THE

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY DEBATES

(OFFICIAL REPORT OF THE SECOND SESSION)

VOLUME II.

SECOND SESSION, 1921.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

Thursday, 1st September, 1921.

The Assembly met in the Assembly Chamber at Twelve of the Clock, being the first day of the second Session of this Assembly, pursuant to S. 63D (2) of the Government of India Act, and the President (the Honourable Mr. ALEXANDER FREDERICK WHYTE) took the Chair.

MEMBERS SWORN:

The Honourable Sir William Vincent, K.C.S.I.; Mr. Geoffrey Rothe Clarke, C.S.I., O.B.E., M.L.A.; Mr. Harold Clayton, C.I.E., M.L.A.; Mr. Rustomji Faridoonji, M.L.A.; Sir Vithaldas Damodher Thackersey, Kt., M.L.A.; Mr. David Ranken Lyle, M.L.A.; Babu Ambica Prasad Sinha, M.L.A.; Mr. Campbell Ward Rhodes, C.B.E., M.L.A.; Mr. Atul Chandra Chatterjee, C.I.E., M.L.A.; Mr. Francis Bradley Bradley-Birt, M.L.A.; Mr. George Gall Sim, C.I.E., M.L.A.

PRESIDENT'S SPEECH.

THE NEW CHAMBER:

The Honourable the President: Before we proceed to the formal business set down for this sitting, the circumstances of our meeting in new surroundings call for some notice from the Chair.

This is the first occasion on which the Legislative Assembly meets in the new Council Chamber in Simla and I think the thanks of the Assembly are due to those whose devoted labours have enabled us to meet in what, considering the circumstances, are remarkably commodious surroundings. I wish, on behalf of the Legislative Assembly, to convey to the architect, to the engineer and to the contractor the appreciation of this House for the manner in which they have overcome the unquestionably vast difficulties of this undertaking. Whether we consider the vagaries of the Himalayan geology or the perplexing variety of the Himalayan climate or the not less serious vagaries of the different forms of transport leading to Simla! whichever way we look upon the task which these gentlemen have accomplished, I think we must convey our congratulations to them on the way in which they have discharged it. (Hear, hear.) Had there been a less formal occasion on which these words might have been spoken and perhaps amplified, no doubt others as well as the President would have taken part in conveying the thanks and the appreciation of the Legislative Assembly to those who have co-operated in constructing this commodious Chamber. But seeing that that opportunity may perhaps not be given, I do not wish the occasion to pass without the due acknowledgment of all those concerned and to all those concerned. (Hear, hear.)

MESSAGE FROM THE GOVERNOR GENERAL :

I have a Message from His Excellency the Governor General :

'In pursuance of sub-section (3) of section 63B of the Government of India Act, I, Rufus Daniel, Earl of Reading, hereby require the attendance of Members of the Legislative Assembly in the Assembly Chamber at 11 O'Clock on the morning of Saturday, the 3rd September 1921.

(Sd.) READING,

Viceroy and Governor General.'

ALLOTTED DAYS : NON-OFFICIAL BUSINESS :

I announce, for the information of Members, that meetings for non-official business will be held on the 20th and 21st September. Ballot Lists for those days are now open. The Ballot itself will be held on Saturday, the 3rd September, after the conclusion of the formal meeting and the holding of the Council of State Ballot. Other days for the transaction of non-official business will, no doubt, be allotted by the Governor General in due course.

MR. SACHCHIDANANDA SINHA'S RESIGNATION :

Since the Assembly last met, one of our colleagues, Mr. Sachchidananda Sinha, has resigned his seat on his appointment to high office elsewhere. Mr. Sinha is now a Member of the Executive Council of His Excellency the Governor of Bihar and Orissa and has also been appointed to the position of President of the Legislative Council of that province. What this Assembly loses, Mr. Sachchidananda Sinha's native province gains. Few figures in contemporary constitutional and political movements in India are better known than that of the Honourable Mr. Sachchidananda Sinha. This Assembly has already signified its appreciation of his eminent qualities by electing him in Delhi to the post of Deputy President. It would be superfluous on my part to add anything indeed to that signal mark of the appreciation of his fellow countrymen, but, I think, I may now convey to him the congratulations and good wishes of those who were his colleagues in the public work of India in this Chamber. (Hear, hear.)

VACANCY IN DEPUTY PRESIDENCY :

Mr. Sinha's resignation creates a vacancy in the post of Deputy President of the Legislative Assembly. That position, therefore, must be filled in accordance with the provisions of our procedure. Nomination of candidates for the position of Deputy President will be received on the 19th September and the election will be held on the 23rd. I may say that for the moment those are provisional dates which I have substituted at the last moment in order to meet the convenience of our Muhammadan colleagues in this Assembly.

THE FUNCTION OF THE DEPUTY PRESIDENT :

With regard to the announcement, which I have just made, I have received intimation from several quarters that the position of the Deputy President is not yet clearly defined. At the beginning of the first Session of the Assembly in Delhi, I received similar communications, chiefly in the form of requests for information regarding the freedom of this officer in debate. I declined at that time to give a peremptory ruling and to that decision I still adhere. But I may repeat here what I then said in private to several enquirers :

'That the Assembly must create its own precedents and traditions to establish and to protect the impartiality of the Chair and that pending the evolution of these traditions we can rely upon the individual discretion of the Deputy President himself.'

I am revealing no inviolable secret when I say that such was the unwritten understanding on which our first Deputy President acted. I take this opportunity, while regretting his absence from this Chamber and while congratulating him on his accession to high office, of bearing my witness to his unfailing observance of it.

I should not, however, do justice to the requests which I have received if I were to leave the matter there. It has been suggested to me, from more sources than one, that the analogy of the House of Commons—if properly followed—would compel the Assembly to forbid the Deputy President to take part in ordinary debate and thus preserve the impartiality of his official character.

In point of fact, the House of Commons has no Rule nor Standing Order which forbids the Deputy Speaker,—better known as the Chairman of Committees or the Chairman of Ways and Means,—to take part in debate ; but the conditions of his office and the established tradition of the House effectively preclude him from doing so.

This Assembly has hitherto shown a desire to create sound traditions of its own, to follow the House of Commons wherever possible and desirable, but to refuse slavishly to imitate British Parliamentary tradition where it does not conform to Indian needs. This is a wholesome swadeshi in Parliamentary procedure.

In the matter of the analogy between the Deputy Speaker and the Deputy President, I would suggest to the Assembly the desirability of following faithfully the spirit of Westminster but of modifying to its own needs the letter of House of Commons practice,

[The President.]

To illustrate the contrast between the two positions, I must enter upon a description of the office of the Deputy Speaker in the House of Commons which is somewhat long in form. For its length I apologise in advance.

At Westminster, the Chairman of Committees, that is to say, the Deputy Speaker, is selected by the Government: here he is the choice of the Chamber itself. At Westminster, he actually presides over the House, in a busy session, for at least as many hours as the Speaker himself: here he can never be called upon, except in very exceptional circumstances, to eclipse the President in the number of hours during which he occupies the Chair. At Westminster, when not presiding over the deliberations of the House (in Committee), he is fully engaged in supervising Private Bill Legislation, for which he is responsible as Chairman of the Committee on Unopposed Bills: here no such function can be assigned to the Deputy President, for the procedure known as Private Bill Legislation does not exist. At Westminster, finally, as Chairman of the Court of Referees, the Deputy Speaker discharges another important function for which there is no Indian parallel. The Assembly will thus realise that the position of the Deputy Speaker in England is very onerous. He, indeed, is the hardest-worked functionary in the House of Commons; and, even if he wished, and even if tradition permitted, he would be precluded from any active share in current controversy by the weight of his official duties.

The contrast between Westminster and Simla is now, I hope, clear.

It is for this Assembly to evolve its own practice, and to establish its own institutions for the discharge of its duties as a legislative body. Your Deputy President carries upon his shoulders the obligation to uphold the even-handed impartiality of the Chair even when he himself is not the occupant of it. That obligation is laid upon him by the will of his colleagues when they elect him; and it should ever be his first care to observe it. It must be obvious to those who survey his position that he does not, and cannot, enjoy perfect freedom to take part in debate, and in accepting election to the office, he also accepts the sacrifice of many otherwise tempting Parliamentary opportunities. The fact of his election singles him out from the ranks of the Assembly as one—one among many perhaps—whose qualities inevitably give him eminence. In some sense, therefore, he is to be regarded as a leading personality, whose voice the Assembly would not willingly silence. Hence my reluctance to shackle his discretion by any iron rule; and as I do not propose to anticipate the remote and improbable occasion of indiscreet action on his part, I will not even adumbrate the appropriate action of the Chair or of the Assembly in that event,

At the same time I will not conceal from this House the conviction which is growing in my mind, that in the not very distant future, it may be found desirable to augment the actual duties of the Deputy President, and to place in his charge some of the functions which naturally fall to officers directly responsible to a Legislative Chamber. By this means his office would grow in importance, and the Assembly will gain by securing greater control over the whole field of his work.

To those—and I have direct evidence that they are not a few—who are somewhat perplexed by the contrast between the intrinsic importance of the Deputy's office and of its present appearance as that of a sinecure, I would say that many great results have emerged from lesser origins, and that in any case, Solvitur Ambulando.

APPOINTMENTS TO THE PANEL OF CHAIRMEN:

In pursuance of the powers vested in the Chair by Rule Three, I appoint

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar,

Mr. Frank McCarthy, to the Panel of Chairmen for this Session.

Further appointments, if they be necessary, will be made after the result of the election to the office of Deputy President is made known.

MEETINGS OF THE ASSEMBLY:

The following dates have been provisionally fixed for the meetings of this Assembly, after the formal meeting on Saturday, September the 3rd:

September 5th, 15th, 19th, 22nd and 26th.

This programme, as Members will realise, is by no means exhaustive, and other dates will be included in it as time goes on. The gap between the dates, September 5th and 15th, is made, as Members will realise, to meet the convenience of our Muhammadan colleagues who wish to celebrate the Muhurram festival.

HOOR OF MEETING:

In view of the circumstances in Simla, I think it may perhaps meet the convenience of all concerned if we endeavour to have each daily meeting of the Assembly conducted as a whole without adjournment. As provisionally arranged and already announced, therefore, this Assembly will meet on the days on which business is fixed for it, at 10-30 in the morning.

ANNOUNCEMENT OF GOVERNMENT BUSINESS:

I wish to ask the Leader of the House whether he is in a position to state the programme of Government Business for the early meetings of this House.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: In the course of this Session, Government hope to introduce in this Assembly Bills to amend the Income-tax and Super-tax Acts, the Negotiable Instruments Act, the Indian Carriers Act, the Indian Post Office Act, the Indian Marine Act, the Indian Works of Defence Act, also Bills to constitute the Indian War Relief Trust, and to impose a Cess on the Export of Lac. We also hope to bring before the Assembly a Bill to give effect to the recommendations of the Committee on the Repeal of the Press Law, and should leave be given in another place to withdraw the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Bill, it is hoped that that Bill will be introduced in this Assembly. Several Bills which are already before the Assembly will be carried to further stages, and it is hoped that several will be passed. Further, if the Report of the Committee appointed by Government to examine Repressive Legislation is received in time, and its recommendations are accepted in whole or part by Government, the necessary legislation to give effect to the decisions of Government on those recommendations may be introduced during the present Session.

On Monday, the 5th September, at the next business meeting, several small Bills will be introduced, and there will be motions for the re-constitution of the Joint Select Committees already nominated. It is hoped on that day also to refer to Select Committee the Bill to amend the Code of Civil Procedure in certain particulars.

The Honourable the President: This House now stands adjourned to 11 A.M. on Saturday, September the 3rd, and, thereafter, to 10-30 A.M. on Monday, September the 5th.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

Saturday, 3rd September, 1921.

INAUGURATION OF THE SECOND SESSION OF THE COUNCIL OF STATE AND LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

His Excellency the Viceroy with the Presidents of the Council of State and Legislative Assembly having arrived in procession, His Excellency took his seat on the dais.

H. E. the Viceroy: Gentlemen of the Indian Legislature, it is my privilege as Viceroy to welcome to-day the Members of both Houses of the Indian Legislature at the opening of the second Session. It is my first opportunity of taking part in this ceremony, and I am fully conscious of the importance of the occasion. One memorable Session has already been held when a standard of political wisdom and debating capacity was set that may well be a source of legitimate pride and satisfaction to those who contributed to the reputation thus attained. You, who stood for election and became the representatives of these new Councils, and in consequence were subjected to attack and criticism, have already by your actions justified the position you adopted. At this present juncture, my Government and you are faced with difficult problems, which demand all the political judgment and foresight we can contribute to their solution. I propose to-day to refer only to the more important and in their broadest aspect, and to survey with you the general conditions affecting India.

But, before I enter into the region of possible controversy, I must discharge the pleasing and privileged task of referring to the impending visit of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, the Son and Heir of our beloved King-Emperor. You will remember, that a little more than a year ago, His Majesty the King-Emperor by Royal Proclamation informed the Princes and people of India of his decision that the visit of the Prince of Wales to India must be deferred for a time in order that His Royal Highness might recover from the fatigue of his labours in other parts of the Empire. We have recently heard to our great joy that the health of His Royal Highness has been sufficiently restored to enable the visit to take place in November next. The ceremony of inaugurating the Reformed Legislatures, which was to have been his, has been performed by His Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught, and India will not readily forget the sympathy and love which inspired him, the devoted friend of India, in the discharge of his great mission. The Prince of Wales will come to India on this occasion as the Son of the King-Emperor and as the Heir to the Throne, not as the representative of any Government or to promote the interests of any political party, but in order to become personally acquainted with the Princes and the people of India, and to see as much as will be possible during his visit of this most interesting country. I know that I may safely count on those who belong to this great Indian Empire, and more particularly on the representatives of the Reformed Legislatures now gathered within these walls, to give to His Royal Highness, who has endeared himself to all who have been privileged to meet him, a warm welcome characteristic of the traditional loyalty of the Indian people and their devotion to the King-Emperor and his House.

You will already have learnt that the resignation tendered by Sir Thomas Holland has been accepted by His Majesty. In communicating to me the regret, with which he had reached his conclusion, the Secretary of State expresses his general sense of the importance of the contribution which Sir Thomas Holland had made to the Industrial development of India. The Secretary of State further records his appreciation of the high ability and strenuous labours which Sir Thomas Holland devoted during the war to the task of organising and increasing the supply of munitions. His services then rendered were of the highest value, not only to India but to the Empire, which the Secretary of State gratefully recognises. I associate myself with the tribute and add only that my regret is the greater because I lose a Colleague in the Council with whom I have been associated from the moment I became Viceroy. The facts and conclusions of my Government have already been placed before you in the official statement published by my Government, and I need not refer to them again. The public felt, and beyond all doubt rightly felt, that the proceedings in Court had shaken the very foundations of justice. Fundamental principles of administration and justice had been violated, and the acceptance of the resignation was therefore inevitable. Our conclusions were announced only in relation to the proceedings in Court and to the omission to refer to me as the head of the Government. Lest there should be any misapprehension, I must, however, add, on my own behalf and that of my Colleagues, that the existence of civil suits against the Government by the accused should be entirely disregarded in relation to the criminal case. Their unconditional withdrawal ought not to have any influence upon considerations of the withdrawal of the prosecution.

The lesson that we have learnt from these unfortunate events is, that it is very desirable that the direction and control of Government prosecutions should be in the hands of a trained lawyer. The matter will be considered by my Government. I cannot but think that the absence of this training contributed largely to the difficulties in which my late Colleague, Sir Thomas Holland, found himself involved.

Let me now turn to external affairs. You will naturally wish to know the result of our negotiations with the Afghan Government. I had hoped that I should be in a position to-day to make an announcement to you respecting them. But though it was so far back as January last, that at the invitation of the Afghan Government we despatched a Mission to Kabul for the negotiation of a Treaty of Friendship, its outcome is still uncertain. Negotiations of this character, especially when supervening on actual war, are often not brought to a speedy close and these negotiations have been protracted by developments beyond the limit of my Government's anticipations. But, despite all untoward complications or unexpected difficulties, I hope that we may before long conclude a new and abiding Treaty of Friendship with Afghanistan which will ensure the continuance of our traditional relations with this nation.

The Frontier unhappily is still suffering from the unsettling influence of the Great War, and the other excitements and instigations of recent years; but, notwithstanding the drought and great scarcity of the present year which have done much to accentuate the economic difficulty that lies at the root of the Frontier problem, unrest in Baluchistan has almost wholly subsided. Even in the North-West Frontier Province, with its narrow belt of British districts between the Indus and the Frontier hills exposed at all times to the brunt of tribal lawlessness, there is comparative quietude save in Waziristan. Military operations have now been in progress in Waziristan for several months. They have been conducted by our troops in the face of many hardships and against an elusive enemy with a fortitude and gallantry worthy of all praise. I trust that these operations may not long have to be continued. They are slow and costly—the problem of the inhospitable Frontier does not lend itself to cheap or easy solution—but India's duty seems clear. And it must always be remembered that the expenditure on Frontier defence is incurred not merely for the defence of the sorely harassed inhabitants of our border districts against trans-frontier lawlessness and raids; it is incurred for the defence of India as a whole, and is an expenditure which India will assuredly not grudge.

Unhappily Greece and Turkey are still at war, notwithstanding the strenuous efforts of the Allies, and notably of His Majesty's Government, to effectuate a settlement of the grave disputes between these two countries. My distinguished predecessor, Lord Chelmsford, forcibly and persistently represented the views of the Indian Muslims to His Majesty's Government, and to the best of my capacity I have pursued and shall pursue the same course. It is also well known that the Secretary of State for India has laboured most loyally and strenuously to persuade the Allies to adopt a policy more in consonance with the opinions of India. I dare not at this moment when operations of war are proceeding hazard an opinion as to the future, but I may express my fervent hope that a Treaty of Peace may soon be concluded on terms which will be reasonably satisfactory to Turkey and also to Indian Muslim opinion.

May I also observe that differences between some portions of the Muslim population that hold extreme views and the rest of the Indian Muslim opinion do not strengthen the representations which I may make to His Majesty's Government in order that we may bring about a settlement satisfactory to Muslim opinion in India. (Applause.)

It is some consolation in these days to turn from the contemplation of warlike operations to the labours of the League of Nations. India took its stand from the first for the League which, in my judgment, gives the best hope of preventing future wars. The creation of a permanent International Court of Justice is one step, and not an unimportant step, in the settlement of disputes by the arbitrament of reason; and, in this connection, I am pleased to be able to inform you, that His Majesty has been graciously pleased on behalf of India to ratify the acceptance of the Statute for the constitution of a permanent Court of International Justice, which was accepted by the representatives of India on the Assembly of the League of Nations. The Judges of the Court will be elected by the Assembly of the League of Nations and by the Council from lists of persons nominated by national groups representing the various nations which have accepted and ratified this Statute. In appointing this national group for India, my Government have endeavoured to select persons of the highest reputation and competency, and I am confident, you will agree with me, that Mr. K. Srinivasa Iyengar, now a Member of the Executive Council at Madras, Mr. Justice Rankin, Judge of the High Court of Calcutta, Mr. S. Hassan Imam, Barrister-at-Law, Patna, and Sir Thomas Strangman, Advocate-General in Bombay, who have accepted the appointments as members of the national group, fulfil these conditions. Their duties will be to nominate persons from whom the Judges of the Court will subsequently be elected. The Court will have jurisdiction in cases of disputes between members of the League which the members agree to refer to it, and also in international disputes in labour cases and in transit and communications cases.

I have followed with the deepest interest the events at the Imperial Conference in London, where India had the good fortune of being represented by the Secretary of State, the Maharaja of Cutch, and the Right Honourable Srinivasa Sastri, one of His Majesty's Privy Councillors. Although they were not able to achieve all they wished, it cannot be doubted that they have secured a notable recognition of the status of Indians in the Empire. It may be a tardy recognition, but it establishes beyond all question, and authoritatively, by the conclusions of the Premiers assembled at the Imperial Conference, with one dissentient, the equal status of Indians in the Empire; secondly, the attitude of His Majesty's Government and their recognition of this principle will mean that it will be applied in other parts of the Empire which are not under Dominion Government, and notably in East Africa. In India, we cannot but rejoice at these conclusions, notwithstanding that we deeply regret that the representatives of South Africa felt themselves unable to accept them. We must not close our eyes to their difficulties, these are of a special character. But we must continue our efforts to bring about a recognition in South Africa. Assuredly we need not be discouraged by the result at the Imperial Conference: indeed, we should be stimulated to continue our labours, and I give you my assurance that I will strive to the full extent of the power and ability I may possess to obtain the recognition in South Africa and elsewhere of the principle accepted by the other Dominions and His Majesty's Government, and to secure that it shall be so interpreted as to satisfy Indian pride and patriotism. I cannot pass from this subject without expressing gratitude to the representatives of India who represented the interests of Indians so ably and eloquently. I have read with great pleasure the reports of the reception of the Maharaja of Cutch and Mr. Sastri. It is beyond doubt that they have raised the status of Indians in the Councils of the British Empire; they have contributed to the appreciation of the intellectual capacity, the graceful courtesy and the sensitive responsiveness of Indians, and have made a deep impression upon all with whom they have come into contact in England and elsewhere.

When I approach examination of the internal conditions of India, I find much that is hopeful for the future, and my belief in your capacity to assist me and my Government in promoting the general welfare of the country is a constant encouragement in the performance of our duties. But there is still unhappily unrest in some parts of the country which continues to receive the serious consideration of my Government. Its most recent manifestation is in the district of Malabar, and thoughts naturally turn to the grave reports of crime and disorder which necessitated the issue by me of an Ordinance proclaiming Martial Law in certain parts of this district. I trust, I need not assure you, that having passed my life in the profession of the law and steeped as I am in the liberal traditions of England, I would never proclaim Martial Law unless I was convinced that it was absolutely necessary for the security of the country and for the safety of the population in the disturbed areas. In my judgment, I should have failed in my duty if I had not taken this step in the emergency that arose, and had not given to the Local Government all the assistance and support that could be rendered in quelling the uprising of the Moplahs and in protecting innocent citizens against the criminal acts of a violent mob. We must, however, be careful to view these disturbances in their proper setting. It would be rash and in my view wrong to assume that this rising is to be taken as symptomatic of the condition of the whole of India. It must be remembered that this district has always been a storm-centre, and serious disorders have occurred in the past. I shall not enter into a lengthy discussion of the events and conditions that led to this serious outbreak, which may be said, without exaggeration of the language, to have assumed the character of rebellion, because I am well aware that you will have opportunities of discussing these matters in the course of your debates. I shall only make some general observations for your consideration. It is obvious from the reports received that the ground had been carefully prepared for the purpose of creating an atmosphere favourable to violence, and no effort had been spared to rouse the passions and fury of the Moplahs. The spark which kindled the flame was the resistance by a large and hostile crowd of Moplahs, armed with swords and knives, to a lawful attempt by the police to effect certain arrests in connection with a case of house-breaking. The police were powerless to effect the capture of the criminals, and the significance of the incident is, that it was regarded as a defeat of the police and, therefore, of the Government. Additional troops and special police had to be drafted to Malabar in order to effect the arrests. The subsequent events are now fairly well known, although it is impossible at present to state the number of the innocent victims of the Moplahs. These events have been chronicled in the Press and I shall not recapitulate them. The situation is now, to all intents and purposes, in hand. It has been saved by the prompt and effective action of the military and naval assistance for which we are duly grateful, although some time must necessarily elapse before order can be completely restored and normal life under the Civil Government resumed. But consider the sacrifice of life and property! A few Europeans and many Hindus have been murdered, communications have been obstructed, Government offices burnt and looted, and records have been destroyed, Hindu temples sacked, houses of Europeans and Hindus burnt. According to reports, Hindus were forcibly converted to Islam, and one of the most fertile tracts of South India is threatened with famine. The result has been the temporary collapse of Civil Government, offices and courts have ceased to function, and ordinary business has been brought to a standstill. European and Hindu refugees of all classes are concentrated at Calicut, and it is satisfactory to know that they are safe there. One trembles to think of the consequences if the forces of order had not prevailed for the protection of Calicut. The Non-Muslim in these parts was fortunate indeed if either he or his family, or his house or property, came near the protection of the soldier and the police. Those who are responsible for causing this grave outbreak of violence and crime must be brought to justice and made to suffer the punishment of the guilty. But apart from direct responsibility, can it be doubted that when poor, unfortunate and deluded people are led to believe that they should disregard the law and defy authority, violence and crime must follow. This outbreak is but another instance on a much more serious scale and among a more turbulent and fanatical people of the conditions that have manifested themselves at times in various parts of the country. And Gentlemen, I ask myself, and you and the country generally, what else can result from instilling such doctrines into the minds of masses of the people? How can there be peace and tranquillity when ignorant people who have no means of testing the truth of the inflammatory and too often false statements made to them are thus misled by those whose design it is to provoke violence and disorder. Passions are thus easily excited to unreasoning fury. Although I freely acknowledge that the leader of the movement to paralyse authority persistently, and, as I believe, in all earnestness and sincerity, preaches the doctrine of non-violence and has reproved his followers for resorting to it, yet, again and again, it has been shown that his doctrine is completely forgotten and his exhortations absolutely disregarded when passions are excited as must inevitably be the consequence among emotional people. To us who are responsible for the peace and good government of this great Empire, and I trust to men of sanity and common-sense in all classes of society, it must be clear that defiance of the Government and constituted authority can only result in widespread disorder, in political chaos, in anarchy and in ruin. There are signs that the activity of the movement, or at least of one section of it, may take a form of even a more direct challenge to law and order. There has been wild talk of a general policy of disobedience to law, in some cases I regret to say accompanied by an open recognition that such a course must lead to disorder and bloodshed. Attempts have even been made by some fanatical followers of Islam to seduce His Majesty's soldiers and police from their allegiance—attempts that have, I am glad to say, met with no success. As head of the Government, however, I need not assure you that we shall not be deterred one hair's breadth from doing our duty. We shall continue to do all in our power to protect the lives and property of all law-abiding citizens, and to secure to them their right to pursue their lawful avocations and, above all, we shall continue to enforce the ordinary law and to take care that it is respected. It is the manifest duty of every loyal subject of the King-Emperor, just as it is the interest of all who wish to live peaceful lives with a security of protection against violence and crime, to oppose publicly a movement fraught with such dangerous possibilities and to help the officers of Government in their task of preventing and suppressing disorder. And all this time I and my Colleagues are ready and anxious to do all that is possible to allay legitimate discontent and to remedy the grievances of the people of India. I am free to admit that there are grievances to be remedied, and we are constantly directing our attention to devising the proper remedies for this purpose; and I am well aware that we can rely upon your assistance in this and future Sessions, for you sit here to mirror public opinion, and I and my Government will continue gladly to welcome the help you may give to us.

You, the first representatives of this Legislature, can already point to solid achievement as the result of your deliberations and activities. I shall not attempt to chronicle them, but I shall refer to some important instances. A Committee was appointed to examine the laws dealing with the Press: its report is now before you. The personnel of the Committee, which included Members of both your Houses, was predominantly non-official, and its recommendations, which I am glad to say, were unanimous, may be accepted as reflecting the popular views of the laws in question. Legislation on the lines recommended by the Committee will shortly be laid before you. Its most important feature will be the proposal to repeal the Press Act of 1910. There is, however, one part of the Report upon which, I think, it is necessary to make some reservation, and that is in relation to the protection hitherto afforded since 1910 to Ruling Princes against seditious attacks upon them in newspapers published in British India. If the Press Act is repealed, it may become necessary to consider what form of protection shall be given to them in substitution. I will not pursue the subject now, but it will doubtless be discussed at a later stage.

The Repressive Laws Committee—another Committee of a very similar character—has recently made a careful examination of certain laws and regulations which confer extraordinary powers on the Executive Government. Their Report will shortly be published, and I trust that it will command your approval and that of the country at large. I cannot make an announcement regarding the legislative measures that will result from the Committee's labours as they have not yet been considered by my Government. But I think I may safely say that a number of laws, popularly regarded as infringements of the liberty of the subject, will, in all probability, be repealed.

The consideration of this subject brings me not unnaturally to the cases of the 86 men sentenced in connection with the Punjab Disturbances of 1919 who are still in jail. I wish it had been possible for me to-day to have announced my decision to you: but I am not yet quite ready to declare it. I confess that when I undertook myself to examine each of these 86 cases, I under-estimated the labour involved, and I did not sufficiently realise the constant demands upon my time consequent upon the responsibility of the position I occupy. Unexpected events happen and decisions must be made immediately, and I am sure that I need not remind you of the unexpected incidents that have happened during my short period of office.

You will remember that, as the result of discussion last Session, an important Committee under the Presidency of His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief has sat to consider the military requirements of India. The report of the Committee will be considered in London by a Sub-Committee of the Committee of Imperial Defence and we must await their decisions.

A Notification has been issued constituting seven Territorial Force Units in different parts of India and in Burma in addition to the University Corps. It is hoped that numbers of recruits will be forthcoming to take advantage of the opportunity thus afforded for acquiring military training, so as to fit them to take a share in the defence of their country. My Government will spare no pains to further the interests of the Territorial Force, and it now rests with the people of India to make the scheme a success.

A Resolution was passed by the Legislative Assembly last Session recommending the establishment of a College in India to train Indian lads who desired to enter the Indian Army through Sandhurst. A scheme on these lines has been forwarded for the approval of the Secretary of State, and as soon as that has been received, rapid progress will be made with the adaptation of the buildings formerly occupied by the Imperial Cadet Corps at Dehra Dun so as to fit them for a College of this nature. It is hoped that the Prince of Wales may be pleased to perform the opening ceremony, and that the preliminary work will be completed in time to enable the College to be in working order. The College will be large enough to accommodate 90 pupils in the first instance, and, if it proves a success, it will be possible to make expansion in the immediate vicinity of the College.

A subject which has occupied your attention and that of the Indian public, and roused great interest, is that relating to the free admission of Indians to all arms of His Majesty's military and naval forces in India. In accordance with the Resolution passed by the Legislative Assembly, my Government is now in communication with the Secretary of State with the object of enabling Indians to qualify for Commissions in the Artillery and Engineer Services in the country, and it is examining, in consultation with the Secretary of State, the question of the provision of facilities for Indians to be trained for Commissions in the Royal Air Force. A scheme is also under consideration for assisting Indian lads to qualify themselves by a period of training in England for a commissioned rank in the Royal Indian Marine.

Financial discussion occupied much time last Session, and you will not expect me to say anything fresh at this moment regarding the present trade and financial conditions. We are still awaiting that long expected revival in the demand abroad for India's products; this has been a very long time in coming, and, I am sure, the patience of many of us must have been sorely tried. Those who are in touch with our export markets tell me, however, that there are, at last, some faint, though unmistakable, glimmerings of revival, and that, if the monsoon continues good to the end, as we now have reason to hope it may, we shall before long see the beginning of a return to more normal conditions, and, perhaps, to something like our pre-war balance of trade. I mention this feeling of mild optimism, as it seems to be held in well-informed circles. For myself, I cannot attempt to prophesy. I would, however, invite your assent to two general observations. The first is, that India's own financial position is, as I believe, intrinsically sound. The State may have been occasionally forced during the war to do things which must have seemed to be a departure from the severe conservatism which had hitherto characterised the management of India's finances. But when we remember what most other belligerent countries were forced to do, and the enormous inflation of currency and credit, leading in many cases to something like national bankruptcy, which has followed elsewhere, we may, I think, at the risk of being considered Pharisaical, thank Heaven that we are not as other countries. A country that can put up nearly 40 crores of new money for a national loan need not entertain many qualms as to its financial future.

My second observation is merely a corollary from the first. Seeing that the existing difficulties of India's trade are due almost entirely to causes external to herself, it follows that when that revival of international trade comes, as come it must, then India will be one of the first countries to reap the benefit. The products which she has to offer to the rest of the world are not luxuries, the purchase of which other countries can defer until their finances are in better order, but are for the most part necessities, either as food-stuffs or as raw products for their manufactures. All these factors combined must make India's position one of great advantage as soon as trade revives, and justify a refusal to be depressed by budget deficits, a low exchange, or other circumstances of the moment.

In considering the conditions of the people of India the greatest importance must always be attributed to the high prices now ruling for the necessities of life. This subject is constantly engaging the attention of my Government, and, in particular, it has been directed to the extraordinary recent rise in the price, particularly of wheat and of rice. You will have observed from a statement issued by my Government this morning that we shall continue the existing prohibition of the export of wheat, atta and flour until at least the end of March 1922. It is also proposed that so far as possible the requirements of wheat for the Army in India or based on India be for the present supplied by the purchase of Australian wheat. It is hoped that by these means relief will be given, and that the rise will be checked if not counteracted. My Government will not fail to watch events in this connection. Their importance on the political condition of India is perhaps greater than is usually recognised.

Our arrangements for the Fiscal Commission are well advanced, and I trust that the Commission will begin its important labours next month. In recognition of India's advance towards fiscal autonomy, the majority of the members of the Commission will be Indians and it is also intended that the Chairman shall be an Indian. I regret that at this moment arrangements are not sufficiently completed to enable me to give the names. The task before the Commission is one of enormous difficulty. Its duty will be to advise the Government of India, not only whether India should approve, in the interests of the solidarity of the Empire, the principle of Imperial Preference, but also whether we should abandon our time-honoured policy of a tariff raised primarily for revenue purposes in favour of a policy of protection. The task thus opens up questions of great difficulty and complexity, but I am confident that the Commission will approach them with a high sense of responsibility and that its Report will be of the greatest assistance and value to the Government of India.

The Government recognise that during the last few years there has been a great awakening on the part of Indian labour, and they are fully alive to the new conditions that such an awakening demands. The Bill to amend the Indian Factories Act, which is now under your consideration, has the two-fold object of increasing the efficiency of Indian labour and of bettering its conditions.

Another social measure, to which we attach great importance, is a Bill to regulate the grant of compensation to workmen for injuries received in the course of their employment, which we hope to introduce early in 1922. The recent industrial unrest has also been accompanied by a growth in the number of Trade Unions, and the question of giving adequate protection and legal status to those Unions which are genuine labour organisations is at present under consideration. The Government are also carefully studying the question of arbitration and conciliation. We are glad to observe that this matter of the settlement of labour disputes is receiving considerable attention from Provincial Governments and in Provincial Legislatures. I am full of hope that the various measures that are now being adopted or being recommended to employers as well as to employees will establish the peace and harmony that is absolutely necessary for the development of our industries.

[H. E. the Viceroy.]

The evidence of strong racial antagonism that, to some extent prevails, has caused me the greatest concern since my arrival in India. Regrettable incidents have come to my notice. At the same time I am far from asserting that the fault is all on one side. It seems to me that among the factors contributing to this unhappy racial tension, instances of violence and discourtesy by Europeans against Indians, which occur from time to time—although in truth I believe infrequently—cannot be overlooked. There is generally, I venture to assert, no ground of complaint to be made, but any instance of incivility attracts far more attention than the usual and infinitely more numerous instances of courtesy by Europeans to Indians. Neither can it be said that the results of the trials of Europeans concerned in criminal cases arising from acts of violence or from improper conduct have always given satisfaction to the public. I have been made aware of a very prevalent feeling amongst Indians that in such cases strict justice does not always result when a European is concerned, and it cannot be said that the result of such trials always satisfies the public conscience. In particular, my attention has been directed to the differences in the legal procedure applicable to Europeans and Indians. Local Governments have been consulted, and an opportunity will be taken during the course of the present Session to lay before you the proposals of my Government as to the steps which should be taken for further examination of this question, and I trust that in the result means will be found to satisfy public opinion that justice will be done both to Europeans and Indians.

There are many other subjects which will be considered by you during the course of this Session. There are questions of importance to which I have not even referred as I do not wish to detain you too long. In particular, I would mention the interest taken by Sir Thomas Holland in the industrial development of India. By his departure we lose the benefit of the services of one who has laboured faithfully and capably to this end. There are projects of irrigation which specially attract my attention. I wish I could have discussed them. There is again education which is dear to my heart and upon which I should like to have made some observations to you. But I must content myself with the knowledge that there will be other opportunities, and that all these subjects will come before you in the ordinary course of your deliberations and will receive careful attention.

During the time that I have been Viceroy I have been in constant intercourse with men of the Public Services of this country—both British and Indian—and I desire to take this opportunity of expressing publicly my grateful thanks to them for the assistance they have rendered to me and to Government, my appreciation of the services they are always ready to perform, my recognition of the inevitable promptness with which they have responded, to what I must confess to be the inordinate demands made by me upon their time and their labours.

Now, gentlemen, I shall not detain you longer. Sitting here in this Chamber, at the first meeting of this Session of the Reformed Legislature in Simla, I find my mind surging with imagination as to the future. I know that you are sitting here under a Constitution which has never been presented otherwise than for the purposes of the transitional stage. There are Resolutions that will come before you during the sittings of your Assembly urging your advance along the road of constitutional progress. I am carefully watching and studying the working of this new machinery, and I am satisfied that in the short space of time, in which it has already existed, you have not yet sufficiently tested its perfections, if you are ready to admit that it has any, also its imperfections which no doubt you have already to some extent discovered. It is a human machine with human imperfections. It has never been presented otherwise than as a compromise, and it will take a little time before we can fully realise how it will work and how this machinery will fit in with the complex machinery of the Government of India. I will not at this moment hazard any observation as to the future. I am not so young as most of you who are present here. (Laughter.) I am prone to the caution of age and, therefore, will wait until I have had a little more opportunity of judging before I pronounce my conclusions. But these questions will be raised by you in this Legislature which has still some Sessions before it. There will be opportunities for full consideration and deliberation. I have already pointed out the results of the labours of this Assembly during the short period of its first Session. I have dilated briefly upon some of the results of the creation of this Reformed Legislature. You have gathered a good harvest, for, as a result of the Committees appointed and the legislation following upon your Resolutions, and the expression of your opinions duly recorded by Government, you are already able to point to a large volume of Government action taken to redress grievances. May I again taking advantage of my years as we elderly people so often do (Laughter)—add one word of warning? I do not think you can always expect at every Session to garner so rich a harvest. (Laughter.)

In conclusion, let me say to you, as a Member of this Legislature now present with you, addressing general observations upon present conditions, that we are all working together with one single purpose in view, the promotion of the welfare and happiness of India. (Applause.) We have no other object, we have no other desire except this which binds us all together, and which calls for the manifestation of that spirit of mutual good-will and forbearance, without which no deliberations can be effective and lead to lasting results.

In leaving you to your labours, I make an appeal to you, which I, am confident, I shall not make in vain: Do not content yourselves with merely doing your duty in this Legislature, although I know it makes a great demand upon your time. It needs patriotism to sacrifice leisure and sometimes remunerative occupation to take part in the deliberations of this Assembly. You may think—no, I will not say that—but some persons may think, that this is a sufficient demand to make upon you. It is not. No demand is too great when there is need for patriotism. It is essential that men like yourselves who are assisting Government by your advice, for Government is always seeking knowledge, should go forth among the people not only at time of election when constituents must always be remembered, but at other times. You must be conscious that you are taking part in important deliberations, and that you are thus assisting in moulding the destinies of this Great Empire. You are, permit me to say, inscribing your names on the golden roll of patriotic service, and are devoting yourselves to great work, and in this high purpose are true to your God, to yourselves and to your country. (Prolonged Applause.)

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

Monday, 5th September, 1921.

The Assembly met in the Assembly Chamber at Half Past Ten of the Clock. The Honourable the President was in the Chair.

STATEMENTS LAID ON THE TABLE.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

CIVIL AND POSTAL ACCOUNTS OFFICES.

1. Mr. M. K. Reddi Garu: Will the Government be pleased to state—

- If it is a fact that the Secretary of State has sanctioned a time-scale for the clerical service of the Civil and Postal Accounts offices with a minimum of Rs. 40?
- If it is a fact that the minimum pay of the time-scale as introduced in the Accounts offices, located in Madras, has been reduced to Rs. 35 in the case of non-graduate clerks?
- If so, why has this discrimination been considered necessary in the case of Madras alone?
- Whether they propose to consider favourably the question of raising the minimum to Rs. 40 with retrospective effect from the date of introduction of the time-scale?
- If it is a fact that some 80 persons in the lower grades of the Postal Accounts office at Madras lost sums ranging from Rs. 5 to Rs. 15 as a result of the time-scale referred to above?
- If so, will the Government be pleased to state why the concession of percentage increases granted to the Civil Accounts offices to remedy this anomaly has not been extended to the Postal Accounts office?
- Whether they propose to consider favourably the extension of a similar concession with retrospective effect from the date of introduction of the time-scale?

The Honourable Mr. W. M. Hailey: (a) The minimum pay of the normal time-scale sanctioned by the Secretary of State for the clerical service is Rs. 40 per mensem for Civil Accounts offices as well as for the Upper Division clerks in the Post and Telegraphs Accounts offices; but for the Lower Division clerks in the latter offices the minimum is Rs. 30.

(b) Yes.

(c) In sanctioning the normal time-scale, the Secretary of State authorised the Government of India to settle the details of the scheme; and the minimum rates of pay in the case of the different offices were fixed with reference to the relative cost of living in the several provinces and also to the rates of pay prevailing in the local Secretariats at the time. A lower minimum rate of pay than that allowed elsewhere was considered sufficient for Madras where living was comparatively cheap. The rate of Rs. 35 for non-graduate clerks in Madras was fixed after considering the recommendations of the Salaries Committee which sat in 1919 for considering the general rates of pay of clerks employed under the Local Government.

(d) There is no intention of raising the minimum pay of Rs. 35 to Rs. 40 with retrospective effect from the date of introduction of the time-scale, but the question of revision of the scale of pay in all Accounts offices is now under the consideration of the Auditor General.

(e) There were some cases of loss. The losses were, in the majority of cases, due to the withdrawal of war allowances in consequence of the revision of pay sanctioned from the 4th November 1919. This has been remedied by the recent decision of the Government of India that war allowances, wherever drawn immediately prior to revision, may also be taken into account in regulating the grant of personal allowances.

(f) Because the percentage increases were granted only for offices which, as a whole, had not adequately benefited by the revision.

(g) As stated above, the question of a revision of pay in Accounts offices is under consideration, but it is unlikely that any concessions will be given with retrospective effect from the date of introduction of the existing time-scale.

MESSRS. SYDENHAM AND SMITH, RAILWAY OFFICERS OF EGMORE.

2. Mr. M. K. Reddi Garu: Will the Government of India be pleased to state if the Railway Board has received numerous protests—

(a) against the transfer of Mr. Sydenham from Egmore on the ground that as Enquiry Officer he proved a success;

(b) against the retention of Mr. Smith as Station Master at such an important station as Egmore on the ground that he is rendering himself unacceptable to the travelling Indian public; and if so, what action has been or is proposed to be taken thereon?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: The replies to the Questions are—

(a) The Railway Board have received one letter on the subject and a reply was sent. The letter received covered copies of other letters said to have been addressed to the Government Inspector of Railways, Madras, and to the Agent, South Indian Railway.

(b) No representation has been received, but some of the other letters mentioned in (a) above referred to the Station Master.

As it appears that representations have been made to the Agent of the South Indian Railway who is the final authority in such matters, the Government do not propose to take any action.

SUPPLY OF SALT TO THE FRENCH GOVERNMENT AT PONDICHERRY.

3. Mr. M. K. Reddi Garu: Will the Government be pleased to state—

(a) the quantity of salt which is annually supplied to the French Government at Pondicherry;

(b) why it is that the salt is supplied to the Pondicherry Government by measure and not by weight;

(c) what (if any) is the amount of loss to the Government of India by supplying a heavy kind of salt to the French Government instead of light salt;

(d) if it is true that a maund of light salt has more of salt by measure than a maund of heavy salt;

(e) if it is a fact that what is known as 'black salt'—an inferior kind—is a very light salt and that it has a very large sale in the Madras markets;

(f) if it is not a fact that many of the factories which manufacture white salt in the Madras Presidency are being closed, since the heavy white salt cannot compete in the market with the light salt?

Mr. A. C. Chatterjee: (a) The average quantity is 50,000 mds.

(b) Salt is supplied to the French Government at Pondicherry by measure in accordance with a decision arrived at in 1873 which is described in paragraphs 310 and 311 of the Report of the Madras Salt Commission of 1876.

(c) The loss cannot be accurately ascertained as wastage has also to be taken into consideration. In the case of Karambalam salt sent to Pondicherry, the wastage during recent years has varied between 7.4 to 8.7 per cent.

(f) So far as our information goes, no factory has been closed for this reason.

IMPORT OF SALT INTO INDIA.

4. Mr. M. K. Reddi Garu: Will the Government be pleased to state—

(a) what is the quantity of salt that is being imported from England, Aden and other foreign countries annually, for the last ten years;

(b) if it is a fact, that from some of the foreign countries, the salt is being carried to India, free of steamer freight;

(c) if so, why?

Mr. A. C. Chatterjee: (a) The Honourable Member's attention is invited to the Statement laid on the table in answer to Question No. 348 asked by Babu Braja Sundar Das on the 5th March 1921. The figures for 1920-21 are not yet available.

(b) and (c). The Honourable Member's attention is invited to the reply given to Question No. 523 asked by Mr. Manmohandas Ramji on the 21st March 1921.

SALE OF SALT MANUFACTURED IN BOMBAY.

5. Mr. M. K. Reddi Garu: (a) Is it a fact that a very large quantity of salt, manufactured in the southern parts of Bombay, finds a sale in the Madras Presidency, in preference to the salt manufactured locally?

(b) If so, will the Government be pleased to enlighten the Assembly on this question?

(c) Is it not a fact, that what is known as Gova black light salt finds a large market even in the city of Madras?

Mr. A. C. Chatterjee: (a) Bombay salt is consumed in the Madras Presidency chiefly in the districts of Salem, Coimbatore, South Kanara and Malabar. There has been no marked increase in the import of Bombay salt in recent years.

(b) The people in these localities have acquired a taste for Bombay salt and prefer it to the Madras salt.

(c) The answer is in the negative.

TUTICORIN SALT.

6. Mr. M. K. Reddi Garu : (a) Is it a fact that Tuticorin salt finds a sale in Salem and the South Arcot Districts in preference to the salt manufactured in Cheyyur, Chunampet and Merkanam factories, which are very near to Cuddalore? If so, what is the reason?

(b) Is it a fact that Tuticorin salt is given a concession in railway freight from Tuticorin to Cuddalore and other places where that salt finds a sale? If so, what is the kind of concession granted and why is it granted?

Mr. A. C. Chatterjee : (a) The cost of production at Tuticorin is lower than in the places mentioned as the soil and the climate at Tuticorin are more suitable for salt manufacture and the brine supply is better. Tuticorin salt is lighter than the salt manufactured under the accretion system in the Cheyyur, Chunampet and Merkanam factories.

DIFFERENCE IN MADRAS MEASURES OF VARIOUS KINDS OF SALT.

7. Mr. M. K. Reddi Garu : (a) What is the difference, in Madras measures, with reference to a bag of salt weighing two maunds between the salts manufactured at Goa and the surrounding districts of Bombay, Tuticorin salt, Cheyyur, Chunampet salt, and Ennore salt which is manufactured by the Government itself?

(b) In view of the larger quantity contained in a bag of light salt, what is the extra price demanded of the consumers of this salt for a bag of two maunds as compared with a bag of heavier kind of salt?

(c) Is not the extra price charged to the consumers, in the nature of an additional tax on them, and do not the proceeds from it go to the Government?

(d) Do Government propose to legislate, in order to remove this irregularity in the sale of salt?

Mr. A. C. Chatterjee : (a) The average number of Madras measures in a two-maund bag is as below :

Bombay and Goa salt	...	...	60 measures.
Tuticorin salt	...	...	53 measures.
Cheyyur salt	...	...	47 measures.
Chunampet salt	...	...	46 measures.
Ennore salt	...	...	48 measures.

(b) and (c). It is difficult to frame an accurate estimate of the additional cost on the consumer. The question is discussed in para. 17, Chapter VII of the Report of the Indian Salt Committee of 1904.

(d) The objections to legislation, enforcing the retail sale of salt by weight were fully stated in the Report of the Indian Salt Committee of 1904. The Government of India have at present no reason to believe that the difficulties then pointed out have lost any of their force. The question is a local one and perhaps the inconveniences alleged to be suffered by consumers could best be ventilated in the Bombay and Madras Legislative Councils.

POLICY OF GOVERNMENT IN MAKING JUDICIAL APPOINTMENTS.

8. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala : (a) Are persons who are wanting in judicial patience or courtesy or both, ever entrusted with the duties of administering justice in any Court of Law?

(b) Before the appointment, confirmation or promotion of officers exercising judicial powers, is the question as to whether they have judicial patience or temper taken into consideration?

(c) What is the policy of the Government on the subject?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : (a) Government are not aware of any instance of the appointment of such a person.

(b) Most judicial appointments in India are made by authorities other than the Government of India, and Government have no information as to the factors taken into consideration. They would not themselves appoint to a judicial post one who was known to them to be lacking in judicial patience and temper.

(c) The policy of Government in making judicial appointments is to appoint the best man available having regard to all the circumstances of the case.

PERSONS AWAITING TRIAL.

9. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala : (a) Are persons who are under investigation, inquiry or trial for any criminal offence, inconvenienced, ill-treated or disgraced in any way before decision as to their guilt or innocence?

(b) Is it a fact that under-trial Europeans even when in custody are provided with a chair in Court, but Indians under similar circumstances have to stand or sit on the bare ground?

(c) Do the Government propose to make it clear that no person before he or she is found guilty of any offence, be inconvenienced, ill-treated or in any way disgraced during investigation, inquiry or trial?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : (a) and (c). It is inevitable that persons accused of criminal offences should suffer a certain amount of inconvenience. Elaborate rules are, however, in force, the object of which is to protect such persons from ill-treatment and any unnecessary harassment both during investigation and when under trial, and the Government do not consider that any further instructions are necessary.

INDIAN PRIVY COUNCIL.

10. Dr. H. S. Gour : (1) Is it a fact that both the Government of India as well as the Secretary of State have recommended the creation of an Indian Privy Council as an item of Constitutional Reform in India?

(2) If so, why has not such Privy Council been yet created?

(3) Do the Government intend to give effect to its own recommendations? If so, when?

(4) If the answer to part (3) be in the affirmative, do the Government intend to take the Assembly into their confidence with a view to securing it sufficient representation?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: In paragraph 287 of the Montagu-Chelmsford Report, the institution of a Privy Council for India was recommended. Official opinion upon the proposal was lukewarm and non-official opinion mostly adverse. The proposal was, however, supported to the Secretary of State, somewhat hesitatingly, by the Government of India in paragraph 119 of their first despatch on Indian Constitutional Reforms. The recommendation is not embodied in the Government of India Act, as it would have been if the proposal was to be carried into effect, and no further action in this matter is now proposed.

As the Honourable Member is interested in this matter, he may perhaps like to refer to section 11 of the British North America Act, 1867, which provided for the establishment of His Majesty's Privy Council in Canada. Similar provisions have not been included in recent Acts governing the administration of other British Dominions, and Privy Councils have not been established therein.

Mr. N. M. Samarth: May I know if it is not a fact that the Joint Parliamentary Committee on the Government of India Bill rejected that proposal?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: From the fact that no provisions on this point have been included in the Act, I should be inclined to think that the Honourable Member is correct.

COUNCIL SECRETARIES.

11. Dr. H. S. Gour: (a) Is the Government aware of the recommendation of the Joint Parliamentary Committee embodied in S. 43A of the Government of India Act favouring the appointment of Council Secretaries?

(b) Is it the intention of Government to recommend to the Governor General to appoint such Secretaries?

(c) If so, how many and when?

(d) Before doing so, do the Government propose to take the Assembly into its confidence?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: (a) Yes.

(b) (c) and (d). The intention of the Joint Select Committee as regards this provision in the Act is indicated by its remarks on clause 29 in its Report on the Government of India Bill. The provision is entirely a permissive one, and the matter is left entirely to the discretion of His Excellency the Governor General. The Government of India have deferred making any recommendation to His Excellency on this question until further experience has been gained of the working of the new constitution.

KING'S COUNSEL IN INDIA.

12. Dr. H. S. Gour: (a) Is the Government aware of any proposal to create King's Counsel in India?

(b) If so, will the Government be pleased to state when such Counsel are to be created and how are members of the Bar to be selected for that purpose?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: The question of appointing King's Counsel in India is under the consideration of Government.

The subject is, however, affected by the work which the proposed King's Counsel will be able to undertake, and as this question is raised by the proposal to constitute an Indian Bar upon which Local Governments and legal bodies have been consulted, the decision of the question of appointing King's Counsel has been postponed, pending the consideration of the replies in that case.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS OF NON-OFFICIAL MEMBERS.

13. Mr. K. Ahmed: (i) Are the Government aware that Members in charge of the Government Departments reading Answers to Questions put by the Non-official Members of the House do not always give straightforward and accurate information?

(ii) Is it a fact that sometimes Members put Supplementary Questions and the Official Members in order to avoid properly answering them ask for notice of them?

(iii) Do Government propose to observe a popular principle of answering Questions giving straightforward and accurate information in the public interest?

(iv) Will the Official Member of each and every Department give complete and satisfactory Answers instead of asking for notice of Supplementary Questions put to them by the Non-official Members?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: I am in some difficulty about this Question. I have received no information yet from the Secretary of the Assembly if it has been admitted by the President. At the same time, it is included in the Agenda Paper, and I can only presume that it has not been disallowed. In the circumstances, I am not quite clear what my position is with regard to the Question, and I shall be glad if the President will be good enough to explain it to me.

The Honourable the President: The Question has not been disallowed, and though, as Members will see, it might be the subject of disallowance, I have not disallowed it on the ground, that I thought that it dealt with matter on which decisions had better be taken from the Chair in public rather than by disallowance sub silentio. I, therefore, propose to say something regarding Question No. 13 at the end of the question hour.

NEW DELHI (COST OF AND DISPOSAL OF BUILDINGS).

14. Mr. M. K. Reddi Garu: (a) What is the total amount spent on the construction of the part of Delhi where the present Viceregal Lodge and the present Secretariat offices are located?

(b) In how many years was this part of Delhi completed?

(c) What is the cost of the present Secretariat office buildings?

(d) By whom were they designed and constructed, i.e., whether by the Public Works Department or by any established private firm of Engineers?

(e) In how many months were they completed?

(f) Will the Government be pleased to state how these buildings in this part of Delhi are to be utilized when all the Government of India offices are removed to Raisina or the Imperial City?

Colonel Sir S. D'A. Crookshank : (a) I am afraid the Question is not sufficiently precise to enable me to answer it exactly. The initial expenditure incurred up to the end of the year 1912-13 in connection with the provision of temporary accommodation for the Government of India at Delhi, pending the construction of the New Capital, was Rs. 54.33 lakhs. Since then, and up to 1920-21 inclusive, the total expenditure on Civil Works in the Delhi Province, excluding the Viceregal Estates on which a total of Rs. 14.83 lakhs has been spent since 1911, is approximately Rs. 153 lakhs which, however, includes the cost of maintenance and repairs and any additional works undertaken during that period.

(c) The total cost of the temporary buildings now used as the Secretariat was about Rs. 14,75,000.

(e) The original portion which contained less than half the present accommodation cost about Rs. 7,74,000 and took seven months to construct.

(f) No final decision has been arrived at yet, but it has been suggested that after making such portions of the buildings, as it is worth while, suitable for occupation throughout the year, the Postal Audit Staff, which numbers 500 and is now located in rented premises, should be accommodated in the buildings. It is also contemplated that the District and Sessions Court, now in a residential bungalow, and other local offices now housed in temporary structures should also be accommodated on the premises. Those portions of the buildings which are worth making suitable for use in the hot weather would be fully required in this manner and, one way and another, all portions will be utilized.

NEW DELHI (METHOD OF CONSTRUCTION).

15. Mr. M. K. Reddi Garu : (a) How is the construction of New Delhi carried on at present, i.e., is the construction carried on by the Government departmentally or by any private firm of contractors?

(b) If it is done by any private firm of contractors, are the works given to them by open tender or by any other procedure?

(c) How many contractors are there at present working at Raisina?

(d) If the construction were carried out by the Government itself departmentally, what would be the saving effected in the estimate, and if not, what would be the excess charged over the estimate?

(e) Is it not a fact, that the carrying on of works departmentally by the Public Works Department generally ends in excess over the estimate?

(f) Has this not been generally the rule even in the pre-war days?

Colonel Sir S. D'A. Crookshank : (a) The construction is almost entirely carried out by contractors under the supervision of the Public Works Department. The only exception in the case of a large work was in respect to the Members' hostels at Raisina which were started departmentally and completed by contract when a suitable contractor was found to take up the work. Some petty works have also been carried out departmentally, but this method of executing work is not favoured and has seldom been adopted.

(b) It is the universal practice to call for open tenders for a work of any magnitude and the very few exceptions where this method has not been followed have been due to special circumstances which had arisen.

(c) From the commencement up to the present time, 260 contractors' names have been recorded. By no means all have been successful tenderers. Ignoring petty contractors, there are about 30 contractors carrying out works. The number varies from time to time.

(d) Owing to the ever changing conditions, it is not possible to give any precise figures of cost by adopting different methods of execution of work, but past experience goes to show, that no savings would be effected on the estimates if Government were to carry out the work departmentally, and, on the contrary, it is more than possible that considerable excesses would be incurred on account of departmental agency. The Government of India are fully assured that the arrangements in force are economical and satisfactory.

(e) and (f). It is presumed, that by carrying out works departmentally, the Honourable Member means the direct employment of labour by the Public Works Department. This method is seldom used in most provinces, except where reliable contractors are not forthcoming or are unwilling to undertake the work. The execution of works by contractors, working under the supervision of the Public Works Department, is a method almost exclusively employed. It cannot be said that either system definitely leads or has led to excesses over estimates since an excess would be due to a number of causes, such, for example, as alterations or fluctuations, delayed grants and other adverse circumstances, but departmental agency is troublesome and expensive, and is, therefore, not favoured.

CONSTRUCTION PRACTICE IN ENGLAND.

16. Mr. M. K. Reddi Garu : (a) What is the practice in England, as regards the construction of Government buildings?

(b) Is it true, that the construction of Government buildings is invariably entrusted to some established Firm of Contractors who employ certified Engineers and other subordinate staff for supervision?

(c) Is it true, that as a result of this practice, the Government in England does not run such a large costly staff of officers as we do here?

Colonel Sir S. D'A. Crookshank : (a) The construction of Government buildings in England, i.e., those constructed for, and belonging to, the Crown, in contra-distinction to those carried out by, and belonging to, local authorities, is undertaken under the direction of His Majesty's Office of Works.

(b) Such Government buildings are generally provided, in accordance with plans prepared by the Office of Works, by contractors for a lump sum or in certain cases on a schedule of prices or both. In some cases, the works are carried out by direct administration, but this is usually when the work is a small one.

(c) The Office of Works itself employs a costly staff of architects, surveyors and experts who supervise the execution of the work as well as prepare the plans. Owing to the diversity of authorities who undertake works, which in India would be classed as Government works and executed by the Public Works Department, it is impossible to compare either the size or the cost of the staff employed in the two countries.

CONSTRUCTION AND SUPERVISION OF WORKS.

17. Mr. M. K. Reddi Garu : (a) Has there not been a move in India in the direction of placing all construction and supervision in the hands of established and recognised firms of Engineers, and thus of effecting retrenchment in the Public Works Department?

(b) Is it not true, that in connection with this scheme, it has been suggested, if possible, to remove the long chain of staff from the Executive Engineer downwards?

(c) If so, would not such a procedure effect a great saving in the construction of New Delhi?

Colonel Sir S. D'A. Crookshank : (a) The method of carrying out public works is mainly a matter for determination by Local Governments. In addressing Local Governments on the subject matter of the Public Works Department Re-organization Committee's Report, the Government of India concurred in the findings of this Committee for the further encouragement of private enterprise in respect to the construction of public works by established Engineering Firms, by a more extensive adoption of the system of lump sum contracts for complete works. The findings of the Committee, however, showed that the number of reliable contractors employing a qualified staff was extremely limited, and even when such contractors are available and willing to undertake work, it is by no means certain that savings would result, as higher rates than at present obtain would be demanded by firms to cover their own charges for establishment and tools and plant. The Committee did not contemplate any immediate retrenchment in the cost of the Public Works Department by the adoption of the proposal.

(b) One of the intentions of the Committee's recommendations was to relieve, as far as possible, the Government staff of certain executive duties in connection with the construction of buildings, but not of its essential duties of design and supervision for which, even under the methods proposed, it would be necessary to maintain a permanent staff of technical advisers and supervising engineers or surveyors corresponding to the executive officers of the Public Works Department—moreover, a large permanent staff of subordinates will always be required for the execution of small works, repairs and maintenance of roads and buildings which cannot satisfactorily be carried out by the methods contemplated.

(c) Far from any saving being effected in the construction of New Delhi by the adoption of the procedure suggested by the Honourable Member, even if it were possible of introduction, it is roughly computed, that the extra cost would have amounted to about 100 lakhs of rupees and the Government of India are satisfied that the most economical method of carrying out the work has been adopted.

STERLING LOAN.

18. Mr. E. L. Price : Will Government be pleased to state—

- (a) why the Secretary of State issued in April, 7½ millions sterling loan instead of the 5 millions proposed and approved in March in this Assembly;
- (b) whether the terms of that loan were fixed in consultation with the Government of India or without such consultation;
- (c) whether the Government of India approved the terms before the loan was announced;
- (d) whether the rapidity with which the loan was over-applied for does not seem to indicate that the terms were more generous to the investing public in London and more costly to the taxpayer of India than the necessities of the situation require?

The Honourable Mr. W. M. Hailey : (a) Under the powers given to the Legislative Assembly under the Government of India Act, expenditure from loan funds, like other expenditure, is (unless specially excepted) subject to the vote of the Assembly, but the actual raising of the capital resources required to meet the wants and means liabilities of the year is a matter for the discretion of the Executive Government. Having regard to the level of exchange prevailing at the time the loan was floated, it was considered desirable that as much as possible should be borrowed in sterling to meet the capital liabilities of the year falling due abroad for railway purposes, which amount to about £14 million in the current year.

(b) No. The circumstances in which the Government of India could not be consulted before hand about the terms of the loan is stated in the Finance Department letter No. 1529-F., dated 17th May 1921, to the Bombay Chamber of Commerce, a copy of which is laid on the table.

(c) This does not arise.

Letter to the Secretary, Bombay Chamber of Commerce, Bombay, No. 1592-F., dated the 17th May 1921.

I am directed to reply to your letter No. 926-159, dated the 5th May 1921, in which your Committee inquire whether the Government of India were consulted by the Secretary of State regarding the amount, date of issue and other details of the recent sterling loan. The answer to your Committee's question is in the negative. I am to enclose a copy of a letter, dated the 17th May, which has been addressed to the Indian Merchants' Chamber and Bureau, Bombay, in reply to a lengthy representation from that body regarding the sterling loan. Your Committee will obtain from that letter a general idea of the conditions which have existed recently in the London money market. Those conditions did not, on this occasion, admit of previous consultation with the Government of India, as the precise moment of issue and the final settlement of the terms had to be deferred until the exact moment arrived when conditions appeared to make flotation possible, and it would have been very undesirable to let that favourable moment pass by, as might have been the case if the matter were delayed in order to make a reference to India. It is, however, the intention of the Secretary of State to consult the Government of India, so far as is practicable, before taking any final decision in such a matter; but similar obstacles to effective consultation are always liable to recur.

STATEMENTS OF REVENUE AND EXPENDITURE.

19. Mr. E. L. Price: Do Government propose to consider the advisability of issuing monthly or quarterly statements of Revenue and Expenditure, such returns being made on a basis comparative with the Budget Estimates?

The Honourable Mr. W. M. Hailey: A Statement showing the civil revenue and expenditure as well as the receipts and disbursements of the Central Government in India during and up to the end of the month is published in the Gazette of India about the third week of the following month. The Statement shows the budget estimate of the current year and compares the monthly and progressive figures with the corresponding actuals of the previous year. A copy of the Statement last published is being sent to the Honourable Member; it probably contains most of the information which he has in mind.

DEBT OF HOME GOVERNMENT TO THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

21. Mr. E. L. Price: Will Government be pleased to state whether the sum of 122,000,000 dollars referred to in the House of Commons on 29th April 1921, is a debt due to the Government of the United States of America for which the Government of India is directly or indirectly responsible?

The Honourable Mr. W. M. Hailey: I lay on the table the full text of Commander Hilton-Young's reply, to which the Honourable Member refers. He will see therefrom that the debt is one owed to the United States by the Home Government, India having already paid the latter in sterling.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Thursday, 28th April 1921.

SILVER DOLLARS (PURCHASE).

Mr. Gwynne asked the Secretary of State for India whether, under the terms of the sale of $122,000,000 of silver by the United States Government, under the Pittman Act, the British Government have, in addition to paying interest on the value at 5 per cent. until repayment, to grant the Federal Banks an annual rupee credit not exceeding £7,000,000 at 48½ cents per rupee; whether the British or Indian Treasury is responsible for these repayments; and whether the loan was negotiated by Lord Reading, and if not, by whom?

Mr. Young: Payment for silver dollars, purchased from the United States Government by the British Government during the War for shipment to India, was made by the British Government out of the British Treasury Account in New York, the Indian Government repaying the British Treasury in sterling. To the extent of, approximately $122,000,000, the money required to effect the purchase was provided out of the proceeds of loans from the United States Government. Arrangements were made by the British Treasury in 1920 for repaying this sum of $122,000,000 in instalments, terminating in 1924, together with 5 per cent. interest as part of the arrangement for repayment, and, pending complete repayment, the United States Government has been given, by arrangement with the Indian Government, an option, to be exercised through the Federal Reserve Bank of New York, to purchase rupee credits at 48½ cents per rupee, to amounts not exceeding 7 crores a year. The dollars received in payment for such rupee credits would be applied to reduction of the outstanding balance of the $122,000,000. The British Treasury is responsible for the dollar payments and for repaying to the Indian Government the sterling equivalent of any dollars that may be received in payment for rupee credits.

Mr. E. L. Price: Can the Honourable Member say, why the name of India was introduced in this connection?

The Honourable Mr. W. M. Hailey: No, Sir, I have no information on that point.

EXPORT DUTIES ON HIDES AND SKINS.

22. Mr. E. L. Price: Will the Government be pleased to state, with reference to the Preferential Export Duties on Hides and Skins, and Notifications Nos. 3084 and 3086 of 16th April, 1921:

- whether it is realised that the amount of the export duties payable depends wholly on the schedule values declared by Government from time to time;
- whether Government will undertake not arbitrarily to increase the amounts payable by raising the schedules without notice?
- whether in the case of schedules being raised, Government will give shippers a period of grace for the shipment of outstanding contracts made and calculated on the basis of the then existing schedules?

Mr. C. A. Innes: (a) and (b). The answer is in the affirmative.

(c) It has been decided, that in future, the procedure that at present governs re-valuations for import duty will be followed in re-valuations of hides and skins. That is to say, the existing valuations will be re-examined by the Director-General of Commercial Intelligence in October each year and discussed with Customs authorities and Chambers of Commerce. The new valuations will be notified on the 1st of January and will hold good for twelve months from that date. This procedure will give practically the two months' notice asked for by the trade.

PAY OF THE LASCARS OF THE ORDNANCE DEPARTMENT.

23. Mr. Harchandrai Vishindas: (a) Has the attention of Government been directed to the inadequacy of the present pay of the Lascars of the Ordnance Department with reference to the present high prices of living, and the consequent discontent among them?

(b) Has the notice of Government been attracted to the fact that whilst in British services this class (falling within the category of storemen)

The Honourable Mr. W. M. Hailey: I understand that the salary of the Managing Governors has been fixed for the present at Rs. 8,000 per mensem free of income-tax, but that Sir Norcot Warren and Sir Robert Aitken have been given a personal allowance of Rs. 2,000, in addition. The Managing Governors are provided with a furnished house in Bombay and Calcutta, respectively, and are entitled to a house allowance of Rs. 1,000 per mensem when absent from the place in which they are given a house. I am not aware that they are drawing any other allowances.

INDIAN GOVERNORS OF THE IMPERIAL BANK OF INDIA.

Mr. M. K. Reddi Garu: Will the Government be pleased to state—

- (a) the object with which they have nominated Indians as Governors of the Imperial Bank;
- (b) whether it is not their duty to look after the welfare of the Indian Mercantile Community;
- (c) and if so, how far have they discharged their duties at present?

The Honourable Mr. W. M. Hailey: (a) and (b). Those Governors of the Imperial Bank who are nominated by the Governor General in Council may be either European or Indian. The object of having nominated Governors is in order that they may safeguard the interests of the general taxpayer as a whole, and not those of any particular section of the community; the Governor General in Council nominated those persons whom he thought most suitable to perform that duty.

- (c) Does not arise.

CHANGE OF PROVINCIAL CAPITAL.

29. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala: (a) With reference to the Reply* given on 28th March 1921, to my Question No. 630, will the Government state whether there is any precedent for the Provincial Government and Provincial Council to give up the Capital City to all intents and purposes without the approval of the Imperial Government?

(b) Have the Government of India any control over the Provincial Government if the Provincial Government want to change or abandon the Capital City of the Province to all intents and purposes?

(c) Will the Government kindly lay on the table the correspondence referred to in the Answer to my said Question No. 630 and the decision of the Government of India that though the Capital of the United Provinces should remain at Allahabad, the Local Government should reside in Lucknow for some portion of each year?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: (a) There is no precedent, so far as I am aware, for any change of the capital of a Province being made without a reference to the Government of India.

(b) The question has not yet definitely arisen. If it becomes necessary to decide it, the orders of the Governor General in Council will be taken under Devolution Rule 4.

(c) The correspondence dealt largely with questions not now in issue. So far as the present question is concerned, the point of the correspondence was sufficiently indicated in Mr. O'Donnell's Answer to which the Honourable Member refers. The correspondence is further confidential and I am unable to lay it on the table.

RAILWAY CONNECTION AT ETAH CITY.

30. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala: Are Jalesar Town and Etah City connected by rail? If not, do the Government propose to have them so connected by a State Railway or to encourage private enterprise for the purpose?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: Jalesar Town and Etah City are not connected by rail. The scheme for such a connection has not been so far considered except as a part of the Kasganj Agra Railway project, and until the financial prospects of the portion between Jalesar Town and Etah City have been separately examined, Government are not in a position to decide on the question of its construction.

JUDGESHIPS AND OTHER JUDICIAL APPOINTMENTS.

31. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala: Will the Government be pleased to lay on the table a Statement showing, Province by Province, the number of Indians and Europeans filling the following posts permanently or temporarily :

- (a) Chief Justices of High Courts, Chief Judges of Chief Courts and Judicial Commissioners;
- (b) High Court Judges and Judges of the other highest Courts in India other than Chief Justices and Chief Judges;
- (c) District Judges;
- (d) Registrars of High Courts, or other highest Courts in India?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: A Statement, compiled from the civil lists dated the 1st April 1921, is laid on the table; I would point out, that the information was all available in the civil lists and could have been readily compiled by the Honourable Member himself.

ARREARS OF WORK IN HIGH COURTS, ETC.

32. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala: (a) Will the Government be pleased to lay on the table a Statement showing the arrears of judicial work in the High Courts and other highest courts in India?

(b) Do the Government propose to employ additional Judges and staff to deal with the arrears?

(c) Do the Government propose to take early steps to equalize the number of Indians and Europeans holding the posts of (a) Chief Justices, Chief Judges, Judicial Commissioners, (b) Judges of the High Courts and other highest Courts, (c) District Judges, (d) Registrars of High Courts and other highest Courts?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: (a) A Statement, showing the number of the pending cases on the 1st January 1921 in the Calcutta High Court, is laid on the table. As regards the other High Courts, the Government of India are not primarily concerned, and information regarding them should be sought in the Legislative Council concerned.

(b) The Government of India have under consideration certain proposals for the appointment of additional Judges to deal with the arrears in the Calcutta and Punjab High Courts.

(c) The Governor General in Council is primarily concerned only with the appointment of acting and additional Judges of the Calcutta High Court, additional Judges of other High Courts, and Judges of the Chief Court of Lower Burma. For by far the greater number of the appointments referred to the policy as regards future appointments will be determined by Local Governments. It appears, however, from the Statement furnished in reply to Question No. 31 answered to-day that on the 1st April 1921 the number of Europeans actually on duty in high judicial appointments of the rank of District and Sessions Judge and above was as to the number of Indians as 154 : 106. The authorities responsible accordingly appear to be sufficiently determined to extend the employment of Indians in these posts.

Statement showing the number of the pending cases on the 1st January 1921 in the High Court, Calcutta, under certain heads.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar : May I draw your attention to the latter portion of the first Answer saying that information should be sought for from the Provincial Governments? That is a matter for the President, I thought.

The Honourable the President : If an Honourable Member points out that the Question refers to a matter which is not directly the concern of the Governor General in Council, it is the business of the President to rule it out of order. But, in this case, I understood from the Honourable the Home Member, that only one part, and that a comparatively small part, was not within the province of the Government of India and, therefore, the Government of India was called upon to answer the Question.

LANGUAGE EMPLOYED IN COURTS.

33. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala : (a) In how many High Courts and other highest Courts in India is court business transacted in the language of the people?

(b) How much money was spent throughout India in the various High Courts and other highest Courts in translation and printing during the last five years?

(c) What is the average duration of a first appeal in which papers are translated and printed in each Court?

(d) How many Chief Justices, Chief Judges, and other Judges of the highest courts in India in each Province are able to understand the language of the people?

(e) Is it not possible to constitute Benches in High Courts and other highest courts with at least one Indian in every court?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : (a) The Government of India believe that English is the court language of all the High Courts, the Lower Burma Chief Court and the Judicial Commissioners' Courts.

As regards parts (b) to (e) of the Question, the Government of India are only directly concerned with the Calcutta High Court, information in regard to which, so far as available, is given below.

(b) The exact figures for the years in question cannot be given without unreasonable expenditure and delay. The figures given below are based on averages and relate to all classes of Civil Suits in, and Appeals to, the Calcutta High Court during the last five years without reference to individual cases and must be regarded as approximate amounts.

The approximate amounts spent during the last five years on account of translation and printing are as follows :

	Appellate Side.		Original Side.
	Rs.		Rs.
Translation and Interpretation ...	2,44,000	...	2,15,000
Printing ...	3,92,000	...	1,88,000

No figures are available as regards criminal cases.

(c) The average duration (i.e., from filing until disposal) of First Appeals on the Appellate Side in 1920, was 656 days in the case of First Appeals from Decrees and 260 days in the case of First Appeals from Orders. As regards appeals from a Judge on the Original Side for the same period, the average duration was 174 days.

(d) Nine Judges of the Calcutta High Court are able to understand some of the languages of the people.

(e) The constitution of the various Benches in the Calcutta High Court is entirely within the discretion of the Honourable the Chief Justice, who has to take into consideration the state of the Lists and the requirements of the Court.

BOARDS OF REVENUE.

34. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala : (a) Do the Government propose to abolish the Boards of Revenue at an early date and transfer the executive functions of the Boards to Provincial Governments and its judicial functions to the High Courts or other highest civil courts?

(b) Will the Government be pleased to lay on the table the correspondence and opinions on the subject referred to in the Answer* given to my Question No. 629 on 28th March 1921, with further correspondence and the decision of the Government of India, if any?

* Vide Legislative Assembly Debates, Volume I, page 1653.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: (a) It is assumed that the Honourable Member refers to the Board of Revenue in the United Provinces.

The question of transferring the Board's executive functions is the subject of correspondence with the Secretary of State, and Government are not in a position to make a statement on the subject.

The question of transferring its judicial functions is not at the moment before the Government of India. It is understood that the Government of the United Provinces is consulting representative opinion in those provinces on the matter.

(b) The correspondence referred to in Mr. O'Donnell's Answer of the 28th March was the letter from the Government of the United Provinces recommending the transfer of the Board's executive functions. As the matter is under the consideration of the Secretary of State, it is not now possible to publish it or the despatch of the Government of India on the subject, or to state the decision of the Government of India.

The opinions on the transfer of the Board's judicial functions have not been received by the Government of India.

MILITARY TRAINING OF INDIANS.

35. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala: What practical steps have been taken in India for giving military training to Indian subjects as is given to Europeans in Self-governing countries as promised by the Government on 17th February 1921, in answer to my Question No. 125?

Sir Godfrey Fell: As the Honourable Member is aware, the object of the Indian Territorial Force Act, which was passed in September 1920, is to provide an organisation in which persons, other than European British subjects, can be enrolled and can undergo periodical military training. The draft rules framed under this Act were published for criticism in March last. They have now been revised in the light of the criticisms and suggestions received, and were published in the Gazette of India, dated the 5th August 1921. Notifications have been issued constituting the following units:

University Training Corps.

- 1st (Bombay) Battalion.
- 2nd (Calcutta) Battalion.
- 3rd (Allahabad) Battalion.
- 4th (Lahore) Company.
- 5th (Madras) Company.
- 6th (Burma) Battalion.

Indian Territorial Force Infantry.

One Territorial Battalion in each of the following provinces:—United Provinces, Madras, Bengal, Bombay and Burma and two Territorial Battalions in the Punjab.

The creation of this Force affords opportunities to Indians, other than those who wish to enlist in the regular army, to receive military training which will fit them to share in the military burden of the Empire and in particular, the defence of India.

GRAZING FEE IN CANTONMENTS.

36. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala: Will the Government please lay on the table a Statement showing:

- (i) (a) The grazing fee per cattle fixed by every Cantonment in the beginning, and
 - (b) In what year in each Cantonment was it first imposed?
 - (c) What was the number of cattle then in every Cantonment?
 - (d) What was the area of land in acres, reserved for grazing purposes in each Cantonment then?
 - (e) How much total fees were then realised?
 - (f) What was the civil population of every Cantonment in the year the fee was first imposed?
- (ii) (a) How much total fees are realised now in each Cantonment?
 - (b) What is the area of land in acres reserved for grazing now in every Cantonment?
 - (c) What is the number of cattle now in every Cantonment?
 - (d) What is the civil population of every Cantonment now?
 - (e) Is the grazing fee per cattle the same as originally fixed or has it been lowered or enhanced in different Cantonments since its introduction?

Sir Godfrey Fell: Sir, I find myself in the same difficulty with regard to this Question as the Honourable Home Member found with regard to Question No. 13. I have received no intimation yet from the Secretary of the Assembly that this Question has been admitted by the President. At the same time, it is included in the Question Paper, and I can only presume that it has not been disallowed. I should be glad if you, Sir, could afford me some guidance as to what I should do.

The Honourable the President: The Question has not been disallowed. I will deal with the matter at the end of the question hour.

TRANSPORT CHARGES OF SALT.

37. Mr. M. K. Reddi Garu: Will the Government be pleased to lay on the table the correspondence (if any) between the Government of India and the Board of Revenue, Madras, on the question of reducing the transport charges of salt from one part of the country to another?

Mr. A. C. Chatterjee: There has been no correspondence between the Government of India and the Board of Revenue, Madras, on the question of reducing the transport charges of salt from one part of the country to another. In November 1919, the Government of Madras raised the question of a reduction of the railway freight of salt with a view to facilitate the transport of salt from Madras to Calcutta. In view of the large difference that then existed between the prices of Madras salt and foreign imported salt, the Madras Government agreed to drop the question until a more opportune moment.

PRODUCTION AND ISSUE OF SALT.

38. Mr. M. K. Reddi Garu: Will the Government be pleased to state the declared object of the Government, when they started (i) the Monopoly System of producing salt along with the Excise System of manufacture, and (ii) the credit system of issuing salt from the factories to the traders?

Mr. A. C. Chatterjee : (i) The excise system of manufacturing salt in Madras was introduced as a result of the findings of the Madras Salt Commission of 1876. In 1888, the manufacture of salt was controlled by a combination of capitalists with the result that the price of salt was forced up. It was accordingly decided to establish factories for the direct manufacture of salt by Government along with the excise system of manufacture in order that prices might be controlled.

(ii) The object of issuing salt from factories to traders on a credit system is to facilitate the distribution of salt and reduce the price to the consumer owing to the fact that the trader can turn over his capital several times within the period of credit. The Honourable Member is referred to paragraph 112 of the Madras Salt Manual.

CONSUMPTION AND PRICE OF SALT.

39. Mr. M. K. Reddi Garu : Will the Government kindly state, if the statement 'that the consumption of salt varies inversely with the price of salt' is true to experience and facts?

Mr. A. C. Chatterjee : A Statement is laid on the table showing the consumption of salt and the average price for the years 1914 to 1920 in the main consuming areas in India. It would be apparent from the figures that during these years the consumption did not vary inversely with the price. On the other hand, the price in Northern India rose from Rs. 2.05 per maund in 1914-15 to Rs. 3.43 per maund in 1918-19, but the consumption rose, though very slightly. Similarly, in the other principal areas also, the price rose between those years, but the consumption also increased.

EMPLOYMENT OF MR. SASTRI ON COMMITTEES.

40. Mr. M. K. Reddi Garu : Will the Government be pleased to lay on the table a Statement showing :

- the names of the different Committees appointed by the Government or the Secretary of State to which the Right Honourable Mr. V. S. Srinivasa Sastri was nominated during the last four years, and
- the total amount of allowances, if any, drawn by the Honourable Member for his services in each one of those Committees and as a representative in the late Imperial Legislative Council and in the Council of State from the time he was sworn in as a Member of the late Legislative Council up-to-date?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : I lay on the table a Statement giving such information as is available. It is not possible, for reasons which are explained in the Statement, to give a definite reply to part (ii) of the Question. The Statement includes a reference to Mr. Sastri's emoluments as a member of the Central Advisory Education Board and as a representative of India at the meeting of the Imperial Cabinet this year, though these items do not, strictly speaking, refer to Committees.

Statement.

A. Franchise Committee.—The allowances drawn by Mr. Sastri for the period of his employment (7th November 1918 to 22nd February 1919) aggregated Rs. 5,747-7-2, viz., honoraria at the rate of Rs. 1,500 a month and travelling allowance amounting to Rs. 368-14-0.

B. Indian Railway Committee.—The terms of Mr. Sastri's employment were :

(a) In India, an honorarium of Rs. 50 a day ; for railway journeys, a first class compartment plus one first class fare, or travelling allowance under ordinary rules ; and daily allowance of Rs. 10 for days of halt only.

(b) In England, an honorarium of £100 a month and subsistence allowance at the rate of £100 a month from the date of departure for England until return ; free first class passage to England and back. The subsistence allowance is not payable for the period during which he was, as a Member of the Imperial Cabinet, a guest of His Majesty's Government.

The total allowances drawn by Mr. Sastri as a Member of this Committee cannot be calculated as the date of dissolution of the Committee is not known.

C. Central Advisory Education Board (which meets once in three months).—The tenure of Mr. Sastri's office on this Board is three years. He attended the first meetings held on the 17th and 18th February 1921, but has not yet applied for the remuneration due to him, viz., daily allowance of Rs. 10 for two days and travelling allowance at double first class rates.

D. Imperial Cabinet meeting held in London during the current year.—The terms are :

- Outfit allowance of Rs. 2,000,
- Actual travelling expenses by rail and steamer.

- (iii) An honorarium at the rate of Rs. 2,000 a month from the date (on or about the 5th April 1921) on which he took up his duties at Delhi to the day preceding his embarkation at Bombay.
- (iv) An allowance of £100 a month outside India. This allowance will not be admissible for the period during which he receives the same allowance as a Member of the Railway Committee.

No information is available at present as to the total amount drawn by Mr. Sastri up to date on this account.

2. As a Member of the late Imperial Legislative Council since 1917, and of the Council of State, Mr. Sastri received Rs. 10,288-9-0 in all, representing daily and travelling allowances. This figure does not include his emoluments as a Member of the Imperial Legislative Council in 1916 as the bills for that year have been destroyed.

SELECTION OF DEWAN BAHADUR M. RAMACHANDRA RAO TO THE STUDENTS' ADVISORY COMMITTEE.

41. Mr. M. K. Reddi Garu: (a) Will the Government be pleased to state what were the qualifications which led to the selection of Dewan Bahadur M. Ramachandra Rao to the Students' Advisory Committee in England?

(b) Are the Government aware that Mr. Rao has never studied at any of the English Universities nor served in the Local Students' Advisory Committee?

(c) Will the Government be pleased to state whether they were guided by any principle in rejecting the names of such well-known Non-Brahmin Educationists with experience of Western Universities as Professor Raman Menon, M.A. (Cantab.), Professor Paul Appalaswami, M.A., LL.B., Bar-at-Law (Cantab.), Professor C. R. Reddy, M.A. (Cantab.) and Dr. K. Pandalai, M.A., LL.D., (Bar-at-Law), and Professor Madhava Nair, M.A., Bar-at-Law, every one of whom has been associated with the Local Students' Advisory Committee for years?

Mr. H. Sharp: (a) Certain names of possible Members of the Committee including one name suggested by the Secretary of State for India, were placed before the Government of Madras, who replied that Dewan Bahadur M. Ramachandra Rao Pantulu Garu, who was one of those mentioned, was willing to serve on the Committee.

(b) The Government of India have not inquired whether Mr. Rao has studied at an English University or served on the Local Students' Advisory Committee, as they do not consider such qualifications indispensable in the case of a Member of Lord Lytton's Committee.

(c) The Government of India, in suggesting names to the Government of Madras, were in no way actuated by any considerations of race or caste. Their selection of certain persons for mention was actuated solely by the consideration whether they would form useful Members of this Committee.

Mr. M. K. Reddi Garu: Who would take up the duties of a member of the Students' Committee?

Mr. H. Sharp: I must have notice of that question.

PAY OF PERMANENT AND TEMPORARY LIEUTENANTS AND CAPTAINS IN THE INDIAN MEDICAL SERVICE.

42. Mr. S. C. Shahani: (a) Is it a fact that permanent Lieutenants and Captains of the Indian Medical Service draw pay at the following rates from 1st January 1920:

				Rs.
Lieutenant	...	...	...	650 per mensem.
				800 per mensem for 3 years.
				950 per mensem for 3 years.
Captain	...	...	...	1,050 per mensem for 3 years?

(b) Is it a fact that temporary officers of the Indian Medical Service who were recruited under the Military Service Acts of the United Kingdom receive pay at the rates admissible to permanent officers of the Indian Medical Service, if promoted to higher rank than that of Lieutenant together with gratuity under the terms applicable to officers of the Indian Army Reserve of Officers?

(c) Is it a fact that temporary officers of the Indian Medical Service other than those referred to in part (b) receive pay as under:

				Rs.
General Service officers	...	...	...	550 per mensem.
Local Service officers	...	...	...	450 per mensem?

(d) If the answers to parts (a), (b) and (c) are in the affirmative, will Government be pleased to state why this distinction is made between permanent officers of the Indian Medical Service and temporary officers of the Indian Medical Service referred to in part (b) on the one hand and the temporary Indian Medical Service officers referred to in part (c) on the other?

Sir Godfrey Fell: (a) Yes, but these rates are inclusive of overseas allowance, as shown below:

	Pay.	Overseas allowance.	Total.
	Rs.	Rs.	Rs.
Lieutenant	500	150	650
	650	150	800
Captain	750	200	950

(c) These were the rates in force until the 1st September 1921, but those who were engaged for general service were also given a gratuity of £60 per annum or Rs. 75 per mensem on completion of each term of 12 months' service or portion thereof.

(d) As it was found impossible to obtain in England candidates for permanent commissions in the Indian Medical Service and as officers were urgently needed to meet military requirements, temporary officers of the class referred to in part (b) of this Question, were engaged by the Right Honourable the Secretary of State for India on such terms as the circumstances required. Only two officers were engaged in this manner, and both were Indians. No difficulty, however, was experienced in securing officers in India on the terms offered by the Government of India, as many of these officers were newly qualified graduates or civil assistant surgeons in receipt of lower rates of pay than those they afterwards received in service. The terms offered were, therefore, considered adequate.

PAY OF TEMPORARY OFFICERS OF THE ROYAL ARMY MEDICAL CORPS.

43. Mr. S. C. Shahani: (a) Is it a fact that temporary officers of the Royal Army Medical Corps serving under the Government of India receive pay as under:

	Rs.
Lieutenants	650 per mensem.
Captains	750 per mensem.
Captains re-engaging for one year	800 per mensem ?

(b) Is it a fact that temporary officers of the Indian Medical Service start with Rs. 450 or 550 per mensem (as the case may be) and receive no increment whatever afterwards though some of them have seven years' service to their credit?

(c) If the answers to parts (a) and (b) be in the affirmative, will Government be pleased to state why this distinction is made between temporary Royal Army Medical Corps and temporary Indian Medical Service officers?

Sir Godfrey Fell: (a) The terms applicable are correctly stated in the Question, but there are no temporary officers of the Royal Army Medical Corps now serving in India.

(b) Yes. These were the conditions in force until the 1st September 1921.

(c) Temporary officers of the Royal Army Medical Corps were originally engaged on sterling rates of pay. Owing to the fall in the value of sterling currency, their incomes declined considerably and they were unwilling to renew their contracts. As the retention of their services was essential in order to meet requirements on the North-West Frontier in 1919, revised rates of pay were sanctioned. No army-of-occupation bonus or gratuity was admissible in addition to those rates of pay.

ALLOWANCES IN STATION HOSPITALS.

44. Mr. S. C. Shahani: Is it a fact that command and second-in-command allowances of Station Hospitals are admissible to permanent officers of the Indian Medical Service and temporary officers of the Indian Medical Service recruited under Military Service Acts of the United Kingdom and all Royal Army Medical Corps officers, whether permanent or temporary, but are not admissible to the ordinary temporary Indian Medical Service officers? If so, why?

Sir Godfrey Fell: Command and second-in-command allowances for Indian Station Hospitals are admissible to permanent officers of the Indian Medical Service. Permanent officers of the Royal Army Medical Corps when appointed to command, or to act as second-in-command, of Indian station hospitals, receive the charge or second-in-command allowances authorised for permanent officers of the Indian Medical Service.

Temporary officers of the Royal Army Medical Corps were, in similar circumstances, allowed the charge or second-in-command allowance admissible to a permanent Lieutenant of the Indian Medical Service, or 24 shillings a day, whichever was greater.

Temporary officers of the Indian Medical Service have hitherto been ineligible for charge or second-in-command allowance, as they were engaged, from the beginning, on contract rates of pay, on terms which were considered suitable, irrespective of the duties on which they were employed. The grant of these allowances has since been sanctioned.

EMOLUMENTS OF OFFICERS OF THE INDIAN MEDICAL SERVICE.

45. Mr. S. C. Shahani: Is it a fact that as far back as August 1920, while announcing increased rates of pay for permanent officers of the Indian Medical Service, Government notified that special orders regarding the emoluments of officers of the Indian Medical Service holding temporary commissions would be issued separately and that nothing has been done up to now? If so, when do Government propose to issue such orders?

Sir Godfrey Fell: The scale of pay for temporary officers of the Indian Medical Service has recently been revised. A press communiqué has been issued on the subject.

CIVIL SUB-ASSISTANT SURGEONS IN THE MILITARY DEPARTMENT.

46. Mr. S. C. Shahani: (a) Is it a fact that the service in the Military Department of Civil Sub-Assistant Surgeons who volunteered for general service is being counted as double for purposes of pension, promotion and increment of pay?

(b) Is it a fact that the temporary service of temporary Indian Medical Service officers counts towards pension and promotion in the permanent cadre when they are given permanent commissions either by examination or selection?

(c) If answers to parts (a) and (b) are in the affirmative, will Government be pleased to state whether it is intended to count the military service put in as temporary Indian Medical Service officers by temporary Civil Assistant Surgeons towards increment of pay and also promotion and pension on confirmation in their own cadre? If not, will Government be pleased to state why this distinction is being made in the case of this particular class of medical men who volunteered for military service?

Sir Godfrey Fell: (a) Every year of approved service in military employment rendered by civil sub-assistant surgeons who undertook liability for general service counts as two for the purpose of grade promotion, but not for pension.

(c) This is a matter for Provincial Governments.

CHIEF JUSTICES AND JUDGES OF HIGH COURTS.

47. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala : (a) How many Chief Justices or Judges for the High Courts (or other high officers) in India have been appointed within the last 20 years in England who were not at the time of their appointment acquainted and familiar with the language, laws and customs of Indians ?

(b) Did such persons receive any training in Indian languages, laws and customs before taking charge of their duties ?

(c) Are any of them still in India ? If so, who are they and have they by this time removed all their deficiencies in this respect fully ?

(d) Will Government state the total expenditure of translation and printing throughout India including the pay of translators in Judge's Courts, High Courts and other courts and offices giving such details as are possible ?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : (a) Under Section 101, sub-section (2) of the Government of India Act all permanent Chief Justices and Puisne Judges of High Courts in India are appointed in England, as they are appointed by His Majesty. It is presumed, therefore, that the Honourable Member is referring to the appointment of Chief Justices and Judges of High Courts who were not resident in India at the time of their appointment. So far as the Calcutta High Court is concerned, the number of such Chief Justices and Judges who have been appointed since the 1st January 1901 is 7. Government has no information as to the extent of the acquaintance of these officers, when appointed, with the languages, laws and customs of India.

For information regarding other High Courts, the Honourable Member should approach the Local Governments concerned.

(c) Of the officers referred to in the answer to clause (a), the following are still in service in India :

- (1) Sanderson, C. J.
- (2) Greaves, J.
- (3) Rankin, J.

(d) If the Honourable Member will indicate the period for which the information asked for is required, Government will obtain the necessary statistics so far as the Calcutta High Court is concerned from the High Court, if available. As regards the other Courts referred to, the Honourable Member should address the Local Governments concerned.

DUTIES, EMOLUMENTS AND PERSONNEL OF THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA AND PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENTS.

48. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala : (a) Will the Government be pleased to lay on the table a comparative Statement showing the personnel, duties and the emoluments of the Government of India and the Provincial Governments with details of departments including Secretaries, Under-Secretaries, etc., before 1918 and at present, showing clearly any increase or decrease as the case may be in the personnel, duties and emoluments with brief reasons for such variations ?

(b) How far have reductions been made on account of the appointment of Ministers and entrusting them with the transferred subjects and also on account of the creation of Executive Councils where none existed before ?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : The information has been obtained and will be supplied to the Honourable Member in the course of the present Session. The Statement will be a bulky one and has not yet been completely prepared. I can assure the Honourable Member, however, that he shall have it before the end of the current Session.

INDIA AND THE COVENANT OF THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

49. Mr. E. L. Price : Will Government be pleased to state :

- (a) to what extent India is limited in her right to make or accept a Declaration of War by the Covenant of the League of Nations ;
- (b) to what extent her methods of warfare are limited by the said Covenant, particularly as to the use of poison-gas ;
- (c) whether such limitations (a) and (b), if any, apply to India only in relation with a co-Member of the League of Nations, or generally ?

The Honourable Dr. T. B. Saprú : A Statement is laid on the table which gives the replies to the Honourable Member's Questions.

Statement.

(a) India is a part of the British Empire and regarding the whole Empire the right to declare war is vested in the Crown except in the limited circumstances referred to in Section 44 of the Government of India Act.

The Crown is bound by the following general principles of the Covenant of the League of Nations concerning the avoidance of war :

- (1) According to Article 11, any war or threat of war, whether immediately affecting any of the Members of the League or not, is a matter of concern to the whole League, and the League is to take any action that may be deemed wise and effectual to safeguard the peace of nations. It is also declared to be the friendly right of each Member of the League to bring to the attention of the Assembly or of the Council any circumstance whatever affecting international relations which threatens to disturb international peace or the good understanding between nations upon which peace depends.
- (2) According to Article 12, a Member of the League must submit any dispute likely to lead to a rupture either to arbitration or to inquiry by the Council and must in no case resort to war until three months after the award by the arbitrators or the report by the Council.
- (3) According to paragraph 4 of Article 13 and paragraph 6 of Article 15, a Member may not resort to war against such other Member as complies with the award of the arbitrators or with the unanimous recommendations of all Members of the Council other than those representing one or more parties to the dispute.

(4) If the Council does not come to a unanimous decision, it may, according to paragraph 4 of Article 15, by a majority vote, make and publish a report containing the statement of facts of the dispute and the recommendations which are deemed just and proper. Likewise, any Member represented on the Council may make public a statement of the facts of the dispute and of its conclusions according to paragraph 5 of Article 15. And, in this case of failure to arrive at a unanimous decision, the Members of the League reserve to themselves by paragraph 7 of Article 15 the right to take such action as they shall consider necessary for the maintenance of right and justice. The Council may in any case refer the dispute to the Assembly. If reference is thus made, all the provisions of Articles 12 and 15 relating to the action and powers of the Council shall apply to the action and powers of the Assembly, provided that a report made by the Assembly, if concurred in by the representatives of those Members of the League represented on the Council and of a majority of the other Members of the League, exclusive in each case of the representatives of the parties of dispute, shall have the same force as a report by the Council concurred in by all the members thereof other than the representatives of one or more of the parties to the dispute.

(5) By Article 16 penalties of an economic and commercial nature are provided in the event of any Member of the League resorting to war in disregard of its covenants.

(6) According to Article 17, in the event of a dispute between a Member of the League and a State which is not a Member of the League or between States not Members of the League, the State or States not Members of the League shall be invited to accept the obligations of Membership in the League for the purposes of such dispute. If such invitation is accepted, the provisions of Articles 12 to 16 inclusive shall be applied with such modifications as may be deemed necessary by the Council. If a State, so invited, shall refuse to accept the obligations of Membership in the League for the purposes of such dispute, and shall resort to war against a Member of the League, the provisions of Article 16 shall be applicable as against the State taking such action. If both parties to the dispute when so invited refuse to accept the obligations of Membership in the League for the purposes of such dispute, the Council may take such measures and make such recommendations as will prevent hostilities and will result in the settlement of the dispute.

(b) The Covenant gives no other power to the League of Nations to limit methods of warfare than that of advice. The firm establishment of the understandings of international law (i.e., existing international law) is referred to in the preamble as one of the subsidiary objects of the Covenant and both the Council (if unanimous) and the Assembly (if unanimous) may deal with any matter affecting this. The only Article bearing upon changes in International Law is 19 in which it is laid down that the Assembly may from time to time advise the reconsideration by Members of the League of treaties which have become inapplicable. But for this purpose also the Assembly must be unanimous and thus India which is represented on it can prevent the advice being given. The British Empire is already restricted in its methods of warfare by the Hague Conventions of 1899 and 1907 (Laws and Customs of War on Land) and the three Hague Declarations of 1899 and 1907. Article 22 of the Laws and Customs of War on land declares 'The right of belligerents to adopt means of injuring the enemy is not unlimited.' Article 23 says 'Besides the prohibitions provided by special conventions it is especially forbidden :—

(a) to employ poison or poisoned arms.

(e) to employ arms, projectiles or material of a nature to cause superfluous injury.'

Article 171 of the Treaty of Versailles binds the British Empire to the view that 'the use of asphyxiating, poisonous or other gases and all analogous liquids, materials or devices' is prohibited and the Council of the League of Nations has recognised by a unanimous Resolution that this prohibition is part of international law and has decided to propose to Government the consideration of the penalties to be imposed, if necessity arises, upon nations who take the first step in infringing in this respect the rules of humanity. The Council thus recognizes that the prohibitions only bind reciprocally.

(c) The Reply has been given in the replies to (a) and (b).

AFGHANISTAN AND THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

50. Mr. E. L. Price: Will Government be pleased to state whether any information is available to show that Afghanistan intends, or does not intend, to seek admission to the League of Nations?

The Honourable Dr. T. B. Sapru (on behalf of the Honourable Mr. Denys Bray): As far as the Government of India are aware, Afghanistan has no present intention of seeking admission to the League of Nations.

RS. 50 AND RS. 10 CURRENCY NOTES.

51. Dr. H. S. Gour: (a) Is the Government aware that there is no difference in the colour and design of the Rs. 50 and Rs. 10 currency notes and that one is apt to be mistaken for the other?

(b) Do the Government propose to alter the colour and design of either of the two notes so as to make the one clearly distinguishable from the other?

The Honourable Mr. W. M. Hailey: (a) Yes.

(b) As I informed the House last Session, it has been decided to improve the form of our currency notes. The new designs will ensure that currency notes of different denominations will be more easily distinguished from one another than at present. The new ten-rupee note will, I hope, be in circulation (early) next year.

ARTICLES IN THE 'PIONEER.'

52. Dr. H. S. Gour: (i) Has the attention of Government been drawn to a series of articles appearing in the Pioneer (the second one appearing in its issue dated 25th May 1921) under the heading 'The Reforms and Defence' in which the writer, a military correspondent, points out that the North-Western Frontier comprises a rectangular area between the Indus and the Durand line (i.e., the Afghan frontier) measuring only 100 x 350 miles of utterly desolate and unproductive hilly tract?

(ii) Is it a fact as therein pointed out that:

- (a) its civil administration costs over three times the revenue that it yields and perhaps more;
- (b) its military cost is enormous;
- (c) it engages the services of about 27 per cent. of the soldiers of the Indian Army;
- (d) its cost to date in active operations alone cannot be much below 100 crores and may exceed that figure;
- (e) its wastage in military casualties per annum exceeds that of any one of the large Commands, and may equal that of any two Commands?

(iii) What is its real military cost including pensions and non-effective charges?

(iv) What is the cost of tribal allowances paid, the pay of the militia, trading with friendlies and other secret service and political disbursements?

Sir Godfrey Fell: (i) Yes—The writer of the articles in question is, however, incorrect in thinking that the frontier which has to be protected comprises merely a rectangular area measuring 100 x 250 miles of desolate and unproductive hilly tract. From the point of view of defence, the North-West Frontier extends from Chitral in the north to the Persian border in the south, a distance of over 1,000 miles. Portions of British India lying along this border line are by no means unproductive.

(ii) (a). The civil administration does cost nearly three times the revenue.

(b) and (iii). The cost of that portion of the Army which is usually maintained on the whole of the North-West Frontier of India is approximately 10 crores a year. This cannot be said to be excessive, having regard to the length of the frontier which has to be safeguarded, and the fact that behind the border are many turbulent and predatory tribes, who make a practice of raiding the rich districts on our side of the border. The Honourable Member will doubtless bear in mind that the money is spent not only on the defence of the North-West Frontier Province but on the defence of India. Pensions and other non-effective charges in connection with this portion of the Army are estimated to amount to approximately 39 lakhs a year. The figure 10 crores just given excludes abnormal expenditure resulting from active operations such as are at present being conducted in Waziristan.

(c) It is contrary to the public interest to disclose what percentage of the Army in India is allocated to any particular duty.

(d) The answer is in the negative. The Honourable Member is referred to the Statement laid on the table in reply to Rai Bahadur J. N. Majumdar's Question No. 34 on the 15th February 1921.

(e) The Question is not understood. It would be useless to compare the wastage in military casualties per annum on the North-West Frontier with that in any one of the large Commands where peace conditions prevail. The number of casualties depends upon whether active operations are or are not being undertaken. If active operations are not in progress, there is no reason why the wastage should be any higher amongst the troops on the North-West Frontier than it is in other portions of India.

(iv) The cost of tribal allowances last year was Rs. 4,31,000; the pay of militias was rather less than 20 lakhs; other political disbursements, about 10 lakhs. It is not understood what is meant by the term 'trading with friendlies.' It is not in the public interest to disclose how much money is spent on secret service.

Sir Jamsetjee Jejeebhoy: Is it a fact that the writer of these articles is an officer who was compelled to retire from the service, and are his opinions on Frontier questions considered by Government to be those of an expert whose advice should be taken in preference to that of distinguished soldiers like His Excellency Lord Rawlinson, the Commander-in-Chief?

Sir Godfrey Fell: Government have no information as to the identity of the military correspondent who contributed these articles to the Pioneer. Government must leave it to Honourable Members after studying the articles in question, to form their own conclusions as to the importance to be attached to them and as to the mental capacity of the writer.

I think that the House will hardly consider it necessary for me to answer the last part of the Honourable Member's Question, as to the relative value which the Government of India place on the opinions of this anonymous correspondent and on those of His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief.

ARTICLE IN THE 'VAKIL.'

53. Mr. M. Faiyaz Khan: (a) Has the attention of the Government been drawn to the statement headed 'Adalat aliya ka aik faisla Lord Reading kay liay' published in the Vakil of Amritsar, dated 7th May 1921, page 4, column 2, in which it is stated that two European accused were sentenced to three years' imprisonment for having murdered an Indian at Camalpure?

(b) Will the Government be pleased to state:

- (i) the number of Europeans and Anglo-Indians hanged for murdering Indians in India during the last 150 years of the British Raj in India;
- (ii) the number of Europeans and Anglo-Indians imprisoned for murdering Indians in India during the last 150 years of the British Raj in India;
- (iii) the number of Indians hanged for murdering Europeans and Anglo-Indians in India during the last 150 years of the British Raj in India;
- (iv) the number of Indians imprisoned for murdering Europeans and Anglo-Indians in India during the last 150 years of the British Raj in India?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: (a) Government have seen the statement. It is obviously incorrect on the face of it, inasmuch as the minimum penalty prescribed by the Indian Penal Code for murder is transportation for life. Actually the men in question were convicted under Section 304, Indian Penal Code, of the offence of culpable homicide not amounting to murder.

(b) The figures asked for by the Honourable Member are not available, nor is there material from which to obtain them.

STATEMENT IN THE 'ZAMINDAR.'

54. Mr. M. Faiyaz Khan: (a) With reference to Question No. 680* put by Mr. Syed Nabi Hadi in the Legislative Assembly on March 28th, has the attention of the Government been drawn to the statement headed 'Wakai hails Najaf ki tasdiq' published in the Zamindar of 22nd May 1921, front page?

(b) Are the statements of Hujatul Islam Hazrat Aqaush Shariat Asphani published in paper mentioned above, correct, that for 40 days Najaf Ashraf was bombarded and shells and bullets were freely used in killing women and children and wrecking the mosques by the British troops?

The Honourable Dr. T. B. Sapru (on behalf of the Honourable Mr. Denys Bray): (a) Yes.

(b) No. The statements are utterly false. There has been no bombardment of Najaf-i-Ashraf.

STATEMENT IN THE 'FATEH OF DELHI.'

55. Mr. M. Faiyaz Khan: Has the attention of the Government been drawn to the statement headed 'Imtiyaz' published in the Fateh of Delhi, dated 12th May 1921, page 2, in which it is stated that an Indian ayah was convicted for having stolen Rs. 21 belonging to her European master and was sentenced to one year's rigorous imprisonment, while a European was convicted for having stolen Government currency notes of the value of Rs. 65 and was fined Rs. 250 and sentenced to one day's simple imprisonment?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: Government have seen the statement in the issue of the Fateh referred to by the Honourable Member. It purports to reproduce information called from the Bombay Chronicle and Government have also traced the reference in the latter paper. The statements made by the Honourable Member as to the punishments inflicted are incorrect. According to these newspaper reports, the ayah in question was sentenced to one month's rigorous imprisonment and not to one year's rigorous imprisonment as stated by the Honourable Member. The fine inflicted on the European also was Rs. 125 and not Rs. 250. The sentence on the Indian ayah was imposed by an Indian Magistrate and that on the European by a European Magistrate.

ISSUE OF LICENCES UNDER THE ARMS ACT.

56. Mr. M. Faiyaz Khan: (a) Will the Government be pleased to state if it is true that some District Magistrates refused to renew or issue licences under the present Arms Act to those people who confessed to be non-co-operationists?

* Vide Legislative Assembly Debates, Volume I, page 1675.

(b) If it is true, will the Government be pleased to state under what section of the Arms Act a District Magistrate has power to refuse to renew or issue a licence to such people?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: Government have no information regarding any such refusal.

UNLICENSED POSSESSION OF REVOLVER AND SWORD.

57. Mr. M. Faiyaz Khan: Will the Government be pleased to state if it is true that one H. J. Greenfield, an Anglo-Indian at Calcutta, charged with being in unlawful possession of a 5-chambered revolver and some cartridges without a licence was fined Rs. 20 and the revolver and cartridges were ordered to be confiscated (vide Statesman of 23rd January 1921, page 5, column 4, paragraph 5) and that one Bachittar Singh at Amritsar was charged with being in unlawful possession of a sword without a licence and was sentenced to six months' imprisonment (vide Independent of 19th May 1921, page 4, column 3, headed 'Bachittar Singh's Case')?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: Government have seen the newspaper reports referred to and have no reason to doubt their accuracy. They understand, however, that the circumstances of the two cases were entirely different.

STATEMENTS IN THE 'BANDAY MATARAM.'

58. Mr. M. Faiyaz Khan: (i) Will the Government be pleased to state if the following statements as contained in the news published in the Banday Mataram, dated the 19th May 1921, page 3, column 3, are true:

- (a) that an English Military Officer, a Major, along with his wife entered a railway compartment at midnight at Sialkot and expelled four respectable Indian passengers from the compartment who were already occupying their seats, one of the four Indian passengers being an Indian lady;
- (b) that three berths in the compartment were already reserved by those Indian passengers;
- (c) that the luggage belonging to those Indian passengers was thrown out of the compartment by the said officer;
- (d) that on protest by the Indian passengers the officer used abusive language;
- (e) that at Wazirabad railway station, three of the Indian passengers went and reported the matter to the Station Master, and the Anglo-Indian police sergeant, who instead of helping those Indian passengers only recorded their statements, and took the name of the said officer?

(ii) If the above statements are true, what punishment legally and departmentally does the Government contemplate to mete out to this English Military Officer?

Sir Godfrey Fell: (i) (a) The officer in question was charged before the District Magistrate of Sialkot with an offence under the Railway Act. From the record of the case, it appears that the officer intimidated four Indian passengers into leaving the compartment.

(c) and (d). No. The evidence shows that the luggage was handed out through the window of the carriage and that the officer did not use abusive language.

(e) The matter was reported to the Assistant Station Master at Wazirabad, who referred the complainants to a sergeant of the Railway Police. This officer took down their statements and, after ascertaining the name of the officer concerned, forwarded the complaint to his superior officer.

(ii) As the Honourable Member is probably aware, the District Magistrate, who tried the case, fined the officer Rs. 30. The officer has since been severely censured by His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief. He has been reverted to regimental employ; he has been debarred from holding any officiating appointment in his unit for 12 months, and his leave has been stopped for the same period except on medical certificate.

STATEMENT PUBLISHED IN THE 'INDEPENDENT.'

59. Mr. M. Faiyaz Khan: (i) Will the Government be pleased to state if the following statements as contained in a letter headed 'Significant Railway Incident' published in the Independent, dated 17th May 1921, page 2, column 2, are true that:

(a) An English Military Officer (Lieutenant) asked the railway guard in the train to shift two Indian passengers from the 1st class compartment where he was sitting, because he did not like to sit in a compartment where there are Indians;

(b) the said officer pushed one of the Indian passengers on to the platform when the train was just in motion;

(c) at the next stopping station, Raja-ki-mandi, the said officer drew out his revolver and threatened to shoot both those two Indian passengers if they did not vacate that compartment;

(d) both those Indian passengers went and reported to the guard and the station master, and when they came back along with the guard and the station master near their compartment they saw their luggage thrown on the platform by the said officer;

(e) in spite of protest and remonstrance, the officer remained obdurate and insolent as before and refused to give his name even?

(ii) What punishment have the Government proposed legally and departmentally to mete out to this officer?

Sir Godfrey Fell: (i) The incident in question has since formed the subject of a criminal case. The facts, as they appear in the District Magistrate's judgment, are as follows: A British officer who was travelling from Bombay to Delhi got down at Agra for dinner. On his return, he found two Indian passengers in his compartment. They had not 1st class tickets, but, with the permission of the guard of the train, had put their luggage into the 1st class compartment in which this officer was travelling. Just as the train was about to start, the officer protested to the guard, apparently with no effect. After a slight scuffle, all three got into the compartment. The officer asked the two Indian passengers if they had first class tickets and, on discovering that they had not, the officer requested them to leave the compartment at the next station. Though he took an unloaded revolver out of his portmanteau, he did not threaten to shoot them if they did not leave the compartment, nor did he point it at them. There is no allegation that the officer used insulting language to the two Indian gentlemen.

At the next station the Indian passengers alighted, and thinking that they had decided to leave the compartment, the officer had their luggage taken out and placed on the platform. The luggage was removed carefully and not thrown out.

(ii) The District Magistrate, who tried the case, fined the officer in question Rs. 400. In his opinion, the officer was not guilty of any actual violence. The Government of India do not propose to take any further action in the matter.

Mr. J. Chaudhuri: May I ask Questions (Nos. 60 and 61), Sir, on behalf of the Honourable Member who is not present?

The Honourable the President: Has the Honourable Member the authority of the other Honourable Member to ask it?

Mr. J. Chaudhuri: No express authority.

RAILWAY WAGONS MANUFACTURED IN INDIA.

60. Mr. K. C. Neogy: Will Government be pleased to state the number of Railway wagons manufactured in India, since 1919, in the different Railway workshops and by different private firms, and place on the table a copy of the usual terms of contract with private firms in this behalf?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: Railway workshops usually undertake the erection of wagons received by sea and repairs and alterations, but do not manufacture wagons. Orders have been placed since 1919 with private firms in India for 2,272 wagons and, as a special case, for the erection including alterations of 5,000 wagons received from America. Of these latter, about 30 per cent. have been delivered. Further orders may have been placed by lines not under Government control, but such orders, if any, would be of comparatively very small value.

The contract terms vary with conditions. A copy of the tender form with contract conditions and specifications used in connection with the Railway Board's call for tenders for this year is placed on the table.

PURCHASE OF AMERICAN RAILWAY WAGONS.

61. Mr. K. C. Neogy: (i) Is it a fact:

(a) that about 5,000 Railway wagons originally manufactured in America for the Russian Government, were purchased by the Secretary of State for India in 1919; and

(b) that since their delivery in India, these wagons have been entrusted to Messrs. Burn & Co., of Calcutta, for being fitted up and so altered as to suit the Indian gauge?

(ii) If the Answer to the preceding Question be in the affirmative, will Government make a detailed statement in regard to this transaction with particular reference to the following points:

(a) whether the Secretary of State gave any directions as to where and on what terms the wagons were to be fitted up;

- (b) the date on which the Railway Board was first apprised of the said purchase, and whether the Board made sufficient inquiries thereafter as to the capacity of the different Railway workshops for fitting up the wagons, and if so, what reports were received on such inquiries ;
- (c) the date on which the Railway Board first communicated with Messrs. Burn & Co. on the subject, and whether and when the Board made similar communications with any other private firm in India ;
- (d) the terms on which Messrs. Burn & Co. agreed to execute the work, and how these compare with the terms which may have been quoted by any other firm ;
- (e) the total payment to be made to Messrs. Burn & Co. as actual costs and profits, respectively ; and the probable total cost of carrying out the work, if it could be undertaken by the Railway workshops ;
- (f) whether Messrs. Burn & Co. include in the costs charged, the cost of installing additional machinery for carrying out the work ;
- (g) whether the original terms of contract have been varied in any way at any time ; and
- (h) what materials are supplied by the Railway authorities, and what fittings, etc., are supplied by Messrs. Burn & Co. ?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn : (i) (a). 5,000 wagons manufactured in America were ordered by the Secretary of State in 1918 before the Armistice, and

(b) their erection including certain alterations necessary to fit them for the traffic for which they are required has been entrusted to Messrs. Burn and Company. They were altered to the 5' 6" gauge in America.

(ii) (a). The Secretary of State gave no directions as to where or on what terms the wagons were to be fitted up.

(b) The Railway Board was advised of the purchase in November 1918 ; they considered the possibility of erecting these wagons in railway workshops, but the heavy arrears in wagon repair work and the deficiency in repair facilities made it impossible for this work to be undertaken in the railway workshops.

(c) After receiving details of the wagons, the Railway Board in September 1919 referred the matter of the distribution of the wagons, alterations necessary and agency of the work of erection and alteration, to a committee of the leading Railway authorities in Calcutta and, on the recommendation of this Committee, entrusted the work of erection and alteration to Messrs. Burn and Company, the only firm that was considered capable of dealing with it adequately.

(d) The general terms of the Contract were that Messrs. Burn and Company should receive the actual cost plus 10 per cent. ; no other firm was in a position to undertake a work of such magnitude.

(e) The total payment to Messrs. Burn and Company is estimated at Rs. 100 lakhs including Rs. 9 lakhs as profit. As already stated, the work could not be undertaken in railway workshops ; but if it had been possible, the total cost would not have been less than the cost of construction by Messrs. Burn and Company ; to this would have to be added the overhead charges which would hardly have been less than the 10 per cent. allowed to Messrs. Burn and Company as profit.

(f) Messrs. Burn and Company are allowed only the actual cost plus the 10 per cent ; the cost of installing additional machinery would not be admitted.

(g) The terms of contract have not been altered.

(h) Government supplied the whole of the material covered by the order on America. Messrs. Burn and Company supplied any additional material required to effect the alterations required.

2. Tenders should quote separately for each type of wagon giving the price per completed unit delivered free on rail, and the place, time and rate of delivery.
3. Tenderers should specify in detail the materials they propose to import and, for the purpose of the variation of price clause, the price of each item and the total price for the imported materials converted into rupees at two shillings to the rupee.

CONDITIONS OF TENDERS.

1. The goods agreed to be supplied shall in all respects comply with the annexed Specification as regards materials used and workmanship.
2. In case of strikes, accidents, or other causes affecting production or delivery, the Contract may be suspended during their continuance, but such suspension shall not invalidate the completion of the Contract. Buyers and Sellers both to be entitled to the benefit of this clause.
3. The goods agreed to be supplied shall be inspected at Sellers' Works during manufacture by Inspecting Officers approved by the Buyers and before delivery thereof.
4. In case such goods are faulty on delivery through causes not discoverable on inspection, provided complaints be made in writing to Sellers within 5 days from receipt of goods they will at their option repair same at their expense or supply others of a like description, but no allowance will be made to Buyers for any work put upon them or for any consequential damages.
5. If between the date of tender and the date of receipt in India of the imported material the actual cost to the Seller of such imported material be increased in respect to a certified increase in the cost f. o. b., sea freight and rate of exchange above the prices quoted in the tender, the Seller shall be entitled on completion of the contract to claim an additional sum equal to the actual extra cost incurred by him, provided that,
 - (a) No such sum shall be paid in respect of any item of the contract delivered to the Buyer after the date fixed in the contract for delivery to the Buyer, or if no date has been named in the contract for delivery, unless the Seller shall prove to the satisfaction of the Buyer that the delay was due to causes not within the Sellers' control.
 - (b) That the amount claimed shall be in respect to the actual increase in cost incurred by the Seller on the Imported material only and shall not include any additional sum for profit.

If on the other hand a decrease should occur during the same period in the cost f. o. b. sea freight and rate of exchange below the prices fixed in the tender a corresponding reduction shall be made in the contract price but the amount allowed for profit in the accepted tender shall not be reduced in consequence thereof.

In any case, whether the contract price be varied or not, the Contractor's claims for payment must be supported by a certificate from a Chartered or Incorporated Accountant, to be named by the Contractor and approved by the Buyer, stating that the amount claimed is correct in accordance with the provision of this clause. The Contractor shall also, if required to do so, furnish in support of his claim any further information which the Buyer may require.

The word 'Contractors' refers to the person, firm or Company with whom the contract for the supply of the work, etc., may be placed. The word 'Sub-Contractor' denotes any person, firm, or company from whom the Contractors may obtain any materials or fittings to be used in the construction and manufacture of the wagons.

(c) The cost of all painting, marking and lettering, and delivery, must be included in the Contract price. The cost of all tests and analysis of materials of any kind must be borne by the Contractors, who must also bear costs of all Royalties and Rights.

When the drawings differ from this Specification, the specification is to be followed unless the Carriage and Wagon Superintendent shall otherwise direct.

(b) The wagons must conform strictly to the rules of the Government of India, as regards moving dimensions, weight, wheel-base, buffer height, and every other particular, and if they do not conform to these rules they will be liable to be rejected.

(c) The Contractors must make, free of any charge, any modifications which may be found necessary to attain this result, and these modifications must be approved by the Carriage and Wagon Superintendent.

(d) A diagram of the moving dimensions may be obtained by the Contractors on application to the Carriage and Wagon Superintendent.

ORDERING AND TESTING OF MATERIAL.

11. (a) The whole of the materials required for the construction of the wagons shall be of British or Indian manufacture, and must be subject to the approval of the Carriage and Wagon Superintendent or the Superintendent of Local Manufactures and must comply with British Standard requirements and to satisfy himself on this point the Carriage and Wagon Superintendent will submit samples cut from same to such chemical and mechanical tests as the British Standard Specifications require. If any sample fails to meet the required tests, the whole of the material represented by such sample will be rejected.

(b) Names of Makers to be submitted and approved.—Before any material is ordered from Britain, it is specially required that the names of the makers from whom it is proposed to obtain any kind of material, or any of the fittings for the work under the contracts shall be submitted to the Carriage and Wagon Superintendent and the Superintendent of Local Manufactures, and that the names shall be approved by them before the orders for such materials or fittings are arranged. After approval, two copies of all orders to Sub-Contractors are to be sent to the Carriage and Wagon Superintendent and the Superintendent of Local Manufactures. These are also required in the case of replacement orders.

(c) All orders to Sub-Contractors for steel plates which required to be flanged or worked locally are to be ordered of best 'flanging quality.'

(d) Should the Contractors proceed with any part of the work before receiving from the Carriage and Wagon Superintendent and the Superintendent of Local Manufactures the approval of the names of the makers, and the class and quality of the material proposed to be used for the execution of the Contract, and should the material be subsequently found, in the opinion of the Carriage and Wagon Superintendent or the Superintendent of Local Manufactures, to fall short of the tests or other requirements of this specification, or to have been obtained from other than the approved makers, the whole of the work thus manufactured will be rejected.

(e) The test of the materials will, as far as possible, be carried out at the works of the maker of the materials in order to facilitate the progress of the Contract, but notwithstanding that the Contractors shall have obtained the materials from makers approved by the Carriage and Wagon Superintendent and the Superintendent of Local Manufactures and that such materials shall have complied with the specified chemical and mechanical test to the satisfaction of the Carriage and Wagon Superintendent or the Superintendent of Local Manufactures, the Contractors' responsibility for their efficiency in every way shall remain the same as if the materials had been manufactured and tested by themselves, the intention of the contract being that all materials used shall be of the highest quality, and the Carriage and Wagon Superintendent or the Superintendent of Local Manufactures shall have power to adopt any means they may think advisable in order to satisfy themselves that the kinds of materials specified are actually used throughout the contract.

(f) The test of finished fittings, such as axle boxes, springs, buffers, etc., will be made and carried out at the works of the maker of such fittings by the Carriage and Wagon Superintendent or the Superintendent of Local Manufactures and only such finished fittings as have been approved by them must be used in the construction of the wagons.

(g) Should any of the materials or articles be found defective or fail to comply with the tests, analysis or other requirements of this specification, they will be rejected.

(h) The Contractors must provide, without extra charge, all tools and labour required by the Carriage and Wagon Superintendent or the Superintendent of Local Manufactures for the inspection and testing of all Tools and Labour to be provided, etc. the work under the Contract and they must make provision in their orders to their Sub-Contractors for the inspecting and testing of articles at their works when required by the Carriage and Wagon Superintendent or the Superintendent of Local Manufactures.

(i) The materials of which any part of the wagon is to be made are stated in the particular clause in the specification dealing with any such part, but for convenience of reference the main requirements are also here given below in tabular form.

NOTE.—Generally steel is to be used in the construction of details, unless Yorkshire iron selected scrap iron, or other materials, are specified for certain parts, but parts which require to be welded must only be made of steel with the express permission of the Carriage and Wagon Superintendent in writing, otherwise the parts which are to be welded must be of Yorkshire iron or other wrought iron as may be specified.

(l) The whole of the materials must comply, except where modified by this Additional requirements and specification, with the tests and other requirements of the British Standard specifications named above for the class of material concerned, and they must fulfil such further requirements as are stated in the specification.

(m) With regard to the analyses which the Contractors are liable to be called upon to supply under the terms of the several British Standard specifications abovenamed, together with other analyses which may be required by the Carriage and Wagon Superintendent or the Superintendent of Local Manufactures, of other materials or articles not covered by such specifications, it is to be understood that, should the Carriage and Wagon Superintendent or the Superintendent of Local Manufactures so decide, any or all of the analyses must be made by a metallurgist selected by themselves, and from these analyses there will be no appeal.

(n) In addition to the tensile and bending tests, etc., required by the British Standard specifications named above, for the materials to which they relate, the Carriage and Wagon Superintendent or the Superintendent of Local Manufactures will take mechanical tests from wrought and cast-iron articles, etc., and such other materials as are not provided for in the British Standard specifications, in such number as they may consider to fairly represent the lot of articles from which the test samples are taken.

(o) The Contractors or a representative nominated by the Contractors, must arrange with the Inspector, before the work is commenced, for the provision of such additional articles as may be required to enable a selection to be made by the Inspector from the bulk for testing purposes, or failing that for extra piece to be left on each forging and casting, if required, which will be broken off or cut off in the presence of the Inspector for testing purposes.

(p) Should any of the materials or articles be found to be defective or fail to comply with the tests, analyses, or other requirements of this specification, they will be rejected.

(q) No electric or oxy-acetylene welding is to be done on any of the work unless the part for which this process is proposed has been shewn to the Carriage and Wagon Superintendent and his permission for welding obtained in writing. The welding must only be done under his supervision.

(r) The Contractors will not be paid for any excess of weight due to the iron or steel having been rolled or forged thicker than specified or shown on the drawings, but should the weights supplied fall below an estimate made from the contract dimensions, the iron or steel will be accepted or rejected at the option of the Carriage and Wagon Superintendent.

(s) The Contractors are to be entirely responsible for the efficiency of the wagons in all respects, notwithstanding any approval which the Carriage and Wagon Superintendent or the Superintendent of Local Manufactures may have given of the detail drawings supplied to the Contractors, or of the manufacturers of the materials or parts employed by the Contractors, or of the tests carried out either by themselves or by the Contractors.

CONSTRUCTION AND MANUFACTURE OF THE VEHICLES.

Underframes.

12. (a) The whole of the plates, channels, angles, bars and rivets, bolts, pins, etc., used in the construction of the underframe are to be made of steel, in accordance with British Standard Specification No. 18, Report 24, 1911, except such parts as may require to be welded, which must be made of wrought iron. The wrought iron is to be made in accordance with British Standard Specification No. 51, bars to grade A, plates to grade C, and must comply with the tests given in that Specification.

(b) Steel forgings of all kinds must comply with British Standard Specification No. 8. For class, see table of materials, Clause 11 (j).
Steel Forgings.

(c) The steel castings are to be made in accordance with British Standard Specification No. 10, Report No. 24, 1911, and must comply with the tests and requirements of that Specification. In addition, the Superintendent of Local Manufactures has power to select castings at his discretion for destruction tests.
Steel Castings.

(d) All channel and angle bars must be made perfectly straight and square over the flanges by pressure, and not by hammering before being used for the underframes. The ends of all channel bars must be finished by machinery and not by punching or shearing, to the exact shape and dimensions shown on the drawings. The ends of all channel bars must be carefully fitted, care being taken to ensure that the web of the one bar fits against and into the flanges of the bar it meets. The plates forming the end frame covering-plates, all cover and gusset plates of all underframes must be perfectly flat and free from buckles.
Channel and Angle Bars, Girders and Plates.

(e) All holes in the pieces of iron and steel which form the underframes must be drilled, except those in the cover gusset and headstock plates of all underframes, which may be punched, provided that all the holes in each plate are punched simultaneously, or through a metal template clamped and fixed to the plate which contains all the holes required in the plate; if one or other of these systems of punching be not adopted, all holes must be drilled.
Punching and Drilling.

(f) The knees for connecting the channel bars, forming the underframe must be made out of steel angle bars but the edges of the angles must be neatly dressed off and the holes through them drilled. Great care must be taken that these knees are so fitted that the whole breadth of each side will bear against the parts which they connect.
Knees.

(g) All rivets must be made to the correct length before rivetting, so as not to require cutting afterwards, and the ends must be perfectly square. Every rivet must properly fill the holes, which must be perfectly fair with each other, and in no case must the diameter of the rivet under the head be more than $\frac{1}{32}$ inch smaller than the diameter of the hole it is intended to fill. Great care must be taken that the rivets are not overheated, that they are thoroughly cleaned, and that the edges of the plates are brought well together before the rivets are put in. Machine rivetting is to be employed wherever practicable, and care must be taken that the cup does not injure the plates. All rivets rivetted by hand must be made of the best Yorkshire iron. All rivets that are loose, having cracked or ill-shaped heads, or that are in any other way defective, must be cut out and replaced by sound rivets.
Rivets and Rivetting.

(h) Whitworth's standard gauges must be used in forging or finishing all bolt-heads and nuts and all bolts and nuts must be screwed to Whitworth's standard pitch, the bolts to a length of three diameters, unless otherwise shewn on the drawings. All heads of bolts and nuts must be hexagonal.
Bolts and Nuts.

- (i) All surfaces of adjoining parts must, while thoroughly dry and clean, and just before being finally put together for rivetting, receive one good coat of paint made of freshly ground pure red lead and pure raw linseed oil. All burrs must be removed before the parts are put together and the surface must be brought into close contact while still wet.

FITTINGS AND DETAILS FOR THE UNDERFRAME.

13. (a) The axle-guards must be of wrought iron, in accordance with British Standard Specification No. 51, Grade A. They must be of the strongest and most suitable design for their purpose, and are to be firmly secured to the underframe in an approved manner and fitted with bridles. Care must be taken that sufficient clearance is left both above and below the axle-boxes. The guards are fitted with a special Tee steel section check block made of B class steel in accordance with British Standard Specification No. 8, Report No. 24, 1911.

DRAW GEAR AND BUFFERS.

(For 5'-6" Gauge Wagons only.)

14. (a) The draw-bar hooks, spindles for draw springs, shackles, and side chains and hooks (if required) are to be made of nickel chrome or steel having an ultimate tensile strength of 65-75 tons per square inch, with an elongation of 15 per cent. on 2' and Yield Point 80 per cent.; the nuts and cotters, wearing angles, and trimmers, and knees, are to be made of mild steel, British Standard Specification C class; the hooks must be made to the dimensions shown on the drawings, and must be forged by drawing the steel down at one end, then bending round, so that the grain of the iron may be in the same direction as the curves of the hook; the other end of the draw hook must be drawn down square so as to form the shank. The draw hooks, side chain hooks, and eye-bolts are to be drop stamped and then properly annealed, special care must be taken that the forgings are not overheated before they are drop stamped. The holes in the side chain hooks for the chains, and in the draw hooks for the shackle pin, are to be drilled and not punched. The spindles of draw springs when they pass through the springs must be turned.

- (b) Each side chain complete with hooks, links, nuts and eye-bolts must be fixed as nearly as possible as if in actual practice, and the nuts screwed up to their proper place. After this has been done every side chain must be so arranged that a load of 20 tons may be applied throughout the chains, hooks, links and eye-bolts, and any part showing damage under this test will be rejected. Also one side chain in 100 must be tested to destruction, and must not break with less than a dead load of 12 tons; should any part of the side chain, hook or eye-bolts selected break with less than a dead load of 12 tons the whole of the work thus represented will be rejected.

- (c) The buffers are to be made of wrought iron or mild steel. The wrought iron for the washers is to be in accordance with British Standard Specification No. 51, grade A, and the steel for buffers is to be British Standard Specification No. 8, Report No. 24 of 1911, B class. The buffer heads must be forged solid on the rods, and not welded on to them. The buffer faces must be turned to a perfectly spherical surface, as shown on the drawings and the edges, and backs of the flanges on the plungers must be faced up true. The buffer head is to be secured to the buffer plunger by counter-sunk rivets as shown. The buffer rods must be drawn down under a steam hammer true to the form shown, and turned. The buffer plungers must be turned, and the inside of the plunger bored out if necessary, to ensure the plunger clearing the base of the springs when the buffer is driven right home. The buffer cases are to be bored out so as to be a proper sliding fit. The buffer washers must be dressed perfectly true to the form shown. The parts of the buffer rods which pass through the springs must be turned.

- (d) The screw, trunnion nuts, links, shackles, and pins of the screw couplings are to be made of nickel chrome steel, properly heat treated, having an ultimate tensile strength of 65-75 tons per square inch, with an elastic limit of 55 tons per square inch and an elongation of 15 per cent. on 2 inches; Yield Point 80 per cent. The weight lever rivets and washers for the couplings are to be of mild steel, having a tensile strength of 27 to 32 tons per square inch with an elongation of 28 to 32 per cent. The draw-bar shackles, the screw couplings, shackle weight lever for screw couplings, and screw coupling nuts, are to be forged out of the solid, and all holes in them must be drilled. The coupling nuts are to be turned and faced up at the ends, sufficient metal being left on the ends of the pins of the nuts for cold rivetting; the washers which are attached to the nuts are to be counter-sunk on the outer side. The lug on the screw for attaching the weight lever to the screw must be forged solid with the screw and not welded on. The bottom end of the lever must be flattened out or split, to prevent the cast-iron weight from working loose or dropping off. Great care is to be taken to cut the threads of screw couplings accurately to the dimensions given on the drawing and generally to finish them in the best and most accurate manner.

- (e) Each of the screw couplings must be fixed as nearly as possible as if in actual practice and screwed both in and out to the full length of the travel. After this has been done, every coupling must be so arranged that a load of 40 tons may be applied throughout the coupling, and any coupling, showing damage under this test will be rejected. In addition to the above one per cent. of the couplings are to be subjected to a direct pull through the shackles, and the couplings must show no sign of distortion with a load of 80 tons, the breaking load thus applied to be not less than 100 tons. Should the coupling selection for test fail to withstand the specified test, the entire batch represented by the test will be liable to rejection.

(For Metre Gauge Wagons only.)

14-A. (a) The hook and coupling buffers are to be made of cast steel as specified in Hook and Coupling Buffers and British Standard Specification No. 10, Report No. 24 of 1911. Hooks. The coupling hooks to be steel forgings made of D class steel. The hooks are to be forged out of the solid; the hooks must be made to the dimensions shown on the drawing, and must be forged by drawing the steel down at one end and then bending round, so that the grain may be in the same direction as the curves of the hook. The hooks are to be drop stamped and thus annealed, special care being taken that the forgings are not overheated before they are drop stamped.

The holes in the hooks, for the pin, are to be drilled and not punched.

(b) The hook—and coupling—buffer spindles are to be turned throughout their length. The buffers are to be machined perfectly flat on the face, and at right angles with the spindles.

(c) The coupling screw, connecting link, yoke and lever are to be forged from the solid of D class steel and must be made to the dimensions shown on the drawing and all holes in them must be drilled, and all the pins and joints must be an easy and good fit.

Great care must be taken to cut the threads of the screws accurately to the dimensions given on the drawing, and generally to finish them in the best and most accurate manner.

(d) The trunnion nuts, spindle nut, and all pins must be of D class steel, special care being taken to accurately machine the threads in the nuts.

(e) The sleeve washer, spring sleeve, outside and inside spring cups are to be made of cast steel according to British Standard Specification No. 10, Report No. 24 of 1911. They must be accurately machined where required to the dimensions shown on the drawing.

(f) Each buffer must be fixed as nearly as possible as in actual practice and the screw must be screwed both in and out to the full length of its travel. After this has been done, every buffer must be so arranged that a load of 15 tons may be applied throughout the buffers, and any buffer showing damage under this test will be rejected.

Axle-Boxes.

15. (a) The axle-box castings may be of either (a) malleable cast-iron, i.e., castings made from iron and rendered malleable by annealing in hæmatite ore or other similar process, or (b) cast steel, i.e., castings made direct from Siemens, Martin or Bessemer steel, or other approved process.

The malleable iron and steel castings are to be of the best quality and thoroughly well annealed. One box out of every 100 cast will be selected for testing in the following manner:—

The box selected will be placed on its side on a solid metal foundation, and a weight of 2 cwt. will be allowed to fall freely on it, at least twice, from a height of 12 feet, after which the box must be broken for the examination of the material, and the thickness of the metal. Should the box selected, fail under the drop test, or the material appear unduly reduced, the boxes represented by the tested sample will be rejected.

(b) The axle-box covers must be made of the same material as the boxes as approved by the Carriage and Wagon Superintendent.

(c) The gun metal bearings are to be lined with white metal. The gun metal is to be composed of 77 per cent. of copper, 8 per cent. of tin, and 15 per cent. of lead. It must be cast into ingots of about 80 lbs. weight, and re-melted before being run into the moulds. White metal for use as lining for the bearings is to be composed of 5.5 per cent. of copper, 81.5 per cent. of tin, 2.5 per cent. of lead, and 10.5 per cent. of antimony. The Superintendent of Local Manufactures or the Carriage and Wagon Superintendent will have one bearing out of each one thousand of the total number required under this contract tested by a metallurgist selected by themselves.

If the gun metal or white metal be found to differ from this Specification, or to show the presence of more than one per cent. in all other metals or impurities, the bearings will be rejected.

The slipper or slide must be of cast iron with two W. I. projections at one end for drawing it out, it must be perfectly flat and even so as to bed accurately between the top of the bearing and the box.

(d) The wooden dust shields must be lined with thoroughly good tanned leather, well cured and kept in place by the dust shield cover plate of mild steel. The shields and cover plates must be made to the dimensions shown on the drawing.

(e) The whole of the fitting is to be carried out in the best possible manner.

The spring seat and the top and side seats for the gun metal bearing must be carefully cleaned out and made perfectly flat and true. The axle-guard guides must be made accurately to the size shown, clean and smooth on back and sides, and must be at right angles to the spring seat. The axle-guard guides must be made as hard as possible to resist wear, and of the exact size shown on the drawing. Great care must be taken that the thickness of the metal in the working parts of the box is not reduced. The cover and face for the cover must be machined perfectly true. The holes in each cover and box must be drilled out of the solid, and through templates made to the satisfaction of the Carriage and Wagon Superintendent or the Superintendent of Local Manufactures, so that any part of one axle-box will fit accurately in any other axle-box.

(f) The bearings must be bored $\frac{1}{16}$ inch larger in diameter of the journal to which they are to be fitted, the bored surface being finished up bright. They must also be machined up true on top and sides and well fitted into the axle-boxes, so that when in place they have no shake, and are perfectly square with the spring seat and axle-guard guides.

(g) The contractors must arrange with their Sub-Contractors to provide an axle-journal to the size shown on the drawing, finished bright and fitted into a cast iron box frame of suitable construction, to gauge all parts of the axle-boxes and bearings as a whole. Other gauges suitable to test the work in detail are to be made of steel. These gauges are to be made in accordance with the drawings and must be approved by the Carriage and Wagon Superintendent or the Superintendent of Local Manufactures before the work is commenced. The whole of the gauges are to be the property of the Railway Company, and are to be in the custody of the Carriage and Wagon Superintendent or the Superintendent of Local Manufactures, during the execution of the contract.

All gauges or parts of gauges must be renewed at the Contractors' expense as often as the Carriage and Wagon Superintendent or the Superintendent of Local Manufactures may think necessary. Any of the axle-boxes which are not made to fit the gauges accurately will be rejected.

(h) One axle-box complete with gun metal bearing, slipper, dust shield and cover plate must be finished and fitted complete, and approved by the Carriage and Wagon Superintendent, before the remainder of the work is proceeded with. This axle-box will be kept as a sample, and the whole of the work must be fully equal to the approved sample in quality and finish. Should the Carriage and Wagon Superintendent wish to make any alterations in the sample submitted, these alterations must be made without extra charge.

(i) The initials of the Railway, the maker's name, the Contractors' name and the year of manufacture, are to be cast or stamped on every cover and cast on each bearing, also on each side or top of every axle-box, and in addition the size of the journals must be cast on the box and cast or stamped on the cover, and each box and bearing must be stamped by the Inspector with his stamp.

LAMINATED SPRINGS.

16. (a) The springs are to be made in accordance with the British Standard Specification No. 6 (with analysis), Report No. 24 of 1911, for laminated bearing springs and spring steel, subject to the following requirements:

Acid steel is to be used as specified, but with the written permission of the Carriage and Wagon Superintendent the steel may be made in a basic lined furnace, on condition that during the process no carbon except that in the ferro-manganese is added to the steel.

Sample of the spring steel will be selected from one top plate, and one of the other plates out of each kind of springs under the contract after tempering out of each batch of springs, if the batch be less than 800, or one sample piece in every 300 springs if there be more than that number. These samples will be subjected to a complete analysis by a metallurgist selected by the Carriage and Wagon Superintendent. Should the analysis prove unsatisfactory, the springs will be rejected.

The carrying power of the spring is to be equal to that given on the drawing.

The Superintendent of Local Manufactures shall have power to mark in some easily distinguishable manner every rejected spring, but not in such a manner as to render them unsaleable to other parties.

(b) The ends of the top plate must be bent round to the correct radius as shown on the drawing to engage with the shackle pin.

Every plate must be properly fitted, nibbed and tempered. The nibbing of the top plate is to be done while it is red hot. Great care must be taken that the nibs and the slots are exactly in the position shown on the drawings.

Each plate must be completely coated with red lead paint before being put into a spring.

Buckles are to be forged out of one piece of iron the full width of the buckle. The two ends are to be drawn down, lapped well over one another, and soundly welded at the top or bottom as the case may be. The angles of the buckles both inside and outside must be perfectly square and solid, and the whole buckle to gauge and square to the exact form and dimensions shown on the drawing. The underside of the seating must be dressed perfectly flat and true to the plans of the spring. The buckle must be tightly shrunk on to the plates, the plates being further secured in place by means of a washer plate and set screw.

The whole of the inside of the spring buckle must be slotted out exactly to gauge and the width of the steel used for the springs must be uniform and correspond exactly with this gauge. Great care must be taken to bed the plates thoroughly well together. The buckle must be made a dark red heat, and the plates pressed tightly home so as to ensure a thoroughly good tight fit.

(c) Every plate of each laminated spring must be legibly stamped with the initials of the Railway, the Contractors' name, the maker's name, and the year of manufacture. The top plate must be stamped on one eye at the extreme end, all other plates on the underside at one end.

HELICAL AND VOLUTE SPRINGS.

17. The springs are to be made in accordance with the British Standard Specification for Volute and Helical Springs, No. 7 (with analysis) Report No. 24, 1911, except as modified by the following additional requirements which are also to be observed:

(a) Acid steel is to be used as specified, but with the written permission of the Carriage and Wagon Superintendent or the Superintendent of Local Manufactures the steel may be made in a basic lined furnace, on condition that during the process no carbon except that in the ferro-manganese is added to the steel.

(b) The material required for analysis will be taken in the following manner:—

The Carriage and Wagon Superintendent or the Superintendent of Local Manufactures will take a sample piece of steel, after tempering, from each kind of springs under the contract. The sample piece will then be subjected to complete analysis by a metallurgist selected by the Carriage and Wagon Superintendent. Should this analysis prove unsatisfactory, the springs represented by the sample will be rejected.

The carrying power of the spring should be equal to that given on the drawing.

Each end of every spring must be ground exactly at right angles to the centre line of the spring, and the coils of all springs must be true and square with the base.

(c) Every spring must be legibly stamped when hot with the initial letters of the Railway, the Contractors' name, the maker's name, and the year of manufacture.

WAGON BODY IRON-WORK, ROOFING AND FITTINGS.

18. (a) The standard roof sheets weigh 2.5 lbs. per square foot. The roofing sheets to be curved accurately to the radius given in the list of parts or shown on the drawings. They are to be delivered with the adjoining edges of each sheet perfectly square to each other, and exactly true to the dimensions given. The end of each sheet must be perfectly square with the sides. It is to be in the power of the Carriage and Wagon Superintendent or the Superintendent of Local Manufactures to adopt such means as they may think necessary to test whether any of these sheets fall short of the requirements of this Specification.

(b) The sheets, bars and angles for the wagon bodies are to be made of steel, in accordance with British Standard Specification No. 18, Report No. 24, 1911, except such parts as may require to be welded, which should be made of wrought iron in accordance with British Standard Specification No. 51, grade A, and must comply with the tests given in that Specification.

(c) The side, end, shutter, door and floor sheets for the wagons may be punched, provided that all the holes in each plate are punched simultaneously, or through a metal template clamped and fixed to the sheet which contains all the holes required in the sheet. The bars and angles connected with the sheets, which are not part of the underframes and the door frames may be punched provided that the holes in each piece are punched simultaneously, or through a template as above described, or they may be punched in the usual manner, provided every piece is gauged, at the Contractors' expense, with the metal stud template made to the satisfaction of the Carriage and Wagon Superintendent and is correct when so gauged; if one or other of these systems of punching and gauging the holes in the sheets, bars and angles be not adopted, all holes must be drilled. Any sheet, bar or angle in which the holes are not accurately in their proper position will be rejected. The sheets must be rolled carefully to the weights and thickness given. The side, end, and door sheets must be carefully flattened by planishing under the hammer or stretched in a machine so as to be without buckle or wave. The edges of the floor plates may be sheared if the work is so done as to make a close joint when they are rivetted to the underframe.

(d) The door and door top frames are to be made as shown on the drawing; they are to be neatly welded up at the corner. All holes for rivets and bolts are to be made in the frames after they are welded up.

The hinges for the doors are to be carried across them, so as to be rivetted to the frames, as shown in the drawings. Great care must be taken to make a perfect fit between the door frames and the bars against which they are shut. The special sections of iron and steel must be supplied to the exact sections shown on the drawing.

(e) The door of the wagons, and the parts at the top of the doors are to be rivetted up and finished complete in every respect, and these, as well as every detail, must be tested by metal gauges at each stage of their manufacture, and be to the satisfaction of the Carriage and Wagon Superintendent.

(f) The edges of the side sheets at the doors of the wagon and the closing bar at the top of the doors are to be pressed to the form shown on the drawing so as to prevent water getting into the wagon through the doors. The edges of the door plates, and the centre cover strips are to be carefully pressed to the form and dimensions shown on the drawings. The bent edges of all plates are to be perfectly true and square with each other and with the body of the plate. Any plate showing cracks, laminations, or any other defects, will be rejected. All holes in the pressed plates are to be drilled in them after they are pressed. The plates and doors when finished must be perfectly flat and free from all buckle and wave.

(g) Door brackets, door stays, eye-bolts, door fastenings, bolts guides, pins for door fastenings, division hinges, staples, and hinge feet are to be forged out of the solid and all holes in them are to be drilled. The eyes of all iron hinges are to be forged out of the solid and welded on to the arms not less than 6 inches from the centre of the eye, and the eyes of the hinges and hinge feet must be faced on both sides in a machine. All holes of every kind in them are to be drilled, and the pins turned and when finished must be perfectly flat and free from all buckle and wave.

GENERAL.

19. (a) All parts where thought necessary by the Carriage and Wagon Superintendent or his Deputy are to be bored, turned, or planed, and finished up smooth and bright whether mentioned in this Specification or not, and all pieces of iron or steel not so bored, turned, or planed must be thoroughly cleaned and dressed up and finished off in the best style of wagon work. All nuts are to be hexagonal and must fit so tightly on their bolts that they cannot easily be turned by hand. Whitworth's standard gauges must be used in forging or finishing all bolt heads and nuts, all bolts and nuts must be screwed to his standard pitch, and the bolts to a length to three diameters. All rivetting is to be done in the best possible manner. All rivets that are rivetted up which are found to be loose, or have cracked heads, or to be in any other way defective, must be cut out and replaced by others. All workmanship and material must be of the very best of their respective kinds.

(b) A pattern of every article required under this Specification which will be made in India must be made and finished complete, and approved by the Carriage and Wagon Superintendent or his Deputy before any similar part of the rest of the work under this contract is proceeded with. Should an examination of any of these patterns lead the Carriage and Wagon Superintendent or his Deputy to order any alteration in the designs of any of the parts they are to be at liberty to do, without claim on the part of the Contractors for loss on any of the parts which they may have made prior to the approval to the patterns, or for any extra payment, except in regard to weight, at such prices as may be approved by the Carriage and Wagon Superintendent or his Deputy.

(c) The intention of this Contract is that every piece of steel or iron shall be manufactured with such accuracy that any piece may be used, without dressing of any kind, in the place for which it is designed in any of the vehicles. To ensure this, every piece must be made from a carefully prepared metal template or gauge, and all holes in it, except where specially mentioned to the contrary, must be drilled through the holes in the template, so that the corresponding parts in the different vehicles may, without doubt, be exact duplicates of each other. All templates and gauges must be provided by the Contractors at their own expense. The template must be steel bushed, of such material, made in such a manner and be renewed as often as the Superintendent of Local Manufactures or the Carriage and Wagon Superintendent shall desire. All dimensions for template and gauges to be taken from the upper side of channels, angles, etc.

(d) The various fittings will be checked and gauged by the Superintendent of Local Manufactures, the Carriage and Wagon Superintendent or his Deputy in such convenient places as may be arranged, and it is desired, that every facility shall be made for this purpose by laying out the pieces which go to make up a definite number of vehicles at one time, which number shall be agreed upon from time to time, during the Contract.

ERECTION.

20. (a) One wagon is to be erected, the underframe and body to be rivetted up complete. Pattern Wagons. The wagon is to be fitted with bearing spring, buffers, brake gear, etc., all steel and iron work complete and erected on its wheels and axles as a pattern and approved and passed by the Carriage and Wagon Superintendent or his Deputy before the rest of the work is proceeded with.

(b) The pattern wagon and pattern of every article having been approved, the remaining wagons are to be erected complete and delivered in perfect running order. The whole of the work must be equal in every respect to the approved patterns. Every detail must be tested by metal gauges at each stage of its manufacture. Care must be taken that the underframe templates are all worked off the top and ends of channel bars, and that the width and depth of the underframe sections are checked from time to time as received from the rolling mills, as inaccuracy of rolling may lead to difficulty in securing exact duplication.

(c) The pattern wagon after examination and inspection by the Superintendent of Local Manufactures, the Carriage and Wagon Superintendent or his Deputy shall be tested in the following manner :—

Loading Test.

After taking the deflection of bearing springs, the floor and buffer heights, the wagon will be gradually loaded with ballast or pig iron until the load of the wagon is..... tons per axle, and a record taken of the deflection of the springs, solebars and sides. For the latter purpose loaded wire shall be strung on pulleys and run the length of the underframe and side. The wagon shall then be unloaded and readings taken again and the result recorded by the Carriage and Wagon Superintendent.

INSPECTION.

21. (a) No article is to be painted before it has been inspected and approved by the Superintendent of Local Manufactures or the Carriage and Wagon Superintendent. Any article which is found to be in any way defective or which is not in accordance with the tests or other requirements of this Specification, will be rejected. The Contractors must provide, free of charge, all tools, labour, and gauges required by the Superintendent of Local Manufactures or Carriage and Wagon Superintendent for the inspection, and for such testing of the work as may be carried out on the Contractors' premises, or at their Sub-Contractors' works as stated in Clause 11 (A) of this Specification.

(b) It is to be clearly understood that a sample of every kind of fitting which is sublet is to be submitted to the Inspector at the Sub-Contractors' Samples of Fittings. works, and checked over by him and compared with the drawing before the bulk of the fittings are proceeded with and arrangements should be made for marking and keeping them for ready reference during the Contract.

MARKING AND PAINTING.

Painting and marking Finished Wagons. 22. Every completely erected wagon is to be finished off in the following manner :—

The body sides and ends (outside) are to be painted with two coats of standard colour to the approval of the Carriage and Wagon Superintendent. Sufficient time must be allowed to let the first coat thoroughly dry before applying the second coat.

The Works Company paint is to be obtained from an approved Paint and Varnish Railway standard quality and shade.

The underframe, underframe iron work, buffer cases, brake rigging, and axles are to be painted.....

The underframe members, cross and longitudinal bars and floor of the wagon underneath are to be painted with two coats of red oxide.

The axle-guards, axle-boxes, bearing springs and wheels are to be painted black.

The inside of the wagon and the floor is to be painted with two coats of red-oxide, and the marking for the inside is to be done carefully in white paint as shown on drawing No.....

The outside of the wagon is then to be carefully lettered and marked as shown on drawing No.....

TRACINGS AND PHOTOGRAPHS.

23. (a) The Contractors must furnish tracings and photographs as follows :—

Two complete sets of tracings showing the wagons and brake gear (general arrangements and details).

Six photographs of the pattern wagon taken from two points of view.

(b) The tracings are to be made on tracing cloth; they are to be well executed, hand-made, general and detail tracings of the general arrangements of the bodies and underframes, and of the underframed body steel and iron work, wheels and axles, axle-boxes and springs of the vehicles exactly as made. The Contractors are to show the wheels and axles, axle-boxes, springs and other fittings in detail and in position on the general tracings of the vehicles, the numbers of the drawings which refer to these fittings are to be given on the general tracings of the vehicles, the particulars of the weight of the vehicles, and the weights and dimensions mentioned in Clause 20 of this Specification should be given on these general tracings.

(c) These tracings must be made to a scale approved by the Carriage and Wagon Superintendent. It is the intention of this Contract that the General drawings of the vehicles should be complete in every respect. A diagram sketch (scale $\frac{1}{4}$ inch to the foot) of the vehicles is to be given showing the principal dimensions. This tracing is to be cut the same size as the other tracings in the set, and is to bear the first serial number of the set. Each tracing must be marked with the words '..... Railway Covered Open Goods Wagons, $\frac{5}{8}$ 6" gauge, metre gauge'..... type, the No. of the Contract and the Contractors' name. The tracings are all to be made of the same size, double elephant, 40 inches long by 27 inches wide, and they are to be delivered rolled up on a wooden roller, and not folded in any way. The contract is to include in the set of 'As made' tracings a sheet giving lists of all details, bolts, nuts, rivets, and all fittings, with the quantities. Before the tracings are sent to the Carriage and Wagon Superintendent each tracing must be signed by the Inspector, who has charge of the contract at the works.

(d) Six photographs, three showing the side view and three showing the end view of the pattern wagon completely erected, are to be supplied. One pair of photographs (one of each view) for each set of tracings are to be mounted on one sheet of drawing paper backed with cloth, which should be cut the same size as the tracings. This sheet is to bear the last serial number of the set. The remaining pair of photographs are to be supplied unmounted.

PAY AND EMOLUMENTS OF ASSISTANT SUPERINTENDENTS OF THE RAILWAY MAIL SERVICE.

62. Rai Bahadur Bakshi Sohan Lal: (i) Will Government be pleased to state whether it is a fact or not :

- (a) that since the creation of the appointment of Assistant Superintendent, Railway Mail Service, some forty years ago, no increase in their pay and emoluments has been made;
- (b) that the Postal Committee which sat at Simla in 1920, to raise the scales of the pay of Post Office and Railway Mail Service Officials has ignored altogether the case of the Assistant Superintendents, Railway Mail Service, and instead of bettering their prospects has degraded them to the subordinate posts of Inspector and that this action of the Committee has had the effect of making, in some cases, the superior officer, that is Assistant Superintendent, Railway Mail Service, draw less salary than his subordinate Inspector;
- (c) that all the European and Anglo-Indian Assistant Superintendents, who were on the list of Assistant Superintendents, were provided with higher appointments in the Department without passing the Departmental examination, while all the Indian Assistant Superintendents, some of whom were senior to the European and Anglo-Indian Assistant Superintendents, were degraded to the subordinate rank of Inspector and the post of Assistant Superintendent was thus abolished altogether;
- (d) that representations were made by the Indian Assistant Superintendents, Railway Mail Service, to the Director-General, Posts and Telegraphs, and to other authorities for redressing their grievances and for improving their prospects of future advancement?

(ii) If so, will Government be pleased to state what steps, if any, they have taken or intend to take to redress the grievances of Assistant Superintendents, Railway Mail Service?

(This Answer was, by leave of the Chair, placed on the table.)

Colonel Sir S. D'A. Crookshank: (i) (a) It is necessary to explain at some length why there has seemingly been no increase of pay in the appointment of Assistant Superintendent. The position is as follows: An appointment of Assistant Superintendent on Rs. 200 was first created in 1878. After that and until 1882, the sanctioned grades of Assistant Superintendents were Rs. 200 (one), Rs. 150, Rs. 125, Rs. 120 and Rs. 110. In 1883 the designation of ten Inspectors on Rs. 100 was changed to Assistant Superintendent. In 1891, the one appointment on Rs. 200 was absorbed in the next lower grade and three grades of pay were sanctioned, viz., Rs. 150, Rs. 125 and Rs. 100. With effect from the 1st December 1919, the appointments of Assistant Superintendents were merged in those of Inspectors of Sorting on a time-scale of Rs. 100—5—175. The maximum of the new time-scale is Rs. 175 against Rs. 150, the maximum of the previous graded scale.

(b) These appointments were abolished on the recommendation of the Postal Enquiry Committee, 1920, and merged in those of Inspectors of Sorting corresponding to Inspectors of Post Offices. The reasons are stated in the report of the Postal Enquiry Committee, 1920. In a number of cases, the revision has, no doubt, affected the ex-Assistant Superintendents adversely and in some instances they are drawing less pay than the former Inspectors of Sorting, but such cases are receiving the special consideration of the Director-General.

(c) On the 1st December 1919, the date on which the changes had effect, there were altogether 42 officials holding substantive appointments in the three grades of Assistant Superintendents, Railway Mail Service, as shown below :

1st grade pay Rs. 150 (15).

13—Indians.

2—Non-Indians.

2nd grade pay Rs. 125 (8).

8—Indians.

3rd grade pay Rs. 100 (19).

17—Indians.

2—Non-Indians.

The two Non-Indians in the 1st grade, one of whom headed the list, had already been officiating as Superintendents, Railway Mail Service, on Rs. 200 in acting vacancies in their own Circles as they were recommended for these appointments by the head of the Circle. The senior man while so officiating retired in May 1920 and the other man was confirmed as a Superintendent on the minimum pay (Rs. 250) of the time-scale about the same time, as he had rendered a continuous acting service for over 2 years and was also specially qualified on account of his experience of Railway Mail Service work in the Bombay Presidency. He was 49 years of age at the time of his confirmation and had accordingly to be exempted from passing the departmental test, which is intended for departmental subordinates not exceeding 31 years of age. The other two Non-Indians in the 3rd grade became Inspectors along with the others.

Of the 13 Indians in the 1st grade, 1 has retired, 9 have already been promoted to appointments in the selection grade of Rs. 175—225 from the 1st December 1919 or subsequent dates, according as vacancies were available, and one among them who had passed the Superintendents' test is acting as Superintendent of Post Offices on Rs. 250; 6 out of 8 Indians in the 2nd grade and 4 out of 17 Indians in the 3rd grade have similarly been given promotion to the selection grade posts on Rs. 175—225 or Rs. 145—170; 3 other qualified passed Indians—1 of the 1st grade and 2 of the 3rd grade—are already acting as Superintendents on Rs. 250. Thus only 4 Indians—2 of the 1st grade and 2 of the 2nd grade who are now Inspectors on Rs. 100—5—175 and who are not qualified for a Superintendentship are adversely affected by the change but they are eligible for promotion to the selection posts on Rs. 175—225. 11 Indians and 2 Non-Indians in the 3rd grade who became Inspectors cannot be said to be adversely affected, as their pay was changed from Rs. 100 to Rs. 100—5—175, with the prospect of promotion to the newly-created selection posts on Rs. 175—225 or Rs. 145—170. Moreover, the question of regulating the pay on the time-scale on its introduction on the 1st December 1919 by a special concession in respect of the Assistant Superintendents adversely affected, who are either at present in the cadre of Inspectors, Railway Mail Service, or who received promotion to other posts from a date subsequent to the 1st December 1919, is already under consideration. It will thus be seen that no preferential treatment has been or is being accorded to Non-Indian Assistant Superintendents.

(d) Representations have been received and they are being considered as stated above.

(ii) With the exception of the 4 cases referred to in (i) (c), Government do not consider that the former Assistant Superintendents have any legitimate grievance.

VACANCIES AMONG FOREST RESEARCH OFFICERS AT DEHRA DUN.

63. Mr. Pyari Lal: (a) Will the Government be pleased to place on the table a statement showing how temporary vacancies occasioned by the absence on leave or otherwise of Research Officers at the Forest Research Institute, Dehra Dun, have been filled during the last five years, stating the qualifications for special research work of the temporary incumbents?

(b) Is it a fact that in the past these vacancies have been filled by officers without any regard to their technical qualifications for the special branch of research of which they were placed in charge, e.g., an officer whose duties are more or less clerical being made to officiate as Forest Zoologist and also officers holding no special qualifications for chemical research being made to officiate as Forest Chemist, in preference to the respective qualified assistants?

(c) Is there any reason why the procedure obtaining at Pusa and other Research Institutes under the Government of India of allowing assistants to officiate and thus increasing their efficiency should not be followed at the Forest Research Institute?

1. Mr. J. Hullah: (a) The statement asked for is placed on the table.

(b) The Research officers at the Forest Research Institute are selected officers with special qualifications in their own subjects and in most cases it has been impossible to replace them by officers of similar qualifications when they have proceeded on leave. Special research work has therefore had to be suspended during their absence and all that it has been possible to do has been to keep the administrative work of the branch running as efficiently as possible. In only two cases were the Assistants considered capable of carrying on the work.

(c) At the Agricultural Research Institute at Pusa second or supernumerary officers are ordinarily available and, when they are not, officers can be obtained from the provinces to officiate in the leave vacancy of the head of a section. Only short leave vacancies, and those also in sections where there are no second or supernumerary officers, are filled by the appointment of Assistants to hold charge of the current duties of the section. This procedure is not ordinarily practicable at Dehra Dun.

In the beginning of this year one of the Assistants to the Forest Chemist was allowed to officiate for part of the time during which the head of this branch was on leave but the period was too short to form a definite conclusion as to his fitness. Whenever an Assistant is considered fit to do so he will be allowed to carry on the duties of the head of his branch in the latter's absence provided a fully qualified officer is not forthcoming.

Statement showing how temporary vacancies occasioned by absence on leave or otherwise of Research Institute officers have been filled during the last 5 years.

PROCEDURE IN REGARD TO QUESTION AND ANSWER.

The Honourable the President: Before the Assembly proceeds to business, I have a statement to make regarding the procedure of Question and Answer. The right of questioning Government is one of the most valuable rights which parliaments possess. The practice of it varies in different countries and, in the evolution of Indian procedure, we have not yet reached finality. Nor would it appear, that apart from the form of procedure, the true scope of the parliamentary question is fully understood.

A question is a demand for information. It may sometimes be used for a purpose beyond that simple request; but, if it is so used, it must be with care: for, it is obvious that a point soon arrives where the cross-examination of a Minister becomes debate and thus passes beyond the bounds of order.

The line which divides cross-examination from debate has been crossed several times by questions of which notice has been given for the present Session of the Assembly. I will give but one instance.

A Member asked:

'Will the Government be pleased to state the exact present position and policy of the Government with regard to the following matters:

- (a) Afghanistan;
- (b) Khilafat;
- (c) Punjab wrongs;
- (d) Non-co-operation in its double aspect of:
 - (1) violent;
 - (2) non-violent;
- (e) Attainment of Swaraj within the year;
- (f) Amendment of the Reform Act;
- (g) Dissolution of the present Council.

This is not a 'question,' in the sense in which the word is used in the Rules and Standing Orders. It asks, not for information in the strict sense of the word, but for a speech which could not have been made without violating the principles of our procedure. It was, therefore, disallowed, as contravening most, if not all, of the Rules and Standing Orders relating to Questions. The proper form in which to put comprehensive requests of that kind is a Resolution, or even a series of Resolutions: the proper occasion for their expression is in debate.

A second class of question, of which I hope the united common-sense of the House will permit only the most sparing use, is that which asks for the collection of great quantities of facts and statistics, entailing prolonged labour for the Department concerned which nothing but important public interest can justify. It is not always easy to decide whether questions of this kind are an abuse of the right of questioning; and, therefore, I hope that Members, before giving notice of them, will consult the Department informally, as to how far it is possible to meet the request. Much time and labour will thus be saved.

Analogous to this type of question is one which asks Government to make a collection of statistics and other information which is already published and, therefore, available to any Member who will take the trouble of seeking it himself. An instance of this type, which I will quote, runs as follows:

'(a) Will the Government be pleased to lay on the table a comparative statement showing the prices of Milk, Ghee, Sugar, various food grains, oils and oil-seeds, cotton and ordinary cloth from the time of the Mutiny of 1857 up to the present day in India so far as records are available?

(c) What are the causes of high prices at the present day, and what steps do the Government propose to take to alleviate the discontentment caused thereby?

This is obviously a matter of historical research: and I am not aware that the Government of India contains a Department of History.

A third and graver issue is raised by a question which insinuates that Members of Government often act in bad faith in the answers which they give. Here we pass out of the region of the written rule into that of the unwritten conventions which govern parliamentary life. The Chair is not concerned with the private opinion which one Member holds regarding the good faith of another; but when private opinion finds public expression in the suggestion that officials mislead the Assembly by not being straightforward, we are perilously near the point where reasoned discussion becomes impossible owing to the intrusion of personal feeling and personal charges that are not easily proved or disproved. To this the Chair cannot turn a deaf ear. To pass in silence expressions of that kind would create a precedent which would open the straight road to recrimination and consequently to disorder. Hence the rigour with which expressions, commonly called unparliamentary must be scrutinized by the President.

As regards the request for notice of a Supplementary Question, referred to in No. 13, this is a proper and recognised way of meeting any unexpected question and is usually regarded, not as a means of avoiding a proper answer, but as ensuring time and consideration in order that a proper answer may be given.

A fourth point is raised by the fact that out of 700 questions that have passed through my hands in preparation for this Session, no less than 82 have been disallowed under Rule 7, which figures as paragraph 28 in the Manual. This number, representing more than 11 per cent of the total, is much too large. When I add that these 82 questions were asked by 31 different Members, the Assembly will realise that at least one-third of the non-official Members are unaware of one of the fundamental conditions of the new Constitution, namely, the scope of the authority of the Government of India and the enlarged autonomy of the provinces. Hitherto a certain leniency has been exercised in the interpretation of Rule 7 and of other provisions, in view of the difficulties inherent in the new system. I must ask Members, henceforth, to acquaint themselves fully with the restrictions laid down in such important regulations as Rule 7. I should not be discharging my duty to the Assembly if I extended any further leniency in this matter.

Finally, Rule 8 prescribes the condition that the subject matter of a question shall be 'a matter of public concern.' It is to be hoped that this condition, which is rather a matter of judgment than of rigid interpretation, will be more carefully observed in future.

In exercise of the powers vested in me by Standing Order 17, I have decided to modify the procedure followed last Session by the introduction of the 'Star' system which has been in force for some years in the House of Commons.

In future, any Member who desires an oral answer will place a star—thus *—against his question when he gives notice of it. Any question which is not marked with a star will not be answered orally, but will be printed, with its answer, in the official report of the business of the day. Supplementary Questions, therefore, cannot arise out of the answers to unstarred questions.

It is hoped that Members will utilise this system in such a manner as to reduce materially the number of questions to be answered orally, and that considerable time will thereby be saved for the disposal of other business. I may also express the hope that Members will exercise a due sense of responsibility in all the questions of which they give notice.

The system will not apply to questions of which notice has already been given, but it will apply to all questions of which notice is given after to-day.

I desire, at the same time, to remind Members of certain decisions which were reached last Session in regard to the treatment of questions in the special circumstances to which I will allude.

I ruled last Session that when a Member in whose name a question stood was absent, then, unless the Member of the Government to whom the question was addressed elected, under Standing Order 19, to answer it on grounds of public interest, the answer would be sent to the Member in whose name the question stood, and would be printed in the proceedings of the day. This ruling will continue to apply in the case of questions starred for oral answer. In the case of questions not so starred, the absence of the Member in whose name the question stands will have no effect on the procedure to be followed.

In connection with questions standing in the name of absent Members, I desire further to explain that when a Member, from whom notice of a question has been received, subsequently decides to absent himself for the whole Session, his questions will not be entered in the list under Standing Order 17; while, if a Member intimates that he will not be in attendance till a particular date, his questions will not be entered in the list until that date is reached.

My ruling of last Session that when a question requires a long answer, a brief resumé only should be read to the Assembly, and the full answer printed in the proceedings, will also continue to apply to questions which are starred for oral answer.

Further, when information is supplied to an individual member in connection with a question asked by him, it is for the Member of Government concerned to decide whether the information in question is likely to be of general public interest, and that when he so decides, the information will be laid on the table and printed in the proceedings. When the Member of Government decides not to lay the information on the table, it will be open to any Member, desiring to obtain the same, to apply for a copy of the information supplied to the Member asking the original question. This ruling will continue to apply to all questions whether answered orally or not.

I may add for the information of the Assembly that I shall take steps to see that the general announcements made to-day will be placed at an early moment in the hands of every Member.

MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT TO CONSIDER MOPLAH OUTBREAKS.

Rao Pahadur T. Rangachariar: Sir, I beg to ask for leave under Rule 41 for making a motion for an adjournment of the business of the Assembly for the purpose of discussing the Moplah outbreak in Malabar.

The Honourable the President: The Honourable Member asks for leave to move the adjournment of the business of this House to discuss a definite matter of urgent public importance, namely, the Moplah outbreak in the Malabar district. Is there any objection?

There being no objection, the motion is set down for 4 p.m. this afternoon.

ARRANGEMENT OF BUSINESS OF THE ASSEMBLY.

Mr. P. P. Ginwala: Sir, before you proceed with the business of the House, may I ask for your directions upon a question of procedure on another point, that is, as regards the arrangement of the business of the House during the Session? Would it be possible for the House to have any opportunity of expressing its opinion, in some form or other on the arrangement of the business for the Session before or after the arrangement is made?

The Honourable the President: Does the Honourable Member wish to inquire whether an opportunity will be given before this House assembles at the beginning of the Session? Such opportunity can only be given by a postal communication asking me to consider any proposal which Honourable Members singly or collectively have to make.

Mr. P. P. Ginwal: Perhaps I have not made my point quite clear. My point is this, that when Government makes an announcement as to the arrangement of its own business or allocates certain days for non-official business or proposes an adjournment of the House for a long period during the Session, will the House have any opportunity of expressing its opinion on Government's announcement?

The Honourable the President: I think I could take into consideration whether the matter raised by the Honourable Member is the matter of urgent public importance, on which he might have an opportunity at some future date of moving an adjournment of this House. Under our procedure, I do not think any other formal means exists by which he could ventilate his opinion or that of his fellow Members on the matter he has raised; but effective representations can be made without a debate on the floor of the House. I have already received intimations of the kind to which he refers and I shall have at an early date to make some statement regarding that subject.

As the Honourable Member, however, has raised it, I may point out that in arranging the business we were hedged about with a good many difficulties. In the first place, though it was originally our intention to advise His Excellency to set down certain dates much earlier than those which we have fixed for the meetings of this Assembly, it was eventually found impossible to do so owing to the fact that this building could not be completed before the 1st of September. Therefore, the completion of this building was the turning point of our arrangement. The Honourable Member will realise that, once we were compelled to decide that the Assembly could not meet before the 1st of September, the date on which the Muharram falls this year was the second difficulty which we had to meet and which, as far as I was able to gather from the general sense of the Assembly, the Assembly has not yet found means of overcoming. I am not sure that we shall be able to meet the general desire for the transaction of business between the 5th and 15th of September and yet, at the same time, satisfy the legitimate and honourable attachment to their faith of our Honourable Muhammadan colleagues. If my Honourable colleague has anything further to put before the Assembly, I hope, he will do it in the considered form of a document.

Mr. P. P. Ginwala: Would it be impossible for the Government to ask for the adjournment of the House on a motion moved by the Government that the House adjourn, say for 10 days, so that the House has an opportunity of expressing its opinion? Would it be contrary to Parliamentary procedure?

The Honourable the President: No, but when the motion—not under Rule 11—is made, that this House do now adjourn, then a Member is entitled to bring up any subject; but if the Honourable Member will consult the rules—there are several rules governing that issue—he will find, that it is not on every occasion that debate can arise.

ADDRESS OF WELCOME TO HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS THE PRINCE OF WALES.

Dr. H. S. Gour: Sir, I regard it as a proud privilege, that I am called upon to move the Resolution which stands in my name and which reads thus:

This Assembly recommends to the Governor General in Council that he may be pleased to convey to His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales its humble request that he may be graciously pleased to accept a loyal and dutiful Address of Welcome from the Indian Legislature; and further recommends that the co-operation of the Council of State be invited therefor and that a Committee of both Chambers to which the following Members of this Assembly shall be nominated be appointed to draft an Address in consonance with the national aspirations of the people of India as voiced by their representatives in the Indian Legislature:

- (1) Sir P. S. Sivaswamy Aiyer,
- (2) Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar,
- (3) Prof. S. C. Shahani,
- (4) Mr. Harchandrai Vishindas,
- (5) Chandhri Sahab-ud-Din,
- (6) Lala Girdharilal Agarwala,
- (7) Mr. J. Chaudhuri,
- (8) Babu Kishitish Chandra Neogy,
- (9) Sir Frank Carter,
- (10) Lieutenant-Colonel H. A. J. Gidney, and
- (11) The Mover.

In ordinary circumstances it might be supererogatory on my part to say many words to commend this Resolution to the acceptance of this House; but I feel, that I shall not be discharging my duty to this House and the country if I do not state in clear terms the reasons and the sentiments which inspire me in tabling this Resolution and moving it here to-day. We cannot ignore the fact that outside this House a clamorous party is waging a sort of civil war against the reception of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, and I think, Sir, that as the Premier Legislative Assembly of this country we should join our voices in condemning this movement which is detrimental to the best interests of this country. I feel, Sir, and I feel strongly, that those who are responsible for this disloyal movement have not adverted to the simple fact of constitutional law. We all know that the King and the Heir Apparent to the British Throne are both personages out of party politics. It is an established rule of English democracy, that they should on no account be brought into the vortex of party politics. I feel, Sir, that the movement that has been set on foot for the purpose of boycotting His Royal Highness is a movement which is calculated to do infinite mischief, and I feel that it is a movement which can never receive any encouragement or support from the intelligentsia of this country. I rise here to voice the unanimous sentiments of the assembled Members of the Indian Legislature when I say, that whatever may be our differences on the question of party politics, or whatever may be our differences with the existing form of the Government of India, we are all unanimous in according to His Royal Highness the heartiest welcome. His Royal Highness may be sure, that so far as it lies in our power he will receive from the responsible heads of Indian society that great and oriental welcome which is the tradition of this land. I feel, Sir, that those who advocate the doctrine of non-co-operation and boycott are doing infinite harm to the best interests of this country. His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales is coming here, and by coming to this country at an infinite sacrifice of his time and labour, is placing us, the people of this country, under a deep debt of obligation. It is a matter of pride, that the Heir Apparent to the British Throne is going to honour this country by a Royal visit, and be it remembered, by a visit which he is prepared to make in spite of the fatigue, the trouble and loss of time which it involves. In the Colonial tours, which His Royal Highness made last year, he signally endeared himself to the people of the Colonial Dominions, and if these Colonials hear that the people of this country have set on foot a movement to boycott their dear friend, what would be the feeling of those Colonials towards the people of this country? We, the people of this country, are striving for equality of treatment in all parts of the British Commonwealth. In the Imperial Conference, all except one have accorded to us a position of equality. What would be their sentiments if they hear that the Heir Apparent to the British Crown on his visit to this country has been boycotted by the people of this country? I further venture to ask these people if they have for a moment thought within themselves what it means and what it implies. It has been said by one of the protagonists of this campaign, that so far as the Prince of Wales is concerned, he has no grievance against him, he is above party politics. But it has been said that because he has been invited by the Indian Bureaucracy and because he has received that invitation and is coming out to this country, therefore he shall be boycotted. Now, Sir, I place before you a very simple fact. If you have a dear old friend with whom you have no quarrel, the fact that he has been invited by your next door neighbour with whom you have a quarrel,—is that any reason at all why if he comes to call upon you, you should shut your doors against him? The fact, that he has been called by the Indian Bureaucracy, is a matter of no importance. The fact, that he is coming to this country to see for himself the Princes and people of India, is all that matters to us, the representatives of this country, and the fact, that he is a friend and an old friend of the people of this country, should be the sole reason for according him a hearty welcome. Now, Sir, we have been told, that we shall be paralysing the Government if we boycott the Prince. I have seen many empty threats of this character hurled in the face of the people of this country. Were we not told, Oh, not many months ago, that if you brought your children away from the schools and colleges, and the Barristers and Advocates gave up their practice in Court and boycotted the Courts, there shall be Swaraj within a year, and that Swaraj was promised to us by the leader of this movement in this very month. Now, we have been told that if we make pyramids of foreign cloth and set them on fire, and if we dance round about them with tom-toms beating in unison and crying, 'Swaraj is coming, Swaraj has come', then we shall get Swaraj on the first of next month. Now, let me assure you, Sir, that whenever Swaraj comes, and we shall all welcome it, it shall not be on account of this movement but in spite of it. Swaraj will come because the Members of this Assembly and of the other House have shown their capacity to bear greater responsibilities. It shall come, not because we have danced about the bonfires of foreign cloth, or we have put our children away from the schools and colleges, not because we have put on a khaddi cap and khaddi coat, but it shall come because we have put before the country substantial work and because we have contributed to the labours of reform in a substantial manner. Sir, I speak these words in connection with my Resolution, because I think, that this House must, in an unmistakable manner, declare what it thinks of this mischievous movement which is directed against the person of the Heir Apparent to the British Crown.

I think that we should all unanimously vote not only an Address of Welcome, but an address of hearty and humble welcome to His Royal Highness when he comes to this country. I have, since giving notice of this Resolution, been approached by my friends, those who favour an address and those who would like to qualify it, and I have had frequent talks with these people, and I should very briefly state to you, Sir, what has been the result of these interviews.

I fear that the last sentence of my Resolution, namely, that the Address should be in consonance with the national aspirations of the people of India as voiced by their representatives in the Indian legislature, has given rise to a certain ambiguity and misunderstanding. There have been those who think that this is a splendid opportunity which should be seized for expressing the accumulation of grievances of the people of this country, but that, Sir, was never my intention. My intention was, that instead of uttering empty words and platitudes, let us go forth before the Heir-Apparent to the British Crown and tell him, that we, the united people of this country, welcome him as the Successor to a Great Throne, and that we are proud to belong to the great British Commonwealth of which we are, and desire to continue to be, members. If the British Government gave us a choice and said, 'Will you be independent, or will you remain with us,' I should unquestionably say, 'We shall decide to remain with the British Government and a part of that British Commonwealth.'

I, Sir, feel, and I have no doubt all Members of this House must feel equally with me, that suppose we had taken the other choice and chose to have an Indian republic or independence, we should be like a planet hurled away into space, separated from the planetary system, and reduced to infinite atoms. The position of India, separated from the British Empire as a member of the British Commonwealth, will probably not last six months; it will be a prey to the neighbouring forces, and it will go back perhaps 200 years in ordinary civilization. We have often been told by the protagonists of this new cult, that this Western civilization is an evil, that we must shun English education, we must abhor English machinery, and must inscribe upon our national flag the charka.

(At this stage, Mr. McCarthy, a Chairman, took the Chair.)

Mr. N. M. Samarth: Dr. Gour is out of order in referring to non-cooperation and boycott of the Prince.

The Chairman: I think Dr. Gour is perhaps wandering a little from the original Resolution.

Dr. H. S. Gour: I am afraid, Sir, that the Chair has ruled that I am wandering a little from the subject. These remarks, however, that I make are intended to bring out what should be the cardinal doctrine underlying the Address,—that it should be an address of unqualified and unconditional welcome, and that it should not contain any matters of a controversial character. I further wanted, Sir, to take exception to the view not only of my friends here but to that of those who are outside, as to what is the position of the elected representatives of the people of this country in regard to the welcome to His Royal Highness and how they should regard a movement which has for its purpose the boycotting of his visit. But whether I am in order or out of order, I have achieved my purpose, and I think I have therefore succeeded in pointing out that the last sentence of the Address must not be misunderstood, but be regarded as an integral and cardinal portion of my Resolution. Members must understand that that is only to be regarded as voicing the general aspirations and sentiments of the people of this country, and not to trench upon anything which would trespass upon the written and unwritten law of the English constitution, in other words, to introduce no question of a controversial character. Now, Sir, as regards the personnel, when I gave notice of this Resolution, I did not know that many Members in this House were anxious to serve upon this Committee and I myself had not the advantage of personally consulting them whether they would like to serve on this Committee. On further consideration I thought that this Committee might not merely be a Drafting Committee but a Reception Committee, a general Reception Committee of both Houses, and I hope, Sir, that with the leave of the House I shall be permitted to call it the General Reception Committee and with that object in view, I hope, I shall be permitted to propose to increase its personnel. I have given notice of certain names, to which I should like to add the names of the following gentlemen :

Rai Bahadur Debi Charan Barua,

Mr. Jannadas Dwarkadas,

Bhai Man Singh,

Shaikh Rajan Baksh Shah,

Mr. Cotelingam.

Mr. K. Ahmed: Sir, I think my learned friend is out of order. Therefore, I rise, on a point of order, to say that we cannot give leave for introduction of this Resolution because there is a condition laid down in it.

The Chairman: I think it would be more convenient if Dr. Gour put his Resolution as two Resolutions, one of welcome and the other with the names of the Committee.

Dr. H. S. Gour: Sir, I beg to move the first part of my Resolution dealing with the Address.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: The Honourable Mover has changed the wording of the Resolution and, I believe, it can go as an Amendment with the permission of this House.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: Sir, I beg to move :

'That the words after the word 'Address'—in consonance with the national aspirations of the people of India as voiced by their representatives in the Indian Legislature' be omitted'; and if you will permit me, Sir—it is only a verbal amendment,—I would substitute the word 'the' for the word 'an' Address.

For the very excellent reason given by the Honourable Mover, that His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales is above any politics, I think, Sir, that our address of welcome should convey entirely a pure, disinterested and hearty welcome.

(At this point, the President resumed the Chair.)

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: I do not think it is right that we should trouble His Royal Highness with an enumeration of the national aspirations of the people of this land. The national aspirations of the land, how they are to be enumerated, by whom they are to be enumerated, whether all of us are agreed as to what they should be, are all matters on which there is great divergence of opinion; and to say here 'as voiced by their representatives in the Indian Legislature' assumes a state of affairs which does not exist. The Indian Legislatures have not had an opportunity of voicing their aspirations for the nation. When they have done so, perhaps it will be right to refer to these national aspirations. I quite agree with the Honourable Mover of this Resolution, that this welcome is not only a duty on our part, but it is a religious duty enjoined on all in this land; and, therefore, I would ask him to accept this amendment so as to avoid all appearance of any division on a matter like this in this Assembly. I should like the united voice of this Assembly to go forth extending the right hand of welcome to His Royal Highness and I quite agree with the Honourable Mover in all the sentiments which he has expressed as regards the duty which lies on us of extending a hearty welcome, although I do not venture to follow him in all the dissertation which he embarked upon. I, therefore, Sir, move this amendment.

The Honourable the President: The original question was that :

'This Assembly recommends to the Governor General in Council that he may be pleased to convey to His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales its humble request that he may be graciously pleased to accept a loyal and dutiful Address of Welcome from the Indian Legislature; and further recommends that the co-operation of the Council of State be invited therefor and that a Committee of both Chambers to which the following Members* of this Assembly shall be nominated be appointed to draft an Address in consonance with the national aspirations of the people of India as voiced by their representatives in the Indian Legislature.'

Since which an amendment has been moved :

'That the words after the word 'Address' where it occurs for the second time, down to the end be omitted.'

The question I have to put is, that that amendment be made. Perhaps the Mover of the Resolution accepts it.

Dr. H. S. Gour: That is exactly why I stood up just now—to announce to the House that I accept the amendment.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: Sir, may I inquire whether the Resolution is to be put in two parts, as was suggested in your absence, or whether it is to be taken as a whole.

The Honourable the President: I understood that the first part, containing the substantive part of the Resolution, down to the word 'Legislature,' was to be put as a separate Resolution, and that the question of the addition of names to the Resolution would be put as a separate question from the Chair.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: Sir, the first part of the Resolution has not so far definitely been put to the Council, and this Assembly have therefore not had an opportunity of commenting on it, though I am quite certain that Members will accept it with acclamation. The Government view is, that it is most proper that advantage should be taken of such an auspicious occasion as the visit of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales to present to him an Address from the Indian Legislature expressing a cordial welcome and indicative of, what I believe to be a very genuine feeling, the great loyalty of India to the Royal Family. (Loud Applause.) It would indeed be lamentable if an occasion of this kind were missed by the Legislature. I am quite sure for myself—and I believe every one here will concur with me—that the people of India will accord to His Royal Highness this year, as has been the case in the past when a member of the Royal family has visited India, the most cordial of welcomes. I know, there are persons in this country who profess to be opposed to the visit, but I hope and have every reason to hope, that the good sense and the traditional courtesy of the people will override all such considerations when His Royal Highness comes.

I was going to advert at greater length to a point which has now been settled by the motion of the Honourable Member opposite, and that is, that the Government, while welcoming this Resolution, could only accept it on one clear understanding—that no political topic of a controversial character was introduced in the Address. Fortunately, in view of my Honourable friend, Mr. Rangachariar's amendment—which, I understand, has been accepted by the Honourable Mover,—no necessity arises for me to press this point on the Assembly.

There is only one other matter which I need mention and that is the number of the members of the Committee to be appointed. This is not a matter with which the Government is really concerned, but is a matter of some practical importance. It does seem to me, that the Assembly would do well to consider whether it is not possible to limit the number to what may be called a useful drafting body. I must remind the Council, that in addition to the Members of this Assembly who will serve on the Committee, the Council of State will undoubtedly require possibly an equal number, or at any rate something approaching an equal number of representatives on that body. I, therefore, suggest to the House a Committee of less unwieldy proportions than that proposed, but this is only a suggestion. The question of numbers is not one of any consequence to us. The Government accept this Resolution as it stands, and I have only to add, that the Government are glad that the first opportunity has been utilised for the purpose of bringing it forward.

The Honourable the President : As the Mover of the Resolution has professed his readiness to accept the amendment moved by Mr. Rangachariar, and if it is the general sense of the Assembly, I think, I had better put the Resolution in its amended form. The question is, that the Resolution be so amended.

The motion was adopted.

The Honourable the President : The question is that :

'This Assembly recommends to the Governor General in Council that he may be pleased to convey to His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales its humble request that he may be graciously pleased to accept a loyal and dutiful Address of Welcome from the Indian Legislature; and further recommends that the co-operation of the Council of State be invited therefor and that a Committee of both Chambers to which the following Members of this Assembly shall be nominated be appointed to draft an Address.'

Sir Jamsetjee Jejeebhoy : In rising to give my cordial support to this Resolution, I may be permitted to express a hope which, I believe, this Assembly will fully endorse, that His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales' visit being now finally settled, nothing will happen to prevent its complete success and the fullest realization of the expectations of the general public. It will now only rest with us to make his visit conspicuously complete and successful, and, I am sure the task before us will be successfully carried out, provided we give the occasion a right impetus and immediately adopt necessary and effective measures. I feel confident, that all the races and creeds in India will make this great occasion one of general rejoicing and entertainment and of extending the happiness and prosperity of the people and of ensuring perfect peace and goodwill all over the land. His Royal Highness comes to us as one who has already won his spurs by general acclamation and who is a high principled, generously minded, genial, gallant and accomplished prince and gentleman, well worthy of his exalted birth and high estate, who is heir to a mighty throne and who, in God's good time, will be the ruler over the British Empire. His Royal Highness comes out to India full of sympathy and goodwill for the people of this country, ever anxious and willing to promote their utmost advancement and happiness and as such His Royal Highness who will be our august guest is eminently worthy of the respect, esteem, regard and admiration of all true and faithful subjects of His Majesty the King-Emperor.

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas : Sir, I consider it a privilege to support the Resolution moved by my Honourable friend, Dr. Gour, and amended as suggested by my Honourable friend, Mr. Rangachariar. It will be remembered, Sir, that this is not the first occasion on which the Prince of Wales is coming to India. The late grandfather of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, King Edward VII, was the first Prince of Wales to come to India. Then, in the year 1904, King George V, the present Emperor of India, with Her Royal Highness, the Princess of Wales, visited the country over which he was to rule in the future. On those two occasions, when the father and mother and the grandfather of the present Prince of Wales came to India, it will be remembered that from one end of the country to the other there was a unique outburst of loyalty and Their Royal Highnesses were accorded a most cordial welcome by the princes and people of India. I want to point out, Sir, that in those days when Their Royal Highnesses came to this country, the Indians were a subject nation under by no means the rule of a representative Government, but of a Government which was made up mostly of Englishmen. I submit, Sir, that if in those days India stood like one man to accord a most cordial welcome to Their Royal Highnesses, there is the greater reason to-day for India, which is almost recognised as an equal partner in the British Commonwealth, which is on the pathway of achieving responsible Government, and which has achieved partial responsible Government at the present moment, to accord a most cordial welcome to His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales who is coming to gain first hand experience and to have direct touch with the princes and people of this country, so that when the duty of ruling this country as the future monarch of this empire devolves on him, he may be able to fulfil it in a better manner. I hope, Sir, that India will rise to the occasion and will accord a most cordial and affectionate welcome to His Royal Highness.

It is a matter of gratification, Sir, if I may be permitted to refer to it, that in the announcement made by the Government of India regarding the Committee appointed for the purpose of according a welcome to His Royal Highness, they have included the name of one of the most veteran leaders of India, who has done more than any other leader, to further the interests of this country in all directions,—I mean Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya, and it is a matter of further gratification, that in spite of the opinion expressed by a mischievous band of people, Pandit Malaviya has come forward to do his duty in his old age and to guide India in the right direction of according a suitable welcome to His Royal Highness. With these few words, Sir, I support the Resolution.

Mr. B. S. Kamat : I move, Sir, that the question be now put with reference to this part of the Resolution.

Mr. K. B. L. Agnihotri: Sir, it is with the profoundest regret, that I have to rise to oppose the Resolution moved by my Honourable friend, Dr. Gour. I am fully conscious of the fact, that courtesy and hospitality are the virtues engrained in Orientals. I am conscious of the fact, that the loyalty of the Indians to the Throne and Person of the King is traditional; I am further conscious of the fact, that Loyalty is also exploited and taken advantage of, as an effective balm to soothe the excited feelings of the Indians resulting from the outrages and blunders deliberately committed by the bureaucracy in this country.

Our hospitality to guests is one of the primary duties that are enjoined by the Hindu Shastras, and I come from the part of the country which was once governed by one Raja Mauradhvaj of the Pauranic Fame, who, in response to his duties of a host, went to the length of even sawing his only son and heir into two, to feed the lion with the body of the prince and to satisfy the curious whim and desire of his guest, Bhagwan Shrikrishna and Arjun. This high sense of courtesy and hospitality was not the monopoly of the Raja alone, but had permeated Indians of all classes, rich and poor, high and low, from time immemorial and continues up to the present day. Who amongst us in this august Assembly is not aware of the hospitality of the Indians, extended to outsiders even at the cost of their liberty, life blood, industries and the very bread necessary to keep body and soul together and in preference to starvation, slavery, and honor, to keep their guests in luxury? Have not the Indians extended the same hospitality even to undesirable guests from other parts of the Empire, in spite of inhuman treatment meted out to the Indians by the kith and kin of such guests. The touring officers of the Government can well testify to the hospitality they received from the poor peasantry, so much so, that long use of it, is begun to be described as customary and demanded as a matter of right in the form of Rasad and Begar or impressed labour and dereliction from that hospitality, is now even punished by fines.

Sir, when this was the courtesy and hospitality extended to an ordinary common guest, more or less of equal status to the host, then it is needless for me to describe that which was extended towards the sovereign or his heir. The Indians always associated the King with Divinity and their relations with the ruling House of England has always been of the best and the pleasantest. The present ruling house of England has always taken a very keen interest in the welfare and happiness of the people of India and His Majesty in particular, has always had a particular desire to see the policy of righteousness, pursued towards this country and has exercised his vast influence, in shaping of a policy of justice and sympathy towards Indians, and of setting up of the new constitution in India. His Majesty.....

The Honourable the President: Order, Order. The Honourable Member is a little late with his remarks. The Assembly has just decided to cut out the only part of the original Resolution to which these remarks could have been addressed. We are now discussing solely the question of presenting an Address to His Royal Highness. No question of policy, nor any of those controversial issues referred to by the Home Member, can be raised in this debate.

Mr. K. B. L. Agnihotri: I bow to your ruling, Sir. Now I come to the question of the visit. Taking the cause of the visit to be as stated by His Excellency, the people in the country still regard the visit as most in-opportunity. The economic and political situation in the country is such that the visit should not have even been thought of. There has been a heavy deficit in the country's finances last year which had to be met by raising of the new taxes and it is feared that at the end of the year, we will still have a huge deficit to meet. Industries, education, public health, law, justice, communications and other departments are eminently needed for the welfare of the country, and these will have to be further postponed and the expenditure on the visit will further adversely affect it for some time to come.

The prevalence of famine conditions in almost all the parts of the country was a sufficient cause for the postponement of the visit for the present. The political situation and feelings of the people are not to be taken lightly. It was, I think, due to these reasons that many papers including the 'Times of India' and the 'Pioneer' suggested the postponement of the visit. I will not waste the time of the House by reading out what they have said. But what I have to say is, that the replies that have been given to all the suggestions for postponement have not appreciated the facts. Famine conditions are not local but widespread.

As for the feelings of the public, they are neither superficial nor the result of the preachings of the agitators only. The Punjab and Khilafat wrongs, in addition to the repressive and oppressive acts of officials and others, have likewise caused a deep injury which cannot lightly be healed. They could not be healed even after the sage, sound and experienced advice of His Royal Highness the Duke. They are not limited to a few as the demonstrations all over the country go to show. Sermons on loyalty could not, now, be of much effect, with the consciousness of the rights and privileges of a constitutional monarchy; and, bearing in mind, the awakening to a sense of a desire for responsible Self-Government, and that suspicions still exist in certain minds against the ways and the acts of the Governments. The public in general have become more cautious in taking things from the Government. The people have learnt from the English people to realise the duties to the sovereign and the loyalty that they have to offer.

It is conceded that the Royalties are above party politics and controversies, but it is believed by the public, that it is more so as a convenience for the state and the fact is taken advantage of by those in power, and whenever they think it necessary.

The fact of the visit having been decided against the wishes of the people and without consulting them, even at a period when they are said to have been enfranchised, and when the expenditure of the visit will have to be borne by them and will have to be put to the vote of their representatives who even had not been consulted before the visit has been decided upon, is regarded as adding insult to injury and it has given rise to resentment which will be hard to subside. While discussing the Resolution, it is no use thinking as to what should be or what ought to be the attitude of the public, but we should look to what it is, and what that attitude will be, at the time of the visit. Abstract philosophy will not have much effect on the excited and injured feelings of the public in general. They do not now place much faith in empty shows and make-beliefs, but prize frankness and truth in all the spheres of life.

[Mr. K. B. L. Agnihotri.]

Apart from all this, consider what would be the feelings of the Prince to find that he has been brought in a place where the people in general by their attitude show, that he is not wanted. Pray, imagine the feelings of the guest who, on entering the house, finds the people of the household turn their backs and give him the cold shoulder, and over and above, that if one of the household were to say 'that the guest was right welcome.'

It is true, that the head of the house welcomes him, but it is against the wishes of the others in it. Will such a thing be pleasant to the host and the guest alike? I think not.

The effect of the welcome and the Address proposed, I am afraid, will be something like the one described. From the attitude of the people, as is apparent from the demonstrations all over the country, it is clear, that the visit will be boycotted by the public, whose representatives we claim to be. It is true, that having the means and the power, this House can make the visit successful in some ways, but will that be regarded as having been done in the representative character of or will that be pleasant to do against wishes of people. The people are not in a mood to welcome the visit and the passing of this Resolution by this House, I respectfully beg to submit, will have the effect of further exasperating Indian public opinion which would be far from desirable.

I wish the visit had been postponed, and that Indians in general had wholeheartedly and unitedly given the welcome befitting of the great Nation.

Therefore, in the best interests of the country, the Government and their relations with the Sovereign, I appeal to the Honourable the Mover to withdraw his Resolutions and not to press it further and also to the Government to have the visit postponed till happier times.

Raja S. P. Singh : Sir, I rise to support this loyal Resolution to welcome His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales. I consider this a great privilege and honour. India is waiting with a palpitating heart to welcome the future heir of this vast empire. His Royal Highness is coming to us as our well wisher and our friend. No question of invitation comes and a false issue has been raised in certain quarters to support an arbitrary dictum blindly followed in a noisy atmosphere of blind passions. Loyalty and Hospitality are ingrained in the Indian people. They are a part of our religion. Any one who raises a dissentient note is false to the country and false to her most cherished traditions. I do not call him an Indian who lightly talks of giving no reception to the Prince. It is therefore our bounden duty to offer him a right royal welcome. The fame of our young Prince has been ringing not only through the length and breadth of the empire, but in every corner and nook of the civilised world. The great part played by our brave and gallant Prince needs no recapitulation on my part. He shared the dangers of the war with his soldiers, and endeared himself to every one of them. This was followed by his famous tour in America and the Dominions where His Royal Highness was enthusiastically received and golden link of friendship forged between the motherland and the Colonies.

Last year, when the Empire was getting ready to put on its gala dress to welcome the Prince, it was told that the Prince, for reasons of health, could not come to inaugurate the reform scheme. India was deeply disappointed. Now the news of the Prince's coming has been received with rejoicing not only in India, but all over the east.

In offering His Royal Highness our hearty welcome, we need not be selfish and expect boons. We want no boons—we want His Royal Highness' right hand of fellowship. We want His Royal Highness to see India and Indians first hand. We want His Royal Highness to realise that India is a great Empire, with a glorious past—that India is virile and longing to take its rightful place in the councils of the Empire. We want His Royal Highness to say 'India, you must regain your past glories'—'India, you must be happy and contented,' 'India, the bright jewel within the British Empire, you will be a partner within the Empire, an equal partner, enjoying the equal rights to which every partner is entitled,' 'India, I have come to forge golden links of friendship.'

We are longing to see the great Prince, to hear his voice, and treasure his sayings.

May His Royal Highness' stay with us be a happy one, and may the fruit of His Royal Highness' visit be contentment, peace and prosperity, is my humble prayer.

Rai J. N. Majumdar Bahadur : Sir, I did not anticipate that a discordant voice would be raised in this House as regards the reception and welcome to be accorded to His Royal Highness. Discordant voices have no doubt been raised outside the House, but it was quite a surprise to all of us, and I think I voice the sentiment of the entire House when I say, that it was a surprise to us, that one who has taken his Oath of Allegiance to the Crown should rise in this House to protest against the welcome that is to be given to His Royal Highness. The head of the Royal House, I mean the head of the British Commonwealth, is not an autocrat, but all the same under the constitution we know what the Royal House is capable of doing. I remember the day to which my Honourable friend, Mr. Jamnadas referred—I remember the day—perhaps he was not born then—when the King-Emperor Edward came here in the year 1875. We were in college then and we gave him a hearty welcome. Then, when I was a grown-up man in 1905, we took part in the reception of his son, the then Prince of Wales, our present King-Emperor. It is our duty and privilege to accord to the King's son and heir a hearty welcome when he comes here to acquaint himself with the wishes and aspirations of the people of this country. Our loyalty should not be like that of a trader expecting benefits in return. The King of England represents in him the symbol of the unity and equality of this empire of divergent races and creeds, and the very fact that the King's son is coming here ought to be sufficient for us to join together with one purpose to accord him the best reception that this country can give. A discordant note has been raised outside the House, but, I think, that it is time for them to reconsider their position, because I am told, as one of their spokesmen has said, that they are also loyal to the King, as well as to the Prince of Wales; and I ask how far it would be consistent with their loyalty to withhold welcome to the Prince of Wales? If they withhold welcome, it will rather tend to create more friction. Therefore, I appeal to their best instincts, that on this occasion at least they should suspend their policy of non-co-operation and join with us in according the heartiest reception to the Prince of Wales.

Mr. S. C. Shahani: In rising to support the amended Resolution of Dr. Gour, I rise to express the hope that the Address of Welcome, that is to be presented to His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, will be presented by the Indian Legislature in the Assembly Chamber at Delhi. It will not be in keeping with the dignity of the Indian Legislature to present this Address anywhere else. The words used by Dr. Gour to the effect that arrangements might be made for presenting this Address suggest that possibly some other place was contemplated,—a joint Address from the Princes or, for instance, other representative bodies of the Indian people and that will not be desirable.

Just a word, Sir, with regard to the discordant note of opposition that has been sounded by my friend, Mr. Agnihotri. In my opinion, it is unbecoming that we who have consented to come here to represent the people in the Indian Legislative Assembly should rise to oppose the presentation of such an Address. I think it would have been desirable on the part of my friend not to have consented to come to this Assembly. We have to carry on the Government of India, and is it possible to conceive that this Government can be carried on without due loyalty to the head of the Government, namely, the Emperor of India? It is said, that the country is poor, a statement, of course, which is to be doubted. The industrial resources of India are unlimited and even admitting for argument's sake that the country is poor, the expenditure that may be incurred in making appropriate arrangements for a visit from His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales would be well incurred. It has been stated, that the people outside are opposed to an Address of Welcome. My own idea is, that the people have not had an opportunity of understanding the two sides of the question. The masses are being misled, because they have been hard hit by the high prices that have ruled in the country and they have not had adequate means of judging on their own account. If some of them are being misled, there is no reason why we, who can think on our own account, should agree with what is being most unwittingly stated in the country. If anybody thought of sounding a discordant note, he should have, in my opinion, taken counsel with some of his friends. I am really very sorry that this note has been sounded. We should be unanimous on occasions such as this. I request Mr. Agnihotri to think over what he has stated and withdraw the opposition of which he has been guilty.

The Honourable Dr. T. F. Sapru: Sir, I did not intend in the slightest degree to take part in the discussion which has so suddenly sprung out of the Resolution moved by my friend, Dr. Gour, and, if I venture to address a few remarks, it is only because of the discordant note that has been struck this morning. After all, if one comes to coolly think of the incident, it seems to me that it is really a distinct service to this Assembly which has been rendered by my friend, Mr. Agnihotri. It will enable you to demonstrate beyond all doubt the strength of the feeling which lies behind the Resolution of my friend, Dr. Gour. I was hesitating to speak to you this morning, particularly because I occupy an official position, but I hope my claim as an Indian will not be denied by any one amongst you, European or Indian. Those of you who have decided to come into this Assembly, those of us who are prepared to stand by the reforms, be they good or be they bad, have no reason at all to sympathise with or in the slightest degree to favour the attitude which has been taken by my friend, Mr. Agnihotri. If you believe in the short-lived politics of the day, if you deny to yourselves the privilege of looking into the future, you will certainly be justified in welcoming the opposition which has come from that bench. But if you for a moment analyse and visualise to yourselves the position to which you have been driven by that opposition, I have not the smallest possible doubt that there will be one answer and only one answer to that attitude, and that is, that you are determined to carry that Resolution in spite of opposition. You may have your quarrels with the Bureaucracy, with white bureaucrats, or brown bureaucrat like myself, I do not care. You may say that the Bureaucracy does not deserve to live more than the remaining days of this month when Swaraj must be established. But, may I ask you in all sincerity, what is it after all that you mean by the Swaraj for, which you are striving? Do you mean by Swaraj that you want Self-Government under the aegis of the British Crown? Or, do you mean frankly that you do not care to be under the British Crown? We are, if I may say so, at the parting of ways. We must search our hearts, and be true to our convictions. If there are men amongst us who are determined, who have made up their minds that they will have nothing to do with the British Crown, they are certainly justified in honestly, boldly and courageously saying that they have nothing to do with the King of this Empire or the Heir Apparent. But so long as you recognise your duty as a British subject, I say, it is your duty also at the same time to offer your unqualified loyal reception to the Prince of Wales. Let us not tinker with that position. Let us be clear in our minds.

Those of us who have taken the Oath of Allegiance must be true to that Oath. I take it, that it is an essential part of that Oath of Allegiance that you should show due loyalty and respect to the King and his son. I do not approach this question in an angry or light-hearted spirit. It raises, to my mind, the most vital question, which goes to the very root of politics at the present moment. We have each one of us to decide what is going to be our attitude in future with regard to the British connection in this country. I say, we must be quite clear in our minds before we vote, and if we are true to our conviction, and if we believe in the continuance of the British connection, and if we want Swaraj, as I do as much as any of you under the British Crown, then we must condemn this opposition which has been shown by the Member from the Central Provinces.

Mr. K. P. L. Agnihotri: My attitude on this Resolution has nothing to do with disloyalty and has been taken with due regard to the Oath of Allegiance and loyalty to the Sovereign and in the faithful discharge of duty imposed thereby. I am as loyal to His Royal Highness and to the Throne as any of the Honourable Members present here. My object was simply to represent the point of view and feelings of the majority of the masses in the country, and I am actuated with motive of strengthening the bonds between the subjects and the Crown. If I were a non-co-operator, I would certainly not have been in this House.

The Honourable the President: The question is, that the following Resolution be adopted:

‘This Assembly recommends to the Governor General in Council that he may be pleased to convey to His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales its humble request that he may be graciously pleased to accept a loyal and dutiful Address of Welcome from the Indian Legislature; and further recommends that the co-operation of the Council of State be invited therefor and that a Committee of both Chambers to which the following Members of this Assembly shall be nominated be appointed to draft the Address.

The motion was adopted.

[Dr. H. S. Gour.]

Dr. H. S. Gour: The second Resolution is purely consequential. I recommend to this House the words of the Honourable Sir William Vincent:

'That this Committee should be manageable in proportions and in numbers.'

I have given the list of 11 names. I believe, the Council of State would be equally entitled to have, say, 11 persons. The result would be that the number from both Houses will be 22.

The Bombay Presidency has not been represented, and I wish therefore to add the name of Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas. A Muhammadan gentleman complained that there was no Muhammadan representative and I should be glad to add one more name to the list of Members of this committee. Well, Sir, I may point out, if you will permit me, that I have been told that we must have here representatives of all the provinces, and we have been also told we must have representatives of all the races, and, then, of all the professions. Sir William Vincent has pointed out, that a small drafting committee comprising, say, 12 or 15 people would be as much as would be required in the circumstances of the case, and I hope the House will agree with me in confining the committee to 15 and not more. I have already given notice of 11 names. I wish to add three more, Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas, Shaikh Rajan Baksh Shah and Mr. Cotelingam. That would make, Sir, 14 names.

I move, Sir, the following motion:

'That the following Members do constitute the drafting committee: Sir Sivaswamy Aiyer, Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar, Prof. Shahani, Mr. Harchandrai Vishindas, Chaudhri Shahab-ud-Din, Lala Girdharilal Agarwala, Mr. J. Chaudhuri, Babu Khitish Chandra Neogy, Sir Frank Carter, Lieutenant-Colonel Gidney, Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas, Shaikh Rajan Baksh Shah, Mr. Cotelingam, and the Mover.'

The Honourable the President: Before I put the motion from the Chair, I must inquire from the Mover whether he has the authority of these gentlemen for putting their names on this committee.

Dr. H. S. Gour: I have the authority of all except Mr. Neogy, and Sir Frank Carter.

The Honourable the President: Then the names of Sir Frank Carter and Mr. Neogy fall out.

Dr. H. S. Gour: I therefore wish to substitute Mr. Rhodes for Sir Frank Carter. I have the authority of Mr. Rhodes. In place of Mr. Neogy, I propose Rai Bahadur Debi Charan Barua.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: As Madras does not want to be represented by more than one Member, and with the permission of Sir Sivaswamy Aiyer, I propose the omission of his name.

The Honourable the President: The question is:

'That the drafting committee referred to in part 1 of the Resolution should be composed of the following Members:

- (1) Sir P. S. Sivaswamy Aiyer,
- (2) Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar,
- (3) Prof. Shahani,
- (4) Chaudhri Shahab-ud-Din,

- (5) Lala Girdharilal Agarwala,
- (6) Mr. J. Chaudhuri,
- (7) H. Vishindas,
- (8) Mr. C. W. Rhodes,
- (9) Babu Debi Charan Barua,
- (10) Mr. Cotelingam,
- (11) Syed Rajan Baksh Shah,
- (12) Lieut.-Colonel Gidney,
- (13) Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas,
- (14) The Mover.

That is the motion as moved. The question is, that the motion be adopted.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: I move that Sir Sivaswamy Aiyer's name be omitted. I do so at his own request.

The Honourable the President: The Honourable Member has taken a somewhat unusual course in withdrawing his own name. I presume it is all right. The question is, that the name of Sir Sivaswamy Aiyer be expunged.

(Cries of 'No! No!')

The Honourable the President: If I say, the 'Noes' have it, the Honourable Member simply withdraws his name. The House cannot compel him. The 'Noes' have it.

The following names were then put and accepted:

- Sir Sivaswamy Aiyer.
Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar.
Professor S. C. Shahani.
Mr. Harchandrai Vishindas.
Chaudhri Shahab-ud-Din.
Lala Girdharilal Agarwala.
Mr. J. Chaudhuri.
Mr. C. W. Rhodes.
Rai Bahadur Debi Charan Barua.
Mr. J. P. Cotelingam.
Syed Rajan Baksh Shah.
Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas.
Lieut.-Colonel H. A. J. Gidney, and
Dr. H. S. Gour.

The motion was adopted.

Bhai Man Singh: Sir, there are certain amendments.....

The Honourable the President: Order, Order. There is no amendment standing in the name of Bhai Man Singh.

Rai Sahib Lakshmi Narayan Lal: Sir, there is one amendment standing in my name as to the personnel of the committee. I do not know what the position now is.

The Honourable the President: It is a comparative formality as to what names should appear in the list. It apparently satisfies the House that the Resolution with the addition of the names proposed by Dr. Gour should be accepted by the House.

Rai Sahib Lakshmi Narayan Lal: Then I withdraw my amendment.

The amendment was, by leave of the Assembly, withdrawn.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: There is another Resolution set down in the Honourable Member's name.

The Honourable the President: Was the Honourable Member referring to the second Resolution standing in his name?

Rai Sahib Lakshmi Narayan Lal: There are three amendments standing in my name.

The Honourable the President: I call upon Rai Sahib Lakshmi Narayan Lal to move Resolution No. 2 on the list.

WELCOME TO H. E. LORD READING.

Rai Sahib Lakshmi Narayan Lal: Sir, the Resolution which I have the honour to move is that:

'This Assembly recommends to the Governor General in Council to convey to His Excellency Lord Reading a warm and hearty welcome on his appointment as Viceroy and Governor General of India.'

His Excellency Lord Reading took over the charge of Viceroy and Governor General of India after the first Session of this Assembly was over and, therefore, though many of us had the honour of receiving and welcoming His Excellency at the Viceregal Lodge, Delhi, at the time of His Excellency's arrival there, this Assembly got no opportunity before of according its warm and hearty welcome to His Excellency which we are going to do to-day on the opening of this new Session.

In moving this Resolution, I am sure, I am echoing the wishes of all the Honourable Members of this House; we are indeed very grateful to His Majesty the King-Emperor for granting us the advantage of having as our Viceroy and Governor General the Lord Chief Justice of England who is distinguished for his remarkable true statesmanship, vast experience and many other eminent qualities of head and heart. His Excellency, before coming to India, was pleased to observe that it was not he but the Lord Chief Justice of England who was going to India to administer justice and declared it to be his determination that justice shall prevail during his administration of the country. His Excellency has already begun in right earnest to translate into action the aims and objects of his grand mission of Liberty, Equality and Justice for India and we fully trust that His Excellency will be pleased further to direct his acute imagination and insight into the present political problems of the country, take timely and steady steps to remove the root causes of the public unrest and to satisfy the national aspirations of the people and that His Excellency's esteemed name shall be written in golden letters in the future history of India as the Viceroy and Governor General during whose illustrious regime India got full recognition of her legitimate claim to equal partnership in the British Commonwealth. I heartily move this Resolution.

The Resolution was adopted.

DEMAND FOR SUPPLEMENTARY GRANT.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: Sir, under Rule 50 of the Indian Legislative Rules, I submit to the vote of the Assembly, a Demand for a Supplementary Grant of rupees one lakh towards the cost of the proposed delegation of the Empire Parliamentary Association to India during 1921-22.

The Empire Parliamentary Association includes amongst its Members, Members of Parliament of the United Kingdom and all the Self-governing Dominions, and it is the practice of that Association to send delegates to visit various parts of the Empire from time to time. For some years this Association has desired to send a delegation to India. Originally the arrangements were proposed for such a visit in 1919-20 and again in 1920-1921. In 1920, the proposal was to send 30 Members from different Parliaments, including the Parliaments of the United Kingdom, Canada, Australia, South Africa, New Zealand and Newfoundland for the study of political and industrial conditions here.

It was impossible, however, owing to various circumstances to give effect to those arrangements last year. And it has therefore been suggested that the delegation should visit India during the present year. The custom, when this delegation visits any dominion, according to our information, is that the cost is met partly by subscription and partly by grant from the revenues of the country visited, the delegation ordinarily being regarded as the guests of the country so honoured. In 1920-21, we proposed a grant of Rs. one lakh for this purpose. This was not intended in any way to cover the cost of the journey to India but merely the cost of transport in India itself and incidental expenses, and we propose to offer a similar grant this year, if the demand is voted. We have not as yet issued any formal invitation to the delegation to come here, because we could not do so in anticipation of the grant from this House, but Government do regard it as important that the invitation should issue as early as possible, and that is my excuse for putting forward the demand for this grant at the present moment. I understand other demands will be put forward by the Honourable the Finance Member at a later stage, but we have been pressed to come to an early decision on this question in order that an early decision may be reached as to whether the invitation should be issued or not; this really entirely depends upon this Assembly and on the decision whether they will give this grant of money or not. We put up the proposal before the Standing Finance Committee, and they supported it, but expressed a desire that the Indian Legislature should be included in the Association. We referred that matter to the Secretary of State for his observations. He has replied, that this is a matter which will have to be decided by the Association itself according to its constitution. I understand that the Association at present includes only the Self-governing Dominions, but we hope that when the members of this delegation come to this country, if they do so, they will be able to arrive at a perfectly reasonable understanding on this point with the Members of this House and the Council of State.

It is customary in these matters to afford some facilities to, and to incur expenditure in, the entertainment of distinguished guests, and, we believe, that India has much to gain from the visit of such an influential Association as this. We think that it is possible that mistaken views of the political situation in India would be dispelled and that it is important, that Members of the different Parliaments, and particularly those for the Self-governing Dominions with whom we have, from time to time, differences should have first hand evidence on the effect of the Reforms, the capacity, industry and sense of responsibility, if I may say so, of the new Chambers. I believe myself that nothing will more tend to political progress in this country than the acquisition and dissemination of such knowledge. I may say, therefore, that in the opinion of Government this money will be well spent, but it rests entirely with this Assembly to vote it or not. We do not seek to force the hands of the Assembly in any way. I may repeat, that the grant, even if it is made, will only cover a portion of the expenses, and I may add, that we should not like India to appear less generous in this respect than other Self-governing Dominions, particularly when, as I believe, the expenditure will tend to the great political advantage of this country. Finally, I may say, that I believe that informal discussions between the members of the delegation and the Members of this Assembly will be of the utmost benefit. For all these reasons, I commend the demand to the considerations of the House.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar : Sir, I heartily support this motion. When this matter came up before the Standing Finance Committee, the question arose as to whether we should make it a condition precedent that our Legislature should also be recognised for membership in this Association or whether we should merely throw a hint asking them to make the Indian Legislature also eligible for membership: I was glad to hear, that the matter had been communicated to the Secretary of State, and that it has been finally decided that it should not be made a condition precedent to making the grant, but only to convey an expression of our wish that we also would like to be considered as a Self-governing country, although we are not. But as we hope and expect that even within the period of ten years which are provided for us, we will become a Self-governing country, we wish to extend our hand of hospitality to this Association. One lakh of rupees is a mere drop in the ocean of crores which we are spending, and I therefore urge upon the Assembly to vote for this grant.

Mr. Harchandrai Vishindas : Sir, while heartily supporting this demand for a supplementary grant of one lakh of rupees towards the cost of the proposed delegation of the Empire Parliamentary Association to India, I think it is due to the Assembly that some information should be vouchsafed to them, that is to say, what the programme of this delegation is, when the question as to whether this Legislature should also be associated with this delegation is to be discussed, whether it will be during the sittings of the Assembly that this delegation will be visiting this country, and what means have been provided for affording opportunity for discussion between the Members of the Assembly and those of the delegation.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : I hope the Honourable Member will excuse me for suggesting that it would be a little premature for the Government to enter into a discussion with the members of this delegation as to what places they will visit, whom they will meet and so on, until we are assured that this Assembly will grant the money for the purpose. The Government of India, owing to this grant not having been allowed up to now, have up to the present not issued even a formal invitation to the delegation. I shall be very glad to give the Honourable Member all the information he seeks later, but I think he is asking too much at present.

Mr. Harchandrai Vishindas : I am quite content.

Mr. N. M. Joshi : Sir, as a Member of the Standing Finance Committee, I had also an opportunity of considering this question very carefully, and after having done that, I rise to support the motion put forward before this Assembly by the Honourable the Home Member. Sir, we in this Assembly call ourselves the Parliament of India, and as the Parliament of India, it is our privilege to welcome the Members of the Parliaments of the different nations in the British Empire. I therefore feel that it is right that we should welcome them and offer our hearty hospitality in a manner which befits our country. Sir, I frankly admit that there was a time when the word 'Empire' had some horror for me, because it connoted the subjection of our country by another, but now the time has come when the statesmen of the Empire call this Empire a Commonwealth of free nations and as such they admit that India also is an equally free member of that Commonwealth, and, therefore, the connotation of that word has now changed and we can now feel pride in being a part of the British Empire.

Then, Sir, it naturally occurs to us that this British Empire delegation is to include delegates from all Colonies of the British Empire, including even South Africa. It is a matter for serious consideration for us if the Members of the Parliament of South Africa are included in this delegation, whether we can give them the welcome which we shall very heartily give to the representatives of other Members of the British Empire.

Sir, it is natural that we should feel some indignation when the mention of the Parliament of South Africa is made. I would, therefore, like to press on this Assembly to consider this question very seriously but coolly.

Sir, the Members of the Parliament of South Africa do not certainly deserve a welcome, at least a hearty welcome, from the Members of this Assembly.

At the same time, we learn from the Resolution passed at the Imperial Conference that the Government of India is going to negotiate with the Government of South Africa on this question.

The Honourable the President : Order, Order. The Honourable Member will realise that if I allow him to embark on a controversial issue between a Dominion Government and the Government of India, I must allow others to apply the same precedent in other directions. I hope he will draw his remarks on this particular aspect to a conclusion.

Mr. N. M. Joshi : Sir, I submit to your decision. I only wish to say to this Assembly, that although we may not oppose the inclusion of the delegates from South Africa in this delegation, still the welcome which we may give to them will not be as hearty as it will be in the case of others.

[5TH SEPT. 1921.]

[Mr. N. M. Joshi.]

Sir, I support this Resolution moved by the Honourable the Home Member.

Mr. R. A. Spence : Mr. President, with reference to the remarks made by my Honourable friend, Mr. Joshi, I think that the reasons he has stated in regard to South Africa are reasons for according a very hearty welcome to South Africa. We want the representatives of the South African Parliament to come to India because we feel, that if they do, there will be a better chance of a true realisation on their part of what India is and that there will be more friendship with and better knowledge of India in South Africa.

The motion for the demand for a supplementary grant of one lakh of rupees towards the cost of the proposed delegation of the Empire Parliamentary Association to India during 1921-22 was put to the vote of the Assembly and carried.

THE INDIAN FACTORIES (AMENDMENT) BILL.

Mr. A. C. Chatterjee : Sir, I rise to move :

‘That Sir Vithaldas Thackersey and myself be nominated to serve on the Joint Committee to consider and report on the Bill further to amend the Indian Factories Act, 1911.’

The name of Sir Vithaldas Thackersey is being proposed to replace the late Mr. Rahimtoola Currimbhoy, whose premature death we all deeply deplore. I have obtained the consent of Sir Vithaldas Thackersey to serve on the Committee.

The motion was adopted.

THE INDIAN ELECTRICITY (AMENDMENT) BILL.

Mr. A. C. Chatterjee : Sir, I rise to move :

‘That Munshi Mahadeo Prasad, Sir Vithaldas Thackersey and myself be nominated to serve on the Joint Committee to consider and report on the Bill further to amend the Indian Electricity Act, 1910.’

Sir Vithaldas Thackersey will replace the late Mr. Rahimtoola Currimbhoy and Munshi Mahadeo Prasad, it is suggested, will replace Mr. Sachchidananda Sinha who has now left this Assembly for office in his own province. I have obtained the consent of both these gentlemen to serve.

The motion was adopted.

THE INDIAN PENAL CODE (AMENDMENT) BILL.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : Sir, I move :

‘That the Honourable Mr. Clayton, the Honourable Mr. Lyle and myself be nominated to serve on the Select Committee to consider and report on the Bill further to amend the Indian Penal Code, 1860.’

Honourable Members will remember that this Bill was referred to a Select Committee on the 17th of March. Two of the Members of the Committee, then appointed, namely, Mr. Keith and Mr. O'Donnell, have ceased to be Members of the Assembly. I hope therefore that this Honourable Assembly will agree to substitute Mr. Lyle and Mr. Clayton and myself for those gentlemen who have now ceased to be available for service on the Committee. I must, under the rule, having now become a Member of this Assembly, also be a Member of this Committee.

The motion was adopted.

THE MAINTENANCE ORDERS ENFORCEMENT BILL.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : Sir, I move :

‘That I myself be nominated to serve on the Select Committee to consider and report on the Bill to facilitate the Enforcement in British India of Maintenance Orders made in other parts of His Majesty's Dominions and Protectorates and vice versa.’

The Member formerly nominated to this Committee has ceased to be a Member of this Assembly and under the rules that the Member in charge of the particular branch of the Department is required to be a Member of the Select Committee on a Bill affecting that Department.

The motion was adopted.

CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE (AMENDMENT) BILL.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : Sir, I ask for leave to defer the next motion* that stands in my name and make a short statement of my reasons for doing so. This Bill, which was circulated for information last Session, is a Bill for the protection of persons against false civil suits. I think there will be no denial that the evil against which the Bill is directed is prevalent in certain parts of the country. The Bill has now been circulated and we have received the opinions of most of the Local Governments, some however have been received so late that the Government have not had time to examine them and I am quite certain that Members of this Assembly have not been able to do so. Two important Local Governments have also not submitted any opinions up to now. In the circumstances, it is, I think, incumbent on Government to defer consideration of the Bill and, to give the Assembly an opportunity and the Government itself an opportunity of examining these opinions. I ought also to say that the opinions which have been received are not unanimous in accepting the principle of the Bill; in these circumstances, I ask for leave to defer the motion, and I may mention that I am not at all sure that it will not be necessary to appoint a small committee further to examine the essential principles upon which this Bill is based. I am quite certain, that in this action of mine, I shall have the support of those who have made any study of the subject under discussion.

The motion on the paper was, by leave of the Assembly, withdrawn.

THE INDIAN EMIGRATION (AMENDMENT) BILL.

Mr. J. Hullah : I have to move, Sir :

‘That the Bill to amend the law relating to emigration be referred to a Select Committee consisting of the Honourable Dr. Sapru, Mr. Innes, Mr. N. M. Joshi, Mr. C. W. Rhodes, Rai Sahib Lakshmi Narayan Lal, Mr. Bhupatiraju Venkatapatiraju, Mr. Salebhoy Karimji Barodawalla, Haji Wajih-ud-din, Sardar Gulab Singh, Babu K. C. Neogy, Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar and the Mover.’

* ‘That the Bill further to amend the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, be referred to a Select Committee consisting of the Honourable Dr. Sapru, Mr. Percival, Mr. Lyle, Sir Sivaswamy Aiyer, Mr. Samarth, Munshi Lawar Singh, Babu Satish Chander Ghosh, Chaudhri Shahab-ud-Din and the Mover.’

[Mr. J. Hullah.]

I have not been able, Sir, to obtain the assent of two of these gentlemen. The rest have assented. I have, however, obtained the assent of two other gentlemen whose names I should like to substitute. May I do so? Then, in place of Mr. Barodawalla and Mr. Neogy, I propose the names of Mr. Jannadas Dwarkadas and Mr. J. Chaudhuri.

The motion with the list of names, as amended, was adopted.

THE NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS (AMENDMENT) BILL.

Mr. C. A. Innes : I move for leave to introduce :

'A Bill further to amend the Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881.'

Last year the Government of India amended this Act by the insertion of a Section, Section 75A, which excuses the delay in the presentment of a bill for payment if that delay is caused by circumstances beyond the control of the holder. When we were consulting commercial opinion at the time with regard to that amendment, two other amendments of the Act were suggested for the consideration of the Government of India one by the Bengal Chamber of Commerce and the other by the late Bank of Madras. These two suggestions were referred in due course to Local Governments, and through them to the Chambers of Commerce, European and Indian, and other commercial associations in the country, and I think I may say that the Bill, which I ask leave to introduce, has the unanimous support of commercial opinion behind. It is first proposed to extend, by an amendment of Sections 63 and 83 of the Act, the limit of time now imposed by the Act for obtaining the acceptance of a bill of exchange. That limit of time, as the Act stands at present, is twenty-four hours, and in this respect our Act follows the English law and English practice. Section 42 of the Bills of Exchange Act prescribes that a bill of exchange must be accepted within the customary time, and in so far as trade bills at any rate are concerned, the effect of this provision of the law is that a bill left for acceptance within the business hours of one day and not accepted before the close of the business hours on the following day must be noted for non-acceptance or otherwise treated as dishonoured. That period of twenty-four hours worked well enough in a small country like England, but it has been represented to us that the time is inconveniently short in the circumstances of India. An undue extension of the time is, of course, out of the question and having regard to the intervening rights of third parties would be contrary to the whole principle of the Act. But it has been suggested to us that a reasonable extension of this period of 24 hours might be allowed, and the proposal has been made that the period of 24 hours should be extended to forty-eight hours. As I have stated, we referred this proposal to all Chambers of Commerce and other commercial associations in India through Local Governments. All these Chambers of Commerce are unanimous that some extension of the time is necessary, and accepting this opinion we are proposing an amendment of these two Sections of the Act which will extend the limit of time of 24 hours to 48 hours.

The second amendment does not require much explanation. As I have already mentioned, last year we amended the Act by the insertion of a clause which now appears as Section 75A and which excuses delay in the presentment of a bill for payment if the delay is caused by circumstances beyond the control of the holder and is not due to his misconduct or negligence. It has been suggested to us that delays in presentment for acceptance might similarly be excused on the same conditions. Here, again, the commercial opinion of the country is unanimously in favour of the change, and, therefore, we are submitting it for the consideration of this House. I move for leave to introduce the Bill.

The motion was adopted.

Mr. C. A. Innes : I now introduce the Bill :

THE CARRIERS (AMENDMENT) BILL.

Mr. C. A. Innes : Sir, I move for leave to introduce :

'A Bill further to amend the Carriers Act, 1865, in order to empower the Governor General in Council to make by notification additions to the Schedule to that Act, and to free a common carrier from liability under that Act for loss or damage, arising from the negligence of himself or of any of his agents or servants, in respect of any property, which, being of the value of over one hundred rupees and of the description contained in the Schedule to that Act, has not been declared in accordance with the provisions of Section 3.'

Though the title is a long one, the Bill raises only a small point. The main object of the Bill is to remove a certain inconsistency in the provisions of the Act which has been just brought to our notice by a decision in the Calcutta High Court. Section 3 of the Act prescribes :

'No common carrier shall be liable for the loss or damage to property delivered to him to be carried exceeding in value one hundred rupees and of the description contained in the Schedule to this Act, unless the person delivering such property to be carried or some person duly authorised in that behalf, shall have expressly declared to such carrier or his agent the value and description thereof.'

I may mention that the articles included in the Schedule are mostly articles of high value but small bulk, such as gold and silver coins, gold and silver manufactures, precious stones and pearls, jewellery, time-pieces of any description, trinkets, bills and hundis, currency notes and the like. Section 4 of the Act enables a carrier under certain conditions to make an increased charge on such articles in view of the extra risk undertaken by him. The declaration under Section 3 is required in order that the carrier may know that he is being asked to carry property of specially high value or specially frail character and that he may take due precautions in the carriage of such articles. Now, Sir, I turn to Section 8 of the Act. This Section runs as follows :

'Notwithstanding anything hereinbefore contained, every common carrier shall be liable to the owner for loss of or damage to any property delivered to such carrier to be carried where such loss or damage shall have arisen from the negligence or criminal act of the carrier or any of his agents or servants.'

It will be observed that this Section, as it is worded, and as it is now interpreted by the courts, renders nugatory the protection which Section 3 was intended to afford to the carrier. This point has recently been brought out in a decision of the Appellate Bench of the Calcutta High Court and I shall give a very short description of that case. In this case, a passenger on a steamer took with him six packages of silk thread. Silk thread is one of the articles scheduled under the Act, and the packages being over Rs. 100 in value, he should have declared the silk thread under Section 3 of the Act. He did not do so. He booked them as ordinary luggage with the result that the company was not able to take any special precautions for the safety of the packages. The steamers caught fire, and the packages were destroyed. The passenger filed a suit against the company. Under Section 9 of the Act, the passenger had merely to prove that the packages had been destroyed. He had not to prove that there had been negligence or a criminal act. It was for the company to prove that there had been no negligence and no criminal act, and since the cause of the fire was unknown, the company was unable to discharge that obligation. Therefore the High Court held that the steamer had caught fire owing to the negligence of the company and they held that the company was liable for the full value of the packages. Their Lordships remarked :

'Reading Sections 3 and 4 with Section 8, it appears that although a common carrier is not liable for the loss or damage of property of a certain description above Rs. 100 in value, unless the value and description thereof are expressly declared by the person delivering them to be carried, and although the carriers are entitled to charge a higher rate for such properties, he is liable for the loss or damage to such properties, if such loss or damage arises from the negligence or criminal act of the carrier, or, any of his servants or agents.'

It is noteworthy, however, that the High Court did not allow the plaintiff his costs in any of the three courts in which his suit had been heard, although these costs probably exceeded the value of the claim. The effect of the ruling is, that though a carrier may be given no chance to take any special precautions against negligence in respect of scheduled articles, he is liable for negligence. The matter is, therefore, a very serious one for carriers, since some of the scheduled articles may be of high value. Thus carriers in India are exposed to great risks, and it is thought that the law in India in this matter should be assimilated to the law in England. In England, the law is that if goods corresponding to the articles scheduled in our Act are sent by a carrier for conveyance without a declaration of their net value and without any payment of, or an engagement to pay, an increased charge, the carrier is not liable for loss, even though such loss may be caused by the negligence of himself or his servants or agents. It is for the consideration of this House whether we should not amend our Carriers Act so as to bring our law in India into consonance with the law in England in this matter. The effect of the amendment proposed in Section 8 of the Act is, that if articles of the description contained in the schedule are not declared as they should be declared under Section 3, then the carrier will not be held responsible for negligence on the ground that he had no opportunity for taking special precautions. If the articles are declared, then the carrier will remain responsible for negligence and his liability in respect of criminal act on the part of himself or his servants remains in either case. Local Governments have been consulted on the amendment we propose in the Act, and we are informed that commercial opinion in the country is in favour of the change in the law, which we propose. There is only one exception mentioned in the correspondence, and that is a single Trades Association.

The second point in which we propose to amend the Act is of much less importance. It is proposed, if the House has no objection, to take the opportunity of making another small change. At present no addition may be made to the schedule of articles appended to the Act without an amendment of the Act in each case. The procedure is cumbrous. The Railway Act empowers Government to add to the schedule merely by a notification in the Gazette, and it is thought that in the case of this Act also, similar confidence might be placed in the Executive Government.

The motion was adopted.

Mr. C. A. Innes : I introduce the Bill, further to amend the Carriers Act, 1865.

THE INDIAN POST OFFICE (AMENDMENT) BILL.

Mr. C. A. Innes : Sir, I move for leave to introduce :

'A Bill further to amend the Indian Post Office Act, 1898.'

A brief statement of the reasons which have induced Government to submit this Bill for the consideration of this House has been circulated to Members. But I fear that my business friends in the House will be apt to look askance at a Bill which might be held in some way to infringe the sanctity of His Majesty's mails, and, therefore, if the House will permit me, I propose to enter into the matter a little more in detail.

It is a settled principle of postal practice throughout the civilised world, that articles liable to customs duty should not be sent by letter mail. The practice has been forbidden by the Principal Convention of Rome; the prohibition was confirmed by the Principal Convention of Madrid, which was signed only last year; and it has long been notified to the public by being included as a Post Office rule in the Indian Postal Guide.

We have known for many years, however, that the prohibition has been systematically and steadily evaded. Diamonds, precious stones, jewellery, silk handkerchiefs, silk ties and similar articles of high value and small bulk are still regularly sent by the letter mail, and since 1917 three successive Collectors of Customs at Bombay have drawn our attention to the increasing loss of revenue, which increased resort to this forbidden practice is causing Government. Finally, last year, Mr. Hardy, then Collector of Customs at Bombay, adduced facts and figures which left no doubt in the mind of the Government of India that the loss of revenue was assuming serious proportions. He estimated the loss at Rs. 10 lakhs per annum. If his estimate was correct, then the loss must now be much greater. For in the interval two new factors have come into play. In the first place, our import duties have been heavily increased and the temptation to try to smuggle in valuable goods by the letter post is even greater than it was before. Secondly, there has recently been a very large increase in the rates of parcel post from the United Kingdom as compared with letter rates, so that more and more use will inevitably be made of the letter post for articles which can be sent by letter. If, therefore, Mr. Hardy was correct last year in his estimate, that we were losing Rs. 10 lakhs a year by evasion of the prohibition of sending dutiable articles by letter, the loss must now be approaching something like Rs. 20 lakhs a year, and it is believed to be increasing.

Now the present method of assessing to duty articles liable to duty contained in the foreign letter mail is prescribed by Section 24 of the Post Office Act. We have power to detain parcels received by post from any place beyond the limits of British India, at the Customs port or other place at which they are received, and the Customs officers can and do open parcels for the purpose of levying duties. But when letters received by the Foreign letter mail are suspected to contain anything liable to duty, the procedure prescribed by the Act is as follows :

The officer in charge of the Post Office sends a notice in writing to the addressee inviting him to attend in person or by agent at the Post Office. The packet is then opened in the presence of the addressee or his agent. If a dutiable article is found in the packet, it is assessed to duty either by the officer in charge of the Post Office or in more serious cases at the port of entry, where it is sent back for assessment. This procedure works well enough in Bombay itself, for there in practice the Customs authorities are associated with the postal officials in opening and examining letters and in assessing to duty the articles found therein. But, in the mofussil, the practice does not work well. It is inconvenient to the public, and uncongenial to postal officials. It imposes on them duties for which they are not fitted and which they do not regard as being within the sphere of their legitimate functions. These duties, moreover, bring them into unpleasant relations with the public, and there is reason to fear that they are often scamped and neglected to the detriment of the Government revenue. In this connection, I can give the House some interesting figures. In 1919-20, Rs. 16,06,803 were credited to Bombay Customs revenue from collections on letter packets. Of this sum, Rs. 3,803 were recovered in the mofussil on 1,792 packets. The balance, amounting to Rs. 16 lakhs odd, being recovered on 8,153 packets addressed to people resident in Bombay.

We have considered numerous suggestions for remedy in consultation with the Director-General of the Post Office and Telegraph Department. We have considered whether we should not make it worth the while of Postmasters properly to discharge their functions under Section 24 of the Act by offering them a commission on the customs duty they are instrumental in collecting. But as the House will readily realise this expedient was promptly negatived as bad in principle, demoralising in practice and unfair generally to the public. Other suggestions have similarly been considered and rejected, and finally we have arrived at the conclusion, that either we must leave things as they are and let the loss of revenue continue, or we must amend Section 24 of the Post Office Act. As this House knows, our finances are not exactly in a prosperous condition. We are not prepared ourselves therefore to take the responsibility of winking at a loss of revenue, which, as I have already said, we believe to be assuming serious proportions. We have decided, therefore, to ask the Legislature to consider whether it will agree to an amendment of Section 24 of the Post Office Act. That is, we propose to omit the third proviso to Section 24 of the Act and to insert a new Section 24-A which will enable any Postal official empowered in this behalf to deliver any postal article in the foreign letter or parcel mail which is suspected to contain anything dutiable to a specially empowered Customs officer to be dealt with under the Sea Customs Act. Section 194 of that Act, it may be noticed, empowers a Customs officer to open and examine any package brought to a Customs port and he can of course assess to duty any dutiable articles found therein.

Now I hope that no one in this House will think that we have any intention of holding up at Bombay the whole of the foreign mail in order that we may go through it with a microscope and pick out any letters which we may suspect to contain dutiable goods. We have no intention of delaying the ordinary foreign mail for one moment. But a certain amount of sorting is done at Bombay and if in the course of that sorting letters are found which obviously contain articles of jewellery, silk handkerchiefs and other dutiable goods, these letters will be detained and examined under the powers we ask for.

The registered foreign mail, however, is of more importance in this connection for the dutiable goods we have in mind are mainly sent in registered letters. Mr. Clarke originally informed us that he could easily arrange for the General Post Office in London and for Continental Sorting Offices to sort the registered mail for India in separate bags for Bombay, Calcutta, Madras, Karachi and Rangoon. He reported, that if this were done, the bags could be examined with a minimum of delay. The contents would be spread out on tables and it would then be an easy matter for an expert Postal or Customs official to pick out letters which contained not merely letters and documents but goods. He suggested that these special bags should be separated and detained. The rest of the registered mail would be put back in their bags and sent on their way. Mr. Clarke reported that the whole process would not take long, especially if Banks and business firms instructed their English and Foreign correspondents clearly to mark genuine registered letters 'containing letters and documents only.' At the very worst Mr. Clarke thought that we might hold up genuine registered letters in the foreign mail by twenty-four hours.

Mr. Clarke, however, has since informed me that he thinks that he will be able to make an even better arrangement. He anticipates no difficulty in arranging with the General Post Office of London and with the Continental and Colonial Sorting Offices, when sorting the registered mail for India, to pick out and put in separate bags letters which are so bulky as obviously to be parcels rather than letters. If this arrangement can be made, then the registered mail will not be held up at all. It will only be the separate bags in which these bulky articles are contained which will be detained at Bombay and other ports for examination and for assessment of any dutiable goods which may be found therein.

That, Sir, is our position. On the one hand, I have pointed out, that under the present system, we are losing revenue which we can ill spare. On the other hand, I have suggested a remedy which will not in any way delay the foreign letter mail. It is for the House to decide whether the evil which I have brought to their notice is serious enough to require the remedy which the Government suggest. The only alternative is, as far as I can see, to leave things as they are and to continue to sacrifice revenue. I move, Sir, for leave to introduce the Bill.

The motion was adopted.

Mr. C. A. Innes : I now introduce the Bill.

THE INDIAN MARINE (AMENDMENT) BILL.

Sir Godfrey Fell : Sir, I move for leave to introduce :

'A Bill further to amend the Indian Marine Act, 1887.'

The Bill is a very small one. The object underlying it is to remove the inconvenience which results from sanction having to be given by the Governor

[Sir Godfrey Fell.]

General in Council before a gazetted officer of the Royal Indian Marine can be tried by an Indian Marine Court. This often leads to the trial being postponed, sometimes for several weeks at a time, before an opportunity of convening a court arises. We desire to remedy this by empowering the Director, Royal Indian Marine, to convene such courts. Similar powers are enjoyed by military officers of no higher status than the Director, Royal Indian Marine.

The motion was adopted.

Sir Godfrey Fell : I now introduce the Bill.

THE INDIAN WORKS OF DEFENCE (AMENDMENT) BILL.

Sir Godfrey Fell : I move for leave to introduce :

'A Bill further to amend the Indian Works of Defence Act, 1903.'

As Honourable Members will see from the Statement of Objects and Reasons, the amendments are of a purely formal character, consequential upon the recent change in the organisation of the Army in India.

The motion was adopted.

Sir Godfrey Fell : I now introduce the Bill.

THE INDIAN WAR RELIEF TRUST BILL.

The Honourable Mr. W. M. Hailey : Sir, I beg to move for leave to introduce :

'A Bill to constitute a War Relief Trust for India.'

It will, I am sure, Sir, be a matter of relief to this House to know that in introducing this Bill I shall not have to refer either to excesses of expenditure or deficits of revenue, nor to make any appeal to this House to dive deeper into the pockets of the taxpayer. The measure is to all intents and purposes of the nature of a private Bill, and I move it, because I am connected with one of the Funds to which the Bill relates.

Its purport is to provide for the appointment of trustees to deal with the balance of the fund known as the Imperial Indian Relief Fund. Very briefly, that fund was raised as the result of an appeal made by Lord Hardinge at the beginning of the war. It is important that I should point out to the House the exact terms of that appeal. He appealed to all classes of the Indian people for subscriptions 'to alleviate distress of all kinds due to the war, and especially the distress and suffering that war must necessarily entail upon the families and dependants of those who were braving death and enduring hardships for the safety and common interests of the Empire.' Sir, the appeal met, as appeals issued during the war to India have always met, with a magnificent response, and the liberality of India contributed first and last no less than 253 lakhs. I propose to give this House very briefly a description of the manner in which this money has been spent. For, Sir, we do not belong to that growing class of ardent collectors which intimidates the public to subscribe to objects in which they are interested, but positively cuts its throat if it asks for an account of the manner in which the money has been spent.

The first object,—I leave out minor matters connected with this expenditure—the first object on which money was expended was to relieve the widows and orphans of all those classes of Indian ranks who died in action, and to place in funds those who had returned to India wounded. The intention was to give a sum of money to meet their immediate necessities, thus relieving them of the anxiety due to any delay which might occur in the distribution by the State of family or wound pensions. On that object, Sir, the fund expended about 85½ lakhs.

Then, Sir, the second object on which a considerable sum of money was expended was for the grant of what is called post bellum needs; that is to say, the fund made arrangements to pay to the families of deceased men of the Indian ranks and also to the injured, a sum of money, some after the receipt of the first sum, by which time it was assumed that the need for fresh help would have arisen. That distribution accounted altogether for about 90 lakhs.

Then, Sir, the third object of expenditure was to assist first of all the convalescent British officers serving with the Indian Expeditionary Forces, who returned to India for medical treatment, and further to give relief to the families of British officers of the Indian Army and of men of British other ranks who had fallen in the war. Altogether about Rs. 38 lakhs were set aside for that object. We have of course published month by month communiqués which give further details of the total expenditure, and with your permission, Sir, I would place on the table of the House a copy of our last communiqué; a reference to that communiqué will show that up to date out of 253 lakhs we have expended 228 lakhs, leaving a surplus of 25 lakhs. We believe that we have satisfied all claims that have arisen within the terms which we laid ourselves out in the first instance to meet. I may say, that the actual distribution of this money has been primarily in the hands of the organization known as the Indian Soldiers Board, assisted by a large number of Provincial Soldiers Boards.

The question now arises as to how we are to dispose of the remaining 25 lakhs. It is for this reason, Sir, that legislation is necessary, because the proposal which I now place before the House constitutes not a departure from the original purpose of the fund, but a further extension of the use of the subscribed money which was not actually contemplated when the original appeal was made by Lord Hardinge. It is proposed that this sum remaining in the hands of the management should be funded in order to afford relief not only to persons who are in distress arising out of the great war itself, but also for the relief of cases of distress arising out of subsequent military operations. It is further proposed that out of the capital of 25 lakhs which I have mentioned, a sum of Rs. 11 lakhs should be spent in educational projects connected with the army, that is to say, it is proposed that a sum of Rs. 5½ lakhs should be given as a grant in aid for the establishments known as the King George's Schools for the education of the children of the rank and file of the Indian Army, and a further grant of Rs. 5½ lakhs as a grant in aid towards the foundation of a College known as the Kitchener College for the education of the sons of Indian officers of commissioned ranks. This is a capital grant; the college and schools will be maintained by the State and no further expenditure will fall on the fund. There is one further point. We propose to take authority to hand over to the trustees who will be constituted under the provisions of this Bill, the small fund called the Patriotic and Indian Heroes Fund which was raised in 1880 in England and in India for the relief of distress of disabled soldiers and among the families of those who lost their lives in the Afghan War of 1879-80. This has been subsequently used for relief arising out of other operations such as the Tirah Campaign; the present balance of the fund is just under 3 lakhs, and it is proposed to transfer this balance to the War Relief Trust, which we now propose to constitute.

That, Sir, is the Bill which I shortly place before the House. I am well aware that I am placing before the House a proposal to utilise these funds in a sense which might be described as not fully intended by the original appeal for subscriptions to the fund, but it will be seen that the interest of the funds will still be spent primarily for the relief of the families of persons who have lost their lives in the great war, and of those who have been wounded in it. Some portion of the capital will be spent for the education of the sons of Indian soldiers and officers; this will include many who lost their lives or who were disabled in the war. I do not feel myself that this creates any considerable departure from the original proposal for which the fund was intended, and it is for that reason that I put forward this Bill. We did not, I may say, think it regular to undertake expenditure of this nature without bringing the matter before the public by way of legislature. I now beg leave, Sir, to introduce the Bill.

Mr. E. L. Price: Sir, I regret to have to oppose the introduction even of this Bill. I must apologise to the House for unpreparedness when I say that from the memorandum of proceedings I could not gather what the nature of this Bill was. It was not until just before the House sat that I had the Bill in my hands, and when I glanced at it, I realised at once, it meant a course to which all my life I have been opposed, and that is, money collected for one purpose diverted to another. If you will read the objects and reasons of the Bill, you will see, as the Honourable Mr. Hailey has admitted, that this money was contributed for certain Indian purposes. It was to relieve the wants and necessities of those who suffered in the world-wide war, not in any war, not in any future war, but in one definite, Great War, the War. In the Viceroy's noble appeal for raising this money, stress is laid on that same point, that is to say, 'to alleviate distress of all kinds due to the war,' the Great War. This money belongs to those who suffered from the Great War and to nobody else. It is a Trust. Now that trust may fail if you tell me that there is nobody left in India who suffered in the war and whose distress still needs assistance. But in that case, what right has the Government of India to inaugurate an ex-services Association? What right has the Government of India to call on our people, as they call in Karachi, to subscribe to a new fund to alleviate the distress of those who served in the Great War, and whose needs are still not met? At the very time that you are collecting new funds to relieve the distress arising out of the Great War, at the same time you are diverting the 25 lakhs that you have in your hands to another purpose which was not the original intention. That, Sir, is nothing more or less than the misapplication of funds. I am not jesting, Sir. I have known cases in other countries, and in England, of similar misapplication of funds, the diversion of funds from one object for which they were raised to another to which it was never intended to subscribe, and this has been done without legislation. But at all events the Government of India has sufficient conscience, I am glad to say, to ask for the gloss of a legislative enactment to cover this diversion. Now look at the first paragraph of the Bill. They refer to the Imperial Indian Relief Fund. It says 'And whereas the objects of the said Fund were first to provide ...' and so forth. There it stops! Then we come to the Patriotic and Indian Heroes Fund, and the Bill says 'And whereas the balance of this fund, on the completion of the relief of distress arising out of the Afghan War' and so forth; but mark you in the case of the Great War Government does not even claim that the distress and all the needs arising out of the Great War have been met. They only claim it in the case of the Afghan War. It is not enough. According to the objects of the Bill, the proviso in the last paragraph in the Statement of Objects and Reasons says, that 'a first claim upon the Trust shall be retained in favour of the sufferers from the Great War of 1914-18.' A first claim is not enough. It is the one and only claim on that Fund, and I, therefore, ask the House to refuse on conscientious grounds to permit the diversion of these funds which are intended to relieve the distress of the families and dependents of those who suffered or died in the war, the Great War, to an entirely different object, which the donors never had in their minds when they subscribed.

The motion was negatived.

Secretary of the Assembly: Sir, I have received a Message from the Council of State through the Secretary of that Council.

The Honourable the President: Secretary will read the Message received from the Secretary of the Council of State.

Secretary of the Assembly: Message from the Secretary, Council of State, to the Secretary, Legislative Assembly, dated the 5th September 1921.

'I am directed to inform you that the following Resolution was passed in the Council of State at their meeting of the 5th September':

This Council recommends to the Governor General in Council that he may be pleased to convey to His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales its humble request that he may be graciously pleased to accept a loyal Address of Welcome from the Indian Legislature, and invites the co-operation of the Legislative Assembly in constituting a committee of the Indian Legislature to draft a suitable address for the purpose. The Council of State desires the concurrence of the Assembly in the Resolution.'

The Assembly then adjourned till Four of the Clock.

The Assembly re-assembled after Lunch at Four of the Clock to discuss the Moplah Outbreaks. The Honourable the President was in the Chair.

MOPLAH OUTBREAKS.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: Sir, in the first place, with your permission, I beg to apologise to the Assembly for having called them again this afternoon as otherwise they would have been enjoying Simla without any work. When I gave notice of this motion, it was with some hesitation, that I

[Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar.]

ventured to bring up this subject for discussion at the Assembly. My hesitation was due to the fact or rather the feeling that I did not want to even make it appear that we, the Assembly, do not share the feeling of anxiety which the Government have in the very serious situation which has arisen in Malabar. And that feeling got intensified somewhat when I got a telegram from our Colleague, the Honourable Mr. Muppil Nair, who wired to me from Shoranon not to unnerve the authorities by raising this discussion. And thereupon I consulted the Government Member responsible for the situation and he assured me that he would rather welcome the discussion, and therefore I was emboldened to raise this question now, although in my own view the time is somewhat premature to discuss the very important and serious questions which arise out of the situation in Malabar. The Moplahs have earned an unfortunately bad name for nearly over a century and I do not know if they had ever a good name. The term 'Moplah,' as perhaps you may permit me to explain, merely means 'the mother's child.' 'Ma' is 'mother' and 'pillah' is 'child.' That is to say, their mothers are known, the father's side is unknown. I have Wilson's authority for this statement. Anyway, they are the descendants of Arab settlers in the west coast of the Madras Presidency, Arabs who fled from their country in about the third century. They have ever been a source of trouble to their neighbours, the Hindu population in Malabar. They number about a million in the district, they are good agriculturists, they are good traders—those of you in Bombay might have seen them on the railway platform wending walking sticks and such other wares. There are also very nice people amongst them. There are big Jennies amongst the Moplahs, but all the same, they are big fanatics. All their folk-lore consists in praising the people who die for their religion. Houris will be waiting for those people who die. They are told, that Houris are waiting in heaven to kiss and embrace the Moplahs who die fighting against the kaffirs. I will mention one of the ditties which is very often sung there. 'Father fights against son for the bond of faith is stronger than the bond of blood.' From their youth upwards they are taught that you must carry the Muhammadan religion and they believe, that there is great merit in converting people forcibly to Muhammadanism. Now, they live peacefully with their neighbours, but oftentimes they break out. Even in the last thirty or forty years, they have broken out, I think, nearly half a dozen times. My Honourable friend, Mr. Innes, knows to his cost what the Moplahs are. He has had, as Collector of Malabar, personal experience of their dealings and I am glad to say, that he escaped from a very nearly tragic event with which he was faced. Now Ernad is one of the taluks which is famous for the Moplahs—and it is a proverbial expression with us in South India if you want to mention a man who merely provokes a quarrel unnecessarily, you have to mention a Kundote Moplah or an Ayyampet Mussalman. That is the way in which persons merely for the sake of quarrelling will provoke a quarrel without any cause whatsoever. That is the way in which we characterise such persons. Now, Sir, they are an inflammable lot. And I am sure, that the Khilafat agitation for the last two or three years has been the main cause of the present condition of things in Malabar. And I am not sure, that the Government of India and the Home Government are not in a measure responsible for the encouragement, the hope and expectations aroused in the minds of these people by shilly-shallying and dilly-dallying with the agitation. Sir, now we come to the present day events. You will find that the District Magistrate of Malabar took steps against four people under Sections 107 and 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code. One of the leaders was released on his undertaking that he would not go to Malabar, in July last. The other three people who were incarcerated were released about the middle of August. There was a great demonstration when these were released and everything passed off quietly and there was no trouble whatever in consequence of their release or in consequence of the demonstrations held in their honour. There was a dacoity or robbery in a Hindu landlord's house. I should have mentioned, Sir, earlier that there are also agrarian troubles in Malabar. Most of these Moplahs are tenants under Hindu landlords, and as often happens, there are disputes between the landlords and tenants, and of course when this fanaticism breaks out, the Hindu landlords become the first objects of attack at the hands of these people. In consequence of the complaint made by that Hindu landlord, one of the Moplahs' houses was searched by the police. It does not appear whether it was a successful or an unsuccessful search. Anyway, it was resented. The Moplahs made a big demonstration early in August, and it ended merely in demonstration without leading to any lawlessness or violence. There was another event which happened in August which again did not end in any acts of violence. But apparently, the District Magistrate had information that these people had manufactured war knives in large numbers and they were being secreted, and he therefore proceeded to take steps under the special Act applicable to Moplahs, an Act which was passed in 1859 as the ordinary law was not sufficient to deal with these people. The main features of that Act are these. The Moplahs are believed to indulge in murderous outrages and as they are people who believe in sacrificing themselves the Act was passed in order to incur mainly forfeiture of property on conviction for an offence or attempt to commit an offence, such as murder, and special power was given to the District Magistrate under the Act to take precautionary measures by arresting beforehand before the Governor in Council proceeds to take steps under that Act. Under that Section, the District Magistrate having information proceeded to a place called Tirurangudi within about 20 miles from Calicut and four miles from the nearest railway station, Parapanangudi. Apparently he had anticipated trouble and he had armed himself by taking a small military force with him along with special reserve police. He had either correct or incorrect information. The communiqué of the Madras Government communicating the results of that event says, he left Calicut on the mid-night of the 19th August and arrived at Tirurangadu at 3 A.M., posted military force round a mosque and certain houses and after daybreak, he had a search made of the mosque and certain houses and also the Khilafat office. But apparently he had been misinformed as to the quantity of the weapons, because he got only one knife out of the search, and it seems to have been, in his own words, the signal for this outbreak. The District Magistrate issued a communiqué on the 26th in which he says, that this event has acted as a signal and roused the whole population twenty miles around. The people gathered in large numbers and they began to attack. The first fury of these people was directed against the Government and Government offices. The District Magistrate, I am sorry to say, had not taken adequate precautions to protect the population when he took such a serious step as this. He should have armed himself with more force before he took the serious step of going and surrounding a mosque and arresting or attempting to arrest a man who was held in great esteem by the Moplah community, one Ali Musaliar, who is a religious preacher among them, an old man of 60 or 70, as I am informed, along with other people. By this he has exposed the population, the Hindu population, which is by far the largest section there, to great risks. As events have now shown, temples are desecrated, their houses are plundered, their property is not secure. The Hindus, Christians and other non-Moplahs excepting the Muhammadans suffer at the hands of this curious mob. One would have expected the District Magistrate when he took such a serious step to have armed himself with more force and posted them all round. In fact, as he himself confesses, he left Calicut in a helpless condition. He went without sufficient provisions even when he went to Tirurangudi and he had to retreat to Malabar or Calicut leaving Tirurangudi and its neighbourhood entirely in the hands of this lawless mob. It is no wonder therefore that the first fruits of success which they had on the 20th and 21st encouraged these people to go about. It is only on or after the 23rd that sufficient force was available in order to deal with the situation, and I am glad to see from the reports, which I have received and from those which are published, that the situation is now well in hand. Still the situation created is terrible. Innocent people have to suffer very largely. One satisfactory feature about this which I wish to emphasise is this, that notwithstanding the fact that the first attack was against Government buildings and Government officers for the first two days, not a single Hindu, be he a non-co-operator or a co-operator, joined these Moplahs. It is only after the first two days that the Moplahs turned their hands against their neighbours, the Hindu landlords, Hindu neighbours all about. But when they were solely occupied with attacking Government, post offices, telegraph offices, sub-magistrates' courts, munsiff's courts, and even railway people, not a single Hindu, I am glad to say, took part, not a single non-Moplah, I would say, took part in any of these outrages. Well, as I have said already, the temperament of these people has been described as follows :

'They are constitutionally liable to run amok, their favourite pastime in the name of religion is murder of Hindu landlord, to loot Hindu houses, to defile Hindu temples..... to run riot among the country. The fanatic mob gains in number and in temporary religious insanity till the highest pitch of excitement is attained.....determined to live as victors or die as claimants of paradise.'

That is the nature of these people. Therefore the situation is really very grave. My main point in bringing forward this discussion—I can only speak for fifteen minutes—is to give expression to the feeling that the Government of India have acted wisely in introducing martial law to protect the people there. Otherwise the situation would have been very serious indeed. Whether the District Magistrate acted within his powers and the Madras Government acted within their powers in handing over the administration to military authorities before the martial law declaration of the 26th August is a point which need not be discussed now. I do not think the District Magistrate acted rightly on the night of the 20th and again on the 21st. When he handed over the station to the military, I do not think he had a right to do that, but it is unnecessary to enter into a discussion of that question. But, at the same time, Sir, while I do not express any disapproval of the measure taken by the Government of India, I wish to warn them against a repetition of any mistakes or errors or excesses which the Government of India permitted themselves to make in 1919. Sir, at moments like these, most of us would lose our heads, and the Government of India, even Sir William Vincent, is not immune from this human failing of losing one's head at critical times like these. But, Sir, I have to give a word of warning that too much reliance should not be placed on local authorities. The Madras Government, for instance, at present has an abhorrent conception of what a Government should be. I think it believes still in autocratic methods, although Lord Chelmsford told us that autocracy had come to an end. I believe, Sir, they still believe in the Rowlatt Acts, and I do not think it is right that the Government of India, which is mainly responsible for administering martial law and for meeting the situation in Malabar, should leave it an entirely free hand, as I am told it has left to the Madras Government. They will regret afterwards. Sir, it is better to leave it to Lord Reading's Government and for them to keep the strictest control over the operations there, and I would also suggest, that in dealing with the situation there most excellent men are available in Malabar whose advice can be taken in dealing with the situation, men like the ex-Diwan of Travancore, Mr. Nayar, and I am sure, the Local Government should be advised to consult such people when taking measures for administering martial law. I know, there are people who advise the Government of India to use aeroplanes. Unfortunately, Madras has now got an organ which would welcome the use of aeroplanes and such other effective weapons, as they would call it. I am glad, Government have resisted the temptation to do so, although I was told that some aeroplanes were requisitioned, but I am glad to see, that that information is not correct. And, again, Sir, I wish to give a word of warning about mistakes. For instance, there is one incident which I cannot understand, and the Honourable Member has no information about it, about the sub-divisional magistrate meeting a crowd on a railway line. It is not known whether he approached the men sufficiently near to make them understand, and it is said, they directly made a rush, and then the machine gun was turned on them and numerous casualties were caused. Again, we find, that the official communiqués are rather discreetly silent about the casualties, the extent and number of the casualties. I think the public should be taken into full confidence at once, and every time a machine gun is used, the exact number of casualties should be reported, and again I would also insist upon Government insisting upon the local authorities to see what is done with the wounded people on the spot, whether they are left to take care of themselves, or whether the authorities, whenever they inflict injuries, are taking steps to provide medical aid to these wounded people, and again I should like to give a warning as to how and what precautionary measures are taken that the bulk of the innocent population in the land is not subjected to unnecessary hardship on account of the administration of martial law, because after all the revolt is confined to a particular section of the people, but whether the military officers there will be able to distinguish between a Moplah and a Nayar, I do not know, and that would be a difficult matter indeed, and I, therefore, would ask the Government to see that precautionary measures are taken.

The Honourable the President : The Honourable Member has considerably exceeded the time-limit and must bring his remarks to a close.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar : Therefore, Sir, while I cordially approve of the measures taken by the Government of India, I ask that the Government of India should realise their own responsibilities, and not leave too much in the hands of the Local Government.

Lieutenant-Colonel H. A. J. Gidney: Sir, when I first gave notice of an adjournment of this House, I was not aware of the fact, that my Honourable friend, Mr. Rangachariar, had already submitted a similar application. Sir, the political tide of India has been flowing at such a rate, that very few of us, whether actors or spectators, have had time even to ask ourselves whither it is flowing and with what object, nor have many of us had time to inquire whether the force and power it is developing in its onward rush is for the good or evil of India. Recent events have forced most of us to realise, that India is to-day on the crest of a political wave with such turbulent undercurrents that serious thinkers are asking themselves what are we going to witness, the ebb or the flood tide of India's progress. The causes which have led to this state of affairs would be too tedious to dilate on in detail, suffice to say that its development has been so insidious that to-day we find ourselves face to face with such a position that we are lost not only in utter wonderment and amazement but are asking ourselves the question 'how has it been possible?' And our lament to-day is our inability to adequately explain or stem it. The battle-cry to-day amongst all classes and thinkers in India is 'Liberty,' or as some would call it 'Swaraj.' We all want this, but in our quest how many of us have paused to ask ourselves what liberty is this we are seeking? Is it Constitutional Liberty, such as the Anglo-Saxon nation enjoys to-day or is it Revolutionary Liberty, such as France at such great cost obtained some years ago and which Russia and Ireland are to-day striving to obtain at a cost yet to be estimated. In India we seem to be divided into two parties—the Moderates or Co-operators and the Extremists or Non-Co-operators. The former, who are striving for constitutional liberty, consist of the educated better class well-wishers of India who desire to obtain their liberty in accordance with the laws and ordinances of this country. The latter, led by Mahatma Gandhi and his followers, consists of a body of cranks, fanatics, immature school-boys, disappointed men, ex-convicts and unbalanced idealists. These people are bent on obtaining liberty by the shortest cut, in the quickest possible time, and at any price, even if it ends in revolution. The liberty they are seeking is revolutionary liberty, one divorced from all laws and order. These two parties are to-day deciding the future fate of India. On the one hand we have the Extremists, who not only malign the Government but strenuously refuse to co-operate with it in any effort and have elected to take the law into their own hands under a leader who has promised Swaraj to India this month but whose repeated failures in this respect leads one to say that in his year there are more than twelve calendar months. On the other hand, we have the Moderates, who, whilst complaining of the slow speed with which Swaraj is being doled out by the Government, yet inasmuch as they remain more or less inarticulate regarding the anarchical activities of non-co-operationists are the selves merely passive spectators. Between these two parties is the Government of India, a mere handful of Britishers (now admixed with leading Indian Members) who are determined to lead India along the path of constitutional liberty, advising her, protecting her, in other words giving of her best for India's good till the time comes when India will be told: 'You are now fit to govern yourself. We feel we have done our duty; you do yours, and show the world and the mother-country of which you now form a part, how you have not only merited, but can administer Swaraj.'

Mr. Gandhi is the self-created apostle of soul-force. What soul-force, I ask, has been manifested in recent happenings, the direct outcome of his activities. Is there any soul-force in the rowdyism, insults, etc., exhibited at the recent public meetings at Calcutta and Lahore? No. It was sheer mob force or bravards. Has any soul-force been evidenced in the riots at Malegaon, Aligarh, Munshiganj, Giridhi, Assam, and to-day in the Moplah country? Is there even the vestige of soul-force in the desecration of Hindu temples, the forcible conversion of Hindus, the looting, the bloodshed, the murder and anarchy which prevail in the Moplah country this very day. If by soul-force Mr. Gandhi means the exhibition of passion, intolerance, murder, anarchy, hate, revolution, then why camouflage it with the word 'non-co-operation' (with 'non-violence') or even use it as a cloak to cover his true feelings and objects. No, Sir. A crusade that has recourse to such degrading tactics, such Bolshevik methods, must surely be on its last legs, for it is only the frenzy of despair that can incite movements of this nature. Are we Indians now going to deviate from our characteristic and national principles of toleration and charity. Are we prepared to allow Mr. Gandhi and his followers, under the cloak of his so-called doctrine of soul-force, with weapons of spinning wheels and ploughs, commit these outrages, and to deceive us any longer? The creation of the present political miasma is Mr. Gandhi's work. Call it the triumph of non-co-operation, if you like. Camouflage it how you like. You come down at last to the fundamental fact, that whatever other achievements may be placed to the credit of non-co-operation (and these are mighty few), the greatest disservice it has done is, that it has stained the fair name of India by the creation of a heritage of cowardice, irritation, conflict, strife and murder, which will long endure after Gandhism or non-co-operation has been relegated to the archives of the past. And believe me, our future historians will not only give it a different name, namely Rebellion, Anarchy, Insurrection or Mutiny, but will pass on it a well-merited and deserved condemnation. The sooner this is done the sooner will India be relieved of a colossal nightmare. Non-co-operation which to my mind spells open rebellion is, not only a degrading cult but a murderous form of insurrection and I challenge Mr. Gandhi and his co-workers in the light of present day events to deny that Non-co-operation, Insurrection, Rebellion, and Anarchy are but synonymous terms and that this doctrine of soul-force has done nothing less than relax the bonds of discipline and respect for authority and stirred up hatred and strife between the different communities in India. The spirit of charity in India has, thanks to non-co-operation, been replaced by the self-assertion of a growing class of people who refuse to accept any opinions but their own, who howl at any opposition and look upon their opponents as traitors to the country, and, believe me, it will take many years before this position can be retrieved. There will be no peace in India until non-co-operation has been killed. It is this that is eating into and ruining India. It is, I opine, the duty of this Honourable House to root out this disease. The good and the true patriots of India must be arrayed against it, for do not they determine the public opinion of the country? Or are we going to sit down with arms folded and silent tongues and allow Mr. Gandhi and his followers to be the dictators of the future India? Are we, the well-wishers of India, prepared to allow Mr. Gandhi and his followers to continue strewing lighted matches amongst gunpowder and to trade on the well-known religious fanaticism of the ignorant people of India? Our duty is clearly defined if we are to save India from the peril into which she is racing headlong. But how can we do this? Let me remind this Honourable House as well as the Government of India of certain facts with which we are closely associated and for which we are singly and duly responsible. The activities of Gandhi and his followers have been in evidence for many years. Both the Government of India and every reputable politician in the country must have realised the dangers ahead. The hands of Government were tied during the past great war. A time then came when the Government of India had to act, which they did. With what result? A huge outcry, which is even heard to-day, from all and sundry places and people. The Government was denounced as brutal, as barbaric, as ultra-bureaucratic, as oppressive, as Satanic. Government found themselves as a consequence in an unenviable position and were more or less compelled to modify their policy. I would here remind this Honourable House of what the Honourable Home Member, Sir William Vincent said at the last Session of the Council of State when he himself admitted that he would not be surprised if within the next few months we had outbreaks or words to this effect. The Government of India met the opposition half-way because they felt that to continue in their then policy would not be in consonance with the Reforms. But, by so doing, they merely played into the hands of the non-co-operationists. The Local Governments were ordered not to proceed against non-co-operationists so long as they did not actually break the law, holding that such interference with political agitation was antithetical to the very nucleus of the Reforms. Government surely foresaw the dangers ahead but evidently deterred from taking effected and timely action by the apparent want of public supply. And I believe that they feel their hands were more or less tied because most of India seemed to be passive spectators in this political drama. This vacillation has its sequel in the present Moplah tragedy of to-day, and the people are to-day blaming the Government. But the Government are fully entitled to tell this Honourable House that the responsibility is shared by this Assembly also because we resolved to deprive the Government of certain necessary protective measures. It matters not who is responsible for the present unsettled condition. I ask, are the Government of India and the Provincial Governments acting under its orders still determined to look upon Mr. Gandhi as so superhuman, so innocent, so infallible, as to consider him a person who lives beyond good and evil and as one so inamenable to the law and ordinances as to enjoy a complete immunity from being brought to book for the terrible results of his anarchical propaganda? Has he, I ask, any protection, official or spiritual, or any claim to be hallowed with the glory of freedom which is denied to any other citizen of this Empire? Follow his tours. I ask each one of you in this House, to show me. I ask the Government of India to show me, any action taken, suggested, or even hinted to prevent the racial hatred and animus with which Mr. Gandhi has strewn his path throughout India. You cannot: what conclusion is one entitled to draw from this? To my mind, it is this; 'that Mr. Gandhi is allowed to continue his political education and propaganda unmolested at the expense of those who are compelled to suffer vicariously on his behalf'. But what has this political freedom which Mr. Gandhi enjoys and which we have for so long not only silently countenanced but indirectly encouraged cost India? I leave it to the future historian to sum up its effects on the Indian that-is-to-be. The long bill up to date includes, besides the hundreds of Moplahs and their European and Indian victims of the past 14 days, the hundreds of tea garden coolies who perished at Chandpur, the dead in the riots at Aligarh-Malegaon—and the hundreds of misguided unfortunate people who in the Bombay Presidency, Frontier Province, Punjab and elsewhere, have blindly tried to follow their emancipator without in the least knowing the inner mystery of his doctrine and philosophy. With what result? The creation of storm centres, offices and courts ceasing to function political unrest, murder, or in one word 'Revolution.' As we see to-day, his activities and intentions have paved a very good imitation of Hell in Malabar. And the effect of his influence is to be found in the way in which the Khilafat agitation, with which he is allied, has been turned into a battle-cry for murdering Hindus by the score, for desecrating temples, pillaging homes, the forcible conversion of Hindus, and last, but not least, paralysing the position of Government.

Bhai Man Singh: Sir, I cannot understand what is the connection between this lecture on non-co-operation and co-operation with the Moplah rising. I do not think we are here to discuss the situation in Malabar.

The Honourable the President: The point taken up by the Honourable Member from the Punjab is perfectly legitimate; but it is not for the Chair to say what is the connection between the non-co-operation movement and the outbreak on the Malabar Coast. If the Honourable Member (Colonel Gidney) chooses to occupy most of his 15 minutes in discussing an abstract question, I don't think the Chair need rule him out of order.

Lieutenant-Colonel H. A. J. Gidney: Now, Sir, one comes to the more important aspect of this matter, and that is, what is the remedy? Mr. Gandhi and his followers have been given enough rope. But we see no evidence of their having hanged themselves as yet. The Government of India, as well as the Moderates, have toyed with the situation quite long enough and the result, as none will deny, has been anarchy in many parts of India. The Government of India have no doubt decided on a definite policy. But I feel sure this House will agree with me that the carrying out of this policy will be more complete and greatly facilitated, and expedited, were the Government to feel that they had the whole-hearted support, good-will and co-operation of this Honourable House. I make bold to say, and I hope I am not wrong, that there is not a single Member of this Honourable House who is not fully alive to the dangers that are ahead of us. I opine, therefore, that it is the bounden duty of the Government of India to immediately take drastic and effective measures to quell the state of rebellion that exists in certain parts of India to-day. I go further and say, with all the emphasis at my command, that it is the bounden duty of this Honourable House to support the Government and so restore order from chaos and peace from rebellion. We, who are well-wishers of India, must not sit on the fence and remain silent any longer. We must not be afraid to speak out our minds boldly and fearlessly, for events are coming very rapidly. The seeds of anarchy have been and are being spread broadcast in the trail of Gandhi and his co-workers. It is our duty, though late in the day, to kill these seeds, for, I ask you, is there yet any place where the non-co-operators have spread their propaganda without including in it the vilification of all who will not walk with them, and can anyone tell me how many explosions like that of the Moplahs the non-co-operationists have in preparation? We cannot answer this. But we can stop the mischief spreading. We look to the Government for help. The Government looks to us to help them to stop it.

India looks to us to stop it and the great British Empire, of which we form one of the fairest jewels, demands this of us. Surely, we will not fail in our duty. And even as we ask the Government to suppress at all costs this growing state of rebellion in India, we must in return be prepared to give the Government our whole-hearted and unstinted support. We must not be led away with such excuses, as the non-co-operators are to-day indulging in, namely, that the Moplah and other disturbances are reminiscent of the Punjab, Dyer, O'Dwyer and others. On the contrary, we must bestir ourselves and give that bold strong lead which is India's greatest need to-day and thereby save India from the ruin to which she is being blindly led by the non-co-operationists. When will we, the Party holding the advantages of brain, ability and means, bestir ourselves? We who claim to be co-operators with the Government must awaken public consciousness to the new era of hope and progress on the lines of Self-government within the British Empire which the constitutional reforms have inaugurated and restore in the hearts of the people, by precept and example, that quiet faith and confidence in the constituted authorities the destruction of which is the main object of Mahatma Gandhi and his non-co-operators? A great responsibility rests on the Members of this Honourable House. The main object of the Reforms is to lead the people of India to identify themselves more closely with the Government. A crisis like the present affords the acid test of the extent to which this object has been reached. It mainly depends on every Honourable Member and on his attitude at the present moment whether that experiment should be hailed as a success or condemned as a failure. Let us hear less about the good intentions and sincerity of Mahatma Gandhi and the effect of his influence. In its place let us hear and see more evidence of our good intentions and influence. Let each and every Member rally to the side of the Government. Let us organise an effective and exhaustive campaign of counter-propaganda and refuse these misinterpretations of the actions and motives of Government and encourage the masses to resist at all costs an intolerable terrorism which to my mind is the very antithesis of constitutional liberty. In my opinion, the time is not far distant when the whole of India including the present-day worshippers to Mr. Gandhi will have cause to curse him so far as his political doctrines are concerned. Have we seriously considered how his non-co-operation policy of to-day will effect the Swaraj of India, say in 20, 30 or 50 years hence? Believe me, this policy of non-co-operation is rendering our task of the future a truly difficult, nay an impossible one. To my mind, it is leading us to an India seething with discontent and indiscipline. Anarchy and rebellion, in other words. A retrograde not a progressive India. Surely none of us want a repetition of the 1,000 years destructive period. Surely none of us want another Indian Mutiny and yet this is exactly what Mr. Gandhi and his Non-co-operation Cult is leading us to. We, who are the well-wishers of India, the co-operators of the Government of India, must make a determined stand, must adopt a bold united front. It is a case of now or never. I leave the verdict in the hands of this Honourable House and in deciding it let us remember those trite words:

'Only the new days are our own,
To-day is ours and to-day alone.
To-morrow we may never see,
And yesterday is gone.'

Rao Bahadur C. S. Subrahmanayam: Sir, when my friend, Rao Bahadur Rangachariar, obtained leave to make this Motion to this House, I should say a friendly Motion, he did not bargain for a lecture by Lieutenant-

Colonel Gidney on co-operation or a tirade against Mr. Gandhi who is not here and whom we need not take the trouble and the time to criticise here in this Assembly, because on the basis, on the assumption on which we are assembled here, we are supposed not to have much to do with Mr. Gandhi's principles and theories. Therefore, we would be doing justice to ourselves if we did not address each other about our own duties so far as Mr. Gandhi is concerned. There are other duties which are laid upon us—duties more important than seeking opportunity as it were to criticise Mr. Gandhi and his doctrines. Those doctrines are being exploded. Time is a great factor, a great destroyer of his theories. Besides, what good does it do to speak of it here? We might go out of the Assembly and speak at public meetings. That would be of some use. But one point about the proclamation of martial law is what I wish to emphasize. I suppose Honourable Members will have read the ordinance. I read the ordinance more than once. The terms of the ordinance are, to my mind, very fair and admirably worded, hedged in with various restrictions. There is no carte blanche order as is always implied in martial law ordinances. So, that is one very satisfactory feature in the proclamation of the ordinance. While recognising this aspect of the matter there is another point which we ought to strongly ask the Government of India, that is, to see that the Madras Government, who are in a manner in disgrace, do not lose their heads, do not use more force than is necessary, and the theory of the man on the spot is not carried too far, and that the Government of India would hold the reins tight. Now, I say this for this reason. There are a few facts connected with this rebellion or riot or whatever it is, which are beyond dispute. The Moplahs are a fanatical people. That is beyond dispute. The area occupied by them is like a powder magazine. Any small thing would upset them and it is only acting in their usual manner, if, when it upsets them, they attack the first men they meet. Now, added to this, there have been so many other causes which it is for the Government to find out. But we have got these two facts that the area is a powder magazine and that the people are inflammable. Now, we know from Government communiqués and other reports, that these men were armed with weapons—modern weapons, as also with old-fashioned weapons—swords and war knives of their manufacture. And we also find that there was a certain amount of preconcert evidenced by the pulling out of the rails, the cutting down of the telegraph wires and the organised attack against disciplined troops. All this clearly shows, that there was considerable pre-arrangement. Well, the question naturally arises, what are these officers in a locality for? Whether it is a district or a province, you employ men, pay them well, and you always proclaim from the house-tops their great efficiency and their great zeal and their great knowledge as being men on the spot. Now, I ask, in Malabar six months earlier this year you gave them a free hand; the local authorities—I do not specify who it is, whether it is the District Magistrate or the Superintendent of Police or the Collector—the local authorities thought Yakub Hussain and others would foment a rebellion and they at once clapped them in jail. I do not want to go through the process they adopted. Now, a question was raised whether these men should have been clapped in jail. Well, the Government of Madras said, the men on the spot being responsible for the peace and order, the law and order of the place, ought to be given a free hand, that they could not question their opinions and their judgments. So far, I say, it is right. If the local authority responsible for the peace of the area says: 'there are some troublesome people coming here, I don't want them here, they are unwelcome people, the locality would be all the better and happier if they were kept out, so far it is right. Now, you did keep out these men. That means you thought that the people there, that especially the Moplahs who were fanatical would become more fanatical and ferocious by the preaching of Yakub Hussain and others. So you had early notice, more than six months ago, that there was a possibility of trouble in Malabar. Now, from that day, from the beginning of the year to the present day, when you have this organised attack with weapons of all descriptions, what is it you did in the interim? Now, the scheme of administration is so perfect, everybody must admit. From the headquarters of the province to the village, there is a link of officials by which the headquarters is always able to know what is going on in the remotest village. You have got village policemen in the villages, probably, to my mind, more efficient than your uniformed policemen. And then you have got a higher grade of revenue officials, groups of sub-inspectors, police stations comprising groups of 20 or 25 villages, then you have the taluk, where you have an inspector of police, and then you have got the district headquarters where all the information from the villages and taluks are collected. Now, you find a large number of war knives that must have been manufactured in those localities and it is assumed they were so manufactured. And yet all this was done without the knowledge, I assume (as far as I can see it cannot be gainsaid) without the knowledge of the local authorities. What does it come to? You have got such a hierarchy of officials. You give them such wide powers to detain, to arrest any person who goes to Malabar, and yet you find to-day that a large number of war knives and other weapons are in the hands of these rebels and you now do not know what to do, you are in a panic, you send troops, British and Indian, and all the trouble has to be faced. Now, the real question for the Government of India is, why should the Local Government ask the Governor General to exercise that extraordinary power of his to make an ordinance. That is, a draft is made upon the Government of India by the Local Government as it finds itself unable to meet its obligations. When a draft is made on the principal, it is a very natural question to ask the agent who makes the draft 'why do you want it? Your resources ought to be sufficient to meet your demands. The Government of India should ask what have you been doing? Why do you ask me to exercise this extraordinary power?' Therefore, from that point of view, it is the duty of the Government of India to ask without any hesitation, to ask the Madras Government how it is they had no information, no inkling of these warlike preparations that were going on. Now, it is all very well to say and probably it is all true that there has been going on a good deal of insidious preaching. There we embark upon the sea of surmise. There must have been insidious preaching by a class of people who got into close intimate touch with these fanatical mobs, probably more religious than anything else, and thus prepared the way. But, apart from that, there is this material preparation of war indicated by war-knives and swords and other things; how is it, this has been going on in these villages without the village officials or the taluk officials or district officials knowing anything of the goings on? Policemen ought to have known it, magistrates should have known it. But suddenly this rebellion comes up and the Governor General is asked to make an ordinance suspending the ordinary course of law and sending out troops. Therefore, Sir, I want to concentrate the attention of this Assembly on this one point. How is it, the local authorities have been so thoroughly ignorant of these preparations for a revolution? So far as my opinion goes, it has sometimes happened that local authorities, meaning thereby those responsible for peace and order, have been more taken up with ordinary inhabitants of the place, than in looking beneath the surface and taking note of what is going on under the surface. People may talk or preach in the streets. That does not produce a revolution, or a rebellion like the one we are now faced with. There is something very much deeper and I think the local authorities have failed in their duty of gauging the situation from time to time. It is that aspect of it that troubles my mind and I would ask the Honourable Members here to take these facts I gave, i.e., the nature of the attack which the rebels have made, the organisation that is behind it and the suddenness and the concerted manner in which they have started this rebellion, into consideration. If it is possible in a portion of that district where the population is not united, where half the population is against the rebels, to arrange their rebellion like this, what may not be possible in some other part of the Empire in this country if the people are united? Is it not the duty of local officers, the police and the magistrates and all those engaged in the administration of the country to have been aware that they had something to face? No one seems to have thought of it. Everyone seems to have pursued and hunted the talkers.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: Sir, I am sure this Assembly will agree that I cannot be expected in the very short time available to deal with the two questions, raised in this debate, namely non-co-operation as well as this Moplah outbreak, and though I will, if I have time at the end, say a word on one aspect of the non-co-operation movement I shall confine myself to the subject directly under discussion. And I should like to begin my remarks by saying, that when this Resolution was moved, I hoped that our officers and the servants of the Crown generally in Malabar, engaged in the most arduous and unpleasant duties possible, risking their lives, suffering great hardships, would receive some message of encouragement and of support from this Assembly in the difficulties with which they are faced at this moment. It is a matter, therefore, of great regret to me, that speakers in this debate have done little but criticize and attack them. The general line has been 'why did not Government do this, why did the unfortunate district magistrate do that? Why did not the local authorities get more information? Why were not they more prompt? Why were not more troops used?' Is this Assembly so ready to grant a Vote for military expenditure that we can put unlimited troops in the Madras Presidency? What do those Members, who sat on a recent Committee on military expenditure, think of this, what have they to say on that subject? They are here; let them answer. Is it fair to blame the Local Government or the local authorities for not sending more troops to the spot when this Assembly, candidly speaking, is unwilling to pay for more men? That seems to me a difficult question to answer. I hoped therefore that the Local Government, who have been criticized in this matter of military arrangement, might be acquitted of all blame, for surely no man who knows the views of the Madras Government can accuse them of being responsible for the lack of adequate military force in that Presidency. Then the district magistrate is blamed by one speaker because he tried to arrest people too with a small force and prematurely. Another speaker blames him, because he did not arrest them earlier. Now, what can a district officer do to please everyone in such circumstances? He has a certain amount of military force and certain clear duties to perform. And in the same breath he is blamed for taking too few men with him to Tirurangadi and leaving Calicut inadequately protected. He cannot be blamed on both accounts; seeing that he had only a very small force at his disposal altogether and had to use it as best he could subject to military advice. Actually, he took with him on the 20th to arrest these Moplahs at Tirurangadi 150 British soldiers and I believe in normal times that would be considered a fully adequate force for any such duty. At any rate, more British troops were taken to Tirurangadi than were sent recently to preserve the peace in Aligarh after a very severe rising there double the number. I regret this attack on the local officers the more, because I fear that it may convey an impression to them—and I am sure this Assembly does not want to convey that impression—that we do not sympathise with them in their difficulties, that we do not appreciate their service or the grave dangers before them, that we are not grateful to them for their efforts to save the lives of Europeans and also of Hindus in the Malabar district. I venture to express the hope, that instead of conveying such an impression, this Assembly will send a message of encouragement and an assurance of support to all Government officers engaged in suppressing this disorder.

[Sir William Vincent.]

The Honourable Member has saved me from the trouble of dealing with the origin of this outbreak by his most interesting account of these people, their character and fanaticism. Possibly as a Hindu, one of a class that suffered at their hands, he has some prejudice against them. But, in many respects, I understand, that apart from occasional outbreaks of violence they have many merits. They are, however, of a peculiarly fanatical character, and susceptible to the influence of the priests. They also have a more positive and direct belief in the pleasures of a future world than many of us have. They have been guilty of numerous outbreaks of violence in the past largely because of the religious susceptibilities and the influence of a bigoted priesthood on them. Between the years 1836 and 1853, there were no less than 22 Moplah outbreaks. There were others later, the most serious being in 1883 when, after the rising, about 20,000 arms including 9,000 guns were recovered from them. Since then, there have been four or five smaller outbreaks. The causes in the past have been poverty, agrarian discontent, and fanaticism. When they do rise, the Moplahs have one wonderful virtue which will appeal, I am sure, to every one—the fiercest courage. It is not surprising, therefore, that Malabar has always been a storm centre, and during the last two years, my information is, that the extremist Khilafat agitators have done their best further to inflame these unfortunate people and incite them to violence. Here I will pause for one moment and say that to my mind one of the saddest features of all these things is that it is always unfortunate and ignorant Muhammadans who are the victims in the end. In the present rising, the death roll at one place—Pudukatur—is 400 killed. The Honourable Member said that he wanted information as to the casualties. We have no official reports of casualties except at this one place and I give them for what they are worth. The Press has estimated the total casualties at not less than 1,000 men. I am afraid that this may prove an under-estimate. Nor is this to be wondered at, because these men are, I understand, absolutely fearless and invite death in the hope of gaining a martyr's crown. Upon those who have incited them to such state of frenzy a very terrible responsibility rests.

The actual rising on this occasion began on the 20th, but as the Honourable Mover said, it was preceded by an act of lawlessness on the 31st July when a police officer had some difficulty in escaping from violence at their hands. It was after this event, that the District Magistrate applied for further military support, and the troops at Calicut were reinforced up to, I think, 200 or 300 men. Out of this force, 150 men were on 20th taken to Tirurangadi to arrest these certain offenders against the law. Three men were arrested and there was at the time apparently no appearance of any outbreak being probable. Police were left to arrest other accused and, in the course of that arrest, I am informed that Moplah officers, after removing their shoes, entered a mosque to search for persons whose arrest was intended. I do not think that it can be maintained that this was the cause of the outbreak and such a search was necessary. While these arrests were being effected, a mob of thousands of people had collected, apparently some coming on foot and some apparently by train. The Police came into contact with them at about 12-30 P.M., and dispersed them but, later in the day, the mob attacked the military force sent to Tirurangadi to assist the authorities. The attack was repulsed, but two officers, one a police officer and one an officer of the Leinsters, who, unfortunately separated from the rest of the party, were butchered. The railway line was cut and destroyed in various places, and the roads were blocked, and this sudden outbreak of violence developed into a general rising against Government in which Government offices have been destroyed, Government servants killed, Hindu temples have been desecrated, Hindus have been murdered, and I fear many have been offered the alternative of forcible conversion to Muhammadanism or death. I have got here a summary of the Military report on the situation which I should like to read as it states facts shortly and clearly:

On the 20th August 1921, the Officer Commanding Calicut proceeded at the request of the Civil authorities with 100 men (I may have been wrong when I said 150 men just now though this figure is given in another report) of the 1st Leinsters to support the search for arms and arrest the Moplah leaders at Tirurangadi. A small detachment of the Leinsters was sent to Malapuram and another small detachment was left behind at Calicut. The search for arms was a surprise and was successful, but later in the day, the magistrate's office was attacked by a body of armed Moplahs estimated at five thousand. The police station was attacked by two thousand Moplahs, who were beaten back by the fire of the police and troops. In the course of the fighting, Lieutenant Johnson of the Leinsters and Mr. Rowley, A. S. P., were killed. The Moplahs were collecting in large numbers in the neighbouring villages and the column began to withdraw to Calicut with the prisoners who had been secured. The hired lorry driver was murdered. But, while the police and troops were engaged at Tirurangadi, some Moplahs attempted to intercept their return by train by attacking two railway stations, cutting telegraph wires and tearing up the track. The Malapuram detachment was cut off. 21st August. It was now apparent that a rising on a large scale had occurred and control was placed in the hands of the military, and the General Officer Commanding the Madras District ordered a complete movable column and the remainder of the 2nd Dorset Regiment to be despatched from Bangalore by rail at once. Brevet-Colonel Humphreys was put in command of the troops at Malabar. He was ordered to advance along the railway to Tirur as and when the damage to the line was repaired; his role being to support the police in restoring order. Later in the day, reports came in, that the detachment was still held up at Malapuram and unable to return to Calicut, and that the railway line had been cut as far north as Nanawaldi and that large bands of Moplahs were reported at Tirur and Tanur. On the 22nd, in view of the imminent possibility of a Moplah rising in Calicut, the guard at West Hill was strengthened, the local auxiliary forces were called out and reinforcements from the 83rd Walajabad Light Infantry were sent from Cannanore. The Naval Commander-in-Chief was also asked to despatch a cruiser in order to co-operate off Calicut, and H. M. S. 'Comus' was sent.

I do not think that there is much more in the abstract that I need read. I ought however to say that the Madras Government some days ago made a request for additional troops but have now informed us that the troops which they have on the spot in Malabar are adequate. I may also say that the situation is now well in hand, though undoubtedly the operations will continue in some form for some time. We desire, however, as much as the Honourable Member desires to discontinue martial law as early as possible and I think this Assembly will realise that our experience of martial law in the past has not been such that we have any desire to prolong its duration unnecessarily. In the meantime, all information that we have received as regards these occurrences I have given at once to the Press. I desire here to express my gratitude to the representatives of the Press for the assistance they have given to me in giving me any information which reached them separately and in promptly issuing anything that I made available for distribution. I have also telegraphed full particulars to the Secretary of State in the hope that he may publish the fullest information without delay in England. This is the more necessary because Honourable Members will remember that on the occasion of the Punjab disorders serious allegations of secrecy were made against Government. The movement has now developed into a general rising against Government specially and against Europeans and Hindus. Most of the Europeans are, I think, now out of danger. Many Hindu refugees are coming to places of safety and I have seen letters from one or two of them which make it abundantly clear that there was every necessity for martial law. I do not think that I need go into the details of the casualties here.' They have all been published in the Press so far as I know.

I ought however to refer to the ordinance which has been promulgated by His Excellency the Viceroy. Its provisions have, I gather, met with general approval in this Assembly. We have now found it necessary to supplement that ordinance by a second ordinance which has been published to-day. This new ordinance provides for the trial of certain grave offences by special tribunals consisting of three members, one of whom must be a person who has acted or is acting as a Judge of a High Court, the two others being persons who have acted for a period of two years as Sessions Judges. Certain provisions of the original ordinance as to procedure apply to these tribunals. The orders of these tribunals are subject to the provisions of Section 401 (6) of the Code of Criminal Procedure, the Section which gives a Local Government and the Government of India power to remit or suspend sentences. There is also a right of appeal to the High Court of Madras in all cases in which a sentence of death, transportation for life or 10 years' rigorous imprisonment are inflicted. That ordinance has been issued to-day and, I think, I should be failing in my duty if I were not to inform the Assembly of its contents.

Another matter to which considerable attention has been directed in this debate is the question of the manner in which martial law is administered, and I can assure this Assembly, that we have taken every step possible to ensure that nothing more than is strictly necessary for the maintenance and restoration of order shall be done. One Honourable Member, I think, referred to the use of aeroplanes in suppressing the rising. I have not heard that aeroplanes have been used at all in this area and I can re-assure the Honourable Member by informing him, that if they are used, the most careful instructions have been issued as to the purposes for which the use of aeroplanes is legitimate. I have not the time—I have already exceeded my time limit—to read out many of the martial law instructions devised to meet occasions of this kind and recently issued, but I would like to read some passages from the manual which I think will be of interest. All measures necessary to restore order should be taken.

'Everything which is likely to cause bitterness and hostility should, as far as possible, be avoided..... When martial law is temporarily in operation, the cardinal principle to be remembered is, that even if a portion of a population is in rebellion, the inhabitants are our fellow subjects whose loyalty and affection it is desirable to recover and retain..... The principle that martial law should be limited to what is necessary applies not only to regulations and orders but also to trials and punishments..... There should be no punishment without a trial and penalties of excessive severity should not be inflicted. Offenders should be brought to trial with the least possible delay, and if sufficient evidence is not forthcoming within a reasonable time, they should be released.'

There are special instructions regarding sentences of whipping, which can only be inflicted for very special reasons, i.e., in cases of offences of violence, or in cases of offences for which that sentence might be awarded under the ordinary law. They are also subject to the limitations to which such sentences are subject under the ordinary law of the land. There are special provisions regarding the avoidance of racial discriminations, and also special provisions that orders likely to humiliate individuals or classes, or to offend religious sentiment, should be avoided. Another clause runs :

'greater violence than is necessary for the purpose of restoring order must not be used against any one merely from the desire to impress the population at large and thereby discourage or prevent rebellion in other localities.'

I have not the time to read out the whole of the instructions, and they are not all relevant, but I hope, I have given the Assembly enough information to make Members understand that we have taken every possible care we can to prevent excesses and improper action. As to the provision of medical treatment of wounded.... I have telegraphed for particulars to Madras asking whether their attention has been drawn to this and what measures have been taken. I may say, I have every confidence in the humanity and justice of the Madras Government and the local authorities and we are not going to interfere with them unless necessity arises. We will do our best to see that martial law is administered with justice and humanity, but I am not going to hamper local authorities by unreasonable criticisms when they are engaged in a most difficult task.

Now I will say one word on the question of non-co-operation. It has been suggested that Government in this matter have been inert and inactive. The Honourable Mover used the words 'shilly-shallying' and 'dilly-dallying.' When I heard Mr. Rangachariar say that, I must say, I was astonished. Members of this Assembly will recollect the discussion on non-co-operation in Delhi in February or March. Then it was the Government that wanted to secure support for certain action against non-co-operators. I cannot remember the Honourable Member then supporting us.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar : I said Khilafat, not non-co-operation.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: The Honourable Member makes a distinction between the two. Is it merely because these Khilafat people are unfortunate Muhammadans that they are to be treated with exceptional severity. Is that the idea?

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: No.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: In any case, I challenge the Honourable Member to show that he suggested then that any more drastic measures should be adopted against the Khilafat or non-co-operators.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: The Honourable Member was not in the Assembly then.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: I was present throughout that debate, and I have read the reports since.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: I was not there!

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: I will leave the point and discuss the question on more general considerations. When to undertake and when to refrain from repressive measures in a case of this kind is always one of great difficulty and, I think, more difficult than ever in the very peculiar political circumstances of to-day in this country. I hope Government will receive the sympathy and consideration of this Assembly in what is to my mind a very difficult situation. We have had cordial and generous support in the past and I am sure, we shall do so in the future again. It has been suggested, that the Madras Government have been wanting in energy, but, in fairness to that Government, certain facts must be stated. Honourable Members may remember the speeches of Mohamed Ali at Madras and Erode. Well, the Madras Government were anxious to prosecute Mohamed Ali for one of these speeches. Later, however, as is well known to the Assembly, there was an interview between Mr. Gandhi and His Excellency the Viceroy, followed by an apology from Mahomed Ali and Shaukat Ali which, we hoped at the time, would lead to a cessation of these incitements to violence. In consequence of that apology, the proposal to prosecute Mohamed Ali was given up by the Government of India who addressed the Madras Government accordingly. I am afraid, however, that very much reliance cannot—at any rate, in the light of later circumstances—be placed on that promise. Later, we received reports that conditions were again disturbed in Malabar and that Khilafat volunteer organizations were being organized and the Madras Government were exercised over the situation but, later, we received information that the leaders had ceased to foster these associations as they knew they were getting dangerous. On this point, I fear, we were misled: the organizations continued secretly. No doubt, if officers of the calibre of the Honourable Member, Mr. Subrahmanayam, had been there, should have had more accurate information, but the information was not very accurate. It was one of those unfortunate things that do happen. It was not, however, till July, that the Local Government had reason to suppose that any serious disorder in Malabar was anticipated. A number of violent speeches were made, the Madras Government were just about to prosecute certain speakers when these unfortunate disorders took place. As to the general question of non-co-operation, to my mind, it is unreasonable to suggest that the general policy of the Government of India towards this movement, or towards the Khilafat movement, should be influenced by a local rising in a peculiarly fanatical corner of India. The considerations which must apply to our policy are general considerations affecting the whole of India and any failure to see this indicates a lack of a sense of perspective. An Honourable Member has taunted Government for being in a panic over the rising. I am not aware, that there is any justification for this. But if we were suddenly to change the whole of our policy, because of this outbreak among a peculiarly fanatical section of Muhammadans—in 6 taluks in one district,—then, I think, we might justly be accused of pursuing a panicky policy.

At the same time, there is one development in this Khilafat movement which the Government cannot afford to neglect—a most sinister development, it is, to my mind—and that is the attempts that are now being made to tamper with the loyalty of His Majesty's troops and police. That is a very serious offence in any civilised State and is peculiarly dangerous in India. So far we have no information that our troops have been affected, but the danger of following this form of sedition to continue unchecked are obvious. We had therefore decided to take criminal action against certain individuals who have broken the law in this and in other respects even before this Moplah outbreak occurred. Some details have not been settled, and there are questions of procedure which are still under discussion. I do not propose, I do not feel it would be in the public interest for me to make any further statement on this point, but I hope if the Government have to take such action, it will then receive the full and cordial support of this Assembly. (Loud Applause.)

I have only one thing more to say, and that is, to thank this Assembly very much for their patience in listening to me to-day. It has been very difficult in the short time at my disposal to deal with the subject at all completely, but I hope, the Assembly will concur with Government in their desire to give expression to their very genuine regret at the many lives which have been lost, the temples that have been desecrated, and the property that has been destroyed in this—what I can only describe as a wild orgy of cruelty and crime. I am quite sure also, in spite of what has been said, that the Government of Madras has the sympathy of this Assembly in their difficulties, and that this Assembly will express their warm gratitude to His Majesty's sailors, soldiers, and all servants of the Crown for their assistance in saving lives of Europeans and Indians as also our grateful appreciation of the manner in which they have carried out their difficult duties.

Mr. K. Ahmed: No doubt the subject of to-night, Sir, is a very interesting one, and we are very grateful to Mr. Rangachariar for bringing up a Resolution of this kind. But, Sir, the reply given by the Honourable the Home Member, Sir William Vincent, is not satisfactory to my mind. Sir, a previous speaker who spoke, I think, after Colonel Gidney, said something which makes me think that the House will not easily be satisfied with Sir William Vincent's reply. I for one am not impressed at all by it. How is it and why is it, that these Moplahs all of a sudden got out of hand? Did not the Taluk Officers know that these people were going to make trouble? Were there no loyal Hindus among the Madrassis to come forward and intimate to those in authority that such a thing would come to pass? Sir, it is very extraordinary to my mind, that after 150 years of British Rule, those Moplahs could not be made more civilised.

[Mr. K. Ahmed.]

Could we not find the necessary police force? Could we not find any officer of the police department to watch the events? Was there not any C. I. D. to find out that there was trouble and disorder ahead? Sir, it was very deplorable to read in the newspapers that from 500 to 600 human lives were taken away in the twinkling of an eye. Was there not anybody to inform the Government that the Moplahs were attempting to demolish the Government and public offices? How could the telegraph wires be cut off in the twinkling of an eye? This act has been committed not in one place alone, but it has been done in several places. All of a sudden, we hear the sad news that some British officers were killed and some Moplah lives were lost. Are not the district authorities responsible to see that such a thing should not have taken place and to take proper precautions?

The Honourable the Home Member said, that he had received reports from Madras, that the Khilafatists were responsible for the trouble in Malabar. Sir, as far as I know, I do not think the propaganda of the Khilafatists can in any way be held responsible for the present trouble. Sir, if the propaganda of the Khilafat people were preached properly in the name of Mr. Mohamed Ali and his brother, Mr. Shaukat Ali, I assure you, that the Moplahs would not have fought against the Hindus, nor would they have entered into Hindu temples and carried away their images or committed any of the excesses about which a graphic description has been put before the House. I do not like to give any more colour to it than what has been described by the previous speaker. But, certainly, Sir, the very fact that the Moplahs have attacked the Hindus goes to show, that the Khilafat movement has nothing whatever to do with the present trouble and disorder in Malabar, and that its propaganda has not sufficiently reached the Moplahs. It is a great satisfaction to find, that neither the Muhammadans of other provinces nor the Khilafatists could have anything to do with it as they have sworn friendship between Hindus and Muhammadans.

Now, if as is pointed out, the Moplahs are savage people, then, it is a matter for shame, that British rule for 150 years has not civilised them sufficiently. Government is, in my opinion, responsible for keeping them uncivilised and ignorant so far. But, Sir, this is not the time to suggest what Government should do, but, I submit, that this House, which is a responsible body, should not jump to conclusions and support the Government opinion that drastic measures should be taken.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: Sir, may I make a personal explanation? I did not suggest, that any more drastic measures should be taken than are being adopted. I challenge the Honourable Member to reproduce any such suggestion on my part. He has also accused me of saying, that the Khilafat leaders are responsible for this rising. I will read the Madras Report on which I base the statement. This is what the Madras Government say:

‘It is difficult to arrive at an exact appreciation of the situation at present. There seems to be no doubt that continued provocative speeches on the Khilafat question combined with the Resolution in the recent All-India Khilafat Conference at Karachi have produced an impression on the minds of Moplahs that the British Raj is at an end.’

It was on that report that I based my statement.

Mr. K. Ahmed: I am glad, Sir, that the Member for Government has always shown some sympathy. But whatever it may be, it is for this House to decide what attitude should be adopted by Government in this matter and what steps the Government should take to stop the drastic measures which have already been taken in Malabar. Sir, it appears to me that certainly ignorant and savage people are not capable of doing the nasty things which have been done recently in the Moplah country. But, Sir, whatever it may be, I should be thankful if the Honourable Members of this House, coming from all parts of India, will not view the matter in the light of the facts and figures supplied by Government, and unless and until facts are known through independent sources, Honourable Members cannot and will not form a definite opinion.

Mr. J. Ramayya Pantulu Garu: Sir, I have no doubt that the House feels thankful to Rao Bahadur Rangachariar for drawing its attention to the very serious situation that has arisen in Malabar. Not satisfied with doing that, my friend has also given us a long, and I may say, a graphic description of the Moplah, for which Sir William Vincent has duly thanked him. We have also listened to a long dissertation on the evils of non-co-operation. I dare say, we agree with much of what is said in that dissertation, but I am inclined to agree with my friend, Rao Bahadur Subrahmanayam, in thinking that that aspect of the question is not quite relevant at present. Well, having ruled that out of order, my friend, Mr. Subrahmanayam, proceeded to launch an accusation of incompetency against the officials of the Malabar district, and very properly, Sir William Vincent has entered a defence of the officials. I dare say, there is much that is true in the accusation as well as in the defence, but, I hope, my friend, Mr. Subrahmanayam, will excuse me if I should say that his accusation is a bit premature just now. What is to the point at present is, that this House should assure Government of its cordial support in all the legitimate steps that it is taking and that it proposes to take to put down the unrest in Malabar, and I have no doubt, that after having listened to the Honourable Sir William Vincent as to the action which Government is taking in the matter, the House will accord its cordial support. I for one have not the least doubt that the Government will do nothing but the right thing in putting down the rebellion and that they will avoid the mistakes that were committed in the Punjab.

I wish now, Sir, to make one or two suggestions, and invite the attention of Government thereto. One is, that as soon as possible after peace is restored in Malabar, Government should appoint a properly constituted commission to inquire into the causes of this disturbance, immediate as well as remote, and also into the manner in which the officials have dealt with the situation. My friend, Mr. Rangachariar, attributes the rising to the Khilafat movement, and Colonel Gidney has attributed it to the non-co-operation movement. Well, I see that they have thought it necessary to make a distinction between Khilafat and non-co-operation. I keep up that distinction. They may be right, but I do not think, that the country will be satisfied with it, at any rate, it seems to be on a surer ground on that point than the Government seems to be. I think the country will not be satisfied with the reason given as to the origin of this disturbance unless and until the whole matter has formed the subject of an inquiry by a properly constituted commission, such as I advocate and, I hope, the Government will see its way to appoint such a commission as soon as possible after peace is restored.

There is one other point which I wish to draw the attention of the Government to, and that is in connection with the provisions of the martial law ordinance that has been published. One of the rules says, that the decisions of the Summary Courts are final and no appeal lies against them. I quite admit the propriety of this. Even under the Code of Criminal Procedure, the decisions of a Summary Court are not liable to be appealed against except in some cases. But what I object to with regard to these Summary Courts is, that one of the martial law rules says, that when an officer commanding cannot find any magistrate appointed under the Criminal Procedure Code, he shall constitute a Summary Court. Well, under the Criminal Procedure Code, none but a magistrate of the first class of some standing can be appointed as a Summary Court. Now, under this law, it would seem that any magistrate, be he a magistrate of the first class, second class or third class, be he a man of standing, or whether he may have an experience of twenty years or one or two months. So any magistrate can be appointed a Summary Court. I dare say, the officer commanding will exercise his discretion in selecting the magistrate whom he wants to appoint a Summary Court, but, I think, it is highly desirable, that the Government itself should issue instructions to the officer commanding that only a magistrate of some standing should be appointed a Summary Court. I hope that the Government will see its way to do that.

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas: Sir, I wish only to say a few words on this Resolution for adjournment that has been moved by my Honourable friend, Mr. Rangachariar. I would perhaps have not spoken if my friend, Mr. Kabir-ud-din Ahmed, had thought it proper not to rise and to make a speech which, if at all it can be considered serious, is nothing but offensive both to this Assembly and, I am sure, to the Government of India.

Mr. Kabir-ud-din Ahmed pointed out, in the course of his rather comic speech, if I may say so, that after all, for the action of the Moplahs the Khilafat agitators who are working under the wing of Mr. Gandhi cannot be held responsible. My friend, Mr. Rangachariar, has rightly pointed out, that he considers the Khilafat agitation responsible for this outbreak. Mr. Kabir-ud-din Ahmed goes further and gives the names of Mr. Mohamed Ali and Mr. Shaukat Ali and says, that working as they are under the wing of Mr. Gandhi, and as heads of the Khilafat movement, they can never be held responsible for this outbreak in the Malabar district. Sir, I want to remind this Honourable House of the statement that I made when in Delhi we were discussing the question, I think, of repressive measures. When an attempt was made to tie down the Government to a certain policy, I said, it was not desirable to do so because there were indications of outbursts of violence here and there as a result of the preachings of those who pretended to share the high ideals of Mr. Gandhi but who, except in their professions, never did so.

Mr. K. Ahmed: Sir, may I rise to a point of explanation? I never said, that Mahatma Gandhi or Mr. Mohamed Ali or Mr. Shaukat Ali are not to blame because they are not to blame, but because it is impracticable and impossible and illogical for Mr. Mohamed Ali and his followers in the Khilafat to come forward and incite these Moplahs to enter into the temples of the Hindus, because it would tend to make a mockery of their friendship with the Hindus; and then it would have been a fair question.....

The Honourable Mr. W. M. Hailey: Sir, may I rise to another point of order? Are we having another speech from the Honourable Member?

Mr. K. Ahmed: I think I am entitled, by way of explanation, to clear myself because I find my Honourable friend, Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas, is under a misapprehension and was mis-stating the facts.

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas: Sir, I was going to say, when I was interrupted by my Honourable friend, Mr. Kabir-ud-din Ahmed, that at that time I further pointed out, that while those who in season and out of season preached violence and incited people to crimes escaped penalty for their action, those who took them at their word, who allowed themselves to be so incited made themselves liable to the penalty of the crimes for the exciting of which others were responsible. I think, in the case of the Moplahs, this has turned out to be literally true. While, as has been pointed out by my Honourable friend, Mr. Rangachariar, these people, the Moplahs, who consider nothing as important as their faith and who are prepared literally to face, to invite death, if they believe rightly or wrongly that they are serving their faith thereby, while these people are killed in large numbers, those who have roused their fanaticism, knowing full well what the consequences would be of such rousing, have escaped punishment. The time was when perhaps their preaching of violence would have been punished and they would have been taken to task by the Government and perhaps would have been sentenced to transportation for a number of years. At that time, those who preached violence and who professed in public that for the sake of their religion they were prepared to go to jail and to die, to face death, and glory in it. But they had not the slightest hesitation in withdrawing their statements and tendering an apology to the Government for having made such statements when threatened with a prosecution. The people who listened to these statements, the people who placed faith in those statements, hardly knew anything about the withdrawal of the statements that were made. They took these statements literally, allowed themselves to be guided by those statements, and the consequence of that we see in the outbreak of Moplahs and in two or three events that have taken place in the Bombay Presidency, and perhaps we are not far from the day when, if proper measures are not taken, perhaps in the whole length and breadth of the country, we shall have repetitions of these outbreaks. Sir, even that apology was tendered for the purpose of deceiving that leader who, however mistaken he may be, I venture to submit, bases his movement undoubtedly on the doctrine of non-violence, though I deplore his most tragic faith in his lieutenants as he calls them. Well, that apology was tendered, I say deliberately, to throw dust in his eyes. The apology was deprived of all sincerity by the pretensions made, and false pretensions, I venture to submit, made by these people that the apology was not tendered to Government but to friends, who never demanded it, that it was tendered to Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya, who, I venture to submit, never demanded it. They have escaped punishment. The others are mere scapegoats, and I venture to submit, that if the Government does not come to the rescue of those who stand by law and order and for constitutional progress to the highest possible goal that can be imagined for this country, then the Government, I am afraid, will not have done its duty by this country.

Mr. Muhammad Yamin Khan: May I rise to a point of order? The time is short and a lot of people want to speak on the subject.

The Honourable the President: That is not a point of order.

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas: I venture to submit, that like my friend, Mr. Rangachariar, I also have my grievances against the Madras

[Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas.]

Government and their attitude on certain questions. On this particular question, when they are faced with an unenviable situation, a most unfortunate situation, I say that it is the duty of this House to stand by and support the measures, rightful measures, that the Madras Government has taken.

Mr. R. A. Spence : I am sure the sense of this House is, that we should express emphatically our great appreciation of the services rendered by the civil and military servants of Government during these distressing times. As the Honourable Sir William Vincent has rightly said, it is a matter of very great moment that officers, whether Indian or European, who are engaged in the suppression of these unfortunate outbreaks should feel that they have behind them the appreciation of their services by this House. We do not know whether this distressing outbreak that has taken place in Malabar is the only outbreak that is going to occur. Has Government any information as to whether this is absolutely isolated and that no other disturbance is likely to take place? ('Hear, hear. That is the point.') On that, I think, we might have an assurance. Speaking for myself, as an Englishman, I do hope that when the surrender of these misguided fanatics takes place, as I hope the military measures which are now in force will enable it speedily to take place, I do hope that leniency will be shown to them, as from what the Honourable Mover has told us, they are a fanatical people who are prone very easily to outbreak. They are not the guilty people. The guilty people are those who have led them on and I do hope, that steps will be taken to deal with those people so that in the future the lives of innocent persons may be saved, as well as those of the fanatics themselves. We do want an assurance from Government that those who have stirred up these people will be looked after. Government welcomes all legitimate criticism, all legitimate voicing of the aspirations of the people of this country, and the time has come when those people who stirred up the sort of rebellion we have just had should be dealt with properly. As I say, I should like to have information from Government as to whether this is an isolated instance, but I do hope that this House will cordially express its full appreciation of the services of the civil and military servants of the Government.

Mr. Muhammad Yamin Khan : Sir, I have always been against non-co-operation and I have been fighting in my district and other places against non-co-operation. At the same time, I think it very undesirable to place the responsibility on the shoulders of non-co-operation when there is no justification for doing so. Here, as my friend, Mr. K. Ahmed, has pointed out to the House, this riot would not have been caused by the non-co-operation or the Khilafat movement. This can be seen if we look into the events and occurrences which have happened. We find that Mr. Gandhi, who is a Hindu, is the leader of the non-co-operation movement, and he is leading practically the Khilafat movement to-day. The people who followed, even the Muhammadans who followed Mr. Gandhi, can never be said to go and commit any kind of crime against the Hindus as such. (Laughter.) Some of the Honourable Members might laugh. They might have their own grievances and want to throw the blame upon those persons, but this will not stand the test. Simply on account of party politics to throw blame on the other party, which is not justifiable is not right and this House ought to be above all those things. By this I in no way justify the actions of Messrs. Mohamed Ali, Shaukat Ali or Gandhi. On the one hand we are told that there have been Hindus killed as such, not because on account of their money, but because they have been Hindus, they have been forcibly converted to Islam and on the other hand Khilafat is blamed. The Khilafat has got no grievance against the Hindus. Whatever grievance the Khilafat has got, that is against the British Cabinet and not against the Indian people. Nobody has thrown any blame, so far as I am aware, even on the Indian Government. Whatever responsibility they attach to the Khilafat promises and wrongs, that refers to the Prime Minister and other Members of the British Cabinet. Here we find another version from our friend, Colonel Gidney, that there is a rebellion and it ought to be stopped. This is the first time I have heard that there is any such thing as 'rebellion' in India. My friend, Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas, who is to-day blaming Mr. Gandhi, I found on the last Session moving a Resolution defending the Punjab people who were also incited by Hartals preached by Mr. Gandhi.

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas : I rise to offer a personal explanation. In the course of my speech to-day, I defy my Honourable friend to point out that I have blamed Mr. Gandhi. On the contrary, I said that his so-called Lieutenants did not share his high ideals.

Mr. Muhammad Yamin Khan : Here we have not been told the cause even by the Honourable the Home Member or by any other person, and we do not find even in the Press, what was the cause that really led to these riots and who are the persons who are responsible for these riots not having been checked at once. We do not even find any suggestion as to whether the people who have committed these riots are poor people and looted their rich neighbours on account of their wealth. Here I have a report which I have received from Meerut that a whole mundi has been robbed by the mobs of Meerut, surely this is not due to Khilafat but is due to agrarian difficulties.

In the same way, economic causes may be at the bottom of these outbreaks in Malabar. Of course we cannot say ourselves at present who were responsible for the outbreaks, and Government will, I hope, like to clear the situation, because there is a theory prevalent, and the idea is very deeply rooted in the minds of the people, that Government's policy is to divide and rule. There is a suspicion in the minds of some people that the Government account is a pill for the people to swallow, so that people might be misled by the story that Hindus were being forcibly converted to Islam and thus Hindu sentiments very naturally be aroused against the followers of Islam.

The Honourable the President : Under Standing Order 24, the debate terminates automatically. The Assembly stands adjourned to a date to be hereafter announced.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

INSTRUCTORS AND ASSISTANT INSTRUCTORS OF THE FOREST RESEARCH INSTITUTE AND COLLEGE.

64. Mr. Pyari Lal: (a) Is it a fact that the duties of Instructors and Assistant Instructors at the Forest Research Institute and College are more or less identical?

(b) If the answer is in the affirmative, is there any reason why any differentiation should be observed in their designation?

Mr. J. Hullah: (a) and (b). The duties are not identical in so far as the standard of teaching and the responsibilities involved are concerned.

RANGER CLASS STUDENTS IN THE FOREST RESEARCH COLLEGE.

65. Mr. Pyari Lal: (a) Will the Government be pleased to state whether in the Forest Research College all the students of the Ranger class are Indians, and why the post of House Tutor should not be filled by an officer who is thoroughly acquainted with the country and its student population?

(b) What special qualifications has the present incumbent for this post?

Mr. J. Hullah: (a) The classes do not always consist entirely of Indians though they do at present so consist.

Neither Imperial nor Provincial Forest Service officers can be expected to be thoroughly acquainted with the whole country and its student population. What, however, is considered of greater importance is, that the House Tutor should be able to command that respect from the students which is necessary to ensure discipline and maintain the highest tone in the College, and experience has shown, that the post must be filled by a senior officer on the staff of the College.

(b) The present incumbent is an Imperial officer of 14 years' service on the United Provinces list, who has been specially selected to fill the post of Principal, when the College is transferred to the Government of the United Provinces.

PERSONAL ASSISTANT TO THE PRESIDENT, FOREST RESEARCH INSTITUTE AND COLLEGE.

66. Mr. Pyari Lal: (a) Will the Government be pleased to consider the advisability of filling the post of Personal Assistant to the President, Forest Research Institute and College, by an officer well acquainted with the people and the country?

(b) Has the present incumbent any such qualifications and, for what length of time, has he been appointed?

Mr. J. Hullah: (a) and (b). The post of Personal Assistant to the President would normally have been filled by an officer of the Imperial Forest Service, but, owing to the shortage of staff, it has been filled temporarily for 3 years by the present incumbent who has had a university training and who served in the Army in India. Close acquaintance with India is of no special importance in connection with this post.

INDIANS AS FOREST RESEARCH OFFICERS.

67. Mr. Pyari Lal: (a) Has any attempt been made to find suitable Indians as Research Officers at the Forest Research Institute under the new scheme?

(b) If the answer is in the affirmative, will the Government be pleased to state the methods by which publicity has been given?

(c) If the answer is in the negative, will the Government be pleased to state what steps are proposed to be taken in future for utilizing Indian talent for Forest Research?

Mr. J. Hullah: (a), (b) and (c). For those of the posts which are reserved for members of the Imperial Service, Indian and European officers are equally eligible. As regards the newly conceived lines of investigation, the Government of India lay special stress on the appointment, at the outset, of scientists who have already extensive experience and an established reputation in the particular line of research in which they are to be employed and consider, that no racial discrimination should affect the selection of the best talent for this purpose. Such posts, as those of Wood Technologist, Seasoning and Timber Testing Specialist, etc., have been, or are being, filled by recruitment in England and America; these posts have not been advertised in India, because the Government of India know of no source in the country from which men of the type, or with the knowledge, required can be obtained. Applications for the post of Organic Chemist, one of the new posts not yet filled, are being invited through the press in India.

RECRUITMENT FOR THE INDIAN FOREST ENGINEER SERVICE.

68. Mr. Pyari Lal: Will the Government be pleased to state in what way recruitment for the newly sanctioned Indian Forest Engineer Service is to be made and if any publicity has been given with a view of securing suitable recruits from India?

Mr. J. Hullah: No recruitment for the Forest Engineering Service is to be made this year.

EXEMPTIONS UNDER THE INDIAN ARMS RULES.

69. Baba Ujagar Singh Bedi: (a) Has any list been prepared of exempted persons referred to in the following heads or sub-heads in Schedule I to the Indian Arms Rules, 1920:

(i) sub-heads (a), (b) and (c) and most particularly sub-head (d) of head (6);

(ii) sub-heads (a) to (g) of head (11);

(iii) head (12)?

(b) If the answer is in the affirmative, would the Government be pleased to place on the table a list of such exempted persons with dates and names, with reference to the district or province to which they belong?

(c) If such list has been prepared, what principles were adopted to prepare it, especially in the case of persons under heads 6 (d) and 11 (g)? Have the Government prepared it according to their own idea, or was it prepared on the application for exemption of the persons concerned?

(d) If the Government have prepared it according to their own idea, then, are there any persons coming within the said heads who are not included in the list?

If so, will the Government place a list of such persons (district by district and province by province) on the table, stating the reason for their exclusion from the list?

(e) Have those persons whose names are not mentioned in the list, applied for exemption? If so:

(i) what is the exact number of such applications?

(ii) how many such applications were granted?

(iii) how many were not granted, and why?

(f) Is it a fact, that persons awarded the Sword of Honour who are referred to in head (11) (d) in Schedule I to the Indian Arms Rules, 1920, were previously exempted in respect of all sorts of arms for personal use, but have been deprived of the exemption in respect of all arms except the Sword of Honour under the present Arms Rules?

(g) If the answer is in the affirmative, do the Government propose to allow such persons to enjoy exemption as previously?

(h) Will the Government be pleased to place on the table a list of those persons who have been awarded the Sword of Honour (district by district and province by province)?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: (a) to (e). The Government of India have not themselves had lists prepared of the nature mentioned by the Honourable Member. Such lists, if prepared at all, would be prepared under the orders of Local Governments to whom, I venture to think, the Honourable Member might apply for the information he requires. The Government of India cannot undertake to collect the statistics asked for, as the labour involved would be out of all proportion to their utility. If any persons not exempted considers they should be, they should apply to the Local Government concerned.

(f) and (g). No. Persons of the class described in item (11) (d) in Schedule I to the Indian Arms Rules, 1920, continue to enjoy exemption for their lifetime to the same extent as before, in respect of arms for their personal use.

(h) The Government of India are unable to place on the table a list of the names asked for as this is primarily a matter for Local Governments and as the preparation of such lists would involve an amount of labour out of all proportion to the utility of the statistics.

MR. HASAN IMAM'S STATEMENT re: THE TURKISH PEACE TERMS.

70. Mr. M. Faiyaz Khan: (a) Has the attention of the Government been drawn to the statement of Mr. Hasan Imam given in an interview to a representative of the Associated Press at Monghyr, published in the Independent of 4th June 1921, page 4, column 4?

(b) Will the Government be pleased to state if Mr. Hasan Imam gave this statement (a) before, (b) after, he stayed at Viceregal Lodge, Simla?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: (a) Yes;

(b) About a month afterwards.

COMPETITIVE EXAMINATION IN INDIA FOR THE INDIAN CIVIL SERVICE.

71. Mr. J. R. Pantulu Garu: When will the first Competitive Examination for recruitment to the Indian Civil Service be held in India?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: Government hope that the first examination will be held in the spring of 1922, but they cannot guarantee this absolutely.

MADRAS PRESIDENCY AND THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA SECRETARIAT.

72. Mr. J. R. Pantulu Garu: Is the Government aware that some parts of India, such as the Madras Presidency, are not at present adequately represented on the staff of the Government of India Secretariat and, will the Government be pleased to take such action as will ensure equal facilities for all provinces in this respect?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: Government are aware that some parts of India including the Madras Presidency are at present inadequately represented on the Staff of the Government of India Secretariat. They have already taken action towards remedying this by creating the Staff Selection Board.

The Board, two out of four members of which are Indians, is watching the interests of each of the Provinces in connection with recruitment for the Government of India Secretariat. The question is not an easy one to deal with owing to the urgent nature of some of the appointments and the brief period for which they are created. Nor does its solution rest entirely with Government, the Staff Selection Board have in a number of instances offered appointments to men who have refused them. The Staff Selection Board has the matter constantly under consideration and is at present considering whether means could not be devised by which the correction of the existing disproportionate representation of the various provinces on the Secretariat could be facilitated.

Government invite the Honourable Member to arrange to visit the Staff Selection Board himself in order that he may ascertain personally the actual nature and value of the work the Board is carrying on to secure adequate representation of all communities.

RAILWAY LINE FROM RAJAHMUNDY TO BHADRACHALAM.

73. Mr. J. R. Pantulu Garu: Is the Government aware that a survey was made some time ago for a line of Railway from Rajahmundry to Bhadrachalam which was till recently in the Godavari District but is now included in the new Agency District of the Madras Presidency, and will the Government be pleased to state when that line of Railway is likely to be taken in hand?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: The Rajahmundry Bhadrachalam Railway forms a part of the proposed Rajahmundry Sironcha connection of which a survey was carried out in 1909-10.

The results of the survey shewed, that the gross earnings of the connection would not suffice to cover working expenses, and the project was accordingly dropped.

STATEMENTS re: ILL-TREATMENT OF INDIANS.

74. Mr. J. R. Pantulu Garu: (a) Has the attention of the Government been drawn to the editorial note headed 'A wail from Mesopotamia' and the enclosure thereto published in the Young India newspaper of 27th April 1921, and also to the correspondence headed 'Indians in Mesopotamia' published in the Hindu newspaper of 30th May 1921?

(b) Will the Government be pleased to state whether there is any foundation for all or any of the allegations therein contained regarding the ill-treatment of Indians employed in Mesopotamia?

(c) If there is any such foundation, do the Government propose to take early action to have matters righted?

The Honourable Dr. T. B. Sapru (on behalf of the Honourable Mr. Denys Bray): (a) Yes.

(b) The matter was referred to the High Commissioner, Mesopotamia, who states that all the allegations which he has been able to trace are without foundation.

(c) So far from service in Mesopotamia being unpopular among Indians, the High Commissioner reports, that petitions from personnel coming under reduction in accordance with general policy are constantly reaching him begging to be exempted from repatriation. In the circumstances, the Government of India see no necessity for taking any action in the matter.

RE-ORGANIZATION OF THE ARCHAEOLOGICAL DEPARTMENT.

75. Mr. J. R. Pantulu Garu: Will the Government be pleased to state whether the contemplated re-organisation of the Archaeological Department has been effected and, if so, on what lines?

Mr. H. Sharp: The re-organisation of the Archaeological Department has been effected as regards the terms of service. The contemplated increase of the Department has been only partially effected. The Honourable Member is referred to the Resolution in the Government of India, Department of Education, No. 190, dated the 14th June 1921, and a copy will be supplied to him if he desires.

WHITEWASHING OF TEMPLES.

76. Mr. J. R. Pantulu Garu: (a) Is the Government aware, that there is a practice in some parts of the country, especially in Southern India, of whitewashing temples on festive occasions, and that this practice is calculated to gradually destroy all traces of valuable inscriptions and carvings of archaeological and artistic value?

(b) Do the Government propose to consider the question of taking such action as will put a stop to this practice?

Mr. H. Sharp: Government are aware, that monuments of archaeological interest are at times whitewashed and that this practice is calculated to injure inscriptions and carvings. Save, however, where a monument is definitely under the control and management of Government, it would not be desirable to interfere with religious usage in this matter, or to appear to infringe the rights of the owners or guardians of private shrines.

INSCRIBED COPPER PLATES.

77. Mr. J. R. Pantulu Garu: Do the Government propose to consider the advisability of publishing vernacular notices in different parts of the country offering rewards for valuable inscribed copper plates which are discovered by private persons and delivered to the Epigraphical Department?

Mr. H. Sharp: The proposal made by the Honourable Member together with other encouragements which might be offered to the discoverers of copper plates, etc., will be considered.

ESTABLISHMENT IN INDIA OF A PUBLIC SERVICES COMMISSION.

78. Mr. N. M. Samarth: (a) Will the Government be pleased to state whether rules have been made by the Secretary of State in Council for the establishment in India of a Public Services Commission as enjoined by section 96-C. of the Government of India Act?

(b) If so, will the Government be pleased to place the said rules on the table?

(c) If not, do the Government propose to communicate to the Secretary of State the desirability of expediting the matter?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: (a) and (b). The rules have not yet been finally made.

(c) Government have for some time been in telegraphic communication with the Secretary of State on the subject and it is expected, that the final form of the rules will be approved within a few days.

LOCOMOTIVE AND CARRIAGE AND WAGON DEPARTMENTS IN INDIA.

79. Mr. N. M. Samarth: Will the Government be pleased to state what action they have taken or propose to take on paragraph 32, pages 22-23 of the Majority Report of the Royal Commission on Public Services in India, as regards their recommendation that 'a determined and immediate effort should be made to provide better educational opportunities in India, so that it may become increasingly possible to recruit in that country the staff needed to meet all normal requirements' of the Locomotive and Carriage and Wagon Departments of the Indian Railways?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: Government in despatch No. 15-Ry., dated the 16th August 1919, advised the Secretary of State that it was difficult to obtain in India suitable recruits for the Superior Locomotive and Carriage and Wagon Departments and that no substantial change in the immediate future could be looked for. At the same time, it was pointed out, that Government were by no means oblivious of the need for giving Indians the training recommended by the Commission and reference was made to proposals sanctioned in 1918 under which selected Indian graduates receive a preliminary training in the workshops of the East Indian Railway at Jamalpur or Lillooah and are then sent to England at the Company's expense to complete their training.

The provision of technical colleges rests with the Provincial Governments, and in certain provinces at least this matter is receiving considerable attention. As the standard of technical education improves, it is hoped, that it will be possible to train Indians entirely in this country and in time to obtain locally 50 per cent. of the recruits for the Superior Locomotive and Carriage Establishment.

TRAINING OF FOREMEN AND MECHANICAL ENGINEERS FOR STATE RAILWAYS.

80. Mr. N. M. Samarth: (a) Will the Government be pleased to state what action they have taken or propose to take on the recommendations of the Indian Industrial Commission contained in paragraphs 152, 153, 372 and clauses 34, 37, 38, 39 and 43 at pages 276-77 of their Report, with regard to the training of Foremen and Mechanical Engineers for State Railways?

(b) Have Government made or do they propose to make provision for the training of Indians for these two classes of the Railway Technical Services in the Railway Workshops, referred to in paragraph 36 of the said Report as being 'by far the most important development of Mechanical Engineering in India'?

(c) If so, will they kindly supply a copy of the rules they may have made or propose to make as regards age, qualifications, numerical strength and stipends to be allowed to apprentices of all races?

(d) Have the restrictions hitherto imposed by Railway Administrations against the admission or equal treatment of Indian apprentices in the Drawing classes and Technical schools attached to Railway Workshops been withdrawn?

(e) If not, do the Government propose to direct the Railway Administrations to frame rules as to age, educational qualifications and stipends applicable equally to all apprentices without regard to race, colour or creed?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: (a) and (b). I place on the table a copy of Railway Department Resolution No. 2121-E., dated 28th April 1920, which deals with the subject. The Provincial Governments are making considerable progress in the direction of improving the apprenticeship system and schemes for the building of technical schools in the neighbourhood of the central workshops of the North-Western Railway, the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway and the Eastern Bengal Railway, at Lahore, Lucknow and Kanchnrapara, respectively, are in hand. Further particulars as to what is being done will be found on pages 10 and 11 of the journal of Indian Industries and Labour for February last. Railways, generally, are enlarging the scope of the training and improving facilities at the shops, as it is fully recognised, that the better training of Indians for these posts is a most important consideration.

(c) Rules will be drawn up by the Provincial Governments and the Railway Administrations in collaboration when the schemes are sufficiently advanced.

(d) Indian apprentices equally with European apprentices are eligible for admission to Technical schools and for training in workshops.

No. 2121-E.—19.

GOVERNMENT OF INDIA,

RAILWAY DEPARTMENT,

(RAILWAY BOARD.)

Dated Simla, the 28th April, 1920.

RESOLUTION.

THE Government of India have had under consideration the report of the Indian Industrial Commission which in paragraph 155 draws attention to the predominant importance which mechanical engineering is now beginning to assume in India, and to the fact that the development of Industrial enterprises involving the employment of mechanical engineers and trained supervisors has hitherto depended almost entirely on the employment of imported staff. Although many Indian engineers are found in charge of small running plant, yet the subordinate and superior supervising staff in large engineering workshops are almost entirely European or Anglo-Indian. It is clear, however, that, if the advance of Indian industries is to proceed on the hoped-for scale, and if it is to be of real benefit to the people of India, there must be not only a great increase in the number and skill of artisans, but a class of Indian foremen and mechanical engineers must be created.

2. The Industrial Commission have also expressed the opinion that, in respect of mechanical engineering, in its various branches, the only satisfactory method of producing foremen and officers is by a system of apprenticeship in commercially managed engineering shops, combined with theoretical training, preferably imparted in class rooms near the shops and under the same general control. They especially emphasise the necessity of this system in India where the home surroundings of students belonging to the educated middle-classes do not familiarise them with industrial conditions, and where the students themselves have been hitherto more inclined to the theoretical than to the practical forms of training. This important pronouncement is based on an examination of the working of the apprenticeship system in several railway shops; and makes it clear that the great railway workshops of India, which form the most important part of the country's equipment in respect of mechanical engineering, must necessarily play the main part in the training of mechanical foremen and engineers, as well as of artisans.

3. The Government of India take this opportunity of expressing the hope that in the near future a large body of well-qualified men with a mechanical training will be created from among the educated middle-classes. Until recently there has been comparatively little readiness exhibited by these classes to pass through the severe and unaccustomed form of training which the profession of mechanical engineering requires; but, during the past few years, there have been increasingly hopeful signs of a change in this respect. On the other hand, the system of apprenticeship in railway workshops in the past gave little or no scope, and only poor prospects, to youths of these classes. Outside the railways, too, there was no great demand, till comparatively recent years, for Indian foremen or mechanical engineers.

4. It will be of interest to recite briefly what has been done by the railways in recent years to provide for their own requirements and at the same time, to a certain extent, to meet the needs of the country generally through their apprenticeship systems.

It is not too much to say that the railway shops of India have in the past served as the chief training ground for mechanical artisans for the whole country. Youths of the working class enter the shops and after a more or less complete course of training as artisan apprentices, either remain in the shops as artisans or take up similar employment elsewhere. There is, however, an absence of system in the complete training of these youths; they are usually uneducated, or only partially educated when they commence their apprenticeship; and arrangements for the very elementary forms of theoretical teaching they need are inadequate or non-existent.

5. The ranks of foremen, assistant foremen, and chargemen are filled ordinarily either by imported Europeans or by Europeans and Anglo-Indians brought up in the country and trained in the railway workshops. In the latter case, though the system has produced many competent men, some of whom have risen to important posts on railways and in private firms, it still leaves much to be desired. The theoretical training has been, as a rule, conducted by an inadequate and insufficiently qualified staff; and there is usually an absence of adequate supervision of the work of apprentices in the shops. The directions in which the training given at present needs improvement are sufficiently obvious. The scheme which has been in force for two or three years past on the Eastern Bengal Railway at Kanchrapara is an interesting example of the lines on which railway apprenticeship training is now developing.

Residential accommodation has been provided for 28 first class Indian apprentices who draw a monthly stipend rising in five years from Rs. 18 to Rs. 30. They receive their practical training in the workshops and obtain elementary theoretical instruction four hours weekly from teachers who are members of the railway staff and are paid for this work. The rules require that these apprentices shall be Matriculates and there is no lack of suitable candidates. Proposals have been recently put forward by a Committee appointed under the orders of the Government of Bengal for a more advanced scheme at Kanchrapara including the entertainment of a separate and highly qualified staff, and the erection of a hostel for Indian students and of a technical institute in which the classes would be held. The Committee hoped that it would ultimately be possible to bring into force similar schemes in connection with the East Indian and the Bengal-Nagpur Railway shops, as well as at certain other engineering works, and to provide a post-apprenticeship training at the Sibpur College. It was also suggested by the Committee that the general organisation of the whole system of apprenticeship training might be placed under a Board of Control, on which the railways, the engineering firms, and the Sibpur College would be represented.

6. In the case of the officer class, till recently very little has been done in the country to recruit either from the ranks of Europeans or Anglo-Indians, and even less in the case of Indians, with a view to enable promising apprentices to obtain further training in England, and to qualify eventually for officers' posts. Certain railways have introduced schemes providing the necessary pecuniary aid. It may be hoped that the Bengal Committee's scheme may assist in due course in providing Indian recruits for this class.

7. This brief account of the part hitherto played by the railways of India in providing artisans and foremen, not only for their own needs, but also for the industries of the country generally, indicates the direction in which further progress can be made. The Government of India are confident that the managements of the various railways are sufficiently alive to the needs of the time, to do everything possible to create a system which will give middle-class Indian youths an efficient system of training and thus fit them to take their share in the great work of equipping India with skilled mechanics and supervisors, the sinews that actuate the industrial frame.

8. It is needless to enter into details regarding the precise form of scheme that should be adopted. This may not always be the same in every case, and will have to be prepared to suit the conditions of each railway on which the improved system is introduced. The Government of India, however, desire to point out that the railways cannot be expected to bear the cost of training apprentices in their shops in excess of their own requirements, and the help of Local Governments may reasonably be asked to enable expenditure on further developments to be met. The Government of India have recently given considerable grants to Local Governments to assist them in meeting such calls.

It is also necessary to explain that there is a limit to the number of apprentices that can be trained in any workshop, imposed partly by its size, and partly by the nature of its work and the extent of the supervision available.

9. The Government of India trust that the question of the improvement of the apprenticeship system will be approached by railways and Local Governments in full co-operation, and with the determination to open widely, in the interests of the industrial advancement of the country, the excellent training ground presented by the railway workshops, and that the shop management and staff will bring to the task the same spirit of energy and progress which has raised the railway shops to their present high level of efficiency.

10. This Resolution deals principally with railway workshops but the Government of India are fully aware of the excellent work done by Local Government workshops and those owned by private firms, in training apprentices, and they feel sure that non-railway workshops will do their best to improve their systems of training on lines best suited to each individual concern.

Ordered that the Resolution be communicated to all Departments of the Government of India, to all Provincial Governments and Minor Local Governments, and to the Agents, North-Western, Eastern Bengal and Oudh and Rohilkhand Railways for information.

Ordered also that this Resolution be forwarded to the Agents, Assam-Bengal, Bengal-Nagpur, Bengal and North-Western, Bombay, Baroda and Central India, Burma, East Indian, Great Indian Peninsula, Madras and Southern Mahratta, Rohilkund and Kumaon, and South Indian Railways, for information.

Ordered also that this Resolution be published in the Gazette of India for general information.

H. L. COLE,

Secretary, Railway Board.

RECRUITMENT OF OFFICERS, SUPERIOR REVENUE ESTABLISHMENT, STATE RAILWAYS.

81. Mr. N. M. Samarth : Will the Government be pleased to lay on the table the rules, if any, framed for the recruitment of officers of the Superior Revenue Establishment of State Railways in accordance with the recommendations contained in paragraphs 8—11, pages 339-40 of the Majority Report of the Royal Commission on Public Services in India?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn : It is the intention to recruit the Superior Traffic and Stores Establishments of State Railways from among qualified students of Indian Engineering or other technical colleges in future. At present, owing to the reorganization of the scales, the numbers are in excess of cadres, and consequently no appointments are being made this year, and revised rules have not been issued yet. I have dealt with the recruitment of the Superior Loco. and Carriage establishment in reply to Question No. 79.

ADMISSION INTO THE RAILWAY SERVICE OF INDIANS AND ANGLO-INDIANS.

82. Mr. N. M. Samarth : (a) Are the Government going to give effect to the views of Sir M. B. Chaulbal and Sir Abdur Rahim in paragraphs 24-25 at pages 381-82 and in paragraph 61 at page 416, respectively, of Volume I of the Report of the Public Services Commission with regard to the qualifying examinations for admission into the Railway Service for Indians and Anglo-Indians?

(b) If not, why not?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn : (a) and (b). The Public Services Commission dealt with the Superior establishments only. In my reply to Question No. 81, I have stated, that the intention is to recruit the Superior Traffic and Stores Establishments from Engineering colleges. The course of training at these colleges is the same for all students.

STAFF FOR STATE RAILWAYS.

83. Mr. N. M. Samarth : Do the Government propose to direct the Railway Companies working the State Railways to give effect to the general principles laid down by the Royal Commission on Public Services with regard to the recruitment of the staff for State Railways in Chapter III of Annexure XIX to their Report?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn : The Railway Companies have been made acquainted with the principles followed with regard to the recruitment of the staff for State railways, and they are also moving in the direction of appointing an increasing number of Indians to the higher appointments.

DELETION OF A NOTE IN STATE RAILWAY CODE re : SALARIES OF DRIVERS, ETC.

84. Mr. N. M. Samarth : Do the Government propose to order that the following note in paragraph 230 of the State Railway Open Line Code, Volume II, 1908 edition, be deleted :

'The maxima salaries for Native Drivers, Shunters and Guards are fixed at two-thirds of those for Europeans. Parsis are not Europeans and can only therefore be allowed the rates of pay laid down for natives.'

Colonel W. D. Waghorn : The rule was introduced prior to 1881 and will be omitted from the revised edition of the Code now under compilation.

SELECTION COMMITTEE RECOMMENDED BY THE ROYAL COMMISSION ON PUBLIC SERVICES.

85. Mr. N. M. Samarth : (a) Have the Government appointed the Selection Committee recommended by the Royal Commission on Public Services in paragraph 11 at page 340 of their Report?

(b) If so, what is its personnel?

(c) If not, when do the Government propose to appoint it?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn : No. But it is now proposed to form Selection Committees to appoint passed students of the several Engineering Colleges to the different departments, the system of guaranteeing appointments to the men who pass out highest being discontinued.

WHEAT PROFITS, 1915-16.

86. Mr. E. L. Price : Will the Government be pleased to state :

(a) the exact wording of the undertaking with regard to wheat profits, 1915-16;

(b) the exact amount of those profits;

(c) how they have been utilised?

Mr. J. Hullah : (a) No undertaking was given regarding the manner in which the profits would be utilised and no decision was reached until after the close of the operations. An indication of the intentions of the Government was contained in Sir Claude Hill's reply to a Question put by the Honourable Rai Bahadur B. D. Shukul at a meeting of the Imperial Legislative Council on the 16th February 1917 in which Sir Claude Hill stated, that it was hoped to devote these profits to special expenditure for the benefit of the agricultural classes. On the 6th March 1917, the Government of India obtained the approval of the Secretary of State to the distribution of the profits among the principal wheat producing provinces subject to the condition that the money would be utilised on special schemes of non-recurring expenditure for the benefit of the agricultural classes and that any resultant recurring expenditure would be met from Provincial Revenues. The Secretary of State was informed at the same time, that the principal schemes suggested by Local Governments and approved by the Government of India were the replacement of existing strains of wheat and other staples by improved varieties, well-boring operations, the improvement of existing Government farms and the establishment of new farms for demonstration, experiment, seed supply and cattle breeding.

(c) Grants amounting to Rs. 26 lakhs were distributed to the Provinces as follows:—

					Rs.
Bombay	...	...	...	...	2,00,000
United Provinces	...	...	...	...	8,25,000
Punjab	...	...	...	...	12,25,000
Central Provinces	...	...	...	...	2,50,000
North-West Frontier Province	...	...	...	...	50,000
Bihar and Orissa	...	...	...	...	50,000
				Total	26,00,000

Mr. E. L. Price : May I ask if Sind has got anything out of that ?

Mr. J. Hullah : It appears not. I do not know whether Bombay gave anything to Sind.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar : Did Madras get any of it ?

Mr. J. Hullah : No.

EXCESS EXPENDITURE IN RESPECT OF 'EXCHANGE.'

87. Mr. E. L. Price : Will the Government be pleased to state with regard to the Honourable the Finance Member's replies to Questions asked by me during the voting of demands on 14th March last (pp. 1024-25 of Volume I, No. 11, Official Reports) :

The excess expenditure to the latest date available ?

The Honourable Mr. W. M. Hailey : The total net expenditure in England during the first quarter of the year for which the figures are available is £5.91 millions. If exchange had been 1s. 8d. during that period, the rupee expenditure would have been 710 lakhs. Calculated, however, on the actual rates prevailing, the expenditure amounts to Rs. 891 lakhs and there was thus an excess of Rs. 181 lakhs.

PAY AND SERVICE OF STENOGRAPHERS, CLERKS AND ASSISTANTS IN THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA SECRETARIAT.

88. Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar : Will the Government be pleased to state :

- (i) the pay of stenographers employed in the Government of India before the introduction of the re-organised scales of pay in December 1919 ;

- (ii) the pay of shorthand writers employed in the Government of India after the introduction of the new scale of pay in 1919 ;
- (iii) the percentage of increase in pay that has been given owing to the dearness of provisions ;
- (iv) the pay of assistants and clerks employed in the Government of India before and after the revision in 1919, showing the percentage of increase in emoluments owing to dearness of provisions in each case ;
- (v) the number of years in which the maximum is reached in the case of (a) assistants ; (b) clerks ; and (c) stenographers ;
- (vi) whether it is a fact that technical skill is required for becoming a stenographer ;
- (vii) whether there has been noticed any marked difference in the quality of stenographers recently recruited by the Government of India as compared with those employed before December 1919 ;
- (viii) whether any difficulty has been found in recruiting efficient shorthand writers through the agency of the Staff Selection Board ;
- (ix) the fee which is paid to a stenographer employed in the Government of India when asked to report the proceedings of a Committee or of a Conference ;
- (x) the fee which has been or is paid to a stenographer, not in Government employ whether in India or appointed from outside India, in doing the same work ;
- (xi) whether it is a fact that stenographers employed in the Government of India (other than those attached to Secretaries) have to remain in office after office hours, which is usually 5 P.M., if so, whether they are paid any extra remuneration for so staying, and if not, why not ;
- (xii) whether any memorial has been submitted by stenographers, and, if so, when and how has it been considered by the Government of India ;
- (xiii) whether it is a fact that assistants and clerks have, as a rule, to stay in office after office hours ?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : The information asked for by the Honourable Member is contained in the statement which is laid on the table :

Statement.

- (i) Incremental scale of Rs. 150—10—350 a month.
- (ii) Incremental scale of Rs. 175—9—400 a month.
- (iii) The percentage of increase in pay given owing to the dearness of provisions cannot be calculated. In giving effect to the new scale, initial pay was determined by length of service, and some men received a larger increase than others. The dearness of living was not the only factor in determining the new scale of pay.
- (iv) Assistants.—Before revision, grades of Rs. 140, 170, 200, 250, 300, 350 and 400.
- After revision, time-scale of Rs. 200—15—365—efficiency bar—380—15—500 with an upper time-scale of Rs. 375—25—500 for selected assistants.

Clerks.—Before revision, grades of Rs. 60, 70, 80, 90, 100—efficiency bar—120, 140, 160, 180, 200 with two further increments of Rs. 25 each for long and approved service. After revision, time scale of Rs. 100—8—156—efficiency bar—164—8—300—with a special grade on Rs. 300—25—350.

As to the percentage of increase on account of dearness of provisions, the same remarks apply as in the case of stenographers.

Selection scale 17 years.

(c) 25 years.

(vi) Yes.

(vii) No.

(ix) Fees are fixed according to the work to be done. Ordinarily, a fee not exceeding Rs. 20 a day is admissible.

(x) There are no fixed rules, remuneration in such cases being determined with reference to the qualifications of the individual employed.

(xi) Stenographers (other than those attached to Secretaries and Members) have not, as a rule, to stay in office after office hours. They are, however, obliged to do so occasionally during times of special pressure.

No extra remuneration is given for such late hours, as they are whole-time servants.

(xii) Two series of memorials have been received, one before and the other after the introduction of the new scale of pay. After careful consideration, both have been rejected.

(xiii) Assistants and clerks have not, as a rule, to stay back in office after the ordinary closing hour. They are, however, obliged to do so during periods of pressure, and to a somewhat greater extent than unattached stenographers.

VIOLATION OF CHASTITY OF AN INDIAN WOMAN AT SIALKOT.

89. Mr. M. Faiyaz Khan : (a) Has the attention of the Government been drawn to the statement published in the Bunday Mataram of 14th June 1921, page 2, column 2, in which it is stated, that a British soldier violated the chastity of an Indian woman at Sialkot, and he was released by the Cantonment Magistrate and fined Rs. 50 only?

(b) If the above statement is true, will the Government be pleased to state :

(i) the number of Indians alleged to have violated the chastity of European women in India during the last 150 years of the British Raj in India and the amount of punishment meted out to those Indians, and

(ii) the number of Europeans alleged to have violated the chastity of Indian women in India during the last 150 years of the British Raj in India and the amount of punishment meted out to those Europeans?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : (a) Government have seen the article referred to by the Honourable Member. The soldier in question was charged with an offence punishable under Section 354 of the Indian Penal Code, but the Court found that there was no indecent assault and convicted the accused only on the minor offence of causing simple hurt, punishable under Section 323 of the Code. The sentence imposed was as stated.

LORD CHELMSFORD ON INDIAN COUNCILS.

90. Mr. M. Faiyaz Khan : Has the attention of the Government been drawn to the 'London Letter' published in the Leader of 16th June 1921, page 7, column 2, in which Lord Chelmsford is said to have stated in a meeting recently held at Oxford, that 'it was a great disappointment to him (Lord Chelmsford) that the Councils were not so representative of the people as they might have been'?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : Yes.

PURCHASE OF MICROSCOPES.

91. Mr. M. Faiyaz Khan : (a) Has the attention of the Government been drawn to the statement headed 'Microscopes for India' published in the Leader of the 16th June 1921, page 8, column 2?

(b) Will the Government be pleased to state whether tenders had been invited in India regarding the possibility of obtaining the microscopes on behalf of the Government of India through Indian firms in India before inviting tenders from English firms in England? Is it true, that the microscopes supplied to the Government of India, as mentioned above, were manufactured by Spencer Lens Co., of Buffalo, United States of America?

(c) Is the Government aware, that the said manufacturer is already represented in India by an Indian firm? Will the Government be pleased to state why it did not first invite tenders of Microscopes in India before inviting tenders from British firms in England?

Mr. A. C. Chatterjee : The attention of the Government has been drawn to the statement referred to, which was published in the Leader of the 16th June 1921.

2. Tenders for the microscopes in question were not invited in India. Under the provisions of the rules for the supply of articles for the public service, articles which are not manufactured in India are to be obtained by indent upon the Director-General of Stores, India Office, with certain exceptions laid down in the rules. The only exception which might have been applied to this case is embodied in Rule 3 (a) by which an indenter is empowered to make local purchases of imported stores, provided the following conditions are complied with :

- (1) that the articles are in India at the time of the order ;
- (2) that their price and quality are not unfavourable as compared with those at which similar articles could be obtained through the Director-General of Stores ; and
- (3) that the expenditure involved is within the financial powers delegated to the indenter under Rule 13 of the rules.

In this case, the value of the microscopes required by the indenter exceeded his financial powers, so that even if the other conditions of Rule 3 (a) had been complied with, the indenter acted correctly in forwarding the indent to the Director-General of Stores.

3. It is true, that the microscopes supplied were manufactured by the Spencer Lens Company of the United States of America. The Government is not aware, that that Company is already represented by an agent in India.

EDITORIAL ARTICLES IN 'JUSTICE.'

92. Mr. M. K. Reddi Garu: Has the attention of the Government been drawn to the following editorial articles headed: 'Judicial Appointments,' 'The Retort Brutal,' 'The Future' and 'These be their Gods, Oh, Israel!' that appeared in the issue of 7th, 9th, 10th and 11th June, respectively, of Justice, an English daily of Madras.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: The Government of India have seen the articles referred to.

ARTICLES IN THE 'DAILY EXPRESS' AND 'NEW INDIA.'

93. Mr. M. K. Reddi Garu: Has the attention of the Government been drawn to an article headed 'Pitchforking done' which appeared in the Daily Express of the 10th June 1921, and to the article on the same subject which appeared in the New India of 9th June 1921?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: The Government of India have seen the second but not the first article referred to.

RACIAL DISTINCTIONS AMONG RAILWAY PASSENGERS IN REGARD TO ACCOMMODATION, ETC.

94. Mr. M. K. Reddi Garu: (a) Has the attention of the Government been drawn to Resolution No. 2 regarding the removal of 'all existing racial distinctions among the railway passengers as regards accommodation, retiring rooms, etc.,' which has been discussed in the last Session of the Madras Legislative Council?

(b) If so, what action has this Government taken in view of all the discussions which took place in that Council?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: (a) Reply is in affirmative.

(b) The Government do not at present propose to take any further action than is now being taken. As this Assembly are aware, Railway Administrations are endeavouring to do away with all racial differences in the matter of travelling accommodation and this, in so far as upper class accommodation is concerned, has long been the case. The position, however, is somewhat different in the matter of the lower classes; and whereas the number of poor Europeans and Anglo-Indians travelling in the inter and third class carriages is comparatively small, the amount of accommodation reserved for them is equally small and the removal of this reservation would but afford accommodation for comparatively few Indian passengers. Indeed, it is considered desirable to continue the reservation of this accommodation in the interests of the much larger number of Indians themselves who travel third class.

In this connection, it may be mentioned, that at a Railway Conference held in Lucknow in 1903 to consider the question of the comfort and convenience of 3rd class passengers, and at which a large number of Indian gentlemen were invited to be present, it was resolved that 'every train be provided with a separate compartment for Europeans partitioned by planks, and not iron bars, and that European third class passengers be restricted to the use of that compartment.'

As regards retiring rooms the usual practice is to allot waiting or retiring rooms to 1st and 2nd class passengers, and Indian passengers holding tickets of these classes are entitled to the use of these rooms according to the class of ticket they hold. In some few instances, separate 1st and 2nd class retiring rooms for Europeans and Indians are provided, but this has been done not with a view to making any racial distinction but to meet the convenience of both parties, and at the pressing request of the Indian public the same has been done in the matter of refreshment rooms at most important stations. Separate refreshment rooms for Hindu and Muhammadan gentlemen have been provided at some stations, where facilities for refreshment are not easily obtainable in the vicinity of the stations and where the demand is sufficiently great to attract contractors and justify the necessary capital outlay.

PAYMENTS TO BURN & CO. FOR AMERICAN RAILWAY WAGONS.

95. Mr. K. C. Neogy: (a) On what basis are payments made to Messrs. Burn & Co. for work done in connection with the fitting up of American railway wagons?

(b) How do the railway authorities satisfy themselves that all work for which payment is claimed in this connection has been actually and satisfactorily done?

(c) At what stage is payment generally made to Messrs. Burn & Co. for stores indented by them for the said work? Are the said Company being given any advances for purchase of materials?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: (a) The Honourable Member is referred to the reply to No. 2 (d) of his previous set of Questions in regard to this matter.

(b) The work is inspected by the Superintendent, Local Manufactures, Calcutta, or other officers appointed by the Agent, Eastern Bengal Railway, who is in administrative charge of the work, and final bills are admitted only on the passing of the work by the Inspecting Officer.

(c) The contract terms of payment are:

- (i) With order— $\frac{1}{2}$ contract price for open wagons and $\frac{1}{2}$ for covered wagons.
- (ii) As material is delivered in contractor's yard— $\frac{1}{2}$ contract price for open wagons only.
- (iii) On delivery—balance.

MANUFACTURE OF RAILWAY WAGONS IN INDIA.

96. Mr. K. C. Neogy: (a) Is it a fact that the purchase of articles of European manufacture for purposes of construction of railway wagons by private contracting firms, except through the authorities in England, is strictly prohibited?

(b) If so, will Government be pleased to state whether the articles supplied by Messrs. Burn & Co. and Messrs. Jessop & Co., for purposes of construction of wagons by them, comprise solely of raw materials?

(c) What materials are being supplied by the Railway and the said contractors, respectively, in connection with the said work of construction?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: (a), (b) and (c). It depends on the terms of the contract. At present contracts placed in India are for the supply of the complete wagon, the railway concerned supplying the wheels and axles and the contracting firm arranging for all other materials. The contracting firms do the bulk of the manufacturing work in their own shops but are permitted to obtain parts which cannot be made in India.

COST OF CONSTRUCTION OF RAILWAY WAGONS.

97. Mr. K. C. Neogy: What has been the average cost of construction of different standard types of railway wagons in England, in India by private firms, and in Indian Railway workshops, respectively, during each of the last five years?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: The last five years cover the period of war and post-war conditions. Abnormal difficulties have prevailed in obtaining materials and getting any wagons constructed. There have been comparatively few wagons of standard types delivered and these only during the last year or two. Railway workshops do not manufacture wagons ordinarily and no standard types had been delivered by firms in India up to within the last few months. A comparison is therefore not possible and owing to the abnormal fluctuations of price of material and labour and exchange, actual costs would be difficult to obtain and of no practical value.

The distribution of recent orders by the Railway Board has been decided on tender prices; in some cases, the quotations for Indian made wagons have been lower than those for imported wagons and in other cases the reverse.

ORDER OF EXTERNMENT AGAINST MAULVI ABDUL MATIN CHOUDHURY BY THE DEPUTY COMMISSIONER OF THE KHASI AND JAINTIA HILLS.

98. Rai G. C. Nag Bahadur: (a) Is the Government of India aware of Notification No. 784-P., dated the 9th October 1911, issued by the Government of Eastern Bengal and Assam, in force in the Khasi and Jaintia Hills District, by which the Deputy Commissioner of that district is empowered to pass an order of externment against any one visiting Shillong, the capital of the province of Assam, requiring him to leave the boundaries of that district within 24 hours?

(b) Has the attention of the Government of India been drawn to the report published in the Janasakti newspaper of 14th June 1921, published from Sylhet, and other papers, that in pursuance of the aforesaid notification, a gentleman, named Maulvi Abdul Matin Choudhury, was directed by the Deputy Commissioner by his order, dated 6th June to leave the boundaries of the Khasi and Jaintia Hills district within 24 hours, the grounds given in the said order of externment being: (1) that the said Maulvi Abdul Matin was not a native of the district, (2) that he was a non-co-operator, and (3) that he was working in the said Khasi and Jaintia Hills for the non-co-operation movement?

(c) Do the Government of India propose to direct the Government of Assam to cancel the said notification?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: The Government of India have no information about the matter which is one for the consideration of the Local Government of Assam and the Government of India do not propose to interfere.

PENSION GRANTED TO MAHINDRI DEVI.

99. Rai G. C. Nag Bahadur: (a) Did the Government of India receive through the Assam Government any memorial from Rani Mahindri Devi, widow of the last descendant of the Ahom King, and a political pensioner at Gauhati, asking the Government to increase the amount of her pension?

(b) Is the Government aware that Rs. 50 which is paid to her as pension is quite inadequate for her maintenance, and that she is at present living in a state of great indigence and squalor, and that her impoverished condition is very keenly felt among the people of the country?

(c) Do the Government of India propose to increase the amount of her pension, and also make a suitable grant for repairs of her house?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent (on behalf of the Honourable Sir John Wood): (a) The memorial referred to was addressed not to the Government of India but to the Government of Assam.

(b) The Government of Assam recommended, after local inquiry, that the Rani's monthly pension be raised from Rs. 50 to Rs. 100 and that a special grant of Rs. 1,000 be made for necessary repairs to her residence.

(c) These recommendations have been accepted by the Government of India and orders have issued accordingly.

PAY OF THE STAFF OF THE OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR-GENERAL, POSTS AND TELEGRAPHS.

100. Mr. M. K. Reddi Garu: With regard to the Committee appointed for revising the pay of the staff of the Office of the Director-General of Posts and Telegraphs, will the Government kindly say:

(a) if the Committee's report has been received and when, also what has been done to give effect to their recommendations;

(b) whether the Government are prepared to accept all their recommendations without modifications and, if not, what are the reasons for it;

(c) whether a time-scale of pay as in the case of the Secretariat offices with effect from 1st December 1919 will be given with full benefit of past service to each of the staff of that office, and if not, what are the objections against that?

Colonel Sir S. D'A. Crookshank: (a) The report was received in March last. The recommendations of the Committee were carefully examined by the Government of India and the conclusions of the latter have now been accepted by the Standing Finance Committee.

(b) The Committee's recommendations have been accepted by Government with some modifications, which were considered necessary in view of the rates of pay given in other offices in Calcutta.

(c) As the pay of part of the establishment was revised in 1918 and 1919, it is not considered necessary to give retrospective effect to the new rates of pay from a date earlier than 1st March 1921. In order to avoid anomalies due to different methods of recruitment followed in the offices of the Directors-General of the Post Offices and Telegraphs before the amalgamation, and to special promotions or supersessions, it has been decided not to bring the clerical staff on to the new scales in accordance with the length of the service put in by them but to bring B class clerks on to the next scales at a point which will give them an immediate increase of 25 or 30 per cent. over their pay plus war allowance on March 1st last and to bring A class clerks on to the new scales at a stage next but one above their pay plus war allowance on the above date.

RECOMMENDATIONS OF THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA SECRETARIAT PROCEDURE AND ESTABLISHMENTS COMMITTEES.

101. Mr. M. K. Reddi Garu: (a) Is it a fact that the Government of India Secretariat Procedure and the Establishments Committees recommended separately as regards (i) organisation and office procedure and (ii) pay of the officials of the Secretariat and attached offices, respectively?

(b) If so, why as regards (i) has the Government again appointed another Committee for the organisation of the office procedure of the (attached) office of the Director-General of Posts and Telegraphs when that office also was directed to adopt the recommendations as announced in the Home Department (Public) Resolution No. 2366, dated the 15th September 1920, in the Gazette of India?

(c) Why as regards (ii) in part (a), will not the scales of pay recommended for the attached offices, as published by the Staff Selection Board on the 6th September 1920 be given to that office with retrospective effect from 1st December 1919?

Colonel Sir S. D'A. Crookshank: (a) The Government of India Secretariat Procedure Committee stated that they saw no prima facie reason why the principles of their recommendations as to procedure should not be applied mutatis mutandis to attached offices. The recommendations of the Government of India Secretariat Establishments Salaries Committee did not deal with the pay and allowances of the staff of attached offices.

(b) While the recommendations of the Secretariat Procedure Committee were under examination by the Government of India, the Director-General of Posts and Telegraphs submitted proposals for revising the pay of the clerical staff of his office, the great majority of which are employed in Calcutta. It was decided, in the first instance, to place an officer on special duty to make recommendations with regard to all the offices attached to the Government of India situated in Calcutta, but it was subsequently found that no suitable officer could be spared for the purpose. As there was also reason to believe, that the working arrangements in the offices of Postmasters-General were susceptible of improvement, it was finally decided to appoint a small committee of expert officers of the Post and Telegraph Department not only to make recommendations for revising the pay of the staff in the office of the Director-General of Posts and Telegraphs, but also to examine in detail the organisation and methods of work both in that office and in those of all Postmasters-General, in order that they might recommend delegations of power and decentralization of control with a view to reducing the volume of work in these offices as well as to simplifying and regularising the procedure.

(c) As stated above, the great majority of the staff of the office of the Director-General of Posts and Telegraphs are posted at Calcutta. It was thought that their scales of pay should be fixed with special reference to the local conditions prevailing in that city.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE AND OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR-GENERAL OF POSTS AND TELEGRAPHS.

102. Mr. M. K. Reddi Garu: With reference to the Answers given by Government to parts (d) and (e) of Question No. 595 put in this Assembly by Rai Bahadur Bakshi Sohan Lal on the 24th March last, will the Government kindly lay on the table a statement showing for comparison:

- the total number of clerks in the Department of Commerce and in the office of the Director-General of Posts and Telegraphs with the academic qualifications of each and the system of recruitment under which they were appointed, and
- whether as regards (e) above, the Government are prepared to consider the question of granting to the establishments of attached offices the same benefit of past services as they have granted to the Secretariat and other higher services such as I. C. S., Forest, Education, etc.?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: (a) A statement is laid on the table giving the information desired.

(b) The method was adopted in order to give an immediate increase in pay and to avoid the complication of personal allowances. We have no proposal under consideration to revise this method, but I am ready to make inquiries whether the method adopted has resulted in unreasonable inequality of treatment as compared with the Secretariat establishment having regard to the duties which the two classes of officers have to perform.

ADDITION OF A TOURING OFFICER TO THE STAFF OF THE DIRECTOR-GENERAL, POSTS AND TELEGRAPHS.

103. Mr. M. K. Reddi Garu: (a) Is it a fact that a highly paid officer has recently been added to the Head Quarters staff of the Telegraph Branch of the Director to swell the number of touring officers? If so, why?

(b) What are the number of touring officers in that Department and why there are so many?

(c) Is it not a fact that there are highly paid responsible Postmasters-General and Directors of Telegraph Engineering to control both the Traffic and Engineering Branches?

(d) Why cannot the number of such officers be reduced and their constant tours cut short?

Colonel Sir S. D'A. Crookshank: (a) The post of Deputy Chief Engineer, ranking as a Director, Telegraph Engineering, has recently been sanctioned by the Secretary of State. His duties are to assist the Chief Engineer in dealing with all questions relating to telephones, in devoting special attention to the commercial side of the telephone systems and in inspecting important telephone engineering works under construction. The appointment has been created in order to provide for an expert technical adviser on all engineering and traffic questions arising in connection with the development of telephone systems in India.

(b) There are five touring officers on the telegraph side of the headquarter staff of the Director-General, viz., Chief Engineer, Deputy Chief Engineer, Telephones, Director of Wireless Telegraphs, Deputy Director-General, Telegraph Traffic, and the Traffic Controller. These officers tour from time to time in order to keep themselves in touch with local officers, to discuss outstanding questions with them, and to give them the benefit of their special technical knowledge and experience.

(c) Telegraph traffic is controlled by Postmasters-General and Engineering works and establishments by Directors, Telegraph Engineering, within their circles.

(d) The number of these officers cannot be reduced because the charges already held by them are too large. It is obvious, that in a public utility Department, such as this one is, the work of which is expanding annually, the tendency is and must be towards an increase of personnel of all classes.

The tours of these officers are not constant and, generally speaking, the amount of touring accomplished is barely adequate and sufficient to keep them in touch with requirements.

TREATMENT OF INDIAN PASSENGERS.

104. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala: (a) Have the Government read Mr. Raj Narain's letter dated Katra Neil, Delhi, 13th May, printed in the Leader, dated 23rd May 1921, at page 7, column 1, about the conduct of a Lieutenant who would not allow Indians to travel with himself in the same Railway compartment and threatened to shoot and refused to give his name to the Railway authorities?

(b) What action, if any, have the Government taken in the matter?

(c) Do the Government propose to issue a circular to all Europeans in India to remove from their minds feeling of their racial superiority and cultivate the habit of treatment on the basis of equality, irrespective of creed or colour?

Sir Godfrey Fell: (a) Yes.

(b) As the Honourable Member is probably aware, the officer concerned was tried by the District Magistrate and fined Rs. 400.

(c) Government do not consider that it is necessary to issue a circular of the nature suggested, or that such a circular would serve any useful purpose. The attitude of Government towards such incidents as that referred to by the Honourable Member has been the subject of more than one recent pronouncement, and must be well known to all sections of the community.

PROBATIONARY SUPERINTENDENTS OF POST OFFICES.

105. Mr. M. Faiyaz Khan: (a) Is the Government aware that there is much discontent among the Probationary Superintendents of Post Offices on account of insufficient pay and bad prospects?

(b) Is any period of probation fixed for Probationary Superintendents of Post Offices prior to confirmation?

(c) Is it a fact that in other services, viz., the Provincial Civil Service, Provincial Police and Forest, the probationary period is limited to two years?

(d) If the answer to (b) is in the negative, will the Government state why this is not done in case of Probationary Superintendents of Post Offices and they are not confirmed after completing two years' service?

(e) Is the Departmental examination for Superintendents of Post Offices held in compartments and twice a year, four attempts being allowed to each candidate, as is done in the case of Deputy Collectors? If not, why not?

(f) Is the scale of pay of these Superintendents the same as that fixed for Deputy Collectors, viz., Rs. 300 to 1,000 by annual increments of Rs. 40? If not, why should not their pay be raised to the same scale?

Colonel Sir S. D'A. Crookshank: (a) Government are not aware of any such discontent. The pay has recently been increased from Rs. 100 to Rs. 200 a month and, as the number of highly qualified candidates for these posts exceeds the number of vacancies, there is no reason to believe that either the pay is insufficient or the prospects bad.

(b) The period of probation is not fixed.

(c) In the case of the Provincial Civil and Police Services the rules framed by Local Governments are not entirely uniform, but, as a general rule, officers are confirmed after two years, subject to their fitness and to their passing departmental tests. As regards the Provincial Forest Service, it is left to Local Governments to fix the probationary period, subject to the proviso that it should not exceed two years.

(d) The length of the probationary period depends on the number of vacancies among the permanent Superintendents. These occur at irregular intervals. It is not, therefore, possible definitely to fix the probationary period at two years although the period of probation averages about two years.

(e) The examination is held once a year. It is not held in compartments. Ordinarily a candidate is allowed two attempts. The present system has been found to give satisfactory results and it is not proposed to make any change.

(f) The answer is in the negative. The question has been examined and the present rate of pay is considered by Government to be sufficient.

PURCHASE OF SILVER.

106. Mr. M. K. Reddi Garu: (i) Will the Government be pleased to lay on the table a detailed statement showing the annual average at which the Royal Mint and the India Office have made their respective purchases of silver since the closing of the mints in 1893 up to date?

(ii) Will the Government be pleased to lay a statement on the table showing the number and names of firms that trade in silver and the number and names of firms of brokers, who deal in silver, both in London and Bombay, separately?

(iii) Will the Government kindly state if it is a fact:

(a) that the Secretary of State purchases his silver through these brokers in London, and

(b) that these brokers usually purchase their silver for India out of loans got from the Bank of England?

The Honourable Mr. W. M. Hailey : (2) A statement is laid on the table.

(ii) The Government has no information on the point.

(iii) Purchases of silver by the Secretary of State are normally now made through a firm of brokers in London; but, in the exceptional circumstances of recent years, considerable purchases have been made through other channels, and the Secretary of State holds himself at liberty to adopt whatever course seems expedient at the time when purchases are required. There is no information tending to support suggestion in (b) which is, moreover, inherently improbable as payments made in the London market are regularly made against delivery. In consideration of employment by the Indian Government, purchasers understand that in such connection they act as brokers only and not as dealers.

APPOINTMENT IN INDIA OF EXPERT ACCOUNTANTS FROM LEADING FIRMS IN ENGLAND.

107. Mr. K. C. Neogy: (i) With reference to the 'body of expert Accountants from one of the leading firms in England,' whose assistance, as stated by the Finance Member in his last budget speech, has been taken by Government with the object of introducing in Army Supply Departments a system of commercial costing accounts and for the purpose of overhauling Post and Telegraph accounts, will Government be pleased :

(a) to lay on the table the correspondence with the Secretary of State containing the terms of the contract on which the said Accountants were employed in India, and

(b) to state the number of the said Accountants so employed, the period during which they work, and the total cost—under different heads—entailed on Government by their visit, together with their respective rates of remuneration?

(ii) (a) Is it a fact that the said Accountants submitted bills charging Government for various expenses of an entirely personal nature, such as cost of entertainment of friends, cost of recreation and amusements, subscription to clubs, dentist's bill, etc.?

(b) If so, will Government be pleased to state the amounts charged in their bills under each of all items of such nature, and the amounts for which they have been passed by the Audit Department?

(iii) Will Government be pleased to lay on the table the forms of account which have been changed on their recommendation, in the different departments, noting in each case the improvements effected?

(iv) Is it a fact that some officers of the Audit Department have been placed on special duty for the same work as the said Accountants were expected to accomplish?

The Honourable Mr. W. M. Hailey : (i) (a). The correspondence is placed on the table (Annexure I).

(i) (b), (ii) (a), and (ii) (b). Three Accountants have been employed. They have been working in India since December 1920. In May 1921, the Senior Accountant sailed for England and he is expected back in India in the ensuing winter. A partner of the firm will also visit India to examine the materials collected by the Accountants before final recommendations are made. The rates of remuneration of the Partner and the Accountants are given in the correspondence which I have laid on the table.

A statement of the total cost expended in India up to 30th June 1921 by the representatives of the firm showing the amounts under different detailed heads is laid on the table (Annexure II). Besides this amount, a bill for £2,211-9-0 has been drawn upon the Secretary of State in England. This amount represents the total claim of the firm for work done for the Government of India from the 4th October 1920 to 28th February 1921, and includes the cost incurred in England on account of the three representatives sent to India. The bills include Rs. 66-5-0 for entertainment of friends and Rs. 110-7-0 for subscriptions to clubs. The latter was specially permitted for periods corresponding to the unexpired periods of subscriptions to similar clubs in England. The contract is for 'reasonable hotel and living expenses' and, I am informed, that when the contract was entered into, these gentlemen were given to understand that such items would be included in that category. Now, however, that the matter has been brought to notice, it has been arranged that the amount of these items shall be refunded, and no further payments on account of such charges will be made. The admissible charges include items 1 (a), 1 (c) and 2 in the statement of cost attached, which total Rs. 11,102-5-0. This works out to about Rs. 584 per head per mensem, which must be regarded as very reasonable, seeing that most of their work during the period in question was in Calcutta.

(iii) Up to the present, advance copies of their reports on the following concerns have been received, and action cannot be taken upon them until they have been approved by the London firm :—

- (1) Arts and Crafts Emporium, Lucknow.
- (2) Turpentine and Resin Distillery, Bareilly.
- (3) Government Saw Mills and Turnery, Clutterbuckganj.
- (4) Jail Factory at Naini.
- (5) Distillery Contractors' account in Bombay.
- (6) Bombay Trawler Accounting system.
- (7) Wood Working Institute, Bareilly.

(iv) No officers of the Audit Department have yet been placed on special duty for the same work as the Accountants from England are expected to accomplish. It is intended to attach two officers temporarily to the representatives of the firms in India to learn the work and to carry out the recommendations of the Accountants when they have left India.

ANNEXURE I.

Copy of a letter from Messrs. Price Waterhouse and Company to the Financial Secretary to the India Office, London.

With reference to the discussions which have taken place between ourselves and Messrs. Gauntlett and Burdon, representing the India Office, we are pleased to inform you, that we shall be prepared to undertake the inquiry which the Government of India desire should be made. We understand that the scope of the inquiry will be as follows :

- (a) To examine the existing system of accounts maintained in respect of the commercial or quasi-commercial activities of the Government of India.
- (b) To investigate the possibility of improving the existing system of accounts with a view to embodying therein methods and principles of accounting which are considered requisite in ordinary commercial practice and to make recommendations for the introduction where and when possible and desirable of system of 'cost' accounting, due regard in every instance being had to the special conditions obtaining in India.

2. We understand that the activities referred to in 1 (a) above comprise the following of which the first mentioned are the most important :

Post and Telegraph Department.
Opium Department.
Salt Department.
Public Works Workshops.

The Saw Mills and Turnery, Bareilly.
Marine Engineering Works, Dwabong.
Jail Manufacture Department, Madras.
Jail Factories, United Provinces.
Dacca Central Jail (Woollen Factory).
Presidency Jail Jute Work.

We understand, however, that the Government of India do not at present wish to bind themselves or us to an absolute undertaking that each and all of these departments shall come under immediate review or that a reformed system of accounts shall be devised in each case. The more important departments will be dealt with first and the decision in detail as regards the others will await the results of the earlier stages of our inquiry.

3. We are prepared to undertake the inquiry on the following terms :

We propose to appoint for the immediate conduct of the inquiry Mr. Cathles, one of our principal clerks and two assistants. These three gentlemen will proceed to India so as to arrive if possible early in January 1921. So far as can be foreseen at present, the inquiry and the presentation of results will not be completed before the end of June 1922 and Mr. Cathles and his assistants will remain in India during this period subject, in the case of Mr. Cathles, to the qualification that if he is required to return to England for a period on other business of the firm, the Government will raise no objection to his doing so. On the other hand, the Government of India will be at liberty to require Mr. Cathles to visit England during and in pursuance of the inquiry for the purpose of acquiring information or consulting his principals. The desirability of increasing the staff under Mr. Cathles' control and thus hastening the inquiry can, if necessary, be discussed at a later date between the Government of India and ourselves. The material accumulated by Mr. Cathles and his assistants will ultimately be examined by one of our partners who will visit India for a short period at the appropriate time before we submit to the Government our final recommendations.

The terms of remuneration required are as follows :

Partner	...	...	20	Cuin as per diem of 7 hours.
Mr. Cathles	...	...	10	ditto.
1st Assistant	...	...	6	ditto.
2nd Assistant	...	...	5	ditto.

These fees to be charged at this rate for each day or part of a day of 7 hours that the services of the individual in question are wholly employed upon the work for the Government of India. This expression is to cover time spent in travelling to and from India, including time spent upon any visits to this country as indicated above.

In addition, the Government to undertake to secure and to pay first class passages to and from India and first class travelling expenses in India by rail, road and water, also reasonable hotel and living expenses and a reasonable allowance for the outfit of each representative.

We understand from you that the Government of India will supply at their own expense any clerical and menial establishment which under Indian conditions may be required for the purposes of the inquiry.

4. We understand that Mr. Cathles and his assistants will be required in the first instance to meet the representatives of the Government of India at Delhi and will there be given such information and facilities as they require. While in India, Mr. Cathles will receive necessary instructions from, and will be entitled to communicate with, the Government of India on our behalf.

Copy of a letter No. F-14111, dated the 1st December 1920, from India Office, London, to Messrs. Waterhouse and Company.

In reply to your letter of the 21st October, I am directed to say, that the Secretary of State for India in Council is pleased to learn that you are prepared to undertake the inquiry desired by the Government of India. You will have been informed by the Comptroller and Accountant General of the Post Office that you will be given facilities for examining the system of Postal, Telegraph and Telephone accounting in use in England.

2. The second paragraph of your letter states correctly the departments, offices and undertakings of the Government of India, which, so far as is known at present, will come under examination. As you have observed, however, it is not in contemplation that you should be bound to scrutinise the accounting of the whole of those where your investigations enable to make suggestions in selected cases which will sufficiently cover others or where for any other reason it seems feasible to omit any of those mentioned. Conversely, it will be open to the Government of India to add to the list in cases where a full examination seems indicated.

3. As regards the terms of remuneration, your proposals, I am to say, are accepted. Any details can be adjusted with the Government of India. These emoluments may be drawn either in this country in sterling or in India in rupees at the current market rate of exchange.

4. The Government of India will, as you have understood, supply clerical and menial establishment and incidental facilities. The programme indicated in your fourth paragraph is agreed to.

5. The Passage Department of this Office has been already communicated with on the subject of passages.

LETTER IN 'LEADER' re LISTED POSTS AND PROVINCIAL CIVIL SERVICE.

108. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala: (a) Have the Government seen a letter printed in the Leader of Allahabad, dated 13th June 1921, at page 7, under the heading 'Listed Posts and P. C. S.?'

(b) Is there any truth in the statements made therein and more particularly with regard to the statement that some of the candidates nominated for the Indian Civil Service had been rejected for appointment as Deputy Collector and one of them had failed to pass the departmental examination for junior officers?

(c) Of all the candidates nominated to the Indian Civil Service how many possess the following qualifications, in each Province, and how many equally qualified were rejected :

- (1) M.A. or M.Sc. with honours or university scholarship in B.A. or B.Sc. before passing M.A. or M.Sc., also LL.B. or B.L. ;
- (2) M.A. or M.Sc. with previous or final LL.B. or B.L. ?

(d) How many successful candidates are not so qualified and on what grounds were better qualified candidates rejected in each case in favour of less qualified persons and by whom?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : (a) Yes.

(b) Government have no information as to the particular question asked in this part, and the general question is too vague to admit of a definite answer.

(c) The information is being collected and will be furnished when complete.

(d) Information as to numbers is being collected and will be furnished later. High University Honours are not the only factor to be taken into consideration in making appointments to a service like the Indian Civil Service. The applications for nomination were examined by Local Governments who Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: Has any Member of the Government visited the Indian clerks' quarters at Dhar?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: I am afraid I cannot answer that question. I have not visited the quarters myself. But I should be glad to provide any facilities which the Honourable Member wishes, if he desires to visit them.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: I would not attempt to go down there and come back!

ADVOCATE GENERAL FOR THE UNITED PROVINCES.

111. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala: Do the Government propose to appoint an Advocate General for the United Provinces and abolish the post of the Government Advocate in those Provinces?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: The reply is in the negative.

PERCENTAGE OF INDIANS IN THE TELEGRAPH DEPARTMENT.

112. Mr. M. Faiyaz Khan: Do Government propose to consider the advisability of increasing the percentage of Indians in the Telegraph Department with equal rights and privileges in all grades?

Colonel Sir S. D'A. Crookshank: There being no separate Telegraph Department it is presumed, that the question refers to the Telegraph Branch of the Department of Posts and Telegraphs. That the Government have carefully considered the advisability of increasing the percentage of Indians in the Telegraph Branch will be seen from the following figures.

The existing percentages of Indian and non-Indian telegraphists are 37 and 63 as compared with 28 and 72, respectively, on the 1st March 1917, and recently out of 404 Local Service telegraphists transferred to the General Service 340 were Indians. As the supervising grades in the Engineering, Technical and Traffic Branches are entirely recruited from the ranks of telegraphists, the increased percentage of Indian telegraphists means an increase in the number of Indians in the supervising grades.

All candidates who enter the Department are now given similar rights and privileges irrespective of the race or religion to which they belong.

AGRA TELEGRAPH OFFICE.

113. Mr. M. Faiyaz Khan: Will Government be pleased to restore the administration of the Agra Telegraph office from the present second Division to the first Division Superior Traffic branch as before such as in the time of Messrs. Sutherland, Gunter and Landon?

Colonel Sir S. D'A. Crookshank: The Agra Telegraph office was never classed as an appointment to be held by an officer of the first Division of the Superior Traffic branch and consequently the question of restoring it to the first Division does not arise. The first Division of the Superior Traffic branch was created in April 1914 when the amalgamation of the Post Office and the Telegraph Department was effected. The appointments in the first Division were 12 in number and allotted as below:

8 Deputy Postmasters-General, Traffic.

3 Superintendents for charge of the Telegraph offices at Calcutta, Bombay and Madras.

1 Assistant Director-General, Telegraph Traffic.

Total ... 12

Before the amalgamation of 1914, the Telegraph offices at Calcutta, Bombay, Madras and Agra were in charge of Superintendents of the old Telegraph Department. These four offices were the only ones of sufficient importance for charge by gazetted officers. With the amalgamation of 1914 and the formation of a Superior Traffic branch the charge of other offices, approximating at the time to Agra in importance, went to Gazetted officers in the second Division of the Superior Traffic branch and the status of the Agra office was accordingly determined. Since then, the Agra office has grown in importance. The question of placing it in charge of an officer in the first division of the Superior Traffic branch will be considered in due course.

PRIVILEGES TO TELEGRAPHISTS, ETC.

114. Mr. M. Faiyaz Khan: Do Government propose to extend the same privilege to sons and relatives of non-Christian Telegraphists and Telegraph Masters for direct recruitment to the General Scale as is extended to sons and relatives of Christian subordinates?

Colonel Sir S. D'A. Crookshank: There is no established custom under which direct recruitment to the General Service is made from the sons and relations of Christian subordinates. The practice is to secure the best available candidates for the vacancies to be filled. Occasionally the selection of a son or near relation of a subordinate who has rendered good service in the Department for a long period of years is made provided that the candidate is fully qualified for an appointment. Such a selection is made entirely on the merits of individual cases, irrespective of religion or nationality.

REFUSAL OF LEAVE TO INDIAN TELEGRAPHISTS, ETC.

115. Mr. M. Faiyaz Khan: Is it a fact that on occasions of important Indian festivals, the Indian Telegraphists, Telegraph Masters and clerks are generally refused leave? If so, will the Government be pleased to issue orders for liberal treatment on holidays like Holi, Ramzan, Bakrid, Devali, etc.?

Colonel Sir S. D'A. Crookshank: The requirements of the public are such that the telegraph service, like the railways, must be maintained continuously. There are only four recognised telegraph holidays, viz., the King's Birthday, Good Friday, Christmas Day and New Year's Day. On these four days, telegraph offices observe the same working hours as on a Sunday. These days were selected, because they are generally observed as closed holidays throughout India and in most countries with which India has telegraph connection. It is apprehended, that inconvenience to the public would result if this list of holidays were extended. Telegraph work is carried on at the end of wires connecting widely separated provinces and it is, therefore, difficult to recognise local holidays. A holiday which has much importance in Bengal may not be observed at all in Burma. In fixing telegraph holidays, it is necessary to select only a few days which are observed throughout the country and Government believe, that they have allowed as many telegraph holidays as are justifiable. In addition to these four recognised holidays, members of the staff can get occasional leave of absence and whenever it is possible to do so without causing inconvenience, heads of offices are empowered to grant casual leave up to a limit of 20 days a year. It is possible under this order for some members of the staff of an office to get leave during their important festivals.

SCHOOLS OF TELEGRAPH TRAINING CLASSES.

116. Mr. M. Faiyaz Khan: With reference to the Government of India, Department of Commerce, letter No. 2463, dated 26th May 1920, to the Director-General of Telegraphs, will the Government be pleased to lay on the table a statement of schools both European and Indian in which Telegraph Training Classes are opened?

Colonel Sir S. D'A. Crookshank: The statement required by the Honourable Member is laid on the table.

COMPLAINTS AGAINST RAILWAY OFFICIALS OF KALKA.

117. Haji Wajih-ud-din: Is it a fact that Mr. Blewitt, Assistant Station Master, Kalka, and Mr. Blewitt, Travelling Ticket Collector, Kalka, are elder and younger brothers, respectively, and that Mr. Webb, Traffic Inspector on the Kalka-Simla Railway, is their brother-in-law? Have Government received certain complaints against these three closely related officials, and if so, how many and what action has been taken?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: Mr. A. Blewitt, A. S. M., Kalka, E. I. R., and Mr. K. Blewitt, Travelling Ticket Examiner, K. S. Railway, are brothers. Mr. Webb, who is a Traffic Inspector on the K. S. Railway, is their brother-in-law.

No complaints have been received in which these three officials were conjointly implicated. A complaint was received by the Agent, N.-W. Railway, against Mr. K. Blewitt, Travelling Ticket Examiner, for rudeness to a lady passenger. The case was investigated by the Superintendent, K. S. Railway, and fully considered by the Agent, N.-W. Railway, and it was found that the complaint was the result of excessive zeal on Mr. Blewitt's part in the discharge of his duties and that he shewed some lack of tact but nothing worse. He was dealt with accordingly.

In another case, Mr. K. Blewitt was put into court by Rai Sahib Panna Lal of Ambala for refusing to allow him to enter a compartment reserved for Europeans. Mr. Blewitt was fined Rs. 500 ex-parte. On re-trial, the sentence was quashed.

These are the only two cases of complaint so far as the railway authorities are aware against either Mr. Blewitt. There is no record of any complaint having been made against Mr. Webb.

MESSRS. BEARD AND FITZPATRICK, EAST INDIAN RAILWAY.

118. Haji Wajih-ud-din: Is it a fact that Messrs. Beard and Fitzpatrick, employees of the East Indian Railway, were once dismissed, but have now been re-appointed by the same Railway on the same station, Kalka, and if so, what are the reasons of dismissal and appointment?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: Messrs. Beard and Fitzpatrick, who were formerly employed on the East Indian Railway were both discharged (not dismissed) on account of misbehaviour at Kalka towards an Indian passenger in December 1918.

Beard has not been re-employed on the East Indian Railway but as it was considered by the East Indian Railway that Fitzpatrick who was not the chief offender and who was only 17 years old at the time, had been sufficiently punished, he has been re-employed as a ticket collector at Kalka where he is under the supervision of his father.

BOOKING DIFFICULTIES AT RAILWAY STATIONS.

119. Haji Wajih-ud-din: Are the Government aware of the difficulties experienced by the public in getting their goods booked generally at every railway station and especially at large and busy stations in India? If so, do the Government propose to take the necessary steps to remove them?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: Government are not aware that difficulties are experienced by the public in getting their goods booked at stations generally or at large stations especially, except at times when the demand for wagons exceeds the supply or when congestion of traffic causes despatches to be restricted. The remedy for such cases is the provision of more rolling stock and additional facilities and this is receiving the attention of Government.

ADVISORY BOARDS OF MERCHANTS.

120. Haji Wajih-ud-din: Have the Government ever considered the feasibility of creating one Central and several Provincial Advisory Boards of Merchants and other experienced persons to help the Government in maintaining an effective control on different Railway Companies and to alleviate public grievances? If not, will the Government take it now into consideration?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: Local Consulting Committees consisting of leading merchants and other experienced representatives of the public already exist on certain railways. The function of these committees is to co-operate with and assist the railway authorities generally with a view to extending facilities and improving the conveniences offered to the public; the question of the extension of this system to other railways is receiving the attention of Government.

Government do not consider that the creation of a Central Committee would afford a suitable means of dealing with the matters mentioned.

PAYMENT OF INCOME-TAX AND APPLICATIONS FOR INSOLVENCY.

121. Haji Wajih-ud-din: Will the Government be pleased to state:
- (a) the number of persons throughout India who paid income-tax in 1919-20, but have filed applications for Insolvency in 1919-20?
 - (b) the number of persons who are newly assessed this year with income-tax?

The Honourable Mr. W. M. Hailey: I regret that the information is not available.

CIVIL POPULATION IN CANTONMENTS.

122. Haji Wajih-ud-din: (a) Are the Government aware of the hardships suffered by the civil population of Cantonments by the application of Section 216 of the Cantonment Code? If so, do they propose to modify the aforesaid section?

(b) Have the Government gone through the columns of the several issues of the fortnightly Cantonment Advocate between January and May last, which contain allegations of malicious and ultra vires action of the Cantonment Magistrates under Section 216 of the Cantonment Code, against several respectable persons?

Sir Godfrey Fell: (a) Government are aware that exception has been taken in certain quarters to the method in which Section 216 of the Cantonment Code is applied. The Government have just received the recommendations of the Committee appointed to consider what reforms are necessary in the Cantonment Law, and are considering what modification of Section 216, if any, should be made.

(b) The Government have read the articles referred to.

TREATMENT OF 3RD CLASS PASSENGERS.

123. Haji Wajih-ud-din: Are the Government aware of the unsatisfactory treatment which the 3rd class passengers meet with, generally on almost all the Railway lines, and is any proposal to improve the situation now under consideration or to be considered in the near future?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: 'Unsatisfactory treatment' is a very vague term and I would ask the Honourable Member kindly to specify the directions in which he considers improvement might be effected in regard to the treatment of 3rd class passengers. I should like to say that the comfort and convenience of this class of passengers are matters which receive the constant attention of Government and a great deal has been done in recent years to improve conditions of travel; the railway staff have special instructions to treat passengers with courtesy and give them all possible help. If however, the 'Unsatisfactory treatment' refers to overcrowding in carriages or the like, this can only be remedied by the provision of extra passenger stock for railways generally and will, as the Honourable Member doubtless realises, involve time and money.

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN A SUB-OVERSEER, AMBALA AND MILITARY AUTHORITIES.

124. Haji Wajih-ud-din: Has the attention of the Government of India been drawn towards the correspondence between one Kashmiri Lal Barsal, Sub-Overseer, Ambala Cantonment, and the Military authorities as published in Cantonment Advocate, dated the 25th May 1921, on pages 11, 12 and 13, and if so, do the Government intend to interfere in the matter?

Sir Godfrey Fell: The Government have seen the correspondence in question. The facts of the case are as follows:

The Ambala Cantonment Committee have made a rule—which they are competent to do—that private water connections are to be given only to those houses which pay a water-tax on a basis of at least a Rs. 40 rental. Lala Kashmiri Lal, the registered rental of whose house was Rs. 4, obtained a private water connection without the permission or knowledge of the competent Cantonment authority. On discovering these facts, the Cantonment Committee raised the registered rental of Lala Kashmiri Lal's house to Rs. 40 and demanded and recovered from him the water tax based on this amount. Lala Kashmiri Lal appealed to the Commissioner, who decided that the Cantonment Committee were not competent to impose the enhanced rental of Rs. 40 and cancelled their order. He directed that any amount paid in excess of that due on a basis of a Rs. 4 rental should be refunded to Lala Kashmiri Lal. Meanwhile, the Cantonment Committee cut off the connection which Lala Kashmiri Lal had obtained surreptitiously and without authority. In so doing, they were acting within their powers. The Government of India do not intend to interfere in the matter.

LETTERS PUBLISHED IN THE 'TRIBUNE' re DISTRESS AND EXPENSIVE LIVING.

125. Rai Bahadur Fakshi Sohan Lal: Has the attention of the Government been drawn to the letters published in the Tribune of 6th and 18th May 1921, said to have been written by an Indian I.M.S. (T.C.)? If so, will the Government be pleased to state what action has been taken to relieve the alleged distress due to low rate of pay and expensive living?

Sir Godfrey Fell: The Government have read the letters referred to.

With regard to the second part of the question, the attention of the Honourable Member is invited to the reply given to the Question No. 45 asked on 5th September by Professor S. C. Shahani.

PAY TO TEMPORARY OFFICERS OF THE INDIAN MEDICAL SERVICE.

126. Rai Bahadur Bakshi Sohan Lal: Is it a fact that an Army Instruction (India), No. 613, was issued in August 1920, in which a hope of increase of pay was extended to temporary officers of the Indian Medical Service? If so, will the Government be pleased to state what action so far has been taken? Is any announcement to be shortly made regarding this increase and will the increase be on the same lines as that given to the permanent members of the Indian Medical Service?

Sir Godfrey Fell: The answer to the first part of the question is in the affirmative.

With regard to the second part, revised rates of pay for the temporary officers of the Indian Medical Service have now been sanctioned, and a press communiqué on the subject has been issued.

DEMOBILIZATION OF THE TEMPORARY OFFICERS IN THE INDIAN MEDICAL SERVICE.

127. Rai Bahadur Bakshi Sohan Lal: Is it a fact that a large number of temporary officers of the Indian Medical Service have been demobilised during the last few months? Will an increase of pay if announced affect equally the demobilised officers for the time they served in the Military?

Sir Godfrey Fell: Since the 1st February 1921, approximately some 200 Temporary Commissioned Indian Medical Service officers have been demobilised, in all but a few cases at their own request. The increase of pay just sanctioned for Temporary Commissioned Indian Medical Service officers is conditional on their signing a new form of agreement. Consequently, officers of this class already demobilised will not be affected.

INCREASE OF PAY OF TEMPORARY INDIAN MEDICAL SERVICE OFFICERS.

128. Rai Bahadur Bakshi Sohan Lal: Do the Government propose to make a definite statement as to the increase of pay of temporary I. M. S. officers at an early date?

Sir Godfrey Fell: The attention of the Honourable Member is invited to the reply given to the latter part of his previous question, i.e., No. 126.

TRANSFER OF THE ADEN ADMINISTRATION.

129. Rai Bahadur Bakshi Sohan Lal: (a) How far is it correct that it is under contemplation of the Government to transfer the administration of Aden from the Bombay Government to the Colonial Office?

(b) If so, will Government be pleased to state how long ago Aden was added to the British Indian Empire and administered by the Bombay Government at the cost of the Indian exchequer and what amount has been actually spent by the Indian Government on its upkeep?

(c) Is it a fact:

(i) that Government assured the Indian public and Indian merchants desirous of investing money in Aden that Aden will ever remain an integral part of Indian Empire;

- (ii) that it was captured in 1839 by an army sent by the Bombay Government and has always been a part of the British Indian Empire;
- (iii) that it has been developed and maintained by Indian money, Indian enterprise and Indian trade;
- (iv) that it was the Indian troops that have been mostly employed and kept in Aden to preserve peace and order;
- (v) that Indian merchants have acquired landed and house property in Aden and have permanently settled down making Aden their homes?

(d) Will the transfer of Aden to the Colonial Office injuriously affect the rights to equal citizenship of the British Commonwealth of His Majesty's British Indian subjects?

(e) Will the Government be pleased to state:

- (i) what is the population of each community in Aden;
- (ii) whether European merchants there are or are not only temporary residents carrying on trade as shipping and coaling or commission agents?

(f) Will Government be pleased to state whether they have received any representation from the British Indian Colonial Merchants' Association, Bombay, protesting against the contemplated transfer of Aden administration to the Colonial Office? If so, what action, if any, has been or is intended to be taken in this matter?

The Honourable Dr. T. B. Sapru (on behalf of the Honourable Mr. Denys Bray): (a) I would refer the Honourable Member to the answer given by the Honourable Mr. Bray in the Council of State on the 26th March 1921 to a question on this subject asked by the Honourable Mr. Bhurgri. The transfer of the administration of the Aden Settlement to the Colonial Office is still under consideration.

(b) 1839. The actual expenditure incurred on the upkeep of Aden since that date is not readily available, but the Welby Commission in 1900 estimated the annual cost at Rs. 24,50,000 of which Rs. 10,80,000 was paid by His Majesty's Government.

(c) (i) No such assurance can be traced.

(ii) Yes.

(iii) Largely, but not wholly. Aden has been developed and maintained by British and Foreign money, enterprise and trade, as well as Indian.

(iv) No; the normal garrison of Aden in the past has been British ranks 1,410, Indian ranks 1,134.

(v) Yes.

(d) I would again refer to the answer given by the Honourable Mr. Bray in the Council of State on the 26th March and would repeat that the Government of India have throughout made it an absolute condition of their assent to the transfer that it shall in no way impair the interests and status of Indians, who shall receive precisely the same treatment as that accorded to the other subjects of His Majesty. This stipulation His Majesty's Government have accepted unreservedly. The Secretary of State for India repeated this assurance in the same words in the House of Commons on the 4th August.

(e) (i) The statistics at the recent census are these: Arabs 30,562, Jews 4,408, Somalis 7,551, Indian Muhammadans 5,594, Hindus 3,691, Jains 308, Parsees 323, Europeans 1,900, others 2,063.

(ii) Yes.

(f) Yes. His Majesty's Secretary of State for India who has been informed of this and other representations recently stated in the House of Commons that Government would endeavour to give weight to the opinions of all communities concerned.

Mr. R. A. Spence: May I ask a supplementary question? Is there information available for the general public as to the advantages of transferring Aden from India? Where can information on the subject be obtained?

The Honourable Dr. T. B. Sapru: I must ask for notice of that question.

Mr. N. M. Samarth: Is it a fact that Mr. Winston Churchill stated in the House of Commons that it is practically settled that Aden is to be transferred from the Indian Government to the Colonial Office?

The Honourable Dr. T. B. Sapru: I am not aware of that.

The Honourable Mr. W. M. Hailey: Mr. Winston Churchill stated that the Secretary of State for India had agreed that Aden should be handed over. As far as actual transfer is concerned, that statement is premature. Negotiations are still going on, and no definite conclusion has been arrived at.

Mr. N. M. Samarth: Has the Government of India contradicted it publicly?

The Honourable Mr. W. M. Hailey: I have now stated the facts.

OFFER OF 7½ MILLION STERLING OF 7 PER CENT. STOCK.

130. Mr. B. Venkatapatiraju: Will the Government be pleased to state:

- Whether the Chambers of Commerce were consulted in India in the matter of the offer of 7½ million sterling of 7 per cent. stock by the Indian Government in England?
- Whether it is a fact that the loan was oversubscribed so that a large number of applicants received only 11 per cent. of what they asked for?
- Whether the new loan already stands at a premium of 3 per cent. or more?
- Whether the Government spent 2 per cent. for underwriting the loan?
- Whether the Indian public were apprised of the issue of this loan before it was closed?

The Honourable Mr. W. M. Hailey: (a) No.

(b) Yes. Applicants for amounts up to £2,000 received allotment in full; applicants above £2,000 and up to £15,000 received £2,000; applicants for larger sums received about 11 per cent.

(c) Recent quotations have been slightly above 104. This price, however, includes the dividend of 3 pounds payable on the 5th October.

(e) Yes, though only about 24 hours before the loan was closed.

Mr. J. Chaudhuri: May I ask a Supplementary Question? Was this loan raised for buying railway materials in England?

The Honourable Mr. W. M. Hailey: This loan was raised, Sir, in circumstances which were explained when I made my budget speech on the 1st of March last. As the Honourable Member is aware, 5 millions were provided for under the arrangements then contemplated for supplementing our balances in England and India. The actual loan raised was 7½ millions. It was not raised specifically for the purpose which the Honourable Member suggests, but it was raised in aid of our balances generally, though, as a matter of fact, large sums of money had to be spent on railway material, and this loan went to provide part of the money.

Mr. J. Chaudhuri: Is it a fact that the materials which were purchased in England at the time could have been purchased cheaper if they had been ordered from America or bought in foreign markets?

The Honourable Mr. W. M. Hailey: I think, Sir, that the question that the Honourable Member has just raised does not arise out of the main question at all. There are other questions I fancy on the paper referring to that matter, and Government will give all the information at their command when replying to those questions.

Mr. R. A. Spence: May I ask the Honourable Member why, in view of the very advantageous terms of the loan, it was considered necessary to pay 2 per cent. for underwriting?

The Honourable Mr. W. M. Hailey: I am afraid I cannot answer that question in terms. It was thought at the time inadvisable to place this loan on the market without first engaging for underwriting. The arrangements were made, as the Honourable Member is aware, by the Secretary of State, and he and his advisers thought that step necessary.

RUPEE LOAN OF THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA.

131. Mr. B. Venkatapatiraju: Will the Government be pleased to state:

- The amount subscribed for the new rupee loan of the Government of India at 6 per cent. in India and in England, respectively?
- What is the total amount that is proposed to be raised by this rupee loan?
- Whether any portion of this loan would be given to the Local Governments for lending to local bodies?

(d) Whether it is a fact that 7½ per cent. interest is proposed to be charged for lending to the local bodies by the Government?

(e) Whether half a per cent. extra over six per cent. would not cover the cost of supervision and realization?

The Honourable Mr. W. M. Hailey : (a) On the 29th August 1921, the figures were 42.55 lakhs in India, and 127 lakhs in England.

(b) The amount of the loan was unlimited.

(c) The Central Government will be making loans to some provincial Governments during the current year to finance their capital requirements, where they are unable to do so from their own resources, and in estimating their requirements, they take into consideration the loans which they propose to make to Local Bodies. Such loans to Provincial Governments are made from the Government of India's general ways and means resources, of which the proceeds of this year's loan form a part; it would not, therefore, be accurate to say, that it is a portion of this year's loan that is being lent to Local Governments.

(e) Government have no data from which they can test the correctness of the Honourable Member's assumption. The rate at which a Provincial Government lends to Local Bodies is a matter for that Government's discretion. I may add, however, that the rate of 6 per cent. referred to is free of income-tax, and this concession is equivalent to an additional interest payment of ½ per cent.

RAILWAY AND STEAMER CHARGES.

132. Mr. B. Venkatapatiraju : Will the Government be pleased to state whether there has been any increase in the rate of Railway and Steamer charges in India since the Assembly last met and if so, what was the increase?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn : Maxima and Minima rates for goods and coaching traffic carried over railways are sanctioned by the Railway Board, within these limits railways have the power to vary rates. Individual Railway Administrations acting under their powers have in certain instances increased their rates within the existing maxima. Increased maxima rates for goods traffic have been approved by the Railway Board since the last meeting of the Assembly, but no sanction has yet been given approving a date for their introduction.

As regards steamer charges, Government exercise no control over rates charged by steamer companies and the information asked for is not available.

INTERNATIONAL CREDITS.

133. Mr. B. Venkatapatiraju : (a) Will the Government be pleased to place on the table the correspondence that passed between the Government of India and the Secretary of State regarding the International credits?

(b) Will the Government be pleased to state whether the 'Ter Mullen' scheme would facilitate the importation of prime necessities by the importers by offering collateral security for credit granted by foreign exporters, in the form of bonds issued to the Importer by his own Government?

(c) Is it a fact that American manufacturers are not extending any credit to Indian Importers whatever be the references of their banks and their solvent position in the country?

(d) Is American business with this country on a cash basis by prepayment before anything is shipped from the United States?

(e) Is it a fact that India's demand for American goods is on the rising curve and the business necessitates that 'irrevocable letters of credit' should accompany all orders?

(f) Is it necessary to carry on trade between India and the United States indirectly through intermediate channels like English Export and Import houses?

(g) Is the Government of India prepared to recommend the inclusion of India in the International credit scheme?

The Honourable Mr. W. M. Hailey : (a) A copy of the correspondence between the Secretary of State and the Government of India, as also the Government of India's circular letter to the Chambers of Commerce and their replies thereto, are laid on the table.

(b) The Ter Meullen scheme is designed to facilitate exports in the manner stated to countries where the ordinary machinery of credit has broken down.

(c) and (d). No. There is no such universal practice. Credit terms vary with the standing of the buyer. Government, however, understand that American exporters have recently been cautious in extending credit to Indian buyers in view of numerous instances in which Indian merchants have failed to meet their bills.

(e) India's demand for American goods, generally speaking, may be said to be on the rising curve in the same way as India's demand for goods of any other country is on the rising curve in view of the increase in consumption of an increasing population. Irrevocable letters of credit are not necessary in every case, though they are usually insisted on.

(f) That is a business consideration in regard to which Government cannot give an authoritative answer.

(g) Indian exporters will, it is hoped, be able to participate in the Ter Meullen scheme or similar International schemes, but, as at present advised, the Government of India doubt whether it is desirable that this Government should participate financially.

Telegram R., No. 2736, dated the 21st October 1920.

From—His Majesty's Secretary of State for India,

To—His Excellency the Viceroy (Finance Department).

Priority A.—Brussels Financial Conference. I shall shortly forward by despatch report submitted by Indian Delegates and connected papers. Resolutions unanimously adopted by Conference enumerated principles of general application under four heads, Public Finance, Currency and Exchange, International Trade and International Credits. Constructive portion of proposals which bears directly on present position of India's export trade is contained in numbers 8 and 9 of Resolutions on International Credits, substance of which is as follows:

Begins. No. 8.—International Organization should be formed and placed at the disposal of the States desiring to have assistance to credit for the purpose of paying for their essential imports. These States would then notify the assets which they are prepared to pledge as security for the sake of obtaining credit, and would come to an understanding with the International Organization as to conditions under which these assets would be administered. The bonds issued against the guarantee would be used as collateral for credits intended to cover the cost of commodities. Committee of Financiers and Business men should be nominated forthwith by the Council of the League of Nations for the purpose of defining the measures necessary to give practical effect to this proposal.

No. 9.—It has been represented to the Conference that more complete results might be achieved if the bonds used as collateral were to carry some International guarantee. The Conference sees no objection to the further consideration of this proposal. The Committee referred to in paragraph 8 above might usefully consider the conditions under which it could be applied. Ends.

2. Paragraph 8 summarised above refers to scheme put forward by Ter Mullen Dutch Banker generally accepted by Conference of December 18th; Indian delegates were doubtful whether this goes far enough and adoption thereon referred to in paragraph 9 was consequently put forward by Marshall Reid.

He was careful not to commit you. Full papers were forwarded to Cook by mail October 14th. I shall be glad if you will on receipt consider these proposals and telegraph your views as soon as possible.

3. From nature of proceedings and constitution of Conference delegates had no opportunity of direct commercial negotiations for disposal of particular commodities. In the course of proceedings, however, they made it generally known that India had considerable exportable surplus of raw commodities and will readily assist in world's reconstruction by supply of these provided satisfactory financial arrangements can be made; they also as explained above pressed for general scheme of trade credits.

Telegram No. 2936-F., dated Simla, the 12th November 1920.

From—His Excellency the Viceroy (Finance Department),

To—His Majesty's Secretary of State for India.

Your telegram 21st October. Brussels Financial Conference. We have received papers forwarded with Howard's demi-official letters to Cook of 13th and 19th October, but have not yet received formal despatch.

2. We have no observations to make on general recommendations of Conference. These set forth generally accepted principles which we think we can justly claim have guided us in Indian Financial administration. We cordially welcome endeavour to work out a scheme of International credits, importance of which to India, especially in present condition of her export trade, we need not emphasize. Before, however, committing ourselves to practical details of scheme, we think it essential to consult representative commercial and banking opinion in India. We shall do this simultaneously with publication of report on November 25th and shall complete our inquiry with least possible delay.

3. Meanwhile, as at present advised, we agree with Sir Marshall Reid's opinion that for scheme to be of practical value, so far as India is concerned, bonds must be fully negotiable. Our inquiries here will be in part directed towards ascertaining how far bonds contemplated in Sir Marshall Reid's supplementary scheme will be acceptable as collateral, and on this point we suggest that it might be useful for you to consult head offices of Exchange Banks.

4. We desire to express our appreciation of able way in which India was represented at Brussels by her delegates.

INDIA OFFICE, LONDON.

29th October 1920.

Financial,

No. 88.

TO HIS EXCELLENCY THE RIGHT HONOURABLE THE GOVERNOR GENERAL OF INDIA IN COUNCIL.

MY LORD,

In continuation of my telegram dated the 21st October 1920, I forward herewith, for the information of Your Excellency's Government, the report* submitted by the delegates for India on the International Financial Conference recently held at Brussels. I have no objection to the publication of the report if you consider this course desirable. In that case please inform me and I will simultaneously publish it here.

2. It may be expected that a further communication will, in due course, be received from the League of Nations regarding the resolutions unanimously accepted by the Conference. Meanwhile, I shall be glad of any observations which you may desire to offer with regard to them, but you will observe that many of them merely set out generally accepted principles in the light of which Indian Finance has been consistently administered.

3. Apart from the recommendations of general application, India is specially interested in those relating to international credits. The matter is one in which, as the delegates explain in paragraph 11 of their report, the countries affected may be expected to define their attitude at short notice. A definite conclusion cannot, of course, be arrived at until formal proposals are initiated under the authority of the League of Nations on the subject. It is, however, desirable to come to a provisional decision on the question whether, in the event a scheme on the lines of that put forward by Sir Marshall Reid for an international guarantee finding general acceptance, Government of India should, in the interests of the Indian export trade, participate therein. I shall be glad, therefore, to have an early expression of your views as already asked for in my telegram quoted above. Without desiring in any way to anticipate your conclusions, I am inclined to think that the amount of such guarantee for which the Government of India should accept responsibility should not in any case exceed, say, 500,000l.

4. I have conveyed to the representatives of India at the Conference an expression of thanks on my behalf and on behalf of your Government for the valuable services which they have rendered.

I have the honour to be,

My Lord,

Your Lordship's most obedient, humble Servant,

Telegram No. 346-F., dated the 29th January 1921.

From—His Excellency the Viceroy (Finance Department),

To—His Majesty's Secretary of State for India.

Please refer to correspondence ending with Howard's demi-official letter No. F-15 of 6th January to Cook. Scheme for international credits. Copy of correspondence with Chambers of Commerce is being forwarded by this week's mail. Certain Chambers have not yet replied, but from replies already received and from informal discussions with Exchange Banks and merchants we consider that we have received sufficient indication of commercial opinion to enable us to reply to query asked in your telegram of 21st October 1920.

We shall, if necessary, send a further telegram on receiving remaining replies.

2. Endeavour to work out scheme of international credits is cordially welcomed, though, generally speaking, business public hesitates to commit itself to practical details. Opinion is, however, unanimous and is shared by us that Marshall Reid's scheme is decided improvement upon that known as the Ter Mullen scheme. Bengal Chamber is particularly anxious that any scheme which may be agreed upon be put into operation with the minimum of delay. We are advised that the particular trade which could benefit more than any other by early inauguration of credit scheme would be the export trades in hides.

3. As regards details, we entirely agree with opinion expressed in letter from Bengal Chamber of Commerce and also in informal discussions referred to above, that from a practical point of view it is essential that scheme should be worked in such a way as to use the proposed bonds as collateral for the establishment of cash credits at the London offices of the Exchange Banks, and that it must, in fact, be operated entirely from London. From his letter of 22nd December 1920 we gather that this is also Incheape's opinion. Bengal Chamber refers in this connection to limitation of resources of banks in India and to impossibility of Government at this end attempting any allocation among exporters. We suggest, therefore, that details be settled in consultation with Exchange Banks in London, and we are content to leave these entirely in your hands.

Telegram No. 1255-F., dated Simla, the 20th April 1921.

From—His Excellency the Viceroy (Finance Department),

To—His Majesty's Secretary of State for India.

We shall be glad to know what the present position is as regards scheme for certain of international credits. Considerable interest is manifested in this matter in business circles in India, and we continually receive queries as to the stage which the discussion has now reached and what prospect there is of any practical outcome in the near future.

2. Matter was also discussed at recent meeting between Finance Member and Indian Merchants' Chamber and Bureau whose letter on the subject, dated 3rd March 1921, was forwarded to the India Office on March 24th. You will have noticed Chamber's suggestion that only practical solution is to be found on lines similar to that adopted in America, namely, creation of a Finance Corporation. In discussing this matter with Chamber at Bombay, Finance Member expressed doubt as to whether such a corporation could be created in India with sufficient capital resources which might have to be locked up for a considerable period. We are, however, exploring the matter further, as this suggestion has received support. Meanwhile, it will be of assistance for us to have some idea as to whether there is any probability of Indian exporters being able to benefit from any scheme of international credits that is likely to be set up in near future.

Telegram No. 2193, dated the 27th April 1921.

From—His Majesty's Secretary of State for India,

To—His Excellency the Viceroy (Finance Department).

Your telegram of the 20th instant, 1255-F. International credits. Matter has been under discussion with organiser for Ter Mullen scheme who is at present on Continent for the purpose of ascertaining what importing countries will take advantage of scheme and particularly of devising measures for relief of Austria's position. He has been informed of commodities which India is in position to supply. He has not yet informed us what countries, if any, will be prepared to come under scheme, but has inquired whether, in case scheme is adopted for any country, Government of India would be prepared to guarantee exports from India thereto in respect of which Ter Mullen bonds have been put up without this collateral security. Prima facie it seems most doubtful whether it would be legitimate in present state of Indian finances to accept any extended liability of this kind, or the whole of such liability, and it is further possible that certain class in India might represent transaction as undertaken for benefit of British export of firms. What are your views on this point? India's case is really not on all fours with that here where similar guarantee by British Government has been given with object of alleviating serious trade depression. As against alternative, however, it has been suggested that if Ter Mullen scheme is accepted by any importing country or countries, it might be feasible to constitute Corporation in India which would give guarantee on lines suggested by organiser against security afforded by the bonds. It would probably be necessary even under this arrangement for Government of India to participate partially in scheme and accept some material portion of risk. Though it is not possible to give any close estimate as to extent of demand for guarantee of this kind, it would not necessarily be very large, as total annual exports from India to pre-war Austria were less than seven million pounds, and no difficulty would arise in limiting outstanding guarantees to five million pounds or even lesser sums. It has indeed been suggested that guarantees up to two million pounds might go a substantial way towards meeting demands at outset.

Paragraph 2.—The above alternative is on very similar lines to idea adumbrated in your telegram of April 20th (and seems to me the most promising suggestion so far put forward). I shall be glad to learn (1) results of further inquiries you are making on the subject, (2) whether you contemplate that Government should participate in proposed Corporation, and (3) if so, the proportion and total amount of the liability which we could in your opinion legitimately accept.

Paragraph 3.—In the event of major portion of risk being guaranteed by Government or by Corporation (gr. undec.) suggested it is possible that Exchange Banks may be induced to co-operate by accepting limited proportion of risk involved in case of export bills financed by them. I shall not however approach them formally on the subject until I know your general attitude towards guarantee by Government or creation of guaranteeing Corporation. It will, therefore, be useful if you will let me know your views on these points in anticipation of your further report as to practicability of formation of special Corporation for purpose.

Telegram No. 1731-F., dated the 9th June 1921.

From—His Excellency the Viceroy (Finance Department),

To—His Majesty's Secretary of State for India.

Your telegram of 27th April, No. 2193. Export credits. Delay in replying has been due to our having explored matter in the informal consultation with European and Indian business interests at Calcutta and Bombay. Indian interests at both places are emphatically opposed to any form of Government guarantee. European interests would not object to Government guarantee which they recognise would strengthen the scheme, but they realise difficulties. Arguments which you suggest might be used that such guarantee would be for benefit of British export firms are in fact already being used. We think, therefore, that it is essential that Indian Government should not participate financially.

2. With regard to possibility of forming Finance Corporation in India, this is rejected as impracticable by European interests at both places and by Indian representatives in Calcutta. They realise that there is no solidarity of interests; the large exporting houses and the Exchange Banks are not in the position of principals, and they consider that finance can best be arranged through London. The leading houses will certainly prefer to make their own arrangements with approved buyers rather than pool their resources with others. The Indian Merchants' Chamber at Bombay are still desirous of exploring, purely as a business proposition, the formation of a Corporation to develop export and import trade with Germany and Austria, but it is clear no support for the scheme will be forthcoming from the Calcutta side, nor we believe from banking interests in Bombay, so that we doubt whether scheme on any substantial scale will mature. We do not think the Government of India should participate financially in any such scheme.

GOVERNMENT OF INDIA.

FINANCE DEPARTMENT.

FROM

E. M. COOK, Esq., C.I.E., I.C.S.,

Officiating Secretary to the Government of India,

TO

THE SECRETARIES OF ALL CHAMBERS OF COMMERCE.

Delhi, the 20th November 1920.

SIR,

I am directed to enclose, for the information of your Committee, 1/2 copies of the Report of the Delegates for India to the recent International Financial Conference held at Brussels.

2. It is understood that the resolutions accepted by the Conference will shortly be considered by the League of Nations, and meanwhile the Government of India will be glad to receive any observations which your Committee may desire to offer with regard to them. It will be observed, however, that most of the resolutions merely register the unanimous adherence of the Conference to certain canons of sound public finance, and set forth certain generally accepted principles, in the light of which India may justly claim that her public finance has been consistently administered.

3. Apart from the recommendations of general application, this country is specially interested in those relating to international credits, and I am particularly to invite the attention of your Committee to the scheme referred to in paragraph 8 of Appendix A, Enclosure IV, and set forth a Annex. A thereto. The Government of India are disposed cordially to welcome any endeavour to work out a scheme of international credits, the importance of which to India's export trade need not be emphasised. They think, however, that it is essential that, for any such scheme to be of practical value, so far as India is concerned, the bonds in question must be fully negotiable, and for this reason your Committee will probably agree with them that the amplifications suggested by Sir Marshall Reid, as printed in Appendix H, are an improvement.

4. The present depression in the export trade is no doubt partly due, in the case of some exports, to the existence of large unused stocks in foreign countries, but, in the case of other exports, it is probably due to the lack of credit facilities. It is as regards the latter class of exports that a scheme such as that put forward at the Brussels Conference may be of value. I am accordingly to invite the opinion of your Committee, firstly, as to how far any such scheme is likely to assist the various export interests represented in your Chamber, and secondly, whether your Committee have any criticisms or suggestions to make regarding the practical details of the scheme adumbrated by Sir Marshall Reid in Appendix H. In the event of a scheme on such lines proving practicable and finding general acceptance among the nations represented at the Conference, the Government of India will then consider the question of participating therein to the extent of accepting responsibility for some definite share of the international guarantee.

5. The Government of India have expressed to the Secretary of State their appreciation of the able way in which India was represented in Brussels by her delegates, Mr. H. F. Howard, Sir Marshall Reid and Sir Fazulbhoy Currimbhoy.

I have the honour to be,

SIR,

Your most obedient Servant,

E. M. COOK,

Officiating Secretary to the Government of India.

No. 2961.

Copy forwarded to the Commerce Department, the Controller of the Currency, the Deputy Controller of the Currency, Bombay, and the Managing Governors Designate, Imperial Bank of India.

By order, etc.,

A. V. V. AIYAR,

Assistant Secretary to the Government of India.

No. 5-C. F. I., dated Karachi, the 16th December 1920.

From—E. L. ROGERS, Esq., Secretary, Karachi Chamber of Commerce,

To—The Secretary to the Government of India, Finance Department, Delhi.

I have the honour to acknowledge receipt of letter No. 2960-F., dated the 20th November 1920, forwarding 12 copies of the Report of the Delegates for India to the recent International Financial Conference held at Brussels, and stating that it is understood that the resolutions accepted by the Conference will shortly be considered by the League of Nations, and meanwhile the Government of India will be glad to receive any observations which this Chamber may desire to offer with regard to them.

In reply, I am directed to inform you that my Committee are of opinion that the scheme submitted by Sir Marshall Reid, C.I.E. (Appendix 'H'), might be given a trial if it can be put into operation.

Dated Cawnpore, the 23rd December 1920.

From—J. G. RYAN, Esq., Secretary, Upper India Chamber of Commerce,

To—The Secretary to the Government of India, Finance Department, Delhi.

I am directed to refer to your No. 2960-F., dated the 20th November, forwarding the Report of the Delegates for India to the recent International Financial Conference held at Brussels.

2. The Committee of the Chamber appreciate the opportunity afforded to them of putting forward any observations which they may desire in regard to the resolutions accepted by the Conference.

3. The interests represented by this Chamber are mainly industrial and manufacturing and their market is an indigenous one; the members of the Chamber therefore are not interested to the same extent in the proposals of the Conference as are the members of those Chambers which serve the large ports of India and are vitally affected by questions of export and import. At the same time, the Committee of this Chamber feel that the scheme submitted by Sir Marshall Reid in Appendix "H" of the report, is somewhat involved, and it is a question whether the scheme mentioned in a recent pronouncement of the Prime Minister, and which is in essentials one of simple barter with the central European countries, is not better and likely to be more easily worked.

Dated Madras, the 23rd December 1920.

From—JAS. F. SIMPSON, Esq., Chairman, Chamber of Commerce, Madras,

To—The Secretary to the Government of India, Finance Department, Delhi.

Your No. 2960-F., dated the 20th ultimo, together with its enclosure (Report of the Delegates for India to the International Financial Conference at Brussels, 1920), has been considered by this Chamber.

2. The Chamber is glad to note that the Government of India are disposed cordially to welcome any endeavour to work out a scheme of international credits.

As mentioned in paragraph 3 of your letter under reference, the importance of some such system of credits to India's export trade need not be emphasized.

The Chamber is of opinion that some such scheme would be likely to assist in disposing to the Continent of some of the heavy stocks of hides now being held by the Government in London.

Hides and skins are the principal export of Madras, and it is unnecessary to refer to the deplorable condition in which the trade now finds itself, and in connection with which the Chamber is now in correspondence with another department of Government.

3. The Chamber agrees generally with the suggestions of Sir Marshall Reid.

Dated the 5th January 1921.

From—The Secretary, Burma Chamber of Commerce, Rangoon,

To—The Secretary to the Government of India, Finance Department, Delhi.

Your Circular letter No. 2960-F. of November 20th, 1920, dealing with the Brussels International Financial Conference, has had the attention of my Committee, who desire me to say that this Chamber is strongly in favour of Continental credits being arranged, but would prefer to leave the details of the scheme to financial experts.

No. 116-1921, dated Calcutta, the 12th January 1921.

From—The Secretary, Bengal Chamber of Commerce,

To—The Secretary to the Government of India, Finance Department, Delhi.

I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of your letter No. 2960-F., dated the 20th November 1920, to which you attached copies of the Report of the Delegates for India to the recent International Financial Conference held at Brussels.

2. You invite the special attention of the Committee of the Chamber to the scheme for the establishment of international credits which is referred to in paragraph 8 of enclosure 4 to Appendix A. This Appendix to the Indian Delegates' Report is itself the report of the Conference, and enclosure 4 enumerates the recommendations of the Committee on international credits, which were adopted by the Conference. You ask, firstly, for the opinion of the Chamber as to how far any such scheme is likely to assist the various export interests; and secondly, whether the Chamber has any criticisms or suggestions to offer regarding the practical details of the supplementary proposals put forward by Sir Marshall Reid and set forth in Appendix H.

3. In reply to these inquiries, I am to say that the Committee of the Chamber agree with the Government of India in cordially welcoming any endeavour to work out a scheme of international credits. For they are clearly of the opinion that if a scheme can be put into operation, it must have the effect of promoting, at any rate to some extent, the export trade of India. They agree also as to the necessity for making the bonds that may be created fully negotiable. And if this were provided for by any international guarantee, as contemplated by Sir Marshall Reid, the Committee would approve of the Government of India accepting responsibility for some definite share of the guarantee. But there would be, they apprehend, considerable difficulty in actually working the credits in this country. For they do not see how it would be possible for the Government of India to distribute among exporters the amount which would be at their disposal, without risking dissatisfaction which might even become political in character. It must also be remembered that the resources of the Banks in India are limited. And this limitation would not be overcome by the guarantee, because it would be necessary for the actual cash to be provided by the Banks with a long lock-up of funds; and the Banks here could not provide cash, under such conditions, except to a moderate extent.

4. In view of the foregoing considerations, the Committee feel that any credit scheme such as that contemplated must be centred in, and worked from, London. In fact this would appear to them to be the only practicable way of putting the system into successful operation. Credit is of course very fluid, and it would quickly find its way to this country from the centre which would be established in London. The Bank and accepting houses there would take up the bonds and issue letters of credit, which would enable business to proceed in the customary way. Probably also the Banks might regard the amount thus placed at their disposal as a nucleus of credit, and themselves take a share in the risk. It is, the Committee think, of the highest importance that any scheme which may be agreed upon should be put into operation with the minimum of delay. And they believe that if it is operated from London, as they suggest, it will be put into practice and worked much more quickly than it could possibly be from this country. They accordingly recommend, for the consideration of the Government, that the India Office should be asked to discuss the question with the leading London Banks interested in the Indian trade, both the Exchange Banks and others, and endeavour, in consultation with them, to formulate a practical method of working the system.

5. In reply to your second inquiry, I am to say that the Committee do not think that there is need for them to discuss in detail, at any rate for the moment, the proposals put forward by Sir Marshall Reid. The advice of the Banks in London should be obtained upon these proposals which, it may be noted, are not framed with exclusive reference to India.

From—The Southern India Skin and Hide Merchants' Association,
To—E. M. COOK, Esq., C.I.E., I.C.S., Secretary to the Government of India,
Finance Department.

Adverting to your Circular letter No. 2960-F., dated Delhi, the 20th November 1920, enclosing a copy of the Report of the Delegates for India presented at the International Financial Conference held at Brussels during last year, I have the honour to inform you that the details of the scheme of International Credits were fully discussed, and my Committee approves of the scheme and offers no criticisms or suggestions regarding the practical details of the scheme adumbrated by Sir Marshall Reid in Appendix H.

No. 225-200-1920, dated the 26th January 1921.

From—The Acting Secretary, Chamber of Commerce, Bombay,
To—The Officiating Secretary to the Government of India, Finance Department.

I am directed to acknowledge receipt of your letter No. 2960-F., dated the 20th November 1920, and its accompaniments with reference to the Report of the Delegates for India to the recent International Financial Conference held at Brussels,

2. In reply, I am to state that, after careful consideration of the above-mentioned Report and the covering letter from the Government of India in your Department, my Committee desire me to submit their views as under:—

- (a) My Committee consider that it is most important to the trade of India that everything possible should be done to restore the purchasing power of the Continental nations.
- (b) They consider further that a scheme of the nature put forward at the Conference, if practicable, will bring about the desired result.
- (c) My Committee, however, do not feel themselves competent to discuss the details of the scheme which must be subject, in their opinion, to continual discussion and re-arrangement in Europe. At the same time, they consider it desirable for Government to form a Committee, composed of the financial experts and leading exporters of this country, to consider, report on, and, if necessary, amplify the scheme adumbrated by Sir Marshall Reid in Appendix H.

No. T.-573, dated Bombay, the 3rd March 1921.

From—The Secretary, the Indian Merchants' Chamber and Bureau, Bombay,
To—The Secretary to the Government of India, Finance Department.

I am directed to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 20th November 1920 enclosing report of the Delegates for India to the International Financial Conference at Brussels.

You mention in paragraph 4 of your letter that the present depression in the export trade is—

- (a) partly due to existence of large unused stocks;
- (b) partly to lack of credit facilities;

and you invited the opinion of my Committee as to firstly, how far the scheme in Appendix H is likely to assist the export interests, and secondly, whether my Committee have any criticisms to make or suggestions to offer.

My Committee have given careful consideration to the above and are of opinion that the depression is due to the elimination of the enormous purchasing power that was represented by the war requirements of the various belligerent Governments, and that the substitution of this enormous purchasing power by other purchasing power of comparable magnitude would be needed to get rid of the commodities that have been set free by the cessation of war demands.

This seems impossible and therefore the depression must cure itself by compelling new supplies to be restricted to the prospective purchasing power.

Meanwhile, such purchasing power as may exist potentially has to be made effective by suitable measures. But the measures advocated in the scheme do not go to the fundamentals. It seems to be assumed that the money to pay for imports is there and it is only necessary to provide some sort of Bank Credit arrangement to get over the hesitation and distrust of the sellers in the exporting countries. This is not a correct diagnosis of the situation. The money to pay for imports is NOT there in the requisite amounts. By 'Money' here is to be understood 'Exchangeable Commodities'. If the importing countries had a sufficiency of exportable commodities to give in exchange, then the present banking machinery of the world would be able to cope with the situation and a way would be found to exchange the commodities requiring to be imported. But this is not the case. The situation to-day is that a country, say Roumania, is badly in need of say 200 millions worth of commodities from other countries and has presently only say 100 millions worth to offer in exchange. What is therefore wanted is to provide Roumania with the means of purchase for these additional 100 millions. Roumania has many potentially very valuable assets, i.e., its forests, oil fields, mines, etc., and if it could be arranged to create bonds against these, Roumania would have the present means of paying for the additional 100 millions. The scheme contemplates such bonds but only as collateral, not as the cash that is to pay for the exports.

In this my Committee feel the Scheme fails to appreciate the real difficulty—the want of the cash—and fails to provide for it and my Committee therefore feel that the proposed Scheme if useful at all will be of extremely limited usefulness.

What is really required is to provide countries like Roumania with this cash in the shape of long or short term loans, the money so provided being used solely for the purchase of necessary imports. Then alone will it be possible for banks to find the necessary cover for the bills offered against the additional 100 millions of commodities that Roumania needs.

Before anybody can contemplate the advance of this 100 millions he would require the assurance that the money that he lends will not be seized by other creditors against other debts previously incurred by Roumania of whatever kind.

To give an instance from ordinary commerce nobody will advance further funds to a man that is insolvent, however great his abilities otherwise may be until this insolvent either goes through the insolvency courts and then starts with a clean slate, or compounds with his creditors and frees himself from further pressure on their account.

Therefore what will have to be done in the hypothetical case of Roumania mentioned above is that its other creditors should compound with it in such a way that it may be possible for a new party to consider it reasonably safe to make further loans to Roumania. In other words the Allies that have made very large loans to Roumania should agree to either forego interest and agree to postponement of repayment of loan for a fixed period, say 20 years, or fund the interest and postpone the total liability, and should agree to give priority to such loans as may be hereafter made to Roumania for raw materials, machinery, etc.

This question bristles with difficulties and has evidently been shelved by the Brussels Conference owing no doubt to the great difficulty of getting Roumania's present creditors to forego or postpone any part of their claims. Hence we have this credit scheme which, as we point out above, will be quite inadequate to the needs of the situation. Having said this we shall now examine the scheme submitted by Sir Marshall Reid. This scheme contemplates—

- (1) the creation of bonds by Roumania on approved assets;
- (2) the handing over of these bonds to the central commission;
- (3) the issue by the Central Commission of its own bonds on the security of (2);
- (4) the creation of a guarantee fund to which exporters or importers could subscribe and could thereby be entitled to, say, 10 times the amount of their shares in the shape of C. C. bonds named in (3).

With the above modifications the rest of the scheme in Annexure A appears to be adopted by Sir Marshall Reid. The remaining steps are—

- (5) the pledging of the C. C. Bonds by the importer in Roumania to the exporter say in India who will hand them as collateral to his banker when selling his bill on Roumania;
- (6) the return of the C. C. Bonds by the exporters on completion of the transaction in Roumania by the payment of the export bill on due date;
- (7) failing such payment the selling of the Bonds held as collateral. (It is not clear what is to constitute failure to pay. The Roumanian importer may have money ready in his own currency, but might be unable to get the necessary exchange. Further, it is not very clear from Appendix II whether selling of the C. C. Bonds is contemplated by Sir Marshall Reid or only presentation to the Central Commission of the claim for the unpaid export bill.)

These are the most important steps in the scheme, the others being matters of detail. Now my Committee are unable to see how the creation of such bonds will provide banks with the necessary cover before they can buy the Indian export bill. If Roumania has not the additional 100 millions worth of commodities to offer in exchange, the cover will not be there and the banks will not buy the export bill without such cover.

Then again in case of failure on the part of the Roumanian importer the collateral is to be sold. My Committee very much doubt if such sales would be practicable, in any quantity or at any reasonable price.

If such bonds cannot be realised to meet the draft the banks will have recourse to the exporter. How is he to find money?

My Committee consider the scheme unworkable on the above grounds. They therefore do not wish to dilate upon the other impracticable aspects of the scheme such as requiring each individual importer to furnish proof that he had previously obtained the express permission of the International Commission to enter into a particular transaction.

My Committee believe that if any real practical step is intended to be taken by this country, it should be something similar to what America is trying to do, namely, the creation of a Finance Corporation with sufficient capital resources and borrowing powers to be able to raise the necessary funds from which the exports of Indian raw materials to Roumania could be financed and a sufficiently long credit be given to Roumania to repay it.

For this purpose my Committee would suggest calling together a committee of bankers in this country and asking them to see whether a solution of some kind similar to that being attempted in America is possible here or not.

If such a bankers' committee is called together, they might be asked to consider some suitable scheme of credit insurance as this kind of insurance is also a necessity of the present situation. If this suggestion is taken up my Committee will be pleased to submit their further views on the matter.

RECOMMENDATIONS OF THE CURRENCY COMMITTEE IN SOUTH AFRICA.

134. Mr. B. Venkatapatiraju : (a) Are the Government aware that the Currency Committee in South Africa recommended that the white-man's wealth or savings which he holds in the form of rupees is to be redeemed at its present value and the blackman's savings which he holds in the forms of small subsidiary coins are to be written down to half their present value and that the Home Authorities approved of this?

(b) Are Indians settled there to be regarded as Blackmen or Whitemen in the application of the aforesaid rule?

(c) Have the Government of India made any protest and, if so, with what result?

(d) Is it a fact that the imposition of income-tax was insisted on by the Home Government when the hut tax was proposed to be increased in South Africa?

(e) Was there any proposal to write-off income-tax dues there, was any similar concession shown to the hut tax-payers, will any Indian settlers be affected thereby, and what steps do the Government propose to take in the matter?

Mr. J. Hullah : (a) and (e) The Honourable Member is presumably referring to East Africa and not South Africa as stated in the question. His attention is invited to questions and answers in Parliament on the subject of the recent revisions of the East African currency at pages 597-600, 1249-1251 and 1856-1859 of Hansard, Volume 142, Nos. 65, 68 and 72, respectively, copies of which I shall be glad to shew the Honourable Member. Briefly stated, the changes are that the existing exchange value of the rupee and the 50-cent pieces is retained at 2s. and 1s. respectively, the new shilling becomes the standard coin and legal tender for any amount, the rupee and 50-cent pieces are to be called in and replaced by the new shilling when sufficient supplies of the new currency are available, but the old 1-cent, 5-cent and 10-cent coins will not be replaced by the new coinage and will be used at half their present face value. This discrimination in the case of subsidiary coins is not influenced by considerations of nationality or colour.

(c) The Government of India were not consulted about these changes. A deputation from East Africa, which waited on His Excellency the Viceroy on July 23rd, 1920, brought to notice their grievances in connection with the alteration in the currency, but as stated in the Press Communiqué, dated July 27th, 1920, His Excellency did not consider that the Government of India would be justified in interfering in a domestic problem of this kind. There is no reason to suppose that the alteration in the value of the smallest local coins will affect the exchange rate.

What is really required is to provide countries like Roumania with this cash in the shape of long or short term loans, the money so provided being used solely for the purchase of necessary imports. Then alone will it be possible for banks to find the necessary cover for the bills offered against the additional 100 millions of commodities that Roumania needs.

(d) and (e). It is stated in the 'East African Chronicle' dated June 25, 1921, that two years ago, the Government of East Africa proposed to raise the hut-tax on natives, but the Colonial Office refused to sanction this unless an income-tax was imposed on Europeans. The income-tax was introduced and the hut-tax raised. But when the income-tax fell due in March this year, the Legislative Council, with the help of the Governor's casting vote, sanctioned its remission. Indians do not pay the hut-tax and they are therefore not affected by its enhancement.

VIZAGAPATAM HARBOUR.

135. Mr. B. Venkatapatiraju: Will the Government be pleased to state—

- (a) Whether any extra amount is sanctioned this year out of the Railway loan for the Vizagapatam Harbour?
- (b) Whether it is possible to lay the foundation stone for Vizagapatam Harbour in January, 1922, in view of the approaching visit of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales to India?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: (a) It has not been found possible to spare any funds this year for starting the Vizagapatam Harbour, as all funds available have been devoted to the needs of existing lines. Means for financing this work outside the ordinary programme are, however, under consideration.

(b) In view of the position described in reply to the first part of the question, it is premature to consider the question of laying the foundation stone at present.

Mr. J. Chaudhuri: I wish to ask a supplementary question. Is it a fact that the Bengal Nagpur Railway at one time offered to construct this out of their own funds?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: I am not aware of the offer of the Bengal Nagpur Railway.

NON-CO-OPERATORS AND THE GOVERNMENT.

136. Mr. B. Venkatapatiraju: Will the Government be pleased to state—

- (a) Whether any and what steps have been taken by the Government to bring about reconciliation between the non-co-operators and the Government?
- (b) Whether there is any prospect of introducing dyarchy in the Central Government and of making a further transference of subjects in the provinces for popular control as boons to be announced by the Prince of Wales?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: (a) The policy adopted by Government towards the Non-co-operation movement has been detailed in the Resolution which issued on the 6th November 1920. The attention of the Honourable Member is also invited to my* speech in the Assembly on the 5th March last on Mr. Muhammad Yamin Khan's Resolution.

(b) The Government of India have no information to lead them to think that this is the case. The object of the visit of His Royal Highness has been fully explained in the speech of His Excellency the Viceroy on the 3rd September.

Mr. B. Venkatapatiraju: May I ask a supplementary question? Has any attempt been made to bring about a reconciliation between the Government and the Non-co-operation leaders, like Mr. Gandhi and Mahomed Ali?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: By whom?

Mr. B. Venkatapatiraju: By both parties.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: No such attempt has been made by the Government of India.

RACIAL DISTINCTIONS IN INDIA.

137. Mr. B. Venkatapatiraju: With reference to the statement of His Excellency the Viceroy regarding the removal of all racial inequality in India, do the Government propose to take steps for the removal of racial distinctions—

- (a) In the matter of special provisions in the Criminal Procedure Code, the Penal Servitude Act, 1855, the European Vagrancy Act, 1874, and scale of allowances to witnesses in British Courts differentiating natives from Europeans and Anglo-Indians?
- (b) In the matter of accommodation in Railway trains, waiting rooms and refreshment rooms at Railway Stations?
- (c) In the matter of appointment, salary, travelling allowances, quarters in the Railway Department, Telegraph Department and various other departments, of the Government?
- (d) In the matter of providing churches but not contributions to temples and mosques?
- (e) In the matter of military training and appointment to the commissioned ranks?
- (f) In the matter of treatment accorded to the Colonials in India when those Colonies refused equal treatment to Indians without resorting to the laws of reciprocity or retaliation?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: (a) The question of amending the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code which involve racial distinctions is under the consideration of the Government of India, but no amendment of the European Vagrancy Act, 1874 is contemplated at present. The question of amending the Penal Servitude Act of 1855 is also being considered in connection with the proposal to abolish judicial sentences of transportation. As regards the last part of the Question, the Government of India are primarily concerned only with the rules framed by the Calcutta High Court regarding the expenses of witnesses attending Civil Courts. Those rules make no distinction between Europeans and Indians. For information regarding the similar rules applicable to Criminal Courts in Bengal and to Civil and Criminal Courts in other provinces the Honourable Member might, it is suggested, approach the Local Governments concerned.

(b) With reference to (b), the Honourable Member is referred to the answer given to Question No. 94 by Colonel Waghorn.

(c) Information on this matter is being collected and will be laid on the table during this Session.

(d) Certain expenditure is annually incurred by Government on the provision of non-Christian religious instructions for Indian regiments, and grants of land and alienations of revenue are made from time to time for the support of temples, mosques, etc. Government do not propose to take any action in this respect.

(e) With regard to military training, as the Assembly is aware, the Government of India are affording equal facilities for military training to Indians and Europeans alike through the medium of the Territorial Force and the Auxiliary Force.

As regards appointment to the commissioned ranks, King's Commissions in the Indian Army are now open to Indian gentlemen possessing the requisite qualifications. The Government of India are in correspondence with the Secretary of State for India on the subject of making Indians eligible for the King's Commission in other arms and departments and in the R. A. F. in India.

(f) The policy of the Government of India towards colonials residing in India was fully explained in the speech of the Honourable Sir George Barnes delivered on the occasion of the introduction of the Indian Emigration Bill in the Legislative Assembly on the 21st March 1921.

LABOUR IN THE GARDENS OF ASSAM AND BENGAL.

138. Mr. K. C. Neogy: (a) What concessions in the coaching rates, and other special facilities, if any, are allowed by the different railway and inland steam vessels companies, for the transport of labour to the gardens in Assam and Bengal respectively?

(b) Are the Government in a position to estimate the approximate saving in money to the tea trade, in Bengal and Assam respectively, on account of these concessions and facilities, during the last five years?

(c) Are such concessions and facilities granted to the labourers while coming back from the gardens; if so, to what extent and on what conditions?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: A statement giving the information so far as Railways are concerned, and it is available, is laid on the table.

The rates charged by inland steam vessels companies are not controlled by Government and the Government of India have no information as to the concessions allowed by them to garden coolies.

Statement showing concessions in coaching rates and other facilities allowed on different Railways for the transport of labour to the Tea gardens in Assam and Bengal.

Name of Railway.	Concessions and special facilities granted.	Approximate saving in money to the Tea Trade during the last 5 years.	Whether the concessions and facilities are granted to labourers returning from the Tea gardens.	Remarks.
Bengal Doocars	On production of an order signed by the Manager of a Tea garden reduced fares are granted to Tea garden coolies proceeding to a garden. The concession represents a saving of about 1½ annas per head. These reduced fares are also granted to Tea garden sardars sent by gardens to their homes for recruiting purposes both on the outward and inward journeys.	Rs. 13,849 ...	Yes.
Bengal and North-Western.	Have no concession or special facilities specifically for the transport of labour to the Tea gardens in Assam and Bengal. IMMIGRATION TO FIJI ISLAND.

139. Mr. M. K. Reddi Garu: (a) Will the Government be pleased to state the principles which guided them in the selection of the committee appointed to investigate the question of immigration to Fiji Island?

(b) Is it a fact that the Right Honourable Mr. V. S. Srinivasa Sastri and Mr. Hirday Nath Kunzru are members of the said Committee?

(c) Are the Government aware that both the members are members of the Servants of India Society, the former being the President thereof and the latter his subordinate?

(d) Are the Government aware that almost all the immigrants are from the Presidency of Madras and United Provinces, and that so far as the Presidency of Madras is concerned, they are all non-Brahmins?

(e) Are the Government aware that grave dissatisfaction exists among the non-Brahmins of the Presidency at the selection of a Brahmin, the Right Honourable Mr. V. S. Srinivasa Sastri, to go into the question affecting the non-Brahmins of this Presidency?

(f) Has the attention of the Government been drawn to the editorial notes in Justice, dated 6th July, 1921, on this question?

(g) Do the Government propose to consider the advisability of appointing a non-Brahmin of the Southern Presidency in place of, or in addition to, the Right Honourable Mr. V. S. Srinivasa Sastri on the Committee?

Mr. J. Hullah: (a) The principles which guided the Government of India in the selection of the Indian members of the Committee were that they should be persons who would command public confidence, and who were both residents of the province or provinces from which the bulk of Indian immigrants in Fiji have been recruited, and connected with social work among the poorer classes in this country. The official member was chosen for his special knowledge and experience of all questions connected with Indian emigration. It may be added that the personnel of the Committee was selected after consultation with various members of the Indian Legislature.

(b) Yes, but Mr. Kunzru has now said he cannot go.

(c) Yes.

(d) The Government of India are aware that the majority of the Indian labourers in Fiji are drawn from the Presidency of Madras and from the United Provinces, and have no doubt that the majority of those derived from Madras are non-Brahmins.

(f) Yes.

(g) The Government of India regret that they are unable to make any changes in the constitution of the Committee.

MEDICAL STORES PURCHASED IN INDIA.

140. Mr. M. K. Reddi Garu: (a) Will the Government be pleased to lay on the table a statement showing the quantities and value of medical stores purchased in India and elsewhere since the year 1914 up to 31st March, 1921?

(b) Will the Government be pleased to state in detail the stock of medical stores that was available on the 31st March, 1921, in each of the medical stores of the Government of India?

(c) Will the Government be pleased to state—

(i) if it is a fact that all the available stores at present in these centres were asked to be sent to Calcutta or elsewhere in order to be sold by auction through an agency of a European firm;

(ii) if so, what was the necessity for this action on the part of the Government;

(iii) if it is also a fact that fresh indents have been sent for the purchase of similar articles;

(iv) if it is a fact that even large stocks of cotton in these stores are to be sold by auction and fresh stock purchased again?

(d) Will the Government please explain the reasons for this procedure mentioned in (c), and also state if it is not a loss to the finances of India at present?

Sir Godfrey Fell: (a) The compilation of the information required by the Honourable Member would involve considerable labour and would necessitate the engagement of additional staff. The Government consider that the utility of the statements would not be commensurate with the labour and expense entailed in their preparation.

Figures showing the total annual expenditure on medical stores purchased in India and elsewhere for the years 1914 to 1919 are, however, available, and are given in the statement I am laying on the table. The Government trust that this information will be sufficient for the Honourable Member's purpose.

(b) It is not possible to furnish the information required by the Honourable Member for the same reason as that given in reply to part (a). The stock lists consist of 14 volumes varying in size; one volume alone, and that not the largest, runs to 500 pages of foolscap.

(c) (i) and (ii). The stocks at Medical Store Depôts are intended to supply both civil and military requirements. During the war, large stocks were held to meet war requirements. A certain proportion of these stores, chargeable to His Majesty's Government, was, after the war, declared surplus to ordinary requirements and handed over for disposal to the Disposals Commissioner. These surplus stores were sent to the Controllers of Sales at Calcutta, Bombay and Lahore. As the stores are the property of His Majesty's Government, the method of disposal adopted is a matter for the Disposals Commissioner.

(iii) The ordinary stocks held at Medical Store Depôts are replenished from time to time by local purchase or on Home indents. When the Depôts require any articles which are known to be held by the Disposals Commissioner, they are obtained from him. This arrangement is obviously to the benefit of both the Indian and the Home Governments.

(iv) No.

(d) The answer to this part of the question will be found in the reply I have just given to part (c), (i) and (ii).

The operation involves no loss to the finances of India.

Statement showing the total expenditure incurred on medical stores purchased in India and elsewhere for the years 1914-15 to 1918-19.

1914-15	9,63,819	94,500

1916-17	42,86,932	401,051

ROYAL COMMISSION ON PUBLIC SERVICES.

141. Mr. M. K. Reddi Garu: Will the Government of India be pleased to state—

(i) the total amount of cost incurred on account of the Royal Commission on Public Services;

(ii) and what share of it has been debited to the Government of Madras?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: (i) The expenditure as shown in the India books was Rs. 5,91,874.

INCREASE OF PASSENGER FARES BY THE SOUTH INDIAN RAILWAY COMPANY.

142. Rao Bahadur C. S. Subrahmanayam: (a) Is the Government aware that the South Indian Railway Company has raised the passenger fares of all classes on the mail and ordinary trains?

(b) Was the enhancement made with the sanction of Government, and will the Government be pleased to state the reasons for the said enhancement if Government sanction has been accorded?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: (a) The reply is in the affirmative.

(b) The enhanced fares being within the authorised maxima, Government's sanction to their introduction was not necessary.

INTER-CLASS CARRIAGES ON THE SOUTH INDIAN RAILWAY.

143. Rao Bahadur C. S. Subrahmanayam: Is the Government aware that on the narrow gauge section of the South Indian Railway no Intermediate class carriages are provided, and do Government propose to direct the Railway Company to introduce Intermediate class carriages on the section?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: The Honourable Member is referred to the answers given to questions* Nos. 465 and 606 in this Assembly on the 14th and 28th March 1921 on this subject.

The matter has not been lost sight of and the Agent, South Indian Railway, has already been asked that provision for Inter-class compartments be made in the new stock which is arriving and will shortly be erected, in order that this class of accommodation may be provided, in the first instance, on mail and through connecting passenger trains on the line.

OVERCROWDING THIRD CLASS CARRIAGES IN THE SOUTH INDIAN RAILWAY.

144. Rao Bahadur C. S. Subrahmanayam: Has it come to the notice of Government that the third class carriages on the South Indian Railway trains are overcrowded even in normal seasons of traffic?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: Overcrowding on the South Indian Railway is not general but confined to certain trains. It may be stated that this is due to reduction in train services which had to be curtailed on account of shortage of engine power. Additional engines have been received and are being utilised as available.

The South Indian Railway Administration are using their existing stock and facilities to the fullest possible extent. Government is most anxious to remove difficulties of travel and everything possible is being done to increase the supply of rolling-stock and to provide additional facilities, but the Honourable Member will realise that this is necessarily a question of time and money.

LIMIT OF PASSENGERS IN RAILWAY COMPARTMENTS.

145. Rao Bahadur C. S. Subrahmanayam: (a) Is it not obligatory on the Railway Companies to prohibit the entry or occupation of more passengers than are notified on the doors of carriages to seats in compartments or carriages?

(b) If it is not obligatory, do Government propose to direct the Railway Companies to strictly observe such a rule?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: (a) The Indian Railways Act does not impose on railways the duty of prohibiting the entry or occupation of carriages or compartments by more passengers than they are marked to carry.

(b) Section 109 of the Indian Railways Act authorizes a railway servant to require excess passengers in a carriage or compartment to vacate it. Railways have in their own interests issued rules for the guidance of their staff in accordance with this section, and they endeavour to ensure, as far as possible, that these rules are strictly observed.

TREATMENT OF THIRD CLASS RAILWAY PASSENGERS.

146. Rao Bahadur C. S. Subrahmanayam: Has it come to the notice of Government that there is widespread discontent among the people in regard to the harsh and unsympathetic treatment meted out to passengers on railways especially those travelling third class, and do Government propose to take some effective measures to abate this cause of discontent?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: I would refer the Honourable Member to the reply to Question No. 123 asked by Haji Wajih-ud-din in this Assembly, but as I have not yet answered that question, I shall, with the permission of the Chair, answer it now.....

The Honourable the President: Order, order. That answer must necessarily have been laid on the table already.

CONSTRUCTION OF THE MAYAVARAM-TRANQUEBAR LINE.

147. Rao Bahadur C. S. Subrahmanayam: (a) Will the Government be pleased to state whether the Mayavaram-Tranquebar line to be constructed at the cost of the District Board of Tanjore was approved and sanctioned by the Railway Board and Government and when was such sanction accorded?

(b) Did the South Indian Railway Company agree to construct and work the line and were surveys made and route plans prepared?

(c) Did the Government of Madras appoint an officer to acquire the land required under the Land Acquisition Act who started work and carried it on for some weeks in May and June of this year?

(d) Has the officer been recalled and was the work of acquisition stopped early in July?

(e) If so, will the Government be pleased to state why it has been stopped?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: (a) Yes; on the 15th December 1915.

(b) The reply is in the affirmative.

(c) Yes; the work was carried on from the 11th May to the 10th July 1921.

(d) Yes; the work was stopped on the 10th July.

(e) The work was started on the 11th May in anticipation of an allotment of funds, but, owing to the financial stringency, no funds could be allotted for the acquisition of land for the railway during the current financial year, and the work had consequently to be stopped on the 10th July.

Rai Bahadur Bakshi Sohan Lal: Sir, I simply rise for a ruling on the interpretation of Rule 21 (2)

The Honourable the President: I will take the Honourable Member's point of order in one moment.

MESSAGE FROM THE COUNCIL OF STATE.

The Honourable the President: A message has been received from the Council of State and the Secretary will read it.

Secretary of the Assembly: The Message, which I have received from the Council of State through the Secretary of that Council, runs as follows:

With reference to the Message of the Legislative Assembly on the 5th September inviting the co-operation of the Council of State in constituting a committee of the Indian Legislature for the purpose of drafting an Address of Welcome to His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, I am directed to inform you that on the motion of the Honourable Sir Maneckjee Byramjee Dadabhoy, the following Members of the Council of State have been nominated for the purpose:

The Honourable Sir Dinshaw Wacha,
The Honourable Mr. Arthur Henry Froom.
The Honourable Mr. Ghulam Mohamed Khan Bhurgri,

The Honourable Mr. Egbert Laurie Lucas Hammond,
The Honourable Sir Zulfikar Ali Khan,
The Honourable Mr. James Alexander Richey,
The Honourable Mr. Vaman Govind Kale,
The Honourable Mr. Ernest Sampson Llyod,
The Honourable Sardar Jogendra Singh,
The Honourable Mr. Ganesh Srikrishna Khaparde,
The Honourable Saiyid Raza Ali,
The Honourable Mahamahopadhyaya Dr. Ganganath Jha.

POINT OF PROCEDURE.

Rai Bahadur Bakshi Sohan Lal: I simply rise for a ruling on the interpretation of Rule 21 (2) of the Assembly rules.....

The Honourable the President: Will the Honourable Member kindly say which?

Rai Bahadur Bakshi Sohan Lal: Of the Manual of Business and Procedure, page 9. I assume that to-day is a day for official work in which non-official business has also been allowed to be taken, but my question is, whether in taking non-official business on an official day, the Honourable the President can allow any business to be taken without determining its precedence by ballot in accordance with the procedure set out in Schedule 1 or by any other procedure to be adopted by the President for the ballot under the proviso. From Rule 21, it appears that to determine the relative precedence of non-official business, a ballot is absolutely necessary whether such business is taken on an official or non-official day and that no non-official business can be taken without determining its relative precedence by ballot. It appears that for every non-official business a ballot is necessary. Unless there be a clear rule on the point or a ruling of the Chair on the matter, I respectfully submit, that the question requires to be cleared up before proceeding with the non-official business on to-day's list. On an official day when non-official business is allowed to be taken up, there ought to be a ballot for determining its precedence, and I do not think, we ought to take up without ballot any non-official business which may suit the convenience of any Honourable Members or of the Honourable the President in preference to other non-official business.

The Honourable the President: The Honourable Member has no doubt found what is technically a flaw in the rule; but to-day, as he is aware, is a day devoted to official business. Government has waived its right to put down official business for transaction at this sitting and has met what was a widespread demand on the part of the Assembly for an additional day for the transaction of non-official business. The ruling, which I propose to give provisionally in reply to the Honourable Member, is that for days set apart by His Excellency the Governor General for the transaction of non-official business, the ballot provided by the Standing Orders is necessary to establish the precedence of that business, whether the business be Resolutions or Bills, but that a ballot is not necessary in cases where Government, having taken a sitting as an official day, waives its right to put down official business and substitutes the business of non-official Members. In that event, the Government may exercise its own discretion in taking what non-official business it chooses.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: May I be permitted to point out, Sir, a matter on which I have already addressed you, that important Bills are laid on the table just before the meeting assembles and we are not able to read them, so that, although the stage of introduction may be a formal stage, still it is likely that Bills may be thrown out without a perfect understanding of them. I would suggest, Sir, that longer notice be given of Bills.

The Honourable the President: The request made by the Honourable Member seems to me to be eminently reasonable and, in the interests of the satisfactory transaction of business in the Assembly. One Member of Government has already had experience of the misfortune that may befall his business by, what I can imagine to be, a perfectly innocent failure to give sufficient notice. I think perhaps Government will take warning by that incident. As far as the Chair is concerned, the point taken by the Honourable Member from Madras is well taken.

BILL re AMENDMENT OF HINDU LAW RELATING TO EXCLUSION FROM INHERITANCE.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: Sir, in rising to speak on the motion* which stands in my name, I must thank the Government for giving me this early opportunity for introducing this Bill in which I am very much interested. Sir, I hope to have the indulgence of the House for a few minutes when I make a general statement regarding the principles which have guided me in introducing the Bill which is on the agenda to-day and for claiming to introduce the other Bills later on in the course of this Session; because I am anxious that the widest possible publicity should be given to the reasons given by me and others in this Chamber, so that the public may be in a position to judge whether the move that I am making is warranted or not. Sir, very few people in this country would deny that it is necessary to revise portions of Hindu Law. Some portions of it have become obsolete and it is absolutely necessary that some attempt should be made to revise them. There has been an arrest in the development of Hindu Law, as I mentioned on the last occasion when the question of codification was being discussed, and it is necessary that some attempt should be made to carry on the work which was once done by Rishis and Commentators. Sir, I may state here some of the reasons which have induced me to think that changes in the Hindu Law, in certain parts of it, are necessary. In the first place, upon the same text of Hindu Law, there have been different commentaries. In the second place, one part of India attaches more importance to a certain class of writers than other parts of India. In the third place, various Judges have given different interpretations upon the same text of Hindu Law; and, fourthly, a large number of customary precedents have grown up; and as a result rules which obtain in one province differ from the rules which obtain in other provinces. Again, Sir, certain ideas which no doubt were perfectly legitimate in the days they were indulged in have now become out of date and it is necessary to revise them. For example, as regards women's rights, their order of succession, etc., contact with other nations, and our growing ideas of justice and fairness render it necessary that we should revise them in the light of the experience since gained; as I said before, it is necessary, although it may not be possible altogether to have complete consistency and uniformity, that there should be some attempt at consistency and uniformity. These are the reasons, Sir, which have induced me to take up the task of asking this House to consider modifications in certain topics of Hindu Law.

Now, Sir, I shall very shortly refer to some of the objections raised to such alterations and modifications being introduced. The most formidable objection is, that we would be undermining the ancient fabric of civilization and of religion in this country if we attempt to alter any portion of Hindu Law. The other day when I was travelling with a friend of mine, a Member of this Assembly, from Allahabad to this place, he very seriously put forward that objection and said, that our civilization and our religion have enabled us to survive much longer than other nations, and if we make any attempt to change the Hindu Law, we would be undermining our civilization and our religion. Sir, I have the greatest regard for the civilization in which I have been brought up, and I do not believe the Honourable Member who mentioned these apprehensions to me has any greater regard than myself for the ancient civilization of this country. But, Sir, I deny that by re-adjusting the details of Hindu

* That leave be given to introduce a Bill to amend the Hindu Law relating to exclusion from inheritance of certain classes of heirs and to remove certain doubts.

[Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar.]

Law in certain particulars, we would in any way be undermining our ancient civilization or our religion. As regards religion, if I may say so with respect, it seems absurd to say that because I say that a sister should come in before somebody else, and that a man of unsound mind should have his right, therefore by these changes I put the Hindu religion in jeopardy. Sir, I take the liberty of saying that there is absolutely no justification for this objection that by introducing changes in the Hindu Law we would in any way be affecting either the ancient fabric of our civilization or undermining the basis of our religion.

Sir, another objection which has been raised is this, that it is a sacrilege to attempt to alter anything that Manu and the Rishis have enjoined. Now, objectors of this class forget that what we have to deal with to-day is not exactly what Manu laid down. There have been considerable changes, and I think it has been recognised that some of the rules which have been introduced in Manusmriti are obsolete and unsuited to the present times. Moreover, as a matter of fact, by commentators, who came after Manu, changes have been introduced into the law as enunciated in his Code. And, again, as regards the Criminal Law, as regards contracts, and so forth, the British Indian Legislatures have been allowed to enact laws for us. There are laws regarding crime and punishment in the ancient Code of Manu, and they have been completely ignored by the British Legislature. Why should there be any difficulty in altering portions of Hindu Law similarly?

Then, Sir, it was said that this Chamber is not the proper place for discussing alterations in Hindu Law, and it was seriously mentioned to me that this Assembly composed as it is of Christians, Parsis and Muhammadans, is not the body which should be entrusted with the duty of making changes in the Hindu Law. Sir, these critics again forget that our laws are administered by Muhammadan, Christian and Parsi Judges.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: May I rise to a point of order, Sir? I have always understood from your previous rulings, that when a Bill is introduced, we are to have a very short speech only from the Member introducing the Bill as a formal matter, and not a long though very interesting discussion on the details of the Bill which should be discussed later. If I interpret the rule correctly, Sir, the present speech might rightly be postponed.

The Honourable the President: The principle governing the practice of the House in a matter of the introduction of Bills is, that the Member introducing the Bill is entitled to deliver a short speech explaining the principle on which the Bill is founded. I am not sufficiently proficient in Hindu Law to know where a line between principle and details should be drawn. But, so far, the Honourable Member moving for leave to introduce the Bill has hardly yet reached that length objected to by the Honourable the Home Member. In the House of Commons, there is what is known as the Ten Minutes rule, which is virtually the same here, under which an Honourable Member who moves for leave to introduce a Bill has himself ten minutes or thereabouts in which to make his speech and any one other Member, if he chooses to object, about the same period in which to state his objection on principle. The reason for that is, that before a Bill is introduced, no one except its introducer can know what is in it; and, therefore, all that the Assembly is entitled to ask from him is an explanation of the chief reasons in principle why he wishes to introduce it. As far as I can see, the Honourable Member from Madras has not transgressed those principles in spite of the opinion of the Honourable the Home Member.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: I thank you, Sir, for the courtesy which you have shown me, but I will cut short my remarks having regard to your latter observations that I should finish my speech within ten minutes.....

The Honourable the President: The Honourable the Home Member has already taken one of your ten minutes.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: I shall proceed now to the particular Bill before the House. Now, Sir, the point is, that a certain portion of Hindu Law debar certain classes of persons from inheriting on the ground that their present condition is due to sins in the former birth. I think this is an unworkable principle and a reasonable rule should be substituted in its place.

Manu says:

'An impotent person and an outcast are excluded from a share of the heritage and so are those deaf and dumb from birth.'

This has been amplified by Yagnavalkya by including in the prohibition persons suffering from incurable diseases or from similar disqualifications. This text has given rise to numerous difficulties and numerous uncertainties. In the first place, it has been argued whether the word 'born' governs not only the blind, the deaf and the dumb, but also those that follow.

The Honourable the President: I think that is a matter of detail.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: I do not wish to go into matters of detail; I only mention the fact, that there are difficulties and differences and I think it necessary that they should be remedied.

As regards an outcast, the British Legislature by passing Act XXI of 1850 ~~has~~ enacted, that civil rights would not be forfeited because a person has changed his religion. Mine is not the first attempt, therefore, in this direction and as already inadequate attempts have been made to remedy the defects which these rules have entailed, I think, I am justified in asking this Council, to go a little further. Persons who are born deaf and dumb require greater assistance than persons who are more favoured and who are in a position to earn their own living. I do not think they should be deprived of their share in the patrimony on the ground of sins that they are supposed to have committed in their previous birth. I heard my Honourable friend on my right say, that it is not the true reason but if he looks into the law he will find that it is so. Various reasons have been put forward for the existence of this rule. In my opinion, none of them justifies their continuance.

Sir, I think I have said enough to show that the rule is very uncertain in its operation; in these circumstances I ask this House for leave to introduce the Bill which would have the effect of removing the mischief I complain against. Just one word more, Sir, and I will close and that is, that in regard to the exclusion of Bengal.....

The Honourable the President: I think, that also is a matter of detail which can only come up when we take the Bill into consideration.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: Then, Sir, I ask that leave be given me to introduce the Bill.

The Honourable Dr. T. B. Sapru : Sir, I think it necessary that I must intervene at the very outset so as to indicate clearly the attitude of Government in regard to this matter. The Government have decided not to oppose the motion for leave to introduce this Bill. But beyond that, on behalf of Government, I am not prepared to give any other undertaking, either to the Honourable Mover or to the House. We consider it absolutely necessary, that in a matter of this character which affects the personal law of the entire Hindu community, we should seek the enlightened assistance of the legal profession, of the High Courts and of the Local Governments before we decide either to accept this Bill or to reject it. Personally speaking, as one who does not claim in the slightest degree to be associated with any orthodox school of thought, it is a matter of encouragement to me to find my Honourable friend, a retired Judge of the Madras High Court, exhibiting such laudable zeal in the cause of reform, and speaking at his time of life as an uncompromising radical.

Although I have always claimed in these matters to be a radical, yet I think it is necessary in the interests of the community to sound a note of warning. The Hindu Law is an inheritance from the past, and I speak with the experience of 25 years in the profession, when I say that it would be a great mistake for any lawyer, however eminent and however ambitious he may be, to pick out a particular portion of Hindu Law and to deal with it as if it had no relation with the rest of Hindu Law. There is in such attempts a lurking danger and it has always got to be guarded against. Personally speaking, I feel the real test of radicalism will be not this Bill, but when another Bill which is connected with the name of my Honourable friend, Dr. Gour, comes before the House.

Therefore, what I would say to my Honourable colleagues here is 'by all means proceed to reform your Hindu Law, but do not be in a hurry to do it. Do not think that you can, in the course of half an hour, or 15 minutes, reform the Hindu Law which requires very careful consideration and which requires a much more comprehensive view than you can give when you are dealing with an isolated Bill of this character.'

Again, I do not propose to enter into the religious or the philosophical reasons which have been assigned this morning by my Honourable friend, Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar. It may not be out of place for me to remind the House that even Hindu lawyers differ in regard to the reasons underlying this rule. My Honourable friend cannot be unaware that there is a school of Hindu lawyers who defend this rule of exclusion on the ground that persons who are unsound in body or unsound in mind—to use a convenient expression—are not qualified to render certain religious duties which are the determining factors of succession and inheritance in the Hindu Law. That is a point which cannot be forgotten by Hindu lawyers or the Hindu community. I will beg the House not to assume from the remarks that I have made that I am opposed to or in favour of the Bill that has been moved by my Honourable colleague, Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar. Speaking for myself, I can say, as a lawyer, and as a Hindu, that I want more light than this Bill throws upon the subject, and it is in that hope and in that belief, that I have decided to make the statement on behalf of Government, that so far as they are concerned, they will, for the time being at any rate, preserve an attitude of benevolent neutrality in regard to this matter until they have collected the opinions of the High Courts and the legal profession.

The Honourable the President : The question is :—

'That leave be given to introduce a Bill to amend the Hindu Law relating to exclusion from inheritance of certain classes of heirs and to remove certain doubts.'

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar : Sir, I beg to introduce the Bill.

THE ADOPTION (REGISTRATION) BILL.

Dr. H. S. Gour : Sir, I hope my Bill* will not evoke the criticism which the Bill of my learned predecessor evoked, because my Bill is not intended to affect in the slightest measure or degree the substantive Hindu Law of adoption. The Bill that I have the honour to ask for leave to introduce is intended merely to change the law of evidence relating to adoption. As Honourable Members will see, the substantive portion of the law of adoption remains as it is directed in the personal law of the parties, but once an adoption is made, my Bill requires that there must be a registered instrument to evidence it. In drafting this Bill, I have been greatly reinforced by the view of their Lordships of the Privy Council enunciated as far back as 1834, and reiterated in 1916 in a case to which I shall presently refer. In the earlier case of the Privy Council, their Lordships pointed out, that the law of adoption in India was singularly peculiar and unsatisfactory. They pointed out, that under the law of adoption, both in the civil law of Rome and under the Code Napoleon of France, registration before a Magistrate was necessary and that the law was circumscribed by other conditions which were intended to preserve and safeguard the rights of the heirs. Under the Roman law as well as under the Code Napoleon, no man below the age of 50 was competent to make an adoption, and in both the laws it appears that the adopter making the adoption had to appear before a Magistrate and register his adoption before him, and it was competent to the Magistrate or to the court to disallow the adoption if it found it capricious and unfair to the heir. Their Lordships of the Privy Council in this case of Satrugnan reported in 5 Weekly Reporter, page 109.....

* Bill to prescribe a registered instrument as necessary for a valid adoption.

The Honourable the President: Order, Order. The pile of books beside the Honourable Member is, I am afraid, evidence that he means to transgress the spirit of Standing Order 37.

Dr. H. S. Gour: I shall certainly endeavour not to do so. I am only explaining the Privy Council decision which has impelled me to draft this measure.

Their Lordships of the Privy Council in 5 Weekly Reporter 109 point out:

'In our own country, although wills are revocable, we do not allow the favoured title of heir to be set aside but by a will in writing, attested in the presence of three witnesses; but according to the Hindu Law, neither registration of the act of adoption, nor any written evidence of that act having been completed, is essential to its validity.'

'It is to be lamented that an irrevocable act, which defeats the just expectations of the relations of deceased persons, may, at any distance of time after it is supposed to have been done, be proved by verbal testimony. It would contribute much to the security of property and the happiness of Hindu families, if in a country where the religious obligation of an oath is unfortunately so little felt, and documents so readily fabricated, adoptions and all other important acts were required to be performed in the presence of some Magistrate, and to be recorded in some Court. But although neither written acknowledgment, nor the performance of any religious ceremonies, are essential to the validity of adoption, such acknowledgments are usually given . . .'

The Honourable the President: Order, Order. I must point out to the Honourable Member that the reading of long quotations at this stage is utterly out of order.

Dr. H. S. Gour: Now, their Lordships of the Privy Council have very clearly pointed out, that it is highly desirable that an adoption should be registered, that is to say, it should be in writing and then presented before a Magistrate. In 1834, when their Lordships of the Privy Council gave that decision, we had no universal law of registration which was enacted for the first time in, I think, 1843. I have already pointed out to the Honourable Members, that this case has been very recently followed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in I. L. R. 44 Cal. p. 201, at page 210, where the passage which I have been reading is cited with approval. I am, therefore, fortified in asking leave of this House for the introduction of my measure by two leading decisions of their Lordships of the Privy Council.

Now, an objection has been raised by some of my Hindu friends who have come and told me that while they approve of the measure they desire that some latitude must be given to the adopter to register the instrument within a reasonable time and that I should insert in the Bill a provision to that effect. I beg to point out that once the measure is passed, it will be subject to the law of registration, and under Section 23 of the Indian Registration Act, a document may be presented for registration within four months and in case of an unavoidable absence, accident, or urgent necessity, within a period of eight months. Consequently that provision need not be introduced in this measure.

I therefore feel that this Honourable House will give me leave to introduce this measure and I ask for such leave.

The motion* was adopted.

Dr. H. S. Gour: Sir, I now introduce the Bill.

RESOLUTION re: REPEAL OF WORKMEN'S BREACH OF CONTRACT ACT AND CERTAIN SECTIONS OF THE INDIAN PENAL CODE.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: Sir, I beg to move:

'This Assembly recommends to the Governor General in Council that he should take steps to introduce, at an early date, in the Indian Legislature, legislation for the repeal of:

- (a) The Workmen's Breach of Contract Act No. 13 of 1859; and
- (b) Sections 490 and 492 of the Indian Penal Code.'

My object in introducing this Resolution is to request the Government to remove criminal liability for breach of contract of service, in a large number of cases accompanied by advances of money. It is a strange coincidence that on to-day's agenda there should be two Resolutions making a demand, in principle the same, namely, to make all people in the eyes of law equal. I hope this coincidence will enable Members of this Assembly to see the principle underlying my Resolution in a clearer perspective, and I, therefore, hope, that this coincidence will turn out to be a happy augury.

Sir, the Workmen's Breach of Contract Act was introduced in the year 1859, at the request of the Calcutta Trades Association. The Calcutta Trades Association sent a petition to the Government of India that they had to bring labourers from outside by giving them advances, and sometimes these labourers before fulfilling their contract of service left their service and consequently put them to a loss of money. Government at that time sympathised with their request and passed a legislation in the year 1859 called the 'Workmen's Breach of Contract Act.' The main provision of this Act is, that when a workman joins service and receives advance, and after receiving the advance does not fulfil his contract, the Magistrate has power, on the complaint made by the employer, to order the man, as the employer requires, either to pay back the money or to fulfil the contract of service, and in default the Magistrate has power to impose rigorous or simple imprisonment upon the offender. This is the main provision of the Act. There are other provisions also. The Act, it must be remembered, does not even exclude women and minors from this provision. When the original Act was passed, it was intended to apply only to the Presidency Towns, but the Government at that time was kind enough to insert a Section enabling the Local Governments as well as themselves to extend the operation of the Act to all the places in the country, with the result that the Act is being applied since that time to most parts of the country. The operation of the Act went on merrily till the year 1917 for nearly sixty years. In the year 1917, Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya asked a question on this matter and in the same year gave notice of introducing a legislation to repeal this Act and of introducing a Bill called the Workmen's Emancipation Bill. Unfortunately he, being a very busy man, did not introduce that legislation, but the result of his question and notice was, that the conscience of Government was roused after sixty years and they, in the year 1918 or 1919, introduced an amending Bill and made certain amendments to the Act. The first amendment was, that the Act should not apply to all those contracts where an amount of money exceeding Rs. 300 was involved. This provision was intended to exclude the higher classes of artisans and contractors. Government is always kind to the higher classes and not to the lower classes. Sir, there was another amendment introduced and that was the discretion to compel the payment of an advance or specific performance of a contract was transferred from the employer to the Magistrate. Perhaps this was due to the fact, that when the original Act was passed, all the employers were Europeans. But recently many Indians have become employers and have taken advantage of this Act. Then the Magistrate was also empowered to vary the punishment and given the discretion to impose either simple or rigorous imprisonment. These are some of the main amendments introduced by the Act of 1920. Sir, this is, in short, the history and the provisions of the Workmen's Breach of Contract Act. This kind of legislation, namely, criminal liability for a civil breach of contract is, in my opinion, an inheritance from England. In England, from the time of Queen Elizabeth, there have been legislation putting all sorts of liabilities upon the poorer classes. And, unfortunately, when the English Government and European merchants came here, they brought that inheritance into India. I believe, this kind of legislation is alien to the Indian sentiment, but unfortunately such a legislation has come. But, Sir, in England, the conscience of the people was roused very soon and all the legislation attaching criminal liability to civil contracts in the case of the working classes has now been repealed. Some portion of this legislation was repealed in the year 1867 and the rest in the year 1875. But, unfortunately, the Indian Act continues in force. Sir, the main object for which this Act was introduced is said to be to enable employers to recover the money advanced, but, in my opinion, this was not the main object and I can make it quite clear to the Assembly, that I am correct. Sir, when the original Act was discussed in the Council in the year 1859, there was a Member from Bombay, Mr. Legeyt, and he told Government, that it was of no use to pass legislation only in the cases where advances were made. He asked Government to pass legislation to make breaches of contract criminal even in cases where no advances were made. I will also make it quite clear to the Assembly, that if the object of the legislators at that time had been to recover the money, the question of paying the money or specifically performing the contract would have been left to the employee and not to the employer. The fact that discretion is given to the employer to enforce either provision shows that the employee is answerable not only for the payment of money but also for the specific performance of the contract.

* That leave be given to introduce a Bill to prescribe a registered instrument as necessary for a valid adoption.'

Sir, the object with which these advances have been given are these. I will read some quotations in order to show why these advances have been given. The first quotation is from Mr. Kincaid who is a Bombay Civilian of long standing. He says :

'The cases that have come before me were always cases where the employer had given an advance with the object of reducing him to a state of slavery.'

There is another quotation from Mr. Allen, a Calcutta gentleman, which shows clearly why the advances were made :

'The advance is more in the nature of a bonus than an advance is ordinarily understood.'

He explains that this advance is a kind of higher payment to those workers who choose to come under the Workmen's Breach of Contract Act voluntarily. Those workmen who do not see that the Act puts them in a state of slavery come under this Act by accepting this bonus or advance.

Then, Sir, I would request the Members to remember that this advance is given sometimes to a father who promises that his child and his wife will work for the master and if the father does not return the advance, the child and the wife must go to prison or render service. This is the kind of law we have to deal with to-day. From this, it is quite clear, that the main object of this legislation was not that the advance given should be repaid, but the main object was that, the employers should have a hold upon the workmen, that the workers should not be able to leave their masters. That was the main object of this legislation. I give a quotation. This is from the Secretary of the United Provinces Chamber of Commerce :

'The real advantage of the Act lies not so much in its being enforced as in the 'moral effect' which its existence on the statute book has on the coolies.'

Sir, I do not know whether this moral effect is the same as the moral effect of General Dyer at Amritsar or of Commissioner De at Chandpur. I hope it is different.

Sir, it was also said, that this Bill was also necessary in order that the tedious process of civil law may be avoided. If the tedious process of civil law is to be avoided in the interests of the rich employers, is it not also necessary for the poor workmen who sometimes have to file civil suits for their pay against their masters, and if it is necessary for both, why is it that only the workmen are made liable for this legislation? It is therefore quite clear that the main object with which this legislation was introduced was that the employer should have a hold upon his workmen and that the servants should not be allowed to change their masters.

My main objection to this Bill is, that it makes a civil offence, a criminal offence and this is done only in the case of the working classes. It is a piece of class legislation which is as objectionable as racial legislation. Now, in the case of the richer people, people like you and me, if we break our contract of service, we shall not be sent to jail. But the ordinary workman is considered to belong to a different class of people and, therefore, if he breaks the contract of service, he must be sent to jail.

This distinction is not justified by any reasons. Then, Sir, I object to this Bill because of another reason. This Bill shows, that a man can be sent to jail for the non-payment of debt. A man like you and me will not be sent to jail even if a debt amounting to lakhs and crores of rupees is not paid, but a poor man, if he does not pay a rupee, will be sent to jail under this Act. Of course the Honourable the Home Member may say, that that is not true and that a man is sent to jail only in the case of fraud. I shall deal with this point later on. But it is quite clear, that in the case of the working classes the non-payment of debt is punished with imprisonment. Sir, there is another thing. This kind of legislation is a kind of indentured labour system which everyone of us abhors from the bottom of our heart. To get rid of it, we have tried our very best. What is the basic principle of indentured labour? It is this, that where a man breaks his contract of service, he is to be punished criminally and not civilly. That is the principle of indentured labour, and this principle has been allowed to remain on the Statute Book of India for such a long time. We have been doing our very very best to have it removed in the case of Indians in other countries, but we have allowed it in our own country. Sir, in my opinion, this is not only indentured labour, but it is nothing short of slavery. I am using a strong word, I know. But I shall give a few quotations which will show, that this is not only my view, but this is the view of some officers of Government also. This is from Mr. Hallifax, the Commissioner of Rawalpindi :

'This Workmen's Breach of Contract Act is really a form of slavery and should be discouraged.'

Mr Harrison, the Legal Remembrancer, Punjab, says :

'I am strongly of opinion that the Bill should be repealed altogether. The Indian of the artisan class is only too ready to sell his son into what practically amounts to slavery.'

Thus, my main objections are that this legislation is a class legislation, discriminating between class and class ; it is an indentured system ; it is slavery. Therefore, I hope that the Members of this Assembly will support me. Sir, I should like to say a few words as to what is said in justification of this Act. The first thing said is, that the workman is a poor man, and if he is unable to pay his debts, and if he does not pay his debts, he must be punished somehow ; we cannot claim damages from him. This is the main argument upon which this Workmen's Breach of Contract Act is based. But I should like Members of this Assembly to remember this. If debts are not paid by some members of the working class, are there no men of the other classes who do not pay their debts ? Should that Act apply to the working classes, and the ordinary civil law to others ? I have seen instances of hundreds of men being ruined by the richer classes not fulfilling their contracts, but nobody punishes them with imprisonment. As regards this, Sir, I would like to read a small quotation from Mr. Fawcett when this subject was under discussion in Parliament :

'It seemed to him a fallacy to urge that a heavier scale of penalties should attach to offences committed by the men, on the ground that more serious losses were thereby entailed. No doubt the pecuniary loss was great ; but consequences as severe frequently devolved upon the men through the acts of the masters. Men who were brought from distant parts of the country, say from the North to the South, on a promise of twelve months' regular work and at the end of three months were discarded, owing to fluctuations in the trade, suffered hardships as great as any capable of being entailed upon the masters.'

Then, Sir, there is another justification. A breach of a promise involves a fraud. I should like to say, Sir, whether frauds are committed only by the poorer people,—and the richer classes, the employers, and people like you and me, also sometimes commit fraud, but we are punished for fraud under a different Section, and that Section is Section 415 of the Penal Code and not under this Act, as was pointed out by the Honourable Mr. Sarma in his speech in the Council when he was a non-official Member. I hope he will now support me. Sir, I cannot understand why an ordinary man like you and me should come under Section 415, and workmen not come under that. Is it that this Section is reserved for some people, the Brahmins of the economic world ? Why should not this Section apply to the poorer classes for offences of fraud involved in the breach of contract of service ?

I feel that the repeal of this Act is an absolute necessity, if we are to show to the world that we do not want class distinctions in the law. It may be said, that if we repeal this legislation, the employers will suffer loss and that our industries will suffer. Supposing this is true, which I don't believe to be true, I ask the Members of this Assembly whether they will not prefer a little loss for their industry and a little less prosperity, to the loss of freedom for the working classes ? Would they like the working classes to remain in a condition of slavery in order to prevent the loss which the richer people of this country would otherwise suffer ? Let them make their choice. Sir, when I ask for the repeal of the Act, I am not alone. There are several officers of Government who have been asking for the repeal. I have quoted the opinions of some of them, and I will also venture to quote a few more. This is from the Honourable Mr. Piggott, of the United Provinces :

'I am not sure that the employers of labour will not find the Act thus emasculated of so little practical value that they will rarely if ever invoke its provisions. The real question to my mind is whether it is worthwhile to continue to impose upon Magistrates the duty of interfering in matters which under modern conditions might well be left to the adjudication of ordinary civil courts.'

The Bombay Burma Trading Company say :

'As it is supposed to be amended it will be absolutely useless to anybody and no good purpose will be served by its retention.'

Then Mr. King, Punjab, says :

'It is better to repeal the Act instead of amending it.'

Sir Benjamin Robertson practically says the same thing. I have already quoted Mr. Kincaid of Bombay. Sir, there are some employers who are very generous and want to repeal this Act. The Indian Merchants Chamber and Bureau say this :

'They feel it is high time that the Government of India considered the advisability of repealing the Act altogether.'

Mr. Justice Sadasiva Aiyar of Madras says, that it is wholly unsuited to modern conditions and ought to be repealed altogether.

Sir, I have said enough about the necessity of repealing this Workmen's Breach of Contract Act. In my Resolution, I also ask the Government to repeal Sections 490 and 492 of the Indian Penal Code. Section 490 is this :

'Whoever, being bound by a lawful contract to render his personal service in conveying or conducting any person, or any property from the place, or to act as servant to any person during a voyage, or journey, or to guard any person or property during a voyage or journey, voluntarily omits so to do, except in the case of illness or ill-treatment, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to one month, or with fine which may extend to one hundred rupees, or with both.'

Sir, this is another instance of punishing a poor man with imprisonment for a breach of contract. Sir, this Section was introduced into the Penal Code on the ground that in those old days roads in India were not good, there were no conveniences for travelling. That is what the Law Commissioners say, a man is sent to jail only in the case of fraud. I shall deal with this point later on. But it is quite clear, that in the case of the working classes the non-payment of debt is punished with imprisonment. Sir, there is another thing. 'They feel it is high time that the Government of India considered the advisability of repealing the Act altogether.'

[Mr. N. M. Joshi.]

Mr. Justice Sadasiva Aiyar of Madras says, that it is wholly unsuited to modern conditions and ought to be repealed altogether.

Sir, I have said enough about the necessity of repealing this Workmen's Breach of Contract Act. In my Resolution, I also ask the Government to repeal Sections 490 and 492 of the Indian Penal Code. Section 490 is this :

'Whoever, being bound by a lawful contract to render his personal service in conveying or conducting any person, or any property from the place, or to act as servant to any person during a voyage, or journey, or to guard any person or property during a voyage or journey, voluntarily omits so to do, except in the case of illness or ill-treatment, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to one month, or with fine which may extend to one hundred rupees, or with both.'

Sir, this is another instance of punishing a poor man with imprisonment for a breach of contract. Sir, this Section was introduced into the Penal Code on the ground that in those old days roads in India were not good, there were no conveniences for travelling. That is what the Law Commissioners say,

[Mr. N. M. Joshi.]

Now, that was many years ago, about 60 or 70 years ago. But the times have changed since then. We have got very good roads now, we have got railways, we have got steamers; and, therefore, there is no reason why should it continue now. I admit, Sir, there are some cases in which, if a man breaks his contract of service without notice, he may be punished criminally, namely, where a man by his breach of contract of service causes danger to human life. I admit that is the only occasion when a man could be punished criminally for breach of contract of service. If Government wants to legislate for that purpose, I shall have no objection, I shall vote for it; but I cannot allow this Section to remain in the Penal Code.

Sir, Section 492 is this :

‘Whoever, being bound by lawful contract in writing to work for another person as an artificer, workman or labourer, for a period not more than three years, at any place within British India to which by virtue of the contract he has been or is to be conveyed at the expense of such other, voluntarily deserts the service of that other during the continuance of his contract, or without reasonable cause refuses to perform the service which he has contracted to perform, such service being reasonable and proper service, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term not exceeding one month, or with fine not exceeding double the amount of such expense, or with both; unless the employer has ill-treated him, or neglected to perform the contract on his part.’

This Section is nothing but a repetition of the Workmen's Breach of Contract Act, and this Section provides for nothing but an indenture labour system. Where is the difference if a man from India goes to South Africa with the money of his employer and deserts his service and is punished with imprisonment, and if a man receives his railway fare or steamer fare in India, goes to another province, leaves his service and is punished with imprisonment. I fail to understand the difference between the two cases. If we are angry with the South African Government for allowing this indenture system, and if we forced our Government to abolish the indenture system, I do not know why we with open eyes allow this system to remain in existence in our country? It is like preaching a homily to others and doing the same thing ourselves. I hope Members of this Assembly will rise above selfish feelings, in the name of the country and in the name of humanity.

Sir, there is only one other point about which I want to speak for a minute or two and then close. When Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya moved his Resolution, Government asked him to introduce legislation for the repeal of the Act. Government may say the same thing to me to-day, but I must frankly tell Government, that I shall not undertake the responsibility of introducing that legislation. Who introduced the first legislation of 1859? Government, and not a private Member. And, if Government introduced that legislation, it is the clear duty of Government to repeal it when it is found unsuited to the present times. Government may also say, that they have not consulted the Local Governments. But Government of India had very recently consulted the Local Governments, in the year 1920, and they need not consult the Local Governments again. Moreover, Government have consulted the Local Governments on the indenture system and Government is introducing a Bill in this very Session to make provision for the repeal of the law which provided for the indenture system, and, in the case of that legislation, they introduced the Bill, and afterwards they consulted the Local Governments. I ask Government to do the same now. Let them introduce the legislation, and if they want to consult the Local Governments again, let them do so. Sir, I therefore feel, that I am justified in asking Government to introduce this legislation, and I hope Government will respond to my appeal. I also appeal to those Members of this Assembly who are employers of labour. Let them not be shortsighted. Their industry will prosper even with free labour, and prosper, I think, much better. I appeal to the Members of this Assembly also, that they are here representatives of the masses of this country who are voiceless. Let them show by their vote to-day that they care for the masses and they look after the interests of the masses even if the masses are not represented in this Assembly.

With these words, Sir, I commend my Resolution for the support of this Assembly.

Mr. B. S. Kamat : Mr. President, I have listened to the speech of my Honourable friend, Mr. Joshi, with a great deal of attention and sympathy. I have often admired the indefatigable industry which he always shows in studying his questions, and I also claim that in very many of his activities I have often joined him with the same amount of sympathy and the same outlook. But, Sir, if on the present occasion I differ from him, so far at any rate, as the first part of his Resolution is concerned, namely, the repeal of the Workmen's Breach of Contract Act, I would regard that as my misfortune. I would venture to place before this Assembly a few observations as the result of my experience, of something like 20 years as a humble employer of labour in certain branches.

Mr. Joshi has characterised this Act, XIII of 1859, as a most iniquitous piece of legislation on the part of the Government of India, and giving the history of this piece of legislation he told us, that the Government of India were led, or rather misled, into passing this Act at the instance of the Calcutta Trades Union in 1859. He has also characterised this piece of legislation as a class legislation, which he says is practically nothing but slavery—an Indian edition of the South African Indenture system. I regard these words as an overdrawn picture, which is practically nothing but a travesty of the actual state of affairs. It might have been very different if Mr. Joshi, instead of studying the problem on paper and from books, had seen very many officials and other people in the Public Works Department either in Calcutta or in other parts of India, and actually studied the problem on the spot, and had gone into the practical difficulties of those who have to organise labour and handle labour.

I believe the second fallacy into which my friend, Mr. Joshi, has fallen is this. He has visualised from his office room only one set of circumstances, only one set of labourers, in Assam or any other part of India and generalised from this. I would ask him to study the problem from the point of view of different industries and different kinds of labour which are necessary for carrying out large works of public utility. He referred, Sir, to the employers' profits. I am afraid I must say that he has been obsessed, as a student of labour questions, with only one idea, and that is, that every employer employs labourers with a view to exploiting them, with a view to profits and nothing else. As one who has taken part in the life of labourers, in their education and their social welfare, I can claim that I have done something for their amelioration; but, Sir, I think it my duty to place the other side of the picture before this House. Before coming to any conclusion, let me ask the House to take a typical case and then judge of all the charges which

Mr. Joshi has thought fit to level at the employers of labour and also judge the picture he has drawn of the labourers. Just take the case, for instance, of the building of this Chamber for the Indian Legislature. It is obvious that labourers had to be brought up here perhaps from different points of the compass. The contractors must have employed, for instance, plasterers from Delhi, brick-layers from Agra, perhaps black-smiths from other parts of the country, and painters, decorators, carpenters and other classes of workers from elsewhere. The contractors had to complete the work by a certain date. It was to the interest of the public—it was not merely a question of profits—but it was a matter of public utility that the whole of this large job should be finished in time. Now, before the builder can bring up all these different kinds of labourers from different parts of the country to Simla, if Mr. Joshi goes and actually makes inquiries from contractors and builders, he will find, it is absolutely hopeless and impossible for any one to bring up a single workman up to Simla unless he makes cash advances to him. Those advances, let me assure him, are not made as a bonus in order that they may come here at cheaper rates, but those advances are made, and are demanded almost at the point of the bayonet by workmen, simply because the men want money in advance for their families which are left behind. It is common knowledge, and I think my Honourable friend, Sir Sydney Crookshank, will corroborate me, that it is absolutely impossible for some of these contractors and employers of labour to bring up men to a distant place unless an advance in money is made, not because they want to induce the labourers to accept their terms but because, as I say, provision has to be made for their families for a time.

Now, having come up here, having received advances in cash, as well as having their other expenses paid, supposing all these men, plasterers, smiths, bricklayers, carpenters, etc., on some pretext, on some excuse or other, try to give the slip next morning, what remedy is there that the building for which they were brought up will be carried out at a particular date by the particular contractor? My friend, Mr. Joshi, suggests, that the only remedy ought to be a civil suit, and that there should be no class legislation for non-payment of labourer's debts.

But probably he does not know that most of these labourers come up here, not on any indenture, as he calls it, but under a simple agreement. They have nothing but their pots and pans with them. If you have to institute civil suits against 500 of these men, who want to run away after getting hard cash, I am afraid, you will have to file one civil suit for, say, Rs. 10 at Agra, a second for Rs. 5 at Delhi, a third at Calcutta, and so forth. And, in the meanwhile, the contractor has to leave this building unfinished which he has to complete by a certain date, and to run after 500 people, scattered in different parts of the country, in order to get the remedy of a civil suit, which again may take 12 months or more to get a decree and even then he will perhaps get no satisfaction, because the men who have run away have probably nothing but their pots and pans. Well, Sir, that is the real practical difficulty of the question. It is not a question of making profits, but a question of carrying out public works, railway works, railway embankments, canals by certain dates. If, therefore, this question is viewed from this point of view, I believe, it is inevitable we should have some sort of hold on the labourers, who have no tangible property to lose, and who must be made amenable to some speedy law other than the ordinary Civil Law. I don't think the Government of India either when passing this legislation or in the year 1920, when after reconsidering the question they re-affirmed the principle of this legislation, overlooked the rights of the labourer. No, Sir, I go further. Mr. Joshi led the House to believe, that this piece of legislation is absolutely inhuman and iniquitous. Now those who have carefully gone over the various Sections of this Act will realise that the Government of India in passing this Act have put in sufficient safeguards of a very real character in order to protect the labourers. They are not entirely left to the mercy of the employer. The employer has to file a complaint before a Magistrate. The Magistrate after going into the facts of the case, if he finds that there is a wilful and a negligent non-performance of the contract after actually receiving an advance of money from the employer on the part of the labourer, — if he is convinced about the fraudulent breach of contract he can give two options to the workman. He does not send him to jail forthwith in the first instance, but in exercise of the discretion and power under Section 2 (1), he directs the workman first to do the work for which he was paid, whatever it may be. If the workman fails to do that, there is a further Section which empowers the Magistrate to give a further protection to the labourer, namely, security for the money which he has already saved. I do not think that any man who has paid an advance of money should be a loser simply because he wants theoretically every labourer exempted from all criminal liability. In ancient times, we were told that a Brahmin, even when he committed a murder, was no murderer. In a similar way, Mr. Joshi is asking us to pass legislation which will exempt a labourer from punishment even when he commits a fraud. (Mr. Joshi was understood to protest.) At any rate, that was the tenor of his remarks. I therefore think that the principle which Mr. Joshi has at heart is not right. Those who have to organise labour must have a remedy, a remedy which is at once handy and humane, and one which is surrounded with all necessary safeguards. Now this Act has all these safeguards. Further, there is a Section, Section 2-A, which empowers the Magistrate to find out if the employer has brought a vexatious or frivolous suit against the labourer, and if he finds that the whole claim is fraudulent on the part of the employer, then the Magistrate can fine the employer to the extent of Rs. 50. That sufficiently safeguards the interests of the labourer. I do not think therefore that Mr. Joshi is justified in characterising the whole of this Act of 1859, as outrageous, preposterous and leading to a species of slavery similar to the indenture system.

Under this Act, these workmen who are engaged are not certainly treated in the same manner as we have been told they are treated in South Africa. There is absolutely no question of coercing or torturing them; there is no question of compelling them to do any work of a particular kind in the same sense as indentured labourers are treated in South Africa and elsewhere. They are absolutely free to go anywhere they like; it is only if they attempt fraudulently to evade performance of a contract for which they have received money and if they cannot give security, if they try, in other words, to cheat their employer, then only they are brought under the scope of this Act. Considering all these points, Sir, I do think that a repeal of this Act is not desirable and that the Assembly should not accept Mr. Joshi's proposition.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: Sir, it is getting late, and I think it will suit the convenience of this Assembly if I intervene at this stage of the debate as such a course will save time; but, before I address the Assembly on the subject of the Resolution, may I offer a word of explanation as to the reasons why Government put these Resolutions down on an official day. I do not think many Members will complain of this practice, because the Resolutions down for to-day both relate to matters of great importance in which I think we are all interested. If Honourable Members think, that the present practice is not a reasonable one, then the rules may have to be altered. But, I believe, it is convenient for Government and for Members of the Assembly, in that it enables matters of great public importance to be brought forward before this Assembly at an early date, which otherwise might not be discussed at all. Further, if when non-official business is entered for discussion on official dates, Honourable Members are to have the option of balloting as to what Resolutions are to be brought forward, a possible result might be that Government would not give any official dates at all for non-official Resolution.

I will now try to explain as shortly as I can the attitude of Government towards the Resolution before the Assembly. The Honourable Member is quite right when he says, that for years this Act was not revised, although we had frequent reports on its working. But, in 1918 or 1919, we invited opinions generally as to the necessity of amending or repealing it. I myself was rather keen on the question because I had come up against some cases of misuse of the Act. On an examination of the opinions, we found that they were very divided on the question of repeal, but the majority of opinions, I can safely say, including those of Local Governments, were opposed to this course. The arguments used by those who favoured repeal were largely those advanced to-day; it was said that the Act was an insult to the dignity of labour, incompatible with modern ideas, that it gave the employers an undue advantage and would not be tolerated in Europe and so forth. Now these are all arguments of principle and theory of an irreproachable character. But there were, on the other hand, many who alleged, for reasons very similar to those given by Mr. Kamat, that the Act was necessary in the interests of the public, that it was essential for the carrying out of large engineering and industrial concerns, that it was not an Act penalising labour at all, but was merely intended to prevent rather than penalise and then only to prevent fraudulent breaches of contract. Another argument brought forward was that a measure of this kind was necessary particularly on large engineering works to prevent enticement of labourers by one employer from another and I believe, that on many large works this difficulty does arise; again, it was argued, as was suggested by Mr. Kamat, that a system of advances was in the present condition of things inevitable in this country, whatever be its merits or demerits, and that it was impossible to have a system of advances or to secure their recovery without some summary procedure such as is provided by the Act. In other words, to give a right of recovery by civil process of money advances from labourers of a certain class, was a remedy of no value at all, because the men have nothing from which the dues could be realised. I noticed the Honourable Mover suggested in one or two places, and I want to get rid of this point very early in the debate, that a racial question was involved in this discussion; I do not know whether this was done merely to create prejudice or not, but I can assure Members of this Assembly, that the question is in no sense a racial one. It is simply and solely a question between employer and employed; it affects Indian and European employers equally; nor is there any clear cut division between official and non-official opinion. If the opinions are examined, it will be found that while many officials are in favour of repeal, many are against it and the same remark applies to non-officials. The Honourable Member has cited opinions to support his case; I do not want to cite many, but I will cite a few out of many on the other side. He has chosen to cite European opinion, I will cite Indian. Here is an opinion from a gentleman, Mr. Chandra Dhan. Barua from Assam: he says:

'I cannot support the Bill (i.e., the Bill which only amended the old Act); it will greatly slacken the tie of the employee to the employer. The labourer is already better off under the existing Act and it is difficult to understand how it can be abused;'

he opposed, therefore, even the amendment of the original Act. Then, again, I find that the Dev Samaj of Lahore, who, I am told, are a very religious body and presumably strict in advocating what is in principle right, support the view that the Act is necessary. Then, here is another gentleman who really knows a great deal about the matter, Rai Bahadur Ganga Ram, a retired Executive Engineer in the Punjab. He says, that the Act serves a most useful purpose inasmuch as it acts as a deterrent and has a wholesome effect and does not generally lead to many prosecutions, that the workmen generally kept to their contracts and there was smooth feeling. These opinions are only a few out of many: Indeed, I think, that the Honourable Member must have had some difficulty in selecting opinions in his favour, as most of the opinions on record go exactly the other way.

Be that as it may, on receipt of these opinions, Government decided that it was not advisable or right at that moment to repeal the Act, and they amended it in material particulars, every amendment being made in the interests of labour and in order to prevent any kind of misuse or abuse of the Act. The application of the Act was restricted, discretion was given to the Magistrate to refuse to issue process in any case in which he thought this necessary; discretion was given to him to refuse to enforce any contract which he thought was unfair; he was authorised to award compensation in cases of vexatious or frivolous complaints, he was given discretion (the matter is not left to the employer as was suggested by the Mover) to decide whether the advance should be refunded or whether the contract should be fulfilled and he was also given power to order repayment of advances by instalments; in fact, in every possible way that we could think of, the interest of the labourer was safeguarded and so far as we know, the Act is now worked very fairly at present. We have had no complaints of its being unfair in its application, and I noticed the Honourable Member, while he talked about slavery and the demoralising effects of the Act, did not cite to this Assembly a single case in which the Act, since its amendment, has been improperly used. This is a practical point of great importance.

In these circumstances, the Government are in some difficulty. It is realised, that there is a great deal of sympathy with the principle of complete repeal. Such an idea is in accordance with modern feeling. It is in accordance with the practice in European countries. Indeed, I may say, that I am personally aware that many Members of Government feel very strongly on this point. On the other hand, we have the practical objections to repeal what I have explained and the fact that the last time when public opinion was consulted, we found that the majority of authorities were opposed to the course. It is only fair, in those circumstances, that the Government, before taking any such action as the Honourable Member desires, should, in the first place, consult those whose interests are likely to be prejudiced by the proposal. The Honourable Mover is of course a great champion of the working man. But, I think indeed his zeal though very commendable has to some extent carried him away in this debate. I know that he has spent a great part of his life in struggling to ameliorate the conditions of labour, and in that great work he has the support and sympathy of Government, and, I am sure, of the whole of this Assembly. But, when he says that this Act results in something akin to slavery and talks of indentured labour, when he says that it penalises all breach of contract, then he is really letting his zeal run away with him. Members have only to read the preamble of the Act to see that it is not intended and cannot be used to punish ordinary breaches of contract in the country but only to prevent fraudulent breach of contracts, and it cannot be said with any reason that it results in slavery or anything like it.

There was another matter in the Honourable Mover's speech to which I think this Assembly will not assent. And that was a remark from him; it was more a suggestion than as a definite allegation that Government was already on the side of the capitalist employer and that it had no sympathy with labour. I want to disbel that idea at once; I cannot really allow such a statement to go unchallenged for one moment, and I hope too I shall secure the support of this Assembly. What person who heard His Excellency's speech the other day on the welfare of labour can doubt for one moment that the Government have given this matter their very careful consideration, that they are taking every possible step to ameliorate the condition of labour generally in this country? I may refer to various legislative proposals now under consideration to illustrate this. For instance, the Factories Amendment Bill and the Mines Amendment Bill; then, again, proposals for Trades Union legislation and a measure for compensation to workmen in cases of accident, are under examination. Are not these facts some indication of the Government's solicitude for labour? Do the proposals indicate their sympathy for the richman and that they have no regard at all for labour? Further, let us consider the activities of Local Governments. Is it not well known that His Excellency the Governor of Bombay and his Council are at this moment taking measures to improve the housing of labour? Is it not also well known that they have already expended a great amount of time, thought and money on that project? Is it not a fact that all the Local Governments at this moment are engaged in doing what is possible to promote the formation of Conciliation Boards? Having regard to all these facts, I put it to this Assembly, that it seems to me a little unjust to accuse Government of indifference to the welfare of labour. The danger really is of our going a little too fast in some directions, for instance, in the matter of this Act. For what is applicable in one part of India is also not at all suitable in another part, and different parts of India may require different legislation. Further, while we are making all these efforts to improve the condition of labour, there are many who think that unless we simultaneously make successful efforts to increase the capacity of the workers and create a higher standard of comfort which will lead to a desire to earn better wages by better work, we may very materially prejudice the whole industrial progress of this country. I should like the Assembly to examine this aspect of the case for one moment, and from that aspect to consider what the practical effect of the repeal of this Act would be. Again, Honourable Members are aware, that Industries is now a transferred subject in charge of Ministers, and it seems to me, therefore, that they are entitled to be consulted before the Government take any action on the lines now proposed. I have already said that many officials are opposed to the Act, but, at the same time, an official Government must in a case of this kind tend to be somewhat conservative. A responsible Minister may be more liberal and progressive in his ideas, and in any case a responsible Government is entitled to be consulted before the Government of India gives such an undertaking as the Honourable Member wants. The position then really comes to this. There are arguments—largely arguments based on principle and theory for the repeal of this Act. On the other hand, there are practical objections to such a course which cannot be overlooked and there are points which those affected ought to be given an opportunity of weighing before the Government give any undertaking in this Assembly to repeal this law. Further, in any event, employers of labour ought to be given a reasonable opportunity to adjust themselves to new conditions. The attitude of Government and their conclusions are, therefore, these, that if the Resolution commends itself to the majority of this Assembly, or if the Honourable Member will accept what I say, the Government are prepared to adopt the view that the repeal of this law is desirable on general grounds of principle and if after consulting Local Governments and public opinion, it is found that there is a fairly general consensus of opinion in the country in favour of repeal, they will introduce a Bill to give effect to the principle in this Assembly. We will inquire how the law has worked, whether it is unfair, whether its retention is necessary, whether its repeal will materially affect the industrial progress of this country, and if the replies to these questions are reasonably favourable to repeal,—I shall be glad to place them before any Member of the House who likes to see them, then the Government will, within a reasonable time—say within eighteen months,—undertake legislation for the repeal of this law. Further than this, the Government cannot go to meet the Honourable Member.

Rai Bahadur Debi Charan Barua : I beg to oppose the adoption of this Resolution on the following among other grounds :

Firstly : The Workmen's Breach of Contract Act No. XIII of 1859 has been rather giving more benefit to the labourer than to the employer. The chief ingredient of a contract is that the employer should give and the employee receive a certain amount in advance in consideration of the latter's having entered into the contract to perform a certain work. Without such an advance paid in cash the contract will be null and void. Not only in ordinary times but at this juncture of economic difficulties the availability of amounts by labourers in need counts for a good deal. And this advance, in the eye of civil law, is nothing but a loan; and the labourer gets it without any interest. If the labourer should go to a money lender of his locality, the money lender would naturally refuse it, as the labourer lacks credit. Even if the labourer should succeed in securing the loan from the bania or money lender by pledging some utensils, cattle or ornaments, interests at the rate of anna one to two per rupee per month is invariably charged, with the result that the things pledged are rarely redeemed. On the other hand, in the case of advances received in a contract under Act XIII of 1859 the labourer is never required to concern himself with any thought of paying interest, but the principal, viz., the advance itself, is automatically repaid if the labourer is an honest person and performs the contract as stipulated originally. Then, even if the labourer should prove to be dishonest—and dishonesty is a thing which I hope the Honourable Members will not support—and the labourer fails to or does not deliberately perform the contract he is not punished at once. The remedy open to the employer is to lodge a complaint before a Magistrate of Police specially empowered in this behalf, and the points necessary to be established before him are, (1) that the contract was voluntarily entered into, (2) that the labourer received an advance in cash (it may be noted here that old debts would not do), and (3) that the labourer failed to perform the contract without reasonable cause. Then if all these points are proved to the hilt, what does the Magistrate do? Does he send the labourer to jail to perform still harder labour? No. The labourer is ordered by the Magistrate to fulfil the term or task of his contract, and according to the Act his liability in the Criminal Court ends there except for the fact that even then if the labourer fails to fulfil the contract, he is liable to imprisonment extending up to three months, not for the breach of contract but for disobedience to the order of the Court, or, in other words, contempt of Court.

Now, Sir, this is the long and short of the whole thing. And these facts I have stated from my experience of tea gardens in Assam, where coolies—whether imported or local, but mainly imported from some other provinces of India—would always press their employers for renewal of their contracts after expiry of their old contracts, chiefly in consideration of the advances which ordinarily vary from Rs. 8 to Rs. 36. Then, if the employer, for some reason or other, refuses to put them under contracts (and there are many a refusal to be seen), the course such labourers would take is to go to another tea garden where the employer or the manager would put them under contracts by paying advances.

It may be asked with what object these coolies take the advances. The objects are manifold. Repayment of old debts with a view to redeem movables pledged, buying cattle for agricultural purposes, buying ornaments (which serves saving or hoarding of money for difficult times, for these labourers do not know banking), performing marriage ceremonies are the principal objects that may be mentioned.

I may here be permitted to state that fraud is very often practised by labourers in Assam tea gardens, for many of them run away from the garden after they have received the advances. These coolies, having had almost no properties except which they carry about them, the employers have no protection beyond the indirect punishment that may be awarded as stated above. If the Act is repealed, no employer will give advances, and the labourers themselves will be at a disadvantage.

Now, Sir, my humble submission in the aforesaid circumstances is, that the House, before coming to any decision on the Resolution put in by the Honourable Mover, may be pleased to ascertain by an inquiry or commission if the statement made by me above are correct or not, or whether the labourers themselves would like to have the Act repealed.

Secondly : As regards Sections 490 and 492 of the Indian Penal Code, there can be no justification to repeal them either. Naturally, the employers who spend so much money, in hundreds per head in the case of Assam garden coolies, should have some protection whenever the imported labour desert their services without just or reasonable cause.

Sir, at any rate, the Honourable the Mover has made out no case affecting the whole of India. No case of hardship on the score of this Act affecting the labourers of the tea gardens of Assam and Bengal can be shown authoritatively, and my submission is, that the Resolution is quite unwarranted as far as the tea gardens of Assam and Bengal are concerned. If some other parts of India are really affected by the Act and the provisions of Sections 490 and 492, let the local extent of the provisions of these laws be modified, leaving these tea gardens alone.

Mr. Muhammad Yamin Khan : Sir, I move that the question be now put.

Mr. N. M. Joshi : Sir, in view of the statement made by the Honourable the Home Member as regards the intentions of Government to the effect that they accept the principle of the repeal in the case of the Workmen's Breach of Contract Act, which may be done within 18 months, if possible within a shorter period, I do not wish to press my Resolution. As regards the second part of my Resolution, if Government are prepared to accept the general principle of the repeal, and take public opinion and introduce legislation within 18 months, I do not mind withdrawing my Resolution.

Mr. E. L. Price : Sir, I rise to a point of order. Do I understand that Mr. Joshi is striking a bargain with Sir William Vincent, and can we have no say in the matter?

The Honourable the President : The Honourable Member (Mr. Joshi) quite properly rose to answer the appeal of the Home Member. If I understood him aright he desires leave to withdraw : and, in the circumstances, I do not think that the Honourable Member from Karachi is entitled to complain.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : Sir, I have already explained what the views of the Government are on this matter. I must make it clear, however, that we have not given a definite undertaking to repeal these Acts within 18 months unless there is a general consensus of opinion that this is the proper course and I should have thought that Mr. Price could have had no objection to this proposal which involves consulting all those interested and which I put before the Assembly for the convenience of Members. The Honourable Mover has referred to Sections 490 and 492 of the Indian Penal Code. I am afraid, I omitted by an oversight to deal with them. I am not prepared to give any such undertaking regarding these two Sections which stand on a very different footing from Act XIII, but Government are prepared to invite public opinion on these enactments in order to ascertain whether their repeal is necessary or advisable. I am personally glad that Mr. Joshi proposes to withdraw his Resolution because it is getting very late and I think that this course will avoid a great waste of time.

The Honourable the President : Does the Honourable Member ask leave to withdraw?

Mr. N. M. Joshi : Yes, Sir, I ask leave to withdraw (Cries of 'No, No') unconditionally.

The Honourable the President : Order, order. The question is, that leave be given to the Honourable Member to withdraw his Resolution.

The Resolution was, by leave of the Assembly, withdrawn.

POSTPONEMENT OF THE DISCUSSION ON MR. SAMARTH'S RESOLUTION.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: There is another difficult Resolution* before the Chamber, Sir. I do not know if it will be convenient to you to postpone the discussion on it until some other occasion, instead of beginning it to-day. I have ascertained from the Mover that he is quite willing that the debate should be adjourned if I can guarantee him another Government date. In spite of the protest made to-day by Mr. Sohan Lal, I am quite prepared to give this undertaking. And, I hope, that on the date to be fixed, the Assembly will be given an opportunity of debating this important subject at greater length.

The Honourable the President: I understand that the proposal made by the Honourable the Home Member meets with the satisfaction of the Chamber and that on that account the Resolution No. 2* in the list of to-day's business will be postponed till a further occasion.

PROCEDURE FOR TAKING DIVISIONS.

The Honourable the President: I may say, in reference to the taking of a division, that a circular has already been issued to Members, drawing their attention to the fact that their names on the Division List are numbered exactly as are their names on the seating list, so that, if they will take the trouble to acquaint themselves with the numbers of their seats, they will see whether they pass through the Division Lobby early or late amongst those voting. That will save time. I observed to-day the division took sixteen minutes which I think is rather too long.

Mr. R. A. Spence: With reference to that, Sir, might I ask that seating cards be placed on our seats, so that the various numbers may be noted. It is very difficult to pick them out.

The Honourable the President: I understand that on the opening of the Session a card was placed on the desk in front of every Member's seat and in a corner of the card there was a number. If the number has been omitted by oversight, I shall make arrangements to see that the point raised by the Honourable Member from Bombay is met.

LEGISLATIVE BUSINESS.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: May I say a word, Sir. For the convenience of the Assembly and in order to avoid the criticism of my Honourable friend opposite, I want to make a statement of the legislative business which is likely to be introduced on the 15th of September.

The following Bills will probably be introduced, if they are ready by that time :

(i) A Bill to provide for the levy of customs duty on lac exported from British India ;

(ii) A Bill to consolidate and amend the law relating to income-tax and super-tax.

* Mr. Samarth's Resolution re the distinctions between Indians and non-Indians and their mode of trial.

The following Bills will probably be taken into consideration :

- (i) The Bill further to amend the Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881 ;
- (ii) The Bill further to amend the Indian Post Office Act, 1898 ;
- (iii) The Bill further to amend the Indian Marine Act, 1887 ;
- (iv) The Bill further to amend the Indian Works of Defence Act, 1908.

The Reports of Select Committees on the Maintenance Orders Enforcement Bill, and the Indian Penal Code (Amendment) Bill will be presented, if ready, and there may be a motion to introduce the Bill to repeal the Indian Press Act if we can get it ready in time.

The Bill further to amend the Land Acquisition Act, 1894, which was passed by the Council of State during the last Delhi Session and laid on the table in the Assembly, will be taken into consideration.

Mr. Harchandrai Vishindas: Might I inquire, Sir, whether Mr. Samarth's Resolution will be given an opportunity very early ?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: As early as I can possibly manage it.

The Honourable the President: With reference to the statement just made by the Honourable the Home Member I may perhaps ask him to speak to those of his Colleagues who are not present and who are in charge of legislation on the point raised by Mr. Rangachariar because there was a similar appeal two or three days ago.

This House now stands adjourned to the 15th September at 10-30 A.M.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

Thursday, 15th September, 1921.

The Assembly met in the Assembly Chamber at Half Past Ten of the Clock. The Honourable the President was in the Chair.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

LISTED POSTS IN THE INDIAN CIVIL SERVICE.

148. Rai G. C. Nag Bahadur : Will the Home Secretary inform the House whether the Government intends to take any action to give effect to the Resolution adopted in this Assembly on the 17th February 1921, recommending that the listed posts in the Indian Civil Service be raised to one-fourth of the superior Civil Service posts in each Presidency or Province? If so, when?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : The Government of India have drawn the attention of Local Governments to the Resolution referred to and have pressed them to consider whether the number of listed posts could not be raised at once to the maximum limit permissible under the present rules, viz., one-sixth of the superior posts in each Province. They have also suggested for the consideration of Local Governments that as new superior posts are created on the executive side, the number of listed posts should be increased until this number becomes equivalent to 25 per cent. of the total number of superior posts. The Honourable Member will, however, understand that the rate of progress towards the attainment of these limits must necessarily vary with the conditions of the Indian Civil Service cadre in each Province.

CIVIL SURGEONCIES IN ASSAM.

149. Rai G. C. Nag Bahadur : (a) With reference to the statement* made on the 14th March 1921, in answer to my Question No. 456, namely, that three appointments of Civil Surgeons are reserved for Military Assistant Surgeons and one appointment for Civil Assistant Surgeons, will the Home Secretary tell the House how many Civil Surgeoncies including officiating appointments are at present actually held by the Military and Civil Assistant Surgeons respectively in Assam?

(b) With reference to the following passage contained in the reply given to my Question† No. 457 on the 14th March, 'The recommendation of the Public Services Commission was that after satisfying existing vested interests no more than one-third of the superior appointments not reserved for officers of the Indian Medical Service should be allotted to promoted Military Assistant Surgeons,' will the Home Secretary please explain clearly what he means by this statement? How many superior posts are there in the medical service of Assam, and what proportion of them is reserved for the Indian Medical Service, and what for the Assistant Surgeons, Civil and Military?

(c) With reference to the following statement made in the answer to the same question, namely, 'it is doubtful whether these appointments (namely,

* Vide Legislative Assembly Debates, Vol. I, pages 983-84. † Vide Legislative Assembly Debates, page 984.

Civil Surgeoncies of certain Hill Districts) would be much sought after by Civil Assistant Surgeons, will the Home Secretary state for information of the House the nature of the evidence on which the statement is based? Has the Government come to this conclusion after ascertaining the views of the Civil Assistant Surgeons of Assam?

(d) Is it not a fact that during the war, the posts of Civil Surgeons in the Lushai Hills, the Garo Hills, the Naga Hills and the Sadiya Frontier Tract were actually held for a number of years by Civil Assistant Surgeons?

Mr. H. Sharp : (a) At present 3 permanent Civil Surgeoncies are held by Military Assistant Surgeons and 1 by a Civil Assistant Surgeon. One officiating Civil Surgeoncy is held by a Military Assistant Surgeon and 1 by a Civil Assistant Surgeon.

(b) The Honourable Member does not state which portion of the passage referred to by him is enigmatical. The words 'existing vested interests' no doubt apply to holders of existing appointments who cannot in fairness be removed from their posts or deprived of their prospects of higher posts. The reply was in answer to a Question regarding the recommendations of the Public Services Commission and quoted the terms of that recommendation. There are 16 superior posts in the medical service in Assam excluding the post of Director of the Pasteur Institute, Shillong, which is held by an officer of the Bacteriological Department. Of these, 11 are at present reserved for officers of the Indian Medical Service, 3 for Military Assistant Surgeons and 1 for a Civil Assistant Surgeon. The extent to which the employment of officers of the Indian Medical Service will be necessary in future under rule 12 of the Devolution Rules is at present under consideration as stated in the reply given by Mr. O'Donnell to Mr. S. Mudaliar's Question to which the Honourable Member was referred in Mr. O'Donnell's reply, dated the 14th March 1921.

Except so far as Local Governments may be required to employ Indian Medical Service officers under the rule above referred to, the recruitment of the medical services will now be regulated by them.

(c) The Government of Assam (that is to say, the Governor and Minister of Education) have informed the Government of India that though they are not in a position to say that Civil Assistant Surgeons would not accept life in such districts other than the Khasi and Jaintia Hills which, it is believed, are distasteful to Civil Assistant Surgeons. The Government of Assam further state that one drawback to posts in hill districts is the lack of educational facilities for the children of Civil Assistant Surgeons and the loneliness of the life for their wives. It is believed that most of them prefer to live and work in the plains districts where they and their families are better able to enjoy the amenities of life. The views of the Civil Assistant Surgeons were not sought for or obtained. The so-called statement was merely an expression of opinion.

EXPORT OF FOOD GRAINS FROM INDIA.

150. Rai Bahadur Pakshi Sohan Lal : Is there any proposal for consideration before the Government to stop export of food grains from India in view of the unprecedented high prices of the grains in all parts of India?

Mr. J. Hullah : The export of all food grains and flour is already under severe restrictions amounting to almost complete prohibition.

I would invite the Honourable Member's attention to this Government's communiqué of the 2nd September, in which it was said that the existing prohibition of the export of wheat and flour would continue in full force until at least the end of March 1922.

The export of barley, gram, maize, jowar, bajra and all kinds of dal is restricted even more severely than that of wheat and flour. As in the case of wheat and flour, export of these commodities is allowed only in definite quantities to certain countries most of which have large or considerable Indian populations.

No licenses may be granted for the export of any grain, pulse or flour to any European country, except for a very small quantity of broken rice from Burma.

Finally, I may say, that the total export of grain, pulse and flour from India during the last 12 months has been less than one fourth of the annual average exported before the war. More than half of the last Burma rice surplus was reserved for India, and imports of Burma rice into India during the last 12 months have been more than double the total exports of all food grains and flour from India. No further proposals for the restriction of exports are under consideration.

INSINUATIONS AGAINST A JUDGE OF THE CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

151. Mr. K. C. Neogy : (a) Has the attention of Government been drawn to certain articles that have appeared from time to time in the Press of Bengal, particularly in the Hitabadi, dated 16th July 1920, 27th May 1921, and 17th June 1921, in which certain insinuations have been made against a Judge of the Calcutta High Court in connection with the engagement of certain relatives of his as lawyers in cases tried by the said learned Judge?

(b) Have Government any information as to whether these articles have attracted the attention of the Chief Justice and Judges of the Calcutta High Court?

(c) If not, do Government propose to draw the attention of the learned Judges thereto and inquire whether any action has been or is proposed to be taken in the matter?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : (a) The Government of India have seen the articles referred to.

(b) No.

(c) The Government of India do not propose to take any action in the direction suggested.

COST OF OFFICERS IN THE IMPERIAL SERVICES.

152. Mr. K. C. Neogy : (a) What was the average annual cost per head of officers in the different Imperial Services, under (i) salary, (ii) pension, and (iii) allowances, etc., according to the scales in force on the following dates :

April 1, 1909, April 1, 1919, and April 1, 1921?

(b) What would have been the average annual cost per head in the case of these different Services, had the recommendations of the Public Services Commission (presided over by Lord Islington) in regard to salary, etc., been given effect to?

The Honourable Mr. W. M. Hailey: I regret that I cannot undertake to have these statistics worked out for the Honourable Member. He will admit that we always do our best to supply information as to facts within the cognizance of Government; but to require our officers (already hard put to it to answer in time the many questions asked of them) to work out a series of hypothetical figures would be to cast on them an unreasonable burden. I think that I may well ask the Honourable gentleman to exhibit greater consideration to our staff.

IMPERIAL SERVICES IN INDIA.

153. Mr. K. C. Neogy: Will Government be pleased to lay on the table all papers relating to proposals, that may be under consideration, for further improving the terms and conditions of the different Imperial Services in India?

The Honourable Mr. W. M. Hailey: The orders of the Secretary of State on the memorials of the Imperial Services as to their pay have already been published in the Resolutions of the Government of India No. D-449 in the Home Department, dated the 26th July 1921, and No. 1559-E.A. in the Finance Department, dated the 16th August 1921. Government do not propose to lay on the table any further papers.

MEMBERS OF THE CENTRAL LEGISLATURE WHOSE ELECTION HAS BEEN SET ASIDE.

154. Mr. K. C. Neogy: Will Government be pleased to make a statement giving, province by province, the names of Members of the present Central Legislature, whose election has been set aside upon election inquiries, together with a summary of the findings as given in each such case by the Election Commissioners?

The Honourable Dr. T. B. Saprú: The only Member of either Chamber of the Indian Legislature whose election has been set aside as the result of an election inquiry is Mr. Sambanda Mudaliar who was elected to the Legislative Assembly by the Salem and Coimbatore cum North Arcot (Non-Muhammadan Rural) Constituency. The Honourable Member is referred to the Gazette of India, Part I, dated the 28th May 1921, in which the Report of the Commissioners was published.

RETURN OF POLITICAL PRISONERS FROM THE ANDAMANS.

155. Mr. K. C. Neogy: With reference to the statement made by the Honourable Sir William Vincent in the Legislative Assembly on the 11th March 1921, that 'we have issued orders that all political prisoners shall be immediately returned from the Andamans,' will Government be pleased to state the date on which the said orders were issued, the number of political prisoners belonging to each province who were in the Andamans on the said date, and the different dates on which they were actually returned?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: On the 23rd November 1920 we asked Local Governments concerned if they would be willing to take back their political prisoners provided accommodation was available.

According to our information, there were then 46 in the Settlement of whom 2 belonged to Bombay, 13 to Bengal, 2 to the North-West Frontier Province; 5 to Burma and 24 to the Punjab. Of these, the Bombay prisoners left Port Blair on the 2nd May and the Bengal prisoners on the 28th July. The transfer of the Punjab prisoners is being arranged by the Chief Commissioner and the Local Government in direct communication. We understand that so far 19 of them have been transferred to Madras. Orders have been issued for the return of the 2 men from the North-West Frontier Province. The Burma political prisoners are self-supporters and one at least has married locally. They will be sent back if they wish to go.

VALUE OF SURPLUS STORES.

156. Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: (a) What is the total face value of the surplus stores which the Government had for disposal on the completion of the war?

(b) How much has been sold and how much yet remains to be sold?

(c) Are the stores offered for sale as the property of the British Government or as belonging to the Government of India?

(d) If the former, is it a fact that the British Government has debited the Government of India with the face value of the surplus stores?

(e) Is it a fact that in many cases on such sale these stores realise only a fraction of their face value?

(f) What has been the loss to the Government of India from these sales?

(g) Has any representation been made to the British Cabinet against debiting the Indian Government with the face value of the surplus stores?

Sir Godfrey Fell: A comparatively insignificant quantity of stores belonging to the Indian Government has, since the Afghan operations, been discovered to be surplus to requirements. Their sale is now proceeding, and up to the end of last July about four lakhs have been realized by the sales organisation. This sum, less 3½ per cent. commission, on sale will of course be credited to Indian revenues.

It is not possible to compute the original face value of these Indian surpluses. Nor can the loss, if any, incurred by selling them below their face value be computed. As a whole, however, such stores cannot be expected to fetch second hand as much as they originally cost.

2. The Honourable Member's question is, however, understood to refer to the great bulk of surplus stores remaining in India at the end of the Great War, which were accumulated on behalf of the British Government, and are the property of that Government. These stores are now being disposed of by a special Commissioner sent by the British Government to India for that purpose. It is not a fact that India has been debited with the face value of these surplus stores, excepting such as India has actually consumed or has retained for her normal consumption; and India has suffered no loss from the causes suggested.

In view of the foregoing statement of fact, the remaining portions of the question do not require an answer.

PREPARATION OF COST ACCOUNTS.

157. Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: (a) Is it true that a firm of Chartered Accountants has been requisitioned from Great Britain to assist the Government of India in the matter of cost accounts?

(b) What are the terms of their remuneration, what is the period of work for which they have been requisitioned and what is the total estimate of the expenditure on them?

(c) Are there none in the Indian Civil or Military Accounts Departments competent to do the above work?

(d) Is not work of similar nature being done at present in the Railway Accounts Office by the Government Staff?

(e) Did the Government consider the desirability of sending a few men of experience and marked capacity in the Civil and Military Accounts Service for special training to England instead of importing new men from England for a short period?

The Honourable Mr. W. M. Hailey: (a) The answer is in the affirmative. The information is contained in the reply laid on the table.

(b) The Honourable Member is referred to the answer given on 10th September 1921 in reply to a Question by Mr. Neogy on the same subject.

(c) We have no officers in the Indian Civil or Military Accounts Service capable of giving us the expert advice we require from this firm.

(d) Work of somewhat similar nature, but of a far more simple character, is being done in the Railway Accounts Offices.

(e) It was considered whether it would be preferable to send selected officers for special training in England. In general, the Government of India have expressed themselves as favouring this procedure instead of importing specialists from England. In this case, however, the Auditor General considered and the Government of India concurred that the matter was both urgent and important, and that no officer of the Department studying at Home for a few months could offer advice which would compare in value with that now being obtained from the firm who have undertaken this investigation.

DEATHS OF PASSENGERS IN TRAINS.

158. Rai Sahib Lakshmi Narayan Lal: (a) Will the Government be pleased to state how many deaths of passengers in trains have been reported during the last hot weather?

(b) How many of them are third class passengers? What causes have been reported for their deaths?

(c) Is it a fact that many of these deaths are on account of the want of proper arrangement for drinking water for third class passengers?

(d) Is it a fact that although water pipes have been provided in the trains, they seldom supply water and even when they supply water, it is considered objectionable to be used for drinking purposes as the pipes have been placed in the privies?

(e) Does not the Government propose to make adequate arrangement for drinking water for passengers in the train itself by providing water pipes outside the privies?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: The information asked for in items (a), (b) and (c) is not available.

(d) The water supplied in railway carriages is intended to be used for washing, and not for drinking purposes.

(e) The necessity for the provision of an ample supply of drinking water for passengers is fully realised and railways arrange for this supply by means of watermen specially appointed for the purpose. Standpipes are also provided on railway station platforms. The question of providing a supply of drinking water for passengers by means of pipes fitted in railway carriages has received consideration but is considered impracticable.

DISBANDMENT OF THE 2ND-73RD MALABAR INFANTRY.

159. Mr. K. M. Nayar: (i) Is it a fact that the authorities are considering the disbandment of the 2nd-73rd Malabar Infantry?

(ii) Is the Government aware of the great anxiety and heart-burning which the news has caused in Kerala and to all her well-wishers?

(iii) Is it not a fact that the above regiment is the only one of its kind set apart for the Malayalese?

(iv) Is it not a fact that the above regiment is the outcome of great exertions, at the outbreak of the late war, on the part of those interested in the revival of the old martial spirit, among Malayalese?

(v) Is it not a fact that the above regiment has elicited praises and compliments from officers who have had to work with the regiment?

(vi) Do the Government propose to consider the question and order the retention of the regiment, or if already too late, the rectification of any serious blunder in this matter?

Sir Godfrey Fell: (i) Orders for the disbandment of the 2-73rd Malabar Infantry issued on the 5th July 1921.

(ii) Government are aware that the decision to disband any Indian regiment must inevitably cause a feeling of regret in the district from which the regiment was raised; but owing to the reductions which are being made in the Indian Army, the disbandment of units which are surplus to India's requirements must be carried out.

(iii) Yes, the 2-73rd Infantry is the only unit in the Indian Army for which Malayalese were authorised.

(iv) The Government of India have no doubt that considerable efforts were made to raise this regiment and these efforts are fully appreciated.

(v) The Government of India regret that it is not the case that the battalion fully justified the hopes that may have been entertained regarding the revival of the martial spirit amongst the class of which the battalion was formed. It was considered unfit for service in Mesopotamia and had therefore to be returned to India.

(vi) The Government of India regret that they cannot reconsider the decision to disband the battalion.

RECOMMENDATIONS OF THE INDIAN JAILS COMMITTEE.

160. Mr. B. S. Kamat: (a) With reference to the Report of the Indian Jails Committee, 1920, will Government be pleased to state if any action has been taken or is proposed to be taken in the matter of the following recommendations of the Committee, viz. :

- (1) Paragraph 121 of the Report, classification of non-habitual prisoners into (a) a Star class and (b) Ordinary class, the Star class to have special treatment in respect of sleeping accommodation, parade and labour.
- (2) Paragraph 130, recommendation to divide simple imprisonment into two kinds, (a) without liability to any labour, and (b) with liability to light labour.
- (3) Paragraph 132, recommendation that no special treatment be granted to political offenders (such as is allowed in Great Britain to offenders in the first Division in respect of separate accommodation, supply of one's own food, clothing, etc.).
- (4) Paragraphs 272 and 273. Provision of compulsory education, books, and periodicals or manual instruction for prisoners under 25 years of age.
- (5) Paragraph 303, recommendation that a prisoner appearing in a Court as a witness should be in ordinary clothes, without fetters.
- (6) Paragraphs 369, 370, recommendation for creation of children's courts for hearing of all cases against children and young persons?
- (7) Paragraph 454, recommendation for the creation of Revising Boards composed of the Inspector-General of Prisons, the Sessions Judge, and a non-official to consider the release of prisoners in advance of their terms of imprisonment.
- (8) Paragraphs 279, 280, recommendation for providing Hindoo, Muhammadan, Buddhist or Christian Ministers of religion for the religious and moral instruction of prisoners.
- (9) Paragraph 290, as much variety as possible in jail diet.
- (10) Paragraphs 472 to 486, better treatment for undertrial prisoners in respect of accommodation, food, clothes, supply of books, tobacco, etc.
- (11) Abolition of solitary confinement in jails; and abolition of transportation from the Indian Penal Code.

(b) Do Government intend to place the Indian Jails Committee's Report for discussion before the Legislative Assembly in the present Session?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: (a) I lay on the table copies of the letters issued to Local Governments on the subject of the recommendations of the Jails Committee. The Honourable Member will be able to ascertain from these letters the action taken on the points to which he particularly refers. The recommendations in paragraph 369 for the creation of children's courts are still under the consideration of Government.

It has been decided to abolish the punishment of transportation, and legislation to effect this decision will be introduced as early as possible.

(b) Copies of the Report were placed in the hands of the Members of this Assembly in the course of the last Delhi Session and it is open to them to ascertain by questions what action the Government propose to take on any point or to indicate by the adoption of Resolutions the opinion of the Assembly on any of the Committee's recommendations or the Government's proposals. The Honourable Member will perhaps agree that a general discussion of a report like that of the Jails Committee, with its multifarious recommendations, is not likely to be profitable. If, however, I can give the Honourable Member any further information which he requires, and he will ask for it, I shall be only too glad to assist him.

 The Honourable the Chief Commissioner and Agent to the Governor General North-West Frontier Province.
 The Chief Commissioner of Coorg.
 The Chief Commissioner of Delhi.

I am directed to forward, for the information of His Excellency the Governor in Council His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor (in Council), etc.

advance copies of the report of the Indian Jails Committee of 1919-20. As it has not yet been decided whether the report is to be published or not, I am to request that it may for the present be treated as strictly confidential and shown only to such selected officials as the Governor in Council may decide to consult on the subjects discussed in this and subsequent letters.

2. The report forms the first general survey of Indian prison administration that has been made since 1889. During the 30 years that have elapsed since that date, there have been important developments both in the theory and practice of prison administration and extensive reforms have been carried out in India as in other countries. In certain respects the improvement effected has been particularly marked, for example, in buildings, in the dietary of prisoners, in the regulation of their labour, in the system of remissions and especially in the sanitation of prisons. At the same time, the Committee have reached the conclusion that Indian prison administration has not made equal progress on the reformative side of its work. It has, to some extent, possibly not realised the effect which humanising and civilizing methods have on the mind of the individual prisoner and has rather focussed its attention on his material well-being, his diet, health and labour, with the result that Indian prison treatment has been criticised as deterrent rather than reformatory in its results. The Government of India feel that the time has come when a serious effort should be made to remedy this defect in our prison administration, and they consider that the report now enclosed, which by reason of the composition of the Committee, its searching investigations and its carefully formulated conclusions, is a document which carries great weight, forms an admirable foundation for such a policy. The responsibility for carrying out that policy must rest in the main on local Governments. Under the reforms scheme, prison administration will be a provincial subject and, in view of this, the Government of India are about to address Local Governments in a separate communication on the question whether the Governor General in Council should retain or should delegate the statutory powers of control which he now exercises under Act IX of 1894. But, whatever may be the decision on that question, Local Governments will have to provide funds for, and carry out such measures of reform as may be approved, and though some of these measures may have to be postponed for some time for financial reasons, it is desirable that a decision on all the more important matters discussed in the Committee's report should be arrived at as soon as possible.

3. The Government of India have carefully considered what would be the most convenient procedure for attaining this object and have decided that the best course will be to address Local Governments in a series of five or six letters, each of which will discuss a group of chapters in the report dealing with subjects of a more or less cognate nature. The present letter relates to the recommendations of the Committee contained in Chapters III (General propositions), IV (Inspection and superintendence of prisoners), V (Prison establishment), VI (Convict officers), XVIII (Visitors) and XX (Subsidiary Jails). These chapters will be discussed seriatim and the discussion of each will, where necessary, be divided into two parts :

- (a) matters in regard to which the Government of India feel themselves to be now in a position to issue directions or offer advice ; and
- (b) matters in regard to which the Government of India will be glad to have the opinions or advice of Local Governments. The latter sub-division will necessarily include such of the proposals of the Committee as would involve legislation.

Chapter III.

4. The Governor General in Council presumes that all Local Governments will agree with the general propositions regarding the aims and essentials of prison administration laid down in this chapter. Most of these propositions are now accepted by the general consent of penologists throughout the world. None of them are inconsistent with the policy at present regulating prison administration in this country, though in certain respects—for example, in the provision of reformatory influences in prisons and of assistance to prisoners on release—practice has hitherto not kept pace with theory. The practical measures required to give effect to these general propositions will form the subject of this and subsequent letters and the Government of India feel that in the circumstances a detailed discussion of the contents of Chapter III at this stage would serve no useful purpose.

Chapter IV.

5. The Government of India accept the view of the Committee (paragraph 27) that the concentration of prisoners in central jails is, as a matter of principle, desirable on grounds both of efficiency and economy. They also agree with the Committee (paragraph 26) that theoretically the number of prisoners to be placed under the charge of a single Superintendent should, where possible, be restricted to a thousand, though for the present the maximum accommodation to be provided in any one jail cannot for practical reasons be fixed at less than 1,500. The latter figure is, however, as pointed out in a subsequent paragraph of the report (Chapter XII, Section V), exceeded in the case of several of the existing central jails in provinces where overcrowding is rife, and the Government of India think that, where this has not already been done, Local Governments should draw up a carefully considered programme of jail construction, to be spread, if necessary, over a number of years, the object being to concentrate all prisoners so far as possible in central jails and to dispense with the smaller district jails, the cost of which is relatively high and where discipline is apt to be lax. In provinces where the figures show that one or more new central jails are required, sites for such jails should be selected at once, and financial provision should be made for their construction as soon as circumstances permit. The Government of India also accept the view of the Committee (paragraph 29) that there is no object in retaining the existing distinction between first and second class central jails and that every central jail should, as a matter of principle, be provided with a whole-time Superintendent. They also agree that there should be a whole-time Superintendent for all district jails of an average population of 300 or more (paragraph 33), though they recognise that some time must elapse before a sufficient number of trained Superintendents can be available, and that in the interval the only practicable course will be to retain the present system under which the charge of the district jail is part of the duties of the Civil Surgeon. Where eventually the whole-time Superintendent is not a medical man, the medical charge of the jail must be entrusted to the Civil Surgeon or to one of his headquarter assistants, as recommended in paragraph 38. It does not seem likely that, as suggested in paragraph 40, one result of the reforms will be to relieve the Civil Surgeon of the responsibility for medical institutions belonging to local bodies.

6. The Government of India think all Local Governments will probably accept without cavil the recommendation contained in paragraph 34 that picked men of the jailor service should be eligible for promotion to the rank of Superintendent of a district jail. They agree with the Committee (paragraph 35) that such promotion would be more suitable than the appointment of jailors as Deputy Superintendents in charge of the manufacturing departments of the larger central jails. With regard to the suggestion made in paragraph 36 of the report that recruitment to the rank of Superintendent should occasionally be made from other departments, this is a matter which the Government of India leave to the discretion of Local Governments. They suggest, however, that in provinces where such promotion would be suitable, the Local Government should define in a rule made under Section 60 (c) of Act IX of 1894 the classes of officials to be considered eligible for such promotion.

7. In paragraphs 41-43 the Committee have discussed at some length the question whether the executive and medical charge of a central jail should be combined in the person of a single officer, as at present, and have come to the conclusion that the existing system of recruiting Superintendents of central jails from the Indian Medical Service and of giving them combined executive and medical charge has been successful and should on grounds of economy be continued. At the same time they think that a fair proportion of posts of Superintendents of central jails should be reserved for selected officers, whether medical or non-medical, who have done good service as Superintendents of district jails. These proposals are accepted by the Governor General in Council, subject to any decision that may be arrived at regarding the general reorganisation of the State medical services. The percentage of posts to be filled by selected Superintendents of district jails must be fixed for each province by the Local Government. In paragraph 45 the Committee have recommended that with a view to securing uniformity in important matters of jail administration, there should be held in every alternate year a conference of Inspectors-General of Prisons, to which selected jail Superintendents and non-officials interested in jail administration might be invited. The Government of India entirely agree with this proposal and consider that it is on many grounds preferable to the appointment of a Director-General of Prisons under the Government of India, who would visit all provinces and advise Local Governments. They hope, if possible, to hold the first Conference during the winter of 1921-22 and it would be of great assistance if Local Governments would, by the end of June 1921, submit a list of subjects suitable for discussion at the first Conference.

8. There remain a few recommendations made in Chapter IV on which the Government of India would be glad to have the opinions of Local Governments. These are :

- (a) the rate of pay recommended (Rs. 500—25—750) for whole-time Superintendents of district jails,—paragraph 37 ;
- (b) the allowances suggested in paragraph 38 for the medical charge of a district jail when entrusted to the Civil Surgeon ;
- (c) the allowance of Rs. 200 a month proposed in the same paragraph when both the administrative and medical charges of a district jail are entrusted to the Civil Surgeon ;
- (d) the proposal in paragraph 44 that the post of Inspector-General of Prisons should be thrown open to all Superintendents of central jails, whether medical or non-medical, Indian Medical Service or non-Indian Medical Service. This is a question in regard to which the Government of India feel some doubt. One of the most important functions of an Inspector-General is to give advice and guidance to Superintendents on matters connected with health, dietary and sanitation, and for the proper discharge of this duty expert medical knowledge would seem to be an indispensable qualification. If the Inspector-General is not himself a medical man, it might be necessary to provide him with an expert medical adviser. Such an arrangement would obviously be more expensive than the appointment of a medical man as Inspector-General.
- (e) In paragraph 46, the suggestion is made that before any person who has not had previous service in the Jail Department, is appointed as a whole-time Superintendent of a district or central jail, he should undergo a period of 6 months' training under a selected Superintendent of a central jail. The Government of India are inclined to approve this recommendation in principle, but are not certain that it will be at all times practicable. Before coming to a definite decision on the question, they would be glad to have the views of Local Governments.

- (f) The same remarks apply to the suggestion made in paragraph 47 that the rules relating to study leave should be so extended as to enable Superintendents of district or central jails to devote some period of their leave to a study of jails and connected questions in Europe or the United States of America.

Chapter V.

9. The recommendations regarding prison establishments contained in this chapter all concern points on which local Governments are competent to pass orders, either in exercise of the power of appointing prison officers vested in them by section 6 of the Act of 1894, or by means of rules under section 60 of that Act, or by executive orders. The Government of India do not, therefore, think it necessary to discuss in detail these recommendations of the Committee, with which they generally agree, but they desire to emphasize certain points which seem to them of special importance.

These are—

- (a) the necessity for granting better pay and gazetted rank to jailors and relieving them, as far as possible, of clerical work (paragraphs 52 and 54). The minimum rate of pay (Rs. 200 rising to Rs. 450 per mensem) suggested by the Committee is substantially higher than those in force at present, though in at least one province temporary allowances have been granted in addition to salaries, pending a consideration of the Jails Committee's recommendations. It must be left to local Governments to fix such rates of pay as they think necessary to secure men of the right stamp and education and to prevent corruption. But the Governor General in Council considers that a contented service is an essential preliminary to the general reform of our prison system;
- (b) on the same grounds, the Government of India endorse the recommendations contained in paragraphs 62-64 regarding the necessity for increasing the attractions of service as a warder. As the Committee have pointed out, these subordinates possess great potentialities for exercising a good or evil influence over the men committed to their charge, and the Government of India agree that in order to secure honest and contented service, their pay should be distinctly better than that given to police constables and that family quarters should be provided on a more generous scale. They also endorse the proposal for the appointment of a chief warder in every central jail (paragraph 66), and they hope that those local Governments whose jails are at present admittedly under-staffed will take early steps to bring the strength of their warder establishments up to the necessary level (paragraphs 68 and 69);
- (c) as regards the subordinate medical staff, the Government of India are of opinion that good reasons have been given in paragraph 73 of the report for adopting the Madras system of selecting sub-assistant surgeons for jail work on the basis of a regular roster, on which every sub-assistant surgeon's name is entered. The only possible objection to this proposal which occurs to them is that it might have the result of supplying to the Jail Department only junior sub-assistant surgeons, as in all probability most men of this class would desire to serve their term in the Department at as early a stage in their service as possible. This difficulty could doubtless be overcome by suitable arrangements between the Surgeon-General or Inspector-General of Civil Hospitals and the Inspector-General of Prisons; while if the jail allowances given to medical subordinates are increased as recommended in paragraph 74, service in the department should be more popular than it is at present and should, therefore, attract a certain proportion of senior sub-assistant surgeons;
- (d) the recommendation contained in paragraph 80 for the appointment of a technical expert to manage the manufacturing department of each jail in which any large organised industry is carried on, appears to the Government of India to be a sound one. Such experts will probably require high salaries, but if suitable men can be secured, the revenue accruing to Government should ultimately more than counterbalance this expenditure. It is possible that in certain provinces Directors of Industries may now be in a position to recommend men of sufficient technical skill to fill these appointments and also that of the technical assistant to the Inspector-General proposed in paragraph 82.

Chapter VI.

10. In this chapter the Committee have made drastic recommendations for changes in the existing system of employing convicts as prison officers. They admit that among those who gave evidence before them opinions were sharply divided as to the intrinsic merits of this system and the Committee themselves were not in complete agreement on the question. One member was indeed in favour of abolishing the system altogether and even the chairman considered that its abolition was in principle desirable, though he felt that the recommendations of the Committee, if carried out, would effect an advance that might be regarded as sufficient for the present.

11. The Government of India have taken the opportunity of examining the latest figures available showing the extent to which convicts are employed as prison officers in each of the larger provinces. The percentage of the total average number of male prisoners of all classes (convicted, under-trial and civil) employed as prison officers was as follows: Burma 22, the Punjab 12, Bombay 10, United Provinces 9, Central Provinces 8, Madras 7, Bengal 6 and Bihar and Orissa 4. The figures for Burma are for the year 1918 and for other Provinces 1919. The corresponding percentages for 1913 were slightly higher in Madras, the Punjab and Bihar and Orissa, and lower in Burma. In other Provinces they were the same. These figures appear to the Government of India to support the main conclusions of the Committee, viz., that the system of employing convict officers has degenerated in some parts of India into a mere means of effecting an economy in the pay of establishments, and that the extent of such employment is excessive and should be reduced. The Committee cite the case of the United Provinces, where both the present and past Inspectors-General of Prisons agreed with the second of these propositions, but the figures just quoted show that there are three provinces to which the Committee's remarks apply with even greater force than to the United Provinces. At the same time the Government of India are not in favour of the complete abolition of the system, which they consider must, with proper safeguards and under adequate supervision, have a valuable reformatory influence. They are, however, inclined to think that in each province a maximum number of convicts to be employed as prison officers should be fixed by the local Government and that this maximum should be distributed over the jails of the province by the Inspector-General in proportion to the daily average population of each jail. What the total provincial maximum should be must to course depend on local circumstances, and especially on the pace at which recruitment to the free warder establishment may proceed, but the Governor General in Council suggests that in no province should the maximum exceed 10 per cent. of the total average daily population. I am directed to ask for the opinions of local Governments on this proposal.

12. The employment of convict officers is one of the subjects in regard to which the rule-making power is at present vested in local Governments, subject to the control of the Governor General in Council, under section 60 (m) of the Act of 1894, but inasmuch as the Committee have recommended that in many respects the system should be uniform throughout India, it is desirable that the Governor General in Council should in the exercise of his statutory power of control lay down certain general directions in regard to these matters. Before this is done, the Government of India desire to be favoured with the views of local Governments on the more important recommendations of the Committee summarised below:

- (a) Convict officers should not be employed on the duty of guarding prisoners in cells and dormitories at night and no convict officer should be outside his barracks at night (paragraph 86). This is a far-reaching proposal, which will necessarily mean a substantial reduction of the number of convict officers and an increase in the staff of free warders. Nevertheless, the Government of India are disposed to think that, subject to any objections on the part of local Governments, it should be accepted.
- (b) No convict officer should have independent charge of any file, gang or other body of prisoners or should have independent power to issue orders to prisoners (paragraph 87). It seems doubtful whether this general prohibition would not in certain cases lead to practical difficulties and there would not seem to be any insuperable objection to permitting a convict officer to take temporary charge of a small gang of prisoners engaged on, say, fatigue duty inside the main wall.

- (c) The proposed abolition of the grade of convict warder (paragraph 88).
 (d) The proposed scale of remissions and gratuities for convict officers (paragraph 90).
 At present the remissions for such officers are :
 for convict warders eight days per month, for convict overseers six days per month, and for night watchmen four days per month.

[Vide rule 7 of Appendix I to the Home Department Resolution No. 161—172 (Jails), dated the 25th June 1908.]

The Committee propose to raise this scale in the case of watchmen by one day per month and to retain it in the case of convict overseers. The Government of India think that for overseers also the scale might well be raised by one day per month.

- (e) The proposal to abolish everywhere and at once the system whereby first offenders are employed as night watchmen in habitual barracks (paragraph 92), and the consequent recommendation that the employment of habituals in that capacity, but not as overseers, in habitual barracks, should be sanctioned. The Government of India trust that all Local Governments will accept this recommendation, which is indeed the corollary of the general principle that habitual and casual offenders should be completely segregated. You will be addressed in a separate letter regarding the proposal, made elsewhere in the report, that all habituals should be confined in cellular jails. Should effect be given to that proposal, it would be possible greatly to reduce the number of night watchmen.
 (f) The proposal that convict officers should be exempted from the liability to wear ankle-rings and fetters (paragraph 93).

Chapter XVIII.

13. The Governor General in Council concurs with the commendation bestowed by the Committee on the Indian system of appointing official and non-official visitors with wide but undefined powers of inspection and supervision, as superior to the system followed in other countries of appointing visitors with definite powers and duties who tend to become more or less identified with the prison administration. He also agrees that the Indian system should be extended and improved with the object of creating in the public mind an interest in prisons and prisoners. There are already signs of an awakening interest among the educated classes in these questions. A large number of non-official gentlemen gave evidence before the Committee, and it is probable that the publication of their evidence and the report will stimulate public interest in prison administration.

The appointment of visitors is, however, a matter in regard to which the power of making rules is vested in the Local Government under Section 60 (r) of the Act, and the Governor General in Council does not think it necessary in this instance to exercise his power of control in regard to such rules. He is content to leave it to Local Governments to make such amendments in their rules as they may consider calculated to give effect to the recommendations of the Committee, but he trusts that all Local Governments will give careful consideration to the specific proposals made in paragraphs 518 to 522, first, for the adoption of the Bombay method of a weekly inspection by an individual visitor and a quarterly inspection by the whole board of visitors; secondly, for the assimilation of the powers and duties of official and non-official visitors; and, thirdly, for the appointment of lady visitors for all jails where female prisoners are kept.

Chapter XX.

14. This chapter also deals with matters regarding which Local Governments are competent to make rules under Section 60 (s) of the Act, but the recommendations of the Committee include two proposals of general application and of such importance that it is desirable that the Government of India should make a definite pronouncement in regard to them. In paragraph 534, the Committee observe that in most provinces it is a common practice to confine under-trial prisoners in magisterial and police lock-ups which are not classed as subsidiary jails and where the prisoners are practically, if not theoretically, under police control. This practice violates the accepted principle that under-trial prisoners should not be left in the hands of the police longer than is absolutely necessary, and the Committee accordingly propose that all lock-ups used for the detention of such prisoners should be notified as subsidiary jails and that the prisoners detained in them should be guarded by a regular staff of warders and not by the police. The Government of India entirely agree with the principle underlying this proposal, but they recognize that its acceptance would commit Local Governments to some increase in expenditure and might conceivably lead in certain localities to practical difficulties which were not brought to the notice of the Committee. They trust, however, that Local Governments will give effect to the proposal as soon and as widely as circumstances permit.

Again in paragraph 541, the Committee recommend that, assuming that in future no sentence of imprisonment will be for less than 28 days, no convicted prisoners should serve their sentences in subsidiary jails. You will be addressed in a separate letter on the proposal to abolish short term sentences of imprisonment, but I am to enquire whether, if legislative

His Excellency the Governor in Council
His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor (in Council) would be prepared etc.
 to accept the Committee's recommendation regarding the use to which subsidiary jails should in that event be put.

15. The Government of India concur with the Committee (paragraph 544) regarding the desirability of appointing visitors for the larger subsidiary jails.

With reference to paragraph 2 of my letter No. 305, dated the 16th December 1920, I am directed to address you on the question of the delegation by the Governor General in Council to Local Governments of all or any of the powers conferred upon him by the Prisons Act, 1894. Under Section 59 of that Act the Governor General in Council and Local Governments have concurrent powers to make rules on certain subjects, but rules so made by Local Governments require the previous sanction of the Governor General in Council. Under Section 60 rules made by Local Governments on certain other matters are subject to the control of the Governor General in Council. In addition there are references in Section 46 (4), (6) and (7) to rules made by the Governor General in Council, while under the proviso to Section 6 the Government of Bombay has to obtain the previous sanction of the Governor General in Council to an order declaring that the offices of jailor and superintendent in any specified prison shall be held by one and the same person.

2. The intention of the Government of India was at one time so to amend the Act that the only function under it to be discharged by the Governor General in Council would have been that specified in the existing Section 59 (8), viz., the making of rules regulating the transfer from one part of British India to another of prisoners whose terms of transportation or imprisonment is about to expire. This proposal was in conformity with the policy of relaxing the statutory control of the Government of India over provincial subjects which took legislative shape in the Devolution Act, 1910, passed at the last session of the Indian Legislative Council. Had the Prisons Act then been amended, the only statutory control which the Government of India would have retained over prison administration would have been the general power of superintendence, direction and control over local Governments vested in the Governor General in Council by section 45 of the Government of India Act. It is very doubtful how far this power could have been exercised legitimately merely in order to secure uniformity in the prison administration of all provinces.

3. In consequence, however, of a letter from the Indian Jails Committee, No. 810, dated the 4th of September 1920, a copy of which is enclosed, the Government of India decided to omit all reference to the Act of 1894 from the Devolution Act, and to consult local Governments on the question whether any delegation is desirable, or whether it is preferable to retain the Act substantially in its present form, as proposed by the Committee.

4. The views of the Committee are entitled to great respect and the Government of India think that there is much force in their conclusions, (a) that if important variations in practice are allowed in regard to such questions as the remission of sentences and prison offences and punishments, the effect of judicial sentences will be substantially different in the different provinces; and (b) that on certain matters of principle in prison administration uniformity throughout India is essential, and can only be secured by means of a central controlling authority. In regard to the latter point, it must not be overlooked that in the future the Government of India may have to meet criticism on questions of jail administration both in the Legislative Chambers and elsewhere, and on this and on other grounds the Governor General in Council is inclined to think that the retention by him of some, at any rate, of the controlling powers conferred by the Act of 1894 would be generally acceptable to Indian public opinion.

5. There are, moreover, two other considerations which point to the same conclusion. In the first place, the Governor General in Council is clearly the only authority who can make rules for the purpose specified in the existing section 59 (8) and he must, in any event, retain adequate powers of direction and control over the prisons in the Andamans which are directly under the Government of India. Secondly, it is probable that the consideration by the Government of India and by local Governments of the Jail Committee's report will result in a thorough overhauling of our prison system and the initiation of important measures of reform. It is obviously the duty of the Government of India to lay down the general lines on which such reforms should proceed. Prisons have in fact been declared to be subject to legislation by the Indian Legislature in the rules approved by the Joint Committee, with the express object of enabling the central Government to regulate the general principles of jail administration. It will, however, handicap the Government of India in discharging that duty effectively if at this juncture they divest themselves of their statutory power of controlling the action of local Governments.

6. The Government of India are therefore disposed to take the view that it will be better for them to retain, for some years to come, both their own rule-making power and the power of control over rules made by local Governments under section 60. Those Governments will probably agree that the powers in question have not in the past been exercised in the direction of excessive or meticulous interference, that due consideration has been paid to the views of local Governments and that there has been no unreasonable insistence on uniformity. Section 60, for example, deals with many matters of minor importance, in regard to which the Government of India do not in practice exercise control, e.g., the food, bedding and clothing of prisoners, the preparation and maintenance of history tickets, the appointment of visitors, etc. There are, however, other matters, such as the classification of prisons, the regulation of prison labour, the appointment of convict officers and the classification and separation of prisoners, in regard to which rules framed or approved by the Government of India are at present in force in all provinces. On all these and on other matters uniformity throughout India is, in the opinion of the Jails Committee, essential and in certain respects the existing rules require amendment. There is much to be said in favour of amendment by a central co-ordinating authority.

7. Assuming that the powers conferred by sections 59 and 60 are to be retained, the amendment of the Act in minor details (such as the removal of the control of the Governor General in Council over rules made by local Governments under certain of the less important sub-sections of section 60) seems scarcely necessary.

(So far as the Government of India are aware, no reference has for many years been made to them under the proviso to section 6. I am to enquire whether, in the opinion of His Excellency the Governor in Council, its retention in the Act is likely to cause any practical inconvenience.)

8. I am directed to enquire whether His Excellency the Governor in Council agrees in these views, or whether he has any alternative proposals to put forward,

In continuation of my letter No. 305, dated the 16th December 1920, I am directed to address you on the subjects discussed in Chapters VII (Classification and Separation of Prisoners) and VIII (Separation at Night) of the Indian Jails Committee's report.

2. The most important proposal made in the first section of Chapter VII is that separate jails should be provided for habitual prisoners, on the ground that it is difficult, if not impossible, to comply with the existing orders requiring the segregation of habituals from non-habituals so long as both classes are confined in the same jails. The Committee regard this as "one of the most important reforms yet to be introduced into Indian prison management" (paragraph 98), and think there should be little difficulty in most provinces in setting aside at once one or more jails for the accommodation of habituals only.

The Government of India agree that this would be a great advance in our prison system, and by minimising the risk of the contamination of first offenders by hardened criminals, would do much to remove the reproach often directed against Indian jails that they tend to harden, if not to degrade, and that most men come out of prison worse than they went in (compare Chapter II, paragraph 14 of report). The Government of India would, therefore, be obliged if all Local Governments would give the proposal their early and detailed consideration and would report to what extent effect can be given to it, both immediately and in the future when new jails have been constructed.

3. In paragraphs 99-110 the Committee discuss certain defects in the existing definition of the term "habitual" and suggest a fresh definition. It may here be remarked that the Committee are not quite accurate in referring in paragraphs 99 and 102 to a revised form of the definition as having been circulated to all Local Governments with the Home Department letter No. 53-61, dated the 22nd February 1910. What was then circulated was not a revised form of the original definition of 1886, but an extract of certain rules from the Bombay Jail Manual, which were presumably made by the Bombay Government under Section 60 (j) of the Prisons Act, 1894. For facility of comparison the complete original definition contained in the Government of India Resolution No. 27-1804-14, dated the 14th December 1886, is reproduced as an appendix to this letter. The principal differences between the old and proposed definitions are:

- (i) under the old rule a prisoner could be classified as habitual, either on account of one or more previous convictions for certain specified offences, or because the court believed from the circumstances of the case, that he depended on crime for a livelihood, or had attained a certain eminence in crime. Under the proposed rule two conditions must be satisfied. There must be a previous conviction or convictions for certain offences (except in the case of persons confined in default of security under Section 123, read with Section 110 of the Code of Criminal Procedure), and the court must be satisfied that the prisoner is by habit a person who commits certain specified offences. In short, the main object of the new definition, as explained in paragraph 108 of the report, is to ensure that only those prisoners who have formed a habit of crime should be classified as habituals;

- (ii) the proposed definition enlarges the list of offences, a second conviction for which is one of the conditions qualifying for classification as a habitual, by including Chapters XVI and XVIII of the Indian Penal Code;
- (iii) the term "conviction" is defined for the first time in the rule now proposed, the definition being an adaptation of that given in Section 75 of the Penal Code, extended to include convictions by courts in Great Britain or any British colony;
- (iv) the new definition gives a specific power of revising the classification in all cases. Under the existing rule revision is only possible when a prisoner has been classified as non-habitual and subsequently proof of a previous conviction is furnished;
- (v) under the existing rule all members of criminal tribes are ipso facto treated as habituals. In the proposed rule there is no reference to members of such tribes (cf. paragraph 109);
- (vi) the new definition provides that no prisoner should in future be classified as habitual until he has had an opportunity of showing cause against such classification;
- (vii) the proviso to the proposed Rule V will enable the Inspector-General to transfer to a jail intended for habituals any non-habitual prisoners of vicious and depraved character who do or could exercise an evil influence on their fellow-prisoners. The classes of prisoners suitable for treatment under this proviso are indicated in paragraph 110 of the report.

4. The Governor General in Council thinks that, subject to the observations made below, good reasons have been given for all these changes, but he does not consider that he would be justified in finally approving the proposed definition as the basis of rules to be made by Local Governments under Section 60 (7) of the Act of 1894, until those Governments have had an opportunity of stating their views, and I am accordingly to enquire whether

His Excellency the Governor in Council has any objection to urge against the adoption of the definition given in paragraph 107 of the report.

In regard to two minor points it seems to the Government of India that that definition is susceptible of improvement. In the explanation to Rule I the words "United Kingdom or in any British Dominion or Colony" might be substituted for "Great Britain or in any British Colony." In the proviso to Rule II the Government of India are disposed to omit the words "has received notice of the proposal to classify him as an habitual, with the reasons, and," as they appear to imply the formal service of a written notice on the prisoner and would give the proceedings too formal and judicial a character, a result which the Committee themselves deprecated. (paragraph 105).

It has also been suggested to the Government of India that it would be more satisfactory if Rule II were to leave the duty of classifying prisoners primarily to the jail authorities, subject to the control of the District Magistrate, rather than to the convicting Court, on the ground that previous convictions often come to light after sentence has been pronounced, and that the Courts have, as the Committee themselves admit (paragraph 102), done the work of classification perfunctorily in the past. On the other hand, the Committee have pointed out that classification as a habitual may make a greater difference to a prisoner in the future than in the past, both as regards the length of his sentence and his treatment in jail. It is, therefore, essential to make the classification a regular judicial finding and also to give the prisoner an opportunity to show cause against classification as an habitual. On a consideration of these arguments, the Government of India are inclined to think that the balance of advantage lies in retaining the convicting Court as the ordinary classifying authority, though it is desirable that the necessity for discharging this duty carefully and conscientiously should be impressed on all Sessions Judges and Magistrates. The opinion of Local Governments on the question would, however, be of great value. It will be observed that if new information be available after an order was first made, it would be possible, under the proposed Rule IV, to ask the Court or District Magistrate to revise his classification.

5. The Government of India concur with the Committee (paragraph 111) in their condemnation of the rule in force in certain provinces under which every prisoner who escapes or attempts to escape must be treated as an habitual. The authority cited for rule in question in at least one provincial Jail Manual is the letter of the Government of India in the Home Department, No. 265, dated the 26th August 1909. All that was said in that letter, however, was that there was nothing in certain earlier instructions framed by the Government of India inconsistent with such a rule.

The Government of India also accept the conclusions of the Committee that prisoners classified as habituals should not be excluded from the benefits of the classification system (paragraph 112), and should not be subjected to specially severe forms of punishment (paragraph 113). They also agree that the existing prohibition against the employment of habituals as convict officers should be maintained (paragraph 115). The opinions of Local Governments have already been invited in paragraph 11 (e) of my letter No. 305, dated the 16th December 1920, on the suggested exception to this general prohibition, namely the employment of habituals as night watchman in habitual wards. The Government of India endorse the observations contained in paragraph 116 of the report regarding the desirability of providing separate accommodation for female habituals.

6. In the second section of this chapter the Committee have recommended the introduction into Indian prisons of the Star class system in force in Great Britain, which is described in paragraphs 118 and 119. The Government of India regard this as an excellent suggestion, which should do much to mitigate the evil effects of the promiscuous association of all offenders other than those classed as habitual. But before definitely approving the proposal, they would prefer to have the views of Local Governments both on the question of principle and on the definition of the Star class contained in paragraph 121. That definition seems at first sight to be a somewhat loose one, but this is clearly the intention, as the essence of the system is that the case of each individual should be carefully considered on its merits. Other points on which the opinions of Local Governments would be of assistance are whether the classification should be made by the prison authorities only, as proposed by the Committee, or whether the convicting court should also have a voice in the matter: and to what extent it would be possible to introduce the system without expensive structural alterations in the existing jails.

7. Important proposals are also made in Section 3 of this chapter, in which the Committee recommend (paragraph 130) the Amendment of Section 53 of the Indian Penal Code so as to provide for two classes of simple imprisonment: (a) without liability to labour, and (b) with liability to light labour, only Magistrates of the first class or Courts of higher status being empowered to order simple imprisonment without liability to labour.

The Government of India are disposed to think that recommendation is a sound one, not only because the system of first and second division offenders in Great Britain (described in paragraphs 123 to 127) has been successful, but also because the conclusion they draw from the statistics of prisoners sentenced to simple imprisonment in India in recent years (paragraph 128) is that the Courts in India are prone to sentence offenders to this class of punishment without appreciating the consequences. It cannot be good either for the individual prisoner or for the discipline of the jail that he should spend his time in complete idleness and on this ground alone there is much to be said for making an obligation to light labour a normal feature of simple imprisonment.

I am to request that the Government of India may be favoured with the views of Local Governments on the proposed Amendment of Section 53 of the Indian Penal Code and on the subsidiary recommendations contained in paragraphs 130 and 131.

8. The question of the special treatment of "political" offenders, discussed in paragraph 132, has recently formed the subject of separate correspondence between the Government of India and Local Governments. The Government of India are now considering the opinions of all Local Governments on the proposals contained in their letter No. 15, dated the 5th January 1920, as well as the views of the Jails Committee, and their decision will be conveyed to you in due course.

Chapter VIII.

9. Although the Committee were unable to agree on the main question of principle discussed in this chapter, namely the degree of association inter se that should be permitted at night between prisoners of the three classes, they were unanimous in condemning the system of cubicles in association barracks found in certain provinces (paragraph 135), and in holding that in most provinces the existing supply of cells should be increased so as to provide 25 to 30 per cent of cells in all jails both for males and females (paragraph 136).

The following statement shows, for all the major provinces, the type of sleeping accommodation provided on the last day of the year 1919 :

Number of prisoners who could be accommodated on the 31st December 1919

Province.	In cells.	In barracks with separate sleeping accommodation.	In barracks without separate sleeping accommodation.	TOTAL.
Madras...	4,948	337	7,065	12,350
Bombay...	896	1,322	5,175	7,393
Bengal...	868	4,164	10,708	15,740
United Provinces...	3,846	...	30,373	34,219
Punjab...	1,864	2,479	10,344	14,687
Burma*	884	...	17,658	18,542
Bihar and Orissa...	607	983	9,187	10,777
Central Provinces...	395	773	5,822	6,990

* Figures taken from the 1918 Report.

According to these figures, Madras is the only province in which the number of cells reaches the standard laid down by the Committee, while the United Provinces, the Punjab and Bombay are the only other provinces where cellular accommodation exceeds ten per cent. of the total. The cubicle system is commonest in Bengal, the Punjab and Bombay, the words "United Provinces" in paragraph 134 of the report being apparently a misprint for "Bengal."

10. The Government of India have no hesitation in endorsing, on sanitary grounds, the Committee's condemnation of cubicles in association wards, and they hope that in all provinces early steps will be taken to remove these obstacles to free ventilation and cleanliness and to provide in lieu of them berths of the type described in paragraph 335 (Chapter XII) of the report. This change should not be expensive. The Government of India also accept the view that, in order to provide for those prisoners who prefer to sleep in cells, and for those whom it is desirable, on account of their evil character or for other reasons, to segregate at night, 30 per cent of the total accommodation of every jail to be constructed hereafter should be of the cellular type. They recognise, however, that the attainment of this standard in existing jails must involve expensive structural alterations, and while they regard the principle as one of great importance, they must leave it to Local Governments to decide to what extent its immediate application would be compatible with other demands on provincial finances.

11. The Governor General in Council has given careful consideration to the arguments on the rival merits of the association and cellular systems contained in paragraphs 188 to 187, though he realises that the discussion is necessarily mainly academic, because, whatever may be the decision on the question of principle, the provision of a separate cell for every one of the 120,000 prisoners confined in Indian jails cannot, for many years, be a practical measure. But apart from this consideration, the Government of India are inclined to think that the principle laid down by Sir James DuBoulay (paragraph 188), viz., that habituals and short-term prisoners should sleep in cells, and long term non-habituals in association barracks, represents the limit to which it is necessary or desirable to go. They are impressed by the fact that a universal cellular system is emphatically condemned by the only two Members of the Committee, Sir Walter Buchanan and Colonel Jackson, who have had practical experience of the management of large Indian jails and also by D. M. Dorai, Raja of Pudukottah, the representative on the Committee of educated Indian opinion. While the Government of India are prepared to agree with the President and Mr. Mitchell-Innes (paragraph 177) that separation at night is more deterrent form of punishment, they cannot believe, in spite of what is said in paragraph 184, that it can be humane to confine prisoners in the hotter provinces of India for long periods in small cells which must be so designed as to prevent conversation. It seems to them that such cells must ex-hypothesi be less well ventilated than large and lofty sleeping barracks designed to accommodate some 50 men. Inadequate ventilation is admittedly a condition favourable to the development of tuberculosis, a disease already too common in Indian jails; and no one who has had experience of the Punjab and Sind in May and June, or of lower Bengal in the rains, can deny that a small sleeping room tends to lower the vitality far more than a large one. Further the provision in each separate cell of such essential amenities as pure drinking water and sanitary arrangements which would not be offensive could only be carried out at prohibitive cost.

As regards the risk of moral contamination under the association system, the Governor General in Council agrees with Sir Walter Buchanan and Colonel Jackson (paragraph 145) that with proper classification and selection, and properly patrolled wards, the risk is small. The weight of evidence is to the effect that unnatural vice is not actually practised in the sleeping wards (paragraph 153), and the Governor General in Council readily accepts the view of these two experienced officers that the ordinary Indian prisoner would not tolerate such practices in his presence. Even if it be admitted that the cellular system would reduce the temptation to unnatural vice, it might, as hinted in paragraph 181, encourage other abuses.

Moreover, as the opponents of the cellular system have pointed out (paragraph 145) the Indian prisoner is, by custom and habit, sociable and averse from solitude, and cellular confinement has therefore peculiar terrors for him. It would also probably be correct to say that in many cases his mentality is far more introspective than that of the average European prisoner. If cut off altogether from social intercourse for many hours daily and condemned to complete solitude, he might be apt to degenerate rapidly into a definitely melancholic state of mind. Such degeneracy has been recognized as a possible consequence of solitary confinement by students of prison problems in other continents (compare paragraph 161), and the possibility of it is a danger which cannot be disregarded in India.

These are the reasons which have led the Government of India to concur provisionally with the conclusions stated in paragraph 188 of the report, though they are not convinced that even in the case of habitual and short-term prisoners, cellular confinement at night should be rigidly enforced without regard to the disposition and character of the individual. They would be glad, however, to have the opinions of Local Governments on those conclusions.

12. In paragraph 149 those members of the Committee who are in favour of association at night have expressed the opinion that the idle time between 5-30 p.m. and the hour of sleep should be occupied by education, reading and simple indoor games, and in paragraph 183 the Chairman and Mr. Mitchell-Innes have endorsed this suggestion on the assumption that association at night is to be continued, as being evidently better than leaving the prisoners unoccupied in their wards. The subject is discussed again in a later passage in the report (Chapter XI, paragraph 275), where the Committee have unanimously recommended that a portion of each sleeping-barrack should be cut off or turned into a recreation room, where prisoners should be allowed under supervision to read; play quiet games or receive education. The Government of India commend this proposal and think that recreation rooms might well be tried as an experimental measure in a few selected jails. But the matter is one which they are content to leave to the discretion of Local Governments.

13. It will be convenient to recapitulate the matter discussed in this letter in regard to which the Government of India desire to be favoured with the views of Local Governments. These are :

- the extent to which effect can be given, both immediately and in the future when new jails have been constructed, to the proposal that separate jails should be provided for habitual prisoners (paragraph 2 of this letter);
- the new definition proposed for the term "habitual," and in particular the question whether classification should ordinarily be made by the convicting Court or by the jail authorities (paragraph 4);
- the proposed introduction of the Star Class System of classification and the definition of the Star Class (paragraph 6);
- the proposal to amend Section 53 of the Indian Penal Code so as to provide for the two kinds of simple imprisonment (paragraph 7);
- the view that the cellular system is best for habituals and for short-term non-habituals; and that association at night is best for long-term non-habituals (paragraph 11).

APPENDIX.

Extract from paragraph 5 of the Home Department Resolution No. 27
dated the 14th December 1886. 1804-14

For the purposes of jail discipline, the words 'habitual criminal' shall mean a prisoner so classed—

- (1) By the Court or Magistrate that heard the case :
 - (a) because he has been convicted of an offence punishable under Chapter XII or XVII of the Indian Penal Code with three years' imprisonment or upwards, and has been previously punished on conviction for an offence under either of these Chapters and similarly punishable ; or
 - (b) because, from the circumstances of the case, the Sessions Judge, or Magistrate believes the prisoner to depend on crime as a means of livelihood, or to have attained such an eminence in crime as to warrant his being classed with habitual or class B criminals.
- (2) By the District Magistrate, or any Magistrate empowered by him on this behalf, the classification being made in accordance with the principles suggested for the guidance of the courts in clauses 1 (a) and (b) of this definition.
- (3) Subject to the control of the District Magistrate by the officer in charge of the jail, when the prisoner is :
 - (a) sentenced or believed to be liable to punishment under Section 75 of the Indian Penal Code ;
 - (b) under sentence enhanced by reason of more than one previous conviction ; or
 - (c) known to have been repeatedly imprisoned for similar offences ; or
 - (d) a member of a criminal tribe. Provided that :
 - (1) any such Court or Magistrate as is mentioned above may direct that a prisoner shall not be classed as an habitual criminal, and
 - (2) when there is room for doubt whether a prisoner should be so classed or not, the officer in charge of the jail shall refer the case for the orders of any such Court or Magistrate.

Explanation.—The classification when made by the convicting Courts shall be final. If the Courts omit to classify a prisoner as an habitual, the District Magistrate, or any Magistrate empowered by him, may do so. In case of omission on the part of the Court and of the Magistrate, the officer in charge of the jail may make the classification, subject to the general control and supervision of the District Magistrate.

In continuation of my letter No. 307, dated the 17th November 1920, I am directed to address you on the subject of prison labour and manufactures, discussed in Chapter IX of the report of the Indian Jails Committee.

2. Local Governments are competent to make rules under Section 60 (e), (g) and (h) of Act IX of 1894 in regard to the employment of prisoners, the forms of labour and the disposal of the proceeds of such labour. But the rules so made are subject to the statutory control of the Governor General in Council, and whilst the Government of India are anxious to confine this control within the narrowest limits practicable it is necessary for them, having regard to their responsibility under the statute and to possible reactions on central subjects or extra provincial interests, to indicate certain general conditions with which it is important that the rules made by Local Governments should conform. To take only one example, the extent to which jail manufactures should be allowed to compete with private enterprise is clearly a matter in which the central Government are concerned, as diversity of practice might be injurious to important industries not organised on purely provincial lines.

3. All Local Governments will presumably concur with the four main proposition stated in the earlier paragraphs of Chapter IX, viz. :—(a) that the main object of prison labour should be the reformation of the criminal (paragraph 191); (b) that non-productive labour should be avoided (paragraph 192); (c) that short-term prisoners must necessarily be employed mainly on unskilled labour (paragraph 193); and (d) that the principal mode of employment for long-term prisoners should be intra-mural (paragraph 195). The latter three principles have for many years been followed in most, if not all, Indian jails. The first has never been explicitly and authoritatively laid down in this country, but it is an obvious consequence of the proposition, stated in paragraph 19 of the report to be established by the general consent of penologists throughout the world, that one of the objects of imprisonment is the reformation of the prisoner's character.

Similarly the Government of India do not think that any objection can be taken to the Committee's conclusion (paragraph 196) that the greatest benefit to the prisoner is conferred by giving him the best available instruction in up-to-date methods of labour and so enabling him to earn a livelihood on release. It follows that some industrial employment must be provided in all jails where long-term prisoners are confined, and it would obviously be uneconomical to have multifarious forms of employment in the same jail. This point was emphasized in paragraph 9 of the Home Department Resolution No. 10-605-18 of the 7th of May 1886, and is re-affirmed by the Committee in paragraph 197 of their report. The Governor General in Council has no doubt that Local Governments will approve the principle, which he understands accords with the existing practice in all provinces, that in each jail attention should, as far as possible, be concentrated on one or two large industries.

4. It has for many years been a principle of Indian jail administration that prison industries should be adapted, as far as possible, to meet the requirements of the consuming departments of Government and that those departments should be compelled to purchase articles of prison manufacture, subject to the condition that they are of similar quality and not of greater price than those obtainable in the open market. The Committee have, however, pointed out (paragraphs 199—202) that both now and in the past there have been many grave infractions of this rule, though they were not in a position to say whether consuming departments or the jail authorities were to blame. The Governor General in Council is convinced of the soundness of this principle, which is in accordance with the recommendation contained in paragraph 198, and he hopes that all Local Governments will take such steps as are possible to secure more general compliance with it. The reluctance of the consuming departments to take prison manufactures may possibly be due in part to delay in complying with their indents for goods required at short notice, and to the elaborate procedure laid down for filling in indents and receipts. The question whether this procedure cannot be simplified should be examined. But the main obstacle to the enforcement of the rule that jails must cater for Government departments and that Government departments must buy from jails is probably to be found in the backward condition of jail manufactories and especially in the absence of up-to-date machinery.

5. This leads up to what is perhaps the most important question discussed in Chapter IX, namely, the use of power-driven machinery in jails. The existing orders on this subject are contained in the following extract from the Resolution of the 7th May 1886 :

'With regard to intra-mural employments, the Governor General in Council admits that, in provinces having a completely organised system of central jails there must be in such jails well-regulated industrial employments on a large scale ; but His Excellency in Council considers that jails should not be converted into steam factories. The use of steam machinery in jails will not, however, in future be absolutely prohibited although care should be taken that limits are set to its employment in individual cases where it is found to be incompatible with the penal character of convict labour, or where there is strong reason to believe that it enables the jails to compete injuriously with private capitalists in the neighbourhood. If any jail industry is proved seriously to injure any local trade, it should be discontinued in favour of some other kind of employment. The existing arrangements with regard to steam machinery in the jails of the Lower Provinces of Bengal will not be disturbed; but his Excellency in Council desires that, in the event of any extension of such machinery being contemplated in that or in any other province, the considerations above set forth will be carefully borne in mind by the Local Government or Administration concerned, and in the case of any extension of magnitude, that the sanction of the Government of India will be previously obtained.

The question was again discussed in a Home Department letter to Local Governments, No. 151 160, dated the 10th of August 1906, paragraph 13 of which ran as follows:

'As regards the use of steam machinery, the Government of India consider that it is not necessary that a jail should purposely handicap itself by the use of obsolete or inferior machinery. In the case, too, of a jail press or similar institution which works solely for the Government, there can be no objection on economic grounds to the installation of steam machinery on a large scale. One important aspect of this question, however, is the necessity for preserving the penal element in jail industries; and no doubt this necessity will always be borne in mind. While the principle laid down in 1886 with regard to the use of steam machinery seem generally sound and suitable to present requirements, it may be advisable to provide expressly that when it is proposed to lay down steam machinery for the first time in any jail the objects of the installation and the possibility of its interfering with private enterprise must be very thoroughly examined; and if the proposal stands, the sanction of the Government of India must be obtained. Subject to these remarks each case must be judged on its own merits.'

6. The Committee take the view, which can hardly be controverted, that familiarity with power-driven machinery is more introductive and mind-awakening than manual labour. The use of such machinery is therefore, in their opinion, justifiable, both as serving the true functions of jail administration and as increasing production and thereby giving greater relief to the tax-payer. They have accordingly recommended (paragraph 210) that the existing restrictions on the use of power-driven machinery should be relaxed, but that it should be employed in well-established and organised industries and care should be taken to avoid any interference with nascent or unorganised industrial enterprises. Subject to this safeguard, it should be the duty of the Jail Department to develop their industries so as to meet the requirements of the consuming departments.

These recommendations are admittedly at variance with those contained in paragraphs 215 and 216 of the report of the Indian Industrial Commission of 1916-1918, and also with the views of those chambers of commerce whose letters are printed in Appendix V of the Jail Committee's report. The subject was discussed at a conference of provincial Directors of Industries held at Cawnpore last November, which generally accepted the recommendations of the Jails Committee, but considered that it was desirable that the Inspector-General of Prisons should consult the provincial Director of Industries before the introduction of any new industry into a jail. The conference was also of opinion that jail training in an organised industry was less harmful from the point of view of industries than such training in small cottage industries. Speaking generally, they considered that the fear of jails competing with established industries was more imaginary than real.

The Government of India are inclined to think that the conclusions of the Cawnpore Conference should be accepted but before communicating their final views on this matter they would be glad to learn whether Local Governments see any objections to their adoption.

7. The necessity for employing skilled supervision in every jail where manufactures are carried on on a large scale, discussed in paragraph 212, has been dealt with in paragraph 9 (d) of the Home Department letter No. 305, dated the 16th December 1920.

In paragraph 213 the Committee have recommended the abolition of statement XIII appended to the annual provincial jail reports and the substitution for it of statement XII-A. The latter statement has never been prescribed for general use, though it now appears in the annual reports of most provinces. Its adoption as a standard form was suggested by several Local Governments so long ago, as 1903, and the Government of India would be glad to learn whether in the opinion of His Excellency the Governor in Council etc.

there is any objection to the acceptance of the Committee's proposals. The Governor General in Council agrees with the Committee (paragraph 214) that the question of uniformity in the assessment of tasks might well be discussed at the first conference of Inspectors General, which it is hoped to hold next cold weather. The problem of providing suitable labour for prisoners of defective intelligence (paragraph 215) might also suitably be discussed at that conference.

8. The existing orders on the subject of extra-mural labour are contained in the following extract from the Resolution of the 7th May 1886:

'As regards the employment of convicts extra-murally, it is clear from the tenour of the reports submitted by the Local Governments that, in view of the practical difficulties surrounding the matter, it is scarcely possible to anticipate the time when extra-mural labour can form the principal mode of employing long-term prisoners throughout British India. The Governor General in Council, however, continues to be of opinion that this form of employment has been allowed to drop too much out of sight, and that convicts may with advantage be employed on public works, subject to the conditions laid down by Her Majesty's Secretary of State, that is, in cases where the works are so large and concentrated and likely to last so long a time as to justify the erection on the spot of such accommodation as would be required for the exercise of the same sanitary care and the enforcement of the same system of discipline, penal labour, and classification which are now exercised and enforced in central jails. Convicts should not be drafted to public works where from conditions of climate their regular employment out of doors is not possible throughout the greater part of the year, and they should be only men selected for that class of work on due consideration of their physical fitness and the sentences passed upon them.

4. The employment on railway works of gangs of convicts, lodged in portable jails during the progress of the works, does not meet with the approval of the Secretary of State, who considers it undesirable that local Governments and Administrations should be directed or even encouraged to have recourse to this system of employing convicts. At the same time His Lordship is willing that it should be left to the discretion of local Governments to resort to this system of employing convicts should any exceptionally favourable opportunity present itself, provided that, in any case in which the experiment may be tried, its working is carefully watched and specially reported on to the Government of India and the Secretary of State. These orders should be carefully observed.

5. The practice followed in the Madras Presidency and in parts of the Bombay Presidency of employing small gangs of prisoners on station roads and municipal works of various descriptions should be discontinued. Such a system cannot but be detrimental to discipline, and is opposed to sound principles of extra-mural employment. In Assam and British Burma a similar practice prevails but, for the special reasons given in each case by the local Administration, the Government of India are for the present not disposed to interfere with it in either of those provinces. The proposal made by the Chief Commissioner of the Central Provinces to employ a gang of prisoners at the Warora coal mines appears to be open to no prima facie objection, and is sanctioned as an experimental measure.

The general tenour of these observations agrees closely with the conclusions stated in paragraphs 216-225 of the report, and only in two respects do the orders of 1886 appear to require modification. In the first place it would hardly be true now to say that extra-mural employment "has been allowed to drop too much out of sight," as the Committee have shown that all the conditions which make such employment suitable can seldom be found in combination, and that consequently the bulk of prison labour must be employed intra-murally. But where the conditions described in paragraphs 219 to 221 can be fulfilled, the Government of India see no objection to the employment of prisoners on large public works. They desire, however, to invite special attention to the necessity for the proper separation of habituals from casuals where both classes are employed on extra-mural labour. Secondly, the orders of 1886 conveyed a qualified approval of the system, prevalent in certain localities, of employing convicts on outdoor work for municipalities and other local bodies. The Committee have, however, in paragraph 217 stated the strong objections to this system and have recommended its stoppage, and the Governor General in Council hopes that the Administrations concerned will find it possible to give effect to this recommendation at an early date.

In continuation of the Home Department letter No. 13, dated the 14th January 1921, I am directed to address you on the subject of settlements constituted under the Criminal Tribes Act, 1911, discussed in Chapter XXII of the report of the Indian Jails Committee.

2. As local Governments are aware, the whole question of the administration of the Criminal Tribes Act, 1911, was discussed at a conference held at Delhi in December 1919, which was attended by representatives of all local Governments and many of the Indian States. The proceedings of the Delhi conference were forwarded to local Governments with the Home Department letter No. 297 of the 16th February 1920, and certain general observations of the Governor-General in Council on its conclusions were communicated in a subsequent letter, No. 593 of the 3rd April 1920. It was there stated that the Government of India had no intention of interfering with the discretion of local Governments in regard to the detailed administration of the Act but desired to leave them absolutely free, as heretofore to manage their own affairs. At the same time the Government of India laid down certain general principles which should, in their opinion, be observed in establishing and managing settlements constituted under the Act. Local Governments were also informed that the question of amending the Act was under consideration and you were addressed on this subject in Mr. Gwynne's letter, No. 112-Police, dated the 13th January 1921.

3. The Government of India understand that the proceedings of the Delhi conference were considered by the Jails Committee before Chapter XXII of their report was written. The Committee have expressly refrained from expressing any opinion on the working of the Criminal Tribes Act, 1911, as a whole or on the policy underlying it, and their investigations and findings have been restricted to questions connected with settlements. On most of these questions they agree with the conclusions of the Delhi conference, which have already been commended to the consideration of local Governments. It would serve no useful purpose to discuss in this letter points on which there is no substantial difference of opinion between the Committee and the conference, and the paragraphs that follow accordingly deal only with matters on which the Committee have dissented from the conclusions of the conference and with proposals of the Committee on subjects not discussed by the conference.

4. In paragraph 665 the Committee recommend that commitment to settlements should be as far as possible by gangs and not by individuals and condemn the procedure followed in some of the Bombay and Punjab settlements of selecting individuals for commitment. In paragraph 666 the Committee, while admitting that the practice of committing individuals is apparently legal under the Act as at present worded, point out the opportunities for blackmail which this practice places in the hands of the subordinate police, and in paragraph 667 they propose that before any individual is dealt with under sections 11 or 16 of the Act there should be a formal inquiry of which notice should be given to the person concerned, and that he should have an opportunity of meeting the charges against him.

Although this subject was not specifically discussed at the Delhi conference, it was then held that family ties should be respected and that the families of all persons committed to a settlement should be allowed to remain with them, (vide paragraph 35 of the proceedings of the conference). The Committee would apparently go somewhat further than this and would compel the wives and children of persons committed to reside in the settlement. On the other hand, the conference were against any amendment of section 16 of the Act (vide paragraph 14 of its proceedings) and there can be no doubt that that section, as now worded, covers the commitment of individuals to a settlement.

The Government of India recognise the force of the Committee's remarks regarding the danger of blackmail inherent in the system of committing individuals. At the same time they doubt whether it would be wise to amend the Act so as to permit the commitment only of whole tribes or sections of tribes or of whole gangs—such an Amendment is not indeed specifically suggested by the Committee—as there may be gangs or tribes of which only a few members have shown criminal tendencies, while the remainder would lead an honest life if the few black sheep were removed. The Government of India are, however, inclined to concur in the suggestion that there should be a full and formal enquiry before any individual is committed, and should that suggestion be generally accepted, it would seem desirable to give it statutory effect either by amending section 123 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, as suggested by the Committee, or by an amendment of sections 16 and 19 of the Criminal Tribes Act, 1911. The authority which should hold the enquiry must obviously be designated. The Government of India would be glad to learn the views of local Governments, both on the question of principle and on the subsidiary question of the manner in which effect should be given to it.

5. In paragraph 669 the Committee recommend that in selecting the agency for managing settlements preference should be given to persons of the same religious belief as the tribe or gang to be detained in the settlement. It appears from paragraph 29 of the proceedings of the Delhi conference that this is already the practice in the Punjab, and the Government of India have no doubt that the principle is one which will be readily accepted by all local Governments. The Committee also express the view that no embargo should be placed on the employment of Christian agency in the management of settlements, and pay a tribute to the self-sacrificing efforts of the Salvation Army and many missionary bodies in promoting the welfare of the criminal tribes. There is ample testimony in the proceedings of the Delhi conference to the value and success of these efforts, and the Governor-General in Council has great pleasure in endorsing the tribute paid to them by the Committee. He is confident that well-informed public opinion throughout the country would, for the present at any rate, deprecate any curtailment of the valuable reformatory work which is being done by these bodies.

6. In the same paragraph the Committee make the novel suggestion that any person who is in a settlement under private management should have a well-understood right to claim to be transferred to a settlement under Government management. Under the Act as at present worded, no person possesses such a right, but any person can be transferred from one settlement to another at the discretion of the local Government. The Government of India apprehend that the general conferment of such a right might lead to practical difficulties and possibly to some increase in expenditure, but they do not under estimate the arguments of the Committee and would be glad to learn the opinions of local Governments on the merits of the proposal.

7. In paragraph 671 the Committee condemn the proposal, which has been put forward on more than one occasion, to transfer criminal tribes or gangs to distant provinces or to fresh language areas. On this question the Committee are in agreement with the general sense of the Delhi conference, vide paragraph 44 of its proceedings. But in paragraph 10 of the Home Department letter of the 3rd April 1920, the Government of India stated that if the Assam Administration could arrange matters with other local Governments, they would have no objection to criminal tribesmen being sent from other provinces to work in tea gardens in Assam, subject to certain safeguards. This pronouncement should, however, be read subject to the qualification that no tribe or gang should be transferred to Assam unless it has clearly signified its consent.

8. In paragraph 672 the Committee express disapproval of a proposal put forward by the Salvation Army that so far as possible the children of members of criminal tribes should be separated from their parents, the object being to save the younger generation from corruption, and in paragraph 673 they also condemn the suggestion that there should be a boarding-house in close proximity to each settlement where the children could reside and where their parents would be permitted to visit them from time to time. It appears from paragraph 42 of the proceedings of the Delhi conference that the representatives of certain provinces were in favour of separating the children of the more depraved criminal tribesmen from their parents, and that in certain parts of the country such a system is actually in force and has had good results. In view of this the Government of India do not feel themselves able to endorse without qualification the Committee's views, but the matter is one which they are content to leave to the discretion of local Governments, which will doubtless bear in mind the importance of saving the rising generation from contamination by their elders.

9. The Committee would, however, make one exception to the rule that parents should not be separated from their children. In proposing in paragraph 679 that there should be special or penal settlements to which incorrigible persons should be sent from ordinary settlements, they suggest that persons sent to such special settlements should be allowed to take with them their wives but not any children over five years of age. Older children should be sent to cottage homes organized for the purpose. This again is a matter which the Governor-General in Council is content to leave to the discretion of the local Governments.

10. In paragraph 676 the Committee recommend the formal prohibition of the practice of automatically registering children as members of a criminal tribe. The Government of India are not aware how far such registration is now the practice. They would be glad to have information on this point and also to be favoured with the views of local Governments on the Committee's proposal. If it is generally approved, statutory effect should presumably be given to it by an Amendment of the Act.

11. The Government of India would be glad to learn the opinions of local Governments on the proposal contained in paragraph 680 that the procedure under which final release from a settlement can be attained should be definitely laid down in the Act or in the rules made under it. They are inclined to think that it might also be desirable to prescribe by rule the conditions under which a person once registered as a member of a criminal tribe can have his name removed from the register. It appears from paragraph 33 of the proceedings of the Delhi conference that at present the practice differs in the various provinces. In most of them continued good behaviour is generally treated as justifying removal from the register, but the period of such behaviour has not been defined and it would seem desirable that this should be done for the guidance of District Magistrates.

12. The Governor General in Council commends to local Governments the two suggestions made in paragraph 681 of the report, viz., that there should be periodical conferences between provincial officers in charge of criminal tribes, and that all such officers should be furnished with a small library of books bearing on questions likely to arise in the course of their duties.

13. It will be convenient to summarise the matters dealt with in this letter on which an answer from local Governments is desired. These are:

- (a) the proposal that commitment to settlements should as far as possible be by gangs and not by individuals and that a full and formal enquiry should be held before any individual is committed (paragraph 4 of this letter);
- (b) the method by which statutory provision should be made for such an enquiry, if it is decided that it should be held, (paragraph 4);
- (c) the suggestion that any person in a settlement under private management should have a right to claim a transfer to a settlement under Government management, (paragraph 6);
- (d) the extent to which children are now automatically registered as members of a criminal tribe, and whether it is desirable that the practice should be formally prohibited, (paragraph 10);
- (e) the suggestion that the procedure under which final release from a settlement can be claimed should be definitely laid down in the Act or in the rules under it, (paragraph 11);
- (f) the proposal to define by rule the conditions under which a person registered as a member of a criminal tribe can claim to have his name removed from the register, (paragraph 11).

 The Chief Commissioner of Coorg.
 The Chief Commissioner of Delhi.

In continuation of my letter No. 305, dated the 16th December 1920, I am directed to address you in regard to Chapter's X (prison discipline), XI (reformatory influences in prisons), XII (prison hygiene and medical administration), XIV (assistance to prisoners on release), XVII (special classes of prisoners) and XIX (principles of prison construction) of the report of the Indian Jails Committee.

Chapter X.

2. As regards corporal punishment for prison offences, the Governor General in Council is disposed to agree with the Committee's conclusion (paragraph 227) that this form of punishment should be kept in reserve as the last resource of authority and should be inflicted only for mutiny or incitement to mutiny and for serious assaults on any public servant or visitor. At present the prison offences for which flogging can be inflicted are not defined, though the general direction that it should be reserved for serious offences (i.e., offences dealt with by major punishments), contained in paragraph 4 of the Government of India Resolution Nos 297—307 of the 18th February 1887, is still in force. The Governor General in Council thinks that it is desirable, in view of the increasing antipathy of public opinion to this form of punishment, that the offences for which it can be inflicted should be authoritatively defined, and he would be glad to learn whether local Governments see any objection to the passing of a statutory rule under section 56 (3) of Act IX of 1894, giving effect to the Committee's recommendation. It should be noted that several local Governments have already expressed views very similar to those of the Committee in answer to the Home Department letter No. 22, dated the 6th January 1920, though some were in favour of enlarging the list of offences punishable with whipping by including contumacious refusal to work, wilful damage to prison property, conspiring or attempting to escape, etc.

Should such a rule be passed, it would seem desirable that it should include a direction for the submission of a special report on every case in which flogging has been inflicted to the Inspector-General of Prisons, as suggested in the last sentence of paragraph 227.

The Governor General in Council would also be glad to know whether local Governments approve of the suggestion made in paragraph 228 that section 53 (2) of the Act should be amended by the omission of the words "not less than." The two subsidiary instructions suggested in the same paragraph might well be included in the Jails Manuals of all provinces.

3. The existing statutory rules regarding the imposition of handcuffs and fetters as a punishment are contained in Parts II and III of Appendix I to the Home Department resolution Nos. 500—510 of the 31st August 1896. Separate, cellular and solitary confinement are defined in section 46 (8), (10), and (11) of the Act of 1894. I am to enquire whether His Excellency the Governor in Council accepts the modifications of the rules and the amendment of the Act proposed in paragraphs 230, 231 and 232 of the report.

4. The Government of India agree with the Committee (paragraph 233) that the practice as to exacting labour from prisoners undergoing penal diet should be uniform throughout India. The question might suitably be discussed at the conference of Inspectors-General proposed in paragraph 7 of my letter No. 13, dated the 14th January 1921.

5. In paragraph 234 the Committee recommend that section 46 (2) of the Act of 1894, should be amended by the interpolation of the words "for a stated period" after "change of labour," and in paragraph 235 they propose various additions to, and changes in, section 47, which deals with the combination of punishments. The opinions of local Governments are invited on these recommendations and also on the minor changes in the statutory rules published as Appendix II to the Home Department Resolution of the 31st August 1896, which are suggested in paragraphs 236 and 237. These latter changes appear prima facie to be unobjectionable.

6. Under section 56 of the Act of 1894, a superintendent has complete discretion, subject to rules and instructions sanctioned by the local Government, to confine any prisoners in irons if he considers such precaution necessary for their safe custody. In paragraph 242 the Committee recommend the adoption in all provinces of rules which would materially limit this discretion and which would confine the use of irons for safe custody to prisoners sentenced to transportation and to those who are violent or dangerous, or who have escaped or planned or attempted to escape. The existing divergence in practice in regard to this matter renders judicial sentences most unequal in severity, as pointed out in paragraph 238 of the report, and the Government of India agree with the Committee that as a matter of principle some degree of uniformity is desirable. They would be glad to learn whether local Governments see any objection to the adoption of the rules suggested in paragraph 242 for intra-mural prisoners and of those proposed in paragraph 243 for prisoners employed extra-murally.

[The Governor General in Council has read with concern the remarks contained in paragraph 240 regarding the use of irons and the indiscriminate association of habitual and non-habitual prisoners in the jails of the United Provinces. He has no doubt that the local Government will devote its early attention to the revision of the rules and practice in regard to this matter.]

7. The use of the belchain, except as a strictly temporary expedient for prisoners confined in insecure huts or tents outside the jail wall, is strongly condemned in paragraphs 244 and 245. The Governor General in Council is impressed by the Committee's objections to this device and he hopes that all local Governments will take steps to limit its use to occasions when it is absolutely indispensable as a precaution against escape.

8. The remarks in paragraph 246 on the subject of rewards for the recapture of escaped prisoners should, in the opinion of the Government of India, form the subject of discussion at the first conference of Inspectors-General.

Chapter XI.

9. Up to 1908 the system of remission in force was based on the marks earned by good conduct. The existing system of remission by days, to the value of which the Committee pay high tribute in paragraph 247, is regulated by statutory rules made by the Governor General in Council under section 59 (5) of the Act of 1894. These rules were originally published as Appendix I to the Home Department Resolution No. 161—172 of the 25th June 1908, and were amended by the subsequent Resolutions No. 84—94, dated the 11th April 1911, and No. 1058-C.—1071-C., dated the 22nd December 1914. Under the executive instructions contained in Appendix II to the Resolution of the 25th June 1908, forfeiture of the remission earned and temporary or permanent exclusion from the remission system were included among the punishments that can be awarded for a prison offence, and the Resolution of the 22nd December 1914 amended the statutory rules by the addition of the rule referred to in paragraph 251 of the report, under which conviction for certain specified offences, committed after admission to jail, not only involves forfeiture of all remission earned up to the date of conviction, but also disqualifies the convicted prisoner from earning ordinary remission during the period of his sentence for the specified offence.

In paragraphs 248 to 254 the Committee makes several recommendations with the object of making the remission system more liberal. The Government of India are disposed to accept all these proposals on the general grounds that the more generous the scale of remission, the greater will be its reformatory influence, but before amending the statutory rules they would prefer to be favoured with the views of local Governments on the specific recommendations of the Committee, which are summarised in paragraphs (196) to (202) of Chapter XXIII.

10. The observations in paragraphs 256 and 257 on the working of the gratuity system in England and the United States of America have been read by the Governor General in Council with great interest, and he endorses the Committee's commendation of the principle underlying the system. Its general introduction into Indian jails would, however, be an almost complete innovation, and the Government of India are not at present prepared to pass any orders on the subject. They are content to leave the matter to be dealt with by local Governments by means of rules under section 60 (n) of the Act of 1894. I am, however, to suggest that the whole question should be considered by the first conference of Inspectors-General, which should be in the best position to advise local Governments as to the probable cost of the system and as to the extent to which uniformity throughout India would be feasible.

11. The Government of India agree with the Committee (paragraph 265) as to the valuable reformatory influence on prisoners of interviews and letters, and they accept the view that the rules on this subject should be as liberal as is compatible with Indian conditions and should be uniform throughout India. With this remark they commend the model set of rules appended to Chapter XI to the consideration of local Governments, and they suggest that statutory effect should be given to them as rules under section 60 (q) of the Act of 1894, with such minor modifications as may be necessitated by local circumstances.

12. So far as the Government of India are aware, no form of literary education is at present provided in Indian jails other than institutions reserved for juvenile or adolescent offenders. The Committee now recommend (paragraph 272) that elementary education, including some manual training, should be made compulsory for all prisoners not over the age of 25 in all central and district jails. The Governor General in Council regards this proposal as one of great value and he suggests that it should be carefully examined, first by the Inspector-General of Prisons in each province in consultation with the Director of Public Instruction, and later at the inter-provincial conference of Inspectors-General. The recommendations in paragraph 274 that a small library should be provided in every jail and that prisoners should be encouraged to read in their spare time might be similarly examined.

The proposal made in paragraph 275 regarding the occupation of prisoners during the hours between lock-up and bed-time has already been discussed in paragraph 12 of my letter, No. 307, dated the 17th December 1920.

13. The Governor General in Council attaches great importance to the recommendation made in paragraphs 279—283 regarding provision of religious and moral instruction in prisons, and he has no doubt that the Committee's views would be emphatically endorsed by educated Indian opinion. In his judgment it should now be recognized that it is the duty of the Government to provide religious and moral instruction for all prisoners in its charge, and he considers that this principle should be explicitly affirmed in all provincial jail manuals. The methods by which effect should be given to it must be defined for each province by the local Government, either by means of executive instructions or in statutory rules under Section 60 (e) of the Act of 1894. Uniformity of practice throughout India is for obvious reasons impossible; but the universal recognition of the principle will, in the opinion of the Governor General in Council mark a great advance in our prison system.

14. The Government of India are confident that all local Governments will give due consideration to the recommendations contained in paragraphs 285—288 on the subject of certain religious and caste observances, and will make the necessary Amendments in their jail manuals in regard to matters on which they accept the Committee's views.

Chapter XII.

15. In the first four sections of this Chapter the Committee discuss points of detail connected with the food, clothing and bedding of prisoners, and the sanitary and hospital arrangements in jails. It has not been the practice in the past for the Government of India to interfere in regard to such matters and they do not consider that their interference at the present juncture is required. They have no doubt that local Governments and their executive officers will give their most careful consideration to the Committee's suggestions and will introduce as soon as practicable such reforms as are obviously called for. In an earlier passage in the report (paragraph 13) the Committee have recorded their deep appreciation of all that has been accomplished by prison workers during the last 30 years to promote the material well-being of prisoners, and the Governor General in Council believes that in respect to most of the matters dealt with in this Chapter Indian jails already compare favourably with those of most other countries. In regard to diet and health, the Indian prisoner is probably better off than the bulk of the free population. During the four years ending 1917 the average death rate in all jails in British India was 18.55 per mille whereas in the same period the rate among the free population was 30.44. Even allowing for the heavy infant mortality among the free population, the figures are a striking illustration of the excellent sanitary conditions prevalent in Indian prisons.

16. The subject of overcrowding discussed in the fifth section of this Chapter stands, however, on a different footing. The figures quoted in the report show that in certain provinces this evil has attained very serious proportions and the Government of India agree with the Committee as to the desirability of very early steps being taken to provide a remedy. The only effective remedy is obviously the construction of new buildings, combined with the definite recognition of the principle, advocated in paragraph 335, that a separate berth should invariably be provided for each prisoner. The local Governments concerned have already been asked, in paragraph 5 of my letter No. 305, dated the 16th December 1920, to draw up a carefully considered programme of jail construction, to select at once sites or such new central jails as may be necessary, and to make financial provisions for their construction as soon as circumstances permit. In view of the comment which this Section of the report is likely to cause, the Government of India would be glad if local Governments would keep them informed of all steps taken to relieve overcrowding.

Chapter XIV.

17. It is unquestionably a serious defect in the Indian prison system that the released convict is thrown entirely on his own resources, and that except in a few of the larger towns there is no organisation to help him in the struggle to regain a place in society. The Government of India agree with the Committee that there is at the present day a wide field for societies, formed with the object of assisting released prisoners, and that such societies, while depending in the main on voluntary efforts, should at the outset receive a large measure of official recognition and support. Whether the time is yet ripe for the creation of the elaborate net-work of societies contemplated by the Committee is a question on which the Government of India do not feel competent to express an opinion. The decisive factor must obviously be the extent to which voluntary effort may be forthcoming. A start might however, be made in the Presidency towns and provincial capitals on the lines suggested by the Committee, and the organisations there formed might gradually extend their activities to less advanced localities as popular interest in the movement increases. But the initiative must obviously come from Local Governments, and the Governor General in Council considers that they should have complete discretion to make such experiments as may seem best suited to their own circumstances. While, therefore, he approves the principles underlying the Committee's proposals, he does not think that any useful purpose would be served by discussing these proposals in detail.

Chapter XVII.

18. The Government of India agree with the Committee as to the desirability of completely segregating civil from criminal prisoners. The number of the former is, however, so small that the provision of separate buildings for them would hardly be justified and accommodation of the type suggested in paragraph 464 should, in the opinion of the Government of India, suffice for the present. The remarks contained in paragraph 465 regarding the treatment and employment of civil prisoners are commended to the notice of local Governments.

19. It is apparent from the observations made by the Committee in section IV of this Chapter that the existing arrangements for under-trial prisoners are susceptible of great improvement, and the Governor General in Council trusts that the matter will receive the early attention of local Governments. He has reason to think that Indian opinion strongly disapproves the existing lack of discrimination between the treatment of convicted and unconvicted prisoners. The practice of placing under-trial prisoners in charge of convict officers, referred to in paragraph 473, should be stopped, and every effort should be made to prevent the association of prisoners charged for the first time with hardened offenders. For this purpose the sub-division of the under-trial yard on the lines recommended in paragraph 476 would seem to be essential, and the change should not be a very expensive one. The provision of separate cells for every under-trial prisoner is, however, a reform that can obviously only be carried out gradually. The Government of India are disposed to agree with the majority of the Committee (paragraph 475) that it is unnecessary to confine under-trial prisoners to their cells during the day time, but this and the other recommendations regarding the treatment of such prisoners contained in paragraphs 478 to 486 are questions which they are content to leave to Local Governments. They would be glad to learn the views of Local Governments on the proposal that half the period of detention before and during trial should be counted as part of the substantive sentence (paragraph 477).

20. The Governor General in Council agrees with the Committee's condemnation (paragraph 488) of the practice prevalent in certain provinces whereby the police provide the guard over prisoners sentenced to death. He also agrees that the use of leg-irons and of the belchain for such prisoners should not be permitted. Generally speaking, the Government of India think that condemned prisoners should be treated with all possible consideration and that such alleviations as are compatible with their safe custody should be allowed to them. They suggest that the provincial jail manuals should be revised by the light of the Committee's remarks on this subject.

21. The Government of India have nothing to add to the remarks of the Committee on female prisoners and lepers (sections VI and VII of Chapter XVII). As regards lunatics, they agree that non-criminal lunatics should not be committed to jail, and that criminal lunatics should not be detained in jail a day longer than is necessary. But the problem can only be solved by the provision of more expert alienists and more institutions for the reception of mental cases, and this is primarily a matter of money. There would not, however, appear to be much difficulty in setting aside part of a selected jail, as suggested in paragraph 509 for such lunatics as must be kept in prison and this proposal is commended to local Governments.

The Governor General in Council is pleased to accept the recommendations made in paragraph 510 of the report and to direct the withdrawal of the Home Department letter No. 15-1609-1617, dated the 15th October 1888, regarding the treatment of recovered lunatics.

Chapter XIX.

22. The Government of India are not in a position to comment on the observations of the Committee regarding the principles of prison construction, but they have no doubt that these observations and the standard plans enclosed with the report will receive careful consideration from, and will be of great assistance to, all local Governments which have to extend their prison accommodation.

23. It will be convenient to give a summary of the points dealt with in this letter on which the opinion of the Local Government is invited. They are:

- (a) the proposed introduction of a statutory rule under section 59 (3) of Act IX of 1894 to give effect to the suggestion that corporal punishment should be inflicted only for mutiny or incitement to mutiny and for serious assaults on any public servant or visitor (paragraph 2);
- (b) the suggestion that Section 53 (2) of Act IX of 1894 should be amended by the omission of the words "not less than" (paragraph 2);
- (c) the modifications proposed in the existing statutory rules regarding the imposition of handcuffs and fetters as a punishment and the Amendment suggested in Act IX of 1894, regarding separate cellular and solitary confinement (paragraph 3);
- (d) the proposed Amendment to Section 46 (2) of Act IX of 1894 by the interpolation of the words "for a stated period" after "change of labour" and the suggested additions to, and changes in, Section 47 of the same Act, dealing with combination of punishments, and also the minor changes in the statutory rules published as appendix II to the Home Department resolution of the 31st August 1896 (paragraph 5);
- (e) the proposed adoption of some uniform rules in regard to the use of fetters, for the safe custody of intra-mural prisoners and of those employed extra-murally (paragraph 6);
- (f) the specific recommendations regarding the remission system summarized in paragraphs (196) to (202) of Chapter XXIII of the Jail Committee's report (paragraph 9);
- (g) the proposal that half the period of detention before and during trial should be counted as part of the substantive sentence (paragraph 20).

In continuation of the Home Department letter No. 305, dated the 16th December 1920, I am directed to address you on the subject of the award of indeterminate sentences to convicts discussed in Chapter XVI of the report of the Indian Jails Committee.

2. The Committee are of opinion that long sentence of imprisonment may frequently be harmful rather than beneficial. They point out that punishment is awarded with regard to the crime committed, and that no consideration is or can be given to its suitability to the criminal or its likelihood to attain the object of reformation. To remedy this defect a system of indeterminate sentences and release on parole has been adopted in the United States. The Committee have outlined a procedure based on the American system but modified to meet Indian conditions. They propose that the sentence of every long term prisoner should be brought under revision as soon as he has served half the period awarded by the court, in the case of the non-habitual, or two-thirds of that period in the case of the habitual convict.

subject to a minimum of two and a half years, inclusive of the remissions earned but exclusive of remissions granted on special occasions. There would be constituted in each province a revising board consisting of the Inspector General of Prisons of the Province (who would be the Chairman), the District and the Sessions Judge of the area in which the jail is situated and a non-official appointed by Government. The Board would be assisted by a Secretary, who would collect and place before them such information regarding the convict as would enable them to judge of his fitness for release in advance of the expiry of his sentence, and to make a recommendation to the Local Government concerned for release with or without conditions and with or without an intermediate period of probation.

3. The Government of India are generally disposed to favour a system of Advisory Boards on the lines proposed by the Committee. They recognize, however, that the necessary preliminary to their establishment is an examination of details of their working and in particular of the instructions which will have to issue from Local Governments to the courts and from Inspectors-General of Prisons to Superintendents of Jails as to the manner in which the requisite information regarding the individual prisoner should be collected and placed before the Boards. They would be glad, therefore, if the proposals could be examined from the practical point of view and the final opinion of His Excellency the Governor in Council etc. could be communicated to them.

4. The Government of India also desire to know the views of the Local Government on the further recommendations contained in this Chapter, viz.:

- (a) the introduction of a probationary period, during which the convict should be gradually released from the restrictions of jail life, and the appointment of special officers to help and supervise them during this period (paragraphs 455, 456, 458 and 459);
- (b) that when a prisoner is released on parole the Revising Board should have power to suspend and set aside any order regarding him made under section 565 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (paragraph 459); and
- (c) that, in the event of the system of release on parole being accepted, the practice of granting remission of sentence on occasions of public rejoicing should be abandoned (paragraph 460).

With regard to the second point I am to state for the information of the Government of Madras etc. your information that in the Criminal Procedure Amendment Bill which was introduced in the Council of State on the 21st February 1921, an Amendment of Section 401 of the Code has been included so as to cover orders made under Section 565 of the Code, but not so as to vest the power of suspending and setting them aside in any authorities lower than the Local Government.

In continuation of the Home Department letter No. 305, dated the 16th December 1920, I am directed to address you on the subject discussed in Chapter XIII (insanity, mental deficiency and abnormality of prisoners) of the Indian Jails Committee's report.

2. The Committee are of opinion that the existing arrangements for the treatment of prisoners suffering from mental aberration in jails in India not amounting to insanity in its certifiable form are not satisfactory and they are in favour of adopting measures for remedying existing defects. The Committee therefore recommend that in each Province a special institution for mental defectives should be provided in which all persons falling within the definition of defective as laid down in the British Mental Deficiency Act, 1913 (3 and 4 Geo. 5, Chapter 28) with the omission of the reference to "birth and early age" can be collected for care and treatment. It is proposed that accused persons proved by medical evidence to be defective should be committed by the court to this institution and that the Inspector-General of Prisons should have the power to transfer defective prisoners from jails to it by recognising it as a prison for purposes of the Prisoners Act, 1900.

3. In Appendix VII to the report a minority of the Committee have advocated the following extensive measures:

- (i) that all young adults and children who commit crime should, as far as possible, be medically examined by an expert, in order to ascertain whether they are mentally abnormal or not;
- (ii) that all persons should be similarly examined before they are released on probation;
- (iii) that all prisoners should be similarly examined before they are released on parole;
- (iv) that all mentally defective and mentally abnormal prisoners should be sent to a special prison;
- (v) that selected medical officers in the prison service should be sent to the United States to study the subject and the methods there in use; and
- (vi) that, where a lunatic asylum is near a prison, the Superintendent of the Asylum should be appointed 'consulting alienist' to the prison (paragraph 342).

4. These measures which are largely based on American experience have not yet been accepted by alienists and criminologists in England and it would probably be premature to adopt them in India until alienists have had an opportunity of subjecting them to a careful examination in the light of actual experience of conditions obtaining in this country. At the same time, it appears to the Government of India, a great deal may be done in this direction and the following practical propositions have been recommended:

- (a) That Appendix VII to the report should be circulated in book form to Superintendents of Jails throughout India and Burma.
- (b) That mentally defective boys should be detained for purposes of education in special schools and that mentally defective habitual criminals who would otherwise be a danger to the community at large should be kept in special prisons. Further, boys incapable of education should be removed from reformatories and Borstal institutions and prisoners who have committed criminal assaults, sexual offences or burglaries should not be released until they have been examined by expert alienists.
- (c) That expert alienist advice should be given to the court in any case in which there is reason to suspect mental abnormality in the accused person.
- (d) That if a qualified Superintendent of a jail or reformatory school considers a prisoner mentally abnormal and therefore likely to be a menace to society, if released, he should be sent to the Central Jail for expert examination by the alienist of the Province concerned. His subsequent treatment should depend on the report of the specialist and his case should again be considered by the court if necessary.
- (e) That one prison in each Province should be placed under the supervision of a skilled alienist and psychologist and should comprise a reformatory and a school as well as a mental hospital for treatment in addition to being a place of permanent detention for those not amenable to treatment.

The Government of India are of opinion that all these propositions cannot be given effect to until a sufficient number of alienists are appointed. In this respect I am to invite your attention to the Home Department circular letter No. 10-Lunatic Asylums, dated the 22nd June 1921, in which the views of the Local Governments have been asked for on the question of appointing alienists from the United Kingdom on contract service for seven years in connection with the reorganization of the Alienist Department. You will observe that the recommendations of the Jails Committee give support to the suggestion made regarding the appointment of alienists. The Government of India attach considerable importance to these appointments being made at an early date and would be glad to know what action the Government of ^{Madras} ~~etc.~~ propose to take in the matter. The Government of India, however, are of opinion that the suggestion (a) above can be fully carried out at once and that the suggestions (b) and (d) can be partially carried out by local medical officers and I am to suggest, that if ^{you} ~~His Excellency the Governor in Council~~ ^{etc.} sees no objection, steps should be taken to give effect to them in the manner most suitable to the particular circumstances of each Province. Superintendents of jails should also be encouraged to study the questions discussed in this chapter of the report and subject them to the test of Indian experience. With the appointment of alienists and a growing interest on the part of responsible jail officers it will be possible to formulate a policy suitable to India with a greater degree of confidence than at present.

DISCONTENT AMONG THE STAFF OF THE MILITARY ACCOUNTS DEPARTMENT.

161. Mr. B. S. Kamat: (a) Will Government be pleased to state if they are aware of any discontent among the clerical staff and the Subordinate Accounts Service of the Military Accounts Department?

(b) Is it true that promotions in the Subordinate Accounts Service in that Department have not been notified during the last 15 months; if so, will Government be pleased to state if this is in accordance with any decision to discontinue the practice of notifying promotions?

(c) Is it a fact that the revised list of the Subordinate Service showing the standing of each member has not been issued since 1919, and is it intended not to issue the same any further?

(d) Will Government be pleased to state if their orders contained in F. D. letter No. 1672 of 22nd November 1919, with reference to regulating the pay of subordinates have been strictly given effect to by Heads of Offices; if they have been departed from, will Government be pleased to state the reasons that led to such a departure?

(e) Will Government be pleased to state if there are any cases in the Military Accounts Department in which Senior Accountants and clerks are, as a matter of fact, drawing less pay than some of their juniors although belonging to the same grade, borne on the same roster, and serving at the same station; if so, is any action proposed to be taken to remove such an anomaly?

(f) Will Government be pleased to state how far the principle of the 'next below' rule, sanctioned in paragraph 3 (4) of the Finance Department letter No. 1020-Accounts, dated 26th October 1920, has been actually acted upon by Heads of Offices, and in how many cases?

(g) Will Government be pleased to state whether promotions to the grade of Superintendents and Deputy Examiners were made during the war according to seniority? If the answer is in the negative, are any steps being taken now to safeguard the interests of such of the senior men who remained unpromoted for no apparent disqualification of their own, in respect of fixing the initial pay under the time-scale rate of pay? When is it proposed to revert to the pre-war system of promotion by seniority on one roster?

(4) Have Government come to any decision regarding the extent and nature of recognition to be accorded to Associations or Unions of Clerks in the Military Accounts Department? Is it a fact that the Military Accounts Association, Poona Division, has not been even provisionally recognised by the Military Accountant General on the ground that its President is a retired member of the Military Accounts Department? If so, have Government ruled that ex-service men should not join such Associations, or should be ineligible to be office-holders therein?

The Honourable Mr. W. M. Hailey: (a) Government have received a number of memorials from members of the establishments mentioned requesting certain concessions additional to those sanctioned in Finance Department letter No. 1020-Accts., dated the 26th October 1920, and this circumstance must presumably be interpreted as meaning that some degree of discontent exists. On the other hand, the memorialists themselves acknowledge the value of the concessions which they have already received, and the Government of India are satisfied that no legitimate ground for discontent now exists.

(b) Promotions in the Subordinate Accounts Service of the Military Accounts Department, in all vacancies which had occurred up to the 30th June 1921, have been notified.

(c) The maintenance of a general roster of Accountants for the whole of India was prescribed by orders issued in October 1920. A roster corrected to the 1st April 1920, the date from which the reorganization of the Subordinate Accounts Service of the Military Accounts Department had effect, has recently been issued, and another roster corrected to the 30th of June 1921, the date up to which promotions have been made, will issue shortly. In future, similar lists will be issued periodically.

(d) The Government of India have no information that Heads of Offices have failed to observe strictly the orders of the Government of India contained in the letter quoted by the Honourable Member.

(e) The only cases of the kind are those in which a junior clerk or accountant received special promotion prior to the 1st April 1920, and by virtue of such promotion received a higher rate of pay on the time-scale introduced from that date. Accidental anomalies have arisen in this manner which it is impossible wholly to rectify.

(f) The Government of India have information that the rule mentioned has been acted upon by Heads of Offices to the full extent permissible. It is not considered necessary to call for details of individual cases.

(g) During the period of the war, temporary promotions were made, according to local seniority, to the grades of Deputy Examiner and Superintendent, but the next below rule quoted in the preceding clause of the Honourable Member's question fully safeguards the interests of all senior men; who did not receive such temporary promotion, in respect of their initial pay in their substantive appointments as accountant. The grade of Superintendent has been abolished from the 1st April 1920, and permanent promotions to the grade of Deputy Examiner are now made by selection from the senior Accountants on the permanent list.

(h) The answer to the first and third part of this clause is in the negative: the whole question of the recognition by Government of Associations of Government employees is under consideration and orders are about to be issued. The answer to the second part of the clause is, that a letter of the Military Accountant General refusing recognition of the Military Accounts Association, Poona Division, on the ground stated, has since been withdrawn.

WAGES, CONDITIONS OF SERVICE AND REPRESENTATIONS ON COMMITTEES OF MINERS.

162. Mr. N. M. Joshi: (a) Will Government be pleased to give :—

(i) The average daily wages that a miner (man, woman and child) working both above and below ground, (a) use to get in 1914 before the commencement of the war, and (b) gets to-day? and

(ii) The percentage in the rise, if any, of wages during this period?

(b) Will Government be pleased to give the average percentage in the rise of the cost of living since 1914?

(c) Will Government be pleased to state (i) whether they have considered the question of having a miner's representative or representatives on the Mining Boards, constituted under Section 9 of the Indian Mines Act, 1901; and (ii) if so, whether they intend to amend the said Act so as to make provision for such representative or representatives on the Mining Boards?

(d) Will Government be pleased to state (i) whether they have considered the question of having a miner's representative or representatives on the Committees, constituted under Section 10 of the Indian Mines Act, 1901; and (ii) if so, whether they intend to amend the said Act so as to make provision for such a representative or representatives on the Committees?

(e) (i). Has the attention of Government been drawn to the rise in the number of fatal accidents that took place in mines in the year ending 31st December 1919? (ii) If so, will they be pleased to state whether they have taken, or propose to take shortly, any steps to check this rise, and if they have taken steps to state what they are?

Mr. A. C. Chatterjee: (a) The Government of India are at present in consultation with Local Governments and employers with regard to a wage census. Until the census is taken, it is not possible to give an answer to this question, but I have certain figures collected unofficially which I shall be glad to show to the Honourable Member in confidence. These figures are not representative and cannot be guaranteed to be accurate.

(b) The Government of India are in consultation with Local Governments with regard to the preparation of Cost of Living Index Numbers, and it is not possible at present to give any accurate figures regarding the average rise in the cost of living since 1914.

(c) and (d). The revision of the Indian Mines Act is now under consideration and the Honourable Member's suggestion will be borne in mind.

(e) (i). The Honourable Member is referred to the answer given to Question No. 479, asked by Mr. Sachchidananda Sinha on the 15th of March 1921.

(ii) Rules have now been drafted adapting the existing rules to modern mining practice. In view of the constitutional reforms, it has been necessary to reconsider the position of the Central and Local Governments, as regards the power to make rules and regulations and, accordingly, it will not be possible to issue the new rules until the Act has been amended.

LEGISLATION FOR THE REGISTRATION AND PROTECTION OF TRADE UNIONS.

163. Mr. N. M. Joshi: Will Government be pleased to state whether they propose to introduce legislation for the registration and protection of Trade Unions as per Resolution passed by the Legislative Assembly on the 1st of March 1921? If so, when?

Mr. A. C. Chatterjee: The lines of the proposed legislation are at present under the consideration of the Government of India. It is hoped to address Local Governments very shortly and to introduce a Bill, if possible, in the spring of 1922.

RECOMMENDATIONS OF THE INDIAN JAILS COMMITTEE.

164. Mr. N. M. Joshi: Will Government be pleased to state what steps they have taken to give effect to the recommendations of the Indian Jails Committee?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: The Honourable Member's attention is drawn to the papers laid on the table in connection with the Question No. 160 asked by Mr. B. S. Kamat.

LEGISLATION ON THE LINES OF THE ENGLISH WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT.

165. Mr. N. M. Joshi: Will Government be pleased to state whether they propose to introduce legislation on the lines of the English Workmen's Compensation Act? If so, when?

Mr. A. C. Chatterjee: I would invite the Honourable Member's attention to the Supplement to the 'Gazette of India,' dated the 6th of August 1921, in which was published a letter from the Government of India No. L-859, dated the 29th July 1921, to all Local Governments and Administrations. This letter asks for the views of the Local Governments on the question of 'Workmen's Compensation.' We hope it may be practicable to introduce legislation early next year.

CONDITION OF LABOURERS IN MINES AND PLANTATIONS.

166. Mr. N. M. Joshi: Do Government propose to appoint, at an early date, a Committee to inquire into the conditions of the labourers working (a) on mines, and (b) on Tea, Coffee, and Indigo plantations in India?

Mr. A. C. Chatterjee: The Labour Bureau in the Department of Industries has devoted particular attention to the conditions of the classes of labourers referred to in the Honourable Member's question, by means both of personal investigations and of inquiries through officers of Local Governments. The information so far acquired does not indicate the desirability of the appointment of the suggested Committees which would moreover entail very heavy expense. It should also be remembered that conditions among these classes of labourers vary greatly in different Provinces and if any Committees are required, they ought to be provincial in character.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: May I ask whether the information collected by the Bureau of Labour will be available to the Members of this Assembly?

Mr. A. C. Chatterjee: I should like notice of that question.

PAY OF POSTAL AND TELEGRAPH PEONS, BOMBAY.

167. Mr. N. M. Joshi: Will Government be pleased to state whether they propose to reconsider the rates of pay of the postal and telegraph peons in Bombay City, and if so, will they be pleased to state what their proposals are?

Colonel Sir S. D'A. Crookshank: Government do not propose to reconsider the rates of pay of the postmen and telegraph delivery messengers in Bombay City. The present rates were fixed early last year on the recommendation of the Postal Committee.

The second part of the question does not, therefore, arise in their case. The case of telegraph peons other than delivery messengers employed in the Bombay Telegraph Office, is, however, under consideration.

WOMEN VOTERS FOR THE LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

168. Mr. N. M. Joshi: Can Government estimate the number of women who will be qualified to vote in the different territorial constituencies for the election of the Members of the Legislative Assembly if the sex disqualification be removed?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: The Government of India have no information which would enable them to make an estimate of any appreciable value.

NON-VOTABLE POSTS.

169. Mr. N. M. Joshi: Will Government be pleased to state the number of new non-votable posts created in the different Departments of all Presidencies and Provinces and in the Government of India since the beginning of the year 1918?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: The information is being collected and will be supplied to the Honourable Member in due course.

INDIANS IN IMPERIAL SERVICES.

170. Mr. N. M. Joshi: Will Government be pleased to state (a) the percentage of Indians in the various Imperial Services in India to the total strength of those services; (b) the maximum percentage of posts intended to be given to Indians; (c) the ratio at which the appointments are at present being filled by Indians to the total number of appointments filled; (d) the number of years that will be required for the Indians to actually attain the maximum percentage of posts open to them?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: A statement is laid on the table.

Statement showing the percentage, etc., of Indians in certain Public Services.

Service of Department.	Percentage of Indians to the total strength.	Maximum percentage of posts intended to be given to Indians.	Ratio at which the appointments are at present being filled by Indians to the total number of appointments filled.	Number of years that will be necessary for Indians to attain the maximum percentage of posts open to them.	Remarks if any.
1	2	3	4	5	6
Indian Civil Service	13 per cent.	48 per cent. according to existing orders.	34½ per cent.	9 years.
Indian Police Service.	5 per cent.	39 per cent. generally. (For N.W.F.P. not higher than 10 per cent. For Burma, the percentage of local recruits has been fixed at 22 of which at least 15 should be Burmans.)	The appointments are not at present being filled in any definite ratio but a number of Indians have been appointed by direct nomination.	In view of what is stated in column (4) it is not possible to give this information. It will depend on the conditions obtaining in the Police cadre in each Province.
Indian Forest Service.	14·5 per cent.	12½ per cent. for promotion from the Provincial Forest Service. 40 per cent. for direct recruitment (for Burma 25 per cent.)	In 1920 four Indians were found fit for appointment in India as probationers. The number of appointments made in England was 25. In 1921 twenty-one Indians have been appointed in India as probationers. Another 4 may be appointed in England. The number of appointments of Europeans made in England is not yet known. The total number of both classes it is being sought to obtain is 80.	This will depend upon the rate at which the Europeans already in the Imperial Forest Service disappear and upon the number of suitable Indians forthcoming annually. There is no maximum number of posts fixed as open to Indians but a percentage of annual recruitment is reserved for them. This percentage is liable to reconsideration.
Indian Agricultural Service.	25·7 per cent.	50 per cent. where adequate training facilities are provided for the training of qualified candidates in India.	During the past 17 months 19 appointments have been filled by Europeans and 12 by Indians, i.e., nearly 39 per cent. of the total number of vacancies have been given to Indians and the Government of India are now proposing to fill 8 appointments by Indians who have been reconsidered for appointment to the Service by the Selection Committee which lately sat for this purpose.	Cannot be gauged but the percentage of 50 will be worked up to as soon as qualified Indians are available.
Imperial branch of the Civil Veterinary Department.	About 2 per cent.	50 per cent. for the present	Five Indian scholars are now proceeding to England for training with a view to appointment to the Department and the present intention is to continue this policy in future years.	Impossible to say.
Indian Educational Service...	37·6 per cent. excluding Burma. 35½ per cent. including Burma.	50 per cent.	50 per cent. of the annual recruitment to the Indian, exclusive (until 50 per cent. of the total is reached) of Indians who may be transferred in posts transferred from the P. E. S. to the I. E. S.	Nothing definite can be stated but it is hoped that the 50 per cent. will soon be reached.
Indian Service of Engineers.	38 per cent.	50 per cent. in the provinces in India. 33 per cent. in Burma.	15 out of 23 or 1:1·5	The proportion of 50 per cent. will be attained as soon as possible.
Indian Medical Service.	Civil 14·18 per cent. Military 28·25 (excluding temporary officers).	No maximum percentage of posts to be given to Indians is laid down. Certain proposals for fixing a proportion are however under reference to the Secretary of State.	39 per cent. in 1919 77 per cent. in 1920 73 per cent. in 1921	Vide remarks in column (3).
Imperial Customs Service.	About 23 per cent. (excluding Anglo-Indians).	50 per cent. according to existing orders.	According to existing orders every other vacancy must be filled up by Statutory Native of India.	This depends on the number of vacancies occurring annually.	Excluding post reserved for the I. C. S.
Survey of India	There are no Indians of pure Asiatic descent in class I of the Survey of India but see column (3).	16 per cent. of class I appointments are reserved for and held by officers promoted from class II, who must on appointment to class II be Indians of pure Asiatic descent or Statutory Indians; Indians holding commissions in the Indian Army are also eligible for appointment.
Meteorological Department.	11·1 per cent.	No percentage is laid down for either Europeans or Indians, the intention being to fill as many appointments as possible by Indians.	Vide remarks in column (3)	Vide remarks in column (3).
Mint and Assay Department.	Mint Side.—No Indian out of a total sanctioned strength of 4. Assay Side.—Including 1 Indian just appointed on probation, there is one Indian out of a total strength of 4 or 25 per cent.	No fixed percentage is reserved, or is intended to be reserved for Indians.	Mint Side.—Appointments are, as a rule, made from the Corps of Royal Engineers as being prima facie , the most suitable incumbents for the post, but the Government are not precluded from selecting for a vacancy any candidate, whether European or Indian, who possesses the necessary qualifications. Assay Side.—Vacancies in this Department are now filled by direct appointment, either in India or in England, of qualified metallurgical chemists. Recourse is had to recruitment in England only if no qualified person is available in India. Vacancies are advertised in the press.	Vide columns (3) and (4).
Royal Indian Marine	NIL.	No percentage has been laid down.	Vide columns (2) and (3)	Vide columns (2) and (3).

INDIANS IN THE FOREIGN AND POLITICAL DEPARTMENTS ON RS. 1,000 AND ABOVE.

171. Mr. N. M. Joshi: Will the Government be pleased to state (a) the total number of posts in the Foreign and Political Departments carrying a monthly salary of Rs. 1,000 and more and how many of these are held by Indians; (b) their proposals regarding the appointment of Indians to the higher posts of these Departments?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent (on behalf of the Honourable Sir John Wood) : (a) There are 15 posts in the Political Department of the Government of India carrying a fixed salary of over Rs. 1,000 per mensem. The remainder of the officers of the Political Department are on a time-scale of pay rising from Rs. 650 to Rs. 2,500 per mensem. At present 104 officers on the time-scale are drawing Rs. 1,000 or over. There are no Indians in the Political Department of the Government of India, as they have hitherto been admitted into the Political Department only in very exceptional cases.

(b) The Government of India have decided that in future a substantial proportion of Indians will be admitted to the Political Department and an announcement on the subject has recently been made in the Press.

INDIAN TRADE COMMISSIONER IN EAST AFRICA.

172. Mr. N. M. Joshi: Will the Government be pleased to state whether it is a fact that Mr. C. F. Andrews has expressed to the Government his approval of its proposal to appoint a European Officer of the Indian Civil Service as the first Indian Trade Commissioner in East Africa; (b) whether any representative Indian in East Africa has also expressed similar approval?

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: It is recorded in the Commerce Department file on the subject that Mr. Andrews in the course of conversation expressed himself in favour of the appointment of a European as the first Indian Trade Commissioner in East Africa. Sir Benjamin Robertson on his return from East Africa, also reported that the Indian commercial community in East Africa felt strongly that a European should fill the appointment for the present, but while they urged that a European should be appointed, they also urged that he should have an Indian Assistant. A private letter from a leading Indian business man in Mombassa also stated that it was the general feeling that a European should be appointed in the first instance.

DIFFUSION OF MEDICAL KNOWLEDGE THROUGH VERNACULARS.

173. Rai Sahib Lakshmi Narayan Lal: (a) Has the Government taken any action under the Resolution moved by Dr. M. N. Banerjee in the Imperial Council in 1916 recommending the adoption of measures for the diffusion of sound medical knowledge through the vernaculars for the relief of the rural population which was accepted by the Government? If not, why not?

(b) If any step has been taken, will the Government be pleased to give full information regarding the same?

(c) If no step has been taken, will the Government be pleased to state whether there is any hope of any step being taken to carry the said scheme into effect in the near future?

Mr. H. Sharp : (a) The answer is in the affirmative. The Government of India addressed the Local Governments in the manner proposed by the Honourable Dr. M. N. Banerjee in his Resolution.

(b) and (c). The replies received from the Local Governments and Administrations show that they did not approve the proposal to establish vernacular medical institutions. The Government of India, however, again in December 1918 addressed the Local Governments and Administrations. I should be glad to show the Honourable Member a copy of this letter if he so desires. The Government of India were unable to proceed further in the matter, as the question was one which fell within the province of the local Governments and is now a provincial transferred subject.

MEDICAL DEGREES OF INDIAN UNIVERSITIES TO BE NON-REGISTRABLE IN THE UNITED KINGDOM.

174. Mr. B. S. Kamat : (a) Have Government noticed the indignation caused among the Medical graduates of the Indian Universities by a reported decision of the British Medical Council whereby it is proposed to make the medical degrees of Indian Universities non-registrable in the United Kingdom?

(b) Will Government be pleased to place on the table all the information they may have on the subject as to the action proposed to be taken by the British Medical Council, and the steps Government have taken, if any, to safeguard the interests of Indian Medical graduates, especially their eligibility under the present rules for admission to the Indian Medical Service examination?

Mr. H. Sharp : (a) Yes.

(b) A copy of the Resolutions passed by the Executive Committee of the General Medical Council regarding this subject is laid on the table. The Government of India immediately on receiving intimation of the intentions of the General Medical Council communicated with the Secretary of State and the Local Governments. The question of the eligibility of Indian Medical Graduates for admission to the Indian Medical Service examination forms part of the general question involved. The Government of India realize the importance of the whole question and are giving their careful consideration to it.

Resolutions adopted by the Executive Committee of the General Medical Council at its meeting on the 21st February 1921.

(1) That the Executive Committee having carefully considered the evidence furnished in the replies of the Indian Universities and Colleges to the President's circular letter of June 8, 1920, set forth in the President's Memorandum of December 1920, regarding the course of study in Midwifery pursued by candidates for Indian Medical Diplomas now registrable in the United Kingdom, and entitling practitioners possessing them to practise midwifery in this country, is not satisfied that such diplomas under existing conditions furnish a sufficient guarantee of the possession of the requisite knowledge and skill for the efficient practice of midwifery within the meaning of Section 13 (i) of the Medical Act, 1886.

(2) That the Executive Committee direct that a copy of the above Resolution and of the President's Memorandum be sent to each of the Indian Universities on the list contained in the Medical Register, with the intimation that unless evidence is received by the Executive Committee before the date of its meeting in February 1922 that their respective arrangements and requirements with regard to midwifery have been brought into satisfactory accordance with the Council's Resolutions with reference to professional education, the recognition hitherto accorded to their respective medical diplomas in pursuance of the above-mentioned Section of the Medical Act, 1886, will forthwith thereafter terminate.

(3) That a copy of the foregoing Resolutions and of the President's Memorandum be forwarded to the Secretary of State for India, for his information.

APPOINTMENT OF PASSENGER SUPERINTENDENTS ON RAILWAYS.

175. Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar : (a) Will the Government be pleased to state what action has been taken both by the Railway Board and by the various Railway managements to give effect to the Resolution of this Assembly recommending the appointment of Passenger Superintendents mainly to look after the third class passengers?

(b) Do the Government propose to lay on the table a list of Superintendents, if any, so employed showing their nationality, pay and dates of appointments?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn : (a) The attention of Railway Administrations was drawn by the Railway Board to the Resolution referred to and they were requested to give effect to its terms.

The Railway Board also drew the attention of Railway Administrations to the necessity for providing Passenger Superintendents with a training which would enable them to carry out their duties effectively and to the advantage of the public. It will be seen from the statement referred to in part (b) that the more important railways have already appointed Passenger Superintendents.

(b) The Honourable Member is referred to the statement laid on the table in response to part (a) of Lala Girdharilal Agarwala's question on this subject.

APPOINTMENT OF COUNCIL SECRETARIES FROM AMONG MEMBERS OF THE ASSEMBLY.

176. Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar : Will the Government be pleased to state whether the Governor General proposes to take action under Section 43A of the Government of India Act and appoint from among the Members of the Assembly Council Secretaries so as to give them opportunities of knowledge of the inner workings of the Departments of Government, and if so, when? If no action is intended to be taken, will the Government be pleased to state why not?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : I have nothing to add to the reply given by me to a similar question asked by Dr. H. S. Gour on the 5th September 1921.

EMOLUMENTS OF THE INDIAN CIVIL SERVICE AND THE IMPERIAL SERVICES.

177. Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar : Will the Government be pleased to state whether there are any proposals or requests to further enhance the pay or emoluments of the Indian Civil Service and the Imperial Services, and if so, whether the matter will be brought up before the Assembly before any definite commitments are made on behalf of the Government?

The Honourable Mr. W. M. Hailey : No such proposals are at present under consideration ; but the Honourable Member has doubtless seen the Home Department Resolution No. D.-449, dated the 26th July 1921 and the Finance Department Resolution No. 1559-E.A., dated the 16th August 1921, in which the orders of the Secretary of State on the memorials submitted on the subject by officers of the Imperial Services during the past two years have recently been announced. These orders disposed of the matter to which I understand the Honourable Member is referring.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar : Will the Assembly have any voice in revising the proposals now sanctioned ?

The Honourable Mr. W. M. Hailey : I am afraid I do not understand the exact process by which this Assembly would revise orders already passed by the Government of India and the Secretary of State.

MINING CONCESSIONS TO COLONEL FRANK JOHNSON.

178. Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar : Will the Government be pleased to state whether it is a fact that Colonel Frank Johnson has obtained either directly or indirectly some mining concessions from the Burma Government or any other Local Government ?

Mr. A. C. Chatterjee : No mining concessions have been granted to Colonel Frank Johnson personally in Burma, but concessions for oil have been granted by the Local Government to two Companies in which he is interested. In the Punjab, Colonel Frank Johnson has been granted by the Local Government a prospecting licence for oil over 1½ square miles in the Attock district. A prospecting licence is ordinarily granted for only one year in the first instance in order to enable the concessionaire to test the property.

Development of mineral resources which are Government property, is a provincial subject under the rules issued under Section 45A of the Government of India Act, and Local Governments have full powers to grant prospecting licences and mining leases without reference to the Government of India, provided that they are in accordance with the mining rules prescribed by the Government of India.

The Burma Government have stated that the concessions have been granted to the two Companies in pursuance of the ordinary industrial development of the province that they employ expert staff and have expended money freely investigating the mineral resources of the province, and that in all respects mineral concessions rules and regulations have been scrupulously observed and Colonel Frank Johnson's connection with the administration of martial law in the Punjab was not considered relevant.

The Honourable Member's question and this answer will be communicated to the Local Governments concerned.

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas : Will the Honourable Member be good enough to state when the year expires ?

Mr. A. C. Chatterjee : I should like notice of that Question. I cannot give the reply offhand, but it will probably expire some time next year.

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas : A further question, Sir, is it likely that the licence will be renewed or will it not be renewed ?

Mr. A. C. Chatterjee : That depends on the discretion of the Punjab Government.

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas : Burma Government ?

Mr. A. C. Chatterjee : I thought the question referred to the Punjab.

PROSECUTION OF GENERAL DYER.

179. Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar : Will the Government be pleased to state whether they have considered the question of the desirability of prosecuting General Dyer or at least of depriving him of his pension and to explain why no such action has been taken hitherto ?

Sir Godfrey Fell : The attention of the Honourable Member is invited to the statement (item 13) laid on the table at the meeting held on the 19th February last, in reply to Question No. 163* asked by Rai Bahadur Bakshi Sohan Lal.

(Question No. 180 was not asked and no reply was given.)

JURY SYSTEM IN FORCE FOR TRIAL OF EUROPEANS.

181. Rai G. C. Nag Bahadur : Having regard to the composition of the jury for the trial of Reed, the Assistant Manager of the Khoreal Tea Estate, do the Government of India propose to amend the jury system, as it now obtains, for the trial of Europeans accused of a criminal offence by an Indian ?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : The question is under the consideration of Government and I hope to be able to make a fuller statement as to the intentions of Government later.

PAY AND ALLOWANCES OF INDIAN IMPERIAL SERVICES.

182. Rai G. C. Nag Bahadur : Is it true that the Government of India are engaged in considering the question of increasing the pay and allowances of the Indian Imperial Services ? If the answer is in the affirmative, will the Government take the opinion of the Assembly upon the proposals before coming to a final decision ?

The Honourable Mr. W. M. Hailey : I would refer the Honourable Member to the reply which I have already given to a similar question by Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar.

PROSECUTIONS UNDER SECTIONS 124A AND 153A, INDIAN PENAL CODE.

183. Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar : (a) What has been the number of prosecutions in all the Provinces in India for offences under Sections 124A and 153A of the Indian Penal Code between April 1921 and August 1921 ?

(b) What are the corresponding figures for the same period in the years 1919 and 1920 ?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : I place a statement on the table giving the information asked for by the Honourable Member so far as it is available in our records, but the Honourable Member will understand that this is a matter with which Local Governments are chiefly concerned, and it would be more appropriate for him to obtain such information from them.

Mr. S. C. Shahani: May I ask a Supplementary Question, Sir? I should like to know the number of prosecutions under Section 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code and Sections 124A and 153A of the Indian Penal Code in the Province of Sind.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: I will obtain the information for the Honourable Member, but I am afraid I have not got it at my fingers' ends.

RAILWAY WORKSHOPS FOR TRAINING APPRENTICES IN MECHANICS AND ENGINEERING.

184. Mr. K. C. Neogy: Will Government be pleased to make a statement in regard to the different Railway Workshops where apprentices are trained in mechanics and engineering, showing:

- the number of Indians and Europeans and Anglo-Indians so trained during each of the last five years, and at present;
- the preliminary qualifications for admission in the case of different nationalities;
- the periods of training;
- the different rates of allowances drawn by them, the nature of residential accommodation and comforts provided to the different classes, and the different leave rules and holiday privileges governing them;
- the nature of appointments generally given to passed apprentices of different nationalities, and the maximum and minimum salaries usually attached thereto?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: Railway Administrations have been asked to furnish the information called for in reply to this question but, with the exception of one or two, it has not yet been received. It will be recognised that to obtain complete information from all railways will take some time and moreover the rules for the training of apprentices are still in their infancy. The Railway Board have, however, got this question under their consideration.

As regards the East Indian Railway apprentices, however, a complete statement of the situation has been received from the Agent and a copy is laid on the table.

Extract of letter No. 980, dated 27th August 1921, from the Agent, East Indian Railway Company, to the Secretary, Railway Board, Simla.

Nature of residential accommodation and comforts.

Almost all the European and Anglo-Indian apprentices are accommodated in the Company's Boarding House and others live with their parents or guardians in the stations. The Boarding House has a Superintendent and a Matron looking after the food and other comforts of the boys.

Hostels.

The question for the provision of hostels for the Indians is at present under consideration. Meanwhile two private houses are rented by the Company for the accommodation of the Special and 1st class Indian Apprentices, who have no guardians or relative to put up with in the stations. The management of these houses is in the hands of a Committee under the presidency of an officer of the Railway. The Company provides cooks, servants and necessary furniture, cooking utensils, etc.

3rd class Indian apprentices are mostly sons or relatives of the Indian workmen. They reside in their own houses either in the town or in the adjacent villages, except a few Indian Christians, who live in the Fraser Hostel, which is under the management of the Church Missionary Society.

Institutes fitted with libraries and play-grounds are provided both for Europeans and Indians.

RACIAL DISCRIMINATIONS IN RAILWAY WORKSHOPS.

185. Mr. K. C. Neogy: Is any discrimination made in the terms and conditions of apprenticeship and the general treatment of apprentices in Railway Workshops on racial grounds?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: So far as the East Indian Railway is concerned the reply to this question regarding discrimination in terms and conditions of apprenticeship will be found in the statement laid on the table in reply to the previous question. There is no discrimination in treatment.

INDIAN APPRENTICES AT THE JAMALPUR WORKSHOPS.

186. Mr. K. C. Neogy: (a) Is it a fact that the Indian apprentices at the Jamalpur Workshops of the East Indian Railway are not given the same opportunities for training as European and Anglo-Indian apprentices?

(b) How many Indian apprentices of Jamalpur have been selected for training in the Sibpur Engineering College, or sent to the Drawing Office during each of the last five years; and how many European and Anglo-Indian apprentices have been selected for the purpose during the same periods?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: (a) Indian apprentices are given the same opportunities as European and Anglo-Indian apprentices. This of course does not refer to the illiterate apprentices.

(b) The Sibpur class was only started in 1918, and so far those apprentices who have attended it are:

European and Anglo-Indian in 1918 two, 1919 two, and 1920 one.

These apprentices were specially selected for their qualifications. The number of European and Anglo-Indian apprentices receiving instruction in the Drawing Office at Jamalpur during the 5 years ended 1920 were:

1916 five, 1917 two, 1918 two, 1919 three, and 1920 three.

So far, the training of higher grade Indian apprentices being in its infancy, the necessity for sending them to Sibpur or the Drawing Office has not arisen. It is found that at present they need all the practical training in the shops that it is possible to give them.

DIFFERENTIAL TREATMENT OF APPRENTICES AT JAMALPUR.

187. Mr. K. C. Neogy: (a) Is it a fact that in regard to allowances, residential comforts, leave and holiday rules, and facilities for Railway travelling, the Indian apprentices at Jamalpur are treated differently from European and Anglo-Indian apprentices?

(b) Is it a fact that these Indian and non-Indian apprentices have to enter the workshops by different gates, that the Indians have to use a passage meant for ordinary workmen, and that they are subjected to search every time they pass through it?

(c) Is it a fact that these Indian and non-Indian apprentices have to use different devices for the purpose of marking attendance, the Indians having to lift brass tickets just like illiterate workmen?

(d) Is it a fact that the Indian apprentices are paid their allowances on the same day as ordinary workmen with whom they have to stand in a line for receiving the same, and that the Indian apprentices like illiterate workmen are not allowed to sign their names on the pay sheet?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: (a) I would refer the Honourable Member to the answer given to Question 184 (d). As regards facilities for travelling, Indian apprentices of the special grade are allowed one set of inter class passes per year during their three years of apprenticeship. Indian apprentices of the 1st and 3rd class are allowed one set of 3rd class passes a year. European and Anglo-Indian apprentices are allowed inter class passes, one set during the first 3 years of apprenticeship and two sets during their fourth and fifth years. During the Puja vacation, those lads who are proceeding to their homes are given an extra set of passes.

(b) Yes, Indian and non-Indian apprentices enter the shops by different gates. This is due to the fact that the Indian quarters are on the west side of the works and the quarters for Europeans on the east. (Laughter.) It is not a fact that Indians and Europeans are subjected to a search every time they pass through the gates. The staff are all liable to be searched.

(c) Indian apprentices lift brass key tickets and non-Indian apprentices turn keys in Bundy recorders.

(d) All Indian workmen, irrespective of pay (including men on Rs. 200 a month) are paid under the 'Box system of payment' and signatures of the payees are not required under this system. This is the quickest method of disbursement.

LETTER OF MR. GUR PRASAD IN THE 'AJ' AND PUNISHMENT OF STATION SUPERINTENDENT, MOGHUL SARAI.

188. Munshi Mahadeo Prasad: (a) Has the attention of the Government been drawn to the letter of Mr. Gur Prasad printed at page 7 of the Aj of the 10th June 1921, under the heading 'Goreka apradh, Kale ko dand'?

(b) If so, will the Government please state what punishment, if any, was meted out to Mr. Egan, the Station Superintendent at Moghul Sarai Railway Station, the officer referred to in the above letter?

(c) Is it not a fact that Mr. Gur Prasad has been served with a notice by the East Indian Railway Company to discontinue service?

(d) Has any representation been made by the Railway Indian Staff and the merchants in connection with the same and with what result?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: (a) The attention of Government has not been drawn to the letter in question and I have not been able to get a copy of it.

(b) Mr. Egan was not considered in any way to blame in the matter and has not therefore been punished. The facts of the case are:

A female passenger died in No. 5 Up Express on the 25th May 1921 and the husband and other relatives of the deceased decided to take the corpse to Benares for cremation. Accordingly, a wagon was attached to No. 5 Up Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway passenger and the husband of the deceased, with a view to having the corpse booked, approached Gur Prasad, Assistant Parcels Clerk. Gur Prasad was evidently not prepared to assist in the matter unless offered a gratuity by the passenger. A complaint was made to the Station Superintendent, Mr. Egan, who immediately inquired into the matter and had the corpse loaded up and despatched.

Mr. President : I think the rest of this story can be laid on the table.

Colonel W. D. Waghorn : An inquiry was subsequently held and it transpired that Gur Prasad did attempt to obtain a gratuity from the passenger in particularly heartless circumstances and Mr. Egan took Gur Prasad to task for his unseemly conduct. It has been ascertained that there was nothing in what Mr. Egan said that could be misconstrued as an insult to an individual, or a community.

(c) Gur Prasad was given a month's notice of discharge as he was considered an undesirable person to retain in the Company's employ.

(d) Two representations were sent to the Agent, East Indian Railway, one said to be from the mercantile community of Benares and Moghul Sarai, and the other from the Indian staff at Moghul Sarai. No action was taken on these representations.

EXPORT OF FOODGRAINS FROM INDIA.

189. Rai T. P. Mukherjee Bahadur : Has the Government taken any steps to remove the restrictions on export of foodgrains from India in accordance with the Resolution of the Council of State, dated 9th March 1921? If so, will the Government be pleased to state what steps have been taken?

Mr. J. Hullah : No steps have been taken.

WAGON DIFFICULTIES ON RAILWAYS.

190. Rai T. P. Mukherjee Bahadur : Is the Government aware of the wagon difficulties and its consequences? If so, will the Government be pleased to state what steps have been taken?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn : It is presumed that the Honourable Member refers to general complaint of the shortage of wagons, and consequent difficulty in meeting demands. I am glad to be able to assure him that the position in this respect is at present much improved. Indents for wagons in the coal-fields are being met practically in full and it is anticipated that the demands will shortly be fully met. As regards general merchandise, the present position is equally satisfactory. There has been a slight congestion of traffic on the Bengal and North Western Railway due to a heavy rush of grain and seeds to the ports, but apart from this exception, which is receiving attention, railways generally are reported to be coping satisfactorily with public requirements for wagons.

It is anticipated that some 6,000 wagons will be added to the stock during the current year and these, it is hoped, will assist to mitigate the shortage of wagons when an increased movement of traffic has to be met.

WAITING ROOMS FOR INTER CLASS PASSENGERS.

191. Rai T. P. Mukherjee Bahadur : Is the Government aware of the inconvenience of the intermediate class passengers for want of waiting rooms in Railway Stations? If so, do the Government intend to remove the alleged inconvenience by providing waiting rooms for intermediate class passengers, just like the Bengal Nagpur Railway?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn : As a general statement, it may be said, that Government are not aware of the inconvenience suffered by intermediate class passengers for want of waiting accommodation at Railway Stations.

Railway Administrations will, however, be invited to express their views on the subject.

SHORTAGE OF SECOND CLASS ACCOMMODATION.

192. Rai T. P. Mukherjee Bahadur : Is the Government aware that in all passenger trains, only two second class compartments are attached, one for females and another for males, but the latter always being monopolised by railway officers, the second class passengers are put to great inconvenience? Does the Government intend to remove the inconvenience by attaching more compartments?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn : It has been ascertained that the number of second class compartments provided on mail and passenger trains in India varies from 13 to 1 according to traffic requirements and considerations affecting train operation. Complaints of shortage of accommodation on any particular section receive attention from the railway administration concerned.

Reserved accommodation for ladies, where not ordinarily provided, can be arranged for on due notice being given to the Station Master concerned.

It is incorrect to say that the second class accommodation for males, where only two compartments are provided, is always monopolised by railway staff to the inconvenience of paying passengers. Orders already exist to the effect that pass-holders should give way to the travelling public.

In the circumstances, Government do not propose to take any action in the matter.

EXPORT OF HIDES, SKINS, ETC.

193. Haji Wajih-ud-din : (a) Will the Government be pleased to lay on the table a detailed export statement showing quantities of hides, skins, and guts, class by class, in each month from June 1919 to July 1921 from each port of India, respectively?

(b) When was the export duty on hides first imposed and how many representations have since then been made by the exporters urging removal of the same? Has any attention been paid to them?

(c) Are the Government aware of the fact that the export duty on hides has had a most detrimental effect on the trade in cow and buffalo hides especially in this inopportune time of high rate of exchange which now prevails and it has brought business practically to a standstill and, if so, do the Government propose to remove the same as soon as possible?

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes : (a) The Government fear that for the detailed statistics required they must refer the Honourable Member to the monthly statistical accounts of sea-borne trade, which are available in the Library. For the purposes of his question, however, the following information will be sufficient. In the six months ending December 1919 the monthly average export from India of raw cow hides was 3,923 tons; in the first six months of 1920 the monthly average export was 2,178 tons; in the second six months 773 tons, in the first 3 months of this year 1,187 tons; in the second 3 months 1,427 tons. The corresponding figures for goat-skins are :

2nd half of 1919	...	...	...	2,923 tons.
1st " " 1920	...	...	...	1,731 "
2nd " " "	...	...	...	545 "
1st quarter of 1921	...	...	...	772 "
2nd " " "	...	...	...	1,477 "

(b) The export duty was imposed with effect from the 11th September 1919. Numerous representations have been received against the continuance of the tax in the last 15 months and the subject has been under the continuous consideration of the Government of India.

(c) The Government of India do not understand the Honourable Member's reference to the present high rate of exchange. Nor do they accept his statement that the tax has brought the trade to a standstill. The Honourable Member appears to have forgotten that the subject was fully discussed in this House on the 18th March last and that the House negatived an amendment to the Finance Bill that the tax should be removed. The question, however, is one which is under constant examination in the Commerce Department.

ASSAULT ON AN INDIAN WIDOW BY PRIVATE MULLIGAN OF SIALKOT.

194. Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar : (a) Has the attention of the Government been drawn to the case in which one Private Mulligan of Sialkot was charged with making advances to an Indian widow on the bank of a Nullah and with assaulting her on her resistance, before the Cantonment Magistrate of Sialkot ?

(b) Do the Government propose to call for the records of that case, if they have not already got them and peruse the judgment ?

(c) Do the Government propose to take notice of the remarks of the Magistrate in that case ?

(d) Do the Government propose to take such deterrent action as will prevent the repetition of such quests on the part of His Majesty's soldiers stationed in India ?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : (a) and (b). Government have read the judgment referred to.

(c) The answer is in the negative.

(d) If by 'deterrent action' the Honourable Member means further disciplinary action against Private Mulligan, the reply is in the negative. Private Mulligan has been tried and sentenced by a criminal court for the specific offence with which he was charged, and no further punishment is admissible under military law for the same offence.

If, however, the Honourable Member refers to preventive action with the object of obviating incidents of this kind, the answer is that the local military authorities have the power to place out of bounds for troops any locality or localities in or in the neighbourhood of cantonments which they consider it undesirable for any reason for soldiers to visit. Any soldier, who, in contravention of orders placing a locality out of bounds, visits such locality, renders himself liable to punishment under military law for disobedience of orders.

THEFTS ON RAILWAYS.

195. Mr. Manmohandas Ramji : Will the Government be pleased to state the number of thefts both in the coaching and goods sections of Railways during the last three years ?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn : The information asked for is not available.

Railways may have statistics to show the number of cases in which the loss of whole or part consignments has been reported. These would not, however, necessarily represent the number of thefts committed. The prevalence of theft and pilferage on railways and the means of remedying these evils have been examined in detail by the Railway Police Committee whose recommendations as embodied in their Report are being taken up with Railways.

REVISION OF PAY OF POSTAL CLERKS, BOMBAY.

196. Mr. B. S. Kamat : (a) With reference to the revision of pay of postal clerks will Government be pleased to say whether the Director-General of Posts and Telegraphs gave an assurance to a deputation of postal clerks in Poona in July 1918, to the effect that war allowance at such rates as might be sanctioned by the Bombay Government for their subordinates in the Bombay Mofussil would be paid to the Post Office officials ?

(b) Is it also true that on the 5th of August 1918 the Director-General of Posts and Telegraphs informed the Honourable Mr. Paranjpye who had interviewed this officer on behalf of the postal clerks in the Bombay Presidency that special consideration would be shown to the Bombay Presidency postal clerks at the time of the general revision of pay then under consideration, with a view to compensate them for the difference in the scales of war allowance as sanctioned by the Bombay Government and the one for the Postal Department ?

(c) Is it not correct that the Bombay Government granted to their subordinates outside Bombay City, war allowance at the rate of 33½ per cent. on salaries from Rs. 20 to Rs. 30 and 25 per cent. on salaries from Rs. 30 to Rs. 70 with retrospective effect from 1st January 1918; and subsequently raised it to 70 per cent. for men up to the Rs. 50 grade ?

(d) If the answers to (a) and (b) are in the affirmative, will Government be pleased to say, if the assurance by the Director-General has been carried out so as to bring up the revision to rates quoted in (c) ? If not, will Government be pleased to state the reasons ?

(e) Are the Government of India aware that the postal clerks in the Bombay Presidency submitted memorials through the proper channels, addressed to His Excellency the Viceroy and Governor General in Council in September 1919 and August 1920, praying for arrears of war allowance from 1st January 1918 to 30th November 1919 at the rate sanctioned by the Bombay Government to their subordinates in the Mofussil ?

(f) Will Government be pleased to say whether they considered the request contained in these memorials for payment of arrears of war allowance, and if so, how they have been disposed of?

Colonel Sir S. D'A. Crookshank : (a) The Director-General of Posts and Telegraphs cannot recall any verbal assurance given by him to a deputation of postal clerks at Poona in July 1918. He may have told them that the question of the extension of the Bombay Government allowance to officials of the Bombay Postal Circle would be recommended by him.

(b) The Director-General informed the Honourable Mr. Paranjpye that special consideration would be shown to the postal clerks in the Bombay Presidency at the time of the general revision of pay then under consideration and that due regard would be paid to the high cost of living in the Bombay Presidency, especially as war allowance at rates higher than those sanctioned for the Postal and Telegraph subordinates had been sanctioned for the subordinates of the Local Government.

(c) Yes.

(d) The rates of pay sanctioned for the postal clerks of the Bombay Presidency at the time of the general revision of February 1920 were higher than the rates sanctioned for other parts of India. The revision sanctioned by Government on the recommendation of the Postal Committee further enhanced the rates of pay for the comparatively dearer localities comprised within the Bombay Postal Circle. As the recommendations of the Postal Committee were framed after careful investigation and with the full knowledge of the fact that special rates of local allowance were paid to the Local Government subordinates no special examination has been made to ascertain whether the rates of pay finally sanctioned in September 1920 are equivalent to the rates quoted in (c).

(f) The memorials were considered. As a general revision of pay was then contemplated, the grant of the war allowance was not considered necessary. An interim allowance was, however, granted from the 1st September 1919.

WANT OF WAITING ROOMS AT THE VICTORIA TERMINUS STATION, BOMBAY.

197. Mr. B. S. Kamat : (a) Are the Government of India aware that passengers at the Victoria Terminus, Great Indian Peninsula Railway, Bombay, are put to great inconvenience for want of waiting rooms for men, 1st, 2nd and 3rd class?

(b) Have the Railway Board asked the Great Indian Peninsula Railway Administration to consider the feasibility of at least converting a portion of the large 1st and 2nd class waiting rooms for ladies into some temporary accommodation for men who have to travel through this important Terminus and are seriously inconvenienced during nights while waiting for their trains?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn : (a) Government have received no complaints regarding waiting accommodation at Victoria Terminus, Bombay.

(b) The proposal to convert a portion of the existing 1st and 2nd class waiting rooms for ladies into temporary accommodation for gentlemen is not feasible. It is, however, proposed to provide 1st and 2nd class waiting rooms for gentlemen when the new station building at Victoria Terminus is constructed; while, as regards third class passengers, a large waiting hall is already provided at the north end of the station and it is not considered that any additional accommodation is required for this class.

PROHIBITION LEGISLATION.

198. Mr. P. P. Ginwala : Will the Government be pleased to state:

(a) Whether legislation for the prevention of intoxicating drinks has been initiated in any Provincial Councils, and if so, in which of them?

(b) Whether it is the fact that a Prohibition Bill which was to be introduced as a private Bill in the Bombay Legislative Council had to be postponed because it required the sanction of the Government of India, and, if so, whether such sanction has been accorded?

(c) The policy of the Government of India with reference to Prohibition Legislation in Local Legislative Councils?

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes : (a) It has been reported to the Government of India that a Member of the Legislative Council in the Central Provinces has signified his intention to move for leave to introduce during the current Session a Bill to promote temperance with a view of securing the total prohibition of liquor traffic in the Central Provinces by conferring on voters in prescribed areas power to control the grant of license under the Central Provinces Excise Act, 1915. No similar reports have been received from other Local Governments.

(b) Mr. Gupte, who desired to introduce the Bill in question, was informed by the Government of Bombay that his Bill, the purpose of which was to prohibit the manufacture, sale and import of liquor in the Bombay Presidency, required the previous sanction of the Governor General under Section 80A of the Government of India Act. A letter has been received by the Government of India from Mr. Gupte applying for previous sanction. The question whether such sanction should be accorded is under the consideration of the Governor General.

(c) The Government of India can make no statement on the subject at present.

HIGH COURT IN BURMA.

199. Mr. P. P. Ginwala : Will the Government be pleased to state:

(a) Whether the despatch of the Government of Burma relating to the establishment of a High Court in Burma has been transmitted to His Majesty's Secretary of State for India and, if so, on what date?

(b) The probable date on which the establishment of such High Court may be expected?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : The despatch has not yet issued. It is hoped that it will issue shortly and revised estimates of the cost of the proposals which have been received from the Government of Burma since the answer was given to a similar question by Mr. O'Donnell will be included in it.

JUDICIAL SERVICES IN BURMA.

200. Mr. P. P. Ginwala : Will the Government be pleased to state whether the proposals of the Government of Burma relating to the reorganization of the Judicial Services has been transmitted to His Majesty's Secretary of State for India, and, if so, when a reply may be expected?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : The case is connected with that relating to the proposed High Court. It is hoped that the recommendations of the Government of India will be forwarded to the Secretary of State very shortly and that the scheme, if sanctioned by the Secretary of State, will be introduced from early in 1922.

RICE AND PADDY TRAFFIC IN BURMA.

201. Mr. P. P. Ginwala : Will the Government be pleased to state :

- the market rate of paddy and white rice in Burma on the 30th of April 1921, and every subsequent week thereafter until the 9th of July 1921;
- whether it is not the fact that the Government of India had declared that it would introduce some form of control if the market price of paddy at any time exceeded Rs. 180 per 100 baskets;
- the date on which the order suspending the issue of licenses for export to foreign ports was issued;
- the reasons why it was not issued earlier when the prices of paddy showed a marked tendency towards exceeding the limit of Rs. 180;
- whether any, and if so, what communication or instructions were received from His Majesty's Secretary of State for India with reference to the issue of such order?

Mr. J. Hullah : (a) The statement asked for is placed on the table.

(b) No. The Government of India only declared that they reserved power to do so.

(c) 1st July 1921.

(d) The Government of India saw no reason for action till the amount of rice available for export to foreign countries was approaching exhaustion. The primary object of their action was not to control prices but to conserve, in accordance with their announcement of the 4th December 1920, adequate supplies for India.

(e) No instructions were received from the Secretary of State. On the 27th June, the Government of India received a telegram from him with reference to a question in Parliament, suggesting that the Rangoon rice market had been entirely suspended, owing to the rise in the price of paddy, that supplies had been cornered and that the local merchants were demanding the intervention of Government. He therefore asked for information as to the actual position and what steps were being taken to meet it. This information was supplied to him, and he has not addressed the Government of India further on the subject.

Statement showing the weekly market rate of paddy and white rice from the 30th April to the 9th July 1921.

NATIONAL AND GOVERNMENT SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

202. Mr. P. P. Ginwala : Will the Government be pleased to lay on the table a statement showing with reference to each Province, since the 1st of January 1921 :

- the number of 'National' Schools and Colleges opened;
- the number of students in such Schools and Colleges;
- the number of students in Government or aided Schools and Colleges, now as compared with the year 1920?

Mr. H. Sharp : (a), (b) and (c). The information is being collected and will be supplied later.

MUNICIPAL CONTRIBUTIONS TO 'NATIONAL' EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS.

203. Mr. P. P. Ginwala : Will the Government be pleased to state whether any and, if so, what Municipalities have made or promised to make contributions towards the maintenance of 'National' Educational Institutions?

Mr. H. Sharp : The full information is being collected and will be supplied later. The information received from Burma, Bihar and Orissa, and the minor administrations shows that in those areas no municipalities have made or promised contributions towards 'National' educational institutions. In the Central Provinces, the municipalities of Raipur and Amraoti have resolved to give Rs. 1,000 and Rs. 475, respectively, to the Tilak Swaraj Fund for national education.

The Government of Madras have no information on this matter.

MUNICIPAL SUPPORT FOR 'NATIONAL' EDUCATION.

204. Mr. P. P. Ginwala : Will the Government be pleased to state :

- Whether any Local Governments have defined their policy with reference to Municipal and other local bodies desirous of supporting 'National' Education out of Municipal Funds?
- If the answer to (a) is in the affirmative, the nature of such policy?

Mr. H. Sharp: (a) Only two Local Governments—Madras and Bombay—have so far defined their policy in this matter. The Government of Bihar and Orissa have had to take action in one particular case which came to their notice.

(b) Information regarding the policies adopted by the Governments of Madras and Bombay and the action taken by the Bihar and Orissa Government is laid on the table.

Policies adopted by the Governments of Madras and Bombay and the action taken by the Government of Bihar and Orissa in connection with the support of national education out of municipal funds.

The Madras Government have issued orders under rule 37, Schedule IV of the District Municipalities Act, 1920, prohibiting expenditure of municipal funds on educational institutions not recognised by Government, the District Educational Council or other specific authority. A similar draft rule has been published under the Local Boards Act, 1920. The object is to prohibit expenditure of local and municipal funds on so-called national institutions not conforming to the requirements of the Education Department.

The general attitude of the Bombay Government may be summarised as follows:

- (1) They approve the proposal that a municipality which is able and willing to do so should defray the cost of primary education from its own funds.
- (2) The powers of inspection and control vested in Government by statute must remain unimpaired and unaffected by any such decision on the part of a municipality, and they will be used.
- (3) The rights and emoluments of the existing staff of teachers in municipal primary schools must be fully safeguarded.
- (4) Facilities will be provided by Government for the children of those parents who do not wish to send them to the municipal schools.

It is understood that it is not intended to put into immediate practice the powers mentioned in (2) above.

In Bihar and Orissa, it came to the notice of the Local Government that a municipality was showing sympathy with the non-co-operation movement and that there was a possibility of funds being used for national schools. The Local Government accordingly directed that the grant should not be paid till the municipality had given an assurance that the school would be conducted according to the rules of the Department. Apart from this instance, the Local Government have had no occasion to state a definite policy, but they would not refrain from utilising the powers which are given to them to prevent any assistance being given to 'national schools.'

SALE OF OPIUM BY INDIA TO CHINA.

205. Mr. P. P. Ginwala: Will the Government be pleased to state:

- (a) Its policy and how the position now stands with reference to the sale of opium by India to China?
- (b) Whether the Government intends to stop the manufacture and sale of opium for other than medicinal purposes, and if so, when it proposes to give effect to such intention?

The Honourable Mr. W. M. Hailey: (a) The export of opium to China from Indian ports is prohibited, and there is no sale of opium by Government for export to China.

(b) I assume that the second part of the Honourable Member's question refers to the manufacture and sale of opium for export. The use to which Indian opium may be put in foreign countries which import it is determined by the Governments of such countries and not by the Government of India.

INDIANS IN FOREIGN COUNTRIES.

206. Mr. K. Ahmed: (a) How many Indians of all ranks are abroad in Egypt, Persia, Asia Minor, Palestine, Mesopotamia, Turkey, Africa, and other places in connection with British undertakings beyond India?

(b) How many of them are Muhammadans and how many non-Muhammadans of all grades?

(c) Do the Government propose to withdraw the Indians, specially the Muhammadans, employed in the Muhammadan countries abroad without delay?

Sir Godfrey Fell: (a) On the 1st August 1921, the number of Indians of all ranks of the Army serving outside India was approximately:

Combatants	...	...	...	...	54,789
Followers (including Labour Corps)	...	...	...	...	42,182

(b) The Government are not in possession of statistics showing the number of Muhammadans and non-Muhammadans serving in all the units employed out of India. The following figures, however, are available, and the Government trust that they will suffice for the Honourable Member's purpose:

In the Cavalry, Infantry and Pioneers serving out of India on the date mentioned, 37 per cent. were Muhammadans and in the Artillery 38 per cent.

(c) No. A reference is invited to Resolution No. 2 passed at the meeting of the Legislative Assembly held on the 28th March 1921.

STAFF IN THE EAST INDIAN AND BENGAL NAGPUR RAILWAY OFFICES.

207. Mr. K. Ahmed: (i) Will the Government be pleased to state the number of officials and the number of clerks (respectively) at present in the:

- (a) East Indian Railway Office at 105, Clive Street, Calcutta, and
- (b) Bengal Nagpur Railway Office at 12, Garden Reach Road, Calcutta?

(ii) How many among them are Hindus, Muhammadans, Europeans and Anglo-Indians, respectively?

(iii) What are the number of appointments made in the last five years among clerks and officials (respectively) in those offices and how many among them are Hindus, Muhammadans, Europeans and Anglo-Indians, respectively, mentioning their grades and their initial salary at the beginning?

(iv) What principle was followed in making those appointments?

(a) Was it notified for filling up such vacancies; or

(b) were individual candidates brought in by some officers or head clerks who were in a position to give such information to the candidates for such vacancies without the knowledge of the public?

(v) Do Government propose to adopt the above method of securing such appointments and make it a rule that whenever a vacancy occurs in any department it should be notified in the public gazette and that Associations of the important Communities may be informed about such vacancy by sending notices to them as well?

(vi) Are the Government aware of the Bengal Government Circular that in filling up a vacancy preference will be given to Muhammadans until one-third of the entire posts are filled up by Muhammadans?

(vii) Do Government propose to follow that rule in all its departments if the Muhammadan Associations and the Community are in a position to supply such qualified men as may be required for such vacancies?

Col. W. D. Waghorn : The information required in regard to the nationality of the officials and clerks employed in the head offices of the East Indian and Bengal-Nagpur Railway Companies, is not yet ready. When it is received, it will be sent to the Honourable Member.

CIVIL AND CRIMINAL APPEALS, ETC., IN THE CALCUTTA HIGH COURT AND APPOINTMENT OF ARBITRATION COURTS.

208. Mr. K. Ahmed : (i) Will the Government be pleased to state how many appeals, motions and references, both civil and criminal, were heard by the Calcutta High Court on the Appellate Side for the last five years and among the parties to those appeals, motions and references, how many of them were Muhammadans and how many Hindus?

(ii) Are the Government aware that arbitration courts have been started in each District and that a very few cases are tried in Government Courts in consequence?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : (i) A statement, showing the number of cases disposed of by the Calcutta High Court on the Appellate Side during the years 1916 to 1920 under the heads specified therein, is laid on the table. Government have no information as to how many of the parties to the suits were Hindus or Muhammadans.

(ii) Government are aware that arbitration courts have been started in certain districts, but they are not aware that very few cases are tried in Government Courts in consequence.

EMPLOYMENT OF INDIANS IN HIGHER SERVICES.

209. Mr. K. Ahmed : Will the Government be pleased to lay on the table a statement showing in detail what steps have so far been taken to give effect to the recommendation of the Public Services Commission as regards the employment of Indians in the higher grades of the various services in India?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : The Honourable Member is referred to the statement laid on the table to-day in connexion with Mr. N. M. Joshi's question on the subject.

DIARCHICAL SYSTEM IN THE CENTRAL GOVERNMENT.

210. Mr. K. Ahmed : Will the Government be pleased to state whether they propose to introduce the Diarchical System in the Central Government?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : An Honourable Member of this Council has given notice of a Resolution on the subject of Constitutional Reforms and Government will announce their policy in the debate on that Resolution.

OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR OF INFORMATION IN BENGAL AND THE CENTRAL BUREAU.

211. Mr. K. Ahmed : (a) Are the Government aware that the office of the Director of Information in Bengal is being abolished?

(b) Are the Government aware that the public look upon this Department as an unnecessary burden on the public revenues?

(c) Do Government propose to emulate the example of the Bengal Government and abolish the Central Bureau of Information?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : (a) The Government of India are aware that the office of the Director of Information, Bengal, has been abolished.

(b) and (c). The answer is in the negative.

ABOLITION OF THE STAFF SELECTION BOARD.

212. Mr. K. Ahmed : Do Government intend to abolish the Staff Selection Board, and substitute a scheme for recruitment of officers selected by the official and non-official Members of the Provincial Councils?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : The answer is in the negative.

EXEMPTION OF BRITISH SHIP COMPANIES FROM INCOME-TAX.

213. Mr. K. Ahmed : Will the Government be pleased to state whether any notifications were issued under Section 44 of the Income-tax Act of 1918, exempting British Ship Companies from paying Income-tax and state the reasons for such exemption, if any?

The Honourable Mr. W. M. Hailey : Non-resident shipping companies were exempted from the tax under Section 5 of the Act of 1886. In introducing the Bill which became the Act of 1918, Sir William Meyer, in his speech in the Imperial Legislative Council on the 6th February 1918, stated that the exemption granted in 1886 was due to the difficulty anticipated in estimating the Indian profits of such companies and in collecting the tax, that the provisions of the new Bill might avoid these difficulties, that the exemption was therefore omitted from the Bill in order that the Government might have a free hand to deal with the matter, but that so long as war conditions continued, the Government of India did not propose to take any active steps to tax these companies and that the existing exemption would be maintained by a Notification under clause 44 of the Bill leaving the final decision over for consideration when peace conditions returned. In accordance with this statement a notification was issued on the 28th March 1918 exempting from the tax all non-resident shipping companies. When rules for assessing such companies to the tax were framed, the exemption was withdrawn with effect from the 1st April 1919, except as regards shipping companies incorporated or registered in the United Kingdom or in any of His Majesty's Dominions. The exemption in favour of the latter companies was also withdrawn on the 22nd April 1921, and all shipping companies are now liable to the tax. The reason for not withdrawing the exemption in favour of British and Dominion shipping companies at the time when the exemption was withdrawn in favour of other non-resident shipping companies was that it was decided not to withdraw the exemption in favour of the former until arrangements had been come to with the Government of the United Kingdom for relief from double income-tax where the same income was liable to tax in the United Kingdom and in India.

Mr. K. Ahmed : May I ask a Supplementary Question, Sir? Could not the Honourable Member in charge give an idea regarding the amount per year, if it is available in the office for the last few years?

The Honourable Mr. W. M. Hailey : Will the Honourable Member kindly repeat his question? I did not catch what he said.

Mr. K. Ahmed : Will the Honourable Member be good enough to give an idea to the Honourable Members of this Assembly with regard to the average amount of loss in income per year that India has sustained?

Mr. President : The Honourable Member had better give notice of that Question.

HARDSHIPS OF PORTERS AND COOLIES AT RAILWAY STATIONS AND CORRUPTION OF STATION SUPERINTENDENTS, ETC.

214. Mr. K. Ahmed : (i) Are the Government aware that owing to the insufficiency of their income, the porters and coolies of Railway Stations suffer great hardships and miseries?

(ii) Do the Government know that Station Superintendents and Station Masters take a portion of their income?

(iii) Will the Government be pleased to state what is the salary per month of the Station Superintendents of Sealdah and Katihar Railway stations on the Eastern Bengal Railway and how much is their additional income per month from the share of the wages of the coolies and from other sources, if there be any?

(iv) Are the Government aware that beside the Station Masters' and Station Superintendents' percentage the coolies are compelled to pay some portion of their income to the Sirdars and other officers of the railway station?

(v) Are the Government aware that a good many coolies are not taken into the service of the Railway Company because they do not pay bribes to the Railway officers concerned?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn : (i) and (ii). Porters on the Eastern Bengal Railway are paid at a rate of Rs. 1-1-14 per mensem which is considered adequate.

Coolies are engaged by Station Superintendents and Station Masters in their capacity as Contractors for loading, unloading and transhipment of goods, parcels and luggage. At certain of the larger stations, the Station Superintendents or Station Masters also arrange for the supply of licensed coolies for the carriage of passengers' luggage. The supply of labour in Bengal is usually short of the demand and if the wages earned by these coolies were insufficient, it is presumed, they would not undertake this work.

(iii) The pay of the Station Superintendent, Sealdah, is Rs. 600 and the Station Master, Katihar, Rs. 480 per mensem. The former has a contract for the supply of labour for handling luggage, parcels and passengers' luggage, under which he receives Rs. 120 per mensem. The latter supplies labour for loading, unloading and transhipment of goods, luggage and parcels, for which he receives Rs. 337-8-0 per mensem.

(iv) Porters employed by the Railway are certainly not called upon to pay any portion of their income to Sirdars or others. Station Superintendents and Station Masters settle terms with the coolies engaged by them direct. If the coolies are dissatisfied there is nothing to prevent them leaving.

(v) The reply is in the negative.

MESSRS. BIRD AND COMPANY'S INCOME IN RESPECT OF TRANSMISSION OF PARCELS, ETC., FROM RAILWAY WAGONS.

215. Mr. K. Ahmed : (i) Will the Government be pleased to state what is the annual income of Messrs. Bird and Company from each station in respect of which they are given contract for transmission of parcels, baggages and goods from the Railway wagons and steamers and at what rate and how much they pay for such transmission to the coolies employed by them?

(ii) Do Government propose to remove Messrs. Bird and Company's service and introduce a more popular method for transmitting passengers' luggage and parcels and goods from wagons?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn : (i) A statement showing the amount paid to Messrs. Bird and Company for handling goods and coaching traffic at each station on the Eastern Bengal Railway for which they had a contract with the railway during the year ended 31st March 1921 (the latest figures available), is placed on the table. It is not known at what rate and how much Messrs. Bird and Company pay coolies employed by them for this work.

(ii) It is not proposed to cancel Messrs. Bird and Company's contract which is reported to be working satisfactorily.

Statement showing the amount paid to Messrs. Bird and Company, for handling goods and coaching traffic at each station during the year ended 31st March 1921.

LICENSES OF VENDORS OF SWEETMEATS, ETC., AT RAILWAY STATIONS.

216. Mr. K. Ahmed : (i) Is it a fact that the vendors of sweetmeats, fruits, sundry goods and other articles in railway stations incur extra cost in order to get license from the station authority?

(ii) Are the Government aware that there is always a hard competition among station masters in order to get their transfer to important stations where they get more additional income apart from their salary?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn : (i) The station staff are not authorised to make any charge to vendors for the license or privilege of offering for sale sweetmeats, fruit, etc., on the platforms of railway stations. Government have no information on which deterrent action could be taken, that illicit charges, such as the question suggests, are made.

(ii) Transfers are ordered by the Railway Administration in the interests of the Railway and not of the individual.

PASSENGER SUPERINTENDENTS ON THE EASTERN BENGAL RAILWAY.

217. Mr. K. Ahmed : (a) Will the Government be pleased to state how many Passenger Superintendents there are on the Eastern Bengal Railway and what is their pay per month and since how long they are in the service of the Railway Company?

(b) What are their duties and what service have they rendered and what amount in total have they been paid since their appointment?

(c) Are the Government aware that as a rule these people are very old and on account of their not being familiar with the habits, customs, convenience, comfort and pleasure of the Bengali passengers, they are not of any use to them and the object of keeping them as Passenger Superintendents is frustrated thereby?

(d) Do Government propose to remove the present incumbents and bring in better substitutes to promote the object of these appointments?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn : (a) The number of Passenger Superintendents employed on the Eastern Bengal Railway is 20, of whom 1 is paid Rs. 155, 15 are paid Rs. 150 each, 1 is paid Rs. 145 and 3 Rs. 140 each per mensem.

As regards their service, 8 were employed in 1910, 1 in 1911, 2 in 1912, 5 in 1913, 1 in 1919 and 3 in 1920.

(b) A statement of the duties performed by these Passenger Superintendents is placed on the table. They are recruited from retired Military Officers on the recommendation of the Military Secretary to His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief. Information regarding the total amount paid to them since their appointment is not readily available and it would necessitate a reference to the records of 11 years to compile the figures. The pay of Passenger Superintendents when first appointed in 1910 was fixed at Rs. 105 and the pay drawn at present has been stated in part (a) of this reply.

(c) It has been ascertained that only 3 out of the 20 Passenger Superintendents employed on the Eastern Bengal Railway are over 55 years old and Government are not aware that owing to their age and unfamiliarity with the habits and customs of Bengali passengers they are of little use as Passenger Superintendents.

(d) It is not proposed to remove the present incumbents but to make it a condition in future that Passenger Superintendents should possess some knowledge of English and, if possible, of the language of the province in which they are employed.

EASTERN BENGAL RAILWAY.

DETAILS OF DUTIES TO BE PERFORMED BY PASSENGER SUPERINTENDENTS.

1. To mix freely with passengers in waiting halls, on platforms and in trains, ascertain their wants and, if practicable, have them attended to, and if necessary, report the same to the station master. To also bring to the notice of the Station Master any high-handedness on the part of any railway servant towards passengers.

2. To be present at the ticket issuing windows and to see that not more than the correct fares are realised from passengers, that tickets are issued to the proper destination stations and that the ticket windows are open in good and sufficient time before the arrival of trains.

3. To protect passengers from being harassed by the police or any railway servant, and to see that no illegal gratification is demanded.

4. To see that railway police or other persons entrusted with money for purchasing tickets do not take more than the correct fare.

5. To visit booking offices to see that passengers are being promptly attended to in regard to the issue of tickets.

6. To direct passengers to the class of carriage for which tickets are held, to prevent overcrowding, and to see that Ticket Collectors and other railway servants are attentive and treat the public with proper courtesy.

7. To bring to the notice of the District Traffic Superintendent with the least possible delay any serious high-handedness or 'zoolum' on the part of any railway servant towards the travelling public or any other matter which will tend to the comfort of passengers.

8. Generally to assist passengers and intending passengers, specially those of the lower classes, in all things tending to their convenience and comfort whilst on the railway.

9. To visit parcels and luggage offices and watch the booking.

10. To occasionally re-weigh parcels or small consignments of goods.

11. To make over to Station Masters for realization of excess fare, passengers detected by them travelling without tickets or in a higher class than that for which they hold tickets.

12. To submit reports to the District Traffic Superintendent for information or action whenever necessary, and to see the District Traffic Superintendent or Assistant Traffic Superintendent whenever directed to do so.

Mr. W. M. Hussanally: Sir, may I rise to ask a Supplementary Question? Will the Honourable Member please say whether these Passenger Superintendents are Europeans, Eurasians or Indians?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: I think without exception they are all Indians.

SALE OF MAGAZINES, ETC., BY MESSRS. WHEELER AND CO., AT RAILWAY BOOKSTALLS.

218. Mr. K. Ahmed: (i) Will the Government be pleased to state since how long Messrs. Wheeler and Company's Stalls have been supplying magazines, periodical books and newspapers, etc., and what amount of money for license per year they pay to the Railway Company?

(ii) Is it a fact that the majority of the passengers ask for the Indian Daily News, Bengalee, Amrita Bazar Patrika, Servant, Nayak, Bangabasi, Hitabadi, Sanjibani, Bussurmati and many other vernacular papers and these Stalls sell only the Statesman and Englishman and sometimes the Empire at Sealdah station?

(iii) Do Government propose to keep and maintain popular Stalls on Railway platforms to meet the demand and convenience of the greater bulk of the passengers?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: (i) The information relating to three railway administrations is laid on the table.

(ii) No representation in regard to this matter has been made to the Railway Administrations.

(iii) Messrs. Wheeler and Co. have already commenced selling vernacular publications at their bookstalls and are now extending in this direction, so that everything possible is being done to make the stalls popular and to meet the needs of all classes of the travelling public. It is in the interests of the Book-Stall Contractors themselves to stock papers, magazines and books that find a ready sale.

In the circumstances explained, Government do not propose to take any action.

FEMALE BOOKING CLERKS ON THE EAST INDIAN AND BENGAL NAGPUR RAILWAYS.

219. Mr. K. Ahmed: (i) Will the Government be pleased to state when and under what circumstances the female booking clerks, ticket checkers, and other assistants came to be first employed in the service of the Railway Company on the East Indian and Bengal Nagpur Railway lines, respectively?

(ii) Are the Government aware what incalculable suffering the third class passengers are put to, when they are to purchase tickets from them?

(iii) Is it a fact that these female booking clerks while selling third class tickets and giving back the balance of the money handed over to them, very often take advantage of the ignorance of the poor passengers and treat them contemptuously?

(iv) Do Government propose to replace these female booking clerks by male clerks?

(v) Is it a fact that the cost incurred by the Railway Company in maintaining the staff of female booking clerks and assistants is much higher than a similar staff of male booking clerks and assistants?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: (i) Howrah is a joint station between the East Indian and Bengal Nagpur Railways, but the East Indian Railway has entire control over the staff in question. Female Booking Clerks were originally employed on the East Indian Railway in 1906 due to a partial strike of the Indian Clerical Staff. The arrangement in its initial stage was purely temporary, but the employment of European and Anglo-Indian labour clearly illustrated the extent to which the ignorant third class passenger was being over-charged at Howrah by Indian Booking Clerks.

With a view, therefore, to improvement, it was decided to employ female European and Anglo-Indian labour permanently for the purpose. It has been found that women employed in this class of work are more even-tempered and patient than men and treat ignorant third class passengers with greater sympathy.

In regard to ticket checking staff, the necessity for employing Female Ticket Collectors arose as a result of complaints from the public who objected to the practice of Male Ticket Collectors examining the tickets of female passengers and Purdah ladies in particular.

Such staff were appointed in 1896.

(ii) It is not correct to say that third class passengers are put to an incalculable amount of suffering when purchasing tickets issued by the Female Booking Clerks at Howrah.

(iii) Occasional complaints from the public are received and if found to be correct, the Female Booking Clerk concerned is suitably punished. It may, however, be stated that complaints are not confined to the Female Booking Clerks, as similar complaints in far greater numbers are also received against Indian Booking Clerks employed at other stations.

(iv) No advantage would be gained by replacing the Female Booking Clerks at Howrah by Indian Clerks of the other sex and such is not the intention.

(v) A statement showing the cost incurred monthly in employing Female Booking Clerks at Howrah as compared with the cost of the employment of Indian Booking Clerks at the same station, is laid on the table.

The figures are based on average monthly salaries.

Comparative Statement showing the expenditure involved in maintaining Female Booking Clerks at Howrah and of Indian Booking Clerks at the same station.

	Ra.
45 Female Booking Clerks at Rs. 100 per mensem average monthly salary	4,500
Cost of maintenance of Booking Clerks Home, inclusive of lighting charges and salary of Home staff	155
	4,625
45 Indian Booking Clerks at Rs. 45 per mensem average monthly salary	2,025

Mr. K. Ahmed : Sir, I rise to ask a Supplementary Question, is it not a fact that there have been complaints made against them at the Howrah Criminal Court? Were not references made from the Court of Khan Bahadur Maulvi Fazlul Haq, Deputy Magistrate of Howrah, with regard to it?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn : Sir, I am afraid I cannot answer that question.

PASSENGER TRAINS FROM SEALDAH AND HOWRAH UNPROVIDED WITH ELECTRICAL FANS AND LIGHTS.

220. Mr. K. Ahmed : (i) Will the Government be pleased to state how many passenger trains run from Sealdah on the Eastern Bengal Railway and Howrah on the East Indian Railway without fans and electric lights?

(ii) Are the Government aware that many passenger trains running from the above stations stop at many places where no sufficient light and sometimes no light at all is kept burning and that passengers suffer a great deal of inconvenience and particularly lady passengers are unable to travel at all by those trains?

(iii) Do the Government propose to make suitable arrangements for the convenience, comfort and pleasure of the third class passengers in proportion to the income derived from them as compared with the income received from first and second class passengers?

(iv) Are the Government aware that in all the passenger trains running from the above stations, the third class compartments are packed with passengers without a single fan and a single electric light, while the first and second class compartments sometimes with one or two passengers and generally without any passenger, are fitted with a sufficient number of electric fans and lights?

(v) Do Government propose to order fans or at least one fan to be fitted inside each third class compartment without delay?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn : (i) On the Eastern Bengal Railway the majority of carriages on main line trains starting from Sealdah are electrically fitted, the first and second class with electric light and fans, and the intermediate and third class with electric lights only.

The stock of 20 trains running between Sealdah and the Diamond Harbour, Port Canning and Budge Budge branches—distance of 37, 28 and 18 miles, respectively—is not electrically fitted.

On the East Indian Railway first and second class carriages are generally fitted with electric lights and fans. Intermediate and third class carriages are not electrically fitted except those on mail trains which are provided with electric lights.

(i) Government are not aware that the lighting arrangements are insufficient at stations where trains stop nor of the inconvenience to passengers referred to. Platform lamps are provided at all stations at certain intervals prescribed by rules and railway administrations are prepared to consider any specific complaint regarding the lighting arrangements at stations.

(iii) Government and the railway administrations realise the necessity for making suitable arrangements for the comfort and convenience of third class passengers and improvements to this end are made from time to time as far as funds permit.

(iv) Government cannot accept the general statement made in this part of the question as quite representative of the conditions of travelling in the different classes of accommodation provided by railways.

As already stated, first and second class carriages are generally fitted with electric lights and fans and passengers who elect to travel in these classes pay for this and other conveniences in the shape of high fares.

Railway Administrations can hardly be expected to provide the same standard of equipment in carriages of all classes.

(v) Government do not propose to order electric fans to be fitted in third class carriages.

Mr. K. Ahmed : Is it not a fact that there are a large number of Inspectors, Supervisors and officers attached to your office who can give you statistics of the consumption of electricity for light?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn : There are Inspectors in the Carriage and Wagon shops.

Mr. K. Ahmed : Is there not a number of Inspectors and officers who can tell you whether the lights are sufficient or not?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn : I ask for notice of that question please.

CONDITIONS OF SERVICE OF ANGLO-INDIAN AND INDIAN OFFICERS AND CLERKS OF THE EASTERN BENGAL RAILWAY.

221. Mr. K. Ahmed: (i) Will the Government be pleased to state with reference to the answer to Question No. 383 given by Colonel Waghorn at the last Delhi Session on what grades and initial salary the Anglo-Indian officers and clerks of the Eastern Bengal Railway are being appointed and on what grades and initial salary the Hindu and Muhammadan officers are being appointed?

(ii) Will the Government be pleased to state what is the procedure followed in appointing Station Masters and Assistant Station Masters and in promoting the clerks and other subordinates to those grades?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: (i) As stated before, the grades and initial salary are the same for Anglo-Indian, Hindu and Muhammadan clerks. Occasionally clerks regardless of race or religion are appointed on a higher initial salary owing to superior education or qualifications.

The scale of pay of clerks is:

Combined class A-B,	Rs.	25 - 5- 60
" " C	"	65- 5- 80
" " D	"	85- 5-100
" " E	"	110-10-140

APPOINTMENT OF HINDU, MUHAMMADAN AND ANGLO-INDIAN OFFICERS AND CLERKS OF THE EASTERN BENGAL RAILWAY.

222. Mr. K. Ahmed: (i) With reference to the answer to Question No. 382 put at the last Delhi Session regarding the appointment of Hindu, Muhammadan and Anglo-Indian officers and clerks on the E. B. Railway, do the Government propose to follow the circular of the Bengal Government that in filling up vacancies preference will be given to Muhammadans until one-third of the entire posts are filled up by them?

(ii) Do the Government propose to follow that rule whenever there will be vacancies and appoint Muhammadans, if the Muhammadan Associations and the Communities are in a position to supply such qualified men as may be required for such vacancies?

(iii) Do the Government propose to notify such vacancies in public gazettes and send copies of such notifications to Muhammadan Associations?

(iv) Will the Government be pleased to state what principle has hitherto been followed in making such appointments?

(a) Were notifications issued for filling up such vacancies? Or

(b) Were individual candidates brought in by officers or clerks who were in a position to give information to the candidates for such vacancies without the knowledge of the public?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: (i) No. It is proposed that in future officers shall be appointed by Selection Committees from passed students of Colleges and Muhammadan candidates have to take their chance with other candidates.

It is not practicable to fill vacancies in the clerical staff of the Eastern Bengal Railway by appointing a proportionate number of Hindus and Muhammadans. But the Railway Administration is quite willing to employ more Muhammadans if suitable men present themselves.

(ii) It is not possible to ask the Muhammadan Association to nominate candidates on the occurrence of vacancies, but if the Association is prepared to make recommendations, the candidates so recommended will be registered and their qualifications considered by the Railway authorities when making appointments.

(iii) The reply is in the negative. It is not practicable to notify vacancies to the Muhammadan Association and other denominational bodies. In the interests of work, it is usually necessary that vacancies should be filled up immediately.

(iv) Vacancies are filled by the selection of the most suitable candidates from the large number of applicants constantly on the list.

(a) The reply is in the negative.

(b) A register of qualified candidates is maintained and on the occurrence of a vacancy the best qualified men available is selected.

INCONVENIENCE TO PASSENGERS ON THE JORHAT RAILWAY.

223. Rai D. C. Farua Bahadur: (a) Are the Government aware that great inconvenience is felt by the travelling public to and from stations on the Jorhat (Provincial) Railway, in the absence of the system of issuing 'through tickets' in connection with the Assam Bengal Railway and other railway connections? If so, will the Government be pleased to take early steps in the matter to remove this inconvenience?

(b) Are the Government aware that great delay and loss take place in goods transports along the Jorhat (Provincial) Railway, at the terminal junctions at Moriani and Titubar due to difference in gauge of the Jorhat (Provincial) Railway and the Assam Bengal Railway?

(c) Do the Government propose to take into consideration the question of conversion of the present narrow gauge on the Jorhat (Provincial) Railway to one of metre gauge in order to facilitate through goods transport with the Assam Bengal Railway?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: The Jorhat (Provincial) Railway is under the administrative control of the Government of Assam and this question should accordingly have been put in the Provincial Council. The views of the Assam Government have, however, been obtained and are as follows:

(a) No complaints have been received and the Government are unaware that the inconvenience felt by the travelling public for the reasons alleged is appreciably great. The matter was fully considered in 1917 and the decision arrived at was that receipts from passenger traffic on the Jorhat (Provincial) Railway were insufficient to justify the expenditure which through booking would involve.

(b) Where transshipment has to be resorted to, a certain amount of delay is inevitable but no complaints have been received either in regard to loss or delay.

The Agent, Assam Bengal Railway, who was also addressed, states that that administration is not aware that loss takes place in goods passing to and from the Jorhat (Provincial) Railway at Moriani and Titubar Junctions.

- (c) In the present state of the finances of the province, the Government of Assam are not prepared to consider the proposal to convert the gauge of the line; nor, in their opinion, do the volume of traffic and the earnings of the line justify conversion.

DISCONTENT AMONG OFFICERS SUBJECT TO INDIAN SERVICE LEAVE RULES.

224. Rai D. C. Barna Bahadur : (a) Are the Government aware that great discontent prevails among the officers subject to the Indian Service Leave Rules on account of the restrictions imposed upon their privilege of commuting furlough on half average salary into furlough on average salary?

(b) Will the Government be pleased to explain why the privilege has been extended only to those officers who proceed on leave out of India or Ceylon, or who take furlough on medical certificate?

(c) Do the Government propose to take early action to remove these restrictions, and place the officers subject to the Indian Service Leave Rules on the same footing with the officers of European Services and to extend the provisions of Article 316A of the new Leave Rules to them with necessary modifications of clause (e)?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : (a) The existence of such discontent has not been brought to the notice of Government.

(b) and (c). The attention of the Honourable Member is invited to my speech in connexion with the Resolution moved by the Honourable Sardar Jogendra Singh in the Council of State on the 9th March 1921.

As a result of the recommendations of the Public Services Commission, Government intend to restate the criteria according to which officers are brought under one or the other set of rules, and the matter is now under consideration.

TRANSFER OF THE PROTECTORATE OF ADEN.

225. Mr. M. K. Reddi Garu : (a) Has the attention of the Government been drawn to a speech of Mr. Winston Churchill, Secretary of State for the Colonies, wherein it is stated that the protectorate of Aden will be taken over under the Colonial Office?

(b) Will the Government be pleased to state if they have been consulted in the matter and if this proposal has been accepted by them?

(c) Will the Government be pleased to lay on the table the papers connected with the transfer of Aden to the Colonial Government?

(d) Will the Government be pleased to furnish a tabular statement showing :

- (i) the date when Aden came under the Indian Government,
- (ii) the annual cost debited to the Indian exchequer in the administration of the Protectorate from the time of its having been taken over,
- (iii) the total cost of capital works and all improvements done in the Protectorate during the period of its administration by the Indian Government.

The Honourable Dr. T. B. Sapru (on behalf of the Honourable Mr. Denys Bray) : (a) Yes. As the control of the Aden Protectorate, which consists of the territory of Arab Chiefs in treaty relations with His Majesty's Government, was transferred to His Majesty's Government during the war and matters connected with it are no longer the concern of the Government of India, the Honourable Member presumably refers to the Aden Settlement, and if that is correct, I would refer the Honourable Member both generally and as regards (b) and (d) (i) and (ii) to my reply to Question No. 129 on the 10th September 1921, and also to the reply given by the Honourable Mr. Bray to a similar question in the Council of State on the 26th March.

(c) The whole question, including the future incidence of expenditure, is still under discussion, and the correspondence cannot be laid on the table at present.

(d) (iii). It is regretted that complete information is not readily available but the present book value of the Government buildings in the Settlement is, civil buildings Rs. 20 lakhs; permanent military buildings Rs. 60½ lakhs; and temporary (war) buildings Rs. 5½ lakhs.

CONSTRUCTION OF OFFICES AND QUARTERS NEAR EGMORE RAILWAY STATION, SOUTH INDIAN RAILWAY.

226. Mr. M. K. Reddi Garu : (a) Will the Government be pleased to state if it is a fact that the South Indian Railway Company have contemplated the acquisition of house and land sites near the Egmore Railway Station, for the construction of offices and quarters now located at Trichinopoly?

(b) Do the Government propose to advise the Railway Company that in view of the already congested condition of the city and dearth of proper housing accommodation, they should not sanction any such proposals, but should locate their offices outside the Municipal limits of the City?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn : (a) The South Indian Railway Company have at present no intention of acquiring house and land sites near the Egmore Railway Station (Madras) for the construction of offices and quarters now located at Trichinopoly. It may, however, be necessary to acquire a small area of land at that station to build quarters to house local staff.

(b) In view of the answer given in (a) above, Government do not propose to take any action in the matter.

PAY AND PROSPECTS OF THE INDIAN CIVIL SERVICE AND OTHER SERVICES.

227. Mr. M. K. Reddi Garu : Will the Government be pleased to lay on the table a statement showing the pay and prospects of the Indian Civil Service, Indian Medical Service, Indian Educational Service, Posts and Telegraphs, Engineering, Police and Forests, as they stood in the year 1917 and as they stand now?

The Honourable Mr. W. M. Hailey : I lay on the table a statement giving the required information.

POSTAL ADVERTISEMENT AND THE ALLIANCE ADVERTISING ASSOCIATION.

228. Mr. M. K. Reddi Garu: Will the Government be pleased to state on what consideration the 'sole advertising agency' has been conferred on the Alliance Advertising Association, by the Postal Department in respect of advertisement on stamp booklets, and whether it is the intention of the latter to extend the concession to the same Association or any other body in respect of booklets of stamps of other values which the department issues?

Colonel Sir S. D'A. Crookshank: (1) The consideration is that the sum to be paid by the Alliance Advertising Association to the Postal Department should be 3 pies per complete booklet which is expected to cover the present cost of manufacture of the booklets.

(2) The intention is to give any other firm the opportunity to obtain such advertisements if the Alliance Advertising Association fails to secure advertisements for all the booklets within a reasonable time.

Mr. President: Order, Order. In the case of questions requiring answers of the length of Nos. 214—222, the entire answers should be laid on the table in accordance with the arrangement made in the last Session of this Assembly.

I now ask the Leader of the House to make a statement of Government business to be set down for this House on the 19th of September.

STATEMENT OF GOVERNMENT BUSINESS.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: Sir, on the 19th September we propose to introduce a Bill to consolidate and amend the law relating to Income-tax and Super-tax.

The following Bills will probably also be taken into consideration:

- (1) Bill further to amend the Carriers Act, 1865;
- (2) Bill to provide for the levy of a customs duty on lac exported from British India.

Reports of the Joint Committee on the Indian Factories (Amendment) Bill and the Indian Electricity (Amendment) Bill will be presented if ready.

THE MAINTENANCE ORDERS ENFORCEMENT BILL.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: Sir, I beg to present the Report of the Select Committee on the Bill to facilitate the enforcement in British India of maintenance orders made in other parts of His Majesty's Dominions and Protectorates and vice versa.

THE INDIAN PENAL CODE (AMENDMENT) BILL.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: Sir, I beg to present the Report of the Select Committee on the Bill further to amend the Indian Penal Code, 1860.

THE NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS (AMENDMENT) BILL.

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: Sir, I beg to move that the Bill further to amend the Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881, be taken into consideration.

I explained the objects, Sir, with which we have introduced this small Bill into the Assembly in full detail in my opening speech on the 5th of this month. The Bill has got, so far as I know, the commercial community in India entirely behind it, and I hope that it will be regarded by this House as an entirely non-controversial Bill.

The motion was adopted.

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: I now move, Sir, that the Bill be passed.

Clause one was adopted.

Lala Girdharilal Agarwala: I am advised not to move the amendment to clause two, Sir.

Clause two was adopted.

Clause three was adopted.

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: I now move, Sir, that the Bill be passed.

The motion was adopted.

THE INDIAN POST OFFICE (AMENDMENT) BILL.

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: I move, Sir:

'That the Bill further to amend the Indian Post Office Act, 1898, be taken into consideration.'

Here again, I explained the reasons for this Bill very fully on the 5th of September. I pointed out that the practice of sending articles liable to Customs duty by the letter mail had been forbidden by two International Postal Conventions, and that the prohibition had been embodied in a rule in the Postal Guide. I pointed out also, Sir, that we had reason to believe that this prohibition is being, and has been for many years consistently evaded. I further pointed out that the loss of revenue which was accruing to Government from the evasion of this prohibition was likely to increase very considerably in the near future owing mainly to the large increase in our import duties.

After consulting the Collector of Customs at Bombay I ventured to make the estimate that the loss might amount to something like Rs. 20 lakhs per annum. The Government of India did not feel themselves entitled to take the responsibility of continuing to acquiesce in a loss of this kind.

Consequently in this Bill we have made a suggestion to remedy the evil for the consideration of the House. I explained in my previous speech that we had no intention of holding up the ordinary foreign mail in any way at all and that I had every hope that we will be able to make arrangements with the London Post Office and the Colonial and Continental sorting offices by which the delay to the registered foreign letter mail would be reduced to a minimum. I move, Sir, that the Bill be taken into consideration.

Mr. President: The question is that the Bill to amend the Indian Post Office Act, 1898, be taken into consideration.

The motion was adopted.

Clauses 1, 2, 3 and 4 were adopted without debate.

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: I move, Sir, that the Bill be passed.

Mr. President: The question is that the Bill further to amend the Indian Post Office Act, 1898, be passed.

The motion was adopted.

THE INDIAN MARINE (AMENDMENT) BILL.

Sir Godfrey Fell: Sir, I move:

'That the Bill further to amend the Indian Marine Act, 1887, be taken into consideration.'

Mr. President: The question is that the Bill further to amend the Indian Marine Act, 1887, be taken into consideration.

The motion was adopted.

Clauses 1, 2 and 3 were adopted without debate.

Sir Godfrey Fell: I now move that the Bill be passed.

The motion was adopted.

THE INDIAN WORKS OF DEFENCE (AMENDMENT) BILL.

Sir Godfrey Fell: I move that the Bill further to amend the Indian Works of Defence Act, 1903, be taken into consideration.

Mr. President: The question is that the Bill further to amend the Indian Works of Defence Act, 1903, be taken into consideration.

The motion was adopted.

Clauses 1, 2, 3 and 4 were adopted without debate.

Sir Godfrey Fell: I move that the Bill be passed.

The motion was adopted.

THE INDIAN LAC CESS BILL.

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: Sir, I move for leave to introduce:

'A Bill to provide for the levy of customs duty on lac exported from British India.'

I hope, Sir, that this is another entirely non-controversial Bill. Shellac is one of our most important trades and the total value of the exports of shellac amounted in 1917-18 to 2½ millions sterling and in 1918-19 to nearly 2 millions sterling. Apart from small quantities of somewhat indifferent lac grown, I believe, in Indo-China, India may be said to have a monopoly of lac and shellac. Shellac is being used in increasing quantities for various purposes notably the manufacture of gramophone records. The demand has exceeded the supply and during the war a great feature of the trade was the extraordinary fluctuations in the price of shellac. Before the war, the price of what is ordinarily known as T. N. shellac varied from between Rs. 30 and Rs. 40 a maund. In January 1920, the price touched Rs. 250. At the present time, it is something like Rs. 135 a maund. Now these high prices induce a very real danger, namely, the danger that some synthetic substitute may be found. As far as I know, no satisfactory substitute has yet been found, but Mr. Lindsay, the Director-General of Commercial Intelligence, informs me that distinct progress has been made in that direction. We have had this question under consideration for some time now, and in 1919, the whole question was considered by a Committee of Forest officers and of representatives of commercial firms interested in the shellac trade. On the recommendation of that Committee, we put two officers on special duty to inquire into the whole matter, namely, Mr. Lindsay and Mr. Harlow of the Forest Department. These two officers wrote a very valuable report which was published in May of this year in the series of Indian Forest Records. They tell us that for the present state of affairs in the shellac trade there are two main remedies. In the first place, the production of the best quality of lac must be stimulated. The effect of the present high prices is to encourage indifferent output and premature collection, with disastrous results to quality. Their recommendation here is to extend the cultivation of lac in Government forests and the distribution of good brood lac. That of course is entirely a matter for the Local Governments and it has been taken up by two Governments who are chiefly concerned, namely, the Governments of the Central Provinces and Bihar and Orissa. The other suggestion they made was this. They say that a scheme of research is required on the chemical and entomological side and in Appendix III of their Report a comprehensive scheme of research has been outlined by the late Mr. Howlett. They recommended that for the purpose of this research the trade should organise itself into a research association and that the research should be financed by a small export cess on lac. I am glad to say, Sir, that the trade took up this suggestion warmly. A representative committee of 7 gentlemen, four of them representing Indian brokers and manufacturers and 3 of them representing shippers and European manufacturers, was appointed in July to work out a scheme for an association and as the result of their labours an Indian Lac Association for Research has been formed by the trade itself. Its object is to promote improvements in the breeding of lac and its manufacture by means of scientific research. It has been organised on the most democratic lines and as far as we can see provision has been made for the representation of every branch of the lac trade. All firms or individuals interested in the trade whether as a cultivator, manufacturer or shipper, dealer or broker are eligible for election; and the rules provide for a committee of 8 to be elected by the various sections of the trade, two members by Indian manufacturers, two by Indian brokers, two by Calcutta shippers and one by European manufacturers and one by European brokers. This Association by a unanimous Resolution has approached the Government with a request that a small cess should be placed on exports of lac at the rate of 4 annas per maund for shellac and 2 annas per maund for refuse lac.

I may mention that the incidence of the cess proposed is so light as to be almost nominal. The price of shellac at the present time is Rs. 135 per maund.

We propose a cess of only four annas a maund. On the other hand, we hope that the cess will yield an income of about one lakh of rupees a year.

I do not think I need say very much about the Bill itself. It has been drawn up on the lines of the Indian Tea Cess Act of 1903.

We propose, as a safeguard, in clause 5 of the Bill that the Lac Association must keep accounts and that these accounts shall be examined and audited by auditors appointed by Government, and we also provide that the accounts shall be published. It is also suggested that, in the first instance at any rate, the Bill should remain in force for only five years.

I hope, Sir, that this Bill which has been recommended by the trade itself by an unanimous vote will be accepted as unanimously by this House.

I move, Sir, for leave to introduce the Bill.

Mr. President : The question is :

‘That leave be given to introduce a Bill to provide for the levy of customs duty on lac exported from British India’.

The motion was adopted.

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes : I now introduce the Bill, Sir.

THE LAND ACQUISITION (AMENDMENT) BILL.

Mr. J. Hullah : Since the beginning of this morning's Session certain circumstances have been brought to my notice which indicate that the Government themselves may have to propose amendments in the Bill. I have also received copy of a notice of amendment from Sir Sivaswamy Aiyer. I do not wish to object to the shortness of the notice, but, in all the circumstances, I would ask that further consideration of the Bill to amend the Land Acquisition Act may, if possible, be postponed.

Mr. President : Do you move that as a motion?

Mr. J. Hullah : I will, Sir. I move, Sir :

‘That further consideration of the Bill further to amend the Land Acquisition Act, 1894, be postponed?’

The motion was adopted.

THE PRESS LAW REPEAL AND AMENDMENT BILL.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : Sir, I move for leave to introduce :

‘A Bill to repeal the Indian Press Act, 1919, and the Newspapers (Incitements to Officers) Act, 1908, and to make certain provisions in regard to the liability of editors of newspapers, and to facilitate the registration of printers and publishers and to provide for the seizure and disposal of certain documents.’

I confess, Sir, that after the warning I received on the last date this Assembly met, I make this motion with some apprehension. For various reasons I was unable to circulate a copy of the Bill which I move for leave to introduce until late yesterday, and I was of two minds at the time as to whether it was advisable to make the motion to-day or to ask the Assembly to postpone it. But Government have always felt that it was a matter of the utmost importance that their intentions in regard to the report of the Press Committee should be made known to this Assembly and, as this was only a first reading, I thought possibly the Assembly might overlook the fact that the Bill has been in their hands only a short time. Even now, however, if it is the general sense of the Assembly, I shall be quite willing to postpone consideration of the Bill, but I can promise the Assembly a full opportunity of discussing it at a later stage. The subject matter is one which so many Members of the Assembly have at heart, that I hope they will not treat me to-day in the way they treated my Honourable Colleague the other day.

The Assembly are aware, that a Resolution was moved in this Assembly during the last Session, and that later the Government of India appointed a Committee on which there were a majority of non-officials, men, who, if I may say so, were well qualified to undertake this task, to examine the Press Act, the Press and Registration of Books Act, and the Newspapers (Incitements to Offences) Act. That Committee made certain recommendations which have been published, and copies of the report have, I believe, also been supplied to all Members of this Assembly. The Government of India have decided to accept those recommendations in full. (Hear, hear.) The Bill, in fact, does nothing but give effect to the report of the Committee. It repeals certain Acts which are regarded by many educated Indians as obnoxious, namely, the Press Act, 1910, and the Newspapers (Incitements to Offences) Act, 1908. Power is, however, retained to confiscate openly seditious documents though that power is subject to this safeguard, that any person, who has an interest in a document which is seized, may make an application to a High Court, in which case the onus will be on the Government to show that the document is of the seditious character alleged by Government. If the Government fail to make that point good, then the order will be set aside. A necessary corollary of that is a provision for the prevention of the import of seditious documents by the ports of India, and of their transmission by post. If the law is to be effective, we must have power to seize openly seditious documents either in transmission through the post or at the time of import, but that seizure is also subject to the scrutiny of the High Court, and, if the case is taken to the High Court, then, again, the onus is on Government to show that the document is of the character stated.

The Press and Registration of Books Act has been retained with modifications, the most important of which are, firstly, that we prescribe that persons registering under that act must have attained majority—that, I think, is a reasonable recommendation—and, secondly, we come to a more contentious proposition, namely, the suggestion that in the case of newspapers the name of the editor should be clearly printed on the front page of each issue. That provision has excited a good deal of comment and will have to be examined in Select Committee carefully later. Minor amendments are that the term of imprisonment prescribed under the Press and Registration of Books Act has been reduced—I think that this change is made at the instance of one of the witnesses before us—Mrs. Besant—and technical changes have been made in the method of registration to suit both the printer and the publisher.

I think that this Assembly will endorse the bold policy that was embarked upon and will express their approval of the work of this Committee,

Mr. President : The question is :

‘That leave be given to introduce a Bill to repeal the Indian Press Act, 1910, and the Newspapers (Incitements to Offences) Act, 1908, and to make certain provisions in regard to the liability of editors of newspapers, and to facilitate the registration of printers and publishers and to provide for the seizure and disposal of certain documents.’

The motion was adopted.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : Sir, I now introduce the Bill.

RESOLUTION RE THE DISTINCTIONS BETWEEN INDIANS AND NON-INDIANS AND THE REMOVAL OF THEIR MODE OF TRIAL.

Mr. N. M. Samarth : Sir, I beg to move the following Resolution :

‘This Assembly recommends to the Governor General in Council :

- (a) that all distinctions between Indian and European members of the Indian Civil Service in regard to criminal jurisdiction over European British subjects be abrogated ; and
- (b) that subject to the provisions of sub-section (3) of Section 65 of the Government of India Act, all distinctions in the Criminal Law of India as between Indians on the one hand and European British subjects, Europeans who are not European British subjects and Americans on the other, in regard to mode of trial, sentence to be passed and right of appeal, be removed.’

Sir, this Assembly will remember that during the last Session, that is to say, the first Session of this Assembly at Delhi, I had given notice of a Resolution on this subject in general terms. That Resolution, however, was not reached, and consequently under the rules it lapsed. I have brought this Resolution again before this Assembly, and if it had to be ballotted for, I am afraid, I would have had hardly any chance of moving it ; and I must say that I am thankful to Government for the courtesy that they have shown me in putting it on an official day. It is a subject in which every Member of the Assembly is interested, European and Indian and I take it that the Government themselves are keen on a proper solution of the subject. We all remember that at the inauguration of this Assembly at its second Session by His Excellency the Viceroy that. His Excellency gave expression to his views on the subject in terms which could hardly be mistaken ; he said, he brought to our notice in particular the fact that his attention had been directed to the differences in the legal procedure applicable to Europeans and Indians, and he added that Local Governments had been consulted and an opportunity would be taken in the course of the present Session to lay before the Assembly the proposals of the Government as to the steps which would be taken for further examination of this question, and he trusted that in the result means would be found to satisfy public opinion that justice would be done both to Europeans and Indians. I, Sir, will not say or do anything which will make this Assembly going into any concrete instances of what may be called miscarriages of justice. I for one do not think that any useful purpose will be served by a discussion of that character. In the first place, every concrete case has its pros and cons, and the moment I start a concrete case of that character, it will side-track the discussion of the main subject and unnecessarily cloud the issues. I would beg my European colleagues as well as my Indian colleagues in this Assembly not to introduce, and I am sure they will not introduce, any heat into the discussion of this Resolution. I hope my Indian friends will bear in mind the European point of view, and I hope my European friends will bear in mind the Indian point of view, and, in a spirit of cordiality and good-will, arrive at a solution which will be satisfactory to all Members of this Assembly. I propose, Sir, shortly to pick out two or three incidents in the past history of this subject which have a direct bearing on the subject matter of this Resolution, and which perhaps are not so widely known as they should be.

In the days of the East India Company, before 1833, every European, who had to go into the interior of the country, had to go under sufferance and under a license; he was in the mufassil practically under police surveillance. When Lord William Bentinck came as Governor General, he thought that it necessary to do away with that policy and to make provision by law to allow Europeans to settle in the country as traders or planters in order that the material condition of the country may be improved. He, therefore, made proposals to that effect to the Court of Directors and to the Crown, but at the same time he took care to lay down the condition that if these restrictions were to be removed, it should be made obligatory on the Governor General in Council to make laws and regulations so as to prevent any injustice being done to the natives of the territories by insulting conduct on the part of European settlers. Accordingly, afterwards, what is known as the Charter Act of 1833 was passed, viz., 3 and 4 William IV. Chap. 85; and in that statute two provisions were introduced which are of importance as having a direct bearing upon this question. One of them, Section 85, laid down as follows:

'Whereas the removal of restrictions on the intercourse of Europeans with the said territories will render it necessary to provide against any mischiefs or dangers that may arise therefrom, he it therefore enacted that the said Governor General in Council shall, and he is hereby required by laws and regulations to, provide with all convenient speed for the protection of the natives of the said territories from insult and outrage in their persons, religions or opinions.'

And Section 87 which is famous laid down:

'And be it enacted that no native of the said territories nor any natural born subject of His Majesty resident therein shall, by reason only of his religion, place of birth, descent, colour or any of them, be disabled from holding any place, office or employment under the said Company.'

This Charter Act of 1833 was followed by a Despatch from the Court of Directors in 1834 in which they explained the provisions of the Act and conveyed to the Governor General in Council their orders as to how effect was to be given to those provisions. I shall refer, if time permits, to some passages later on in connection with another aspect of the question, but I may here state that the Court of Directors laid down that the provisions of the statute made it obligatory on the Governor General in Council to make laws and regulations in such a way, now that these restrictions on the residence of Europeans in the interior of the country were going to be removed, as to make them liable and amenable to the civil and criminal jurisdiction of the country tribunals of the Company throughout the land equally with the native inhabitants. They said so in specific terms; and, in accordance with their Despatch, legislation was undertaken and enacted in 1836 whereby all European British subjects or European foreigners were placed under the civil jurisdiction of the civil courts of the country throughout, in the same manner as the natives of the territories of the East India Company were. Perhaps some of those who are acquainted with the history of the subject will remember that that legislation was denounced by the European residents at the time as Lord Macaulay's Black Act of 1836, and the agitation at that time was more opprobrious than at a later period in the history of the subject; but I am concerned with the arguments advanced at the time. European residents, some of them, I mean, who were more clamorous, said: 'You are going to subject us to country tribunals, that is to say, the Indian civil courts, which are courts both of law and fact. We have no juries here to whom the adjudication of facts could be entrusted, and the law only applied by the Judge. This is, therefore, an infringement of our birth-right and we are not going to submit to it and it is wrong that such a law should be enacted.' They further said, in effect that justice could not be expected from Indian Judges any more than you can expect figs from thistles or grapes from brambles. However, the statesmen of the period were great men, who had founded and consolidated the British Empire, great men indeed in British Indian history, and those men had a long sight and a judgment which was not warped by any considerations of class privileges and they enacted the Act of 1836.

There were gloomy forebodings at the time and it was said that this Act would prove a great handicap on British trade in India. No British trader or planter or other settler would care to risk his capital and personal liberty by going into the interior of the country where he will be subjected to the civil tribunals presided over by Indian Judges. Nothing of the kind ever came true. Trade has prospered, English traders and planters have settled and British factories have been started in great numbers throughout the country. Human nature is such that people are apt to look on the black side of things rather more prominently than they look on the bright side and this oftentimes blinds and clouds the perception of those who are called upon to decide large issues. That is applicable not only to Europeans, but to Indians also, and I make that observation in regard to all generally.

Well, that Act having been passed in 1836, the next question was to give effect to the directions contained in the Despatch of 1834 in regard to criminal jurisdiction; and in 1849, Lord Dalhousie's Government drafted an Act which practically placed all Europeans, in regard to criminal jurisdiction, in the same category as the natives of this country, that is to say, the Government of the day wanted to do for the Criminal Courts what they had done for the Civil Courts.

The draft Act, however, was postponed for consideration on account of a Minute written by Lord Dalhousie in which he stated that while he was wholly in agreement with the principle of the draft, he wished to postpone consideration of it until the criminal law of the land had been brought into line with the criminal law of England. As lawyers know, before the Penal Code was enacted, in the Presidency Towns the criminal law of England was in vogue, but outside those towns it was not. The law administered in the mufassil was the law of the Nizam, that is to say, what was practically Muhammadan criminal law; and, I think, it was quite natural and reasonable on the part of the English people at that time who were living outside Presidency Towns to say that, 'While we are quite ready to submit ourselves to the criminal jurisdiction of competent courts, surely the law administered by those courts must be of such a character as to be more or less the same as that administered in Presidency Towns.' That was a reasonable objection and consequently the draft Act was postponed, and in 1860 the Penal Code was enacted and made applicable all over British India. Then, naturally, the question cropped up again of giving effect to the terms and orders which the Court of Directors had conveyed in their Despatch of 1834, and in the year 1861 the Code of Criminal Procedure was being enacted and a Section in that draft Code was introduced which gave power to the Magistrates, of whatever grade, to have jurisdiction over European British subjects in the same manner as they had over the natives of the land. However, after due consideration, that Section was deleted and the matter came up again in 1872 when the Code of Criminal Procedure was being re-considered and amended, and in that year there was an amendment of the Bill in Select Committee moved by the Honourable Mr. Ellis to the effect that in any case you must place both the Indian and the European members of the Covenanted Civil Service on a footing of perfect and absolute equality so far as criminal jurisdiction over European British subjects was concerned. Unfortunately, that amendment was lost by a very narrow majority, but the minority comprised the majority of the Viceroy's Executive Council of that period, and, if only one vote in favour of the amendment had been given the other way, the amendment would have been carried by the casting vote of the Governor General himself.

Well, Sir, I do not wish to weary this Assembly by reading out the arguments then urged by the Honourable Mr. Ellis and those who supported him, but one observation and one argument I can scarcely resist citing here. It was made by the then Commander-in-Chief in India, Lord Napier of Magdala. With the frankness, straight forwardness and directness of outlook and expression which are the characteristics of a fine soldier, he put forward these views in regard to the matter :

'The native members of the Covenanted Civil Service having been to Europe, having become acquainted with European feelings, ideas and customs, and having qualified themselves to take their places with the European members of the Civil Service, he would frankly accept them as real members of the Covenanted Civil Service and allow them to exercise all the functions which the European members exercised.'

The first clause of my Resolution is moved with a view to reviving the old amendment of the Honourable Mr. Ellis which he made nearly 50 years ago. At that time there was only a very small percentage of Indians who would have been affected by that amendment, but since then, as everybody knows, the number of Indians in the Civil Service has increased, is increasing and will be increasing every year as the rate of 33 per cent. with $\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. added from year to year. Now, I put it to the Assembly, is it fair, is it wise, is it politic, is it just to make these young men feel as they are bound to feel, that in this respect, they are treated practically as outlanders in the land of their birth? I trust that the sense of this Assembly will be in favour of abrogating these distinctions between Indian members of the Civil Service on the one hand, and European members on the other, in regard to criminal jurisdiction.

It is with the object of bringing to prominent notice this controversy of 1872, and the battle that was fought by the Honourable Mr. Ellis and the Governor General and the Commander-in-Chief on behalf of the Indian members of the Civil Service, that I have brought out specially in my Resolution this first clause which will, I hope, attract the notice of both the Government and the public. But that does not mean that I do not wish to give the powers to anybody else.

The second part of my Resolution is comprehensive enough and I might as well have omitted the first, but I put it with a view to bringing to the notice of the Government the old controversy of 1872 in regard to putting the Indian members of the Civil Service on a footing of equality with the European members.

Now, in coming to the second part of my Resolution which is before the Assembly, I wonder how many people outside the legal profession are aware of the curious definition of a 'European British subject' as given in the Code of Criminal Procedure. A European British subject means not only a subject of His Majesty born in England or in Europe, but also any subject of His Majesty born, naturalised or domiciled in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland or in any of the European, American or Australian Colonies or possessions of His Majesty, or in the Colony of New Zealand or in the Colony of the Cape of Good Hope or Natal, or any child or grand-child of any such person by legitimate descent. It will be seen that the definition is arbitrary and absurd. It includes persons who are neither British nor European. An Aya by giving birth to a child in London, although of Indian parentage, makes that child a British born subject, and an Indian child born in Natal would be a European British subject. As I said, it includes those who are neither European nor British and excludes those who are to all intents and purposes Englishmen, although not of legitimate descent. Now, I wish that some great satirist or some great master of the English language had brought this definition to prominent notice, or that he had even modified the definition. Well, Sir, although such is the definition in this Code of a European British subject, in my arguments I will take the ordinary meaning of the term 'European British subject' as understood in common parlance and show what anomalies result from the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code in which distinctions are made between Europeans on the one hand and Indians on the other. Chapter 33 of the Code is the Chapter to which I desire to refer, but of course there are other provisions in the Code which also have a direct bearing on the matter, but Chapter 33 is the main one.

The Chapter, however, is improperly worded in the authorised edition by Government as Criminal proceedings against Europeans and Americans. The whole of the Chapter excepting two Sections refers to European British subjects only. So far as Europeans who are not European British subjects and Americans are concerned, they are amenable to the same jurisdiction as Indians except that they have the right of trial by a jury in which not less than half shall be Europeans or Americans. But in so far as the jurisdiction of the tribunal is concerned, there is no distinction between Europeans who are not European British subjects and Americans and Indians. They are all triable by the same courts. Nor is there any distinction in the punishment to be inflicted on them. But so far as European British subjects are concerned, according to the Chapter excepting those two Sections already referred to, the differences are many. By a Section, Section 443, it is laid down that no Magistrate of the first class unless he is a European British subject and a Justice of the Peace, can Enquire into or try a charge in which a European British subject is involved. In other words, Magistrate, unless he is a District Magistrate or Presidency Magistrate, has jurisdiction over the offence but he has no Indian jurisdiction over the offender if he happens to be a European British subject. That is the position to which the Code of Criminal Procedure reduces us. Now, by another Section, Section 22 of the Criminal Procedure Code, it is practically laid down that in the mufassil, no person, unless he is a European British subject, can be appointed a Justice of the Peace. Therefore, an Indian member of the Civil Service cannot be appointed a Justice of the Peace, although by the provisions of Act II of 1869 which the Government of India passed before the Criminal Procedure Code of 1872 was passed, it was laid down that the Governor General in Council shall appoint in the mufassil Justices of the Peace who will be either European British subjects or members of the Covenanted Service, no distinction being made between Europeans and Indians. That Act practically remained a dead-letter so far as this point was concerned, but three years subsequently, this Section 22 was inserted in the Criminal Procedure Code preventing Government from appointing Indians as Justices of the Peace in the mufassil. In 1882, some additional privileges were given, namely, a District Magistrate, although an Indian, was given jurisdiction to try a European British subject. The Sessions Judge, that is to say, the particular Sessions Judge of the District, who is called under the Criminal Procedure Code 'the Sessions Judge' was given power to try a European British subject. Section 444 was accordingly enacted, and they were made ex-officio Justices of the Peace by another Section, Section 25, and they were given power to try European British subjects. Here, again, I bring to the notice of Government that the marginal note to Section 444 in the authorised edition of the Code is absolutely wrong. The marginal note says, 'Sessions Judge to be an European British subject,' but the Section itself says that the Sessions Judge need not be a European British subject in order to have that jurisdiction. In regard to criminal jurisdiction over European British subjects the matter now stands thus. An Indian High Court Judge can try a European British subject and give him capital punishment if the offence so deserves. A Presidency Magistrate, although an Indian, can inquire into and try a European British subject and give him punishment within his jurisdiction, including the punishment of solitary imprisonment and whipping. In the mufassil, the Sessions Judge, even if he is an Indian, has the power; the District Magistrate has the power and certain Assistant Sessions Judges, if they have been specially empowered in this behalf, have the power to try a European British subject. But take the case of an Additional Sessions Judge who happens to be an Indian. Now he is not 'the Sessions Judge' under that Section, and he does not get the power, although he presides over the court in a Court of Sessions, he has not the power to try a European British subject, though, in all other respects, he is on a level practically with the Sessions Judge. Another anomaly is that the Additional Sessions Judge, as I have said, has not the power to try a European British subject, although his Assistant who may be a Joint Judge, or an Assistant Sessions Judge who is a European British subject, can inquire into and try such cases. The Additional Sessions Judge, who is an Indian, has, however, the power to hear appeals from him in such cases but not to try the original cases!

These are some of the anomalies arising on account of the jurisdiction of the court; but the mode of trial leads to more anomalies and involves greater hardship. Very often, rustics, who may have legitimate cause of complaint against certain European British subjects, who may have offended their feelings or insulted them, or committed any other offence against them, are dragged on to long distances. Any Magistrate under the Code can take cognizance of the case, but he cannot inquire into and try it unless he is a European British subject or unless he is a Sessions Judge or a District Magistrate. The rustic has therefore to go 40 miles or 50 miles, or perhaps more, with all his witnesses, to where the District Magistrate may be, and as you know, the District Magistrate is an itinerary officer going about from place to place, touring all over the district. You can imagine the hardship to which people are subjected in order that they may get justice in a court of law against offences which may have been committed by European British subjects. The hardship is then on account of their having to go to a District Magistrate or a Sessions Court. If, for instance, within the limits of jurisdiction which are permissible to Magistrates, they are authorised not only to take cognizance but to deal with petty cases by fine or something of the kind as an adequate punishment, then, at any rate, this great hardship would be removed for the class of litigants to whom I refer.

As to the mode of trial, the European British subjects have the right to ask for a Jury or Assessors if the case is tried by Assessors in which not less than half shall be either Europeans or Americans or both as the case may be. Well, I am not going now into the question whether that is a correct procedure, whether that is a proper provision, or whether anything could be done in regard to this matter to bring the law of British India into conformity with the notions which prevail at present in England with regard to jury trials and petty cases.

Then, again, if you go to the powers of Sessions Judges and District Magistrates, you will find that the Sessions Judge cannot inflict a punishment of more than one year upon European British subjects, and if at the time of writing the judgment he thinks that the offence is such that it requires a higher punishment, then he can send up the case to the High Court. Now, taking human nature as it is, even if the Sessions Judge thinks that something more than a year is needed, he may naturally say to himself, 'Well, I had better decide this case within my powers. What is the good of sending this rustic complainant and his witnesses all the way to Bombay or to Calcutta or to Madras, as the case may be, that is to say, to the High Court of the Province, and put them to all this unnecessary hardship and annoyance?' So he decides it within his powers and gives one year to the offender. The ordinary public do not understand that it is on account of these limitations upon his powers of giving punishment that what they call miscarriage of justice has taken place. The public do not realise that the Sessions Judge, whether he is a European or an Indian, has done his best under the circumstances and given such punishment as he can under the law, and that he has no power to inflict a higher punishment. But if power is given to him to inflict punishments to the extent to which he has power under the Code, so far as Indians are concerned, then complaints about miscarriage of justice would, I think, be considerably reduced.

I now come to the right of appeal. A European British subject, although he may be fined a pie or given a day's imprisonment, has the right of appeal, and he can go in appeal at his option either to the Sessions Court or to the High Court. Take another case. Suppose a European British subject and an Indian are tried together as co-accused, and the European is sentenced say, to a day's imprisonment. He has the right to go in appeal either to the Sessions Court or to the High Court, whereas a day's imprisonment, or it may be two days or three days, is non-appealable by the Indian co-accused and he has no right of appeal.

It may be that he has to rot in jail, whereas his co-accused gets off in the High Court. It may be 3 days or 30 days. I am taking an extreme case. Another thing is that even if the sentence was appealable, the Indian co-accused can only appeal to the lowest tribunal of appeal. Supposing he has been convicted by the District Magistrate, he can go up in appeal to the Sessions

[Mr. N. M. Samarth.]

Court. If the Sessions Court confirms the conviction and sentence, then he can go up to the High Court only by way of revision and, as every lawyer knows, the High Court rarely interferes in revision unless there is a substantial question of law involved. On facts, nothing could be done, whereas his co-accused goes to the High Court and he has a hearing on facts and on points of law and it may be he gets off, and the Indian co-accused rots in jail.

Mr. President : Under Standing Order 62 I must ask the Honourable Member to bring his remarks to a close.

Mr. N. M. Samarth : I did not notice that I had exceeded the time. Sir, I will now conclude my remarks. I need not go into detail but I will say one thing. I would draw attention to the Despatch of the Court of Directors of the year 1834 and, if I remember aright, in paragraphs 58, 59 and 60 of that Despatch directions are given to the Governor General in Council speedily to put European British subjects on the same footing in regard to criminal jurisdiction as British Indian subjects, that is to say, to subject them to the ordinary tribunals of the country equally, without any preference or distinction in favour of either. I keep an open mind on the subject. And though I have my own view as to the proper solution of the question, I trust, Sir, that every one concerned in this subject will look at it dispassionately and calmly and, in accordance with what the Viceroy told us, try to arrive at a conclusion satisfactory to both the communities in India, Indian and European.

Mr. C. W. Rhodes : Sir, in rising to make my first speech in this Assembly, I consider myself fortunate in commanding that sympathy always shown on such occasions when I have to deal with such a difficult and controversial subject and that I can appeal, if on that ground alone, to a hearing amongst my friends here. The mover of the Resolution has given us a very interesting historical resume of the subject. I do not intend to waste the time of this Honourable House by attempting to paint the lily or follow him upon those attractive paths of historical research. In fact, I think that what this House is most concerned with is not the reasons which led to the enactment of certain legislation, but whether it now presses heavily on any one or safeguards any one.

Although I speak from a very different standpoint, I have no fault to find with the tone of the Honourable Mover's speech. He feels strongly on the subject, but so do we. But strong feelings do not necessitate strong words and I intend to follow his excellent example to the best of my ability. I ask him and the Assembly to realise that I speak under a grave sense of responsibility, a responsibility accentuated by the knowledge that I am speaking both to and on behalf of people beyond these walls.

I know that many throughout India will open their papers to-morrow morning, expecting to read of violent speeches in this House and not a few are hoping for signs of parties splitting and of racial illwill. They will I trust be disappointed. All who have sacrificed not only time and money, but in some instances popularity also, to join this Assembly have a sense of responsibility which will enable them to rise above the language and the passions of the market place. I trust we shall prove to-day that the Reform Scheme has done something to moderate the old bitter animosities of the Ilbert Bill days. But outside, bitter racial feelings still exist, to be killed only by the calmness and courage with which this Assembly faces one by one the chief causes of our differences.

I will not add a single word to that bitterness and illwill, but this I must say, does anyone here present imagine for one moment that the bitter anti-British tone of a portion of the press and of politicians outside these walls, is calculated to allay the feelings of many of our community in regard to the repeal of these Sections of the Criminal Procedure Act at the present time? In such an atmosphere, how can we convince our fellow countrymen that the time has come to relax precautions considered necessary during the past 150 years? Do not forget that there are extremists on both sides, at one only in their determination to wreck the reforms, as all of us in this house are at one to make those reforms a success.

In this Assembly there are doubtless some who honestly believe that these clauses of the Act cast a slur on the Indian races. Others with equal sincerity believe them to be a necessary safeguard to meet exceptional circumstances. Let us agree, however, on two general principles, firstly equal and impartial justice for all members of the British Empire and for the stranger within our gates, and secondly, a mutual desire to respect the feelings and sentiments of our fellow citizens. I have frankly admitted the bitterness both of the past and present for nothing is to be gained by minimising the gravity of the situation. But the two principles I have mentioned will guide all I have yet to say. I have laid down the standard of equal justice, but does this imply identical laws and identical procedure for all? Certainly not. Only the other day in this House, I was impressed by the warmth with which our Hindu friends cried 'Hands off our ancient and peculiar Hindu Law.' That, of course, was civil law, but in regard to criminal law also, is the Hindu or Muhammadan to be punished for observing his own marriage laws, performing what in him is a virtue, in me an offence punishable with imprisonment.

The customs, beliefs and prejudices of the peoples of this land have not been stereotyped into one dead weight of common law, pressing heavily on one and lightly on another. All nations beside the Indian affirm that the British are a difficult race to understand. I agree, but does not that very fact require that we should be tried, at least in a last recourse, by those that do understand us?

Remember that in these days a European committing any offence is pursued, relentlessly, not only by the law but also by the administration right up to the British House of Commons. The Honourable Member told us that in the old days, a European, when he went upcountry, went under police surveillance. He goes up, to-day, under the surveillance of the police, the executive power and the press. I do not complain. Any European who cannot behave himself has no right to be in this country. Any European, if there are any, who fails in his duty on a jury is doing a greater disservice to his own fellow countrymen than to anyone else. But I may be told that if the average Indian does not understand the average European, the converse is also true. I am under no necessity to contest the point. If the Legislature will relieve us of the irksome and disagreeable obligation of sitting as jurymen in judgment on our Indian fellow citizens, we shall be truly grateful. If not, we are prepared to accept the responsibilities of citizenship and do our duty to the best of our ability.

But may I press another aspect of the question and one which affects not only the question of justice but also the equally important question of national sentiment. For, I frankly admit, that in the past these protective clauses, imposed on the Indian people as they were from outside, and against their will, have caused feelings of resentment and irritation. But do we abolish these feelings by transferring them from the Indian to the European? Times have changed. The government of the country now lies within these walls. The laws now on the Statute Book remain there by the will of the people as expressed by this Assembly. What our Indian friends deny to the European as a political right, may they not now, with the power in their own hands, and of their own free-will, grant as a measure of justice. It is a new ideal, but in it lie the seeds of all mutual understanding and good-will in the days that are to come. In itself of course it is no new principle, for special laws have been made for Hindu and Muhammadan, as well as for the European. We, Europeans, have entered wholeheartedly into the Reform Scheme (Hear, hear) in full confidence, that though in a minority, any appeal to justice and reason will not be made in vain. I can assure the Honourable Mover, that if he will withdraw this Resolution in the spirit I have indicated, the impression created in the public mind will be such as to close the chapter which began with the Ilbert Bill and to open a new era in the history of India.

But, whilst I must oppose this sweeping Resolution, I make no claim for the retention of any particular legal formula. If the interests of justice to the European can be safeguarded in any way more in consonance with Indian sentiment, by all means let us explore new avenues. But, above all, Sir, let us do so in a spirit of good fellowship and mutual trust, with the single idea of equal, even-handed justice for all.

Mr. Harchandrai Vishindas : Sir, I am quite sure that I shall follow the exhortation which the Honourable Mover of this Resolution has held out to the whole of this Assembly and also follow the very excellent example of good temper that has been shown by Mr. Rhodes, so that no heat may be imported into the discussion of this question. Those of us who remember the controversies that arose on the well-known Ilbert Bill will be perfectly anxious that the bitterness and racial antipathy that had been produced in those days should not at all be repeated now. I think Europeans and Indians, both in this House and outside, will have recognised that there has been a material change of atmosphere so far as the equality of races is concerned and that, although a veiled dissentient note was struck by the last speaker, I think the majority of his co-religionists and Europeans will rather be of opinion that the inequality which the law has laid down in the Criminal Procedure Code should be removed in the interests not only of Indians but also of Englishmen themselves. Therefore, it is with confidence that I think that the other Members of the Assembly will not join with Mr. Rhodes in asking Mr. Samarth to withdraw his Resolution.

Now, Sir, pardon me for challenging some of the assertions that have been made by Mr. Rhodes. He says that these provisions which are intended to be removed by this Resolution are a kind of protective safeguard. I do not understand that language at all, because, if you go through the provisions which have been properly analysed by Mr. Samarth in his speech, and the definitions, you will find that it is not a question of personal law, in which you have to observe one law for Hindus, another for Muhammadans, another for Christians. It is criminal law which has to be administered towards all the people who come before the courts in an equal manner. Now, you cannot say that a man belonging to one race is not guilty of the offence of assault if, under similar circumstances, you make a man of another race guilty of assault. How are the positions entirely divergent? I think that this distinctive restrictive chapter in the Criminal Procedure Code should not have found a place in that legislation at all. It has been productive of great harm but productive of no good at all. On the contrary, a civilised Government like the British Government should set an example to the world that they are above all racial prejudice and that in the eyes of their law the European and Indian are alike. I think that from the change of atmosphere that we have been observing of late, the Government's angle of vision has also altered and that they seem to think, from the pronouncements we have been hearing from time to time, that the time has come when equality in this respect must be established. Otherwise, the Reforms which have been ushered in with so much eclat would be to a certain extent a mockery. If, as Mr. Rhodes says, that now the Government of the country rests within the four walls of this House, and if that Government is conducted with these racial distinctions on the Statute Book, how can it be said to be the Government within the hands of this House?

I think that after the exhaustive speech of Mr. Samarth no further arguments are required to support the Resolution. The only flaw that I found in Mr. Samarth's Resolution, for which purpose I have sent notice of an amendment which appears on the agenda, was that he confined the removal of the distinction only as regards the Covenanted Civilians of the two races, but, after the explanation that he has given in his speech that this restriction was intended to bring out the episodes that took place about 50 years ago, that even so far back as half a century ago, the feeling of the most intelligent portion of the Council was that there should be no distinction between the European and the Indian Covenanted Services, I say the explanation that he has offered just now shows that he is in perfect accord with my amendment, to which I shall be speaking later on and to which it will be premature to refer now.

All that I say is that if this Resolution is now withdrawn or in any way whittled down, the moral effect in the country will be disastrous. People have been aware from time to time that Questions and Resolutions on this subject have been put and moved respectively, and also of the pronouncements that we have had from His Excellency the Viceroy and Members of Government; and I say that if this Resolution is withdrawn or in any way whittled down as is suggested, the result would be disastrous, in so far as the country will lose confidence in the Assembly, and think that the Assembly is not able to accomplish one of the most essential duties that lie upon it. Now, Sir, let me remind Mr. Rhodes that a very unhappy belief has been fostered among the Indian people, which may not be entirely justified, but which has received impetus from certain cases which have been brought to the notice of the public of late, that these provisions are designed for the purpose of letting European offenders escape justice altogether. The various provisions that have been pointed out by Mr. Samarth go to show that there is a most glaring and barefaced inequality in the treatment that has to be accorded in the criminal courts to Europeans and to Indians and that in these days of Reform it is an anomaly which must be removed at once. Now, one cannot see why an Indian Presidency Magistrate, as has been pointed out by Mr. Samarth, should be competent to try a European justly and why an Indian of an equal or even higher status in the mofussil should be incompetent. Now, it might be lurking in the minds of some European gentlemen here, which out of good taste they do not think it advisable to give expression to, that Europeans cannot expect to receive the same kind of justice at the hands of Indian Magistrates as at the hands of European Magistrates. But I would certainly disabuse them of this belief entirely if they entertain that. If there is any Indian Magistrate who is not capable of doing justice to a European, then he is not fit to hold his post at all. Very often in criminal cases applications for transfer are made to higher courts in order that a case might be transferred from one Magistrate to another. Oftentimes a Hindu complains that a particular Magistrate is a Muhammadaz and therefore he does not expect to receive justice at his hands and that the case should be transferred to some other Magistrate; yet the reply of the High Court is, 'We have the fullest confidence in our Magistrates. We expect a Hindu Magistrate to do as much justice to a Muhammadan or a Christian or a Parsee as to a Hindu.' Now, if in the abstract you recognise this principle, then, Sir, I fail to see what is the justification for the continuance of this unfortunate provision on the Statute Book at all. Therefore, Sir, without laying very great stress upon this point, because the moment you go into the question it is very likely that we may import some racial feeling into the subject, as people in this Assembly and outside are perfectly familiar with the various aspects of this question, with the history of the whole trouble from the beginning to the end, I wish only to impress upon this Assembly that they will be doing their duty not only to one race but to all the races here by passing this Resolution. I would appeal also to my European brethren in this Assembly that it is in their interests that these distinctions should be removed and that this Resolution should be passed, and the feeling should go abroad in the country that the Government at this juncture, after the introduction of the Reforms, are quite prepared to accord equality to all the races and not in any way be partial in the administration of their law to one community as against the others. With these few words, Sir, I entirely support the Resolution.

[Mr. Harchandrai Vishindas.]

Munshi Iswar Saran: Sir, I have listened with much interest to the calm and temperate speech of the Honourable Member on my right; but I feel rather inclined to think that the picture which he has drawn of Europeans in this country is a bit over-drawn. He tells us that a European now goes into the country not only under police surveillance, but under the surveillance of the executive and of the press. If that be so—and I submit it is not so—then our hearts go out in sympathy to the unhappy miserable unfortunate Europeans whose lot is cast in this country. The speech of the Honourable gentleman on my right, Sir, is like a quinine pill with a sugar coating; he has given expression to those very sentiments here which were given expression to in former days in offensive and aggressive language, but he has now put them forward as gently, as kindly, as calmly and as temperately as he could. Sir, we hear a good deal about the Reforms. I appreciate the Reforms as very many people do; but I wish to make it perfectly clear that we do not wish to seek the co-operation of anybody either in this House or outside it on any ground other than that of perfect equality. What I submit, Sir, is this: whether the Reforms succeed or whether they fail, Indians now demand that they and others in the country should be treated on terms of perfect and absolute equality. We want justice for ourselves and we want justice for those who happen to be in this country, be they Europeans or others. The Honourable Member said: 'Please consider this question in two aspects: does this press heavily on any one? Does it safeguard the rights of any one?' I agree to accept these two standards of judgment, and I shall beg the House to consider the question from these two points of view.

Sir, does this press heavily on any one? Most assuredly, most certainly it does; it is a constant reminder to the Indian people that there is a distinction in law between the trial of Europeans and Indians, which in other words is a hall-mark of our inferiority in our own country. It is, therefore, that you find not only in this Assembly, but also outside it, a strong feeling that all these distinctions must go. As regards the safeguarding of their interests, I may assure the Honourable gentleman on my right that very many Indians now understand the English people much better than they used to do before.

Men who have been to England, men whose business it is to study English literature, English manners and customs, English thoughts and English ways of living, surely they should be considered to be competent to try cases in which Europeans appear as the accused. Has the Honourable Member on my right ever taken into consideration this fact that if a civil case between two Europeans comes before a Court—a case full of legal difficulties and intricacies it comes before a Civil Court presided over by an Indian, and an Indian is called upon to pronounce his decision on most intricate points of personal and English law. Why not then say, 'this man cannot understand us, he cannot understand our customs, he cannot understand our ways of living and therefore he is incompetent to try our case'. I submit, Sir, that if the argument of the Honourable gentleman on my right applies to criminal cases, with much greater force should it apply to civil cases, but as the Honourable gentleman on my right is fully aware, there is no objection, either here or elsewhere to-day and indeed there has been none at any time before to Indian judges having jurisdiction over such cases. Sir, the Honourable gentleman on my right said that 'Indians do not understand us' and by implication he admitted that Europeans did not understand Indians, and speaking on behalf of an important Association he said, 'Oh! relieve us of our duty of serving as jury men in cases where Indians were the accused'. But he forgets that so many cases of Indians come before European Magistrates, is it his desire that these Europeans should be relieved of their duty to deal with cases in which Indians are the accused? Surely not, because if that be so, then the whole fabric will crumble to pieces if we are to proceed on the assumption that Europeans are not to try Indians and Indians are not to try Europeans. Let us quite clearly understand the position now. The position has most assuredly changed, you have got before you a changed and changing India, and you must recognise that fact and take it into account; the feeling of that changed and changing India is that we will not submit to any racial distinction whatsoever. We claim perfect freedom and equality of treatment, and, at the same time, we are anxious that equality of treatment and of justice should not only be enjoyed by us alone but by all those Europeans who happen to be in this country. The freedom we are seeking is not for the purposes of self aggrandisement, we desire freedom for ourselves, for the Europeans, and indeed for all the races that are to be found in this country.

I humbly wish to ask this House to take this changed feeling into account and to remove all these distinctions. Only then can there be any possibility of a peaceful, friendly and brotherly feeling which fosters sympathy between Indians and Europeans and which, I am sure, we all sincerely hope, will come about in course of time.

Mr. Muhammad Yamin Khan: Sir, I do not wish to take up too much of the valuable time of this House in supporting the Resolution which has been moved by my Honourable friend, Mr. Samarth, because he has fully explained, and other speakers who have spoken in favour of it have fully explained, the principle and the ideas from an Indian point of view. But I should like to refer to a portion of a speech which was made by my Honourable friend, Mr. Rhodes, in which he said that Indians may marry a second time and have two wives but they could not be held guilty of a criminal offence for so doing, while if he were to do likewise, he would be held to be guilty of a criminal offence. I submit, Sir, that this view is a very narrow one because wherever an Indian goes, his personal law goes with him. Even if an Indian goes to England he takes his personal law. Hindus and Muhammadans go there and they have to take their personal laws. If an Indian does marry a second time, he goes scot-free in this country and he would not be liable for punishment even in England.

Then there is another aspect of the question; if an Indian commits a crime in England, he is tried by an English Magistrate, who perhaps does not know anything at all about Indian ways and customs. In the same way, as stated by my Honourable friend who has just sat down, that some of the English Magistrates who are appointed to serve in this country, in fact nearly all when they first come out, know very little about Indian ways and manners, but they are called upon to try Indians in the Criminal Courts of the country. If such differences do exist that Englishmen should try only their fellow-countrymen, and Indians should try only Indians, then the whole fabric of the Government must surely crumble away.

For the good will of the people, Europeans should remember and consider that they are living in the same atmosphere as Indians, and they are holding the same position in the Empire as Indians, and they must at least recognise that equality of treatment is only fair and just and a matter of the first importance. If Indians are not properly treated in their own country, how can they expect to receive fair treatment outside their own country. I have been practising as a lawyer for many years on the Criminal side and I know that the Magistrates who hold office to-day are not the same Magistrates who held office 20 years ago. Certain provisions in the Code of Criminal Procedure may have been all right 20 years ago when we had Magistrates in this country who did not know English at all and if an Englishman came up before a Magistrate who did not know English, he could not properly try him because he would not understand him. Nowadays, nearly 90 per cent. of Indian Magistrates are graduates and they have been trained in the atmosphere of English culture and English ideas. The Magistrates of to-day are superior to those of twenty years ago and to let those provisions remain in the Code of Criminal Procedure is considered at present a slur on the Indian community and on those Indian Magistrates who are quite fit to try an Englishman. As Mr. Harchandrai Vishindas said, if an Indian Magistrate is not fit to try an Englishman, I think it stands to reason that he is not fit to try an Indian and therefore not fit to hold his post. The Government should be careful to select those persons who are quite fit to try both English and Indian, in which case, I suppose, there would be no objection to my Honourable friend, Mr. Rhodes, in regard to this matter. I will not take up any more of the time of this Assembly.

Mr. President: I think it will be convenient to the House if I take the adjournment now and call upon the Honourable Home Member to move his amendment at 2-45.

The House is therefore adjourned till 2-45 P.M.

The Assembly re-assembled after Lunch at a Quarter to Three of the Clock. The Honourable the President was in the Chair.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: Sir, I move that:

‘For sub-clauses (a) and (b) of the Resolution, the following be substituted, namely, that a Committee be appointed to consider the desirability of amending those provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, which differentiate between Indians and European British subjects, Americans and Europeans who are not British subjects, in criminal trials and proceedings and to report on the best methods of giving effect to their proposals.’

I have reason to believe, Sir, that one or two words in this amendment have been criticised by certain Members of this Assembly. After consulting one of the leading Members of the Assembly I am quite prepared to substitute, with your permission, Sir, for the words ‘the desirability of amending’ the words ‘what amendments should be made in.’ I do not know how far this meets the objections of those who think that the wording of my amendment is defective. Turning to the Resolution itself, I may say that we have heard in this Assembly speeches admirable for quality and moderation on the question under discussion, and I can only trust that Members will continue to adopt the same temperate note in dealing with this very difficult question. I have every confidence that this will be the case and I hope that I myself shall not be guilty of any extravagant expression which can give offence to anybody.

Sir, the Honourable Mover has every reason for saying that the law is anomalous on many points at present. It is particularly so in regard to officers of the Indian Civil Service and equally so in regard to Presidency Magistrates. If Members of this Assembly will examine the law, they will find for instance that this special right of appeal, which is so highly treasured by many Europeans in this country, does not extend to sentences awarded by Presidency Magistrates, who may be, and indeed very often are, Indians. Similarly, the Honourable Member is on very strong ground indeed when he attacks the definition of the term ‘European British subject;’ we have been well aware of the inconsistencies arising from the definition for a long time but, for obvious reasons which I think would commend themselves to this Assembly, we have not in the past attempted any amendment of it. At the same time, the defects do indicate the necessity for a modification of the law.

Before, however, I proceed to consider the particular subject of my amendment, I should like Honourable Members of the Assembly to be quite clear on what really the differentiation and the distinctions between Europeans and Indians are. The Honourable Mover put several of them before us, but not all. I shall enumerate them as shortly as I can. In the first place, the provisions of the Code regarding security for good behaviour do not apply to European British subjects who come within the mischief of the European Vagrancy Act. Then, as the Honourable Mover said, European British subjects have more extensive rights of appeal. They also have an option of appealing either to the High Court or to the Court of Sessions. They have more extensive rights in the matter of habeas corpus. They are not triable by second or third class Magistrates or even by a Magistrate of the first class unless he is a Justice of the Peace. The jurisdiction of Assistant Sessions Judges, District Magistrates and Presidency Magistrates over European British subjects has already been dealt with; also the question of sentences. Then finally, in cases of trials before a High Court, a Sessions Court or a District Magistrate, European British subjects are entitled to be tried by a jury of which not less than half shall be European British subjects. I think that exhausts the most important of the privileges. I have left out minor points because they would not interest the Assembly. But in connection with this last privilege, the Assembly ought not to overlook the fact that under Section 275 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, in a trial by jury before a Court of Session, an Indian accused may, if he so desires, require that the majority of the jury shall consist of persons who are neither Europeans nor Americans. I do not pretend for one moment that that privilege is co-extensive with the privilege of European British subjects, because it is not. But it does go some way in the direction of an equality of privileges. Then there is another matter which is important, and that is the fact that in many districts now this racial discrimination does not arise because many District Magistrates and Sessions Judges, who are ex-officio Justices of the Peace are Indians. I have the figures here for one province, but I really do not think that I need draw attention to them.

The position, I may say, is generally that Europeans are, without objection or criticism, in many cases triable by Indians and therefore much of the feeling about such trials appears to me to be based on sentiment.

I turn now to the reasons for these privileges and I may say at once as I understand the facts, that in my opinion they are not those which were put forward by the Mover of the Resolution. I have made some study of this matter and I trace the differentiation rather to the jealousy with which in the 18th Century and much later, the jurisdiction of the East India Company's courts was regarded. For many years in this country the courts of the East India Company had no kind of jurisdiction over European British subjects. Civil and Criminal jurisdiction was vested in such courts as the Mayor's Court, the Recorders' Court, Courts of Justices of the Peace, Courts of Oyer and Terminer and finally the Supreme Court and the High Court. It is quite true that the earlier Charters gave extensive powers to the East India Company as regards the administration of justice over all subjects of His Majesty, but, as a matter of fact, an examination of the records will show that the powers were not exercised effectively and actually up to 1872 criminal jurisdiction continued to be vested in Crown Courts. Up to 1861, for instance, European British subjects could not be bailed or committed for trial except by Justices of the Peace. Now the origin of this system was, as I understand it, in the desire of the Crown from the earliest period that English settlers in this country should receive justice on some system analogous to that which prevailed in their own country. Indeed, it is rather interesting to see that up to 1813, this privilege extended to civil cases also and even then when a civil case was decided in the muffassil by one of the Company's courts the appeal in the case of Europeans lay to the Supreme Court whereas in the case of Indians it lay to the Suddar Diwani Adalat. I cannot be sure about the year, but my recollection is that this continued till 1836.

Now when these privileges were originally conceded, there was good deal of reason for this distinction, because the powers of administering criminal justice were vested in Muhammadan courts according to Muhammadan Law, at least in Bengal. I am speaking of that province. The Court of Suddar Nizamat Adalat was not indeed instituted till 1772 and it was left entirely under the control of the Nawab Nazim until 1793. In view of recent discussions as to the separation of Judicial from the Executive, I may note also that the Governor General and his Council used to sit as Members of that Court until 1808. After that, separate judges were appointed, but even then the court had no jurisdiction over Europeans until 1861, when the High Court was created. Later in 1870, various anomalies in the system regarding the trial of Europeans were apparent, and it was proposed to amend the Code. I do not wish to go into details as to what the proposals were, save to say that they were more extensive than those finally adopted, but the law then enacted was very much as it stands now and here I will quote to the Assembly the words of Professor Cowell who has written the best work on this subject that we have had for many years on this subject. Professor Cowell says:

'The system by which the exemption of Europeans from liability to the criminal jurisdiction of the Muffassal Courts was secured was considered to work a great and real political injury. It ensured to English wrongdoers practical immunity from punishment; the inconvenience and expense and difficulties attending their trial serving to render conviction uncertain and improbable. Two extreme opinions seemed to prevail upon this subject: one that to maintain any distinction at all between European and Native in respect of criminal offences was a great injustice, and contrary to the principles on which the British Government ought to rule; the other that Englishmen were entitled to trial by an English jury, before an English Judge, in all cases of a degree above the class of petty offences with which a Justice of the Peace could deal in a summary manner.'

On the same point, Mr. Fitz-James Stephen, who was then Law Member, expressed his views in the following words:

'In countries situated as most European countries are, it is no doubt desirable that there should be no personal law; but in India it is otherwise. Personal, as opposed to territorial laws, prevail here on all sorts of subjects, and their maintenance is claimed with the utmost pertinacity by those who are subject to them. The Muhammadan has his personal law. The Hindu has his personal law.'

And so on.

It is clear therefore that at that time there was a good deal of feeling on both sides in regard to this question and it is to illustrate that that I have read the extracts put before you, one being the opinion of Professor Cowell who voiced the Indian view and the other that of Mr. Fitz-James Stephen.

Now this discussion brings me at once to the question of the desirability of retaining or abrogating these privileges, for many of the arguments that applied in 1870, I think, apply with equal force now. Indians claim that the existence of the privilege really is a great political evil. They say that such a system, as I understand it, is not consistent with their self-respect and finally they add that it results in grave miscarriages of justice. I am not quoting the arguments used in this Assembly, but arguments which I have gathered from discussions with people outside and also from an examination of various speeches in the past. And so far as jury cases are concerned, I am bound to say that in certain trials there is a good deal of justification for this view. I myself as a Sessions Judge have asked the High Court to transfer to its own file cases of this kind and have myself tried such cases. I have examined the records of others and it does seem to me that it is not infrequently a matter of some difficulty to get a fair and reasonable verdict. I do not want to go into recent cases and I hope that other speakers who follow me will take my example and avoid what is really a very dangerous topic particularly as such a course might be unfair to individuals. At the same time while I admit that the results are not always satisfactory, I believe miscarriages of justice are not nearly as numerous as people seem to think. The real truth is that a few cases are brought prominently before the public. They excite a lot of controversy and feeling while the many cases which are tried perfectly fairly escape notice. I have got some figures from the Legislative Department on this point and I find for instance that the Allahabad High Court figures for 1896 show that 14 Europeans were convicted in Sessions trials and 12 acquitted. In an earlier period in the Punjab the number of Europeans convicted was very much larger, 60 being convicted against 11 acquitted. Now let me take the case of jury trials of Indians in Bengal. Then I find that in two years, in trials at Sessions, the numbers were 3,700 convicted and 2,300 acquitted. If that indicates anything, it indicates that Punjab European juries were no more lenient to criminals than Bengal Indian juries.

But I do not want to pin my faith to those statistics at all because it is really the rarer cases of what are believed to be unfair acquittals that are much criticised in the Press and that occasion great resentment in the minds of educated Indians, particularly in cases of violence by Europeans to Indians; it is those cases that I had in my mind when I said quite frankly that I had known instances in which I could not honestly say that I thought justice had been administered. I do not believe however that in the case of trials before Magistrates there is any cause for complaint. I speak with some experience. I was a Magistrate myself for many years and also a Sessions Judge and I have dealt with a great number of cases in which Europeans were complainants and Europeans were accused, and my belief is—and I offer this as a considered opinion—that Magistrates deal with these cases very fairly and honestly.

Further, as regards jury trials, it is very difficult to say whether an Indian jury would be much better in most of the cases than an English jury or a European jury. I am told that Magistrates are fully cognisant of the customs of Europeans indeed. One gentleman said to me that they have made it a study of their lives. I do not think in any case that the same can be said of Indian jury men, nor do I think that it is quite fair to compare civil and criminal trials, because in one case a man's property may be at stake but in the other case his life and his liberty may be in danger. Then we cannot overlook the peculiar difficulty in regard to European women. One of the great essentials in any system of criminal justice is that the person accused should have absolute confidence in the tribunal by which he is being tried, and that is the consideration which every one who has to examine this subject will have to bear in mind in connection with this question particularly in regard to women.

I think the Assembly will give me credit for having approached this subject in an unprejudiced manner and with a desire to do what is fair and right; but it is one of very great difficulty. I am well aware that Indian feeling is much exercised on the subject, that they believe that the present system is entirely unfair and that it is based on a racial mistrust which is inconsistent with any co-operation with Europeans. I think the history of the privileges arises from different causes. I have explained, it mainly arose from the desire of the Crown to give to His Majesty's British subjects in this country the same method of justice to which they were accustomed at home. And if Indian opinion on this matter is disturbed, European opinion is equally so. Englishmen regard, rightly or wrongly, the present system as conferring on them an ancient and valued privilege and when in 1885 it was proposed to amend the law and the Ilbert Bill was introduced, the most acute feeling was roused over this subject. In dealing with a subject of this kind, I may, therefore, fairly appeal for a great deal of patience and forbearance both to Europeans and Indians, and I am confident, I shall not appeal in vain. (Hear, hear.) The question is one of great importance and highly controversial. It is, at the same time, necessary that the Government should face it; it is the more necessary, if I may say so, in view of His Excellency the Viceroy's frequent declarations as to his intentions in regard to racial equality in this country. (Hear, hear.) It is, and will be, the duty of the Government to give effect to those sentiments to the utmost degree in their power. At the same time, I have said that Europeans in this country value their privileges very highly. For many years, there has been an impression for the correctness of which I do not vouch, that Englishmen carried with them their personal law wherever they went in British India. You will find that statement made by the greatest authorities from the middle of the 18th century to the end of last century and it is a serious matter to tinker with such a valued privilege. At the same time, as I said, we had to face this difficulty and knowing the question would be raised, before this Resolution was moved, the Government of India addressed a letter to all Local Governments inviting their opinions on it. The replies to that letter are not complete, in fact comparatively few Local Governments have answered, and we are in some difficulty in arriving at a final decision on a difficult question of this kind in the absence of the views of those whose interests are affected. Further, I do not think, it would be possible to discuss in the full Assembly a delicate, complicated and controversial question of this character in a reasonable and satisfactory manner. There is always a difficulty in the public discussion of a question of this kind, but I think that Honourable Members who have sat on Committees with me and with other Europeans this year will bear me out when I say that difficulties which arise and would seem to be insuperable in a public discussion can often be solved in a friendly discussion across the table (Hear, hear), particularly if the Members of the Committee approach the subject in a genuine spirit of cordiality, with a desire to meet one another and to do justice; I hope that this will be the case in reference to this matter also. I have explained that we have not received the full replies of Local Governments and that has increased our difficulties. What I therefore propose in this amendment is that we, the Government, should appoint, on the recommendation of this Assembly a Committee consisting of Europeans and Indians, officials and non-officials, on which Indian opinion should be adequately represented to examine the whole question. This Committee would not necessarily be a Committee of this Assembly but might well include eminent judges and lawyers who will be able to give the greatest assistance. The idea is that this Committee should consider the question of amending these provisions in the Code to which I have referred and should report to the Government the best manner in which their proposals might be effected. I hope that will meet the wishes of the Assembly; I feel that the subject is a very difficult one and that any hasty decision to take immediate action may cause great rancour, resentment, bitterness and even worse in various parts of the country. It is for Honourable Members of this Assembly—I have often said this before, and I cannot help reminding them of it again—remembering their responsibility for the peace and good government of this country, remembering the influence, the very great influence which they exercise upon the Government now, to consider whether the appointment of a Committee such as I propose is not the best method of dealing with the question, whether it will not meet the ends of justice and satisfy all fair requirements in this matter.

I have only to say one thing more and that is, that in any case, whatever be the decision of this Assembly on this amendment, Government are determined that the law shall be so framed as to prevent, so far as is humanly possible, all failures of justice either in the case of Europeans or Indians. It is our desire that equal justice should be meted out to both, and that those who commit offences under the law, be they Europeans or Indians, should receive sentences adequate and commensurate with their guilt.

Mr. President: The original question was that :

'This Assembly recommends to the Governor General in Council :

(a) that all distinctions between Indian and European members of the Indian Civil Service in regard to criminal jurisdiction over European British subjects be abrogated ; and

(b) that subject to the provisions of sub-section (3) of Section 65 of the Government of India Act, all distinctions in the Criminal Law of India as between Indians on the one hand and European British subjects, Europeans who are not European British subjects and Americans on the other, in regard to mode of trial, sentence to be passed and right of appeal, be removed.'

Since which an amendment has been moved that for sub-clauses (a) and (b) of the Resolution the following be substituted, namely :

'That a Committee be appointed to consider what amendments should be made in those provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898 which differentiate between Indians and European British subjects, Americans and Europeans who are not British subjects in criminal trials and proceedings and to report on the best methods of giving effect to their proposals.'

The question I have to put is that that amendment be made.

Mr. P. P. Ginwala : Sir, I rise to a point of order. I have got an amendment* standing in my name. Would I be in order in moving this amendment while speaking on the amendment moved by the Honourable the Home Member ?

Mr. President : As regards the point raised by the Honourable Member from Burma : the proposal which he makes is substantially covered by the proposal made by the Honourable the Home Member, further it cannot be moved at this stage because it is not an amendment to the amendment. As regards other amendments, the amendment standing in the name of Mr. Kabir-ud-din Ahmed is, I think, covered by the Resolution. In any case I should take that point when the Honourable Member's opportunity comes.

Mr. J. Chaudhuri : I rise to a point of order, Sir. I have given notice of an amendment. I got Sir William Vincent's amendment last night and I gave notice of my amendment this morning. I find that it has been admitted. This is a substantive motion of Sir William Vincent, and I should like to know whether I am entitled to move my amendment now.

Mr. President : The amendments handed in by the Honourable Member are in order. Has he any reason to suppose they are not ?

Rao Bahadur T. Rangaohariar : May I move my amendment, Sir ?

Mr. President : The Chair is placed in some difficulty in dealing with amendments of which such short notice has been given. I am aware that framers of the amendments are not always to blame, for reasons of which the Assembly is aware, but meanwhile I shall have to take into consideration those amendments of which short notice has been given and deliver my opinion upon them at a later stage in this debate.

Mr. B. S. Kamat : With reference to this point of order, Sir, I wish to invite your attention to rule No. 118, at p. 40 of this book, which says that when an amendment of a Resolution is moved or when two or three amendments are moved, the President shall take the sense of the meeting. I gather from that, that two or three amendments must be moved before any particular amendment could be put to the Assembly. Personally, I do not wish to move my amendment after the statement which the Honourable Sir William Vincent has made ; but I just draw the Chair's attention to this rule, especially emphasising the point that two or three amendments must be moved before any particular amendment can be put to the House.

Mr. President : There is no rule or standing order obliging the Chair to permit discussion of two or three amendments simultaneously. If there be such a rule it would have to be abrogated at once.

Mr. S. C. Shahani : I rise to oppose the amendment that has been proposed by the Honourable Sir William Vincent, and the reason is this. The opinion of the House has not been well defined. Before the opinion of the House on this question has been well-defined, this amendment has been proposed. In order to substantiate my argument I would refer to what transpired the other day when my friend, Mr. Joshi, moved a Resolution with regard to the Workmen's Breach of Contract Act. Sir William Vincent on that occasion said that the Government accepted in principle and in theory the arguments that had been advanced by Mr. Joshi. I know that this created a wrong impression upon the House. I and many of my friends considered that the principle on which Mr. Joshi's Resolution was based was wrong. It is all very well to say that when a labourer who has accepted advances refuses to repay the advances or to perform the work undertaken, he only breaks a civil contract and therefore should not incur criminal liability ; but my long experience has taught me to believe that if we go in for legislation of the kind suggested we shall only teach dishonesty to the labourer and make right organisation of Indian society impossible.

Precisely on these grounds I wish that the opinion of the House on this occasion should be clearly defined. We have listened to my Honourable friend, Mr. Samarth, on the one hand, and my Honourable friend, Mr. Rhodes, on the other. Mr. Samarth does not believe in any distinction whatever being made in Criminal Law between Europeans and Indians. Mr. Rhodes has come forward to say that the special proceedings for Europeans are justifiable on the ground firstly that they serve as a necessary safeguard for Europeans, and secondly that their repeal would argue want of respect for European sentiment. In support of his contention he has referred to certain customs, prevailing in India not being adequately understood by Europeans. A Muhammadan can marry two or more wives. If this can offer any difficulty in the case of any European Magistrate in deciding a case in which a point of monogamous marriage is involved, then I would say, that such cases ought not to be sent to them at all. To take another instance, the law of adultery is viewed differently both by the Indians on one hand and by Europeans on the other. So much so that in the Upper Sind Frontier, I see, that the present Indian Criminal Law is greatly resented by some of my constituents. When I went about canvassing their votes,

* The amendment was : 'After clause (b), the following clause be inserted, namely : (c) that a Committee consisting of European and Indian Members of both Houses be appointed to make suitable detailed proposals, to give effect to the principles involved in clauses (a) and (b).'

[Mr. S. C. Shahani.]

I was given to understand that I should make a point of bringing up this question in this House, and having it properly discussed. I do not believe that differences of customs would operate as an incapacity to try certain cases on the part of Judges. Magistrates and Judges are ordinarily highly cultured and they should be assumed to have the requisite ability to try these cases. Mr. Rhodes added that the atmosphere of India was surcharged with political hatred. I would come forward to say, 'examine the causes of it.' I think one of the chief causes of the present condition of things is the differential treatment that is being meted out to the different sections constituting the Indian people; so that it is very necessary to understand whether, in any form whatever, this differential treatment should be tolerated. I have liked very much my Honourable friend, Mr. Samarth's bringing up this question for debate. He has some influence with the Government and he has persuaded the Government to include this—his Resolution, in the agenda for an official day. I am thankful to him for all that. But when he distinguishes between major anomalies and minor anomalies, I must say I am not at one with him. The principle, which is incorporated in the second clause of this Resolution, should be accepted and accepted wholeheartedly. So far as I have been able to gauge the feeling of the Members of this House, I feel that they are all agreed that all distinctions between Indians and Europeans in the matter of criminal jurisdiction should be abolished. If this House does clearly recognise this principle, I should not have the slightest objection to accepting the amendment that has been proposed by my Honourable friend, Sir William Vincent.

Real safeguards for different sections constituting a society are mutual regard and mutual respect. The appointment of a Committee will be calculated to do harm, if first the principle of abolishing the distinction is not clearly recognised. The political atmosphere of India is surcharged with political hatred, and the only remedy for this evil that I can see is for different sections to fraternize, to unite as brothers in all matters, and then and only then will the present difficulties disappear.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: I take Sir William Vincent's amendment to mean that the Honourable the Home Member recognises that all distinctions of race should be put an end to and that he requests that a Committee may be appointed for the purpose of deciding in what way effect should be given to that principle. If I understand the language of the amendment correctly, I take it that that is what he is really aiming at. Well, if that is so, then most of the objections that have been put forward by my Honourable friend, Professor Shahani, fall to the ground. The Honourable the Home Member has given one very excellent reason for the step he has taken, and that is that the Head of the Government, His Excellency the Viceroy, has expressed in public that there should be equality as regards the status in this country between the races inhabiting it. After this reference to the opinion of His Excellency the Viceroy, the words 'what a amendment should be introduced into the Code of Criminal Procedure,' make it quite clear that the Home Member accepts the principle and wants a Committee to report in detail the various amendments which should be introduced into the Acts which have from time to time been passed. If I may say so, one more reason might be advanced by the Honourable the Home Member, namely, while we are agitating—and the Government are in sympathy with us—that all distinction of race should be abolished in the Colonies, how can we go to the Colonies with a good face if we perpetuate racial distinctions in our own country between Indians on the one hand and Europeans on the other. I am glad that principle that we should claim equality elsewhere has been recognised by the Government and given expression to. I take it, therefore, the Honourable the Home Member has framed his amendment in order to meet these two contentions—he has therefore recognised the principle and asks that a Committee may be appointed, as I said before, to work out the details and report what amendments should be introduced into the various Acts so as to give effect to the principles of racial equality.

Mr. E. L. Price: I have never intervened in a debate in this Assembly with more reluctance than I do now. I have been a regular attendant at the meetings of this Assembly, and I am afraid I have spoken pretty frequently, but if you turn up my record you will find that I have never spoken before on a racial question, and I should be very thankful if I never have so to speak again. I dislike these sort of questions intensely; but I do want very keenly to ask the House to accept the amendment proposed by the Honourable Sir William Vincent, and I beg of the House to do that on the lines, I think, of following its own precedent. There was nothing, I venture to say, when we first met that was more in the public eye, and a keener cause of dissatisfaction, perhaps, than the Press Laws. The original proposition ran as follows:

'This Assembly recommends to the Governor General in Council that a Committee of officials and non-officials be appointed to examine the Press and Registration of Books Act, 1867, and the Indian Press Act, 1910, and report what modifications are required in the existing law.'

And after a very interesting debate the amended Resolution ran:

'This Assembly recommends to the Governor General in Council that a Committee, of whom not less than two-thirds shall be non-officials, to examine the Press and Registration of Books Act, 1867, and so on.'

The point about it is that there was no opinion expressed to that Committee other than the opinions contained in the debate. Let me put it this way; if, as a matter of fact, the House had first given its verdict on the principle at stake and then merely referred the whole question to the Committee which was appointed; practically for drafting purposes, the House could not have obtained the services of such men on that Committee as it did obtain, nor could it have secured such a thorough investigation of the whole question, from a judicial as well as an administrative point of view, as it did secure. The results are known.

Now, Sir, there is a precedent from the Assembly, and I must admit with a certain amount of patriotism for this Assembly, that I am very anxious that we should, when we have a good precedent, keep to it. But I would like to give the House another example from the Council of State, if that is in order, and that was in regard to the question of Repressive Laws which was one of the most burning questions in India, probably more burning than even the Press Laws were. The Resolution was moved by the Right Honourable Mr. Sastri and ran as follows:

'This Council recommends to the Governor General in Council that a Committee be appointed to examine the Repressive Laws now on the Statute Book and report whether all or any of them should be repealed, and, in cases where repeal is not desirable, whether the laws in question should be amended, and, if so, how.'

That proposal was discussed fully and passed without amendment in the Council of State, and, as the result, a very fine Committee was appointed that did splendid work examining the whole question. The deliberations of that Committee will very soon be before this House for the necessary legislation.

[Mr. E. L. Price.]

Sir, I ask the House, is it not best to follow those precedents, to accept the amendment of the Honourable the Home Member and not to tie the hands of your Committee and make it a mere drafting Committee, for, if you do, you will never get the services of the right men, and I don't see how they can very well be expected to take evidence on a point which the House has already decided in a very wholesale way.

Sir, if I thought that I carried the sympathy of the House with me in this matter, I would very willingly sit down at once in my seat, but I understand that there are a certain number of Members who came to this House to-day with a pre-conceived idea that it was absolutely necessary in the interests of the country, and of the peace of the country, that they should come with a most tremendous, inclusive and conclusive assertion and statement on this point. I would therefore venture to say a few more words.

The Members who have spoken have spoken with great moderation. May I tell these Members that there have been Indian colleagues of mine in this House who came to me and said, they thought it was a great pity that this Resolution was raised at this time. They considered it inopportune because of the racial hatred that undoubtedly had been stirred up, and they thought that the issue might well be postponed till Mr. Gandhi's folly had subsided. Well, Sir, I told them that from my point of view, though no man would be more pleased to see Mr. Gandhi betake himself and his campaign of 'envy, hatred, malice and all uncharitableness' to the Himalayas, and even allowing for all the racial hatred that has been engendered, I was certainly not prepared to see any public issue suspended or postponed for his sake or for the sake of his works. And I hope, Sir, that I understand the Indian point of view, not on historical grounds, not even on the grounds of legal history, but as a plain matter of fact, of things as they are. The fact of the matter is that these legal remains—you might call them distinctions in the law—whether now necessary or not, are looked on, I think, by Indian gentlemen, especially the intelligentsia, as something in the nature of capitulations. Now Members of this House will be perfectly well aware that it is only about 20 years ago that capitulations existed in Japan whereby our British subjects, rather any European subjects or American subjects, were not liable to be tried at all by the Japanese Courts. They were tried by special Consular Courts. Of course, when Japan, at the expense of great tribulation and sacrifice, such as, thank God! India has not yet had to sustain, found her place as an equal in the comity of nations, the first thing she did was to change those treaties and to abolish the capitulations—a very natural thing. But I put it to this House that during the long years that Japan was working up to that point, she had entirely remodelled her juridical and judicial principles and she had changed her administration. So she had entirely won world-confidence when she asked Europe to agree the change. And it must follow—I am sorry if some of my own community cannot agree with me, but I say it must follow—that in the progress of India there must come a point when the same thing happens too, and when all distinctions disappear. The only question is, has that moment arrived yet? Well, I think I must frankly say that I think the sense of Government expressed by the Head of the Government and expressed by its representatives here is, and I must honestly say also that on the tone of this debate, I think that it is the view of this Assembly, that the time has come. But how are you going to do it? Are you going to do it by means of a political debate where people are divided? Are you going to leave ill-will and bitterness behind because people think that what ought to be a great judicial question has been settled politically? Or are you going to follow your own precedents and refer this matter—with your intention clear if you like—in the most general terms to the ablest Committee that Government can secure for us, that we may have put before us the full necessary steps by which we may take this move? I remind you also, that at the moment Japan was in a happy position of being able to get the capitulations denounced, she was also in a position to say to Europe that the law within her territories was one and universal and applicable to every one of His Imperial Majesty the Mikado's subjects in Japan. Now, Sir, I would ask Members to recognize the fact, that even eliminating the European question altogether, you cannot say that of India. In my own province I know a Hindu Bawa who is exempted from having to give evidence in any court of law. The assertion may seem extraordinary, but I am fully certain of my facts. I was the foreman of a Jury. When the evidence of that Bawa would have been most valuable in a most serious criminal case, it was unobtainable. There is a Muhammadan Pir with even greater legal privileges. Compare these distinctions with the reign of law in England! In my own memory, I remember the Heir to the Throne being summoned to court on an ordinary subpoena to give evidence; he duly attended in court, gave his evidence, and so did his duty. You do not happen to get such equality of law anywhere in India on those lines. Now, Sir, I have no wish—I hope I am not annoying anybody or breaking, as it were, the truce that has been called between the parties over this matter,—but may I give a few brief illustrations of what Europeans who do not entirely agree with me have said to me? I hope if I do that, it will not be taken as expressing my own view, but simply as giving the House information that perhaps it ought to have. A man says to me: 'It is all very well, Mr. Price, but you know how dreadful a place mat court-house is. My poor wife is called down there and kept two whole days in all the heat to give evidence. They would not do that to an Indian lady.' Well, you could not treat a pardahnashin lady like that; the law forbids.

Now, as to the personal law and procedure in connection with it in criminal matters, Sir William Vincent has told us about the clauses of the Code whereby an Indian accused can claim a majority of Indians in the jury. There are also clauses in the Frontier Acts whereby people can exempt themselves entirely from the ordinary Criminal Procedure Code and elect to go before a Sirga. There again is another extraordinary exception to the reign of law in India. But I do think that India wants to adopt the principle of the reign of law, still it is possible that even with the reign of law, certain broad exceptions may be found necessary not only for an infinite minority like Europeans, but also in some Indian cases as at present. What I think therefore is most desirable is that the whole question should be considered by a Committee in this way. There is also, I put it to the House, the question of Americans. It seems rather curious that Americans alone should be included. It has been suggested to me by a learned Member of this House—I have not been able to verify the fact—that it is the result of a treaty. Whether it is or not, evidently it is a point that should be investigated very carefully by a strong Committee. And, after all, the great point in all this will be that the European, whatever his opinion about it, will feel that the House has followed its own precedents, and that the final verdict on the case has been a judicial and not a political one. And I know my people well enough to know that however much they may fight politically, it is not their habit to resist or dispute a judicial decision. Their training is against it. It is too much like disputing the umpire.

If any Member feels that I am making demands on his generosity in this matter, well, I will agree with him. I am making demands on his generosity. I have often made demands on the generosity of this House.

When there are four of us present in an Assembly of this size and we are so few and therefore powerless for voting, what can we do but throw ourselves on your generosity? I do not therefore hesitate to ask it and I ask it for this reason, Sir, finally, that if Sir William Vincent's amendment is accepted, this question will be settled and will leave no bitterness behind on either side, and that is the sole object of my speech.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: Sir, my task in opposing the amendment of Sir William Vincent and proposing an amendment to his amendment has become somewhat difficult after the very passionate appeal made by my most esteemed friend, Mr. Price. If all Englishmen in this country were like Mr. Price, we would have had no racial questions at all. Sir, notwithstanding that strong appeal made to me, I am sorry, I cannot accede to the request made by my Honourable friend. It is a case where justice wounded by injustice is appealing to this House and the authority—namely, the Assembly—by not removing the dart by which the wound is created—is fatally wounding itself. That is the view I take of this question. It has been a wonder how the non-co-operator has found a fertile field in this land for his activities. Sir, this is one of the grounds on which he has traded and traded successfully. Sir, it is no use blinking matters. While I am a believer in moderation in language and a believer in temperately voicing our grievances, I am not a believer in hiding my thoughts. Sir, on a point like this, the real grievance is not the sentimental one which has been hitherto voiced forth, namely, that Indians are considered disqualified to try European British subjects but rather, Sir, the feeling that justice has more often failed when an Indian or an European happens to be the complainant or accused or vice versa. The whole difficulty arises from the system maintained for conducting the trial of European British subjects. Sir, a gentleman, who had considerable experience in these matters, I refer to Sir Henry Cotton of great fame, speaking in 1903 in London, said:

When Englishmen were put upon their trial for these crimes, what was the general result? In the great majority of cases it could only be described as a judicial scandal. He was not particularly anxious that any one should find his way to the gallows but he was bound to say that there were innumerable cases in which men charged with most brutal murders for which no other punishment than hanging was suitable had escaped through the failure to administer justice fairly and fully. What was that? In the first place, these offenders were tried by a jury of their own countrymen. It was, of course, a very sound principle in law that a man should be tried by his peers and equals, but it was hardly necessary for him to point out that in a country like India where Englishmen were widely scattered, and where one of them, say, a tea planter was charged with causing the death of an unfortunate cooly, and was arraigned before other tea planters in the same position as himself, it was natural and even inevitable that the jury should be biassed and should find the accused guilty of the smallest cognisable offence under the law, namely, simple hurt for which a fine of a few rupees was only imposed. Decisions of that kind did not commend themselves to the judgment of the natives of India and in consequence a strong and bitter feeling was aroused by such cases. Suppose that the Government interfered and took up the prosecution, the result might be the infliction of a term of imprisonment instead of the imposition of a fine, but immediately that happened, a storm of protest was raised, the greatest anger and indignation were given vent to at every European breakfast table and tea table, and no stone was left unturned to get the sentence either cancelled or modified.

And he proceeds further on these lines. However I will not refer to particular cases. Those cases have not become rarer now. The recent instances have been severely commented upon, and therefore the real evil consists not so much in Indians not being competent to try European British subjects but under the option given or rather in the compulsory system of trial by jury. By all means let them have the option of trial by jury, but if they take the option of trial by jury let them also take the risk of the jury being composed in a way in which it could be drawn by lots. Does not the law impose that so many people shall be Europeans or Americans or Indians as the case may be? That is really the root cause of this discontent and there is no use of our trying to consider this question apart from the root cause. I therefore think that this Assembly ought to give its verdict upon the main and broad issue of the case, namely, whether it is not necessary to remove all racial distinctions in the matter of the mode of trial and also in the matter of the sentences which are to be imposed under the law. Reference has been made to the personal law of the people. Sir, if I am to be restored to my personal law under the Code of Manu I, as a Brahmin, am immune from the sentence of death. Are you willing to concede that? I, as a Brahmin, can only be fined 24 pagodas if I defame a Kshattriya. If I defame a Vaishya I can only be fined 12 pagodas. If I defame a Sudra I pay a lesser penalty, whereas Sir, if a Kshattriya defamed a Brahmin he was fined 100 pagodas. So also, the fine became larger and larger as you go down the scale of castes. Sir, so far as criminal law is concerned since the English system of jurisprudence came into this country personal law found no favour with the Englishman. Why should it find favour only so far as Englishmen are concerned? Sir, I was surprised to hear from Mr. Price that the judicial system in this country has not approached the tone of Japan. It is news to me. It is startling news to me.

We approximate day by day to the British system of jurisprudence, and dare anybody say that there is any other higher system of jurisprudence which civilised nations can adopt? Sir, we have adopted the British system and let us adopt it in its entirety. We are not averse to it; we Brahmins have not complained that we have been deprived of our personal laws so far as crimes are concerned. Therefore, let not Englishmen complain that they are deprived of their personal law under their own system of jurisprudence.

Then, the Honourable Sir William Vincent quoted certain figures as regards convictions and acquittals of Europeans. Do those statistics include offences of not carrying lights behind their motor cars? They are also grouped under the class of crimes. How many cases has he investigated really of disputes between Europeans and Indians?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: May I rise to make a personal explanation. The figures were of a time before motor cars were used extensively in this country. They were in fact also figures of serious crime.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: I therefore think these figures do not tell the real tale. Let us face the facts of the situation. I look upon this day as a red letter day in the annals of the British Government. The Honourable Sir William Vincent referred this morning to a very bold action which he has taken in repealing the Press Laws. I warmly and heartily congratulate the Honourable the Home Member and his Government on the step they have taken, and I can assure him that they run no risk thereby. On the other hand, no amount of aggressive propaganda to combat the non-co-operation movement will be more effective than these steps which you take in this

[Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar.]

Assembly; and this will be another signal step which you will take. I am glad the Honourable the Home Member has spoken in the strain he did in connection with this very important subject. Sir, I am reminded of the words of Mr. Gladstone when he said :

'No nobler spectacle than that which we think is now dawning upon us'.

I echo that sentiment. We also think that is now dawning upon us, namely that this Assembly is set on the removal of injustice, is deliberately determined to break, not through terror, not in haste, but in the performance of its duty whatever still remains of an evil tradition, and to consult by a bold, wise and good act its own interests and its own honour.

Sir, I therefore confidently appeal to this House to accept this amendment which I have. It is a very modest amendment; it does not commit us to details; it commits us to an incontrovertible principle. I do not think that there is anybody here in this Hall who now maintains that there should be racial distinctions maintained now. If that is the verdict of this Assembly, and, if that is the verdict, as I have heard from the Honourable Sir William Vincent, of the Government also, namely, that they are determined to put an end to all these racial distinctions, I say there is no harm in this House committing itself to that, and I therefore would add only :

'That the Committee should be appointed in order to remove all racial distinctions between Indians and Europeans in the matter of their trial and punishment for offences.'

My second amendment is instead of the words 'to consider the desirability'.....

Mr. President : Order, order. Do I understand that the Honourable Member is proposing to amend an amendment which he proposes to vote against?

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar : Yes, with your permission, Sir, if you have no objection. My second amendment is :

'That instead of the words to consider the desirability of what amendments should be made' the words 'to consider the desirable amendments to effect that object' be inserted.

A third thing I want is to fix a time within which this Committee should report, and at the end of the clause I say :

'Before the next Session of the Assembly.'

Sir, I do not think we had a stronger Viceroy than Lord Curzon. Lord Curzon began, I think, by attempting to remedy this defect, but the interests were too strong even for a Lord Curzon. I am sure Lord Reading is also bent upon this task but, unless he is armed with a Resolution of this Assembly emphatically repudiating the distinction which is now maintained under the existing law, he too may find it difficult to carry out his intentions. I therefore ask this House to affirm this principle about which there can be no doubt whatever. But, when we are asking for justice, I can assure my European friends here, we are equally anxious that they should get justice; we are not anxious that they should be unjustly punished, but we are also anxious that they should not unjustly escape punishment. That is our idea and, therefore, I am quite willing to leave the whole matter of details in the hands of an expert Committee, I will not fetter the hands of the executive by suggesting who should form the Committee; I leave it entirely to the Government and I am perfectly confident that they will choose the best men to compose this Committee. Therefore, I commend this amendment to the Assembly.

Mr. President : Amendment moved :

'That in line 2 after the word 'that' the following words be inserted, namely 'in order to remove all racial distinction between Indians and Europeans in the matter of their trial and punishment for offences.'

The amendment was put and carried.

Rai J. N. Majumdar Bahadur : Sir, since the passing of the Reform Act, I think Indians and Europeans in this country have made a determined effort to sail in the same boat. Neither of the parties, I believe, wants any special privilege of its own. If I know the minds of the Europeans in this country, I think they are perfectly prepared to share all our privileges as well as all our disabilities. They have assured us of their co-operation and we also, in return, assure them of our co-operation (Hear, hear) : but in order to be able to co-operate with each other, I think it is of the utmost importance that there should be no racial distinctions between the two communities, because, if there is, there can be no co-operation. It is known to all that in the past there have been miscarriages of justice in cases where Europeans and Indians were concerned. I know of a case in my own district in which a European District Magistrate was boycotted by his own community for having sentenced a European to imprisonment. I was also in the Council Chamber when the Ilbert Bill was under discussion and we all know what heat was engendered in the country in the minds of Europeans by that Bill. But all those days are gone. Since the passing of the Reform Act Europeans have begun to co-operate with us and I believe there is not a single educated European, either in this House or outside it, who does not agree that all racial inequalities should be removed from the Statute Book. If that is so, the only question is how that is to be done. It cannot be done in a big House like this, and it can only be done effectually by a Select Committee, as proposed by my Honourable friend, Sir William Vincent. Therefore, I think, when the object is to remove all distinctions and when the Government has already pledged itself to remove all distinctions, we, in this House, should not only maintain harmony in the House but also outside of it and should not object to the appointment of a Committee in order to remove all distinctions that at present obtain between Indians and Europeans in this country in respect of the Criminal Procedure Code.

I think this is the best solution and I hope we shall be able to carry out this proposal of the Honourable Sir William Vincent with unanimity, taking care of course that the thing may not be shelved; and as has been proposed by my friend, Mr. Rangachariar, we might suggest that the Committee should report at an early date, say, before the next Assembly meets. With these few remarks I hope that we will not carry the discussion to any stage which may lead to bitterness. We should be prepared to enter into each other's feelings and sentiments and not to do anything to offend anybody. Therefore, I say that we should be calm and not unnecessarily offend the feelings of our European brethren in India who have shown the greatest consideration to us in every matter. It is their privilege now to accede to our request. So long they were the rulers, and as rulers I wonder that they had not created more anomalies than what they have already done in the past. Our own people created many anomalies in ancient times. But now the Europeans are prepared to give up their privileges, and we should be kind and considerate to them, just as they have listened to our appeal to create equal opportunities for all. We should not therefore ride rough-shod over their feelings and do whatever we like with them. At the same time I am convinced that none of the

[Rai J. N. Majumdar.]

European Members here or any respectable European wants to take his stand upon any special privileges which other communities do not enjoy. All that they want is justice, and I think this Committee that will be appointed will be able to do justice to all, and I hope that the House will be prepared to accept the recommendations of the Honourable Sir William Vincent.

Mr. Abul Kasem : I move that the question be now put.

Mr. J. Chaudhuri : I rise again to a point of order. My amendment was not put before the House at all. I understand that under the ordinary practice, after Mr. Rangachariar put his amendment, my amendment should have been put before the House, and the last amendment put to the vote of the House first, and the previous amendments afterwards. So I want a ruling on the point, if this is not so.

Mr. President : If the Honourable Member would be more explicit, I could follow him better and give a ruling.

Dr. H. S. Gour : I shall be more explicit, Sir, on my amendment which is exactly like that of Mr. Chaudhuri. I have been reading these rules with a view to enlighten myself but they afford me no enlightenment: the point is this. When there are a series of amendments to a Resolution what is the practice of this House? Is it that the last amendment is taken up first, or that the amendments are taken up in the order in which they are printed on the agenda? If the last amendment is taken up first, I stand last, No. 9, and I believe both by reason of the fact that my amendment was last and also by reason of the fact that my amendment is the most comprehensive of all the amendments placed upon this paper, my amendment is entitled to the priority of discussion and vote.

Mr. President : The Honourable Member's amendment is so comprehensive that it is out of order. We are discussing a Resolution which asks for the removal of distinctions between Indians and Europeans in regard to criminal jurisdiction. Therefore the limits of the Resolution, the limits of the amendments, and the limits of the debate are set by the words 'criminal jurisdiction.' The Honourable Member proposes to widen the field considerably beyond those words by his amendment.

It is therefore out of order and would have to be moved as a substantive Resolution by itself.

As regards the order in which amendments are taken up, that is settled by the order in which they come in the Resolution or the amendment of which they are amendments in their turn. I have taken the amendment of the Honourable Member from Madras because it comes in the second line and no amendment comes before it. The case put before me by the Honourable Member from Bengal I have not been able to understand; if he explains it perhaps I may.

Mr. J. Chaudhuri : I mean this, Sir, that I gave notice of an amendment to the amendment of the Honourable Sir William Vincent and I expected that I should be called upon to move my amendment after he had spoken and divide the House, if necessary.

Mr. President : The Honourable Member's expectation is not yet defeated. We have not yet reached the stage in Sir William Vincent's amendment when the Honourable Member's amendment comes in; but I would ask him to consider this, that the substantial amendment which he wished to move, as far as I can judge, has already been met by the change which the Honourable the Home Member himself has made in his amendment.

Mr. P. P. Ginwala : May I know how I stand?

Mr. President : The Honourable Member's amendment is not in order at this stage.

Chaudhri Shahab-ud-Din : Sir, though the Resolution before the House purports to seek a change in certain provisions of the criminal law regarding the trial of Europeans in India and though a lawyer by profession, yet I want to make a few remarks on the question under discussion, not from a legal or lawyer's point of view, but from a practical man's point of view. All laws apply to facts. So let us see what is it that we require in fact; it is nothing but equality in treatment. Differential treatment, let me assure the Honourable Members of this House, is one of the root causes of unrest and dissatisfaction in India. I hope not only the Indian Members of this Honourable House, but also the European Members will agree with me when I say that it is the racial distinction and differential treatment, not only in the matter of trials for criminal offences but also, for example, in the matter of possession of arms and in the matter of higher salaries, it is such invidious distinctions, observed by the Government of India which have to a very great extent created dissatisfaction in India. Being subjects of the same King, owing allegiance to the same Crown, I fail, Sir, to see why one section of His Majesty's subjects should be tried by one procedure and other sections of the community by another procedure. I do not mean to say that Europeans should be necessarily subjected to the procedure which is at present applicable to Indians; no; let it be just the other way; but give us equality. Those who live in India must be subject to Indian law; that is, the law which governs Indians and not the law which applies to an exceptional or special community in India. Sir, if a European were to commit an offence in Japan, surely he would be tried by the law obtaining in Japan, that is, the law of the country where the offence is committed; he would not be allowed to say that he is an Englishman and that therefore he must be tried by English law with a jury of his country men. Why, I ask, should there be differentiation in treatment? Why do not the Government trust Indian Judges to dispense equal justice to Indian and European offenders alike? Have we not entered upon the Reforms with the greatest wish to make them a success? The Government should trust us, and I hope, we will do full justice to Europeans. It is in the interest not only of the Ruled, but also of the Rulers that there should be perfect equality in treatment; and equality in treatment, Sir, does not only mean equality in certain social matters—though there is also a difference in that respect—but equality in treatment means equality in matters political. Indians are Indians not only in this House, but even outside the House. They want equality of status in the British Colonies and other countries. But as my Honourable friend, Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar, said just now, they may be told 'How can you come to us and claim equality of treatment when in your own land different courts and different Judges try Englishmen and Indians; you have certainly no right to expect equality in treatment from us'.

Sir, for practical reasons, and not for any legal or historical reasons, would I strongly recommend to this House, and especially to the Honourable Members of Government, that they must accept at once the principle of the Resolution moved by my Honourable friend, Mr. Samarth, and, as regards the details, they should certainly go before a Select Committee and be afterwards threshed out in this House, but the principle should be accepted now and here. You say that a Committee may be appointed, to do what? To discuss the desirability of (cries of 'No! No!') If the intention of Government is to accept the principle in its entirety, let the Honourable the Home Member say so. But if the object in the appointment of a Committee is to retain the present inequality of treatment, then, I think, we should be perfectly justified in sticking to the Resolution as proposed by the Honourable Mr. Samarth.

There is only one other point, Sir, on which I should like to say a word. The Honourable Sir William Vincent in the course of his speech made an observation that the Committee which will be appointed by the Government to consider the question now before the House will not consist wholly of the Members of this House, but will also comprise some outsiders. Sir, let me warn the Government and its Members, that whoever those outsiders may be, both Englishmen and Indians, unless they are responsible to this House, their report will not carry much weight in the House. However able and competent they may be to deal with the question, it is we who are responsible to the Government and to the country. Therefore a Committee which has amongst its members, persons who are not Members of this House, can never command the confidence of this House. I hope the Honourable Sir William Vincent will bear this in mind. With these remarks, Sir, I strongly support the principle of the Resolution which has been moved by my Honourable friend, Mr. Samarth, and oppose the amendment which reserves to a Select Committee the power to discuss the principle and decide the extent to which it should be accepted and acted upon.

Mr. P. P. Ginwala: Sir, I regret that I feel compelled to oppose the amendment which has been moved by the Honourable Sir William Vincent, in spite of the amendment to it that has been moved by my Honourable friend opposite and has been accepted by the House. I think it must be clearly understood that what this House desires is an acknowledgment in unequivocal terms and as clear as possible this principle of the equalisation of status. On that point, so far as I understand the sense of this House, its opinion is unanimous. There are no Indians that I know of who are prepared to make any sort of compromise, however small, which would leave open for discussion this principle in the least and it would be unwise for the House, knowing that the country at large also insists upon its recognition, not to acknowledge it in so many words. Now, Sir, for the purpose of my argument, I do not wish to go into any historical questions at all, nor do I wish to go into details regarding the Code of Criminal Procedure, for the real point on which this question turns is: has the time arrived in this country when every British subject, be he an Indian or a European, should submit to the same jurisdiction and to the same court of law? If the time has arrived,—and no Indian doubts that it has—then it is the duty of this House to express that opinion, and when the House has once expressed that opinion, it will be time enough for the experts of the Government or of this House to formulate proposals to give effect to that opinion. Unless that is done, neither the House nor the country will be satisfied.

Reference has been made by Mr. Price and other speakers to the distinctions that exist at present in other departments of law, but the only instances given were those of the personal law of various classes. If there is any other department of law in which such distinctions exist, let them also be abolished.

But do not let us dispute the principle which, it is high time, was definitely acknowledged and given effect to.

The amendment which I wish to move is unlike that moved by the Honourable Sir William Vincent, and I would like to draw attention to the fact that in my amendment I assume the two principles involved in the Resolution which has been moved by Mr. Samarth.

Mr. President: The Honourable Member's amendment is not an amendment to that moved by the Honourable the Home Member; it is an amendment to the original Resolution and therefore not in order at this stage unless the Honourable Member chooses to move it in such a form as to bring it in order.

Mr. P. P. Ginwala: It is immaterial to me, Sir, whether I move it now or later on, or in this or any other form, so long as I explain to the House the difference between the amendment which is now before the House and my own amendment. I assume the soundness of the principles contained in the first two clauses of Mr. Samarth's Resolution, and that is what I want the House first to emphasize, and when that is done I suggest that a Committee be appointed to give effect to the principles involved in those two propositions. This is clearly a different thing from the amendment moved by the Honourable Sir William Vincent and when the House comes to vote on the amendment, I beg it to remember this difference between his amendment and the amendment standing against my name, and to reject on that ground, the amendment moved by the Honourable the Home Member.

Mr. Harchandrai Vishindas: May I rise to a point of order, Sir. I find that the amendment of my Honourable friend, Mr. Rangachariar, as against the amendment of the Honourable the Home Member, places us in a peculiar situation. If the amendment of the Honourable Sir William Vincent is thrown out and the amendment of my Honourable friend, Mr. Rangachariar, stands.....

Mr. President: The situation in which we now are is that the amendment moved by Sir William Vincent has been amended by the amendment of Mr. Rangachariar. The amendment, as amended by Mr. Rangachariar, will be put from the Chair in the form of a question as against the original Resolution.

Mr. Harchandrai Vishindas: One more point, Sir. Supposing that the Resolution is carried as against the amendment, then the other amendments that are a rider to the Resolution, namely, the amendment of Mr. Ginwala that a Committee be appointed and my amendment that for the words 'members of the Indian Civil Service' the words 'Judges and Magistrates' should be substituted will have to be put to the vote.

Mr. President: The question I shall put from the Chair at the end of this part of the debate is that the original Resolution be amended as proposed by the Honourable the Home Member. If the House decides that the amendment be made, then the Honourable the Home Member's words are substituted for the entire Resolution of Mr. Samarth. But if the House decides that the amendment be not made, then the Resolution as moved by Mr. Samarth stands, and is subject to further amendments as on the paper.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: I should like to know, Sir, whether I can speak on Mr. Ginwala's amendment.

Mr. President: Mr. Ginwala has not moved his amendment.

Mr. P. P. Ginwala : I have already asked for a ruling from the Chair as to whether I can move my amendment while speaking on the Honourable Sir William Vincent's amendment.

Mr. President : It is perfectly open to the Honourable Member to move his amendment in a form which would bring it as an amendment of Sir William Vincent's amendment ; but, as on the paper, it is not an amendment of Sir William Vincent's amendment. If the Honourable Member wishes to have the decision of the Assembly on his amendment, he can move it in the form of an amendment to Sir William Vincent's amendment.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : I am myself in some doubt as I do not understand exactly the present position. If I am allowed to speak either on my own amendment or on Mr. Rangachariar's amendment of my amendment, I should like to do so.

Mr. President : The amendment moved by Mr. Rangachariar has already been carried.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : I mean my amendment as amended by the amendment of Mr. Rangachariar.

Mr. President : Yes ; but the Mover of an amendment has no right of reply as far as I read the rules.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : Then I do not see I have any right to speak at all.

Rao Bahadur C. S. Subrahmanayam : I request that the amendment (now before the House) may be read out in full. There is some misapprehension in the minds of Members.

Mr. President : The amendment, as amended originally by the substitution of words by the Honourable the Home Member himself for his original words, and by the further amendment of Mr. Rangachariar, reads as follows :

'That for sub-clauses (a) and (b) of the Resolution the following be substituted, namely 'that in order to remove all racial distinctions between Indians and Europeans in the matter of their trial and punishment for offences, a Committee be appointed to consider what amendments should be made in those provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, which differentiate between Indians and European British subjects, Americans and Europeans who are not British subjects, in criminal trials and proceedings and to report on the best methods of giving effect to their proposals.

Mr. R. A. Spence : Mr. President, I had hoped that after what had been said by my Honourable friend, Mr. Price, there would have been no necessity for me to speak at all. But there does seem to be some reason for me to speak as there seems to be a feeling that we should not accept Sir William Vincent's amendment because it does not lay down definitely a principle. I think from what has been said before in this House that there is undoubtedly very strong feeling—I might say a universal feeling that—the time has arrived when consideration should be given to this question, and I think that what my Honourable friend, Mr. Price, said is what should weigh with this Assembly. We have come to the opinion that the time has now arrived when we should consider the removal of all these disabilities. But let us go about it in a judicial manner and not as a political matter. The European has looked upon these privileges, may be privileges of the past, but he has looked upon them as judicial privileges. They come to him as from Magna Charta. Whether that view is right or wrong I do not know, but it is one which appeals to the minds of many. If the question of doing away with these old privileges is going to be considered, let it be considered on the grounds of justice and right and not as a political question. I had hoped that after what Mr. Price had said nothing more need be said. I was surprised indeed to find my Honourable friend, Mr. Rangachariar, speaking as he did. But I was also surprised to find my Honourable friend, Mr. Rangachariar, quoting Mr. Gladstone as an argument in his favour. Well, I think the words that he quoted from Mr. Gladstone are an argument in favour of Mr. Price and of the European Members' view in this House, namely, that this amendment should be accepted and that we should consider this matter purely from a judicial point of view and not from a political one.

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas : Sir, on rising to take part in the debate on this most important question I feel the diffidence which is consequent upon the fact that I am not a lawyer, and therefore not competent to deal with the subject from the point of view of a lawyer. But, Sir, as the discussion has concentrated on the question of the acceptance by the Honourable the Home Member of the principle of equality, I believe I shall be justified in giving some information to this House which will probably convince the House that this principle does not need to be recognised now in this year 1921, but that it was recognised so far back as the year 1834, when the Directors drafted the Despatch to the Governor General in Council. In that Despatch it was clearly laid down in these terms :

'First, we are decidedly of opinion that all British-born subjects throughout India should forthwith be subjected to the same tribunals with the Natives. It is, of course, implied in this proposition that, in the interior, they shall be subjected to the Mofussil Courts. So long as Europeans penetrating into the interior held their places purely by the tenure of sufferance, and bore in some sense the character of delegates from a foreign power, there might be some reason for exempting them from the authority of those judicatures to which the great body of the inhabitants were subservient. But now that they are become inhabitants of India, they must share in the judicial habitudes as well as in the civil rights pertaining to that capacity, and we conceive that their participation in both should commence at the same moment.'

And further :

'It is not merely on principle that we arrive at this conclusion. The 85th clause of the Act to which we have before referred, after reciting that the removal of restrictions of the intercourse of Europeans with the country will render it necessary to provide against any mischiefs or dangers that may thence arise, proceeds to direct that you shall make laws for the protection of the Natives from insult and outrage, an obligation which in our view you cannot possibly fulfil unless you render both Natives and Europeans responsible to the same judicial control. There can be no equality of protection where justice is not equally and on equal terms accessible to all.'

Sir, these terms in the Despatch were referred to by the Honourable Mr. Ilbert when he introduced his Bill in the year 1882. Unfortunately these sentiments have not yet been given effect to by the Government of India. I ask the Honourable the Home Member what objection he has in publicly recognising the principle that underlies the Resolution of Mr. Samarth, which would probably make his own amendment to that acceptable to this House. The principle, as I have already said, has been recognised in the past by the most eminent statesmen of England. The principle has been recognised by our present Viceroy, His Excellency Lord Reading, immediately after his arrival in India. I shall remind my Honourable friend, the Home Member, of the speech that His Excellency delivered at the Chelmsford Club when the Members of that Club entertained him to a dinner, the speech in which Lord Reading pointed out, and emphatically pointed out, that he had made up his mind and that his colleagues shared his opinion that so far as he could help it no race inequality would be allowed to exist in this country. At that moment when

Lord Reading gave expression to that sentiment it was welcomed throughout the length and breadth of the country. Many of us realised that it was a task too difficult to accomplish, especially because there was not only the question of legal inequalities to be considered but also social inequalities. Sir, the motion that we are discussing to-day deals with the question of legal inequalities, and while the removal of social inequalities is a matter of time and is bound to be accomplished, I feel that in consideration of what His Excellency Lord Reading has said, it is the bounden duty of the Government to accept the principle that underlies this Resolution, namely, the removal of all legal inequalities that exist in this country. Sir, I feel that it is perhaps the feeling in this House that if this principle were recognised by the Honourable the Home Member here and now, this House would have no difficulty in acceding to the terms of amendment as moved by the Honourable the Home Member. Sir, Mr. Rangachariar has pointed out that things of this character make non-co-operation possible in this country. I beg leave also, Sir, to say this—that if a principle which has been recognised by the Head of the Government is not recognised here in this Assembly by the representatives of the Government, we shall not be acting wisely and we shall be giving food to a movement which the interests of the country demand should necessarily be starved. I hope, Sir, the Honourable Home Member will find no difficulty in accepting the principle that underlies this Resolution.

Dr. H. S. Gour: I rise to a point of order, Sir. I understand Sir William Vincent's amendment as amended by the Honourable Mr. Rangachariar has been accepted by this House. If the amended amendment has been accepted by the House, I take it that this House has also accepted the principle of equality. That being the case, I submit all discussion of the principle of equality is now quite out of order and I ask you, Sir, to rule whether I am not right.

Mr. President: The discussion might be out of order if Government had put upon the words used by Mr. Rangachariar the interpretation put upon them by the Honourable Member who has just made this point of order. Those words can be so interpreted, but it is not the business of the Chair to interpret them either way. If Honourable Members choose to continue the debate, the Chair cannot rule the discussion out of order, unless an agreement is arrived at as to the political meaning of the words.

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas: So far as the terms of Mr. Rangachariar's amendment are concerned, I want to inform this House that I myself interpret the terms of that amendment in the manner in which my friend, Dr. Gour, would interpret them. But what I insist on, Sir, and what I am trying to impress upon my Honourable friend, Sir William Vincent, is this—that if he would rise and publicly recognise the principle that underlies this Resolution, there would be an end to all discussion and he would be only doing the thing that perhaps the Head of the Government wants him to do.

Dr. H. S. Gour: I again rise on a point of order. I wish to make it clear that the Honourable Mr. Rangachariar's amendment to Sir William Vincent's amendment was intended to enunciate the principle in favour of equality of all people. If that was his intention, it is with that object in view that this House passed his amendment. If the Honourable Mr. Rangachariar intended it in that sense and this House passed it in that sense, I submit, a further discussion on the question of principle would be out of order.

Mr. President: It still remains a point of interpretation as to the political meaning of the words into which, as I have already told the Honourable Member, I do not propose to go now.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: Sir, I rise to offer a few words of explanation to meet the Honourable Mr. Jamnadas with particular relation to one point. The words that he used towards the end of his speech indeed make it incumbent upon me to speak, because there is a suggestion there. I do not think any unpleasantness was intended, but there is a suggestion that the Government of India are in some way departing from principles which have been accepted and expressed by the Viceroy. Now there is no foundation for that statement at all. The policy of the Government of India in regard to this Resolution was settled at a meeting of the Executive Council in which there was complete unanimity and there is no question of going back on anything that has been said. The real difference is not one of principle so much as one of practical application. The principle that it is desirable that there should be equality of status in this country in the matter of criminal trials is to my mind one that is indisputable.

No one can conceive of this country arriving at the status of Dominion Self-government and of any differentiation being allowed in such a matter. The only question between us is that raised by my Honourable friend, Mr. Rangachariar, and that is the particular motion to which I take exception, i.e., when he says that Government is to give effect to this principle at once without regard to time or method or to the attendant difficulties. The Committee is according to him to report to Government by next Session. These are recommendations which, speaking on behalf of the Government, I am not authorised to accept. I have no authority to do it, nor would I do it willingly if I had the authority, because the question is one of great difficulty which will require careful consideration. I want to make my meaning quite clear. The Government of India, as I understand it, accept the principle that it is desirable that there should be racial equality. They will appoint a Committee to examine this question. How far it will be possible to give effect to that principle, in what manner, or in what time is a matter that must be left for the consideration of that Committee (Hear, hear). The Honourable Mover spoke of equalizing the rights of Europeans and Indians, actually went on to suggest that the Government should take away the privilege of trial by jury now enjoyed by European British subjects. That is the sort of proposal that I think it would be improper and positively wrong for the Government to accept and indeed I have no authority to do it. I hope now that I have made the position clear; at any rate, that I have made this point clear that the Government of India intend in no way to deviate from the principle laid down by His Excellency.

Mr. N. M. Samarth: As the Mover of the Resolution, I rise, Sir, to accept the amendment, as amended.

Dr. H. S. Gour: I again rise to a point of order. The Honourable Member, I submit, is not entitled to reply on the principal Resolution. That is not under discussion. The only thing under discussion now is the Honourable Sir William Vincent's amendment, as amended by Mr. Rangachariar.

Mr. President: The Assembly is well aware of that point. The Honourable Member on my left (Mr. Samarth) was exercising a perfectly legitimate parliamentary right, when a change has occurred in the character of the debate, in rising to accept or refuse the proposal made.

Mr. N. M. Samarth : Sir, I think the discussion that has taken place as also the statement that has been made by the Honourable the Home Member has clarified the position. There was, to my mind, even at the beginning, when I moved the Resolution, absolutely no doubt whatever that after the clear expression of opinion by His Excellency the Viceroy on this subject the Government of India surely was not going to depart from it and throw it overboard, and I was convinced that the Government of India did want to give effect to the principle of this Resolution. As to how it is to be done, what is the modus operandi to be observed, or resorted to, is a matter which was not covered by my Resolution. When I moved the Resolution I stated that there are various solutions which are proposed by expert opinion. As I have already said I keep an open mind upon that matter. I have my own line of thought, but I will not force it upon this Assembly. This matter is to be gone into by a Committee; all I hope is that the Committee will be a strong Committee on which there will be representation of an Indian High Court Judge or two, a European High Court Judge or two, and eminent men belonging to the Bar who have had great criminal practice and experience, men who will bring to bear upon the consideration and solution of this question all the legal talent and experience that they have.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : We will put the Honourable Member on it himself.

Mr. N. M. Samarth : I am a humble man and, although I may not be on the Committee, all I claim is that the Committee should be of such a character as to inspire public confidence

Mr. E. L. Price : On both sides.

Mr. N. M. Samarth : And in that hope, and fully believing that the Honourable the Home Member will form the Committee in the manner suggested, I accept his amendment as amended by Mr. Rangachariar.

The amendment* was put and agreed to.

Mr. President : The question is :

'That the Resolution as amended be passed'.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar : I move, Sir :

'That the following words be added at the end of the amended Resolution :

'before the next Session of the Assembly.'

I do not think I need say much to justify this amendment and I hope it will be carried.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : Sir, I submit to this Assembly that this is an unreasonable amendment. It is quite impossible for us to gather materials on a complicated question of this kind, on which European and Indian opinion throughout the country has to be consulted, a question which affects the life and liberty of many of His Majesty's subjects before November or December as suggested by the Honourable Member. It is quite impossible for us to formulate our views or to secure opinions from Local Governments, or to secure adequate and careful examination of the subject in that time. The last time Government appointed a Committee we were not negligent, or dilatory in giving effect to the recommendations of the Assembly. Committees in two cases have put in reports already, and I have said that the question (on the terms that I have clearly expressed already and on no other terms) will be examined at the earliest possible moment; but I hope that this Assembly will not ask us to decide a question of this kind on insufficient data in an unreasonably short time.

Mr. President : The meaning of the word 'Session' is not perhaps perfectly clear.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar : I meant February; but in view of the warmth exhibited by Sir William Vincent I withdraw my amendment.

The amendment was, by leave of the Assembly, withdrawn.

The Resolution*, as amended, was adopted.

Mr. President : I have to announce that the ballot for establishing the precedence of Bills and Resolutions to be taken on the non-official days, viz., 27th and 28th, will be held to-morrow at 11 A.M. in this Chamber.

The Assembly then adjourned till 10-30 A.M. on the 19th September.

* This Assembly recommends to the Governor General in Council :

'That in order to remove all racial distinctions between Indians and Europeans in the matter of their trial and punishment for offences, a Committee be appointed to consider what amendments should be made in those provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, which differentiate between Indians and European British subjects, Americans and Europeans who are not British subjects, in criminal trials and proceedings and to report on the best methods of giving effect to their proposals'.

* * That for sub-clauses (a) and (b) of the Resolution the following be substituted, namely :

'That in order to remove all racial distinctions between Indians and Europeans in the matter of their trial and punishment for offences, a Committee be appointed to consider what amendments should be made in those provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, which differentiate between Indians and European British subjects, Americans and Europeans who are not British subjects, in criminal trials and proceedings and to report on the best methods of giving effect to their proposals'.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

PROCEEDINGS OF RAILWAY COMMITTEE.

229. Sir P. S. Sivaswamy Aiyer : (a) Has the attention of the Government been drawn to the letter of the Special Correspondent of the Hindu (Madras) in its issue of the 7th July 1921, containing a report of the proceedings of the Railway Committee?

(b) Is it a fact that the evidence of Sir William Meyer before the Railway Committee goes to show that stores were not being purchased for India in the cheapest market and that the British firms with whom contracts were placed were, to a certain extent, subsidised at India's expense?

(c) If the answer to (b) is in the affirmative, will the Government be pleased to state whether they propose to issue any instructions to the High Commissioner for India on the subject of 'Purchase of Stores'?

Mr. A. C. Chatterjee : The answer to (a) is in the affirmative.

(b) I lay on the table a copy of papers received from the High Commissioner, consisting of extracts from a Minute on the subject of the purchase of stores in England for Indian railways; extracts from Sir William Meyer's evidence before the Railway Committee, a note on the procedure of the Stores Department, and two statements showing (1) cases in which British tenders have been accepted although lower satisfactory tenders have been received from foreign firms; and (2) cases where foreign firms' tenders have been accepted for the whole of a contract, or the order divided between British and foreign firms, where British firms have been given an opportunity to reduce their prices. These statements are for the period commencing from the 1st October 1920 to the 8th August 1921. It will be seen from these papers that it is true that in a limited number of cases, such purchases have, for particular reasons, been made in England, where they could have been made at cheaper rates abroad. It does not, however, follow that purchases abroad would have been more economical in the long run.

With regard to (c) of the Question, the matter will be discussed in connection with the Resolution of Sir Vithaldas Thackersey.

Extract from a Minute by Sir W. S. Meyer, dated 8th August 1921.

1. The printed note on the procedure of the Stores Department in respect of the purchase of stores for India annexed to this Minute gives a full statement of (a) the manner in which tenders are invited, and (b) the considerations which guide the acceptance of tenders. My evidence before the Railway Committee, which is attached, affords a commentary on certain features of the procedure and policy adopted, and it is only necessary for me to supplement it on points not already made clear or calling for revision.

2. I shall first deal with the question of calling for tenders. Tenders are usually invited by advertisement when large supplies are needed and the amount involved is considerable, e.g., demands for railway materials such as steel rails, etc. Advertisements are inserted in important newspapers and technical journals published in the United Kingdom. Most important foreign manufacturing firms have agents in this country who keep them in touch with business openings, and it has not in the past been found necessary to bring our requirements to the special notice of foreign firms, unless articles of a special nature obtainable only from such firms are required. In other cases recourse is had to "limited" tenders or to individual firms direct. Paragraphs 2—5 of the printed note explain the procedure in calling for tenders.

3. The next point is the policy which has been laid down to control the acceptance of tenders. I may summarise this briefly in a series of propositions explaining later the considerations which led to the adoption of principles which might be considered likely to give rise to criticism:

(i) As a general rule, the lowest satisfactory tender is accepted. The term "satisfactory" covers matters such as quality of article tendered, reliability of tendering firm, date of promised delivery, etc. This rule is, however, subject to the following qualifications:—

(a) In present abnormal circumstances and for the reasons explained in my evidence before the Railway Committee, I am willing to accept a satisfactory British tender in preference to a foreign tender when the gap between the two is not excessive. As a general starting point, I have laid down that this gap should not exceed 10%. But each case has to come before me personally on its merits, and while sometimes no preference at all may be found necessary, in others there may be valid reasons for going beyond 10%. In the case of the wheels and axles referred to in my evidence, a preference up to about 20% was allowed to a British firm for the special reasons there stated.

(b) Among British tenderers, preference is given to a firm on the King's roll, i.e., one which has on its staff at least 5 per cent. of disabled ex-service men, over a non-King's roll firm unless the latter tenders materially lower or undertakes to deliver more expeditiously where time is an essential factor.

(ii) When a British and a foreign tender are equally satisfactory, the preference is invariably given to the former.

(iii) When a foreign tender is much below a British tender, the terms of the former are confidentially communicated to the British firm to enable it, if possible, to come down to within a reasonable limit of preference. The use of this lever has often resulted in a material reduction of the original British prices.

4. I have explained in my evidence before the Railway Committee the reasons for the policy I have adopted which, I again reiterate, has been adopted by me as only a temporary measure in view of the present abnormal conditions in the industrial world. When the Stores Department came under me, I reviewed the position most carefully, and came to the conclusion that it would not at present be to the real ultimate advantage of the Indian Government to take into account nothing beyond the prices at the moment. Having regard to the Exchange and existing industrial conditions in Germany, for instance, British firms would in sundry cases not be able to compete on equal terms with German manufacturers, but the placing of all orders in the cheapest market might, by helping to destroy British industries, place us ultimately at the mercy of their foreign competitors. There are other considerations which sometimes militate against the acceptance of foreign tenders, e.g., the difficulty involved in the inspection of foreign materials before they can be passed for shipment, and in any case, inspection abroad is more expensive than it would be in England and occasionally the difficulty of obtaining delivery within the time specified in the indent. It must also be emphasised that, in the case of certain classes of material, e.g., Railway wheels, axles, etc., where reliability is a matter of public concern, it is inexpedient to attach too much importance to cheapness and to overlook the special reliability of a firm that has been in the past tried and found trustworthy, even at some extra cost to public revenues.

5. I enclose two statements, one showing the cases in which since 1st October 1920 a higher British tender has been accepted in preference to a lower foreign tender, and the other showing the foreign tenders accepted during this period.

W. S. MEYER.

The 8th August 1921.

Extracts from Minutes of Evidence given by Sir William Meyer, G.C.I.E., K.C.S.I., before the Railway Committee.

8190. May I first ask you about some matters that you know of in your present position? As I understand it, it is your business to be responsible for the purchase of stores, materials, and so forth, for Government departments generally?—Yes.

8191. And that includes the three State Railways?—Yes.

8192. I understand that the Government are setting up, if they have not already set up, a corresponding Purchase Department in India?—The question of the actual shape in which it is to be set up and its scope is still under consideration, but there was a Committee appointed on the subject on which your Secretary, Mr. Ryan, sat.

8193. But the policy of doing it is settled: is that right?—I think you may take it that that is so.

8194. At present, however, there is not a corresponding department in India with which you can dovetail?—No.

8195. The function of the High Commissioner will be to get things in England that could not be got in India; that will be the theory, I take it?—It is rather like this. The Indian Government and the departments determine what things they require in England. The present policy is that whenever possible they shall purchase things in India at, of course, a reasonable price compared with England. They make up their minds as to what they can purchase in India, and then they indent for the residue, which is either stuff which is not procurable in India, or could only be procured at prohibitive expense or entirely through the agency of private firms. They do not want to employ middlemen. In all those cases they send me instructions to buy.

8196. Who are they—separate departments or a stores organization?—No, there is as yet no collective stores organization in India. My orders may come from the Army Department of the Government of India as regards particular army stores, or possibly, for the sake of convenience, from the Director General of Ordnance. Similarly, they may come from the Post Office as regards Post Office and Telegraphs, and from the various Public Works Departments as regards ordinary public works matters, and from the Railway Board, usually, as regards railway purchases.

8197. I assume that an urgent order on a small scale might come to you directly by cable from the Agent of the North-Western Railway?—That is so. On many matters there is direct communication between my Director General of Stores and the local people.

8198. You have to buy engines, rolling-stock, and things of that kind?—Yes.

8199. You have a firm of consulting engineers?—Yes.

8200. Do you make much use of them?—Considerable.

8201. They do the inspection for you during construction, I suppose?—In certain highly technical matters the consulting engineers come in, but the Stores Department has also got its own people to refer to.

8202. The Stores Department has its own experts?—Its own inspecting experts, I should say, rather than consulting experts. For a large number of purchases of relatively small things and local stores those experts are quite sufficient. One of the matters in which the consulting engineers are useful is this. One of the questions we have to consider at present is the purchase of stores in Germany, say—if we can get the material at a considerably cheaper price there. Before we consider the cons and pros of that, we often refer to the consulting engineer as to the status of a particular German firm or company that has tendered, as to the character of the goods they turn out, and as to the likelihood, where time is of the essence, of their being turned out promptly.

8203. Would you trust to your own knowledge as to the status and capacity of a firm in England?—I certainly should not trust to my own individual knowledge, but the Director General of Stores and the Stores Department have, of course, got very large information. They have dealt with firms for many years, but if there was any difficulty we would certainly go to the consulting engineer.

8209. (Chairman).—I do not know whether you have any views on the question of the purchase of stores. One of the complaints that was made in India, in somewhat general terms as far as I can remember, was that the English companies gave a preference to England, although stuff might be bought cheaper and equally well in America or in Germany, and that thereby the Indian tax-payer has suffered. That is the case as stated. Have you any opinion on that, from your experience?—I cannot say what the companies do, but I can tell you as regards my own department, which includes the purchases of State Railways. One is rather between Scylla and Charybdis in these matters. You have got the Indian opinion demanding, from their point of view quite reasonably, that you should purchase absolutely in the cheapest market. I have a good deal of pressure put on me on various sides in England to deal with British firms and companies; they say it is very hard that they should be penalized by the abnormal advantage obtained by Germany through the rate of exchange and so on; that they have served India well in times past, and that if they have to shut up shop things will be worse for us in the future. I have always taken up the position that it is not the business of the Indian tax-payer to subsidise British industries or British labour, but that within certain limits one might give a bit of a preference especially to people who have formerly dealt with us. The Director General of Stores deals with the mass of contracts, but at present cases in which it is proposed to deal with a foreign firm come up to me. The general principle I have laid down (it is subject to specific and possibly different applications in particular cases) is that if the lowest British tender is within 10 per cent., say, of the German or Belgian tender, I give it to the British firm. Of course, time is sometimes of the essence of the contract. Sometimes the British firm can turn out the goods required within the time that the Government of India or the department that requires the goods, specifies, and the foreigner cannot. I also adopt the principle on occasion that if the lowest German tender, say, is considerably lower than the lowest British tender, I communicate confidentially the terms of the German tender to the Britisher, and ask him if he will come down. Sometimes he comes down to an extent that justifies me in giving the business to him; sometimes he does not. Of course, as you understand, the Secretary of State is subject to various questions in Parliament about these matters and, although I am subordinate to the Government of India and not to him, I have explained my policy to him, and he so much approved of it that he said he thought of asking the companies to follow it also.

8210. You have raised a point there that I think is worthy of notice. You are an officer of the Government of India?—That is so.

8211. You happen to be temporarily housed, I understand, at the India Office?—I was, but I have got an office of my own now. I am a neighbour of yours: I am at 42 and 44, Grosvenor Gardens.

8212. The only way in which the Secretary of State can deal with you, so to speak, is through the Government of India?—Yes. If I were doing things that he considered objectionable, he might instruct the Government of India to instruct me to abate my actions, but no such case has arisen hitherto.

8213. I think we fully understand your attitude. The giving of a certain preference to England as a country that has supplied material, and to individual firms that have served you well, you regard as a businesslike and proper thing to do?—Exactly.

8214. You do not think it is contrary to the interests of India in the long run if you sacrifice 500*l.* or 5,000*l.* on an individual contract?—I think it is entirely to the interests of India in the long run. Perhaps I might bring to your notice, if it has not been already brought to your notice, one question with reference to the loan of 7½ millions that was floated here a little time ago. There was a guarantee given by the India Office, on behalf of the Government of India, that all the proceeds of that loan would be applied to the purchase of railway material in this country. Of course, it is quite easy to carry out that policy without any infringement of the other line of policy to which I was referring just now, because we shall spend about 14,000,000*l.* this year for the purchase of railway material, and in any case at least 7½ millions—probably very much more—will come from British undertakings.

8215. Thank you very much. I do not think I appreciated before the point of purchase in Great Britain as distinct from purchase in Europe. That is, of course, a distinct difference.

8399. I do not propose to ask you any questions on the technical side at all. I will read out the question in order that the Committee may know what it was. Question No. 3 was: "Are tenders for supplies from foreign countries freely invited and received, and if so, will the Director-General kindly state the number of foreign tenders received during the periods 1912-13, 1913-14 and 1919-20?" The reply is: "The usual method of inviting tenders from foreign countries is by advertising the requirements. This is done whenever it is thought that the requirements are such as to attract foreign competition. Thirty-nine foreign tenders were received during 1919-20. The numbers for 1912-13 and 1913-14 are not available." Who exercises the discretion as to whether "the requirements are such as to attract foreign competition" or not?—The Director General of Stores.

8400. What guides him in his decision?—The past. He would look up to see what foreign companies in the past had offered for like requirements.

8401. Whether stores of that nature can be obtained in foreign countries or not—is that what would guide him?—Either that they cannot be obtained in foreign countries, or that for a series of years, let us say, Canada did not send in any tenders. Then he might reasonably conclude that it was not of any particular use advertising the requirements in Canada. Another point you have to bear in mind is that very often he is asked to get stores urgently, and to advertise in foreign papers necessarily means a little delay.

8402. In reply to No. 5 two examples are given. The answer says: "In a few instances foreign tenders from 30 per cent. to 50 per cent. lower than British tenders have been received, and have been dealt with in accordance with the policy indicated in the answer to Question 4. One or two recent examples are given below:

Rails.—Foreign price, 10*l.* 10*s.*

British price 17*l.*, subsequently reduced to £11 10*s.*

Wheels and Axles.—Foreign price, 45*l.*

British price, 83*l.* 15*s.*, subsequently reduced to 67*l.*

Is it possible that what happened in those two cases of rails and wheels and axles may have happened in the case of other materials in regard to which the Director General of Stores exercises his discretion? You see, the difference is enormous?—I explained at the outset to the Chairman the policy which I have laid down in respect to foreign tenders. This case of wheels and axles I know about personally. The 45*l.* was a German price. The original British tender was nearly 84*l.* In accordance with the policy I indicated to the Chairman, the German price was communicated to the company which offered it and they were asked whether they could reduce. They said they could reduce to 67*l.* I said that was not enough, but that I was willing, as a special case, to give them the tender at 55*l.*, having regard to the fact that they had done very good work for us in the past, and that they might be supplying us with wagons later on for debentures instead of for cash. They are still thinking over the offer; I gave them time to consider it. The foreign price for the rails was 10 guineas and, in the first instance, the British price was 17*l.* It was subsequently reduced to 11*l.* 10*s.* I imagine that the reduced British price was accepted.

8403. (Mr. Purshotamdas.) I should like to put this question arising out of the answer you have just given. If you call for tenders and if, instead of giving the order to the lowest tenderer, you send for the next lowest competitor and tell him you have got a lower tender, does it not discourage the lowest tenderer from tendering again? Will he not say: "Our tender is only called for in order to get the others to reduce their prices?" There is not what is called in ordinary business (I do not at all mean it is so in this case) fair tender facilities available to all. Does it strike you that, by the adoption of this method, the foreign tenderer may absolutely cease to tender at all?—Your criticism would be absolutely just in normal times. One would not think of adopting this system in normal times, but we have to face a very abnormal situation in which the Germans, thanks to the exchange position and to their necessity of having to pay a huge amount of reparations, are putting up what you may call an artificial price. We do not want to see the British firms ruined by German artificial prices; the result would probably be that you might get a German monopoly. On the other hand, as I said to the Chairman, it would not be legitimate to use the Indian tax-payer to any material extent to subsidise British firms, so I have adopted a medium position—a moderate amount of preference to British firms which will only last while the present abnormal economic situation continues.

8404. I take it that this policy did not prevail before the war, and that it will stop in the near future as soon as the other circumstances to which you have referred adjust themselves?—I was not responsible for the administration of the Stores Department before the war; I have become responsible only lately. I understand that before the war they went on the general principle of going to the cheapest market, and hereafter (in normal conditions) they will do the same. Of course, you must take it that in certain cases, as I explained to the Chairman, time is of the essence of the demand, and foreign people may not be able to supply within the requisite time.

Procedure of the Stores Department in the purchase of stores and engagement of freight to India.

1. Action in regard to purchase is only taken on receipt of indents of telegrams from India. Each indent must be accompanied by a certificate showing that funds have been provided to meet the proposed expenditure.

2. 'Draft Orders' are prepared in the precise terms of the indent, each order including such items as will have to be obtained from one class of manufacturer. The draft orders are then referred to the Superintendent of the Dept., the Consulting Engineers, or other officer appointed to undertake the inspection of the stores, and are completed by him, with the necessary specifications, departmental pattern numbers, if any, such other information as may be necessary to guide the supply. They then form the basis on which tenders are invited for supply.

3. There are three ways in which tenders are obtained:

- (1) By advertisement ('open tender').
- (2) By invitation to a limited number of firms ('limited tender').
- (3) By invitation to one firm only 'single tender' or ('private purchase').

It is left to the discretion of the Department to decide which of these three ways shall be adopted, as explained in the following extract from a Minute by the Under Secretary of State, dated the 9th December 1918:

'In 1874, a Committee of the House of Commons (of which Mr. J. Holms was Chairman) sat and reported on the purchasing Departments, War Office, Admiralty, India Office, etc. They made no special recommendations, with respect to the India Office, but, on the general question, they were of opinion that it would be 'unwise to restrict the purchasing officer to any one of these modes of purchase' (viz., open tender, limited tender, purchase by broker, or private purchase) 'to the exclusion of the others.' 'In all cases,' they say, 'where the circumstances will admit of it, public tender is the best and safest mode of buying, but the Committee are not prepared to recommend any restriction upon the discretion of the heads of the purchasing Departments. To enable them to buy to the fullest advantage, they must, within certain limits, be left untrammelled.'

'The practice of purchasing privately does not prevail to any great extent in any department. The purchasing officers appear to be aware of the danger of indulging in it when it is not necessary; but to prohibit it absolutely, under all circumstances, your Committee would deem to be unwise.' These remarks apply to the present system.'

4. When 'limited tender' is adopted the names of the firms to be invited are, as a rule, determined as follows:

A register is kept, under the various heads of supply, of firms known to be willing and able to execute contracts. Every effort is made to have full, and, at the same time, efficient lists, and every encouragement is given to firms desirous of being recorded; but, before noting new firms in the register, inquiry is made by reference to other Government Departments, or to large private firms, to ascertain the ability of the applicants to execute contracts satisfactorily. In many instances the firm is also asked to send samples of its work for examination and its works are visited. Firms are also required to give an undertaking that they will comply with the terms of the Fair Wages Resolutions of the House of Commons, dated the 13th February 1891, and 10th March 1909. When thought necessary names are removed from the register.

From this register the names of firms to be invited are selected by the Director General of Stores or the Deputy Director General.

5. Competitive tenders are generally invited, except in the case of:

- (a) Patents and specialities.
- (b) Comparatively small supplies.
- (c) Highly finished work such as surgical and scientific instruments. For these it is not unusual to invite single tenders from thoroughly reliable firms, as it has been found by experience that competition is liable to result in lower prices at a sacrifice of quality.

6. Single tenders are opened as received, and, if considered reasonable and satisfactory, are accepted, subject to the rules as to acceptance shown below.

7. Competitive tenders are appointed to be sent in by a fixed day and hour. They are opened under the supervision of the Director General of Stores, or the Deputy Director General, and of a junior clerk. Each tender received is initialled by both the officers, and a list enumerating the tenders received is kept for record.

8. The quotations having been checked, an abstract of each set of tenders is prepared, and, when necessary, is referred with the tenders to the Inspection Branch for report.

9. Tenders are accepted under the authority of the Director General of Stores, subject to the following limitations:

- (a) The acceptance of any tender over 50,000*l.* requires the approval of the High Commissioner.
- (b) If the tender proposed to be accepted is not lowest complying with the requirements of the Stores Department and of the indenting Department, the acceptance requires the approval of the High Commissioner, except that when the amount involved does not exceed 5,000*l.* and the acceptance of the tender is justified on such ground as superior quality, superior trustworthiness of the firm tendering greater facility of inspection, quicker delivery, etc., the Director General may authorise the acceptance, a weekly abstract of such cases being submitted to the High Commissioner.

10. The acceptance of foreign tenders is governed by Rule 9, subject to the conditions that:

- (a) When a British and a foreign tender are equally favourable, the British tender is to be preferred.
- (b) No German or Austrian tender is to be accepted without the special sanction of the High Commissioner, except that the Director General of Stores may accept a tender from a British firm which includes German goods of a value not exceeding 100*l.* provided that he is satisfied that suitable article cannot be obtained at a reasonable price of British manufacture.

11. The firms whose tenders are not accepted are informed to that effect.

12. Tenders for freight are generally invited by advertisement, and are dealt with in consultation with the Shipping Agents.

The acceptance of freight tenders is subject generally to the same rules as those governing the acceptance of tenders for stores.

13. A weekly list of the contracts entered into for stores and freight is submitted for the information of the High Commissioner.

F-5 (Belgian)	No. 176-5982 of 13th January 1921.	3,000 Axle boxes.	Total = 510,000 francs (at 56 to £9,107 approx.)	Divided Order. Firm F-5 lowest tender. Firm B-6 lowest British tender, price reduced by negotiation
B-6	No. 177-5982 of 13th January 1921.	1,200 Axle boxes.	Total £4,905
B-7 (For German made cups).	No. 3085-1423 of 23rd July 1921.	255,000 Insulator cups.	Total £8,490	Delivery of both firms long. Order divided in order to meet, as far as possible, India's requirements in respect of delivery. The lowest tenders for British made goods were received from Firms B-8 and B-9 who quoted equal prices. Both firms reduced price of item 1 from £95 per 1,000 to £94 per 1,000 against £93 per 1,000 for German made insulators. The total cost of British made goods would have been £24,237 or 187 per cent. above the cost of the German. The order was consequently given to the firm B-7 on account of their much lower prices.

PROVINCIAL SERVICE IN THE NORTH-WEST FRONTIER PROVINCE.

230. Sir P. S. Sivaswamy Aiyer: Will the Government be pleased to state:

- (a) Whether any appointments to the Provincial Service in the North-West Frontier Province are made by an open competitive examination?
- (b) Out of the total cadre of 50 in the Provincial Service of the North-West Frontier Province how many are graduates and how many have been recruited from the Bar and what was the length of standing of each at the time of his recruitment?

The Honourable Dr. T. B. Sapru (on behalf of the Honourable Mr. Denys Bray): (a) No appointments have been made by open competitive examination.

(b) (i). Out of the total cadre, 11 are graduates, 5 of whom are permanent, and 6 temporary additional Extra Assistant Commissioners.

(ii) Five in all have been recruited from the Bar, of whom 2 are permanent, and 3 are temporary additional Extra Assistant Commissioners.

(iii) The length of their standing at the Bar before recruitment was as follows:

- (1) Six years.
- (2) Four years.
- (3) }
- (4) } Approximately two years each.
- (5) }

JIRGA SYSTEM IN THE NORTH-WEST FRONTIER PROVINCE.

231. Sir P. S. Sivaswamy Aiyer: Is the jirga system in the North-West Frontier Province applicable to cases against non-Pathans also; and, if so, do the Government propose to arrange that the system should be restricted to cases against Pathans only leaving the non-Pathans to be tried by the ordinary Courts?

The Honourable Dr. T. B. Sapru (on behalf of the Honourable Mr. Denys Bray): The answer to the first part of the question is 'Yes.' Certain sections of the Frontier Crimes Regulation are of general application and under Section 1 (4) the Chief Commissioner has declared the following classes of persons to be subject to the remainder:

- (1) all persons born or ordinarily resident in the districts to which the Regulation applies, or in the foreign territory bordering on those districts to the west, or in any part of Afghanistan or Baluchistan;
- (2) all persons dependent upon persons of the preceding classes whether as tenants, servants, clansmen, or retainers of any kind;
- (3) all persons accused or being jointly concerned in the commission or abetment of an offence with persons of the preceding classes.

The answer to the second part is 'No.' To restrict the jirga system to cases against Pathans only would be a matter of great practical difficulty as not all who have adopted Pathan customs and belong to the Pathan tribal system are Pathans by descent and would also inflict grave hardship upon the general community.

The Frontier Crimes Regulation is not a repressive measure as its implicit title might imply. It is in essence an instrument for giving legal sanction to the settlement and composition of blood-feuds, serious offences and civil offences, whether by adjustment, compromise or punishment, according to the ancient customs of the country.

In the selection of the jirga, the tribe and caste of the parties is always considered, and when Hindus are concerned, Hindu members are invariably appointed to the jirga.

LOCAL LAWS AND REGULATIONS FOR THE NORTH-WEST FRONTIER PROVINCE.

232. Sir P. S. Sivaswamy Aiyer: Will the Government be pleased to state whether any non-officials are consulted when making or altering the local laws and regulations applicable to the North-West Frontier Province and if not, whether the Government propose to consider the expediency of such consultation?

The Honourable Dr. T. B. Sapru (on behalf of the Honourable Mr. Denys Bray): Local laws and regulations applicable to the North-West Frontier Province can only be made or altered by the Governor General in Council. I understand that it is usual for the Local Administration to consult non-official opinion before making any such recommendations.

OFFENCES AND BORDER RAIDS IN THE NORTH-WEST FRONTIER PROVINCE.

233. Sir P. S. Sivaswamy Aiyer: (a) With reference to the answer* of the Government to Question No. 473 (b) of Mr. S. Sinha in March last, regarding the number of offences and border raids in the North-West Frontier Province, will the Government be pleased to state whether before the formation of the Province, no information was being supplied to the Punjab Government by the Commissioner and the Deputy Commissioners of the five Frontier districts regarding the number of raids and outrages by trans-frontier tribesmen and the number of serious crimes by others committed in the districts under their charge?

(b) If the answer to (a) be in the affirmative, will the Government be pleased to call for a return from the Administration concerned of such raids, outrages and serious crimes for each of the 10 years preceding the separation of the North-West Frontier Province?

The Honourable Dr. T. B. Sapru (on behalf of the Honourable Mr. Denys Bray): (a) The answer is presumably 'Yes.' But the old records may have been destroyed after the amalgamation of the statistics with those of the Punjab as a whole.

(b) A return has been called for from the Punjab Government who report that they possess no further material beyond that contained in the Punjab Police Administration Reports for the years in question. These reports are public, but it has been found impossible to extract from them the information the Honourable Member desires. A further endeavour will be made to trace the required data from old Punjab records made over to the North-West Frontier Province in 1901, but as I have said the records may have been destroyed.

RAIDS IN THE NORTH-WEST FRONTIER PROVINCE.

234. Sir P. S. Sivaswamy Aiyer: With reference to the answer of the Honourable Mr. Dobbs furnished on the 11th of February 1920, to the Honourable Mr. Sachchidananda Sinha in the Imperial Legislative Council regarding the number of raids, etc., will the Government be pleased to lay on the table a similar statement for the years 1919-20 and 1920-21?

The Honourable Dr. T. B. Sapru (on behalf of the Honourable Mr. Denys Bray): A statement showing the number of raids committed in the Frontier districts of the North-West Frontier Province during the years 1919-20 and 1920-21 is laid on the table.

PERSONS KIDNAPPED AND RANSOMED IN THE NORTH-WEST FRONTIER PROVINCE.

235. Sir P. S. Sivaswamy Aiyer: Is it a fact that two Indian telegraph operators, who were kidnapped last year by trans-frontier people in the North-West Frontier Province, have not been ransomed by Government, while certain British other ranks captured at the same time have been so ransomed?

The Honourable Dr. T. B. Sapru (on behalf of the Honourable Mr. Denys Bray): It is contrary to the policy of Government to pay ransoms for persons kidnapped by trans-frontier people, and no ransoms were paid either for the Indian telegraph operators or for the British other ranks, all of whom have been released.

ALLOWANCES TO TRANS-FRONTIER TRIBES ON NORTH-WEST FRONTIER.

236. Sir P. S. Sivaswamy Aiyer: Will the Government be pleased to furnish a return showing the allowances paid to the different trans-frontier tribes on the North-West Frontier in the years 1900-01 and 1920-21, respectively?

The Honourable Dr. T. B. Sapru (on behalf of the Honourable Mr. Denys Bray): Detailed figures are not yet available.

PAY OF STAFF OF SECRETARIAT ATTACHED OFFICES.

237. Sir P. S. Sivaswamy Aiyer: (a) With reference to Question No. 594 of Rai Bahadur Bakshi Sohan Lal and the answer of Mr. S. P. O'Donnell, will the Government be pleased to say if it is a fact that in the case of some Services, the revision of whose pay was considered at a later date than that of the Secretariat staff, the revised pay took effect from 1st December 1919, and if so, whether there is any reason for not giving effect to the revision of pay of the staff of the Attached offices from the same date?

(b) Will the Government be pleased to say why the stage at which each of the employees of the Attached offices was to enter on the revised scale was fixed on the present pay or salary plus a certain percentage of it, while in the case of the Secretariat the total number of years of service in the lower or upper division was allowed to count for increments?

(c) Is it a fact that while the staff of some of the Attached offices are receiving house rent allowance, no such allowance is paid to the staff of the other Attached offices like the staff of the Meteorological office?

(d) Is it a fact that in the opinion of the Staff Selection Board the duties of the lower division clerks are the same in the Attached offices as in the Secretariat; and, if so, why has not the principle of similar pay for similar labour been adhered to in revising the pay of the clerical staff of the Attached offices at Simla?

(e) Is it a fact that on account of the difficulty of getting candidates to accept appointments in the Attached offices, the Staff Selection Board have submitted a fresh scheme of pay for the Secretariat and Attached offices; and, if so, what will be the financial effect of the scheme and do the Government intend to accept the same?

(f) Has the Secretariat scale of pay been sanctioned by the Secretary of State for any, and, if so, which of the Attached offices?

(g) Is it a fact that the scale of the clerical staff of the Medical Services in the Army Headquarters is nearly double that of the clerical staff of the Director-General of Indian Medical Service and, if so, is there any reason for the differentiation?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: (a) If the Honourable Member will kindly state what Services he has in mind I will ascertain the bearing of the decision as to date of effect upon the case of the Attached offices.

(b) The stage at which the employees of the Attached offices were to enter the new scale was fixed at a certain percentage above the amount drawn by them under the old scale in order to assure them of an immediate increase of pay in every case, as the method adopted for the Secretariat had resulted in several instances in a reduction of emoluments, which had to be made up for by the grant of personal allowances.

(c) The following Attached offices receive house-rent allowance while in Simla:—

(i) Office of the Private Secretary to His Excellency the Viceroy,

(ii) Office of the Military Secretary to His Excellency the Viceroy,

(iii) Office of the Director-General, Posts and Telegraphs,

(iv) Office of the Military Accountant General ;

(v) Office of the Accountant General, Railways ;

because the headquarters of these offices are not at Simla and they are put to extra expense while residing there.

(d) and (e). The correspondence to which the Honourable Member refers is confidential. Without disclosing the contents of that correspondence I may say the Staff Selection Board have addressed letters to the Government of India which are under consideration.

(f) The answer is in the negative.

(g) The difference in the scale of establishment is not as great as the Honourable Member appears to think. The sanctioned strengths of the Director, Medical Services, and Director-General, Indian Medical Service's offices, respectively, are 67 and 50. Owing to the different nature of the duties to be performed it is impossible to base the establishment of one office on that of the other.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar : As regards the answer to Question No. 237 (a), will the Honourable Member state whether, in the case of the Indian Deputy Commissioner of Police, Madras, whose pay has been revised since December 1919, the revision will effect from an earlier date ?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : This question does not arise. The original Question deals with officers attached to the Government of India only.

NAUTICAL TRAINING OF INDIANS FOR ROYAL INDIAN MARINE AND MERCANTILE MARINE.

238. Sir P. S. Sivaswamy Aiyer : Will the Government be pleased to state whether they have any intention of making arrangements for the nautical training of Indians as seamen for employment in the Royal Indian Marine or in the Mercantile Marine ; and, if so, whether they will be pleased to furnish particulars of the scheme and state when it will come into operation ?

Sir Godfrey Fell : As regards the Mercantile Marine, the Honourable Member is referred to the answer given by the Honourable Mr. A. C. Chatterjee to Question No. 52, which was asked by the Honourable Raja Promoda Nath Roy in the Council of State on the 14th February last.

As regards the training of seamen for the Royal Indian Marine, it is expected that the training vessel will reach India early in the cold weather. It is hoped to afford on this training ship general nautical training such as is required to make a good practical seaman, of the man or boy who joins the Royal Indian Marine. This training will include practical work with rope or wire, sailmaking, the use of compass, helm and load, boatwork under oars and sail and a knowledge of signals, besides general knowledge, reading and writing, etc. For young stokers, the training will include instruction in engine-room and boiler-room work, in stoking and coal trimming, tending auxiliary machinery, and in the use of oil fuels and turbines.

DIFFERENTIAL TREATMENT UNDER ARTICLE 408 OF THE CIVIL SERVICE REGULATIONS.

239. Dr. H. S. Gour : (a) Is the Government aware that Article 408 of the Civil Service Regulations makes a distinction between officers spending their leave out of India and those spending their leave in India, the former being allowed to count as service 4 years of their leave against 2 years allowed to be counted as service by the latter in a total service of 30 years ?

(b) Do the Government propose to modify the above Article so as to do away with the differentiation ?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : (a) Yes.

(b) I can promise the Honourable Member that the question will be considered, but I cannot hold out any very great hope that we shall be able to meet his wishes. The existing system does not involve racial discrimination, seeing that the concession to which the Honourable Member refers is granted to both Indians and Europeans alike. It has always been the policy of Government to encourage both classes of officer to take leave in Europe, as they consider that visits to Europe add to the efficiency of the officer in both cases.

DISSATISFACTION OF OFFICERS UNDER INDIAN SERVICE LEAVE RULES.

240. Dr. H. S. Gour : (a) Is the Government aware that among officers who come under Indian Service Leave Rules great dissatisfaction exists on account of their being debarred from getting furlough on full average salary unless they can produce medical certificate or spend the leave out of India none of these two conditions applying to officers who come under European Service Leave Rules ?

(b) What step does the Government propose to take to remove the above grievance ?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : The Honourable Member is referred to the answer given on the 15th September to Rai Bahadur D. C. Barua's question on the subject.

ASSESSMENT TO INCOME-TAX.

241. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala : Will the Government very kindly state how many new persons have been assessed to Income-tax this year ?

The Honourable Mr. W. M. Hailey : I regret that the information is not available.

EXTERNEES FROM CANTONMENTS.

242. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala : (a) Will the Government be pleased to give a detailed statement of all externees from the different Cantonments throughout India during the last five years, with the causes of their externment, showing also the period of their externment ?

(b) Is the Government aware that Section 216 of the Cantonment Code operates harshly on the civil population of Cantonments and do the Government propose to modify the Section ?

Sir Godfrey Fell : (a) As the Honourable Member is no doubt aware, persons may be excluded from a cantonment under either Section 215 or Section 216 of the Cantonment Code, in addition to Section 179 or Section 209, which relate primarily to prostitutes or persons suffering from infectious or contagious disorders. Presumably the Honourable Member is not interested in expulsions from cantonments under the two last quoted Sections. As regards Section 215, the power to remove disorderly persons from a cantonment and to prohibit them from re-entering it can only be exercised as a result of a judicial inquiry by the Cantonment Magistrate and with the approval of the Commanding Officer of the cantonment. The Government have prepared a list of persons who have been ordered, during the last two years, to leave cantonments under Section 215 of the Cantonment Code, and if the Honourable Member so desires, a copy will be furnished to him. Government have not thought it necessary, in view of the heavy clerical labour involved, to prepare a list for so long a period as 5 years. With regard to the application of Section 216 of the Cantonment Code, the Honourable Member will see that the Commanding Officer of the cantonment can remove from the cantonment, within a time to be specified in the notice, and prohibit from re-entering it, any person whom he thinks it expedient to exclude from the cantonment, and need not assign any reason therefor, subject, however, to the provision that unless he considers immediate action to be necessary, he shall obtain the previous sanction of the Officer Commanding the Division or, in some cases, of the Commander-in-Chief. The Government have prepared a list of persons removed from cantonments during the past two years under this Section of the Cantonment Code, and have included these persons in the list already referred to. In some cases, owing to changed circumstances or for other reasons, persons have been permitted to return to the cantonments from which they had been excluded. In many cases, it would not be in the public interest to publish in detail the reasons which led to action being taken under this Section. The power was exercised only in cases where the Commanding Officer of the cantonment was satisfied that the presence of the person in the cantonment was dangerous to good order or military discipline.

(b) Government are aware that exception has been taken in certain quarters to the method in which Section 216 of the Cantonment Code is applied. The Government have just received the recommendations of the Committee appointed to consider what reforms are necessary in the Cantonment Law, and are considering what modification of Section 216, if any, should be made.

CREATION OF A RAILWAY ADVISORY BOARD.

243. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala : Do the Government propose to create a Railway Advisory Board consisting of big merchants, traders and other gentlemen to help the Railway Administration in removing the grievances of the public and suggest improvements and extensions of Railways?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn : The Honourable Member is referred to the reply given to Haji Wajih-ud-din's question on the same subject.

MALE CALVES IN GOVERNMENT MILITARY DAIRY FARMS.

244. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala : Will the Government be pleased to state :

- (a) Whether it is a fact that male calves on their birth in the Government Military Dairy Farms throughout India are sold for a few annas each or even given away sometimes, and if so, why?
- (b) What is the total number of calves so disposed of and the total income derived from their sale during the last three years?

Sir Godfrey Fell : (a) As a rule male calves born on Government Military Dairy Farms are either sold or given away within one month of birth but never at birth. The reason for this is that the dairies cannot afford to rear male calves except such as may be required for study or for draught purposes.

(b) In the Northern Districts, the total number of calves either given away or sold during the past three years, is 2,416. The income derived therefrom is reported to be negligible.

In the Southern Districts, the number is 1,153 and the income Rs. 9,434.

STRENGTH OF ROYAL ARMY MEDICAL CORPS AND INDIAN MEDICAL SERVICE OFFICERS.

245. Mr. B. S. Kamat : Will Government be pleased to give the latest figures as regards the following :

- (a) the total strength of R. A. M. C. Officers serving with British troops in India, and the cost of their monthly salaries and allowances ;
- (b) the total strength of I. M. S. Officers, permanent and temporary, serving on the military side, with their cost as above ;
- (c) the total strength of I. M. S. Officers serving on the civil side, with their cost as above ?

Sir Godfrey Fell : (a) There are 321 R. A. M. C. Officers, (including administrative officers) serving with British troops in India, the monthly cost is approximately Rs. 3,70,070.

(b) The total strength of I. M. S. officers, permanent and temporary, serving on the military side is :

Permanent (including administrative officers)...	...	...	407
Temporary	...	...	450
Total			857

The approximate monthly cost is :

				Rs.
Permanent officers	...	...	...	4,93,570
Temporary officers	...	...	...	2,47,500

(c) On the 1st July 1921, there were 331 I. M. S. officers serving on the civil side. The approximate monthly cost is Rs. 3,58,500.

DIARCHY IN THE CENTRAL GOVERNMENT.

246. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala : (a) Do the Government propose to recommend to the English Parliament to introduce the system of Diarchy in the Central Government?

(b) In view of the delay likely to be caused in the process, do the Government intend to make such a recommendation at an early date to enable the Diarchy form of Government to be introduced in 1923 if not earlier?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : The attention of the Honourable Member is invited to the reply given on the 15th September to Mr. K. Ahmed's Question No. 210 on the same subject.

REVISION OF PERSONNEL AND EXPENDITURE OF THE GOVERNMENT.

247. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala : Do the Government propose to appoint a mixed committee of officials and non-officials to revise the personnel and expenditure of the Government and report, what, if any, reduction is desirable?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : The answer is in the negative. The attention of the Honourable Member is invited to the answer given by the Honourable Mr. W. M. Hailey to Babu K. C. Neogy's Question No. 417 on the 8th March 1921.

MUKHTARS.

248. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala : (a) How long have Mukhtars been recognised as a class of lawyers in India?

(b) What is the total number of Mukhtars in India and how are they provincially divided?

(c) In what courts can a Mukhtar practise as of right?

(d) What are the rights and duties of Mukhtars?

(e) What is the minimum qualification of the Mukhtar of the present day?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : (a) Mukhtars have been recognised as a class of lawyers since 1865.

(b) The Government of India have no information.

(c), (d) and (e). The Honourable Member's attention is invited to Sections 9—11 of the Legal Practitioners Act, 1879, and to the rules specifying the functions, powers and duties of Mukhtars framed by the various High Courts under the authority vested in them by Section 11, and as regards their qualifications to the rules similarly framed under Section 6. The matter is scarcely one which concerns the Governor General in Council.

ANNUAL INCOME AND EXPENDITURE OF THE INDIAN GOVERNMENT.

249. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala : Will the Government be pleased to lay on the table a comparative statement for the last 20 years showing the annual income and expenditure of the Indian Government, sub-divided under various heads of budgets as far as possible?

The Honourable Mr. W. M. Hailey : The information asked for by the Honourable Member is available in the statistics compiled from the Finance and Revenue Accounts, copies of which are available in the Library.

HIS EXCELLENCY THE VICEROY'S SPEECH AT THE CHELMSFORD CLUB.

250. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala : (a) Are the speeches of His Excellency the Viceroy, delivered at the dinner given by the Chelmsford Club and in answer to the address presented by the United Provinces Liberal League, public documents?

(b) If so, in what official book or journal have they been printed or are proposed to be printed and what steps have the Government taken to bring those speeches to the notice of illiterate and half-educated masses of India?

(c) What steps do the Government propose to take to bring into practice the declarations of policy contained in those speeches?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : (a) The speeches in question or records of them are not public documents within the meaning of Section 74 of the Indian Evidence Act. They are public in the sense that they have been made known to the public.

(b) The speeches have not been published in any official book, but it is thought that they may possibly be published later in the collected volumes of His Excellency's speeches. They have already been widely published in the Press and Government do not propose to take any action with regard to their further circulation.

(c) If the Honourable Member will indicate what particular declarations of policy he refers to and will give further notice, an attempt will be made to supply him with such information as is available.

NAVY FOR INDIA.

251. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala : (a) Does India possess any Navy of its own; if so, what is its strength, and how many Indians are employed as officers?

(b) If not, do the Government propose to establish a Navy for India?

Sir Godfrey Fell : (a) No.

(b) The Government of India have no immediate intention of establishing a Navy for India. Financial grounds alone would make it impossible at the moment.

AEROPLANES IN INDIA.

252. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala : (a) How many aeroplanes are owned by India and how many more are proposed to be added to the Indian fleet of aeroplanes during the next year?

(b) How many Indians have been trained and how many are under training as pilots of aeroplanes?

Sir Godfrey Fell : (a) The number of aeroplanes belonging to the Royal Air Force, to which the Honourable Member is understood to refer, is 184. It is not proposed to make any additions to this number during the next year.

(b) No Indians have been trained as pilots by the Royal Air Force in India nor are any being trained at the present time. Owing to lack of training facilities, it is not possible for the Royal Air Force in India, nor is it their function, to undertake the training of pilots ab initio.

(Question No. 253 was not asked and no reply was given.)

NURSES IN INDIAN TROOPS HOSPITALS.

254. Mr. Harchandrai Vishindas : (a) Have the Government of India in the Army Department taken any steps for the provision of a cadre for nurses in Indian Troops Hospitals?

(b) If so, is there any differentiation in the rates of pay and status allowed or proposed for the various grades of nurses in Indian Troops Hospital as compared with British Troops Hospital or the Queen Alexandra's Nursing Service?

(c) If the answer be in the affirmative, will Government be pleased to place on the table a statement showing what precisely is the differentiation and the reasons therefor?

Sir Godfrey Fell: (a) As a war measure, a cadre of temporary nurses was created for the service of all General Hospitals maintained for Indian troops on active service. In extension of this policy, a number of nurses recruited in India on temporary engagements have been employed since the war in certain Indian Station hospitals, as a tentative measure.

The question of creating a permanent nursing service for these hospitals is under consideration.

(b) and (c): No differentiation is made in the official status of these temporary nurses and that of nurses employed in British Troops Hospitals.

I lay on the table a statement giving the rates of pay drawn by (1) temporary nurses employed with Indian Troops hospitals and (2) the permanent members of the Queen Alexandra's Military Nursing Service for India.

Note.—The scale of pay allowed to the temporary nurses is comparatively liberal. If such nurses serve for more than 18 months and prove themselves really capable, they receive approximately Rs. 242 a month, and, if selected for the post of matron, may receive approximately Rs. 292 a month. On the other hand, a permanent member of the regular Nursing Service cannot receive more than Rs. 280 a month during her first five years of service, and her engagement in the Queen Alexandra's Military Nursing Service for India involves expatriation, a minimum period of 5 years' service, and a penalty of £30 and forfeiture of passage to the United Kingdom in the event of her terminating her engagement before the expiration of that period. The temporary nurses engaged for Indian Troops Hospitals are all persons domiciled in India and are free to terminate their engagements on the expiration of six months' duty.

COLONIAL NURSES IN INDIAN MILITARY HOSPITALS.

255. Mr. Harchandrai Vishindas: Will Government be pleased to state if any, and if so, how many nurses recruited from or trained in the Colonies or the Dominions which restrict the immigration of Indians into their territories are employed in any Military Hospitals in India?

Sir Godfrey Fell: None of the nurses employed in Military Hospitals in India were recruited in the Colonies or Dominions.

Of the nurses permanently employed in Military Hospitals in India two were trained in Australia; and two nurses who are temporarily employed in Military Hospitals also received their training in that Commonwealth, but were engaged in India.

EMPLOYMENT OF INDIANS IN HIGHER OFFICES IN INDIA.

256. Mr. Harchandrai Vishindas: (a) Is it a fact that with a view to the more extensive employment of the children of the soil to higher offices in India, executive orders were passed by the Secretary of State prohibiting the employment of persons not statutory natives of India to posts carrying a salary of Rs. 200 and upwards per mensem without his previous sanction, and that this power was subsequently delegated to the Government of India?

(b) Is it a fact that these orders have not been given effect to in practice and appointments have been made by Local Governments contrary to these instructions and that the Government of India's orders have been subsequently obtained formalising their actions?

(c) Will Government be pleased to place on the table a list of posts carrying salaries of 200 rupees and upwards per mensem filled during the past three years in India by persons not statutory natives of India with the rates and designations of the posts so filled?

(d) Will Government be also pleased to place on the table similar information regarding Port Trusts?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: (a) A rule to this effect was previously in force, and was embodied in the Civil Account Code as Article 773(b). As, however, it was not incorporated in the rules framed under Sections 45-A and 129-A of the Government of India Act, it has automatically been cancelled.

(b) A number of Departments were excluded from the scope of this rule, and the article in question empowered Local Governments in certain circumstances to appoint persons other than statutory natives of India to posts on a pay of Rs. 200 and over subject to subsequent confirmation by the Government of India. Otherwise the rule was, so far as the Government of India are aware, observed by Local Governments so long as it was in force.

(c) The information is not available and should be obtained, if necessary, from the Local Governments.

(d) The information is being collected and will be supplied to the Honourable Member when possible.

INDIANS IN HIGHER APPOINTMENTS IN POLITICAL AND FOREIGN DEPARTMENTS OF THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA.

257. Sir P. S. Sivaswamy Aiyer: With reference to the statement of the Honourable the Law Member on page 1104 of the Legislative Assembly Debates, that the principle of taking Indians into higher appointments in the Political and Foreign Departments of the Government of India had been conceded by the Government and that a scheme was being prepared to give effect to the said principle, will the Government be pleased to state :

(a) whether the scheme is ready and if so whether the Government will be pleased to publish the same and state when it will be carried into effect ? and

(b) if the scheme is not ready, when it is expected to be ready ?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent (on behalf of the Honourable Sir John Wood) : The Honourable Member is referred to the answer given to Question No. 171 put by Mr. N. M. Joshi.

COST OF INDIAN ISLAMIC DEPUTATION.

258. Mr. M. K. Reddi Garu : Is it a fact that the cost of the Indian Islamic Deputation which recently waited on the Prime Minister of England, to discuss the Khilafat questions, has been met by the Government of India ? If so, will the Government be pleased to state if there is any precedent on which this policy has been pursued by the Government ?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : The answer to the first part of the question is 'Yes'; and to the second 'No, but the circumstances were exceptional.'

PROBATIONERSHIP IN THE IMPERIAL FOREST SERVICE.

259. Mr. N. M. Joshi : (i) Is it a fact (a) that applications for probationership in the Imperial Forest Service are entertained from those only who have taken a degree in the First Division ? (b) That in the United Provinces of Agra and Oudh out of 450 students who passed the B. A. Examination not a single person got a first class ?

(ii) Does Government propose to modify the above mentioned qualification ?

Mr. J. Hullah : (i) (a) The qualification required in the 1921 regulations was the possession of an Honours or first class degree in any subject.

(b) Yes, but two candidates from the United Provinces with the required qualification have been appointed this year, while another, otherwise ineligible, applied.

(ii) The regulations for recruitment in 1922 have not yet been prepared. It must be borne in mind that it will be useless to appoint candidates who are insufficiently qualified to follow the prescribed course of studies ; it is most undesirable that probationers should fail and thus lose their appointments after causing considerable expenditure to Government and incurring similar expenditure themselves. The qualifications required are less exacting than those required of candidates recruited in England, where only an Honours degree in Science is accepted.

MILCH AND AGRICULTURAL CATTLE.

260. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala : (a) Have the Government seen a copy of the Resolutions passed by the All-India Hindu Conference held at Hardwar on 10th April 1921, relating to the protection of milch and agricultural cattle ?

(b) And, if so, will the Government be pleased to lay the same on the table ?

(c) What action, if any, has been or is proposed to be taken by the Government in the matter ?

(d) Are the Government aware that there is a widespread feeling in the country about protection of milch and agricultural cattle ?

Mr. J. Hullah : (a) Yes.

(b) A copy is laid on the table.

(c) As regards the action which Government have taken or intend to take, they have already asked Local Governments whether the export of any breeds of cattle should be stopped, and if such recommendation is made, will give effect to it, as was promised by the Honourable Member in the Revenue and Agriculture Department during the last Session of the Council of State. They do not consider that they would be justified in taking any general measures for prohibiting the slaughter of cattle but they are investigating the extent and conditions of the Burma Meat Trade. Efforts for the improvement of breeds and the supply of pasturage are primarily matters for the Local Governments to undertake, but the advice of the Imperial Dairy Expert is at the disposal of Local Governments, local bodies and private enterprise, and he is freely consulted by them. The Government of India have under consideration proposals for establishing an Imperial Dairy School, but here again, as agriculture is a provincial and transferred subject, they consider that efforts in this direction are primarily the concern of Ministers in the Provinces.

(d) Yes.

Copy of Resolution passed by the All India Hindu Conference, Hardwar, dated 10th April 1921.

RESOLUTION No. 14.

Resolved—

(a) That this conference expresses its strong protest and resentment against the callous disregard of the deep seated and most cherished religious sentiments of the Hindus displayed continuously by the present Government in the matter of allowing slaughter of cows for the Military and export of beef to Burma and cows and bullocks to other countries, and is deliberately of opinion that the time has come when Hindus should realise that the responsibility to protect their Dharma in this matter lies with them and them alone and they should be prepared to make all legitimate constitutional and peaceful efforts and undergo all sufferings and sacrifices for the achievement of their objects.

(b) That strong propaganda work should be started at once to get slaughter of cows in India and their exports to other countries stopped immediately and in case their deep religious sentiments are not heeded to by the Government before that date, a special conference of the All India Hindu Maha Sabha be held at the holy place of Brindaban on the sacred day of the birth of Bhagwan Shri Krishna with a view to decide the future line of action in the matter.

(c) That a propaganda Committee consisting of the following gentlemen with power to add to their number be formed to carry on the above resolutions under the guidance of the All India Hindu Sabha.

261. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala: In what way have the Government put into practice, if at all, the declaration of their policy made in the following terms:

The Government of India have no intention of associating themselves with any measure that may be deemed to encourage the slaughter of useful cattle or are likely unnecessarily to wound the religious feelings of the people (vide Government Gazette, dated 2nd October 1920, pages 1201-1202).

Mr. J. Hullah: The declaration asserts not that Government will take action but that they will refrain from action. This the Government have done.

BEEF AS MILITARY RATION.

262. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala: Are the Government prepared to reconsider the answer given to my Question No. 124 and order some other diet to be substituted for beef as an item of military ration?

Mr. J. Hullah: The Government regret that this is impracticable.

The Honourable Member is also referred to the answer given to his Question No. 23 (c).

REPORTS OF THE ALL-INDIA COW CONFERENCE.

264. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala: Have the Government read the reports of the All-India Cow Conference from the date of its formation up to the present day?

PROTECTION OF CATTLE.

265. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala: Have the Government seen a book issued by the Humanitarian Society on the subject of the protection of cattle and if so what action (if any) has been taken or is proposed to be taken in the matter?

Mr. J. Hullah: Government have seen this publication and, with regard to the latter part of the question, the Honourable Member is referred to the answer given to his Question No. 23 (c).

266. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala: (a) Have the Government seen a copy of the Resolutions passed on 13th March 1921, at 30, Banstolla's Lane, Calcutta, at a meeting of Niskam Arta Sava re slaughter of cattle and pasture lands?

(b) If so, what steps do the Government propose to take in the matter?

Mr. J. Hullah: (a) Yes.

(b) The Honourable Member is referred to the answer given to his Question No. 23 (c).

SOLDIERS' RATIONS.

267. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala: What are the ordinary rations of soldiers (Indians and Europeans) and what variations, if any, are made in each case when they are on active service?

268. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala: (a) Will the Government be pleased to lay on the table a comparative statement showing the number of licensed fire-arms in each province held by the public within the year before the New Arms Rules came into force, and after the passing of the New Arms Rules and what was the income from license fee in one year preceding and succeeding the New Arms Rules?

(b) Have the Government of India read a copy of the Resolutions passed by the United Provinces Council on the subject of exemption from Arms Act, and what action has been taken or is proposed to be taken by the Government thereon?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: (a) The information will be collected and supplied to the Honourable Member in due course.

(b) The Government of India have not received from the United Provinces Government a copy of the Resolutions mentioned.

FIRING ON CROWDS.

269. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala: Will the Government be pleased to lay on the table the information promised to be given regarding the firing on crowds after the Punjab disturbances of 1919 up to the present day with the time, place, circumstances and result of each occurrence?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: I lay a statement on the table giving the information required and I draw particular attention to it because it shows the extent to which disorder has been prevalent in the country in the last 18 months.

Province.	Date.	Place of disturbance.	Brief description.	Casualties.
Madras	22nd September 1919.	Nellore	In an attempt to enforce a decree obtained in the civil court the Hindus with police protection took a procession with music through the main bazaar where there are mosques. They and the police were attacked by Muhammadans and the police were compelled to fire.	Two Muhammadans killed and two wounded.
Do.	April 1920	Perungamanallur, Madurai district.	The attempt to register the kallars under the Criminal Tribes Act brought about a serious collision between them and the police. On account of their defiant and aggressive attitude, the police had to open fire.	Eleven killed.
Do.	May 1920	Muthupet in Tanjore district.	A Hindu marriage procession passing a mosque, came into conflict with the Muhammadans. A fight ensued and to clear the street the police had to open fire.	One man was slightly wounded.
Do.	17th May 1920	Madras	During a strike in the Burma Oil Company some Pathans were brought from Bombay to carry on the work. An altercation between them and the local coolies resulted in a riot which required the presence of the armed police reserve to quell it.	One Pathan was killed; there were also minor casualties on both sides.
Do.	9th December 1920.	Do.	Buckingham Mills, Perambur. The police lorry which was taking the coolies from the mills to the harbour was subjected to persistent and violent stoning by strikers. The police opened fire.	Sixteen persons were wounded, two of whom died.
Do.	3rd April 1921	Kumbakonam	Cartmen and hotel-keepers struck work as a protest against increase of municipal taxes. The leaders of the movement indulged in a good deal of high-handed action and when the police arrested one of the ring-leaders, a mob attacked the police station and the police in self-protection were compelled to fire.	One man was killed and six wounded, of whom one died subsequently.
Do.	25th August	Karur	The Khilafat party asked a theatrical company to give the proceeds of their last performance to the Khilafat Fund. The company declined and was attacked at night. The police arrived on the scene and used fire arms.	One killed and two wounded.

Bombay	26th May 1919	Godhra, Mahals.	Panch	A leading wealthy member of the Ganchi community was celebrating the marriages of some of his sons and nephews. It appears that feeling was running high between the two sections of the community as some of the brides had previously been betrothed or promised to persons of the other party. The trouble began when one of the party let off potash bombs. The Ganchis then began to assemble and an altercation ensued which ended in a fight in which broken bricks and pieces of wood were freely used. The police on the spot finding that the fracas became serious, had to resort to firing. On arrival of more police, the crowd dispersed. The District Magistrate succeeded in getting both the parties reconciled to each other.	Two rioters were injured; six policemen received injuries from bricks.
Do.	11th June 1919	Deesa Cantonment		Some military sepoya on duty purchased liquor, and when the police constable on duty demanded the name of the purchaser in accordance with the Cantonment Magistrate's orders, they refused to give the name and beat the constable. When one sepoy was arrested, the others interfered and attacked the constable. Three sepoyas were then arrested and put in the lock-up. The Sub-Inspector of Police persuaded about 200 of the men to leave the bazaar but not before the lock-up was broken, the prisoners released and several policemen were injured.	Six policemen were injured, two of them being in a serious condition.
Do.	18th June 1919	Kanoda, Mahals.	Panch	One Sania Dipsing of Kanoda was terrorizing the neighbourhood, committing robbery, frequently though mostly of trivial articles. When warrants were issued for his and his brothers arrest he openly defied the authorities and even threatened to kill the police or anyone who tried to arrest him with a dharia . As he could not be persuaded to surrender, the District Magistrate ordered the arrest of the brothers, by using force if necessary. Sania's brothers and parents all armed with dharias , clubs and pickaxes, and Sania armed with a gun resisted the arrest. The police were compelled to fire in self-defence with fatal results.	Sania's mother and two brothers were killed. Sania himself was wounded.
Do.	30th January 1920.	Nandvaji village, Bijapur district.		A police party was engaged in protecting a faction in the village against the attacks of the rival faction when it found itself in the presence of a large body of rioters with sticks, axes and stones and fearing attack on themselves the police fired two shots in the air and one on the men in front. As his wife was in danger a Sub-Inspector ordered the mob to stop. The crowd made an attempt to attack the Sub-Inspector who finding his own life in danger ordered firing in self-defence and also with the object of quelling the disturbance.	Six wounded.
Do.	29th May 1920	Dubai, Sukkur District.	On the 29th May an affray took place between the police and certain Jagirans near Dubai in the Sukkur district, Sind. The police received a complaint that two buffaloes had been stolen by some Jagirans. A police party went in search of the criminals and having found them seized and arrested the offenders. On their return journey they were attacked by about 30 Jagirans, two of whom were armed with guns. Those guns were fired at the police party and the Jagirans closed in with their lathis . A general free fight ensued and the police seeing that they were overwhelmed by weight of numbers, fired in self-defence. The Jagirans then ran off, leaving their wounded. The mob attacked and set fire to the house killing the Sub-Inspector and one constable. The following day some looting was indulged in by the rioters. Troops arrived on the scene on the 26th and their prompt arrival succeeded in quietening the rioters who dispersed.	The Sub-Inspector and one constable killed, three rioters killed and nine wounded.
Do.	25th and 26th April 1921.	Do.	A very serious disturbance arose out of the trial and imprisonment of some Khilafat volunteers. The mob determined to retaliate by making a clean sweep of all the police and Magistrates in the town. Unarmed constables and other wearers of Government uniform were stripped and beaten: and two Magistrates were mobbed and hunted out of the town. A Sub-Inspector of Police was beaten to death and his body burnt and four constables were killed, a Hindu temple was destroyed, telegraph lines were cut and roads picketed. Order was only restored on the arrival of troops.

The members of the Sabha were subjected to abuse; brickbats were thrown throughout the meeting. Owing to the menacing attitude of the agitators, the police were summoned to escort the members home. The police were eventually attacked: the Sub-Inspector who was knocked down by brickbats, ordered a solitary armed constable to fire in the air. Eight shots were fired. Everything was quiet for a while. Later, the Superintendent of Police received intimation that there was a riot in the town which had been set on fire; and armed police were summoned. The Collector and Superintendent of Police, when they arrived on the scene, found they were confronted by a large crowd, dis- tant some 1000 yards or so down the street. On proceeding down the street, one policeman was found to be unconscious and a little further two bodies of policemen were discovered. The first Sub-Inspector who was in command, was bleeding from the nose; he said he had to fire because the mob had twice charged the police after being prevented from setting the liquor shops on fire; which they had already stoned and broken it.	Three rioters killed.
Bengal	18th February 1921.	Calcutta	In the forenoon of the 18th February last a disturbance occurred near the Calcutta Tramways Company's depot at Kalighat. PRACTICE OF RASAD AND BEGAR.

270. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala : What steps are the Government taking to stop the practice of Rasad and Begar during tours of officers in the mufassal ?

Mr. J. Hullah : In reply to a question by Mr. Joshi in the last session of the Assembly, Government said :

'So far as provinces which have Legislative Councils are concerned, the Government of India do not propose to take the initiative in effecting reforms or changes in the laws and orders regarding compulsory labour or the provision of supplies and conveyances. They, however, undertake to investigate the subject in so far as it concerns territories which have no Legislative Councils.'

In pursuance of this undertaking, the Government of India addressed the Administrations of the last mentioned territories. The replies are now being received and the matter is under consideration. The Government of India hope shortly to make a statement on the subject.

INDIAN AS PROVINCIAL GOVERNOR.

271. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala : Do the Government propose to recommend the appointment of an Indian to fill the next temporary or permanent vacancy of Governorship of any province in India ?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : Government is not in a position to make any statement. The appointments referred to are made by His Majesty.

LISTED POSTS IN THE INDIAN CIVIL SERVICE.

272. Mr. W. M. Hussanally : (a) Will the Government be pleased to state what action has been taken on my Resolution, dated 17th February 1921 ?

(b) If no action has been taken, will the Government please state what action they propose taking in the matter of throwing open to the Provincial Service a larger proportion of the appointments now reserved for the Indian Civil Service, in the Revenue, Judicial, Police, Forests and Educational Departments ?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : The Honourable Member is referred to the answer given on the 15th September to Rai Bahadur Giris Chandra Nag's question on the subject.

SUKKUR BARRAGE.

273. Mr. W. M. Hussanally : With reference to the answer to Question No. 49, dated 15th February 1921, and to No. 108, dated 17th February 1921, in regard to the Sukkur Barrage, will Government state if the sanction of the Secretary of State has now been obtained ? If the sanction has been received, has the Bombay Government made arrangements to find funds for the project and made other arrangements to start the work ?

Colonel Sir S. D'A. Crookshank : The Sukkur Barrage and Canals Project has been approved by the Secretary of State both administratively and technically but final sanction has been withheld pending receipt of the detailed proposals of the Government of Bombay as to how the scheme will be financed.

EXPORT DUTY ON FOODSTUFFS AND RAW MATERIALS.

274. Mr. W. M. Hussanally : With reference to the answer to Question No. 55, dated 15th February 1921, do Government propose to levy an export duty on all foodstuffs and raw material exported out of India ?

Mr. J. Hullah : As at present advised, the Government of India do not propose to embark on the policy suggested.

HYDERABAD-BADIN RAILWAY.

275. Mr. W. M. Hussanally : (a) With reference to the answer to Question No. 106, dated the 17th February 1921, will Government state if the Hyderabad-Badin Railway has now been restored and re-opened to traffic ? If not, what progress has been made ?

(b) Why has the work been delayed ? When is it expected that the line will start working again ?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn : (a) The line in question has not yet been restored or re-opened to traffic. The following progress has been made. Preparation of ballast for the whole line and repairs to staff quarters and buildings at certain stations completed and a certain amount of work on minor bridges carried out. Tools and plant, and certain engineering stores have been collected and are held in readiness for relaying the line.

(b) The work has been delayed for want of requisite material. It is not possible to say when the line will be ready for opening ; but every endeavour will be made to relay it as soon as the material is available.

REGISTRATION OF MUHAMMADAN MARRIAGES.

276. Mr. W. M. Hussanally : Do Government propose to consider the question of undertaking the registration of Muhammadan marriages ?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : The answer is in the negative. The registration of marriages is a provincial transferred subject.

TRAIN SERVICES BETWEEN KARACHI AND LAHORE, ETC.

277. Mr. W. M. Hussanally : (a) Are Government aware that the train service on the North-Western Railway between Karachi and Lahore and Karachi and Quetta is inadequate ?

(b) Is it a fact that in consequence, frequently Railway carriages except the 1st class, are made to carry a number of passengers greatly in excess of the carrying capacity of such carriages ? If so, do Government propose to remedy the defect either by adding extra carriages or running extra trains ?

(c) Do Government propose to advise the Railway Administration to run extra local trains between large towns in Sind according to a time table made after consulting local convenience ?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn : (a) According to the Railway Administration, the train service on these sections is regarded as adequate.

(b) There is far less overcrowding in passenger trains on the Karachi-Lahore and Karachi-Quetta sections than on many other sections of the North-Western Railway, and when the Railway Administration has sufficient rolling stock to put on additional trains, sections on the Northern Division must certainly get prior consideration. It may be mentioned that an additional train has been put on from the 1st July between Lahore and Multan, and that from September an alteration has been made with a view to dividing the Punjab and Karachi traffic from Quetta more equally between the two trains available.

(c) Great difficulty is experienced by the Railway Administration in combining satisfactorily through connections and local travelling convenience. Every alteration made in the time table to suit one class of passengers immediately results in protests from others. Local trains are run to suit local traffic which is not conveniently served by the through trains.

Any suggestions put forward by the public for improving the train service receive very careful consideration of the Railway Administration and when feasible, they are adopted.

INCONVENIENCE TO PASSENGERS AT KOTRI RAILWAY STATION.

278. Mr. W. M. Hussanally: Are Government aware that since Question No. 158 was answered on 19th February 1921, a third and Inter class carriage is run through between Karachi and Hyderabad on Quetta mail trains, yet the accommodation provided is so small that many passengers including women and children are required to tranship at Kotri to their great annoyance and inconvenience?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: A through bogie composite carriage is attached to the Quetta mail trains for the convenience of Inter and third Class passengers travelling from Hyderabad to Karachi and vice versa.

It is possible that the accommodation provided is not sufficient for the number of passengers on some occasions but no complaint has been received on this score locally. It is not considered that there is any great hardship to passengers in having to change at Kotri. The raison d'être of the Karachi-Quetta mail trains is to provide accommodation for through passengers between Karachi and Quetta and as no more carriages can be taken on these trains without reducing the number provided for the through Karachi-Quetta traffic, it is not possible to increase the provision of through carriages between Karachi and Hyderabad.

INCONVENIENCE TO PASSENGERS AT MARWAR.

279. Mr. W. M. Hussanally: (a) Are Government aware that all classes of passengers between Bombay and Karachi are required to tranship at Marwar to their inconvenience?

(b) Will the Government advise the J. B. R. and B. B. and C. I. R. to run through carriages between Hyderabad and Ahmedabad?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: Government has not received any representation regarding the inconvenience caused to passengers between Bombay and Karachi by having to tranship at Marwar. They understand, however, that the question of running through carriages between Hyderabad and Ahmedabad via Marwar Junction is already under the consideration of the Railway Administration concerned.

DIRECT MAIL SERVICE BETWEEN KARACHI AND ADEN.

280. Mr. W. M. Hussanally: (a) With reference to the answer to Question No. 268, dated 22nd February 1921, will the Government state if they have ever received any representation from the Karachi Chamber of Commerce or any other body recommending a direct mail service between Karachi and Aden?

(b) Do the Government intend providing for such a service in any new contract with the Peninsular and Oriental or any other Company on the expiry of the present contract?

Colonel Sir S. D'A. Crookshank: (a) The answer is in the affirmative.

(b) The idea of instituting a link service from Aden to Karachi was abandoned in 1913. The Government of India have, however, considered the introduction of a mid-weekly service between London and Karachi as soon as circumstances allow of it. But they are informed by the British Postmaster-General that there is little prospect of arranging such a service at present at a reasonable cost. In the circumstances the idea has been dropped.

COST OF NEW DELHI.

281. Mr. W. M. Hussanally: Will the Government please state:

- What has been the total cost of New Delhi so far?
- What is the recurring cost of maintenance, repairs, etc.?
- What is the total income from rents and all other sources?
- What is the percentage of nett income realized on the total outlay after deducting recurring cost?
- Is the value of land under buildings, intended for rental purposes, calculated in the total outlay?
- Do tenants pay any taxes in the nature of house-tax, water-supply charges, sanitation-tax, electricity, wheel-tax and the like besides the rent they pay, or are such charges included in the rents they pay?

Colonel Sir S. D'A. Crookshank: (a) The total gross expenditure on the New Capital up to the 31st March 1921, was close on Rs. 490 lakhs and a further expenditure of Rs. 133 lakhs is anticipated during the current year.

(b) The expenditure on maintenance to the end of 1920-21, was Rs. 25.6 lakhs and a further expenditure of Rs. 9.1 lakhs is anticipated this year.

(c) The total amount realised and treated as reduction of outlay to the end of 1920-21, was Rs. 12.2 lakhs, and a further credit of Rs. 3 lakhs is anticipated this year.

(d) The expenditure on maintenance being in excess of the amount realised there is no net income.

(e) The answer is in the affirmative.

(f) Tenants pay for the cost of water and electric current supplied to them in addition to the rent paid. Tenants also pay rent on the cost of water, electric and sanitary installations in addition to the rent of the building. There is at present, no house-tax, sanitation-tax or wheel-tax assessed by the Imperial Delhi Municipal Committee.

INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

282. Mr. W. M. Hussanally : (a) Have Government received any representations from any Pensioners Associations in India, praying that their pensions be increased?

(b) Is it a fact that ' Pension ' is defined in the Civil Service Regulations as ' deferred pay ' ?

(c) Is it a fact that pensions of some classes of Civil Pensioners have been enhanced? If so, by how much and on what grounds?

(d) Is it a fact that in other cases enhancement of pensions has been refused? If so, on what grounds?

(e) What action does Government propose to take on the representations recently received?

The Honourable Mr. W. M. Hailey : (a) Yes.

(b) No.

(c) The pensions of all pensioners drawing less than Rs. 45 have been enhanced according to a graduated scale. The reasons for this step and the amount of increase are shown in the Government Resolution of 14th January 1921, which I lay on the table. Further, as a result of the recommendations of the Public Services Commission, the maximum pension of a number of gazetted officers was increased in 1919 from Rs. 5,000 a year to Rs. 6,000 a year according to length of service and additional pensions up to a maximum of Rs. 2,500 a year have also been instituted for the holders of certain appointments involving high responsibility. These increases were given with reference to existing and future conditions of service, and not with the intention of giving relief to those who had already retired, but, in pursuance of what was considered to amount to a pledge given when memorials on the subject were presented in 1913, these benefits have been extended to those who have retired since 23rd July 1913.

(d) The Resolution to which I have referred gives the reasons why Government have been unable to extend pecuniary concessions in other cases.

(e) The representations more recently received were of the same class as those referred to in the first part of my answer, and I have already given in detail the action taken by Government. No further action is at present contemplated.

GOVERNMENT OF INDIA,
FINANCE DEPARTMENT.

Delhi, the 14th January 1921.

PENSIONS AND GRATUITIES.

RESOLUTION.

The question of ameliorating the condition of those pensioners in India who are dependent on small pensions has been engaging the attention of the Government of India for some time past and careful consideration has been given to various appeals for aid received from pensioners individually and from pensioners' associations. From the outset it has been recognised that those same economic conditions which necessitated a revision of pay in the case of Government servants must press hardly upon the class of pensioners with small pensions though other considerations are often present to mitigate in the latter case the immediate hardship of high prices. At the same time the Government of India were forced to recognise that an increase of pensions on a comprehensive scale was a matter of the greatest difficulty owing to the large numbers of pensioners affected and the heavy increase of expenditure thus involved. It was therefore necessary to consult local Governments whose resources were already depleted by the heavy charges for revision of pay, as upon them would fall a very considerable part of the contemplated expenditure. The local Governments are unanimous in their opinion that some relief should be given to poorer pensioners, although they are equally impressed with the difficulty of providing for the consequent expenditure even though that relief is strictly confined to cases of greatest necessity. After the most careful consideration of all the interests involved, the Government of India have reached a decision to which the approval of the Secretary of State has been accorded and they are therefore pleased to announce the following scheme which will be applicable to pensioners in receipt of pensions granted under the Civil Service Regulations.

At the outset, it is necessary to consider the effect upon pensions of recent revisions of pay and it is provided that the scheme shall not apply to pensioners in receipt of superior pension who retire after three years from the date of introduction of revised rates in the establishments to which they belong. These pensioners will receive the full pensionary consequences of the revised rates of pay in the shape of an enhanced pension and it is therefore not considered necessary to grant them any relief. In the case of establishments which have been sanctioned since 1914 the local Governments will decide which of them should be treated as establishments the pay of which has been revised. Any establishment, the pay of which has been fixed either on the analogy of the revised rates of pay sanctioned for similar establishments or after taking into account the increased cost of living, should be treated as an establishment the pay of which has been revised.

2. (1) For purposes of the scheme pensioners will be divided into the following classes :

(i) Class A.—Pensioners in receipt of a superior pension who have retired before the introduction of revised rates of pay. Those who were on long leave on the date of the introduction of the revised rates of pay and have retired on a pension calculated on the old rates [vide Article 60, and rule 1 (a) under Article 487 of the Civil Service Regulations] should be treated as having retired before the pay of the establishments, in which they were employed, was revised.

(ii) Class B.—Pensioners in receipt of a superior pension who have retired after the date of the introduction of the revised rates of pay but who, not having since that date put in 3 years' service qualifying for pension, have not received the full pensionary benefit of the revision.

(iii) Class C.—Pensioners in receipt of an inferior pension.

(iv) Class D.—Pensioners in receipt of a pension granted under the rules in Part VI of the Civil Service Regulations or under Articles 679, 684 and 685 of the same Regulations.

(2) (a) Pensions of those in Class A will be raised on the following scale :—

(i) Pensions up to R10 a month by R2.

(ii) Pensions over R10 and up to R20 a month by R3.

(iii) Pensions over R20 and up to R30 a month by R4.

(iv) Pensions over R30 and up to R40 a month by R5.

(v) Pensions over R40 and up to R45 a month by an amount which will bring the pension up to R45 a month.

(b) Pensions of those in Class B will be raised on the scale given in clause (a) above reduced by one-sixth for every completed six months of service qualifying for pension from the date of the introduction of the revised rates of pay.

(c) Pensions of those in Class C who retired before the introduction of the revised rates of pay, as well as of those who retired after the introduction of the revised rates of pay, but on pension calculated on the old rates, will be raised on the scale given in clause (a) above. In the case of those retiring after the introduction of the revised rates of pay the maxima limits of pensions in Article 481 (b) of the Civil Service Regulations will be enhanced in accordance with the same scale.

(d) Pensions of those in Class D will be enhanced on the scale given in clause (a) above.

(3) In cases in which a portion of the pension has been commuted the increase will be calculated on the original amount of the pension as it existed before commutation.

3. The scheme will apply to pensions beginning with those falling due for payment on the 1st December 1920 and will be subject to reconsideration at the end of 3 years. Political and Literary pensioners may be granted, at the discretion of the local Governments, an increase on the scale given in clause 2(a) of paragraph 2 above, provided that their pensions have not already been increased in consequence of the rise in prices.

4. The Government of India regret that in view of the very heavy financial commitment involved it has been found impracticable to sanction relief on a larger scale or with retrospective effect.

ORDERED that the Resolution be communicated to the several Departments of the Government of India (including the Financial Advisers and the Board of Industries and Munitions), all Provincial Governments and Minor local Governments, the Comptroller and Auditor General, the Heads of Departments subordinate to the Finance Department, all Accountants General, the Comptroller, Assam, the Chief Auditors of State Railways and Government Examiners of Railway Accounts, the Examiner of Accounts, Military Works Services, the Examiner, Government Press Accounts, the Controller of War Accounts, the Audit Officer, Delhi Province, the Examiner of Customs Accounts, and the Deputy Accountant General, Central Revenue, Delhi.

ORDERED also that the Resolution be published in the Gazette of India.

E. M. COOK,

Secretary to the Government of India.

By order, etc.,

J. C. NIXON,

Under Secretary to the Government of India.

EXTENSION OF KARACHI.

283. Mr. W. M. Hussanally: (a) Are Government aware that the large cantonment area at Karachi is blocking the way of the expansion of the city?

(b) Are the Government aware that the area known as Artillery Maidan has been demanded by the Municipality of Karachi for years past for city expansion: and last year His Excellency the Governor of Bombay laid the foundation stone of the new buildings for the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Sind on that site? Has this area been transferred to the civil authorities and the Artillery removed? If not, what is the reason?

(c) Do the Government contemplate removal of the cantonment as a whole to outside Municipal limits with a view to the civil town being extended? If so, when?

Sir Godfrey Fell: (a) Representations to this effect have been made by the local civil authorities and the Government of India are endeavouring, in consultation with the Government of Bombay, to provide an outlet for expansion in the direction desired.

(b) The battery of Artillery was removed in October 1920 and the greater part of the Artillery Maidan has already been handed over to the civil authorities. The balance will be transferred when the Government of Bombay have provided facilities for the accommodation on other sites of certain necessary military institutions which at present occupy part of the maidan.

(c) No. The removal of the entire cantonment from its present position would be impracticable on financial and other grounds.

EXTENSION OF HYDERABAD SIND.

284. Mr. W. M. Hussanally: (a) Is it a fact that the cantonment area in the city of Hyderabad Sind is blocking the way of the extension of that town in the only direction available?

(b) Is it a fact that this city is heavily congested and as a result it has become very insanitary with high mortality from phthisis and other diseases?

(c) Is it a fact that for several years past the Municipality have asked for the removal of the cantonment and transfer of the area to the city for expansion? Have the Local Government supported their prayer?

(d) What decision have the Government arrived at in connection with this demand?

Sir Godfrey Fell: (a) It is true that the cantonment area in the city of Hyderabad Sind is blocking the expansion of the city in one direction, but this is not the only direction in which the city can be expanded.

(b) The Government are aware that the congested state of the city is conducive to insanitary conditions.

(c) Various suggestions, including one for the removal of the cantonment, which was supported by the Bombay Government, have been put forward by the Municipality with the object of relieving the congestion, but all of them have been found to present serious difficulties.

(d) The Government of India have recently directed that the question should be examined by the local civil and military authorities concerned, and thereafter by the Government of Bombay in communication with the General Officer Commanding-in-Chief, Western Command. The Government of India have not yet had any final report regarding the result of these discussions. A report has, however, been received from the General Officer Commanding-in-Chief, Western Command, which shows that there is no other site near Hyderabad which can be compared with the present site either in altitude, in freedom from mosquitoes, or in space available for parade grounds.

INCONVENIENCE TO PILGRIMS AT HARDWAR.

285. Dr. Nand Lal: (a) Is the Government of India aware that a large number of respectable Hindu ladies go to Hardwar as pilgrims, and that owing to the want of separate 1st and 2nd class waiting rooms for ladies, they are put to great inconvenience? If the answer be in the affirmative, do the Government propose to remove this inconvenience?

(b) Is the Government aware that the Station Master, Hardwar, in order to reserve 1st and 2nd class berths or compartments from Hardwar to other stations, has got to communicate with the Station Master, Dehra Dun, and that his inability to allow such reservations direct is the cause of great inconvenience to respectable Hindu pilgrims, and if so, would the Government be pleased to remove this inability?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: Government are aware that a number of Hindu ladies on pilgrimage have travelled to Hardwar recently as first and second class passengers. There is no waiting accommodation for such passengers at Hardwar at present, but it is proposed to provide it as soon as funds can be made available.

(b) The practice on most railways is for reserved accommodation to be arranged by the Station Master at the station from which trains start. The inconvenience complained of has been brought to the notice of the authorities of the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway, and steps are being taken to remove it as far as possible.

THIRD CLASS ACCOMMODATION ON RAILWAYS IN THE PUNJAB.

286. Dr. Nand Lal: Is the Government aware that the third class accommodation on lines passing through the newly established colony towns in the Punjab is still far from being comfortable, and if so, would the Government be pleased to take the necessary steps in the matter?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: Government is aware that there has been some over-crowding in the accommodation provided for third class passengers on trains on certain sections of the North-Western Railway. The Railway Administration has given the matter very special attention and has lately increased the number of passenger coaches on trains and added extra trains as coaching stock has become available.

MEMORIAL FROM THE ASSOCIATION OF QANUNGOS, LUDHIANA.

287. Dr. Nand Lal: Is it a fact that a memorial has been submitted by an Association of Qanungos from Ludhiana to the Governor General of India? If so, will the Government be pleased to state what action has been taken thereon?

Mr. J. Hullah: Yes. A collection of a large number of memorials was received and has been returned for submission through the Local Government.

MEDICAL GRADUATES OF THE PUNJAB.

288. Dr. Nand Lal: Is it a fact that a copy of proceedings of the general meeting of medical graduates of the Punjab, held on 17th July 1921, in the S. P. S. K. Hall, Lahore, was submitted to the Education Member of the Government of India, and if so, will the Government be pleased to inform this Assembly as to what step has been taken by the Government in that connection?

Mr. H. Sharp: A copy of the proceedings of the meeting referred to has been received.

As regards the latter part of the Question the Honourable Member is referred to the reply given to Question No. 174 asked by Mr. Kanat.

BANGALORE PENSIONERS' ASSOCIATION.

289. Dr. Nand Lal: Is it a fact that the Bangalore Pensioners' Association has submitted a memorial to the Viceroy and Governor General of India praying for an adequate increase of pension? If so, what action has been taken thereon?

The Honourable Mr. W. M. Hailey: I would refer the Honourable Member to the answer which I have given to Question No. 282 by Mr. Wali Mahomed Hussanally.

SECURITY UNDER THE FRONTIER CRIMES REGULATION.

290. Dr. Nand Lal: Is it a fact that Abdul Jalil, Melap Singh, Jan Mohamad and Mohamad Salim were ordered to give security under the Frontier Crimes Regulation, and if so, will the Government be pleased to state why they were not proceeded against under the ordinary law?

The Honourable Dr. T. B. Saprú: (on behalf of the Honourable Mr. Denys Bray): Yes, all four, being ordinarily resident in the Peshawar district, were ordered to give security under Section 40 of the Frontier Crimes Regulation, which expressly provides for the taking of security for the purpose of preventing the dissemination of sedition. The Local Government considered that a prosecution for sedition under the Indian Penal Code would have been inexpedient owing to local conditions.

ADMINISTRATION OF N.-W. F. PROVINCE.

291. Dr. Nand Lal: Will the Government be pleased to place on the table the two circulars issued by Sir Hamilton Grant last year in summer on the subject of the present working of Frontier Crimes Regulation and laying down rules for the future administration of the North-West Frontier Province?

The Honourable Dr. T. B. Saprú (on behalf of the Honourable Mr. Denys Bray): Sir Hamilton Grant issued only one circular order in July 1920, regarding the working of the Frontier Crimes Regulation and copies of this are laid on the table. A confidential demi-official letter issued on the same subject on the same date, to which the Honourable Member possibly refers as the second circular, cannot be laid on the table as it is not a public document.

CIRCULAR ORDER.

To

ALL OFFICERS EXERCISING POWERS UNDER THE FRONTIER CRIMES
REGULATION IN THE NORTH-WEST FRONTIER PROVINCE.

Dated Nathiagali, the 19th July 1920.

1. The attention of the Chief Commissioner has been drawn to the number and diversity of the instructions which have from time to time been issued by various authorities for the working of the Frontier Crimes Regulation: and he now considers it desirable in the succeeding paragraphs to lay down, in supersession of all previous instructions so far as they conflict with these, the lines on which the main provisions of the Regulation should be carried out and the powers conferred by the Regulation should be exercised.

Some of the instructions here conveyed undoubtedly involve a departure from existing practice, and some may be regarded as tending to weaken the criminal administration of the Province. But a careful review of the criminal statistics for the past 20 years does not indicate that the present method of working the Regulation has resulted in an appreciable reduction of crime, and Sir Hamilton Grant feels that the time has come to try the experiment of working the Regulation more on the lines that were originally intended with the object of associating the tribal leaders more effectively with the punishment and settlement of offences and of securing the co-operation and support of public opinion.

This circular, I am to add, is not to be regarded as an academic essay to be read and laid aside. Sir Hamilton Grant desires that every officer exercising powers under the Frontier Crimes Regulation should keep it on his table and consult it for guidance as required. It has the same binding force on officers exercising powers under the Frontier Crimes Regulation as Judicial Circulars of the High Court or Judicial Commissioner have upon ordinary Courts of Justice, and it will be published in vernacular as well as in English. The effect of these orders will be closely watched.

2. References under Section 8, Frontier Crimes Regulation :

- (a) Very free use should be made of this Section, except in urban areas.
- (b) Before passing a decree under Section 8, Frontier Crimes Regulation, the Deputy Commissioner* should satisfy himself that the defendant possesses sufficient property to satisfy it. The Council should always be advised to limit their recommendations accordingly as far as possible.
- (c) Compromises should be referred pro forma to a Council of three persons, and on their finding a decree should be passed.
- (d) Section 36, Frontier Crimes Regulation, should only be used to enforce a decree under Section 8, Frontier Crimes Regulation, when the finding of the jirga specifically recommends this course or for most exceptional reasons.
- (e) Special attention should be paid to the protection of the interests of minors against whom a decree under Section 8 is proposed.

3. References to Council of Elders in criminal cases :

- (a) The Deputy Commissioner should never refer a case to a jirga under Section 11, Frontier Crimes Regulation, unless he is satisfied that there is reasonable ground for proceeding : or unless he thinks that a settlement of the offence in accordance with tribal custom is probable. Section 18, Frontier Crimes Regulation, should be employed, where necessary, to embody this settlement in a decree under Section 8. There is occasionally a tendency to refer cases to Councils where there is practically no evidence at all against the accused on the chance of the Council discovering some. This is obviously wrong. In such cases the accused should be forthwith discharged.
- (b) References under Section 11, Frontier Crimes Regulation, should be made, not only for heinous offences, but also freely for other offences, especially personal injury, rioting without murder, damage to property not disclosing professional or habitual crime, and cases relating to women. These cases, though brought on the criminal side and referred under Section 11, can frequently be satisfactorily disposed of by a decree under Sections 18 and 8, Frontier Crimes Regulation.
- (c) The order of reference under Section 11, Frontier Crimes Regulation, should always state clearly the grounds of reference and the issues upon which the Council are to enquire and give a finding. No typed or printed forms of reference should be used.
- (d) In references under Section 11, Frontier Crimes Regulation, the Council should always be instructed either verbally or in writing (i) to state clearly the facts and evidence upon which they base their finding ; (ii) to suggest, in case of conviction, the punishment that should be awarded or the manner in which, the case should be settled in accordance with tribal usage.
- (e) Cases should not be withdrawn under Section 15, Frontier Crimes Regulation from the Sessions Court once the trial has commenced without the previous sanction of the Chief Commissioner or of an officer empowered by him in this behalf.
- (f) References to a second Council under Section 11 (3) (b), Frontier Crimes Regulation, should not be made without the sanction of the Chief Commissioner or of an officer empowered by him in this behalf.

4. Finding of the Council :

- (a) When the Council find the accused not guilty, the finding should be accepted unless there are definite grounds for believing that the finding is dishonest or that there has been an obvious miscarriage of justice.
- (b) When the Council convict the accused, the Deputy Commissioner should carefully consider whether 'the facts so found show the accused to be guilty.' Unless he is satisfied of this, he has no right to accept the conviction, and he must discharge or acquit the accused. There must be definite facts beyond mere opinion or secret enquiries to support a conviction. In certain cases the facts may amount to little more than customary oaths by compurgators, and, where it is the custom, these may be accepted as evidence. But without at any rate this amount of evidence a conviction should not be accepted. It is hardly necessary to point out that it is infinitely better that a guilty man should go unpunished than that an innocent man should be unjustly convicted.

5. Punishment :

- (1) It is most necessary to remember that offences on the frontier fall into two categories—

- (a) ordinarily recognised crime, e.g., crime for the sake of gain, especially when coupled with violence, and crime indicating professional or habitual addition ; and
- (b) offences committed in pursuance of tribal custom or the Pathan code of honour which are rather law breaking than crime.

Offences falling within the first category should be severely punished whatever the recommendation of the jirga may be. Offences falling within the second category, where not marked by special deliberateness or brutality, should be punished or settled so far as possible in accordance with tribal usage. Where, however, there are special features of deliberateness or brutality, the case is different, and the offence must be punished severely on its merits. While anxious to admit tribal usage as far as possible, the Chief Commissioner has no wish to assist in crystallising it in its more violent and callous forms, or in countenancing acts which are repugnant to civilisation.

- (2) In punishing the first class of offences, viz., ordinarily recognised crime, though severe and deterrent sentences are called for, they must not be extravagant or savage. There is occasionally a tendency to mete out sweeping sentences without full consideration of their full purport. Sometimes, for instance, a sentence of ten years is awarded where a sentence of two or three years would be adequate. The Chief Commissioner thinks the standard of punishment might be considerably reduced without losing its deterrent or reformatory effects. We can alone secure the co-operation of the general public in suppressing crime by giving sentences of which they approve and by getting public opinion with us.
- (3) In dealing with the second class of offences, viz., those committed in pursuance of tribal custom or honour, the Deputy Commissioner should be primarily guided by the recommendation of the Council, and, where he can not accept that recommendation, he should in his order expressly detail his reasons for not accepting it. In this connection attention is called to the following important points :—
- (i) Under Section 12, Frontier Crimes Regulation, no minimum penalty is prescribed. There is nothing to preclude the substitution of tribal or customary penalties for those prescribed by the Indian Penal Code.
- (ii) There is nothing in Section 12, Frontier Crimes Regulation, to preclude the compounding of an offence (even murder) not compoundable under the Criminal Procedure Code.
- (iii) Under Section 18, Frontier Crimes Regulation, the Deputy Commissioner may treat the recommendation of a Council under Section 11, Frontier Crimes Regulation, as if it were a civil finding under Section 8, Frontier Crimes Regulation.
- (4) In inflicting a sentence of fine whether in addition to or without imprisonment, the Deputy Commissioner should consider carefully the status and means of the offender and regulate the fine accordingly. Fines should not be inflicted which are obviously not likely to be payable. When imprisonment in default of a fine has been suffered, the fine should always be remitted unless it is payable as compensation to an injured person.

6. Constitution of Councils of Elders :

- (a) The Council appointed should so far as possible be tribal in character. To this end Deputy Commissioners, instead of keeping the present lists of gentlemen qualified to serve on jirgas, Raikes, Khans, retired officers, civil and military, etc., should keep lists arranged according to tribal areas. It happens, of course, sometimes that the parties belong to different tribes or to no particular tribes. In such cases mixed jirgas are inevitable. But for this purpose the Shahi Jirga, which should certainly be maintained, is obviously suitable.
- (b) The parties should always be given ample opportunity of challenging any of the members it is proposed to appoint. Where the objection is overruled, the reasons for so doing should be recorded.
- (c) A charge of bribery or corruption brought against a jirga, if there are reasonable grounds for thinking it justified, should be thoroughly investigated.

7. Action under Section 21, Frontier Crimes Regulation :

The cases of tribesmen arrested and detained under Section 21 (b), Frontier Crimes Regulation, should be constantly reviewed, and such persons should not be indefinitely kept in custody without the special sanction of the Chief Commissioner. In this connection attention is directed to Circular No. 86—96-P. N., dated 5th July 1920, on the subject of monthly statements regarding these prisoners.

8. Action under Sections 22 and 23, Frontier Crimes Regulation:

Communal fines, though often deserved and salutary, should not be proposed merely because a conviction is not obtained. There must be definite reasons for believing that the inhabitants are guilty in one or other of the ways indicated in these Sections, and these reasons must be clearly demonstrated.

9. Action under Section 36, Frontier Crimes Regulation:

The expulsion of persons mentioned in Section 36 (d), Frontier Crimes Regulation, should only be ordered or recommended when the cause of quarrel is really definite and serious. The Chief Commissioner has noted cases where it was proposed to expel a woman because she was a prostitute or a bad character. This is obviously entirely beyond the intentions of the Regulation. There must be a specific cause of quarrel between definite persons likely to lead to bloodshed.

10. Action under Section 40, Frontier Crimes Regulation :

Security under Section 40, Frontier Crimes Regulation, for preventing the dissemination of sedition should not be taken except after full enquiry, which must show that there is real danger that the accused is disseminating or is likely to disseminate sedition, and must be clearly recorded.

11. Action under Section 41, Frontier Crimes Regulation:

This Section is, in the opinion of the Chief Commissioner, much too freely used. This is due in a great measure to constant criticisms of the Police by the Magistracy and superior Police officers implying that a particular offence could have been prevented by timely security proceedings. Such comments are not only improper, but they are usually untrue in fact. There are cases undoubtedly where the danger of bloodshed is obvious and imminent and cases where one or both of the parties apply for security to be taken, and in such cases security under Section 41, Frontier Crimes Regulation, is called for. But in many hundreds of cases where security of this kind is taken the proceedings have merely served to give publicity to private and domestic unpleasantnesses which would otherwise be amicably settled, and to afford a handle to unscrupulous persons to dishonour their opponents. If security under this Section were really a deterrent, there would have been a general reduction in violent crime proportionate to the number of securities taken, but this has emphatically not been the case. The excessive use of this Section causes considerable private distress and alienates the community, and the Chief Commissioner desires that the experiment should at once be made of reducing its operation to a minimum.

12. Inspections :

When a Deputy Commissioner in his capacity of District Magistrate or an Additional District Magistrate inspects the court of a Magistrate exercising powers under the Frontier Crimes Regulation, he will prepare a separate Inspection note dealing with the Magistrate's working of the Frontier Crimes Regulation in addition to that submitted on the ordinary Criminal working to the Sessions Judge and Judicial Commissioner. Such Inspection notes on Frontier Crimes Regulation working will be submitted to the Chief Commissioners by Deputy Commissioners direct, and by Additional District Magistrates through the Deputy Commissioners to whom they are subordinate. A separate circular will also issue to this effect.

13. In order to satisfy himself that these instructions are being duly carried out, the Chief Commissioner directs that a statement in the form attached shall be sent to him by the 15th day of each month direct by all Deputy Commissioners showing details of cases under the Frontier Crimes Regulations disposed of by them and by the officers serving under them during the month.

TRANSFER OF ADEN FROM THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA.

292. Dr. Nand Lal: Is it a fact that a memorial, on behalf of the British Indian Colonial Merchants' Association, Bombay, was submitted to the Viceroy and Governor General of India praying that the contemplated transference of the administration of Aden from the Government of India to the Colonial Office be prevented? If so, would the Government be pleased to enlighten this Assembly as to what action has been taken thereon?

The Honourable Dr. T. R. Sapru (on behalf of the Honourable Mr. Denys Bray): I would refer the Honourable Member to my reply on the 10th September, to Question No. 129 asked by Rai Bahadur Bakhshi Sohan Lal.

MEMORIAL FROM THE PUBLIC WORKS ACCOUNTANTS OF THE PUNJAB.

293. Dr. Nand Lal: Has any memorial, on behalf of the Public Works Accountants of the Punjab, been submitted to the Government of India, praying for an increase in their salary? If so, what action has been taken thereon?

The Honourable Mr. W. M. Hailey: Yes. Memorials were received in March 1921 from some senior Accountants of the Public Works Department in the Punjab (borne on the All-India list of Accountants) regarding their pay. The question raised therein cannot be treated separately and will be considered in connection with the general question of the adequacy of pay in Accounts Offices which is now under review.

MALE CALVES IN GOVERNMENT MILITARY DAIRY FARMS.

294. Dr. Nand Lal: Will the Government be pleased to state:

(a) Whether it is a fact that male calves, on their birth in the Government Military Dairy Farms throughout India, are sold for a few annas each or sometimes given away without any price, and if so, what is the reason for this?

(b) The total number of calves so disposed of, and the total income derived from the sale during the last three years?

Sir Godfrey Fell: (a) As a rule male calves born on Government Military Dairy Farms are either sold or given away within one month of birth, but never at birth. The reason for this is that the dairies cannot afford to rear male calves, except such as may be required for study or for draught purposes.

(b) In the Northern Districts the total number of calves either given away or sold during the past three years is 2,416. The income derived therefrom is reported to be negligible.

In the Southern Districts, the number is 1,153 and the income is Rs. 9,434.

REFORMS AND THE NORTH-WEST FRONTIER PROVINCE.

295. Dr. Nand Lal: Will Government be pleased to state as to why the North-West Frontier Province has not been given the benefit of the Reforms, namely, why it has not been allowed to send representatives to the Legislative Assembly?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: When the Reforms were introduced it was considered desirable that the administration of the North-West Frontier Province should remain in the hands of the Government of India, and that the claims of the province to representation on the Indian Legislature could be met by occasional nominations to the Assembly. The Chief Commissioner has been pressing for some time for the nomination of a North-West Frontier Province representative to the Assembly. As the number of nominated Members is limited, it was found difficult to include a representative of that Province. An opportunity has, however, recently occurred, and His Excellency the Viceroy has taken advantage of it to nominate Mr. Abdul Rahim Khan, Bar-at-Law, to be a Member of this Assembly.

ASSAM-BENGAL RAILWAY.

296. Rai S. C. Sen Bahadur: (a) Does the Assam-Bengal Railway enjoy a guarantee of profit by the Government?

(b) Will the Government be pleased to state the total amount of loss, if any, that has been sustained by the Assam-Bengal Railway up to the end of July 1921, on account of the recent strike?

(c) Will the Government be pleased to state how much of such loss will have to be borne out of the public revenue?

(d) Is it true that certain terms were offered on behalf of the strikers and the Assam-Bengal Railway authorities declined to accept or discuss them?

(e) Are the Government aware that great inconvenience was and is being felt by the public and merchants on account of the strike in the Assam-Bengal Railway?

(f) Will the Government be pleased to state what steps, if any, the Government have taken up to 31st July 1921, to put an end to the strike?

Colonel W. D. W. Ghorn: (a) The Government guarantee interest in sterling at 3 per cent. on the Company's share capital of 1,500,000.

(b) It is impossible to state with any accuracy what amount of earnings have been lost owing to the strike. Naturally a large proportion of the traffic held up will be carried now that the line is again open.

(c) Any loss which is incurred will fall on Government as the Assam-Bengal Railway earnings do not cover the guarantee.

(d) Terms involving extravagant demands which could not be conceded were put forward a day or two after the men had ceased work.

(e) and (f) Government are fully aware of the inconvenience caused and while the strike lasted every effort was made to induce the men to return. Most of them resumed duty at the end of July except the workshop staff at Pahartali, who have now been largely replaced from outside.

INSPECTORS OF MINES.

297. Rai S. C. Sen Bahadur: Will the Government be pleased to state:

(a) When the posts of Inspectors of Mines were first created?

- (b) If it is a fact that the posts of Inspectors of Mines have always been held by persons other than Indians?
 (c) How the Inspectors of Mines are recruited?
 (d) If they will throw the appointments of Inspectors of Mines open to Indians?

Mr. A. C. Chatterjee : (a) The first Inspector of Mines was appointed in November 1893, and he was borne on the cadre of the Geological Survey Department. The present posts of Inspectors were created by the Indian Mines Act, 1901, the first appointment being made on 23rd January 1902.

(b) Yes.

(c) Appointments in the grade of Inspectors are ordinarily made by the promotion of Junior Inspectors, who are at present selected by the Secretary of State on behalf of the Government of India as candidates with sufficiently high qualifications have not so far been available in this country.

(d) There is no bar to the appointment of Indians possessing the necessary qualifications. With a view to providing local instructional facilities for the training of Indians for these appointments, steps have been taken to open a School of Mines and Geology at Dhanbad. When students trained in this institution are available, appointments will be made in India as far as possible. Meanwhile steps will be taken to advertise these appointments in India when they fall vacant in order that Indian candidates with suitable qualifications may have an opportunity of competing with candidates from elsewhere.

SCALES OF SALARIES OF VARIOUS SERVICES.

298. Babu B. P. Singh : (a) Did the Royal Commission on Public Services in India express the opinion that service conditions make it desirable that a superior officer should not draw less pay than an officer who is actually under his orders, and has the above principle been accepted by the Government of India in fixing scales of salaries for the different services?

(b) Is it a fact that 2nd Class Head Postmasters whose maximum pay has been fixed at Rs. 350 have to work under the orders of Superintendents of Post Offices? And that the minimum pay of Superintendents of Post Offices has been fixed at a rate lower than the maximum pay of their direct subordinates? If so, will Government state the reasons?

(c) Did the Postal Officers' Association, India, petition the Government of India on behalf of Superintendents asking for a scale of pay with a minimum of Rs. 350, and is it a fact that the request has been rejected summarily, and the Postal Officers' Association was not informed of the reasons for this rejection of their prayer?

(d) If the principle mentioned in (a) has not been accepted by the Government of India, will Government mention the departments in which and the class of officers in whose case the pay of subordinates is higher than the minimum pay of their direct superiors?

Colonel Sir S. D'A. Crookshank : As the replies to these questions right down to No. 304 involve a fairly vast amount of detailed figures and the replies are somewhat dull, I propose with your permission, Sir, to lay them on the table.

(a) The Royal Commission on Public Services in India made the remark quoted by the Honourable Member in paragraph 57 of their Report. But they laid no special stress on the point, and did not affirm it as a general principle to be followed in all cases. The Government of India have not accepted the principle as one of universal application in fixing scales of salaries for the different services.

(b) Yes, second class head postmasters on a day of Rs. 250—20—350 are under the immediate control and supervision of the Superintendents of post offices whose scale of pay is Rs. 250—25—300—20—700. This is a long established practice of the Department which has hitherto worked without friction.

(c) The attention of the Honourable Member is invited to parts (a) to (d) of the answer to his Question No. 300.

(d) In the Post Office the maximum pay of certain postmasters is higher than the minimum pay of their direct superiors, viz., Superintendents of post offices, and in the Railway Mail Service also certain Record Clerks, Accountants and Head Sorters draw more than their immediate superiors, viz., Inspectors, Railway Mail Service, the grades of the former being Rs. 175—10—225 and Rs. 145—5—170, and that of the latter Rs. 100—5—175.

On the Telegraph side the minimum pay of 2nd Division officers in the Superior Traffic, Engineering and Technical Branches is less than the maximum pay of Deputy Superintendents, the grade of the former being Rs. 350—20—550—30—700 whereas Deputy Superintendents, 1st class, draw Rs. 500—20—600 and 2nd class Rs. 350—20—450. This has not been represented by the staff as a grievance.

As regards other Departments the information will be found in the statement laid on the table.

TIME-SCALE OF PAY OF SUPERINTENDENTS OF POST OFFICES.

300. Babu B. P. Singh: (a) Did the Government of India receive last year memorials from Superintendents of Post Offices and petitions from the Postal Officers Association asking for the introduction of the following time-scale of pay for Superintendents of Post Offices:

Rs. 350—30—560—40—1,000.

(b) Will the Government lay on the table a copy of the reply sent to these communications?

(c) Is it a fact that a further representation was submitted in June last by the Postal Officers Association to His Excellency the Viceroy urging for a reconsideration of the matter?

(d) Has any reply been sent to this representation? If so, will the Government lay on the table a copy of the representation as also a copy of the reply that has been sent?

(e) What will be the additional annual expenditure if the pay of the Superintendents of Post Offices be raised as asked for by the Postal Officers Association?

(f) Will the Government of India lay on the table a copy of the letter received by it from the Director-General of Posts and Telegraphs (Mr. Hutchinson) forwarding the memorials of Superintendents of Post Offices and Deputy Postmasters-General and Assistant Director-General?

(g) What scale of pay did the Director-General of Posts and Telegraphs (Mr. Hutchinson) recommend for Superintendents of Post Offices and for Deputy Postmasters-General and Assistant Directors-General?

(b) A copy of Commerce Department letter No. 285-S., dated April 25th 1921, is laid on the table.

(c) Yes.

(d) Not yet. The matter is still under consideration. A copy of the Memorial dated June 23rd 1921, is laid on the table.

(e) The additional annual expenditure is estimated to amount to Rs. 4,92,880.

No. 285-S., dated Simla, the 25th April 1921.

From—R. B. EWBANK, Esq., I.C.S., Deputy Secretary to the Government of India,
Department of Commerce.

To—The DIRECTOR GENERAL OF POSTS AND TELEGRAPHS.

With reference to the correspondence ending with your letter No. 333s-Es., dated the 25th October 1920, I am directed to convey the orders of the Government of India regarding the revision of the pay of the superior officers of the Post Office, namely:—

- (1) Superintendents;
 - (2) Deputy Postmasters-General, and Assistant Directors-General;
 - (3) Postmasters-General and Deputy Directors-General.
2. Superintendents. Until last year, Superintendents were graded as follows:—
- 12 posts on Rs. 500—20—600.
 - 36 posts on Rs. 400—20—500.
 - 56 posts on Rs. 300—20—400.
 - 47 posts on Rs. 250.
 - 32 posts on Rs. 200.

Owing to the small proportion of posts in the upper grades, promotion was seriously blocked and very few officers could rise above Rs. 500.

3. The Public Services Commission made the following recommendation:

26 Selection appointments on Rs. 500—40—700;

Remainder on a continuous time scale of Rs. 250— $\frac{1}{2}$ —450— $\frac{2}{2}$ —500. This gave steady promotion reaching Rs. 500 after 18 years' service. But the number of posts on pay exceeding Rs. 500 was still small.

4. In view of the rise in the cost of living since the Public Services Commission reported, and in view also of the increase of pay sanctioned for other services, it was considered that the recommendations of the Commission were no longer adequate. In July last therefore the following time-scale was introduced for all Superintendents, with retrospective effect from the 1st December 1919:

Rs. 250—25—300—20—700.

Thus a man will rise to Rs. 500 after 12 years' service, as against 18 years recommended by the Public Services Commission; and he will continue to rise by yearly increments to Rs. 700 after 22 years' service, instead of depending for further promotion on selection to one of 26 special appointments.

5. As it seems to be thought that the rate of pay now sanctioned is not appreciably better than the recommendations of the Public Services Commission, it will be convenient to compare the two scales in tabular form:

Year of service.	As recommended by the Public Services Commission.	As sanctioned.
...	250	250
...	250	275
...	250	300
...	290	320
...	290	340
5 ...	290	360
...	330	380
...	330	400
...	330	420
10 ...	370	440
...	370	460
...	370	480
...	410	500
...	410	520
15 ...	410	540
...	450	560
...	450	580
...	450	600
...	500	620
20 ...	500	640
...	26 selection appointments on Rs. 500—40—700.	660
...		680
...		700

The improvement on the old graded rates of pay which were actually drawn until last year, is, of course, even more substantial.

6. During the last year, however, the Superintendents have made the following requests for revision:

In March 1920, they asked that their pay should be raised to Rs. 300—20—500—40—700—50—900; that is, Rs. 300 rising to Rs. 900 after 19 years' service.

In July 1920, they asked that their pay should be raised to Rs. 300—30—600—40—1,000; that is, Rs. 300 rising to Rs. 1,000 after 20 years' service.

In October 1920, they asked that their pay should be raised to Rs. 350—30—560—40—1,000; that is, Rs. 350 rising to Rs. 1,000 after 18 years' service.

7. The rapidity with which the demands of these officers increase will be better appreciated, if it is exhibited in tabular form :

Year of service.	Scales of pay demanded by Superintendents			Compare scale of pay as sanctioned with effect from 1st December 1920.
	March 1920.	July 1920.	October 1920.

	320	330	380	275
	340	360	410	300
	360	390	440	320
	380	420	470	340
	400	450	500	360
	420	480	530	380
	440	510	560	400
10	460	540	600	420
	480	570	640	440

	620	720	800	520
	660	760	840	540
	700	800	880	560
15	750	840	920	580

	...	1,000	...	660
	...	...	...	680
	...	...	...	700
	...	...	...	...

8. When it is remembered that the revised scale of pay as sanctioned with effect from the 1st December 1919, was in itself a very substantial improvement on the old graded rates of pay, it will be realised how impossible it is to keep pace with the demands of these officers. The Government of India, after careful consideration of all the circumstances have decided that they are unable at present to go beyond the revised scale which was sanctioned last July with retrospective effect from the 1st December 1919.

9. Deputy Postmasters-General and Assistant Directors-General.

The pay of these officers was fixed by the Public Services Commission partly with reference to the maximum pay of Superintendents and partly with reference to the pay of the corresponding grades of the Telegraph Traffic branch. As it is not proposed to make any increase in either of these the Government of India do not consider it desirable at present to revise the pay of Deputy Postmasters-General and Assistant Directors-General.

10. Postmasters-General, including Deputy Directors-General.

The present pay of Postmasters-General is graded as follows :—

2 posts on	...	...	...	...	Rs.
2 posts on	...	...	...	...	2,500
3 posts on	...	...	...	...	2,250
3 posts on	...	...	...	...	2,000
3 posts on	...	...	...	...	1,750

The Public Services Commission recommended the following revision :

2 selection appointments on	...	...	...	Rs.
Remainder on a time scale of	...	...	...	2,500
	...	...	...	1,750—50—2,250

The Postal Officers' Association asked for a graded scale as follows :

	Rs.
2 posts on	3,000
2 posts on	2,750
3 posts on	2,500
3 posts on	2,250

This has already been refused in this Department's letter No. 7187, dated the 16th October 1920.

11. At the same time it is recognised*that the scale recommended by the Public Services Commission is not altogether suitable to present conditions. In the first place, the new time-scale of pay for officers of the Indian Civil Service in the regular line, which was introduced with effect from the 1st December 1919, is in some respects more attractive; and this would have adversely affected recruitment from the Indian Civil Service. Secondly, as departmental officers do not usually rise to be Postmasters-General until the closing years of their service, it would be unfair to place them on a time-scale which does not reach its maximum for 10 years. Thirdly, the new scale sanctioned for Directors of Telegraphs and for officers of the Telegraph Department employed as Postmasters-General is Rs. 1,750 rising by annual increments of Rs. 100 to Rs. 2,150 with one senior post of Rs. 2,250.

The Government of India have therefore decided, with the approval of the Secretary of State, to revise the rates of pay for Postmasters-General as follows :

Postmasters-General who are members of the Indian Civil Service. Their pay of the Indian Civil Service time-scale in the regular line plus Rs. 250.

Postmasters-General who are not members of the Indian Civil Service. One selection appointment on Rs. 2,500. Remainder on a time-scale of Rs. 1,750—100—2,250.

The new rates of pay will have effect from the 1st December 1919. A resolution on the subject will be published in the Gazette of India.

No. 8-G., dated Calcutta, the 23rd June 1921.

From—The HONORARY SECRETARY, POSTAL OFFICERS' ASSOCIATION, INDIA,

To—HIS EXCELLENCY THE RIGHT HONOURABLE SIR DANIEL RUFUS ISAACS, P.C., G.M.S.I., G.M.I.E., G.C.B., K.C.V.O., EARL OF READING, VICEROY AND GOVERNOR-GENERAL OF INDIA.

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR EXCELLENCY,

I am directed by the Committee of the Postal Officers Association, India, to address Your Excellency on the subject of the revision of the pay of the Superintendents of Post Offices and the Railway Mail Service.

2. In laying the case of these officers before Your Excellency my Committee considers it desirable to mention briefly the endeavours hitherto made by these officers and on their behalf by the Postal Officers' Association, India, to obtain an improvement in their pay. In February 1920, the Superintendents of Post Offices submitted a memorial to the Right Honourable the Secretary of State for India asking for the introduction of a better scale of pay. This memorial was withheld by the Government of India. On the introduction of a time-scale of pay for Superintendents of Post Offices in June 1920 they submitted another memorial to His Excellency Lord Chelmsford in July 1920. A deputation of the members of the Association waited on the Honourable Sir George Barnes, K.C.B., K.C.S.I., Member-in-charge, Commerce Department, in September 1920, and this was followed in October 1920 by a further representation on the subject from this Association to the Government of India. As no reply was received to any of these representations in spite of several other communications subsequently addressed to the Government of India and to His Excellency the Viceroy urging the necessity for the grant of immediate relief, my Committee addressed a letter to Your Excellency's Private Secretary on the 20th April 1921, in the hope that Your Excellency would be pleased to extend to the prayers of a long suffering and loyal body of public servants the just and sympathetic consideration which they deserved. On the 25th April 1921, Your Excellency's Assistant Private Secretary informed the Association that the matter was receiving the attention of the Government of India, and in a letter addressed on the same date to the Director-General of Posts and Telegraphs, the Government of India communicated their decision on the memorials. A copy of this letter has been forwarded by the Director General to the Postal Officers' Association.

3. My Committee is greatly disappointed and surprised at the summary rejection by the Government of India of the modest prayers of the memorialists. The Committee ventures respectfully to submit that the arguments used in the letter conveying the decision will not bear examination. They are extremely superficial and indicate utter want of appreciation of the conditions of the service and of the circumstances which necessitated the grant of relief. The absolute refusal of the Government of India to sanction any measure of relief is moreover contrary to the expectations held out by the Honourable Sir George Barnes to the deputation referred to above, and is difficult to understand in view of the fact that a provision had been made for an improvement in the pay of the Superintendents of Post Offices in the Budget Estimates for 1921-22, which were presented to and passed by the Legislative Assembly in March 1921.

4. As regards the case of the Superintendents of Post Offices and the Railway Mail Service, my Committee begs that Your Excellency will be pleased to take into consideration the facts and arguments put forward in the memorials and in the letter of the Association of which copies are enclosed. An examination of these facts will clearly demonstrate the unsubstantial nature of the arguments embodied in the letter of the Government of India rejecting the memorials.

5. In paragraphs 3 to 5 of the letter of the Government of India it has been stated that in consideration of the rise in prices since the investigation by the Public Services Commission, and in view of the improvements in the pay of other services, a scale of pay better than what was recommended by the commission has been sanctioned for Superintendents of Post Offices. It is apparently implied that these officers have been generously treated. My Committee submits, however, that the new scale of pay is inadequate and the extent to which it is an improvement on the scale proposed by the Public Services Commission is not in proportion to the extent of the rise in prices. As regards the second reason for improving upon the scale recommended by the Royal Commission my Committee desires to draw prominent attention to the fact that the Royal Commission recommended a uniform time-scale of pay, viz., 250—400—500 (Paragraph 58 of the Report of the Public Services Commission) for Superintendents and other similarly recruited services (such as the Provincial Civil Service, Superintendents of Excise, etc.) but the time-scales of pay sanctioned for these services are materially better than that sanctioned for Superintendents of Post Offices as will be clear from the following table:

Time-scale of pay recommended by Public Services Commission for Provincial Civil Service, Excise Department, Superintendents of Post Offices, etc.	Scale sanctioned for Provincial Civil Service.	Excise.	Superintendents of Post Offices.
250—400—450—500 ...	Rs. 300 to 850 ...	Bengal 300—400—850	Rs. 250—25—300— 20—700.
(N.B.—For Superintendents of Post Offices a selection grade of 500—40—700 was recommended. The selection grades for other services were not the same.)	The rate of increment varies in the different provinces but the maximum pay is reached in 12 years in Madras, and 20 years in Bengal.

The figures speak for themselves. They show that in the case of Superintendents of Post Offices alone there has been no improvement over the minimum (Rs. 250) and maximum (Rs. 700) pay recommended by the Public Services Commission while the rates of increment are not only much smaller than those sanctioned for other services but do not also represent any appreciable increase over those recommended by the Commission. The conclusion thus appears to my Committee to be irresistible that of all the services for which the Public Services Commission recommended uniform treatment in the matter of pay the Superintendents of Post Offices have been unaccountably singled out for unfair and illiberal treatment. The invidious manner in which Superintendents of Post Offices have been treated will also be apparent when a comparison is made with the rates of pay sanctioned for officers in the Telegraph Branch of the same Department. The comparative statement below will exemplify this:

Class of officer.	Scale of pay in 1913 when Public Services Commission appointed.	Scale of pay recommended by Public Services Commission.	Scale of pay on 1st January 1921.
Deputy Superintendent of Telegraphs.	1st grade* Rs. 400—25—500. 2nd grade Rs. 325—15—400. 3rd grade Rs. 250—15—325.	No. increase recommended.	Superior Traffic, 2nd Division, Rs. 350—20—550—30—700. Deputy Superintendents, 1st Class, Rs. 500—20—600. 2nd Class Rs. 250—20—450.
Provincial Services Telegraph Officers.	Rs. 250—25—450—50—500—35—850—40—900	Ditto ...	Junior scale Rs. 300—900 in 15 years. Senior scale Rs. 550—1,300 in 20 years.
Superintendent of Post Offices.	1st grade Rs. 500—20—600. 2nd grade Rs. 400—20—500. 3rd grade Rs. 300—20—400. 4th grade Rs. 250. 5th grade Rs. 200.	Rs. 250—20—450—40—500. Selection grade Rs. 500—40—700.	Rs. 250—25—300—20—700.

Further comment is superfluous.

6. In paragraph 8 the Government of India has held that the scale of pay sanctioned for Superintendents of Post Offices in June 1920, constitutes "a very substantial improvement on the old graded scale of pay." This, however, is not borne out by facts. More than ten years ago, Sir Charles Stewart-Wilson as Director-General of Post Office, recommended the adoption of the maximum pay now sanctioned (viz. Rs. 700) and Sir William Maxwell in his evidence before the Public Services Commission in 1913, also recommended the same in his evidence before the Government of India could say that the time-maximum. My Committee wonders how the Government of India could say that the time-scale of pay was a substantial improvement when the maximum of the scale of pay sanctioned in June 1920 was exactly what was recommended by successive Director-General more than ten years ago, and the minimum the same as recommended by the Public Services Commission in 1915 without taking into account the phenomenal rise in the cost of living. It has also to be borne in mind that this scale involved an increase in the average pay from Rs. 335 to only Rs. 388 as compared with the increase from Rs. 621 to Rs. 720 and from Rs. 820 to Rs. 1,018 in the case respectively of provincial and Imperial Telegraph officers.

7. In paragraph 6 to 8 of the letter, the fact that in each successive communication a better scale of pay was asked for has been commented upon in a manner which appears to be sarcastic, the clear implication being that the prayers were unreasonable and extravagant. In this respect the letter almost repeats the answer given by Mr. Innes in the last session of the Legislative Assembly to questions asked by Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar on the subject. The letter of the Government of India implies that it was only in March 1920, that Superintendent of Post Offices asked for a scale of pay Rs. 300 rising in 20 years to Rs. 900. This is not the case. The records of the Commerce Department will show that this prayer for a scale of Rs. 300 to Rs. 900 was made for the first time not in 1920 but so far back as 1913 in the Memorandum by the Superintendents of Post Offices to the Public Services Commission. It was this proposal and not any new one that was put forward in the memorial submitted by Superintendents in February 1920. It is a fact that the second memorial which was submitted in July 1920, embodied a prayer for a higher scale viz., Rs. 300—30—600—40—1,000, but the reasons for this request for a higher scale, which were fully explained in paragraph 11 of the memorial, have been ignored in the letter of the Government of India to the Director-General of Posts and Telegraphs. The Chief reason was that in February 1920, when the first memorial was submitted revised rates of pay for Provincial Executive and other similarly-recruited services, had not been announced, and Superintendents of Post Offices did not then know what increased scale of pay would be sanctioned for those services. Revised time-scales of pay were sanctioned for the Provincial Executive Services shortly afterwards and it was when Superintendents of Post Offices found that Government had sanctioned for those services scales of pay ranging from a minimum of Rs. 300 to a maximum of Rs. 1,200, which were substantially better than that recommended by the Public Services Commission for them as well as for Superintendents of Post Offices, that they asked for a very moderate and reasonable rate of pay, viz., a time-scale of Rs. 300—30—600—40—1,000. When submitting the memorial, the Superintendents of Post Offices represented that they failed to understand why, when the Public Services Commission recommended the same time-scale for Superintendents of Post Offices and the Provincial Civil Services, the scale of pay sanctioned for Superintendents of Post Offices was so much inferior to those sanctioned for the Provincial Civil Services. My Committee has very carefully examined the letter of the Government of India referred to in paragraph 2, but has been unable to discover in that letter any reason for the action of Government in sanctioning for Superintendents of Post Offices a scale of pay decidedly inferior to that introduced for Provincial Civil Service Officers. The only conclusion possible is that the case of the pay of Superintendents of Post Offices has not been justly dealt with. The request made by the Association in October 1920, for a minimum pay of Rs. 350 for Superintendents of Post Offices was based on the principle laid down by the Public Services Commission, viz., that a superior officer should not draw less pay than an officer who is actually working under his orders, and on the fact that between July and October 1920, the maximum pay of certain subordinates of the Superintendent was raised from Rs. 300 to Rs. 350. It is curious that this fact and the principle laid down by the Public Services Commission have been ignored by Government of India in criticising the demands of Superintendents of Post Offices. My Committee trusts that it has been made clear to Your Excellency that there was ample justification for putting forward a better scale of pay in each of the three successive communications. As a matter of fact, the conditions of salary of the different services were rapidly changing during 1920 and the claims of Superintendents of Post Offices could not in the circumstances remain unaltered.

The prayers were supported by reasonable grounds and instead of a careful, judicious and sympathetic scrutiny and consideration which they deserved they appear to have been superficially gone into and have been rejected on unsubstantial grounds and with caustic comments.

8. It is well known that after the sanction of the existing scale of pay in June 1920 the Director-General of Posts and Telegraphs recommended to the Government of India a further substantial revision of the scale of pay of Superintendents of Post Offices. In September 1920 the Honourable Sir George Barnes, Member-in-charge, Commerce, received a deputation of the Postal Officers' Association and when the deputation pointed out to the Honourable Member the inadequacy of the scale of pay sanctioned for Superintendents of Post Offices and mentioned the grounds on which an improved scale had been asked for, he admitted the force of the arguments and the words that fell from him clearly indicated that he considered that Superintendents of Post Offices were entitled to at least the time-scale of pay sanctioned for Provincial Civil Service Officers. On that basis the Honourable Member even discussed with the deputation the amounts of annual increment that would be suitable and acceptable to Superintendents. My Committee also begs to bring to the notice of Your Excellency another significant fact bearing on this subject, viz., that in the Budget Estimates for 1921-22 passed by the Legislative Assembly a sum of Rs. 75,000 was earmarked for improving the scale of pay of Superintendents of Post Offices. Although this amount would not have brought about any substantial improvement, it is obvious that when the Budget Estimates were framed Government did not consider the requests of Superintendents of Post Offices for an increase of pay to be unreasonable and did intend to sanction a further increase.

9. The letter addressed by this Association to the Government of India in October 1920, contained three requests, the second of which was a prayer to allow service passed by Superintendents of Post Offices as officiating Superintendents and as Probationary Superintendents to count for increments in the time-scale. The Government of India seem to have arrived at no decision on this request, and it is not known whether this point was considered or was overlooked. This point could have been decided independently of the question of revision of pay, it being only a formal recognition of a principle which, my Committee understands, has been observed in other services and has recently been followed in fixing the rate of pay of Postmasters-General (see paragraph 3 of Commerce Department Resolution No. 853-S, dated the 30th May 1921). My Committee, therefore, requests that pending final decision of the question of pay of Superintendents of Post Offices, the request referred to above may be complied with. This benefit, however, slight, will help a little to mitigate the hardship caused by the rise in the cost of living.

10. My Committee begs to submit for the consideration of Your Excellency that had the requests of Superintendents of Post Offices for increase of pay been so unreasonable as they are represented to be in Mr. Ewbank's letter, then surely they would not have been recommended by the Director-General of Posts and Telegraphs or received the approval of the head of the administrative department of the Government of India concerned, viz., the Honourable Sir George Barnes, Member, Commerce, nor would any provision have been made by the Finance Department in the Budget Estimates. The decision of the Government of India now communicated to the Director-General of Posts and Telegraphs is therefore as unexpected as it is unjustified.

11. Superintendents of Post Offices consider themselves to be specially unfortunate because they find that after waiting for a long time and working silently and loyally under difficult economic conditions, their reasonable and moderate representations made to His Excellency Lord Chelmsford have been almost rejected on. What appears to be, very superficial consideration although they received the support of the Director General of Posts and Telegraphs and the approval of the Honourable Member, Commerce and of the Finance Department. Superintendents of Post Offices have all along faithfully carried out their exacting duties some of which are set forth in paragraphs 5 to 7 of the memorial submitted by them in July last. They have always taken an affectionate and active interest in the improvement of the Department and are proud of the excellence of the organisation to which they have contributed to the best of their powers and my Committee can assure Your Excellency that they are eager to continue in their devoted service to the Department in this troublous time. Owing, however, the manner in which their prayers are being rejected, a feeling of dissatisfaction is bound to and has arisen in the service and however much they may strive against it, this feeling is sure to react unconsciously on their work and will impair the efficiency of the Department.

12. My Lord, on behalf of Superintendents of Post Offices, the Committee of the Postal Officers' Association, India, respectfully approaches your Excellency who as is known throughout the length and breadth of India has come to this country to dispense equity and justice, with the humble request that Your Excellency will be graciously pleased to:

- (1) sanction the following time scale of pay for Superintendents, with effect from the 30th August 1919, viz., Rs. 350—30—560—40—1,000,
- (2) take early steps for obtaining (if necessary, by telegram) the sanction of the Right Honourable the Secretary of State for India to the introduction of the above scale of pay, and
- (3) allow service passed by Superintendents of Post Offices as officiating Superintendents and as probationary Superintendents to count for increments in the time scale.

I have the honour to be,

MY LORD,

Your Excellency's most obedient and humble servant,

(Sd.)

Honorary Secretary.

No. 2542-E. S., dated Simla, the 16th September, 1920.

From—The Honourable Mr. H. N. HUTCHINSON, O.B.E., I.C.S., Director General of Posts and Telegraphs,

To—The Secretary to the Government of India, Department of Commerce, Simla.

With reference to the correspondence ending with Mr. Ewbank's letter No. 1715, dated the 3rd May 1920, I have the honour to forward for the favourable consideration of Government 144 more memorials received from the Superintendents of Post Offices and 19 new memorials received from the Assistant Director General and Deputy Postmaster-General for an increased rate of pay. As the scale of pay granted to either class will necessarily bear a close relation to that granted to the other it will be convenient if the two sets of memorials are dealt with in the same letter.

2. The question of the pay of Superintendents of Post Offices was dealt with by the Public Services Commission in paragraph 17, annexure XVII of the report and Mr. Clarke's recommendations on the subject were placed before Government with his letter No. 132-s-Con., dated the 28th August 1918. In the statement accompanying that letter he emphasised the necessity for annual increments of pay for Superintendents of Post Offices instead of the triennial increments recommended by the Commission for the earlier stages of the service. In his note to Government dated the 17th January 1919, Mr. Clarke emphasised the necessity for such a scale, but to avoid delay in obtaining sanction to a revision he agreed to the Deputy Secretary's suggestion to support the recommendations of the Public Services Commission as made as he felt that the need for a revision of the pay of Superintendents was a crying necessity and that they had been fed too long on promises.

3. In February this year when the Superintendents found that no revision of their pay had been effected, while the pay of other services had been materially improved, they submitted a memorial addressed to the Secretary of State with whom their case was then pending. In submitting these memorials with his letter No. 9s-Ap., dated the 26th March 1920, Mr. Clarke proposed a scale of Rs. 300—20—500—25—750 in consideration of the fact that the conditions of life had materially altered since the scale of Rs. 250—700 had been recommended by the Public Services Commission and supported by him. Before this recommendation could be adequately considered by Government, the orders of the Secretary of State sanctioning a revised scale of pay were received and it was not thought necessary to take any further action on their memorials. I am not aware on what ground the Secretary of State based his decision, but presumably an alteration in the rate of increment was made by him on grounds similar to those which were urged in August 1918 against a complicated system of triennial and annual increments coupled together in one scale. The maximum and the minimum pay, however, is not more than that recommended by the Public Services Commission on their investigation in 1913-14, when conditions of living were entirely different, and the decision of the Secretary of State has naturally occasioned profound disappointment among Superintendents of Post Offices.

4. At the time when Mr. Clarke made his recommendations, he was unaware of the scales of pay proposed for other services similarly placed, such as the Provincial Civil Services, but in the body of the report, in his letter to Government No. 132-s-Con. of the 28th August 1918 and in subsequent unofficial correspondence he gave it as his considered opinion that the work of a Postal Superintendent is more important than that of a Deputy Collector and that the former were very inadequately paid for the important work they have to perform, and that an improvement in their pay was a necessity.

5. Much time has elapsed since the Public Services Commission made their investigation in 1913-14, and even since August 1918 conditions have radically changed. A scale of pay which may have been adequate in 1914 or 1918 is certainly not adequate now, and this is proved beyond a doubt by the fact that rates of pay higher than those recommended by the Public Services Commission have recently been sanctioned for the Provincial Civil and kindred services. It is not surprising therefore that Superintendents of Post Offices are deeply dissatisfied and that they have memorialised His Excellency the Viceroy.

6. It may be asked whether a comparison of the pay and status of Superintendents of Post Offices with the Provincial Civil Services has any justification. Originally in some provinces Superintendents of Post Offices were selected from among the candidates who sat for the Provincial Civil Service Examinations, and from my experience of both district work and of this Department I can unhesitatingly say that the work of a Superintendent of Post Offices is more responsible. In practice the two services have always been treated, officially, and socially, as on the same footing; and in paragraphs 5-8 of their present memorial the Superintendents have correctly stated the nature of their duties and their claims to rank as the equals of the Provincial Civil Services.

7. The memorialists have asked for the following scale, viz., 300—30—600—40—1,000. The scales sanctioned for Provincial Civil Services in the various provinces are as follows:

	Rs.
Madras ...	250—850 in 15 years.	} With selection grade of pay varying from Rs. 1,000 to Rs. 1,200.
Bombay ...	300—850 in 22 "
Bengal ...	250—850 in 25 "
United Provinces ...	250—850 in 22 "
Burma ...	250—850 in 25 "
Bihar and Orissa ...	250—850 in 25 "
Assam ...	250—850 in 25 "
Punjab ...	300—850 in 15 "

The initial pay in the Provincial Civil Service (except in Bombay and the Punjab) is Rs. 250, but the first two years are probationary and serious service only begins in the third year on Rs. 300. This initial pay of Rs. 300 asked for by the memorialists is therefore in consonance with this scale, since the pay of Probationary Superintendents has been fixed at Rs. 200 and I do not propose any alteration in it. This initial pay of Rs. 300 was what Mr. Clarke recommended in his letter of the 26th March 1920 and no change has occurred in the interval to justify any reduction in that figure. There are indeed strong reasons to the contrary. Among the recommendations of the Postal Enquiry Committee is a subordinate grade of Rs. 250—350 which will consist entirely of men under the control of the Superintending officer to draw less pay than those he is expected to control. To fix the initial pay of Superintendents, therefore, at any lower figure than Rs. 300 would, from this point of view be most unsuitable. It will be equally unsuitable from the point of view of recruitment, since the best men will obviously enter services with the higher initial pay, and though the number of candidates seeking entry into the post office may not perhaps decline, there would certainly be a deterioration in quality.

Furthermore, as pointed out in paragraph 12 of the memorial the present initial pay of Rs. 250 does not represent any advance on the actual initial salary drawn under the graded scale, because, owing to leave and other vacancies in the higher grades, all Superintendents in the lowest grade actually never drew less than Rs. 250.

As regards the maximum I do not think it necessary to go beyond that fixed for the Provincial Civil Service in the various provinces, viz., Rs. 850, but I certainly think that no lower figure should be fixed. In Mr. Clarke's letter of 26th March 1920 quoted above he recommended Rs. 750 as the maximum pay on the ground that the lowest pay of Deputy Postmaster General was Rs. 800. On the receipt of their memorial he was prepared to recommend a maximum of Rs. 800, but I am strongly of opinion that Rs. 850 should be agreed to.

There remains the question of the number of years in which the maximum should be reached. This varies in the different provinces from 15 to 22 and 25. For a service such as that under consideration a period of 22 or 25 years is too long. It must be remembered that a Superintendent serves at least 2 years as a probationer before he is admitted to the time-scale. It is estimated that Superintendents will for some years to come be taken into the selected grades of Assistant Directors-General and Deputy Postmasters-General after about 17 or 18 years as permanent Superintendent and it would be advisable to fix the period of attaining the maximum at not more than 20 years.

Moreover, a large proportion of Superintendents are men promoted from the ranks, who on entering the Superintendent's cadre have already served for 10 years or more in the subordinate grades as Inspectors and clerks. If the progression is fixed at 25 or 22 years such men would have to serve for 35 or 32 years in order to reach their maximum pay and qualify for a pension of Rs. 425. I recommend that the maximum should be attained in 20 years and that the scale should be:

Rs. 300—25—550—30—850.

8. The following is a comparison of the total monthly cost of and the average pay provided by, the existing scale and my present proposal:

	Monthly cost.	Average pay.
	Rs.	Rs.
Existing scale ...	84,863	461
Revised proposal ...	1,03,212	564
Increase ...	18,849	103

The annual increase would be Rs. 2,26,188.

9. In the event of my proposal being sanctioned existing incumbents would be brought on to the new scale in the same way as they have been brought on to the existing scale, and with effect from the same date, viz., 1st December 1919.

This disposes also of prayers (ii) and (iii) of the memorialists.

10. I now turn to the consideration of the memorials of the Assistant Directors-General and Deputy Postmasters General. The outstanding fact about the scale of remuneration of these officers is that it has not been altered since it was fixed in 1905. The present grades are:

Assistant Directors-General.	Deputy Postmasters-General.	Pay.
		Rs.
2	7	800
2	4	1,000
1	2	1,200—40—1,400

The memorialists ask for a time-scale of pay rising from Rs. 1,200 to Rs. 1,600 in 5 years. Under present conditions the average rate of progress from the lowest grade on Rs. 800 to the bottom of the highest on Rs. 1,200—40—1,400 is 5 years.

11. The pay of these officers was fixed in 1905 and 1906 over 14 years ago, and no increase was recommended by the Public Services Commission for the reasons given at page 321 of their report (paragraph 16). The first reason given by the Commission that the pay of these officers has been under revision in recent years was hardly correct. In the second place, the scale of pay sanctioned for the Superior Traffic Branch of the Telegraph Department is not connected with that of Deputy Postmasters-General, and Assistant Directors-General; and, in the third place, the findings of the Public Services Commission, arrived at before the war, naturally did not take into account the abnormal rise in the cost of living which have occurred during the last five years. The fact that the Public Services Commission made no recommendation should therefore not bar consideration of the present memorials.

12. As the memorialists point in paragraph 6 of their memorial, the pay of the class of officers immediately above them, namely, the Postmaster-General and that of the class of officers immediately below them, namely, the Superintendents of Post Offices, have been raised, in both cases apparently, on account of the increased cost of living. The claim of the memorialists that they also should receive some consideration on this account is perfectly reasonable.

13. In the preceding paragraphs I have, I hope, established the necessity for fixing the maximum pay of Superintendents at Rs. 850 and I would recommend that the minimum pay of Assistant Directors-General and Deputy Postmasters-General should be Rs. 1,000. This will make the difference between the maximum pay of Superintendents and the lowest pay of Assistant Directors-General and Deputy Postmasters-General Rs. 150 which is not too great. The scale I propose is :

Rs. 1,000—50—1,500.

This scale contemplates a period of 10 years in which to reach the maximum. As regards the maximum pay the lowest pay of a Postmaster-General is Rs. 1,750, and if the maximum pay of Assistant Directors-General and Deputy Postmasters-General is fixed at Rs. 1,500 there will remain a suitable interval between the two grades of officers.

14. The following is a comparison of the total monthly cost of and the average pay provided by the existing scale and my present proposal:

	Monthly cost.	Average pay.
	Rs.	Rs.
Existing scale	17,200	955
Revised proposal	23,508	1,306
Increase	6,308	351

The annual increase should be Rs. 75,696.

15. In the event of my proposal being sanctioned I would recommend that the concession which has been accorded to all other services should be granted to these officers also and that existing incumbents should be permitted to draw the revised scales of pay with effect from the 1st December 1919.

DAILY ALLOWANCE OF SUPERINTENDENTS OF POST OFFICES.

301. Babu B. P. Singh : (a) Will the Government mention the rate of daily allowance sanctioned for Superintendents of Post Offices when this service was first organised in the year 1871, and also the rate in force in 1885?

(b) Is not the rate of daily allowance intended to cover the expenses of an officer halting at a place?

(c) Have the rates in force in 1871 and 1885 been raised owing to the increase which has since taken place in the cost of living?

(d) What are the rates of daily allowance now in force for Superintendents of Post Offices in the different provinces in India?

(e) Will the Government of India consider the advisability of issuing immediate orders for raising the rates of daily allowance in provinces where it has remained practically stationary since 1871 or 1885?

Colonel Sir S. D'A. Crookshank : (a) In 1871, the rates of daily allowance for Superintendents of Post Offices and Superintendents of the Railway Mail Service were Rs. 4 and Rs. 5, respectively. In 1885, the rate was fixed at Rs. 4 for both classes of Superintendents.

(b) A reference is invited to Article 1052 of the Civil Service Regulations.

(c) The reply is in the negative, but the question of raising the rate of Rs. 4 is under the consideration of the Director-General of Posts and Telegraphs.

(d) The rates of daily allowance drawn by these officers are generally :

Rs. 4 in Bengal, Bihar and Orissa, Madras, Rajputana, Central India, Central Provinces and United Provinces.

Rs. 6 in Burma, Assam, Bombay and Baluchistan.

Rs. 7-8 in the Punjab.

Superintendents of the Railway Mail Service, including Personal Assistants to the Deputy Postmasters-General, Railway Mail Service, who are not attached to any particular railways or lines, draw daily allowance at Rs. 8 for journeys on tour in the Bombay Presidency and the Punjab. The Superintendent of the Indus Right Bank and Persian Gulf Division draws the allowance at Rs. 9 while on tour in the Persian Gulf and at Rs. 6 while on tour in other places.

There are some special localities in various provinces where enhanced rates of daily allowance are allowed, the maximum increase over the ordinary rate of Rs. 4 being 100 per cent.

(e) The Honourable Member may rest assured that the Government of India will give any recommendation in this matter that may be made by the Director-General, their very early attention.

DUTIES OF SUPERINTENDENTS OF POST OFFICES.

302. Babu B. P. Singh : (a) Is the Government aware that after the amalgamation of Posts with Telegraphs a good deal of extra work has been thrown upon the Superintendents of Post Offices and that they are required to inspect about 75 per cent. of the Combined Offices for which special training is now compulsory but no allowance of any kind is given to them?

(b) If the reply is in the affirmative, does the Government propose either to fix some allowance for the Telegraph work or to relieve the Superintendents of Post Offices of the extra work and of the technical training?

Colonel Sir S. D'A. Crookshank : (a) The inspection of combined Post and Telegraph offices by Superintendents of Post Offices is not a consequence of the amalgamation of Posts and Telegraphs. They were required to do this work before, and to enable them to perform it efficiently, a short training in telegraphy was made compulsory. With the amalgamation, there has not been any material change in this respect, and they have been relieved of part of their purely postal inspection. No special allowance is given for this work, as it forms part of their ordinary duties.

(b) This part of the question does not arise.

SERVICE OF PROBATIONARY SUPERINTENDENTS OF POST OFFICES.

303. Babu B. P. Singh : (a) Does the service of a Probationary Superintendent of Post Offices count towards leave and pension ?

(b) Is it a fact that the service of a Probationary Superintendent of Post Offices has been totally ignored for increments under the time-scale of pay ?

(c) If the answers to (a) and (b) are in the affirmative, will the Government state the reasons for the two different principles in the above cases ?

(d) Is the Government aware that the period passed under probation in other services has been allowed to count for increments ?

(e) Are Probationary Superintendents in the Post Office appointed substantively and, if so, will not the Government consider the question of allowing them increments under the time-scale from the date of their appointment ? If not, why not ?

Colonel Sir S. D'A. Crookshank : (a) and (b). The answer is in the affirmative.

(c) Probationary Superintendents of Post Offices are not Superintendents on probation, they form a separate class. They have no claim to a Superintendent's appointment until they have passed the departmental examination and they have no claim to earn increments until they are actually appointed to permanent vacancies in the regular cadre of Superintendents. Probationary Superintendents after their entertainment have to undergo a year's training in the practical work of the Department and then usually officiate as Superintendents for a year or more before being confirmed. The question of counting this period towards increments on the time-scale is under consideration.

(d) Yes, but as already explained, a Probationary Superintendent is not an officer on probation in the same sense as in the other Departments.

(e) Probationary Superintendents really hold substantive appointments in a lower grade and Government do not think it necessary to allow the period of Probationary Superintendentship to count for service on the Superintendents time-scale, for the reasons given in part (c).

PROBATIONARY POST MASTERS AND INSPECTORS OF POST OFFICES.

304. Babu B. P. Singh : (a) Will the Government lay on the table a statement showing :

(1) The number of (i) Probationary Postmasters, (ii) Probationary Inspectors of Post Offices in July 1921 ?

(2) Total number of appointments made under each class from 1905 with details of nationality ?

(b) Will the Government state the reasons why suitable Indians were not proportionately appointed to the above two posts ?

(c) Does not the Government of India consider it necessary that the claims of Indians for such appointments are fairly dealt with and that while recruitment is made no preferential principles are observed by the authority making the appointment ?

(d) Will the Government issue orders to the effect that only Indians should henceforth be appointed to the above two posts till the time that the proportion is equalised ?

Colonel Sir S. D'A. Crookshank : (a) (1) and (2). A statement is laid on the table. There are no Probationary Inspectors of Post Offices, as Inspectors are recruited from among the clerks.

(b) Out of 34 persons appointed as Probationary Postmasters 11 were Indians and 23 Non-Indians. Of the Non-Indians, 7 have resigned. Competent domiciled Europeans are required for employment in cantonment offices or as Deputy or Assistant Postmasters in large industrial and commercial centres.

(c) Yes. The only principles observed are the interests of the service.

(d) No such orders are required. The appointments are being abolished in accordance with the recommendations of the Postal Committee, 1920.

COUNCIL MEMBERS AND THE ARMS ACT.

305. Mr. M. K. Reddi Garu : (a) Has the attention of the Government been drawn to a Resolution that was passed in the Madras Legislative Council on the 4th August 1921, regarding exemption of the Members from the restrictions and limitations imposed by the Arms Act?

(b) Will the Government be pleased to state if they are aware that a similar Resolution was passed by the United Provinces Legislative Council?

(c) Will the Government be pleased to consider the desirability of exempting all Members of Provincial Councils from the prohibitions and restrictions imposed by the Arms Act and the Arms Rules?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : (a) No.

(b) Government understand that such a Resolution was passed, but it has not been formally brought to their notice.

(c) Local Governments have been consulted on the subject, and a decision will be taken when their replies have been received.

MARTIAL LAW PRISONERS.

306. Rai Bahadur Pandit J. L. Bhargava : (a) Will the Government be pleased to state for the information of this Assembly and the public, if His Excellency the Viceroy has been pleased to pass any orders in the cases of Martial Law prisoners?

(b) If the reply is in the affirmative, will the Government be pleased to inform this Assembly what those orders are?

(c) If the reply is in the negative, will the Government be pleased to state if any orders may be expected and, if so, when?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : (a) The reply is in the negative.

(b) Does not therefore arise.

(c) His Excellency hopes to be able to announce his decision shortly, but the Honourable Member will understand that the papers connected with these cases are so voluminous that their examination involves a great expenditure of time.

TREATMENT OF UNDERTRIAL AND CONVICTED POLITICAL PRISONERS.

307. Rai Bahadur Pandit J. L. Bhargava : Are the Government aware of the serious complaints appearing from time to time in papers, about the treatment meted out in the lock-up and the jail to undertrial and convicted political prisoners? Do the Government propose to consider the desirability of issuing clear and definite instructions not to treat such prisoners as ordinary offenders and criminals, and directing that their position and status in life be taken into consideration in making residential and dietary arrangements for them?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : The Honourable Member's attention is invited to paragraph 132 of the report of the Indian Jails Commission. Government accept the view there stated. Recommendations, however, are made in paragraphs 130-131 of the same report which go a long way towards meeting the point raised by the Honourable Member. We have consulted Local Governments on these proposals.

CANAL SCHEMES FOR THE SOUTH EASTERN DISTRICTS OF THE PUNJAB.

308. Rai Bahadur Pandit J. L. Bhargava : (a) Will the Government be pleased to state how far the great canal schemes for the benefit of the South Eastern Districts of the Punjab including Hissar and Rohtak Districts referred to by His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor in his speech delivered at the Durbar held at Hissar on 24th January 1919, published in the Punjab Government Gazette, dated 20th June 1919, on page 425 of Part I have progressed?

(b) What are those schemes?

(c) By what time is it likely that operations to give effect to the projected schemes will begin and how much time will be required to complete them?

Colonel Sir S. D'A. Crookshank : The project referred to by the Honourable Member is, it is understood, under the consideration of the Government of the Punjab. It has not yet been submitted to the Government of India, who have no information in regard to the points mentioned in the question.

BROAD GAUGE CONNECTION BETWEEN BHEWANI AND DELHI.

309. Rai Bahadur Pandit J. L. Bhargava : Will the Government be pleased to state if there is any proposal of direct broad gauge connection between Bhowani or Hansi and Delhi through Rohtak?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn : A project for the construction of a broad gauge line connecting Bhowani with Rohtak has been under the consideration of the Government of India, but no decision has yet been arrived at.

ARTICLE IN THE 'TRIBUNE' ON 'SECTION 15 OF THE TELEGRAPH GUIDE.'

310. Rai Bahadur Pandit J. L. Bhargava : (a) Has the attention of the Government been drawn to an article headed 'Section 15 of the Telegraph Guide' which appeared in the Tribune of Lahore in its issue of 6th August 1921, column 4?

(b) If so, will the Government be pleased to consider the advisability of issuing proper instructions in the matter with a view to prevent the abuse of Section 15 of the Telegraph Guide in future?

Colonel Sir S. D'A. Crookshank : (a) The attention of Government has been drawn to the article referred to and the facts of the case are correctly stated in that article.

The delivery of the message at Peshawar was stopped by an order of the Chief Commissioner of the North-West Frontier who was competent to issue it.

(b) Government do not consider that the course suggested is either necessary or advisable.

NICKEL RUPEE.

311. Rai Bahadur Pandit J. L. Bhargava : (a) Is it a fact that the Government contemplates the issue of a Rupee coin made of nickel?

(b) If so, do the Government propose not only to consider the advisability of abandoning such a proposal but also of restoring the old silver coinage of coins of smaller denomination?

The Honourable Mr. W. M. Hailey: (a) No.

(b) Government has no intention of reverting to silver in the case of coins of smaller denominations.

PRICES OF WHEAT AND GRAM.

312. Rai Bahadur Pandit J. L. Bhargava: Do the Government propose to take such effective measures as would prevent any further rise in the prices of wheat and gram throughout India and bring down the high rates now prevailing?

Mr. J. Hullah: The attention of the Honourable Member is invited to this Government's communiques of the 2nd and 16th September.

Government are already controlling strictly the export of the principal food grains. They are purchasing their own military requirements of wheat in Australia and their efforts to encourage the private import of Australian wheat are, they believe, already achieving success. They have exported Local Governments to assist in the opening of cheap grain shops. They are anxiously considering the subject, but no further measures seem to be practicable.

THEFTS FROM PARCELS ON RAILWAYS.

313. Rai Bahadur Pandit J. L. Bhargava: (a) Are the Government aware of frequent complaints about thefts from parcels especially of fresh fruits and other edibles, and luggage while in transit on railways?

(b) Do the Government propose to consider the desirability of enforcing more stringent control on the Railway staff by resorting to more frequent criminal prosecutions or severer departmental punishments to stop the evil?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: The remedy for the evils mentioned is one of the subjects dealt with by the Railway Police Committee whose recommendations as embodied in their Report are being taken up with railways.

EXTERNEES FROM CANTONMENTS.

314. Rai Bahadur Pandit J. L. Bhargava: Will the Government be pleased to give a detailed statement of all the externees from the different cantonments throughout India during the last 3 years with causes and the period of their externment?

Sir Godfrey Fell: I would invite the attention of the Honourable Member to the reply just given to the question asked by Lala Girdharilal Agarwala, No. 242.

If the Honourable Member so desires, I will furnish him also with a copy of the list referred to in that reply.

MALE CALVES IN GOVERNMENT DAIRY FARMS.

315. Rai Bahadur Pandit J. L. Bhargava: (a) Is it a fact that male calves born in Government Dairy Farms are sold at a very young age?

(b) What is the total number of male calves born in the Government Military Dairy Farms throughout India during the last 2 years?

(c) How many of them were sold at an age of three months or less and what is the income derived from such sales?

Sir Godfrey Fell: (a) With regard to the Government dairy farms under civil control, the answer is that male stock are not sold as calves. The usual age for selling surplus male stock is from 1½ years to 2 years. As regards military dairy farms, I would refer the Honourable Member to part (a) of the reply which I have just given to the question asked by Dr. Nand Lal, No. 294.

(c) 1,119. The income from the sale of these calves is reported to be negligible.

INTEREST ON POSTAL SAVINGS BANK DEPOSITS.

316. Mr. A. B. Latthe: Will the Government state if it is intended to increase the rate of interest paid on Postal Savings Bank deposits?

The Honourable Mr. W. M. Hailey: In reply to a similar question by Mr. Garu last Session, I said that the matter was under consideration, but that, so far as we had considered it, opinions differed as to whether an increase in the rate of interest would have any substantial effect in increasing the amount of Savings Bank deposits. Further consideration confirmed the opinion that an increase in the rate of interest would not be likely to lead to any increase in the deposits commensurate with the extra expenditure involved, and that was the only ground upon which, in the present financial position of the country, we felt that any increase in the rate of interest could be justified.

PUBLICATION IN HINDI OF PROCEEDINGS OF THE INDIAN LEGISLATURE.

317. Mr. A. B. Latthe: Does the Government propose to consider the question of publishing the reports of proceedings in the Indian Legislature in easy Hindi?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: Government do not, as at present advised, propose to take the action suggested, but reports of important questions and debates are published in the vernacular papers.

EXTENSION OF THE INDIAN COMPANIES ACT OF 1913 TO SECUNDERABAD.

318. Mir Asad Ali Khan Bahadur: With reference to the answer to my Question No. 110 regarding the extension of the Indian Companies Act of 1913 to Secunderabad (Deccan), to the effect that the question was under consideration, have the Government since taken any action in the matter?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent (on behalf of the Honourable Sir John Wood): The Resident at Hyderabad, after consulting local opinion, both legal and commercial, advised the Government of India that the application of the Companies Act, 1913, to Secunderabad Cantonment was not desirable. The Act cannot be administered efficiently except by highly trained judicial officers assisted by a bar of wide experience, and it is not always possible to count on the presence of these two essential factors at Secunderabad. The Resident reported that only one case had been brought to his notice in which inconvenience had been experienced by reason of the Act not being in force in the administered areas in the Hyderabad State.

For these reasons, the Government of India decided that it was unnecessary to apply the Act to Secunderabad Cantonment.

TERRITORIAL FORCES IN INDIA.

310. Mir Asad Ali Khan Bahadur: Will Government be pleased (a) to state: (i) the number as well as the strength of territorial forces in India, and (ii) the proportion of Hindus, Musalmans and Christians in each unit; and (b) to lay on the table a statement, showing (i) the number of Indian officers as well as men employed in each division of the Indian Army, and (ii) the proportion of Hindus, Musalmans and Christians in each unit?

Sir Godfrey Fell: (a) (i) and (ii). The formation of the following units has been sanctioned:

University Training Corps.

- 1st (Bombay) Battalion.
- 2nd (Calcutta) Battalion.
- 3rd (Allahabad) Battalion.
- 4th (Lahore) Company.
- 5th (Madras) Company.
- 6th (Burma) Battalion.

Indian Territorial Force Infantry.

One Territorial Battalion for each of the following provinces:

United Provinces, Madras, Bengal, Bombay and Burma and two Territorial Battalions for the Punjab.

Enrolment has not yet begun. For the University Corps, it will be begun immediately, and for the other units, as soon as enrolling officers have been appointed. It is not possible, therefore, to give the numbers or the proportions asked for.

(b) (i). A statement is laid on the table showing the total number of Indian officers and men in the Indian Army. It is hoped that this information will serve the Honourable Member's purpose.

(ii) The compilation of this statement would involve an amount of labour which, in the opinion of the Government of India, would not be commensurate with the result obtained. I will furnish the Honourable Member, if he so desires, with a statement showing the various classes of which each unit of the Indian Army is composed.

Statement showing the number of Indian officers and other ranks, in the Indian Army.

RAW COTTON.

320. Mir Asad Ali Khan Bahadur: Will Government be pleased to furnish a statement for each of the last five years, showing (a) the quantity as well as the value of raw cotton of all sorts (i) produced in India, and (ii) imported from (1) the United Kingdom and (2) other foreign countries, and (b) the quantity as well as the value of the manufactured cotton goods (i) exported from India and (ii) imported into India from (1) the United Kingdom and (2) other foreign countries?

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: The Honourable Member will find information regarding imports and exports of the commodities he mentions in the 'Annual Statement of the Sea-borne trade of British India with the British Empire and Foreign Countries' published by the Department of Statistics. Statistics of the production of cotton in India are published annually in the 'Estimates of area and yield of principal Crops in India,' but information regarding its value is not available.

These publications are available in the Library.

LABOUR BUREAU AND THE LABOUR SITUATION.

321. Mir Asad Ali Khan Bahadur: (a) Will Government be pleased to state whether the Labour Bureau of the Central Government has been able to collect information from provincial agencies as regards the real causes of labour strikes all over India, and the present labour situation, particularly with reference to wages, prices and cost of living?

(b) If so, do Government propose to issue shortly a Resolution on the subject with a clear enunciation of the Government policy in the matter?

Mr. A. C. Chatterjee: Government have at present no legal authority to call for information on the subject of labour strikes from owners or occupiers of factories, but the Labour Bureau has commenced collecting information since the beginning of this year. The information collected cannot be guaranteed to be either full or accurate. A summary of the information obtained is published every quarter in the Journal of Indian Industries and Labour, copies of which have been supplied to Members of the Legislature. The Government of Bengal have also published a record of strikes that took place in that presidency during the second half of 1920 in the Supplement to the Calcutta Gazette of the 22nd June 1921, a copy of which would be found in the Library. The Government of India are at present consulting Local Governments regarding an inquiry into the cost of living in different provinces. They are also in consultation with Local Governments and employers of labour regarding a census of wages in the larger organised industries in the country. I shall be glad to show the papers to the Honourable Member. It is not proposed at present to issue any Resolution on this subject. I may remind the Honourable Member that the settlement of labour disputes is a provincial subject.

LABOUR STRIKES.

322. Mir Asad Ali Khan Bahadur: Will the Government be pleased to lay on the table a statement, province by province, for each of the last three years and for the current half year, showing (a) the number of labour strikes, (b) the duration each lasted, (c) the nature of the settlements arrived at in each case, (d) the extent of the loss both to the employers and the employed, and (e) the number of men involved in each strike?

Mr. A. C. Chatterjee: As stated in my answer to the last question the information that has already been collected has been published in the Journal of Indian Industries and Labour and as a Supplement to the Calcutta Gazette. It is not possible now to collect information of this nature for the last 3 years which will be of trustworthy value. As I have already explained, there is difficulty in collecting information even for the current year, but I shall be glad to show the Honourable Member the detailed information which has been obtained so far by the Labour Bureau.

MUHAMMADANS IN INDIAN PUBLIC SERVICES.

323. Mir Asad Ali Khan Bahadur: With reference to the answer to my Question No. 309 (during the last Session) regarding the employment of Muhammadans in Indian Public Services, will Government be pleased to state whether the required information has been collected, and, if so, whether a statement of the same will be laid on the table?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: The information has not been collected as the difficulty in obtaining it was pointed out to the Honourable Member, and it was understood he did not press for it. If he still wishes it to be collected I will take steps to obtain it though I must point out that this information is available in public documents, and will involve considerable labour in collecting—labour which, I may say, is in our opinion out of all proportion to its utility.

TELEPHONE SERVICE.

324. Mir Asad Ali Khan Bahadur: Do Government propose to consider the desirability of throwing open the telephone service to the general public at each post office in each provincial Capital and at other important stations, wherever practicable, at a cheap rate for each call?

Colonel Sir S. D'A. Crookshank: Public call offices are already in existence at the places enumerated in the list which is placed on the table where there are telephone systems operated by Government.

The desirability of opening more public call offices in places where the telephone services is operated by Government is fully recognised but cannot be considered at present owing to the want of funds.

In Calcutta, Bombay, Madras, Karachi, Ahmedabad, Rangoon and Moulmein, there are telephone services managed by Companies and the establishment of call offices in connection with their systems is a matter for them to consider. The suggestion will, however, be brought to the notice of the Companies concerned.

With regard to call rates, the existing charge is 2 annas for a call not exceeding 3 minutes in duration, a reduction from 4 to 2 annas having been made in 1907. In considering rates it must be borne in mind that the expense of providing and maintaining a public call office is necessarily much greater than that of an ordinary subscribers' circuit. The initial cost is higher owing to the provision of a room or cabinet, repairs are heavier owing to rough handling, operating charges are excessive owing to the necessity for collecting fees and accounting for them, and in certain cases, payment of call office attendants involves additional charges which are not incurred in maintaining an ordinary line.

In England, the call office fee is three pence for local calls. It is quite likely that in India the fee will require to be increased.

AREA OF POPPY CULTIVATION AND PRODUCTION OF OPIUM.

325. Mir Asad Ali Khan Bahadur: Will Government be pleased to lay on the table a statement for each of the last five years, showing (a) the area of poppy cultivation, private owned, and Government owned, in different provinces, (b) the quantity of production and consumption in India; and (c) the quantity as well as the value of opium exported from India?

The Honourable Mr. W. M. Hailey: The information is contained in the statement which I lay on the table. It will of course be seen that the figures do not include opium grown in Native States.

SUGAR FACTORIES AND OUTPUT.

326. Mir Asad Ali Khan Bahadur: (a) Will Government be pleased to state whether the Sugar Bureau of the Central Government has been able to collect necessary information from foreign countries and Indian provinces as regards the number of the Sugar Factories working and the output of each factory, the quantity as well as the value of sugar imported into India from foreign countries as well as exports to foreign countries, and fluctuation of prices? (b) If so, do they propose to issue a supplement on the subject with the Government of India Gazette?

Mr. J. Hullah: Sir, may I lay this on the table:

The Secretary, Sugar Bureau, receives information of the number of sugar factories working in every important sugar-producing country in the world. He also receives information of the total amount of sugar made in each country by these factories, but does not receive information as to the separate output of each factory. All such information received is published in the Indian Trade Journal. The number of factories working in India and their total output of sugar and molasses was published by the Secretary, Sugar Bureau, in the issue of the Indian Trade Journal dated the 28th July 1921.

An article regarding the quantity and value of sugar imported into India, exports to foreign countries and fluctuation of prices has been issued as a Supplement to the Indian Trade Journal of the 25th August 1921, as this is considered to be a much better medium of communication to persons interested than the Gazette of India. I may add further that the Sugar Bureau, in response to the requests of numerous sugar firms, has been regularly publishing from March last notes in the Indian Trade Journal dealing with sugar crops conditions, consumption and stocks in all the sugar countries in the world.

As the present method of obtaining information by letter and from published periodicals makes such information very much out of date by the time it reaches India, the Secretary, Sugar Bureau, is now working out a scheme for securing telegraphic information regarding sugar crops and prices regularly from all important sugar producing countries and selling centres and a note drawn up in consultation with prominent sugar firms and the Director-General of Commercial Intelligence is now being submitted to the Government of India through the Agricultural Adviser.

ARMS ACT AND THE UNITED PROVINCES.

327. Makhdum Sayad Rajan Baksh Shah: (a) Is it a fact that the United Provinces of Agra and Oudh are exempted from the prohibitions and restrictions imposed by the Arms Act and Rules so far as the keeping of swords is concerned?

(b) If so, why have other Provinces in India not been granted a similar concession and why has the Punjab been deprived of it?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: Swords are excluded from the operation of the prohibitions and directions contained in the Indian Arms Act throughout British India, except the Punjab, Burma, the North-West Frontier Province and Delhi, but this exclusion is subject to the proviso that a Local Government may retain all or any of these prohibitions and directions in the case of any class of persons or of any specified area.

The Punjab was excluded on the recommendation of the Committee of official and non-official Members of the Indian Legislative Council appointed in 1918 to consider the amendment of the Arms Act and Rules. This Committee considered that swords should not be excluded in the case of the Punjab and their recommendation was accepted.

INCOME FROM THIRD CLASS RAILWAY TRAFFIC, NORTH-WESTERN RAILWAY.

328. Makhdum Sayad Rajan Baksh Shah: Will Government please state:

- What was the total income from third class Railway fares on the North-Western Railway last year;
- How much was spent towards the comfort and convenience of third class passengers, giving details of the amount spent?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: (a) The total gross receipts from third class passenger traffic on the North-Western Railway during 1920-21 amounted to Rs. 4,76,57,000. It is regretted that no answer can be given to part (b) of the question, since expenditure on railway working is incurred in the general interests of the public and it is impossible to specify what proportion is in the interests of a particular class of passenger.

GRANT OF LICENCES UNDER ARMS RULES.

329. Makhdum Sayad Rajan Baksh Shah: Will the Government please say how many Europeans and Eurasians have been granted licences of guns and pistols and how many Indians have been granted such licences under the New Arms Rules?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: The total number of licences for firearms granted to Europeans, including Anglo-Indians and Indians, during 1920, were 28,975 and 1,29,346, respectively. Separate figures for guns and pistols are not available, but they are being collected and will be supplied to the Honourable Member when received.

GOVERNMENT AID TO CHRISTIAN AND NON-CHRISTIAN PLACES OF WORSHIP.

330. Makhdum Sayad Rajan Baksh Shah: (a) Is it a fact that the Government gives financial aid to Roman Catholic and Protestant Churches in each district or Central Headquarters? If so, will the Government please state the total amount of grant-in-aid given in each Province on this account?

(b) Similar information may also please be supplied in case of mosques and temples?

Mr. H. Sharp: (a) The rule is that upon certain terms Government contributes towards church accommodation at the chief civil station of a district where there are at least 25 European British-born subjects in the general service of Government and where no suitable church provision for them already exists. Information is not available regarding the total amount so spent in each province. But the Finance and Revenue Accounts of the Government of India for 1919-20 show that expenditure from Imperial funds in connection with ecclesiastical buildings was Rs. 3,89,043 upon works and repairs. This sum, however, includes expenditure on military churches, churches maintained by State Railways and Government cemeteries.

(b) Non-Christian places of worship have been and are financially assisted by the State, through grants of land and alienations of land-revenue made for religious purposes and to some extent through expenditure for archaeological purposes. The amount so spent on mosques and temples cannot be ascertained but is undoubtedly very large.

EUROPEAN, ANGLO-INDIAN AND INDIAN POPULATION OF INDIA AND RATES OF PAY.

331. Makhdum Sayad Rajan Saksh Shah: (a) What is the total population of Europeans and Anglo-Indians in India and how many of them are in Government service getting Rs. 100 and above?

(b) What is the total Indian population excluding the European and Anglo-Indian population and how many of them are in Government service getting Rs. 100 and above?

The Honourable Mr. W. M. Hailey: Statistics of population are given in the Census reports; and the Central Government has no details of the totals of the establishments of the classes named maintained in the different provinces.

PURCHASE OF STORES BY THE HIGH COMMISSIONER FOR INDIA.

332. Mr. B. S. Kamat: (a) With reference to a recent speech by the Honourable Sir Thomas Holland, addressed to the Committee of the Indian Merchants' Chamber and Bureau at Bombay, assuring the Chamber that in the matter of the purchase of stores the High Commissioner may be trusted to safeguard the interests of India, have the Government of India noticed the report of evidence of Sir William Meyer, the High Commissioner, before the Railway Committee in England in which that official is said to have admitted that he has been purchasing stores for India from British firms although the same were obtainable from Continental manufacturers at cheaper rates? Will the Government be good enough to explain in full the situation?

(b) Will the Government of India be pleased to place on the table a list of orders for stores placed by the High Commissioner for India during the first six months since his appointment, respectively, in the United Kingdom, on the Continent of Europe, in the United States, and in Japan? Will Government further specify in which cases and to what extent orders for stores were placed in the United Kingdom notwithstanding the fact that the quotations from foreign countries were lower?

Mr. A. C. Chatterjee: (a) The Honourable Member is referred to the answer given by me to Question No. 229, asked by Sir P. S. Sivaswamy Aiyer.

(b) I am unable to place on the table a list of orders for stores placed by the High Commissioner in the United Kingdom. The statements, however, which have been laid on the table already will give the Honourable Member the information he requires regarding the extent to which orders for stores have been placed in the United Kingdom notwithstanding the fact that the quotations from foreign countries were lower.

ORDERS FOR STORES IN THE UNITED KINGDOM.

333. Mr. E. S. Kamat: (a) Will Government be pleased to state the total amount of orders for stores, with their value in sterling, placed during the first six months of the calendar year 1921, or such period thereof for which figures are available, in the United Kingdom, by Government Departments both Imperial and Provincial, as well as by other authorities such as Port Trusts, Improvement Trusts, Railways, Development Boards, Corporations, etc.?

(b) Are Government aware that there is a wide-spread feeling of public opinion in Bombay in commercial circles that the placing of such orders in the United Kingdom at this juncture is a deliberate method of helping British industries irrespective of any effects on India's imports and exchange?

(c) Will Government be pleased to state if they propose to take any steps in the direction of restriction of imports generally?

Mr. A. C. Chatterjee: (a) I am unable to give the full information required by the Honourable Member, but I would refer him to the reply given to his previous Question. I may add that the rules for the supply of articles for the public service do not apply to Company railways, or to such public bodies as Port Trusts, etc., and I am not in any case, in a position to state the amount of stores ordered by those bodies.

(b) The Government of India are aware that an opinion has been expressed in Bombay in the direction indicated.

(c) The Government of India would not be willing to impose any restrictions of the kind suggested by the Honourable Member.

INDIAN INVESTORS AND STERLING LOANS.

334. Mr. B. S. Kamat: (a) Was an assurance given by the Secretary in the Finance Department in one of his letters to the Indian Merchants' Chamber, Bombay, to the effect that opportunity would be given to Indian investors in future to subscribe to Sterling Loans?

(b) Was not this assurance ignored when the 7 per cent. Sterling Loan of the Calcutta Port Trust was sanctioned?

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: The assurance to which the Honourable Member refers is presumably that contained in the following sentence in the Government of India's letter of the 7th May 1921, to the Indian Merchants' Chamber and Bureau:

'The Secretary of State will, however, consider, on the occasion of the next loan, whether in the event of the early closing of the lists special consideration can be given to persons in India, as he recognises the desirability of giving residents in India a similar opportunity, as far as practicable, of subscribing to that open to persons in the United Kingdom.'

Those remarks, however, refer solely to the Government of India's own Sterling Loans. The primary concern of the Secretary of State and the Government of India in controlling issues like that of the recent Sterling Loan of the Calcutta Port Trust is partly to satisfy themselves of the Port Trust's ability to meet the services of the proposed loan and partly to see that the terms and dates of the loan are not such as would embarrass Government's own borrowing operations.

INDIANS, ANGLO-INDIANS AND EUROPEANS ON STATE RAILWAYS.

335. Khan Sahib M. M. Ikramullah Khan : (a) Will the Government be pleased to state the number of Indians and Anglo-Indians (or Europeans) respectively in the following subordinate services of each State Railway in India :

- (i) Loco. Foremen.
- (ii) Loco. Inspectors.
- (iii) Loco. Pump Inspectors.
- (iv) Carriage Inspectors.
- (v) Traffic Inspectors.
- (vi) Permanent-way Inspectors?

(b) How many Indians are there in the officers' grades in the Loco. and the Carriage Departments of these State Railways and what is their proportion to the number of European officers?

(c) What is the ratio in recruiting of the Indian Permanent-way Inspectors to that of the European or Anglo-Indian Permanent-way Inspectors on these State Railways?

(d) Will the Government be pleased to consider the advisability of appointing Indians where there are none and more Indians where the number is not equal in all the above services of the State Railways?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn : (a) The information will be found in the statement placed on the table

(b) At present there is only one Indian in the officer's grade of the Locomotive and Carriage Department, State Railways. As regards the steps being taken to increase the number of Indians I would refer the Honourable Member to my reply to Mr. N. M. Samarth's Question No. 84 in this Assembly.

(c) The actual number of apprentice Permanent-way Inspectors on the North-Western Railway is, Europeans and Anglo-Indians 18 and Indians 13. Four more Indians are to be taken on as apprentices this year. On the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway, the ratio is 2 Indians to one European and Anglo-Indian. On the Eastern Bengal Railway, there is no fixed ratio. At present there are 18 Assistant Permanent-way Inspectors, of whom 13 are Indians, and 24 Apprentice Permanent-way Inspectors of whom 15 are Indians.

(d) Appointment depends entirely on a man's qualifications. The man best fitted is appointed to fill a vacancy irrespective of his nationality.

EUROPEAN, ANGLO-INDIAN AND INDIAN SUPERINTENDENTS ON STATE RAILWAYS.

336. Khan Sahib M. M. Ikramullah Khan : (a) Will the Government be pleased to state how many Superintendents are there of European and Anglo-Indian nationality and how many of Indian nationality in the various administrative offices of each State Railway?

(b) Is there any differentiation in their respective grades of pay, and, if so, why?

(c) How many Indian clerks have during the last 10 years been raised to the position of office Superintendents and how many outsiders have been brought in, to supersede the Indians?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn : (a)

	Total number.	European and A. I.	Indians.
North Western Railway ...	7	6	1
Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway ...	4	3	1
Eastern Bengal Railway ...	5	4	1

(b) There is no differentiation in their respective grades of pay.

(c) On the North-Western Railway during the last 10 years six Indians have been appointed as Office Superintendents, five have since retired. In the Locomotive Department three European or Anglo-Indian outsiders were brought in as they were considered better qualified for the appointment. In the Traffic Department two Europeans were brought in over the heads of Indians in consideration of their larger experience.

On the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway one Indian was promoted to Office Superintendent. One European was appointed from outside (in the Traffic Department) as there was no one else qualified to hold the post.

On the Eastern Bengal Railway two Indians have been promoted to Office Superintendents. No Non-Railway outsiders have been brought in to fill up such posts.

PRIVILEGE PASSES ON NORTH-WESTERN RAILWAY.

337. Khan Sahib M. M. Ikramullah Khan: (a) Is it a fact that the issue of privilege passes to the staff of the North-Western Railway has been considerably restricted since the end of the war and, while the officers have been more liberally treated, the Subordinate Service has been hard hit and therefore much discontented?

(b) Will the Government be pleased to consider the advisability of removing this discontent by reverting to the status quo ante?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: (a) and (b). In the matter of the issue of privilege passes Gazetted Officers on the North-Western Railway are in the same position as they were before the war, except that they have been allowed the additional concession of passes to include two additional dependent relatives, which has also been allowed to subordinate officials. While there have been some changes as regards the number of issues and class of passes in the case of subordinate officials, the rules have been made more liberal in other respects, such as the removal of the mileage limit which was in force previously, and the issue in favour of two dependent relatives already mentioned. The rules in respect of the class of passes issued to individuals on a salary basis, had to be revised on account of the all-round increase of wages, and to prevent the upper class accommodation on trains being swamped by pass-holders to the discomfort and inconvenience of the public; and advantage was taken to reconsider and regulate the number of passes issued as it was found that the existing rules were being abused.

SETTLEMENT OF CLAIMS BY THE NORTH-WESTERN RAILWAY.

338. Khan Sahib M. M. Ikramullah Khan: (a) Will the Government be pleased to state what is the average period of settlement of each claim of the public by the North-Western Railway?

(b) Will the Government be pleased to devise some more expeditious means in the matter?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: (a) A statement showing the average time taken recently in the settlement of claims on the North-Western Railway is laid on the table.

These figures were received before the close of August and do not therefore include the percentage of claims settled during that month. It may, however, be said that over 70 per cent. of the ordinary claims preferred are now settled within 3 months of receipt. It is not possible to dispose of all cases so promptly, as some, from their nature, required more time for inquiry and settlement. Generally speaking, few cases remain unsettled after 6 months.

(b) The desirability of settling claims as expeditiously as possible was brought to the notice of Railway Administrations in March last and the statistics obtained at the time in this connection did not show that the North-Western Railway compared unfavourably with other railways. The figures furnished in reply to the first part of this question already indicate an improvement and Government do not propose to take any further action at present.

MR. HESELTINE'S APPOINTMENT AFTER RETIREMENT.

339. Khan Sahib M. M. Ikramullah Khan: (a) Will the Government be pleased to state on what post Mr. Heseltine, late Accountant General, has been employed since his retirement and under what circumstances?

(b) What are his duties?

(c) What is the total expenditure incurred since his appointment in this connection, including that of his staff, travelling allowances, haulage charges of his saloon, etc.?

(d) Has this expenditure been compensated by the savings, if any, which he has effected and, if so, how?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: (a) and (b). In view of Mr. Heseltine's special qualifications for the purpose, he was employed under the Railway Board from 7th November 1918 to 15th December 1919 in reorganizing the offices of the Agents, North-Western, Eastern Bengal and Oudh and Rohilkhand Railways and of the Loco. Superintendent and District Loco. Superintendents, North-Western Railway. From 16th December 1919 to 31st August 1920, Mr. Heseltine was detached from his special railway duty and worked on

- (1) the Stores Purchase Committee,
- (2) the Telegraph Inquiry Committee,
- (3) the Postal Inquiry Committee.

From 1st September 1920 to 22nd July 1921, Mr. Heseltine was again employed under the Railway Board. During this period he was engaged on an inquiry into the rates of pay of the staff of the various railways and investigated the claims of the subordinate staff to further increases and concessions. He also brought to notice variations in scales of pay and terms of service with a view to obtaining some co-ordination.

(c) The total expenditure incurred on the employment of Mr. Heseltine, and office staff, under the Railway Board is :

First period ...	...	...	...	...	Rs. 44,564
Second period...	...	...	...	...	65,900
Total ...					1,10,464

(d) During the first period of his employment by improving the system of office working, which cannot be measured in rupees, he effected a substantial reduction in staff thereby saving Rs. 1,34,000 a year at the then existing rates of pay.

After investigating the claims of the subordinate railway staff, Mr. Heseltine submitted a report of great value which shows clearly that there is no case for further increasing pay generally at the present time and that railway men are as well-off as their fellows in other departments or in private employ.

DELAY IN PAYMENT OF SALARIES, NORTH-WESTERN RAILWAY.

340. Khan Sahib M. M. Ikramullah Khan: (a) Is it a fact that the superior staff of the North-Western Railway, with the exception of those at the Headquarters, are paid their salaries 10 days after expiry of the month and the menial staff 20 days after expiry of the month?

(b) Will the Government be pleased to consider the advisability of disbursing the salaries and wages of the staff immediately on expiry of each month?

Colonel W. D. Wghorn: (a) It is a fact that the payment of salaries and wages to the staff on the North-Western Railway are made on dates varying between the 1st and about the 20th of the month following that to which they relate—a procedure similar to that which exists on every railway in India. Except in the case of new entrants, this arrangement involves no hardship as it is arranged that a particular class of employes should receive payment on or about the same date every month.

(b) The question of devising a scheme aiming at subordinate employes of State Railways receiving their wages for a month during the first seven days of the following month has been under the consideration of the Railway Board for some time past and some experimental measures to achieve this end are at present under trial. There are, however, practical difficulties in introducing any great advance in the dates of payment of all salary and wages bills, involving as it does the employment of a large additional staff in the Audit and Pay Departments and the concentration of audit and payment of bills to a certain small portion of a month, leaving the audit and pay staff with insufficient work during the rest of the month—an arrangement not in the interests of economy in Railway management.

ALLOTTED DAYS FOR VOTING ON SUPPLEMENTARY GRANTS.

Mr. President: I have to announce that the 22nd and 23rd of September have been allotted for the voting on Supplementary Grants.

STATEMENT OF GOVERNMENT BUSINESS.

Mr. President: I wish to ask the Leader of the House whether he is in a position to state the Government business for the 22nd September.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: Sir, on the 22nd September the following Bills will probably be taken into consideration :

- (1) The Bill to facilitate the enforcement in British India of maintenance orders made in other parts of His Majesty's Dominions and Protectorates and vice versa, as amended by the Select Committee.
- (2) The Bill further to amend the Indian Penal Code as amended by the Select Committee. The Report of the Joint Committee on the Indian Factories (Amendment) Bill will also be presented.
- (3) The Bill further to amend the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, will probably be re-committed to Select Committee, if the Assembly consents to that course, and the Bill to consolidate and amend the law relating to income-tax and super-tax will also be referred to a Joint Select Committee on the same understanding.

Mr. Chatterjee's Resolution regarding the establishment of a Chemical Research Institute at Dehra Dun will be discussed.

ELECTION OF DEPUTY PRESIDENT.

Mr. President: In accordance with the announcement previously made, I am now prepared to receive nominations for the election of the Deputy President. I have already received the following nominations, in due form proposed and seconded with the nominees' assent :

Mir Asad Ali Khan Bahadur,
Dr. H. S. Gour,
Rai Bahadur Jadu Nath Majumdar,
Sir Jansetjee Jejeebhoy.

I am not sure, but I think another nomination may have been sent in.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: Sir, as regards the procedure for election of a Deputy President, may I ask you whether it will be by process of elimination?

Mr. President: Are there any further nominations?

Then I appoint the ballot for the election of one of those now nominated to be taken immediately after questions on Wednesday, the 21st of this month. The manner in which the election will be conducted will be conveyed to each Member of the Assembly in an announcement which is now being printed but which will be in the hands of Members in a few hours.

THE INDIAN ELECTRICITY (AMENDMENT) BILL.

Mr. A. C. Chatterjee: Sir, I beg to present the report of the Joint Committee on the Bill further to amend the Indian Electricity Act, 1910.

THE CARRIERS (AMENDMENT) BILL.

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: Sir, I move.

That the Bill further to amend the Carriers Act, 1865, in order to empower the Governor General in Council to make by notification additions to the Schedule to that Act, and to free a common carrier from liability under that Act for loss or damage, arising from the negligence of himself or of any of his agents or servants, in respect of any property, which, being of the value of over one hundred rupees and of the description contained in the Schedule to that Act, has not been declared in accordance with the provisions of Section 3, be taken into consideration.

[Mr. C. A. Innes:]

When I introduced this Bill, Sir, on the 5th September last, I explained fully the reasons which have led Government to initiate this legislation. I do not think I need do anything more at the present stage. I move, Sir, that the Bill be taken into consideration.

The motion was adopted.

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: I move, Sir, that the Bill be passed.

The motion was adopted.

THE INDIAN LAC CESS BILL.

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: I move, Sir.

'That the Bill to provide for the levy of customs duty on lac exported from British India be taken into consideration'.

Here, again, Sir, I have explained already in my introductory speech the reasons why we have introduced this Bill. At the present moment I have nothing further to add.

The motion was adopted.

Mr. B. S. Kamat: Sir, there are a few features of this Bill on which I wish to offer a few observations. I am glad Government are trying to develop the lac industry. The only question is whether, in trying to do so, they are proceeding on the right lines and in the right way.

In order to carry on research for the development of the lac industry it is proposed by Government to set up a Research Association. On the last occasion, the Honourable Mr. Innes told us that the formation of this Association would be on democratic lines and that persons concerned in the lac industry, both shippers, manufacturers and brokers, were unanimous with reference to the formation of this Association, and about this legislation in general. However, I have my own doubts on two or three points of principle. I believe this legislation is introducing one or two features of an unusual character to which it is necessary to draw the attention of this House.

Government propose to levy a cess, but the unusual feature to which I wish to draw the attention of the House, is this: Instead of crediting the whole of the collections of this cess to Government Treasury, in the first instance, what is proposed to be done is to transfer it straightaway from the Collectors of districts to this Association at once. Now, I don't know why Government wish to adopt this novel procedure. Whenever a cess is levied, whether it is a tea cess or an indigo cess or a shellac cess, I believe the right procedure ought to be to collect the whole amount and credit it to Government Treasury, and then it would be the duty of Government to give, by way of a subsidy, or by annual grants, any amounts for the furtherance of research, so that the Legislative Assembly might have some sort of control, by means of their vote at the Budget, over the subsidy or over the grant as the case may be. What is proposed to be done at present is that the collections will be transferred straightaway and at once from the Collectors of districts to this Association for its objects. I think the House like myself would like to have an explanation from the Honourable Mr. Innes why it is proposed to do this.

Secondly, instead of bringing under Government control not only the amounts collected but also any measures for research which the Association may take, what is proposed to be done by Government is to allow this Association to adopt any measures they like at their own sweet will. In one of the sections of this Bill we are told that the Association will be at liberty to adopt 'such measures as the Association may consider advisable' to take for the promotion of improved methods of cultivation of Lac and also the manufacture of Lac. Here again, I think we ought to know for instance, from year to year, what this Association is doing, what particular line of development they have adopted, what research officers they are employing, what are the qualifications of those officers and under what tenure they hold their office in order to carry on their researches. The Honourable Mr. Innes, so far as I know, has not told us what shall be the machinery for the employment of the research officers and what shall be their duties. I take it that the Association will select and appoint their own officers, but I do not think the Association should be given a carte blanche in this matter, as also in respect of the line of research they will pursue, without an opportunity to the Assembly to know what the Association is doing. That is the second feature to which I wish to draw attention. I do not mean to say that I object to the Bill, but I do say that further light is necessary before this House can pass this Bill.

Then, again, regarding the constitution of this Association, I do not think we have all the details that are necessary. We have simply been told that this Association will consist of members representing European and Indian shippers, manufacturers and brokers. We do not know to whom the membership will be open, nor do we know on what lines all these representatives will be chosen, or who the Secretary will be—what will be their salaries or their functions. In all these things, I believe, it is necessary for the Honourable Member to tell the House what it is proposed to do, so that we may pass on to the further consideration of the Bill. It is true that Government have provided a safeguard in that the amounts which will be handed over to this Association throughout the year from month to month by each District Collector will be subjected to an audit. But I do say that this audit will be a sort of post-facto affair, that is to say, the Association will throughout the year first spend the money and then the Auditor—perhaps at the end of the year—is to sit in judgment and tell us whether those amounts have been spent properly or not. I do not think that is the right procedure. We ought to know in the first instance how they will spend the money. The auditor will only know after the amounts have been spent and it is no use taking objection after they have been spent.

There is a further point with reference to Sections 2 and 6. It is this: The Association, at the end of five years, may recommend to the Viceroy whether its life is to be prolonged or not. I do not like this feature of the Bill. It means that the Association itself will sit in judgment at the end of five years upon its own work and declare whether it has done useful work or not, and will then recommend to the Viceroy whether its life is to be prolonged.

On all these grounds I think it is necessary that this Bill should be discussed further in Select Committee and these different features thrashed out; after that, we can pass on to the passing of the Bill. Until these things are taken up and discussed properly, I do not think we should be in a hurry to pass the Bill at this meeting this morning. I believe it is necessary on these grounds, to send the Bill to a Select Committee.

Mr. B. Venkatapatiraju: Sir, I have given notice of a similar amendment that this Bill should be referred to a Select Committee. The previous speaker, Mr. Kamat, has pointed out some of the objectionable features of the Bill, but I want to take another course. I want to point out to the Assembly whether it is desirable that the Government of India should abrogate its functions and give up its powers with reference to this lac industry to a private body. That aspect also should be considered and thrashed out in the Assembly. The only reason given by the Honourable Mr. Innes on the occasion when he introduced this Bill was that we have done similar things with reference to the Indian Tea Cess Act. But I believe that the Indian Tea Association was in existence for a long time before any cess was imposed for that purpose. The matter was only brought before us in the year 1921, and it was then only a matter of changing the duty to be levied. That, I venture to submit, is not a very useful precedent to follow on the present occasion. Also most of the shares were held by European capitalists, and it was a longstanding institution.

That was a longstanding institution, and we can safely rely upon that. On the other hand, I do not know how the present Lac Association came into existence. It sprang up all of a sudden on the 12th September in order to receive this bonus of not less than Rs. one lakh at our hands. Well, the Government of India introduced a similar Act, I mean Act III of 1918, for Indigo improvement, and what they have stated there is 'to provide funds for the promotion of research in the interest of indigo in India' and so forth. The Act III of 1918 says :

'Whereas it is expedient to levy assessment... from British India, there shall be levied a cess of a rupee a maund and the proceeds of the cess collected shall be applied to meet the cost of such measures as the Governor General in Council may consider it advisable to take for promoting research in the interests of the Indigo industry in India.'

Why should we not follow the same course with reference to lac industry? Why should not the money be ear-marked for the purpose of improving the lac industry and why should we leave the matter in the hands of a private Association whose movements we cannot control or whose vouchers we cannot check. If it was a matter in the hands of the Government of India, it would have been open to the Members of the Assembly to question the policy, to suggest remedies and to point out defects, if any, from time to time, but as it is, we do not know who represents the new Association, who started it, and how it is constituted. Even the Honourable Mr. Innes has not thought it fit to place this information in the hands of the Members of this Assembly. Another statement made in the Objects and Reasons is that persons interested in the lac industry were consulted. Now who were those persons? We do not know whether the Local Governments were consulted and what their opinion is, because Industry is a Transferred Subject, and we have a Research Institute at Dehra Dun to help the Provincial Governments and to co-ordinate their efforts. We have also appointed temporarily with regard to several industries, tanning experts, and cellulose experts, and so I do not see why we should not appoint an expert on lac industry also. Whether this Association will only do propaganda work, whether they will be able to introduce any useful industry in this country such as the purification of lac instead of sending the raw product to other countries and getting it back purified at an extra cost, all these things should very well be considered. I would, therefore, suggest that the whole question be referred to a Select Committee instead of hurrying through the measure, and I would also suggest that we should levy the tax from the 1st April next. I think the Council will probably meet in January next, and we can then settle the business. There does not appear to be any hurry in the matter at all and nothing will be lost if this Bill is postponed till the 1st of April, that is the next official year. I therefore earnestly appeal to the Members of this Assembly that they should all press on the attention of the Government that this Bill should not be passed through the Council in such haste and that it should be committed to a Select Committee so that the whole matter can be carefully considered.

Mr. E. L. Price : Sir, I am sorry to have to oppose the two Honourable Members who have just spoken. If I do so, it is because I think that they are taking quite a wrong notion of the functions of this House. I knew once a man, the head of a large business, who never had the capacity of delegating any functions that he might possibly perform himself to anybody. It was a common jest that even if a postage stamp had to be put on a letter he wanted to stick it himself. The end of it was that the poor old gentleman not only ruined his business but died of over-work, and I feel that the way these Members suggest we should look after things, is going to impose a similar fate on this Assembly. It seems to me that the Government, in proposing to hand over the administration of the Fund to an Association which understands the industry and to give them a reasonable space of time, are doing an eminently reasonable thing, because such scientific research and experiments will take time, and Government proposes to give them five years to see what they can do and then to have another look at the thing. By that means we are putting the whole affair into the hands of those most interested. It will be a most remarkable thing in the history of humanity if the Lac Association do not do their best. Why should they not do their best? It is their bread and butter. Not only this. I may say incidentally that the whole country benefits by their researches and the Association benefits most of all. Those are the people above all who should carry on research work and experiments, and not amateurs who know nothing about the business. So far Mr. Kamat pushed his desire for this Assembly to interfere and to have its finger in the pie, as far as I can understand him, he wants to have not only the audit of accounts guaranteed by the Bill, apparently he wants an audit before the accounts are made up!

Then, again, Mr. Raju took the line that this trade was getting a bonus from this Assembly. I suggest that they are getting nothing of the sort. We are merely legalising for them a machinery by which they may collect money from one another for this purpose, and the object might be equally well carried out if every member of the industry would agree without our sanction to pay a subscription at the rate of four annas a maund. But you know perfectly well that when you leave subscriptions to voluntary effort people do not subscribe equally, and it is highly probable that some people would not meet their share. To make sure that everybody does the fair thing by the Association, we regulate that everybody pays his four annas, and I do suggest that the Government's plan is an eminently sensible one as it stands to develop the industry greatly to the benefit of the country in a most reasonable way, and that this Assembly cannot possibly put its finger into a scientific, experimental business of the development of lac in our forests, and that we had much better leave the business to those who understand it. At the end of five years, if they have not done very well, we will see about it, but I think that they will require five years for experimental work of this sort, and I urge that the proposals of Government are eminently reasonable.

Rai J. N. Majumdar Bahadur : Sir, I am sorry I cannot agree with my Honourable friend, Mr. Price, in this matter. My Honourable friends, Mr. Kamat and Mr. Raju, have very sensibly proposed that the Bill should be referred to a Select Committee. There is no such urgency in this matter that we should pass the Bill in such haste. The Bill was introduced only the other day and is taken into consideration to-day, and I cannot understand what urgency there is in the matter that we should pass the Bill to-day. The objects of the Bill are no doubt very good, but there is no reason why we should not have more information about the Bill. It is certainly for the improvement of the lac industry and the cess will be levied on the exporters, but when we are legalising the machinery and when we are going to be a party to it, I think we owe a duty to ourselves to look into the matter carefully. I think my friend, Mr. Price, has misunderstood the objections urged by Mr. Kamat and Mr. Raju, because they are not against the Bill. They only wanted to have more information about the matter and that the Bill should be referred to a Select Committee so that the whole question may be thrashed out. For instance, there are many Government research laboratories, and I think they are in a much better position to conduct the research about lac in some of their own laboratories instead of a body of merchants.

The money will be in the hands of the Government; where is the harm? Of course, I do not say that their recommendations will be finally accepted. But I think the House has a right to know how the money is going to be spent, who are going to spend it, what are their credentials? We do not know anything about it. And therefore I think Mr. Kamat very sensibly and rightly asked Mr. Innes to enlighten us on the matter, and, if the House is satisfied that there is every chance of the provisions being carried out for the object for which it is intended, I think the House will be glad to pass the Bill to-day, but we want more information, and I think Mr. Price has no right to question whether this House might not be prepared to resign their right. We have been resigning everything to the hands of others. We are more or less an advisory body here, and the men who have been resigning everything have no choice but to resign in this matter also.

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: Sir, perhaps I may help to bring this discussion to a close by saying, that if there is any desire on the part of the House that this Bill should be referred to a Select Committee, the Government have no objection at all. The only hope that the Government have is that this House and the Council of State will pass this legislation if possible this Session.

There are one or two remarks, however, to which I should like to refer before I sit down. In the first place, we have been accused of trying to rush this legislation through the House. Nothing was further from our thoughts than that. The Government is often accused of undue dilatoriness in dealing with matters put up by the business community. Now, what has happened in this case? And this enables me to refer to Mr. Venkatapatiraju's accusation that I did not tell him the history of this Bill. I thought I had told him the history of the Bill in my introductory speech. What happened was that the report of Mr. Lindsay and Mr. Harlow was published only in May. In June, Sir Thomas Holland and I were down in Calcutta. We took the opportunity of meeting the representatives of the lac trade in Calcutta and the point the House has got to remember is that the lac trade—the merchant part of the trade, is concentrated almost entirely in Calcutta. As far as I know, no other port exports lac in any quantity. Sir Thomas Holland met these gentlemen. He referred them to the proposed lac cess and pointed out that it was not a proposal which Government could take up of itself; it was for the trade first to move. And, following the precedents in this matter, the condition he laid down was that they must show the Government that the trade was at one in the matter. The trade took up that suggestion at once and, as I said in my introductory speech, they appointed a committee. That committee consisted of four Indian brokers and manufacturers and three shippers and European manufacturers. This committee set to work at once and formulated the rules of this Association. The Association was formed by the end of August and has now been registered, and the first thing the Association did when it met was to pass a unanimous Resolution that Government should introduce this legislation and impose this cess. Mr. Venkatapatiraju has complained that I have given you no information regarding this Association. I told you one material fact, namely, that any firm or individual trading in his own name directly connected with the lac trade as a cultivator, manufacturer, shipper, dealer or broker, was eligible for membership to the Association. That is to say, everybody connected with the trade can come into the Association. The next point is the management of the Association. It is to be managed by a committee and that committee is to be elected by various sections of the trade as follows: two members by Indian manufacturers, two by Indian brokers, two by Calcutta shippers, one by European manufacturers, and one by European brokers. Therefore, provision has been made in the Association rules not only for the representation of every section of the trade in the Association but also full representation of every section of the trade in the Amangement of the Association. Could more be done than that?

The next point that was raised was raised by Mr. Kamat. He said that the Bill presented unusual features. I am afraid I must deny that statement. The only reason why we ventured to try and push this legislation through the House in this Session was that the principle of legislation of this kind has already been accepted. It was accepted as far back as 1903 when we passed the Indian Tea Cess Act, and in drafting this Bill we were most careful to follow throughout the provisions of the Indian Tea Cess Act. Mr. Kamat said that it was an unusual feature in the Bill that clause 4 (1) of the Bill should empower the Collector of Customs to pay the proceeds of the lac cess after deducting the expenses of the cultivator to the Lac Association. As far as I remember, that clause is simply copied from the Indian Tea Cess Act. The actual wording is the same. The tea cess is collected by the Collectors of Customs and the net proceeds are paid over to the Tea Association.

The other question raised was the general question of principle, whether Government should undertake lac research itself or whether we should leave it to the trade. We preferred to leave this matter to the trade because we thought the trade might be allowed to undertake research in its own way. After all, what do we propose to do? We are merely allowing this trade to tax itself to a small extent. We are simply placing our machinery at their disposal. We collect the tax for them, we hand it over to them, we leave them to do what they like with it subject to the conditions of this Bill. The only safeguard we thought it necessary to make in the interests of the public was that their accounts should be audited, and their accounts should be published in order that the public and ourselves might see that the proceeds of the cess were not in any way being misapplied. There is another point to remember. What does this cess amount to? 4 annas per maund. The present price of T. N. shellac is Rs. 135 a maund. 4 annas per maund represents a cess of $\frac{1}{15}$ th per cent. It will merely become one of the handling charges of the shippers. It won't make the slightest difference in the price paid to the cultivators. If it makes itself felt at all, it will be passed on to the consumer in other countries.

I have just tried to explain, Sir, that we have no idea in any way of trying to hustle this House into hasty or ill-considered legislation. I myself rather doubt whether it is necessary to take this Bill, which has after all been framed on very familiar lines, to a Select Committee. I rather doubt myself whether it is necessary to make two bites at a cherry, especially at such a small cherry as this. At the same time, as I have said, in order to clear ourselves from the imputation that we are trying to hustle the House into this legislation, we have no objection to accepting Mr. Kamat's amendment.

Mr. Kamat's amendment that the Bill be referred to a Select Committee was put and carried.

Mr. President: Is the Honourable Member prepared to move the names of the Members of the Select Committee?

Mr. B. S. Kamat: I wish to have ten minutes' time to suggest the names.

Mr. President: If the Honourable Member will move the postponement of the motion, I am prepared to take it at the end of the business to-day.

Mr. B. S. Kamat: I move for the postponement of this motion until the end of the business for to-day..

Mr. President: Is the Honourable Member not ready with the names?

Mr. B. S. Kamat: I just asked for a few minutes and I thought the ruling of the Chair was that the whole thing will be taken up when the agenda for to-day has been finished.

Mr. President: I assumed in the Honourable Member's favour that he had the names ready.....

Mr. B. S. Kamat: I have not consulted any of these Members I have got and I want to get their consent before suggesting their names.

Mr. E. L. Price: Surely the Honourable Member's amendment is not in order and is therefore null and void.

Mr. President: As regards the legality, no doubt the Honourable Member is right, but I am afraid I assumed that the Honourable Member was prepared to move the names and I did not ask him whether he had an assurance of the willingness of the Members who were desirous of serving on the Committee. I must ask the Honourable Member whether he has secured the assent of the Members whose names he is moving.

Mr. B. S. Kamat: My difficulty is that I have not obtained the consent of the names which I wish to propose. If the Chair would give me a few minutes' time I would suggest the names of the Members. I have had no opportunity of consulting them because I never thought that this motion would be carried.

Mr. President: Order, order. I gave a ruling last Session on this point and I must abide by that ruling. It is perfectly true that the matter at issue is not of great importance, but if I were to allow an Honourable Member to do what I thought he should not do, I should be reversing a good precedent and setting up a bad one in its place. Therefore I must take the point raised by Mr. Price and declare that the decision just taken by the House is out of order.

Mr. B. S. Das: I beg to move:

"That in item No. 4* in the place of the last three words, that is, "taken into consideration" the following be substituted:

"circulated to the Provincial Governments for eliciting opinion of the public and commercial bodies thereon before the end of December 1921".

Mr. Harchandrai Vishindas: Sir, should not the Bill be passed first, the amendment having fallen through?

Mr. President: Order, order.

Mr. B. S. Das: Sir, If I remember aright, it was said by the Honourable Member in charge of the Bill the other day that lac is a monopoly of India, and in the absence of rivals in the field of cultivation I fail to understand how Research will improve the position and make the monopoly more firm and permanent. Let me not be misunderstood, Sir. I do not dispute that when we have the monopoly we should not strive to keep it, and keep it well in hand.

There are no clear indications in the Statement of Objects and Reasons as to which end the Association will devote their energies and the money placed at their disposal. It is doubtful if the establishment of lac factories in order to utilise the raw products of the country falls within their scope of work. There is a strong ever-growing feeling in the country that the country is being denuded of its raw products to be flooded by foreign finished goods at abnormally higher prices than the raw products themselves.

If I may venture to make a suggestion, I say, why not divert a good portion of the money to the establishment of lac industries in large lac growing centres and aid the Provincial Governments to that end?

It may be argued, Sir, that the paltry sum of a lakh of rupees as hinted by the Honourable Mover of the Bill, is too small to be diverted into so many channels. To this, I humbly suggest, that the growing price of lac within the last few years clearly proves that there is a great demand outside and that the industries consuming this material are assuredly making a great profit out of it. If I remember the Honourable Mover of the Bill aright, according to him the price of lac has gone up 300 to 350 per cent., that is, from Rs. 40 a maund to Rs. 130 or 135 a maund in the course of last four years. In view of this it would not be too much to raise the nominal duty of 4 annas and 2 annas a maund to one rupee and 8 annas. By this an income of four lakhs of rupees might fairly be anticipated. Making an allowance of a lakh of rupees in the direction of research, three lakhs could be kept in hand to effect agricultural and industrial improvements in that direction. Again the free and unrestricted export of lac from India, has ended in raising the price of lac fourfold in the course of four years and has caused great hardship to the small lac industries that are in the country. The bangle makers or sankaries as they are called in my part of the country have been the greatest sufferers. Next to them are the gold and silversmiths who use this material for embossing and other crafts. It would by no means be to the disadvantage of Industrial India to levy an export duty on lac, thus restricting its free export.

Turning to the industrial aspect of this question, I ask the Government to say what amount of sealing wax is consumed by them and the Provincial Governments in their offices. Surely not a very negligible sum or quantity. Again the stuff used there is surely not the crude Indian lac, but the finished product of this stuff first sent to and then brought from Germany, the United States, Japan and any other industrial centre outside India. We cannot insist upon Government offices to consume Indian lac. The plea put forward will surely be that the stuff obtained in India does not burn or melt properly nor does it allow an imprint of a good impression and that there are no lac factories worthy of the name and when private enterprise rises to the level of establishing them and produces articles of superior or equal merit the Government of India may see their way to use them in their offices. But, Sir, many a private industry has found an untimely grave for want of a proper motherly nurse. It is the Central Government that can stand in the place of a motherly nurse and prolong the lives of these industries, or give birth to an industrial child, just as it gave birth to this infant of Lac Association on the 12th September last. It is needless to remind this Assembly how the Government of Japan has helped to bring the industries of their country to the forefront of the world, so much so that other civilised powers are jealous of her growing industry and commerce. Cannot, Sir, our reformed Government move likewise? Can we not instead of purchasing gramophone records and other lac products from other countries, find ways and means to have them produced within our own borders?

* Motion "That the Bill to provide for the levy of customs duty on lac exported from British India be taken into consideration."

[Mr. B. S. Das.]

Sir, when a matter like this fraught with great industrial possibilities is before the Assembly it is no use hurrying over it. Let the Provincial Governments in consultation with the industrial and commercial people have their say in the matter. Let the Assembly have sufficient time to think over whether it would be wise and safe to entrust the money obtained from this duty, to a private Association or an Association under Government patronage, no matter however noble its composition and personnel might be, or it would be better if the money be retained by the Central Government under the scrutiny of this Assembly to be ear-marked and devoted to extension of cultivation, research and establishment of lac factories and industries or to aid the chief lac growing provinces for the objects mentioned above.

It is with this object that I ask the Government to defer their judgment till the close of December and to obtain the opinion of industrial and commercial India, distributed through all the Provinces, and the opinion of the Provincial Governments themselves, together with their Ministers for Industries who are responsible to the people.

It may be said, Sir, that the opinions of the commercial people have been obtained. But I say that the opinions of the consumers in India, those who really consume lac in their industries, have not been obtained as yet. So I think it is necessary that this piece of legislation should be forwarded to the Local Governments for obtaining the opinions of the public bodies as well as the commercial and industrial societies: and I commend this amendment to the consideration of the Assembly.

Mr. President: The question is:

'That the Bill to provide for the levy of customs duty on lac exported from British India be circulated for the purpose of eliciting opinions thereon.'

Mr. J. Chaudhuri: Sir, I am sorry that I have got to oppose this motion. Time is very essential in this matter. We have been reading about attempts that are being made for the manufacture of synthetic lac to replace the ordinary natural process of obtaining lac in India. It is very essential that researches for the preservation of our local lac industry should be carried on at once. Of course, I would not have opposed Mr. Kamat's motion for referring this Bill to a Select Committee, provided their opinion could be delivered upon the Bill during this Session so that the Bill might be passed before the close of it. While other nations are trying to oust us from this industry, which depends upon the natural resources of India, we should not be consulting all and sundry and cogitating and deliberating and taking up time in considering a simple Bill of this kind from Session to Session. By that time synthetic lac may come into the field as a formidable rival and oust us altogether. So I will not waste any more words but would appeal to the Assembly not to waste time over this Bill but to proceed to pass it into law at once.

Chaudhri Shahab-ud-Din: Sir, I also stand to oppose the amendment. By the levy of this cess, I think, the country will be developing the cultivation of lac considerably. At present, if I remember the figures aright, India produces altogether 7,30,000 cwts. of lac annually. About 20,000 cwts. which are produced in Assam might be added, and thus the total quantity produced by India now is about $\frac{3}{4}$ million cwts. India has practically a monopoly in this sense that Germany, Japan, America and other countries have tried to grow lac in their colonies, but they have failed. There is practically very little export of lac from outside India. Therefore, there is no harm in levying this cess and thus developing, by scientific research, the further cultivation and production of this commodity. For this reason, I, Sir, oppose the amendment, and strongly support the motion that the Bill be passed without any loss of further time.

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: Sir, Mr. J. Chaudhuri and Chaudhri Shahab-ud-Din have already dealt faithfully with this amendment, and there is little more for me to say. The amendment proposes that the Bill should be circulated to Provincial Governments and to commercial bodies. Well, Sir, we have already consulted the Provincial Governments. We did not actually send them the Bill, but we sent them a letter at the beginning of August stating very clearly the lines on which we propose to legislate, and we asked them to let us know by the 25th August if they had any objection to the Bill. We have had replies from three of these Local Governments. The Government of Bengal agrees with the course of action proposed; also the Government of Burma, and the Government of the United Provinces takes no objection to the lines on which we propose to act. We have had no reply from the Governments of the Central Provinces and of Bihar and Orissa, which I may mention are the two Local Governments mainly concerned in the cultivation of lac, and having regard to the terms of our letter, we are entitled to assume that these Local Governments have no objection to the lines of the Bill. It has been suggested that we should refer it to commercial bodies. I see no reason at all, Sir, for accepting that suggestion. As I have tried to point out before, the lac trade is concentrated in Calcutta, and we have taken the most careful precautions to ascertain the feelings of the Calcutta section of the trade on this Bill. Another important centre of the lac trade is Mirzapur, where lac manufacture is mainly concentrated. Two members of the Mirzapur Association are on the Committee of the new Indian Association for research. We may assume, therefore, that Mirzapur, which is a centre of manufacture, is also in favour of the Bill.

The only other remark I have to make is that I think the Honourable Mover of this amendment is rather confounding two different things: he is confounding what we call an 'export cess' with an 'export duty'. An export cess, according to our terminology, is a cess which the trade places upon themselves and asks us to collect for them, and is purely a cess for the improvement of an industry in the way that the trade itself demands. An export duty, on the other hand, is a duty which goes to the Central Government for the Central Government's own purposes. The Honourable Mover suggested that in putting this Bill forward we had not consulted the consumer's interests. I presume he means that we ought to try and discourage the export of lac from India in order that lac industries may grow up in India. But that is not our intention in putting forward this Bill. Our intention is merely to give the lac trade a small amount of money—their own money, mind you—which will be collected by us in order that they expend it on scientific research and may guard against the danger which Mr. J. Chaudhuri has pointed out, namely, the danger of a synthetic substitute. The wisest course is to let the trade make a beginning in this way. I have no doubt that if their research is successful, it will encourage the development of lac industries in this country; and if they find that the cess works well, no doubt as time goes on, they may come forward and ask that the rate of cess may be increased. But for the moment I suggest that we proceed in the manner suggested by the trade itself. Sir, I oppose the amendment.

Mr. President: The question is:

'That the Bill to provide for the levy of customs duty on lac exported from British India be circulated for the purpose of eliciting opinions thereon.'

The motion was negatived.

Clauses 1 to 6 were then put and carried.

Mr. K. B. L. Agnihotri: Sir, I rise to move an amendment to clause 7 of the Bill. My amendment is to delete the first proviso which runs thus:

'Provided that the Governor General in Council may, on the recommendation of the Lac Association, declare by notification in the Gazette of India, that the said sections shall continue in force for any further period specified in such notification.'

Sir, I do not agree with my friend, Mr. Price, when he says that the powers of this Legislature should be delegated to the Lac Association or to the Governor General in Council. I agree so far that there may be emergent occasions when such powers may have to be delegated, but we cannot do that on all occasions and under all circumstances. Now this Bill will be in force for about 5 years. There will be a pretty long time before the Government to ask this Assembly for the continuation of the measure if they think it necessary. Why the Government should take the power from now to continue this Act after 1926, is beyond my comprehension. I therefore submit that this proviso should be deleted, and Section 7 should stand after the deletion of this provision. Another point is that, if we delete the first proviso, then it necessarily follows that the word 'also' in the second proviso should be deleted.

Mr. E. L. Price: Sir, it may remove any misconception of my view of things if I state plainly that I personally support this amendment. I am prepared, I admit, to hand over a series of technical experiments to a technical body for 5 years, but I do think it is a sound thing that at the end of that time the industry should come back to us and report progress for our approval.

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: Sir, this proviso, like most of this Bill, is taken from the Indian Tea Cess Act, but I quite see the point raised by Mr. Agnihotri and confirmed by Mr. Price. I should like to point out, however, that Mr. Agnihotri's point will be met by an amendment which I understand Mr. Rangachariar is going to move, that is to say, he proposes to insert the words 'and with the previous approval of the Indian Legislature' after the words 'on the recommendation of the Lac Association.' I think that amendment will meet the views of this House, and I propose to accept it. I suggest, Sir, that Mr. Agnihotri should withdraw his amendment on the understanding that Mr. Rangachariar moves his amendment.

Mr. K. B. L. Agnihotri: I withdraw my amendment, Sir.
The amendment was, by leave of the Assembly, withdrawn.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: Sir, I move:

'That the words 'and with the previous consent of the Indian Legislature' be inserted between the words 'Association' and 'declare.'

The object has already been explained, and I need not add any words of my own.

Mr. President: The question is:

'That in the first proviso* after the word 'Association,' the following words be inserted:

'and with the previous consent of the Indian Legislature.'

The motion was adopted.

Clause 7, as amended, was added to the Bill.

Clause 8 was added to the Bill.

The Preamble of the Bill was put and carried.

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: I move, Sir, that the Bill as amended be passed.

The motion was adopted.

THE INDIAN INCOME-TAX BILL.

The Honourable Mr. W. M. Hailey: Sir, I beg to move for leave to introduce:

'A Bill to consolidate and amend the law relating to Income-tax and Super-tax.'

Sir, we are told that every family has a skeleton in its cupboard; Governments are no doubt subject to the same provision of nature; at all events I feel that I owe an apology to the House for bringing forward one of the skeletons of Government immediately after that feast of wisdom and flow of soul which we have just witnessed in regard to the Lac Cess Bill.

I have no doubt there are many people, Sir, who feel that they have heard enough of legislation about income-tax, and would be glad enough never to hear another word on the subject. But, Sir, that cannot be. It is not only that we are under an obligation to the general tax-payer to see that by no defect in our legislation should the income-tax-payer be enabled to escape the payment of his just dues. It is not only that—although the satisfaction of that duty, incumbent as it is upon Government, may not possibly add greatly to that widespread popularity which we know the Finance Department enjoys. (Laughter.) Sir, we have to go further than that. We have to secure the clearest definition in all clauses of our income-tax legislation, in order that we may secure only that the assessee should know exactly what obligations he has to perform, but also that we may not leave it in the power of the Collector himself to exact from that assessee one single pie more than the Legislature has intended. The utmost lucidity in expression, and the most careful adaptation and procedure is therefore necessary in order that the assessee may know both his obligations and his duties, and that is the reason why not only our Government but every Government from time to time finds it necessary to bring its income-tax legislation up to date. Perhaps the income-tax, Sir, will never be very popular in this country or indeed in any country, but we have everything to gain from securing both certainty of assessment and ease of collection.

These are general remarks. Let me pass to the more precise purport of the Bill which I place before the House. Some time ago, Sir, we found that the Act required amendment in several respects. Let me take one case only. A High Court had ruled, that the meaning of the word 'income,' in the existing Act must be held to be confined to money actually or constructively received. That ruling would of course have resulted in great embarrassment and inconvenience to those concerns which keep their accounts on a mercantile accounting basis, which goes far beyond the mere statement of receipt or payment of cash. For that reason alone, we should have to contemplate an early amendment of the Act. Then, again, last March the Assembly expressed a strong opinion in favour of withdrawing from the Income-tax Collector the discretion which he now enjoys whether he should make a reference to the High Court at the request of the assessee or not. That was another case in which we should have been obliged to amend the Act, for I gave an undertaking last March that we would, as far as possible, give an unrestricted right of reference to the High Courts. Then, again, the House will perhaps remember that some time ago the Indian representatives came to an agreement with the Home authorities on the vexed subject of the collection of double income-tax within the Empire. They agreed, that in respect of income-tax levied both in the United Kingdom and in India, there should be deducted from the appropriate rate of the United Kingdom income-tax the whole of the rate of Indian income-tax charged in respect of the same income-tax, subject to the limitation that the relief given by the United Kingdom should not exceed one half of the rate of the United Kingdom income-tax to which the individual taxpayer might be liable. Under this arrangement, any further relief necessary would have to be given by India, and it is necessary that we should put before the House legislation giving effect to that agreement. I may say that it is not contemplated that at present this concession will involve any loss to the revenues of this country. I have given these facts as typical instances of the circumstances which in any case would have forced us to propose a modification of our existing Act. But when we came to examine closely into the Act we found that the requirements of the case, as a matter of fact, proceeded much further. We have now, as the House is aware, a growing expert staff; we have indeed lately made great efforts to increase both the quantity and quality of that staff. They, as the result of their experience of the working of the 1918 Act, pointed out to us many ways in which the Act required amendment in the interests not only of the State but of the assessee himself. We, therefore, proceeded to a thorough revision of the Act, but in doing so did not confine ourselves to consulting our own experts. We appointed local committees in each of the major Provinces, to put forward suggestions for the amendment of the Act and to consider as far as possible what form the exact amendments should take. I want to pay here, a tribute of gratitude to the many gentlemen who gave us the benefit of their advice and their experience while serving on these committees. We then collected the recommendations of the local committees, and we asked each committee to send representatives to Simla to constitute a Central Committee further to consider the reports. It is as the result of the deliberations of that committee, which I think owes much to the guidance and the industry of my friend, Mr. Sim, that we now place the Bill before you to-day.

Well, Sir, so much for the reasons which prompted us to put forward a somewhat complete revision to the Act and for the procedure which we have adopted. I have given the Assembly the benefit of a very full Statement of Objects and Reasons attached to the Bill. I need here, therefore, only refer to one or two of our major propositions. Take the first. We propose to do away with the existing system of adjustment. That system, which was introduced in 1918, is no doubt an ideal procedure. A provisional assessment is made on the basis of the income of the previous year, and an adjustment is subsequently made when the full income of that year has been ascertained. But, like many ideal systems, it is difficult to work in practice. I know that it still has many supporters, particularly among chartered accountants; but our experience is that the ordinary assessee, even if he understands the system—and there are not many of them who do understand it—nevertheless heartily dislikes it. We propose, therefore, to amend the Act in this respect, returning to the old system of assessment on the previous year's income without adjustment. The second proposal is to do away with the distinction between registered and unregistered firms. I am not going into the somewhat long history that lies behind that distinction. The reason why we have decided to do away with the distinction is the difficulty felt by firms who have to produce evidence of partnerships in order to get the benefit of the existing law relating to registered firms. The effect of doing away with the distinction will be even more apparent in dealing with super-tax, for in this respect we propose simply to tax each of the partners of a firm to super-tax instead of taxing the firm itself. I come to a third point. As the House knows, the maintenance of our growing income-tax departments has become almost entirely a charge on the central revenues, and we think it right that those departments should be given a statutory position both in regard to the Central Government and also of course by implication to this House which has provided funds for their maintenance. But the case goes somewhat further than this. At present the law provides that Local Governments shall frame rules under the Act, interpret, and administer the Act. We have found a very general feeling throughout India that the making of rules, the administration of the Act and interpretation of the rules should be kept in the hands of a central body. It is felt on many important points, and I might instance here the rules relating to the depreciation of buildings and machinery, that there should be an identical procedure throughout India. We have found distinct dissatisfaction with the fact that the law is at present interpreted by a large number of chief revenue authorities, who, well acquainted as they may be with revenue law, have not, in every case studied very exhaustively the practice and law relating to income-tax. We therefore propose now to centralise the administration of the income-tax law and to issue all rules thereunder from the Government of India itself. But I warn the Assembly that if we were to carry out this work effectively, it will be necessary to appoint some central income-tax authority of our own. It is impossible for us to administer this great and growing subject from the Secretariat. We need an officer who can not only advise on the work of the provincial departments, but also remain in close touch with commercial bodies and with the interests mainly affected by the tax. That can only be done by a whole-time officer who has opportunities of touring throughout the year.

These then are our main proposals; I am not going to trouble the House with any further details except in one respect. I stated that it was necessary that we should have to amend our Act not only in the interests of the State but also in the interests of the assessee, and I shall merely give a short list of the points in which we believe that the Bill as now drafted by us will materially ease the burden of the assessee himself.

Mr. President: Order, order. If the list is really short, I can allow the Honourable Member to read it. The Honourable Member has had a certain allowance already over his time and I cannot allow very much more.

The Honourable Mr. W. M. Hailey: Then I do not propose to read the list. I regret that I did not observe the progress of time; and, in any case, full details of what I was about to give the House will be found in the Statement of Objects and Reasons. But if you will allow me, Sir, I will only make one remark in conclusion in reference to the form of the Bill that we have put forward. It is a Bill which provides for procedure and definition only. It contains no schedule of rates, and in itself therefore it imposes no taxation. The result of that is that the rates will every year have to be imposed and any important substantial changes will have to be effected through the medium of a Finance Bill, as in England. I need not point out to the House (particularly to those who have studied the history of Taxation Bills as passed by representative Assemblies) the full constitutional effect of the change we now propose to introduce; but I would ask the House to mark this aspect of the Bill because I think the recognition of its nature may perhaps influence their decision when I come at a subsequent stage to propose a reference to Select Committee. For the present I merely seek to introduce the Bill, undertaking at the same time that it shall be given a very wide circulation throughout the country in order that the House may have an opportunity of considering the criticisms put forward in the country when we take the Bill into consideration. This, I hope, we shall be enabled to do in the next Session.

The motion was adopted.

The Honourable Mr. W. M. Hailey: I now introduce the Bill.

THE INDIAN CONTRACT (AMENDMENT) BILL.

Dr. H. S. Gour: Sir, I rise to move for leave to introduce:

'A Bill further to amend the Indian Contract Act, 1872.'

and, in doing so, I should like the Honourable Members to correct a typographical error which occurs in the copy of the Bill which has been supplied to them. The amendment should be:

'30-A. An agreement whereby a person promises to give information or supply funds for the maintenance of litigation or actively to assist in the recovery of property in consideration of receiving a share of such property or of the proceeds of such litigation is void.'

As I have stated in the Statement of Objects and Reasons appended to this Bill, it is primarily intended to prevent gamble in litigation. Honourable Members will easily remember cases after cases which have attracted the attention of the Courts in which persons other than bona fide litigants are arrayed on either side to maintain suits in which they have no real interest beyond sharing the spoil of the litigation. The ordinary instance that I may present to the House is a zemindar who dies leaving valuable property. Speculators on either side come on the scene. One aids and abets the claimant and another undertakes to provide for the defence, and these outsiders stipulate with their respective clients for a share, sometimes a considerable portion of the estate, as their price in case of success; the result being that this litigation is carried on, not by the bona fide claimants themselves but by persons hired for the purpose, and the price for which these persons lend themselves out is a portion of the valuable estate. The Courts find that this kind of litigation is an encouragement of perjury, fraud and fabrication of evidence and documents and the real issues are masked in this legal game of battledore and shuttlecock with the aiders and abettors of litigation carried on in Court. In England, this species of gambling in litigation is suppressed by the criminal law and is an indictable offence. In this country, an effort has been made to suppress this species of gambling by bringing it under the general Section 23 of the Indian Contract Act as an agreement opposed to public policy. But it has been recently laid down by the Privy Council in I. L. R. 35 Cal. 420 that the English law of champerty and maintenance is not the same as the Indian law of unlawful contracts as opposed to public policy, and this has induced me to draft this small Bill with the object of bringing the Indian Contract Act into line with the English law. The Honourable Members will see that I have inserted a proviso to except from the operation of the rule a bona fide purchase of property in suit. The intention is not that any estate which is in suit should not be the subject matter of transfer. The object is to keep out an intermeddler in the suit, a person who is not interested in the result of the litigation but purchases a portion of the property as a recompense either for the assistance that he renders or for the money which he supplies and in this way interesting himself in the result of the litigation. He suborns evidence, fabricates documents and renders the litigation as obscure to the real issue as possible. I shall not detain the House any longer and I hope that this salutary measure of legal reform will meet with the acceptance of the House.

Mr. C. S. Subrahmanayam: Sir, I oppose the motion. The English law should not apply to India, and I think that the doctrine that these technical provisions of English law should not be allowed to apply to Indian conditions is very sound. If we begin to introduce this technical law into India, it will only result in another oppressive and fresh crop of litigation. At present the Courts have ample discretion in finding for themselves whether a particular contract with a litigant is good or not, reasonable or unreasonable.

In any event even if this becomes law, the Courts certainly have a certain amount of discretion, and after all it is a question of the surrounding circumstances and the conditions of the parties entering into the contract that will always have to be considered in the exercise of the discretion of the Court. If you introduce such a law into this country, there will be obvious disadvantages for people who have great difficulty in establishing their rights to property to which they are rightly and legally entitled. Now without outside help of money and of all things which go to work up a case, it is difficult here to establish a claim. In England, there is a large body of lawyers who under the rules regulating costs can in a way support litigation, I mean attorneys and solicitors, but in India such a class does not exist. Whether it would be an advantage for such a class to exist here is not my point now. But there are people, illiterate and ignorant and a large class of women, who have rights which they find it difficult to establish, and they must necessarily resort to and obtain outside help. Therefore, the introduction of such a law into India, while it cannot put down secret contracts, will only stimulate or create a further crop of suits and cases. There is a proviso, but the proviso practically eats up the clause. If it is an agreement to share, you go into the question of bona fides. There you have to submit the righteousness of that agreement to the decision of the Judge who tries it. There is a good deal of discretion and latitude allowed to the Judge: and, with the system of appeals, and in view of the exercise of discretion, it is quite enough. The existing law is quite sufficient to meet the evil which my Honourable friend says is reported to be notoriously rife. We have not got definite evidence that in particular provinces such cases have cropped up. There is no advice given to the Government of India in the shape of reports from Local Governments or the High Courts that such a law is necessary. If so, it is not proper that the Assembly should think of adding to the law. But is there evidence of such cases being rife in our personal experience as practising lawyers? We have in many cases come across some very bad cases, but that will never justify our trying to enact a law on the basis of a case or two spread over a number of years and place it on the Statute Book. This would also direct the attention of active minded men to rush to courts, and would only stimulate litigation. Further, I think, we, as ordinary people, interested in seeing to the putting down of litigation, should not multiply illegalities; that is what I say, statutory illegalities, and thereby give food for active-minded people to start litigation. On principle, I oppose the introduction of this Bill.

Mr. President: The question is:

'That leave be given to introduce a Bill further to amend the Indian Contracts Act 1872.'

The motion was adopted.

Dr. H. S. Gour: I now introduce the Bill.

MESSAGE FROM THE COUNCIL OF STATE.

Mr. President: A Message has been received from the Secretary of the Council of State, which the Secretary will now read.

Secretary of the Assembly: Sir, the Message runs as follows:

'I am directed to inform the Secretary of the Legislative Assembly that the following motion was carried in the Council of State at their meeting on the 19th September, and to request the concurrence of the Legislative Assembly in the recommendation contained therein, namely, that this Council do recommend to the Legislative Assembly that the Bill further to amend the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, and the Court Fees Act, 1870, be referred to a Joint Committee of this Council and of the Legislative Assembly, and that the Joint Committee do consist of 12 Members.'

Mr. President: The Message will be laid on the table. This House now stands adjourned to Tuesday, the 20th September at 10-30 A.M.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

Tuesday, 20th September, 1921.

The Assembly met in the Assembly Chamber at Half Past Ten of the Clock. The Honourable the President was in the Chair.

DEATH OF RAJA SIVANANDAN PRASAD SINGH.

Dr. H. S. Gour : Sir, before commencing the business of the day, it is my painful duty to bring to the notice of this House the sad and untimely death of one of our colleagues—Raja Sivanandan Prasad Singh of Monghyr, which sad event took place up here at 2 P.M. yesterday afternoon. It is a sad commentary upon the shortness of human life when we think that only the other day when I moved a loyal address of welcome to His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales the Raja stood up from his seat and delivered a speech cordially seconding me. A few days later he was taken ill and we all hoped that it was a temporary ailment. Yesterday morning all the medical assistance that was available was called in consultation, but it was of no avail.

The late Raja had rendered useful public service and for this he was awarded the distinction of O.B.E. some 5 years back, and the title of Raja was conferred upon him only last year. He was a prominent landholder of Monghyr, of the Municipality of which place he was the President. His charity is well-known in the neighbourhood. He represented the landholders of the Bhagalpur Division, and it is a matter of some satisfaction that he has left a mark behind him which will be an example to fellow landholders of his and other Provinces to take part in the public deliberations of this Assembly.

I know, Sir, that if he had been alive, and if a similar sad occurrence had happened, he would have been the last to desire that the proceedings of this Assembly should be interrupted by any adjournment, and I therefore move that all we should now do—which I think would have been in consonance with his wishes—is that the lamentable fact be recorded in the minutes of this House and that a vote of sympathy with the bereaved family of the deceased be conveyed over the signature of the President of this Assembly.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : Sir, I should like to join my Honourable friend in the expression of regret and sorrow of this Council on the untimely death of our colleague. I knew the Raja and his father before him for many years. I think indeed our friendship originated some twenty years ago ; and from time to time I have been in close contact with him. He was a man who prospered largely in life, by his business capacity and industry, and at the same time was never to my knowledge unmindful of his public duties. He was in every sense a good citizen, ready to give time and munificent grants of money to works of charity or public utility. In politics he was a man with strong opinions, a steadfast opponent of what he believed to be treasonable or disloyal, and a loyal supporter of the Government. In his own Province, he was a man of great influence and merit and I can honestly say that by his untimely death both the Government and the public, particularly the public of his Province, which is also my own, and the public of the district of Monghyr, where he was well-known, suffer a loss which it would be difficult to make good. He was a man of great capacity and I am certain that all will appreciate the testimonial that has been so eloquently given to him by my Honourable colleague.

The Resolution* was put and carried nem. con., the Assembly standing.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

UNPAID WAGES IN THE NORTH-WESTERN RAILWAY.

341. Khan Sahib M. M. Ikramullah Khan : Is it a fact that the payment of unpaid wages to the menial staff of the North-Western Railway and specially wages of deceased men to their heirs, takes a very long period to the great inconveniences and trouble of the ignorant persons and, if so, will the Government be pleased to make arrangements for the expeditious payments thereof?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn : It has been ascertained that it is not usual to withhold the payment of unpaid wages on the North-Western Railway for a long period.

With regard to the payment of wages of deceased men to their heirs, payment is arranged as soon as an Indemnity Bond is executed by the claimant. Such Bond is, however, dispensed with in cases of sums under Rs. 500 'in certain circumstances' on the responsibility of a District Officer. In cases where contesting claims are put in and there is difficulty in deciding who is the right party, final payment must naturally be delayed.

* "That this Assembly do place on record its appreciation of the public services of Raja Sivanandan Prasad Singh of Monghyr and that the President be requested to convey to his family the sympathy and condolence of the Legislative Assembly on his untimely death."

I can assure the Honourable Member that these matters receive the constant attention of the Railway Administration.

THEFTS OF COAL BY THE RAILWAY STAFF.

342. Khan Sahib M. M. Ikramullah Khan : Is it a fact that there is a general complaint by the industrial public of thefts by the Railway staff, of coal from open trucks on their way from collieries and, if so, will the Government be pleased to devise some effective means to prevent such thefts?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn : Complaints have been received from time to time as to shortages of coal in particular consignments from individual traders and Associations and have been taken up with the railways concerned.

Railways recognise the necessity for adopting measures to prevent such shortages, and are doing so by means of surprise weighment checks, the employment of special Chowkidari staff and by the payment of rewards to persons detecting thefts of coal from wagons.

SECRETARY OF STATE'S STERLING LOAN AT 7 PER CENT.

343. Mr. Narayandas Girdhardas : (a) Will the Government be pleased to lay on the table a copy of the prospectus issued by the Secretary of State for India, on or about the 20th April 1921, regarding the Sterling Loan of £7½ millions raised by him at 7 per cent.?

(b) Will the Government be pleased to state whether the Secretary of State for India, at the time of issuing the prospectus, or at any time subsequent to the issue of the prospectus, stated in Parliament that the whole of the proceeds of this Loan would be utilised for the purchase of Railway materials and stores, in Great Britain?

(c) Will the Government be pleased to state the amount of expenditure incurred by way of brokerage, commission, underwriting charges, advertisements and otherwise, as far as possible under each head, in respect of the said Sterling Loan?

(d) Will the Government be pleased to state whether it has come to their knowledge that any of the underwriters or sub-underwriters of the last Sterling Loan of the Secretary of State for India were officials of the India Office or any one directly or indirectly connected with them?

(e) Will the Government be pleased to give an undertaking that in respect of future Sterling Loans to be issued by the Secretary of State for India, Indian investors will be given equal opportunities to subscribe to such Loans with British or other investors?

The Honourable Mr. W. M. Hailey : (a) A copy of the prospectus is being sent to the Honourable Member.

(b) Yes.

(c) The Government of India are not in possession of the details of the actual expenditure under the heads mentioned. The total underwriting and similar charges apart from the cost of advertisement and normal incidental expenses, but including the usual $\frac{1}{4}$ per cent. commission allowed on applications bearing bankers' and brokers' stamps, were reported by the Secretary of State to be about 2 per cent. of the Loan.

(d) The reply is in the negative.

(e) The Government of India cannot give such an undertaking but the Secretary of State will consider on the occasion of a future Loan whether, in the event of the early closing of the lists, special consideration can be given to residents in India.

HIGH COMMISSIONER FOR INDIA IN THE UNITED KINGDOM.

344. Mr. Narayandas Girdhardas: Will the Government be pleased:

(a) to lay on the table a copy of the Order in Council of His Majesty appointing a High Commissioner for India in the United Kingdom?

(b) to state whether in the exercise of his powers and the performance of his duties, the High Commissioner is subject to the direction and control of the Governor General in Council?

(c) to state whether the control of the Stores Department of the India Office exercised by the High Commissioner, includes the purchase of stores on behalf of the Indian Military, Railway and other Departments?

(d) to state whether the High Commissioner is entrusted with the task of calling for tenders for the supply of stores to the India Office and of accepting or rejecting tenders according to his discretion?

(e) to state whether the Secretary of State for India, the Finance Committee of the India Office, or the Council of the Secretary of State for India, have the right to exercise any control over the High Commissioner in the purchase of Stores on behalf of the Government of India?

(f) to lay on the table a statement showing:

(i) the total value of stores purchased by the High Commissioner since the creation of his appointment on the 1st October last;

(ii) the value of the stores purchased by him from British manufacturers or tradesmen;

(iii) the value of the stores so purchased from other than British manufacturers or tradesmen;

(iv) the difference in total value of the articles purchased from British manufacturers or tradesmen, and the value of the articles of the same or similar quality at the rates for which the High Commissioner had received tenders from manufacturers outside Great Britain?

(g) to lay on the table a copy of the recorded evidence of Sir William Meyer before the Indian Railway Committee during their recent sittings in London?

Mr. A. C. Chatterjee: (a) I would refer the Honourable Member to the Commerce Department's notification No. 6634, dated the 2nd October 1920, published in the Gazette of India, dated the 2nd October 1920, for the Order in Council referred to.

The answer to (b) and (c) and (d) is in the affirmative. But it should be explained that the supply of stores for India is no longer a function of the India Office. This function has been transferred to the High Commissioner, who is entrusted with the duties referred to in respect of stores for which indents are forwarded to him by departments of the Government of India.

(e) The High Commissioner is the agent of the Government of India in respect of the purchase of stores on behalf of the Government of India, and is responsible to them alone. This, however, does not restrict the powers of superintendence, direction and control vested in the Secretary of State, or the Secretary of State in Council, under the Government of India Act or otherwise.

(f) and (g). I am unable at present to state the total value of stores purchased by the High Commissioner since the creation of his appointment on the 1st October 1920, or the value of the stores purchased by him from British manufacturers or tradesmen. The statements which have already been laid on the table, however, will give the information so far as railways are concerned, required in sub-paragraphs (ii) and (iv) of part (f) of the Question.

ENHANCEMENT OF RAILWAY FREIGHTS.

345. Mr. Narayandas Girdhardas: Will the Government be pleased:

(a) to publish for the information of the public and of the Trading and Commercial Communities in the country and for the formulation and expression of interested opinion thereon, their proposals for the enhancement of the general railway freights?

(b) to give an assurance that until their proposals have been, for a sufficient time, before the public, they will not authorise the enhancement of the existing rates?

(c) to furnish full particulars of the increased rates and fares levied and collected, by State as well as Company-managed Railways, within the maxima and minima prescribed for them, and the additional gross Railway Revenue thereby derived, since the coming into force of the Indian Freight Tax Act of 1921?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn : (a) Proposals for the reclassification of goods with revised maxima rates have been approved by the Railway Board, and a statement showing the existing and revised classification of goods with the maxima and minima rates applicable to each class is laid on the table. It will be noticed that there is no change in the case of the minima rates, and railways will as hitherto have the power to vary rates between the sanctioned minima and maxima.

The date from which the revised classification and maxima rates will have effect has not yet been decided, but the desirability of giving the public ample notice is fully recognised.

(b) The proposed enhanced maxima rates and revised classification will not be brought into force without giving due notice to the public.

(c) The information which will involve much time and labour in compilation, will be called for from railways, if desired.

COMMISSIONS ON INDIAN CURRENCY, EXCHANGE AND FINANCE.

347. Mr. Narayandas Girdhardas: (a) Will the Government be pleased to state whether they have in contemplation the appointment in the immediate future of another Commission to undertake an inquiry into questions of Indian Currency, Exchange and Finance?

(b) If the answer be in the affirmative, will the Government be pleased to give an undertaking that the composition of such a Commission will be predominantly representative of Indian interests and that the inquiry will be conducted in India?

The Honourable Mr. W. M. Hailey : (a) Government have so far not contemplated the appointment of such a Commission in the immediate future.

(b) This does not arise.

Question No. 348 was withdrawn.

TRANSPORT OF KAPAS COTTON.

349. Sardar B. A. Dalal : Will the Government be pleased to state whether legislation for stopping the transport of Kapas—cotton with seed—by rail or boat, etc., in Gujarat is to be taken in hand and, if so, when?

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes : The Government of Bombay recently asked for sanction, under section 80-A. of the Government of India Act, for the introduction of a Bill in the Bombay Legislative Council to prohibit the transport of cotton to certain stations in the Surat-Navsari long staple cotton area. They wished to introduce the Bill in the recent Session of the Council. Previously, the Government of India had expressed approval of the main lines of the legislation proposed, but an examination of the draft Bill disclosed such serious difficulties in the way of Provincial legislation of this kind, that the Governor General was unable to accord his sanction. The Government of India, however, recognise the importance and urgency of the question. The Central Cotton Committee has recommended that legislation should be undertaken by the Indian Legislature to enable the transport of cotton to specified areas to be regulated, and the Government of India have the proposals under examination.

OFFICIAL 'WHO'S WHO' IN INDIA.

350. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala : (a) Do the Government propose to compile an official Who's Who in the Indian Legislature or encourage private enterprise?

(b) Have the Government made inquiries about the educational, legal, commercial and other qualifications and experience of each Honourable Member to find out his special fitness for various kinds of duties as a Member of the Indian Legislature? If so, will the Government be pleased to lay the same on the table?

(c) How many Honourable Members of the Indian Legislature are unable to speak in English?

(d) How many of them are illiterate?

The Honourable Dr. T. B. Saprú : (a) No.

(b) No.

(c) and (d). The Government of India can give no information. I may, however, in this connection add that the fitness of Members of the Legislative Assembly is a matter on which Government can never be indifferent; but it is not a matter for which Government has any legal or constitutional responsibility. Neither Government as a whole, nor any individual member of it, can be asked officially to sit in judgment upon the political qualities of their Parliamentary Colleagues. The inquiry suggested by the Honourable Member, will, it is apprehended, be resented by the House itself, as implying a reflection on the Members and their constituencies. The elected Members of the Legislative Assembly are responsible to the electors who chose them to serve in the Assembly, and it is, therefore, from their respective electorates that Members must seek the judgment suggested in the question.

NON-SUPPLY OF WAGONS, NORTH-WESTERN RAILWAY.

351. Dr. Nand Lal : Is the Government aware that there is a general complaint among traders that in all Mandi stations (i.e., stations at or near which grain or cotton markets are situate) of the North-Western Railway they are put to a great deal of inconvenience as regards the supply of wagons? If so, would the Government be pleased to take necessary steps to remove their complaint?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn : It must be admitted that the supply of wagons is not always sufficient at all stations when demands are at the maximum during the busy traffic season, but since the accumulation of traffic, due to the shortage of coal, was worked off, the North-Western Railway has been in a position, not only to provide wagons for all traffic originating at its own stations, but also to help other railways in this respect by sending them large numbers of wagons.

SURVEY OF CATTLE.

352. Sardar B. A. Dalal : Will the Government be pleased to state whether any steps have been taken in regard to the survey of cattle and their classification as milk breeds? If not, why not?

Mr. J. Hullah : A good deal in this direction has been done in the Provinces. Full information is being obtained and will be communicated to the Honourable Member later.

IMPORT OF FOOD PROVISIONS.

353. Mir Asad Ali, Khan Bahadur : Will Government be pleased to state the quantity, as well as the value, of each kind of food provisions imported into India from each of the foreign countries for the last three years?

Mr. J. Hullah : The information required by the Honourable Member can be obtained from the "Annual Statement of the Sea-borne Trade of British India within the British Empire and Foreign Countries" which is available in the Library for years up to the fiscal year ending 31st March 1920. After that date monthly volumes of these statistics are available.

CALCUTTA MAIL TRAINS—LAHORE TO PESHAWAR.

354. Khan Sahib M. M. Ikramullah Khan : Will the Government be pleased to state the circumstances under which the running of the Calcutta mail trains between Lahore and Peshawar was discontinued, and what now delays the resuming of the service to Peshawar?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn : Nos. 1 Up and 2 Down Calcutta Mail trains were discontinued between Lahore and Peshawar on the 24th January 1921, due to shortage of coal. They were, however, replaced by Nos. 11 Up and 12 Down slow passenger trains on the 1st April 1921.

As circumstances do not permit at present of the North-Western Railway running both mail and slow passenger trains, it was decided by the Railway Administration, after due consideration and discussing the question with merchants and others, that a slow passenger train would better meet the public demand than a fast mail train. Measures are being taken to improve the capacity of the section, but until this has been done and more stock is available, it is regretted the question of running more trains cannot be considered.

INCOME-TAX AND SUPER-TAX, 1921.

355. Mr. B. A. Spence : Will Government state what is the amount paid for the year ending 31st March, 1921, in :

(a) income-tax,

(b) super-tax,

by Europeans and Anglo-Indians in this country, and what percentage is this of the total income-tax and super-tax paid ?

The Honourable Mr. W. M. Hailey : I regret that there are no such statistics available. We do not classify income-tax payers by race or religion, and it would of course be quite impossible to effect any such classification in the case of companies, from whom a considerable proportion of our revenue is received.

CURRENCY COMMISSION.

356. Mr. R. A. Spence : Does Government contemplate the appointment of a Commission to investigate and report on the Currency question before the close of the official year, and, if the answer is in the affirmative, will the members of the Commission be appointed in India, or will they be appointed in England by the Secretary of State ?

The Honourable Mr. W. M. Hailey : The Honourable Member is referred to the reply I have just given to Mr. Narayandas Girdhardas.

BRANCH RAILWAY LINE TO PAK PATTAN SHARIF.

357. Haji Wajih-ud-din : (a) Is it a fact that during war days a Railway branch line leading to Pak Pattan Sharif in the Punjab, was, as a temporary measure, closed, which has not yet been resumed for traffic and which is causing great inconvenience to the public in general, and particularly to the pilgrims, as well as a loss of income to the Government ?

(b) If so, will the Government be pleased, in the interest of both the public and the Government, to take steps to do the needful in the matter without further delay ?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn : (a) The reply is in the affirmative.

(b) Government are anxious to relay this line at the earliest possible moment, and intend doing so as soon as the necessary provision can be made.

The question of relaying hinges on two factors—materials and funds.

As regards the former, it is proposed on economic grounds to relay this line with second-hand 75 lb. rails released from the main lines of the North-Western Railway.

The supply of new rails is now satisfactory, and it is hoped that, if a reasonable programme of renewals can be undertaken on the North-Western Railway, sufficient second-hand rails will be set free to permit of the completion of the relaying of the Sutlej Valley Railway during the next three years.

From the above it will be seen, therefore, that the question of relaying depends on an adequate provision of funds to enable the necessary renewals to be undertaken. If these funds are forthcoming the relaying of the Sutlej Valley Railway can be assured.

RECOMMENDATIONS OF THE STORES PURCHASE COMMITTEE.

358. Mr. B. S. Kamat : (a) Will Government be pleased to state if any action has been taken in the matter of the recommendations of the Stores Purchase Committee, 1920 ? If so, whether the same is in accordance with the views contained in the Majority Report signed by the Officials and Non-officials, or the Minority Report signed by only two of the Officials on the Committee ? If no action has yet been taken, will Government kindly indicate the reasons for the delay ?

(b) With reference specially to Chapter VII of the Stores Purchase Committee's Report, will Government be pleased to state when, and what steps, they propose to take in regard to encouragement and protection of indigenous manufactures by (a) guaranteeing orders, (b) placing orders at favourable rates, and (c) securing favourable railway rates ?

Mr. A. C. Chatterjee : (a) The Government of India consulted Local Governments in March last with regard to the recommendations contained in the Stores Purchase Committee's Report. I will, if he so desires, supply the Honourable Member with a copy of the letters issued to Local Governments, from which he will observe that the Government of India are provisionally inclined to adopt the views of the Minority of the Committee in regard to the points of importance in which those views differ from the opinions expressed by the Majority. On receipt of the replies from Local Governments, the Government of India will proceed, with the least possible delay, to place their final conclusions before the Secretary of State. In the meantime, in order to avoid delay in the organization of the Stores Department in India, they have obtained the sanction of the Secretary of State to the appointment, on a temporary basis, of the three chief officers of the new Department. It is intended that these officers, when appointed, should work out the preliminary details and submit proposals for the permanent organization.

(b) The Government of India are not in a position to indicate at present their final views on the steps which should be taken with reference to the recommendations contained in Chapter VII of the Stores Purchase Committee's Report.

REPORT AND RECOMMENDATIONS OF THE STORES PURCHASE COMMITTEE.

359. Mr. B. S. Kamat : (a) With reference to the views of the Non-official Members in the Report of the Stores Purchase Committee, 1920, in regard to the position of Local Governments, will Government be pleased to state if they propose to leave Provincial Governments free to purchase their stores, both imported as well as indigenous, as best as they like?

542

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

[20TH SEPT. 1921.]

(b) With reference to the location of the headquarters of the Indian Stores Department, do Government propose to fix it at the headquarters of the Government of India, or Calcutta or Bombay?

(c) With reference to the organisation and staff recommended by this Committee, will Government be pleased to state the various grades of appointments proposed to be created, and what steps are proposed to be taken to secure suitable Indians for them, as far as possible?

Mr. A. C. Chatterjee: (a) The reply is in the affirmative. The Government of India, however, propose to rule that, if Local Governments order imported stores from the United Kingdom, these stores must be obtained through the London Stores Department.

(b) The Government of India have provisionally formed the opinion that the headquarters of the Indian Stores Department would most suitably be located with the Government of India.

(c) The Government of India are not at present in a position to indicate the various appointments which will be created in the new Stores Department. This matter will be considered after the appointment of the three chief officers of the Department who, as indicated in the reply to the Honourable Member's last Question, will formulate proposals for the organization of the Department. The Honourable Member may rest assured that the question of appointing Indians, who possess the requisite qualifications, will not be overlooked.

HEAD LIGHTS ON RAILWAYS.

360. Mr. Pyari Lal Misra: (a) Is it a fact that during His Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught's visit to India last year head-lights were used on Railways?

(b) Were these lights used for averting accidents?

(c) If the answer to (b) be in the affirmative, will Government be pleased to recommend to the Railway Board to use head lights on all Railways to avert loss of life and property which have become so frequent of late?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: It is not quite clear what is meant by the term 'head-lights' in this question.

The general rules for working Open Lines of Railway in India, 1906, lay down that at night, and in thick or foggy weather, no train or engine shall be worked either outside or within station limits unless it has the head-lights prescribed by the Railway Administration.

The answer to items (a) and (b) of the Question is, therefore, that head-lights were used on Railways during His Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught's visit to India last year in the ordinary course of working and in accordance with the general rules. It is possible, however, that the Honourable Member refers to a specially powerful type of head-light which was used by one railway on the engines working the Royal Train. This, however, was in the nature of an experiment, and the question whether the adoption on railways generally of a head-light, or search-light of the special type described is justified is under consideration.

STATE RELIGION IN INDIA.

361. Mr. Pyari Lal Misra: (a) Is there any State religion in India?

(b) If the answer to (a) be in the negative, will Government be pleased to state why the Ecclesiastical Department has been placed on the Civil List?

(c) Has the Government placed any other religion in India on the Civil List?

(d) If not, do Government propose to consider the question of removing the Ecclesiastical Department from the Civil List?

(e) What is the total annual cost of maintaining the Ecclesiastical Department throughout India?

Mr. H. Sharp: (a), (b) and (c). There is no State religion in this country. The Government of India, however, recognise the duty, within reasonable limits, of providing the ministrations of religion for British-born European Christian servants of the Crown, and especially for soldiers and their families.

Certain expenditure is annually incurred by Government on the provision of non-Christian religious instructors for Indian Regiments. For further information, the Honourable Member is referred to part (b) of the reply given to the question on the same subject asked by Mr. Makhdum Syed Rajan Buksh Shah.

(d) The answer is in the negative.

(e) The total expenditure on the Ecclesiastical establishment during the year for which the latest figures are available, viz., 1919-20, was Rs. 21,14,724.

CHIEF COURT FOR CENTRAL PROVINCES.

362. Mr. Pyari Lal Misra: Will Government be pleased to state when the Central Provinces Judicial Commissioner's Court is going to be raised to the status of Chief Court?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: A decision on the question of constituting a Chief Court for the Central Provinces was postponed on financial grounds during the war, and the question has not since been revived by the Central Provinces' Government.

LISTED POSTS IN THE INDIAN CIVIL SERVICE.

363. Mr. Pyari Lal Misra: (a) Will Government be pleased to state if any action has been taken on the Resolution, regarding listed posts in the Indian Civil Service moved on the 17th February, 1921, in the Legislative Assembly, by Mr. Wali Mohamed Hussanally?

(b) If so, to what extent?

(c) If the answer be in the negative, when do Government propose to take action?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: The Honourable Member is referred to the answer given on the 15th September to Rai Bahadur, Girishchandra Nag's question on the subject.

PERCENTAGE OF INDIANS IN THE I.C.S.

364. Mr. Pyari Lal Misra : (a) Will Government be pleased to state if it has given effect to the Government of India, Home Department, Resolution No. 2559, dated 1st December 1920, paragraph 12 ?

(b) If not, when is it going to do so and to what extent ?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : As regards the percentage of Indians in the service, the answer is in the affirmative. I would refer the Honourable Member to the Press Communiqués issued from this Department on the 12th February and 20th June 1921, copies of which will be given to him.

As to the holding of a separate examination in India, the necessary information is being given to-day in reply to another question of the Honourable Member.

SIMULTANEOUS EXAMINATIONS FOR THE INDIAN CIVIL SERVICE IN INDIA AND ENGLAND.

365. Mr. Pyari Lal Misra : Will Government be pleased to state if simultaneous examinations for the Indian Civil Service in India and England are to be introduced ? If so, when ?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : Government have already announced their intention of holding a separate examination in a Resolution published on 1st December 1920. We are now in communication with the Secretary of State in regard to the details, and hope they will be finally settled during the cold weather, and that the first examination will be held in India in the Spring of 1922, but, as stated in a reply to another question, we cannot guarantee this.

INDIANISATION OF THE FOREST DEPARTMENT.

366. Mr. Pyari Lal Misra : (a) How long will it take to Indianise the Forest Department as recommended by the Public Services Commission ?

(b) To what extent, if any, has recruitment to the Forest Service in England been effected in accordance with the recommendation of the Public Services Commission ?

Mr. J. Hullah : (a) It is not possible to say. 40 per cent of the recruits required annually for the Imperial Forest Service in India, and 25 per cent of those required for Burma, are to be sought in India and Burma, respectively, for the present. In addition 12½ per cent. of the major posts in the Imperial Forest Service are reserved for promotion from the Provincial Forest Service.

(b) Presumably recruitment in India, and not England as stated in the question is referred to. In 1920-1921, 24 Indians have been appointed in India as probationers for the Imperial Forest Service.

MEMORIAL FROM THE EXTRA DEPUTY CONSERVATORS OF FORESTS IN INDIA.

367. Mr. Pyari Lal Misra : (a) Is it a fact that Extra Deputy Conservators of Forests in India who have been promoted to the Imperial Forest Service have memorialised the Government praying that the period of their service a

Extra Deputy Conservators may be counted in fixing their initial pay in the Imperial Forest Service ?

(b) If so, has their prayer been granted ?

(c) If not, will Government be pleased to do so now ?

Mr. J. Hullah : (a), (b) and (c) : Extra Deputy Conservators who have been promoted to the Imperial Forest Service have memorialised the Government of India on the subject of their initial pay on promotion. The matter is under consideration.

IMPERIAL FOREST SERVICE OFFICERS OFFICIATING AS CONSERVATORS.

368. Mr. Pyari Lal Misra : (a) Will Government be pleased to lay on the table a statement showing the names of all Imperial Forest Service Officers at present officiating as Conservators in all Indian Provinces, including Burma, giving their age, total length of service, length of service as Deputy Conservators and the date from which they have been officiating as Conservators in each case ?

(b) Also a statement showing the names of all Extra Deputy Conservators recently promoted to the Imperial Forest Service in each of the Provinces, giving in each case the age, total length of service as gazetted Officers and the length of service as Extra Deputy Conservators ?

Mr. J. Hullah : The information asked for can be obtained from the Classified Lists of Forest Officers in India and Burma. A copy of the list for July 1920 is laid on the table. A copy of that for July 1921 will shortly be sent to the Honourable Member.

PROMOTIONS TO ADMINISTRATIVE POSTS.

369. Mr. Pyari Lal Misra : (a) Is it a fact that promotions to administrative posts in all Departments of Government are made by selection and not by seniority ?

(b) Is it also a fact that some members of the Provincial Service other than the Forest Department have been promoted to administrative posts ?

(c) If the answer to question (b) be in the affirmative, will Government be pleased to state if there have been any such promotions in any of the Provinces up till now in the Forest Department ?

(d) If the answer to question (c) be in the negative, will Government be pleased to give reasons therefor ?

Mr. J. Hullah : (a) Yes.

(b) No, not in any service the conditions of which are analogous to those of the Forest Department.

(c) and (d) do not arise ; but it may be stated that officers of the Provincial Forest Service who are promoted to the Imperial Service become in all respects members of that Service, and are therefore eligible for promotion to administrative rank.

INDIAN RECRUITS FOR THE IMPERIAL FOREST SERVICE.

370. Mr. Pyari Lal Misra : (a) Will Government be pleased to lay on the table a statement showing the names of Indian recruits with their qualifications for training for the Imperial Forest Service this year ?

(b) Is it a fact that Indian recruits in England are given only £200 a year?

(c) Has Government imposed any condition on the parents or guardians of recruits to make up for the deficiency from their own pockets? If so, to what extent?

(d) Is it not a fact that, owing to the condition mentioned in (c), many a brilliant recruit is kept back from going to England? Have any Indian recruits been kept back this year owing to this condition? If so, how many?

(e) Will Government be pleased to increase the amount of scholarship?

Mr. J. Hullah : (a) A statement showing the names of the Indian probationers for the Imperial Forest Service appointed in India this year is placed on the table.

The first sixteen were appointed under the ordinary regulations. All of these possessed Honours or first class degrees. The last four were appointed under special regulations for the recruitment of candidates who had rendered military service.

(b) All forest service probationers, whatever their race, are given allowances of £200 per annum while under training.

(c) No, except by warning intending candidates that the allowance granted is unlikely to meet all the needs of a probationer.

(d) The Government of India have no information.

(e) The allowance has recently been increased from £150 to £200, but the Honourable Member's suggestion will receive consideration.

REPRESENTATIVES OF THE HAI HAIBANSHI KINGS, CENTRAL PROVINCES.

371. Mr. Pyari Lal Misra : (a) Will Government be pleased to state where and in what condition the present representatives of the Hai Haibanshi Kings of Ratanpur (Bilaspur, Central Provinces) and Raipur (Central Provinces) are?

(b) Will Government be pleased to state if any of them is a Darbari or title-holder?

(c) Will Government be pleased to state the conditions of the grant by the Marathas to the Hai Haibanshi descendants and when and with what changes the grant was recognised by the British Government?

(d) Was any representation made to the Government of India by any representative of the family for recognition of their status? If so, what was the reply given?

(e) Will Government be pleased to grant pension or allowance to the representatives of the family suitable to their dignity in recognition of their forefathers' meritorious services and loyalty to the British Crown?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : (a), (b) and (c). Information is not available to the Government of India to enable them to reply to these parts of the question. Perhaps the Honourable Member might be able to secure the information from the Government of the Central Provinces.

(d) No trace can be found of any such representation.

(e) The matter is one for the consideration of the Local Government in the first instance. The Government of India do not propose to take any action unless and until they are moved to do so by the Local Government.

OPERATION OF THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA ACT, 1919, IN CENTRAL PROVINCES.

372. Mr. Pyari Lal Misra : (a) Will Government be pleased to state reasons for excluding the inhabitants of the Chandarpur and Padampur tracts of the Bilaspur District in the Central Provinces from the operation of the Government of India Act, 1919?

(b) Was any memorial submitted by the inhabitants of these tracts to the Honourable the Chief Commissioner of the Central Provinces, praying for their inclusion in the benefit of the Government of India Act, 1919?

(c) If so, what was the reply given by the Central Provinces Government as well as by the Government of India?

(d) Will Government be pleased to confer upon the Chandarpur and Padampur tracts the rights of political franchise?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : (a) It is not strictly correct to say that the tracts in question are excluded from the operation of the Government of India Act, 1919. These tracts, along with certain others, were not considered to be sufficiently developed to exercise the right of electing representatives to the Legislative Council, and provision was therefore made in Rule 3 (3) (c) (ii) of the Central Provinces Electoral Rules for their representation by nomination. But the idea of excluding these tracts formally from the operation of the Government of India Act was definitely rejected, and the present arrangement was settled as a temporary expedient until they should be sufficiently developed to be formed into constituencies or to be amalgamated with adjoining constituencies.

(b) and (c) I have not been able to trace the receipt of any such memorial.

(d) The Government of India are not prepared to take action in the direction suggested except on the recommendation of the Central Provinces Government from whom the first move should come. A copy of this question and answer will, however, be transmitted to the Local Government.

WITHDRAWAL OF THE CASE EMPEROR vs. KARNANI AND OTHERS.

373. Mr. J. N. Mukherjee : (a) In the criminal case of the King-Emperor vs. Rai Bahadur Sukhlal Karnani and others in the Court of the Chief Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta, were the explanatory statements made by the Advocate-General, Honourable Mr. T. C. P. Gibbons, K.C., in Court

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

[20TH SEPT. 1921.]

the Department of Industries and have not yet had time to study the papers connected with what are known as the Munitions Board cases. The term 'misappropriations' in these two questions is a misnomer. What is believed to have happened was that certain persons in the employ of the Indian Munitions Board colluded with certain private firms to defraud Government. I regret, however, that I can give no reliable estimate of the loss occasioned by such frauds, for it is not possible to distinguish in all cases between mere profiteering and deliberate fraud. It may be taken as certain, however, that the sum of nine crores mentioned is an absurd exaggeration.

I have only to add with reference to part (b) of Question 478 that no such telegram has been received by the Government of India.

Mr. K. Ahmed : Sir, I wish to ask a supplementary question. May I ask whether a letter passed between the Government of India and the Attorney of Rai Bahadur Sukhlal Karnani with regard to a threatened litigation contemplated against the Government of India?

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes : As I have already informed the Honourable Member, I have only just taken over the Department of Industries and have not had time to go into the cases. I regret, therefore, that I cannot answer the Honourable Member's question.

PAY OF TEMPORARY LIEUTENANT IN THE INDIAN MEDICAL SERVICE.

374. Pandit Radha Kishen Dass : (a) Will the Government be pleased to state what is the pay of :

- (i) a temporary Lieutenant in the Indian Medical Service recruited in India,
- (ii) a temporary Lieutenant in the Indian Medical Service recruited recently (after the war) in England for service in the East,
- (iii) a permanent Lieutenant in the Indian Medical Service?

(b) Will Government be pleased to state the proportion of Europeans as compared with Indians among the temporary officers of the Indian Medical Service?

Sir Godfrey Fell : (a) (i). A temporary Lieutenant in the Indian Medical Service if on the local service scale, received Rs. 450 a month, while if he elected the general service scale (that is agreed to serve anywhere) he received Rs. 550 a month. These were the rates of pay in force up to the 1st September 1921.

(ii) The temporary Indian Medical Service officers engaged as Lieutenants by the Secretary of State for India in England on a two years' contract draw pay at the rate of Rs. 700 a month.

(iii) The pay of a permanent Lieutenant in the Indian Medical Service is Rs. 650 a month; this is inclusive of an overseas allowance of Rs. 150.

(b) The proportion of Indians to Europeans among the temporary officers of the Indian Medical Service is 96 to 4.

PAY OF TEMPORARY INDIAN MEDICAL SERVICE OFFICERS.

375. Pandit Radha Kishen Dass : (a) Will Government be pleased to state if like the permanent I. M. S. officer the temporary I. M. S. officer gets any increase in pay :

- (i) on being promoted as Captain; or
- (ii) on completion of three years' service?

(b) Will the Government be pleased to state if it is a fact that according to the rules now in force, the temporary officer is debarred from drawing any allowances, such as command and second-in-command allowances?

(c) Will the Government be pleased to state if it is a fact that the permanent officer in addition to his increased rate of pay has been further allowed by rules to draw these allowances?

(d) Will the Government be pleased to state if it is a fact that when employed in administrative posts both the permanent and the temporary officers are called upon to do the same work, while one class of officers gets an allowance and the other does not?

Sir Godfrey Fell : (a) (i) and (ii). No increase of pay was admissible.

(b) Such a rule was in force.

(c) Yes.

(d) The attention of the Honourable Member is invited to the reply given to Question No. 44, asked by Professor Shahani on the 5th September.

PAY AND ALLOWANCES OF INDIAN MEDICAL SERVICE OFFICERS.

376. Pandit Radha Kishen Dass : (a) Will the Government be pleased to state if any distinction is made in pay and allowances between :

- (i) permanent and temporary I.M.S. officers,
- (ii) temporary officers recruited in India and those recruited in England, and, if so, why?

(b) Will the Government be pleased to state if it is a fact that the pay of temporary Indian Medical Service officers has not been revised since 1918 in spite of representations having been made by them?

(c) Will the Government be pleased to state if it is aware that dissatisfaction exists among the temporary officers of the Indian Medical Service on account of distinctions being made as regards pay and allowances between them and the permanent officers?

Sir Godfrey Fell : (a) I would refer the Honourable Member to the reply given on the 5th September to part (d) of the Question No. 42 asked by Professor Shahani.

(b) Here, again, I would refer the Honourable Member to the replies given on the 5th September to the Question asked by Professor Shahani and Rai Bahadur Bakshi Sohan Lal, Nos. 45 and 126.

(c) Government have read certain articles that have appeared in the various papers regarding the pay and allowances drawn by temporary officers of the Indian Medical Service.

EMOLUMENTS OF COMBATANT AND NON-MEDICAL OFFICERS.

377. Pandit Radha Kishen Dass : (a) Will the Government be pleased to state if it is a fact that almost all the junior combatant and non-medical officers are now-a-days drawing more emoluments than the temporary officers in the Indian Medical Service, even when they are junior to the latter both in service and in age?

(b) Has the attention of Government been drawn to a communication printed on page 7 of the Leader newspaper of Allahabad, dated December 11th, 1920, headed 'The fate of temporary officers of the Indian Medical Service'; and, if so, whether it contemplates taking any action in the matter?

Sir Godfrey Fell: (a) A Lieutenant of the Indian Army, who is promoted to that rank after 2½ years' service as a 2nd-Lieutenant receives pay at Rs. 475 a month. In the Indian Medical Service, a temporary officer is, on appointment, gazetted into the service as a Lieutenant and, up to the 1st September 1921, his monthly pay was Rs. 450 or Rs. 550 according as he was engaged for local or general service. The general service officer in the Indian Medical Service thus received, from the date of appointment, Rs. 75 per mensem, in excess of the pay admissible to a Lieutenant in the Indian Army; while the difference between the pay of the latter and a local service officer of the Indian Medical Service, viz., Rs. 25 a month was more than counter-balanced by the longer period an officer of the Indian Army has to serve before promotion to the rank of Lieutenant and his liability to serve anywhere within the Empire. It was open to local service officers in the Indian Medical Service at any time to elect the more favourable terms granted to those engaged for general service.

(b) Government have seen the article referred to. Revised rates of pay for temporary officers of the Indian Medical Service have been sanctioned, and a Press Communiqué on the subject has been issued.

WIRE FENCING ON THE ROHILKUND AND KUMAON RAILWAY.

378. Pandit Radha Kishen Dass: (a) Will the Government be pleased to state if it is aware that there is no wire fencing on either side of the Rohilkund and Kumaon Railway line and that therefore accidents happen on the line?

(b) Would the Government be pleased to consider the advisability of requiring the authorities of the said Railway to construct wire fencing on both sides of the line?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: (a) Government are aware that the Rohilkund and Kumaon Railway is mostly unfenced, and that accidents sometimes happen on the line.

(b) The question has been under the consideration of Government, and they do not consider it advisable to require the Railway Administration to take in hand the fencing of the entire line at once, as the expenditure required would be very heavy, and fencing would not afford the degree of security anticipated. During 1920-21 there were 21 accidents on about 15 miles of fenced line as against 86 on 556 miles of unfenced line. Government are also advised that the Railway Administration is taking steps to provide fencing on sections near all villages which are close to the line.

EMPLOYEES OF OUDH AND ROHILKHAND RAILWAY ON MORE THAN RS. 200.

379. Pandit Radha Kishen Dass: Would the Government be pleased to state (a) the number of employees on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway drawing a salary of over Rs. 200 a month, (b) how many of such employees are Indians?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: (a) and (b). There are 193 employees on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway who draw a salary of over Rs. 200 per mensem. Of this number, 33 are Indians.

KISHAN DATT AND OTHERS POSTED TO MULE CORPS.

380. Pandit Radha Kishen Dass: Will the Government be pleased to state whether it is a fact that Kishan Datt, No. 77781-B. Company, No. 11

Depôt, Amritsar, Alogaur party, Punjab and others numbering about, 500 Garhwalis, Kumaonis, and Nepalese have been put on the Mule Corps in spite of the fact that they had consented at Meerut to give their names only for the Lansdowne Regiment and the Motor Training School at Dehra Dun, and that they are very unhappy in consequence?

Sir Godfrey Fell: Kishan Datt was enrolled and sent to No. 2 Mule Depôt on the 20th October 1920. A number of Garhwalis were also recruited and sent to this depôt, but there is no record of Kumaonis or Nepalese having been sent there.

All recruiting officers have special instructions to explain to recruits the nature of the work for which they are enrolled, and no men are sent to units other than those in which they specifically agree to serve. There is no reason to suppose that the men in question were sent to No. 2 Mule Depôt against their will.

KATARPUR PRISONERS.

381. Pandit Radha Kishen Dass: In view of the coming visit of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, would the Government be pleased to reconsider the case of the prisoners in the Katarpur riot case and to grant them, or to such of them as Government may deem proper, pardon in commemoration of His Royal Highness' visit?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: The cases of these prisoners have already been carefully considered by Government, and in each case in which any possible ground for clemency could be made out the sentence has been considerably reduced. The persons who are still in jail were found guilty of offences of the gravest character, thirty Muhammadans having been murdered and some of them burnt alive.

As I announced in another place, the Government of India had decided early this year, after consulting, and in full agreement with, the Local Government, that no further releases can be made, and they do not propose to reconsider the question.

CIVILIAN SUB-DIVISIONAL OFFICERS IN THE MILITARY WORKS SERVICES.

382. Khan Sahib M. M. Ikramullah Khan: (a) Will the Government be pleased to state whether it is a fact that in the Military Works Services the strength of Civilian Sub-Divisional Officers (which includes Europeans also) has been kept so low as 15 per cent of the total strength of the cadre (Civil and Military)? If so, why?

(b) Is it a fact that to complete the full strength of Military Sub-Divisional Officers, British Non-Commissioned Officers are being tried and trained as Sub-Divisional Officers; and, if so, will the Government be pleased to state whether they have proved capable for such duties? If not, why cannot the deficiency be made up by increasing the strength of the Civilian Sub-Divisional Officers?

(c) Is it a fact that the present system of recruitment for appointment of Civilian Sub-Divisional Officers is almost entirely from the Lower Subordinates (Sub-Overseers); and, if so, will the Government be pleased to consider the advisability of recruiting this service from regularly qualified and trained Upper Subordinates and Engineers?

Sir Godfrey Fell: (a) Yes. The proportion of civilian Sub-divisional officers is 15 per cent. The following are the reasons why in the Military Works Services the proportion of civilians employed as Sub-divisional officers is comparatively small :

- (i) A Sub-divisional officer has often during his service to deal with defences, work in arsenals, etc., and this work is better understood by men with military training.
- (ii) The Military Works Services is a part of the Army in India and provides a reserve of military subordinates for War. The larger the civilian element in the Military Works Services the smaller this reserve becomes.

(b) The establishment of military upper subordinates (now called Sub-divisional officers) used always to be filled by British non-commissioned officers, who were trained either at Rurki or on the temporary establishment and have proved eminently satisfactory. The Thomason College, however, no longer affords facilities for the training of British non-commissioned officers, and, in order to complete the expanded cadre of non-commissioned officers, it has been necessary to obtain men from the War Office. Those first sent out were found to be suitable. Amongst those sent out more recently, however, some have proved unsuitable and are being sent back this year to the United Kingdom. As for the rest, it is hoped that after a period of practical training they will prove suitable for permanent employment. Endeavours are being made to arrange for their technical education at an Engineering College. The reasons for not making up the deficiency by increasing the strength of the civilian Sub-divisional officers are those given in reply to part (a) of the question.

(c) Vacancies among the civilian Sub-divisional officers have usually been filled by promoting deserving permanent sub-overseers, who have proved their worth in the charge of a sub-division. A few temporary overseers, some with recognised college qualifications, have been appointed. If these men prove suitable, Government are willing to consider the advisability of increasing their number.

THE PROVINCIAL ENGINEER SERVICE.

383. Khan Sahib M. M. Ikramullah Khan: (1) With reference to the Government of India, Public Works Department, Establishment, Resolution No. 192-E.A., dated 1st April 1920, is the new Provincial Engineer Service open to the Upper Subordinates for a period of five years only, and out of these five years have two years already passed, and with reference to the Director General of Military Works Circular No. 9-A. of 8th June, 1920, are two Upper Subordinates to be recommended every year for appointment to this Service?

(2) If so, will the Government lay on the table a statement showing :

- (a) the names and qualifications of the men recommended by the Military Works Services during the last two years, and
- (b) how many were appointed?

If none were appointed, will the Government be pleased to state reasons for not appointing any?

(3) Is it a fact that the Deputy Director of Military Works, Northern Command, has issued instructions that no further applications for appointment to the new Provincial Engineer Establishment be sent? If so, has this been done under authority of the Government of India?

Sir Godfrey Fell: (1) At the date on which the Resolution referred to was issued (i. e. the 1st April 1920), the Government of India prescribed five years as the period for which the new Provincial Engineering Services should be kept open for Upper subordinates. Since the 1st April 1921, however, the Local Governments have had complete control over their provincial services and are at liberty to retain, reduce or extend this period of five years.

According to the circular issued by the Director General, Military Works, two upper subordinates were to be recommended for appointment each year from the Military Works Services.

(2) (a) and (b). A statement is laid on the table.

(3) To the first part of this Question, the Answer is in the affirmative. The reason for issuing the instructions was that information had been received that there were no vacancies in the Punjab Engineering Service (Buildings and Roads Branch). The instructions were not issued under the authority of the Government of India.

Statement showing the names and qualifications of Military Works Services Sub-divisional Officers recommended by Military Works Services for appointment to the new Provincial Engineer Service of Public Works Department.

APPORTIONMENT OF THE REPARATION RECEIPTS.

384. Mr. B. Venkatapatiraju: Will the Government be pleased to state:

- (a) Whether the Imperial Conference agreed that the reparation receipts should be apportioned as follows:—Britain 86.65, minor colonies .80, Canada and Australia 4.35, New Zealand 1.75, South Africa .60, Newfoundland .10, and India 1.20 per cent.
- (b) How the balance 4.45 per cent. is proposed to be dealt with?
- (c) What was the expenditure incurred respectively by the countries named above on account of war?
- (d) Whether the amount allotted to India is proportionate to the expenditure incurred by her?
- (e) Whether the Indian representatives were placed in full possession of information regarding the whole expenditure incurred by India?
- (f) Whether the Government of India propose to take any action to adjust the difference, if any?

The Honourable Dr. T. B. Sarpu: (a) and (b). The percentages named in the Honourable Member's question are correct, except that Britain's share should be 86.85 per cent and not 86.65 per cent; but the Honourable Member has apparently assumed that Canada and Australia are to receive together 4.35 per cent, whereas in reality each is to receive that share. There is, therefore, no balance. In suggesting a balance of 4.45 per cent, the Honourable Member has probably made a slight error of addition.

(c) and (d). Since the standard of apportionment adopted at the Imperial Conference was not based on expenditure incurred on account of the War, these parts of the question are not really relevant. In any case the information asked for is not available.

(e) As already stated the apportionment was not based on the whole expenditure incurred on the War; but Indian representatives had information as to the actual sums by which it was estimated that India would eventually be out of pocket under the headings for which Germany agreed to pay reparation in the Treaty of Versailles.

(f) The reply is in the negative.

MUNITIONS CASE WITHDRAWAL.

385. Mr. B. Venkatapatiraju: Will the Government be pleased to state:

- (a) Whether the attention of the Government has been drawn to the leader of the Calcutta Statesman dated the 9th August 1921, regarding the Munitions Case withdrawal?
- (b) Whether the Government instructed the Advocate-General to make the statement which he did, suggesting that the guilt can be brought home to Mr. Karnani and Mr. Banerjee, but that to save some poor innocents and swadeshi concerns the charge was withdrawn?

- (c) Whether any steps were proposed to be taken for realising Rs. 1,40,000 alleged to have been lost to the Government from the aforesaid persons by a civil suit if they are really liable?
- (d) Whether this is a solitary instance or one of several suspected frauds that have not seen the light regarding munitions and war purchases?
- (e) Whether the Government propose to publish a full statement of the whole transaction?

(Vide Reply to Question No. 373.)

DIFFERENTIAL TREATMENT FOR POLITICAL PRISONERS.

386. Mr. P. Venkatapatiraju: Will the Government be pleased to state whether they propose to issue instructions to the Local Governments that political prisoners should be treated differently from the ordinary convicts on the lines adopted in England, vide Prisons Act, 1877 (40-41 Vict., Ch. 21), Sec. 40, Prisons Act, 1898 (61-62 Vict., Ch. 41), Sec. 6 (5)?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: The Honourable Member is referred to the reply given on the 19th September 1921 to Pandit Jawahar Lal Bhargava's Question on the same subject.

INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

387. Rai Bahadur Bahshi Sohan Lal: (a) Will Government be pleased to state whether it is correct or not:

- (i) that the increase in pension which has recently been sanctioned benefits those whose monthly pension does not exceed Rs. 40 per mensem;
- (ii) that it benefits only gazetted officers whose monthly pension exceeds Rs. 416 per mensem;
- (iii) that no increase is allowed to non-gazetted officers' pensions of any amount, nor to gazetted officers' pensions amounting to less than Rs. 416 per mensem;
- (iv) that the proportion of Indians is much larger in category (iii) than in (ii), and that the proportion of Europeans is larger in (ii) than in (iii)?

(b) Will Government be pleased to state the principle adopted in excluding gazetted officers drawing less than Rs. 416 per mensem as pension, and non-gazetted officers drawing any amount of pension from the benefit of the increase in pensions?

(c) Will Government be pleased to state whether there is any representation of the persons covered by clause (a) (iii) for consideration before Government?

The Honourable Mr. W. M. Hailey: I would refer the Honourable Member to the reply which I have given to a somewhat similar question put by Mr. Wali Mohamed Hussanally. In that reply I have stated the increases which have been given in existing scales of pensions and the reasons underlying such increases. I have no information on the matter of proportion raised in (a) (iv) of the Honourable Member's Question. Complete lists of pensioners could only be obtained by a detailed analysis of figures maintained in the various audit offices, and I need perhaps not add that no calculation of the proportion of pensioners of various classes affected formed any consideration when the decision was arrived at.

VACATION OF THE COURT OF THE JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER OF SIND.

388. Mr. S. C. Shahani: (a) In reply to a question put by Mr. Wadhmal Oodharam, M.L.C., in the last Session of the Bombay Legislative Council, did the Government reply that 'the vacation of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Sind was limited to one month under the orders of the Government of India'?

(b) If so, will the Government of India be pleased to consider the advisability of not limiting the vacation of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Sind to one month?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: The restriction of the annual vacation of the Courts of the Judicial Commissioners in Oudh, Sindh and the Central Provinces to a period not exceeding one month was imposed when the concession allowing the officers of the Courts to take privilege leave under the ordinary rules was granted. The point is referred to in the first note under Article 278 of the Civil Service Regulations. By reason of the provisions of Section 96-B, sub-section (4), of the Government of India Act, this provision must be regarded as a rule made under that section. It will probably be possible for the question to be reconsidered by Local Governments when the provisions of the Civil Service Regulations in this respect are replaced by the proposed Fundamental Rules under that Section.

DIVISIONAL COMMISSIONERS, CENTRAL PROVINCES.

389. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala: (a) Have the Government noticed in the Leader of Allahabad, dated the 12th of August 1921, at page 5 in column 1, the report about the proceedings of the Central Provinces Legislative Council relating to the desirability of abolishing the posts of Commissioners of Divisions?

(b) Has the Central Provinces Legislative Council passed a Resolution recommending that it is desirable to abolish the posts of Commissioners of Divisions?

(c) Do the Government consider the advisability of the abolition of the posts of Commissioners of Divisions, transferring to the District Judge any judicial work hitherto performed by the Commissioners and removing the media of correspondence between the District Officers and the Government?

(d) Will the Government be pleased to lay on the table the correspondence, if any, which they have had on the subject with the Home Government or any Provincial Government?

(e) What is the annual cost of maintaining the Commissioners of Divisions with their staff, etc., throughout the whole of India?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: (a) and (b) The Government of India have seen the report referred to, but they have received no official communication on the subject.

(c) Government have not considered the advisability of adopting the measures recommended.

(d) There is no such correspondence.

(e) The expenditure for the whole of India amounted to Rs. 31,58,628 for the year ended the 31st March 1920. No later statistics are available.

MINISTERS AND THE PROVINCIAL EXECUTIVE COUNCIL MEMBERS.

390. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala: Will the Government be pleased to state whether they have been consulted in the appointment of Ministers in the Provinces and Members of the Executive Councils in those provinces in which new Councils have been formed for the first time? If so, will the Government be pleased to lay the correspondence on the table?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: The Government of India were not officially consulted.

PERSONNEL OF STANDING COMMITTEE FOR REVISION OF STATUTES.

391. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala: Will the Government be pleased to state the personnel of the Standing Committee for the revision of Statutes, and how many of them are lawyers, by whom were the members of the said Committee elected, selected or nominated and when, and what work has the Committee done so far?

The Honourable Dr. T. B. Sapru: The Committee on Statute Law Revision has not yet been constituted; but it is hoped that a Resolution of the Government appointing the Committee will shortly be issued.

VISIT OF HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS THE PRINCE OF WALES.

392. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala: (a) Has the programme of the visit of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales been settled, if so, by whom, and will the Government be pleased to lay the same on the table?

(b) For how many days is His Royal Highness going to stay in India from the date of his landing to the date of his embarkation?

(c) For how many days are His Royal Highness and party going to stay at the capital of the United Provinces, viz., Allahabad, and for how many days at Lucknow?

(d) Are the homages of the people of the United Provinces proposed to be received by His Royal Highness at Lucknow or at the capital of the United Provinces?

(e) Where are the various functions including the public reception of His Royal Highness in the United Provinces going to be performed?

(f) In case the visit of His Royal Highness and party to the capital of the United Provinces according to the present programme be extremely brief, do Government propose to alter the programme so that the principal functions connected with the visit of His Royal Highness to the United Provinces as such be celebrated at the capital of the provinces?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent (on behalf of the Honourable Sir John Wood): (a) The programme of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales' tour in India was framed in consultation with the Advisory Committee nominated by His Excellency the Viceroy, which is fully representative of Indian opinion. It was approved by the Palace authorities and published in a Press Communiqué of the 27th July 1921.

A copy of the programme has been laid on the table.

(b) His Royal Highness will spend exactly four months in India. He will land in Bombay on the 17th November 1921, and will sail from Karachi on the 17th March 1922.

(c) His Royal Highness will stay three days at Lucknow and one day at Allahabad.

(d), (e) and (f). The detailed programme is under preparation by the Local Government to whom the Honourable Member's suggestion will be forwarded.

Mr. W. M. Hussanally : May I inquire, Sir, if any representation has been received from Karachi asking that the stay of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales at Karachi be prolonged, and what action has been taken in regard to that matter?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : I will make inquiries and give the Honourable Member the information he requires later. I have not got it here.

INDIAN OFFICERS IN THE ROYAL AIR FORCE, ETC.

393. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala : (a) How many Indians are employed as officers or to fill other ranks in—

- (i) Royal Air Force,
- (ii) Fighting units with machine guns,
- (iii) Army Headquarters,
- (iv) Headquarters of commands,
- (v) Brigades,
- (vi) Military Transport Department,
- (vii) Veterinary Department,
- (viii) Ordnance and Clothing Department?

(b) Are Anglo-Indians, and Indian Christians treated in the category of Europeans or Indians in cases where there happen to be only two divisions, viz., Europeans and Indians?

Sir Godfrey Fell : (a) It is extremely difficult to answer this question owing to the vague and unusual classification of the units of the Indian Army that the Honourable Member has adopted. I could give him the number of Indian officers employed in the various units of the Indian Army classified in the usual way, but this apparently is not the information that the Honourable Member requires. As to the number of Indians employed 'to fill other ranks'—in order to answer this question under sub-head (ii) alone, I should have to give the total strength of the Indian Army. I do not think the Honourable Member requires this information.

(b) This part of the question is not understood.

MANUFACTURE OF AEROPLANES AND OTHER MACHINES IN INDIA.

394. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala : (a) Have the Government made any move in the matter of manufacturing machines, including aeroplanes, steamships and railway engines in India? If so, what?

(b) What help, if any, do the Government propose to give for encouraging private enterprise in that direction?

Mr. A. C. Chatterjee : (a) The Honourable Member's attention is invited to the answer given on the 28th of March, 1921, to a similar question asked by him. The question whether action will be taken definitely to encourage the manufacture of railway engines in India is now under the consideration of Government, and an announcement on the subject may be expected shortly. It is hoped that India will be in a position to manufacture locomotives satisfactorily in quality and price in the course of a few years.

(b) As the Honourable Member is doubtless aware the development of industries is a Provincial transferred subject. Apart from the manufacture of railway locomotives, to which I have already referred, the Central Government have at present no specific scheme for assisting private enterprise in the directions indicated.

INCREASE TO GOVERNMENT PENSIONERS.

395. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala : (a) Has any, and if so, what, increase been given to Government pensioners in India, and has any class of pensioners been overlooked?

(b) Have the Government received any memorial by the Bangalore Pensioners' Association on the subject of increase; and, if so, what orders, if any, have been passed by Government thereon?

The Honourable Mr. W. M. Hailey : I would refer the Honourable Member to the answer which I have given to Question No. 282 by Mr. Wali Mahomed Hussanally.

RIGHT HONOURABLE SRINIVASA SASTRI'S MISSION.

396. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala : (a) Will the Government be pleased to lay on the table the papers showing the object of sending the Right Honourable Srinivasa Sastri, P.C., Member of the Council of State, to Europe and the work done by him in fulfilment of his mission?

(b) Will the Government be pleased to lay on the table papers showing what other persons were similarly sent to Europe and also the work done by each?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : The Right Honourable Srinivasa Sastri went to Europe as a Member of the Railway Committee and also as a representative of the Government of India to attend the Imperial Cabinet Meeting held in London in June last. His Highness the Maharao of Cutch also went to Europe as a representative of the Government of India to attend the same meeting.

That their valuable services have been highly appreciated by His Majesty's Government is apparent from the reports transmitted to this country, which have been a source of the greatest gratification to the Government of India. The Government have, however, at present no papers to lay on the table regarding the work done by them.

WORKING OF CONSTITUTIONAL REFORMS.

397. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala: Will the Government be pleased to lay on the table correspondence (if any) which they have had with the Home Government in England about the working and adequacy of the constitutional reforms?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: The wording of the question is so general that I cannot tell what correspondence is meant. If the Honourable Member will give me some more particular indication of the correspondence to which he refers, I shall be glad to consider whether I can meet his wishes. I may mention to the Honourable Member that the correspondence on this subject fills several volumes.

SEPARATION OF JUDICIAL AND EXECUTIVE FUNCTIONS.

398. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala: (a) What steps, if any, have the Government taken, or do they propose to take, for the separation of judicial and executive functions; and, if so, when?

(b) Has the attention of the Government been invited to the Resolution and discussion on the subject in the United Provinces Council printed at pages 789-803 of the official report of the proceedings of the United Provinces Legislative Council, Volume II; and, if so, what is the policy of the Government in the matter?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: I made a full statement as to the policy of Government as regards this question in another place on the 9th March 1921. I said then that the matter is a Provincial one, and if any Local Government decides to take it up, the Government of India will raise no objection, and will proceed to make such legislative changes as may be necessary to give effect to the proposal of the Local Government. I have nothing to add to that statement.

UNINTERRUPTED FLOW OF THE GANGES AND JUMNA RIVERS.

399. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala: What steps have the Government taken and what further steps do they propose to take to secure constant and uninterrupted flow of water in the Ganges and the Jumna throughout the year?

Colonel Sir S. D'A. Crookshank: The Honourable Member is referred to the Reply given at the meeting of the Legislative Assembly held on the 15th February, 1921 to the Question No. 28 by Rai Jadu Nath Majumdar Bahadur, C.I.E., M.L.A., regarding the uninterrupted flow of the Ganges River. The views of the Local Government on the representation there referred to are still awaited. The question of the uninterrupted flow of the Jumna River has not been brought to the notice of the Government of India.

APPOINTMENT OF INDIANS TO HIGHER SALARIED POSTS.

400. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala: (a) Will the Government be pleased to state how many more Indians have been employed by the Government during the régime of His Excellency the present Viceroy and Governor General of India on posts carrying salaries of Rs. 500 and upwards and how many of them have been so appointed on posts carrying salaries of Rs. 1,000, or upwards?

(b) In what departments and on what posts no Indian has yet been employed on salaries of Rs. 1,000, or above.

(c) In what departments and on what posts the number of Indians drawing Rs. 1,000, or above, is less than half? If so, what is the percentage of the Indian element in each?

(d) Do the Government propose to introduce Indian element in those departments or posts where no Indian has yet been employed and gradually increase the percentage of Indian element by filling all future vacancies by Indians till the proportion of at least 50 per cent Indian officers and Heads of the departments is reached in every department and on every high post?

The Honourable Mr. W. M. Hailey: The information asked for is being collected, and will be laid on the table in due course.

HIGHER PAID OFFICIALS UNDER THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA.

401. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala: (a) What is the total number of persons employed by the Government of India on monthly salaries (i) between Rs. 500 and Rs. 1,000, and (ii) above Rs. 1,000, and how many of those respectively are Indians?

(b) What is the total amount of such salaries and allowances paid to Indians and Europeans, respectively?

The Honourable Mr. W. M. Hailey: (a) The total number of persons employed under the Government of India and paid for from Central revenues on salaries (i) between Rs. 500 and Rs. 1,000, and (ii) above Rs. 1,000 is 1,454 and 1,030, respectively, out of which, 431 and 69, respectively, are Indians. The figures relate to the entire staff employed under the Central Government whether at the headquarters or at outstations, except that in the case of the Army Department only, the headquarters establishments have been taken into account as the collection of data as to the Army as a whole would have involved an immense amount of trouble and correspondence. The figures refer to present salaries and as most posts are now on time-scale, many officers now counted as under Rs. 1,000 will eventually draw pay in excess of that amount.

(b) The total amount of such salaries paid to Indians and Europeans respectively, is Rs. 3,82,300 and Rs. 23,03,849 per mensem.

PASSENGER SUPERINTENDENTS ON RAILWAYS.

402. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala: (a) Will the Government be pleased to lay on the table a statement showing the names, caste, race, qualification and experience, pay and headquarters of passenger superintendents on railways with their circle of duties?

(b) With the object of enabling the public to seek the help of the passenger superintendents when needed, do the Government propose to order that the information sought for in part (a) of this question be published in railway time tables?

(c) Do the Government further propose to order that passenger superintendents should bear a badge with the words "passenger superintendent"?

printed or engraved in local vernacular so that 3rd class passengers may be able to read it and thereby recognise the passenger superintendents to enable them to seek their help when needed?

(d) Is it the duty of every railway employee to assist passengers travelling on railways?

Colonel W. D. Waghora: (a) A statement giving the information so far as it is available and concerns the more important railways is placed on the table.

(b) Government do not propose to order the publication of the information in Railway Time-tables and Guides.

(c) Passenger Superintendents are given a distinctive uniform and it is not therefore considered necessary to order the wearing of badges in the manner suggested.

(d) The reply is in the affirmative.

HINDU WATERMEN AT RAILWAY STATIONS.

408. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala: (a) Have the Government inquired whether or not Hindu watermen at railway stations are in practice actually employed occasionally during train times on loading, unloading, shunting work or are engaged on private service by the railway staff?

(b) If so, what steps do the Government propose to put a stop to the practice wherever found?

(c) Will the Government be pleased to direct that in railway time tables an asterisk mark be made against those stations where no railway watermen have been employed, so as to enable the passengers to check the absence of railway waterman from the station?

(d) How many stations are there at which no railway waterman is employed, and if the number of such stations be very small, will the Government be pleased to lay a list of such stations on the table?

(e) What is the maximum and the minimum pay of railway watermen known to the Government?

(f) Will the Government be pleased to lay on the table copies of all previous instructions and circulars, if any, issued to station masters and guards to watch the work of the Hindu watermen on railway stations which appear to have been issued as suggested in the answer given to my Question No. 643 (c)* on the 28th March 1921?

(g) Is any exemplary punishment prescribed in case any station master or any other member of the railway staff employs a railway waterman at train times on any other work except supplying water to passengers, if so, what?

(h) And have the station masters and other railway employees been apprised of the same. If not, do the Government propose now to issue fresh instructions on the subject, and to print a copy of the same in railway time tables to inform the public?

(i) Has the attention of the agents of railways been invited to the suggestion that watermen should wear badges in which 'Hindu waterman' and 'Muhammadan waterman' be engraved as the case may be in local vernacular and the same words may be printed on their buckets and jugs?

(j) If so, will the Government be pleased to inquire from the Agents how far the suggestion has been carried out and what further steps are the Agents taking to carry it out?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn : (a) and (b) Government have no information to the effect that Hindu watermen at railway stations are employed otherwise than on their duties as watermen, but the matter will be referred to Railway Administrations.

(c) As the ordinary Indian passenger is generally illiterate and seldom sees a time-table, it is not considered that any useful purpose would be served by giving effect to this suggestion.

(d) To obtain the information would involve considerable correspondence and labour. At the larger stations elaborate arrangements are made for the supply of water to passengers at hydrants and by watermen, and, in the hot weather especially there is a waterman practically at every station.

(e) As I stated in my reply to the similar question put by the Honourable Member in this Assembly at Delhi on the 28th March last, the pay of watermen is fixed according to the prevailing local rates and varies on the different railways. The maximum pay may be taken at Rs. 14 and the minimum Rs. 10 per mensem.

(f) Copies of Railway Board's letters to Railway Administrations dated 23rd January 1918, 23rd August 1918 and 19th April 1920, which deal inter alia with the subject of the supply of water to passengers, are laid on the table.

(g) and (h) I would invite the Honourable Member to refer to my answers to (a) and (b).

(i) and (j) The question was brought to the notice of railway administrations in the Railway Board's letter No. 507-E., dated 1st April 1921. It is not proposed to press this matter further.

RAILWAY DEPARTMENT.

(RAILWAY BOARD.)

To

The Agents, Assam-Bengal, Barsi Light, Bengal and North-Western, Bengal-Nagpur, Bombay, Baroda and Central India, Burma, Eastern Bengal, East Indian, Great Indian Peninsula, Madras and Southern Mahratta, North Western, Oudh and Rohilkhand, Rohilkund and Kumaon and South Indian Railways.

The Agent and the Chief Engineer, His Highness the Nizam's Guaranteed State Railway.

The Manager, Jodhpur-Bikaner Railway.

Simla, the 23rd January 1918.

DEAR SIR,

I am directed to inform you that the Railway Board have recently received representations regarding the discomforts 3rd class passengers are subjected to, and have also noticed many complaints on the subject in the press.

2. The Board recognise that most railways have in recent years done much to improve matters in this direction, also that the present time, when everything possible is being done to discourage passenger traffic, and it is impossible either to obtain new, or improve existing stock, is not altogether a suitable time to take this matter up. They are, however, of opinion that in many cases more might be done in the direction of improvements which depend mainly on supervision and the provision of adequate staff, and in this connection I am to draw attention to the following points in connection with which it is considered there is frequently room for improvement and which call for the exercise of constant supervision on the part of both railway officers and subordinates :

- (a) Issue of tickets and weighing of luggage in ample time before departure of trains.
- (b) Admission of passengers on platforms earlier, in order to avoid the great crush and rush for seats which so frequently occurs.
- (c) Drawing up of trains at large stations as far as possible on the platforms which best meet the convenience of passengers.
- (d) Provision of sufficient and suitable waiting accommodation, with benches or seats for passengers.
- (e) The provision of sufficient and suitable refreshments, with accommodation for the vendors.
- (f) The provision at all large stations of an ample supply of good water with facilities for supplying the same to passengers.
- (g) The provision of sufficient latrine accommodation of approved type and the proper cleaning of the same.
- (h) The maintenance of all coaching stock and station premises in a clean and sanitary condition.

3. As examples of what has already been done in this direction, on certain railways Passenger Superintendents whose sole duty is to look after the comfort and convenience of passengers are employed. On the Bengal-Nagpur Railway, Railway Train Conductors are provided, and on the Great Indian Peninsula Railway there are standing instructions for Guards on the subject. On the East Indian Railway a special Indian staff is employed for the supervision of the catering arrangements. The Railway Board consider that all these are steps in the right direction which might with advantage be extended. The general point they wish to bring to notice at the present time is that though equipment cannot be improved, additional staff can be obtained, and the fact of the shortage of accommodation calls for increased attention by the railway staff, with constant and efficient supervision.

4. I am also to say that a suggestion has been made that bye-laws should be framed and notices pasted on the walls of carriages and at stations in order to secure cleanliness on the part of passengers. I am to ask for your opinion on this suggestion.

Yours faithfully,

B. STANLEY,

Assistant Secretary, Railway Board.

DEAR SIR,

In reference to the replies received from Railway Administrations to Railway Board's circular No. 552-T.-17, dated the 23rd January 1918, I am directed to forward, herewith, a Note by the Railway Board and to say that though the Board recognise that many railways have already done and are doing much in the directions required, they think it desirable to impress on them generally the need for giving constant attention to the points in the note and especially for ensuring efficient supervision, to see that instructions are at all times properly carried out.

2. As regards the framing of a bye-law and the pasting of notices on walls of carriages and at stations in order to secure cleanliness. I am to say that while the Railway Board believe that under present conditions such a bye-law and notices cannot do much good, they are inclined to think, as a matter of policy and since railways do not seem to have any great objection, that it would be better to introduce them if it were only to show that everything possible is being done by railways by taking up the question.

Note by the Railway Board.

Where continuous booking has been arranged, it is not always the case that passengers get tickets at all hours. To ensure that the good intentions of the Railway are carried into effect it is essential that frequent inspections are made to see that the staff required to be on duty are actually present and that they do not put off intending passengers.

2. A study at all times of the fluctuating requirements of traffic is necessary to avoid the inconvenience that passengers sometimes have to undergo at the time of buying tickets. An exodus from business centres at week-ends, or a rush on account of large and local fairs, festivals, and the like, sudden applications for renewals of season tickets, all require careful watching by an officer, and such emergencies should be foreseen and met by providing more booking clerks and a larger number of ticket windows than usual. It may be necessary for an officer to be present at the station and see that the measures ordered are in full operation and are adequate.

3. The class of men employed generally as booking clerks and their education and training, do not, as a rule, go to make for efficiency. The question of their pay requires consideration. They run the constant risk of debts and on the other hand they are always open to temptations. It is essential therefore that they be sufficiently well-paid. To expect booking clerks to commence work after passing their examination and without any practical training appears to be to court trouble. Their training should be much more practical than is generally the case and by familiarity with dummy tickets and counters they should be made thoroughly efficient in their duties before being put on duty to sell tickets to passengers. While under training their general education, particularly with reference to the Railway geography of India, should be improved upon.

4. Long hours of duty for booking clerks make the service unattractive and lead to careless methods of working. The provision of a sufficient number of well-paid booking clerks of a class above the average of other station clerks, well-trained and of fair education, performing not too long hours of duty should be the ideal.

5. There is much to be said for the practice of keeping passengers off platforms till trains have arrived and inward passengers cleared the platforms. But in the majority of instances, there is no necessity for the practice which undoubtedly causes trouble to the outgoing passengers. Except at stations where due to the narrow width of platforms or for particular trains by which there is generally a great rush of inward passengers, and under the usual circumstances, passengers should be allowed to gain admittance to their proper platforms as soon as possible after they have purchased tickets. This would necessitate entrance gates being manned for considerably longer periods than is generally done at present and staff will also be required to see that the passengers distribute themselves along the length of the platform in the most convenient manner.

6. At terminal stations rakes should be placed along platforms well before the advertised time of departure and the little saving in gas or electricity at night should not be made a reason for keeping trains in the yard till the last moment.

7. The question of refreshments for Indian passengers has been kept prominently in view by railway administrations and much improvement has resulted in recent years, but the matter requires further consideration by railways generally. The points to remember are that, first, railways are required to cater for the needs of different religious sects; secondly, for the middle classes and the masses and, thirdly, for men and women. These various requirements require very careful study. The aim should be to provide a morning and an evening meal for the better class of passengers on long journeys, careful attention being given to the religious susceptibilities and customs of the people, and for the masses an abundant supply of food of the description they are used to in the locality. There is no reason why railways should suffer pecuniary loss in securing this aim. Catering on railways is a profitable undertaking and whether done departmentally or through contractors, loss can and should be guarded against. It is suggested that in this matter the co-operation might be obtained, if possible, of Indian gentlemen of standing in various centres. They are in a position to suggest how the wants of their countrymen can be best met, and the experience gained from a beginning made on these lines at a few towns will be found of use in framing the general policy for the line.

8. In the matter of supply of drinking water for passengers, it is not enough to have the number of hydrants on a platform increased, for during the hot months the water from the overhead iron tanks coming out of the hydrants is often quite unfit for drinking. Nor is it sufficient to appoint additional watermen at all stations during the hot weather; it is essential also to secure the men's attendance. A liberal supply of cold drinking water should be provided at all main stations and receptacles ready filled should be on the platform before arrival of trains and watermen present to supply the water to passengers in carriages. It again becomes a question of efficient supervision and constant inspection to see that the arrangements sanctioned are in proper working order. At small wayside stations and at stations where there is difficulty in procuring water, no arrangements other than increasing the staff of watermen seem possible but it may be noted that in this matter also improvement is possible by proper supervision. It is possible to lay too much stress on the provision of a filtered water-supply, at least when a proper filtered supply is impracticable or difficult, till better arrangements can be made, a plentiful supply of the water available in the locality should be made accessible to the passengers, the majority of whom are not used to drinking sterilised water. A plentiful supply of water at all principal stations at all hours of the day and night and providing the water cold, would go a long way towards avoiding complaints.

DEAR SIR,

In inviting a reference to paragraphs 7 and 8 of the enclosure to Railway Board's circular No. 552-T.-17, dated the 23rd August 1918, regarding refreshments and water-supply for passengers, I am directed to say that the need for the provision of an ample supply of cool drinking water for passengers and of refreshment rooms for upper class Hindu and Muhammadan passengers has again been brought to the notice of the Railway Board,

2. The Board are aware that Railway Administrations have been giving these matters their attention, but they think that further improvement might still be effected, and they will be glad if you will give them special consideration.

WASHING ARRANGEMENTS ON RAILWAYS.

404. Lala Girdhari Lal Agarwala : (a) Do the Government propose to order that at all junction stations special arrangements be made for wash and bath particularly for 3rd class passengers ?

(b) Do the Government propose to direct that all passenger trains except mails should stop in the morning for one hour at a convenient station affording facilities for wash and bath especially to 3rd class passengers ?

(c) In case the reply be that the suggestions are impracticable, will the Government be pleased to state the grounds of the impracticability of the suggestions and the difficulties which are felt by the railway companies ?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn : (a) There are waiting rooms for 1st and 2nd class passengers suitably equipped for washing and bathing purposes at most junction stations.

Facilities in the shape of water taps, and in some cases bathing platforms, are provided for the convenience of 3rd class passengers, and Railway Administrations are always prepared to consider reasonable and practicable suggestions for improvements in this matter. It must, however, be remembered that resources both physical and financial are limited, and Government do not propose to issue a general order on the lines suggested.

(b) The running of passenger trains is timed so as to suit the convenience of the majority of the travelling public, and it would be impossible to work to a rule such as that proposed without seriously interfering with this principle. It may be mentioned that the average distance travelled by a 3rd class passenger in India is about 40·73 miles.

(c) It is hoped that in view of what has been stated above, the Honourable Member will recognise that these proposals are impracticable.

CIVIL MARRIAGE BILL.

405. Lala Girdhari Lal Agarwala : Will Dr. Gour be pleased to answer the following questions in connection with his Civil Marriage Bill :

(a) What percentage of the entire population of Indians demand the proposed legislation ?

(b) Would the proposed legislation not be in conflict with the Hindu law which enjoins a Hindu to take a second wife in the life-time of the first, if the first wife does not bring forth male issue ?

- (c) Would not the proposed legislation be opposed to the Holy Koran and the Muhammadan law under which it is legal or jaiz for a Muhammadan to have four wives at one and the same time?
- (d) Under the proposed legislation would a Hindu or Muhammadan be entitled, as of right, to have more than one wife if he pleases?
- (e) Can a Hindu wife married according to the Hindu law be divorced?
- (f) Would the wife of a Hindu married according to the proposed legislation, when passed into law, be subject to the law of divorce?
- (g) Is it intended by the proposed law to introduce the system of divorce amongst Hindus and Muhammadans contrary to their personal laws under which they are governed, who choose to marry under the proposed law?
- (h) What would be the law of property applicable to the issues of marriage under the proposed law?
- (i) Will the issues of a marriage under the proposed law be able to inherit the property of a Hindu maternal grandfather?
- (j) In the case of a union between a Hindu male and a Muhammadan female under the proposed law, would the issue of such a marriage be able to inherit property from her mother's relations under the Muhammadan law to which he would have been entitled if the marriage of his mother had been performed with a Muhammadan male under the Muhammadan law?

Dr. H. S. Gour : I have given a reply to the Secretary of the Legislative Department to all these questions.

If he will pass it on to the Honourable Member...

The Honourable Dr. T. B. Sapru : I have certain supplementary questions to ask, Sir.

The Honourable Mr. W. M. Bailey : Is not the Honourable Member prepared to reply these questions?

Dr. H. S. Gour : I sent the reply on to...

Mr. President : It is no part of the Secretary's duties either to frame or to give the reply for the Honourable Member.

Dr. H. S. Gour : (a) A considerable proportion of the educated population of India. The Hindu States of Baroda, Indore and Kolhapur have long since enacted identical measures and these have aroused no opposition. The Madras Legislative Council has recently by the substantial majority of 54 to 23 (official and seven other members remaining neutral) approved of the measure and all Reform Associations throughout the country are understood to have similarly approved of it. The Bombay Reform Conference held under the auspices of the Bombay National Home Rule League have accorded their hearty support to the Bill as a measure of wholesome social reform which derives its strength not upon any expressed will of the proletariat, but upon its own inherent merit as conducive to the strength and solidarity of the nation.

(b) and (c). The measure is an enabling one and those who wish to marry under their personal law remain unaffected by it.

- (d) No: see section 15 of the principal Act.
- (e) Yes, when permitted by custom.
- (f) Yes, see section 17 of the principal Act.
- (g) No such change is contemplated.
- (h) The personal law of the father.
- (i) Yes.
- (j) Yes. Muhammadan law expressly recognises intermarriages with non-Muhammadan monotheists and offers no legal impediment to succession.

The Honourable Dr. T. B. Sapru : May I know, Sir, whether I can put Supplementary Questions to Dr. Gour or to Mr. Agarwala?

Mr. President : A Supplementary Question must be addressed to the answerer and not to the questioner.

The Honourable Dr. T. B. Sapru : Will Dr. Gour be pleased to state what percentage of the entire population of India do not demand the proposed legislation?

Dr. H. S. Gour : I have no means, Sir, of answering that question.

The Honourable Dr. T. B. Sapru : May I ask another Supplementary Question, Sir? Will Dr. Gour be pleased to state whether the Hindu Law as represented in clause (b) of the question is correctly stated—whether it is a fact that the Hindu Law enjoins upon every Hindu to marry more than one wife, or whether it is a fact that it only permits it?

Dr. H. S. Gour : The answer to question (b) is that the Honourable Member has not correctly represented the Hindu Law. Hindu Law allows polygamy and not subject to the rules laid down in clause (b).

The Honourable Dr. T. B. Sapru : Another Supplementary Question, Sir. Will Dr. Gour be pleased to state whether it is true that Hindu Law allows divorce among the higher classes of Hindus?

Dr. H. S. Gour : The answer is that wherever it is permissible by custom, Hindu Law does not stand in the way of divorce.

The Honourable Dr. T. B. Sapru : Is there such a custom among the higher classes of Hindus?

Mr. President : Order, order. The Honourable the Law Member must put Supplementary Questions only for the purpose of seeking information and not for the interpretation of points of Hindu Law.

Mr. J. Chaudhuri : May I ask, Sir, if Dr. Gour is not aware of the fact that under the law in India as settled by British Courts of justice there is no bar with regard to intermarriages between the sub-castes of the same caste and there is only a bar with regard to intermarriages between the four primary castes?

Dr. H. S. Gour : It is so.

Mr. J. Chaudhuri : Is he aware that only lately doubt was thrown on this proposition by a decision of Mr. Justice Greaves in the High Court of Calcutta, and does he not think that it is desirable....

Mr. President : Order, order. The Honourable Member is not entitled to ask for an opinion.

Mr. J. Chaudhuri : May I know if the Honourable Member thinks it correct ...

Mr. President: That is out of order.

Mr. Jayanti Ramayya Pantalu Garu: May I ask, Sir, whether the Honourable Member thinks it right that such a delicate question affecting the personal law of one community should be brought forward for discussion and decision in a mixed Assembly like this consisting of Members belonging to several communities.

Mr. President: Order, order. The question of the admissibility of questions for this Assembly lies entirely with the Chair. The question of the admissibility of Resolutions lies with the Governor General. The question of caste depends upon the judgment of the House.

Mr. J. Chaudhuri: Is it a fact that Mr. Justice Greaves' decision has been set aside by an Appellate Bench of the Calcutta High Court?

Dr. H. S. Gour: Just so, and the case is reported in the Calcutta Weekly Notes edited by my Honourable friend.

Mr. W. M. Hussanally: May I inquire from Dr. Gour what authority he has to say that the Muhammadan law affords no impediment to a Muhammadan marrying a non-Muhammadan who is not a monotheist?

Dr. H. S. Gour: If my Honourable friend will read Ameer Ali, Vol. II, he will find my statement well justified.

FINE INFLICTED ON MAJOR YOUNG SIALKOT.

406. Munshi Iswar Saran: (a) Has the attention of Government been drawn to the case of Major Young of the 14th Jat Lancers, Sialkot, who has been fined Rs. 30 for an offence under section 120 of the Railways Act by Mr. Fyson, the District Magistrate of Sialkot?

(b) Will Government be pleased to state what departmental action has been taken against this officer?

Sir Godfrey Fell: (a) Yes.

(b) The attention of the Honourable Member is invited to the reply given to part (ii) of the question asked by Mr. Muhammad Faiyaz Khan on the 5th September, No. 58.

INDIANS IN THE FOREIGN AND POLITICAL DEPARTMENT.

407. Munshi Iswar Saran: (a) Will Government be pleased to state how many Indians are expected to be appointed by the end of the current year in the Foreign and Political Departments?

(b) What is the total number of Indians in this department up to the end of August 1921?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent (on behalf of the Honourable Sir John Wood): The Honourable Member is referred to the answer given to Question No. 171 put by Mr. N. M. Joshi.

EUROPEANS AND INDIANS ON THE BENGAL AND NORTH-WESTERN RAILWAY.

408. Munshi Iswar Saran: (a) Will Government be pleased to state the total number of Europeans and the total number of Indians receiving a monthly salary of rupees four hundred and upwards in the employment of the Bengal and North-Western Railway Company?

(b) Will Government be pleased to move the Railway Company to employ more Indians?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: (a) The total number of Europeans is fifty-six and of Indians is one.

(b) The matter has already been brought to the notice of the Company.

COMFORTS FOR INDIAN TROOPS.

409. Munshi Iswar Saran: Will Government be pleased to state whether some time ago a sum of rupees one and half lacs was sanctioned for the improvement of hospital accommodation and comforts for Indian troops under the Northern Command, and whether the authorities at Rawalpindi have decided to advance that sum to an Electrical Company going to be floated there and to put up electric fittings to some of the bungalows occupied by European officers?

Sir Godfrey Fell: A sum of Rs. 1,30,000 has been provided in the current year's Military Budget for the improvement of Indian Troops Hospitals in the Northern Command. This amount has not been re-appropriated for the purpose suggested, or for any other purpose.

TEMPORARY COMMISSIONS IN THE INDIAN MEDICAL SERVICE.

410. Munshi Iswar Saran: (a) Will Government be pleased to state the total number of temporary commissions granted during the war in the Indian Medical Service?

(b) Will Government be pleased to state how many of these temporary commissioned officers were Europeans or Anglo-Indians, and among Indians how many had English qualifications and how many had Indian qualifications?

(c) Will Government be pleased to state separately the total number of Civil Assistant Surgeons and private practitioners who were given temporary commissions?

Sir Godfrey Fell: (a) The total number of temporary commissions granted during the war in the Indian Medical Service was 1,138.

(b) Amongst these temporary commissioned Indian Medical Service officers there were 134 Europeans and Anglo-Indians (including 3 Military Assistant Surgeons). Of the Indians, 120 possessed English qualifications, and 884 Indian qualifications.

(c) Civil Assistant Surgeons ... 347

Private practitioners—

Europeans ... 134

Indians ... 657

INDIAN MEDICAL SERVICE OFFICERS RECRUITED DURING THE WAR.

411. Munshi Iswar Saran: (a) Is it a fact that some temporary Indian Medical Service Officers who volunteered in the years 1919 and 1920 when the war was practically over, have been granted permanent commissions, whilst those who volunteered when the war was on have been overlooked?

(b) If the answer to part (a) be in the affirmative, will Government be pleased to state the special reasons for such treatment?

Sir Godfrey Fell: (a) Four temporary Indian Medical Service officers who volunteered in 1919 and one who volunteered in 1920 have been granted permanent commissions. All five had been on active service—three in Mesopotamia and two on the North-West Frontier. It is not a fact that the claims of those who volunteered before 1919, during the Great War, were overlooked.

(b) In view of this explanation this part of the question does not arise.

NATIONAL FLAG FOR INDIA.

412. Munshi Iswar Saran: Will Government be pleased to state if it contemplates having a national flag for India?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: The reply is in the negative.

RACIAL DISTINCTION IN JAMALPUR WORKSHOPS.

413. Munshi Iswar Saran: (a) Has the attention of Government been drawn to a letter under the heading 'Racial distinction in Jamalpur Workshop of the East Indian Railway' in the issue of 7th August 1921 of the Amrita Bazar Patrika of Calcutta?

(b) Will Government be pleased to state which, if any, of the allegations contained in the letter referred to are correct?

(c) Is it a fact that there is a difference between the allowances, educational qualifications and facilities and general treatment of the Indian and European or Anglo-Indian apprentices in the Jamalpur, Kanchrapara and other workshops?

(d) If the answer to part (c) be in the affirmative, will Government be pleased to take immediate steps for removal of the differences?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: (a) (c) and (d). I would refer the Honourable Member to my reply to a similar question asked by Mr. K. C. Neogy.

(b) The subterranean passage referred to in the article is where the exit is crossed by the railway, and if the apprentices have had to wade through water, it has only been during exceptionally heavy rain. It is intended to roof over the exit and this, it is hoped, will overcome the difficulty.

As regards the apprentices' hostels no case of plague has appeared, as far as Government are aware, either in or near the quarter during the occupancy by the apprentices.

ESHER COMMITTEE'S REPORT.

414. Munshi Iswar Saran: (a) With reference to the acceptance in this Assembly on the 28th March 1921 by His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief of clauses (i) and (ii) of Resolution No. 10 regarding the Esher Committee's Report:

Will Government be pleased to state what serious efforts have been made to give effect to the acceptance by His Excellency?

(b) When does Government expect the territorial force and the system of short-colour service to actually come into existence?

(c) Will Government be pleased to expedite the formation of the territorial force and the introduction of the system of short-colour service?

Sir Godfrey Fell: (a) (i) The attention of the Honourable Member is invited to the reply given to the question asked by Lala Girdharilal Agarwala on the 5th September.

(ii) The existing system of enlistment in the Indian Army is tantamount to a short-colour service, as the Indian soldier attests for a period of four years with the colours from the date of his enrolment and, on the expiration of that period, he may take his discharge if he wishes to do so, after giving due notice to his Commanding Officer.

The question of introducing a system of short-colour service, followed by a period of service in the reserve, into the Indian Army is still under consideration. The present however is not considered opportune for making what is a very radical change in the conditions of service of the Indian soldier. As soon as the Indian Army has settled down to its post-war organisation, this question will be taken up.

(iii) This is a subject on which no pronouncement can be made at present. The question of the ratio of British to Indian troops in the Army in India was one of the chief matters laid before the Military Requirements Committee for their consideration. Their recommendations have now been forwarded to the Secretary of State for submission to the Committee of Imperial Defence, and, until the Sub-Committee of that body has given its opinion on the report, no statement can be made.

(b) and (c) Enrolment in the University Training Corps is in progress, and recruitment for the provincial battalions will be started without delay. I have already explained the position as regards short-colour service in the Indian Army.

MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. President: I have received notice under rule 11 from Mr. Kabir-ud-din Ahmed, a Member of this Assembly, asking for leave to move the adjournment of the business of this Assembly for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance, namely, the arrest of certain leaders of the non-cooperation movement, for the purpose of prosecution.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: Sir, may I raise a point of order; at the same time I am very anxious that the intentions of Government in this matter should not be misunderstood. I want to make it quite clear that the Government would welcome a debate on this question. They have no reason to fear that they would not secure the approval of this Assembly. But there are certain points which may make the discussion of the subject under reference at the present juncture out of order and I wish to place them before you, if I may.

Mr. Muhammad Ali, Mr. Shaukat Ali, Dr. Kitchlew and others are being prosecuted by the Bombay Government with the full concurrence of the Governor General in Council under Sections 120-B, 131 and 505 of the Indian Penal Code. With the concurrence of the Governor General in Council the Governor of Bombay in Council has also authorised the prosecution of Mr. Muhammad Ali under Section 124-A and Mr. Shaukat Ali under Sections 124-A and 153-A. Five of these accused are, we know, now under arrest. They were arrested in different parts of India and have been forwarded for trial by the Magistrate of Karachi by whom warrants for their arrest have been issued. The case will be tried there in the immediate future. It is for you, Sir, under these circumstances to decide whether this matter is one which is under adjudication by a Court of Justice.

[Sir William Vincent.]

Mr. President: Rule No. 23 lays down that no Resolution shall be moved in regard to any matter which is under adjudication by a Court of Law having jurisdiction in any part of His Majesty's dominions. Rule No. 12 lays down that a motion for adjournment which is the procedure proposed to be adopted by Mr. Kabir-ud-din Ahmed is governed by the same conditions and prohibitions as Resolutions. From the statement which has been made by the Honourable the Home Member, I understand that the cases which Mr. K. Ahmed wishes to discuss are under adjudication by a Court, or about to be placed in that position. If the Honourable Member has any representation to make upon that subject I am prepared to hear him.

Mr. K. Ahmed: Sir, I beg leave to move for an adjournment of the business of this Assembly to discuss a definite matter of urgent public importance.

Mr. President: Order, order. I asked the Honourable Member whether he had any considerations to place before the Chair solely on the matter of whether the cases that he proposes to raise are or are not under the adjudication of a Court or are about to be placed under that adjudication.

Mr. K. Ahmed: I have nothing to do with the legality or otherwise of the matter, but my idea in giving notice was this, (1) that the Government may have an opportunity of declaring its policy and at the same time

Mr. President: Order, order. The Honourable Member has heard the declaration made by the Honourable the Home Member, and though it may be the unanimous desire of the Assembly to discuss this matter, it is the duty of the Chair to forbid it.

BILLS PASSED BY THE COUNCIL OF STATE.

Secretary of the Assembly: In accordance with rule 25 of the Indian Legislative Rules I lay on the table the following Bills which were passed in the Council of State on the 19th September 1921:

1. A Bill further to amend the Cattle Trespass Act, 1871, and
2. A Bill to provide, that when firearms are used for the purpose of dispersing an assembly, preliminary warning shall, in certain circumstances, be given.

THE TRANSFER OF PROPERTY (AMENDMENT) BILL.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: Sir, I beg to move:

That the Bill further to amend the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, be referred to a Select Committee consisting of the Honourable Dr. Sapru, the Honourable Sir William Vincent, Mr. C. Krishnaswamy Rao, Mr. Percival, Mr. J. N. Mukherjee, Dr. H. S. Gour, Rai Bahadur Bakshi Sohan Lal, Lala Girdharilal Agarwala, Mr. Samarth and myself.

When I introduced this Bill on the 21st March last I gave the Assembly the main points which induced me to bring forward this motion. I pointed out the distinction that exists between sale and exchanges on the one hand and mortgages and gifts on the other. The law indeed requires that in the case of mortgages and gifts the deeds be attested by at least two witnesses. The interpretation of the word 'attested' as finally adopted by the Privy Council has given rise to considerable difficulty in the administration of the law inasmuch as the validity of the deeds is affected by the absence of regular attestation. No such requirement is made in the case of sales of valuable property or in the case of exchanges, and in practice it has been felt that this works great hardship, tends to encourage perjury and therefore it was thought necessary to amend the Section. It will be remembered that my Honourable friend, Dr. Gour, when the motion was made for introduction, admitted that this was a growing evil. At the same time he pointed out that the remedy chosen by me was not the right remedy. Since the introduction of this motion, the Home Department of the Government of India have circulated the Bill for the opinion of the various Governments and they have received the opinions. Opinions vary on the matter and I have therefore taken care to include on the Select Committee persons who are pledged to opposite views, so that they may consider all the opinions now received and recommend to the Assembly what proper amendments may be made. I have included in this Committee judges, especially mofussil judges who have administered the law and practising lawyers. I do not think I need say anything more on this occasion and I therefore move, Sir, that the Bill be referred to a Select Committee.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: Sir, this Bill deals with what is really a very important question of civil law in that it seeks to do away with one of the safeguards now prescribed for the execution of mortgages over Rs. 100 in value and of deeds of gifts. It is quite true that even if the attestation is done away with, there will still remain the protection of registration, but those of this Council who are familiar with business in the mofussil know that sometimes even in registration offices frauds of a serious character occur, and the question really is therefore whether there is any reason to take away anything which provides an additional safeguard for the interests of ignorant persons and particularly of ladies in this matter. The law, as it is, has been in force for many years. It is well known and understood, by every one, and I put it to this Assembly that if it is proposed to modify or alter the law which has been established for over 40 years, very cogent reasons should be given for doing so, and that it should be shown that there is a general demand for change on the part of those best qualified to judge whether such an amendment is necessary. It was in this view that the Government, when this Bill was introduced, did not oppose it but sought public opinion; and I will stop here to indicate what those opinions are; because in our judgment they are so divided and so many of them are adverse to what is advocated by the Honourable Mover that it will make Members of this Council pause before they accept the motion before the Assembly. I want the Assembly to be clear on one point. If the practice of this Assembly remains the same, as it was before the Reforms, once a Bill is referred to a Select Committee this Assembly is committed to an acceptance of the principle of the measure. It therefore behoves Honourable Members to be very careful at this stage about their votes. I myself have no prejudice against this Bill. I do not want Honourable Members to think so for one moment. Indeed at one period I was much in favour of the principle advocated, but I must admit that I have been shaken very much by the opinions now received. It is quite true that the Madras Government approve the change and also some of the judges of the Madras High

[Sir William Vincent.]

Court but Members will see there is a great division of opinion among them. The High Court Vakils' Association, which is a very important body, entirely disapprove the Bill. Further, both the Bombay Government and the Bombay High Court consider that the law requires no amendment. They are important authorities whose opinions cannot be neglected. In fact, if I may say so, the opinion of the Bombay High Court is probably more valuable than any individual opinion in this Assembly. The Judicial Commissioner in Sind opposes the Bill, so also the Commissioner of the Southern Division and various other authorities. In Bengal, again, though many Associations including the Bengal Chamber of Commerce are in favour of this change, on the other hand, I find that the High Court Bar Library, the Mahajana Sabha and the High Court itself are opposed to the Bill on the ground that the change should only be made when a general revision of the Act is undertaken. The Bengal Government, while frankly admitting that in some cases the present law may cause hardship, says at the same time that it protects young heirs and pardanashin women from injustice and fraud. The United Provinces Government again oppose the Bill on the ground that it will in all probability result in encouraging forgery and fabrication of documents. The Judicial Commissioner, Oudh, states that all the authorities consulted by him are opposed to the Bill. The Punjab Government say that there is no necessity for amendment and that there is a great deal in what the Financial Commissioner says, namely, that the law cannot be too stringent in the precautions which are taken to secure that execution of such deeds is adequately proved. There is a great deal in that statement and I think it is an important point. The Burma Government come out with an exceptionally strong criticism of this measure and they give reasons for the views which I think will appeal to Members of this House. The Honourable Member said that as attestation is not required in the case of sales and leases there is no reason for attestation in the case of mortgages. But, is there not a great difference between a sale or a lease and a mortgage? Does not the difference lie in this, that shortly after a sale or lease possession of the property is transferred to the lessee or vendee, whereas under a mortgage,—let us take the case of a mortgage without possession,—what is the position? The alleged execution of the deed may be kept a secret for years. There is no change in possession to give effect to it. Take the case of a lady executing or supposed to have executed a mortgage with no attesting witnesses and none of her friends there. Suppose there is fraud at the registration office and the document is registered. After that, it may be hidden for 20 years and at the end of that period a claim put in for principal plus interest double the amount of the sum alleged to have been advanced. That is the kind of thing you have to guard against in a mortgage. In the one case there is transfer of possession and in the other the party affected by the document may remain for years in absolute ignorance of the fact that it has been forged. I want to put it to the Members of this Assembly as practical men that this is a very serious matter.

That is the tenor of one of the main arguments adduced by the Government of Burma against this Bill. The Government of Bihar and Orissa say that there is no general feeling in favour of the Bill. The Central Provinces Government say, 'we approve, but we must admit that it is attended by grave risks.' There are, of course, opinions in favour of this change in the law. I do not want to deny for a moment that. But it is enough, from my point of view, to quote the opinions which are against it. I think Members of this Assembly will see that the opinions represent a great weight of authority. They are opinions of High Courts, Bar Associations, Local Governments. On the last occasion when the Bill was before Council, Dr. Gour proposed an amendment by which he sought to vary the manner in which attestation should be made—I think I am correctly interpreting his amendment. I want to put a point to this Assembly on this amendment. It is not a matter that can be dealt with, in my judgment, by a reference to Select Committee. It is a point of principle to be decided at once. The Assembly has now to consider whether, or not, the documents are to be attested at all. It is on that main principle,—after an acceptance of that principle alone, that this Bill can legitimately be referred to Select Committee; and I ask this Council, in view of the authoritative opinions which I have quoted against it, to pause before accepting the principle of the Bill. It is not a matter in which Government is directly interested in any way. I simply speak, as I believe, in the public interest.

There is another thing, one other point, and that is that Honourable Members are aware that the law regarding the attestation of documents was altered, I think, in 1917 by an enactment which was promoted by the Honourable Mr. Malaviya, who was then in Council. Now, if the present Bill is passed, there will be different valid forms of execution of mortgages and gifts before 1915, after 1915 to 1921 and after 1921; and the law will become one mass of confusion on this point. But the main point I want to emphasise is that it is not desirable that safeguards which protect the interests of ignorant men and women should be omitted from the law, that no adequate reason has been given to this Assembly for any change in a law which has worked well, I believe for 40 years, if not longer, and that the change is not demanded by public opinion.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: Sir, when I came to this room, I was prepared to vote for referring this Bill to the Select Committee. Now that the Honourable the Home Member has said that by accepting that Resolution, we will be accepting the principle of the Bill, I wish to say a few words from personal experience, both in the bar and as a judge, regarding the undesirability of the motion now before the House. Sir, as the Honourable the Home Member has pointed out, what we want is an extension of safeguards, and not a curtailment of them. So far as the Section dealt with in the Bill is concerned, some change in the law is absolutely necessary, but if there is to be any change in the law, it should be in favour of making sales and leases attestable, and not in the direction of taking away safeguards with regard to mortgages by deleting the attestation clause. Undoubtedly there is necessity for a change in the law. That change must be with regard to the definition of 'attestation.' Difficulty has been felt by the Bench and by the Bar in regard to this matter, namely, that the attester should see the executant sign a document has been considered a great hardship, and to make attestation practically impossible. Therefore, if any attempt is made to define attestation properly, and to bring it into conformity with the attestation clause as regards wills, I believe this Assembly will very gladly accept such a proposition. But to ask that attestation in regard to mortgages should be done away with is to deprive persons who execute documents of one of the greatest safeguards which the law has provided. I understand that the judges of Surat advocate attestation in regard to leases and that this Section should not be allowed to be interfered with in the way the Honourable Member suggests. Under these circumstances, Sir, if, by accepting the motion, we are supposed to accept the principle of the Bill, I am totally opposed to it.

Dr. H. S. Gour : Sir, on the last occasion I pointed out why this Bill, if pushed on with, would lead to a destruction of most salutary safeguards which are necessary for the purpose of safeguarding the interests of parties to transfers. I pointed out on the last occasion that the witnesses to the execution are witnesses whose presence cannot be dispensed with, and that registration is no substitute for attestation. I then stated that cases of fraud, undue influence, coercion, mistake, misrepresentation and all other attendant circumstances which invalidate a document can only be known to persons who are present at the time of the execution of a document, and that after the execution is completed, when the document goes before the Registrar for the purpose of registration, it is not within the competency of the Registrar to inquire into the validity of the document. If he is satisfied about its execution, he is bound under the law to admit it to registration. I then said, Sir, that the Honourable Mr. Rangachariar's Bill, which does away with attestation of execution altogether, is a retrograde measure, and should not receive the support of this House. At the same time I pointed out that since the decision of the Privy Council placing a narrow and restricted construction upon the manner of attestation as it occurs in Section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act, which requires that the attesting witnesses shall be present at the time that the executant affixes his signature has opened the door to widespread perjury and fraud, it is the duty of this Honourable House to protect the public against this growing nuisance. I then therefore said, Sir, that the justice of the case would be met by defining the word 'attestation' in the Transfer of Property Act, and I drew up a short Bill which I sent up to the Legislative Department as an amendment to the Honourable Mr. Rangachariar's motion. I am gratified to find that the majority of the Governments and Judges of the High Courts have approved of my amendment and disapprove of the Honourable Mr. Rangachariar's original Bill.

The Honourable the Home Member stated that there is a great difference between a sale, a lease and a mortgage and he pointed out, that while in the case of a mortgage attestation was necessary, in the case of a sale or lease attestation was not necessary, because these two transactions were immediately followed up by possession. I am perfectly certain that the Honourable the Home Member could not have adverted to one aspect of the case which completely destroys his argument. What about possessory mortgages? In the case of possessory mortgages, immediately after the execution of the mortgage the mortgagee is put in possession, and, therefore, to justify the existence of Section 54 or Section 107 of the Transfer of Property Act and to say that Section 59 must be distinguished from these two Sections is based upon an argument which certainly does not appeal to me. I feel, Sir, that the grievance which the public has got, and justly got, can be redressed, as is suggested by the Honourable Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar, by inserting in the preliminary Sections of the Transfer of Property Act a definition of the word 'attested,' including therein not only the attestation of the execution but also the attestation of the admission of execution made immediately after execution but before the transaction is closed, and I have suggested in my amending Bill that the words not only 'a sale' but a sale, a lease and all transfers comprised in the Transfer of Property Act should be equally attested. If this change is made, I am perfectly certain, Sir, that it would mitigate the evil which is growing in the country and it will at the same time improve the Transfer of Property Act.

Mr. Harchandrai Vishindas : Sir, I rise not to take up unnecessarily the time of the Assembly but to give an instance which very strongly typifies the situation that has been created by this Bill. Only about a week before I left for Simla, in Karachi there was decided a case which illustrated the necessity of following the suggestion that has been made by Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar and supported by Dr. Gour, namely, there was a case which fell through because the attesting witnesses would not go to the length of saying that the execution of the document took place in their presence, but that it was admitted by the executant that he had executed the document.

Now, Sir, it was felt that a great deal of injustice was done by virtue of this strict interpretation of attestation by the Privy Council, and I should not be surprised if the Judge also thought that he was deciding the case against natural justice but in obedience to the law as it is laid down. Therefore, while agreeing entirely with the remarks that have fallen from the Honourable the Home Member in his speech and the opinions which he has cited which are entitled to great weight and respect, there can be no two opinions in the Assembly that attestation is necessary. It is much better to have a safeguard and a great deal will be lost by having the safeguard removed. Therefore, I say, there can be no two opinions that attestation of the document as laid down by the law is necessary. But at the same time I think what actuated the Honourable Mover of this Bill to bring this legislation before this Assembly was the abuses that arose after that interpretation by the Privy Council of attestation. So, Sir, my position is that I am entirely at one with Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar and Dr. Gour that amendment in the direction of defining attestation so as to include admission of execution is the proper legislation that should be adopted in the present Bill.

The Honourable Dr. T. B. Sapru : Sir, with your leave there are just a few observations that I would like to make with regard to this very important question which is engaging the attention of the House at present. In the first place, I would invite you, Sir, if you would so please, to give a definite ruling as to the question of practice which has been raised by my Honourable Colleague, Sir William Vincent. I myself was for several years a non-official Member of the old Council and I understood also at that time, that if a Bill was committed to a Select Committee, the House stood committed to the principle of that Bill. If we are to proceed on the assumption that by committing this Bill to the Select Committee we stand committed to the principle of this Bill, I must say that I regret to have entirely and wholeheartedly to differ from the principle of the Bill. So far as legal and judicial opinion is concerned, reference has been made to it in great detail by my Honourable Colleague, Sir William Vincent. I myself have gone through those opinions with the utmost possible care and the impression that has been left on my mind, after careful scrutiny, is that the highest judicial authorities and some of the most eminent lawyers in this country, who are entitled to speak on a matter like this, are entirely opposed to the principle of this Bill. I may say that I come from a province where, if I am not mistaken, the bulk of the civil litigation turns upon mortgages, and during the 25 years of my practice I may say that I had to deal far more with the Transfer of Property Act than with any other Act in Allahabad. I find that the Allahabad High Court and the lawyers there are wholly opposed to the principle of this Bill. More or less, the same is the position in Calcutta. But quite apart from the general opposition of the judicial officers and the lawyers to this Bill, there is one important matter with regard to this Act

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : The Home Member has to be a Member ex-officio and if the Bill is going to Select Committee then I should be quite willing to serve on the Committee.

Mr. President : The line taken by the Honourable the Home Member is correct. Mr. Rangachariar has no course open to him under the rules but to include these two gentlemen, and they have no course but to accept.

Mr. N. M. Joshi : I move that the question be now put.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar : By this Bill I intended to bring to the notice of this Assembly a growing evil, in the words of Dr. Gour, still growing worse. Dr. Sapru comes from a province which I find has had the good fortune of having the Act amended by Pandit Malaviya. Now, in Madras, where I come from, this is a very real evil and that evil requires an adequate remedy. I carefully considered whether the remedy I was proposing was the proper remedy or not, and whether I should not adopt the remedy adopted by the United Provinces. I came to the conclusion, and deliberately came to the conclusion that that was not an adequate remedy for the evil in my province. A great deal of importance is attached to this question of the law providing that a document should be attested. Now there is no provision that a sale deed should be attested, but has any one of you ever come across a sale deed without attestation? By doing away with this condition, it does not follow that mortgage deeds and gift deeds would not be attested. I am not asking the Assembly to say that they need not be so attested. All that I am saying is that these legal requisites to make a deed a valid mortgage or to make it a valid gift need not exist there. Wills are executed, pro-notes are executed, sale deeds are executed, exchange deeds are executed, all over India.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : May I draw the Honourable Member's attention to the fact that a will has in many cases to be attested?

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar : I beg your pardon. A mofussil will need not be attested. It is only in the presidency towns that a will is attested, but as regards wills all over the country there is no law requiring them to be attested. I believe I am quite right in saying that only wills made in presidency towns require to be attested; and therefore all that I seek to do by this enactment is to do away with this legal requisite to make a deed a valid mortgage or a valid gift. Now, what happens at present? You know how attestation takes place. Documents are executed, attestations are taken at random, and really to insist upon people being present and actually seeing the hand of the executant moving on the paper—that is what the Privy Council requires—that is asking too much of human nature. And really it offers a premium, as lawyers have pointed out and as judges have pointed out already, to perjury; the mortgagor or mortgagee goes to court; he says to a witness, 'I will pay you so much if you say that you did not see the actual hand moving on the document; no doubt you may say that it is your signature and that you are an attesting witness, but simply say that you did not see the hand of the mortgagor moving.' Then, if he says that—although the document may be admitted to have been executed by the executant—still the law renders the document, as the attester did not actually see the hand moving, invalid. Is it right to keep such a provision in the statute? Then it was said that registration was not a sufficient safeguard. As you know, under the Registration Act and the rules under the Act, the executant has to appear in person before a highly paid officer, most of them are graduates, the sub-registrars; no doubt, there may be false personation in some cases; but still he has to appear and admit execution before the document can be registered; the rules under the Act and the Sections of the Act itself provide adequate safeguards in order to provide for those cases. If there is fraud before the Registrar, there can be fraud also in the case of attested executions. Attesting witnesses can be easily secured to say that they saw the attestation. If a man is so fraudulent, if a man is so bent upon committing a crime, he will be able to get witnesses to come forward and say that they saw the execution, and such witnesses can be had. Altogether I think too much importance has been attached to this attestation. Therefore, I first of all wish to remove the misapprehension in the minds of the Assembly that by my motion it does not follow that there will be no attestation at all. Even if this Bill is passed, people will have attestors to their documents. I only do not make it a condition, a legal condition, in order to make it a valid mortgage or a valid gift.

Possession follows gift as has been already pointed out by Dr. Gour in the case of sales of valuable property worth lakhs and lakhs; the law does not require that there should be attestation in the document; although they are attested as a matter of fact. It is not necessary to make it a valid sale that the sale-deed should be attested. In the case of gifts also possession follows the gift; and even there the law requires that the document should be attested. Why? If possession is to be the guiding factor, the law does not recognize it in the case of gifts, so it is no argument at all to justify this anomaly in the law of transfer. How that anomaly is to be removed is the point.

Now, Sir, you have given a ruling that by referring this to the Select Committee, it will not be open to the Select Committee to accept the other suggestion, viz., to define the word 'attest' as including attesting merely on acknowledgment or admission of the executant; then I must ask the vote of this House on this principle, whether this House requires that this clause should exist in the case of mortgages and gifts, and, therefore, Sir, I press the motion to a division.

The motion was negatived.

THE ADOPTION (REGISTRATION) BILL.

Dr. H. S. Gour : Sir, I move :

'That the Bill to prescribe a registered instrument as necessary for a valid adoption be circulated for the purpose of eliciting opinion thereon.'

Honourable Members will remember that when I moved for leave to introduce my Bill, I stated that it was the considered opinion of the Privy Council enunciated in a case from which I cited on the last occasion that some safeguard by way of registration or acknowledgment before a Magistrate was necessary to a valid adoption under Hindu Law, and that a case of the Privy Council decided as far back as 1834 had been recently followed by the same high tribunal in a case reported in 44 Calcutta. Honourable Members will also remember that I then pointed out that the necessity of registration will serve a double purpose. It will facilitate the proof of a true adoption and prevent the setting up of a faked one. It is a notorious fact, Sir, that immediately after a man dies issueless, leaving a valuable estate, claimants come forward setting up some sort of a death-bed or previous adoption; and cases have come to my notice where two or more rival adoptions have been set up in a court of law; protracted litigation is the result, costs are incurred.....

The Honourable Dr. T. B. Sapru : I rise to a point of order. Is it open to the Mover of a Bill on a motion like this before the House to make a speech on the merits of the Bill ?

Mr. President : I am not quite sure what the Honourable the Law Member means by merits ; but I should be inclined to interpret the word as meaning the same as principle in the standing order.

Dr. H. S. Gour : I thank you, Sir. Resuming my speech after that interruption, I wish to point out to the House that what I wanted to bring out was that the result of this costly litigation is sometimes uncertain. It leads, as I have said, to tremendous costs in many cases, and the safeguard that I have suggested would do away with a great deal of unnecessary and, I may add, false litigation. As a matter of practice, the Privy Council have in several cases laid down that they require some sort of document in proof of an adoption. In cases after cases, their Lordships have laid down that it is the habit of the people of India to record the minutest details in their daily lives in regularly kept documents and they therefore would seek some note made, some contemporaneous record of this solemn act of adoption ; and no amount of oral evidence will go down with their Lordships in the absence of some documentary evidence. This, then, is the established rule of practice, but the public are not aware of it. I know that in some cases it happens that unconsciously they have a hurried adoption, pressed perhaps by the necessities of the case or not knowing that their adoption would be challenged later, and the result is that some good adoptions fail to be proved, and as I have pointed out, in some cases adoptions which never took place at all come into the court for adjudication by a volume of verbal evidence. Now in Local Acts I have just been able to find—I mean in the Oudh Estates Act, that an adoption by a Muhammadan talukdar is under the statute required to be registered, and if I mistake not, in some Act of the Bombay Presidency,—I think it is the Mamlatdars and Watans Act—I have not been able to verify my citation, there is a provision made for compulsory registration of an adoption. Honourable Members will remember that under the present law, the authority to adopt requires to be registered, and all that I am asking this House to-day is that an adoption itself shall be registered. I have no doubt that my Hindu friends view this reform as a very necessary one, as they asked me last time that in the case of adoptions which take place, some little time should be given for the presentation of the documents before the Registrar. I then stated that under the normal law a document for registration could be presented within four months, and in exceptional cases within eight months from the date of its execution. I submit, Sir, that I have made out a strong prima facie case for my Bill to go before the public. Let the opinion of the public be elicited upon the subject, and then it will be time for this House to consider whether we should not go on with it. I now move, Sir, that the Bill be referred to the public for their opinion.

Sir P. S. Sivaswamy Aiyer : Sir, when I came to the House this morning, I had no intention of intervening with reference to the motion of Dr. Gour, but in view of your ruling, that a motion to circulate the Bill for opinion commits the House to the question of principle.....

Dr. H. S. Gour : I rise to a point of order, Sir. I never understood you, Sir, to rule that a motion to circulate a Bill for the purpose of eliciting opinion thereon commits the House to the principle of it.

Mr. President : It certainly commits to the principle.

Sir P. S. Sivaswamy Aiyer : Sir, in view of the ruling which you have just given, I feel bound to oppose the motion which has now been made by Dr. Gour. There are two grounds on which he has sought to support the Bill. One is that adoptions may affect property of considerable value, and the second ground is that the oral evidence which is often adduced to support these adoptions is not free from suspicion or doubt. Neither of those grounds seems to me to justify the measure he has sought to introduce. As regards the first ground that adoptions may affect property, I would point out that the primary intention of an adoption is not to affect property. An adoption is under the Hindu Law essentially a religious transaction. It is because people desire spiritual benefits after their death that they make adoptions. If it is true that adoptions affect property, it is a necessary incident of the religious transaction and not the sole, or perhaps even the primary, object of adoption. The first ground, therefore, upon which Dr. Gour has sought to support his Bill altogether fails. As regards the second ground, that the oral evidence is not free from suspicion or doubt, I would like to ask whether adoptions are the only transactions with regard to which oral evidence is not free from suspicion or doubt ? Do not merchants every day enter into large transactions affecting movable property and with regard to which oral evidence is all that is available ; and I would like to ask whether people in England do not enter into transactions of very serious importance in life without written instruments. Do they not make a promise of marriage without executing a registered document ? Does not a promise of marriage affect a man quite as seriously as an adoption ? There are numerous transactions in this world which must depend in some cases only upon oral evidence, and it would be absurd and impracticable to require that all these transactions should at the time they are made be entered into if at all only by means of registered instruments. I do not think it is necessary to adduce any further reasons in opposition to this Bill. I would only add this one consideration that adoption being essentially a religious transaction, it is not wise to interfere with an institution to which so much importance is attached by Hindu society, an institution which will continue to appeal to Hindus, for a long time to come, and I would therefore ask the House to reject this motion.

The Honourable Dr. T. B. Sapru : Sir, in view of your ruling I consider it necessary that I must clearly indicate the attitude of the Government with regard to this Bill at this moment, otherwise silence on the part of Government might be construed into acquiescence in the principles of this Bill. We should have had absolutely no objection to public opinion being elicited so far as this Bill is concerned, but I think it necessary that at the outset I must declare, that so far as the Government are concerned, they do not stand committed to the principle of this Bill. There are just two dangers lurking in this Bill, to which I would invite the attention of all my Hindu friends particularly, and they will at once appreciate them. I suppose it will be admitted even by such an enthusiastic legislator as my friend, Dr. Gour, that the Hindu Law does not allow any other person than a son to be adopted. The Muhammadan Law undoubtedly allows acknowledgment of various kinds of relations, but as a very eminent Muhammadan Judge pointed out in a well known ruling which will be present to the mind of Dr. Gour, adoption under the Hindu law is entirely different in its essence from acknowledgment under the Muhammadan Law. Now, if my Honourable Colleagues will only look at the definition of 'adoption', they will find that Dr. Gour will permit a Hindu not only to adopt sons, but possibly grandsons, not only to adopt sons and grandsons, but daughters and also sisters, and, if I may say so without being impertinent to Dr. Gour, he may adopt relations of a very delicate character. Adoption, according to his definition, means the adoption of a son or any other relative. I cannot, as a Hindu lawyer reconcile myself to this innovation.)

Then, again, there is another danger to which I would invite the attention of the House. So far as I know Hindu Law, in the matter of adoption, there is no place for the doctrine of agency except in the case of wife, and the Calcutta High Court had to consider that question some years ago in the case of a Brahmo adoption. According to Dr. Gour, a deed of adoption may be executed by the person making the adoption or by a duly authorised agent. To that extent, I think the Bill makes a serious departure from all accepted notions of Hindu Law in regard to adoption. There, I will leave the matter in the hands of the Assembly. So far as I am concerned, I do believe in the efficacy of registration, but I do not believe in registration at the expense of Hindu Law.

Mr. J. N. Mukherjee : Sir, I am in the same position as my Honourable friend, Sir Sivaswamy Aiyer, because when I first came into the Assembly I thought that there would be no harm done if the Bill was circulated for collecting opinion thereon. But the position I take up now in regard to my Honourable friend, Dr. Gour's Bill, is one to point out an inaccuracy of his in regard to what he has said as to the opinion expressed by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council on the question of the desirability of a registered document in cases of adoption. I have gone through the ruling to which he has referred, but I fail to find anything in it which suggests that the Privy Council would like to have a registered document in order that an adoption may be validated or established in a Court of Justice. Their Lordships of the Privy Council said nothing of the kind in the judgment referred to. The case to which Dr. Gour referred was a complicated one, turning entirely upon facts, and their Lordships stated that in view of the facts before them and in view of the evidence adduced and the circumstances surrounding it, they could not believe the case for the plaintiff. They casually observed that there was nothing in writing to support the plaintiff's allegation, especially in the absence of proof of the observances which are ordinarily expected to be followed in cases of adoption in high families. In these circumstances, they came to the conclusion that they should support the judgment of the Judicial Commissioners.

I stand in order to remove the misapprehension which must have been created in the minds of Members of this Assembly by what has been said by my Honourable friend, Dr. Gour, as to the expressions of an opinion on the part of the Judicial Committee on the point, which must have some weight with Members of this Assembly. I simply supplement the arguments that have fallen from my Honourable friend, Sir Sivaswamy Aiyer, and the Honourable the Law Member, against the Bill. What I point out is an additional reason why the House should not be committed to the principle of the Bill.

Rai J. N. Majumdar Bahadur : Sir, having heard your ruling that when this Bill is circulated for opinions, the House stands committed to the principle of the Bill, I thought it my bounden duty to raise my voice in protest against the Bill which has been moved by my Honourable Colleague, Dr. Gour.

Dr. Gour must have known when he moved his Bill that according to Hindu Law a son is considered essential for the salvation of his father in every Hindu family and that the word putra means a son one who saves his father by doing the unfinished duties of his father after his death; Pituh chhidram puraitva trayete iti putrah who saves his father by performing shraddh. Therefore if this law is enacted and adoption must be registered, it will interfere with the religious customs of the Hindu.

My Honourable friend, Dr. Gour, may to-morrow bring another Bill and say that marriages must be registered. If he does, then I say he is interfering with the personal law of the Hindu which every Hindu would resent. If you do register adoption, how does it make it more valid than adoption under the law as it stands at present? I do not see it.

I therefore oppose the motion and agree with my Honourable friend who have spoken before me that the Bill should be rejected.

Phai Man Singh : Sir, I should like to ask whether, when a Bill is introduced, the House is committed to the principle of the Bill or when it is up for discussion before the Select Committee or published for opinions. We had an example just now in regard to Mr. Rangachariar's Bill which was circulated for opinion. We do not want to stand committed to the principle of the Bill at this stage, and we may find, after eliciting public opinion that the principle of the Bill is wrong. What is the position of the Assembly? Would it be in order for us to throw the Bill out or shall we still be committed to the principle, because on this point hangs the fate of this motion?
