Government of India thought fit to cancel that order issued by the Government of Madras regarding the inter-provincial prohibition. Of all the districts, the Ceded Districts have suffered most on account of this removal. I am aware when I moved a resolution in similar terms in April last the Government were pleased forthwith to prohibit the export of dry grains from the Ceded Districts. I know what beneficial results it had. It brought down the price from six seers per rupee to eight seers per rupee. I appeal to the local Government to move the matter again before the Government of India to see that this inter-provincial restriction is continued. When that provincial restriction is removed, I do not see how the inter-district prohibition will be entirely effective. I may say that the inter-district prohibition is necessary even at the present time. It is a mistake to call it inter-district prohibition. It is not prohibition; it is marshalling our resources for the benefit of all the districts. Where there is a surplus, the Collector will allow export to certain districts where there is a deficit. But my own misgivings are that when there are no inter-provincial restriction, there is not much use in continuing the inter-district restrictions. The reason is this; the people, for instance, of Gōdāvari, which my Honourable Friend represents, are prohibited from exporting to any other district in the Presidency unless under a certificate issued by the emergency committee or the controller of prices, but they are at perfect liberty to export it to Bombay. The Honourable Member in charge will tell me whether the restrictions are to be relaxed in favour of exports to Bombay, Hyderabad and Mysore, while not one grain reaches us from Hyderabad. I am anxious to know whether the restrictions upon the exports to Indian States have been withdrawn. I may say just now that if this inter-district prohibition continues but if the people are at liberty to export it to Bombay, it will be an invitation to them to export to Bombay instead of selling to other people in the other districts of this Presidency, and you will be compelling the people to sell to Bombay. I know from the accounts given by Honourable Members that the country is simply flooded by rich merchant millionaires from Bombay who do not hesitate to pay any price for the commodities. Again I regret the Government of India have taken that step in the teeth of the opposition offered by the local Government. Whatever little use it may have this inter-district control should continue.

"With respect to the suggestion made by the Honourable Member that the local bodies may do a lot, I may say one word. I am a firm believer in local bodies being encouraged and doing a lot. In this matter, Your Excellency, we must devise some means by which the grain or the necessities of life reach the consumer from the wholesale dealer without the intervention of the profiteering middleman and to secure the best means of arrangement would be to induce the local bodies to open depots and to persuade philanthropic and public spirited firms like Messrs. Best & Co. to sell it to them. There is one difficulty. This question arose in the finance committee, and it was proposed that the local bodies should be financed with loans for the purpose. It was stated on behalf of the Government that they should not be encouraged to embark upon a speculative enterprise like that, and so long as the Government give loans, they will purchase articles recklessly. Now I appeal to the local Government to encourage local bodies with liberal loans for the purpose of opening shops. Thanks to Messrs. Best & Co. for their offer. They want no advance in the first instance and they ask us to credit the sale-proceeds to the nearest treasury. The Bellary Municipality has accepted their offer. But in any view the local bodies must be encouraged and there must be a general order of the Government permitting them to embark upon such enterprises if they are willing to do so and offering them a loan when they require it for this purpose.

"I would say one word in regard to kerosene oil. The control of kerosene oil has entirely failed to achieve the desired result. There seems to be a real shortage everywhere. Even the little quantity that we have, has not been evenly distributed. It is true no doubt that the Government have wisely fixed the price. I am for continuing the control of price in the case of kerosene oil. No doubt, the companies have also agreed to it and have issued instructions to their agents to sell the oil at fixed prices. But there comes the profiteering tendency of the sub-agents and others who do not sell it at the fixed prices. There is no means of ascertaining whether they get any consignments at all. The system of A & B permit-holders does not enable people to get supplies regularly. They will keep some false and vexatious accounts and unless we multiply our inspecting staff, we cannot control it. They are asked to supply it to B permit-holders, but they do not supply it; they are retail dealers. Both A permit-holders and B permit-holders say that there is no stock unless they come across a milder purchaser who is willing to pay a higher price than that fixed by the Government and give a receipt for a less amount. Suppose he buys at 5 annas a bottle he has to pass a receipt for As. 3. I have no faith in licence dealers. They should be abolished and the local bodies may be improvised for the occasion and they may be asked to purchase, to receive all the stocks from the sub-agents of the company and let them be encouraged to open depots wherever possible. Then only it is possible to bring down the prices. Now though the Government have fixed the prices, those prices are not the prices paid by the consumer. The Government must seriously consider the proposal to entrust the question of the sale of kerosene oil to local bodies."

The Hon'ble Sir GORDON FRASER—"Your Excellency, the question before the meeting, of the present scarcity and the high prices, is a very important and wide one. I myself am not in favour of the withdrawal of Government control. It has been suggested that the proper

TURAIPUNDI-VEDARANNIYAM LINE.

(Sir Alexander Cardew ; Mr. Narasimha Ayyar ; the President ; Mr. Ahmad Tambi Marakkayar.)

"That almost concludes what I need say on this question. The Hon'ble Mr. Yaqub Hasan had some remarks to make about the hardship to various dealers who were not given licences and he read us a telegram from a certain merchant who has not been included. I cannot go into the case of individual merchants. Some merchants in Rangoon have lost their licence because they did not ship promptly. It is essential that we should give the licence to merchants in Rangoon who have rice ready to put on board when the ship is ready. If they do not do it, they lose the licence. This has been the case with some merchants. What the facts of this particular case may be, I do not know. But I must point out that the duty of the Director of Civil Supplies is to consult the benefit of the consumer and not of the trade and that should be the guiding principle which he should follow.

"The Hon'ble Mr. Narasimha Ayyar asked about the number of import licences and suggested that it would be just as easy to control thirty as it is to control twenty. I quite agree with him and that is why I suggest it would be much easier and better to reduce the number to five or half a dozen. He is quite right in saying that the Government have no fixed opinion on this point and have no immediate intention of proceeding in that direction.

"Your Excellency, that is all I need say. The Government propose to hold a conference on Monday with certain representatives from the mufassal and Madras; and they propose to reconstitute the standing committee attached to the Director of Civil Supplies and will arrange for its meeting frequently. I am not prepared to accept the resolution because the committee referred to in it is meant to inquire immediately into the grievances of the public regarding the distribution or supply of kerosene oil, paddy and other necessities of life, whereas the committee I contemplate will be a standing committee which will work in co-operation with the Director of Civil Supplies and inquire not only into the present grievances but future grievances. I think it will meet the wishes of the Honourable Member. I cannot accept his resolution, but I hope that, in the circumstances, he will withdraw his resolution because it will be a pity that we should have a division on a matter on which there is no substantial difference of opinion."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR—"There is no difference of opinion. I withdraw it. The Government might have accepted it."

With the permission of His Excellency the President, the resolution was withdrawn.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT—"What about resolution No. II?"

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR—"I have written to the Legislative Secretary that I will take it up to-morrow."

RESOLUTION ~~RE~~ OPENING OF THE TIRUTURAIPUNDI-VEDARANNIYAM LINE.

The Hon'ble Khan Bahadur A. T. G. M. AHMAD TAMBI MARAKKAYAR SAHIB Bahadur—"Your Excellency, the resolution which stands in my name runs as follows:—

'XX. This Council recommends to His Excellency the Governor in Council that arrangements be made to open the Tiruturaipundi-Vedaranniyam line at an early date.'

"This is a question, my Lord, which is pending for a long time. As the Honourable Members of this Council are aware, this line was constructed at a considerable cost of nearly 13 lakhs of rupees and it is no saving to allow the capital to be lying on the ground, risking deterioration of the materials and to sustain loss of interest. An extra expense of Rs. 9,000 has to be incurred in addition annually for maintaining the line in its unproductive state. This line was constructed some three years ago, but just at the time of its opening the District Board of Tanjore received the shocking news that the line could not be opened as the South Indian Railway had no sufficient rolling-stock on hand to run the line and the materials were required for more important purposes connected with the war.

"I brought this question before this Council in the meeting held on the 5th April 1917 in my budget speech, when I suggested that, if the South Indian Railway Company found it difficult to run this line with the limited rolling-stock available, they may curtail one train running from Mayavaram and Arantangi and run that train on the Tiruturaipundi-Vedaranniyam line, but the Railway Company declined to do so.

"Seeing that the South Indian Railway were not in a position to place sufficient rolling-stock on this line, the District Board of Tanjore resolved in its meeting held on 7th March 1918 that the running of the line may be placed at the hands of the Madras Provincial Railway Company who had rolling-stock ready in their hands, which arrangement, I am surprised to hear, has been cancelled for some reason or other. At last after the termination of the war, I moved a resolution on 1st February 1919 in the meeting of Tanjore District Board that Government be addressed to open the Tiruturaipundi-Vedaranniyam line at an early date which resolution was unanimously accepted by the District Board. Now, my Lord, it is needless for me to say how much hardships and difficulties the public were put to during the war for want of communication and it is only proper and just now that the stringent conditions necessitated by the war are over, that the Government should see its way to give the public sufficient convenience and comforts to facilitate their journey. The opening of the line will not only be a great boon to the general public, but also will facilitate the carrying of salt that is manufactured by Government at the Vedaranniyam pans. Vedaranniyam is a commercial centre and it is also a sacred place of pilgrimage to Hindus, and the absence of railway communication is causing great inconvenience to pilgrims going to Vedaranniyam.

"Under the above circumstances, I trust the Government will strongly urge the Railway Company to open the above line at the earliest possible date. After all the property belongs to the District Board of Tanjore and it is now lying on sand for many years liable to deterioration, and it is high time for Government to take sufficient steps to avoid unnecessary further deterioration of the large capital invested by the District Board. With these few remarks I commend my resolution for the acceptance of the Council."

The Hon'ble Mr. K. CHIDAMBARANATHA MUDALIYAR:—"I heartily second the resolution."

The Hon'ble Mr. L. DAVIDSON:—"Your Excellency, the Honourable Member has, I think, failed to take note of the answer to question No. 8 on the agenda paper. In reply to the question put by the Hon'ble Mr. Annamalai Chettiyar the Government stated, with regard to clause (b) of his question, 'the Government are addressing the Agent, South Indian Railway, with a view to the line being opened for traffic at the earliest possible date, but are not in a position at present to say when this will be practicable.' The Hon'ble Mr. Ahmad Tambi Marakkayar argues that, now that the stringent conditions of the war are over, it should be easy to get ahead. The answer to that is to be found in the statement made in a letter which the Government received from the Agent of the railway. The Hon'ble Sir Alexander Cardew has already taken that statement out of the Secretariat note prepared for me and utilized it for the purpose of an earlier resolution, but I will repeat it. This is what the Agent said: It seems to be the general idea amongst the public that because the war is over normal conditions have automatically resumed. But such is far from being the case. We have not yet received any stores for repairs and maintenance of our locomotives and rolling-stock, and although under the instructions from the Railway Board we cabled home indents some months ago, we have not yet received any intimation of when we may expect to receive materials, so that we are in just the same condition as we were in during the war with the disadvantage that the engines and stock have been running longer and are therefore in more need of repairs. That is the reason why we cannot get on at once. I have ascertained informally that the moment the Agent hears from his Board he will make an immediate reference to the Railway Board as to the feasibility of opening the line, in the absence of evidence when to expect the arrival of materials and additional locomotives from England. With reference to the resolution of the District Board passed at the Hon'ble Mr. Ahmad Tambi Marakkayar's instance and with reference to the resolution now moved, we propose to address the Agent on the subject, but I cannot accept the resolution since it requests that arrangements may be made to open the Tiruturaipundi-Vedaranniyam line at an early date. We do not know what arrangement will be practicable, but we will urge that everything practicable shall be done."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"Does the Honourable gentleman press the resolution?"

The Hon'ble Khan Bahadur A. T. G. M. AHMAO TAMBİ MARAKKAYAR:—"No."

With the permission of His Excellency the President, the resolution was withdrawn.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"Resolutions Nos. IX and XVII have also to be withdrawn."

The Hon'ble Mr. K. RAMA AYYANGAR:—"Mine is practically accepted."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"The Honourable gentleman has been treated with all consideration by the Council."

The Hon'ble Mr. K. RAMA AYYANGAR:—"What I wanted was a conference."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"The Honourable gentleman has heard, and the Council has heard, what is going to be done from the Hon'ble Sir Alexander Cardew. It cannot be truly said that the Honourable gentleman's resolution has been accepted. If he will kindly read it, he will come to the same conclusion. These proceedings have to be recorded formally and I propose to record that resolution No. XVII has been by leave withdrawn unless the Honourable gentleman takes objection to that."

The Hon'ble Mr. K. RAMA AYYANGAR:—"Let it be withdrawn."

With the permission of His Excellency the President, resolutions Nos. IX and XVII were withdrawn.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"The amendments to the Corporation Bill have been circulated. If it will be in accordance with the convenience of the Council, we will begin this subject to-morrow. If any Honourable Member wishes to postpone the consideration of these amendments further we will consider it. We will begin with the amendments at 11 o'clock to-morrow."

The Council then adjourned till 11 o'clock on Wednesday, the 12th March 1919.

858 RESOLUTION RE REMOVAL OF INTER-DISTRICT RESTRICTIONS ON
TRANSPORT OF FOODSTUFFS.

(Mr. Siva Rao ; Sir Gordon Fraser.)

[11TH MARCH 1919.]

The Hon'ble Mr. P. SIVA RAO —“ Your Excellency, it was on a very unfortunate day that the Government of India thought fit to cancel that order issued by the Government of Madras regarding the inter-provincial prohibition. Of all the districts, the Ceded Districts have suffered most on account of this removal. I am aware when I moved a resolution in similar terms in April last the Government were pleased forthwith to prohibit the export of dry grains from the Ceded Districts. I know what beneficial results it had. It brought down the price from six seers per rupee to eight seers per rupee. I appeal to the local Government to move the matter again before the Government of India to see that this inter-provincial restriction is continued. When that provincial restriction is removed, I do not see how the inter-district prohibition will be entirely effective. I may say that the inter-district prohibition is necessary even at the present time. It is a mistake to call it inter-district prohibition. It is not prohibition; it is marshalling our resources for the benefit of all the districts. Where there is a surplus, the Collector will allow export to certain districts where there is a deficit. But my own misgivings are that when there are no inter-provincial restrictions, there is not much use in continuing the inter-district restrictions. The reason is this; the people, for instance, of Godavari, which my Honourable Friend represents, are prohibited from exporting to any other district in the Presidency unless under a certificate issued by the emergency committee or the controller of prices, but they are at perfect liberty to export it to Bombay. The Honourable Member in charge will tell me whether the restrictions are to be relaxed in favour of exports to Bombay, Hyderabad and Mysore, while not one grain reaches us from Hyderabad. I am anxious to know whether the restrictions upon the exports to Indian States have been withdrawn. I may say just now that if this inter-district prohibition continues but if the people are at liberty to export it to Bombay, it will be an invitation to them to export to Bombay instead of selling to other people in the other districts of this Presidency, and you will be compelling the people to sell to Bombay. I know from the accounts given by Honourable Members that the country is simply flooded by rich merchant millionaires from Bombay who do not hesitate to pay any price for the commodities. Again I regret the Government of India have taken that step in the teeth of the opposition offered by the local Government. Whatever little use it may have this inter-district control should continue.

“ With respect to the suggestion made by the Honourable Member that the local bodies may do a lot, I may say one word. I am a firm believer in local bodies being encouraged and doing a lot. In this matter, Your Excellency, we must devise some means by which the grain or the necessities of life reach the consumer from the wholesale dealer without the intervention of the profiteering middleman and to secure the best means of arrangement would be to induce the local bodies to open depots and to persuade philanthropic and public spirited firms like Messrs. Best & Co. to sell it to them. There is one difficulty. This question arose in the finance committee, and it was proposed that the local bodies should be financed with loans for the purpose. It was stated on behalf of the Government that they should not be encouraged to embark upon a speculative enterprise like that, and so long as the Government give loans, they will purchase articles recklessly. Now I appeal to the local Government to encourage local bodies with liberal loans for the purpose of opening shops. Thanks to Messrs. Best & Co. for their offer. They want no advance in the first instance and they ask us to credit the sale-proceeds to the nearest treasury. The Bellary Municipality has accepted their offer. But in any view the local bodies must be encouraged and there must be a general order of the Government permitting them to embark upon such enterprises if they are willing to do so and offering them a loan when they require it for this purpose.

“ I would say one word in regard to kerosene oil. The control of kerosene oil has entirely failed to achieve the desired result. There seems to be a real shortage everywhere. Even the little quantity that we have, has not been evenly distributed. It is true no doubt that the Government have wisely fixed the price. I am for continuing the control of price in the case of kerosene oil. No doubt, the companies have also agreed to it and have issued instructions to their agents to sell the oil at fixed prices. But there comes the profiteering tendency of the sub-agents and others who do not sell it at the fixed prices. There is no means of ascertaining whether they get any consignments at all. The system of A & B permit-holders does not enable people to get supplies regularly. They will keep some false and vexatious accounts and unless we multiply our inspecting staff, we cannot control it. They are asked to supply it to B permit-holders, but they do not supply it; they are retail dealers. Both A permit-holders and B permit-holders say that there is no stock unless they come across a miller purchaser who is willing to pay a higher price than that fixed by the Government and give a receipt for a less amount. Suppose he buys at 5 annas a bottle he has to pass a receipt for As. 3. I have no faith in licence dealers. They should be abolished and the local bodies may be improvised for the occasion and they may be asked to purchase, to receive all the stocks from the sub-agents of the company and let them be encouraged to open depots wherever possible. Then only it is possible to bring down the prices. Now though the Government have fixed the prices, those prices are not the prices paid by the consumer. The Government must seriously consider the proposal to entrust the question of the sale of kerosene oil to local bodies.”

The Hon'ble Sir GORDON FRASER :—“ Your Excellency, the question before the meeting, of the present scarcity and the high prices, is a very important and wide one. I myself am not in favour of the withdrawal of Government control. It has been suggested that the proper way to bring down prices is to remove the control and to increase the supplies, but unfortunately this is an impossibility at present not only in the case of rice but in the case of kerosene oil also. The suggestion has also been made that a larger amount of freight should be put on but unfortunately the steamers are not available. The quantity of rice that we get from Burma is allotted, and limited, and Madras cannot get as much as she wants, but must take her share with other parts of India. We merchants are unfortunately not in a position to charter outside tonnage. All tonnage is controlled and distributed on what the Government consider an equitable basis to all. The Hon'ble Sir Alexander Cardew asked, can we control prices in Madras? I say in the case of rice certainly we can, provided the Government have the assistance of licensed importers. The control may not be entirely successful, but I contend even if it is partially successful some good will have resulted. The Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Aohariyar asked whether a reduction in the rate of freight from Burma to Madras is likely. There again I should say that the prospects are very good indeed for reduction. The rate of freight at present is Rs. 28 less ten per cent which makes it just over Rs. 25. This rate is a very high one and there is no reason why as time goes on and more shipping is available the rate should not be reduced. That is one of the risks taken by the importers at present, because the rates may drop at any moment, and if they drop those who have bought rice may lose over it. That is a risk which cannot be avoided. The Hon'ble Mr. Rama Ayyangar referred to the reason for our entering into the rice-trade and various remarks were made about our entering into that business. I explained it very fully at the November meeting in speaking on a resolution similar to the one now before the meeting. I pointed out that the only reason why we entered the rice market was because Madras merchants were allowing steamers to come to Madras with space available not filled up; therefore we authorized our people in Rangoon to fill up every ton of the space available with rice. After going into the market as we did to supply rice, I consider we are quite entitled now to a standing amongst the licensees in the market.

“ I shall deal first with the question of the kerosene oil position. It would perhaps be difficult for Honourable Members to realize that the whole trouble is kerosene oil is sold too cheaply. It is infinitely cheaper than any other illuminating oil that can be bought in India. Until therefore kerosene oil goes up in price and approaches the price of other vegetable oils that have been used in the past we will have this trouble. The price is kept down artificially. It is not the natural price, whereas other oils are governed by the laws of supply and demand. The price of inferior oil is exactly the same as in pre-war days. I cannot be far wrong if I say that it is the only commodity that sells at the same price at the present moment as in pre-war days. As regards the control of kerosene oil unless the oil companies have the assistance of the Government, it is impossible for the companies to control the hundreds of agents they have in many districts up country. Unless they have Government assistance the only course open to the companies is to withdraw their staff upcountry and sell in the ports of importation to the highest bidder. In that case I think the last state of affairs would be infinitely worse than the first. It is quite impossible for us to continue to supply at pre-war rates and ensure that no middleman profits are made unless we have the Government behind us. If you remove control, the prices must go up until we have a sufficient supply to meet the demand or until the price has gone up sufficiently high to make it cheaper for the consumer to use one of the indigenous vegetable oils of the country. Therefore if you are going to remove Government control over the distribution of kerosene-oil, you cannot expect the large oil importing companies to sit quietly by and send their oil upcountry at a low rate knowing perfectly well that middle men are going to make hundred or two hundred per cent profit before it reaches the consumer. If you remove Government control and assistance, you immediately place the poor oil consumers of this country in competition with the world's markets and you will have to pay a hundred per cent more at the source of supply. Possibly on broad lines this may be a sound policy of supply and demand, but it will not help the consumer in this country. The times are very difficult, and so long as there is not enough oil to meet the demand, this must be recognized and we must do everything to meet the difficulty. There is no royal road to surmount these difficulties. We have all to work together and do our best. I think any drastic changes would only make matters worse. So far as oil companies are concerned it is more a question of assistance. We are controlling the price when we send the oil upcountry; but Government assistance in the further distribution is required and this the Government are doing their best to give us. The oil companies are quite ready to try and work in line with any scheme which the Government may put forward or any scheme which any private individual may put forward. So far no scheme has been put forward that will surmount all difficulties.

“ As regards the rice question, in connexion with the inter-district restriction I quite agree with my Hon'ble friend Mr. Ramachandra Rao that if you remove the restrictions that now exist, it is inevitable that the district which has the most money is going to get the rice. Similarly if you remove the restrictions on the shipment of Burma rice, India will get nothing because rice will be taken away by other and wealthier countries of the world. In the case of control of rice from Burma I do hope that the Government will continue the control in Burma. Wholesale importers who get licences and import are allowed to make a profit of 8 annas a bag, which I consider a liberal commission for wholesale importers. I take this opportunity of stating that they ought to undertake to sell rice to no one but licensees. All the system of licensed useful retailers. I think that the Government ought to have given us information two months hence, and then I am the better prepared to meet the situation.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT :—“ If the Hon address to the Council, the Council will be prepared.”

THE MADRAS CITY MUNICIPAL BILL, 1918.

(The President; Mr. Srinivasa Ayyangar.) [12TH MARCH 1919.]

The Council re-assembled at 11 a.m. when the further consideration of the Madras City Municipal Bill, 1918, was taken up.

THE MADRAS CITY MUNICIPAL BILL, 1918.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"There are just three amendments which we have to consider before the motion will be put that the Bill be passed into law. The first amendment is the first of the two amendments circulated yesterday relating to clause 72. The next amendment is the amendment on the agenda paper to clause 101 which is the amendment which makes good the undertaking given by my Honourable Friend at the last meeting of the Council, and thirdly there is the second and short amendment on the type-written paper circulated, to clause 118 (f). I will call upon the Hon'ble the Advocate-General to move the amendment to clause 72."

The Hon'ble Mr. S. SRINIVASA AYYANGAR:—"Your Excellency, the amendment which I beg to propose is as follows:—

"For clause 72 substitute the following:—

"72. (1) Notwithstanding anything contained in this Act, all buildings and lands belonging to the Government in that part of the military zone of Fort St. George which is known as the Esplanade, as described in Schedule III, shall be subject to the control of the Officer Commanding the Station at Madras

(2) Permission to dig holes or pits, to alter the ground level or to accumulate material within the Esplanade or to construct or re-construct a building on the Esplanade shall not be given or be deemed to have been given unless and until the sanction of the Governor in Council and of the Governor-General in Council has been obtained:

Provided that the erection of temporary huts or structures for stated limited periods for the accommodation of circuses, theatres and other shows may be permitted by the Officer Commanding the Station at Madras on the recommendation of the Commissioner of Police and with the sanction of the Commissioner;

Provided also that no permission under sub-section (2) shall be necessary in respect of execution by the corporation of such lawful works as are required for the maintenance of roads, drains, water-pipes, electric cables and wires.

(3) Such sanction shall not be applied for unless the plan of the buildings and the site plan of the land or the latter alone, as the case may be, have been approved by the Commissioner and the Officer Commanding the Station at Madras.

(4) If any such act or operation as is referred to in sub-section (2) of this section is commenced, carried on or completed without the sanction of the Governor in Council and the Governor-General in Council or the Officer Commanding the Station at Madras, as the case may be, the Commissioner shall, if so requested by the Officer Commanding the Station at Madras, and within fourteen days after receiving such requisition, by notice direct the person doing or controlling the act or operation to fill up such hole or pit, to remove such alteration of ground level or such accumulation of material, and to demolish anything constructed or reconstructed within a period to be specified in such notice, or shall cause the same to be done at the expense of such person.

(5) No person shall be entitled to compensation on account of anything done or caused to be done under sub-section (4).

(6) Any person who fails to obey the direction of the commissioner under sub-section (4) shall be liable on conviction to the penalty provided in section 362 in respect of a building other than a well or hut."

"The amendment really reproduces the rules framed by the Military Department of the Government of India in 1902. The object of this amendment is to put in section 72 the rules which have been in force from 1902, giving them full statutory effect. The Government of India have addressed the Local Government and asked them that this amendment should be incorporated in the Bill. The amendment which is on the paper explains itself. So far as sub-clause (1) is concerned, Honourable Members will notice that the only amendment is the substitution of 'the Officer Commanding the Station at Madras' for 'the General Officer Commanding the Madras District.' There is no such officer as 'General Officer Commanding the Madras District' and therefore it is necessary to put in the correct designation of the officer. That is really a verbal amendment.

"Sub-clause (2) of the amendment seeks to bring in the digging of holes or pits or altering the ground level or accumulating materials within the Esplanade in the same category as the construction or reconstruction of buildings on the Esplanade. Honourable Members are aware that the Esplanade is a part of the military zone and the buildings and lands belonging to the Government in that zone are subject to the control of the Military Department. So far as the Bill which follows the existing Act says: 'Permission to construct a building on the Esplanade shall not be given or be deemed to have been given unless and until the sanction of the Governor in Council and of the Governor-General in Council has been obtained.' 'Building' is defined in the Bill as including a hut, and this will mean that even in the case of huts or temporary structures which may be constructed for theatres and circuses the sanction of the two Governments will be required before they are allowed to be done. Rules have been in force without legislative sanction allowing the erection of temporary huts or structures for a limited period with the sanction of the Officer Commanding the station. The proviso has been introduced to make that clear. It says: 'Provided that the erection of temporary huts or structures for stated limited periods for the accommodation of circuses and theatres and other shows may be permitted by the Officer Commanding the Station at Madras on the recommendation of the Commissioner of Police and with the sanction of the commissioner.' Then as required by the Government of India you have 'Permission to dig holes or pits, to alter the ground level or to accumulate material within the Esplanade or to construct or reconstruct a building on the Esplanade shall not be given or be deemed to have been given unless and until the sanction of the Governor in Council and of the Governor-General in Council has been obtained.' There is a further proviso which is in favour of allowing the municipality to carry out its own works, that is, the maintenance of roads, etc. That is the second proviso: 'Provided also that no permission under sub-section (2) shall be necessary in respect of execution by the Corporation of such lawful works as are required for the maintenance of roads, drains, water-pipes, electric cables and wires.'

"Sub-clause (3) makes consequential alterations upon the proposed amendment in sub-clause (2) as to digging holes or pits.

"Sub-clause (4) merely carries out the consequential changes necessitated by the reference to digging holes.

"In sub-clause (6) there is one amendment made which runs as follows: 'Any person who fails to obey the direction of the commissioner under sub-section (4) shall be liable on conviction to the penalty provided in section 362 in respect of a building other than a well or hut.' As the section now stands, sub-clause (6) says 'he shall be liable on conviction to the penalty provided in section 362.' There are two penalties provided in section 362, one in the case of a building and another in the case of a well. There may be some ambiguity and in order to remove that and in order to make the section applicable to this new case of digging holes which is also to be made punishable it has become necessary to alter it in the way proposed in the amendment."

The Hon'ble Mr. H. G. Stokes seconded the amendment.

The Hon'ble Dr. T. M. NAYAR:—"I have only to get one point cleared. This amendment lays down as to who is to give permission for the erection of buildings, but it does not say who is to receive any rents that may be charged. This is a matter of great importance in the case of theatres and circuses, because considerable sums are realized. Whether they should go to the Military authorities or to the Corporation is a point which should be explicitly laid down here."

The Hon'ble Mr. J. C. MOLONY:—"At present the municipality gets two-thirds and the Military authorities get one-third."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"That will continue."

The Hon'ble Mr. J. C. MOLONY:—"Yes."

The Hon'ble Dr. T. M. NAYAR:—"It is not stated here. It does not say who is entitled to it. It simply says by whom permission is to be given. If they are municipal properties and if a circus tent is erected there, ground-rent will be charged and the municipality will get the rent."

The Hon'ble Mr. J. C. MOLONY:—"If a circus tent is erected, ground-rent is charged."

The Hon'ble Mr. S. SRINIVASA AYYANGAR:—"It rests on mutual understanding."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO:—"I take it that any rent that is charged is deposited with the application for erection to the Military authorities. If that is so, what is the hold of the Corporation?"

The Hon'ble Mr. J. C. MOLONY:—"The Corporation takes an advance, generally ten days' rent. If the period of ten days is extended, the party has to pay the rent for further ten days. At the end we remit one-third to the Military authorities."

The amendment was put to the Council and agreed to.
The new clause 72 was allowed to stand part of the Bill.

Clause 101.

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"Your Excellency, I beg to move the amendment on the paper in my name—

"For the first eighteen words of sub-clause (d) of clause 101 substitute the words 'The bed of the Cooum, the bed of the Adyar, the Buckingham canal'."

"The clause will then read as follows: 'the bed of the Cooum, the bed of the Adyar, the Buckingham canal and all such other properties of Government not being buildings as may from time to time be notified by the Governor in Council with the consent of the Corporation.' The discussion with regard to this at our last meeting is no doubt fresh in the minds of the Council. I think I had the opportunity to state then how this sub-clause came to be put in by the Select Committee, when that committee got rid of the definition of 'public land.' On the last occasion the Hon'ble Mr. Ramachandra Rao and the Hon'ble Doctor Nayar suggested that it was probably a case of exemption in favour of Government which did not exist. We have since carefully examined the question and we found the best way in which we could bring the law into accord with the existing situation would be by making the amendment which would not take the matter further than what it is at present."

The amendment was put to the Council and agreed to.
Clause 101 as amended was allowed to stand part of the Bill.

(Mr. Srinivasa Ayyangar ; Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar.) [12TH MARCH 1919.]

Clause 118.

The Hon'ble Mr. S. SRINIVASA AYYANGAR :—"I beg to move—

'In clause 118 (f) omit the words 'in paragraph 1 (b) of the regulations for the Indian Defence Force' and substitute the words 'as defined in the regulations made from time to time under the Indian Defence Force Act, 1917.'

"This is merely a verbal amendment which is necessitated by the fact that the reference to 'paragraph 1 (b) of the Indian Defence Force Regulations' is a mistake and it is to rectify that mistake that this amendment is proposed."

The Hon'ble Mr. H. G. Stokes seconded the amendment.

The amendment was put to the Council and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR :—"Your Excellency, I beg to move that the Madras City Municipal Bill as amended be passed into law and in doing so I wish to offer a few remarks on the Bill as it finally stands. In the first place I claim for the Bill that the changes introduced in the constitution of the Corporation and in the mechanism of its working will have the effect of popularising the administration and associating a much wider circle of people in the task.

"The foundation of the whole edifice of local self-government is the electorate: the aim of the Bill is to call into existence as large an electorate as can be secured under present conditions, to obtain, in the words of the Government of India, a constituency really representative of the ratepayers. When I introduced the Bill, I gave figures showing the restricted nature of the present franchise. Out of a population of over half a million there are at present in the City less than 12,000 voters, and less than 500 persons qualified to be candidates. The Bill broadens the franchise very considerably. I am confident that the step taken is right and that the provisions of the Bill relating to the electorate will greatly help the civic education of the inhabitants of the City, on whom in the ultimate resort has to rest the responsibility for its good government. It may interest Honourable Members to know what the size of the electorate will be under the Bill. In the first place every taxpayer is given the franchise and the occupancy qualification is lowered to Rs. 60. On this basis we shall have about 37,000 voters. Secondly, the Bill introduces an important departure in that it admits women to the franchise. It is estimated that about 7,000 women will get the vote. When the Bill comes into operation, we shall have an electorate of about four times the number on the existing register, and the number will increase with the growth of the City in wealth and population. And further all male electors will be eligible for election as councillors.

"We have also liberalised the constitution of the Council. The total strength of the Council has been increased from 37 to 50 and the elective strength from 28 to 41. The nominated element has been reduced to nine, this being the minimum necessary to provide for the representation of Muhammadans and other minorities and for experts—non-official as well as official—whom it may be necessary to have on the Council. The changes will make the Council thoroughly representative of all interests of importance in the City.

"It is the policy of the Bill to associate as many of the councillors as possible in the work of the actual administration and I would invite attention to the provisions relating to standing committees for which we are indebted to the Select Committee. The Standing Committee has under the scheme of the existing Act important administrative, supervisory and appellate functions. The Bill as introduced followed the existing Act in concentrating these powers and duties in a body of 13 councillors. The Select Committee felt that, while it would be unfair to call upon a small body of the councillors to undertake the very large burden involved in the efficient discharge of the duties assigned to the standing committee, the arrangement was open to the further objection that it deprived the City of the benefits that would accrue from the association of a large number of councillors in the practical work of the administration. Under the Bill in its present form the functions are divided among four different standing committees, each consisting of seven members, and it is laid down that no councillor shall be a member of more than two committees at a time. This system will turn into useful channels the special knowledge of individual members, criticism is likely to be more practical, less doctrinaire, when most of the members are engaged in working particular departments: and the tendency to stagnation will be avoided as fresh blood will be periodically recruited to the Council and the committees.

"The next important change introduced by the Bill is the appointment of a commissioner as chief executive authority and, as in some of the very recent criticisms on the Bill the suitability of this system has been called in question, I may be excused for detaining Honourable Members with a few remarks on the principle of the change. The commissioner system has been tried in Bombay for many years: it was introduced there at the instance of the late Sir Pherozshah Mehta and it has so completely justified itself in its working that a measure framed in 1914 for its extension to some of the larger municipalities in the Bombay Presidency was approved by most of the non-official members of the Bombay Legislative Council. The Royal Commission on Decentralization recommended its extension to other Presidency towns and the principle of it has been accepted in the recent resolution of the Government of India on local self-government and in the Montagu-Chelmsford Report. The application of the system to the Madras City was accepted by the Madras Corporation in 1910, and also in 1917 when the first draft Bill was referred to that body. The commissioner system is a necessary stage between the machinery as we now have it and the machinery as it will, we hope, be at some future date. It is, I submit, a mistaken view of the system to say that under it there will be any real diminution of the authority of the Council over the administration of the City. The commissioner's main function is to see to the efficient discharge of the routine work of the administration, to attend to the multitudinous details that arise in the government of a large town. Large bodies like councils are, by their nature, unfitted to deal with such details, and it is undesirable that they should bury themselves in details to the neglect of the important duties of general control and the settlement of policy. The control of the Council will continue supreme in all matters of real importance. That body alone can fix the rates of taxes and fees, pass budgets and all deviations therefrom, sanction important contracts, approve of the exercise of some of the more deterrent powers of regulation contained in the Bill, call for reports and returns from all municipal authorities, frame by-laws for the guidance of the staff, etc. By these and other means the Council will be in a position to enforce its wishes. Its most effective instrument of control will be the budget. The budget has to be sanctioned by the Council and no reappropriation from one head to another can be made without its approval. It follows from this that no scheme of any importance can be passed without the Council's knowledge and approval. There is no ground at all for the apprehension that the commissioner system will mean any diminution of the power of the Council to lay down its own policy and to insist on its being given effect to in every branch of the administration of the City.

"The division of the functions between the Council, the standing committees and the commissioner is naturally a subject of difficulty, and the Select Committee devoted careful attention to it. I think that the scheme of the Bill in this respect is quite good. If actual working brings to light the need for some readjustment, this can be effected by suitable amendments after we have gained experience.

"I now come to the question of the resources of the Corporation, in regard to which anxiety has been expressed. I may at once say that it is not the position of the Government that they have finally solved in the Bill all the financial problems connected with the municipal administration of the Madras City. But I must take exception to the criticism that the Government have made no serious attempt to grapple with the question of bettering the finances of the Corporation and starting that body on its work with increased resources. The facts are these. For some years past the normal expenditure of the municipal services has been in excess of the revenues, this result being almost entirely due to the heavy charges of maintaining the water-supply works and the portion of the special drainage works which has been completed and handed over for maintenance. According to the latest budget, for example, a sum of about Rs. 4 lakhs is set apart from the 'revenue' account to meet the deficit in the 'water-supply and drainage fund.' In successive administration reports the Corporation has been complaining of the large waste of water in the City. The water-works are designed to supply 25 gallons per head per day to the population. In the first months of 1918-19 the quantity consumed in the City rose on an average to 32 gallons per head per day. This means not merely increase in the cost of supplying the water but also increased strain on the drainage works. Under the present Act the Corporation has no effective means of compelling owners to accept supply from the water-works, to fix meters to house connexions and recover the cost or hire of meters from owners, and to cut off supply in cases where the by-laws are infringed. All these defects are rectified in the Bill. The Government look to the Corporation to enforce these and other provisions, keep the supply within strict control, and effect considerable savings in the cost of pumping, etc. By doing so, the Corporation should be able to wipe off the whole or the greater part of its present deficit. This important matter should be taken into account when the effect of the Bill on the finances of the Corporation is considered.

"I next proceed to deal with the direct increase in the revenues which the Bill sanctions. The regrading of the profession tax is estimated to bring in an additional revenue of about 2.29 lakhs, the regrading of the animal and vehicle taxes and the tax on carts about Rs. 31,000, and the revised scale of tolls about Rs. 20,000. The duty on transfers is expected to yield about Rs. 1 lakh a year. The taxation of the Port Trust properties will bring in Rs. 64,000. Deducting from these increases the proceeds of the duty on firewood which is being remitted (about Rs. 50,000 a year) the immediate net increase in the revenues of the Corporation should be about 3.94 lakhs a year, and this without any increase in the property taxes. In regard to the property taxes themselves, it will be for the ratepayers hereafter (through their representatives) to decide at what rate they should be taxed on their properties.

"While on this subject I should like to mention that if the original proposals of the Government for the levy of a 50 per cent surtax on the income-tax and an unearned increment duty had been maintained, the increase of the revenues would have amounted to about Rs. 9 lakhs, as against about Rs. 4 lakhs. Deference to the wishes of the Corporation was one of the chief reasons that induced the Government to abandon the surtax on the income-tax in favour of a regraded profession tax and the increment duty in favour of the transfer duty.

"I should now like to refer to the taxation of the Port Trust properties. The Bill withdraws the exemption from the property tax hitherto enjoyed by this body, but the outside limit of 4 per cent of the gross earnings is fixed for the tax leviable on these properties, and this has been attacked as an unreasonable concession. A sum of over Rs. 3 crores has been expended hitherto on the harbour works. A considerable portion of this has been spent on breakwaters, seawalls, etc. These are technically buildings and, if the general rule as regards the levy of property taxes is followed, the Trust properties would have to be assessed at some percentage of their capital value, the basis of the rental value being obviously not applicable to the case. A tax levied on any such scale will paralyse the institution. Legislation in other provinces has prescribed special modes of assessment for Port Trust properties. On the basis of a maximum limit of 4 per cent on its gross earning, the Madras Port Trust will pay a property tax of about Rs. 64,000 a year. The Port Trust in Bombay pays about 2.6 of its gross earning and that in Calcutta about 4 per cent. The 4 per cent limit fixed for Madras cannot be said to err on the side of undue liberality to the Trust.

"The position of the Government on the several proposals made for additional taxation has been more than once explained. The Government of India have definitely ruled out a terminal tax. Any duty on goods brought within the city, partaking of the nature of an octroi, would be unsuitable in a scheme of local taxation. The Government of India have animadverted on the opportunities for fraud, delay and oppression which the octroi involves owing to the entrusting of large discretionary powers to a subordinate agency, its being expensive to collect and wasteful, and on its constituting a serious burden on trade in general, and in particular on through trade, notwithstanding the provision made for refunds. When in places where the octroi exists—as in Northern India—the policy is to get rid of it gradually, it does seem retrograde to introduce it in the Madras city to the detriment of its trade, and thereby set a pernicious example to local authorities all over the province which will be unable to resist the temptation to follow the lead of the premier local body.

"Though we have been unable to accept several proposals placed before us for increasing the resources of the Corporation, we recognize that the present position in regard to Government grants to local bodies is far from satisfactory. The Government are in sympathy with the policy of substituting for the grants now given a fixed share of some growing source of revenue, but the present is not an opportune moment for taking up that question. The financial relations between the Government of India and the Provincial Governments are under discussion in connexion with the impending reforms and we cannot consider this important question till a settlement has been reached on the financial resources of this province. The Government can examine this question of giving the local bodies a fixed share of a growing source of revenue only after the scheme of provincial finance is definitely settled. That will take time and we cannot postpone this Bill till then. Whatever measure is ultimately agreed on in this respect can be given effect to independently of and without any reference to this Bill. The scheme will apply to all local bodies including the Corporation.

"Before concluding my remarks I should like to refer to the statement I have seen made that the Government are rushing this legislation through. The amendment of the City Act was taken up as early as 1910. In that year the Corporation considered the recommendations of the Royal Commission on Decentralization and appointed a committee which suggested the adoption of the commissioner system and framed detailed proposals for the distribution of the functions among the several municipal authorities—the council, the standing committee and the commissioner. A report was then made to the Government of India and the orders of the Secretary of State on the proposals were received in 1913. A special officer prepared the first draft of the Bill in 1915, working in close touch with the President and the chief officers of the Corporation. There was then some correspondence with the Government of India and ultimately the Bill as revised was referred to the Corporation for remarks—early in January, 1917. The views of that body were received in May 1917. The Bill was further revised in important respects in deference to the views expressed by the Corporation, submitted for the approval of the Government of India, which came in due course, and it was introduced in this Council in August 1918. The Select Committee has given a lot of time and care to the Bill and made many improvements in it and the Council itself has devoted several days to a detailed examination of the provisions. This, sir, is a brief outline of the history of the various stages through which the Bill has passed, and I think I am justified in saying that at no time have we rushed this measure of legislation. It is the result of a great deal of thought and deliberation. I do not claim perfection for it; but I do claim that it represents a very distinct advance on existing conditions and I appeal to the Council to pass it. The Government would be quite prepared to afford facilities from time to time for introducing such amendments as experience might prove to be necessary. With these words I submit to the Council the motion that the Bill be passed into law."

The Hon'ble Mr. S. SRINIVASA AYYANGAR :—"I beg to second the motion that has just been made and in doing so I wish to say a few words.

"The Bill has been before the public for about three years. It was carefully considered by the Select Committee where the non-official members brought to its discussion a close scrutiny and a wealth of suggestions that have been of great value. It is true that in the Council few changes of substance have been made in the Bill as revised by the Select Committee; but the thorough and searching criticism to which it was subjected during the instructive debates that took place at the last meeting showed that there was little that needed material alteration. Several amendments of minor importance were however passed which have improved the Bill. The formidable list of amendments was not perhaps all of equal value and was due to the shortness of the interval between the republication of the Bill and the meeting of the Council and several amendments were therefore either withdrawn or rejected as the result of a fuller consideration. Opinion must be divided on the question whether it would be a sound legislative procedure if, in the absence of special or unforeseen circumstances, a long and intricate Bill were to be radically and suddenly altered or completely overhauled after it left the Select Committee. The proper course would seem to be to press home all suggestions and criticisms of the more important kind at or before that stage. The Bill as now settled by the Council is a great and decided improvement upon the present law in very many important particulars, but I wish to indicate in the briefest possible manner what a real advance it is towards local self-government confining myself to the constitution of the corporation and the franchise upon which it is based, its financial independence of Government and the complete financial control which it gets over the Commissioner.

"The strength of the Council is raised from 37 to 50 of the elected commissioners, divisional or institutional from 28 to 41. The President of the Council is no longer appointed by Government but elected by the Council. That feature and the division of functions hitherto combined in the President, while they enable the commissioner to be more efficient as an executive officer, enable meetings of the Council to be freer of executive influence and to subject the commissioner's acts to a more effective scrutiny. A proper distribution of the 30 divisional seats will secure a more adequate and uniform representation than exists at present. Instead of the complicated and unequal franchise and the provision for plural voting that now exist, the Bill provides for a simpler, juster, and far more democratic franchise. Doubt has been expressed in some quarters whether the franchise has not been pitched too low. Residence in a division—and let us not forget residence is a word of elastic signification—and the payment of one of the three principal taxes—one rupee will do—or the occupation of a house with a rent of Rs. 5 a month are its bases. The right of plural voting now possessed by large owners of property has rightly been abolished as inconsistent with the principle of democratic electorates. For the first time women have been put upon the register as entitled to vote and the frequent and intelligent use which they may make of that right will in time enable them to become councillors. Ignorance of English is no longer a qualification to be a councillor and clause 54 of the Bill is a great improvement upon the existing Act and provides for the speedy settlement of disputes regarding disqualifications. The compendious rule in section 45 of the old Act being found inadequate a small code of election offences has been introduced which will make for the purity and representative character of elections. At the same time the Select Committee has provided for an appeal to the High Court against a conviction for any election offence and the time limit of seven days is a substantial safeguard against any extravagant resort to the new law. The residents and ratepayers of the city are vitally interested in the wide extension of the franchise and in the increased representation conferred by the Bill and are entitled to the immediate exercise of their new rights. Turning to the standing committees, while at present there is a single Standing Committee of eight members overburdened with work, four Standing Committees have been constituted to deal with the principal branches of municipal administration and they continue for the whole term of their office as councillors and not for a year as now. Another restriction has also been removed. While at present only half of the members of the Standing Committee can be divisional councillors, hereafter if the Council so chooses all the Standing Committees can consist wholly of divisional councillors. It is a great advantage that 28 out of 50 members will be obliged to take active interest in and shoulder responsibility for the details of Municipal administration and the consequent training in civic affairs cannot be regarded as of negligible value. Next, under the existing law the control of the local Government over corporation finance is absolute. Government has full power to reject or modify or add to all or any of the items of the budget: and the corporation is bound to abide by the budget as approved by the Government. When a supplemental budget is needed, that also requires the approval of the Government. Any increase, reduction or transfer of a budget allotment requires the sanction of the Government. New projects involving an expenditure of more than Rs. 1 lakh cannot be commenced without the sanction of the Government. And any contract and even acceptance of a tender involving an expenditure of more than Rs. 1 lakh require the previous sanction of the Government. In every one of these particulars the Bill has radically changed the existing system. Complete budget independence on the part of the corporation is established by the Bill, Government has no longer any power to reject, modify or add to any of the budget items. The making of the supplemental budgets will rest with the council. The reduction or transfer of a budget allotment is with the standing committee or with the council. The only power which Government will have is over new projects involving an expenditure exceeding Rs. 2½ lakhs. As regards contracts and tenders the corporation will be wholly free of Government control even where a new project exceeds Rs. 2½ lakhs.

"As regards establishment too, the control of the Government is abolished except as regards the commissioner; and framing of the whole establishment schedule is vested in the council whether as to pay, security, qualifications or as to grant of leave as also the right to appoint officers drawing a monthly pay exceeding Rs. 500. The important officers of Revenue, Health and Engineering will be appointed by the council and not as now by the Government.

"Thirdly the council will have the completest financial control over the commissioner. It can make regulations compelling detailed statements, estimates and proposals to be made and the furnishing of all necessary information before it sanctions the budget. The commissioner cannot make any financial commitments or make any payments except under the eight usual categories enumerated in rule 14 of the fifth schedule. The sanctioning of estimates by him or of projects by the standing committee will be wholly futile unless the expenditure therefor is previously or subsequently sanctioned by the council. The specific powers of legal and administrative sanction conferred on the standing committees and the powers conferred on the commissioner are all subject to the power of the purse possessed by the council. Lastly, while the council cannot directly exercise the executive functions which are expressly assigned by the Act to the commissioner and the standing committees, the entire municipal government of the commended in the resolution of 1915, and it appears to the Government of India to be worthy of consideration. So long as the executive officer of a city is protected from the possible caprices of a board by a proviso requiring that, though his nomination may be by the board, his appointment should be approved by Government and that he should not be removed without the sanction of the Government unless, by the vote of a substantial majority of the board, it is not necessary to require that the executive officer should be a Government official. Now it will be noticed that there the Government of India contemplate the appointment of the commissioner by the corporation. The commissioner is its officer. No doubt the corporation is being freed from Government control, but the Government are sending their deputy who is practically an irremovable deputy who will exercise these functions, whereas the present President of the corporation has to face the discussion in the corporation once a month at least and has to meet us face to face and therefore he will be guided in the pursuance of his policy by the votes of the councillors because he cannot always afford to ignore our resolutions. The commissioner will now be appointed by somebody else and he will be sitting in his chamber and will be performing all such duties as are laid down for him by the Government, and the corporation has absolutely no control over him. That is the fundamental objection. The Honourable Member in charge of the Bill has said that this is a very recent objection to the commissioner. We do not object to the system of the commissioner. We welcome the commissioner for the purpose of discharging the daily routine duties, but that is not what he is entrusted with. He is entrusted with the powers of the corporation in certain matters although he is not of the corporation; he is an outside nominee. That is the objection we take so far as the commissioner is concerned. With reference to both these points, therefore, we tried to increase the elected strength, that was negatived, and we tried to make him somewhat a nominee of the corporation, and that was negatived. We wanted to reduce his powers with regard to contracts and appointments. That was negatived. Both the Honourable Gentlemen who spoke in support of the measure spoke of the right of making appointments of officers by the corporation. What is it that the corporation has got? The commissioner appoints all officers below Rs. 500, and are there many officers above Rs. 500 except the Revenue Officer, the Health Officer and the Engineer whose nomination or appointment requires the approval of the Government?

"I really wonder how we should be asked to delude ourselves into the belief that we are giving powers to the corporation when we are giving powers to the commissioner. Such a delusion we should certainly get rid of if we are to approach the consideration of this Bill fairly and impartially with faith in the people. I quite admit the point of view of those who are in charge of the Bill, but the point of view of the people is quite different. The Government have little faith in the people, they have little faith in the democratic principles, they believe in commissioners and experts, they think the ideal Government is the businessman's Government. They think that the administration should be entrusted to a businessman. I quite admit the logic of that position. They are afraid of the difficulties, imperfections and failures which are likely to occur if we entrust the people's representatives with real power and therefore they safeguard from perfectly honest motives."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"I do not want to interrupt the Honourable Gentleman's thread of argument. He says that those who are responsible for the Bill have no faith in democracy and are afraid of the people."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"I said they have little faith. I do not know, Your Excellency, if it needs any answer just now."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"Let the Honourable Gentleman say what he has to say. Until he has stated it we have no material to judge."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"I have much more faith in democracy than many others including the Honourable Gentleman. Whether he has definite grounds for stating what he has said I will deal with that later."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"I am perfectly obliged to the Honourable Member for the assurance he has given me that he has faith in democracy. But I judge him not by his words but by his action. In judging him by his action—I need not labour the point—in appointing the commissioner I have shown that he has little faith in democracy. He thinks not only routine duties of every day administration should be entrusted to the commissioner but far higher duties should be entrusted to him. This proposed measure entrusts those powers to this officer who is a nominee by an outside authority and who is practically irremovable by the authority to whom he is gifted. Therefore I take strong objection to both these aspects of the Bill, and I hope that when this new angle of vision which has come upon the Government and the people, namely, of parting with the control to the people as far as possible in local self-government, giving complete control to the people in local self-government—when that policy is to be given effect to—I hope and expect that we will have a better measure. That is why I move that this Bill be taken into consideration two years hence."

"Now there was little reason for entrusting wide powers about contracts and estimates to the commissioner under the proposed measure. We have now proposed four standing committees who will work speedily and therefore independently of each department and their work will be quickly gone through. There was absolutely no reason why the power to sanction estimates and to enter into contracts up to Rs. 10,000 should be given to the commissioner. That can only be justified on the ground of speedy disposal and that ground will disappear. That shows that it is more than every day routine work that he is entrusted with. That is not what comes within the Government of India's resolution, namely that the commissioner should be appointed for every day routine duties. These being great defects so far as the constitution is concerned, I proceed to consider the other more important and vital aspects of the question.

[12TH MARCH 1919.] (Mr. Ranga Achariyar ; Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar ;
Mr. M. Ramachandra Rao.)

"Finance, My Lord, is the heart of all political organizations; and without financial resources no organization, political, social or otherwise can get on. The corporation cannot afford to continue to be the beggarly corporation which it has been for years. In the Government Memorandum No. 51-1 M.O., dated the 21st July 1913, the Government remarked: 'In continuation of paragraph 11 of G.O. No. 942 M., dated 10th May 1913, the attention of the Corporation of Madras will be drawn to the fact that its closing balance under the revenue account fell from Rs. 6,99,087 on the 31st March 1908 to Rs. 3,61,140 on the 31st March 1913 and is expected to amount to only Rs. 1,08,590 at the end of the current official year as shown in the annexed statement. This depletion of the balances is due to the fact that while the receipts which amounted to Rs. 20,99,808 in 1907-08 are estimated at Rs. 27,01,990 in 1913-14 an increase of 29 per cent—the charges show an increase from Rs. 17,88,520 to Rs. 29,54,540 or 65 per cent. It is essential therefore that the corporation should thoroughly examine its financial position with reference to the following points.' Then the corporation made its humble recommendations in 1914. In the Statement of Objects and Reasons in the Bill of 1916 this is what is stated: 'The present resources of the corporation are inadequate. It has made forecasts showing that on the completion of large schemes now being carried out its obligatory annual expenditure must exceed its revenue. Moreover it will not be able to raise, or to pay interest on, the loans that will be required to meet the further expenditure on these schemes.' Then it makes certain proposals for augmenting the resources. That again is repeated in the Statement of Objects and Reasons in the Bill of 1918. What is it that has been done with reference to augmenting the resources of the corporation? The Honourable Member in charge has claimed for this proposed measure certain enhancements in the sources of revenue. I have had the matter thoroughly examined and the figures stand thus. The property tax brings us Rs. 21,04,120 and as the Bill stands it will fall to Rs. 19,99,410."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"Does the Honourable Member contemplate a reduction in the property tax?"

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"This is calculated on the existing rates given effect to in the Bill which provides for 10 per cent reduction in annual valuation on account of repairs and exempts certain properties from taxation. The property tax will fall from Rs. 21,04,120 to Rs. 19,99,410. The profession tax will rise from Rs. 2,16,738 to Rs. 4,45,760. There is a substantial increase in that. The vehicle and animal tax is now Rs. 1,18,740 and it will rise to Rs. 1,38,530. The cart tax will rise from Rs. 34,062 to Rs. 45,420. Licence fees which now stand at Rs. 1,71,400 will give only Rs. 1,15,790. Both in the property tax and the licence fees there is a reduction. There is a slight increase in the vehicle tax and the cart tax and a substantial increase in the profession tax. Comparing the totals, our present income from taxes is Rs. 26,45,140 and under the anticipated measure it will be Rs. 27,44,910 giving us a little under one lakh more."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"May I know what the loss is in the yield of the property tax which the Honourable Member anticipates? It will come to about 1½ lakhs. Rupees 21,04,120 is the present income and it will be Rs. 19,99,410 under the new Act on the present basis including the exemption on the Government property and including the tax on the Port Trust properties. So that with the extra revenues which is anticipated from the stamp duties—"

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO:—"May I make an inquiry? May I know what the increase in the company tax will be?"

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"The profession tax and the company tax are put together. The company tax can be imposed by the corporation, but the tax on the transfer of property can be imposed only with the previous sanction of the Government of India and the Government of Madras. The Honourable Member has told us that it will be about 1½ lakhs. I do not know how that is arrived at. I have looked at the figures in the Registration department and I find that the Registrar derives an annual income of Rs. 45,000. I do not know at what rate this is going to be calculated hereafter. The rate has to be fixed hereafter, and we have to obtain the sanction of the Government of Madras and the Government of India to levy that tax. So it is a doubtful asset, which we as men in charge of finance cannot wisely calculate on and embark upon expenditure. It has been admitted times out of number that the present resources of the corporation are absolutely inadequate; it is impossible to go on administering this vast city. Unless the corporation is expected to remain stationary and unless the councillors are to strike in a body and say we will not carry out improvements which may be necessary for the city, we have to face the other awkward situation of raising the property tax. I cannot speak better than in the words of the committee of the corporation which sat in 1918, a committee on which the Hon'ble Sir Gordon Fraser sat which recommended as follows: 'To the list of taxes specified in section 110 the committee consider that the existing tax or licence on timber and firewood entering the city should be restored. This source yields a large income, and the committee are of opinion that no hardship is entailed thereby. The committee considers that the corporation should have power to levy a tax not exceeding half per cent on imports and exports passing through the city of Madras. The committee consider (a) that such tax would yield a large income, (b) that it would not be felt by merchants or consumers, (c) that to theoretical objections (if any) to its imposition the practical answer is that Madras urgently needs money and has no other way of procuring it. The committee consider that without such tax it will be impossible for the corporation to assent to the proposal to abolish the statutory maximum rate of house-tax. This abolition they consider to be good per se as obviating the necessity for vexatious individual inquisitions that at present must be carried out when any increased revenue from house tax is desired and as distributing increased taxation (if any) equitably over the whole city. But they feel the taxation of house property cannot be increased indefinitely and that if the statutory maximum rate is abolished while no new productive sources of income are opened up, the corporation to meet any unavoidable or desirable expenditure will be called on to increase the house tax. These are the wise words, which they uttered and I daresay if this Bill becomes law the councillors will have either to strike work, which I do not propose the Government will view with satisfaction, or they will have to put on the burden on this goose, the house property, and kill it. That is what will happen. Therefore it is fundamentally wrong that no elastic source of revenue has been assigned to us.

(Mr. Ranga Achariyar; the President.)

"An excellent reason has been advanced by the Honourable Member in charge of the Bill for postponing this measure. I quote him in support of my motion. He has told us that the financial relations between the Government of India and the Government of Madras are under correspondence and they are likely to come to some fruition in giving some provincial autonomy so far as financial matters are concerned in the near future. If that is so, is that not a reason why we should postpone the passing into law of this measure? That will give an excellent opportunity for the Madras Government to press upon the Government of India the necessity to settle this matter soon. Instead of doing that, are we to pass this measure into law and to live in the hope that amendments will be favourably considered? Who is to introduce the amendments? The corporation will have to do it through its representative. I do not know whether in the future constitution the corporation is going to have a representative or the city is going to have a representative in this Council. There are so many difficulties in the way of private members bringing in amendments. It will be for the Government who are slow to make amendments. After all what is the urgency about the measure? We are going on all right under the existing Act. What we want is perfection, not merely an admittedly imperfect measure which we hope to perfect hereafter. We do not want it; there is no urgency about it as it is not going to give us relief in a matter which is most vitally affecting us. I do not see the object of pushing this measure in the way in which it is proposed to be done. The Government of 1910 recognized it; the Government of 1913 recognized it and the Government of 1918 recognized it, and to-day also it is recognized. I do not blame the Madras Government, I quite realize their difficulties; the sanction of the Government of India has to be obtained, but I ask if the Madras Government made an earnest attempt about it to get the sanction of the Government of India to our proposals.

"I do not spring this proposition up suddenly on the Council. When the Bill was first introduced, my Honourable Friend Mr. Yaqub Hasan made a motion to postpone its consideration and I reluctantly seconded it because I felt this difficulty about the financial proposal and I pointed out that unless some assurance was given that the financial resources of the corporation would be increased I would have to oppose the measure. I suggested the excise duty; I suggested port dues and I suggested various other things in the Select Committee. I gave the final word the last day we sat; I said if the financial provisions of the Bill were to remain as they were I would have to oppose the passing of the measure into law. So that it is not a sudden or recent move on our part. This is a motion of which I have given notice at all times on this matter, and unless this portion of the Act is amended radically so as to give us some elastic sources of revenue instead of having to depend merely upon doles which the Government are no doubt pleased to grant from time to time and for which we are thankful—our gratitude to Your Excellency's Government is immense—still even after the new Act which has come after such a long delay, after the recommendations of the Royal Commission supported by the Viceroy and the Secretary of State, when we are going to have ample responsibility for the municipal government, even then that we should live in hope of amendment hereafter is a matter I cannot conceive. I cannot but feel greatly reluctant to give my assent to a measure of this sort. How are still to live in hopes of amendment to be made. I think it is a matter to be regretted. I therefore think that as this is a matter which is bound to be rectified sooner or later, there is no harm done by postponing the consideration of this measure till after the new Council comes into existence or till after Provincial financial autonomy is settled. That is why I move this proposition."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"May I remind the Honourable Member that he has already spoken for 40 minutes?"

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"I do not know if there is any time limit."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"I am merely mentioning it. The Council should know it."

12TH MARCH 1919.] (Mr. Ranga Achariyar; the President; Mr. Venkatapati Raju; Mr. M. Ramachandra Rao; Mr. Rajagopla Achariyar.)

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"I will take Your Excellency's advice. Now as I have already pointed out, the Government of India's views have been pressed whenever this Government were not willing to accept any amendments. But the Government of India's views are not respected when they are willing to accept amendments. As I have said already, even small matters have not been attended to. There was a modest request of the Hon'ble Archbishop supported by the Hon'ble Mr. Pittendrigh to exempt educational institutions, primary schools, from taxation. When we are amending the Act, when we are giving a new Act, should we not allow that? Should not the Government accept this modest request? The Government of India exempted these institutions in the original Bill from taxation. This Government could not think that the Government of India's views stood in the way of reintroducing it, but in the Select Committee and in the Council they would not accept it. That shows that the Government of India's attitude is merely drawn as a blind, and it is not really the unwillingness of the Government of India that stands in the way, it is more the unwillingness of this Government. There are various other matters which are matters of detail with which it is unnecessary to deal in a motion of this kind. I do think, Your Excellency, that this is a case in which no harm will be done by postponing this measure. I therefore strongly urge this Council not to accept the motion to pass the Bill, but to defer the passing as I have proposed."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"Before I accept this motion I do not think the Council can accept it in this form. The Council cannot bind its successors. It is very probable that no Council will be in existence two years hence. It merely amounts to a negative of the Honourable Gentleman's motion. My Honourable Friend can vote against the motion or say that this be not passed into law."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"Virtually it is opposition, but I understand that is the usual method adopted in Parliament. Your Excellency must be aware of the amendment to add the words 'two years hence'."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"Parliament is rather different. I must remind the Honourable Gentleman that this Council's existence is a very important point."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. VENKATAPATI RAJU:—"Am I to understand whether the amendment stands or not?"

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"I suggest that it is better to say that the Bill be not passed into law."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO:—"My Honourable Friend's motion seems to me somewhat difficult to understand. It is that this matter be put off for two years."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"He wants this to be passed into law two years hence."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO:—"Does it mean that he accepts the measure but wants to put off the passing of it into law? If he says that it could be passed into law two years hence, it means that he accepts the measure but says let it come into force two years hence."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"No."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"Let the Honourable Gentleman write out the amendment and let me consider it."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. VENKATAPATI RAJU:—"Your Excellency, I rise with profound sorrow to record my feeble (because of no avail) but emphatic (showing the intensity of the feeling) protest against the passing of the City Municipal Bill in the present shape, at this or any other meeting. I complained when the Bill was introduced that it was not the suitable time to inaugurate this measure in this Council knowing as we do that it is packed with official majority who are impervious to all considerations of liberalism, inimicably disposed towards popular aspirations, and opposed to the spirit of democracy, but that it should be left to the Reformed Councils."

"In the Imperial Council the Government expressed their view that no Municipal Bill would be rushed through by the Local Government if the non-officials oppose the measure, but they did not know the temperament of our Local Government. We do not complain of the drafting of the provisions in the hands of our eminent legal luminary but complain of the underlying policy of the Government to keep up the uncompromising supremacy of bureaucratic rule even in the City Municipal administration. The haste with which the Bill is rushed through now, though delayed for years, in spite of repeated requests, suggests that the Government is anxious to have on the Statute Book as crippled a measure as possible. It even looked like a self-protective legislation for vested interests. The Government of India in G.O. No. 41, Municipal, dated 16th May 1918 stated: 'The domain of urban and rural self-government was the great training ground from which political progress and a sense of responsibility have taken their start and it was felt that the time had come to quicken the advance, to accelerate the rate of progress and thus to stimulate the sense of responsibility in the average citizen and to enlarge his experience.' They added that the Government is in favour of a general policy of further progress. They exhorted the Local Government to move towards these ideals in the manner and at the pace which was considered best fitting to local circumstances. They opined that more complete local self-government is needed now, allowing modification in specific cases for specific reasons. They emphasised that the object of the local self-government is to train the people in the management of their own local affairs and that political education of this sort must in the main take precedence of considerations of departmental efficiency. 'They want that the authority should be entrusted to the people's representatives and the authority should be real and not nominal and that they should not be subjected to unnecessary control but should learn by making mistakes and profiting by them. The general policy must be one of gradual removal of unnecessary government control. External control should be relaxed such as the removal of the unnecessary restrictions in connexion with taxation, budgets, sanction of works and local establishment. The commissioner should be subject to the general control of the corporation and of its Standing Committee. The commissioner is to be nominated by the Board and approved by the Government. He may be a non-official. They really believed that similar system is contemplated in Madras and expressed it so. They state that one who pays for services should control them. If their funds were to be utilised they should have real control over the funds and should not be under the constant dictation of the Government in matters of detail. They should have adequate financial responsibility only by the sense of such powers and by learning to bear the consequences of their errors. Outside sanction is necessary for works carried with funds granted by Government. They state emphatically that the essential welfare of the country depends upon such a system. Look at this picture and that !

(Mr. Venkatapati Raju.)

"The Government should understand what one great man has said that the hard features of law, the red tape of departmental rules, gain in real strength and lose in harshness when they are interpreted by a self-governing local community. To study the root principles of constitution we should look to the fact where real power is vested. Is there any doubt that the commissioner under the new Bill is more autocratic and less amenable to popular control than the old President ? The future President is only a figure-head bereft of all power and influence. We have been presented with shadowy forms stripped of their life and strength. If we accept such a lifeless measure as this I am afraid that Local Autonomy is an idle dream. Real stride forward is conspicuous by its absence. The last phase of reactionary policy we notice in this measure is really destructive of local democracy. Unless radical changes in the provisions are made we may bid good-bye to this jejune constitution thrust upon us at a time when our expectations are high. We never dreamt that the product of the labours of the Council on the eve of the Constitutional Reforms would be so reactionary. If the bureaucracy is permitted to march farther along this road, it would set at naught our national ideas and aspirations and the cherished desire of the Government of India. We were told that under James II, in England the reactionary municipal policy reached a climax. Even he granted a better charter than this Bill to Madras. Let us examine the important provisions of this Bill. Instead of making the municipal council the sole authority, a commissioner is given a statutory authority. The strength of the council is raised to fifty by increasing divisional councillors from 24 to 30. During Lord Curzon's regime 24/32 elected members were reduced to 20/36. In the revised Bill seven more elected seats for minorities of which four recommended to be reserved for Muhammadans and five more seats to be filled by Government nomination are proposed. The Government thought it necessary to go back against the Select Committee recommendations. Let me recount the past history of the Madras municipality. Among the prerogatives of the Crown, one of the most important is the power of constituting municipal corporations by Royal Charter. James II delegated to the East India Company in 1687, the power of establishing by Charter a municipality at Madras. In Madras a municipality and a Mayor's Court was established according to the approved English type. The municipal corporation was to consist of a mayor, 12 aldermen and 60 or more burgesses. For the greater solemnity and to attract the respect and reverence from the common people (so the Charter says), the mayor was to have always carried before him when he goes to the Guild Hall or other place of assembly two silver maces gilt and the mayor and aldermen might always upon such solemn occasions bear scarlet gowns. The burgesses had to wear white silk gowns. The mayor and aldermen had the power and privilege (so the Charter says), of having umbrellas and ride on horseback like Lord Mayor and aldermen of London having their horses decently caparisoned. I need not add they had the full power of administration. In 1726, a Charter was granted establishing or reconstituting municipalities at Madras, Bombay and Calcutta. Ours is the oldest. The capture of Madras by the French in 1746 having destroyed the continuity a fresh charter was granted in 1753. Then during Lord Ripon's time we have the Act of 1884 and revised to our disadvantage in 1904 during Lord Curzon's regime. In 1919 we are considering the present Bill. What a fall from that high pedestal when the Madras Mayor was once given equal privileges with the Lord Mayor of London and now made an insignificant person. The designation of mayor to the president of the corporation adds dignity to the office. He should be the chief executive officer under subjection to the municipal council. If His Majesty grants Royal Charter to the metropolitan towns such as Madras, Bombay, Calcutta and Delhi he may be styled Lord Mayor. If the strength of the council be 60 there may be 36 elected members and 12 institutional or nominated members in this transition period for a term of three years while they (48) in their turn elect from amongst them or outside 12 aldermen for six years. Even the Government of India approved the idea of aldermen. Long term would contribute to their efficiency. There may be persons of superior education, sagacity and worth who may be unwilling to enter the contest or unable to secure election, though extremely desirable to be on the council. Such men, if elected aldermen, would be highly useful owing to their unquestioned ability and integrity and character and would be really helpful in promoting the welfare of all classes and truly serviceable for economic management. This is a well recognized system known all over the world.

(Mr. Venkatapati Raju.)

"The constitution of four Standing Committees is commendable. The great drawback is that the commissioner shall be appointed by the Governor. The suggestion of the Government of India that he should be nominated by the Council and that he might even be a non-official is ignored. The modest proposal that the Government should select out of panel of three members nominated by the council was rejected. He could only be removed if 33/50 vote for such removal which would never happen, constituted as the council is. The executive power is vested in the commissioner. He is given the extraordinary power in cases which he thinks emergent to override all the provisions and saddle the municipality with costs, with an all sufficient safeguard of reporting after the event. His salary may be fixed up to Rs. 2,500 per mensem, not by the municipal council but by the Governor in Council and leave also could be granted by the Governor in Council alone. The commissioner can delegate his ordinary and extraordinary powers as well. He would supervise election. The commissioner may sanction any estimate up to Rs. 10,000 and can make contracts of several ten thousands separately and thus expend practically the major portion of the municipal revenue. I solemnly ask the Government whether the commissioner is a master or a servant. Woe be to the council which incurs the displeasure of that officer. Is he really responsible to the ratepayers of the municipality in any sense of the term when he can ride rough shod over the heads of the council and committees subject to the illusory limitations ? The Government is very liberal in allowing the council to appoint the health officer, engineer and revenue officer subject to confirmation by the Governor in Council, but they should work under the commissioner. They may be removed by the Governor in Council whenever he pleased but the council cannot get rid of them unless 33 vote for their removal. The commissioner can appoint the whole establishment excepting those that draw a salary over Rs. 500. The commissioner shall prescribe duties and exercise supervision and control. Is there any real power in the council ? Why should there be this elaborate legal farce ? Why not make the municipality another department like that of industries and agriculture and be done with it. Then the people can complain and appeal to the Legislative Council. My respectable suggestion is that if any control is to be had by the Government let it be in the Legislative Council and not in the Governor in Council. Why should there be an anomaly of enabling a lady ratepayer to vote but not sit in the council. As the poet Moore states :

'Disguise our bondage as we will
'Tis woman, woman rules us still'

In the matter of franchise in the everwidening electorate we should aim at conferring universal suffrage at no distant date though limiting to all ratepayers at present. Why should graduates be deprived of the right to vote as such, which they had enjoyed it for several years. The president of the council is a mere conduit pipe for carrying on the correspondence with the unquestioned right of looking into the municipal records and presiding over council meetings. He is simply an automaton bereft of all power and patronage. The Government ignored the fact that the aptitude of Indians for self-government could really be seen in the metropolitan council where enlightened patriotic citizens, worthy men of business habits, persons of high intelligence competent to manage local affairs can be had in sufficient numbers.

"Referring to taxation and finance provisions the less said of them the better. The Government cannot overlook the guiding principles of local taxation, contribution according to benefit and contribution according to ability. It cannot be forgotten that the owners of real property are generally Indians while persons drawing large salaries and making large profits are of the ruling class. It is the constant cry of the Indians that contribution towards any taxation should be proportioned either to the income or to the ability of the tax-payer. The property tax is quite disproportionate to the tax levied on other sources of income. It is true that some advance is made on professional tax. It does not stand to reason why maximum and minimum should be fixed to the professional tax at one and one sixth to one and two third per cent while no maximum is fixed on real property which at present pays 18½ per cent though an attempt is made to fix it as high as 25 per cent. Why the companies should be assessed at the maximum of Rs. 2,000 where their paid-up capital exceeds 20 lakhs, and so on in a descending scale without imposing certain percentage on their incomes, of course giving due consideration for the imposition of income-tax and super-tax for Imperial purposes. Why the exemption of the Island should be claimed, now happily removed from taxation, why provision is inserted to exempt Government property with the consent of corporation passes my comprehension. Half per cent duty on imported goods from sea, the terminal tax and excise licensing fees are denied. The proposal to tax the tramways for use of streets is rejected light-heartedly. The tramways in civilized countries pay taxes on real estate and cost of street-paving besides paying compensation for use of streets which is called payment to the common good. For instance Glasgow tramway pay rates 6½ lakhs, income-tax 2 lakhs, payment to the common good 6 lakhs. Boston pays 4 lakhs to the common good and for street-paving 10 lakhs; taxes on real estate 28 lakhs. Why not proportionately in Madras tax the tramways ? The episode of Government action on the proposal of the Hon'ble Sir Francis Spring to exempt Port Trust properties from usual taxation by limiting it to 4 per cent on the gross income is a sight for angels to weep. Hon'ble Mr. Thorger's amendment to increase it to 5 per cent is voted upon, while the non-official Indians refrained from voting, the Government members voted for the amendment along with Sir Francis Spring. Your Excellency not being satisfied, perhaps with the attitude of Indian non-officials, stated that the Government is prepared to accept the motion of Sir Francis Spring. Then the Government members were in a fix and must have thought that it was their duty to vote for 4 per cent even when Sir Francis Spring does not object to 5 per cent. Eventually 4 per cent proposal was carried. I am still at a loss to understand the attitude of the Government in sacrificing the legitimate source of municipal income. Mr. Goshen advised in England as early as 1870 that there should be a division of rates between owners and occupiers. Such division should have been fairly introduced into this country. The exemption from taxation of all Government carriages and animals is not equitable. That the recommendation of the Select Committee for the taxation of fire-wood should be ignored on the ground that the poor would be benefited, is not sound. Large sources of revenue need not be sacrificed. Railways, companies and several mills who use fire-wood, charcoal and coal can very well pay the higher price for them. Relief for the poor can be well provided by opening poor houses for the relief of the deserving poor. The limitation that profession tax need not be paid if one does not transact business for 60 days in every half year is unsound; every person should be made liable to pay taxes if he does not pay elsewhere when he carries on any profession in the city; otherwise, we see the spectacle of large salaried officers with their headquarters in the city claiming exemption by camping out as is frequently noticed in the mufassal. The provision for preparing the budget is regarded as a great boon. The grip of the Government control is not less tightened on that account. The provisions are introduced to make the official intervention quite effective. I do not propose to take up your time by referring to other matters. Minority interests such as that of Muhammadans might have been safeguarded by providing plurality of votes and cumulative voting power. Each voter should have as many votes as there are candidates and might, if he or she chooses, give them all to one candidate. This necessitates regrouping of divisions into smaller number so that each division might send not less than five candidates so that the community which has even one-sixth of the voting strength can send its own representative. This system has been in vogue successfully in School Board Elections in England. We are afraid that half measures towards reform would postpone the introduction of real reform. All attempts on the part of non-officials to drive a wedge of democracy into the municipal government signally failed as it struck the bedrock of bureaucracy. The person who expends municipal revenues is not responsible to the persons who fill the municipal coffers. We should make a bold stand against this policy without tamely surrendering our birthright of citizenship. We have enough of grandmotherly administration in municipal matters, helped by stepmotherly legislation. We naturally expected that the city municipality would be practically released from administrative subordination to the Government. The prevailing antiquated notion of the Government that nothing would be efficient unless under bureaucratic control should be given up; for obstinate conservatism would serve no useful purpose in these days of momentous changes at lightning speed. If this measure is the foretaste of coming reforms, it is high time for us to raise the battle cry that the elementary rights of the people are being denied. Lord Crew's despatch of 1913 says 'It is also true that no progress can be expected if the question is approached in too cautious a spirit. Failures have occurred and might still be expected, but there also have been encouraging successes and the former should not be allowed to weigh too heavily against the need to enlist co-operation of the people and their representatives in the improvement of sanitation and education. The Viceroy in addressing the Agra Municipality asserted that there could be no better school for training the political sense than that of municipal administration. He stated that he would appreciate to the full both the difficulties of the work of the municipal councillors and the political importance of local self-government and he significantly added that no progress would be possible without experiments.' There is no use of keeping the word of promise to our ear and break it to our hope. Lord Salisbury has well said that it is in the nature of every human being to think that he himself is the best person to decide on the questions which are to be decided upon, that is a failing from which (so he says about England) even those distinguished men who constitute our (England) permanent and official Government staff are not entirely free. Perhaps our civil service is immune from such failings. I need not recount various unsuccessful attempts of non-officials to emancipate the city from one man's rule. Every arsenal of prejudice and prestige was ransacked to furnish reasons against substantial reform. Municipality should be regarded, as one statesman has said, as the legal personification of the local community represented by a council elected by, acting for and responsible to the inhabitants of the locality. Mill has wisely pointed out that these elected representatives should not be mere passive agents to carry out the behests of the Government and they have to act as well as to think and to bear the responsibilities of their action. In this measure do we notice anybody who is responsible to the people or who works under the censorship of local opinion? It is a misnomer to call this local self-government when the executive is not subordinate to the popular will either in law or in fact. We rather prefer inaction of this Government rather than reaction or retrogression. On an opportune moment of better days when there would be proper appreciation of the rising power of democracy. This Bill is an embodiment of perfection of imperfections. We expected that the present system would be improved with the knowledge of the enlightened experience of the great cities in the world. We are greatly disappointed and dissatisfied. This Government lost this splendid opportunity of liberalising the measure in the wake of Imperial Government instructions. However beneficial and well intentioned the official view is, it is really dangerous in its after-effects of depriving the people of gaining experience in dealing with large questions of policy and minute study of the inner working of the municipal administration and introduce reforms of thrift and economy on the broad basis of liberality which is the secret of the true success of municipal administration. The non-officials are not lacking either in earnestness or in talents to stem the tide of reaction. They are overwhelmed by numbers. The cogent directness of Doctor Nayar, sweet reasonableness of Mr. Ramachandra Rao, eloquent induction of Mr. Ranga Achariyar, deep insight of Mr. Rama Ayyangar and lucid exposition of Mr. Krishna Rao and boldness of Mr. Narasimha Ayyar and persistence of Mr. Yaqub Hasan did not help us to secure the passing of any important amendment though reason and justice is on our side. Even Doctor Nayar who was described by the leading Anglo-Indian journal as sedate-headed politician, and selected by the Government as an expert adviser, condemned the Bill in no uncertain terms and pleaded for its repeal at the earliest opportunity.

(Mr. Venkatapathi Raju.)

"Even the city corporation condemned the measure wholeheartedly with a solitary exception who damned it with faint praise by stating half a loaf is better than no bread. One historian has well said that 'The English legislature has always stood to the principle that a local expression of local needs is the best indication of the powers a town requires and that Municipal Government if it is to have true life and depth must build its organization upon its needs—not as officially interpreted but as understood and expressed by its representatives.' Perhaps our Government thinks otherwise. I appeal to my friends that, if we accept this measure, our municipal rights will slip out of our grasp at a time when liberal ideas should ripen into reforms. Do not be enamoured of a few changes introduced to distract our attention from realities of one man's irresponsible rule. Beware of the fact that representative democracy in local bodies is the half way house for the representative democracy in the State. This measure does not harmonize with the ideals propounded in Montagu and Chelmsford reports. Let us stand firm and do our duty. My appeal to Government is: Before it is too late, Sir, may I ask the Government earnestly, to withdraw this Bill and leave it to the Reformed Councils to remodel it as best as they can. Else we will be compelled to vote against the Bill and appeal to the India Government for its timely intervention. God's will be done."

The Hon'ble Mr. J. H. THONGER:—"I hope it will be a slight refresher to the Council as a whole to know that there are two opinions amongst non-official members on this Bill. I would support the motion that it be passed into law. The two essential points touched upon by the previous speakers were the subjects of finance and the commissioner. My views on the whole Bill are contained in the Bill itself. I have been on the Select Committee and I need not deal with the Bill in detail as my predecessors have done, because I say the Bill sets forth my ideas of municipal control with one exception. Before I refer to these major points of finance and the commissioner, I should however like to refer incidentally to a matter of some moment, possibly of some amusement, in the position that has now arisen in the consideration of this Bill.

"It will be remembered by the Council that at the previous sitting I brought forward what I considered to be a very important amendment that a place should be made in the council of the city for the leading business men, and I may mention that the principle that I was arguing was accepted by all persons, but it was merely in the application of it that we differed. The Government did not see their way to accept my amendment and they were very strongly supported by the major number of non-official members. The non-official members now say that they cannot work the Bill, the word 'unworkable' having been used at the corporation meeting in considering this Bill. I take it Your Excellency's Government are pledged to pass the Bill. If the non-official non-business members cannot work the Bill and if business men are debarred from the council all that I can say is, that I already see looming in the distance an amendment of the Act to place these men on the corporation who can work it. After listening to the speeches of those who have spoken before me, I would urge upon this council to accept them in absolute good faith—they are not mere camouflage. I believe myself they are put forward in good faith. They are not business men and they cannot work the Bill. It is the corporation's honest opinion.

"As a business man I welcome this measure. I should like to see it passed into law as soon as possible, certainly not with two years' delay. The major objection has been that of finance. Well, Your Excellency, it is very nice indeed to have plenty of money. But those who have plenty of money are not always able to spend it wisely and if the Corporation of Madras is going to enjoy five years of restricted finance no one will be better pleased than I shall be. You must not forget that the non-official non-business men are fair weather business men only. They have not had experience of running a business. They do not realize that the trouble which the corporation is now up against is a matter which business men are always up against. It is not the business that has the most money which is the best administered. It is just the reverse. A business concern which is rolling in wealth will spend its money lavishly and unwisely and waste it, not intentionally but automatically, and it suffers from that state of affairs when days of hard finance come. The business which is short of money is better run invariably than the business which has plenty of money. Not only every rupee of expenditure is criticised but every rupee of revenue as well, and it is the daily task to make the two balance. Now the question of the balancing of the finance of the corporation is a matter which I understand is given the least consideration to. The Trades Association member on the corporation has more than once endeavoured to inculcate a spirit of economy and he was called a nuisance. I dare say he was a nuisance because of the simple fact that the corporation as it is at present constituted is not suited for economy. Under the new Act it will be entirely different. Under the new Act there will be a standing finance committee to scrutinise every item of expenditure and keep it down at the very lowest possible point. Being somewhat of an expert myself in administering a business, not always flush of money, I may say it is extraordinary what an amount of saving can be effected when economies are put into effect. That is a matter which the non-official non-business man has got to learn, namely, where he is to economise. I have no doubt about it that if our finance committee on the corporation is minus business men, the first thing they would do would be to see if it were not possible to cut down the pay of the commissioner or the pay of the highly-paid executive and to save money where they see a big item. But these are the very directions in which they should not proceed. It does not matter how successful a business may be, it pays to pay its headmen well. There are plenty of other directions in which economies can be effected. Now, Your Excellency, hoping as I do that a time of restricted finance is coming along—I say for a series of years restricted finance will be the salvation of the finance of the corporation—are we justified in saying that in the absence of business men in the administration of the corporation it can rise to the occasion? I very much regret to say it cannot. It is not their fault; they have not had experience. Effecting economies cannot be done suddenly. It means weeks and months of hard work. It is really a business that ought to be taken up by a full-timed man and not by a finance committee of honorary members. It means being in daily touch with the every day finance of the corporation, and it means the judicious working of their powers of economy. It means being in daily touch with the commissioner and as far as possible with the heads of the executive department. Can you expect the finance committee to undertake this duty in the time they will have when they have their own private affairs to look after? The matter would be simplified to a very great extent if they had amongst them merchants who are accustomed to handling these matters. Inexperience will tell seriously against their efforts.

(Mr. Thonger; Mr. Yaqub Hasan.)

"The next point that has been referred to is that of the commissioner. The position of the commissioner has been very severely criticised. Again I do not agree with the non-officials in the manner in which they regard this point. I say the position of the commissioner is the saving feature in the whole of the Corporation Bill always provided that we get the right commissioner. Your Excellency, the experience of every business man is that failure is courted if there is not one-man control. I have never known a business which has been successful with even dual control. There must be one man who has the final word. It is almost hopeless to expect that a commissioner, however clever he may be, is going to be successful in working the corporation if his best efforts and ideas are to be criticised by 50 men who can vote him down. If, however, the people of Madras insist on having a council of 50 men they must be prepared to pay for it. I would personally like to see the whole 50 entirely washed out and make the whole thing autocratic, to use my friend's expression. There should be an up-to-date business man who should stand or fall by his work and he should be removable by the corporation if he fails. I realize, however, that such a scheme is at present impossible. At the same time it all depends upon the business attitude of the councillors whether the commissioner is going to make a success of the business or not. If he is loyally supported by the members of the standing committee and the councillors as a whole, I have no doubt that he will make a very good attempt in working successfully the Act which will be placed in his hands. It has been stated by one of the speakers that with a larger electorate we should have a larger council. I can assure the council that an autocratic municipal council would have less chances of failure. I would very much rather see the new council reduced to half the number than have the number doubled. I do not suppose many non-official members will support me in this view. It is absolutely heterodox, but I look at matters from an entirely different point of view. From the remarks of the previous speakers I take it that municipal work is regarded by them more from the political point of view. I disregard politics altogether in a matter of business. What we are dealing with now is essentially a business. We are dealing with the finance of this city and the average rate-payer who does not care a bit about politics would very much like to see it constituted on business lines, pure and simple. I would like to make a short reply about the question of democracy and autocracy which has been raised by two of my friends in this Council. They state that they have great faith in democracy. I have none. I am an autocrat myself in my own business. There is no such thing as democratic rule. The one idea is to get above the ranks of democracy and attain to autocracy. The home rule and self-government movement is the surging up from democracy in the hope of becoming autocratic. Take the example of the United States of America. The finest example of a republic that the world has ever seen and yet the President is more autocratic in power than any crowned monarch in the whole of Europe. Your Excellency, may I suggest in considering this matter of the Corporation Bill we should drop as far as possible any idea of democracy or autocracy or anything of that nature? We should try and realize, standing as we do here with the responsibility for the future good government of this city on our shoulders, that we should proceed to deal with this Bill on straightforward business lines."

The Hon'ble YAQUB HASAN SAHIB Bahadur:—"Your Excellency, the Honourable Member in charge of the Bill controverted the charge levelled against the Government of measure. But he cannot deny that there was a rushing in the last six months since August last. This Bill was referred to the Select Committee, and the Select Committee was called week after week and they had to sit at it and work at very great pressure. When that work was concluded, we were given three days' time to sign the report of the Select Committee and we were asked not to write any minute of dissent so that the report may be brought up before the February meeting. The Government have in the last six months been trying to make up for the tardiness shown before that period. When it has taken as many as eight years to formulate this measure and to give it shape, they could have taken a little more time to allow the public to consider it in its final stage. The reason for rushing this Bill, it appears to me, is that it was thought that if this Bill is passed before Your Excellency's regime comes to a close, it will remain behind as a monument of Your Excellency's work in this Legislative Council, an event of some magnitude in a career which is otherwise uneventful. If Your Excellency wished to have the satisfaction of passing this Bill, Your Excellency will have the satisfaction of passing the Bill which has been universally condemned in this Presidency. It is condemned by the Corporation for the benefit of which this measure has been formulated, and the condemnation has come from people of all shades of opinion even from the quarter where there are the only admirers of the policy of Your Excellency in respect of constitutional reforms. This is also a measure of constitutional reform and the only measure that we appear destined to get at the hands of Your Excellency does not seem to give satisfaction to anybody. Even the sponsors of the Bill had to resort to manuscript eloquence for the first time in the history of this Council so that they may be saved the charge of damning the thing with faint praise. Two years ago when this Bill was for the first time referred to the Corporation of Madras, if it was passed that year with the same speed that has been displayed in the last six months it would have been hailed with great joy. But the world has moved since then very fast. Ideals have changed, constitutions are being considered for the central Government as well as the provincial Governments. Progressive realisation of responsibility is assured in the central provincial Governments, and the legislatures of course. But in the case of local as well as the provincial Government it is complete responsibility that is wanted and not progressive realisation of self-government. But here instead of any attempt at completely liberalizing local self-government responsibility. But here instead of any attempt at completely liberalizing local self-government we are being given a constitution which has in Bombay become out of date, and that constitution is considered good enough for us. In the report of the Viceroy and the Secretary of State it was recognized that though it is desirable that local self-government should be made as free from the control of the local Government as possible, the present Government constituted as it is will not take that broad view of the thing as the times demand and it was laid down therefore that the reformed Council would take up this matter and utilise their new powers on this constitution for local self-government. That was in my mind when I moved that this question should be postponed for some time till the reformed councils came into existence, but of course the Government majority defeated my proposition. Now I see that even those who were reluctant at one time to have the measure postponed now see no other alternative but to resort to that proposal.

"Let us now examine the Bill a little to see what it contains, and why I consider this Bill not in keeping with the demands of the times. It has been pointed out by the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Acharyar in some detail how it falls short of the expectations that were raised by this Bill. An attempt, I should say a heroic attempt, was made to liberalise it, but all those attempts have failed simply because the Government have made up their minds not to budge an inch from the course they had previously chalked out for themselves. It has been said that the franchise is very liberal indeed. We do recognise that a larger number of rate-payers of the city will be associated in the work of the Corporation, but though you have given the privilege to a larger number of people for electing their representatives, you have given very little power to the representatives themselves to manage their affairs in the manner that they would like to manage them. The franchise has been extended in one direction; it has been restricted in another direction. Those who had votes under the present Act have been deprived of votes under the new Act. There cannot be said to be any extension of franchise, but as far as graduates are concerned. The disqualifications of candidates have been removed, but the only disqualification that remains is that no woman voter can become a candidate. There can be some reason, very good reason, for not giving votes to women, the reasons of unmanageability. It will be very difficult to have mixed booths for recording votes, women and men rubbing shoulder and brought into the narrow chamber ushered in by male inspectors and others. That is not a prospect that, at any rate, I can look forward to with any complacency. Separate booths will have to be created for men and women and you will have to keep lady officials to record votes and to guide them how to vote. All those difficulties you have to contend with and you have decided to face all these difficulties and have given votes to women. Then why deny them the right of standing as candidates? The two privileges of voting and serving the community as a member of a constituted body always go together but in Madras I find that the principle is to be applied only half way.

"Then there are only 30 divisional commissioners according to this Bill. That proportion out of 50 cannot be said to be very liberal. In the district municipalities and taluk boards I think there is already a majority of three-fourths of elected members—I may not be quite correct; at any rate it is more than the proportion given to us. I wanted this proportion of divisional commissioners to be increased by giving some seats to Mussalmans. If four or five or six seats were given to Mussalmans that would have been of advantage to the divisional commissioners. But I was defeated there, and the recommendation of the Select Committee that under another sub-clause the Mussalman community may be allowed to elect or appoint four members was also taken away. And the number of nominated commissioners increased from five to nine, so that Mussalmans may also get nominated, if they do not come in through any other source. If Mussalmans came through other sources than election they do not bring any strength to the Corporation. When they come there through this source of nomination they will prove a weakness to the Corporation, because nominated members and institutional members are more likely to take a different view and adopt a different attitude from what the divisional commissioners will do.

"Now the commissioner has been given larger powers, he is also allowed to make appointments up to a salary of Rs. 500 a month. Not only that, but according to the section of this Bill the Government can issue instructions direct to the Commissioner and not to the Council, the president only serving as a post office as it were. It was never heard of that a servant of the Corporation, an assistant in the Corporation, a person who has been appointed there to carry out into practice the decisions of the council, should not be responsible to that body but that he should get his instructions sometimes from the Government direct. That Commissioner is not to be appointed by the council as it is being done in Bombay. It was pointed out that the Bombay Government only approves of the appointment and do not appoint.

"As for finance much has been said about it and I do not wish to cover the same ground. It has been shown that our financial resources will not be sufficient to meet our increasing responsibilities and in respect of one or two suggestions the provincial Government cannot have supported us and placed the matter before the Government of India, and if the Government of Madras had supported those suggestions I am sure that the Government of India would have met us half way at least if not fully. But this Government refused to do it and we were told that the Government of India would throw out the whole Bill if we persisted in certain things. I say that if they had thrown out the whole Bill, they would have done us greater good than this Bill will ever do.

"It has been suggested that the passing of the Bill should be postponed for two years. The reason, it appears to me, is this; Your Excellency has chosen that this Council should go out of office and a new Council should be brought into existence in July or August next. The extension that was given by all the provincial Governments is departed from only in the solitary instance of Madras. A new Council will come in and they will have very little work till two or three meetings and then the Parliament Bill is expected to be ripe for enactment and the reformed Councils will first have to feel their way before they take up any legislative work. That is one reason why two years has been suggested for postponing this Bill. Of course nobody is deluded into the impression that we do want this Bill to be passed as it is two years hence. It has been suggested, why not the reformed Council amend this Bill? Even the Hon'ble Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar tried to win our support by telling us that we would have a chance of amending it at the very first opportunity and we can take that chance and pass it now as it is. But Your Excellency is aware that if no Bill is passed, the reformed Council will consider it its duty to take it up, but if the Bill has been passed it will take up more urgent work and leave this aside. Besides that why should the present Government, not only here but the Government of India, try to bring certain Acts which they want, at one eleventh hour? That shows that there is a suspicion in their minds that things will be changed too much hereafter and what can be passed now will not be passed hereafter. So in order to suit the needs of the future Council and the future Government all these things are being done; I cannot help suspecting that. In this Bill we have a remarkable instance of that tendency. I support this motion brought forward by the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar and I would sincerely advise the Government not to press the measure which they know is being so vehemently condemned."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR:—

"ஐயா, இந்த முனிசிபல் மசோதா சட்டமாகக் கூடாது என்பதற்கான எனது அபிப்பிராயம், ஏன் அதை சர்க்கார் பரிசீலனையில் சொல்லவேண்டும் என்று சில கனம் உறுப்பினர் அங்கத்தினர்கள் கேட்கலாம். ஒவ்வொரு நாட்களிலும் தேர்தல்களும் கம்பலை டிபுலேயே சட்டக் கூடங்கள் செய்த வருவதில் அந்தத் தேர்தல்கள் வருத்தமாக இருக்கின்றன. நமது தேர்தல்களை எதிர்த்து அபிராமண குந்தகங்கள் இருப்பதால் சிலர் அபிப்பிராயப்படுகிறார்கள். அது பிச்சு."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR (interrupting):—"May I know what the Honourable Member is reading?"

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR:—"You will know exactly. It is my speech on the motion before the Council."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"Will the Honourable Gentleman follow the usual course?"

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR:—"I claim the right to address the Council in Tamil."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"It is not a matter provided for by the rules, but I would advise the Honourable Gentleman to adopt the usual course. Would the Honourable Gentleman speak in English?"

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR:—"I am just giving the reasons why I should talk in Tamil."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"The reasons cannot be understood by this Council."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"There are several members who do not understand Tamil."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR:—"I am sorry. I wish to give my reasons why I wish to speak in Tamil."

12TH MARCH 1919.] (The President; Mr. Narasimha Ayyar; the Raja of Ramnad;
Dr. Nayar; Mr. M. Ramachandra Rao.)

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"I do not know for what purpose the Honourable Gentleman is raising this issue."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR:—"I have a very short speech and if you wait you will learn it presently."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"What is the object?"

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR:—"I am trying to set a precedent. The only language that I ought to talk here is the local vernacular."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"In that case the proper course for the Honourable gentleman is to bring forward a resolution and the Council will have an opportunity of discussing it. I would now ask the Honourable Gentleman to address the Council in English."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR:—"It is my opinion that the vernacular should be used here, but I am not imposing an obligation upon all people to talk in the vernacular. I propose to exercise the right which I have to speak in any language and I hope the exercise of my right will not be stopped."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"The Honourable Gentleman will address the Council in English. I may point out he has his constitutional remedy; he can bring forward a resolution. If he does not wish to address in English, let him resume his seat."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR:—"Why should I bring a resolution? I do not understand under what power or rule you can prevent me from speaking in any language I like."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"It is very unpleasant that this issue should be raised. It lies with me as President to conduct the proceedings in accordance with the ordinary practice of the Council. I have got full power to conduct the proceedings in this way. I would advise the Honourable Gentleman to proceed in English and to defer what he proposes to do, and proceed as I have suggested by bringing up a resolution on the subject. If the Honourable Member persists in speaking in Tamil I have no other course but to ask him to resume his seat."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR:—"If Your Excellency says that I must ascertain the sense of all people in what language I should speak, that is not legal, but if Your Excellency prefers you may take a vote on the point. I have sometimes used in this hall Tamil quotations and Sanskrit quotations. Did Your Excellency then stop me? Under what right can Your Excellency now prevent me from addressing a few words in Tamil and ask me to resume my seat? May I proceed therefore with the speech which I have got before me in my own language?"

The Hon'ble the RAJA OF RAMNAD:—"May I suggest, My Lord, that there will be difficulty if the remarks are made in Tamil. The reporter will not be able to record the speech."

The Hon'ble Dr. T. M. NAYAR:—"May I suggest that the Honourable Member should address the Council in Tamil when we go out for lunch (laughter)."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO:—"I trust that my Honourable friend would not proceed further with this issue. The issue may be important or may not be important. I do not wish my Honourable Friend should put the matter to an issue and make the President give a ruling. It need not be considered just now. Independently of persons understanding the language or otherwise I appeal to my Honourable friend not to push the matter just now."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR:—"What is the auspicious time may I know?"

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO:—"We are not prepared."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR:—"May I know when you will get prepared?"

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO:—"I do not want Your Excellency to give a ruling. I do not want to take the ruling of Your Excellency just now. It is for that matter that I want my Honourable friend not to press this."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR:—"I am sorry I cannot take the advice. This right is as valuable as many other rights which have been lost by the ruling of the chair. If this goes by the ruling of the chair, let it be. There is no power under the existing regulations by which I can be prevented from talking in Tamil. If Your Excellency should rule me out of order Your Excellency will be acting absolutely highbandedly and it will be totally illegal. I wish to continue in my own vernacular."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"If Honourable Members will turn to page 89 of the rules it is true there is nothing said about the language to be used, but I base my ruling upon what has been the traditional practice. Rule 11 says, 'The President shall preserve order and shall decide all points of order submitted for his decision by the members and all questions connected with the interpretations of these rules. There shall be no discussion on any point of order and the President's decision shall be final.' I can only say hitherto so far as I am concerned as

(The President; Mr. Narasimha Ayyar; Mr. Davidson; [12TH MARCH 1919.

President of this Council it seems to me to be in accordance with the established practice of this Council that the discussions should be conducted in English. My decision is they shall be conducted in English unless the Council decides otherwise."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR :—" With reference to that, I wish to quote a precedent. There have been Hindi speeches in some of the Legislative Councils in the North, but Hindi is not understood by all. If it is a question of order I have two copies and I am prepared to hand over one copy to the President. I am quite agreeable that this Council should be called upon to say whether vernaculars can be used. But I may point out one thing, that they would be deciding a very serious matter if it is to be decided that the local vernacular should not be used.

The Hon'ble Mr. L. DAVIDSON :—" After the ruling of the chair, Sir, is this discussion in order?"

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR :—" Your Excellency just now stated 'unless the Council otherwise decides.' Am I prevented from ascertaining the opinion of the Council. I am proceeding to lay considerations before the Council. The Honourable Mr. Davidson need not be impatient."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT :—" The Honourable Gentleman is travelling altogether wide from the mark. We are not discussing the question whether Tamil or any other language shall be used. I have been confronted with this speech of the Honourable Member. I am at a loss, I did not apprehend what was going on for some time. I do not wish to prejudge any question. But I have no option but to rule that the Honourable Gentleman either must speak in English or I must rule him out of order."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR :—" You said if the Council pleased I may address the Council in Tamil."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT :—" It is not open to the Honourable Gentleman to discuss the question of my ruling."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR :—" May I know whether I will be in order if I move that the Hon'ble Mr. Narasimha Ayyar be requested to speak in English?"

His Excellency the PRESIDENT :—" It is better that the responsibility should lie with the Chair."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR :—" I simply wish to place my protest before this Council that this ruling is illegal. I do not propose to talk on this matter in any other language."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT :—" Are there anybody else who wish to speak?"

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. KRISHNA RAO :—" We may continue after lunch."

The Council adjourned for a short interval.

The Council re-assembled at 3 p.m., when the discussion on the City Municipal Bill was resumed.

The Hon'ble Mr. A. SURYANARAYANA RAO :—" Your Excellency, regarding the speech of the Hon'ble Mr. Narasimha Ayyar, I have only one word to say that it is a forecast of the future municipal corporation. Your Excellency has given the privilege of voting to any gramani who pays Rs. 5 per month and he will get in and probably we will have a congeries of languages in the municipal corporation, and the Hon'ble Mr. Narasimha Ayyar is giving us a foretaste of what the municipal corporation is going to be in the future. I admire the Hon'ble Mr. Narasimha Ayyar's boldness in giving us a sample of what the future councils will be like. However, that is a different matter.

"Now, Your Excellency, coming to the main point, with regard to the present Bill itself, Your Excellency's Government have taken so much trouble for the last so many years and so many amendments have been made in the Bill that I really find it difficult to say that this Bill has been pushed through hastily. At the same time, Your Excellency individually and Your Excellency's Government collectively stand in the position of a guardian who wants to give a beautiful bride, educated bride, to a decrepit, and poor autocratic husband. Here is the municipal corporation which has passed a resolution saying that the Bill itself is not acceptable to them and on the other hand, Your Excellency's Government think that this Bill is the proper thing for them to accept. Before these amendments were put before the Council, they might have been adjusted; we see that when once they are discussed in the open Council, neither party admits it is defeated but if these things had been discussed before they were actually placed before the Council, several of these things might have been adjusted. The main objection that the Corporation takes or the gentlemen representing the Corporation take, is with regard to the autocratic power that is bestowed upon the commissioner. With regard to this, the first objection is that he is to be appointed by the Governor in Council and the Corporation has no voice in the appointment. I think the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar's suggestion might have been very easily accepted because he said that the panel system might be adopted and he distinctly said that the Government would not be bound to select out of the panel. It was therefore only a recommendation and the Government could have very well accepted that suggestion, because they were not going to bind themselves to any particular action. Then as regards the power to enter into contracts up to Rs. 10,000, there again the corporation is prepared to give some powers to the commissioner, but the corporation is not prepared to go up to such a large figure. I think in a matter like this, the Government could have conceded that to the extent of Rs. 2,500, the commissioner should have the power without consulting anybody to enter into any contract and above Rs. 2,500 and up to Rs. 10,000 the standing committee should be consulted and at the same time the commissioner will not be bound by their opinion if there is any difference of opinion. Probably in such matters, some adjustment might have been effected so that the difference of opinion might have been obviated, and the Bill might have been made more acceptable to the corporation. Then it is said that large powers are given to the commissioner. No doubt when we read the sections relating to that, sections 5, 7, 13, 17 and 78, we see that very large powers are given to the commissioner so much so that he has got the power to delegate his power even in extraordinary matters to other persons; but in all these matters, I seriously ask: was there no half-way where both parties could meet and some modification made, so that all these things and the Bill may be made more satisfactory to the corporation? Then with regard to finance that is an important question. I really think that it is a sad mistake that firewood has been omitted out of the resources of the corporation. It is said that firewood brings Rs. 50,000 and the ground upon which the removal has been put is that otherwise, it would press upon the masses, but it is also said by those who know and those who ought to know that this removal of the firewood really benefits the railway and those people who can certainly afford to pay and that the benefit does not really reach the masses. If that is so, I think it is a sad mistake that the Government have committed in removing firewood from the category of financial resources. Then with regard to the Port Trust, I would not repeat what the Hon'ble Mr. Venkatapati Raju said, but it was a sad mistake that 5 per cent was accepted and I cannot understand how we went back and accepted only 4 per cent. It was accepted on the first occasion and hands were actually lifted. But afterwards we accepted only 4 per cent. In a matter like this, when 5 per cent means Rs. 80,000—I do not know much, but I make the calculation on the basis that if 4 per cent brings Rs. 60,000, 5 per cent on a mathematical calculation would bring about Rs. 80,000—when there is a clear gain of Rs. 20,000 and when the Hon'ble Sir Francis Spring himself had not much objection to accept 5 per cent, I think it is a sad mistake which the Government committed in accepting only 4 per cent. Then in regard to minor matters such as tramways and other things, so much has been said but probably these are resources which I have no doubt will be carefully considered on the next occasion. Then with regard to some additional resources, we find a foretaste in the very dubious language adopted by the Hon'ble Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar that something will be done to us. I have no doubt he is referring to the excise revenue or something like it. I am glad that some promise has been made that this would be extended even to the local bodies outside the corporation and when that question is engaging the attention of Government, I have no doubt that the Honourable Member is only referring to excise revenue and that a decent proportion of it will be distributed to local boards and municipalities including the Corporation of Madras. Then I heard one or two special complaints, one of which is by the Hon'ble Mr. Thonger. His special complaint is that contract-men have not been put in and on that account he thinks that the whole thing has become unbusinesslike. I really wonder how many men who are connected with contracts would really get in even if there was no such restriction. I do not think that the whole Council would become businesslike by the entry of these two or three men and would become unbusinesslike by the absence of these two or three men. It all depends upon the average intelligence of the Council. I hope that the rate-payers will not make the sad mistake of putting in the worst candidate because he is able to go about from house to house canvassing votes. That is what might be expected to happen hereafter, because when there are a number of voters, I think any candidate who has got any sense of self-respect or who knows the value of time, or who has very little time to spare—I do not think he would care to go from house to house to canvass votes. I only appeal to the future would-be-members of the corporation that they would be voted by their best voters and that the best men would come into the Council and then I have no doubt that the Council would be quite businesslike.

"Regarding the complaint of the Hon'ble Mr. Yaqub Hasan, he has got a grievance and rightly too, that some more Muhammadans have not been put in. The question was thoroughly discussed at the time. The Hon'ble Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar said that more Muhammadans were not put in on account of the constitution of the corporation and on account of other difficulties in the way. Therefore I have not much to say on that except that I feel sorry that scope was not found for more Muhammadans to enter into the corporation.

"We are deeply thankful to the Honourable the Advocate-General that at the very end he has included fines also as one of the resources of the corporation. Now, Your Excellency, I do not propose to take up Your Excellency's time but I earnestly implore Your Excellency's Government to make the commissioner less autocratic and to make the corporation also richer and give a little touch so that the husband may be more beautiful and then I have no doubt the bride will accept him. Otherwise, the educated and intelligent bride, the educated corporation says: 'I do not want such a bridegroom.' How can you force a bridegroom when the bride does not want him? I am therefore in this unfortunate position. Unfortunately the corporation headed by Diwan Bahadur P. Theagaraya Chettiyar condemns the Bill and the Government are not prepared to modify it; when that is the case what is it that a mufassalite like myself can do? That is my position and therefore I reserve my vote to the end."

(Mr. Suryanarayana Rao; Mr. Krishna Rao.)

[12TH MARCH 1919.]

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. KRISHNA RAO:—"My Lord, I consider it extremely unfortunate that there should have been such a keen difference of opinion at this stage of the discussion of the Bill. This Bill has been before the Government, before the corporation and before the public from the year 1910; it was in the hands of a liberal-minded special officer appointed for the purpose; and there have been drafts prepared and considered from time to time between 1916 and 1919. Now at this stage of the discussion of the Bill, there have been found differences of opinion as to some of the main principles of the Bill as also some of the details of the Bill. So far as I have been able to gather, there is agreement between the Government Members who have supported the measure, made the motion and seconded it and the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar in dealing with the motion. It is frankly conceded on behalf of the Government that nothing like perfection can be claimed for this Bill and that if there are defects the existence of which cannot be denied, the defects can be remedied by appropriate amending legislation. On the other hand, it has been pointed out by the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar and the others that followed him that though this Bill contains some good points and is to some extent an improvement on the existing state of things, it does not meet the demands of the situation, it is far behind the times and therefore it cannot be accepted. I quite agree with the Hon'ble Mr. Yaqub Hasan when he said that though this Bill could have been considered acceptable if brought forward two or three years ago, in view of the future that is before us, in view of the wider outlook in the country, it is not possible to accept this measure as a substantial instalment of reform. That is the standpoint from which he addressed this Council and there is considerable force in the suggestions made by him. We have been looking at this measure as the out-growth of the labours of Your Excellency's Government from the year 1915, not in the light of the recent changes contemplated either in the recent resolution of the Government of India or in the Report on constitutional reforms. That is the chief reason for there having been a wide difference of opinion expressed in this Council on this point. We are now at a stage when it is conceded, even on behalf of the opponents of the Bill, that it is, to whatever extent, an improvement on the existing state of things. What is the best course for us to adopt? Are we now to vote for the rejection of the Bill in toto or are we to wait and take our chance to have appropriate amendments effected in this Bill to satisfy the demands of the people and the demands of the public? That is the standpoint from which we should look at this question. It cannot be denied for a moment that regarding one important question, there has been a change for the better; there has been a liberal extension of the franchise and there has been provision made for a truly popular representation of the people in the corporation. Provision has been made not for women alone, but for men also to a very large extent; and though the change in the case of the divisional commissioners is not as liberal as it might have been made, still there is provision for the election of three-fifths, taking the divisional commissioners alone, of the total strength of the corporation. So far as the question of the appointment of the commissioner is concerned, the main objection is not so much to the institution of that office, as to the powers given to him and the mode of appointment. Objection has been taken and quite properly and reasonably that the commissioner who is invested with wide powers ought not to be an officer appointed by the Governor in Council without the intervention of the corporation; but that he should be one nominated by the corporation, though his appointment is to be subject to confirmation by the Governor in Council. The amendment of the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar was very modest, modest and fully, when he suggested that there might be a panel chosen by the corporation, from which the Governor in Council might or might not choose. I think it is really a matter for consideration whether in the words contained in the resolution of the Government of India, the corporation cannot be given the right to nominate the commissioner and whether it is not possible even now to give the power to the corporation to nominate the commissioner, giving a discretion to the Governor in Council to confirm his appointment or not. If the Governor in Council does not accept that nomination, he may ask the corporation to re-consider the matter. The second point which has been placed before the Council is as to the powers of the commissioner. It will be remembered that the Bombay Act has been taken as a model for the purpose of framing this Act, though in view of the interval that has elapsed between the enactment of the Bombay Act and this Bill, we should have taken care to see that some more liberal provisions are inserted in the Act itself. That could have formed the basis of discussion; but that could not be adopted as a model for an Act framed in the year 1918. Amendments were moved to restrict the powers of the commissioner to the extent of Rs. 2,500 or Rs. 5,000 as in the Bombay Act, but they were not accepted. There is a serious misgiving in the minds of the members of the corporation and the even in excess of those possessed by the President under the former Municipal Act, under the present Act, or by the commissioner under the Bombay Act. That is a point in regard to which it is, I believe, possible to effect some improvement, as early as possible. The third point regarding which serious objection has been raised is as to the improvement of the resources of the corporation. These are the important points on which there is difference of opinion. It is no doubt to be noted with some satisfaction that the Hon'ble Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar has been able to inform the Council that there is a reasonable chance—I hope it will prove a certainty—that the corporation and other local bodies will get a substantial share of a growing item of revenue which will add to the finances of the corporation. I hope that the Government would move in that direction with all possible strength and earnestness and succeed in inducing the Government of India to give a more substantial share to them so that in their turn they may give a more substantial share to the local bodies. The Hon'ble the Advocate-General suggested in the course of the discussion that if there are questions of detail regarding which there were objections to be raised, the stage for their being raised was before the Select Committee began their deliberations. That was one of the remarks made. Following that remark, may I say that some alterations made in the Select Committee to improve the resources of the corporation have been taken away by the discussion in this Council? It will be remembered that the corporation inserted a provision for a duty on firewood which has been taken out in this Council; and it will be remembered that the exemption of the Port Trust was taken away by the Select Committee but subsequently it has been restricted and limited to 4 per cent of the gross earnings. So far as the question of finance is concerned, we have gone even behind the recommendations of the Select Committee and we are in a more unfavourable position with regard to that point. What creates further difficulties in respect of the motion now before the Council is that with these imperfections in the Bill, the corporation came to the unanimous conclusion that the Bill deserves to be rejected and that the Government may be requested to bring in another Bill for consideration. The resolution practically amounts to this: that they would go on working under the present Act of 1904 for some time longer before they are called upon to work under the present Bill which does not place them in a better position. That is the view taken by the corporation. With that statement on behalf of the corporation, the points for consideration of this Council is whether it is desirable or necessary to pass this Bill in this form when they are not content with the present Act and are not willing to work it on those terms. I feel considerable difficulty in coming to a conclusion as to the course to be adopted. While I feel that there are some good provisions in the Bill and that there are also defects which have to be remedied in course of time, while I believe that we have spent considerable time over it, and that we should do our best to improve it, are we justified in adopting this measure when the corporation for whose benefit it is intended, has considered it from all standpoints and has come to the deliberate conclusion that it would rather work under the existing Act than under the present Bill? That is the real question before us. Before I sit down, may I make a suggestion to Your Excellency's Government? Even now the points of difference if analysed, can be reduced under three main heads. Notwithstanding the time spent by this Council in dealing with this important measure I do not think anything is too late. In regard to a thing like the appointment of a commissioner—the question of the mere appointment of a commissioner is not objected to, but objection is taken to the mode of his appointment and to the powers to be given to him. Is it, I ask, too late, is it impossible to arrange for a small conference with some representatives of the corporation and adopt some amendments which will remedy some of these defects regarding the method of appointment and the powers of the commissioner? Similarly in regard to the financial powers also.

(Mr. Krishna Rao; Mr. Siva Rao.)

"The members of the corporation may be requested to make specific suggestions as to the defects that they find, in the light of the discussion that has taken place. If it is possible for the Government to meet those wishes even to a reasonable extent and in a liberal manner, it would produce satisfaction and it would produce more desirable results. If Your Excellency consents to a postponement for two years or for one year—I am not very particular about the period—it will be all right. What I am anxious about is to impress upon Your Excellency's Government, the desirability of even now considering whether any reasonable amendments either to improve the relations between the commissioner and the corporation or to improve the finances of the corporation can be settled in a private informal conference and then placed before the Council. My real difficulty is that the few good points that are in the Bill will not achieve much, if the defects in the Bill are such as to induce the corporation to say that they will reject the Bill. That is the real difficulty which some of us feel. I would only request Your Excellency's Government to consider whether it is not possible to remedy those defects and give satisfaction both to the people and to the corporation."

The Hon'ble Mr. P. SIVA RAO:—"Your Excellency, one way of judging of this Bill is to see whether the Bill taken as a whole is in consonance with the policy laid down by the distinguished authors of the report on constitutional reforms. Formula No. I, as stated by them at page 93 in their report, is this: 'There should be, as far as possible, complete popular control in local bodies and the largest possible independence for them of outside control.' I dare say they intended these remarks to apply to the city municipalities particularly. Your Excellency, I might be allowed to refer also to another passage which occurs at page 94 which runs thus: 'If our proposals for changes on the higher levels are to be a success, there must be no hesitation or faltering about changes in local bodies.' Now, we shall see whether this Bill as it has come out of the Select Committee and as it has recently emerged from the Legislative Council fulfils the requisites mentioned in the Montagu-Chelmsford report. In other words it comes to this whether complete popular control has been granted to the Madras Corporation and secondly whether the largest amount of possible independence including financial independence is also granted. These are the two tests to apply in a case like this; it is no good for the Honourable Member in charge to say that this is an improvement upon the Madras City Municipality Act of 1904. It is no good for him to say that in framing this Bill they have followed the Bombay Act which is itself old. We shall have to apply this principle whether it would satisfy this test, whether the general gist of the provisions of this Bill would have the desired effect contemplated by the distinguished authors of the report.

"Let us take for instance the composition of the corporation. The number has been raised to 50 and there are 30 divisional commissioners. I decline to take note of the institutional commissioners. I decline to consider them elected commissioners when we have to judge how far the rate-payers of the city have got control over the affairs of the city. Applying that test, it means that 30 out of 50 are elected by the people, by the tax-payers, which comes to three-fifths; and as was pointed out by some Honourable Members, we have already reached three-fourths even in mufassal municipalities and only one-fourth is left for nomination. I would seriously ask for the consideration of this Council whether this can be said to have popularised municipal administration—this three-fifths elected majority. It is justly claimed that the franchise has been broadened, that every tax-payer has been given a vote, but we have to proceed further and see how many of these councillors do the rate-payers elect. They elect only three-fifths of them. We have further to see what powers these chosen representatives of the people have got. Unless we scrutinize these two matters, we cannot delude ourselves into thinking that we have made municipal administration really popular. As regards the franchise to women, this is not the first time that the franchise has been conferred upon women. So far as mufassal municipalities are concerned, they enjoyed it once and they have been deprived of it for some time. Now it has been restored in the case of the city municipality. I do not think I can ever listen to anybody saying that this is an advance in the cause of local self-government. There is halting policy again. I wish that the Government, following the well-known principle that every eligible voter shall be an eligible candidate also, should have made women eligible candidates as well. Therein I say, I make bold to suggest that this Bill is halting. So far as regards the composition of the council.

(Mr. Siva Rao.)

"What about the control which the corporation has got over its own servants? Certainly it is time enough that a corporation like the city municipality should possess complete power of appointment and punishment over all its subordinates. Even the members of the Decentralization Commission contemplated that in the case of larger municipalities they should be given full control. I shall come to the commissioner. I do not place the commissioner in the same category but I am speaking of these servants, the engineer, the revenue officer and the health officer; is there any reason why their appointment should be subject to the veto of the Government? They are officers who get between Rs. 1,000 to Rs. 1,500. Cannot the corporation at this stage, in spite of the declaration of the policy of the Government of India and of the Secretary of State be trusted to appoint these three officers? Can they not be trusted with the power to remove them? The Bill as it is now framed says that they are not liable to be removed unless by an impossible majority. Their appointment is subjected to veto; if the Government veto the appointment, the corporation have to make another appointment within three months and if they do not make it within that time, it is open to the Government to appoint. I would not be pleased with any first instalment of reform in the matter of local self-government. It may be said that we should be satisfied with the progressive realization of responsible Government in other matters, but in regard to local self-government, what they advocated was that there should be complete autonomy, as much autonomy as possible in the immediate future.

"Now I shall come to the commissioner. He is not appointed by the corporation, but at this stage I do not say that he should be appointed by the corporation. What the Government of India have said in their latest declaration of policy on the 16th of May 1918 is this. In paragraph 8 they say: 'So long as the executive officer of a city is protected from the possible caprices of a board by provisions requiring that, though his nomination may be by the board, his appointment should be approved by Government and that he should not be removed without the sanction of the Government unless by the vote of a substantial majority of the board, it is not necessary to require that the executive officer should be a Government official.' In other words, they contemplated that there should be restrictions against the capricious exercise of the power of removal by the board by prescribing that there should be a certain majority for removal, but so far as the appointment went, the Government of India distinctly contemplated that the nomination should be made by the board, subject to the approval of Government, as they have provided in the case of the health officer, the revenue officer and some other officers. I would ask whether this policy that he should be nominated by the corporation subject to the approval of the Government has been carried into effect. I remember very well that the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar made a far milder proposal. I do not know why he did not go to the full length of the Government of India's policy; he was satisfied with framing a panel out of which the Government might select any body they liked. I was wondering why such a modest proposal was made by him; but even that was not accepted by the Government. So far as regards the constitution of this newly created body.

"Then as regards the powers, the Hon'ble Mr. A. S. Krishna Rao expressed a sort of surprise why the corporation should make up its mind to reject it though there are some improvements in the Bill or rather to work under the provisions of the old Act than under the new Bill. I may offer one solution for that. The old President was not given so very drastic powers as the commissioner has now been given under the Bill. He is given power to sanction estimates—I do not want to introduce the word 'estimates' which is a source of confusion—he has got the power to commit the corporation to an expenditure up to Rs. 10,000, the standing committee up to Rs. 50,000 and the council have got power to sanction expenditure if it exceeds Rs. 50,000. My position seems to be correct that he has got power to commit the council to an expenditure up to Rs. 10,000. In these matters, why should the commissioner who is not appointed by the corporation, who is not easily removable by the corporation be vested with these drastic powers? I wish to point out one dangerous provision in this Bill. If you compare

(Mr. Siva Rao; Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar;
Mr. M. Ramachandra Rao.)

section 5 of the old Act, it says that the whole direction of the policy, the whole municipal government should be vested in the corporation. But this Bill seems to lay down a new rule altogether. It says in section 23 for instance: 'Subject to the provisions of this Act, the municipal government of the city shall vest in the council but the council shall not be entitled to exercise functions expressly assigned by or under this Act or any other law to a standing committee or the commissioner.' Comparing this provision with the old Act, section 4 of the Act says: 'The municipal affairs of the city of Madras shall be administered in accordance with the provisions of this Act by a President who shall be ex officio a commissioner and by thirty-six other commissioners who shall be elected or appointed in the manner hereinafter provided.' There is no such reservation in the old Act and this makes me apprehend that in the matters arising within the purview of the commissioner or the standing committee, even the revisional powers of the council are taken away. For instance, in the case of estimates up to Rs. 10,000 the council has power of a general control or general revisional power; even that is taken away under section 23 of the present Bill. I submit it is a very dangerous provision. Looking to the whole Bill it reads as if there are four independent autonomous bodies, each independent of the other and very likely warring with each other. The principle should be that all the control, the superintendence, the suzerain power should be vested in the corporation; but section 23 beats it hollow. Even in executive matters, if the commissioner acts in one way, the corporation cannot say that he has acted wrongly.

"Coming to the resources, that is the weakest portion of this Bill. What is the use of creating this body without endowing it, without furnishing it or supplying it with the necessary resources to carry on its normal administration? How can any Bill be perfect? I do not say perfect—how can any Bill be satisfactory if the new body which it creates is not placed on a sound financial basis? The claim was made by the Honourable Member in charge that, as an effect of these proposals, the corporation would gain something like two to three lakhs."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"Four lakhs."

The Hon'ble Mr. P. SIVA RAO:—"I have the account given by Mr. Tyagaraya Chettiyar; he says that it gives Rs. 2,73,000."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"The Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar puts it even less."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO:—"He says it will be Rs. 94,000."

The Hon'ble Mr. P. SIVA RAO:—"Mr. Tyagaraya Chettiyar puts it at Rs. 2,73,000: I am not responsible for the figures."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"The figures I gave have been very carefully considered."

The Hon'ble Mr. P. SIVA RAO:—"I shall accept your figures, but that does not go a long way towards rejuvenating this defunct body. He has very clearly shown when he moved his resolution before the corporation, that this 2½ lakhs or 3 lakhs or 4 lakhs could not go much towards relieving its insolvent position. Proposal after proposal was brought forward to be simply rejected by the Government, I mean the financial proposals which went to augment the resources of this corporation, in some of which they said they had genuine difficulties because the Government of India would not agree. The Government of India could not take exception to octroi duty. But all these proposals were rejected with the result that the municipal corporation is where it was and there is absolutely no improvement in its financial position. Is the Bill making the corporation financially sound? As regards the excise revenue and the licence fees from liquor shops, that was moved very vehemently by the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar, hopes are given that there would be some financial adjustment in the relations between the Government of India and the Provincial Governments and then between the Provincial Government and the local bodies. If that is so, where is the hurry for rushing this legislation? What is the fun of asking this body to go on when it cannot go on and work it? Why should we not wait, why should not this Bill be taken up as part of the Reform Scheme? Why should we not wait until these relations are established? The Hon'ble Mr. Thonger observed: 'I should like to be an autocrat in my own business'. Nobody would object to his being an autocrat in his own business, but what would be his feeling if the Government said that he was incapable of managing his own business and imposed a commissioner over his head and if the Hon'ble Mr. Thonger had no power to control him or punish him or remove him; and if he should be put to the necessity of submitting to him, what would be his feeling? Let him be an autocrat by all means when he puts his own money into the business, but the question comes in when the rate-payers' money is collected and when the corporation money is about to be diverted, the question comes in whether there should not be something of popular control. I do not want to take up more time, I decide to vote against it for the reason that it is out of date, for the reason that it was framed in 1910. The Honourable Member in charge has given the history of this legislation which was framed in 1910 when there was only the Decentralization Commission Report before them. It was fashioned under old world ideas and I do not see any serious attempt made to re-cast the Bill in the light of the present policy laid down in the report of the distinguished authors or in the recent Government of India's despatch. I realize that it is an anachronism, it is out of date, it is antiquated and these are my reasons for voting against it, as there is no other alternative and as Government are not in favour of postponing it."

(Mr. Ramanuja Achariyar; Mr. Ranga Achariyar.)

[12TH MARCH 1919.]

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur V. K. RAMANUJA ACHARIYAR:—"I am sorry I have to differ from several of my non-official colleagues who have spoken on the subject. The Hon'ble Mr. Siva Rao has said that he is going to vote against the Bill. I want to say that I am going to vote for the Bill. I am not concerned with the question whether it is a good Bill or a bad Bill, but the question is whether I should reject it or accept it. The Bill was referred to the Select Committee of eleven members, only four of whom were Government officials. Seven were non-officials of whom five represented the corporation, and two were outside Madras. I must do justice to the Honourable Member in charge of the Bill that he left the Bill in our hands."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"I should like to know how the Honourable Member said that five represented the corporation."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur V. K. RAMANUJA ACHARIYAR:—"The Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar was there, the Hon'ble Mr. Yaqub Hasan, the Hon'ble Sir Gordon Fraser, the Hon'ble Mr. Thonger and the Hon'ble Mr. T. Richmond."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"The Hon'ble Mr. Thonger is not a member of the corporation."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur V. K. RAMANUJA ACHARIYAR:—"I am open to correction. The Honourable Member in charge left the Bill entirely in our hands. The Bill is not his work; it is our work, the work of non-officials, seven non-officials against four officials. If therefore this Bill is condemned, it is condemning the work of non-officials; it is not the work of Government. Government have been steadily standing up by the report of the Select Committee. Unfortunately they made one or two alterations which I have not accepted. If Honourable Members reject the Bill, they are rejecting the work not of Government, but the work of their own non-official colleagues. Whatever other Honourable Gentlemen might think, I do not think that the Bill is so bad that having brought it to this stage I should reject it. I think self-respect demands that I should vote for it and not only vote for it, but support it as strongly as possible. I will now refer to one or two objections raised. First, as regards the question of finance, the Honourable Member in charge has told us that this Bill would give us an increase of four lakhs immediately and if certain economies are made in the distribution of water, the council will have another four lakhs. They have no powers to economize water now. We have given them ample powers and if these economies are made, the council will have eight lakhs. If the Bill is rejected, we will be throwing away eight lakhs. I ask whether the council would be wise in rejecting the Bill and depriving the corporation of eight lakhs. I accept the figure of the Honourable Member in charge, because Government have got all the sources of information available and I am not prepared to accept the figure given by the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar or Diwan Bahadur P. Tyagaraya Chettiyar. I am glad the Honourable Member in charge has also promised to give the corporation and other local bodies a proportion of some growing item of revenue. I take it that when the time comes Government will keep their word and will come to our help. Even as it is, the council are not without their resources. They have got their property tax, but it is forgotten that house-rents are rising like anything. If assessments are revised once in five years as in the mufassal, a very large source of income will be available to the corporation. I am sorry to notice that there is no provision for a quinquennial revision. The matter escaped my notice, but this discussion has brought it into my mind and if the Bill is amended, that will be one of the objects, one of the purposes which should be provided for, for revising the assessment once in five years."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"The Honourable Member forgets that the commissioner can annually revise."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur V. K. RAMANUJA ACHARIYAR:—"In the mufassal it is not so. It is only when a house is reconstructed that assessment can be revised. I would not give the power to the commissioner to revise it annually. We in the mufassal pay 50 per cent of our net income as land revenue. Here gentlemen in Madras require all the conveniences, but they are not prepared to pay more than 20 per cent. I ask if it is just to the people in the rural areas. We want money for hospitals, for drainage, for water-supply. Where is the money to come from? Is it from the money wrung from the poor toilers? I say it is not fair. If people want the conveniences at Madras they should be prepared to pay for it and they should raise their property tax until it gives them sufficient money. The complaint that the Bill gives no resources is based upon a misconception. So much mention is made of the opposition of the corporation. It was suggested to the corporation in the Bill prepared in 1916 that they would be given the power to levy a surcharge on income-tax and this would have given them seven or eight lakhs of rupees and they were also given the option of levying the unearned increment deferred to their wishes. They should have insisted upon this provision being put in. If that had been done, we should not now have the spectacle of one member after another pampered year after year by annual doles and as there is a possibility of these doles being discontinued, the unwillingness of the house-owners to pay higher property tax is the basis of this opposition."

[12TH MARCH 1919.]

(Mr. Ramanuja Achariyar; Dr. Nayar.)

"A great deal has been said that the commissioner is not nominated by the council. The Bill provided for the appointment of the commissioner by Government and not one member representing the corporation in the Select Committee proposed that the commissioner should be nominated by the corporation. If that question has been placed before us, we should have accepted it."

"The Hon'ble Mr. Siva Rao pointed out that the provision for removing a commissioner by a two-thirds majority is an impossible provision. At the same time he read passages from the Montagu-Chelmsford report referring to the danger of the commissioner being removed by small majorities of the corporation. If you find it difficult to remove him by a two-thirds majority, you will find it difficult to prevent the removal by small majorities. In every municipality there will be surely undesirable combinations and they would fight against the chairman and he would have to go out. That is why we put in the two-thirds majority. In the Select Committee no one ever questioned the wisdom of the two-thirds majority."

"Whether the commissioner is appointed by the corporation or by the Government, he remains a servant of the corporation and the Bill gives them complete power. Reference has been made by the Hon'ble Mr. Siva Rao to the establishment under the commissioner. He has been the chairman of a municipal council and I would ask him whether he would like all his clerks and the secretary being appointed by his council. My experience has been the other way. Directly you give the council a voice, people go about and canvass votes and all sorts of undesirable people will be put in and the administration will become impossible. In every place, the man who executes the work should have the power of making appointments. The Bill has been rather lenient to the corporation in allowing them to make appointments of persons drawing over Rs. 500. Consistently we should have said that all appointments should be made by the commissioner. What I say is not imaginary. I can give you one instance. There was a defalcation by a bill-collector at Kumbakonam, the money was recovered from him and the secretary dismissed him. I proposed to prosecute him. Then the man and his father went to the councillors and they all combined and said 'let us not prosecute him'. This is what would happen if any power is given to the corporation over the establishment. That will be the result. Then as regards the assessment of tax, we had complaints that this house or that house has been over-assessed and appeals have come to us. Fortunately my experience is that my council accepted my valuation, but it may often happen that the majority of the council may combine and reduce the assessment. The Bill gives the final appeal to the Small Cause Court and we cannot object to it. Then as regards expenditure, there seems to be a good deal of misapprehension. The Bill gives full power to the council to frame its budget. Unless the council say that so much money is available for retelling a particular road, the commissioner cannot give any contract. He cannot sanction any estimate unless the funds for it are provided by the corporation. The corporation has therefore full power. I think it is a misapprehension to say that the corporation cannot control the expenditure. As regards all other matters, the power is given in all routine matters to the commissioner. In all other matters he will be directed by the standing committee or the corporation. One of my Honourable Friends said that these limitations are illusory. I may say that they are not illusory. I have gone over the Bill clause by clause and in my experience as municipal chairman I find they are substantially good limitations. Who is to be believed? The only thing is, to leave it to experience to find out whether these limitations are illusory or whether they are good limitations."

"I have no hesitation in giving my vote for this Bill. The Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar has frightened me by saying that he would be a bold man who would stand by the Bill. As unfortunately I am forced by my convictions to stand by the Bill, I may be said to be a bold man and I would leave it to future years whether I have been reasonable in accepting it and whether I would not have been foolish in rejecting it."

The Hon'ble Dr. T. M. NAYAR:—"My Lord, I have been told that I have been brought into this Council as an expert. Because I had not the presence of mind to deny that charge in the beginning, I am now forced to play the part of an expert which I find exceedingly difficult especially in the presence of Your Lordship whose immediate knowledge of local self-government institutions in Scotland makes Your Lordship one of the greatest living authorities in this country. But to a certain extent that is an advantage because for once in my lifetime I have the chance of talking about local self-government to some big official who understands it."

"The only claim that I have for speaking about municipal bodies in this country is that I gave some of the best years of my life to the service of the Madras corporation. During most of that time, I tried my best and significantly failed to act the part of a municipal reformer. From almost the very day that I joined the corporation, I have tried my best in season and out of season to advocate reform of municipal bodies in this country, because the defects of municipal bodies as they then existed and as they now exist are quite obvious. Your Lordship knows that municipal bodies are created to perform certain work and, in constituting them, you have not only to consider the electorate which is to elect them, but you have to consider the constitution, the peculiar mechanism of their working and you will have to define the exact duties for them to do; and what is more, you will have to give them substantial resources to carry on those duties. I have noticed that in all attempts at municipal reform in this country, the portion with regard to the resources of municipal bodies and the assigning of definite duties are carefully left out. Reform in this country is almost synonymous with the settlement of the franchise and the settlement of the constitution of the council. I have seen one or two attempts at municipal reform in this country. They rearrange the constitution and the whole question during that time is, how many should be elected and how many should be nominated and where does the Government come in, where does the Collector come in—these are the only sorts of questions discussed. I admit they are very important questions that must be settled in order to have good municipal bodies, but they do not carry you the whole way. In the earlier stages they are almost the only important things, but we have been going on for 35 years and I was expecting and hoping that some day or other they would tackle the real question of the resources of municipal bodies. I should have expected after the municipal bodies have been working for some years that the Government could have directed their attention to establish once for all the resources of municipalities to see what are the sources from which they could raise their tax and if there was not enough to be had from taxation, as to what help the Government were going to give—not the sort of help which we are now giving by uncertain periodical doles indefinite in quantity. That is not the sort of help that I meant. I thought they would have settled once for all the incidence of Provincial and Imperial expenditure and municipal expenditure, as to what share was to come from Imperial resources and what share from municipal resources. They should have settled once for all, the incidence of expenditure and also the definite income of municipalities. This is necessary in order to permit municipal bodies to think out and work definite programmes of progressive works and also to develop a sense of responsibility. It is not too much to say that no municipal body in this Presidency—I will now confine myself to this Presidency—knows exactly what its income is in a particular year. By income I include the grants from Government which they have a right to expect. But no municipality knows beforehand what that sum is to be, much less what that sum is to be next year or the year after next. Unless municipal bodies are in a position to know what their income is and what it will be for a number of years, it is absolutely impossible for them to work out a settled plan of improvement. That is the position of municipal bodies in this country. It handicaps them in preventing them from undertaking those works. It also prevents them from developing a sense of responsibility. It was since we began to agitate for municipal reforms that the Decentralization Commission sent in their report. I have in my time quoted a good deal from the Decentralization Commission's report and it almost sounds to me to quote from some pre-historic document. Government have been promising that they would reform municipal bodies in the light of the recommendations of the Decentralization Commission, but the very same Government which have been procrastinating legislation on this matter on the report of the Decentralization Commission have now had to realize the rate at which things progress in India. The Decentralization Commission report and the Minto-Morley Reform Scheme came almost in the same year. The Decentralization report came out in 1908 and the Minto-Morley reforms came towards the end of 1909; and now in 1918 the Secretary of State and the Viceroy say that political reforms are overdue, that the Minto-Morley reforms are obsolete and do not suit the conditions. But still the Government are waiting to legislate on a report which came out some years ago. When things are advancing so rapidly, it is unsafe to delay action on reports on which you have any idea of legislating. If you want to throw it entirely overboard, that is quite a different matter; but if you contemplate basing legislation on that report, it is dangerous to wait. Already here you are with neck pace. Government are taking so many proposals of the Decentralization Commission while almost simultaneously the reforms which came at about that time are about to be uprooted. My Lord, the idea of a commission being the executive head came from the Decentralization Commission. It was suggested by the Decentralization Commission that Madras and Calcutta could well copy the example of Bombay. They had not any very substantial reasons for recommending it. I remember one passage in the report of that Commission which said that the commissioner would be an efficient head of the executive while in the place of the President, a non-official commissioner would be provided with a dignified position. That was one of the attractions which the Decentralization Commission offered for the adoption of the Bombay model, that it would provide a dignified position for a non-official commissioner of the corporation. My Lord, such considerations have always to be considered and Government in legislating have to see that dignified positions are provided and a certain number of non-officials are placated for it. But if at the present time there is no body who wants this dignified position, is there any object in forcing it down their throats? If you can find some respectable non-official commissioner of the corporation who is anxious to secure this dignified position under this new Act, there will be some justification for Government putting it in; because I believe that is one acknowledged policy of the Government to placate as many as possible and quite reasonably. But apart from that, I consider it is a matter of detail. If you want a commissioner have him; there will be little fight it out. I heard the Honourable Member in charge this morning saying that the system of commissioner was inaugurated in Bombay at the suggestion of the late Sir Pherozshah Mehta. Perhaps it was. Some years afterwards, when I went on a visit to Bombay, I went and visited the Bombay corporation at the invitation of Mr. Mehta and I remained for two hours there and the whole of the two hours was spent in a very acrimonious discussion as to whether the commissioner had not exceeded his powers in certain respects and whether he had not insulted the corporation or whether the corporation had not insulted him—I could not exactly follow—but for two hours, this was the debate going on led by Mr. Mehta. I left it at 5 o'clock and he asked me the next day 'what do you think of our corporation?' I told him 'it is remarkable, I quite enjoyed the two hours.' It is a great deal more likely than our corporation.

(Dr. Nayar.)

Get a commissioner and your corporation will be like that. I hope that with this Bill the Madras Corporation will at least have this advantage that it will be a livelier place. My main objection to the Bill is that while it goes a great deal in detail into the constitution and franchise and other things, there are other important considerations that I suggested, namely, providing definite sources of revenue to the corporation which have not been considered. For my purpose it is not necessary to go into the actual financial figures. There has been a good deal of talk this afternoon, but a careful analysis of these figures will take you to the conclusion that in two or three years when you have to carry other works your income will not meet the expenditure. In Madras you want considerable extra sources of revenue. In my earlier days of enthusiasm for municipal reform, I think, my Lord, I may claim, that I first struck on the possibility of the municipality having a share in unearned increment on land. I carried on the work as a missionary on behalf of unearned increment and I did get a good many converts and the last that I saw of this Madras City Municipal Bill before I left for England was a Bill in which there was some provision for unearned increment being shared by the municipality. It was to my heart's content; but now when I returned from England I was told that it disappeared and I did not know till now how that disappeared. I heard that the corporation had struck out the provision and the Government accepted it. When you are satisfied that it is a reasonable source of income for the municipality, why should the Government agree to the corporation striking it out? It ought to have been imposed on the corporation as a duty to find out a substitute for it. Government should have asked the corporation to say what the other sources of income in future would be if they cut this out. 'If you point out other sources of income, we will incorporate it and pass the Bill into law,' that is what the Government should have said. So long as the corporation showed no alternative source of income, Government should not have accepted it. The compromise between the corporation and the Government comes to this: the corporation says 'we do not want this source of income' and the Government, have nothing to substitute and they say 'we will give the corporation no source of income.' That is a wrong principle. You are creating a municipal body which is to carry on its work on a hand-to-mouth existence and which would learn very bad habits indeed. They frame budgets, they embark upon schemes knowing full well that they can never pay for the schemes, all the time feeling that the Government will come to their rescue. They send representatives here. For two or three years I acted as their representative, an official beggar on behalf of the Madras Corporation, to beg and move resolutions, to try and get as much money as possible to the corporation. It is a degrading position. You not only do not develop the sense of responsibility, you train people in the very worst form of local self government. It is that I dread more than anything else and that is the reason why I say do not perpetuate that system by giving them a new constitution and a new Bill; they will go with the idea that they are a grander body than before, they would think 'we are not the old Madras Corporation.' The new corporation with the commissioner still begging, still not being able to pay for their works—is a very degrading position. Whatever it may be, it does not advance local self-government in this country. The whole question is: is this reform undertaken with the idea of carrying local self-government a step further in this country or is it not? If it is intended with that object, this Bill fails effectively; but if it is only a sort of periodical tinkering, then by all means go on with it and I do not object to it. I quite appreciate the extraordinary amount of industry and the careful study bestowed upon it by the Honourable Member in charge and the Hon'ble the Advocate-General and others who happened to be connected with it. I quite appreciate it, but is it not all thrown away when you enact a measure which reproduces all the bad principles of the old Act? Is that not all thrown away? As a matter of fact, you have only to wait until such time as you can get a satisfactory Bill. How many sections will you have to amend, perhaps about 20 out of 400. Now, my Lord, this Bill was introduced in this Council in this form in August last and at that time, the Government must have had before them the resolution of the Government of India and also the report of the Viceroy and the Secretary of State in which they said that the further development of local self-government must be left to autonomous provinces. It is not the reformed councils; reformed councils may come or may not come; but autonomous provinces are bound to come. They said that the further development should be left to autonomous provinces. That was published in July and in August we introduced this Bill; that is what I cannot understand. Why did you do that? There is no object whatever. If the report had been framed by responsible authorities, reforms in the wake of that must be a question of a very short time indeed. Sooner or later it must come and the Madras Government knew all these years that the only thing that stood in their way was the present absurd financial arrangement. Your system of Provincial contracts and the system of centralized finance was the only thing that was standing in the way of the Madras Government all this time. Probably you knew earlier and the public knew in July that that system was to come to an end. Would it not be reasonable to say 'we will wait'. It cannot be quite so long as we had to wait in the past; it may be one or two years at the most. When we get the powers, we will get a really good Bill and start them on the way to local self-government. The Honourable Member in charge asks 'why don't you accept the Bill and get it amended from time to time?' I have got some experience of that. My Lord, ever since I have been in the corporation, we have been sending to the Madras Government representations for the amendment of certain sections which we found unworkable. I do not know on how many occasions such representations were sent. They are innumerable and the reply comes 'the corporation's representations will be noted and will be taken up when the Act is next amended'. That will be the course adopted. If this Bill is now accepted, and you attempt to amend

(Dr. Nayar; Mr. M. Ramachandra Rao.)

it when the new Council comes into existence, that will be the very reply even then. It is alright if the new Council is to be with the Hon'ble Mr. Narasimha Ayyar as Prime Minister, it will take up the amendment on hand. But we are uncertain still as to what is to be the new constitution. We have to go a little slowly. Supposing we have only a modified form of the present Council, it will be rather difficult for a private member to get a Bill in and get it passed. If these dreams become true, then it will be alright. But while we do it, we may make it certain that the new Council will go through it and pay attention to this matter and that is by not legislating now. The Honourable Member in charge said that this Bill has been going on since 1910 and we must get it passed into law now. A Bill that has been going on since 1910 might very well go on till 1920. It has got used to it. This very amendment has gone backwards and forwards and has been used to it. It got a bit cut off here and a bit out off there. I do not think there should be any talk of rejecting the Bill, I myself would not be a party to reject it; but I think Government may hold it up. If Your Excellency delays giving sanction or if the Viceroy delays giving sanction, it may be brought up at another time. No one likes a Bill on which they have worked so long to be rejected. I myself would not be a party to it. But for the postponement of the consideration of it, I should be agreeable for the reasons that I have already given.

"My Lord, another point which has always to be considered in connexion with legislation in India is how many people will be placated in India, what good, substantial good will it give. As far as I have been able to find out, this will satisfy nobody. From the placative point of view, the Bill will be an absolute failure; from the substantial point of view of reforming local self-government it does not carry you far. Therefore I hope that the Government would not object to a short postponement—it need not necessarily be two years. Things may happen before that, but at the most let it be two years, so that the thing might be done in a sound and satisfactory manner."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO:—"My Lord, I have had considerable hesitation in making up my mind in regard to this motion. The reasons are obvious. We are legislating in regard to this Bill in view of the reforms and in anticipation of what is coming. The disappointment of several of my Honourable Friends is all the keener, because we do not find in the Bill the advance in regard to self-government, for which we had hoped for a long time. Speaking for myself, I have contended for years that the present system of finance in regard to local bodies is so defective that unless it is put on some basis analogous to that prevailing in the United Kingdom and in other western countries it is impossible to put it on a satisfactory basis. It was in that view in August last when this Bill came up for consideration, I was one of those who advocated that the consideration of this Bill should be put off pending the question of constitutional reform. At that time, our main reasons were that there are legislative restrictions imposed upon Provincial Governments and there are financial restrictions also imposed upon Provincial Governments which are likely to be removed. In regard to legislative restrictions, I need hardly remind Honourable Members that by an executive order, Your Excellency's Government have to submit to Government of India Legislative Bills not only before introduction, but at every important stage when every important variation is made and the authors on constitutional reform have indicated sufficiently in their report that all these legislative restrictions would be withdrawn and in paragraph 212 of the report they said that within the sphere allotted to the Provincial Governments, the Legislative power of the Councils should be supreme. Assuming, my Lord, that Your Excellency's Government were legislating on this Bill, it will be seen at once that the necessity of submitting every draft, or every important amendment to the Government of India for previous sanction would not be necessary and probably Your Excellency's Government would have been in a far better position in considering this draft if these legislative restrictions had been removed. Similarly in regard to financial restrictions, I then pointed out that excise revenue was one of those items of finance which may be allocated to the provinces and that Your Excellency's Government would be in a better position to give the fixed proportion either to the Madras Corporation or to other local bodies. On these two grounds, it was then suggested to Your Excellency's Government that, if this question of local self-government is to be finally disposed of, this Bill should be finally considered after the reforms had been given effect to. It was unfortunate that Your Excellency's Government did not see your way to comply with our request, and here we are to-day in this position. All my non-official colleagues, the representatives of the corporation and every one who has to deal with this Bill complain that this Bill has not given that satisfaction which it ought to, mainly for the reasons that the financial resources have not been improved in the way desired and also mainly because the constitution has not been settled, perhaps, more in consonance with the wishes of the corporation. I have referred to the subject of Local Finance more than once in committee appointed by Parliament and Honourable Members will see that local bodies in England are financed not merely by local rates, but by certain defined assigned revenues of which local bodies get three million pounds; there is another head—the probate duty, half of which is allocated to local bodies and distributed to them; then again there is the beer and spirit duty which corresponds to the licence duties, greatly discussed in this Council from which they derive over £3,000,000 making thus a total of about £7,000,000. This is in addition to the local rates. There are also other subventions. What my Honourable Friends have already indicated, namely, national services and also for local services—it is in these two ways by automatic adjustment of certain Imperial resources and also by compensating local bodies for taking up certain services known as national services, that local bodies are financed in the United Kingdom. What is the state of things in this country? We have mainly to rely upon our own local taxation and perchance on any doles which Your Excellency's Government or the Government of India may be prepared for the moment to give. It is this aspect which was in my mind ever since and when I was a party to that motion for adjournment, I was expecting that this great advance in local self-government which has been foreshadowed in this report on constitutional reforms would be preceded or accompanied by a change in the system of financing these bodies. It is this which causes the greatest amount of disappointment to all my Honourable Colleagues interested in municipalities, not only in the Madras Corporation, but in local bodies. I am at one with the Hon'ble Friend Dr. Nayar that if this great change in responsible Government is to be at all of any good, it must be accompanied by satisfactory financial resources. My Lord, it is perfectly true, as has been pointed out, that every resolution of the Government of India,—the resolution of 1915 and the resolution of 1918—makes absolutely no mention of the question of financing local bodies anywhere. Whenever we talk of local self-government, whenever the Government of India have referred to it in their resolutions, there is not a word on the question of local taxation. The question has been agitated in the Imperial Council more than once. The late Mr. Gokhale brought forward a resolution on this subject in the Imperial Council and the whole question has been gone into and it cannot be that the Government of India were unaware of the necessities of local bodies. Therefore, my Lord, I am very sorry that this opportunity has been missed and if I make up my mind after hearing the Hon'ble Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar in reply to vote against this motion, it would be mainly on the ground that attention should be drawn to this aspect of the matter in order to force the hands of the Government of India to come to a decision on this matter. What has been suggested by my Hon'ble Friend Dr. Nayar is eminently sound and practical. If this Bill is held up and not rejected, it will certainly force the hands of the Government of India to come to some agreement on this question of local taxation. The Hon'ble Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar made some kind of vague promise that the question was under consideration and it is quite likely that some head of Imperial resources would be set apart for local bodies and we are not quite sure what is in the air. I must therefore say that whatever may be the improvement in the constitution and in the franchise, the question of local self-government will not advance in this country unless financial resources are placed on a better footing.

(Mr. M. Ramachandra Rao; Mr. Ranga Achariyar.)

"Then there are two or three other matters to which I would invite the attention of Honourable Members. That is the point which has been raised by the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar. Independently of the question of having separate resources, the question does not seem to be quite clear even under the existing Bill whether the corporation would be very much better than it is. Here is the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar who tells us that the improvement would be to the extent of about Rs. 90,000 and the Hon'ble Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar says, it would be four lakhs."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"The figures were supplied to me by the corporation."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO:—"I would be obliged if the Hon'ble Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar would clear up this discrepancy in the figures, between his figures and my Honourable Friend's figures. If after all, with this Bill and the scheme of taxation which has been devised in this Bill, the corporation is to have only Rs. 90,000, I should say that we have not at all advanced any further in solving the question of financial resources of the Madras Corporation. Therefore, my Lord, the whole question hinges upon financial resources. I am quite willing to recognize that under this Bill the constitution has been very much bettered than under the old Bill, the franchise has been extended, the number of elected commissioners has been extended and the whole frame-work of the Bill has undergone very careful consideration. There are, I recognize, serious differences between the non-official members of the Council as regards what would be the appropriate powers of the commissioner and the standing committee. On that matter I am at one with several Honourable Members who think that the powers of the commissioner should be restricted to Rs. 5,000 and the powers of the standing committee could have been similarly reduced. I felt at the time of the discussion that the financial responsibility of the corporation has been rather unduly shifted both to the standing committee and to the commissioner in such a way that the financial responsibility is not quite apparent. I am quite aware that budget restrictions have been removed and that the control of the Government has been minimised except that you still have the power of appointing the chief executive officer of the corporation. I am not quite sure what my Hon'ble Friend Dr. Nayar has meant by saying that the system of commissioner is an antiquated one. It is true that its origin is to be found in the report of the Decentralization Commission, but in all municipalities the chief executive officer is a permanent official, whether you call him town-clerk or commissioner or secretary. One well-paid officer should remain permanent and the question was whether the council should appoint him or whether he should be a nominee of the Government. I am not quite clear as to whether the corporation could do away with the commissioner. The question is whether he should be appointed by the corporation or by the Government. There is a clear recommendation in the resolution of the Government of India that the corporation should be consulted in the matter of the appointment of the commissioner either by the panel system or in some other manner. As it is, I cannot help feeling that it is quite conceivable that the Local Government may force an officer on the corporation who may not be to their liking. Under these circumstances, the two directions in which this Bill might have been improved are in regard to the appointment of the commissioner and the respective powers of the commissioner and the standing committee. As regards the various methods of taxation suggested from time to time, Honourable Members would have noticed that there was a proposal to impose a duty on unearned increment. It is a matter for regret that the corporation has not seen its way to accept it. Then again there was a question of the surcharge on income-tax. However much in these respects the powers of the corporation on taxation may have been improved, I still believe that unless the system is so altered as to place automatically into the coffers of the corporation a certain amount of money from Imperial sources, I do not think that this question of the corporation finance or even the finance of local bodies will be satisfactorily solved. Here we have the corporation for whose benefit this Act is intended and which has to work it—my honourable friend points out that it is not to the benefit of the corporation, but it is to the benefit of the rate-payers of Madras—but the persons who are to work it are the members of the Madras Corporation and the commissioner; we have a resolution by that body saying that they do not want this Bill. I am sorry that this change in the affairs, the great change in the Madras Corporation should be initiated with such a frame of mind. I regret that no attempt has been made to reconcile the corporation to this Bill either by any negotiations for further amendments or in any other manner which might have been acceptable both to the corporation and the Government. I myself am not quite clear as to what it is that the corporation do want; they have adopted a resolution in general terms which said that this Bill did not meet with their wishes in regard to the realization of responsible Government. The directions in which they wanted improvement have not been indicated and I still believe that it would be to the great advantage of the people of Madras if the corporation could be started on this great change in their affairs, the change in their constitution, the change in the realization of responsible Government in some way which would reconcile them to this Bill. As a member of another local body and as one who has taken a great deal of interest in the progress of local self-government in this Presidency I deplore that we are starting this great experiment under these depressing circumstances. It is this aspect of it, my Lord, that has made me hesitate very much in regard to this Bill. As I have already said, I see many merits in it both in regard to the constitution of it and in regard to the financial resources and the general arrangement of the provisions with regard to public health and various other provisions; but how are we to make it acceptable to the corporation? I do not say that it is incumbent upon Your Excellency's Government to take all possible steps, but I think it is a matter in which both the corporation and Your Excellency's Government ought to see their way to place this Bill on the statute book in such a manner as to leave them in a comfortable state of mind. It seems to me that that is the aspect of the matter which has to be considered even at this stage; what could be done is a matter on which I am not quite clear. Probably my Honourable Friend Mr. Ranga Achariyar is not quite clear on the matter. I do not know what his views are. I shall wait for the Hon'ble Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar's reply in answer to the various criticisms that have been made in regard to this. I do not think he will be able to satisfy us in any manner whatever in regard to the financial resources. Government have had ample notice of our desires, in August last when we wanted this great change to be made not under the old conditions of finance, but under improved conditions of having at least one Imperial source of revenue set apart at the disposal of local bodies. In regard to that matter, we are no further than we were. Your Excellency assured us at the last meeting of the Council that a representation would be made to the Government of India. If something could be done to start it with better financial resources and with a better frame of mind on the part of the corporation, I think it will be better. It would certainly be a waste of legislative effort after all this is done to put off this measure altogether, but if a via media could be found I am perfectly certain that most of my Honourable Friends would be delighted to see this on the Statute book."

(Mr. M. Ramachandra Rao ; Mr. Molony.)

The Hon'ble Mr. J. C. Molony :— "I only wish to supply a few facts from my knowledge of the corporation. Possibly they may give a more cheerful tone to the debate: When the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar proposed the total rejection of the Bill and the Hon'ble Mr. Venkatapati Raju seconded it, I thought the tone rather tragic. With all these lamentations, I cannot find any definite reason why the Bill is so bad. If I may venture to say so, the Hon'ble the Advocate-General gave definite reasons for accepting it, and in the speeches against the Bill, there was very little definite said and the little that was definite I propose to examine in the light of facts within my knowledge. As regards the people who will elect, the objections was that whereas 11,000 voters elect 20 commissioners, 46,000 voters will only elect 30 divisional commissioners. A question like this cannot be decided merely on arithmetical proportion. If this were given effect to, there should be 80 representatives on the corporation. Another point is this: I cannot see why several Honourable Members suppose that the interests of the institutional commissioners and the nominated commissioners are diametrically opposed to those of the representatives of the people. The institutional commissioners come from business institutions which have their being and can only live in the town, who are interested in the welfare of the town, and I cannot see what grounds there may be for supposing that their interests are opposed to the interests of the representatives of the general tax-payer.

(Mr. Molony.)

With regard to the president, there may be some objections that the president's powers in detail are not great. The president now must be a whole-time officer and he at present exercises somewhat heterogeneous function of presiding over the corporation meetings. Either you must have this, or you must have a non-official president, presumably and perhaps certainly an honorary one. I submit that, if the detailed work of the corporation is to be placed on the shoulders of an honorary president, that is too much. The corporation work is not all done in the few meetings of the standing committee or in the monthly meetings of the corporation. It is on the whole a fairly laborious business. I can quote instances in support of what I say. A member of the corporation who condemned the Bill very strongly found fault with my arrangements in a certain matter in the corporation and perhaps very rightly. He seemed to be of opinion that it might be better done. He asked me for full information which I got him and sent to him in a box. I got the box back and he said 'I am a busy man, how can I read all this.'

"As regards the commissioner, the first point made against him is that he is the nominee of the Government. I venture to point out that the demand that he should not be, is a plant of extraordinarily recent growth. When the Bill was first discussed in the corporation, there was a considerable volume of opinion against the proposal of Government to give the corporation the right of appointing their own chief officers, the health officer, the engineer and the revenue officer. Things have changed; I am not speaking exactly as an official for the moment. If the corporation in course of time find they get on alright under this new system, I cannot see why they should not press for a commissioner of their own who need not be a Government servant. But I submit as I told the corporation, there is a homely American proverb that it is very much easier to get a fish hook in than to get it out. If you start with a commissioner appointed by yourself, you may find that it is very much easier to get him in than to get him out. The commissioner who is a Government official can be easily got rid of. He may be got rid of if he and his elected commissioners cannot agree. As to the great powers of the commissioner, I am sorry to say that all that it comes to is this: that the commissioner has the power of dealing directly with the contractors. I would ask my fellow commissioners: is this the be-all and the end-all; is the best privilege of councillors to come into contact with contractors? There are many present commissioners who have spoken to me of the intolerable nuisance caused to them individually by the present practice which is that when we have an important contract, they are pestered with circulars and with contractors sitting on their doors and worrying them. It is not dignified. Is it not better to put all this in the hands of the chief officer? When the corporation has decided a certain thing and whether it is to be done by a contract or otherwise, surely it is better to put it into the hands of its chief agent. As regards finance, I wish to correct the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar's figures, though as he said I gave them to him myself. I must make a certain reservation. If you suppose that the present income from house property is to be reduced by 10 per cent, then he is certainly right. But it has been recognized all these years that a certain amount of rent is allowed to a man for his repairs. Suppose a man gets Rs. 27 rent per month. We say that he must have something for his repairs and so, instead of assessing him on the actual sum, the custom has been to allow him one month's rent and assess him on Rs. 24-8-0. If, with the coming of this new Act, every tax-payer presses for a reduction on the entered value of houses in the old registers of the corporation, the corporation will undoubtedly have to raise the rate of house-tax. But it will not, as the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar quaintly says, place an extra burden on the goose. The tax-payer must be willing to pay what he could pay without undue discomfort. If the immediate putting into working of this reduction is insisted upon, it will have to be balanced by the increased rate of house-tax. But it will make the house-tax-payer no worse off than he is at present and it will restore equilibrium to the finances of the corporation. That is all I would say about it. On the more general point, I would submit that this Bill cannot be regarded altogether from the point of view of the house-tax-payer. No one wants to tax him unfairly but the Government of the city cannot be framed on the basis that the house-tax-payer should never, under any circumstances, pay more than he does at present. As regards municipal economy, there is one point on which I disagree with the Hon'ble Doctor Nayar. He spoke of doles, I do not know what he means by doles; it is often said that the money that the corporation receives for special works, drainage works, are doles. Speaking as president of the corporation, I dispute that. I say that this large undertaking was entered into with the sanction of the Government and it must have been with the knowledge that the carrying out of such a big work was outside the financial powers of the corporation. Undoubtedly the matter was entered into as a business arrangement and Government must have known that they should have to contribute to the municipality up to a certain limit and they have done so.

"The Hon'ble Dr. Nayar has also mentioned that this Bill reproduces all the bad principles of the old Act. Unfortunately he did not specify them but he said that in his time which I well remember, and also long before I came, the Corporation frequently sent up proposals to amend unworkable sections and the reply of the Government was that these would be attended to when the Act was amended. Is not that amendment being carried out now? If this Bill is put off, it simply means that you wish the Government to keep the municipality tied down by an Act which the municipality has often felt to be defective and which the Government have expressed their willingness to amend. I think that is all I need add. I have merely endeavoured to put in a few facts from what I know of the detailed working of the municipality. may leave the handling of the general points to the Honourable Member in charge."

(Mr. Rama Ayyangar.)

[12TH MARCH 1919.]

The Hon'ble Mr. K. RAMA AYYANGAR:—"Your Excellency, when the report of the Select Committee and the Bill reached me, I went carefully through the sections and the impression created in my mind was that we were working only in the old groove. I sent up my amendments in which I included sections 23, 73 and 80 and amendments to many other sections also. I have no doubt that the members of the Select Committee of whom we have had two mutassal municipal chairmen, the Hon'ble the Advocate-General, the Honourable Member in charge, the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar, the Hon'ble Mr. Yaqub Hasan and others, I had no doubt that the Select Committee considered everything as carefully as they could and I have no doubt, as was pointed out by the Hon'ble Mr. Ramanuja Achariyar that they were left as much as possible to have their way and get their points discussed. But the real point which arose and which I thought has not been considered, was that they were proceeding on a draft which had been made many years before. I thought that all that had been put into the draft Bill was taken as the standard and I have no doubt they carefully discussed and tried to add to the powers of the corporation as much as they could, that they were bona fide in their endeavours and that they tried to do whatever was possible and whatever they thought they could. I do not object to that. But I quote the Hon'ble Mr. Ramanuja Achariyar against himself for him to come to the conclusion that it does not satisfy most of us, the public and the non-official members here. That quotation is this. In a previous meeting he said that he was himself running in a particular groove while he was a Government servant and even after some time after he joined this Council, he continued to run in the same groove. But after he was able to dissociate himself from that groove, he was able to see all points more clearly and the interests of the masses looked to him so important as to change his views and differ from the Government very often. I should quote it here for this reason. I have not the slightest doubt that he and the Hon'ble Mr. Subbarayalu Reddiyar who have been on the Committee sifted every question very carefully; but I dare say they remembered their budget of the municipal councils which used to be corrected by the Secretariat and sent back for adoption, for otherwise it would not be passed. Probably that was most in their minds at the time they sat there. Every district board, taluk board and municipal council sent forth its budget and even small alteration, by way of an addition of Rs. 50 in the pay of any individual is corrected and sent back for being adopted by the council. And they are more often forced to adopt than reject it. I have no doubt that the atmosphere created in and about them remained with them at the time when this Bill was considered in the Select Committee. Of course it may be said that they really considered other positions also, but as I said at the commencement, the impression left in my mind after I saw the report of the Select Committee and the Bill was that they were moving in that old groove and they thought that every power was with the Government and they were only trying to give away as much as they thought could be given away to the corporation. It was more or less a gift that they were making. That is the view they took of it and my impression is that in every section there was a tough fight whether there should be this gift. They did not start with the impression that as per the recent developments, the recent resolution of the Government of India on local self-government—they did not start with the presumption that the whole power and administration should be left to the whole body and only such restrictions should be placed upon those powers as were actually needed. I strongly feel that that was the position that was taken by the Select Committee and if I may be allowed to say so, the Madras Corporation and the Honourable Member representing the Madras Corporation were more or less in the old atmosphere. They did not place before the Select Committee as freely as they ought to have done, basing their position more on present principles than on what they thought they might be able to manage to get from the Government. This has been my view and when I came here and consulted the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar in connexion with section 23 of this Bill, he thought he had gained a great point by having as clause (2) of section 24, the position where he could use it for purposes even to divert the view of the commissioner. Section 24 says: 'The standing committees and the commissioner shall be bound to give effect to every resolution of the council unless such resolution is cancelled in whole or in part by the Governor in Council.' He thought that this was an engine, that this section gave them the power with which he could so manipulate section 23 which says 'Subject to the provisions of this Act the municipal government of the city shall vest in the council, but the council shall not be entitled to exercise functions expressly assigned by or under this Act or any other law to a standing committee or the commissioner.' He thought that section 24 would enable him to control clause 23 (1) by so passing resolutions that it will become impossible for the commissioner to take action against the will of the corporation. That was the argument he advanced to me. I can quite well understand his feeling in the matter but I have no doubt that he was thinking of the old state of affairs of the draft Bill of 1910 which was amended by the draft Bill of 1916, the history of which was given by the Honourable Member in charge at the commencement. Therefore, when he was able to introduce such doubtful provisions—I do not think if the express provisions allow me to make an arrangement—he thought it was a grand success and I will accuse the corporation also of the same position. The resolution passed by the corporation is a resolution they had thought of more recently and they had not been consistently keeping the whole matter in their view. In corroboration of that statement, I will refer to the recent resolution of the Government of India, dated 16th May 1918. I have no doubt that this resolution was specially made suitable to the conditions of Madras on a special representation by this Government; whether it was Your Excellency's personal interview or the representation of the Government, there are passages in this that show that though the Government of India were prepared to issue instructions for the whole of India, they would pay attention to Madras as a special case where they would restrict it to a certain extent and even in regard to the restrictions, they gave their opinions boldly and clearly. In paragraph 8 they say: 'So long as the executive officer of a city is protected from the possible caprices of a board by provisos requiring that, though his nomination may be by the board, his appointment should be approved by Government and that he should not be removed without the sanction of the Government unless by the vote of a substantial majority of the board, it is not necessary to require that the executive officer should be a Government official, and competent men can be appointed to the post who have not been or no longer are in Government service. A system of executive officers on the above general lines has been rendered possible in the cities of the Bombay Presidency by legislation passed in 1914, and in the United Provinces by the United Provinces Municipalities Act of 1916: while a similar system is contemplated by the legislation now under consideration for the corporations of Calcutta and Madras.

12TH MARCH 1919.]

"I refer to this passage with respect to the question of the commissioner and his nomination and appointment. For Madras, the matter has been specially considered and what is suggested is on the lines in these places where we find that nomination vests with the corporation and if the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar even in this present resolution recommended a panel, I thought he had not kept this in view. That was the legislation apparently discussed when this Government Order was issued. Therefore, I submit that the Select Committee did go into it, only on the provisions of the Bill as drafted prior to this Government Order and they were only confined to their experience of present control and they thought they were so much freeing the Madras Corporation from such control that they thought they were handing away so much wealth to them. I will refer to one other passage though it does not refer to municipal bodies. That matter was again specifically considered for Madras. In paragraph 9 it is said:

'The circumstances of district boards and of large subdivisional boards, such as those in Madras, are materially different from those of municipalities, since they need much more time and widely extended travelling on the part of the head of the board if the work is to be satisfactorily carried out.'

"We can see there that Madras has made a special case. The Government of India say: 'The Government of India would urge Provincial Governments to arrange for the election of chairmen, wherever this is possible, and where this is not possible to encourage the appointment of non-official chairmen.'

"Here again, they have gone into the question in detail that even when such pleas are urged that the taluk board areas are large and that we want people that must travel all through, even there, they have given specific instructions that only subject to conditions laid therein, the chairmen must be non-officials and only in special cases they would allow officials to be elected. If the Local Boards Act was started with this before us, the whole frame-work of the Act would be different from the Local Boards Act which was prepared ten years ago or after the resolution of the Government of India of 1915. My contention is that the Select Committee when they went into this were purely confining themselves to the exceptional powers they were transferring to the corporation and they thought that the corporation was the sole body to manage their own affairs and as much conditions should be put upon it as would be necessary in the interests of securing efficient administration. I can also quote a section here which would have given sufficient power to the Government to see that there is no abuse and this is clause 44 of the present Bill. I read it because I know if that power is given, it gives all the power necessary to control local bodies. Section 44 says: 'The president shall submit to the Governor in Council copies of all resolutions and all by-laws. (2) The Governor in Council may at any time by notification—(a) cancel any resolution in whole or in part on the ground that it is in excess of the powers conferred by this Act or by any rules made under this Act; (b) repeal wholly or in part or modify any by-law; provided that before taking any action under this sub-section the Governor in Council shall communicate to the Council the grounds on which he proposes to do so, fix a reasonable period for the Council to show cause against the proposal and consider its explanation and objections, if any. (3) The repeal or modification of any by-law shall take effect from the date of publication of the notification, if no date is therein specified, and shall not affect anything done, omitted or suffered before such date.' Suppose there was that one section alone which gave the Government power to interfere, I will add to it another provision that the approval of the Government is necessary for the commissioner to be nominated by the Council and that he ought not to be removed unless by the vote of a substantial majority—suppose there were only these two provisions without the Government having the power to interfere and without adding the other powers that were given there, would it not allow the corporation complete control over its affairs subject to any difficulty arising being avoided? When they misbehave so badly, that their resolution should, in the opinion of the Government be cancelled, power is reserved to the Government. The commissioner cannot be removed except by adverse voting. Any attempt at restricting their powers should be started from that basis. Then I have no doubt that several sections would not have found a place. The whole thing was discussed as though everybody was put under a bondage by the present budget rules and every bit of thing that was given away was considered so much of gift. That is the position and I have no doubt that the Hon'ble Mr. Ramanuja Achariyar was absolutely bona fide in his statement. If he takes the other view, I have no doubt he will be as strong in that view as he is now. He may say that he has not considered that point of view. That is the belief in my mind after a perusal of all these papers. The Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Acharyar has not also done all that he should have done and the corporation has not done all that it should have done. Even in his resolution before the Council he only recommended a panel system and there was no amendment on the point that I mentioned. I do not want to repeat the observations made by most Honourable Members; I do feel that we have spent a considerable time. I should think all this time is not wasted as was suggested by the Hon'ble Dr. Nayar; except the consideration of a few sections the rest of the Bill need not be altered. The only question is whether the corporation should be bound by so many questions especially when there is no final statement about the improvement of the finances of the corporation. The question is whether under these circumstances, it is not a matter which ought to be put off."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"I shall ask the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Acharyar to reply and then I shall call upon the Hon'ble Mr. Rajagopala Acharyar."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARYAR:—"The matter has been so thoroughly discussed and all aspects have been placed before the Council that I have very little to add. Everybody is satisfied that the financial resources of the corporation have not been placed on a sound footing and, as I mentioned already, finance is the heart of every organization, political or otherwise. That can be set right in a few months as the Honourable Member in charge hopes to do; and if that be so, I do not see why the Government should not accept my motion for postponement though not for two years, at least for six months or one year. That is all I wish to say about this aspect."

"I am quite surprised to hear my Honourable Friend Mr. Ramanuja Acharyar comparing land revenue for imperial purposes of taxation with house-tax for purposes of local taxation. That he should compare the two things seems to me, with all respect to his experience, absurd. It seems to be his grievance that Madras has not come to the rescue of the mufassal in protesting against the 50 per cent land revenue policy. Having been engaged in studying these questions and educating the public on the land revenue policy of Government, I dare say he has got a legitimate grievance against the Madras rate-payers that they did not sufficiently support him; but if that is the reason which operates on his mind, I ask him to forgive Madras on this occasion and see that the city gets fair treatment. On the same principle, if the Honourable Member will only reflect for a moment it may be said, that on all house property in the mufassal municipalities, 50 per cent should be paid for local purposes. How absurd it looks. I wonder that he made any such suggestion. The Honourable Member also suggested that there is a better way of controlling water-supply and he said that we would have inexhaustible sources of revenue. The people are now using 32 gallons per head whereas they could use only 25 gallons. It should be controlled. We have now about 55,000 houses in Madras and about 40,000 connexions. We have only a few hundred meters which are now available. We have been trying to get meters, but we have not succeeded. I do not know if war conditions will permit us getting meters for another three or four years. I am really surprised that the Hon'ble Mr. Ramanuja Acharyar with all his experience should be gulled into this belief that by regulating water, we are going to enhance the resources of the corporation; on the other hand, does he not feel as one who bathes in the river Cauvery every day that we want plenty of water, not like Europeans who take a bucketful of water or who are accustomed to bathe in tubs; but we are accustomed to bathe in flowing water, and how hard it will be on the poor rate-payers if you are going to inflict this further hardship on them? Not living in Madras, he has not realized this danger which we commissioners have to face and if you are now going to put on this source of taxation to make the supply of water which is our primary duty an elastic source of revenue, as my Honourable Friend would have it, it seems to me it will be very hard. My Honourable Friend complained that the corporation gave away an excellent opportunity which was given to them to put this surcharge on income-tax. He quite forgets that that surcharge was to be levied with the previous consent of the Governor in Council and the Governor-General in Council. We know how hard the Government of India are in interfering with income-tax especially in these days. What with the increased rate of taxation, what with the excess profits tax, what with the supertax, does any sane man expect that the Government of India would give their consent to put a surcharge on income-tax? Would not the same argument apply, would not every municipality and every local body claim to put a surcharge on income-tax in every local area? Would not all these objections apply? Does not my Honourable friend see that the Government of India would have knocked it on the head even if the corporation had consented? Why blame the corporation for that?"

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARYAR:—"The Government of India agreed to it, but it was the corporation who opposed it."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARYAR:—"I hope the Honourable Member will verify that fact. I do not think that the Bill of 1916 went up to the Government of India for sanction. I know it was introduced only for the purpose of criticism. All these objections might be urged if we were to interfere."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARYAR:—"I have verified that. The Government of India told us that they had no objection to a surcharge on income-tax provided it did not exceed 50 per cent. The corporation said 'we do not want it, it will affect a large number unduly' and they objected to it."

12TH MARCH 1919.] (Mr. Ranga Acharyar; Mr. Rajagopala Acharyar.)

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARYAR:—"I am not aware of it. I am thankful to the Honourable Member for that information. But after all, even the Honourable Member claims that it would give about 4 lakhs extra; by regrading the profession tax, we would get about 2 lakhs and odd; and therefore we have not lost much."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARYAR:—"The difference would have been an extra 4 lakhs."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARYAR:—"All of us felt, especially the business people felt that it would be a great hardship to allow local bodies to impose a surcharge on income-tax. The Government agreed with us and now it does not lie in their mouth to say that the fault lies with the corporation. If the corporation were so foolish, how did the Government agree to it? Why did they consent to it? The corporation has no power to enforce their demand on the Government and therefore they could not charge the corporation. In my own view, it would have been a most unpopular tax and the corporation did a wise thing in not accepting it. Therefore this method that we have adopted, namely, of continuing the professional tax is more popular. The surcharge on income-tax on the other hand, would have been most unwelcome."

"As regards the unearned increment, I do not think any one of us was enamoured of that proposal with all those logarithms and tables which very few can understand and the Honourable Member in charge had to invoke the assistance of a great mathematician in order to aid him in framing those sections; how the poor rate-payers are going to benefit by such a provision of law is rather difficult to comprehend. I know that the Hon'ble Dr. Nayar has always been a keen advocate of appropriating what is called this unearned increment. We are not now called upon to discuss the merits and demerits of that question. There again, the corporation congratulate themselves that the Government of Madras agreed with them in their view of the policy. It is merely to find an argument to give the corporation a bad name that it is mentioned now. I quite admit that the objection to the appointment of a commissioner by the Government is a recent one."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARYAR:—"Very recent."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARYAR:—"But it does not lose its value because it is very recent. As pointed out by the Hon'ble Mr. Rama Ayyangar, we have been moving in grooves. I do not claim that I have been taken out of the groove. I wish I had been taken out of it earlier. We are all beginning to entertain new ideas, new hopes, new aspirations and is it a crime to make this modest proposal about the appointment of a commissioner?"

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARYAR:—"When was the proposal made?"

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARYAR:—"It was made in time."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARYAR:—"Was the proposal made by the Corporation?"

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARYAR:—"They did not."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARYAR:—"Did the Honourable Member make it in the Select Committee?"

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARYAR:—"No."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARYAR:—"The Honourable Member makes it only to-day."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARYAR:—"I do not make the proposal to-day. I suggested it two months ago when I sent in my amendment to the Bill about the introduction of the panel system. The Hon'ble Mr. Molony suggested that we should be satisfied with stages and that will give us some voice in the nomination of the commissioner who is going to enjoy the liberties of his office in the corporation. I quite admit that the Hon'ble Mr. Rama Ayyangar is quite right in accusing me of not having read the resolution of the Government of India, 1918, but my Honourable Friend did not read it too; because otherwise, he would have sent in notice of an amendment. I remember distinctly well after the discussion on the panel question was over, the Honourable Gentleman rushed up to me and said 'what a fool you are, you did not mention it to the Council.' I pleaded guilty and I plead guilty now. If I had read it carefully I should have. I expected the Honourable Member in charge to have read it and digested it and inwardly tried to obey it. If the Honourable Member in charge did not do it, we, non-official members who have to attend to these duties in addition to other duties which are taxing—what could we do? I plead guilty. It is not too late; I moved it at the last meeting and it might have been accepted; but the Honourable Member ridiculed the idea. What is the objection to recent amendments? If we had made it earlier, would it have been accepted?"

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARYAR:—"I am asked what I would have done if the Honourable Member had done something which he did not do. It is profitless to speculate."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARYAR:—"It is merely an empty argument which cannot carry conviction. There is no use accusing us of bringing forward recent amendments. If the attitude of the Government was one of acceptance, I would have regretted that I came forward recently, but even if I had brought it in August or in September, my Honourable Friend would have laughed it out. It is time that we leave off scoring a point in debate. We are men of business trying to deal with business matters for the benefit of a larger public. Let us not be deluded by such arguments. My Honourable Friend Mr. Molony could not understand what doles meant. At his instance, I have been begging in this Council for grants for this purpose or that purpose. As regards even the special works, water-works and drainage works, he quite rightly says that we are in partnership with Government, but even there Government refused to make us any grants last year and for a long time we were at our wits' end how to go on with the current work. We illegally appropriated the current revenues for carrying on the work; I know that the Government Member objected to it. We were about to be taken to task for having illegally appropriated our current revenues for special work. I had to force a grant out of the Government by bringing a resolution asking for the stoppage of all special works and the Special Engineer had to be called up to Ootacamund in order to plead personally with the Government in order to get that grant; and but for that, but for those special efforts made we would have had to close our special workshop last year. That was the condition of affairs. It is all quite right to say that the Government were partners; but they did not realize that responsibility as partners last year. And the Hon'ble Mr. Molony and myself are quite aware of the serious trouble we had last year over that. All these troubles are forgotten when we get a new Act. If we are going to continue in the same fashion, I refuse to be a party to any such measure, which places the corporation again in that continuous beggarly situation. That is my serious objection. My serious objections are only two. The commissioner is not a nominee of the corporation, his powers are great; and the financial resources are absolutely nil.

"I quite admit that there has been a liberalization in the sections relating to franchise. Females have been given votes, and various other internal improvements are made. They will be available for the new member. It is all there, our labour is not lost; only we will not have the credit. It is too small a matter to have the credit, it is taking too narrow a view of the situation to say that this Government will not have the credit. We are working for the good of the people; let us do it in a right royal fashion, not in this niggardly fashion, hoping for amendments. There is one statement made by the Hon'ble Mr. Molony as regards property tax. In practice this 10 per cent is allowed he says. I own 20 houses in Madras and I pay my full assessment without any reduction for repairs. He has not been kind enough to allow me any reduction and I pay a considerable sum. And there may be hundreds of cases like that. There may be stray cases here and there where reduction is allowed. But I cannot claim it and no man will claim it when the law does not allow it. I do not think that is a factor which you can count upon. There is no use saying that after careful valuation, you can increase it. Are you going to rely upon these things when you are going to place the corporation on a sound financial footing? I do not think much can be gained by that sort of thing. As regards those sections which require amendment, which the corporation have been sending round very often, they are not very urgent matters. We have got on for years. Madras is not going to suffer from a deluge because those sections are not amended. I do not think we will suffer by this Act not being passed. My Honourable Friend Mr. Rama Ayyangar has called in question, the legal interpretation about sections 23 and 24 if this Bill is going to be passed into law. I dare say that he will enter into a discussion, but I do think I am right and he is wrong in the view that he has taken. One word about the work of the Select Committee. We had to work under great pressure and in fact it was very difficult for me to attend at 4 p.m. when the court goes on till 5 p.m. I had to come late very often and although sufficient facilities were given to go back, still when we had to consider 400 and odd sections, sitting for three months almost continuously every week, if we had over-looked certain matters under such circumstances, is it a crime? We have come in time to amend those sections and if the Government do not see their way to amend them, we say that substantially this is no advance. No doubt there is an advance in the constitution. I thankfully recognize and the corporation gratefully acknowledges this. But what is the good of the constitution without something to work upon? That is the chief defect. I therefore appeal most earnestly to Your Excellency's Member to come to some arrangement with the consent of the Government of India, and I do not think it will be a great hardship indeed. I therefore strongly urge that this proposition of mine might be accepted."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"We are all anxious to consult the convenience of Honourable Members. My Honourable colleague is ready to reply and finish it now. The other course will be to meet at 11 a.m. to-morrow. (Several Members were in favour of adjourning the meeting.) We will meet at 11 a.m. to-morrow."

The Council re-assembled at 11 a.m. when the discussion on the City Municipal Bill was resumed.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"I call upon the Hon'ble Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar to resume the debate on the City Municipal Bill."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"Your Excellency, I think the first thing that I would ask the Council to do is to remember at what stage the Bill now is. I rather fear from the trend of the discussion yesterday that this aspect of the matter has not been quite realized. We have had a great deal of discussion as to the first principles of the Bill. We were told how, in view of the impending reforms, it was inopportune to bring this Bill forward and we were treated to a detailed criticism of a large number of its provisions. May I point out to the Council in the first place that the question whether this is the opportune moment to take up and deal with this legislation has been already disposed of when this Bill was introduced? Many of the arguments now brought forward were then brought forward. When I introduced this Bill, the Montagu-Chelmsford reforms had been announced, the resolution of the Government of India had been issued and Honourable Members knew what they were dealing with, and I distinctly remember in the debate—and I am sure Honourable Members remember the debate—that these things were considered and the Council came to the conclusion that the Bill should be accepted in principle and proceed with. The Hon'ble Mr. Ramachandra Rao rightly drew attention even at that early stage to the financial provisions. He pointed out to us how, in view of the restrictions on Provincial Governments, possibly we might not be able to go far in the direction of improving the resources of the Corporation. I quite remember that and I mention it for the purpose of indicating that it is not a new thing that he has stated now. He has stated that before; we have all considered it and the Council came to the conclusion that we should accept the Bill in that stage and proceed with the consideration of its details. Then it was referred to a Select Committee which was purposely so constituted, with Your Excellency's permission, as to give non-official members a predominating majority. Out of eleven members, four came from the Madras Corporation—the Hon'ble Mr. T. Ranga Achariyar, the Hon'ble Sir Gordon Fraser, the Hon'ble Mr. Yaqub Hasan and the Hon'ble Mr. Richmond; four came from the Corporation and two were experienced municipal chairmen in the mufassal—the Hon'ble Mr. Ramanuja Achariyar and the Hon'ble Mr. Subbarayalu Reddiyar."

The Hon'ble YAQUB HASAN SAHIB Bahadur:—"The Hon'ble Mr. Richmond is not a member of the Corporation."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"I beg your pardon. He was for a long time."

The Hon'ble Mr. T. RICHMOND:—"I was on the Corporation."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"The Trades Association was represented by the Hon'ble Mr. Thonger and there were only four officials—myself, Mr. Graham, the Hon'ble the Advocate-General and the Hon'ble Khan Bahadur Aziz-ud-din-Sahib. The official element was in such a hopeless minority that we came to the conclusion at a very early stage, at the instance of the Hon'ble Mr. Aziz-ud-din, that we should not try to keep up any solidarity and that we might give ourselves a considerable amount of liberty in regard to voting. I think I am revealing no secret when I say that in several of the divisions on these sections, we had the spectacle of officials voting against officials, just as non-officials voted against non-officials. I mention that to indicate the spirit in which we entered on our labours. We did not start with a cut and dried scheme."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"I wish a record had been kept of the proceedings of the Select Committee."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"I wish the Honourable Member may not be interrupted."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"I most heartily endorse that wish. I am mentioning the facts, but I am not going into the merits of what took place. Every one of us has got a right to change our opinions and it is far from my wish to say that any of us should continue to be of the same opinion in regard to any matter. That is the reason why we put in the last sentence of the report that this represents the view of the majority. I mention these things to indicate to the Council the spirit in which the Select Committee entered on its labours. The Select Committee went into the Bill with great care and the Bill with the report of the Select Committee again came before the Council and it was discussed for about five days and we are here now in the last stage. The first point I would ask the Council to consider is what exactly is the test that we should apply to this Bill at this stage. Is it a question of its opportuneness or is it a question of its detailed criticism or is it whether, in view of the time and labour expended on the Bill, in view of the financial situation of the Corporation, the Bill should not be passed, or whether it is so hopelessly bad that rather than put such a rotten piece of legislation on the Statute Book, it is better to throw away all the time and labour spent upon it and to reserve the power to a later assembly three or four years hence, to start de novo with this piece of work?" (The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. Narasimha Ayyar:—"Hear, hear.")

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"That is the point which the Council has to consider. If any Honourable Member thinks that the Bill is so bad that it should be thrown overboard, it is his duty to vote against it; if any Honourable Member thinks that the Bill is substantially good though it does not go so far as he would wish, if he feels that though in a number of details he differs from the Bill, on the whole the Bill is one which should command his acceptance, then I say unhesitatingly that the Honourable Member is bound to vote for it. That is my construction of the duties of Honourable Members so far as this Bill is concerned. My experience of this Council, I admit, is much less than that of several Honourable Members sitting on these benches. May I venture to suggest that the distinction we generally draw between the introductory stage, the report stage and the final stage is intended to subserve a definite purpose, to concentrate attention upon particular aspects of the thing and if it is assumed that at every stage you are going to cover the whole ground and say that, till we produce a Bill which is satisfactory in every respect to every Honourable Member of the Council, it ought not to be passed, we shall commit ourselves to the absurdity that no piece of legislation can ever be passed in this Council. I do not want to over-state the case but I feel from the way in which isolated pieces of the Bill have been taken up and criticised during this final debate, as if that gave a reason why the Bill should not be passed, I rather fear that there is some amount of misapprehension in the minds of Honourable Members as to what exactly is the situation of the Bill and what test they should apply to it at this stage. I myself may not approve of some provisions in the Bill to which I have objected, but which I have accepted out of deference to my Honourable Friends in the Select Committee. It did not suggest itself to me that that would be enough for me to condemn the whole Bill."

"Having said that, let me ask Honourable Members to consider it. Do they think that the Bill is so bad that they feel bound honestly to throw it out? Can they say that this is a piece of legislation so pernicious, so rotten, so thoroughly bad that rather than put it on the Statute Book, we should throw away all the time and labour spent upon it both at meetings of this Council and at the very many meetings of the Select Committee? If any Honourable Member feels like that, he is certainly bound to vote against it; but if he does not, he takes upon himself a grave responsibility in recording his vote against the final passing of this law; in case he is voting against the Bill he will be committing himself to a view of legislation which will be found utterly unworkable in practice. I shall not, therefore, follow Honourable Members in found all those detailed criticisms which they put forward yesterday, but I admit that there are some all those detailed criticisms which they put forward yesterday, but I admit that there are some main principles in regard to which they are perfectly entitled to criticise and to say that those main principles are so thoroughly wrong in their opinion that they should throw the Bill overboard. So analysing it, I find that two main principles have been put forward in varying degrees by different Honourable Members. One was about the appointment and powers of the commissioner and another was about the financial resources. Of course, different Honourable Members stressed these two things in different ways, but I gather from a resume of the discussion yesterday that these were the two main things which were very much in their minds. Many of them felt that the appointment of a commissioner and the powers of the commissioner as they are laid down in this Bill are so thoroughly wrong that we should not accept the Bill. Many of them feel that the financial resources are so utterly inadequate that we should not accept the Bill. These are the two main objections, as far as I can remember the debate, which emerged from the discussion we had yesterday. Now I will take these two things one after another. Taking the commissioner first, there is the question firstly of his appointment and secondly of his powers. The Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar spoke very vigorously and the Hon'ble Mr. Siva Rao supported him and one or two other Honourable Members of Council felt strongly that the commissioner should not be a nominee of the Government, but should be appointed by the Corporation. I think the Hon'ble Mr. Ramanuja Achariyar pointed out that the Corporation did not at any time, or rather he said that the Honourable Member himself had not at any time asked for that being done. No amendment to that effect was brought forward in the Select Committee nor was any amendment to that effect brought forward in this Council. I say deliberately that no amendment to make the appointment of the commissioner vest in the hands of the Council was brought forward in any previous stage of the discussion, it was not put forward until yesterday. What Honourable Members might have been feeling or might have been speaking to one another about it, does not matter. No amendment was brought forward in this Council for the obvious reason that the Corporation which considered the Bill on several occasions, and which you will all admit has not been particularly friendly to this measure, has never claimed the right to appoint the commissioner, the Corporation did not at any time propose that it should be allowed to appoint the commissioner or to submit nominations to Government before the latter appoint the commissioner. At the meeting of the Corporation held on the 16th April 1917, one commissioner, Mr C. Srnivasa Achariyar, proposed that what was then clause 7 of the Bill should be amended so as to provide for the commissioner being appointed in consultation with the Corporation, but he subsequently withdrew the proposal. The feeling evidently in the minds of the Corporation and in the minds of Honourable Members here till a very late stage was that the best interests of the administration of the city would be served by leaving the appointment of the commissioner at any rate in the initial stages in the hands of the Government and I think that is a right conclusion. One Honourable Member asked us yesterday : what about the resolution of the Government of India on local self-government ? The resolution of the Government of India is from time to time brought up in this Council for this or that purpose. I have myself quoted it several times. The Hon'ble Mr. Siva Rao has quoted it several times, and I dare say in the next few days we shall quote it again ; but it is forgotten that in the whole frame-work of that resolution, it is not mandatory. It is expressly stated that these are the lines on which the Government of India would wish us to proceed. They do not lay down any rigid rules from which we should not depart. Honourable Members sometimes quote this or that passage from that resolution as though it were a sort of sruthi or smriti from which we cannot depart. The Government of India document is a human document, and with all respect to that Government, I may point out that they do not claim perfection or absolute infallibility. They have themselves warned us against acting upon that resolution in any such fashion. They have told us 'these are the lines upon which we expect the whole of India to proceed.' Being at the top they naturally wish to take a wider outlook, but they recognize that each local Government should adjust these things to its surroundings. The Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar asks us, assuming we were inattentive to this point of the commissioner being appointed by the Corporation, why did not the Government take note of it. I may venture to tell the Honourable Member that I knew it was an important point ; but it is not for me to put ideas which are wholly premature into the minds of the Honourable Members of Council. We are starting with the commissioner system for the first time in our life and is it excess of caution to say let the commissioner be appointed by the Government, so that later on, the question of his being the nominee of the Corporation may be considered ? Is it unreasonable ? I wholly fail to see the significance or the extraordinary importance which was attached yesterday to the appointment of the commissioner."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR :—" May I ask whether that opinion was communicated to the Government of India ?"

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR :—" Yes. The Government of India are in full possession of our views not only with regard to the City Municipal Bill but with regard to their own resolution and the Government of India have never attempted to force anything upon us ; and in fairness to the Government of India, I must say that the Government of India are an extremely tolerant body. Having said that, let me proceed further with the question about the powers of the commissioner. Let me first make one general observation. What is the commissioner there for ? The commissioner is intended during a transition period, when people have yet to realize completely a sense of civic responsibility, to see that the executive machinery does not suffer and therefore we are putting him in. I do not say that the commissioner system represents the last word on local self-government. No ; the commissioner is there for a transition period. When you put him in there, how can you achieve your object unless you give him adequate powers ? What is the use of putting in a commissioner on the one hand and on the other hand taking great care that he shall not have adequate powers ? When Honourable Members of Council accept any idea, I think I am entitled to say this, either accept it or refuse to accept it, but do not adopt the medium course of accepting it in one breath and nullifying it in another. Have a commissioner or do not have a commissioner. But if you have a commissioner, do not make him useless. The commissioner being there, he has to have powers. We had a great discussion about the excessive powers given to the commissioner. So far as I could remember, Your Excellency, there were only two things on which the debate centred itself in regard to the powers of the commissioner, firstly there was 10,000 ; it was said that that was a serious matter. There was no objection to his choosing contractors up to Rs. 2,000 or even up to Rs. 5,000. The difference between Rs. 5,000 and Rs. 10,000 apparently makes the difference between an acceptable Bill and an unacceptable Bill. May I venture to point out to the Council that after all, the municipal administration is something or should be something very much more important than the mere choosing of contractors ? I know contractors are a very important set of people. We all want to have the power of choosing contractors and if I am on a municipal body, I should like to have a finger in the pie ; but after all, that is, or should be, a small matter."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR :—" May I understand what the Honourable Member means by saying 'having a finger in the pie ?'"

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR :—" I mean selection and patronage."

"Patronage is a matter dear to the heart of everybody, European and Indian, and I think my European friends will support me when I say that they are not very much better than ourselves in the love of patronage. Several men compete with each other and apply to you and you have to choose one. Another thing was brought out, namely, the question of appointments. It was said that the commissioner had excessive power of appointment, but the Hon'ble Mr. Ramanuja Achariyar pointed out that, if we want a strong executive head, it is absolutely essential that he should have the power of appointment in his charge. It is absolutely upon itself this power of making appointments, it is not convenient or satisfactory. Various applicants go to them. I do not say that a single man does not make mistakes, but when you put the whole establishment under the thumb of a large body, the chances are that administrative efficiency would suffer. It is for that reason that we have taken care to strengthen the hands of the commissioner and under such circumstances I appeal to the experience of municipal chairmen to say whether we are not right in that matter. We have had the corroboration of the Hon'ble Mr. Ramanuja Achariyar to that aspect of it and I am pretty certain that, if the Hon'ble Mr. Subbarayulu Reddiyar had given us the benefit of his experience, he would have corroborated the statement of the Hon'ble Mr. Ramanuja Achariyar in that respect. As a matter of fact, a perusal of this Bill would show that these are two small matters. The powers of the commissioner in a number of respects have been defined, with regard to sanitation, roads, water-supply, etc. The whole Bill is full of the most detailed provisions as to what the commissioner shall do of his own accord, what he shall do with the sanction of one or the other of the standing committees, and what with the sanction of the Corporation. The Hon'ble the Advocate-General has told you that the Government control has been greatly minimised. If, out of this large body of details in regard to the powers of the commissioner, so far only two things have emerged which are open to criticism—his powers with regard to contracts and in regard to appointments—I, as a member of the Select Committee, most heartily congratulate myself on the remarkable success with which we have framed the proposals regarding the powers of the commissioner."

"I must say in fairness to the Council that this question of the powers of the commissioner in the minds of very many Honourable Members did not appear to be so important as the financial position. What is the financial position ? In regard to that, I began when I commended this Bill to this Council for acceptance yesterday morning, by pointing out that there were two directions in which this Bill would strengthen the position of the Corporation financially. I pointed out how in regard to water-supply there is now a great deal of waste and how under the Bill as it is framed, wider powers are given to the commissioner and you will find a saving of several lakhs of rupees under that head. Then also I said in addition to that, that you will have an increased revenue of about 4 lakhs. In all, both by way of saving and positive addition of revenue, the Corporation of the future will be better off than the Corporation of to-day by about 8 lakhs and that, mind you, without any increase in the realizations from the property tax. The Hon'ble Mr. Ramachandra Rao was rather oppressed by the fact that my figures did not quite fit in with the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar's figures. I think the Hon'ble Mr. Molony has explained the situation. I may also explain why it is so. If the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar would allow me, I will explain. The Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar assumes that there is going to be a reduction in the total yield of the property tax. I do not assume it ; I assume that, whatever the Corporation may or may not do, they are not going to reduce their income which they are now deriving. I think the 10 per cent abatement for repairs, etc., could be set right by raising the rate. A great many people are now getting the benefit of the 10 per cent deduction even though not under the law. There is another thing which troubled the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar, namely, about the transfer duty. He said : would the Governor-General sanction it ? The transfer duty could be imposed by us only with the permission of the Corporation. The Corporation has to resolve to impose it. The Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar's contention seems to me to be that the Corporation may be willing to put this duty on but that the Imperial Government may not agree. May I venture to point out to him that till now it is not the Corporation which has generally stood for increase of revenue and the Government against it, but it is rather the other way ? I am glad we have several members of the Corporation here ; I say this for the information of the Corporation, if the Corporation would be so good, if this Bill is passed into law, to put on that duty, it will have our unqualified support for the introduction of this duty and there need be no apprehension that this one lakh may not be realized. That brings me to the question of the property tax. My experience of property in Madras cannot possibly compare with that of the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar who has been so good as to tell us that he owns 20 houses in Madras. Unfortunately I own only one house. I can quite understand house-owners detesting the property tax. After all, this is a fact that people dislike to pay taxes. If there is one thing which is common to the whole world of which I saw a good deal during my tour in Europe, it is this : nobody likes to pay a tax if he can help it. Our European colleagues sometimes find fault with us for not having a sufficient spirit of self-sacrifice. If I may venture to say so, in the presence of the Hon'ble Sir Gordon Fraser and the Hon'ble Mr. Thonger, when it comes to the question of paying taxes, they are quite as unwilling to pay taxes as we are."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR :—" We are not as rich as they are."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR :—" We are all taxed proportionate to our income. That being so, why should it be assumed that the property tax is never going to yield anything more ? When I mentioned 8 lakhs, as there was an agitation against an increase of the property tax, I said you would in any case get 8 lakhs, but why should there be this assumption that the property tax would not give anything more ? What is the basis of it ? The Hon'ble Mr. Ramanuja Achariyar has very rightly wanted to know why the Corporation should not increase the property tax. Even if it does not, we all know that the value of property is going up by leaps and bounds. We all know that rentals are going up by leaps and bounds."

(Mr. Ranga Achariyar; Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar.) [13TH MARCH 1919.]

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"I know they are going up but I do not know that they are going up by leaps and bounds."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"The Honourable Member owns property, I presume, where I own my property."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"I may mention for information that a house of mine which in 1906 fetched a rental of Rs. 170 to-day fetches a rental of Rs. 225. If he calls it 'leaps and bounds,' I don't know what it means."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"Unfortunately things do not seem to be so very satisfactory as the Honourable Member wishes. Probably it is not in the same quarter."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"It is quite close to your bungalow."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"If the Honourable Member and myself exchange our views outside this Council, I dare say we can devise means to make people pay more of rents. Why should it be assumed that the property taxes will never have a tendency to go up? Even if you do not touch the rate, you will have at least 8 lakhs of betterment. As a result of this Bill there is bound to be a rise in the yield of the property tax."

"I understand and I quite sympathise with the feelings of those Honourable Members like the Hon'ble Mr. Ramachandra Rao, who feel when they are dealing with a piece of legislation like this that they would have far rather preferred tackling the larger problems. I have told him that we have our limitations. The question may then arise: 'Why then don't you put the Bill off?' Very good; if we could have put it off, we would have done so. Before I proceed in that direction, I might be permitted to reply to one particular suggestion which was made, in explanation as to why we are rushing through this piece of legislation. We are told, the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar assumes that we are all fired with a spirit of emulation; this Council and the Government want to add to their credit and renown and the Hon'ble Mr. Venkatapati Raju has been so good as to say that His Excellency is apparently very anxious before he hands over charge of office to place the Madras City Municipal Bill on the Statute Book and therefore we, the members of his Government, are pushing things forward. May I venture to say in regard to this somewhat extraordinary criticism that whatever our good or bad points might have been, a desire to earn glory has not been one of them. I have often been taxed by Honourable Members who have asked me 'why don't you do such and such a thing; it would not cost you anything; it would make you more popular.' I do not blame them for that, but I may mention it to refute the suggestion. As for His Excellency putting pressure upon any of us to carry this thing through, I think without disclosing the secrets of Government, I may at once say that His Excellency has never put any pressure upon us to rush anything during the last seven years. If that is so, it may be asked 'why are you rushing it through?' The fact is that the Corporation is practically on its last legs so far as its finances are concerned. (The Hon'ble Mr. T. Ranga Achariyar:—"Hear, hear.") I understand from the Honourable Member's crying out 'hear, hear' that he concurs with me. I am extremely glad to hear that he concurs with me; and with the concurrence of the Honourable Member who represents the Madras Corporation in this hall, I say that the Madras Corporation is financially on its last legs. I hope you agree to that."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"Yes."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"Now what are we to do when a Corporation is on its last legs? Are we to wait for three or four years to settle all these questions, or are we to tackle them immediately, at once? I say that the Corporation is on its last legs. It is spending at the rate of 30 gallons of water per head and the law which is inadequate at present does not give the executive any control."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"We cannot control for three years more."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"Why?"

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"For want of meters."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"Let the Honourable Members pass this Bill and the Government undertake to get the meters for you. You will have priority."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"I may assure the Honourable Member that the information even of the business people is that it is impossible."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"What I say is this: we were so alarmed at the position of the Corporation that we were prepared in May 1917—we wanted to put through an emergency legislation giving them the power to work up their property taxes to 25 per cent. The situation was so grave. This is what we wrote to the Government of India: 'For these reasons it is unlikely that the Bill will be passed into law or that the increased powers of taxation conferred by it will become available for some time; in the meanwhile, the need for enhancing the resources of the Corporation has, as explained above, become very urgent. The Governor in Council has carefully considered the position and is of opinion that emergent legislation must be undertaken and that the simplest and most satisfactory form which that legislation can take is an amendment of section 129 of the Act so as to raise the maximum rate of the tax on buildings and lands from 10 to 16½ per cent of the annual value. The maximum scale of the property taxes will then be 25 per cent as provided in the City Municipal Bill. This will yield an additional revenue of about 6½ lakhs a year'."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR:—"What is the date of the letter?"

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"This is what we wrote: we also said 'the actual enhancement, however, will depend upon the present means of the Corporation.' The Corporation considered it and said 'we do not want this emergency legislation.' They do not want anything which is likely even to increase their burden, the burden on property."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"Is that quite correct?"

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"Quite right. Here is the resolution. I read from the proceedings of the Corporation at the General Meeting, dated 15th May 1917. 'With reference to the proposal contained that it is the intention of the Government to apply at once to the Government of India for sanction for the introduction of the Bill to amend section 129 so as to raise the maximum rate on lands and buildings to 16½ per cent, the Corporation is strongly of opinion that it will be an unnecessary increase of taxes on lands and houses and the Corporation is further of opinion that the Government should not take further action until after consideration of the proposals made by it for augmenting its resources.' That is what the Corporation said. Fortunately at that time there was a slight improvement in the finances of the Corporation and as this Bill was coming up, we felt we might drop the emergency legislation. This is the Government Order, dated 29th August 1917: 'as the financial position of the Corporation has improved, the Government do not at present propose to undertake legislation to raise the property tax to a maximum of 25 per cent.'"

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR:—"Emergency legislation indeed!!"

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"We satisfied ourselves that the Corporation can carry on its work from general revenues till 1918. We were satisfied that they could carry on their work without a deficit and we said: 'in the circumstances, the Government do not propose to undertake the emergency legislation.' Having done so, we felt bound to hurry up this Bill and in hurrying it up we naturally asked the Corporation to hurry it."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"Will the Honourable Member kindly explain to me how the preventing of wastage of water is going to add to the revenues of the Corporation?"

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"It will reduce your deficit under the water and drainage fund which is now found from the general revenue. I think I explained it."

The Hon'ble Mr. J. C. MOLONY:—"May I quote figures? After exhaustive calculation, it has been calculated that every extra gallon per day over 25 gallons per head means an expenditure of Rs. 40,000 per annum. Seven extra gallons therefore means that we are spending Rs. 2,80,000 per annum."

• The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"May I ask the Hon'ble Mr. Molony whether he is going to propose to stop the pumping station for a time?"

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"I do not know whether the Honourable Member could ask the Hon'ble Mr. Molony what the latter's intentions are. It is better to get information as to his intentions at the meeting of the Corporation of which both are members. In deference to the wishes of the Corporation, we stopped the emergency legislation and we knew that the Corporation was on its last legs and we said we would allow them to go on till 1918 but we asked them to come to our help. One of the ways in which the Corporation helped us was by objecting to the surcharge on income-tax and the increment duties, to both of which I referred yesterday. I pointed out that in regard to these two things, if the Government had had their way, we should have been in a position to say that this Bill would have given an additional revenue of 9 lakhs instead of four."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"Would the Government agree to it if the Corporation agree to it now?"

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"I should like to know whether the Honourable Member has been authorized to negotiate with the Government in this matter. If he says so, then I shall consult my Honourable Colleagues and let him know. I cannot help thinking that there is a great deal in what the Hon'ble Mr. Thonger told us yesterday. It is a mistake to imagine that if you can go on increasing your revenue, it will mean better administration. Probably better administration lies as much in careful economy, in getting the best you can out of every pie you spend. That is an aspect which I would commend to the consideration of Honourable Members. Do not imagine that by piling up money, you are going to increase the prosperity of the town in a mysterious way and improve the administration. You will have to spend the money in useful directions, and probably a spell of what we call rigid economy will do more for the Corporation than anything else I can imagine at this juncture. This brings me to my last point, namely, several Honourable Members have told me, 'it is true, all that you say is true; we see all the good points in the Bill but how are we to get over the fact that the Corporation has objected?' It is far from my intention to minimise that fact. We are now engaged in passing a piece of legislation for a local body which, as now constituted, has set its face completely against it. Let me put it in that extreme form. I do not think anybody can put it in a stronger form. Having said so, I beg the Council to consider that the obligation is imposed upon us, the responsibility lies on us to examine the objections most carefully and sympathetically and if we find that those objections are at all reasonable, we should defer to the local body; but to say that because the Corporation has objected to the Bill, we have nothing else to do and we must allow that to over-bear all other considerations is to put ourselves in the position of what I call mandatories of the Corporation. The Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar sits here as the mandatory of the Corporation. He referred in somewhat feeling terms to what he called the personal aspect when he moved his motion that he, having shared along with other Honourable Members in the shaping of this Bill, has now to be in the position of opposing it. He need not be sorry at all. If I am in the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar's position, I would have done exactly the same thing. He sits here as the mandatory of the Corporation, returned by that body. But he is the only man who sits here as the mandatory of the Corporation. None of us is returned by the Corporation. While on general grounds it is our duty to consider the objections of the local body concerned and to give it the fullest weight, to consider it most sympathetically, the position that because they object, there is nothing further to be said and we must vote against the Bill is a position which, if accepted, would lead us to startling consequences. This is not the only Bill we shall have. We are going to get other Bills. If Honourable Members now agree to renounce their right of judgment in favour of the Corporation, I say this principle is bound to have serious effects."

(Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar ; Mr. Ranga Achariyar ;
Mr. M. Ramachandra Rao.) [13TH MARCH 1919.]

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR :—" May I say that I never claim any such indulgence from Honourable Members? I put it on the merits."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR :—" Then the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar and myself are both agreed in appealing to you not to attach any sort of mechanical importance to the decision of the Corporation, but to use your own best intellects to see whether the view of that local body is right or wrong. That is the appeal which I and the Honourable Member representing the Corporation jointly make to the other members here."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR :—" The official benches also."

The Hon'ble Mr. Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR :—" The official benches do not count. They sit here to vote with me. I do not think that we pretend anything else. There is no camouflage. The camouflage comes when Honourable Members on the non-official benches think one way and vote in another way when they have the fullest liberty to vote as they think."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO :—" It is quite possible that other official members may think differently from you."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR :—" They may, but yet they vote with me as that is expected of them; whereas in the case of non-official members, they are supposed to be at liberty to vote as they think. When an Honourable Member is at liberty to vote as he likes, and if he votes differently from his conscience, I leave it to the Council to judge of him."

"More than one Honourable Member appealed to me and suggested 'can you not make any concession and see that matters are put at peace.' I knew that some Honourable Members who told me so were some of my best friends and they were anxious that things should get on peacefully, but from what I know of the Corporation and its methods, I know that it is an utter waste of time to enter into negotiations. If I am to judge from the records, the attitude of the Corporation in regard to this piece of legislation has been one of continued obstruction. When we put in any items of revenue which will give it money, the Corporation says 'No.' It will then put forward something which the Government of India must object to. The ball is set rolling in this way and in the meantime the Corporation is in a great financial stress. That going to take up the responsibility of saying let the Corporation continue in that grave predicament indefinitely. I very much regret that we have not got the pleasure of the Hon'ble Dr. Nayar's company just now; he told us that it is for the provincial autonomous governments to face it. Must not the Corporation survive its present troubles to face the provincial autonomous governments?"

13TH MARCH 1919.] (Mr. Ranga Achariyar ; Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar.)

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR :—" We are quite able to survive."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR :—" You will survive, because what is at the back of the Honourable Member's mind is the doles."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR :—" We will stop special works and go on."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR :—" I would ask Honourable Members who have been told about the deference due to the views of a local body in regard to its own constitution to pause awhile and consider what exactly is the history of this particular local body so far as this particular legislation is concerned. Has it acted rightly? Has it co-operated with us to set its own house in order? No; it has obstructed us at every turn and now it has done its last service after this Bill has been considered, after all amendments are passed; it has convened a special meeting, at a time when, in deference to the wishes of some, we are having the final reading—and passed a resolution saying, it will not have anything to do with this Bill."

"That being so, I think it is the right of Honourable Members other than the Honourable Member who sits here on behalf of the Corporation to exercise their independent judgment. We, the Members of the Government, are bound to put the premier local body in a sound financial condition so that it would not stand before the world as a bankrupt institution. It is the duty of Honourable Members here to support us in that endeavour. To introduce all sorts of vague allegations and to leave it to the future is simply an abdication of your functions. I have no hesitation in saying that every Honourable Member who understands the situation has a right to vote and we have a right to claim his vote, but we have no claim, I admit, on the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar who sits here as the mandatory of the Corporation."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR :—" I do not feel so much bound as to the mandatory character of my position."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR :—" I am very glad to hear this disclaimer. When the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar has expressed some signs of relenting, I think my speech has served some purpose and I hope we will have the satisfaction of passing this Bill unanimously."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR :—" I do not say that. I wish to exercise my own independent judgment in the matter."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR :—" We shall leave the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar's judgment for the time being to itself. The Hon'ble Dr. Nayar, the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar, the Hon'ble Mr. Ramanuja Achariyar, each in his own way has found fault with the Government for their weakness in having yielded to the Corporation. The Hon'ble Dr. Nayar said 'it is true the Corporation proposed the abandonment of the surcharge on income-tax, but why did you yield to it?' His criticism is perfectly just. The Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar told us, 'you have accepted the responsibility.' His criticism is also just. The Hon'ble Mr. Ramanuja Achariyar said 'you have shown a deplorable weakness.' I quite agree with him. I plead guilty to that indictment. I think Your Excellency's Government have been weak and vacillating in the past with regard to this matter, and it is for that weakness that we are paying the penalty to-day when we are finding all this difficulty in passing through the Legislative Council a Bill for setting in order the premier local body of the Presidency which is now on the verge of bankruptcy."

"Several Honourable Members have declaimed against the policy of doles. I think the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar has told us how very much he reprobated the policy of doles. It is a pity that the people who reprobate the policy of doles do not hesitate to ask for doles."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR :—" I plead guilty to the charge."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR :—" It may be a source of satisfaction to the Council to see that I and my Honourable Friend are gradually coming nearer and nearer. I think the policy of doles is a mistake. With all deference to Your Excellency and my other Honourable Colleagues, I say that the policy of doles is a mistake. In regard to definite works like large drainage works or water-works, it is right that the Government should say to a local body, 'we would share it with you'—I do not grudge the Government should say to the drainage works of the Corporation. To give doles, I think, is undertaking to give funds to the drainage works of the Corporation. To give doles, I think, is a mistake. I entirely associate myself with very many Honourable Members who have declaimed against it and it is because we want to bring that thing immediately to a full stop that I am pressing for the passing of this Bill to-day. If this Bill is not passed, we cannot allow the premier Corporation to go bankrupt. That will be a terrible blow to local self-government all over the Presidency. Because we want to bring the policy of doles to a stop, because we want to teach self-reliance, because we want to teach local bodies to stand on their own legs, I press upon Honourable Members to support me in passing this Bill to-day. "In very many ways, I take the position to be serious. More than one reference has been made to the Council of the future; the Minister who will hereafter have the charge of the department will have to face the unwillingness of local bodies to put on taxation and undergo some amount of sacrifice; and the difficulty will confront the Central Government in forcing on reforms. If the position of the Indian Member in charge of this department is so very difficult as I find it to-day, how much more difficult must the position of the future Minister be, faced with problems like these? I appeal to all of you to consider not the immediate present, not to-day or to-morrow, but to consider what the future will be. To yield to the Corporation now is like yielding to a sick man who is very sick but who, when you prescribe a medicine, wants to be left alone. To yield to the Corporation, to allow it to have its own way, to say that this Bill shall not be passed because the Corporation has objected to it, will not only seriously injure that institution but will be a serious set-back to local self-government in this Presidency and it will increase to a tremendous degree the task of those who, in years to come, will stand where I stand, to look after these local bodies as I am doing now. I appeal without any hesitation to all Honourable Members including the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar to vote for this Bill and pass it into law."

(Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar; the President;
Mr. Narasimha Ayyar.)

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"I put the motion to the Council. The motion has been —."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR (interrupting):—"There is the amendment of the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"Would the Honourable Gentleman allow me? The motion has been moved that the Bill be passed into law. Since then, an amendment is proposed that the consideration of the Bill be postponed."

The amendment was put and lost.

RESOLUTION RE LEGISLATION TO CHECK JUVENILE SMOKING.

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR:—"Your Excellency, the resolution I have the honour to move runs in these terms:—

"III. This Council recommends to His Excellency in Council that Government should take early steps to initiate legislation for checking the growth of juvenile smoking."

"The reason why I ask for this measure and say that Government should initiate the steps in these directions rather than any other persons, I will now mention. As for the growth of juvenile smoking, that is a fact of which almost every Honourable Member of the Council is fully aware. It is pretty well known that tobacco habit in various forms is on the increase. On the evils of juvenile smoking, we have had various pamphlets issued by a number of medical men including Rao Sahib U. Rama Rao whose advice has been of great service in bringing to light the great evils of tobacco smoking, especially when the habits are contracted by infants. I therefore feel that I am freed from the necessity of showing that juvenile smoking is harmful. If there are any Honourable Members who require any argument on that head, some of our medical friends would be in a better position than myself to point out the various evils. It is said to impair the lungs and to impair the health also permanently. It is not necessary to go into the subject at length. I consider that is a well-established fact that the habit of juvenile smoking is growing. I think I shall have done my work if I draw attention to two incidents which came to my knowledge. The Madras Presidency Students' Convention held its last meeting at Salem and I happened to be present on the subjects committee of that body and one of the subjects on the agenda was the prevention of juvenile smoking. I noticed much to my astonishment that one young man who was not exactly a juvenile got up and said 'why do you want this subject here? This is sheer hypocrisy. Everybody smokes nowadays and why do you want a resolution to restrict it?' He said that if a resolution were passed, it would be set at naught. That frank admission, while it wished to avoid hypocrisy, was a clear confession that this habit of juvenile smoking is one which you might well despair of controlling. This habit is very much on the increase. I can also refer to some of my constituencies which have moved in this matter. Two years ago, my Erode constituency, the Erode Municipal Council, passed a resolution on this subject. I just now have in my hands a resolution of the Erode Municipal Council that juvenile smoking should be interdicted by law and that Government should undertake legislation on this matter. That is the pronouncement of a responsible body and that bears evidence of the increasing vice. I think it is unnecessary for me to adduce further evidence of the increase of this habit. I shall therefore proceed to consider why legislation is the means best fitted for meeting this evil. I know the Hon'ble the Director of Public Instruction and his predecessors are quite as keenly alive to the evils of this habit and they have done what they could in their own way. They have issued instructions to see that juvenile smoking is put down in hostels and schools over which they have control and possibly they have, I believe, recommended it to the institutions which receive aid from Government that this habit should be put down. It is one thing for us to ask wardens of hostels to put down smoking and another thing to combat it by legislation. If the evil is widespread, the percentage of victims of this vice attending schools is very small as we know from the statistics supplied by the census. Therefore, it will be recognized that the steps taken in the Department of Public Instruction will not be adequate in regard to the numbers. Next in regard to the effectiveness of intervention, one may point out that the Hon'ble the Director of Public Instruction can only do his best by issuing the necessary instructions. If the juvenile attending a school goes to a corner and buys the worst bidi and suffers, I cannot blame the authorities of that institution. We have to recognize that the evil is so great, so serious and insidious that it requires other steps besides the issuing of circulars. This necessity for legislation has been recognized in other provinces and it is unnecessary for me to remind the Honourable Member that in other provinces, in British India, legislation has been undertaken and carried out. I may also point to the Native States where similar legislation has been carried out and enforced. Therefore, I think I have done quite enough to point out that legislation is recognized as a more adequate remedy for the suppression of this vice than the other forms previously adopted, such as the issuing of circulars. Still, before I recommend legislation to this Council, there are certain objections that have to be met, objections which had so much weight with me that in the past I frequently hesitated to recommend this measure. At least on one previous occasion, I came forward with a resolution of this sort and did not move it. That was with reference to some objections that I am going to mention presently. It is pointed out that in this country we have not got the same liberties and privileges as citizens of various other countries, that in a free country like England, it would not very much matter if you introduce legislation giving some more power to the executive and to the subordinates of the executive to interfere with the liberty of the subject in certain respects, because people are quite capable of asserting their own rights and they know what is due to them and they know how exactly to snub or put down any interference and any over-zealous policeman is more likely to be handled roughly by the populace than in a country like this. Here, if you pass legislation authorizing every policeman to pluck away cigars from every young man and to report against him, to seize tobacco from merchants who deal with juveniles, then you are giving a great deal of power which is capable of being misused. That has given me anxious thought. I recognize that it is a very forcible argument, it is a serious handicap to the utility advocate any measure which would give more power to the lower officials of that department; and yet I stand before this Council suggesting that the Government should take early steps. Why do I do so? I do so because of two reasons. In the first place, the fact that this vice is so rapidly increasing is oppressing me and the physique of the young Indians of the later generations is a matter which cannot be ignored. I therefore thought it necessary to place my apprehensions both as to the fact of this increasing vice and as to the possible dangers of legislation before this Council for their adoption of adequate remedies and, if they desire legislation as I do, also to place before them possible checks. We can intervene or advise for the purpose of counteracting officialism or any other danger which might flow from a rigorous enforcement of this Bill. For instance, we must remember that in similar matters, we have had customs or domestic arrangements made by Hindus and Muhammadans and yet in such a matter it has been possible for Native States to introduce legislation as to the age of marriage and to render it penal for a father to give away his daughter in marriage before a certain age. Penalties safeguarding people against malicious prosecutions by insisting that in the case of prosecutions the experts to devise the necessary measures to prevent this law becoming an oppressive one. That is why, all things considered, I thought it my duty to place before this Council a recommendation that legislation should be adopted for suppressing this growing vice.

(Mr. Narasimha Ayyar.)

"Lastly, I have to explain why I ask the Government to take steps instead of bringing up a Bill myself. There are two reasons. In the first place, when I last moved in the matter,

13TH MARCH 1919.]

(Mr. Narasimha Ayyar; Mr. Davidson.)

Government promised to consider this question in connexion with some legislation which was still on the anvil. Government have still the Children's Bill in their own hands or perhaps before a committee which they can control. The second reason which I put forward in connexion with this is the fact that Government control all legislation. We just now saw that in the teeth of protest of non-official members, practically for more than one day, in spite of almost a pitched battle for eight or nine hours, Government have been able to have it their own way and pass the City Municipal Bill. When I asked for permission to remove the badge of helotry and infamy from the poor depressed classes, when I asked that the most obnoxious clause with regard to stocks should be removed, Government were able to put forward their huge official block against me and even the permission to introduce a Bill was denied to me. We know therefore with what powerful force Government could wield their official block and with what fatal effect to any Bill. With that thought in my mind, I thought it was wiser to ask the Government themselves to take up the measure. Once they make up their minds, as the Hon'ble Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar said, once they make up their minds, it is quite easy for them to get the majority here. We see the way in which they carry on things in this Council. For these reasons it struck me that the present shape is the shape in which I could put forward this resolution and I commend it to the Government for acceptance."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. Suryanarayana Rao seconded the resolution.

The Hon'ble Mr. L. DAVIDSON:—"Your Excellency, this question of juvenile smoking and the prevention thereof by legislation is not a new issue before this Council, having come before it at one time or another in the shape of questions or resolutions ever since 1906. On the first occasion, the suggestion proceeded from the Madras Total Abstinence Association and the answer to a question then was that no action was taken because no attempts had been made to produce evidence of any increase in juvenile smoking. That was in 1906. In 1909, following the example of the United Provinces, Government passed on to the Director of Public Instruction a circular on the subject of restricting or prohibiting the practice of smoking among schoolboys. In 1913, the Triplicane Sociological Brotherhood revived the question and again the Government gave the answer that there was no evidence that the habit of juvenile smoking was so prevalent as to render legislative interference necessary. I think it was the Hon'ble Mr. Narasimha Ayyar himself who next raised the question in an interpellation in May 1914 and asked the Government to issue instructions to the Director of Public Instruction on the subject. Instructions were issued accordingly and circulars were sent by the Director of Public Instruction to the heads of all educational institutions. That dealt only with smoking by schoolboys on school premises or in the play-grounds. It was recognized by the Government however, and the Director of Public Instruction has emphasized it quite recently, that the real requisite in this matter is more efficient parental control. In May 1915, the Hon'ble Mr. Narasimha Ayyar was informed as he has reminded us to-day that the Government had under consideration a Children's Bill and might include therein some provisions on the subject of juvenile smoking on the model of the English Children's Act of 1908. Certain sections in that Act provide penalties for the sale of tobacco to children and young persons and the forfeiture of tobacco found in their possession. The Government were also aware that there was a special Ordinance in Ceylon and regulations in Baroda and Mysore dealing with these points. In November 1915, the Hon'ble Mr. Narasimha Ayyar gave notice of a resolution much in the same terms as the present one, but he withdrew it and the brief discussion recorded in the proceedings of the Council at that meeting suggests that he withdrew it because Sir Harold Stuart said he would consider the issue in connexion with the Children's Bill. The Bill was then in an embryonic stage. Sir Harold Stuart did give very careful consideration to the issue and the first step he took was to call for the results of practical experience in Ceylon and Mysore. The result of his inquiry was information that in Ceylon there were very few prosecutions and the Ordinance did not produce any particular effect. This was in October 1915. Though the regulation had been introduced into all headquarter districts in Mysore, and also in the Kolar goldfields with effect from the beginning of the year 1912, the Darbar, by the end of 1915, thought that it would still take some time before the provisions of the regulation could be widely known and strictly enforced; and all that they could say was that there were 95 prosecutions, of which 90 terminated in warnings for first offences. Consequently, Sir Harold Stuart had practically no information as to the result of the special legislation there and from the note which he left on the record it is clear that he was of opinion that the application of the criminal law was not a satisfactory way of dealing with this evil if it existed apart from the fact that there was no evidence before the Government regarding the extent to which the habit of juvenile smoking prevailed. It is evident that these were the grounds why provisions regarding juvenile smoking were deliberately removed from the Children's Bill, as stated in the statement of objects and reasons. So recently as last March, a question was put by the Hon'ble Mr. P. Siva Rao and the answer given was that the Government did not contemplate any general measure to prevent juvenile smoking. My Honourable Colleague Sir Alexander Cardew has just drawn my attention to the fact that the City Municipal Bill which has just been passed into law touches on this subject since rule 4 (r) of the Financial rules in Schedule V of the Bill mentions as one legitimate object of expenditure in the City of Madras the organizing and maintaining associations for preventing juvenile smoking and cruelty to children. But that is not quite the same thing as legislation to provide against juvenile smoking. I have now brought the history of the case up to 1919. I may say that there was a period of three years in which local interest in the subject flagged—1916, 1917 and 1918; with the exception of the Hon'ble Mr. Siva Rao's question, interest dropped until at the end

(Mr. Davidson; Mr. Narasimha Ayyar; Mr. Siva Rao.) [13TH MARCH 1919.

The Hon'ble Mr. L. DAVIDSON:—"Action will also have to be taken to ascertain the practical effect of special legislation of this kind in other provinces and in Native States. These things will take some time and I cannot hold out any hope of provisions being introduced in the Madras Children's Bill. It is not a question of mere formality. The position of the Government at present is that legislation is not expedient, and that if any action should be taken, it would be necessary to follow the precedent of Bengal, where it was left to a private Bill. That is the chief reason of my answer to the Honourable Mover's original speech."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR:—"As both these assurances have been given, I do not press the resolution."

With the permission of His Excellency the President, the resolution was withdrawn.

RESOLUTION RE DEVELOPMENT OF EDUCATION IN THE CEDED DISTRICTS.

The Hon'ble Mr. P. SIVA RAO:—"The resolution I have the honour to move runs thus:—

IV. This Council recommends to His Excellency the Governor in Council that special steps may be taken for the development of education in the Ceded districts, by opening of more schools, by the grant of fee concessions or scholarships, by the appointment of school-attendance committees and otherwise.'

"Your Excellency, it is a notorious fact that the educational advance in the Ceded districts is at a very low ebb. It is classed as the most backward educationally of all the districts in the Presidency. To convince Honourable Members of this Council, one has to take them to the account of the educational progress which appears in the Gazetteers of the several districts. Speaking of education in the Bellary district, it is stated in the Bellary District Gazetteer 'According to the statistics of the last census, an abstract of some of which will be found in the separate appendix to this Gazetteer, Bellary is backward educationally, though slightly less behindhand than its neighbours, the other Ceded districts. Between 4 and 5 in every hundred of its people can read and write but the large majority of these are to be found among its male population and in the education of its girls it is inferior to every district in the Presidency except the jungly agencies of Ganjam and Vizagapatam. The district is also ranked by the educational department among the backward areas of the Presidency'. Coming to the number of pupils that are undergoing instruction in the elementary schools and the secondary schools, we have an account of it in the appendix printed in the same Gazetteer at page 34.

"From these statistics it is plain what low percentage, the number of those that are receiving instruction in the secondary schools bears to the whole school-going population. It is also noted here that not many of these primary schools go up to the upper primary and speaking of the conditions in the other districts, Anantapur, Cuddapah and Kurnool, they are all similar. Cuddapah seems to be somewhat better, but it is still backward. 'In regard to education', it is stated 'the foundation of the formidable structure of statistics elaborated at the census is literacy defined as the ability of a person to write a letter and read a reply thereto. Measured by this standard, the Deccan is educationally the most backward division of the Presidency except the Agency, but within this division, Cuddapah is the most advanced.' It is needless for me to give the statistics of the number of people undergoing instruction in the secondary schools. It is stated in the same Cuddapah District Gazetteer that the total number of pupils undergoing instruction in the secondary schools is 520. In the higher elementary school for boys, it is 290; in those for girls, 102; and those that are undergoing instruction in the lower elementary schools,—the total number of them comes to 23,801. It is needless to refer to the statistics relating to Kurnool and Anantapur. Anantapur seems to be the most backward in this respect. An account of it appears in the District Gazetteer relating to that district. It is stated that only 4 in every 100 of the population of boys and 4 in every 1,000 of girls possess this accomplishment. It is true that the district is also classed by the Educational Department as backward. Looking to the statistics of the number of pupils undergoing instruction in the secondary schools, it is the lowest in the Presidency, it is about 722 in all. I need not refer Honourable Members of Council to the state of things in Kurnool. As I stated in the beginning, things are very similar. What can be done to remedy the state of things and to bring these districts on a level with the other districts of the Presidency? Government have to take up the situation seriously on hand. I am aware of what the Government have been doing in the matter. They have recently started a first grade college for the Ceded districts at Anantapur and they are also bearing the net cost of three or four schools in the Ceded districts but my submission is that much more need be done before these districts can be put on the same level with the other districts in the Presidency in point of educational advance. What I suggest in this resolution is that elementary schools and secondary schools may be started, liberal grants may be promised for aided schools and fee concessions and scholarships may be granted and school-attendance committees may also be appointed. All these steps are very necessary to foster education in these districts. I am aware that something is done for the improvement of the education of backward classes, but if the principle is recognized that the backward classes have to be pulled up, the principle should be recognized that backward tracts and districts also should be improved. I do not think it requires many words on my part to commend this resolution for the acceptance of this Council and I think it ought to command the sympathy of the Government and the Honourable the Director of Public Instruction."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR seconded the resolution.

The Hon'ble Mr. R. LITTLEHAILES:—"Your Excellency, the Honourable Mover has adduced statistics to indicate that the Ceded districts are educationally backward. That is the case; but I may suggest to him that other districts are also educationally backward. It is the endeavour of Government, as it always has been, to continue to open schools, to give grants and subsidies for the opening of schools, as many as possible, in the Ceded districts as far as funds will permit bearing in mind the needs of the other parts of the Presidency. This we have done as is indicated by our opening a college in Anantapur, by our bearing the net cost of maintenance of the municipal high schools of Bellary, Kurnool, Anantapur and Cuddapah and also another school at Koilkuntla recently taken over by the Board. Out of a total of 433 and 738 new schools opened in two recent years, 69 and 117 have been in the Ceded districts. This is a fact which indicates that the department is doing quite a lot towards the advancement of education in the Ceded districts. Turning to the request for the award of fee concessions and scholarships, the area of the jurisdiction of the Inspector of schools of the Third Circle is approximately the area of the Ceded districts. I think only 5 per cent of the total number of pupils reading in secondary schools in the Presidency are reading in schools in the Ceded districts and yet 8 per cent of the total number of available scholarships in secondary schools are awarded by the Inspector of Schools, Third Circle, that is to say, to the students who are reading approximately in the area of the Ceded districts. With reference to the appointment of school-attendance committees, it is I think, within the powers of the local bodies even now to appoint committees which will look after the interests of education and represent those interests to the local bodies concerned.

"Sir, what I have said very briefly would indicate the fact that we have borne in mind the needs of the Ceded districts, that we shall continue to bear them in mind and provide facilities for education in the Ceded districts as far as the funds at our disposal will permit."

The Hon'ble Mr. P. SIVA RAO:—"I am quite satisfied with the reply of the Honourable the Director of Public Instruction."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. VENKATAPATI RAJU:—"Your Excellency, we are not unaware that the Government have started a college in the Ceded districts. We have heard from the Honourable the Director of Public Instruction that every possible step is taken to increase education in the Ceded districts, but there is one statement made by the Honourable the Director of Public Instruction and that is that the want is not only confined to that portion of our Presidency but that it is felt in several other districts. It is no satisfaction to us. On the other hand, it shows that the Government should pay more attention to the matter of the expansion of primary education."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"That is not before this Council. The general extension of primary education is not before the Council. The resolution is confined to this: we are discussing about the development of education in the Ceded districts and the Honourable the Director of Public Instruction, therefore, confined his remarks to the Ceded districts. We are not talking about the general education of the Presidency."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. VENKATAPATI RAJU:—"I am quite aware that the resolution is confined to the Ceded districts. The Honourable the Director of Public Instruction has referred to the fact that a similar want is felt in other districts. I am referring to that point and I say that it does not give satisfaction: I am not concerned with the expansion of education in the Presidency. The Honourable the Director of Public Instruction was kind enough to say that he has opened many schools. I hear various complaints that buildings were constructed and schools were opened and teachers employed but there were no students to study. This is due to the fact that the local people where the schools are started were not consulted when the schools were opened."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"Is the Honourable Gentleman referring to the Ceded districts?"

The Hon'ble Mr. B. VENKATAPATI RAJU:—"This refers also to the Ceded districts."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"If he is not referring to the Ceded districts, he is out of order."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. VENKATAPATI RAJU:—"It is more applicable to the whole Presidency. I have direct knowledge of my district; I have no such direct knowledge of the Ceded districts."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"This resolution does not refer to the rest of the Presidency but refers to the Ceded districts."

(Mr. Davidson ; Mr. Krishna Rao.)

of 1918 when there was some revival. As the honourable mover told us, his constituency in Erode took up this problem. I suggest that was the result of special legislation in Bengal where leave to introduce a Bill on the subject was granted in November 1917 and actual discussion took place on the 3rd September 1918, when the Bill was referred to a select committee. The sponsor for that Bill, Doctor Shurawardy, drew attention to similar measures in other parts of the world, Baroda, Mysore and Hyderabad, and also to the recent passing into law of the Punjab Smoking Bill. I have not got copies of these enactments—they were not available in the Secretariat when notice of this resolution reached me—but I may refer to the debate which took place in September 1918 in the Bengal Legislative Council in order to draw attention to the attitude taken up by the Bengal Government at the time, as that is the most recent pronouncement of a Provincial Government on such a subject. The spokesman on behalf of the Bengal Legislative Council was the Maharaja of Burdwan. In explaining the attitude of the Government he said that it was one of strict neutrality, that the Government would neither support nor oppose the motion but wished that there should be frank and free discussion and gave official Members of the Legislative Council liberty to speak as they liked on the understanding that they should abstain from voting as the Government desired the decision to rest entirely with non-official representatives. That was, I may say, in accord with a prominent sentence in the speech of the mover, who said: 'I hope I have made it abundantly clear that the preponderance of Indian public opinion is in favour of the Bill. The measure before the House is primarily one for Indian opinion.'

"It was this discussion which probably revived interest in the matter in Southern India. The first indication of the revival was in the Erode Municipal Council where Mr. E. S. Ganapati Ayyar, a municipal councillor, moved a resolution on the subject. What he proposed was an amendment to sections 188 and 255 of the Madras District Municipalities Act, 1884, so as to empower municipal councils to license the sale of smoking requisites subject to conditions prohibiting sale to juveniles and also to promulgate by-laws rendering parents and guardians responsible. He recognized, as the Director of Public Instruction has told us more than once, that the chief origin of the vice of juvenile smoking is neglect of duty on the part of the parents and guardians. Mr. Ganapati Ayyar thought that legislation was necessary to eradicate the practice and hoped that this would stimulate parental interest. The municipal council adopted his resolution and he then addressed circulars to the chairmen of other municipalities in the Presidency as an endeavour to elicit public opinion at least in urban areas. Out of 72 municipal councils in the Madras Presidency, only 15, however, sent any reply. These all considered that legislation of this description was expedient. The case then came up before my Honourable Colleague Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar on the particular issue whether any amendment in the sense desired should be introduced in the Madras District Municipalities Act and his conclusion was that no such amendment was desirable, partly because there was no weight of opinion behind it and partly because he thought that such a prohibition would be unworkable.

"That is the history of the case. I cannot agree with the Hon'ble Mr. Narasimha Ayyar in his basic assumption that juvenile smoking is a vice which is rapidly increasing to an oppressive degree. There is not before the Government any evidence on that point. It may be a fact, but I am bound to say, so far as my limited experience goes, I do not see small boys smoking very often. It came to me as a surprise to find in a pamphlet of Doctor Rama Rao on the evils of smoking written five years ago the statement that 'all of us are aware that young boys of 10 or 12 smoke cigarettes to excess.' And I cannot accept generalizations based on the admission of the Hon'ble Mr. Narasimha Ayyar's young friend in Salem that everybody smokes nowadays and there is no need to impose any restriction, any more than I can accept the resolution of the Municipal Council of Erode as a sufficient confirmation of that testimony. If Government are to move in the matter, they must first collect a substantial body of evidence to show that the practice is widespread and that it is increasing and that public opinion really does desire legislation against it. I do not want any evidence of the fact that juvenile smoking is bad for the young, because everybody knows that. But the issue is whether legislation is to be attempted to check it or whether this is not a matter which might be left to parents and guardians to check. It is not only a question of gathering evidence as to the practice prevailing, but as to the view taken by popular opinion, by which I mean mainly Indian opinion, on the matter; and it is also a question of examining further what has been the practical effect of legislation in those provinces and in the Native States in which it has been introduced. I do not think there is before the Government at present any shred of evidence beyond what Sir Harold Stuart had at the end of 1915, but we shall be quite ready to ascertain by reference to district boards whether they think that legislation would do good and to give further consideration to the matter. It is possible that in some places evidence may be available to show that legislation has been an effective factor for good. Those are reasons why the Government cannot undertake legislation on this matter, but if any private individual should think fit to bring forward a Bill, the Government will be quite ready to direct an inquiry in the directions indicated, first to collect such evidence as can be found as to the prevalence of juvenile smoking in Southern India and whether it is on the increase, then as to the practical effect of preventive legislation in other provinces and as to the Indian public opinion on the need for legislation as distinguished from the admitted desirability of preventing juvenile smoking. I have nothing more to say than that under the circumstances Government are unable to accept the resolution."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. KRISHNA RAO:—"I am sorry that the Government have not been able to accept the resolution in the form proposed. It will be remembered that, so far as

13TH MARCH 1919.]

(Mr. Krishna Rao ; Mr. Narasimha Ayyar ; Mr. Davidson ; Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar.)

juvenile smoking is concerned, there is and there has been no difference of opinion. The only point urged by the Hon'ble Mr. Davidson is that there has not been evidence as to the widespread desire among the people of the country to check juvenile smoking nor as to the extent of the evil in the country. He has been good enough to remind us of the legislation undertaken in the province of Bengal and in the Punjab. I may draw the attention of the Council to the fact that when the Madras Children's Bill was introduced in March last year, there was a discussion as to the general principles of the Bill. It was urged by some non-official members that provisions may be incorporated in the Madras Children's Bill to check juvenile smoking. The Bill, it will be remembered, was chiefly on the model of the English Children's Act of 1908 which contains specific provisions regarding the prevention of juvenile smoking as was referred to by the Hon'ble Mr. Davidson in the course of his remarks. It was urged by several non-official Members that such provisions might be incorporated in the Act itself. Whether a separate Bill is introduced for the purpose of checking juvenile smoking or not, whether leave to introduce the Bill is proposed to be given when any Member seeks permission to introduce such a Bill, I think that if the Government are agreed, the proper occasion for doing it is in connexion with the Madras Children's Bill now under consideration. These principles were discussed when the Bill was introduced in the Council; but the Government did not come to any specific conclusion regarding that question at that stage. The matter was referred to a Select Committee and the Select Committee are likely to meet in the course of next month. I have all along been under the impression that once this new Bill is before the Select Committee there can be no objection to such provisions being incorporated there. But the reply of the Hon'ble Mr. Davidson suggests that there are some obstacles in the way of such provisions being incorporated. Whatever may be the result of this resolution, I would suggest that nothing which has been said on behalf of Government would prevent the incorporation of those necessary provisions in the Madras Children's Bill now under consideration. Nothing should be left out which is likely to add to the benefit and welfare of the children. I request that this attitude of the Government need not commit them to any particular view as to the desirability of having these provisions in the Madras Children's Bill. I myself wanted to propose this amendment in the Select Committee which is to meet on the fifteenth."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR:—"The Hon'ble Mr. Davidson is prepared to inquire into the need for it, to inquire into the question how far this vice is increasing and how far popular opinion is in favour of legislation. That is a proper attitude for the Government to take if I may say so with all deference. But I do not quite understand why the Hon'ble Mr. Davidson should require as a necessary pre-requisite for such an inquiry a proposal from some private member to introduce legislation on this subject. As my Honourable Friend on the right pointed out, there is, at present, legislation connected with this matter—the Children's Bill—and there is my motion which I have now put forward before the Council and this is the occasion which has brought the matter to the notice of the Government. I believe we need not care so much as to questions of form whether this is in the shape of a Bill from a private member. Government may be pleased to refer this matter to the various local bodies to ascertain their opinions as to the existence of this vice and as to the existence of a sufficiently strong basis of public opinion in this matter. As the Hon'ble Mr. Davidson pointed out, when a private gentleman refers the question to 72 municipalities, only 15 of them have extended the courtesy to him of a reply. Others are in their strange way, not caring to reply. That does not mean that in their opinion there is no need. We are all familiar with the ways of municipal councils and for various reasons they are apathetic. It does not mean that if the matter is placed before the Council, the 57 municipalities which have not replied will be against it; perhaps they may be able to reply in the same way as the 15 that have replied. These 15 municipalities, in reply to Mr. Ganapathi Ayyar, said that they perceived the necessity of preventing this vice. If the Hon'ble Mr. Davidson would be kind enough, in consultation with the Hon'ble Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar to have it submitted to the local bodies for their opinion giving them copies of this debate, that will be quite enough. As to consulting the various Darbars and the Ceylon Government, I believe that also may be done in view of the motion that I have made and the discussion that has followed thereon and the proposed amendment to the Children's Bill. The Children's Bill will not wait for introduction by a private member which now under the rules requires two months' time. The only thing wanted by the Hon'ble Mr. Davidson is the immediate issue of a paper for introduction by a non-official Member to introduce the Bill. I am prepared to send up one to-morrow. But I believe the Hon'ble Mr. Davidson would not stand in need of such a formal piece of paper. May I suggest to him that he may send a copy of these proceedings to the various local bodies and elicit opinions from the various local Governments? If the Government would give me that undertaking, I would not press this matter because I feel that the Government do feel the necessity of getting further information."

The Hon'ble Mr. L. DAVIDSON:—"I have no objection to complying with the substance of the wish of the Honourable Member. Copies of the discussion will be communicated to local bodies if my Honourable Colleague sees no objection to such a reference"

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"Certainly I have no objection."

928 RESOLUTIONS RE PUBLIC INQUIRY INTO THE ECONOMIC CONDITION OF THE BELLARY DISTRICT AS A PRELIMINARY TO RESETTLEMENT; DELETION OF PARAGRAPH ON POLITICAL SITUATION FROM THE PRESIDENCY ADMINISTRATION REPORT; MEMBERS OF THE INDIAN CIVIL SERVICE AND THE REFORM SCHEME AND EFFECT TO BE GIVEN TO CERTAIN RECOMMENDATIONS IN THE RESOLUTION ON LOCAL SELF-GOVERNMENT.

(Mr. Chidambaranatha Mudaliyar; Sir Alexander Cardew; the President; Mr. Siva Rao.)

[13TH MARCH 1919.]

The Hon'ble Mr. K. CHIDAMBARANATHA MUDALIYAR:—"Your Excellency, the Hon'ble Sir Alexander Cardew evidently conceives that the Manual itself provides for such an enquiry. What is really wanted just now is that that inquiry should be a real inquiry and not merely an inquiry in name. That is apparently what happens very often when resettlement takes place. The Hon'ble Mr. Siva Rao is, I think, perfectly reasonable in claiming that that inquiry should be given proper notice of to the people and every one who is interested in the matter should be given an opportunity of placing before that officer all that he has to place before him on such an occasion. The resettlement of the district is a matter which vitally affects the interests for all time of the agriculturists and in such a matter I believe your Excellency's Government will be fair and reasonable in acceding to that request and providing for a public inquiry not only in the case of Bellary but also in the case of every district which comes in for resettlement."

The Hon'ble Sir ALEXANDER CARDEW:—"I will only say one word. The resolution we accepted four years ago said that the special settlement officer should give public notice of the operations before they commenced, and should notify that he is prepared to receive and consider representations either oral or written from persons interested in the economic condition of the tracts. The Government Order which was placed on the Editors' table said: "it is not intended that there should be any formal, or semi-judicial inquiry such as the examination or cross-examination of witnesses by vakils, but any person desirous of placing facts before the special settlement officer should be given all reasonable opportunity of doing so in an informal way. If the Honourable Member will furnish me information that this has not been carried out, I will ask my Honourable Friend Mr. Buckley to inquire into the position and try to have it remedied."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"Will the Honourable Gentleman be satisfied?"

The Hon'ble Mr. P. SIVA RAO:—"These instructions should be sent over to settlement officer. I am afraid that has not been done."

The resolution was put and lost.

RESOLUTION RE DELETION OF PARAGRAPH ON POLITICAL SITUATION FROM THE PRESIDENCY ADMINISTRATION REPORT.

The Hon'ble Mr. P. SIVA RAO:—"I do not propose to move it."

With the permission of His Excellency the President, the following resolution was not moved:—

"VI. This Council recommends to His Excellency the Governor in Council that in the introduction to the Report on the Administration of the Madras Presidency the portion relating to 'Political situation' may be deleted."

RESOLUTION RE MEMBERS OF THE INDIAN CIVIL SERVICE AND THE REFORM SCHEME.

The Hon'ble Mr. P. SIVA RAO:—"I do not propose to move it, in view of the statement made on the 7th of March."

With the permission of His Excellency the President, the following resolution was not moved:—

"VII. This Council recommends to His Excellency the Governor in Council that suitable action may be taken to prevent the members of the Indian Civil Service in this Presidency from joining in an agitation against the Reform Scheme."

RESOLUTION RE EFFECT TO BE GIVEN TO CERTAIN RECOMMENDATIONS IN THE RESOLUTION ON LOCAL SELF-GOVERNMENT.

The Hon'ble Mr. P. SIVA RAO:—"Your Excellency, the resolution refers to certain recommendations contained in the resolution of the Government of India which is so often quoted in this Council. The recommendations that I suggest are contained in this resolution:—

"VIII. This Council recommends to His Excellency the Governor in Council that the following recommendations of the Government of India contained in their resolution, dated 16th May 1918, may be adopted and carried into effect:—

(i) The District officers should utilize their district boards more fully than at present for consultation and advice in matters of general concern.

RESOLUTION RE EFFECT TO BE GIVEN TO CERTAIN RECOMMENDATIONS IN THE RESOLUTION ON LOCAL SELF-GOVERNMENT. 929

13TH MARCH 1919.]

(Mr. Siva Rao.)

(ii) The local bodies should have full liberty to impose or alter taxation within the limits laid down by municipal laws.

(iii) If a municipal or rural board has to pay for a service, it should control it.

(iv) The local bodies should have a free hand with regard to their budgets.

(v) The local bodies should, subject to certain exceptions, have full control over their establishments.'

I will take the recommendations one by one. The first is that the district officers should utilize their district boards more fully than at present for consultation and advice in matters of general concern. The history of this question is briefly as follows: the proposal to liberalise district administration is a very long-standing one. Honourable Members of Council will remember that this point as to advisory councils for the district officer was vehemently pressed before the Royal Commission on Decentralisation with the result that they negatived the proposal; they vetoed the proposal and they said that no advisory councils were necessary because one or two witnesses said that what the advisory councils are expected to fulfill, the district boards might do. In paragraph 534 of the said report, the Commissioners stated: "We also agree with those witnesses who spoke against a separate advisory council for the Collector. We consider that the district boards which include leading officials of the district as well as representative non-officials afford a convenient instrument for furnishing advice to the Collector upon matters which although not included in their administrative sphere, affect the district generally or important portion of the people. We understand that some Collectors do already make use of their district boards in this way but we should like to see this practice extended." Then they also stated: that consultation with the district boards by the Collector should not be a private consultation. So while negativing the proposal to appoint advisory councils to advise District Collectors in matters pertaining to administration, they stated that the district boards can as well fulfill the same purpose and there was no necessity for creating fresh bodies. The bodies that were already in existence, the district boards, might be utilized and this was the recommendation made by the Decentralisation Commission and the same recommendation has been adopted in the resolution of the Government of India, dated 16th May 1918. They say in paragraph 5 of the resolution: "It should be recognized that by whatever method this may be effected, a substantial increase should be secured in the present elective element in the local bodies and in view of this contemplated increase, the Government of India desire that district officers should, as recommended in paragraph 534 of the Decentralization Commission's report, utilize their district boards more fully than at present for consultation and advice in matters of general concern which lie outside the sphere prescribed for the activities of these boards." This is the recommendation which I propose should be carried out in practice. This is a very old question, My Lord, and time after time, resolutions have been brought forward in this Council regarding this matter. As I said, this was vehemently pressed before the Council and a resolution in respect of a similar matter was brought before the Imperial Council in 1912. In February 1912 a resolution was brought into this Council by the Hon'ble Mr. Ramachandra Rao in these terms: "This Council recommends to His Excellency the Governor in Council that the present functions of local boards should be enlarged, and that statutory provision should be made in the Local Boards Act now under revision empowering local boards to express their views on all subjects relating to the various branches of district administration." The resolution which the Hon'ble Mr. Ramachandra Rao brought then is not the same as the resolution I am now moving before this Council. That resolution suggested that the functions of district boards should be increased so as to comprise all matters relating to the administration of the District Collector and he also proposed that there should be some statutory recognition. If this resolution had been carried, it would have come to this; that in all those matters which are now in the province of the District Collector, it would be proper for the members of the district board to intervene. He also suggested that he would not stop there but he wanted that they should be consulted, and their advice should be taken and he also suggested that they should have administrative functions as well. In other words, he went far beyond the famous resolution of the late lamented Mr. Gokhale and said that district boards should be vested with more administrative functions. What the District Collector is now doing or most of it, could be transferred to the district board. The resolution I am moving now is in consonance with the latest resolution of the Government of India. There is a proposal to multiply functions of the local bodies, but that is a separate matter. It may be in course of time that some matters which appertain to the province of the District Collector may be thought fit matters to be within the province of the district board and the district boards might have some administrative responsibility in regard to them. My proposal is that in all matters, whether they are within the purview of the district boards or not, in all matters relating to district board administration, the district board members should be consulted and their advice should be taken in all important matters. There is a lot of difference between this resolution and that. It simply proposes that he should consult them. Their advice is not binding on the District Collector. Several Collectors were examined before the Decentralization Commission and one and all of them said that that was what they had been doing. If they had been doing that, why the practice should not be officially countenanced, 926 RESOLUTIONS RE DEVELOPMENT OF EDUCATION IN THE CEDDED DISTRICTS AND PUBLIC INQUIRY INTO THE ECONOMIC CONDITION OF THE BELLARY DISTRICT AS A PRELIMINARY TO RESETTLEMENT.

(Mr. Venkatapati Raju ; Mr. Siva Rao ; Sir Alexander Cardew ; Mr. Krishna Rao.) [13TH MARCH 1919.]

The Hon'ble Mr. B. VENKATAPATI RAJU :—" Then leaving out that point in deference to your Excellency's wish, I may point out that there must be an extension not only of elementary and secondary but collegiate education. Constitutional freedom is barred unless people are enlightened. It is absolutely necessary that steps must be taken immediately in the Ceded districts as also in the other districts when occasion arises. I consider that it is not enough, the attention paid is not enough to carry primary education to the doors of the people. Additional attention must be paid to it in order to see that more people are educated."

The Hon'ble Mr. P. SIVA RAO :—" Your Excellency, the Honourable the Director of Public Instruction pointed out that there were other backward districts also. I may tell him that these are the most backward districts. I am quite alive to the fact that the Government are doing a lot for the extension of education, but a lot more remains to be done. For instance, the number of graduates turned out from the Ceded districts last year was about 40 or 45. This is very poor. The number undergoing instruction in colleges is very meagre. That is due to the poverty of the people. Government have been giving scholarships for instruction in the secondary schools. I humbly ask the Honourable the Director of Public Instruction whether it would not be possible to extend scholarships for students reading in the colleges as well as in the Ceded districts. I am quite satisfied with the sympathetic attitude shown by the Honourable the Director of Public Instruction. I am quite satisfied with the assurance that Government will continue to bestow the same attention to those backward districts. I have no wish to press the resolution. I only want the Honourable the Director of Public Instruction to note whether he could not give a few more scholarships to students from the Ceded districts who are pursuing their college course in the college classes."

With the permission of His Excellency the President, the resolution was withdrawn.

RESOLUTION RE PUBLIC INQUIRY INTO THE ECONOMIC CONDITION OF THE BELLARY DISTRICT AS A PRELIMINARY TO RESETTLEMENT.

The Hon'ble Mr. P. SIVA RAO :—" Your Excellency, the resolution I have the honour to move runs thus :—

'V. This Council recommends to His Excellency the Governor in Council that a public inquiry may be held into the economic condition of the Bellary district before proposals are made for its resettlement.'

"I may tell Honourable Members that resettlement is in full operation in the district of Bellary and inquiries are going on in the taluk of Adoni. Before I proceed further, I wish to draw the attention of Honourable Members of Council to the low economic conditions of the ryots in the Bellary district. When it is so, it becomes all the more necessary to conduct a thorough public inquiry into the economic condition of these people before any further rise is voted for. At page 101 of the Bellary Gazetteer, it is stated : 'The result is that the average ryot of Bellary is poor. His house is inferior to that of his brother in the south, his household utensils more primitive, the jewels on his womankind are far fewer, he has less luxuries in the way of fruit, vegetables and condiments and he can seldom indulge in the delights of civil litigation. His food supply depends on the rains of June and July ; if two successive monsoons fail, his cattle die in thousands and he himself, as will be seen later, lives from crop to crop and has usually hardly emerged from one famine before he is submerged under another.' That is the economic condition."

The Hon'ble Sir ALEXANDER CARDEW :—" May I save the Honourable Member the trouble if I say that I can accept the resolution if the word 'public' is omitted ?"

The Hon'ble Mr. P. SIVA RAO :—" As regards this enquiry, Government in 1915 accepted a resolution moved by the Hon'ble Mr. A. S. Krishna Rao in the following terms :—

'This Council recommends that His Excellency the Governor in Council be pleased to direct that, when the re-settlement of any tract is undertaken, the Special Settlement Officer shall give public notice of the operations, before they commence, and notify that he is prepared to receive and consider representations, oral or written, from persons interested, as to the economic condition of the people in the tract.'

"This resolution is practical in the terms in which I have worded mine. By the word 'public' I mean that ample notice should be given to the public that the Settlement Officer would hold an enquiry into the economic condition of the ryots, that he will give notice of the enquiry, it will be accessible to the public and it should be held in a public place and any evidence that is coming should be recorded and brought on record. There will be no cross-examination."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. KRISHNA RAO :—" Your Excellency, I second this resolution. I do not know if my Honourable Friend has accepted the suggestion of the Hon'ble Sir Alexander Cardew. I have not heard any statement from him that he accepted the suggestion of the Hon'ble Sir Alexander Cardew."

RESOLUTION RE PUBLIC INQUIRY INTO THE ECONOMIC CONDITION OF THE BELLARY DISTRICT AS A PRELIMINARY TO RESETTLEMENT. 927

13TH MARCH 1919.] (Mr. Krishna Rao ; Sir Alexander Cardew ; Mr. Siva Rao.)

"I do not know if there is any harm in retaining the word 'public'. The Hon'ble Mr. Siva Rao reminded this Council that on a former occasion, my resolution which was practically in the same form as the one now suggested by the Hon'ble Sir Alexander Cardew, was accepted. The word 'public' does not mean that it should be a judicial inquiry ; but it simply means that public notice should be given of the enquiry. If the word 'public' is omitted, this resolution will read thus :—" This Council recommends to His Excellency the Governor in Council that an inquiry may be held into the economic condition of the Bellary district before proposals are made for its resettlement." These are the standing rules. Even now, I believe, it is the rule that no resettlement of any district should be undertaken without an inquiry into the economic condition of the district. If the word 'public' is omitted from the resolution, I do not think that the resolution will advance the position an inch further. I would not advise my Honourable Friend to consent to the omission of the word 'public'. The Hon'ble Sir Alexander Cardew would agree with me that by the omission of the word, it does not make any change. It may be a purely departmental inquiry if the word 'public' is not accepted. We will merely reaffirm the provisions already contained in the rules of resettlement operations."

The Hon'ble Sir ALEXANDER CARDEW :—" Your Excellency, there is very little between me and the Honourable Gentleman. The rules already provide for a full economic inquiry and Government in 1915 undertook and carried out the undertaking that full public notice should be given of the operations and that the settlement officer should receive any representation either oral or written from the public and they are quite ready to give the assurance that the settlement officer will receive any representations from any person interested in the matter who wishes to approach him. I think Honourable Members interested will see that, in effect, they have all the opportunities desirable and Government wish to have full information as to the Ceded districts, and are anxious to have all the information that may be given to the settlement officer and there is no objection to receive any such representation as may be made. But they do not want a public inquiry in which witnesses are called who are to be cross-examined ; that will not help to ascertain the truth. We do not want to turn the settlement officer's room into a special court. If the Honourable Member will see the Settlement Manual, he will see how great is the necessity for a settlement officer to collect information. The very first direction is to carefully enquire and study the economic condition and the material progress of a district. Rules 5 and 6 refer to that. Rule 5 says :—" The settlement officer may, in addition to the above, collect information on any other points such as the effects of droughts, indebtedness of ryots which he may deem necessary for the elucidation of the economic condition of the people in the tract to be re-settled." Rule 6 says :—" The settlement officer should also, by a careful inspection of the different tracts and localities of each taluk and by consulting revenue officials and intelligent ryots, acquire such a thorough knowledge of the circumstances of the district or tract to be resettled as will enable him to proceed with confidence in framing the proposals for re-settlement." So, in every respect full opportunity is given for the collection of all information which the public can lay before the settlement officer. I suggest to my Honourable Friend that he need not press this resolution because he has got in the Settlement Manual a guarantee of a full, careful and complete inquiry."

The Hon'ble Mr. P. SIVA RAO :—" It is because the Resettlement Manual does not provide for a full and public inquiry, I came forward with this resolution. The Resettlement Manual only insists upon an inquiry being made. Nothing is specified regarding the mode of inquiry. Rule 2 simply says that a study of the economic condition should be made and statistics must be collected. He may do it at any time or call anybody he likes. It is also stated that the settlement officer may collect information on any other point. It states also that the settlement officer should, by inspection of the different tracts and localities of each taluk and by consulting revenue officials and intelligent ryots, acquire such thorough knowledge of the circumstances of a district or tract to be re-settled as will enable him to proceed with confidence in framing the proposals for resettlement. There is absolutely nothing in any of these rules which insist on a public inquiry being made. It is only an inquiry. Nothing is prescribed regarding the mode of inquiry. He may consult a few ryots, he is not bound to record evidence. Under the rules, it is incumbent upon the settlement officer to make an inquiry. What is the harm in the Government accepting this resolution ? I did not intend that witnesses should be examined by one party and cross-examined by another. I only intended that he should sit in some central place and notify that between such and such hours, anybody who likes may come forward with statistics and evidence will be taken. It will be recorded and embodied in the scheme report before resettlement proposals are made. I have some representation from my constituencies that this has not been done. Some of the richest landholders who were ready with figures of cultivation expenses, commutation rates and charges, — their evidence was not taken. Wherever evidence suits the official purposes, that is taken but not other evidence. That is the information given to me by my constituents in the Adoni taluk. A public inquiry, is a harmless thing ; it is not a judicial inquiry, let him notify the places where he will record the evidence, let it be done at a public place where the public, if they choose, may attend. Without the word 'public' it is not worth while moving the resolution."

932 RESOLUTION RE EFFECT TO BE GIVEN TO CERTAIN RECOMMENDATIONS IN THE RESOLUTION ON LOCAL SELF-GOVERNMENT.

(Mr. Siva Rao ; Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar.) [13TH MARCH 1919.

unexceptionable and that in the near future he will carry out these recommendations. Whether a revision of the rules or an amendment is necessary, that will be done. Whether we amend the rules or whether Government Orders are necessary it is time that this should be seriously considered. He also stated: 'We find that we have been doing most of the things which the Government of India have asked us to do. We started doing them before the resolution of the Government of India came to us and it was a satisfaction to us that what we were doing were on the lines laid down to us subsequently. Now I ask especially as regards the recommendations about the District Boards, the Local Government had it in view that the Local Boards and District Boards should be consulted in general matters affecting the administration of the district. I do not foresee any difficulty whatever in Government accepting this resolution.'

The Hon'ble Mr. K. Sadasiva Bhat seconded the resolution.

The Council then adjourned for a short interval.

The Council re-assembled at 3 p.m. when the discussion was resumed.

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"Your Excellency, the mover of this resolution wound up his speech with the expression of the hope that, as on a previous occasion, the Government would announce their intention of loyally carrying out the policy of the resolution of the Government of India in these respects. Let me assure him at once that that is our intention; just as in November last I said in connexion with several matters that came up, that it was our intention to carry out the policy laid down by the Government of India, so it would be our endeavour to carry out the policy laid down by them in regard to most of those things. Having said so, I venture to point out that in regard to the resolution of the Government of India, which is brought up from time to time, I fear it is not fully recognized that the Government of India themselves do not contemplate the whole thing being carried out immediately in a rigid sort of way. What they say in their resolution is: 'the Government of India fully recognize that it will not be possible to make all the injunctions formulated below of absolutely uniform application and are therefore willing to reserve to the local Governments the power to modify their application in specific cases and for specific reasons. But they expect that in the absence of such specific occasions, a substantial advance should now be made on the lines laid down and, from indications received in the course of their recent communications to heads of local Governments, they believe that the local Governments, each in its own degree, are also anxious to adopt a forward policy in general conformity with the wishes of the Government of India.' In the next paragraph they lay down the general policy; they say 'the general policy must be one of the gradual removal of unnecessary Government control and of differentiating the spheres of action appropriate for Government and for local bodies respectively.' While therefore, I have no hesitation in saying that it will be our endeavour to carry out the policy of the Government of India, I do hope that Honourable Members will realize that the Government of India expect us in applying those principles to take note of local conditions and to modify their application to suit those conditions. No useful purpose will be served by this Council committing itself to a general resolution saying that the Council recommends to the Governor in Council that the following recommendations of the Government of India may be adopted and carried into effect. I may point out that, without any recommendation from the Legislative Council, the Government of Madras are bound to carry out the declared policy of the Government of India. There need be no doubt about it; only it will be as well that we should not commit ourselves to any specific recommendations which make no allowance for local considerations, which ignore the fact that there may be differences in different localities which may need some change of procedure. Having said that, I will now take these things one by one. First, it is said that district officers should utilize their district boards more fully than at present for consultation and advice in matters of general concern. The Hon'ble Mr. Siva Rao has pointed out that this is different from the resolution which came before us over a year ago when it was proposed by the Hon'ble Mr. Ramachandra Rao that the boards should have statutory powers in this respect. There is nothing to prevent district officers utilising their boards for consultation and advice, and I believe several of them do so. I take it that it is not proposed to put the matter on a higher platform than that. If I may venture to point out to the Council, the Report on Indian Constitutional Reforms specifically says that the reformed representative district boards of the future should be utilized by district officers for the purpose of consultation and advice. Taking this report along with the resolution of the Government of India, the Council will see that this consultation is supposed to come in not now, but after the district boards are reformed and made fully representative. But at the same time, I do not want to take any technical ground; all that I want to suggest to Honourable Members is that we should not make any rule in the matter, but that we should allow a certain amount of elasticity in the working of these recommendations, and so also in regard to the other things, numbers 2, 3, 4 and 5 of the recommendation. These are all principles about the correctness of which there need be no doubt. It is our endeavour to embody them into laws. For instance, we dealt only this morning with legislation about the premier local body of the province and the legislation in regard to it has been passed and that legislation will show how, with the concurrence of the Council, we applied these principles to that body. Later on, the District Municipalities Bill which has gone up to the Government of India will, in due course, come before this Council and, in examining it, both in the Select Committee and afterwards, the Council will have an opportunity of seeing how far these principles have been carried out. If, in any case, it is shown that we should go further than in the Bill, we shall be glad to do so. So also in regard to the Local Boards Bill. But if it is intended to commit the Council to definite propositions now, in regard to what should be immediately done, Honourable Members will see that it would mean an examination of each one of these principles and every one of those laws as also any number of local considerations, all of which will mean not an affair of a day or two days, but of probably several days. If I am to explain here, how each one of those recommendations is proposed to be carried out, it will mean a repetition of a substantial portion of what we have done in the City Municipality Bill and probably a long account of what is going to be done in the District Municipalities Bill and in regard to the Local Boards Bill. Also, I would venture to point out that the restrictions which are imposed not by law but by the Municipal and Local Fund Codes have been under examination by a committee presided over by my Honourable friend Mr. Todhunter and of which I think the Hon'ble Mr. Siva Rao was a member. The recommendations of that committee are under consideration. I wonder whether the Hon'ble Mr. Siva Rao has signed the report of that committee. Yes; his suggestions as a member of that committee shall receive the most careful consideration and it will be our endeavour to go as far as we can in the matter. I trust the Honourable Member will see that, under these circumstances, it is neither desirable nor fair to ask the Council to commit itself to a number of cut and dry recommendations like these and that he may accept my assurance in the matter."

RESOLUTION RE EFFECT TO BE GIVEN TO CERTAIN RECOMMENDATIONS IN THE RESOLUTION ON LOCAL SELF-GOVERNMENT. 933

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO:—"My Lord, the Hon'ble Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar has referred to the two committees that were appointed for the revision of the Local Fund Code and the Municipal Account Code. Perhaps it is better to explain the exact position in which we were when those committees were appointed. The terms of reference made to that committee made it quite clear that it was the intention of Government that any recommendation made by these committees for enlarging the powers of local bodies should be within the four corners of the existing law."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"I agree."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO:—"That being so, we had a great deal of difficulty and I may say though several of us felt that we might go much further than we did, we had to consider the existing law in making our recommendations. I may perhaps illustrate it by reference to our budgets. Under the existing law, the budgets of local bodies have to be sent up to the Government for orders and all appointments made by municipalities and local boards should be approved of by the Government. Although we felt that in those matters a larger discretion might be vested in the local bodies, we found it impossible to give effect to it. What my Honourable Friend Mr. Siva Rao wishes to do is to re-examine the question not necessarily with reference to the existing law, but as to what is desirable in view of what has been stated in the last resolution of the Government of India on Local Self-Government in 1918 and also with reference to the idea that the first step in responsible government should be in the field of local self-government. Judging from this aspect, it seems to me, my Lord, that the question has to be very thoroughly examined in view of what the Hon'ble Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar has said, that the two Bills had already been sent up."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"One of them has been sent up and another is likely to be sent up."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO:—"When they come again for consideration, we shall be exactly in the same position as we were in the case of the Madras City Municipal Bill. Those directions in which we would like restrictions to be removed will be found in this Bill; directions with reference to finance, with reference to budget and all the directions which have been the subject of debate, will be almost the same as at present. If the Hon'ble Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar says that in this new aspect of enlarging local self-government embodied in the last resolution of 1918 as well as in the light of the Report on Constitutional Reforms, these two Bills have been considered in this larger vision, I have nothing further to say on that matter. If he gives me that assurance that these new Bills, one of which has gone up and the other is likely to go up to the Government of India, have been examined with this larger vision by the Government, I should have nothing further to say on this matter. Otherwise, the question is one which requires examination and the whole object of my Honourable Friend is to focus attention at this stage so that we may not again start complaining that these two Bills had gone with the old ideas, as has been stated by the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar. That is the whole question which is now under discussion and it is this aspect that my Honourable Friend Mr. Siva Rao wishes to draw attention to. If for that purpose, a committee is necessary and I think the Honourable Member should not hesitate to appoint a committee. I may say that other local Governments have taken action in the direction suggested by my Honourable Friend. The Bombay Government, I remember to have read in the newspapers, have appointed a committee after the issue of the resolution of 1918. I met two or three members of that committee in Poona last June."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"Does the Honourable Member propose a committee now?"

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO:—"It is for the Government to decide. I do not want the Hon'ble Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar to look at it from a purely technical aspect. Let us go to the substance of it. I believe in Bengal recently, I remember to have read a paragraph in the newspapers, that a committee was appointed to examine this question in the light of the remarks of the Government of India. My feeling is

930 RESOLUTION RE EFFECT TO BE GIVEN TO CERTAIN RECOMMENDATIONS IN THE RESOLUTION ON LOCAL SELF-GOVERNMENT.

(Mr. Siva Rao.)

[13TH MARCH 1919.]

I would leave to the Council to judge. A similar resolution was moved in this Council in November 1918 without indicating the lines on which it should proceed. It suggested that a committee of officials and non-officials should inquire into the present system of district administration and make the district board more representative of popular opinion. That was moved by the Hon'ble Mr. Krishna Rao. He proposed also that some typical functions which he mentioned, should be entrusted to the district boards. But my resolution is not that. It says that in all matters which do not legitimately appertain to the activities of the district board, in all matters they may be given the right of consultation and advice and the Collector may or may not act upon it, but for the present, I would only go so far. When the Local Boards Act comes up for revision and the District Municipalities Act also comes up for revision, when it is thought that some more functions could be usefully conferred upon local bodies, that is a different matter; but whether or not these functions rightly pertain to these bodies is another matter. But in all matters in which the District Collector exercises his discretion and judgment, he could consult the members of the district boards. It is an extremely easy thing for him to do. Sometimes twice a month the district board meets and then when he has got a general matter he may place it before the district board who may record their opinion. It only means that there should be something like a conference, something on the lines of what is done in Mysore; under official auspices, a conference takes place at certain places and the members may move resolutions, informal resolutions and it gives full opportunity to the District Collector to act as he likes. This is the spirit in which this recommendation is made and I hope there may not be any difficulty in adopting that resolution of the Government of India.

"Secondly, my recommendation is that the local bodies should have full liberty to impose or alter taxation within the limits laid down by municipal laws. I have thought it very opportune to bring forward this resolution in view of the fact that the Local Boards Act and the District Municipalities Act are under revision and anything that we may say and decide upon in this Council may be embodied in that Bill to be introduced into this Council. This recommendation is contained in paragraph 10 of the resolution of the Government of India where they state: that it is open to the Government to fix the maximum of house and drainage tax up to 15 per cent within the limits laid down by law; it should be open to the local bodies to vary it as they chose, they may have it at 14 per cent one year and 15 per cent another year provided they do not exceed the maximum limits laid down by law. They make one important proviso in the case of the indebted municipalities where before any alteration is made in taxation, the sanction of the Government is necessary. That is a harmless proposal and I think it is time enough that this recommendation should be accepted.

"My third recommendation is 'if a municipal or rural board has to pay for a service, it should control it.' That is contained in paragraph 12 of the resolution of the Government of India. They say: 'The Commission proposed that, if a municipal or rural board had to pay for a service, it should control it: and that, where it was expedient that the control should be largely in the hands of Government, the service should be a provincial one'. I refer to this service especially to the educational service and the medical service. Most of the money is spent out of local funds in the educational service, but I may say that the local bodies have very little control over education, even elementary education. I think elementary education is mostly in the hands of these local bodies but even with regard to elementary education they have not a free hand. The Decentralization Commission made elaborate proposals as regards education. As it is, in the case of high schools we are dictated to by the Inspector of Schools, in the case of the elementary schools we are dictated to by the assistant inspector and sub-assistant inspector of schools. Even the casual leave applications of a teacher in the primary school have to pass through the sub-assistant and assistant inspectors and probably custom and tradition requires that we should conform ourselves to the recommendations of the officers. In the case of the high schools, we have necessarily to seek the advice of the inspectors in making appointments, disposing of casual leave applications and in increasing the pay even by one rupee of any teacher. We have got no doubt, the advice in the guise of a request. But it is a real mandate. There are certain constitutional checks if we disregard that mandate. In making appointments carrying a salary of more than Rs. 100 we have to consult the inspector of schools and in certain cases, in the expenditure of money over a certain sum we have to take the sanction of the Director of Public Instruction. So every detail of educational matters is solved for us by the inspector and the result is that we do not feel or realize any such responsibility in the matter. In paragraph 75; this is what the Decentralization Commission said:—

'The local Governments make substantial contributions towards the educational expenditure of the boards, but we do not think this a valid argument for taking the practical management out of the hands of these bodies. Evidence has been given that they do not take any real interest in educational matters; and this is not unnatural since they are so closely restricted by departmental rules and Provincial educational codes, which settle the school curricula, the extent to which grants-in-aid may be given, the proportion of masters to scholars, holiday, etc., that their management can be little more than nominal.'

"Probably the Members of the Council did not know that even casual leave applications have to be sent up to the sub-assistant inspector. In weighty matters they may consult the inspector but there need not be anything like compulsion. They also say that they recommend that all these restrictions should be removed. Again in the case of the medical service, we have hardly any control; we have no control over the medical institutions. Hitherto, before the Government took over charge of the district head quarter hospitals, the municipalities had to manage them; and though these are now taken over by the Government, the municipalities are still in charge of the dispensaries and I may say we are not at liberty to appoint our own men. Under the Code, we are bound to appoint a man for the sub-assistant surgeon's cadre. It must be a Government man, we cannot appoint a private man. We cannot have direct correspondence with the medical subordinates in our charge and if we issue orders or instruction to the sub-assistant surgeon—never mind orders—if we sent instructions, the sub-assistant surgeon would remind us of the right formality in the matter, that it should be sent through the district, medical and sanitary officer. Promotions are in his hands, leave is in his hands and everything is in his hands. Every indent that comes to us comes through the District Medical and Sanitary Officer; even in the case of midwives and ward boys, all these proposals come through the District Medical and Sanitary Officer. The result is we do not feel any responsibility. Under the Local Fund and Municipal Codes, the District Medical and Sanitary Officer has got real control over these institutions with regard to which the Commission observed: 'We consider that the hospital at each district headquarters should be taken over by the Government.' That recommendation has been carried out. They also say 'other hospitals and dispensaries in the rural tracts should ordinarily be under the control of the sub-district boards and the staff of assistant surgeons should, as far as possible, be converted into regular board servants.'

"Then it is also stated that the district boards would ordinarily recruit for this service men possessed of qualifications approved by the Surgeon-General in Madras.

"So far as regards medical service. I may refer to one other service and that is the plague service which has been my favourite theme in this Council. We have to pay the money, recently there has been a classification of the expenditure, as to which operations should be paid for by us and which by the Provincial Government. We have to pay for the rat destruction but it has to be decided by the Collector."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"Does not the Municipal Council carry out rat destruction?"

The Hon'ble Mr. P. SIVA RAO:—"When we have to pay money, Rs. 200 or 250 per mensem, the Council has to resolve and come to a decision that in certain town, rat-destruction is necessary. In regard to other matters, whenever we pay the money we must have control over that service. Applying that maximum to this case, then we must have full control of the service."

"Then my fourth recommendation is that the local bodies should have a free hand with regard to their budgets. I know this recommendation has been accepted by the committee which was appointed some time ago for the revision of the Local Fund Code and Municipal Code, with a slight modification. In the case of the city municipality I see that the Government have gone the full length of this recommendation, the Government have prescribed one lakh and in the case of mufassal municipalities it is 5 per cent of the normal revenues which is the minimum balance that is prescribed. Subject to the minimum standing balance and subject to the repayment of loans, I think they must have a free hand in drawing up their own budgets and Government should not have any power to interfere. Notice may be given to the heads of the department just for their information. But they must not have any power to deal with them. Incidental to this recommendation, that they should have the power of framing the budget, comes the power of re-appropriation. Even if we want to raise the peon's pay from Rs. 7 to Rs. 8, we have to get the sanction of the Collector. Even in such small matters we are not trusted and how can we ever realize responsibility?"

"My last recommendation is that the local bodies should, subject to certain exceptions, have full control over their establishments. The exceptions they make are in the case of the engineer, the health officer and the revenue officer, or the secretary or the chief executive officer of the Corporation. In all other cases, they must have a free hand in appointing their officers without any regard to outside sanction. They must have full liberty to punish them and the local body should not be put to the necessity of referring the matter to Government.

"These are the recommendations that I propose may be adopted. I know that in August 1918, a resolution was moved by the Hon'ble Mr. A. S. Krishna Rao that a committee may be appointed to carry out the recommendations contained in this resolution and then there was an elaborate reply made by the Hon'ble Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar. I have closely studied the reply as to whether he made any statement as to the intentions of the Government in regard to these matters. That reply does not contain any statement of the policy in regard to these matters which I have moved. It contained what the Provincial Government have done by way of extension of franchise, by way of the improvement of the constitution of the Councils and by way of substitution of election wherever nomination prevailed and by the appointment of non-official chairmen wherever official chairmen presided. Those matters were elaborately dealt with, but these matters have not been dealt with. It is also stated in the reply of the Honourable Member in charge that whatever the Government of India have stated, they would loyally abide and there was no necessity for a committee in that matter. This is what the Honourable Member in charge stated: 'I would first of all point out that the principles laid down by the Government of India are the principles laid down by a higher authority. They are binding on us. It is our function to carry them out. Though there are several points on which we have not come to a conclusion, the general conclusion that we have come to is, that the resolution of the Government of India is unexceptionable and must be carried out.' I expect the same reply to these recommendations. I expect the Honourable Member in charge to say that they are

The Hon'ble Mr. B. VENKATAPATI RAJU:—"I shall move XXXV."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"The Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar has asked that resolution No. XXI be taken up next. If the Council has no objection, we will ask him to move No. XXI."

RESOLUTION RE IMPERIAL GRANT FOR THE DEVELOPMENT OF THE INDUSTRIES IN THIS PRESIDENCY.

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"I am obliged to the Council for allowing me to move resolution No. XXI at present out of its place. The resolution I have the honour to move runs thus:—

"XXI. This Council recommends to His Excellency the Governor in Council that they may be pleased to apply to the Government of India for an initial grant of one hundred lakhs of rupees and a recurring annual grant of fifty lakhs of rupees for a period of ten years to enable the Madras Government to develop the industries in the province."

"By this resolution, I wish to emphasise two matters of vital importance so far as this province is concerned. The two matters which I wish to emphasise are these: the absolute backwardness of Madras as an industrial province in India apart from the question of the backwardness of India itself. That is a matter with which I am not at present concerned. The second point which I wish to emphasise is the great injustice which has been done for years as a matter of history by the Government of India to the Government of Madras in the matter of the financial relations between the two Governments. Madras unfortunately is labouring under various disabilities as regards industrial development. It has no natural resources; it has a port which was until the other day merely a nominal one and it is only in recent years that the port has come to be regarded as one worthy of consideration. If the name 'benighted Presidency' is applicable to this province it is in industrial matters that that term is aptly applicable; and that backwardness is due not so much to the lack of initiative or enterprise of the people or of the Government of the land as to the disabilities which were imposed upon that Government and upon the people by far off Simla, Calcutta and Delhi. Madras has been unfortunate in many respects. The people have not enough resources left to themselves to help themselves. Whereas rich Bengal contributes only 750 lakhs of rupees as revenue and industrial Bombay contributes only 1,001 lakhs of revenue, Madras has the good fortune and the misfortune to pay nearly 1,400 lakhs of revenue. That is, more is taken from the poor people of Madras by way of taxation than from the rich provinces of Bengal and Bombay thereby leaving little to the people with which they can help themselves. Not only that. Looking at it from the point of view of the Government, all the money raised here is not in the hands of the Government for it to apply to the Provincial needs; whereas Bengal contributes only about 69 lakhs per annum to the central Government and Bombay contributes only about 88 lakhs per annum to the central Government, Madras has been contributing for years past nearly 400 lakhs. This disproportion how any one could have allowed to take place all these years, is beyond my comprehension. This injustice has been going on for years together. I know now and then as we non-official Members in this Council have been helplessly wailing just satisfaction of seeing the Finance Member helplessly wailing against the predominant partner, the central Government; but his voice was the voice of feebleness and was never heard with that violence which I could have expected from this Government. In these days, nothing pays like violence. It would have served the purpose of Madras if our Government had been more violent and insistent in their demands and if our people also had helped the Madras Government by raising a howl about this continued injustice which is referred to as matter of satisfaction by the Montagu-Chelmsford Report. They say this is the historical condition and therefore they propose to leave it there. Not only has the injustice been there, but they propose to continue it in the recent proposals; if there is any unsatisfactory feature in the proposals of the Montagu-Chelmsford Report it is this aspect about it, that they want to continue this injustice in the financial relations between the Madras Government and the central Government. I wanted to bring out that aspect of it very strongly indeed at least so that some reparation may be made for past injury and that is the reason why I brought forward this proposition. I am quite aware that I may be told that this is an inopportune moment, an unfortunate occasion for us to raise the question. The Honourable Member in charge will say that the financial relationship between the local Government and the central Government is in the course of correspondence and consideration and especially provincial autonomy is going to come and he will ask 'why are you proposing this at this stage.'

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"I am not going to say that."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"I am glad you are not going to make that statement. My object is that this Government should accept this resolution and forward it as the demand of this province for reparation for past injuries. We are not concerned how they are going to make it; let them rob it out of other provinces that have grown rich at our expense. The whole revenue raised in Bengal does not represent one year's jute crop there and if you consider that Bengal has been let off with 69 lakhs contribution to the central Government, you will realize the magnitude of the injustice done to Madras; so much so that these jute merchants have invaded the south and Ootacamund was characterised by a friend of mine as Jutacamund. There is nothing left for us; our surpluses have been appropriated and it was a great folly to have allowed our surpluses to accumulate. There was absolutely no necessity to raise all this revenue out of the people when our local needs did not require such large taxation and having raised it, to have allowed the surplus to remain there for the central Government to take it away was an act of folly. But there is no use of bemoaning the past. Let us make preparation for the future. It is for that, that I come forward with this suggestion. The Honourable Member might perhaps ask, what is the good of making a proposal to ask for Rs. 100 lakhs initial grant and a recurring grant of 50 lakhs. What is the out and dry scheme that you have—how are you going to spend the 50 lakhs? I hope he will not put such a question. There is so much to do. What with the recommendations of the Indian Industrial Commission, what with the proposals which the Madras Government have been keeping in view for years past, but which they have not been able to carry out owing to financial embarrassment and also to interference from above—there is much to be done. If we consider the history of the industrial movement in Madras, we cannot but feel very sad indeed. I remember in the very early eighties, the Madras Government taking active interest in developing local industries in the province and they went on inquiring into the matter and there was an Industrial Conference after some years and then the Madras Government embarked upon an active industrial policy. But the Honourable Member representing commerce will forgive me if I may say that owing to the shortsighted opposition of the then European merchants, the Madras Government were disabled and prevented by the Secretary of State from carrying on the very useful work which they have set before themselves. Their activities were circumscribed, their duties were defined in a way that it was impossible for the Madras Government to do anything effectively to develop the industries of the province. But I am glad to note that there is a change in the angle of vision. The Industrial Commission have reported that in future the Government must play an active part in the industrial development of the country with the aim of making India more self-contained in respect of men and material; and it is impossible for Government to undertake that task unless provided with adequate administrative equipment and fore-armed with reliable scientific and technical advice and various other matters. If one-fourth of what the Madras Government had in view for all these years were to be carried out, we will require large sums of money. I will mention one instance which has natural resources. Madras is very deficient in natural resources. There is at least one natural source which may be availed of, I mean the water power. I remember there was a great movement to tap the Periyar for water power and a project which was then new was thought of in this connexion and investigations were undertaken and all of us were indulging in the hope and expectation that water power would be developed to develop industries. This was about the year 1890 or 1900 and there are various other things which are still hanging. We have simply to refer to the Government Order issued on the 1st of April 1918, No. 368, where, in prescribing the functions of the Director of Industries, the following functions were ascribed to the Director of Industries:—
(1) to collect information as to existing industries, their needs and the possibility of improving them or of introducing new industries;
(2) to carry out and direct experiments connected with local inquiries;
(3) to keep in touch with local manufacturers, to bring the results of his experiments to their notice, and to obtain their co-operation in the conduct of experiments on a commercial scale;
(4) to supervise the training of students; and
(5) to advise Government with regard to technical matters involving legislation."

this; when these two Bills come up again, we shall probably have to complain that some principles embodied in this resolution are not in these two Bills. The Hon'ble Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar feels that the Government have already taken action. If so, we have nothing further to say. If he is not satisfied in that matter, I should suggest that the matter should be gone into from this larger aspect. I may say there is one paragraph about district boards being consulted on general matters. Am I to understand from the Hon'ble Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar that the Bill about district boards embodies a provision to that effect, or do you find it necessary to place it on a statutory basis?"

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR :—“ It is not proposed to put it on a statutory basis.”

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO :—"The first part of the resolution says that district officers should utilise their district boards more fully than at present for consultation and advice in matters of general concern."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—“Does it mean that it should be put on a statutory basis.”

The Hon'ble Divan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO :—“ I believe so. If the Honourable Member means that they should be advisory bodies, irresponsible advisory bodies, we entirely disagree with him.”

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR :—“That is what the Hon'ble Mr. Siva Rao has proposed.”

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO:—"On that matter we have a difference of opinion with him. There are matters which have to be set right. There is the larger aspect of decentralising as much power to local bodies and freeing them from outside control. If the Honourable Member says that, in both these Bills, both these ideas have been carried out, it is all right. So far as I am concerned, I have no information."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. KRISHNA RAO :—“ I wish to make a few remarks on this resolution. So far as the first portion of the resolution is concerned, it suggests that ‘ the following recommendations of the Government of India contained in their resolution, dated 16th May 1918, may be adopted and carried into effect.’ So far as that portion is concerned, I do not think there is any difference of opinion, and it was pointed out on a former occasion by the Hon'ble Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar that these recommendations are binding on the local Government and effect will be given to them as early as possible. When we come to the detail embodied in this resolution, I must confess I am not enamoured of the recommendation contained in the first portion, namely, that District officers should utilise their district boards more fully than at present for consultation and advice in matters of general concern. This recommendation was first embodied in the Report of the Decentralization Commission in 1908 and it was embodied in the further resolution of the Government of India; and as has been pointed out by the Honourable Member in charge even it was stated in the Report on Constitutional Reforms, that this measure may be adopted in the case of reformed district boards. I believe, my Lord, that it is even now open to the district officers to consult the district boards; and we have advanced much since the days of the Decentralization Commission. Within the last ten or twelve years, the time has come when we can ask, reasonably and justly, for an enlargement of the administrative functions of these boards and for a gradual devolution of powers. It is not that I object to their being utilized more fully for purposes of consultation and advice; but that position does not meet the requirements of the case. That is a very mild and modest proposal. If we can advance in the proper direction, we may leave the details to their discretion. We should advance in certain definite directions. That is what I wish to say.

“ I shall make a few remarks with reference to some observations of the Honourable Member of this resolution. While making out a case for the municipality controlling the service which it pays for, he mentioned the instance of the control exercised in the case of educational institutions. One might naturally think that from his experience of the working of these educational institutions, the educational officers are exercising undue control over elementary schools in charge of local bodies. I do not like that we should go away with the impression that educational officers have any real power in respect of educational institutions; and that local bodies are not exercising real power. The Educational Inspection Code provides even now that the management of these institutions is with the local bodies themselves and that educational officers are mere advisers to these local bodies. It is suggested merely that they should be consulted in the matter of appointments; and that correspondence should go through them. They have no right to interfere with the discretion of local bodies in the matter of appointments; and if we are merely called upon to utilise them for purposes of consultation and advice, I do not think we need take serious objection to that. The Hon'ble Mr. Siva Rao must have experienced some difficulty and some educational officers there must have put obstacles in the way. If that is so, the Hon'ble the Director of Public Instruction might take notice. As a general rule, I would not subscribe to the position that they have a right to interfere, so long as certain formalities are complied with. From my experience, there have been very few instances in which they have interfered; and the real administration and management of the schools have been with the local bodies. It is expressly laid down in the Educational Code that the officers are merely to advise them. If any difficulty is experienced in the working of it, it will be for the local body to make a complaint against the educational officer and for the Hon'ble the Director of Public Instruction to take note of it. I want to make mention of this, lest we should go with the impression that the Government should now give us further powers. We have the power and we are exercising that power without any difficulty whatever. If we request the Government to consider this question, I do not know what it will lead to. It may lead to an enhancement of the powers or it may lead to a curtailment."

The Hon'ble Mr. P. SIVA RAO :—“ Your Excellency, there seems to be some difference of opinion in regard to my first recommendation. I never said that the administrative functions of the district board should not be multiplied. In fact, I welcome it. It is not going to be that all the functions now exercised by the Collector are going to be vested in the district board. He may consult them in regard to those functions. As regards the devolution of functions now exercised by the Collector, I have no objection whatever. As regards the educational restrictions, the Hon'ble Mr. A. S. Krishna Rao observed that there is no need for a change. If there had been no need for a change, there was hardly any necessity for the recommendation of the Decentralisation Commission. Is it not necessary for the casual leave applications to be sent up to the sub-assistant and the assistant Inspector? Is there no rule that the sanction of the Inspector of Schools is necessary if the appointment is on a salary which exceeds a certain amount? and that the sanction of the Director of Public Instruction is necessary if it is some other amount? All these matters are matters of advice. We have the real management in theory, but is that so in practice? Does the Inspector of Schools reconcile himself to the position if his recommendation is disregarded by the municipality? No doubt, it is tendered in the form of advice to us, but if it is set at naught, it will lead to serious consequences. It may be left to the chairman or to the head of the local body to consult them on any proper occasion, but why should you insist on his having this indispensable advice on all occasions? These are the restrictions which the Decentralisation Commission after recording voluminous evidence recommended should be done away with. So long as there is an assurance from the Honourable Member in charge that these recommendations will be loyally carried out, I do not see any use in pressing this resolution to a division. I thankfully accept the assurance and withdraw it.”

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR :—“ I would answer the query of the Hon'ble Mr. Ramachandra Rao. He wanted to know whether the District Municipalities Bill, which we sent up to the Government of India was examined afresh ; yes, before we sent it up, we examined it with reference to this resolution. This is the letter we wrote on the 22nd October 1918 :—‘ When the Bill, after revision, was about to be submitted to the Government of India, the resolution of that Government on Local Self-Government, dated the 16th of May of 1918, was received. The Governor in Council has again examined the Bill in the light of the policy laid down in that resolution, and the draft now enclosed embodies such modifications as are considered necessary to give effect to the conclusions arrived at by this Government on the subjects dealt with in the resolution.’ Then here is the letter to the Government of India which has not yet been sent up and which the Government propose to send up with reference to the Local Boards Bill. ‘ When the Bill, after revision, was about to be forwarded for administrative approval, the resolution of the Government of India on Local Self-Government, dated the 16th of May of 1918, was received. The Governor in Council has again examined the Bill in the light of the policy laid down in that resolution, and the draft now submitted contains such modifications as are considered necessary to give effect to the conclusions arrived at by this Government on the subjects dealt with in the resolution.’ These two quotations would show that we have not forgotten the matter. It is not unlikely that, when the Bills are published, Honourable Members may feel that we should have gone further than we have in making alterations in the frame-work of the Bills ; in which case, they would have ample opportunities of getting that done both in the preliminary meeting and in the Select Committee. I have said in reply to a question that we will publish the Bills before introducing them. I would also like to refer to the point about educational institutions. Wherever the

"I would also like to refer to the point about educational institutions. Wherever the theory of it gives the local body the power, there is no use complaining that the local body has no power to exercise. Unless you exercise it, you have no case. I am sure the head of the Medical Department who is here, the head of the Education Department who is also here will be glad to meet the Honourable Members from time to time if they bring forward any complaint of cases in which the officers of these two departments have been unreasonable. I suggest that is the proper course. As the Honourable Member has withdrawn the resolution, I have nothing further to say."

With the permission of His Excellency the President, the resolution was withdrawn.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"We might look at the Agenda. We have got down resolution No. X. There are requests from Honourable Members to take up particular resolutions. Will the Hon'ble Mr. Rama Ayyangar move resolutions Nos. X and XI?"

The Hon'ble Mr. K. RAMA AYYANGAR:—"I do not move resolution No. XI" at the sitting."

938 RESOLUTION RE IMPERIAL GRANT FOR THE DEVELOPMENT OF
THE INDUSTRIES IN THIS PRESIDENCY.

(Mr. Ranga Achariyar ; Mr. Suryanarayana Rao.)

[13TH MARCH 1919.]

"If we take the functions which are allotted to Provincial Governments on these recommendations of the Industrial Commission, we will find that there is a lot to be done—

The direct encouragement of industries, including a large share in industrial research work, the provision of technical advice and assistance to industrialists, the examination of applications for special concessions, and the grant of loans to small and cottage industries."

"I wish to lay emphasis on this aspect of the question before I leave it. My Lord, there is great scope indeed in this Presidency for improvement and we can do a lot of good to the people by developing very largely and there is great room for employing money usefully to develop the small cottage industries and again when we consider the other recommendations—

"The collection and distribution of commercial and industrial intelligence; the work of passing Government indents and of purchasing and inspecting certain classes of Government stores; the organization of markets for local products; the conduct of special inquiries and industrial surveys; the holding of industrial exhibitions and the management of commercial and industrial museums.

"And one of these taken by itself will give ample scope for the employment of money usefully which if we can get from the Government of India, can be usefully applied. I therefore point out that as the Government of India have been unjust to us in the past we should ask them to repair it in a very small degree indeed by making these grants. Let us make them alive to the necessities of the situation. Unless this Government go to the Government of India armed with public opinion in this matter, they are not likely to meet with success. Past history will repeat itself. Madras is a far-off place for those who have the control of the purse of the Government of India. The voice of Madras is seldom heard there and therefore it is that it is necessary that Your Excellency's Government should apply to the Government of India early enough before they make their financial adjustment with other provinces. Other provinces must be told that injustice has been done to Madras in the past and that it cannot be perpetrated any longer and that it must be repaired to some small extent at least; not only in the matter of taking away our money have the Government of India acted harshly towards Madras, but even in the matter of making grants and loans out of their surplus, Madras has been treated in a step-motherly manner. Therefore, having regard to the past history, I hope the resolution that I have proposed will be acceptable to the Government and also to my Honourable Colleagues of this Council. As I have already stated, I would attach great importance to the development of cottage industries. Another subject which I will mention for consideration now is, how to use the co-operative movement in this direction. That is a matter which will have to be very carefully considered and I dare say if that movement is also directed in the direction of developing industries, instead of being merely as it is now mainly directed to developing credit, I think the co-operative movement will have done most useful work. May I, in conclusion, My Lord, utter a word of warning in the words of Sir Frederick Nicholson: In doing anything to develop the industries of this province, Sir Frederick Nicholson in his noble words emphasized this:

"I beg to record my opinion that in the matter of Indian industries we are bound to consider Indian interests firstly, secondly and thirdly,—I mean by 'firstly' that the local raw products should be utilized, by 'secondly' that industries should be introduced, and by 'thirdly' that the profits of such industry should remain in the country."

"We object to the profits of these industries going out of the country. My friends, the English merchants in Madras, have hitherto been paying their attention more to commerce and agencies than to industries unlike their fellow Scotsmen in Calcutta. I hope hereafter the Scotsmen in Madras will turn their attention to develop the industries and not to carry away the profit out of the country. Let them remain with us, be of us, and we have no objection to condition is forgotten we will object to Irish, English or Scot merchants coming here and exploiting the country and taking away the profits out of the country. Let them join hands with us in developing the industries of the country. My Lord, the subject is of vast importance and I know Your Excellency's Government, the Madras Government, from 1890 onwards, have been off and on paying attention to this question of industries. I know the Honourable Member in charge of that department is anxious to develop the industries of this province and it is only to clothe him with financial resources, in order to develop this question, I have brought forward this proposition; and I hope it will meet with the acceptance of Government."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. SURYANARAYANA RAO:—"My Lord, I beg to second this resolution that has been so ably moved by the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar. Though I do not belong to the industrial line, I take great interest in the industries of the country and I specially support this resolution because I have the interest of the district of Vizagapatam in my heart and in this connexion there is the mining industry to be considerably developed in the district of Vizagapatam, Jaipur and Bobbili, and some of these zamindaris are supposed to possess very valuable mineral wealth and nothing has been done regarding this. In Jeypore, there is a lot of electric current that can be utilized for several purposes and some rivers, I think, may be utilized and we can have electric current produced and supplied to the whole district. When there are these two possibilities in regard to Vizagapatam and there are similar conditions in other districts, if the Government do not utilize them, if the Government do not step in at the right time, it is possible that Tatas may step in and take over the industry. If only the zamindars applied to Tata or some other firm they will take it up. Otherwise, the European firms will step in and this—mining industry and other industries will go into the hands of European firms and the country will be deprived of all the profits. I think Government should step in and see that these things are taken advantage of at once and the people are given a due share in the profits. Otherwise, as the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar has clearly put it before us, some the profits. European firm, Messrs. Best & Co., or some Calcutta firm will come and take it up and the country will be deprived of the profits. I am therefore, strongly of opinion that the Government should take it up at the earliest moment, and apply to the Government of India for the sanction of this grant of 100 lakhs. It may be said that there are no schemes. But there is no difficulty in getting schemes prepared. Some persons may be deputed to see what schemes can be developed in the near future. With these words, I second this resolution."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur K. SURYANARAYANAMURTHI NAYUDU:—"Your Excellency, I beg to support this resolution. The report of the Industrial Commission is now before us, and it does not require many words to commend this resolution to the acceptance of the Council. The industrial backwardness of our Presidency is its bane. Reform in that direction must occupy the foremost attention of Government and industries in different directions must be encouraged. So, I hope Government will accept this resolution and try to get some money from the Government of India to help the industries in this Presidency."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"Your Excellency, the Honourable mover has covered a lot of ground. He has said a great deal about the way in which this province has been treated by the Government of India in the past. I am not in a position to refer to all that correspondence. But I can assure him that this Government have always stood up for the Presidency and that is a point about which our conscience is quite clear. I do not think at any time any Government in Madras, either of Your Excellency or Your Excellency's predecessors, ever allowed a suitable opportunity to pass without protesting against the way in which we are treated. We have said that we did not consider it to be a fair or reasonable treatment. So far as we are concerned, our conscience is quite clear in the matter. The Honourable Member has referred to other presidencies and asked what we are doing. I can only speak on behalf of this Government and I am sure the Hon'ble Sir Alexander Cardew will bear me out that the Madras Government have always stood out for justice and fairplay in our financial relations with the Government of India. We have done our very best for the pro- vince and I have no hesitation in saying that. In regard to industrial matters, it is true that this Presidency has had a start. We had a conference in 1908 but then the policy with regard to industrial matters was somewhat different then. The then Secretary of State, Lord Morley, ruled out development and asked us to cry halt. Later on, the Industrial Commission reported and that report is now before the Government of India and a reference about it has come to us, which we are dealing with. I venture to assure Honourable Members that we would do the very best that we can for our province; and we will make out as strong a case as we can for our development. We are unable to accept this resolution in this particular form, because we have really no scheme worked out, and there is no justification to go up to the Government of India at present. Unless we are in a position to put forward some details, we will not be able to do any good just now. Reference from the Government of India has come and I have every reason to believe that they are anxious to see industrial development started as soon as possible. As soon as that is started, we will have a separate Industrial department and a strong stimulus will be afforded to the industrial development of the province. With regard to the utilizing of water-power for generating electricity, I am indebted to my Honourable Friend Mr. Howley for the information that a special staff has been deputed for a detailed inquiry into hydro electricity. Two members have been to Madras recently and they have considered several things and the particular thing which the Honourable Member referred to—the Periyar is one of the things that have gone up to the Government of India. I hope the Council will accept my assurance—this is a department in my charge—that it will be my continuous end and effort to push the matter forward as vigorously as I can. You may rest assured that the interests of the province will not suffer, and in view of the policy which the Government of India have now taken up, I think the future is one which we can look forward to with hope. Under these circumstances, I trust that the Honourable Member would not insist on taking a division, because we have not got a detailed programme."

The Hon'ble Sir GORDON FRASER:—"I expect the Honourable mover of the resolution will be surprised to hear that I propose to support it."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"I am not at all surprised. I knew my Honourable Friend would support me."

The Hon'ble Sir GORDON FRASER:—"I consider that the Government of Madras do subscribe more than their fair share to the Government of India and although this resolution as it is worded cannot bring in any actual result, I am perfectly sure that it will show the feeling in this Presidency. We hope that in times to come, the Madras Presidency will be treated better than it has been in the past. On the present lines of the resolution I do not think anything will happen. The Honourable Mover mentioned the experiments of co-operative societies and personally I have great faith in the usefulness of co-operative societies and I think they will go very far in helping the industries of this Presidency. The Honourable mover made a remark that English firms turn their attention more to commerce than to industries. I am afraid I cannot agree with him there and it is hardly necessary to argue the point because

THE INDUSTRIES IN THIS PRESIDENCY.

(Sir Gordon Fraser; Sir Fairless Barber;
Mr. Venkatapati Raju.)

[13TH MARCH 1919.]

the country itself contains full evidence to the contrary. In the lines of commerce the Indian merchant can hold his own with the European merchant but when it comes to industries, manufacturing of all sorts, up to date—I would not say in future—there is no doubt that the English industrialist has more than held his own. The Indian has not come up to that standard. The chief reason is that he prefers to put his money in land, and he does not care to put it in industrial concerns. Also throughout India, agriculture has up to date been the general occupation and not industries. If you have to start industries, you cannot run the industries and factories without experts; and up to date there has been great reluctance on the part of the Indian merchants and traders against bringing out experts from England and other places to initiate industries.

“Then as regards water-power, the Honourable Seconder seemed alarmed at the prospect of English merchants coming in or even at the prospect of Tata's coming and taking up the water-power schemes. When I gave my evidence before the Industries Commission, I strongly recommended that Government should, without loss of time, investigate this question and see whether it will not be possible to develop some of the water-power schemes of this Presidency. We must have motive power for practically all industries. We in Madras are very badly handicapped for coal and if we have to compete with other industries, and bring coal from 1,200 miles away, we are seriously handicapped; if we have water-power the position is the reverse. One of the greatest difficulties in Southern India is that the water-supply of South India is so intermittent and liable to failure and the rivers dry up; but I think we can rest assured that Government are fully alive to the importance of developing any water-power scheme that is put forward. As the Hon'ble Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar has just mentioned, the matter is now under investigation.

“The remarks of the Honourable Seconder of the resolution regarding the objection to English merchants opening up industries and mining concerns, I am afraid that displays extraordinary ignorance of the whole subject; it would be quite impossible for me to go into the whole question here. It is a very big question and there is no doubt whatever that whoever opens up industries, he is going to benefit the country. Because an Englishman starts an Indian industry, to say that he is going to rob the country of the benefits of the industry is too absurd. I will not go into that question, however, because it is too large a subject, to deal with here.

“One difference of opinion between the Honourable Mover and the Honourable Seconder of the resolution is on this particular point. The Honourable Mover pointed out that English firms kept to commerce and did not take to industries. The Honourable Seconder is very much alarmed that they might take up industries. As I said at the commencement, I support the resolution simply as a protest against the extraordinary inequality in the treatment of the different presidencies by the Government of India in the past. It is high time for Madras to cry out for more fair treatment and if we protest strongly now, we may have some chance of a better treatment in the future, although personally I think that on this resolution as it stands, nothing will result.”

The Hon'ble Sir FAIRLESS BARBER:—“Your Excellency, I wish to oppose the resolution. In the first place, I think it is too general and in the second place I think it is inopportune. I say it is too general because it deals with industries at large and I do not think that industries should be developed in this Presidency unless those industries are connected with agriculture. Recently in the Viceroy's Legislative Council there have been railway schemes largely budgeted for. It is surely an industrial expansion and yet we have the representative of this Council in the Viceroy's Legislative Council opposing the grant for railways. Not very long ago there was a proposal for railway expansion in Malabar, and no money was forthcoming locally; because they would sooner put any money on land giving a return of 4 per cent. In regard to what the Honourable Seconder said, the inference is that Indians could not start industries without Government assistance while the Europeans can. He assumes that if there is no Government assistance the Europeans will start them. I do not think Europeans will start industries in this Presidency unless they were assured of the results and I take it that Indians will take the same point of view.

“I say this resolution is inopportune for, with the present shortage of grain, I think any money that is forthcoming should be spent more on cultivation. In the Montagu-Chelmsford report it is said ‘how much more should India have been able to contribute to the war if India had been industrially more prosperous.’ I fancy she could have contributed very much more if she had been agriculturally more prosperous.”

The Hon'ble Mr. B. VENKATAPATI RAJU:—“Your Excellency, we are glad to learn from the Hon'ble Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar that the Government have protested on every occasion possible, against the inequality of treatment by the Government of India. We are thankful to him for that, but we generally judge from the results. We have not received any such benefit. But we found that the Government tamely submitted all these years, but anyhow the past is past. Let us try and co-operate with the Government at least in securing our legitimate share from the Government of India in future. The second point is that the Hon'ble Sir Gordon Fraser has been rather sarcastic in referring to the Hon'ble Mr. Suryanarayana Rao's statement that he prefers the exploitation by Indians rather than by Europeans.”

The Hon'ble Sir GORDON FRASER:—“That is a very wide interpretation of what I said.”

RESOLUTION RE IMPERIAL GRANT FOR THE DEVELOPMENT OF 941
THE INDUSTRIES IN THIS PRESIDENCY.

13TH MARCH 1919.]

(Mr. Venkatapati Raju; Sir Gordon Fraser;
Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar; Mr. Narasimha Ayyar.)

The Hon'ble Mr. B. VENKATAPATI RAJU:—“He says that Indians would come forward otherwise Europeans would come and take it up.”

The Hon'ble Sir GORDON FRASER:—“The Honourable Member is not quoting me correctly.”

The Hon'ble Mr. B. VENKATAPATI RAJU:—“I understand it to be so. If the Hon'ble Sir Gordon Fraser does not complain of the reference by the Hon'ble Mr. Suryanarayana Rao that the Indians do not like that money should be taken away from the country, if the Hon'ble Sir Gordon Fraser agrees with that view, then there is an end of the matter and it is alright. All the same, what we want is that the country should be exploited by experts. What the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar wants is that the profits should not leave India. I do not think the Hon'ble Sir Gordon Fraser will leave his profits in India. He will take them away for his kith and kin in England. The Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar wants the profits to be kept here. The suggestion is that Government should come to the aid of the people in order to work these industries. So far as home industries are concerned, any amount can be spent. My Honourable Friend asked for one crore, but we can spend several crores. No foreigner can compete with us either on equal terms or on any terms whatever. We can succeed in spending any amount in promoting home industries so that the whole profits that would be received will be in the country. We have sad experience of exploitation. The Indians would receive the royalty.”

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—“I do not want to interrupt the Honourable Member, but all these remarks about exploitation do not help the debate much. I quite see that there may be a difference in the point of view. But whether on the resolution now before the Council any useful purpose will be served by going into the question of exploitation by foreigners, I do not know; nor does it appear to have any bearing on the resolution on the paper.”

The Hon'ble Mr. B. VENKATAPATI RAJU:—“It has no bearing except that the Hon'ble Sir Gordon Fraser made the remark.”

The Hon'ble Sir GORDON FRASER:—“I simply replied to the remarks of the Honourable mover and the Honourable Seconder. I did not open any new ground.”

The Hon'ble Mr. B. VENKATAPATI RAJU:—“I do not mean anything, but everybody is anxious to keep the money in India and for that purpose we want the Government to come to our aid. Because we are impoverished, we want money; and Government are in a position to spend money and, instead of investing it in other places and giving it on loans, let it be given to Indians in order to develop Indian resources to enrich the people. Therefore, the modest request of the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar is to get one crore from the Government of India. The Hon'ble Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar says that we have not got a definite scheme. I am quite sure that this state of things will continue not for one year, but for a decade, unless we force the hands of the Government to prepare a scheme. Our object in bringing forward resolution is to make the Government prepare a scheme. They have their expert advisers and the Hon'ble Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar can, if he wants, get them prepared for several crores, not only for one crore in a few months—.”

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—“The Honourable Member is giving me credit for a capacity which I would never dream of aspiring to.”

The Hon'ble Mr. B. VENKATAPATI RAJU:—“There is more expert advice at the disposal of the Government. As they prepare the budget for several crores, I think they can prepare—.”

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—“For industries?”

The Hon'ble Mr. B. VENKATAPATI RAJU:—“We want some substantial move made in this direction of industrial development. If the Government undertake to move in this direction, I think the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar will be satisfied. What is the use of saying merely ‘we will consider’? We have been considering for the last one hundred years.”

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR:—“I do not know whether the Government are really opposing this proposition. It appears to me that it is hardly a proposition which the Government should oppose. It strengthens the hands of the Government in making a demand—it may not be exactly for 100 lakhs non-recurring and 50 lakhs recurring grant—, but what we non-officials want to do is to strengthen the hands of Government in making a demand upon the Imperial Government. So far as I can follow the speech of the Hon'ble Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar, in substance he agrees with us. We are quite willing, the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar will be the first person, to agree to the principle of the proposition being accepted, the details being left to be worked out by the Government. I could not quite follow the Hon'ble Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar when he was asking my Hon'ble friend Mr. Venkatapati Raju whether really there was any necessity to go into the details. There is no difficulty in understanding the well-established historical fact of foreign or British exploitation of India. All that we want is more money for industries, and what is recommended is that this Government should apply for more. Oliver Twist will ask for more but, instead of getting more food, he may get more blows. The Madras Government have got only the latter in their dealings with the Government of India. But this resolution will strengthen the hands of the Madras Government in making the request. We non-officials stand almost united, except the

THE INDUSTRIES IN THIS PRESIDENCY.

(Mr. Narasimha Ayyar; Mr. Ranga Achariyar;
Sir Fairless Barber; Sir Alexander Cardew.) [13TH MARCH 1919.]

Hon'ble Sir Fairless Barber, and wish to strengthen the hands of Government in making this request. I hope this Government will not let it go forth, that they are loath to have any scheme prepared to have their hands strengthened, by the demand of the non-official members."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"My Lord, as I began so I propose to end. My object was to draw pointed attention to two aspects of the question. The financial injustice and the reparation for that injustice is the first point. The second point is that reparation is needed for the development of industries of the province. These were the two objects that I had in view. We are sadly in a backward condition with regard to industries. These were my two objects. In regard to them, I am glad to have the assurance of the Honourable Member in charge that the Government have got the second object in view, namely, the development of industries. But the Honourable Member is not quite clear. I did not hear him say that he would draw the attention of the Government of India and that by means of this resolution he would bring home to the attention of the Government of India the past injustice that has been done to us by that Government. We want reparation in that matter so as to develop our industries. If the Honourable Member will give us an assurance that he will draw the attention of the Government of India to that aspect of the question, I would be satisfied for having brought forward this resolution. These two points must be emphasized. We want money badly and we want it for developing the industries of the province. The last thing I said was that, in spending that money, you should spend it for the masses, namely, in developing cottage industries, and keep an eye on one aspect, namely, that the profits are prevented from going out of the country. I dare say all of us are agreed about that point and let us not drag in unnecessary matters. Only one remark about the statement of the Hon'ble Sir Fairless Barber. He wants only agriculture to be developed."

The Hon'ble Sir FAIRLESS BARBER:—"I said industries connected with agriculture."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"I quite agree with him. Being an agriculturist myself, I should welcome industries in that direction being developed, but not at the expense of industries really so called. In fact, this country has been for centuries developing agriculture and this Government have been neglecting the other industries of the province; the other indigenous industries have been killed by foreign competition and we want to develop the indigenous industries of the province. I do not think so much is needed in the direction of agriculture as in the case of other industries. This is far more important now and we cannot live merely on agriculture. That has been brought home to us in this recent war and to all the nations of the world that, unless we have agriculture and the other industries, no country can thrive. Those points are well brought out by the Industries Commission and I dare say their report is engaging the attention both of this Government and the Government of India and I am sure that in my life time great things will be done in this direction and I hope to live to see the day when India will be not only agriculturally great but industrially great. I want a word of assurance that the injustice done to Madras, when we in Madras feel very strongly on the past financial injustice of this province, will be repaired somewhat by making some reparation in the shape of grants more substantial grants than to other provinces. We want to be more partially treated. In working out the recommendations of the Industries Commission, Madras should have a more favourable treatment than the other provinces. On these two grounds the other provinces are more fortunately situated a ready and people have greater resources at their disposal whereas Madras has not. We get more revenue from the people and leave them little to live upon. If these points are brought home to the Government of India and if we can persuade them to give greater grants in future, and to say that Madras will get preferential treatment, I shall be satisfied."

The Hon'ble Sir ALEXANDER CARDEW:—"Your Excellency, the Honourable Member in this matter has been basing his arguments so much on financial grounds that I should like to say a word or two about the terms of the resolution. His main point is that Madras has paid more than her fair share towards the general expenditure for Imperial purposes. That is undoubtedly a fact and the Government have on several occasions in years past represented this to the Government of India, but without any success, partly because until lately the relative shares which were payable by the different provinces were so obscure in the Financial Statement that it was impossible for any Provincial Government to be sure of their share. That has been cleared up in connexion with the Reform Scheme. In that Scheme, as Honourable Members are aware, there is a fresh proposal altogether about the reallocation of funds between the Provincial Governments and the Imperial Government and I can assure the Honourable Member that the Madras Government are fully aware of the objections to the scheme and they have stated in the most unequivocal terms that they have not enough funds at their disposal and they have stated their objections to it. I cannot go further. The matter is before the Government of India and they are considering it. We have stated our objections fully and when these despatches are published, this Council will see that the Madras Government have not been remiss in putting forward the claims and the interests of this Presidency. Then there is a practical point. Will all this discussion serve any profitable purpose? To ask for one crore for objects which we have not yet ascertained, will leave us a balance and we shall be disturbing our own financial arrangements. The budget figures show that, under 'Industries' 5½ lakhs was provided in 1917-18; and in 1918-19 it was a little over 8 lakhs, and 1919-20 it is 12½ lakhs, showing an advance of 20 per cent. To get a crore would involve an enormous expansion of these operations, but I do not think it will really serve any useful purpose to ask for one crore now; when the substantial proposals of the Industries Commission are brought under review and the Madras Government find sufficient cause, they will ask for further allotment on this account. Undoubtedly they will ask for it, but at present I do not think we have a scheme which will hold water. Last year we did ask for a grant of 30 lakhs for the development of our roads and the Government of India simply replied, 'we will not give it to you, you can take it out of your balances.' Then we took the amount out of our balances. The Imperial Government had a deficit about 6 millions sterling and with the excess profits taxation, when the expenditure due to the war is cleared, it will take a year or two for the loss to be built up, with the enormous loss of silver; I would suggest to the Honourable Member that it is hardly a practicable suggestion to ask for one crore now. It is not practical politics. He may depend upon it that we shall do all that we possibly can do to see that Madras gets a fair share under the new financial arrangement."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"I do not think it necessary to press this point. My object was to draw pointed attention to the matter and I hope in making a further demand upon the Government of India, the Government of Madras will make a more insistent demand and say that the Government of Madras will not be satisfied unless Madras is preferentially treated hereafter as compared with the other provinces. I do not press the resolution."

With the permission of His Excellency the President, the resolution was withdrawn.

RESOLUTION RE COMMITTEE TO INQUIRE INTO EXPENDITURE
ON THE POLICE DEPARTMENT.

The Hon'ble Mr. K. RAMA AYYANGAR:—"The resolution that I propose to move runs as follows:—

'X. This Council recommends to the Governor in Council that a committee of officials and non-officials be appointed to inquire into and report upon the expenditure on the Police department with a view to put it on a permanent basis and reduce the expenditure, if possible, as far as it could be done.'

"My Lord, this is practically a resolution which I moved in the year 1915 in the March meeting of this Council. I do not propose to detain this Council with a full examination of all that I had said on that occasion. Reference to the discussion on the resolution in 1915 will show that I divided the subject into eight parts and I wanted there should be an inquiry made into each one of them. The points were: the organization of village police on the lines suggested by the Police Commission."

The Hon'ble Mr. L. DAVIDSON:—"Which of the discussions in 1915? The Honourable Member moved three resolutions in 1915."

The Hon'ble Mr. K. RAMA AYYANGAR:—"I am referring to Resolution No. XXII in the meeting held on the 31st of March 1915. That was in these terms:—'This Council recommends to the Governor in Council that a committee of officials and non-officials be appointed to inquire into the condition of crime since the police organization was introduced into this Presidency and report on the propriety and necessity of the existing establishment and on the distribution of the areas (such as station-house, taluk, circle and division charges) and on the suitable location of the police buildings to be constructed.' I brought to the notice of the Government then eight heads under which this would have to be considered."

"I fully discussed the recommendations of the Police Commission and referred to the improvement of the village police organization as suggested by the Commission. The second point that I noticed was the strength of the forces as compared with the recommendations of the Police Commission. The third point related to the station charges and the sub-inspectors to be in charge of these stations and their relationship with the head constable and the police inspector. The next point was the separation of the several branches of the Police department into the prosecution branch, the preventive establishment and the detective establishment. The next point was the duty which was being then discharged by the police to serve the processes of criminal courts and the eighth point was the formation of criminal settlements and work under the security chapters and other preventive chapters. I dealt in detail with each one of these and the arguments of the Government as advanced by Sir Harold Stuart were that the Commission had sat and effect had been given to the report of the Commission only partially only about 1908 or 1910; though it began to be given effect to in 1906, it was not till 1910 that the matter had been given a fair or a complete start. Therefore, it was contended that within about five years of that state of affairs it was not proper to reconsider or reconstitute a committee to go into the whole question and that some more time should be given. After this resolution was moved, I just took up one or two points in connexion with that, about the

ON THE POLICE DEPARTMENT.

(Mr. Rama Ayyangar.)

relationship of the sub-inspector towards the head constable and the inspector and the question of the village police on different occasions. The second occasion on which this question of the relationship of the sub-inspector was considered was at the meeting held in February 1916. The resolution then was: 'This Council recommends to the Governor in Council that steps might be taken to reorganize the police staff so as to draft the head constables into a grade of the constabulary and circle inspectors into the sub-inspectors or other grades by forming suitable grades in these offices so as to improve the efficiency of the work of the sub-inspectors and the assistant and deputy superintendents of police.' It was in that connexion suggested by the Honourable Member in charge, Sir Harold Stuart, that a trial would be made in select districts and I know that since then, in Kurnool and Trichinopoly and in a modified form in Coimbatore, trials were made to see that the sub-inspector was directly placed in charge of divisional police I brought up on the 7th of February 1917 and the question of reorganization of the village charge said that he would pay attention to my remarks and would consider the question. These were his last words: 'this question of the selection and appointment of village headmen is, I believe, engaging the attention of the Government; and I shall certainly bear in mind all that the Honourable Members have said on this resolution. I shall look into the matter and see whether it is possible to evolve any system whereby we can distribute responsibility. I think we cannot have more than one person responsible for a particular area.' That was in the discussion in 1917.

"I have to point out that the arguments that I advanced during the discussion in 1915 now apply with still greater force. We find that while the expenditure has increased from 98 lakhs then to about 108 lakhs, exclusive of village police which is added on now and the total is 120 lakhs according to the revised estimate for 1918-19, if we deduct that transfer from the Revenue department to the Police department, it was 98 lakhs then it is about 108 lakhs now. There have been already an increase of about 10 lakhs recurring expenditure. We do not include in this expenditure, the expenditure on police buildings which we have not been incurring during the war period, but we had been incurring steadily before, to the extent of about 7 or 8 lakhs per annum; so that the police charges now would be 116 lakhs inclusive of building charges if they were on the programme. The cost has increased but what we find is that neither the number of serious crimes nor the total number of cognisable crimes has materially diminished except in one or two places as is shown in the recent Administration Report of 1917. In Trichinopoly and Coimbatore there has been a decided increase in the number of cases of detection and the success in detection. In few other places like Vizagapatam, Chittoor and other places, there is a tendency in that direction and the Administration Report of the Inspector-General of Police explains what steps were taken in each one of these districts and how it was possible to keep down the crime in these places. He complains of the insufficient numbers in the village police and he also refers to the good work done by the deputy superintendents who had come into contact with the village officers more than before and he refers to the good work done by the sub-inspectors when they are placed in charge of stations and when they are placed directly in charge under deputy and assistant superintendents. In fact, I have made a note of it. At page 7 in the latest Administration Report for 1917—that is the one available—it is stated 'The insufficiency of their (the village police) numbers continues and consequently the surveillance of bad characters and strangers and patrolling are still defective.' Again he notices that crimes have decreased and he says: 'In this district the subdivision scheme was recently introduced and the superintendent states that the talayari who is generally recruited from the criminal classes is now successfully employed to watch the movements of his criminal confederates. The Superintendent of Trichinopoly where the subdivision scheme has been working for more than a year reports that the deputy superintendents have come into closer contact with village officers and the public, and have recognized all instances of co-operation, that consequently the relations between the regular police and the village police have improved and that the latter have realized their responsibilities to a larger extent than before.' Later on he says: 'No serious outbreak of crime occurred on the railways but there was a general increase in the number of thefts especially of railway materials such as brass or iron-work, due to the prevailing high prices and partly also to the insufficiency of lights and watchmen in several stations.' In another place he says: 'the attention of all superintendents has been particularly drawn to the importance of the system inaugurated in this district, the main principles of which are now receiving attention in all districts.' Similarly on these various points, there are observations which go to support the views that I have pressed in this Council on those occasions. As I submitted, though there is an increase in the expenditure there is really no proportionate advance in the reduction of crimes or in their detection. Therefore the arguments that I advanced then apply now and the whole matter deserves looking into and what I said applies with greater force just now. To an interpellation which I sent in for this meeting, No. 89, the answer says that the Government are not yet in a position to make a definite pronouncement on the scheme relating to circle inspectors and sub-inspectors. There is a separate police prosecuting staff which has been strengthened but in respect of the other preventive staff no proposals have been made and the Government have not considered them. I beg to draw the attention of the Government to all these points. As we find that the police charges are steadily going up, I am not sure that the increased charges are being incurred in the right direction. There was an addition of about 800 stations when the Police Commission report was brought into force and there was an addition of about 44 stations and outposts about 200 and odd, so that we have 900 and odd police stations and 278 outposts. It is found that though we have added to the staff, the police force that was recommended by the Police Commission was Rs. 26,000, before that it was Rs. 23,000, on the date of the previous discussion we went up to Rs. 34,000 and now we have a police force of Rs. 36,000. In spite of that, we find that whereas this has been intelligently applied as in the case of Coimbatore, Trichinopoly, Chittoor and a few other districts, where we find that efficient working has reduced the crime, in the case of the rest of the presidency, that is not the effect I submit therefore that it is not mere increase of the staff but a proper utilization of it and proper application of the money that is spent on the staff that will enable the department to do its work properly. One of the points brought out in the recent report which is merely a reiteration of a point in the previous reports is that a little reward of money acts as a considerable help in the detection of crime. Similarly it has been pointed out that the ordinary police constables are not able to do much work as people who are in charge of investigation and the preventive departments and even there, protection is more important. It has been found that with the sub-inspector who is in charge of the station and a clever deputy superintendent or an assistant superintendent who puts his heart into the work, it has been possible by proper supervision of these officers to reduce crime and control the riot and infuse confidence in the villagers. These are the points that I raised previously. All these together show that in the particular districts that I refer to, there is no additional expenditure but there is really more efficient work done. This is a matter that deserves looking into, though I should not fail to draw the attention of the Honourable Member in charge to a memorandum that I submitted after the discussion in 1915 to members of this Council. That was subsequently acknowledged, as one that dealt with the position fairly well and Sir Harold Stuart was kind enough to acknowledge that and was prepared to adopt some of the suggestions and since 1914, that was the latest report at that date, the reports acknowledged fully that the points that I brought out, in those discussions deserved great attention and they were adopted and they actually improved the efficiency of the police. I dare say the Hon'ble Mr. Davidson would, with his usual keen scrutiny, go into the questions that I now raise and satisfy himself that many of the suggestions are held by the department to be suggestions found to be successful in some cases and in other cases to be worth being adopted. The four years' reports will clearly show that. Under these circumstances, I thought it was my duty at this stage, to bring this up, four years after the previous discussion when we have no improvement in the reduction of the total crime or the serious crime or the ordinary cognizable cases in this presidency; it has been found that where it has been intelligently worked, it has produced much better results and crime has gone down by 300 or 400 cases. I submit there is force in the contention that the matter must be examined fully. In fact Sir Harold Stuart was Secretary to the Police Commission and he had full knowledge of the whole question and he at first thought that most of the suggestions were against the spirit of the recommendations but subsequently held that they were useful; and the department has recognized them to be useful and it is for the Government now at least to make up their minds that the whole matter should be gone into. I have been always contending that if the efficiency of the Police department requires more expenditure, that is a thing that should not be grudged by this Council. I do not think Government have at any time grudged the expenditure on the department if the efficiency of the department or the needs of the department required that expenditure. I am not going to contend that that should be sacrificed for the sake of expenditure but my firm belief is that it is not by adding to the expenditure or by the entertainment of additional hands that we can effectively manage it, but by so arranging the Police department and so dividing the staff that a mechanical portion of the work will be done by the staff whereas the intelligent portion of the work will be done by the efficient staff who will have complete control of the work they are doing. It has been proved that such staff have been able to reduce crime more successfully and manage the Police department better. One answer to the interpellation that I already referred to, shows that there is no provision made for keeping extra staff other than the staff of police employed in the detective, preventive and prosecution staff. The answer says: 'No proposals such as those referred to by the Honourable Member are under the consideration of the Government'. This is in answer to clause (d) of the question which is: 'What is the total number of constables proposed to be allotted to each station and what extra staff of head constables and constables is proposed to be kept in the mufassal in the presidency over and above those in the police stations?' This matter is important and I will only refer to the recommendations of the Police Commission and it will be seen that in the provision they made, they wanted a total strength of 23,000 and they expected a reserve of persons who might be called upon to attend to particular riots that may happen in certain districts and who may be kept at headquarters. That has not been paid attention to till now. That is a point that may be taken into consideration. The question which is often very difficult in this Council to carry and which is often viewed with great disfavour by the Government is the question of a committee of officials and non-officials being asked for any purpose. I must bring home to Honourable Members of this Council that the various points that I place before this Council now cannot be done simply by any one officer, even if he is placed on special duty without taking a little evidence as to how the recommendations of the Police Commission have to be altered to suit the conditions of the province. In the matter of trial of the sub-inspectors and the Divisional Officers in charge, explanations have been given why it has not been successful. What are the conditions to effect success?—that may be one of the points. But however, the points that deserve to be noticed in that connexion will have to be elicited and the whole matter of the scheme and the force for the province such as would be needed under the schemes as proposed will have to be fixed. There is a temporary staff also which has run up to the strength of about 1,800 or so. Whether it is to be a temporary or a permanent staff would have to be considered. This appears in the statement I attached to the report and the observation of the Inspector-General of Police in the paragraph that I read out previously shows that the location of police stations in the Kurnool district also contriutes to the inefficient work of the police in that district. That was a point which I placed before the Government on a previous occasion also and any reports in connexion with the question of the police stations will have to be considered. All these cannot be disposed of by one special officer non-officials. On the previous occasion, the commission consisted of both and they recommended things for the whole of India and they said that it must be adjusted to the needs of the province. I do not want to refer to it again. It will be very proper to go into the question and fix the police force, the police stations, the number of sub-inspectors and assistants and deputy superintendents and circle inspectors needed and the charges which the Government have to incur in respect of such a force—all these questions are fairly complicated and important questions and it cannot be said that we can put off these matters indefinitely. It is necessary that the efficiency of the department should be kept up and if we find practically during the last four years that the strength of the department is not kept up, on the lines on which it ought to be kept up, but that it is only worked on other lines, it is time for us to see and consider how the matter may be finally judged and placed on the budget of this province so far as the Police department is concerned. My Lord, I have briefly referred to these various points and I do not think it necessary to refer to further points. They have been referred to in a previous discussion and therefore I do not think it necessary to repeat all the arguments again. The recommendations of the Police Commission, if only the head notes are referred to, will clearly show that all the points that I raise are important points and they have considered and have come to the conclusion, and after a complete survey of the situation they have recommended, that the force should be 23,000; whereas we have now 36,000 and the charges they recommended were Rs. 63 lakhs whereas we are now incurring Rs. 118 lakhs per annum. All these must be scrutinized. I do not want to refer to the points urged by the Honourable Member in charge then not to have a committee at that stage, and to the fact that some of the observations I made have been found useful. I hope the Honourable Member in charge will therefore find his way to accept this resolution and see that the Police department is placed on a sound basis and is not subjected to any attack."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. VENKATAPATI RAJU :—" Your Excellency, I second this resolution. This subject was discussed thread-bare on several occasions. I must state that there is a complaint that money is being spent in greater proportion than the benefit which the people are receiving. Property recovered as stolen property is not at all in proportion to the better condition of police than before nor is it better in the matter of detection of crimes. While we are spending nearly 200 or 300 times our former expenditure on police, it is but fair when the Honourable Member asked for an inquiry into the economic aspect of the question whether the whole amount is necessary or whether economy can be observed in the matter of securing the same object, it should be granted. This is a subject which requires inquiry and I naturally expected the Government to be ahead of popular demand in economizing expenditure ; it should not be left to Members of Council to move resolutions year after year. Government then saying that there is no use. We know what we are about, what we are spending ; care should be taken to see that it is really and usefully spent."

The Hon'ble Mr. L. Davidson :—“ Your Excellency, I do not propose to follow the Hon'ble Mr. Rama Ayyangar through the maze of his discourse on the administrative details of the Police department. In virtue of his long study he may be able to find his way about in that maze but I am afraid I cannot. I may say that he has been responsible during the last five years for seven resolutions on the administration of the Police department. For the purposes of this debate I studied the discussions on some of these but I regret that owing to my own lack of application or to an error in the Secretariat, my attention was not given to the resolution on which he has based his speech. I have since referred to the discussion of that resolution and find that after a somewhat heated debate between the Honourable Member and Sir Harold Stuart it ended in a very definite rejection of the idea of a committee. The discussion to-day seems to have followed in some respects the same lines. Sir Harold Stuart was a past-master in March 1915, the more so, as I find he gave detailed reasons in regard to a very similar resolution in November 1913 brought forward by the Hon'ble Mr. Narasimha Swara Sarma. One year later than 1915, in 1916, Sir Harold Stuart was pressed to withhold increased expenditure on the Police department in a resolution of which notice was given by the Hon'ble Mr. Ramachandratuart demonstrated that there was then no question of extravagance in the expenditure on the Police department and hardly any specific economy was urged on that occasion. He accounted in detail for the excess expenditure in 1916-17 as compared with that of 1914-15 when the total was 116.71 lakhs. This resolution asks for the appointment of a committee to inquire into and report upon the expenditure on the Police department with a view to put it on a permanent basis and reduce the expenditure if possible as far as it could be done. If there is a valid ground for the appointment of such a committee, it should not be difficult to show that there has been unwarranted expenditure since 1916. As for the idea of placing the expenditure of the Police department on a permanent basis, obviously no department of the public service can have its expenditure placed on a permanent basis. Changes in the price of necessities alone would make it impossible. The only practical issue therefore is reduction in expenditure.

“Has there been any unwarranted increase in the expenditure since 1916? That is the only point with which I propose to deal. The budget estimate of the department for 1919-20 is put down at 136.51 lakhs. That represents since 1916 an increase of 19.80 lakhs beyond the figure which Sir Harold Stuart proved to be necessary in the previous debate. Of this increase of 19.80 lakhs, two-thirds, 13.50 lakhs, relates to the provision for enhanced wages allowance and I do not suppose that any one will dispute the necessity for that. Three lakhs and nineteen thousand represents a revision in the pay of the constabulary in the mufassal. The introduction of this revision actually began in the budget year to which Sir Harold Stuart was referring, 1916-17. The reorganization was sanctioned by the highest authority and partly took the shape of additional increments for additional years' service with the result that enhanced expenditure has been growing from year to year. Criminal settlements in which there have been large developments since 1916 account for an increase of 1.03 lakhs. If you leave these items out of account, the residuum is just over 2 lakhs, which is under 2 per cent of the aggregate outlay in 1916-17 and represents an annual increment of only 0.6 per cent on the department. I do not think there is any evidence in these figures of any undue expenditure and still less when you consider that the 0.6 per cent, which Secretariat notes put down as the ordinary expansion of the department, is actually found to include two factors which were specially due to war conditions, namely, increased price of clothing for uniform and increased expenditure on railway warrants owing to the enhanced scale of passenger fares. In these circumstances I may fairly contend that the expenditure on the Police department has, except for causes the validity of which no one can dispute, not increased since 1916-17 when Sir Harold Stuart succeeded in satisfying the Council that the expenditure on this department was not extravagant. It seems to me therefore that the demand for a special committee to inquire into the financial aspects of the Police department is prima facie not supported by good reasons and I ask the Council to reject this resolution.”

The Hon'ble Mr. K. RAMA AYYANGAR :—“The Hon'ble Mr. Davidson has disposed of the resolution on a short ground. He took it up for the year 1917.”

The Hon'ble Mr. L. DAVIDSON :—"One thousand nine hundred and sixteen."

The Hon'ble Mr. K. RAMA AYYANGAR :—“Therefore it was that I referred to my resolution in 1915. Also as will be seen from the discussion which the Hon'ble Mr. Davidson has not had time to go through, from the full discussion it will be seen that at that time it was contended that the police force in the way in which it was being expanded, was necessary. The whole question was raised then and it was only experimentally tried as the resolution in 1916-17 will show. The question of utilising the sub-inspectors and the Deputy Superintendents in charge of divisions and the removal of inspectors and the question of the establishment of a number of police stations—all these were unsettled questions at that stage. Sir Harold Stuart at that time did say that these questions could not at that stage be said to be questions set at rest. He said it was only a few years since the Commission sat and the report of the Commission was given effect to and so the whole matter was open and the question that I now raise is one that is supported by the subsequent administration reports which practically prove as I said, that where in some districts it has been worked on particular lines it has been successful and efficient. In other districts, irrespective of the distribution of money and the staff, it has not been worked successfully and the reason why in these districts I referred to, it was not successful was explained in the administration report. The Honourable Member in charge may come to other conclusions on examination, but I am not at all concerned with that. The whole matter is open for consideration and it is kept open by the Government also. Sir Harold Stuart when he gave effect to some of the recommendations promised to try them in some of the districts and he did say that there was considerable force in the contentions raised and that the effect of it would be considered in due time. Even the reply that was given by the Government to me shows that the Government have not come to a definite conclusion on the question of the number of police stations, the number of Deputy Superintendents and the number of inspectors to be retained, the number of constables to be given to each station. The whole question therefore is a thing that will have to be gone into sooner or later. I must indicate, my Lord, that the reply of the Honourable Member has not really touched the points that have raised. I thought I was able to persuade the Government to see that there are important questions to consider and they are being tried. Under these circumstances, I am not satisfied with the pronouncement made by the Hon'ble Mr. Davidson. I should not make it a point to divide this Council if it is possible to get an assurance that the matter will be looked into. I must certainly say that the view taken by the Hon'ble Mr. Davidson that he may take up the question from 1916 and account for the 3½ expenditure does not answer the point.”

The Hon'ble Mr. L. DAVIDSON :—“ It is 19.80 lakhs.”

The Hon'ble Mr. K. RAMA AYYANGAR :—"I leave that out of account. I did treat the war allowance portion as a portion peculiar to the year. I never took it into account. Therefore I said 15 lakhs."

The Hon'ble Mr. L. DAVIDSON :—“ The Honourable Member referred to village police and not to war allowance.”

ON THE POLICE DEPARTMENT.

(Mr. Rama Ayyangar.)

relationship of the sub-inspector towards the head constable and the inspector and the question of the village police on different occasions. The second occasion on which this question of the relationship of the sub-inspector was considered was at the meeting held in February 1916. The resolution then was: 'This Council recommends to the Governor in Council that steps might be taken to reorganize the police staff so as to draft the head constables into a grade of the constabulary and circle inspectors into the sub-inspectors or other grades by forming suitable grades in these offices so as to improve the efficiency of the work of the sub-inspectors and the assistant and deputy superintendents of police.' It was in that connexion suggested by the Honourable Member in charge, Sir Harold Stuart, that a trial would be made in select districts and I know that since then, in Kurnool and Trichinopoly and in a modified form in Coimbatore, trials were made to see that the sub-inspector was directly placed in charge of divisional officers who were to be deputy superintendents and the question of reorganization of the village police I brought up on the 7th of February 1917 and the Hon'ble Mr. Gilman who was then in charge said that he would pay attention to my remarks and would consider the question. These were his last words: 'this question of the selection and appointment of village headmen is, I believe, engaging the attention of the Government; and I shall certainly bear in mind all that the Honourable Members have said on this resolution. I shall look into the matter and see whether it is possible to evolve any system whereby we can distribute responsibility. I think we cannot have more than one person responsible for a particular area.' That was in the discussion in 1917.

"I have to point out that the arguments that I advanced during the discussion in 1915 now apply with still greater force. We find that while the expenditure has increased from 98 lakhs then to about 108 lakhs, exclusive of village police which is added on now and the total is 120 according to the revised estimate for 1918-19, if we deduct that transfer from the Revenue department to the Police department, it was 98 lakhs then it is about 108 lakhs now. There have been already an increase of about 10 lakhs recurring expenditure. We do not include in this expenditure, the expenditure on police buildings which we have not been incurring during the war period, but we had been incurring steadily before, to the extent of about 7 or 8 lakhs per annum; so that the police charges now would be 116 lakhs inclusive of building charges if they were on the programme. The cost has increased but what we find is that neither the number of serious crimes nor the total number of cognisable crimes has materially diminished except in one or two places as is shown in the recent Administration Report of 1917. In Trichinopoly and Coimbatore there has been a decided increase in the number of cases of detection and the success in detection. In few other places like Vizagapatam, Chittoor and other places, there is a tendency in that direction and the Administration Report of the Inspector-General of Police explains what steps were taken in each one of these districts and how it was possible to keep down the crime in these places. He complains of the insufficient numbers in the village police and he also refers to the good work done by the deputy superintendents who had come into contact with the village officers more than before and he refers to the good work done by the sub-inspectors when they are placed in charge of stations and when they are placed directly in charge under deputy and assistant superintendents. In fact, I have made a note of it. At page 7 in the latest Administration Report for 1917—that is the one available—it is stated 'The insufficiency of their (the village police) numbers continues and consequently the surveillance of bad characters and strangers and patrolling are still defective.' Again he notices that crimes have decreased and he says: 'In this district the subdivision scheme was recently introduced and the superintendent states that the talayari who is generally recruited from the criminal classes is now successfully employed to watch the movements of his criminal confederates. The Superintendent of Trichinopoly where the subdivision scheme has been working for more than a year reports that the deputy superintendents have come into closer contact with village officers and the public, and have recognized all instances of co-operation, that consequently the relations between the regular police and the village police have improved and that the latter have realized their responsibilities to a larger extent than before.' Later on he says: 'No serious outbreak of crime occurred on the railways but there was a general increase in the number of thefts especially of railway materials such as brass or iron-work, due to the prevailing high prices and partly also to the insufficiency of lights and watchmen in several stations.' In another place he says: 'the attention of all superintendents has been particularly drawn to the importance of the system inaugurated in this district, the main principles of which are now receiving attention in all districts.' Similarly on these various points, there are observations which go to support the views that I have pressed in this Council on those occasions. As I submitted, though there is an increase in the expenditure there is really no proportionate advance in the reduction of crimes or in their detection. Therefore the arguments that I advanced then apply now and the whole matter deserves looking into and what I said applies with greater force just now. To an interpellation which I sent in for this meeting, No. 89, the answer says that the Government are not yet in a position to make a definite pronouncement on the scheme relating to circle inspectors and sub-inspectors. There is a separate police prosecuting staff which has been strengthened but in respect of the other preventive staff no proposals have been made and the Government have not considered them. I beg to draw the attention of the Government to all these points. As we find that the police charges are steadily going up, I am not sure that the increased charges are being incurred in the right direction. There was an addition of about 800 stations when the Police Commission report was brought into force and there was an addition of about 44 stations and outposts about 200 and odd, so that we have 900 and odd police stations and 278 outposts. It is found that though we have added to the staff, the police force that was recommended by the Police Commission was Rs. 26,000, before that it was Rs. 23,000, on the date of the previous discussion we went up to Rs. 34,000 and now we have a police force of Rs. 36,000. The Hon'ble Mr. K. RAMA AYYANGAR :—"It was owing to a transfer of 15 lakhs. It was 98 lakhs at the time of the discussion in 1915 and the same is now 108 lakhs. I did not take that transference of war allowance and therefore 98 lakhs rose to 108 lakhs. That is what I mentioned at the commencement. I must say, my Lord, that I have been going through the discussion for a long number of years and all the points I have mentioned, I have not been able to completely place before the Hon'ble Mr. Davidson. I should be quite content if it would be possible for him to examine this matter. I should not be in a hurry in a matter like this and time must be given for consideration. If the matter is to be treated in the way it has been, I feel that it is not satisfactory."

The Hon'ble Mr. L. DAVIDSON :—"I have only just a word or two to say. The Honourable Member has put the financial side in the forefront of his resolution and he can only expect me to deal with it from the financial aspect, which I have done. It would be altogether out of place to traverse the whole work of a large department like the Police department and not to lay stress on the financial point of view. If there are particular respects in which the Honourable Member thinks that reform is necessary, he is quite at liberty to make specific suggestions but he ought not to utilize a series of such suggestions as the basis of a resolution for substantial reduction in expenditure and for a permanent standard of expenditure to be arrived at by means of a committee of officials and non-officials. Surely the first requisite for the recommendation to appoint a committee is to establish a prima facie case for the view that there has been extravagance and excessive expenditure. I venture to think that the Honourable Member has not made out that position."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT :—"Does the Honourable gentleman wish to divide the Council?"

The Hon'ble Mr. K. RAMA AYYANGAR :—"Yes."

The resolution was put and lost.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT :—"Resolution No. XI* is not moved. Does the Honourable Member propose to move Resolution No. XII?"

The Hon'ble Mr. B. VENKATAPATI RAJU :—"To-morrow, Your Excellency."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT :—"I have had inquiries from mufassal members; does the Council contemplate concluding its business to-morrow? There are 15 resolutions."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur V. K. RAMANUJA ACHARIYAR :—"I have to go home to-morrow night. I have no resolutions to move or to withdraw."

XI. This Council recommends to the Governor in Council that the orders passed by the Government on the recommendation of the Educational Conference be reconsidered and that fresh orders be issued
(a) in respect of the fee concessions to secondary schools by allowing a 10 per cent deduction on fee collections to give free scholarships to deserving poor students, to be selected after taking proper safeguards;
(b) allowing grants to aided secondary schools which work very well and are outside the provisions of the Grant-in-Aid Code.

950 RESOLUTION RE PROVISION FOR FINANCING CO-OPERATIVE HOUSE SOCIETIES AND GOVERNMENT LOANS TO CO-OPERATIVE AGRICULTURAL SOCIETIES.

(Mr. Venkatapati Raju ; the President.) [14TH MARCH 1919.

The Council re-assembled at 11 a. m.

RESOLUTION RE PROVISION FOR FINANCING CO-OPERATIVE HOUSE SOCIETIES AND GOVERNMENT LOANS TO CO-OPERATIVE AGRICULTURAL SOCIETIES.

The Hon'ble Mr. B. VENKATAPATI RAJU :—" With Your Excellency's permission Resolutions Nos. XII and XV refer to the same subject and we can conveniently discuss them both together."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT :—" One is housing, the other is agricultural societies. They may be discussed together."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. VENKATAPATI RAJU :—" Resolution No. XII runs thus :—

'XII. This Council recommends to the Governor in Council that the Government be pleased to provide a sum of five lakhs in the ensuing year to finance co-operative housing societies on terms recommended by the Co-operative Registrar, providing reasonable rate and longer term for repayment.'

" Resolution No. XV runs as follows :—

'XV. This Council recommends to the Governor in Council that the Government be pleased to authorize the Co-operative Registrar to recommend Government loans to co-operative agricultural societies on such terms as may be approved by the Government, where Government help is indispensable.'

"The underlying object in both is, we find that the Government aid is necessary, not only to encourage building societies to carry on their work but also to relieve the agricultural indebtedness of the people. With that object in view these resolutions are moved. Though we cannot congratulate ourselves on the success achieved by the co-operative department to meet completely the needs of the province, we may take credit that what we are doing in our province is better than what has been done in some other provinces. That does not mean that it does not need additional encouragement or additional trouble to be taken in order to bring home to the peasant the advantages of co-operation.

"So far as building societies are concerned, in our province there are only a dozen of them. From the latest report we find there were ten building societies in the beginning of the year and one was added at Coimbatore, but pathetically the report observes 'the societies at Madura, Ootacamund and Uthiramerur did practically no work during the year. Those at Coimbatore, Kumbakonam and Dindigul lent considerable sums to their members for building houses. The Mambalam society continued to sell to its members plots from the large area purchased by the society four years ago. Two buildings have been constructed on these sites by the members without the assistance of the society. The Davispet society has lent nearly Rs. 9,000 to its members for building operations. The members of the Bimlipatam building society have erected 62 houses with loans advanced to them by the society'. I submit this work is not at all adequate and we must find out the reasons why this was not taken more in hand by the co-operative societies.

"Your Excellency is aware that, so far as the building of houses is concerned, it requires not only a larger amount but longer terms for repayment. The central bank and the other societies would not be in a position to lend a large sum at reasonable rates of interest to be repayable in a long number of years even if the rules permit it. That is a drawback which cannot be ignored. I need not remind this Council that State aid was forthcoming and is forthcoming in the civilized countries more especially for building societies for the poor and the working classes. I may parenthetically mention that in Ireland estates have been bought and subdivided and nearly 50 small houses have been built there. We are told that other European countries have done similar work. I am gratified to learn that in New Zealand with a population of a million they have obligated themselves to provide funds to the extent of a hundred million dollars in order to enable settlers to get houses at a very low cost. I need not add that Australia is following the good example of New Zealand. Germany has taken a different rule of compelling even insurance companies and savings banks to provide a certain portion of their income for the purpose of lending for building societies. We notice in India also that industrial concerns are face to face with the problem of providing houses for workmen. I am glad to testify to the fact that Messrs. Binny & Co., of this town, who manage the Carnatic Mills, have not only provided houses for the superior staff but also for the lower classes of the establishment in their mills. That is a good sign. Even the Government do not forget their duty in providing houses for the Police department. Large sums of money are being spent from year to year in providing buildings for the constables and sub-inspectors. When we were considering position so far this building activity is concerned. I do not mean those persons who invest large sums and build large houses for their own use, but I mean houses for the poor people. Was any attempt made? It has been stated that though there is a population of over five lakhs, we have got only 60,000 houses which means that every house should be occupied by eight or nine people. When we notice from the Corporation's accounts that nearly one-third of them have an annual rental valuation of Rs. 14, that is a monthly rent of one rupee, we cannot but expect that these houses are insanitary dwellings unfit for human beings to live in. It is no wonder, as often reported in the Madras papers, that infantile mortality under one year is very great to the extent of 277 out of 1,000 and the general mortality also, leaving out extraordinary conditions on account of influenza or plague, is very high. It requires that the Government should no longer neglect—I won't say neglect—should no longer help taking immediate action to provide healthy dwelling houses for the poor people.

"How to do it is the problem which the Government should take up. We are spending nearly two lakhs of rupees every year on co-operative business to educate the people. Education is one way of bringing home the advantages of co-operation. But the more essential object is that we must provide means to do it. It cannot be denied that the present share capital of all the co-operative societies is very small and their borrowing power or working capital does not exceed one crore; it is only 90 lakhs or so. Taking that fact into consideration, we have to see how we can help building societies. The Central bank or the Urban bank or other district societies are not prepared to lend this amount for long periods. Taking this aspect of the question, the Bombay Government approached the Government of India that some aid should be given. At that time the Government of India were under the impression that all this should be raised by the people themselves and it was not the duty of the State to bother themselves about it. Against such unsympathetic answer the building society in Bombay emphatically protested and sent in their requisition again that it is necessary in the interests of the people that the Government should revise their opinion and come to their aid. Then the Bombay Government have freely urged, which I think this Government also can very well adopt, the necessity of State aid. The Bombay Government said 'As the Government of India are doubtless aware, the improvement of housing conditions by the grant of State assistance has long engaged the attention of European administration. The State could bear a rate of interest much lower than the central banks.' The Government of India thereupon agreed that, with proper safeguards, including more especially a sufficient security for the repayment of principal and interest, loans by Government to building societies with the object of providing sanitary dwellings were not open to objection on principle. First of all they said that it was not open to objection on principle. We have scored a victory. Instead of being indifferent the Government of India say that this is a legitimate expenditure. That was in the year 1917. In the year 1918 Sir Dinsha Wacha put a question in the Imperial Legislative Council and the Government of India replied—I only quote what is necessary for our purpose—that the Government of India need not provide anything in their budget, simply because no local Government asked for any sum to be given. I would read the exact wording. On the 4th September 1918, this was what the Government of India said 'We have not been asked by any local Government for any financial assistance to provide houses for working classes, and therefore it is not the intention of Government to provide any sum for this object in the next annual budget.' They say, why should we provide money when no local Government has applied for it? They do not object to the principle; they say it is because no Government asked they have not provided. I think I can very well approach Your Excellency's Government that they should either provide out of the funds available or approach the Government of India for making the necessary provision. I may also mention that the Government of Bombay provided in this year's budget Rs. 5 lakhs for this purpose. Taking their example I request Your Excellency's Government to provide a similar amount in our province. I do not think there will be any difficulty in providing such a small sum because for the purpose of loans a certain sum is provided in our budget; out of that sum the Government can utilise this amount for this purpose as well. Or they can make a special request to the Government of India that they should provide for it. In either case it is not a difficult matter. I have worded my resolution with sufficient limitations so that the Government might not find any difficulty in accepting it. I state that this sum should be given 'to finance co-operative housing societies on terms recommended by the Co-operative Registrar, providing reasonable rate and longer term of payment.' Therefore, it depends upon Your Excellency's Government and upon the Co-operative Registrar's recommendations on what terms and to what societies money should be lent. Therefore, this is a lump sum provided out of which grants can be made. As the Government of India excuse themselves that local Governments have not asked and therefore they have not provided anything, the local Government also might excuse themselves by saying that the Co-operative Registrar has not applied for it. If the Government of Madras provide the funds and indicate that money is available and he must utilise it in the best manner possible so as to see that the money is not wasted, I have no hesitation that the Co-operative Registrar will come forward with definite proposals. I need not be taken to task for not providing a scheme myself, because any scheme I may suggest may not be acceptable to the Government. So I leave it as general as possible giving ample scope for modifications in all possible ways.

"The other resolution which also practically resembles this is that Government loan should be given to societies where money is indispensable, limiting it only to agricultural societies. My Lord, in this connexion I may state that somehow or other some mistaken impression or wrong principle was adopted in India and more particularly in our own province, that it is not the duty of the State to relieve the indebtedness of the people or to come to their help but only to suggest means for the people how best to help themselves. It is a very useful suggestion, but I am afraid, Your Excellency, these good intentions would not carry us far, for the simple reason that the people are very poor and they will not be in a position to raise the necessary funds. The persons who have to fill in these gaps are unable to put any larger amounts and therefore we have the sad spectacle that there are not large deposits in our country, whereas in European countries we find large deposits made by the people themselves. Your Excellency, we cannot complain that the people have not deposited larger amounts for the reason, that they have not got much money to spare in order to deposit it in the bank. The present condition is deplorable enough, because whatever beneficent action may be taken by the Government the people are not benefited in spite of the agricultural improvements because most of the crops raised by them would go to the money-lender. The money-lender stands in the way between the people and the beneficent action of the Government. The money-lender cannot be avoided, because for various purposes money is wanted and the agriculturists cannot get it elsewhere; and if money is wanted the money-lender or sower would dictate his own terms. The net result is that most of the crops raised by them by the sweat of their brow would be taken away by the usurer and neither the Government nor the people are benefited. In these circumstances when we know that the whole of India is indebted to the extent of 400 crores of which about 60 crores belong to our own Presidency, confining it to agricultural indebtedness, it requires much attempt on our part to relieve them. One way of helping them is to make a provision in the Contract Act to reduce usurious rates of interest in the contracts entered into between the parties. They can evade that provision, because they deduct the interest first and give the remainder. This may be a palliative measure, but it will not really help the people. Originally though a larger amount was being subscribed by the Government as loan to these societies, we find year after year they are not advancing the funds but they are taking back what was due to them. Rupees 9,000 was due to the State last year, this year there is only Rs. 4,000 or 5,000 due to the Government, perhaps next year not a pie of the Government will be in agricultural societies.

"In order to avoid the impression that all this is a political cry and not a legitimate grievance I may quote a high authority to fortify my position whose genuineness in the sentiment he expressed or whose information or knowledge neither this Government nor any commercial friends would cavil at—I mean Sir Daniel Hamilton who speaking on the 15th February 1919 stated at the Co-operative Conference in Bengal as follows; and his observations are applicable not only to Bengal but to the Madras Presidency as well. If Your Excellency accepts his view, there is no other way open to this Government than to adopt the resolution which I have placed for Your Excellency's consideration. This is what Sir Daniel Hamilton said. He referred to the King's speech which was delivered soon after the signing of the armistice and then said 'quoting the King's speech now that the clouds of war are being swept from the sky, new tasks arise before us. We see more clearly some duties that have been neglected, some weakness that may retard our onward march. Those apply more appropriately to India for here the neglected duty, the failure to provide a banking system for the people more than any other cause has brought their onward march to a standstill. Progress of a kind there has been, but how have the people progressed? Railways have stretched out in all directions, have the lives of the people stretched out? Jute-mill dividends have expanded; have the lives of workers kept pace? Do the people thrive in the slums? The chief object of co-operation in India was to deal with the stagnation of lower classes more especially of the agriculturists who constitute the bulk of the population. Indebtedness instead of decreasing has tended to increase.' He said that usury was still rampant, the economic condition of the peasants had not been progressing as it should have done, and the old unsatisfactory features of a backward rural economy seemed persistently to remain. He adds that 'this is a serious indictment of a hundred years of British rule but unfortunately it is true', and he says 'my own personal knowledge and observation confirm it.' India with her huge population may be aptly described as the minus quantity of the Empire—minus education, doctors, medicine, sanitation, minus food, clothes, oil and all else that makes the wheel of life turn smoothly.' He states that it is the duty of the State to provide a banking system. Usury mahajan, he says, brings discredit on British rule and dishonour to the British flag and sterilises the beneficent work of the Government. He suggests—it may be useful to us or may not be useful to us, a similar proposal was made in the Viceroy's Legislative Council—that if the Government of India want money they can utilise the currency reserve and the gold standard reserve and the trade balances and lend them. He says these resources could be made to yield three hundred crores, and he draws attention to the unfairness, to put it mildly, of investing India's money resources in England and elsewhere while India is starving for want of money. We need not go to that Imperial question, so far as our present purpose is concerned; we are entitled to ask the Government of India to provide funds. I may mention that only recently in the budget speech of the Hon'ble Sir James Meston he said there was no objection to the local Government utilising any amount out of the balance subject to their approval for any progressive purposes, which I understand to mean relieving the condition of the people of India if no money is forthcoming out of the amounts sanctioned. There is no difficulty for this Government to go to the Government of India and state that so much money is wanted in order to provide funds for the people. I may quote Sir Daniel Hamilton's authority—two more sentences. He says 'we shall find sources to finance in the trade balance and the paper currency and gold standard reserve of Government. These reserves could be made to yield another three hundred crores of good credit money.' He significantly adds 'At the co-operative conference at Simla I drew attention to the unfairness, to put it mildly of investing India's money reserve in England and elsewhere while India is starving for money.' He states: 'The ryot is a small man but multiply every three hundred millions, organize his credit and his energy and he becomes a giant able to move the world. Finance the ryot and he will finance the Government and new industrial developments and several improvement schemes. Leave him as he is, and India will remain what she is, a land of waste and want.' When he says that unless we do something to help the ryot our country would be a land of waste and want, you must take heed—waste in the matter of expenditure of our public money and want in the matter of provision to our people. In these circumstances I may also quote what was done in the neighbouring State of Mysore in this connexion, which is added in the Industrial Commission's report as an appendix. Your Excellency finds it on page 465. They have given authority to their officers to recommend any loans for the purpose of achieving that result. I do not want to see my Government behindhand of a Native State. In order to produce better results and to remove the want complained of by Sir Daniel Hamilton, I have brought forward this resolution and I would appeal to this Government that they would not leave any stone unturned without effecting the purpose for which this resolution is brought."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR:—"I wish to second the Honourable Member's resolution."

The Hon'ble Sir ALEXANDER CARDEW:—"Your Excellency, if I had known what wide scope the Honourable Member was going to give to his second resolution, I should have had a few more figures handy for his benefit. But possibly he has studied the subject more deeply than I have. He may know what the amount of the consumption of the precious metals in India has been in the last 25 years, and he will be able to tell the Council that this land of waste and want has consumed perhaps half the world's production of gold in the last 25 years. In Mr. Datta's report on prices he touches on this question. Unfortunately I have not got complete figures which I would like to give to the Honourable Members of the Council, but at any rate these are a few of them. The annual absorption of gold in India rose from 6½ crores in 1890 to 22 crores in 1907-08 and to 27 crores in 1910-11. It is a rather remarkable thing for a land of waste and want to be absorbing 27 crores of gold a year. Where does it go to?"

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR:—"Waste."

The Hon'ble Sir ALEXANDER CARDEW:—"Waste in one sense; it is put into jewellery and not utilized as it should be utilized for the purposes to which this resolution has reference, that is to say some form of productive expenditure. The Honourable Member who moved this resolution has evidently looked at the financial statement made by the Hon'ble Sir James Meston the other day. I should like to draw attention to paragraphs 73, 74 and 75 of that speech or statement. Sir James Meston quotes the remarks which His Excellency the Viceroy made in September last in the course of which he said: 'From time immemorial, India has been held up to reproach as the grave of the precious metals. If she is to take her proper place among the progressive nations of the world, she must in her own interests do as Japan and other civilized nations do—put her hitherto immobile wealth to profitable uses.' Sir James Meston points out that from April 1915 up to the present time nearly a hundred and twenty crores has been added to the circulation in India, but he says 'to provide India this amount it has been necessary, besides using up the world's current production of silver, to deplete its accumulated stocks. Without the assistance of the Government of the United States, we should not have been able to satisfy the appetite of India for metallic currency. To any one, who gives the subject a moment's thought, two conclusions are irresistible. In the first place, the huge sums which it has been necessary for India to pay for the purchases of silver bring home to us the wasteful and extravagant nature of what we have been doing. In the second place, a continuance of demand for metallic currency on this scale must react violently on our whole currency and exchange policy.' He goes on to point out that until some change occurs in the habits of the people of India this enormous drain of the currency of India will continue to hamper the progress of the country, it forces up prices and raises the cost of living to everybody and it is not used for productive purposes with the result that India is getting no benefit from the metallic currency and hoards her metallic imports. I entirely agree with the Honourable Member that a better system of banking for the people is greatly needed, but I do not know if its absence is to be entirely put at the door of the Government? Has everything to be done by the Government? Are not the people to provide banks for themselves? There is a lot of money. Only one bank has been floated in Madras, how many branches has it over the Presidency? All these points will take us further afield than the resolution ought to take us.

"The second resolution is that the Government should authorize the Co-operative Registrar to recommend Government loans to co-operative agricultural societies where Government aid is indispensable. Is Government aid indispensable? That is the point. That is what the Honourable Member rather assumes, but is it really so? Is there any evidence that the progress of the co-operative movement has been hampered by lack of money? I did not hear the Honourable Member giving any evidence on that point. One of the things that we are proud of in this Presidency is that the co-operative movement, whatever else may be said of it, has been entirely a non-official movement. The whole of the funds, if the Honourable Member will look at the figures, have come from the public, and it is a remarkable circumstance that our working capital is the biggest working capital in India. We have got over two crores of working capital. That is the largest in any province in India. These are the figures for 1916-17. In that year the working capital of Madras was Rs. 205 lakhs, of which the Government had supplied Rs. 9,000, so that practically the whole of the capital has been raised from the public. That is the best evidence of the vitality of the movement in this Presidency. Two provinces have relied most upon Government. One is Burma which received 9½ lakhs from the Government and the second is Bombay. We all know what an enormously wealthy province Bombay is. It is fifteen times wealthier than we are. But Bombay has relied upon official support, instead of putting its hand into its pocket. The result of that is to be inferred from the fact that its working capital was a little more than half of the Madras working capital.

(Sir Alexander Cardew ; Mr. Venkatapati Raju.) [14TH MARCH 1919.

"I personally think that it would be a great mistake and a most retrograde step to begin to draw upon the State for working capital for the ordinary agricultural society. Nor is there any evidence I am aware of that such a step is necessary. In the last report of the Registrar he does not say there is any lack of the working capital. He says that the total agricultural credit rose from Rs. 86 lakhs to 98 lakhs, that the share capital of the agricultural societies showed a gratifying increase, and that there was an encouraging increase in local deposits and he goes on to hope that the societies would succeed to a greater extent in drawing upon the savings from members and other local persons. At present they rely upon loans, and their financial position would be much worse if they rely on loans from the Government. Would it not hamper the movement if they are to come to the State? We know that the State is supposed to have a pocket with an unlimited depth. Would not it weaken the motives which now lead the co-operator to be an enthusiast in the progress of co-operation, if he is to come to the Government and say, we want ten lakhs for capital expenditure? I think it would have a very bad effect and I believe it would not be appreciated by those who really have the interests of the co-operative movement at heart. I believe most of the co-operators in this Presidency like to feel their independence of Government support; they like to feel that they stand on their own legs and provide their own working capital for carrying on their movement without constant official support. I believe myself the acceptance of this resolution and the consequences flowing therefrom will not at all be welcomed by the more thoughtful section of co-operators. It will certainly be detrimental to the feeling of self-reliance and therefore to the general progress of the movement.

"So far as that resolution is concerned, I am quite unable to accept it. I really feel it is in the wrong direction. Unless it can be proved that it is impossible to find money from private sources, it will be quite wrong for the Government to begin to step in and supply funds. The moment they do it, it would stop the provision of funds from private sources.

"The other resolution is much more limited in its scope and therefore has a better claim for consideration. Moreover, as the Honourable Member has said, money is wanted for long terms at low rates for building societies and it may well be that it will not be possible for this particular class of societies to provide the whole of it. Without pledging the Government too deeply, I feel sure that they will be prepared to follow the lead of Bombay as far as that has gone, and provide funds for building societies. I did not hear the Honourable Member very clearly in some parts of his speech. I thought that his motion was intended to refer to the poorer classes."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. VENKATAPATI RAJU :—"Yes."

The Hon'ble Sir ALEXANDER CARDEW :—"If that is so, perhaps he remembers that only last November the Government accepted a resolution to encourage and assist to co-operative house-building for the poorer classes. The Hon'ble Mr. Narasimha Ayyar brought forward that resolution and the Government accepted it, so that the Government have accepted the principle and the only question at issue is whether or not all this money is wanted. If we receive any information that any society wants any money and has not received the money, I will take steps to provide funds for suitable building societies to provide houses for the poorer classes. I do not know if the Honourable Member knows of any case where money was needed and was not forthcoming. If not, I fail to see the object of locking up 5 lakhs in the budget. I shall endeavour to see whether money could be found in the course of the year. I am sure it can be found by the Finance Department. There will be no difficulty in supplying the necessary funds, if occasion for loans for this purpose arises in the course of the current year. I hope to that extent the Honourable Member's object will be regarded as achieved. As regards the provision of a sum in the budget I believe the Council is aware that we have already framed the budget. We had a meeting last month for the express purpose of carrying out such changes as the Council may desire in the budget and this resolution had better have been put forward in that meeting to consider whether a definite sum should have been put in. That being now impossible, it is inconvenient to make a large alteration in the budget which upsets the Government of India's balances. That is the reason why we had the financial discussion put back from this very date the 13th March to the early part of February in order to enable the changes to be carried out at an earlier date. That makes it difficult to carry out the present suggestion. For the reason I have already indicated, I also do not think it is essential. I am quite ready to give the undertaking that such funds as may be necessary will be obtained in the course of the year should it be necessary. Therefore, I cannot accept the resolution. I am quite in sympathy with it. I hope the Honourable Member will be convinced that the Government have done all that can be done. As to the other resolution we are entirely at cross purposes, at opposite poles."

RESOLUTIONS RE PROVISION FOR FINANCING CO-OPERATIVE HOUSE SOCIETIES AND GOVERNMENT LOANS TO CO-OPERATIVE AGRICULTURAL SOCIETIES AND OPENING OF A UNIVERSITY INSTITUTE OF ECONOMICS.

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur V. K. RAMANUJA ACHARIYAR :—"Your Excellency, I agree with the Hon'ble Sir Alexander Cardew that no help is required for ordinary agricultural societies. We have been getting on very well without Government help and we shall continue to do so. But with regard to the building societies some help is necessary, because they cannot repay the loans in a short time; they want long-term loans. The Central Bank is not in a position to give them long-term loans. If, therefore, the Government will obtain money for long terms and give it to Central Banks, they will be glad to take it and give it to the building societies. We do not want any other help from the Government of Madras or the Government of India, but we want long-term loans on debentures; or if they will start a land bank and obtain money from the people to give it on long-term loans, we do not want any financial help or any other grant."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. VENKATAPATI RAJU :—"Your Excellency, I thank the Honourable Sir Alexander Cardew regarding the acceptance of the principle of resolution No. 12, but I cannot congratulate either the Government or myself in inducing Government to accept it. As regards the second resolution I think the Hon'ble Sir Alexander Cardew is very right when he said that we are at cross purposes. That is true; if the people or the people's representatives want to get indebtedness relieved by Government help and the Government's object is 'help yourself', that is really cross purposes. But what I ask is, why should other civilised Governments go and spend their State money in relieving the distress of the people? I may mention that the Dutch Government in Java when they found that a whole population was indebted to some Muhammadan merchants, passed a law that no merchants ought to lend money; and they provided banks and they offered money at six per cent to discharge every pie of the millions of their debt. Even now other civilised countries are doing it. The Hon'ble Sir Alexander Cardew says it is not helpful to help people who will not help themselves to put money, and they would not put their best energy when the Government are prepared to supply them funds. It is not a question of their being willing to put money but of their being unable to put it. The Hon'ble Sir Alexander Cardew stated one other fact, that 120 crores was locked up in jewellery and if it is realised it would be useful. Not only the people but the Government should be blamed. I do not think men will degrade themselves with jewellery. It is the ladies that deck themselves with jewels for want of education. If they are educated as English ladies are they will not deck themselves with jewellery. Leaving that point aside the Hon'ble Sir Alexander Cardew very rightly asked where was the demand, and he said unless we found evidence of complaint of want of funds he did not see any ground for moving in the matter. I may invite the attention of the Hon'ble Sir Alexander Cardew to the report of Mr. Hemingway for the year 1916-17, because in 1917-18 no reference is made to the question whether it is sufficient or insufficient, but in 1916-17 report on page 3 there is a clear reference made. I will just read that portion 'Loans from Central Banks and other societies to societies other than Central Banks rose from Rs. 59.47 lakhs to Rs. 71 lakhs and the reserve fund from 8.49 lakhs to 9.62 lakhs. An even larger sum could have been profitably employed by the societies had it been available, but the banks were unable owing to the general financial situation to satisfy all the applications received and a good many societies had to be refused money they needed'. They need money, the applications are rejected; how are they to get on with the works on which they can profitably spend money? Your Excellency, when we find that out of 40 million people not even one million are agriculturists who have joined the co-operative societies it does not show that it is widespread or that the money received is sufficient to raise their condition. The object is to relieve them of their indebtedness and if it is not forthcoming I cannot understand how it is possible to keep quiet. It is for us to do something to relieve them of their position. If the Government think it is not the State's business to relieve them from their chronic condition of their poverty, that is another matter. If they think it is the duty of the Government that their subjects are well off and well provided not with luxuries but with material to eat and dress, I hope the Government will, if not now, on some other occasion come to a different conclusion that it is the duty of the Government to come to their help. With these remarks I press both the resolutions."

RESOLUTION RE OPENING OF A UNIVERSITY INSTITUTE OF ECONOMICS.

The Hon'ble Mr. B. VENKATAPATI RAJU :—"My Lord, my next resolution is :—

'XIII. This Council recommends to the Governor in Council that the Government be pleased to open a University Institute of Economics at Madras at an early date.'

"Your Excellency, I propose to the Government the opening of an institute of economics in this Presidency as a sure and certain means of enlarging the opportunities for the study of economics and associated branches of political science. No civilized country can afford to overlook the importance of training several hundred young men in economics and allied political science, knowing as it does, the inseparable connexion of economics with the political problems of the country. The Government has recognized the importance and appointed a University Professor to lecture to the students on economics and grant diplomas even. In our Presidency, economics is studied by the history students of the honour's course. In Calcutta, Bombay and Allahabad separate faculties of economy have been opened conferring degrees B.Sc. and M.Sc. and D.Sc. in economics. We generally expect two classes of students to specialize in economics: (1) students who make economics their profession; (2) others who study the subject to make themselves fit for public life and business. The institute should be open to all who will be able to grasp and assimilate what is taught there. Even School-final students (S.S.L.C. holders) may be admitted to the three years' and four years' course of study for B.Sc. and M.Sc. respectively. Unnecessary restrictions should be avoided, the sole aim being the expanse of economic knowledge among larger number of the people who are anxious to undergo the training. Professor Foxell of Cambridge has well said 'nothing is more evident and I can give more examples of it from the history of legislation and from personal knowledge than that the power of applying principles to actual affairs is extremely rare and can only be developed in economists by making their study more realistic. Men of undoubted ability constantly show themselves unable to handle principles which, in the abstract, they evidently understand, because they are not trained to observe the details, distinctions and complex relations of the historical situation to which the theory has to be applied.' He adds we must make the study sufficiently thorough or to bring it to close enough to reality either to give the best training or to interest the practical man. 'Is there any wonder to suppose that our administration would be bettered and legislative activity would be more useful if the services of the public men are imbued with the true knowledge of economics. Professor Marshall has well pointed out that economic studies call for and develop the faculty of sympathy and especially the rare sympathy which enables people to put themselves in the place, not only their comrades but also of other classes. It helps the movements by which our growing wealth and opportunities may best be turned to account for the true well-being of the present and coming generation.'

"He quotes with approval what Sir Richard Jebb said that economics and associated studies afford a liberal education as it trains the intelligence, gives elasticity to the faculties of the mind, humanizes the character, and forms not merely an expert but an efficient man.

"I am quite sure that there would be rush of students if the curriculum is so arranged as to afford proper training for business and public service and public life. The present system of education with all its advantages lacks one essential factor:—It is divorced from the active affairs of life and affords no guidance in subjects in which the students are interested in their everyday life in later years. Professor Marshall has given a curriculum which is adopted in Cambridge. The London School of economics and political science is attached to the London University. A three years' course of training including provision for investigation and research in economic, commercial and political subjects has been established, providing courses of lectures, classes and tutorial supervision in all the subjects which fall within the faculty of economics and political science. For B.Sc. pass course the subjects are: (1) economics organization and one of the following: (a) accounting, (b) industrial and commercial law, (c) constitutional law and history, (d) public international law. For the honour's course an additional subject out of (1) economics descriptive and analytical, (2) economic history, (3) banking and currency, (4) international trade, (5) transport, (6) insurance, (7) statistics including demography, sociology and public international law. There, Bachelors of Science in Economics may after the prescribed interval proceed by Thesis Examination to the D.Sc. degree in economics. The subjects are varied enough to enlighten the mind and be of much advantage in after life. The Calcutta University has given a different curriculum which can with advantage be referred. For the pass course in Political Economy and Political Philosophy we have Political Economy, Political Philosophy, application of the principles of Political Economy to Indian topics. The subjects for the honour's course was a higher course in the phical factor, physical features and conditions of the country and their bearings on Indian economic products, faculties of transport. Under the special factor, the village system and rural economy, social conditions of the people and their influence, on Indian industries, rents, wages and prices, organisation of agriculture, handicraft and domestic industries in rural India, trade and transport, banking and agricultural credit. Under the political factor, political relations of India with England and economic effects, particularly on the balance of trade, India's debt, home charges, currency legislation, gold standard reserve and expenditure, value of land revenue and incidence of taxation.

"I quoted at length so that it may be understood by one and all that this is a useful branch of study covering ample ground of practical subjects which cannot be neglected. I may be permitted to add that co-operation may be advantageously be added as a branch of study in the optional group, as we are in need of hundreds of trained men to cover up the whole Presidency with co-operative organisations. History of co-operation, organisation of credit societies, purchase and sale societies, and co-operative societies of other kinds may be taught with advantage. I propose a separate institute for the study of economics instead of making it an adjunct to the existing colleges as is done in Calcutta and Allahabad by adding a separate faculty because I want a clear differentiation between cultural and professional studies and moreover sufficient importance will not be attached to the professional aspect in Arts colleges and the staff do not solely feel responsible for its good name of training men efficiently for the profession. 'There over-literary education is imparted with scarcely a touch of modern side' as Mukherjee states. The Engineering College and Law College were at one time mere adjuncts to the Presidency College but later on, it was found necessary to establish separate institutions.

"Under the heading of an interesting forecast of British universities in an English Journal I notice the following: 'The services of the nation, whether in the general sense of technical equipment for every great profession or in the special sense of advance and discovery in the interests of national progress and prosperity, must be the sphere and function of the University.' Simplification of the complicated and cumbrous machinery of academic instruction and administration is also called for. The relaxation of rigid conditions for graduation, the institution of instruction in new subjects is already stirring the University consciousness. It requires a statesmanlike and comprehensive direction. In India it is wanted a hundredfold. Professor Slater moved last week in the Senate for adding separate faculty of economics and to refer the matter to the Syndicate. It was grudgingly referred. The signs are not wanting there that some Fellows of the Madras University determined to oppose this modest proposal as superfluous, unnecessary and uncalled for. Hence I am not satisfied with the attitude of some members of the Senate and the future prospect of economic study under their fostering care. It is the duty of the Government to provide educational facilities for such an important branch as this. The Government should always be ahead of popular demand. We cannot afford to procrastinate this matter. It has been already delayed too long.

"An Institute of Economics is more important than any of the existing professional colleges. The material well-being of the nation demands a proper study of economics. The college should provide accommodation for at least 200 students with four Professors and four assistant Professors costing about Rs. 60,000 annually while realising Rs. 20,000 from fees, leaving the net cost to the State of training a student in economics at Rs. 200 only, which can well be borne by the country. The capital outlay on buildings and decent library and equipment would not be more than 3 or 4 lakhs of rupees. I would only say that any amount spent on this institute will be a great national investment bringing in a hundredfold return in diverse ways. I hope the Government would take early steps for establishing the institute with such modifications as its expert advisers might suggest."

The Hon'ble Mr. K. Rama Ayyangar seconded the resolution.

The Hon'ble Mr. R. LITTLEHAILES:—"Your Excellency, the resolution which has been moved is that a University institute of economics be opened by the Government. The provision of facilities for advanced specialized study in economics is the duty of the University and this duty is now being performed by the University who have a professor of Indian economics and a course of study in economic subjects conducted by and under the general supervision of Professor Slater who is assisted by part time and whole time lecturers, some of whom are specialists in the subjects they lecture in. The University examination is held at the end of the course and a diploma in economics is awarded on the results of the course and examination. In fact a University institute of economics already exists in Madras in an embryo state. It is growing, and its activities will extend; it is a fact well known to the University authorities that it may develop even a quasi-independent entity. But the organization, management and control of this developing entity is not a matter of the present day concern. When the time is ripe for a full grown institute of economics, whether it is to be controlled by the University or the Government or jointly by the University and the Government can be well settled. Meantime, the Government and their officials are watching the development of this institute and are not unmindful either of the possible needs of the University or the demands for the provision of facilities for specialised study in economics. The honourable mover himself has indicated that only a week ago the Senate of the University instructed the Syndicate to inquire into and report upon the institution of a separate degree in economics. It would be unwise to force the growth of the University institute, and even more unwise and prejudicial to educational interests for the Government to open an institute with the avowed object of undertaking work that properly belongs to the University and is now being developed by the University. The honourable mover would like an institute which is open to all persons. The persons who are now undergoing the course of economics are selected from all classes, there are very few graduates among them. Dr. Slater is well alive that this institute at present does not suffice purely and simply for a graduate course, and it is not his intention nor is it the intention of the University to restrict the course to graduates. I do not wish to go in details into the arguments of the Honourable Member. I have explained the position in outline. I suggest, sir, that the honourable mover's intention in moving his resolution is already met by the action that is taken."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR:—"May I know what is the embryo institution referred to? Where is the institution?"

The Hon'ble Mr. LITTLEHAILES:—"The classes are held in the Senate House."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. VENKATAPATI RAJU:—"Your Excellency, I have not been a bit wiser after listening to the speech of the Hon'ble the Director of Public Instruction. I know that the classes are being held and lectures are being delivered in economics, and also that the economics might be taken by the history student. That is not what I want. I want an institution which is devoted to train young men who are able to understand the subject. We want men efficiently trained to carry on business transactions, to fill up public services and fill up public life. Where is such an institute? Perhaps the Honourable the Director of Public Instruction is perfectly right when he says that it is in an embryo state. Are you going to keep it in an embryo state? I want to put more heat and I want it in a state in which we can utilize it, to which our students can go as early as possible. We need not wait for years and years. At one time the Senate were not in favour of instituting a degree. I do not know even now whether it will be opened if it is left in the hands of the Senate. What I urge is the Government should force the hands of the University or establish of their own accord an institute where men are trained for this purpose. We are sadly in need of them. Everybody wants them. Industries want them. We want men to fill the public life who understand questions of public life and the real economic condition of the people and how to relieve it. At present we have to send our young men to other countries to learn this. No delay can be tolerated. Notwithstanding the assurance of the Director of Public Instruction that everything is being done, we are not satisfied, because we want changes and that too at a rapid rate. Therefore I strongly press upon the attention of the Government that it is an essential thing that should be done."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"I do not know if I can say a word usefully to the Honourable Member. I do not know if he is intimately acquainted with the management of the University or if he is really acquainted with what is going on in the matter. I am quite sure that the Hon'ble the Director of Public Instruction's statement should be sufficient to carry conviction to ordinary minds that a beginning has been made in this work. If the honourable gentleman thinks that it is possible to bring into being at one stroke a building in which two hundred students are at once to be found studying economics or any other branch of university study, I think I am afraid he is doomed to disappointment. The Director of Public Instruction has made a very complete statement. A great deal of progress has been made since the arrival of Doctor Slater. I do not know whether the Honourable Gentleman really appreciates what has been done. I cannot think he does, otherwise he cannot press the motion on the paper in the language he does. If he wants it to be put, I have no objection to do so."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. VENKATAPATI RAJU:—"I press it."

The resolution was put to the Council and lost.

RESOLUTION RE APPOINTMENT OF AN ITINERANT RURAL SANITARY BOARD.

The Hon'ble Mr. B. VENKATAPATI RAJU:—"Your Excellency, the resolution that I propose to move runs as follows:—

'XIV. This Council recommends to the Governor in Council that the Government be pleased to appoint an itinerant rural sanitary board to survey the rural parts of the Presidency and propose a definite plan of expenditure of sanitary grants and submit consolidated figure necessary for sanitary improvement village per village.'

"I invite the attention of the Council to the answer given to my question No. 152 printed on page 27 of the agenda. The question is 'will the Government be pleased to state (a) whether the Government is in possession of information regarding the sanitary requirements of villages in the Presidency, village per village, and the amount required for the sanitary improvement of the same, and (b) whether such information will be made available to the public.' The reply is that 'the Government are not in possession of such information.' Knowing full well that the Government are not in possession of such information long before this reply was given, and also knowing that grants are being made by the Government to local bodies for sanitary purposes in diverse ways and the money is being spent, I thought in these days of scientific knowledge it is far better to have a clear and definite plan before us. What is the present condition of these villages so far as sanitation is concerned? What are the things that have to be done and what is the amount that is necessary, and in how many years can we fill up the gap and fulfil the sanitary requirements and improve the sanitation of the whole Presidency? To meet such a state of things instead of providing in a haphazard manner whatever amount we can scrape out of the budget funds and sending it to that department in order to distribute it amongst local bodies, would it not be better for the Government to insist upon having plans and estimates? What is the plan of our conduct? I want a plan of our conduct completely. Whether it costs ten crores or 50 crores does not matter. Let us know what is the amount necessary to improve the sanitary conditions of the whole Presidency and in how many years we can do it. Changes will have to be made when time comes. But we must have a definite idea. If we accept the idea, my submission is except complaints here and there not even taluk boards or district boards are in possession of clear and definite information about the needs of each village within their area. Some villages complain of want of drinking water and then only the taluk boards or district boards will get information. We must know completely the sanitary condition of the people, how they are living, what is the condition of their houses, what is the sanitary condition of the surroundings, how they are disposing of their rubbish and other injurious matter that should not be left by the side of the house, what provision is made to keep cultivation away from the villages, and whether there is or is not congestion; all these are points which ought to be known to the Government. If we leave it as a theoretical measure, it will not satisfy the conditions and therefore though it is an ambitious programme it is a programme which ought to be faced, if not now at least some time hence. Therefore why not begin at an early date? Therefore, my suggestion is for an itinerant rural board. I do not want a rural sanitary board independent of the present Sanitary Board. What I want is a rural sanitary board under the control of the Government and under the present Sanitary Board in order to look and see for themselves and advise and suggest means for improving the sanitary condition of the country. It cannot be said, I do not think any one will be in a position to venture to suggest, that we have got a complete idea of the sanitary conditions of the rural classes because the Government of India admitted more than once that the sanitary condition of the rural parts is not at all good and it requires much work to be done to improve the condition. Every one who has any business to go into the villages would find dirty huts surrounded by all sorts of insanitary things, hopelessly insanitary surroundings, and in some villages there is absolutely no water-supply and even if there is a water-supply it is much contaminated. My first point is, are the Government aware of it that the people are suffering? If the Government are aware of it there would be no difficulty, because they would not sleep a day without redressing it. But how do they know it? They must send their officers. Suppose all these non-officials make a report to-morrow, they would not attach so much value to that as they would to the report of their own men. I want a man of the status of the Deputy Sanitary Commissioner, a Deputy Sanitary Engineer and also a non-official, in order to see that it will not be finished in a departmental fashion and in order to have some people's representatives also in it."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"Will the Honourable Gentleman tell me the personnel of this board?"

The Hon'ble Mr. B. VENKATAPATI RAJU:—"It may be modified as will please the Hon'ble Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"What is your suggestion?"

The Hon'ble Mr. B. VENKATAPATI RAJU:—"My suggestion is a deputy sanitary commissioner, deputy sanitary engineer, and a non-official assisted by a hospital assistant, an overseer of the Public Works Department, a co-operative inspector with clerks, draughtsmen and peons. These people would go from district to district and from taluk to taluk and from village to village and work in co-operation with the taluk board. Whenever they go to a taluk they can consult the taluk board and take their suggestion as to what is actually needed village per village. Whether these instructions should be carried out or no depends on whether the Sanitary Board accepts it and whether the Government are prepared to spend for it. So far as the actual condition is to be reported, this board is quite sufficient to suggest what is absolutely necessary and what is the present position. Then when they formulate their proposals the Sanitary Board and the Government will see how best to meet the situation. We can decide by which time they can improve the surroundings, whether 20 years or 50 years, and we can decide what to spend in one year. We may give Rs. 10 lakhs for sanitary grants one year and Rs. 6 lakhs in another year. But let there be this data. Now Rs. 10 lakhs is given, because the boards say they can spend Rs. 10 lakhs, and the grants are distributed, but this does not cause satisfaction. I ask, is this the only way? Can we not devise a better method? The Government must have before them actual knowledge of the needs, village per village. If we know what is the actual condition and what steps we have to take, then it is easy for us to go further. Unless we have such a knowledge I think these haphazard grants, though they will be helpful so far as they go, will not be permanently useful. For those who do not want to take the trouble all this would appear very irksome. In order to relieve the situation of millions of people, the Government should have better knowledge and more earnestness to carry out improvements to rural parts. I submit this is not a matter for laughter. This is not a matter which can be poohpoohed. This is a matter which I earnestly press upon the attention of the Government whether they accept my resolution or not they must one day or other have the information that I suggest at their disposal. Better suggestions can be made and better methods can be devised, but I think the object should be attained at an early date and I invite the earnest attention of the Council to this object."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. KRISHNA RAO:—"I second this resolution, Your Excellency; and in doing so I wish to point out that regarding the main principles underlying this resolution there cannot be any serious difference of opinion. The main principle underlying this resolution is that the sanitary condition of the rural areas is not satisfactory, that the present sanitary staff is not able to cope with the existing condition of things and that some means must be devised for improving the staff. I only wish that in dealing with this resolution the Hon'ble Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar will not concentrate his attention on the particular scheme suggested but will try to see whether the idea is or is not acceptable when the resolution does not commit us to any particular scheme."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"It recommends a sanitary board."

RESOLUTION RE APPOINTMENT OF AN ITINERANT RURAL SANITARY BOARD.

(Mr. Krishna Rao ; Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar.)

[14TH MARCH 1919.]

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. KRISHNA RAO :—"As suggested by my Honourable Friend in the course of his remarks, what he suggests is an itinerant rural sanitary board which will work under the present Sanitary Board. Honourable Members of Council will see that if we are agreed upon the necessity for improving the rural sanitary condition, if we are once agreed that the present sanitary staff, sanitary agency, is not able to cope with the ever-increasing work, it is our duty to devise means whereby that condition of things can be improved. I do not think that the Hon'ble Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar will be in a position to state that it has been possible for the Sanitary Board to deal with this ever-increasing work in as expeditious a manner as he would himself wish."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR :—"You mean the existing Sanitary Board?"

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. KRISHNA RAO :—"Yes. The Honourable Mover pointed out in the course of his remarks that the sanitary board he suggests might work under the existing Sanitary Board. I do not want it to be an independent body; it may be another travelling agency working under the existing Sanitary Board. That is the suggestion made by him. So far as the details are concerned, I do not think it is possible for this Council to come to a conclusion as to the exact composition of that board. We must take some time; I believe it is the duty of the Government to consult expert advisers as to the agency to be appointed for the purpose, how it is to work and how the duties are to be distributed. The only point I wish to impress upon the Council is, is it or is it not necessary to increase the sanitary agency now working under the Government? If you think it is not necessary, it is not possible for you to subscribe to the resolution; but it will be otherwise if you think it necessary, though you may not agree with the specific scheme. I hope the Hon'ble Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar will accept the principle underlying the resolution and see his way to work it out satisfactorily."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR :—"Your Excellency, I wish to take the somewhat unusual course of dealing with the Honourable Seconder of the resolution before I proceed to reply to what the Honourable mover has said. The Honourable Seconder particularly warned me against attaching undue importance to the scheme put forward by the Hon'ble Mr. Venkatapati Raju. He has asked me to note what he calls the 'underlying principle' of it, to recognize that something has to be done and it is only that recognition that he is particular about. If by the principle of this resolution the Honourable Seconder means that the sanitary condition of the rural areas is generally unsatisfactory, that a great deal has yet to be done in regard to it, and that the Government should do all that they can by way of staff and expenditure of money to better that state of affairs—if this is what he means, may I know if this is what he means?"

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. KRISHNA RAO :—"Yes."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR :—"The Honourable Seconder says 'yes.' If that is so, he has my entire concurrence with the principle of the resolution, and I am pretty certain that he has the entire concurrence of this Council. We all know that sanitation is not the strong point of our village life. Partly through ignorance, partly through climatic conditions, for a number of reasons, I am grieved to say that filth and dirt are the characteristics of rural life. The way in which night-soil is dealt with and the way in which the water-supply of the village is dealt with and the fact that we sometimes have villages decimated by perfectly avoidable diseases are proof, if any proof were wanted, that the sanitary condition of village life is by no means satisfactory. The effective remedy of that will be firstly a very large increase in the volume of education; without education, village people will never be responsive to sanitary ideas. Even in large towns well-educated people do not seem to realise that there is any very substantial difference between sewage water and drinking water. I have heard with regard to the drainage system of an important town an educated man saying what does it matter, why should the Government force a drainage scheme upon us? I asked him 'If you do not dispose of your sewage water, what will you do?' He said, 'We will go on as we have been doing in the past; it will only flow.' If that is the feeling prevalent in a large town we cannot blame the villagers for not knowing anything better. A large volume of education is needed to make the villagers understand the harm of drinking impure water. You will probably say that the mere expenditure of money will not carry us far. I entirely agree that our sanitary staff is absolutely insufficient. I am aware, I am sure Honourable Members here who sit on behalf of the Public Works Department will agree with me, that the Sanitary Engineering Department has not been able to dispose of all its work as rapidly as we desire. Nobody says that we have worked with ideal expedition either in the sanitary department or for the matter of that in any other department. The Government also know that in the districts our staff is very insufficient. We are trying now with great difficulty to induce municipalities to appoint well-paid health officers; in a few districts we have induced the district boards to appoint officers of the rank of assistant surgeons to have charge of sanitation. We have certain cholera parties which we have made permanent. This question of greatly strengthening the sanitary staff of the province is under the consideration of the Government. If I remember aright, the Surgeon-General and the Sanitary Commissioner are now engaged in elaborating a scheme for very substantially strengthening the sanitary staff so that, just as we have a district staff in other departments of the Government, in every district there may be a strong sanitary staff which will go round and point out the defects of the villages to the local authorities concerned, the unions or the taluk boards, and advise them what to do, and if they want and get money for any purpose, see that the money is properly spent. These things will be the function of that department. We recognize that the staff requires very substantial strengthening and I can assure Honourable Members that this will be one of the things which we hope will be taken up by the Government in the near future. My Honourable Colleague Sir Alexander Cardew will consider most sympathetically the aspirations of local bodies to have a strong sanitary staff.

"Having said that, we are face to face with, we cannot ignore, the particular resolution, unless the Honourable Member is satisfied with this explanation as to what is being done and with the recognition by us that the sanitary administration of rural areas is extremely unsatisfactory. If he is not satisfied with my assurance that a scheme for strengthening the district sanitary staff is being considered, it will be my duty to deal with this resolution on the paper. I assume that he wants me to deal with this resolution."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. VENKATAPATI RAJU :—"I accept the assurance, but I want the Honourable Member to deal with the resolution because I want to know what his views are."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR :—"With pleasure. The Honourable Member's resolution is that 'this Council recommends to the Governor in Council that the Government be pleased to appoint an itinerant rural sanitary board'—presumably a single sanitary board [The Hon'ble Mr. P. Venkatapati Raju :—"Yes"]—'to survey the rural parts of the Presidency and propose a definite plan of the expenditure of sanitary grants and submit a consolidated figure necessary for sanitary improvements village per village'. He wants a strong central establishment which will take in hand at once the whole question of rural sanitation which is now being dealt with by district boards and taluk boards and union panchayats and informal panchayats all over the province. And this one board will go from village to village and hold an inquiry into its condition in the matter of drainage, disposal of night-soil, drinking water, and enumerate all its sins and indicate how these things should be remedied, and then their scheme should be taken up by us and the thing set right. That I believe is the Honourable Member's scheme [The Hon'ble Mr. B. Venkatapati Raju :—"Yes"]. I am glad I have his concurrence in the paraphrasing of his scheme. I ask what staff he provides. He says the sanitary board is to consist of an officer of the rank of deputy sanitary commissioner, a deputy sanitary engineer, one non-official—apparently one non-official is intended for the whole Presidency [Hon'ble Mr. B. Venkatapati Raju :—"Yes"]—and they should be assisted by a hospital assistant—I presume he means a sub-assistant surgeon—and an officer of the Public Works Department, an overseer, a lower subordinate, and a co-operative inspector—I have not understood what the co-operative inspector is for, I have no doubt he will be an important element in the travelling party—a few clerks and a few peons. These people will have to start and go from village to village. In the last few minutes I have been trying to find out the time which this peripatetic party will take. I have two or three estimates of the probable time. Assuming that this body is to work under continuous pressure from the Government, helped I have no doubt by resolutions brought into the Legislative Council from time to time as to what they have done and why they have not done more, it will take according to one estimate over a hundred years to finish this work."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR :—"At what rate?"

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR :—"I will give you all the estimates. According to another estimate it will take 547 years. I am really not responsible for the accuracy of these figures. I am only indicating the gigantic nature of the problem which the Honourable Member has raised, I have no doubt with the best of intentions, intentions with which we are in entire sympathy. But probably he does not realize what a huge problem he has presented to his colleagues on this Council for consideration. I asked the Hon'ble Mr. Stokes to try and reconcile these two figures and he has worked out a statement which shows that it will take 200 years. I am prepared to put the most charitable construction on the thing, let us assume that it will take one century. It is a matter for consideration what exactly is to be done with a party which will take a century to finish its work and whether we may not, in view of the prodigious amount of time which will be spent on this task, proceed in the less ambitious way we have till now adopted, of utilizing the existing local bodies, municipal councils or taluk boards or district boards or union panchayats, allowing them to benefit by the advice given by our medical and sanitary staff and greatly strengthening that staff to examine and make recommendations from time to time, and with the funds at our disposal rectify all these things."

"I do not want the Council to be under the impression that we are under any illusion as to the condition of our villages. The Honourable Member wants to know how this particular scheme appeals to me. I am therefore bound to mention it. I admit I have not analysed it with sufficient minuteness. I undertake to do so if the Honourable Member wants it, but, so far as I can see, this is a tremendous task which will never satisfy the purpose. Now the whole scheme of our local self-Government about which we talk from time to time is, as the Government of India have told us, to allow the local bodies to develop in their own way, controlling them where absolutely necessary, but with as little outside interference as possible. Here is an Honourable Member of this Council proposing practically to take this whole question of rural sanitation out of their hands and concentrating it in the hands of an itinerant, strong central body which will take a very considerable period of time to finish its task. I venture most respectfully to submit for the consideration of this Council whether it is within the range of practical politics. I do not see it is. I honestly think it would not work. As I said, a great deal of trouble is due to the fact that the people are ignorant and they are so little responsive to correct ideas of sanitation. We must improve them. This is one of those matters in which you go down very soon to the bed-rock of popular ignorance. You go down a few inches and then stumble upon this rock of ignorance. Whatever you do, you have to deal with a large population which is ignorant, and which notwithstanding the labours of the present Director of the Public Instruction and his distinguished predecessors in office it will take some considerable time to educate up to a reasonable level. The resolution in its present form is wholly unworkable. I have received an assurance from the Honourable Member that he will accept my general assurance in regard to our recognition of the sanitary needs, and the assurance that we will do our level best, and I beg of him to fulfil his pledge that he would not press for a division on this particular scheme which he has been so good as to put forward."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO :—"The Hon'ble Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar has become a great pandit in the art of criticising non-official resolutions. He can bring all his ability and his general method of presenting a case in criticising a resolution especially when it is weak. With all his knowledge of administration, with his ability and with the knowledge which he possesses of the working of Government departments, it did not require much exertion to show the weakness of this resolution. It is perfectly true that the resolution as framed is one which is open to grave objections. But still, sir, it is unnecessary to call into question in a resolution like this the general knowledge of the people in regard to sanitary matters and then the exertions of the Director of Public Instruction in dispelling ignorance in this country and various other matters."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR (interrupting) :—"I did not call them into question."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO (continuing) :—"Which might have a remote bearing on the subject under discussion. Especially in view of the Hon'ble Mr. Venkatapati Raju's assurance that he is not going to contest with the Hon'ble Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar, the soundness of his criticism in regard to the exact approval he has put forward, no good purpose will be served by examining the criticism of the Hon'ble Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar or the statement made by my Honourable Friend in support of the resolution. I feel there is absolutely no doubt that, if my Honourable Friend suggested that this new sanitary board is to be constituted over the heads of local bodies for the purpose of carrying out the works such as those suggested by the Hon'ble Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar, it would be an unworkable proposition. But I understood my Honourable Friend's proposal was merely for the purpose of drawing up a programme."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR :—"Village after village."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO :—"He estimated the time as 100, 200 or 547 years according to various estimates. If I were inclined to ridicule the efforts of the Department of Sanitation, I might perhaps draw the Honourable Member's attention to the programme of a water-supply scheme in this Presidency, the history of a scheme which took 30 years before the Sanitary Department was in a position to give effect to the particular scheme. I reviewed all this once in this Council. A certain scheme took 25 years for investigation, 5 years for execution—a single water-supply scheme for a single town. My Lord, the Hon'ble Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar thinks that my Honourable Friend's programme can be carried out in 100 years. I think he is rather quite correct."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR :—"I did not say the carrying out but preparing the programme."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO :—"That makes it much more interesting. I would invite attention to the past history of many water-supply and drainage scheme—the expedition, the delay the interdepartmental references and then in the end we come to the question of finance, in which another two years is taken before coming to a decision. Therefore nothing is too soon in the matter of sanitation. By the time this programme is settled, the ignorance will have been dispelled and the educational progress will keep pace."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR (interrupting) :—"The estimates will become obsolete."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO (continuing) :—"Yes, then another board will be appointed to revise the estimates and the revised estimates will be prepared and will be sent to the taluk boards and from then they will go elsewhere. I can give him the history of interesting perambulations in the various departments of the Government. It is quite easy to draw up an indictment against the dilatoriness of this Government. My Honourable Friend if I may venture to say so, with our poor knowledge of administrative readiness and expedition has brought forward a resolution which is open to all the objections. No doubt I admit it is perhaps a charge of which many of us are guilty. What I submit to your Excellency's Government is that in this matter I do not defend this proposal, but I wish to make one enquiry. The Hon'ble Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar stated that they have under consideration a grand scheme for increasing the sanitary staff in the districts."

14TH MARCH 1919.] (Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar ; Mr. M. Ramachandra Rao ;
Mr. Venkatapati Raju.)

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR :—"I did not say a grand scheme."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO :—"I hope it will not be a paltry scheme. It will be a fairly satisfactory scheme."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR :—"Yes, for strengthening the sanitary staff."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO :—"May I ask him in all humility to publish that scheme before it is approved?"

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR :—"Yes."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO :—"That is one suggestion I would like to make in contributing to this discussion. My feeling has been that we have had the assistant medical and sanitary officer going about the districts and looking into the sanitary conditions of the parts and drawing up a huge indictment, saying that this pond should be kept in order or that a latrine must be constructed or that prickly-pear should be removed or a road must be improved. Piles of reports will be found in the district boards' offices. In fact two district boards' offices have abolished them. Unless we are prepared to give enough money to improve the sanitation, I do not think the Hon'ble Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar can take any credit for increasing the staff. I won't give the Government any credit for increasing the staff. What the staff will do is they will go to the villages and draw their travelling allowance and send up big diaries and programmes, but when they come to the execution of a single work, it is all one problem that the district board has no money. I wish to emphasise this aspect of the question. If my Honourable Friend's proposal is open to many objections, I am sure that the Hon'ble Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar's proposal with reference to the sanitary staff is open to graver objections."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR :—"I made no proposal."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO :—"It is under consideration, I do not know whether it is a proposal or whether it is under consideration. I hope it will not take many years of consideration. Whatever may be the merits of the particular proposal, I would appeal to the Hon'ble Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar to consider the financial aspect and, as I have mentioned, immediately publish the scheme which he may have for strengthening the sanitary establishment. I know everybody is keen about it."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR :—"Publication will be by communication to the local bodies."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO :—"In many cases that is forgotten. In the case of the salary of the sub-assistant surgeons the Government increase the pay, but the district boards who had to pay were never consulted and we had to put an interpellation. We had to pay to the tune of Rs. 25,000 from our funds without our being previously consulted. With reference to these matters there is no doubt that our interests, the interests of the local bodies affected, will have to be sufficiently considered. If it is a scheme which will be binding on local bodies, we should like to see what it is, before it is forced on us or before we are asked to accept it. Your Excellency, I do not minimise in the slightest degree the anxiety of your Excellency's Government for sanitary reform. I quite recognize the difficulty, and I trust that the activity of the new Health Association in spreading a knowledge of sanitary matters would be a great adjunct to our efforts. I trust there is no need to examine this particular proposal in much more detail. I trust he would publish the scheme as early as possible."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. VENKATAPATI RAJU :—"I shall withdraw the resolution after a very few observations. I am thankful to the Government that if my proposal did not serve any other useful purpose, at least it has had the advantage of securing a confession on the part of the Government that there are defects in sanitary matters and that their previous action is not sufficient and that they want to strengthen the sanitary staff. So far as the proposal is concerned, it suggests that an itinerant rural sanitary board should be appointed to survey the rural parts and propose a definite plan of expenditure of sanitary grants and submit consolidated figures necessary for sanitary improvement village per village. It suggests an itinerant rural sanitary party to find out what is wanted village by village, because we have got sad experience that whenever we have to take any report with reference to districts we have got very inadequate and practically useless reports of the conditions of the villages. I want the Government to get accurate knowledge and to proceed further. If the Hon'ble Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar found that my proposal was not quite appropriate, I expected that a person of his position, experience and knowledge, with the help and assistance of several hundreds of officials of the Government, could have easily suggested what is the method which the Government proposed to adopt for meeting the exact position. He says that we will never be able to find out the exact condition, and it will take centuries."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR :—"I never said that we will never be able to find out. I said that under this particular proposal of the Honourable Member it would take a century to find out."

964 RESOLUTIONS RE APPOINTMENT OF AN ITINERANT RURAL SANITARY BOARD; GRANTS-IN-AID TO SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES FOR PHYSICAL TRAINING; COMMITTEE TO INQUIRE AND REPORT ON THE DRAINAGE CONDITIONS OF THE DELTA DISTRICTS AND MORE FACILITIES FOR VERNACULAR DAILIES TO REPORT COUNCIL'S PROCEEDINGS.

(Mr. Venkatapati Raju ; Mr. Narasimha Ayyar.) [14TH MARCH 1919.]

The Hon'ble Mr. B. VENKATAPATI RAJU :—"He should have remembered my observation. My proposal is, I want the Government to know it by appointing an itinerant rural sanitary board. That is my suggestion. My suggestion is that it is one method. I expected he could have made a better employment of his time. Instead of wasting time with the criticism that our method is wrong he could have said, 'we have this method of finding out information as to the sanitary condition of the villages, just as we are able to find out the population of the villages, the food-stuffs and other matters.' Ours is a lay suggestion. I thought we would have the expert's suggestion, but I am very sorry that there is no suggestion. He says that it will take a hundred years to know the condition of the villages. I am very sorry. It could be done if we want it to be done. Where there is a will there is a way. If the Government want it to be done they can find out the actual needs of the districts in a year. If a circular is issued to-day from the Government's office to each Collector and the Collector instructs each Tahsildar and Revenue Inspector to find out what are the actual needs, you will know them before the end of the month. It is not very difficult; it is not a very extraordinary thing. But to verify whether what they say is correct may require some more time. But to suggest one hundred years or five hundred years is only to pooh-pooh it and not to consider it carefully. My suggestion may be wrong. I do not stand here to offer suggestions. I am here to mention the grievances of the people. The grievances of the people as regards the rural sanitary conditions have to be met. You may chuck it out. But you have not proposed a fresh one. That is my complaint. What is stated in the administration report is water-supply and drainage are still defective, in rural areas. With that one sentence he finishes 55,000 villages. There is another sentence 'the organization for the care of epidemics is the same as before.' In half a page we have disposed of the whole question of rural sanitation. That shows practically no attention is paid to rural sanitation. I am glad that the Government propose to take further action, but what I earnestly ask the Honourable Member is this. There are sanitary assistants in each district coming once in a way feeling the people for carrying out sanitary improvements. That is not what we want. We want a responsible man to report from time to time upon the bad sanitary condition of the rural parts. If the Hon'ble Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar thinks there are means of finding it out, I am satisfied. There is a grievance. We want a remedy. If this is not the remedy the Government may adopt some other remedy. As the Honourable Member has promised and as he wanted my pledge, I will equally ask his assurance that he would see that the sanitary conditions are improved. I do not press the resolution."

With the permission of His Excellency the President the resolution was withdrawn.

RESOLUTION RE STEPS TO PROMOTE IRRIGATION SCHEMES IN THE CEDED DISTRICTS.

The Hon'ble Mr. P. SIVA RAO :—"Your Excellency the resolution which I have to move runs thus :—

"XXV. This Council recommends to His Excellency the Governor in Council that special steps may be taken to promote irrigational schemes in the Ceded districts."

"I may at once proceed to describe the condition of the Ceded Districts by quoting one or two extracts from the District Gazetteers.

"Mr. Francis in his District Gazetteer of Bellary observes 'The average rainfall is smaller than that of any other district in the Presidency and in Bellary and Rayadrug owing to the interposition of the Sandur Hills the south-west monsoon is unusually light, it is only about 19 inches.'

"The average recorded per year is from 18 to 25 inches for the district, vide page 127 of the District Gazetteer.

"In the same book he further states 'The rainfall of Bellary is not only very light but as a detailed examination of the statistics of each month will show capricious and uncertain'. And he winds up by saying 'Possessing therefore an exceedingly light and withal uncertain rainfall and being as has been seen in previous chapters a district in which three-fourths of the people are dependent upon agricultural and pastoral pursuits, where the soil much of it is poor and where irrigation works are few and far between and many of them dependent upon local rainfall, Bellary is as a necessary corollary more than usually liable to disastrous famines.'

"The same officer gives a gruesome account of the famines that occurred year after year in the said district in pages 128 to 146 of the same book. He sums up by saying 'To sum up, then, in the century during which the district had been in the British possession in addition to the numerous seasons in which things had been bad but not bad enough to warrant State relief there have been scarcities in 1804-05, 1824, 1884-85, 1900, and famines in 1833, 1854, 1866-67, 1878, 1891-92, 1896-97.'

"As has been truly said the unfortunate ryots have hardly emerged from one famine before they submerged under another.

"Again in the same book it is stated in page 91, 'less land is under irrigation in Bellary than in any other district in the Presidency except The Niligris, Malabar and South Kanara. The total area watered by wells, tanks and channels in a normal year is only some 100 square miles or between 2 and 3 per cent of the net area cropped. The percentage of the cultivated area in each taluk which is protected in ordinary seasons and in all seasons respectively is shown below; and it will be seen that it is only in Hospet, Kudligi, and Rayadrug that it is above the miserable average for the district which is the lowest in the Presidency—

Taluk.	Protected in ordinary seasons.	All seasons.	Taluk.	Protected in ordinary seasons.	All seasons.
Adoni ...	1.3	1.1	Harpanahalli ...	2.0	1.6
Alur ...	1.4	Nil.	Hospet ...	14.4	14.2
Hadagalli ...	1.4	1.3	Kudligi ..	5.7	4.4
Bellary ...	1.6	0.9	Rayadrug...	5.4	3.5

RESOLUTION RE STEPS TO PROMOTE IRRIGATION SCHEMES IN THE CEDED DISTRICTS.

(Mr. Siva Rao.)

[14TH MARCH 1919.]

"The condition of Anantapur district is described by the same officer in similar terms in pages 79-94 of the Gazetteer of that district.

"He also observes in page 48 of the Anantapur District Gazetteer 'As has already been stated only 8 per cent of the cultivated area of the district and so many of the irrigation sources are precarious that only 3 per cent can be said to be protected in all seasons. It will be seen that out of the 8 per cent of the cultivated which is irrigated 3 per cent is watered from wells, 4 per cent by tanks and only 1 per cent with the aid of the channels.'

"While speaking of Cuddapah district in his District Gazetteer Mr. C. F. Brackenbury observes in page 125 'The rainfall of the Ceded Districts is lighter than any other division in the Presidency but of these Cuddapah on account of its situation derives a greater benefit from the north-east monsoon than do the rest and this advantage is measured by an excess of about 5 inches of the average rainfall of Bellary and Anantapur and about 3 inches over that of Kurnool. This average is for the whole district something less than 27 inches but the variation between its parts are often very considerable. Agriculture is so predominant a fact in the life of the population and the area effectively protected by irrigation is so small that the prosperity of the district is said to depend almost entirely on an adequate rainfall and its timely precipitation. But it is nevertheless subject to vicissitudes of seasons which necessarily entails its liability to periods of more or less acute distress.'

"The similar state of things prevails in Kurnool district also.

"The Irrigation Commission of 1901-1903 say:—

'The most insecure districts are those known as the Deccan districts, comprising Kurnool, Bellary, Anantapur and Cuddapah, which have suffered several times from famine during the past century. They cover a total area of about 27,500 square miles, with a population of nearly four millions, the majority of whom depend upon agriculture for their support. The country is broken up by hills, and consists largely of soils of poor productiveness, though there is a very considerable stretch of black cotton soil on the southern and western boundaries of the Kurnool district, and in the adjoining taluks of the other three districts. Owing to the general poverty of the soil, over one-half of the cultivable area is assessed at rates not exceeding eight annas an acre; in Cuddapah the proportion rises to nearly two-thirds, and in Anantapur to over three-fourths, of the whole area. In the latter district more than one-half of the cultivable area bears a nominal assessment of two to four annas per acre, and in Bellary nearly a third of the area is similarly assessed. More than two-thirds of the landholders pay less than Rs. 10 a year to Government for their lands. The disastrous famine of 1876-78, which swept away nearly a third of the population, was followed by a succession of unfavourable years, and the districts have not yet fully recovered from their effects. A very large portion of the cultivable area is still unoccupied; and the recent census of 1901 showed that in two of these districts, Kurnool and Cuddapah, the population was still about 4½ per cent less than it was thirty years ago; while in the remaining two, Bellary and Anantapur, the increase was not more than 4 and 6½ per cent, against an increase for the whole Presidency of 22·44 per cent for the same period.'

"That is the description they gave of these districts in particular and towards remedying this evil they proposed two projects in particular. In paragraphs 243 and 244 of the report they refer to the Tungabhadra project and the Kurnool-Cuddapah canal, in paragraph 245 they recommend the further investigation of the project known as the great Tungabhadra project. The project has been investigated fully in pursuance of the recommendation of the Irrigation Commission and the conclusion that was come to in the year 1909 was that this scheme should be deferred for the present. I am quoting from the Government Order dated 2nd October 1909.

"The Government have given their careful consideration to the question whether the Tungabhadra project, as revised by the Chief Engineer for Irrigation with reference to the Inspector-General's note received with the Government of India's letter No. 816-1, dated 12th June 1906, should be submitted for the sanction of that Government. They are of opinion that, as the Kistna and Cauvery Reservoir projects are likely to prove productive, they must take precedence of the Tungabhadra project, and that even if that project were now sanctioned it could not be commenced within the next 15 or 20 years, i.e., not until the two other projects are completed. They therefore consider that the project should be deferred for the present and the Government of India will be informed accordingly.' That project if it had been carried out would have brought plenty to the whole of the ryots, not only in the Ceded Districts but Nellore also. It was intended to irrigate one million acres of land and the water-rate which was expected to be realized from that scheme came to about 60 lakhs. I may mention that the total estimated cost was about Rs. 12 crores, but that need not scare us away for the present. I insist upon the national importance, the supreme importance of protecting famine areas from drought. That is the essential aspect of the question which was insisted upon by the Irrigation Commission. They say 'looking simply at the great national object of protection against famine it might be justifiable' and it is the national object of protection against famine that I insist upon. I do not want to propose that the districts I represent should be made more prosperous. What I contend for is that they should be protected against famine, and I have quoted several years in which famine has broken out in previous years. There must be timely warning for the Government to take note of it and start protective works. They need not care for protective works so much. There are other projects, the Kistna reservoir and the Godavari reservoir which may be productive. But even protective works should be started just to save these districts which form the famine zone of the Presidency from drought.

RESOLUTION RE STEPS TO PROMOTE IRRIGATION SCHEMES IN THE CEDED DISTRICTS.

14TH MARCH 1919.]

(Mr. Siva Rao ; Mr. Krishna Rao.)

"In May 1917, I interpellated the Government as to what they had done in this matter and incidentally I may mention that Mr. Clerk, who was Secretary of the Public Works Department for Irrigation in those days, drew up a scheme to be undertaken for the Ceded Districts. I asked for information as to whether all of them were investigated, whether any of them were still under investigation and if investigated with what result, whether any of them had been sanctioned for execution. The Government were pleased to give me a full reply as to what schemes included in the list given by Mr. Clerk had been investigated. Then later on, I moved a resolution in November 1917 on similar lines that irrigation schemes should be fostered especially in the Ceded Districts. It may sound strange to Honourable Members in the Council why we should be indulging in a sort of parochial politics, upon something being done to the Ceded Districts alone. My reason is this: The Ceded Districts have been singled out even by the Irrigation Commission. The rainfall is scanty, the sources of irrigation are bad and the economic condition of the ryot is bad. So I draw the urgent attention of the Government to this. Resuming my point, I moved the resolution, and the late Mr. Gillman intervened and made a statement which was assuring to me at that time and I was tempted to withdraw the resolution. He gave me full liberty to bring forward the resolution again if I was not satisfied with the progress. Now coming to the list of irrigation projects in the Ceded Districts, I may say there are two statements A and B reported upon by Mr. Clerk and a list of works taken up subsequently, a supplemental statement as regards the projects as to which the Government state that they have no information. Coming to this list, most of these schemes have been investigated no doubt but what is the actual result of it. How many have actually been carried out? I am referring to page 3 of the Government Order of the 21st January 1918. Only very few works were sanctioned. The Markapur tank and supply channel, No. 6 on the list, has been completed. I say that very few of these schemes have been sanctioned and fewer of them have been executed. Some of them have been sanctioned as famine relief works to be undertaken when distress prevails. I am justified in saying that most of these projects have been rejected as not being profitable or not sufficiently productive or feasible. I do not blame anybody for rejecting them. I want the actual result. I want a protected area. In ordinary seasons and also in all seasons the condition of the ryots must be assured. I do not think the Honourable Member can satisfy me that since 1902-03, since the date of the Irrigation Commission, an appreciable extent has been added to what is known as the protected area and the permanent sources of irrigation. That is the test which I apply. No doubt a lot of trouble has been taken in the matter, but for one reason or another the schemes are condemned. One test I would apply is that they are protective and if they are not unworkable they should be taken up. I do not want to go into the details of this matter. I do not think that these schemes that were sanctioned and executed have met the present unsatisfactory condition of my districts.

"I come to the Government Order of the 14th February 1917. Every year the Government have been reviewing the schemes in progress in the whole Presidency and that was in pursuance of the resolution moved by the Hon'ble Mr. A. S. Krishna Rao. I find again two projects relating to Anantapur. The first is the Upper Penner project: the cost of the scheme was estimated as Rs. 38,000 representing a return of 1·59 per cent. It is stated 'Allowing for increased rates and certain items such as special tools and plants not included in the original estimates the project is roughly estimated to cost Rs. 34·8 lakhs. In order that the project may prove productive a net revenue of Rs. 1,72,500 should be procured. This would be possible only if an average water-rate of Rs. 17 per acre were realized.' I do not know whether the ryots expressed their willingness or entered into an agreement with the Government. Even if there is any small loss of revenue to Government it should not mean much, provided these works will save these districts from famine. There is one other scheme, that is referred to, that is the Velgode project. It is stated with reference to that 'In order to realize this a water-rate of Rs. 11 per acre on the wet ayacut, and of Rs. 5-8-0 on the dry ayacut has to be levied.' That rate does not seem to be much. The ryots may be induced to pay it in order to fulfil the productive test. I am aware that the Government have been gradually repairing or restoring tanks in these districts as in the other districts but tank-fed irrigation I do not pay very much attention to. That does not improve the material condition of the people permanently. The tanks depend for their supply upon the precarious rainfall. Unless there is 17 or 18 inches rainfall they cannot be sure. They must depend upon perennial rivers and Tungabhadra is the only one. So far as the Hospet taluk is concerned, where there is 14 per cent of the protected area, I find all these channels were dug up during Krishnarayar's time in the sixteenth century. I cannot lay my hand on any one big scheme in these districts except the Kurnool-Cuddapah canal after these districts came into the possession of the British Government. I do not think they have done any important work, any new tank or any new channel. Without taking any more time of the Council I would point out the extreme necessity of doing something for these districts. Schemes have been investigated and some other schemes may be thought of and they may be sanctioned. This Tungabhadra project whether in the original form or in the modified form may be revived. Without depreciating the needs of the people, in Kistna or Tanjore, we ought to benefit by these two projects and the necessity for irrigation schemes is more keenly and bitterly felt in the Ceded districts than elsewhere."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. KRISHNA RAO:—"I second the resolution. As the representative of one of the four Ceded districts, Cuddapah, I take this opportunity of impressing upon the Government the necessity to promote irrigation schemes. It will be remembered that after the investigation of the Irrigation Commission of the Kurnool-Cuddapah canal, and after it was completed, it has caused considerable disappointment and worked at a considerable loss as it did not satisfy the expectations originally entertained in regard to the scheme. So far as the

RESOLUTION RE STEPS TO PROMOTE IRRIGATION SCHEMES IN THE CEDED DISTRICTS.

the President; Mr. Davidson.)

[14TH MARCH 1919.]

Tungabhadra project is concerned my Honourable Friend has referred to the fact that it was unfortunately postponed after an investigation extending over several years and after I believe more than Rs. 6 lakhs were spent on the investigation of the scheme, as appears from the information furnished by the Government on a former occasion. It may not be possible to take up the Tungabhadra project at once in view of the magnitude of the cost involved. It is highly desirable to ascertain whether small minor projects cannot be taken up for improving the irrigation in the four Ceded districts. The chief reason pointed out on this occasion is that they are admittedly in the famine zone of the Presidency and require special protection. So far as the resolution is concerned it is quite general and I do not think there can be any difficulty in accepting it. It says 'that special steps may be taken to promote irrigational schemes in the Ceded districts.' I do not think that Your Excellency's Government should take exception to this resolution. I do not think the Hon'ble Mr. Davidson can find fault with the object of the resolution; and if only he makes up his mind to find some additional staff required for the purpose and set them on the work as early as possible, I have not the slightest doubt that some improvement might be effected."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO:—"Before the Hon'ble Mr. Davidson replies to this resolution, I should like to place one matter in connexion with famine relief—the construction of irrigation works in regard to the districts affected with the famine."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"I do not think it is necessary in this resolution. We are not dealing with famine relief. We are dealing with the urgency of irrigation projects in the Ceded districts. The Honourable Member must not open the general question of famine relief."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO:—"I do not wish to raise the general question of famine relief. My submission is this. The Ceded districts are liable to famine and one of the ways in which I consider something may be done to promote irrigation schemes is by the State constructing wells."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"The Honourable gentleman did not say anything about wells."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO:—"Irrigation schemes would include wells. My Honourable Friend confined this to river systems and also to systems which can be fed by tanks or channels. But there is another way in which I believe something may be done to improve the condition of things, and that is the construction by the State of wells and the charging of a water rate. Some years ago I brought this matter to the notice of the Government and it was suggested that the scheme for the construction of wells was opposed to the recommendation of the Irrigation Commission. I believe, my Lord, that the question is one which requires re-examination. It has always been the usual practice of the Government here that whenever any recommendation is in accord with their own views, the recommendation of the Royal Commission on Decentralization or the Famine Commission or the Irrigation Commission are relied upon. No doubt I have this against my proposal, that as a general rule the Irrigation Commission did not approve of the construction of a system of wells by the State, but I believe, my Lord, under the difficulties pointed out on various occasions as to the construction of river systems no attempt has been made to urge subterranean wells in these districts. If a system of deep wells or a system of boring wells can be started and a water-rate charged under some suitable method, it will greatly benefit the Ceded districts. I venture to place this matter before the Government because I advocated the system some years ago, and if Your Excellency's Government can see their way to investigate the possibility of the construction of wells for irrigational purposes in the Ceded districts that may be one method of solving this difficulty of water in those districts. Both my Honourable Friends confined themselves, as I said, to the construction of river and tank systems."

The Hon'ble Mr. L. DAVIDSON:—"Your Excellency, I find myself in some difficulty in replying to this resolution. It covers the question of general policy with which I am not very familiar but I suppose it is quite sufficient to say that the Government can hardly be expected as a matter of policy to give precedence to protective over productive works. That is the main reason why the Tungabhadra project is in abeyance. The Hon'ble Mr. Siva Rao has made a brief reference to the reasons why no further action has been taken on that. I see from the letter which was addressed to the Government of India in 1909 that the estimate then was a capital outlay of 13 crores and the low return of 2½ per cent. We have got before us much more remunerative projects also on a gigantic scale in the Cauvery and the Kistna. One of the questions put at this meeting of the Legislative Council, inquires why no action has been taken in regard to the Kistna project."

"The answer given is that it is much less promising and much less urgent than the Cauvery project. There is the initial difficulty in large schemes, that our staff is limited and that we cannot command the large technical staff required to cope with several such works. If we took up the Tungabhadra project, it would necessarily involve indefinite postponement of the Cauvery project and a fortiori of the Kistna project. I have every sympathy with the condition of the Ceded districts in which I have served myself and which I should gladly help as a member of the Government if there were any reasonable ground for assistance. But one must bear in mind that other parts of the country are entitled to consideration and also the amount in issue. It must be remembered that if a project is remunerative, the resources of the Government as a whole are improved and assistance towards famine relief becomes possible which would not otherwise be available as readily. If, however the Tungabhadra project were constructed at a cost of 13 crores with a return of 2½ per cent, there would be a loss of interest to the Madras Government of about Rs. 5½ lakhs a year. That is the figure that has been worked out. The finances of the Madras Government would suffer to that extent positively, apart from the fact that the capital of 13 crores would constitute such a drain on the world's market that it would be difficult for Your Excellency's Government to raise another 13 crores for the Kistna or the Cauvery project. If, on the other hand, the Cauvery project were carried into effect—the estimated cost is less than 13 crores,—if that were carried into effect, instead of the Madras Government suffering an annual loss of over 5 lakhs there would be a substantial gain and the revenue position would be much better. So far as to the relative merits of remunerative and protective works.

RESOLUTION RE STEPS TO PROMOTE IRRIGATION SCHEMES IN THE CEDED DISTRICTS.

14TH MARCH 1919.]

(Mr. Davidson.)

"I have taken the Tungabhadra project as something which must be indefinitely postponed. There is another great work mentioned by the Hon'ble Mr. Siva Rao, the Kurnool-Cuddapah canal. That is not in such a parlous condition as the Tungabhadra project. As a matter of fact both the Kurnool-Cuddapah project and the Velcode project, which is intimately linked with it, are a good deal more hopeful. The improvements under contemplation involve the bringing under irrigation of something like 46,000 acres first crop, and 15,000 acres second crop. The revenue expected is not likely to be sufficient to render the projects absolutely productive, but they would, I am told, constitute very good famine protective works and they stand on a different footing from most minor works in the Ceded districts which are of little, if any, protective value, because their catchment areas are liable to the same severe drought as the areas which they are supposed to protect. The combined scheme for the improvement of the Kurnool-Cuddapah canal and the Velcode project is still under the Hon'ble Mr. Howley's examination. In a note written the other day he said that he was waiting for the results of the recent readings of the gauges and trying to make out a case for obtaining money from the Government of India by charging the improvements to the head "35. Famine Protective". There is another difficulty as to the Velcode project, that is, its dependence on the widening of the Kurnool-Cuddapah canal which requires a special plant to be brought out from Home. That is one great irrigation project in the Ceded districts which fortunately is still on the anvil and which need not be regarded as outside practical politics."

"Another scheme under investigation is the Tippiyapalem project, where the Superintending Engineer is engaged in examining the proposed dam. There is some doubt as to the stability of the foundations. There is another project in the Cuddapah district, the Papagani reservoir, but I am afraid it is not hopeful. At present it is held up pending gauge readings for 1918. There is also on hand the Lokkapalli project once abandoned and again taken up; the Collector is being asked to estimate the revenue obtainable from the ayacut. It is believed that the discharge from the river being less than that originally estimated, the original capacity of the reservoir will have to be cut down with a consequent change in the ayacut necessitating a further examination of the financial aspect. Finally, are three other projects temporarily in abeyance, namely, the Gudampad, Krishnapuram and Gazaladinne schemes in the Kurnool district. The reason why they are in abeyance is we wish to learn what will be the result of the Venkatapuram tank project. The success of that project is largely dependent upon the extent to which the ryots will actually come forward with demands for water. It is an unfortunate circumstance that in that part of the Kurnool district there is no very great keenness and the ryots seem to be indifferent. Mr. Clerk in his inspection notes on the Venkatapuram project was very doubtful about this. He hoped that his anticipation would prove unduly pessimistic and that the ryots, when they saw the water, would make use of it. In the first year after practical completion, 1917-18, however, only 192 acres of dry land were irrigated and in the next year 220 out of the estimated ayacut of 1,700 acres. This is not rapid progress. The conditions are very much the same in regard to the other projects which I have mentioned, viz., Gudampad, Krishnapuram and Gazaladinne. If we find that the ryots take full advantage of the Venkatapuram tank which has been completed, there will be a fair case for starting the further work of investigating those three projects."

"I will not detain the Council, Your Excellency, with the details of other works. There are some other items under examination. I may say generally in regard to the minor works in the Ceded districts that none of the small projects, practically none of them, are really famine protective works. The reason is that the catchment area is subject to severe drought. If you carried out a large number of the small works put forward from time to time and expected that they would help you in famine years, I am afraid your expectation would not be realized. That is the main reason why the Irrigation department is concentrating its programme on the extension of the Kurnool-Cuddapah canal and the Velcode project."

"The Hon'ble Mr. Krishna Rao suggested that there was no reason why this resolution should not be accepted. When he read it out, he did not lay stress, as I should like to do, on the word 'special.' Really there is no scope for special steps in the matter. The Irrigation department, the Hon'ble Mr. Howley and his assistants, are paying close and constant attention to it, the Hon'ble Mr. Siva Rao has all practicable irrigation projects in the Ceded districts. We are furnished, and the Council has been furnished, with every possible information, far more than I can carry in my head. The position is, as Mr. Gillman stated when the Hon'ble Mr. Siva Rao last moved his resolution: 'The Government have during the past ten years and more made a very thorough, and they think an exhaustive, investigation into protective works in the Ceded districts and they are in possession of information showing the nature of the works proposed and the progress made, and, where a decision has been taken, the nature of their decision.' It is not a case that the results of that investigation are not being followed up. Every project which seems promising is followed up. Mr. Gillman then concluded by giving the Hon'ble Mr. Siva Rao two alternatives. One was that if he was not satisfied with the information which would be subsequently supplied to him he might move a resolution at a subsequent meeting, which is what he has

970 RESOLUTION RE STEPS TO PROMOTE IRRIGATION SCHEMES
IN THE CEDED DISTRICTS.

(Mr. Davidson; Mr. Siva Rao; the President.) [14TH MARCH 1919.]

now done. I wish he had adopted the other alternative which Mr. Gillman gave him and which was much more practical. He said 'If the Hon'ble Mr. Siva Rao thinks that there are any works which should have been undertaken, but which have been omitted, he may address the Secretary on the subject.' I should think that would have been a much more practical way of dealing with the issue raised. We should then be able to concentrate the discussion on particular items and I should be able to get the expert advice of the Hon'ble Mr. Howley and his staff and to give a detailed and precise statement of the progress made in regard to any particular item which in Mr. Siva Rao's opinion should have been included or pressed and, I might satisfy him either that it was likely to be taken up or that there are reasons why it should not be taken up. It seems to me that the Government are doing all that they can in this matter. I cannot think of any special steps which can be taken further in the matter. On these grounds I cannot undertake on behalf of the Government to accept this resolution.

"Before I sit down, there is one point to which I should like to refer. The Hon'ble Mr. Ramachandra Rao referred to a possible programme of well construction, deep well-boring. I cannot say offhand, whether that is at all feasible, but the Hon'ble Mr. Howley thinks, I believe, that there is no practical prospect of artesian well sinking. As my Honourable Colleague Sir Alexander Cardew reminds me, there is plenty of scope for ordinary wells and a Deputy Collector has been put on special duty to apply the well rules, but that is a different matter from deep artesian water-supply."

The Hon'ble Mr. P. SIVA RAO:—"Your Excellency, I heard the Honourable Member refer to some projects, the Velgode project and Kurnool-Cuddapah canal. Both of them are situated in Kurnool. But I have not heard of any project under discussion in either Anantapur or Bellary. He suggested that I would have followed a better course by corresponding with the Honourable Member in charge of the department and pointing out certain works which had been omitted and which ought to have been investigated. As a lay man can I investigate anything in regard to the northern Pennar project? It has been abandoned. What is the use of my suggesting that this should be taken up? They will say it has been abandoned as it is not productive. The Honourable Member has not said anything about it. He merely said that it has been abandoned. He invited suggestions from me as to the works that ought to be executed. I am a lay man, I am not able to make them. The idea I recommend to Your Excellency's Government is that steps should be taken to improve the material prosperity of the district and not only the moral prosperity. I put it on that ground. Steps should be taken to prevent these tracts containing four million people from the constant danger of drought. I cannot investigate the nature of the projects. I have not got a staff. I do not know what to do. The Honourable Member is in full sympathy with the resolution. I do not see what difficulty he has in accepting it. I should like to know whether he is willing to accept it if I omit the word 'special'. They are in the famine zone in the Presidency. Some preferential treatment ought to be given to them. Then I may be able to take the assurance that there is no need to press the matter to a division, a matter in which the Government are also interested. I appeal to the Honourable Member that some other schemes may be devised."

The Hon'ble Mr. L. DAVIDSON:—"I have only a few words to say. There are some schemes under investigation and under consideration both in Bellary and Anantapur. One of them is Chunnannagudda tank and another is the Jakkalacheruvu improvement scheme. Also there has recently been a general examination of the feasibility of restoring abandoned irrigation sources in the Ceded districts. His Excellency the Governor presided at a conference which examined the prospects of doing something more in this direction but they were found to be unfavourable."

"The Honourable Member is familiar with Mr. Clerk's investigation of the irrigation possibilities of the Ceded districts. As a result of a resolution moved in 1915 by the Hon'ble Mr. Rama Ayyangar, the Hon'ble Sir Harold Stuart undertook to call the attention of Superintending Engineers and Collectors to the duty of bringing forward any other works, in addition to those already dealt with in Mr. Clerk's report, which seemed to have a good prospect of success. The result of that, so far as Bellary was concerned, was that nine schemes were put forward by the Collector and he was instructed to furnish the Superintending Engineer with all the information available including the rough cost of the land acquisition. Some of these proposals are still on the anvil and I cannot give off-hand any information as to the result. But no other proposal relating to the Ceded districts has been received from any Superintending Engineer or Collector. That shows how very thorough was Mr. Clerk's investigation of the irrigation possibilities. The Honourable Member asked if the Government would accept the resolution if he omitted the word 'special'. It seems hardly material whether the resolution is withdrawn or accepted after the assurance that the Government are doing everything. But the Honourable Member will have the word 'practicable' inserted between 'promote' and 'irrigational' and delete the word 'special' I can accept the resolution. That would be just what we are now doing."

The Hon'ble Mr. P. SIVA RAO:—"I have no objection."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"If I may say a word or two I should be inclined to advise the Honourable Member to accept that assurance, we know the difficulties of the Ceded Districts which come largely from the physical conditions which have endured for generations. I quite agree with the Honourable Member that the Government and the Public Works Department owe it to these districts to do everything they can to examine and promote all possible remedial measures of the kind he has advocated. I am sure there is no doubt as to the intention of the Government at all on this subject. It is impossible for any one who has visited the Ceded districts, and far less for those who have resided there as the Honourable Member does, not to feel the greatest sympathy with the people as to the want of water. I may assure him I am speaking on behalf of my colleagues—I am able to give the assurance—and I am sure the Hon'ble Mr. Davidson will agree with me that every step is taken to examine and find out possible measures to relieve it. I hope that with that the Honourable Member may be disposed to rest content in a matter of this kind where there is very much difficulty, specific pledges would tend to be misleading. The assurance has been given that the Government will not be idle and the Public Works Department will keep the matter before them and examine all the possibilities of the case. The Honourable Gentleman is at liberty to press the Government again and ascertain the progress that has been made."

With the permission of His Excellency the President the resolution was withdrawn.

At this stage the Council adjourned for a short interval.

The Council re-assembled at 3 p.m. when the discussion was resumed.

RESOLUTION RE APPOINTMENT OF INDIANS AS DEPUTY AND UNDER SECRETARIES TO GOVERNMENT, PUBLIC WORKS DEPARTMENT.

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. KRISHNA RAO:—"Your Excellency, the resolution I have the honour to move runs thus:—

"XXVI. This Council recommends that His Excellency the Governor in Council be pleased to take early steps to appoint Indians as the Deputy Secretary and the Under Secretaries to Government, Public Works Department."

"I move this resolution in the hope and belief that there will be no difficulty in accepting this resolution, because it suggests that the question of the appointment of Indians to these offices may be given effect to at an early date. It is clear that there are no statutory or other difficulties in the way of the appointment, because under the system now in force, it is only persons occupying administrative posts that are appointed either as Secretary or Under Secretary or Deputy Secretary. It will be found by a perusal of the latest Quarterly Civil List—that the Deputy Secretary is being appointed from among Superintending Engineers. There is one Deputy Secretary who was appointed, and he gets a house-rent allowance of Rs. 60 extra. There are Superintending Engineers of the first class and second class and third class, and we find from the list one that occupies the first place of Superintending Engineers in the third class is appointed Deputy Secretary to Government—Mr. Hawkins. In the case of the Under Secretary to Government, Public Works Department, we find that two Executive Engineers have been appointed to that post. We find that one who occupies the ninth place in the list has been Under Secretary to Government with a house-rent allowance of Rs. 45 and a duty allowance of Rs. 100. He is the Secretary to the Sanitary Board with an allowance of Rs. 100. We find another Mr. Morgan, who is also Under Secretary to Government with a house-rent allowance of Rs. 45 in Madras and a duty allowance of Rs. 100. I have brought this question before this Council because in respect of these appointments there are persons, Indians of the senior grade in this department; and there can be no real or technical objection to the appointment of Indians either as Chief Engineers or as Secretaries to the Public Works Department. We find the holders of these offices are admittedly seniors in the service and there is now no need for tackling that problem. That is why I have not referred to the question of Indians being appointed as Chief Engineers. When we come to the question of appointment of the Deputy Secretary, we have an Indian Superintending Engineer of the second class and another Indian Superintending Engineer of the third class and there can be no reason for not giving them the benefit of that training and experience. That is why I have placed that question before this Council. Similarly as regards the Under Secretaries to Government, it is only those who occupy the ninth and the sixteenth places that have been appointed Under Secretaries when we find Indians occupying higher places in the Service List who are available for that place. If there were any special disabilities imposed, it will be a different matter altogether. I find so far that there are no special disabilities or restrictions imposed in the way of Indians being appointed to these offices. I have not been able to find any reason or any justification for that privilege not having been conferred on them. It will be remembered that we have some reasonable prospects of the whole scope of the work of this department being placed on a different footing. The Public Services Commission entered into this question at considerable length and among the various recommendations made in connexion with the reorganization of this department, they suggested as one of the principles to be followed that the Public Works Department should confine itself to work which cannot be discharged by private enterprise or through the agency of district boards and municipalities with the necessary financial support from Government. After that report, Honourable Members of Council will remember that the Public Works Department Reorganization Committee was appointed by the Governor-General and sanctioned by the Secretary of State on the 24th November 1916; and they also made various specific recommendations to give effect to that policy laid down by the Public Services Commission. That also suggested that they ought to be made over to district boards with some financial help given by Government; and they also made specific recommendations for encouraging private enterprise. They also suggested the amalgamation of the present Imperial and Provincial Services into one service and they pointed out that while the former Public Services Commission created that distinction, no distinction was maintained and they said: 'In practice, however, no such difference has been established (between Imperial and Provincial services). We find on inquiry that both in the Public Works and in the Railway departments, officers recruited in India are engaged on work of the same importance and responsibility as officers of the same official standing recruited in England. In these circumstances we are of opinion that the present system of division into Imperial and Provincial services should be abolished. There should for the future be only one superior engineering service.

"With this system of reorganization before us, notwithstanding the fact that final orders have not been passed upon the distinction created by the Public Services Commission, which has been only in name, no distinction is maintained in actual practice. As to the work of the department, it is likely to be lightened owing to the devolution of a portion of the functions to district boards. Under these circumstances, I am not able to convince myself that there can be any real reasons urged against the appointment of Indians at an early date as Deputy and Under Secretaries to Government, Public Works Department; and if any objections are urged by the Honourable Member in charge, it will be time enough to consider them."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. Suryanarayana Rao seconded the resolution.

The Hon'ble Mr. L. DAVIDSON:—"Your Excellency, the Honourable Mover, I think, concluded the speech with the remark that he was not aware of any objections that might be urged to the early appointment of Indians to these offices. Nor am I, if they are qualified for them. It may be of interest to the Honourable Member to know that as a matter of fact there is a vacancy occurring almost immediately in the post of Under Secretary, and if he will go to the Public Works Secretariat, he will find on the notice board an order showing that the officer who is going to be appointed to it is an Indian. There is no race question in the matter of the appointment either of the Deputy Secretary or the Under Secretary, but they are not seniority appointments as the Honourable Member seemed to assume throughout his speech. They are selection appointments and vacancies are filled by the Government on the recommendation of the Secretaries to Government concerned. In this particular case the Hon'ble Mr. Hutton and the Hon'ble Mr. Howley were both concerned, and when the vacancy occurred, they were both consulted. In all such cases the claims of Europeans and Indians alike are taken into consideration. It is not very long since another Indian officer, Mr. Kharegat held the post of Under Secretary. I do not think under these circumstances that there is any necessity to pursue the discussion. The Government cannot accept the resolution which runs in the terms of an invitation to appoint Indians to particular posts. That is not a proposal which could be accepted, for the policy is, and must continue to be, the appointment of the best man irrespective of race."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"Perhaps the Honourable Member is satisfied with this discussion."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. KRISHNA RAO:—"I do not wish to press it to a division but I want it to be clearly understood that there is absolutely no sort of difficulty in the appointment of Indians and that the claims of Indians and Europeans should be equally considered."

The Hon'ble Mr. L. DAVIDSON:—"That is exactly the case."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. KRISHNA RAO:—"I do not wish to press the resolution."

With the permission of His Excellency the President, the resolution was withdrawn.

RESOLUTION RE CO-OPTATION OF MEMBERS ON DISTRICT BOARDS.

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. KRISHNA RAO:—"The resolution I have the honour to move runs thus:—

'XXVII. This Council recommends that His Excellency the Governor in Council be pleased to take such steps as are necessary to make provision in the Madras Local Boards Act, for the co-optation of a certain proportion of the members of the district board by the remainder.'

"Your Excellency, so far as this question is concerned, it is one affecting the constitution of the district boards. Honourable Members of Council are aware that for some time there have been proposals for the re-constitution of the district boards; and the Madras Local Boards Amendment Bill is under preparation, though we understand, it has not yet been submitted to the Government. It is now agreed that even according to the existing Act, three-fourths of the members of district boards can be appointed by election and one-fourth only can be left for nomination by the Governor in Council. The Act also provides that officials can be appointed to the extent of one-fourth the total number of members of the district boards. Therefore, it is clear that when we work up the provisions of the present Local Boards Act, we shall have a case when all the members, all the three-fourths of the members of the district board will be elected by the various taluk boards in the district; whereas the remaining members will consist of officials appointed by the Governor in Council. The point has often arisen as to whether it is or is not necessary to provide for the existence on these district boards of non-official persons who are not necessarily members of the taluk board, but who are willing to place their services at the disposal of the district boards. Questions have been raised and considered as to the desirability of forming separate independent electorates for direct election to the district boards. Another question has been raised whether the better plan is not to allow the district board composed of elected members of the taluk boards to co-opt a small proportion to add to its own strength. I think that on this occasion I can usefully refer to the resolution of the Government of India wherein they laid down some general principles relating to the subject. It is a point for consideration as to whether it is desirable to appoint officials to the full extent of the one-fourth provided by the Act or as to whether it will not be enough to limit it even much lower down and to have officials only for the purpose of advice and assistance. While dealing with this question, the Government of India have stated as follows:—"Where the members of the district boards are elected by the sub-district boards there is no reason to interfere with this arrangement, but the observance of the principle should be enforced as regards the elective element in the membership of the sub-district boards which make the elections for the district boards. As regards the special representation of minorities where this is necessary, the Government of India would prefer that this should be effected by retaining the practice of nomination rather than by introducing some system of communal or proportional representation." That is a point which the Government of India suggested for the consideration of local Governments. I have not raised the question whether the term should be long or short, but I have raised the point whether it is desirable to introduce the system of co-optation. They go on to say:—"In one province proposals are now under consideration for dispensing altogether with nomination by (i) omitting the official members in view of the existence of expert servants of the boards, (ii) meeting the case of minorities by communal representation, and (iii) introducing a system of co-opted "aldermen" on the lines above described in order to attract men who will not stand for election." It is in pursuance of the suggestion made by the Government of India in their resolution of May 1918 that I have considered it desirable to place this aspect of the question before this Council for consideration. I know that on a previous occasion, when there was a conference of some representatives of local bodies, they could not themselves come to a definite understanding regarding this question; but the conference met before the publication of this resolution on local self-government, I have not the slightest doubt that if they had this authoritative expression of opinion of the Government of India, their conclusions might have been different. As this resolution could not at that stage be placed before the conference, they could not come to any conclusion on this matter."

RESOLUTION RE CO-OPTATION OF MEMBERS ON DISTRICT BOARDS. 973

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"Which conference?"

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. KRISHNA RAO:—"The conference which considered the Bills."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"They considered it and rejected it."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. KRISHNA RAO:—"I hear that the conference which met some time before, were not in favour of it. If they had this resolution of the Government of India, they would have come to a different conclusion. It is a problem for consideration. The resolution which I move suggests that His Excellency the Governor in Council will be pleased to take such steps as are necessary to make provision in the Madras Local Boards Act for the co-optation of a certain proportion of the members of the district board by the remainder. As to the initiation of the steps to be taken by means of an amending legislation, it is left to the Local Government. If it is considered necessary to consult the district boards, I do not wish to quarrel with that position. It is a specific suggestion which I now make and which, I believe, deserves acceptance when we are aiming at the full elective strength under the present Act and when we eventually aim at a fully elected board with only the necessary official element on the board; it is absolutely necessary and desirable that provision should be made for men of the experience and the best system that can be devised is the one that was suggested by the Government of India. If the Government should consider that there should be consultation with the district boards as the first step, I do not wish to dispute that position."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. Suryanarayana Rao seconded the resolution.

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"Your Excellency, I do not wish to take up the time of the Council in this matter, in view of what the Honourable Member has said, that if we undertake to refer this question to the local boards for an expression of their views, he would not press this resolution. At the same time, I feel bound to say that, so far as the information before me goes, opinion is decidedly against this proposal. I remember having consulted several men in the mufassal who are working in local boards and their point of view is, let us have either a man whom we elect or a man whom the Government nominate, but let us not have this sort of person who is neither our nominee nor your nominee, but our nominee's nominee; he is the nominee of our nominees and your nominees. I think in fairness to the Council I must say that the arguments are not all in one way, as one would imagine from the speech of the Honourable Member. Suppose you had this device, what will be the result? It will reduce the volume of direct election. Suppose in a district board with a strength of 15, you resolve to throw open 10 seats for election and reserve 5 for nomination, the device proposed would mean you allow 8 seats for election and allow those men to choose 2. What is at the back of this suggestion is that there will be people in the mufassal who do not care to stand before their countrymen to seek their suffrages, to go in an honest and straightforward way as the nominee of their countrymen. They are afraid of being defeated; they are afraid of being not nominated, but at the same time, they are considered to be valuable and it is thought that we must have some sort of loop-hole like this, so that these men who cannot come in the usual way can be put in. May I venture to point out that that particular species of human beings does not exist? Do they exist—a man who is so valuable that it is very necessary to have him on a local body but at the same time who is not likely to be returned either by his own countrymen or to be nominated by the Government? I rather think if there are people in the districts—they may be worthy people—who are afraid of standing up before the electorate for election, the time for them has passed. After a time, these worthy people whom it is intended to secure by this indirect means, even if they exist, will diminish. They will come under the category of people who will go before the electorate or the people whom the Government find in the best interests of local administration necessary to put in. If you happen to have a few people who do not want to come in either way, it is a matter for consideration whether we may not get on without those worthy gentlemen instead of making this cumbersome

976 RESOLUTION RE APPOINTMENT OF ITINERATING SUB-ASSISTANT SURGEONS.

(Mr. Krishna Rao ; Sir Alexander Cardew.)

[14TH MARCH 1919.]

trying to do something to improve the condition of medical relief in the rural areas and a Government Order was issued some time ago suggesting the desirability of the local boards providing itinerant sub-assistant surgeons on their agreeing to pay one-half the cost of additional establishment required for the purpose. That order was issued; but the district boards concerned have not been able to avail themselves of that opportunity. It would have been seen that last year when there was serious anxiety in various districts on account of the prevalence of influenza and other epidemics, it was found possible for these district boards to provide for half the expenditure required for this purpose and to maintain travelling sub-assistant surgeons. Now and then, there used to be stories of persons dying in large numbers by this epidemic or that. And it was possible for medical officers concerned to afford relief in those affected tracts. One of the chief difficulties has been the inadequacy of the staff available for the purpose; but the main difficulty has been that as these local bodies have not been in a position to budget for more than their existing establishment they were at their wits' end to find out ways and means for additional staff. This question was raised when we met in February last to discuss the Revised Financial Statement. I need not take up the time of the Council because this question was considered on that occasion; and the Hon'ble Sir Alexander Cardew was good enough to point out that he would be in a position to provide some specific sum for the purpose of aiding the local bodies in respect of this much needed reform. I asked for a large grant for that purpose. He was good enough to say that he would put in the budget a sum of Rs. 10,000 for travelling sub-assistant surgeons. He also assured us that there was no necessity to budget for larger amounts, because it would not be possible to start them in a large number of places and think that the present district boards can avail themselves of this opportunity unless relieved of their present financial pressure. That is the only aspect of the question which I wish to place before this Council. That Government Order was issued and has been in force for some time; the district boards have been fully aware of the necessity of adding sub-assistant surgeons to some of the important dispensaries within their jurisdiction; they know there is a cry for additional medical relief in all rural areas, but still they were forced to keep quiet because they could not find even one-half the amount required to enable them to get from the Government the other half. I only wish that the Government would with the same liberal spirit which induced them to afford relief go further and give them additional relief. The Government order provided that if the district board was in a position to make provision for four sub-assistant surgeons, Government would be able to provide for four more. My suggestion is this: so long as district boards cannot provide this, is it not possible for the Government to make a full allotment and start them in two places? I fully trust that the Honourable Member in charge who is anxious to do something will sympathetically consider this matter. I do not see how anything said on the general question whether the district board should be called upon to contribute will serve the purpose. I remember the grant-in-aid system. When Your Lordship is satisfied that this is a necessary thing to be done in the interests of medical relief, when Your Lordship is satisfied that the district boards themselves cannot undertake this work, it is reasonable and necessary that the Government should come to their help and provide the full amount."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. Suryanarayana Rao seconded the resolution.

The Hon'ble Sir ALEXANDER CARDEW :—" Your Excellency, the provision of medical relief is one of the functions imposed by the existing Act upon local bodies and I do not think it will be justifiable for me to accept the resolution to relieve district boards or municipalities altogether of the charge of duplicating the staff. To do so would be to abandon the whole scheme of financial arrangement in regard to medical relief and to impose upon Provincial revenues an entirely new charge which would probably be challenged by the Accountant-General as requiring the sanction of the Secretary of State. Hitherto there have been two difficulties in the way of carrying out the scheme suggested in the Government Order of 1917. One of these difficulties has arisen from the large number of sub-assistant surgeons who have been absent on military duty, which has rendered it hitherto impossible for the district boards to get the men to do this duty even if they were in a position to employ them. From the information recently received, that difficulty is likely to be greatly overcome as sub-assistant surgeons return from military duty to civil employ. Therefore, there will be the possibility of the scheme being tried.

"The other difficulty which stood in the way of the scheme is no doubt the impecunious condition of the local bodies. The district boards have, in many cases, not got the money to meet their own present duties and in the course of drawing up the district board's budget, it is well known how difficult it is to put in even a small amount of money and it is with a view to encourage them under the present conditions to give the scheme of the extension of medical relief a trial that the Government have already agreed to pay one-half of the cost. I am doubtful whether the Government ought to go further. But as a temporary measure and for a limited time, say for three years, I am prepared to agree to the Government's undertaking three-fourths of the cost of this special staff merely to give the system a trial and entirely as an experiment to see whether it works or not. It may not be a success in which case the local boards will have to fall back upon increasing the number of dispensaries. After the experimental period, the local bodies will probably have to pay one-half or the whole of the cost. As an experiment and just to give it a start, I think it would not be financially objectionable to accept a further liability up to three-fourths of the cost. Of course, that must be subject to budget provision. Some part of the cost must be borne by the district boards. Otherwise, they would feel no responsibility in the matter, and they would put the whole burden on Provincial expenditure without any restriction. That is the utmost limit to which I feel justified in going. It is rather doubtful whether it will be a success, but I do not feel that I should go further.

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. KRISHNA RAO :—" My Lord, I am glad that the Government have been able to take a further step in the way of encouraging local bodies to start this experiment and have consented to bear three-fourths of the cost."

The Hon'ble Sir ALEXANDER CARDEW :—" For a time."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. KRISHNA RAO :—" I quite appreciate the remarks of the Hon'ble Sir Alexander Cardew that it is a temporary measure and for a temporary period; but I would suggest whether three years is not too short for an experiment. I would ask whether five years would not be a proper period. I would request him to consider whether he could not see his way to make it five years. The assurance is satisfactory and I do not press the resolution to a division; but I suggest that he would make it a period of five years so as to give local boards a certainty that they can try it for a reasonable period and work properly. With these remarks, I do not press the resolution to a division. I hope some local boards will take advantage of this opportunity."

With the permission of His Excellency the President, the resolution was withdrawn.

RESOLUTION RE APPOINTMENT OF NON-OFFICIAL PRESIDENTS TO THE DISTRICT BOARDS OF VIZAGAPATAM AND GANJAM.

The Hon'ble Mr. A. SURYANARAYANA RAO :—" The resolution that I have the honour to move runs thus :—

'XXX. This Council recommends to His Excellency the Governor in Council that the Government may be pleased to appoint non-official presidents to the district boards of Vizagapatam and Ganjam.'

Your Excellency, it is not a new suggestion that I am making now for the first time. Your Excellency's Government have already committed themselves to one course of conduct and actually appointed non-official presidents to the District Board of Vizagapatam. In the report of the Local and Municipal Department, this passage occurs. 'In September 1914, four non-official presidents were appointed, one non-official president to the District Board of Vizagapatam and towards the close of February 1918, South Kanara was selected.' The Raja of Bobbili is the gentleman that is referred to in the report and he was appointed president and worked for a few months and on account of his onerous duties as zamindar in attending to his own estates, he had to resign; but during the short time that he worked as president, he gave satisfaction and I do not think it can be said that non-officials or zamindars cannot discharge the duties satisfactorily. But the discontent comes in that as soon as he resigned, Government thought it fit to transfer the privilege to South Kanara and altogether neglected Vizagapatam. If the Honourable Member thinks that there is nobody available in Vizagapatam or if the Hon'ble Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar who is in charge of this department thinks that nobody is willing to offer his services, I see before me some names suggesting themselves to me and I have at least half a dozen gentlemen in my mind. I need not suggest names. We have the men amongst us and unless the trial is made and unless we have a refusal from all these gentlemen, I think it will be slur on the whole district to say that only the Raja of Bobbili was available and no other and for want of a candidate who was willing to place his services at the disposal of the district board, the privilege had to be transferred to South Kanara. Vizagapatam and Ganjam stand on the same footing. With regard to Vizagapatam, I do not know what the District Collector has written. But I am sure that Mr. Vernon is a liberal-minded gentleman and would never object to a non-official being the president of the district board. I think he would be very glad to have the help of a non-official president; because I know that he was given considerable advice and considerable equipment in the administration of the district board by the Raja of Bobbili during the short time that he was president. Therefore, as a refresher, I venture to bring this resolution before Your Excellency so that Your Excellency's Government may be pleased to consider whether it is not time enough to think of appointing a non-official president for this district board. I do not suppose that the Hon'ble Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar can use his pet phrase 'not yet', because, that stage has gone and we have already appointed a non-official president. When the Government have committed themselves to a certain course of action, I think it is only fair that that course should be continued at least for Vizagapatam that a non-official president should be appointed for the district board. With these remarks I commend the resolution to the acceptance of the Council.

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. Narasimha Ayyar seconded the resolution.

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR :—" Your Excellency, the Honourable Mover said that his object was to use this resolution as a sort of refresher to bring to my notice that there is this question of a non-official president being appointed to these two district boards. I am very glad he said so. Otherwise, if this resolution is passed, it would commit the Government to find out to-morrow a man in Ganjam and another gentleman in Vizagapatam to be the non-official presidents of those district boards. I am quite certain device which seems to cut at the very root of the elective system. Instead of having direct elections, this proposal is to introduce a system of indirect elections. I am by no means enamoured of it. I do not know if there are any members of that committee here which considered the point. I do not know if the Hon'ble Mr. Ramachandra Rao was on that committee ; I think the Hon'ble Mr. Subbarayulu Reddiyar was on that committee which considered the Local Boards Bill and I think opinion was strongly against this particular device. That was my impression. At the same time, the Honourable Member has now brought up that other matter, namely, the resolution of the Government of India. The device is commended to us for adoption, and as a Provincial Government it is our duty to give full consideration to that resolution and decide, in accordance with other principles laid down by the Government of India, to adopt such recommendations as we think best according to our discretion. We are now face to face with this matter and we must find out whether we can adopt it. I am prepared to refer this question to all district boards and taluk boards. As the Honourable Member has stated one side of the case and as I have supplemented it by stating the other side of the case, I think that, if a copy of this debate is communicated to all local bodies, the matter will not require further elucidation. After their replies come in, the Government and Honourable Members will be in a better position to decide this question finally than they are to-day. As the Honourable Member is prepared to accept my proposal, there is no use of discussing this further, unless the Honourable Member feels that we should discuss it. This discussion will help the local boards to whom the reference is going to be made."

The Hon'ble Mr. P. SIVA RAO :—"I wish to make one remark. There seems to be one mistake on the part of the Honourable Member in charge as to what precisely the resolution before us conveys. He seems to think that the Honourable Mover is really advocating nomination by Government or election by a limited body instead of by a larger electorate."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR :—"The resolution says 'co-optation of some members of the district board by the remainder.'"

The Hon'ble Mr. P. SIVA RAO :—"That will arise only in places reserved for nomination. The Government of India contemplate that up to three-fourths the seats will be elected, and as regards the one-fourth reserved for nomination, the Government of India have left it as an open question whether the Government should fill up those posts or whether it should be open to the rest of the Council to fill them up."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR :—"I am glad the Hon'ble Mr. Siva Rao has brought out another aspect. His remarks also will go before the local bodies."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. KRISHNA RAO :—"As the Hon'ble Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar has suggested that the debate will be sent to the local bodies, I think it is better I state one or two points. No body suggests for a moment that the number of seats already thrown open for election should be diminished. As my Honourable friend Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar suggested that this resolution should be communicated, let not the taluk board be under the impression that any one is going to subscribe to that position. It is only to the extent to which seats are reserved for nomination that I would ask whether instead of relying upon the recommendation made by the Collector of the district and approved by the Governor in Council, we cannot adopt a method of co-optation by the other members of the district board. That is the standpoint from which the question is to be looked at. If it is necessary in the view of the officials to increase the strength of the district board, it will be open to the Government to do so ; but so long as it is not necessary to do that, the places already reserved for nomination by the Governor in Council can be well filled up by a system of co-optation. My point is this: the members of the district board will have to consider whether they would like to take as members persons who, though not elected by taluk boards, are still nominated and appointed by the Governor in Council or—whether they would prefer to have such persons or persons chosen by themselves. I only want that they should compare the relative advantages and disadvantages of a system of election by themselves, versus nomination by the Collector and appointment by the Governor in Council. That is one aspect of the question."

"Another aspect of it is this. I am as much a believer of the principle of direct election as the Hon'ble Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar is, I would only be glad if he follows it to its logical consequences with the same earnestness. My chief complaint is this: there is no means of direct election to the district board. If a means is devised, there would be time enough for the Hon'ble Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar to consider it ; if the various rate-payers return a particular number to the district board, it would be a different thing altogether. That would have been direct election proper. But what is done is not that. There is a sort of election by various rate-payers to the taluk boards and the members of the taluk boards have to choose from among themselves to the district board. There is no direct election by the rate-payers themselves. They are not themselves sending members to the district board. And, secondly, the discretion of the members of the taluk board is restricted. If they have a wide field of choice, if they are not forced to select one among themselves, then there will be no difficulty. I am as strong an advocate of direct election as the Honourable Member in charge is, I would suggest that in so far as the scheme does not now provide for direct election, in place of nomination, election to the district boards, I would certainly welcome it in preference to this ; but it is not the scheme now actually worked. That is another aspect of the question."

"Another point is as regards the present restrictions. My Honourable friend has drawn an analogy from election to the Legislative Councils. It is necessary for one to make up one's mind if one is prepared to go through election ; but now the restriction makes it necessary that he should work on two boards. Unless the man is a member of the taluk board, and makes up his mind to stand for election to the taluk board and also to the district board, the present scheme will not work. I hope that all these aspects will be considered ; and so long as this suggests a new principle, it requires serious consideration. It is a question which can be argued for any length of time. We have been reminded of the principle of self-determination ; and while applying that principle, I would not suggest that we should hurry up these matters without ascertaining what the members of the district boards and the taluk boards might say. Having myself advocated the principle of direct election, I hope he will see his way to consider that aspect of the question."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR :—"May I in fairness to the local bodies, to whom this debate will be sent and who will have this discussion before them, mention that our policy is to reduce the volume of direct nomination to district boards to that minimum which is absolutely essential for Government experts and for minorities and interests which fail to secure representation otherwise—Muhammadans, Christians, etc? So far as the Government experts are concerned, it is not contended that the experts whom we want to put there to stiffen a local body and advise it should be elected by the members ; the responsibility for them must be with us. As for the representation of minorities, it is a matter for consideration whether minority classes and minority interests would prefer to have their representatives chosen by the majority instead of by the Government. Assuming in a particular place the Muhammadans are in a minority, and one or two seats are reserved for Muhammadans, the very fact that they are so reserved will be taken to indicate that Muhammadans could not come in in the usual way. It is a matter for consideration whether the Muhammadan community would prefer to have their representative chosen by their Hindu brethren on the board in preference to being chosen by the Government. The question of direct versus indirect election has been discussed at a previous sitting and it was agreed that, so far as district boards are concerned, they must get their men from the taluk boards on the ground that their work is so closely interwoven. As the Honourable Member rightly pointed out, that does not arise here. The whole discussion will go to the district boards for remarks."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. KRISHNA RAO :—"One word in reply to the Hon'ble Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT :—"No."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. KRISHNA RAO :—"One statement regarding one phase of it."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR :—"Let him go on."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT :—"The rules have to be observed."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR :—"I shall not say a word in reply."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. KRISHNA RAO :—"The Honourable Member in charge referred to the question of minorities ; and the only thing that I wish to point out is whether in such cases it is not possible to increase the strength of the local boards themselves to provide for this."

With the permission of His Excellency the President, the resolution was withdrawn.

RESOLUTION RE CHAIRMEN OF MUNICIPAL COUNCILS TO BE CONSULTED BEFORE APPOINTMENT OF MUNICIPAL COUNCILLORS BY GOVERNOR IN COUNCIL.

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. KRISHNA RAO :—"I shall not move this resolution at this session."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT :—"The Honourable Gentleman will have to give notice in the usual course."

The following resolution was not moved :—

"XXVIII. This Council recommends that His Excellency the Governor in Council be pleased to consult the chairmen of municipal councils in the matter of the appointment of municipal councillors by the Governor in Council."

RESOLUTION RE APPOINTMENT OF ITINERATING SUB-ASSISTANT SURGEONS.

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. KRISHNA RAO :—"I have the honour to move—

"XXIX. This Council recommends that His Excellency the Governor in Council be pleased to encourage district boards to add itinerating sub-assistant surgeons to some select dispensaries within their jurisdiction by undertaking to pay the full amount required for the purpose."

"Your Excellency, this is fortunately a subject regarding which there is no difference of opinion between the Honourable Member for Government and myself. He himself has been knowing my Honourable Friend as I do, that he does not contemplate any such immediate action, nor does he consider that this is such an urgent matter that it should be done immediately.

"Having said so, there is very little difference between my Honourable Friend and myself; because this question of the substitution of non-official for official agency is under careful and continuous consideration and examination. Not a day passes, but it comes before us in some form or other. Your Excellency will bear me out when I say that in regard to these very districts this question has been under consideration—I mean with regard to Ganjam and Vizagapatam. Having said that, the next point will be 'why do you not put non-officials in?' The Honourable Member says 'I have the names of certain gentlemen who will be suitable men'. I am sure the Council will agree with me that it would not be convenient for us to discuss here publicly the merits or demerits of all these individual gentlemen. It may be that the Honourable Member considers that a certain gentleman is fit; it may be that the gentleman himself considers honestly that he is fit, but it may be that we consider that he is not. It is a very difficult position. I am, therefore, whenever I am faced with this kind of proposition, obliged to confine myself to the general statement that the question is under continuous examination and that every effort will be made to carry out this experiment on which we have embarked as rapidly and as far as we can. Having said that, the Council will permit me to take this opportunity of pointing out that the finding of a suitable non-official president to a district board is a somewhat more formidable affair than the finding of a non-official president for a taluk board or a municipal council. A taluk board president has a comparatively small area and a municipal chairman also occupies practically the same platform. But a district board president, if he is put in, is really an officer who becomes for the time being of co-ordinate rank with the Collector of the district. What are the qualifications that a man like that should have? Firstly, he should have the capacity for that work, he should be in a position to run the district board; and running a district board means a large number of taluk boards and a very large number of unions. The taluk boards have, some of them, non-official presidents and others have official presidents, and he has to co-ordinate not only his own board, with several departments, education, medical and sanitation, but also the taluk boards and unions. That is the first consideration—that the man must be fit in the sense that he can get through the work quite well. Does that suffice? I venture to think, no. He has also to be a man of very substantial means. A non-official able to run a district board satisfactorily has to be, if I may venture to say so, somewhat wealthy. That is to say, he has to maintain a motor car, and I think it has been the sad experience of most motor car owners that it does not pay to maintain a motor car and that, whatever the Government pay by way of travelling allowance, goes nowhere towards the expense of running a car. I have had some experience of that thing and I may tell the Honourable Members that it is a costly thing. I would like the Hon'ble Mr. Subbarayalu Reddiyar to speak on this resolution. I do hope he would tell us whether he does not lose on his motor car and how much he is losing. You may take my word for it that the district board president, if he is to run his work satisfactorily, must be out of pocket to the tune of Rs. 200 or Rs. 300. I am speaking of the experience of two or three non-official district board presidents. You may say 'why don't you choose a rich man.' Suppose you have got a man with capacity and with wealth, even that does not suffice. He has to be generally acceptable to the bulk of the population. He must have a certain amount of prestige in the district, a man to whom everybody will defer as the proper man for the place. Otherwise, his work will suffer. It is easy for us to say 'why do you want prestige, it is all a question of fitness.' But unfortunately, prestige is going to remain with us longer than you imagine. You will probably find that unless the man chosen has also got a certain amount of prestige, he would not be able to command the driving force necessary for the discharge of his responsible duties. When you find all these qualifications, that man must be willing. It has been a somewhat troublesome experience that I believe for every one man who accepted this particular job, we had one or two who declined the honour, and in several cases, I believe, in the first set of appointments, it was a question of our asking non-officials whom we thought good and their refusing to take it up. Not only the man has to be fit, has to be wealthy, has to command general confidence, has to have prestige, but also he has to be a man who is prepared to undertake this job, to sacrifice his leisure and so on.

"I am only indicating all these things—not that I commit myself to the proposition that gentlemen fulfilling all these qualifications do not exist in these two districts—I am only indicating these difficulties so that Honourable Members may understand why this process of substituting non-official for official agency to the headship of district boards is slower than in the case of taluk boards or municipal councils. There is no use fighting shy of the difficulty. I may assure the Honourable Member that the case not only of these two districts, but of every other district, is under our continuous and anxious consideration. Nothing would give us greater pleasure than to put non-officials in the place of officials in the headship of district boards for several reasons; first of all, it is the correct thing to do. It gives them an experience of local self-government and it affords relief to the Collector of a lot of work. I do hope that what I have now said would not in any way be taken to indicate any unwillingness on the part of the Government to proceed as fast as we can with this experiment. Less than two years ago, Honourable Members would have been satisfied with one non-official president of a district board put in, as they called it, by way of experiment. Your Excellency, we have now got six which shows that we have gone as fast as we could have."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR:—"It is only five and not six."

RESOLUTIONS RE APPOINTMENT OF NON-OFFICIAL PRESIDENTS TO 979
THE DISTRICT BOARDS OF VIZAGAPATAM AND GANJAM AND ALL NON-OFFICIAL PRESIDENTS OF TALUK BOARDS TO BE ELECTED.

14TH MARCH 1919.] (*Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar ; Mr. Subbarayalu Reddiyar ;
Mr. Suryanarayana Rao ; the President.*)

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"Yes, it is five. I am familiar with the usual argument that times are moving fast, and what we might have been satisfied with five years ago, we shall not be satisfied with now. Having said that, I have really nothing more to say than that these two districts have been under examination before us and will come up again, I hope, for examination. I do hope that nothing that I have said will be taken as throwing any disrepute or discredit on any gentlemen who are in these two districts who consider themselves fit. I am anxious that that point should be made clear. If at any time we are in a position to put non-official presidents to these two district boards, we shall not only do so, but I shall be quite as glad as the Honourable Member would be on that day."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur A. SUBBARAYALU REDDIYAR:—"Your Excellency, it has somehow pleased the Hon'ble Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar to force me to speak on an item which I would not take upon myself to speak on—the item of expenditure incidental to being a president of a district board. I can only say that so far as that item of keeping a motor-car goes, it is a prohibitive expenditure. But when a president takes upon himself to accept the presidency of a district board, he knows perfectly well that, he will run the risk, that he will go out of his pocket and yet with eyes wide open, he takes it up. The considerations are obvious. Evidently he wants to be useful to his fellowmen: As I have been forced to speak, I have spoken."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. SURYANARAYANA RAO:—"I was very much interested to hear the Hon'ble Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar. He has used two adjectives 'continuous' and 'anxious' in his speech. I find the same word 'continuous' used in some of the answers. I do not know when this 'continuous' or 'anxious' consideration will end. The last resignation was in February 1918. I have waited for one full year and nothing has come about and no gentleman has yet been appointed. I mean no disparagement to the Hon'ble the Raja of Bobbili; he is my client, he is my friend, but he has had no municipal experience, he had actually no district experience, he was never in the taluk board. He is a rich, intelligent and capable gentleman; and such a gentleman was considered fit to command the respect of the Government. I was glad that the Government appointed him and I am proud that he has discharged his duties satisfactorily. At the same time, I would ask 'Does the Hon'ble Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar think that he is the only gentleman in the whole district consisting of a population of about 2 millions who is fit and that there is nobody else whom we can nominate?' It is pessimism to extend it so far and think that there are not men who are prepared to make sacrifice with regard to motor-car or with regard to time. The gentleman who accepts such a position, I may assure the Hon'ble Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar, would be prepared to make these and even greater sacrifices. There are men who are ready to make this sacrifice and greater sacrifices, men who have held high positions in life by money, by holding estates and who have a status. With regard to the securing of confidence, the Collector will certainly be consulted and I am sure the Collector would be able to make a nomination. I do not think therefore that his pessimism need extend so far that he should think that he could not find a candidate if the Government are pleased to try for one. I assure the Honourable Members and I also assure the Honourable Member in charge that there are gentlemen who are prepared to make sacrifices; but if it is said that the Government are considering and are in consultation with the District Collector, I have no objection to withdraw the resolution. There is no emergency. I only wanted to bring it to the notice of Your Excellency's Government that the resignation was over a year ago and that the question should be considered again. With these words, I do not press the resolution because the matter will be under the consideration of the Hon'ble Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar and he will do what he can at the earliest possible moment."

With the permission of His Excellency the President, the resolution was withdrawn.

RESOLUTION RE ALL NON-OFFICIAL PRESIDENTS OF TALUK BOARDS
TO BE ELECTED.

The Hon'ble Mr. A SURYANARAYANA RAO:—"Your Excellency, regarding this resolution No. XXXI, I had not the benefit of an answer to question No. 4 before me. I find that the Hon'ble Mr. Annamalai Chettiyar sent question No. 4 to Your Excellency's Government in these terms: 'Will the Government be pleased to name the taluk boards to which they intend granting in the near future the privilege of electing their presidents?' The answer is: 'The Government are unable to forecast the future in this matter, even the near future. The question of substituting non-official for official presidents and elected for nominated non-official presidents is under continuous consideration.' The answer is: I have, no doubt, prepared under the Hon'ble Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar's directions. He says that the question is under continuous consideration. I find that there are 96 taluk boards and 33 have non-official presidents."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"Does the Honourable Gentleman move his resolution?"

980 RESOLUTION RE ALL NON-OFFICIAL PRESIDENTS OF TALUK BOARDS
TO BE ELECTED.

(Mr. Suryanarayana Rao ; the Raja of Pithapuram ; [14TH MARCH 1919.
Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar ; Mr. Sadasiva Bhat.)

The Hon'ble Mr. A. SURYANARAYANA RAO :—"I am moving this resolution. It runs thus :—

'XXXI. This Council recommends to His Excellency the Governor in Council that the privilege of electing presidents be conferred upon such of the taluk boards as are presided over by non-official presidents but do not enjoy the privilege at present.'

"I have only one word to submit. There are 96 taluk boards and if the Government are contemplating the appointment of more presidents, I think we should judge of their intention by the results. I hope Your Excellency's Government would see your way to appoint some more presidents, because the work of the presidents has been appreciated as I notice at page 14 of the report where it says : the Government note with satisfaction that the work of these non-official presidents is considered efficient.

"When the work of these presidents is considered efficient and when the presidents are discharging their duties satisfactorily, I hope the Government will be pleased to extend that privilege to a few more places."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. Narasimha Ayyar seconded the resolution.

The Hon'ble the RAJA OF PITHAPURAM :—"I beg to oppose this resolution. In the best interests of the country, I consider it absolutely necessary that the Government should exercise greater care in nominating presidents of local bodies. I welcome the procedure adopted by the Government of nominating non-official presidents to local bodies, but I am sorry to observe that, as matters stand at present, it is not absolutely satisfactory. My submission is that for some time longer Government will be pleased to try the present experiment of nominating the president. I only request the Government to exercise greater care in nominating these presidents. With these few words, I beg to oppose the resolution."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR :—"Your Excellency, the Council has heard what the Hon'ble Mr. Suryanarayana Rao has said and what the Hon'ble the Raja of Pithapuram has said. Let me take the liberty of saying how glad we all are to see the Hon'ble the Raja of Pithapuram and hear his first speech in this Council and I hope he will take an increasing part in our deliberations later on. What he has said is in consonance with what I have heard from many people. We have heard this particular statement that we have to be a little more careful in this matter. This statement has been made to me by very many other people, some of those who sit on this Council now. But that is a different matter. It is a matter on which there is always bound to be difference of opinion. So far as the Government are concerned, we are committed to the policy of substituting non-official for official presidents and gradually substituting elected for nominated non-officials. It is our policy and there is no going back upon it. I suppose we have all to recognize that. The only question is what exactly we have done. Out of 97 taluk boards, so many as 54 have now non-official presidents. It means that only 43, decidedly less than one-half, are now run by Revenue Divisional Officers. I feel bound to say that the work of the non-official presidents has been, on the whole, good. Nobody claims perfection for them. So far as taluk board work is concerned, I may say in fairness to the non-official presidents that what we see is that their work is not in any way inferior to that of the Revenue Divisional Officer. These people know that they are under trial and they concentrate their attention on the taluk board work, whereas the Revenue Divisional Officer does it as a portion of his general work. He knows that he is not to be judged by such work. When we have put 54 non-official presidents, some probably will be very good, some will be good, some fair, some bad and a few will probably be very bad. That is the risk that we have to accept in all these matters, and I do not think there is any use in our troubling ourselves about that. The further question of substituting elected non-officials for nominated non-officials is what the Hon'ble Mr. Suryanarayana Rao has raised in this resolution of his. He recommends that the privilege of electing presidents be conferred upon such of the taluk boards as are presided over by non-official presidents but do not enjoy the privilege at present. Any taluk board which is now run by a nominated non-official president should be immediately given the power to elect that president. That is what is wanted by the Honourable Mover. That being so, are you prepared to commit yourself to that? I do not think you are. Our policy in this matter has been to begin every taluk board with a nominated non-official president, and generally he runs it for three years, sometimes we allow him to go on for six years, and if we find on the whole that the board gets on all right and if there is sufficient volume of choice in the place, we allow the taluk board to elect its president. But we do not do it in a sort of mechanical way. There are some taluk boards which after three years' enjoyment of a new official head have had the right of electing their presidents conferred upon them. I think the Hon'ble Mr. Sadasiva Bhat's three taluk boards have had the right conferred upon them. They have not begun to exercise their right, but they will begin to do so at an early opportunity."

The Hon'ble Mr. K. SADASIVA BHAT :—"Not yet."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR :—"We go upon the record of work and I think it is wise. There is a certain volume of risk of a break down due to the substitution of non-official agency in the headship of a taluk board and the risk is greatly increased if you allow the man to be elected at the very first start. Though election may come all right in the old, it is better in the beginning to make yourself reasonably sure regarding the fitness of the first man who will have to run a taluk board as a non-official president. That is the reason why the process has been slow, but the Honourable Member may take my word for it that it is far from our intention to withhold from the taluk boards generally this privilege of election. We give it in such a way that there will be no chance of a breakdown. Is it not better that two or three taluk boards which probably may elect their presidents should not have that privilege for some years than the other thing, namely, this being pushed with undue haste and the thing breaking down? The real fact is that a single failure does a great deal more damage than any number of successes. If an elected non-official president fails, then there will be a regular set-back of the whole thing. That is why the election of the non-official president is being so carefully done. I am taking great care; I would do the other thing, namely, the substitution of non-official presidents for official presidents much more readily, but when it comes to the question of election, we make a careful inquiry as to the state of feeling, the existence of parties and factions, and who are the people likely to do work. I must say in fairness to those taluk boards which have the right of electing their own presidents that they have done very well indeed. I think in many cases the men elected by the taluk boards are quite as good men as those whom the Government put in. I appeal to the Honourable Member and other Honourable Members of Council not to rush this particular thing, but move slowly and have a little patience. The whole machinery will come into the hands of non-official agency and there is really no difference of opinion between us on that point; only we are proceeding rather cautiously, and after all, is it not better in the best interests of the boards themselves that we should err on the side of excessive caution than that we should err on the side of excessive haste? I would appeal to the Honourable Member not to press this resolution to a division."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. SURYANARAYANA RAO :—"My Lord, I want to say one word. I am very sorry that the Hon'ble the Raja of Pithapuram should have said that the Government should be very cautious in this matter and that the system of having these presidents appointed by Government should continue. I really do not know what his experience is. I do not know if he has any particular case before him. If he has, he will bring such a case to the notice of the Government instead of making a sweeping condemnation as regards the system of non-official presidents.

"Leaving that apart, probably election would cure the defect pointed out by the Hon'ble the Raja of Pithapuram. In this case, the appointments are made by the Governor in Council and a man is appointed because his name is brought to the notice of the Government by the Collector. In the case of election, the members will know who all the candidates are that are put forward and election will cure the defect. I venture to think that the privilege of electing the presidents may be given to a few more taluk boards. As the Hon'ble Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar has given the assurance that the Government have got it in their view and that they will proceed cautiously, I only hope that the speed may be a little quicker. With these words, I do not press the resolution to a division."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR :—"The Hon'ble the Raja of Pithapuram has not got a right of reply. I would in fairness to him point out that he did not object to the experiment being tried. When we try and accelerate the pace, he says 'do not.' He says it must be done with care. He brought forward another aspect of the case and he has got the concurrence of many other people who are quite as competent to judge of local affairs as myself and the Honourable Mover. What he said was with regard to the rate of the pace at which we should go. The Honourable Mover says 'go fast'; the Hon'ble the Raja of Pithapuram says 'do not run fast, you will run the risk of breaking down.' We are all in a position to say that we are in the desired direction and that nothing would turn us from going forward."

With the permission of His Excellency the President, the resolution was withdrawn.

RESOLUTION RE ESTABLISHMENT OF AN INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL IN THE TELUGU DISTRICTS.

The Hon'ble Mr. A. SURYANARAYANA RAO :—"The resolution I have the honour to move runs thus :—

'XXXII. This Council recommends to His Excellency the Governor in Council that an industrial school may be established at Vizagapatam or at some other convenient centre in the Telugu districts.'

"Your Excellency, we badly feel the want of an industrial school in the Telugu districts. Government may say that there is already an industrial school in Vizagapatam and we might continue that, before another school is opened or is thought off. I hold the latest report of the administration of the Department of Industries and a compliment has been paid to the school at Vizagapatam. At page 22 of the report, it is said : 'The St. Aloysius' Industrial School at Vizagapatam is the only other school which need specially be mentioned. Brother Emile, the manager, is a highly skilled motor-engineer, and the school fills a useful place in the Northern Circars by serving as a repair shop for motor cars and motor busses. The school has now been

RESOLUTION RE THE ESTABLISHMENT OF A COMMERCIAL MUSEUM IN MADRAS.

The Hon'ble Yaqub Hassan Sahib Bahadur:—"Your Excellency—"

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. Rajagopala Achariyar:—"Before the Hon'ble Mr. Yaqub Hasan proceeds to speak, he will permit me to say that we have not been able to get correct information about the state of things in Calcutta which he wants to copy in Madras. The Director of Industries has been instructed to obtain the information and so probably, instead of moving this resolution to-day, if the Honourable Member will move it on a subsequent day, I will be in a better position to deal with it, unless he considers it so urgent that it should be moved to-day."

The Hon'ble Yaqub Hassan Sahib Bahadur:—"I will move it at the next meeting."

With the permission of His Excellency the President, the following resolution was not moved:—

"XXXIII. This Council recommends to His Excellency the Governor in Council that early steps be taken to establish a Commercial Museum in the City of Madras like the one in Calcutta."

RESOLUTION RE INTRODUCTION OF THE MULGENI RENT ENHANCEMENT BILL.

The Hon'ble Mr. K. Sadasiva Bhat:—"I learn that the Government are likely to accept this resolution. It runs thus:—

'XXXIV. This Council recommends to His Excellency the Governor in Council that the Mulgeni Rent Enhancement Bill be introduced for the consideration of this Council as early as possible.'

"This resolution relates to the Bill which has been drafted by the Government and approved by the Government of India and which has been before the public for the last seven years."

The Hon'ble Sir Alexander Cardew:—"Your Excellency, the Council will remember that this Bill was sent up to the Government of India, and the Government of India prevented its being proceeded with in 1915, by saying that the measure was likely to be contentious and that that Government considered it desirable that it should be considered after the war, that means, after peace is declared. I do not think the Government will be able now to introduce this Bill without a reference to the Government of India saying that practically war is over and asking whether there is any objection to our going on with the Bill. We are ready to go on but there is no chance of its introduction at the next meeting."

The Hon'ble Mr. K. Sadasiva Bhat:—"I do not say that it should be introduced at the next meeting of the Council but only as soon as possible."

His Excellency the President:—"The Honourable gentleman may take it from what the Hon'ble Sir Alexander Cardew has said that when all obstacles have been removed, Government will proceed with the consideration of the Bill. There are obstacles to-day, one of which is the opinion of the Government of India, and until that is removed, we cannot give an undertaking that we will introduce the Bill. If the Honourable Member is content with that, he may bring up his resolution afterwards."

The Hon'ble Mr. K. Sadasiva Bhat:—"Does it mean that the Government will move after peace is signed?"

His Excellency the President:—"I will ask him to put a question then. I think that will be the best course."

With the permission of His Excellency the President, the resolution was withdrawn.

RESOLUTION RE RESETTLEMENT IN THE VIZAGAPATAM DISTRICT.

The Hon'ble Mr. B. Venkatapati Raju:—"Your Excellency, in deference to the wishes of some of my friends here who have got a lot of engagements to-day, may it not be taken up at the next meeting and in the meanwhile orders may not be issued? I shall be standing in the way of many of my Honourable friends."

His Excellency the President:—"The position is really this. No undertaking can be given, full information is not before the Government which will enable them to say whether they will proceed or not. The Honourable Member may take his own course. If he wishes to move it now, he can do so. If he chooses to take the risk of delay, he may do so."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. Ramachandra Rao:—"May I know whether the recommendations of the Board have reached the Government on this subject?"

The Hon'ble Mr. B. Venkatapati Raju:—"It may be taken up at the next meeting."

His Excellency the President:—"The Honourable gentleman will give notice in the usual way."

With the permission of His Excellency the President, the following resolution was not moved:—

"XXXV. This Council recommends to the Governor in Council that the Government be pleased

(1) that all sources of irrigation in the Vizagapatam district may be regrouped in five classes with reference to their supply and capacity instead of four;

(2) that in the Sarvasiddhi taluk the irrigation sources classed as 2, 3, 4 be classified as 3, 4 and 5;

(3) that the second-crop assessment be made optional instead of being made compulsory;

(4) that the percentage enhancement proposed in the scheme report be given up, having regard to the impoverished condition of the people;

(5) that the uniform percentage enhancement of 3 annas in the rupee recommended by the Settlement officer in the scheme report regarding all classes of dry lands be given up;

(6) that under no circumstances there should be any enhancement case of pattadars paying total assessment of Rs. 30;

(7) that the assessment on dry lands close to the sea in Sarvasiddhi taluk admittedly high should be reduced; and

(8) that the irrigation sources of Kottisa, Thalagame, Sivvam, Vangar Mugguru in Palkonda taluk be classed as 2, 3, 4 according to water-supply

The Council then adjourned sine die.

982 RESOLUTION RE ESTABLISHMENT OF AN INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL IN THE TELUGU DISTRICTS.

(Mr. Suryanarayana Rao; Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar.) [14TH MARCH 1919.]

reorganized. It has been given land in which to expand and promised a contribution towards the cost of the new buildings, while on its part the school authorities have undertaken to take on a definite number of apprentices per annum and to give them a thoroughly practical training in mechanical and motor engineering. If you refer to table 8, you will see that the strength of the industrial school at Vizagapatam in 1917 on the 31st of March was 18 and at the end of 1918, March, it was 15. The only training that is given is in blacksmith's work and all the 15 are put down under that head, while there are several other departments, drawing, mechanical engineering, carpentry, printing, book-binding and so on that are not at all taught. I am sorry I could not give such a glowing account in regard to the school as finds a place in the Administration Report. I say that with some experience. I sent my nephew there for some time and he complained that no practical training was given. He was asked to do simply manual labour. He remained there and then he went and joined the Indian Defence Force and went away to Bangalore. The other reports that I received were also to the same effect that no practical education is given and it is mainly for Christian students who are Catholics; and other Indians are not taken and naturally the answer is that others are not very anxious. But our answer is when they never teach us what is the use of going there? Unless the Government make an inquiry where the grievance is, as to whether training is not given or as to whether Indians are not wanted and whether it is only for the few Catholic boys who are orphans, they will not find out the real truth. Government on the last occasion, when this question was brought up, were pleased to say that some grant would also be made and the school would be placed on a satisfactory basis. Nothing has yet been done. Government kindly granted a site and probably they will say that they had not commenced the building and unless the building is ready, I suppose sufficient boys cannot be admitted and when the building is ready, Catholic boys would fill up the space and there would be no space for Indian boys. I do not know where the defect lies. I therefore appeal to the Government that a report should be called for from the school to state exactly the real state of things, so that Government may take some definite course of action. If the St. Aloysius' school management are not anxious or willing to take Indian boys, to whatever nationality they may belong, I think it is time that the Government should take steps to open another industrial school in the Northern Circars and especially in Vizagapatam. The work which the manager does is only repairing motor cars and other things. Individually I have the highest respect for Brother Emile; he is one of the greatest engineers but if his intelligence is confined only to himself and he does not communicate it to others, and if it is used only for making money for himself, what is the benefit to that district or to India from his intelligence? He must teach the boys and he must give them the benefit of education to our Indian boys. Otherwise, it is a case of experts who do not want to impart their knowledge but who want to make money and ask every other person who goes there to work merely as a coolie. The sooner this grievance is remedied, the sooner my impression is dispelled, if I am wrong and I shall be thankful to the Government. Apart from this school, what are the other institutions that we have? It has been constantly brought to the notice of Your Excellency's Government that there is the weaving industry and that something has to be done; but nothing has been done with regard to carpentry, nothing has been done with regard to dyeing. I do not think that this Catholic school will serve all the needs of the four districts, I am speaking generally of the Telugu districts. My resolution covers all the Telugu districts. There are other industries and I do not see why the Government should not compel some of these institutions to take some boys as apprentices and teach them the business. It would be a large order if I ask the Government to open an industrial school at every centre, but at the same time, something has to be done and I think the best way to do that is to ask some of these industrial institutions to take some of our boys as apprentices and to place the industrial school, the St. Aloysius' school, on a satisfactory footing and see that Indians are freely admitted to the institution. If these two things cannot be done, then Government may open an industrial school for the Telugu districts. With these words, I commend the resolution to the acceptance of the Council."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. Krishna Rao seconded the resolution.

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"Your Excellency, the general question of industrial schools is one with which I am unable to deal satisfactorily just now, because it is not a question in which any finality can be reached in this debate. The Industrial Commission has reported on it and that report is now under consideration. They have recorded their considered opinion that the type of industrial school usually recommended is not to form part of the scheme of industrial reconstruction. What the Commission recommend is an improved system of apprenticeship in workshops alongside technical schools for teaching engineering and similar trades. Without a system of workshop training in a factory, any system is entirely condemned. It seems, therefore, that the future policy of the Government will be to assist in the foundation of technical schools alongside private or public workshops and limit the technical training to working apprentices and trained workmen from the adjacent factories. That is the policy recommended by the Industrial Commission. How far that policy can be adapted to local conditions is the question now under consideration. The Director of Industries will report on it and, when that report comes, this question of starting an industrial school in the Telugu districts will have to be considered and decided in the light of that report. We cannot commit ourselves to establish a school of the old type. The type itself is under discussion. Under these circumstances, I hope the Honourable Member will not press for a definite undertaking. So far as a school is concerned, he may rest assured that in whatever we do, the needs of the Telugu districts will be fully considered; he need have no apprehension on that score.

"Then we come to the particular school at Vizagapatam on whose methods the Honourable Member has animadverted. I must at once tell the Honourable Member that the report of the Department of Industries is very much in favour of that school. What Mr. Innes says so recently as the 26th of February is: 'The man in charge, Brother Emile, is a highly-trained engineer and a skilled specialist in motor repair works and he turns out very good fitters where turners may be recruited. There is a mechanical engineering school teaching fitting and blacksmithy work. The school is to be reorganized; additional land has been made over to the school for extension; a building grant has been promised and the Government have agreed to give an annual grant of Rs. 2,000 and a capitation grant of Rs. 60 per annum. In return the school has undertaken to train six apprentices. Last year the school got Rs. 2,500, the new building has been delayed by the difficulty of getting materials and the increased cost of them.' I have read from Mr. Innes' report. The Honourable Member, however, says that the school is not satisfactory. I gladly agree to ask Mr. Innes to note what the Honourable Member has said and to inquire into the working of the school and, when Mr. Innes goes there, I trust the Honourable Member will co-operate with him and will give him full facilities and place all the information he has obtained in the matter at his disposal. I may, however, by way of warning, mention to the Honourable Member one circumstance which may be of help to him. One of the charges against Brother Emile is that he makes the boys use their hands and makes them work as coolies. You will find probably that that will count in his favour. As the Hon'ble Sir Francis Spring will bear me out, very great importance is to be attached to manual training and many of our high-caste boys do not realize when they go to schools like these, that they have to begin using their hands. A good deal of the preliminary work may look like drudgery. As for excluding others and confining it to Roman Catholics, I really do not know how the matter stands, but surely the Honourable Member can prove his statement that the school does not give fair play to members of other communities and, when Mr. Innes' report comes up, we shall know exactly where the school stands. I trust the Honourable Member will see fit not to press this resolution to a division."

The Hon'ble Sir FRANCIS SPRING:—"May I say a word? I would like to discriminate clearly between using the hands as a mere workman and being taught how to use hands, and why they should be used, by people who have made manual training a study. Education in manual training is a thing which has been brought to great perfection in Europe and especially in America and its principles are thoroughly well-known to certain experts of whom we have some in India.—Mr. Chatterton, I understand, is one. The thing that could be got hold of by Mr. Chatterton, Mr. Innes, or whoever is Director of Industries, can be got hold of. What is wanted, in these schools which purport to be industrial schools, is not merely coolie work, fitter's work or blacksmith's work, all this of course should be done, but the boys should also be specially instructed in the principles underlying the practice of good turnery, good blacksmithy and so on. That has got to be put on a proper basis. The mere setting up of a number of machines and forges and having a number of boys to work at them who are not ashamed to use their hands—that is not all; that is all to the good so far as it goes, but it is not enough. Mr. Innes should see something done on the lines I have indicated. In the Telugu country, something of that kind is badly wanted. Having been at the construction of the railways there, I may say that we practically failed to get skilled labour locally and we had to get it all from far distant places. There are good men enough in the Telugu country and it would be a good thing if Government could start really useful and well equipped technical schools, and not merely a workshop, even at some cost at Vizagapatam."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. SURYANARAYANA RAO:—"I do not press this resolution. I hope attempts will be made to open industrial schools after the report of the Industrial Commission has received attention. I am thankful to the Honourable Member in charge and to Your Excellency's Government when the Government were pleased to make a grant to the St. Aloysius school. I think the public of the Telugu districts have got a right to request the Government to see that Telugus have got a proper share in the teaching of the school."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"Of course they have."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. SURYANARAYANA RAO:—"That is what I am pressing. With regard to what is actually being done and what I wish to be done, that has been so well put by the Hon'ble Sir Francis Spring that I have nothing more to say. It is not enough if a boy should do mere coolie work from morning till evening. He must do some intelligent work. Otherwise, he would get disgusted. I hope the Government will be pleased to call for a report and see that there is a fair distribution of the students."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"I shall send a copy of the debate including the Hon'ble Sir Francis Spring's valuable contribution to it to the Director of Industries."

With the permission of His Excellency the President, the resolution was withdrawn.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

[Order made by His Excellency the President under rule 11 of the statutory rules for the asking of questions in the Council—

(1) Printed copies of all the questions and answers to be put and given at the meeting shall be placed on the Council table half an hour before the President takes his seat. The questions shall be numbered consecutively as printed.

(2) The questions shall be put and answered in the following manner :—
The Secretary shall call the name of each interpellator in turn, specify the serial numbers of his questions and make a sufficient pause to allow the Honourable Member a reasonable opportunity of rising in his place, if he is desirous of asking any supplementary questions. Supplementary questions must be put immediately after the principal questions to which they relate.]

The Hon'ble Khan Bahadur A. T. G. M. Ahmad Tambi Marakkayar.

1 Q.—(a) Is it a fact that the President of the 'South Indian Liberal Federation,' Trichinopoly, submitted a copy of the resolutions passed at a meeting of the members of the Federation held on 25th February 1919 regarding the action of the Brahman teachers of high schools in Trichinopoly and in mufassals who detained the non-Brahman students from appearing for the School Final Examination this year?

(b) If so, will the Government be pleased to take necessary steps to put a stop to such malpractices?

1 A.—A copy of the resolutions passed at a meeting of the members of the South Indian Liberal Federation has been received. It mentions neither Brahman teachers nor detentions.

2 Q.—(a) Is it a fact that the Muhammadans of Srivilliputtur submitted a memorial to Government regarding the conduct of Hindus of Sivagiri (Tinnevely district) against the Muhammadans of that place preventing them from offering their prayer to God in the mosque and also preventing the burial of a Muhammadan dead body which remained uninterred for three days in October last?

(b) If so, will the Government be pleased to make inquiries in the matter and do what is necessary to safeguard the religious interests of Muhammadans?

2 A.—A petition complaining against the Hindu population of Sivagiri was received in January last from certain Muhammadans resident in the same village, and was transferred to the District Magistrate of Tinnevely for disposal.

3 Q.—With reference to the answer given to question No. 146 put at the meeting of the Legislative Council held on 11th March 1919 regarding the burning of Mappilla Muhammadans who were shot in the Malappuram riot, will the Government be pleased to state if the authorities in question were in order in burning the dead bodies of Muhammadans on the face of the G.O. No. 450 P., dated 2nd December 1915?

Burning of the dead bodies of Mappillas who died in the recent Malappuram
riot.

3 A.—The disposal of the corpses of Mappillas concerned in outrages is governed by section 5 of the Mappilla Outrages Act, 1859. The Honourable Member is in error in supposing that G.O. No. 450 P., dated 2nd December 1915, which refers to cases of plague only, has any bearing on this matter.

4 Q.—(a) Will the Government be pleased to state the number of Indians holding the appointment of District Superintendents of Police in this Presidency? Of whom how many are Muhammadans?

Appointment

dans as District
Superintendents of Police.

(b) Will the Government be pleased to make necessary arrangements to appoint a Muhammadan for the said post as there is no one now in the appointment?

4 A.—(a) Two such appointments are open to, and are held by, Indians, of whom neither is at present a Muhammadan.

(b) The claims of Muhammadans with others will receive due consideration as vacancies occur.

5 Q.—(a) Will the Government be pleased to state the number of Indians holding the appointment of District Judges in this Presidency? Of whom how many are Muhammadans?

(b) Will the Government be pleased to set apart an appointment for Muhammadans in the said post?

6 Q.—With reference to the answer to question No. 14 put by me in the meeting of the Council held on 11th March 1919, will the Government be pleased to give the names of the Indian lightkeepers referred to therein?

6 A.—The names of the Indian lightkeepers referred to are—

(1) M. L. Cunha and (2) O. M. Gratiam serving in the Coast Light Service, and (3) K. Ramaswami serving in the Port Light Service.

7 Q.—With reference to the answer to question No. 18 put by me at the same meeting, will the Government be pleased to state if G.O. No. 364, Press, Revenue (Special) (Marine), dated 15th October 1918, does not sanction an enhanced grade of pay to the head clerk of the Deputy Port Conservator's office, Madras?

7 A.—No enhancement of the pay of the head clerk in question was sanctioned in the Government Order referred to.

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur S. R. M. Annamalai Chettiayar.

8 Q.—(a) When did the Court of Wards take over the management of the Arni estate and why, and on what conditions, if any?

Managemenof the Arni estate.

(b) What is the total amount of debts proved against the estate and how much of it is secured and how much is unsecured?

(c) What is the amount collected on account of the estate, since the assumption of its management by the Court of Wards, and how much has up to now been paid to creditors?

(d) What is the cash balance at present to the credit of the estate?

(e) Is there any reason why it should not be distributed at once amongst the creditors?

(f) Has the jagbirdar written to the Court of Wards complaining that though there is a large amount to the credit of the estate, it is not distributed to the creditors, while interest is running on the debts, and requesting an early distribution?

(g) What steps have been taken to expedite such distribution?

(h) Is the Court of Wards preparing a scheme for the liquidation of the debts and when is it likely to be ready?

8 A.—(a) The Arni estate was taken under the management of the Court of Wards on 22nd August 1916 on an application from its proprietor under section 18 of the Court of Wards Act, as the Government considered that it was expedient in the public interests that the estate should be managed by the Court of Wards. The Government are not prepared to publish the conditions on which the estate was taken under management.

(b) to (h) The Government are not prepared to publish any information not already included in the administration reports which have been laid on the Editors' Table.

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. Ranga Achariyar.

Rules governing the lending of the Museum Theatre.

9 Q.—(a) Will the Government be pleased to state what the rules are governing the lending of the Museum Theatre for public purposes?

(b) Will the Government be pleased to state whether it was a fact that an application was received from Rao Sahib A. Mariyappa Mudaliyar, President of the Board of Management of Egmore Balika Patasala (Hindu Girls' School), for the holding of the annual prize distribution of that institution in the said Museum Theatre on or about December 1918 and the application was refused?

(c) If so, will the Government be pleased to state the reasons why the application from the President of the Egmore Balika Patasala was refused?

(d) Will the Government be pleased to lay on the table the list of institutions and purposes for which the theatre was lent within the last two years?

9 A.—(a) to (c) The Government do not consider elementary schools to be institutions to which this privilege should be extended.

(d) The Government are not in possession of the information.

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"Your Excellency, there is no answer to my question No. 9 (a)."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"There are no special rules as to the Government lending the Museum Theatre. It is left to the discretion of the Superintendent of the Museum Theatre. There is no rule. It is entirely discretionary."

The Hon'ble the Raja of Ramnad.

10 Q.—With reference to my question No. 126 asked at the last Council meeting, will the Government be pleased to direct the Board of Revenue not to lease villages belonging to the Sivaganga zamindari, ayan or devasthanam, till proposals regarding such leases are obtained and published by Government as promised by them in reply to my supplementary question?

10 A.—The Government will consider the suggestion.

11 Q.—Will the Government kindly state whether it is a fact that the Zamindar of Kallikota and Atagada was not permitted to prosecute his studies for the B.A. course, and if so, for what reasons?

11 A.—It is not a fact that the Zamindar of Kallikota and Atagada was not permitted to prosecute his studies for the B.A. course.

The Hon'ble the RAJA OF RAMNAD:—"With regard to my question No. 11, are the Government aware when the ward passed the F.A. examination?"

The Hon'ble Mr. C. G. TODHUNTER:—"I am not quite certain of the date. I will give the Honourable Member the information later."

12 Q.—Will the Government kindly consider the desirability of sending such Court of Wards' minors as may be willing to go to England for prosecuting their studies?

12 A.—The opinion of the Court of Wards will be invited on the suggestion.

13 Q.—Will the Government kindly state when they propose to take up the amendment of the Estates Land Act?

13 A.—The amendment of the Estates Land Act is a contentious measure and could not therefore be undertaken during the war. The Government now propose to re-examine the question and are consulting the Board of Revenue thereon but they cannot at present say when legislation will actually be undertaken.

14 Q.—Will the Government kindly state if the proposed amendment to the Local Boards Act has been sent up to the Government of India and got back, and when it is likely to be introduced in this Council?

14 A.—The Bill to amend the Madras Local Boards Act has not yet been sent up to the Government of India. It cannot be definitely stated at present when the Bill will be introduced in the Legislative Council.

15 Q.—Will the Government kindly furnish particulars regarding the composition of the Rajkumar College Committee, Executive and Advisory, and also give the personnel of each committee?

16 Q.—(a) Have the Government perused the copy of the memorial submitted by the merchants of Tuticorin to His Excellency the Viceroy, appearing on page 5 of the Madras Mail, dated the 15th March 1919?

(b) Will the Government kindly say in what stage the Harbour scheme is, and make a statement giving all particulars?

16 A.—(a) Yes.

(b) In connexion with the consideration of various proposals for providing a deep water harbour at Tuticorin, preliminary borings have been taken; they indicate that there would be no engineering difficulties in rendering Tuticorin harbour suitable for vessels of thirty feet draught. Arrangements have been made to obtain from Messrs. Wolfe Barry Lyster and Partners the services of an expert to visit and advise on the harbour.

17 Q.—In continuation of my question No. 131 asked at the last meeting of the Council, will the Government kindly state who is in direct and personal management of religious establishment and endowment of Sivaganga trust institutions?

17 A.—The direct and personal management of the religious establishments of the Sivaganga devasthanam vests in the appropriate authorities of each institution. The endowments, as such, are managed by the Court of Wards' establishments.

18 Q.—Will the Government kindly consider the desirability of removing the distinction now made, in the matter of daily allowance for Assistant Inspectors of Schools, between men drawn from the Provincial Service and men from the Sub-Assistant Inspectors' cadre?

18 A.—The Government are unable to entertain the suggestion.

19 Q.—Will the Government be pleased to state the steps taken by them as the result of the conference they had with the Collectors of some districts and selected non-officials recently in the matter of control of foodstuffs, etc.?

19 A.—The action proposed to be taken on the resolutions adopted at the conference is under consideration in consultation with the Director of Civil Supplies and will shortly be made public.

20 Q.—With reference to my question No. 64 asked at the meeting of the Legislative Council held on the 19th November 1918, and question No. 7 of the Hon'ble Mr. Annamalai Chettiyar asked at the last meeting, regarding religious and charitable institutions receiving grants from Government, will the Government kindly state to what heading of the budget, moneys paid to several religious institutions are debited, and why particulars regarding the same are not given in the budget copy?

(The Raja of Ramnad ; Mr. Rama Ayyangar ;
Mr. Todhunter.)

[3RD APRIL 1919.]

- 20 A.—The bulk of the allowances paid to religious institutions are paid in the form of beriz deductions from the village collections. They are shown in the budget under the head I-A. Land Revenue—VII (IV). In view of the large number of such allowances distributed throughout the Presidency, it is not practicable to furnish details regarding them in the budget.

The Hon'ble Mr. K. Rama Ayyangar.

- 21 Q.—(a) Will the Government be pleased to state when they propose beginning the construction of or of finishing the following district board railway lines:—

- (1) Tinnevely-Tiruchendur railway,
- (2) Sivaganga-Manamadura railway,
- (3) Dindigul-Palghat railway, and
- (4) Madura-Bodinayakkanur railway?

- (b) Will the Government be pleased to make arrangements to hand over the Dindigul-Palghat railway line to the District Boards of Madura, Coimbatore and Malabar?

- 21 A.—(a) As regards the Tinnevely-Tiruchendur line the attention of the Honourable Member is invited to the following extract from paragraph 3 of Part XI of the published Administration Report:—

"During the previous year, work on the construction of the Tinnevely-Tiruchendur railway was suspended owing to the difficulties created by the war and, as the position grew worse during the year under review, all the permanent-way materials were sold to the Munitions Board for war purposes. There is no prospect of work on the line being resumed in the near future."

Inquiries will be made as to the feasibility of procuring the materials without which construction cannot be resumed.

The Government are unable to say when it will be possible to commence all or any of the above railways, as it is probable that all railway materials, which are likely to be available, will, for some time to come, be required for renewals and increased traffic facilities on existing railways, which have been held in abeyance during the war.

- (b) The Government do not propose to reopen this question. The Railway Board have finally rejected the proposals of the District Boards of Madura and Coimbatore.

- 22 Q.—Will the Government be pleased to lay on the table a statement of action taken to secure the proper supply of all kinds of foodstuffs to the various districts in the Presidency? Will the Government be pleased to see that such statements show the details of the scarcity of particular articles in each of the districts and the steps taken to remedy the defect in the supply of such articles to such places?

- 22 A.—A full statement as to the action taken to secure adequate supplies of the chief foodstuffs was made at the last meeting of this Council. Details as to the supplies of particular articles in individual districts are not available and cannot be obtained with any accuracy owing to the constant movements of commodities and uncertainty as to local consumption which varies with the rise and fall of prices.

- 23 Q.—Is it a fact that yarn, piece-goods and other clothes are stocked in Madras to a large extent and that the merchants have not been given the facility to transport them to the mufassal stations and to the interior? Will the Government be pleased to take emergent steps to remedy this evil and avoid considerable loss that might otherwise accrue to the merchants and the labouring classes which depend on the supply of yarn?

- 23 A.—The Government have no information regarding the present stocks of yarn, piece-goods and other clothes in Madras but they believe that priority certificates are freely granted by the Director of Civil Supplies for the transport of yarn and piece-goods from Madras to mufassal stations within the Madras Presidency. The Government are not in possession of any information showing that it is necessary to take further action in this matter at present.

The Hon'ble Mr. K. RAMA AYYANGAR:—"With respect to question No. 23, will the Government be pleased to call for information as to the present stock of yarn, piece-goods and other clothes in Madras?"

The Hon'ble Mr. C. G. TODHUNTER:—"The Government do not think that sufficiently accurate statistics can be collected to be of real value."

- 24 Q.—Do the Government propose adding to the number of outposts and police stations in the Ramnad district? If so, will the Government be pleased to state what arrangements are proposed to be made?

- 24 A.—No such proposal is now under consideration.

3RD APRIL 1919.]

(Mr. Chidambaranatha Mudaliyar ; Mr. Kavalappara Muppil Nayar ; Mr. Suryanarayanamurti Nayudu.)

The Hon'ble Mr. K. Chidambaranatha Mudaliyar.

- 25 Q.—Will the Government be pleased to state
(a) if it is a fact that the Mysore Government are proceeding with the construction of the second stage of Kannambadi dam works on its own responsibility without the sanction of the Secretary of State for India; and

(b) if so, whether such a course is legal or proper and will not prejudicially affect in any degree the interests of the landholders under the Cauvery irrigation in the Madras Presidency?

- 25 A.—The first stage of the Kannambadi dam has not yet been completed. The full reservoir level that can at present be maintained is about 15 feet below that fixed for the first stage of the reservoir.

- 26 Q.—Will the Government be pleased to lay on the table a statement giving the amount of remissions provided for

(a) in the budget estimate for 1918-19, and
(b) in the revised estimate for 1918-19 for each district in the Presidency as also figures for each taluk wherever the variation is above Rs. 1,000 in dry tracts and above Rs. 5,000 in wet tracts?

- 26 A.—The amount of remissions provided for in the budget estimate, 1918-19, was 3.34 lakhs and in the revised estimate for 1918-19, 25.80 lakhs. Figures for districts and taluks are not available.

The Hon'ble Mr. K. K. R. Kavalappara Muppil Nayar.

- 27 Q.—(a) Is it not a fact that in Malabar the lands registered as unoccupied dry are to be transferred to occupied dry when it is found that the occupation is permanent?

(b) When such lands are transferred to occupied dry, are not the janmis considered responsible for payment of their assessment?

(c) Is any notice now issued to janmis of such transfers before their sanction by the Revenue authorities and their objection, if any, heard?

(d) If the answer is in the negative, will Government, in view of the janmis' permanent liability to pay the assessment, order notices of such proposed transfers to be issued to janmis to enable them to object if they consider the occupation is not or is not likely to be permanent?

- 27 A.—(a) & (b) Yes.

(c) & (d) The Government will consider the suggestion.

- 28 Q.—(a) Will the Government be pleased to inquire whether in the matter of the replacement and repair of missing survey marks the janmis are now served with notices giving full particulars of survey fields in which the marks are missing or are in bad repair so as to enable them to replace or repair them at their own cost, if they so desire?

(b) Whether such notices are now only fixed up or said to be published in the amsams and the janmis afterwards charged the cost of repair or renewal of survey marks by the village officers?

(c) Will Government order the strict enforcement of a rule that in all cases where survey marks are missing or in bad repair the janmis or their agents should be served with notices giving particulars of such survey marks so as to enable them to replace or repair them before the village officers undertake the work?

- 28 A.—The Honourable Member is referred to Notification No. 515, dated 2nd December 1918, published on pages 1254-1255 of Part I of the Fort St. George Gazette, dated 17th December 1918, and to Notification No. 355, dated 10th July 1918, published at page 801 of Part I of the Fort St. George Gazette, dated 30th July 1918. In view of the general responsibility of the registered holder for the maintenance of survey stones on the boundary of his land laid down in section 14 of the Madras Survey and Boundaries Act, 1897, and the rules framed under the Act, the Government do not consider it necessary that the janmis or their agents should be served with notices of the kind referred to.

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur K. R. Suryanarayanamurti Nayudu.

- 29 Q.—Will the Government be pleased to state

(a) whether the transfer of the Chilka Lake canal from the Public Works Department to the Salt Department has been settled, and, if so, from what date it has or will come into force; and

(b) whether the examination by local officers of the revenue aspect of the Vamsadhara project has been completed and report made to the Government for orders, and whether any orders have been passed by them?

[3RD APRIL 1919.]

- 29 A.—(a) Yes; the transfer has effect from the 1st April 1919.
(b) The examination by local officers of the revenue aspect of the project has not yet been completed.

Request for
G.O. No. 541
I. of 1918.

30 Q.—Will the Government be pleased to lay on the table G.O. No. 541 I., dated 10th September 1918, which is quoted by the Public Works Department irrigational subdivisional officers as authority for rejecting applications for water in the Gōdāvari deltas to irrigate wet crops on dry lands?

30 A.—The Honourable Member is referred to the answer given to question No. 68 asked at the meeting of the Legislative Council held on 13th August 1918 wherein the Government stated that they were not prepared to lay the Government Order on the table. If this Government Order has been quoted as an authority for rejecting any water application, this has been done in error and without authority. No case is known of any water application for fasli 1328 having been rejected for the reason referred to by the Honourable Member.

Ayaout maps of the Godāvari delta.

31 Q.—Will the Government be pleased to state whether a sufficient number of ayaout maps of the Gōdāvari delta have been printed and whether they are now available for sale to the public?

31 A.—Only a limited number of copies of the maps have been printed, and no provision was made for the sale thereof to the public; but individual applications will be duly considered in cases where there are copies to spare.

Classification of irrigation sources in Godāvari and Kistna.

32 Q.—(a) Is it a fact that, with reference to Revenue Department Notification No. 345, dated 18th July 1918, proposing amendments to Board's Standing Order No. 4, the Collectors of Gōdāvari and Kistna made a reference to the Board of Revenue on the necessity of the reclassification of irrigation sources in those two districts before effect could be given to that notification?

(b) If so, whether the question has come up to Government for orders and what orders have been passed by them?

32 A.—The re-classification of irrigation sources in the Gōdāvari and Kistna districts with a view to the introduction of the new scale of water-rates proposed in G.O. No. 2712, Revenue, dated 18th July 1918, is under consideration by the Board of Revenue. The Board's report has not yet been received.

Touring by salt sub-inspectors.

33 Q.—(a) Is it a fact that salt sub-inspectors have no fixed headquarters and are expected to be on tour during the whole month within their jurisdiction?

(b) Do the Government consider that this rule is possible of observance seeing that most of these officers are men with families?

(c) Will the Government be pleased to order the fixing of headquarters for salt sub-inspectors as for land revenue inspectors and supervisors of schools and prescribe a minimum period for travelling in each month?

33 A.—(a) Yes. It is so in the case of sub-inspectors in preventive ranges.
(b) & (c) The Government will inquire.

Select tahsildars to conduct
of taluks.

34 Q.—In view of the fact that it is deemed desirable to invest tahsildars with powers to try first-class cases before they are appointed as deputy collectors and magistrates, will Government be pleased to issue orders to Collectors directing that select tahsildars in each district may be ordered to conduct the jamabandi of a taluk or taluks within the district, instead of always entrusting it, as at present, to revenue divisional officers?

34 A.—As appears from Board's Standing Order No. 12, the jamabandi is intended to enable the higher authorities of the district to satisfy themselves that the tahsildar's work has been satisfactory and it cannot therefore be conducted by the tahsildar himself; nor could one tahsildar be entrusted with the task of examining and criticizing the work of other officers of the tahsildar class. The Government cannot therefore accept the Honourable Member's suggestion.

Dentists for district
hospitals.

35 Q.—With reference to the memorial submitted in December 1918 by the Narasapur Taluk People's Association to His Excellency the Governor suggesting that a duly qualified dentist may be attached to each hospital at the district headquarters to treat mouth disorders, will Government be pleased to state whether it is proposed to try the experiment at least in a few select districts for the present?

35 A.—The memorial referred to is still under correspondence with the Surgeon-General.

Discount for cashing currency notes in the Godāvari
district.

36 Q.—(a) Are Government aware that in Gōdāvari among other districts people are obliged to pay a discount of Rs. 2 to Rs. 2-8-0 per cent when currency notes are to be encashed for silver and a discount of 3 to 6 pies the rupee when small coin is required for a one rupee currency note and that this is due to the inability of the sub-treasuries in the district to meet the demands of the public?

3RD APRIL 1919.] (Mr. Suryanarayanamurti Nayudu; Mr. Narasimha Ayyar; Mr. Littlehailes.)

(b) If so, what steps are intended to be taken to prevent this kind of loss and inconvenience to the public at large?

36 A.—The Government have no specific information on the subject.

The attention of the Honourable Member is invited to paragraphs 15 to 19 and 74 of the Hon'ble Sir James Meston's narrative introducing the Financial Statement of the Government of India for 1919-20, and to the answers given to similar questions at the Indian Legislative Council held on the 4th September 1918, 6th February 1919 and the 19th February 1919, as well as to the answer made in this Council to the question No. 77 at the meeting held on 13th August 1918.

37 Q.—With reference to item 1 of the statement showing the irrigation projects under investigation furnished in answer to question No. 48 asked by the Hon'ble Mr. A. S. Krishna Rao at the meeting of the Legislative Council held on 19th November 1918, will Government be pleased to state whether the Superintending Engineer, I Circle, has resubmitted to Government the plans and estimates for the Polavaram Island project revised as promised, and if so whether there is a likelihood of the work being sanctioned and taken on hand in 1919-20?

Plans and estimates for the Polavaram
Island project.

37 A.—The plans and estimates for the Polavaram Island project have not yet been resubmitted by the Superintending Engineer. A revised revenue forecast has been found necessary and is under preparation. There is no prospect of the work being sanctioned and taken up for execution in 1919-20.

38 Q.—Will Government be pleased to lay on the table a copy of the orders passed, if any, on reference to Collectors made in 1919 regarding cases of transfer of registry, based on the suggestions contained in the Report of the Madras Survey and Land Records Committee, Volume I?

Orders on transfer of registry of pattas.

38 A.—No such reference was made in 1919. If the Honourable Member refers to the reference made to Collectors in G.O. No. 1252, Revenue, dated 1st June 1916, he will find the orders passed on the replies to that Government Order in G.O. No. 53, Revenue, dated 7th January 1919, which has been placed on the Editors' Table.

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. Narasimha Ayyar.

39 Q.—Will the Government be pleased to state

(a) whether memorials have been sent up by draftsmen and executive lower subordinates of the Public Works Department to the Government, complaining of the disadvantages of the reorganization scheme given effect to in 1913, and praying for increased allowances for the present and a fresh scheme for bettering their prospects? If so, how many and on what dates; and

(b) whether they will be pleased to consider the same favourably?

Memorials from Public Works Department; draftsmen and others
allowances.

39 A.—A number of memorials on the subject of the reorganization have been received at various dates since its introduction. The examination of the earlier memorials disclosed a prima facie case for further reorganization, but proposals to that end were held over owing to the financial stringency due to war conditions. The general question was revived in December last by a reference from the Government of India on the recommendations of the Public Works Department Reorganization Committee, which include proposals for a single subordinate service embracing all ranks below that of subdivisional officer. This scheme is now under examination. During the month of March further memorials have been received from certain draftsmen asking for the grant of special allowances pending reorganization; this request also is being examined.

40 Q.—Will the Government be pleased to state why the allotment last made for starting the construction of the Salem College was not spent and when the work will be started?

Expenditure on the construction of the Salem College.

40 A.—A provision of Rs. 80,000 was entered for the work in the Public Works Budget for 1914-15 but this amount had to be resumed as detailed plans and estimates were not then ready. Owing to war conditions, it was not found possible to make any provision for the work in subsequent years. The work will be commenced when funds become available.

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR:—"Your Excellency, with reference to question No. 40 about the allotment of funds for the construction of the Salem College, may I know if funds will be found in the course of the next twelve months?"

The Hon'ble Mr. R. LITTLEHAILES:—"I do not think that the funds can be found during the next year. No application has been made for providing funds in the budget."

41 Q.—Will the Government be pleased to consider the feasibility of publishing the proceedings of union panchayats gratis in the district gazettes?

Publication of the proceedings of union panchayats.

41 A.—The Government are unable to accept the suggestion

(Mr. Narasimha Ayyar.)

(b) if the question of the resettlement of North Arcot district is receiving reconsideration of the Government;

(c) whether the special officer in question has been asked to reopen the question of reclassification of soils or irrigation sources, especially in the Cheyyar area; and

(d) whether the Government are now in a position to lay on the table a list of all the irrigation sources in each taluk of North Arcot, including Tiruvannamalai, noting against each source its class prior to and after the resettlement, and also whether such raising of the sources was recommended either by the Collector or the Settlement Officer?

42 A.—(a), (b) & (c) The special officer recently posted to North Arcot district is to revise the classification of poramboke and unassessed lands. The Government have no intention of interfering with the resettlement.

(d) Information regarding the classification, both before and after the resettlement, of the irrigation sources under the Cheyyar ancient system has been published in English and Tamil in the North Arcot District Gazette of 1st May 1916. The changes in the classification were based on the recommendations of the Settlement Officer, the Collector and the Board of Revenue. The Government are unable to furnish the particulars required for other irrigation sources in the district.

sources in North Arcot.

43 Q.—Will the Government be pleased to state
(a) what were the principles on which the reclassification of irrigation sources was carried out in North Arcot; and

(b) whether the reclassification of sources was carried out on different principles in the Cheyyar area to those on which it was carried out in the Palar and Ponnaiyar systems?

43 A.—The Honourable Member is referred to G.O. No. 3166, Revenue, dated 1st November 1913, which has been placed on the Editors' Table.

Report on the economic condition of Tiruvannamalai
taluk.

44 Q.—Will the Government be pleased to place on the table the report of the economic inquiry into the condition of the Tiruvannamalai taluk which is reported to have been made according to paragraph 1 of the order in G.O. No. 3775, Revenue, dated 28th November 1918?

(b) A demonstration farm in Melmuttukur village near Gudiyattam in the North Arcot district has been opened.

(c) The Government have no intention at present to open a District Court at Vellore.

(d) No decision has yet been arrived at as to which of the temporary sub-courts in this Presidency should be made permanent.

(e) The Government have no intention of making any change.

Doubling of railway line between Jalarpet and Arkonam.

47 Q.—In view of the fact that both the South Indian Railway and the Madras and Southern Mahratta Railway have got running powers over the railway line between Madras and Jalarpet, will the Government consider the desirability of recommending that the line between Arkonam and Jalarpet may usefully be doubled?

47 A.—As at present advised the Government do not consider there are sufficient grounds for such a recommendation.

THE BUDGET FOR 1919-1920.

The Hon'ble Mr. C. G. TOOTHUNIER :—"Your Excellency, under rule 29 (1) of the Financial rules, I have the honour to introduce the Budget for the year 1919-1920 in its final form, that is the final result of our calculations and discussions of the last six months.

“We began in October last by asking the Honourable non-official Members of the Finance Committee for their suggestions for expenditure. We were then under the shadow of the war. In November came the cessation of hostilities, and in December we sent out a further request for suggestions, intimating that we should be prepared to consider more ambitious schemes, especially in regard to education, industries and development generally, in view of the removal of the necessity for financial restrictions. In January, the Draft Financial Statement was presented to the Finance Committee and several valuable suggestions were made and adopted. With reference to one of these, namely, that the figures should be supplied at an earlier date to the non-official Members, I should like to say that we have already taken up the question of doing what we can to meet their convenience. In February, the Amended Draft Financial Statement was presented to this Council and three motions for its further amendment were carried. These have all been embodied in the Budget. In March came the Government of India's orders, involving further changes, and now in April we have the final stage of the largest Budget on both sides of the account ever presented to this Council.

"In view of the several changes that have been made and of the fact that, owing to the presentation of the estimates to the Council at an earlier stage than usual, a larger number of amendments in consequence of later actuals have become necessary, it has been thought desirable to recast and reprint the whole of the Chief Secretary's memorandum. To this is prefixed as usual a statement by the Finance Member of all the changes that have been made since the Amended Draft Financial Statement was presented to the Council. I think these statements will afford the Honourable Members all the explanations which they are likely to desire at the present stage of the proceedings."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT :—"It is usual on this occasion to postpone the consideration of the Budget and to proceed with the resolutions on matters of general public interest. I propose therefore to appoint to-morrow or the next day, as may be most convenient, for the discussion of the Budget, if it would be convenient to the Council. That is our usual course. We may postpone it to Friday or Saturday as may be most convenient. If that suits the Council, we can go on to the order of the day No. 6."

1002 A BILL TO AMEND THE MADRAS OUTPORTS LANDING AND SHIPPING FEES ACT, 1885 AND RESOLUTION RE INTERPRETERS AND TRANSLATORS AT MEETINGS OF COUNCIL.

(Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar; Mr. Ramanuja Achariyar; [3RD APRIL 1919. Mr. Campbell; the President; Mr. Narasimha Ayyar.]

A BILL TO AMEND THE MADRAS OUTPORTS LANDING AND SHIPPING FEES ACT, 1885.

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"Your Excellency, I beg to introduce a Bill to amend the Madras Outports Landing and Shipping Fees Act, 1885, and to move that it be read in Council. The statement of objects and reasons explains the necessity for this Bill. I have nothing to add to it at this stage."

The Hon'ble Mr. S. Srinivasa Ayyangar seconded the motion.

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur V. K. RAMANUJA ACHARIYAR:—"I want some information about this Bill. What is the need for levying fees on passengers? If a separate account is maintained at each outport, then I can understand this. But I think one account is maintained for all ports. If it is a fact that accounts are not separately kept for outports, I think this Bill is not necessary. I object to the policy of replacing Acts by rules. Rules are resorted to in the first instance because experience has not been obtained; but here experience has been obtained and there is an enactment. I do not see why that should be replaced by rules."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. Y. G. CAMPBELL:—"As to the information asked for, I may mention that a separate account is kept of the Landing and Shipping Fees fund in each port separately; they are not combined in one account."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"As no other Honourable Member has any remarks to make on the Bill, I put the motion to the Council."

The motion was put to the Council and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"I beg to move that the Bill be referred to a Select Committee for report."

The Hon'ble Mr. S. Srinivasa Ayyangar seconded the motion.

The motion was put to the Council and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"I move that the Select Committee be constituted of the following members:—The Hon'ble Mr. Ahmad Tambi Marakkayar, the Hon'ble Mr. Suryanarayanamurti Nayudu, the Hon'ble Mr. Sadsiva Bhat, the Hon'ble Mr. Campbell, the Hon'ble the Advocate-General and myself."

The Hon'ble Mr. S. Srinivasa Ayyangar seconded the motion.

The motion was put to the Council and agreed to.

Resolutions on matters of General Public Interest.

The discussion of resolutions on matters of general public interest was then taken up.

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR:—"Your Excellency, with reference to the first resolution that stands on the agenda, there has been some difference of opinion on the non-official side whether it is to be moved or not. If it is convenient to Your Excellency and to the Honourable Members to defer the consideration of it till to-morrow or the next day, it will be better. I may not move it at all. Resolutions I and II* may be taken together. They bear on the same subject—the Administration Report. There is a feeling that this matter should be further discussed among my non-official friends."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"With the leave of the Council, the consideration of Resolutions I and II may be postponed till to-morrow."

RESOLUTION RE INTERPRETERS AND TRANSLATORS AT MEETINGS OF COUNCIL.

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR:—"The resolution that I have to move runs as follows:—

'III. This Council recommends to His Excellency in Council that steps should be taken to requisition the presence, at future meetings of this Council, of interpreters or translators in the chief vernaculars of this province and of shorthand reporters in those languages.'

"The main matter dealt with in this resolution is the use of vernaculars by Honourable Members who may have occasion to use them in the course of the proceedings. With reference to the use of such vernaculars I believe that there may be some difference of opinion in some quarters, and it is just as well that I should begin at the outset, by considering the possibility of such use and I shall next deal with the question as to the objections or obstacles that have to be overcome."

"In the first place, I believe there will be hardly any one here who will contend that as the law exists at present, there is any bar to the employment of the vernacular by any Honourable

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR:—

I. This Council recommends to His Excellency in Council that paragraphs 1 and 2 of the last Madras Administration Report be deleted.

II. This Council recommends to His Excellency in Council that a committee of officials and non-officials be appointed to whom the next administration report should be presented before the same is published.

RESOLUTION RE INTERPRETERS AND TRANSLATORS AT MEETINGS OF COUNCIL.

3RD APRIL 1919.] (Mr. Narasimha Ayyar.)

Member of this house who prefers to employ it. I therefore proceed to deal with the practical limitation which may attend the exercise of this privilege, and point out what concrete difficulties have been considered to stand in the way of the vernaculars being employed here.

"In the first place, though the Hon'ble Sir Alexander Cardew is at an advantage and may be able to follow some of the vernaculars, I believe it is not all gentlemen that may be seated in that seat, that will be able to follow a discussion in the vernaculars, or able to raise questions of order or give decisions on points of order or relevancy. The first point, therefore, to be decided is whether it is possible to conduct the proceedings in the vernaculars even to a slight extent when there is this difficulty on the part of the President. It is to meet that difficulty that the suggestion is made that if any Honourable Member happens to address the Council in the vernacular, interpreters or translators who are now employed by the Government, or who may be employed hereafter for this special purpose, may be brought here, so that we may have the advantage of accurate translations. Honourable Members are conversant with the legal practice in various places; for example, in certain courts where the vernacular is employed by witnesses or others who address the Court, there are translators requisitioned, so that the Judge who is ignorant of the vernacular gets the translation sentence by sentence placed before him."

"I know that several objections may be raised to such a course being adopted even in regard to judicial proceedings and similar objections may be repeated to the adoption of such a course in this Council. The first objection that may be raised to it is that the proceedings lose much of the spicy character they would otherwise have, and the speeches may be ineffective because sentence after sentence will be interposed with translation. It may be said there is a loss of time and re-duplication, the speeches coming out in English and again in the vernacular. I know that this has weighed with some of my friends so far as to make them think that the sacrifice is too great if really translators or interpreters are called upon to translate sentence after sentence. If the considerations which I shall advance presently are considered to be of sufficient importance and in favour of permitting the vernaculars to be used, then I believe this ineffectiveness which the Honourable Members' speeches might be considered to labour under and this loss of time may be ignored."

"I shall proceed to deal with the other objection, namely, how far the proceedings in the vernaculars will be acceptable to the other members besides the President. With reference to these Members the matter has been put forward, from various standpoints. The matter is one which lends itself to very easy ridicule by persons who are disposed to ridicule the vernaculars. It will be said that the Council will be a Babel of languages and that utter confusion will be the result and progress will be impeded. I hope when Honourable Members realize that the real object of this resolution is to further a high national object, the ridicule will be kept out of this hall and we would face the problem seriously and try to ascertain whether it is possible to do anything in the direction chalked out in this resolution. Analysing this argument about the Babel of languages, the argument comes to this: that if a number of languages are employed in this Council, there may be persons who do not know all the languages and in the case of the vernaculars, a good number may be ignorant of them. When we face the facts, we find that far from there being a Babel of languages, the chief vernaculars are only two or three. There is hardly 10 per cent of the people—I am talking of the people of Madras generally—who will be ignorant of the chief vernaculars of the Presidency, Tamil and Telugu. Kanarese and Malayalam occupy a subordinate part—they are spoken in very few districts—and therefore I believe we may take it that the chief vernaculars are Tamil and Telugu and I may very confidently affirm the position that hardly 10 per cent will be ignorant of these languages. I shall proceed further with this question. Supposing that the number of vernaculars is three or four, is that to be considered such an intolerable situation to have three or four vernaculars talked in this Council? I would appeal to the parallels in other countries, where legislation and proceedings of the Councils are considered to be above reproach. I will take Canada and Switzerland. In Switzerland there are four different languages employed and the proceedings are conducted without confusion. In Canada also, English and French are both freely understood and are employed. There does not seem to be any insuperable objection to more than one language being employed. If as a matter of fact, we find in the north a speaker is permitted to address in Hindi, there is nothing impossible in any language other than English, being allowed to be used here."

"Now coming to the question as to the difficulties of members in following the proceedings, taking the Council at large, there will be 15 per cent or 20 per cent that may be ignorant of any particular vernacular. I may point out that there is a little bit of difficulty at present. I do not claim for the use of the vernaculars any great perfection. I am conscious of the difficulty of the procedure I am advocating. But I am anxious to point out that these difficulties have to be faced and solved; if we are going to be frightened at the appearance of the difficulties, we shall be nowhere near the solution of these difficulties. The best way of solving these problems is by tackling them and beginning to solve them. In point of fact, it is recognized that in the next decade or two the chief vernaculars of this Presidency have some chance of being used here; the chances are that there will be very few who will have to vote who will be ignorant of the vernaculars. If objections are raised that there are a large number of gentlemen now present here who are not well acquainted with the vernaculars, I may plead a preliminary objection. Those gentlemen belonging to the official block—as the Hon'ble Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar was pleased to express it on the last occasion—the official block is here simply to echo the opinion of the Government, to carry out the behests of the Government; they need not understand the debate and they have simply to vote with the Government."

(Mr. Narasimha Ayyar.)

[3RD APRIL 1919.]

Omitting them, I think there will be hardly 5 per cent of other gentlemen who will be ignorant of the vernaculars. They will be conversant with one or the other of the vernaculars. So far as the Government are concerned, I think two members of the Government can follow the proceedings in the vernacular. Therefore the objection that members would not be able to follow the proceedings, would not be an accurate objection.

"Proceeding next to the question as to what the disadvantages would be in proceeding in the vernaculars, I may refer to this: Suppose there is a danger of three or four not following the vernacular, is that sufficient justification in itself for putting a ban upon vernaculars? From that point of view, I would put a hypothetical case which may actually happen next year. At present it is conceded that if any Honourable Member is now constrained by his ignorance of English to adopt some vernacular, he may be permitted to do so. I should not be surprised that directly the Councils are enlarged, persons who are innocent of English but who are highly qualified otherwise to vote and to take their place here would become members of this Council and they would be constrained to adopt the vernaculars. When we make proposals for the employment of languages and filling the Council with interpreters, it is just as well that that state of affairs should be thought of now, as it is quite likely to occur a short time hence. In that case, particular members would no doubt have the disadvantage of not following the discussion, but that would not be considered an insuperable disadvantage. If any Honourable Member elects to speak in the vernacular, he would not be able to get all the non-official Members to follow him and understand him; and he runs to that extent the risk of losing their support. It is permissible to a Member to take that risk, but no ban need be put upon the vernaculars for that reason.

"I have heard others say that English is specially fitted for the expression of our thoughts, because that is the language in which our papers are published and speeches are made on the platforms; and the language of our law reports and books on constitutional law is English and it is just as well that we employ it. I have only one answer to give to that: that it is stating a fact but ignoring a grievance. The grievance is that the national languages are not given a chance of becoming the language of the law books and the law courts and the language best fitted for the expression of all thoughts. I do think that if our national languages are given a chance, they are sure to take the place of English in the manner indicated. The question is whether it is desirable to give them that chance as stated in my resolution. No nation ever developed who were constrained to express themselves through a foreign tongue. I believe it is such a patent proposition that I need not waste any time in arguing it. It is an undoubted fact that Britain would not have advanced if it adopted Norman or French for the language of its law courts and its Parliament. I hardly think it necessary to adduce arguments in support of that position. Seeing that at present English may be taken as the one language understood by all and as the language in which all our thoughts are expressed on matters coming up for discussion, I hope that this Council will be kind enough to give facilities for developing the vernaculars in that direction.

"Then I have heard the objection put forward, which I believe is not very serious, namely that if the vernaculars are employed and the general public asked to follow the discussion, there will be the danger of Honourable Members playing to the gallery. That appears to me to be not worthy of serious consideration for this reason, because it attributes unworthy motives; because playing to the gallery implies a sacrifice of duty for gratifying lesser pleasures, and it is casting a slur upon Honourable Members. We will not be justified in casting such a slur. Everyone here is actuated by a high sense of duty. We need not be influenced by that argument. Another objection advanced is that if you talk in the vernaculars, the people will watch the proceedings and they will put pressure upon you which will compel you to deflect from what is the proper course. At present it must be conceded that far from this Council's proceedings attracting a large amount of attention, things are just the other way; I think it has a grand solemnity about it, a certain amount of awe—I was going to say sepulchral awe. You do not find the same thing as you find here in the Councils in other countries like Switzerland and England. There is a feeling of numbness in this Council; life does not come into play in the discussions. If the other evil were to come into existence, the question is whether it would not be the lesser of the two evils. At present I am anxious to prevent both the evils—the sepulchral awe and numbness and the evil of being driven by popular currents of passion. The golden mean is to give facilities for the public to follow the discussions that take place here. That is the main object with which this resolution is brought forward.

"The object of this resolution and of the following three resolutions is to give greater opportunity to the public to be present and to follow the discussions as they go on. In respect of this matter, I have not heard any one say that it is unnecessary. Every one agrees that if the country is to progress and if politics is less and less to be the game of a few trained hands who are educated, and if the country is to advance in the direction of democracy which is swaying the world, we must give greater facilities to the public to attend and follow our discussions in this Council and partake—not partake except so far as it may operate upon us legitimately. The only objection I have heard is this, that the public may very well depend upon the supply of newspapers. I was astonished that any one who has read any proceedings of this Council in the newspapers advancing that position, because I myself have been rather agreeably (painfully?) surprised to note that when I stated a particular matter in this Council, three different papers gave three different versions and a good number of papers missed what I considered to be the chief point in it. This is what happens in respect of papers missed what. It is perhaps my misfortune that even the official reporter fails to follow me when I go at the speed of a torrent and he sends my speech a fortnight later when I forget what I said. For one reason or other, we have been surprised that the reports to be gathered from the newspapers do not give the correct idea of what went on and certainly we should not depend upon them in matters of great importance. It is not fair for us to say, let the public gather what they can from the newspapers. We must afford facilities to the public. I admit that the entire public would not come and watch the proceedings here, but I mean only such of the public as do care to attend and care to follow and keep in touch with what is going on and express their views both through their representatives who champion their interests as well as others. That is what I mean by the term 'public'. Facilities must be given to the public in that sense to listen to us. Suppose facilities are given to the public. It is admitted that the English-knowing public is a very very small percentage of our population and therefore I believe it does not require any further argument from me to show that the proceedings must be conducted in the vernaculars. If anything takes place in the vernaculars in Madras—in Tamil or Telugu—I think the vast masses of the people will be able to understand it and the public would get an immediate impression of what is going on. Take for instance what took place on the last occasion. I raised the question of food supply and kerosene oil. It is a question in which several people were interested and they actually came in here to see the proceedings; but after a short time they went away because they were not able to follow the proceedings. There are several other matters with which I will deal in connexion with the sixth resolution. If the proceedings are conducted in the vernaculars, we shall enable the public to take an interest in the subject matter of the debate; and that will have very excellent effect upon the non-official representatives and upon the Government. If the Government feel that not merely the theoretical public watch them, but the practical public watch them, and similarly if the non-official members feel that the practical public watch them, that will have a very great effect. I therefore think that the objection that there will be too much of the influence of the public in this hall is an objection which does not deserve so much consideration.

"I have not yet come across any objection which would stand in the way of the employment of the vernaculars. The request I have put forward in this resolution is a very reasonable and humble request. It may be objected that it may cost extra expenditure. In the first place, extra expenditure is unnecessary. We meet a few days in the year, not even thirty days and those already in service may be utilized and made to work here; but if that should seriously interfere with their other work, we may make arrangements for the employment of a special temporary staff. I think the question of cost will not be put forward as a serious objection.

"As to the other matter, namely, that it will be a temptation to a large number of persons to come forward with flights of oratory in the vernaculars, I wish to point out that far from that being an evil, I would welcome the day when that really happens to be the case. I can confidently prophesy that in two decades, flights of vernacular oratory will be the order of the day. Some people may say 'why should we bring it down on our heads?'. They think it is a curse. They say that every one here is not able to wield this language with some degree of facility, without committing mistakes of grammar and idiom. I do feel that there are some persons who might fancy that it is a mistake to invite the vernaculars a bit earlier than they would naturally come in. I only say with all deference to them that I cannot take the same view. The Honourable Member who is going to reply might say 'this is a theoretical discussion at present, because all Honourable Members understand English'. I do not say that any one is unable to express himself in English; the necessity is not the difficulty of addressing in English on the part of any single Honourable Member. The point of view I take is that this Council should not consider only the exposition of ideas of the cross benches here. The Government should understand what the Non-official Members say. But that is not the be-all and end-all of our work here. No doubt that is the main thing, but I think that proceedings must be conducted in such a manner as to enable the public to follow the proceedings intelligently. For these reasons I hope I have made out a clear case for the employment of the vernaculars. I hope Honourable Members will see their way to requisition the presence of interpreters. I do not say that half a dozen Members should start at once with vernacular speeches. I know that they would not. The Hon'ble Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar need not be frightened by the idea that there would be a flood of vernacular oration. Very probably there may be only one or two speakers."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"I accept it. I am not at all frightened."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR:—"Even the Hon'ble Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar says he is not frightened at the prospect. I hope Honourable Members will find it easy to support this measure."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. VENKATAPATI RAJU:—"Your Excellency, though I do not agree with what the Honourable Mover of the resolution has said in its entirety, I do not want this resolution to go unseconded, because, this is evidently the outcome of a decision which most of us deplore. There is no statutory prohibition against a Member expressing himself in whatever language he is able to express himself. When we expect a wider electorate and when we expect a large number of people to come in, we naturally expect one or two who cannot speak the English language so as to make themselves intelligible. In those circumstances there is no law which prevents such gentlemen from speaking in their vernacular whenever they want to speak. There was objection taken, as it was done on the other occasion, that there were no interpreters.

RESOLUTION RE INTERPRETERS AND TRANSLATORS AT MEETINGS OF COUNCIL.

(Mr. Venkatapati Raju ; Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar ; [3RD APRIL 1919.
Mr. Narasimha Ayyar.]

In order to provide for such a contingency, I think, my Honourable Friend has moved this resolution. If the Government think that they do not want to place a statutory bar against persons standing as candidates who do not know English, they must provide some means by which the Council can understand what a Member speaks because he has got the right when he comes in as Member to speak in his own vernacular. To provide for that contingency this resolution has been moved. I respectfully urge on the attention of the Government that this is not a resolution to be received with amusement, but it has to be very seriously considered, because there may be Members who may not be able to express themselves in English, in which case provision must be made for understanding them."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR :—"Your Excellency, the Honourable Mover has asked me in advance to treat his proposal with all the seriousness which it deserves. He has pointed out to the Council that it is intended to serve a very high national purpose. I shall certainly treat his proposal with all the seriousness which is due to any proposal emanating from an Honourable Member of this Council. What is the proposal? The proposal is that 'steps should be taken to requisition the presence at future meetings of this Council of interpreters or translators in the chief vernaculars of this Province and of shorthand reporters in those languages'. That is the proposal. In support of that proposal, the Honourable Member has said a great deal about the advantage of having our discussions conducted in the vernaculars. He said that he recognised the disadvantages but in his opinion the advantages far outweighed the disadvantages, and therefore he says 'let us get ready interpreters, translators and shorthand reporters'. May I point out to the Council that it has not yet been decided to allow speeches in the vernaculars in this Council? That point is still an undecided point. Whatever decision there has been has been a decision adverse to the Honourable Member. At the last meeting of this Council the Hon'ble Mr. Narasimha Ayyar began delivering a speech in Tamil and His Excellency Lord Pentland who then presided over the deliberations of this Council would not allow him to speak in the vernacular, and His Excellency asked the Honourable Member what was the object. The Hon'ble Mr. Narasimha Ayyar said 'I am trying to set a precedent, the only language that should be talked is the local vernacular.' It was not then a question of vernaculars being allowed to be used, it was a question that the only language to be used was the vernacular."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR :—"I intended that only for myself."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR :—"Quite so. Then His Excellency said :

'It is very unpleasant that this issue should be raised. It lies with me as President to conduct the proceedings in accordance with the ordinary practice of the Council. I have got full power to conduct the proceedings in this way. I would advise the Honourable Gentleman to proceed in English and to defer what he proposes to do, and proceed as I have suggested by bringing up a resolution on the subject'

"Thus His Excellency said : 'bring forward a resolution which the Council may deal with on its merits'. If the Honourable Member thought that it would be to the public advantage that, instead of talking one language which all of us now understand, namely English, we should talk four or five languages and communicate with one another through the help of interpreters and translators, he is quite welcome to think so. If he brings forward a resolution to that effect, let us discuss it on the merits, and if it is the sense of the Council that we should go in that direction, the interpreters and translators would come. There is no doubt about it. I do not know what exactly was at the back of the Honourable Member's mind when he put his resolution in this form. He was explicitly told that the Council would have no objection to deal with this question as a separate issue, namely, the policy of adopting the vernaculars as the media for the communication of one another's ideas. He could have brought forward such a resolution which we could have dealt with on its merits. If it had been decided then by the Council, that we should permit Honourable Members to speak in the vernaculars, that would be embodied in the rules in deference to the wishes of the Council, and then this would be a subsidiary thing, whereas my first objection to the Honourable Member's proposal is that these interpreters and translators whom he wants us to keep ready really will have nothing to do for the reason that it has not yet been decided to adopt the vernaculars as the media for the expression of our ideas in this Council. That is my first point and that disposes of a great deal of what the Honourable Member has said."

"All the Honourable Member's speech has been devoted to a plea for the adoption of the vernaculars. He told us how in Switzerland there are three languages talked in the Council and how in Canada two languages are spoken in the Council, and he said 'let us here have a number of languages'. Let us be talking two, three or four or five languages by all means. I have absolutely no objection. What I say is : decide that first ; let the Council deal with it on its merits, let them with their eyes open decide it. If they decide it that way, it will be open to them to say, now that we have decided to talk in several languages, as we are members of the Tamil country, or of the Telugu country, or of the Malayalam country or the Kanarese country, how are we to communicate with the Government? We shall have these interpreters and translators, so that, when the Hon'ble Mr. Venkatapati Raju delivers a speech in Telugu, the moment he sits down the interpreter will translate it into Tamil and the Hon'ble Mr. Narasimha Ayyar will reply in Tamil ; and then it will be translated into Telugu for the benefit of the Hon'ble Mr. Venkatapathi Raju ; by the time he finishes it, the Hon'ble Mr. Sadasiva Bhat would say 'let me hear it in Kanarese' and there will be a translation in Kanarese. I am not objecting to the use of the vernaculars one after the other or simultaneously, but make up your minds to do so before you go to the next step, namely, getting interpreters and translators. Assuming in deference to the Honourable Member that there are translators and interpreters here, and the Honourable Member begins to speak in Tamil, he will be confronted with the same difficulty as on the last occasion ; he will be told by Your Excellency that he will not be permitted to talk in Tamil ; and Your Excellency will be bound to rule him out. Your Excellency will say 'you have been told on a previous occasion to bring forward a resolution and you have not done that ; the ruling given by my predecessor holds good.' I very much fear that the Hon'ble Mr. Narasimha Ayyar has proceeded on a completely wrong track. If his idea was to make this a real live question, if he really thought that it is so important and it is a national purpose which is needed at once, that instead of talking one language which we all understand, we should talk half a dozen languages which only some of us could understand, and that we should have interpreters and translators for helping us through, I think he should have put that issue straight before the Council and should not have adopted this expedient."

MEETINGS OF COUNCIL.

(Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar ; Mr. Ranga Achariyar.)

"I refuse to be drawn into the other question, because it does not arise in the resolution on the paper, whether it would be good for the country that we should all talk in the vernaculars. The Honourable Member has said a great many things with regard to which I personally agree. He has said for instance that the vernacular would be understood by everybody and will make this place very lively. I am quite prepared to believe that it will make the place lively. Let us by all means make it lively ; but let us do so with our eyes open. He has said that we are in a sepulchral mood, we sit here quite unhappy. Be it said in justice to my Honourable Friend that he at any rate has tried his best to make things lively. That is a testimony which I would gladly bear to him, and I am sure I will be supported by a great many non-official members. But we have nothing to do with all that. He tells us that twenty years hence there will be vernacular orators who will do quite as well as we do in English. Several of us may not live to see what will take place twenty years hence. I hope my Honourable Friend would live to see a large number of vernacular orators. Let them come in first and then we can make the necessary arrangements. Then he tells us 'what about the new Council, there may be several people who do not know English, we cannot keep them out.' When they come in, by all means let the Government and the Council take up this question of dealing with them. Either let us say we will not have them or if we will have them, let us make arrangements by which they can communicate with others. Why should we decide this point in advance. At any rate, it is not contended that any of us here now does not know English. I think all of us do. I have been looking into the membership of the Legislative Council since 1865 and I find throughout the long list we never had a single member who did not know English, or at any rate a single member who admitted that he did not know. That being so, may we not assume that every member will, in future, also have a knowledge of English? May we not with all deference to the Hon'ble Mr. Narasimha Ayyar succeed for the next century in securing only English-knowing men? I cannot help thinking that the whole of this discussion is thoroughly unreal. I am pretty certain that if my Honourable Friend had raised the straight issue as he ought to have done in response to the invitation extended to him from the Chair—I have very little doubt what the result would have been. But as he has not raised that issue, but has delivered a long speech in support of an issue which he has not raised, he has left me no alternative but to say, by all means settle whether you should have the discussion in the vernaculars and after that, the question of the interpreters, translators and shorthand reporters will be considered. I therefore oppose the resolution."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR :—"Your Excellency, there is more in this resolution than appears on the surface. There are one or two aspects of the question which I wish to place before this Council for serious consideration. While refusing to be drawn into a discussion of the straight issue as the Honourable Member for Government called it, he rather indicated his view that he would be opposed to such a resolution—to that straight issue."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR :—"No, I said that it would be a most interesting discussion. I did not say that I was going to oppose it. I said you will have to raise it first."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR :—"I will not anticipate what his attitude will be on such an occasion. But, Your Excellency, the rules as they stand at present assume a knowledge of the English language in the members, enough to speak in correct English before an enlightened audience like this. That is assumed to be the necessary qualification for every candidate who is coming forward. I am afraid that assumption prevents a large number of eligible people, real representatives of the masses coming forward and contesting seats in the elections. I believe the reproach which is often cast against the present Council that one section of the community or even one profession predominates or dominates the elections throughout the country will disappear, if we afford facilities for people not knowing the English language sufficient to be able to speak it well, and induce them to come forward. I think we will then have a real representation of the people. I do not say that we have not got it now, but some people say that real representation of the people's interests is not had in this Council. We say we represent them, but our statements are discounted on that ground. When we say that such and such things are required for the people of the land, we are at once told 'you are only town dwellers, you only belong to a certain section of the people; you belong to the vakil Raj and therefore you cannot represent the real masses of the people.' I really do think that it acts as a handicap in the matter of elections. We are on the eve of elections and I think it is very necessary that we should approach this question more seriously than at present. I think there are very many people who can give excellent expression to their thoughts and their grievances whatever they may be in the vernacular, and I think it will be a great advantage to the Government and to this Council if really we have such people freely competing for seats in this Council. I should gladly welcome the day when such people will come forward. Then the Government will know what the people in the country feel as regards the vital questions that come before this Council. There are very few such people now. Although we may widen the electorate and lower the franchise, still unless we give facilities for people not knowing English to come forward, I am afraid this Council will be a failure. That aspect I wish to impress upon this Council and I think its importance cannot be overstated. I therefore think that if this resolution were accepted to-day, it would go forth as an assurance from the Government that they do not insist upon a knowledge of English as an essential qualification for candidates coming forward and contesting seats. Although the elections have been announced, you will notice that very few people have come forward to contest the seats. It is not a healthy sign. Vakils here and vakils there announce themselves as candidates. Where are the people? Why are they not coming forward? They feel quite shy; they are afraid that they would not be able to give expression to their views in the Council in English. Once it is known that they can give expression to their ideas in their own tongue, I do think many people will come forward. That is an advantage which must be borne in mind. I do hope that the Government will consider that aspect of the question. I do not think that because we have been going on from 1865 onwards with English as the vehicle of communication, we should persist in going on only in that tongue. I do not think English will be spoken in the whole Presidency or the whole country. You should not shut out people who do not know English from taking part in those benefits which are more largely to be conferred by the proposed reforms. If the reforms are really to take shape and are really to benefit the people, I think we should welcome people who are not acquainted with the English language to enter this chamber and express their ideas. I earnestly press upon the attention of Government that aspect of this resolution. They should not think that this present practice should be continued for all time.

(Mr. Ranga Achariyar ; Mr. Siva Rao ;
Mr. Rajaopala Achariyar.)

[3RD APRIL 1919.]

"There are difficulties, I do recognize,—the difficulties of having so many vernaculars spoken; but the advantages far outnumber the disadvantages. It will be a happy day when we can introduce these vernaculars because we will get real representation. I quite agree with the Honourable Member for Government that the issue might have been raised more directly; but I think the resolution proceeds on the assumption that there is nothing in the rules to prevent an Honourable Member from speaking in the vernacular. The Honourable Member for the Government said that there should be a special issue raised for the decision of this Council. I bow to the ruling of the Chair, but I question whether it is within the competency of the Council to give a decision on this point. The business rules have to be amended if any prohibition is to be put upon members from speaking in the vernaculars. If a member is to be prevented from speaking in the vernacular, there must be a rule preventing him from doing so. So long as there is no rule preventing it, I do not think it is within the competency of this Council to say 'we shall not hear you.' The Honourable Member has proceeded on the assumption that it is open to this Council to refuse to hear any Honourable Member if the member speaks in the vernacular. Members of the Council may laugh at him or jeer him and put him down like that; but they cannot say he shall not be heard simply because he speaks in the vernacular. It is open to any Honourable Member to speak in the vernacular and the Honourable Member has proceeded on that assumption. The question should not be brushed aside in this way. I ask the earnest attention of the Government to the aspect of the question that I have put forward."

The Hon'ble Mr. P. SIVA RAO:—"Your Excellency, this resolution is a very simple one. I see no reason why we should confound ourselves with the broad question as to what shall be the language of the Council. If the Hon'ble Mr. Narasimha Ayyar is seeking to introduce the vernaculars into this Legislative Council by virtue of this resolution, I am not prepared to follow him for the present, but if the Honourable Member in charge is seeking to lay down that if a particular member does not know English, he shall be deprived of his voice in this Council."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR (interrupting):—"I never said that."

The Hon'ble Mr. P. SIVA RAO:—"The ruling of His Excellency the President was quoted just to show that because a member talked in the vernacular, he was ruled out. The only question is one of convenience. It may be that a particular member may be highly cultured but he may not know English; he may know other languages. There is no literary qualification prescribed in the rules and regulations. The rules do not say that the candidate should be literate in English. If we want to prescribe English as a qualification for candidates, the rules must be amended and we must lay down that literacy in English is a qualification for being a candidate. The only question is which will be most convenient to the Council and whether there is any need for translators and vernacular shorthand reporters being introduced. We need not decide now whether English or the vernaculars should be language of the Council. I lay stress upon this consideration that there is absolutely nothing in the rules or regulations to prevent any member from addressing the Council in the vernacular and probably if he happens to know that language, the President will do very well to allow him the privilege of addressing his colleagues in that language."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO:—"I think the debate on this resolution has assumed a much wider character than is justified by the terms of the resolution or by the remarks made by the Honourable Mover and seconder. If I understand the Hon'ble Mr. Narasimha Ayyar aright, it seems to me altogether unnecessary under the guise of this resolution to discuss the very large question of national ideals, or national language in the legislature. At present, for the last nine years I have been in this Council, every member of this Council has talked in English and has been fairly understood, and if any member came into this Council and said that he had not sufficient knowledge of English or that he would be much more at home in the vernacular, I am perfectly certain that Honourable Members of this Council would not have refused to hear him or to find adequate facilities for his speech being understood by other Honourable Members. But the Hon'ble Mr. Narasimha Ayyar having been speaking in English for the last six years in this Council, suddenly wished to change the language of the Council and that was the situation which the President of this Council met by refusing to give him permission. That, Your Excellency, is the situation which has led up to this resolution. I for one suggested that no ruling should be given on that occasion. Your Excellency, I have not on this occasion looked up the regulations of the other Provinces, but my recollection is that in the rules of the Imperial Legislative Council provision has been made for a member who is not acquainted with English, being put even on the Select Committees and for translation for his understanding what is going on in the Select Committee. I am entirely at one with my Hon'ble Friend Mr. Ranga Achariyar that the rules as they stand now will not preclude anybody from talking any language he likes. If he does not care for the consideration that he should be understood by the majority of the members of this Council, it is quite open to any member to speak in any language. I believe that the object of every Honourable Member is to be heard not only by the non-official members but also by the official members who have to decide the fate of most resolutions. Your Excellency, I am reminded on more than one occasion I was asked to address the assessors in the vernacular. I knew very well that the Judge who had to decide the case was insufficiently acquainted with it and as I knew that there was no further argument except the address to the assessors, I expressed to the Judge that I was more anxious about his understanding the case than the assessors understanding it. In the circumstances, it seems to me there is no need for translators or interpreters. I am certain that if in this Council such a procedure is adopted, I for one am inclined to think that it will lead to a misunderstanding of the speeches rather than a clearer understanding of them. I am certain that the Hon'ble Mr. Rajaopala Achariyar and the Hon'ble Mr. Davidson will have to reply and I suppose the replies of all the official members will have to be translated, and if a gentleman brings forward a resolution and talks in the vernacular, he will have to be told what the reply is. Every member's speech would have to be translated and the position would be somewhat intolerable. In these circumstances, though I appreciate the object of my Honourable Friend in forcing this question for solution, I am not at present inclined to regard this thing as a matter for immediate solution. I am certain, Your Excellency, that it is more than likely that some members may get into the enlarged Councils who may not know English. I am certain that in those circumstances provision will have to be made for their speeches being translated, but it is only for those who cannot express themselves in English."

"I think that this proposition does not raise the general question. I am in great sympathy with the general question that anyone who does not understand English should have the liberty of speaking in the vernacular. When that question does arise, I am sure that all the members, official and non-official, European as well as Indian, would not place any obstacles in the way of changing the rules for the purpose. I do not see any object in pressing this matter further. I was first inclined to think that the Honourable Member wanted to give compulsory training to the members of the Indian Civil Service who had passed Tamil, Telugu or Malayalam—in all the languages of the Presidency. I am certain that even if he did want to do that, their colloquial knowledge of the languages of the country would not be equal to understanding the non-official members. Therefore I would ask my friend, now that he has given expression to his views, not to press this resolution before the Council, which is not of immediate practical necessity. I will be at one with him and most of the non-official members will be at one with him in securing an alteration of the rules when the time comes for such an alteration."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur A. SUBBARAYALU REDDIYAR:—"Your Excellency, as the Council is at present constituted, or has been constituted for years together, there is no need I see, for the requisition of interpreters or translators."

The Hon'ble Mr. C. P. RAMASWAMI AYYAR:—"Your Excellency, I am one of those who believe that under the rules there is no warrant for stating that any Honourable Member is not at liberty to speak in any language he desires to employ. But at the same time I would appeal to the Honourable Member who moved this resolution to withdraw it. My reasons are the following: I hold strongly the view that the proceedings of this Council have two purposes, 1030 RESOLUTIONS RE LEGISLATION TO ORGANIZE ADMINISTRATIVE VILLAGE PANCHAYATS; TRAVELLING ALLOWANCE TO VILLAGE OFFICERS AND THE SALEM-SURAMANGALAM RAILWAY LINE.

(Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar; Mr. M. Ramachandra Rao; [3RD APRIL 1919.

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR (interrupting):—"The whole thing will be published and you had better wait."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO:—"I hope the Board will come into line with Your Excellency's Government."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. KRISHNA RAO:—"Your Excellency—"

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"The Honourable Member has heard what the Hon'ble Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar said, namely, that the Government would accept the resolution. In these circumstances there is hardly any advantage in debating the resolution further unless there is some special point."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. KRISHNA RAO:—"That is what I wish to do. Your Excellency is aware that there has been considerable divergence of opinion as to the feasibility or desirability of having different functional panchayats in villages or having single panchayats invested with various functions. We are all glad that the Government have now come to the conclusion that instead of placing these panchayats on a voluntary basis, they should be invested with legislative powers. We cannot ignore the fact, in the light of the remarks made by the Hon'ble Mr. Ramachandra Rao, that we have forest panchayats and judicial panchayats on the one hand and various informal panchayats which are now tried to be enlarged into panchayats with legislative powers. It is true that it will serve a useful purpose to appoint a special officer. But may I not point out that it would be far more desirable if in giving instructions to the special officer in framing this Bill some of the cardinal principles are settled definitely instead of their being discussed later on? The circumstances of each village are different. It is not possible for several villages to have different panchayats for different purposes. There is a considerable volume of opinion on the other side. Before the special officer is given general directions to frame the Bill and before the Bill is published, may I not suggest the desirability of having informal discussion and of settling the cardinal principles to be adopted in framing the Bill? It will be to the interest of the Government that they should have an idea as to the sort of objections likely to be raised against the Bill. We have got the experience of other provinces which have self-government Bills on the anvil, by which we might profit. I suggest that an informal conference should be called of people interested in the subject to consider the main lines on which the legislation should proceed."

The Hon'ble Mr. P. SIVA RAO:—"I thank the Government for having kindly accepted this resolution. There are difficult matters to be settled. When the Bill is framed it may be referred to a conference of leading people just as the Local Board Bill and the District Municipalities Bill were referred to a committee. There are irrigation panchayats, forest panchayats and judicial panchayats. It is very necessary to consider whether they might not be amalgamated. That seems to be the trend of opinion of the Government of India."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"I may give a word of caution. Among the objects which I read out, I referred to irrigation and kudimaramat. The Bill will be a quite elastic thing which will lend itself to the conditions of different villages. It will be open under the Bill to have one panchayat for a number of things and also to have particular panchayats for particular things. In regard to judicial panchayats, we are already dealing with the bill on the subject. I do not think it would be right to interfere with it. It is unlikely that the Government would allow us to go back on what has been settled about judicial panchayats. Nor will they interfere with the panchayats under the Local Boards Act. The Bill will be elastic and under the rules we can have panchayats for any purpose. Until you have something definite a general discussion will not be very fruitful. This officer whom we have put is one of our good men. When he drafts the Bill, this discussion will be before him, and he will also know what has been done in other provinces. When the Bill is framed, it will be placed before a very strong committee and opportunity will be given to the non-official Members and others to have their say. So that there need be no apprehension that the Government will produce something cut and dried without careful and adequate consideration."

The resolution was put to the Council and agreed to.

RESOLUTION RE TRAVELLING ALLOWANCE TO VILLAGE OFFICERS.

The next resolution which stood in the name of the Hon'ble Mr. P. Siva Rao was as follows:—

"IX. This Council recommends to His Excellency the Governor in Council that travelling allowance may be paid to village officers when they are required to leave their villages on public duty."

The Hon'ble Mr. P. SIVA RAO:—"I do not propose to move it."

The resolution was not moved.

RESOLUTION RE THE SALEM-SURAMANGALAM RAILWAY LINE.

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR:—"Your Excellency, this is a resolution which I wish to place before the Council for its acceptance. I find one of the later resolutions dealing with the larger question of which this may become a part. If I were not to move it now but treated it as a part of the larger resolution, I may not be able to deal with the question properly and therefore I crave leave of Honourable Members for a few minutes to explain why I have singled out this line for consideration. The resolution runs thus:—

RESOLUTION RE THE SALEM-SURAMANGALAM RAILWAY LINE. 1031

3RD APRIL 1919.] (Mr. Narasimha Ayyar; Mr. Davidson.)

'X. This Council recommends to His Excellency in Council that steps should be taken—

(a) to run more trains between Salem and Suramangalam, and

(b) to extend the Salem-Suramangalam line towards Atur, at least as far as Valappadi, at a very early date.'

"I may inform Honourable Members that at present there is a small district board line of four miles running from the Suramangalam station to Salem town—one is called the Salem junction and the other is called Salem town. This line is now worked—it is rather nominally worked I should say. We have an engine which is occasionally spared for a few hours or minutes and that engine runs up at night and returns at night and again early in the morning it runs up and returns to the Salem junction. The disadvantage of running only these two trains between these two stations is very great. There is no connexion for those who wish to proceed to the main line towards Madras. Throughout the live-long day you may wait at the station without seeing any train. There is therefore considerable inconvenience to the travelling public, and if without great difficulty one more engine can be found, it will be possible to run more trains for people travelling between Salem and Suramangalam. That is the standpoint of the public.

"There is the standpoint of the District Board. The District Board which has been responsible for the starting of this line has not had the profit which it expected from this line. One of the reasons why it does not share the large profits which railways obtained during the course of the war in other places is it is not only a small line but it is not worked sufficiently. It is not the passenger traffic that pays, but it is the goods traffic that pays. Yet at the same time the passenger traffic may be attended to sufficiently to yield the best results from the point of view of income.

"Another reason why the line does not pay is that like Balaam's ass it leaves you suddenly in the middle in Salem station. The road from Salem to Atur is a well-frequented road and a long series of carts ply every night; hundreds of them pass every night and goods are carried over the road. The District Board hopes that by taking up that line large profits would accrue to it and it would at the same time be conferring a benefit on the public. In these circumstances it is regrettable that the District Board hardly gets a profit on this line. The proposal therefore in clause (b) is that the Salem-Suramangalam line should be extended at least to Valappadi which is exactly half way to Atur. Mention is made of Valappadi for this reason; the Salem District Board has put by some money like a prudent board and it has got still a few lakhs at its disposal and if it is helped to raise some more money by way of debentures or in some other way recommended by the Government, it may be able to push up the line some way up and take it to Valappadi. Eventually it has to be taken to Atur. I do not know how far it would be possible to take it to Atur. But it is the feeling of the people of Salem district that more trains should be running between Salem and Suramangalam and that that line should be extended to Atur at a very early date. I do not propose to go into the larger question which the Hon'ble Mr. Krishna Rao and the Hon'ble Mr. Rama Ayyangar will place before the Council later on. This is a very modest recommendation and I hope the Government will take up the suggestion and see what they can do in this matter."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. Krishna Rao seconded the resolution.

The Hon'ble Mr. L. DAVIDSON:—"Your Excellency, there is a very simple answer to clause (a) of this resolution. I made a reference to the Agent of the South Indian Railway inviting his remarks on it, and his reply shows that so far back as the 8th March he had written to the President of the District Board of Salem proposing an alternative revised train service between Salem and Suramangalam. At present, so far as I can make out from the time table, there is only one train in one direction and two trains in the other. The revised train service which the Agent has put before the President of the District Board proposes four trains each way and the timings are such that they will maintain connexion with all the arriving and departing up and down trains on the main line. I suppose the Honourable Member does not wish me to give him details. That letter was sent to the President of the District Board with the inquiry whether the revised timings met with the approval of the board and up to the 25th March no reply had been received from the district board. I have no doubt it will meet all local wishes. So much for clause (a).

"In regard to clause (b), the Agent again says it is up to the District Board to take the next step. In this case it is not the matter of three weeks' delay; it is a case of something like three years' delay but for very excellent reasons. Perhaps the best way of settling the matter before the Council is to give a little account of the past history of this extension to Atur. So far as I could follow the Honourable Mover, he hardly seemed to grasp himself, or at least to place before the Council, the lengthy earlier history of the project. This is not a new project. It has advanced a considerable stage and like many other projects it has been hung up by war conditions. I need not go back to the very beginning; I do not know how many years back it goes. I propose to read with your permission a brief summary of the later history. The Railway Board were addressed on the 15th September 1915 for sanction to the project, and on

112. Government Presses.—The decrease in the revised estimate for 1918-1919, as compared with the budget estimate for the current year, is due to—

(1) the gradual abolition of Collectorate presses and the transfer of the work done by them to the Government Press, Madras;

(2) the lapse of the provision of 19 under "Secretariat Presses" on account of the transfer of work referred to above, owing to economies in establishments in other directions; and

(3) a saving of 44 under piece-work—day-extra establishment.

The budget estimate for 1919-1920 provides for an increase under piece-work—day-extra establishment.

The receipts recorded under the first minor head Percentage on capital cost of furniture supplied to high officers represent a 5 per cent charge recovered as rent from the Resident and the Assistant Resident in Travancore and Cochin on the capital value of furniture supplied at the cost of Government. The other minor heads are for the most part self-explanatory.

Expenditure.

114. The minor heads under this major head are for the most part self-explanatory.

115. Donations for charitable purposes.—The actuals for 1916-1917 include a special grant of .22 paid to the Lawrence Memorial School, Ootacamund, out of a non-recurring assignment from Imperial revenues sanctioned by the Government of India for the purpose. Similar non-recurring assignments of .25 for each of the years 1917-1918 and 1918-1919 and a recurring assignment of .50 from 1919-1920 onwards have also been sanctioned towards the opening of a training college for the members of the domiciled community and the corresponding charges appear under this head.

116. Special Commissions of Inquiry.—The figures entered in the accounts for 1916-1917 and 1917-1918 under this minor head relate to the commission appointed to inquire into the conditions under which Indian labour is employed in Ceylon and the Federated Malay States.

117. Contributions.—The chief items of expenditure under this minor head are (i) contributions to municipalities which are given for general purposes, as for instance, to cover deficits and (ii) contributions to local funds. The grants in aid of municipalities for general purposes amounted to .13 in 1915-1916, .19 in 1916-1917 and .30 in 1917-1918. In the budget estimate for 1918-1919 a provision of .50 was entered for this purpose on the recommendation of the Finance Committee and it is expected that it will be utilized. A similar provision of .50 has been entered in the budget estimate for 1919-1920.

Under contributions to local funds the chief items are the usual annual grants to the District Boards of the Nilgiris and Koraput. The grant to the Nilgiri District Board, which now stands at 1.08, is made in consideration of the small income which it derives from general sources. The grant to Koraput, which now stands at .24, is given because the revenue of that district board falls short of the expenditure on the services to be maintained by it. A contribution of .49 is also paid to other district boards as compensation for the resumption by Government of certain fishery rentals formerly credited to those local bodies, the chief item being .36 per annum given to the district boards of South Arcot, Trichinopoly and Tanjore. The high actuals under contributions to local funds in 1917-1918 are due to the non-recurring grant of 1.25 to district boards for aid to informal panchayats, while the revised estimate for 1918-1919 includes a temporary grant of .23 to the district boards of Trichinopoly and South Arcot to meet the contribution payable by them towards the construction of a roadway across the Vellar.

118. Miscellaneous and unforeseen charges.—Collectors of districts have been empowered, with reference to the recommendations of the Decentralization Commission, to make discretionary grants for general purposes of a public nature calculated to be of benefit to their districts up to Rs. 200 per annum for recurring charges and Rs. 1,000 for non-recurring charges in each individual case. The total grant to be distributed among the Collectors of the several districts has been fixed at 1.25 per annum. The expenditure so incurred is budgeted for under this head in the first instance and the actual charges incurred are subsequently adjusted to the appropriate heads of account. A provision of 1.25 has accordingly been entered for this purpose in the budget estimate for 1919-1920. The budget estimate for 1918-1919 included a reserve provision of 9.01 for unforeseen expenditure. The amount has been reappropriated to other heads. The budget estimate for 1919-1920 includes a similar provision of 9.82.

120. For purposes of classification in the accounts, irrigation works are divided into (a) Productive works, (b) Protective works, and (c) Minor works and navigation.

121. Productive works are works of a remunerative character undertaken for the improvement of the country, the capital expenditure on which is usually met from borrowed money; the interest and the cost of maintenance and working are provided out of current revenues, the income being credited thereto. Capital outlay on such irrigation works is recorded under the major head 49. IRRIGATION WORKS—a wholly Imperial head. The revenue is credited under XXIX. IRRIGATION—MAJOR WORKS and the interest and working expenses are debited to the head 42. IRRIGATION—MAJOR WORKS.

122. Protective works are those which are calculated to diminish future expenditure on famine relief. The cost of the construction of protective irrigation projects is paid out of the annual grants under famine relief and insurance, and is chargeable to the major head 35. CONSTRUCTION OF PROTECTIVE IRRIGATION WORKS—a wholly Imperial head. The receipts and the interest and working expenses are, as in the case of productive works, classed under the heads XXIX. & 42. IRRIGATION—MAJOR WORKS.

123. The head Minor Works and Navigation includes all classes of irrigation works other than the above, and is subdivided into

- (a) works for which capital and revenue accounts are kept;
- (b) works for which neither capital nor revenue accounts are kept; and
- (c) agricultural works, consisting of the conservancy of rivers or training of river-beds, and the maintenance of their embankments.

Revenue.

124. The receipts from Major Irrigation works are classified into Direct Receipts and Indirect Receipts.

125. The Direct Receipts are realized in the Public Works Department and are derived from the following sources: (a) sale-proceeds of water supplied for purposes other than irrigation or town consumption, (b) sale-proceeds of water supplied to towns, (c) sale-proceeds of produce from canal plantations, (d) sale-proceeds of wood and grass from canal banks other than regular plantations, (e) charges for water supplied to mills, etc., (f) receipts from navigation and (g) rent of buildings, etc.

The revised estimate for 1918-1919 is based on the latest actuals available, and the budget estimate for 1919-1920 mainly follows the revised estimate.

126. The Indirect Receipts consist of land revenue due to, or dependent on, major productive and protective works for which capital and revenue accounts are maintained.

The increase in the revised estimate for 1918-1919, as compared with the budget for that year, occurs mainly under the Godāvari, the Kistna and the Cauvery delta systems.

Expenditure.

127. Working expenses.—The working expenses of each system are classified under the four sub-heads—(a) Extensions and improvements, (b) Maintenance and repairs, (c) Establishment charges, and (d) Tools and plant.

The expenditure under 'Extensions and improvements' relates mainly to minor works costing less than Rs. 1,000, such as the construction of dams across channels and excavation of small distributaries, while the sub-head 'Maintenance and repairs' relates to head works, main canals and branches, distributaries and drainage, and includes works of the nature of repairing and strengthening canal banks, clearing silt in canals, repairing locks, lock weirs and masonry works.

128. The fall in the expenditure for 1916-1917 occurs chiefly under the Godāvari and Kistna delta systems. The decrease under the Godāvari delta system was due to abnormal rains in the early part of the year, and the lapse under the Kistna delta system was caused mainly by savings effected on canal maintenance and repair estimates.

The decrease in the revised estimate for 1918-1919 as compared with the budget for that year is due chiefly to a change introduced by the Government of India with effect from the current year in the system of distributing the charges for Public Works establishment among the several Public Works major heads.

The budget for 1919-1920 is based on ascertained demands.

129. Interest on Debt.—Interest on the irrigation debt is calculated at the average rate of interest paid during the year on the total public debt of the Government of India, and the capital outlay upon which interest is calculated in 1919-1920 is that incurred up to the end of 1918-1919 plus half the estimated outlay in 1919-1920.

GOVERNMENT OF MADRAS FOR 1919-1920

The rate of interest which is the average rate paid on the total public debt of the Government of India has risen from 3.29 to 3.47 per cent.

131. Public Works officers.—The revenue comprises receipts from sale of water, canal produce, navigation, and rent of buildings, and is derived mainly from the Madras water-supply and irrigation system and the Buckingham Canal, and from ordinary and agricultural works.

The revised estimate is based on the latest actuals available and the budget for 1919-1920 follows the revised estimate in the main.

Expenditure.

132. Civil officers.—The expenditure represents the cost of minor irrigation works, chiefly repairs to tanks, costing not more than Rs. 2,500 each, which are executed under the supervision of the Revenue Department. Voluntary contributions towards repairs received from private persons and bodies are taken in abatement of the charges. The outlay depends to a large extent on the character of the season, since it is impossible to carry out repairs when heavy rains cause the tanks to be full for longer periods than usual.

The revised estimate for 1918-1919 is based on the latest actuals. The budget for 1919-1920 is 1.41 more than the current year's revised estimate and provides fully for the demands made by Collectors.

122. Protective works are those which are calculated to diminish future expenditure on famine relief. The cost of the construction of protective irrigation projects is paid out of the annual grants under famine relief and insurance, and is chargeable to the major head 35. CONSTRUCTION OF PROTECTIVE IRRIGATION WORKS—a wholly Imperial head. The receipts and the interest and working expenses are, as in the case of productive works, classed under the heads XXIX. & 42. BUDGET OF THE

133. Public Works officers.—Expenditure on minor irrigation works other than those mentioned under Civil officers is shown under this head under the following subdivisions:—

(a) 'Minor Works, Revenue Department' relating to works of the Revenue Department, the execution of which requires technical skill and which are entrusted to the Public Works Department;

(b) 'Works in charge of Civil officers acting as Public Works disbursers' under which is recorded the expenditure on works costing more than Rs. 2,500 each executed by the officers of the Revenue Department; and

(c) 'Works in charge of the Public Works Department.'

134. The decrease in the actuals for 1916-1917 is due to the fact that progress on a number of works was retarded by untimely rains and the presence of water in tanks and channels.

The increase in the revised estimate for 1918-1919 and in the budget for 1919-1920, as compared with the budget for the current year, is due mainly to a change introduced by the Government of India with effect from the current year in the system of distributing the charges for Public Works establishment among the Public Works major heads of account. The revised estimate for 1918-1919 covers also additional expenditure on account of repairs to certain flood banks.

For Tank Restoration scheme works the budget for 1919-1920 provides a sum of 7.10 (including establishment charges) against a grant of 5.50 in the current year's budget. The only important work in the course of construction is the Panjapatti reservoir project for which a grant of .18 has been provided for next year. The probable outlay on this work up to the end of 1918-1919 is 3.18 against an estimate of 3.36.

GOVERNMENT OF MADRAS FOR 1919-1920

Revenue.

135. Civil officers.—The receipts represent the sale-proceeds of grass and fruit in Government cemeteries, and tolls levied under the Indian Tolls Act, 1851, in the Agency tracts of Ganjam.

The actuals from 1915-1916 to 1917-1918 and the revised estimate for 1918-1919 include special credits mostly on account of refunds by local bodies of unspent balances of Provincial contributions. The budget for 1919-1920 follows the revised estimate for the current year after excluding the special items provided for in the latter.

136. Public Works officers.—The receipts are derived mainly from rents of buildings in charge of the Public Works Department, sale-proceeds of buildings and materials, tolls on roads, the net profits in the Public Works Workshops, and fines levied from contractors for failure in the execution of works.

The revised estimate for 1918-1919 is based on the latest actuals available, and the budget for 1919-1920 mainly follows the revised estimate.

Expenditure.

137. Civil officers.—The expenditure under this minor head relates chiefly to (i) grants to local bodies in aid of roads and bridges and other miscellaneous public improvements, and (ii) public works in the Agency tracts of Ganjam, Vizagapatam and Gōdāvari costing not more than Rs. 2,500 each, and executed by officers other than those of the Public Works Department.

138. The following are the principal items of expenditure during the three years 1917-1918 to 1919-1920:—

Item (a).—In order to enable district boards to frame their budgets on a permanent basis, it was decided to stereotype this grant on the basis of the grants made to them in 1917-1918 and to give additional subsidies, as funds permitted, to the poorer district boards. The increase in the revised estimate for 1918-1919 and the budget for 1919-1920 is due to the raising of the grant to the Malabar District Board by .15. The details are furnished in Annexure I.

Item (b).—A special grant of 5.00 for the improvement of communications was distributed, both in 1917-1918 and 1918-1919, among the district boards of Anantapur (1.00), Bellary (.80), Kurnool (.80), Cuddapah (.80), Chittoor (.40), Salem (.40), Nellore (.40) and Chingleput (.40).

In accordance with the recommendation of the Finance Committee of January 1919, a similar grant of 5.00 has been entered in the budget for 1919-1920 for distribution among the district boards of Anantapur (.80), Bellary (.90), Chingleput (.40), Chittoor (.40), Cuddapah (.80), Kurnool (.90), Nellore (.40) and Salem (.40).

on railway traffic and also to the construction of bridges and causeways on some of the more important roads, a special grant of 20.00 for this purpose, as detailed in Annexure II, has been made in the revised estimate for 1918-1919 while the budget for 1919-1920 contains a provision of 6.00.

139. Item (d).—The budget estimate for 1919-1920 contains the following allotments which have been entered in accordance with the recommendation of the Finance Committee of January 1919:—

(i) Grants to local bodies for bridges and causeways	3.00
(ii) Grants to the district boards of Vizagapatam (.47), Koraput (.79) and Gōdāvari (.72)	1.98

The Finance Committee also recommended an allotment of .40 for outlay on works in the Agency tracts. Of this amount a sum of .10 for works in the Ganjam and Vizagapatam Agencies costing not more than Rs. 2,500 appears under this minor head, while the balance, viz., .30 for works in the Vizagapatam Agency costing more than Rs. 2,500 appears under the next minor head "Works in charge of Civil officers acting as Public Works disbursers."

140. Public Works officers.—This minor head comprises two sub-heads—

- (i) Works in charge of Civil officers acting as Public Works disbursers ; and
(ii) Works in charge of the Public Works Department.

141. Works in charge of Civil officers acting as Public Works disbursers.—Under this sub-head is recorded the expenditure on works costing more than Rs. 2,500 each carried out by officers of the Civil department acting in the capacity of Public Works disbursers. Works costing not more than Rs. 2,500 each which are executed by officers of the Civil department are debited as contingent charges of the department concerned. In the case, however, of the Salt, Excise and Forest departments all works executed by Civil officers, irrespective of their cost, are adjusted not to the Public Works Department head but to the contingencies of the department concerned.

The main items under this sub-head relate to works in the Jail department executed by Superintendents of Jails as Public Works disbursers and to works in the Agency tracts.

142. Works in charge of the Public Works Department.—The decrease in the revised estimate for 1918-1919, as compared with the budget for that year, occurs mainly under 'Original works—Civil Buildings', 'Tools and Plant' and 'Stock and Suspense'. The budget for 1919-1920 provides for an increased expenditure of 16.52 over the current year's revised estimate due chiefly to the inclusion of provision for a larger number of urgent works. There is also an increase under 'Establishment' owing mainly to anticipated shorter recoveries on this account from other Public Works major heads.

The scheme for redistribution of district, subdivisional and other charges which was drawn up by Sir William Meyer involved a total outlay of about 42.00 on new buildings, towards which the Government of India sanctioned assignments aggregating 25.00 from Imperial revenues. The total expenditure up to the end of 1917-1918 amounted to 22.91, and the probable outlay in 1918-1919 is about .21 and in 1919-1920 about .10.

143. The following is a list of important works (a) which were completed in 1917-1918, (b) which are in progress in the current year, and (c) which are to be commenced in 1919-1920:—

BUDGET OF THE

Item 27 (b).—An assignment of 6.05 in favour of Provincial revenues has been entered in the budget estimate for 1919-1920 to compensate them for their share of the loss of income-tax revenue as the result of the raising of the assessable limit of income from Rs. 1,000 to Rs. 2,000 per annum and the imposition of an excess Profits duty—vide paragraph 21 ante.

Item (31).—The Government of India imposed additional taxation with effect from 1916-1917 solely to meet Imperial needs, and the heads under which the proceeds of the additional taxation accrue are III. SALT, VII. CUSTOMS, V. EXCISE and VIII. INCOME-TAX. The heads SALT and CUSTOMS are purely Imperial, while the heads EXCISE and INCOME-TAX are shared equally between Imperial and Provincial. To enable Imperial resources to receive the full increment due to the new taxation, it is necessary to pay from Provincial revenues a recurring compensatory assignment equivalent to the estimated amount accruing as the Provincial share of the new taxation. The Provincial share of the additional taxation was provisionally fixed at 43; being made up of 13 under V. EXCISE and 6.25 under VIII. INCOME-TAX. The original forecast of 6.25 under Income-tax will be exceeded by 11.00 in 1918-1919 and by 12.00 in 1919-1920.

The remaining items are self-explanatory.

Provincial Advance and Loan Account.

146. Four statements are annexed showing the transactions under Provincial loans and advances. As explained in paragraphs 33 and 34 ante, the interest on loans advanced by this Government is credited to XII. INTEREST, while the payment by this Government to the Government of India of the interest on the mean between the outstanding balance at the beginning and at the end of each year is debited to 13. INTEREST. The rate of interest charged to the local Government was raised from $3\frac{1}{2}$ to $4\frac{1}{2}$ per cent per annum in respect of loans sanctioned from the 1st October 1916, and to $5\frac{1}{2}$ per cent per annum in respect of loans sanctioned from the 1st April 1917. Statement I annexed exhibits the transactions relating to loans sanctioned prior to the 1st October 1916, statement II those relating to loans sanctioned subsequent to that date but before 1st April 1917, statement III those relating to loans sanctioned on or after the 1st April 1917 and statement IV exhibits in one view, the total transactions under each class of loans.

147. Class I. Loans include advances to cultivators made under the Land Improvement Loans Act and the Agriculturists' Loans Act and advances to co-operative credit societies. The advances to cultivators in the current year are estimated at 8.69 as against the budget estimate of 8.50. The budget estimate for 1919-1920 has been fixed at 8.50.

148. Class IV. Loans. These represent loans to district boards and municipalities in connexion with drainage and water-supply schemes, the construction of markets and other public works, and plague preventive measures.

The allotment for 1919-1920 is intended for works which are actually in progress, or which will be taken up for execution at an early date, and represents the minimum necessary to meet actual requirements.

149. Class V. Loans. A provision of Rs. 1,100 in the current year and Rs. 2,500 in the coming year has been entered under "Miscellaneous advances" for the purpose of granting advances to divers for the purchase of canoes and to Chenchus for the purchase of bulls and agricultural implements.

1032 RESOLUTIONS RE THE SALEM-SUBAMANGALAM RAILWAY LINE AND CONSTITUTION OF TEXT-BOOK COMMITTEES.

(Mr. Davidson; Mr. Narasimha Ayyar; Mr. Krishna Rao.) [3RD APRIL 1919.
the 30th November following they were furnished at their request with details of the method by which the District Board proposed to finance the line. In the following April (1916) the Agent furnished copies of the revised detailed project report and estimate and requested that the necessary sanction might be obtained and communicated to him. After scrutiny by the Government Inspector and in the Public Works Secretariat the President of the District Board was requested to report whether his board accepted the revised estimate. That was nearly three years ago. At the same time the Public Works Department (Irrigation Branch), consulted the Superintending Engineer, IV Circle, as to the adequacy of the provision made for water-ways and certain other technical matters. The Superintending Engineer's report has been received but is lying over until we get the final expression of the District Board's views on the revised project. It would seem therefore that the District Board is to blame for the delay in the matter. I find that the question was first placed before the District Board on the 29th September 1916. As the result of that they sent an intermediate communication. I need not trouble the Council with details; suffice it to say that it did not deal with all the points in issue. In the following February (1917) the President of the District Board recommended the postponement of the detailed scrutiny of the water-ways on the main ground that railway construction was unlikely to be taken up until the present prices had greatly decreased. In October 1918 he was reminded by Government and he replied: 'There is not any likelihood of the railway being constructed in the near future so far as I can see. Both funds and materials will be impossible to obtain. As all our staff are fully engaged at present with special work due to the war or the state of the season, it is, I think, in the general interest to keep the matter still pending. We have very heavy allotments to spend on our roads and I do not want to divert the Engineer's attention from them if possible.'

"That was in last October, and that is how the matter stands at present. Independently of the present resolution we should have asked the President of the District Board this month whether matters were any further advanced. I now propose to communicate to him a copy of the proceedings in this debate and ask him if things have advanced to a further stage and if not whether he can furnish us with a final reply without any greater delay. I may say however that even when we get his reply we shall have to pass that on together with the Superintending Engineer's report about water-ways to the Agent and then we shall have to get the final sanction of the Railway Board. If the Railway Board give the final sanction, it is quite possible that owing to the unsettled state of the money market it may be necessary to alter the terms of the original agreement. The original understanding was to raise a debenture loan as in the case of the Podanur-Pollachi line. In 1915 it was thought that such a loan might be advanced at 4½ per cent. I do not think such a thing is possible now."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR:—"That is a satisfactory statement. I withdraw the resolution."

With the permission of His Excellency the President the resolution was withdrawn.

RESOLUTION RE CONSTITUTION OF TEXT-BOOK COMMITTEES.

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. KRISHNA RAO:—"I have the honour to move—

'XI. This Council recommends that His Excellency the Governor in Council be pleased to take early steps

- (a) to modify the constitution of the present text-book committee;
- (b) to appoint one general text-book committee and certain special text-book committees dealing with particular subjects;
- (c) to provide for the adequate representation on those committees of persons having special knowledge of those subjects; and
- (d) generally to make better arrangements for the selection of the text-books to be used in recognized schools.'

"This resolution deals with the constitution and functions of the text-book committee. It is at the outset necessary for me to give the Council an idea of the constitution of the text-book committee and the functions which the committee are now expected to discharge. I shall place certain facts before the Council tending to show that, notwithstanding the attempts made to strengthen the text-book committee within recent years, it is absolutely desirable that further inquiry should be made and that alterations effected. It is as the result of certain complaints in getting books recognized that I have thought it fit to place this resolution before the Council with the full hope that modifications will be effected in the text-book committee in the best manner possible. I have suggested certain lines of modification—though I do not wish to commit the Council to the particular methods I have indicated. I have suggested that it is necessary for the text-book committee being split up into one general text-book committee and other various committees with co-ordinate and independent powers as in the case of the boards of studies in the University. I have also suggested that it is necessary to increase the strength of these various committees so as to provide for the adequate representation of persons having knowledge of the various subjects as is contained in clauses (b) and (c). Clauses (a) and (d) are general. I suggest that independently of these specific proposals, better arrangements should be made for the selection of text-books and that the constitution of the committee should be improved.

RESOLUTION RE CONSTITUTION OF TEXT-BOOK COMMITTEES. 1033

3RD APRIL 1919.]

(Mr. Krishna Rao.)

"According to the rules now in force we find that the text-book committee consists of 40 members exclusive of the President, the Director of Public Instruction being the ex-officio President. One of the members of the committee is to be the Secretary; and the committee is authorized to appoint sub-committees to deal with particular questions. This text-book committee consisting of the President and 40 members is required to meet twice a year, and the days also have been specified; they should ordinarily meet on the second Wednesday in February and September. It is stated that these sub-committees may appoint a Chairman who in the case of the vernacular languages shall ordinarily be an Inspector of the department. It is provided that the Secretary may send the books to be prescribed to any two members of the committee of his choice, subject of course to the general control of the Director of Public Instruction. What are the functions of the text-book committee? The text-book committee was appointed to take into consideration such books as may be submitted to it by the Director of Public Instruction and advise him in regard to their suitability as text-books for the several classes and forms and again to advise the Education Department as to the steps to be taken for the preparation and publication of new text-books where necessary and to help in forming an educational library and museum.

"These are the functions of the text-book committee; and we may draw analogies from the boards of studies appointed under the University Regulations. I am aware that the scope and functions of the boards of studies are essentially different; but there is an analogy which can be drawn in considering the best principle which can be adopted for that purpose. The first principle which I wish to place before this Council is whether it is desirable to have a general text-book committee consisting of persons having knowledge of the various subjects though no doubt they may be given the discretion and the power to appoint sub-committees to deal with special subjects. What is the result of the present system? It is not ordinarily possible for the text-book committees representing the various subjects to meet as often as they might if they consisted only of persons consisting of the representatives of the special subjects. It is also a point for consideration whether it is a correct principle to submit the decision of these separate sub-committees dealing for instance with one of the Dravidian languages to the general text-book committee consisting of persons not well versed in that particular subject but acquainted with or having special knowledge of other subjects. What salutary effect or check can you expect from persons who have no special knowledge of this particular branch over the selection of text-books made by the members of the sub-committee? It leads to delay and it leads also to considerable inconvenience. As the matter stands at present, the books are published once a year and two meetings are held, one in September and the other in February; and we find from the report of the Director of Public Instruction for the year 1917-18 that all those books selected for that year were published in the Gazette only in August last. I understand that there is no procedure by which these books selected by the various sub-committees are approved by the general text-book committee immediately, and that there is no procedure by which these books are immediately published in the Gazette. The result is that the books selected—according to the information furnished in the report for 1917-18—in September 1917 by the general text-book committee had to be published only in August 1918 as also the books selected in February 1918. The proceedings of the text-book committees at both of these meetings were given effect to only some time later. It is possible to effect some improvement in this direction if, as I venture to suggest, this committee is split up into different sub-committees formed for the purpose. I need hardly draw the attention of the Council to the rules and regulations framed by the University, 139 to 143, regarding the boards of studies wherein we find we have separate boards of study—one for English and one for the Dravidian languages separately, with separate boards having co-ordinate powers for Tamil, Telugu, Malayalam and Kanarese.

"That would certainly facilitate the selection of books and conduce to the speedy disposal of the various questions placed before the several sub-committees. That would also facilitate the distribution of work among the various members of the text-book committees.

"Another point which I wish to place before the Council is this. It is often found that some of the publishers of these books are themselves members of the text-book committees but it has not been possible to avoid it. I wish to know from the Hon'ble the Director of Public Instruction if rules have been framed to avoid such of these members as have published books from offering opinions regarding the suitability of their own books. I find that at the meeting held in May 1915 Mr. Srinivasa Sastri asked this question:—

(a) Is it a fact that some members of the text-book committee are themselves the authors of text-books or class-books?

(b) If so, are there rules restraining them from passing opinions on their own books or on books likely to compete with theirs?

The answer was—

(a) Yes.

(b) The Government have no information on the point. The power to frame rules for the guidance of the committee has been delegated to the Director of Public Instruction. "So far as I have been able to gather I have not been able to find any rules whereby they have been specifically restrained from expressing opinions regarding the books published by them. I do not know that anything has been done, after the Government's attention has been specifically drawn to it. That is one point regarding which something may be done.

VIII. INCOME-TAX (— 6.05).—The reduction represents the Provincial share of the estimated total loss of revenue (12.10 lakhs) under the divided head Income-tax as the result of the raising of the assessable limit of income from Rs. 1,000 to Rs. 2,000 and the imposition of an excess profits duty. To compensate Provincial revenues for this loss, an assignment of 6.05 is being given from Imperial revenues.

Transfers between Imperial and Provincial (— .95).—The decrease is the net result of :—

[3RD APRIL 1919.]

"Another point is this. It is a matter for consideration whether with the increasing number of text-books it is not desirable to increase the strength of these committees. My first suggestion is that there should be different committees with co-ordinate powers. Then I would suggest that the strength of these various committees should be increased. I wish the Hon'ble the Director of Public Instruction would consider whether according to the present scheme it is possible for these four or five members of the various sub-committees to go through the text-books which are sent to them for perusal and then form an opinion as to the suitability of these text-books. I find that according to the rules a month's time is given to each member for the purpose of scrutinizing these books. The Secretary is allowed to send it to any two members of the sub-committee giving them a month's time. But I have heard—I am subject to correction by the Hon'ble the Director of Public Instruction—that there are a number of cases in which no reminders were even sent and that books were with them for several months; there are cases in which they have taken months. That rule about a month has not often been acted up to; and that is a point which requires to be verified and to be scrutinized. After all, I think that according to the present system it is not possible to expect a better state of things unless we effect some improvement in the constitution of the committee. So long as we restrict the number of members to three or four—I do not know if they get any special remuneration, I understand there are some proposals under consideration—is it possible that with a limited small text-book committee you can expect to have satisfactory work in a limited time? I think not. If on the other hand you can get a committee consisting of twice or thrice this number which can deal with the various subjects and you give discretion to the Secretary to send the book to two or three different persons, it is possible to expect a better state of things. Suppose for a particular vernacular language or subject, say history, you have ten or fifteen, if you find one who has published books or is interested in a publisher of books, the Secretary can have the discretion to send it to others who are not so interested. Will not this system facilitate the work that has to be done by the sub-committees at present? Increase the number of members and make the sub-committees really more representative and give discretion to the Secretary to send books to persons who have nothing to do with the books or who are not interested in the publishers. If that modification is effected, I believe it will produce more satisfactory results.

"Again there is one other aspect which might be considered. Even according to the rules framed by the Director of Public Instruction these sub-committees are authorized to consult other experts outside the committee. I would suggest the desirability of there being definite provision for such consultation. I only know that the rules provide for such consultation. I should like to know on how many occasions the sub-committees have consulted these outside persons. I want to get that information if it is available. That is another direction in which we can get more satisfactory opinion in the selection of text-books.

"Another point might be raised, as to whether it is necessary to increase the number of members and whether with the present staff you cannot cope with the work. I have no doubt that past experience shows that the results have not been satisfactory. There has been a small increase in the number of members in the text-book committee. It may be pointed out that we have increased the number; it was 24 in 1909; in 1912 it was raised to 30; and again it was raised to 48? That is not the standpoint. They are required to select text-books regarding various languages; they have different subjects and different vernaculars to deal with. We must give them sufficient time to study these books and give a reasonable opinion. You must give them sufficient scope for the distribution of the books, among people competent to give an opinion.

"These principles ought to be kept in view. I have not the slightest doubt that the number is insignificantly small and cannot cope with the work. I therefore suggest the desirability of accepting this resolution with the full hope that there will be no difficulty in reorganizing the text-book committees in a manner which will produce more satisfactory results. As I said in the beginning, clause (a) of this resolution is general, 'to modify the constitution of the present text-book committee.' If the Hon'ble the Director of Public Instruction is going to say that the text-book committee is all that can be desired and is working satisfactorily, I can state nothing. But if he really thinks that there is scope for further inquiry and modification, many more steps have to be taken before we can arrive at a proper selection of text-books with the least possible delay. I think I have made out a case for this general clause (a) being accepted.

"Clause (b) definitely suggests that there should be one general text-book committee and certain special text-book committees dealing with particular subjects. My idea is this. I am aware that sub-committees are appointed, but it is desirable that these separate committees should have general power to deal with separate subjects without placing them again before the general committee which can only lead to delay. If there is anything wrong or objectionable, the Hon'ble the Director of Public Instruction can always exercise his discretion. Every thing has to work under his guidance. But still what is the necessity for this selection by the various text-book committees? That is why I suggest the appointment of separate text-book committees?

"In clause (c) I want 'to provide for the adequate representation on those committees of persons having special knowledge of those subjects.' I have raised that point, because I think opinions, it is necessary to increase the strength. Clause (d) is general.

"If I have satisfied the Council that things are not as satisfactory as they should be, it is necessary to make further arrangements for that purpose. There is only one point which I may impress upon the Council. According to the rules the Chairman in the case of the vernacular languages should be the Inspector of Schools. For Telugu, Mr. Yates was formerly the chairman and Mr. Ross is the chairman now. When we really want a proper selection of books, we are asked to assent to the proposition that they would be proper judges of books. I find it difficult to accept that position. I do not want that there should be a rule excluding any person from being chairman; but I object to the rule which says that ordinarily it should be the Inspector of Schools. Have we arrived at such a state of things that all Inspectors would know the vernacular? If all Inspectors were Indians, there would be justification for that rule. But so long as we have not arrived at that stage, there is no justification for that rule. I would suggest the desirability of appointing as chairmen persons who are in a position to judge of the various subjects. In the case of the vernaculars I refuse to listen to the proposition that one whose mother tongue is not Tamil and who is not very well conversant with that language should be the chairman of the committee for selection of books in that language. Your Excellency is aware that there has been a controversy about classic Tamil and modern Tamil and classic Telugu and modern Telugu. We must have persons who know the language and who can decide on the text-books; and not persons who have only a superficial idea of the language. It is difficult to accept the judgment of such persons. With these remarks I commend the resolution to the Council."

(Mr. Krishna Rao; Mr. Littlehales.)

The Hon'ble the Raja of Pithapuram seconded the resolution.

The Hon'ble Mr. R. LITTLEHAILES:—"Your Excellency, I think I had better state at the outset that the constitution of the text-book committee is dictated by the Government of India and any major modifications therein might run counter to the expressed opinions of that Government. The Honourable Member has asked for committees with independent powers which might submit text-books which are approved by them independently of any expression of opinion on the part of the text-book committee as a whole. I may invite his attention to the fact that quite recently the Government have accepted a proposal of the Director of Public Instruction to this effect, that in the case of books specially prepared for the use of schools in the Presidency the Director of Public Instruction may call for the opinion of the sub-committee and may, if such opinion be favourable, notify the book as approved for use in schools without its being referred to the full text-book committee. I quote from the Government Order of 1918. Should the opinion of the sub-committee be unfavourable, the book shall be referred in the ordinary course to the text-book committee. What the Honourable Member desires is already in force in that respect. The text-book committee is primarily an advisory body with the main function of excluding books which are unfavourable. It does not specify that any particular text-book shall be read in any school. It merely compiles a list of books from which managers of schools may select books in order that they may give instruction from those books in their recognized institutions.

"I do think, however, that the Honourable Member has one cause for complaint, that is in the delay caused in the official publication of these text-books. I shall consider whether it is not possible to have published in the gazette a list of approved text-books twice a year instead of once as is the case at present. I hope that will meet the objection as to the delay that at present exists.

"He desires an increase in the number of members of the committee. In some subjects in which there is a large amount of work, it has to be done in sub-committees. In the sub-committee in English we have eleven members. In other subjects where the amount of work is relatively small, French or German, for example, we have only three members; and many members of the general text-book committee are able to serve, just as they are in the boards of studies in the University, on more than one sub-committee. So that although we limit it to 40 members the effective strength is considerably greater than 40.

"The Honourable Member would like to know what authors expressed their opinion on their own books. I have had no instance brought to my notice. If he would communicate to me any particular case, I would inquire into it. There is no intention whatever on the part of the department to allow a man who publishes a book to express his opinion independently of the opinion that he inherently expresses as publisher of the book.

"With regard to consultation it is clear that we can have no official record of consultations. I may mention a few years ago, when I was myself a member of more than one of these sub-committees, I discussed the books that came to me with more than one person who had a knowledge of the books which I was reviewing, without communicating officially that I had consulted any one in the matter although the opinion that I formed was the conjoint opinion of myself and the individual or individuals whom I consulted. We have no official record of such consultations and I do not see how we can ever maintain an official record of that kind. A great deal of the formation of the opinion on a book must be of an un-official nature. One reads a book; three or four salient features strike one; they may be correct or they may be wrong. One meets with one's academic friends and discusses with them at intervals and finally one comes to the conclusion as to whether the book is fit for recommendation or not. I think I have met most of the points raised."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. KRISHNA RAO:—"Except about the Inspector of Schools being the chairman."

The Hon'ble Mr. R. LITTLEHAILES:—"As I said, in the constitution of these committees we are acting on the orders of the Government of India."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. KRISHNA RAO:—"I wish to know, Your Excellency, whether it is to be supposed that the removal of restrictions in the rules which say that ordinarily the Inspector of the department shall be the chairman, is one which requires the sanction of the Government of India. Except what the Honourable the Director of Public Instruction has told us that the text-book committee is formed under the orders of the Government of India, we have no information as to the specific restrictions placed by them in the matter of the constitution of the committee. If the hands of the local Government are fettered in matters of detail, it will be a matter for consideration whether an attempt should not be made to induce the Government of India to change their instructions. If the Government of India simply give general instructions regarding the constitution, and if Your Excellency's Government have the discretion to modify some of the provisions in the best manner possible, is it unreasonable for me to ask that there should be no hard and fast rule that Inspectors of Schools should be the chairmen of vernacular sub-committees ?

The Hon'ble Mr. R. LITTLEHAILES :—" Although we accept the general rule that the Inspector shall be the chairman ordinarily we do make use of the word 'ordinarily.' The chairman of the sub-committee in English is not the Inspector of Schools."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. KRISHNA RAO :—" The rule is about the vernaculars."

The Hon'ble Mr. R. LITTLEHAILES :—" The chairman of the board in Telugu is at present the Principal of a training college and not an Inspector. We have utilized that discretion. The chairman of the board of studies in Tamil is a retired Inspector of Schools. I quote two instances which are sufficient to show that we exercise the discretion which is vested in us by the word 'ordinarily.'"

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. KRISHNA RAO :—" Your Excellency, it is not my desire to divide the Council in case the Government are willing to do something to improve the constitution of the committee. But may I point out that the Honourable the Director of Public Instruction may have been fuller in regard to one point ? It makes no difference whether it is Mr. Yates or Mr. Ross who was once Inspector of Schools but now the Principal of the training college. Does he or does he not accept the principle that in the case of the vernacular languages it is desirable that one who has an intimate knowledge of the vernaculars should be the chairman of the vernacular text-book committee ? If he accepts the principle, he should effect the change at the earliest opportunity. I may inform Your Excellency that there has been any amount of misapprehension in the case of the vernaculars. Persons refuse to believe that an Inspector of Schools, though he may have learnt a smattering of Telugu, would be a competent judge. Mr. Ross cannot be a competent judge. In the case of Tamil I understand Mr. Pranatharthihara Ayyar is the chairman. Why not the same principle be adopted in the case of Telugu and other vernacular languages ? Nobody can raise any objection to Mr. Pranatharthihara Ayyar being chairman in Tamil. In the case of Telugu why you cannot find a person better fitted than Mr. Ross or Mr. Yates to preside over the Telugu sub-committee I cannot understand. If the Honourable the Director of Public Instruction accepts the importance of having as chairman one who has an intimate knowledge of the language, and if he expresses a desire to move in that very reasonable direction, I for one would not press the resolution."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT :—" I understand that the Government of India have laid down that when a sub-committee has to be appointed to deal with a vernacular, the Inspector of the educational department should either be the president or the secretary. I have no doubt that the Honourable the Director of Public Instruction recognizes the desirability of having men on the committee who have a thorough knowledge of the vernaculars and he will bear that in mind. As he has been able to do in the past, the Honourable Member may rest assured that it will be done in the future."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. KRISHNA RAO :—" I am glad that we have agreed regarding some of the main principles, and that some delay would be avoided. Though technically the number is 40 it is stated that the number has exceeded 40 when they take advice. It is not necessary to proceed further with it."

With the permission of His Excellency the President the resolution was withdrawn.

RESOLUTION RE DEVELOPMENT OF DISTRICT BOARD RAILWAYS.

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. KRISHNA RAO :—" I have the honour to move

'XII. This Council recommends that His Excellency the Governor in Council be pleased to take special steps to promote the rapid development of district board railways in this province.'

"I am glad that in this resolution I do not expect any difference of opinion on behalf of the Government regarding the principles underlying it. There may be differences as to the details, as to the mode of working, as to the pace at which we can proceed and we ought to proceed, but as to the intention of securing a rapid development of district board railways, the Madras Government have always expressed their concurrence with that view. The previous history of this resolution will illustrate these remarks. Before I point out to this Council that it is necessary to take special steps to promote the rapid development of district board railways in this Presidency, it may probably be interesting to notice what advance has been effected in that direction in this province which is likely to lead other provinces in respect of this particular question. I believe we must on this occasion give credit to the Tanjore district for having led us on to this state of things and particularly to Mr. Thomas who, as Collector of Tanjore, sent us on a special memorandum in January 1878 pointing out the desirability of having railways in place of roads. He pointed out on that occasion the advantages that would accrue by having such light railways in various parts of the country. He pointed out that these railways would not only procure benefit but would also pay their own maintenance unlike roads. So far as the Tanjore district is concerned, it is a rich district : and it was not found necessary in that district to levy the full cess of one anna in the rupee. The Collector pointed out that 9 pies having been collected up to that date, the balance of 3 pies might also be collected and might be utilized for the development of railways."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT :—" I am reluctant to interrupt the Honourable Member. I think the practical question which the Council would be anxious to get at is what are the special steps that the Honourable Member wants. That is the only point at issue between the Honourable Member and the Government."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. KRISHNA RAO :—" Is it only the word 'special' ?"

His Excellency the PRESIDENT :—" That is the only difficulty."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. KRISHNA RAO :—" I have not the slightest objection to confine myself to that aspect of it since the principle is accepted. So far as the special steps are concerned, I believe the main question will be one of procuring funds to help the district boards in the matter of the construction of railways. There has been no difference of opinion at all regarding the desirability of pushing through these district board railways wherever possible. The district boards themselves have been anxious to show a rapid advance in that direction. The answer given to one of the questions put by me shows that we have 16 district boards now levying the railway cess ; and the accumulation of railway cess to their credit is a considerable sum of money which can always be utilized for this purpose. But the difficulty has been whether it is possible to induce the Government of India to make substantial grants to push through this programme of railway development."

"Questions have been raised in this Council particularly from 1914 with the object of inducing this Government to take further steps in this direction. It was pointed out, when a resolution was moved in 1914, by Sir Harold Stuart who was in charge of the department on that occasion that there were three ways in which it would be possible to further the extension of railways. The first was to induce the Government of India to include these railways in their programme of works and make grants for the purpose. The second method which he suggested on that occasion was to help these district boards in the matter of securing funds for the purpose of the construction of these railways. The third way he suggested was to encourage private companies also to come forward for the purpose of helping these district boards in the formation of railways. He was good enough to suggest that before the offer of private companies was accepted, he would give preference to the district boards themselves and he would ascertain whether the district boards would be in a position to find the funds or to raise debentures in the market for carrying on district board railway construction and that it was only in cases where they were not able to do so, he would suggest the acceptance of the offer of private companies. He also assured us that in the settlement of terms with the private companies the interests of the district boards would be safeguarded and steps would be taken to see that they secured a proper share of the income. When we come to 1916, it is very unfortunate that owing to various causes and owing to the restricted finance of the Government of India, we had a different story from Mr. Gillman who was the Member in charge. He said something which was somewhat disheartening in the course of the debate. He said there was no chance of getting any money from the Government of India and so far as borrowing was concerned the Government of India were not likely to allow us to borrow."

The Hon'ble Mr. L. DAVIDSON :—" May I remind the Honourable Member that then the war was on."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. KRISHNA RAO :—" The Hon'ble Mr. Davidson may have a little patience. I am pointing out that these were the lines on which we were assured that there might be some advance in the matter of securing funds. In 1916 we were informed that the Government of India would not be in a position to give any money from Imperial funds and would not be in a position to allow the local Government to borrow money for that purpose. That was the statement in 1916 from the official spokesman. Your Excellency, I would ask whether, in view of the change of circumstances, in view of the railway cess collections in the various districts having increased during these years and in view of the fact that we have seen the end of the war and that the circumstances have changed to a considerable extent, we cannot with confidence and hope make an effective representation for the proper distribution of the Imperial grants for railway purposes. That is one way in which we ought to move without any delay. I am sure that so far as this aspect is concerned, the Government are always willing to do that."

"The second suggestion is that it is a case in which permission may be obtained for this Government borrowing money and lending it to the district boards. It is unfortunate that in the year 1909 the Secretary of State did not give sanction to that proposal. It was only the Beawada-Masulipatam railway that was fortunate enough to escape from that injunction. It was after they got the loan from the Provincial loan account, that that particular order of the Secretary of State was published, and that other district boards were placed in a disadvantageous position. May I not ask if the time has not come when we can with considerable force ask for a modification of the order and for permission to allot a specific sum of money for the development of district board railways year after year? The Government of India may not be willing to allot funds for this purpose because they may consider that these lines are required only in particular local areas. If they are not in a position to include it in their own programme, is it unreasonable to ask that they should permit this Government to draw from the Provincial loan account and allot money year after year? That is one direction in which we can possibly proceed.

1038 RESOLUTION RE DEVELOPMENT OF DISTRICT BOARD RAILWAYS.

(Mr. Krishna Rao ; Mr. Suryanarayana Rao ; Mr. L. Davidson.) [3RD APRIL 1919.]

"Other suggestions which can be made are—which I believe the Government are also willing to do—to enable the district boards to indent upon trust moneys and to allow various public bodies which have moneys to invest them in these railways. That position can be easily accepted. It will secure an additional amount, and so far as the district boards are concerned, it would enable them to take a further step. When Your Excellency's Government are satisfied that it is highly essential to proceed further in this direction, it is not of much use for us to have a theoretical or academic discussion as to the special steps that should be devised for carrying out this programme with the least possible delay. Honourable Members are aware that, as is shown in the report of the Public Works Department especially with reference to several stages of progress have been achieved but nothing further could be done. We find particularly that the Tirutturaipundi-Vedaranthi line which was completed in December 1916 could not be opened for traffic as the South Indian Railway could not find the rolling materials were not available. Seeing that the capital has been locked up, much could not be done in that direction but we may now move the Government. The Council is also aware that in 1917 the Hon'ble the Raja of Ramnad suggested a temporary suspension of the railway cess and he was quite right in suggesting that. When you could not carry out railway works especially those two railways, how could you satisfy the agriculturists in taking this money as railway cess? I am mentioning these facts only to impress upon the Government the desirability of taking special steps to promote the rapid development of district board railways.

"I do not think, after all, the word 'special' need deter Your Excellency's Government from accepting the resolution. If we are agreed that we have not been able to show as much advance in this matter as we all desire, if we are agreed that it is possible to take more definite steps by making a definite representation to the Government of India to help district boards to secure trust moneys and to raise debentures and if we are agreed that it is necessary, desirable and feasible to show some improvement in this direction, it is quite necessary that this resolution should be accepted. I do not think that in the use of the word 'special' there is anything which should terrify Your Excellency's Government in accepting this resolution. What the special steps are is a matter which may be settled with the assistance of the expert advisers of the Government and with the suggestions which we can make."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. SURYANARAYANA RAO:—"I have great pleasure in seconding this resolution. In doing so I have only one or two words to say with regard to my district, Vizagapatam. More than three years ago the Gunupur-Parvatipuram line was suggested, and a railway-cess was imposed when the Hon'ble Mr. Harris was the Collector of Vizagapatam. Afterwards that line was abandoned, but the cess is being collected. Now it is said that it will be utilized for the Bimlipatam-Vizagapatam line which is under contemplation. We are actually paying a railway-cess, but there is no line under contemplation. This state of things is undesirable. I have a special complaint to make in this matter. When the Hon'ble the Raja of Ramnad brought forward a resolution that the cess should be suspended when there was no scheme, I think he was quite right. I agree with him. Therefore when the word 'special' is used, I submit that Your Excellency's Government would be pleased to call upon the President of the District Board of Vizagapatam to submit whether it has any special scheme for laying railways and whether it has any definite plans and estimates and so on, and then special steps may be taken. I do not know much about other districts. I am speaking with regard to Vizagapatam and Ganjam. With regard to Ganjam the Raja of Parlakimedi will push the line from Parlakimedi to Gunupur which would be a profitable line. So far as the District Boards of Ganjam and Vizagapatam are concerned, there is no reason to levy a railway-cess because they are doing nothing, though we are paying the cess. I would request Your Excellency's Government to take special steps for the construction of railways by the Ganjam and Vizagapatam District Boards."

The Hon'ble Mr. L. DAVIDSON:—"Your Excellency, I had been hoping that the Hon'ble Mr. Krishna Rao would give me some light as to what class of 'special steps' he considered practicable. I have listened carefully to what he has said and, so far as I could gather, the only specific step which he suggested was an application to the Government of India for more funds or an arrangement by which the Provincial Government can make funds available to district boards either from their own Provincial loan account or by taking action to make trust funds available for the purpose. In both cases the special step contemplated is the provision of funds. Now it so happens that this very question of railway development which the Government have at heart at least as much as any district board or any non-official member of this Council—it so happens that this question has been the subject of a recent pronouncement in the Indian Legislative Council at Delhi. There was a special reference to it in the Hon'ble Sir James Meston's Financial Statement on the 1st of March. I will quote his own words; he said 'although hostilities have ceased, the position as regards branch line company projects remains much the same as it was a year ago.' The conditions which these projects have reached are set out in the Public Works Department administration report which gives detailed information to which attention is drawn in the answer to question No. 50. Sir James Meston continued: 'Although hostilities have ceased, the position as regards branch line companies remains much the same as it was a year ago. The difficulties attendant on the raising of capital continue, and new construction under branch line terms is still in abeyance.' That is one pronouncement on the 1st March. On the same day there was a pronouncement by the President of the Railway Board. He was answering a question put to him by the Hon'ble Maharaja Sir Manindra Chandra Nandi. He mentioned a long list of the lines proposed to be constructed under branch line terms or by district boards, including a considerable number in this Presidency—ten. Then he went on to say 'Government are unable to say when it will be possible to commence all or any of the above railways, as it is probable that all railway materials which are likely to be available will, for some time to come, be required for renewals and increased traffic facilities on existing railways which have been held in abeyance during the war.' In the same answer referring specifically to the question of funds—the matter mentioned by Sir James Meston—Sir Arthur Anderson continued: 'Moreover, construction of lines be financed by Government must also depend on the provision of funds, and in view of the urgent requirements of open lines, the money available for new construction is likely to be limited for some little time to come.'

(Mr. Davidson ; Mr. Rama Ayyangar.)

"It is only a few weeks since these two pronouncements were made, and obviously it would be useless for the Local Government to make an application for special contributions towards railway development, towards new construction. Much as I wish that some benefit could be derived from such representations, I feel that in the face of such pronouncements it would be idle to ask the Government of India to help. The fact, sir, is, it is not only a question of funds, but a question of materials, for even if abundant funds were available, the materials would not be procurable. It is these two hard facts, the money fact and the materials fact, which make it impossible in my judgment to take any special steps at present to promote the rapid development of district board railways.

"This Council is well aware of the importance that the Government of Madras have always attached to such development, and of the special interest taken therein by Sir Harold Stuart, one of whose last acts before laying down his office was to leave on record for his successor a note on the need of railway development, written in October 1916, in which he had the prescience to lay particular emphasis on the fact that even when the war was over much leeway would have to be made upon existing lines before money could be found for new lines. We have recently succeeded in placing ourselves in a better position as regards the sorting and advancement of railway projects. On our recommendation the Government of India have sanctioned the revival of the appointment of a special Secretary for Railways. I am glad to say that since January last the Government have enjoyed the advantage of the services of Mr. Dove-Wilson. They have thus now at their disposal an officer with experience of railway matters. I have consulted him about the possibility of finding materials and his strong opinion is that the demands for the renewal of the permanent-way on existing lines, for the remodelling of large station yards and for the provision of increased siding accommodation are likely for some considerable time to absorb all the rails available and that there is no present prospect of an early supply at a reasonable rate either in India or from abroad on a scale which would permit of pushing forward with new branch lines as distinguished from renewals on existing lines.

"All that we can do is to wait for that improvement in the financial and industrial conditions which we all hope will follow on the conclusion of peace. In the meantime the initiative in many cases, as the Honourable Seconder of the resolution suggests, may come from the district boards themselves. In the case which I referred to in answering resolution No. X, the reference has been outstanding for a considerable time with the Salem District Board. What we can do is to communicate this discussion to all district boards which have projects on their anvil and to ask them to take any action which in their judgment is immediately practicable and to get ready schemes so that they may be put in hand as soon as the financial and industrial conditions bring construction within the reach of practical politics. I should be the first to welcome any recommendations for special steps that you may bring forward for the development of district board railways. But I am unable myself to suggest any and regret that I have not been able in the course of the earlier stages of this debate to find any special suggestions."

The Hon'ble Mr. K. RAMA AYYANGAR:—"Your Excellency, war conditions and the supply of materials are the two questions which make it impossible to speak with any confidence just at this stage as to what steps we can take to ensure rapid progress. However, I beg to point out that this is the time when this Government will have to press upon the Government of India the necessity to provide a certain allotment for grants to district boards for the construction of railway lines. The budget for railways now made by the Government of India clearly indicates that they have taken them as more important and more urgent than almost every other concern of theirs. It may be remembered that in the Imperial Legislative Council this large allotment for railway projects was tried to be reduced with a view to secure greater recognition for irrigation works, but the Government refused it and thought that it was more important just as they were taking up the question of industrial expansion in India. In these circumstances the great point is to see that rolling-stock is supplied and every emergent circumstance will have to be attended to, and when the Government of India have allotted such a large amount—I am not quite sure of the exact amount, I am told it is 17 millions—when they have made that allotment I dare say they may be thinking not only of communications

1040 RESOLUTION RE DEVELOPMENT OF DISTRICT BOARD RAILWAYS.

(Mr. Rama Ayyangar.)

[3RD APRIL 1919.]

in Mesopotamia which will form a big item in the budget but probably also of the necessity to attend to the details of rolling-stock which is deficient. There is no doubt that the present concerns of India require very large allotment to be given to these various items. I believe we started in 1904; very few district boards have been able to open railways. Kistna and Tanjore were fortunate enough but even Tanjore has not been quite fortunate, because it has not been able to open a line which was completed. Tinnevely which was very carefully adding to the railway cess and which was about to close the Tinnevely-Tiruchendur Railway had its rails disposed of by sale. In these circumstances it is only very proper that a very strong representation from this Government goes to the Government of India to see that a reasonable allotment is made for loans to district boards to complete their railways where they are partially completed and to put new work on hand as early as possible and also to ensure loans as far as possible. I do not think that in this large budget the Government of India will refuse us that. The discussion in the Imperial Legislative Council which I followed did not turn upon this. The members from Madras did not turn to this aspect of the matter, but the importance attached by the Government of India to railways will enable this Government on account of the sacrifice made by them during the war to claim from them special treatment for this province. Other provinces have to follow Madras in this matter. About 15 or 20 years of our work ought to be recognized by the Government of India, I dare say the Finance Member will only be prepared to yield to the strong representation of this Government. In reply to our representations the late Mr. Gillman announced it here that they were prepared to form a branch of the railway board and practically there will be a Railway Secretary for the Madras Government. It must be within the cognizance of the Government of India to make sufficient provision to see that this enterprise which has been started in Madras is pushed through with great success. That is one point I place.

"The second question is the question of raising loans. There again the Government of India's permission may be needed to raise loans within the province or to raise loans from trust funds which have been held on a particular date to be capable of being invested in district board debentures. Your Excellency, I drew attention to the previous discussion on the subject and the circular that was issued by this Government to the boards expressing their opinion and the opinion of the Government of India which had been communicated to them that it was possible to invest trust funds in district board debentures. The whole of the Madras Province has got, as it was calculated then, sufficient funds to enable district boards to raise these debentures from the trust funds. I know that the Government of India will find it very difficult just now to find all the funds which have been invested as balances or trust funds in Government securities and they may be prepared only to allow a portion. But that must be urged now. We could not be doing much work within the course of this year, because it would not be possible for district boards to start work when materials are not quite ample. So that if we just drive the thin end of the wedge and are able to get from the Government of India some money from this big allotment towards the district board railway extension or completion, I think we have very strong claim to make to the Government of India—if we start now, it will be a fair method of approaching the subject for our successfully utilizing the plan later on. We are in the beginning of the official year with after all about 1 lakh or 2 lakhs provision whereas the calculation made was that we wanted 300 lakhs for district board railways which were then intended to be constructed. I do not think we have added to the number of lines proposed to be constructed. Then the Bank of Madras was willing to find loans to the extent of 200 lakhs and we had an accumulated balance of 90 lakhs. All this will have to be re-examined now. We do not know what the Bank of Madras may say just now. I do not know whether we can find other money to finance these lines. Whatever that may be, the trust funds may be invested in debentures and the moneys relating to charitable and other trusts invested with the Government of India may be asked to be paid over to be invested in these debentures. The second point is the allotment of a certain amount out of the budget allotment of the Government of India for advancing loans to district boards where they can take up this question. The third question is the question of the pooling of the railway cesses. That was a question that was taken up by Mr. Priestly and his scheme was that the Railway Board should construct these lines with the moneys that were available as railway cess funds with all the district boards. That is a separate discussion we had and Sir Harold Stuart was expressing difficulty on the question of law whether this could be pooled together for constructing these lines. That is a question that should be taken up by the Government, because I see that the answer to an interpellation of the Hon'ble Mr. Krishna Rao says that there is 90 lakhs with these boards. There may be more money in Tanjore and some other district boards. If this money which is available can be utilized when needed for the purpose of constructing railway lines which have been already started or for which estimates and every other thing are ready, where the traffic the money may be utilized even if the Government of India express the opinion that later on they will be able to find funds. The whole money is invested under the orders of this Government and it should be available as a loan to district boards which want them. If the Government of India are prepared to say that after two or three years they will be prepared to find money, even then we can start with the money available and the lines about which all preliminary work is over may be constructed immediately. These are the suggestions that I would like to place before the Government. I propose to bring up this discussion in some other form as early as possible. I am not able now to place further materials before the Government. I think on these lines something may be done to secure a substantial amount to see that this progress is rapidly made."

RESOLUTION RE DEVELOPMENT OF DISTRICT BOARD RAILWAYS. 1041

(The President; Mr. Krishna Rao; Mr. Davidson.)

3RD APRIL 1919.]

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"I may assure Honourable Members that there is no difference of opinion between the Government and the Honourable Gentleman who has brought forward this resolution and the others who have spoken in support of it. The Government are most anxious to see the construction of district board railways pushed on. It is only the hard logic of facts owing to the necessities which have arisen from the war that creates any difficulty. I do not understand from the Hon'ble Mr. Krishna Rao that he attaches any special importance to the words 'special steps' nor do the Government. What is meant is that the Government should take the earliest possible steps, the best possible steps to secure this great need. I do not think it will be possible to do very much in the next year, because as my Honourable Friend Mr. Davidson has stated all new constructions are in abeyance. That is what the Hon'ble Sir James Meston said. The whole of the money will be needed to repair the existing lines. The Honourable Member may rely upon the Local Government to advance this matter. That is what I imagine is the assurance he would like to have. That is the position."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. KRISHNA RAO:—"Will the President suggest a modification of the resolution which will make it acceptable to Government?"

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"Will the Honourable Member himself suggest it?"

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. KRISHNA RAO:—"To take the earliest possible steps."

The Hon'ble Mr. L. DAVIDSON:—"I have no objection."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. KRISHNA RAO:—"I wish to know for my information whether any representation was made to the Government of India before those pronouncements were made by Sir James Meston and the President of the Railway Board—whether there was any specific request for an allotment for district board railways from the Local Government and whether after considering that representation, they made that pronouncement. If a representation was made and after that they made that pronouncement, that is one thing; but if no representation was made, we can go up with this request."

The Hon'ble Mr. L. DAVIDSON:—"No representation was made."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"The position simply was that Sir James Meston made a general remark applicable to the whole of India and not merely to Madras. He said, we have not got funds to finance branch lines. He did not refer to special provincial representations. He referred to the conditions with which he was faced as to the difficulty in the existing rolling-stock owing to the long-continued loss during the war."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. KRISHNA RAO:—"Another point was raised by me regarding which I did not get a reply from the Hon'ble Mr. Davidson. I made a specific suggestion that some attempt might be made to have a reconsideration of the orders of the Secretary of State to advance money from the Provincial Loan account."

The Hon'ble Mr. L. DAVIDSON:—"I did not feel myself called upon to go into the question of railway finance."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"The Provincial Loan account is drawn from the Government of India. The Local Government make certain proposals, but it all comes out of the Government of India. When they say they have not got money for their programme, they will have no money for the Provincial Loan account. I am afraid it is not practicable to have anything done in that direction. The Honourable Member may rely upon the Local Government pressing the matter upon the Government of India as soon as possible. I hope he will be satisfied with that assurance."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. KRISHNA RAO:—"The words 'the earliest possible' may be substituted for the word 'special'."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"There is no objection, as the Government are as anxious about it as any Honourable Member. I do not know if any results would follow."

The resolution as modified was put to the Council and agreed to.

The Council then adjourned till 11 a.m. on Friday the 4th April 1919.

1044 RESOLUTION RE CONTROL OF THE EXPORT TRADE IN OIL-SEEDS.

(Mr. Ranga Achariyar.)

[4TH APRIL 1919.]

The Council assembled at 11 a.m., when the discussion on resolutions was taken up.

RESOLUTION RE CONTROL OF THE EXPORT TRADE IN OIL-SEEDS.

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR :—“ Your Excellency, the resolution that I have the honour to move runs thus :—

‘XIII. This Council recommends to His Excellency the Governor in Council that they may be pleased to recommend to the Government of India to take early steps to control the export of oil-seeds from this Presidency.’

“Your Excellency, this formed the subject of interpellation at the last meeting of the Council. It was question No. 120 in the March meeting and in answer to the question, Your Excellency's Government doubted whether in the interests of the ryot population, the prohibition of the export of oil-seeds is advisable. With that answer before me, I must make out a case for inducing the Government to take this step which I advocate in this resolution. I advocate this resolution both as a temporary measure to meet the urgent situation and also as a permanent measure in the industrial interests of the country. I will first of all deal with the urgent situation created by the shortage of foodstuffs in the country and the shortage of the supply of oil. It is admitted that there has been enormous shortage of food-grains both wet and dry in our presidency. As pointed out in the recent official report, the shortage has been so enormous. This is what it says :—‘The vagaries of the season have seriously affected yields. The break in the south-west monsoon seriously damaged the crops in most parts of Vizagapatam and in the upland parts of Godavari and Kistna, and so delayed transplantation in Tanjore and many other tracts that the ryots were compelled to plant out very old seedlings or to raise further seed-beds and plant out the crop from one to two months later than usual. For want of sufficient seed of short duration varieties, which could not be produced at short notice, ryots were compelled to sow the usual long duration varieties so late in the year that these cannot mature properly before the hot weather.’

“On the other hand the season favoured the broadest crops in the Carnatic and Central districts and the large second crop on the West Coast which is giving a good yield. Conditions in the extreme south are also favourable to good yields. On the whole, however, the yield will be the smallest that has been obtained for at least ten years, and is estimated at 77,514,000 cwt. as against last year's final estimate of 120,004,400 cwt. a decrease of 35 per cent and details by districts are also given. With reference to the rice crop, details are given. But with reference to the dry crops, although exact figures are not available, I understand from those who are well-informed on the subject that there has been a shortage in the dry crops also to the same extent. That being so, it is an anxious situation which has been caused to the Presidency and I have heard responsible people discuss the situation with anxiety as to how if there is a failure in the monsoon, the food supply in the country is to be kept up. If we are not getting free imports, the existing supply cannot last for more than three months' consumption. That is the anxious situation for us to consider as to how best to conserve the foodstuffs in the country. Oil-seeds are well-known to be also useful as foodstuffs. They have been used by the people of the country; especially punnag raised from the oil-seeds has been used as food among the people of the country, both mixed and unmixed, mixed with various other food commodities, and the oils extracted are also the necessary stuffs which are required for consumption in the country. These oil-seeds are required for human consumption. This reasoning will apply to the groundnut crop which is a very essential commodity produced in our Presidency as well as in the Deccan. Our Presidency is noted for its large produce of the groundnut crop which is largely used by the people of this country. Now there has been an enormous export of these oil-seeds from our Presidency for a very long time. In the latest report, reviewing the sea-borne trade of the Madras Presidency, I find at page 17 : ‘For many years past, seeds have formed one of the principal exports from this Presidency, and before the war were exported in a larger quantity than any other produce. During the last two years, there has been a considerable falling away amounting to 41 per cent in quantity in 1916-17 and a further 10 per cent in 1917-18. The decline in value was 25 per cent and 35 per cent respectively, but in both these years, exports of seeds accounted for eight and one-third per cent of the total value of foreign exports. Groundnuts represented 71 per cent of the total exports of seeds. The average shipments before the war were three times greater, both in quantity and value, than they are now.’ It is pointed out that ‘shipments to France declined by 89 per cent while those to the United Kingdom increased seven-fold.’ It is also pointed out ‘the opening of a factory at Singapore for extracting groundnut oil has increased the demand. The groundnut crop in China failed, and American buyers in Singapore purchased seeds sent from India. Considerable quantities of groundnuts were also reshipped from the Straits to Hongkong.’ So also with reference to copra, or coconut kernel, castor seed, etc. It is well known that for the last two or three years, the prices of gingelly oil, castor oil and groundnut oil have risen considerably beyond the bearing capacity of the people. These are all necessary commodities, and connected with this is also the shortage in the supply of kerosene oil due to various reasons—the world competition with reference to kerosene oil and perhaps also the diminished supply in the oil fields themselves. Whatever the reason may be, acute suffering has been caused in the last few months in the matter of the supply of kerosene oil.

RESOLUTION RE CONTROL OF THE EXPORT TRADE IN OIL-SEEDS. 1045

(Mr. Ranga Achariyar.)

4TH APRIL 1919.]

“Therefore, it will be seen that from both aspects, namely the preserving and the conserving of foodstuffs in the country and also the finding of substitutes for the oils which are diminishing in quantity, it is necessary in order to meet this crisis that we should preserve the oil-seeds in the country. That is looking at it from the point of view of a temporary measure to meet the urgent needs of the situation. But looking at it from the broader point of view, as a sound economic policy to be pursued by Government, I say it is an essential step to take at once in view to the industrial re-organization which is promised to us.

“This groundnut crop is essentially an industrial product which can be used in various ways for producing highly commercial products. Recently the Bombay Government have been investigating this question and their chemical expert, Mr. Mackenzie Wallis has made an elaborate report on the value of the groundnut crop both as a food crop and also as an industrial crop. He has written an elaborate report, pointing out how useful every part of the groundnut is, for making a commercial product out of it. There is the use of the kernel which he says can be used for making paper out of it; you can use the red skin for various purposes and he points out that olive oil can be extracted and crude oil can be preserved and oil cake can also be manufactured and a highly nutritious food can be extracted out of it; bread and biscuits can be made out of it; and he also points out that the refuse will be highly useful for manurial purposes. Therefore, this commodity of oil-seeds is useful for human beings and it will be useful for the consumption of beasts. Even the supply of fodder for cattle is becoming short and it is becoming a very difficult question for the people as to how to keep the cattle going; and what with straw selling at an enormous price, cattle-food is becoming very dear indeed. This Government have been pursuing a very wrong policy indeed all these years to allow this commodity to go out of the country which is so essentially needed for consumption and for oil for the country. You do not require any elaborate machinery or any costly installation for the purpose of making this a purely commercial product. Both by private enterprise and by public action, action on the part of the Government, I think that these groundnut crops and various other oil-seeds can be turned into highly useful purposes for the country.

“I do not see any valid objection which can be taken to taking this step. The only objection which is taken is that it is likely to reduce the prices so far as the producer is concerned; he is not likely to get as high price as he is now able to get, in cases free export is allowed. Assuming it is a valid argument, I think the good of the larger number, that is the public, and the interests of the public ought to outweigh this loss, if really loss is likely to be caused to the ryot. I doubt very much whether really in the end loss will be caused to the ryot. After all, who is it who profits by the high prices? It is more the middlemen and others who advance money when the produce is on the lands. Large sums of money are advanced by firms and by other money-lenders and middlemen on the seeds even when they are on the field and long before the ryot reaps them, and the ryot is obliged to sell them, so that the high prices do not really go the advantage of the ryot. I do not deny that he gets some portion of it, but a large portion of it goes more to the middleman and the merchants who make these advances beforehand. Therefore that is not a circumstance to be taken into consideration. The question is whether it is for the larger good of the public that this product should be preserved for the country. If so, what is the duty of a Government having the larger interests of the public at heart? Is it wise to allow foreign nations to make superior oils and make costly soaps and various other manufactured articles and make huge profits, while in the country itself it can be turned into useful purposes by a little money and labour and skill bestowed upon it? I ask what would Japan have done if she had a commodity like this at her disposal? Would she allow this to be taken away freely? On the other hand, she would put an embargo upon the free export of such useful products. Here this is a highly agricultural country where we want every sort of manure to keep the lands fertile. There is a complaint that land is losing in fertility and therefore all sorts of manure are required now to keep up the fertility of the soil. If we allow this raw commodity to go out in millions of tons or cwts, out of the country, you are depriving the country of the benefit which the country should have. For the greater good, Government have to interfere and stop profiteering, because a few individuals will have to yield for the larger good of the larger public. That is the only objection which has been raised so far.

“I may say, Your Excellency, that this matter was twice considered in a meeting of the Ryotwari Landholder's Association, one a public meeting and the other a meeting of the Committee. This matter was considered at the public meeting and Doctor Slater pointed out most forcibly that this is a matter in which the Government ought to take steps at once in order to prevent the export of these valuable oil-seeds from the country. Afterwards, the matter was considered in a meeting of the Committee and they came to the conclusion that they should recommend to the Government that the free exports of oil-seeds should be prohibited. The matter was considered in a meeting of the Emergency Committee at Madras of which the Collector of Madras was the President. The Government invited suggestions as to what steps should be taken in order to induce the people to take to other oils in order to meet the situation created by the shortage of kerosene oil, and the Emergency Committee suggested that restriction should be placed on the export of oil-seeds.

“Therefore this motion of mine has the support of the Ryotwari Land holders' Association and the Emergency Committee of Madras, and when you come to consider it from all points of view, I submit it ought to appeal to Your Excellency's Government to take some steps. I know that Your Excellency's Government will have to apply to the Government of India for permission to take the necessary steps. Under the Government of India Act to place any restriction on the export of commodities from the country, powers are vested in the Government of India. What powers should be taken, I am bound to suggest. I will suggest that a large export duty should be placed on the export of oil-seeds. While I will be prepared to go to the extent of a total prohibition of all exports, as a practical man I would suggest that a large export duty on the export of oil-seeds will suffice. That will create a competitor from outside and keep up prices in the country itself so that the ryots' share in any increased value may not be diminished. That is the only legitimate objection that can be taken to this question. Therefore, in order to facilitate, to lighten the burden upon the ryot, I suggest that Your Excellency's Government may apply to the Government of India to put a large export duty on the export of oil-seeds. I do not think it is necessary for me to say anything further. The matter, I submit, is of vital importance; at present, it is of urgent importance and for the future it is of vital importance. I am sorry the Honourable Member in charge of the Industries Department is not here; looking at it from the larger point of view as regards the future policy to be pursued by the Government with reference to commercial products, I think a beginning should be made by the Government. If you are going to allow the free export, when is this country going to begin its policy of industrial regeneration? When are you going to make a beginning? It is this sort of action on the part of the Government which sometimes embitters our feelings against the Government. I may tell Your Excellency that action should be taken forthwith; the industrial policy requires it. We cannot remain agriculturally great, we must also become industrially great. When we see the Government allowing opportunities like this to go by, and allow foreign nations to take advantage of our raw products, and become industrially great at our expense, it provokes, thought among us and we feel that the Government are sacrificing our interests for the benefit of foreign countries. Such a feeling ought not to prevail in the country; and it is high time that Your Excellency's Government take strong action to put an end to such feelings. Therefore, both as a temporary measure and also as a sound commercial policy I ask Your Excellency's Government to take early steps to put a prohibition on the free export of oil-seeds from the province. I therefore commend this proposition to the acceptance of the Government."

(Mr. Ranga Achariyar; Mr. Venkatapati Raju; Mr. Wood.) [4TH APRIL 1919.]

The Hon'ble Mr. B. VENKATAPATI RAJU:—"Your Excellency, I have great pleasure in seconding the resolution moved by my Hon'ble Friend Mr. Ranga Achariyar so elaborately. I do not propose to introduce any spirit, any racial spirit, in the discussion of this simple resolution for the simple reason that there are difficulties in the way. The persons who actually raise oil-seeds want a decent price for the stuff. How to realize it? Either it must be exported or it must be wholly utilized in the country. If we cannot wholly utilize it, we must find some outlet for the crop. There is another difficulty on the part of the Government. I do not know what shape the recommendations of the war conference would take in the matter of the export of these articles in the Empire or out of the Empire. These are also the considerations that would weigh with the Government. But there is this point which cannot be avoided, that in all other countries, and mostly Germany, they prohibit or they raise a sufficiently high tariff to prevent oil reaching there. If you want to export oil, they would raise a high tariff, so that it is not possible to export oil. Whereas the Government there make it easy for us and provide additional facilities for the export of any amount of oil-seeds, and the reason is that they want to have the oil industry in their own country and they want to utilize the stuff for manure purposes. I do not see any reason why our Government should lag behind. We should do something to preserve this article for the purpose of agriculture. Though at the outset some people may complain that they are not realizing the profit which they ought to realize if freedom were allowed, as the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar put it, the larger interests of the country require it; and also the ignorance and want of scientific knowledge of the agriculturists in India should make us consider whether it is not to their advantage in spite of the temporary loss to have this freedom. It would enrich their country; it would enrich their soil and people would raise a larger amount of crops. The Madras Presidency is a place where a large quantity of oil-seeds are raised and therefore it is very well that the Madras Presidency should take the lead and bring it to the notice of Government as earnestly as possible how best to preserve oil-seeds in the country. In this connexion, I may add that it is not merely enough to prevent people from exporting oil-seeds but it is also necessary to see that these people of the country utilize it to the best advantage, and for that the Agricultural Department should give the necessary facilities and help. Even the Industries Commission recommended it. Therefore I do not see any difficulty in the Government accepting it in this form in which the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar has presented it. Some facilities may be given so that oil-seeds may be utilised in the country. I hope Government will accept the resolution of the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar and therefore I heartily second the resolution."

The Hon'ble Mr. R. B. WOOD:—"Your Excellency, the Honourable Mover of the resolution has based his argument on two grounds, one temporary and the other permanent. I had better take these two grounds in order.

"With reference to the temporary ground, and the special urgency at the present time, the argument is that in the present scarcity of kerosene oil, vegetable oils might be used in lamps to supplement the supply of kerosene oil and further that in view of the shortage of food grains, kernels, copra and groundnut might be used as food. He quoted from the report on Sea-borne Traffic regarding exports of seed-grains from this Presidency. The question of control of commodities is one for the Government of India which is acting in concert with the Allies in

4TH APRIL 1919.] (Mr. Wood; Mr. Ranga Achariyar.)

Europe. There had been a certain amount of control over the export of food-grains and oil-seeds since 1917, and quite recently the Government of India removed all control and we may infer reasonably that this was done in concert with the allied Governments. Before we can ask the Government of India to put back the control, they will have to consult the European Governments about it and we would have to be quite certain that we had a very good case. From the temporary point of view as to special urgency at the present time, the question is: have we got a case? And I think the easiest way to deal with it is to look at the exports from this Presidency during the last five years. Starting from 1913-14 before the war began, the exports of seed-grains were 277,000 tons; since that time they have steadily decreased. I do not know whether the Honourable Mover's statement that the export of seed-grains was specially large during the war refers to India or to this Presidency. But as far as the general export from this Presidency goes, the figures are obtained from the Collector of Customs in Madras for the whole of the Presidency, and it shows that there has been a steady fall. In 1914 it had dropped from 277,000 to 220,000 tons and in 1915 to 217,000 tons, in 1916 to 140,000 tons; in 1917 it rose slightly up to 159,000 tons, in 1918-19 it was 53,000 tons, that is just one-fifth of what it was in 1913. Recently during the last four months, the drop is even faster. In the last four months in 1917-18 there was an export of 63,000 tons, but in the last four months up to date there has been an export of only 15,000 tons. The export is so small at this rate compared with the total production of oil-seeds in this Presidency that we have no case whatever to go to the Government of India to show that we are handicapped or prejudiced or that we are losing our resources to any extent in this Presidency. Thirteen thousand tons in that we are losing our resources to any extent in this Presidency. Thirteen thousand tons in four months is only 39,000 tons per annum, and when we have a production in the Presidency of food-grains of 9 million tons in ordinary times and this year probably 7 millions at the least, and possibly a little more, 39,000 or 40,000 tons of oil-seeds are not going to make very much difference. It would not make a very large difference either in respect of lamp-oil. For lamp oil, groundnut oil is not used very much so far as I know. You have castor-oil and the oil of copra. Under copra in the Presidency, including Travancore and Cochin, we have 800,000 acres under cultivation and the export of copra during the last year was 14,000 tons. Fourteen thousand tons is nothing compared with the total yield of 800,000 acres in the Presidency. The export of castor has slightly increased during the past year, but the demand for castor is regulated by the demand from Europe and if we prohibited the export of castor-oil, we would only succeed in reducing the area under castor oil and we would not be benefiting the Presidency. The groundnut seed next to copra is the most important seed of the Presidency. The export of that has dropped from 103,000 tons in 1917-18 to 22,000 tons in the current year. That is to say, it has dropped a great deal and we have only exported one-fifth of last year's export and the demand for it is so slack that we have four lakhs of bags rotting in South Arcot and Pondicherry. A request to prohibit the export, while we have these bags not demanded here, not demanded in France, would not carry any weight with the Government of India. From the kerosene oil point of view, the prospects of getting more imports of kerosene oil are improving. The result of stopping exports would not be felt by the users of vegetable oils in place of kerosene oil for several months, and by that time we all hope that the position of the kerosene oil will be settled. So from the kerosene oil point of view, we must consider that the motion will not be effective, and from the food point of view, its effect would be equally small. The export of copra is so little that we have no real case of grievance. The export of groundnut is so restricted by the lack of demand in Europe and the lack of transport facilities that we actually have four lakhs of bags for which we ought to find demand. Nor is there any demand for its supply as food in this Presidency.

"There is another interesting point, that is with reference to the area under oil-seeds. In 1913 the area was 62 lakhs of acres. In the current year 1918 it was 60 lakhs, that is to say, the area under oil-seeds has scarcely decreased, in spite of the great fall in exports. Thus, we again see that there is really no excess of export at the present moment whatever it may be under usual conditions, and that as a temporary measure, to relieve the urgent necessity there is no case made out for approaching the Government of India. As I said before, unless we have a really strong case it is no use asking the Government of India to upset the arrangement which has been come to in concert with the allied Governments.

"The second point of the Honourable Member from the permanent point of view is one that I had not anticipated until he mentioned it to me just before this Council meeting. During the past four years, there has been great restriction of exports owing to want of traffic and transport facilities. One would have expected, if there had been any demand for oil-seeds in this country for industrial purposes, that advantage would have been taken of it and factories started for their use, but we find on the contrary that has not been done. Mr. Tressler investigated the possibilities of putting up crushing installations for oil-seeds in the beginning of the war, and he found at that time that it would not be cheap, as the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar said, but they would be very expensive and they would have to be obtained from England or America. He found that at that time they could not be got."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"What is the cost, may I know?"

The Hon'ble Mr. R. B. WOOD:—"That depends upon the outturn of the crushing installation. I do not know the unit, but the expense is considerable. In the first place, it is not enough to crush the seed. We must get the machinery for utilising the by-products besides the groundnut oil. The actual profit that could come in from the crushing oil machinery does not come from the oil itself, but from the by-products. A certain amount of seeds are pressed by hand-mills on the West Coast, but they cannot compete with European oil because the product is not so pure. It will mean a very large capital and a certain amount of risk to instal crushing factories in South India and it is a question whether we should put on export duties or restrict the export of raw materials until we are prepared to deal with them in this country. The value of these oil-seeds exported from the country to the ryot was 177 lakhs of rupees in 1917-18 and in the current year it is Rs. 103 lakhs. That is a very large amount of money to ask the ryot to forego.

"If you put on export duty, it is said that it would imply—I do not know if the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar has said it—it would be paid by the importer, and it would not affect the country very much. The price of groundnut seed is not dependent upon the Indian harvest. The export of groundnut seed which is the chief seed for us comes very largely from China, Japan, Africa and many other countries on the face of the globe and the Indian portion is quite small. If we put on export duty, it will still mean that the importers in Europe will pay the same price for our seeds as they pay for the seeds from other countries, so that the whole of the export duty will be paid by the producer. That will mean that manufacturers in South India will get their seeds cheaper for their manufactories. That would be no doubt an advantage from the industrial point of view, but the interests of the industries and those of the ryots are usually not quite the same. In spite of what the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar has said, I think the ryots will object. But even supposing that these interests can be reconciled and that the ryots would get their oil cakes cheaper and would get cattle food cheaper and their manure cheaper, we are still met with the problem that we have no factories and no oil presses and we cannot ask the Government to set up these. We may ask the Government to finance them, but at present that is a policy which has not yet been accepted although possibly it has not been rejected.

"From this permanent point of view, therefore, I think that it is essential to wait and see what resolution is come to with reference to the report of the Industries Commission. If that Commission recommended an export duty on raw materials in order to facilitate and help the development of industries in this country, then the placing of an export duty on oil-seeds in accord with that policy would naturally follow. But it is absolutely necessary to know what policy we are going to follow. If, on considering all the arguments on both sides, it is considered better and safer not to put export duties on raw materials in order to facilitate local industries, it seems to me that we cannot ask the Government of India to put an export duty on oil-seeds. The question is an extremely complicated one and its solution is by no means as simple as the Honourable Member thinks. It is not quite fair to say that the Government do not look to the interests of the country, because they do not take a step which theoretically seems sound; but when we come to translate these theoretical considerations into practical considerations and see how they are going to affect agriculture and industries, we have many mistakes. You cannot deal with a thing like that from the point of view of a single industry or a single raw material. In dealing with the report of the Industries Commission this question is bound to be gone into very thoroughly and I have no doubt that the arguments of the Honourable Member will then be taken into consideration by the Government. That is a point on which I am not qualified to speak."

The Hon'ble Yaqub Hasan Sahib Bahadur:—"Your Excellency, I am opposed to this resolution. I do not know what the Honourable Member means by controlling the export of oil-seeds. Perhaps he means that the export of oil-seeds should be discouraged as much as possible. His object perhaps is that if these oil-seeds are used or consumed here, that is to say if oil is extracted from them and the oil is sold to foreign countries, India will be a greater gainer than she is by exporting raw materials. No doubt that is a very good object and I wish that an arrangement will be made at an early date for starting this industry of extracting oil. There was a talk of Tata & Sons doing something in this line on a very large scale in Malabar. If some such thing is put into execution and then if we find that we are not able to compete with foreign countries in the matter of oil, then it would be high time to consider how to help this oil industry and then if it is found that by putting on some duty on the export of oil-seeds we will be encouraging this industry it should be considered then. If this resolution is passed now and the Government try to control the export of oil-seeds no good will be done, unless the oil industry itself comes into existence. Simply because you have controlled the oil-seeds, it will not bring the industry into existence. That is like placing the cart before the horse. Let us first think of the industries and then of other contrivances that will be necessary to encourage that industry. On that ground, I oppose this resolution.

"There is this also to be said that by exporting the oil-seeds we may get something in exchange for them. The adjustment of exports and imports makes up our wealth and if you try to limit your exports, imports will not be limited to the same extent. The result will be that you will find more money going out and less money coming in, and that will do greater harm to us than the little good that could possibly be had by adopting such a policy as this."

The Hon'ble Khan Bahadur A. T. G. M. Ahmad Tambi Marakkayar Sahib Bahadur:—"Your Excellency, I do not know what benefit it will do for this country to prohibit the export of oil-seeds. As the Hon'ble Mr. Wood stated, this country produces over and above the required quantity for local consumption and that surplus quantity is so large that we must under no circumstances stop export to foreign countries. To do so, it will only benefit the merchants. Not only the ryots of this country benefit by export of oil-seeds to the foreign country but it gives greater benefit to the poorer classes of people in the transport from one place to another and export by steamers. By allowing this export to foreign countries, merchants are benefited and a large number of boatmen and coolie classes who are living on this business are benefited. If a total prohibition is made, it will tell seriously upon the poorer classes of people of this Presidency and also the merchants. I quite agree with the Honourable Mover of the resolution in thinking of prohibiting the export of oil-seeds, but we can do so only if this country will be in a position to manufacture any produce such as foreign countries are manufacturing. I mean to say, taking groundnuts, when we ship groundnuts to foreign countries, they are manufactured into soaps, candles and other products; we are not in a position to manufacture such articles as we are always dependent upon foreign countries in the question of machinery. Until such time—I do not know how long it will take—as we might become independent of foreign countries, and so long as we are not in a position to manufacture goods from our raw materials, I am afraid the total prohibition of the export of oil-seeds or any produce will seriously tell upon the interests of this country. With regard to the levy of duty, if this is introduced, merchants in foreign countries will also induce their own Government to impose penal duties on goods exported for India. I do not think it will do us any good at the present juncture in making either a total prohibition or a partial prohibition of export of oil-seeds to foreign countries or levying any heavy or penal duty on export. It is not time for us to take up this question and we should wait until such time as we can be independent without depending on foreign countries to get the machinery. I therefore oppose this resolution."

The Hon'ble Sir Gordon Fraser:—"Your Excellency, I also oppose the motion. The Honourable Member has dealt with it from two points of view—one the present urgent want of foodstuffs, and the other the broader lines of the improvement of industries in future. He also mentioned at the beginning of his speech a certain reply given by the Government to a question put at the last meeting, and he said that in view of that previous reply it was up to him to make out a case in favour of this resolution. I think myself that he has failed, badly failed, to make out that good case.

"As regards groundnut oil-cake as a foodstuff, it is quite new to me. I do not say that the Honourable Member is wrong, but it is quite new to me to hear that groundnut punnac is used as a foodstuff by human beings in this Presidency."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. Rajagopala Achariyar:—"For cattle?"

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. Ranga Achariyar:—"For human beings also."

The Hon'ble Sir Gordon Fraser:—"I never heard of that. When one considers the great difficulty that is experienced in persuading the poorer inhabitants of this Presidency to take to Burma rice, I think it would be much harder to try and induce them to eat punnac.

"The next point was the question of conserving the oil to compete with kerosene oil. Kerosene oil is in short supply, but the price is about one-sixth of the price that we have to pay for groundnut oil. In olden days, kerosene oil was in constant competition with the vegetable oils of the Presidency. In course of time, the ryots got more and more money for their oil-seeds, and for illuminating purposes the people turned to kerosene oil. We will have to bring down the price of groundnut oil to a very low figure before we can use it in competition with kerosene oil.

"Then as regards the broad point of view in regard to the future of industries, we have the initial difficulty that at the present moment there are no facilities for crushing oil-seeds, and if we were to control the export now, we would simply leave the groundnuts rotting in the country. At the present moment, there are three or four lakhs of bags stored in this Presidency to my own knowledge and they have been stored for over a month; they are losing very considerably and at the moment, there is no buyer in the country or abroad. The Honourable Member quoted Japan and pointed out that, had Japan the supply of oil-seeds, such as groundnut, Japan would not have allowed them to go out of the country. I am perfectly certain the Honourable Member is wrong. Could Japan raise a crop of groundnuts such as the Madras Presidency does, she would certainly export them at the high price at which foreign countries offer to buy and she certainly would not keep them in the country when she could import a more suitable oil at a very much lower price. It would be the height of folly not to get the high prices for oil-seeds that other countries are prepared to pay if we export them, especially when you can import a more suitable oil for illuminating at one-sixth of the price which other countries are prepared to pay you for the commodity you export.

"The Honourable Member suggested the imposition of export duty on oil-seeds. Very many people think that the imposition of an export duty on oil-seeds amongst one or two other articles of merchandise in India would be a very good thing. But on the whole I think I am correct in saying that expert economic opinion is opposed to it. If you do interfere with the export of groundnut and the export of groundnut oil, you are going to interfere with a considerable source of revenue to this country. Then again if the ryots are not allowed to export their groundnut, the ryots are not going to grow it. They will have to turn to something else and before the public. The public are taking increasing interest in legislative business. Whereas formerly the proceedings of Legislative Councils would not be watched by a large number, I am now agreeably surprised to notice that even in out of the way corners people discuss what is done here. Greater interest is evinced. A still larger number would take an interest if the proceedings are made available in the vernaculars.

LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL.

Mr. Todhunter.)

[3RD APRIL 1919.]

"Here again the only objection to it would be the cost. I think the cost in this matter would not be deterrent. I am unable to see what objection there can be to translate these proceedings. More especially because we have negatived resolution No. 3 and at present there is no other language than English, we may at least give to the public knowing only the vernaculars a chance of knowing what is going on here. I hope this resolution would not be opposed."

The Hon'ble Mr. K. RAMA AYYANGAR:—"I beg to second this resolution. We have had a discussion on this subject on a previous occasion. Since then, it must be admitted that the conditions of the country have considerably changed. As far as I am able to see, I am able to make a clear statement that many more people take an interest in these questions now. I should like also to refer to the Hon'ble Mr. Todhunter's statement during the discussion of the last resolution in the Council. If he thinks that it is only in Salem, as pointed out by the Hon'ble Mr. Narasimha Ayyar, that the people take an interest in reading the proceedings of this Council, I may say that I know at least of three other places, where associations get the third part of the gazette and regularly go through the proceedings. A number of warm students of politics have taken to this. The Saradesamitran paper which is practically giving the report of the English press in Tamil is being actually devoured like anything. It must be conceded, whatever may be the opinion of the Hon'ble Mr. Todhunter, that these reports are mostly not quite accurate and often do not grasp the points that are really urged. The interest that is being taken by a large portion of the public is growing day by day. Whether a fair opportunity is being allowed for Honourable Members to place their case before the Government and whether the Government accept their views—if the public are given a chance of knowing what is being done, there will be considerable satisfaction. It is often said that we, non-official members here, are not able to achieve anything in this Council and we waste our time and are probably obstructing the Government in their proceedings and after all are not able to effect anything. But I think a full report of this Council's proceedings in the vernaculars if read out in mundis or chavadis and the bazaars of mufassal stations or taluk centres—if these things are taken up by the people, there will be much better understanding of the work of the Government and the non-official members. I am more concerned with the work of the Government than of non-official members. I have no doubt that they will be able to see that, whatever the result may be, they will realize that the non-official members are given a fair opportunity to represent their case and understand the spirit in which the Government reply to the non-official Members. This will be of use both to the non-official members and the Government. It is too late in the day to put off this matter. The war has changed the conditions of the country and the people are taking interest in these things and the life of the non-official members is not very easy now as in previous years. The Government also are judged much more carefully than before. Every kind of expression that we give here is being considered by the public as almost absolute truth which is not fully met by the Government. If the Council's proceedings are published fully, they will see that the Government have cases which to the best of their lights they are placing. There should be no more delaying. In the interests of the Government it is necessary that this resolution should be accepted and should be given effect to without further delay."

The Hon'ble Mr. C. G. TODHUNTER:—"Your Excellency, this is a resolution which has prima facie much that is very attractive about it, especially from the point of view of the Government. The Hon'ble Mr. Rama Ayyangar has drawn a picture of the simple villagers sitting round in the village mandai listening to the reading by the karnam of the full reports of the proceedings of this Council, a matter which, as we all know, involved last year over a thousand pages of print. He has called attention to the advance of political education which would follow from such a measure and has suggested to the Government the advantages they would derive from having their side of the case brought home to the people through the reading of the speeches of their members. I can assure him that, if the Government thought that these results would follow from the simple process of translating and publishing broadcast the proceedings of this Council, they would be only too glad to fall in with the proposal. Unfortunately, their experience has been what is expressed by the homely proverb that you can take a horse to the water, but you cannot make it drink. You can publish the proceedings broadcast, but you cannot make the people read them. This is especially applicable in the case of the full record of the proceedings of this Council. I cannot imagine in my own country any assembly aloud. In fact, I venture to doubt if many members of this Council have read in full in Hansard the speeches that have been made on the most important question before the country at the present day, the Indian Reforms. The fact is that people who read about politics at all like their reading in a more digestible form and with a little more spice in it than would be afforded by the voluminous record of the proceedings conducted in this Chamber with what the Hon'ble Mr. Narasimha Ayyar has described as sepulchral awe."

RESOLUTION RE TRANSLATION OF THE PROCEEDINGS OF THE 1015
LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL.

3RD APRIL 1919.]

(Mr. Todhunter; Mr. Venkatapati Raju.)

"I might quote statistics, as was done on the last occasion when this question was raised in Council, to show what demand there is for the vernacular portion of the gazette. I think, however, that it is unnecessary to trouble the Council with that again. The fact is that the question is one of supply and demand. If there is a demand by people who would be prepared to pay even a small sum for translations of abstracts of speeches of Members of this Council, there is an agency ready and anxious to supply it. The vernacular press does not devote a large part of its columns to the reproduction of news. I believe I am right in saying that there is only one vernacular newspaper in this presidency which subscribes to Reuter. Its matter is mainly political, and if speeches in this Council were good political copy, the vernacular press, which is not overburdened with funds, would be glad to make use of the abundant supply of copy which would be available at their hands for the asking. The fact that they do not do so seems to imply that there is no demand for the matter in question."

"In this connexion, I should like to take another instance of the absence of demand. The Honourable Member published some few years ago a book entitled 'My work on the Legislative Council,' which was applauded in the press as a valuable piece of political education. I should like to ask the Honourable Member whether he published this book in all the vernaculars of the presidency. I can find no trace of his having done so, and if he did not, I think that must be taken as an indication that there was no demand for a vernacular work of the kind for the purpose of the political education of the presidency."

"I think perhaps that one reason which prevented him from doing so was that which he mentioned on another occasion, namely, that the national languages do not readily adapt themselves to the expression of abstract ideas. I have heard it said more than once in this Council that even the official translations of the Acts are not intelligible to the people and I have a vivid recollection of a debate on the question of vernacular textbooks in science to which Dr. Navare contributed a most interesting description of the jargon, half English and half Tamil, which would have to be used to express scientific ideas. I have an even more vivid recollection of being called upon once to speak at a vernacular school which had recently erected a fine new flagstaff and a flag, when as I was trying to throw together a few ideas on the significance of the flag in the vernacular. I asked a Deputy Collector who was camping with me how he would render in Tamil 'The flag on which the sun never sets.' His reply after much thought was that it could be done, but that it would take a quarter of an hour to express the idea."

"The only province which has made any experiment in this direction is the United Provinces in which Urdu, as we all know, is the lingua franca. The Hon'ble Mr. C. P. Ramaswami Ayyar has told us, however, that English is the lingua franca in Madras and I think he is quite right and that for the present English is the language through which political ideas can best be conveyed."

"This being the case, I do not press the question of expense, though that is one that would have to be considered if it were decided to proceed with the scheme. We have to see that such finances as we have are used in each case to the best possible purpose and it would have to be shown before we embarked on a broadcast distribution of vernacular translations of the voluminous proceedings of this Council that the demand for the expenditure was more urgent than the other demands which were waiting for money."

"I will mention only one more thing, that is, the period within which the translation should be published. The Honourable Member says that these translations should be published with the English record within a fortnight. I have just shown in answer to the previous resolution that it would be very difficult to get the English record out within a fortnight. If we were to wait for the translations, it would take much more time to publish the proceedings; it would be more like two months than two weeks."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. VENKATAPATI RAJU:—"Your Excellency, the last observation of the Hon'ble Mr. Todhunter is quite correct, because it is not possible for us to print the translations along with the English proceedings. Therefore that latter portion the Hon'ble Mr. Narasimha Ayyar may delete and substitute 'as early as possible.' The other question is there is a difference between persons reading the Hansard proceedings and the persons reading the proceedings of our Council here. Here the people want particularly to know how the members returned to the Council are discharging their duty and these members often complain to their constituents that they are unable to do anything. If they had an accurate translation before them, they will see what the Government are doing, and it will be better in the interests of the Government as well as in the interests of the Members. It is not a matter whether all would read. The question is whether we should not give facilities to those who are inclined to read translation of the proceedings to do so. The Hon'ble Mr. Todhunter inquired why the Hon'ble Mr. Narasimha Ayyar did not publish his book in the vernacular. Of course, if he had handy such an office as the Government have, he would certainly have published it in a hundred vernaculars. The question is whether the Government would be able to do it. Is it not their duty to make the people understand what is actually going on? We often complain that our words are not heeded. The people should know how the Government treat us. I therefore earnestly suggest to the Government in the interests both of the Government and of their critics that the proceedings should be published."

1050 RESOLUTION RE CONTROL OF THE EXPORT TRADE IN OIL-SEEDS.

(Sir Gordon Fraser; Mr. Ramanuja Achariyar; [4TH APRIL 1919.
Mr. Suryanarayanamurti Nayudu; Sir Francis Spring.)

we will have them on some crop which will not pay them so well. It would be very foolish indeed, to interfere and put restrictions so that the ryots would cut down their area under groundnuts. Groundnut has been always recommended as a very profitable crop and ryots have done very well over it. I think the Honourable Member also said that shipping firms have done very well over it. I think I am correct in saying that as regards the last he is not quite correct, because we firms who have shipped kernels for the last twenty years—I think the Honourable Member from Cocanada, the Hon'ble Mr. Suryanarayanamurti Nayudu, would bear me out—at the end of the year if we can show half per cent or one per cent clear profit, we are very pleased with the business. If you control the export, ryots would not grow this crop. As the Hon'ble Mr. Ahmad Tambi Marakkayar mentioned, more is grown in the country than is wanted. If you control the export, it will lower the price and enable the people to use punnac as food, if they care to do so, which I very much doubt, but it will have a serious effect on the economic conditions of the country.

"There is another point which has been overlooked. I think the Hon'ble Mr. Wood pointed out the fallacy that India as a whole has not the monopoly of the oil-seed supply of the world. If we are going to put excessive export duties on the shipment of oil-seeds or refuse to allow them to be shipped, we would do great harm to the trade of the country. It would not prevent other countries from importing their supplies from elsewhere. It is a fact that a number of continental countries before the war imposed heavy duties on the importation of oils while at the same time allowing oil-seeds to be imported free. If we can in any way retaliate, if we can make them take oil from India, I should back up any suggestion to carry that into effect; but I am afraid we cannot. If we say that we will not ship them our oil-seeds, they get them from China or Senegal. I do not think the Honourable Member who proposed the resolution has considered that point. We ought to sympathize with the desire to ship oil instead of oil-seeds. But I do not see how we can enforce it. Then the Honourable Member referred to the shipments from this Presidency to China, America and Singapore. I may mention for the Honourable Member's information that in normal times India does not ship to these places, and the only reason that for the last one or two years large shipments went to these places was because the China groundnut crop was a failure. China itself grows ample groundnuts and does not want supplies from India at all. I do not think the Honourable Member's attack on Government in connexion with the oil-pressing industry is at all justified. It is a matter—I know for a fact—which has been before the Government for some years and just before the outbreak of the war, Government had a scheme to introduce oil-crushing in this town; orders were placed for machinery and part of this machinery had already arrived when the war broke out, and it was found impossible to get the rest of the machinery from Home. Ultimately the machinery in Madras was sold after waiting for about a year to the north of India where it could be utilized with advantage. I therefore oppose this resolution."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur V. K. RAMANUJA ACHARIYAR:—"Your Excellency, I also oppose this resolution from the landholders' point of view. Most of them are able to pay the high assessment demanded of them by raising oil-seeds, and if you are going to interfere with the export of oil-seeds, you will put a large burden on the shoulders of the landholders. Until Government are in a position to develop the country industrially and enable the ryots to sell their oil at the same price as they sell the seed now, I would deprecate any attempt to prevent the export of oil-seeds."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur K. SURYANARAYANAMURTI NAYUDU:—"Your Excellency, while agreeing fully with the Hon'ble Mr. Wood and the other members who opposed this resolution, I wish to say one or two words. This resolution says that 'steps should be taken to control the export of oil-seeds from this Presidency.' There are two sorts of oil-seeds in the north—the niger seed and the rape seed. The niger seed is not at all used for local consumption but only intended for export. Not an ounce of that is used for taking out oil in our districts. On account of having no tonnage in the last few years, nothing could be shipped from Ganjam and Vizagapatam districts, and even now in the Ganjam district in several places you find large stocks of niger seed unsold. So without having any factories to extract the oil simply, to stop exports or to levy any duty is suicidal in my opinion. So far even the crude way of extracting oil is done only with castor, gingelly, groundnuts and copra. Even for cotton seed which is produced in large quantities, there is not any factory worth the name in our part of the country for extracting oil. What is to become of all these cotton seeds? It is already a cheap article, and if any more duty is imposed over it, it will be impossible to compete with other countries, and even the little price that we are getting now, it will be impossible for us to get, there would be a loss. With these words I oppose the resolution."

The Hon'ble Sir FRANCIS SPRING:—"Your Excellency, I am sorry that I was not here when the resolution was moved and the result is I am ignorant as to why the Honourable Member moved it. With regard to oil-seeds I do not know if he wishes to keep the cake in the country for manuring purposes and prevent its export or whether he is thinking about the food supply derivable from the oil itself. It seems to me that the question is going to solve itself without any resolution of this sort if Messrs. Tata & Sons' scheme at Cochin is going to come to a head. I understand from Messrs. Tata's expert, Mr. Thompson, who is here and who has been several times here during the last four or five years, that in the Philippines this vegetable oil export business is done on a gigantic scale of which we have no knowledge in this country for the reason that they are able to put it in bulk into tank-ships without having to use casks. That seems easy enough until one looks into the details. We must have bulk ships lying along the works while the seed is being crushed, because of none of these oils will stand transit through 30 or 40 miles of pipe like earth oil, like kerosene oil. It must be within 100 yards as Mr. Thompson told me. That gets rid of the cask difficulty. I think the Hon'ble Sir Gordon Fraser will confirm me that there are no casks and there is very little wood for making casks and I do not think there is any machinery at present for making them."

The Hon'ble Sir GORDON FRASER:—"Yes, it is quite right."

The Hon'ble Sir FRANCIS SPRING:—"If the cake is to be retained in this country, for cattle food and manuring purposes, we shall have to do something on a very much bigger scale than sending the oil home in casks as is done, and Messrs. Tata & Sons seem to me fairly well absorbed in that problem in Cochin, and we shall have to wait and see what they do. Then we come to the question about the food value of the oils. I am not an expert in anything of that kind. I understand that the largest portion of this ground-nut oil that is sent to Europe goes to Marseilles and there it is deodorised—I do not know by what process, but I am told it is by a process of superheated steam and then it becomes a substitute for olive oil which is the universal ghee or butter for cooking purposes for the whole of South Europe. We cannot make anything out of it as food. It seems to me that the Director of Industries should turn his attention to the whole subject and see whether he cannot retain valuable human food and cattle food, and in the meantime Messrs. Tata & Sons may solve it on their own account."

The Hon'ble Sir FAIRLESS BARBER:—"The point I wish to touch on has been already mentioned by the Hon'ble Sir Gordon Fraser and the Hon'ble Sir Francis Spring. I am really sorry that for some reasons I am unable to support the resolutions; the arguments against it are too patent. But I hope the consideration of the Government will be given to the depletion of punnac from the country. I know a great deal of punnac is used for the country. If this discussion to-day leads to any consideration of the matter of the export of punnac, I shall be very glad."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur A. SUBBARAYALU REDDIYAR:—"Your Excellency, I have just one word to say. I am unable to agree with my Hon'ble Friend Mr. Ranga Achariyar. I would invite the attention of the Council to what the Hon'ble Mr. Wood has said. There are lots of ground-nut bags rotting in South Arcot and Pondicherry. Again the Hon'ble Sir Gordon Fraser has said that three or four lakhs of bags are still detained in the country. Why are they so detained? If really they can be otherwise utilized, would they not be utilized? It is certainly for want of plant and machinery to extract the oil from the ground-nut. Therefore I do not see any need for this resolution that demands the levy of an export duty if after all our ground-nuts are rotting in the country."

The Hon'ble Sir GORDON FRASER:—"May I say one word of explanation? The Hon'ble Sir Francis Spring referred to me for corroboration as to shipping the oil in casks. It may interest the Honourable Member and the other members to know that when oil is shipped from the Madras Presidency, in casks, the loss in weight on a voyage varies between 5 per cent and 10 per cent under present conditions, which makes the business almost impracticable."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO:—"Your Excellency, in connexion with the discussion of this resolution, I would like to invite the attention of Honourable Members to the report of the Industrial Commission as to the want of facilities for crushing oil in this country. That at present forms an insuperable obstacle in the way of utilizing the existing oil seeds in the country. Perhaps I might refer Honourable Members to page 35 of the report, where the Commission summarize the present state of the industry of oil-seeds and they mention the areas under each of the seeds—castor, copra, cotton, ground-nut, linseed, rape and mustard and other non-essential oil-seeds. They proceed to state that a very large proportion of the oil-seeds of this country are exported, and that: 'much of the balance is crushed either by small power plants or in country bullock mills, the latter of which are very inefficient in oil extraction.' They also state: 'The few mills of more modern type have found great difficulty in marketing their cake locally, and have also, in some cases, made serious mistakes in their technical management or business arrangements in the absence of proper advice. Little has been done hitherto by the overburdened Agricultural department to improve the local types of oil-producing plants or to investigate the conditions under which the oil is formed in the seeds. The methods of oil extraction have been equally neglected, and we recommend that this important matter should be examined by the experts who, we hope, will be available in the future. We recognize that the success of large scale mills producing oil for exports depends not only on the skill with which they are worked and on improvements yet to be effected in the means of transport (such as possibly the adoption of carriage in bulk), but on an even more important factor—the tariff policy which may be pursued in India and elsewhere.' Then they make various proposals for strengthening the staff and for financing this machinery for oil extraction. They proceed at page 62, also to dilate further on the present unsatisfactory state of things and the loss of the oil-cakes which are so useful for agricultural purposes in this country. Therefore I am entirely at one that if the question is to be considered now at once from the point of view of the producer, from the point of view of the ryot, there is absolutely no doubt that he will be a great sufferer in the absence of effective machinery for crushing the oil-seeds and for disposal of the by-products. If all the oil-seeds are retained in the country in the absence of this machinery, the state of things which my Hon'ble Friend Mr. Subbarayalu Reddiyar has depicted—a large number of bags being detained—must be the inevitable result. I am at one with the Hon'ble Mr. Wood that unless preliminary steps are taken to promote the development of industries and especially the oil-extracting machinery is installed, the mere effect of prohibiting the export of existing oil-seeds will not be of much good to the ryot. I am only talking from the point of view of the ryot. My Hon'ble Friend Mr. Ahmad Tambi Marakkayar was talking from the point of view of the exporting merchant shipper. I look at it from the point of view of the producer. I do not think the producer will be benefited to any extent under the existing circumstances."

1052 RESOLUTION RE CONTROL OF THE EXPORT TRADE IN OIL-SEEDS.

(Mr. M. Ramachandra Rao ; Mr. Ranga Achariyar.) [4TH APRIL 1919.

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR :—"Your Excellency, I am extremely glad that this proposition has evoked a discussion on this all important question. I am quite aware that there are different points of view in dealing with such an important subject. There are difficulties in the question, it is a question of considerable difficulty; but at the same time how long are we to neglect this question is the point which I wanted to bring before the Government by opening a discussion to-day on the subject. The question has to be faced; the economic loss to the country, the economic loss to the ryot, is great, and it is that aspect of view that strikes us—the loss to the agriculturist. Eventually when millions of tons are exported out of the country, which should be put on the soil to fructify and fertilize the soil, it is a far greater evil than the temporary evil of a fall in prices. I am looking at it from that point of view. I am quite aware that the fall in price of the stuff will tell heavily on the ryot for some years, but you must look at it from the result which will happen when you have created this country and valuable commercial products can be produced, and when you are exporting valuable commercial oil outside the country keeping the other things for the benefit of the country. If you are going to wait for that day, it will be too long. This is one of the methods of forcing the hands of Government and of opening their eyes to the necessities of the situation. I am quite aware that unless we have got effective crushing oil-mills, it is not possible to use all the stuff that is produced in the country and make sufficient use of the oil-seeds which are to be used in the country. But some beginning ought to be made and I think it is the proper time now to take time by the forelock, because the very figures quoted by the Hon'ble Mr. Wood are sufficient evidence to convince him that this is the time for action on the part of the Government. For once again if you allow the export and the people wish to go back to the old days of free exports of millions of tons of oil-seeds, you will find it difficult to restrict it afterwards. When you have created a market, especially when you have to act in concert with the Allies, and when France has acquired its former hold on the groundnut produce of this country, it will be very difficult for us to intervene. Now is the time to take action. We have been able to prevent export for the last two or three years, and therefore it would be easier for us to continue to prevent the export now. If we allow the export freely, it will be difficult to restrict the export hereafter. I would therefore strongly urge upon the Government the necessity of continuing the present practice of restricting free export. I do not suggest the prohibition of export. The substantial gain in the end to the country will be very large and will far outweigh the momentary disadvantages of the temporary loss which the people might be put to. I am quite aware—the Hon'ble Mr. Wood misunderstood me—I am quite aware that there was a reduction in the quantity shipped during the war and that was because there was the difficulty of transport and also there was the order preventing the export of oil-seeds. That has been now withdrawn, the restriction has been withdrawn, and I am afraid that the old state of things will revive; that is to say, little will be left in the country. Foreign countries require this commodity very largely and although there may be a temporary lull in the market,—it is quite true that four lakhs of bags are lying idle without demand,—yet when shipping facilities are restored, I am sure that the old demand for oil-seeds will revive with greater vigour and after that, are you going to allow that state of things to come back? That is the question which I wish the Government to face, now that they can get the machinery. They had the scheme ready, they had part of the machinery out, but unfortunately they sold it out. Now that they have a scheme ready for fixing the machinery and for extracting the oil, I think it is time the Government establish that industry. I therefore think that this will be preparing the ground for the Government to embark on industrial enterprise. I do not think there can be any objection. Now that they have started the soap industry, I hope Government would encourage any efforts made on its behalf to start this valuable industry. It is too valuable to be lost to the country. If we allow the free export, we will not be able to plant the industry. It is quite true that private enterprise has not come forward in the last few years. That is due to the lack of education for which the Government are responsible, the lack of machinery for which all of us are responsible. There is no use throwing it as an argument now. If the Government were not able to establish the plant, how do you expect private individuals to establish the plant, the necessary plant for extracting the oil? Therefore that is not an argument which could apply to this case that during the last four years, no private individual has come up to establish the plant. I have listened to the arguments of the other side, but my own view is that we are blinded rather by the present interests of present-day individuals, merchants, landholders. Both of them look at it from the point of view of their own individual interest for the present; they are not looking at it from the larger interests of the country, and that is why they oppose this resolution. But if we look at it from the point of view of the larger interests of the country, I am sure the Government will not hesitate one moment longer to take the necessary steps, both by way of preventing the export and establishing the necessary machinery to make this industry a thriving industry by which the agriculturists will be saved and the country will become industrially great. I therefore press this resolution."

The resolution was put to the Council and lost by a large majority.

RESOLUTION RE FORMATION OF A GRAIN-STORING DEPARTMENT.

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR :—"Your Excellency, I have the honour to move—

'XIV. This Council recommends to His Excellency the Governor in Council that they may be pleased to organize grain-storing departments out of the existing Revenue and Settlement Parties or otherwise for the purpose of storing food-grains in all district and taluk centres for sale in retail in times of need.'

"I do not think many words are needed to commend this proposition for your acceptance. The situation as regards food-grains is admittedly serious, and what the people are going to do months hence for their food-supply is a problem that is faced with anxiety by Government and their advisers. I know they are considering this question from all points of view. If you allow private parties to supply the demand, it is sure to raise prices. Already the prices prevailing in the market are beyond the reach of the people and when the month of Adi comes, Your Excellency, it is well known that these prices will go up much higher unless there is some department which is in charge of food-grains controlling the prices either directly or indirectly. It is difficult for the Government to control prices directly. It is a very difficult problem. The Government had to consider this question in conference and they found it difficult to come to a conclusion so as to be able to control the retail prices in the various markets. There is an indirect way in which they can control prices, and that is by Government themselves taking up the storing of grains, so that they may be available in times of need. If the Government have such stores at taluk centres and in headquarters of the firkas, then I think when the actual time of need comes, they will be able to supply at well regulated prices to the people who are in need of it. That is one indirect method of controlling retail prices in the bazaar and in the market. It is not a new thing at all in this country. The old Indian governments used to have granaries; they collected their revenue in kind, half of which they immediately disposed of and half they retained in stores in various granaries for the purpose of selling it to the people in times of scarcity. That is referred to in a passage in 'Arthashastra.' A particular officer was in charge of it, who was called the superintendent of the store-house, and 'of the store thus collected, half shall be kept in reserve to ward off calamities of the people and only other half shall be used and the old collection shall be replaced by a new supply.' So that it will be only reverting to the habits of the people and the customs of the country if we start a grain-storing department.

"It need not involve much additional cost; and that is why I suggest that this may be entrusted to the existing revenue and settlement parties who are working in the various districts. I do not think much staff is needed. Even the ordinary Revenue Department may be entrusted with this duty, and, after all, that would be a store to which the people would go in times of need. It is only when prices go up and merchants and traders profiteer that this method would be resorted to, to put an end to it. The little that has been done by private persons and firms like Messrs. Best & Co., by supplying rice at cheaper prices has had its own effect on the retail prices in the market, but it is not correct to expect private people to come to the rescue on such occasions. This is an occasion when the people have a claim upon the Government to come forward, because prices are abnormally high, higher than even the prices during the worst famine; and the time of need is bound to come within two or three months; if unfortunately the next monsoon proves a failure, then the situation will be intolerable. That being so, not only should we prevent the export of all sorts of food-grains from the province, but at the same time we should take steps to see that profiteering does not take place, and this I think will be an effective method of preventing profiteering. After all, the Government will not lose. They will have merely to buy at the various centres and store in the various taluk centres. I do not think they will lose anything by it. Therefore it will only be a case of investment of some cash in grain, but it will be doing very useful work indeed, which is highly necessary for the people and in accordance with the ancient traditions of the country and the people will gratefully appreciate the efforts of Government. Government will become very popular with the people and this is a movement which will be in the right direction. The people will think 'here is a fatherly Government which is taking care of us in times of need.' To create that political asset itself, this money will be well spent. I therefore commend this resolution to the acceptance of the Government."

The Hon'ble Mr. K. Chidambaranatha Mudaliyar seconded the resolution.

The Hon'ble Mr. L. E. BUCKLEY :—"Your Excellency, I did not know, when the Honourable Gentleman put this proposal on paper, whether he meant it to be a permanent policy or whether he meant it to meet the needs of the present day. I also expected when he put the proposal before the Council that he would possibly refer to the previous experience in these matters. A good deal has been said on the subject of grain-storing in the past. I may refer to the report of the Indian Famine Commission of 1880, which has dealt with it at some length. I do not wish to make any long quotation. The most important objection is the question of cost. It says: 'It is obvious that any system of State storage, to be effective must, be continuous and that the quantity stored must be the maximum supply that can be required on any occasion.' It implies not merely an intention to dispense with the assistance of trade in the food-supply of the large masses of the people when prices are very high, but the adoption of a policy which may place such assistance wholly out of reach. The Famine Commission contemplates that if the Government step in this way it will oust private trade. I expected also that the Honourable Member would have relied for support upon the minute of dissent recorded by two of the members of that Commission on this point. They recommended this grain-store business, but they did so with a very important qualification that it should only be in localities with no lines of railway communication, or where railway communication was difficult. They referred to that point more than once. In the proposal of the Honourable Gentleman, he does not speak of those places which are far away from railway communication, but he selects places which are best served, namely taluk headquarters and district headquarters. Since the report of 1880 I may say the railways in India have increased from 6,000 to 7,000 miles to something over 35,000 miles and in the Madras Presidency the mileage has increased from about 1,300 miles to something over 4,000 miles. There is no doubt that conditions which existed at the time the report of 1880 was written no longer exist. There has been also a considerable expansion of communication by road. There is the question of cost, and before I go to that, I would like to refer to one thing and that is that this policy which was enunciated in 1880 by the Famine Commission was fully endorsed by the subsequent Famine Commission of 1898, and it has been accepted by the Government of India and it now forms a part of our instructions in the Famine Code. The Famine Code makes no provision for the State providing grain, but it does say that it shall be the duty of the Collector, when the work is opened, to provide the contractor with ample store of grain which should be available to the workers; and if in any part of the district, the supply of grain is short, the Collector has power to make advances to the contractor in order to ensure that the grain shall come in. All this is done with the object of keeping the State out of the grain-storing business and to do as far as possible all that is possible to foster private trade. I had no details from the Honourable Gentleman but in the quotation I made, it is said that the supply should be ample, should be full enough for a long period. It is contemplated that the Government should not drive the private trader out and that Government should supply the people. Suppose we supply for one million people for the year, the amount that we shall have to invest will be something over 2½ crores. If what we have to supply was dry grains, the amount will be something over 1½ crores. That is a considerable amount.

1054 RESOLUTION RE FORMATION OF A GRAIN-STORING DEPARTMENT.

(Mr. Buckley.)

"At present it is quite true as the Honourable Gentleman says that we are suffering from a great shortage of stocks. We are getting from Burma considerable supplies of rice and these will be in the hands of private merchants. At our recent conference, we recommended that steps should be taken to see that middlemen make no profit and that importers sell to retailers or to the dealers up-country. There is also a further amount of 136,000 tons which is available from the deltas and which is dealt with in the same way. Except these two, what sources have the Government got? The Honourable Gentleman wants us to put forward other sources of supply. With regard to paddy, some of it may perhaps be in the hands of millers or merchants but a great deal of it is held in the hands of the ryots. With regard to dry grains which are perhaps more important for the poorer members of the community, there is not the slightest doubt that stocks are held entirely in the villages by the ryots themselves. To get those stocks, two methods are open; one of them is to coax them by offering fair prices. It will be necessary to offer very large and increased prices even over the existing prices if the Government are going to get these stocks. If Government are going to buy, the price of these commodities will be immediately raised and Government will have to pay an enormous price; and that they will have to get back from the people who buy from them.

"Another way to get stocks is by commandeering. I do not know if the Honourable Gentleman recommends a wholesale system of commandeering. I am myself against it. It may be done possibly on a small scale to meet a sudden emergency in certain localities, but as a general widespread policy I think it will be impossible; especially with regard to the dry grains we do not know what there is in villages and where it is kept. A Collector of a district wrote to me the other day and said that the total store in the village had been returned by the people as 15 tons. Three months afterwards, they had a fire which consumed the hamlet and the people said that in that hamlet there were 30 tons which were kept which were destroyed. We have no idea of how much stock there is. It may be in some parts we might be successful, if we try to commandeer, in getting a certain amount of grain without much trouble; but I should be sorry for anybody who was ordered by the Collector of Kurnool to go and commandeer stocks in some part of the district. He will certainly have his head broken and those who go with him may not come back at all. I deal with it to show how extremely difficult it is for Government to attempt at the present moment to secure any large stocks for sale to the people beyond that which is now expected to come into the country from Burma, Bengal and the deltas.

"I have referred to the question of cost to show how very large it must be. In one case that I quoted, I made provision only for 29 per cent of the population. There is also the fact that this question of grain-storing has been considered by the Government of India in the past not only on one occasion, but on two occasions and the policy against grain-storage has been adopted in the Famine Code. Under these circumstances, I am to say that the Local Government are not ready to address the Government of India to be permitted to spend money in buying grains or in storing grains or to depart from the policy which is laid down in the Famine Code. It is obvious that the Local Government cannot take these steps on their own account. The amount of money that is at stake is too great for the Local Government to undertake that responsibility without the sanction of the Government of India and they will be acting directly contrary to their policy."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur V. K. RAMANUJA ACHARIYAR:—"Your Excellency, I am unable to agree with my Honourable Friend Mr. Ranga Achariyar that a grain-storing department should be created. The settlement parties in all the districts and the officers of the Revenue Department have full work. If the grain store should be taken up, the work will be left in the hands of the subordinates. This resolution assumes that it will be for the benefit of the people. On other occasions, we are not tired of saying that they are corrupt. Are they going to improve? The money that will go to the profit of the merchants will go into the pockets of the clerks and other subordinates of the Revenue Department. I therefore deprecate the acceptance of this resolution. I do not want to have any more department of Government than we have now."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. VENKATAPATI RAJU:—"Your Excellency, the Hon'ble Mr. Ramanuja Achariyar who has of late become a non-official mentor is opposed to this resolution. He says that there would be bribery if any departments are opened. I do not know whether my Honourable Friend is sure that he has seen all other departments pure. Therefore, we need not go into that question. The question is whether it is necessary. The Hon'ble Mr. Buckley's answer only amounts to the usual affirmation of Government that they want to leave things alone. That is not a satisfactory position to be taken up by Government. There may be defects in the actual resolution or in the wording in which the purpose in view is intended to be served. In these matters, we expect not that defects should be pointed out but some constructive methods of meeting the situation should be suggested. Nobody would be satisfied if errors are pointed out. Officials who have so much experience behind them and so much of official file and papers for their guidance should be in a position to tell us how best to meet the situation. Is it the view of the Government that there is nothing to be done at all? If they think that everything is quite satisfactory, and nothing need be done, the answer of the Hon'ble Mr. Buckley is quite intelligible. Otherwise I naturally expected that he would suggest some other method. He has been kind enough to suggest that in cases of emergency he has no objection to open grain stores at some convenient centres; he has no objection on his own behalf or on behalf of the Government."

The Hon'ble Mr. L. E. BUCKLEY:—"At the conference held the other day, it was recommended that Collectors should have discretion to open depots to meet the situations of emergency."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. VENKATAPATI RAJU:—"I do not know whether a resolution passed or anything agreed to at the Foodstuffs Conference would be quoted as an authority like the Famine Code, as another Veda for us. I do not know whether the Government accepted or rejected it. There is the admission there that Collectors should be given power to store grains. In this age when we have to go on scientific lines, we do not know up to now what the exact situation is. We do not know what food supply is available and there are complaints from every nook and corner from several districts that there are no food-stuffs available; and the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar thought that this was one mode of meeting the situation. If that is not the way; what is the other way? We are generally referred to, and we are told that we cannot go beyond, the Famine Code. But I appeal to the Government earnestly and ask them, are we following the Famine Code? According to the Famine Code, if warning rates prevail, some steps should be taken and if scarcity rates are prevalent, some other steps should be taken. Now not only warning rates but scarcity rates prevail, and even scarcity rates were double or treble of the prevailing rates. And what steps are taken by the Government? The Famine Code is used as a shield against doing anything, but it is not used to save the people when they are suffering. I do not think any more dire calamity would happen than now. The famine of 1877 or 1887 pales into insignificance when we compare the prices of the present day. The people are suffering awfully. I am not sure that the coming year would be better. Under these circumstances, are we not to do something whether as a permanent measure or as a temporary measure to relieve the situation? In either case, it must receive more sympathetic consideration than has been shown by the answer given by Government, and therefore I appeal to the Government that they should do something. Even so far as suggested by the Foodstuffs Conference, Collectors of districts should be given discretion to store grain in places where famine rates are prevalent so that it may be available for persons to purchase it within the means allowed to them."

The Hon'ble Mr. K. RAMA AYYANGAR:—"Your Excellency, I suggested during the last meeting that some steps would have to be taken and I suggested that the Government must be able to have control over the stocks available to be disposed of, to be sent to the parts where extraordinary contingency might arise. That is what I said in the course of my speech. The Hon'ble Mr. Buckley to-day has referred to the recommendations of the Famine Commission who have thought of that question as absolutely ousting the merchants from the market. I do not think that question arises now at all. The second point that he raised is that Government if they go in at all, must go in only if they can supply all the population for a particular period. That does not arise, even. In fact, it is high time now that the Government must be possessed of information as to the quantity of stocks of food-grains available in the Presidency. It may be that exact figures could not be given. It may be that some amount that has already been harvested has been exported from this Presidency and other questions of imports from other provinces will have to be taken into consideration. But these are not impossible of determination. It cannot be said the Director of Food Supplies, who has been already more than six months there, has not been able to gather the necessary information. The question arises whether in the whole Presidency there may not be positions causing extraordinary anxiety coming up in a few months more. We are, according to the Tamil months, very nearly in the beginning of Chitrai, and about the months of Ani, Adi, Avani and Purattasi which will correspond to the latter half of August, September and October and November, we will find that food-grains sell at the highest rate. At present we find in all the districts it sells at four measures to six measures of paddy per rupee which means about 2 to 2½ measures of rice. There is no doubt that Rangoon rice possibly sells at 3½ or 4 measures, if it is got in the way in which it is being done. I do not know if Rangoon rice is going to be available as much as we desire and at the rates at which it is selling during the coming months that I referred to. Even Rangoon produces paddy only once or twice in the year and it is not possible to sell it at this rate unless we take steps to collect a large quantity of paddy or rice which may be necessary to be distributed in times of absolute necessity. The question of grain-storing in the district centres as raised by the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar may be objectionable. In fact, I do not think that Government should be asked when paddy is being sold at 4 to 6 measures to purchase paddy at that rate in the several districts for utilisation later on. That may be a difficult position. It may be equally difficult to say that even in the deltaic tracts, it will be proper to store paddy which will enable the Government to sell at a rate which would be quite convenient to the people without incurring considerable loss. But whatever that may be, it is clear that paddy is available in other places at rates much better than it is available in this Presidency. Similarly also, other grains are available elsewhere and the Government of India must have information on that. The Director of Civil Supplies must also have similar information. It is time enable them to supply to the Collectors when necessary or when it is needed when famine conditions prevail. The question has been asked whether the Government should invest any money or whether it should be left to private purchasers. I know that Messrs. Best & Co. do get rice from Rangoon. I do not know if they propose to store the grain which will be sufficient for this Presidency for about two or three months. I do not think it is possible for them to store like that and if they are trying to store like that, they will not be able to relieve the present conditions. Therefore the only course that will be possible will be to have some store under the control of Government enabling them to distribute during the conditions which must arise in a year of this kind. It is not possible to expect any crop in the next four months and months and all that is necessary to relieve this kind of distress will have to be taken note of. I have no doubt that in such years as this, every ryot keeps paddy for his upkeep and the upkeep of his family. It is quite possible that they are careful enough, but there are more than 40 per cent of the population who have to purchase it then and there. They have no homesteads to store nor lands to yield them the foodstuffs. Unless Government are satisfied that the whole quantity of foodstuffs available in the country will be sufficient for the people, it is time that some steps are taken to have control over the foodstuffs in parts where they sell cheaper so that they might utilize them in the coming three months. If the next harvest fails, that is another matter. The question does not arise that the Government should have enough supply to supply the whole demand. They must have a supply only to regulate the prices. In connexion with the Forest Committee's report, the question was considered as to what amount the forest department should send to the fuel depots to regulate the price. I do not think that the full quantity necessary to supply all the people that are going to the bazaars for purchasing food-grains will be necessary, but it is only necessary to regulate prices. That can be ascertained and that amount will have to be under the control of Government, and for any expenditure on that score some lakhs will be available easily for it especially when we have not had to provide for famine relief for some years. I do not think that the Government of India or this Government will find it difficult to have fifty lakhs or one crore for making this provision which is necessary and which must be arranged to enable the Government to relieve the serious situation arising in small localities. Such a provision must be made."

1056 RESOLUTION RE FORMATION OF A GRAIN-STORING DEPARTMENT.

(Mr. Rama Ayyangar ; Mr. Krishna Rao.)

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. KRISHNA RAO :—" Your Excellency, those who have been watching the work of this Council during the last five years and those who have been associated with the work of this Council during that period would have noticed that we have been gradually developing a spirit of destructive criticism. It was, I thought, more prominent in the case of the official Members; but we have latterly seen its development in a marked manner even amongst our-selves, the non-official members of this Council. I am led to make this remark by the observations that the Hon'ble Mr. Ramanuja Achariyar made in discussing the resolution of the Hon'ble Mover. This proposal consists of three parts. It states that in times of need, the provision should be made for sale in retail of food-grains in the district and taluk centres. This is the main question which has been raised in this resolution and that is how I understand it.

RESOLUTION RE FORMATION OF A GRAIN-STORING DEPARTMENT. 1057

4TH APRIL 1919.]

(Mr. Krishna Rao; Mr. Narasimha Ayyar.)

Shall we or shall we not, in times of need, make provision for retail sale of food-grains? That is the essence of this resolution. As one method of carrying out this object, he suggests that a grain-storing department be organized out of the existing revenue and settlement parties. Honourable Members of this Council are aware that while we are trying to deal with this important subject affecting the whole of this Presidency, and while we notice an abnormal increase of prices which has not been noticed in any of the previous famines, the question whether the best method is to have restrictions on traffic or to prohibit exports either from district to district or outside the province or to have the maximum prices fixed was considered by a conference; and I have no doubt that a solution will soon be arrived at. As another solution of that problem, the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar suggests that provision be made for sale of these food-grains in district and taluk centres. Is it or is it not a proposition which we can subscribe to? It will be hard indeed if any one cannot advance that position; if you do not find it possible to make provision all at once throughout the Presidency, why not start the experiment even in a limited scale in certain specified tracts. There are very serious difficulties if we are called upon to purchase and store food-grains for the 42 millions of people in this Presidency all at once; but it is possible to carry on experiments in a milder manner and to a limited extent in a few selected areas. The specific suggestion made in this resolution is that the existing revenue and settlement parties might be utilized for this purpose and that a grain-storing department might be formed. I know that to call upon Your Excellency's Government to utilize this existing department for particular purposes cannot be effective unless the Government also are of the same view and approach the question in the same spirit. The experience which we now have is this. Taking advantage of the offer made by Messrs. Best & Co. and other companies attempts have been recently made in several mufassal centres, to store grain and to make it available for each individual consumer though to a limited extent. There are some municipalities which have taken steps in that direction; and I must say, though with a considerable feeling of humiliation and degradation, that at a place like Nellore which has been supplying very good rice throughout the Presidency—the rice of which place is known for its purity and quality—I found it necessary to send on behalf of the municipality first for one consignment of 250 bags of Burma rice and then for a second consignment of 1,000 bags. I say that with humiliation. We have exhausted the existing stocks and it has now become necessary to afford some relief to the poor by taking advantage of the terms offered by Messrs. Best & Co. and selling rice in limited quantities. The whole quantity required cannot be supplied; and we have been supplying about half a rupee worth or one rupee worth per day. In a few days, the demand was so much that we had to send for the police to keep back the crowd. And once it was started in one place, will the Council believe me when I say that persons in other parts of the district began to ask me: 'are you confining it to the municipality, can you not afford relief to other parts of the district?' It is not possible for one to cope with the situation unless the Government also enter into the spirit of the problem and try to afford relief to the people. Your Excellency, I do not at this stage wish to make a special plea for the special proposal put forward; but it will suffice for the present if I convince Your Excellency's Government that it is possible to have grain storing depots in various centres. Whether it is to be done by encouraging private agencies or by affording them financial assistance or by other means is a matter for further detailed consideration in various places. I would venture to make a suggestion that in various places it is possible to utilize the existing Revenue departments. I have not the slightest doubt that tahsildars and revenue inspectors would only be too glad to do what they can in this direction. The reason is obvious. Wherever they go, whenever they visit each individual pattadar or landholder or ryot, they are affronted with this question; and the ryots complain to them invariably—how are we to get along with these increased prices, how are we to live? They will only be too glad if means can be found to enable them to store grain in important centres to afford some relief to at least the poorer classes of the people. I only wish that this experiment is tried in some places. I only trust that we do not on this occasion, while we accept the principle, scan and criticise the wording of this resolution as to the establishment of grain depots by the Revenue Department. Let us not look at it from that point of view. That is my request and my appeal to both non-official members and official members. If we are agreed that the times are so bad that it is necessary and imperative for us to afford relief by storing grain, let us devise some means to meet that evil. That is the only object with which this resolution is moved and this recommendation is made to the Government. After all, what is the effect of this resolution if it is accepted? It is a mere recommendation, leaving it to the Governor in Council to solve it in the best manner possible; so we need not be so chary as to the wording of the resolution. If once you accept the principle, I would appeal to Your Excellency's Government to find some means to have some grain depots in various parts of the country, preferably with the assistance of the Revenue department. The revenue inspector's fika is very limited; and the revenue inspector is in touch with the people and knows where the shoe pinches; and if only we give the necessary funds and assistance, he will be only too glad to afford relief. Even if we cannot afford relief to all parts of the Presidency, we might try it in some parts which are worst affected and that to a limited extent. I strongly support the resolution."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR :—" Your Excellency, I wish to make very few observations and I am tempted to do so by what the Hon'ble Mr. Ramanuja Achariyar has stated. He has raised an objection to the adoption or to the acceptance of this resolution and

1058 RESOLUTION RE FORMATION OF A GRAIN-STORING DEPARTMENT.

(Mr. Narasimha Ayyar ; Mr. Thonger.)

stated that its acceptance would necessarily increase corruption and that it would divert the profits of traders to the pockets of revenue clerks. I am under the impression that the Hon'ble Mr. Ramanuja Achariyar is obviously not aware of the conditions which now obtain as to the transport or sale of grain in parts like Gobichettipalayam in Erode taluk. I can give him a bit of what I can vouch for as accurate information and he will be then able to say whether his remarks will hold good. I agree with him that in all undertakings by the Government, in the subordinate ranks there will be a general tendency to corruption and the more we put them in charge, the more facilities they will have for corruption. But to a certain extent this remark is true of other walks of life and undertakings by other persons and institutions than Government. The question is whether a Government department should be given the chance of undertaking the work which will give more scope for the subordinate wheels being oiled. I wish to mention one fact which will form the answer to that objection. At present the transport and sale of grain in certain places, that I am well acquainted with, are attended with considerable difficulty. Landholders of Gobichettipalayam have a piteous tale to tell as to how grain is dealt with. The landholder has to sell the grain for getting his wherewithal and getting his necessities. Numbers of people who paid hundreds of rupees told me that they could not otherwise carry their grain from their own place to another place. There are emergency committees with a number of officials and non-officials and they object to the request to transport and if by any chance they are taken to the next shandy, the carts cannot return because some official order is issued or some instruction is issued by some official saying that carts should be taken to some central place. On other occasions, they say you must sell it at half the price. I am myself a landholder and I know this. If in order to avoid this, they keep the grain in their own houses, they cannot sell it and how are they to get the wherewithal to get along when they are told definitely to sell at half rates? Some of these people try to take their bags along when the officials are not watching and then either robbers get hold of them or the more open robbers, the village officers, extort three per cent regularly of it as taxation, improper taxation. I am told that six pies in the rupee is levied by the village officer. Just two days back, one of the very rich mirasidars of the place was here and he was telling me a piteous tale and he asked me 'why don't you come to help us and how do you expect us to get along?' I am afraid that some of these things go unheard. It is hard to get out of them. We have certain very high objects in view when we institute emergency committees and put in an officer of food control and make other regulations. A certain amount of oppression by subordinates will prevail; but we must minimise corruption. There is no use talking of this objection seriously unless it is put forward that food control should be made a regular feature of Government's work at all times. That is unthinkable. It is bad economy; it is an unnecessary amount of trouble inflicted upon the people and that is why this resolution says that in times of need this should be done. We recognize that the arrangement is full of difficulties. The Hon'ble Mr. Buckley has not overstated the difficulties when he stated that there are plenty of difficulties, but we are dealing with times of need. Are you not giving a lot of trouble and difficulty to various persons in the steps taken to meet the present situation? This will give less trouble than some other steps that we have taken, and I think therefore the objection put forward by the Hon'ble Mr. Ramanuja Achariyar cannot have much weight. I do not think it is necessary to go into the other objections. The position is too patent. All State management is attended with difficulty, but this proposition refers to extraordinary conditions and to my knowledge we have not come across conditions of this sort prevailing at any time before. For special conditions special remedies are suggested. I hope Government will view the question in a large and liberal spirit and see whether the adoption of this course will not be possible and necessary."

The Hon'ble Mr. J. H. THONGER:—"Your Excellency, the efforts of the legal mind to grapple with economic and industrial problems are a source of continual enjoyment to me. Within the last day or two, we have had several instances where we have had the cart put before the horse. Yesterday it was a case of vernacular translations of the proceedings of the Council and we were recommended to invest considerable sums of money in the translation of these proceedings — and then wait for the demand. This morning we were told that we must stop the export of oil-seeds for the benefit of an industry which does not exist. Now we are told that we must build granaries for grain which is not there. The essence of this resolution is that in times of need we should do these things. I may refer this Council back thousands of years to a great authority on this subject, the mythical Joseph. He did not take steps in times of need but he took steps in times of plenty. He had seven years in which to prepare for the coming times of need. That was the time when he took steps to introduce granaries. He did not wait for famine years. That is the position we have now arrived at. Very unfortunately we were not in the position of Joseph. We were not aware of the times coming upon us; otherwise preparations might have been made. Now these times having come upon us, the Government is doing all they possibly can to meet the needs of the situation and I cannot recommend in times of need the expenditure of public money on the construction of granaries which must remain empty. This is not the time to store. The only possible thing that we can do at the present moment is to eke out the available supply. I take it that if this is done carefully, we may see our way through the next three or four months without serious consequences except to the financial side. If we do what is recommended, I should be sorry for the Government. The pill has been nicely sugared. The mover of the resolution says that if the Government does this thing it will become a most popular Government. I can hardly believe it. If the rumour goes about in the bazars that the Madras Government are going to commandeer foodstuffs and store them up when the people are on the verge of starvation, I think the very opposite effect would be produced in the minds of the people. There is only one possible course to follow at the present moment and that is to eke out supplies. It is very interesting to see the facility with which the views and arguments of non-official members change. There have been incontrovertible arguments brought forward that a certain previous resolution was impracticable, and the onus is then immediately thrown upon Government to say what is practicable. The fact that Government is already doing all that it possibly can is not allowed to carry any weight. The fact that there is a shortage of grain is held to be the direct responsibility of Government, and Government must in some way or other produce sufficient from somewhere or other to make up for the deficiency despite the world shortage of foodstuffs which is known to exist. The argument is unfair—it is a burden that must rest upon the shoulders of all—each and every one doing what he can to surmount a difficult position. I would suggest a compact between the Government and the non-official members somewhat to this effect, that the Government will guarantee a sufficiency of foodstuffs at the coming harvest if the non-official members will guarantee the monsoon."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR:—"I would just like to make a word of personal explanation. A personal reference was made to my motion about the translation into vernaculars of the speeches in this Council. I could not quite catch how exactly my legal mind had anything to do with the difficulty of entering into economic matters, and how that had any connexion with such a purely literary matter. Probably the economic gentleman is out of his element in entering into the literary world."

The Hon'ble Yaqub Hasan Sahib Bahadur:—"Your Excellency, the suggestion of the proposer resembles what Joseph had made in the time of the Pharaoh of Egypt thousands of years ago. It may be remembered that the King of Egypt had a dream and he saw so many fat sheep and so many lean sheep. That dream was interpreted by prophet Joseph to mean a prosperous years followed by years of famine and prophet Joseph advised the king to lay by a store of grain when there was plenty to be had so that in the years of famine there could be some supply for the poor people. I am afraid that what was possible in those primitive days is impossible nowadays with international commerce and our present circumstances. I am afraid this advice does not seem to me at all practicable."

"I cannot understand how Government can come into the market to compete with the merchants and purchase grain and keep it aside. It should be remembered that it is not scarcity of stock so much that brings on this famine condition as the inability to pay the prices demanded for the supply. In these days of transport, stocks can be taken wherever there is a scarcity of stocks, but the only thing is that it is sold at a price at which people are not able to purchase. Also when there is failure of grain, the cultivators have no occupation and their earning is gone; their means of the livelihood is gone and they have not got money to pay for their foodstuffs. That is the real trouble and not the scarcity of food. If the Government purchase in anticipation of the future scarcity of grain, prices will go up and then when afterwards it is to be sold, Government will not be able to sell it at cheaper prices than other merchants because they would have paid higher prices than other merchants would pay in importing from places where it can be had at market price. I do not think it necessary to elaborate the point. It is enough to show that this scheme is altogether impracticable."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"I have listened with interest and amusement to the criticism of my proposition by three of my non-official friends and the official spokesman. I expected the Hon'ble Mr. Ramanuja Achariyar with his vast experience as revenue officer to speak on the merits of the proposition as to the advisability of Government embarking to any extent in storing food-grains to meet times of need. He carefully omitted that portion of the resolution, but he had a fling on the Revenue department and the Settlement department of which, I know, he is not over-fond. He took occasion to cast reflections on the Revenue and Settlement departments which may or may not be true. My resolution is wide enough, my object in suggesting the Revenue and Settlement departments was that they would be better employed in these calamitous times in doing this useful work of having some grain in readiness to meet times of need than going and vexing the ryots with resettlement operations. That is one of the objects I had in view in suggesting that the Revenue and Settlement departments might be utilized for this purpose. But that is only an optional matter. It is quite true that there are five or six parties working, but they can be distributed throughout the Presidency if they are relieved of their ordinary duties on this extraordinary occasion. But if that is not feasible, other steps can be taken by the Government. The question is whether it is wise for the Government to embark upon this policy or not. It is quite true that the legal mind does not arrogate to itself all wisdom, but it is also quite true that the business mind thinks that all wisdom is centred in the business man and that other people have not got any business to interfere in business matters. But we know that the legal mind controls the world and all business men have to bow their heads and bend their knees before the legal mind at the present day. But leaving that question apart, the question now is whether the times are not so serious that something should be done on the part of the Government. Is it wise to trust to the private trader to supply the needs of the people? It is the well-known experience of all of us, those of us who have only to depend for food-grains upon other people, that we must go and buy in the market and act prudently; we must go at the time of harvest and buy the store needed for this year. I think it is the experience of all business people to buy at the time of harvest when the price of the commodity is not so great as it is some months later. As I stated in my opening remarks, the price of food-grains is bound to rise in the month of Adi and afterwards. That is common experience every year, whether a year of plenty or a year of scarcity. Therefore, as it is, the situation is abnormal, and if you are going to trust to the private trader to supply the needs of the province, what I anticipate will happen is that the trader will put up his prices in those months. How are you going to prevent it? Are you going to depend upon Burma rice in order to control the price of local food-grains? Experience surely must have taught us that Burma rice has not got such a charming effect on the price of local foodstuffs and therefore something must be done. As it is, the merchants are buying and storing things. Why do they store up? It is to make a profit which will come in the later months. They are sure to make their profit. How are you going to prevent their making large profits? Would it be wise to allow prices to go up beyond what they are now? Would it be wise? Would you not be running serious risk? Has it not gone beyond the bearing point? How are you going to meet the situation two months hence or three months hence? I want you to compete with the merchants now in buying and storing and keeping it ready so that in some measure you may control the prices. You are now depending upon private persons doing it. I think it is a foolish policy to depend upon merchants to control prices. They are bent upon making profits however much they say they are not. Who would not like to make profits? Therefore we should not trust the merchants in this matter. Government would be acting unwisely to trust the merchants to bring down the prices. You cannot trust the whole body of merchants to do this. It is to their interest not to do this; there may be individual exceptions here and there. There are merchants who are storing food-grains to meet the needs that will arise a few months hence and at that time they are sure to put up prices. Something must be done to prevent the price going up. Something must be done so that the Government might be in possession of grain, so that they might go into the market and control prices.

1060 RESOLUTION RE FORMATION OF A GRAIN-STORING DEPARTMENT.

(Mr. Ranga Achariyar.)

"What is unwise about it? Here is an abnormal occasion which requires abnormal remedy. What is it that the Hon'ble Mr. Buckley has said? There are two Famine Commissions, there is a Famine Code and there is the Government of India. I never go by precedents in such matters and you did not have the situation in those days which you now have. You did not have an all world war when all the countries in the world were dragged into a controversy and everywhere there was scarcity of foodstuffs. Each Government must take care of its own people within its borders. Here is an abnormal situation created by an all world condition and what is the good of quoting the Famine Code? I do not want to go upon any opinion in a matter like this. I want the matter to be discussed and considered independently with reference to present day events. I do not think that we should swear by precedents in a matter like this. The question that we have to consider is whether it is wise to do it or not. The Honourable Member for Government says that we have not got accurate information and what information we have is not accurate. It is a sorry confession that a Government which is able to ascertain sources of private income of individuals for imposing income-tax with accuracy should confess its impotence as regards finding out the quantity of foodstuffs available—that is impossible to conceive and it passes my comprehension. It is impossible to be accurate to the pie, but at the same time we must have some materials to go by. You have enough reliable statistics to say that the economic condition of the people is all right to introduce resettlement. Then you are guided by statistics and you have statistics which are supposed to be reliable, but now when we ask you to help the people, you say these statistics may be accurate or may not be accurate. There may be degrees of inaccuracy but at the same time err on the safe side. If the report is that there are 200,000 tons in a place, assume that there are only 150,000 tons and proceed on that assumption. There is such a thing as overstating and exaggerating difficulties, when you do not want to do a thing. I dare say if the Hon'ble Mr. Buckley thinks that this should be done, all these difficulties which he mentioned now about the Famine Commission, the Famine Code, about commandeering, about driving out the private trader, will all disappear. The only thing is that the mind is not there. If he puts his will into it, all these difficulties will disappear. There are difficulties in carrying on a Government. How can a Government be carried on without facing difficulties? The question is, how are you going to help the people at such a time? It is not an unknown method, it is not a novel method; it is a method peculiarly popular with the people of this country. The old Government has done it and what is it that is said against it? It is said that there might be loss. What did they do for supplying the military department? Did they not go into the market and buy chillies, coriander, gingelly? Who objected to the army commandeering products? I know a District Superintendent of Police who as a wise man in charge of the district helped his subordinates to buy grain for a whole year. Going out to the mirasidars and speaking to them, he was able to help them to buy at a time when rice and paddy were cheap. I know the revenue officers are all powerful, and will be able to control and get the necessary supply.

"And after all, what do I say? I say that you must have food-grains in centres for sale in retail in times of need. Supposing that a particular place requires 100 tons and you have 10 per cent of it available, that will regulate prices. It is not a case where you are going to lose anything. You are sure to have the price which you paid for it. But even if you lose anything, I do not think it is a matter worthy of consideration. It is only an investment; it is not a dead loss. What does it matter whether it costs 1½ crores or 2 crores or 3 crores? Is it money thrown away? It is only selling, it is money which you get back and therefore the cost is not a matter that should be taken into consideration. It is only the initial cost. I do not see any force really in the various objections taken. As to what quantity will be required in particular centres, that is a matter for the Government with its wide knowledge and diffused agency to get information about. As to whether it should be got in Burma or in the deltaic districts, all these are matters in which the Controller will be able to give complete information: and these are matters in which difficulties can be got over.

"The whole question resolves itself into this: should the Government embark upon it? It is admitted, the official Member has admitted that in small quantities he is not opposed to doing it where the situation needs it. He approves of the principle; the only question is one of degree. It is a matter for Government to decide whether the situation is urgent and what quantity should be sold. When once the principle is granted, that it is right for a Government to do this thing in places where the situation is acute, there is no need for opposing this resolution. My Hon'ble Friend Mr. Yaqub Hasan has said that this is impracticable. He speaks like a merchant, he wants free trade, free import and free export. As a merchant, I quite understand his position, as he has been brought up and trained in free trade. But even a free trader has had to submit, during the last three or four years, to control. With reference to the price of Burma rice, we have to submit to control; and with reference to various other commodities. The whole question is whether the situation is so grave as to call for an extraordinary step. Is the situation extraordinary to call for it? I do not think on that point there is any difference of opinion."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"The Honourable Member has exhausted his time."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"I am coming to the end. I therefore submit, Your Excellency, that there is nothing exceptional or objectionable in this proposition."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"Does the Honourable Member wish this proposition to be put to the Council?"

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"Yes."

The resolution was put and lost.

1062 RESOLUTION RE SUSPENSION AND REMISSION OF ASSESSMENTS.

(Mr. Ranga Achariyar.)

[4TH APRIL 1919.]

RESOLUTION RE SUSPENSION AND REMISSION OF ASSESSMENTS.

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR :—" I have the honour to move —

'XV. This Council recommends to His Excellency the Governor in Council that they may be pleased to issue instructions to the Collectors of all the districts to report, after a careful survey made with the assistance of two local non-officials, as to the necessity for the suspension and the remission of the assessments in the areas adversely affected by the season, and to order suspension and remission of revenue accordingly.'

"Your Excellency, I may state at once that I refuse to be guided on an occasion like this by rules contained in the Famine Code or any other regulations which may be in force. It is open to the Government to make arrangements to meet the existing situation. If they are going to swear by the existing Famine Code with reference to this matter, or by the existing rules relating to suspension and remission of assessments, I had better not move this resolution at all. I know that the Government realize the grave situation which has arisen in the land due to various causes and therefore it requires a statesmanlike handling: and the Government, I am sure, will rise to the occasion and come to the rescue of the people. It has become very difficult for the people to make both ends meet to meet their ordinary wants. What with the price of necessary commodities and with the price of wearing apparel and the difficulties in various other matters, life has become truly intolerable. Therefore on an occasion like this, while I do not recommend absolute remission on a large scale, I recommend very largely the postponement of collection and the spread of the collection of revenue due for this fasli in future years so as to make it easy for the people to pay the assessment due to the Government. I do not think much harm will be done by adopting such a procedure. It is recognized that the situation in the Presidency is something abnormal, something which has not obtained in the Presidency, at least for ten years before this, and that is what the third or final report of the Director of Agriculture says. The total area under rice in the Madras Presidency in 1918-19 is estimated at 9,711,000 acres and it is less by 942,000 acres than the area finally reported for the previous year. The area is the lowest. The reasons he reports are obvious: that is, the failure of the south-west monsoon in July and August and the delay in the north-east monsoon in November. The season has been entirely abnormal, and it is only in the tracts protected by major irrigation that anything like the normal area has been kept up. They are the places which received the full benefit of the north-east monsoon and there the normal area is kept up. Conditions are better in the south, Ramnad and Tinnevely. There is a very large fall in the area cultivated. Not only is there a large fall in the area cultivated, but, as I pointed out in the previous resolution, in the yield also there is a fall. The yield is 35 per cent less than that of the previous year. That being so, it is a situation which has not occurred during the last ten years and I do not know whether such a situation ever occurred. Having regard to the situation in regard to other matters and the prevailing high prices, I do not think it will be wise to stick to the letter of the rules relating to suspension or remission of assessment. If we take the figures given here, namely, that there has been a decrease in the yield to the extent of 35 per cent and also a decrease in cultivation to nearly one-ninth of the whole area, I do not think that the provision made in the budget for granting remissions and suspensions will be adequate at all. In the revised budget, I believe the provision made is 24 lakhs. It was originally put at 2 or 3 lakhs and now under the revised estimate, provision is made for 24 lakhs, but I do not think that is a sufficient provision at all. The ordinary procedure adopted is going and inspecting the fields to see whether any case is made out for remission or suspension of revenue, to see whether the field bore any crops or whether it was a four-anna crop or a six-anna crop or an eight anna crop or a twelve-anna crop; if it bore any crop, then the ryot is made to pay the assessment. I do not think such a state of things should be allowed on this extraordinary occasion. While perhaps a case may not be made out for entire remission, the case for a postponement of the collection is certainly made out. I think in such circumstances to spread out the assessment over various years will be only an act of bare justice to the ryots who have to bear the burden and I therefore strongly recommend this resolution to Your Excellency.

"This proposition also contains a request that in making the inspection, the Collector or the Divisional officer should be assisted by two local non-officials. Very often these inspections are made; and I dare say that the experience which my Hon'ble Friend Mr. Chidambaranatha Mudaliyar possesses, and the other Honourable Members of this Council possess, is that very often inspections are made after the field has been reaped. It is very difficult to ascertain the stocks on the field which are not there; there is no sure indication as to what the yield has been. If they select two respectable non-officials, they will be able to get information as to what the yield has been in the area where the request for postponement of assessment is made. It will not do merely to rely upon the reports of the karnam or the revenue inspector in such matters in order to get reliable information sympathetically collected. That is the more important thing nowadays—the information should be collected by sympathetic inquiries of the ryots themselves and I think the Collector or the Divisional officer will be valuably assisted by two local non-officials on the spot. It is a matter where careful inquiry has to be made; it will repay the Government a thousand-fold to make an inquiry. The feeling among the people is really very strong indeed, and if the Government will really make such an inquiry, whatever the result may be, if the Government show their anxiety about the condition and about the yield, and show that they are ready to grant suspension and remission of assessment where justice demands it, I think the people would be satisfied. And on the other hand, I do not think any harm will be done. The Government will be earning the gratitude of the people and their love. I therefore commend this proposition to the acceptance of the Government."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. Narasimha Ayyar seconded the resolution.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT :—" I will just announce the result of the poll on resolution No. XIV. For the resolution, 11, against, 27."

The Council then adjourned for a short interval.

The Council re-assembled at 3 p.m. when the discussion on the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar's resolution was resumed.

The Hon'ble Mr. L. E. BUCKLEY :—" Your Excellency, with regard to this resolution, there was a similar resolution moved in this Council, I think, by the Hon'ble Mr. Narasimha Ayyar in November 1918. I then gave him an undertaking that I would invite the attention of all Collectors and ascertain what should be done in the matter of remission and suspension of assessment, especially drawing their attention to the necessity of extra staff for the purpose of inspection. I received replies from all the Collectors, the majority of whom said that no suspensions of revenue were necessary. Estimates had been received from time to time on the amounts of the actual remissions which would be considered necessary and the latest figure amounts to Rs. 26,12,000. In response to the reference that was made to Collectors in the matter of suspension, there are only five districts which have applied for suspension of collection amounting to Rs. 184,000. It has been already sanctioned by Government. This work of inspection as to what is to be remitted and what is to be suspended has, I know, been brought deliberately to the attention of Collectors during the year and they have made efforts to meet the necessities of the case. The ordinary rules as regards remissions are applied without any difficulty at all; with regard to suspensions of revenue on dry land, the sanction of the Government is necessary, if the collection is to be postponed till the end of the fasli. This work has been done already and nothing is to be gained by any further inquiry. I am instructed to say that the Government are unable to accept the resolution in the terms proposed."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR :—" Does the Honourable Member say that there will be no suspension at all?"

The Hon'ble Mr. L. E. BUCKLEY :—" Five districts have applied for suspension of assessment on dry lands and the amount is Rs. 1,84,000."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR :—" As regards wet land, there is no question of suspension?"

The Hon'ble Mr. L. E. BUCKLEY :—" There is no question of suspension. Where any concession is given, it is outright remission and it amounts to Rs. 26 lakhs."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR :—" It is on that aspect of the question that I wish to press the resolution, whether suspension should not be granted in the case of wet lands. What the Honourable Member says is that Collectors have not applied for suspension in the case of wet lands, but only remission has been applied for. In the case of wet lands, also Collectors may be asked to report whether suspension is called for, because it is a matter in which even in the case of wet lands, pattadars are in a difficult position. They may not have had yield sufficient to carry on their daily existence and to meet the cost of the necessities of life. Therefore I think it will be a great boon to the people if the Collectors are called upon to report whether suspension should not be granted. I do not know if their attention has been called to this question. If their attention has not been called to that, if the Government are prepared to draw their attention to it, I think it will be of great use to the people. I want to throw out that suggestion."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT :—" I may inform the Honourable Member that special reports are called for from all Collectors on this question of suspension and remission; they are invited to make careful inquiries and report how far it is essential in each district either to suspend the revenue or to remit it and whatever has been recommended as regards suspension has been accepted. With regard to remission, I am not able to give the same answer, because in the case of South Kanara, the Collector recommended a certain case of remission which Government have not accepted. With that exception, all recommendations are accepted. The Honourable Member may be sure that if further recommendations are made on further inspection of the fields, Government will be prepared to sanction the further remission that Collectors may recommend."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR :—" Is the inquiry still going on?"

His Excellency the PRESIDENT :—" The season is not over. Jambandi is still going on. I do not know if the Honourable Member wishes to press the resolution."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR :—" No. I only wish to bring it to the notice of Government, so that they may call the attention of Collectors to it."

With the permission of His Excellency the President, the resolution was then withdrawn.

RESOLUTION RE ASYLUMS FOR BEGGARS.

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR :—"I beg to move :—

'XVI. This Council recommends to His Excellency the Governor in Council that they may be pleased to start asylums in suitable areas for housing and feeding beggars crippled or disabled through old age, loathsome diseases or otherwise.'

"Your Excellency, this problem of dealing with this class of people is becoming day by day a very grave one indeed. I think the time has come for the State to intervene in this matter. I do not know what the experience of Honourable Members is with reference to this question. Wherever you go, fairs or festivals in temples or other places, whether you travel by tram-cars or trains, at various places these people suffering from diseases of a loathsome kind are either exposed by the people who trade upon them or they themselves come forward to beg of the people, and there are also people who are unable to take care of themselves being crippled either through old age or on account of various other bodily infirmities; such people are unable to take care of themselves. There are several thousands of people like that in this Presidency and I do not think it is wise to leave them in that condition. Nowadays private asylums or private houses for lodging them or feeding them are not as they used to be and the joint family system is breaking down and each man for himself is the motto nowadays. Therefore, the care for the poor on the part of the public is not so very great as it used to be. In almost every town you find this class of people and I do not think it is wise to allow them to roam about. They carry infection with them; that is a great danger to the community apart from other questions concerning them. They live a very miserable existence and they have to beg for their livelihood. They sleep under trees, have no houses of their own and their clothing is scanty. All these things should not be allowed to take place under a Government such as ours. I think it is the duty of the Government to take care of these people. So far as the British Government is concerned, from the year 1601, in England the care of the poor has been considered the primary duty of Government and from that date in England there have been elaborate laws by which old age people, poor and crippled people are cared for by the guardians of the poor and various other authorities who have been constituted from time to time. I want to start a humble beginning in our country. I think this subject has been neglected, probably because the Government found no necessity in the early days to provide asylums. But having regard to the modern day habits of the people, I think it is an essential function on the part of the Government to start asylums in suitable areas. I leave it purposely vague, because it depends upon the number of persons to be provided for, what distance they may be taken to, what facilities there should be for looking after these people. I leave all that to Government. But what should be done is they should be housed, clothed, and fed—persons who are unable to take care of themselves, either through old age or through disease. Even with regard to disease, I confine it to loathsome diseases, because we will be doing a public good by isolating this class of people who are suffering from loathsome diseases. It is limited in its operation, it will not involve the Government any considerable cost, and on the other hand, the money will be well-spent; especially when new movements are started for taking care of public health, I think this is an effective method of taking care of public health by providing public asylums for such people. When the Government start asylums, they may also get private benefactions to supplement the resources which the Government may place at the disposal of the authorities in charge of such asylums. I do not commit the Government that it should be a department of Government, but it is a matter for consideration as to whether anything should be done, and if so, what steps should be taken to afford a much-needed relief to this class of people. I dare say local bodies may come forward to assist the Government in the discharge of this duty, but these are all matters of detail and I dare say the Government will consider these matters and consult local authorities before taking steps to start asylums. I think the question is of great importance and urgent necessity and I therefore urge upon the Government the necessity of accepting this resolution."

The Hon'ble the RAJA OF PITHAPURAM :—"Your Excellency, I most heartily support this resolution. It is a subject which is very dear to my heart and it has been engaging my attention for several years. When I saw this resolution standing in the name of my Hon'ble Friend Mr. Ranga Achariyar, I was surprised and I was very glad that he came forward to move it. Your Excellency, I may be permitted to say that poor people, people who are really helpless and incapable of earning their livelihood whether they are suffering from loathsome diseases or not,—these people have a great claim on the Government. The weakest and the most helpless have certainly a greater claim on the Government than anybody else. I consider it the duty of Government to come to their rescue and it is a matter in which Government cannot very well put forward the plea that for want of funds it cannot be undertaken. I request the Government if necessary to cut out certain other items of expenditure and invite the co-operation of the public. I think that these poor and helpless people have got every right on the purse of the rich. They are the children of God as well as we are and it is but proper that the rich should come to the aid of the poor. If the Government take interest in it—I am sure they will—and invite the co-operation of the public and exercise their wholesome influence, I am sure the public will be only too glad to come to the aid of the Government. With these remarks, I beg to second the motion."

RESOLUTION RE ASYLUMS FOR BEGGARS.

4TH APRIL 1919.]

(Mr. Ramaswami Ayyar ; the Rev. Aelen ; Mr. Davidson.)

The Hon'ble Mr. C. P. RAMASWAMI AYYAR :—"Your Excellency, in associating myself with this proposition, I desire to offer just one or two remarks. It used to be said and asserted with some amount of pride that there was no necessity for a Poor Law in this country. It was undoubtedly so when the joint family system was in full vigour and when the village communal life exerted that unifying influence which it has ceased to exert to the same extent and in the same manner. There is no gain-saying that the number of people, who are either exploited for the purpose of getting an income for others, or who are absolutely destitute and are driven to very difficult means of sustenance, is increasing. Perhaps the evil is not so crying in the rural areas as it is in the cities; but as the Honourable mover has remarked, one has only to see any crowded resort in the urban areas of this Presidency to be confronted with the evil in its extreme form. In England the question has been receiving considerable attention for a number of centuries and it was always considered that the claim of the poor and the destitute on the parish was paramount. It seems to me by parity of reasoning it may be argued that local bodies have the care of these persons primarily thrown upon themselves, but it seems to me that with their strained resources, it will not do for the Government to throw this duty primarily or solely on the local bodies. Government ought also to come to the rescue and I take it that the object of this proposition is to invite the attention of the Government to the crying evil and invite the co-operation of the Government in battling with this problem which is bound to become an increasingly complex one."

The Hon'ble the Most Rev. J. AELEN :—"This is a resolution which appeals to every one and I sincerely hope that Government will see their way to take it over."

The Hon'ble Mr. L. DAVIDSON :—"Your Excellency, when this resolution was tabled, I did not expect that it would take so wide a scope as it has done. I thought that it was more largely directed to the repression of beggary than to the institution of a system of poor relief. This is not the first time that the question of the establishment of asylums for beggars has been pressed upon the attention of the Government. Not much more than a year ago the Hon'ble Mr. Annamalai Chettiyar asked a question on the subject which had special reference to the city of Madras. He inquired whether in view of the prevalence of beggars in the city of Madras, especially those suffering from loathsome diseases, Government would provide an establishment for housing, feeding and clothing them. The answer which Government gave was that there was no such intention, and the view upon which that answer was based was that such institutions were primarily a matter for private charity and private organization. Since May 1917 there has been no further examination of the general proposition and I am not prepared at present to depart from the position then taken up. The Hon'ble Mr. Ramaswami Ayyar has referred to the justifiable pride hitherto taken in the fact that there was no necessity for a Poor Law in India owing to the admirable spirit of charity towards the poor. He suggested, however, that that pride was no longer maintainable, owing to the breaking-up of the joint family system, and the decrease of the communal spirit in village life. I venture to think that he takes too gloomy a view of the situation and that we may still adhere to the position that it is premature to introduce State relief in this matter."

"I do not know if Honourable Members realize what an enormous proposition State relief of the poor is. In England there was a special Poor Law Commission about ten years ago which produced a report extending over 1,300 to 1,400 pages; it has been an administrative difficulty of a most complex character for many years; the duty of supporting the vagrant poor is primarily cast on the local rates and one might on that analogy impose the same duty on local boards and municipalities in this country. In England the poor rates go up to 7 or 8 shillings in the pound, which judging from the attitude of this Council towards the enhancement of the property tax in Madras would here be regarded as somewhat startling as it represents 40 per cent of the annual rental value of the buildings. I simply mention that to show what enormous financial issues are involved."

"The financial issue is not the only one; there is also the question whether legislation should not precede the establishment of asylums for beggars. There was a very interesting discussion a year or two ago on a similar issue in the Legislative Council of Bombay and the view taken throughout that debate was that legislation was a necessary preliminary, because even when you have asylums established, you cannot compel people to go to them or remain in them. There were concrete facts brought out in the course of that debate which are of special interest. I should like to refer particularly to the experience in the David Sassoon Infirm Asylum in Poona. This is a well-endowed institution and has accommodation for sixty inmates. It is intended to meet the class of destitute paupers. The Hon'ble Mr. Godbole complained, however, that, owing to the indiscriminate charity prevailing in Indian cities, they were unable fully to utilize either their accommodation or their funds. They could not utilize more than half their funds. They were maintaining only some twenty infirm paupers and the rest of their annual income was added to their capital fund. What was the reason? This is what Mr. Godbole said :—

'Charity is practised indiscriminately in Indian cities, and the consequence is that the blind, the halt, the infirm and the old and decrepit people get far better treatment from the general public outside than they get in the asylum itself. We admit the infirms, we feed them, we lodge them and we keep a doctor to look after them in our asylums. But I find from inquiries that I have been making that, in addition to getting their food and raiment, the infirms get a lot of money by begging in the streets and in the temple yards.'

(Mr. Davidson ; Mr. Krishna Rao.)

[4TH APRIL 1919.]

"In the light of this statement of the outcome of indiscriminate charity it is a fair inference that legislation would be necessary for the compulsory detention of beggars suffering from loathsome diseases in any work-houses or asylums that you may set up. And any such step will bring you face to face with another difficulty peculiar to India,—the case of the religious mendicant who may or may not be suffering from a painful or loathsome disease. That point played a very large part in the debate in the Bombay Legislative Council. References were made to the extreme difficulty of distinguishing between the true and the false sadhu and to the fact that public opinion indicated that it was necessary to go very cautiously and warily before dealing in a drastic manner with religious mendicants. Yet another point taken in the Bombay debate was the fact that the problem of poor law relief is not a local problem, but an Imperial question, partly because of the religious difficulty arising and still more on account of the enormous financial cost involved. The conclusion ultimately arrived at in Bombay was that while there was some case for a purely unofficial inquiry into the need and possibility of measures for the repression of beggary, it was inadvisable that Government should intervene in the matter at all.

"I think, sir, roughly, that is the position that we must take up here. The provision of asylums by themselves, even if the financial difficulty were not a grave one, would be ineffective unless there were legislation. We cannot legislate too far in advance of public opinion and it is necessary first, I should say, to educate public opinion against the indiscriminate charity which is really the root cause of the prevalence of beggary, particularly those beggars who seek to prey and work upon the charitable feelings of other persons by the exhibition of sores and deformities. If it were not for the trait, admirable in itself, which induces the inhabitants of this country to give charity freely to the poor and the decrepit, there would be far less solicitation of alms.

"It must not be supposed, however, that the Government leave relief of this description entirely alone. You will find an account in the Presidency Administration Report, paragraph 287, of a variety of charitable institutions including a number for relief of paupers; some of these are actually supported by Government, more are receiving aid from Government and far more are supported by private agencies. I find that for the relief of paupers 416 institutions are maintained, of which 226 are restricted to Hindus, 11 to Muhammadans, 3 to Europeans and Eurasians and 176 are open to all classes and creeds I may refer particularly to the Monegar Choultry, the Triplicane Lungerkhana and various lungerkhanas up-country. They are all under efficient management and they are also receiving a measure of support from Government. There is yet another direction in which Government have taken a much more prominent part and that is in regard to the maintenance of leper asylums. There has been a considerable departure in that direction during the last two or three years and I am sure Government will only be too ready to give liberal assistance to that class of loathsome beggars.

"To sum up, sir, Government are not prepared at present to embark offhand upon the policy of establishing asylums. That would be stepping into the fringe of the general and wide question of State relief for the poor, even if limited to the case of disabled and crippled beggars. Legislation is an essential preliminary and we cannot legislate too far in advance of public opinion."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. KRISHNA RAO:—"Your Excellency, I am afraid that the attitude taken by the Government in dealing with this resolution is exceedingly disappointing. If I had been able to follow the arguments of the Hon'ble Mr. Davidson, he has told us that the matter requires further consideration, that steps would be taken to repress beggary, that public opinion should be educated and that legislation should precede any steps for embarking on this new policy. It was in 1917 that the Hon'ble Mr. Annamalai Chettiyar drew the attention of Government to the necessity of having an asylum of this description in the city of Madras and the Government then stated that they had no intention to embark on that experiment. There has been ample opportunity and sufficient time for examination of that question; and I do not myself think that the difficulties in the way of carrying out this reform are insuperable. We have been informed that the Government cannot offhand embark—I use the word 'off-hand' advisedly, because that was the word used by the Hon'ble Mr. Davidson—on the policy tried to be initiated by means of this resolution. It leads us to an inference that the Government are prepared to initiate further measures after making the necessary inquiries or after causing the necessary inquiries to be made."

The Hon'ble Mr. L. DAVIDSON:—"I may say at once that I did not intend to suggest that."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. KRISHNA RAO:—"I understand from the Hon'ble Mr. Davidson that he did not intend to suggest that. If the Government are not at once prepared to start this experiment, may I not ask if there are not sufficient materials to induce them to cause an inquiry to be made without further delay and take steps in that direction. The Honourable the Raja of Pithapuram has in seconding the resolution told us that we might cut out some other items in the budget and provide funds for the purpose of starting asylums for the relief of the poor. He told us that it was an object which must commend itself to every one; and that, if need be, we might find funds without any difficulty. We have been informed that from the attitude taken in dealing with the question of property tax, poor rates would be objected to and there might not be the chance of finding funds. May I point out that the attitude of this or of any other Council will not be unreasonable if definite proposals are made to meet a problem like the one suggested in the resolution? Even at present the people of the country have been doing the little or much they have been able to do to relieve the poor in various ways; and they have not been neglecting their duty. But it has been done in an indiscriminate manner as suggested by the Hon'ble Mr. Davidson and as pointed out in the debate in the Bombay Legislative Council. It is very desirable that the whole system should be organized on a satisfactory footing and that those people who really deserve sympathy and help should not merely depend upon the chance of some person giving relief, but should be in a position to expect relief in a regular manner. People who have been hitherto contributing in their own way will not grudge any further assistance that may be required. Government may, therefore, without any difficulty or hesitation make such inquiries as are necessary and start this experiment.

"The objections urged by the Hon'ble Mr. Davidson only indicate that the Government are not prepared to start asylums at once. May I point out that the Government may make inquiries and take suitable steps. They may undertake such inquiries as are necessary and such legislation as may be feasible for housing and feeding the poor. It may necessitate a slight amendment of the resolution before the Council. I would only request, that as the object of this resolution cannot be questioned, this resolution may be accepted. If any modification is required, we may carry it out. We must take a step forward in dealing with this problem. It is a problem which has been before the public for several years. Are we on the ground that we have no statistics as to the number of beggars, or that we have not got the machinery whereby we can take them to the asylums—to say that we shall not proceed forward with this resolution. Therefore I venture to suggest that the resolution may be modified on these lines even if it is not acceptable in its present form—in place of the words 'to start asylums', we may have the words 'to take such steps as are feasible'. I am aware that some further inquiries are necessary, and further steps have to be taken; but may I not ask whether the Government cannot accept this reasonable amendment."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR:—"Your Excellency the debate on this resolution is likely to be watched with considerable interest in many places which would not be expected ordinarily to watch it. The matter is one of very great importance and I think therefore I shall be justified in taking up a few minutes of the valuable time of this Council. I am afraid the Hon'ble Mr. Davidson started the discussion under a misapprehension, and his conclusion has been slightly rendered wrong by reason of his starting on a wrong basis. He seems to have fancied that the whole question will be about putting down beggary. Putting down beggary is a very large order as the discussion shows; it is a premature thing for us in this country to adopt measures such as those successfully adopted in England and other countries similarly situated. I am afraid the point of difference between putting down beggary and the resolution now before us has not been distinctly brought to the mind of the Hon'ble Mr. Davidson and he has rejected this resolution on grounds on which the Bombay resolution was rejected. If it is proposed that beggary should be put down, legislation is absolutely essential, and yet that argument which applies to the Bombay position is brought forward as though it were necessary to the present resolution. What does this resolution say? It says that: 'This Council recommends to His Excellency the Governor in Council that they may be pleased to start asylums in suitable areas for housing and feeding beggars crippled or disabled through old age, loathsome diseases or otherwise.' Is it suggested that if the Government should start asylums in suitable areas for housing and feeding beggars crippled or disabled through old age, loathsome diseases or otherwise, nobody would go into them unless there was legislation compelling them to go into them? It is an argument which it is hard for us to understand, and yet at the same time, the Hon'ble Mr. Davidson has put forward another argument which cuts the ground from underneath the first argument. In the same breath he says that thousands will crowd into it and if you calculate the cost, it will be immense. He says 'do you know what amount of special rate the municipality would have to levy? If the Madras Corporation were to undertake this task, it will have to increase by 40 per cent the property tax.' That implies that a large number of persons would take advantage of these asylums. Then what becomes of his first position? I think that shows that the Hon'ble Mr. Davidson has not paid sufficient attention to his arguments. They do not fit in with each other. It is not correct to say that legislation is necessary for starting asylums. Legislation would be necessary if the object of the resolution were that all beggars crippled and disabled through old age shall be sent to the asylum. But the Honourable Mover does not contemplate any such compulsion and no Honourable Member of this House contemplates such compulsion. So legislation is not at all necessary. Perhaps the Hon'ble Mr. Davidson may think: if you set about this matter, it would be better to push the matter as thoroughly as possible and for that purpose, legislation is necessary. We, in this Council, are satisfied with humble beginnings. What is recommended in this resolution is a humble beginning, that Government should start asylums. The number is not stated, the local extent of the relief is not indicated, as much as possible under the circumstances is all that is needed. Now, therefore, to think about the absence of legislation as a difficulty in our way would argue want of sympathy with the subject matter of this resolution. As there is no one in this House whom we can accuse of want of sympathy, I think Government would do better to think a little more on this resolution before they have done with it and see their way to accept the conclusion which may be forced upon them logically by their sympathy with this resolution. The main point is this: "As there is no legislative difficulty in our way, what other difficulty is there in our way? The Hon'ble Mr. Davidson stated that there were considerable difficulties in the sentiments and the ignorance prevailing among the people; if sadhus are touched by this resolution and if people are asked to refrain from indiscriminate charity, the sentimentality of the people will be wounded. That imports the idea of compulsion. It cannot be denied on the one hand that there is some kind of private relief afforded to those suffering from loathsome diseases. Nor can it be said on the other hand that private relief is afforded to all persons suffering from them. If it is the position of the Hon'ble Mr. Davidson that practically all persons suffering from loathsome diseases have been provided for, that is a different answer. That cannot for one moment be contended, because any one who goes into the streets will find a large number of persons with loathsome diseases suffering, neglected and infecting the localities which they are found in. I therefore think that the idea that education is necessary and that religious scruples have to be carefully considered, will not hold water. In regard to the Bombay resolution, they wanted to put down beggary and there were difficulties in that, because, no sadhu would have agreed to go to an asylum. We are not now referring to sadhus, nor have I seen any sadhu with any loathsome diseases. I think about education also, it is a misconception of the whole subject. The resolution does not aim at forcing the hands of the people.

(Mr. Narasimha Ayyar ; Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar ;
Mr. Davidson.)

"There will be a certain amount of indiscriminate charity in this country and I for one shall not be sorry for the existence of indiscriminate charity in addition to regular charity. It is far better to have some indiscriminate charity than to have no charity. The rude Corinthian boor who against the houseless stranger shuts his door will not be found on the Indian soil. Indiscriminate charity is a thing which I look upon with indulgence. However, does it stand in the way of the resolution? It is true that there are a certain number of lepers who would be looked after by charitable people. But is it contended that there is an abundance of charity? The Hon'ble Mr. Davidson said that the Hon'ble Mr. Ramaswami Ayyar took a gloomy view of the situation. I may profess to have some knowledge of the people because everyday I come into contact with the people in the towns and villages and I can give a perfect assurance to any Honourable gentleman here who has not had opportunity of knowing the people that charity is definitely on the decrease. In the days when I was a young boy there were very few houses which would refuse alms to any poor man. Now in many houses I know, not only do they refuse but they say that only on particular days in the week, they will give it. I know that charity as a regular institution is very much on the decline. I am very sorry to state that. One of the causes may be the joint family system, another is the increasing poverty, i.e., decrease in the supply of articles of wealth to the average householder; another is the increase of population; and there may be other circumstances. I am not now concerned with the causes of this decline. The decline however is a fact and the result is seen by the very large number of poor, crippled and diseased beggars in various places. That is an unfortunate position. In these circumstances, the Honourable Member is simply requesting the Government to take the matter into consideration and do what they can. Therefore I believe the objections put forward about educating the people, about the religious scruples, about legislation are all objections which have absolutely no grounds to support them.

"Coming last to the suggestion thrown out by the Hon'ble Mr. Davidson, he said that on analogy with similar institutions in England, it must be the local rates that must bear the charge. There is a great deal to be said in favour of that view. I know in point of fact that the Salem municipality has been maintaining a house in which the poor, crippled beggars with loathsome diseases are fed and given cloths and housed."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"By the municipality?"

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR:—"Yes. We maintained it. We wanted to transfer it to the district hospital which is partly financed by the municipality, partly by the district board and partly by the Government. We could not attend to all those suffering from loathsome diseases. We wanted a medical man to be in charge of them. Some correspondence went on and a year or two ago when I gave up the chairmanship something was put on record, but I do not know what is the ultimate condition of affairs. I know for a long series of years the municipal council maintained such an institution. There is a provision in the District Municipalities Act under which such an expenditure can be borne. I refer to section 113 of the District Municipalities Act which refers to the purposes for which the funds raised under that Act shall be applied. In sub-clause 5 it says: 'Other measures of public utility calculated to promote the safety, health, comfort, or convenience of the people.'

"That is wide enough and Your Excellency has got power to prescribe rules and restrictions under which that clause is to be worked."

The Hon'ble Mr. L. DAVIDSON:—"If the Honourable Member will refer to clause (ii), he will find 'poor houses' specifically mentioned."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR:—"Yes. But as we are referring to people suffering from loathsome diseases, I thought this clause 5 applied better. The other clause refers to poor houses. When I point out the existence of this provision and similar provisions in other corresponding Acts, I do not assume that the municipality should be called upon to establish a large number of such institutions. If the Government think that that is a proper step, I would ask the Government to examine the financial position of these bodies and see whether they are capable of maintaining additional establishment for that purpose. If they come to the conclusion that the finances of local bodies are in a very happy condition, then they might set about prescribing rules under that particular section, calling attention to the debates in this Council. But I fear that the condition of the finances of many a local body would not be

(Mr. Narasimha Ayyar ; Mr. M. Ramachandra Rao.)

such as to favour the proposal. I think even in that case, Government aid would be absolutely necessary before local bodies can be called upon to start such work; and therefore, while the Government will kindly take the trouble of prescribing rules about starting and maintaining houses for the lame, the blind and the crippled people, they might consider how aid could be given to local bodies for this purpose. It is with a view to bring all this under review that this resolution was started. It is quite possible that the Government may have to take such a part in it that they may not have to trouble the municipalities and they might start it on their own account. If it is on a large scale, and if the Government have to pay a large portion of the expenditure, adopting the principle which the Decentralization Commission insisted upon frequently, that he who pays the piper must call the tune, the Honourable Member has put forward this resolution. If the Government think both local bodies and Government may have a hand in the matter, they could agree to work through local bodies. If the Government would be pleased to chalk out a line, we will be happy to support the Government in any proposal which they may make taking into consideration all that has been put forward here.

"I think therefore, under these circumstances, none of the objections put forward by the Hon'ble Mr. Davidson for opposing this resolution holds good. The only reasonable and proper position for the Government to take is not merely one of expression of sympathy, but to accept the resolution and set about finding ways and means and finding what relief could be afforded to local bodies and what further could be done to help the funds in the hands of local bodies, what further funds could be utilized, what further amount of money the Government could afford and what further help they could give. I hope that what I have mentioned would be considered by the Government and that real help would be given and not merely oral sympathy."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO:—"Your Excellency, the Hon'ble Mr. Davidson has made the issue raised by this resolution much wider than is necessary. The Honourable Member who proposed this resolution suggests that in suitable areas asylums should be started for housing and feeding beggars crippled or disabled through old age or loathsome diseases or otherwise. These qualifying words, 'crippled or disabled through old age or loathsome diseases or otherwise', seem to have been forgotten in the discussion of this resolution and we are now faced with the whole problem of the solution of beggary in India. This question as to how it may be tackled was discussed not only in the Bombay Legislative Council but by various public bodies interested in putting down beggary, more especially with reference to the evils arising from the institution of sadhus who are able-bodied men—young men and old men are drawn into this organization—able-bodied beggars who tramp the country from Benares down to Ramnagar. That large issue as to how these men may be reclaimed is not at all raised in this resolution. I also venture to think, Your Excellency, that the reference to the conditions under which poor laws are administered in the United Kingdom is not at all necessary for the purpose of this resolution. There the obligatory character of the law requires that local bodies should look after the poor within their respective jurisdictions. Here we have no such obligation so far as local bodies are concerned and I take it that the provisions referred to by the Hon'ble Mr. Narasimha Ayyar are purely discretionary. There is no mandatory duty on the local bodies in this country as there is in the United Kingdom to look after the poor, and therefore there is no question, so far as the present consideration is concerned, as to the circumstances under which poor relief can be granted. Your Excellency, this resolution in its limited application has my entire sympathy. I have found on several occasions crippled beggars lying by the side of streets without absolutely anybody to look after them, absolutely helpless, blind beggars, beggars unable to work, without absolutely any provision in towns for their maintenance for the rest of their lives. I have myself in my rounds as Municipal Chairman directed them to be removed to the existing hospitals for being looked after as in-patients from the funds of the hospital; I know it is not quite right, but that is the only thing that we can do temporarily to give some kind of relief to those who are found begging in the streets in that unfortunate condition.

"The Hon'ble Mr. Davidson referred to the help which was being given to charitable institutions from Provincial funds. I find at page 256 a number of charitable institutions is mentioned on which public funds are now spent; for example, the Civil Orphan Asylum, Madras, receiving Rs. 1,200; the Civil Orphan Asylum, Ganjam, Gordon Refuge, San Thomé; Holy Angels' Convent, Kumbakonam; the allowance to Roman Catholic chapels in Mysore; the Friend-in-need Society, Ootacamund, receiving Rs. 65,000; the Lawrence Memorial School, Ootacamund, receiving Rs. 1,500; the Friend-in-need Society, Bellary, receiving Rs. 300; the Native Poor Asylum or Monegar Choultry, Rs. 7,000; Native Infirmary said to be Nawab's donation Rs. 1,050; and under the head of Langarkhanas we find five places each receiving a share from Provincial funds. Your Excellency, I would submit for the consideration of Government whether it would not be feasible to allow municipalities and local boards to start institutions for the class of persons mentioned in this resolution and to supplement the funds by some system of grant-in-aid. If we do that, we certainly steer clear of the wider issues raised by the Hon'ble Mr. Davidson as regards the financial position and as regards the general policy of putting down beggary. These and other vexed questions cannot certainly be solved without a certain amount of legislation, but this suggestion will obviate that difficulty for the present. I would suggest that if any municipality comes forward strictly for the maintenance of the establishment of an asylum for the maintenance of this class of persons referred to in this resolution, on which I expect

LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL.

(Mr. Ramaswami Ayyar ; Mr. Narasimha Ayyar ;
Mr. Todhunter ; Mr. M. Ramachandra Rao ; Mr. Siva Rao.) [3RD APRIL 1919.

The Hon'ble Mr. C. P. RAMASWAMI AYYAR :—"I would formally move an amendment to the resolution, that the words 'as early as possible' be substituted for the words 'at as early a date as the original proceedings.' In moving that amendment, I do not desire to say more than this. I realize the practical difficulties that would arise if it were made obligatory that the vernacular translations should be published at the same time as the English originals. The Hon'ble Mr. Todhunter referred to what I said about English being the lingua franca. I adhere to my view. But nevertheless it is the duty of the Government and this Council, especially in the days to come, to see that their labours are understood by the people from whom they derive their power. It seems to me for the purpose of political education, because the vernacular newspapers cannot with their present staff and resources and equipment adequately discharge their duty, the function devolves, and rightly devolves, upon the Government and I therefore move that amendment."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR :—"I would accept the amendment. I do not know whether the Hon'ble Mr. Todhunter would accept it."

The Hon'ble Mr. C. G. TODHUNTER :—"I object to the proposition either as originally proposed or as amended."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO :—"Your Excellency, this subject of vernacular translations of the proceedings of this Council was debated some years ago. On that occasion it was pointed out that there were nearly 17,000 subscribers to the District Gazettes. I remember Your Excellency's speech on that occasion, especially that portion relating to the Punch's sayings about Parliamentary proceedings. Our point is that it would promote better understanding of the Government if some rendering of the proceedings of this Council were distributed along with the District Gazettes. I do not think it necessary that it should form part of the Fort St. George Gazette. The objection that was then pointed out was that the demand for the vernacular portion of the Fort St. George Gazette was negligible and the suggestion that was made was that the proceedings of this Council should form part of the District Gazettes and be distributed in the districts. I am afraid I share the feeling of the Hon'ble Mr. Todhunter to some extent whether it would be necessary to give a complete rendering of the whole proceedings of this Council. It is voluminous in quantity and I would suggest for the consideration of the Government whether it would be possible to make a summary of the proceedings of the Council and have it distributed along with the District Gazette. It is extremely important that the masses should clearly understand what is being urged in this Council and what is the attitude of the Government with reference to many of these resolutions that are brought forward, and what we say in the interests of the masses whom we represent. On the whole, it seems to me that it would be a very wise step to adopt the essence of this resolution in some form or other, whether it should be exactly in the form in which the Honourable Member has put it, it is not necessary to consider just now."

"The Hon'ble Mr. Todhunter said that there are very few people who read the proceedings of this Council. It is true. Our proceedings are issued about 45 days after the Council meets, and the public interest has been sufficiently satisfied by some account appearing whether good, bad or indifferent in the newspapers and I do not think it is an argument against this resolution that the English proceedings are not read by the majority. The same remark may be made with regard to the District Gazettes. The proceedings of the municipal councils and district boards are never read, but it is a statutory duty in the interests of wider publicity that the proceedings of these bodies should be published. In order to satisfy the statutory requirements it is done. I once had occasion to examine how many persons took in the district gazette in Ellore. I found 13 people there out of a total of 900 subscribers; and even those 13 copies were never opened by the subscribers, and it was sheer waste of money. But nevertheless, I am not now discussing what alterations should be made in the distribution of the proceedings of municipal councils to secure publicity in the locality. Your Excellency, on wider grounds of policy and the best grounds of making the intentions of the Government, and the standpoint of the Government being known to the masses, it seems to me that the essence of this resolution ought to be accepted by the Government. It is a question, as I said, as to what portion of the proceedings will be useful. That is a question which has to be considered independently of this resolution. I give my entire support to the principle of this resolution. I think it would be of advantage to publish it in the district gazette."

The Hon'ble Mr. P. SIVA RAO :—"Your Excellency, I heartily support this proposition. One difficulty which the Hon'ble Mr. Todhunter raised was, is there a demand for it? He felt sceptical about the utility of spending money on it. He asks, will the villagers read the proceedings—the vernacular reports of the proceedings of Legislative Council? I am afraid the Hon'ble Mr. Todhunter has not taken sufficient note of the present political advancement of the country. I may assure him that the villager is very keen nowadays and he wants to ascertain in the first instance what has been done in the Legislative Council from day to day, what the Government have been doing, and what their own representative in the Council had been doing. I may assure him that they have been taking very keen interest."

"Then the question is asked, is it worth the money? I am strongly of opinion that no expenditure need be grudged in a matter like this. The people, the villagers and the masses who contribute towards the resources of the country, are entitled to know what goes on in the Legislative Council from day to day. Are they not interested in knowing how their representatives have been acquitting themselves, well or ill."

RESOLUTION RE TRANSLATION OF THE PROCEEDINGS OF THE 1017
LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL.

[3RD APRIL 1919.]

(Mr. Siva Rao ; Mr. Krishna Rao.)

"There is one other aspect which requires serious consideration. That is, as an instrument of political education, it ought to be encouraged. The Hon'ble Mr. Todhunter referred to the difficulty of expressing some of these sentiments in the vernaculars. I am quite alive to the difficulties. The difficulty is all the more enhanced, because the Government have not been doing much towards the encouragement of the vernaculars. Take Bengali, Mahratti, or Telugu as it is now handled in the Northern Circars. I can assure the Honourable Member that they can convey in Marathi, Telugu or Hindi or Urdu the latest political thought or any other thought that comes before the country. It is because the vernaculars have not been sufficiently developed we feel difficulty at the outset. We have to coin some phraseology. There was a reference to some language being the lingua franca and that English may be the lingua franca. The Hon'ble Mr. Ramaswami Ayyar referred to English as the lingua franca. It may be the lingua franca inside the Council, but outside it cannot be the lingua franca for the dissemination of political thought. English can never become the universal language of the masses. There is this other aspect also to be seriously considered in a matter like this. It will dispel enormous ignorance in the masses. As a political asset, it will have a rare value; it will try to improve the millions, and it will also harmonise the relations between the rulers and the ruled. There is a proposal to enlarge the electorate and these people have a right to know what goes on in the Legislative Council."

"As regards the summary which the Hon'ble Mr. Ramachandra Rao suggests, he always chooses the golden mean, which is to publish a summary. If his proposal is adopted, the summary will be a mutilated version. Who is to judge which is important and which is not important? I would rather have a full verbatim account of our proceedings and it is well worth the money spent on it considering the advantages to be derived."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. KRISHNA RAO :—"Your Excellency, I do not know if it is too late in the day to induce Your Excellency's Government to change the position which has been already taken up on this resolution. In the discussion on a previous resolution, it was pointed out that the Government were as anxious as any one else to give wide publicity to the proceedings of this Council and to give necessary encouragement for that purpose. It cannot be denied for a moment that there has been a change for the better in the attitude of the people of this country, to acquaint themselves with what is going on inside and outside the Council and with the attitude of the Government regarding various questions. I would go a step further and urge that even for a correct appreciation and understanding of the various acts of the administration, it will be much better if the proceedings are translated into the chief vernaculars and if opportunity is given to the people to acquaint themselves with what is taking place. The only objection urged by the Hon'ble Mr. Todhunter is that persons are not likely to take advantage of this opportunity and that very few would probably read these proceedings in the vernaculars. May I point out that in all probability there is a greater chance of people acquainted with the vernaculars reading these proceedings than persons acquainted with English reading the proceedings published in the gazette? The reason is obvious: as has been pointed out, persons who have been following the proceedings of the Council in the English language and who have been taking keener interest in political affairs would try to get themselves acquainted with the information at their disposal as early as possible by going through the newspapers, and would not be anxious to know the full proceedings. On the other hand, persons who have considerable leisure at their command and have a desire to know exactly what is taking place in this Council would be in a position to know much better about these proceedings in the vernaculars. I agree with the Hon'ble Mr. Siva Rao in thinking that a summary would not serve a useful purpose. It is somewhat irksome to introduce the experiment of having a summary prepared by some officer in the Secretariat who may not correctly express the views of Honourable Members. It is better that we go further ahead and have a translation of the full proceedings into the vernaculars. Your Excellency will also notice that even at present the proceedings of various local bodies in the Presidency are published not merely in English but in the vernaculars. If the test which is now suggested by the Hon'ble Mr. Todhunter is adopted, namely, that it is only when one is satisfied that these proceedings in English or the vernaculars would be read, they should be published, I do not know where we will go to. Even if it serves the purpose of educating a few people, I think the experiment should be tried. We must not try to have calculations made on any other basis. We cannot expect that all the persons are likely to avail themselves of this opportunity. If Your Excellency is satisfied that considerable number are likely to take advantage of the opportunity, the experiment should be given a trial as the expenditure will be quite legitimate. For these reasons, I strongly support the resolution. I know that according to the procedure adopted, if the Government come to a certain decision previously, it is very difficult to make them change their minds. But this is a matter in which it is always open to the Government to review their position. There cannot be the slightest doubt that there is an increasing interest taken in the proceedings. If that is so, why should there be hesitation in giving effect to this resolution?"

"Then it was pointed out that there will be difficulty in translating the speeches. May I point out that it is much easier to translate the proceedings into the vernaculars than to translate the various Bills that are introduced into this Council. I know as a matter of fact several persons who were acquainted with the vernaculars and read the translations in the Gazette, did not understand them and came and asked me what the Bill meant. They could not make anything out of the translation. They had to go and obtain the help of others to understand there would be agreement in this Council—if such an institution is maintained by the municipality and the local boards—I do not see why public funds should not be devoted for the maintenance of such institution under a system of grant-in-aid. I do not know under what circumstances and under what conditions these grants are made to the institutions referred to in page 226, whether it is a portion of their outlay or anything; but I take it that, so far as the Lawrence Memorial School is concerned, there is a certain amount of endowment about it so that we need not consider the question of the Lawrence Memorial School at all."

(Mr. M. Ramachandra Rao ; Mr. Ranga Achariyar ;

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR :—" It is an educational institution."

The Hon'ble Mr. L. DAVIDSON :—" It is also an orphanage."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO :—" I believe there is an endowment from which this fund of Rs. 65,000 is derived. As regards other institutions, I do not know under what system these grants-in-aid are given. Is it the total net cost or a portion of the cost? Whatever that may be, my definite suggestion for the consideration of Your Excellency's Government is that, if any charitable institutions for the maintenance of crippled and disabled beggars are to be maintained by a local body, that local body should be permitted to do so and that some system of grant-in-aid should be devised to keep up those institutions. Subject to these limitations, I trust that we will not be frightened by the large financial issues raised by the Hon'ble Mr. Davidson or by the absence of legislation. These may abide their time for a solution, but this problem is one which anybody who lives in cities is quite alive to. I do not think therefore that I should join issue with my Honourable Friends who raised the question of the break-up of the joint family system and how far that is responsible for the state of beggary in our towns. Just now, I venture to think that we may regard it as wide of the mark under this resolution. I trust, Your Excellency, that something would be done to tackle the practical problem of dealing with these crippled and disabled men who are to be found in fairly large numbers in our towns."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. SURYANARAYANA RAO :—" Your Excellency, I have only just a few remarks to make on this resolution. I entirely sympathize with the spirit in which this resolution is brought forward; but there are certain difficulties and I do not know how the thing can be made workable at once. With regard to these beggars, they are a legion and we do not know how many exist. Some of them are very poor, some of them are very young and they do not come under the definition given in this resolution—'crippled by age.' Then there are the professional beggars who besiege our houses every day and they make it a profession as the Satānis. They do not leave us whether we give them or not, they say that it is their profession and they would not go for coolie work though they are very robust and can earn 4 annas a day; and their wives also make it a profession to beg. Then there are our Brahmins who never leave us. When the Hon'ble Mr. Narasimha Ayyar said that charity is becoming more reduced, I say that the real reason is that people are opening their eyes and they find that there is no use of feeding these loafers and giving charity to undeserved persons. We feel that charity should be devoted in the right direction and that is why I think charity to some extent is considered to be decreasing in the eyes of the Hon'ble Mr. Narasimha Ayyar. However I leave that question apart. With regard to the beggars, the question is: how are we to tackle this problem and how are we to render them any help? I would just speak about my own district. In Vizagapatam I know that there is a poor-house; the Maharani of Wadhwan has established a poor-house which has been in existence for over fifteen years from the time of Raja Gajapati Rao and the Maharaja of Bobbili has opened another poor-house and that is working very well, and the Maharaja of Vizianagram has opened another poor-house which is also working very well. With regard to lepers, there is one leper asylum in Viziana, ram, to which the municipalities of Vizagapatam, Bimlipatam and the District Board of Vizagapatam are contributing to some extent. There is another leper asylum at the foot of the agency near Sālūru, but the difficulty with regard to these asylums is that under the Lepers Act, unless these lepers are compelled to go there, they do not go. I know that several lepers make it a profession to beg. They expose themselves in the streets and they want to earn much by simply exposing themselves to public gaze. I therefore think that legislation is absolutely necessary to segregate these lepers and to compel them to go to these asylums. Otherwise, any help rendered to them is practically useless because they do not go there. On the other hand, they only make money by saying that they are lepers and that they deserve public sympathy and help."

"With regard to beggars other than lepers, the difficulty is that legislation must say who is a beggar and who is not. Every one will say that he is a beggar for the purpose of getting a few pice to-day and to-morrow he would go and work as a coolie for 4 annas. When once we know who is a beggar, then the local bodies should be called upon to help the beggars. Government should come to the help of local bodies and these local bodies should be asked to open poor-houses to supplement the houses which are already in existence or to open them where there are no such houses to help these deserving people. Again these beggars must be compelled to go in and they should not be permitted to go and beg in the streets. Otherwise, there is no use of creating any poor-house. I think there should be such restriction and again the Legislature must step in. Otherwise these poor-houses will become useless because, instead of getting help from one quarter, they will get help from more than one quarter. Probably the help of legislation is necessary to keep these beggars within proper restrictions and when once they are kept within proper restrictions, I think some help should be given to them. I do not know whether the Government can directly help or whether it is not more within the province of district boards and municipalities to open such poor-houses and whether the Government should not render them help to see that they are successfully maintained. With these words, I support the resolution."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT :—" The Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar—"

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. KRISHNA RAO :—" Before the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar is asked to reply, may I point out that I formally handed over my amendment and I want to know what has become of it—that in place of the words 'start asylums in suitable areas' be substituted the words 'to take suitable steps,' which is sufficiently comprehensive? Government may make inquiries and start such asylums. I make it sufficiently comprehensive. We cannot at present throw this burden upon local bodies. There is no question of their being in a position to take it up, unless they have got the power to do so. They have not got the funds. To avoid all these difficulties, I suggest that the amendment may be adopted."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. Narasimha Ayyar seconded the amendment.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT :—" I do not know whether that amendment would help at all. The resolution is very wide in its terms. It covers, as far as I can see, the whole question of State relief of the poor. Anybody who is crippled or disabled through old age comes under it, and it invites this Council to ask the Government to provide for all the aged poor. That would involve the starting of a regular poor law organization. It also refers to loathsome diseases which is a very vague term. A disease may be loathsome but it may not make a man disabled or crippled. As far as I can see, this duty does exist and is at present laid by the legislature upon local bodies. It is distinctly mentioned in the District Municipalities Act; just as hospitals and dispensaries are mentioned, so poor-houses are mentioned as part of their function. In the new Corporation Bill provision for rest-houses and work-houses and feeding-houses has been made. I think the legislature deliberately intended that local bodies should perform this function, and if any local body should wish to perform that function, Government would not only have no objection to it, but would support it by help in any direction. But this resolution puts the Government in a difficult position, because it asks the Government to start these asylums or, as the amendment puts it, to take suitable steps to house and feed beggars. The mere altering of the words would not affect the resolution. It still puts the obligation upon the Governor in Council, but according to the existing Acts the responsibility should vest in local bodies, and if Honourable Gentlemen interested in this matter wish to advance this cause, I suggest that the right way to do it is to see that these provisions are made more specific in the hands of local bodies. In the Corporation, for instance, the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar has only got to propose to the Corporation that it should perform these functions. Government are in full sympathy with the idea underlying this resolution. I may assure the Council that myself and my Honourable Colleagues have the fullest sympathy with the idea underlying it. While I am anxious not to oppose it, at the same time I do not think Government can accept the resolution. The way it should be put if the Honourable Member wishes to press this resolution is: 'This Council recommends to His Excellency the Governor in Council that provision for the accommodation of crippled and disabled beggars should be considered.' To move it in this form is to put upon the Government a duty which cannot be accepted by the Government of India. In Great Britain the whole thing is done by local bodies which cost about 18 millions. In this country, with a very large population it will cost a very large sum indeed. I do not think this resolution would help at all."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. KRISHNA RAO :—" Though the Government are not in a position to support the resolution, my amendment will give them sufficient latitude to inquire into the matter. The first suitable step would be to inquire."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT :—" Does the Honourable Mover of the resolution accept the amendment—'take suitable steps for housing and feeding beggars crippled or disabled through old age, loathsome diseases or otherwise.'"

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR :—" So long as it is not confined to that specific question of calling upon local bodies, I accept it."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT :—" It does not affect it. Will you make your reply on the basis of the amendment?"

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR :—" I want the question to be fairly and squarely considered. I quite appreciate the idea that local bodies, wherever they are competent and wherever it is possible for them to do so, should come to the aid of these poor people; but at the same time I must say that it is not correct to suppose that the duty is cast upon local bodies. I refuse to accept the proposition that the exclusive duty of providing for the housing and feeding of this class of people is cast only on the local bodies. No doubt, it will be a function which they can perform and which they may perform and perhaps, I would also say, which they should perform morally, but are not legally bound to do so. I consider, Your Excellency, that it is primarily the duty of the State to perform this function. How it performs it, through its own agency or through the agency of local bodies or through the private organizations, is a matter of detail. In all countries and in this country also, the State has accepted this as a primary duty cast upon it. I may mention, Your Excellency, those of you who are in the Indian Civil Service are familiar with the old system that prevailed, and at the time when the grain-sharing system was in vogue, one of the common expenses that used to be deducted before the Government and the ryot shared the produce was that a certain proportion was taken for what is known as 'oorpichai'. Those of you who have read the Tanjore District Manual may perhaps know that large sums of money collected under that item amounting to several lakhs were accumulated in Tanjore and the Government appropriated them when the ryotwari system was introduced. Therefore, it was considered the primary duty of the Government. It was a common burden of the people. Just as they provided for village services, so also they provided for this matter by this arrangement which was in force for centuries; it was a common burden which both the Government and the people bore. It was one of the first claims upon land to provide for beggars. Therefore I say it is the primary duty of Government and how the Government discharge their duty does not matter to me. It does not matter what steps Government propose to take. If the Government force local bodies to do it, I shall only be too glad if the local bodies accept it and carry it out. I am prepared to accept the amendment proposed by my Honourable Friend in the sense which I have indicated.

(Mr. Ranga Achariyar ; Mr. Davidson.)

"I wish to deal with the objections taken by the Hon'ble Mr. Davidson but it is somewhat difficult as I am in some difficulty to follow him. I have deliberately confined my resolution and worded it so clearly that we should not embark upon this larger question, and I do not know why the Hon'ble Mr. Davidson was surprised that the discussion took the turn that it did. There is nothing in the language of my resolution to cause any such surprise. I confined it to beggars crippled or disabled through old age, loathsome diseases or otherwise; I did not extend it to all beggars, not to professional beggars, not to Brahman beggars whom my Honourable Friend Mr. Suryanarayana Rao was either fond of or afraid of, not to those sadhus, not to those who sit dharna and sit at your door and demand payment. I do not know why the Hon'ble Mr. Suryanarayana Rao was drawn into that vivid description which he gave; either he did not read my resolution or he wanted to have his say. So also with regard to the remark of the Hon'ble Mr. Davidson about the larger question, about the beggary problem in this country; we are not concerned with the larger problem. The Honourable Member referred to Bombay. Bombay is a place of millionaires. It is a place where charity is perhaps still continuing to take practical shape. But we are now concerned with the peculiar conditions of our province and our experience is—I am glad I am borne out in this matter by my Honourable Friends including the Raja of Pithapuram whose sympathy for the poor is well known—that the conditions of this province are such that some relief is needed. These crippled and disabled people are found in all places, in temples, in fairs and festivals and they are found taking shelter under trees or under the canopy of heaven. Is it right for any Government to leave that state of things to be taken care of by indiscriminate charity? By using the words 'indiscriminate charity' you condemn that charity, but you want to trust to that very indiscriminate charity, the mere off chance of some people getting the benefit and others not. That may help those people who are able to push themselves forward and obtain that charity, but what about those who cannot push themselves forward and who cannot get even one meal a day? It is not right to allow that state of things to continue. As regards the question of financial burden, I should think that it is better to start an experiment in suitable areas—I do not say that we should start it all at once all over the country—to make an experiment and try if it succeeds and see what it costs, and see if legislation is necessary.

"What is the good of anticipating difficulties? I never wanted compulsion. I never suggested compulsion. Let us start asylums in one or two suitable places and see if we really give relief to the people who need it and if they voluntarily come forward, you will make indiscriminate charity into discriminate charity because people will come forward to assist the Government in endowing such institutions and at the same time there would be the certainty that all people who want such relief are given that relief. We need not be afraid of the professional beggars taking advantage of it, because my resolution is confined to persons who are crippled or disabled. The resolution is very modest; it does not commit the Government to any definite course of action. It only suggests that this question deserves Your Excellency's careful consideration and asks Your Excellency to take suitable steps to house and feed them. You must do something to afford them relief. I need not take up any more of the time of the Council, but I hope that Your Excellency's Government will accept this resolution and try and do something to relieve them."

The Hon'ble Mr. L. Davidson:—"Your Excellency, I have been attacked by the Hon'ble Mr. Narasimha Ayyar for a certain inconsistency in my remarks. I do not plead guilty to the charge, but I admit that there is some appearance of inconsistency, for at one moment I said that beggars would not go to and remain in asylums and at another moment I said that the cost would be enormous. The explanation is this: I was dealing in the first instance with the provision of poor-houses for beggars and in the second case I was referring to the developments and results arising from the acceptance of State relief of the poor in general—not beggars of a particular class. The latter implies enormous measures of State relief similar to those adopted by Western countries. I should like particularly to draw attention to the huge liability in the shape of local rates.

"The Hon'ble Mr. Ramachandra Rao, the Hon'ble Mr. Narasimha Ayyar and the Hon'ble Mr. Suryanarayana Rao have all drawn attention to the possibility of local boards and municipalities taking up this measure. That is well within their powers and I see no reason why they should not open up and maintain poor-houses for the maintenance of deserving beggars. It is possible that well-considered schemes of that description would receive a measure of help from Government. I say it is possible. A local body might, if it had a well-considered scheme, receive assistance. But I cannot now commit the Government in such a matter. The general view of the Government is that charities of this description are not a legitimate charge on State funds. The State may be ready to encourage private charity perhaps to assist local bodies to establish well-managed and efficient poor-houses, but it cannot itself accept the direct charge. In this country, as Your Excellency explained, that would be an entirely new departure and would probably involve the sanction of the Government of India and would open out the enormous field of State relief for the poor.

(Mr. Davidson ; Mr. Ranga Achariyar ; the President.)

"The Hon'ble Mr. Ramachandra Rao inquired on what system certain donations given by Government for charitable purposes are calculated. I am afraid I cannot lay my hands immediately on all the items; but it so happens that I have amongst my papers particulars regarding one item, and that is the donation of Rs. 15,000 to the Friend-in-Need Society in Madras. That is a society which has the double object of the relief of distress among the deserving poor and the suppression of mendicacy. The system on which they receive assistance from Government was revised in 1910 and it now takes the form of applying the principle of self-help, Government giving the society an annual grant of two-thirds of its receipts from public contributions subject to a maximum of Rs. 15,000. That is an illustration of the principle on which aid may be given by the State to well-considered schemes of management. Among the organizations maintained by the Friend-in-Need Society there is a poor-house. I may add that my Hon'ble Colleague Mr. Todhunter is a former President of the Society.

"It has been said that it is the duty of the Government to intervene in this matter because private charity is now declining. Is it not possible to suggest that if Government intervene, private charity would decline at a still more rapid rate? Those who now recognize that charity is their duty might say as this is recognized by the Government as their duty, why should we give anything to beggars?

I do not think I need detain the Council by further argument in support of the proposition that legislation is a necessary element in measures of this kind. The Hon'ble Mr. Suryanarayana Rao has taken the same line as I did in this matter, and I think this may be taken as sufficient to show that there is some justification for my proposition.

The Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar's concluding appeal was that Government should start the experiment. The answer is that it is not an inquiry which is proposed, but actual measures for the housing and feeding of a particular class of beggars, and that would be giving away the whole principle. On behalf of Government I am bound to say that we cannot concede the principle of State-aid for the poor. Such relief must be primarily a matter for local bodies or for private charity. I therefore oppose this resolution."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. Ranga Achariyar:—"May I make a request that on this resolution every member may be allowed to vote as he likes?"

His Excellency the President:—"The ordinary rule will apply."

The resolution was put and lost.

1074 RESOLUTION RE APPOINTMENT OF A CIVIL JUDICIAL OFFICER
IN THE HOME (JUDICIAL) DEPARTMENT.

(Mr. Ranga Achariyar.)

[4TH APRIL 1919.]

RESOLUTION RE APPOINTMENT OF A CIVIL JUDICIAL OFFICER
IN THE HOME (JUDICIAL) DEPARTMENT.

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR :—"Your Excellency, the resolution I have the honour to move runs thus—

'XVII. This Council recommends to His Excellency the Governor in Council that the Secretariat Home Department may be so reorganized as to provide for the appointment of an experienced officer of the Judicial Branch, Provincial Service, therein.'

"Your Excellency, unfortunately for the judicial service, the Government in this Presidency unlike in Bombay are entirely composed of persons who have not had training, at any rate considerable training in the judicial service of the country. In Bombay they have a system by which one of the members of council is always one who has had large experience in the judicial branch of the service, but that is not the practice in this province. The Secretariat too is entirely manned by persons whose lives or the major portion of whose lives have been spent in the executive service. The judicial work which comes before the Government occupies a very large proportion of their work. Not only that, but there are certain statutory duties which are cast upon the Government of accepting the rules framed by the High Court in various matters regarding procedure and other questions, the rules which are framed by the High Court have to find acceptance by the Government before they can become enforceable. There are also various other departmental questions which come up, in which the interests of the judicial department do not receive, I am sorry to say, that amount of attention from the hands of the Government as they ought to. I will mention only one instance, and I do not know whether it is due to this defect in the composition of the Government or the Secretariat. I want to make a modest beginning just now. This question of the pay and prospects of munsifs and sub-judges is a matter which has been hanging fire. It has been acknowledged times without number that there has been a regrettable delay in the disposal of that question. The Government members speaking on behalf of Government in this Council have regretted that that delay should have taken place. There are various matters also in connexion with the transfers of sub-judges and district judges and various other departmental questions which come up, which also require experience in the judicial work in the Secretariat has led to various defects of this character. It is only natural that persons who are brought up in one department should bestow more attention to the wants of that department because they are more familiar with the routine and with the details of working of that department. Those who have not had experience of the Judicial department have to deal with very large questions affecting the interests of the people and affecting the interests of one important section of the service. I think an under secretary or an assistant secretary chosen from the judicial branch will be a valuable acquisition to Your Excellency's Secretariat. I am sure you will find considerable aid from such an officer in the disposal of the vast volume of work which the member in charge of the judicial portfolio has to dispose of. The answer may be that we are guided in this matter by the High Court, but they only make their views known by correspondence. But personal discussion and bringing also personal experience to bear in the Secretariat itself, are of great value; the member in charge may discuss the question with the secretary or the assistant secretary concerned. If such a practice prevails, it will be of great assistance to the member in charge in disposing of his work. There is a considerable amount of feeling in this branch of the service that they should be represented in the Secretariat. I have had a talk with several members of the service in connexion with this resolution. I gave notice of it three or four months ago, and since then, I have had discussion with various members of the service; and I may tell Your Excellency's Government that they welcome such a measure and in fact they were surprised that I did not move on the last occasion this resolution which was in a different form. Therefore the members of that service would welcome it and Your Excellency's Government, though not materially, at any rate will be benefited to some extent in disposing of important questions; it cannot be denied that it will be of some benefit. Their practical experience will be of very great aid and therefore I commend this resolution to Your Excellency's acceptance. There is no hard-and-fast rule which I want to impose upon the Government. I only leave it to the Government to make such suitable arrangements as they think fit to provide for the appointment of an officer of the judicial branch. The selection of that officer will be with them. I know that the work in the Secretariat is increasing. What with the question of enlarged councils, the work in the Secretariat is increasing. Just as Your Excellency's Government have been forced to add to the number of secretaries, assistant secretaries and under secretaries in the various departments, it will be necessary to appoint in this branch an additional officer in that department. That being so, instead of disturbing existing arrangements, arrangement may be made by adding an assistant secretary. I would not object to it on the ground of expenditure because it would be expenditure well-incurred for which, there will be a good return. I therefore commend this proposition to the council."

RESOLUTION RE APPOINTMENT OF A CIVIL JUDICIAL OFFICER 1075
IN THE HOME (JUDICIAL) DEPARTMENT.

4TH APRIL 1919.]

(Mr. Ramaswami Ayyar ; Mr. Davidson.)

The Hon'ble Mr. C. P. RAMASWAMI AYYAR :—"Your Excellency, I second the motion and I have only two words to add. Whilst I am cognizant of the fact that the High Court is in charge of a large portion of the judicial work, yet we know as a matter of fact that the Government exercise control over the subordinate judiciary in various ways as referred to by the Honourable Mover, and the rule-making power of the High Court is subject to the superintendence of the Government. Under these circumstances and for many reasons not the last amongst which is the utility and the predominating importance of office-notes and the importance of those notes being drafted by persons who have some knowledge of what they are speaking about, I commend the proposition to the attention of the House and the notice of the Government."

The Hon'ble Mr. L. DAVIDSON :—"Your Excellency, the Honourable Member who just sat down commends the resolution on the ground of the advantage to be expected from the fact that the person who prepares the office-note has some knowledge of what he is writing about. I accept that general proposition, but I think neither the Hon'ble Mr. Ramaswami Ayyar nor the Honourable Mover has realized how small a part of the work of the Home Secretary civil judicial business forms. When this resolution was tabled for the last meeting of the Council, my original idea was to oppose it on three grounds. One was that if the intention was to provide Government with a better knowledge of civil law, we prefer to rely on the Hon'ble the Advocate-General, the Government Pleader and the Government Solicitor. I find that that ground has not been taken by the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar.

"The second of my objections does fall in line with what he has said to-day. My idea was that if his argument should be that it was desirable to supply inside knowledge of the actual working of subordinate civil courts, the proper quarter from which to obtain information of that character is the High Court, which includes at the present moment on its Bench a gentleman who has served as District Munsif and as Subordinate Judge for over twenty-years; or if in any particular case more up-to-date knowledge or local knowledge of particular districts was required, it is always open to the Government to consult the District Judges. That would have been my answer to the ground that it is better to have inside knowledge supplied in the Secretariat.

"My third ground of objection is also applicable to-day notwithstanding that the Honourable Member has changed his proposal to add an Assistant Secretary to the Home Secretariat into the altered version 'so to reorganize the Home Secretariat as to provide room for an officer of the Judicial branch, Provincial Civil Service.' I thought he intended the substitution of a Provincial service officer for one of the existing hands; but I see from the conclusion of his speech that he would be quite willing to advocate the addition of a Secretary and to face the extra expenditure involved. This brings in the answer I originally intended to give to the proposal to appoint an Assistant Secretary, namely, that no addition is needed. It was only in 1914 that the post of Home Secretary was created and since then there have been a number of additions to the staff. It was further reorganized in 1916, when the staff was taken away from the Chief Secretariat and was constituted into a separate entity. The Home Secretary has now an Under Secretary, a Registrar, and six Superintendents. During the last four or five years I have had varied experience of the different branches of the Secretariat, and I can confidently tell the Honourable Mover that for the present at least the Home Department of the Secretariat is adequately staffed and does not want any addition.

"When examining the original resolution, I endeavoured from my own recollection to recall cases in which a Subordinate Judge or a District Munsif would have been really helpful, and I found that I could not personally think of more than one instance during the last four or five months in which an officer with civil judicial experience would have been of any real help; that was a case connected with the Central nazarat system. As I did not want to trust to my memory, I asked the Secretariat to make a special examination of the actual disposals during the last two months—January and February. I was anxious to find if a detailed scrutiny of the disposals indicated that there was any very large proportion of civil judicial business in respect of which the advice of a Subordinate Judge or a District Munsif might have been helpful. The Home Secretariat includes the Judicial branch, the Educational branch and the Miscellaneous branch. In January and February in these three or four branches there were altogether 1,347 orders. The Secretariat marked down 49 orders out of that total of 1,347 in which they thought that a civil judicial officer might have been possibly of use. I examined the disposal abstract of each one of these 49 cases, and I have no hesitation in endorsing the Under Secretary's conclusion that the 49 might be cut down to 15. In many cases the issues were merely matters relating to magisterial, criminal and other cases not of a civil nature. In other cases the disposals were obvious. The Under Secretary had struck out 34 items. I was not satisfied with the reduced total of 15 and in order to make quite certain, instead of relying merely on the abstract of the disposal, I sent for the original papers in each of these 15 cases; and on examination eliminated all but one. In other words out of 1,347 orders there was only one in which according to my judgment the assistance of a Subordinate Judge or a District Munsif would have been really useful and even that was doubtful. I do not wish to labour the point, but I do want to impress on the Honourable Member that the proportion of cases in which experience of the inside working of the civil courts would be really helpful is very very small indeed.

"That is the only standpoint that has been pressed home except perhaps the natural desire of members of the Judicial service to be represented in the Secretariat. The need for knowledge of the inside working of a department is an argument which could be pressed with far greater

IN THE HOME (JUDICIAL) DEPARTMENT.

(Mr. Davidson ; Mr. Krishna Rao.) [4TH APRIL 1919.]

force in the case of the Police department, the Magisterial department and the Educational department. If it were really necessary to employ subordinate experts in the Home Secretariat, Civil Judicial is the last branch in which I should seek to import such an addition. But I am not at all certain that it is sound to import into the Secretariat men with inside knowledge. In their own department they will have held subordinate positions and will not there be a tendency to unduly criticise the proposals which emanate from the heads of their departments. That is a grave risk. I do not think, for instance, that the High Court would welcome a district munsif or even an experienced subordinate judge criticising from the standpoint of law and practical experience the rules which the High Court itself puts forward. If we want further scrutiny of such rules, there is the well-established practice of reference to the Hon'ble the Advocate-General for his advice unless he has advised us already on a similar point. I venture to think, sir, that I have succeeded in showing that the case for an additional appointment to the Home Secretariat, recruited from the Provincial branch of the Judicial service, has not been substantiated."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. KRISHNA RAO :—" Your Excellency, I am afraid that in dealing with this resolution the Hon'ble Mr. Davidson has treated the Judicial department and other departments included in the Home Department as close compartments. Assuming an officer of the Judicial department, an experienced Subordinate Judge is appointed to the Secretariat, it is not to be supposed that he will not, with some training, be competent to deal with other branches of the Home Department. It is not to be supposed for a moment that simply on the ground that the proportionate number of references and disposals relating to this particular branch of the work is small, no case has been made out for the appointment of an officer of the Judicial department. The resolution suggests not necessarily that an additional officer should be appointed. I believe that, for very proper reasons, the resolution of which notice was given on the former occasion has been modified. This resolution simply suggests that 'the Secretariat Home Department may be so reorganized as to provide for the appointment of an experienced officer of the Judicial branch, Provincial Service, therein.' The Honourable Mover explained in his opening remarks that he wanted to give sufficient latitude to Your Excellency's Government for making such arrangements as are suitable to ensure the introduction of the Judicial branch into the Home Secretariat. May I point out to this Council that within the last five or six years various questions affecting the work of the Judicial Department and the judiciary have been questions separately? We need not, therefore, be guided by the number of disposals placed before us to-day; but we may on the other hand consider whether in the solution of these various problems the presence of an officer with personal experience of the working of that department would not be useful. Let me point out to this Council that it took several years—I believe the question was first taken up in 1909 and disposed of only last year—to settle the question of the increase of pay of the process-service establishment. It is a question which has been brought to the notice of the Government on several occasions in this Council and orders were passed after considerable delay. No doubt there is considerable discretion vested in the High Court; and there might have been a number of references by the High Court to the subordinate judiciary and correspondence backwards and forwards in view of altered conditions before final orders were passed. I have not the slightest doubt that the presence of an officer with judicial experience would have been of considerable help in facilitating the solution of that problem. Again in the question of the establishment of Subordinate Judges' courts and Munsifs' courts and in the consideration of what is popularly known as the 'Phillips' scheme, there has been any amount of delay. Honourable Members of Council will remember that on so many occasions questions were put as to when the scheme would be published, what the proposals were, when orders could be expected and when they would be brought into effect; and though the Government must have been tired of those questions, the delay is phenomenal. Even now it has not been possible and formal orders have not been passed on that question. We only find it stated in the Budget that some temporary courts would be retained, though some courts would become permanent. Again the vexed question of the increase of pay of the judiciary, to which the Honourable Member has drawn the attention of Government, has been before this Council for a number of years. It was said that the correspondence with the Government of India was almost ready; but nothing has come out of it. I tried to elicit some information in my questions Nos. 53 and 54. The questions and answers are—

53 Q.—Will the Government be pleased to state whether the High Court made—
(a) any, and
(b) if so, what proposals for the increase of the pay of subordinate judges and district munsifs?

53 A.—The Honourable Member is referred to the reply to question No. 54.

54 Q.—Will the Government be pleased to state whether they submitted—
(a) any, and
(b) if so, what proposals to the Government of India for the increase of the pay of subordinate judges and district munsifs?

54 A.—The Government are not at present in a position to make any statement.

"I was induced to put that question because of the discussion which took place on the last occasion in this Council. A feeling of despondency was created as to the pay of these officers being increased. We were told that there would be regrading of the subordinate judges, and district munsifs; but so far as the question of increase of pay was concerned, we were not given hopes.

"I mention these as typical instances of the enormous delay in dealing with judicial questions. I do not wish to examine the various reasons which have been or which are likely to be urged by the Government for the delay; but it cannot be denied for a moment that the delay has been unnecessarily long. I believe the Hon'ble Mr. Gillman admitted it on a former occasion and could not give a satisfactory explanation for the delay. It would have been of immense advantage if the help of an officer, who could bring to bear his personal knowledge on this question and who would have thereby helped in its speedy disposal, had been available. I do not suggest that an officer of the standing of a district munsif can be appointed; but I think an experienced subordinate judge who has the ambition of becoming a District Judge would be far more useful. As a matter of fact, members of the Indian Civil Service who have been either Collectors or District Judges have no difficulty in getting in as Secretaries. If that is so, why not recruit Secretaries and Under Secretaries from experienced sub-judges? Government would be well advised in importing into the Secretariat at the earliest opportunity an officer having direct knowledge of the Judicial branch. He will be of help in disposing not only the 34 or the 15 cases but also other kindred matters. We should not merely consider the number of disposals in the Judicial branch and its proportion to the total number of disposals. The resolution only suggests that Government should reorganize the department and should take a suitable opportunity for giving effect to this reform. My Honourable Friend is only anxious to press on the attention of Government the desirability of making a departure instead of adopting the old wooden method of selecting men from the Revenue Department. Why not try this experiment? With these remarks, I strongly support the resolution."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO :—" Your Excellency, I should like to add a word in support of this resolution. The Hon'ble Mr. Davidson's speech appears to me to be a kind of special plea for the continuance of this existing system. He has stated that an officer with judicial experience will not be of much use, because the references are very few. Practically they were 49, which came to 15 when examined and when further examined to one or two, out of 1,247 references. Then he went on to say that an officer of the Police department or an officer of the Educational service might be much more useful, if it went merely on the question of previous training. If my Honourable Friend Mr. Ranga Achariyar brought forward a proposition that a police officer of the Provincial Civil Service should be appointed, I am sure it would have been said that he lacked educational experience, because education is one of the subjects dealt with in the Home Department. I am perfectly certain that the Hon'ble Mr. Davidson will show that any member of the Madras Provincial Civil Service would be unfit to be the Under Secretary, Home Department. That seems to be the general trend of the reply that has been vouchsafed in this matter. The Hon'ble Mr. Davidson further stated that perhaps a member of the Judicial service would be somewhat embarrassed in criticising the proposals coming from the High Court. I suppose it is open to any junior Under Secretary to criticise the action of District Magistrates, experienced Collectors, Members of the Board of Revenue, the Inspector-General of Registration, the Director of Public Instruction and every officer under Government. The heads of departments may be criticised by a junior member of the Indian Civil Service, but once a member of the Provincial Civil Service is asked to do the same duty, difficulties will come up, embarrassment will be felt, service prestige will be affected and all difficulties of this character will come up. Your Excellency, I wish to take this opportunity of voicing the great discontent that now prevails in the members of the Provincial Civil Service in this Presidency on account of lack of promotion, lack of opportunities for the various special appointments that have been created during the last five or six years. I have myself tried to bring forward resolutions to widen their chances, but unfortunately every one of those resolutions was vetoed on the ground that the matter was under correspondence with the Government of India or under the consideration of the Public Services Commission or on some other grounds. I feel very strongly that this grave discontent which prevails—I am not particular about the exact proposal—should be redressed and their opportunities should be widened. I hope Your Excellency's Government would look at it from the larger aspect of giving better opportunities for promotion to these members of the Provincial Civil Service and wider employment in the public services of this Presidency. I may be speaking a little wide apart from the exact resolution, but I felt inclined to do so because I myself intended to say a great deal, but every opportunity was denied to me by the disallowance of resolutions on the ground that the matter was under the consideration of the Government."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR :—" Your Excellency, I have very few words to add to what has been stated. The Hon'ble Mr. Davidson referred to the fact that a civil judicial officer may not be much needed. But a Subordinate Judge need not entirely be a civil judicial officer; he might have had experience in the profession, or experience as Assistant Sessions Judge. He will also have had experience as a criminal judge. Therefore it will not be entirely on the civil side. As for the objection taken that it will require a police magistrate of the department to be there, I am afraid the complaint is that there is too much of police methods, because the Government members have mostly had experience as district magistrates and heads of police and Secretaries to Government have considerable experience both as magistrates and also have had intimate touch with the police. I do not think Government need any experience in police or magisterial matters. On the other hand, a little admixture of judicial methods in the disposal of matters which come up before Government would be most welcome. The Hon'ble Mr. Davidson mentioned to us that he felt no need. I will remind him of one small instance where if he had a Secretary or an Under Secretary who has had experience of the Judicial department, he would not have answered my interpellation in the way he did. I called for information as to the existing state of work in the High Court on the 1st of March. He thought it would take some trouble to call for the information, but if he had called for the monthly return list, which any judicial officer knows, he would not have found it so difficult as to have said that 'Government are not in possession of that information and do not propose to call for that information.' Government could have given that information. I called for it for a specific purpose, to show that there is not enough work in the High Court for all the Judges whom we are blessed with.

(Mr. Ranga Achariyar; Mr. Davidson.)

"Then there are other matters which I wish to mention. The judicial officer will often act as a check. Whether he criticises or not will be immaterial because his criticism will be for private perusal of the Member in charge. If he criticised rightly, I do not suppose that the High Court is likely to know that an Under Secretary has criticised its proposal. I think the Hon'ble Mr. Ramachandra Rao has already given an answer as regards the District Magistrates, Members of the Board of Revenue and other high officers being dealt with in the Secretariat notes. The great point of my resolution is this. I wish prominently to mention that the Judicial department of the Provincial Civil Service is treated as if it were an out-caste. They are treated as outside the pale and their claims are not considered in the same sympathetic spirit. I do not know whether it is due to the prejudice of the executive branch to the Judicial branch. I want to infuse some spirit of sympathy and co-ordination between the two branches. That is the great object of the resolution. Let the Secretariat consider that the members of the Judicial branch are also members of the Civil Service. That feeling I want to infuse into the Secretariat. I am afraid there is an alien feeling. That feeling will be got rid of if they can get in as well as members in the Executive branch. The feeling should be that they are all members of the same block; that should be the idea which should prevail and that feeling itself will be of great advantage. There is nothing in the rules to prevent it. I therefore appeal to Your Excellency's Government to accept this resolution. It will give great contentment to the members of that hard-worked branch."

The Hon'ble Mr. L. DAVIDSON:—"The discussion on this resolution, if I may say so, has travelled far afield. The proposition is that a member of the Judicial branch of the Provincial Civil Service should be imported into the Home Secretariat. The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. Krishna Rao has sought to base on that proposition an attack on the delay in passing orders in regard to the furtherance of judicial reforms and reorganization. I cannot for a moment subscribe to such a contention. He said: 'I have not the slightest doubt that these delays would have been much reduced if the Government had had the assistance of an experienced Subordinate Judge.' If the Honourable Member had seen the files as I have seen them, he would have found that the cases which he mentioned—the improvement of the scale of pay of the process establishment, the question of the establishment of additional sub-courts and district munsifs' courts and Mr. Phillips' scheme to increase the pay of the judiciary—if he had seen the course which these cases actually took, if he had seen the actual volume of Secretariat papers, I do not think for a moment that he would have come forward with the assertion that the presence of an experienced sub-judge or a district munsif could have had any perceptible bearing on the disposal of the question. It is financial considerations and the necessity of correspondence with the Government of India and the Secretary of State which block the disposal of schemes of this character.

Again, the Hon'ble Mr. Ramachandra Rao travelled far afield to my mind in seeking to place the Indian Civil Service and the Provincial Civil Service in opposition in this matter. The opposition is surely between the judicial and the executive branches, not between the Provincial Civil Service and the Indian Civil Service. At the present moment, an officer of the Provincial Civil Service is Home Secretary and an officer of the Provincial Civil Service is Under Secretary. It is quite a mistake to suppose that the question is between the Indian Civil Service and the Provincial Civil Service. I quite admit that there is an opposition between the executive and the judicial services and I am disposed to think that it is a well-grounded opposition. One should think not once but twice before making the Secretariat and the Executive Government an object of advancement for judicial officers, who may at any time have to decide suits in which the Government are a party. Surely that might lead the way to corruption of their judicial impartiality, a point which would appeal most strongly to the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"I shall be very glad if Government would part with all their powers of appointment and promotion to the High Court. Then I would not press this resolution."

The Hon'ble Mr. L. DAVIDSON:—"If a subordinate judge or a district munsif were brought into the Secretariat, he would have to replace one of the Provincial Under Secretaries. It might also be legally possible to bring in a District Judge under the limitations of the Government of India Act, but we have not hitherto ever appointed a District Judge from the Civil Service as a Secretary to Government and to do so would be contrary to the usual practice.

But what is wanted in the Secretariat is not people who are specialists in one branch, whether civil judicial work or police or magisterial or education, or any other branch. It is people who have special aptitude for Secretariat work. I do not say that a sub-judge would necessarily be unfit for such work. I can quite conceive that individual officers might be well fitted, but what I am seeking to controvert is the proposition put forward by the Honourable mover and mentioned by the Honourable seconder that special value and importance should be attached to inside knowledge of the civil judiciary. My answer to that is that exactly the same reason would justify the appointment of a police officer or an educational officer or a magisterial officer. I do not contend that a sub-judge is per se unfit for Secretariat work; but I do claim to have established that there is not any large proportion of work in which his inside knowledge would be of value.

"I do not think, sir, I need detain the Council or Your Excellency longer in regard to this matter. I have only to say in conclusion that Government do not think it necessary, in the interests of the Judicial branch of the Provincial Civil Service, to depart from the attitude, which I have outlined. On the contrary, we do not wish in any way to risk harm to the judicial impartiality of members of that service by holding out hopes to them of comfortable Secretariat headquarter appointments."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"The Honourable Member has put forward his point of view and brought forward his suggestions to the notice of Government. I do not know if he wishes to press it. It is a matter always left to the discretion of the Governor in making the appointments."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"If that matter is borne in mind, I will not press."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"It will be borne in mind."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"I do not press the resolution."

With the permission of His Excellency the President, the resolution was withdrawn.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"We have a long list of resolutions."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. KRISHNA RAO:—"In any case it will have to run to Monday."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"Will Honourable Members give me an idea as to the resolutions not to be moved?"

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR:—"I and II* will not be moved."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"Are they withdrawn?"

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR:—"Yes."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO:—"I do not propose to move XXVI†. My object has been attained."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"All the other resolutions will be moved. I must adjourn the discussion of the Budget till Monday. We will proceed with the discussion of resolution XVIII."

The Hon'ble Mr. K. SADASIVA BHAT:—"Resolution XXI‡ will not be moved."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"Thank you, that will be noted."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. KRISHNA RAO:—"There may be a chance of beginning the discussion of the Budget to-morrow."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"If that is so, I shall consent to its commencement to-morrow."

The Council then rose for the day.

RESOLUTION RE IMPROVEMENT OF DRAINAGE CONDITIONS IN THE GODAVARI AND KISTNA DELTAS.

The Hon'ble Mr. B. VENKATAPATI RAJU:—"The resolution which I have the honour to propose runs thus:—

'XVIII. This Council recommends to the Governor in Council that programme for a continuous improvement of the drainage conditions of the Godavari and Kistna deltas be prepared and published and put into execution as expeditiously as possible.'

"Your Excellency, this is a subject which has engaged the attention of our Council during the last several years. It has come up for discussion in one shape or another and I may submit that the Government have taken the same view which the representatives have taken in the matter of the drainage conditions. It is admitted that the present drainage condition is very defective. Government say that every attempt is being taken to improve the condition of drainage, but the people still complain that the Government do not pay as much attention to drainage as they pay to irrigation for the very good reason that one gives revenue, the other is only taxing the purse. So far as the drainage condition is concerned, any amount spent will be spent without any return—I mean immediate return; but it will have the effect of bringing contentment and material prosperity to the localities concerned. Unless and until Government take it that it is an equally essential thing to provide drainage, mere taking up of major irrigation works, though possibly helping to the extent of bringing waste lands into cultivation, will not satisfy us so far as the health of the people is concerned. There was a misconception for a long time that the natural outlets would suffice. The drainage conditions provided were found to be inadequate as time passed on and with reference to some of these matters our engineers have given us the assurance that they are unable to do anything. We were told by Mr. Ellis that the Kolair lake drainage condition was a hoary enigma which can never be solved. On the 29th of March 1915 when the Hon'ble Mr. Ramachandra Rao moved a resolution that early steps be taken to improve the existing arrangements for the drainage of the Godavari and Kistna deltas, Government were pleased to accept that resolution. As there was not much of improvement, in 1916 the same Honourable Gentleman moved another resolution on the 22nd November which, with some amendments made in the Council, Government were pleased to accept. That was to the effect that the present defective drainage in the Godavari and Kistna deltas should be further investigated and a suitable programme for improving the drainage condition in the above deltas be drawn up. In the year 1916 there was an admission of the defective drainage and also a promise of further investigation and preparation of a suitable programme for improving the drainage arrangements in those two deltas. During the last three years some amount is being spent and I notice in the present budget also some provision is made—Rs. 1,93,000. When a question was put as to what was the amount, Government replied it was Rs. 190 lakhs. Though directly under the head of drainage in the budget I noticed about 140 lakhs, yet Government say they are going to spend 190 lakhs. I may invite the attention of the Council, at the time when the discussion took place in November 1916, Colonel Ellis promised to look into sixteen drainage systems. He promised to do something with regard to the outfall of the Thuliabagha drain. We want to know what was done with reference to the same. He also stated that estimates were being prepared for improving the drainage higher up, with reference to that drain, at a cost of Rs. 2,22,000. I do not think much progress is made even in that direction. Then he stated that there are drains intercepted by Kovur-Manjair junction canal for which he suggested a sum of Rs. 36,400 was wanted. Besides that, he said that the large drain, the Ainapur drain, was a thing which should be improved and he suggested Rs. 1,26,300 was wanted for that purpose. He promised that he would call for the estimates for improving outfalls of the seaboard drains at a cost of about 3 lakhs. The same gentleman also suggested that to improve the drainage condition of Yenamadurru drain it required an additional sum of Rs. 3,73,000. I do not know whether any weir and lock were constructed at the head of Kakaraparru to improve the means of disposal of flood water which he suggested would cost about Rs. 45,000. And he suggested a scheme for altering Nilacodu and Bondada drains for the improvement of the drainage of that locality and he gave no estimates for that. He stated that it was not ready at that time. There was also Ryves regulator which he said would cost Rs. 21,500. He also spoke about Gunadala drain and extending the Yambalakodu and diverting the upper part of Peddalanka drain and he lastly stated that for the improvement of Kommileru and Kavatticodu drains and diverting the outfalls to the sea to improve the drainage of 265 miles, all this would come to about 20 to 30 lakhs. But I am glad to learn from our sympathetic officer in charge of this department, the Hon'ble Mr. Howley, that the Government are prepared to spend a larger amount than even this to the extent of 60 lakhs.

"My proposal is modest enough. What I state is that as the Government are willing to admit the defective condition of the drainage and as they see the necessity for improving the condition, I ask that there should be a comprehensive scheme prepared and not only prepared but it should be published, because when it is once published, we will know what the Government are doing, whether they are carrying out the schemes as published, and also I lastly request that it should be put into execution as expeditiously as possible. Persons who have actually seen the drainage condition in these deltas must come to one unanimous conclusion that it is very bad; especially in days when there are floods you will find several villages surrounded with water, several fields submerged and people suffering untold misery. I do not think our engineering skill is inadequate to meet the conditions. There is a general continual complaint with reference to these matters that we do not take a comprehensive view of things, but we only try to meet the conditions as they arise from time to time; that is not a thing which should be done with reference to drainage conditions, but we must have a proper scheme before us.

"I quite admit the difficulty of spending a larger amount in this respect for want of two things. One is labour and also the number of officers who can be secured to devote their time for that purpose, but when it is an essential matter, the easiest way to secure labour is to give wages according to the market rate. When I heard that want of labour was standing in the way of improving the drainage conditions even in the year 1916 I inquired of the people in the parts affected, and they told me that it was not impossible to secure labour, but the Department of Public Works was not prepared to pay the wages at the market rate. I do not understand how it is possible to secure labour unless we are prepared to pay at the rates which they are able to get elsewhere; and when the Government are able to spend even a larger amount, even crores, on railways, they are securing efficient labour and sufficient labour. The answer generally is that they can provide facilities for bringing the coolies from distant places. Some step should be taken and I do not think that want of labour especially in a country like India is a thing which cannot be surmounted. The other thing is very easy to surmount—for the Chief Engineer to appoint proper officers to look after this business. Therefore my earnest appeal is that a programme should be published and steps should be taken to utilize this amount as early as possible. We as laymen may not be able to say within how long a period this could be accomplished. We could not expect it to be done immediately but we expect strenuous efforts to be made and it must be vigorously executed, so that the object should be to secure it and not to allow it to take its own time. We must infuse vigour in the execution of these works and see that it is done, that every pie in the budget is spent ; though it does not yield revenue, it adds much comfort and material prosperity to the people. Under these circumstances, I hope there would be no difficulty for the Government in accepting such a simple suggestion on the lines on which it was accepted on two previous occasions."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur K. R. SURYANARAYANAMURTHI NAYUDU :—" Your Excellency, this is not the first time when this matter is brought up before this Council. It is known to the Public Works Department and to Government that the drainage system in the Godavari and Kistna deltas is defective in most places and in some places it is very very defective. The Hon'ble Mr. Howley who is well acquainted with these deltas, I am sure, will agree with me when I say that the drainage in these deltas is very defective and that it requires early attention and improvement. Some years ago, when the earthenware pipes were introduced to supply water from the irrigation channels, a committee was appointed to send a report. I was also on that committee along with Sir Robert Clegg and Mr. Langston. We went round the Godavari delta and wherever we went there were large complaints regarding this defective drainage. Of course, the Department of Public Works has been doing something here and there, but not to such an extent as the situation requires. So it is highly necessary that a programme should be drawn up for some continuous work and work should be begun as early as possible to spread over some years. Some drains especially in the Godavari Eastern delta are very defective. There are several villages that are submerged every year as soon as the rains set in. Unless these drains are improved, the ryots in those villages who have been suffering will continue to suffer unless immediate steps are taken to improve those drains. With these words I second this resolution."

The Hon'ble Mr. W. J. J. HOWLEY :—" Your Excellency, the resolution that has just been moved and seconded is very similar to a resolution moved by the Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. Ramachandra Rao at a meeting of this Council in November 1916. In that resolution the Hon'ble Mr. Ramachandra Rao asked for a public inquiry into the state of drainage in the Godavari and Kistna deltas and wanted that a suitable programme should be laid down for improving the drainage in these deltas. The Hon'ble Colonel Ellis in speaking to that resolution admitted that serious losses are suffered by the ryots in the deltas in years of abnormal rainfall, such as in 1916 and 1917. The rainfall between June and December in those two years was more than double the rainfall in 1918 and naturally there has been considerable outcry and considerable attention has been drawn to drainage defects, owing to that reason during the last couple of years. Colonel Ellis pointed out that there are considerable extents of swampy lands under cultivation which always suffer and have always suffered from defective drainage. The Government are, however, under no obligation to drain such lands except as part of a productive scheme. The cases which call for preferential treatment are obviously cases where owing to the extension of irrigation, the construction of canals, channels and so on the original natural lines of drainage have in some ways been interfered with or rendered less efficient. The resolution then moved by the Hon'ble Mr. Ramachandra Rao was accepted by Government in a modified form omitting the words 'public inquiry' which it was pointed out would serve no useful purpose as it would elicit information already in possession of Government."

"Government do not dispute the fact that improvements are necessary in the drainage in regard to both the Godavari and Kistna deltas—both expensive and extensive improvements—but the execution of these improvements in a liberal scale during the last few years has been held up and delayed solely owing to financial considerations. Estimates have been prepared and sanctioned and the supervising establishment is available and all that is wanting is the money to pay for the works. Once all these estimates are for works not remunerative they require the sanction of the Government of India and that is one difficulty in preparing a definite programme. We cannot say definitely that any proposals sent by this Government will be accepted by the Government of India. In the case of some drains sent up in 1910 or 1912 by this Government, the Government of India strongly objected to the very high cost which land bore as compared with the cost of the scheme. By degrees the cultivation extended to the low water margin of these drains. When we want to widen and improve a drain say at a cost of about Rs. 1,000 or Rs. 1,200, they agree ; there is not much difficulty. But in regard to the one drain which I am referring to the Polraz, the compensation was something like Rs. 30,000 as against Rs. 10,000, the cost of actual work. The Government of India refused to sanction it and it was sent back and they said that they did not see why public money should be spent in improving the condition of these low-lying lands which have no doubt been assessed at a lower rate and which only brought in to Government a water-rate on the crop."

"In accepting that resolution, the Government undertook to prepare programmes of improvements to be carried out. Programmes of drainage improvements were accordingly obtained from local officers and these programmes amounted to 25.76 lakhs for Godavari and 34.77 lakhs for the Kistna delta. The total of these two deltas is no less than 60.73 lakhs. It must be remembered that these programmes represent merely the proposals made by the local officers ; in most cases detailed plans and estimates have still to be prepared and then they have to be sent up to the Government of India. The programmes are only really proposals made tentatively. We have already on hand sanctioned estimates for what can be executed during the next few years, so that the want of a complete and comprehensive programme, referred to by the Hon'ble Mr. Venkatapati Raju is not delaying the work in any way. For example, in Godavari delta we have estimates aggregating to 5.99 lakhs already sanctioned ; detailed proposals have been received and are understood to be in progress and proposals are under scrutiny for works which would cost over 11 lakhs and more. I am afraid I have omitted to note the amount in the Kistna delta, but we have received estimates amounting to a considerable amount which are now under scrutiny prior to submission to the Government of India. I am directed to accept the Honourable Member's motion for a preparation and publication of programmes of drainage works on the understanding that the programmes should not be considered to be exhaustive or final programmes embracing all works to be carried out in the next 20 or 30 years. It is quite impossible. These programmes must be tentative subject to alteration as we go on. The programmes that Government propose to publish will merely be lists of works arranged more or less in the order of urgency, which as at present advised, they propose to carry out subject to the allotment of funds and the sanction of the Government of India where necessary. There are also several large estimates which have been sanctioned during the last few years by the Government of India for execution after the war and we have recently written to the Government of India asking permission to put these works in hand at once amounting to about 7 lakhs."

"The Hon'ble Mr. Venkatapati Raju referred to the Anantapur drain, the sanctioned estimate of which amounts to Rs. 1,45,000. The work is now in hand. We sent orders and recently there was half a lakh allotted for this work last year but at the instance of the Government of India, it was withdrawn and surrendered to the Government of India. The amount has been now reallocated and local officers have been ordered to put the work in hand at once. He also referred to the Tulsiabagha which has an outlet in the Cocanada drain. That has a lot of reed and brush-wood."

"We find that the type of dredgers available at Godavari are not suitable and we propose to wait for further improvements to be carried out till the arrival of suction dredgers from Home, which will do the work much more rapidly and usefully even for other drains. It is proposed to get two or three of these for both the Kistna and Godavari deltas. The Honourable Member also referred to the sea-board drains of Panchanadhi and others. They are tidal drains which cannot be cleared by hand labour. The bucket dredgers are not suitable for dredging on a large scale and we must get some big dredgers which we will do as soon as possible."

"I should like to point out that the rates at which these works can be carried out must depend entirely upon the labour available. The Hon'ble Mr. Venkatapati Raju seemed rather sceptical as to there being any difficulty about labour, but I can assure him that there is the greatest possible difficulty to face. Even when we offer the extra inducement of a bonus, we find that we do not get on very much faster. The higher rates do not seem to make much difference. That same thing was decided at a conference some years ago at Ootacamund for tank restoration schemes. One of the questions under consideration then was whether the increase of rates would improve our outturn and it was decided for various reasons that it would not help the work in the same way unless we raise the rates very considerably. I do not think it would make much difference in these drains. We had a big drain mentioned by the Honourable Member the Yenamadurru drain, estimates for which have been sanctioned by the Government of India for Rs. 3,41,000. It was eight years under execution on an average expenditure of Rs. 45,000 a year. There is another big drain in Tanjore costing Rs. 1,70,000 which is six years under execution for the same reason. The labour difficulty is the difficulty everywhere, especially in the Godavari and Kistna deltas where there has been considerable expansion of the second crop. These drains can be attended to by dredging only during the dry season. We are not getting coolies in the dry season. Local labour is all engaged in harvesting in April and getting the land ready for June. In Yenamadurru drain, we had a contractor who tried to get labour and we offered them considerable bonus and so on, but without much effect. There are twenty estimates sanctioned or about to be sanctioned, more than enough to keep all the labour available in full work, and if some Honourable members who have local influence would help us in getting more labour, we may get on faster."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO :—" Your Excellency, the Hon'ble Mr. Howley's reply to this resolution is very satisfactory so far as it goes. The Honourable Member is intimately acquainted with the conditions of both the Godavari and Kistna deltas, and I consider it a great satisfaction to us that he is in a position now to examine the whole subject as to the requirements of both these deltas from the point of view of drainage. Your Excellency, as has been pointed out, this is one of the subjects on which myself and my predecessors in office and my Honourable Friend Mr. Venkatapati Raju who represents the ryotwari landholders have felt very keenly and it is a satisfaction to us that the time has now come at least to make a programme, a comprehensive programme of all these works. The first difficulty that has been suggested is the question of funds. Your Excellency, we know that these are major productive works and any expenditure in the drainage of these two deltas will only have to come with the permission of the Government of India. We are quite aware of the fact. The Honourable Member stated that the expenditure on drainage can only be sanctioned as part of a productive scheme. I think I understood him aright."

The Hon'ble Mr. W. J. J. HOWLEY :—" I referred only to the two areas, the low swamps, some of them below sea level which have no real claim to expect that their drains would be productive."

1086 RESOLUTION RE IMPROVEMENT OF DRAINAGE CONDITIONS IN THE GODAVARI AND KISTNA DELTAS.

(Mr. M. Ramachandra Rao.)

[5TH APRIL 1919.]

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO:—"The lands referred to by the Hon'ble Mr. Howley are lands forming a low swamp which have been brought under re-settlement operations and are exactly on the same footing as any other land in the delta for the purpose of assessment of land revenue. Therefore there is no ground at all for not improving the drainage condition of the deltas. Our contention has been for years that both the Kistna and the Godavari deltas taken as a whole have been paying 17½ per cent on the capital outlay on irrigation schemes in these two deltas. That being so, any expenditure on the drains should not be calculated separately, but must be debited to the irrigation scheme and it can by no means be contended that when the Godavari delta is paying 17½ per cent and the Kistna delta is paying similarly, any expenditure on drains can be regarded as anything but part of a productive scheme. Therefore, Your Excellency, I am not in agreement with the Hon'ble Mr. Howley if he intended to say that this expenditure of 65 lakhs or 25 lakhs or 35 lakhs would not be considered a legitimate expenditure debitable to the scheme, even assuming that a portion of it is to drain the swampy land which is assessed to land revenue. However, be that as it may, hereafter this major irrigation scheme, if the scheme of constitutional reforms becomes an accomplished fact, will become a Provincial subject. We shall probably have no more references to the Government of India for sanctioning estimates either for this or for any other purpose in this Presidency. So much on the subject of finance.

"I contend, Your Excellency, that any expenditure such as this is a perfectly legitimate charge and a very necessary charge, seeing that these two deltas are giving such handsome return on the capital outlay. Then going to a few other matters, I quite recognise that the rate of progress with reference to the execution of these large drainage works costing lakhs of rupees depends upon the labour that is available. It is no doubt true that at the time when these works have to be executed, there are demands upon the labour of the districts arising from agricultural conditions and the execution of routine works of the Public Works Department and the municipalities and local boards and so on. But I venture to bring to the notice of the Honourable Member, as he made the reference to the conference at Ootacamund with reference to the execution of tank restoration works, this fact that one of the complaints then brought forward at that conference—I was present at the time—both by administrative officers and the Public Works Department officers, was that there was no attempt made by the ryots to co-operate with the department in the execution of these works and ultimately the decision that was reached by that conference was that a revenue officer of the grade of at least a tahsildar should be specially employed to organize the necessary labour in the districts where these works are undertaken on a large scale. I venture to bring this fact to the notice of the Honourable Member with a view to adopt a similar procedure in the execution of these drainage works. I am certain that if a special officer is appointed to co-operate with the Public Works Department to organize labour and stimulate the ryots to come forward with assistance and generally to procure the necessary labour so far as it is available in the district or outside, it will be a step in the right direction. I would suggest that in the Kistna, Guntur and Godavari districts during the season during which these drainage works are undertaken a special officer should be appointed for about five months to organize labour for the department just two months before the work is started and place it at its disposal as far as possible. That is so far as the question of labour is concerned.

"Then there is the question of the investigation of these works and their execution. The Hon'ble Mr. Howley stated that he had estimates and figures for Godavari for about 25 lakhs and about 35 lakhs for Kistna, but that they are not based on actual estimates; they are merely rough forecasts as to what is likely to be the expenditure on these works. So that we still have a good deal of work to be done before the estimates could be sanctioned and the necessary investigations made, even independently of the question of actual execution. The question arises whether this large extra work can now be performed by the existing public works divisions in these two deltas. I doubt it very much. My conversations with the Superintending Engineer and with several Executive Engineers in both these districts lead me to the conclusion that if we desire a speedy execution of these works, the investigation could not be undertaken by the existing ordinary staff of these divisions. I would suggest for his consideration the necessity of forming a separate division in each of these three districts for the investigation of these drainage works and the execution of these drainage works when estimate are sanctioned. I think that the time has come when drainage should be treated as apart from irrigation. I trust therefore, that the Honourable Member would not rest satisfied by merely publishing a list of works, but that he will follow it up by making specific proposals for the formation of separate divisions if necessary or for additional staff for the investigation of these schemes and the preparation of estimates.

"There is one other point which he made, and that is the question of land compensation. It is true that on account of the fact that every inch of ground has been occupied by cultivation, compensation for acquisition for drainage works is costly. It is not only for drainage works but for any works in the deltas, either village extension or for buildings, land is costly. But even assuming it is, it will pay the additional cost. The illustration that he has given of the unwillingness of the Government of India to sanction estimates on the score of the high cost of the land really illustrates the point. The ryots in these two deltas have been encouraged for years, actively encouraged by the officers of the Public Works Department as well as by the officers of the Revenue department, to bring the lands under cultivation and that was done from the point of view of revenue without sufficient consideration for the requirements of the village as regards village extension, extension of village sites, and even regardless of the necessary drainage arrangements—let alone the sanitary drainage for these villages. I do not think, therefore, it is a consideration that ought to weigh with Your Excellency's Government that the cost of land will be heavy. It is heavy in every delta and that ought not to be a consideration for neglecting this important work. Your Excellency, it is a fact that year after year in both these deltas a certain amount of remission is given by the revenue department consequent mainly upon the defective drainage and the consequent flooding of irrigated fields. That would be a saving if these drainage arrangements are properly carried out.

"Having said all this, I only wish to make one or two inquiries in connexion with the figures which the Honourable Member has given. One is with reference to the Kistna, whether the figure that he has given includes the proposals in regard to the scheme for moderating the floods of the Tammalerru."

The Hon'ble Mr. W. J. J. HOWLEY:—"It does not include that."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO:—"I should also like to ask what possibility there is of the construction of a regulator for this Polraj canal. It has been under consideration for a long time. I think he mentioned it as part of the drainage scheme. If that is so, I have been asked several times by ryots of that part of the country to urge upon Your Excellency's Government the absolute necessity of the construction of that as early as possible, and in arranging for a programme I trust that the Honourable Member will regard it as an urgent work which ought to take precedence over others.

"Your Excellency, I am glad that this resolution has been accepted and finally I should like to suggest this: We may act in this matter on the suggestion of Your Excellency, with regard to the publication of our proceedings in connexion with the Hon'ble Mr. Narasimha Ayyar's proposal, that, if any particular matter required publication of the proceedings of this Council, Government may be prepared to consider such a request. Your Excellency, in this matter there has been considerable discontent in our districts for some time and I therefore propose that Your Excellency's Government should publish the debate on this resolution and also publish the forecast of the works likely to be undertaken in the District Gazettes of these two districts. It will show to the ryots that Government after all are alive to the requirements of these two deltas and that the matter has been brought to the notice of Your Excellency's Government and that the matter has reached the stage of active consideration. I make this suggestion so that wider publicity may be given to the request contained in this resolution."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"I will now put the resolution unless the Honourable Member has any remarks to make."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. VENKATAPATI RAJU:—"Your Excellency, nothing more need be said with reference to this resolution except expressing our grateful thanks to the Government for the acceptance of this resolution. I may be permitted to make one remark, that the Government of India might not be so forward in providing the necessary funds. But I may mention in this connection that, whenever additional funds for the Provincial Government for useful subjects are broached in the Imperial Council, invariably the answer is that no Provincial Government pressed it either in the matter of sanitation or village improvement or any other thing. Therefore, I hope that so far as this is concerned, Government will leave no stone unturned for getting a grant from the Imperial Government, at least what is absolutely necessary for the improvement of the drainage condition. As the Government have been pleased to accept the resolution, I have nothing more to say."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"With regard to the request of the Hon'ble Mr. Ramachandra Rao that this debate should be published, I am sure my Honourable Colleague in charge of the department will be prepared to consider whether the Hon'ble Mr. Howley's statement should be published in the District Gazette. Does the Honourable Member mean that it should be published in the vernacular?"

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO:—"Yes."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"As it is only one vernacular, Telugu, it is a comparatively easy matter."

The resolution was then put to the Council and agreed to.

RESOLUTION RE APPOINTMENT OF JIU-JITSU TEACHERS.

The Hon'ble Mr. B. VENKATAPATI RAJU:—"Your Excellency, the resolution which stands in my name, runs as follows:—

'XIX. This Council recommends to the Governor in Council that the Government be pleased to engage the services of Japan gymnastic teachers to train our school gymnastic teachers in Jiu-Jitsu for the purpose of training the student population as far as possible in the art of self-defence and to keep the body in good training.'

(Mr. Venkatapati Raju.)

[5TH APRIL 1919.]

"Your Excellency, this is a small matter but of national importance. I know that I have not only to convince the Government but to convince some of my non-official colleagues of the necessity and importance of this. When I wanted to move at the last meeting that grants-in-aid should be provided for this, and several other objects in connexion with physical culture, the Hon'ble the Director of Public Instruction was kind enough to point out that under the head of gymnastics, this can be done, and therefore I may take it for granted that wherever Jiu-Jitsu is taught, it will not be viewed with suspicion, but will be viewed by the Government with approval and some provision will be made as grant-in-aid for other gymnastic purposes. Your Excellency, I may mention that whatever be the advance in the matter of the spread of education in the country, there is no gainsaying the fact that so far as physical culture is concerned, it is deteriorating. The Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar is nodding his head in disapproval and probably he seems to think that there is much advance in physical culture. Whatever it may be in the places which he has knowledge, I may say that in most schools and colleges that I know, physical culture is utterly neglected. We find only here and there some football matches, cricket matches, tennis or badminton matches. But we have invariably the process of drill, and curiously it has become such a bad piece of routine that a gymnastic instructor will take the hours from 11 to 5; he will take up one class between 11 and 12 a.m. and another class between 12 and 1 p.m., another between 1 and 2 another between 2 and 3 p.m. and so on, irrespective of the consideration whether this thing is to be done before meals or after meals, or at the beginning, or at the end, or in the morning or in the evening. Just as we read history or geography or mathematics, drilling goes on from hour to hour all through the day. That is the practice in most institutions. What I particularly want is that our boys should be trained to be manly and self-reliant. I do not think any Honourable non-official Member would oppose such a national ideal to be set before us. In order to have such an ideal, we must train our boys to be self-depending persons to attain to the fullest height of manhood which their system is possible to realize. There would be certain other difficulties, if I were to suggest that in the physical culture that is to be given to our students, we must teach the art of self-defence.

"If therefore, we want to understand perfect physical culture adopted in any institution, I would invite the attention of Honourable Members to Japan where it is carried to perfection. There the boys are not only taught defensive measures but offensive measures, as fencing and shooting. For the present I am quite satisfied with Jiu-Jitsu. It is not only to keep the body in a good and energetic condition but the man will know his own value and he can defend himself without the aid of any lathi or any other thing. By the process of muscular training, he is able to withstand the attacks of even a bully. When a person understands that, he can defend himself, that itself is worth imparting. I may also mention this: I might be asked, why should you not be satisfied with the provision already existing, that in all institutions boys may be taught gymnastics and the Government are making provision that Jiu-Jitsu also may be taught there; and why should you want this additional thing at the hands of Government? Jiu-Jitsu was unknown in most countries till Japan stood foremost after the victory over China and since then everybody is acquainted with their methods of perfecting bodily training, and curiously England is one of the countries which adopted this system. The Hon'ble the Director of Public Instruction might enlighten us on that point, but I am told in books that in England it was adopted. I need not go even to England; even in India some steps were taken to give such training to our soldiers and I do not see any difficulty in providing an institution where it is taught. If an institution were started to train students it is an advantage to have a central institution. Therefore I suggest that teachers in batches may be trained. Just as we are training sanitary inspectors in Madras to provide sanitary inspectors for various municipalities, we can train batches of teachers who in their turn, would teach the boys in the various schools. That would not take long and once we give the stamp of approval of Government, it will be easy. In India nothing will have acceptance in educational institutions unless it has the stamp of the approval of Government, because they solely rely upon Government aid in most cases. Under these circumstances, if the Government undertake to do it, then every school or institution which has not hitherto undertaken it, may attempt to do some such thing in this direction. Otherwise they might not know whether the particular inspector of schools of that division would approve of it or not. If once they know that it has the approval of Government, and if evidence is given by starting an institution, small or big, according to the available finances we can secure the training of several hundreds of teachers in the course of a number of years and that would be a very useful thing in this connexion. Unless we want our future generations to be weak and dependent upon others, which is always a demoralised condition, if we want them on the other hand to be manly, I think there is nothing wrong in the Government spending some amount in this direction. If there are other directions, they are all the more welcome. I suggest this, and if the Hon'ble the Director of Public Instruction wants to suggest some additional things, I will be quite glad. Some years back, bhana and pattah and other things were taught in schools and colleges. I know that sword-play was taught, but nowadays nothing is taught except drill in unusual hours. Therefore I do not think I need take up any more of Your Excellency's time. I hope the Government will see their way to encourage this sort of physical culture along with any other thing approved by the Government, so that our boys may be perfectly trained and prove good, reliable and efficient citizens of the future."

5TH APRIL 1919.]

(Mr. Ramaswami Ayyar; Mr. Littlehales;
Mr. Ranga Achariyar.)

The Hon'ble Mr. C. P. RAMASWAMI AYYAR:—"Your Excellency, whilst I second this resolution, I should have preferred that it should have asked the Government to institute an inquiry regarding the feasibility of the training suggested in the resolution. I happen to have some knowledge of the system not only from personal inquiry but from demonstration. Whilst there is no question that the present system of gymnastics and drill as practised in most of our educational institutions serves very useful purposes and whilst I am not one of those who decry the value of what I may call communal exercises like football and cricket, which serve not only the purpose of individual bodily training but also help to stimulate the idea of comradeship and co-operation, I still feel that a great field is open for the purpose of training our students in the art of self-defence. I believe that self-respect and manliness demand that course, and under the circumstances under which our students are taught, having regard to certain peculiarities in our training and habits of thought, I think it would be a very good thing indeed if more self-reliance and desire to stand up when assaulted or rudely handled is developed in our young men. I would therefore welcome the system, but at the same time there is the alternative which may be suggested, and I think the Hon'ble Mr. Littlehales will not blame me if I probably anticipate one of his arguments as I have had the advantage of an informal discussion with him on this matter. The national systems which were in vogue until Swedish drill and gymnastics took their place, had a very salutary effect, and those old systems of exercise have been rightly characterised as calculated to render our muscles supple and develop that habit of self-reliance which it is the object of the Honourable Mover to bring about. The system of Jiu-Jitsu is more spectacular. It is perhaps calculated to show off a little more than the indigenous systems of gymnastics. It has been said, I know,—in the course of the discussion it might be said—that for perfect success Jiu-Jitsu requires some amount of co-operation in the person who is thrown and the person who attempts to throw. It requires careful and anatomical knowledge of the muscular peculiarities of the human system, knowledge of the fact that if a certain muscle is pressed in the human system, the man would become unfit and would be thrown. It would be of great value to know it and I believe that has been recognized both in the English and the American police. A person who is not physically strong may by the aid of this system be in a position to resist the assault of a more powerfully-built adversary. From that point of view, it is of great educative value and probably of individual value also. Whether the time is ripe and whether it will be useful to inculcate that in a big school are matters which are open to investigation and on which opinions might differ. I would therefore, while seconding this resolution, invite the attention of the Government to the necessity and the feasibility of instituting an inquiry as to adopting this course in this country."

The Hon'ble Mr. R. LITTLEHAILES:—"Your Excellency, the policy that the Educational department has adopted is to allow school managers a free hand in prescribing any form of physical training that they please, any physical training that is suitable to the age and physique of the pupils. We do not enforce any particular system but we prefer the system that is adopted to be based upon indigenous exercises, but it should have drafted upon it such supplementary exercises and games as will produce sound health and general physical fitness without developing some parts of the body to the neglect of other parts, such supplementary exercises and games being adopted for use in this country from systems in vogue in other countries. To this end the department is now encouraging the compilation of a manual in games and physical training which will be a guide to school teachers and to managers of schools.

"The Honourable Mover of this proposition would propose that, out of the many systems of exercise adopted in different countries, this Government should give preferential treatment to the Jiu-Jitsu system. Regarding Jiu-Jitsu when two exponents of the art give an exhibition, it is most effective; but this is due, as the Honourable Secunder of the motion has already mentioned, largely to the fact that each anticipates the move of his opponent, permits him to get the hold agreed upon and gives the impression of extreme helplessness, but as an exercise it is distinctly inferior to wrestling which, known in Tamil countries as guthi, has the further advantage of being indigenous. The difficulty of introducing it in schools is obvious, and places it in exactly the same category as boxing, fencing, wrestling and games of that kind, which however valuable they may be, are and must be considered individualistic and outside the pale of large-group activities which of necessity are the main, if not the sole activities that ought to be borne in mind when we enter into school training.

"So far as Jiu-Jitsu is required to supplement indigenous systems and so far as it might be considered by expert opinion as the best form of exercise for any particular muscular practice, its claim will no doubt be considered in the compilation of the manual. But it would be educationally unsound and the expense would be out of all proportion to the results attainable for the Government to engage Japanese gymnastic instructors to train school gymnastic tutors for the purpose of training the student population either in the art of self-defence or to keep the body in good training or for both purposes."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"Your Excellency, both the Honourable Mover and the Honourable Member speaking for Government have apparently forgotten what happened in this Council in March 1915 when I brought a resolution that more provision should be made for providing for the appointment of instructors in physical training and for the efficient training of boys in schools and colleges throughout the Presidency. On that occasion,

1018 RESOLUTION RE TRANSLATION OF THE PROCEEDINGS OF THE LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL.

(Mr. Krishna Rao ; Mr. Chidambaranatha Mudaliyar ;
Mr. Suryanarayana Rao ; Mr. Narasimha Ayyar.) [3RD APRIL 1919.]

what the Bills meant. I have not the slightest doubt that it would be much easier to give a more correct rendering of the proceedings of this Council than of the Bills. There should be therefore no hesitation in accepting this resolution."

The Hon'ble Mr. K. CHIDAMBARANATHA MUDALIYAR :—"Your Excellency, I wish to say a word in connexion with this resolution. The Hon'ble Mr. Todhunter has based his opposition to this resolution on the ground that there is practically no demand for it. I am inclined to think that in this important matter the supply should precede the demand. He has observed that there is no demand for the vernacular newspapers and the report of these proceedings in them. As one of the previous speakers has observed, there is no doubt that the vernacular newspapers are not in a position to take up this costly work. In view particularly of the very important part that the proceedings of this Council play in the every-day political life of the country, I believe the publication of translations of the proceedings of this Council would greatly help the ryot in understanding the work done in this Council and the intentions of the Government; and it will greatly help the people in their political life and political knowledge, so much so, that I think that this ought to be a case of the supply preceding the demand and the Government coming forward in their interests as well as in the interests of the public, as also in the interests of the non-official Members of this Council, and publishing the proceedings verbatim in the chief vernaculars of this Presidency. As already observed by the previous speakers, there is no use of having a summary or compendium, it will be practically of no use and it will not convince anybody. I am entirely in favour of a true and literal translation of the proceedings, which after all cannot be a difficult matter, published both in the interests of the Government and of the public."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. SURYANARAYANA RAO :—"I rise simply to support the resolution. I feel from my knowledge of the districts that there is now greater interest taken in the proceedings of the Council than before. People are now trying to understand what is going on in the Council Chamber and they are reading vernacular newspapers, where summaries of these proceedings are given. I have no doubt that if the proceedings are translated and published in the vernaculars in the Gazette, it would be an advantage to the people."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR :—"On this matter, I have been anxious to see what the Hon'ble Mr. Todhunter would say to make out a case against the resolution. The only defect he pointed out was removed by the Hon'ble Mr. Ramaswami Ayyar's amendment which I gladly accepted. I think if as early as possible translations in the chief vernaculars are published of these proceedings, that would satisfy all the non-official members here. Still I am surprised to see that the Hon'ble Mr. Todhunter seems to think that there are obstacles which he considers insuperable. He first pointed out that my own book which I published three years ago when I again stood before my constituency was published in English. Because I knew they were not getting copies of the proceedings, I printed them at my own cost and placed a copy in the hands of each voter. I found it cost me Rs. 1,000. If I were to translate it into Tamil, it would have cost me much more and I thought it was rather dear considering my circumstances. The Government are not in the same position in which I was. I hope the Government would consider the duty which they owe to the public and the advantage they derive by publishing these translations."

"One objection that has been raised on behalf of the Government is that very few persons go through the Hansard and very few people here would go through these translations. As regards the Hansard, I go through the Hansard when there is anything important and Mr. Montagu has said something. That is a sufficient reason why we should have the Hansard. Similarly let us take the Council. If the Council proceedings are translated in the vernaculars, the ordinary member of the literary society would not care to go through it. But take the rice question. Suppose we have an early print of the rice resolution debate. I am sure many persons will go through it from the beginning to the end. People would be anxious to know what their representatives have been doing and what the Government propose to do. I know that there are some matters in which interest is so great that they will make the people who ordinarily fight shy go through these publications. I must say that a volume of 1,000 pages in Tamil requires a lot of courage to tackle; but the general public may not go through every page. They have their leaders and their prominent men, half a dozen in the central town who would go through the proceedings and circulate the ideas and when any debate arises, they will be able to say 'here is an authoritative Government publication, your representative has said this and the Government have said that.' That will permeate the whole atmosphere and you will find that there is a distinct advantage in having vernacular translations of the proceedings of this Council. The Hon'ble Mr. Todhunter was mentioning that the cost of it has after all to be considered. I beg to point out one very important fact which some of my predecessors have mentioned. We are now translating the resolutions passed by local boards and municipalities and that the resolutions of this important body which decides the fate of 42 millions should not find publication in the official Gazette? Is it not a very peculiar state of affairs? With reference to the Bills themselves, it is the Bills that the Hon'ble Mr. Todhunter was thinking of when he said that the vernaculars did not easily lend themselves to the expression of thoughts that you find in the English language. That was the reason he thought, why I did not translate."

RESOLUTION RE TRANSLATION OF THE PROCEEDINGS OF THE 1019
LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL.

Mr. M. Ramachandra Rao.)

my book. I do not think I have such an eradite turn of mind that I could not find equivalents for my ideas in the vernaculars. I could turn the whole of my book into easily readable Tamil if I sit for a fortnight. I am more likely to be understood in Tamil than in English. In spite of the statement of the Hon'ble Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar that we understand English better, I am quite conscious, painfully conscious of the defects in our speaking in English; the grammar may be wrong or the accent may be wrong and there is no end of trouble. After thirty years of struggle with the foreign language with the difficulty of idioms and expressions, I still feel that I express myself very feebly in it. I am able to express my thoughts much better in Tamil and I will be thoroughly understood by my fellow Tamilians. It is not the difficulty in expression; I think it will be much better expressed in Tamil than in English.

"The matter has been thoroughly discussed. I would make only one appeal. The Government have opposed my third resolution to allow the discussion in the vernaculars and if the Government oppose this, what will be the impression on the public? They will think that the Government are afraid of democracy; they are in horror of democracy being given a chance and the people, knowing only the vernaculars, being given a chance of giving their representatives full weight. I hope the Government will not allow such an impression to go abroad. I am sure that the Government cannot possibly entertain such fear of the public taking that interest. In point of fact, the Hon'ble Mr. Todhunter has put it the other way, that the public are not following. When he says that the public are not following he points to a defect which we should remedy, and the remedy is pointed out here. After all the amount of cost is nothing. He referred to the proceedings running to 1,000 pages. Let us take only Parts III and IV of the Gazette. The number of pages in parts I and II must be more than 700 and we find there translations of abkari notification and other miscellaneous things. We need not grudge a little expenditure on such an important matter as the translation of the proceedings of this Council in the vernaculars. I hope before the matter is pressed to a poll, the Government would re-consider their decision and let it not go forth that the majority of this Council were afraid of having the proceedings published in the vernaculars."

The Hon'ble Mr. C. G. TODHUNTER :—"I am very grateful to the Honourable Members who have supported this motion for the assistance they have given in opposing it. Hardly one has maintained that there is a real demand; and one Honourable Member has said that we should create a demand. My case is that there is no demand at present and that it is not possible to create one. I quoted the old proverb that you can take a horse to the water, but you cannot make it drink. There I maintain, I have been supported by every Honourable Member who has spoken. The Honourable Mover took the point that we are publishing the proceedings of local bodies, even of the unions, and therefore a priori we should publish the proceedings of the highest legislative body in the Presidency. A priori arguments are rather dangerous. If I were to base an a priori argument on these premises I should state it thus: that we want to promote political education and we should commence in the sphere of local self-government; that we are taking the action you desire by publishing the proceedings of the local bodies in the vernaculars; the Hon'ble Mr. Ramachandra Rao says it is not worth while——"

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO (interrupting):—"As now published."

The Hon'ble Mr. C. G. TODHUNTER :—"Your case is that they should be published in a form which would be much more useful."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO :—"Yes. They should be published in the localities where the people will take an interest in them. I doubt whether persons living in various parts of the district, in the various villages outside Ellore, would take any interest in the proceedings of the Ellore municipality. But the proceedings of the municipality will be read with interest by the people of Ellore. My contention was that the publication is a necessary step in securing effective administration of the local boards and the translations should be published in such a manner as to reach those who are likely to take an interest in them. That is my point."

The Hon'ble Mr. C. G. TODHUNTER :—"I thank the Honourable Gentleman for his correction. The fact remains that we are publishing these proceedings and that no interest is taken in them. If we are to base an a priori argument on this fact, a priori it would be less useful to publish translations of the proceedings of this Council which deal with much more abstruse questions. More than one Honourable Member has admitted that the Bills as now published in the vernaculars are unintelligible without help. The Hon'ble Mr. Siva Rao goes further and says that we should not only translate, but we should coin words in all these vernaculars to enable us to make translations. That is a very large proposition. After all, this is a Legislative Council and a great deal of our legislative proceedings depends upon the nicety of meaning of particular English words; and it is impossible to convey that into a number of Dravidian vernaculars. The Hon'ble Mr. Ramachandra Rao goes so far as to admit that a complete rendering is not necessary and he says that we should publish only a summary. A number of Honourable Gentlemen have objected to the summary being made by officials. Here I appeal to the Hon'ble Mr. Ramaswami Ayyar. Speaking on the previous resolution he appealed to the vernacular papers and he laid stress on their duties. He said, is it not their duty to publish a summary of these proceedings? On that ground, I hold that a great deal has

I pointed out that what was wanted was the training, and that we must have physical instructors, not the ordinary gymnastic instructors, but instructors who can give instruction in physical culture in the way that Mr. Hall is giving instruction in European schools and Mr. Noehren has been recently engaged in giving in Indian schools. On that occasion, the Hon'ble Mr. Stone and His Excellency the President speaking on the subject spoke most sympathetically about it and promised, as soon as financial conditions improved, that better provision would be made for training more people in giving instruction not in the ordinary gymnastics, but in the way in which it is done in European schools. I should have thought that if that project had fructified, we should have been most content indeed. I know Mr. Noehren is most earnestly engaged in this work in the city itself. He is often going out to the mufassal also to give instruction in gymnastics, and I believe he trained some people in the Teachers' College some time ago. I would like the Hon'ble the Director of Public Instruction to give us more information as to what progress is made in that direction, whether more people are trained by Mr. Noehren and Mr. Hall in giving this sort of instruction in physical culture which is in vogue in European schools. Speaking for myself, I may say that I am not taking that gloomy view which the Hon'ble Mr. Venkatapati Raju is taking as to the physical appearance of our youths. I think there is a marked progress, comparing the boys of my days and the present day boys. I am gratified to see that there is improvement both in physical appearance and in moral grit and also general manly trend. I notice certainly a remarkable growth and it compares very favourably with the days of my youth. His Excellency Lord Pentland told us at the last meeting that Government were viewing this movement with the greatest sympathy and to quote His Excellency's words at page 557 in the discussion in March 1917, His Excellency stated:— 'I should like to say also—I may say that in this the Hon'ble Mr. Stone will agree—we are exceedingly satisfied with the work done under Mr. Hall and Mr. Noehren. It is making excellent progress and we believe that interest is being stimulated among Indian boys in this form of improvement, in individual improvement.' I am rather surprised that the Hon'ble the Director of Public Instruction now thinks that more importance should be attached to the indigenous systems. By all means, let us take the best of the indigenous systems, the best of the English systems, the best of the American systems, the best of the Japanese systems. But what we do want is that more attention should be paid to the scientific physical training of our boys. I am quite unacquainted with Jiu-Jitsu. I do not care which system is adopted. Let some system be adopted and encouragement given in the way in which His Excellency promised in that speech: 'I can give the Honourable Member the assurance that he asks, that we will not allow any consideration of money to stand in the way of the development of this kind of training.' Let these words be remembered by Your Excellency's Government and I ask Your Excellency's Government to come forward and train more people under Mr. Hall and Mr. Noehren so that the country will be flooded with such instructors and our youths may receive that training in physical instruction. I have come forward with this suggestion as I thought that this discussion may throw in the background the former discussion on my resolution to which I prominently draw the attention of the Council."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR:—"May I know if the subject matter which the Honourable Member is pressing is the same as what we now have before us?"

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"He has travelled far wider afield than the resolution. The subject matter of this resolution refers to jiu-jitsu. I think the Hon'ble Mr. Venkatapati Raju might reply."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR:—"I wish to take this opportunity of making one observation. It appears to me that the main matter pressed in this resolution has not been faced by the Hon'ble the Director of Public Instruction. The Hon'ble Mr. Littlehales came forward with a statement that the Government are going to place before the public a book containing forms of exercises which would be recommended for adoption in the various schools and they would be mostly indigenous. He said that they might also include a few items from other countries. It strikes me that that has nothing to do—the preparation of a book has nothing to do with the proposal now placed before this Council, which is whether we are to engage the services of Japanese gymnastic instructors to train some of our gymnastic teachers here. I do not think, whether a book is issued or not, the need for training a few teachers in the Japanese system would be done away with. I thought the Hon'ble the Director of Public Instruction might put forward some alternative system. As the best of the various systems has to be gleaned from various sources, just as we like some of our officers to go and study things in continental countries and find out what is best, I thought he would suggest that some of our gymnastic instructors should go to America, Japan and other countries and then come back and be able to teach what they find is best there. In the absence of such an alternative there does not appear to be any very serious obstacle in the way of the acceptance of this resolution. The resolution merely asks for the engaging of the services of Japanese gymnastic instructors; it does not say whether it should be two dozens or twenty dozens and I do not know why the Hon'ble the Director of Public Instruction fancied that the cost would be prohibitive. For aught I know, the cost may be, Rs. 3,000 or Rs. 4,000 and there is nothing to suggest a prohibitive cost in this resolution. Perhaps one teacher in the training college might be sufficient. This is not a very deep mystery; I suppose in the course of a few months an apt disciple will learn what there is to be taught and will impart it to others. It appears to me, therefore, that the objection put forward by the Hon'ble the Director of Public Instruction has not got much force. The only thing that struck me was that importance was specially attached to one particular species of wrestling. Wrestling is a well-known Indian art and there are numerous tricks in it. I, as a young man or rather as an young boy used to wrestle and dozens of tricks were taught to me. If my teacher could have given me that training in jiu-jitsu I could have picked it up. After all, it strikes me that jiu-jitsu is not so very complicated and it might not even require any very extensive arrangement to be made. I think we might get a teacher or two from Japan and full knowledge of it would be diffused throughout the country in a few years. The Japanese have a way of advertising their wares. They may term jiu-jitsu a special art, but even if it is treated as a special art, a few tricks may be systematised and made into a system and I think we might easily absorb all that is best in it by the appointment of a teacher or two, and no very prohibitive cost need be apprehended as a consequence of accepting this resolution. I hope Government will find it possible to accept this very small recommendation. I thought the subject was hardly worth serious opposition by Government and I thought Government would accept it at once. I did not anticipate serious opposition."

The Hon'ble Mr. P. SIVA RAO:—"Your Excellency, this is a very simple proposition before us. I do not know why there should have been so much misapprehension about it. The Hon'ble the Director of Public Instruction thought that the Honourable Member was seeking to impose this system upon all public schools. That was far from his intention. The Hon'ble the Director of Public Instruction replied that the policy of the Government was not to impose any particular method of physical culture on schools in general but in each case to leave it to the option of the managers concerned. It is quite right. I do not think either myself or the Honourable Member will quarrel with a statement of a policy like that. The Hon'ble the Director of Public Instruction also stated that it would cost enormously. I do not at all see the prospect of any enormous cost or expenditure in this. All that the resolution asks for is that a particular mode of instruction should be provided for. Japanese instructors who knew this particular method might train mufassal gymnastic instructors. In other words, it comes to this: that provision should be made for this particular kind of physical culture also. It may be that if this resolution is accepted, it will only mean that one or two Japanese instructors should be employed to train others also in that system. It is a very harmless proposition and I do not see any difficulty in the way of the Honourable the Director of Public Instruction accepting it. We have got indigenous methods, we have got the English methods; we have got Danish drill and so many other methods and I do not see any reason why this particular mode of physical instruction also should not be provided for by Government while option is given to the managers of schools to follow any method that they like for enforcement in their particular institutions."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. VENKATAPATI RAJU:—"Your Excellency, the Hon'ble the Director of Public Instruction has not done full justice to the importance of this resolution. We know that even in England the Government are particular in training their students, and in America they are careful in training their constables. Therefore jiu-jitsu is a thing worth learning, the art of self-defence without doing any damage to any person. The Hon'ble the Director of Public Instruction has been kind enough to suggest: why do you go to foreign countries when you have your own indigenous systems? Nobody disputes it; I myself mentioned them. Formerly in the institutions that I know they were taught; fencing and other things according to old oriental methods were taught. If I were to ask for any special training for them, the Hon'ble Mr. Littlehales will come and say, you have any number of men in your villages who know it and why do you ask Government to pay for it? This is a matter which is not ordinarily known to persons here. I am not particular with reference to the Japanese teacher. If we can secure one from America, or from England who is well acquainted with this, it does not matter in the least to me. What I want is that the man should know it first-hand and should teach it. We are not going to the subject whether we are getting any book on physical culture. After all it does not matter. There are several books already in existence about physical culture, good, bad, and indifferent, and we may get another book, but we do not think that the country would be improved by getting the books even from the Government publication department. We want to know what steps are taken and I do not think even in Government institutions, whether collegiate or secondary, there is any additional improvement in the matter of physical culture. When the Government with all their resources cannot undertake to train these people in fencing, rowing, swimming and other things, how can we expect the poor managers of institutions to provide for these? Therefore I appeal to this Government, so far as this is concerned; it is not at all compulsory. I never stated that it should be introduced as a compulsory subject, but what I stated is that this might be introduced so that the teachers might be aware of it and such boys as are willing to learn it might learn it. There may be unfit or unwilling boys. But when every other civilised Government thinks that it serves a good purpose in the art of self-defence and making a man manly, I do not see what difficulty there is for this Government making such a provision. Merely stating that they do not want to interfere with the discretion of managers of schools will not satisfy. There are cases where it is necessary that a good example should be set by the Government so that others might follow. I therefore earnestly appeal that the Government would reconsider the matter and would see some way of infusing more enthusiasm into the physical culture of our future generations."

1092 RESOLUTIONS RE APPOINTMENT OF JIU-JITSU TEACHERS AND RESETTLEMENT OF THE VIZAGAPATAM DISTRICT.

(The President ; Mr. Venkatapati Raju.)

[5TH APRIL 1919.]

His Excellency the PRESIDENT :—“ If the resolution had been framed with greater care by the Honourable Member it would have received quite a different answer. The resolution says :—

‘ This Council recommends to the Governor in Council that the Government be pleased to engage the services of Japan gymnastic teachers to train our school gymnastic teachers in jiu-jitsu for the purpose of training the student population as far as possible in the art of self-defence and to keep the body in good training.’

“ If the words were to have any meaning it means there should be sufficient men for training the gymnastic teachers to train the student population of the Presidency and not that there should be one or two to train gymnastic instructors selected for the purpose.

“ It is because of the way in which this resolution is framed that the Government have a difficulty in considering it. If it had merely asked that in the course of the development of gymnastic training, the claim of jiu-jitsu should be considered or due weight should be given to that branch of instruction, the Government would have given due weight to its consideration. But what the Government have to do is to read the wording of the resolution as it is. The implications in the resolution do commit the Government to a great deal more than is practicable. We could not undertake to engage gymnastic instructors for the purpose of training the student population as a whole, but as to the possibility of getting a certain amount of training in jiu-jitsu I think it is not only possible but it is being done. The Hon'ble Mr. Davidson reminds me that the Madras Police, some of them, have been trained in jiu-jitsu, and I suppose a Japanese instructor is giving it. If Mr. Noehren thinks that it would be useful, he will, I presume, carry it out. On the other hand, it will be a great mistake for this Council or for the Educational department to pin its faith to one system. It seems to me there has been much force in the speeches of the Honourable members that we have to teach individual pupils each by himself. You will have to teach each man the tricks and the manoeuvres, how to use his hands, how to seize his adversary by the neck, and in fact it requires an enormous amount of teaching in order to produce good result. For its own purposes, it is an invaluable thing. I am sure that the Hon'ble the Director of Public Instruction and the Educational department will not lose sight of its advantages and we will draw the attention of Mr. Noehren in preparing his manual to this training in jiu-jitsu along with what he has in hand. The claims of jiu-jitsu will no doubt be considered. Beyond that, I do not think the Government can go. I do not know if the Honourable Member wishes to press the resolution to a division.”

The Hon'ble Mr. B. VENKATAPATI RAJU :—“ I do not wish to press it, but I am prepared to modify it so as to suit the Government.”

His Excellency the PRESIDENT :—“ I think the Honourable Member can leave it as it is. He has drawn attention to the claims of this method and the Honourable the Director of Public Instruction will pay due attention to it.”

The Hon'ble Mr. B. VENKATAPATI RAJU :—“ I do not press it.”

With the permission of His Excellency the President, the resolution was withdrawn.

RESOLUTION RE RESETTLEMENT OF THE VIZAGAPATAM DISTRICT.

The Hon'ble Mr. B. VENKATAPATI RAJU :—“ Your Excellency, the resolution that I have the honour to move runs thus : the length of the resolution indicates the importance of it, because we have to deal with various points concerning the resettlement of the district of Vizagapatam. To give some idea I might be permitted to read the resolution. It runs thus :—

‘ XX. This Council recommends to the Governor in Council that the Government be pleased, in regard to the resettlement in Vizagapatam district,

(a) that instructions be issued to the Settlement Officer to conduct a thorough inquiry into the indebtedness of the ryots ;

(b) that the percentage enhancement proposed in the scheme report be given up, having regard to the impoverished condition of the people ;

(c) that the enhancement if at all should be limited to 12½ per cent on individual holdings ;

(d) that the uniform percentage enhancement of 3 annas in the rupee regarding all classes of dry lands be given up ;

(e) that the enhancement of assessment on poor pattadars be not imposed ;

(f) that all sources of irrigation in the district be grouped in five classes with reference to their supply and capacity instead of four ;

RESOLUTION RE RESETTLEMENT OF THE VIZAGAPATAM DISTRICT 1093

5TH APRIL 1919.]

(Mr. Venkatapati Raju ; the President ; Mr. Buckley.)

(g) that in the Sarvasiddhi taluk the irrigation sources classed as 2, 3 and 4 be classified as 3, 4 and 5 ;

(h) that the second crop assessment be made optional instead of being made compulsory ;

(i) that the assessment on dry lands close to the sea in Sarvasiddhi taluk admittedly high should be reduced ; and

(j) that the irrigation sources of Kottisa, Talagam, Sivvam, Vangara and Mugguru in Palkonda taluk be classed as 2, 3 and 4 according to water-supply.”

“ Your Excellency, I am perfectly well aware what should be the test in the matter of discussing these settlement resolutions. We have had experience of the discussions here with reference to several districts. I shall be quite content if I can convince the Government that their usual procedure of refusing to concede even the reasonable demands made by the representatives here should not be followed but a different treatment should be given to this resolution, because, unlike other districts, Vizagapatam has got peculiar features of its own. In extent and in population it stands the highest and we can even claim the credit of being the first district of the whole Empire, because it is bigger than some countries in Europe but we find that the Government own only three taluks covering about 300 square miles, all the rest being zamindari. All these three taluks together are less than any taluk in Trichinopoly or in any other place. Therefore though it has a big name of the settlement of a district, it is only a small matter and decision one way or the other will not tax the public purse to any great extent, or adherence to any particular view will not bring any large amounts into the coffers of Government. During the discussions of the last three or four years, whenever this question arose, we have had the assurance from the Government that the economic condition of the people would be the first concern of the settlement officer and it would necessarily be gone into. At the same time I must assure the Government that the people of the district feel very grateful to Mr. Gwynn who is a very conscientious officer, who is giving the people every possible opportunity and every facility to make their grievances heard.”

His Excellency the PRESIDENT :—“ The Honourable Member is dealing with a large proposition. There are several detailed points and I think if we hear what the Hon'ble Mr. Buckley has to say on the several detailed points, it will shorten the proceedings. If that will satisfy the Honourable Member, I will call upon the Hon'ble Mr. Buckley to deal with the several points.”

The Hon'ble Mr. B. VENKATAPATI RAJU :—“ Yes.”

The Hon'ble Mr. L. E. BUCKLEY :—“ Your Excellency, the position as regards the re-settlement of Vizagapatam is this : the Settlement Officer has submitted a report and that report has gone on with the Board's recommendations to Government. The Government have not yet considered it. I am instructed to say that whatever arguments are put forward in this Council on this resolution will be considered by the Government when passing orders on the scheme report. I had proposed to refer only to those points on which the Board supports the recommendations of the Settlement Officer and in consequence I am not prepared to go at great length into the many arguments and points raised by the Hon'ble Mr. Venkatapati Raju. I will go straight to item No. (d). ‘ The uniform percentage enhancement of As. 3 in the rupee regarding all classes of dry lands be given up.’ I understand that what the Honourable Gentleman desires is that the course should be followed, which has been followed in North Arcot and the Periyar tract of Madura whereby the percentage increase should be lowered on the lower assessed lands than on the higher assessed lands. Is that what he means ?”

The Hon'ble Mr. B. VENKATAPATI RAJU :—“ I mean irrespective of the value it should not be increased.”

The Hon'ble Mr. L. E. BUCKLEY :—“ You say : ‘ the uniform enhancement of As. 3 in the rupee regarding all classes of dry land should be given up.’ I take it that you mean that if there is to be a percentage increase, it should not be the same for all classes of lands.”

The Hon'ble Mr. B. VENKATAPATI RAJU :—“ Yes.”

The Hon'ble Mr. L. E. BUCKLEY :—“ That is not proposed by the Settlement Officer, nor has it been recommended by the Board. The reason is that in the two districts in which percentage rate of increase was not uniform, no increase was put on the two lowest tarams and the increase rose as the value of land rose. It was found that the percentage of non-occupation in the three lower tarams is very small in Vizagapatam while the percentage of non-occupation in the three tarams in the other districts is high. In the lowest three tarams of Vizagapatam, the percentage of non-occupation is 7, 12 and 7 but in the other two districts they run from 27 to 74. That is the reason why the uniform rate was proposed—it is clear that in the lower tarams of land, assessments are not oppressive, for the greater part of the land is under occupation.

“ I go on to the next point, point (f) ‘ All sources of irrigation in the district be grouped in five classes with reference to their supply and capacity instead of four.’ At the settlement of Vizagapatam, four classes of irrigation sources were adopted. Mr. Gwynn has gone carefully over the country and has seen most of the irrigation sources, so also has Mr. Leach, and their

(Mr. Buckley; the President; Mr. Venkatapati Raju.)

[5TH APRIL 1919.]

opinion is that these sources are fairly classified as between themselves. The fourth class in Vizagapatam corresponds to the fifth class in the other districts; the third class in Vizagapatam corresponds to the fourth class in other districts, the second class in Vizagapatam corresponds to the third class in other districts. The first class in Vizagapatam corresponds practically to what is the second class in other districts although there are one or two exceptional sources of irrigation which might be put in the first class of other districts.

"With regard to this point, I will go on to speak of item (h) which enables me to put my argument better—The second crop assessment be made optional instead of being made compulsory." I discussed this point both with Mr. Leach and with Mr. Gwynn and I made some inspection myself and after these discussions, Mr. Gwynn has made the recommendation that compulsory second crop assessment should be done away with; this has been very strongly supported by the Board. In making the second crop compulsory assessment, the rates at which additions to the assessment were made were one-third, one-fourth, one-fifth and one-sixth instead of one-half, one-third, one-fourth and one-fifth the rates adopted elsewhere. The concession was no doubt given because composition was compulsory. Mr. Gwynn has recommended that these rates should be continued, even though composition is to be made voluntary and the Board has supported this recommendation. That is to say, they will have composition at rates lower than those adopted in the other districts. They are practically in the same position as regards voluntary composition as they would be, if all the classes of lands were one class lower. The abolition of the second crop compulsory assessment means a considerable amount. It means the removal of a charge of 33½ per cent to 16½ per cent source of the first crop charge. In item (g) the Honourable Gentleman asks that the Sarvasiddhi irrigation sources should be classed as third, fourth and fifth. The Special Settlement Officer has drawn attention to the fact that some lands in the Sarvasiddhi taluk are over-assessed and the Board have recommended that where over-assessment is due to the class of source being placed too high, the Settlement Officer should be given the power to reduce the classification of the source.

"Then with regard to item (i) 'The assessment on dry lands close to the sea in Sarvasiddhi taluk, admittedly high, should be reduced', the Special Settlement Officer has referred to this; the Board has supported his recommendation, and emphasized what he has said. It is common knowledge that the assessment in a few villages is high.

"Then with regard to item (j), the Honourable Member asks that 'the irrigation sources of Kottisa, Talagam, Sivvam, Vangara and Mugguru in Palkonda taluk be classed as 2, 3 and 4 according to water-supply.' Although at the time of settlement the tank in the last named village was fed by the Sekarapalle channel, owing to various causes channel water no longer reaches the village, the Settlement Officer has accordingly proposed that it should be treated as a non-channel village and that the classification of the source should be made according to the actual water-supply; this has been supported by the Board. With regard to the four other villages, the Settlement Officer has proposed a revision of classification; this again has been supported by the Board. What I have said will clear the air considerably. It will be seen that very considerable concessions have been given to the district. The compulsory second crop rate has been done away with. This was the main grievance in the district. The Honourable Gentleman will understand that as the Government have not had time to consider the report, it is quite impossible that the resolution as it stands should be accepted, but I am instructed to say that whatever is said in this Council on the various points will be taken into consideration by the Government when the time comes for passing orders on the report of the Special Settlement Officer and the recommendations of the Board of Revenue thereon."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"I hope that will help the Honourable Member and he may make his observations."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. VENKATAPATI RAJU:—"Your Excellency, I am thankful to the Board of Revenue for strongly supporting the recommendations of the Settlement Officer that second crop assessment should be made optional instead of compulsory. If I were certain that the Government also would accept that view, I need not say anything, but I have to say something because it unfortunately happened on the previous occasion, when both the Settlement Officer and the Board of Revenue recommended strongly that this optional system should be adopted, Government vetoed it. I hope on this occasion the recommendation of the Settlement Officer and the Board of Revenue will be acted up to with reference to the second crop assessment being made optional. I may mention one or two facts; it is admitted so far as the Sarvasiddhi taluk is concerned, out of several thousand acres only a thousand and odd are being irrigated with second crop and others are never irrigated. So is it fair that they should be asked to pay second crop charges as well? If it were the case that on account of the negligence of the ryot or on account of any unreasonable conditions it was not raised, I can understand it. But here is a case of its being impossible for the ryot to raise it, because the water is insufficient even for one crop. When that is so, what is the meaning of compelling the people to pay second crop assessment? That is also true with reference to other taluks. Therefore, not only the concession recommended by the Board of Revenue that it should not be made compulsory but should be made optional, should be adopted; but it must also be stated that when they want to take water for second crop, the usual compulsory rates of one-third and one-fourth should be adopted and not the higher rate of one-half and one-third. I hope Government would accept the strong recommendations of the Board of Revenue on that point."

RESOLUTION RE RESETTLEMENT OF THE VIZAGAPATAM DISTRICT. 1095

5TH APRIL 1919.]

(Mr. Venkatapathi Raju.)

"Regarding the other point, as to the necessity of grouping the several sources of irrigation into five classes instead of four, I notice with reference to the assessment charged it will make some difference, there will be some reduction of assessment if five classes are made. As the Hon'ble Mr. Buckley suggests that except to a slight extent, there would be no material difference, I do not press it. But I was all along under the impression that if it should be changed into five classes, there would be a reduction of assessment and this would give relief to certain classes of people."

"The other point is that the Board will be pleased to consider the recommendations of the Settlement Officer regarding the assessment of dry lands close to the sea in Sarvasiddhi taluk and also with reference to the question in Palkonda taluk about classification."

"Your Excellency, not as a matter of complaint but as a matter of serious difficulty I have to bring to the notice of Government that there is an indebtedness to such an exorbitant extent in the Vizagapatam district, and I might say more than 75 per cent of the pattadars are indebted. If we were to refer to the Triennial Registration report, though we have not got particulars about these three places, we shall know the great indebtedness of that district compared with the income of that district. It is not very difficult for the Settlement Officer or for the Government to find out the indebtedness if they care to take pains to do that; because apart from the indebtedness which can only be disclosed by private transactions, and which may be a difficult process to find out, so far as registered documents are concerned, they will show clearly how many pattadars are really indebted, and we can give a sufficient margin for additional indebtedness which does not go to the registration office."

"One other peculiar condition which Vizagapatam district suffers from is this: In Sarvasiddhi taluk it has been admitted by the Settlement Officer that remission is being granted to the extent of 23 per cent every year on the average and in some years it goes to the extent of 62 per cent. If we have got a taluk where the demand of the Government has to be reduced by a quarter almost every year it shows that there must be something wrong. I do not complain about the remissions, but I complain of the effect. What is the meaning of remissions? Remissions will be granted when the people satisfy the inspection officer that they have not got even an one-anna crop and if after such a careful scrutiny—more often it does not verge on the side of generosity—it is found that 23 per cent remission has to be given, we may take it that there is an utter failure of crop at least in the case of 50 per cent of lands. Government would be pleased to remember one fact that the ryots who suffer by failure of crops will not be satisfied by remissions alone. Remission only means that the amount which the pattadar has to pay to Government is excused and it is stated in more than one publication of Government, 'though we say that we do not take more than one-fifth of the gross revenue in the matter of assessment, as a matter of fact, our assessment will not exceed ten per cent.' That is what the Government of India say. Assuming that it is either 10 per cent or more, what about the loss of 90 per cent to the pattadar? You are excusing the pattadar only 10 per cent of the gross revenue but he loses 90 per cent and if a person invariably loses to the extent of one-fourth of the full crop necessarily, he will be indebted and his economic condition will never be good. All Collectors who have had experience of the Vizagapatam district will convince the Government that whatever be the condition in other localities, the condition of the people of Vizagapatam is not very enviable. They are not rich; they have not amassed any capital. They have not got, most of them, any capital or any substantial buildings, and I may add that a large proportion of them cannot make both ends meet. That is the unfortunate condition."

"Unfortunately Government officers compare these pattadars with the pattadars of the neighbouring zamindars. I cannot say that the pattadars under the Government are in any way worse than those under the zamindar; in some cases they are better. I have noticed in the recent publication that we must compare the assessment of Government with the assessment which the zamindar imposes on his tenants. That is a very bad step, first of all because we ought not to compare State assessment either with the assessment by the zamindar or by landholder or any other person. In order to avoid such misconceptions and wrong deductions, the previous Secretary of State told us definitely long ago and communicated it to the India Government that they should impress upon every Indian civilian that he ought not to treat this assessment as in the nature of rent, but he must treat this as in the nature of a tax. Every subject of the State is bound to contribute to meet the common burden and therefore the landholder also is equally bound to do so. If we once give up that theory, if we say that it is not a tax but that it is a rent to Government just as to any other landholder, the position is different; such an indication is not wanting as was seen in the previous discussion, when the members on behalf of Government spoke about it and said that they were entitled to take what any other landholder takes, but that out of concession they were not taking so much though they were entitled to take it. First of all, we must get rid of such an idea. We must first of all show what is absolutely necessary that ought to be taken from the people. I may at once admit that if the Government are prepared to take what we call economic rent or competition rent, they could easily get more than 50 per cent. If all the pattadars are deprived of their lands today and their holdings are sold and given away to anybody just as any private landholder would do, it can be increased to 50 per cent, but then we would say that it is not the State but it is a private landholder. The State has other duties than what a private landholder has. The private landholder does not care to know whether his tenant has enough to eat; all that he wants to know is whether there is any other person who is prepared to pay more to cultivate his land. He seizes on every offer which is higher, but the Government say 'No, we will take into consideration the economic condition of the people. Why is this? It is because the Government want to show that it is not rent but it is only a tax which is imposed only for what is absolutely necessary.

1096 RESOLUTION RE RESETTLEMENT OF THE VIZAGAPATAM DISTRICT.

(Mr. Venkatapati Raju; Mr. Buckley.)

[5TH APRIL 1919.]

"The first thing that a Settlement Officer ought to do is he must find out the indebtedness. Let alone the divergence of view, whether there should be a public or a private inquiry into the matter, there must be some inquiry to find out the indebtedness. I have perused the pages from one end to another of the report, but I do not find any such inquiry. The only stray reference, here and there, is that we have some sale-deeds picked up in order to find out the selling value of land and some lease-deeds also have been picked up. This is not what is wanted; we want to know the actual indebtedness of the people. I am fully aware of the statement made at one time that it is impossible to find out the real indebtedness of the people. That may or may not be true, but we can easily find out what is the acknowledged registered indebtedness of the pattadars and that will indicate to some extent the real indebtedness. What is the necessity of a large number of pattadars being greatly indebted? It is not due to the mere fact that they are spending a large amount on festive occasions, on marriages and so on, but it is because they are unable to get on. If crops fail, they are unable to get anything and they have to go to the money-lender because more money is wanted to carry on their cultivation. Whatever be the attitude of our Kistna and Gōdāvari friends, it must be said to the discredit of Vizagapatam that Vizagapatam cannot provide sufficient sustenance for our people and so sends a large number to Gōdāvari and Kistna. All the labour in those two districts depends upon the people of Vizagapatam district who go to those two districts. If steps are taken to make arrangements to keep them in their own land, there would be more flourishing condition in these taluks than when we find a large number of emigrants who go to Gōdāvari and Kistna to do labour service. We cannot improve the whole of the district because much of it and indeed most of it is indeed not in the hands of Government. We are not concerned with the position of the tenants of zamindars, because that is not within our province. The Government have only a small portion of the district and their revenue is very small, it is only a few lakhs, less than 5 or 6 lakhs and any increase or decrease would not materially affect Government or their revenue. I earnestly appeal to Government that, whenever this question is viewed with reference to Vizagapatam district, the ordinary views of settlement operations discussed in this Council should not be adopted with regard to Vizagapatam district, on account of the large indebtedness and the constant failure of crops. Additional concessions should be given to the pattadars in this district.

"I may mention in this connexion that there was a percentage enhancement; though several pages of the report were devoted to various other matters, we notice that the aim and object of the settlement looks to be that we must arrive at some figure in order to increase the assessment and the question is what should be that increase. It is like giving judgment beforehand and afterwards filling up the blanks with arguments advanced on the one side or the other. Here they want some increase of assessment and the reasons follow. You decide to increase by As. 3 or As. 4 and then you find out reasons. Whereas in other districts cultivation expenses were valued up to Rs. 24, here it was limited only to Rs. 10. I do not know how there was such disparity in the matter of providing cultivation expenses. Therefore my respectful suggestion is that this percentage enhancement should not be allowed in regard to the re-settlement of this district and in case it should be adopted, I pray as an alternative that it should never exceed 12½ per cent., that is, As. 2 instead of 18 per cent. In this connexion, I may point out that in Salem when it was re-settled, they increased it only by 12½ per cent. Even in Chingleput which is far better than our district, the increase was 15 per cent. Why of all districts this district which is in every way bad should be made to bear an increase of 18 per cent. I do not know."

The Hon'ble Mr. L. E. BUCKLEY:—"May I give an explanation? The 12½ per cent was fixed before the rise in prices. But Vizagapatam comes in now after 14 years of high prices and naturally the commutation rate is high."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. VENKATAPATI RAJU:—"Your Excellency, it is most unfortunate that there should be the re-settlement of my district after the war. In the war during the last three years, there was an abnormal rise in prices. Just as there are famine years, these are ultra famine years, because in famine years, the scarcity rates were 8 seers but now they are 3½ seers a rupee. Therefore if we have to deduct famine years from our computation we must deduct these ultra famine years. But what I want to state is that unless and until the Government are satisfied that the pattadars are in a position to bear the high assessment, they should not raise the assessment. I am not concerned with the rich pattadars, but it is with reference to the poor pattadars, most of whom do not pay more than Rs. 10 assessment and have not got more than two or three acres, that I am complaining. I earnestly invite your Excellency's attention that any additional burden thrown upon these pattadars would be only benefiting the Gōdāvari and Kistna districts at the expense of Vizagapatam. It will necessitate the emigration of these people, if not to Rangoon, at least to the neighbouring places to help themselves because they cannot help themselves in their own districts. Therefore, I purposely added another clause with reference to this: that the enhancement of assessment on poor pattadars be not imposed. I have left it as elastic as possible, I wanted to limit it to pattadars whose whole assessment would not exceed Rs. 30. But I found most pattadars would come under that and in order to give additional scope and to reduce the chance of loss of revenue to the

5TH APRIL 1919.]

(Mr. Venkatapati Raju; Mr. Suryanarayana Rao.)

Government, I suggest that it might be pattadars whose assessment is not over Rs. 10 or who have only one or two acres of land. It was once suggested in the previous discussion, why should you make any distinction between one pattadar and another? Why not provide equally for all? That, I submit, Your Excellency, is a business-like point of view. But what I say is that it is not at all state-craft. State-craft requires that you must impose the burden upon those shoulders which can afford to bear it, and you must not impose the same burden on those shoulders which are unable to bear it. These poor pattadars cannot bear it; it is quite impossible for them to bear it, because they are poor, they have got only two or three acres and they have not enough left with them. On paper we may calculate the several points; we might calculate that the man raises so much of which so much goes for expenses and so much remains and all that. But when he has a family of five members and has only two or three acres what is there left for sustenance. Therefore, this is an aspect which the Government should remember whenever any re-settlement is made which has the effect of imposing additional assessment. Government say that in spite of this, there has been an increase in value. Certainly; that also shows that the pattadars are unable to keep the property in their own hands. They are indebted to a very great extent and the persons to whom they owe this money want to take the land for what it is worth and they leave the district bag and baggage selling the property for what it can fetch. If he is a big landholder or a rich mirasidar who purchases that land, he will be satisfied with a small percentage of interest on his money invested and he would rack-rent it and get whatever money he can get. A rich man who has enough wealth can pay a fancy price. That does not mean that the original holder is able to bear the additional assessment. That is the point of view which the Government should consider—whether the pattadars could bear the excessive assessment. Therefore the imposition of excessive assessment on the sole ground of the increase in prices should be limited to pattadars whose assessment is not less than Rs. 10. That would relieve the situation to a great extent.

"As there might be several speakers on this resolution, I do not propose to keep you long, but whatever may be the final orders of the Government, I pray that the condition of the poor pattadars should be remembered and some means should be devised in order to save them from any additional burden, and secondly that no person should be made to pay for a crop which it is not possible for him at any time of the year to raise, and thirdly that assessment should not be increased to a very high extent as proposed, by 18½ per cent by the Settlement officer and it should not exceed on any account 12½ per cent. With these words, I commend the resolution to the acceptance of the Government."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. SURYANARAYANA RAO:—"Your Excellency, as belonging to the Vizagapatam district, it is with great pain that I am obliged to support the resolution because my district is so poor that I have to plead before the Government that concession should be shown to my district. The Sarvasiddhi and Yellamanchilli taluks are really at the fag end of the river and they receive very little water and the water that flows is practically intercepted by the Gummalu proprietor and the Government taluks receive very little supply; in the Palkonda taluk the big landholder, the Maharaja of Bobbili with his other sub-landholders take away most of the water and the Government taluks do not receive so much supply. It is these three taluks that are now sought to be resettled. I believe that the Sarvasiddhi and Yellamanchilli taluk people submitted a memorial to the Government last year praying that the settlement of their taluks might be postponed altogether or might not be taken up at all. I sent in a resolution last year that there should be no settlement of these taluks now, but I was easily silenced with the answer that this is only a question which can be taken up by the Imperial Government. When I brought forward that resolution it was not meant that the question should be altogether shut out but only that it should be favourably considered. However, the Hon'ble Mr. Venkatapati Raju while conceding that there might be re-settlement, has brought out several defects that are noticeable in the present settlement. With regard to the state of these taluks, Sarvasiddhi and Narasapatam, the present position with regard to food grains, I think, is clear and these two taluks are in a hopelessly poor condition. They are receiving their supply of paddy from Gōdāvari and other districts. These two taluks produce no paddy whatever practically and they are unable to supply themselves. With regard to any paddy that is produced, it has been stated by the Hon'ble Mr. Buckley that prices have risen and therefore that enhancement was proposed. But when the prices are taken into consideration, I have no doubt Government will also be pleased to consider the cost of production. I have no doubt that the cost of production has also proportionately increased and therefore one factor ought not to be taken into consideration without considering the other factor. With regard to the poverty of these two taluks especially, we can see that several of these pattadars have practically abandoned their holdings, or even if they nominally retain them, most of the other members of the family are going out to the other districts, Gōdāvari and Kistna to eke out their livelihood there and if we only take into account the several passengers that go by steamer on every Saturday to Rangoon and other places—I have witnessed it on many occasions—Your Excellency will notice that these people who go out by steamer are thousands every week. That speaks of the poverty of the pattadars in these two taluks and the persons who go to Rangoon are mostly from these two taluks—I would include Anakapalle also, the taluk of the Maharani of Wadhwan. When that is the poor condition of these three taluks, I appeal to Your Excellency whether it would be proper to take up re-settlement now very seriously and to impose very heavy enhancement on their holdings. If at all any enhancement has to be made nominally, I think it should be a very small amount, but I do not think that

1098 RESOLUTION RE RESETTLEMENT OF THE VIZAGAPATAM DISTRICT.

(Mr. Suryanarayana Rao ; Mr. Krishna Rao.)

[5TH APRIL 1919.]

these holdings can bear any further enhancement. The Palkonda taluk is a little better than these two taluks, but as I have already mentioned, that taluk also is in a very poor condition and even that taluk has not been able to produce very much of paddy this year. It is a sure and certain indication that the water-supply to that taluk is very poor, so that the condition of the district of Vizagapatam is very pitiable. Hereafter these pattadars will have to eke out their livelihood as coolies when the hot season commences and probably some of these contractors would find it very easy to find cheap labour in Vizagapatam district because pattadars do not find cultivation very encouraging or at all paying. I am surprised to find that the businessmen, who speak for the masses and who profess to take interest and who are supposed to take interest in the masses, do not appear here when we speak of these pattadars. I only mention it, because after all it is only the much maligned lawyer perhaps that comes in for the help of the pattadars. However, that is a different point. I hope Your Excellency's Government will view this resolution favourably and see what can be done for these pattadars in these taluks."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. KRISHNA RAO :—" Your Excellency, I wish to make a few remarks on clauses (a), (b), (c) and (e) of this resolution. I must say at the outset that the statement made by the Hon'ble Mr. Buckley is encouraging and assuring so far as it goes, and that if the Board of Revenue have not been able to be more liberal in their recommendations, the Board of Revenue cannot be blamed in view of the attitude of the Government in dealing with questions of this sort in the last five or six years. The main question to be considered while dealing with a problem of this character is about the taxable capacity of the land and the taxable capacity of the people concerned. It is by a correct appreciation and a proper adjustment of these two fundamental principles, that one can arrive at a satisfactory state of things. The report of the settlement officer and the tables and statements furnished by him in his report would suggest that some inquiry has been made as to some facts affecting the capacity of the land; but I have not the slightest doubt that proper inquiry has not been made as to the taxable capacity of the people and as to the economic condition of the ryots affected in these tracts. I shall now briefly refer to a few facts tending to substantiate my position. The discussions in this Council during the last five or six years while we have been considering the re-settlement of North Arcot, Chittoor, Madura, South Arcot, Bellary—and now we come Vizagapatam—must have convinced the Council, of the utmost importance and the paramount necessity for making a thorough and searching inquiry into the economic condition of the ryots affected. What is the inquiry which is made so far as these three taluks in Vizagapatam are concerned? It cannot be suggested that an economic inquiry is complete or satisfactory unless there is an inquiry into the agricultural indebtedness of the ryots. From the materials which are before me, I have not been able to lay my hand on any inquiry, much less a satisfactory inquiry, as to the indebtedness of agriculturists. It is not merely the statistics furnished by the registration department and the amount of mortgages and other transactions entered into by the ryots which will afford a criterion as to the indebtedness of the ryot, but more searching inquiry is necessary in individual villages or in typical villages as to the amount of loans taken on promissory notes or other negotiable instruments. It will be remembered that debts are contracted to a very large extent in this country not on mortgages but on promissory notes; and unless satisfactory inquiry is made, it will not be possible to come to a correct understanding as to the economic condition of the ryots affected.

"One of the circumstances taken into consideration apart from commutation of rates and apart from the increase of prices, regarding which I do not propose to make any special remarks, is about the increase in the sale value of lands. Even the information furnished in the report of the settlement officer in paragraph 39 shows that it is a very risky ground for us to proceed upon. He himself refers to these figures in paragraph 39 and proceeds to state as follows :—

"Thus the prices and rents shown in these appendices are considerably below the prices and rents actually received to-day. It must also be remembered that even to this day the competition for land is by no means so keen and universal as in the more developed southern districts. In a few prosperous villages, prices and rents appear to have been driven up by competition so high as to show the full value of the land. But one sometimes finds a sharp difference between the sale and lease value of similar lands even in two adjacent villages grouped under the charge of the same karnam. The karnam or the ryots, when questioned, will explain the difference by the absence of competition in the village where the sale and leasing values are lower. Where competition is keen, the purchaser of the non-cultivating castes is content with an immediate return of 6 per cent on his land, while a sub-tenant who takes the land on lease, hopes for nothing more than a bare livelihood. But in some villages a buyer of the cultivating castes expects so good a return on his money that he is willing to borrow at 9 per cent or 12 per cent to make the purchase, while the sub-tenant in some villages succeeds in laying by substantial savings after paying his rent."

"He refers to his having met two ryots who said that they made substantial profit. It is therefore clear that so far as that district is concerned, there is no competition and prices are much lower than in the other districts, and that even in the case of two adjoining villages, different versions were given as to the sale value. It is risky and dangerous to come to the conclusion from this circumstance that they are fairly prosperous and that there has been substantial improvement in the position of the ryot to justify the enhancement of the assessment proposed. I find in paragraph 41 of the report 'after making allowance for these things, the position of the ryot has greatly improved since the last settlement.' I do not say that there has not been any improvement, but the question is whether there has been such great improvement as to justify the enhancement which has been suggested. Therefore, I would suggest that, as suggested in clause (a) of this resolution, there should be a thorough enquiry into the indebtedness of the ryots. That is the first portion of the resolution. I have not the slightest doubt that there has not been such an inquiry.

"The next point is, the percentage enhancement proposed in the scheme report be given up having regard to the impoverished condition of the people. The Honourable Mover of the resolution referred us to some figures furnished by the registration department showing the indebtedness of the ryots as amounting to a very large sum, and if along with that we take the fact that large sums of money are borrowed otherwise than on mortgages found in the registration department, there is no doubt that he has made out a case for his position.

"Clause (c) is more important. It suggests a definite principle that the enhancement if at all should be limited to 12½ per cent on individual holdings. I do not know, Your Excellency, if I can on this occasion convince successfully this Council and this Government as to the desirability of fixing a maximum limit for this percentage enhancement which is coming up before the Government as often as possible at every periodical revision of assessment. It would be more convenient and satisfactory if a limit could be fixed as to the maximum to be imposed. I know on a former occasion, notice was given of a resolution suggesting that 12½ per cent should be fixed as a maximum; but it was not allowed to be brought up in the Council on the ground that it was a matter for the Government of India. In the Madras Estates Land Act, after considering the condition of the ryots and providing for periodical enhancement of the rates on the ground of rise in prices and other circumstances, a maximum has been fixed at annas 2 in the rupee. I would suggest that the maximum fixed in sub-clause (c) places it on the same footing. Before I leave this portion of the subject, I do not wish to take the same gloomy view as the Honourable Mover when he referred to the possible comparison with private landholders. I do not think that we should draw a distinction. I believe they are as anxious to safeguard the interests of the tenants and ryots as the Government are to safeguard the interests of the ryotwari landholders.

"Next, I wish to point out that there is considerable force in the argument advanced that the enhancement should not be enforced in the case of the poor pattadars. That is a direct application of the principle that it is only when we are satisfied about the taxable capacity of the people, there should be enhancement. It is only in the case of those owning sufficient property that there will be a sufficient margin left after meeting all the necessities of life for them to pay these increased assessments. But it is impossible to suppose for a moment that persons who own very small plots of land will be able to save anything to make provision for increased assessment. It is for that reason that the Honourable Mover suggested that enhancement should not be imposed on poor pattadars.

"Regarding the other points raised in the resolution, the Hon'ble Mr. Buckley gave a reply in the beginning and stated that the Board of Revenue supported the recommendations of the Settlement Officer; and let us hope and trust that the Government also would arrive at a satisfactory conclusion and satisfy all the parties concerned. What is more important is that before percentage enhancement is determined upon, Government should be satisfied that there has been a proper inquiry into the economic condition of the people and into their capacity to bear the increase of assessment. The materials before us do not justify us in coming to that conclusion."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT :—" I do not know whether any other Honourable Member wishes to address the council. The position of the Government is that the Board's report has reached the Secretariat, and Government have not considered the point and they are not in a position to give any definite finding on the points, but the speeches that have been made will be considered when the papers come before the Government and all possible attention will be paid to those points which have been raised in the resolution, and in the speeches of the Honourable Members. I do not think it will be possible for the Government to go further, and not having myself seen the Board's report, I am quite unable to go into details. It would be impossible for me to answer the Honourable Members' arguments until I have gone into details. The settlement report is a complicated document as Honourable Members know and it is full of a mass of detail and cannot be dealt with in a week or two. It takes a long time, several months. We may well assure the Honourable Mover that what he has said and what others have said on the subject will be considered very carefully, and I will advise the Honourable Member to leave it at that stage unless he wishes to press it to a division."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR :—" Your Excellency, Your Excellency's Government accepted my resolution that the principles and measures adopted by Mr. Grey in the settlement of the Nilgiris should be communicated to all settlement officers engaged in re-settlement work and Your Excellency's Government issued a circular inviting the attention of all settlement officers to that procedure. From the statement made just now, there has been no inquiry into the indebtedness of the ryot. If this is true, it would be violating that Government Order and Your Excellency's Government should investigate that matter.

"I would also like Your Excellency to consider whether Your Excellency's Government would take these war years into account in fixing commutation prices, whether it would be wise to do so.

1100 RESOLUTION RE RESETTLEMENT OF THE VIZAGAPATAM DISTRICT.

(Mr. Ranga Achariyar; Mr. Ramanuja Achariyar; Mr. M. Ramachandra Rao.) [5TH APRIL 1919.]

"The third circumstance to which I would like to draw Your Excellency's attention is, if there is a large class of poor pattadars in these taluks as mentioned by my honourable friends, then whether Your Excellency's Government will not be acting, having regard to the crisis in this country, in conformity with the principles adopted already in regard to other districts, namely, to continue the existing settlement for a further period till normal conditions are restored. I wish Your Excellency's Government would keep these matters in view in dealing with this question."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur V. K. RAMANUJA ACHARIYAR :—"Your Excellency, the information furnished by the Hon'ble Mr. Buckley with regard to items (f), (g), (h) and (j) is very satisfactory. But the main point is what should be the rate at which the present assessments should be enhanced. The settlement officer says it should be As. 3 in the rupee, and the Hon'ble Mr. Venkatapati Raju says there should be no enhancement, and even if there should be one, it should not be above As. 2. Your Excellency, I glanced through the pages of the report and I find that the enhancement proposed is not justified. There has been a large rise in the prices of food-grains, but at the same time the cost of cultivation should be calculated afresh on the present prices of labour and materials; and no attempt whatever has been made to do this. The system of enhancement, the obnoxious system of enhancement of assessment adopted in the Malara settlement, is followed here and not one word of apology for dispensing with the calculation of cultivation expenses has been given. The rate is fixed in a wholly arbitrary way at the whims of the settlement officer and is accepted or altered by the Board and the Government. The mass of figures quoted serves no purpose whatever, because they do not explain how this rate of As. 3 has been arrived at. They serve only to cover the arbitrary nature of the enhancement proposed. The Hon'ble Mr. Venkatapati Raju therefore throws himself upon the mercy of the Government and pleads for not more than 12½ per cent. I think the present system of raising the enhancement at resettlements should be completely abandoned. Government have got large powers given to them by Act II of 1864, and if they use the power arbitrarily as they are doing now, the consequence will be on their shoulders. They will not see the effect at once, but in course of time when districts are impoverished, they will see the result of the policy of having high rates."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO :—"Your Excellency, the discussion of settlement schemes in this Council has ranged principally round two or three questions. The point for consideration is, since these discussions have been initiated in this Council, whether any different policy has been pursued in regard to the questions on which the previous settlement schemes have been attacked in this Council. Your Excellency, one of these is as regards the question of indebtedness of the ryots. It was contended here, in regard to the schemes which came up for consideration relating to North Arcot, Chittoor and other places, that it was part of the duty of the settlement officer to make thorough inquiries on the subject of indebtedness and that unless inquiries were made on that subject, Government would not be in a position to see whether the ryot could bear the enhancement that was proposed by the settlement officer. So that the whole question of the economic condition of the ryot is dependent upon the ascertaining by actual inquiries as to what the assets are and what the general liabilities are, and whether he would be in a position to tide over bad seasons that may occur. Your Excellency, I need not cover the whole ground which has been exhaustively dealt with on previous occasions. On the present occasion also, the settlement officer's report does not show that he made any inquiries at all on this question of the indebtedness of the ryots in these three taluks. There is absolutely nothing in this report to show that he made inquiries or that he examined the figures of the registration office or that he called any individual pattadars and ascertained their economic well-being or that in any other manner he ascertained to what extent people are indebted and how far this percentage enhancement will trench upon the necessities of life and whether there is any substantial rise in the standard of comfort of the ryots. That is the main question that is debated in this Council so often and I regret to say that this report is as defective as other previous reports, because there is absolutely no information with reference to these three taluks as to the state of things of the ryots. As to how such inquiry should be conducted, formed the subject of numerous resolutions. At one time several of my honourable friends proposed that it should be directed to the whole tract; then I believe the Hon'ble Mr. Rama Ayyangar suggested that it should be in the case of individual families and I believe the Hon'ble Mr. Krishna Rao wanted that it should be for typical villages. Especially looking at the fact that orders on this report will not be passed for some months as stated by Your Excellency because it requires investigation, I suggest that further inquiries be made on this important subject—the question of the indebtedness of the ryots. I have dealt on previous occasions with the inquiry made in Bengal with reference to a whole district. Honourable Members are aware of the publication by a member of the Indian Civil Service, showing the position in the district of Faridpur and I would recall that it is possible to do something of the same nature in regard to these three taluks. That is one important matter in which I would press for further information and further inquiry by the settlement officer."

"Another point on which I would like to say a few words is the general question as to whether, judging from what the Hon'ble Mr. Venkatapati Raju has referred to, judging from the emigration figures, the district can be said to be in a prosperous condition. I acknowledge, representing three neighbouring districts of Vizagapatam, that these districts are considerably benefited by the stream of immigration from Vizagapatam which began since the great famine of 1877. Since then, thousands of families have been coming in as agricultural labourers and settling down in these three districts much to the benefit of our districts and have been supplying greatly the agricultural needs of these three districts. I ask Your Excellency's Government, though we had benefited considerably in that matter, whether it is a healthy sign of the state of things in Vizagapatam. I know the district fairly well though not as intimately as my honourable friends, but I have absolutely no doubt that the district is absolutely poor and the people will take the earliest opportunity of clearing out to Godavari or Kistna or Guntur and earn a living either as agricultural labourers or setting up in course of time as small farmers. That is very much to their credit and their thrifty habits have made them very dear to the agriculturists of our district. While we have considerably benefited by this immigration, I cannot but assert with the greatest emphasis that I can that the state of things in that district is anything but satisfactory. The settlement officer ought to have looked at the question of emigration as having a bearing on the general condition of the district. That is the second defect which I may mention in regard to this report. We have mentioned this on previous occasions time after time, but settlement officers are pursuing exactly the same course and following exactly the same mechanical way of looking at this question. I think the time spent in criticising the report is absolutely useless. The time has come when Your Excellency's Government ought to make up your mind to issue supplementary instructions with regard to these matters on which we feel keenly and see that the economic condition of the tract which is proposed to be resettled is examined in these important matters."

"The Hon'ble Mr. Buckley referring finally to this question referred to the voluntary character of the composition for the second crop and he suggested that that concession would greatly benefit this district. Your Excellency, I am not quite prepared to say with the information published in this report, that it will be a real concession. Some figures are given as suggesting that the amount collected now as second crop assessment is Rs. 74,553 and the amount estimated to be collected on the voluntary basis of compounding the second crop is Rs. 56,000, a difference of about Rs. 16,000 or Rs. 18,000. I am not sure whether this is a substantial improvement in the position of these three taluks and I should like to see that this matter is further examined. It is quite possible that this figure of Rs. 56,000 stated by the Hon'ble Mr. Buckley is not a correct estimate, or is rather too hopeful a view of the situation. I do not see how the difference matters in this matter."

"I may finally bring to the notice of Honourable Members what the financial proposals are, how, taking the figures as a whole for these three districts, the ryots are affected. The present assessment is estimated at 4 lakhs and odd and the proposed assessment is Rs. 5,20,242. That seems to be the net result of these proposals and in view of these circumstances and the poverty of the tract and the infertile character of the lands as compared with other districts, I think there are very weighty considerations as to why a more favourable view should be taken."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. VENKATAPATI RAJU :—"In view of the expressions of the Government and the assurance that the various points urged upon the attention of the Government would be carefully gone into and as no orders are issued by the Government, I think I will be doing good to my district men by accepting the suggestion of Your Excellency not to press the point any further at this stage."

With the permission of His Excellency the President, the resolution was withdrawn.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT :—"Resolution No. XXI* is not to be moved. No. XXII may be moved. We shall adjourn for lunch."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO :—"I do not propose to move No. XXIII."†

The Council then adjourned for a short interval.

The Council reassembled at 3 p.m. when the discussion on resolutions was resumed.

RESOLUTION RE ESTABLISHMENT OF A BOARD OF AGRICULTURE.

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO :—"Your Excellency, this resolution is in these terms :—

'XXII. This Council recommends to the Governor in Council that a Board of Agriculture be established for this province.'

"Your Excellency, perhaps Honourable Members are aware that in or about September 1918 the Government of India issued a circular to Local Governments which, in terms suggested for the consideration of Local Governments the advisability of the establishment of a Provincial Board of Agriculture in each province. The proceedings of the last meeting of the Board of Agriculture for India, the All-India Board, came up then under the consideration of the Government of India and their views were communicated to Local Governments. The Government of India

* The Hon'ble Mr. K. NADARAYA BHAT :—

XXI. This Council recommends to His Excellency the Governor in Council that necessary legislation should be undertaken to enable a tenant in the South Kanara district to set off payments by him towards assessment on the holding against rent due from him in all cases.

1102 RESOLUTION RE ESTABLISHMENT OF A BOARD OF AGRICULTURE.

(Mr. M. R. Ramachandra Rao.)

then stated that the time has come when it is desirable that there should be some devolution and decentralization of the deliberations of the Agricultural Department. As regards the number and range of subjects dealt with in this department, they suggested that it might be desirable that in the major provinces at least a Provincial Board of Agriculture should be constituted which will meet annually and in which subjects of local interest will be discussed. 'On the research side', they proceed to state 'the sectional meetings of the Board of Agriculture, referred to in paragraph 5 of the circular of the 31st August 1918, will meet the case to some extent'. But they point out that there are many purely agricultural questions which are of essentially local importance arising in the province which would more successfully be dealt with by a Provincial Board and the Government of India invited Local Governments to consider the advisability of constituting such Provincial Boards in each province. One of the main reasons which they suggested for the formation of this Board was that the scope of these meetings might with advantage be extended and they suggested that non-official co-operation in agricultural matters would be valuable and they pointed out that to the Boards so constituted large landholders, representative agriculturists and others interested in the rural development should be invited. Your Excellency, the object of such a Board is not only to develop agricultural research and organize agricultural experiments in the districts but also to enlist the co-operation of those who are interested in scientific agriculture. Then the Government of India suggested that the questions relating to the provinces might be settled in these Provincial Boards and questions of more general importance might be settled by the All-India Board of Agriculture. The circular proceeded in terms to say that the Provincial Governments accepted this suggestion that the Agricultural Advisor to the Government of India might be occasionally asked to be present at these Provincial Boards so that they might have the benefit of his wider experience in the development of agriculture. I understand from the Hon'ble Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar that this matter was considered after the circular, during the last two or three months, and he has courteously placed at my disposal the views of the Director of Agriculture on which the Government came to the conclusion that for this province no Board of Agriculture was necessary. Honourable Members will see that the Government considered this circular of the Government of India issued in September and came to the conclusion on the 14th of December 1918, that 'in the circumstances reported by the Director of Agriculture, the Government agree that it is unnecessary to constitute a provincial Board of Agriculture in this Presidency and accept the Director's suggestions in paragraphs 6 and 7 of his letter read above'.

"I contest by this resolution the soundness of such a decision. I contend that the main object or one of the main objects of a Provincial Board of Agriculture—and I consider this to be the most essential feature—is to interest the agriculturists and the large land-owners in the scientific methods of agriculture and if any organization of that kind is constituted in this Presidency, it will be of the utmost advantage to the people of this Presidency. Honourable Members would remember that some years ago agricultural associations were formed throughout the province, but for some reason or other they have disappeared and the literature on the subject amounts to several volumes in the Board office or in the Government Secretariat. It was suggested at the time that it was an unnatural forcing of the interest of the public, that the public never evinced any interest in these agricultural associations, that they were mainly composed of persons who did not themselves carry on agriculture as a profession and various other circumstances of that kind were mentioned. I remember the question was more than once discussed when Mr. Hutton was Director of Agriculture. I was myself interested in one of these agricultural associations and it is hardly necessary to recall the failure of that movement at the time. But, Your Excellency, the whole question of agricultural development has received a further impetus from the Government of India and the wider organization of agriculture and the scope of agricultural associations have been so much developed that I think it would be a great mistake not to bring into existence an organization which would secure the active co-operation of the landed classes in this Presidency on some footing such as that suggested in this resolution of the Government of India. I have been careful to look at it from the standpoint of Mr. Stuart who says that he consulted all members of the Imperial Agricultural Service in the Province and discussed the matter with the staff at Coimbatore at a general meeting and at a special meeting; and the general conclusion to which he came was that there was no necessity for the formation of formal Provincial Board of Agriculture. He says that it will entail no small dislocation of the work of the officers concerned and the result will certainly be incommensurate with the time occupied. It is a proverb that 'one cannot expect a plant to flourish if one pulls it up by the roots too frequently in order to see how it is growing.' Your Excellency, I do not think that this conclusion of the Director of Agriculture could be supported. The main standpoint of the Government of India in the constitution of these Provincial Boards was to invite the co-operation and to secure the active support to modern agricultural methods of the landed classes; and that aspect has not at all been dealt with by Mr. Stuart. Of course the average official would have little to do with district boards and municipalities and taluk boards if he can help it, or with any form of association, with any other non-official organization such as this. The general average view is that it is an impediment and that it is far better not to have anything to do with it. Let us have our own way. We can do much better than any number of boards or advisers.' That is the point of view with which I have been very frequently familiar. Whatever may be the proposal, our standpoint is co-operation, active co-operation of the leading landed classes with the officials of the Agricultural Department. The officials of the Agricultural Department think that they can do very much better without the co-operation of the people and the landed classes. I am not at all prepared to accept that view. It will be the same, I expect, in any department. Therefore, this view that the officers of the Imperial Agricultural Service are against it is essentially unsound. In paragraph 4, Mr. Stuart says: 'At present, an informal agricultural conference is held every year at Coimbatore under the auspices of the Madras Agricultural Students' Union at the time of the College day.' I think college days are always matters of merry-making and so on—felicitous speeches at the beginning and at the end, plenty of sports and a good deal to roam about and so on. But whether this co-operation which the Government of India had in contemplation when they said that they should secure the co-operation of the landed classes would be secured, I do not know; I do not know whether Mr. Stuart was of the same opinion. He continues: 'To this conference the official visitors of the Agricultural College are invited and also other large landowners and persons interested in agriculture. Papers are read and discussions take place, but no formal resolutions are moved. I think that this meeting serves the purpose of keeping the department and large landowners in touch with each other and that it is not necessary to try and make it more formal.' The view of a co-operative conference on co-operative lines that has been referred to by the Government of India is also criticised in paragraph 5. Finally Mr. Stuart says that while he is against holding regular annual Provincial Board meetings, he is in favour of holding inter-departmental conferences when necessary to discuss special subjects. Here again he has missed the real point as to the constitution of the Board. While it is very good that departmental officers should meet and exchange views, it is also equally necessary that the public should be educated by contact with them, by consideration of their views, by their sympathetic treatment of the difficulties and grievances of the ryot, and by a general explanation of the attitude of the agricultural officer, in securing agricultural development. Inter-departmental conferences are certainly not the best means of doing this. One good result of inter-departmental conferences is travelling allowances, which is very good to draw for those who can do it. Your Excellency, I am not at all prepared to say that these inter-departmental conferences will not do any good. Certainly they may, but not in the direction which I wish to see pursued. Then Mr. Stuart says that at these inter-departmental conferences, questions such as those of irrigation, fuel and fodder, agricultural education, where the Public Works department, the Forest department and the Educational department are equally interested with the Agricultural, might be considered. Are all these subjects in which the ryot and landed classes are not interested? The whole trouble is that every department thinks that it must consult another department although the ryot is keenly interested in irrigation, in fuel and fodder, in agricultural education, etc. Therefore I should think that the actual reasons urged are not quite sound. Mr. Stuart also thinks that the departmental conferences deal mostly with questions of promotions and transfers of staff, departmental rules and practices and he thinks that inter-departmental conferences could not be expanded into general meetings. So that, these are the grounds on which Mr. Stuart has recommended that there should be no Board of Agriculture here.

5TH APRIL 1919.] (Mr. M. Ramachandra Rao ; Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar.)

"Perhaps Honourable Members would be interested to know that there is at any rate in the United Kingdom a Board of Agriculture which is a statutory body established in 1889 of which various officials and non-officials are always members. Its functions are statutory and the large number of agricultural questions with which this Board of Agriculture deals can be seen from the proceedings of this Board."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"Are there non-officials on that Board?"

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO:—"I assume there are some non-officials in the United Kingdom. My idea is that several gentlemen who are not in the service take greater interest in England in problems of agriculture than probably in this country and several questions relating to agricultural research are actively taken up by them and pursued. I hope in times to come our own landed aristocracy will take to the development of agricultural methods in the same way. Your Excellency, the duties of that Board are those that are transferred to the Board and they are: (1) The powers and duties of the Privy Council under the Contagious Diseases (Animals) Acts and the Destructive Insects Act, 1877; (2) the powers and duties of the Land Commissioners for England under all Acts relating to allotments, commons, Copy-hold, Drainage and Improvement of land, Inclosure, Metropolitan Commons, Tithe Rent Charge, Agriculture holdings, Conveyancing, Glebe land, etc. and the powers and duties of the Land Commissioners under every other Act whether general, local and personal or private and the powers and duties of the Commissioner of Works under the Survey Act, 1870, the Collection and Preparation of Statistics relating to Agriculture and Forestry, the inspection of and reporting on and aiding of any schools which are not public elementary schools, and in which instruction is given in any matter connected with agriculture and forestry and the aiding of the lectures or instruction in connexion with and the inspection of and reporting on any examinations in agriculture or forestry, and making or aiding in making inquiries, experiments or research, etc., for the purpose of promoting agriculture and forestry."

"So that it is a very comprehensive programme of work and it is placed on a statutory basis. Whether it is necessary to do so or not, here in this Province just now is a matter for consideration, and I for one will be satisfied if it is a Board constituted as stated here on an advisory basis, or if the Hon'ble Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar who is always keen that nobody should give irresponsible advice,—and advisory board in agricultural matters might be irresponsible—I certainly would not object to his placing it on a statutory basis as an administrative body. I leave it entirely to him, but I want this active co-operation between the landed classes and the officers of the Agricultural department to be secured. One of the resolutions at the last Agricultural Conference at Ootacamund was that district boards should have an agricultural staff of district agricultural inspectors who should go about and disseminate information on matters relating to agriculture. That is one way of linking the organization of the districts, and as time goes on, it is possible that district boards may develop an agricultural side for the dissemination of agricultural literature, for carrying on investigation and experiment and actively helping the officers of the Agricultural Department. On these grounds I think, Your Excellency, it will be to the public advantage to have a Board of Agriculture in this Presidency. I have read in the newspapers that such a Board was constituted in the United Provinces. I think I am right, although I am not quite sure, I trust the Honourable Member would see his way to accept this motion."

The Hon'ble the Raja of Ramnad seconded the resolution.

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"Your Excellency, after the very full treatment which this question has received at the hands of the Hon'ble Mr. Ramachandra Rao, there is very little for me to add except to say, as he has already pointed out, that this question was considered at length by the Director of Agriculture who reported to us quite recently, last September, that he thought there was no need for a Board of Agriculture like that. We issued the Government Order which was referred to by the Honourable Member and of which I furnished him a copy so as to enable him to deal with the question upon its merits. After hearing what he has said, without committing myself to any final decision on the matter, I am prepared to remit the question back to the Director of Agriculture for re-examination, and in connexion with that we would take note of the criticisms which the Honourable Member has offered on the Director's objections, and after the question is re-examined by the Director, I promise to look into the matter most closely and to give full consideration to what the Honourable Member has now said before I arrive at a final decision. But it is not possible for me to commit myself immediately to a reversal of what has been decided last December. The utmost that I can say is to promise a re-examination of the question with reference to what the Honourable Member has said. If that would satisfy him, I would suggest that he need not press this resolution to a division just now."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"Is the Honourable Member prepared to accept it?"

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO:—"I do not wish to press this. I do not wish to force Government to come to a hasty conclusion in this matter."

With the permission of His Excellency the President, the resolution was withdrawn.

RESOLUTION RE MINOR SANITARY GRANTS TO LOCAL BODIES FOR TOWN EXTENSION.

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO:—"I do not propose to move resolution No. XXIII."

The resolution was not moved. The resolution ran thus—

"XXIII. This Council recommends to the Governor in Council that the minor sanitary grants to local bodies for the year 1919-20 should, as far as possible, be devoted to schemes of town extension and also for the acquisition by local bodies of land in the course of development."

RESOLUTION RE TRAINING OF MEDICAL OFFICERS IN THE DIAGNOSIS OF TUBERCULOSIS.

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO:—"The resolution that I have the honour to move runs in these terms:—

"XXIV. This Council recommends to the Governor in Council

(a) that a scheme be devised for giving a training to medical men in the service of Government and local bodies in the diagnosis of tuberculosis; and

(b) that necessary funds for this purpose be found from the Provincial revenues."

"Your Excellency, there are a large number of special hospitals in Madras for the treatment of special diseases. There is the Ophthalmic hospital, there is the Maternity hospital, and there is now the hospital for the treatment of tuberculosis, and I think that it will be a great advantage to our medical men in the mufassal to undergo some training in these special branches of medical science which are dealt with in these hospitals. On a recent visit to the tuberculosis institute I found that cases have been coming from almost every district in the Presidency and the district of Malabar and Madras furnished a great number of patients. I also found that the work done in this institution showed that it would be somewhat an advantage if our assistant surgeons and sub-assistant surgeons spent some time in this institution to pick up the main lines on which the work is being done in this institution. Some time ago Your Excellency was pleased to sanction a scheme by which some assistant surgeons in the mufassal undergo a training in ophthalmic surgery. These persons are posted to the districts and I understand they are doing very good work. Similarly, I think a course of training given to medical men in the service of Government and of the local bodies in this institution would be a great advantage in detecting cases of tuberculosis and directing the parties either to go to this institution or to prescribe to them the methods of treatment. If it is left purely to local bodies the subject is certain to be blocked up owing to financial difficulties. I think there should be some system of training for all assistant surgeons in these hospitals a system by which they can come and spend some time both in the Ophthalmic hospital and in this hospital and pick up experience and go back to the mufassal for treating such cases. It is on these considerations that I place this matter before the Council. I trust therefore that it would be possible to do something in the direction indicated in this resolution."

DIAGNOSIS OF TUBERCULOSIS.

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. Krishna Rao seconded the resolution.

The Hon'ble Lieutenant-Colonel NIBLOCK:—"Your Excellency, the resolution which has been put before the Council seems to me rather vague, and rather incomprehensible in a sense, in that it only mentions the diagnosis of tuberculosis. Diagnosis alone would not be of any great use to a medical man unless he knew how to treat the disease. And in this disease particularly it is very necessary for the medical man to know how to prevent the disease. Prevention of tuberculosis is much more important than treatment. Diagnosis alone is of minor importance. I take it that the Honourable Member includes treatment when he speaks of diagnosis. I quite agree with the Honourable Member that training is necessary as regards tubercular disease, but at the same time I should like him to understand that all the medical men in this Presidency who are either in Government employ or in the service of local bodies have had a very thorough training in tubercular disease, not only in diagnosis but also in the treatment of the disease. He wishes the treatment to be carried out in the special hospital and he refers to the treatment carried out in the Eye hospital and in the Maternity hospital. As a matter of fact the treatment of tubercular disease at the present time in most parts of the world is carried out in General hospitals. The time certainly is coming when tuberculosis will be treated in special hospitals, and a large number of special hospitals are already in existence at the present time. But my point is that at present our medical men do get a thorough training in the diagnosis and treatment of tuberculosis. They learn that chiefly in the Madras General Hospital. That is the case as regards University students; they learn in the General Hospital. I have got figures for the past five years which go to show that on an average no less than 400 patients suffering from tubercular disease are admitted, and in this connexion I should like to draw attention to one point, and that is that these cases are chronic; and each of these cases remains in the hospital for a much longer period of time than people suffering from ordinary diseases. Therefore, every student has ample opportunities not only of diagnosing but of watching the treatment of this disease. I am speaking now of the in-patients, but in addition to that, a large number attend as out-patients; and here also the student is taught to diagnose in the out-patients' department."

"We all know what students are. We have been students ourselves, and the main object of the students is to pass the University examination. They do not worry themselves about what is to happen after they are qualified. But the main thing is to pass the examination. To get to know tuberculosis it is necessary that they should pay special attention, and to do so, we have made a special point at every examination in connexion with the University and at all the Board examinations of asking questions on this particular disease, either on paper or in the clinical examination, or in giving cases in the ward for diagnosis, or in the oral examination. I know that because I have been an examiner of the University myself; for the last twenty years, off and on I have been on the Board of Examiners and I know that personally to be a fact. This keeps the students up to the mark much more than they are likely to be in after life, human nature being what it is. Not only do students get this thorough grounding in the diagnosis and treatment of this disease in the General Hospital and in the Medical College, but they also undergo a similar training in the different medical schools in this Presidency."

"Then an equally important point, a point to which the Honourable Mover of the resolution wished to draw my attention, was post-collegiate training in tubercular disease. Unfortunately the war has interfered with this, as it appears to have done with a large number of questions brought up before this Council. We have been interfered with by the war not from the financial point of a view, because Government have been always willing to finance us as far as we have asked for in connexion with this, but unfortunately we have not got the men to teach. A very large number of our graduates have gone to the front, the sub-assistant surgeons and assistant surgeons in the service have been very much depleted and in fact we have been working short-handed for many years. It is on this account that proposals for a special post-graduate course have not yet come into effect in Madras. In the year 1913 everything was arranged, the curriculum was drawn up and everything was settled to give a thorough post-collegiate training to medical practitioners; they were to be taken up each year from the mufassal and to get a thorough grounding not only in tubercular disease but also in the more important diseases. But unfortunately the war stopped us. We sent notices to the different district medical and sanitary officers and the civil surgeons asking them whether any men could be spared for this course, and we got the same answer from all of them, that every man in the district was wanted, and so we had to abandon the proposal of a post-collegiate course for the time being. But a short time ago, now that the war is over—I hope that the war is over—the curriculum was drawn up, on the 31st of March. This is a time-table for the post-graduate course. It is to begin this year and it is to extend through the months of October, November and December; it will be every day in a week except Sunday and it will last from 7 a.m. till 5 p.m. These practitioners will not only attend to the treatment of tubercular disease, but they will attend the Maternity hospital, the Ophthalmic hospital, lectures on medicine, lectures on surgery, lectures on hygiene, lectures on other subjects, and they may attend demonstration classes, the out-patients' departments of the different Government hospitals in Madras, they will also have a special course of post-mortem examinations. By the time the course is over, I think most of them will require a holiday. I think, Your Excellency, this is the correct way of giving the course. I have had a good deal of experience for the last 20 years in hospitals and in the Medical College, I know the students pretty well, I know their capabilities pretty well, and also the capabilities of these graduates, and I am absolutely certain in my own mind that this is the correct method to train medical practitioners. This is the way in which they are trained in England. This is the way in which I underwent the post-graduate course myself. I did not attend one hospital for tubercular disease.

"I am certain that if an ordinary practitioner attends a special hospital for one or two months in which he sees practically nothing but one disease, tubercular disease, he would ordinarily—there are exceptions—get so obsessed with that one particular disease that he will diagnose a disease as such though there is really no such disease. That is the reason. I do not know whether I am giving away a secret, but we always think that if a person is ill, the proper person to go to is the general practitioner and not a specialist, because there is always the risk of the specialist working the symptoms in, to suit his own particular disease. I do not say that he does it for the sake of profit. But he gets so obsessed with this particular disease, and human nature being what it is, all the ailments to which human nature is subject are attributed to the disease with which he is very largely familiar. I am quite sure that that will be the case. Then again, suppose we do send these men to Madras, and give them a training in important diseases including tuberculosis; if you speak to Dr. Mhasker who is at present experimenting on hook-worm he would desire that they should have a training in that; and Dr. Gibson of Guindy would say, they do not know much about vaccine and that you must certainly have vaccine as part of the curriculum. Colonel Cornwall wanted last year numbers of men to be sent to Coonoor to learn the treatment of rabies. And recently venereal diseases have taken the front place and we are told that all medical men should have a special course in venereal diseases. If all medical men get special courses in all these diseases, the result will be,—we are always discovering new diseases—that they will have no time to treat the patients. Sometimes this may be to the benefit of the patients, but not always so. I quite agree with the Honourable Member that medical men not only during the student career but also during the post-collegiate career should have an opportunity of studying tuberculosis, its diagnosis and treatment by up-to-date methods, but I would also add to it that they should also be taught the diagnosis and treatment of other diseases which I consider equally important. I know I have been self-sacrificing, I have not mentioned any single disease in the surgical list,—I can give a list—in which a special course might be considered necessary, and with equal reason.

"Your Excellency, if you will allow me to make a slight digression, there is one point that I should like to mention which I consider of great importance just now and which the Government consider of very great importance at the present time, and that is as regards the medical inspection of school children. Government have ordered that children in different educational institutions in the Presidency ought to undergo periodical medical inspection. I think the idea is a most excellent one and I think it will have a great effect in helping to stop the spread not only of tuberculosis but also of many other diseases. I attach very great importance to this medical inspection of the boys provided it is properly carried out. At present arrangements are being made for carrying it out. There I think a special training would be very useful as regards the best method of examining children. The training need not take a long time. An extra hour may be given to those practitioners who are coming up for three months' post-collegiate study.

"I will say in conclusion that I agree with a great deal of what the Honourable Mover of the resolution has said, and I think that a scheme has been already devised for giving training to medical men in the service of Government, and of local bodies, not only in the diagnosis and treatment of tuberculosis but also in the diagnosis and treatment of other diseases of equal or at any rate almost equal importance. At present, the expenses are being met from Provincial revenues."

The Hon'ble Mr. K. RAMA AYYANGAR :—"Your Excellency, after hearing the most excellent and satisfactory statement made by the Hon'ble Mr. Niblock I only want to say one word. I think the boards and municipalities have had to engage the services of private practitioners also and they have been taken on conditions which the department have laid down. I only request that till this course is being taken by the whole of the medical practitioners now available, even though the war does not demand so many men now, those that have been taken into the service for the period of the war may be continued till this kind of instruction is given to all the medical practitioners. That is the only suggestion I wish to make."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO :—"Your Excellency, I am greatly obliged to the Hon'ble Colonel Niblock for the extremely interesting speech he made in answer to this resolution. That portion of it which referred to the special bias of the specialists and the experts is one that appealed to me more than any other thing. In one sense, every one of us is a specialist. Frequent references are made in this Council to the businessmen and the lawyers. I always feel that the Hon'ble Mr. Thonger should know a little bit of law and I dare say he feels that I should know a little bit of business. The truth of the statement is quite clear. As the Hon'ble the Surgeon-General has pointed out, probably even in the field of medicine this particular bias of the specialist will sometimes result in a little bit of imagination, as he put it, in the diagnosis of diseases. He says that a post-graduate course is already under contemplation. I certainly would not press the resolution. I was thinking of the men now, in service in the mufassal who have no opportunities of acquainting themselves with the latest methods in the diagnosis and treatment of these special diseases. Those opportunities are available in Madras and I wanted to bring this matter to the notice of Your Excellency's Government, so that a scheme may be devised. As a scheme is under consideration, I withdraw my resolution."

With the permission of His Excellency the President, the resolution was withdrawn.

RESOLUTION RE COMMITTEE TO INQUIRE AND REPORT ON THE OPENING OF NEW POLICE STATIONS.

The Hon'ble the RAJA OF RAMNAD :—"Your Excellency, the resolution, which I have the honour to move, runs as follows :—

'XXV. This Council recommends to the Governor in Council that a Committee of officials and non-officials be appointed to inquire and report at an early date, as to in what all places new police stations should be opened in this Presidency.'

"A resolution moved in this Council in March 1915 by the Hon'ble Mr. Rama Ayyangar ran almost similar to the one which I am now placing before the Council, but covered a wider ground. But at that time, Sir Harold Stuart thought that no inquiry of the kind suggested was necessary, and that all that could be done was being carried out as per directions contained in the Police Commission Report, and that it would be premature to upset the introduction of those improvements by appointing another committee. This is a brief review of the discussion that took place at that time. The work of reallocation of police stations began, I believe, in the year 1906 and was completed in the year 1916. In answer to a question put by the Hon'ble Mr. Venkatapati Raju in the February meeting of this Council last year, the Government replied that the 'reallocation of police stations in all the districts in this Presidency has been completed, and the Government do not anticipate any appreciable addition to the number of stations in the near future.' But circumstances have radically changed since 1916, and therefore it is that I am here to-day with this resolution.

"We have something like 975 police stations and 372 outposts in this Presidency which is 142,322 square miles in area. I don't think I need reiterate the various arguments raised in support of an investigation of the kind now asked for, as the Hon'ble Mr. Rama Ayyangar and those who followed him in 1916, had very nearly exhausted all the arguments that could be said in its favour. On a later occasion, I have shown how the Sub-Inspector in charge of a police station is overworked and how it must be physically impossible for any officer with such multifarious duties to effectively carry on the duties of a police officer, and that, over a very large area under his control. I must at once say that the location of police stations at present is highly unsatisfactory. To a question put by the Hon'ble Mr. Rama Ayyangar at this meeting, the Government have answered that there is no proposal under consideration for adding outposts and police stations to the existing ones in the Ramnad district. This is indeed a very disquieting news. I shall, therefore, just endeavour to give some particulars regarding the Ramnad district. Till recently, a village, which is not two miles from Ramnad, was under the control of the circle inspector of Sivaganga who, to visit the place, would have to travel 59 miles by road before he could reach it. That village was under the jurisdiction of the police station at Paramagudi, and the Sub-Inspector could never visit the place unless he travelled some 25 miles by road. I can give several instances of this kind from my own personal knowledge, and I do not think these facts can ever be controverted. During the recent economic edge, and the sense of insecurity felt by the public, I think, is within the knowledge of the Honourable Members of this Council, and the scare of looting and plunder was indeed very great in some of the southern districts. Particularly in Ramnad at that time, we had the most unfortunate Kamudi riots which engaged all the available police, leaving other areas practically unprotected. Thousands of cattle have been stolen and several cart-loads of grains have been been said in support of my case. I do not want for a moment to depreciate the demand for political education, but I do not think this proposal is the right way to go about it.

"I should like to refer to one other matter before closing. The Hon'ble Mr. Narasimha Ayyar said that he could translate his book into Tamil in a fortnight; but he did not do so because it cost him Rs. 1,000. If he thought that Tamil was the language of his constituency, why did he publish it in English at all?"

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"I may say a word or two before I put this resolution. It seems to me that it is a practical question whether it is worth while. I should not like it to go out to the public that the Government in any way want to keep back from those who know only the vernaculars—to keep back from them what is said in this Council, either to disguise their own attitude or the views of Honourable Members who oppose them. It ought to be within the knowledge of every one that that would not be a true statement of the attitude of the Government. It is merely a question whether it is worth while and from that point of view, I cannot help thinking that there is some force in the example of the Hon'ble Mr. Narasimha Ayyar, who as a prudent man did not think it worth while to go to the expense of publishing his book in Tamil. The Government should follow a practical prudent man like the Hon'ble Mr. Narasimha Ayyar and consider whether it is worth while spending money. After all, the money is not that of the Government, but it is the money of the tax-payers. Is it necessary in the interests of tax-payers to have these debates published in the chief vernaculars? Though the municipal proceedings are published, I do not think the speeches are published. What is published is merely the resolutions. Might it not be a feasible solution of the difficulty and meet the views of the Honourable Member as well as those who support the resolution that if any particular matter is so important, say a debate on the food question which is universally important, the publication of a translation of it might be specially moved? The Hon'ble Mr. Ramachandra Rao has himself said that to publish everything is a serious waste of money and I do not think the Council would be well advised in voting for this resolution."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO:—"May I offer a personal explanation? In suggesting an abridged edition I was going on the practice in the Hansard where except the speeches of the Members of the Government and the leaders of the opposition the rest of them is abridged. In making that suggestion, I was really guided by precedents elsewhere and it was not with a view to cut down important speeches."

The resolution was put to the Council and lost.

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. Narasimha Ayyar demanded a poll which was taken with the result that 11 voted for and 25 voted against it. The following was the division:—

RESOLUTION RE IMPROVEMENT OF THE ACOUSTIC PROPERTIES OF THE COUNCIL CHAMBER AND FACILITIES FOR THE ATTENDANCE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF VERNACULAR DAILIES. 1021

3RD APRIL 1919.]

(Mr. Narasimha Ayyar.)

RESOLUTION RE IMPROVEMENT OF THE ACOUSTIC PROPERTIES OF THE COUNCIL CHAMBER AND FACILITIES FOR THE ATTENDANCE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF VERNACULAR DAILIES.

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR:—"Your Excellency, the resolution that I have the honour to move runs in these terms—

'VI. This Council recommends to His Excellency in Council that a committee composed of officials and non-officials should be appointed to devise and recommend measures

(a) for speeches made in the Council being better heard, especially by the public in the balconies of the Council;

(b) for greater provision of space and facilities for enabling more vernacular dailies to send their representatives to attend and report the Council's proceedings;

(c) for facilitating the meeting of non-official members and working in connexion with public business on days when the Council is not sitting; and

(d) for the avoidance of reduplication of questions and resolutions at the same meeting and to remove other similar defects in the working of this Council.'

"This resolution conveys a recommendation which, I believe, has at any rate the merit of not committing the Government to any very large item of expenditure. The matters recommended relate to a number of details, some of which may appear at first to be too trivial for the notice of this august assembly. However as everything contained in this resolution is intended to improve the work of this Council, I hope that this Council will give me a patient hearing for a few minutes when I draw attention to one detail after another and point out what exactly is intended to be recommended in this resolution.

"In the first place, I pray for a committee consisting of officials and non-officials because various suggestions may be put forward by the Council some of which would be acceptable and some not acceptable, some costly, some not costly. Therefore a committee has been suggested as the best means of solving the problem.

"Then I proceed to the work of this committee. They must 'devise and recommend measures for the following purposes'. The first is 'for speeches made in this Council being better heard especially by the public in the balconies of the Council.' The acoustic properties are my first grievance. I have frequently discovered that people on the opposite bench especially when the Hon'ble Mr. Ramanuja Achariyar speaks have to strain every nerve to catch him. The same is the case when I have to hear the Hon'ble Mr. Siva Rao and some other gentlemen. I must confess that I have several times failed to catch what all of them say. It is not all that possess the most powerful lungs that some of us may boast. But I think a Council of this sort must be so arranged that every one should be able to hear every one else. I need not labour the point when I say that many of us sometimes miss what is being said; the records of this Council bear witness to that. On one occasion an Honourable Member speaking on behalf of the Government actually accepted a resolution of mine; but I was under the impression that he opposed it and I got up and said that I withdrew it, because I thought there was some assurance. The reporters were horrified and some of my friends were horrified. Then I was taken to task, that the Hon'ble Mr. Buckley actually accepted it. Then it was a surprise to me that the acoustic properties were so bad that I had been misled into thinking what was accepted as being opposed. I think there is nothing to compare to the misunderstanding caused by the defective acoustic properties.

"The first portion is with regard to members hearing each other. The second portion is with regard to the public following. It is not sufficient that persons are able to read what newspapers say immediately or see what is stated in the Gazette a long time after the meeting. It is of the utmost importance that if any one of the public wishes to follow the debate and give instructions to the representatives, so that the views of the constituency may be properly represented in this Council, facilities should be afforded. I would request Honourable Members who think of opposing this resolution to get up into the balcony and see if they can hear me. It is not in a uniform key or pitch of voice. Sometimes in the heat of emotion, we lapse into inaudibility. When the time limit is going to be applied, the speech is hurried at a rapid rate and unless people are sufficiently near, they cannot hear what is going on. All things considered, it is of the utmost importance that the public should be able to hear what goes on. I do not think there can be two opinions on the necessity for providing the hall with proper acoustic properties. This reminds me of the objection which may savour of the early Roman days when legislation was in the hands of the aristocracy and the Plebeians wanted to know the laws, they presented real obstacles. They said, 'you wish to know the laws and it shall not be a private monopoly.' But they perched the law so high that the people could not see it. Similarly you have provided balconies from which the public cannot hear anything. The analogy strikes me as somewhat close. There is an important difference that the Roman aristocracy deliberately intended to cheat the Plebeians, whereas here we have no such intention. I wish to point out

1108 RESOLUTION RE COMMITTEE TO INQUIRE AND REPORT ON THE
OPENING OF NEW POLICE STATIONS.

(The Raja of Ramnad.)

way-laid. The police were absolutely unable to cope with the situation, and one main cause for all that had happened is the abolition of police stations in very many important centres. Of course, in this Council it will be easy for the Government to say that they don't agree to such a conclusion; but I know that they must have received reports from the District Superintendents of Police and other officials regarding the inadequacy of police stations, and particularly of not locating them in suitable places. During the looting scare, I know from personal experience, that people in villages kept awake the whole night for fear of onslaught from the looters. The looters, as a matter of fact, used to visit the villages during the day and levy black-mail, failing which they used to threaten the villagers with an attack that night for carrying away their properties. In several places it has so happened, and I give an instance below to show how the allocation of police stations at present is absolutely unsatisfactory. There is a village known as Uttrakosamangai seven miles to the south of Ramnad, and the magisterial jurisdiction is with the Sub-Magistrate of Ramnad; but it belongs to the police station seven miles further to the south. One evening, all of a sudden, the Sub-Magistrate got a report,—and so did I—that a large band of looters had visited the village that evening, and having failed to levy black-mail, had announced their intention of raiding the village that night at 9 o'clock. I sent the report to the police station and to the Sub-Magistrate; the police said that it was in the jurisdiction of the station at Sikkal, fourteen miles off from Ramnad. I presume the magistrate could not do anything except forwarding the same through a special messenger to the police station at Sikkal. By the time the messenger reached, it would have been very nearly midnight; in the winter season, access to the place is still more difficult for want of good roads, and wet fields and irrigation channels being numerous on the way. In any case, the police from Sikkal could not have reached Uttrakosamangai before the following morning, which would have been a day after the fair. Uttrakosamangai is a place where there was a police station till the reorganization came into force. There was another police station at Kilakarai which is only five or six miles from Uttrakosamangai. There was also a police station at Kodikulam where, I think, the greatest havoc was played during this time upon cattle. All these stations have been abolished. There was a station at Bogalur which too has been abolished, and which was within a distance of five miles from Uttrakosamangai. So, you now see, sir, that the abolition of police stations in very important centres has contributed much to this looting scare. The District Magistrate, in spite of his very earnest endeavours, could not effectively check the spread of this looting scare at the very outset for want of these police stations. From Ramnad to Rāmēsvaram, a distance of some forty miles, there is no police station. In Pamban, I presume there is an outpost; but I must say that these outposts are not of much use in effect. The necessity for having more police stations has considerably increased owing to the economic distress now prevailing in this Presidency. In the Kamudi side, a number of police stations have been abolished. From Kamudi and Mudukulattūr tracts, come large numbers of criminals, and in spite of this obvious fact, the police stations have been abolished. Of course, I have no particulars regarding the sufferings in this respect of other districts; but I have not the slightest doubt that in other districts also there exists this complaint, and Honourable Members representing those districts here will bear me out when I say that the absence of police stations in important centres is nothing peculiar to this district, but is a complaint concerning the whole Presidency.

"In the matter of administration of police stations and investigation of crimes, we want some reform. There ought to be a separate agency in each district for the investigation of crimes which, year after year, are seen mounting up. During the looting scare, on an intimation from the village headman of Uttrakosamangai, that a large band of men had assembled outside the village with a view to loot their houses that evening, I had to send a special messenger on horse-back to find out if that was true, because no policeman in the Ramnad station would go to that village as it belonged to Sikkal jurisdiction. In these circumstances, sir, I ask the Government if it can be contended for a moment that there does not exist sufficient reason for the appointment of a committee to visit various centres in this Presidency and inquire officials and other prominent men regarding the reallocation of police stations. Even if the reallocation should involve an additional expenditure of a few more lakhs, I submit, it would indeed be money well spent. Of course, if there was what is known as a village police, about which there has been a good deal of discussion in this Council, especially by that police reformer, the Hon'ble Mr. Rama Ayyangar, I should not think that any reallocation on a large scale would be necessary. But in its absence, if there should be no reallocation and addition of police stations, I am afraid, the Government will, before long, have to regret very seriously their failure in this respect. The very presence of police stations in central places prevents criminals from resorting to violence and committing crimes, and therefore I would earnestly request the Government not to hesitate to appoint a committee as requested in this resolution, which, I once again assure the Government, is so much needed for creating a sense of security in the minds of the people. The appointment of a committee to investigate the reallocation of police stations will not, I submit, be uprooting what was done till 1916, but will only be to make a thorough and more satisfactory scrutiny regarding the location of police stations.

"With these few remarks, I beg to commend this resolution for the acceptance of this Council."

RESOLUTION RE COMMITTEE TO INQUIRE AND REPORT ON THE 1109
OPENING OF NEW POLICE STATIONS.

5TH APRIL 1919.]

(Mr. Ahmad Tambi Marakkayar; Mr. Davidson;
Mr. Rama Ayyangar.)

The Hon'ble Khan Bahadur A. T. G. M. AHMAD TAMBI MARAKKAYAR:—"Your Excellency, the Honourable Mover of the resolution has stated the matter so clearly that I do not think I have much to say. However, I should like to say a few words in support of this resolution. Since the introduction of the circle inspector system, several minor police stations were abolished and the present administration of the police is unsatisfactory. In the recent looting, the necessity of police bāndobast was keenly felt. I consider that the appointment of a committee consisting of officials and non-officials to inquire into and report on the whole question is a sound idea. With these remarks I second the resolution."

The Hon'ble Mr. L. DAVIDSON:—"Your Excellency, I am afraid that in regard to the question of a general investigation I must adhere to the position taken up by Sir Harold Stuart in 1916, namely, that it is premature to undertake any such inquiry throughout the Presidency. It must be remembered—the Hon'ble the Raja himself has admitted it—that it was only in 1916 that the allocation of police stations as based upon the proposals of the Police Commission was actually completed. That allocation was the result of a thorough and prolonged examination founded upon elaborate scrutiny of administrative needs, geographical factors, distribution and criminality of the population and a variety of other factors which come into the decision of such questions. It is not claimed on behalf of the Police Department that the existing allocation is in any way perfect. Far from it. The Government have received a variety of proposals at one time or another from district officers and from the Inspector-General of Police for modifications. But the policy adopted has, I think, rightly been to discourage the perpetual alteration of existing arrangements until they have been tried sufficiently long for it to be safe to infer from practical experience that they are unsatisfactory and really in need of change. The Hon'ble the Raja has referred to various previous discussions and questions in regard to this matter. The latest instance which he cited was the answer given to question No. 24 at this meeting put by the Hon'ble Mr. Rama Ayyangar. Comparing that question with the resolution of the Hon'ble the Raja, it occurred to me to wonder whether the resolution was not a case of generalizing from the particular instance of Ramnad. The answer given by Government to the Hon'ble Mr. Rama Ayyangar is 'No such proposal is under consideration.' That is perfectly true so far as the Government are concerned, but after that answer had been settled, I referred to the Inspector-General of Police and also looked up the earlier history of the case. I found that in 1914 the Superintendent and the District Magistrate specifically proposed substantial changes in the police arrangements of the Ramnad district. The Inspector-General held them up on financial grounds. He found that the proposals put forward involved the creation of two additional circles, four new stations, three new outposts and additions to the district strength of two inspectors, seven sub-inspectors, 16 head constables and 59 constables. This Council is well aware of the dead set which some of its members usually make to any increase in the police staff and I cannot blame the Inspector-General of Police if he attached importance to the financial consideration, especially as the great war was then only beginning, and adopted a course which undoubtedly was in consonance with the wishes of the Government of India and the Government of Madras and endeavoured to pursue a policy of economy. He sent back instructions to the Superintendent to modify his proposals and recommend only such of them as were imperative and could be carried out without much expenditure. The result was a revised proposal involving the creation of new outposts and additions to the police stations in the Tiruppattur circle, the special policing of the Chettinad, the transfer of a police station from Pamban to Rāmēsvaram, which was considered to be a growing need and other transfers of stations designed to make the Ramnad circle more compact. I cannot pretend to go into details of this revision but the proposals did represent a measure of reform and they were sanctioned by the Government in March 1916. Admittedly, according to the views of the officers of the department and the District Magistrate, this reform did not meet the full requirements of the case. The Inspector-General of Police, when I referred my question and answer to him for remarks, replied to me that he has now asked the Deputy Inspector-General of Police to look into the matter and to submit any proposals which can be made without involving much additional cost; obviously I could not encourage him to be extravagant. If the Hon'ble the Raja of Ramnad will give the Deputy Inspector-General and the local officers the advantage of his advice as based on personal experience gained during the recent looting, I am sure they will be only too ready to take it into consideration.

"This particular case really sums up the general attitude of the Government. It is that we cannot so shortly after the completion of a re-allocation based upon the inquiries of the Police Commission take up the matter of general revision, recognizing as we do that any general revision will entail a very large cost indeed. But we are prepared in particular cases to consider the need for revision if it has been demonstrated by sufficient practical experience. There is no reason to suppose that the Superintendent of Police and the District Magistrate and the Deputy Inspector-General will not fully consult public opinion, local public opinion, in these matters. But I do not think Government would be acting wisely in stimulating proposals of this description in every part of the Presidency by the creation of a roving commission of inquiry. For that reason I am bound on behalf of Government to oppose this resolution."

The Hon'ble Mr. K. RAMA AYYANGAR:—"If the Hon'ble Mr. Davidson had inferred from my question and the Hon'ble the Raja of Ramnad's resolution coming up at the same time in this Council, I can assure him that the two things came on quite independently."

1110 RESOLUTION RE COMMITTEE TO INQUIRE AND REPORT ON THE OPENING OF NEW POLICE STATIONS.

(Mr. Davidson ; Mr. Rama Ayyangar.) . [5TH APRIL 1919.]

The Hon'ble Mr. L. DAVIDSON :—"My surmise was merely that both the proposals originated in a common cause, the inadequate police arrangements of the district of Ramnad."

The Hon'ble Mr. K. RAMA AYYANGAR :—"Absolutely so. It so happened that the two things have proceeded independently from independent sources. However I am more concerned with the statement made by the Hon'ble Mr. Davidson to-day. The question is, he thought that the general investigation was opposed and this question of the stations was settled and this was treated as premature. I would invite his attention to the discussions on the previous occasion. I do remember that Sir Harold Stuart thought that the question of posting stations was still going on and he said that the question of allocation of these stations would be considered as far as was necessary. In fact the determination of the Police Commission was to abolish police stations as much as possible, giving on an average about 120 to 150 square miles of area for each police station, it being arranged that the sub-inspector shall be in charge with a higher pay and that the village police will be increased or strengthened so as to afford perfect safety to the villages also. That question, as was pointed out by the Hon'ble the Raja of Ramnad, could not be settled soon, though it is under contemplation, and village police have not been strengthened as the Police Commission expected they would be. Naturally, in the interim, nothing could be done to go against the plan that was adopted by the Police Commission, so that, I agreed on that occasion with Sir Harold Stuart that till the strengthening of the village police came in, it was necessary that this lower number of police stations should be kept up, but it was necessary to see that these stations were posted at the proper places. The question was being considered, the Superintendents were being written to and the whole matter had not settled down. But what I do find is that in reply to my question even then, the question of 995 police stations was settled, and the question of outposts, about 370, was settled, and the permanent allocation of police stations had not been really disposed of. If I remember right, I was then told that the Tanjore District Superintendent of Police and some others were communicating with the Government that certain stations will have to be permanently posted in places other than those where they were posted. I refer to this, so that the Hon'ble Mr. Davidson may go into it completely and satisfy himself that that was the state of affairs when this discussion took place in this Council. In fact, the question is not one that has been settled. That is my humble submission. That was the biggest question that was necessary to be considered. It is not that every District Superintendent of Police has agreed that the posting of stations had been all-right. There were reports made and there were instructions given, but the only point that was then contested was that within a few years of the Police Commission there could not be a committee of officials and non-officials to consider the eight or nine heads, that, I said, would have to be considered by that committee, and it was agreed that this portion would be looked into. The Hon'ble the Raja of Ramnad proposes—as I said, I would not have proposed it in the same fashion as he proposes—that a committee of officials and non-officials should be appointed to inquire and report at an early date as to in what places new police stations should be opened in this Presidency. I would prefer that one officer is put on special duty with power to co-opt members, important non-officials in each district and the Deputy Inspector-General of each division, to go into this matter and report at an early date. It is not necessary that there should be any special committee more than that an officer is put on duty with power to him to add one or two members in each district to find out how this might be done. This matter becomes more important in this way.

"The main question is the question of cost that has been raised by the Hon'ble Mr. Davidson and rightly. Probably it might appear from the speech that he made that we have been insistently arguing all these years from the year 1914. I am quite of another opinion. The Police Commission which examined the strength of the police and the cost of the police fully well went into it, and from 36 lakhs which was the charge in 1895-96 when the Police Commission sat, they came to the conclusion that 63 lakhs would have to be spent on the Police department after the reorganization, and the total strength inclusive of constables, head constables, sub-inspectors and inspectors and all other staff came to 27,000 as was then estimated. We have now gone up to 36,000 and our cost has gone up from Rs. 63 lakhs to Rs. 126 lakhs; and excluding village establishment which has been tacked on at a cost of Rs. 16 lakhs, we will find we have risen from Rs. 63 lakhs which was the utmost that was expected to be reached by the Commission to Rs. 110 or 112 lakhs. That is not the main point, but the one point raised by the Hon'ble Mr. Davidson was that in Ramnad they proposed a staff which would add to the expenditure of the Police department and that would practically bring us to this inconsistency. It is that which brought us to this point. In fact, I have no doubt that when they determined the police force for the province, they took everything into consideration and fixed it at 27,000, but what we have actually done is we have gone up to 36,000 inclusive of the temporary force. It is not that this force cannot be sufficient for this province. There is no doubt that this force is not rightly distributed. It cannot be contended that the Police Commission did commit mistakes, because I have thoroughly well gone into this matter and I am perfectly convinced that 27,000, if properly distributed, would give the necessary force. That is my contention in this Council, but the present force of 36,000 is not sufficient. I want that a police officer is put on special duty to take into consideration any readjustment of the police force in the several districts; and if each Deputy Inspector-General finds out for his own jurisdiction the police that is available or necessary for ordinary purposes of merely guarding duty and of the police needed for the detective and preventive and other duties, and if we post for each district a certain number, he will be able to see that the strength is not insufficient, but that it is more than what is needed and that the expense is unnecessarily incurred. That is my submission and I am prepared to place before such officer anything necessary to show that what I say is correct. I would refer the Hon'ble Mr. Davidson to the tables that are attached to the report of the Police Commission which worked in detail the number of policemen required for each one of the branches, the increase that it would make upon the previous police that we had, the additional police that we had to engage for special duties like criminal settlement, etc. I have no objection to all that has been added for supplementing the present police force, for example, the Criminal Intelligence Department."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT :—"I want the Honourable Member to confine himself to the subject matter of the resolution that a committee be appointed to consider where the police stations should be allocated. He cannot range over the whole question of police strength and police expenditure, the criminal settlements, etc."

The Hon'ble Mr. K. RAMA AYYANGAR :—"It is perhaps unnecessary to mention at length, but however because the question of cost is raised, I thought it necessary. I only wanted to point out that some form of committee like a special officer on special duty with power to add or consult local people is necessary to consider whether there should be additional police. My submission is that this will have to be gone into. It cannot be put off long and we will have again and again to come to it till it is satisfactorily solved. The village police not having been strengthened, the whole basis of the report of the Police Commission has not been acted up to, but we have reduced the stations as recommended by them. What is the use of giving effect to one portion of the report without giving effect to other portions? I dare say many District Magistrates and Superintendents will agree, and they will place before that officer all that is necessary to show that a re-allocation of the police stations and a readjustment of the police force in the various places will enable the Government to have much better effect and to have the administration of the Police department much better."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. KRISHNA RAO :—"Your Excellency, the resolution suggests the appointment of a committee for the purpose of ascertaining in what places new police stations should be established in this Presidency. The first point regarding which it is necessary for this Council to be satisfied is whether it is or is not necessary to have additional police stations opened in this Presidency. If we succeed in inducing the Government to accept that position, the next point for consideration will be whether that can be achieved by the appointment of a committee of officials and non-officials in the manner suggested. The discussion which has already taken place on this subject must have convinced the Government that there have been complaints in various parts of the Presidency about the necessity for the increase of police stations. The Hon'ble Mr. Davidson remarked that we had specific information regarding the district of Ramnad; but that owing to financial considerations, those proposals were kept in abeyance by the Inspector-General of Police. A perusal of the various reports, extracts from which are appended in the report of the administration of the Police Department would show that various District Magistrates who sent up these reports with their remarks pointed out some difficulties which existed in the various districts. Though the idea of opening additional police stations did not specifically present itself before their minds, their attention was drawn to other defects. In some cases, they pointed out that the work of detection was not satisfactory and sub-inspectors were not doing that work properly, that a system of rewards should be tried and that in cases of criminal settlements the escapes should be accounted for. I am giving a summary of the various extracts from the reports of District Magistrates appended to the administration report to the Police Department.

"I may point out that the financial consideration is no doubt a very important one which stares us in our face. Probably the Hon'ble Mr. Davidson would suggest that complaints have been made in this Council on various occasions about the increase of police expenditure and ask whether, in view of these complaints and in view of the various proposals made for reducing the expenditure on police, proposals like the one under consideration for increasing the expenditure could be thought of. Your Excellency, I may point out that if a satisfactory inquiry is made, it will be found that the number of police stations whether judged with reference to the area or with reference to the population is not quite adequate. I have got figures, but I do not wish to take up the time of the Council. I have before me the figures given in the report of the Police Department where the number of police stations is given with reference to the population and also with reference to the area. I know that on a former occasion when a similar question was raised, the comparison was made with the number of police stations in other provinces; and we were asked to be satisfied that, in view of the expenditure incurred on that purpose, it was not possible to make further advance and that the recommendations of the Police Commission were being kept in view. I venture to suggest that that is not the proper way of looking at the whole question.

"The chief way of looking at the question is whether in view of the dimensions of this province and the size of the various districts, which it will be noticed is very large, it is quite adequate to have a few police stations in each district as we now have. It is not possible for persons in remote parts of the districts to communicate with police stations on account of the long distance; and such a state of things can only be remedied if there is a reallocation of stations. The Hon'ble Mr. Davidson pointed out that reallocation was completed only in 1916,

1112 RESOLUTION RE COMMITTEE TO INQUIRE AND REPORT ON THE OPENING OF NEW POLICE STATIONS.

(Mr. Krishna Rao ; the Raja of Ramnad ; the President.) [5TH APRIL 1919.]

and that it is too early for us to raise that question. The question has specifically arisen in the case of one or two districts ; but the point is of general importance. I am not very particular about the particular form suggested. The Hon'ble Mr. Rama Ayyangar suggested that a special officer should be deputed to ascertain in what districts and to what extent there should be these police stations. The Hon'ble Mr. Davidson deprecated the idea of a roving commission for the purpose of provoking an inquiry of this kind ; and he felt confident that District Magistrates and Superintendents of Police would be able to give information after consulting public opinion. If it is difficult for Your Excellency's Government to accept the resolution in its present form, if it is inconvenient to appoint a committee to go from place to place and district to district with the object of ascertaining whether the number of police stations is adequate or not, and whether they ought to be reallocated, may I not ask that specific references should be made to District Superintendents of Police and the District Magistrates as to whether they consider the number of police stations adequate ? I make that suggestion in view of the fact that the Government have committed themselves to a fixed number of police stations. There may be District Magistrates who may not be satisfied about the adequacy of the police stations. Even if the Government are not at present prepared to appoint a committee for the purpose of this inquiry, I think there will be useful purpose served by inquiring into this matter and calling for specific proposals from District Magistrates who will consult public opinion and also Superintendents, asking them to state whether they consider the arrangement of police stations and out-posts adequate. If all these proposals are before the Government, then the question may be taken up as to what the cost will be that would be involved in carrying out those proposals, whether there should be any readjustment of expenditure in the Police Department, whether proposals for additional police stations or out-posts would present a formidable figure, and whether it is not possible to effect economies in other directions. These are all matters which can be taken up with advantage. I do not think Government should hesitate even to call for information from the various District Magistrates who are responsible for the police administration in the various districts. As admitted by the Hon'ble Mr. Davidson, he was giving them instructions to consult public opinion and ascertain the facts not merely from officials but from leading non-officials having experience and formulate definite proposals. I see no objection to it. On so many occasions and on so many questions the Government trust to District officers ; and in this matter when a point is raised as to the adequacy of police arrangements, they should not hesitate to consult them though it might result in additional expenditure under police. If the expenditure has to be incurred for the purpose of security or for the purpose of preserving the peace of the country, notwithstanding the objection raised against the general increase in police expenditure, I do not think this Council would hesitate to grant it."

The Hon'ble the RAJA OF RAMNAD :—" Your Excellency, I may also assure the Hon'ble Mr. Davidson, if such assurance is needed, that my sending up the resolution and the Hon'ble Mr. Rama Ayyangar's sending up the interpellation had nothing to do with each other. Because the Hon'ble Mr. Rama Ayyangar represents the three districts, he sent that interpellation in order to elicit some information regarding the police stations in Ramnad because Ramnad was the district that was affected most during the looting scare caused by the economic distress. The Hon'ble Mr. Davidson told us that the Inspector-General submitted a scheme or report in 1914 and that those proposals could not be given effect to as they involved very heavy expenditure. But may I submit that even those proposals will now be out of date owing to the circumstances which have so radically changed since that year ? I am not very anxious that a committee should be appointed. My Hon'ble Friend Mr. Krishna Rao has anticipated me. He suggested that if Government would very kindly instruct District Magistrates and District Superintendents of Police to consult non-officials in their respective districts and submit proposals to Government, and the Government considered them, that will satisfy us. May I know whether the Hon'ble Mr. Davidson can give me some such assurance ? If the Hon'ble Mr. Davidson can give me some such assurance, I may not feel the necessity to press this resolution to a division. Will the Government kindly ascertain the opinions of District Magistrates and District Superintendents of Police ?"

His Excellency the PRESIDENT :—" Does the Honourable Member refer only to Ramnad district ?"

The Hon'ble the RAJA OF RAMNAD :—" No."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT :—" Speaking for the Government on the financial side, it will not be possible to accept this resolution. The expenditure on police has been advancing considerably and each year makes a further advance. I am sure that such an inquiry would lead to a further expenditure on police. I think it is most undesirable to open that door for a further demand for further expenditure."

The Hon'ble the RAJA OF RAMNAD :—" It is not my wish that the proposals coming from the various District Magistrates should be given effect to all at once. They may be given effect to as we find funds."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT :—" My Honourable Colleague has told the Honourable Member that he will have an informal inquiry made into the position of the Ramnad district. That is the district in which the Honourable Member is principally interested. It is his experience in that district that enabled him to bring forward this motion. I am afraid on the general matter Government are not prepared to go further and cannot give any further assurance. He should be content with that assurance. If that will satisfy the Honourable Member, my Honourable Colleague will assure him."

The Hon'ble the RAJA OF RAMNAD :—" It would indeed be very selfish to accept an assurance of that kind and withdraw a resolution. I would rather take a defeat by pressing this resolution to a division."

The resolution was put to the Council and lost.

RESOLUTION RE CLOSURE OF CANALS IN THE KISTNA EASTERN DELTA.

The following resolution which stood in the name of the Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. Ramachandra Rao Pantulu Garu was not moved :—

"XXVI. This Council recommends to the Governor in Council that the orders of the Government for the closure of the canals in the Kistna Eastern delta be modified and that instructions be issued that the canals in the said delta be kept open till the 15th April."

"XXVII. This Council recommends to His Excellency in Council that the Government should take all necessary steps for increasing the present rate of creation or formation of new co-operative societies and should especially get appointed a much larger number of officers (with staff) for the creation of new societies on an ampler scale."

1114 RESOLUTION RE FREE ADVERTISEMENT FOR CO-OPERATIVE INSTITUTIONS.

(Mr. Narasimha Ayyar.)

[5TH APRIL 1919.]

RESOLUTION RE FREE ADVERTISEMENT FOR CO-OPERATIVE INSTITUTIONS.

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR :—" Your Excellency, the resolution that I have the honour to move runs in these terms :—

'XXVIII. This Council recommends to His Excellency in Council that the Government should grant free advertisement to co-operative institutions in all the periodical publications issued by Government.'

"I am quite sure Government would have great sympathy with the object of this resolution inasmuch as their sympathy has been shown in accepting the previous resolution. I take it that we all have the same object, namely, to give as many facilities as possible to the various co-operative societies to do their work efficiently and to bring the benefit of co-operative institutions within the reach of as many as possible. That is the object underlying this resolution. One way by which co-operative institutions can do more work is by getting more funds. One of the chief obstacles in the way of co-operation spreading in the Presidency is the absence of sufficient money. Various suggestions have been put forward from various sources. For instance the Hon'ble Mr. Venkatapati Raju suggested that the suggestions of Sir Daniel Hamilton should be given effect to, but we are not now, in this Council, in a position to say anything directly about it. Here is a matter by which we can do something to make more money flow into this movement. The reason why co-operative institutions do not get all the money that they want is not that there is a special tendency to hoard large sums of money in various places, though I do admit that the little possessed by the rustics in the interior especially in time of war, it would be rather difficult to get out of their hands. The greatest difficulty to get money out from Indian hands is the fear of losing capital and the best way of overcoming that diffidence is to assure as many as possible and in as many ways as possible that such fears are groundless. The degree of credit attached to co-operative associations is rather poor when compared with what it might be. There are many people who have spare capital, some of which might be easily diverted into co-operative channels if all people lend their aid to it. I am suggesting in this resolution a very simple remedy. Government in various publications are either making no use of their fly leaves at all or are advertising things which do not require advertisement. When I get the law reports I see all sorts of miscellaneous Acts advertised, some Urdu translations, some Telugu translations of these Acts and we find heaps of pages printed saying that the Acts of so many years are available at one anna three pies, postage six pies, etc. They are repeated month after month very little to the advantage of Government. I think very little money is made out of it. Whether Government are wise in advertising their legal publications is only a by-issue. I am concerned only with pointing out that there is plenty of scope to do work in the direction pointed out by me. If the Government only wish to do so, the postage will be the same, the additional cost by way of printing paper will not be appreciable. You can give every month a chance to the leading co-operative banks in the districts to advertise, in the Law Reports for instance, what amount of capital they have, what reserve they have, what work they have done and one or two certificates, that they get from the registrar. Some of these co-operative banks get excellent certificates from the registrar as to their solvency and reliability but these certificates are hidden away in the annual reports and the ordinary man who has got some money to invest seldom comes across such certificates. Along with private notifications that so and so's son is found to be lavish and so and so is not bound by the debts of his son, we can easily find room for advertisement to co-operative societies. I think that further illustration is hardly necessary. I took the law reports as they are reports which a lawyer looks at, and it is often said that the lawyer has a lot of current coin. The co-operative registrar, Mr. Hemingway, was surprised when he took up the department to see how the much maligned lawyers and Brahmans were putting their moneys and labour into the co-operative banks. I think lawyers can do a great deal more if the advantages of investing in co-operative banks are placed before them by means of notifications in reports and gazettes. I am not particularly referring to legal publications. Government issue every week a large number of publications to go into the hands of the public and yet we do not find co-operative institutions sufficiently advertised. I know, however, sometimes along with the Fort St. George Gazette, the accounts with minute details and audit reports are published at great expense. That is no doubt one sort of advertisement for co-operative societies. We are thankful to the Government for it, but what I am pointing out is that when that has been done, there still remains a great deal to be done. It will cost Government practically nothing. It will be easy for the Government to accept and very easy to carry out. and if it is pointed out that my language is too wide, I am quite willing to say 'in such publications issued by the Government as they may find it convenient.' I am quite willing to drop the phrase 'in all periodicals', if that is considered ambitious. But I cannot see any objection to any other portion of this resolution, because co-operative institutions seek only advertisement. I know that a great deal is made of the applications to Government for pecuniary aid. That objection has never been raised to seeking advertisement. If we ask the Government to guarantee all the loans, I have heard it said that it ceases to be co-operation. Whether that position is sound or not, I need not now discuss. But certainly no objection can be raised to this modest request that the Government should, in their numerous publications find some place somewhere to inform those who have money of the advantages of these institutions. It is enough if very short notes are published. I can assure Honourable Members that the space that may be taken would not be much. The district banks may put in six lines for instance or ten lines, and that may appear once a month if the Government so choose. There is no attempt to take all the available space for their own advertisement. I think on the whole the request is so simple, and it appears to me that I am taking up the time, of the Council almost unnecessarily. Therefore without more I shall wait to see what the position of the Government will be and if the objection is to the phrase 'in all periodical publications' I would substitute the other words I have mentioned. I hope in that shape at least it will be possible for the Government to accept it."

RESOLUTION RE FREE ADVERTISEMENT FOR CO-OPERATIVE INSTITUTIONS. 1115

(Mr. Narasimha Ayyar ; Mr. Campbell ; Mr. Krishna Rao ; the President.)

The Hon'ble Mr. A. Suryanarayana Rao seconded the resolution.

The Hon'ble Mr. A. Y. G. CAMPBELL :—" Your Excellency, I am afraid it is not possible for the Government to accept the resolution as put before the Council, or as the Honourable Mover suggested he would amend it. Besides the law reports there are other periodical publications, such as the Fort St. George Gazette, the District Gazette, the Quarterly Civil List, the Annual Administration Reports, College Calendars, Agricultural Calendar. A great number of these are mainly used for purposes of reference and go chiefly to officials, and I doubt whether they would be of much use in advertising co-operative societies. The number of these societies is now very large; it exceeds 3,000; and if we gave free access to the pages of Government publications to these societies, we might have hundreds of pages in each issue of the Gazette taken up with these advertisements. At the present time, societies other than agricultural credit societies are allowed to publish free their annual audit reports. That, as the Honourable Mover mentioned, gives them some form of advertisement. If more is done, another disadvantage would be that it would give a sort of Government guarantee to the societies. This is what I gather the Honourable Mover wants. I think that would be a mistake."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR :—" I did not ask for Government guarantee."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. Y. G. CAMPBELL :—" It might give that impression to other people. The principle governing private advertisements in the Fort St. George Gazette is that it should not compete with local newspapers. Advertisements are accepted if they are required by law or by rules having the force of law, to be published in the Gazette, or if they relate to matters of public importance, or if they are of a kind usually published in the London Gazette. Advertisements will be far more effective if they are published in the public newspapers and we ought not to compete with them by offering publication in the Gazettes."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. KRISHNA RAO :—" There ought to be no difficulty in this being published in the District Gazette, so far as societies in each district are concerned. There is some force in the suggestion made that if these advertisements are published in all publications there will be difficulty. The suggestion made by the Hon'ble Mr. Campbell that this may be published in newspapers is not good. I do not think that it would serve a useful purpose. It will be a costly business and it will not be very useful. But it would be more convenient if arrangements can be made for co-operative societies being advertised in each District Gazette. There should be no difficulty in accepting this suggestion. It might serve some purpose. A graphic description has been given about College Calendars and Agricultural Calendars to show that we cannot accept the position that it is to be published in all publications."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT :—" The chief question is whether these societies want to publish advertisements. The great majority of them do not need advertisements. The Honourable Member has mentioned banks. Banks are advertised in newspapers. This is a matter in which we have not consulted the Registrar and Government will be prepared to consult the Registrar and see if there is any advantage to be gained by giving advertisement in the law reports. I do not think Government will have any objection to that; but Government cannot accept the resolution. We will consult the Registrar and we will be guided by the views of the Co-operative Registrar if it will meet the views of the Honourable Member."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR :—" That meets my views. I shall not now ask for a decision. We must have the view of the Co-operative Registrar. I do not think the Hon'ble Mr. Campbell was right in saying that the fact that advertisements go to officials is a consideration against my proposal. I think officials have got as much money to put by as non-officials have and some official money will be quite as welcome in the co-operative bank as non-official money. As to the impression of Government giving the guarantee it must be very ignorant people that would draw such hasty conclusions. I do not think emphasis ought to be laid upon the possibility of such an impression. For instance, Government do not take the responsibility to vouch for the facts published in a private advertisement. For instance, in an advertisement by a father that he is not responsible for the debts of his son, Government are not taken to vouch for the truth of any facts. With regard to co-operative banks, the difficulty is that they cannot afford money to pay for advertisements in newspapers. Therefore it is not a question of competition with the newspapers. All these things might be considered by the Registrar, and this is a matter in which he ought to be consulted. So I shall not press my resolution."

With the permission of His Excellency the President, the resolution was withdrawn.

1116 RESOLUTION RE SUB-REGISTRARS AND THE CIVIL JUDICIAL TEST.

(Mr. Suryanarayana Rao ; Mr. Venkatapati Raju ;
Mr. Ranga Achariyar ; Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar.)

[5TH APRIL 1919.]

RESOLUTION RE SUB-REGISTRARS AND THE CIVIL JUDICIAL TEST.

The Hon'ble Mr. A. SURYANARAYANA RAO :—"Your Excellency, the resolution that I wish to propose runs thus :—

'XXIX. This Council recommends to His Excellency the Governor in Council that the sub-registrars whose promotions have been affected by the imposition of the condition requiring them to pass the Civil Judicial test, since removed, be restored to their proper rank and given the preference to which such rank entitles them.'

"I appeal to the Hon'ble Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar to accept this resolution as a matter of favour, because after all, it concerns only 19 persons in the whole Presidency and not more. At the time when the Registration tests were first introduced, the sub-registrars were recruited from graduates and under-graduates and were given promotion according to the tests that they passed, but it was said that district registrars should pass the Civil Judicial test. Gradually promotions from sub-registrar were made to the district registrar's post and at that time there was no restriction imposed with regard to their qualifications but afterwards it was laid down that only those who passed the Civil Judicial test could become district registrars. The consequence was that the Civil Judicial test was made a condition precedent, even with regard to the first and second-grade sub-registrars, though there was no such qualification necessary for them to become sub-registrars. Later on, the selection system was introduced by which those in the sub-registrar's grade who passed the Civil Judicial test were given promotion in preference to those who had not passed the Civil Judicial test and the consequence was that among sub-registrars, those that passed the Civil Judicial test got promotions over those who were already in the service, but who unfortunately had not passed the Civil Judicial test. The consequence is that though by seniority and by service they were entitled to promotion, they were not able to get the promotion because they did not make themselves eligible to become district registrars when the time should come ; and those persons were overlooked and those who passed the Civil Judicial test, were given promotion. In 1918, that restriction has been removed and even district registrars are told that they need not pass the test and all are eligible for promotion and can become district registrars. The humble appeal that I now make to the Hon'ble Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar is only with regard to the 19 persons who are about to retire within a short period. They are otherwise eligible but their claims have been overlooked. They have almost completed their services, they have only two or three years to complete their service and their complaint is that while they have put in a full term service which would otherwise enable them to become district registrars, their claims have been overlooked on account of not passing the Civil Judicial test, and now that that test has been removed, they need not be asked to pass that test and promotion may be given to them in the ordinary course, and they may be restored to that rank which they would have occupied if promotions had been made as if they were not required to pass this test. I do not know why their claims were overlooked in the promotions to the first and second grade sub-registrar, because it is only district registrars that should pass the test and not sub-registrars. They were overlooked, probably because they would not be finally eligible for the post of district registrars. I believe there are about seven in the first grade, twelve in the second grade of sub-registrars, and I find all are born before 1870. Therefore they will retire very soon. I appeal on their behalf so that they may have the satisfaction of becoming district registrars, or they might get a larger pension when they retire. It is a humble appeal only on behalf of 19 and I hope the Government would see their way to accept this resolution."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. VENKATAPATI RAJU :—"Your Excellency, I have great pleasure in seconding the resolution. I do not think the attitude of Government will depend upon the suppliant attitude or the defiant attitude in making the request. We claim here not as a matter of favour to a few individuals, but we stand on a higher principle. Rightly or wrongly, Government introduced the principle preventing them from enjoying the rightful promotions to which they were entitled, but subsequently they removed that restriction, and when they have removed this restriction these people are entitled to be promoted. But in the meanwhile, some others have occupied their position and so without disturbing any arrangements already made, these people may be given due promotion which they would have got but for the obstruction created which has been removed subsequently, and therefore not as a matter of favour, but as a matter of justice, it is a claim that the Government should take into consideration."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR :—"May I add one word in support on this resolution. Nowadays we are on the eve of an era of dispensing with examinations even for recruiting for the Civil Service. I do not see why the non-passing of an examination should stand in the way of these people getting their suitable promotions."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR :—"Your Excellency, I see there is some misapprehension in the minds at any rate of the Hon'ble Mr. Venkatapati Raju and the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar in regard to this question. I think the Hon'ble Mr. Suryanarayana Rao has given the history of the question rightly. It is briefly this : From the year 1907 to 1918 we had a rule restricting promotion to the first two grades of sub-registrars to those who had passed the Civil Judicial test and the Account test. That was the state of affairs for a period of eleven years. The Honourable Member asked us why while those two tests were necessary only for district registrars we made it a rule to enforce them for the two top grades of sub-registrars. We did so because, the sub-registrars at the top grades would become district registrars, because district registrars had to be chosen from the top sub-registrars. The Government in the year 1907 came to the conclusion that they could not find suitable men in the first two grades of sub-registrars who passed these two tests and were eligible for promotion and they said that they must make it a rule that those people who go to the two top grades of sub-registrars should have passed this test. In 1917 they relaxed the rule and said : for every alternate case, for every alternate vacancy, we will insist upon those persons passing the test, the idea being in that way to secure a sufficient number of men for promotion to higher ranks, such as were needed for appointment as district registrars. This question remained like that until 1918 when the Government considered the whole question and came to the conclusion that not only in this department, but in a number of other departments we had overdone examinations. We relaxed the examination restrictions then to a considerable extent. In the Registration department we first said that so far as sub-registrars were concerned, we were not anxious that they should pass any test in the two top grades, and later on we abolished that qualification for district registrars. By that time, a number of men had been appointed according to the old rules and they had taken up certain places. What the resolution proposes, which the Hon'ble Mr. Venkatapati Raju puts on the claim of justice, is because in 1918 you have come to the conclusion that these examination qualifications are not necessary you had better assume that you had come to that conclusion eleven years earlier and rearrange all these people and give them the places which they would have occupied if the rules were different. That is the proposal which the Hon'ble Mr. Venkatapati Raju has particularly singled out and put on the ground of reason. In other words, you want to rearrange the whole grade of the department retrospectively over a period of eleven years with reference to an order passed in the year 1918. It is against all principles governing gradation. We can never work it. When you do it, suppose afterwards we alter some rule, we will have to rearrange the whole thing. So that there is absolutely no finality. In regard to public service, you can never work things retrospectively in the form in which this resolution proposes. Many of these sub-registrars who did not pass the test and could not get to the top grade of sub-registrars sent up memorials. When we removed the restriction for first- and second-grade sub-registrars and later on they found that we removed the restriction for district registrars,—when we cancelled this restriction in 1918,—it did not mean that what we did eleven years ago in 1907 was all wrong and therefore we should go and rearrange the gradation of sub-registrars. A number of sub-registrars memorialized and we referred the memorials to the Inspector-General of Registration, who said very properly, it is a well-known principle that the rank of an officer is determined upon the date on which he is permanently promoted to that grade and the claims of the officer to promotion depend upon the claims of the officer on the day on which the appointment is made. It is quite out of the question for me now to commit the Government to rearrange the two grades of an important department and supersede the arrangements which took place during a period of eleven years. I cannot accept the resolution in that form. At the same time, I am quite prepared to believe that a certain number of old officers did not get to the top grades for reasons which constitute a hardship. I do not say that they have a right to complain. They were rightly passed over at the time. But I am anxious as far as possible that those who have slipped down the ladder owing to circumstances beyond their control, their individual cases should be examined, and I shall see if any consideration could be shown to individual cases. If there are any deserving men who could go up and who have been blocked on account of that rule, I am prepared to examine their cases ; but beyond that I am not prepared to go. If the Honourable Member gives me the list that he has got, I shall verify it in the office before I go further with the question."

The Hon'ble Mr. K. RAMA AYYANGAR :—"Your Excellency, I have only one inquiry to make. As a reference was made to the justice of the claim, may I know if at the time they were entertained, this rule existed?"

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR :—"Probably not. But with regard to all departments it is understood that the members of that department are subject to such rules as the Government may from time to time make in regard to their qualifications."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. SURYANARAYANA RAO :—"I have only one word to say. Since the Hon'ble Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar has asked me for the list, here is the list containing the names of nineteen persons."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR :—"We will have their cases examined."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. SURYANARAYANA RAO :—"When I plead for these poor sub-registrars, it does not matter whether I plead on the ground of clemency or on the ground of justice. The question is whether they were rightly superseded when this question of qualification was attached only to district registrars. There was no such restriction as regards sub-registrars and yet they were superseded. All the same they deserve some concession at the hands of the Government before they actually retire. I see that two or three of them were born in 1863 or 1864 and so they will retire within a very few months. All the same they must have some concession shown to them."

1118 RESOLUTIONS RE SUB-REGISTRARS AND THE CIVIL JUDICIAL TEST AND ESTABLISHMENT OF A COMMERCIAL MUSEUM IN MADRAS.

(Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar; the President;
Mr. Suryanarayana Rao; Mr. Yaqub Hasan.)

[5TH APRIL 1919.]

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"If they retire, there is nothing more to be done."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"I understand that the Honourable Member withdraws the resolution."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. SURYANARAYANA RAO:—"Yes, after the assurance given by the Hon'ble Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"This is a tremendous principle which if it is going to apply generally would produce chaos. We abolished the Précis-writing test last year. There are hundreds of tahsildars and others. If you put them back into the places where they should be if this test had been abolished long ago, it would create a considerable amount of confusion."

With the permission of His Excellency the President, the resolution was withdrawn.

RESOLUTION RE ESTABLISHMENT OF A COMMERCIAL MUSEUM IN MADRAS.

The Hon'ble YAQUB HASAN SAHIB Bahadur:—"Your Excellency, the resolution that I have the honour to move runs thus:—

'XXX. This Council recommends to His Excellency the Governor in Council that early steps be taken to establish a commercial museum in the City of Madras like the one in Calcutta.'

"If I had used the words 'industrial museum' perhaps it would have conveyed the meaning much better than the words 'commercial museum,' but I have adopted this nomenclature because the museum at Calcutta is called a commercial museum. I would describe what that museum is. It is a Government institution in charge of a Government official with a suitable staff to assist him. There manufactured articles, articles manufactured throughout India, are displayed. They are not confined to fine art articles, but useful manufactured articles. They are arranged in different almirahs, and manufactures of one sort are arranged together, so that you can compare the articles manufactured in one province with those manufactured in other provinces and in the same way those manufactured in one district of the province may be compared with those of other districts. At the same time you have the names of the manufacturers written by the side of the goods, and you can compare the articles of one manufacturer with those of another. These things are catalogued and they are printed annually and wholesale prices are also given in the catalogues. This is in practice a standing exhibition. I need not say much about the usefulness of exhibitions. The commercial museum is more useful than the exhibitions which are held periodically. There is more of tamasha in the exhibitions held periodically than of usefulness. Many people go to the exhibitions more to enjoy themselves as sight-seers for amusement than for any special benefit. There are many exhibits kept there and the impressions that one forms through a hurried visit are not of a permanent character, and one does not get as much benefit from a visit to such exhibitions as one would like. But a museum is a standing exhibition. The goods are there, the merchants visit it and they study the things at their leisure and they know where such articles are manufactured, who are the manufacturers and what are the terms on which these goods can be had. In western countries, what is known as finding a market for the articles is done on a very scientific basis. There are advertisements, there are special magazines and trade reviews and then there are travellers who are engaged to go round the world with samples, and samples are also sent by post. I remember some time before the war there was a scheme in America of chartering a steamer sending all the American manufactured goods throughout the world just to introduce them into foreign markets. So many devices are adopted by European manufacturers to find markets for their goods. Here in India we are in a primitive stage. Our manufacturers manufacture things firstly on a very small scale, and then the manufacturer has to advertise, he has to find a market for his goods and he has very few agencies through which his goods can be placed on the market. So in India it is very necessary that some agency should be created which will be a medium between the buyer and the producer and this museum serves a very useful purpose in that way. I have visited more than once the Calcutta museum, I have gone thoroughly through the exhibits there and I have personally derived much advantage by my visit. Some things that I wanted to know all about, I could not know through other means, but I got that information at that museum. I am sure if such a museum is started here, there will be a great impetus given to the industries of the country. Any merchant who wants to have certain articles who does not know where to go and from whom to get it, has to find it from the directories of industrial goods, but the directories themselves are not very complete. Then he has to know the addresses of a dozen people and he has to correspond and get samples from these people, and after all he may find that it is more troublesome to get the Indian goods than to get the foreign goods. So many travellers come over with their samples from foreign countries. They go to the merchant and show their wares to the merchants and press them and get them purchased; and ordinary people can easily purchase them from merchants. There are so many facilities for purchasing foreign goods which do not exist for the purchase of Indian goods. I need not elaborate the point because it is obvious that a museum like the one that I propose will be very useful here. Because there is one in Calcutta, Government need not hesitate to accept my suggestion. If there was no museum in India, and mine was the first suggestion, Government may take refuge under several considerations, but this is not one of those things.

"Three years ago the Hon'ble Mr. Narasimha Ayyar put a question in this very Council, and the answer was given by Sir Harold Stuart that Government were considering this question. This question is under the consideration of the Government. Such answers are given, but the thing is simply shelved. If it was seriously under the consideration of the Government, I am sure it would have come into existence by this time. I brought this forward at the last meeting and the Hon'ble Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar said that he would get information from Calcutta. If it was kept under the consideration of Government for the last three years, he would never give that answer and he would not have thought of getting the information at this late hour from Calcutta."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"Can the Honourable Member give me the reference to the Hon'ble Mr. Narasimha Ayyar's interpellation?"

The Hon'ble YAQUB HASAN SAHIB Bahadur:—"23rd November 1915. Sir Harold Stuart said the question of the establishment of a museum was under the consideration of the Government. That was the answer. Now that industrial matters are very much under discussion and the Government also are prepared to give much attention to industrial matters, and much attention will be given to industrial questions in the future, this would be a very good beginning if my resolution is accepted and a commercial museum is brought into existence. I would suggest that Georgetown would be the best place for it, because it is the centre of trade and commerce. If it is located there, merchants will visit it, but if it is placed somewhere else in an inconvenient corner, it would not serve a useful purpose. I may mention that the Victoria Technical Institute is also a sort of museum, but the difference between the museum that I suggest and the Victoria Technical Institute is this: It is fancy articles, articles of an artistic nature and they are also sold there. It is not that what I want; I want articles of every day use, manufactured articles to be exhibited in this museum that I suggest and not to be sold. I do not want it to be a selling agency. I do not want Government to undertake that business. The Superintendent should collect all the articles manufactured in India, catalogue them and arrange them and make an exhibition of them for the purpose of advertisement as suggested. Produce need not be kept there. It is an industrial museum that I want to be started."

The Hon'ble Sir GORDON FRASER:—"Your Excellency, I have pleasure in seconding the resolution proposed by the Hon'ble Mr. Yaqub Hasan. In my opinion the institution of these commercial museums would meet a long-felt want. They ought to be in the first place sources of considerable interest to the general public and also, what is more important and valuable, an aid to the commercial and industrial community. One handicap to their introduction is the fact that a museum in one particular place is more likely to benefit outside places as the idea would be to have exhibits sent from various parts of India and these would be more to the benefit of the seller from outside than to the benefit of the buyer in the particular city. It would be to the mutual benefit of the buyer and the seller, but it would be primarily to the benefit of the outsider, and in a second degree to the benefit of the buyer in the city. This handicap would in the long run right itself if the principal cities throughout India followed the lead of Calcutta and had their commercial and industrial museums. One usefulness would be that specimen exhibits of the various classes of produce of the country might be shown and also comparisons drawn for people to see. Produce is unfortunately too often shipped from this country heavily adulterated and specimen samples might be shown of produce as it ought to be shipped. Special attention might be paid to exhibits of timber and minerals for economic purposes. I am quite aware that the Government museum in Madras has a very fine exhibition of both timber and minerals, but I think that exhibition is classified more from a scientific and academic point of view than from the purely commercial or economic point of view. When we had the recent exhibitions in Madras initiated by and held under the patronage of Lord Pentland, I think the exhibits there opened the eyes of very many people to the resources, commercial and industrial, of this country. I remember Sir Bernard Hunter in proposing a vote of thanks to Lord Pentland mentioned that he personally had been extremely surprised at the large variety and the excellence of a great many exhibits shown at the exhibition. I know I personally shared that surprise as well. What we want is not periodical exhibitions such as those, but something of a more permanent nature. Of course on a very much restricted scale, something of a permanent nature that commercial men and those interested in industries can refer to and study as explained to the Council by the Hon'ble Mr. Yaqub Hasan. The resolution reads:

'This Council recommends to His Excellency the Governor in Council that early steps be taken to establish a commercial museum in the City of Madras like the one in Calcutta.'

"I quite recognize that it is a very large question and it cannot very well be settled in a debate such as the present. But I think my Honourable Friend would be quite satisfied if Government promise to give early and favourable consideration to the matter. I think we are all agreed that a museum such as the one proposed is very desirable. I do not think that the cost would be very heavy. I think the benefits resulting would fully justify the Government in incurring whatever cost may be necessary. I have therefore great pleasure in seconding this resolution."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"Your Excellency, the Council may remember that this was on the agenda for the last meeting, and it could not be moved, as I then told the Hon'ble Mr. Yaqub Hasan that we were writing to Calcutta for full information in regard to the constitution and work of the museum there. I regret that we have not yet received that information, but I have allowed the matter to be discussed now instead of asking it to be postponed for the reason that this discussion will be of use to us when the information comes, in determining what we shall do in Madras regarding it, and I promise to consider the matter most carefully and give full and due weight to what has been said in the debate now. I should very much like to wait for the information which we have asked for.

"In regard to the other point mentioned by the Hon'ble Mr. Yaqub Hasan it is true that there was an interpellation about it. I find that in September the President of the Southern India Chamber of Commerce, of which the Honourable Member is a member, was told that the Government had the question of the establishment of an industrial and commercial museum under consideration but at that time were unable to take any step in that direction. That was in September 1915. I am merely mentioning it to show that the question was not shelved. This was apparently one of those things which had to be put off on account of the war like several other things. Now all that is over and we shall take the question on hand as soon as the information asked for comes from Calcutta and I shall give the question my most careful consideration. I hope that will be considered satisfactory and this will not be pressed to a division just now."

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur T. RANGA ACHARIYAR:—"As one closely associated with the management of the Victoria Technical Institute for many years, I may mention that that institute serving as a museum for artistic production has done a great deal of good to the Presidency in reviving arts in several districts in the Presidency. People who knew to make these things were dying, and we were able to revive many families who would have gone out of memory. I may mention as regards the Calcutta museum, they applied to us for exhibits from our institute and we have sent them exhibits and they were exhibited there in the Calcutta museum. That was some time last year. We sent them large consignments for being exhibited so that it will be an immense good both on the industrial side and on the commercial side and I think Government should put more speed in this matter and not leave it like this. I beg Government to put on speed in such matters."

The Hon'ble Yaqub Hasan Sahib Bahadur:—"Your Excellency, after the reception my resolution has met at the hands of the Honourable Member for Government, I do not wish to press it. I only appeal to him that this question will be constantly kept before him and if information does not come from Calcutta, he will send a reminder and see that something is done towards this matter at an early date. I have advisedly put the words 'at an early date' because Government have often complained that we want things to be done in a specified time and that they are not able to do so. I have left everything to Government and I hope 'at an early date' will not be interpreted to mean an unduly long period. If this is constantly kept before the Hon'ble Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar and is established at least before his time is over, he will have earned the thanks of the commercial and industrial communities. I hope he would not wait for another resolution to be brought here. I withdraw my resolution."

With the permission of His Excellency the President, the resolution was withdrawn.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"That is the last resolution on paper and now remains the discussion of the budget under rule 31. I think it will be to the convenience of the Council to adjourn now and take up the discussion of the budget on Monday morning at 11 a.m. The usual time limit to speeches will be applied. As has been always the custom, it is open to any Honourable Member who wishes to shorten the proceedings to send in speeches to the Secretary to Government."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR:—"As regards the time allotted for a speech, we talked it over at lunch. We discovered that some non-official gentlemen will not be present on Monday and so we desire that 20 minutes may be fixed as the outside limit. It is not everybody that will take 20 minutes, it is only a handful, but that may be regarded as the outside limit."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"I shall have to consider that on Monday when I see how many Honourable Members come."

The Council then adjourned till 11 a.m. on Monday, the 7th April 1919.

[7TH APRIL 1919.]

The Council re-assembled at 11 a.m. when the discussion on the Budget was taken up

THE BUDGET FOR 1919-1920.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT :—"The business before the Council to-day is the discussion of the budget with reference to rules 30 and 31 of the Financial rules. It is now open to any Honourable Member who has any observations to make to address the Council."

The Hon'ble the RAJA OF PITHAPURAM :—"Your Excellency, most sincerely do I congratulate your Excellency on the manner in which the Budget for the year 1919-1920 is prepared."

"I am glad to find that the provisions made under the heads of Education, Medical Sanitation, Agriculture, Scientific and Miscellaneous Departments are larger than in the previous year. This is a step in the right direction and I hope the Government will increase the allotments in due course."

"One of the most important items is medical relief. While thanking your Excellency's Government for the liberal provision made under this head, I may be allowed to point out that, at present, hospitals meant for women, with lady doctors in charge, are unfortunately very few, and to request the Government to see that as many more hospitals as possible are established. It is hardly necessary for me to say that these hospitals are needed more in this country than in several other countries. I am sure your Excellency's Government and your Excellency in particular will agree with me when I say that there must be one hospital at least in every village."

"I thank the Government for the provision they have made in the budget for the new General Hospital in Cocanada and I hope it will be an accomplished fact ere long."

"It is with great pleasure that I find that progress is being made in the very important work of the investigation of indigenous drugs, and I trust the Government will soon make arrangements for this work being done on a larger scale. The welcome result will be that medicines will be more easily procurable and much more within the reach of the poor than they can at present be."

"Now I come to Education. I am glad that there is a much larger provision than in the last year. It is highly satisfactory that the Government have been paying special attention to primary education. I hope that your Excellency's Government will find it possible to make primary education free before long."

"While acknowledging with thanks the support given by your Excellency's Government to female education, I request that a larger number of schools for girls should be established in the Presidency. In this connexion I may represent to the Government that Cocanada is greatly in need of a high school for girls. At present a number of grown up girls, though willing to receive higher education, hesitate to join the mixed classes in schools and colleges. Of course there are a number of girls reading in the college there at Cocanada, but I am sure many more will be coming forward to receive education if a high school is opened entirely for girls. The existing Government school may be developed into a high school, and as far as possible the teaching staff must consist of ladies. I earnestly request your Excellency's Government to give my proposal an early and sympathetic consideration."

"We are grateful to the Government for having introduced the wholesome system of the periodical medical inspection of students of schools."

"Allow me to thank your Excellency for the sympathetic reply given when my Honourable Friend Mr. A. S. Krishna Rao moved the resolution about the constitution and the functions of the text-book committees. It is but right that a person whose mother tongue is Telugu should be the Chairman of the Telugu Text-Book Committee. Almost all the other members of the committee must be those whose mother tongue is Telugu. If necessary, one European member may be allowed to be there so that the committee may have the benefit of the advice of one experienced in western methods."

"Coming to Industries, I am grateful to the Government for what they have been doing in this direction, and I am sure that much more work will be done in the near future. Thereby you will not only be making things cheaper and placing them within the easy reach of the poor, but you will also be finding work for a large number of labourers. When industrial development proceeds, the Government will have to consider the question of child labour with a view to safeguarding their interests."

"I thank the Government for the provision for a school to be opened in Cocanada and I hope that it will be opened soon."

"I am glad to note that the number of liquor shops is being gradually decreased and I hope that they will be further reduced in course of time."

"In connexion with the Madras Municipal Bill, I request the Government to reconsider the question of maximum house-tax and that of allowing women to serve as members of the corporation where I am sure they will be of great help. When there are ladies willing to serve and the Government is satisfied that they will be useful, the Government may nominate them. As the Government have kindly extended to women the right of voting, they may go a step further taking all the necessary precautions."

"The most pressing need now is to relieve the present distress due to high prices caused by the war and failure of crops. As for the methods it is for the Government to decide. We are most grateful to your Excellency's Government and Your Excellency in particular for the great trouble they have been taking in this connexion. Whenever necessary the orders of the Government of India might be obtained. I request your Excellency's Government to do all that is possible to do to relieve the distress irrespective of cost. If necessary, expenditure in other directions may be postponed."

(The Raja of Pithapuram.)

"Allow me, your Excellency, to say a few words as regards two things which are most dear to my heart, namely, orphanages for the helpless children and asylums for the poor, who find it impossible to earn their livelihood through old age, disease or deformity. I consider it the paramount duty of the Government as the guardians of the weak and helpless to protect them, as they deserve your Excellency's sympathy more than others. Even as a father who is more concerned about his disabled child, the first concern for the Government should be how to help these helpless persons. Orphanages and poor asylums may be established at convenient centres and only such as are absolutely helpless should be admitted into them. I know it would cost a good deal to found and maintain these institutions, but their nature is such that your Excellency's Government cannot very well say that the cost is prohibitive. If at all necessary, some other items of expenditure may even be cut down. Somehow or other funds must be found. As for the manner in which it is to be done the Government is the best Judge. The Government may also use their wholesome influence and may invite the co-operation of the public. I feel certain that response will not be meagre. It is the duty of every one of those whom God in His Mercy has placed in affluent circumstances to come to the help of their poor suffering brethren who also are dear to the All Merciful Father. I hope every wealthy person will recognize his duty. But of course, there may be some who live wholly for themselves caring little for the suffering poor; such cases will, I venture to say, be few. Now, Sir, the state of circumstances has been brought to the notice of Government and they may be pleased to deal with this problem as best they could."

"I next come to the question of the depressed classes. The position of the depressed classes is indeed most pitiable. The Government must come to their help by granting to them on favourable terms house-sites in healthy localities. Greater facilities than they have at present for their education must be afforded them, by providing hostels and allowing them to join all schools and colleges maintained or helped by the Government. They have as much right as anybody else to receive education in these institutions. The way in which these poor people are treated by certain sections of the Hindus is most disgraceful. Let us take for instance the case of the Panchama. In spite of the fact that he is also a human being and the child of God as much as any one else, he is treated worse than a beast. His mere touch is pollution and he cannot enter our houses."

"One curious fact is that he suffers like this, as long as he does not leave the fold of the Hindu religion. The moment he renounces this religion which is or ought to be dear and sacred to us all and becomes a Christian or a Muhammadan, we shake hands with him and receive him in our drawing rooms. By so doing we are indirectly treating with contempt our own religion. As long as it continues it will be a standing disgrace to the country and we cannot consistently claim any important political concessions. This sort of treatment must soon come to an end. In this connexion I cannot help observing that but for the sympathy shown by the noble British Government, the lot of these unfortunate people would have been much worse than it is at present. And I offer my most grateful thanks to the Government and the members of the Indian Civil Service, in particular serving in the districts, for their sympathy for these suffering classes of people. It will not be out of place for me to suggest here that preference might be shown to applicants from these depressed classes for pieces of land for cultivation, so that it might be of pecuniary help to them and even raise their status."

"Now, your Excellency, I shall deal with a few points of great interest to the zamindari community which I have the honour to represent. It is a well-known fact that the Madras Estates Land Act needs to be amended. It is admitted by some of the highest authorities that some provisions in the Act are not clear and this leads to any amount of litigation. I understand that the courts of law are finding it difficult to interpret several sections of the Act in a consistent manner. In fairness to the zamindars and their tenants, this difficulty must be removed at as early a date as possible. In the practical working of the Act many difficulties have arisen and I am sure the Government are not unaware of them. There are several cases where the zamindars are unnecessarily put to a lot of expense without a corresponding benefit to the tenant. As the Act stands at present, great injustice is being done to the zamindars in various ways. I may be permitted to say that, in some respects, the very object of that piece of legislation has been frustrated. I am sure that the Government are now alive to most of the difficulties and therefore have been kindly considering the question of amending the Act. I most earnestly request the Government to remedy these evils at a very early date."

"Another grievance of ours is in connexion with the control of village officers. We have been finding it very difficult to make them do their legitimate duties in a satisfactory manner. Several of them pay very little attention to the zamindari work saying that they have been attending to Government work, with the result that the interests of the estates suffer. This is in spite of the fact that they are bound to serve the zamindar also as the latter have been contributing to their salaries. There are several instances where we had to go to the District Collectors for redress. We are finding it difficult to deal with the subordinate officers and mostly District Collectors. If this is the situation now, I am afraid redress is to be got at the hands of District Collectors. It is therefore highly desirable that much larger powers should be given to District Collector. It is therefore highly desirable that much larger powers should be given to the zamindars and the only appellate authority should be the District Collector. I am sure that this will facilitate matters, safeguarding at the same time the interests of all concerned."

(The Raja of Pithapuram; Mr. Venkatapati Raju.)

[7TH APRIL 1919.]

"On behalf of my community I sincerely thank your Excellency for having declared the zamindaris of Vyyur and Doddapanayakanur as impartible estates and I sincerely hope that further applications that may be made for a similar declaration by my brother zamindars will receive the same considerate treatment at the hands of your Excellency's Government.

"In the interests of the country and the Government I consider it highly desirable that as many estates as possible should be kept in tact. The support tendered by the zamindars to the Government in various ways at the time of the war and the large number of charitable institutions that owe their existence to my community are enough to support my statement.

"I also thank your Excellency for the Rajkumar College into which also boys other than the wards of court will be admitted at a lower rate of expenditure than at Newington. I am sure that this institution where the boys are to receive excellent training which will stand them in good stead in their lives afterwards, will greatly benefit the zamindars and the country through them.

"My most earnest request is that your Excellency's Government will not ignore this loyal community and will do all that lies in their power to safeguard and promote its interests."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. VENKATAPATI RAJU:—"Your Excellency, I rise with diffidence to offer my observations on the financial side of the administration when the finance member who prepared the budget holds the reins of the Government, but I am confident the discussion will be profitable as your Excellency being a financial expert will dispel our doubts and set right any real defects noticed.

"As the State in India holds several fields of activity, which deeply concern the welfare of the subjects, great interest will be evinced by the people to secure financial reforms both in the manner of obtaining wealth and the mode of disposition. It cannot be denied that there are several financial problems whose propriety and correct principles underlying it are in doubt, in the matter of imposing and shifting the burden of taxation, the incidence of taxation and the real effect on the economic condition of the people; we must scrutinize the budget proposals as the State unlike private individuals should regulate its income by the wants of the State but not limit the wants by the income.

"Sister provinces often speak of our province as benighted and whether that appellation is justified or no, I leave it to the Council to decide, but in financial matters I am afraid Madras cannot boast of its lead. As it is not permissible to us to enter upon criticism of Imperial finance or heads not open to discussion I shall confine myself in pointing out that Madras has been suffering most by contributing an unequal proportion to the cost of the central Government and we are told that the Madras Government through her official representatives, fighting hard in our interests to lighten our burden of contribution and our own representatives made the facts bare of the real injustice which our province is labouring under and in the reform proposals of the Secretary of State and the Viceroy they admitted the existing inequality and hence we should incessantly urge on the attentions of the Central Government to place our Presidency on an equal footing with the other provinces especially as our province is more heavily taxed than any other and our people are comparatively poor, commerce and industry are in a backward condition and efficient banking system to meet the wants of the people is absent. We have every right to claim just and liberal treatment at the hands of higher authorities, as we want fair field and no favour.

"The budget amount of land revenue here is 717 lakhs against 689 of last year, 703 of the previous year. There has been an increase of land revenue item, year after year. In 1902 it is 5 crores and odd now it is over 7 crores. The extension of cultivation or increased irrigation facilities did not keep pace with the increase of revenue. Incidence of land taxation is higher in our Presidency than in any other province, or other civilized countries. In other countries the land taxes have lost the character of rent payments and acquired the feature of pure taxes. Lord Salisbury as Secretary of State for India well said long ago that the Indian Civil Service should understand that land assessment in India is not rent but a tax though signs are not wanting on the part of Government to go back upon that well-recognized principle. The shibboleth of middle ages that the monarch had the proprietary right in the soil is out of date now. Otherwise the State can obtain competitive rent and I am sure there would be an increase of land revenue by 50 per cent. Fortunately once our Government acknowledged the proprietorship of the pattadar in the land and I hope no belittling of that would be attempted by any Provincial Government. Periodical settlements and consequent increase of revenue on old holdings requires modification so as to consider the desirability, justice and equity of taxing land more than the other properties or incomes to meet the common burden. Even applying the principle either of benefit theory, taxation in proportion to the benefit received, or of faculty theory, taxation in proportion to the ability of the taxpayer, or combination of both, the present high rates cannot be justified on the sole ground that it yields considerable revenue and have been long in use. It is not even expedient in the case of persons of small holdings. Though our budget estimate book leaves it blank about the estimated cost of collecting the land revenue and though strong objection has been taken by the finance minister last year for my complaint of high percentage. I am emboldened to repeat it on the strength of the Government of India budget statement that in the whole of India it is 17.642 per cent whereas I find in Madras the charges are more than 20 per cent while the charges in other provinces are far less, ranging from 12 per cent in Burma, 15 per cent in the United Provinces, 16 per cent in Bombay and 19 per cent in the Punjab and Bengal. May we not reasonably ask for the economies to be effected in this direction. I notice that in the matter of divided heads of expenditure, owing to the check of the India Government the increase of cost is less than those heads of expenditure where the Provincial

(Mr. Venkatapati Raju.)

Government has free head. We naturally complain of lavish expenditure on non-productive objects. The Government of India in their memoranda of 50 years of British rule stated that the periodical settlements of land revenue used to occupy from 4 to 10 years in each district and to cost Rs. 400 per square mile, while they involved considerable harassment to the people but now by reason of care, etc., the resettlement of a district occupies 1 to 3 years and costs Rs. 100 per square mile.

"According to the Government of India, resettlement costs only $\frac{1}{4}$ of the cost of original settlement but in Madras it is sometimes more than the original. It requires scrutiny and clear explanation as the United Provinces spends 5 lakhs and odd for survey and settlement while we spend over 13 lakhs whereas land revenue of both is over 6 crores and the United Provinces realizing more than ours.

"In the matter of stamp revenue with which we have nothing to do, I may be permitted to point out to this Government that under the head of fines and penalties 80,000 are budgeted in Madras whereas according to the Indian budget of 1918-19 which is available and not of 1919-20, Rs. 30,000 only are raised in Bombay, Rs. 40,000 in Bengal, Rs. 22,000 in the United Provinces, Rs. 42,000 in the Punjab, Rs. 11,500 in Burma, Rs. 12,000 in Bihar and Rs. 16,000 in the Central Provinces (1918-19 civil budget) though the complaint holds good even on the present date, I shall be glad to know why we are realizing more than double or treble of the other Presidencies. These are fines and penalties imposed by judicial officers and revenue officers. I do not know whether any different principle is adopted in this Presidency. It requires to be looked into.

"Excise.—It is a melancholy tale unheeded and unrequited in spite of stong professions of sympathy. Let us face the figures. Excise revenue of Madras is 4,58,17,000 against 3 $\frac{1}{2}$ crores of Bombay, 160 lakhs of Bengal, 151 of the United Provinces, 91 of the Punjab, 94 of Burma, 121 of Bihar, 119 of the Central Provinces, and 57 of Assam.

"No other province approaches us in the efficiency of excise administration. The Government rely on the repressive tendency of the high tax on liquors on the consumption, so that the decrease in consumption will be the direct gain to the people in moral and social well being without minding the loss of revenue for such a laudable purpose. But the Government is fully aware that consumption of intoxicants is not liable to material reduction by the present method. Moreover there is lurking I am afraid that the consumption of toddy has been increased. Morever there is lurking suspicion in the official mind that the increase of excise revenue is pari passu with the prosperity or increasing wealth of the drinking public. It is a mistake to suppose that it has any bearing. To drown the sorrow and ward off hunger pangs and to remove utter exhaustion due to heavy work and more often due to the evil habit of drink and facilities and opportunities offered by the benign Government by providing them with drink though at a high cost, and by saving them from the danger of deprivation of this luxury by non-drinking educated Indian idealists, the drink is indulged in by a large number of people.

"Drink is the cause of ruin of several thousands of families. I need not dilate on the drink evil and its terrible consequences. The country will never prosper unless drink is totally prohibited. It is difficult to expect the Government to forgo 16 crores of revenue, of which more than one-fourth is contributed by Madras. We cannot convince the Britishers of the utter futility of hoping for the decrease of consumption by any other method than by complete closure of liquor shops, following Jesus Christ's admonition that one should take heed of drunkenness. We must remember that 'the sight of means to do ill deeds makes ill deeds done.' More than half the earnings of the workmen go to the public house or liquor shop and it is high time that Indians should be warned off the track of sacrificing their health and wealth by inebriation in that India should be warned that more than two crores are raised in our Presidency the 'club and pub.' It is better to notice that more than two crores are raised in our Presidency on account of toddy revenue. The increase from 1917-18 to the budget figure of 1919-20 is about 28 $\frac{1}{2}$ lakhs. In the matter of country spirits there is an increase of 20 lakhs by budgeting the figure at 186 lakhs. These are the two items of about four crores which cost the consumers nearly ten crores and really effect the poorer section of the population. That our Presidency is poor is apparent from the income-tax returns but I am constrained to mention that our Government realizes over Rs. 30,000 on account of penalties while the Bombay Government which gets more than nearly four times of our revenue from income-tax, realizes only 16,000 and so also Bengal which gets three crores but recovers penalties to the extent of only 15,000. Similarly all other provinces realize smaller amount.

"In the matter of forests.—Though our revenue is far less than that of Bombay, the United Provinces and Burma, we raise under the head of fines and forfeitures about two lakhs, whereas Bombay gets 12,000, the United Provinces 16,450, Burma 5,000 only, as we notice in the budget of 1918-19.

"In the matter of magisterial fines, Madras takes the lead with 7 lakhs whereas Bombay is satisfied with 5 lakhs, the United Provinces and the Punjab 4 lakhs, Burma 1 $\frac{1}{2}$ lakhs though Bengal is trying to follow our unenviable lead.

"I may state generally that the Madras Government mulcts people of much larger amounts under the head of fines, forfeiture and penalties generally than any other province, quite disproportionate to the revenues raised by the respective departments. It may be claimed as an efficient work of the departments while the people regard this procedure as being rigid and unympathetic. It is curious that the United Provinces spend 20,000 to collect 54 lakhs of income-tax while we collect 85 lakhs by spending over 68,000 rupees.

"In the matter of forests we spend on establishment nearly 18 lakhs to get the revenue of 48 $\frac{1}{2}$ lakhs, while the United Provinces spend 9 and one-third lakhs to get 61 lakhs. I do not go further into the costliness of our Provincial administration by the comparative method but hope that the Government will take early steps to appoint a committee of experts unconnected with the departments concerned aided by men of the world, to suggest economic management all round, as the experts acting alone (as Lowell states) tend to take disproportionate views, to get more or less out of touch with the common sense of the rest of the world. Retrenchment and economy in expenditure are quite necessary for a poor province like Madras but in the matter of economizing the service heads though the Government might not have done wrong by design but never did right by mistake. Some bold step should be taken to overhaul the whole machinery and organism. We have to judge of its usefulness by the fruits of its labour; the plenty or penury in which people live and contentment and happiness the masses enjoy. Regarding interest charges the Local Government should have insisted on getting interest on their unpaid balances or at any rate the Provincial Governments should have been saved of paying interest when the amount advanced to them as loan is less than the Provincial balances in the hands of the Government of India. By the way we may suggest when Canada puts in her claim against Germany for war indemnity why not India do the same as it affords great relief to India through the British Government?

(Mr. Venkatapati Raju; the President.) [7TH APRIL 1919.]

"On education we can congratulate the Government on their spending large amounts. All economists agree that no expenditure is more re-productive than that which the State makes for the development of its future citizens."

"United Kingdom, excepting on technical education, spends proportionately less than the other European countries on education. Mr. Fisher is making head way in that direction. It is non-controversial that the education in the elementary mechanical arts is as important as primary education. Private initiative cannot solely be depended upon for pushing on the secondary education, and if it is to be done efficiently the State should undertake it. I may go further and state that the University education is more re-productive than even the elementary education as superior education is a source of wealth to a nation. Professor Plehn states 'it is quite as important if not more important to have highly trained leaders of public action and thought as it is to have a low degree of intelligence widely disseminated.' The University as a centre for research alone is worth many times what it costs. In proportion to the benefits which it confers on the State it is, where run at the general cost, the least expensive part of the whole system. He significantly adds that fees for public education are gradually falling into disuse. American universities have set the example of free tuition."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"I hope the Honourable Gentleman has reached nearly the end of his remarks."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. VENKATAPATI RAJU:—"I shall finish in a few minutes. Even in other countries larger part of the cost is met from general taxes and but a small part from fees and he hopes the remaining fees will fall away. But Madras is most unfortunate in the levy of fees from students. We spent about 107 lakhs from public funds, while getting over 54 lakhs from fees and 44 lakhs from other sources, whereas Bombay gets 29 lakhs, the United Provinces 28 lakhs, the Punjab 25 lakhs, Burma 20 lakhs, Behar 22 lakhs, from fees though Bengal is as bad as and even worse than Madras."

"I hope better counsel would prevail and fees would be reduced ere long; though we may not attain the perfection in the near future that education is made free as of old in Bharata Varsha and in which direction other civilized Governments are now winding their steps."

"The matter of police expenditure is a bugbear for all politicians and it is advancing by leaps and bounds, altogether out of proportion either to the needs or the increase of revenue. India should claim the right to frugality now denied her, for we are spending in India about nine crores on police while spending over six crores only on education. The subject has been discussed threadbare and we wait for a better opportunity to curtail the colossal expenditure on police which passes all reasonable bounds. It is a legitimate grievance that there is over taxation coupled with lavish expenditure which denuded India of its savings which should have greatly helped its industrial expansion."

"The Government has declared that the change in the water-rate proposed in G.O. No. 345, dated 18th July 1918 is not a fiscal one but intended to simplify the system and it is intended to be adopted to provide a great relief to the ryot. But we believe that there would be an increase of revenue of ten lakhs or more, adding additional burden on the people. The Government replied to the question No. 32 of August 1918 about the probable increase of revenue, that they had no information and the question was repeated by No. 99 of November 1918. They referred to the previous answer without frankly stating that they had no information and does not care to know. It is inconceivable that the Government should not have taken steps to ascertain the probable amount and I hope the Government would not impose this additional burden as it works great hardship on the people under the guise of simplification of the system. At page 236 of the Budget Notes under the head water-rate on whole inam and zamindari villages the revenue of Rs. 9,13,000 of 1917-18 increased to Rs. 21,93,000 as budget estimate of 1918-19 and reduced to Rs. 9,05,000 in revised estimate and for the current year budget for Rs. 9,14,000 only. If this has any reference to the aforesaid water-rate not to the change in this head only. If non-insertion of additional revenue in the budget proposals indicates abandonment of this proposal, people feel immensely grateful to your Excellency."

"In the matter of sanitation, rural and urban, and agriculture improvement, co-operation and industrial expansion, larger sums should have been spent during the last three years and better provision should have been made for the current year."

7TH APRIL 1919.] (Mr. Venkatapati Raju; Mr. Ramaswami Ayyar.)

"As the subjects were dealt with recently I do not say anything now except stating that the attitude of this Government has not given much satisfaction and requires change of the angle of vision to confer material benefit on our Presidency."

"The arrangements made by the Government to meet the distressed situation caused by the war, heavy export of food-stuffs, seasonal failure of rains, is most inadequate and even now we have not got the actual census of food-stuffs available in our Presidency so as to induce the Central Government to do something to relieve the situation. The recent food conference with the official majority refused the grouping of the Vizagapatam District with Godavari, Kistna and Guntur and rejected the proposal of removal of inter-district restrictions. No famine-relief measure is undertaken when scarcity rates are prevalent everywhere and no adequate provision even is made in the budget."

"Lastly I would urge that unless the public is taken into confidence and constitutionalism is adopted in the matter of taxation and expenditure the resulting changes in the financial system would be disastrous."

The Hon'ble Mr. C. P. RAMASWAMI AYYAR:—"Your Excellency, perhaps this is the last meeting of the Legislative Council that at all events many of us hope to see before the introduction of the new system gives rise to a new way of the discussion of the budget. I would begin by congratulating the Government on the acceptance of a matter which may appear to be a slight affair but on which is based according to my reading, the well-being of the country, namely the acceptance by the Government of the resolution on administrative panchayats. I hold very strongly the view that unless the political education of the people is built up from below as well as worked down from above simultaneously progress is not feasible. I therefore welcome the intention of the Government to inaugurate legislation on that basis and I hope the legislation will be on right lines which will give an adequate sense of responsibility and which will evoke that response which, I have no doubt, will come when responsibility is conferred."

"Another matter on which I desire to say something prefatory to the particular remarks on the various heads of the budget, to a few of which I shall confine my remarks, is with reference to the general scarcity of crops prevalent in the province. Famine has not been declared, but it has been pointed out clearly that at present the smallest yield for ten years has been outturned and there has been a decrease both in the yield and in the cultivation. I recognise that a remission of Rs. 26 lakhs has been made, but it seems to me that it is up to the Government to recognise—whether the official declaration of famine is made or not—that the times are such that the most energetic steps should be taken for meeting the scarcity and the difficulties due to a combination of high prices and other causes into which I shall not enter, which are at present exerting evil and adverse influences upon the well-being of the country. I hope the Government will not be deterred by mere formal considerations from entering upon a bold policy with reference to the situation."

"I turn now to the question of University and educational affairs. I notice with gratification that the budget estimate of Rs. 2.05 lakhs given in respect of university education includes Rs. 20,000 towards the Tamil lexicon. The question has often been put in this Council and outside it expressing impatience with the slowness of the work on the Tamil lexicon, but I may assure those here and outside that somewhat perfunctory as the labours of the committee were at one time and somewhat hampered as they were by various considerations the work is now well on and well nigh ending, and when it is completed it will prove very valuable as a means of popular education and of establishing the study of the vernaculars on the right scientific lines."

"There is another matter of interest touching the University on which I desire to say something, and that is the provision made of Rs. 1 lakh for a further instalment for the University library buildings. That Rs. 1 lakh completes the promised grant of Rs. 3 lakhs. I am aware of it, but I think the estimate was made in the year 1916 and we are aware how the estimates made even last year have to be revised and radically altered having regard to the altered conditions of to-day in the prices of materials. It seems to me that the estimate in respect of the University library buildings will be found to be inadequate and I am only entering a plea here for a generous treatment in that particular case. With reference to the site of the University buildings, I do not know if I am disclosing any particular secret when I say that the original site of the University library buildings has been found insufficient and unsatisfactory. It is too near the Coom and it is feared that a subsidence of the soil would take place and would largely interfere with the proper building of these buildings. I trust that the Government will bear this in mind and while it is largely a matter for the University to decide yet I am only speaking here on behalf of the University and asking the Government to be liberal in their contribution and not to be particularly strict regarding the allocation of one lakh."

"With reference to the general educational policy, I notice and congratulate the Government upon it, that a large step forward has been taken, and 128 lakhs is budgeted as against 102 lakhs last year. There is no use concealing the fact that many of us feel that the step which has been taken in Bombay ought to have been taken in Madras, that of making it possible for primary education to be extended compulsorily in selected areas at all events. I trust that in the coming year that matter will engage the earnest and strenuous attention of the Government and receive the sympathetic consideration on all hands that it deserves. It is not a controversial subject and it is not my intention to waste the time of the Council by stating a thing which has been restated and accepted times without number."

(Mr. Narasimha Ayyar.)

[3RD APRIL 1919.]

therefore that it is very necessary that the acoustic properties of the hall should be made better and better facilities should be given to the public. I am not an expert in acoustics or in any other branch of physics, nor am I an architect. This committee might include or consult persons who may devise measures by which the acoustic properties may be improved, and further provision for seats for the public might be made. I may suggest that the seats intended for the public may be a little bit nearer; it would improve the acoustic properties. That is only one suggestion. Numerous suggestions may be offered; that is why I have suggested a committee. The suggestion may be made that this hall has been built at a cost of several lakhs of public money, why do you want this alteration which would involve further expenditure, especially when you are likely to have an enlarged assembly? It is possible that some clever acoustic expert may devise means which would remedy the defect with an expenditure of Rs. 100 or Rs. 200. I do not know what remedies may be suggested. The question of cost will certainly have to be taken into consideration; but that, however, will be one of the items to be considered. I do expect that when there is an enlarged Council with 120 members, a new hall will be put up and a promise will be held forth. The question is whether we may not try and see whether the existing state of things cannot be improved, and whether some remedy may not be suggested by experts.

"The next clause is 'greater provision of space and facilities for enabling more vernacular dailies to send their representatives to attend and report the Council's proceedings.' This has got particular reference to the fact which I shall mention to the Council that one of the leading Tamil dailies of Madras applied to the authorities for permission to send a representative to report the Council's proceedings and the answer given was that there was no space for more reporters. I think this is a very unfortunate answer, because it has produced diverse results. Nobody intends to deny the existing reporters the facilities now enjoyed, and the desire of every one is to increase the facility for all papers. At present there is only one vernacular daily which has got its representative here. That is a very unfortunate state of things. It is in the vernacular papers that the proceedings must come earlier. These vernacular papers get the service of Reuter's telegrams and they deserve favourable consideration. I wish only to point out that the grievance is that a larger number of papers which are catering to the public taste and providing them with news of what goes on in the Council should have more facilities given to their representatives to get early, direct and immediate reports of what goes on here when the interest in them is fresh. That is the particular fact on which clause (b) is based; that is, 'greater provision of space and facilities for enabling more vernacular dailies to send their representatives to attend and report the Council's proceedings.' I think without any extraordinary cleverness, it might be possible for the committee and those whom they or the Government may consult to provide more space for more representatives by re-arranging the space now given to the reporters.

"Then I proceed to clause (c), 'facilitating the meeting of non-official members and working in connexion with public business on days when the Council is not sitting.' In this connexion, I may draw the attention of Honourable Members to certain facts. When we had to meet at Ootacamund there is a practice, which has been observed for a pretty long time, of non-official Members meeting prior to the meetings of the Council so that they might arrive at some understanding as to what particular resolution should be pressed and what not, and also consider various other matters which are absolutely essential for the proper working of the Council. Amongst the reasons that go to decrease the interest which the non-official members take in such matters are the difficulties that when we try to meet like that at Ootacamund there is no hall. Here at least we have certain facilities though they are not adequate. There are numerous disadvantages. The Government have all their instructions printed up to date and have information at their disposal to give to non-official members. The question is whether it is not possible for a clerk of the non-official members to be appointed so that he may be a sort of conduit pipe through whom we may communicate with one another and with the Legislative Secretary. There are several advantages in that. At present we find that not infrequently several members put certain questions on the same topic. That is a disadvantage. There are various other disadvantages. We find that on certain matters Honourable Members who wish to put supplemental questions could not put them because they did not send up the original questions. Suppose there is a clerk appointed for the non-official members and he is recognized as the channel through which questions might go to the Secretary, then such members as might entertain a desire to put supplemental questions might communicate with the clerk and say 'Hand up my name for these questions'. That would not only avoid reduplication of questions, but it would enable Honourable Members to join together and come to an understanding on matters in which they are deeply interested; and to get clearer statements from the Government. Then there is the question of the provision of a place, and I think it is not an unconscionable demand on the part of non-officials to ask that some place should be set apart where they could conduct the proceedings on days when the Council does not meet, when they wish to meet together. Some facilities should be afforded to them for that purpose.

"The last clause is 'for the avoidance of reduplication of questions and resolutions at the same meeting and to remove other similar defects in the working of the Council.' There are a number of defects. Several other defects which might occur to Honourable Members and which require redress; and there may be no numerous suggestions coming forward and they have to be dealt with. The proper way of dealing with the question is to appoint a committee to meet

RESOLUTION RE IMPROVEMENT OF THE ACOUSTIC PROPERTIES OF THE COUNCIL CHAMBER AND FACILITIES FOR THE ATTENDANCE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF VERNACULAR DAILIES.

(Mr. Narasimha Ayyar; Mr. Todhunter; Mr. M. Ramachandra Rao.)

existing difficulties. Unless it consists of officials and non-officials, it cannot do justice to the task. Although I have not stated 'official and non-official members of this Council,' what I mean is a committee of official and non-official members of this Council with power to co-opt others who are likely to give useful information. With these words, I place this resolution for the acceptance of the Council."

The Hon'ble Mr. K. Sadasiva Bhat seconded the resolution.

The Council then adjourned for a short interval.

The Council assembled at 2-45 p.m., when the discussion on the resolution of the Hon'ble Mr. B. V. Narasimha Ayyar regarding the acoustic properties of the Council Chamber was resumed.

The Hon'ble Mr. C. G. TODHUNTER:—"Your Excellency, before going into the question whether a committee should be appointed to deal with the points raised by the Honourable Member's resolution and whether this is the proper time to appoint a committee to examine them, I think it would be well to explain in some detail what has been done and what can be done with reference to each of them.

"Taking in the first place the question of the acoustics of this hall, I think I am right in saying that architectural acoustics have not yet been reduced to an exact science, but depend upon four things, viz., the shape of the hall, the nature of the surface which receives the sound, the delivery of the speaker and the adaptation of the latter to the room.

"As regards the shape of this hall, I think it is generally agreed that the Consulting Architect has done all he could to render it suitable. The only criticism that I have been able to discover is that the voice of speakers is apt to travel away under the arches instead of up into the galleries and the only suggestion that I have been able to find in the files for preventing this is that hot stoves or radiators for the purpose of generating hot air should be placed in a line in front of the gallery, that is to say, behind Your Excellency's chair. It is sufficient to say on this suggestion that the ingenious gentleman who made it evidently had not sat through a Council meeting in April.

"The most important question is the nature of the surface of the room. In a hall, the audience hear three sets of vibrations, those received direct from the source, those diffused by the walls, ceiling, etc., thus producing the sound of resonance, and those regularly reflected by the walls which give the distinct echoes. For a hall to be good from the acoustical point of view, there should be no echo and the resonance should be short enough to reinforce the original sound to which it is due instead of trespassing upon the sound following. Now in this hall we have practically no resonance from the ceiling, which is of fibrous plaster, that is plaster on stretched canvas, with a hollow space behind it. We had at the beginning of things much resonance from the floor, which is of marble, and we have sacrificed or rather hidden a magnificent marble floor in order that we may be able to hear the speeches better. There remain the walls. These are of a hard surface and do reflect a certain amount of sound. But the echo from them has been reduced by hanging curtains round them. It will be further reduced if and when we have a series of paintings beneath the windows and above the curtains, but that I am afraid will not be for some time to come.

"There remains the consideration of the furnishings of the hall, including the audience. According to the formula on the subject, if V is the volume of the room, A its absorbing power when empty and X the absorbing power of the audience, then T, the duration of the resonance, equals $\frac{0.171 \times V}{A+X}$. This formula apparently accounts for the fact that it is easier to speak to a full house than to an empty one, since in the one case the duration of the resonance is short while in the other, one phrase goes echoing on, preventing the next from being heard. This is a very important factor in connexion with the fact that the number of this Council is shortly largely to be increased. If the duration of the resonance is three seconds now with 43 members and say, 20 reporters, it may be only two or even one with a house of 120 members and 50 reporters, and measures which would be satisfactory under present conditions are likely to be very unsatisfactory under those which are to come.

"Coming to the second point, I need hardly assure the Council that nobody wishes to exclude reporters from the meeting nor can any one who has witnessed their struggles for places on the bench be indifferent to their sufferings, especially in this hot weather. In fact, this is the main consideration that militates against the grant of further tickets. In this connexion, I may say that limitation on the numbers admitted is not peculiar to this Council. I notice from a book of reference which the Hon'ble Mr. Ramachandra Rao was kind enough to hand to me in connexion with the last resolution, that even in the House of Commons, when seats have been provided for the leading dailies and provincial papers, there are very few left for news agencies."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO:—"It provides for 60 representatives of the press."

The Hon'ble Mr. C. G. TODHUNTER:—"When we provide for the new Council, perhaps we shall have to do something of that sort."

"The next task which the Honourable Member would assign to his committee is to facilitate the meeting of non-official members when the Council is not sitting and to arrange generally for expediting their work. Here, I am afraid, he is setting his committee rather a hard task."

(Mr. Ramaswami Ayyar.)

[7TH APRIL 1919.]

"There is another matter in connexion with University politics on which I will detain the House for a minute or two. The University recently determined upon a diploma in economics and you will find that at present we are able to meet the cost of the University Professorship out of the normal recurring grants. But I foresee that in future not only the development of the University diploma in economics but a degree in economics will be started and when it is started we will have to come to the Government for help. It seems to me that the inculcation of proper economic theories as part of not only specialised but general liberal education is a primary duty of the University and I trust the Government will recognise the importance, the urgency and paramountcy of it. Last year, I find that my predecessor in this Council emphasised the necessity for drawing a sympathetic distinction between grants-in-aid to aided institutions and grants given to Government institutions. I would repeat that plea and point out that when we find that the expenditure on Government schools which in 1918 and 1919 was 31 lakhs and 40 lakhs is now 46½ lakhs, whilst not demurring to that or cavilling at that, I would urge that the claims of aided education are far more paramount than those of a few Government institutions. I notice that in the matter of opening new elementary schools and the strengthening of existing elementary schools a large increase has been made. I would only say that in starting new elementary schools it would not be lost sight of that there is necessity to reorganise the mode of instruction in the schools as much as to increase the number of schools. It has been felt and it has been increasingly demanded that instruction in hygiene and sanitation and instruction in practical matters has to be introduced in these schools if they are to fulfil their purpose. Mere instruction in the three R's for a limited number of years to persons who cannot take adequate advantage of the instruction and who will probably very soon forget what they have learnt when they go to the fields cannot be regarded as a sine qua non of education or the end to be kept in view. On the other hand practical training in the things that matter should be part of the ideal programme of study. It seems to me that not only schools managed by the Department of Public Instruction, but all the aided institutions in respect of which its impact can be felt will make this one of the matters to be kept in view.

"In common with the other speakers who have preceded me I congratulate the Government upon the grants, which I consider entirely inadequate, for the investigation of the indigenous drugs. I do not desire to revive the controversy in this house, but a large number of persons feel that in the adequate investigation of the indigenous drugs and in the reorganisation of medicine in this country along scientific lines and not on empirical lines a great deal should be done and I hope the Government would not be deterred by experts, who are apt to be narrow and one-sided, in their final determination on this matter.

"In another department, namely that of co-operative credit, I have few words to say. I notice that there is an increase of two Assistant Registrars and 14 Inspectors. But whatever may be the departures taken in the matter of the personnel of the department, I see—I am not mentioning it in any carping spirit of criticism—I see that for some time past no big departures in the matter of co-operative credit have been taken by the Government. It may perhaps be objected to what I say that this is a matter of imperial concern, it is a matter of imperial policy. Whatever that may be, there is such a large amount of initiative left to the local administration that it ought, I think, to be borne in mind that not only in the relieving of agricultural indebtedness a bolder departure should be made but the inauguration of new industrial plant, cottage industrial plant, ought to be the idea to be kept in view in further departures. In this connexion it seems to me that even to the provincial administration there is a large scope of activity left which they ought not to fail to avail themselves of.

"There is another matter also to which I think attention ought to be paid, and that is the inauguration of what may be called a real industrial policy. I notice, and many of us have noticed with satisfaction, that the Government of Madras have taken very large departures in the matter of introduction of industrial ventures and I have noticed in the budget that such industrial ventures have been started in many parts of the Presidency. But it seems to me that sufficient attention has not been paid to the necessity that there is for enabling persons to be sent out by means of scholarships to be trained in foreign countries where particular industries may be carefully studied on the spot. I am not forgetting that it would not do merely to give scholarships for a person to go and come back and remain helpless and subsist into a clerk in the Government Secretariat. I have in my mind a particular person who specialised as a glass expert and who has come back from Japan and become a clerk somewhere. It is not that kind of policy that I advocate. Take for instance the question of the improvement of the sugar industry. It seems to me that it would be a very good thing if scholarships were given to persons to go to Java and Mauritius to study the conditions of the industry there and study how the particular scientific departures are made in those places for the purpose of investigating the industry there. It has been estimated that the introduction of new and better sugarcane has culminated and resulted in a gain of 20 per cent a year. The bulletin issued by the Chairman of the Sugar Committee, Dr. Barber, pleads for sugar experts and engineers in this line. There is a great field for sending out people to places where scientific methods of manufacture are resorted to in order that they may come back and benefit our country.

"I now come to the subject of sanitation. I desire especially to speak on one or two matters, namely the grant of 1 lakh to the corporation for sanitation and 5 lakhs for drainage and water-supply. I do not find the Honourable Member for the corporation here, but I think as a member of the corporation it is my duty to point out that the Corporation expects and demands from the Government very large and generous support in the programme to which it has been subjected not by its own volition but a programme to which it has been committed by the decision of the Government. It would be frivolous for me to repeat that line of Kipling in which he says that he nearly built a City drain. It is no use inaugurating that work unless you are determined to put it through. If the Government thought that the sanitary requirements of Madras demanded a bold and generous policy in the matter of increased staff and equipment necessary for putting in hand the new inauguration of the water-supply and drainage systems, it would not do for the Government to say, 'you have taken the responsibility and you must tax yourselves, we shall give this grant and no more'. The prices of materials have increased and the resources at the disposal of the corporation are notoriously low and it is up to the Government, having started the programme, to help the corporation to make the best it can out of the restricted programme to which the corporation has committed itself. I trust that the Government will introduce and inaugurate a much more generous policy than has hitherto characterised their treatment of the Madras Corporation.

"The last matter on which I shall dwell is with reference to a subject which has often come up before this Council, namely the prospects and pay of Judicial officers. In answer to questions 53 and 54 we find that the Government state they cannot make a definite statement on the matter. Surely it is open to us to say that the Government have had enough opportunity to make up their mind. They have sufficient materials to make up their minds and the time has come when the pay and prospects of the very hard worked judiciary ought to be viewed with sympathy and consideration by the Government who, I am sure, are alive to their particular difficulties and I daresay are sympathetically disposed to them. Red tape and routine may save us from mistakes but a large forward policy cannot work on mere red tape and routine.

"In concluding these remarks let me congratulate the Government upon the many large departures that they have taken with reference to the sanitary and educational matters, and let us hope this is only the beginning of a new era in which cordial co-operation will be demanded and got from the people who pay taxes and the people who pay taxes will also be in a position to demand that the taxes paid by them shall be disposed of in the particular ways that they desire."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur K. SURYANARAYANAMURTI NAYUDU:—"Your Excellency, I would like to make a few observations on this occasion. Before doing so I deem it a duty to congratulate the finance member on the budget presented for this year which is progressive in character and indicates the advent of normal conditions.

"The war that convulsed the world for more than four years is happily at an end and this is the first budget after it. It would be wrong to expect a more progressive budget, however much one might wish for it, taking the present conditions and imperial interests into account. As it is, we are thankful to the Government of India for permitting the Local Government to reduce its opening balance by 74 lakhs, thus enabling the Local Government to spend the same for the benefit of our Province. The war had created most acute conditions and it should be the first endeavour of this Government to relieve those conditions as early as possible. There is a great economic distress in the country. The foremost of those conditions is the abnormal rise in prices especially of the necessities of life. The restoration to normal conditions should be the first endeavour of the Government. I am glad an attempt has already been made to tackle this problem and I hope a systematic course of action based on a sifting economic inquiry into the conditions at present obtaining in the Province will be adopted very soon. I am afraid the large amount of 37 lakhs by way of giving increase of salaries to Government servants below Rs. 50 which I do not object to, is, however, not meeting the situation as there is hardly a section that is not affected by the rise in prices. I quite realise that it is not an easy matter unless the Government of India gives the Provincial Government a free hand to deal with the situation. On the 17th of last month your Excellency's Government convened a conference at which certain resolutions were come to. I hope they will be given effect to immediately. I would even venture to suggest that the State should take up the control of food-stuffs, and if necessary sell them at reduced rates to the masses, treating it as a question of relief.

"Next in importance I would place before Your Excellency's Government, is the diffusion of elementary education as broadly as possible. I note with pleasure that 16 lakhs in excess of last year's budget are to be spent on education this year, but I respectfully submit that the expenditure on elementary education is not adequate. In the present state of the country and as introductory to its industrial development the widest possible diffusion of elementary education, if necessary, even to the prejudice of higher education, should be, I think, the proper line for the Government to adopt. Further, new conditions of franchise are coming into existence and an enlightened electorate is a necessity.

"If there is one subject on which there is unanimity of opinion it is the great need to make the country industrially strong and self contained. As the Right Hon'ble the Secretary of State for India and His Excellency the Viceroy have pointed out so often, the war had shown the helplessness of India and her weakness to sufficiently help the mother country owing to her hopeless industrial backwardness. Therefore the only hope for the country lies in the development of industries. The report of the Industries Commission has been published and I hope very soon their recommendations will be put into practice. Last year I suggested that a beginning might be made in advance by attaching mechanical schools to the existing Public Works Department Workshops in different places. I am thankful an attempt has been made to take paid apprentices into the workshops and train them. The mechanical school to be established at Ootacanda I hope will come into existence very soon. From the reports in papers it looks as if the Secretary of State for India is not likely to inaugurate the scheme for industrial development for another year yet to come. It is regrettable that we are thus one year behind other countries which took up the matter soon after the war. I earnestly request Your Excellency's Government to make a start however in advance. For instance I suggest that a few industrial technical schools in different places of the country may be opened as adjuncts to Government schools or colleges. The cost cannot be much and a beginning might be made. The problem of agricultural development is also a pressing need. Last year we have had a bad time of it owing to failure of seasonable rains and the consequent poor crops. The difficulties of transport both by land and water made matters worse. I am glad 20 lakhs have been allotted this year for the improvement and repair of trunk roads. My last year's suggestion for the removal of silt in canals I beg to recommend again. The drains in the Godavari and the Kistna deltas will have to be improved by an allotment covering a period of some years as most of them are in a bad condition to the serious detriment of the crops.

(Mr. Suryanarayanamurti Nayudu ; Mr. Siva Rao.)

"The Cocanada Port Conservancy Board is in a state of financial embarrassment. This year has been even worse than last year when I brought it to the notice of Your Excellency's Government. The ordinary expenditure of the Board could not be met without having recourse to sell one of its barges although the landing and shipping dues were raised 100 per cent. Cocanada is an important commercial centre and its port is one of the safest on the coast. I think it is not too much if I expect Your Excellency's Government to come to its aid by giving a free grant until at least normal conditions prevail both in trade and sea transport. This is a matter we people in the Godavari district feel strongly about and I hope Your Excellency's Government will give an early and sympathetic consideration.

"I am thankful to Your Excellency's Government for making a provision in the budget for the construction of a building for the hospital in Cocanada and I hope the work will be commenced soon as the present building which Your Excellency has recently seen is not only inadequate but most unsuitable.

"This province has been paying to the India Government a much higher proportion of revenue than any other province. Therefore Your Excellency's Government should try to reduce the amount so that better help can be given to education, sanitation and medical relief in our province."

The Hon'ble Mr. P. SIVA RAO:—"Your Excellency, the dreadful world-war has after all come to an end though we are still suffering from its after-effects. Though actual hostilities have come to an end, the period of demobilisation is certain to entail a very heavy strain on Indian finances—our budget is still a 'caution' or 'economy' budget as it used to be before. Our finances have not yet attained their normal equilibrium. For the first time we have been permitted to draw on our accumulated balances to the extent of about 75 lakhs, one half of which has gone towards the grant of war allowances on a liberal scale to the Government servants drawing Rs. 50 and below. I wish something might be done to give relief to the servants of the local boards. As Your Excellency is aware, most of the local bodies cannot distribute grants of war allowance in the same liberal manner in which the Government have done. I only make this humble suggestion that the Government may make grants to local bodies to enable them to grant relief to the servants in their employ on the lines laid down by the Government.

"The prices have risen beyond all bounds. They are worse than the worst famine prices. We earnestly look to a satisfactory solution of the whole matter as the result of the recent conference. The situation demands most vigilant attention on the part of the Government. Urgent steps should be taken to relieve the distress caused by the prevalence of these high prices and to minimise unemployment wherever it is found to exist.

"By reason of the failure of the last two monsoons, agricultural conditions are not favourable in fourteen districts of the Presidency. We note signs of acute famine in them. Remissions and suspensions sanctioned last year on that account have brought about a fall of about 25 lakhs under the head of land revenue receipts in the revised estimate of the same year. The total land revenue provided for in the last budget (1918-19) is about 708.86 lakhs, while the revised estimate provides only for 678.64 showing a decrease of about 30 lakhs. The figure of 710.47 lakhs inserted in the present budget is based on the assumption that the seasonal conditions will be better during the present year. I for my part cannot foresee any improvement of the present conditions during the current year and I wish the Government had taken less credit under that head.

"The amount of 2 lakhs provided for famine relief is hardly adequate for the purpose. The sum of 8 lakhs meant for the advance of loans to cultivators during the current year is hardly sufficient. Considering all these adverse circumstances, the budget is on the whole satisfactory.

"The Government of India in their letter No. 3084 F., dated 22nd November 1918, regarding the principles on which the budget estimates should be prepared, instructed that additional expenditure may now be reasonably incurred on the following objects: (a) the extension of education in directions where it has been specially hampered by war economies; (b) the development of industries; (c) the repair of actual damage which the financial stringency of the last three years has caused to public institutions and services; (d) purposes which though not immediately remunerative will secure an improved and not greatly deferred return to the State or the country at large, such as capital outlay on the development of forests, agricultural experiments and the like; (e) expenditure in connexion with the relief of distress and the like in consequence of the present agricultural situation whether in the form of famine relief or advances should be duly provided for. We shall see how far these instructions have been followed in the framing of the present budget.

7TH APRIL 1919.]

(Mr. Siva Rao.)

"Among the urgent reforms of the country, the expansion of primary education and the development of industries rank the foremost. The total expenditure under the head of education in the budget estimate of 1918-19 was 112.98 lakhs, in the revised estimate for the same year it was Rs. 168 lakhs, in the budget estimate for the current year, it is 128.98 lakhs. It is satisfactory to note that there has thus been an increased provision of about 20 lakhs under this head out of which 6 lakhs will be devoted to the expansion of primary education, for the opening of 1,170 new elementary schools, for strengthening the staff of 562 schools and for opening higher standards in 300 existing schools. The allotment, gratifying as it is, does not satisfy the real requirements of the country. The Government of India in their circular No. 750, Home, dated 4th September 1918, propounded a scheme of primary education which had for its object the doubling of the number of pupils in the primary schools in the course of ten years and the cost of which should be borne by the India Government and the Provincial Government and the local bodies in three equal shares. We are not aware in what stage the scheme now is and there is no explanation why it has not been hitherto given effect to. In the same connexion, I wish to impress on the Government the imperative necessity of placing even the secondary education within the easy reach of all and as a step in that direction liberal scholarships and free student-ships should be granted to poor but deserving students in the schools. I cannot but regret the recent unfortunate decision of the Government in the matter. I wish that the recommendation of the Educational Conference of 1916 had been carried out in the same matter. I hope that better counsels will prevail even now.

"The next subject of paramount importance to our country is that of industries. The Indian Industries Commission have sent up their report. The Commission found that India is rich in raw materials and in industrial possibilities, but poor in manufacturing accomplishment. They laid down that in future Government must play a very active part in the industrial development of the country. To undertake that part they should be provided with adequate administrative equipment and also armed with reliable scientific and technical advice. They recommended a better exploitation of the forests and fisheries and proposed the introduction of labour-saving machinery. They urged a special survey of the coal situation in India and directed our attention to devising more economic methods of using wood fuel. The Government were enjoined to undertake a thorough hydro-graphic survey in order to determine the places which offer possibilities for the establishment of hydro-electric installations. They also recommended measures designed to improve the efficiency of the Indian artisan and to induce the educated Indian to take part in industrial enterprise. They advocated universal education supplemented by a system of special education, with practical training in the workshops, in the technical and industrial schools dotted all over the country. They also indicated the organization of industrial banks all over the country. They anticipated their proposals would involve a recurring cost of 86 lakhs and an initial capital expenditure of 150 lakhs for the whole of India. The provision made under the head of development of industries in recent years stands as follows:—

	LAKHS.
1915-16..	1.89
1916-17..	2.41
1917-18..	5.67
Revised estimate for 1918-19	8.16
Present budget, 1919-20	12.62

"The only industry to which any attention has hitherto been paid is fisheries and soap. It is hoped that the Government will hereafter pursue a vigorous policy of industrial expansion in this Presidency.

"As regards the capital outlay on the development of forests, the present budget makes no provision whatever. The officer deputed to examine the commercial possibilities of the forests has been discontinued. The question of proposed local extraction of sandalwood oil has not been seriously taken up. The recent triennial meeting of the Forestry Board at Dehra Dun indicates the future policy regarding forests in India. Here is an account of it that appeared in the Madras Mail dated the 5th instant. 'The discussion at the meeting discloses that in the immense forests of India there is a wealth untold, a revenue that will always be expanding, when that from the other sources is reaching its limit. It is a source that will have to be worked judiciously but of this, there are sufficient indications in the policy outlined in the same discussion—a policy of education, research, judicious exploitation and prudent commercialism. Judicious exploitation includes the provision of a staff of forest engineers, experts in sylvi-culture and commercial advisors.' The Forest Department will have to be regarded, the Madras Mail suggests, as one of the re-productive departments of the Government and the financing of its requirements will have to be undertaken on that basis and not as hitherto on the basis that it is a non-productive department. It is earnestly hoped that the Government will carry out the policy outlined in the same meeting.

"Before I close, I wish to refer to the provision under the head of minor sanitary grants for the present year. The allotment of 7 lakhs made under that head includes one lakh given to the Madras Corporation and also one lakh sanctioned for the improvement of the sanitary condition of the pilgrim centres, leaving a sum of five lakhs for the requirements of the whole of this Presidency, which is grossly inadequate for the purpose. The amounts applied for by the various local bodies in the Presidency amount to about 26 lakhs. I may also draw attention to the grants made for the improvement of the condition of the important roads in the Presidency. A sum of 20 lakhs was distributed to local boards for the said purpose during the last year and six lakhs more are allotted for the current year. There is no reason whatever as to why the local boards alone should have the sole benefit of the grant and why the municipalities which contain a portion of these important roads within their limits should not come in also for a share.

(Mr. Ahmad Tumbi Marakkayar; the Raja of Ramnad.) [7TH APRIL 1919.]

source of constant danger to the public health of the town, and I therefore hope that the Government will, as soon as circumstances allow, make sufficient provision to give effect to the recommendations of the Committee in that respect also.

It is very unfortunate that the financial circumstances of Government prevent them from giving effect to another recommendation of the Pilgrim Committee, i.e., to make provision for sewage scheme at Negapatam at the earliest possible moment. The want of such sewage scheme at Negapatam and Nagore was brought to the notice of this Council by me on former occasions, but owing to war, the scheme had to be dropped. Now that the war is over I hope the Government will soon take up the idea of equipping Negapatam municipality with proper drainage scheme, the absence of which is badly felt by the people of the town, more especially after the water-works system has been introduced.

One other important point about which I have been pressing Government for a long time, is the necessity of providing accommodations for the Indian officers of the Government in the mufassal towns. I am sorry my requests have not had the required attention of the Government. Though their brethren at Metropolis are provided with suitable dwellings, the Indian officers of the Government in the mufassal are left to wander through the streets in search of suitable accommodation. My proposal is therefore, that the Government should set apart a sum of money annually for the purpose of erecting buildings to accommodate the Indian officers in the mufassal till the needs of all the important towns are satisfied. During the pressure of the war this suggestion may not have the attention of the Government at all, but when we return to the piping times of peace, I think the Government may see that their servants in the mufassal are comfortably lodged as their brethren in the Metropolis.

Lastly I would be failing in my duty if I do not say a word or two in connexion with the rise in the prices of food-stuffs and the consequent sufferings of thousands of poor people. In this connexion it is a matter for satisfaction that in many of the important towns the local bodies are trying to minimize the inconvenience as far as possible by buying food-stuffs and selling them to the poor at normal prices. Several of the municipalities are handicapped for want of funds to follow suit, and in such cases, I request Government to finance such bodies, or allow the local bodies to borrow money from the Bank of Madras, to carry on the retail sale of food-stuffs at cost price.

Finally, if this is the last session of this Council I should like to take this opportunity of expressing to Government on behalf of my community, our sincere gratitude for the good we receive and the benefit we enjoy at their hands, and for the kindness and courtesy invariably shown to the Mussalman representatives in the Council.

The Hon'ble the RAJA OF RAMNAD:—"Your Excellency, the year under review is quite an eventful one; and the one foremost event on which every one may congratulate himself is the termination of the world-wide war. As I said in previous years, the great cause for which Great Britain and her Allies waged war, has triumphed, and we earnestly wish that the labours of the Peace Conference now sitting in France will result in a lasting peace and glory to humanity. We cannot let slip this opportunity without expressing our deep sentiments of loyalty to our august Sovereign who had undergone great personal sacrifices and inconveniences, not to mention the recent domestic bereavement he had sustained during the course of this protracted war. His Majesty's ideal that, 'righteousness exalteth a nation' has alone brought out England and her Allies triumphant in the monstrous struggle that swept over the land for a period of over four years, and that with a well prepared and powerful enemy, whose barbarous and inhuman conduct, History will depict in letters of blood for coming generations to know.

While the conclusion of the war is a matter for congratulation, other matters, which seriously concern the well-being of the people and which seriously concern us, are indeed very grave. That 6 million people should have died in India of influenza in one year, is not a matter which even an indifferent man can learn without horror and dismay. I shall deal with that question more fully when I examine the provision made for medical relief and sanitation. Then again comes the difficulty of rise in the prices of food-stuffs and other commodities, and this also I will discuss more fully below.

The closing balance for the year, according to the revised estimate, is 196.09 lakhs. But it is mentioned that the excess expenditure of no less than 75.25 lakhs of rupees over the receipts will be met from balances, which will reduce the closing balance to 120.84 lakhs for 1919-20. This is not very encouraging. But I don't claim to be an expert at figures, and therefore, I don't wish to say more. I leave that to my more experienced colleagues of this Council to point out to the Government how their drafting amount from the closing balance of the previous year, more or less for normal expenditure, is neither desirable nor conducive to progressive administration.

Excise Revenue is, no doubt, going up by leaps and bounds, and this department seems to be the goose that lays the golden egg. There is a considerable fall in the land revenue for the year by 13½ lakhs, and what is worse is that there should be a fall to the extent of 14.95 lakhs in forest revenue. In a recent issue of Justice, we find an interesting article on the development of forest revenue, and I invite the serious attention of the Government to that highly paying source of revenue. In excise, I am afraid, we cannot expect a greater income in coming years. I have not the slightest doubt that sooner or later, we shall be able to reach the utmost limit. It is true, sir, that while the revenue under excise is growing, the consumption of liquor is gradually coming down. Consumption of country spirits and toddy has, from 1913-14, gone down by 100,000 proof gallons and 6,950,000 gallons respectively, while the revenue has increased for the same period by 92½ lakhs. One can well appreciate the endeavour on the part of Government to reduce consumption of liquor as much as possible. But while such an endeavour may satisfy those of the temperance movement, it must be a matter of some concern to a financier when he notices a rapid decrease in the consumption, from a revenue point of view. For the purpose of expenditure you rely on this growing revenue; when the consumption decreases, the revenue also must correspondingly decrease. Therefore, I should personally think that it is a wrong policy to rely on this source of revenue as anything permanent and then to determine the expenditure. Not that I don't appreciate the reduction in the consumption of liquor or the growing revenue under that head; but what I wish to lay stress upon is, that the Government should tap other sources, especially forest revenue, so that they may make good any possible deficit in receipt in the coming years. Here I may urge for a greater attention being given by Government to the sandalwood industry which, I have every reason to believe, is a highly paying concern.

Under 24-A. Medicine, I regret to observe that only a small addition of 10 lakh is provided under the revised estimate. As I said above, some 6 millions of people have died of Influenza, and I do not know what the share of this Presidency is in that national disaster. But so far as I understand, there is not a single house which has not been sorely affected by this scourge. And yet, the provision made for medicine is so low. Sanitation in rural parts is highly unsatisfactory; and yet, when the Hon'ble Mr. Venkatapathi Raju, only at the last meeting of this Council, moved for the appointment of a central committee for investigating the sanitary needs of villages, the Honourable Member in charge whittled down his proposal as impracticable in his own humorous style, though no assurance of any kind was given as to what the Government proposed to do instead. It is most unfortunate that there should be an unspent balance from Provincial grants made to local boards and municipalities to the tune of 65.10 lakhs. I have no particulars at present to find out which local board or municipality is the delinquent. But whatever that is, the fact remains that such a large amount has been left unspent. Their inaction in this respect seems to be the only possible justification for Government not making more allotment for sanitation. The Hon'ble Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar said only at the last meeting that the appointment of non-official President for district and taluk boards should be made with great caution, as men with requisite qualifications are rarely available. May I ask him whether he was aware of the fact that the official presidents of district and taluk boards, in whose capacity he seems to have extraordinary faith, were or must have been, necessarily responsible for this most unsatisfactory state of rural sanitation, though having under their control a very large share of 25.91 lakhs of the minor sanitary grants yet remaining unspent. This does not really reflect very great credit on the existing presidents of district and taluk boards, whoever they may be. This only negatives the apprehension that these boards must lack efficiency under non-official control. There is a fear, sir, that there is a likelihood of the recrudescence of Influenza for the third time. This is indeed a very grave matter which must engage the serious attention of the Government. The most appalling mortality during its visitation on the last two occasions must be remembered, and every endeavour should be made to arrest its further appearance. From a letter sent to the press by the Health Officer of Calcutta, we find that the entire labour class working in a mill at Calcutta was kept free from the attack of Influenza by being made to take a few drops of cinnamon oil every day during the prevalence of the epidemic. If that is found to be an effective remedy, would it at all be a difficult matter for the Government to introduce similar measures in affected areas? Whatever may be the cost, I submit, such remedial measures must be undertaken as a people in districts and villages are really panic-stricken over this impending calamity. It is a matter for congratulation that Lord Pentland, who left our shores only a few days back, had formed a Health Association for the Presidency of Madras and Southern India. Much would depend, sir, on the support that is given to this movement by the Government and by the selection of persons in the mufassal for carrying out its object. A board for each district, and preferably for each taluk, independent of the district and taluk board or municipality, periodically visiting villages, having a programme for sanitary works and carrying them out one after another, giving preference, of course, to the most urgent among them, after getting grants either from the district boards or from the Government for the purpose, can alone, I think, attend to this most urgent need effectively.

Coming to the present economic distress, opinion is very strongly divided on the necessity for the control of food-stuffs. There is one section of people who think that control has contributed more to the existing distress, while there are others who think that, but for such control, matters would have gone worse. I don't profess for a moment to be able to decide which of them is right. But I appeal to the Government to try their best to remove one apprehension that the control by Government is solely calculated to benefit certain merchants whom they wish to patronize. The control should at no time be considered to be exercised for the benefit of any single individual, but solely for the benefit of the people in general. It is to this aspect of the question that I invite the serious attention of the Government. There is a widespread feeling that the measures taken by Government are totally inadequate to the gravity of the situation. Of course, the Government had recently a conference with the leading merchants and public men regarding the measures to be adopted to alleviate the distress. The composition of the District Emergency Committees is not at all satisfactory. These committees, I believe, are intended to use influence with the merchants and middle-men to sell grains and other commodities at a reasonable price without much profiteering. Imagine a committee appointed for the Ramnad district, which does not consist of men like the Marakkayar of Mandapam, the Zamindar of Devakottai, the Hon'ble Mr. Annamalai Chettiyar, the Zamindar of Palayampatti, the representatives of the Sivaganga Zamindari, the Zamindar of Seithur, other leading members of the

(The Raja of Ramnad.)

[7TH APRIL 1919.]

Nattukottai Chetti community and my humble self. Can any useful work be expected from such a committee? I have heard from my friends that in other districts also, the composition of these committees is not at all satisfactory. When the distress was very acute last year, I was able to prevail on the merchants at Ramnad to sell paddy at 9 measures per rupee when nowhere in this Presidency more than 6 measures per rupee could be got. I was also successful in inducing cloth merchants to sell cloths at prices fixed by me. In the case of cloths of inferior texture used largely by the poor class, the price fixed was less than the cost price, and yet the merchants readily agreed to this to avert disturbance; thus very serious looting and disturbance was averted. I had to put special lights at my cost in the bazaar streets to prevent stone-throwing and looting. The Collector of the district knew all about this. You want those who had done some such work to advise you on the present situation. Some among the favoured few, who are selected to serve in each and every committee in season and out of season, and a few merchants, who make enormous profit, can never give the Government any disinterested advice in the matter of meeting the present situation. No conference, which was largely attended by such men, can ever command the confidence of the people. In the adjacent and most flourishing Native State of Mysore, the Government has taken several steps to combat this evil arising out of failure of monsoon or other causes, and I cannot do better than invite the attention of the Government to the very able statement made by the Acting Diwan Mr. A. R. Banerjee, not many days ago in the Mysore Legislative Assembly on the steps taken by that Government in this matter.

"The difficulties experienced by the public in the matter of railway journey, have been brought to the notice of the Government times without number, and though we are fully aware that the demand of the Army Department had really crippled the facilities of the Railway Department to run more trains and provide more waggons for traffic, yet the fact that railway fares have been very considerably increased, makes one feel the two positions irreconcilable. There is a decrease in train service, but there is an increase in the railway fare, and the reason given out is that it was intended to prevent people from travelling. But from statistics, we find that more people had travelled paying this increased fare than when the standard rate was in force. So, in spite of providing waggons and other materials to the Army Department, the railway companies have made enormous profits, while the travelling public have suffered untold miseries. I am aware that the powers of the local Government are somewhat limited; but all the same, I piously hope that they will make necessary representations to the Government of India in the matter.

"Sir, a simple resolution moved on my behalf by my friend, the Hon'ble Mr. A. S. Krishna Rao, asking for an allotment of Rs. 1,50,000 for granting scholarships to deserving poor students, was negatived in this Council by the official votes, and the remarks of the Director of Public Instruction made then only compels me to observe that both the Government and the head of the Education Department do not seem to be fully aware of the great difficulties that deserving students coming of humble families experience in the matter of prosecuting their studies. However, I wish to raise this question before long, and I am sure of convincing the Government on that occasion,—should I have an occasion of doing so in this Council again—as to the importance of making such a provision for scholarships. The decision of the Madras Government, arrived at with their characteristic originality, not to extend the term of the Council for a year more, while other Governments have decided to do so, calls for the observation that I have just made.

"The additional allotment of 9.6 lakhs made in the Budget Estimate under 19-A, Law and Justice, I see, does not provide for improving the scales of salary of officers of the Judicial Department even within the coming year. The late Hon'ble Mr. Gillman, in replying to a resolution moved by the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar, assured him in this Council that the matter would be taken up almost immediately, and he regretted the delay that had inevitably happened in submitting the scheme to the Government of India. If I am not mistaken, it is more than two years since Mr. Gillman regretted the delay. To an interpellation asked by me in this Council last year on the same subject, the Government promised that it would be attended to expeditiously, and we now see that no provision has been made even in this year's budget, for the reorganization of the Judicial Department. The Government have said in unmistakable terms that they highly value the great work done by the service, and that they recognize the necessity to give them increased emoluments; in spite of that feeling and assurance, that nothing should have been done is, I submit, a matter very much to be regretted.

"Coming to Police, I must, along with some of my friends in this Council, complain of increased expenditure. I don't complain of increased expenditure, because so much money is spent, but because it had not in any way increased the efficiency of the service. According to the Budget Estimate for 1919-20, 136.51 lakhs, or nearly 16 lakhs including war allowances over to increase of efficiency. The want of it, is manifest from the figures furnished by Government. I showed on a previous occasion how crimes had increased while the percentage of the recovery of properties had systematically fallen. But the late Mr. Gillman on the last occasion said that increase of crime was due more to economic distress, and it did not therefore reflect on the efficiency of the staff. If that is so, may I just endeavour to show how that observation is incorrect? In the Administration Report of the Police of the Madras Presidency for the year 1917, we find, under recoveries of properties a fall from 20.7 to 19.9 per cent; but, for the same period, in Mysore the percentage of recovery of properties is 35.1, while in the State of Pudukkottai it is 21. I now ask the Government if economic distress did not prevail in these

(The Raja of Ramnad; the President.)

[7TH APRIL 1919.]

Native States, and if, as we know, it did exist, why then should the percentage of recovery be greater in the two adjacent Native States than we find in this Presidency of Madras? Under Police Orders, not more than two Superintendents of Police can be Indians. I certainly think that the time has come when the Government must take a forward move in this matter. We have three Indian Collectors and five or six Indian District Judges. It can't be contended for a moment that the position of a District Superintendent of Police carries with it more responsibilities or requires any extraordinary efficiency more than what is required for a Collector or a District Judge. The Government have favourably commented on the distinguished services rendered by Diwan Bahadur Parankusam Nayudu during the looting scare in Madras and by Mr. C. Karunakara Nayar in the recent Kamuthi riots, and yet this order, restricting the Indians to two, still remains unaltered. We know how badly the affairs relating to the Madras trouble were handled and what share the District Superintendent of Police there had in it. The Madras and Kamuthi incidents, compared with that of Madras, lead one to think that efficiency is more an individual quality rather than the preserve of any particular class or community.

"Sir, leaders of public opinion have been for a long time agitating for the discontinuance of recruiting Deputy Tahsildars from the ranks of low-paid clerks. The practice of direct recruitment now adopted by Government is indeed praiseworthy and a move in the right direction. But the recruitment of Deputy Tahsildars, more or less as a substitution for the direct recruitment of Deputy Collectors, is not a system which we can accept with equanimity. There ought to be a direct recruitment of Deputy Collectors as well as direct recruitment of Deputy Tahsildars. One for the other is absolutely unsatisfactory, and I request the Government to kindly consider this suggestion. I submit in this connexion that selection on competition basis must necessarily produce a more satisfactory result.

"It is somewhat gratifying to see that Government is showing greater sympathy in recent times for industrial development. But here again, I should sound a note of warning that Government should do its utmost to remove the apprehension in the minds of the public that there are a few men whom alone they wish to encourage by placing unnecessary limitations in the matter of issuing certificates and granting permits. Whatever step the Government may take towards the development of any industry, it should be for the welfare of the entire masses, and not for the benefit of any particular individual. It is only when such a feeling is created among the people that the Government can really expect the willing co-operation of all the leading men in the Presidency.

"As the term of the Council is coming to a close, I may be permitted to make a few remarks as to our relationship in this Council, with the members of Government. Now that the reforms are on the anvil, I should say that the greatest reform that is most urgently needed is the creation of opportunities for the development of mutual trust and good-will. It is indeed an unseemly sight to see the non-official members in this Council crossing swords with officials like plaintiffs and defendants in Law Courts. As I understand, we are here to bring to the notice of the Government defects which we notice and which may not ordinarily come to their knowledge, in order to get them rectified in the best interests of the administration. We are actuated by no bad motive, and we are not here to criticise the Government. But all the same, there is a fear that our attitude is often-times mistaken, and he who is frank and out-spoken is made to feel that he can enjoy no more the good-will of the Government. It is the removal of this state of feeling that is more urgently needed than any other reform, if the government of this country should be carried on, on smooth and efficient lines. It is true that resolutions brought by non-official members cannot one and all be accepted, for they may in themselves be conflicting. But either to doubt their intentions or to think that they are actuated by considerations other than of public good, or to make them a laughing-stock by humorous attacks, being armed with facts and figures collected by the Secretariat, is not, I submit, a feature which any man of self-respect can, in the long run, stand without considerable uneasiness of mind and despondency. I hope this unpleasant feature of Council life will soon disappear, and the Legislative Councils will serve to establish better understanding and good-will."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"I hope the Honourable Member is at the end of his remarks. He is going beyond the budget, and he has overstepped his time."

The Hon'ble the RAJA OF RAMNAD:—"In the matter of nominations by the Government I beg to invite the attention of the Government to a speech delivered by His Excellency the late Sir John Anderson at the Ceylon Legislative Council, where he referred to the order of the Colonial office deprecating the practice of appointing to the Legislative Council, the same person term after term for securing interests of minorities."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"I really think that is not a matter concerned with the budget. That particular subject does not arise out of the budget discussion."

The Hon'ble the RAJA OF RAMNAD:—"It is the practice of this Council to offer remarks on matters of general public interest on this occasion. I am coming to the end of my remarks. Now that our term of office is coming to a close, I hope Your Excellency will give us some indulgence."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"I am quite aware of it. I am afraid that the Honourable Member has already reached the limit."

The Hon'ble the RAJA OF RAMNAD:—"I have one word more before I resume my seat, and that is to thank the Government for the establishment of the Rajkumar College, solely for the benefit of the zamindars' children. As I have been repeatedly saying in this Council and outside, the ultimate success of it will depend on its constitution and on the lines on which it is worked. I again appeal to the Government to take more non-officials,—not only zamindars, but other public men also—in the government of the institution to make it attractive, useful and popular.

"The Mohini payments to the religious institutions is a matter on which we have not been able to get any information from the Government. The Hon'ble Mr. K. V. Rangaswami Ayyangar wanted some information in the Imperial Legislative Council, and the answer given there was that it was a matter which concerned the Provincial Governments. But when myself and the Hon'ble Mr. Annamalai Chettiyar asked questions in this Council, the reply given was that the Government had no information. I leave it to you, sir, to decide whether it is anything fair that we should be given such cut and dry answer. If the information was not available with you, it was available with your Collectors of districts, and if you had only the will to furnish us with the information, there was surely the way.

"I have nothing more to add except to wind up my speech on this occasion with a full Sovereign will have a glorious and long reign, and that His Majesty our august receiving new reforms at an early date, willingly given by a great King who has always the welfare of his Indian subjects at heart."

The Hon'ble Sir FAIRLESS BARBER :—“ Your Excellency, I have a few words to say, but will not detain the Council long. During the year I have attended three meetings. I have come to learn that we are not representatives of communities in water-tight compartments, but that we are dependent on each other and that our progress and the advancement of the country cannot be maintained unless we work together. I hope it is not out of place for me to point out on what line it is most important in my opinion that we should work together. It is in improving the condition of the masses.

"A few days ago my Hon'ble friend, Mr. Thonger accused the non-official debaters of frequently putting the cart before the horse. I think this criticism is neither inept nor unjust, but I am not sure he is quite fair in laying the blame entirely on the shoulders of our legal friends, for none of us, not even Your Excellency's Government, can be wholly acquitted of that charge."

"We discuss resolutions, pass them or reject them, for the betterment of the Presidency, but in doing so it seems to me we are choosing or rejecting the colour the horse that is going to draw it has been foaled. Looking round me I see that the colour we shall paint our cart

"Looking round we can find squalor and poverty when the conditions that make for poverty do not exist. There is plenty of work for every one, and now no one need go poorly clad or hungry. As an employer of labour I know that often a rise of wages does not mean an increase of work and better living for the labourer. The tendency is the other way, for with a higher wage the labourer works fewer days to earn his food, and beyond that he has no ambition. Public opinion in the matter of taking holidays may have something to do with this. In Malabar I should be surprised if people worked for more than half the days of the year, but I believe there is more in it than this, and that there are physical causes, for this apathy or lethargy, call it what you will, that in many cases characterises the labouring class.

"Your Excellency, the influenza epidemic is fresh in our memory."

"Your Excellency, the influenza epidemic is fresh in our memories. Under the abnormal conditions caused by the war there was not a hope of giving adequate medical relief to the people, but were we much better off under normal conditions?"

"What I would urge, sir, is medical research into the diseases that are known to sap the energy of the people and liberal grants-in-aid to any institution, organizations, or individuals that may arrange for doctors, hospitals and dispensaries to combat these diseases.

"Leaving aside all fallacies that have been so fervently expressed at these meetings, it is safe to assume that neither industrial nor agricultural advancement can come properly unless we have an energetic mass of people anxious to get on. Scientific advice, agricultural research, encouragement of industrial enterprise, are of little use unless the people are healthy and fit to take advantage of them, so it would seem that the first step is to create the requisite energy and then it will not be hard to find how that energy can best be expended."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. SURYANARAYANA RAO :—“ We must first express our gratitude to the Government for the amendments introduced in the Financial Rules with the object of affording us a better opportunity this year for discussing the figures of the budget estimates before they have taken such final shape as to render it very difficult to alter them. The budget figures are in themselves a very fascinating and alluring study but they very easily elude the grasp, and we find our way difficult in treading our path through the tangled maze of these bewitching and bewildering figures. Any assistance therefore which gives us a firmer hold on them will be most welcome and greatly appreciated.

• “After the stress and pressure of four years’ rigid economy necessitated by war conditions, we had hoped that when the first budget would be shaped after the war, the hoarded balances of the past would be utilized in such a way as to provide abundantly for such schemes of material advancement, ensuring the welfare of the people, as have been cherished in the past but which could not be touched owing to the stringency of the financial situation. The expenditure budgeted for this year necessitated a draft upon our balances as the only means of meeting it and it was therefore permitted by the Government of India. We have thus provided for an expenditure of not less than 74 lakhs in excess of the revenue of the year 1919-1920 reducing our balance by about 129.19 lakhs. The grant of war allowances to Government servants on

(Mr. Suryanarayana Rao.)

pay of Rs. 50 and under, thus entails an expenditure of 37 lakhs and 26 lakhs go towards grants to local bodies towards repairs to trunk roads which have been damaged owing to the exceptional traffic brought about by the restrictions on the railway. The above two items are in a way due to war conditions. We regret the necessity which has compelled us to fall back upon our balances for meeting this cost but by no means do we grudge the expenditure itself. We should have been fortunate if the Government of India had taken the above burden on itself and made some suitable grant to us to meet the extra cost but they have only pointed towards our balances to make good the expenditure and we have therefore thus made the first inroad upon them. The third item of expenditure is due to a large additional provision for education, 16 lakhs more than that for the current year. We have to express our immense satisfaction at the provision thus made for education though at the risk of reducing our balances. The Government hopes that with the restoration of peace conditions and with a normal rainfall, the present high prices of the necessaries of life may vanish and the temporary war allowances may then be withdrawn. They also think that the exceptional grants to local bodies are not recurring and could be omitted in future years. But we on this side of the house may be pardoned if we do not share the optimism of the Government in these directions and give expression to our own misgivings in the matter. It does not look as though the high prices of the necessaries of life will so far come down as to facilitate the discontinuance of the war allowances in the near future. Prices, cost of living and expenditure, when once they begin to mount up, they do so without let or hindrance, and exhibit a natural tendency to retain the height which they once attain and except with the aid of extraordinary remedies, they cannot be dislodged from their high level. The present situation in the country brought about by the scarcity of foodstuffs and other necessities of life, and their high prices, is extremely grave and serious and alarming especially in the Vizagapatam district. The forecast is gloomy and the more so, as the people apprehend, from the astronomical forecast of the Hindus for the next six years. It would seem that the more prudent course would have been to curtail our expenditure in other directions so as to make provision for these extra war allowance for some continuous period. We cannot persist in a policy of falling back upon our balances as they very soon exhaust themselves by such continuous pressure upon them by unusual demands. The experience felt by some of the local bodies in this connexion appears to be a sure guide. For instance some of the municipalities, notably Vizagapatam and Vizianagram, the largest in my district, are unable to meet this extra cost of providing war allowance to their employees for want of funds and their situation is very uncomfortable, owing to the clamour of their servants demanding the grant of the allowance which all other employees are getting and their own inability to provide the same. The general economic condition of the people is one of poverty and distress and cost of living has risen to a point beyond which it is impossible to bear. We may have very soon to revise the scales of pay and possibly consolidate these allowances, if we are to afford the ordinary bare necessities of life to these subordinates. Very soon the need for some curtailment of the top heavy expenditure we are incurring may be felt and the rearrangement and readjustment which will then have to be made appears to be far more difficult than at present.

“As regards the grant to local bodies for the repairs of the trunk roads it has already been remarked above, that it would have been far better if this burden was not thrown upon us. But even as it is the distribution of the 20 lakhs has been very uneven. I am however glad that Vizagapatam District Board has been given its due share, and it only remains for the board to utilize the same promptly.

utilize the same promptly.

“ On the credit side our budget presents this year some interesting features, notably the large increase under the heads of excise and income-tax. It has been claimed that though the conditions warrant a more liberal estimate, the excise revenue has been estimated with caution at the figure noted in the budget. The excise revenue and the history of its enormous growth from year to year in spite of the reduction in the number of shops, restrictions as to their location and heavy taxation, present some of the most difficult problems for solution in the interest of the moral and physical well-being of the people. The figures simply stagger our imagination and baffle our judgment by their mysterious logic. The policy of the Government has been to raise the maximum revenue with the minimum consumption. The consumption remains stationary and even exhibits a tendency towards diminution but the revenue goes up by leaps and bounds. This is accounted for by the benefits received from the high prices of food-stuffs, by the agricultural producers and the wage-earner, who have contributed to the swelling of the excise revenue. This abnormal increase in excise revenue is not unoften taken as indicative of the prosperity of the people, inducing them to revel in this baneful luxury. A little reflection however will show how unfounded such an assumption is and that this morbid growth of excise revenue only points to a diseased moral condition of the people bearing the impress of poverty and misery on its very face. The evil is so deep-rooted, that even the hard earned wages of daily labour are sacrificed at the expense of all legitimate expenditure, for the sake of indulging in this vice. The poverty, misery, and squalor of the ordinary labourers are well known and it is as a refuge from such misery, owing to ignorance and folly, that the labourer takes to drink and finds himself ruined in the end becoming a slave to it. While in advanced countries like the United States of America and some of the Indian States schemes are devised for total prohibition and put in execution, to ensure the moral well-being of the people, we find ourselves utterly helpless to alleviate the condition of our people. The only remedy to minimise the evils as far as possible seems to be to reduce the quantity manufactured and not merely to trust to the good sense of the people and increased taxation to keep consumption at a stationary limit. It looks almost like an inexplicable paradox to say that with

(Mr. Suryanarayana Rao.)

famine, squalor and misery facing the masses, there should be an abnormal increase in this branch of the revenue calculated upon the high prices and high wages earned by them. The phenomenon is curious and can only be explained on the basis of the strong temptation created by the supply to which the ignorant masses easily fall a prey.

"The increase in the income-tax was naturally expected as Act VII of 1918 introduced stricter methods. Nobody grudges now to pay the income-tax but everybody feels the hardship of its administration. It is no doubt irksome to pay taxes however easy one's circumstances are. We very often find touring officers excusing themselves from the payment of their professional taxes in municipalities for they discover when the tax is demanded that they resided only for 59 days within the municipal limits and the discomfited municipality has to write off the amount. The merchant, lawyer and the professional man are compelled to produce their accounts and when produced they are not believed but the confidential report alone in most cases is acted upon by the assessing officers. But how often do the officials themselves pay the tax upon their hoarded savings of the past years? No notice as far as I know is served upon the officials to submit statements, and the tax is deducted out of their salaries alone in the ordinary course. Their savings and balances may escape assessment unless any official chooses to tax himself or through his superior officer. I wish I were mistaken in the above view. The income-tax administration has been felt as sore burden and loud complaints have been made from different quarters. It is needless to recapitulate them here as they are well known. Suffice it to say that there is much to be achieved by way of improvement and the bringing in of enhanced revenues alone should not be deemed to be the test of good administration in this branch.

"Your Excellency passing to the subjects of Education, Sanitation and Medical relief which are ever dear to our hearts, I may be permitted to make a few observations. The treatment that these subjects generally receive at our hands is that of poor relations at the feast. This year the reproach has been removed in so far as Education is concerned and the provision made for Education is liberal. The Government have thus earned the thanks of the people. We have long expected that the Government would take upon themselves the task of mass education as a State duty and introduce free and compulsory elementary education. The efforts so far made have not fructified and the deliberations of the Elementary Education Conference have not been made public and we are yet as far from the goal as before. Other Presidencies have been solving the problem one by one and we are lagging behind. The Government measure promised to be introduced, has not yet seen the light of day. Any attempt to solve the problem by dribblets, would only occasion extra expenditure and cannot produce the desired result. We hope that ere long the Government will see their way to embark upon this long delayed and overdue reform. Another feature of this year's budget is the creation of four new Inspectors' circles and the increase of inspecting staff. An adequate inspecting staff is certainly a necessity but it seems rather cumbersome to have too much inspection. In the natural order of things the responsibility for sound education rests with the teachers and the functions of the inspecting staff should be confined to supervision and co-ordination of educational work among the various institutions. It sometimes happens that individual tastes and theories differ with succeeding officers and the institutions under their command often find themselves embarrassed and unable to adapt themselves to varying methods in rapid succession. It may not therefore be unreasonable to urge that the imparting of education should be left in the hands of competent teachers and as little interfered with as is consistent with the objects of inspection above named. Elementary education is as a rule in the hands of a low-paid and ill-educated class of teachers whose main object in life is, rather to make a living for themselves than being imbued with any high ideals of education. They often supplement their small emoluments by undertaking the duties of the Village Branch Postmaster and the professional document writer of the village. These pre-occupations engage their time and mind considerably, and the educational work of the school becomes a secondary matter with them. This state of things is remedied in part in some places but still I venture to think that the generality of the observations holds good. In the present budget, provision is made for increasing the salaries of the Elementary teachers, but this increment in these hard conditions of life, can go but a little way towards improving their status or attracting a better class of men for the service. May we not hope that with the advancing ideals of education, a large number of institutions may be developed commencing from the lowest stage, imparting education of a high order and laying the foundation for future national progress.

"Another closely allied topic on which I wish to say a few words is the medical inspection of school children. I venture to think that the provision made in the budget is inadequate for this object, but it serves only as a start, as an earnest of the efforts that will be made hereafter in this direction. Time after time, this subject has been pressed upon the attention of the Government but no systematic work could be undertaken on account of various causes. Now that a beginning is going to be made, we hope that the matter will be systematically pursued so as to lead to healthy results in the school life of our children. The Local Boards and Municipalities, I apprehend, are unable to undertake this duty or find funds for the same, considering the limited and slender character of their resources and the numerous calls upon their finances. The Government alone should therefore undertake the duty and bear the cost.

"Another subject which is dear to my heart is the development of industrial education. I have often pressed in this Council the supreme need that exists for making a real and earnest endeavour to impart sound industrial education. The progress made so far has been very slow and not very remarkable considering the needs of the situation or the results achieved. The figures in the latest administration reports show that the total number of pupils receiving technical and industrial education is 5,063 of whom 1,421 were pursuing art education, 534 technical education in Engineering subjects and telegraphy and 1,764 industrial education (including agriculture) and 1,344 commercial education. With prospects of industrial advancement before us, the need for sound industrial education cannot be too often reiterated or too strongly emphasised. Given proper facilities and encouragement, we are sure that the tide of education will turn towards industrial pursuits and there will no longer be any pressure on the learned professions or discontented and disappointed failures in life. The material prosperity of the country will be ensured. After all, in any country, agriculture, industries and trade mark the progress of the nation, and these are the mainstay of the material prosperity of the country. It is only unfortunately in this country, that much valuable time is lost in developing policies and shaping theories which naturally lead to unconscionable delays and utter indecision as to which development should precede the other. We find ourselves ground down under the theories as to our fitness which are formed without trying and proving us. 'Advance and never retrace' should be the watch words of our progress in the future. Unless the work of reconstruction is begun in right earnest, we are sure to find ourselves nowhere in the coming struggle among the nations of the world for industrial and commercial supremacy. India can never remain content with merely producing raw material for feeding the industries of war, the regretted in the past that the Department of Industries, owing to the pre-occupation of war, the difficulty of importing suitable machinery from abroad, could not adequately undertake its proper work. Now that the war is over, we are entitled to expect some handsome work from the department for the benefit of the country. Coming to a small item, I may be pardoned for referring once more this year to the question of opening a weaving school in the Vizagapatam district. When I moved the resolution on the subject last year, hopes were held out that as soon as the war conditions are over and a suitable expert is obtained, our claims will be duly considered. I reiterate the request now, because the war is over and in expectation of the fulfilment of the hopes held out last year. Hundreds of weaving families from the Vizagapatam and Ganjam districts have migrated to Calcutta and other places in search of work and livelihood and several have been thrown out of employment owing to the difficulty of procuring yarn. The peripatetic weaving party at Ichchapuram in the Ganjam district has been doing some little useful work but this is hardly sufficient to meet the demands of the situation. We cannot too often urge upon the attention of the Government the need for stimulating indigenous enterprise and capital in starting and working indigenous industries.

(Mr. Suryanarayana Rao.)

"The next subject I wish to touch is Sanitation. Of late years the public health has not been very satisfactory and epidemics have been breaking out in too frequent and rapid succession and the situation demands careful study and watchfulness. Of the municipalities only 26 have a protected system of water-supply and the district boards have yet to embark on large schemes of protected water-supply in areas under their charge. There are only a very few municipalities outside the cities who have the services of health officers and in the case of my own municipality I can bear witness to the honest efforts made and the failure to obtain the services of any health officer. Neither the Sanitary Commissioner nor the Principal of the Medical College could recommend any officer and our municipality is compelled for want of such officer to remain without the services of a health officer. We have passed through a period of plague and influenza and smallpox has given us considerable trouble. It may not be out of place to request that every municipality should have its own health officer with qualifications suited to its requirements. The Government are willing to contribute towards the pay of the health officers, but the difficulty is in procuring them. It is also absolutely essential that to look after the moral health and sanitation, there should be a health officer for select districts or groups of districts.

"Lastly I wish to say a few words on the question of medical relief, and I have done. The question of adequate medical relief to the people pushed its attention on the public mind in the recent influenza season. Everywhere the cry was heard that medical relief was wanting and people died by hundreds. The death toll in the world counted by the fell disease is enormous. For a population of nearly 45 millions in the Presidency there are about 707 hospitals and dispensaries working, out of which 510 are maintained by local funds, 80 by private agencies and the rest by Government, railway and other agencies. The inadequacy of the medical relief afforded has been consequently brought to the notice of the Government and repeated prayers have been made to give some encouragement to the ayurvedic and unani systems. The Government have turned a deaf ear to the latter request and no encouragement whatever was given to the indigenous system. We are proud to own however that these systems have done their part well and given succour and relief in the severe influenza epidemic and saved a number of lives which would otherwise have been lost for want of proper medical treatment. The system has stood the test of time and achieved some remarkable results as inquiries will easily show. It is indeed a pity that the Government acting under the advice of the Allopathic doctors should not appraise these systems at their true worth and give them a fair trial and encouragement. A large percentage of the people still have recourse to these systems and the Government cannot afford to belittle their importance or ignore their efficiency and soundness.

"The question of training a sufficient number of qualified practitioners is as important as the affording of relief, for the two are intertwined with one another. At present there is only one College and there are four schools. In the College according to the latest figures 473 pupils are receiving instruction and in the four schools 662 are studying. We know from experience that several applications are rejected for want of suitable accommodation and other causes and the demand for medical education is rapidly increasing. We hope that to meet this increasing pressure, other schools will be opened and one or two of the existing schools will be raised to the status of a College. The claims of the medical school of Vizagapatam to be raised to the dignity and status of a College have been frequently urged before the Government and the institution has acquitted itself well as its history would show. The need for a College in the northern districts is apparent and Your Excellency at your recent visit to Vizagapatam also gave out hopes that the question would be favourably viewed, and we hope that no time will be lost in raising this institution to a College at the earliest opportunity even before the Vizagapatam harbour is constructed.

"In conclusion, I beg leave to state that though the budget taken as a whole is satisfactory, in parts it is disappointing and we cannot continue increasing our expenditure on the chances of finding revenues from slippery and unstable sources, which would involve hardship on the people. The land revenue is always unstable owing to the fluctuations of the seasons but the resettlements are always bringing in increased revenues. This has been felt to be a great hardship by the large mass of the agricultural population but the same policy is continued by the Government without heed of its deleterious effect on the economic condition of the people. The country is unable to tide over a single year of scarcity and the prosperity and contentment spelled out of the increment in the excise revenue or from other figures can never be real. We therefore earnestly implore the Government not to shut its eyes to the real gravity of the situation but to take adequate notice of the existing economic condition and begin to build its finance on the solid foundation of a sound land revenue policy and gradual but sure agricultural and industrial development guided by the principles of mutual co-operation, confidence and trust.

"Before I sit down I appeal to Your Excellency's Government to make a strong representation to the Imperial Government and see that the settlement of finances between the two Governments is made on an equitable and satisfactory basis and that the recommendations made in the Montague-Chelmsford report are not accepted as they are highly prejudicial to our Presidency and cripple our resources very largely and we are left poor in spite of our large income."

The Hon'ble Mr. K. RAMA AYYANGAR :—"Your Excellency, we are now at the close of my second period of the Legislative term, as per the singular announcement of this Government. It is therefore proper to take a retrospect of the financial aspects of this Government. We are on the eve of impending reforms and a careful study is needed for our future guidance.

"I made the following statements in my last budget speech. We know that the budget is prepared assuming normal conditions. I said—

(1) I have no doubt that we have budgeted for much less than we could receive.
(2) We have placed more money under heads which would not consume them; we spent more monies on other heads, without the Finance Committee or this Council, which has the right to consider these statements, having had previous occasion to judge of the nature of the expenditure.

(3) The Government spent not only at their sweet will and pleasure monies which have been budgeted unnecessarily as shown above, but they also had thought fit to reserve 10 lakhs of rupees under the head Miscellaneous 32-E, for distribution as they pleased.

(4) It is under these circumstances painful to notice that there is every attempt made to prevent the non-official Members exercising the very small powers conferred on them under the existing rules."

"Your Excellency, we have only to look at the revised budget of receipt and expenditure to see how far these statements have been substantially correct. Under receipts we see that in spite of a fall of 16 lakhs of rupees under the head Land Revenue caused by the abnormal conditions and of 9 lakhs under the head Forest caused by an arrangement entered into after the budget by the Government with the Munitions Board to the great detriment of the interests of this province and a fall of almost 5½ lakhs of rupees under the head Income-tax caused again by a later resolution of the Government of India not to assess people below Rs. 2,000 per annum and of about 22, 69 and 50 thousands of rupees under the heads Interest, Courts of Law and Education respectively, the total budget exceeds the budget for the last year by about 5 lakhs and the closing balance for the year that has just now passed is about 8 lakhs more in the revised estimate in spite of special expenditure on war allowances and through communications, affected by the reduction in the railway traffic, of about 33 lakhs. The arrangement relating to the forest produce referred to above seems patently unsatisfactory as the revenue estimated is too much below those of 1917-18 and 1916-17, which are respectively 54 and 45 lakhs. I am sure that the revised estimate of receipts will, when the actual figures are received, be shown to be an under-estimate.

"Under the head of Expenditure the revised budget shows that after deducting war allowances and contributions towards communications referred to above there has been a budget for 24 lakhs more than was needed mainly under the heads Education, Miscellaneous, in which about 8½ lakhs out of about 14 remains unspent, Irrigation—Major Works—Working expenses, and Civil Works in charge of Public Works officers.

"Thus if normal conditions are assumed, we had budgeted for less to the tune of 52 lakhs and put down money under the Expenditure heads to the extent of about 3½ lakhs so that about a crore of rupees has not been estimated properly in the budget. My impression is that persistently this policy is pursued. I must object to this and point out that it is essential that we budget more accurately and keep a reserve of about 50 lakhs as balance over and above the required closing balance to meet contingencies. If we had budgeted properly for receipts, the abnormal increase of receipts under some heads will be balanced by similar loss under others.

"The budget would have been, all the same, not disappointing. If similarly we had put down money for expenditure more accurately any small increase in one or other head may be met by the deficiency in the others. A provision of 13 lakhs under the head Miscellaneous, besides a similar provision for miscellaneous purposes under each head, is sure to mar a budget and this item which has been introduced within the last two or three years must be put an end to as outside the range of budgeting.

7TH APRIL 1919.]

(Mr. Rama Ayyangar.)

"When thus, large surpluses are expected both by increase in receipts and decrease in expenditure steps are taken in the middle of the year to spend them in the way the Government pleases without giving the Council or the Finance Committee an opportunity to consider such supplementary budgeting or the method of distributing the amounts so budgeted. About 33 lakhs have been so spent on war allowances for some departments excluding others, and on communications without duly considering the claims of all the districts. The order that 20 lakhs of money will be given to boards ready to spend within the official year and distribution on that assumption is, to say the least, curious and mischievous, and has not failed to place many district boards at a disadvantage and no amount of subsequent action can rectify the mistake committed. Why not wait to distribute after calling a meeting of the Council or after the February meeting of this year?"

"The Executive, it is assumed, is unerring in its acts and the Council is not used as it ought to be under the rules, even in matters of financial distribution, which ought properly to go to the head "Unallotted Expenditure." I submit that the Finance Member must put an end to this state of affairs as early as possible if the province is to be administered efficiently and without mistake.

"I have next to deal with another aspect of the budget, as this aspect becomes highly important in connexion with the reforms that have been proposed and are expected to come into force. The expenditure side of the budget deserves close scrutiny to enable properly to appreciate the needs of each head as this Government has not tried even during the time of the war to distinguish between the essential and the non-essential portions of expenditure under the heads Land Revenue, Forest, Police and Civil Works in charge of Public Works officers and similar other heads while they have limited the expenditure to the lowest possible minimum, under the heads Courts of Law, Education, Medical and Sanitation, Agricultural and Scientific and Miscellaneous departments and Civil Works in charge of Civil officers. My submission is that due regard to the relative necessities of the increase of expenditure under each head has not been given.

"We know that when the provincial Financial Settlement was arrived at in 1910-11, the expenditure of this province was calculated on an average of the previous ten years; that allowance was made for additional expenditure on the Police Department anticipated on the introduction of the schemes recommended by the Police Commission and that a sum of Rs. 7.10 lakhs was allowed for additional district charges proposed to be created and that the final figure inclusive of an extra allowance was put at about 565 lakhs and a contribution of about 18 lakhs was arranged to be made by this Government to the Government of India. The year that was taken to arrive at this settlement was 1908-09 and the income of that year was 582.15 lakhs. We have now according to the revised estimate of 1918-19 an income of about 850 lakhs inclusive of assignments from the Government of India. This gives an increase over that year, of about 268 lakhs giving an average increase of about 26½ lakhs per annum.

"The expenditure on the other hand has risen from 561 lakhs in 1908-09 to 854 in 1918-19 giving an increase of about 293 lakhs inclusive of our drawings on our balances. Of this about 42½ lakhs is given by the Imperial Government for specific purposes. Thus we have 28.28 lakhs earmarked for Education and 6.35 lakhs for Sanitation and 7.85 lakhs for new district charges so that practically we have spent about 250 lakhs from our resources. Of this about 42 lakhs more for Education, about 5 lakhs more for the heads Medical and Sanitation over and above the Imperial grant, about 20 lakhs for Agriculture and Scientific and Miscellaneous departments and about three lakhs for Civil Works in charge of Civil officers besides the 20 lakhs recently added towards grants to improve main communications making a total of 70 lakhs were spent on objects of utility to the people. About eight lakhs over and above the expenditure of 1908-09 was spent on Minor Works and Navigation so that a total of 78 lakhs may be accounted for under that head. But a portion of this amount which is not less than 10 lakhs is non-recurring in nature and cannot be treated as allotted to these heads. It is thus to be seen that out of an increased income of 293 lakhs there remains a balance of 173 lakhs which is now being spent under other heads whose full scope of expenditure was settled after a full investigation only in 1910-11, at about 434 lakhs, for we find that the heads referred to above were contributing to the expenditure to the extent of 135 lakhs out of a total of 561 lakhs in 1903-09. This gives an abnormal increase of expenditure under these heads of about 40 per cent while Excise and Stamps whose expenditure is divided equally with the Government of India, show only an increase of about 14 per cent. I have been contending that even during the time of the war the expenditure under these heads has not been kept within bounds and had been permitted to increase to an objectionable extent. It is therefore essential that the expenditure under these heads is carefully scrutinized before it is accepted as necessary for them. Every aspect tends to show that they may be with advantage curtailed. The figures for the other provinces particularly the United Provinces situated almost similar to ours prove the same. In Land Revenue the expenditure has increased in our province by about 35 per cent, while in the United Provinces it has risen only by 14½ per cent. Under the head Police our expenditure has increased by 45 per cent while in the United Provinces it has risen only 25 per cent. These and other questions that can be observed by an examination of the figures will convince one that this Government has been quite partial to some heads of expenditure.

(Mr. Rama Ayyangar ; Mr. Sadasiva Bhat.) [7TH APRIL 1919.]

"Your Excellency, it is a matter for regret that in our province we have done little or nothing to the provincial service for a very long time. The recent Public Service Commission started to give that service better prospects had finished its report long back. The Imperial Service brought later within its scope have already benefited by it. The Indian Civil Service, the Indian Medical Service and the Police officer, of the Imperial Service have been given better prospects in anticipation. The Indian Civil Service Officers had special concessions shown to them as soon as the war broke out to compensate for restrictions on leave. The number of posts thrown open to that service has by far increased since 1896 and yet the Provincial Service whose interests were meant to be improved by the Commission stagnates in the same position except that one or two special posts conferred on them did not materially affect the number thrown open to them. The present is a very convenient time to better their prospects and add to the listed posts also. It has been conceded times without number that the members of that service are exceptionally capable. It is proper that the Government should immediately take up their case and improve their prospects. The common feeling is that the Imperial Services get what they want both as emoluments from the Government and all kind of intelligent work from the Provincial Service officers, but that the latter are forgotten when it is a question of improvement in prospects. This reproach must be removed. At least a few additional district charges in all possible departments must be immediately thrown open to them. That will act as an incentive to brilliant young men joining that Service.

"The Land Revenue Settlement policy has been radically altered, Your Excellency, during your régime as Revenue Member. The calculation of costs of cultivation and the consideration of the economic condition of the area settled have been made on haphazard and objectionable basis. However necessary such policy was during the war, I request that Your Excellency may leave definite instructions before you lay down the reins of your office that the more sympathetic old method may prevail and that the tendency of the Government even against the reports of the officers investigating and the spirit of the Government of India resolution on Land Revenue policy, may be put an end to."

The Hon'ble Mr. K. SADASIVA BHAT :—"I wish to say a few words on one or two questions affecting the two districts I represent here. I shall first refer to the bad season. The budget estimate for the year which had been framed on the basis of normal conditions had to be revised and the revised estimate showed a decrease of about 16 lakhs due as was explained in the Draft Financial Statement—to an increase of remission, on account of the unfavourable conditions in 15 districts including South Kanara and suspension of collections till the next year in five districts—the largest amount of suspension being 1.95 lakhs in South Kanara. In the discussion of the Financial Statement in this Council, no objection was taken to these figures; in fact no reference was made to them, but I regret to learn that the Government have since ordered jamabandi to be completed in South Kanara as if there is no remission at all in South Kanara and there is to be suspension only to the extent of about Rs. 18,000 in certain individual villages. These orders have come as a painful surprise on the district. When I moved a resolution on the question of remissions, the Hon'ble Mr. Couchman replying on behalf of Government stated that there was no doubt failure and distress and that remissions would be granted. Till the harvesting of the crops was over, Mr. Vibert was the Collector, and he had gone over the whole district during these months of distress and had seen the things for himself. When the Hon'ble Mr. Buckley was on tour in that district about the harvesting time, the District Association waited upon him and begged him to see the extent of the calamity himself. I understood he too was satisfied that there has been a general failure of the first crop—the only crop which is assessed and from which the assessment has to be paid in South Kanara. It was after the harvesting operations were over that the Government accepted the principle of granting remissions in South Kanara—not under the ordinary rules but as a general calamity, inserting the figures referred to by me in the Draft Financial Statement. This was in February last. What happened since then to persuade the Government to change their mind I fail to understand. If it were any recent report of the present Collector of the district on the outturn of the first crop, I must remark that it is extremely unfair. The crop has been off the land several months previously, and I fail to see what materials the Collector could have had to make any report on to vary the conclusion of officers who examined the question when the crop was being harvested. I am also surprised to see that suspension is to be in certain individual villages. I wish the Government to state how they were able to make this distinction between some villages and others. If it were due to the fact that applications were received from those villages, may I remind the Government that the principle on which they agreed to grant was on a general average and not on individual applications? I assure Your Excellency's Government that the orders of the Government in variation of their original figures have created great hardship and keen disappointment. I appeal to Your Excellency's Government again to grant the remissions and suspensions originally contemplated at least in the collection of the May kists.

"Another point I wish to refer is the question of railway extension in Malabar and South Kanara. I am anxious that the Government should not shelve these projects at the stages in which they are, merely on the ground that materials for constructing those lines will not be available for some time. Even if the materials are available, the Government are not in a position to start construction at once. With each of these projects there are some details to be worked out to bring the papers to completion stage and before construction can be undertaken. I request Your Excellency's Government to push the completion of these preliminaries. With the Hassan-Mangalore railway project, for example, there was an offer by the Mysore Darbar to consider the question whether they will agree to construct their portion of the line if the Government or the South Kanara District Board will bring the line to the frontier. The Darbar has been vigorously working at their scheme of railways to the Malnad tracts above South Kanara and it will be advantageous to both parties if we can persuade the Railway Board to come to some agreement or decision with the Mysore Darbar on this question which has long been hanging fire though finally reported on by the Special Engineer Mr. Richards more than two years ago.

(Mr. Sadasiva Bhat ; Mr. Yaqub Hasan.)

"I wish to urge also that somehow the development of the natural resources of South Kanara does not receive due attention at the hands of Government. This is probably due to the fact that as a rule there are not many high officers at the capital who have seen considerable service in that district, or who have given any thought to that subject. Our heavy rainfall, all running to waste, our numerous rivers, waterfalls and backwaters, our extensive but inaccessible forests, our vast areas of hillside and waste land at the disposal of Government from sea level up to 3,000 feet—I feel that Government may do well to consider all these conditions and work out a scheme for utilizing this excess rainfall, for turning our streams and backwaters to be more useful as means of communication and for purposes of irrigation of lands now left uncultivated and make the immense quantities of forest produce and timber, now valueless on the spot, available on the coast.

"I have very little to say on the budget itself. I congratulate Your Excellency on being able to make an increased provision for education and sanitation and that Your Excellency has been able to afford extended relief to the poorer subordinates of Government. We cannot be certain that next year conditions will be better and prices easier."

The Hon'ble YAQUB HASAN SAHIB Bahadur :—"Your Excellency, this is the third budget that this Council is discussing at the end of its three years' course. It is a matter of great satisfaction that the war and the uncertainty about its duration do no longer enter into our calculations in such serious affairs of life as budget making. Though war is happily ended, its after effects will continue to embarrass the country's finances for a long time to come. The Provincial Government is however saved the necessity of making both ends meet as far as the effects of war are concerned. The only sources of revenue which the local Government shares equally with the Imperial Government have not been affected adversely. On the other hand, revenues under land, stamps, excise, income-tax and major irrigation works have gone on steadily growing. There will however be a loss of 10 lakhs in the income-tax receipt on account of the relief given to a large number of people whose income is below Rs. 2,000 a year. The Government of India will however make up our share of the loss by a grant from Imperial revenues. The Government of India deserves the grateful thanks of this Province for the consideration shown to persons of small incomes at the time when the high prices of necessities have made life miserable for this class of people.

"It is not a good augury for the future that the first year after the war should begin with a deficit. There was a surplus of 48.70 lakhs in 1917-18 but the small surplus (3.34) budgeted for last year turned into a small deficit of 4.99. In the current year it is anticipated that the deficit will be as much as 75.25 lakhs. I am glad no attempt has been made to avoid this by curtailing expenditure under such useful heads as education and sanitation. The closing balance alone will be affected which (12,084 lakhs) will still stand as high as it was in 1908-09, when there was a surplus of 20.0 lakhs. We had deficit in the first three war years (52.99, 65.44 and 14 lakhs respectively) and the closing balance in the last two of these three years was a little above 110 lakhs. The position is therefore, in spite of the deficit, quite satisfactory for which Your Excellency has our congratulations.

"I do not look upon the growth of excise revenue with satisfaction. This is filthy revenue and I hope a day will soon come when these figures are entirely wiped off our budget estimates. The United States of America have recently set up an example which behoves all civilized governments to follow.

"I have been thanking the Government year after year for their efforts in the past and in anticipation of further efforts in the future on behalf of Muhammadan education, but I feel that I cannot this year consistently with my self-respect give credit to Your Excellency's Government for wise utilization of the country's resources in this direction. The Government College for Muhammadans is simply superfluous and all the money to be spent in buildings, equipment and library in order to make it conform to the conditions of affiliation as pointed out and undertaken by the Director of Public Instruction in the last senate meeting will be sheer waste considering the fact that within a few furlongs of Umdah Bagh exists the most up-to-date Government institution of the Presidency College. All that was needed was to admit in the latter college a larger proportion of Muslim students than was hitherto the case. All this money which will run to the tune of some lakhs by the time the college is completed, would have yielded better returns in the production of Muslim graduates if it was partly spent in scholarships and partly in helping the community in raising their private educational institutions to a higher status and a better degree of efficiency.

"We had been budgeting a sum for the last two years for a Muhammadan Secondary school at Trichinopoly, but that school has not yet come into existence. I would like to know who is responsible for this delay.

"I am glad provision has been made for a training school for Muhammadan women at Trichinopoly. I wish Government had adopted my suggestion and budgeted a sum of money for providing suitable buildings for the Georgetown secondary school and the elementary schools that Government maintain for Muhammadans in this city. Still I hope Government will give their attention to this subject and purchase building sites and get building plans made, so that a provision may be made in the next year's budget for putting the scheme into execution.

(Mr. Yaqub Hasan.)

"I am glad half a lakh is provided for establishing a medical school for women at Madras, my resolution about which, the Government were pleased to accept last year. I wish Government had made a provision also for one medical school for men, preferably in the ceded districts, the urgent need of which has been recognized by Government. Nothing appears to have been done last year (for which no report is yet published) in the matter of establishing additional women and children's dispensaries towards which the Government in accepting my resolution in February 1917, had promised to take all practicable steps. The dearth of qualified medical women is no doubt responsible for this. I hope it may be possible to do something in this direction in the ensuing year. Now that officers are returning to civil duty from military service, it should be possible to extend medical relief more largely. The appointment of travelling sub-assistant surgeons is a desirable innovation which I hope will prove successful enough to make it a permanent feature of the programme of medical relief in this Presidency. While on this subject, a word on the reorganization of medical services may not perhaps be out of place. The manner in which the inquiry is being conducted in camera by a committee has naturally aroused public suspicion as to the bona fides of the Government and it is necessary that that suspicion be allayed by taking the public into the confidence of the Government.

"It is a matter of satisfaction that the agricultural department is being expanded and reorganized. The increase of budgeted expenditure to the extent of nearly 50 per cent is not at all in excess of the needs of the department. Experiments in Cambodia cotton should have, by this time, advanced at least one step further than the initial stage. Now that a suitable site has been provided, it is hoped the department will be able to show some progress this year. The commercial community as well as the cotton mill industry keenly look forward to developments in this line. Provision of only Rs. 10,000 for the development of silk industry is wholly inadequate. The department has asked for a well-trained specialist to run a fully-equipped silk station at Kollegal and I hope the specialist will be appointed in the course of this year. The revival of indigo industry appears to be doomed to end in failure with the end of the war.

"With a view to retain the services of Mr. Innes as Director of Industries I moved a resolution in the February meeting that his salary be increased beyond the figure laid down in the original estimates. I was pleased to see that Government increased the amount still further in the revised estimate. It has caused a great disappointment to me and to the public, both Indian and European, to see that the experiences that Mr. Innes had gained in the course of some years are lost to the department at a time when some tangible result was expected to come out of them. There will always be the fear of such contingency arising as long as Indian Civil Service men continue to be placed in charge of this department. It is high time that Directors and Assistant Directors are recruited from business and industrial circles. No provision has been made for the establishment of a technological institute in connexion with the Calicut Soap factory. The teaching side has not been established yet to this industry and yet the Government persist in carrying on the manufacture of soap on a large commercial scale even after the industry has become firmly established in this Presidency. The retirement of Sir Frederick Nicholson should have been availed of for bringing the fisheries under the control of the Director of Industries. Instead of promoting in the usual course the Assistant Director of Fisheries who happens to be a highly efficient hand, to the Director's post, a European gentleman has been pitch-forked into the place who had lesser claim to it. My resolution for the provision of a lump sum for a commercial museum was disallowed at the February meeting on the plea of irrelevancy although it could properly come under the head of miscellaneous and scientific department. The attitude of the Government in respect of the resolution I have moved at this meeting makes me hope that something will be done towards this object this year, notwithstanding there being no specific provision for it in the budget. The control imposed on tanning industry has been removed as far as skins are concerned and it will be removed on 1st July next in the case of hides also. The huge surplus stocks of hides that Government have in the United Kingdom have depressed the market of tanned hides and productions are being restricted to avoid a grave situation. It is too soon to foresee whether this industry will again attain the pre-war position after the disturbing factors of post-war creation have disappeared.

"Mr. Innes has submitted to the Government of India proposals for preventing the adulteration of hides which have been drawn up with the help and approval of the trade and the Government's decision concerning the same is anxiously awaited.

"I am still of the opinion that the control of civil supplies has produced a result contrary to the object for which the department was created. Government did not rise equal to the occasion when there was a crying need for action in the matter of regulating civil supplies. To insist on keeping up this belated department after the need for it has gone and after the war has ended, does not appear to me to be a sound policy. The fact that expenditure in this department is met from Imperial revenues was no doubt the principal reason for the non-official indifference to this subject.

"I omitted to mention under the education head that I had wished that the Government had adopted my suggestion and budgeted a sum of money for providing suitable buildings for a Muhammadan secondary school in Georgetown and the elementary school for Muhammadans which the Government are maintaining. I trust that some steps will be taken in the matter of selecting suitable sites and drawing up plans, etc., for these buildings so that at least next year when a suggestion is made for a provision under this head it may not be said that there is no estimate to go upon."

At this stage the Council adjourned for a short interval.

7TH APRIL 1919.] (Mr. M. Ramachandra Rao; Sir. Fairless Barber; the President.)

The Council re-assembled after the interval at 3 p.m.

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO :—"Your Excellency, before offering a few remarks on the budget I may be permitted to refer to one or two remarks made by my Honourable Friends who have preceded me. One of these is that of the Hon'ble Sir Fairless Barber who stated that the members of his community desired the co-operation of the Indian Members of this Council and that all of us are intent on the same purpose of the improvement of the masses. Your Excellency, we fully reciprocate that sentiment. During the last few years during which the Minto-Morley reforms have been in operation several resolutions have been brought forward in this Council which I venture to think—and in fact almost the whole work of this Council from our point of view—has been devoted to the purpose of improving the condition of the masses, improving their economic position and affording them better educational facilities. In fact if my Honourable Friend will look into the headings and the general trend of the resolutions brought forward, generally our aim has been in the direction of producing that improvement which the Hon'ble Sir Fairless Barber so much desires. My complaint is that those members who represent the commercial and industrial interests in this Council, the European members, have not been so anxious to co-operate with us in this task of reconstruction. I should like to ask him to point to a single instance in which any resolution has been brought forward in this Council for the betterment of the masses or any suggestion made to us in the Council or elsewhere to co-operate with us to produce the results which both of us desire. I am tempted to make these remarks, Your Excellency, because the Honourable Member has stated that much of our work is something like putting the cart before the horse and he endorsed the statement of the Hon'ble Mr. Thonger to that effect, in this Council, which he made a few days ago. In fact I have not correctly understood the Hon'ble Sir Fairless Barber, but Your Excellency, that is the impression which his remarks have left upon me."

The Hon'ble Sir FAIRLESS BARBER :—"If I might explain, I said that the Hon'ble Mr. Thonger's remarks were not inapt and unjust, but I thought it was not fair to lay the whole blame on our legal friends."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO :—"I am thankful to the Hon'ble Sir Fairless Barber for coming to our rescue and exonerating us from the whole blame for this state of things. He says that the blame for the present condition of things is distributable in portion to the Government and in portion to us and a portion is allocated to himself and other members. That is a fair distribution, and I am prepared to take it in that way. Your Excellency, I do not wish to pursue the matter further. If my friend or any representative of the European community in this Council is anxious to co-operate with us for the betterment of the masses, I may tell him that the only way in which to do that is to vote with us, say on the question of compulsory elementary education or on the question of improving the condition of the depressed classes or on the question of improving the condition of rural sanitation. I may mention one hundred other subjects which were brought up and ventilated before this Council in the last few years. So much for my Honourable Friend Sir Fairless Barber."

"The Hon'ble the Raja of Ramnad referred to the feeling of disappointment in connexion with the work of this Council. Your Excellency, I fear that not only myself but several Honourable Members of the Council have somewhat the same feelings in regard to the net results of our work in this Council. Your Excellency, the point is that the main reason for this state of things is the system under which we are working in this Council, and one of these is the question of the official block in this Council. I am tempted to quote in this connexion the remarks made by the Marquis of Crewe in the House of Lords when the Minto-Morley reforms were under discussion where he pointed out the evils of being in a perpetual minority in a deliberative or legislative assembly such as this. The Marquis of Crewe said as follows :—"The noble Lord said last night that after all there was no great hardship in being in a perpetual minority and he pointed to those benches as illustrating the possibility of being in that position and yet surviving. Well my Lord, appearances are sometimes deceptive; we may maintain a calm joviality, but the noble Lord will guess, if he does not know, the effect on our general character, our tempers and our minds, of living in a state of being perpetually outvoted. I am speaking quite seriously when I say that if the noble Lord opposite had shared our fate, during the ten years before we came into office, he would know the truth of what I am saying. Most of us towards the end of those ten years were beginning to lose interest in public life, and began to think it might be well to turn our attention to the cultivation of our gardens."

"Your Excellency, some of us do feel that the work in this Council has tried our temper and has had some effect upon our general desire to appreciate the efforts of the Government and altogether there is no concealing the fact that this state of things under which we are perpetually outvoted in this Council has given us a sense of despair and despondency. I think the blame is due to some extent to the Hon'ble Sir Fairless Barber and his friends for they could have made our minority in this Council, if they co-operated with us, into a majority."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT :—"I hoped to hear the Honourable Member on the budget; but two-thirds of his time is already exhausted."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO :—"I have only five minutes. Much has been said on the budget already by my Honourable Friends and I do not wish to say much on it. I have tried to use these occasions not for the discussion of the budget but for telling the Council what we feel on some of these important subjects. I may recall the observation of one of the Finance Members that the budget day is a day when everybody speaks on everything but the budget. Once a year we are let off to tell Your Excellency's Government what we feel without the restrictions of debate and without being pulled up under the rules of procedure."

1024 RESOLUTION RE IMPROVEMENT OF THE ACOUSTIC PROPERTIES OF THE COUNCIL CHAMBER AND FACILITIES FOR THE ATTENDANCE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF VERNACULAR DAILIES.

(Mr. Todhunter; Mr. Venkatapati Raju; Mr. Krishna Rao; the President.) [3RD APRIL 1919.]

To facilitate the meeting of Honourable Members, it is necessary first of all to catch your members. Now most of the Honourable Members are busy men and they all generally arrange to arrive here only a day or two before the meeting and to leave on the evening of the day on which it closes, and I venture to doubt whether under the present conditions, it would be easy to arrange for many meetings when the Council is not sitting.

"As regards facilitating the work of Honourable Members, we have a library for them which, I understand, is not very largely used. Nor do I gather that the Legislative Department have had many or even any requests for assistance in other respects. So long therefore as the Honourable Members do not utilise the facilities which are available to them, I venture to doubt the necessity for appointing a committee to devise for them further facilities. If any specific request for help is received, we shall be prepared to consider it.

"The last of the Honourable Member's objects is one which I am sure will commend itself to all Honourable Members and that is the avoidance of re-duplication of questions and resolutions. But this, I would submit, is hardly a question for a mixed committee. It seems to me to be a question for the Honourable non-official Members to deal with themselves.

"To sum up, Your Excellency, it seems to me that a large part of this resolution should be dealt with by the non-official members themselves without the assistance of officials and that as to the rest, while there is no doubt that a careful enquiry will have to be made as to the necessities in respect of lobbies, reporters' galleries, committee rooms and all the paraphernalia of Parliamentary Government before the reform proposals come into effect, it would be a mistake to make radical changes in these respects for the purposes of a Council which has only a short time to live in its present form, and it would be premature to examine the question for the purposes of the new Council pending a decision as to its strength and the settlement of details as to its functions. I must therefore oppose the resolution on the ground that it is partly unnecessary and partly premature.

The Hon'ble Mr. B. VENKATAPATI RAJU:—"Your Excellency, I agree with the Hon'ble Mr. Todhunter that with reference to the last two clauses (c) and (d), it would have been far better if they had not been included in this resolution, because the non-official Members of the Council can themselves manage to secure their object without extraneous help. As to the other points, making additional provision for vernacular reporters and also making better provision for the audience to hear us better, I do not think there is any use in leaving that matter in the hands of officials and non-officials because the non-officials have nothing to do with it, because it is not a matter of policy but it is a matter of engineering skill. The help of some expert in engineering is needed and not at all that of non-officials however eminent they may be. For that purpose I would request the Hon'ble Mr. Narasimha Ayyar to omit clauses (c) and (d) and also to omit the combination of officials and non-officials for the purpose of accommodating seats, which things may be left to the Government to do by taking proper advice from experts and making such arrangements as are possible for the audience to hear us instead of making them disappear on the ground that they do not hear us. We do not want any assistance from non-officials in the matter; we are laymen; we do not know anything about them."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. KRISHNA RAO:—"Your Excellency, I think that in view of the discussion which has taken place, it is necessary that before this resolution is put to the Council, an amendment is effected. With this object in view I would suggest an amendment which will, I have no doubt, meet with the acceptance of the Honourable Mover. As pointed out by the Hon'ble Mr. Venkatapati Raju, we need not ask for the things mentioned in clauses (c) and (d). So far as those two points are concerned, it is essentially for the non-official Members how best they can communicate with one another without duplicating questions and the deletion of clauses (c) and (d). I would also further amend the resolution as it is not necessary for a committee to be appointed in respect of the objects mentioned in clauses (a) and (b) and as the Government may take up the task and arrange for the speeches being better heard and for enabling more vernacular dailies to send their representatives. I will read the resolution measures (a) for speeches made in the Council being better heard, especially by the public in the balconies of the Council; (b) for greater provision of space and facilities for enabling more vernacular dailies to send their representatives to attend and report the Council's proceedings. The portion for the appointment of a committee and the word 'recommend' are deleted and clauses (c) and (d) are also omitted, so that we definitely suggest that the Government may devise measures for the purpose of improving the hall. I do not think that so far as this portion of the resolution is concerned, the Hon'ble Mr. Todhunter has stated anything against it. He only said that he would wait and see how the enlarged Council develops. It is quite possible in this hall to make the necessary changes. The hall is big enough to accommodate 150. It only requires some adjustment. I do not think it requires the formal introduction of a Bill in the Parliament."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"Will the Honourable Member put the amendment in writing?"

RESOLUTIONS RE IMPROVEMENT OF THE ACOUSTIC PROPERTIES OF THE COUNCIL CHAMBER AND FACILITIES FOR THE ATTENDANCE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF VERNACULAR DAILIES AND RAILWAY FACILITIES FOR THE TRANSPORT OF PIECE-GOODS.

3RD APRIL 1919.] (Mr. Narasimha Ayyar; Mr. Todhunter; the President; Sir Francis Spring; Mr. Rama Ayyangar.)

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR:—"I request information. I was not able to follow the Hon'ble Mr. Todhunter. If the Legislative Department is applied to for help, would the Government consider the kind of help we want? I want help in the way of appointing a clerk in the Legislative Department. Would the Government agree to it?"

The Hon'ble Mr. C. G. TODHUNTER:—"No request for assistance has hitherto been made. If any request for assistance is made, it will be considered."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR:—"That covers the question of appointing a clerk. I accept the amendment proposed by the Hon'ble Mr. A. S. Krishna Rao."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"The amendment reads thus:—
'This Council recommends to His Excellency in Council to devise measures (a) for speeches made in the Council being better heard, especially by the public in the balconies of the Council; (b) for greater provision of space and facilities for enabling more vernacular dailies to send their representatives to attend and report the Council's proceedings.'

The Hon'ble Mr. C. G. TODHUNTER:—"I am afraid, Your Excellency, I cannot accept the amendment. The point in issue is whether the defects are so bad as to render it necessary to take immediate measures in anticipation of the measures that we are bound to take a year or two hence. This Council Chamber has served us since Lord Morley's reforms came into force. I do not think that there is any such crying evil as to call for immediate remedy. At the same time, may I point out that the whole question of acoustics has been gone into with great care? I have here a large file on the subject which shows that various suggestions, such as the stretching of piano wires across the ceiling, have been examined and given up. It is not as if the committee would have to inquire into a matter that has not been examined."

The Hon'ble Sir FRANCIS SPRING:—"Just now, Sir, as I was coming in from lunch, as I arrived at the bottom of the hall I saw that the Hon'ble Mr. Todhunter was speaking, so I halted and tried whether I could hear him. Just beyond the benches I could not hear him. As regards the Hon'ble Mr. Venkatapati Raju I can never hear a solitary word of his and the same is the case with regard to one or two gentlemen opposite. But I can hear the words of Members on this side rather better. The acoustic properties of the Chamber are as bad as they can possibly be. I do not think putting up curtains or laying matting on the floor has made any appreciable difference. A good deal has been said of an acoustic expert. But I do not believe that there is such a person. Things can only be set right by experiment. It is for the Hon'ble Mr. Hutton to tell us what experiment might be tried. What I have in my mind in connexion with the enlarged Council is, that we must have galleries all round, sloping galleries one behind the other. That will probably break up the echo and stop that inconvenience and at the same time will leave much more space for the reporters. The middle space will be available for the enlarged Council. I do not think it would be wise for Government to plunge into an expense of Rs. 40,000 or Rs. 50,000 on the inexperienced advice that I could offer. I think the Hon'ble Mr. Hutton might experiment with a few bamboo mattings. My own belief is that in some such way the acoustics could be set right.

"Another inconvenience may be referred to, the terrific glare from the white walls. For the last five years I have asked successive Secretaries about this though not the present Secretary. I refer particularly to the glare of the sun off the polished white walls of the outside court. It is a serious inconvenience under which Members suffer but can be remedied easily and cheaply."

The Hon'ble Mr. C. G. TODHUNTER:—"I am a layman in this matter and I am prepared to bow to the high authority of Sir Francis Spring. If he considers that experiments can easily be made at a small cost to improve the existing acoustic properties of the Chamber I am quite prepared to agree to their being made on the lines which he has suggested. In these circumstances, I accept the resolution as amended."

The resolution as amended was accepted.

RESOLUTION RE RAILWAY FACILITIES FOR THE TRANSPORT OF PIECE-GOODS.

The Hon'ble Mr. K. RAMA AYYANGAR:—"On the assurance given by the Hon'ble Mr. Campbell that he will inquire into the specific grievances brought to his notice, I do not want to press the resolution No. VII."

The resolution was not pressed. The resolution ran thus—

"VII. This Council recommends to His Excellency the Governor in Council that steps be taken to provide sufficient accommodation by railways to transport piece-goods, other clothes and yarn to the mufassal stations from Madras and relieve the situation caused to the cloth dealers by want of the same."

(Mr. M. Ramachandra Rao; Mr. Chidambaranatha Mudaliyar.) [7TH APRIL 1919.]

"Two other remarks which I intended to make relate to the financial position of this Presidency. In this connexion I have a complaint to make. We have tried for opportunities in this Council to ventilate our grievances in connexion with the scheme of financial devolution which has been adumbrated in the Joint Report, which shows that this province, if these proposals are accepted, ought to contribute a sum of 428 lakhs as contribution for the expenditure of the Imperial Government. I gave notice of a resolution, and several Honourable Members similarly gave notice of resolutions, but unfortunately discussion on that matter was not permitted. Perhaps Honourable Members are already aware of the state of things which, if this scheme is to be accepted, would be the result. The Province of Madras would have to contribute 128 lakhs and the net surplus that will be left to us if this scheme is sanctioned would be 63 lakhs. The figures given for the other provinces are as follows: Bombay would have a net surplus of 13 lakhs, Bengal 10 lakhs, the United Provinces 48 lakhs, the Punjab 32 lakhs, Burma 21 lakhs, Bihar and Orissa 6 lakhs, the Central Provinces 5 lakhs, Assam 3 lakhs. So that the contribution from Madras will be the heaviest, and it is assumed in this distribution that the gross provincial expenditure is 840 lakhs. The point that I would like to press most insistently upon Your Excellency's Government is that we as trustees of the future people of this Presidency ought to secure from the Imperial Government a fair and adequate share of the revenues raised in this province for the purpose of provincial expenditure. I contend that this scheme is entirely unjust and altogether inadequate to meet the needs of this province. I am even prepared to say that if this scheme of financial devolution is the one that should accompany the scheme of constitutional reforms, I think the result will be that we shall have no finance at the back of the constitutional reforms. Your Excellency, we have only to look at the figures in the Financial Statement.

"I join my Honourable Friends who have preceded me in offering our felicitations to Your Excellency's Government and to the Finance Member for the very ample provision that has been made for expenditure on education, sanitation and all the various services in this Presidency. But after all we have to recognise this fact that it is really a deficit budget. Our income is 848 lakhs and our expenditure is 918 lakhs and the deficit is, as the Honourable Member will see, 70 lakhs; I am afraid, Your Excellency, that if this budget had been sent up by any district board, I am sure that the Hon'ble Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar would at once have rejected it or at once returned it for amendment so as to balance the ordinary normal revenues with the ordinary normal expenditure. I recognise at the same time that a portion of this expenditure is due to the large expenditure on war allowance, but nevertheless I contend, Your Excellency, that the financial position of this Presidency will only be bettered when we have adequate revenues for the usual expenditure in this province.

"Your Excellency in bringing these remarks to a close I should like to add a word or two to what my Honourable Friend Mr. Rama Ayyangar has said in support of the claim of the Provincial Service in this province. I need not make any lengthy reference, for the points in connexion with these services have been discussed at great length for the last five or six years. The general position is that in 1886 when the Public Service Commission sat for the first time the number of officers employed in the Provincial Executive Service was 61; to-day it is 148 and about 50 people are employed on acting appointments so that we have about 240 men in the Executive Service or nearly as many as in the Provincial Judicial Service. The number of superior appointments which are open to these 300 men are four District Judgeships, three Collectorships, the post of Secretary to the Revenue Board, one Under-Secretaryship and one Secretaryship under the Government. I do not wish to include in this category of superior appointments, fifteen Sub-Collectorships which are listed for that service. Your Excellency, we do not know what shape the question of recruitment for the public services is likely to take, but I would suggest that in order to remove discontent in the service the only way is to temporarily list some more superior posts to this branch until such time as those are able, by being recruited under new conditions, to take their place as District Judges. I do not think such a course would in any way be unjust to the members of the Indian Civil Service who are now in service. There have been three new districts recently and there have been a number of new appointments added to the Indian Civil Service cadre, and I think Your Excellency's Government will do them justice if some temporary listing takes place in order to remove the discontent which undoubtedly now prevails in that service.

"In bringing my remarks to a close I wish to reiterate what I said last year in making an appeal to the members of Indian Civil Service to make these constitutional reforms a success by co-operating in working out these reforms and placing themselves at the head of the best national forces in this country and drawing out co-operation from all parts of the country in making this great change a reality."

The Hon'ble Mr. K. CHIDAMBARANATHA MUDALIYAR:—"Your Excellency, in making a few observations on the budget, as usual, I wish to draw particular attention to the very inadequate provision made in the revised estimate for this year with regard to the abnormal agricultural situation and also the very high estimate that has been made for the next year, for I feel that according to the estimate given by the Director of Civil Supplies while in 1917-18 under paddy alone there were 10 million odd acres, in 1918-19 there have been 1 million acres less of cultivated land, so that about one-eleventh of the cultivated land under paddy has decreased. The provision under remission, in the revised estimate amounts, according to the reply to my interpellation, under all cultivations, comes to Rs. 25 lakhs. Under paddy alone on ryotwari tenure lands there is a demand of 600 and odd lakhs and about Rs. 25 lakhs are provided for all remissions whereas in paddy alone there is a decrease in cultivation by one-eleventh. Why I wish to draw particular attention to this matter is to show the extremely inadequate provision made under the head of remissions in the districts which have suffered by the abnormally bad season during the year 1918-19. There is in addition to this fall in the cultivation a fall in the yield of the crop so much so that I particularly wish to place before the Government that the provision under remission appears to be extremely low, extremely inadequate and absolutely insufficient to meet even in any degree the actual difficulties of the land-owning public.

"Your Excellency, it seems to me that such abnormal bad years should give us certain lessons both to devise certain immediate remedies and to devise standing remedies. I suggested in a resolution of mine that particularly in such abnormal bad years as the last it is better that we do not proceed entirely upon the official estimate of the whole situation, but it would be advisable both in the interest of the State and in the interest of the people to have a committee composed of both officials and non-officials to make an inquiry into the situation and to make their own recommendations. But under some pretext or other that resolution has not had a chance of being discussed in the Council, though I am pretty certain that the discussion of it may not have had much by way of practical results. Anyhow I wish to lay before the Council that when the landholders form about 90 per cent of the people of this Presidency some more care ought to be taken of their difficulties and their hardships and some real and substantial provision must be made in the budget estimate to meet particularly such an abnormally bad situation as we find ourselves face to face with in the present year.

"The Madras Ryotwari Landholders' Association proposed that there should be a provision of at least 50 lakhs under remissions. I would certainly go much further. From the figures that I have already quoted, it must have gone even much higher, and the provision under remission must have been far more substantial if it is to meet in any degree the actual difficulties of the landholding population at the present moment. Even now I do not think that it is too late if only the Government had the will to do it and to go a little further to make actual inquiries in the suffering districts and come to the rescue of the people in a more substantial manner.

"As for the permanent lessons that you may draw from such a bad year as this one, the most important lesson seems to me to help particularly in dry districts in the sinking of more wells by the Government and the advancing of loans under the Agricultural Loans Act and doing it also through the means of the co-operative societies which certainly would ensure both the position of the Government and the position of the landholders a great deal better than they are at present; co-operative societies can be depended upon, looking at the fact that they are at present almost entirely under Government supervision and control, to make these grants, according to the needs, in a wider and ampler way to the particular localities than is now being done through the means of local revenue officials. The cost of getting these loans will be much less, and the co-operative society in a particular rural tract will have a good idea of the actual character of the man who applies for loans and the Government will have ample security for the money they advance through these societies for the purpose of loans.

"Another point that I wish to draw the particular attention of the Government to is that the area under food-grains is decreasing. That is a matter which in my opinion requires special attention. While the area under paddy has risen to some extent, the area under the other dry food-crops has decreased considerably. It may be that the commercial crops are taking the place of these food-crops to some extent, but it appears to me that this is a matter which requires special examination by the Government to arrive at conclusions which would be really satisfactory, particularly in bad years like the one we have had, so that there may not be any substantial fall in the quantity of food-crops in the province. I would even go further and advocate a small duty on the export of non-food-grains if the Government can see their way to agree with the suggestion so that in bad years the public of this province may not have the necessity of expecting their supply from other provinces.

"Another matter that I wish to invite the special attention of the Government to is the repair of survey stones and the abnormal cost which is being charged under the name of such repairs. It is often keenly felt to be a very heavy burden upon the villagers. During the last eight years I find that the amount that comes under revenue for the time and labour of the staff has more than quadrupled. In 1912-13 it was Rs. 24,000; in 1919-20 the amount budgeted for comes to 1.12 lakhs. Your Excellency, I think it is a very serious matter and it is being very keenly felt by the public at large. I wish the Government would make a thorough examination of the whole question and see if this rise which is being constantly kept up year after year cannot be checked and some steps devised so that this source of trouble and burden to the landholder may not go up as it has done during the last eight years.

"Your Excellency, I hope Your Excellency's Government have in their most careful consideration the question of giving the Secretary of State as regards the Kannambadi reservoir the particular results that he desired of this year, and the best way to give that is what its effect will be on the lands under the Cauvery irrigation if the Kannambadi reservoir were to be completed. I find that the Secretary of State has referred to the Madras Government the question of making a report as to how its effect will be observed, during this year. I earnestly trust that the Madras Government will, as they have always done, most earnestly try to do their best in the matter of reporting the true state of affairs and the situation of the Cauvery irrigation during the last year.

(Mr. Chidambaranatha Mudaliyar; Mr. Narasimha Ayyar.) [7TH APRIL 1919.]

"Your Excellency, I am glad that an attempt is being made to introduce irrigation panchayats. There is one suggestion that I wish to make before I close my remarks, that is the lesser the number of panchayats in villages are, the better would it be in the interests of the public. If for each aspect of life there should be a different panchayat, there should be an irrigation panchayat, a revenue panchayat, a litigation panchayat—if in that way there should be a number of panchayats it would not work well in the rural parts. What I would suggest is that the number of panchayats should be as few as possible in these rural areas and let the different Acts give them different powers so that there would be a few bodies invested with different sets of powers. That in my opinion would work well in these rural areas. With these few remarks I earnestly trust Your Excellency's Government would attempt to do their best in the matter of giving relief to the land holding public, particularly in such an abnormally bad season as we have seen in the last year."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR:—"Your Excellency, three years ago in this hall we had a series of speeches from non-official members which were characterised by Sir P. S. Sivaswami Ayyar in his reply as a gloomy foreboding characteristic of all bodies on the eve of dissolution. The gloomy foreboding referred to matters which have again been dealt with in the remarks of the Hon'ble the Raja of Ramnad and the Hon'ble Mr. Ramachandra Rao just now. That is the very little extent to which the co-operation between the officials and non-officials in this Council seemed to go and the doubtful utility of any efforts being made in this direction. Honourable Members one after another deplored the great slaughter, the perpetual slaughter of non-official resolutions however constructive they might be and the heavy giant-like use of the official block which leaves no chance for these resolutions to survive. The question now is have these forebodings been justified or has the answer given by Sir P. S. Sivaswami Ayyar been justified? He hoped that things were getting on for the better and that there was very little justification for these forebodings. I am afraid, Your Excellency, that from my experience of these three years it is impossible to say that our forebodings have been without justification. I notice that what was then said could justly be repeated and has been justly repeated now. It may be pointed out that in a few directions something like an advance has been made or promised. For instance in the all-important matter as to the part which the non-officials take in dealing with the budget it may be pointed out that an advance has been made. Non-official members were consulted this year at an earlier stage than on former occasions and they have greater chance of moulding the shape of the financial statement and the budget to a greater extent than in previous years. But that is all in appearance. When we look at the way in which resolutions were treated at the last meeting and compare it with the way in which they were treated previously, I think it would require a strong microscope to discover any difference. I think there may be an apparent difference of treatment but the result is the same. You may change the form of the institution but if the spirit that inhabits it is the same the result is, the working of the particular institution would still remain the same. That seems to be the state of things in regard to this institution. I shall only express again the hope that soon there may be scope for a real and substantial change both in the spirit and the form in the nature of our work."

"I shall pass on to consider other matters. Taking up the budget, the first thing that comes to my mind is about the totals shown there. I join my voice with that of the Honourable Members who have preceded me and pointed out that the totals available for expenditure in this province are too small when compared with what in justice and equity we should have. We wish to strengthen the hands of Your Excellency's Government in again putting forward the demand that the Madras Presidency should not be called upon to bear such an unequal and heavy share of the burden of Indian administration and more of the revenues raised in the province should be left to be utilized for the numerous needs of the public of the Province. I know that some justifications have been attempted. For instance in the Montagu-Chelmsford report the justification is put forward that the matter is historical, it has been there all along. I consider that a historical explanation really means no explanation. For instance, it could have been very well said in defence of the rotten boroughs which the Act of 1832 did away with in the United Kingdom that they were historically justified. Historical justification means a statement of fact, which may mean the statement of a grievance. Your Excellency's Government has the strong and united support of the representatives of the public in this Council and also the unanimous voice of the public in this Presidency in this matter."

"I shall proceed to take up the head of Excise and offer just a few remarks on it. We notice from the budget that there is an increase in the consumption of country spirits and it is also pointed out that there is an increase in the consumption of toddy. This is simultaneous with the remarkable advance made in the United States of America. In the budget however we do not find any serious expression of regret at this increased consumption. High wages and other facts are mentioned as if this is a fact which can be passed by with indifference. I really think that what goes on in the West has to be looked at for the purpose of deriving enlightenment here. The day has long gone by when the Government could state that a few faddists, presumably Brahmans, in their antipathy to drink would, if placed in charge of the excise policy, create grievous discomfort to the drinking classes and therefore any reform on the lines of total prohibition would savour of bigotry in a statesman. Those days are gone. In America which cannot be accused of Brahmanism or any caste prejudice against drink, we find that the total prohibition policy has gone on purely on statesmanship and on the ground of the greatest good of the greatest number. I think that Your Excellency's Government will, even at the risk of losing some of these valuable lakhs or even crores of the revenue that we see in the budget under the head 'excise', seriously undertake a revision of policy in this matter subject to what the Government of India may have to say until our financial autonomy is established. I hope that a departure in this direction will ere long be embarked on by Your Excellency's Government."

[7TH APRIL 1919.]

(Mr. Narasimha Ayyar.)

"I shall proceed to the head of forests. Under the head of forests I notice there is some increase of expenditure on additional temporary staff, and that leads me to the other question, namely, as to what extra benefit this forest department is rendering to the public. It may be remembered that when the Forest Committee's report was published, it was hailed with acclamation by the public as heralding the dawn of a new era and the Government realized the extent of oppression and dissatisfaction existing in the villages which came in close contact with the forest subordinates. Forest panchayats were being looked for and just when a few were started, the public acclaimed them with great joy. But since then not only do we find that the progress of the forest panchayats has been slow but some unfortunate pronouncements have been made in this hall which seemed to suggest that the Government did not endorse the views of the Forest Committee. That statement was a statement made by some members of the Government that the picture of extortion and oppression by forest subordinates was overdrawn in that Committee's report. I can give my personal testimony to the fact that it is certainly not overdrawn and if any Honourable Member would like to have that verified, I would ask him to follow the worthy example of Mr. Horne, and go with me, and he would see widespread prevalence of oppression and corruption. I wish to point out that more of these forest panchayats are wanted, and it is necessary to increase their number. You can try and have special officers. The district forest officers not having much time, the Government should not hesitate to go in for an additional staff and they will have the hearty support of the Honourable Members of this Council."

"I come next to the police. I notice that there has been a steady increase of expenditure. I notice also that the Hon'ble Mr. Davidson said yesterday that more police stations were wanted and he asked, 'you complain of the expenditure on the police but you are the gentlemen who want more police stations.' My answer to that is brief. One is by no means contradictory of the other. You can have more police stations and yet not increase the total expenditure, because it may be possible to cut down the expenditure in other directions. That is very largely the opinion of non-officials, that the expenditure at the top has been increased in a manner not warranted by public opinion or sound principles of police administration and that the expenditure in the lower ranks of the department is not incurred in the way in which the public would like it to be incurred. There is absolutely no contradiction in the way in which this Council has rejected the proposal for increasing the number of police stations. In any case this Council has rejected the proposal for increasing the number of police stations. What I say is in spite of the fact that there are not as many police stations as are wanted we find an increase in the expenditure. What is the justification? Can it be said that the public are creating too much trouble and cannot be managed without such an amount of expenditure? Let us compare for instance Bengal with this Presidency. The expenditure in both the provinces is the same. Yet it cannot be said that the police in Bengal have only the same work as they have here. On the other hand I may point out that in this Presidency we had a remarkable illustration of the extent to which the people are prepared to co-operate with the Government and render such assistance to the police as may be necessary. For instance, yesterday, the ever-memorable Satyagraha day, we had over one lakh of people marching on, wave after wave, a whole sea of faces marching towards the Triplicane beach. There was not a single police constable there and the people on account of the feeling about the Rowlett legislation were fasting, and all the conditions were unfavourable to the maintenance of law and order, and yet we had not even one solitary instance of throwing brick bats. What does it prove? It proves most emphatically that in this Presidency we have an extent of orderliness and peacefulness which is totally unlike what you have in Bengal, and which warrants the reduction of the expenditure and does not warrant this steady increase in police expenditure. I think it may fairly be assumed that the non-officials who have been urging retrenchment in the police expenditure have a solid foundation for their resolution. I do not know what exactly will be the reply by the Honourable Member on behalf of the Government, but I wish to point out that there is at present peacefulness and an increasing realization not only on the part of the leaders but also of the people of their responsibility and vast numbers of people are showing their eminent fitness for the future privileges to be entrusted to them and to take their share in the self-government that has been long promised and that has been long due. Therefore the expenditure on police will, I hope, be reduced."

"I must thank the Government for accepting my resolution about co-operation. The whole movement was started in order to meet the depressing effect of poverty in the land. The effect of poverty was noticed in the recent years and also in the current year when famine conditions have been prevalent in so many areas and have resulted in a remarkably acute situation. The people find that the prices are worse than previous famine prices and so many families which never thought of begging have been reduced to beggary. Yet we find the fringe of this evil has not been touched by the co-operative societies. The object of the co-operative movement was to assuage this. No doubt during the last fifteen years we have had about 3,000 societies, but what is this 3,000 societies amidst the 52,000 villages we have? To touch even the fringe of this evil we must have one society for each village or at least two villages. Let us take the rate of progress. During the last fifteen years we have had 3,000 societies. At that rate it will take several generations before we touch the fringe of this evil. Are we to contemplate this with any sense of self-complacency? Certainly the resolution put forward yesterday has come none too soon. Therefore I think Honourable Members are fully entitled to look forward to Your Excellency's Government taking as early action as possible on that accepted resolution and trying to fill the Presidency with a large number of societies. What I mean is this. Formerly the Assistant Registrars made it a very important part of their work to start new societies. Nowadays the starting of societies is the last portion of the work they think of. There is practical discouragement and they do not care for it. There is some sense in consolidating the foundation before proceeding faster but I hope that that criticism will disappear and I hope they will realize that they have not touched even the fringe of this evil and the Assistant Registrars must be as brisk now as they were years ago in starting new societies and not only in taking care that those which have been started are properly looked after.

"I shall close with a word on education. Honourable Members who preceded me have talked about free compulsory education. I believe that the Government must be realizing that the hour is drawing nigh when no Government which claims to be a civilized Government can neglect the provision of free compulsory education. With the increased franchise we are introducing everywhere, free and compulsory education is absolutely necessary and for the proposals for industrial development which Your Excellency's Government have put forward, free compulsory education is equally necessary. With reference to this I wish only to point out that on a previous occasion we had to refer to the deplorable delay in taking steps in this direction. I think the Government have some Bill on this subject. I do not know in what state it is. It is the desire of Honourable Members here that the Government should see their way to hurry up the sanction of the Government of India by reminders and see that the Bill is pushed forward which will enable large leading places like Madras, Madurai or Salem to start a scheme in the course of twelve months. Certainly it would not be considered impossible and although there is no provision in the budget for any step being taken, I hope that the Government realize the importance of it and if they do so, the non-official members will give them all support.

"One more word about Panchama education. Your Excellency may remember that on a previous occasion we had a resolution that free boarding schools may be started for the benefit of the depressed classes. The Government were labouring under a difficulty which appeared to be imaginary; that is, as to who are the depressed classes. I believe it is not necessary to repeat the argument. The public has discussed the matter threadbare. In the case of the Panchamas there is no difficulty in knowing who they are, and if the Government start institutions at an early date to give relief to these classes by starting free boarding schools they would be doing what the public is anxiously looking forward to. The Hon'ble the Raja of Pittapuram said that so long as we keep this class in a condition of servility we are unfit for political privileges. I do not know who he is but it is necessary to say that this Provincial Government or the public are unfit, but it appears to me that there is a serious clog in the wheel of political development when we keep a large class of people immersed in the dark depths of ignorance and I am quite sure that what the Hon'ble the Raja of Pittapuram meant was that this serious obstacle to the development of the country must be removed by the Government and the people also should co-operate by taking steps in that direction. We are looking forward to the Government co-operating in this matter. Your Excellency has only to look to our proceedings to find that the non-official members are practically unanimous in putting forward a claim on behalf of the Panchamas for the sake of general progress. I hope Your Excellency's Government will find it possible to further this great national object and Your Excellency's Government will have the support not only of this Council—I think the Hon'ble Mr. Ramaswami Ayyar is hardly right in supposing that it is a settled fact that this Council is going to expire to-day—but also of its successors. Your Excellency's Government may rest assured of the solid support of non-officials in any steps for helping the Panchama classes."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. KRISHNA RAO:—"Your Excellency, while I fully appreciate the care and skill with which the budget has been prepared and the willingness and the earnestness with which increased provision has been made for education, I do not consider it necessary to offer any special congratulations on the budget which has now been placed before us. I shall make a few remarks on the financial conditions of the province with the full hope and belief that on that subject there will not be any disagreement between the Government and the people and that both will do their best to improve the condition of this province. Your Excellency has been associated with the administration of this Presidency in various departments from the 7th December 1882, when Your Excellency landed in India, and during the last 36 or 37 years the experience gained about the work of the various departments and about the conditions of the province must enable us to hope that before Your Excellency hands over charge of the exalted office of Governor of the province and later on of the office of Finance Member of the province, some definite steps will be taken to place the material condition of this province on a more satisfactory basis than it is at present. I shall refer to a few facts which will unmistakably show that there has not been such improvement in the material condition as there could have been and that the economic condition of the agriculturists is far from satisfactory.

"I shall first refer to the figures relating to land revenue, which will clearly show that more land revenue is being realized in this province than in any other major province in India. It will be found that according to the budget for 1919-20 the land revenue in this Presidency is 717.50 lakhs, in Bombay it is 555.4 lakhs, in Bengal 285.4, in the United Provinces 267.72. Whether we judge of the land revenue with reference to the extent of the assessed area or with reference to the extent of the cultivated area in each province or with reference to the population, it is quite clear that the incidence of land revenue is much higher here than in the case of other provinces, save Bombay where also it is fairly high.

"Having so far referred to the figures relating to land revenue, I am now tempted to refer to the figures of the Registration department, because they have a bearing mostly upon the condition of the people of the agricultural classes. The income of the Registration department has some bearing on the material condition of the people because it largely represents transactions by which transfers of land are effected and also transactions by which loans are contracted on the security of property. It will be found that so far as the income from the Registration department is concerned, more is realized in this province than in any other province in India. It will be found that according to the budget for 1919-20 so far as Madras is concerned it is 27.10 lakhs, in Bombay it is 11.50 or less than half of Madras, in Bengal it is 19.00, in the United Provinces 7.55. I refer to these figures because they give us an indication of the material conditions of the people of this province as also the extent of indebtedness which may exist so far as this province is concerned.

"Having referred the Council to certain figures affecting chiefly land, it will be necessary for me to point out that there has not been very much scope for the development of commerce and industries and trade in various directions; and if there are any figures which by comparative study would enable us to understand the condition of this province in that respect, it is the figures relating to income-tax. How do we stand so far as that is concerned? It will be found so far as the excess profits duty levied according to the budget for 1919-20 is concerned, that in Madras it is 25 lakhs, whereas in Bombay they have budgeted for 425 lakhs in the place of 25 in Madras; Bengal 625 lakhs, the United Provinces 25, just the same as here. When we consider the figures for the super-tax it will be found that the difference is appalling—

	LAKHS.
Madras	18.50
Bombay	53.75
Bengal	50.00
The United Provinces	11.73

"Even so far as the ordinary income-tax is concerned the figures are as follows:—

	LAKHS.
Madras	77.00
Bombay	244.90
Bengal	277.50

"What do these figures show? Do they not show that much more is realized from the land in this presidency than in other provinces and that it has not been possible to realize income from other sources to any appreciable extent? Will it not show that there has not been sufficient scope for the development of this province in the matter of trade and industry and other directions which will bring in additional income-tax and that we have been compelled to resort for the bulk of our revenue to land, though it is our duty to improve trade and commerce and improve the condition of this presidency in other respects? It is at the same time our duty to consider and see whether we have not been realizing more in the shape of land revenue than we ought to. May I, in this connexion, remind the Council that attempts made during the last five or six years to mitigate the rigor and harshness of the land revenue demand have been wholly unsuccessful. Resolutions were moved suggesting remission of assessment when the total outturn of crop was less than one-third of the normal crop. Resolutions were moved suggesting that there should be a remission when a portion of the field has not been subdivided. Resolutions were moved suggesting an inquiry as to the working of the rules of remission of assessment. What has been the result? The result has uniformly been that the Government, naturally afraid that the acceptance of these resolutions even in a modified form might reduce the land revenue, opposed the resolutions and they were rejected. Again let us consider the various attempts that were made in connexion with the progress of the resettlement of various districts in the presidency. The same results attended our efforts in that direction. Again we tried to induce the Government to have an economic inquiry into the condition of the agriculturists in certain typical villages in this presidency. In April last year a resolution was accepted by this Council, but they have not yet carried out an investigation.

"I am mentioning these things to show that while it is certain that so far as this presidency is concerned, much more is realized from land than other provinces and while it is certain that we have not been able to get income from various other sources owing to trade and commerce not flourishing here to the same extent as in Bombay or Bengal, we have not succeeded in inducing the Government to adopt a more liberal attitude in dealing with the assessment of land revenue.

"I would next point out that apart from the fact that we have found it necessary to realize from the land much more than probably the land can bear, we have not been fortunate enough in getting an adequate share from the Imperial revenue for various useful purposes. It is a matter for extreme regret that in the distribution of Imperial grants for railways or for productive irrigation works or for protective irrigation works, the allotment made so far as this province is concerned is much less than what it should have been. It will be found that for the year 1919-20 according to the budget presented in the Imperial Legislative Council in March last out of a total sum of 2,388.57 lakhs for State railways and for open lines the allotment which has been made so far as this province is concerned comes only to 121.77 lakhs. Similarly in the case of construction of lines, there has been provided 76.22 lakhs; but it has not been found necessary to provide anything so far as the lines here are concerned. I do not wish within the limited time at my disposal to refer to the discussion here when representations were made to the Government of India for taking various lines suggested on the Imperial programme; but the result has been exceedingly disappointing. Now turning our attention to productive irrigation works, out of a total sum of 65 lakhs provided for 1919-21, the total allotment made so far as this presidency is concerned is 2.66 lakhs only for the Godavari and Krishna delta systems and a sum of 2 lakhs for some other projects. It is clear therefore that a provision of about 4 lakhs out of a total allotment of 65 lakhs for a major province like Madras where there are various schemes which can be taken up is certainly an unsatisfactory feature of the budget. I shall now turn my attention to the protective irrigation works which are carried on under the famine grant. Fifty-three lakhs are allotted for the whole of India and the share of Madras is only 1.62. These figures will show that while the material condition is not as satisfactory as it should be and while we find it necessary to get more from land than we ought to get, even in the matter of Imperial grants we have not been fortunate in getting as much as we ought to.

(Mr. Krishna Rao.)

The next point I must naturally dwell upon is the large proportion of the revenue we contribute to the Imperial exchequer. It has become proverbial that owing to the policy adopted by the Madras Government in accumulating surplus balances, the Government of India thought that Madras was in a flourishing condition; and when the previous financial settlement of Madras was made, it placed us in a very unfavourable position with the result that we are contributing to the Imperial Government a larger share than other provinces. It will be found that when the change was introduced in the provincial settlement on the 1st March 1911, the member from Madras protested as loudly as he could against the ungenerous treatment accorded to Madras and even asked if the Government of India was going to put a premium on extravagance and waste by taking advantage of the accumulated balances of the Madras Government which was due to the careful and economic working of the Madras Government. We have been anxiously expecting that a time would come when we would arrive at a better state of things. Resolutions were moved; and it was suggested that after the war was over we could make out a case for a revision of the settlement. We were told that proposals for the adjustment of the financial relations between the Imperial and the Local Government were under contemplation. It is exceedingly disappointing that the proposals formulated in the scheme of Constitutional Reforms propounded by responsible statesmen have placed Madras in a disadvantageous position. They suggest that the gross provincial revenues calculated on the budget estimate for 1917-18 should be taken into account, that the gross provincial expenditure should be deducted and that the province should contribute 87 per cent of the balance. This method of calculation is very disadvantageous and unfavourable to Madras and how do these respected authors try to justify it? This is what they say:—

“We recognize, of course, that the objection will be taken that some provinces even under this plan will bear a very much heavier proportion of the cost of the Indian Government than others. Madras and the United Provinces will be paying 47.4 per cent and 41.1 per cent of their remaining revenues to the Government of India, while Bengal and Bombay are paying only 10.1 per cent and 9.6 per cent, respectively. Our answer is that the objection is one that applies to existing inequalities, which we admit, that our scheme fails for the present to remove.”

“Your Excellency, may I point out that it would have been far more reasonable, just and equitable if these learned authors had tried to base the proportion on the gross revenues of the province. Then only there would have been any incentive for any province to develop its revenues and resources; for otherwise a province would think of pushing on the expenditure with the hope that it would be placed on a better footing. We have been aiming at financial provincial autonomy. We have been expecting financial independence so far as the local Government is concerned. If this financial independence is crippled by the imposition of such conditions, if the proportion is based not upon the gross revenue but upon the gross surplus, I venture to suggest that it would be an undesirable principle to introduce. It is the duty of this Council, not only of this Council but of this Government, to make a very emphatic protest and a very strong protest against this obviously inequitable and unfair proposal which has been enunciated so far as this presidency is concerned. I have not the slightest doubt that if there is any matter on which we can agree, it is this.

“Connected with this, I am inclined to think that we must keep a watchful eye over the expenditure in this province. With the necessities of time and the development of work in the various departments, it has become necessary not only to increase the staff and to open new openings and new activities but also to think of increasing the salaries and allowances in various departments. One who ventures to go through the service lists will be struck by the manner in which the expenditure has been increased in the cost of administration so far as the higher officers are concerned, whereas very little or no attention is paid to those lower down in the service. I have mentioned it on various previous occasions, and I venture to repeat it again. I am anxious to repeat it because a press communiqué was published in the papers yesterday stating that on the recommendations of the Public Services Commission some communications will be made by the Government of India to the Secretary of State. We are all aware that even the recommendations of the Public Service Commission would add to the expenditure by 88 lakhs or nearly 1 crore by some process of calculation. Not being satisfied with that, the learned authors of Constitutional Reforms suggest a further increase of expenditure. Your Excellency's Government are aware that Indians generally and some officials in various places, were struck by the increasing cost of the proposals made by the Public Services Commission and that protests were made from various quarters. One would be struck at the manner in which they would like to go further in the matter of pay and pensions. They go further than the Public Services Commission in paragraphs 319 and 320. I would therefore place for the consideration of the Government whether it is not now time for the proposals being examined as carefully as possible with the object of keeping the expenditure within reasonable limits. Nobody suggests that the expenditure ought not to be increased wherever it is absolutely necessary and wherever it is of a productive character. But when there are very costly schemes for increasing the staff of the administration, I would suggest that you must keep a very careful and watchful eye over the work of the various departments to see whether it is necessary to have this increase in the higher grades and whether it is not possible to do anything in the lower grades. What will the world think when, while we have provided about 37 lakhs for giving war allowance to various officers, we have not been able to accept the modest resolution of the Hon'ble Mr. Sadashiva Bhat advocating war allowances to village officials? I do not know why my Hon'ble Friend Mr. Siva Rao having given notice of a resolution to give travelling allowances to village officials thought it necessary to drop it. We have been able to do bare justice in the case of persons who are drawing small salaries, but still we see before our eyes proposals which would increase the cost of the administration by 80 to 100 lakhs. Therefore it is the imperative duty of the Government to examine the proposals when they are received from the Government of India and see in what respects there may be curtailment, though nobody says that wherever it is reasonable there should not be an increase.

[7TH APRIL 1919.]

(Mr. Krishna Rao; the President).

“I am particularly tempted to make these remarks, Your Excellency, for one or two reasons, because I think that when one is not at the end of his career other considerations might prevail. Your Excellency, in the course of a few months, might hand over the charge of the Finance Department, and Your Excellency might not have much regard either to the possible objections of the Government of India or the susceptibilities of the members of the Indian Civil Service. The only standpoint from which I appeal to Your Excellency's Government to look at it is what is best in the interests of the country and whether the country can bear any substantial increase in the cost of the administration. That is the only standpoint from which I want Your Excellency's Government to look at this question. Your Excellency will be in charge of the Financial Department for some time to come; and if, from the communication published in the press, the proposals of the Public Services Commission are to be communicated in the near future these proposals should be scanned and criticised irrespective of possible objections or susceptibilities of the Government of India or the members of the Indian Civil Service. That is my special request. That is why I have attempted to make these remarks because Your Excellency's tenure of office is coming to a close, and human nature being what it is, there is absolutely no necessity for the susceptibilities of others having any part to play in the consideration of this question. That is what I feel. I consider it my duty to place that aspect before the Council.

“These are the remarks which I have considered fit to make on this occasion, because if the promised reforms are to be of any real value to the people, if they are really to place the people on a better footing, the first important point on which we should concentrate our vision is to improve the financial and material condition of the province. Suppose the financial condition is not improved and suppose we get the devolution of responsibilities to the Indian Minister, what is it he can do? It is absolutely nothing. The whole basis of the scheme of reform must depend upon financial autonomy in all its phases and complete independence of outside control in that respect. I therefore consider it necessary that as there cannot be any difference of opinion between the Government and the people on this important matter we should do our best to further the cause of this Presidency in all possible directions.

“There are two other matters on which I wish to trouble the Council. On the question of mass education several of my Honourable Friends have addressed the Council. I wish to point out that notwithstanding the improvements effected we have a very wide field to cover in the matter of mass education or primary education. Even in 1917-18 we had about 175 villages with a population of 2,000; 1,312 villages with a population of between 2,000 and 5,000; 3,836 villages with a population of between 500 and 1,000; 5,000 villages with a population of between 200 and 500, and 16,902 villages with less than 200 not provided with schools. On the whole 24,470 villages are still unprovided with schools. In the matter of literacy we find that we have still to bring into the schools about 67 per cent of boys of school-going age. I only mention it to show that notwithstanding the progress which I must say has been made during the last seven or eight years, still there is a wide field to cover in the matter of improving the mass education.”

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—“I must ask the Honourable Member to be as brief as he can. He has already taken 25 minutes.”

The Hon'ble Mr. A. S. KRISHNA RAO:—“I shall wind up in two or three minutes. If we are to have any further expansion of primary education, the time has come when you must take an early opportunity of introducing compulsory primary education. That has been referred to by other members and I need not detain the Council on it.

“The only other question on which I intend to make a remark is as regards medical relief because I know Your Excellency has been taking considerable interest in it. Your Excellency has been doing as much as can be done in the matter of providing additional medical relief in this Presidency and has been fairly liberal in the matter of making grants. But may I point out that we expect Your Excellency to go to the hearts of the people to a larger extent by giving encouragement to the indigenous systems of medicine? Your Excellency has been very liberal in encouraging additional hospitals and for making provision for additional affording facilities for opening additional hospitals and for making provision for additional sub-assistant surgeons under the allopathic system. But during the last few years various attempts have been made in this Council to induce the Government to take the further step of encouraging the indigenous systems; and at a certain stage Your Excellency showed a sympathetic attitude and got an officer appointed to investigate the drugs of the indigenous systems. May I hope, before Your Excellency closes your term of office, something will be done in a substantial manner to encourage these systems? It is after all for the sake of the people of the country that these institutions for medical relief are started; and when the people are resorting to these indigenous systems is it not reasonable and just that these systems should be encouraged and placed on a satisfactory footing? I would point out that a bolder attempt should be made to complete the investigation of Dr. Koman and then to give a definite allotment for the purpose of medical relief and medical education in the indigenous systems."

The Hon'ble Mr. R. LITTLEHAILES:—"Your Excellency, I think it will tend towards brevity if I take in the first instance the subject which has been touched upon by a large number of Honourable Members who have spoken to-day on the budget, and that is the subject of elementary education. We have been asked that it should be made compulsory, we have been asked that it should be made free, and that we should do a great deal more than we are doing now towards the extension of elementary education. So far as compulsory and free education is concerned, a very important part of the chapter on primary education found in the progress of education for the period 1912 to 1917 in the Quinquennial Review by the Government of India relates thereto. Towards the end of chapter 9 it will be found that in 1911-12 Sir Harcourt Butler hinted that the introduction of measures of compulsion in local legislatures would be the natural course. Subsequently, a Bill was introduced in the Bombay Presidency and that Bill was passed into law, and steps have been taken in various other presidencies with regard to compulsory education. With regard to free education we have according to our regulations provision for all those pupils who belong to the backward castes or classes being allowed free education right up to the eighth standard in elementary schools under public management. So that there is no restriction upon members of the depressed classes getting free education. Also it can never be said that the rules make it impossible for anyone being deprived of primary education on the ground of poverty even those who do not belong to the backward classes; the amount that they have to pay is very small. The average fee paid throughout India is only 147 annas per pupil per annum. So that any child has merely to pay something over one anna per mensem in order to receive elementary education. The Honourable Member representing the Ceded Districts, I think, asked in connexion with the expansion of elementary education as to what had happened to the Government of India resolution of 1913."

The Hon'ble Mr. P. SIVA RAO:—"I was referring to the circular of August 1918."

The Hon'ble Mr. R. LITTLEHAILES (continuing):—"I beg his pardon, I missed what the Honourable Member said; I thought it was 1913. But with regard to the expansion I may point out again that the Government of India have laid down two lines of progress. On the one hand Bills are being introduced permitting the adoption of compulsion, and on the other hand the Government of India and the Local Governments have combined to allocate just as much funds for the purpose of education, largely elementary education as it is possible to find during the time of financial strain. As the financial strain is relieved, more funds will be available and greater expansion will be possible."

"The Hon'ble the Raja of Pithapuram desired that particular attention should be paid to the extension of education for girls, and he brought to the notice of Your Excellency that Cocanada should have a high school. I may mention that Cocanada is already noted as one of the towns in which we shall introduce a high school for girls as soon as we can manage to get funds and teachers are available."

"The Hon'ble Mr. Yaqub Hasan touched upon Muhammadan education. I was rather surprised, Your Excellency, to find that he considered that the Muhammadan College in Madras was superfluous and that the Presidency College suffices for the purpose of educating Muhammadans. It is an attitude, Sir, which is rather different from what the Honourable Member expressed on a previous occasion."

"He desired to know what had happened to the provision for instituting a Government Muhammadan school at Trichinopoly. It was the intention of this department to take over the management of the aided school for Muhammadans in Trichinopoly and proceedings were going on in that respect, but the negotiations have, I regret to say, fallen through with the result that the department has now to turn its attention to the institution of another Muhammadan school at Trichinopoly itself. The provision of buildings for Muhammadan schools is noted and will receive attention as funds become available."

"Some Honourable Members desired a very much larger provision made on account of scholarships. The budget indicates a very considerable increase within recent years in the provision under scholarships. The budget provision for the current year is 1.93 lakhs; the provision last year was 1.70 lakhs, and the accounts of the year previous to that show 1.66 lakhs, which indicates that there is a gradual increase in scholarships and the need for offering encouragement and making provision for the higher education of the poorer classes who are men of distinct ability is not being lost sight of."

"Medical inspection of schools has an allotment of Rs. 14,000 in the budget, and if further allotment is required I have no doubt it will receive due consideration, but at present I am awaiting the reports which have been called for as to the means of various institutions and various local bodies which are going to carry out the wishes of the Government which have been already expressed in the Government order on this subject of the medical inspection of boys in schools and colleges."

[7TH APRIL 1919.]

(Mr. Littlehales ; Mr. Wood.)

"I may now turn, Sir, to the subject of grants-in-aid. The Honourable Member who represents our University has scarcely appreciated the meaning of the figures under grants-in-aid as compared with the figures under 'Government schools—General,' and he quoted that the provision for grants-in-aid was 43.16 lakhs, and under 'Government schools—General' it was 46.67 lakhs. I should just like to invite his attention to the fact that under 'Government schools—General' are included institutions which are under public management, that is, not only schools under Government management but also schools under municipal management and the management of local boards. As a matter of fact out of this total of 46.67 lakhs, the amount which is allocated for 'Government schools—Proper' is 5.67 lakhs and the balance of 41 lakhs is money distributed to local boards and municipalities for the maintenance of their schools. The increase under grants-in-aid has been very considerable. It has increased from 33.52 lakhs in the accounts for 1917-18 to 38.74 lakhs in last year's budget and in the current year to 43.16 lakhs. There has been an increase of 10 lakhs in three years under the head grants-in-aid, which is a very large increase, and I hope it will meet the wishes of the managers of institutions which are maintained under the grant-in-aid system."

"There are two more points that I might mention. The first is in connexion with University education for which 1 lakh is provided. The Honourable Member for the University desired a further provision to be made in future years. I do not think that he is aware that the University has at present already at its disposal 6.25 lakhs for building purposes which includes this 1 lakh. That is the accumulated balance of the grants of various years which have not yet been spent and which are still available for the University. If the estimates for the buildings are increased beyond the resources of the University, the question will be reconsidered, but at present I do not think the University has any urgent need for an additional allotment for building purposes."

"Similarly with regard to the expansion of economics and economic work in the University. The University has decided that it can afford to pay for its University professor out of its own funds and the case of any further expansion can well be considered when it has been decided by the University to launch out upon this further expansion."

"Finally, Sir, there has been a desire shown for the attachment of technical and agricultural departments to elementary schools. That raises a very wide question. It raises a question which has been discussed to some extent in the report of the Industrial Commission and it raises a question as to how far there should be overlapping of ordinary elementary education with vocational training and then further overlapping to the exclusion of ordinary elementary education in favour of purely industrial training. At this stage of the budget I cannot enter into that general question, but I may say that this department is always lending a sympathetic hand to any manner of vocational training so far as it is possible to introduce it in elementary schools in order that the pupils may turn out to be men who have received some practical training."

The Hon'ble Mr. R. B. WOOD:—"Your Excellency, I have only a few words to say in answer to the remarks of the Hon'ble Mr. Venkatapati Raju and the Hon'ble Mr. Narasimha Ayyar on the question of total prohibition in this Presidency. We have taken considerable steps in this direction of enforcing temperance in the way of reducing shops. In the past ten years I may bring to the notice of the Council that the number of arrack shops has been reduced from 10,000 to 6,600 since 1908; and the number of toddy shops has been reduced from 17,000 to 11,000. The decrease in both has been 66 to 66 per cent. It is possible that we have reached in many places the limits beyond which further reduction of shops is not safe. It must be remembered that some ten or twelve years ago the number of shops then in existence in the districts was fixed as the number that was required and a further reduction from 5 to 10 per cent was also allowed to Collectors as the limit beyond which they should not reduce. Then the members of the preventive staff to check illicit distillation and illicit toddy drinking were fixed, based upon the number of shops then existing and the areas which the preventive staff could superintend. Now the number of shops having decreased since then by 66 per cent, the preventive staff has got a far larger area to control than was intended at the time of formation, and in places there are dangerous signs that illicit distillation and illicit drinking is increasing and in places we can control. Every step that you take towards further prohibition is a step in the direction of uncontrolled drinking which brings far more evil in its train than drinking within controlled limits. The Hon'ble Mr. Narasimha Ayyar referred to the example of the United States in introducing total prohibition, and he might also have alluded to the case of Russia which in the beginning of the war introduced total prohibition. We have seen the result in Russia, and although one cannot say that it was entirely due to total prohibition, I do not think there can be any question that what has happened there supports what has been said by the Liquor Control Board in England, that the prohibition of drink to the manual worker is not fair and it always results in extreme dissatisfaction and also in bodily discomfort. It is all very well for members who do their work in their study or office, who are engaged in mental work and not manual work, to say that drink is a vice. If any of them were ever engaged in manual work in the fields, then I have no doubt their opinion will very soon change. I may mention that the Liquor Control Board at Home have issued several interesting publications and in one of them they point out that to prevent drunkenness and illicit practices it is necessary to have a steady supply of drink to the workers. They find that when drink became limited and the output of beer and spirits decreased by over 50 per cent in 1916-17 and the distribution of beer and spirits to the different towns and villages in the country became spasmodic and not sufficient for the demand of the labouring classes, one thing that happened was that the people made a rush to drink when it was available and there were far more cases of drunkenness than before when they could get a satisfactory and steady supply.

"I have already found that a similar sort of thing is happening in districts where I have had a certain amount of experience. When the number of shops has been unduly decreased and a labourer has to walk four or five miles before he can get a bottle of toddy he is not going to be satisfied with moderate drinking. In the first place his thirst has increased, and in the second place it is not worth walking five miles up and five miles back to have only one bottle and he must have something more. The result is that by decreasing the number of shops too much you have an increase of drunkenness and further you get your shops overcrowded and an overcrowded shop is a far greater nuisance to the locality and affords greater incentive to drinking than small shops where the only people that go are the people of the locality. I only mention these considerations to point out that to jump at total prohibition would be a very dangerous course which no Government can think of pursuing.

"As for America let me say one or two words. In the United States there have been several States already which had total prohibition and most people who have travelled through those States will tell you that, although you have paper prohibition, you have not got it in practice, and that the American very soon learnt how to evade the laws made. In other words you get illicit drinking which is understood by every-one in the State.

"The question of revenue I entirely leave on one side. I presume when Honourable Members carry out total prohibition they will show how to make up the Rs. 300 or Rs. 400 lakhs which the Government will lose."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"Your Excellency, I would with Your Excellency's leave just say one word with regard to the question of elementary education with special reference to Panchamas and other backward classes, about which the Hon'ble Mr. Narasimha Ayyar has made an eloquent appeal, his point of view being that, unless we make education compulsory, we will never be able effectively to reach these backward classes. I do not propose just now to go into the question as to whether compulsion is feasible or advisable, but there is one aspect of it which, I think, I might mention for the consideration of the Council. That is, at present so far as the Panchamas are concerned, the difficulty is not so much the need to put compulsion upon them to go to schools, but there is a very large bulk of elementary schools maintained out of public funds which shut them out. We all know the theory that no boy can be refused admission in a Government school or an aided school merely on the ground of his caste. That is the theory laid down so long ago as 1854, sixty-five years ago by the Court of Directors, and from time to time this theory was enunciated by the Secretary of State, once in 1863 and subsequently on different occasions. The Government have very recently been faced with continuous complaints that notwithstanding all that, the Panchamas are not being admitted in schools maintained out of public funds. When I say schools maintained out of public funds, I mean not merely Government schools which are quite a small number, but I mean municipal and local fund schools. The schools specially maintained for the Panchamas are so very few that they really do not attack the problem of education. We felt bound to make an inquiry, and orders were sent out to all local bodies to say how many schools were being maintained out of public funds and how many of them were really open to Panchamas."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO:—"Or whether they have Panchama pupils in these schools. That is a quite different question. I should like to know whether the Honourable Member has any information on the question whether in any particular Panchama schools which may be open to them they do not come in. That is a matter of general importance to municipalities and boards because as a matter of fact these schools are open to them, but they do not come."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"Theoretically they may be open, but as a matter of fact this inquiry was made of the local bodies. The Honourable Member would see the reference to the local bodies and all their replies. They are going to be published and placed on the editors' table. The local bodies were directed to investigate and report in how many schools under public management which were not specially intended for Panchamas such boys were taken and if they were not admitted the reasons which lead to their exclusion. We find that out of a total of 8,157 schools under public management only 609 are really open to Panchamas and the reasons given to our inquiry as to why other schools which in some cases resulted in the withdrawal of their children from the schools or a threat to do so if the schools admitted Panchamas, and the location of schools in aghaharams, chavadis and temples, the objection of the owners of houses which are rented for the schools and the unsympathetic attitude of the landlords towards the education of the Panchamas and the ingrained reluctance on the part of Panchamas to assert their claims where they conflict with traditional usage and with class customs. It is a matter for the Council to consider whether this state of affairs in which out of 8,157 schools under public management only 609 are in fact open to a section of the population—between 16 and 20 per cent—whether that state of affairs can at all be justified. I am not here finding fault with anybody, but I am simply mentioning to you a grave evil which does exist with the object of enlisting the sympathy of Honourable Members here and also of the wider public outside and the sympathy of all local bodies. I am sure that all of us are agreed that it is not possible to defend or justify the state of affairs under which, in spite of the heavy and increasing expenditure of public funds, a large section of the population is practically excluded from participation of the benefit which that expenditure is intended to confer. It is true that we have a provision for special schools for Panchamas in several places, but the Council will, I have no doubt, agree with me that the provision is possible only in a very limited number of cases and it can only afford a partial remedy and one which it is not desirable to perpetuate or accept as the final solution of the problem. The Government are now issuing orders impressing upon all local bodies the obligation which rests upon them to gradually but persistently strive and remove the disabilities to which the Panchamas are now subjected. I mention this particular serious evil, because the occasion has arisen and I want, before we finally dissolve, to make this appeal from my place in this Council chamber to local bodies all over the province to take this thing in hand. We are issuing orders to them and the whole correspondence will be published—the reference to all local bodies and their replies—so that the public will be in a position to see the real state of affairs. You may do anything in regard to free or compulsory education. I do not object to that. But whatever you may do, if you are going to have special schools for special classes on a large scale, it will mean a tremendous reduplication of educational institutions. It is to prevent that reduplication that this appeal is made. I trust that this order of the Government which is under issue and this appeal I have made will elicit the sympathy of local bodies all over the province and induce them to make determined efforts to admit Panchama children into the regular schools. Some of these difficulties are things which I know the local bodies may not be able to set right. For instance the unsympathetic attitude of the higher classes, what can a local body do for it? But local bodies can in other directions do something; if a school is in an unsuitable locality it is open to the local body to change it to another locality and insist upon Panchama students being admitted. The order will be issued and my only object now is to say that I consider this matter is a very urgent matter; this is a matter which we can do without legislation and without any very great change of system. In order to accomplish this we would need the sympathy and support not only of Honourable Members here but of the members of local bodies, and I trust that this appeal of mine will not have been made in vain and that in a few years we shall be in a position to say that every public school is not only theoretically open but in reality open to these backward classes. I have nothing further to say in regard to education."

(Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar; Mr. Narasimha Ayyar.)

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR:—"I hope that this is not the only thing that the Government intend to do for the benefit of the Panchamas. There are a great many other things."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR:—"I thought the most pressing problem was to allow them into the schools, to throw open all public schools to them. That is an important point."

"Then on the subject of local bodies I would just refer to the premier local body on behalf of which the Hon'ble Mr. Ramaswami Ayyar has made a very strong appeal. So far as I could gather, he seems to think that this drainage and water-supply scheme is a thing that was all done by the Government and pushed upon the local body and it is one of the grounds on which he has claimed that that body should receive sympathetic consideration in the matter of financing of what is called the restricted programme with which alone we are now concerned. We are not carrying out the big programme. I am not aware that there was any particular pressure brought to bear upon the Corporation to accept any programme. I think they were very glad to have the town sewered and to have good drinking water. The cost of the restricted scheme is Rs. 124 lakhs for which the Corporation has up till now received 75 lakhs, 25 lakhs from the Imperial Government's grant and 50 lakhs from Provincial grants. Seventy-five lakhs of the general tax-payer's money has been given to the Corporation of Madras for their drainage and water works. In addition we have recommended to the Government of India a grant to them in continuation of another Rs. 12 lakhs—to allow us to grant another 12 lakhs which will give in all 87 lakhs. In other words the Corporation works costing 127 lakhs will in the end be financed by the general tax-payer of the province to the tune of 87 lakhs or 70 per cent of the total cost. I have no hesitation in claiming that the Government, far from having been niggardly towards the premier local body in financing important water and drainage works, have been very generous. If at all we have erred we have erred on the side of undue liberality. Honourable Members from the mufassal know that the usual rule is only a moiety of the cost. I am not viewing it from any technical aspect at all, but let me say that when the general tax-payer as represented by Government is paying to the tune of 70 per cent, we are also entitled to have a very substantial voice in seeing that that expenditure is properly incurred and we are entitled to claim that any advice which our expert advisers give in regard to that expenditure is given due consideration; and the very best claim that the Corporation can put forward to the continuance of this very generous treatment that they receive at the hands of the Government is so to conduct their administration as to convince the Government that a further grant of help will not be a profitless affair."

"I have got only one word to say about the Industries department. Several Honourable Members have referred to the work of the Industries department. I entirely associate myself with what the Hon'ble Mr. Yaqub Hasan said, what a pity it is that Mr. Innes, when he had got into the full swing of that work, should have been taken away from us. But let me also (Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar; Mr. M. Ramachandra Rao; [7TH APRIL 1919.

the President; Mr. Davidson.]

point out that the department is now really marking time. The Honourable Member must be aware that the Industries Commission have reported and the Government of India have taken that report into consideration and that report is now referred to all local Governments for their remarks. So far as we are concerned, we are considering the matter and we will send up our report soon. I have reason to believe that the Government of India are very anxious to issue final orders on the report of the Commission soon. Whatever we do in Madras will depend not very much on what I may be forgiven for calling the ancient history of the subject, as to what we did in 1907 or 1912, but will depend upon the policy laid down by the Government of India on the report of the Industries Commission. The report is a detailed document and covers the whole ground of industrial and technical education and doubtless the Government of India will issue a pronouncement soon, after which we shall know where we stand. The Council may take it from me that the Madras Government will certainly not lag behind in giving effect to the policy as finally laid down for us by the Government of India after considering what the Industries Commission have said."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO:—"May I venture to suggest with reference to the remarks about the depressed classes that the order placing Mr. Paddison on special duty may be published?"

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"That will be published."

The Hon'ble Mr. L. DAVIDSON:—"Your Excellency, I propose in the few remarks that I am going to make firstly to deal with the Judicial Department. As to the comments made on the delay in taking action to improve the prospect and pay of the judicial officers, I think, Sir, there has been some misconception. I have referred to the debate on the subject which took place about two years ago on the resolution moved by the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar and particularly to the answer given by the late Mr. Gillman. I think that was the occasion on which Mr. Gillman offered an expression of regret for the delay up to that date, to which the Hon'ble the Raja of Ramnad was referring. I should like to quote his exact words. There were two questions in issue. One was the re-distribution of the courts in the Presidency and the other was the re-organization of the scale of pay. The re-distribution of grades and the transfer of courts from a temporary to a permanent basis are matters which arose out of Mr. Phillips' report. The question of the re-organization of the scale of pay originated in certain memorials submitted to the High Court and passed on by the High Court to the Government. What Mr. Gillman said was—The main difficulty under which the members of this service labour may be said to be due to the number of temporary courts in the Presidency. It is certainly very important that these courts should be made permanent as soon as possible, and that there should be consequential regrading of the officers in the department. I am prepared to state for the information of the Council that the Government will undertake this matter at once—this question of making the temporary courts permanent and making recommendations about the consequential regrading. That undertaking has been carried out, so far as it is within the province of Your Excellency's Government. A recommendation was made to the Government of India last year; the orders of the Government of India and the Secretary of State thereon are awaited. I thought that point has been sufficiently brought out in the discussion which took place on the Financial Statement meeting on the 5th of February. In answer to a question by the Hon'ble Mr. Ramanuja Achariyar I pointed out that the number of permanent courts and the regrading were still under correspondence with the higher authorities. All that I need say now is that the Local Government have proposed to make permanent a certain number of courts, and to regrade the officers on the lines which I then explained in detail. There is a lump provision of '82 lakh for that in the budget for 1919-1920, and does not relate to any revision of the scale of pay. It has been suggested by one Honourable Member that there has been much shilly-shallying and another member said we have had enough of red tape and routine and surely the Government have had time to make up their minds. It is not that they have not had time to make up their minds but that the Government have deliberately refrained from asking for a revised scale of pay for the excellent reason that it is wrapped up with the proposals of the Public Services Commission. Until the proposals of that body together with the provisional conclusions of the Government of India thereon reach this Government, it would be clearly a waste of time to attempt to work out any revised scale of pay. I am telling the Council nothing new, because in the very speech of Mr. Gillman which I have quoted, dealing with the issue of the revision of pay he said, 'we are anxious to await the result of the inquiries of the Public Services Commission. We think that this commission is likely to make proposals for throwing open additional appointments of District and Sessions Judges to the members of the Provincial Service and on kindred matters. Their recommendations are likely to have a material effect on the prospects of the higher grades of Subordinate Judges'. He went on to say that immediate action was undesirable, and pointed out that as soon as possible the Government would take a further step in dealing with that question. It only became possible to take it up during the last few weeks. The Government of India, after receiving the Public Services Commission's recommendations, laid down a definite procedure in regard to them and intimated their intention of formulating their provisional conclusions before consulting the Local Governments on these questions; they have since been issuing letters and instructions both in regard to the general recommendations and in regard to particular departments. The letter of reference relating to the Provincial Judicial Service was only received in the end of February and we are at present awaiting the results of the consideration which the High Court is giving to those proposals. I think that is all I have to say about the provincial judiciary."

7TH APRIL 1919.]

(Mr. Davidson; Mr. Chidambaranatha Mudaliyar;
the President.)

"The next department to which I propose to refer briefly is the Forest department. In the first place I should like, Sir, to say that the Government are fully alive to the importance of developing the resources of the forests of this Presidency. That aspect of the case has been brought out in the latest administration report and also in the course of the discussion which took place in this Council in February last when I made a special statement on the subject of the surplus realised by the department in order to explain certain difficulties which had occurred to the Hon'ble Mr. Ramanuja Achariyar. I then quoted from the administration report a passage emphasising the fact that after the war an increase in expenditure and a temporary decrease of revenue must be anticipated as considerable capital outlay would be necessary to develop the forests. Some provision for such capital outlay is included in the budget of 1919-20. Perhaps it may have a special bearing on the question of the development of the Forest department to make mention of the fact that before long the newly appointed Chief Conservator will take up his post. The officer-designate is Mr. Cox. He is a gentleman who is fully alive to the commercial side of forest management and the Council may rely upon him to keep the possibility of development always in the forefront. I may add that during the past two or three months I have had the advantage of consulting the Inspector-General of Forests, Mr. Hart, who passed through Madras on several occasions and who has recently made an inspection of important forest areas which I hope will bear fruit. I am sure his inspection notes will be very helpful in the direction of development."

"One Honourable Member—I think it was the Hon'ble Mr. Siva Rao—said that the question of the extraction of sandal-wood oil has not been seriously taken up, and another also commented on the possibility of development in that direction. The Forest department is fully alive to the advantages of developing the sandal-wood industry. A reference to paragraphs 6 and 7 of the latest Administration Report published by the Board will bring out the fact that working plans already exist for some of our chief sandal-wood areas and that during the last year a special working-plan was sanctioned for Salem and special expenditure was incurred on sandal-wood godowns and subordinates' quarters in the Javadi Hills which is the principal sandal-wood area while an important road leading from Komattiyeri in that area was opened soon after the close of the year. I merely mention this to show that the Forest department is alive to the development of sandal-wood. It is not the case that the matter has not been taken seriously on hand. There was one particular issue which came before me just after my assumption of this office in November last and I think that it gave me more trouble than any other subject. In November and December I had consultations with Mr. Hart, the Inspector-General of Forests, and Sir Thomas Holland and with officers from Mysore, two successive heads of the Forest Department and the Conservator. The matter was examined in the utmost detail and engaged the attention of all members of the Government of Madras, but no conclusion has yet been arrived at as to whether it is advisable or not to take up the question of the extraction of sandal-wood oil and if so whether this should be done in conjunction with the Mysore Darbar or independently. I may say that what chiefly suggested that departure was the large profits believed to have been derived in Mysore where there are extensive factories already in existence. There was an apprehension that the auction of sandal-wood would result in substantial loss. I am glad to say from the figures which have reached us in the last few weeks regarding the latest auctions that there need be no apprehension of any immediate or substantial loss of revenue from delay in taking up the extraction of sandal oil."

"In regard to the Irrigation department, if I heard him aright—I am not quite sure—the Hon'ble Mr. Chidambaranatha Mudaliyar was apprehensive that the construction of the Kannambadi reservoir had in some way been responsible for the failure of irrigation supplies in the Tanjore delta this year. If that is his apprehension, I am glad to be able to assure him on the authority of the Chief Engineer for Irrigation that during the whole time of shortage of supply we in Madras were receiving the full natural flow of the river just as if there had been no reservoir."

"The Hon'ble Mr. Sadasiva Bhat referred to the delay on the part of the Railway Board in passing orders on Mr. Richards' report on the possibility of developing lines to the west coast."

The Hon'ble Mr. K. CHIDAMBARANATHA MUDALIYAR:—"May I say that, so far as I can judge from the figures given to me by the Government in reply to an interpellation of mine, there was very little difference between the previous year's and this year's average so far as the Kannambadi dam is concerned. Whereas when we go to the upper anicut we find that there is a great difference. In 1916—"

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"I am afraid the Honourable Member cannot go into the whole question. If he has any doubt I would suggest to him to pay a visit to the Hon'ble Mr. Howley and discuss with him the figures bearing on this subject."

The Hon'ble Mr. K. CHIDAMBARANATHA MUDALIYAR:—"I wish to draw attention to that fact."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"Will the Honourable Member kindly take that course?"

The Hon'ble Mr. L. DAVIDSON:—"I had independently noticed in regard to one of the pending railway projects the unfortunate delay which has arisen out of the failure to pass orders on Mr. Richards' report at an earlier date. On that occasion I believe I gave instructions to the Secretary to write to the Railway Board to ask whether it was not possible to expedite orders. If no such letter has actually gone, I will see that one goes now. I certainly agree with the Honourable Member that an early decision should be arrived at."

(Mr. Davidson; Mr. Todhunter.)

"I have the honour, Sir, in conclusion, to refer briefly to the Police department. I do not propose to traverse the whole question of the administration of the department. That would not be possible now, but there are one or two points that I would like to mention. I think it was the Hon'ble Mr. Narasimha Ayyar who took as an assumption the proposition that there has been a steady increase of expenditure in the Police department. Quite recently I have endeavoured to controvert that proposition in answering the resolution moved by the Hon'ble Mr. Rama Ayyangar at the meeting on 11th March last. I took my starting point somewhere about 1915 or 1916—I forget exactly—when Sir Harold Stuart justified the existing expenditure on the department and I believe I succeeded in showing that in the three years which followed the expenditure after the elimination of special factors represented an annual increase of only 0.6 per cent and I pointed out that even that small increment included exceptional items owing to the war. This proves that it is hardly safe to assume that in recent years at any rate there has been an increase of expenditure on the Police department by leaps and bounds or as the Hon'ble Mr. Venkatapati Raju said 'passing all reasonable bounds'. It is quite easy to justify the increased expenditure on the Police department during the past few years.

"I must next to refer to one remark of the Hon'ble the Raja of Ramnad with reference to the fact that the number of Indian District Superintendents of Police is limited to two at present. That is the case under Police Order No. 43, but like the question of improving the pay and position of the subordinate judiciary the limitation is wrapped up with the recommendations of the Public Services Commission. I am glad to say, however, that the consideration of the case of the Police department has reached a further stage and the views of this Government in regard to the provisional conclusions of the Government of India have already been forwarded. I cannot go into the details of our recommendations, because they are under the consideration of a higher authority. But I may say they provide for a substantial addition to the number of Indian Officers in the department. That is an answer to the general issue.

"Before I sit down I desire to dissociate the Government entirely from the remark which the Hon'ble the Raja of Ramnad attached to his plea for the creation of more superintendships of police open to Indians. He drew a comparison between the distinguished services rendered by Mr. Parankusam Nayudu in Madras during the disturbances in September and Mr. Karunakara Nayar during the Kamudi riots and the work of Mr. Elliot, the Superintendent of Police, who was in charge during the Madura riots. I am as ready to express my satisfaction as fully as the Raja with regard to the valuable services rendered by the two Indian officers but I cannot for one moment endorse his suggestion that the affairs during the Madura riots were badly handled by the European District Superintendent of Police. The issues raised by that unfortunate incident were discussed at some length in this Council and I gave it as the considered opinion of the Government that the Superintendent of Police was free from blame and that he was entitled to praise for the manner in which he conducted himself on that occasion and throughout the trying situations with which he had to deal before the actual disturbance took place. It would not be right for me to pass over without denial a statement which imputes to a deserving servant of Government gross mismanagement of a difficult position."

The Hon'ble Mr. C. G. TODHUNTER:—"Your Excellency, sitting here under the torrent of facts, figures and criticisms that go to make up this stage of the budget debate, reminds me of nothing so much as bathing under the waterfall at Kuttalam—a very bracing and health-giving experience when one has time to go home and think it over, but one that leaves one breathless and bewildered when one first comes out from under the fall.

"Before attempting to answer any of the criticisms that relate to the departments temporarily under my charge, I am sure that Your Excellency would wish me, as filling for a few days the seat that you have filled so long, to acknowledge gratefully the compliments that have been paid to the budget that is yours. Honourable Members have been very generous in their appreciation of your efforts to make the most of the funds at your disposal in this first year after the close of hostilities.

"And in this connexion, I may perhaps be permitted to say a word in reply to what has been said as regards the feeling of despondency that follows the rejection of resolutions moved in this Council. In so far as the budget is concerned, the more successful we are in anticipating the wishes of Honourable Members in framing our estimates in the first instance, the less room is there for making changes at a later stage. I can assure Honourable Members that the views that they express in this Council are very carefully considered by Government from the beginning of the framing of the estimate. Even after this stage, there is a continual sifting of proposals for change. Thus, the Honourable non-official Members of the Finance Committee make proposals in writing, and I may mention that some of them, for instance, the Hon'ble Mr. Siva Rao this year, made quite a number of these. Of these, a number are adopted and the rest come up again at the meeting of the Finance Committee, where some more of them are carried after further argument and explanation. It is only the residue that come up for the third and final sifting in this Council. In considering the proportion of rejection, therefore, it must be remembered that it relates to the residue after these three sifting processes and that, if Honourable Members were to set down a list of the matters they wanted provided for before the budget was commenced and to see how far their wishes had been complied with in the final result, they would be surprised to find how high the proportion of acceptance was.

"To return to the simile of the waterfall, the deluge of facts and figures that has left me more bewildered than any other is that poured upon us by the Hon'ble Mr. Rama Ayyangar, and although he has been good enough to supply me with a copy of his speech, I am afraid I am still not sure that I have caught the trend of his arguments. He accuses us in the first instance of an underestimate amounting to about one crore, which he arrives at apparently by adding together all the items of revenue in which there has been either an excess or a deficit in the revised estimate as compared with last year's budget and all the items of expenditure that have lapsed and all the new and unforeseen expenditure that has been incurred. Almost in the same breath, he suggests that abnormal increases of receipts under some heads should be balanced by similar losses under others. I put it to him that this is exactly what has happened in our revised estimate for 1918-19. Our revenue has fallen short to the extent of 14.75 lakhs under Land Revenue and 8.82 lakhs under Forest and we have increases of 21.52 lakhs under Excise, 3.82 lakhs under Jails and a net increase of 2.69 lakhs under other heads, bringing out a net final increase of only 4.46 lakhs over the budget for the last year. Similarly as regards charges, we have a decrease of 8.10 lakhs under Civil Works—Public Works Department and a net decrease of .25 lakh under other heads, and an increase of 21.14 lakhs under Civil Works—Civil, which is due to the large grant to local bodies for the restoration of trunk roads. I put it to the Honourable Member that it is not humanly possible to estimate to a rupee the result, for instance, of what we may call the gamble in thirst, that is, the excise auctions; and if we bring out as a result an increase of only 4 lakhs on a budget of over 800, I think we may claim, if not that we have budgeted cleverly, at least that we have been fortunate in our results. As regards the expenditure side, I do not suppose that he would have wished us to forbear from giving the extra war allowance to poorly paid officers or the 20 lakhs for roads when we found that we had enough money in hand and that there was no other urgent demand for it.

"The Honourable Gentleman next says that we should keep a reserve of about 50 lakhs over and above the required closing balances to meet contingencies arising in the course of the year. But if I understand him aright, he objects to our meeting the war allowances to subordinate and grants to local bodies for restoration of roads out of just such a reserve which we had and the money that became unexpectedly available. Again, I put it to him that what we have done is just what he wishes us to do.

"He next compares our expenditure under certain heads, including Police, with those of some other provinces, especially with the United Provinces, and says that our expenditure under the Police head has increased from 80.45 lakhs in 1910-11 to 136.51 lakhs in 1919-20. In making this comparison, he overlooks the fact that in 1914-15 the charges on account of talaiyaris were added to the Police budget."

The Hon'ble Mr. K. RAMA AYYANGAR:—"I have deducted 16 lakhs."

The Hon'ble Mr. C. G. TODHUNTER:—"136 lakhs includes talaiyaris."

The Hon'ble Mr. K. RAMA AYYANGAR:—"I have deducted 16 lakhs and taken only 120."

The Hon'ble Mr. C. G. TODHUNTER:—"There was no corresponding increase in the United Provinces and consequently the comparison is not quite a fair one. If he wishes to make a comparison, let him make one with Bombay, which in the year 1914-15, in which we added the charges under talaiyaris to the expenditure under Police, was spending 104.25 lakhs to our 109.31 lakhs and in the budget for 1919-20 has put down 145.32 lakhs as against our 136.51 lakhs. I feel sure that when he realizes these figures he will be astonished at our moderation."

"I should also like to mention that he appears to regard a certain sum of 7.10 lakhs allotted to district charges as appertaining to the Police. I would point out that this is not a Police charge at all but belongs to the scheme for revenue district and divisional charges."

The Hon'ble Mr. K. RAMA AYYANGAR:—"It is an assignment from the Imperial Government."

The Hon'ble Mr. C. G. TODHUNTER:—"The Honourable Member's words were:—'Allowance was made for additional expenditure on the Police Department anticipated on the introduction of the scheme recommended by the Police Commission and a sum of 7.10 lakhs was allowed for additional district charges.'

"Another most vigorous critic is the Hon'ble Mr. Venkatapati Raju. He charges us with lagging behind the other provinces. But I confess I cannot quite understand in what respect he holds us to be lagging behind. It was not in respect of incidence of taxation since he considers that under each head our incidence is too high, nor was it in respect of collection since he complained that we enforced this by more penalties than the other provinces. We must therefore, I presume, look for it on the expenditure side. The provincial contract, of course, is a matter which it is not open to us to discuss. If he considers, however, that we have been behindhand in utilizing the balances which have accumulated during the war, I should like to place some figures on that head before him. Madras, whose balances amount to only 196 lakhs as against a total of 1,751 lakhs for the rest of India, has budgeted for an expenditure of 75.25 lakhs from the balances as against a total of 212 lakhs for all the other provinces put together. In this case, I think we may stand astonished, if at all, not at our moderation, but at our recklessness.

"Another Honourable Gentleman who finds fault with our financial arrangements as a whole is the Hon'ble Mr. Krishna Rao. I will only touch on one of his arguments. He compared our arrangements unfavourably with those of Bengal and Bombay on the ground that we collect less income-tax. I put it to him that the capitals of those Presidencies are two of the largest ports in the world and that under no financial arrangement can we hope to secure from this province an amount of income-tax that would compare with theirs. "I now come to the head of Land Revenue. Of the critics in this respect, the most outspoken again is the Hon'ble Mr. Rama Ayyangar. He says that our settlement policy has been completely changed under Your Excellency's régime. He does not specify the nature of the change nor am I aware that there is any ground for this sweeping assertion, unless it is that the processes have been considerably simplified.

(Mr. Todhunter; Mr. M. Ramachandra Rao.)

"The Hon'ble Mr. Siva Rao considers that we have over estimated the land revenue receipts for the current year. I think, perhaps, he has overlooked the fact that there has been a considerable increase in remissions in the year which has just closed and that the estimates for the current year have been fixed on the assumption that the seasonal conditions will be normal.

"The Hon'ble Mr. Venkatapati Raju attacked us on the score of high cost of collection. In this connexion, I would refer him to Your Excellency's remarks in last year's debate. You pointed out to him that, if he had examined the figures in the budget, he would have found that they included 14 lakhs for Survey and Settlement, 30 lakhs for Land Records and 35 lakhs for village officers and that the actual cost of district administration was only 48 lakhs for the collection of 611 lakhs, i.e., much less than 10 per cent. I have not had time to follow completely the comparison he makes in this respect with the charges in the United Provinces. I can hardly think that he wishes to reduce the number of our Collectors. If we adopted the basis of area and population of the United Provinces, we should have 44 Collectors instead of 25. If we compare officers of the grade of Deputy Collector, we find a similar startling result. I can hardly suppose that the Honourable Member wishes to reduce either the number or pay of the hard-worked Tahsildars and Revenue Inspectors. If it is the village officers he has in mind, I think he will find several Honourable Members of this Council ready to oppose him. The fact is that the United Provinces budget contains no item corresponding to our charges for village officers, while at the same time, the settlement there is made with the village community, and not with the individual ryot; and this of course, in the case of Madras, involves much more detailed work than in the case of the United Provinces.

"The Hon'ble Mr. Rama Ayyangar and the Hon'ble Mr. Ramachandra Rao pleaded for the improvement of the conditions of the Provincial Civil Service. I need hardly say that this is being fully considered in connexion with the Public Services Commission's report."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO:—"The listed posts."

The Hon'ble Mr. C. G. TODHUNTER:—"Meanwhile, as regards the number of listed posts, I may point out that the members of that service are actually holding five appointments of and above the grade of Collector as against the two Collectorates that were originally listed.

"The Hon'ble Mr. Ahmad Tambi Marakkayar wishes to have quarters provided for revenue subordinates in mufassal stations. This is a project which the Government are willing to consider where there is difficulty in obtaining quarters, and I hope that, if a provision is made in future years on this account, it will not be regarded as a ground for attack on that unpopular head '45. Civil Works.'

"The Hon'ble Mr. Kavalappara Muppil Nayar made some remarks about the Wynad settlement. On this point I will only say that the matter has been fully inquired into and that it was found that the relinquishments or sales of land for arrears of revenue, which were apparently the cause of complaint, were due to peculiar circumstances prevailing in the Wynad rather than to the introduction of settlement rates there.

"The Hon'ble Mr. Sadasiva Bhat referred to the question of remissions in South Kanara. The reasons why remissions are not ordinarily allowed in South Kanara are that the settlement contained certain provisions peculiar to that district as follows:—

(1) the usual allowance of 15 per cent for vicissitudes of season was allowed although in allowing it the Board of Revenue remarked that vicissitudes of season in the district were practically negligible;

(2) wet lands in the district which can grow a second and a third crop were assessed at a consolidated rate equal to $1\frac{1}{2}$ times the single crop rate of assessment;

(3) no second crop charge is leviable on single crop wet lands cultivated with a second crop,

(4) when dry lands are converted into wet or when uncultivated hill sides are converted into dry or garden lands no assessment is made for the settlement period.

"In the season of 1918, it was at first thought that there were conditions justifying the idea that the season was one of exceptional calamity. Further inquiry however showed that this could not really be said to be the case. It was only in certain villages in the sandy tract along the coast that there had been a complete failure of crop. At the same time the Collector found none of the materials which are available on the East Coast for determining the grant of remission or otherwise. In short, there is no question of remission in South Kanara in the sense in which the term is ordinarily used in the East Coast areas. On these considerations, the provision made in the Revised Estimate on the Collector's first report was struck out after a more detailed report had been received.

"The Hon'ble Mr. Chidambaranatha Mudaliyar complained generally that the provision that has been made for remission of revenue was inadequate. With reference to this, I can only say that the matter has been fully gone into by the Collectors and that full provision has been made for all that they asked for.

"The same Honourable Member wished that further provision should be made for the grant of loans for digging wells. As to this, I can assure him that we shall be only too glad to make provision for any reasonable expenditure on this account.

[7TH APRIL 1919.]

(Mr. Todhunter; the President.)

"The same Honourable Gentleman proposes that we should impose an export duty on industrial crops in order to increase the production of food supplies. This alteration of the tariff is not a question for this Council to decide upon. I would, however, remind him of the debate on a similar question that took place in this Council a few days ago. If he will study the suggestion more fully from the point of view of economics, he will not, I think, wish to pursue it further.

"The same Honourable Gentleman complained of the high cost of restoration of survey stones. My answer to this is that it is open to any ryot to keep his stones in order himself. The Government have no wish to employ any establishment for the purpose, and they would be only too glad if the ryots would attend to the renewal of stones and reduce this item of the budget to nothing.

"The criticisms on the matter of excise have already been dealt with by the Hon'ble Mr. Wood. I should, however, like to make one remark in reply to the criticisms of the Hon'ble Mr. Venkatapati Raju. He found fault with us because of the large amount of our excise revenue and compared us unfavourably on that account with Bombay. I would put it to him that the proper test is the standard of consumption per head. If he will examine the statistics under this head, he will find that the consumption of country spirits in Bombay is more than three times that in Madras.

"Several Honourable Gentlemen referred to the question of food control, but there was nothing very specific in their complaints regarding the policy of the Government in this respect except for a proposal that the Government should finance local bodies in the matter of sales of food grains. I hope that under the arrangements that have recently been come to, the necessity for any such action is past.

"The Hon'ble the Raja of Ramnad said that there was a widespread feeling that Government were supporting individual merchants in profiteering and that steps should be taken to correct this view. I cordially agree with the Honourable Member and I hope that he and other Honourable Members will make it their business whenever they meet with such absurd rumours to put the people right.

"The same Honourable Member wished us to follow the example of Mysore and quoted Mr. Banerji's speech to the Assembly. I have no wish to decry the efforts made in that progressive State. But I should like to quote Mr. Banerji to show that we should not be altogether wise to follow them in all their experiments. He said:

"We have given up the control of locally produced foodstuffs, as we found it impracticable. We have abandoned commandeering on a large scale as it was attended with many disadvantages and yielded poor results. The situation is a constantly changing one and, as Sir M. Visveswarayya observed at the public meeting held on the 16th November last, 'we must be prepared to revise our forecasts and plans and go on adjusting efforts to obstacles almost from week to week.'

"That is practically what we are doing here—adjusting efforts to obstacles almost from week to week.

"To other Honourable Members who are anxious for a much closer degree of food control, I would recommend a discussion with any gentleman who has lived in England when control was closest there. I think they would then agree with us in hesitating to proceed to extreme measures.

"In conclusion, Your Excellency, I am sure that the Council will concur with me in expressing our obligations to the staff of the Finance Department for the unceasing labour that has resulted in the production of this budget. The Honourable Members who ask that additional details should be given do not always, I think, realize how great is the task involved in getting ready from constantly altering materials the complex figures which the budget includes. We all know the pathetic description of the Indian ryot

His life is a long-drawn question
Between a crop and a crop.

"I do not know if we are all equally familiar with the two lines that precede these:—

He eats and hath indigestion,
He toils and he may not stop;
His life is a long-drawn question
Between a crop and a crop.

"These lines seem to me a more appropriate description of the life of the Budget Superintendent in the budget season than of that of the ryot. The Budget Superintendent is the croupier of the gamble in rain and spends his days and nights raking in the lapses of the departments which are unable to spend their allotments, and shovelling out additional sums to those to which, through good luck or necessity, additional payments are due. Meanwhile he presents to the officers responsible for the budget a constantly changing and bewildering kaleidoscope of figures. This means a toil which is literally unceasing, while the budget season lasts. He eats and sleeps when he can, and even his tiffin rooms have gone to make way for this Chamber. The work is done with great rapidity and unflinching accuracy and the debt we all owe to the Assistant Secretary and his staff is a great one."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"We have had a long day of speeches and I do not propose to add a lengthy one. I propose to say a few words on the general outline of the budget and the financial position of the Government. The budget has come in for some amount of criticism because of its being a deficit budget and on account of the fact that it makes a draft upon our balances. A year ago there was a great deal of criticism of this Government, because they failed to apply to the Government of India for permission to draw from these balances when you have what is known as a deficit balance. When this Government following the advice of various Honourable Members do what they recommend, the result seemed to be to make the Honourable Members change their minds to the opposite course, which is disappointing to those who endeavoured to meet their wishes. I should like to suggest that for a province like Madras which is going before the Government of India with the plea that it is very much overtaxed and that the proposed financial relation is unfair it is not wise to have large balances for the Government of India to take away and also it does seem to be wiser that when the Government of India are kind enough to give us Rs 75 lakhs that we should spend it for the benefit of the general tax-payer, who has paid it in this Presidency, instead of leaving it to the uncertain future in the hands of our bankers, the Government of India. I feel quite at one with the policy which the Government have got of finding finances from the balance, not that I am prepared to say that the financial future of the Presidency is altogether satisfactory. I look upon it with considerable apprehension because I notice in this Council—I have no doubt that this Council faithfully represent the views to a large extent of a large proportion of the educated classes outside—a tendency to attack the sources of revenue on which the financial stability of this Government depends. Taking land revenue, for instance, we have had the Hon'ble Mr. Krishna Rao, who has told us that many resolutions, in the last two or three years, the object of which was to restrict the existing revenue and to prevent its expansion, were rejected. It is true that hitherto these resolutions have failed to be carried, but when there is, as there will presumably be in a short time an elected majority in this Council, I feel very uncertain what will be the future of that great item of revenue on which a large portion of the resources of the Presidency depends. And the other great item of revenue is in an even more parlous condition, that is excise. There again as pointed out by the Hon'ble Mr. Wood and the Hon'ble Mr. Todhunter there seems to be a steady inclination on the part of non-official Members of this Council to endeavour or at any rate to express a wish to cut down that revenue as far as possible. I must confess that if this sentiment were ever carried into action I think the difficulties of this Government will be very great indeed because land revenue and excise together account for 6 crores out of 8½ crores of the Provincial expenditure. What I would suggest to Honourable Members is that one of the most important questions is whether the people of this Presidency when represented, as they will be, by an elected majority, will be prepared to tax themselves. As regards that I see various ominous symptoms. I see no tendency of local bodies to tax themselves which is naturally unpleasant, and I see their desire to get the Provincial Government rather than themselves to share the burden, which they should naturally bear. I doubt whether when we have got the Elementary Education Bill which is now before the Government of India and which Honourable Members are anxious to see introduced here—I very much doubt whether the necessary extra taxation which will be involved will be received with enthusiasm by the people of the country. There is this to be remembered that unless the representatives of the public when they obtain the control of this Council are prepared to pay for all the advantages which they wish to enjoy, responsible Government will mean nothing but stagnation. That is a proposition which it behoves I think everybody interested in the progress of the Presidency to ponder over very carefully.

(The President.)

"As regards our present position and our present relations, some despondent views have been expressed. I hope they are exaggerated. The Hon'ble Mr. Ramachandra Rao mentioned that he had found the official vote very trying to his temper. I sympathize entirely with the Honourable Member and I cannot refrain from bearing witness on this occasion—it may be the last that I shall have—to the admirable temper and admirable patience and forbearance with which the Honourable the non-official members have, year after year, time and again, seen their proposals defeated by the official vote. Although the Honourable Member says it has tried his temper evidently, he has been a complete master of it as no real sign of this strain appears as a matter of fact. I think that we have reached a point in this Council where on certain questions the Government's and the non-officials' views have been so clearly defined and are so clearly irreconcilable that further discussion of the principles is calculated to irritate both sides. For instance both on land revenue and excise I doubt whether either side is ever likely to be able to convince the other. My own opinion is, under the constitution which we have now got we have almost reached the limit of progress possible; and therefore in these particular matters it is only possible for us to agree to differ. At present the responsibility rests with the Government and they must therefore control the issue. If that responsibility is changed the whole position will be changed. But then I should look with the greatest sympathy and hope and interest to the future of this Council for the results which it achieves in the management of the new duties cast upon it. I do not think I need detain the Council any longer. There is no prospect of any further meeting of the Council and therefore the Council will adjourn sine die."

1026 RESOLUTION RE LEGISLATION TO ORGANIZE ADMINISTRATIVE VILLAGE PANCHAYATS.

(Mr. Siva Rao.)

[3RD APRIL 1919.]

RESOLUTION RE LEGISLATION TO ORGANIZE ADMINISTRATIVE VILLAGE PANCHAYATS.

The Hon'ble Mr. P. SIVA RAO :—" Your Excellency, I have the honour to move resolution No. VIII which runs thus :—

'VIII. This Council recommends to His Excellency the Governor in Council that early legislation may be started to organize administrative village panchayats in this Presidency.'

"Your Excellency, this is a very old question and I must say, it is a very hoary one. From time to time, non-official Members of the Legislative Council have brought up resolutions dwelling on this matter, but to no purpose. The question dates at any rate from the year 1908 when a considerable stimulus was given to this matter by what was stated by Lord Morley in one of his reform despatches. It was the intention of Lord Morley that this reform of village self-government should be made part and parcel of the reform scheme, and with that idea he said in that despatch : 'Your Excellency will recall that the resolution from which I have quoted treats the subdivision, taluka or the tahsil as the smallest administrative unit. It is a question whether it would not be a wise policy to go further. The village in India (generally) has been the fundamental and indestructible unit of the social system, surviving the downfall of dynasty after dynasty. I desire Your Excellency in Council to consider the best way of carrying out a policy that would make the village the starting point of public life.' Just about that time, the Decentralization Commission were considering this question and I may at once proceed to the conclusions they arrived at. In paragraph 699 of the report, they say : 'We hold that it is most desirable, alike in the interests of decentralization and in order to associate the people with the local tasks of administration, that an attempt should be made to constitute and develop village panchayats for the administration of local village affairs.' They also say : 'We are of opinion also that the foundation of any stable edifice which shall associate the people with the administration must be the village, as being an area of much greater antiquity than administrative creations such as tahsils, etc.' They gave this finding in no uncertain terms. The outline of their scheme is as follows : they recommended that the village should be the ordinary unit of administration and they also said that as regards the village panchayat the average number of members should be five and the village headman should be the ex-officio president of it. They proposed that the members should be elected at an informal election. As regards the functions, they recommended that they should hold office for a substantial number of years subject to their removal by the Divisional officer for misconduct. They advised that civil and criminal jurisdiction may be entrusted to them over cases arising in the village. As regards this matter, I may remind Honourable Members of this Council a Bill has already been introduced and it will come before the Council shortly and it is before the Select Committee. They proposed that they must be empowered to expend monies on the construction and repair of local minor works such as wells, and drinking water tanks, the cleansing of the village, the up-keep of the village roads and providing rest-houses for travellers. They also proposed that they should be entrusted with control over the construction and maintenance of village school houses. They suggested that control over village-schools should also be vested in them to some extent, and they should be entrusted with control also over small fuel and fodder reserves. Now forest panchayats have been formed here and there, and it is highly desirable that the forest panchayats should be amalgamated with these newly proposed panchayats. It was the recommendation of the Decentralization Commission that if possible, there should be only one panchayat for a village, either for the exercise of judicial powers or for the control of fuel and fodder reserves or for the control of irrigation or other kindred matters. They proposed also that control over the village cattle pound should be entrusted to them and numerous other functions were proposed to be given as days advanced and as they gained experience, for instance remission of revenue and the grant of loans to agriculturists, selection of sites for liquor shops in villages, administration of famine relief or organization of measures to combat epidemics. The last thing that was proposed was, they should be entrusted with the distribution of irrigation water in the villages. They proposed that in matters entrusted to them, they must not be subordinate either to the tahsildars or to the deputy tahsildars, but the district executive staff should have supervision over them. As regards the finance of these bodies, they suggested the assignment of a definite portion of the land-cess which should be made over to them and special grants were proposed for particular objects to be made by the sub-district boards and Collectors, and then lastly the receipts from cattle-pound and markets. Added to this, they wanted them to realize small fees from civil suits filed before them. I have dealt with the constitution of the panchayats. They strongly recommended that the present unions which were known as union panchayats which were constituted under the Local Boards Act should be abolished, as these village panchayats were slowly developed. As regards legislation they thought that it was quite necessary : but they suggested that legislation might be very general to suit the varying circumstances of each locality. They said that it should be of a general character containing wide rule-making powers so as to enable the local authorities to provide for different circumstances.

"These were the recommendations of the Decentralization Commission and they came under the review of the Government of India in April 1915. The Government of India approved of the general scheme proposed by the Commission in this matter and expressed their concurrence with all their proposals and laid down also certain general lines of advance, but left the matter entirely to the discretion of the local Government ; and what followed is very interesting. Before the Government of India passed their resolution, it was referred to the local Government and they seemed to suggest that action might be confined for the present to the formation of self-contained voluntary organizations independent of legal sanction. As regards judicial functions, they pronounced themselves against it. They thought that village courts were already enjoying sufficient judicial powers. Acting up to that opinion, they passed an exhaustive G.O. No. 1410, dated the 2nd October 1915, in which they suggested that in all villages containing a population of 3,000 or more, steps should be taken to start unions under Local Boards Act known as union panchayats. As regards other villages, they said : 'The Government are not prepared to accept the view of the Royal Commission that the panchayats created under the Local Boards Act should be abolished.' They said that 400 panchayats had been started under the Local Boards Act and they had done splendid work. They suggested that in all villages containing a population of over 3,000 unions should be started and as regards other villages which contained less population, the Government said : 'Whilst the Government are thus anxious to extend the operation of the existing provisions of Local Boards Act in the larger villages, that they are prepared also to give a trial to a more indefinite and informal kind of panchayat to be constituted on a voluntary basis and without legislative sanction.' That was the Government Order passed in 1915 ; and I need not trouble Honourable Members of the Council with a statement as to all the villages where panchayats have been started since then. You may take it from me that informal panchayats were started, no powers were legally vested in them and no attempt was made to give them any financial powers. I do not know what work they did ; I tried to call for information once or twice, but the reports had not been received and were awaited. I am yet to know what work they have been doing. I may confidently say that they were fore-doomed to failure for this reason ; that they were skeletons without flesh. Without finance they could not do any work.

VILLAGE PANCHAYATS.

"After that Government Order attempts were made by non-official members to put these informal panchayats on a legislative basis. The last resolution was brought forward in 1917 by the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar and then the reply which was given by the Honourable Member in charge came to this : that they were waiting to see how these informal panchayats that were started as experiments worked and after the receipt of those reports and after ascertaining whether they were working satisfactorily or not, they would make up their minds finally and until then no action was called for. That was the gist of the reply given by the Honourable Member in charge in 1917. Since then we have got another important document, the Resolution, dated the 16th May 1918, in which the Government of India review their former resolution and they say : that wherever possible, these village panchayats should be started ; and they also lay down the same principles which the resolution of the Government of India of 1915 suggested. They affirm them except in one or two cases. They differ from the recommendation of the Commission in this matter. They propose that some powers of taxation should also be given to these village panchayats. They say it is highly desirable to start these panchayats wherever possible. If it is not considered possible in any particular locality by the local Government, then they suggest that alternative proposals should be put forward. I do not for a moment believe that Madras could be placed beyond the pale of this simple reform. I do not think that the Government would come to a conclusion like that. This is what is stated : 'It is essential, however, that an effective beginning should be made wherever possible.' As regards taxation they propose that panchayats should be given permissive powers of taxation even differing from the recommendations of the Decentralization Commission. They say : 'The development of a village panchayat system where it is undertaken, should, in any case, be secured by separate legislation unconnected with the Acts relating to municipal and rural boards.' The same thing was affirmed in the scheme of Reforms of Mr. Montagu and Lord Chelmsford, in which they say that a beginning should be made as soon as possible. 'It is hoped that, wherever possible, an effective beginning will be made.'

"There was a discussion of the same matter in 1918 in this Council when my Honourable friend Mr. Krishna Rao moved a resolution that certain recommendations in the Government of India's resolution of 1918 should be adopted. It is interesting to know what answer the Government gave to the question I asked at the same meeting. I asked 'will the Government be pleased to furnish a list of all the informal panchayats organized in the province ; (b) to state whether any reports have been received as to their working ; if so, to place them on the table, if not to call for the report ; and also (c) to state whether any money has been hitherto sanctioned to finance them ; if so, how the money has been distributed.' The answer was : 'The Honourable Member's attention is invited to the statements laid on the table in reply to questions Nos. 12 and 74 asked at the meetings held on the 2nd April 1917 and on the 3rd April 1918, respectively. The Government have not yet received any reports and do not propose to call for reports before December 1918.' So, the reports must be due now. December has passed. In his reply to this resolution in August 1918, the Honourable Member in charge says : 'Lastly, I come to the vexed question of panchayats. The general impression seems to be that we are hostile to the development of panchayats. The Hon'ble Mr. Siva Rao said : you would not give money and you would not call for report. We can only call for reports after some work has been done by these panchayats. These village panchayats must work at least for one year before we could call for reports. . . . Reports are due to us.

FINANCIAL DEPARTMENT

MEMORANDUM PRESENTING THE BUDGET FOR 1919-1920.

With reference to rule 29 (1) of the Rules for the discussion of the annual Financial Statement, I present the Budget of this Presidency for 1919-1920 as finally sanctioned by the Government of India.

The preliminary estimates given in the Amended Draft Financial Statement which was presented to the Council on the 5th February 1919 have undergone alterations in the light of later information. The Chief Secretary's memorandum which was printed as Part III of the Amended Draft Financial Statement has been brought up to date and forms Part II of this pamphlet. Details by major heads of the alterations which have been made in the Amended Draft Financial Statement are given in Part III.

2. The broad results as regards the revised estimate for 1918-1919 and the budget estimate for 1919-1920 will be seen from the following table:—

Revised Estimate, 1918-1919.

3. The fall of 7.87 lakhs under Receipts and the decrease of .77 lakh under Charges are the net result of the following variations:—

Receipts.		LAKHS.
I. Land Revenue ..		— 2.00
VIII. Income-tax ..		— 3.00
IX. Forest ..		— 3.00
Transfers between Imperial and Provincial ..		— 6.00

Charges.
22. Education ..		+ 1.23
45. Civil Works—Public Works Department ..		— 2.00
		— .77

4. These alterations have been made with reference to later actuals, and the only variation which I need explain is the decrease of 6 lakhs under the head 'Transfers between Imperial and Provincial.' This decrease is the net result of (a) an additional assignment to Provincial funds of 1 lakh recently given by the Government of India, for improving the health conditions of pilgrim centres (.50 lakh in addition to 1 lakh already sanctioned) and for anti-malarial work (.50 lakh), and (b) an increase of 7 lakhs in the assignment from Provincial funds under the heading

'Compensation payment on account of the Provincial share of the extra excise revenue and income-tax revenue accruing from the additional taxation imposed by the Government of India from 1916-1917, which is explained in paragraph 145 of the Chief Secretary's memorandum. The compensatory assignment from Provincial funds for the year 1918-1919, which was estimated at 10.43 lakhs on the 5th February 1919, has now been raised by 7 lakhs which allows also for an arrear adjustment relating to the previous year.

5. The closing balance for 1918-1919, which is the opening balance for 1919-1920 and which stood at 203.19 lakhs in the Amended Draft Financial Statement, has, in consequence of the alterations mentioned in paragraph 3 above, been reduced by 7.10 lakhs to 196.09 lakhs.

Budget Estimate, 1919-1920.

6. The following alterations have now been made in the preliminary figures in the Amended Draft Financial Statement presented to the Council on the 5th February:—

Receipts.
							LAKHS.
IV. Stamps	..	..	..	..	..	..	+ 2.50
V. Excise	..	..	..	..	..	..	+ 5.00

24-B. Sanitation	..	..	..	..	..	..	+ 2.00
33. Famine Relief	..	..	..	..	..	..	+ .25
							+ 2.35

7. The increases under the heads IV. Stamps, V. Excise and X. Registration have been made in the light of later information.

8. The decrease under the divided head INCOME-TAX is the result of certain changes in taxation made by the Government of India. In the first place, the Government of India have, with the object of alleviating the hardships caused by high prices to persons with small incomes, exempted incomes below Rs. 2,000 per annum (the present limit is Rs. 1,000) from assessment to income-tax with effect from the 1st April 1919. The total loss of revenue on this account in this Presidency is estimated at 10.60 lakhs, of which the Provincial share is 5.30 lakhs. Secondly, the Government of India have decided to levy during 1919-1920 a duty on excess profits from certain businesses, assessed at 50 per cent of the profits realized in excess of a standard determined in accordance with the provisions of the Excess Profits Duty Act (X of 1919). The proceeds from the excess profits duty will be credited to an Imperial minor head under the major head INCOME-TAX. The imposition of this excess profits duty however involves a slight loss of income-tax since a rebate will be given for the purposes of this tax in respect of the amounts paid as excess profits duty. The loss under the divided head INCOME-TAX is estimated at 1.50 lakhs of which the Provincial share is .75 lakh. The total reduction under the divided head INCOME-TAX is consequently 12.10 lakhs, of which the Provincial share is 6.05 lakhs. The Government of India have undertaken to make good the loss to Provincial funds by an assignment from Imperial revenues.

9. TRANSFERS BETWEEN IMPERIAL AND PROVINCIAL.—The budget figure for 1919-1920 now takes credit for the assignment from Imperial revenues of the sum of 6.05 lakhs referred to in the previous paragraph. On the other hand, the assignment from Provincial revenues in consequence of the taxation scheme of 1916 referred to in paragraph 4 above which was placed at 11.43 lakhs on the 5th February has since been raised by 7 lakhs. As a result, there is a net decrease of .95 lakh in the assignment from Imperial to Provincial.

10. On the expenditure side, the budget provision of 1 lakh under Famine Relief has now been raised by another lakh, of which the Provincial share is .25 lakh.

Under the heads 24-A. MEDICAL and 24-B. SANITATION, the following additional provision has been made as a result of the discussions at the meetings of the 5th, 6th and 7th February last:—

Head of account.	Item.	Amount. LAKHS.
24-A. MEDICAL ..	Appointment of travelling sub-assistant surgeons in mufassal hospitals (Resolution moved by the Hon'ble Mr. A. S. Krishna Rao.)	10

PART II.

Memorandum explanatory of the figures under each Major Revenue head and under each Major Expenditure head of account.

Introductory.

The conditions of Provincial finance are determined by the terms of an administrative arrangement subsisting between the Government of India and the Local Government and known as the Provincial Settlement. The revenue and expenditure of the province as classified in the public accounts are divided between the two Governments in accordance with the terms of this settlement.

With effect from the 1st April 1911 this Provincial Settlement, which had hitherto been subject to change, was made permanent subject to the following conditions:—

(1) It shall not be subject to revision in the future, except by way of commuting fixed assignments into growing revenue;

(2) in case of serious famine the question of assistance from Imperial revenues will be duly considered by the Government of India;

(3) in special cases where the Local Government are unable to meet their requirements from their current revenues or by drawing on their balances, they should take the necessary amount as a short interest-bearing loan from the Government of India repayable in suitable instalments; and

(4) the Government of India reserve the right to call for assistance from Provincial revenues in case of serious embarrassment in their own finances.

At the same time Forest revenue and expenditure, which had hitherto been divided, were made wholly Provincial.

2. The present statement does not deal with the heads which are wholly Imperial. The following table shows the several heads of revenue and expenditure which are divided between Imperial and Provincial:—

Revenue.			Expenditure.

			33. FAMINE RELIEF ..	Three-fourths	One-fourth.
			42. MAJOR IRRIGATION WORKS.	One-half	One-half.

The remaining heads dealt with in this statement are wholly Provincial.

Preliminary.

3. Before proceeding to a detailed explanation of the figures for the current and ensuing years under the various major heads, it may be pointed out that, on the expenditure side, both the revised estimate for 1918-1919 and the budget for 1919-1920 include charges on account of the grant of temporary allowances to lower paid Government servants in order to enable them to meet the existing high prices of foodstuffs and other necessities due to the war and other causes. These allowances, which were sanctioned for a period of one year from the 1st March 1918, were at first confined to inferior servants in the public offices in Madras City. They were subsequently extended to all public servants under the control of the Local Government with the exception of village service establishments and members of the executive police staff) drawing a monthly salary of Rs. 50 and under. The extra cost involved in Provincial funds was about 8-00 per annum. Later on, however, it was found necessary to afford a more substantial measure of relief to subordinates whose salaries did not exceed Rs. 20 per mensem and with this object, additional allowances, involving a total extra cost of about 7-00 per annum to Provincial, were sanctioned with effect from the 1st September 1918.

The question of the adequacy of these allowances again came up for consideration in December last, and on a careful examination of the existing conditions, it was decided to enhance the rates of allowances and to sanction a revised scale with effect from the 1st January 1919. Besides affording a more adequate measure of relief to the subordinates already enjoying the concession, this scheme has been made applicable to members of the executive police staff including police talaiyaris who were hitherto excluded from its scope. This last decision involved a further additional expenditure of about 22-00 per annum, of which about two months' charges are included in the revised estimate for 1918-1919 and a full year's provision appears in the budget for 1919-1920 in the summary under the various major heads.

The revised estimate for 1918-1919 and the budget for 1919-1920 thus include a total extra expenditure of about 15-00 and 37-00, respectively, on account of the grant of these allowances.

Revenue.

4. Ordinary Revenue.—The budget estimate for 1918-1919 was framed on the basis of normal conditions. The large decrease in the revised estimate is due mainly to a fall in collections of water-rate and miscellaneous revenue and an increase in remissions on account of the unfavourable conditions in the districts of Ganjam, Vizagapatam, Gōdāvari, Kistna, Kurnool, Cuddapah, Anantapur, Bellary, Chingleput, North Arcot, Chittoor, Tanjore, Madura and Salem. It is also anticipated that the collection of revenue will have to be suspended till the next official year in six districts, the largest amounts being 71 in Bellary and 50 in Salem. The budget estimate for 1919-1920 has been fixed on the assumption that the seasonal conditions in the ensuing year will be better. The budget also takes credit for the introduction of resettlement rates in certain taluks of the South Arcot and Madura districts, and for the collection of the suspended revenue.

5. Sale-proceeds of waste lands and redemption of land-tax and Miscellaneous.—The figures under these two minor heads are fluctuating and are based on actuals. One of the items under the minor head Miscellaneous is "Fees charged for the time and labour of the Land Records staff." The receipts under this item amounted to 1-25 in 1916-1917 and are estimated at 1-12 for 1919-1920.

Expenditure.

6. Charges of district administration.—The increase in the revised estimate is caused mainly by the grant of war allowances to subordinates drawing Rs. 50 and under, and by heavy charges on account of payments for land taken up by the Revenue Department. The lump provision aggregating 60 for the revision of the pay of taluk shroffs and peons will be utilized in the current year. The budget estimate for next year includes a similar provision. It also provides for larger expenditure on temporary establishments for the revision of adangals prior to re-settlement, and war allowances, and includes allotments of

(a) 09 for the creation of a leave reserve, as an experimental measure, for the revenue establishments in the North Arcot district; and
(b) 06 for the appointment of accountants in some of the independent Deputy Tahsildars' offices.

No provision has been made for allowances to officers of the Indian Civil Service on account of the stoppage of promotion due to the war as the embargo on leave has been withdrawn. There will be a small reduction in the charges on account of the pay of Collectors owing to the issue of orders that three district charges are to be held by officers of the Provincial Civil Service in addition to the post of Home Secretary now held by an officer of that service.

7. Survey and Settlement.—As in 1917-1918 the budget for the current year provided for one party for estate surveys the cost of which is recoverable from the estates concerned. The increase in the revised estimate is due mainly to the grant of war allowances and to increased expenditure on temporary establishments attached to survey parties, partly counterbalanced by larger recoveries from estates.

GOVERNMENT OF MADRAS FOR 1919-1920

8. Land Records.—The budget for 1919-1920 includes provision for proceeding with the revision of village establishments in ryotwari and proprietary areas.

9. Allowances to District and Village officers.—To this minor head is debited the expenditure on account of village establishments other than karnams and assistant karnams. The decrease in the revised estimate for 1918-1919, as compared with the budget for that year, occurs under payments on account of Ryotwari Village Service Establishments. The budget estimate for 1919-1920 contains enhanced provision for charges on account of village establishments both in ryotwari tracts and proprietary estates, besides a lump provision of 51 to give effect to revisions of establishments in ryotwari tracts, which have already been sanctioned, but have not yet been introduced owing to the financial stringency caused by the war.

The receipts represent the share, credited to this major head, of the sale-proceeds of the unified postal and revenue stamps, the sale-proceeds of bills of exchange and other general stamps, of court-fee stamps, and of stamped papers for copies of documents, the duty for embossing one-anna receipt and cheque stamps, the duty levied under the Indian Stamp Act, 1899, on documents brought for adjudication and on documents unstamped or insufficiently stamped, and fines and penalties levied by Judicial and Revenue officers under the Stamp Act on insufficiently stamped instruments.

11. The revenue from the unified postal and revenue stamps is credited to the Imperial head Post Office. Out of this revenue, the Government of India have sanctioned the credit to the head STAMPS of a sum of 3.50 per annum, the amount being included under the minor head Sale of general stamps.

12. The increase in the budget estimate for 1919-1920 over the revised estimate for 1918-1919 represents the ordinary growth of revenue which may be expected in a normal year.

44-45

Expenditure.

13. The expenditure under this major head relates to the Central Stamp Office, and to charges connected with the sale of general and court-fee stamps, and to the cost of stamp paper.

44-45

14. Superintendence.—The clerical establishments of the Stationery and Stamp offices at Madras are placed on a single list, and the total cost of the combined establishment was distributed between the heads 6. STAMPS and 50. STATIONERY AND PRINTING in the proportion of 10 to 17 up to the 1st March 1915. Since then, owing to the revision of the establishment, the proportion has been altered to 13 to 25.

The revised estimate for 1918-1919 includes freight charges on large supplies of post-cards manufactured by the Controller of Stamps, Calcutta.

GOVERNMENT OF MADRAS FOR 1919-1920

8-9

Revenue.

15. Licence and distillery fees, etc.—Previous to the year 1914-1915 there was a steady increase in the revenue under this minor head consequent upon successive enhancements of the rates of excise duty on country spirits, larger collections under tree-tax, an increase in consumption of country spirits—notwithstanding successive reductions in the number of shops sold—and increased rentals from toddy, arrack and opium shops. This increase received a check in the year 1914-1915 from the disturbance of economic conditions caused by the war, and the actuals for that year showed a small decline of .74. The year 1915-1916 witnessed a further decline of 15.30. Since 1916-1917, however, there has been a marked recovery and the actuals for that year and the year following show an advance of 21.33 and 30.23, respectively, over those of the previous years. The budget estimate for the current year was on a conservative basis. The progress of actuals however indicates that the revenue will exceed budget anticipations, the increase occurring especially under country spirits and toddy as a result of enhanced rates of taxation on both, and to some extent of high wages. The rates of excise duty on country spirits were raised from 1st April 1918 by 10 annas per proof gallon in most of the districts, by Re. 1-4-0 in the Ceded Districts, Kurnool, Ganjam, Vizagapatam, Madras and South Kanara and by Rs. 2-8-0 in Malabar. The rates of tree-tax were enhanced from 1st October 1918 by 25 per cent in the districts of Ganjam, Vizagapatam, South Kanara and Malabar, by 33½ per cent in the Ceded Districts and Kurnool and by 20 per cent in the rest of the Presidency except Ramnad and Tinnevely. The budget estimate for 1919-1920 has been framed after taking into account the present unfavourable agricultural situation in certain districts of this Presidency.

The consumption of country spirits was actually smaller in 1916-1917 than in 1914-1915 and much lower than in 1913-1914 and 1912-1913. There was a trifling increase in consumption in 1917-1918, as compared with the previous year, but it still remained far below that of 1913-1914 and 1912-1913. The figures of consumption of country spirits in the current year, 1918-1919, so far as they are available, indicate that, though there will be a large increase in revenue, there will be a comparatively small increase in consumption as compared with 1917-1918.

16. Gain on sale-proceeds of excise opium.—This Presidency is supplied with Ghazipur opium, free of cost in the first instance. Of the gross sale-proceeds, an amount calculated on the quantity actually sold at a fixed rate representing the estimated cost of production is credited to the Imperial head II. OPIUM, and the balance to the shared head V. EXCISE—Gain on sale-proceeds of excise opium. The rentals derived from opium shops are, however, shown under the minor head Licence and distillery fees, etc. The cost price of opium was raised from Rs. 11 to Rs. 13 per seer with effect from the 1st April 1918. The issue price of opium, which now stands at Rs. 45 per seer will, with effect from the 1st April 1919, be raised to Rs. 50 per seer.

The revised estimate for the current year is based on the latest actuals available, and the budget estimate for the coming year takes account of the increase in the issue price of opium referred to above.

17. The duty on ganja which then stood at Rs. 5 per seer was raised to Rs. 7½ from 1st April 1911, to Rs. 10 from the 1st April 1914, to Rs. 12½ from the 1st April 1915 and to Rs. 15 from the 1st April 1918. There will be a still further increase to Rs. 17½ per seer from the 1st April 1919.

The receipts from this source are credited to the third minor head, viz., Duty on ganja, while the rents from retail shops are shown, as in the case of opium shops, under the minor head Licence and distillery fees, etc.

Expenditure.

18. Under the head District Executive establishment are recorded the charges for registration of agreements of renters of vend areas, and of holders of independent shops, the annual rental of which exceeds Rs. 1,000, and expenditure on rewards and contingencies.

19. Portion of the combined Salt and Excise establishments.—The expenditure on the combined establishments, which is arrived at after deducting the charges on account of Salt excise licensees' works, and salt purchase and freight, from the total cost of the combined departments of Salt and Excise, is apportioned between the heads 5. SALT (Imperial) and 7. EXCISE (shared equally between Imperial and Provincial) in the ratio of 1 to 2, this being approximately the ratio which the salt revenue bore to the excise revenue in 1907–1908. The increase in the revised estimate for 1918–1919, as compared with the budget of that year, is chiefly due to (1) the revision of the scale of pay of subordinates of the Salt and Abkari department which was introduced from 1st April 1918; (2) to the grant of war allowances and (3) to increased expenditure on the construction of quarters and buildings in connexion with the new salt extensions. The budget for the coming year includes enhanced provision under Establishment, War allowances and Clothing and uniform.

20. With effect from the 1st April 1916, the Government of India have imposed additional taxation to meet Imperial needs. As the head VIII. INCOME-TAX is shared equally between Imperial and Provincial, an assignment equal to one-half of the receipts accruing from the additional taxation is being made from Provincial to Imperial as explained in paragraph 145 infra.

The proceeds from the super-tax imposed under Act VIII of 1917 and from the excess profits duty which the Government of India have decided to levy during 1919–1920 are credited to wholly Imperial minor heads and are consequently not included in the figures given above which relate to the divided head Income-tax.

21. The budget estimate for 1919–1920 which has been framed with due regard to the growth of revenue which may be expected in that year, takes into account the loss of income-tax due to

- (1) the levy during 1919–1920 of the excess profits duty, and
- (2) the exemption of incomes below Rs. 2,000 per annum (the present limit is Rs. 1,000) from assessment to income-tax.

The total loss of revenue under the divided head Income-tax is estimated at 12·10 in 1919–1920 of which the Provincial share is 6·05. A compensatory assignment will however be given from Imperial revenues—vide paragraph 145 infra.

Expenditure.

22. In order to cope with the increased work arising out of the provisions of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1918, a special income-tax officer has been appointed for the town of Madras temporarily for a period of two years from August 1918. The staff of inspectors and accountants employed in the city for income-tax work has also been enlarged, and their pay revised. These causes account mainly for the increase in the revised estimate for 1918–1919, as compared with the budget estimate for the year.

The budget estimate for 1919–1920 contains a full year's provision for the schemes mentioned above.

23. Timber, etc., removed by Government agency.—The decrease in the revised estimate for 1918–1919, as compared with the budget estimate, occurs mainly under "Sandalwood", counterbalanced to a large extent by increases under "Timber" and "Grass and other minor produce." The budget estimate for 1919–1920 provides for larger receipts under "Timber" and "Sandalwood."

24. Timber, etc., removed by consumers or purchasers.—The revised estimate for 1918–1919 shows a decrease of 6·82 as compared with the budget for that year due mainly to an arrangement made with the Munitions Board by which they have assumed complete control over tan-stuffs in return for an annual payment to the Forest department of an amount equal to the average of the pre-war receipts from the lease of such materials.

The increase of 3·72 in the budget estimate for 1919–1920 over the revised estimate for the current year occurs mainly under "Timber," "Firewood and Charcoal" and "Other minor produce."

Expenditure.

25. To the minor head conservancy and Works are debited (a) the outlay on the improvement, extension and protection of forests generally, (b) the outlay on communications and buildings under charge of the Forest Department, (c) the cost of the extraction and transport to sale depots of timber and other forest produce exploited departmentally, (d) the cost of supervision of the removal of similar produce by private agency, (e) charges for the survey and demarcation of forests and (f) the cost of cattle, stores, tools and plant. The actuals for 1915-1916 include a special expenditure of 1.72 for the acquisition of certain leased forests. The absence of this special item of expenditure accounts for the fall in the actuals for 1916-1917. The increase in the actuals for 1917-1918 and the revised estimate for 1918-1919 is chiefly on account of charges for the preparation of hay for the Munitions Board. Timber operations also contribute to the increase in the revised estimate. The excess in this estimate is however counterbalanced to a certain extent by smaller expenditure on "Communications and buildings" and fire protection and other works in connexion with the organization, improvement and extension of forests.

The budget estimate for 1919-1920 contains enhanced provision for the following items:—

Roads and bridges	+	1.21
Buildings	+	.71
Construction of a tramway in the leased forests at Tekkadi	+	.40
Fire protection	+	.24
Other works in connexion with the organization, improvement and extension of forests	+	.40
	+	2.96

26. Establishment.—The decrease in the revised estimate for the current year as compared with the budget is chiefly under salaries due to the deputation of officers for military duty and under contingencies, counterbalanced by increase under 'Establishments' due mainly to the grant of war allowances. The increase in the budget estimate for 1919-1920 as compared with the revised estimate for the current year is chiefly due to increments payable to officers under the time scale of pay, to the provision made for the continuance during the whole of the coming year of the additional temporary forest staff sanctioned in the course of the current year and to a full year's provision being made for the grant of war allowances and for contract contingencies.

27. The budget estimate for 1919-1920 also provides for the reorganization, of (1) the controlling staff of the Forest Department (.25) and (2) the subordinate forest establishment (1.00). The provision of .25 for item (1) represents the pay of a Chief Conservator for nine months in the coming year (.19) and of two Provincial Service officers (.06). The main features of the scheme for the reorganization of the subordinate forest establishment are an increase in the number of Rangers, Deputy Rangers, Foresters and Forest guards and an improvement in their scales of pay. The scheme involves a net extra cost of 3.74 per annum after taking into account savings under temporary establishments, and is to be introduced gradually. The Secretary of State's sanction has not yet been received and the lump provision of 1.00 covers the expenditure likely to be involved in the portion of the scheme that, it is anticipated, will be introduced in the ensuing year.

Revenue.

28. The budget estimate for 1919-1920 has been framed with due regard to the growth of revenue which may be expected under this head on a return to normal conditions.

Expenditure.

29. The minor head Superintendence comprises charges on account of the Inspector-General of Registration, his office establishment and contingencies, while District charges represent the salary of district registrars and sub-registrars and their establishments, and contingent charges.

30. District charges.—The actuals of 1917-1918 included expenditure on account of (1) the reopening of the District Registrars' offices at Nellore and Vizagapatam, (2) the raising of the remuneration of section-writers from Rs. 12 to Rs. 15 per mensem and (3) the formation of a separate Registration district for Ramnad.

The budget estimate for 1918-1919 contained, in addition to the expenditure for a full year on the three schemes mentioned above, a provision of .09 for opening District Registrars' offices in the Kurnool and North Arcot districts, which were sanctioned with effect from the 1st April 1918 and 1st July 1918, respectively. The increase in the revised estimate for 1918-1919 as compared with the budget is accounted for by (a) the grant of war allowances and (b) the introduction from the 1st April 1918, of a scheme for the reorganization of the clerical establishments in Registration offices. The main features of the latter scheme, which involves a net extra cost of .92 per annum, are:—

- (1) a permanent addition of 379 clerks, and
- (2) the introduction of a new scale of pay comprising five grades on Rs. 30, Rs. 27½, Rs. 25, Rs. 22½ and Rs. 20 in lieu of the previous scale of Rs. 25 and Rs. 20.

The budget estimate for 1919-1920, besides providing for enhanced war allowances, includes provision for the following items:—

	LAKHS.
(a) Opening a District Registrar's office at Anantapur	..	..	.07	55
(b) Constitution of a Registration district of Palghat	..	..	.07	55
(c) Revision of pay of District Registrars	..	..	.12	56
(d) Opening new Sub-Registry offices	..	..	.15	56

The charges consist chiefly of pensions paid to landholders as compensation for lands resumed by Government, malikhana allowances and other special compensations. Excise compensations represent mainly the compensation paid by Government in lieu of abkārī and opium privileges which have been either leased or resumed in Native States. The main items under this head are an annual payment to the Nawab of Banganapalle for the lease to Government of the abkārī and opium revenue of that State, a compensation to the Travancore State for the suppression of ganja cultivation, and an annual refund to the French Government of the duty on opium and ganja supplied to French renters.

Revenue.

33. The revenue represents mainly the interest received by the Local Government on advances and loans made from the Provincial advance and loan account. This account, the capital transactions of which are outside the current budget figures, provides for the grant of loans to agriculturists, local bodies, etc. The moneys required for the loans are furnished by the Government of India. The Local Government pay interest thereon and bear losses on account of bad debts. In order to cover risks and cost of management, the Local Government charge a higher rate of interest than that which they have to pay to India.

The revenue under this head also includes interest on Government securities belonging to institutions taken over by Government, along with the endowments for the upkeep of such institutions. In spite of the enhancements which are noticed below of the rate of interest charged by the Government of India to this Government no change has at present been made in the rate charged by this Government for loans to agriculturists. The rate of interest charged on loans to local bodies made after the enhanced rates charged by the Government of India came into force has, however, been raised to 6 per cent.

Expenditure.

34. The interest which is paid to the Government of India by the Local Government on sums placed at the disposal of the latter for advances and loans to local bodies, agriculturists, etc., is shown as expenditure under this head, this interest being calculated on the mean between the outstanding balance of the Provincial advance and loan account at the beginning and at the end of each year. The rate of interest charged to the Local Government was, until recently, $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent per annum, but with effect from the 1st October 1916 this rate was raised to $4\frac{1}{2}$ per cent in respect of loans sanctioned by them on or after that date, and again to $5\frac{1}{2}$ per cent in respect of loans sanctioned on or after 1st April 1917, while loans sanctioned prior to those dates are charged at the old rate of $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent.

35. Staff and household of the Governor.—The expenditure on the purchase and maintenance of furniture, carpets, and other equipment for Government houses, is shown under this minor head. The increased provision in the budget estimate for 1919-1920 over the revised estimate for the current year represents mainly the non-recurring allowances for renewal of furniture and carpets for the incoming Governor.

36. Civil Secretariats.—The increase in the revised estimate for 1918-1919 over the current year's budget estimate is chiefly due to the formation of the Revenue (Special) Department for dealing with matters connected with the war and the developmental departments such as Industries. It has not yet been found possible to abolish this additional Secretariat because there is much work still continuing in connexion with demobilization, winding up enemy concerns, and the like. Meanwhile the question of converting it into a development Secretariat to deal with the branches of administration concerned with the development of the industries, agriculture, fisheries, forests and other resources of the Presidency is under consideration.

The provision under the Home Secretaryship has been increased by 03 with reference to the decision of the Government of India to grant any officer of the Provincial Civil Service who may hold this appointment a local allowance of Rs. 250 in addition to the duty allowance of Rs. 160.

Revenue.

12-13

37. The principal source of revenue is General fees, fines and forfeitures. The revenue under this minor head is, however, liable to fluctuations as it depends largely on the amount of judicial fines inflicted. The receipts under the minor head Pleadership Examination Fees are also liable to fluctuations, as they depend upon the number of candidates appearing.

Expenditure.

72-88

38. High Court.—Under this minor head are shown the salaries of the Judges and officers and establishments of the High Court, and the connected contingent expenditure. The high actuals in 1915-1916 were due chiefly to expenditure on printing and translation work executed on behalf of suitors. The charge is covered by receipts credited to the same account.

The decrease in the revised estimate for 1918-1919 as compared with the budget is due mainly to savings in establishment charges and to smaller expenditure on printing and translation work. The budget estimate for 1919-1920 has been framed on the basis of the continuance of the twelve Judges throughout the year.

39. Law Officers.—This minor head comprises the charges on account of the Advocate-General, the Government Solicitor, the Government Pleaders at Madras and in the mufassal, and the appointment of a separate Public Prosecutor in Madras to discharge duties formerly devolving on the Government Pleader. It also includes the fees paid by Government to pleaders in civil and criminal cases.

40. Civil and Sessions Courts.—To this minor head are debited the charges in connexion with the City Civil Court, the Courts of District and Sessions Judges, Subordinate Judges and Munsifs, the judicial establishments of the Government Agents in Ganjam, Vizagapatam and Gōdāvari, and process-serving and copyist establishments. The gradual increase in expenditure is due mainly to the additional temporary courts which it has been found necessary to open in various districts.

The grant of war allowances to establishments drawing Rs. 50 and under accounts for the increase in the revised estimate for 1918-1919 over the budget. The increase is, however, partly counterbalanced by the lapse of the lump provision of 40 for the creation of a District and Sessions Court at Anantapur and savings under copyists' establishments and in the contract contingent expenditure of mufassal courts.

The budget estimate for 1919-1920 includes 20 representing 6 months' charges on account of the creation of a District and Sessions Court at Anantapur and provides for the continuance throughout the year of 22 temporary Sub-Courts and

VILLAGE PANCHAYATS.

(Mr. Siva Rao ; Mr. Ramaswami Ayyar ; [3RD APRIL 1919.
Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar.]

next December by which time the panchayats will have done one year's work ; we have given them a substantial amount in the budget and when these reports come, it will be time enough to consider the question of the future development of panchayats.

"So, the attitude of the Government was quite sympathetic. They waited to see how the informal panchayats worked. I dare say they have not been working well from the private inquiries I have been making, they have been failures. I do not know what the Collectors have reported. It is time that this simple reform should be proceeded with. I must say that in most other provinces, major provinces, Assam, Bengal and the United Provinces, steps have been taken to organize these panchayats and there are judicial panchayats which are entrusted with civil and criminal powers. In the matter of irrigation also the same thing has been done. They have only to confer some administrative powers. As the Government of India have suggested, the foremost powers to be entrusted are over education and village sanitation. I sincerely trust that the Government will take up this matter seriously now. The whole thing is mature and the reports must have been received by the Government. The Government must be able to say one way or the other. I say there is absolutely no use of perpetuating these lifeless skeletons. Nobody can think that any useful work will be done by them. It is time that not only the panchayats should be placed on a sound financial footing but care should be taken to vest them with powers and vest them with life."

The Hon'ble Mr. C. P. RAMASWAMI AYYAR :—"Your Excellency, in seconding this resolution, you will permit me to quote from the Government of India's proceedings of 1918. They say 'It is probably in the sphere of local self-government more than in any other that the changes which are now being effected in India will touch the great mass of the population. If the local administration is freed in the manner proposed from undue official guidance, a vast number of persons should feel themselves for the first time placed in effective control of the matters which affect their every day life.' In the Decentralization Commission's report three or four directions have been indicated for the purpose of the activities of these administrative village panchayats, namely, village sanitation, expenditure on minor works, the construction and maintenance of school-houses and local control in respect of school management and also fuel and fodder reserves. Attention has been drawn by the Honourable Mover to the question of judicial panchayats as to which a beginning has been made. In the Government of India's proceedings to which I have already referred, they say that this reform is unconnected with what may be called the existing local board development and ought to be developed from a different point of view, namely that these panchayats ought to be organized for the purpose of strengthening corporate village life wherever it exists. Undoubtedly the Government of India contemplate that certain provinces and localities may be unsuited for the purpose. I make bold to assert that if there is any portion of the country where experiments may be begun, it is this Presidency. I also desire to place before this Council the extreme undesirability and impracticability of relying upon voluntary effort alone. Unless legislative machinery and legislative sanction are given, the feeling of real responsibility and control will not be fostered in the members of the panchayats. For these reasons, I have great pleasure in seconding this resolution."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur P. RAJAGOPALA ACHARIYAR :—"Your Excellency, I propose to accept this resolution. Ordinarily in circumstances like that, I would make no speech, but in view, however, of what has taken place in regard to this subject in the last three years and more, and what has been said in the course of the discussions, I would with Your Excellency's permission offer a few remarks to show the line of action which the Government have been pursuing and how we consider that we are justified in that line of action by what has taken place. The Hon'ble Mr. Siva Rao has quoted the order of the Government, No. 1410, dated 2nd October 1915. In that order, as Honourable Members will see by referring to it, we considered the question of the constitution of village panchayats for the administration of local affairs and we laid down that the constitution of union panchayats under the Local Boards Act should nevertheless be proceeded with. That was necessary because in urging the constitution of village panchayats several members took the view that there was something inconsistent between them and the union panchayats under the Local Boards Act. I believe it was suggested by more than one member that the one should take the place of the other. We felt that the union panchayats under the Local Boards Act had been doing good work and we saw no reason why they should be disturbed, because there was a demand for panchayats of a more elementary type. The union panchayats under the Madras Local Boards Act are intended for villages which are fairly large but are not fit to be made municipalities though they take a certain amount of interest in corporate activities, in education and sanitation and so on. The union panchayats are really the agents of the taluk boards in the villages. We have done several things during the last two or three years to facilitate the development of the panchayats under the Local Boards Act. We have simplified their accounts considerably, and I think we have started the work of the Madras rural boards is before the public, they will see what progress has been made in that direction."

"Having disposed of the union panchayats, the next thing which the Government had to face was the question of panchayats of a more elementary type. In regard to them, we felt that it would be convenient that these panchayats were first tried informally on a voluntary basis for a while, so that we might pick up experience which would be useful to us in framing the law, if it was decided to place them on a statutory basis. The several purposes contemplated were control of village sanitation, the enforcement of vaccination, the execution and improvement of local works, the management of turns of irrigation, the enforcement of kudimaramat and the maintenance of village forests. Several of these things could not be done under the Madras Local Boards Act. We started this experiment and we said that these panchayats were to be administrative bodies working at the outset on a voluntary basis so as to allow full freedom for adaptation to the local circumstances of each village. The reports that we asked for on the work of these panchayats are before the Government with a review by the Board. The Honourable Mover has told us that these were fore-doomed to failure and he knew all through that they would not succeed. He would therefore be interested to learn that, so far as my reading of the work of these panchayats goes, I think the results have been encouraging, although the way in which they have worked justifies our caution in starting them on a voluntary basis before launching on legislation. Honourable Members would see in due course the reports of the Collectors and the review of the Board. The Board have recorded the opinion that so far as the reports disclose facts, apart from hopes and aspirations, it does not appear that these panchayats have achieved anything which would not have been achieved by panchayats regularly constituted under the Local Boards Act. There is considerable force in that criticism. Making ample allowance for that criticism, however, the Government have come to the conclusion that the whole result of the experiment is to show that there is scope for organizations of a simpler type than the local fund unions, organizations for which the elaborate frame-work provided by the Local Boards Act would not be suited. In regard to the critics of the voluntary panchayats I ask them to remember two things. Firstly voluntary organization is always a difficult thing. We have not got that element of coercion by which the few refractory people could be compelled to fall into line, the men who would not agree to work being done by others. There is the question of funds in the second place. Making allowance for all that, the Government are of opinion that the experiment leads us to the conclusion that we will be justified in proceeding to legislate for these panchayats and in framing our legislation we will have the great advantage that we have reports of the actual working of the village organizations all over the province. There is the great advantage that we would not legislate merely on theoretical lines for theoretical villages, but it is entering into legislation with the practical experience of what has been done in the matter of such organizations all over the Presidency. There is all the difference in the world between legislating merely on theoretical grounds and legislating on the results of the experience acquired."

"I am mentioning all these facts so that the Council may know why we have proceeded so cautiously. I knew there was a certain amount of impatience. Honourable Members felt that we should go somewhat faster. We are now putting a selected officer of the Provincial Civil Service on deputation for the purpose of drafting the law. All the papers on the working of the panchayats will be placed before him and when that is done, in the next few months we hope to convene a strong committee of officials and non-officials before whom the draft bill will be placed and they will have an opportunity of putting into final shape, so that we will all have a part in giving final shape to it. Now that I have explained the situation, let me say on behalf of the Government that I accept the resolution."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO :—"Your Excellency, we are thankful that the Hon'ble Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar after the exertions of half a dozen years or so has come to the conclusion that it is necessary to undertake legislation. I have heard the statement of the Government with satisfaction, and I trust that efforts will be made not to lose any further time. But I should like to bring to his notice, now that the Government have decided to put an officer on special duty, that already some experience has been gained with reference to forest panchayats. They are now on a voluntary basis and I trust, when this law comes to be framed, the working of these panchayats would also be placed on a statutory basis. The other day Your Excellency's Government were pleased to publish a Bill as regards the constitution of irrigation panchayats. That is the second matter which has to be considered in framing this Bill—the question as to how far and to what extent should the village efforts be protected. The statutory restrictions on the powers of the panchayats of the functional type which may have to deal purely with irrigation matters should be considered. I am bringing these matters to the notice of Your Excellency's Government to see that this new enactment is as comprehensive as possible and as elastic as possible, so that the panchayats either of the general type or the functional type may be constituted. In this connexion, I should like to mention the new Bill now under the consideration of the Bengal Council, the Village Government Bill. It is a comprehensive measure of 115 sections which enables panchayats constituted for judicial or administrative purposes, to discharge the functions which the present local funds unions are now discharging and which gives them some amount of control over the police in the village. I am merely mentioning these facts with a view to see that the special officer goes into the whole question thoroughly and not necessarily from the point of view of meeting the case of informal panchayats which formed the subject of inquiry, but all aspects of village life such as those contemplated by the resolution of the Government of India. I should therefore think that our efforts all these years have not been in vain and at last we have been able to make the Government agree with us. In bringing these remarks to a close, I must refer to the attitude of the Board of Revenue—"

Revenue.

42. The main source of receipts under the major head LAW AND JUSTICE—JAILS is the sale-proceeds of articles manufactured in jails and supplied to public departments.

43. Jail manufactures.—Large supplies to the Military Department contribute to the increase in the revised estimate for 1918-1919.

Expenditure.

44. Under this head are shown (a) the expenditure connected with the staff employed in the supervision of jails, (b) the charges for the maintenance of convicts, and (c) the cost of the purchase of raw materials for jail manufactures. Items (b) and (c) are fluctuating, being dependent on the strength of the jail population and on demands for jail industries. Variations in the prices of food-grains, and outbreaks of epidemic diseases in jails, also affect the charges for maintenance of prisoners.

45. Jails.—The increase in the revised estimate for 1918-1919 as compared with the budget for that year occurs mainly under "Dietary Charges". Against the current year's budget estimate of 4.95 for this item, the revised estimate for 1918-

1919 and the budget for 1919-1920 are placed at 5.72 and 5.50, respectively. The budget for 1919-1920 contains additional provision for the salaries of officers and war allowances.

46. Jail manufactures.—The estimates have, as usual, been framed with reference to the probable demands for jail manufactures next year. The increase in the revised estimate for 1918-1919 as compared with the budget for that year is due to heavy demands for jail-made goods, chiefly from the Military Department. The budget for 1919-1920 does not anticipate a continuance of such demands.

47. The receipts under this head consist mainly of (a) fees and fines levied under the Cattle Trespass Act, 1871, (b) the recovery of the cost of the police supplied to the public departments, private companies and persons, and (c) fees levied under the Madras Hackney Carriage Act, 1911, and the Indian Motor Vehicles Act, 1914.

Expenditure.

48. The cost of the establishments maintained in connexion with cattle pounds is debited to this head, but the bulk of the expenditure relates to the Police department. The charges relating to the establishment and maintenance of settlements for the reclamation of criminal tribes and for the reception of prisoners are also recorded under the minor head Miscellaneous. The settlements for the reception of prisoners have however been abolished as such since July 1917 and have been constituted as reformatory settlements under the Criminal Tribes Act.

49. Presidency Police.—The budget estimate for 1919-1920 allows for a full year's provision for a second Assistant Commissioner of Police in the Madras City, an increase in the number of city sub-inspectors and sergeants and better recruitment in the town and suburban police force. It also includes the usual lump grant of ₹22 for the renting of quarters for subordinate police officers in the Madras City. All subordinate officers of the City Police are entitled to free quarters, and residences are being constructed for them as funds are available. In the meanwhile the Inspector-General of Police has been empowered to rent houses for such of these officers as have not yet been provided with Government quarters.

50. Superintendence.—The salaries of the Inspector-General and of the Deputy Inspectors-General and of their establishments are accounted for under this minor head.

51. District Executive Force.—The salaries of District Superintendents, Assistant and Deputy Superintendents and of their establishments, and the cost of the District Police force, the Provincial Training School at Vellore and the recruit schools for constables are included under this minor head.

52. The scheme for the revision of the pay of the mufassal constabulary was brought into effect during 1916-1917 and it has contributed to increased expenditure from and after that year. The budget for 1918-1919 provided for the full sanctioned strength of the District Police force less probable savings representing the cost of so much of the force as was not likely to be recruited in 1918-1919. Savings are anticipated under 'Salaries' owing to several Assistant Superintendents having joined the Indian Army Reserve of Officers. There is also a saving under Police Force—General and Rewards. These savings are more than counterbalanced by the increases due to the grant of war allowances to the Police executive staff from the 1st January 1919 and by larger expenditure on the police entertained in consequence of plague. The budget estimate for 1919-1920 provides for the return of officers now on military duty and better recruitment. Larger provision has been made under travelling allowances as police constables have now been granted increased daily allowances and the concession of drawing family travelling allowance for journeys on transfer exceeding 200 miles. Larger provision has also been made under 'Supplies and services', chiefly in connexion with clothing, uniforms, arms and accoutrements and rewards. The lump provision of ₹73 entered in the budget for 1918-1919 for the renting of quarters for the mufassal constabulary has been repeated in the ensuing year's budget.

53. The expenditure in connexion with police talaiyaris appears under the minor head Village Police. Savings anticipated in the provision for talaiyaris in proprietary tracts account for the decrease in the revised estimate under this minor head.

54. The charges of the Criminal Investigation Department including the finger-print establishment, which forms part of this branch, are shown under the fifth minor head. The department is controlled by a Deputy Inspector-General who also supervises the Railway Police.

55. The minor head Railway Police includes the cost of the police staff employed on railways, and one-fourth of the salary of the Deputy Inspector-General for Criminal Investigation and Railways, and of his office establishment. The cost of supervision and of the police executive staff is distributed among the railway companies concerned in proportion to mileage. Seven-tenths of the aggregate cost is recoverable from the companies, the recoveries being shown as deductions from charges.

56. Under the next minor head is shown the expenditure on account of cattle pounds in the mufassal, the charges on account of the pounds in Madras being debited to the minor head Presidency Police.

57. Miscellaneous.—The budget estimate for 1918-1919 included a lump provision of ₹50 for the construction of school buildings in connexion with the industrial home for the children of criminals at Perambūr. A sum of ₹20 only is expected to be spent in the current year and a provision of ₹40 has been included in the budget estimate for 1919-1920. The budget for 1919-1920 also includes provision for non-recurring expenditure in the settlement at Bhumannagadda, Chittoor district, on various objects, such as the construction of a boarding school and an inspection bungalow.

60. Fees—Government Colleges—General and Professional.—The figures under these two minor heads depend upon the strength of the Government Arts Colleges and of the Law College. The budget estimate for 1919-1920 under "Government Colleges—General," takes credit for 23 being the anticipated fee-income from the Victoria College, Palghat, to be taken under Government management.

61. Fees—Schools—General.—The budget for 1918-1919 took credit for 89, being the estimated fee-income from secondary schools to be taken under Government management. The scheme will, however, not be introduced in 1918-1919. The budget for 1919-1920 includes (a) 89, being the fee-income from the schools referred to above, and (b) 14 being the fee-income from the school department of the Palghat College which is also to be taken under Government management.

Expenditure.

62. University.—The budget estimate of 2-05 for 1919-1920 is made up of (a) 65 being the recurring Imperial grant, (b) 20 for expenses in connexion with travelling allowances to Fellows, (c) 20 (against 13 in 1918-1919) as a grant towards the cost of publishing a Tamil lexicon, making a total of 87 out of 1 lakh promised, and (d) 1-00 for a further instalment for expenditure on the construction of the University library buildings, thus completing the promised grant of 3-00.

63. Inspection.—Of the 75 posts of additional Sub-Assistant Inspectors of Schools which have been sanctioned temporarily from time to time in order to cope with the increased work resulting from the advance of primary education, 54 posts have since been added to the permanent cadre. The variations between the figures relating to the budget and revised estimate for 1918-1919 occur mainly under "Salaries" and "Allowances." The budget for 1919-1920 includes a total provision of 60 (which comes out of the recurring Imperial grant of 5-50 for the development of primary education—vide paragraph 73 infra), for (i) appointment of an additional inspectress of schools (13), (ii) addition of four Inspectors' circles (23), and (iii) appointment of twelve additional Sub-Assistant Inspectors (24).

* The expenditure in the revised estimate for 1918-1919 is included under "Government Schools—General—Secondary schools for boys—Supplies and Services" (page 132, Civil Budget Estimate).

64. Government Colleges—General.—The decrease in the 1918-1919 as compared with the budget for that year occurs chiefly under "Supplies and Services—European Stores." The revised estimate for the current year includes expenditure on account of (1) the Ceded Districts College at Anantapur which has been raised to the status of a first-grade College, (2) additional Assistant Lecturers in the Presidency, Kumbakonam, Rajahmundry and Mangalore Colleges, and (3) the College for Muhammadans which has been opened in the Government Madrasa-i-Azam, Madras.

The budget for 1919-1920 contains provision for the Palghat College which it is proposed to take under Government management, and for larger allotments under "Supplies and Services."

65. Government Schools—General.—The details of the figures under this minor head are:—

	Accounts, 1917-1918.	Budget, 1918-1919.	Revised, 1918-1919.	Budget, 1919-1920.

Total ..	31-51	31-83 + 2-20 *	40-22	46-67

* For opening new board high and middle schools (2-09) and night schools (1-11).

66. Government Schools—Proper.—The budget for 1919-1920 contains larger provision for "Allowances," "Supplies and Services" and "Contingencies" and includes allotments of (i) 13 for Muhammadan secondary schools recently opened at Kurnool and Guntur, (ii) 05 for a Muhammadan secondary school to be opened at Trichinopoly, (iii) 14 for the opening of three secondary schools for girls (Masuli-patam, Cuddalore and Mangalore), (iv) 06 for the reorganization of the girls' schools at Vizianagram, Suryaraopet and Guntur, and (v) 09 for improvement of Muhammadan education.

67. Payments in support of local board and municipal schools.—It is under this sub-head and under the minor head "Grants-in-aid" that the bulk of the expenditure in connexion with the expansion and improvement of elementary education occurs. The following statement shows the details of the charges under this sub-head:—

(a) Includes .10 for equipment.

68. Item (ii).—Proposals costing 6.07 per annum have been sanctioned recently. They are made up of—

- (a) 4.48 for opening 1,170 new elementary schools (1,023 under local boards and 147 in municipalities);
- (b) .87 for strengthening the staff of 562 schools; and
- (c) .72 for opening higher standards in 300 existing schools.

6.07

69. Item (vi).—With the object of providing additional facilities for secondary education and of relieving congestion in the existing secondary schools in the Presidency, 18 of the incomplete secondary schools managed by local bodies have been raised to the grade of complete secondary schools and 49 new middle schools have been opened in the course of the current year under the management of local bodies.

70. Items (vii) and (viii).—The budget for 1919-1920 includes the following allotments which have been entered in accordance with the recommendation of the Finance Committee of January 1919:—

- (1) Grants to local bodies for elementary school buildings 3.85
- (2) Grants to local bodies for secondary school buildings 2.50
- (3) Grants to local bodies for the equipment of secondary schools 1.00

Total .. 7.35

71. Government Schools—Special.—The decrease in the revised estimate for 1918-1919 as compared with the budget for that year occurs chiefly under the provision for training schools for masters and mistresses and in the allotment of .62 for opening manual training centres. Of this latter amount, a sum of .06 will be spent on equipment, while .21, representing expenditure on buildings, will appear under the head “45. CIVIL WORKS—Public Works Department.” The balance of .35 has been resumed and provided for in the budget for 1919-1920 under “45. CIVIL WORKS—Public Works Department.”

The revised estimate for 1918-1919 includes expenditure on account of (1) the Civil Engineering School, Vizagapatam (a provision of .31 was entered in the budget in the summary under the major head); and (2) the Institute of Commerce, Madras.

The budget for 1919-1920, besides providing for a full year's charge on account of these two institutions, contains enhanced provision for training schools for masters and mistresses and allotments for the following purposes:—

- (a) .20 for manual training centres (in addition to .35 entered for buildings under 45. Civil Works—Public Works Department).
- (b) .25 for opening two agricultural middle schools (in addition to .25 entered for buildings under 45. Civil Works—Public Works Department); and
- (c) .66 for opening three elementary training schools.

GOVERNMENT OF MADRAS FOR 1919-1920

It also includes .53 from the recurring Imperial grant of 5.50—vide paragraph 73 infra—for opening (1) a higher elementary training school at Amalapur (.23), (2) a training school for Muhammadan women at Trichinopoly (.12), (3) a secondary training class at Ranipet (.04) and (4) an additional elementary training school (.14).

72. Grants-in-aid.—The total figures under this minor head may be broadly classified as follows:—

76. The receipts and charges on account of sanitation were prior to the year 1916-1917 exhibited under the major head 'Medical.' In view of the increased interest now taken in sanitation, it was decided in 1916-1917 to create a separate major head for this purpose in order to bring out more prominently the provision made and the expenditure incurred on this object. The former heads XX. & 24. MEDICAL were accordingly subdivided into XX-A. & 24-A. MEDICAL and XX-B. & 24-B. SANITATION.

77. Medical school and college fees.—The increase from 1917-1918 is due to the increased rate of fees levied from private pupils and students coming from other provinces and Native States, to the opening of an additional medical school at Calicut and to increases in the number of pupils.

78. The minor head Lunatic Asylum receipts comprises payments by private persons for the maintenance of lunatics, and the sale-proceeds of work executed by patients in lunatic asylums.

15

79. Contributions.—The figures for 1918-1919 and 1919-1920 under this minor head include (i) the contributions from local bodies in consequence of the transfer of headquarter hospitals to Government, and (ii) the contribution of 29 from the Madras Corporation, towards the maintenance of Government hospitals and dispensaries in the city (20) and of the Georgetown dispensary (09).¹

15

Expenditure.

80. Medical establishment.—Since 1914–1915, there has been a decrease under this head, owing mainly to savings in the salaries of Indian Medical Service officers transferred to military duty in connexion with the war. The figures from 1916–1917 include additional expenditure on account of the revision of the pay of civil assistant surgeons, under which they were placed on a time-scale of pay rising from Rs. 100 to Rs. 300 with two senior grades on Rs. 325 and Rs. 350.

The increase in the budget estimate for 1919–1920 allows for the return of officers from military duty on demobilization being ordered.

81. Hospitals and dispensaries.—With effect from the year 1915–1916, grants to local and private bodies in aid of medical buildings have been shown under this minor head instead of under CIVIL WORKS.

The figures from 1916–1917 include expenditure on account of the maintenance of the new Rayapuram Hospital.

The increase in the actuals for 1917–1918 as compared with the previous year represents mainly large non-recurring grants given to local bodies for medical buildings. The revised estimate for the current year, besides including provision for similar grants to local and private bodies, takes account of the charges in connexion with the transfer of the management of headquarter hospitals to Government for which a lump provision of 2·50 was entered in the budget estimate for 1918–1919.

81a. The budget for 1919–1920 includes a provision of ·10 for the appointment of travelling sub-assistant surgeons in mufassal hospitals which has been entered in pursuance of the acceptance of a resolution moved during the discussion of the Amended Draft Financial Statement.

82. The large increase in the budget estimate for 1919–1920 is due to the following causes:—

(a) Increased provision for salaries and supplies and services under Presidency Hospitals and dispensaries.

(b) Provision for the taking over of the Royapetta Hospital by Government.

(c) Increase under mufassal hospitals and dispensaries on account of additional provision for headquarter hospitals taken over by Government from local bodies.

(d) Reorganization of certain hospital establishments.

(e) Larger provision on account of half grants for new hospitals opened by local bodies.

(f) Lump provision of ·50 on account of grants to private hospitals.

Item (b).—The taking over of the Royapetta Hospital by Government is under consideration and a provision of 3·25 has been entered for this purpose.

Item (c).—The hospital at Bellary was taken under Government management from the 1st December 1917 and the headquarter hospitals at Coimbatore, Anantapur, Berhampur, Chingleput, Chittoor, Cocanada, Cuddapah, Guntūr, Madura, Masulipatam, Ramnad, Tanjore and Vellore were taken under Government management with effect from the 1st April 1918. The hospitals at Cuddalore and Vizagapatam were taken over by Government with effect from 1st July 1918 and the hospitals at Kurnool and Mangalore will be transferred to Government from the 1st April 1919.

Item (d).—Provision has been made for the reorganization of the establishment of mufassal headquarter hospitals (·20), Presidency medical institutions (·06) and the X-ray department in the Government General Hospital, Madras (·06).

Item (e).—A provision of ·55 (·18 for municipalities and ·37 for district boards) has been made, as against ·45 in the current year, to meet half the initial and recurring charges of new hospitals and dispensaries opened by local bodies under the undertaking given by Government in March 1915. This amount is intended to meet recurring grants in respect of institutions opened up to the end of 1918–1919 and the initial charges for institutions to be opened in 1919–1920. The recurring grants for the latter are payable only with effect from 1920–1921.

83. On the recommendation of the Finance Committee a total provision of 3·00 has been entered in the budget estimate for 1919–1920 for grants to local bodies for medical buildings.

84. Grants for medical purposes.—With reference to the revised classification referred to in paragraph 76 ante, charges incurred on preventive measures in connexion with bubonic plague and the contribution of Government to the Pasteur Institute at Coonoor are now shown under the major head 24-B. SANITATION.

The grant hitherto paid to the Provincial Committee of the Countess of Dufferin's Fund to enable them to give stipends to women desirous of studying medicine has, with effect from the 1st September 1916, been disbursed direct from Provincial funds without the intervention of the committee. The expenditure is accordingly now debited to the more appropriate minor heads, Medical Schools and College, and 22-H. EDUCATION—Scholarships.

The increase in the revised estimate for the current year over the budget estimate is due to the inclusion of provision for the training of sub-assistant surgeons in Ankylostomiasis (·03) and for investigation of indigenous drugs (·10). The budget estimate for 1919–1920 contains a provision of ·13 for the latter purpose.

85. Medical College and Schools.—The increase in the budget estimate for 1919–1920 over the revised estimate for the current year occurs mainly under "Salaries" and is due to the increase in the number of instructors employed in the various medical schools and to the grant to them of teaching and hospital allowances at enhanced rates. This is counterbalanced to a small extent by a decrease under "Allowances."

86. Lunatic Asylums.—The increase in the budget estimate for 1919–1920 as compared with the revised estimate for 1918–1919 occurs mainly under 'Supplies and Services' and allows for a larger number of inmates and also for the rise in prices of provisions, bedding and clothing.

88. The revised estimate for 1918–1919 includes a special credit of ·30 being unspent balances of Provincial contributions to the Kurnool municipality for water-works, which were refunded.

Expenditure.

89. Sanitation and Vaccination establishment.—The expenditure shown under this minor head relates mainly to the staff of deputy inspectors of vaccination and the Sanitary and Deputy Sanitary Commissioners and their establishments.

The increase in the budget estimate for 1919–1920 as compared with the revised estimate for the current year is due mainly to the inclusion of a full year's provision for three Deputy Sanitary Commissioners instead of two only as in the current year and the grant to deputy inspectors of vaccination of fixed travelling allowance at increased rates.

181

90. Grants for sanitary purposes.—From and after 1915–1916 grants to local bodies for minor sanitary works and for water-supply and drainage schemes appear under this minor head instead of under 'Civil Works.'

The main item of expenditure under this minor head is 'Contributions for sanitary purposes.' The details are—

Item (1).—In accordance with the recommendation of the Finance Committee, a special grant of 6.00 has been entered for grants to local bodies for minor sanitary works in 1919–1920. This includes 1.00 for the Madras Corporation.

The budget estimate for 1919–1920 includes a provision of 1.00 for grants for the improvement of the sanitary conditions of the pilgrim centres, entered in pursuance of the acceptance of a resolution moved during the discussion of the Amended Draft Financial Statement.

Item (2).—The smaller provision in recent years is due to the heavy rise in the price of iron pipes and other materials obtained from Great Britain and to the extreme difficulty of getting supplies shipped to this country under war conditions.

The statement below shows approximately the distribution of the allotments of 2.68 in the revised estimate for 1918–1919 and of 5.09 in the budget estimate for 1919–1920:—

GOVERNMENT OF MADRAS FOR 1919–1920

Item (3).—Towards the cost of water-supply and drainage works in the Madras Corporation estimated at 124.00, grants to the extent of 75.00 have been made by Government in the past. The amount required to complete the restricted programme of works in 1919–1920 and 1920–1921 is 19.00. The Corporation have undertaken to meet 7.00 out of this amount and it is proposed to make a Provincial grant of 12.00. The sum of 5.00 entered in the budget estimate for 1919–1920 represents the first instalment of the grant of 12.00 referred to above.

90-A. Item (6).—The provision in the budget estimate for 1919–1920 has been entered in pursuance of the acceptance of a resolution moved during the discussion of the Amended Draft Financial Statement.

91. Expenses in connexion with bubonic plague, etc.—The increase in the budget estimate for 1919–1920 over the revised estimate for the current year is due to a full year's provision having been made for six cholera reserve parties as against five in the current year. There is an increase anticipated under 'Plague charges' also.

92. Bacteriological Laboratories and Pasteur Vaccine Institutes.—The expenditure on the vaccine and the serum and bacteriological sections of the King Institute of Preventive Medicine, and the contribution of Government to the Pasteur Institute at Coonoor, are shown under this minor head.

94. Agricultural receipts are made up mainly of sale-proceeds of farm produce at the Central Farm at Coimbatore and at district farms and of cotton seed distributed by the Agricultural Department.

The increase in the revised estimate for 1918-1919 over the budget for the year occurs mainly under 'fees' and 'farm and other receipts' in connexion with the 'Central Teaching and Research Institute.' The budget estimate for 1919-1920 takes credit for sale-proceeds of manure in the Tanjore district (.75) and of fish manure from the depot opened on the West Coast (.65).

95. The Veterinary receipts consist mainly of the fees levied for the treatment of horses and cattle at veterinary hospitals under Government management.

Expenditure.

96. The department is one which is being largely expanded and at the same time reorganized under a scheme sanctioned by the Secretary of State in 1915. At present the senior staff consists of the following principal officers:—(a) a Director of Agriculture, (b) a Superintendent of the Central Farm and Principal of the Agricultural College, (c) an Assistant Principal, (d) an Agricultural Chemist, (e) an Economic Botanist, (f) a Lecturing and Systematic Botanist, (g) a Sugarcane Expert, (h) six Deputy Directors of Agriculture (excluding the officer appointed to take charge of the cattle-breeding and dairy operations in the Presidency) and four Assistant Directors, (i) a Deputy Director of Agriculture, Planting districts, (j) a Mycologist, (k) an Entomologist, (l) an Agricultural Engineer and two Assistant Agricultural Engineers.

The appointment of the Deputy Director, Planting districts, was originally sanctioned for five years, and then extended for a second term of five years, which will expire in April 1919. A scheme for the development of the planting industries involving the establishment of four—to be raised ultimately to six—experimental stations, the appointment of a Mycologist and the continued employment of the Deputy Director, Planting districts, has been submitted to the Secretary of State. Pending his sanction, the Government of India have authorized the Local Government to proceed with the opening of the planting stations. Fixed annual contributions towards the cost of the scheme have been promised by the Mysore, Travancore and Cochin Darbars, the Administration of Coorg and the United Planters' Association of Southern India. The appointment of Sugarcane Expert was originally sanctioned for a period of five years, and has been continued for a further period of five years, from October 1917. In order to meet the cost of the sugarcane-breeding station, the Secretary of State has sanctioned the payment from Imperial funds of a recurring assignment of .44 lakh per annum with effect from the 26th October 1917, instead of a non-recurring grant for the total expenditure as formerly.

97. The budget estimate for 1918-1919 contained lump provision for the following schemes:—

(a) Cattle-breeding farm	..	..	..	..	..	.70
(b) Opening of a new farm in North Arcot	..	..	..	..	..	.08
(c) Cambodia farm at Coimbatore	..	..	..	..	..	.15
(d) Schools for boys employed on the farms	..	..	..	..	..	.04

The expenditure on item (c) is being increased to .39, while allotments have been made in the course of the year for a fish manure depot on the West Coast (.57) and for an experimental scheme of distribution of concentrated manure mixture in the Tanjore district (.10). On the other hand, there are nominal savings amounting to about .50 under the Pumping and Boring Department, owing to a change in the classification of the charges relating to the Industrial Branch which are being shown under the head 26-B. SCIENTIFIC AND MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENTS—Development of Industries, with effect from the 1st April 1918.

98. The budget estimate for next year provides for the appointment of an additional Deputy Director, and fifteen assistant managers, representing a further instalment of the scheme of reorganization sanctioned by the Secretary of State in 1915; it also contains increased provision for the scheme of distribution of manure in the Tanjore district, improvement of cotton cultivation and for expenditure on tools and plant in the Pumping and Boring Department. The following lump provision has been entered in the budget:—

	LAHRS.
(1) Cotton seed farm at Nandyal	.82
(2) Fish manure depot on the West Coast	.70
(3) Development of silk industry	.10
(4) Kangayam cattle farm	.10
(5) Improvement of milk supply—Madras breeding scheme (.14), experiments at the Military dairy farms in Bangalore (.10) and milk transport experiments (.01).	.25
(6) Development of the planting industries of Southern India	.27
	2.24

99. Veterinary charges.—The decrease in the revised estimate for 1918-1919 as compared with the budget occurs mainly under salaries of subordinate establishment and in the charges on account of veterinary hospitals. The budget estimate for 1919-1920 provides for two additional Deputy Superintendents entertained in 1918 and for an additional Superintendent and a second officer for the Veterinary College. It also includes enhanced provision under 'Supplies and Services' and 'Contingencies.' A lump provision of .12 has been entered for contributions by Government towards seven new veterinary institutions.

100. Co-operative Credit.—The gradual increase of expenditure under this head is due to the growth of the operations of the department which has necessitated the addition of three Assistant Registrars and 14 inspectors to the staff.

101. Under Cinchona plantations appear the sale-proceeds of febrifuge, quinine bark, seeds, plants and jalap whether obtained from the Government plantations on the Nilgiris or (in the case of quinine) manufactured from purchased cinchona bark. The increase in the actuals for 1916-1917 and 1917-1918 was due partly to the large demand for quinine from the Medical Stores but mainly to the greatly enhanced rates adopted in the valuation of stock issued consequent upon the rise in the market price of quinine. The fall in the current year, as compared with the actuals for 1917-1918, is due to a decrease in the supply of quinine, while the further decrease in 1919-1920 is attributed to a large anticipated fall in the factory output owing to the comparatively poorer quality of the barks left to be worked in the factory. The effect of the recent fire at the Naduvattam factory on the estimates of receipts and expenditure cannot at present be forecasted.

102. Receipts from industrial operations.—This is a new minor head which has been opened with effect from 1st April 1918 to show the receipts of the Fisheries department, which were till then recorded under 'Fishery receipts,' and of other industrial concerns which were hitherto exhibited under the minor head 'Miscellaneous.' The increase since 1917-1918 is due mainly to receipts from the manufacture of soap. The revised estimate for 1918-1919 includes 40 on account of the sale-proceeds of the Government pencil factory. The budget estimate for 1919-1920 anticipates a further increase in the sale of soap and additional revenue under chank fisheries.

103. Miscellaneous.—The actuals for 1917-1918 included a special contribution of 16 paid by the Indian Research Fund towards expenditure to be incurred in this Presidency for a period of five years on the experimental registration of vital statistics in selected typical areas. The corresponding charges have been provided for under the head "26-B. SCIENTIFIC AND MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENTS—Provincial Statistics."

Expenditure.

104. The charges of the Government cinchona plantations on the Nilgiris are recorded under the minor head Cinchona plantations. The bulk of the charges under this head relate to the purchase of cinchona bark. The budget for next year provides a sum of 2.00 for the purchase of bark; it also includes enhanced provision for the purchase of European stores, and lump grants aggregating 19 for the extension of the plantations, rejuvenating old estates and afforestation of grass lands.

GOVERNMENT OF MADRAS FOR 1919-1920

105. Examinations.—The rise in the expenditure is mainly under 'Special Tests' and 'Secondary School-Leaving certificates' due to the larger number of candidates appearing and the consequent increase in the expenses connected with the examinations.

106. Development of industries.—Under this minor head are recorded the charges relating to the Department of Fisheries, to pearl and chank fisheries, experiments in soap-making and industrial operations. The revised estimate for the current year provides for larger expenditure on soap-making and miscellaneous experiments and takes account of the revised classification introduced from 1918-1919 under which the "district industrial staff" is shown under this head instead of under 26-A. AGRICULTURE as previously. These items of increase are however counterbalanced by a lapse in the provision made for the Cocanada school and for the equipment of the mechanical engineering section of the Madura Technical Institute.

The budget for next year contains enhanced provision for soap-making experiments (5.00), piscicultural works (37), development of the Fisheries Department (20), the weaving, dyeing and leather trade branches of the Madura Technical Institute and grants-in-aid for industrial schools. With reference to the recommendation of the Finance Committee of January 1919, the provision for scholarships has been raised by 09 to provide for two industrial scholarships to Europe or America.

107. Miscellaneous.—Under this minor head are recorded the charges relating to the Director of Civil Supplies. The expenditure on this account is covered by an assignment from Imperial revenues.

108. The receipts under this head consist chiefly of contributions for pensions and gratuities on account of officers of Government lent to foreign service for employment under the Court of Wards, municipalities and other local bodies, Native States and landholders.

109. The increase in the revised estimate for 1918-1919, as compared with the budget for that year, is due chiefly to the recovery in the current year from local bodies of contributions for leave allowances and pensions of civil assistant surgeons in their employ with effect from the 1st March 1916.

Expenditure.

110. This head comprises charges for pensions, gratuities and compassionate allowances, and for the commuted value of pensions to Government servants.

RESOLUTION RE INTERPRETERS AND TRANSLATORS AT MEETINGS OF COUNCIL.

(Mr. Ramaswami Ayyar ; Mr. Narasimha Ayyar.)

[3RD APRIL 1919.]

the first purpose being the persuasion of those inside the Council, the second purpose undoubtedly being the conversion and education of those outside the Council, the public at large. In the second function there is no doubt that a great part will have to be played by the vernaculars in the way of dissemination of information imparted in this Council and in the popularisation of the ideas given expression to here. But if the object of the Honourable Members is to convert and persuade fellow members to take their point of view and adopt a basis of political unity, we must have common understanding and a perfect comprehension of each other's point of view. It seems to me that the English language will continue to be the common medium of communication. I for one hold that in this country the amount of political solidarity and unity already achieved is due to the fact that the English language has served as a lingua franca and unless Hindi takes its place, English will exercise that function most usefully. In the reformed Councils under the new dispensation which has been promised, the utmost good work will be produced by holding to the procedure hitherto adopted, of conducting our proceedings in the English language, at the same time not forgetting that there is a wider task before every Honourable Member, that of making his less educated countrymen outside, understand what is at the back of his mind. The discussions in this Council, therefore, would be most advantageously conducted in English until at least the members of the Indian Civil Service are compulsorily educated in the vernaculars and until all the non-official colleagues who are acquainted only with one language are compulsorily educated in the other tongues in vogue in this Presidency —until that time comes, it seems to me that political effort will bear the utmost good fruit by speaking in English. Of course, the task that lies before vernacular journalists and before the Members of the Legislative Council to make their countrymen understand what they are doing, to make every one who is going to take a part in the new régime capable of discharging his duty, is urgent and impressive, but it seems to me that it is a different question from the one now before the Council."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR :—"I see that this discussion has had one clear result. It has placed before the Government the problem of deciding one way or the other about the admission of or permission to be given to the vernacular speeches here. I am glad to note that we have advanced in this Council from the last meeting to a certain extent. At the last meeting there was decided opposition to the employment of the vernacular. At this meeting the spokesman of the Government expressly denied that he wanted to shut out the vernaculars. He said that in reply to the Hon'ble Mr. Siva Rao. Though I consider that to be some advance, it is not completely satisfactory. I shall proceed to deal with another aspect of the attitude of the Government. The Government evidently find that if they refuse to allow the vernaculars they will be going against the law and certainly against popular ideas. The trend of popular opinion is distinctly in favour of the encouragement of the vernaculars. If the Government set their faces against that, they run the risk of being out of date. Therefore, I find that they say 'for the present the issue is not before us.' That is a very clever lawyer's defence. They adhere strictly to the wording. You want only translators and interpreters, and not the languages. I consider this a sublime feat of advocacy. But in this Council we are upon a fairer field and we must ask what the interpreters and translators are for. The resolution says interpreters, translators and shorthand reporters in the chief vernaculars of the Province should be requisitioned at meetings of the Council. What are the translators and interpreters for? They are not wanted as ornaments like so many wooden partitions. What purpose are they intended to serve? Obviously to the meanest intellect, the introduction of translators and interpreters must mean that they are employed for being used in this Council for the purpose of translating the speeches made in the vernaculars. To burk the issue by stating that the issue is not a straight one is hardly fair. My position is much fairer than the position of the defence. The attack is straight but the defence is not straight. The position is not met. The Government say 'we are not at present in a position to say anything definite.' I feel the difficulties of the Government, and feel the embarrassment of the Government. If the Government choose to take time I would not have the hardihood to say that it was not fair. This is a matter of the rights of the public and it ought not to be dealt with in this manner. If the Government wish to take time to think over that question, we cannot take serious exception to that. But the Honourable Member on behalf of Government went further and made remarks which were understood rightly by the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar, when he said that the attitude of the Hon'ble Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar was adverse to the adoption of the vernaculars. The Honourable Member got up and said 'no.' I quite see that the Hon'ble Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar has not said that he was against it, but from the way in which he dealt with it, when he spoke of facing the situation and running the risk, we can read what exactly the purport of a person's mind is. What is the drift of your argument? The drift is that you consider it is too risky and the Council should not commit itself to the adoption of the vernaculars. So the Hon'ble Mr. Ranga Achariyar was quite right in saying that the attitude of the Hon'ble Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar was adverse to the adoption of the vernaculars and he was right in pointing out that that attitude could not be justified. Ultimately the Government have chosen to adopt an attitude of antagonism. I do not think the position needs arguing. I have only one or two words to say with reference to what fell from the Hon'ble Mr. Ramachandra Rao. The Hon'ble Mr. Ramachandra Rao has entirely misunderstood the situation. He says 'we will presently have an alteration of the rules.' They are as clear as daylight and there is nothing to prohibit the employment of the vernaculars. I do not think the decision of Lord Pentland as President added to the rules."

RESOLUTIONS RE INTERPRETERS AND TRANSLATORS AT MEETINGS OF COUNCIL AND PROCEEDINGS OF THE LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL TO BE PUBLISHED WITHIN A FORTNIGHT.

3RD APRIL 1919.]

(Mr. M. Ramachandra Rao ; Mr. Narasimha Ayyar.)

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO PANTULU (interrupting) :—"May I rise to a point of order? I was under the impression that if any Member of this Council wishes to talk in the vernacular, it would be necessary to give previous notice, so that interpreters and translators might be ready and it might be necessary to amend the rules in that way. I am not talking of the language of the Council which is not at all now decided by the rules. It may be necessary to amend other rules and lay down specific conditions under which vernacular speeches may be made. It may be that some discretion may be given either to the President or the Council. For the case of any person who is not very well acquainted with English and is much more at home in the vernaculars, provision will have to be made. I do not at all wish to contest the position that as the rules now stand, they prohibit any member from talking in any language he likes."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR :—"I take it therefore that the alteration of the rules does not affect the issue. Once we have the rules, further rules might be made. As to the employment of interpreters, no rule is necessary. It is like ordering more chairs or more fans. If this resolution is passed, there will be facilities enough. The matter is fairly clear. I do not think it is necessary to argue the matter further. The resolution does raise an issue which some of my friends thought it would not raise. By clear implication the resolution clearly connotes and pre-supposes that the vernaculars can be employed or may be permitted to be employed in certain circumstances. The Hon'ble Mr. Rajagopala Achariyar did not say that any person unable to talk in English is interdicted from talking in the vernacular. In these circumstances, I ask Your Excellency to put the resolution to the vote."

The resolution was put to the Council and lost.

RESOLUTION RE PROCEEDINGS OF THE LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL TO BE PUBLISHED WITHIN A FORTNIGHT.

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR :—"The resolution that I have the honour to move runs in these terms :—

'IV. This Council recommends to His Excellency in Council that the proceedings of this Council should be published at as early a date as possible —and preferably within a fortnight of the date of the proceedings.'

"Honourable Members will see the answer to my question printed in the appendix on page 15 of the agenda paper. There we have a statement showing the dates of the meetings and the dates of the publication of the proceedings in the gazette. That would show that whereas in the early days, in 1910 and 1911, we had the proceedings of the meetings in our hands in a few days, sometimes in a week, now for the last year or two, from 1916 onwards, the average period for the proceedings to come into the gazette is 1½ or 2 months, and sometimes even more than two months. My attention was drawn to it pointedly when the last proceeding came into my hands on the 28th January 1919. Then it had been two months and seven days, and several of my constituents drew attention to the fact that there was very little use in having our proceedings two or three months old and asked 'who is going to follow these matters'—matters dealing with the rice situation. Matters became so stale. Therefore they want that pointed attention should be drawn to it. Whatever is possible should be done by the Government in this matter. Nobody would deny the advantage of having the proceedings as early as possible and now that the vernaculars are not to be employed in our proceedings, and the public is obliged to draw whatever information it can from what is published in the gazette, it is of the utmost importance that the public should have an early report of the proceedings. Whereas formerly we got things done in seven, eight, ten or fifteen days, now we take much longer. Probably one argument that may be put forward is that the work is increasing, that greater variety of subjects come up and greater energy and time are bestowed by those in this Council, and Honourable Members will have to thank themselves for the increase of the work. Even if we take the increase of work into calculation, it is hardly justifiable to ask the public to wait for one month or two months when the public would not remember what had gone on previously. In this connexion, it does not require much from me to point out the evil effect. It is considered so serious an evil that several of my constituents requested me to put this forward before the Government. I believe it is hardly likely to be controversial. I hope the Government will be pleased to expedite matters. The reports of our speeches sometimes take two or three weeks before they come up for correction. So much time need not be taken up. I would entreat the Government to try and see everything is hurried up."

"Then again, with reference to the printing, if the Government complain of excessive work and the great difficulty of getting through the printing work, I may suggest for the consideration of the Government the employment of private printers to get through the work. If we cannot get through the work with our press, we can pay other firms and enter into a contract with them. We are then sure to find the report in our hands within a week. I think that a fortnight which is roughly the time taken in the earlier years may be taken up. If there is difficulty in getting our printing work done through the Government Press, we might employ private agency. There may be other arrangements to be considered and I request that the matter may be considered."

The Hon'ble Mr. A. Suryanarayana Rao seconded the resolution.

1012 RESOLUTION RE PROCEEDINGS OF THE LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL TO BE PUBLISHED WITHIN A FORTNIGHT.

(Mr. Todhunter; Mr. M. Ramachandra Rao.)

[3RD APRIL 1919.]

The Hon'ble Mr. C. G. TODHUNTER:—"Your Excellency, the general principle of this resolution is one which it is easy to accept. The Honourable Member desires that the proceedings of this Council should be published at as early a date as possible—and preferably within a fortnight of the date of the proceedings." Rule 67 of the business rules runs thus:—

"The Secretary shall publish in the Fort St. George Gazette in English as soon as may be after the conclusion of each meeting, an account, which should be as full as possible, of the proceedings of the Council."

"As to the intention, there is no difference whatever between us. The only question is as regards the interpretation of the words 'as soon as may be'. The Honourable Member does not say that he wants to tie us down to 15 days, but that is what he wishes to aim at. Our present average is something like 45 days."

"Before examining the measures which could be taken to speed up the publication of the proceedings, it is desirable to consider what benefit exactly is going to result from such speeding up. The Honourable Member has referred to the complaints made by his constituents as to the delay in receiving the full report in the Fort St. George Gazette. I am very glad to hear that his constituents take so much interest in the debates in this Council as to read the full text of them in the Gazette. My own impression was that very few people read the full report and that most people were content with the briefer reports that appear in the newspapers. I have no doubt that it would be a great advantage to the public and even more so to the Government, if we could get a really accurate report out in time to be read at the same time as the newspapers. There is no doubt that the reports in the latter are not always as accurate as they might be, though I should not have dared to criticise them in the terms in which the Honourable Member criticised them in speaking on the last resolution. It is difficult, however, to see how it would be possible to achieve the issue of a complete report in time to be read with the newspapers which must have their copy ready the day after the meeting. Even the House of Commons does not achieve this though arrangements have been made in the last ten years to issue a complete report on the day after the meeting, but this is always allowed to be challenged until the members have had an opportunity of seeing it. Even this does not apply to the House of Lords, perhaps because they are more nervous about the accurate reporting of their speeches."

"Granted then that the official report must come some time after the newspaper report, the question arises as to what difference there is between its publication after 15 days or after 45 days. I think we may take it for granted that hardly any members of the public read right through the full reports of the speeches in the Gazette. The delay of a few days is not therefore likely to affect the public. And so far as I can see, it is the Honourable Members of this Council and the Government officers who would be the principal persons benefited by having available for reference the reports of one debate before the commencement of another. How far this advantage is outweighed or otherwise by the expense and charges that would be involved in carrying out this proposal is for the Members of this Council to consider."

"I said just now that the time taken to publish the proceedings of this Council is 45 days. This period is calculated somewhat as follows:—the proceedings of six meetings of this Council in 1918 covered over 1,000 pages, the speeches alone covering 930 pages. This means that there was an average of 155 foolscap pages of print to be reported at each meeting, the official reporter sending, on the average, manuscript matter equivalent to ten printed foolscap pages per day. That is as much as we can expect of one man. The last of these reached the office 15 days after the close of the meeting. The next stage was the comparison of this transcript with the Secretary's report of the proceedings and the checking of it in various other respects such as the spelling of proper names. This took the office on the average three days. Meanwhile it was being sent to the Press and the Press took on the average five days after receipt of the last batch to deliver proof. The proofs as soon as they were received were sent to the members for check and took one day for dispatch. Seven days were allowed for check and return. A consolidated proof of the whole business of the meeting, amounting to over 150 pages, was then prepared. The examination and checking of this by the officers concerned took seven days and the interval between the return of the proof to the Press and the issue of the Gazette was four days, making a total of 45 days."

"The question now arises how far we can reduce these periods. The Honourable Member suggests that we can reduce the time taken by the Press. Probably we can do this to some extent, but not to a very great extent. We may also be able to reduce the time taken in the office, though I do not see how we can do this without extra expense, because the work while the Council is sitting is very heavy. I do not think we can reduce the time taken for sending the proofs to the Honourable Members and the return of the same, since many of the members leave Madras at the close of the meeting and the best part of the week allowed is sometimes taken up in the journey to places like Vizagapatam and South Kanara and back."

The Hon'ble Diwan Bahadur M. RAMACHANDRA RAO:—"We may not be at home when the proof comes."

The Hon'ble Mr. C. G. TODHUNTER:—"There remains the question of the Official Reporter. In that respect, this Council is peculiar. All the other Councils have teams of reporters. In this Council for a period of something like a quarter of a century, Rao Bahadur N. C. Rajagopala Achariyar has reported the whole of our proceedings—and I think Honourable Members will agree—with an accuracy, for a single reporter, and a despatch, which is exemplary. If we want to speed up the transcript, we shall have to give him assistance by arranging to relieve him from time to time as is done elsewhere; and we shall have to reconcile ourselves for a time at least to a certain loss of accuracy. That also, no doubt, would involve some increase in the staff and in the cost. The Government of India have as many as six men taking turns of ten minutes each and taking up the rest of the hour in transcribing what they record in the ten minutes."

"I have put forward these figures not for the sake of opposing the proposal, but for the sake of showing that it is not so simple as at first sight appears. The Government are perfectly willing to go into the matter of speeding up the reporting in consultation with the Official Reporter, though they cannot undertake to reduce the time taken in issuing the reports to the Honourable Member's limit of 15 days, because the only Council which achieves this is the Legislative Council of the Government of India which employs a staff of six highly-paid reporters. I hope that this assurance will satisfy the Honourable Member."

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR:—"I am thankful for the assurance given by the Hon'ble Mr. Todhunter. I was going to say that in the Government of India they are issuing the report before the next meeting, within five or six days. He explains it evidently by their team of six. I think it is a very good experiment. The expenditure is worth the money because it will save fifteen days' delay. The members who speak in the morning will have the advantage of having their proofs at night or the next morning. That seems to avoid all our difficulties. The time taken for sending the transcript, 15 days, is a very serious evil. As I have already said, we quite clean forget what we said. We cannot blame the reporter for not taking everything quite accurately, especially in regard to those who do not pause sufficiently. The direction in which I would like the Government to proceed is to have a team, in spite of the expenditure involved. As it is being attended to, I do not wish to press the resolution."

The Hon'ble Mr. C. G. TODHUNTER:—"The Honourable Member says that the Government of India get their proceedings out in five or six days. I have a table here and I find on two occasions it took eight days, on one occasion nine, on two occasions 11 and on one 14."

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:—"I am sure that the Council may be quite confident that the Government will try and do something to expedite the publication of the proceedings. The time is at present excessive and I hope an arrangement will be possible to reduce it. As the Honourable Member does not press the resolution, it will be by leave withdrawn."

With the permission of His Excellency the President, the resolution was withdrawn.

RESOLUTION RE TRANSLATION OF THE PROCEEDINGS OF THE LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL.

The Hon'ble Mr. B. V. NARASIMHA AYYAR:—"I beg to move:—

'V. This Council recommends to His Excellency in Council that the proceedings of this Council should be translated into the chief vernaculars of this province and that the translations may be published at as early a date as the original proceedings.'

"I think the object of this resolution would be quite patent. As we do not have the public present here following our proceedings and as the newspaper accounts are not quite accurate, it is absolutely essential that facilities should be given to such of the public as care to follow the proceedings of this Council by reading what we are doing here in the vernacular. When we conduct the proceedings in English, very estimable persons having a desire to follow at leisure what is done in this Council are handicapped. I no doubt endorse to a certain extent the truth of what the Hon'ble Mr. Todhunter stated, namely that very few persons go through the Gazette. Most of the persons get the information from the newspapers; and the newspapers sometimes are very very defective. He said that he dared not use the language with regard to newspapers that I had used. I am not likely to be mistaken. I know that they send their best reporters, but it is not possible to hear us all, because of the acoustic difficulties of the hall. The speakers have to speak against time. The space in newspapers is limited. To report the entire discussion which runs for two or three hours within their limited space is impossible and would mean a special edition. They try to please their constituents by summarising. Therefore it is necessary that an authoritative report should be available to those who are anxious to know what their representatives in the Council have said and what the Government's position may be. It is an important matter. I therefore think the object of the translation into the chief vernaculars is patent. It will be patent also to Honourable Members that, in respect of legislation, Bills and Acts are translated into the vernaculars. That has been hitherto done, because every one is supposed to know the law; and we must make the law, even the earlier stages of the law available in the chief vernaculars, so that criticisms from the public may come up in regard to our legislative proposals. Recognizing the theory of legislation, that the people must be given an opportunity to criticize the Bills and to know the law after they are passed, we adopt the procedure with regard to publishing the Bills and Acts in the vernacular. Now it is one step further that I wish to carry the Council. The reason for that is patent. Till now we have been under the impression that it is only Bills and the perfected Acts that should go
