I find they are, Sir, on page 44 all in italics. We cannot touch them because they are untouchable. It is not the sense of this House to take away their peons but to seal them with the robe of red-tapeism. The question is: not whether Rs. 100 is not actually Rs. 99 plus Re. 1 but it is the expression of this House that they disapprove of the intelligence that has been applied hitherto as far as the Finance Department is concerned and therefore Rs. 100 is to be taken away from the officers' pay—not of untouchables but of touchables. They have got some officers in their office that can be touched. If Rs. 100 is taken away from their salary just to show our disapproval of the action of the intelligent members of untouchables, they will be more intelligent and will try their utmost to realise the situation as they thought they would be more independent without peons. I suppose then our purpose will be served, and that is why, Sir, we want that Rs. 100 should be reduced.

Mr. President: The question is that that reduction* be made. The motion was negatived.

Mr. B. N. Misra (Orissa Division: Non-Muhammadian): I think the Honourable Sir Sivaswamy Aiyar is going to move a general reduction. I shall speak on that reduction.

* "That the votable portion of the demand under sub-head Finance Department, Pay of Officers (page 44) be reduced by Rs. 100."

Mr. N. M. Joshi (Nominated: Labour Interests): May I move my small amendment of reduction of Re. 1 in the Industries Department, of which I said yesterday that I had put in the word "Home" for "Industries" by mistake? It is No. 267. In moving my motion,* Sir, I want to draw the attention of the House to one of the recommendations of the Inchcape Committee. It is given on page 132. The Inchcape Committee say as follows regarding the Labour Bureau:

"We consider that the work done by the Industrial Intelligence Section and the Labour Bureau could be discontinued without serious inconvenience. It is represented that a certain amount of labour and other legislation is pending in the immediate future, but this could, in our opinion, be more appropriately arranged for by placing an officer temporarily on special duty than by making permanent additions to the establishment."

Thus, Sir, the Retrenchment Committee suggest to the Government of India to abolish the Labour Bureau of the Government of India. Sir, the Retrenchment Committee consisted of eminent men but that Committee had one defect, namely, it consisted mostly of business people and as business people

Mr. R. A. Spence: Is that a defect?

Mr. N. M. Joshi: . . . there was not much love lost between themselves and labour as well as between themselves and the Department of Government which concerns itself with labour. Therefore, the suggestion that they have made is natural. But at the same time the House must remember that it does not consist mostly of business people and it ought not to consist mostly of business people. The House represents the country and as such the House has also a duty to represent labour interests. Sir, at present the Government of India is not spending a large sum of money on its Labour Bureau. There are only two large appointments that I see here, a Controller of Labour whose salary is Rs. 1,500 and an Adviser to the Labour Bureau on a much smaller salary. Sir, the gentleman who occupies the post of Controller of Labour Bureau is known to this House. The House knows very well my friend Mr. Clow. They have seen his ability and I can assure the House that his sympathies for the interests of labour are also as well known. Sir, it is mistake that the Government of India should think of abolishing this office if they are thinking of doing so. But I would like the House to express its opinion against its abolition if Government thinks of abolishing that office. Questions regarding labour will arise every now and then. You are not going to get rid of the labour problem, especially so as the House wants the country to develop industrially very fast. If the country develops very fast industrially the industrial development will bring in its train certain evils which you cannot avoid and which the world has not avoided. Therefore, it will be a great mistake if the Government of India ever think of abolishing its Labour Bureau. It is absolutely necessary that the conditions of life and work of labour should be studied by the Government of India.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: (Madras City: Non-Muhammadan Urban): And the people.

* "That the provision for Pay of establishment under sub-head Industries Department be reduced by Re. 1."

Mr. N. M. Joshi: Sir, there is another appointment in that Bureau—the Adviser to Labour Bureau. Unfortunately I do not see any amount placed against that head in this year's Budget. I do not know whether the Government of India even before the Retrenchment Committee was appointed, have decided to abolish that post, and if the Government of India have done it, it is a great pity and I want the House to tell the Government of India that they have made a great mistake in abolishing that post. Sir, that post was held by a lady, Miss Broughton, whose sympathies towards labour were also very great. She had done very valuable work in studying the conditions of life and work of the women workers in India, and, Sir, I was hoping that the Government of India would very soon undertake legislation prohibiting the employment of women and providing benefits for women working in factories. As a matter of fact I have given notice of a Resolution to that effect, but unfortunately if the Government of India decide to abolish that post, there is hardly much hope for me. I therefore feel that even if the Government had decided to abolish that post they will reconsider that decision and restore that post. It is absolutely necessary that the country should not neglect the labour problem. If they neglect it to-day I think the country will have to be sorry afterwards. I therefore move my amendment that the amount for the Industries Department be reduced by Re. 1.

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas (Bombay City: Non-Muhammadan Urban): While I have my differences with Mr. Joshi on many points I am glad to say that on this occasion I endorse every word that he has said with regard to the Labour Bureau. It is already in the air, perhaps encouraged by the reports appearing in irresponsible newspapers, that this House as it does not consist properly of representatives of labour does not do justice to the requirements of the labour population. I do not for a moment admit that we are guilty in that direction. I hold that this House in spite of the fact that we have no direct labour representation in the Assembly itself has gone a great way to legislate for the benefit of the labour in this country. But I do hold that the step that we are about to take if we were to recommend to Government that the recommendation of the Retrenchment Committee in this direction should be accepted—that step will land us in considerable difficulties with labour. We shall be rightly misunderstood by the labour population of this country. We shall be rightly told that we neglect the demand that labour has on us for considering its requirements in this country. I hold that there is no reason whatsoever to do away with this Department which has shown that it is capable of doing excellent work. All of us who had the occasion to hear Mr. Clow and to know something of his work connected with the Labour Bureau will bear testimony to the usefulness of his contribution to the work of the Industries Department. We are keen and rightly keen on seeing this country placed on the path of rapid industrial development, but we should be making a mistake if we blinded ourselves to the evils that will inevitably accompany the rapid industrial development of this country. Therefore, a Bureau like the Labour Bureau is extremely necessary for enabling us to minimise those evils, to avoid the mistakes which have been made in other parts of the world and to avoid the dangers which have accompanied industrial development in other countries. I hope therefore that the Government will not in this respect countenance the recommendation made by the Inchcape Committee but will continue to allow the Labour Bureau to carry on its useful activities.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: May I make a suggestion? I fail to see why this Labour Bureau should not be amalgamated with the Central Bureau of Information. (Laughter). I see some Honourable Member laughing at it, but I do think that there is a lot in co-ordination. Instead of each Department having its own Bureau I think that if we have a Central Bureau of Information in which all Departments can come together it will conduce to economy and it will conduce to speedy disposal of work. I do think that instead of abolishing the Labour Bureau steps should be taken to amalgamate it with the Central Bureau of Information.

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes (Commerce and Industries Member): I do not think that Mr. Rangachariar has quite appreciated the work which the Labour Bureau does. The Labour Bureau exists for the purpose of collecting, collating and studying information regarding labour questions throughout India. We collect information regarding such matters as strikes, the reasons for strikes, how they were dealt with, the working of the Factory Act and so on. This information is continuously being collected and is continuously being studied and I think that every one in this House will recognise that in these latter days it is very necessary that the process should be carried on. I am, however, in a difficulty in dealing with Mr. Joshi's motion, for as the House knows, the whole of the future of the Departments of the Government of India and of the staff to be attached to the Departments as reorganised is now under consideration. All I can say at the present moment is that we realise the importance of the issues raised by my Honourable friend Mr. Joshi and that we will take those issues into very serious consideration when we finally rearrange these Departments.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: I withdraw my amendment.

The amendment was, by leave of the Assembly, withdrawn.

Statutory authority for maintenance of Standing Army.

Mr. P. P. Ginwala (Burma: Non-European): I move:

"That the demand under sub-head 'Army Department' be reduced by Rs. 100."

I may remind the House that last year a similar reduction was moved and carried by the House by a very large majority in which you will find that practically every non-official, European or Indian, Member of this House with the exception of three Indian non-official Members voted in favour of the motion for reduction. That motion was carried mainly on two grounds, first of all, on the ground of excessive military expenditure. I believe my Honourable friend Sir Montagu Webb made a very powerful speech condemning the extravagance of the military expenditure on that occasion. The other ground was that this House was unwilling to vote any money to the Government unless the military expenditure was made votable. Since then the position has developed a bit against the Government if I may so put it, though these two complaints still remain to a very large extent. Last September I put a question to the Army Department as to what statutory authority existed for the maintenance of an army in India in times of peace. A reply was given to me on the 15th January this year to that question in which it was stated that there were certain statutes upon which they relied. I am satisfied that by a bona fide mistake they had forgotten to mention that all those statutes had been repealed. I repeated the question on a subsequent date and I got a definite reply from the Government that there was no statutory authority for the maintenance of an army in India. Questioned further as to what other authority they had, they said they depended upon the inherent powers of the Crown for the maintenance of an army. I venture to submit to this House that this is not an academic question as some Honourable Members may seem to think. It is a very serious question to my mind. This inherent power of the Crown so far as the constitutional law of England is concerned is for practical purposes a myth. If anybody tried to suggest in Great Britain that under the inherent power of the Crown it was possible for the Crown to maintain an army, he would run the risk of being beheaded. The Crown had that power at one time but that power has been taken away long since and for two hundred years or more at any rate in England this inherent power of the Crown has never been exercised for the maintenance of an Army. But the argument may be advanced by the Government, as no doubt it will be advanced, that in England by statutory enactments that power has been curtailed but that the Crown may still exercise the power outside Great Britain. I deny that there is any such authority for that proposition. I see the Honourable the Law Member has got some books on constitutional law from which he will no doubt read later on but I do not think I shall trouble the House with reading any authority on that subject. I shall be satisfied if the Honourable the Law Member is able to convince the House that in any Colony the Crown has attempted to maintain a Standing Army at the expense of the colony,—which is the point—under the inherent powers of the Crown. There would have been a revolt in the Colonies if the Crown had attempted to do that. The Crown may have maintained in the past an Army under the legal authority of an Act of Parliament in the colonies for garrisoning the Colonies but it was Parliament who voted the money. They never attempted at any time to maintain a Standing Army in any of the Colonies for which the Colonies themselves paid. If the Honourable the Law Member attempts to meet this objection he must bear these two things in mind, that the Crown maintained an Army under this inherent power in the Colonies and that the Colonies were made to pay for the Army. Now even looking at the past history of legislation in this country, you would find that the Crown never attempted to do that even in India. The Army was maintained under an Act of Parliament by the Crown in India so far at any rate as the East India Company was concerned and so far as that army was transferred by the East India Company to the Crown and an express provision had to be made in the Government of India Act, 1858, creating a charge upon the revenues of India in respect of the Army that was then transferred. But even if that did apply, apart from the fact that that has been repealed only to the extent to which the army could be maintained by the East India Company, it will not apply to any extension of the Army or increase in the strength of the Army. Anyhow that provision has been repealed. The Government of India Act, 1858, especially the provisions of that Act relating to this have been expressly repealed and in fact the Government have admitted that there is no statutory authority. So I do not think it is necessary for me to labour that point.

Now, I maintain, Sir, that the Government of India does not do itself any credit by maintaining an army in this fashion. It helps itself to the revenues of India by making military expenditure non-votable but it goes further. It establishes an army wholly without any legal authority. It is an illegal position, and it will be much truer to call this despotism, which is sometimes described as a benevolent despotism, a military despotism from the constitutional point of view. I do not mean it in any other sense. When they have got no authority to maintain the Army, they do maintain an Army and they turn to the revenues of India for the purpose of paying an Army illegally maintained by them. Now, take the logical consequence of this maintenance of the Army in India with regard to the constitution of England itself. It simply means this that the Crown can maintain a very large Army in India, if it chose, which it can employ anywhere else, even against the British people themselves. It is repugnant to British notions altogether that the Crown should have either direct or indirect power to maintain a Standing Army without the express authority of Parliament. I am not raising any technical objections whatsoever, I may assure the House. But what I suggest to the Government of India is this, that instead of taking their stand on such shadowy right as the inherent power of the Crown, it would be doing the right thing not only from its point of view, but of every element in and outside this House if it took steps to regularise this position. It can do it in two different ways. Last year we claimed that it was in the discretion of the Governor General to treat military expenditure as votable, if he liked. The Government were advised by their Law Officers to the contrary and we see what good use they have made of that advice. Many items which were formerly votable have now become non-votable

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: And vice versa.

Mr. P. P. Ginwala: True, Sir, but the process has begun and I do not know where it will stop. I do not say that what they are doing is illegal. But I would point out to the House that there is a very serious risk of the scope of non-votable items being extended, if we do not safeguard ourselves. Secondly, they have got the usual method which they have in their own country to have a statute passed by this Assembly every year authorising them to maintain the Army at a particular strength; that would legalise the whole situation. I am willing to believe they will not easily adopt that course, because they unnecessarily suppose that we shall not be willing to allow them to maintain the Army at the strength at which they wish to maintain it. The sooner they disabuse themselves of this, the better it would be for their relations with this House. What we want them to do is to lay their cards on the table properly, and I have no hesitation in saying that this House would do everything that they reasonably require for the maintenance of an Army for the defence of India. I do not wish to take too much of the time of the House by dwelling too long on the constitutional aspect of the question. I will put it to the Government merely from the practical point of view. They will not be able to convince anybody, even if the Law Member cited hundred authorities, that such a thing as the inherent power of the Crown exists. The man in the street will not be able to follow that at all, and it is his money that you are spending. You have got to satisfy him that what you are doing is legal, that it is right and that it is based on some authority. You may cite, as I say, hundreds of books, but that will not carry the slightest conviction. What would convince the people of this country of your bona fides in this respect is to come boldly to this House every year asking for an Army Act or to make the Military expenditure votable. Sir, I move my amendment.

Mr. President: Amendment moved:

"That the demand under sub-head 'Army Department' be reduced by Rs. 100."

If I allow the Honourable Member to move and the debate subsequently to proceed on the lines of the constitutional argument which he has presented, I think I should add that I do not want thereby a precedent to be created. On the whole I think it would have been better to raise a large issue like this on the motion that the Finance Bill be considered rather than on the Army vote, but as it is technically in order, I have accepted it, though with that warning.

Sir Montagu Webb (Bombay: European): Sir, I spoke last year in support of Mr. Ginwala's motion to reduce the Army expenditure, which I considered was a danger, and a grave danger to the finances of this country

Mr. President: Is the Honourable Member going to discuss the issue raised?

Sir Montagu Webb: No, Sir.

Mr. President: Then for the purposes of orderly debate, I think we will exhaust that first.

Lieut.-Colonel H. A. J. Gidney: Sir, I do not intend to emulate my Honourable friend, Mr. Ginwala, in questioning the constitution or the right of the Government to maintain an Army in India. I desire to confine my remarks to the military medical department of the Army.

Mr. President: Perhaps the Honourable Member did not hear what I said to Sir Montagu Webb. I think we had better exhaust the subject raised by Mr. Ginwala's speech, and if other Honourable Members do not wish to speak on that now I shall call upon the Law Member.

Dr. H. S. Gour: Sir I wish to contribute a few words to the constitutional question raised by the Honourable Mover of this amendment. Honourable Members will know that under constitutional law the Sovereign was at one time ideally the centre of all power, but as the constitution developed, sovereignty became divisible and sovereign rights were gradually transferred to the people. That is the genesis of the British Parliament. The sovereign rights have been practically all transferred to the British Parliament. Therefore though the King of England, remains the fountain head of honour and perhaps of mercy, all the constitutional power of the King of England is transferred to and vested in the British Parliament. That is also the position as regards the Colonies. The sovereign power has been transferred by the various Acts constituting the constitutional Acts of the various Dominions. In India up to the passing of the Reforms Act we had the semblance of a constitution, but even that constitution had laid down a very salutary principle, now embodied in section 21 of the Government of India Act. It laid down that:

"Subject to the provisions of this Act and rules made thereunder the expenditure of the revenues of India both in British India and elsewhere shall be subject to the control of the Secretary of State in Council, and no grant or appropriation of any part of those revenues or of any other property coming into the possession of the Secretary of State in Council by virtue of the Government of India Act shall be made without the concurrence of a majority of votes at a meeting of the Council of India."

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

[16TH MARCH 1923.]

[Dr. H. S. Gour.]

All the revenues of India are therefore directly under the control of the Secretary of State and no grant or appropriation of those revenues can be made except in the manner and to the extent provided by this Statute. The question therefore arises, are the revenues of India for the maintenance of the Army in this country diverted in accordance with the provisions of section 21 of the Government of India Act? That, I submit, is the short question. When Mr. Ginwala interpellated the Government, the position of the Government was that the Army in India is maintained under the inherent power of the Crown, and that there is nothing in the Government of India Act to prevent the revenues of India being utilised for the purpose of maintaining such an Army. The latter argument is met by reference to section 21 of the Government of India Act to which I have adverted. There remains the question about the inherent power of the Crown. I have already submitted to Honourable Members that the moment the sovereignty becomes merged into a Parliamentary Statute and a constitution is granted to a colony or to a country, pro tanto the inherent powers of the Crown are affected and modified and, so far as the Statute now known as the Government of India Act lays down a certain mode and manner in which the revenues of India shall be applied, the powers of the Crown are limited; otherwise, there would be a repugnancy between the constitution granted by Parliament and the inherent rights of sovereignty, and I therefore submit that it is not right to claim that the Army in India is maintained under the inherent power of the Crown. The position, therefore, is reduced to this. We have to pay the major portion of our revenues for the maintenance of the Army in India. There is no statutory authority for the payment of the Army in this country; the inherent power of the Crown cannot be invoked in support of its maintenance; the position, therefore, is that constitutionally this expenditure is being incurred upon a purpose not justifiable by law. What is then the remedy? The obvious remedy suggested by Mr. Ginwala is that there should be an Annual Army Act enacted in this country as it is enacted in England, which provides for the maintenance and pay of the Army in the United Kingdom. That Annual Army Act is subject to the annual vote of the House of Commons, and, if a similar Army Act is enacted in this country, it must be brought to this House and be subject to its vote.

The other position raised by my friend, Mr. Ginwala, is, with all deference to him, untenable. He said that the other alternative open to the Government was to make Army expenditure votable and thereby circumvent the legal difficulty which he has enunciated; but I do not see, Sir, how by transferring the Army vote from the non-voted to the voted portion of the Budget, the legal objection would be surmounted. I therefore submit that the Government should, in order to legalise the Army in India, take legislative measures and bring an enactment annually for the acceptance of this House. That seems to be the constitutional position.

I understand, Sir, that the question as regards the excessive military burden from which this country suffers is not to be discussed at this juncture, and, therefore, what I have to say on that question I shall say later on.

Sir P. S. Sivaswamy Aiyer: Is there anything forbidding military expenditure?

Dr. H. S. Gour: The Honourable Sir Sivaswamy Aiyer has asked me a question and I

Mr. President: Order, order. The Honourable Mian Sir Muhammad Shafi.

The Honourable Dr. Mian Sir Muhammad Shafi (Law Member): Sir, on the motion now before the House my Honourable and learned friend Mr. Ginwala has raised the question of authority for the maintenance of a Standing Army in India. I have no doubt that my Honourable friend has thought it necessary to raise this question again at this stage by reason of the answer which was given to him at a previous meeting of this Assembly, according to which answer there was no statutory authority in the Government of India Act for the maintenance of such an Army, and the inherent power of the Crown was invoked in support of such maintenance. I am prepared to admit that the answer then given to my Honourable friend was not quite correct.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar (and others). Who gave that answer?

The Honourable Dr. Mian Sir Muhammad Shafi: There is statutory power in the Government of India Act itself for the maintenance of a Standing Army in India, and I now proceed to make that position clear. If Honourable Members will turn to section 1 of the Government of India Act, they will find that this is what the section enacts:

"The territories for the time being vested in His Majesty in India are governed by and in the name of His Majesty the King Emperor of India and all rights which, if the Government of India Act, 1858, had not been passed, might have been exercised by the East India Company in relation to any territory, may be exercised by and in the name of His Majesty as rights incidental to the Government of India."

Now, Honourable Members will notice that according to the express enactment embodied in this section, all rights possessed by the East India Company prior to the enactment of the 1858 Act, referred to in this section, may now be exercised by the Crown or the Government of India. My Honourable friend, Mr. Ginwala, has himself admitted to-day that the East India Company had authority to maintain an Army in India, and he pointed out that the authority empowering the East India Company to maintain an Army was derived from an Act of Parliament. I see my Honourable and learned friend Mr. Rangachariar shake his head. Let me invite his attention to what is known as the Indian Mutiny Act, George II Chapter IX "An Act to punish mutiny and desertion of officers and soldiers in the service of the United Company of Merchants of England trading to the East Indies." The language of that enactment is somewhat of the old type; but my Honourable friend will find that Parliament in this enactment recognised the right of the East India Company to maintain an Army in this country

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: Conferred it.

The Honourable Dr. Mian Sir Muhammad Shafi: —Recognised, I said—and went on to make provisions for courts-martial and other matters—expressly recognised, there was no question of conferment—recognised the right of the East India Company to maintain an Army in India. As a matter of fact prior to the enactment of this statute, the East India Company actually did maintain an army in India; this Act recognised the right of the East India Company to do so and went on to make provisions for the administration of military affairs and of the army in this country. That right of the East India Company was again recognised in the Act of 1833; and in 1858 when the administration of the affairs of this country was taken over by the Crown from the East India Company, you will find that in the Act of 1858 provisions were expressly embodied for the transfer to the Crown not only of the civil but also of the military administration. (Mr. N. M. Samarth: "Existing establishments.") It was unnecessary at that time to make the provision embodied in those sections because the administration of India was being transferred from the East India Company to the Crown . . .

Mr. P. P. Ginwala: What happened to the inherent power of the Crown in 1858?

The Honourable Dr. Mian Sir Muhammad Shafi: Let me make the position clear. There was no question at that time of the inherent power of the Crown, and so far as this part of my argument is concerned, there is for my purpose no question of the inherent power of the Crown now. I am not dealing with the extent of the inherent power of the Crown in this part of my argument. What I am emphasising is this, that Parliament, having by a statute recognised the right of the East India Company to maintain an army in India and having subsequently in the Act of 1833 repeated the recognition of that right, when the administration of the affairs of this country, civil and military, were taken over, or in other words were transferred from the East India Company to the Crown, in 1858, it became necessary to make those specific provisions for the transfer to the Crown not only of the civil but also of the military administration of the country from the East India Company. But the military administration of the country, having once been transferred under that statute to the Crown and having become vested in the Crown from that date onwards, there was no necessity to repeat these sections now in the Act of 1919. All that was necessary to lay down and to embody was that the rights which the East India Company possessed before the enactment of the statute of 1858 should now be exerciseable by the Crown. Section 1 of the Government of India Act clearly lays that down and all rights exerciseable by the East India Company before the transfer of the administration from the hands of the East India Company to the Crown can now be exercised by the Crown. The words are "and all rights which if the Government of India Act, 1858, had not been passed, might have been exercised by the East India Company in relation to any territories may be exercised by and in the name of His Majesty as rights incidental to the Government of India." It is clear, therefore, that there is a statutory power—no question of the inherent right of the Crown—a statutory power conferred upon His Majesty to exercise all rights which were exerciseable by the East India Company in respect of any territories, and those rights can be exercised now.

Now, I ask the Honourable Members to turn their attention for a moment to section 20 of the Act, sub-section (1). According to this sub-section, "the revenues of India shall be received for and in the name of His Majesty and shall, subject to the provisions of this Act, be applied for the purposes of the government"—not with a capital G but with a small g,—“of India.” Now defence of India against foreign invasion or against an insurrection in the country is part and parcel of the duties connected with the Government of India and is one of the duties cast upon Government. It is clear, therefore, that under section 20, the revenues of India may be applied for maintaining an army for the defence of India and also for putting down any rebellion that may occur in the country itself, for armies cannot be improvised in a day. It is indeed obvious that one of the essential duties which the Government has to perform is to be prepared to defend the country against foreign invasion, and that cannot be done unless Government maintains an army. And if you compare the language of this sub-section with the language embodied in section 22 of the Government of India Act, the point will become still more clear. This is how section 22 runs:

"Except for preventing or repelling actual invasion of His Majesty's Indian possessions or under other sudden and urgent necessity, the revenues of India shall not, without the consent of both Houses of Parliament, be applicable to defraying the expenses of any military operations carried on beyond the external frontiers of those possessions by His Majesty's forces, be charged upon those revenues."

A careful examination of section 22 makes it perfectly clear to any reasonable mind that this section embodies a prohibition that the revenues of India shall not be spent upon any military expedition beyond the frontiers of India unless that military expedition is rendered necessary for preventing or repelling actual invasion of His Majesty's Indian possessions. It follows, therefore, I submit necessarily, that the revenues of India may be spent upon any military expedition necessitated for preventing or repelling actual invasion of His Majesty's Indian possessions and that these revenues may be spent upon military forces maintained for that purpose. It is clear, therefore, that section 22 justifies the maintenance of a Standing Army in India in order to prevent or repel actual invasion of His Majesty's Indian possessions and that the revenues of India may legitimately be spent on the maintenance of such army.

Again, Sir, it is because that is the position laid down in this Statute that certain other provisions have been enacted in the Government of India Act. Let me invite the attention of the House to section 36, clause 4. According to section 36, clause (4) (this section refers to the constitution of the Executive Council):

"If any Member of the Council (other than the Commander-in-Chief for the time being of His Majesty's forces in India) is at the time of his appointment in the military service of the Crown, he shall not, during his continuance in office as such member, hold any military command or be employed in actual military duties."

Then, according to section 37:

"If the Commander-in-Chief for the time being of His Majesty's forces in India is a Member of the Governor General's Executive Council, he shall, subject to the provisions of this Act, have rank and precedence in the Council next after the Governor General."

It will be clear from these provisions that, because there is statutory authority, as I have contended, for the maintenance of an Army in India, it is therefore necessary to have a Commander-in-Chief of that Army in this country and the Commander-in-Chief occupies as a member of the Government of India a certain position in the Executive Council which is described in section 36. If, among the Members of the Executive Council there should be one who holds a military position in the Army in India, maintained under the statutory authority referred to, then he will not, while he is a Member of the Executive Council, hold any command in the Army itself. Again, when we turn to section 44, what do we find? This is what that section contains:

"The Governor General in Council may not, without the express order of the Secretary of State in Council, in any case (except where hostilities have been actually commenced, or preparations for the commencement of hostilities have been actually made against the British Government in India or against any prince or state dependent thereon, or against any prince or state whose territories His Majesty is bound by any subsisting treaty to defend or guarantee), either declare war or commence hostilities or enter into any treaty for making war against any prince or state in India, or enter into any treaty for guaranteeing the possessions of any such prince or state."

[Dr. Mian Sir Muhammad Shafi.]

Now, this section again clearly contemplates the maintenance of an Army, the expenditure on which, as I have already observed, is a charge on the revenues of India, because otherwise this particular section would be entirely meaningless. Declaration of War in certain circumstances by the Governor General in Council presupposes the existence of an Army which he will make use of immediately on a Declaration of War and the whole scheme of the various provisions embodied in the Government of India Act, cognate to the matter with which we are now dealing, clearly indicates the correctness of the contention which I have submitted to the House, based on section 1 of the Government of India Act, that is to say, the authority of the Crown to maintain an Army in India and the revenues of India being chargeable for the expenses of that Army is well established by statute, otherwise all these various provisions to which I have invited attention would be meaningless.

Then, if you turn to section 65 (1) (d), the Indian Legislature has power to make laws:

"for the Government officers, soldiers (airmen) and followers in His Majesty's Indian forces, wherever they are serving, in so far as they are not subject to the Army Act (or the Air Force Act)."

That provision again clearly shows the existence of an Army in India and the power of the Indian Legislature to enact laws for certain purposes which govern the soldiers employed in that Army. Again, according to section 67 (2) (c):

"It shall not be lawful, without the previous sanction of the Governor General, to introduce at any meeting of either Chamber of the Indian Legislature any measure affecting—

* * * *

(c) the discipline or maintenance of any part of His Majesty's military, naval or air forces", thus excluding the jurisdiction of this House and of the other House in connection with certain matters connected with the military forces in this country.

Then we come to section 95. This is what that section enacts:

"The Secretary of State in Council, with the concurrence of a majority of votes at a meeting of the Council of India, may make rules for distributing between the several authorities in India the power of making appointments to and promotions in military offices under the Crown in India, and may reinstate military officers and servants suspended or removed by any of those authorities."

Here again, the House will notice that this particular provision in the Act contemplates the maintenance of an army in India and the appointment as officers of that army by any authority to whom such power of appointment may be delegated by the Secretary of State in Council.

Again in section 96-A:

"Notwithstanding anything in any other enactment, the Governor General in Council, with the approval of the Secretary of State in Council, may, by notification, declare that, subject to any conditions or restrictions prescribed in the notification, any named ruler or subject of any state in India shall be eligible for appointment to any civil or military office under the Crown to which a native of British India may be appointed."

and so on. Provision is thus made for appointment not only of British subjects but even of Rulers of Indian States or of subjects of Indian States to military appointments in India.

The whole scheme of the Act, therefore, clearly shows that the right to maintain an army in India just as it existed in the days of the old East India Company, is recognised by section 1 of the Government of India Act and that right is vested in His Majesty the King Emperor. The revenues of India may be properly made use of according to section 20 in the maintenance of that army, various provisions are made showing that a Commander-in-Chief for the Indian forces and various other officers for the Indian army may be appointed in this manner and that the Indian Legislature is empowered to pass certain laws to which even soldiers of His Majesty's Army in India will be subject, express provision is made excluding certain matters from the jurisdiction of the Indian Legislature and other cognate provisions have been enacted in this Statute clearly providing for matters connected therewith. It is clear, therefore, from a perusal of the various provisions embodied in this Act relating to the administration of military affairs in this country that there is ample statutory authority for the maintenance of an army in this country, and also for expenditure out of the Indian revenues for the maintenance of that army.

In conclusion, there is one observation, Sir, which I have to make upon the general principle to which Mr. Ginwala and more particularly my Honourable friend Dr. Gour referred. Dr. Gour pointed out that in the first instance all authority is vested in the King Emperor. "The King Emperor is the centre of all authority" was the expression I think that Dr. Gour used. But he pointed out that in England by reason of certain enactments the authority with regard to the maintenance of an army had been transferred from the Crown to the Parliament. That is exactly the position. In England prior to the enactment of the particular statute which was in the mind of my Honourable friend—the Bill of Rights—the Crown had full power to maintain an army in the Kingdom of Great Britain. It was the Bill of Rights which took away that power from the Crown. The Bill of Rights applies only to the Kingdom of Great Britain, for at the time it was passed India was not part of that Kingdom at all. This is perfectly clear—my Honourable friend, Mr. Ginwala shakes his head—it is perfectly clear even from the latest Army and Air Force (Annual) Act. (Mr. Ginwala: "May I say the Annual Army Act provision is entirely different from the Bill of Rights.") If you will turn to the Preamble of the Army and Air Force (Annual) Act, 1922, you will find:

"And whereas it is adjudged necessary by His Majesty and this present Parliament that a body of land forces should be continued for the safety of the United Kingdom and the defence of the possessions of His Majesty's Crown and that the whole number of such forces should consist of two hundred and fifteen thousand, including those to be employed at the depôts in the United Kingdom for the training of recruits for service at home and abroad, but exclusive of the numbers actually serving within His Majesty's Indian possessions."

It is clear from the last words of this paragraph of the Preamble which I have just read that His Majesty's Forces in India are excluded from the application of the Statute. Well, what I was going to emphasize is this: In every country when constitutional development takes place from autocracy towards democracy all power is at the earlier stage vested in the Crown. Gradually as constitutional development takes place, by various enactments powers are transferred from the Crown to the democratic Government that may be introduced in the country. It is not until the stage of full responsible Government is reached, when the administration vests in the hands of a Parliament, that the Crown is deprived of the power possessed by it to maintain an army. When that stage is reached in India and an express provision is then enacted that no forces will be maintained unless with the sanction of the Indian Parliament, then and then alone the power of the Crown to maintain an army in India will disappear and that power will be transferred to the Indian Parliament of the future. Until that stage is reached the power vests in the Crown apart even from any statutory authority and I submit that the reply given at the previous stage—the latter half of the reply that was given at the previous stage—was really correct and that it was fully justified on principle. I submit to the House that there is ample statutory authority for the maintenance of an army in India and for the expenses of that army being charged on the revenues of India and also that even upon general principles the position taken up by my Honourable friend is unsound.

[Dr. Mian Sir Muhammad Shafi.]

Sir P. S. Sivaswamy Aiyer: After the elaborate speech of the Honourable the Law Member, it is hardly necessary for me to intervene in this debate. If I enter the lists at all, it is rather the temptation offered by an abstract legal discussion to a quondam lawyer. Let me congratulate my friend Dr. Gour on the discovery he has made, I am afraid, I must say, of a mare's nest. The point that he has taken may, I think, be much more shortly disposed of than it has been by the Honourable the Law Member. The Honourable Dr. Gour has asked for the statutory authority under which the army in India is maintained.

(At this stage Mr. Deputy President took the Chair.)

May I ask him what authority there is in the Statute for maintaining a Police department, for maintaining an Education Department, for maintaining any of the numerous other Departments which are essential to the administration of any civilised Government?

Dr. H. S. Gour: The various Acts of the Indian Legislature.

Sir P. S. Sivaswamy Aiyer: Now, Sir, my Honourable friend, Dr. Gour, referred to section 20 of the Statute. Now section 20 lays down this:

"There shall be charged on the revenues of India alone (a) all the debts of the East India Company, (b) all sums of money, costs, charges and expenses which if the Government of India Act, 1858, had not been passed would have been payable by the East India Company"

Dr. H. S. Gour: I rise to a point of order. My Honourable friend has entirely misunderstood me. I did not refer to section 20 but to section 21.

Sir P. S. Sivaswamy Aiyer: I am coming to that. It is necessary for my purpose to refer to section 20;

"... and (c) all expenses, debts and liabilities lawfully contracted and incurred on account of the Government of India."

Does it mean under a specific provision of law or statute or does it mean all those expenses which it is lawful for the Government to incur in the absence of any prohibition of that expenditure? I take it that the plain and commonsense interpretation which should be placed upon this clause is simply this. That whatever expense may be lawfully contracted, that is without infringing any law, on account of the Government of India may be paid out of the revenues of the Government of India. The Government of India carries on numerous functions and the expenditure which it has to incur on account of these various functions come under this head, expenses lawfully incurred on account of the Government of India. Now, come to section 21 upon which my learned friend places some reliance:

"Subject to the provisions of this Act and the rules made thereunder, the expenditure of the revenues of India, both in British India and elsewhere, shall be subject to the control of the Secretary of State in Council and no grant or appropriation of any part of those revenues or of any other property coming into the possession of the Secretary of State in Council by virtue of the Government of India Act, 1858, or this Act shall be made without the concurrence of a majority of votes at a meeting of the Council of India."

That provides for the control of the Secretary of State, though it says, subject to the provisions of this Act or the rules made thereunder. Now, the object of section 21 is simply to secure the control of the Secretary of State and not to define the specific purposes for which the revenues of India may be employed or may not be employed. I will not take up the time of the House by referring to section 22 which by expressly forbidding operations beyond the frontier contemplates operations within the frontier and necessarily the maintenance of a military force within India. Nor is it necessary for me to refer to any of the other sections already referred to. But there is one section which I think has not been referred to by the Honourable the Law Member and to which I may make a reference, and it is this. Section 67-A (1):

"The estimated annual expenditure and revenue of the Governor General in Council shall be laid in the form of a statement before both Chambers of the Indian Legislature in each year," and so on. Clause (3) states:

"The proposals of the Governor General in Council for the appropriation of revenue or moneys relating to the following heads of expenditure shall not be submitted to the vote of the Legislative Assembly" and so on, and one of those heads is "expenditure classified by the order of the Governor General in Council as defence." What further authority do you want than this? But I prefer to rest the case in favour of the maintenance of an Army not merely upon section 67A, nor upon any of the other sections which are all perfectly relevant and which are of great weight, but upon the higher ground and the simpler ground that the maintenance of an Army and the defence of a country are part of the essential purposes of any civilised Government and any expenditure incurred for those purposes would be expenditure lawfully incurred on account of the Government of India. I think it unnecessary to take up the time of the House with any further observations.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: Sir, I am afraid our sympathies ought to go to the Honourable Mr. Burdon in the very delicate position he has been placed by the Law Department of the Government of India. Here was a deliberate interpellation put by my Honourable friend, Mr. Ginwala. First of all, we were told that the army is maintained under a particular Statute. That was on the 15th of January 1923. Then, my Honourable friend Mr. Ginwala politely drew the attention of the Honourable Mr. Burdon and asked "Are you not referring to repealed Statutes?" The Honourable Mr. Burdon, I take it, even if in the first instance he did not take the advice of the Law Department, I hope and I trust, and knowing Mr. Burdon as I do, I am sure, he did consult the Law Department before he gave the second answer; for, I am not sure he would have ventured to give an answer about "inherent power" without consulting this Department of the Government of India. What, then, did the Law Department advise Mr. Burdon? "Yes, they are repealed Statutes." Sir, I hope the Honourable the Law Member then looked up the Government of India Act, looked up all these sections which he referred to this morning, and he might have usefully referred to another section also which neither the paid department nor the unpaid department of the Law Department of the Government of India referred to this morning, which perhaps throws more light in their direction than they have laboured to point out; that is section 33 of the Government of India Act, which has been before me in dealing with this question. It refers to the Civil and Military Government of India, which perhaps is more apposite than all the laboured explanation which my Honourable friend sought to impute from the various other sections which he referred to. The powers of Civil and Military Government of India vest in the Governor General in Council subject to the orders of the Secretary of State. It is that section which has given me trouble in this matter, not the other sections referred to by my Honourable friends, both to the right and left of this House. Sir, the whole question is—and that is the question which has been missed by both my Honourable friends who spoke this morning—the question is, what is the right of the Government of India to maintain an army in times of peace, when there is no Military Government. No doubt Government maintains an army in times of peace, Sir, against the subjects of the Government. That also has to be remembered. I can understand the power of the Government to maintain an army to repel enemies from abroad to attack enemies within. Sir, for the purpose of internal peace, what right has any Government, unless that right is conferred by law, unless the Government is to be a Military Government, what right can the Government have to maintain an army unless it is empowered by law? I quite see from the regard which my Honourable friend Sir Sivaswamy Aiyer enjoyed in the Council Chamber in Madras, he is prepared to support and infer everything in favour of the Government, but, Sir, we who belong to the non-official world refuse to subscribe. Sir, if that is so, why should the Preamble of the Army Act in England say:

[Rao Bahadur T. Rangaachariar.]

"Whereas it is illegal to maintain military forces in times of peace."

Mark the language, "it is illegal to maintain military forces in times of peace," therefore we enact such and such provisions. On the 19th of February 1923, an answer was given to this Assembly. I hope this Assembly is being treated seriously by the Law Department, not playfully. On the 19th of February 1923, the answer was given to us that these three Statutes had been repealed. Then under what power is this Army maintained? "Under the inherent power of the Crown." Sir, having said that on the 19th of February, to-day, when they are driven into a corner, the Law Department does not give up the inherent power, but invokes some other power, that is the implied power. If it was a plain statutory provision, lay people as we are, we would have asked for a reference to the particular section. Look at such and such a section. There would be no elaborate argument. The very elaborate and laboured argument urged by our learned friend, the Law Member, shows how very weak the case is. I do not know how many of us have been convinced by this elaborate argument. I find it was an elaborate argument. What trust are we to place on it? Where are we now I want to know. What weight are we to attach to it as against the opinion given on the 19th February 1923? The matter is involved in serious doubt. I want this matter to be treated seriously. I am sorry if I bore the House in this matter. I quite recognise this is a constitutional question which cannot be discussed effectively or usefully on the floor of this House. We have raised this question and we want the Government of India to examine its position carefully and, if necessary, consult the law officers of the Crown, those famous law officers of the Crown in England, or eminent constitutional authority in this matter. Sir, we are not willing to take the law as laid down by either the Honourable the Law Member on the 19th of February, or to-day, or as laid down by the Honourable Sir P. Sivaswamy Aiyer for whose opinion I have the greatest respect, but I rather think the question was sprung upon him to-day, and I am sure he did not prepare for this and he gave an opinion offhand, which he seldom does, and therefore I attribute it to his innate sympathy for bureaucracy. But I do not want the House to decide this question. I do not think it was the object of Mr. Ginwala. It was not my object when I gave notice of this issue. We of the Assembly view this question with some seriousness. We will be very glad indeed if the Government will go to Parliament if they distrust us, or come to us and ask for legal authority if there is no legal authority. We are concerned, Sir, for this military expenditure and we want to see if it is really incurred legally. I ask the Government in all seriousness that the matter should not be disposed of in this light and easy manner in which they have attempted to dispose of it.

Sir Campbell Rhodes (Bengal: European): I move that the question, if there is one, be now put.

Sir Montagu Webb: On a point of order, may I ask if we shall have a further opportunity of discussing the Army Vote in other respects than this constitutional point?

Dr. H. S. Gour: When I rose to speak, Sir, I asked the Chair whether the other question was reserved for further discussion and I understood the Chair to say that it was.

Sir Montagu Webb: Then, Sir, my point is answered.

Mr. Deputy President: The question is that the question be now put. The motion was adopted.

Mr. P. P. Ginwala: I ask for leave to withdraw this motion. The motion* was, by leave of the Assembly, withdrawn.

The Assembly then adjourned for Lunch till a Quarter to Three of the Clock.

* "That the demand under sub-head 'Army Department' (page 47) be reduced by Rs. 100."

The Assembly re-assembled after Lunch at a Quarter to Three of the Clock. Mr. Deputy President (Sir Jamsetjee Jejeebhoy) was in the Chair.

MESSAGE FROM THE COUNCIL OF STATE AND BILLS LAID ON THE TABLE.

Secretary of the Assembly: Sir, the following Message has been received from the Secretary of the Council of State:

"I am directed to inform you that the Bill to give effect to certain Articles of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Traffic in Women and Children, as passed by the Legislative Assembly at its meeting of the 9th March 1923, was passed by the Council of State at its meeting of the 15th March 1923, with the amendments indicated in the attached statement. The Council of State requests the concurrence of the Legislative Assembly in the amendments."

Sir, I lay the Bill on the table.

In accordance with Rule 25 of the Indian Legislative Rules, I also lay on the table the Bill to declare the law in force in certain territories of the district of Sambalpur and to provide that the past administration of those territories shall not be called in question on the ground that they were not included in the territories administered by the Government of the Central Provinces, which was passed by the Council of State on the 15 March, 1923.

THE BUDGET—LIST OF DEMANDS.

SECOND STAGE—contd.

DEMAND NO. 14—GENERAL ADMINISTRATION—contd.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: I am sorry my friend Sir Sivaswamy Aiyer is not here in his place. Nevertheless I have been told that one remark which I made during my speech just before Lunch was understood in an improper way, my reference to his "innate sympathy with the bureaucracy" and "unpaid" advocacy. It was far from my intention to impute anything to my Honourable and esteemed friend. I am very sorry I used that expression and I now withdraw it.

Munshi Iswar Saran (Cities of the United Provinces: Non-Muhammadan Urban): Did you call upon me, Sir, to move No. 323?

Mr. Deputy President: Yes.

Munshi Iswar Saran: I beg your pardon, Sir. I was under a misapprehension. If you will allow me I shall move it now.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: Is it to be taken that No. 317 is disposed of?

Mr. Deputy President: Yes.

Munshi Iswar Saran: If you will be pleased to allow me, Sir, I shall move No. 323. Thank you, Sir. I move:

"That the provision for sub-head 'Army Department' under the head 'General Administration' be reduced by Re. 1."

I wish to invite the attention of this House to the reduction that has been made in the sum set apart for the Territorial Force. As the time is very short I wish only to indicate the points on which I would like to invite the attention of the military authorities as well as of the Honourable Members of this House.

One may not be quite in perfect agreement with the details of the scheme of the territorial force, still the consensus of opinion amongst us is that all that can be done should be done in order to push forward this scheme of the territorial force. It is, therefore, to be deeply regretted that the meagre sum that was allowed for the scheme last year has been cut down by Rs. 10 lakhs.

Then there is another point to which I wish to draw the attention of the House very briefly and it is the announcement that was made about the Indianization of the Indian Army. Now, Sir, at the time that the announcement was made, I am afraid the Honourable Members of this House did not have the full scheme before them and therefore were not in a position to view the question in its proper perspective; but now the scheme has been supplied to us by the Army Department and we are in a position to really understand the full effect of the announcement that was made some time ago on the floor of this House. As it will be in the recollection of this House, it was said that 8 Indian units would be Indianised. Now what we find is from this scheme that it would take at least from 20 to 23 years to Indianise these 8 Indian units. Then there is this paragraph in this statement:

"A question has been asked whether the experiment is to be fully tried before the next step is taken, that is to say, in dealing with the other units of the Indian Army. The point is one on which Government are not in a position to make a statement. It would obviously be premature to do so. The first measure of Indianisation has only now been embarked upon and the developments to which it may lead cannot be foreseen or foretold."

So the result of it is this: that this first instalment as it were of this reform that we have got is to take about quarter of a century to come into full operation, and as regards the future developments of this scheme of Indianisation we know very little. For, as it is said, it is rather premature at this stage to say anything about what the future is going to be. I submit that this scheme, now that all the details have become public property and are known to all the Honourable Members of this House as well as to everybody outside this House, will not—I say so, Sir, after full deliberation—give satisfaction to the people. About a quarter of a century to be taken for the Indianisation of 8 units and the rest to remain in doubt and in uncertainty because the Government of India is not in a position to make any definite statement. I need not in this connection draw the attention of the House to the fact that there are various services of the Army Department to which no reference is made. The Indianisation for the present is to be confined to the Infantry and to the Cavalry; but as Honourable Members of this House are fully aware, there are other departments of the Army about the Indianisation of which the scheme is perfectly silent. I therefore submit, Sir, that this announcement which has been made is hardly satisfactory.

Sir Montagu Webb: Sir, this time last year in common with many other Members of this House I supported a motion for a nominal reduction in the vote of the Army Department in order to express the very great anxiety that I and others felt at the magnitude of the military charges. Well, Sir, the Inchcape Committee have made their Report, and on the first page of their Report on Military Services, they write:

"The expenditure which has been incurred in the past may have been inevitable, but the question is whether India can afford to maintain military expenditure on the present scale as an insurance against future eventualities. In our opinion the repeated huge deficits of the last few years, in spite of the imposition of heavy new taxation, have made it abundantly clear that India cannot afford this expenditure."

That opinion, I submit, Sir, confirms the soundness and the statesmanlike character of the action taken by this House last year in making every effort in its power to cut down the military expenditure. A few paragraphs later on the Inchcape Committee write:

"We are informed that there is no idea in the mind of the Government of India of continuing a forward military domination up to the Durand line at the present time."

Notice those two qualifications "up to the Durand line" and "at the present time." The Honourable the Foreign Secretary informed us that it was the intention of Government to maintain what I can describe as a half forward policy, that is to say, to occupy a line half way through Waziristan, and it is in this connection that I desire to give expression to the anxiety which many of us are still feeling with regard to the crores and crores of rupees which are being poured into Waziristan. If I understood my Honourable friend the Foreign Secretary correctly the other day, he stated in eloquent language that the fundamental difficulty of this frontier problem was that the frontier districts "breed too many and feed too few," and that consequently the men of the hills have to come down into the plains in search of food and so forth. Now, I understand the present policy of Government is to construct a big lateral road at the foot of the hills, and another road behind the Mahsud territory and through Waziristan, and that it is proposed to employ local forces to police this road. I am still left in some uncertainty as to how the expenditure of all this money and the construction of these roads is going to cause the Waziris to breed LESS and to feed MORE?

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: Buy more rifles.

Sir Montagu Webb: On the contrary, it seems to me that the expenditure of huge sums of money in this country may quite conceivably produce just the opposite effect and that we shall find the Mahsuds, strengthened and supplemented by the receipt of several crores of rupees, in possession of still more rifles and in a position to give more trouble than ever before. It is because I feel some uncertainty and anxiety in this connection that I should like some further explanation in this matter.

Dr. Nand Lal: Sir, I endorse the view which has been put forward by the last speaker, but I should like to make an addition to it, and you will be surprised to hear, Sir, that so far as the special political expenditure in Waziristan went, it was Rs. 60,40,000 in 1922-23. The House will agree with me that this expenditure is very excessive and some portion of it must have been given to the people of Waziristan, and it is no wonder to me that some portion thereof might have been used by them in the purchase of arms, ammunition and rifles which may have been used, I am afraid, against the law-abiding and loyal subjects of His Majesty. Therefore, Sir, I submit that this heavy expenditure, which tells upon us, may be reduced as early as possible. With these few remarks, I resume my seat.

Khan Bahadur Abdur Rahim Khan (North-West Frontier Province: Nominated Non-Official): Sir, some time back when there was

3 P.M. debate of this question I strongly supported the close-border policy. I still stick to that. But unfortunately, the honourable gentlemen who have spoken about the frontier and about the money spent on it, specially my learned friend, Dr. and Lal, are labouring under a wrong impression. They are mistaken they think that they will altogether cut off the Mahsuds, so that they on't have any relation or anything to do with them. If they think they can keep them at arm's length they are mistaken. There are two alternatives before them. Either to subjugate them, which is both impracticable and impossible in the present circumstances, or the next best thing to adopt the close-border policy which has been mentioned by Mr. Bray. I am afraid that the Honourable Members who say that the allowance which is paid to these Mahsuds and Afridis is a sort of bribery are altogether wrong and mistaken; they do not know that the money which is paid to them is in exchange for tolls, which they used to realise and enjoy in ancient times, and are now taken up by the Government instead. (Dr. and Lal: "I may point out to the Honourable Member that Afridis are different to Mahsuds.") Sir, I may at least expect this much from Dr. and Lal that, as when he speaks I listen to him patiently, he should do the same when I address the House. The tribes render also other services; for instance, they are responsible for keeping these roads safe and if any offence is committed on these roads they are held responsible for it. So, when you get some service from them, is it not fair to pay them something in return? When you enter into friendly relations with them, you must pay them what is their due. They have also got some rights, which must be respected. I am rather surprised at the suggestion made by some Honourable Members that, if you give them this money, they will get rifles with it. They don't know that these tribesmen are well-to-do people and as the Bokhara line is altogether open now and great trade is done in arms traffic they will not experience any difficulty on that account. Do you mean to say you think that they buy rifles with only the money you give them. That is not correct, on the other hand, it will be an inducement to them to behave well and render necessary services. Now, I will bring to your notice one important point which is that at present we are fighting a portion and not all the Mahsuds—we are fighting with only 1-10th of them, which has cost us so much in life and money. If all of them combine and fight us, you can easily judge the result. Even in the time of Sir Robert Sandeman, who pursued that policy of peace, do you mean to say he did not pay these people? If you think by not paying them you will have peace, you are mistaken. Even for the close-border policy you will have to spend money, although comparatively much less. You will have to increase the constabulary, you will have to increase your scouts, formerly the militia, you will have to construct towers and roads all along the border. Now, the question is, you have got two alternatives before you, either to occupy the country, and subjugate the people, for occupation you should give as much money as the military experts require or you must follow the close-border policy and grant the funds asked by the Political Department as the policy of occupation is rejected and the policy of close border is adopted, you should grant what they demand. Sir, if they cannot see their way to either then I think these Honourable gentlemen ought to go there and take charge themselves. I am sorry to say that the criticism on the frontier always causes the settled district people to suffer. I mentioned that last time and refer to it now. These cries against the frontier bring forth nothing but retrenchments, these retrenchments affect our legitimate demands. Retrenchment is just now thrust upon us and has recoiled on the people of the settled districts. On that account our education has greatly suffered; on that account everything else has suffered. I mean and refer to the report that was recently submitted by the Incheape Committee. With due respect to the experience of such a great statesman, with due respect to his great services to India in general, I must say that we, the settled districts people, have become the victims of his report, which has specially nipped our education in the bud, as no further grant will be given to the Islamia College, Peshawar, and the present grant of the Hindu College, Dera Ismail Khan, will be altogether stopped in future.

Mr. K. Ahmed: Sir, what is the relevancy of this?

Khan Bahadur Abdur Rahim Khan: My Honourable friend says there is not relevancy. I will request him just to think for a moment. Sir, I simply want to clear the situation so as to enable the Honourable Members to see what they should do. My Honourable friend perhaps wants to make a speech. So, I do not like to take up the time of the House. I must end my speech with the request that it will be a great mistake if you deduct any money under the head of the North-West Frontier Province.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: I very much regret, Sir, that my friend Mr. Burdon is not able to be here to answer for the Army Department owing to sudden illness. I cannot myself offer to undertake the defence of the Army Department; but I will endeavour to give Mr. Iswar Saran some information in reply to the points which were raised by him. The first related to the reduction of expenditure on the territorial force. The Budget stood at Rs. 40 lakhs last year; it is Rs. 30 lakhs this year. The reason for this is that last year the estimates provided for certain initial expenditure which will not have to be incurred this year. The Rs. 30 lakhs which is provided does not therefore mean a reduction in the territorial force. We were simply able to budget for Rs. 30 lakhs this year because last year we incurred the necessary initial expenditure for the existing battalions. There are now formed 20 units of infantry and 6 units University corps. There are still to be formed during the coming year 2 mechanical transport sections and 2 electrical companies and a field ambulance. I hope that these facts will disabuse Mr. Iswar Saran's mind of any idea that the reduction of expenditure in itself necessarily means a reduction in the strength of the territorial force. As regards the second point, he expressed disappointment, as a result of his study of the statement which was placed on the table by Mr. Burdon, in regard to the Indianisation of 8 Indian units. He laid great stress on the fact that it will take somewhat over 20 years to completely Indianise those units. That of course follows from a calculation of the length of time it takes to arrive at particular grades of rank in the Indian Army. The difficulty of course would be to expedite the process in the case of Indian officers at a rate over that which applies to British officers. He is, however, taking an extreme figure; the date he gives is the date at which they will be completely Indianised; the great bulk of officers in those units will, of course, be Indianised long before that period. It is, of course, the case that we have had to admit that we cannot foresee the process of further Indianisation, namely, how long we should have to wait before the present experiment is regarded as successful and a further step forward be taken. But we cannot foresee the future. I will only put this to the House that it knows perfectly well that a process of this kind, when once begun, does not stop.

Munshi Iswar Saran: How long will it take?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: To answer that question would require a prevision which neither I nor any Member of Government could exercise. We have begun the process. The Honourable Member may well rest assured that if in the initial stage we are persuaded that the steps that we have taken in the Army are as successful as it has been elsewhere then the process will be more rapid than at present seems likely. With regard to the remaining criticisms that have been uttered on the subject of the Army to-day, they relate mainly to Waziristan. My Honourable friend Mr. Bray is here. He has already given the House a very full appreciation of the situation in Waziristan and of the policy decided on. The motion is for reduction of one rupee only. I have not heard from Members here any desire to condemn whole heartedly the policy which Mr. Bray has put forward. . . .

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: This is not the time or place for discussing such a large question. I would ask for a separate day for discussing that question.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: I was coming to exactly the same conclusion as my Honourable friend Mr. Rangachariar. I was wondering whether in the course of demands for grants we could profitably discuss a question like that of Waziristan and I was going to leave the matter in the interrogative form to the House.

Mr. Deputy President: The question is:

"That the provision for sub-head 'Army Department' under the general head 'General Administration' be reduced by rupee one."

The motion was negatived.

Lieutenant-Colonel H. A. J. Gidney: Sir, I am sorry that the Member in charge of the Department is not here to answer my question. (Cries of "What is the number of the amendment?") The subject I wish to talk about is (Cries of "What number?")

Mr. Deputy President: It is almost the same as No. 316.

Dr. Nand Lal: I may invite your attention to No. 327. It does not relate to the same proposition.

Mr. Deputy President: I called upon the Honourable Member (Colonel Gidney) to move the amendment which stands here in his name. That amendment is not printed.

Lieutenant-Colonel H. A. J. Gidney: Regarding my amendment and with your permission, Sir, I wish to ask not for a reduction of Rs. 15,000 but for a reduction of one rupee only in the pay of the Assistant Secretary of the Army Department, Government of India. I do this to have an opportunity of bringing before this House certain matters in connection with the Military Medical Department.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: I rise to a point of order. There is amendment No. 316 by Munshi Iswar Saran. You ruled that I could not move No. 317 and I also understand that you ruled that No. 316 could not be moved. This is only No. 316 repeated by Colonel Gidney.

Dr. H. S. Gour: And of which we had no notice.

Mr. Deputy President: If you object to the amendment on the score of want of notice I must rule it out of order.

(Then the Deputy President called upon Mr. Agnihotri to move his amendment).

Lieut.-Colonel H. A. J. Gidney: I do not know whether my amendment has been ruled out of order because I do not know whether it has been objected to formally.

Mr. Deputy President: Yes.

Munshi Iswar Saran: I just wish to know whether the recommendation of the Inchcape Committee in regard to the post of Inspector General of Irrigation has been carried out, and if not, when it is proposed to carry it out.

The Honourable Mr. B. N. Sarma (Revenue and Agriculture Member): The matter is being considered. It has not been decided yet what to do with this question and I think it will be decided very speedily.

Munshi Iswar Saran: Then I do not wish to move my amendment No. 326.*

Dr. Nand Lal: Sir, I beg to move:

"That the demand under sub-head 'Public Works Department' be reduced by Rs. 10,000." •

As you know, the public works in the major provinces is a provincial transferred subject and the Irrigation Department also, though it is a reserved subject, is very intimately connected with the same department. Then the Government of India has not much to do with both the public works and irrigation and therefore in the face of this fact it seems to be hardly necessary that so much expenditure may be incurred by the Government of India. In support of my argument may I invite your attention to the report of the Retrenchment Committee. By making reference to the report, you will be pleased to see that the public works in the major provinces is a provincial transferred subject, while irrigation (I am reading from page 133), with which this department also deals is a provincial reserved subject in regard to which the powers of the provinces have been largely increased:

"We do not consider that a separate department of the Government of India is in the circumstances required to deal with such questions as concern that Government. We understand that a large amount of the work at present transacted by the department consists of estate work in connection with the properties of the Government of India, in Delhi and Simla, the allotment of houses, etc., etc., which could more appropriately be dealt with by local administrative officers than by a department of the secretariat. A Branch of the department deals with Posts and Telegraphs administration which we propose should be placed under the Communication Department."

* "That the provision for Inspector General of Irrigation under sub-head 'Public Works Department' be reduced by Rs. 1."

In the presence of this recommendation my submission before the House is that the expenditure which we are incurring is not such an expenditure as is indispensably necessary and if the Honourable Member in charge of the Department will give me an undertaking that these recommendations will be appreciated and will be adopted, I shall not labour the point at all.

The Honourable Mr. B. N. Sarma: All that I shall say now is that the recommendations of the Retrenchment Committee on this question will be given very careful consideration. That is the answer which I gave to Munshi Iswar Saran also. I cannot usefully pursue this subject within the limited time at our disposal and therefore I shall not attempt to answer my Honourable friend. As I have said already, the recommendations are being considered and some of the money which is proposed to be saved under the head 'General Administration' includes the savings which would be the result of the re-grouping or re-amalgamation or partial retrenchment of some of the items included in this head also.

Dr. Nand Lal: In the circumstances I withdraw my amendment.

The amendment was, by leave of the Assembly, withdrawn.

Mr. P. P. Ginwala: In the notice paper, I have stated that I intended to move for a reduction of Rs. 15 lakhs. With your permission, I will alter it to Rs. 5 lakhs. I move:

"That the demand under the head 'General Administration' (page 36) be reduced by Rs. 5 lakhs."

As suggested by our Leader of the National Party this morning, there is general agreement on both sides of the House that the reduction of 5 lakhs on this head "General Administration" is not too much. In fact, a good deal more might have been asked for, but as there is this consensus of opinion in favour of reduction only of Rs. 5 lakhs, I shall only ask for that amount. I will draw your attention to page 4 of the Revised Schedule of Demands, from which it would appear that the reduction proposed by the Inchcape Committee was Rs. 49,89,000, but effect was given to Rs. 36,37,000, so that there is a real margin of 13 lakhs from which I ask that Rs. 5 lakhs more should be deducted, and there would be Rs. 8 lakhs for what the Honourable the Finance Member described as the "lag." I think that is a very generous allowance even for a department which generally lags behind other departments. I move my amendment.

Lieut.-Colonel H. A. J. Gidney: Sir, I am glad at last to have this opportunity of my Honourable friend Mr. Ginwala's amendment to put forward certain points and obtain certain information regarding the Military Medical Department and in doing so, I wish to state at the outset that it is not my desire to sacrifice quality for quantity. Having been a member of the Indian Medical Service myself, I feel I can talk with some experience both as a Military and a Civil Medical Officer. Whilst carefully studying the various books with which we have been provided, it struck me, that there is room for a great deal of economy in this Department. A glance at the staff of the Military Hospitals (vide Army Estimates and Retrenchment Report) shows that there are 333 Royal Army Medical Officers entertained in India at a total cost of Rs. 39 lakhs per annum. That there are only 1,927 beds occupied per day in all the British Army Hospitals. This works out roughly to about 6 beds per officer. Of course, I am aware that the R. A. M. C. Officer has other important duties to perform, e.g., sanitation, specialistic, daily outdoor sick, etc. I am intentionally confining my remarks to attendance on in-patients. Then, take the I.M.S. Military Department. There are 495 I.M.S. Officers entertained at a total cost of 47 lakhs of rupees per annum. The daily average occupation of Hospital beds in all Indian Army Hospitals is 4,506. This works out at about 10 beds per I. M. S. officer. Further examination into the personnel of the British Army Hospitals reveals the fact that there is a body called the R. A. M. C. Ranks, recruited from the same class as the British soldier but differs from him in that they receive a sort of a training as male nurses. These men, ill-educated and partly trained, have recently been brought out to India, I believe, with the ostensible purpose of replacing the I. M. D. in British Army Hospitals, but are to-day employed as male nurses. This corps has a total of 470 maintained at an annual cost of 6 lakhs. Besides this there are about 400 Military Assistant Surgeons I. M. D. costing Rs. 15 lakhs per annum who are employed in British Troops Hospitals and who, as per figures quoted, i.e., 1,927 beds in daily occupation, have 4½ patients to attend to daily per man. Then there is the Queen Alexandra's Military Nursing Service, which consists of about 233 nurses recruited from England and 66 in this country, total about 300. The Retrenchment Committee Report shows that in the British Army Hospitals there is a daily occupation of 1,927 beds and 4,506 in the Indian Army Hospitals. This works out to about 8 patients for each British Hospital nurse and about 68 patients to each Indian Hospital nurse, although the Member in charge of this department when I asked him a question in January last year replied to me that there were 38 beds per nurse in the British Hospitals and 100 per nurse in the Indian Military Hospitals. Besides this, Sir, there is an enormous menial personnel attached to the various military hospitals. It would weary this House if I went into further figures and percentages but with the personnel I have detailed it works out as follows: For the daily care of 1,927 in-patients in British Hospitals a staff of 1,465 trained personnel is employed whilst in Indian Military Hospitals a staff of 1,155 (i.e., I. M. S. officers and Sub-Assistant Surgeons) is engaged for the daily care of 4,500 in-patients. Now, Sir, take the total strength of all ranks of the British Army as 79,000 and the total strength of the Indian Army as 250,000; alongside this take the gross expenditure of the Army as 64 crores and then see what amount of this sum is spent for the upkeep of the Military Medical Department you get

Mr. P. P. Ginwala: I rise on a point of order. This does not come within General Administration.

Lieut.-Colonel H. A. J. Gidney: From the calculation I have made it works out that the total military medical expenditure is almost 1/20th of the total military expenditure of the Army. In other words it works out that for the medical needs of every soldier (British and Indian) in this country, it costs the Indian tax-payer Rs. 100 per soldier per annum. Delve a little further into the figures supplied to us and it will be seen that each British soldier costs the country Rs. 78-8 per annum in medical personnel alone (not to mention the more expensive items as diet, housing, menial establishment, clothing, etc.), while the Indian sepoy costs only Rs. 23 per annum, less than one-third of the British soldier. Now, Sir, if you refer to the Inchcape Committee's Report you will notice a fuller list of the personnel than those referred to in my percentages on pages 20-21. You will also notice that that Committee has exposed the fact that in the British Army whilst 8,270 Hospital beds are provided and fully maintained, the daily average occupation is only 1,927 patients, i.e., less than one-fourth of the beds are utilised. Whereas in the Indian Army for which 12,703 beds are provided, only 4,506 are in daily occupation, i.e., a little more than one-third is utilised. Assuming we accepted this one-fourth and one-third as the actual in-patient hospital needs (I do not suggest this for one moment) of the army, surely one is entitled to suggest a bigger reduction than what the Committee have already suggested, namely, 5½ lakhs. Let us for a moment forget the professional view of the matter which I admit demands surplus hospital accommodation to meet the needs of unhealthy months when more beds are occupied, also epidemics, etc., and look at it from a purely business or tax-payer's point of view and from which this expenditure cannot be dissociated. Well, what do we observe? Personnel, both superior and subordinate, accommodation, equipment, etc., are maintained at the cost of the Indian Exchequer to three times or at least twice as much as the actual medical requirements of the armies in this country. Is this necessary? Is this fair to the Indian tax-payer? Is this sound business? Is it sound finance? I would like to know how any business concern could be run on these lines. I should like to ask my friend, Mr. Darcy Lindsay, as an assurance expert, what it would work out per year to any firm if it had to pay a premium of Rs. 100 per each one of its employees. Now, Sir, the waste in this department was so glaring that the Inchcape Committee found it necessary to suggest a reduction of 53 lakhs out of a total revised estimate of about 3 crores apart from other savings suggested. Assuming that this were a votable item and dealing with it on the question of supply and demand as a business proposition purely, this House would be entitled not to call for a retrenchment of 53 lakhs as has been suggested but of almost 2 crores. This for reasons already given would be a fallacious argument. Nor do I suggest it. Moreover the figures and percentages quoted by me are rough and have been extracted from the mass of figures to illustrate my argument and to demonstrate on what lines retrenchment can be effected in the Military Budget. I speak as a medical man and I have no hesitation whatever in assuring this House that the Military Medical Department offers par excellence a most fertile field for substantial financial retrenchment, even much more than has been suggested by the Inchcape Committee. I now propose to show this House how this retrenchment can be effected. The nurses employed in British Hospitals belong to the Queen Alexandra Nursing Service, and are recruited in England at a total cost of about 9 lakhs. I ask here—Is this expenditure necessary and is this service a necessity, especially when I tell this House that there is ample and suitable material in this country from which to get nurses of equal ability and at a much cheaper rate without any desire to decry or undervalue the admirable services rendered by this service to the British soldier. Yet I consider its retention in India under the circumstances detailed—a finesse or a frilling to the medical needs of our troops, and not an absolute necessity. The day of white nurses for white troops is gone, and the expenditure incurred on this service not only increases our army estimates but deprives nurses trained in and of this country, both Indian and other communities, of employment. During the war nurses from India were largely employed and were then found quite good enough for British troops and their war records prove what splendid work they did, but, now, with peace they are considered not good enough and nurses are imported from England on much higher wages. I consider, Sir, that this is a wanton waste of money, and that these nurses should be replaced by the trained women of this country. Why should the British Army in India need not only their food but their nurses from England? The time is not far distant when every military medical officer will be recruited in this country. That was the object of the Resolution, which I called my Medical Swaraj Resolution, which I brought before this House last year, but which was rejected. I make bold, however, to now say that in a short time a similar Resolution will yet be accepted by this House. I therefore submit that that is one of the means of retrenchment in the military expenditure and I present it for the serious consideration of the Member in charge. My next suggestion is as regards Assistant Surgeons. Here, you have a body of men 400 strong costing the State annually 15½ lakhs whose training of 4 and 5 years has been and is being debited to the Indian Exchequer. They are fully qualified and trained professional men who can sign certificates of life and death and whose certificates of licence are equivalent to those of any imported medical man for an Indian Court of Law. These men of the I. M. D. are appointed to British hospitals in a professional capacity subordinate to the R. A. M. C. officer. But as a matter of fact what duties are assigned to these men? They are used as glorified compounders not as professional men, following behind R. A. M. C. officers whilst they stroll through the wards taking down prescriptions and making entries in the diet sheets. That is how these professional men are used in British Military Hospitals. Why? Because I suppose the R. A. M. C. officers feel that their professional work cannot be shared with these subordinates. Anyhow, here we have an efficient body of professional men costing us 15½ lakhs per annum and I have no doubt many in this House have received treatment from this body of men whose services and salaries are wasted in British Hospitals simply because they are refused their proper position. I understand that it was, and may be is still, the intention of the D. M. S. India to replace these professional men by a body of poorly educated, partly trained European male nurses recruited in England called R. A. M. C. Ranks, 470 of whom are to-day employed in British Hospitals in India at an annual cost of 6 lakhs. It may interest and greatly surprise this House to know that the Privates and N. C. Os. of this Corps receive higher salaries including allowances than the junior classes of Military Assistant Surgeons. Can you conceive of anything more wasteful than the employment of this corps, than the replacement of Military Assistant Surgeons by such a body of men and who to make matters worse receive a higher salary.

I submit, Sir, for the very serious consideration of the Honourable Member in charge and this Honourable House that this R. A. M. C. (Ranks) should be forthwith abolished as not only unnecessary but a colossal waste of public money. They are of no use to-day. They were not found necessary before for British Hospitals and why should they be necessary now? This attempt to replace a fully qualified body of Assistant Surgeons by another body of partly trained, comparatively ill-educated male nurses is, I consider, a criminal spoliation of public money.

Now, Sir, I also submit for the serious consideration of the Honourable Member in charge that the strength of the R. A. M. C. officers should be markedly reduced. To call upon this House to permit an annual expenditure of 37 lakhs of rupees for the maintenance of 333 R. A. M. C.

officers who have about 6 in-patients per day per doctor is a ridiculous waste of money. The same remarks apply with almost equal cogency to the I. M. S. I know, Sir, that these officers do other duties, such as Serologists, Bacteriologists, Public Health Officers and so on; but that does not detract from the strength of my argument or its cogency. I am seriously tempted—nay, I feel I am entitled to ask the Military authorities as also this Honourable House whether it is really necessary for British soldiers when they come out to India to bring their own nurses with them—a privilege that is even not enjoyed except by a few English babies when they come to this country. Queen Alexandra Service Nurses have done noble and admirable work in the past and also to-day but the time has come owing to this enormous military budget for replacing them with nurses recruited and trained in this country and who can be obtained at a lower cost—at least Rs. 100 less. Excluding other incidental expenses, e.g., passage to and from England, etc. I offer this as another way of effecting further retrenchment in the Military Medical expenditure.

The last point I wish to suggest to the Member in charge is that if the British Military Hospitals cannot find suitable and legitimate work for the Military Assistant Surgeon, then say so. Free them from the undignified and profitless work to which they are put and transfer their services bodily to Civil India which to to-day crying out for trained medical men. Refuse to allow the Army authorities to use these trained Military Assistant Surgeons as glorified compounders and clerks to R. A. M. C. officers and so help to still further reduce the Military budget.

Rai Bahadur L. P. Sinha (Gaya cum Monghyr: Non-Muhammadan): I rise to support the motion moved by my friend Mr. Ginwala and in doing so I will confine my remarks to the reorganisation of the five Departments only. The Retrenchment Committee recommended the fusion of the five Departments, namely, that of Education, Revenue, Commerce, Industries and Public Works, and to divide again into two Departments, namely, General and Commerce. They showed by a statement, at page 134 of the Retrenchment Committee's Report, that the total cost of all these five Departments, according to the Budget for 1922-23, is Rs. 24,68,900, and their recommendation was to reduce this expenditure to 13 lakhs by the reconstitution of these two Departments. So thereby they suggested a reduction of Rs. 11,68,000, of which they thought one lakh will be required for the expansion of the Board of Revenue and Staff. Thus the ultimate saving proposed by the Committee was Rs. 10,68,000. But, Sir, Government in their revised Schedule of Demands accepts to reduce only a sum of 5 lakhs, thereby leaving Rs. 5,68,000 unreduced. In supporting the motion I would commend to Government the proposal of a further reduction of 5 lakhs which I think will not be very unreasonable on my part to demand considering that even then Government will have Rs. 68,000 for their terminal charges for these Departments. Lastly, Sir, I would like to draw the attention of the House to the fact that the figures taken into account by the Retrenchment Committee in proposing their reductions were the figures of the original Estimate for the year 1922-23. Presumably the revised budget figures for the same year were not placed before the Committee and in my opinion had the revised figures for those five Departments which is nearly 2 lakhs less than the original Budget figures been placed before the Committee, their proposed reductions would have been still greater. With these remarks, Sir, I beg to support the motion.

Mr. A. F. L. Brayne (Finance Department: Nominated Official): Sir, I might perhaps be able to explain the position and indicate what Government have been able to do in this matter. My Honourable friend, Mr. Ginwala, pointed out that the reductions recommended by the Committee amounted to about 49 lakhs and that Government had reduced only 36 lakhs leaving 13 lakhs still to be taken off. Now, when Mr. Ginwala was dealing with that budget head, he was dealing with a very much wider field of expenditure than that which is now under the consideration of the House, namely, Demand No. 14, General Administration. If the House will turn to page 128 of the Report of the Retrenchment Committee, they will find in paragraph 2 that this budget head includes about 22 lakhs of expenditure in the minor administrations, which is distributed over the North-West Frontier Province, Delhi and various other minor administrations. There is also expenditure of about 70 lakhs in England which covers the cost of the India Office and the High Commissioner. Under the head General Administration, we are only concerned with the Governor General and staff, the Executive Council, the Legislative bodies, the Secretariat and attached offices. Now, under the first three heads, the Governor General, Executive Council and Legislative bodies, it is not intended either by the Retrenchment Committee or, as I understand, by the House to make any reduction at all. That leaves us with the Secretariat and attached offices. Now, on page 144 of the Report the Committee indicate their conclusions. As regards the Secretariat, they say that there should be reductions amounting to 14 lakhs, and under the head Attached Offices, which are shown at page 135 of the Report, they indicate savings of Rs. 3,95,000. The total savings thus indicated amount to 18 lakhs. Now, against that, the Government have taken Rs. 8,67,000 in the budget out of the 14 lakhs proposed for the Secretariat; and out of the Rs. 3,95,000 proposed for the attached offices they have taken Rs. 3 lakhs, that is to say, out of 18 lakhs proposed for reduction Government have carried 12 lakhs into the budget. That leaves 6 lakhs to be dealt with. Now, is it at all possible to reduce another 5 lakhs from that 6 lakhs? The 5 lakhs will be found as follows: at page 134 of the Report the Committee indicates certain savings under various departments, Foreign and Political, Home, Legislative, Finance; those savings have already been carried into the budget within a few thousand rupees. They show that certain other departments costing about 24 lakhs might be amalgamated into two departments the cost of which would be about 14 lakhs, taking into account a lakh for the expansion of the Board of Revenue; that is to say, they indicate a saving of 10 lakhs. Government have only taken into account 5 lakhs there for the simple reason that they have to allow for a very considerable lag and terminal charges. Even supposing that a decision were arrived at on this subject to-morrow it could not be carried into effect in time to secure a larger saving than 5 lakhs for the simple reason that the Secretary of State's sanction has to be obtained to reduction of some appointments. Further, we have to give three months' notice to staff. Those who are discharged will go on leave and their leave allowances will continue to be carried against the Budget. Therefore, so far as can be seen there is no possibility of saving more than 5 lakhs under this head.

Mr. Deputy President: The question is:

"That the demand under the head 'General Administration' be reduced by Rs. 5,00,000."

The motion was adopted.

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: Sir, before the final question is put, I must try once again to explain what the position is. Under the estimate for General Administration we have made a cut which is the best estimate we can make of what would be the effect of putting into force at the earliest possible moment all the cuts recommended by the Inchaape Committee, including the cuts which various Members of the House have to-day expressed their desire not to see enforced. The House has made a cut of five lakhs over and above that. Now, Sir, we do not produce estimates in which there is five lakhs which we can spare. It is out of the question that we should make a cut of five lakhs in this case and at the same time carry on the administration. The House must realise its responsibility. We have done our very best to present estimates representing the minimum that we should spend if we carried out all the Inchcape Committee's recommendations. The House has questioned some of these recommendations and has yet made a further cut of five lakhs. That is the position.

Mr. N. M. Samarth (Bombay: Nominated Non-Official): We have been told that the Government made all the cuts which the Inchcape Committee recommended. May I point out that the Inchcape Committee on page 144 recommended a saving of Rs. 14,08,000 on item No. 1 and of Rs. 3,95,000 on item No. 2 that is to say, about Rs. 18 lakhs, out of which Government have made a cut of 8.67 lakhs on item No. 1 and 8 lakhs on item No. 2, in all 11.67 lakhs; that is, short of the Inchcape Committee's recommendations by 6.3 lakhs.

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: That is exactly the position. As I have said before, we have presented an estimate which represents the best view that we can have of what would be the expenditure next year if we put all the Inchcape Committee's recommendations into force at the earliest possible moment. There must be an allowance for lag. Those recommendations are not in force to-day. They will not be in force on the 1st of April. As the Inchcape Committee themselves have taken pains to point out, their figures are the figures for a year in which the recommendations would be in full force as from the 1st of April without any allowance for lag or terminal charges.

Mr. N. M. Samarth: The question is whether at the end of the year you will be able to make that reduction or not.

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: The answer is in the negative.

Rao Bahadur C. S. Subrahmanayam: I rise to a point of order, Sir. I am afraid this post-war discussion probably is not entirely in order.

Mr. Deputy President: I am afraid that the Chair cannot help the Government in this matter. The vote has been carried by the Assembly.

Dr. H. S. Gour: I will only add, Sir, that if the Honourable the Finance Member has any difficulty where to make the cuts, we will assist him.

(Mr. Deputy President then called on Dr. Gour.)

Mr. P. P. Ginwala: I have got one, Sir, No. 338. I beg to move, Sir:

"That the demand under the head 'General Administration' be reduced by Rs. 100."

Mr. Deputy President: I think the demand for reduction by Rs. 5 lakhs having been carried, these drop out. I thought Dr. Gour was going to speak on the question which has just been moved by Sir Basil Blackett.

Dr. H. S. Gour: I was then going to say that if the Honourable the Finance Member has any difficulty where to make his cuts from, Members of this House will gladly place their services at his disposal and show him to do it.

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: Sir, I shall be delighted to accept any assistance of that sort. but I defy the Honourable Member to show where I am to cut these particular items on which a vote has just been taken by the Rs. 5 lakhs which the House has requested us to cut. It is no good saying there are cuts elsewhere. The cuts must be here. The House has given Rs. 5 lakhs less for our expenditure under these heads than the minimum that we estimated. It is no good saying that there are cuts elsewhere. That does not touch the question.

Mr. Deputy President: The question is:

"That a sum not exceeding Rs. 68,90,000 be granted to the Governor General in Council to defray the charge which will come in course of payment during the year ending the 31st day of March, 1924, in respect of 'General Administration'."

Mr. P. P. Ginwala: Before the demand is put I should like to make a few observations. Sir, I was under the impression that at this stage the House would be in a position to express its general opinion on the General Administration of the country during the last 12 months and with that idea I gave notice of my amendment No. 338. I do not wish, however, to weary a House which is already wearied with debate, but I think it is our duty to point out to the Government by way of a parting gift before we leave this demand as to what we think of the administration as a whole. The Honourable the Finance Member has just now suggested . . .

Mr. Deputy President: Is the Honourable Member moving his amendment?

Mr. P. P. Ginwala: I am speaking on the general motion.

Mr. Deputy President: I thought we had been talking about this for the last two days.

Mr. P. P. Ginwala: I am now summing up the results. The President himself suggested this . . .

Mr. Deputy President: That was when the motion for a reduction of the General Administration charges came up. I thought Members had an opportunity of speaking on these matters in detail.

Mr. P. P. Ginwala: We wanted to raise this general debate on the General Administration as a whole. We were then told that an opportunity will arise at a later stage when this can be done. I offered no arguments at all on the motions for reduction and I submit that the House is entitled to express its opinion on the General Administration as a whole. I am not going into any particular Department at all. My submission is this that the Honourable the Finance Member in his speech as well as the other Government Members who have spoken have bewailed the series of deficits which we have had to face and have traced many of the causes for these deficits, but the most important and obvious cause was never hit upon by them, that is, the past extravagance of the administration of this country. Last year the House may remember we moved a very small reduction of Rs. 25 lakhs in the Railways Demand and we were told that it would be disastrous if as much as Rs. 25 lakhs were deducted from the Administration charges. We have seen now the result. They themselves have been able to save about 2 crores of rupees on their original estimate and this year they have submitted practically to a Rs. 4½ crores reduction. Though of course, we do not propose to censure them in respect of whatever their conduct may be in the future with regard to expenditure, I think it is the duty of the House to let them know what we think of their past expenditure. There are many other points to which reference may be made in dealing with General Administration. There is the question of the Army. We are entirely dissatisfied even now with their Army policy. Sir Montagu Webb objected to the expenditure which was still being incurred, and for that not any one particular Member of the Government is responsible but the whole Government is responsible. Then there was this question of votable and non-votable subjects. They have as a Government, as I said this morning, restricted the scope of the votable items in some places and extended the scope of the non-votable items, and this House cannot allow . . . (The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: "And vice versa.") But we do not object to a non-votable item being made votable. (Dr. H. S. Gour: "That is our right.") We positively object to a votable item being made non-votable. This is the only opportunity which we can get to express our opinion on these various aspects of general administration. I hope the Government will show a certain amount of penitence and that they are on the way to mend their extravagant habits of expenditure and . . .

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas: I rise to a point of order. I do not want to interrupt the Honourable Member's speech, but I should like to know what we are discussing. (Cries of "General Administration.") What is the question? It has not been placed before us (Cries of "Remarks on General Administration.")

Mr. P. P. Ginwala: I am sorry that the Honourable Member is so impatient of any remarks in the nature of censure on his Government . . .

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas: I am only anxious to know what is going on.

Mr. P. P. Ginwala: I am trying to point out to the House that I think it is imperative on it to draw the attention of Government to the fact—even though we have the highest opinion of each individual Member of the Government which no doubt many of us have—that as a body we have not got such a favourable opinion of them as administrators. If the House does not express its opinion now I would like to know when it will. In these remarks though I was not allowed to move a formal nominal vote of reduction I have sufficiently explained my own views upon the work of Government as a whole, during the last twelve months.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: I do not think that it is the desire of the House that a reply should be made at this point to a motion which was, with all deference to the Chair, so entirely out of place. We have devoted two days for the general discussion of the affairs of Government and its administration. Some 40 Members spoke on that occasion. We have devoted now very nearly three days to detailed discussion on separate items of administration. There have been some hundreds of motions tabled, in the course of which individual aspects of the administration have come under discussion. Now we come to a stage, in which you have put before the House the final demand for grant for General Administration, that is, the expenditure on the Secretariats and the Legislative bodies. I notice that no one chose that opportunity for initiating a general discussion on the conduct of the Legislative bodies. The Honourable Member however thinks that he is in place in taking this opportunity for a general criticism of the whole course of Government Administration. I doubt whether that is really the desire of the House that we should here and on this occasion, an occasion so entirely out of place, seek to justify the whole of our administration in past years. We are well aware of the somewhat bitter, somewhat irreconcilable attitude that is frequently taken by some Members of the House in regard to every action of the Government, good or bad. Take only one point. We know that when we do our best for retrenchment by appointing a powerful committee like the Inchcape Committee, and loyally accepting its recommendations, nevertheless there are those who express the most extreme form of dissatisfaction because we cannot make the whole of the reductions with immediate effect. Again, we are told that we have deliberately, and perhaps this is the worst insinuation of all, attempted to extend the classification of non-votable items, whereas the fact probably is that the re-classifications made actually extend the items on which the House has to vote. I conceive that I shall not be doing my duty if I were now to detain the House by a long debate on points such as these or by a lengthy review of all that we have done in the past. On a statement such as Mr. Ginwala made, I decline altogether to accept his good opinion of the individual Members of the Government. I treat that kindness on his part with complete contempt; for we must be judged as a body and as a whole. I maintain that he is doing, and he knows that he is doing nothing but wasting the time of the House in attempting to raise a general discussion of this nature on this particular motion.

Mr. Deputy President: The question is:

The motion was adopted.

DEMAND No. 10—INDIAN POSTAL AND TELEGRAPH DEPARTMENT.

Colonel Sir Sydney Crookshank (P. W. D. Secretary): Sir, I beg to move:

Sir, at the outset I would invite the attention of Honourable Members to the report of the Indian Retrenchment Committee, page 107, item No. 8 under the head of "conclusions" from which they will see that that Committee made proposals for a reduction of the colossal sum of Rs. 1,37,27,000 in the Budget Estimate for 1923-24 for this Department. This reduction has to be made against the items detailed in the last right-hand column of Appendix A which will be found on page 109 of the same Report. As against this very large sum, the department has by a Herculean effort—I may almost say—effected reductions which amount to about 128 lakhs of rupees, which is therefore only a few lakhs short of the total reduction which was recommended by the Committee. Honourable Members will no doubt realise that in a department like the Post and Telegraph Department, which is a commercial department depending very largely on its business for the revenue which it receives and in which it has obligations, commitments, agreements, contracts and other undertakings to fulfil, it is an extremely difficult matter to make reductions on this very large scale.

[Colonel Sir Sydney Crookshank.]

As an instance of the difficulties which we have to contend with, I will just read out a telegram which we received yesterday:

"At overflowing meeting last night of members, Indian Telegraph Association, Calcutta Centre, comprising all grades and ranks traffic and engineering branches, unanimously resolved respectfully to submit following to Government. Meeting views with grave concern suggestions and recommendations Inchcape Committee as touching possible reduction in pay, discontinuance of house rent and other allowances and free quarters as also reduction in engineering and traffic higher appointments and respectfully urges on Government the rejection of these recommendations which are viewed as arbitrary, harsh and unjustifiable, and as creating substantial grounds for widespread discontent. Resolution has support of entire Association and staff throughout India and Burma. Majority staff and families in dire poverty, children ill-fed, ill clad, while schooling beyond their means; any reduction in pay or allowances can only reduce them to state desperation; earnestly pray protection against recommendations in question."

Many other telegrams of a like nature have been received from powerful unions and associations throughout the country. In putting forth their amendments, I would venture to ask Honourable Members gravely to consider the difficulties and disabilities which we had to contend with in making this very large cut of 128 lakhs and to remind Members that, as I have already stated, we have done our most.

Mr. B. N. Misra: Sir, I beg to move:

"That the provision for Working Expenses under the head 'Indian Postal and Telegraph Department' (page 31) be reduced by Rs. 25,000."

When I sent this amendment asking for a reduction of working expenses, I made up my mind to point out the top-heavy administration of this Postal and Telegraph Department. Sir, if we compare the increase of work since 1913-14 to about 1921-22 and if we compare the increase of officers and staff, we find that really the increase of officers in the Postal and Telegraph Department has been nearly 32 per cent., whereas in regard to the staff the increase is by about 17 per cent. In the two departments really the officers have been increased in such large numbers that it costs much more than is really desirable in the interests of the working of the departments. The staff has been increased only by 17 per cent. Moreover I find the increase of expenditure is more in the Telegraph Department, although the Department, as was pointed out by the Honourable Mover, is a commercial concern. The Postal Department pays more revenue to the Government and it transacts much pecuniary business, Savings Bank, Registration, and many other branches which fetch more revenue. But I see less money has been spent on it, whereas on the Telegraph Department much more money has been spent and the increase of revenue has not been really so much. Of course there is no separate accounts and we do not find the income separately shown, but really that will be found to be the case if the matter is scrutinised. Then, Sir, we find the pay in both the departments is very disproportionate. In the Telegraph Department you find the pay of these officers is much more, whereas people who transact very responsible business such as receiving money orders or savings bank deposits and have heavy and responsible transactions in money are paid much less. I beg to point out to the House that even in England these services are not paid on a separate scale. They give the same pay to both the branches. I fail to see why in India a separate pay and a very much higher scale of pay should be paid to the Telegraph Department, and why the Postal Department should not be paid on the same scale. I had in my mind several other details to point out but I do not do so now. The Retrenchment Committee desire retrenchment of some items which are very undesirable. They propose to take away some postal peons and take away some small officers whose pay is very small but who render much service to the public and whose retention will be very beneficial to the public, but they want to keep many highly paid officers at the top who really do nothing except perhaps supervise, and do not really do useful work for the public. I find there are several amendments in this matter and especially one by Dr. Gour who asks for a reduction of 10 lakhs, and as I ask for a small sum, I must leave my arguments to be advanced by Dr. Gour. I wish him success and I hope he will get this 10 lakhs. In his favour I withdraw.

Mr. Deputy President: I consider it a useless taking up of time for the Honourable Member to have made all these remarks and then to have withdrawn the amendment which stands in his name. If he wanted to withdraw in favour of Dr. Gour, it was open to him to do so without making this speech.

Dr. Nand Lal: Sir, my motion runs as follows:

"That provision for 'Indian Postal and Telegraph Department—Working Expenses (Stores and Working Establishment—Voted Expenditure)', Appendix A, be reduced by Rs. 500."

I recognise that the Indian Postal and Telegraph Department is a very useful department. It is apt to be considered the eye and ear of the public. It is a department through whose services one can speak to one's relations and friends at a great distance. I will not trouble the House with details, but there is one aspect of the question, which has induced me to offer certain suggestions. One is this, that in the Telegraph Department the Indian element, especially at those telegraph offices which are located in big cities, is comparatively very small. May I invite the attention of the Government of India to this point?

The second point which I wish to place before the House is this, that lots of printing is done, and I am told that private printers are not given full share in this work.

The third point, which has been considered a great grievance by the public, is this, that stores are purchased and that a very large portion of those stores is not purchased in India. If this is a fact, and if this complaint which has reached me has got any truth in it, then I hope that the Government of India will, for the future, take some suitable measures that this grievance on the part of Indians may be properly and adequately redressed.

The other point to which I wish to draw the attention of the House is that last year we seriously suggested to the Government of India, especially to the Honourable the Finance Member, that if we were to abolish the quarter-anna post card, most probably that abolition would not eventually pay us and that, instead of gaining something, we might lose. If my information is correct, then I think that eventuality has happened. I hope that Government this year will kindly give serious consideration to the suggestion which was put forward last year and which, most probably, may be repeated this year.

The same complaint may be urged, in the form of a repetition, in connection with the enhancement of postage in connection with letters, that is, from half an anna to one anna. So far as my information also in this connection goes, the Postal Department has not gained much. I therefore hope that the Government of India will give serious attention to this question also; this time it is not too late for the Government to think of it. In this Department, serviceable as it no doubt is, we should try to see that the system which we adopt and the rates which we may fix may be such a system and such rates as may be able to fetch more money for us, that is this fixity of rates should be on business lines; a rate which will invite the public to make use of the Post Office. Allow me to say that this increase in the rate of postage has put a clog in the way of the poor people to have communications with their relations and with their kith and kin, and in certain quarters it has been considered an impediment in the way of some commercial people also.

The last point, which I have got to urge, and which is equally serious, so far as its character goes, is that some complaints have reached me to show that when the public goes to some of the big Post Offices they are sometimes detained and in the case of letters sent to the Post Office, the answers are given too late. If these complaints are correct, then the Government of India will be kind enough to see that this complaint is also remedied.

With these few remarks I submit this amendment before the House and, if the Honourable Member in charge will give me some undertaking that these grievances will be attended to seriously by the Government of India, I shall not press the point very much.

The Honourable Mr. B. N. Sarma: Sir, it may assist the House in curtailing the discussion if I make a general statement as to the efforts we have had to make in order to comply with the suggestions of the Retrenchment Committee to reduce recurring expenditure met from Revenue to the extent of 137 lakhs and from Capital to the extent of 50 lakhs. The Department loyally submitted to this recommendation almost wholly, because we felt that it was undesirable in the present financial condition of the country to press for the full expenditure which would be really necessary to keep the Department efficient, well staffed and ready to take up the work which has been steadily flowing in during the last few months. They have agreed, I may state to the House, to some retrenchments even to a greater extent than has been suggested by the Retrenchment Committee in order to be able to accept the figure of 137 lakhs within a very narrow margin, and in order to do so, the straits to which they have proceeded will be realised by Honourable Members when they know that they have to submit to a grant for maintenance and repair of postal buildings amounting only to Rs. 73,000 as against a normal figure of Rs. 4,23,550. That is, they had to agree to a cut of Rs. 3,50,000 upon maintenance and repair of buildings, and a cut of a lakh on telegraph buildings.

It would be detaining the House unduly long if I were to go through the various retrenchments which the Department had to submit to, and which the Government had to accept. Suffice it to say that, in view of the diminution in the amount of work that was due to trade depression largely, we agreed to a small reduction under the head of Staff, and to a considerable reduction under various items, aggregating as Sir Sydney put it, roughly to 129 lakhs under Revenue and 50 lakhs under Stores. I think further, Sir, it would be impossible to go further without sacrificing completely all efficiency and producing an amount of discontent which no Department can afford to face.

Well, a good deal of apprehension is being entertained by the staff, but we hope that we shall be able to continue, without any very substantial retrenchment, most of the staff at present working under the various departments, without seriously affecting any emoluments they have been drawing as the result of the recommendations of the Postal Committee and the Telegraph Committee which sat two years ago. There seems to be an impression due no doubt to a statement made in the Retrenchment Committee Report that the number of officers in this department has grown out of proportion to the increase of work since 1913-14. I may correct that misapprehension because it was due to the fact that a number of officers who were drawing less than Rs. 200 and who were not included within the figures of 1913-14 were, owing to the recommendations of the Postal Committee having been given effect to, brought on a scale at which they were drawing more than Rs. 200; there is no increase in strength or increase in numbers as stated; they were brought under the head of officers drawing 250 or more and consequently there is an increase from 514 to 678. As a matter of fact if those who have been promoted by reason of those increments be deducted, you will have to reduce the figure by about 70 so that the proportion is exactly to the increase in the work and Honourable Members will see therefore that on the postal side there has been no undue increase at all in the number of officers.

I may point out another error which has crept in with regard to the telegraph figures. We are actually 16 under strength if we are to take the recommendations of the Telegraph Committee which sat in 1920 as to what should be the proper strength to do a certain amount of work. But we had to put up with that deficiency and we mean to put up with that deficiency because it would be unreasonable to increase the strength at a moment of financial stress like this. There seems to be also a general idea that there is a very large number of very highly paid officers in this department and retrenchment might just as well be effected in the upper ranks with financial benefit and without considerable loss of efficiency. I may point out, Sir, that the committee which sat to investigate the grievances of the postal staff found that the number of higher offices open to the staff was remarkably low in this department. 14,500 or 14,700 clerks had very few higher offices open to them; you have got about 181 or more superintendents and a large number of postmasters, and the higher appointments which are open to these were considered low and they have made recommendations to improve their prospects. Therefore the number of higher officers in this department is not relatively as large as perhaps would be urged as desirable in the interests of the staff. I shall not take up the time of the House by pointing out how the figure is smaller than it is perhaps in some other departments and how economically this department has been working with the staff at its disposal; but we have agreed to reduce some of the highly paid posts having regard to the considerations I have already mentioned. During recent years there has been a promotion of many Indians from the special or local scale to the general scale, adding to the increased cost in some directions; and Honourable Members may rest assured that this aspect of the question will be borne in mind whenever there is any possibility of increasing the Indian element; but I may say that this department is chiefly manned or almost wholly manned by Indians including in that term Anglo-Indians or statutory Indians. Sir, with regard to the printing and stores and similar . . .

Dr. Nand Lal: I made reference specially to the Telegraph Department, not to the Postal Department, so far as the Indian element goes.

The Honourable Mr. B. N. Sarma: If there be any special grievance which Honourable Members desire to bring to the notice of this department, they would only too readily inquire into them and set right any such grievance as may exist. There was one suggestion made by Dr. Nand Lal with regard to the increased postal rates introduced last year. It is a large question, and I do not want to go into it now. The Department and the Government are as anxious as ever to keep the postage as low as possible. The revised estimate is 969 lakhs as against 905 of 1921 Actuals. Therefore, there is an increase of 64 lakhs, and although I admit that the postage revenue has suffered to a slight extent owing to increased rates, there has been a steady improvement and the figures that we have taken in February last indicate an improvement of about 13 per cent., and we hope during the next year to give the general exchequer as much as 161 lakhs of rupees net. I do not think I need take up the time of the House any more, but I think we have done all that we could to carry out the recommendations of the Retrenchment Committee and Honourable Members will not, I hope, suggest any further retrenchments which would be detrimental to the efficient working of the department.

Dr. Nand Lal: Sir, in view of what has fallen from the Honourable Member in charge, I beg leave to withdraw my motion.

The motion was, by leave of the Assembly, withdrawn.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: Sir, I intended to raise a very broad question and a very important question too under the head of provision for allowances, honoraria, etc., to the Wireless Branch of this Department, but I do feel, Sir, that this is not the occasion for raising it. I refer to the question of wireless broadcasting in this country and it will require another day for discussion. I heard that my Honourable friend, Sir Sydney Crookshank, is himself going to bring up the subject in the shape of a Resolution. I hope, Sir, the matter will be placed before this Assembly and that no decision will be arrived at before this Assembly has had an opportunity of considering the scheme which I see has already excited a great amount of public comment in consequence of the conference which was held recently. I understand the subject is a very important one and that the department itself would like to discuss it on a separate day.

The Honourable Mr. B. N. Sarma: I may suggest, Sir, that the question which it was proposed to discuss if time permitted is with regard to the wireless scheme as a whole, and not with regard to wireless broadcasting. But I may assure the House that the scheme that we put forward was for the purpose of eliciting the views of the general public on a tentative embryonic scheme and that we did not want to proceed at all in haste and grant licences without ascertaining what the public opinion was. We have to take sufficient protection to safeguard the interests of the community generally, for promoting the general interests of any Indian companies that may exist or that hereafter be started and also for safeguarding the interests of the press. Any representations that may be received will be fully considered, and I do not think anything will be done hastily. It was with a view, as I said, to elicit public opinion that we have published the draft licences, and we hope the public will kindly co-operate with us. The thing cannot be put off indefinitely. I agree the country has a right to know what we propose to do and we do expect their co-operation and friendly criticism in that respect, so that the future promotion of wireless broadcasting which we think ought to be assisted may proceed on healthy lines.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: My point is whether this House will have an opportunity to discuss the subject, so that we may offer our criticisms on the proposed measures, if not now, at least in the July session. It is a very important question, and it will not do to merely consult the public and the newspapers, but this House also should have an opportunity to discuss it, and I wish to emphasise it.

Dr. H. S. Gour: Sir, the motion which I beg to move is:

"That the demand under the head 'Indian Postal and Telegraph Department' be reduced by Rs. 10,00,000."

Honourable Members will find from the statement supplied by the Finance Department, under the head Posts and Telegraphs the following statement:

"Excluding Interest on Debt the budget of the Department was about Rs. 9 lakhs above that recommended by the Retrenchment Committee. A further provisional reduction of Rs. 3 lakhs has been made in the provision for expansion of establishment."

If, I understand this statement aright, it means that 9 lakhs of rupees above that recommended by the Retrenchment Committee was budgeted for and in response to the recommendations of the Retrenchment Committee a reduction has been made of 3 lakhs.

(At this stage Mr. President resumed his seat.)

Therefore, 6 lakhs worth of retrenchment recommended by the Incharge Committee have not been given effect to. It was very refreshing to hear the Honourable Sir Sydney Crookshank reminding the House that the Postal and Telegraph Department is a commercial Department. Now, Sir, if we turn to this commercial Department, what do we find? The Honourable the Finance Member in his budget statement referred to this Department in the following terms:

"The effect of the new postal rates during the first few months of the financial year was to reduce correspondence. There have since been signs of recovery and the public are now getting gradually used to the higher postal charges. For the present, however, I think we must anticipate a diminution of 106 lakhs in our anticipated receipts in 1922 and 1923. There is a small saving in working expenses and, after debiting interest, the Department will probably prove to have been run on a profit of about 24 lakhs."

Do Honourable Members realise what this statement means? It means that this commercial Department of the Government of India spends about 100 per cent. upon its management and the outturn is either nil or negligible. That is the first thing Honourable Members must bear in mind. Another question that Honourable Members cannot forget is the discussion we had in this House last year when the postal and telegraph vote was under discussion. The Honourable Mr. Geoffrey Clarke, speaking on behalf of the Posts and Telegraphs, justified the increased postal rates on the ground that it would bring more income and wipe out the deficit and with the surplus there would be expansion of the Post Office. He pathetically referred to certain struggling Post Offices which would have to be closed if we did not accede to the increased postal rates. That appeal was not unsuccessful. But what has been the result? The Honourable the Finance Member's statement and the statement reiterated in brief by the Honourable Mr. Sarma has told us that the expansion of postal traffic has not been commensurate with the increased postage. On the contrary, the postal receipts have gone down in consequence partially of the increased postage. Now, Sir, I submit every economist knows that a time comes when what we call the saturation point is reached in taxation, and so far as postal rates are concerned, I submit that saturation point was reached last year, and the more you tax, the less you are likely to get out of that Department. I therefore submit that the first and dire necessity that confronts us as regards the management of the Post and Telegraph Department is drastic retrenchment. Now, in this connection, the Retrenchment Committee have made some caustic references to the inefficient management of the Post and Telegraph Department. My friend the Honourable Mr. Sarma has already referred to a few of their recommendations. Let me categorise them for the benefit of the Honourable Members. In the first place, they say that while during the last ten years under review the officers have increased by 82 per cent., the staff has only increased by 17 per cent. In this connection I have not overlooked the explanation given by the Honourable Mr. Sarma to which I shall presently advert. Then the Retrenchment Committee point out that the staff is excessive. Thirdly, they point out that the cost of travelling allowances is also excessive. Fourthly, they point out that there has been a great waste in stationery and printing. Let me give you one illustration culled from the Retrenchment Committee's own report. Last year they printed 50 millions of telegraph forms. But how many were really utilised? You will never guess it. Only 20 millions. The rest were all scrapped. (A Voice: "Whose fault is that?" and other interruptions.) I am coming to that. Then, Sir, the Retrenchment Committee point out that the staff of the officers of these two Departments get free quarters and houses to live in and they deprecate the giving of these houses free of charge to the officers of the Department and insist that a reasonable rent must be demanded of them. Lastly, they come to the question which one of my interjectors referred to, namely, the large accumulation of stores. Honourable Members will observe that the Government of India is more or less a Government of the Stores Department. No less than Rs. 59 crores worth of stores are lying stocked or imbedded in the depôts of the Government of India. The Inchcape Committee have pointed out that this very large collection of stores which is daily deteriorating is inadvisable and that it should be disposed of to the advantage of the State. Now, in connection with the subject of Posts and Telegraphs they equally advise the Government not to make these large collections of stores for postal and telegraph purposes. Now, if these criticisms of the Retrenchment Committee are given due effect to, I have no doubt that the small sum of Rs. 10 lakhs when compared with the colossal figure of 8 odd crores of rupees would be, I submit, a very small percentage of economy which this House must ask the Post and Telegraph Department to make during the ensuing year. I feel, Sir, that there is absolutely no justification for not effecting the economy which we demand. I said at the commencement of my speech that I shall not forget to advert to the speech of my Honourable friend, Mr. Sarma. My Honourable friend has developed a true and genuine bureaucratic spirit. Whenever any question is put to him he tells us that the subject is under consideration. Whenever any demand is made it will receive his sympathy, but beyond consideration and sympathy it does not go. Now, Sir, we are here not to invest in sympathies and considerations but to compel the occupants of the Treasury Benches to make themselves responsive to the will of the people's representatives in this House, and I submit that we shall not hear year after year these bureaucratic shibboleths which are hurled at us and have been hurled at us during the last three years. The matter is receiving due and sympathetic consideration." We shall judge of their acts by the results and not by the promises and I think that the least that we can do in connection with the subject of Posts and Telegraphs is to ask my Honourable friend the Member in charge to set his house in order by cultivating a little more of the commercial spirit to which the Honourable Sir Sydney Crookshank adverted and run this Department as any businessman, as any commercial man will do. Why, Sir? There are many ornaments of the commercial firms in this House. If I tell any one of them that I am going to embark on trade and I am spending 9 crores of rupees, at the end of the year either to lose 10 lakhs or to make this small pittance of Rs. 10 or 20 lakhs with the qualification and the necessary qualification of "probably" being superadded to my profits, what will be the result? The commercial expert will say, "Wind up your business. You are incapable and incompetent to run a business from which you can make no profit," yet we are told that this is a commercial department which requires every sympathy and consideration of the Members of this House. It is needless for me to point out that if we ask this House for a cut of Rs. 10 lakhs we are not doing much more than what the Retrenchment Committee have themselves recommended, and allowing for that most felicitous expression with which the Honourable the Finance Member has made the Members of this House by this time sufficiently familiar,—allowing for the lag, I am sure that the sum of Rs. 10 lakhs which we cut out of the budget for Posts and Telegraphs is as reasonable a cut as we should expect in the circumstances of the case. My friend the Honourable Mr. Sarma anticipated some of the arguments which were likely to be raised in the course of this debate by referring to one or two points. He first of all said and that was no doubt a statement which the Honourable Sir Sydney Crookshank stated that if we are to make any cuts at all, it would lead to widespread discontent. Now, Sir, whoever ever thought in a commercial department of making increases of salary and fearing economy on the ground that the employees will say "We do not like it." I am sure, Sir, that when the cuts are made people who are affected by the cuts do not like it at all. But that is a piece of unpopularity to which all departments are subject, to which all commercial houses are subject but the fact that it will lead to discontent in certain quarters should not deter the Honourable Member in charge from bringing into practice the principle which he himself has been enunciating, that this department must be run on a truly commercial and economical line. Then, Sir, I find that the Honourable Members are bubbling with enthusiasm to vote for my motion. I shall therefore be brief. My friend the Honourable Member in charge has said that there has been increase in the percentage of officers due to revision of pay. That may account for the number but it does not and cannot account for the cost. Then turning to the Telegraph Department may I once more recall that hackneyed complaint, complaint hackneyed but yet unredressed, that it has become the monopoly of Europeans and Anglo-Indians, and the sons of the soil are as a body not admitted within its sacred fold.

Mr. R. A. Spence: Are not Anglo-Indians sons of the soil?

Dr. H. S. Gour: We as the representatives of the people shall not be satisfied till we have seen the Indianisation of at least those services in which the Indians have proved their merit and competency. The Posts and Telegraphs are the departments of State in which the public are vitally and directly interested. They have a right to see that their representatives are admitted into the higher ranks of the Telegraph Department. My friend the Honourable Mr. Sarma made a casual allusion to Anglo-Indians and Europeans employed in the Services. I shall be very much interested to hear if he would vouchsafe some more particular information and give us the figures of the last three years, so that we may carry them to our constituents and tell them what we have done in the way of strengthening the Indianisation of these two services. How many Indians have been admitted into the superior ranks of the Telegraph Department? What was their number three years ago, and what is their number to-day? These are facts, Sir, upon which the Members of this House would like to have some enlightenment. Sir, I move my amendment.

Mr. President: Does the Honourable Member move his amendment for reduction of Rs. 10 lakhs? (Voices: "Five lakhs.")

Dr. H. S. Gour: Five lakhs.

Mr. President: Amendment moved:

"That the demand under the head 'Indian Postal and Telegraph Department' be reduced by Rs. 5,00,000."

Mr. K. C. Neogy (Dacca Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I had no intention of taking part in this debate, and it is because I did not want to take up the time of this House that I did not move several motions that stood in my name. But Dr. Gour has just now set such a bad example to this House that I feel tempted to say a few words. Sir, it has been already observed that the increase of work in the post office has not been commensurate with the increase in the superior staff, and I think the Honourable Mr. Sarma pointed out that there was some misapprehension in regard to the classification of the staff due to the increase of salaries as a result of the last revision. I will, therefore, leave out the superior staff when I give a few figures to this House. The increase of work in the post office has been 35 per cent. if we compare the figures of 1913-14 with those for the year 1921-22. Now, let us see what the increase of staff has been in the different branches of the postal organisation. I leave out the superior staff altogether, the direction and its staff. The increase of clerical staff in the Postmaster-General's offices has been 38 per cent., that is to say, 3 per cent. in excess of the increase in work, and menials in these offices 38 per cent. Then, in the presidency and district offices, postmasters and clerks increased by 28 per cent. as compared with an increase of work of 35 per cent., and the menials in the presidency and district offices increased by 18.8 per cent., and the postmen increased by 11 per cent. as compared with 35 per cent. increase in work.

Now, let us come to the telegraph branch of the combined department. The increase of work in the telegraph branch has been 22 per cent., if we compare the figures for 1913-14 and the figures for 1921-22; and the increase in the number of telegraph masters has been 34 per cent., or 12 per cent. in excess of the increase of work. And, then, the increase of telegraphists and signal room clerks has been 27 per cent. or 5 per cent. in excess of the increase in work, and the menials in the telegraph department increased by 70 per cent. as compared with the increase of work by 22 per cent. Now, how does the Honourable Member in charge propose to effect the cuts in compliance with the recommendations of the Inchcape Committee? I find that the postmasters, gazetted and non-gazetted, were 7,302 in 1922-23. Their number as given in the paper supplied to us in connection with the budget of this year is 7,278, that is to say, a decrease of 24. Then, again, taking the postmen and the village postmen, their number in 1922-23 was 29,528. Their number as given in the papers in connection with the present budget, is 28,736, the reduction being 792. Let us compare with these figures the reduction proposed under Telegraphs. The Telegraph Masters numbered 335 in 1920-21. Their number has been set down as 353 in the present budget. Now Dr. Gour has already referred to the recommendation of the Inchcape Committee in regard to the question of house rent and allowances enjoyed by the telegraph people. I will only draw the attention of the House to another recommendation of the Inchcape Committee, namely, that the number of Telegraph Masters and telegraphists which stands at 3,426 ought to be reduced to 2,806, that is to say, by 626. I would very much like the Honourable Member in charge to explain as to how he justifies this disparity in the cuts on the two branches of the joint department. Now, Sir, it will be seen that it is the public who are going to be affected by this unusual cut in the number of postal peons and delivery clerks and people whose duties are in connection with the village post offices. But, Sir, what do we find when we come to the higher grades? The number of Superintendents of Post Offices stood at 150 in 1922-23. The Department proposes to cut this down to the remarkably low figure of 148, removing two probationary Superintendents. I may point out to the House the Superintendents' work has been decreased of late years by reason of the curtailment of the number of inspections which they are required to make of the various post offices. I believe about two or three years back they were required to inspect the post offices twice a year, and now they are required to inspect each post office, I believe, once a year only. There is another point. Inspectors are now authorised to inspect more offices. Besides that, when we come to the amount of travelling allowance set down under the head Superintendents we find that the amount has been cut down considerably. That at least shows that the Superintendents are not expected to inspect the post offices as they used to do in the past years. What justification is there therefore for retaining the number of Superintendents at 148? Sir, Dr. Gour in opening his speech, referred to the Postal Department as a commercial department, and he cited the authority of the Honourable the Finance Member in his support. I beg to join issue both with the Honourable Finance Member and Dr. Gour on this point. I think it is a public utility department and it will be wrong on our part to look for any surplus revenue from this department in aid of the general revenues of the country. I believe that the principle which is observed almost throughout the world in regard to this matter, is not to consider the Postal Department to be a commercial department in the strict sense of the term, but to consider it a public utility department, whose primary duty is to assist the public in carrying on their business and thereby indirectly enable Government to benefit by their efforts.

Now, Sir, I propose to deal with this point at some length in connection with the Finance Bill, and, therefore, I do not want to tire the patience of this House now.

Lieut.-Colonel H. A. J. Gidney: It is a true saying, Sir, that "a little knowledge is a dangerous thing" but it is a truer saying that "no knowledge is crass ignorance". Dr. Gour has exemplified this and in his usual thunderous way takes every opportunity in this House of bombarding the Members in charge of various Departments for information regarding the community which I have the honour to represent asking what percentage of appointments we hold, etc., notwithstanding the fact, as this House knows, that it is my desire to discourage and disclaim communal preferences. Dr. Gour has to thank my community for his seat in this Assembly, but I shall take good care, Sir, that he will get no more votes from them at the next election. Sir, I rise to strongly protest against the amendment which Dr. Gour has moved and I do so with a certain amount of inside information and knowledge of the Telegraph Department, for I had the honour last year to sit on the Telegraph Committee which inquired into and adjusted certain of the grievances of this Department. I protest against this motion not with any communal feelings or with any desire to satisfy the insatiable appetite of Dr. Gour when anything comes up about my community, but to discuss its merits on the lines indicated by my Honourable friend Mr. Neogy who calls this department one of public utility and not as one of the money making departments of the Central Government. Sir, it was two years ago when discussing the Budget that the Member in charge of this Department openly admitted that he knew very little about the profit and loss of the Post and Telegraph Departments. It possessed no such account. Quite recently two distinct committees have sat to inquire into the details and grievances of this Department. I was on the one which sat last year. We now have the report of the Retrenchment Committee before us. This morning when discussing the Medical Department I paid great attention and respect to the report made by the Retrenchment Committee on that department. I regret to say that I cannot give the same weight to their report on the Telegraph Department. If Honourable Members will turn to page 94 and read the top paragraph of that page they will find it stated:

"It has not been possible for us in the limited time at our disposal to make any exhaustive analysis of the staff employed in relation to the work performed, but in order to attain a general impression, etc., etc."

(The italics are mine.) Now, Sir, this paragraph itself condemns the report of this Retrenchment Committee on the Postal and Telegraph Departments and it cannot be compared in value with the reports of the two previous Committees which sat to discuss the detailed working and grievances of this Department. I, therefore, cannot pay much attention to what this Committee has said so far as this Department is concerned. True there is room for some retrenchment in these Departments but certainly not on the lines indicated by this Committee. Let us take the first suggestion on page 94 of this Report—"Reduction in the staff". Now, Sir, the work performed by the Telegraph Department is essentially a fluctuating one; greater in one month than in another. It usually is. Does the House think that, if a staff of 500 is required for the month of September, that because traffic is less a month hence, the strength of the staff should be proportionately reduced in the interests of economy? Telegraphists are skilled and highly trained men who cannot be taught within a month. You must have a big reserve to fall back upon for all requirements including a leave reserve and, therefore, I submit that any reduction in the staff is not a wise move. Dr. Gour talked about the waste of millions of telegraph forms that are printed. I wonder how many forms Dr. Gour has wasted for his own use! It is not the Government that is responsible for this waste. It is the public. I wonder how many unused telegraph forms he has hidden away in the drawers of his Vice-Chancellor's office writing table!

Then, Sir, another question very lightly entered into by the Inchcape Committee is that of house accommodation and house rent for the staff. Sir, I had a lot to do at the last Telegraph Committee on this very matter, which was brought prominently to our notice, and I am sure Mr. Rangachariar, who was the President of that Committee and who was very averse to agreeing to any increased allowances to the staff, will remember that he himself saw the necessity of granting adequate house allowance when it was absolutely necessary. Sir, I cannot conceive of any Member of this Honourable House giving serious attention to the remarks made in the top paragraph of page 100 of the Retrenchment Committee's Report. This Committee when talking about house accommodation said:

"We are of opinion that in cases where it is necessary to provide quarters for the staff reasonable rents should be charged, and where such accommodation is not available house rent allowances should be granted for a reasonable period until the men transferred have had an opportunity of finding suitable accommodation."

This paragraph alone proves conclusively that this Committee was ignorant of the difficulties in obtaining house accommodation in Simla and Delhi, not to mention other parts of India. I therefore consider it would be a very unwise and unjust retrenchment to make in the house rent of the staff.

Dr. Gour then twitted my Honourable friend, Sir Sydney Crookshank, on the contents of the telegram which he read out to the House as reflexive of the personal views of the Telegraph staff regarding the retrenchments suggested by the Inchcape Committee and tried to belittle its value and weight. Let me in all the seriousness and emphasis at my command inform Dr. Gour—I notice a sardonic smile developing on his face—that whatever his feelings are towards any community and their supposed monopoly of this Department and which I challenge, I wish to impress upon him this one fact: The Telegraph Department constitutes one of, if not the most, delicate and important wheels in the Government clock, and I would advise him and this Honourable House not to undervalue this wheel—not to understaff the men working this wheel—not to underpay the men who control this wheel and not to underestimate the telegram read out by Sir Sydney Crookshank, otherwise they will overstrain the working of this wheel; and I hesitate to think what will be the result if that wheel in the Government clock were so overstrained as to stop working. I offer this note of caution and advice for the serious consideration of this Honourable House and I strongly urge you to oppose this demand and so show your appreciation of a Department which has always done its best for the country and risen to all occasions.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: Sir, I have sometimes felt that being on Committees is sometimes a convenience and sometimes an inconvenience. I could be a popular champion to-day in opposing extravagance and advocating economy to-day if I had not some inside knowledge of the difficulties that the Postal and Telegraph Departments have to grapple with. Sir, from the year 1918 onwards serious crises have been averted by the tact, prescience and careful handling of the situation which was shown by the Government from time to time. Sir, let us remember that we are dealing with the human element, mostly educated human element, in both these Departments. We are not dealing with inanimate things like Stores. The army of postal officials, the army of telegraph officials, who are scattered throughout the country from north to south and from east to west—we have to take their position into account in dealing with this question. Sir, my Honourable friend Colonel Gidney has referred to one portion of the Inchcape Committee's Report; I wish to speak always with the greatest respect of that Committee. In this matter of free house allowances, however, to these officials of these departments I cannot but think that they have made a grave blunder. Sir, remember that these postal and telegraph officials have to be at their post of duty at all hours of the day and night to obey the calls of the public. Have you seen the telegraph officials, those of you who take so much interest, have you seen the telegraph officials working in Simla? Have you seen them without house accommodation being provided there, they have to walk up to the Telegraph Office on the Mall, nearly four or five miles from far away residences? Sir, they have to go there at 10 o'clock at night; their shift hours change; they do not get all day hours; they have to go at their shift hours; they have to go at 8 o'clock at night and leave at 3 or 4 A.M. for their homes. Is it just to compare these people with other Government servants who have to go at fixed office hours, just as in revenue offices or courts where you can go at 10 o'clock and get back home at 5 or 6 in the evening? Sir, there are Government servants and Government servants. It is a very large question as to who you should provide accommodation for, and I think the rules made by the Government of India in that respect do not at all err on the side of humanity. I have examined those rules with care and I find that it is difficult to impose more restrictions than there are already in them.

Again, Sir, I called for a statement showing how the retrenchment proposed by the Committee has been carried out. The chapter on Posts and Telegraphs is one of those interesting chapters where the Retrenchment Committee have been able to go through the matter most thoroughly, for it is one of the earliest subjects they took up, and the then Director General of Post Offices was supple in their hands. They discussed every proposal with him and I find almost all these proposals carried out. If Honourable Members will compare the figures recommended by the Committee and the figures carried out, Honourable Members will really be surprised at the effort put forward by that department in loyally carrying out these recommendations. The figures tell their own tale. Honourable Members will see the recommendations of the Inchcape Committee came to 137 lakhs and they have actually carried out 131 lakhs. I have not worked out the percentage. Has any other department carried out the recommendations to that extent, may I ask? I am afraid, Sir, my Honourable friend, Dr. Gour, unfortunately had to deal with this department; if he had any prior motion under any other department I should have heartily supported him. But here he has touched a place where in fact it is impossible to make further cuts without sacrificing efficiency and without sacrificing human beings.

Sir, I know quite well that a certain portion of the Telegraph Department known as the general scale was some years ago avowedly kept for a particular community and in fact the Government of India of those days had a secret confidential Resolution on this subject. But I am glad to say that that Resolution has been cancelled. Now, Sir, in the general scale of telegraphists a larger number of Indians have been taken into service. I can assure my friend Dr. Gour that progress is being made, but progress can only be made. You cannot kill people who are already in service. They have to go; vacancies should occur before you can introduce Indians, and I do think that an honest effort is being made in introducing Indians in the general scale of telegraphists. I have not got the figures with me here,—I have them in Madras,—but I am sure the Honourable Member in charge will be able to tell us those figures, in fact, it will also be a revelation to my friend Dr. Gour, if the Honourable Member in charge will show him my confidential report which accompanied the general report as President of the Telegraph Committee. Sir, matters are improving, and I am glad to say they are improving. I am sure some of my friends behind me are not satisfied with the progress made. I may also share in their dissatisfaction, but after all, we can bring pressure to bear upon the department. I do not think we have much reason to complain of the Postal Department. If Honourable Members will look at the postal establishment, they will see that there is a very large proportion of Indians in the officers' grades. In the telegraph line, it requires technical training, and facilities have to be created in this country; especially in the engineering department there are not now so many facilities and the Government ought to provide them in this country. All these things do take time, and I do think, Sir, that we should be unkind to a department like this which is serving the public honestly and faithfully. Now, can you think of a department where it is so easy to be dishonest? Letters are addressed to you, and you don't know what letters are addressed to you, and you get them all right. Look to the regularity of the service. Is it not easy for the poor postman to merely throw away those letters and say he delivered them? Are there many complaints to the effect that the addressees do not receive their letters? Take the money order system. Look at the large sums of money which are remitted by Money Orders and handled by these postal officials. Are there many cases of misappropriation and theft? There are no doubt, but they are very few.

Dr. H. S. Gour: May you not pay too much for a good thing?

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: That is a point of view, no doubt, but I do think it is not possible to estimate these things from outside. May I with all respect to Dr. Gour point out that it is more for the persons in charge of the department to know these things rather for us to offer criticisms on such details. By all means let us offer criticisms on broad principles. I ask my Honourable friend Mr. Raju not to treat my remarks with that smile with which he greets them. I know he pointed out this morning a paragraph about allowances. It is there the Retrenchment Committee have egregiously erred, I am sorry to say. However, I hope, Sir, my friend will not press this motion. It will be an unpleasant task to differ from him on a matter like this, but if he presses this motion to a division, I shall certainly record my vote against him.

Mr. R. A. Spence: I move, Sir, that the question be put.

Mr. H. A. Sams (Director General: Posts and Telegraphs): Sir, before I pass on to my remarks on the criticisms passed on the department, I should like first of all to point out a matter which I do not think the House has quite realised. The budget estimate for 1922-23 was 10,17,00,000, as you will see on page 109 of the Inchcape Committee's Report. I want the House to realise this that assuming that this sum had been taken as the basis of our budget for 1923-24 it would have had to be automatically increased by two items. One is an increase of 13½ lakhs for increments of the staff which are absolutely automatic; the other is 6½ lakhs for the effects of sanctions, that is to say, that, if we appoint a clerk this year on an average of 6 months, we have obviously to pay him for 12 months next year; if the rent of a house is increased Rs. 100, that is to say Rs. 600 for this year, it will obviously be Rs. 1,200 next year. To the best of my knowledge, the Inchcape Committee did not take that into account. But our figure Rs. 8,93,18,000 does include these increases. What I claim therefore is not only that we have not done less than what the Inchcape Committee recommended; we have actually gone further. They did not take these items into account and we have. I want the House please clearly to understand that and especially my Honourable friend, Dr. Gour. He says that we are under the mark; I claim very distinctly that we are actually over the mark.

[Mr. H. A. Sams.]

Now, Sir, the Honourable Mr. Misra has twitted us with making our cuts from the lower end of the Department instead of from the higher. I may tell him, as perhaps he is not aware—one of our handicaps is that while the Honourable Members of this House do not exactly know what positions we have already won, we on the other hand do not exactly know where they are going to attack. I want to tell Mr. Misra that three very high officers have been dispensed with this year already, namely, the Traffic Controller on the Telegraph side, a Deputy Postmaster General in Bombay, and an Assistant Director General of my office. I think that this is an earnest that we are not trying to cut down only from the lower end of the line.

Dr. Nand Lal made a remark about printing. I may inform him, as perhaps he is not aware of the fact that we get our forms from two sources, one is the Government contractors, a private firm, which is under the Industries Department and therefore is not under our control at all. The other is our own Postal Workshops at Aligarh. I mention this for Dr. Nand Lal's information.

Dr. Nand Lal: I was really referring to the work done at Aligarh. My submission was that the printing may be done through private agency. The Government should not get itself associated with that at all.

Mr. H. A. Sams: I can tell the Honourable Member that, as a matter of fact, at Aligarh, taking everything into consideration, we can print 20 per cent. cheaper than a private firm can. As regards stores, my Department will be only too glad if we can get the whole of our stores in India. Waiting about for stores to come from England not only increases our stocks but also costs very much more than we need pay. I will mention only one item, it is a very big item—which we cannot at present get in India, and that is wire. Now, Sir, the whole of our Telegraph Department turns on that. We talk about wires, we send wires, we receive wires, you see stranded wires along every mile you travel by train. Every inch of that wire has to come from England. And I for one am sure that our Engineering Branch will be only too glad when India herself can produce wire—it will be a magnificent industry for India.

Mr. W. M. Hussanally: What about the printing of postage stamps.

Mr. H. A. Sams: That is a matter with which my Department is curiously and paradoxically enough not concerned. It belongs to the Industries Department. We simply buy our stamps from them. We buy our stamps from the Treasuries and perhaps my Honourable friend Mr. Ley will be able to give you further information on that subject.

Sir, I have already answered my Honourable friend, Dr. Gour, on the question of our having made a less cut than the Inchcape Committee required. I hope I have satisfied him on that point. He has told the House that the postage has gone down. This is an important question—Rs. 12 lakhs more actually than was recommended—and I should like Dr. Gour kindly to listen to this. Here are the figures for the sale of postage stamps in 1921-22 and 1922-23. I will take the first month. In April 1921-22 the sales were 71,99,000; in this April they were 56,35,000. Of course Dr. Gour will immediately say "Obviously the postage has gone down." But I may remind Dr. Gour that the new postage rates came into existence on the 24th of April. It shows, therefore, conclusively I think, Sir, that some other condition, something else was operating and not merely the higher rate of postage stamps. As a matter of fact, taking into account receipts from the National Cash Registers in Bombay and Calcutta, which are practically the same as stamps, the total for 1921-22 was 6,51,00,000, while this year, taking the average—we have not yet got the actual figures,—it will be 7,12,00,000, that is to say, we shall be at the end of the year 6 lakhs to the good on the sale of postage stamps and receipts of National Cash Registers. That, I think, is satisfactory, and the House can imagine what our figures would have been if we had not raised the postage. Dr. Gour has mentioned travelling allowance. He will see that we have cut that down by Rs. 8,55,000. Personally I regret this step. I am convinced that every touring officer justifies every penny that is spent on travelling allowance. However, this is a lean year and the Department has among other items cut down the travelling allowances ruthlessly.

Mr. W. M. Hussanally: Is it a fact that every Superintendent of the Post Office whatever his pay travels first class?

Mr. H. A. Sams: I cannot go into that question now. I am not prepared to discuss the whole of the travelling allowance rules.

Lieut.-Colonel H. A. J. Gidney: Why can't you?

Mr. H. A. Sams: Colonel Gidney has answered Dr. Gour on the question of forms but I may inform the House of a rather amusing incident that happened the other day when a lady told me that a certain fruit-seller in Delhi was spreading out his wares on postal money order forms. The abuse of forms does not lie with us. It lies with the public. Either they get more forms than they require or as I am inclined to think some of them got forms which they do not intend to use for their legitimate purposes but for other purposes. I have issued a circular prohibiting the giving of bunches of forms to the public.

Mr. Darcy Lindsay: Why not charge for them?

Mr. H. A. Sams: That is practically impossible. The question of House rent has been ably dealt with by my Honourable friend Mr. Rangachariar who in this respect, and I may say in every respect, is a champion of the Department, and I thank him sincerely for championing that particular cause. (A Voice: "He is a bureaucrat.")

[Mr. H. A. Sams.]

I am glad to see that in this respect he has ranged himself on the side of the noble army of bureaucrats. Dr. Gour criticised the question of stores, and there I am entirely in agreement with him. In October-November last an officer was put on special duty to examine the whole question of stores in the Posts and Telegraph Department and the conclusion that he came to was that we could reduce the stocks very considerably and that if we could only get more articles in India, we could reduce them to a very much greater extent. It has been said that Indians are not getting a fair share of the loaves and fishes of the Department. I may say that on the Telegraph side there was recently a Chief Engineer who was an Indian, with an eye-glass, but still an Indian. The Chief Electrician is an Indian and a very able and clever one. The Traffic Controller, as long as the appointment existed, was an Indian and the Controller of Stores is an Indian. These are a few of the higher appointments which come to my mind. The postal side, as you know, has always been an Indianised Department practically from the very start. Mr. Neogy has insinuated to a certain extent that the cuts we have made have been not altogether fairly done. I can assure Mr. Neogy,—and I hope that he will take my word for it, because I was present at the meeting when Mr. Clarke and the other officers of the Department went through the Budget and made the cuts—that there was no question whatever of cutting more from one Branch than from another. We simply considered each particular item and we decided whether we could cut it out or cut it down or whether we could not do so. I will ask Mr. Neogy to accept my assurance on that point. Mr. Rangachariar has made a small mistake. He has assumed that the Inchcape Committee dictated to my predecessor. That I can assure him was not the case. The Inchcape Committee asked him to do what he could. Mr. Clarke and his principal officers met together on a historic Sunday, stayed in office the whole day long and the four of us went through the budget of 1922-23 and then Mr. Clarke told the Committee what we could do. Subsequently, we found that we could do a certain amount of more retrenchment. But it was Mr. Clarke who told the Committee what he could do, and I think it is rather a feather in our cap that the Committee agreed with him rather than that he agreed with them. I do not want to detain the House any longer as it is getting late. But what I want the House to realise is that the budget we put forward is an estimate only. It does not represent a correct and accurate account. We can only say what we think we shall want. If we find we do not want it it will be saved. What I do want to assure the House is that we have honestly tried to effect retrenchment in view of the present serious financial situation. We have made great sacrifices and it will be very difficult to carry on, I am almost certain that during the course of the year we shall have to go to the Standing Finance Committee for more money in certain respects. But I do want the House to be generous to us and to realise the fact that we have really and honestly done our best to meet the present financial situation.

Dr. H. S. Gour: In view of the assurance given by the Honourable Member that he merely thinks what he wants and that he will see that real economies will be effected in the Department on the lines indicated by ourselves on this side of the House, and more in view of the fact that a House divided against itself cannot stand, I wish to withdraw this motion.

Mr. President: Is it your pleasure that the amendment be withdrawn?

Mr. R. A. Spence: I object.

Mr. President: The question is:

“That the demand under the head ‘Indian Postal and Telegraph Department’ be reduced by Rs. 5 lakhs.”

The motion was negatived.

Mr. J. N. Mukherjee (Calcutta Suburbs: Non-Muhammadan Urban): I wanted to raise a question about one branch under this demand, namely, broadcasting

Mr. President: It is very inconvenient that the Honourable Member should raise this point at this stage. It would help the Chair if only Honourable Members would rise in their places before the question is put on a general reduction such as we have just disposed of, otherwise there would be too much repetition. I deliberately did not call upon the Acting Director General when he rose for the first time because other Members wished to speak, and I did not want him to have to speak twice. So far as I remember, the Honourable Member did not rise in his seat.

Mr. J. N. Mukherjee: I unfortunately did not catch your eye.

Mr. President: The Honourable Member is perfectly entitled to move his amendment but it is inconvenient especially at this late stage of the discussion of the Demands to ask for two speeches from the post office, when one will do. (A Voice: “The question has been discussed already.”)

Mr. Deputy President: That is so.

Mr. President: That only makes the position of the Honourable Member worse.

Mr. President: The question is:

The motion was adopted.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: I should like to say, if I am in order, that I hope that nothing will be done to interfere with the extension of the post offices in the villages. That is a very desirable thing. In this connection I should like to say

Mr. President: Is the Honourable Member rising on a personal point of order?

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: Yes. In this connection I should like to point out, if I understood the Honourable the Leader of the House aright, that he seems to have used the expression that my friend, Mr. Ginwala, was wasting the time of the House, when he was speaking on the general administration. Sir, none is more considerate to Members of this House than the Leader of the House and I do not think that he really intended to convey that imputation against my friend. It may be that myself and my friend have not understood the Honourable the Leader of the House properly; and I believe he would give us an assurance that he did not intend to convey the imputation that my friend was wasting the time of the House.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: I was not conscious that I used that phrase, but I am reminded that I did so, and desire therefore to recall the circumstances to the House. What I was protesting against was the proposal that we should have a discussion on the whole conduct of Government, in every department, and in every sphere of activity, on a final motion for a grant which, as I have already pointed out, related to the head under which we provide funds for the Secretariat and the Legislative bodies. My remarks were directed mainly to a protest against utilising that opportunity instead of taking the occasion which the rules provided, namely, of the general discussion of the Budget. I would like to add that I regret to realise that it was Mr. Ginwala whom I accuse of wasting the time of the House; for, we know Mr. Ginwala is a constant attendant at the meetings of the House and one who always speaks to the point and, if I may be allowed to say so, never speaks too often. My remarks were intended to be of a general nature, and if they were couched in somewhat warmer terms than I have frequently used in this House, then, I would only ask Members opposite to remember that Mr. Ginwala made, at what seemed to me a most inopportune occasion, a general attack on our administration and made certain insinuations against us. Now, I felt very much the terms in which the insinuations against the Government were couched, for I say with some confidence that nobody has worked harder than we, the present Members of the Government, to maintain good faith with Members of this House. I would remind the House of what was once said by a Judge in Ireland: he asked people to remember that even the common policeman who walked the streets had a soul. If insinuations of that kind are made against us, we must resent them. If we are to be attacked, I ask that we be attacked in season and not out of season. I ask again that we may be attacked for our vices and not for our virtues. Thus, when we had been asked to make a small retrenchment of 25 lakhs and we succeed in making a retrenchment of over a crore, it was not reasonable to impute this to us for blame. Those were the kind of attacks that I resented. Well, it was far from my desire to accuse Mr. Ginwala of a practice of wasting the time of the House; but I did feel that the occasion for those attacks was misplaced; I did feel that they were out of season, I did feel the insinuations made were unreasonable, and that we were entitled to resent them.

Mr. P. P. Ginwala: Sir, I do not wish to lose the very good opinion of the Honourable the Home Member which he expressed when he said that I did not speak too often, by refraining from speaking a few words now. I do not think that the Honourable the Home Member can charge me with insinuation. I do not believe I insinuate anything at all, for I am rather like the Irishman who told a man that he wanted to give him a hint, and when asked what the hint was, he said: "Somebody has stolen my coat, and I think it is you." That is the way in which I generally make my insinuation and I am sorry to think that I have not made my observations sufficiently plain for the Honourable the Home Member to take them as criticisms, and not as insinuations. However, so far as I am concerned, I may assure the Honourable the Home Member that I indulge myself very much in free criticism of the Government and I expect the same thing from the Government as far as I am concerned, and nothing that he said to-day put me out in the least. I may perhaps add that if the Honourable the Home Member had not shown a little bit of temper, I should have taken him for a mediocrity. I am very much obliged to the Honourable the Home Member for having spoken as he has done.

DEMAND NO. 11—INDO-EUROPEAN TELEGRAPH DEPARTMENT.

Colonel Sir Sydney Crookshank: Sir, I move:

Sir, before we enter upon a debate on the amendments which have been tabled on this Demand, perhaps it will assist Honourable Members if I just briefly explain in as few words as possible what the position is in regard to this particular department. It is a department which is managed entirely by the Director in Chief, whose headquarters are in England. The Government of India have very little to do with it, that is to say as regards the direct administration and control of the department, and only deals with such correspondence on routine and departmental matters which come through my office in connection with matters of general administration and international questions. We are therefore in the position of the man who lies in bed all the year round and at the end of the year stretches out his hand and picks up a large sum of money for which he has done nothing. In the case of the year 1921-22, which is the last year for which I have detailed information, the Government of India picked up a net profit of Rs. 8,49,518. This I may remark was rather less than what it had been in previous years, but that is due not to any fault on the part of the Director in Chief, or the Government of India, but to the chaotic conditions in Russia and in the Balkans by which the telegraphic communications beyond Teheran and Pao were interrupted and are still interrupted. We must therefore look upon the gift which we receive in the shape of revenue in the Indo-European Telegraph Department for which we do nothing not too gladly. The Committee's honourable Members will refer to page 115 of the Committee's Report, they will find the total of the budget items for 1922-23 amounts to Rs. 43,35,000. Against that figure for the current year the Committee have recommended a reduction of Rs. 7,34,000. Honourable Members will observe that the proportion of reduction to the total expenditure is a very large one indeed. However, after careful consideration in the Government of India and reference to the Director in Chief I am able to inform the House that this reduction of Rs. 7,34,000 will be effected in full during the following year. We should perhaps, in considering the amendments, be careful not to do too much to kill the goose that lays the golden eggs.

Mr. N. M. Samarth: Sir, I move the amendment:

"That the demand under the head 'Indo-European Telegraph Department' (page 32) be reduced by Rs. 2,11,500."

Now, my intention is not to kill the goose that lays the golden eggs. My demand really amounts to asking that the sum of Rs. 2,25,000, which you find as Capital Outlay in Demand No. 11, the whole of which is votable, be transferred to Capital Account and not be charged to Revenue. Therefore, the goose remains and the golden eggs also remain. The House will find at page 122 of the Income Committee's Report that the Honourable Mr. Purshotamdas Thakurdas written a minute of dissent on it, and he has pointed out that this is a commercial department which has been very remunerative to the Government of India, having yielded on the capital sum a return varying from 4.4 per cent. in 1913-14 to 14.58 in 1919-20 after allowing for a sinking

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

Saturday, 17th March, 1923.

The Assembly met in the Assembly Chamber at Eleven of the Clock.
Mr. President was in the Chair.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

RAILWAY SERVICE.

570. M. K. Reddi Garu: 1. (a) With reference to the reply given to starred question No. 466, will Government be pleased to state the definition of "Railway Service"?

(b) Do the staff employed on ordinary Secretariat work in the Railway Department and the Office of the Accountant General, Railways, fall under the category of "Railway Service"?

(c) Is there any difference in the condition of service between the Ministerial Staff of the Railway Department and other departments of the Government of India? If so, what are the differences?

(d) Is it not a fact that for the matter of pay, allowances and conditions of service the staff of all Departments of the Government of India Secretariat are considered as a homogeneous body? If so, how is it that the staff of the Railway Department are treated differently?

2. Will the Chief Commissioner of Railways be pleased to lay on the table a copy of the orders of the Government of India declaring the service of the Ministerial Staff of the Railway Department as "Railway Service" quite distinct from "Secretariat Service"?

3. Is the Office of the Accountant General, Railways, a part of the Railway Department or of the Finance Department? If the latter, how are the staff employed therein treated as belonging to "Railway Service"?

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley: 1. (a) Railway service is ordinarily held to mean employment on railways and in the offices administering railways.

(b) Yes.

(c) There are no material differences.

(d) Yes. The justification in respect to passes is explained in (g) of reply to question No. 446 on 5th March 1923.

2. There is no such order, nor in view of the reply to Part 1 (a) of the question any necessity for it.

8. The Accountant General, Railways' Office like other offices of auditors attached to State Railways perform dual functions concerning both the Finance and the Railway Departments.

M. K. Reddi Garu: How many first and second class tickets by way of these concessions were issued and what is the money value of the tickets so issued?

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley: I must have notice of that question but I think a similar question has already been asked.

GRANT OF PASSES CONSIDERED IN FIXING SALARY.

571. M. K. Reddi Garu: (a) With reference to the reply given by Mr. Hindley to part (d) of Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary's starred question No. 446 stating that the additional emoluments received by the Staff of the Railway Department in the shape of passes and P. T. O.'s were taken in account in fixing their salary, will the Finance Member kindly state why it was considered necessary to place them in a better financial position than the staff in other Departments of the Government of India?

(b) Is the Government aware that men belonging to other Departments of the Government of India are willing to get their services transferred to the Railway Department if possible on a reduced scale of pay provided the free Railway passes continue?

(c) Do Government propose to take steps to remove this disparity?

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley: I have been asked to reply to this question.

(a) The grant of passes at the discretion of Railways concerned is an incident of railway service. The trifling monetary value of this concession does not justify differentiation in scales of pay.

(b) No.

(c) In view of (a) above, this question does not arise.

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary: What is considered to be railway service in this connection? Is service with the Railway Board railway service for these purposes?

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley: Perhaps the Honourable Member did not hear the first part of my reply to the first question which I will repeat:

"Railway service is ordinarily held to mean employment on railways and in the offices administering railways."

UNSTARRED QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

SELECTION GRADE POST OFFICES IN THE BENGAL AND ASSAM CIRCLE.

236. Rai T. P. Mukherjee Bahadur: (a) Will the Government be pleased to state why important urban municipal towns and former head Post offices such as Dum-Dum, Naihati, Kanchrapara, Ranaghat, Katwa, Serampore, Kushtia, Rampurhat, Kharagpur have not been taken in the group of selection grade Post offices in the Bengal and Assam circle?

(b) Do the Government propose to enlist them in place of the following unimportant stations, viz., Habibganj, Karimganj, Bhairab, Jhalakati, Patuakhali, Jamalpur and Feni?

Colonel Sir Sydney Crookshank: (a) and (b) The list of selection grade appointments sanctioned for the subordinate Postal service on the recommendations of the Postal Committee, 1920, included such appointments as could properly be classified as supervisory or were otherwise sufficiently important to be placed on higher rates of pay than the time-scales provided for officials performing the ordinary clerical work of the Post Office. The question whether any alterations are necessary in respect of the list of selection grade appointments in the Bengal and Assam Circle is under examination.

POST OFFICE AT NARAYANGANJ.

237. Rai T. P. Mukherjee Bahadur: Will the Government be pleased to state (a) the extra expenditure required to meet the cost of a 2nd head office at Narayanganj and (b) another Superintendent of Post Offices for Narayanganj Division, (c) under what circumstances was such expenditure sanctioned by the Government of India? (d) Were not head offices in sub-divisional towns abolished under some principle? (e) Will the Director General kindly explain the altered circumstances which justified him to advise the Government of India for deviation from that principle?

Colonel Sir Sydney Crookshank: (a) Rs. 134 a month.

(b) Rs. 87 a month in the office establishment of the Superintendent. No new appointment of Superintendent was created; an existing appointment was transferred from the reserve to the administrative staff.

(c) Owing to urgent administrative necessity.

(d) The general principle ordinarily followed is to have a head post office for each revenue district, but occasionally it becomes necessary to depart from that principle in the interests of administrative convenience. The question of reducing the Narayanganj head post office to the status of a sub-office and of abolishing the Narayanganj Postal Division, as a measure of retrenchment, is however under consideration.

(e) The number of offices under the Dacca Head Office was very large and it was becoming increasingly difficult to exercise an effective control over them. There was also congestion of work in the Dacca office itself. It was further reported that the European and Indian residents as well as the Chamber of Commerce at Narayanganj desired that the status of the office should be raised to that of a Head Office.

EXPENDITURE INCURRED FOR THE INCHCAPE COMMITTEE.

238. Rai T. P. Mukherjee Bahadur: Will the Government be pleased to state the amount of expenditure incurred for the Inchcape Committee and lay on the table a statement showing the details on each head?

The Honourable Sir Basil Blckett: A statement is laid on the Table giving the information asked for.

Statement showing details of the expenses incurred or likely to be incurred up to 31st March 1923, in connection with the appointment of the Income Committee.

THE BUDGET—LIST OF DEMANDS.

SECOND STAGE—contd.

DEMAND NO. 7—FORESTS.

Mr. J. Hullah (Revenue and Agriculture Secretary): Sir, I beg to move:

"That a sum not exceeding Rs. 9,28,000 be granted to the Governor General in Council to defray the charge which will come in course of payment during the year ending the 31st day of March, 1924, in respect of 'Forests'."

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary (Calcutta: Non-Muhammadan Urban): Sir, here as elsewhere I am scrupulously avoiding saying anything beyond the recommendations of the Inchcape Committee, and I am trying, as far as possible, to confine the question to the existing recommendation for retrenchment. As the motion standing in my name shows, it is under the head Allowances and Honoraria and Supplies and Services that I ask for comparatively small reductions within the limits of the Inchcape Committee's recommendations, so that the objective that we all have may be reached. I do not think I can put my case any higher than that. I recognise that Allowances and Honoraria and Supplies and Services are all necessary, but, having regard to the exigencies of the times, I want to have them reduced as far as possible. Undoubtedly some reduction has already been made but we believe that further reduction is possible; in the absence of details under those heads, it is not possible to indicate exactly which of the items should go out in the lump deductions indicated in the demand asked for.

Mr. President: Is the Honourable Member moving 122?

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary: And 123.* My remarks will apply to both. I do not want to make two speeches. But the two proposals may be put separately.

Mr. President. The question is:

"That the provision for Allowances and Honoraria under the head 'Forests' be reduced by Rs. 15,000."

Mr. J. Hullah: Sir, a reduction has already been made, as Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary admits, and I cannot say that any further reduction is possible. We are working down, as far as possible, to the recommendations of the Retrenchment Committee and the matter of allowances and contingencies will, of course, receive our attention. The allowances are for travelling allowance to officers on tour and to the establishment and a large part of the travelling allowance is spent by the Inspector General of Forests whose tours are extensive and to distant places including the Andamans and Coorg which are two of the Forest properties under the Government of India. The other allowances are, for the most part, house rent to the office establishment at Simla, separation allowance for clerks at Delhi who leave their families in their villages, local allowance to menials at Simla and Delhi and house rent to clerks at Delhi who are not provided with quarters. Beyond an assurance that we shall do our best to cut down these allowances as well as everything else in accordance with the recommendations of the Retrenchment Committee, I cannot say definitely

* "123. That the provision for Supplies and Services under the head 'Forests' be reduced by Rs. 1 lakh."

whether there is scope for reduction or what amount of reduction we may be able to make.

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary: Miscellaneous charges Rs. 2,18,000.

Mr. J. Hullah: I am sorry, I did not know that was included in the Honourable Member's motion.

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary: That is under Supplies and Services.

Mr. J. Hullah: I see. The figure is on account of the expenses of the economic branch of the Research Institute. The new buildings for that branch are just approaching completion and the plant for installation is lying at Dehra Dun and will now be placed inside these buildings. We have almost completed our staff of research experts in the economic branch and they will now be able to get to work properly with the new plant which has already arrived. The miscellaneous charges are mainly in connection with the material on which they will work. It would take me, I am afraid, about half an hour to read out the various details included in this sum of Rs. 2,18,000. But I may say that of the reduction of Rs. 55,000 shown under votable items, Rs. 50,000 is on account of deduction from this particular figure, so that the amount granted to the Research Institute for these miscellaneous supplies will not be Rs. 2,18,000 but Rs. 50,000 smaller than that figure. In short, we have already made a reduction of Rs. 50,000.

Dr. H. S. Gour (Nagpur Division: Non-Muhammadian): Sir, may I in this connection inquire what is the meaning of the statement in the revised statement prepared by the Finance Department "The reduction of Rs. 96,000 is effected by not filling up two appointments and by reduction in miscellaneous expenditure at the Research Institute. What I want to know, Sir, is how far the Research Institute will be affected by the proposed reduction of Rs. 96,000 and what are the two appointments brought under reduction in consequence of this revision.

Mr. J. Hullah: The two appointments are those of the Forest Botanist, non-votable, for whom a Budget provision of Rs. 25,800 was originally made, and the Systematic Entomologist for whom a Budget provision of Rs. 15,380 was made. In addition there is the Rs. 50,000 reduction which I have just mentioned, and a reduction of Rs. 5,000 on account of passages of Indian probationers to England. The total of these items is Rs. 96,000, of which Rs. 91,000 will be a retrenchment on the Dehra Dun Research Institute.

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary: I do not wish to press the motion. I fully accept Mr. Hullah's explanation. I fully believe in the future of this institution and do not desire to press this.

The motion* was, by leave of the Assembly, withdrawn.

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary: The same observation applies to my motion† No. 123 also.

The motion was, by leave of the Assembly, withdrawn.

* "That the provision for Allowances and Honoraria under the head 'Forests' (page 27) be reduced by Rs. 15,000."

† "That the provision for Supplies and Services under the head "Forests" (page 27) be reduced by Rs. 1 lakh."

Rai Sahib Lakshmi Narayan Lal (Bihar and Orissa: Nominated Non-Official): Sir, I move:

"That the demand under the head 'Forests' be reduced by Rs. 43,800."

The Budget estimate of this year is in excess of the Budget estimate of last year by Rs. 2,55,000 taking both the votable and non-votable items into consideration and the excess is Rs. 2,42,000 taking only the votable items into consideration. The Retrenchment Committee has recommended a reduction of Rs. 6,90,000 of which Rs. 86,000 is under the head Forest Research Institute and the rest is on expenditure in England. After this recommendation a reduction of Rs. 55,000 has been made. But I ask for a further reduction under this amendment. Sir, it is very much encouraging to learn from the report of the Retrenchment Committee, that all the officers who have appeared before it were very earnest for reduction in the expenditure, and I hope that if they will try to economise, they will be able to further reduce the expenditure to the extent asked for under this amendment. There is one matter, Sir, to which I want to draw attention under this head. Although we have been informed that there has been a reduction of Rs. 55,000 under votable items, we have not been as yet informed whether there has been any reduction on the non-votable items. Though I am quite alive to the fact that we have no right to vote regarding non-votable items, yet we have a right to know whether the reduction recommended by the Committee has been accepted or not. Day after to-morrow we are going to sit to consider the Finance Bill and before we do that we are entitled to know whether the reduction recommended by the Committee for the non-votable items also have been accepted by the Government or not. I move my amendment.

Mr. J. Hullah: Sir, if the Honourable Member thinks that, whereas the Retrenchment Committee has recommended a reduction of more than Rs. 6 lakhs under the head Forests, we have made a reduction of only Rs. 55,000, he is very greatly mistaken. The Inchcape Committee in dealing with Forests did not take the Demand, Forests as it appears in this volume, but the Budget head Forests, which includes not only the headquarters charges and the Dehra Dun Institute but also all the expenditure in the minor administrations such as the Andamans, Coorg, the North-West Frontier Province and two or three other places where forests are of less importance. The total Budget under Forests is Rs. 47 lakhs while the Inchcape Committee figure is Rs. 45.55 lakhs. We had therefore already come very nearly down to the Inchcape Committee figure. But we have made a further cut of Rs. 96,000, so the total expenditure on forests will be Rs. 46,10,000. We are thus only Rs. 55,000 short of the recommendations of the Inchcape Committee. The Honourable Member also said that the Assembly was entitled to know whether any reduction had been made in the non-votable head. I have just explained that provision for two officers has been cut out, the Forest Botanist and one of the Entomologists. The reduction on account of these two officers is Rs. 41,000.

Rai Sahib Lakshmi Narayan Lal: Sir, I do not press my amendment.

The motion was, by leave of the Assembly, withdrawn.

Mr. B. Venkatapatiraju (Ganjam cum Vizagapatam: Non-Muhammadian Rural): Sir, I move:

"That the Demand under the head 'Forests' (page 27) be reduced by Rs. 100."

[Mr. B. Venkatapatiraju.]

I make this motion in order to raise a question. A provision was made for the Dehra Dun Imperial Research Institute. We find, Sir, that the decision arrived at by this Assembly was not given proper effect to in this wise. Firstly, it was sanctioned long ago by the Secretary of State that we must have facilities provided for the Imperial forest recruitment in India with the approval of the Government of India; but later on the Government of India changed their mind. Eventually the Honourable Mr. Hullah on behalf of Government introduced a Resolution in this Assembly that we should go back upon the decision of the Government of India as well as the Secretary of State to provide a fully equipped institute in Dehra Dun. But after mature consideration this Assembly decided that we should still stick to the old decision arrived at by the Secretary of State and the Government of India. We insisted that as soon as possible it should be done, but that in the interval the old system might continue. Now I find that nothing has been done to show that any attempt is made to secure at an early date a fully equipped institute for training our Imperial recruits for Forest service. Fortunately, there is no difficulty for we find that the present Institute is fully equipped. We have got about 85 officers, about 25 of whom are persons imported from England who must be highly qualified experts because we are paying them good salaries. Therefore nobody need say that we have not got a fully equipped Institute. Where was the difficulty of training Indians here for that Service. Long ago, the Public Services Commission stated that we should have a fully equipped institute in India. Not only that. They went further and said that there should be no limit placed on the number of officers to be recruited in India for the Imperial Service. They also added that there is no policy underlying it because this Forest Service has nothing to do either with Imperial connections or with the British supremacy.

Therefore, when there is no policy underlying it, it is purely a matter of employing our own men to do forest service. The first complaint is that in the Research Institute you have not appointed any Indian. Out of 25 officers of the Imperial cadre there is not a single Indian. You only find one assistant who is employed in research. Why they have failed to employ additional assistants in order to do research work I do not understand. What was the difficulty felt to secure Indian recruits to be trained in India, instead of sending them to England for the Imperial Forest Service, whatever be the difficulties of securing the attendance of British recruits here. After all, this is not absolutely necessary though at the present moment we are recruiting only 40 per cent. here and 60 per cent. in England. The other day the Honourable Mr. Hullah stated that there was no objection to recruiting the 100 per cent. of Indians. What is the use of these pious statements when they are not put into practice? There is not much change whether the portfolio is in the hands of an Indian Member or an English Member because under both we find the same difficulty and there are no additional Indians employed in the Imperial cadre and no attempts are being made to train Indians here. Therefore I submit that it is unfair that the opinion of this Assembly should be brushed aside in this manner. Even the Retrenchment Committee suggested that so far as the training is concerned, it is desirable that it should be extended. But what they said is "You need not indulge in having costly constructions which cost 125 lakhs." That may be or may not be. After all, these may be uneconomical economies. But for educational purposes any amount spent is absolutely necessary and a proper investment; whether it be in Dehra Dun or at Delhi it is absolutely necessary that we should have fair educational facilities in India. This Assembly, at least on the non-official side, will not agree to any unnecessary reduction in the matter of national development purposes, and therefore we insist that something must be done in order to give full effect to the pledges given from time to time and to the assurances given that they are Indianising the Forest Service which is a matter in which they admit there is no policy underlying it.

The Honourable Mr. B. N. Sarma (Revenue and Agriculture Member): I shall not at this stage enter into a discussion as regards the Resolution which this House and the Council of State have passed regarding the future training of Europeans and Indians in India at the Dehra Dun Institute. But I shall place before the House some of the difficulties in the way of the Government's arriving at any definite conclusion on that point till now. The Department of Revenue and Agriculture has until very recently been in some doubt as to whether the Dehra Dun Forest Research Institute would continue to be a living Institute or would be abolished or so seriously retrenched as to be practically infructuous for the purposes for which it was intended. In view of the present financial stringency an opinion has been entertained in some quarters that it would be unwise to embark upon this kind of expenditure and that it would be for the Provincial Governments to take up research in the various provinces because most of the forests are located in the provinces. An alternative suggestion has been made that if the Government of India are to find funds for this Forest Research Institute they should be to a very great extent reimbursed by contributions from the provinces and the decision of the Government of India could not be definitely ascertained by the Department until they knew what the Retrenchment Committee had to say upon the subject. The Department felt that it would be wrong on their part to deal with the question until the Retrenchment Committee had reported upon it. Now, that the Retrenchment Committee has recommended that the Forest Research Institute should continue to function substantially as hitherto except perhaps with regard to certain departments of research about which they entertained doubts—now that the Retrenchment Committee have recommended that the educational activities of this Institute should not be hampered, the Department are in a position to take up the question as to how far they would be able to give effect to the recommendations of this House in the matter of education for training for the Imperial Service. But there is no use disguising from myself or from the House the fact that to give full effect to the Resolution may be difficult inasmuch as our Public Works expenditure has been asked to be curtailed by the Retrenchment Committee, and apart from any recommendations which have been made by the Retrenchment Committee it would be unreasonable for the Department to ask the Government of India to embark upon a heavy expenditure on buildings at present. The Incheape Committee has recommended that no further buildings should be taken on hand and that the expenditure should be limited to the commitments already made. We have been obliged therefore to reduce our expenditure on the Dehra Dun Institute to Rs. 8 lakhs which sum has been provided in order to carry out the works which had been undertaken for housing the Economic Section. The Department and the Government of India have therefore to ascertain as to whether it would be possible with the limited space at Dehra Dun Institute to find quarters for all the students and for the various classes in case the educational activities of the Research Institute are to be enlarged on the scale recommended. But this much I may assure the House that the Government of India hope to give effect to that recommendation to the largest extent possible and to start training at as early a date as may be practicable so as to make a beginning with the limited funds at their disposal. We do not want to put off indefinitely on account of want of funds, if it be found practicable, to undertake the training of Indians for the Imperial Service in India. I am as keen as any Honourable Member to push on the good work and you may rest assured that it is not for want of will on the part of the Government of India that this has been held up hitherto, but it is because there are so many practical difficulties which we have to surmount before the scheme materialises and becomes an accomplished fact. Honourable Members will themselves notice that in the Resolution which they have passed they have suggested that the present arrangement should continue until the Research Institute can be brought up to that stage at which it would be possible to undertake the training of both Europeans and Indians in India. I am not for a moment saying that the Government of India should not give effect to that recommendation but I am only suggesting that we may have to make a smaller beginning than that in order to carry out the wishes of the Assembly, the Council of State and the Indian people at large. The House will be interested to know that about 58 per cent. of probationers in England at the present moment are Indians. That is due to the fact that in the previous years it was not possible to recruit the proper number of Indians but we find now that the provinces owing to financial embarrassments have asked that the number should be limited as far as possible and that is the reason why in the coming year we have to reduce the number of recruits to 15, 10 of whom would be Europeans and 5 Indians. So from this explanation my Honourable friend will see that the Government of India (and the remark that it makes no difference whether the department is in charge of an Indian or a European is perfectly justifiable) would try to give effect to those recommendations as far as possible and we mean to give early consideration to that Resolution inasmuch as we now find that the Retrenchment Committee has definitely recommended that the educational programme should not be curtailed and that the Research Institute should function as hithertofore, although I for one do not see at present whether we shall be able to give effect to the recommendations for curtailing some of the branches of research activity in the manner suggested in that report. I do not think I should be justified in taking up further the time of the House at this stage.

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary: I desire to say just one word in support of the point of view put forward by Mr. Raju and at the same time to put in a very strong protest against abandonment of the Research Institute. We are prepared to accept the recommendations of the Incheape Committee with regard to other matters. But in matters like this I am at one with Mr. Innes, although he was wrong on the particular occasion to which I refer. With regard to research, education, sanitation and even archaeology, I am not prepared to accept their recommendations for they are short sighted. The Government would be well advised in reconsidering their decision. We must go on with research as begun, the Forest Department may die but the forests will live and live to redound to the wealth of India if properly handled. Anything that is not done now or omitted for advancing those researches on proper lines and enabling our people to take a high position in forest work will be suicidal.

Mr. B. Venkatapatiraju: I withdraw my motion on the assurance given by Government.

The motion* was, by leave of the Assembly, withdrawn.

Mr. J. Ramayya Pantulu (Gudavari cum Kistna: Non-Muhammadan Rural): I should like to make a few remarks in regard to the point raised just now

Mr. President: The motion has just been withdrawn by the leave of the Assembly.

Mr. J. Ramayya Pantulu: I want to speak on that portion of the Research Institute which consists of the Institute proper, but not the college.

Mr. President: The Honourable Member can move his motion and then see whether he will keep in order.

Mr. J. Ramayya Pantulu: I beg to move:

"That the demand under the head 'Forests' be reduced by Rs. 100."

I move this motion in order to call the attention of the House and also the attention of the Government to what I consider to be the unsatisfactory condition of the working of that portion of the Research Institute which forms the Research Institute proper, apart from the Forest College. That institute consists of a number of departments which are engaged in making experiments with a view to enhancing the commercial value of our forests. Each of these departments is presided over by a highly paid expert. Most of these experts have been imported from foreign countries, mostly from America and Canada. The work that these experts are expected to do is partly to make experiments and partly to train Indians to make those experiments themselves, so that, in course of time, these Indians might replace the foreign experts. I find, Sir, that although there are as many as six departments attached to the institute not a single Indian has been trained in the work of this department except one in the timber testing department. There is the forest wood technology, the paper pulp department, the timber testing department, the wood seasoning department and the tanning department. To none of these departments except the timber testing department, is an Indian attached, so as to be trained to do the work himself and in due course, to replace the present expert when his term of contract expires. Thus the main part of the work of these experts has been neglected to the detriment of the interests of the country. There is one other matter. In the matter of the timber testing department, we have got an expert on Rs. 1,500 a month and we have got his assistant and I am told that these two gentlemen have not got one-tenth of the work which they can do. I recently paid a short visit to Dehra Dun and the timber testing expert told me that he has got only two machines now with which he is able to make only one thousand tests in the course of a month. The scheme of the work of this department is that every one sort of timber must undergo five thousand tests. Now these two existing machines are able to make only one thousand experiments in the course of a month. So that it takes five months to complete all the experiments on one timber. I am told that we have got about 300 sorts of timber in our forests, so that will take 125 years to test all these timbers. But the same expert told me that he could supervise the work of 20 machines if he had them; but he has only two, and hence there is not really enough work for himself and his assistant and we are simply wasting a large amount of money. The present policy of Government is a mixture of parsimony and extravagance. You maintain a highly paid establishment and you do not give it enough work to do because you say you cannot afford to appoint assistants or buy more machines. I do not think, Sir, that that is economy; it is extravagance. If you want to continue that timber testing department you ought to give it a sufficiency of work to do, so that there may be some hope of this part of the work being finished within a reasonable time. It will otherwise take 125 years to complete.

* "That the Demand under the head 'Forests' be reduced by Rs. 100."

I should like, Sir, to know what the Honourable the Revenue Member is going to do in this matter.

The Honourable Mr. B. N. Sarma: Sir, I do not think I need grudge any criticism which will provide me with more funds for my institute; but Honourable Members will realize that it has been impossible hitherto to find assistants or machines in the absence of accommodation. But we hope to be able to find both during the next year, as the Economic Section is going to be housed appropriately and I do not think the complaints we have heard to-day will be heard any longer. I wish Honourable Members had borne that in mind when they proposed a further curtailment. I am glad they have not proceeded with it. In the demand for supplies and services it was proposed and we have already accepted a cut of Rs. 50,000. But I think the Government of India, in view of the financial stringency, had no alternative but to proceed cautiously and slowly. Now that research work is being appreciated in all departments there is no doubt the Government will do their level best to find full employment for all their experts. We have been reproached for not finding assistants in the technological and other departments; but where we could we have employed assistants who will in due course succeed these experts imported from outside; and we hope to pursue this policy so that these costly agencies may be replaced by an indigenous agency of an efficient character and at a reduced cost.

The motion was, by leave of the Assembly, withdrawn.

Dr. Nand Lal (West Punjab: Non-Muhammadan): I move:

"That the demand under the head 'Forests' be reduced by 5 per cent."

Sir, as you know, the revenue derived from forests, in the provinces goes to the provinces. There are some forests indeed which are in the possession of and under the control of the Government of India, as for instance, forests in the North-West Frontier Province, Coorg and the Andamans. Sir, as you know, recently a very large sum has been spent on the exploitation of the forests and that expenditure naturally induces me to ask what the result has been, what produce and what stock is available, what revenue has been derived? I confess my inability to lay my hand on any reliable literature pertaining to this point and I think it is necessary to draw the attention of the Honourable Member in charge of this Department to the paucity of literature on this subject. Now, Sir, in considering the expenditure involved in the development of forests, for instance in the North-West Frontier Province, may I invite your attention to page 235 of the report of the Retrenchment Committee. You will feel surprised at what it tells us. The information embodied in the report runs as follows:

"In 1913-14 the expenditure was Rs. 1,31,300, and the revenue which we then derived was Rs. 2,66,000."

Now, look at the rise so far as expenditure goes in 1921-22. It rose to Rs. 8,77,000

The Honourable Mr. B. N. Sarma: May I suggest, Sir, that the Honourable Member is out of order because he is discussing expenditure in the North-West Frontier Province, whereas the demand is only with regard to forest research. I think the Honourable Member will have an opportunity of discussing the other matter later.

Dr. Nand Lal: Yes, I concede that there is force in that point and I therefore withdraw my amendment.

The motion was, by leave of the Assembly, withdrawn.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That a sum not exceeding Rs. 9,28,000 be granted to the Governor General in Council to defray the charges which will come in course of payment during the year ending the 31st day of March, 1924, in respect of 'Forests'."

The motion was adopted.

DEMAND NO. 6—STAMPS.

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes (Commerce and Industries Member): I beg to move, Sir:

"That a sum not exceeding Rs. 1,000 be granted to the Governor General in Council to defray the charges which will come in course of payment during the year ending the 31st day of March, 1924, in respect of 'Stamps'."

Mr. B. S. Kamat (Bombay Central Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I move:

"That the demand under the head 'Stamps'—including expenditure in England—be reduced to Re. 1."

The point which I wish to raise in connection with the demand for Stamps is about the manufacture of stamps in India. Honourable Members will remember that I raised this point last year. I wanted to know why the Government of India did not manufacture their stamps in this country. I had hoped that the Department concerned would take some steps during the past 12 months, but I am sorry to find that in that period very little seems to have been done, if I may judge by a reply to a question of mine given by the Honourable Mr. Innes recently in this House. In reply to that question about the manufacture of stamps Mr. Innes said—

"No detailed inquiries have so far been instituted by Government in this matter."

Sir, the contract with Messrs. De la Rue and Co. terminates next year and if any firm in India has to undertake this work I fear some time will be necessary for them to instal new machinery.

If Government therefore take no action till then, it is just likely that they may turn round next year and say it is not possible for any firm in India to manufacture stamps at all. I want to know, therefore, whether Government have really taken any serious steps in the matter and whether they have the will to do something. The second point which I wish to ask in this connection is with reference to the administration of Stamps and Stationery Department by the Controller of Stationery and Stamps in Calcutta. Those who have read the report of the Inchcape Committee must have seen that the Controller has not been as vigilant as he ought to have been with reference to a number of matters, chiefly about recoveries. The Calcutta depôt is a distributing depôt for the distribution of stamps to Provincial Governments and minor Administrations. I find from the Report of the Incheape Committee that the Controller of Stamps and Stationery has not recovered from the Provincial Governments even the cost of stamps supplied for instance to Bengal or the cost of even plain paper supplied to some other Provincial Governments. He has neither recovered for the Central Government the loss in exchange and in some cases not even the cost of transit to Provincial Governments. It seems rather curious that this Controller is not looking after his accounts and recoveries which he should have made. I should like to know, therefore, what action has been taken to see that recoveries are properly made and the expenditure of the Stamps Department is not unduly inflated.

The Honourable Mr. O. A. Innes: Sir, I will first take up the question of the manufacture of stamps in India. I think the House ought to realise that this question of the manufacture of stamps in India is a very difficult question. If we hand it over to a private firm, only one firm can be entrusted with the work. There is no firm in India which is at present printing stamps at all. It is a very difficult and a very technical matter. There are special difficulties in India and the House will realise that when the firm is first undertaking this printing, we may run the gravest possible risk of a breakdown. That is the reason why the Government of India have proceeded cautiously in this matter. It is not correct to say that we have done nothing in the matter. On the contrary we have sent Home, or rather Colonel Willis of the Mint Department has been sent Home to investigate the question of printing notes in India, and we took advantage of his presence at Home to ask him to investigate the question of printing stamps in India with reference to any special difficulties which there might be owing to climatic and other reasons, and we associated with Colonel Willis Mr. Ascoli who had been on special duty for a considerable time in the Printing and Stationery Department to investigate all the activities of that department with a view to economy. Colonel Willis did not get Home till, I think, November or December last, but I arranged that they should send us a cable just before the Budget debate in order that we might know what progress they had made in their investigations, and I have received that cable. They have arrived at the conclusion in regard to technical difficulties that no very material difficulties exist. But they go on to say that at the commencement very considerable non-productive expenditure must be faced during the experimental period. They express doubts whether it would be wise to entrust the manufacture to any private firm which has not hitherto printed stamps as the process requires very different qualifications from ordinary printing, and it will necessitate a long term contract to cover heavy material charges and involves risk of breakdown with disastrous consequences. They go on to say that if Government undertakes the work, an experimental press should be started this year. To test gums, inks and paper and to ensure proper registration and impression after the existing contract expires it will be necessary to import machinery and materials. They add that a preliminary report is being despatched so as to reach us, if possible, by the end of March and they will follow it up by more detailed proposals. As soon as those proposals arrive, I will place them before the departmental Committee of the Commerce Department in order that the whole matter may be investigated. It will require, of course, very considerable preparatory work before either Government or the private firm, if we decide on giving a contract of this kind to a private firm, can really get going with the printing of stamps. That may necessitate some extension of this contract to De La Rue and Co. The existing contract with De La Rue and Co. contains a clause to say that if it is not terminated, it runs on, but can be terminated at any time at six months' notice. That is the exact position as regards the manufacture of stamps in India. One point more I have got to make. The House must remember that many of these stamps are stamps which we supply to Local Governments. We cannot expect Local Governments to indent on us, assuming that we start our own manufacture in India, unless we can show that we can print those stamps as well and as economically as they can be imported. That would not necessarily apply to postage stamps. Colonel Willis and Mr. Ascoli say that so far they find it impossible to give any estimate of the cost. They add that it is improbable that material economies will result during the earlier years.

I now turn to the other question raised by Mr. Kamat, and I may say at once that had Mr. Kamat moved a reduction of one rupee in the Demand for Stamps, I would have been tempted to take that one rupee out of my pocket and place it on the table. For, I must confess that the Incheape Committee's report has brought to light a bad state of affairs, and the Government of India must accept responsibility for that state of affairs. What happened was of course that the implications of the Reforms Scheme were not realised. Formerly, when we had a combined purse the question of recovery from Local Governments did not arise. When the Reforms Scheme came in and non-judicial stamps were transferred to Local Governments as a provincial source of revenue, it was not realised at first that the recoveries ought to have been made. There was some confusion undoubtedly, want of co-ordination, as the Incheape Committee put it, between the Controller of Printing and Stationery on the one hand and the Accounts Officers on the other, as also want of co-ordination between the India Office and the Government of India in this matter. What I can say is that this matter was discovered some time ago and instructions have already been issued or are being issued to Local Governments. We have not only to effect recoveries which are in arrears but to make such changes in the system as will prevent a recurrence of maladministration of this kind in the future.

Dr. Nand Lal: Sir, I generally place implicit faith in the correctness of the information which is given by the Honourable Mr. Innes, but 12 Noon. I am sorry I cannot do so on this occasion. If I understand aright and if my information is correct, we find machinery of this type and work of this kind going on in Hyderabad, Deccan and one or two other States and my informant told me that it proved a great success. Now, when this point is raised, the Honourable Mr. Innes comes forward with this sympathy for the Indian enterprise that if this system of industry is allowed in India, most probably it may prove disastrous. I may say this is left-handed sympathy. My own belief is, and I think this is the opinion of the majority of big printers in India, that if this task is entrusted to them, they will be able to do justice to it. Considering the great amount of expenditure which we incur, we feel forced to offer this suggestion to the Government of India that they may kindly give a trial to Indian printers, and if they do it, they will soon come to know and realise that Indians are fully capable of doing it and Indian soil is quite agreeable to that work.

Dr. H. S. Gour: I had tabled an amendment also:

"That the demand under the head 'Stamps'—including expenditure in England—be reduced by Rs. 100."

I should like to say a few words in connection with that amendment. Last year this question was debated in this House, and the Honourable Mr. Innes, speaking for his Department, passed on to me some daubs of stamps produced by a Native Indian State, and said, "if this is the kind of work which is done in India, would it justify the indigenous printing of stamps." Since then I have collected information. I prepared a very large number of letters and sent them on to different States, and in response to my invitation and to my surprise, I received a very large number of stamps actually manufactured in this country. I showed a great many of them to the Honourable Mr. Innes, and I remember I also passed round that album for the inspection of the House. (Cries of "Yes" "yes.") I also received a copy of the Goble's Automatic Printing Machine catalogue which showed how the whole thing is done by automatic machinery. It is not a question of climate or of gums, but a mere question of investing a sum of money and indenting on Germany for this Goble's machine, which is used, I believe, in all the countries of Europe and America, and if I mistake not in the State of Hyderabad. The stamps which I showed to the Honourable Members of this House and to the Honourable Mr. Innes were a revelation. They were embossed stamps of the most beautiful type produced by machinery which gives no trouble and which were actually being used in Hyderabad. I asked the Honourable Mr. Innes to look at his picture of the stamps which he showed me and mine of the stamps produced in the country. Now, Sir, after that ocular demonstration, I am surprised that the deputation that went to England to inquire into the possibilities of printing stamps in this country has sent by cable that extremely disappointing report, and I am further disappointed to hear from the lips of the Honourable Mr. Innes that he will first of all try in an experimental measure a small printing press. (The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: "I did not say that.") He says he did not say that. I stand corrected; that there are insuperable difficulties; (The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: "I did not say that.") that there are difficulties in the way of starting the printing of stamps in this country. Now, Sir, I ask the Honourable Mr. Innes how have these difficulties been overcome in the Indian States where stamps are actually being printed, and in the adjacent island of Ceylon where beautiful stamps are printed, in Assam and in Japan, which print their own stamps and do not indent on Thomas de la Rue and Company. I say, Sir, that even if it cost a little more, the Honourable Mr. Innes could not have forgotten his own Resolution, moved the other day in this House, on the question of free trade and protection. Speaking on that subject, the Honourable Mr. Innes said that the policy of the Government of India is to foster indigenous industries. Now printing is an indigenous industry. It requires development, and unless you take some risks, how are you going to develop the printing of stamps in this country? Honourable Members will find, if they turn to the Demand book, that we buy from Thomas de la Rue and Company stamps to the value of half a crore of rupees per annum, and we have to keep in addition a costly establishment for the storage and distribution of these stamps. I therefore submit, Sir, that, if you put all the costs together, it certainly would not come to much more than you would spend upon the local printing of stamps. And even if in the commencement the stamps are not produced as well as they are done by the firm overseas, I am sure that the Members of this House will overlook these small defects which are compatible with small beginnings, provided the industry receives a stimulus which it deserves at the hands of the Government and the printing presses in this country are encouraged to invest in the machinery which is necessary for the purpose of doing work of this character. I have in my possession information from several firms in this country who are prepared to take contracts and run all the risk that is necessary in the printing of these stamps, and they are firms who have been doing work with credit for the Government for a number of years. I ask, Sir, why should not these presses be employed for the production of stamps in this country? Then, Sir, it has been said by the Honourable Mr. Innes that it is possible that Messrs. Thomas de la Rue's contract might be extended. Let me in this connection draw the attention of the House to what the Inchcape Committee themselves recommend in this connection. On page 231 they say: "There would appear to be many advantages in getting post cards at any rate printed in India." They are in favour of the printing of stamps and post cards in the country, and they say that, at any rate, let the post cards be printed in this country; not that the stamps should not be printed in this country also. And they point out that it would be economical if a beginning is made with the printing of stamps in this country. I submit, Sir, that this House should speak with no uncertain voice on this great subject of developing one of the rising industries of this country, namely, developing the printing press in India. And we can never develop these presses unless the Government extend to them their patronage. They have the right to expect it; we have the right to demand it, and I think it is up to the Government to respond to the call made upon it and see that, instead of following the policy of laissez-faire the Government also feel with the House that, whether risks are taken or not, one supreme effort shall be made for the purpose of printing stamps in this country. I hope, Sir, that the Honourable Mr. Innes will revise his words and his thoughts and give this House a more re-assuring message that he will accede to the unanimous wish—I think it is a unanimous wish on this side of the House—that stamps should be manufactured in this country at the earliest opportunity, and that we cannot tolerate the extension of Messrs. Thomas de la Rue's contract at enhanced or unenhanced rates.

I move my amendment.

Mr. Darcy Lindsay (Bengal: European): Sir, I should like to ask the Honourable Mr. Innes whether any suggestion has been made to the present contractors, Messrs. de la Rue and Company, to establish a factory in India for the manufacture of stamps. They are a very old firm in this class of business and entirely to be trusted in the manufacture and distribution of stamps, and I think that is one of the points that weighs very strongly with the Honourable Member. That stamps can be made in this country I, for one, am satisfied, both as regards quality and price. We have had stamps made in Calcutta for an Indian State by Messrs. Thacker Spink and Company that I think are equal to any stamp manufactured by Messrs. de la Rue and Company. (Dr. H. S. Gour: "I showed those stamps to the Honourable Mr. Innes.")

Another point, Sir, of extreme importance to India is the money that would be saved in carrying much smaller stocks. I believe I am correct in the statement that the Post Office alone carries at least a two years' supply, and I believe their stock is in value something like Rs. 20 to

Rs. 25 lakhs. If stamps were manufactured in the country, there would be no necessity for carrying more than a six months' supply and the interest on Rs. 10 lakhs or Rs. 15 lakhs thereby saved is a considerable sum. This includes all classes of stamps manufactured, and on these grounds I strongly urge that arrangements should, if possible, be made for the manufacture of stamps in India.

Sardar B. A. Dalal (Bombay Northern Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): With your permission, Sir, I might mention that stamps are made in the Indian States, especially in Baroda, and, if my information is correct, also in Rajpipla, and it should not, I think, be very difficult to manufacture them in India; so this enterprise might be entrusted to Indian firms.

With these remarks, I support the amendment.

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: Sir, the difference between Dr. Gour and Mr. Darcy Lindsay and myself is merely a difference of point of view. Dr. Gour and Mr. Darcy Lindsay have no responsibility in this matter; the Government have. As I have said, this is a very important question indeed. The Government now supply postage and judicial stamps for all India and, before we embark on a new departure in the way of manufacturing those stamps in India, we must be thoroughly satisfied that we are not going to have a breakdown. That is the reason why Government consider that they must watch their steps most carefully and that they must proceed cautiously. That is why we have had the question examined by these two officers at home and that we propose to await their report before we take further steps. Both Dr. Gour and Mr. Darcy Lindsay have referred to the fact that certain Indian States print their own stamps. I am aware of that fact, but they have me at a disadvantage. I also have made inquiries; I also have information on this point, but that information was supplied to me in confidence and I am not at liberty to use it. Neither Dr. Gour nor Mr. Darcy Lindsay referred to the cost of printing those stamps, and I might point out that in this matter in these times of financial stringency cost is a very serious consideration. (Dr. H. S. Gour: "I have been informed, Sir, that the cost is 15 to 20 per cent. cheaper than Thomas de la Rue's rates.") My information, Sir, is different and surely this different information indicates the necessity of proceeding with care and caution. Dr. Gour then stated that the House would not tolerate any extension of the de la Rue contract. We have no present intention of extending that contract. All I say is that, if re-arrangements are decided upon by the Government and arrangements through private firms for the manufacture of stamps in India are not completed in time, the contract will continue to run under the operation of the clause in the contract which provides for its running on and termination at six months' notice. I suggest, Sir, that the House should remain content with what I have told them, namely, that by the end of this month or next month we shall have this report out from home. The whole question will then be discussed with full knowledge in that report and that report will be put up to a departmental Committee of the Commerce Department with a view to see what further action should be taken.

Mr. President: Does the Honourable Member move a reduction?

Dr. H. S. Gour: Yes, Sir.

Mr. President: Of one rupee or Rs. 100?

Dr. H. S. Gour: One rupee will do, Sir.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That the demand under the head 'Stamps'—including expenditure in England—be reduced by one rupee."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That a reduced sum not exceeding Rs. 999 be granted to the Governor General in Council to defray the charges which will come in course of payment for the year ending the 31st day of March, 1924, in respect of 'Stamps'."

The motion was adopted.

DEMAND NO. 5—EXCISE.

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: Sir, I beg to move:

"That a sum not exceeding Rs. 1,000 be granted to the Governor General in Council to defray the charges which will come in course of payment for the year ending the 31st day of March 1924 in respect of 'Excise'."

The motion was adopted.

DEMAND NO. 12—INTEREST ON DEBT AND SINKING FUNDS.

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett (Finance Member): Sir, I beg to move:

"That a sum not exceeding Rs. 22,000 be granted to the Governor General in Council to defray the charges which will come in course of payment during the year ending the 31st day of March 1924 in respect of 'Interest on Debt and Sinking Funds'."

Sir Campbell Rhodes (Bengal: European): Sir, I notice in this demand that the question of Exchange enters very largely into the matter. My Honourable friend, Mr. Jampadas Dwarkadas, recently asked a question of the Finance Member in regard to the sale of Council Bills and I should like to supplement that question by asking whether the Honourable the Finance Member has considered the point and, if so, whether he has arrived at any conclusion. The regulation of exchange operations, the sale of treasury bills and the provision of ways and means are all inextricably mixed together, and it seems to me wrong that while one of these three items is regulated in England, the other two are regulated out here, and that it would be in the interests of economy if the whole were regulated on the spot. Speaking last week in a small mofussil station I was careful to say not that the Council sales should be effected here in India but that they should be regulated, if not actually effected, in India. For I realise there are difficulties in the way of effecting Council Bills in India. There are two primary difficulties. In England there is one centre, London: here there would be about five. Also the Government of India would not care to part with money at one end until they received it at the other. But I see no objection to the actual regulation of the sale of Council Bills being effected in this country, and in fact I see very obvious advantages. I believe that the Government could so regulate their exchange operations as to get their money home at better rates and at the same time come to the help of the trade of the country when there was a tendency towards a rise.

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas (Bombay City: Non-Muhammadan Urban): Sir, I support the motion made by my Honourable friend, Sir Campbell Rhodes, and in doing so I associate myself with the remarks that he has made. A few days back I put a few questions to the Honourable the Finance Member in order to find out who it was that controlled this policy of the sale of Council Bills, and when the answer was that it was the Secretary of State, who controlled it; I put a further question and asked him whether the Finance Department of the Government of India here was not capable of regulating the policy of the sale of Council Bills and why it was not done. The answer of the Honourable the Finance Member was "Well, it was obviously so because it has been so for a number of years." Well, Sir, Sir Campbell Rhodes has rightly pointed out that it will be to the advantage of this country to regulate and control the policy of the sale of Council Bills here at this end. There is one more suggestion that I was going to make, and I should like to know from the Finance Member if it is a suggestion that can be put into effect. If I understand rightly, the present method is to ask for tender in sterling value. If you could effect the same in rupees I think more advantage would be taken by the people of this country than by merely capitalists and banks. I do not know how far it is possible to arrange that, but if it is possible I think it would be of great advantage to the country.

Sir Montagu Webb (Bombay: European): Sir, if I understand this demand aright, it is purely to provide the money to pay for the skeleton forms of Government Promissory Notes. If that be so, might I put in a suggestion that while the Honourable the Commerce Member is thinking how to print stamps in this country, he might also take into consideration if it will be possible to print Government Promissory Notes also?

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: Sir, I shall be glad to convey to the Honourable the Commerce Member the suggestion which has been made.

I do not want to delay the House long on this general subject of Council Bills which arises presumably on this vote because a large item in the vote represents exchange on London. Sir Campbell Rhodes has repeated here some very interesting suggestions which he made in a speech in Calcutta a week or two ago, and Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas has also supported the general proposition that the Government of India should not confine itself to one method only of obtaining the sterling it requires, namely, the sale of Council Bills through the Secretary of State in London. This matter has been under consideration from time to time and I should like to make it clear to the House that the Secretary of State and the Government of India do not regard themselves as in any way confined to this one method of remittance. If occasion arises, they regard themselves as free to buy sterling in the market in India.

Sardar B. A. Dalal: Have they ever done so?

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: It has been done on occasion but not to any very large extent. The further suggestion that has been made was, I understand, not that there should be a change in the place at which Councils should be sold, but that there should be a change in the control or regulation. I think it is obvious that London has very many advantages as the place in which to effect Council sales. The method of Council sales has the great advantage to which Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas referred, that it has been in force for a hundred years and is well understood and works fairly well in ordinary times. The possibility of adopting a system of tender in India is one which will not be lost sight of, but there are a good many difficulties and no very obvious advantages as compared with sale in London. I do not quite follow the suggestion that was made by Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas that we should do our transactions in terms of rupees. What is really done is that rupees are offered for sale in London. So long as your desire is to remit money to London, you must either offer rupees to be brought in London or offer to purchase sterling in India. That is simply the obverse of the same transaction. The question of regulation of sales is one to which attention will be given, but I think the House should not misunderstand the position. It is only a question of machinery. At the present time the Secretary of State does effect his operations in consultation with the Government of India, and it is only a question of emphasis, I think, and not a question of real change unless it is suggested that some other agency than the Bank of England should be employed.

Sir Montagu Webb: May I suggest, Sir, that the Imperial Bank of India be permitted to sell sterling at all times in India?

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: The matter will be considered.

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary: Sir, the sporting offers about laying a rupee down on the table are tempting. Whether I receive the offer or not, I should like if I may to leave out the word 'crore' in my amendment,* showing how generous one, without what Mr. Innes calls any responsibility, can be. It has been pointed out that this is only a vote for Rs. 22,000, and that not even for note forms but skeleton forms of notes. Incidentally therefore I desire to raise a question with regard to what is called service expenditure,—Provision for service of new loan. Well, Sir, as the Honourable Finance Member reminded us, though not a windfall, for the time being it was a great help to us that the whole of the provision for service as well as the whole of the loan were not necessary last year. There were thus some savings last year which reduced the deficit to a certain extent. This year, I believe, we stand on firmer ground than that, and it will not be a question of all the loan Government had intended not having to be contracted, but the Government loan being actually intended to be less this year. If my reading of the situation is correct, I should like to ask the Honourable Finance Member as to whether even now some appreciable reduction could not be made on the non-voted item, namely, in the provision for service of new loan,—both the rupee loan as well as the sterling loan. What are the facts of the case? Last year, I believe for the rupee loan Rs. 1,25,00,000 or thereabouts was provided. For a flotation of Rs. 46 crores the total expenditure was somewhere in the neighbourhood of Rs. 58 lakhs, giving service costs at about 1½ per cent. This year our loan is expected to be Rs. 25 crores—and if the proposal for carrying Railway annuities to capital is given effect to—Rs. 26 crores. At 1½ per cent. which is the figure for the last year, it would cost us about Rs. 32½ lakhs. There is also a provision for 80 lakhs under this head, and if my reading of the situation is correct there will be a saving of something like Rs. 47½ lakhs.

Then turning to the sterling loan, we are, I believe, in a similar favourable position; we are going to raise a loan, I believe, of £50 millions. That, on last year's figures, will cost us 87½ lakhs according to the calculations that

* That the demand under the head 'Interest on Ordinary Debt and Sinking Funds' (page 52) be reduced by one crore." (As printed in the list).

[Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary.]

I am mentally making. I take it that facilities in London are not less than here and if the expenses are $1\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. or, including brokerage at $1\frac{1}{2}$ per cent., even then the savings would be $37\frac{1}{2}$ lakhs. Between this $37\frac{1}{2}$ lakhs and the $47\frac{1}{2}$ lakhs on the rupee loan, something like 85 lakhs may be expected to be saved. One cannot be as sanguine as all that. But supposing half or nearly half of that was to our credit that would bring us 50 lakhs. Then there is another point of view—the question of interest for the broken period. Loans are not floated immediately; there is some saving of interest in the broken period if the loan can be floated in a suitable market, supposing here also we make a saving, altogether there will be a net saving that will be helpful to the present situation as there was last year. From this point of view, Sir, I desire to draw the attention of the Honourable Finance Member to the question and want to elicit an expression of opinion as to whether our point of view is reasonable or not.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That the demand under the head 'Interest on Debt and Sinking Funds' be reduced by Re. 1."

Rao Bahadur C. S. Subrahmanayam (Madras ceded Districts and Chittoor: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, in addition to what my friend, Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary, said, there is another point, and it is this. This figure on page 84—Rs. 47,50,000—is calculated at Rs. 10 to the £, whereas all other calculations are made at Rs. 15 to the £. The point was that last year when 47 crores of loan were raised in this country, the expenditure including all the charges and broken period interest were 58 lakhs. On that ratio this year it ought to be something less than 30 lakhs. Similarly on the sterling loan there should be an expenditure not exceeding 25 lakhs. So with these two savings and the saving in exchange, a substantial sum could be saved and that will go to reduce the deficit.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar (Madras: Nominated Non-Official): Sir, may I say a word as I have given notice of a similar motion? It is not a simple expression of opinion only that I expect from the Honourable Finance Member—I expect him to make a specific declaration as to how much, having regard to the facts placed before him, he is prepared to deduct from the amount which he has entered for service charges. There is only one other matter which I should like to mention and that is this: last year the amount of the rupee loan was, I believe, 47 crores; this year it is intended to float a loan only of 25 crores of rupees. If that is so, there must be a considerable reduction in the sum provided for service charges. Another item that has been mentioned is the amount of charges for a sterling loan—the amount entered is £485,000; it was 475,000 last year; it is £485,000 this year. As pointed out by my friend, Mr. Subrahmanayam, if you put it at the rate of Rs. 15 a £, there must be a considerable reduction and even if we

Mr. A. V. V. Aiyar (Finance Department: Nominated Official): There must be an increase.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: I take it that you will have to pay about 70 lakhs if your calculation is correct, and I take it that if you float a loan at such a period as to make the intervening period between the time at which the interest begins to run and the time that the loan is subscribed as short as possible, you will be able to make a great saving. The loan certainly should be floated in a manner that the finances of the country should suffer least. If you take all these considerations into account, I have no doubt you will be able to cut down the amount by something like Rs. 35 lakhs at least. I suggest this, Sir, to the Honourable the Finance Member so that he may cut down from this non-votable item at least Rs. 35 lakhs.

Mr. A. V. V. Aiyar: Sir, it is somewhat disheartening to find that when we are doing our best to reduce our expenditure, our action is used to our disadvantage.

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary: Not at all.

Mr. A. V. V. Aiyar: Last year we made a provision of 125 lakhs, and it is said that we spent only 58 lakhs, and that is the case. But I will take the House a few years back. In 1919-20 we floated a loan of 21 crores and we had to spend 131 lakhs on that, which amounted to 6 per cent. Similarly in England in 1921-22 we floated a loan of 17 million pounds, on which we had to spend 375,000 pounds. Obviously in a matter of this kind we should be guided by the conditions of the money market from time to time, and it is not desirable to tie Government down to any fixed dates within which loans may be floated, or fixed period for which interest should run in the first year. This is a matter in which Government should have as free a hand as possible, and I am sorry to say that after careful consideration we cannot see our way to accept any reduction under this head.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That the demand under the head 'Interest on Debt and Sinking Funds' be reduced by Re. 1."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That a sum not exceeding Rs. 22,000 be granted to the Governor General in Council to defray the charges which will come in course of payment during the year ending the 31st day of March 1924 in respect of 'Interest on Debt and Sinking Funds'."

The motion was adopted.

DEMAND NO. 43—STATIONERY AND PRINTING.

Mr. A. H. Ley (Industries Secretary): Sir, I beg to move:

"That a sum not exceeding Rs. 57,92,000 be granted to the Governor General in Council to defray the charges which will come in course of payment during the year ending the 31st day of March, 1924, in respect of 'Stationery and Printing, including Expenditure in England'."

The motion was adopted.

DEMAND NO. 34—COMMERCIAL INTELLIGENCE.

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: Sir, I beg to move:

"That a sum not exceeding Rs. 2,13,000 be granted to the Governor General in Council to defray the charges which will come in course of payment during the year ending the 31st day of March, 1924, in respect of 'Commercial Intelligence'."

Khan Bahadur Sarfaraz Hussain Khan (Tirhoot Division: Muhammadan): Sir, I beg to move:

"That the provision for Superintendent and clerks under sub-head 'Bureau of Commercial Intelligence' under the head 'Commercial Intelligence' be reduced by Rs. 80,000."

The amount budgeted for 1922-23 was Rs. 61,810, but in the current year the amount has been increased to Rs. 1,58,780. The first thing that I should like to know is as to why this increase has been made. Now the Retrenchment Committee say on page 214 of their Report:

"This Department was, no doubt, useful during the war when the Director had various duties to perform in connection with the supply of munitions and when it was considered inexpedient to publish any information relating to the movement of trade, but it is questionable whether it is now necessary to maintain an establishment on this scale for the purpose. In view of the necessity for retrenchment, we are informed that certain existing or contemplated activities of the department have been abandoned which will effect a saving in the current year's budget of Rs. 1,08,000 and of Rs. 1,59,000 in 1923-24. Whether Indian trade benefits to an extent warranting the expenditure which will still remain is open to doubt, and we recommend that further economies should be effected, increasing the saving to Rs. 2,09,000."

Further on, the Retrenchment Committee say:

"In view of all the circumstances we are of the opinion that the budget of the combined department should be reduced to Rs. 2,00,000, a reduction of Rs. 1,20,000 on the budget for 1922-23."

Therefore, Sir, in view of the fact that the Retrenchment Committee have recommended a reduction and also in view of the fact that an increase has been shown in the current year's expenses in this department for a Superintendent and clerks, I move that the budgeted amount should be reduced by Rs. 80,000.

Rai Bahadur Lachmi Prasad Sinha (Gaya cum Monghyr Non-Muhammadan): Sir, I beg to support the motion put forward by my Honourable friend, Khan Bahadur Sarfaraz Hussain Khan. Under the head Commercial Intelligence we were asked this year in the original Demand to vote for 2 lakhs 63 thousand. In the revised estimate which has since been issued we are asked to vote for Rs. 2 lakhs 13 thousand. But the proposal of the Retrenchment Committee was to reduce 1 lakh 59 thousand from the budget figure of 1922-23. Honourable Members will see this for themselves from page 214 of the Retrenchment Committee's Report. If that proposal had been accepted, the figure under this head would have come down to 1 lakh 57 thousand. Sir, the ultimate saving proposed in the combined departments of the Directorate of Statistics and Bureau of Commercial Intelligence was Rs. 2 lakhs 80 thousand—(page 215 of the Retrenchment Committee's Report), thereby giving them a sum of Rs. 2 lakhs only. So if we reduce the amount allotted to the Bureau of Commercial Intelligence by 60 thousand it will still leave a sum of nearly a lakh for that branch (1 lakh 57 thousand 5 hundred minus 60 thousand, equal to nearly a lakh). Further the actuals of 1921-22 of the Bureau of Commercial Intelligence as shown in the Demands is roughly 1 lakh 60 thousand whereas it has been raised to 8 lakhs 3 thousand in 1923-24 which is nearly double and the figure for pay of establishment, etc., was 47 thousand 9 hundred in 1921-22 which was raised to 96 thousand 7 hundred and fifty in the budget estimate of 1922-23 and which is now proposed to be raised to one lakh 82 thousand in 1923-24. So out of all these figures, if we reduce even this item of pay of establishment by 60 thousand rupees, it will still leave in the hands of Government 1 lakh 22 thousand which is also greater than the sum voted for last year.

Dr. Nand Lal: Sir, I have also got an amendment relating to this demand and happily I have now given some thought to and seen the literature on the subject. I have gone into it, so far as I could, and I have been driven to this conclusion that this Department is a most useful Department, so far as the commercial development of our country goes. I am sorry I sent in this amendment of mine before going thoroughly into the subject, and in the circumstances, which I have stated above, I do not now propose to move it. Besides I also feel constrained to oppose this amendment, now before the House, for various reasons. I would have put forward all these reasons had I the time, but unfortunately the Leader of this side of the House, I mean the Democratic Party, has prompted me to cut short, and therefore, to prove myself loyal to his command and in the interests of economy of time, I confine myself to this remark, that the arguments which have been advanced by my learned friend is untenable and if he would care to spend a little more time on the details, he will find it (his argument) to be incorrect. With these few words, I oppose this motion.

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: Sir, I should like to say a few words in continuation of what Dr. Nand Lal said. I don't think my Honourable friends on the left have realised the true figures. The Incheape Committee recommended that the two Departments be now combined into one and the budget estimate for the Commercial Intelligence Department and the Statistics Departments should be revised to a net figure of Rs. 2,00,000. The budget demand we have put up to the Assembly is for
Rs. 2,63,000; that is to say, we are Rs. 63,000 in excess of the figure suggested by the Incheape Committee. Like Dr. Nand Lal I regret very much the necessity of cutting down this Department. It is a very important Department for the Commerce Department of the Government of India. The Commerce Department of the Government of India spends most of the year at Delhi and Simla. It is quite essential that we should have a link between ourselves and the commercial centre of India, namely, Calcutta, and that is one reason why a commercial intelligence officer is extremely necessary. Then, again, that Commercial Intelligence Department exists mainly for the small manufacturer and small trader in India.
Since 1913-14 the letters received by the Commercial Intelligence Department has increased enormously. These are nearly all inquiries from small traders and small manufacturers in India asking to be put in touch with markets. We have built up quite a big organisation, a big connection with the commercial sections of the various Consular offices all through the Empire. Well, most of that work now, I am afraid, must go by the board. We could not show any direct return for the money we spent.
Nor are we going to show that, because it is not our business or our practice to follow up our advice. We merely try to bring these small men into touch with outside markets. And then, again, this Department supplies us with statistics we require, not only with sea-borne statistics but the other kinds of statistics. We shall have to restrict these statistics drastically and that is what we are now engaged in doing. But we recognise that in these days the most important thing is to balance the budget, and we are doing our very best to carry out the recommendations of the Retrenchment Committee. But, for the coming year, we have not been able to carry them out, and that is for various reasons. In the first place, we have to see which of our statistics we can get rid of with the least disadvantage.
In the second place, there is the usual lag to be accounted for. For instance, if this reduction were carried out, the first thing I should have to do would be to retrench at once and without any notice at all an officer who has served the Government of India faithfully for the last 30 years. As he is to retire in December, we propose either to retain him or to give him leave till December and I am quite sure that the House will want us to treat the men whose appointments are being retrenched with consideration of that kind. The House may rest assured that we are doing our best to carry out these retrenchments. If we have not been able to come up to the exact budget figure recommended by the Inchcape Committee, it is because we have not had time in a complicated Department fully to explore all the avenues. In these circumstances, I hope the reduction will not be accepted by the House.

[Mr. C. A. Innes.]

Mr. President: The question is:

"That the provision for Superintendent and clerks under sub-head Bureau of Commercial Intelligence under the head 'Commercial Intelligence' be reduced by Rs. 80,000."

The motion was negatived.

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary: The Honourable Mr. Innes joining forces with Dr. Nand Lal will vanquish anything. I would rather withdraw my motion which ran as follows:

"That the demand under the head 'Commercial Intelligence' (page 99) be reduced by Rs. 1,00,000."

Babu Braja Sundar Das (Orissa Divisions: Non-Muhammadan): Sir, the object of my moving this motion is this. The Retrenchment Committee have recommended a big cut in this very useful Department of the Government of India, and it is to bring to the notice of the Government my disapproval of the recommendations of the Inchcape Committee in this instance that I brought forward this amendment and I think that the Government of India should not agree to the recommendation of the Inchcape Committee at least in this direction and make this Department as useful as it could possibly be for the industrial and commercial development of India. With these few words, with a view to economy of time, I move my motion.*

Mr. K. Ahmed (Rajshahi Division: Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I wanted some information from the Department and I hope my Honourable friend, Mr. Innes, will enlighten me. Sir, I live very near this office called the Commercial Intelligence Department in Council House Street, Calcutta. I do not know much about it but I have seen that there are a number of rooms and a large number of European high officers going there. I do not see many Indians amongst the officers going there. I find some of them are in italics on page 99 under Demand No. 84—Commercial Intelligence and they are non-votable. But there are some items, for instance purchase of furniture, Rs. 1,500, and service postage and telegram charges, Rs. 15,000; I do not know what are the particulars—how many messages and of what description are sent that we shall have to incur Rs. 15,000 within 12 months. I do not know if there is any necessity for incurring the last item on the next page—page 100—other contingent expenditure—and there are also postage and telegraph charges. There are thus two items. I do not know what the second item for Rs. 5,000 is for. This is a second item on a similar subject giving another Rs. 5,000 after the first item of Rs. 15,000. I ask whether my Honourable friend Mr. Innes will enlighten us for the benefit of the country.

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: Sir, Mr. Ahmed has omitted to notice that this year we have combined the Department of Director of Statistics and the Commercial Intelligence Department, and no separate provision at all has been made this year for postage and telegram charges. It is all shown under the head Commercial Intelligence, Rs. 15,000. The reason why it is rather large is that the Commercial Intelligence Department is in the habit of sending Home a weekly cable to the city of London summarising the trade prospects in India. The discontinuance of that telegram is under consideration and Mr. Ahmed may rest assured that these telegram charges will be brought under very careful scrutiny in order to effect the retrenchment recommended by the Inchcape Committee.

Mr. K. Ahmed: What about purchase of extra furniture and other things I have stated?

The motion was, by leave of the Assembly, withdrawn.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That a sum not exceeding Rs. 2,13,000 be granted to the Governor General in Council to defray the charges which will come in course of payment during the year ending the 31st day of March, 1924, in respect of 'Commercial Intelligence'."

The motion was adopted.

DEMAND NO. 44—MISCELLANEOUS.

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: I move:

Khan Bahadur Sarfaraz Hussain Khan: I beg to move:

"That the provision under sub-head Miscellaneous and Unforeseen Charges under the head 'Miscellaneous' be reduced by Rs. 1 lakh."

My simple reason is that in the year 1921-22 the Miscellaneous and Unforeseen Charges came to Rs. 83,160. In the year 1922-23 the budget estimate was Rs. 3 lakhs. And it is again Rs. 3 lakhs for the coming year. I do not see why in the present financial condition it should not be reduced. It is stated here "Miscellaneous and Unforeseen Charges". Miscellaneous is a thing which covers many items. We do not know what the unforeseen charges are. It is in this view that I would like to move my amendment.

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: Sir, the actual expenditure in 1921-22 under this head was Rs. 60,45,000 including the non-votable items, against a figure of Rs. 47,45,000 which we ask for the coming year; that is a reduction of 13 lakhs. The Honourable Member's suggestion therefore that there has been an increase over the actual expenditure of 1921-22 is based on some misapprehension. As regards the details of this vote they are set out fairly fully on pages 149 to 152 of the book. They are, as the Honourable Member says, of a miscellaneous character. All the large provisions included are identified there. We are of opinion that the sum we ask for is necessary for the purpose of carrying on the ordinary administration. I do not think that because the Budget estimate for this current year is rather less than what we want now, it is possible to say that we can carry on next year on a figure less than the figure we have here put down. I have more than once informed the House that we have introduced estimates showing the lowest possible figure, in some cases I fear too low, on the expectation that we shall work down to it—I do not say that particularly applies to this estimate but I do not think that there is any item in this estimate on which we can save unless we cease to carry on some particular service, and if the House wishes for reduction I suggest it is only by pointing out the particular items on which we can say that in this case there is any possibility of saving money.

The amendment was, by leave of the Assembly, withdrawn.

Munshi Iswar Saran (Cities of the United Provinces: Non-Muham-madan Urban): Sir, I have the honour to move:

“That the provision for ‘Public Services Commission’ under head ‘Miscellaneous’ be omitted.”

So far as this question is concerned, the attitude of the Assembly is perfectly clear. We gave expression to our strong disapproval of the Commission on a previous occasion. It will be in the recollection of the House that there was no division called and I may take it that that motion was carried, if not unanimously, of course not unanimously, at least by an overwhelming majority. For the purposes of this motion I need not suggest for a moment that there may be no grievances of the Indian Civil Service or of any other service but we do most seriously and strongly object to the appointment which has been made I shall not say in defiance of but in opposition to the practically unanimous opinion not only of this Assembly but of Indians outside this Assembly. It is of no use for us to try to know what the view of the Government of India is in this matter because the Honourable the Home Member said on the previous occasion that he would not disclose the correspondence that has passed between the Government of India and the Secretary of State and the view that the Government of India held on this question. He said that any such disclosure would be against all precedent and against the usual practice of the Government of India. I only need refer to the assurance given by Government on the floor of this House so far as the question of emigration was concerned. Government said that it was trying to do all that it could to see that the position of Indians overseas was improved and that all their legitimate grievances were removed. Might I say in passing that it would have been well if Government had also on this occasion given us an indication of its own attitude in this connection but as it pleases Government not to disclose its own view, I do not think any useful purpose will be served by my asking Sir Malcolm Hailey to say what is the correspondence or what is the nature of the recommendation made by Government. Sir, I have not forgotten and indeed those Honourable Members who will support my motion have not forgotten that there is every chance, I had almost said certainty, that if this motion is carried, Government is going to restore this item. Sir, this is really a serious and important question and I can assure the House that those of us who have made up our minds to vote for this amendment have not done so without giving their best and most serious thoughts to this aspect of the matter. But, Sir, when we find that the Secretary of State and the authorities in England will persist in a course of action against the practically unanimous wishes of the people, then it is the clear and bounden duty of the House to say “No” to it. Our position is this. We will have nothing to do with the step that you have taken. The responsibility is yours. You do whatever you please. Sir, it is a subject on which one can speak very strongly but I refrain from doing so for the reason that our views have already been fully expressed on the last occasion and I dare not taken more time in view of the guillotine at five o'clock this evening. I therefore move this amendment and I hope that the House will by an overwhelming majority carry it, because any other course will be inconsistent with the position adopted by us on the last occasion and I say that it is up to us to be consistent and to show that as far as this Commission is concerned our dislike of it, our disapproval of it has not diminished one bit. My Honourable friend Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas was perfectly right the other day in what he said at the time of putting questions. “Is Government aware that our disapproval of this Commission continues undiminished?” I venture to say that Mr. Jamnadas gave expression to the views of a great many of us present in this Chamber and of a very large number of people outside it. I beg to move my amendment.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey (Home Member): It would be well I think that I should attempt to forestall other speakers, because I wish to put to the House certain considerations on this question; they may not perhaps affect what they feel on the subject of the Royal Commission, but I hope that they will affect the attitude of the House on this particular vote. Mr. Iswar Saran was correct enough in saying that the attitude of the House when we previously discussed this question was unmistakeable. It left us in no doubt of the fact that the majority of the House did then, and on that occasion, feel that a Royal Commission should not have been appointed. Now, let me disclaim any desire to go again into the merits of the question as it stood then. But we have since published the terms of reference. This much at all events you will allow me to say, that the terms of reference prove that those of us who then spoke in justification of the appointment of a Commission were correct in forecasting that it would have a much wider scope and one more interesting to India at large than was at the time anticipated in the press in India, and indeed was anticipated in this House. We are told, however, by Mr. Jamnadas and by Mr. Iswar Saran that since the publication of the terms of reference no change has taken place in the view held by the majority of the people on the subject of a Commission. That is not true of the press; there has been more than one signal convert, but on the facts let me say this that after all it might be worth while for us to pay something to get a solution of the following question:

“The possibility of transferring immediately or gradually any of their present duties and functions” that is, the duties and functions of the All-India Services,

“... to services constituted on a provincial basis.”

Believe me, if we get a satisfactory solution of even that question it would be very well worth the three lakhs we propose to spend on the Commission. Then again if we should get a satisfactory solution of the question of the recruitment of Europeans and Indians respectively, for which provision should be made in the constitution established by the Government of India Act, that again might from any point of view be worth very much more than the three lakhs we propose to spend. Now, that is as much as I shall say on the merits of the question, for I feel strongly, that everything that has been said here on the merits of the question itself has found its answer, and an ample answer in the terms of reference.

But, I wish to put another aspect of the case to the House, more appropriate to the occasion. We are preparing a Budget in which we place such expenditure as we believe to be necessary and unavoidable, and we ask the House to vote supply accordingly. In the process of discussing the demands for supply, the House on many occasions points out to us directions in which it thinks that the whole or a part of that expenditure could be avoided and other expedients adopted; in other words, it indicates directions in which money might be saved; and if it fairly convinces itself that money can be so saved, it is entitled to demand that a reduced provision should be made in our account. But here we have a case in which we know that the expenditure must be incurred. The House may say that they regret it, and that they would very much rather that it had not come about; they may reiterate that they would have preferred a different form of inquiry to solve their problems, which they admit require solution; nevertheless they know as well as we know that this expenditure cannot now be avoided. They may not like the origin of the Commission; but they must recognize the fact that under the orders issued by His Majesty's Government the Commission will be appointed, and has to be financed. Now, when we are faced with unavoidable expenditure of this type, can we reasonably refuse supply for it? If supply is refused, it simply comes to this, that though there is no provision in our accounts, yet the money must be spent and the House will be in the position of refusing to allow the provision in our Budget of expenditure for the avoidance of which they can suggest no practical expedient. It is not, therefore, on this occasion a mere question of expression of opinion, or, if I may put it that way, of resentment; on this occasion, it is merely a question of provision of money for unavoidable expenditure. May I take a domestic analogy? Nobody likes paying income-tax. There are few people who show a glow of satisfaction when they receive their income-tax returns. And yet in drawing up your domestic budget, would you allow your dislike of the tax to prevail to such an extent that you would refuse to take cognisance of the fact that you had to pay? Would you arrange the scale of your expenditure on the supposition that this demand should not be made and therefore would not be met? That is an exact enough parallel.

Dr. H. S. Gour: Do votable items of the Budget stand on that analogy?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: Though this is a votable item, it is clearly enough unavoidable, and I say it is not a reasonable attitude for this House to take up that it ought not to be included in the account. Taking the matter on a broad and common-sense view, I say that in these circumstances it is not possible in reason to refuse, merely on a point of dislike, to allow this item a plea in the Budget. If it is a question of expressing feeling that has already been taken, here we are merely in a question of providing money for unavoidable expenditure. Indeed, whatever I may feel as to the wisdom of the former vote taken by the House, I can go so far as to say that by allowing this item to stand it does not in any sense whatever commit itself to any change of its feelings on the subject of the Royal Commission. I have myself every confidence that when that Commission is appointed, when the House sees its personnel, when it gets to work, a great change of feeling will take place. I remember well the criticisms in this House on the subject of the Inchcape Committee; I remember how in Simla I was made the target of questions and objections regarding its composition, and regarding its sphere of operation. The attitude now is completely changed; there are few who do not welcome its results. I believe myself that the House will in time come to welcome the results obtained by the recommendations of this Royal Commission, but for the present I confine myself to saying this, that by allowing this item to stand in the Budget, the House does not necessarily indicate to be public that those who have before been opposed to its appointment have changed their view. And the House can therefore, in spite of what Mr. Iswar Saran said, with perfect consistency with its former opinion, allow this item to stand.

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas: Sir, it is really a matter of regret to me that in this respect I cannot agree with the views expressed by my Honourable friend Sir Malcolm Hailey. There was a little bit of heat shown yesterday by some speakers, and in answering the arguments advanced, my Honourable friend Sir Malcolm Hailey refused to accept as a compliment the statement that nothing was meant against the individual Members of Government. I want the Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey to believe me when I say, and I say it in all sincerity, that in opposing this grant of 3 lakhs of rupees for the Public Services Commission we have nothing absolutely to say against not only the personnel of the present Executive Council, but also against the Government of India as it is at present constituted. But despite all that my Honourable friend has said in support of the Assembly voting a grant of Rs. 3 lakhs, I feel convinced that the Assembly will be stultifying itself if it takes any other course except the only consistent course it can take, and that is, it should refuse to vote this sum of three lakhs. My Honourable friend says, "You have already expressed your opinion, you condemned the appointment of the Royal Commission, now when it comes to voting the money, even if you vote this money your opinion will be on record that you have condemned the appointment of the Commission." Let us consider what that means, that when it came to expressing your view with regard to the appointment of the Commission in words, in talk, you were prepared to condemn it, but when you were called upon by the exercise of the power that is vested in you to mark your approval or disapproval of the step taken by His Majesty's Government, you failed to put your intention into practice,—you refused to exercise the vote that you had, and you voted away the country's money for the appointment of this Commission. Is this House prepared to place itself in this stultifying position? After all it is not the talk that counts, it is the exercise of the power that you have over money, although in a limited sense, that is of real significance; and the only significance that will be attached to our inconsistent attitude on this occasion will be that perhaps the terms of reference announced later on by His Majesty's Government have won a few votes from the other side to the side of the Commission. If you analyse the speech of the Honourable the Home Member, you will find that the danger is great. The Honourable the Home Member has referred to the terms of reference. He has expressed his own opinion that the terms of reference are wide enough, that they are wider than was contemplated by the Members of this Assembly. If we took a different attitude from what we took when we were discussing the question of adjournment I believe that the interpretation of that attitude will be this that, having seen the terms of reference, we have changed our opinion and veered round to the view that the appointment of the Commission is not only necessary but wise. I say that, if this House is prepared to endorse that opinion, it is entitled to vote these Rs. 8 lakhs; but if the House, in spite of the publication of the terms of reference, sticks to its opinion that the Commission is not necessary, that the appointment of the Commission is not wise, and that the Commission is being appointed in the teeth of the opposition of the sensible element of the people of this country, then this House can take no other step than to refuse to vote the Rs. 8 lakhs that are asked for. What will be the effect? The Honourable the Home Member says that the expenditure is unavoidable and that, therefore, you have to vote it. How is it unavoidable? The House has the power to vote this money. If we refused to vote it, if events took their natural course, this Commission would, even at this stage, not be appointed. But I can see what the Honourable Member means. He means that, His Majesty's Government having appointed this Commission, even though the House refused to vote the money, the money will be provided by the only course that is open to His Excellency the Governor General to take, namely, by certifying and restoring the grant. Well, Sir, if His Excellency the Governor General and the Government of India are prepared to take that course in the teeth of the opposition of not only this House but also, if I may say so, in the teeth of the opposition of the whole of the people of this country, let the responsibility of doing so rest on their shoulders and not on our shoulders. We are here, after all, to represent our constituents and are responsible to them. How can we take any course which, in our honest opinion, is not calculated to do good to the constituents whom we represent here. If you do not agree with our opinion, and if you think that this is an item which needs to be restored by the extraordinary power that is vested in His Excellency the Governor General, you are free to do so, but you will do it on your own responsibility and you will not throw the responsibility on our shoulders. I ask the House to adopt the only course that this House in consistency and out of self-respect can adopt, namely, to refuse to vote the grant.

Lieut.-Colonel H. A. J. Gidney (Nominated: Anglo-Indian): Sir, I admire the man who has the courage of his own conviction and holds it. But after we have heard what the Honourable the Home Member has said, I do not admire the courage of my Honourable friend Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas in upholding his former conviction and opposing this motion. When this subject was discussed some weeks ago in this House, I think I was the only member who supported the appointment of a Royal Commission. Sir, I have got the permission and the support of the Leaders of many minority communities in this Honourable House in what I intend saying now, in so much that we support the appointment of this Royal Commission to India. Sir, when I last supported this, Mr. Jamnadas got up and twitted me for suggesting that it was quite possible that one of the terms of reference of this Commission would be to consider further Indianisation of the services. It might have seemed to Mr. Jamnadas an absurd suggestion but it was quite a possible one, and I repeat in the hope that it might tempt Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas to agree to this Commission; though I see he is still determined to oppose it.

The Honourable the Home Member has told us, in fact most Members of the House have already seen, the terms of reference; and no one here, I am sure, will doubt that they are very wide in nature and include many important matters. In fact, it embraces more subjects than we originally thought the Commission would do and I am not at all sure, Sir, that it may not lead to expedition in Indianisation of the services, to use the word 'Indianisation' in a very generic sense.

Mr. N. M. Samarth (Bombay: Nominated Non-Official): Including Anglo-Indians!

Lieut.-Colonel H. A. J. Gidney: Yes, including Anglo-Indians. Sir, when this Royal Commission was formerly discussed, pointed and repeated reference was made and quite rightly made regarding the I. C. S. amongst whose members great uncertainty exists regarding their future. There is no doubt, Sir, that the I. C. S. man who enlisted in 1913 does not like the India of 1923. There is also no doubt, Sir, that the India of 1923 does not like and does not much want the I. C. S. man of 1913. But the I. C. S. man who comes to India from 1923 onwards wants to know what India will be like in 1929 or 1933, because he wants to know what his terms of appointment will be. There is no doubt, Sir, that the Indian Civil Service is to-day not recruiting the type of man it did originally, and it is a doubtful matter whether it would not be better to let India recruit the best of her own men instead of the third or fourth rate men from England.

This Commission will also consider the advisability of short service for future I. C. S. appointments so that India can, in its transitional stage, still get the best that England can give her for the administration of this country. Now, Sir, the Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey referred just now to the advisability or possibility of provincialising all the Imperial Services and which I think every Member of this House was pleased to hear though Mr. Jamnadas called it a "bait." In this Honourable House we hear a lot said about the Services not being properly Indianised or not being done at a quick enough pace. Well, here is a Commission that will possibly help you in getting a quicker pace on—or at least, in provincialising the various services; and yet we hear Honourable Members objecting to this Commission.

Well, Sir, whatever the composition of this Committee is—I however hope the minority communities are represented on it—I trust that one of the subjects that will be seriously and thoroughly discussed will be communal representation in the various services. This I submit should constitute one of its most important terms of reference, and on this matter alone I feel sure this Commission will be welcomed by every member in this Honourable House who belongs to a minority community or to a politically backward community.

Mr. P. S. Sivaswamy Aiyer (Tanjore cum Trichinopoly: Non-Muhammadan Rural): I have had very considerable difficulty in making up my mind on this question, which is one upon which it is by no means easy to come to a conclusion. At the outset I should like to state that I am by no means enamoured of this machinery of a Royal Commission which the Secretary of State has proposed to set up for the purpose of enquiring into the questions indicated in the terms of reference. That does not mean that I ignore the existence of grievances on the part of members of the Indian Civil Service regarding their condition. It does not mean that I admit that there is no ground for an enquiry. I should have very much preferred any enquiry of that sort to be conducted by a body appointed by the Government of India itself. There is a growing feeling of dislike of any dictation from outside India to the Legislature here in India; and there is a feeling that at the bottom of this decision to appoint a Royal Commission there is a certain amount of want of confidence in this Legislature. That accounts, I believe, for the feeling of irritation which has been displayed by the members of the Assembly. I should therefore have preferred to employment of some machinery which would not have offended the susceptibilities of this House. Now, Sir, with regard to this question of the grant for this body, two courses have suggested themselves to me as worth considering,—whether we should carry the disapproval that we expressed on the last occasion to the point of voting against the grant, or whether we should reaffirm our disapproval by giving an unmistakeable indication that we do not take any responsibility for the decision to impose this burden of three lakhs upon this country. I am aware of the existence of a strong feeling in the House against the allowance of this demand for the expenses of a Royal Commission; but at the same time I feel that we should not give any occasion to the Secretary of State to exercise his power of interference and suggest to the Government of India the restoration of the vote against our decision. That is a course which I dislike intensely and I should prefer to avoid giving any occasion for the exercise of that power of restoration of the demand over our heads. Again there is another circumstance which weighs with me to some extent, and that is, that the rejection of this demand may probably create an atmosphere of bitter prejudice against us in England. On the one hand consent to this demand will create prejudice against us in this country; on the other hand the rejection of this demand will probably create an atmosphere of very strong prejudice against us on Parliament and on public opinion in England. With all these various considerations present to my mind, the course which seems to me to be the best to adopt in the circumstances is to refrain from voting, leaving it to the official element in the Assembly to pass the demand on their own responsibility. If the non-official members of the Assembly as a body refrain from voting and make it clear that their abstention is due to the disapproval of the particular machinery which the Secretary of State has chosen to employ, I think it cannot be charged against us that we have changed our attitude or that we have in any indirect way expressed our approval of the appointment of this Royal Commission. Speaking for myself, I should rather refrain from voting than vote against the grant, and if other Members of the Assembly approve of my suggestion, I hope they will also refrain from voting, leaving it entirely to the officials to carry out the mandate of the Secretary of State.

Captain E. V. Sassoon (Bombay Millowners' Association: Indian Commerce): Sir, the feeling of the non-official portion of this House as regards this question of the Public Services Commission has been stated to be the willingness of India to look after her own services. I agree with that feeling. I think that we should look after our own services and that it should not be necessary for a Commission to be sent out from Home to put any grievances right. But, Sir, before we express our objections in any case,—shall I say very particularly and virulently against the appointment of this Commission,—we must first feel sure that we have done all that is possible in looking after our own services.

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas: We are ready to do it.

Captain E. V. Sassoon: Mr. Jamnadas says we are ready to do it. I ask, have we always done it? Now, Sir, I have an amendment later on in the paper on the question of the police which I will move if the guillotine does not fall before it comes up. I hold in my hand here a pamphlet which has been issued by the Indian Police Association and issued not in India, but in London. This pamphlet puts forward grievances which the Police state they are suffering under, and I must admit that on reading through the pamphlet and with my own very slight knowledge of the conditions in this country, I think there is a great deal to be said from their point of view. This pamphlet refers people desiring extra information to the Secretary in Pall Mall. Now why does the Indian Police Association find it necessary to state their grievances in London and not in Delhi? They say in their preface, "because they cannot obtain the redress by departmental action and they have no means of ventilating their grievances." Sir, this pamphlet reached me on last Saturday. I cannot help feeling that if it had been universally known that this Assembly was prepared to ventilate the grievances of any of the services, that before taking the trouble to circulate this pamphlet in London, we should have had these grievances put before Members of this Assembly. And, it is because there is widespread ignorance in the services in regard to this point, that they feel it necessary to go to the Secretary of State, and I think that it would be inadvisable for us to express any very violent opinion against the appointment of this Commission, because the supporters of this Commission might say: "If you had actually carried out what you say you are prepared to carry out, why do we have pamphlets like these circulated in London?" Sir, that is why I hope that there will not be a very violent expression of opinion as regards this Commission. But I equally hope that this Assembly will advertise as widely as possible that, if we have not ventilated the grievances of any of our services, it is not because we are not prepared to do so, and we would welcome any opportunity for doing if they will bring forward their grievances.

The Assembly then adjourned for Lunch till Fifteen Minutes Past Two of the Clock.

The Assembly re-assembled after Lunch at Fifteen Minutes Past Two of the Clock. Sir Campbell Rhodes was in the Chair.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: Sir, I was surprised to listen to the speech of my friend Captain Sassoon on this subject. He seemed to suggest that simply because some of the service men have chosen to ventilate their grievances in England, therefore, we must take it that they have no confidence in the Legislature and that we should abrogate our functions and proclaim to the world that it is better that some outside agency undertakes to redress their grievances. Sir, if this is to be carried to its logical extent, the Government of India in this country cannot be carried on for a minute; I am surprised that a shrewd business man like the Honourable Captain Sassoon should have indulged in an argument of that kind. Sir, so far as my Honourable friend Sir Sivaswamy Aiyer is concerned—he will pardon me for saying it—he seemed to be thinking aloud all the time that he was speaking and I doubt very much whether his thinking aloud had come to an end; and whether he had reached the stage of conclusion; he has not given any clear lead upon a matter of this kind. If he had been clear and had given his time and attention to the subject, I would be the first person to agree with him. But I am not convinced from the way he spoke that his thoughts had materialised and that he had come to any definite conclusion on a matter of such grave importance. Sir, I am under no illusion as regards the result of any adverse vote upon the Government in this Assembly. There is no doubt that the Viceroy would certify or restore; because a Commission has been resolved upon and it is only the question of personnel that remains to be settled. It is not to be expected that the Government of India would say "Find money in Parliament or somewhere else". They will have to find the money where the Governor General will have to certify. That is not the matter which concerns us. The question is, shall we be true to ourselves if after having passed a vote of censure the other day, we to-day say that we shall allow the Government to do what they like, and that we shall express no opinion upon the question at issue. As Mr. Jamnadas has pointed out, I think we would be stultifying ourselves if we take up that attitude. It is not a question of our being heroic. It is a question of our being true to ourselves and it is a question of dignity and self-respect after having passed the vote we did the other day. Sir, the Honourable the Leader of the House spoke about the merits of the case. I am not going into it, but may I ask Government what their feelings are on the subject? Having sent out the O'Donnell Circular and seeing that the present Commission will make it unnecessary to consider the replies to that Circular and to come to a decision, I ask what is their feeling in regard to this matter. Have they not been snubbed by the Home Government, and do they not owe it to themselves to resent this indignity which has been put on them? It is desirable that the Executive Government should have the confidence of the people and what confidence can the people repose in them when they find that every one of their acts is being turned down by an authority far away from India. I am anxious as far as possible to avoid a conflict with the Executive Government. I would have gone a great way to avoid that conflict, but, Sir, if it is a question of losing our own honour, losing our own dignity, I do not think that we should mind any conflict which may arise in the matter. A suggestion has been made that if we cut down a rupee from the whole demand we would be equally effectuating the purpose which we have in mind. With all deference to those from whom this suggestion has emanated I must respectfully demur to such a course. Sir, we already expressed our disapprobation of the idea of appointing a Commission when we moved for the adjournment of the House. We then unmistakably showed to the Government that we did not like the procedure adopted in England it was really a vote of censure that was passed. That has already been done. Now comes the question whether we should vote the money for a Commission which we do not want, which we have protested against; and this is the only opportunity we have of carrying out in practice the conclusion which we reached the other day. This is the occasion. The question of voting funds is entirely in our hands subject to any control as to certification which the Governor General in Council may possess. Now, are we going to be frightened by the fact that there is going to be certification? If we do that we will not be true to ourselves, and in order that we may be consistent and that the dignity of this House may be maintained I hope that the non-official Members of the House would stand by what they did on the last occasion and vote against this grant.

Mr. N. M. Samarth: Sir, I formally propose an amendment to the effect that the grant be reduced by one rupee.

In spite what has fallen from Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar that this would not mean our giving effect to our condemnation of the appointment of a Royal Commission in the teeth of the opposition of this House . . .

Munshi Iwar Saran: I rise to a point of order, Sir. No notice having been given of this amendment I beg to object to it.

Mr. N. M. Samarth: As to the point of order, having regard to what happened during the debate there is no notice required of an amendment to an amendment and I can propose it on the spur of the moment.

Mr. Chairman: It is objected to. I am afraid the Honourable Member is not in order.

Mr. N. M. Samarth: If that is so, I have no option but to oppose the view of those who are asking that the whole vote be disallowed. I may say that on the day the adjournment took place I voted with those who were in favour of the adjournment. At that time the terms of reference were in a state of flux. Now the terms of reference of that body are out. I am a robust optimist and not an impotent pessimist and I think that difficulties exist in order that they may be surmounted and not in order that you may be daunted by them. The terms of reference are there and they include to all intents and purposes the issues which were raised in what is known as the O'Donnell Circular. Is it possible that the Government here can determine the issues satisfactorily acting by themselves the issues which were raised in what is known as the O'Donnell Circular? It must be a body deriving its authority from Parliament in order that the ultimate decision of it may be binding both upon the Government of India and the Parliament itself. And nothing but a Royal Commission could really be appointed in order that those issues, namely, the issues involved in the increasing association of Indians in every branch of the administration may be satisfactorily decided. When the question of adjournment was moved, these terms were not before us and the terms now include this item. This is one of the principal items in the terms of reference. Another point to which the Honourable the Leader of the House referred is this. The question which has been agitating us ever so long is the question of the all-India services. The Members of those services go to the provinces. Take the Indian Medical Service, for instance. The Medical Department is a transferred department in a province. Now is that officer to be under the control of the Minister who is in charge of that department or is he not? All these questions will have to be gone into and the provincialisation of the different services will have to be determined. Take, for instance Bombay. Bombay is a comparatively rich province. It may afford to give higher salaries than Bihar and Orissa, or for the matter of that the Punjab or the Central Provinces may. We may engage our technical experts and our other Officers on any salaries that our resources can afford and we can progress. That is also a matter which will have to be decided. I do not think that those who say that we should be consistent are alive to the importance of the terms of reference as they are. Again, some think that nothing will come out of this Royal Commission. On the contrary, a man of my temperament says, "Very good, whatever the personnel may be men of my type and others of my type and of my way of thinking will go and fight our cause before that Commission and we shall present our case in the best possible way." Sir, this attitude of pessimism and importance is an attitude which does not appeal to me. As I have said, if you do not accept the reduction of the amount by one rupee, there is no course left for me but to vote for the grant. Now the position of Government is this and the position of this House is this. Whatever the view of the Government might have been at the time when the Commission was going to be appointed only with a view to inquire into the grievances of the Services, it must be said to the credit of the Government of India that they saw that the terms of reference must be widened and the terms have accordingly been widened. Now there is the grant of 3 lakhs, whether you pass it or not. Place yourselves in the position of Government. Do not divest yourselves of the responsibility of those who are in office. They have to find the money, willingly or unwillingly, volens volens, for the Commission which has been appointed by His Majesty's Government. What are they to do? You say you merely decline to grant it. By your declining to grant it, you are not going to do anything which will bring relief to yourselves but which will merely stultify the Government of India. I do not think it is practical politics to do anything of the kind and I, therefore, oppose this motion.

Sir Deys Prasad Sarvadhikary: Sir, I should have been pleased to follow Mr. Samarth, the whip of my party, to the Lobby, as is my duty—when I do not happen to feel the other way, I would have done so, if he had been permitted to move the proposed reduction of Re. 1. But that having been disallowed and he having expressed determination in the alternative of supporting the grant, his and my way lie apart in this matter. If the condemnation that could be conveyed by the reduction of a rupee is not allowable the House in my judgment has no other course left open but to oppose and solidly oppose this grant. I do not think, Sir, that the speech of the Honourable the Leader of the House or the early publication of the terms of reference have helped to clear up the situation at all. On the contrary, it has certainly added to my difficulties. If there had been a motion at the instance of the Governor General for increasing the sum provided (Rs. 3 lakhs) to the amount that the last Public Services Commission had cost, I should have understood the situation. Undoubtedly the terms of reference have been expanded and that itself carries with it the augmented difficulties of the situation. The expansion of the terms of references will not satisfy those for the removal of whose grievances the Commission was in the first instance conceived. We have had many warnings about that in the press that represents their views. They say if the scope of work of the Commission is going to be as wide as the terms of reference show and if the Commission is not coming to India till the next cold weather, they do not want to have anything to do with it but would prefer direct action that they contemplate. In the meantime we have had an expression of opinion from responsible men like Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar that when the Commission comes people should give it the widest possible berth. As I said on a previous occasion, I have no sympathy with that attitude, and when the Commission does come in spite of public opinion it will be up to us to give it all possible help. But that is another story. Sir, if the entire question of provincialization and Indianization of the services is to be taken up it will be a much larger work. The last debate on the subject here in this House must have helped in widening the terms of reference, which is a gain so far as it goes. If however all that is to be done, the somewhat sneering allusion of the Secretary of State or Under Secretary of State, I forget which, to Lord Islington's criticism as to the time likely to be taken by the Commission and the cost—the sneering reference to Oriental delay of the last Public Services Commission—no longer holds good. The time that will be taken, the money that will be spent, will be nearly as much as if not more than the Islington Commission cost and a large portion of the report of that Commission is now reposing on the upper shelf. There is no finality with regard to these Commissions. Commission after Commission comes; one recommends, the other condemns; Government criticises and defers action; those affected also criticise. I have not heard any reference to-day to what is the clear duty of the Government and I include the Secretary of State in that term,—under the Government of India Act. I do not want to minimise the value of what Captain Sassoon has brought to the notice of this House. All services are entitled to have their grievances looked into and redressed but the Government of India Act has provided a statutory remedy with regard to that, standing, permanent, lawful and legal—if one wants to distinguish the two things as I am told there was an attempt yesterday to do here. The Public Services Commission to be appointed under section 96C of the Government of India Act, shall according to its terms discharge in regard to recruitment and control of the Public Services in India such functions as may be assigned thereto by rules made by the Secretary of State in Council. All questions that possibly can arise and come before the Secretary of State can be provided for by the Rules. The terms of reference which have been somewhat inexplicably published long before the Commission is due to come, the contemplated Commission could probably discharge for the time being all the functions narrated there. But there will be no finality, I differ from Mr. Samarth that the findings of a body, say, like the Statutory Commission, would not find acceptance at the hands of those concerned. Well, if they do not accept what the Statutory Commission may do we are powerless. That is the only thing that the Government of India Act has provided for the purpose of meeting all contingencies and it has not yet been even tried. It is no good agitation being started by any Service without exhausting the remedies under the Act. The Royal Commission has been thought of as a passing remedy and is coming, no matter at what expense, no matter against what volume of public opinion. Though the terms of reference have been published the Commission is not coming out straightaway. So far as our finances are concerned, one might have waited till they right themselves and a supplementary grant might have been asked for when the Commission was about to start. Then again we do not know anything about the personnel of the Commission. That would be another determining element so far as the judgment of this House is concerned. Therefore we are not in the position in which the Assembly could be called upon to revise its decision and be asked to vote this amount at the present moment. Sir, we have been told that it will make a very bad impression about this Assembly in England if this grant is withheld. I doubt it. Moreover I suppose this will not be the first time that the Assembly will have taken responsibility with regard to that. Year before last the Lytton Committee was blocked. It was not a Royal Commission, but it was a Commission upon which the Secretary of State had set his heart. I am not complaining of that. The Commission could not come and instead we had Lord Lytton coming out to Bengal as Governor, which by itself is a net gain. But the point I want to make is so far as this Assembly is concerned, this will not be the first time when it has withheld a grant which the Secretary of State has wanted. We often hear about the likelihood of the certifying procedure and of the grant being restored. It is not for us to mention that; it is not for us to think of that. It is bad enough that the official Members have been reminding us about it. It is bad enough that they forget that it is not good form to remind the tribunal before which they are pleading of what the appeal Court is likely to do. If that was attempted in other tribunal, the visitation would be severe indeed. But we ourselves need not put that forward as a reason why what is considered wrong should be done. I do not want to withhold hospitality from anyone, but this stands on quite a different footing. If the Commission has to come, for certain purposes, and those do not happen to be purposes which this Assembly—as I gather from the speeches—is prepared to endorse, there can be no question of lack of a due sense of hospitality. If the other course of reducing a rupee is not open—and I myself should have been prepared to accept that course as giving expression to what we think in the matter—the only course left to the House is to vote against the grant and leave the authorities to take any steps they like.

(Several Honourable Members: "The question may now be put.")

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas: On a point of order, Sir. I was not here when the Honourable Mr. Samarth moved that a reduction of Re. 1 be made. As objection was taken to that amendment, I understand you ruled that out of order, Sir. May I point out, Sir, that in many instances in the course of the discussion on Demand for Grants the Honourable the President has after the discussion has gone on for some time allowed amendments for reduction of Re. 1 in order that discussion may be concentrated.

Dr. Nand Lal: I believe that my Honourable friend is asking the Chair to review the order. There is no rule for reviewing the order in the present circumstances.

Mr. Chairman: If it is the wish of any Members in the House that they should have the opportunity of considering this amendment, it is within the province of the Chair to allow it to be moved and discussed. If I can get any indication that there is a wish to move and discuss this amendment—which is not really a substantive motion—I am quite willing to allow the House to discuss it.

Dr. Nand Lal: Sir, there is no use in shutting our eyes to the facts and consequently, speaking for myself, I concede at once that the terms of reference, as we now see, are decidedly wider than we thought they were before. But I may say to Sir Malcolm Hailey that that wide character of the terms is not a complete answer to our exceptions which we very respectfully take to this Commission. Our objection is based on three grounds: firstly, that it is not the Government of India who desired it, it is not this country which required this Commission, but this is a Commission which has, I may submit with due deference, been hurled upon us; and, on principle, Sir, the people of this country are against it. The second ground is this, that we do not want it at all. We do not want a Commission. Had we wanted it, we would have put forward our petition, in that behalf, before the Government of India ourselves. The third ground on which we oppose it, is this that we are poor. In our present condition we cannot afford to spend the money. As you know, India has been renowned for a good many things, and one of those things is her hospitality. She will be ready to extend her hospitality, she will be ready to accord reception, but she feels very reluctant to afford that hospitality on this occasion. I do not agree with the Honourable Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas that since we have committed ourselves once, therefore, we are limited to-day. Again speaking for myself, if I were guilty of an error of judgment once and some fresh data is placed before me I shall be quite prepared to review that judgment. But no fresh data has been shown. no further evidence has been set before us, no new grounds have been set forth.

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas: I rise on a point of personal explanation. I never expressed my opinion on the merits; I only rose to a point of order with regard to the amendment.

Dr. Nand Lal: I have the greatest respect for the soundness of the opinion of Sir Sivaswamy Aiyer, but I am sorry I have to differ from him, and he will excuse me for that, and it will not minimise the force of my statement that I have got a genuine respect for his views. I differ from him. My own opinion is this that either we should vote for a thing or go against it. I have no faith in political jugglery, that we may reduce it by one rupee. We do not want it; we cannot afford to invite the Commission, therefore, why should we not, like straightforward men, go and say to the Government of India, "Well excuse us, we are not prepared to welcome this Commission." Now, Sir, a very forcible argument has been advanced on behalf of the Government, and that argument as usual emanated from our learned Leader of the House, I mean the Honourable the Home Member, "that after all this country will have to pay." "When you know you will have to pay, why don't you pay up sweetly?" My answer to that is this, if we make ourselves a party to such action we shall be considered guilty at the bar of the people of this country. What answer shall we give? If the Government of India is prepared to put that burden upon us, we shall have to pay, but we shall not be responsible for that; that payment will be due to our submission. But if the Government calls upon us to give our consent, we refuse and we refuse with the greatest possible respect. With these few remarks I very respectfully submit that this House will go against this Demand.

Mr. Harchandrai Vishindas (Sind: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I shall be very brief because so much time has been taken on this subject. There are some statements made which should not go unchallenged. I will first deal with Mr. Samarth. He first of all asked permission to move an amendment to reduce the demand by one rupee, which, was tantamount to a vote of censure against Government for making this demand. But when he found that it did not find favour with the House, he at once turned round and began to support the whole grant. It is therefore quite clear that he has been inconsistent. The points which have been made by those who are against the grant have not been at all sufficiently answered. One point is this; that it is the function of this Legislative Assembly, and of the Central Legislature to take action upon these questions and to take these questions into consideration, and that it was a great insult to this country and to this Assembly that an outside party should have made the appointment of this Commission. Then, Sir, with regard to what Captain Sassoon said that we have not done anything, the answer to that is who is responsible for that? Could not Captain Sassoon have tabled a Resolution that a Committee be appointed to go into these questions? Moreover that practically is a censure on the Government of India. It was up to the Government of India to appoint a Committee to go into all these questions. The reason why we say that this question should have emanated from some party here is that in that case we, the non-officials, would have been properly represented on this Committee, and the Committee appointed would have been a mixed one consisting both of officials and non-officials. That purpose has not at all been served by the appointment of this Royal Commission. At any time, it was up to any Member to move a Resolution for the appointment of a Committee; it was even up to the Government Members, the Home Member or anybody else, to move for the appointment of a mixed Committee of officials and non-officials.

One more point and I have done. Sir Sivaswamy Aiyer said that one of the reasons why we should vote this grant is that we shall be creating a feeling of bitterness in England if we do not. I think, Sir, that English feeling is already bitter against us on this point for the simple reason that we have already passed a vote of censure in the shape of a motion for adjournment; but I do not believe that that result will ensue. On the contrary, I think that John Bull is a fair and straightforward man, he is a strong fighter, and he would appreciate the fact that we have been consistent in our attitude. On the other hand, if we were now to vote this grant, we should be lowering ourselves in his estimation as he will say "Oh, these are weak-kneed, at one time they take a strong attitude, but afterwards they get frightened and cave in." Sir Sivaswamy Aiyer also said that if we did not vote the grant the amount would be provided by certification to avoid which we should vote for the grant. My answer to that is, that we are not afraid of certification. We have to express our own opinions and judgments without any thought of certification because otherwise we shall be laying ourselves open to the charge that we throw over our convictions for fear that our action might be modified or upset by the Government. Well, if we were to proceed on that hypothesis, I think we shall be unable to contest any of the demands made by Government. For that very reason we should insist upon our own opinions and our proper judgments being expressed. I say, if there is to be certification, so much the better. I welcome that because each time of certification there will be driven a further nail into the coffin of despotic Government.

(Cries of "Let the question be now put.")

Mr. Manmohandas Ramji (Indian Merchants Chamber and Bureau: Indian Commerce): Sir, after hearing all the arguments, I think that it would be better for this House to take some middle course. If we reduce this grant, by 3 lakhs, the suggestion will be that, as we have on a former occasion voted against the appointment of this Commission, therefore, in order to keep up our position, we have voted against this grant. Well, Sir, if there was a possibility that, if we reduced this grant by 3 lakhs, the amount would be reduced, and kept there, it would be all right; but that is not going to be the case. There is some other authority which can restore this grant. Now, why go to that extent when we can avoid that position and keep up our own position by not stultifying ourselves in joining to accept this grant? Therefore I propose that this grant may be reduced by Rs. 10, and thus show our disapproval.

(Honourable Members: "The question be now put.")

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: The House must allow me one observation. I do not think that I could allow it to proceed to a vote on this question without calling attention to two or three remarks which have fallen from the speakers in the course of the discussion.

It has been sought to create prejudice against this Commission on a ground which I confess to me is both novel and astonishing. It is said that it has been appointed—and I quote the exact words—"appointed by an outside authority." It is the first time that I have heard that a Commission appointed by His Majesty the King at the suggestion of the Cabinet of Great Britain is a Commission which has been appointed by an outside authority to India.

Then it is said that the course which has been taken prevents an examination of outstanding questions on the services by officials and non-officials. That again is a most astonishing statement. Till you see the composition of the Commission, what right has any Member here to prejudge and prejudice it by a statement of this nature?

It is said that Government must take the responsibility, and if this expenditure is reduced the Governor General must certify it. The correct word, of course, is "restore" and the correct agency is not the Governor General but the Governor General in Council; but that is by the way. But the ground on which that statement was made is this—that if certification or restoration is resorted to, it will be welcomed because it is a fresh nail in the coffin of a bureaucratic Government. Is that so? Or is it an invalidation of the principle for which most Members of this House have stood, namely, the Reforms? I ask you to judge what is the exact effect of such a process before you welcome it, as Mr. Harchandrai Vishindas has so lightly done. I return to my original point, that in a proposal of this kind, which is for removing a definite provision from the Budget, you must decide not on a question of like and dislike, but on another consideration—whether your account will be correct if you omit it. There is no escaping this expenditure, as the House well knows. It must then find a place in the accounts; there is no avoiding that; and to seek to cut it out of the accounts would be simply to attempt to render those accounts to that extent inaccurate. You will not gain in any way in the expression of your resentment or your feeling on this subject by removing from your Budget expenditure which must be incurred and for which somehow or other provision must be made. That was my point, I avoided any discussion—and I am glad to say the House for the most part has also avoided discussion—of the merits of the Royal Commission. We are addressing ourselves to the Budget, and I ask you to decide the question purely from the Budget point of view.

(Honourable Members: "The question be now put.")

Mr. Chairman: The question is:

"That the question be put."

Before I put it, I would like to say there have been indications from several parts of the House that they wish Mr. Samarth's amendment to be put before the House and therefore, if this motion is carried, I shall put that amendment first. The question is:

"That the question be now put."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Chairman: Order, Order. The question is:

"That the provision for 'Public Services Commission' under head 'Miscellaneous' 3 p.m. be reduced by Re. 1."

The motion was adopted.

(At this stage Sir Campbell Rhodes vacated and Mr. President took the Chair.)

Mr. Lachmi Prasad Sinha: Sir, the Retrenchment Committee's findings are that the receipts in 1922-23 including the grant of the Rajkot College are expected to exceed the expenditure by Rs. 12,000 and the College authorities moreover gave the Committee to understand that the college is going to be self-supporting—vide Retrenchment Committee report, page 192.

The Honourable Mr. A. C. Chatterjee (Education Member): May I rise to a point of order, Sir? The Honourable Member is referring to the demands for grants under Education. I do not think it has been moved yet.

Rai Bahadur Lachmi Prasad Sinha: Are we not dealing with Education? If not, I am sorry, Sir, that I moved my motion under a misapprehension.

Mr. President: We are now under the head Miscellaneous.

The question is:

"That a reduced sum not exceeding Rs. 18,23,000 be granted to the Governor General in Council to defray the charges which will come in course of payment during the year ending the 31st day of March, 1924, in respect of 'Miscellaneous'."

The motion was adopted.

DEMAND NO. 27—EDUCATION.

The Honourable Mr. A. C. Chatterjee: Sir, I beg to move:

"That a sum not exceeding Rs. 2,49,000 be granted to the Governor General in Council to defray the charges which will come in course of payment during the year ending the 31st day of March, 1924, in respect of 'Education'."

I may state, Sir, that the grant originally entered in the Demands for Grants was Rs. 2,80,000 and a reduction of Rs. 31,000 has now been effected.

Rai Bahadur Lachmi Prasad Sinha: Sir, the Retrenchment Committee's findings are that the receipts in 1922-23 including the grant of the Rajkot College are expected to exceed the expenditure by Rs. 12 thousand and the College authorities moreover gave the Committee to understand that the college is going to be self-supporting (Retrenchment Committee report, page 192) so their final recommendation was not to make any provision for this college whereas Government in their Budget, 1923-24, demands from us a sum of Rs. 28 thousand for the College. Further on, so far as the Aitchison College is concerned, the Committee remarked that the finances are in an unsatisfactory condition. It also observed that question of discontinuing the grant is being considered. But, Sir, here also a sum of Rs. 28 thousand is being demanded from us. In the first case there appears to be no necessity for having any grant in aid for the Rajkumar College considering that it is self-supporting. Even if it were not I think this expenditure should come from those who are directly benefited by this College. So far as the second one is concerned, it has been pointed out by the Retrenchment Committee that only 16 per cent. of the students are from Indian States and the rest from the Punjab. So here also the expenditure should come from the Indian States where students are directly benefited as well as from the Punjab Local Government. In the circumstances, Sir, I think my motion for reducing this 56 thousand rupees is not unreasonable one. Further though in the Revised Schedule we find a cut of 81 thousand from the total budgeted figure for the head of Education, we do not know how and from what other sub-heads it is going to be made up of:

"That the provision for charges under sub-head Chief's Colleges under the head 'Education' be omitted."

Mr. Denys Bray (Foreign Secretary): The Honourable Member I am sure on reflection will realise that it is hardly practicable suddenly to withdraw subventions of long standing which meet a considerable percentage of the cost of these institutions. What Government have already done is this. We have reduced the grant to the Rajkot College from Rs. 25,000 to Rs. 10,000 and the grant to the Aitchison College, Lahore, from Rs. 28,000 to Rs. 15,000. The Bombay Government hold out hopes that by next year it may be possible to make the Rajkot College self-supporting, and in response to a special appeal a substantial increase of contributions from the States to the Aitchison College is expected in the coming year. Honourable Members may say that the States should contribute themselves. My answer is that the States do contribute and contribute generously. There is not one of these institutions—and I am now speaking of the Chief's Colleges in general—which would have come into existence had it not been for the support of the Princes, and there is not one which would continue in existence if that support were withdrawn. I would ask the House to reflect what the result would be if we effected an immediate withdrawal of these grants to these colleges. (A Voice: "It will be good to the country.") As I have said, we are doing what we can to reduce them. We have already reduced them by more than 50 per cent. If we reduced the whole of these subventions of ours all of a sudden, we should be putting these Colleges in a position of great difficulty, and I venture to think that our action would be regarded as, what on the Foreign side of the Foreign and Political Department we would call, an unfriendly act. British India, after all, is surely interested in the better education of the Princes and their Thakurs and Sardars. That statement no one I venture to think, will deny. And British India is interested also in the maintenance of cordial relations with the States. And I think if the House will throw out this motion their action will be regarded as an olive branch and as an earnest desire of this House to maintain those friendly relations between British India and the Indian States, which is so essential to the well-being of India as a whole.

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary: I strongly oppose this motion, not because it is necessary so much to extend the olive branch Mr. Bray has spoken of (though I fully believe in it), but I oppose it on larger issues. In the first place not a pice that can be avoided ought to go out of the Educational Budget. The cuts cannot be assented to by any one determined on advancing the interests of the people as a whole. I think Educational grants ought to be increased. I want to draw the attention of the Government of India to this need and taking a leaf out of Mr. Innes' book (wrong book to begin with, but there are right pages in it), to make a stand and a determined stand to see that nothing in the way of education and allied nation-building subjects should suffer.

In the second place, the Indian Princes are an integral and a very important part of the whole of Indian polity. I believe it would be a mistake to interfere in the least degree with the better education of our Indian Princes. Surely they would pay more if they are obliged to but that is not the point. We want to be in touch with their education, in seism of their education; and above all we want to see that their education is a little more Indianised. We want to Indianise the services. Indianise some of our own people. We want also to Indianise our own Princes. We have been trying elsewhere to suggest that education in India should be self-contained as far as possible, there should be greater co-ordination of educational works. The education of Indian Princes should also be self-contained as far as possible. I had occasion of getting into touch with some of these Colleges like the Aitchison College. They are doing excellent work and I shudder to think of what would happen if the education of those who come under the influence of those Colleges were neglected. There is a great deal of room for improvement for which means should be forthcoming. I think that we should mark our sense of appreciation of the work that is done there by withholding support to a motion like this. I propose to speak later on other educational grants and then I shall go into the general question of Education.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That the provision for charges under sub-head Chiefs' Colleges under the head 'Education' be omitted."

The motion was negatived.

Dr. Nand Lal: Sir, I move:

"That the provision for charges in connection with inspection of Chiefs' Colleges under the head 'Education' be omitted."

As you know, Sir, education is a department which moulds the character of the people. It is a nation-building department and if any department renders the best service to the country, it is, to my mind, the Educational Department. The reason why I put forward this amendment is this. That I should like to know from the Honourable Member in charge of this Department as to what is the specific charge in regard to the maintenance of the Chiefs' Colleges. If the Honourable Member will be able to let me know the specific charge exclusive of other items then I shall not press my amendment at all.

The amendment was, by leave of the Assembly, withdrawn.

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary: I move:

"That the demand under the head 'Education' be reduced by Rs. 100."

Sir, this is an Irish method of reduction for which I move because I want more. And I want to say generally that I hope the Education Member of the Government will make a strong stand and oppose all avoidable educational cuts. I do not now want to go into details. There is a Departmental Committee attached to the Department and I think the Committee ought to be consulted before cuts are assented to. Without betraying official secrets, I understand that there is a difference of opinion with regard to the matter. In order that the Department may be strengthened and public opinion consulted, I hope the Departmental Committee will be consulted before these cuts are made.

The Honourable Mr. A. O. Chatterjee: Sir, as the Honourable Member has said that he does not really want any reduction in this head, I hope he will withdraw his motion. As regards consulting the Departmental Committee, I shall do my best to consult that Committee if there is time to do so before decision is come to on any points connected with reductions under this head. But, as the Honourable Member will see, the only reductions so far as this head is concerned which have been proposed and have been accepted relate to the Chiefs' Colleges.

The motion for reduction was, by leave of the Assembly, withdrawn.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That a sum not exceeding Rs. 2,49,000 be granted to the Governor General in Council to defray the charges which will come in course of payment during the year ending the 31st day of March, 1924, in respect of 'Education'."

The motion was adopted.

DEMAND No. 49—DELHI.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: I move:

"That a sum not exceeding Rs. 28,33,000 be granted to the Governor General in Council to defray the charges which will come in course of payment during the year ending the 31st day of March, 1924, in respect of 'Delhi'."

The House will see that the original budget demand was placed at Rs. 30,58,000 as against Rs. 33,68,000 in the revised estimate for 1922-23. That therefore was in itself a reduction of over 3 lakhs of rupees. From that Rs. 30,58,000 we have further proposed to reduce Rs. 2,25,000, making a total reduced demand of Rs. 28,33,000. Of the Rs. 2,33,000 about Rs. 1,45,000 have been deducted under general heads, Police, General Administration, Contributions and the like, and the remainder has been effected under Education, Public Health and Medical.

The Honourable Mr. A. O. Chatterjee: Sir, as I understand that a number of Members in this House are interested in the question of the grants for education under the head 'Delhi', I may be permitted to explain that there has been a reduction proposed of Rs. 75,000 on the grants as put forward in the Blue Book. The whole of this sum is proposed to be cut from the grants for the Colleges and secondary schools in Delhi. As matters now stand, it is not proposed to make any cut out of the grant to Delhi University. But if it is the wish of this House that any cut should be made from the grant for the Delhi University, then one of these motions that are now down on the paper could with your permission be utilised for giving expression to the views of the House.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: I am moving, Sir, one of the motions* standing in the name of Dr. Gour. It is felt by my friends on this part of the House that not a pie should be cut down from the grant to the Delhi University. Sir, we are all agreed that there must be a central institution like the University, in a place where the Capital of India is situated, and it would be a very unwise thing to cut down any portion of the money which has been sanctioned for carrying on the work of that institution. Sir, it has been suggested by the Inchcape Committee that the grants to the colleges should be cut down. We on this part of the House resent any such reduction being made, because we think that in these matters, in the case of nation-building departments, no attempt should be made to cut down even a single rupee from the grant which was already promised. Under these circumstances, Sir, I oppose the motion which is made, namely, to cut down the original grant by a large sum of money, Rs. 80,000 which, apparently under the revised grant will be taken away from the educational institutions in this province. Sir, I have spoken, because it is the desire of my friends on this side of the House that there should not be very many speeches. I believe I am expressing the sense of the whole of the non-official Members on this side of the House when I say that there should be no reduction whatsoever in regard to the grant to the colleges and the University.

Maulvi Abul Kasem (Dacca Division: Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I heartily support the observations made by my distinguished and Honourable friend, Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar, that there should be no reduction in one form or other from the grants made to Education in general or to educational institutions in particular. We, Sir, the people of India, not of the Delhi province, welcome the establishment of a University at Delhi and we fully appreciate the action of the Government in establishing a University in the Imperial City and headquarters more or less of the Central Government, and we are grateful to Government for that. But, Sir, in this connection, I have been charged to make a little observation of my own for the consideration of the authorities of the University whoever they may be, official or non-official. Sir, when the University Bill was presented to this House, there was a provision—a meagre provision no doubt—for the representation of the members of the Muhammadan community on the University itself. But, Sir, the Select Committee which met discussed this. I happened to be one of the members of the Select Committee and I had the privilege of suggesting that in the constitution itself it should be laid down that a certain proportion of Muhammadans should be on the Senate. Unfortunately, Sir—and I regret it very much—a House where the Muhammadan element was in an absolute and hopeless minority, not only threw out the proposal which was in the original Bill as drafted by the Government draftsman, but also my recommendation on the subject, and the result has not been satisfactory from a Muslim point of view. Out of the 85 members of the Senate, I do not know . . .

* "That the provision under the sub-head 'Education—University' under the head 'Delhi' (page 206) be reduced by Rs. 1.

[Maulvi Abul Kasem.]

Mr. President: I ask the Honourable Member whether in order to satisfy the grievance which he is putting forward legislation would be necessary or not.

Maulvi Abul Kasem: No, it is not for legislation, Sir. The University is not yet complete. Out of 85 members of the Senate there are only 9 Muhammadans and that is a grievance, Sir, and there are other matters also. The Muslim public, and the educated public in particular, feel that their interests are not properly considered and are not safeguarded. I hope, Sir, that in making the nominations to the remaining seats to the Senate and also in other matters, the learned Vice-Chancellor and His Excellency the Chancellor will take these matters into consideration. But before I sit down I shall be failing in my duty if I do not observe that the learned Vice-Chancellor of the University has been instrumental and sympathetic in securing one or two Muhammadan members for the Senate, and I appreciate that thankfully. But the constitution itself is bad, but whatever it is, I hope some remedy will be found for a proper representation of Muhammadans and for the safeguarding of Muhammadan interests. Sir, the Muhammadans are backward in education and I think they need a helping hand to help them through. My learned friend Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar said that education was a department for nation-building. If you have to build a nation, you have to build each component part of the nation before it can be built.

Khan Sahib Maulvi Abdul Quadir (Central Provinces: Nominated Non-Official): Sir, being interested in matters educational, I rise to say a few words on this occasion as it grieves one to see that efforts have been made to effect economy under the head Education, due perhaps to the suggestions in the report of the Incheape Committee to the effect that there was no need for Delhi University under the present financial stringency, as university education was available for the people of Delhi Province elsewhere in their neighbourhood, and hence the University scheme may be reconsidered. Lord Incheape's Committee, Sir, has no doubt done immense good to India by recommending cuts in various other departments, but it has done incalculable harm to the people of this country by suggesting savings under the head Education. If anything is needed for India, education is the thing which is most needed for her. Without education in its proper sense, it is impossible for her to make any headway towards the realisation of the object of the Reforms Scheme. It is not possible to have proper education without establishing a University in every big and important city throughout India. Fortunately the Delhi University has been formed and is put in working order and now to think of setting at naught the whole edifice by refusing to grant its working expenses and the grants of the college affiliated to it or to try to cut down anything from the above grants is not in my humble opinion, to say the least of it, a sound principle. It practically amounts to acting like a gardener who tills and prepares his ground, plants fruit trees in it, waters and nurtures them till they are in full blossom, and when they are about to bear fruit, he allows them to go dry because he experiences some difficulty in watering them for the time being and because he can import his fruit from elsewhere. I would appeal to this Honourable House to find out means to spend more upon the education of our countrymen, rather than think of curtailing the expenditure under the head of Education. Universities do not often come into existence and easily, but if they once come into existence, it is our bounden duty to maintain them at any cost. If the financial conditions are not favourable this year, let us hope we shall be having a surplus budget next year or the year after next. We can ill-afford to live year after year upon deficit budgets. If we have the good of our country at heart, we must reduce our expenditure under other heads and make ever-increasing provision for education. Without education we cannot prosper. The more we spend upon education the greater will be our progress towards the attainment of our national aspirations. The solution of the communal problem also lies in the spread of education broadcast. It depends upon one community understanding the interests of the other communities properly and thoroughly. Till then it is not possible to do away with the differences that exist between community and community and give rise to internecine disputes in time and out of time. Besides that, education spreads knowledge and has got the inherent property of increasing the more you spend it as somebody has aptly said:

Vidya dhana sub dhanan te sant kahat sardar

Kharche se kuchh ghatat nahin din din hoya udar

Of all the wealth in the world the wealth of education is the superiormost, because, unlike the other heads it increases by expenditure and does not decrease. I strongly deprecate any attempt whether it be on the part of Government or on the part of any individual Member of this House to effect retrenchment under the head of education. It will be a bad day, Sir, for India when this Honourable House will decide upon retrenchment under Education. I oppose the amendment.

Mr. Mahmood Schamnad Sahib Bahadur (West Coast and Nilgiris: Muhammadan): Sir, I oppose any grant being made to the Delhi University. All around Delhi we have got several Universities and there is no justification for a separate University for Delhi as it is and in the present circumstances. The idea of a University for Delhi was conceived with the object of giving equal facilities to all communities and so the Delhi University Bill was drafted with a provision to give separate representation to Muhammadans; but, when it came out from the Select Committee, that clause was omitted by the advice of men like Dr. Gour, who are enemies of communal representation. And now, Sir, the Retrenchment Committee also has very rightly remarked that the idea of a University for Delhi was premature. If a University in the Capital City be started without a proper representation of the important minor communities, it will spread discontent and will also be very prejudicial to the spread of education among these communities. So I say the amount of Rs. 40,000 may be spent for education in general.

With these remarks, I resume my seat.

Dr. Nand Lal: Sir, I am in favour of the maintenance of the Delhi University; my belief is that it will, one day, prove a very useful University, and I entertain a hope that pupils from various Universities will flock to it. The beginnings of the Delhi University have encouraged me to hope that the day will come when this Delhi University will be considered one of the most prominent Universities in the whole of India. All colleges and other educational institutions may be helped, whether they are medical institutions, whether they are arts institutions, whatever institutions they are, in connection with the Educational Department, may be fully supported, namely, all colleges and all schools here deserve support. I am not standing here to offer any adverse remarks, but I am bound to give a response to the expression of opinion which, whether accidentally or designedly, has been made by my distinguished friend the Honourable Mr. Abul Kasem. He says Muhammadan interests may be safeguarded. May I remind him that Education itself is a department in which we should not think of this caste or creed. Education itself is so sacred a thing that it should not be subject to communal representation. We Hindus would welcome Muhammadans; they are our brethren. We shall be very glad to see the Court is decorated by some of them. But I may venture to say that it should be efficiency and ability which should be the measure and criterion, and not caste. I think no communal question should be talked over on the floor of this House, namely, Central Legislature. This sort of opinions should not be given vent to here. I am very sorry I have got to differ from my Honourable friend. I differed from him on some previous occasions, and I thought he would give due consideration to my suggestions in favour of nation-building. How long shall we keep on to these communal interests? We shall never make a nation, and with all due respect I offer my suggestions to those gentlemen who are great advocates, or so-called advocates of communal representation, that they should try to stamp out this evil which is eating into the vitals of our people in India.

With these remarks I submit that there should be no communal representation, at all, in these sacred University matters. Efficiency, ability and utility should be given due regard, and not the question of this creed or that creed.

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary: Sir, I strongly support the plea that the usefulness of the Delhi University, for bringing which into existence we were responsible, should not be interfered with. The damage to the Colleges will be incalculable; they have been taken away from another University, and made to place themselves on another footing. And now, in the name of an ill-considered plea for economy put in by people who do not happen to have studied the question, I do not think we ought to go back upon what we did only the other day. The Inchcape Committee were very well advised in many important matters in pronouncing what in our profession we call appeal proof judgments. In this case they have not resorted to this wisdom and not one of their educational recommendations can be supported.

Khan Bahadur Abdur Rahim Khan (North-West Frontier Province: Nominated Non-Official): Sir, I am going to support this amendment from another point of view. I am glad that from every corner of this House the voice is heard in support of education, which is a very healthy and promising sign to meet my purpose. But I am very sorry to see in my unfortunate Province retrenchment is directly made in education. I am sorry to notice that in the Report of the Inchcape Committee unfortunately there is a serious retrenchment in education. There are three institutions in my Province. The recommendation is that further grants should not be given to two of these institutions, and in regard to the third that no grant should be given at all; this is death blow to our education and is bound to displease the whole Province.

Mr. President: We are discussing one institution.

Khan Bahadur Abdur Rahim Khan: I am coming to that as I see the sense of this House is entirely in favour of education. I support this proposal and I hope when my turn comes, they will support me too, and will not disappoint me.

Mr. B. S. Das: Sir, I rise to sound a note of warning to my friends who are interested in the University of Delhi. From experience I am bound to sound this note of warning. The Government of India in matters of education are fond of putting very ambitious programmes before the public; they help it to a certain extent, give it a start, and then fall back. That is the case here. That is what I say from experience. They put before us a very ambitious scheme long ago in the shape of a Patna University. It was to be made a residential one; large sums of money were to be spent on that University; that was the original scheme. The Government of India had first made . . .

The Honourable Mr. A. O. Chatterjee: May I rise to a point of order? Is the Honourable gentleman in order in referring to the affairs of the Patna University which is at present under the control of the Bihar and Orissa Government?

Mr. President: I am sorry I missed the word "Patna". The Honourable Member must come to Delhi.

Mr. B. S. Das: What I am narrating is the experience that I had in connection with this University. The Patna University was first started by the Government of India; the scheme was sanctioned by the Government of India and was only recently after the reforms that it was made over to the Government of Bihar and Orissa; but the Government of India were its sponsors . . .

Mr. President: That may be perfectly true, but we are only discussing Delhi now.

Mr. B. S. Das: I bow to your ruling, Sir. I only meant to say that those who are interested in the University of Delhi should take note from the fact and from the experience that we have gained from the University of Patna, that they should not be very hopeful regarding the ambitious schemes and programmes that are before them. Thereby I do not mean to withhold my support to any motion for grant to the Delhi University; I have education is given, nor education that is given in the way of attending lectures only, or writing out theses without taking any lessons from the tutorial staff that has been given by the University, Sir. The other question that has to be considered is this. That, here you have got a different kind of people; some of them will not allow their children to read the Ramayana or Mahabharatta. Would any of my Hindu friends like to see his child read the Bible or some other religious book, e.g., Koran? A Hindu father would say he would not like his child to do that.

Mr. President: The Honourable Member is getting too far from the University of Delhi.

Mr. K. Ahmed: Therefore, Sir, in the University where all these things are required, I do not think any of my friends, both Dr. Gour and Dr. Nand Lal, would object to them. I am told, Sir, Dr. Nand Lal is associating with people very much and indeed getting his social education accomplished properly from this Institution. We find he is progressing gradually and I do not see why that principle should not be applied with regard to other people, especially in the province of Delhi. Probably he did not mean what he had said. My notion of education is quite different and that by passing an examination after reading two or three books is no education at all. Sir, without entering into any further discussions with regard to the curtailment of any amount, I think we have had many cuts in the other subjects, and I do not think we should be unfair with regard to this grant. And I hope Dr. Gour as the Vice-Chancellor of this University will realise and appreciate the situation so that the people of this province who have got the University here will feel that they are actively taking part in it.

The Honourable Mr. A. C. Chatterjee: Sir, we have had an extremely interesting speech from my Honourable friend Mr. Kabeer-ud-Din Ahmed. I have no desire to enter into the merits of that speech and I have no doubt that the Honourable the Vice-Chancellor of the Delhi University will profit by the admonition that has been given to him by Mr. Kabeer-ud-Din Ahmed. Nor, Sir, do I wish to be lured into a discussion with my Honourable friend from Orissa regarding the attitude of the Government of India towards the Patna University. You, Sir, ruled him out of order. Still he managed to put in a plea on behalf of a province which is always crying for more funds and for more assistance from the Government of India. My Honourable friend Mr. Abul Kasem and also my Honourable friend Mr. Mahmood Schamnad referred to the question of Mussalman representation on the Court of the Delhi University. That is a matter, Sir, which does not at present concern the Government of India, but I can promise my Honourable friends that I shall bring their views to the notice of His Excellency the Chancellor. I think, Sir, I may take it that the House in general approves of the grant to the Delhi University. ("Hear, hear" and cries of "Yes.") I have nothing more to say except that with regard to the cuts in the grants for Education generally, that is to say, grants for the Delhi Colleges and the Secondary Schools, I can only promise that the views of the House will be taken into consideration.

Dr. H. S. Gour: Sympathetically.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: On that assurance, I withdraw my motion.

The motion was, by leave of the Assembly, withdrawn.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That a sum not exceeding Rs. 28,33,000 be granted to the Governor General in Council to defray the charge which will come in course of payment during the year ending the 31st day of March, 1924, in respect of 'Delhi'."

The motion was adopted.

DEMAND No. 41—CIVIL WORKS.

Colonel Sir Sydney Crookshank (P. W. D. Secretary): Sir, I beg to move:

Honourable Members will find on a reference to page 121 of the Demand for Grants that this figure which I have just given them, is short by Rs. 11 lakhs of the original figure which was inserted in this demand. The reductions effected under that figure of Rs. 11 lakhs have been distributed—or rather it is proposed to distribute them—as follows:—From the allotment of Rs. 10 lakhs for the Forest Research Institute at Dehra Dun, a reduction of Rs. 2 lakhs; from the Agricultural Research Institute at Pusa, Rs. 1 lakh; from the School of Mines and Geology at Dhanbad, Rs. 2 lakhs; from Repairs generally, Rs. 3½ lakhs; from Minor Works, Establishments and Miscellaneous, Rs. 2½ lakhs; total Rs. 11 lakhs. Honourable Members will no doubt realise that seeing that the demands received by us from Provincial Governments and Local Administrations under the head Civil Works amounts to no less than Rs. 338 lakhs, the reductions which we have effected, by which the grant now stands at Rs. 124 lakhs, plus Rs. 52 lakhs for the roads in Waziristan, is a very small demand to make, and, in the circumstances, having consideration of the fact that there are practically no demands for original works not in progress, and that we shall have to reduce very heavily the provision which we usually make for minor works and repairs, the demand which I now place before the House is a bed-rock demand and will, I hope, be accepted in toto.

Khan Bahadur Sarfaraz Hussain Khan: I wish to move amendment No. 527*.

Mr. President: The Honourable Member must put it in a form in which I can conveniently put it to the House. What I want is a sum that can be deducted from the main sum of the estimate and not to search the amounts of last year and find out what sum it is that the Honourable member wants to deduct.

Colonel Sir Sydney Crookshank: Perhaps I can explain to the Honourable Member what the actual position is. I think he refers to the figure of Rs. 1,98,000 which stood against the item Reserve for last year's Budget Estimates. But I should like to point out to him that that figure was not actually acted upon as the reserve for the Public Works Department in the current year 1922-23 actually stood at Rs. 11,49,000 at the commencement of the year. This year in consultation with the Finance Department we have fixed our reserve at Rs. 6,77,000, and as a general rule it stands at Rs. 10 lakhs.

* That the provision under sub-head Reserve under the head 'Civil Works' (page) be reduced to the estimate of 1922-23."

Khan Bahadur Sarfaraz Hussain Khan: I do not move my amendment.

Mr. N. M. Samarth: I move:

"That the demand under the head 'Civil Works' including expenditure in England be reduced by Rs. 87,25,080."

I will not make a speech. I have already said that these are amounts required not for repairs but for original works and should be transferred to the Capital account. Rs. 52 lakhs of them are for Waziristan and there are other items charged to revenue the total amount of which is Rs. 92,82,000. I deduct interest at 6 per cent., which amounts to Rs. 5,56,920, and the remaining Rs. 87,25,080 is the amount by which I want a reduction. The reduction to be made is this that this amount be transferred to the Capital account and the interest that I have mentioned, that is, Rs. 5,56,920, be made chargeable to Revenue.

Mr. Ashruf O. Jamali (Bengal: Nominated Non-Official): Sir, I rise to support the motion just now moved by my Honourable friend, Mr. Samarth. On the 6th instant I made a remark in this House that there were some charges made to revenue which should go to capital account. I understand from the Honourable the Finance Member that those charges which are of an unproductive nature should not be taken to capital but should be taken to revenue. He went as far as saying on Sir Montagu Webb's remarks that it would be faking accounts. With due respect to his high authority I beg to differ. Take the case of a building of a factory. You have the main building of a factory in which you put your machinery. Take the cooly lines that you build for a factory. The main building or the cooly lines or barracks are all unproductive, but do you carry them to revenue account? Certainly not. It all goes to capital in the ordinary course. Take the four walls of a building that you erect. Do you carry that to revenue? No. It is unproductive, but goes to capital account. Sir Montagu Webb rightly remarked the other day that if our pockets were full, if we were not asked to put fresh taxation, then if we charged this to revenue it would be different but in the present condition of the country's finances when we are faced with a deficit budget, I think that such charges should go to capital account and not to revenue expenditure. With these remarks I support the amendment of my Honourable friend, Mr. Samarth.

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: I should like Members of the House to imagine themselves in possession of a lakh of rupees which they want to invest. They receive a prospectus from a company which is appealing for subscriptions for a crore. It is going to spend that crore in putting up a factory which is going to produce no revenue. It is not the crore that is going to produce the revenue though there may be other things which go to produce the revenue. They do not pretend it is productive. Would anybody invest capital in such a company? They would invest that capital in a company that was re-productive. Is a road in Waziristan re-productive expenditure? How can it be regarded as capital expenditure? I have already expressed myself at great length on this subject and do not wish at this time of the day on the last day of the discussion to reopen the controversy about charging certain items to revenue or to capital. I have stated that I would be no party to faking the account and I stand by that statement. We have got a deficit this year which we are trying to cover. If we do not cover it we end the year with increased amount of unproductive debt. If we say that a certain amount of our expenditure on public works and other things ought to be charged to capital and we proceed to charge it to capital and we do not attempt to cover it with revenue, at the end of the year we have got an increase in our unproductive debt. I appeal to the House—what is the difference between that and budgeting for a deficit? It is really silly to pretend in a year of this kind that you can balance your budget, when you are in difficulties, by calling a spade a potato. If you call it an agricultural implement, you may be a little nearer the truth but what you are suggesting in this case is that something that is obviously unproductive, that obviously yields no revenue should be treated as if it were a reproductive, useful asset in which you are investing money for the benefit of future generations. If the money we invest is going to earn revenue for the next generation, there is something to be said for charging it to capital and if the next generation is going to get the benefit of the revenue, there is no reason why it should not pay for a certain amount of the interest. If there is no revenue coming from it, why should you charge posterity with the expense of keeping up the unproductive building as well as with the cost of paying interest on the original capital cost? Posterity may have done nothing for us, but we have given a hundred crores deficit to posterity; is not that enough?

Sir Montagu Webb: I should like to say a word or two in support of Mr. Samarth's motion. It is perfectly true that roads in Waziristan are not likely to yield anything in the form of revenue, but I think we might look at the problem in this way: The system of finance which has been adopted during the last four or five years has been of a most severe character. This unfortunate country has had to pay for the whole of the last Afghan war, the whole of the recent expeditions on the Frontier out of current revenues; and now we are asked to pay still more for building roads, barracks, and other buildings into this God-forsaken place Waziristan, and all out of revenue. (The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: "Not all out of revenue.") As far as I can see, Sir, all out of revenue. (The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: "A hundred crores out of deficits of the last few years.") The deficits of the past years, Sir, have been filled by borrowing and by—I will not permit myself to use the expression "faking" the currency,—but by, shall we say, enlarging the paper currency. Well, Sir, that is equal and tantamount to borrowing. But the point I desire to put before this House is that this is very severe finance. I think it is not at all unreasonable, if we have to incur excessive expenditure in times of difficulty, to suggest that this expenditure especially capital expenditure, should be spread over a series of years rather than placed—all of it, into our current revenue budget when we frankly have not got the money to pay for it. For that reason, Sir, I think there is a very good argument indeed for spreading this excessive expenditure on the Frontier over a series of years, and I myself should see no harm whatever in the circumstances in putting a certain amount of capital outlay now being expended in Waziristan into capital and leaving posterity to bear some small portion of that outlay. For that reason, Sir, I support Mr. Samarth's amendment.

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary: Sir, the hand of the clock is moving forward and I see Sir Basil Blackett's spirits are rising. Phoenix-like immobility of expression, now and again brightened by Omar Khayyam like twinklings of the eye, is disappearing and we are repeatedly warned against

[Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary.]

"faking." The Assembly is also beginning to be guilty of what is called by the Finance Member silly things. Luckily His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief is not here, otherwise he would not have very much relished the idea of having called the Waziristan investments a profitless and unprofitable concern. Because "posterity has done nothing" for Sir Basil Blackett, as he puts it, he would not like posterity to pay. But posterity will or ought at least to pay for security, if there is real security in the matter. What is the one reason of our becoming "silly," as we have been charged to-day? We have had the whole philosophy of "lag" dumped down for our benefit and laggards have been tolerated and encouraged. I see Sir Basil Blackett worships with me at a common shrine and that is wisdom bubbling Punch. He gave us a dose of Punch in his opening speech. I should like to give him another. He may have seen a recent cartoon in 'Punch' about incorrigible and habitual sitters-out who are a nuisance and enterprising hostesses have been advised to provide for a moving stairway on which these sitters-out dump themselves down when they ought to do otherwise. What the Finance Member should have done as soon as he took charge of the entertainment, was to provide this moving stairway and get his habitual sitters-out on it, not to allow them lag to the extent he has permitted but to compel them to give effect to as much of the Inchcape reductions as possible. Because that has not been done, because we have to meet what, to borrow Sir Basil's language, may be called a "faked" deficit, we are drifting to all sorts of shifts. He reminded the House that the Provincial Governments are fond of their little baby deficits which they want to nurse and display by way of exciting commiseration. Some Member here asked whether the Government of India itself was not doing the same, and now that he is within a few minutes of having everything his own way the Finance Member reminds the House that profitless and unprofitable investments like those in Waziristan ought not to be paid for by posterity, because, some old number of Punch had probably taught him that posterity had done nothing for us.

The Honourable Mr. B. N. Sarma: Sir, I think it is my duty to point out that the Waziristan expenditure amounts to only 49 lakhs and odd as against the 87 lakhs proposed to be transferred to the head "Capital" by means of reduction under this head. That is one point, and the other point is that the whole of the Public Works accounts and the principle on which that expenditure is being incurred for the last so many years, proceed on the assumption that we should look to Revenue for items of an unproductive character. Many of these items, Kabul Legation and many of these roads, etc., are of an unproductive character and it would be dangerous to transfer all of them to the head "Capital".

Mr. President: The original question was:

"That a sum not exceeding Rs. 1,16,37,000 be granted to the Governor General in Council to defray the charge which will come in course of payment during the year ending the 31st day of March, 1924, in respect of 'Civil Works' including expenditure in England."

Since which a motion for reduction has been made:

"That the demand under the head 'Civil Works' including expenditure in England be reduced by Rs. 87,25,080."

The question is that that reduction be made.

Mr. B. N. Misra (Orissa Division: Non-Muhammadan): My amendment is:

"That the demand under the head 'Civil Works' including expenditure in England be reduced by Rs. 5,00,000."

Although my motion is for a reduction of 5 lakhs, I wish with your permission to move for a reduction of one rupee only, and my object in doing so is this. The Province of Bihar and Orissa is known as the youngest Province and Honourable Members are well aware of it. I think that is the reason why we have been given a seat very near the Chair, very near the Honourable the Government Members, so that they will protect us with much more care. But unfortunately, Sir, you will find the cruellest cuts which have been made by Sir Sydney Crookshank have been directed against this youngest of the Provinces. He mentioned to this Honourable House that he has made a cut of Rs. 11 lakhs and out of that amount he wants to cut one lakh for the Pusa Institute and two lakhs for the building for the School of Mines at Dhanbad. I submit, Sir, that, although Bihar and Orissa is the youngest province in India, it is the richest province with its hidden wealth. Honourable Members are well aware of the coal mines of Jherriah, Dhanbad and the recently discovered coal mines at Talchar. They are aware also of the Tata Iron Works at Jamsedpur and so many other mines that exist in the Hill Tracts of Orissa in the province of Bihar and Orissa. Sir, Honourable Members want to develop industry and to open up the resources of the country. Unless there is a School of Mines and Geology at Dhanbad, this object cannot be achieved. (Cries of "Withdraw, withdraw.") Sir, the province of Bihar and Orissa is not only the youngest province but it is also known to be the poorest province. I submit that the Honourable Sir Sydney Crookshank ought to find the 3 lakhs from elsewhere and not give this cut to this the youngest province. (Cries of "Withdraw, withdraw.") No, Sir, I will not withdraw. My province is vitally interested in mines and we have no other wealth. Honourable Members want money and where are they to get it unless they open up the resources of the country and the best way to open the resources of the country is by having a School of Mines in a place which is full of these mines. Sir, I implore the Honourable Members of this House to remember that at least this item should not be cut and that the School of Mines should be built as early as possible. The Government of Bihar and Orissa cannot do it. The work has been taken up by the Central Government. I earnestly request Sir Sydney Crookshank and the Department not to make this cut, as the work is shown to be in progress and has been sanctioned. If the Honourable Member wants the money he should find it from anywhere else, and not make this cut.

The motion was negatived.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That a sum not exceeding Rs. 1,16,37,000 be granted to the Governor General in Council to defray the charge which will come in course of payment during the year ending the 31st day of March, 1924, in respect of 'Civil Works' (under the control of the Public Works Department)."

The motion was adopted.

DEMAND NO. 56—EXPENDITURE IN ENGLAND UNDER THE CONTROL OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That a sum not exceeding Rs. 14,82,000 be granted to the Governor General in Council to defray the charge which will come in course of payment during the year ending the 31st day of March, 1924, in respect of 'Expenditure in England under the control of the Secretary of State for India'."

The motion was adopted.

DEMAND NO. 57—EXPENDITURE IN ENGLAND UNDER THE CONTROL OF THE HIGH COMMISSIONER FOR INDIA.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That a sum not exceeding Rs. 77,88,000 be granted to the Governor General in Council to defray the charge which will come in course of payment during the year ending the 31st day of March 1924, in respect of 'Expenditure in England under the control of the High Commissioner for India'."

The motion was adopted.

DEMAND NO. 58—EXPENDITURE CHARGED TO CAPITAL IN RESPECT OF RAILWAYS.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That a sum not exceeding Rs. 38,61,93,000 be granted to the Governor General in Council to defray the charge which will come in course of payment during the year ending the 31st day of March, 1924, in respect of 'Expenditure charged to Capital in respect of Railways'."

Mr. B. Venkatapatiraju: Sir, as His Excellency the Viceroy has not acceded to our request for more time to discuss these demands, we are hastening to take all these together in a few minutes. I suggest that there should be a reduction of 10 crores in the provision under the head Railways (page 288), but as there are several amendments for a reduction of Rs. 8,61,00,000, I move for the reduction of Rs. 8,61,00,000.

The Incheape Committee suggested that we should not waste our money even though it was available for us on unremunerative Railway lines. I shall read only one sentence from that Report which will convince every one that it is useless to spend money merely because it is available. At page 78 they say:

"This being so, we cannot believe that it is legitimate under any circumstances to put Rs. 67 crores of capital, borrowed at a high rate of interest, into lines which are already a very heavy drain on the resources of the State and we recommend that, except in case of commitments already entered upon, no further capital expenditure be incurred on these lines until the whole position has been examined by the Financial Adviser and reviewed by the Government."

They suggest that the money could with advantage be devoted to the construction of new lines promising an adequate return.

I will just mention that, leaving aside the amount which is shown as capital expenditure, if you take proper account of the amount already spent out of our revenues we have lost something like 68 crores, and if interest is added to that, it amounts to 300 crores. Apart from that amount we have to realise not less than 35 crores on the admitted capital outlay whereas we are realising from 28 to 30 crores. How can we profitably employ more funds, unless we can show a better return? Therefore under these circumstances I appeal that the amount be reduced by Rs. 8,61,00,000.

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: Sir, I sincerely hope that the House will not accept a motion of this kind moved in such hurried fashion. I would remind the House that only last year we decided in this Assembly that we should amend our ways in regard to railway capital expenditure. We have received, only just received, the very important report of the Acworth Committee. The whole burden of that Report was a protest against the way in which the railways had been financed. They described it, not exactly in those terms, but they suggested that the railways had been financed in a hand-to-mouth fashion. They (the railways) never knew at the time when the year was about to commence what money they were to receive for capital expenditure. The Committee laid the greatest possible stress that there should be no lapse of allotment from year to year in order that the railways might proceed with their capital expenditure on a definite orderly programme. The House therefore, again following the Acworth Committee, decided that this programme of 30 crores a year should be embarked upon for a period of five years in order that the railways might be rehabilitated.

I need not repeat what I said on Tuesday regarding the appalling state into which our railways have been allowed to get and regarding the paralysing effect which the deficiencies of our railways have had upon the trade and the transport and commerce of our country. It was only last year we came to that decision. In the first year it was inevitable that we could not spend the whole of the allotment. That allotment has been carried on to the year 1923-24; and now it is proposed to destroy those programmes altogether, to throw the whole thing into the melting pot by making a cut of not less than 8 crores. If that is done, I ask the House in all seriousness, what reputation for political stability will this House have, and what guarantee we who are trying to run the railways will have that ever again we can look to the stability of our system of finance? Again we are going back to the old hand-to-mouth system; again the railways are going to be sacrificed to the exigencies of the general financial position. I ask this House, are they going to place us in a position of that kind, and if so, what the position of those who are trying to run these railways will be in the future? It is perfectly true that, according to the recommendations of the Inchcape Committee, as soon as we have that Financial Adviser, we will re-examine these programmes. As a matter of fact we have already taken that matter in hand; the Agents of all the railways are coming to Delhi next week and we propose to re-examine those programmes; owing to the cuts which we have had to make in programme revenue expenditure it is unlikely that we shall be able to spend all these 38 crores next year, and we will re-examine these programmes and if we see our way in the light of that re-examination to inform the Finance Department of a probable saving in capital expenditure, the House may rest assured that we shall inform the Finance Department accordingly. I would point out to the House that by making this cut they are not in any way going to affect the revenue budget for the next year; they are not in any way going to reduce the budget; all you are going to do is to throw the programmes of capital expenditure which we have embarked upon with the fullest concurrence and authority of this House, to throw them into most utter confusion. I suggest that the wise plan is to leave it to us. You have got this Inchcape Committee's Report; we propose to re-examine the whole matter in consultation with the Agents and in consultation with the Financial Adviser. That is a wise position for this House to take up, and I hope that the House will not accept this motion.

Mr. B. S. Kamat: Sir, it is necessary just to say a word or two in reply to the Honourable Mr. Innes. It is perfectly true that the Acworth Committee advised a large expenditure on the Railways; it is perfectly true also that this Assembly has committed itself last year to a expenditure of 30 crores per annum. But we have to act each year according to the financial exigencies of the times, and if we ask that Rs. 88.61 lakhs should not be spent this year, it does not mean that the view of this Assembly is to give up the principle of lapses. The only reason is that the Inchcape Committee's Report which came on top of the Acworth Committee's Report has shown clearly to this House that there is a surplus of engines, there is a surplus of rolling stock in certain cases on the railways, and a mere windfall of 38 crores would be misspent during the next year, if we do not curtail it by 861 lakhs; we have enough engines and enough rolling stock, and it is unnecessary, therefore, to purchase more engines and more rolling stock unless it has been shown to us to our satisfaction that this expenditure on engines and other things is necessary in 1923-24. Then again if we save 861 lakhs, we save a great deal of interest; and I think taking this year's deficit and other points into consideration we would be perfectly justified in withholding this 861 lakhs, not because we want to give up the policy of spending on railways but because the railways have enough of stock and enough of engines and other material to go on with.

Sir Montagu Webb: Sir, I oppose this amendment; it is perfectly true that the Inchcape Committee have recommended certain investigations and possible savings in certain directions; but they do not recommend any cutting down of capital expenditure as a whole; and while further investigation will no doubt show that it may be possible to save in certain directions, I have no doubt that investigation would prove that it will be wise to spend more in other directions. I would ask the House, therefore, to reject this amendment.

Sir Campbell Rhodes: Sir, I am sorry to disoblige my friends, but I am afraid I cannot let this go with a silent vote. I remember a short time ago a very important committee meeting in Calcutta and discussing this question and after long argument coming to a decision which I think was unanimous and which included some of the most distinguished Members of this House of all parties, that during the next five years a sum of Rs. 150 crores should be set aside for the rehabilitation of the lines. If the proposition before the House is that the North-Western Railway should be abolished as an unremunerative line, as a representative from Bengal, I do not think I have any objection to raise. But I do say as regards the lines on our side of India, that 30 crores a year are absolutely insufficient. If any Member will travel down from Delhi to Calcutta, he will find at every siding station one, or very often, two goods trains waiting to let the Punjab Mail pass. These trains contain coal very largely for up-country industries. The coal position is getting serious. If Honourable Members will take the trouble to read the speech of the President of the Indian Mining Association in the paper this morning, they will see there a reference to the desperate position into which the industries of India are getting owing to the lack of facilities both for opening up new coal fields and for developing those we have. I think Honourable Members will agree with me that the industries of this country are closely connected with the coal supply. As I pointed out, Sir, in the Fiscal Commission debate, sea freights are falling month by month, and against that we are putting up our railway freights, we are destroying our railway facilities, and we are not enabling our Indian industries to compete with imported goods. Our consuming centres are very largely at the ports.

[Sir Campbell Rhodes.]

I can mention, for instance, sugar. We are preventing the sugar growers of the central portions of India from competing in the Calcutta market. The freights from Java are very low. Honourable Members by refusing this grant will be helping the foreigner against our own industries, and with what advantage, I cannot say, because the money that can be invested in railways is not unremunerative; it will pay its own interest if properly invested and it will do more, and I am rather surprised that Honourable Members who have been with me on the Fiscal Commission and who have investigated this question of railway facilities should now come forward and say we do not want our railways.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: I never said that.

Sir Campbell Rhodes: It is well known, Sir, that all railway development was stopped during the war, that we are years behind, that our rolling stock is in a hopeless condition and that rehabilitation is absolutely essential, and I quite agree with the Retrenchment Committee that, while it may be undesirable to spend money at the present high rate of interest where there is no hope of a return, surely it is an ordinary commercial proposition to invest money where there is not only a return to the railways, but what is still more important, a valuable return to the industries of the country. If this amendment is going to be passed, I think Honourable Members might as well throw the Fiscal Commission Report into the waste-paper basket, because that Report dealt very fully with this question, and it pointed out that protection was useless unless we have something to protect, and if we are to starve our lines of communications, we are going to starve our own industries, and we are rapidly bringing about a time when the coal position will become absolutely intolerable and the whole industry of the country will be turned upside down. Sir, I strongly object to this amendment.

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley (Chief Commissioner, Railways): Sir, I am not quite sure whether to take this trifling cut which is proposed of 8 crores as a vote of censure on my Department or as a practical measure for reducing the commitments of India during the ensuing year. I am inclined to think from the speeches which have been made in favour of making this cut that the intention probably is to express disapproval of the way in which the Railways have been run. Well, Sir, I have been through a good deal of this during the last two or three days and, in comparison with the proposal for a vote of censure by moving a reduction of one rupee which the House was good enough to reject, this proposed cut of 8 crores regarded as a vote of censure really leaves me cold.

I should like to take up one or two points in Mr. Kamat's speech. He says that the Retrenchment Committee have shown that there are surplus engines, surplus wagons, and surplus everything else, which are not being properly used. Now, Sir, I think perhaps, in reading the Retrenchment Committee's Report, Honourable Members may have been misled in one respect, not noticing that the figures referred to were those mainly of 1921-22. There can be no doubt whatever that the position is rapidly changing now. Our traffic earnings are improving week by week and the need for engines and wagons for railway facilities is increasing as it was increasing in the years before. We certainly had bad years, we had bad traffic years, but there is little doubt that we are on the eve of large traffic developments. Now, Sir Campbell Rhodes has shown the position in the coalfields. He has also referred to the sugar position and I believe there is no Honourable Member here who has any experience of Railways and the effects of railway working on the trade of the country, who will not agree that the Railways at the present time are unable to effectively move the traffic which is offering. If and when we have another revival of trade, such as a large movement of wheat or a revival of the coal output in the collieries, we shall be in exactly the same position as we were in a few years ago when the Railways were impossibly congested, and I say that this is not the time, when we are on the eve of a development of traffic, this is not the time to curtail our expenditure on development.

In regard to the practical effects of a cut such as some Honourable

5 P.M.

Members propose to make, it must be remembered, and anyone who has taken the trouble to read through Appendix C will see at once, that the amount which we are budgeting to spend in this year forms part of a series of practical measures of development. It is not that we are just taking this year by itself and saying "We will buy so many engines and so many wagons." What we have got in our budget this year is part of a continuous scheme of development, and, if this cut is to be made now, as the Honourable Mr. Innes has pointed out, immense damage will be done to the orderly progress of these programmes. Not that, as someone mentioned the other day, it will cause me inconvenience; I don't mind that a bit. But it will cause inconvenience to the proper working out of our schemes of development.

Mr. President: The original question was:

"That a sum not exceeding Rs. 38,61,93,000 be granted to the Governor General in Council to defray the charge which will come in course of payment during the year ending the 31st day of March, 1924, in respect of 'Expenditure on Railways charged to capital'."

Since which a motion for reduction has been moved:

"That the provision for construction of State Railways under the head 'Railways' be reduced by Rs. 8,61,00,000."

The question I have to put is that that reduction be made.

SUMMARY OF CUTS IN DEMANDS.

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: Sir, I think it would be for the convenience of the House in view of Monday's debate on the Finance Bill if I were to sum up the position as regards Revenue and Expenditure as it stands after the voting on the Demands for Grants. I have also an announcement to make on behalf of the Governor General in Council. The reductions that have been made by the House in the Estimates as presented are as follows:

	Rs.
Under the head 'Customs'	4 lakhs.
Under the head 'Railways,' there have been two separate cuts — one	50 "
and the other	1,14 "
Under the head 'General Administration'	5,10,000
Under the head 'Stamps'	100
Under the head 'Miscellaneous'	3 lakhs.

I have to announce that the Governor General in Council has decided that the cut of Rs. 114 lakhs in the Railways is one which cannot be made consistently with the discharge of his responsibilities. In regard to the other cuts, there has not been time of course for the Governor General in Council to consider the cut of Rs. 3 lakhs that was made under the head 'Miscellaneous' to-day. But taking those cuts, the cut of Rs. 50 lakhs under Railways was agreed to by the Honourable Member in charge of Railways. The cut of Rs. 10,000 under 'General Administration' was agreed by the House and they provided means for meeting it. The other cuts would, as I had to state to the House at the time when they were made, if it were attempted to put them into effect in full, almost inevitably make it impossible for us to carry on the General Administration, or in the case of Customs to collect the revenue which is due. The net expenditure as presented in the Budget was Rs. 130,87,92,000. A deduction of Rs. 7,27,000 has to be made from that in view of the fact that we were able to make cuts of a little over the 4 crores that I spoke of in the Budget speech. That reduces the total to Rs. 130,80,65,000. The cuts made by the House, excluding the one of Rs. 114 lakhs which I have mentioned, amount to Rs. 62,10,100, leaving the expenditure at the stage—Rs. 130,18,55,000. I have had to explain to the House that the estimates as presented were the lowest figure which having in mind the total as a whole, the Government could honestly put forward as likely to be reached in reduction of expenditure this year. We feel bound, therefore to ask that apart from that total of Rs. 130,18,55,000, which I have mentioned, and considering our deficit, we should make provision for expected supplementaries, mostly to replace the cuts that have been made, to a total of Rs. 12 lakhs. That leaves our expenditure at Rs. 130,30,55,000. As against that our revenue on the basis of taxation as it stands at present was put in accordance with the Budget speech at Rs. 126,61,71,000, leaving a deficit still to be covered of Rs. 3,68,84,000.

Mr. President: This House now stands adjourned till Eleven of the Clock on Monday morning, the 19th March, 1923. I may remind Honourable Members that arrangements have been made for an official photograph of the Assembly at 10-30 on Monday morning and I hope Honourable Members will be here before that hour.

The Assembly then adjourned till Eleven of the Clock on Monday, the 19th March, 1923.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

Monday, 19th March, 1923.

The Assembly met in the Assembly Chamber at Eleven of the Clock.
Mr. President was in the Chair.

MEMBER SWORN:

Sir Henry Moncrieff Smith, Kt., C.I.E., M.L.A. (Secretary, Legislative Department).

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

RAILWAY CONNECTIONS IN WEST COAST DISTRICT, MADRAS.

572. Mr. Mahmood Schamnad Sahib Bahadur: 1. Is it a fact that there is only one railway line passing through the Palghat gap, connecting the West Coast districts of the Madras Presidency with the general railway system?

2. Is it a fact that as this line was damaged during the Malabar rebellion military movements to Malabar were delayed, and hence the suppression of the rebellion was considerably delayed?

3. Do the Government propose to connect the general railway system with the West Coast railway by the construction of the long proposed Mangalore Arsikere (or rather Mangalore Hassan) line and facilitate the movements of military, etc., to the West Coast districts of the Madras Presidency?

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley: (1) Yes.

(2) The answer to the first part of the question is in the affirmative. As to the second part, in view of the fact that the damage to the Railway line in question was very quickly repaired, it cannot be said that the length of time taken to suppress the rebellion was thereby materially affected.

(3) The reply is in the negative. The position of the Mangalore Arsikere (Mangalore Hassan) Railway project is as stated in the answer given to the Honourable Member in the Legislative Assembly on 5th March, 1921.

PASSAGE CONCESSIONS TO CERTAIN OFFICERS.

573. Rai Bahadur G. O. Nag: Is it a fact that in consideration of the high cost of passage to the United Kingdom certain concessions have been sanctioned for all gazetted officers of Non-Asiatic domicile to facilitate their passage home?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: The answer is in the affirmative. The concession is in the form of an interest free advance for passage money.

Mr. K. Ahmed: Could not that concession be applied to any other country, Sir, except the United Kingdom? What is the principle followed in granting the concession?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: The high cost of passages to Europe is the reason.

CONCESSIONS TO MEN RECRUITED THROUGH STAFF SELECTION BOARD.

574. Rai Bahadur G. C. Nag: (a) Is it a fact that men from all provinces are recruited through the Central Staff Selection Board in the Government of India Secretariat?

(b) If so, will Government be pleased to state whether the grant of any concession is under consideration in respect of the different classes of officers employed in the Government of India Secretariat in view of the prevailing high rates of railway fares? If not, why not?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: (a) Yes.

(b) For journeys on duty the ordinary travelling allowance rules apply. Private journeys are, of course, not paid for by Government.

INABILITY OF SECRETARIAT STAFF TO VISIT THEIR HOMES.

575. Rai Bahadur G. C. Nag: (a) Is the Government aware that there is a growing discontent amongst the Secretariat staff owing to their inability to visit their homes even once at long intervals?

(b) If the answer is in the negative, will Government be pleased to enquire about the matter through the Association of the Uncovenanted Service of the Government of India?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: (a) Government are not aware that this is the case. The expenditure on leave allowances would certainly indicate that sufficient leave is granted to the Secretariat establishment.

(b) The Association is of course at liberty to make any representation they may wish.

FREE PASSES AND P. T. O's.

576. Rai Bahadur G. C. Nag: What is the total number of men (excluding the menials) belonging to the Railway Board, who are eligible for the privilege of free passes and P. T. O's?

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: 130.

COST OF P. T. O. CONCESSION.

577. Rai Bahadur G. C. Nag: (a) Will the Government be pleased to state what will be the total additional annual cost if the concession of a P. T. O. is granted to all men of the Government of India Secretariat once a year?

(b) Will the Government be pleased to state whether this additional cost will be covered by the corresponding gain which will accrue from the abolition of the free Railway passes to which the staff of the Railway Board are at present entitled? If so, will the Government be pleased to give this suggestion a trial?

duty which has been collected in anticipation need not be refunded, though we object to the salt duty. That proposal seems to merit consideration. That will perhaps bring in about 30 lakhs; and for the rest I think we can trust to the wits of the Finance Minister to find some means of bridging over the small gap.

Under these circumstances, I think that it would be not wise of the Assembly to leave the deficit uncovered and that, on the other hand, we must endeavour to cover it at least in very great part. What exactly will eventually commend itself to the general sense of the House I am not in a position to say. Nor am I to be understood as committing myself definitely to this suggestion, though I think there is a great deal to be said for it. And I therefore commend this suggestion to the House.

Sir Campbell Rhodes (Bengal: European): On a point of order, Sir. I should like your ruling, as to whether the interesting speech to which we have just listened and which raises many obviously controversial matters would have been in order in the discussion under section 2. If so, Sir, I would appeal to the House in the interests of the economy of time to allow the Bill to be introduced and so continue. I do not think we desire to be ruled out of order and miss our opportunity of speaking on certain points which have just been raised.

Sir Montagu Webb (Bombay: European): On another point of order, Sir, the Honourable the Finance Member has suggested that we should save time if we could proceed direct to the consideration of clause 2 of the Bill. May I say, Sir, that if we do that, I think that in the economy of time it would also be very valuable to us if we could have your ruling as to whether all these amendments which are before us are in order. It has been suggested by Members among themselves . . .

Mr. President: I can take that when we come to the clauses. It is hardly a point of order on consideration. As regards the point put to me by Sir Campbell Rhodes, the reply to him is that the whole of the speech delivered by my Honourable friend on my left from Madras (Sir P. S. Sivaswamy Aiyer) is in order on this motion. The first half of the speech would not be in order on clause 2, the second half would be. That is to say, I am prepared to allow the general question of taxation raised by my Honourable friend to be discussed on clause 2. More general matters arising out of the administration of the country will not be in order on clause 2.

Sir Montagu Webb: Sir, may I explain my point? The point I had in view is this. If you, Sir, rule for example, that all these proposals for additional taxation are out of order, then our consideration of the salt tax will have to be on entirely different lines to what it would be if you rule these amendments in order. There are several proposals for additional taxation and there is some uncertainty in Members' minds as to whether these proposals are in order or not. If we know at the beginning that they are not in order . . .

Mr. President: I told the Honourable Member that that point of order relates to the amendments which must be taken after we pass the motion for consideration. I think there is a good deal in the appeal made by the Honourable the Finance Member and Sir Campbell Rhodes that in so far as the House wishes to discuss the salt tax or alternatives to it, that discussion had better be reserved till we come to clause 2. Technically it is in order on the motion for consideration; but I leave it to the sense of the House whether it ought to be discussed now and repeated on clause 2.

Dr. H. S. Gour (Nagpur Division: Non-Muhammadan): Sir, I desire to make a few general observations on the Bill now submitted to the House for consideration. I do not wish, Sir, to repeat what has been repeated on the floor of this House ad nauseam that the heavy deficits of the Budgets of the last two years are due to military expenditure. I only wish to point out to the House that the suspicion which we then had in our mind that the military policy of the Government of India was dictated from outside has received confirmation in the telegram reporting the discussions in the House of Commons. I quote from Reuter's telegrams:

"The War Office was unable to agree with the Government of India regarding the latter's proposal for reductions in the number of units but the War Office was discussing the possible saving by cutting down establishments."

Now mark the next sentence:

"It must be remembered that the British regiments in India embrace part of the reserve and any reductions must necessarily affect their power of mobilisation. If the War Office agreed to the Government of India's making excessive decreases it would eventually mean further cost being thrown on the British Budget for making up the reserve in other ways."

We have been impressing, Sir, upon this House that the military policy of the Government of India was being dictated from outside. We are to-day presented with this spectacle of the British battalions marching on the prostrate form of the Government of India. The Army in India is an Imperial reserve for which the people of this country are made to pay. The Colonies refuse to pay for it; the British tax-payers refuse to pay for it, and therefore, the Army in England is sent out to this country to be paid for by the people of this country for external Imperial purposes. That is the situation. How far this House will keep on financing from year to year this insatiable Moloch of military expenditure can only be answered not by His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief nor by the Government of India but by the War Office and the Imperial Cabinet responsible for the defence of the British Empire. This, I submit, is a situation of abject helplessness not on the part of the Members of this House only but on the part of the distinguished occupants of the Treasury Benches. His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, the Government of India, and the military advisers of the Government of India recommended a reduction, as we now see from the papers, but the War Office have vetoed it.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey (Home Member): No, no.

Dr. H. S. Gour: That is what the telegram says.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: Then it is incorrect, Sir.

Dr. H. S. Gour: The Honourable the Home Member tells us that it is incorrect. Last year, he will not forget, I asked for the publication of the correspondence between the Government of India and the Secretary of State on this subject. Was that correspondence published? I ask the Honourable the Home Member to publish those despatches—the correspondence between the Government of India and the Secretary of State.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: That cannot refer to the instance which the Honourable Member has just mentioned. The despatches of last year cannot throw any light on the matter which the Honourable Member has just quoted to us.

Dr. H. S. Gour: I repeat it, Sir, that this is an old controversy in which the Government of India and the Secretary of State for the last two years have been fighting for the reduction of the military troops in this country, and they have repeatedly been over-ruled by the Secretary of State. Does the Honourable the Home Member deny that statement?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: I said, and I repeat that it was not correct, as Dr. Gour had stated, that the War Office had over-ruled the recommendations of the Government of India for effecting certain reductions in expenditure in the Indian Army Budget.

Mr. K. Ahmed (Rajshahi Division: Muhammadan Rural): What does it amount to?

Dr. H. S. Gour: I understand the Honourable Member as well as he understands me. We are both trained in the same school. I do not wish to pursue this question any further. I only wish to repeat what I have been repeating during the last two years that the military policy of the Government of India is being dictated by the War Office and the Government of India are as helpless in the matter as we ourselves. That is all to the credit of the Government of India, and whatever may be the result, we are obliged to His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief and the Government of India for fighting for the cause of India and fighting for economy in the military administration of this country, and we hope that with our support their just cause will triumph.

Now, Sir, we pass on to another subject. Much though we object to this military burden, helpless though we are in combating it, what should be our position regarding the Finance Bill? Are we to do, as has sometimes been suggested that we should withdraw all our assistance and leave the Government to such devices as they may resolve upon? (A Voice: "Who suggested that?") I am glad to hear one Honourable Member saying who suggested it. Now, my Honourable friend Sir Sivaswamy Aiyer said that that is a suggestion—I do not say it is a suggestion made by any one in particular but that is a suggestion. Well, Sir, so far as we are concerned, we and the Government of India are at one on this point that we cannot for the credit of this country allow this uncovered deficit.

Now, then, the next question and a question of very great moment that arises in this connection is how to cover the deficit. We have already impressed upon the Government of India the desirability of making further retrenchments, but then we cannot count upon them. We must take the budget as it is presented to us and upon the happy contingency of the Government of India making further retrenchments in expenditure we cannot ignore the deficit that lies in front of us. We must provide against it. Additional taxation is therefore inevitable and the alternatives that we are confronted with are either the salt tax or some other tax. So far as salt tax is concerned, I voice the sentiments of the Honourable Sir Sivaswamy Aiyer that we on this side of the House are unanimously opposed to it. The only concession we are prepared to make is that the tax already collected (Cries of "No, no.")—that is a concession (A voice:

"Who is making?"—the only concession that is possible in the circumstances (A Voice: "Most unjust") is that the tax collected may not be refunded to those who paid it. (Voices: "No.") But that would not solve the difficulty. At the very most the Government will make something like 35 lakhs of rupees. We have still to explore other avenues of taxation and I would add to the three mentioned by Sir Sivaswamy Aiyer a fourth one, namely, an import duty on iron and steel. I suggest that there is a very good reason why we should levy an import duty on iron and steel. (A Voice: "And tax industries.") The importation of iron and steel is prejudicially affecting the only pioneer industry that exists in this country and which the Fiscal Commission recommended should be supported at all costs. The European manufacturers of iron and steel are passing through a severe financial crisis and they are dumping their goods upon the soil of India at and below cost price, the effect of it being to extinguish this rising national industry in the country. An import duty on iron and steel would be in keeping with the declared policy of the Government. It will give us money and also serve incidentally to protect this struggling industry. I do not know how much it will bring us. I am told that it will bring us about Rs. 80 lakhs of rupees at 20 per cent. We have then to find about Rs. 268 lakhs. Of the three suggestions made by my Honourable friend Sir Sivaswamy Aiyer a surcharge on customs commends itself to me (Cries of "No, no" and "Hear, hear"), and I submit, Sir, it is the least objectionable of all taxes. I strongly deprecate a surcharge on income-tax and submit that any surcharge on income would not only be unpopular in the country but would saddle unjustly upon the people of this country a tax against which they are loudly complaining, and which as one Honourable Member says is already a heavy burden upon the tax-payer. I therefore suggest, Sir, that, the only solution that is possible in the circumstances is a surcharge on customs (Voices: "No, no.") and an import duty on iron and steel. (A Voice: "What about silver?") One more word and I have done. I beg to caution the Honourable the Finance Member and the Government of India that this last action of ours must not be regarded as a precedent. The Government of India have been budgeting for deficits during the last three years and I say, Sir, that this shall positively be the last year when the Government of India will come before this House and ask for further taxation to redress the financial equilibrium.

His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief: I should like at once to answer what the last speaker has said and the quotation that he has made from a Reuter's telegram which he read out to the House. The statement that has been reported as having been made in the House of Commons does not agree with the information in our possession and we are ascertaining whether this message as reported is correct. We have every reason to believe that the reduction in British troops which has been put forward by the Government of India and agreed to by me and which gives the pecuniary saving we are counting on will in the end be agreed to by His Majesty's Government. The question of the form which these reductions will take is still under consideration but His Majesty's Government have not signified that they are in any disagreement with the amount of reductions that are proposed and it is after all the amount which affects us here in the discussion on the Budget. I want to make that quite clear. There are certain reciprocal arrangements which, as the House will understand, exist in a big organisation like an Army, which is enlisted in one country and is employed in another, and in which the Cardwell system of one unit abroad and one at Home is a basic principle. A reduction such as that which we have proposed affects the whole machinery for the production of recruits and of training of men in England itself. Therefore as the one hangs upon the other, and as a settlement cannot be reached in a moment we are still considering with the Imperial Government what actual form the reductions themselves shall take.

Mr. P. P. Ginwala (Burma: Non-European): I should like to ask one question in connection with this Reuter's telegram. Has His Excellency seen this quotation from a letter written by Field Marshal Sir William Robertson, which is reproduced in this morning's Pioneer on the same subject? He says in this letter:

"Hitherto we have been able, in time of need, to obtain both British and native troops from that country for employment elsewhere, as in the South African War, the Boer rising, the Great War and now in Mesopotamia, Palestine and China. The Indian garrison has therefore constituted, in practice if not in theory, a valuable Imperial Reserve paid for by India whilst employed there and by the British Exchequer only when employed in other places. But this very convenient arrangement is drawing to a close, for repeated requisitions for Indian assistance, coupled with the grant of to a self-government and the cry for greater economy in military matters, have led to an emphatic desire that the Army of India shall be employed only for Indian defence. Proposals for reducing it are already afoot, and in the near future the British portion of the garrison will probably be cut down."

Mr. President: I do not think that His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief is responsible for the opinions of other soldiers however eminent I understand that Sir William Robertson is no longer in the employment of the Imperial Government.

Mr. P. P. Ginwala: My point was, if the Reuter's telegram is incorrect, is there any foundation for this opinion here?

Mr. President: The Honourable Member can discuss that with Sir William Robertson.

Captain E. V. Sassoon (Bombay Millowners' Association: Indian Commerce): We have to consider in this Finance Bill the methods for obtaining funds to meet the deficit as originally put forward in the Finance Member's Budget speech and modified to the extent of the concession made by the Honourable the Commerce Member. I should like here to express my appreciation which I think will be shared by a number of members as to the extremely pleasant way in which we have been met by the Commerce Member on Railway questions. He has, I feel, tried to meet us in every way he has found possible even though he may have felt that he was sacrificing his better judgment to some extent. I feel that he has tried to associate us with this task and I personally appreciate the fact that our efforts or suggestions should have been taken so seriously and that they should to some extent have been given effect to. I think possibly the reason why the majority of this House followed him on the point of the capital expenditure on the railways was because after he had assured us that he would look into the matter and would not spend more than was necessary we felt that we could trust him to carry out our wishes. Now, Sir, this attitude forms a rather sharp contrast with that of the Finance Department under the Finance Member. It may be that I have misunderstood the intentions of the Finance Member but I must say that I found no apparent desire on his part to meet the wishes of the House or its suggestions in any direction. It appeared to me that the Finance Member rejoicing as he does in the education of the British Treasury considers he knows a great deal more of such matters than some of us do. I put this forward because I wish any misunderstanding to be put right. I think some of us feel, if I am allowed to say so, that the Finance Member has taken up an attitude something like this: 'You may think so, but I don't and that settles the question.' If we take the printed sheet that we have in front of us, which represents the last statement made on Saturday before we adjourned, you will notice that of the cuts that were made by this Assembly one cut has been restored by the Governor General in Council and as to the other cuts, these apparently are not restored by the Governor General in Council but there is merely a statement made that it is considered that an allowance, which amounts to the amount of these cuts less Rs. 10,000, travelling allowance of the Members, should be made by a supplementary grant. In other words, if I am not very much mistaken in my reading of this paper, this House has been informed that because the Government or the department concerned does not consider that these cuts are possible, ipso facto they should be restored without any statement to the House as to whether the wishes of the House are to be in any way met and without the Governor General in Council being asked to restore these cuts. As far as one of the items is concerned, No. 6, regarding the Public Services Commission, I am one of those who think that the Government would have a strong case in asking the Governor General in Council to restore it, for the reason that it is not in the province of the Government of India to decide whether this Public Services Commission should come out or not and therefore I am one of those who did not consider it fair for us to blame them and to remove funds from them for an action for which they could in no way be held responsible. But what about the other points? The Government may have thought that our cuts were severe but the Government is responsible for the administration and I think that they should either have asked the Governor General in Council to restore them or that they should have at any rate shown some desire to carry out our wishes. It may be that it is chiefly a question of phraseology. It may be that they should have told us that they would do their best but they might have to come to us again. But as it is I for one do not think that it is treating this House with consideration if we are told "We do not think this cut is justified so we do not propose to take any notice of the action of the Assembly." Sir, in my opinion the powers of the Governor General in Council are quite necessary powers considering the newness of our constitution. But I think, Sir, they should be powers that should be kept in reserve and not used lightly. I look on the powers of the Governor General in Council in the same way as I look on the sword that is carried by His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief. Should His Excellency ever be attacked, I feel certain that he would give a very good account of himself with the help of his sword. But I doubt very seriously whether His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief considers it necessary to draw his sword every time he may want to sharpen a pencil or may wish to use a tooth-pick. I suggest, Sir, that the powers of the Governor General in Council should therefore be restricted to those occasions when it could honestly be said that the business of the Government and the administration could not be carried on owing to the vote of this House. Now, Sir, let us take the particular item that has been restored. The Finance Member admitted to us that there might be arguments in favour of this particular crore and 30 lakhs being taken as capital, but his argument was that as this had not been put to capital in the first place therefore he considered it inadvisable to transfer it now. But suppose the Government had met us in this respect, could it be said that the whole fabric of the administration of Government in India would rock? That, supposing this item had been taken from expenditure and put to capital, the Government could not go on with its work? The Honourable the Finance Member may have thought it inadvisable, he may have considered that the fact that this item which might be considered capital was originally put to expenditure might be misunderstood elsewhere and for that reason it was advisable to leave it where it was. But as this House, having considered his argument, gave its unmistakable view that it did not agree with it, I think this was a case where the Honourable the Finance Member might have used his discretion and have met us. I quite realize this was a non-votable item. I quite realize that the Honourable the Finance Member was entirely within his rights to say, "I will not consider this point, this cut that you have made in respect of a non-votable item: I will take it in its narrowest sense and therefore I will have it restored." I admit that, but I do think this was a case where the Honourable Member might have looked at the question from a broader aspect and have tried to meet us in some way. I do feel that the Honourable Member has not given signs of any desire to meet this House in any way as regards this matter. And now, Sir, we shall be asked by the Honourable Member to vote for an increase of the salt tax to meet this deficit: a deficit which some of us do not consider represents a true deficit. Some of us consider that if the accounts had been kept in another way, in a way which we consider justifiable even though it may not agree with the pre-conceived ideas of the Honourable the Finance Member, there would not be so large a deficit and this small deficit could have been met in another way than that proposed by the Honourable the Finance Member. Now, Sir, one of the charges that is made against this Assembly is that the Members of this Assembly do not represent the people of India. That is a charge that is thrown at us not only here but is thrown at us at Home. I venture to say that, as far as the proposed salt tax is concerned, we do represent the large majority of the people of India whether individuals with votes or without votes. I therefore say that if the Government on the advice of the Finance Member chooses to overrule any vote against the salt tax that may be given, they will have no excuse for stating that the vote was made in defiance of the wishes of the large majority of the people of India.

Now, Sir, there is another point on which I feel deeply. If the policy which I have seen working, the policy of the Government of India as we have seen it carried out by the Leader of the House, by the Commerce Member, and by, the other day, the Postmaster General in his explanation of his items, the policy of associating us with them, of not only asking us for our views but trying to put any views of ours into effect, if that policy is not to be gone on with, if we are to find ourselves faced with a policy which is "here are our views; we consider that only these views are right; it may be that we are not entirely correct in every detail but we propose that these views should be passed by the House in toto and if they are not passed by the House we shall ask the Governor General in Council to use his powers to put back every comma and every fullstop that may have been taken out." I venture to say that if that new policy, which I hope is not really the new policy, of the Government and which

I hope is due merely to my misunderstanding of the situation, if that is to be the new policy, I for one venture to say that my own activities here do not appear to justify the sacrifices that I have to make in not looking after my own affairs. I make a present to the Honourable the Finance Member of the obvious retort that this Assembly has got on very well without me in the past and will probably be able to do so in the future. I should welcome that retort. It would enable me to go to my supporters in my constituency and suggest that as I was doing no good here I might be allowed to look after my own business. If we are merely to record our assent to the proposals of the Government, there are probably a large number of other Members who could use their intelligence and their activities better elsewhere. It might be advisable and suitable for us to send the peons from our offices to take our places with instructions to cry "aye, aye" to every demand of the Government. That would no doubt be very satisfactory to Members of the Government; it would be equally satisfactory to our peons who would draw our allowances; the only people who would not be satisfied would be the negligible 250 millions of taxpayers in the country. Sir, I have put this point of view very strongly. I have put it forward perhaps more strongly than some people may think justifiable. (Cries of "No, no.") If I have done so I have done it on purpose, because I consider that the moment has come when we should definitely hear whether the policy that has so far been carried out, whether the treatment that we have been receiving, is to continue or whether there is going to be a change. Therefore, Sir, I beg the Leader of the House, with all the emphasis at my command, to pause before accepting this new policy, if there is a new policy, of the Finance Member, who with the face of a cherub and the methods of a tank, is more successfully, more expeditiously and more surely wrecking the Reforms than the most enthusiastic, the most optimistic extremist in his wildest hopes could have ever imagined possible.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar (Madras: Nominated Non-Official): Sir, I would have preferred to speak when section 2 of the Bill is to be taken into consideration; but, Sir, the bad example set by my Honourable friend, Sir Sivaswamy Aiyer, has spread and the contagion has affected me also. Sir, I wish to offer a few remarks upon the question which he raised, namely, whether there should be an uncovered deficit, and whether we should not do something to bridge the gulf, as he said. Sir, before proceeding further, I should like to add one sentence to what the Honourable Captain Sassoon has said. He has said that as regards the salt duty, we are here representing fully the people of this country; we are not a microscopic minority in this respect as we are called, we are representing the unanimous voice of the people of this country. There is only one matter, one consideration which I would urge upon Government and it is this. They knew very well that when there was a deficit of 20 crores, and when they brought forward a proposition to increase the salt duty, this House did not listen to it. This House showed by unmistakable terms, by the language then used, by the sentiments then expressed, that an enhanced salt duty was out of the question. That was at a time when there was a deficit of 20 crores of rupees; that was at a time when this Assembly had two years still to run. Now, when the deficit is 4½ crores, when we have got to face our constituencies, the Government have taken into their head to impose the salt duty. If they do this, can they rightly turn to us and say, "you ought to do everything in your power to help the Government and that otherwise there will be the necessity for certification"? If the certification comes, it will be brought about by their own act; they have brought it upon themselves, and we, as representatives of the people, are not responsible for it. Sir, that is a consideration which I would ask the Honourable the Finance Member to take into account; apparently he was not fully aware of the circumstances which led to the voting of the duty on the last occasion; and I believe if he had known the sentiments of the people in this matter, he would not have proposed to increase the salt duty by one hundred per cent. Sir, my Honourable friend, Sir Sivaswamy Aiyer, made one suggestion; he said, the suggestion which he made was a straight and clear one, namely, that there should be a surcharge of one anna in the rupee on the customs. With all deference to my friend, I think, he will find that this proposition will not go down the House, because what does it come to? Take for example, the duty on piece-goods. If we are going to add one anna in the rupee to the piece-goods, what would be the position? The seller would increase the price by 2 annas: and the persons whom we are so anxious to protect, namely, the poor people, would be the persons most hit by that. There can be no doubt if you increase the duty upon customs, it would affect the poor people; and there is no use (Voices of "No, no, no.") There is no use in saying that you want to protect them from the salt duty if you tell them at the same time that you are going to increase the duty on customs. It would be taking away with one hand what you give with the other. That is the position, and I say that any attempt to increase the customs duty by one anna would not be regarded as in any way helping the poor. Sir, there was a suggestion made by Sir Gordon Fraser on the last occasion. That holds the field, according to me. I admit that by having half an anna upon customs and also upon income-tax (Voices: "No, no") a good portion of the deficit will be covered. I know some of my friends will cry "No" "No" when the question of income-tax comes but if they are really anxious to help the poor, if they are really anxious to save them from heavy taxation, they ought to consent to an increase of half an anna in the rupee in the income-tax. Sir, there is only one more matter at present to be mentioned as I shall speak on the Bill later on, and it is this,—as regards the suggestion made by my friend, Dr. Gour, that the money collected during the interim period before the Act comes into force, should not be refunded. There was a cry from my friends that would be regarded as robbery. Now I put to them a plain issue. Supposing you remit it, who will get the money? The middleman would get the money. The poor people who have purchased the salt would not get the benefit of it; and therefore, if you are going to remit it it is not the poor man that will be helped, it is the middleman who will take the money; there is nothing wrong in the Government retaining the money which they collect now. Sir, there are other matters upon which I should like to speak later on. I hope that this discussion may now come to end and that we may proceed to consider the various sections of the Bill.

Mr. T. E. Moir (Madras: Nominated Official): Sir, I am most reluctant to continue the debate on the general question in view of the desire expressed by some Members of the House for a more detailed discussion, but there are one or two points to which I should like to draw attention which it will possibly not be in order for me to refer to when we come to the discussion of clause 2. In the first place, let me say that I listened to the speech of my quondam chief, Sir Sivaswamy Aiyer, with a great deal of [Mr. T. E. Moir.] interest and attention. I should like to express my regret, after hearing that speech, that for the greater part of this Session of the House, the Madras Presidency has been deprived, by circumstances beyond his control, of his powerful advocacy in certain concerns to which I shall have to refer. Next, Sir, I wish to make one general remark as to the speech of Dr. Gour. In reading through that interest in Chapter of the Inchoate Committee's Report which relates to Railways, I found certain cryptic allusions to something called a "super-heater". Now I really do not know what a super-heater is, and if I were placed in front of an engine by the Honourable Mr. Hindley, and asked to point it out I should be quite incapable of doing so. I can only suppose that a super-heater is in the mechanical world something that has the characteristics of Dr. Gour in the oratorical world. But the point which I wish to put and which arises out of his speech is, are we still discussing the Budget and the Finance Bill as put before us? Dr. Gour put his hands into his pocket and produced a telegram which I have not seen, and which apparently in his view has entirely upset the whole course of our debate, blown our Budget and our Finance Bill to the winds, and left us nothing to discuss. I merely wish to ask the Finance Member whether we are really still discussing the Finance Bill. I take it that we are. Then, Sir, I should like to refer to some remarks of Captain Sassoon. Captain Sassoon is exceedingly angry that a suggestion which he threw out in the course of our discussion on the Budget was not accepted by the Government (Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas: "Put forward by 67 Members")—of which at any rate he was one of the supporters. Well, Sir, may I say to the Honourable Member that when the point was under discussion I did my best to follow it, but when I looked to Captain Sassoon for an explanation of the proposal which would really commend itself to me if I may say so, Captain Sassoon entirely failed to render the proposal attractive to me. It may have been the fault of the proposal, or it may have been the fault of Captain Sassoon's advocacy, but to my mind it seemed to be merely an invitation to the House to resort to another of those wretched expedients which have in part led to the present situation and which I hope we are not going to repeat in future. (Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas: "That was a suggestion from Sir William Meyer.") I am not going to follow the Honourable Captain Sassoon in his constitutional discussions. He tried to lay down the principle that resort to the extraordinary powers conferred on the Governor General in Council should only be resorted to when certain conditions had been established. Between the lines, it seemed to me that what Captain Sassoon was really laying down was that these extraordinary powers were not to be resorted to unless Captain Sassoon himself agreed to their being used.

Captain E. V. Sassoon: I would like to inform the Honourable Member that I would not dream of arrogating to myself the knowledge that everything I said must be correct, but I thank the Honourable Member for considering that I would only suggest points that would be reasonable.

Mr. T. E. Moir: Sir, I now turn to the real issue which we have to face. In this paper which was circulated to us this morning we come up against the cardinal fact that we have still a deficit amounting to 368 lakhs, and as far as I can gather from the discussion, everybody is agreed that that deficit must be covered. I am not sure whether any one in the House dissents from that view. I take it that no one does, and therefore the only question that remains is now, how that deficit is to be covered. At present the proposal made by the Government, namely, to increase the salt tax from Rs. 1-4 to Rs. 2-8 a maund holds the field (Honourable Members: "No.") I do not say that other proposals have not been put forward, or that these other proposals are not deserving of consideration, but I notice that not one proposal has been put forward in one quarter which did not immediately evoke a storm of protest from another quarter of the House, and therefore from the practical point of view the proposal that does hold the field is the proposal of the Government of India. (Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhyakary: "Which has evoked a storm in all parts of the House.") Now, Sir, we have had an expression of that general opposition to the salt tax, but it has been nothing more than general. The question has not been presented from the financial point at all. Now we all know what is at the back of the minds of Honourable Members who oppose the salt tax. They frankly admit that it is not on financial grounds that they oppose the proposal of the Government (Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas: "No, no one admits that") but it is on, shall I call it, political grounds. (Mr. J. Chaudhuri: "Economy.") Now Sir, I think it would be well if somebody said a word on the salt tax from the financial point of view. As I have said, it at present holds the field, and at any rate the salt tax does present certain advantages. In the first place it is certain. In your financial machinery there is not a single tax that offers such an element of certainty as the salt tax. I think that will be generally admitted

Mr. President: If the Honourable Member proposes to discuss the merits of the salt tax, I think he had better reserve that until we come to clause 2. He is aware that I have allowed a general discussion to proceed in spite of the appeal made by the Finance Member and Sir Campbell Rhodes; but I must ask him not to go into much detail regarding the merits of the salt tax or its particular effect on the economic life of the country.

Mr. T. E. Moir: Sir, in accordance with your ruling, I shall, of course, reserve any remarks I may have to make from that point of view to a later stage. But, Sir, there is one point which I do wish to bring to the attention of certain Honourable Members of the House. My Honourable friend Mr. Kabeer-ud-din Ahmed I think rather objects to an official Member attempting to express his views or attempting to influence the House in any way. Now, Sir, it is perfectly true that I have got no constituency, but I can claim that I have a mandate and my mandate is derived from the Madras Presidency. The mandate which I have received from the Madras Presidency is either to secure in this Budget a reduction of our contributions or at least a Budget which will hold out to the Presidency to which I belong an immediate prospect of relief. Now, Sir, if we allow this Budget to pass with another deficit, I would ask Honourable Members who, like myself, come from that Presidency, what hope they would have of relief. And, remember, relief to us depends not on temporary expedients such as I have referred to but on the real gap between recurring expenditure and recurring revenue being filled up. Temporary expedients you cannot repeat, you exhaust them; and, therefore, so far as the Madras Presidency is concerned, what we require is a Budget which is really balanced, not one which is merely balanced on paper. Now, Sir, I have, I am afraid, more than once wearied the House on this subject, but still I have that mandate, and in loyalty to that mandate I must express my views. We may be defeated again; the result of our deliberations to-day may be that the deficit is not closed—let me repeat, the real deficit—but in that case I shall go back to the Madras Presidency and say, we have still to keep up the fight, success may yet attend upon our efforts; but, if that situation arises out of what I should consider the ill-judged and misguided action of the representatives of that Presidency, if they do not see that the interests of their Presidency is bound up with the financial solvency of the Government of India, I shall go back and say we are defeated and we are defeated finally. I shall not attempt in any way to minimise the fatal nature of that defeat. We, from Madras, have for the last two years by every possible means been urging upon the Government of India the necessity of balancing their Budget and of beginning the process of reducing the provincial contributions, a question in which not only was my own province concerned, though I can only speak for it. We have been urging them to do that. They have now placed before the House a balanced Budget and, if we from Madras take any share in any action which will convert that balanced Budget into an unbalanced one, then we have no longer any claim upon the Government of India at all. They have done their best and we have failed them at the last moment. I sincerely hope that no Member who represents the Madras Presidency will incur the reproach that he has misrepresented his own Presidency here and failed to take advantage of an opportunity, which it seems to me may never recur, of making assured that demand which all its representatives for the last two years have urged upon the Government of India.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar (Madras City: Non-Muhammadian Urban): Sir, much as I wished to desist from taking part in this general discussion, the remarks of the last speaker have called me on my feet. I do not wish to follow the example of assuming the role of a monitor either to individuals or to the Assembly, or to speak on behalf of Madras, which, Sir, is rather hydra-headed and it is very difficult for anybody to say that he represents Madras.

Sir, I do not recognise that this Assembly is responsible to make up the deficit which the Government of India think there ought to be. I quite realise that as far as possible this Assembly should try to balance the Budget, namely, the Budget it has framed and not the Budget which somebody else has framed, however responsible he may be. Sir, if the Honourable Mr. Moir thinks that Madras will welcome a balanced Budget by the imposition of a salt duty, then he is very much mistaken.

Mr. T. E. Moir: On a point of order, Sir. It is perhaps necessary that I should deal with that point. I am informed from Madras that responsible opinion in Madras regards this question of a reduction in the contributions as of such paramount importance that to secure it the Madras Presidency is prepared even to accept the burden of an additional salt tax.

(Honourable Members: "No, no.")

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: I deny the authority of those Honourable gentlemen in whose name my Honourable friend speaks. I know Madras much better than Mr. Moir does. Sir, I can speak in the name of Madras. I said I would not be tempted into any such path. Sir, I may say that the people whom I know and they are a vast community would not relish any balanced Budget with the salt tax imposed. Sir, Madras officials—honoured names there have been, may I quote the name of Mr. Gibson for the recollection of Mr. Moir—Madras officials have always stood against the imposition of the salt tax. They know the value of salt to the agricultural population of that Presidency, and it is idle to pretend

I turn now to another point. I have heard some of my Honourable friends more than once in the course of the last ten days talk about the temporary financial stringency, and these temporary difficulties we are in. I wish I could say that I believe that these are necessarily temporary. But can we honestly say so?

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: What about the military?

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: The military expenditure has been cut down this year from Rs. 67½ crores to Rs. 62 crores.

Dr. H. S. Gour: You must bring it down to Rs. 20 crores.

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: The figure given by the Inchcape Committee is Rs. 57½ crores. (A Voice: "Without altering the policy.") On the contrary, after making considerable reductions in the number of the troops, British and Indian. (A Voice: "You cannot change your policy.") I beg the Honourable Member's pardon. These estimates are framed on the assumption that the reductions agreed to by His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief and agreed to in principle at Home are carried out.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: May I point out that in Waziristan and on other temporary works we are spending more than 3 crores of rupees which will not be a recurring thing.

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: I was just coming to that point. It is perfectly true that there are non-recurrent items of expenditure in the Army estimates and I shall be disappointed—I will not put it higher than that at the moment—I shall be much disappointed if the Army estimates are as high as 62 crores next year, but there are a good many other considerations besides the fact of these non-recurrent items in Waziristan. There will be certain terminal charges—if there is no lag there will be terminal charges of rather heavy amounts I am afraid to meet in 1924-25. Over two crores of the reduction this year is purely a non-recurrent reduction, it is a reduction in stores. By living on existing stores we are able not to buy new ones so as to reduce our total reserve—a most important reduction of extreme value, but it does not enable you to look forward to recurrent reduction next year. When you have worked your reserves down to your minimum you have to go on replacing. So far from being a recurrent saving that is a non-recurrent saving which will have to be made good next year. Now, there is another item in our estimates to which to some extent the same considerations apply. The three crores of our reduction in Railway expenditure this year is a reduction of programme revenue. I do not want to go into the point, but obviously that is a postponement of expenditure—I do not want to beg the word by saying necessary—it is a postponement of expenditure which has to be made good if our Railways are to earn us interest. We cannot live on that sort of thing.

Then, as we stand, we have got a deficit of Rs. 3½ crores uncovered. Have you any real hope, real certainty that next year without any increase of taxation that could be covered? I do not say there is no hope, but is there any certainty? We have had two good monsoons and on the law of averages can we really expect two more or one more this year? People talk glibly about revival in trade. There has been an improvement in trade, but there can be no permanent, long-enduring improvement in trade while the French are in the Ruhr, while the whole of continental Europe is in the state in which it is, while our customers are unable to take our goods. There is no certainty of a surplus next year on the existing basis of taxation and I am afraid I must add there is a probability of a deficit unless we cover it by additional taxation this year. That is where the great merit of the Government's proposal comes in on financial grounds. The proposal would bring in $4\frac{1}{2}$ crores of additional revenue this year covering our deficit and leaving us a small surplus for contingencies. A year after it would add six crores to our revenue—an addition of $1\frac{1}{2}$ crores. That is a very important point, because with that duty imposed we shall be next year in a position in which I am prepared to say in the absence of very adverse circumstances the recurrence of a deficit is most unlikely. On the contrary there is every probability—given a few favourable turns of Fortune's wheel—that we may have quite an appreciable surplus, to do what we want to do with our surpluses. I shall come to what we want to do in a moment. But before I go on to that I want just to deal with some of the various suggestions that have been made for alternatives. As my friend from Madras said just now, the fact about all these alternatives is that they seem to secure no more unanimity than the salt tax. If the Government and a certain number of Members are opposed to the refusal of the salt tax, there is so far as I can see a complete absence of any kind of unanimity among Members of this House as to any substitute. What are the substitutes that have been suggested? I take for this purpose the order paper containing the amendments so that I may deal with some of them. I do not think that any suggestions have been made to-day which were not put forward before. I will take the duty on silver for which my friend, Sir Montagu Webb, holds a brief. This proposal has been put forward in each of the last two years and after discussion it was not agreed to. I do not mean that it has been voted against, I am not sure of the facts. I believe it was voted against one year. The difficulty about the duty on silver is that, first of all it is most undesirable to have a duty on the precious metals which come in and go out and thereby play a most important part in balancing imports and exports and exchange. A duty on precious metals is open to enormous theoretical difficulties. But I do not want to delay the House with them, if they agree, as I think they do, that it is a fact. The next difficulty is, although it is quite true we had a duty on silver some time, it did not contain any provision for a rebate on export. It is really, we are convinced, out of the question to introduce a duty on silver now without giving a rebate on export. Otherwise we shall play havoc with our exchange position. Silver must be able to go out freely to balance the position when the exchange is temporarily against us and we are in need of that support. Assuming that to be the position the yield is extremely uncertain. I begin with the year 1916-17. I do not begin with that year for any reason except that it seems to be going far enough back. In that year I see there was a net export of 12 million ounces. With a duty of let us say an anna, we should have lost 12,000,000 annas net in that year. In 1918-19 there was a small import. In 1920 there was again a small import. In 1921 it was fairly large, 21 million ounces of net imports. In 1921-22 it was 61 million. We should have got a large revenue that year. In 1922-23, for the first ten months we have 61 millions. We should have got considerable amount here. But the mere fact that we have just had two years of large imports here means it is quite possible that if you impose a duty this year, we might find that it has brought a loss and not a gain. In any case the amount that we can count on its bringing in this next year would be very small. I do not think the House will wish me to spend more time on that. It has been put forward in one special quarter but it has not very strong support. Next I take the export duty on petrol. Here I should like to observe that it is rather striking that among the suggestions that have been put forward export duties hold the foremost place. An export duty on petrol has been suggested. It has also been suggested that we should have an export duty on jute, and the export duty on hides and skins, which was our one small concession to the overburdened tax-payer, is opposed. I am reminded of the words of some one to-day, that income-tax is also a burden on the tax-payer. I was much interested to hear that. I wonder whether that is true of any other tax. The reason why the export duties are opposed is, I think, because it is rather difficult to see who the tax-payer is and on whom the burden falls. They sound popular in theory; they are dangerous things in practice as everybody knows and I think there was a general recommendation in the Fiscal Commission's report against export duties. Now, we have already had more than one debate on the question of an export duty on petrol. Opinions have differed but the Government are convinced that it would bring in a very small amount, nothing like the 70 lakhs which has been spoken of, while it would re-act very severely on the price, possibly, of petrol and certainly of kerosine in this country. If that is so, if it touched the price of kerosine, that would very quickly have an effect on the pocket of the very poor, much heavier than the salt tax, in spite of the fact that it would bring in much less than one-tenth of the sum expected from the other into the revenue.

I will leave my Honourable colleague the Member for Commerce to deal with the proposal not to reduce the export on hides and skins. That is a speciality. But obviously it is not really a question of covering our deficit or not however we deal with that. The reason that was put forward was the fact that it is regarded as essential in the interests of an existing export trade.

The import duty on iron and steel is the next suggestion. The House has just agreed that a Tariff Board ought to be set up. A Tariff Board is about to be set up and its first duty will be to look into the question of how to turn our unscientific revenue tariff with its protective results into the beginning of a protective tariff. Is this the moment to make a sudden change in your iron and steel position? (A Voice: "There is no difference of opinion.") I do not think there is any unanimity in this House on that subject. (A Voice: "For revenue purposes.") For revenue purposes! If it was imposed on all the railway material that was bought by the Government, it might bring in a considerable sum; but I do not think it would improve our net railway revenue. It is really a very complicated question, but for revenue purposes, a duty of the size that is suggested is out of the question; it is so obviously an important protective duty, protecting or otherwise all the numerous industries that depend on iron and steel—it is obviously a thing you cannot jump into. The next and last suggestion is the one that has become associated with the name of Sir Gordon Fraser. It has rather lost some of its pristine virtue in the course of discussion in the House. It was originally a proposal for half an anna in the rupee on all receipts from customs, excise and income-tax,— $\frac{1}{32}$ surcharge on all those receipts. When it was first put forward, I stated at the time that it was a novel idea to me and it seemed to be worth consideration. Now as an expedient, it is one to which there are considerable objections, but if it was really part of a final settlement of the deficit, however objectionable it might be, provided it is limited to 1/32, say 3 per cent., it is worth consideration. But there is no unanimity in the House on that question; but supposing that we agreed, how should the balance of the deficit be covered? It would bring in 2 crores if it was imposed in full but I agree with my Honourable friend, Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar—I think it was he—that the objections to imposing it on cotton imports and cotton excise are very great. I have worked out the figures, and I come to the conclusion that if you impose it on the cotton imports and excise, whereas the whole of the proposal of Sir Gordon Fraser would bring in only 2 crores per annum as against the 6 crores in a full year which is obtainable from salt, it involves an additional expenditure of almost exactly the same number of annas per annum as the increase in the salt tax for a poor family. If you take a family, an average family of 4, and you impose a 3 per cent. duty on cotton piecegoods, you get something between 11 and 12 annas for a family per annum, which is the additional charge you are imposing on them by their share in this cotton and cotton excise duty, which is very much the same as salt.

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas: Sir, we discovered in the course of the evidence before the Fiscal Commission that not more than 15 per cent. of the population use imported cloth, imported goods.

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: There are two possible answers to that. I was talking of an increase both of the excise and customs, but I will say this that I do not think that the manufacturer here gets the whole benefit of the difference between the customs and the excise duty.

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas: I am very sorry to interrupt the Honourable Member. But if he relies on his own admission in the Financial Statement, he will find that a year of depression has set in, and the prices will be low, whether the price of foreign cloth is high or not.

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: Sir, I am not quite sure what my Honourable friend, Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas, is driving at, but I think my statement holds that an increase even to the small extent of this sur-charge that is suggested, if it is imposed on the cotton excise and on the cotton customs, will have at least as harmful an effect on the budget of the very poor as the salt tax. (Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas: "Cotton excise, yes.") I think that I need not argue it any further with my Honourable friend. If you begin to make exceptions, the most popular exception in this House seems to be the income-tax. You can cut out the income-tax. (Voices: "No, no.") I think the House wants to cut out the income-tax; they want to make an exception to the proposal by cutting out the sur-charge on all income-tax. There is sufficient absence of unanimity in the House to justify me anyhow. That leaves you only the Customs. If you begin to make exceptions in the Customs and still retain it at only half an anna in the rupee, the maximum you would get from it is something under a crore. It is true it has been suggested that it should be increased to an anna in the rupee. What was a dangerous and undesirable expedient then becomes a thoroughly bad tax. The original suggestion was half an anna in the rupee, but if you do more it means you are simply increasing your Customs duty, and if you are going to do that, I think it is desirable that you should do it scientifically. I do not want to go arguing about the salt tax; I should be out of order if I did, and I have possibly been led a little further than I ought to have been in dealing with that point. The position remains that the salt tax is the proposal put forward by the Government and it is thoroughly unpopular. I would like, however, to quote two remarks that I heard during the votes for Demand Grants. One, the House will remember, by my friend, Mr. Ginwala, was that the salt tax has been universally condemned not on economic but on political grounds. Then we have a rather pretty commentary on that statement coming from an Honourable Member from the Punjab: "If anything will help non-co-operation it is the income-tax department," he said. Are we not in the position that all taxation is unpopular and the Government has made one unpopular proposal. A large number of equally unpopular proposals have been put forward by the House. There is no kind of unanimity as to which one of them we should accept. (An Honourable Member: "Accept the suggestion of the majority.") Is there a majority for any good tax that would cover our deficits? (Dr. H. S. Gour: "Customs.") I really do not think Honourable Members can say there is. If that is so, we come back to the salt tax, which is what the Government have proposed. Now we have proposed this because we want a really balanced budget this year, and if we can get it, real surpluses in the years to come. The salt tax does give us hope of obtaining such a result. In the absence of very adverse circumstances we surely could hope on that basis that the budget for next year and the year after would certainly balance, and given a few favourable results among the possible contingencies, we ought to have a balance sufficient to begin to do some of the things we want to do. Honourable Members in this House have referred again and again to expenditure on education and public health and similar services. Who spends money on education and health and similar services? It is the Provincial Governments. If you want to improve the position of the nation-building departments (I must say I do not like the phrase), the way to do it is to improve the Provincial budgets.

Dr. H. S. Gour: Let them stew in their own juice.

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: If they stew in their own juice it seems to me the 'nation-building' departments will stew in their own juice also. The Government's policy is, as soon as it has a surplus, to make a beginning in the reduction of the Provincial contributions. That is the Government's policy and it means to follow that policy as soon as it has a surplus. Obviously if it is going to have a deficit this year from the action of the House, it is not getting much encouragement in its policy. If the House is really anxious to secure an expansion of the 'nation-building' services, let it take action which will improve the position of those Provincial budgets. I do not confine myself merely to the provincial budgets. We have had years of expanding taxation. We may not, with that liability to the provinces, be able to look forward at a very early date to the converse, namely, reduction of taxation, but among those taxes there are some that certainly want readjusting. We want to have money to consider the tax side of our Budget, not from the point of view of what we must have but a little bit from the point of view of whether this or that tax is damaging this or that interest. We want to begin to make a reduction in some of our taxes, and, to do that, we want a steady surplus of income. I appeal, therefore to the House, I appeal to every Member of it and to all who are interested in Education and Public

[Sir Basil Blackett.]

Health, to all who are interested in the development of the industrial life of the country, to come to the support of Government in this matter. I made an appeal, which was listened to in a way that encouraged me, at the time that I introduced the Budget, that we should all work together. As a matter of fact, we have all been working together but we have got rather fissiparous, we have all got off a little bit to our own particular nostrums of doing it. Let us stick to this, that we must balance the budget, and we can balance the budget if we are prepared to make the sacrifice of voting for increased taxation if it is really necessary to do it. I do appeal to the House, let us come together and cover this deficit by our own efforts.

Sir P. S. Sivaswamy Aiyer: May I ask the Honourable Member whether the provision for maintenance of the fighting forces makes any allowance for the proposed reduction of the fighting units?

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: It assumes that all the reductions that are proposed by the Retrenchment Committee and were agreed to by His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief will be put into force as soon as possible. I am not, I am afraid, sufficiently familiar with the details to answer this question beyond that, but it is on the assumption that the recommendations of the Retrenchment Committee are accepted in full that those estimates were framed.

Sir P. S. Sivaswamy Aiyer: May I know when it is expected to come into force? I find that the provision for the maintenance of the fighting forces shows that the fighting forces are calculated at exactly the same strength as last year.

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: I think that our difficulty was that we were not able to show any other figures than the existing ones in the estimates, but it does not mean that no changes will take place during the year. I think the position really is this that, for this year, the lag and the terminal charges owing to the necessary postponement in effecting the reductions would balance the reductions that we are able to make during the course of the year. It is a method of showing the figures, but I do assure the House—and there is nothing hidden in what we have done—that we have prepared those figures on the basis that the whole of the Inchcape Committee's recommendations are put into force at the earliest possible moment.

(Several Honourable Members moved that the question be now put.)

The motion was adopted.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That the Bill to fix the duty on salt manufactured in, or imported by land into, certain parts of British India, to vary the duty leviable on certain articles under the Indian Tariff Act, 1894, to fix maximum rates of postage under the Indian Post Office Act, 1898, to amend the Indian Paper Currency Act, 1923, and to fix rates of income-tax, be taken into consideration."

The motion was adopted.

The Assembly then adjourned for Lunch till Three of the Clock.

The Assembly re-assembled after Lunch at Three of the Clock. Mr. President was in the Chair.

POINT OF ORDER.

Mr. President: Before we proceed to the consideration of the clauses of the Finance Bill, there is a matter to which I wish to draw the attention of the Assembly.

When a Member has spoken, the courtesy of debate requires his presence in the Chamber during succeeding speeches. As Honourable Members will have observed this morning, a speech, of a somewhat pointed, personal and forceful character was delivered by the Honourable Member from Bombay, Captain Sassoon. The Honourable Member then left the Chamber and therefore committed, perhaps inadvertently, an act of parliamentary discourtesy. In view of the character of his own speech it was peculiarly incumbent on Captain Sassoon to remain in his place till the luncheon adjournment.

I do not wish it to appear that the censure of the Chair falls too heavily on the individual Member in question. He is entitled to the benefit of the First Offenders Act; but I wish to establish now the proper practice that the courtesy of debate requires the presence in the Chamber, of a Member who has made a speech during succeeding speeches—especially if that speech is of a somewhat personal character, as in the present instance.

Mr. K. Ahmed: Is that the practice in England in the House of Commons?

Mr. President: Certainly.

Captain E. V. Sassoon: Sir, no one can regret more than I do the fact that owing to an engagement which I had to keep I was not present when the Honourable Member replied to my remarks. I can assure the House further that I, wrongly apparently, considered that the debate would have continued beyond the luncheon interval and that the reply would not be forthcoming till after that interval: otherwise, Sir, I can assure you and the House that nothing was further from my intention than to avoid being here when that reply was made.

CONSIDERATION OF CLAUSES OF BILL.

Mr. President: I think it would be convenient for the Assembly to proceed immediately to the consideration of clause 2, postponing consideration of clause 1 (Short Title, Extent and Duration) till the substantive proposals of the Bill have been considered and decided.

POINT OF ORDER.

Scope of Finance Bill.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: Sir, in the absence of my Honourable friend the Finance Member, as we are now taking up the clauses of the Finance Bill, I am compelled to ask you, if you could conveniently give us your ruling as to the admissibility of a number of amendments that have been tabled and are before the House? I refer of course to the point whether it is possible for non-official Members to put forward proposals involving increases of taxation.

Sir Campbell Rhodes: Sir, before you answer that question, I should like to ask you whether clause 67, sub-section (2), of the Government of India Act has any bearing upon this subject. It reads as follows:

"It shall not be lawful without the previous sanction of the Governor General to introduce at any meeting of either Chamber of the Indian Legislature any measure affecting the Public Debt or public revenues of India or imposing any charge on the revenues of India."

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas: I wonder if again I may call to the assistance of those who have given notice of amendments the precedent established by this House in the matter of amendments of the character referred to by my Honourable friend, the Home Member. You had an instance year before last and last year; the Honourable Members from Karachi, Mr. Price in the first instance and afterwards Sir Montagu Webb, introduced an amendment to have a silver duty; that was thoroughly discussed. Whatever the fate of it was I am not concerned with at the present moment, but it was allowed to be discussed. I myself in the year 1921 moved an amendment to the effect that an import duty on yarn should be levied; that was also allowed to be discussed. Then last year, if you look at the debates, you will find that instance after instance can be found of Members having introduced amendments which were fully discussed and no point of order was raised. Therefore, Sir, I hope that the House, having been entitled to move amendments in the last two years, the practice will be continued this year, especially when the suggestion for an alternative is, I should say, inevitable.

Dr. H. S. Gour: May I also, Sir, in this connection point out that section 67 (2) to which my friend, Sir Campbell Rhodes, has referred merely deals with the introduction of any measure, an independent measure, and does not rule out an amendment to an existing measure introduced by the Government and under discussion by this House.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: I have only asked of course for your ruling on this matter, and in the course of giving your ruling you will, no doubt, interpret for us the meaning of the words to which Dr. Gour has referred. But with reference to what Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas has said, I may remind him that the majority, if not all, of the motions to which he has referred just now were motions for the transfer of a particular article from one section to another of the Schedule.

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas: That is a technical distinction.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: There are of course on the paper before us motions which do not refer to the transfer of articles from one section to another of the Schedule, and indeed which refer to Acts which are not before the House at all. I merely wish to point this out to you, before you give your ruling.

Mr. President: There are really two points of order before the House. The first raises the question of the scope of the Finance Bill, and the amendments which will be in order in respect of its scope. The Finance Bill recites the Acts proposed to be amended. Acts not there recited will not be open to amendment by the House.

The second point is the question whether amendments proposing increases in taxation will be in order. The point raised by Dr. Gour seems to me to be one for legal argument and interpretation as to whether a measure, in the words of the Statute, must be held to cover an amendment or not.

On that I am not prepared to pronounce, but if it were held that the word 'measure' did include amendment, then I think the Chair would have to rule that that section could not be held to apply to the ordinary process of amendment because in that case it will not only rule out motions to increase a tax, but also motions to reduce it. Therefore I put that on one side.

There being nothing in the Rules and Standing Orders relating to amendments to the Finance Bill proposing increases of taxation, we are, I think, thrown back upon the procedure of the House of Commons upon which this procedure is based. I think it is obvious that the Imperial Parliament intended to confer the same powers and the same restrictions regarding the levy and appropriation of public revenues which it itself enjoys. Neither the House of Commons nor the Legislative Assembly is empowered to increase a demand for a grant. The House of Commons is equally forbidden to increase a tax. That general principle has been laid down many times, and I think that it is one which we ought to apply here. Therefore those amendments which propose increases of taxation will not be in order.

Sir Montagu Webb (Bombay: European): May I point out that the effect of this ruling will be this: This House is asked to consider legislation to provide the money for carrying on the work of administration next year, yet some of these amendments of the Tariff Act cannot be discussed as they add to the revenue. If we have not the power of proposing alternative variations in the Tariff Act, then this House has only power to cut down proposals for revenue, and produce deficits.

Mr. President: I think I can meet the Honourable Member's point at once. I have suggested in a previous ruling this morning that the discussion on clause 2 which increases the rate of the salt duty shall proceed on the basis not merely of the salt duty itself but of alternatives to it, and if in the course of the debate it is clear that there was—I shall not say unanimity—but a general agreement that a certain alternative is preferable to the salt duty, then that alternative could not be made effective in the present measure except on the motion of a Member of the Governor General's Executive Council. It is not that the proposals are excluded from discussion, but that they cannot be moved on a motion of a non-official Member. That is in strict accord with parliamentary practice in the House of Commons where a motion to propose an increase of tax must be made by a Minister of the Crown.

Dr. H. S. Gour: May I, Sir, in this connection inquire whether if the Government proposal is for the decrease of the tax, as for instance, under clause 2 of section 3, an amendment maintaining the status quo ante would be in order.

Mr. President: The existing charge is in the Indian Tariff Act as now on the Statute Book. Therefore, that item could not be held as a proposal to increase the tax.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: Sir, if I heard the Honourable the Leader of the House aright, he made a distinction between new proposals and proposals which merely tend to transfer one item from one part of the schedule to another, but the effect of the transfer will be to increase the duty. Would that be in order, Sir?

Mr. President: No; that falls under the ruling too.

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas: With your permission, Sir, I will say this. Take an article which is at present classed under the 15 per cent. tax. But if any Honourable Member suggests that this article should be transferred from the ordinary list to the list of articles of luxury, will it be open for him to do that, Sir?

Mr. President: The point is somewhat hypothetical. I should like to deal with it as a specific instance, but I think the general principle of the ruling must be held to apply there also.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: For instance, there is also a proposal of mine to transfer Steel and Iron from one part of the Schedule to another part of it, but in the same schedule. But the difference will be in the percentage which will be fixed upon it, for one is, I believe, 15 per cent. and the other is 20 per cent. It is really the Government amendment, and I propose another amendment with reference to those three items which are under consideration.

The Honourable Mr. O. A. Innes (Commerce and Industries Member): I should like to point out that the amendment proposed by Government in regard to the items mentioned by Mr. Rangachariar is merely to alter the wording in accordance with the Machinery Committee's Report. We have not proposed any alteration in the rate of tax. May I point out, Sir, that from the point of view of the Commerce and Industries Department, and of the trade and commerce of the country, it seems to me to be a very dangerous precedent that a proposal to increase the duty on very important classes of imports like that is liable to be sprung upon the trade and commerce of the country at two days' notice.

Sir P. S. Sivaswamy Aiyer: Sir, in view of the decision which you have just given and which you have told us represents the practice in the House of Commons, I do not propose to argue this point. But I just wish to make one last appeal to the non-official Members of the House, and it is this; that, unless we can come to some sort of agreement among ourselves as to what alternative or substituted tax we shall have and unless we cease to ride our individual hobbies to death. Unless we can come to an agreement among ourselves, we shall not be in a position to come to terms with the Government and make some definite suggestions to the Government, so that they may initiate the necessary constructive proposals themselves. We shall then be landed in very undesirable consequences. The result of our failing to reach anything like a fairly unanimous and on the whole acceptable conclusion will be that we shall not be able to introduce any one of the alternatives or get the Government to consider it, and, on the other hand, we may succeed in throwing out the proposal for enhancement of the duty on salt but throwing it out merely for the pleasure of throwing it out without succeeding in getting it out of the Statute Book. The result will be that, if we reject the salt tax and cannot constitutionally or in any regular manner get any alternative tax introduced, His Excellency the Viceroy will be obliged to restore it. (Honourable Members: "Why"?) That I think will be necessary. (Honourable Members: "Let the Government make other proposals.") There will be a deficit and I do not think it is reasonable for us to expect that the Governor General will or can contemplate with equanimity the accrual of another deficit for another year. The natural and the probable and reasonable result of our action in throwing out the salt tax without being able to substitute something else in its place, will be to have the salt tax restored and thus bring about the very result which all of us are anxious to avoid. (Honourable Members: "No.") And I therefore, make, with all the earnestness at my command, an appeal to Honourable Members of this House that, if it were possible to arrive at something like a fair agreement by getting a little more time for discussion among ourselves, I would suggest, that the discussion of the details might be adjourned till to-morrow.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: In any event, we are not agreeable to the salt tax. If the Government will accept anything else.

Sir P. S. Sivaswamy Aiyer: Unless we can agree upon some alternative, unless there is a chance of that alternative proposal being carried, the Government will not see its way to putting it forward on their own responsibility. That will be the result. If we are able to tell the Government that certain proposal will be acceptable to the House as a whole then we may expect the Government to put it forward. If the Government cannot put forward a constructive proposal as an alternative and if we cannot do it constitutionally, then the results which I have pictured are bound to ensue. If the other Members of the House think that there is any prospect of any agreement by adjourning the House now and meeting together and considering this matter, I would move that adjournment. Otherwise, not.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: May I say a word, Sir?

Mr. President: The original question was that clause 2 stand part of the Bill, since which an amendment has been moved that the debate be now adjourned.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: May I say a word now, Sir? My Honourable friend is placing us in a very awkward and a very undesirable position by making a suggestion of this kind. We do not know what is in the minds of the Government. We wanted that certain things should be done as regards the salt tax. We also made constructive proposals, but on the motion of the Leader of the House you have ruled, Sir, that those constructive proposals cannot be discussed. If the Government brings . . .

Mr. President: I have not given any such ruling. These subjects can be discussed but they can only be carried into law on a motion by a Minister of the Crown.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: I understood they can be discussed only if they are put forward by a Minister of the Crown.

Mr. President: The Honourable Member has forgotten the arrangement which we came to this morning. They can be discussed on the motion for salt tax as possible alternatives but they can only be made operative, that is, they can only be put into law on the motion by a Member of the Executive Council.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: I have followed that. I am sorry if I have not expressed my meaning clearly. What I say is, no constructive addition to the taxation can be made unless it be by a motion made by a Member of the Government. That is what I understood the position to be. There is no use discussing the matter unless there is any chance of its becoming law, and therefore, it is for the Government to say and to suggest on what matters they are willing to take the sense of the House and on what matters they are prepared to see that that sense is carried into effect. There is no use of an academic discussion on a matter which cannot ultimately be given effect to. In these circumstances, Sir, the position taken up by my Honourable friend seems to be somewhat unfortunate. So far as one question is concerned, there is no difference of opinion, and that is upon the question of salt tax. After we have discussed that and come to a decision if my Honourable friend moves for the adjournment of the House for considering on what matters the Government want the decision of the House, then it would be timely. But upon this question of salt tax, there is no difference of opinion and there is no use adjourning the House just at present.

Chaudhri Shahab-ud-Din (East Central Punjab: Muhammadan): Sir, the Honourable Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar has been speaking for Members on this side of the House. I do not know whether he considers me on this side or on the other side.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: I did not speak for you.

Chaudhri Shahab-ud-Din: Please listen. A number of Members in this House,—and I can say this without fear of contradiction—whatever may be the pretensions of those who are against the salt tax,—will vote for it, if they are assured that some other kind of tax is going to be imposed and accepted by the Government or by the House. Unless that question is decided satisfactorily, there are some who are not going to oppose the salt tax, and I may tell Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar that he is mistaken and should not count upon a number of Members on this side of the House.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: We will see about it.

Chaudhri Shahab-ud-Din: If we are assured that such and such a tax is going to take the place of the salt tax, we may vote with those who are against the salt tax. But if it is meant that the salt tax must be thrown out first and then some other tax, which may not affect uniformly all tax-payers of India, shall be imposed, then not only I but a number of Members will oppose the salt tax. That is the position and apart from considering what the attitude of Government in this matter will be, that is the question to be considered. We are prepared to throw out the salt tax provided you are prepared to accept some other kind of tax and this must be settled first. We must decide upon the form and amount of the tax, and then and then alone some of us will be prepared to oppose the salt tax. Otherwise, we shall firmly vote in its favour, because we consider that the tax we impose must be a uniform tax, and affect every man equally in the land. In my opinion every one should contribute equally for the maintenance of internal peace and order and for protection from external aggression. Those people who say that the salt tax must be thrown out because it is a very hard tax, a very dreadful tax, have not given any reasons.

Mr. President: The motion before the House is that the debate be adjourned and the arguments brought forward by the Honourable Member must be addressed to that point. The real question is whether it is possible on the floor of the House now to decide whether a satisfactory alternative to salt tax can be found or not, and if it cannot be found on the floor of the House, it may not be found by an adjournment during this afternoon.

Chaudhri Shahab-ud-Din: For these reasons I strongly support the motion for adjournment moved by Sir Sivaswamy Aiyer.

Dr. H. S. Gour: Honourable Members must realise that we are on the threshold of a grave constitutional crisis. Consequently nothing that we say or do should be done in a moment of hurry. But at the same time, the Honourable Sir Sivaswamy Aiyer's motion for an adjournment would have been well-justified if we had received any encouraging nod from either the Finance Member or any other occupant of the Treasury Benches. All the possible avenues for taxation, all the possible substitutes have been threshed out outside the House, and presented on the floor of this House this morning for the consideration of Government. Sir Sivaswamy Aiyer has himself made a very constructive proposal, but unfortunately for Members on this side of the House the Honourable the Finance Member has categorically dealt with each one of those proposals and rejected them. I do not understand that the Honourable the Finance Member is in a position to reconsider his decision, and unless he is in a position to reconsider that decision, I do not think that we shall gain anything by acceding to the motion for the adjournment of the House. What possible forms of taxation remain to be discussed upon which Members may informally or formally put their heads together? The Honourable the Finance Member in the course of his budget speech and later on in the course of the budget discussion has very clearly indicated that he and other Members of the Government of India have explored every avenue as a substitute for the salt tax, and I can assure the Honourable the Finance Member and his colleagues on the Treasury Benches that we have not been remiss in our anxiety to find substitutes and the substitutes that we offered to him this morning appear to be the only substitutes possible for the salt tax. In this view, unless he is in a position to reconsider his rejection of the proposals made this morning, it seems to me futile to adjourn the House for a further consideration. The Honourable Sir Sivaswamy Aiyer has not made any constructive proposal other than the proposals made, discussed and rejected this morning, and unless we are in a position to have a fresh matter to discuss with the Members of the Government I do not think we shall be well-justified in asking the House to adjourn this sitting and go into the lobbies or elsewhere to discuss proposals of a nebulous character upon which individual Members may agree but the House may not. I, therefore, suggest that nothing will be gained and time will be lost in acceding to the motion made by the Honourable Sir Sivaswamy Aiyer.

Mr. J. P. Cotelingam (Nominated: Indian Christians): Sir, I think the proposal for adjournment made by the Honourable Sir Sivaswamy Aiyer is a constructive proposal. A number of recommendations were made this forenoon by various Members of this House in order that the taxes so recoverable may cover the imposition of the salt duty to which nearly almost all the non-official Members are opposed. I think, Sir, if the proposal of the Honourable Sir Sivaswamy Aiyer is accepted by the House, that will give all the non-official Members an opportunity to come to some unanimity in the matter of fresh taxation, which may meet with the approval of the Finance Member. I would, therefore, urge that the House agree to the motion for adjournment in order that we may have time to consult and come to some conclusion.

Mr. Pyari Lal (Meerut Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I feel that the situation is one which we must approach in a spirit of give and take. Unless that spirit is present, there is no use adjourning the House. When the Honourable Sir Sivaswamy Aiyer made his motion,

[Mr. Pyari Lal.]

I thought he had received some encouragement, some hint, from Government that they were prepared to accept any alternative proposal that was unanimously made by the non-official Members of the House; but from what Dr. Gour has expressed and suggested, it does not appear to be the case. Therefore, I think no good object will be served by adjourning the House at this time. The situation that would arise would be simply this. Supposing all of us agreed that instead of the salt tax some other tax or taxes should be levied, supposing we unanimously agreed to that proposition and we went to the Government with it, and the Government discarded it, what would be the result? All our labour would be simply lost. Therefore, unless the Government side are equally agreeable to any alternative proposal that we make, there is no use adjourning the House.

Lieut.-Colonel H. A. J. Gidney (Nominated: Anglo-Indians): Sir, most of the speakers to-day in joining this discussion have referred to "we on this side" or "we on that side" of the House, but, I will say, that we, in this corner of the House, do not approve adjourning the House for this purpose.

Mr. S. C. Shahani (Sind Jagirdars and Zamindars: Landholders): Sir, my feeling is that we are almost unanimous with regard to surcharge of Customs and Income-tax. (Voices: "No; we are not; absolutely not.") At any rate, the majority of this House will accept it. There should be no difficulty then in removing the proposed enhancement of the salt duty. I propose that we do adjourn to come to some understanding. There is a possibility of our differences being very amicably adjusted.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: I am afraid that Sir Sivaswamy Aiyer's proposal took the House somewhat by surprise, and perhaps for that reason some of my friends opposite did not at first welcome it. I will tell the House what our own attitude is on the question. I recognise that Sir Sivaswamy Aiyer put it forward purely on his own account, and purely out of that desire which he has always shown to arrive at a decision more satisfactory than is likely to be attained by controversy in the House or by voting in the division rooms. When the Honourable Finance Member addressed the House this morning it was clear that of the various alternatives that had been under discussion, no one course seemed to commend itself to every section of the House. Even this afternoon in discussing merely the question of the adjournment some differences of opinion on the suggested alternatives have begun to manifest themselves. I can certainly say that we feel on our side that it would be an advantage if the House could be given an opportunity of seeing whether those who are opposed to the proposals of Government cannot consolidate on any one alternative proposal. If that were done, at all events the air would be clearer; at all events we should know whether we had then anything before us which we could accept. For that reason, and because I believe that these questions often do yield to informal discussion when they prove intractable to discussion across the floor of the House, I would support Sir Sivaswamy Aiyer's proposal; if we could discuss the matter between ourselves even for an hour we might do good. Certainly I do not think that it would be a waste of the time of the House.

Mr. President: The question is that the debate be now adjourned. The motion was adopted.

The Assembly then adjourned till Five Minutes to Five of the Clock.

The Assembly re-assembled at Five Minutes to Five of the Clock. Mr. President was in the Chair.

Sir Campbell Rhodes: Sir, I beg to move the adjournment of the House until to-morrow.

Mr. President: I cannot accept a motion for the adjournment of the House, because the power to adjourn the House lies with the Chair. I understand from the Honourable the Commerce Member that the Home Member will make a brief statement before we adjourn. I understand it is the intention to ask the Chair to adjourn the Assembly now. I therefore propose to wait till the Home Member can be in his place.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: We are grateful to you for allowing the adjournment this morning. We have, I think, made a certain amount of progress; though we have not arrived at accord, we have managed at least to define our positions more clearly. It is our general desire, Sir, that you should allow us a further opportunity of discussion by adjourning the House till the usual hour to-morrow.

The Assembly then adjourned till Eleven of the Clock on Tuesday, the 20th March, 1923.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

Tuesday, 20th March, 1923.

(b) Is Government aware that the absence of this class of accommodation is a source of great inconvenience and hardship to the travelling public?

(c) Will early steps be taken to provide this accommodation?

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: (a) The reply is in the affirmative.

(b) Government have no information to that effect.

(c) The Railway Administration is watching the result of providing intermediate class accommodation on trains between Bombay and Viramgam before introducing this class of accommodation on other services.

Rai Bahadur Bakshi Sohan Lal: Is it also a fact that there is no intermediate or third class on the Bombay Mail running between Lahore and Peshawar?

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: I do not think that that question arises, Sir.

POTATO TRAFFIC FROM FARRUKHABAD.

599. Munshi Iswar Saran: (a) Is it a fact that Farrukhabad in the United Provinces produces a great deal of potato which is sent to other places in the country?

(b) Is it a fact that the increase in the railway rates is threatening to seriously interfere with the export of potato from Farrukhabad?

(c) Is it a fact that the short supply of wagons to the potato dealers in Farrukhabad between January and May produces great loss and hardship?

(d) Is it a fact that there is considerable dissatisfaction against the goods department at the Farrukhabad railway station?

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: (a) The reply is in the affirmative.

(b), (c) and (d). Government have no information. Enquiry has been made and the result will be communicated to the Honourable Member in due course.

PRINCE OF WALES' SPECIAL TRAIN.

600. Mr. Mohammad Faiyaz Khan: (a) Will the Government be pleased to state the cost of the special train made last year for His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales while visiting India?

(b) What has become of that special train?

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: (a) His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales' special train was built at a cost of Rs. 9.26 lakhs (of which Rs. 6.12 lakhs represent the cost of material subsequently to be used for the ordinary purposes of the Railway for which it was originally obtained).

(b) The train was made up of eleven coaches which are being disposed of as follows:

One coach was sold to the Government of Bihar and Orissa for the use of the Governor of that province,

Six are being converted into ordinary stock for public traffic, and Four have not yet been finally disposed of, but they will probably be used for additions or replacements of stock.

Mr. K. Ahmed: At what price have they disposed of it to the Government of Bihar and Orissa?

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: I must ask for notice of that question.

EXECUTIVE MEMBER'S BOGIE CARRIAGE.

601. Mr. Mohammad Faiyaz Khan: What is the cost of making an eight wheeler bogie carriage for the use of an Executive Council Member of Government of India?

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: No carriage has been built for a Member of the Executive Council for many years. The existing carriages were built mostly at a cost of about Rs. 28,000 each. It is estimated that carriages of the same type, if built now, would cost about Rs. 50,000.

Mr. K. Ahmed: Is the cost of these carriages made for Members of the Executive Council votable or non-votable?

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: No demand for money for building a carriage of this kind has been put before the Legislative Assembly or is likely to be put before the Legislative Assembly.

MUTUAL BENEFIT SOCIETIES IN MADRAS.

602. Mr. M. G. Mukundaraja Ayyangar: Did the Government of India receive memorials, communications or written representations from the Secretaries of the several Permanent Funds in the Madras Presidency in January and February, 1923, that:

(a) the Mutual Benefit Societies earning small profits, sometimes much less than the taxable minimum in the case of other persons under the Finance Act, 1922, suffer a great deal by their being liable to pay income-tax at the uniform rate of one anna six pies in the rupee, whatever their income;

(b) rules may be framed prescribing the Mutual Benefit Societies which come under the Indian Income-tax Act;

(c) the provisions in the explanation to section 10 (2) (iii) of the Income-tax Act XI of 1922 be not made a dead letter by not framing any rules under the Act?

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: The answer is in the affirmative.

MUTUAL BENEFIT SOCIETIES: EXEMPTIONS UNDER INCOME-TAX ACT.

603. Mr. M. G. Mukundaraja Ayyangar: (1) Is it a fact that representations were made by a large number of Mutual Benefit Societies in the Madras Presidency, requesting the Government to make under section 60 of the Income-tax Act exemption in the case of Mutual Benefit Societies, and make clause A, Part I, of III Schedule of the Finance Act, 1922, applicable to them instead of Part B?

(2) Are the Government aware that the Mutual Benefit Societies are not satisfied with the way in which their representations were disposed of?

(3) Are the Government also aware that the way in which these representations were disposed of, was against the assurances given by the Government in this House when the Income-tax Bill was under discussion last year?

(4) If so, do the Government propose to have rules under the Income-tax Act, to relieve these Societies from the hardship to which they are now subject?

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: (1) Representations were received from several societies asking the Government to make special arrangements under section 60 of the Income-tax Act.

(2) The societies were informed that action was postponed pending a decision of the High Court to which reference had been made at the instance of one of the societies as to whether profits of such societies are taxable.

(3) The offer of the Government to make special arrangements under section 60 was rejected by the Assembly which inserted instead the Explanation to section 10 (2) (iii) of the Act.

(4) I would refer the Honourable Member to the reply given to question No. 158 at the meeting of the Legislative Assembly on the 12th February 1923.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: Sir, with reference to the High Court case referred to here, is it not under the old Act?

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: I do not think so, but I am not certain of the facts.

UNSTARRED QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

REGISTRATION OF AEROPLANES.

240. Mr. Saiyed Muhammad Abdulla: Will the Government be pleased to state what steps are taken after the registration of aeroplanes to inform the fact to the District Officers or Political Officers concerned to give publicity in the areas where the aeroplanes are to be used?

Colonel Sir Sydney Crookshank: Up to the present no such intimation has been furnished. The Government of India are, however, prepared to communicate the registration of aeroplanes to the Local Government or Administration concerned, leaving it to them to take such action as they may deem necessary.

LEAVE OF MR. J. K. N. KABRAJI.

241. Mr W. M. Hussanally: (a) With reference to the answer given by the Honourable Finance Member to my question No. 359, at Simla, is the Government of India aware that Mr. J. K. N. Kabraji, late Member of the Legislative Assembly, was granted by the Government of Bombay privilege leave for 5 months and five days from 26th October, 1921; that after having enjoyed leave for 1 month and 28 days only Mr. Kabraji came to Delhi on 24th December, 1921, having been authorised by the Government of Bombay to attend the Delhi Session of the Legislative Assembly; that Mr. Kabraji attended the meetings of the Standing Finance Committee from 2nd January, 1922, and thereafter the whole Session of the Legislative Assembly up to 28th March, 1922; that Mr. Kabraji's request to the Government of Bombay to count as duty the period of such attendance has been refused by that Government in their letter No. S.-20-2, dated 7th April, 1922, and again in their letter No. S.-20-2, dated 13th November, 1922, even after the answer to my question No. 359 had been communicated to that Government and without giving reasons for disregarding the ruling of the Government of India; and that Mr. Kabraji has consequently enjoyed only privilege leave for one month and 30 days excluding Christmas holidays, instead of 5 months and 5 days?

(b) Is it a fact that under the Leave Rules Mr. Kabraji could suffix Christmas holidays to the privilege leave enjoyed up to 23rd December, 1921, as he joined duty at Delhi after the Christmas holidays on 2nd January, 1922?

(c) In the circumstances does the Government of India propose to point out to the Government of Bombay that the period of Mr. Kabraji's attendance at Delhi must be counted as duty in view of the answer of the Government of India to my previous question?

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: I am having the matter investigated and will inform the Honourable Member of the results as soon as possible.

1ST AND 2ND CLASS RAILWAY TICKET CONCESSIONS.

242. Mr. Sambanda Mudaliar: (a) Will the Government be pleased to state the reason and circumstances under which the old system of issuing return first and second class tickets at reduced rates according to the practice that was in vogue some years back was discontinued by the authorities of the S. M. Railway and S. I. Railway?

(b) Having regard to the increase of rates, will Government be pleased to direct the authorities of S. M. Railway and S. I. Railway to adhere to the old system of issuing return first and second class tickets at reduced fares?

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley: (a) The system was discontinued not only on the Madras and Southern Mahratta and South Indian Railways but on all the other important railways. This measure was necessitated by the conditions brought about by the war.

(b) The Honourable Member is referred to the answer given to question No. 522 in this Assembly on the 9th March 1923.

INTERMEDIATE CLASS ACCOMMODATION ON MADRAS RAILWAYS.

243. Mr. Sambanda Mudaliar: (a) Is Government aware of the fact that there are no intermediate compartments in the mail and passenger trains running between Madras and Mettupalaiyam and the inconveniences which middle class people are put to?

(b) Will Government be pleased to direct the early introduction of intermediate compartments in the said railways to facilitate travelling?

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley: (a) The reply is in the affirmative, but Government is not aware of the alleged inconvenience referred to.

(b) Government are informed that intermediate class accommodation is not provided in passenger trains as there is no demand for it.

Intermediate class accommodation will be provided in the mail trains as additional stock is built. The present stock is unsuitable for the purpose.

TAXES ON MOTOR CARS.

244. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala:* (a) Is it a fact that motor car owners who purchase a car for Rs. 4,000 have to pay taxes on it in the first year amounting to Rs. 1,297 and thereafter nearly 10 per cent. of the initial cost every year subsequently as printed in the Pioneer of Allahabad, dated 8th March, 1923, at page 14?

(b) Are the Government aware that the United Provinces Government proposes to impose a further tax of Rs. 180 yearly on each motor car?

(c) If the reply be in the affirmative, do the Government propose to do anything in the matter?

SWEETMEAT STALLS AT STATIONS.

245. Rai T. P. Mukherjee Bahadur: (a) Will the Government be pleased to state the procedure adopted in making settlements of sweetmeat stalls, etc., at important Railway stations?

(b) For how many years at a time are those stalls generally settled?

(c) Are those stalls sold at a public auction? If so, is there any rule for the purpose? And will the Government be pleased to lay a copy of the rule on the table?

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley: (a) and (b). The procedure varies on different railways both in regard to the charging of fees and the term of contract, but the ordinary practice is that a nominal charge or license fee is made to vendors and contractors licensed to sell sweetmeats, etc., on station platforms, and contracts are usually made annually. As stated by me on 16th March 1923 in reply to question No. 565 in the case of the North Western Railway, no license fee is imposed on vendors.

(c) The reply is in the negative.

RECEIPTS FROM STATION VENDORS.

246. Rai T. P. Mukherjee Bahadur: Will the Government be pleased to state the amount received every year from the station vendors?

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley: The Honourable Member is referred to the answer given on the 5th February 1923 in this Assembly to item (4) of Question No. 141 asked by Lala Girdharilal Agarwala in a similar connection.

* The reply to this question will be printed in a later issue of these Debates.

REDUCTION OF BRITISH TROOPS IN INDIA.

Mr. E. Burdon (Army Secretary): Sir, I understand that some misapprehension has been created in regard to the position which has actually been reached in the matter of the proposed reduction of British troops in India, and with your permission, Sir, I should like to have an opportunity of removing that misapprehension. Actually the position is as follows:

His Majesty's Government have agreed, both in principle and in detail, to the reductions in British Infantry. These amount to a total reduction of something over 5,000 British soldiers from the existing establishment. The other two important recommendations with regard to reduction of British troops were the reductions of Artillery and British Cavalry. The position as regards these is as follows:

The House is aware that the Inchcape Committee proposed and His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief agreed to, amongst other things, reductions which included the equivalent of an entire Brigade of Artillery. His Majesty's Government are at present considering whether that is the most suitable form which the reduction of artillery should take. I would put the matter like this to make it as clear as possible to the House. One method of effecting the reduction is to abolish an entire brigade, that is to say, we should then have 10 instead of 11 brigades of artillery. Another alternative form would be to retain the whole of the 11 brigades but to retain them at a lower establishment, that is to say, with fewer horses, fewer guns and fewer men, and the guns which would be put out of commission in peace time would be kept in store and would be available to be drawn upon in the case of mobilisation or emergency. A similar question is under discussion as regards the British Cavalry, that is to say, whether entire units should be disbanded or whether the units should be retained at a lower establishment; for example, you may have three squadrons instead of four squadrons. Now, the question which form the reduction should take is a purely technical military matter. Naturally every one concerned is anxious that the reduction should do as little harm as possible. On the other hand, whichever technical expedient is adopted, so far as the financial aspect of the matter is concerned, it is immaterial. The pecuniary saving would in either event be obtained, and I am able to inform the House that in principle His Majesty's Government have agreed, subject to the settlement of the form, to the pecuniary saving of the amount required being carried out.

Dr. H. S. Gour (Nagpur Division: Non-Muhammadan): Sir, may I in this connection inquire how far His Majesty's Government have accepted the proposal formulated, if any, by the Government of India accepting the recommendations and Resolutions passed last year on the Esher Committee's Report, that the Army in India shall be primarily and solely maintained for the defence of India and not for any Imperial purposes; secondly, what were the recommendations of the Government of India regarding the reduction of troops in consequence of the Resolution of this House; thirdly, what were the reductions actually sanctioned by His Majesty's Government and what reductions were vetoed by His Majesty's Government?

Mr. President: I think the questions asked are important and should appear on the paper with notice.

Mr. E. Burdon: I am quite willing to answer them, Sir. The answer to the first part of the question—I am not sure I got the third part correctly, perhaps my Honourable friend will repeat it later on—but as regards the first part—what action has been taken with regard to the Esher Committee Resolutions—well, a very long printed statement was laid on the table of this House not so very long ago, in response to a question; and that contains the information which the Honourable Member desires. With regard to the particular Resolution to which he referred, I may say that that Resolution has been accepted by everybody concerned, I am speaking of the Resolution regarding the maintenance of the Army in India solely for the requirements of India—that is the Resolution to which I think my Honourable friend referred. The second part of the question I am afraid has escaped me

Dr. H. S. Gour: The second part of my question was, what was the actual reduction recommended by the Government of India in the British troops in this country and what were the reductions actually sanctioned?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey (Home Member): That was not the Honourable gentleman's question. What he asked was, what was the reduction recommended as the result of the Resolution of this House. As a result of the Resolution of this House no reduction was involved and no reduction was recommended.

Dr. H. S. Gour: I modify the question now, Sir. What was the reduction recommended by the Government of India?

Mr. President: I think the result has proved that the Chair was right; the question must be put down with notice.

Mr. K. Ahmed (Rajshahi Division: Muhammadan Rural): If the Chair will permit me, Sir, may I inquire whether anybody either from India or from England representing the Government of India went and took part in the Brussels International Conference where it was decided only about two years ago that no nation should keep up an army incurring a cost of more than 20 per cent. of the revenues of that country?

Mr. President: That also had better be put on the paper.

THE BUDGET—THE INDIAN FINANCE BILL.

FINAL STAGE—concl'd.

Mr. President: The House will now resume the consideration of the Bill to fix the duty on salt manufactured in, or imported by land into, certain parts of British India, to vary the duty leviable on certain articles under the Indian Tariff Act, 1894, to fix maximum rates of postage under the Indian Post Office Act, 1898, to amend the Indian Paper Currency Act, 1923, and to fix rates of income-tax.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar (Madras: Nominated Non-Official): Sir, I do not propose to move my amendment* unless you allow me to amend it in the terms in which it is put by some of my friends lower down. At the same time I admit that it might be said that since others have given notice of Resolutions on the same lines, I should have no precedence in a matter like this. Therefore if you would allow me to move one of the amendments of which notice has already been given, I will move; otherwise I withdraw my amendment.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar (Madras City: Non-Muhammadan Urban): I object to any such procedure.

* "Omit clause 2 of the Bill and re-number the subsequent clauses."

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar I have not sat down yet.

Mr. President: The Honourable Member had better sit down now. If the Honourable Member does not move his amendment I must call on Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas.

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas (Bombay City: Non-Muhammadan Urban): I stand in the same position, Sir, as Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar; I prefer the other amendments.

Dr. H. S. Gour (Nagpur Division: Non-Muhammadan): I move:

"That clause 2 of the Bill be omitted."

(Cries of 'No.') Sir, Honourable Members have already in their possession a copy of the Finance Bill containing clause 2. I shall not, therefore, read it for the information of the House. The purpose of my amendment is to move that the duty on salt be not enhanced. This has been the subject of prolonged discussion in this House, and Honourable Members will remember that a similar motion moved by Government on the last occasion during the last budget was considered, debated and defeated by the vote of this House. That was, Sir, also a deficit year. This year again we have a deficit, though a smaller one. The question arises whether we should or should not balance the budget. On that question Honourable Members have expressed their views with no uncertain voice in the course of general discussions. We are all agreed that the budget must be balanced, but we have suggested ways and means for balancing the budget. All our suggestions have been rejected by the Honourable Finance Member

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas: May I rise to a point of order? Last year this was the ruling that you were pleased to give with regard to the amendments being moved. Mr. Spence asked:

"May I know in what order the amendments are taken up? There is no reference in the printed documents which we have in hand."

The President said:

"The Title and the Preamble to the Bill come last. Therefore the amendments on the first page cannot be moved just now. When I called upon Rao Bahadur Rangachariar to move his amendment to clause 1, he made a reasonable suggestion to postpone. In items 13 to 24 the motion that clause 2 be omitted is unnecessary—in fact it is not allowed by the Standing Orders—and therefore we come to item No. 25 where Mr. Joshi desires to substitute the words 'one rupee and four annas' for the words 'two rupees and eight annas' in the clause imposing the enhanced salt duty."

Sir, you ruled last year that it was not only unnecessary—amendments of this character—but that it was not allowed by Standing Orders. May I ask your ruling now whether this amendment is in order?

Mr. President: Which Standing Order does the Honourable Member refer to?

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas: I have quoted from the passage that you yourself, Sir, referred to; this is from your speech

Mr. President: If the Honourable Member will read Standing Order 33, he will see that that ruling was given under a misapprehension regarding the scope of the existing Salt Act. The Honourable Member will see that the Standing Order No. 33 says that an amendment may not be moved which has merely the effect of a negative vote. I admit at that time I thought it merely had the effect of a negative vote, and it was not, I think, till later in the debate that I discovered that it had a positive effect, because it restored salt to its original position; it was more than a direct negative.

Dr. H. S. Gour: Sir, I was going to say when I was interrupted that we have explored every possible avenue and made our suggestions for the consideration of the Government. All these suggestions have been rejected by Government. The sole question, therefore, that the Government wish to press for the consideration of this House is the question relating to the enhancement of the salt tax. Now, Sir, I should like clearly to define for the non-official Honourable Members the position regarding the enhancement of the salt duty. There can be no doubt that the whole country is unanimously opposed to the enhancement of the salt tax. We are the representatives of the people of this country. (A Voice: "Why was it imposed last year?") We have received a mandate in no uncertain terms that we should not vote for the enhancement of the salt duty. As representatives of the people, whatever may be your personal views, you are bound to carry out the wishes of your constituency. It would be in accordance with parliamentary constitution and tradition. In England a duty on tea was sought to be levied. Members of the House felt that a duty on tea would affect the general tax-payer in a very small way and that it would not perceptibly increase the price of tea, and yet they were bound to obey the mandate of their constituents and oppose the tea duty. I submit, therefore, it would be in accordance with parliamentary constitution and tradition for the Members of this House to carry out the behests of their constituents. If they do not follow the views of their electorates, they cease to represent them, and whatever therefore may be their personal views either on political or economic grounds, I submit, standing as we do here as representatives of the people of this country, we must and are bound to voice their views and give effect to their representations. In ordinary circumstances, that would, I submit, close the matter so far as we, the elected non-officials in this House, are concerned; but we have other reasons to oppose the enhancement of salt duty. It has been said by the Honourable the Finance Member and repeated by the other official spokesmen, that the duty on salt will fall very slightly upon the consumer since its incidence will be no more than three annas per head per annum. But, Sir, it cannot be forgotten, that to tax salt is to tax alike man and beast, because salt is a necessity not only for human beings but also for cattle, and no account has been taken in the statistics presented to us of the large consumption of salt necessary for the maintenance in fit condition of agricultural cattle. But, Sir, the Honourable the Finance Member reminded us the other day that statistics are things which can be used to prove anything, and I therefore ask Honourable Members not to exaggerate the importance of the figures that have been presented to us. We have to look at this question from the broad standpoint of commonsense. The people don't like the tax, and we, therefore, as representatives of the people, cannot support it; and when, added to this fact, we have the further fact that we know as a matter of fact that poor people will be hard hit by the enhancement of this duty, the case against the increase of salt tax is strengthened. Sir, I move my amendment.

(A Voice: "Which is that amendment please?")

Mr. President: The motion is:

"Omit clause 2."

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett (Finance Member): Sir, I do not propose at this stage to attempt to enter into argumentation in regard to the salt tax in general. I wish merely to point out to the House what the effect of this amendment is. As you have already stated, Sir, it is more than a direct negative. It does not restore the position to what it has been in the last year when the duty remained at Rs. 1-4-0. It has this effect, that after the 31st March of this year there will cease to be any duty imposed by an Act of this House on salt, but automatically the powers of the Governor General in Council granted by an Act of 1888 to impose a duty not exceeding Rs. 3 per maund on salt in India are revived. That is to say, if this amendment is accepted, the House, as I see it, hands back to the Government the duty of deciding with what duty and at what rate salt shall be taxed up to Rs. 3.

(Cries of "Withdraw, withdraw.")

Mr. C. A. H. Townsend (Punjab: Nominated Official): Sir, I understand that some Honourable Members of this House go so far as to wish to abolish the salt tax altogether. A few are willing to agree to an increase in the rate of taxation

Dr. Nand Lal (West Punjab: Non-Muhammadan): There is no proposal to abolish it altogether.

Mr. C. A. H. Townsend: . . . but not to the extent asked for by the Government. But many Honourable Members of this House have sent in amendments the object of which is to leave the salt tax as it is. Before the Assembly comes to a decision, Sir, on this important matter I wish to put a few considerations before it. First, on the general question as to whether it is desirable to have a salt tax in this country or not. I wonder if it is realised that an unskilled Punjabi labourer who owns no land and who, I may say, is now getting at least twelve to fourteen annas a day, need pay, if he drinks no liquor, no taxation whatever to Government other than the small amount due on the salt he uses. He lives in a house made of the simplest materials, can dress himself and his family of khadar cloth made of local cotton and spun and woven in his village. Many eminent economists hold the view that every resident of a country, however poor, should contribute some small amount to the revenues of his Government. Many critics say that salt is a necessity of life and therefore should not be taxed. India is not the only country in which salt is a fiscal monopoly. It is the same both in Austria and Italy. Dr. Gour, Sir, referred to the duty on tea in England. But in that cold country tea is practically a necessity of life, and every pound of tea that enters the country pays now a tax of over 3d. per pound, and that represents in Indian currency a duty of over of Rs. 15 per maund. Now, as to the rate of duty. The Honourable Finance Member said, and Dr. Gour accepted his figure, that the proposed doubling of the tax would involve an additional expenditure of a rupee per year per family. Well, Sir, a few days ago, I had the temerity to check the figure of the Honourable the Finance Member. Strange as it may appear, I found it correct. Dr. Gour has just said that this figure of 3 annas a head does not make any allowance for the salt required for cattle. Well, Sir, I asked a friend of mine, who is in intimate touch with the salt question in the Punjab, which he has specially studied; he tells me that this figure of three annas does include an allowance for cattle. I mentioned, Sir, a few days ago the troubles we had in North India owing to the cessation of the import of salt into India during the war. I wish the House would realise that between 1917 and 1919 salt in the Punjab, although the duty was what it is now, sold at much higher rates than it will even if the whole increase of duty Government ask for is sanctioned. In 1918 the price of salt at Lahore was very nearly Rs. 5 a maund. Even with a duty of Rs. 2-8, salt should be available in that city at Rs. 3-8 a maund. These high rates lasted for three years; but the difference between the tax and the retail price went then not into the pockets of Government, but only enriched speculators and middlemen. Of course, our people grumbled, but they "stuck it" all right. Surely, Sir, it is not unreasonable for Government to ask the people in the present financial stress to pay an increased amount for their salt, but still an amount considerably less than they paid for some years to mere speculators and middlemen.

To adopt a phrase used by the great Duke of Wellington in another connection "the Government of India has to be carried on somehow." Well, the Government of India ask the House for means to enable it to be carried on, and put forward the only constructive proposal that I have heard in the long discussions that have taken place on this subject in the last fortnight, which will give them the minimum amount of additional taxation they required. Is it fair, Sir, I ask the House, to the Government of India, with its heavy responsibilities, is it fair to the reputation of the House itself, as Sir Sivaswamy Aiyer said yesterday, to decline to sanction the extra taxation, and to leave, as last year, an uncovered gap between its anticipated income and expenditure for next year of millions of pounds sterling?

Rai Bahadur Pandit J. L. Bhargava (Ambala Division: Non-Muhammadan): Sir, as pointed out by the Honourable the Finance Member, if this amendment is carried by the House, the effect will be that there will be no section in the Indian Finance Act which can fix the salt duty. The effect of this amendment being carried, therefore, would be ultimately that the Government will, under the Salt Tax, be able to fix a duty up to a maximum of Rs. 3. Now, that is not the object which the Honourable Mover has in view. His object is to have the tax reduced to Rs. 1-4 and not to allow it to be enhanced. As this object can be secured only by the amendments which appear on the paper in my name and the names of several gentlemen who have given notice of a motion that Rs. 2-8 be reduced to Rs. 1-4, I would request my Honourable friend the Mover to withdraw his motion.

Dr. H. S. Gour: Sir, I withdraw my motion.

The amendment* was, by leave of the Assembly, withdrawn.

Dr. Nand Lal: May I submit, Sir, that I may be allowed to move this amendment† of mine after we have discussed the question, which is the vital question before the House, as to whether there should be any increase in the duty on salt or not? Because my amendment will be of material good if it is discussed after the discussion on that point.

Mr. President: Is it the Honourable Member's intention to raise by the words he proposes to insert the question whether a rebate should be payable or not for the tax paid in March?

* "Omit clause 2 of the Bill."

† "(a) In clause 2 (1) insert the following at the beginning:—"With effect from the first day of April, 1923."

Dr. Nand Lal: Yes, Sir.

Mr. President: Then it had better be raised, I think, on an amendment of a more precise character.

Dr. Nand Lal: Sir, have I your permission to move my other amendment, No. 17, relating to the vital question which is before us?

Mr. President: Mr. Rangachariar's amendment comes first.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: Sir, I am delighted, and I am sure the House is delighted that, by the timely warning given by the Honourable the Finance Member, the House and the country have been saved from a catastrophe which the last amendment threatened. Sir, the Government have opened their mouths wide in putting forward this motion to enhance the salt duty. There is a deficit of 3.68 crores and they put forward a proposal to raise a revenue of 6 crores by putting on an extra Rs. 1-4 in the way of salt duty. Sir, after listening to the remarks made by the Honourable the Finance Member yesterday, my mind was set thinking as to what really is at the back of the Government of India in this proposal. I am afraid, Sir, they want to stabilise the present rate of expenditure by this proposal. The Honourable the Finance Member refuses to look at the deficit of this year as a mere temporary phase. He has told us yesterday that he considers this will be a permanent deficit and what is the necessary implication therefrom? That the military expenditure should remain at or near 58 crores. Sir, His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief has already told us that he refuses to accept the recommendation of the Inchcape Committee that the military expenditure should eventually be reduced to 50 crores. His Excellency has deliberately stated that to this Assembly, and this statement by the Honourable the Finance Member supports that statement made by His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief. The Honourable the Finance Member is confronted with this difficulty. He takes it that the permanent expenditure of India will be every year 180 crores; he wants the permanent revenue to remain at about 180 crores. That is why he wants the salt tax to be enhanced. The surcharge will be temporary; the salt tax will be permanent. That is the view which he has taken and that is the view this House is asked to endorse by a vote on this clause. I ask Honourable Members to remember that. If you will look back at the history of this duty, from the year 1888 to 1903 the Executive Government of this country, with whom this power vested of either enhancing it or reducing it, kept it at Rs. 2-8-0. In 1903 the Executive Government, without any pressure from the representatives of the people, themselves voluntarily reduced it to Rs. 2 and again they reduced it to Rs. 1-8-0. They again reduced it to Re. 1-0-0, and in times of dire need in the year 1916 they had the courage only to put it up by 4 annas. Sir, when a bureaucratic Government was running the Government of this country, without any vote of even a representative or an unrepresentative House, when the Executive Government could not summon courage to put on any extra salt duty, a representative House is called upon to enhance the duty by 100 per cent. Let us remember that when we give our votes in this matter. When the Executive Government themselves felt the injustice of piling up this salt duty, are you, a representative House, going to allow this enhancement? Sir, it has been said that the pressure which will be felt by the people by the enhancement of the salt duty will be very light and will be only 3 annas per head of the population. When people are spending money in liquors, in toddy and other things, when prices have gone up, and when wages have gone up, the salt duty has not gone up commensurately and therefore, they say, what is the harm in putting on this duty? May not the same argument be applied to any tax which you put on? We are eating so much rice, Sir. Every family spends much more on rice than they spend on salt. They spend much more on wheat than they spend on salt. So that, why not put on a tax on food? You have put on a tax on clothing. These are the two things which no civilised Government will ever venture to put a tax upon. They are the necessities of life. No politician, no economist will tell you that any country can put on a tax on food or clothing. Sir, this is a necessity for life—necessity for existence. The salt tax is in theory—it is not a mere political question which politicians want to take advantage of—it is in theory—I have the authority of the Honourable Mr. Innes last year—in theory it is unsound; in practice it works out unjustly. In practice it works out unjustly because the capacity to pay the tax becomes less and less as you go down the scale. Sir, I do not eat more salt than my servant. In fact, perhaps I eat less. He uses more salt than I do. Therefore, whereas I can afford to spend 3 annas on myself, my servant cannot afford to spend 3 annas without the burden being felt more largely by him than it bears upon me. So that, in theory it is unsound and in practice it works out inequitably, and that is the reason why the Government of India, when they were responsible to the people without the intervention of a Legislature, felt the inequity of it, felt the injustice of it and they would not dare to enhance the duty. Sir, last year it was perfectly open to my Honourable friends on the Treasury Bench to have enhanced the duty without consulting this Assembly. There was no legislative prohibition against their enhancing it up to Rs. 3 a maund. They had the power in their hands. Why did they not do it? Why did they consult us? Why did they deliberately put it before us and desired a vote of this House on that matter? Sir, they wanted to avoid the odium of the curse of the 300 million people of this country. Sir, as has been stated in books on taxation, to tax the very poor at a shilling costs two shillings. But the ultimate cost cannot be measured. It goes deep down into the minds of these people and that is the surest method of making your Government unpopular. That is the surest method of making them say, "Here is a Government which will tax even our very necessities of life. What use is that Government to me if I cannot have my sprinkle of salt without paying for it?" That will be the attitude they will adopt. It is that which has weighed with the Government all along. We have been asked to look at it from a wrong point of view altogether. We are told that it is not going to be felt. Nothing is going to be felt. But remember this. It is the last straw that breaks the camel's back. We have already increased the cost of living on account of economic world conditions. We have already increased the cost of living by putting on these import duties. They have to pay for clothing, which is a necessity, much more than they have hitherto been paying for it. Where they were using—as the Honourable Sir Campbell Rhodes told us last year—18 yards before, they are now content with using 9 yards. I hope I am quoting the figures correctly. (A Voice: "10 yards.") They are using 10 yards. That shows that if you put on the prices of these things, they stint themselves to the extent of the barest necessity. So also, if we increase the price of salt, they will be obliged to stint in the supply of salt to themselves and to the members of their families and to the poor cattle which they keep. It needs no argument to convince the House that that will be the necessary result. Once you make the salt cheap, there is more consumption. Once you make it

dear, there is less consumption. That argues for itself. Therefore, I do not think I should take the time of the House much longer in arguing these matters. So that, my proposition is, let us have the existing duty. Let there be no more enhancement of this tax. We have already agreed to Rs. 1-4-0 and I am glad the Government have given the power to this Assembly to vote upon this question and they have not ventured to impose it themselves. Therefore, my amendment is to substitute the figures Rs. 1-4-0 for the figures Rs. 2-8-0 which are proposed in the Bill. Sir, this will no doubt leave us with a deficit. What is after all a deficit? The deficit can be worked down in two ways. We have already made several suggestions to the Government as to how they may meet this deficit by further taxation on our part and how on their part they might bring down the deficit by practising more economy. Sir, the Inchcape Committee have not said the last word when they fixed the figure at 19 crores. Page after page they have said, "This matter requires investigation; that matter requires investigation" and they have referred to various matters under every head. When are you going to investigate these? Are you going to investigate these conditions or not with a view to effecting economy? If you do, you will be effecting further economy and you need not be afraid.

Mr. President: Order, order. I do not think I will allow salt to include the Inchcape Committee.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: I beg your pardon, Sir. This deficit need not stagger us at all. After all, the country's credit did not suffer when we had Rs. 20 crores of deficit one year. The country's credit did not suffer when we had Rs. 9 crores of deficit in another year. And surely, we are not going to be staggered by the statement made by the Honourable the Finance Member that because we are leaving a deficit of Rs. 3 crores, the credit is always to suffer subsequently.

Mr. President: The Honourable Member will realise that there is a further stage when the Assembly can discuss the final effect of what is done on the Budget. That is the stage that the Bill be passed. Here we are discussing a more restricted question now, namely, reduction of the figure proposed by Government to the figure proposed by the Honourable Member.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: I move:

"In clause 2 (1) that the word and figures Rs. 1-4-0 be substituted for the word and figures Rs. 2-8-0."

The Honourable Mr. O. A. Innes (Commerce and Industries Member): Sir, my Honourable friend Mr. Rangachariar is a difficult man to follow. I do not mind his eloquence. I know this Assembly well enough. It is a true democratic Assembly and mere eloquence makes very little impression upon it. What does count with this Assembly is sincerity and what makes Mr. Rangachariar a difficult man to follow is that he uses his eloquence to reinforce convictions which he feels most sincerely. But, Sir, let me ask Mr. Rangachariar and let me ask this House to give us on this side of the House credit for equal sincerity. Mr. Rangachariar yesterday said that in putting forward this proposal to enhance the duty on salt the Government had wantonly provoked a collision with the House. Sir, I do not think that Mr. Rangachariar should have made that remark. We on the Government side have tried to work with this House for the last three years and I am not aware that there was anything in our record which authorised or justified Mr. Rangachariar to make so serious a charge against the Government. (A Voice: "Certification.") (Mr. Rangachariar: "With respect to this proposal.") It is perfectly true that last year we put this proposal before the House. It is perfectly true that the House rejected that proposal by a large majority. We were perfectly well aware of that fact and if we have again put the proposal before the House, the House may rest assured that we have done so with the fullest sense of responsibility.

It is common ground with all of us that we must balance the budget. Whatever Mr. Rangachariar may have said in his speech this morning, I think that the outstanding feature of our debates and our discussions yesterday was the unanimity in all quarters of the House that India cannot afford again to go before the world with a deficit budget. (A Voice: "Real deficit.") Sir Basil Blackett laid special stress upon that fact in his budget speech, and until Mr. Rangachariar made his remark a few minutes ago I have not heard the soundness of Sir Basil Blackett's proposition challenged anywhere in the House and I think, Sir, that it is a tribute to the Assembly's sense of financial responsibility. As I have said, it is common ground with all of us that we must balance the budget. That was the axiom, that was the postulate with which we started when we first began to prepare our budget, and the House may rest assured that before we came forward with this proposal to enhance the duty on salt we had explored with the utmost care every possible alternative which could occur to us. We examined the Customs schedule, we examined the income-tax, the Railway rates, Postal and Telegraph rates. Everywhere we got the same reply. Always we came back to salt, nothing but salt. Again, since the Finance Bill has been before the House, other alternatives have been suggested to us, and as the House knows, each and every one of those alternatives has been subjected to the most searching examination, and I say it again, again we come back to salt. Salt tax may not be a popular tax, may be a tax distasteful to the people of this country, but the burden of that tax is so distributed among the population of India that it becomes negligible in individual cases. (Cries of "No, no.") It gives us certainty for the future. It gives us the money we need for the present, and it gives us the money we need for the future. It enables India to stand out among the nations of the world as one of the few nations which has been able partly by retrenchment and partly by shouldering the burden of taxation to balance its budget and it restores our credit. Whatever Mr. Rangachariar may say, I say it is essential for India that we should have a balanced budget this year in order that our credit may be rehabilitated.

Now, Sir, let me turn to Mr. Rangachariar's charge that we have wantonly provoked a conflict with this House. Because last year we put this proposal and it was turned down, therefore Mr. Rangachariar says that we have no right again to put the proposal up. There is all the difference in the world between last year and this year. Last year we put the proposal before the House and the House turned it down. It was I who defended the proposal and looking back on the history of that time I say now that the Assembly was right. Even if the tax had been imposed last year it would not have balanced our budget, it would have still left us with a large deficit and the Assembly insisted that the remedy lay in retrenchment. Well, Sir, we have retrenched. As a result of the Inchcape Committee's report we have reduced the Army. We have reduced the army expenditure by five crores of rupees and more. We have it on the authority of His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief that we have effected those reductions at some military risk. Again, Sir, we have effected retrenchments on the civil side. People in this House may think that we have not retrenched enough, that we have not done all that we can in the way pointed out by the Incheape Committee's report. Sir, as one who has served the Government of India for many years my fear is that we have retrenched too much. The reason why any Department looks askance at retrenchment is that that Department sees the implication of what we are doing. It sees the harm that retrenchment may effect, but, Sir, like everybody else in this House, we in the Government of India . . .

Mr. President: I had to call the Honourable Member from Madras to order in order to prevent him from continuing on that line and I will ask the Honourable Member to keep himself within the same limit.

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: I merely wished to make the point that the position this year is entirely different. Last year we had not done all we could have in that direction. This year we have done all the retrenchments we can and still we are faced with a deficit. The problem still remains how to cover that deficit and the difference between the House and the Government of India is this that we say that salt is the only way. The House says that there are other ways, but they have not been able to give us any unanimous vote as to what other ways should be proposed—even a majority vote—there is no assurance of it and they have not been able to prove to us that the other ways they may propose are in accordance with the principles of sound, wise, economic taxation.

Then, again, Sir, there is another difference between this year and last year. The position has changed economically. India is better off this year than it was last year. Prices of foodstuffs have fallen in this year by 20 per cent. The price of wheat has fallen by more. Take the price of wheat at Lahore in January 1922 and the price of wheat at Lahore in January 1923. In January 1922 you could buy for a rupee 3 seers and 15 chittaks of wheat. In January 1923 you could buy for a rupee 8 seers and 8 chittaks of wheat. That is to say, the price of wheat is less than half it was last year. Think what it means to the poor man. After all, your salt is a condiment and the man uses just an infinitesimal quantity every day. Wheat is a mainstay of life and the poor people spend the greater part of their income on foodgrains and foodstuffs; and when you find that those foodgrains and those foodstuffs are less than half the price they were this time last year, then do not talk to me about the hardship you are going to put on the poor man by putting on a small increase in the price of his salt. Let me take this economic argument. Is there any one here who really advances it seriously? It is a very useful thing to be able to say, "Oh no, we do not oppose this salt tax on political grounds; we oppose it on economic grounds." But, Sir, is that an honest belief? I gave the figures last year; Dr. Gour said that my figures of last year took no account of the consumption of salt by cattle. That, Sir, is not correct. Last year we took the total consumption of salt in India and the total population of India and we arrived at what the consumption of salt per head per annum was. It was 6 seers of salt per annum. An increase of duty of Rs 1-4-0 per maund means an increase of 3 annas in the price paid for the amount of salt consumed per head per annum; 3 annas! and that includes salt required for cattle; let Dr. Gour mark that fact. Three annas per head: 12 annas per family; one anna per family per month: 1 pie per family every 2½ days; there is the sum for you. Is anybody here really seriously going to assert that a small increase of that kind is going to hurt any one seriously? And mind you, I do not lay too much stress on those figures. People may say that that may be the increase in price measured by the increase of duty, but when the middleman passes that duty on to the consumer he will pass on more than the duty. Well, Sir, I have got information on that point. The retail price of salt in Delhi on the 28th February before this new duty was imposed was 16 seers to the rupee, 1 anna per seer; that is, your 6 seers per annum cost 6 annas. The retail price of salt in Delhi on the 10th March after this duty had been imposed was 11 seers to the rupee; that is, the price paid for 6 seers per annum is 8 and eight-elevenths annas; that is to say, the actual increase is less than your 3 annas per head per annum.

Let me take another point. Mr. Joshi says that before we impose taxes of this kind we should make a proper economic survey. Give us the money; give us this salt tax and I hope that we will be able to make this economic survey. But, Sir, people are working at this problem; they are working at it in Mr. Joshi's own town of Bombay. Family budgets of 3,000 families have been prepared by careful investigators, non-official investigators, people with no axe of any sort or kind to grind. I am not going to give the figures because they are not material to my present purposes; I am merely going to give the percentages and that will reinforce the point which I made just now that an increase in the price of salt is as nothing compared with an increase in the price of foodgrains and foodstuffs. The results of these family budgets show that these working people in Bombay spend 32 per cent. of their monthly income on foodgrains; they spend more than 10 per cent. on other foodstuffs; and they spend 4 per cent. on salt. Mr. Rangachariar says that this increase in the duty on salt is the last straw that breaks the camel's back. Sir, it is no use flinging phrases at me like that. If we lay a straw on the poor man, a bad monsoon lays a flail upon him, a far heavier flail than anything we can do in the way of a salt tax. I repeat, Sir, there is nothing in this economic argument. Let the House clear its mind of all prejudice. I am not going to overstate my case, I am not going to say that I like this tax. I am quite prepared to admit that any tax, however small it may be, any tax which is a tax on a necessity of life is theoretically bad. All I say is that having regard to all our necessities, having regard to our deficit, this tax which imposes a burden which is negligible on the people of this country is on the economic side the soundest way of giving us the money which we require. Mr. Rangachariar says that it will give us more money than we want. It is going to give us 4.50 crores this year and all we want is 3.89 crores, and next year it will give us 6 crores. But, Sir, Mr. Rangachariar knows as well as I do that a great part of our income now is a transitory income, that the Government of India is in honour bound to repay 9 crores of contributions to the provinces, and have we not got to look ahead and provide for the future. Sir, as I have said, let us be honest and let us drop this economic argument; let us get to grips with real facts. What is the objection to this salt tax? The objection to the salt tax is the political objection. Some people say that they dare not go back to their constituency; they dare not face the electors; they dare not say that they have agreed to the salt tax. Well, Sir, I have sufficient confidence in the Honourable Members who constitute the non-official majority in this Assembly to believe that they will put personal considerations of that kind aside. Their real objection is that if we put on this salt tax we give a handle to the non-co-operator. Well, Sir, I do not wish to understate or in any way to minimise those objections. I recognise that they are perfectly real. But, Sir, they can be exaggerated. All our information is that as regards the agricultural classes, as regards the rank and file of the country, the non-co-operator has lost his influence in the last six months. The population of this country are beginning to recognize and beginning to feel that half their troubles are due to these non-co-operators. (Hear, hear.) I do not believe that the increase in this salt tax will have any effect in that way upon the bulk of the population of this country. And as regards your own electors, the people who elect you, surely you can educate them; surely you can explain to them why we have been compelled to adopt this tax; and, Sir, if they are reasonable men I am sure they will listen. Sir Sivaswamy Aiyer laid his finger the other day upon the real objection to this salt tax. For many years,—I admit it,—for many years political India has fought against the salt tax. They have said that it is a tax which ought not to exist, much less to be increased. It is felt that mere consistency compels you to take the same line, and that is why Sir Sivaswamy Aiyer said that it was not practical politics even to think of raising the salt tax. It is an article of faith; it is a creed in political India that the salt tax must not be raised. Well, Sir, creeds become outworn: articles of faith require readjustment to changing conditions; and every now and then you have to re-examine the foundations of your belief and that is what I ask the House to do to-day. It is said that the imposition of this tax will be a violent shock to the reforms, a staggering blow to the reforms. That may be so, Sir, but there are worse things than shocks, there are worse things than blows. A worse thing is the cancer which eats away the root of the reforms. What is it? What is it that is preventing the reforms from having their full effect at the present moment? I say it is one word, or two words: 'financial stringency in the Government of India, and financial stringency in the Provincial Governments'. We all know with what high hopes the Ministers in the provinces assumed the tasks allotted to them, we all know how they hoped that they would be able to show the bureaucracy how money should be spent on education and sanitation. Have those hopes been fulfilled? Is it not a fact that, instead of these hopes being fulfilled, there is a dull resentment against the reforms? And why? Because the Ministers have not been able to get any money to justify themselves, or any money to carry out those projects on which such high hopes were pinned. Then, again, I do not suppose there is any one in this House who does not remember the remarkable speech delivered by Mr. Clayton in September 1921 in the Assembly. Mr. Clayton made the point that the one essential in India at the present time was a fundamental unanimity. The whole of these reforms presuppose that India can weld itself into one homogeneous nation. These provincial contributions, are they not a sore which is eating away India? Are we not setting Madras against Bengal, the United Provinces against Bombay, all because these provinces feel a resentment at these contributions? Madras feels that she is being unjustly treated; the United Provinces, the same, Bengal, the same. Sir, I say that if we take the long view, we do not allow ourselves to be blinded by the easy considerations of the present. I say that this House will recognize that the real danger of the reforms does not lie in the imposition of a small addition to the salt tax. (A Voice: "100 per cent.") It lies in our allowing the financial stringency to continue in the Government of India and in the Provincial Governments. I can claim that we on our side have done all we can. The Government of India have retrenched,—we have retrenched to the very best of our ability; and I say that no Government could have done more than we did on that Report. And I feel that we are now entitled to ask this Assembly to show, on their side, their responsibility. I ask them to take the long view,—to risk unpopularity, to risk shame, to risk obloquy, not to be guided, not to be weighed, by what I called just now the easy consideration of the present. If this Assembly rises to the occasion now, if it agrees to the small tax, then I say that, judged by the tribunal of history, the Assembly will have done the wise and the right thing; it will have risked unpopularity, it will have made sacrifices in order to restore India's credit, in order to restore India's finances, and in order to make these reforms a success. Sir, I hope the House will not accept this amendment.

Ohaudhri Shahab-ud-Din (East Central Punjab: Muhammadan): Sir, no one will deny in this House or outside it that the salt tax is a very undesirable tax, a very distasteful tax, a very detestable tax and, as it is characterized by some, perhaps a very dreadful tax. But the question before this House is whether we can avoid the imposition of this tax. If a tax is inevitable, as has been admitted tacitly by this House (Voices: "No, no, no.")—it has been argued from the Government Benches that the balancing of the Budget shall enhance the credit of India and make India a solvent country, prove India's solvency beyond doubt—and I have not heard a single voice in this House denying the desirability of balancing the Budget. If I am right so far, then I think it follows that the balancing of the Budget may be taken as a fact admitted almost on all hands. If that assumption of mine is correct, then I think I am justified in concluding that the imposition of a new tax is inevitable, it is unavoidable; and it is on this assumption that I move my amendment. If, of course, the House were to decide that no tax is necessary and that, therefore, no tax should be imposed, I will be the last, as I said yesterday, to propose that a new tax should be imposed; but if a tax is inevitable, if it is unavoidable, then I think the salt tax is the best tax. My reasons for this position are very simple. It is a tax which affects all tax-payers equally, the rich and the poor are equally affected by it. It has been argued by Mr. Rangachariar and some other speakers that while the rich people will not mind paying 3 annas a year, that is, one copper a month, a tax of 3 annas per head per annum shall seriously affect the poor. I will assume that we are advocating only the cause of the poor, and that it is in their interest that we are opposing this tax. I would like on that assumption, to enlighten the House, so far as my province is concerned that the so-called poor in the Punjab can more easily afford to pay this tax than the so-called rich. (Voices: "No, no." "Take us there.") Sir, despite the impatience on the part of certain Honourable Members of this House, I feel bound to lay some hard facts before the House for its consideration. The population of the Punjab, perhaps unlike many other provinces, can be divided into three classes. The so-called poor or the labouring classes. I include the agricultural as well as the industrial labour. Then there are the middle-class people both among agriculturists and traders; the majority of agriculturists are owners of very small holdings. Then, there is the higher class, the rich people so to say, that is, whether they are lawyers, merchants, or big zemindars. As regards the middle classes, I am in a position to say, without fear of contradiction, that they are perhaps the poorest lot. The labouring class is very well off; its standard of life is in certain cases higher than, or at any rate equal to, the standard of life of the middle class; in fact, the middle-class people have to defray certain expenses on occasions of marriage and at other social functions which the members of the labouring class have not to defray and I know it as a fact, and I believe I will be supported by some Punjabees in this House, that some members of the so-called poor labouring class are in fact bankers of the so-called rich middle-class people; they have more money—and I think their habits of economy and frugality have enabled them to save some money—to set aside some money, which they actually lend out to the so-called rich middle class people who are the owners of very small holdings and whose expenses are comparatively higher than those of their frugal labourers. It is this labour class, the so-called poor class in my province, in whose interest I am expected to oppose the salt duty. But if my knowledge of my province is correct, I am fully justified in saying that if this tax is to be opposed, the opposition is not justified in the interests of the so-called poor labourer whose wages, I think, have been under-estimated by the Honourable Mr. Innes in his speech. I have made inquiries and learn that here at Delhi a labourer is getting 9 annas a day, but in the Punjab, in Lahore, we cannot get a labourer even for one rupee a day to-day; and I can say without fear of contradiction that my knowledge is as accurate as it is first-hand and personal. Now, that wages are so high and the labouring classes are so well off, that they are, in some cases, if not in a large number of cases, bankers of the so-called rich middle classes, to advocate the cause of the so-called poor, in my humble opinion, is going against facts. As regards the rich people, surely they can very easily pay the small tax of annas 3 per head per annum. This is not questioned or doubted by anyone in this House. Now, as regards the amount of taxation, and its incidence on the poor, one pice a month is the burden which the so-called labourer shall have to bear if the proposed duty of Rs. 2-8 per maund is imposed. Every labourer in my province is consuming tobacco worth two pice a day. Tobacco is a luxury, while salt is a necessity. (A Voice: "Tax tobacco.") Tax it by all means. Impose an excise duty if you will. I do not mind at all. Tax it, but you will find it difficult, if not impossible, to tax local tobacco. You have already taxed foreign tobacco, I think, very heavily, and I shall not mind if the local tobacco is taxed. Do so by all means. I do not object to that. But I am stating a fact and that fact is that every labourer in the Punjab is consuming tobacco worth two pice a day. A labourer who is consuming so much tobacco, a luxury, I think, may well be expected to pay one pice a month. (A Voice: "Does the Agriculturist do the same?") Yes; he is doing the same. In my province smoking is so common that, barring the Sikhs, perhaps even one per cent. of the Punjabees are not free from this vice. (An Honourable Member: "Very sorry.") I am very sorry myself, but I am stating the fact. This is not smoking.

Mr. President: It is not usual to smoke salt.

Chaudhri Shahab-ud-Din: Then, as the Honourable Mr. Townsend said, we have salt mines in our own province, yet we had to pay for salt during the war more than Rs. 5 a maund at wholesale rates, the retail rate being far above Rs. 5 a maund. But the so-called poor labourer who had to buy salt at so heavy a price not only for one or two years, but for 3 or 4 years, never grumbled against that high rate. I am told that if this new tax is imposed—and I have no reason to doubt the correctness of figures calculated by the Honourable Mr. Townsend,—that the price of salt shall exceed Rs. 3-8-0 per maund if the duty is doubled. I, therefore, propose that instead of imposing the full tax, that is, instead of doubling it from Rs. 1-4-0 to Rs. 2-8-0, let us be contented with Rs. 2 a maund. (Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: "Why?") Because, I may be allowed to say in answer to my Honourable friend, Mr. Rangachariar, according to my calculations if the tax is enhanced from Rs. 1-4-0 to Rs. 2 per maund and not to Rs. 2-8-0, the income from that source will be rupees 2 crores and 65½ lakhs. Then, I would invite the attention of the Honourable Mr. Rangachariar to his own amendment at the top of page 6, that is, if we exclude ordinary cotton goods which are used by the so-called poor people, and a sur-tax or a sur-charge of 6 pies per rupee is levied upon Customs, that will bring, according to my calculations, about Rs. 1 crore; and thus we will have altogether about 3 crores and 65 lakhs, and I think we shall be able to balance our Budget.

These are the reasons why I propose that instead of Rs. 2-8-0 per maund we must have a tax of Rs. 2 only.

With these remarks, I propose, Sir, that a tax of Rs. 2 per maund may be sanctioned and not of Rs. 2-8-0 per maund as proposed by Government in clause 2 of the Bill.

Mr. President: In order to give an opportunity of discussing this amendment to Honourable Members, I propose to take the Honourable Member's amendment in this form, as an amendment to Mr. Rangachariar's amendment:

"Omit the words 'one rupee and four annas' and insert the words 'two rupees' in that amendment."

Mr. B. C. Allen (Assam: Nominated Official): Sir, Mr. Rangachariar's words carry such weight in this House that it is impossible to allow any observation of his to pass unnoticed. There were two grounds on which he attacked the salt tax. Firstly, he took the natural ground that it is very undesirable to tax a necessity. Now I am not certain whether the House realises the extent to which necessities are taxed elsewhere. I am not sure whether my friend, Dr. Gour, knows that tea is taxed at all. Another Member stated that the tax on tea was Rs. 15 per maund. The Commerce Department will, I hope, correct me if I am wrong, but my impression is that tea is not taxed at the rate of Rs. 15 per maund, but at the rate of Rs. 45 a maund in the case of tea which comes from British territory and at Rs. 70 a maund if it comes from outside the Empire. There are two points which I would like the House to remember. Firstly, that tea is almost as much a necessity as salt in a country like England and, secondly, that tea is consumed in much greater quantities than salt. I would ask the House to compare this tax of Rs. 45 on tea with the proposed tax of Rs. 2-8 on salt. The second point taken by my Honourable friend was that when the Government was a bureaucratic Government it did not venture to raise the tax on salt but now that it has been liberalized it comes forward and asks this House to do so. Well, Sir, I would only quote to Mr. Rangachariar an authority which even Mr. Rangachariar will accept as being no less weighty than himself where democratic questions are concerned. A debate took place in the old Council in 1918 when Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya spoke as follows:

"My friend said 'Remember, in any form of popular Government there must be a great deal of extra taxation'. My Lord, we are thankful to him for reminding us of it. If we have studied any books on History, Economics or Political Science, that truth has been ingrained in us. We know that ever popular Government means greater expenditure. We are longing for the time when we shall be put in power to raise further taxation."

(A Voice: "Not on salt.") Sir, those are weighty words. I commend them to my Honourable friend.

Mr. W. M. Hussanally (Sind: Muhammadan Rural): Sir, this tax on salt has given me any amount of anxiety and I have been considering over it all night last night after the effort for a compromise that was made for nearly three hours yesterday. But, unfortunately, Sir, the more I have been thinking of it, the more I am persuaded to believe that I cannot agree with my Honourable friend Chaudhri Shahab-ud-Din. Sir, any tax is odious and unpopular, but it cannot be denied that this tax is the most odious and unpopular of all. It has been brought up here in this Assembly and also in the Councils before times out of number and with one unanimous voice from the unofficial Benches it has been rejected as unsuitable and as one which should not be imposed. And with the result of the vote only last year, I think my friends on the non-official Benches will only be stultifying themselves if they give any vote contrary to what they did last year. And, being the most unpopular tax, I do not suppose my friends on this side will be able to face the popular discontent out in the country if they vote in favour of the tax.

Sir, I think the bait thrown out by the Honourable Mr. Innes to the Members from Madras and the Punjab to vote for this tax in order to relieve themselves of the burden of provincial contribution will not prevail, and it will be treated with the scant courtesy which it deserves. (Mr. R. A. Spence: "Oh!") Sir, I will not repeat the arguments which have been employed from time to time against this tax, but if arguments were needed, I would refer my friends to the most important speech made by the Honourable Sir Dinshaw Wacha only the other day in the Council of State. My friends call him the Nestor of Indian Finance. I will not take up the time of the Council in quoting from his speech which, I daresay, many of my friends must have read for themselves.

One point, Sir, that I have been thinking about is whether, as put by the Honourable Mr. Innes, we have sufficiently retrenched our expenditure so as to necessitate any further taxation. As my Honourable friend Mr. Rangachariar put it, the Inchcape Committee had not the last word to say upon retrenchments. I consider that, apart from the Inchcape Committee's Report, there is a good deal of expenditure which can be retrenched. Above all, if the Government were to look into the Stores Department and consider the question whether the stores should be purchased in India or in England, they will find a considerable opportunity to retrench in that direction even this year, so as to cover this small deficit. But even supposing there is a small deficit left at the end of the year, they will find that there will be many items in the various departments where they will not have been able to spend all the allotments made under the various sub-heads, and they will find that they can easily make up or that they will have made up the little deficit which is now left over uncovered.

Sir, for these reasons I think I must oppose this tax.

Baba Ujagar Singh Bedi (Punjab: Landholders): Sir, I intended to move the amendment, No. 23, which stands in my name, and I submitted a note to the Honourable the President to the effect that I would like to speak immediately after the Honourable the Finance Member would speak; but, unfortunately, I could not get that opportunity, and my friend Chaudhri Shahab-ud-Din got the preference.

Mr. President: I cannot allow that remark to pass. The Honourable Member suggests that I gave the Honourable Member from Lahore an unfair precedence over himself. He himself is well aware that the amendment in his name on the paper is not the amendment which Chaudhri Shahab-ud-Din has just been moving.

Baba Ujagar Singh Bedi: I did not mean that, Sir.

Mr. President: Then the Honourable Member should not say it.

Baba Ujagar Singh Bedi: On the day the Budget was introduced and when the Honourable the Finance Member enlightened the House with his harangue, I was somewhat perplexed whether or not the duty on salt as proposed by the Honourable the Finance Member would be agreed to.

In the first place it appears to me that there will be no need for fresh taxation for the revenue as has been pointed out by the Honourable the Finance Member, is anticipated for 1923-24 to be 198.52 crores against the expenditure for the same year, which is estimated at Rs. 204.37 crores. Thus leaving a deficit for 1923-24 of Rs. 5.85 crores.

But taking into consideration the net interest on Gold Standard Reserve which is 1.59 crores, the balance deficit remains 4.26 crores.

Again having regard to grants that have been curtailed and if the Government strictly adheres to the policy of retrenchment there probably remains no need for any fresh taxation.

But if at any rate there is any exigency to raise fresh taxation I would strongly oppose and deprecate the principle of taxing and overtaxing a certain sect of people and coming forward with a proposal to enforce super-tax which is so heavily felt by them.

This super-tax was only imposed as a war measure though the war terminated four years back, but pity, the super-tax is still in force.

I am afraid here I have to give an instance of the time when immediately after the demise of the Lion of the Punjab, Maharaja Ranjit Singh, there was no regular Government and some soldiers that were putting up in a fort began to depredate a village named Sanghoi in the District of Jhelum and after every second or third day whenever they stood in need, they joining together conversed "let us go and plunder Sanghoi."

The result was that after two or three invasions there was nothing left in the village to be depredated any further.

Sir, we should not adopt the measures to tax one particular class of men. Besides the principle of taxation does not allow to tax in such a form which should be so heavily felt by the tax-payer.

To my mind the taxation should be in such a form as would not tell heavily upon the tax-payer and yet will fetch more revenue.

Therefore if it is sought at all to enhance the revenue by fresh taxation I should not be reluctant to accept the duty on salt by annas 12 per maund only as proposed by my Honourable friend Chaudhri Shahab-ud-Din.

And therefore I will ask the indulgence of the House to bear with me for a couple of minutes.

Sir, it is advocated from certain quarters that the duty on salt should not be increased either politically or economically since it is the poor man's necessity.

These arguments do not convince me, in the first place if it was politically or economically improper to impose duty on salt, then, Sir, there should have been no duty on salt at all. But what we find is that there is already a duty imposed on salt of Rs. 1-4-0. If it was in any way detrimental politically, economically or otherwise to the Indian interest, then, Sir, why the House agreed to this duty which is already in existence.

Now therefore this part of the argument cannot arise.

What the Honourable the Finance Member wants is to increase the duty by Rs. 1-4-0 more, so as to meet the deficit for 1923-24.

The second part that it is the poor man's necessity, therefore the duty on salt should not be increased, does not appeal to me as well. I look at the enhancement of duty on salt from a different standpoint.

It is a general cry that the money market is very tight. One would naturally like to know where all this money has gone to, which was jingling in the pockets of the public a few days back, because had there been any money in India its circulation would not have stopped, on account of which the business is getting duller and duller every day.

Some persons reply that such money as was earned in the days of war has gone to foreign countries, while others emphasize that the Indian money has been taken off in the form of unsettled state of exchange.

But, Sir, even if it had gone to the foreign countries, then too its circulation could not have stopped.

But to me what appears, is that all this money had been spent on buildings, ornaments or other such like things and thereby the money has gone into the hands of the labourers in the form of wages and their requirements being small such wage earners have withheld the money, and hence the circulation of money has been greatly depressed.

Now, Sir, in support of my argument, I would like to draw the attention of the Honourable House to the mere fact that in the pre-war days, a lay wage-earner was drawing something like 6 or 7 annas a day; during the war it went up to one rupee or even more. An ordinary mason in the pre-war days was earning one rupee a day; his wages have risen up to rupees three or four a day.

Although the values of different commodities and necessities of life in which they stand in need of, have dropped considerably, even then, Sir, their wages are still there and they do not agree to take a penny less than their so enhanced wages.

Their requirements are such as even one day's wage would suffice to support them for many a day.

Therefore it has become almost impossible to reduce their these high wages because the money which they have earned in the war days and which they have withheld along with the present wages that they are earning, have made them so stubborn and sturdy, that they would not heed to any reduced rate now. They can live for months and months without doing any work, and the public standing in need of labour, without which they cannot do, are bound to bend before them.

It is said that if we adopt the proposal of the Honourable the Finance Member, i.e., to impose a duty on salt, it will affect the poor, does not hold good.

Let us examine therefore how much will it affect if the proposal is accepted. The Honourable the Finance Member proposes an increment of Re. 1 and annas 4 per maund on salt. This means that he proposes Re. 1 and annas 4 on 40 seers, and that comes to half an anna or 6 pies per seer. Now one man does not require more than $\frac{1}{2}$ tola of salt for his requirements per diem. It means that the duty as proposed even if accepted will bring a pressure of one twenty-sixth of a pie only to each individual.

My amendment proposes only an enhancement of annas 12 per maund, which further reduces the so-called pressure to one-fortieth of a pie to each individual, which means that in two months' time he will have to pay a duty of one pie.

Now, the august House will realize what and how much it affects the so-called poor, who are drawing such high wages in these days.

On the other hand if we resort to the amendment we could create an enhancement of something 3 crores of rupees according to the figures calculated by the Honourable the Finance Member.

And thereby there could be every hope to relieve the province from the pressure of the Provincial Contributions which ultimately will benefit the provinces as a whole.

If we propose any other taxation like sur-tax Custom, then even this burden will fall ultimately on the poor much heavier than the salt as the values of the commodities so taxed will naturally rise the triple of the duty proposed.

Again the Honourable Members will find that this salt duty as is proposed by the Honourable the Finance Member in clause 1, sub-clause (3) of the Bill is only for one year, that it will remain in force up to the 31st day of March 1924.

It will not be inexpedient if we increase a little duty on salt for one year to raise the revenue, thereby to meet the deficit of 1923-24.

Before I resume my seat I should appeal to the Honourable the Finance Member if he could see his way to meet the House half way.

Khan Bahadur Maulvi Amjad Ali (Assam: Muhammadan): Sir, I would point out that this tax on salt has become a vexed question altogether and we have been wasting our eloquence on it for some time past; but the House is unable to come to any conclusion. Those who advocate the cause of the poor people, so far as this tax is concerned, have some motive and that motive is attributed to the fact that elections of the Legislative Assembly are near at hand. Then again some of those who support this tax have also some motive. Now, Sir, the public time is being wasted in this fashion and we are not able to come to any solution. It is undisputed that there is a deficit of Rs. 4 crores odd. It is also undisputed that this deficit must be met. Of these two things we are quite sure—that there is some deficit and that it must be met. These are quite clear. Now, Sir, we have been crying that there should be no tax on salt. Very well, if there is no tax on salt, point out certain other means by which that deficit can be met. That is the point. The Government does not want to impose salt tax for nothing. Government wants to raise money to meet the deficit. If the House is prepared to meet that deficit, I think the House should be prepared to point out some other means to meet the deficit. Government is not vindictive that out of aïd they are going to impose some tax on salt. The only reason which actuates Government to propose taxation like this is to meet that deficit. Yesterday there was a talk of compromise and for that purpose the House was adjourned under the permission of the President. When the discussion was going on it pleased Sir Sivaswamy Aiyer to put forward certain proposals, and one of the proposals was to have 9 pies surcharge on customs, excise, and income-tax. Well, he appealed to the Members present there, and specially to my friend, Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar, to accept his proposal . . .

Mr. President: The Honourable Member must realise that he should not refer to proceedings about which this House officially knows nothing. That conference was held in camera without reporters being present, in order to enable the Members freely to express their minds and to discuss the matter in all its aspects with a view to arrive at a satisfactory compromise. There has been no statement made here to-day that that compromise was reached, and therefore I think that the opinions expressed privately ought to remain private.

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: May I suggest, Sir, that the statement that has already been made as to what was alleged to have been suggested by particular individuals ought not to appear in the official record?

Mr. President: As to what ought not to appear in the official record is a difficult point to decide. The Honourable Member from Assam will do well to refrain from referring to things which other Members have said in private.

Khan Bahadur Maulvi Amjad Ali: What I submit to this House, Sir, is that that proposal may come to this House for decision. That is a very reasonable proposal, and I think if it comes before this House with the permission of the Chair, it may be accepted by a large number of the Members of this House and further discussion may be put an end to. For that reason, Sir, I was going to speak about the proceedings which took place yesterday. If you will permit that that subject should come up before the House . . .

Mr. President: If the Honourable Member wishes to discuss a proposal of that kind, he may put it forward publicly on his own responsibility, but I must ask him not to refer in detail to the proceedings of that conference about which this House has no information.

Khan Bahadur Maulvi Amjad Ali: Now, Sir, if the salt tax is not accepted by this House, then I appeal to the Members of this House to put forward certain other suggestions by which money may be raised to meet the deficit instead of wasting our labours for nothing. I think I will have to put in an amendment, but those Honourable Members who have sent in amendments may in the course of their observations point out certain means by which money may be raised and the whole discussion may be put an end to.

Sir Montagu Webb (Bombay: European): Sir, I am opposed to the doubling of the salt tax, but I do think in present circumstances that salt should contribute to some extent towards the removal of the present financial difficulty, and I therefore support the amendment moved by my friend Chaudhri Shahab-ud-Din. I am opposed, Sir, to the doubling of the salt tax for two reasons,—economic and political. There is no doubt whatever that the salt tax is objectionable, in that it is a tax upon a vital necessity of life, the reduced consumption of which must tend to affect the health of the people. Then too, at the present moment the political situation is such that I do not think it would be wise on the part of Government to arouse and incur further hostility by forcing upon the public a doubling of the existing rate of duty. I have been collecting during the past week or two salt-tax cuttings from newspapers in all parts of India in order to better understand popular feeling in this matter. I expect Government have done the same thing. Now, Sir, what do I find? I find a universal condemnation of this proposed doubling of the salt duty except by one or two papers and one or two groups upon whom that duty would fall with the least weight, upon whom the duty, even if doubled, would be almost imperceptible. Well, Sir, there is nothing peculiar about that state of affairs. Every section of the community objects to a duty when it is going to fall upon themselves. I notice that the motor trades strongly object to the existing scale of motor duties and have asked for them to be reduced. Other trades also are asking for duties to be reduced. I have a bundle of telegrams here, Sir, very strongly objecting to the proposed surtax on the customs duties, which it is said, instead of bringing in extra duties, would merely check imports and probably reduce the estimated receipts from Customs which the Finance Member has already made. The Bombay silver interests, of course, object to the imposition of a silver duty. On my wiring and asking them if in the circumstances they would not support the small duty on salt, they have replied: "Your question is irrelevant". And so on. The fact is, Sir, that everybody objects to a duty being put on that commodity which particularly affects him. And so, I do not think Government can feel any surprise if objection is expressed to any proposed increase of salt duty for the reasons which I have already stated.

Now, Sir, I noticed yesterday that my Honourable friend from Madras expressed considerable contempt for the political argument. He spoke almost as though politics were a matter of no account in a consideration of this kind. So, too, the Honourable the Finance Member spoke with even greater scorn of the political consideration. He said: the objection to this enhanced duty is a mere matter of sentiment,—and he spoke, or he implied, that in the consideration of the Budget we ought to be guided by pure, undiluted reason: we ought to work solely on the cold logical financial principles which are generally believed to guide authorities in Lombard Street and in Whitehall. We should not allow sentiment to interfere with the preparation of our budget. I do hope, Sir, that the Honourable Member will not bring ideas of that kind into his consideration of this budget. Why, Sir, what is it that makes the world go round? Sentiment! (The Honourable the Finance Member: "Money".) What was it that caused the nations of East and West to spring to arms to repulse the attacks of the Central European Powers in the recent war? Sentiment, Sir, the feeling that might should not conquer right; the desire to assert our belief that humanity was higher and greater than brutality. I dare say, if the Honourable Member turns his glance to the incidents that are now taking place on the continent of Europe, he would hardly advance the argument that the people of Europe at this moment are influenced by motives of pure reason. (The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: "They ought to be; that is the trouble.") Well, Sir, why should we expect more reason in India than we can find in Europe? It is normal and natural that the public should be influenced by consideration of sentiment, and I am glad to think, Sir, that in the Government of this country, there is hardly a single law that does not take into consideration and rightly take into consideration, the feelings and the sentiments of the people of this country. And, therefore, Sir, I do hope that the Honourable Member, in considering this salt duty, will pay due weight to the feelings and the sentiments of the people of this country. Surely, Sir, one of the first and most important considerations in the art and science of Government is to win the assent, the confidence, and the co-operation of the governed. And that being so, we must consider sentiment; and we must consider politics.

Now, Sir, I would carry the argument just a trifle further and ask the Honourable Member to think what has happened during the course of the first Session of the reformed Assembly. Three years ago, after the introduction of this democratic scheme of Government, Members were invited to come to this Assembly to assist in carrying on the Government of the country. They came in many cases amidst a good deal of hostility and hostile criticism from unfriendly and sometimes malicious critics. What did they find? The first year they appeared here, a deficit of Rs. 26 crores. They were asked "Would you please vote additional taxation to that extent?" Well, Sir, the newly elected Members of this Assembly with great courage and considerable foresight and statesmanlike outlook did vote that Rs. 26 crores, and were duly abused by the enemy in consequence. That was the first year. Now, Sir, as regards the second year. Members returned a year ago to this Assembly. What did they find? A deficit of Rs. 31½ crores. They were once more asked to assent to every kind of taxation including salt. Well, Sir, once more the Members of this House did vote that extra taxation. They certainly rejected the salt and I was glad to hear the Honourable the Commerce Member say that in the circumstances he thought that Members were right in rejecting the salt and insisting on severe retrenchment, which policy has worked out very well. Now we come to the third year in which these newly fledged democratic Legislatures approach their duties. What are they asked to do? Again a deficit and this time the "ultimate reserve of taxation," as the Honourable Member called it,—the ultimate reserve—the salt-tax is once more brought out and they are asked to double it. And, Sir, the first general election is in sight! This Assembly is finishing its life and going back to the electorate. These Members, having during the whole of their time imposed a succession of additional taxation are now asked as their last act, to double the salt-tax and then go back to their constituents and ask for re-election!

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey (Home Member): You kindly voted for us last year.

Sir Montagu Webb: Well, Sir

Mr. President: Order, order. The Honourable Member is rather a long way from the subject. At the moment Chaudhri Shahab-ud-Din moved his amendment the issue was narrowed between the two figures, and particularly I understood the Honourable Member wished to address himself to that.

Sir Montagu Webb: The object of my remarks is to persuade the Members of the Treasury Bench and Government Officers to abandon the idea of doubling the salt tax, and to accept the amendment which my Honourable friend has put before them. I may say that although I used the political argument at some length, I was not concerned so much with the fate of the Legislators as with the fate of the Government, and the Reform Scheme itself. Now, Sir, during the last two or three years it has been my fortune to travel round the whole of this country two or three times, and I must say, Sir, that nothing has depressed more than to note the growth of suspicion, hostility, loss of confidence, and disbelief in the sincerity of Government, and of Government's good motives that has sprung up on all sides. This has very often, I think, been the result of ignorance and malice; but still it exists, and I know no royal road to getting over this difficulty. But I submit to the officers of Government that it is very inadvisable in these particular circumstances to go out of the way, so to speak, to double the salt tax and thereby place a handle in the hands of the enemy to make Government still more unpopular. We are at present in a very difficult situation. I confess that I do feel some sympathy with what an Honourable Member from Bombay said yesterday in this connection that it seemed to me that the Honourable the Finance Member was very severe and unbending in that although we are in a great financial difficulty he would not allow the whole of the war expenditure to be debited otherwise than to revenue

Mr. President: The Honourable Member is now quite out of order.

Sir Montagu Webb: I will come right back. I was about to recall the fact that an Honourable Member from Bombay had severely criticised the Honourable the Finance Member for being stern and unbending. The Honourable and gallant Member, I think, in his similes and criticisms went very much further than needs of the case or the facts of the case demanded. Now, I would like to appeal to my Honourable friends, Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar and Mr. Rangachariar who are stoutly resisting this proposal to double the salt tax—I would appeal to them that they on their side must not be rigid and unbending. Here is an occasion where there must be give and take on both sides. It is no use for us to say that one side is unbending when we on the other side are similarly unbending. I do appeal therefore my friend Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar and his party who propose to leave the salt tax at Rs. 1-4-0 to bend and to meet the situation half way by acquiescing in and supporting the amendment put forward by my Honourable friend Mr. Shahab-ud-Din to raise the salt duty to two rupees only.

Mr. President: I see Honourable Members are not very willing to discuss the amendment to the amendment and I shall therefore dispose of it

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: Before you put the amendment, if you are about to put it, I should like to say that in the difficult circumstances that have arisen Government obviously prefer Rs. 2 a maund to Rs. 1-4-0 a maund and they will feel bound therefore, if the amendment of Rs. 2 a maund is put before the amendment of Rs. 1-4-0, to vote for the amendment to the amendment to the extent of putting Rs. 2-0-0. They reserve, of course, their right to a further consideration of the question when the main question is put as between the Finance Bill and the amendment.

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas: May I, Sir, request you not to put the question at the present moment?

Mr. President: I warn the Honourable Member that the issue is very narrow and I shall have to pull him up sharply. I had to pull up Sir Montagu Webb three times, and I warn the Honourable Member that the issue is so narrow that it is difficult to keep the discussion in order.

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas: I want to support the motion as moved by my Honourable friend Mr. Rangachariar and oppose the amendment as moved by my Honourable friend, Mr. Shahab-ud-Din, and in dealing with this I shall certainly have to deal with the speech that my Honourable friend Mr. Innes has made in support of the Government proposal. The Honourable Mr. Innes

Mr. President: The Honourable Mr. Innes has not spoken on this amendment.

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas: The Honourable Mr. Innes has spoken on the motion of Mr. Rangachariar

Mr. President: The Honourable Mr. Innes has not spoken on this amendment.

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas: Sir, the Government have taken this attitude now of supporting in the first instance the amendment put forward by Mr. Shahab-ud-Din. To all intents and purposes it may be said that so far as Mr. Rangachariar's motion is concerned we have those that support Mr. Shahab-ud-Din and those that support the Government combining to vote against that amendment. I therefore take leave to review some of the arguments advanced by the speakers for an increase of salt tax. It has been pointed out that it is necessary to look ahead. I hope that that lesson will be taken to apply more to the Government Members than to ourselves. We have had an admission here that the attitude that we took up last year has turned out to be the right attitude, and the attitude that the Government took last year has turned out to be the wrong attitude. I won't wonder if next year, in spite of the strong advocacy that we have heard in favour of the enhancement of the salt tax, we are again told by Government when we have defeated them once more that we were in the right and they were in the wrong. It is they who ought to look ahead and not try to impart that lesson to us.

But, Sir, another argument has been put to us. We have been told, "you are opposing this enhancement only on political grounds, because you are not likely to convince your electorate. Go and educate your electorate." Now, Sir, yesterday you placed upon us a number of restrictions that are imposed on the Members of the House of Commons. I wonder if a responsible Member of the House of Commons could have said to the other Members of the House of Commons, "we are unbending; go and educate your electorate." It is because in this House we have Members who are not responsible

Mr. President: The Honourable Member is entirely irrelevant.

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas: I was only trying to deal with the argument that was advanced. I only meant to say that if the Honourable Member was responsible

Mr. President: If the Honourable Members wish to discuss the general application of the salt tax they had better let me get the issue between Rs. 2 and Rs. 2-8 out of the way.

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas: My only submission, if I may be permitted with all due respect to the Chair to make it, is that the position has been altered by the Government practically accepting the amendment moved by Chaudhri Shahab-ud-Din.

Mr. President: The Honourable Finance Member announced that Government proposed to vote for that amendment but they safeguarded their rights as they must, because they will have a further opportunity in common with the rest of the House of discussing the issue between Rs. 2 and Rs. 2-8.

(Several Honourable Members: "The question be now put.")

Mr. President: The question is that the question be now put.

The motion was adopted.

Mr. President: The original question was:

"That clause 2 stand part of the Bill."

Since which an amendment has been moved:

"That in clause 2, sub-section (1), for the words 'two rupees and eight annas' substitute the words 'one rupee and four annas'."

Since which a further amendment has been moved to Mr. Rangachariar's amendment:

"to omit the words 'one rupee and four annas' in order to insert the words 'two rupees'."

The question I have to put is that that amendment be made.

The Assembly re-assembled after Lunch at Half Past Two of the Clock.
Mr. President was in the Chair.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: Sir, after what the Honourable Mr. Innes said, namely, that from the economic point of view there can be no doubt that the salt tax can be fully justified, it requires some temerity to answer that argument, but I would add in all humility as my friend, Mr. Iswar Saran would have it—I would say that there is another side to that question. Sir, I have collected statistics to show that whenever the duty was high, the consumption of salt in this country has been very low, and as the duty was lowered from year to year, the consumption increased. I will mention only a few figures and then pass on my table to the Honourable Mr. Innes. When the tax was Rs. 3-4-0, the consumption of salt in this country was 28·8 million maunds. When it was Rs. 2-8-0 it came up to a considerably higher figure. When the tax was Rs. 2, it went up to 38·2. When it was Rs. 1-8-0, it went up to 41·3. When it came down to Rs. 1, it went from 48·5 to 48·2; and again when it went to Rs. 1-4-0, it came down to 44·8. Now, during the last three years there has been some increase, and it is now 52·8. Now, Sir, that shows that if the tax is low, there is greater consumption of salt in this country; and what does it mean? It means freedom from epidemic diseases, and that people will be healthier in consequence of the consumption of salt. And what do they consume at present? It is 12 lbs. according to official estimates, whereas in Burma, according to official estimate, they consume 17 lbs. per head. Now, if there is less tax, people would be in a position to consume a great deal more and thereby the Government also would be in a position to get more income. Sir, I think if the Government would apply its mind to reducing the tax instead of increasing it, they would get a great deal more income than they are getting now, because there will be greater consumption of salt.

Sir, the Honourable the Finance Member has used one argument very consistently and I must, with your permission, refer to it for a minute. It is this. He told the House that Member after Member had risen in his place and said that there should be a balanced budget. Sir, when we said that at the time when the Budget was introduced in this House—and I was one of those unfortunate men whose expression has been availed of by the Honourable the Finance Member—what we meant was that we and the Government should sit together and see that the expenditure is cut down a great deal more and that thereby the Budget is balanced. That is what we intended to convey to the Honourable the Finance Member and not that if the Government were not going to do that, we should help them by the imposition of new taxes. If the Honourable the Finance Member is under that impression, he is very much mistaken. The argument which has been put forward very often from the Government Benches that it is our duty to balance the Budget has no force whatsoever if they would not meet us half-way. If they themselves cut down their expenditure, then it may be possible for us to meet them half-way. The principle of give and take seems to mean, according to the Government Benches "Give everything and we shall take everything." That is the only meaning they ascribe to the expression "give and take." There is one other matter to which I wish to allude and then I will sit down. It is this. A great deal has been made about this being a question of sentiment and of its not being based upon sound reasons, that it is for political reasons that we are voting against the salt tax. I will admit for the moment that it is a question of sentiment. But can any civilised Government afford to ignore the feelings of a whole nation? If it is a sentiment, it is the sentiment of the intelligentsia of the country, of the poor of the country and of every one living in the country. Can any civilised Government afford to ignore that sentiment and say "We are going to enforce our sovereign will upon you." Can you say that? Will any civilised Government be justified in saying that? As regards the political reasons, I am astonished that officials who have been born in England and who have been brought up in the atmosphere of political amenities, should take exception to my friends saying that on political grounds it would be impossible for them to go before their constituencies if the salt tax is increased. Sir, speaking for myself, I am in a very fortunate position; I am not in the same unfortunate position that my friends are in. I am a nominated Member and, therefore, I have no constituency to which I have to account; but, so far as my friends are concerned, is there anything wrong on their part if they say "We want to serve the country again and it would be impossible for us to do that if we are parties to the increase of the salt tax." Is there anything wrong in their saying that? I can understand the Government Benches saying "We are not bound to help you; there are as good fish in the sea as come out of it, and those who come after you might help us to balance our Budget." But let me ask them if there is anything wrong on the part of my friends if they say that it is not fair to them to ask them to consent to this tax, and that, if they do, they will not be able to get back. Sir, I think they are justified in that and I think a great deal has been said about it which ought not to have been said.

For these reasons, Sir, I am strongly of opinion that the motion which has been made to reduce the tax to Rs. 1-4 should be accepted by this House. There are some friends who have spoken against the increase of the duty by 100 per cent. but who have voted for the increase of the duty by eight annas. I am quite sure, if they are consistent, they will go into the Lobby with us when this question of raising the duty by 100 per cent. comes to be voted on.

Sir Campbell Rhodes (Bengal: European): Sir, I feel the debate has lost a little of its reality since the trial of strength this morning, but there are one or two points that I should like to put before Honourable Members. Personally I am not altogether sorry that the rather wishy-washy compromise proposed in the amendment of my Honourable friend and so ably advocated by the sentimental financial expert from Karachi did not succeed. I would much rather face the straight issue and at the outset I would like to endorse what Sir Montagu Webb said, about the difficulties this Assembly has experienced, and also to pay my tribute to the Honourable Members on my right who have done so much these last three years and worked so consistently and so successfully to get the expenses of the Government down.

Various alternatives have been put forward and I would like, on the permission you kindly gave us yesterday, to refer in brief to one or two of these alternatives. There is the question of book-keeping my Honourable friend from Karachi advocated—that is to say, to balance the Budget with the help of an eraser and a penholder. I do not think he was really serious in that suggestion.

(An Honourable Member: "He was.")

Sir Campbell Rhodes: He may have seemed so to the Honourable Member, but to me it looked as if he was speaking with his heart in his mouth and ipso facto therefore his tongue must have been in his cheek. But another proposal has been made,—and here again I find my foes are of my own household—by the President of the Madras Chamber of Commerce,—this question of surcharge. I submit, Sir, that the only justification for a surcharge is a national and sudden emergency occurring between two Budget periods when at all costs money must be suddenly raised. I do not know whether it has occurred to Honourable Members—I should like to think that it has not—that this suggestion was the suggestion for tax-paying Bengal.

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas: Also Bombay.

Sir Campbell Rhodes: I will take in my friends from Bombay. They and we between us provide practically the whole of the income-tax and the import duty. But Bengal also, I may tell Bombay, supplies 77 per cent. of the export duties, so that this, Sir, after the generosity of the House last year in regard to Provincial Contributions is an attempt, after giving us 63 lakhs, which they said we were honestly entitled to, to charge us about 2 crores.

Then, Sir, Mr. Moir expressed some doubt yesterday as to what a super-heater was. I may tell him in simple language that a super-heater is a method of turning steam into gas. That brings me to my friend, Dr. Gour. He suggests that the tax on iron and steel should be put up. Dr. Gour had, I believe, a most successful career at Cambridge as an economist. (A Voice: 'No.') I have his own authority for saying so. That, Sir, was many years ago, but I do take exception when he drags into the quagmire of economic fallacy the Members of the Fiscal Commission. I have the book here, Sir, and I can lend it to him and he can rub up his somewhat tarnished economic truths by reading that book and finding out where we recommend heavy import duties on iron and steel. I am not quite sure in regard to cloth whether my friend, Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas, was not a little off the rails and was going a little away from the report which he enriched with his own signature. Well, Sir . . .

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas: Will the Honourable Member read out exactly what the Fiscal Commission has said with regard to steel?

Sir Campbell Rhodes: I think it would save the time of the House if Members will read it at leisure. But, Sir, Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas will find out exactly what they said in paragraph 108. We have explored all these methods and we have found that they are impracticable. Then we come back to the question of balancing the budget. My Honourable friend, Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar, was very anxious to balance the budget as long as it was cutting down the grants; but he is not so anxious now and he is willing to face a deficit. Well, Sir, I am not. We have done our level best to balance the budget by cutting down the grants and we have failed. The alternative now before the House is a salt tax or a deficit and it is suggested that the salt tax would press more hardly on the poor. I am not certain about that. The Finance Member has pointed out that a deficit is adding to the unproductive debt of the country, but experience has shown that it is also adding to the inflation of the currency. Now, that means in simple language that a rupee purchases less than it did before the inflation and therefore the poor man can buy less salt with the money. Whichever alternative you adopt, whether it is deficit with its necessary inflation or salt tax, you will inevitably reach the same end, putting some burden on the poor. I think, Sir, and I think most in the House will admit, that this is really a political rather than an economic question. The Members of the House are faced with the alternative of either their lives or their principles, and I would suggest that while it is an uncertainty about their life it is a certainty about their principles, and by saving their principles they may also save their lives. The Honourable Mr. Innes suggested that the constituencies should be educated. It was received very coldly in the House,—why, I do not know. Whether the implication was that the members are not qualified to educate their constituencies or the constituencies are not capable of being educated, I cannot say, but if they want a text book, I strongly recommend to the Government that the eloquent and convincing speech of the Honourable Member for Commerce which he made in the House this morning should be distributed broadcast in all vernaculars throughout the country.

There is another reason, Sir, why I gave my vote last year, and shall give it again, to the salt tax. We have tried, as I have said, to balance our revenue, and we have failed. We want permanently additional sources of revenue. That is what I personally want, and what I should imagine the Government probably also want. Let us face that fact. We are not living now in abnormal times. We are working under normal conditions, and we cannot gamble on better monsoons than we have had this year in the future. Last year my Honourable friend Mr. Joshi twitted me because I preferred salt to cloth. Mr. Rangachariar has, I think, answered that argument, but I may point out that in the interests of the people, it is better that for every rupee you collect sixteen annas should go into the pockets of the Government. That is the case in salt. The case of cloth is that for every rupee you collect from import duties six annas will go into the pockets of Government. I hope, therefore—though I admit it is a very faint hope,—after the division this morning, that the House will reconsider this matter.

Captain Sassoon in a speech which contained much that I personally take strong exception to mentioned that it was within the rights of the Government to restore this salt tax if the House threw it out. Where you have rights, and I am addressing myself now to the Honourable the Finance Member and his colleagues, you have also responsibilities,—if Members say they must represent their constituents, then the Honourable the Finance Member must represent sound finance; otherwise it was not necessary to have brought him out from England; we might have got our Finance Minister nearer, say from Karachi. (A Voice: "Why not from Calcutta.") I am afraid Calcutta would not help. A celebrated surgeon was taking half a dozen senior medical students round the hospital in London, and coming to a certain bed he asked the students what they thought of the condition of the patient. They all said, he was not very ill and they thought if he were left alone he would be all right. The surgeon replied "Gentlemen, you do not realise the symptoms, and I shall operate to-morrow". Here the patient interposed and said "you will certainly do nothing of the sort when the majority is 6 to 1 against you." I leave the Honourable the Finance Member and his colleagues to take the bearing of that story and to decide what is right both in the interests of their own reputation and of the life of the patient. But I appeal, Sir, once more to the House to take a more statesmanlike view of this position than has been indicated in some of the speeches. My Honourable friend Mr. Rangachariar says that the Government Benches are afraid of odium. The Honourable Member for Commerce has looked across the House and has said "Why not have the pluck to do it?" Standing in this position, Sir, I see many reeds on both sides of the House shaking in the wind and I would urge a little courage. I would urge Members to lead rather than be led by their constituencies. This question of odium does not appeal to me at all. Face the odium. I gather Mr. Rangachariar's new chemical designation for salt in future will be "odium chloride". I appeal, therefore, finally, Sir, to the House to accept their responsibilities and not to look back at the burning cities of bankruptcy behind but, if they do it, I can only repeat that old warning, which seems extraordinarily appropriate to the subject before us: "Remember Lot's wife."

[Sir Campbell Rhodes.]

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary (Calcutta: Non-Muhammadan Urban): Sir, notwithstanding your best endeavours and the prevailing depression in trade, one trade, in particular (in spite of this stifling weather), has been flourishing, and that is the trade in red herrings constantly trailed all across the line. Some are always trying to get us out of vision of the one issue now before us, and that is whether there is going to be enhancement of salt duty to the extent of Rs. 2-8 after the amendment to the effect that it be raised to the extent of Rs. 2 has been lost. That is all that we are now concerned with. And I do not think that appeals to passions and prejudices, whether with regard to provincial contributions or the likelihood of Bombay and Bengal having to pay more in the shape of income-tax and customs duties, need trouble us for the present purposes. I should have thought, Sir, that, after the Honourable Mr. Innes's eloquent disclaimer of eloquence of a democratic nature, we should have had less eloquence of a bureaucratic nature, trying to take us away from the issue before us.

Sir, an appeal has been made on the ground of economic aspects of the question. I desire to offer one or two observations with regard to that to start with.

Mr. Innes gave us certain figures. The latest figure, according to him, regarding the Delhi retail salt market, is 11 seers to the rupee or thereabouts. Mr. Innes probably, like another occupant of the Government Benches with whom I had the honour of talking about the matter, had sent for his butler and asked him what he spends on salt—if his butler is the man to spend money on salt as he spends money on other "necessities." He may have found out, by calculations in his office as well as this direct investigation, that the increase is no more than 3 annas a head. Well, I had the curiosity to send for my bazaar chit this morning and the retail price of salt at Delhi this morning, or yesterday morning, is 10 pice to the seer for, no doubt, salt of the better kind. Therefore, it is not a question of whether the extra tax is to be 12 annas or Rs. 1-4. It is much more. The moment you disturb the market after it is getting settled down, unscrupulous—call them if you like—dealers, middlemen, intermediaries, disturb the market to an extent that makes the real rate inoperative for you cannot stabilise retail rate without objectionable control. Last year, there was this attempt to raise the tax. It failed. I don't complain. I don't call it want of consideration or courtesy on the part of Government to bring it forward again. It is worse. I would like to borrow

8 P.M. Mr. Innes' own language with regard to attempts to interfere with other portions of the Finance Act Schedule. He appealed to us not to disturb other markets on short notice but to let things go on. Well, last year people thought that a steady salt rate was to be continued and on the 1st of March we have this proposal. Disturbing influences have been in operation already and revenue to the tune of Rs. 30 lakhs will probably have been collected by the end of the month. But the people pay a great deal more. All this goes to show that although the initial amount of taxation may be small, the extent of bad and malignant influences on the market is tremendous, and we have got to save people against results of fluctuation. Sir, the question of the use of tea in England has been brought in. I should like to know whether England makes its own tea in the same way as India has been making its own salt and can make its own salt if it is allowed and if there is encouragement. Therefore, the two questions are not analogous at all.

Mr. R. A. Spence: Are both necessities?

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary: Well, salt also is I suppose a necessity in England—at least now. Is it taxed? Where is the good of talking about necessities that you create. To some people beer is a necessity. But that is no reason why the Honourable Member from Bombay should plead for free beer.

Mr. R. A. Spence: No, not at all.

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary: Coming to another branch of the economic question, 3 annas only—a miserable negligible 3 annas—to be added per head and why object to it. But 3 annas out of how much? The other day a question was asked in the House and was never attempted to be answered because Government had not the materials though it should have, "What is the average income of the people of this country?" was asked and we have no up-to-date information. In old school books, probably now standing discredited, it was put down at something like Rs. 50 a year. (A Voice: "Rs. 35.") I am taking it at the higher figure, because that was at one time quoted. Let us have it even at Rs. 60 a year or the stupendous sum of Rs. 5 a month to be spread over all the necessities of life. We have been reminded, Sir, of how the cloth situation will be affected if we were to put on what was suggested with regard to surcharge on customs duty. But let me assure this House, Sir,—at least that portion of the House that does not know anything about it—that the 12 yards or 10 yards standard of cloth does not apply to people except to a very small extent. There are people in India who have to go about from month to month and year to year with a modicum of 3 yards of clothing purchased or donated at some ceremonial time and which has to do duty for all the year and more. But these people must have salt and plenty of it. That is the only thing that they have to fall back upon. As regards tobacco that Chaudhri Shahab-ud-Din speaks of, I am at one with him. Like me if he will start an anti-smoking society in the Punjab and be the President of the society I should understand his point and plead that the agriculturist or the artisan who spends Rs. 2 on his tobacco and should not do that. But the men I speak of have to go on from day to day literally without their pinch of salt. What is the use of quoting cloth figures and tobacco figures with regard to a much more prosperous class? This, Sir, with regard to some of the economic aspects of the question.

As regards the political aspect, Sir, I shall take up a much smaller issue. Was there any political aspect of the kind suggested present in the minds of Assembly last year? There was none, for there could be none. And yet the House made up its mind definitely, and unmistakably and made that mind quite clear. Sir, as I have had by way of penance, occasion of telling the House more than once, that all these stock arguments in favour of salt duty are absolutely familiar ground with me, because I have had—I shall not say the misfortune but the necessity of using them longer than Mr. Innes has been in service. But I have long changed my point of view, examined the foundation of belief as Mr. Innes appeals to us to do. I believe that where the country is strongly and fairly unanimously of the mind that it is with regard to salt duty, it is the duty of those who have been favouring us with those stock arguments to revise their position and see eye to eye with the country which should be spared this fiery cross. It is a mistake to suppose that we cannot face our constituency because there is going to be this extra salt tax. Would it affect them? It is a very limited constituency, a very limited constituency. I repeat though I hear a cry of 'No' behind me. I shall explain myself. The constituency has to pay a certain amount of tax without which they cannot come on the register of voters. They are not in the position of those I speak of and will not mind an increase, slight or large. It is those who are never on the voting list, who have no chance of coming on the voters' list—it is those that this House has to think of, and not merely of the individual constituency. All these considerations point to one direction regarding the immediate matter before us, namely, this House cannot consistently with its attitude last year do anything but oppose the proposed salt tax. Sir, I shall not take a share in the red herring trade and I shall not go in this connection again into the question as to how this budget is to be balanced. We have had our say. We have made our suggestions, we have shown our anxiety to do the best we can to help the Government. (A Voice: "No.") There is absolutely no good of meaningless interruptions like that because the House tried to find the best devices it could on short notice and insufficient materials which have not been acceptable. As Mr. Rangachariar has pointed out, we are prepared to meet a deficit as we make it out, not one that has been made for us, certainly not one that has been handed to us not only for a series of years but almost for generations. We have done a great deal. We want to do more and rigid retrenchment is one of the methods. The Honourable Mr. Innes reminded us that there is a great deal of difference between last year and this year. So do I say, and we have just begun retrenchment; we have not devised nor carried out retrenchment to the fullest possible extent. I recognise that the whole of even the Incheape reductions could not be carried out this year. I also recognise that the civil authority have been partly helpful. I am thankful that the Railway authorities have to a certain extent come to our assistance by accepting my proposal about the Railway cut and by being helpful in other ways. While we have succeeded in getting a cut of Rs. 62 lakhs I believe or in the neighbourhood of that figure on the civil side, could not the Military authorities do something since we appealed to them last? There is a considerable amount of margin of recognised possibility of reduction leaving alone reduction of units and other questions that must await decision elsewhere. Could not the Military Authorities have taken our pitiful circumstances into consideration and said, here is another crore which without inconvenience we propose to spare, say out of the barracks, say out of the stores, or out of a thousand and one other things with regard to which neither Whitehall nor the British Cabinet need dictate—could not they have come to our assistance and helped us and thereby minimised the supposed deficit? Then there is the question of accounting so slightly spoken of; but that has got to be put right. These are matters which under your ruling, (and I do not want to abuse your ruling except to show that ours is not a blind vote)—I will not go into now. The major question now before us is as to what is to be done with regard to this extra tax and I think that the House has one clear duty before it, namely, to reject it. Those who could not go the whole way with us but were for a compromise of Rs. 2 cannot now go back upon what they have given out as their principles, including the gentleman from Karachi who has come in for a good deal of Bengal sarcasm. In the words of Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar, they have to go into the lobby with us.

Mr. T. E. Moir (Madras: Nominated Official): Sir, I am afraid that I am in trouble again. I do not like to be in trouble, especially when it is really my own fault. But it is rather a shock to me to be accused by my Honourable friend Sir Montagu Webb of being devoid of sentiment. I was, Sir, under the impression that for the last year or more I had been engaged on a somewhat quixotic crusade which practically every one else thought could only be defended on sentimental grounds. But it is my own fault, because my Honourable friend based his remarks on a speech which I made yesterday. Sir, I am not a particularly adroit or experienced debater and I think the House will remember that I had the misfortune, quite deservedly I admit, to be called to order by the Chair for going beyond the scope of the debate and inexperienced as I am,—I am rather easily put out of my stride—the result was that various misleading lacunae were apparent in my argument which might not otherwise have appeared. But Sir Montagu Webb himself is not entirely devoid of sentiment, is, may I say, not devoid of practical common sense either because in referring to my lack of sentiment he himself took the opportunity of putting forward what I might refer to as Sir Montagu Webb's election mixture, which, as far as I could make out, was 50 per cent. sound common sense and 50 per cent. sentiment. I have no doubt that is a very good mixture for elections. But I also think that what we are still really discussing is this deficit and how it is to be met. Now, opinion on this point has apparently somewhat veered in certain quarters since yesterday, for I remember distinctly putting the question whether it was not the case that every Member in this House agreed that the deficit had to be met. I paused for an answer deliberately and I heard not a single voice raised in dissent from that proposition though demurred to to-day. Now, Sir, have I ever said that I liked the salt tax or that I liked additional taxation? I do not, any more than any other Member of this House. But surely when it is a choice of evils it is at least legitimate to consider that in the interests of the country at large, it may be worse that we should leave that deficit uncovered than that we should cover it by additional taxation, even if that additional taxation implies an addition to the salt tax. I do not think that there is any question of callousness necessarily involved in putting forward that proposition. I do not expect every one to agree with me, but at any rate there surely is, I think every one admits it, much to be said against our leaving this deficit uncovered. Now, Sir, it is very difficult to confine oneself to the point or points which happen to arise out of a particular motion or amendment, but I should like to state now,—I think I shall in the main only be repeating—some of the arguments as regards the salt tax. I shall do so in the first place from a purely financial standpoint, if I may try for a moment to ascend those somewhat arid heights which most of the Members of the House rather studiously avoided. I should like to endorse what Sir Campbell Rhodes has said as to the fact that the salt tax has at least one merit, that you do gain the whole of the additional taxation for the public exchequer. My Honourable colleagues on the Finance Committee will remember that in the last two months we have had a large number of proposals put before us for the strengthening of the other revenue-raising Departments, whether it be the Customs Department or the Income Tax Department or our Railways or our Posts and Telegraphs, and on each occasion we have been told, and we have generally found it necessary to accept that view, that this additional expenditure was essential in order to secure the additional revenue. But as regards the salt tax, I remember last year—I can speak for Madras only—that when we were informed that the salt tax was to be raised, we did not consider it necessary to ask for a single additional clerk or peon or any other official in our salt establishment; that is to say, that the whole of the additional taxation was going to be collected without any additional expense; and here perhaps I might correct a statement which I have heard from one Member, that is to say, that the additional taxation proposed was 6 crores; I understood that it was 4½ crores, this year. I suppose that the reason why 4½ crores only is estimated is that there are large stocks at present in the hands of dealers which they will naturally sell before buying more salt. But at any rate that advantage cannot be claimed for the other proposals which have been put forward as alternatives. The two principal alternatives are, an increase in the customs or in the income-tax. Now I cannot help being struck by the fact that the income-tax and customs have let us down very badly in the last two years, and that it is exceedingly doubtful if any readjustment of the income-tax or the customs could possibly meet our real requirements in the current year. In saying that, I am not in the least attempting to argue that the compromise which some Members of the House sought to achieve would have been a bad thing. I would have been prepared myself, if that compromise had been secured, to welcome it, in spite of that lack of sentiment which has been attributed to me. A further point to which I would like to draw the attention of the House is that as far as I can see—and I am here talking of the four principal heads of revenue with reference to which, I think, comparison might justly be made—that whereas in 1913-14 the salt tax represented something like 26½ per cent. of the revenue under those heads, even with an increase to Rs. 2-8-0, at which figure I may remind the House it has stood on a previous occasion, the percentage that the salt tax would bear to the total collections under these heads would be only about 15 per cent. Now, what this conveys to my mind, taken together with the failure of Customs and Income tax to realise our expectations, is that the effect, the financial effect, of the new financial arrangements have not been entirely or correctly foreseen and that there is in consequence a lack of balance and of due proportion in the present incidence of our taxation, for which the present proposal will really be in part a remedy. I cannot possibly enter now on such a wide question, but it seems to me that the criticism applies not only to our taxation but also to our tariffs, and that the temporary expedients such as have had to be adopted year by year with reference to the existing financial situation have gradually thrown our whole taxation system out of gear. I sincerely hope that that is a question which the Finance Department will take under consideration before another budget is placed before this Assembly, because I do not think that we cannot possibly go on for another year, quite apart from questions of deficit or anything of that kind, without a real over-hauling and examination of the principles underlying our taxation and our tariffs. Now, to deal for a moment with the sentimental grounds I do not think that any Member has really made out a case that we are going to impose on the people of this country an intolerable hardship by this increase of the salt tax. As has been pointed out, any slight increase, any slight fluctuation in food prices, a few weeks' anxiety about the monsoon in any part of the country, would have a much more serious effect on the agricultural population than the proposed increase in the salt tax. But there is one consideration with reference to this question of balancing our Budget which I would like to put to the House. I have listened in this Assembly to a great deal of discussion about tariff reform, about our being master of our own fiscal policy. We have even talked of the abolition of the salt tax. Now, I am perfectly certain that all such talk is entirely in vain so long as we continue to have deficits; so long as we have deficits, our financial policy must be deflected by purely revenue considerations and it would be no use of our talking about tariff reform or fiscal freedom; and paradoxical as it may seem, the royal road to the ultimate abolition of the salt tax may be to balance our budget this year even if it be at the cost of increasing the salt tax. At any rate, if we want our fiscal freedom, in my opinion we have got to get rid of both deficits and of provincial contributions.

Now, Sir, I wish to turn to a few remarks which fell from one or two of the speakers in this House. Dr. Gour said that he would not tax salt because it was a necessity. Now, I would ask Dr. Gour if he considers clothing a necessity. I have always understood that clothing is regarded as the mark of and necessary to a civilised community and I have several times in the Indian press seen it thrown up against my own countrymen that at a time when India was at the height of its civilisation my ancestors were roaming the woods in a garment which consisted of at most two coats of paint. For myself, I have always been rather suspicious of the truth of that statement. My own experience of the hills and heights of Caledonia stern and wild has convinced me that the climate is really against a garment of that kind; in fact, I have not even had the temerity to wear what is regarded as my own national costume. But I was also interested in Dr. Gour's interpretation of the constitutional position of an elected Member of this Assembly with reference to his constituents. Dr. Gour said that the correct position was to follow their mandate. Now, I would have no objection to Dr. Gour following that mandate if he did it consistently, but, since I came up to Delhi, I have been deluged with literature in the form of protests against legislation proposed by Dr. Gour. One piece of that legislation is, I find, entered on the agenda for to-morrow. (A Voice: "Oppose it.") I do not know and I cannot say what the real attitude of Dr. Gour's constituents is to that legislation, but certainly the impression I have got is that they are distinctly against it. But I do not think Dr. Gour can have it both ways. He cannot lead from in front in matters of social reform and lead from behind in matters of taxation.

Now, Sir, I should like to turn to one or two remarks made by my Honourable friend Mr. Rangachariar. I was astonished to hear him throw out the suggestion that Government were in this matter merely attempting to deceive the Assembly. Now I have had many a bone to pick with the Government of India, but the suggestion that they have some ulterior motive in view, other than that of sheer financial necessity in balancing the Budget, has never crossed my mind, and I should have thought that the paramount obligation upon the Government of India to do so would be evident to anyone, and of course I am not in the least prepared to suspect the Honourable the Finance Member of wishing not to balance his Budget but to ensure the position of the Government of India so that they may continue on what Mr. Rangachariar terms their extravagant course—that rake's progress of which we have heard. If I found any reason to suspect that that was the case, let me assure Mr. Rangachariar that I should gladly join him in the hunt. Now I hope, Sir, I need say nothing more about the suggestion that the Government of India are a set of bold buccaneers who are merely raiding hen roosts for their own purposes. But another remark which the Honourable Mr. Rangachariar made was that he was not prepared to tax foodstuffs. That remark seemed to me incomprehensible. Ever since taxation was known, it seems to me that in India, the fiscal system had been based on the taxation of food stuffs. Is our land revenue in its essence anything else than the taxation of foodstuffs? What is it derived from? In the old days the Government of the country took its share direct of the foodstuffs. It took it in kind. Subsequently, when currency came into vogue and it was possible to do so, for the convenience both of itself and the people of the country it converted that share of the foodstuffs of the country into its cash equivalent. But what still more astonished me was that while many Members of this Assembly avow they are not prepared to vote any additional burden on the poor agriculturist in this matter, they are not consistent even in this. It was only the other day that I heard one Honourable Member—I do not think he is present now—say with reference to the question of tariff reform and protection that he was prepared to put a burden and a considerable burden on the country. He admitted that it would be a burden and he said that he was prepared to put that burden on the country, and he also assumed at the same time that the country would be prepared to take that burden on its shoulders. My Honourable friend, Mr. Rangachariar, also pointed out that even in the stress of war time the Government of India only imposed an addition of 4 annas to the salt tax. Now, Sir, when I came up here I was very unfamiliar with the financial policy of the Government of India. I am still very much at sea, I admit; but I have been slowly coming to the conclusion that to a very large extent our financial troubles now are due to the weakness—I might almost say, the folly—of our financial policy during the war. Those years of the war were really, as far as India was concerned, the fat years, and in those years we made no provision for the lean years which we did not see were coming, and in that respect I almost feel that I owe an apology to the Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey.

I had been inclined, like some others, parrot-wise I am afraid, to assume that the responsibility was mainly his. I am beginning very much to doubt that, and to feel that it was not his fault so much as the fault of his predecessors who left to him a financial situation from which we are only now beginning to extricate ourselves. Now, Sir, one last point. One Honourable Member, I think it was the Honourable Member for Commerce and Industry referred—I have hitherto been dealing with the question on pure financial lines—referred to the political grounds underlying our attitude towards this question of additional taxation on salt, and in that connection he referred to the fact that apprehensions of what the non-co-operators might say or do account largely for that attitude. Now, as to that, I have personally had much experience of the ways of the non-co-operators, and I do not think that I am likely to underrate either their malice or their capacity for abuse. But I will say this, that I have never yet known—I cannot recollect a single occasion on which any Government in this country or any official or any responsible non-official has yielded to his apprehension of that capacity and at the same time received any recognition or gratitude from the non-co-operators for so doing. But I will add, Sir, that in the Madras Presidency at any rate we are not afraid of non-co-operators. We have had our fight with the non-co-operators and we have beaten them and those who are now engaged in working the reforms in that Presidency are in no wise to be terrorised by the non-co-operators or by threats of what they may say or do. This budget as I have said has given to the Madras Presidency a view from Pisgah of the Promised Land, and let me say this, that if the Madras Presidency consents once again to go forth into the wilderness it will not be because of anything that the non-co-operators may say or do.

Rai Bahadur Bakshi Sohan Lal (Jullunder Division: Non-Muham-madan): Sir, it is admitted on all hands that salt is a commodity of life which is an absolute necessity for every human being, as well as for agricultural animals, specially of this poor agricultural country. A tax on salt affects more or less everybody from the highest to the lowest, but as a matter of fact it affects the poor the most. The middle classes, the wealthy people and others have the good luck of tasting other things like sweets, acid things and others, but the poor have got nothing to swallow their dry bread except with the help of salt. Salt is the only medicine for them; salt is the only luxury for them, and salt is the only thing on which their life can depend. The logic of the enhancement of the wages of labourers does not apply to the case of the salt tax. The 300 million or more population of this country does not consist entirely of labourers or traders or official and non-official workers. The proportion of such men is not more than one-tenth of the whole population. The majority consists of those who are unfit to work, the unemployed, indigent, impecunious, old persons incapable of moving about, the poor, the sick in bed, the children and purdanashin ladies, and last but not the least Hindu and Muham-madan widows with some children in arms, who, even if able bodied, have to depend entirely on a scanty earning of one anna or two by working a charkha. The reason why some Members of this Assembly have spoken in support of increasing the salt tax is because they do not know the condition of the poor people of this country. There is no representative of the poor in this Assembly, because they have no place even on the franchise list of the provinces or of the Assembly. They have got no property or other qualifications to send their representative. The labourers have got their representative in Mr. Joshi who is nominated by Government, but may I ask, who is representing in this Assembly those who are not labourers or have any property qualifications? The number of these people is certainly much more than those who are represented in this House. Their number who are not represented here is probably not less than 9/10ths of the whole population of this country. Are we not to safeguard the interests of those who are not represented here? Only those people who go to the villages know of what value salt is to the poor people, where salt is not produced. These poor people will take in barter the things which are produced in the village, grain, or any other thing, but salt which is to be imported from a distant place is to be purchased, and it cannot be assumed that it is very easy for every individual in this country to pay four annas. The number of people who are able to pay four annas is very small; the greater majority of them are those who cannot afford to pay even 4 annas. So it is in the interests of those persons who have no voice in this House except by the generosity of the Members of the Assembly that this salt tax should not be increased. I should say that even the most greedy among the profession of money-lending or of law or of medicine extend their free help to such men. There is a Punjab proverb that Dayan bhi ek ghar rakh leta hai which means that even a wizard retains at least one house untouched from his life-sucking charms or magic. There is an exception to every rule, so if there is to be an exception to taxation, salt should be the exception. A duty on tea, timber, cloth, iron, chinaware, tobacco, etc., or even on railways or postages will affect only those who can afford to pay in consideration of what they avail of, but this salt tax mostly affects those who cannot afford to pay and who cannot enjoy even the advantage of tea and cloth, etc. Their case is quite different from the rest. The enhancement of the wages has not in any way ameliorated their condition. They have rather been put into the worst position by the increase in the prices and in the wages. They have no means to earn but have to pay higher for their dry bread and salt. May I ask, is there any tax on salt in England, in France, in Italy, in America, or any other country? (The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: "Yes, it is a state monopoly in those countries.") That is a different thing altogether. Certainly we will have to balance the budget of this great empire, but we also have to look to the budget of the poor and I respectfully submit that under any circumstances the tax on salt ought not to be increased and, if there is any occasion for a prosperity budget, the first thing to abolish would be the existing tax on salt. With these words, I support the motion.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: I feel under a great disability in addressing the House at this moment. Not only has the House already by its previous vote given some indication of its feelings on this question but the arguments on both sides have been put and rebut, have been argued and counter-argued and I feel that it would be of little avail to me now to re-state the case for the increase in the salt tax or to argue its necessity in the light of our financial position. Yet, there are considerations which I must put to the House, for I feel deeply the gravity of this occasion. I have felt it so deeply myself that I, with other friends, have been unremitting in our efforts to attempt some solution which would avoid the motion for doubling of the salt tax being put to the vote of the Assembly. To avoid that, we were willing to agree, as the House knows, to a solution which we ourselves felt in some respects highly undesirable. I need not go into its details here, for the attempt has failed. With the best good will we could not secure agreement, and we now stand faced with the necessity of supporting on behalf of Government the original measure embodied in the budget proposals. And this, Sir, comes at a moment when we are closing a momentous chapter in the history of this Legislature and indeed of the Reform Scheme. One has only to look back on the events of the last year to realise its importance. It is not only the fact that the Legislature has represented to us, who have the interests of the Reform Scheme at heart, a proof that there was in India a strong and solid body of moderate opinion which the chief bulwark against the forces of disintegration and almost, I would add, of anarchy that seemed at one time to be flooding the country; it was not only that it has proved to us that to that extent the Reforms were a success; but its own history as a Legislature has not been devoid during the last year of incidents which will have a powerful bearing on the history of India and its relations to Great Britain. I need not perhaps dilate on the importance which history will attach to what has happened in this Legislature in regard to questions such as our fiscal relations or to the Bill which affected the juridical relations of Europeans and Indians, nor in another sphere, to the discussions regarding the State management of railways. It is enough to say, that this question comes as the last of a series of discussions of the highest importance; it will be practically the last serious decision which this Assembly as an Assembly will have to take. Our business in Simla is seldom of the first importance. We foreshadow only a short Session there this year, and naturally, in a short Session, we shall, if we can avoid doing so, avoid bringing before the Assembly any matter of very grave moment. But that is not the only reason why I feel the gravity of the occasion, for it is an open matter between us that the decision will have other implications of a constitutional nature. Perhaps those in themselves are more important than the effect of this immediate decision

Mr. K. Ahmed: What are they?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: . . . more important perhaps than the effect of this decision on the finances of the country.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: Don't raise them.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: I have no intention and indeed I need to repeat that defence on the economic side of our proposals so brilliantly put forward by my friend Mr. Innes. I am dealing rather with larger issues. I am answering the first question which has been put to us, how we, as a Government, came to put this proposal before the House. Indeed, it was put to us in this form, which suggested that we had done so lightly and without due consideration. Sir, was it likely that a Government constituted such as ours, and a Government which had behind it the record of the last two years, would have put such a proposal forward lightly or without a due prevision of its consequences? There are those in the present Government who in their sphere and among critics, both in India and outside, have incurred a certain amount of obloquy because we were previously unwilling to produce or to face a constitutional deadlock. Surely we of all others would hesitate to do anything which would seem to imperil an ideal to which many of us were firmly attached, I mean the progress of reforms. Is it likely that we would have put forward such a proposal unless we had felt that it was the only and the final solution of our difficulties? One final remark; I know I am now treading on somewhat delicate ground and I must choose my words—but I said that the proposal involves grave constitutional implications. Well, how came it then that we as a body put forward a proposal which, by carrying such implications involved also consequences affecting the head of our Council, for in the ultimate resort an individual responsibility of a very heavy nature might fall on him? I can only say this that it was unlikely that we would, without the most anxious consideration, give advice to the head of our Council which might finally involve him in making a decision of so momentous a nature, the more serious for him because not only has he a long Liberal career behind him, but from the first has had as his one consideration out here the task of making a success of the reform scheme. Well, Sir, we put this proposal forward, as has already been pointed out, in circumstances entirely different to those which prevailed last year. Last year we had our deficit, not the first of such deficits I am sorry to say. It was no doubt impairing our credit, but circumstances had not arrived at the condition in which we now find ourselves. Let me explain the matter from my point of view. Deficits are an extraordinary danger in finance. But although our operations last year presented all the characteristic dangers of a deficit, that is to say, although it forced us to raise our temporary loans at a higher rate because we had not a hold on the money market, although constructively, at all events, the series of deficits may have led to some inflation, yet we had not arrived at the stage when those who were advancing us money could definitely say that they despaired of our ability to rehabilitate ourselves. The circumstances of our finances had not then been explored to the full. Now we are in a different position. We have had every sphere of our expenditure narrowly and carefully examined. We have loyally and to the best of our ability given effect to the recommendations put forward by the expert body which examined our expenditure. (A Voice: "Not fully.") Not fully, Sir, because no human being can forthwith and within a few months give complete effect to such recommendations. But I am taking the position of the outside world. They will say that last year it is true there was a deficit, but it was quite possible that this was temporary, since we had not then regulated our affairs. Now, they know that even after the immediate maximum of retrenchment has been made India will have a deficit. That affects our credit in quite a different degree to the circumstances of last year. I sincerely believe that unless we can now balance our budget we shall be affected in our credit; and let me say that I am not sure that it is always recognized in this House quite what this means to us. Until we re-establish our credit we shall always have dear money in India. Since we must borrow both in Europe and in India the effect of short borrowing in England so increases our operations here that we lose all control over interest rates. Dear money in India does not only mean a fresh burden upon our revenue but it means of course high interest rates throughout the country, and that affects everybody, everybody who is starting a new industry, everybody who is seeking finance to maintain an existing industry. The re-establishment of our credit for the purpose of raising our loans is a primary necessity not only for the State, but it is of vital interest to everybody concerned in commerce or industry in this country. That then is our obligation towards our credit. But we had also the internal obligation, if I may use that word. In the first place, it is clear that our retrenchment will leave us as a Central Government almost stagnant in some Departments. That fact has already been sufficiently voiced in the House and not only on this side of the House. Our retrenchments will leave us in a state in which we can do nothing to promote that higher technical education which is necessary to fit Indians to take their place in our Imperial Services. But of course we have also a further obligation. Mr. Rangachariar said that our only object in trying to get this extra taxation by salt was so to confirm our position that we might rely on maintaining always an expenditure level of 130 crores. Now, of course, that is not so. In the first place we know that although we can give effect this year to part only of the proposals of the Retrenchment Committee, the effect of those proposals should be continuing. We do not necessarily look merely to maintain expenditure at the level of 130 crores, because we hope the effect of the Retrenchment Committee will, given fair harvests and fair times, enable us to reduce that. But we have obligations of 9 crores of rupees to the provinces. I am not going to dilate on that question myself. It has caused me enough criticism and enough unhappiness to justify me in avoiding the subject. But there the obligation remains and somehow or other we must confront the necessity for our revenues being reduced by that amount. Those then were our obligations, and it was with a sense of the gravity of those obligations that we put forward our budget proposals. We are told that we might have avoided putting them forward, if we cared to do so. It has been suggested to us, but I do not think it has been suggested to us seriously, that there were other forms of taxation; I say, not seriously because when the House has tried to explore those other forms of taxation, it has always fallen into divided camps on the subject. I think I may say with some confidence that, had we from the very first and while preparing our budget been discussing with the House these alternative forms of taxation, the differences which have now appeared would have been equally strong, and we should have found ourselves in exactly the same position. Anything which involved further direct taxation would have been deeply resented by one section, and anything which involved further increase of the customs would have been equally resented by others. So I think I am justified in saying that now at all events the House at large is agreed that alternative forms of taxation could not safely be recommended as supplying the deficiency in our accounts. We are told again that we could have avoided it if we had acted more strenuously in following the recommendations of the Inchcape Committee. Indeed some have even gone much further and have said "A fig for your Inchcape Committee! if we ourselves had undertaken retrenchment, we would have gone very much further; it was an accommodating kind of Committee which first learnt how much each Department could spare and then proceeded to cut just that amount off." A more unjust, a more unreasonable description of the operations of that Committee it would be impossible to frame. I believe myself that there are few in this House who ever thought that a Retrenchment Committee could put forward proposals for so substantial a reduction in our current expenditure; and I can say with confidence that if those who say we have not done our best to meet the recommendations of that Committee, were to sit with us and were to attempt to face the task of carrying those recommendations out, I doubt myself whether they would be successful, as we ourselves are likely to be, in carrying out those recommendations. "A few crores more off the Army would do all that was wanted!" It is an easy word! But I, who had some experience of the difficulties of reducing army expenditure after the Great War, who have seen how extraordinarily difficult it is when you are just building up your machinery after the chaotic conditions introduced by such a war. I have seen how almost impossible it is at once and at one swoop to make large reductions, unless at the same time you reduce the strength of your combatant troops. Personally I believe that we shall be lucky if we manage to work down to the figure which we have taken for the retrenchments recommended by the Committee in the present year. At all events I can say, with the utmost confidence on behalf of my colleagues, that if ever their ready compliance and loyalty was shown in carrying out the recommendations of a Committee, many, if not most of whose recommendations were bound to be distasteful, that loyalty was shown on this occasion. We are told that there is another method of meeting the difficulty; and here, again, well aware as I am how much this question has already been discussed, I shall touch on it but very lightly, I mean the method of altering the form of our account. I should not indeed have touched on it at all if it had not been that our inability to take this course has been quoted as a proof that we ourselves have been unduly obstructive, unduly hard to move, and unaccommodating in this respect. I say 'ourselves', Sir, advisedly, because there was a personal attack made on the Finance Member, which attributed that attitude of mind entirely to him. Sir, I do not see the author of that attack. (A Voice: "He is here.") Yes, he is here. I should like to say as little as possible as to the manner of that attack. I will say a little of it, because I believe myself that on the whole the House so far disagreed that it has strengthened Sir Basil Blackett's position. But I must say this, that it has been one of our traditions here, and a tradition of which we are proud, that we do not indulge in personal attacks on each other. We attack each other's ideas; we attack each other's principles; we attack each other's policy. In neither case are we sparing in our criticism. But we do not attack the individual. Yet that is exactly what was done on this occasion, and were that method to be followed generally in this House, there are few who would not have cause to look back on the innovation with genuine regret. As to the arguments on which that attack was based, I must say this. So far from any one individual member of our body having been unduly unaccommodating in this respect, anything that has been done in regard to the restoration of grants refused is the decision of our body as a whole and we stand and fall together by it. Now, grants have been restored in two respects. One relates to the Royal Commission. I suppose there is nobody here who did not expect that if the vote went against us—and I think I may claim that it was perhaps only by a chance that it did go against us—we should in the ordinary discharge of our duty have to restore that grant, and I will add, Sir, that I do not think there is anybody here who resents our having done so. (Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas: "No, no. We do resent.") But, there was a second case in which the grant was restored. I argued it before; I am not going to argue it again. But I wish to quote the actual words used by Captain Sassoon in supporting the proposed transfer from Revenue to Capital. Remember again, when you hear them, that it was the Finance Member who was unaccommodating because he could not see his way to yield on this point.

This is the argument on which the proposal was based:

"We find no other at any rate easy suggestion put forward to replace that money. We are therefore trying to cut our coats according to our cloth and, although I agree it is to a certain extent juggling"

So, Sir, it was put forward with the admission that it confessedly was juggling and the Finance Member was unaccommodating because he refused to juggle. I commend Captain Sassoon to put forward an argument of that nature at a meeting of one of his companies in Bombay.

I suggest to him that, if at any time he should be in the position of having to raise further money and, in order to show a good return should be under the necessity of putting his affairs in as favourable a light as possible to the public, I commend to him to suggest to the shareholders that they should indulge in the operation of juggling in order to make their accounts look better. I will only give him one other piece of advice. He said that, if this were the attitude we were to take up on behalf of Government, he was doing little good here and he might as well return to his constituents. I have no desire to see him return to his constituents, Sir, because I think that, if he stays here, he will learn something which will be valuable to him in after life, if it is only a proper reticence in debate.

When those were the alternatives, namely, when it has not been really suggesting to us that there is any better tax, when it has been put to us that we might get square by making further retrenchments which we knew to be impossible, or by changing the form of our accounts, we have felt that we are indeed left with this one sole resource; and, if we have felt that, I do not think that anybody can accuse us of wilfully flouting public opinion or wilfully offending a deeply felt sentiment. We knew and recognised that sentiment. But, we were faced with a necessity for which we saw no other solution and a necessity, Sir, for which at this moment frankly I and those with me see no other solution now. Believe me, if we still hold to our position, it is not because we do not recognise the difficulties of our opponents; it is not because we are unmindful or careless of the depth of sentiment on the subject of the salt tax, or of the 20 years' history behind it. We recognise that it will require courage on the part of Members of this House to support that tax, and yet, although it is with an uneasy heart—for I myself would have been too glad to have avoided fresh taxation and more than glad to have avoided this particular item of taxation, yet though my heart is uneasy on the subject, I can with some confidence still put this solution forward. The one thing that we want now is a courageous and a consistent attempt to get into a position where we can at last see daylight. If it requires courage on your part, believe me you are not alone in that. It has required on our part also courage, for we know that we run the risk of incurring much criticism, much misinterpretation, and even discontent. My last word to the Assembly is this—that if you can take your courage in both hands now, if you can get into a position where you can at length see daylight, then you are at the beginning of a new state of things; you will have reached something like stability, and financial stability is the basis of your future progress. But as long as your condition of instability lasts, you will still year after year have to face recurring trouble, not only financial but political. It is only by facing the situation now that you can put the finances of India into a condition when India itself can, with something like a serene outlook on the future, set to work to readjust its relations with the Provinces, to provide Ministers, who are the chief agents of reform in the Provinces, with means to make their position real, it is only then that you can look with anything like a clear and serene vision on the future.

Mr. President: Amendment moved to clause 2, sub-section (1):

"For the words 'two rupees and eight' substitute the words 'one rupee and four'."

The question I have to put is that amendment be made.

The motion was adopted.

Mr. President: I had better call upon Dr. Gour to move the proposal he has put on the paper in the form of a new clause which ought to be added as sub-clause (3) of clause 2.

Dr. H. S. Gour: Sir, I wish to move the following amendment

Mr. Harchandrai Vishindas (Sind: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Might I suggest to the Chair that the number of the amendment should be stated.

Mr. President: It is amendment No. 47, slightly redrafted.

Dr. H. S. Gour: It is No. 47, redrafted for me by the Legislative Department. It reads as follows: It will be sub-clause (2):

"Notwithstanding anything contained in the Provisional Collection of Taxes Act, 1918, the duty on salt manufactured in, or imported into, any part of British India other than Burma and Aden shall for the period beginning on the first day of March, 1923, and ending on the day preceding the commencement of this Act be deemed for all the purposes of the Indian Salt Act, 1882, to have been imposed by rule made under section 7 of that Act at the rate of Rs. 2-8-0 per maund of 82 and 2/7th lbs. avoirdupois."

Now the real point of this amendment, as Honourable Members will see, is this. The Government of India ordered the levy of the enhanced duty on salt from the 1st of March of this year. And consequently they will have realised between 25 and 30 lakhs of rupees between the 1st of March and the date on which the new Finance Bill comes into operation. And the question, therefore, is whether the Government of India should, on the passing of our amendments, refund the money which they have received on the basis of the enhanced salt duty. If Honourable Members will consider for a moment from whom this duty has been realised and who will ultimately profit by it, they will have no difficulty whatever in supporting my amendment. The enhanced duty was realised by the middleman, the contractor. He immediately passed it on to the other subordinate sellers and ultimately to the consumer. It has been distributed, therefore, all over the country. If this refund is to be made, it cannot go back to the payers of the enhanced duty. It will go to the middleman who has already profited by the enhanced duty and has passed it on to other people. I think, therefore, it is just and fair that the State should not lose and the middleman should not gain what would be an unearned return and I therefore submit that, while coming to the aid of the State, we are also looking to what is intrinsic justice. And I, therefore, Sir, move that my amendment should be accepted by the House. I move it.

The motion was adopted.

Mr. President: The question is that clause 2, as amended, stand part of the Bill.

Sir Montagu Webb: Sir, the effect of the Resolution to keep the salt tax at Rs. 1-4 will deprive Government of the anticipated revenue which they expected to derive from that source. I therefore take this opportunity of inviting the Honourable the Finance Member's attention once again to the scope for further taxation which is afforded to him by a replacement of the import duty on silver. I had on the agenda paper a motion for the reimposition of this old tax, but the Honourable the Finance Member referred to this briefly as unacceptable to Government. But I would seriously ask Government to reconsider this matter because, in my opinion, Government are simply throwing away quite unnecessarily at least a crore and a half of rupees a year. Now, this tax of four annas on silver which was on silver for several years, and yielded Government very substantial revenues, was removed not under any pressure from this House, not under any pressure from the public, but was taken off in response to what I can only call the theoretical disquisitions of the Batington Smith Committee that it was undesirable to tax the precious metals. Now, Sir, silver coming into this country is imported by the public mainly for the arts.

Dr. H. S. Gour: Sir, I rise to a point of order. I ask you, Sir, whether, in view of your ruling given yesterday that it was not open to any Honourable Member to propose a new form of taxation, the Honourable Member is in order in proposing a new form of taxation.

Mr. President: As far as I am aware, he is not proposing and could not propose a new form of taxation under this clause or any other.

Sir Montagu Webb: What I mean, Sir, to suggest for the consideration of the Treasury Benches is the re-imposition by them of this tax. Silver is imported into this country by private persons solely for ornaments. It is a luxury import pure and simple,—and I see no reason whatever,—no sound economic reason whatever, why this tax should not be relieved. The only objection, Sir, that has been made on this occasion comes from the Bombay bullion merchants themselves; in other words, from the traders who deal in silver. Just as the man who deals in boots naturally objects to a tax on boots, so the trader who deals in silver naturally objects to a tax on silver. Now, the Honourable the Finance Member said that at any rate this tax without a rebate on export was unacceptable to him, because it would interfere with trade in silver. I am a merchant myself. I know perfectly well that cotton goods are imported into this country, that they pay substantial duties, and are re-exported in the ordinary course of trade. I import sugar into this country, Sir, which pays a very substantial duty and is exported again in the ordinary course of trade and I see no reason whatever why silver should not come into this country and pay its four annas duty and be exported when the market suited in the ordinary course of trade with or without a rebate. Why, Sir, in the course of the last few days, the price of silver has risen over three pence per ounce. That is, in the last few days, the variations in the sterling price have been almost as much as this proposed duty. The duty was paid before without any difficulty. No body objected to it. Government got their crores. If unfortunately they had not removed their tax, I think they would have received Rs. 2 or 3 crores a year on the average in revenue to this day. I therefore appeal to the Treasury Benches and to the Finance Member to reconsider the probable revenue which could be derived from a re-imposition of this 4 annas tax.

Mr. Manmohandas Ramji (Indian Merchants' Chamber and Bureau: Indian Commerce): Sir, I rise to oppose this suggestion. Sir Montagu Webb says, "Here is an opportunity for Government to fill up their treasury with a crore or more of rupees" and he suggests that silver is an article of luxury. We have traded on this question since the last two years. It was put forward by Mr. Spence in the first year of this Assembly's existence.

Mr. J. P. Cotelingam (Nominated: Indian Christians): Mr. Price.

Mr. Manmohandas Ramji: By Mr. Price from Karachi and it was thrown out. Now, the Honourable Member from Karachi moved a similar motion last year and that was also negatived. He has made himself bold to make that suggestion again this year. I wonder, Sir, why Karachi is so very persistent in putting this question before this House so persistently. If Karachi thought that there was something in it, I think Bombay and Calcutta would have thought of it much earlier and they would have come forward. Sir, it is not with the idea of finding sources of revenue to Government to the extent of Rs. 1 crore. There must be something behind it and the question is whether it is going to affect, or tamper with, our exchange policy. Perhaps the latter must be the reason for it. If that is so, I think this House will take into consideration the fact that we should not so easily tamper with an important question like this, affecting the whole policy of this country in the matter of exchange, by a vote here or there. It is a policy which, if accepted, will act to the detriment of this country. Now, Sir, Sir Montagu Webb said that though we are putting duty on piece goods and other articles it is refunded all the same. But he forgets that the duty is refunded only when it can be traced positively to the consignment, as it was when it was imported. If the Customs authorities are satisfied that on a particular parcel or on a particular package duty has been paid, it is refunded. Here, in the case of silver, its identity cannot be traced when it is re-exported. We have lots of silver here lying, which has not paid duty for importation, and if we begin to give a bounty, on export, the question arises on which consignment will this bounty be given. Shall we give a bounty on all the hoards that we have, by sending them to some other country? Who will be benefited by that? I think the argument is totally fallacious. Then, Sir, last year Sir Malcolm Hailey had explored all the arguments that were advanced in favour of this duty and I do not propose to repeat them just now. I am convinced that the attitude taken up last year by the Finance Department and the Members of this House is in itself a guarantee that this suggestion will not be accepted.

Clause 2, as amended, was added to the Bill.

Sir Campbell Rhodes: I beg to move amendment No. 31:

"That for sub-clause (2) of clause 3 the following shall be substituted:

"(2) In Schedule III to the same Act item 3 shall be omitted."

This is in effect to do away with the export hide duty. It has been an unfortunate experience in fiscal reform for which the commercial community are equally responsible with the Government of India. In the unanimous report of the Fiscal Commission it was dealt with in paragraphs 190 and 191:

"This first experiment of the Government of India in protection followed, in our view, a wrong method."

"If the tanning industry requires protection this should be given by an import and not by an export duty."

And again at 191:

"The depression in hides caused by the export duty added to the natural world depression in price has resulted in many cases in making it unprofitable to collect the inferior hides. We have received evidence that the hides are frequently allowed to rot on the carcasses and that in consequence of low prices which have undoubtedly been accentuated by the export duty a source of wealth in the aggregate not inconsiderable has naturally been destroyed."

At the meeting of the Associated Chambers of Commerce, Sir, in January last, there was a very animated debate on this subject which ended in the following Resolution being passed by a majority of six Chambers to three:

"That in the opinion of this Association the export duty on hides and skins should be immediately removed on the grounds that, first, it has proved useless for the purpose for which it was imposed: second, it is economically unsound: and third, it has caused undeserved loss and suffering to all concerned and particularly to those working in a small way in the villages throughout India."

[Sir Campbell Rhodes.]

(Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: "May I have the names of the three Chambers who dissented?") It does not give the names. Speaking from recollection, one was Madras. (Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: "Madras, Bombay and United Provinces?") I am not sure. Now, Sir, turning to the figures of actual experience to bear out the remarks contained in the Fiscal Commission's report and in the Resolution I have just read out, in 1900 to 1914 the average exports of hides from Calcutta was 90 lakhs per annum; in 1921-22, it was only 45 lakhs. You have therefore, Sir, a value which I roughly estimate at 2½ crores either tanned locally or, as the Fiscal Commission's report says, rotting on the fields. Now, we know that though the local tanning industry has increased, it has not increased to anything like that extent. Speaking to hide experts in Calcutta I was told that on the first immediately after this reduction was made there was a revival in trade; and taking up last week's Capital I find the market report says that there are eager buyers and a good demand and that hides are now coming down from up-country stations which owing to their distance and the high railway rates were unable to dispose of their hides previously.

Chaudhri Shahab-ud-Din: I rise to a point of order. The reference in the amendment proposed appears to be to the Tariff Act of 1894 as only in that Act is there a Schedule III; but item 3 of that Schedule relates to rice and not to skins or hides. (A Voice: "That has been amended.")

Mr. President: Sir Campbell Rhodes is perfectly in order. He has moved the omission of item 3 in Schedule III to the Indian Tariff Act. Item 3 is—"Raw hides and skins ad valorem 15 per cent., etc." What is the Honourable Member's point?

Chaudhri Shahab-ud-Din: Sir, my point is that in item 3 of Schedule III to the Indian Tariff Act rice is mentioned.

Mr. President: You have the wrong Act.

Sir Campbell Rhodes: Sir, I was just finishing and all that the Honourable Member has done is to spoil the effect of my peroration. What I wish to point out is—I do not want to over-state my case—that owing to world conditions which have been aggravated by this duty, there is an enormous wealth in India being actually destroyed, as was pointed out in the Fiscal Commission. That wealth, I estimate, for Bengal and the surrounding districts only, at two crores of rupees. We have there a loss of wealth, which is probably the case elsewhere in India, as large as the provincial contributions and certainly larger than the salt tax. In the Fiscal Committee's Report we denounced practically all forms of export duty. We pointed out how the country loses in its competition with the world by imposing such duties, and it is in order to benefit, not the hide merchants, not the local tanners, but the people of the country that I move my amendment.

Mr. President: Amendment moved:

"For sub-clause (2) of clause 3 the following shall be substituted:

'(2) In Schedule III to the same Act item 3 shall be omitted.'

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: Sir, I beg most emphatically to oppose this motion of my Honourable friend, Sir Campbell Rhodes. Sir, this was the one duty which was avowedly imposed by the Government of India to protect an indigeneous industry in this country. All other duties were imposed for the purpose of revenue,—this was the first duty which was imposed on the ground of protection. Sir, the tanning industry in South

India, in the Madras Presidency, in the Bombay Presidency, in the United Provinces, it was for the protection of the tanning industry in these provinces that this duty was imposed. Sir, as the Fiscal Commission themselves recognized, of which my Honourable friend, Sir Campbell Rhodes, was a most distinguished Member—my only regret is that no Member from Madras representing this industry sat on that Commission (Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas: "Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar was there." Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: "But he does not represent the tanning industry.") I am sorry also that Sir Logie Watson happens to be absent from this Assembly to-day—this duty was welcomed on all hands; in fact public opinion was behind it unanimously; the Chambers of Commerce, including the Bengal Chamber of Commerce, supported the imposition of this duty at the time it was imposed in 1919. Sir, it was rather unfortunate that the time chosen was inopportune. As the Fiscal Commission themselves recognized in paragraph 190 referred to by my Honourable friend, they say, 'we are aware that the experiment was introduced at a most unfavourable moment, and that the export duty was not the main cause of the depression that has overtaken the export trade.' They say that their objection to it is based upon principle. Sir, we cannot sacrifice what we have already done merely on the ground of principle. My complaint is that this experiment has not been tried sufficiently long. Sir, no experiment can be pronounced a failure or a success unless you give it a fair trial. You have not given this experiment a fair trial; that is the point which I ask the House to remember in this connection. In an earlier part of the Report I think the Fiscal Commission recognize that a period of 20 to 30 years is necessary in order to find out really whether any proposed duty will act to the betterment or detriment of an existing industry. Sir, three years, and three years, most inopportune years, is too soon to judge of the result of this experiment on which the Government of India embarked. Sir, the depression in the hides and skins trade is—I will not say entirely—is mostly due to the condition in Central Europe. Sir, Germany and Austria were our main customers. We know how those countries have failed. The depression in the trade is not due to the export duty at all. You may remove the export duty as much as you like, but I do not think that the depression is going to improve. The condition will remain there so long as our customers are unable to buy. That is the real secret of the depression in the hides and skins trade. Sir, this is not the first time that Bengal is attempting to remove (Mr. J. Chaudhri: "No, no.")—I am thankful to my Honourable friend, Mr. Chaudhri,—I mean this is not the first time that the representative of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce tries to remove this duty. His predecessor in office tried to do it in 1921, I mean Sir Frank Carter, and he failed miserably. I hope, Sir, the same result will await my Honourable friend's motion. It is true he said he invoked the authoritative pronouncement of the Fiscal Commission, of which my Honourable friend, as I have already said, was a distinguished member, and how far he contributed to the result is rather difficult to estimate. Sir, I have here in my hands a telegram showing that the Madras Chamber of Commerce, the Southern India Chamber of Commerce and the Hides and Skins Merchants' Association—and I lay emphasis on this—the Hides and Skins Merchants' Association, strongly protest against the reduction of export duty on raw hides and skins, and at a joint meeting held on the 5th of March, it was unanimously resolved to suggest that no rebate be allowed. That is again another point on which I have got a separate motion about the proviso contained in that clause; so that, Sir, they object to any reduction, and, therefore, they object much more to the removal of this from the schedule altogether which my Honourable friend aims at. Sir Logie Watson, Sir, told this Assembly in 1921 how for 25 years as a man in the trade he had been agitating for the imposition of this duty, but the Government of India only accepted it in times of war, because they were forced to do it on account of war conditions, because Germany took all our raw hides and converted them into boots. Sir, he pointed out most forcibly that whereas these countries which he enumerated were willing to take all our raw products without any duty, they imposed a heavy duty on manufactured articles. "They do not want our manufactured articles. What they want from us is our raw material." Sir, we are playing into the hands of such countries which are wanting our raw products but do not want our manufactured articles. Sir, he suggested that "it would have done a great deal of help if conditions had been normal, and it would accomplish a good deal more if Government will take into consideration what I have urged upon them many years ago, namely, to make the duty into Germany, France, Italy, etc., commensurate with the duty which they impose upon our manufactured articles." Sir, if the Government of India had done that, this duty might have helped us, helped the trade considerably. The Honourable Mr. Innes speaking on behalf of the Government on that occasion also pointed out that it was not right to judge of the effects of this export duty by the abnormal conditions which prevailed, and those abnormal conditions have not ceased to exist as men in the trade will tell us. It is not necessary that they should be in the particular trade. Everywhere we hear cries that on account of the exchange and on account of other difficulties trade suffers enormously and we know it to our detriment, as our revenue returns show. In fact, the Honourable Mr. Innes in meeting the argument which has just been advanced by my Honourable friend, Sir Campbell Rhodes, said this: "The export duty is accused of being the cause of all the troubles under which the trade is labouring." Now, Sir, in this particular case nobody is able to say, or indeed has said, that our export duty is the cause of the stagnation of the hides and skins trade. If that was so in 1921, that opinion is also endorsed by the passage which I have read from paragraph 190 of the Fiscal Commission's report. Therefore, Sir, I submit that the tanning industry is a very important industry in South India and also in other provinces, I do not know what other Members from Bombay and the United Provinces have got to say about this. I know this, Sir, that, when this duty was put on in 1919, it was welcomed with both hands and with all heart, and, if this duty is removed or reduced, the news will be received with great pain in my province. In fact I am going to oppose the original motion of Government for reducing this duty. But of this, Sir, there can be no doubt that we should reject this motion of Sir Campbell Rhodes.

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: Sir, I think I am correct in saying that the real battle over this hides and skins duty will come on when the motion is made to restore the duty to its original figure. All I will say, therefore, with regard to Sir Campbell Rhodes' amendment is this. The Government, having regard to the present financial situation, have gone as far as they think it right to go to relieve what they know to be a very real burden on a very important export trade. That being so, Sir, I am afraid I must oppose Sir Campbell Rhodes' amendment.

The motion was negatived.

Khan Bahadur Sarfaraz Hussain Khan (Tirhut Division: Muhammadan): Sir, the motion that I have to move is:

"That in clause 3 (2) for the figure and words '5 per cent.' substitute the figures and words '12 per cent.'"

I do not understand, Sir, why the duty on this has been proposed to be reduced from 15 to 5 per cent. In the statement which I have got of the Sea-borne Trade it appears that in 1920-21 the total export was 164 tons; in 1921-22 the total export was 133 tons; so that exports fell by only 31 tons last year. Whereas, export to Germany in 1920-21 was nil, in 1921-22 it rose to 18 tons, and we are not aware whether it has risen this year or not. So, in the circumstances, I do not see any justification for reducing the duty from 15 to 5 per cent. Further, I say that the market which was totally upset for the last few years on account of the war is now gradually and slowly settling down, and thus it may well be expected that exports will probably increase in the coming year. Thus I do not see any justification, as I have said, for reducing the tax from 15 to 5 per cent.; but, simply with a view to test the reduction, I propose that it should be reduced from 15 to 12 per cent. and not to 5 per cent. I move the amendment.

The motion was negatived.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: Sir, I beg to move the last portion of my amendment No. 30, that in Schedule III to the said Act in the fourth column of item 3, Raw Hides and Skins, the proviso shall be omitted.

This export duty was fixed by the Act of 1919, and at the same time a proviso was added so as to give, to use short language, Imperial Preference. The proviso, as Honourable Members will remember, runs as follows:

"Provided that, subject to such conditions as the Governor General in Council may by notification in the Gazette of India prescribe, a rebate shall be granted to the exporter of two-thirds of the duty levied on hides or skins exported to any part of His Majesty's Dominions or of the territories of any Indian Prince or Chief under the suzerainty of His Majesty or of any territories under the protection of His Majesty or in respect of which a mandate of the League of Nations is exercised by the Government of any part of His Majesty's dominions."

This has been carefully examined by the Fiscal Commission and in paragraph 198 of their Report they say this:

"It follows from the general principles which we have stated above that we are opposed to the use of preferential tariff for the purpose of granting . . . The existing duty contains a preferential provision. The duty is at the rate of 15 per cent. ad valorem with a rebate on hides and skins within the Empire. We have no hesitation in condemning this provision."

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: May I rise to a point of order, Sir? I understand the Honourable Member is discussing clause 3 (2) of the Indian Finance Bill. Clause 3 (2) makes a proposal that for the whole of the entry in the fourth column of the Schedule the words "five per cent." shall be substituted. That is to say, the amendment before the House abolishes this preference altogether. The Honourable Member is now proposing that the preference should be dropped. I wish to explain that in our amendment we do drop it.

Mr. President: In that case the Honourable Member from Madras and the Chair have fallen into the same error in assuming that the amendment was only to change the 15 per cent. to 5 per cent.

The Honourable Mr. O. A. Innes: It states explicitly that 5 per cent. be substituted.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: The proviso will be there all the same.

The Honourable Mr. O. A. Innes: No, Sir.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: If the Chair rules it is already comprised—if that is the intention, then I need not proceed.

The Honourable Mr. O. A. Innes: That is the intention. That is how the draft was drawn in accordance with our instructions to the Legislative Department.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: The language is not happy. The proviso will be there still.

Mr. President: The Honourable Member may make quite certain of excluding it by a negative vote now.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: Then I need not argue it out.

Mr. President: What has the Legislative Secretary to say?

Sir Henry Moncrieff Smith (Secretary, Legislative Department): I am asking for a copy of the Tariff Act.

Mr. President. I am just putting the question now.

The Honourable Mr. O. A. Innes: I should explain that if the House is going to restore the 15 per cent. then I do not think that the proviso ought to be omitted, because I do not think the House should vote on a question of this kind on a side issue. Our instructions clearly were that for the whole of this entry in column 4, simply 5 per cent. should be substituted. There should be no preference of any sort.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: Then I do not think there is any language here to show. You do not remove the proviso unfortunately.

Sir Henry Moncrieff Smith: The proviso is part of the entry in column 4. If the Bill removes the whole entry in column 4 and substitutes something else for it, the proviso has necessarily gone.

The amendment was, by leave of the Assembly, withdrawn.

Mr. President: The question is that Clause 3 stand part of the Bill.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: Sir, I beg to oppose this motion. Sir, as I have stated already, it is too soon to interfere with this duty. It was introduced with a deliberate purpose; it has not been given a fair trial and, I do not see, Sir, why the Government, when they are going to await the constitution of the Tariff Board in order to carry out the recommendations of the Fiscal Commission, are in a hurry to carry out this recommendation. I fail to see it. The matter may well be allowed to remain as it is. I hope, Sir, that normal conditions will return in a year or two, in which case it will be of great advantage to the tanning industry if we retain this export duty at 15 per cent. In fact, but for the tanning industry in this country, during war time I am sure the Government would have been put to considerable strain. This industry came to the help of Government, in fact placed the whole of their materials at the disposal of Government and they were able to use the industry very largely in carrying on the war. So it will not do to allow this industry to die out. On the other hand I appeal to the Government to use every effort in their power to put this industry on a proper basis. I do think, Sir, that the supposed loss in other parts of the country is fanciful. I do not think there is really any demand for hides and skins from the rest of the world. That is the real cause of the depression in the trade. When the time comes it will be very difficult to re-impose this duty. Let the Statute remain as it is now, and let us try it for another year or two and then see really whether it has had any noxious effect on the trade. Then it may be time enough to remove it. I therefore appeal to Government not to press this motion.

Sir Montagu Webb: Sir, I support the motion now before the House. Mr. Rangachariar has expressed a hope that the 15 per cent. duty will remain on as a form of protection to the Madras tanning industry. Well, Sir, the Indian Fiscal Commission has carefully considered this very point; the Fiscal Commission has made a report in favour of discriminating protection be it remembered. Now, let us hear what it says about this duty:

“We hold, therefore, that so far as the export duty on hides and skins is intended to be protective, it cannot be justified.” (Paragraph 193).

I think, Sir, that disposes of the subject.

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: Sir, this morning the House determined to do justice to the poor man. This afternoon I hope that they will do justice to a poor trade. Let me remind the House of the history of this unfortunate export duty. It is one of the worst mistakes that the Government of India ever made. At the end of 1919 at the height of the post-war boom, when neither the Government of India nor the trade were in a condition, I think, of real sanity, the Government of India arrived at the conclusion that they were in a position to dictate the form in which their raw materials, these raw hides, should leave the country. Consequently they put on this extremely heavy export duty, an export duty of 15 per cent. ad valorem; and they put it on raw hides and skins with two objects: one of their objects was, as Mr. Rangachariar has rightly said, to encourage the tanning industry in India, and the other object was to try to retain within the Empire a key industry. That was the reason why this proviso to which Mr. Rangachariar has just drawn attention was inserted in the Schedule—the proviso which allows a rebate of 2/3rds. of the duty on all hides and skins exported from India provided that they are tanned within the Empire. Now, Sir, these are the two objects with which the Government of India imposed this duty. And I say without fear of contradiction that both those two objects have not been attained. We have not by this very questionable means of an export duty succeeded in encouraging the tanning industry in India or other leather industries, nor have we succeeded in keeping this key industry in the Empire. On the contrary, as before the war, so now, England has almost dropped now from the market in regard to raw hides. We discovered our mistake not very long ago when we imposed this duty. As I said, we imposed this export duty when the trade was at the top of the boom. Hardly had the ink dried on our notification before the slump began. Since then until very recently there has been a progressive decline in trade. I do not for a moment say that it was the mere fact that we had put on this export duty that ruined the trade. Mr. Rangachariar is correct there; the trade was ruined not by the export duty, but by a general worldwide slump and by the inability of Germany and other countries which used to buy hides to purchase our hides. I admit that fully. But you have got to remember that you have got here one of the most important export lines which is in the position of the greatest possible depression. They are having the greatest possible difficulty in selling their hides, in getting any export demand for their hides, and the Government of India by their own action have placed them in greater difficulties by imposing this 15 per cent. export duty upon these hides and skins. An export duty is always a dangerous thing. I have heard it described as an economic horror, because you can never be sure where the incidence of that duty is going to fall. If you have a monopoly you pass that duty on to the foreign consumer; if you have not got a monopoly, your purchaser has to pay the world's price and he has to bear the brunt of your own export duty; that is to say your tax recoils upon your own men. Now we have long known that this tax was a failure having regard to the object with which it was imposed. We are now keeping it on purely for revenue purposes. Now, I want to know, is it right that the general tax-payer should benefit at the expense of our traders in hides and skins? Is it right that when this hides and skins trade is in this depressed condition we should continue to place upon it an export duty of 15 per cent? It is the heaviest export duty we have, a heavier duty than on tea, a flourishing industry at the moment, a heavier duty than on rice—another flourishing industry and very much heavier than the export duty on jute. It is the hides and skins trade that we have selected for the heaviest of all export duties. That is the reason why the Government at last decided, whatever their financial condition may be, that the time has come when in justice to this trade they must reduce this duty.

Mr. Rangachariar said that we must keep on this duty because we must protect the Madras tanning industry. Now, Sir, I come from Madras. I used to take a very great interest in that industry, in fact I used to run a school for the benefit of that industry. But, Sir, though I come from Madras, I protest most strongly against sectional interests like the interests of Madras and Cawnpore in a House like this, a House which is representative of all India, being allowed to override the general interests of the country. Sir, what is the Madras tanning industry? I do not wish to decry it, but is it an industry which makes things which are used in this country? No. The Madras tanned hide is merely a half-tanned hide. It is a very useful industry in that it employs a certain number of tanners, but the product is exported, just like the raw hides are exported, to England. It is not an industry which produces anything for use in India. And if you want protection for industries of that kind, take protection by all means after you go to your Tariff Board, but protect them by means of an import duty, do not go protecting them by means of an export duty of this kind. Mr. Rangachariar says we have done nothing in the way of protecting these tanning industries. We have. I do not say that we did it intentionally, but Mr. Rangachariar knows, as well as I do, that the import duty on leather goods since this export tax was put on has been raised from 7½ per cent. to 15 per cent. The leather industries are not only behind a tariff wall of 15 per cent. but they are getting the benefit of this export duty of 15 per cent. I do not think I need set out to prove how much this hides trade has suffered. As I have said, the mere fact of the export duty being put on has not been the cause why the trade is in such depression. It is due to other causes but the fact that the depression exists is beyond all argument. In 1911-12, in 1912-13, in 1913-14, the average export of raw hides in India was over 50,000 tons a year. In 1920-21 they had dropped to 18,000 tons; in 1921-22 they rose slightly to 25,000 tons. Now, that brings me to another point. Here we see signs of a revival of trade. It is just when the trade is beginning to revive that your export duty becomes most burdensome because it is just this additional burden, where the demand is beginning to arise, it is just this additional burden of the 15 per cent. that turns the scale against India. I deal with another point—not a point raised by Mr. Rangachariar but a point raised by Sir Gordon Fraser. Sir Gordon Fraser is one of our leading tanners in Madras. Therefore, like Mr. Rangachariar, he is interested in the maintenance of this unfortunate duty. Sir Gordon Fraser said that we have a monopoly of these light hides that the world must buy from India because they cannot get them anywhere else. (Mr. Rangachariar: "Especially of buffaloes.") That is not correct. India has not got the monopoly of these light hides. You get these light hides from other places, particularly China. And that is one of the mistakes we made when we thought in 1919 that we were in a position to dictate the form in which our material should leave India. Now, there is one other point I wish to make and I hope the House will agree with me that it is absolutely decisive. As I say, we have here a sick trade. And, as I say, we have a trade that is just beginning to show some slight signs of recovery. Now, it is not merely a question of the 15 per cent. We have also to take into account the various valuations. As the House knows, I think, we don't fix the prices of each consignment when it leaves the country. We base our valuation on the prices usually of the previous year. They are fixed in December; they usually remain in force for the following year. Now, Sir, when the trade in 1921 was slumping away, those valuations were reduced and when they were fixed in December 1921, the prices were still low. In 1922, there was some recovery in prices and in December, this last December, when the question of revising the tariff valuation of hides came up, I was faced with the problem whether I should raise the tariff valuations to their appropriate figure although at that particular moment I had actually circulated a file to the Government of India proposing either the reduction or the removal of the duty or whether I should temporarily extend the existing valuations. Well, I temporarily extended the existing valuations. I may have been wrong in doing so. At any rate, I took the responsibility on myself of doing it,—the reason being, as I have said, that the trade was just showing signs of reviving, and, if we were about to reduce the duty, I did not think it right that we should stop the revival by suddenly raising the valuations. Now, Sir, if the House puts this duty back to 15 per cent. I must warn the House that I must raise the valuations. The Government of India in the Commerce Department cannot evade the duty, imposed by the Legislature, by allowing artificially low valuations, and therefore, whatever happens, whether this duty goes back to 15 per cent., or whether the House accepts my proposal and keeps it at 5 per cent., these valuations must be raised after giving the usual notice to the trade. If the House accepts Mr. Rangachariar's motion and puts this duty back at 15 per cent. then I can only assure the House that we shall deal one more staggering blow at this wretched trade. If you accept my motion to reduce this duty to 5 per cent. you lose very little revenue, because the tariff valuations, as I say, must go up. In fact, you may lose no revenue at all. The mere fact that we are going to reduce this duty to 5 per cent., has already induced a briskness in trade. Let me read from a Cawnpore letter in this week's Indian Trade Journal:

"News about the reduction of the export duty on hides has had a very salutary effect upon the market and has led to increase of business."

Sir, if you accept my proposal, you lose very little revenue, but on the other hand, you will encourage a revival, and in fact you might get more revenue than you expect. If the House on the other hand is led away by Mr. Rangachariar from Madras, if the House is led away by these Madras interests, to keep the duty at 15 per cent., then let the House take the responsibility. I have warned them. I say that we shall be doing one more injustice to a very hard hit trade. Remember Burma too. In Burma the effect of this export duty has been—I say it with sorrow—very disastrous indeed. All efforts to encourage tanning in Burma have failed, the trade has been gravely injured. Let me end on the note with which I began. The House this morning did justice, as they thought, to the poor man. Let me appeal to the House again to do justice to a poor trade.

Mr. Harchandrai Vishindas: Sir, I might inform the Honourable Member for Commerce and Industry that he need not entertain any serious apprehension that the House is going to follow Mr. Rangachariar. I come from a province in which there are a number of Muhammadan traders in hides and skins,—and here, with apologies to Mr. Shahab-ud-Din who, I was informed,—I myself being then absent—had sounded a certain note that Hindu Members of the House had no sympathy with the Muhammadan traders of hides and skins, I as a Hindu want to assure my Muhammadan brethren that we do not observe any sectarian distinction in this regard but want to do justice to people to whom justice is due. Now, these hide-traders have suffered considerably since the imposition of this higher export duty and wherever this hide trade is in existence, I think the Honourable Member for Commerce and Industry must have received complaints from there that these traders have been ruined. In my part of the country those men who were rolling in lakhs have now become heavily indebted. Not only that. I expected the Honourable Mr. Innes to lay the greatest stress upon one point—greater than he has actually done. My own impression has been—of course I am speaking on this point without any expert knowledge, but subject to correction from the Government Benches—that as a matter of fact, even from the point of view which we had at the time when we imposed this heavier duty, it has not been a success; in other words, that it has not produced the income which we expected it to bring. Is that so?

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: Yes.

Mr. Harchandrai Vishindas: If that is so, then we are defeating the very object we have in view. On all sides, in all directions, we are going on wrong lines. We are acting very foolishly. You do not get the revenue for which you impose taxes; your trade is ruined; your traders have become considerably indebted. And I think the only effect of continuing this heavy export duty will be that one or two tanners in the Madras Presidency will be benefited. I think that it is a most inequitable procedure altogether. To ruin numbers of traders and producers for the benefit of one or two institutions is most unjust and inequitable. What is more, Mr. Rangachariar tells us that it is for the benefit of the uplift of this industry that this tax should be maintained at a figure of 15 per cent. Can he point out to us what uplift this industry has received since the imposition of this higher duty? I think absolutely none, and after the Honourable Mr. Innes has pointed out to us the various drawbacks of this higher duty, the various injuries and disadvantages, I think the House will be consulting the best interests of the country by refusing the suggestion of Mr. Rangachariar and supporting the proposal of Government.

Chaudhri Shahab-ud-Din: While I thank whole-heartedly the liberal-minded Honourable Mr. Harchandrai Vishindas and other Hindu gentlemen who have opposed the vicious amendment of the Honourable Mr. Rangachariar, the head of the Hindu orthodox community here in this House, I venture to give one or two more reasons why this tax should be reduced and the Government proposal accepted by this House. (Cries of "We are all agreed.") I am very thankful to all of you who are now agreeable. (A Voice: "Sit down.") Let me finish my sentence. In 1921 when Mr. Price, the then Karachi Member of the Assembly, moved the removal of this export duty, I put it to the House that it should be altogether removed. The Government was neutral and it was left practically to the elected Members of the Assembly to decide whether they would continue the tax or not. (A Voice: "Government opposed it.") No. Government did not oppose. But unfortunately for me and for the community to which I belong, we were in a minority and therefore lost. This time I am thankful to Government and also to the liberal-minded Hindu Members of this Assembly who have supported the Government. The fact of the matter is, if salt is a necessary of life, mutton also is a necessary of life for Mussalmans. They take mutton day and night, though orthodox Brahmins and many other Hindus do not touch it. It is common knowledge that the higher the price of skin the lower the price of mutton. If the skin sells at a higher price the price of mutton goes down. Therefore, even on grounds other than those advanced by the Honourable Mr. Innes it is reasonable that the duty should be lowered if not altogether removed.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: I have nothing to do either with the Hindu or the Muhammadan question. The Southern India Skin and Hide Merchants Association is composed entirely of Muhammadans and they support me. The Southern India Chamber of Commerce is mostly composed of Muhammadans. I have nothing to do with hides or mutton. My constituency demands this measure.

Clause 3 was added to the Bill.

Clause 4 was added to the Bill.

Mr. Harchandrai Vishindas: What about my amendment to clause 3, Sir? My amendment is No. 28.

Mr. President: I called upon the Honourable Member but as there was no response I went on to the amendment of Mr. Rangachariar.

Clauses 5 and 6 were added to the Bill.

Mr. S. C. Shahani (Sind Jagirdars and Zamindars: Landholders): I rise to a point of order. My amendment was with regard to clause 3A, a new clause, and may I know why my amendment has not been allowed?

Mr. President: The amendment of the Cotton Duties Act is outside the scope of the Bill.

Mr. Harchandrai Vishindas: I have also to rise to a point of order. I should like to know if it is the Chair that calls upon the proposers in whose name the amendments stand, or have they to get up of their own accord.

Mr. President: The Honourable Member must rise to protect his own interests. But I did actually call the Honourable Member.

Mr. Harchandrai Vishindas: No, Sir, if you will excuse me. You said "Clause 3 stands part of the Bill", and I then got up and said I had a proviso to move. That was the only time I could get up.

Mr. President: After we had disposed of Dr. Gour's amendment to clause 2, the proviso relating to a provision for the collection of taxes, I called the name of Mr. Harchandrai Vishindas because his amendment followed. He was not then in the House and I assumed he had gone away.

Dr. Nand Lal: The Chair has been pleased to direct that a gentleman who is the author of an amendment should rise. I rose 20 times and could not catch the President's eye.

Mr. Harchandrai Vishindas: I authorized Dr. Nand Lal to move for me. But I thought it had not been reached.

Mr. S. J. Shahani: I rise to a point of order. I have not understood why my amendment was disallowed. Excise is included under Customs and under this head an excise duty of $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. is provided. I have proposed a reduction in this excise duty and my respectful submission therefore is that I should be allowed to move this amendment.

Mr. President: The Honourable Member is proposing to amend the Cotton Duties Act of 1896. The amendment of that Act is not in order. That first amendment that is in order now is amendment No. 58 standing in the name of Sir Montagu Webb where he proposes to reduce the rate of import duty on saccharine from Rs. 20 to Rs. 5.

Sir Montagu Webb: Sir, I beg to move:

"That in Schedule I in proposed amendment No. 7, for the word and figures 'rupees 20', wherever they occur, the word and figure 'rupees 5' be substituted."

I move this amendment, Sir, in response to a request which I have received by telegram from the Karachi Chamber of Commerce. The Karachi Chamber wired to me that the imposition of 20 rupees per pound import duty on saccharine represents over 400 per cent. of the market value. The full new duty cannot be recovered from the ultimate consumer and will probably kill the trade in this commodity involving heavy losses under existing contracts. That, Sir, explains itself. I need add to that that if Government are unable to accept my amendment then I would draw the attention of Government to the fact that existing contracts ought certainly to be exempted as in previous cases. I beg to move the amendment in my name.

Mr. President: Amendment moved:

"In Schedule I in proposed amendment No. 7, for the word and figures 'rupees 20', wherever they occur, the word and figure 'rupees 5' be substituted."

The Honourable Mr. O. A. Innes: Sir, when I explain this matter to the House, I do not think that they will accept Sir Montagu Webb's amendment. The fact of the matter is that saccharine is ordinarily 550 times as sweet as sugar. The present price of saccharine is about Rs. 3-12 a pound, and at present it bears the same rate of duty as sugar, namely, 25 per cent. The result is that you get in a pound of saccharine on payment of a customs duty of about 15 annas. That pound of saccharine is equivalent in sweetening power to 550 lbs. of sugar, and the result of course is perfectly obvious. It is not peculiar to India; every other country almost in the world, most countries in the world, have had to adopt special prohibitive import duties on saccharine in order to protect their sugar revenue. We have already had signs of its coming into India; the imports of saccharine in the last three years have been rising very much indeed, and therefore we have had to adopt this method of imposing a very heavy duty on saccharine in order to equalize the duty on saccharine to the duty on sugar and to protect our sugar revenue. We hope that in this way we shall save at least 19 lakhs in our revenue, and that being so, I hope the House will agree that we must do this. France has a prohibitive duty, England has a duty of 576 times the duty on sugar. This being so, I hope the House will not accept this amendment.

Mr. President: The question is that that amendment be made.

The motion was negatived.

Sir Campbell Rhodes: Sir, my amendment is No. 68:

"In Schedule I to the Bill omit amendments Nos. 10 and 11 and re-number the subsequent amendments accordingly."

My Honourable friend, Mr. Rangachariar, and I made our attacks on the Honourable the Commerce Member single-handed, with no result, and I hope we shall be more fortunate if we attack in company. This question of tea boxes and tea lead is a most interesting study in fiscal problems. It is evidence of an industry started under the protection of revenue duties or rather the haphazard protection produced by the war. There is here, Sir, a conflict of interest, and on this subject, this book to which frequent reference has been made, the Fiscal Report says: "In all such cases the most essential reform is that the utmost publicity should be given to the inquiry of the Tariff Board, so that all interests concerned may have a full opportunity of representing their point of view." It is thought in Calcutta that the action of Government has been influenced by direct pressure from a certain quarter in Calcutta.

The Honourable Mr. O. A. Innes: I should like to contradict that statement at once, Sir. I should like to explain that this proposal was first put up in 1920 and was turned down by myself because the tea industry in that year was in a very bad state.

Sir Campbell Rhodes: I am very glad, Sir, to have that disclaimer. It is of course one which I accept and which the House I know will accept, and it will remove the wrong impression which has been formed in

[Sir Campbell Rhodes.]

Calcutta. On this question of fixing correct valuations for different purposes, a distinguished free trade journalist said recently in Calcutta, and in criticism of the Fiscal Report, that he would rather a hundred times have a revenue tariff formed in honest ignorance by Government officials—the words are his, and not mine—than a scientific tariff drawn up by a number of men who knew all about it. Well, Sir, that journalist takes one view, the Fiscal Commission and the tea trade take another. I should just like to state the problem as it would be put before the Tariff Board; and in this connection during our debate on the Finance Bill both the Honourable Sir Basil Blackett and the Honourable Mr. Innes have told us under different circumstances to wait for the decision of the Tariff Board. That is what I wish Government to do in this case before making this important alteration. Well, Sir, on the one side we have this new tea box making industry in India fulfilling many of the requirements laid down in the Fiscal Commission's report, raw material and home market. So far from being protected at the moment, the protection is rather the other way. Tea boxes are made of three ply wood in which expensive glue of cement is used. If it comes in the form of a tea box, it comes in at 2½ per cent. If it comes in the form of cement for local industry, then it comes in at 15 per cent. We have, therefore, an industry which might well look for protection from the new tariff board. But take the other side of the question. The tea industry claims that this is their raw material and doubtless the Commerce Member will tell me that packing material does not usually come in free or at a nominal rate. I must point out that packing material in the case of tea is a very large item on the production of the finished article. We have also, Sir, in the case of the tea industry an export duty put on in 1916 and condemned by the Fiscal Commission. The tea industry is being constantly chased both by the Honourable the Finance Member and the Honourable the Commerce Member. The Commerce Member has put on the export duty. The Finance Member has made the discovery that tea is not an agricultural industry, because it has to undergo certain processes before being packed. He has also discovered that the tea planter occupies a bungalow. There is, therefore, a case to be put before the tariff board, and I do not think the case can be adequately discussed in this House or decided by a stroke of the pen by the Government of India. The decision of the tariff board, if I may anticipate it, would probably be that this duty would be justified if the tea industry were not handicapped by export duty. But, I submit to the House that it is not fair to leave off all the handicaps and then put on this protective tariff.

Mr. George Bridge (Assam: European): Sir, I rise to support the amendment moved by my Honourable friend, Sir Campbell Rhodes. It would seem on a point of administration it is proposed by Government to raise the import tax on tea boxes and tea lead from 2½ to 15 per cent., or seven times the former tax. This means making the tea industry pay some lakhs of rupees more. Sir, the tea industry is just emerging from the waves of depression which overtook it in 1920, when tea was selling in open market for less than the price of the boxes it was packed in. Just as the planter is raising his head above these waves of depression there comes another wave of taxation to overwhelm him. It may be said to have had a prosperous year, but it will only allow many gardens to put back to their reserve what they had to take out in 1920. I would point out to the Honourable Assembly that there are also other taxes on tea which Government in its solicitude for the industry has imposed on it. What about the export tax on tea which was put on as a war tax? The export tax is undoubtedly a dangerous tax, as the Member for Commerce said in referring to the export tax on petrol. Therefore I say that the export duty on tea is a dangerous duty and it interferes with our trade. The Honourable the Commerce Member would not put an export duty on jute or on petrol and the reasons that he adduced for this have double force in the matter of tea. The reason why the Honourable the Finance Member would not put an export tax on petrol applies equally, if not with greater force, to tea which has to compete in the open markets of the world against Java, Sumatra, China and Ceylon. It is well known that petrol throughout the world is marketed by the closest possible trust methods and there is actually no competition in its sales. Again, we have a new tax put on this year. After aeons of time the Government has discovered that we are three-fourths agricultural and one-fourth manufacturing. By this conjuring tricks we have now to pay another new tax on tea. The British Government last year took off some of the tax on tea considering the wants of the poor who universally drink it, but the Government of India though professing their desire to reduce the consumption of liquor, opium, ganja, overtax the only article which may lead to their disuse. Every tax put on by Government increases the price to the consumer. Tea has been making good strides in India, but I am afraid the high price it is fetching now partly due to the high taxation will put it out of the reach of the poor to buy.

(At this stage Sir Jamsetjee Jejeebhoy, the Deputy President, took the Chair.)

As India is taking more tea yearly, it is greatly to the benefit of this country that they should take tea instead of ganja, opium and liquor. If more tea was drunk in India the people would be healthier. Seeing that 'Planter' has converted the jungle of Assam into smiling Edens where the only snake in the grass was the non-co-operation movement which has been scotched and driven to its hole, where we hope a firm Government will keep it, seeing the planter has helped Government by importing thousands of coolies who ultimately become Government raiyats and pay Government rent, seeing that without the labour imported at the cost of the planter Assam was decreasing in population, we must ask the Government not to put a higher tax on our boxes and tea lead, as these are just as essential as machinery which pays 2½ per cent. I would, therefore, ask Government not to press for this increase, but to encourage the cup that cheers but does not inebriate. I would therefore ask the House to vote for Sir Campbell Rhodes' amendment.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: I wish to give my support to this motion. It appears to me that this is an indigenous industry, though in the hands of Europeans, and I think we ought to do everything for it. We should treat this as part of machinery. When the trade grows, we could go after them in the shape of income-tax and super-tax. I think about 50 lakhs are spent in importing these tea chests, and they are imported mainly from Great Britain. If we had a local industry to produce these tea chests, then I would be the first to enhance the duty. But as we have not got the necessary raw material for making the tea chests in this country, I do think, Sir, it will work as a hardship on this industry if this duty is enhanced.

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: Sir, I do not wish to take up Mr. Rangachariar in what he just said, because I do not admit that in any way we have raised this duty on tea chests and tea lead for protective purposes. But Mr. Rangachariar was wrong—there are firms making these chests in Calcutta and naturally if we raise this duty as I have proposed these firms which are making these things in the country will be assisted. But this is the point I want to make. It is not for that reason that we propose this increase in the duty on tea chests and tea lead. Let me explain the whole matter. For the last three years, as the House can imagine we have been searching through our tariff schedules with a microscope in order to try and find items on which we can legitimately raise the duty; and we have as the House knows raised the duty on practically every item. Now in 1920, when the tariff schedule was coming under this usual examination, the proposal was put up to me, as I have said, that we should no longer allow this special concession to the tea industry, that its tea boxes and tea lead should come in at a special concession rate. But we decided that as the tea industry at that time was in an extremely depressed state the time was not opportune for raising the duty. Now, this year, as the House knows, I felt compelled to make various proposals to the Finance Department which involved a loss of revenue, and I was called upon to try and make up in any legitimate way I could the revenue which we were sacrificing. And so again we resuscitated this proposal regarding tea chests and tea lead. I do admit that there would have been enormous force in what Sir Campbell Rhodes said, had there been any question of a protective duty; had I been proposing a protective duty on tea chests and tea lead for the benefit of an industry in India, had I been proposing that without awaiting the careful investigation of the Tariff Board, I should have been in an absolutely indefensible position, but I am not doing anything of that sort. What are the facts? What is the duty upon tea chests and tea lead? A special concession rate of 2½ per cent.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: You want to raise it to 15 per cent.

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: We are merely raising it to the general ad valorem rate. Ordinary lead coming into the country pays 15 per cent.; the position now is that if it comes in for the purpose of being made up into tea chests, it pays only 2½ per cent.; similarly ordinary wood coming into the country pays 15 per cent.; but if you bring three-ply wood because it is for tea chests it comes in under the 2½ per cent. item. I admit that the tea industry does suffer from the disability of the export duty, but the question before the House is whether in these days of financial stringency there is any reason why we should continue to allow tea chests and tea lead to come in at a special concession rate of 2½ per cent. or whether they should come in at the ordinary rate of 15 per cent. That is the whole question before the House.

Mr. Darcy Lindsay: There is one important point, Sir, that I would like to put to the House, that these tea chests are brought into the country only for the purpose of export; the tea is filled into the chests and the chests leave the country again. I therefore ask the House, is it fair to impose so heavy an import duty as 15 per cent?

The amendment* was negatived.

Sir Montagu Webb: Sir, I beg to move:

"That in Schedule I in proposed amendment No. 16 (Item No. 87) after the words 'conveyances including' the words 'motor cars of fifteen-horse power or less' be substituted."

The object of this amendment, Sir, is to make a distinction between motor cars of high power and motor cars of low power. At present all motor cars pay an import duty of 30 per cent. ad valorem. If my amendment be accepted by Government and by this House, then motor cars of less than 15-horse power would come in on the 15 per cent. scale duty. I daresay this House is well aware that it has been a great grievance and source of complaint from the motor car industry that motor cars that are now used for business purposes and are an important part of the machinery of trade and commerce should be taxed so heavily as 30 per cent. The problem also has another aspect. Nearly all the cars of over 15-horse power are of foreign manufacture, whereas British manufacturers give particular attention to cars of less than 15-horse power. The effect of the present taxation is to give a direct encouragement to foreign cars and to correspondingly check the importations of British cars. I do not think, Sir, that that was the intention of the Legislature when the present duty was introduced. In making this proposal, I do so with confidence and in the belief that with the difference in the duty there will probably be no difference in the amount of revenue collected by Government. I think probably the chief American cars can afford to bear a few rupees more duty, and I expect the British cars will be able better to compete by the aid of the difference in duty.

I recognise that the introduction of the expression 'Horse power' may perhaps present a technical difficulty to Government, and I suggest therefore for the consideration of Government, if there be any trouble in accepting 15-horse power, that some of the formulae that are in use in other parts of the world may perhaps be adopted. I notice that in Calcutta the Municipal Corporation have introduced a formula based upon the area which the wheel base of a car covers. In France the classification is by the combined cubic contents of the combustion chambers of the cylinders. The British Government determine the horse power by a well known formula: Horse power equals $\frac{1}{4} \times 2 D \times N$ where D is the diameter of each cylinder, and N the number of the cylinders. I mention this in case the expression 'horse power' presents any technical difficulty. I confidently commend this amendment to the acceptance of the House.

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: Sir, if Sir Montagu Webb wishes to make any proposal for Imperial preference, I suggest that he should make an open proposal and not try to introduce it in this way. As I understand his amendment, it is an amendment to get into India the low power English car, cheaper than the high power Canadian or American car. It is very much better, Sir, I think that we should discuss this question of motor cars on Mr. Spence's proposal which is a proposal to deal with motor cars as a whole. The advantage of our present rate of tariff duty is that it is 30 per cent. ad valorem, and therefore the cheaper the car the less the duty you pay. I have got one other objection to Sir Montagu Webb's proposal to tax motor cars on horse power and so on. I will just read an extract from the "Autocar" of the 16th February:

"Nothing is more arbitrary than the present method of determining horse power. A 15-horse power Italian car drops to 10-horse power when it reaches France and climbs to 13.9-horse power when it lands on British territory."

[Mr. C. A. Innes.]

Similarly, the American method of calculating the horse power is, I believe, different from the English method. I say, Sir, that this proposal is not sound. Moreover, I do not believe that it would fulfil the objects which some people have in view, namely, of bringing in the cheap car, cheaper than the dearer or luxury car. But if we are to deal with motor cars properly we must deal with the question on Mr. Spence's amendment.

The amendment was negatived.

Mr. R. A. Spence: Sir, I think we have already Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: Sir, I think it would be better if you would call out the number of the amendment because there are so many amendments.

Mr. Deputy President: It is No. 82.

Mr. R. A. Spence: Sir, I think we have already had a good deal of discussion in this Assembly as to whether a motor car is a luxury or not, and I think we must be very nearly as united on the point that a motor car is not a luxury as we were on the point that salt is a necessity of life. But it is a fact, Sir, that motor cars are not imported into this country for purposes of serving as luxuries. We do not go for joy rides in this country. We use our motor cars for means of getting about the country. The cases of people who go for joy rides in this country are very few and far between. A motor car is used in this country as a help to one's business; as a help to those living on estates in the country. Think, Sir, of the people who live on estates in the Madras Presidency, for instance, in Travancore and Mysore. Think of the tremendous distances that they have to cover. Do you think, Sir, that these people buy motor cars merely for the sake of luxury? No, they are an absolute necessity to them. Sir Montagu Webb had, I think, in his previous amendment really not the idea of introducing a preferential tariff by the back door, but by meeting the views of some of those who say "Oh, look at the Rolls Royce Car, that is a luxury," and therefore, he proposed that a car of small horse power only should be exempt, but as the Honourable the Commerce Member has pointed out to us the difficulties there are in regard to differentiating cars on horse power, I think that we may disregard the few cars that come into this country which might be called luxuries. The Honourable the Commerce Member will probably be able to tell us how many Rolls Royce cars came into India last year. I know the Rolls Royce Manager in Bombay told me that business is very bad. But, Sir, that is my argument. I do not want to detain the House this evening. Motor cars are necessities, and therefore I do ask this House to support me in my amendment asking that necessities should not be classified and charged as luxuries. There are other speakers here, Sir, who can carry on this argument better than I can but I do not believe that the reduction in the duty will cost Government as much as it looks on paper. With these words, Sir, I move my amendment which runs as follows:

"In Schedule I to the Bill, after amendment No. 16 insert the following amendment:

'16A. After item 87, the following item shall be inserted, namely:

'87A. Motor cars, motor cycles, motor scooters, bicycles and tricycles and articles adapted for use as parts and accessories thereof: provided that such articles as are ordinarily also used for purposes other than as parts and accessories of motor vehicles included in this item or in No. 87 or of bicycles or tricycles shall be dutiable at the rate of duty specified for such articles.'"

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: But what does your amendment mean?

Mr. W. S. J. Willson (Bengal: European): Sir, I beg to support the amendment of Mr. Spence. I touched lightly on the subject in the general debate on the budget and I don't think it is one that requires dealing with at any length. It appears to me to be so perfectly obvious. There is one point I would like to have touched upon and that is the enormous lack of employment that has been caused by the heavy handicap to the motor industry, and I don't think, Sir, that any long speech is necessary in any way to support this amendment which speaks for itself.

(At this stage Mr. President resumed his seat.)

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: Sir, I feel that it is rather an ungrateful task to be getting up time after time to defend high import duties upon what I recognise to be important trades. I don't do it with any liking for the task, I can assure the House. But deliberately, two years ago, in view of our financial needs, we raised the duty on motor cars from 7½ to 20 per cent. Again, last year, we had to raise it for the same reason to 30 per cent. We did it quite deliberately and we did it solely for the reason that we might get as much revenue as we could out of the imports of this article. I don't think that anybody says that motor cars are a luxury. Some motor cars of course are a luxury. It depends on the type of cars you have. Other motor cars, of course, are very necessary for the purposes of trade, commerce, transport, etc., but the whole theory of the tax is that a man who can afford to keep a motor car can afford to pay a heavy tax upon that car. After all, the House must remember that we have been driven in the last two years to great expedients to get revenue. Why, even to-day, the Government came forward with this proposal for the salt tax. Now, as I have explained, we have no desire at all to injure this trade. All we are out for is to get revenue and, if we could see that by reducing the tax on motor cars from 30 per cent. to 15 per cent. or 20 per cent., if we could see that by such a reduction of the tax we should so stimulate the trade as to get more revenue, we should not hesitate to do so. The whole reason why we are putting this tax on the trade is the need for revenue. Now, we have examined this question not once but a dozen times from that point of view, from the point of view whether by reducing the tax we should get more revenue, and we are unable to get a satisfactory answer to that question. We are unable to see that a reduction in the tax would stimulate the import of motor cars and would thereby give us more revenue. What is the reason why the import trade in motor cars is not more flourishing at present? Mr. Spence, Sir Montagu Webb, Mr. Willson, will no doubt say that it is due to this heavy rate of import duty. But I don't think that is correct. I have the figures here. The real reason why the motor trade is in a stagnant condition now is that during the two years 1919-20 and 1920-21, there were enormous imports of motor cars into India. The average imports before that time had been somewhere between three and four thousand cars a year. In these two years, there were imported into India over 25,000 cars, far more cars than were necessary to replace the short imports of the previous years and it is these heavy stocks of cars which have been hanging over the import trade. Is Mr. Spence sure that he has got the whole of the trade behind him in this demand for a reduction of the import tax?

Mr. R. A. Spence: I have the Motor Trade Association behind me.

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: My information is that there are many firms which have still got large stocks of cars and that these firms are by no means anxious to see the rate of duty reduced. However, that is my information and Mr. Spence, I may admit, has the authority which must attach to the Motor Trade Association. What I say to the House is this, that the reason why the trade is stagnant at present is, as far as we can see, the very large imports in 1920 and 1921 and the stocks which still hang over the trade owing to these imports. That view is confirmed by the well known fact that it is very difficult in India now to sell a second-hand car. A further reason why the trade is stagnant is the general fact that trade in India is not very prosperous at present and people have not got money to spend on motor cars. That, Sir, is our reading of the situation. I can assure Mr. Spence and everybody else in this House that the operation of this rate of duty—a heavy rate of duty, I admit it to be—is being carefully watched and that as soon as we are satisfied that a reduction in the rate of duty will give us an increase in revenue, we shall not hesitate to reduce the rate. At present we have got no assurance to that effect.

Mr. President: The question is that that amendment be inserted.

The motion was negatived.

Mr. President: The question is that Schedule I stand part of the Bill.

Mr. R. A. Spence: I do not know whether I can move my other amendment. It is such a very small one. I mean No. 88.* It has got the merit of not affecting the revenue of the Government of India. That is one of the greatest merits about it.

Mr. President: So far as I can see, the Honourable Member could discuss it on the Schedule though it is beyond the scope of the Schedule as drawn up.

The question is that Schedule I stand part of the Bill.

Mr. R. A. Spence: Sir, might I draw the attention of the Honourable the Commerce Member to one small matter? For years, Sir, at least until quite recently, prints which were imported into this country for binding in books published in this country were imported free of charge. At the present time, according to the Act, you can bring into this country maps for inserting in books printed in this country free of charge. You can bring into this country covers for those books free of charge. But for some reason, prints cannot be brought into this country free but have got to pay 30 per cent. duty. The prints I am especially interested in are what might be called scientific prints. They are coloured illustrations brought in for the Journal of the Bombay Natural History Society, a Society, Sir, which Government has supported in the past. Perhaps, if the Honourable Member could by some executive action allow those prints which are certified as intended for publication in Scientific Journals to be imported free, it would serve my purpose. I may point out that if I wished to swindle—a thing which I don't wish to do—I believe I could do it by binding all these prints up together in a book and then bringing them into this country as a book, in which case I could get them in free. But that, of course, is a thing that I should not dream of doing and I hope Government will save me from the temptation to do it.

* "In Schedule I to the Bill after amendment No. 21 insert the following amendment:

'21A. To item 137 the following shall be added, namely:—'excepting prints included in item 24'."

Sir Montagu Webb: May I draw the attention of the Government to the fact that the present import tariff contains no item for Wireless Telegraph Apparatus. Wireless telegraphy is, after all, in the process of development and I submit that it is highly desirable in the general interests that every encouragement should be given to the public to experiment further and develop this new and most amazing invention. I tabled an amendment suggesting that such wireless telegraph apparatus might be allowed to be imported under a certificate from the Director-General of Posts and Telegraphs, at the low rate of 2½ per cent. duty, in that way protecting the revenue as far as was necessary. I think that if Government could give consideration to this fact it might assist the development of this most important industry.

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: The wireless telegraphy question is under separate consideration and the Director-General of Posts and Telegraphs is dealing with that subject. As regards Mr. Spence's proposal, of course, we have considered a similar proposal though it was not the particular proposal which Mr. Spence has made. The trouble is that his proposal raises rather an important question of principle. One of the fundamental principles of our customs administration and of tariff is that we do not take into account in assessing an article the use to which it is intended to be put. That is the trouble which Mr. Spence's proposal involves. However, it will be considered.

Schedule I was added to the Bill.

Dr. Nand Lal: May I ask the Honourable Member in charge whether there has been some increase in the revenue on account of making the weight 2½ tolas? My moving the first part of the amendment No. 93 rests on the reply given.

The Honourable Mr. B. N. Sarma (Revenue and Agriculture Member): There has been an increase of about Rs. 60 lakhs under Stamps generally.

Dr. Nand Lal: Then I do not move (i). I move clause (ii):

"In Schedule II to the Bill:

Under the heading 'Postcards', for the existing entries substitute the following:

'Single	...	...	...	Quarter of an anna.
Reply	...	...	...	Half an anna'."

My submission before the House is that my information is that the Postal Department has not gained much on account of dropping the old system and resorting to the new one, that is, making single post card half an anna instead of quarter an anna, and making the reply post card one anna instead of half an anna. If my information is correct, that there has not been an appreciable increase in the revenue, then I submit that it is not desirable that this rate should be adopted for the year 1923-24. There has been considerable inconvenience to the public on account of this increase which was sanctioned last year. And my submission is that the Government of India will be able to give due consideration to this inconvenience of the public in face of the fact that there has not been much increase in the revenue.

Mr. K. C. Neogy (Dacca Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I quite recognize that this late hour is not quite appropriate for discussing the financial policy of the post office. But regard being had to the fact that the Postal Department is handing over to the general exchequer this year the large amount of one crore and forty-seven lakhs of rupees, I do not think I should let this occasion pass without some comments. Sir, the other day we heard Dr. Gour say that the Postal Department was a commercial Department and he wanted his pound of flesh from this Department. Now, the question is, is the Postal Department a revenue-earning Department at all? I will not refer in detail to what the position is in other countries, but I believe it is generally agreed that the Postal Department is regarded all over the world as a public utility department, subject to the condition that if there is any surplus revenue left in the hands of the Postal Department after meeting the requirements of the expansion of postal facilities, that surplus revenue belongs to the general exchequer. I remember to have read a speech of Mr. Gladstone while he was Chancellor of the Exchequer in England in which he expressed his gratification that Parliament had surrendered $1\frac{1}{2}$ million pounds of revenue which the general exchequer used to derive from the post office, and he said that a wiser measure was never adopted.

Mr. President: I am afraid I cannot allow the Honourable Member to take up the general question whether this is a public utility or commercial department. He is entitled to use that incidentally but not as the main part of his argument.

Mr. K. C. Neogy: Sir, connected with the question of the proposed reduction of the rates is the question how far the finances of the Department will be affected by the proposal and how far the Department is justified in handing over to the general exchequer the large surplus of 1.47 crores, without providing cheaper and larger postal facilities. That is how I bring it in. Now, Sir, if Honourable Members will refer to the interesting publication of Mr. Geoffrey Clarke on the history of the Indian Post Office, they will find that when the Postal Commission was appointed in 1850 they based their reforms throughout on the principle that the post office is to be maintained for the benefit of the people of India and not for the purpose of swelling the revenues of India. Mr. Clarke on this observes that:

"It is greatly to the credit of the Government of India that in all times of stress and strain as well as in times of prosperity they have loyally observed this principle although there have been many temptations to go contrary to it."

Now, Sir, if we come to the year 1868 we find that the then Finance Member stated that the Post Office is so potent an engine of civilization that no Government could be justified in allowing fiscal considerations to stand in the way of any improvement. Again we find when we come to the year 1905 when, as a result

Mr. President: The Honourable Member had better come to the year 1923-24.

Mr. K. C. Neogy: I am coming presently to the present year. In 1905 when certain concessions were announced in regard to postal rates, Mr. Gokhale expressed his gratification that this announcement was accompanied by another announcement that the Government did not intend to regard the Post Office as a revenue earning Department at all. And Mr. Gokhale expressed his hope that in future the surplus revenue of the Post Office would be devoted towards the expansion and cheapening of postal facilities more and more. That was in 1905. If we look into the figures of that period, we will find that between 1905-06 and 1909-10 the increase in the number of extra-departmental agents was 15 per cent., but during the next 12 years, that is to say, between 1910-11

Mr. President: Order, order. If I allow the Honourable Member to go on, I shall have to allow the Honourable Member to roam over the whole administration of the Post Office on a post card.

Mr. K. C. Neogy: Sir, I am referring to the fact that the Postal Department has really curtailed their programme of expansion, and I was illustrating this from the figures, because I find that, whereas in five years the expansion in the rural postal facilities was 15 per cent., during the last 12 years that expansion has progressed by only 2.9 per cent., and during the present Budget it is proposed further to curtail that programme, much to the detriment of the rural population in India.

Khan Bahadur Sarfaraz Hussain Khan: Is the gentleman in order? We are dealing with the question of the post card, and at this late hour he is going over the whole administration.

Mr. President: I have been trying to point out to the Honourable Member that he is going so far out of order that I shall soon have to ask him to resume his seat. He is entitled to argue the question on the basis no doubt of a public utility, but only in so far as it affects post cards.

Mr. K. C. Neogy: Sir, it is very difficult to separate the question of the general expansion of postal facilities from

Mr. President: On the contrary it is quite easy, and it has to be done!

Mr. K. C. Neogy: I shall try to be in order now. What I object to is the handing over by the Postal Department of its surplus revenues without looking to the convenience of the public in the matter of cheaper postal facilities. That is the main point which I want to advance before this Honourable House.

There is another point to which I wanted to refer in this connection, but I do not know whether I will be in order,—it is as regards the absence of commercial accounts in the Postal Department.

Mr. President: Order, order. The Honourable Member is very ingenious and very persistent; I must rule him out of order.

(Voice: "I move that the question may now be put.")

Mr. President: The question is that the question be put.

The motion was adopted.

Mr. President: Amendment moved:

"In Schedule II, for the existing entries under the heading 'Postcards' substitute the following:

'Single	...	...	...	Quarter of an anna.
Reply	...	...	...	Half an anna."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. President: The question is that Schedule II stand part of the Bill.

The motion was adopted.

Mr. President: Schedule III.

Mr. M. G. Mukundaraja Ayyangar (Madura and Ramnad cum Tinnevely: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I gave notice of two* amendments, and the second is an alternative to the first; but since I sent notice of these amendments, I have been informed by a responsible gentleman that the effect of my first amendment would be to reduce income of the Central Government by a very large amount. If that should be the effect of my first amendment, I do not desire that the Government should lose such a huge sum, especially in these days of financial stringency. I would, therefore, with your permission, withdraw the first amendment, and I will move only the second amendment. The object of this second amendment is to remove the great hardship to which the Mutual Benefit Societies and the Fund Offices which are a real boon to the poor in the country are subjected by being asked to pay a flat rate of $1\frac{1}{2}$ annas in the rupee whatever their income. Honourable Members will see that in the case of ordinary individuals, the taxable minimum under the Act is Rs. 2,000, that is, those whose total income is less than Rs. 2,000 are not liable to tax and even in the case of these persons, there is a graded scale of Income-tax ranging from 5 pies to $1\frac{1}{2}$ annas in the rupee of their income. But in the case of these Mutual Benefit Societies and Fund Offices which come under the definition of Companies under the Income-tax Act, 1922, they have to pay at a flat rate of $1\frac{1}{2}$ annas in the rupee even if their income be very much below Rs. 2,000, which, as I said, is the taxable minimum in the case of others. These societies pay at the end of the stipulated period to the shareholders the amount they had paid and the interest on the amount they had paid. But yet these societies and fund offices are taxed under the Act. There are a great number of such societies and fund offices in the Madras Presidency whose annual total income may not be Rs. 2,000 but very much less than that amount. But all these are liable to be taxed at the rate of $1\frac{1}{2}$ annas in the rupee. I do not think it is necessary for me to invite the attention of the House to the fact that this change was introduced for the first time in the Finance Act of 1922. Under the Income Tax Acts of 1917 and 1918, companies as well as individuals were not liable to pay any income-tax upon incomes below the taxable minimum. But in the year 1922 under the Finance Act, the minimum taxable income in the case of companies was taken away and all companies were made to pay at the flat rate of $1\frac{1}{2}$ annas in the rupee irrespective of their income and the result is that the smaller companies which deserve our sympathy and encouragement are very severely dealt with. The several Local Governments pointed out this anomaly of taxing small companies without reference to their income even before the Income-tax Act was passed. Our Honourable friend, Mr. Moir, as Secretary to the Government of Madras, has, in his letter to the Secretary to the Government of India, No. 322, dated the 12th of December, 1921, stated as follows:

* "In Part I. A of Schedule III, Rates of Income Tax, after the word 'individual' in the first line, insert the words 'Every Company' and in Part I. B. omit the words 'Every Company. and'."

"The clause (referring to clause 17 of the Income-tax Bill) proposes to tax companies and firms on their income even though it does not amount to the taxable minimum as fixed from time to time. The Governor in Council is unable to understand the difficulty which led to the necessity for this amendment, and whatever it is, he is of opinion that some other way should be found of meeting it. To tax a firm whose income is less than the minimum would be going against the main principles of the Act."

Mr. Sim, the then Joint Secretary, Finance Department of the Government of India, said in this House during the discussions on the Income-tax Bill:

"At the same time, there is a certain amount of hardship in connection with some of these societies, owing to the fact that the members of these societies in some cases are not personally liable to Income-tax. Clause 60 of the Bill gives the Government of India power to reduce taxation or to make any concessions they please in favour of any particular class of income. The Government of India are quite prepared to consider the case of these societies when the full facts are placed before them, to consider whether any special concession is required or whether any special arrangements are necessary in order to secure an equitable assessment of Income-tax."

Since then representations have been made and full facts have been placed before the Government of India by very many societies and fund offices of the Madras Presidency and, yet, Sir, nothing has been done in the matter as promised. I, therefore, think, Sir, that there is no use of placing any reliance on the assurances given by the Government in this matter and submit that the amendment I have proposed should be made in the Finance Bill. Sir, I move my amendment.

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: Sir, the question of how certain mutual benefit societies should be treated in Madras, and in fact in India, was raised in connection with the Income-Tax Act last year. On behalf of the Government of India Mr. Sim, I think it was, offered during the debate to make arrangements for special treatment of such societies under section 60 of the Act or otherwise by issuing executive instructions. But this proposal was rejected by the Assembly which inserted an explanation under the Act, under which recurring subscriptions paid periodically by shareholders or subscribers of mutual benefit societies as may be prescribed shall be deemed to be capital borrowed. The result of that would be that the interest payable thereon would have been allowed as business expenses. The Income Tax Department, immediately the Act was passed, took steps with a view to taking action under this explanation. But meanwhile one of the leading societies in Madras applied for a reference to the High Court on the question whether the income of such societies is liable to tax at all. Since then, Sir, we have been awaiting a decision on this point from the Madras High Court. We recognise that if the decision is much longer delayed it is necessary that we should attempt to take action and we are prepared to consider whether we can use our powers to issue executive instructions that if a society and its subscribers agree in cases where the income is small, say Rs. 2,000 or less,—we might possibly consider going even above the Rs. 2,000—instead of taxing the society at the maximum rate, we should get a list from the principal officer of the company or society of the amounts paid out to subscribers showing the original subscription and the interest thereon. And the income-tax officer of that locality would go through the list and ascertain from his registers or from his own knowledge of the locality which particular recipients are liable to income-tax. He would then be able to add the amount of interest they had received to the income on which they would otherwise have been assessed and the effect would be that he would assess the individual where he was liable direct instead of assessing the company. I think that, if the decision of the High Court is not received soon, we can meet the difficulty in which the Honourable Member is interested in that way, and I would suggest that, in those circumstances, he should withdraw his amendment.

The motion was negatived.

Dr. Nand Lal: Sir, my amendment runs as follows:

"In Part I, A of Schedule III to the Bill in items Nos. (4) to (7) the following amendments be made:

- (i) Against item No. (4), for the word 'nine' substitute the word 'eight'.
- (ii) Against item No. (5), for the words 'one anna' substitute the words 'ten pies'.
- (iii) Against item No. (6), for the words 'one anna and three pies' substitute the words 'one anna'.
- (iv) Against item No. (7) for the words 'one anna and six pies' substitute the words 'one anna and three pies'.

Sir, the income-tax payers are so hard hit and it is pity that some of us have no sympathy with them. The income-tax payer (Cries of "Withdraw, withdraw.") I cannot understand whether these gentlemen who say "withdraw, withdraw" understand their duty or not. It is a pity. If they want to take rest they may please themselves by leaving the House. Well, Sir, I am sitting here to do my duty. These Income-tax payers are, as I submitted above, very hard hit and allow me to say, though perhaps the Government Benches may not like to receive that message, that there is a great amount of discontent in regard to the present excessive rates of income-tax that is being levied. Now, last year, there was an enhancement in the rate of income-tax. Well, there was a general complaint against us and on most occasions, we, the representatives of the people, especially some of the elected Members, were taken to task by our constituents. The reply which we gave to them, with a view to redress their grievances, was "It is perhaps only for one year, and we shall in our humble way try to see that next year there may be some sort of decrease, if possible in the rates." But this year also

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Halley: Might I ask who gave that undertaking?

Dr. Nand Lal: We, some of the elected Members, gave an oral reply to some of those who asked us on that point, namely, some of us, in that manner gave a moral consolation to our constituents; they will not come to you, Sir, they will send us to you, and that is the guiding principle upon which the whole representation is based. Therefore, Sir, at least we, the elected Members, feel bound to invite the attention of this Assembly to this real grievance of these honest men who work very hard and, after having worked very hard, they earn money, and they have to give a very big slice of it to the Government.

The second phase of the question is, what measure has been adopted in fixing this rate of income-tax. The measure which seems ostensibly to have been adopted is that for each Rs. 5,000 there will be an increase of one pie. Sir, will you please see item No. 2. There it is given that when the total income is Rs. 2,000 or upwards but is less than Rs. 5,000, the tax is 5 pies in the rupee. Then you will be pleased to see item 3. When the total income is Rs. 5,000 or upwards but is less than Rs. 10,000—6 pies in the rupee. Now, when we compare these two items and the rates at which the income-tax is assessed, we are driven to this conclusion, that for each sum of Rs. 5,000 there will be an additional charge of 1 pie. Now, Sir, will you be pleased to see item 4 where it is given when the total income is Rs. 10,000 and upwards but is less than Rs. 20,000—9 pies in the rupee. Now according to that measure, according to that criterion, this ought to have been 8 pies, because there is an addition of Rs. 10,000. For every additional Rs. 5,000 there will be an addition of 1 pie; so by an arithmetical calculation the result arrived at is that the rate ought to have been 8 pies, not 9 pies. Then, Sir, I may invite your attention to item 5, where it is given, when the total income is not less than Rs. 20,000 and upwards but is less than Rs. 30,000—1 anna in the rupee. Now according to that criterion, according to that measure which was adopted with reference to items 2 and 3, it ought to have been only 10 pies; but we find that the result at which last year this Assembly arrived seems to be wrong. Whether it was right or wrong, we must accept it so far as last year is concerned; but for the next year I am raising this point before this Legislative Assembly that there is a mistake. There should be some fixity of standards.

Mr. R. A. Spence: According to how much a man can afford to pay?

Dr. Nand Lal: Whether you can afford to pay or not is a different question. Now I am discussing the arithmetical error which has been made.

Then, Sir, you will be pleased to see that there is a mistake due to an arithmetical error in item No. 6, and the same mistake has recurred in item No. 7.

Mr. R. A. Spence: No mistake.

Dr. Nand Lal: I submit there is the mistake and this mistake may be removed, and if this House will appreciate this contention of mine, then the rates will be as follows:

So far as item 4 is concerned, the rate will be only 8 pies. Again, so far as item No. 5 goes, the rate will be 10 pies. So far as item No. 6 goes, the rate will be 1 anna; and concerning item No. 7 the rate will be 1 anna 3 pies. The Schedule of last year with reference to these items does not seem to be based on an accurate arithmetical measure and criterion, and this Assembly should like to see that whatever is being passed for the next year, it should be based on accuracy. We have to avoid inaccurate arithmetical calculation. Sometimes bankers and merchants and income-tax payers—I mean assesses generally—laugh at our this arithmetical inaccuracy. Is this House prepared to accept that charge? (Cries of "No.")

Of course, Sir, I believe that some of you would like to have rest instead of doing duty.

The third point to which I wish to invite the attention of the court, I beg pardon, of the House—we lawyers are used to use that word—is this; there is a great amount of sensation and feeling and the merchant classes are feeling it very deeply. Therefore, I submit that to put an end to that grievance this House will be pleased to, at least, reduce the rates so that they may be relieved of this onerous charge to a certain extent.

Mr. Darcy Lindsay: I move, Sir, that the question be put.

The amendment was negatived.

Schedule III was added to the Bill.

Clause 1 was added to the Bill.

The Title and Preamble were added to the Bill.

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: Sir, I beg to move that the Bill be passed.

Mr. President: The question is that the Bill be passed.

Mr. W. S. J. Willson: Sir, I am extremely sorry to intrude myself upon the House at this very late hour, but I am in a position of considerable difficulty. When Dr. Gour moved his amendment No. 47, the House had already had a great deal of talk about salt and I think it had had more than enough of it: so it happened that when you read his amendment the House shouted 'Aye' at once and although I rose to address you at the time, I unfortunately failed to catch your eye. Now, Sir, had the amendment, when Dr. Gour moved, the effect which he claimed for it, I should myself have voted for it. But it does not have that effect at all; and the consequences of it are so far-reaching that I do not want to allow this Bill to be passed without lodging my protest. I, Sir, am supposed to be an authority on the salt procedure in Calcutta, and it would be strange indeed if a representative of the trade, here in this House, allowed this to pass without lodging his protest. The position aimed at was, as Dr. Gour's amendment showed, that those who have sold their salt at a rate covering high duty should not get a refund; so far so good; but what happens in effect is this. The salt is landed in the Government bonded

7 P.M. golahs in Calcutta. You have to go to the Government and pay your duty day by day. There is such a block of deliveries at the Custom House and the golahs that you do not get delivery of the salt on the day you pay the duty. A merchant finds it necessary to pay some duty every day so that his chalans which are put in at the bottom of the file come gradually to the top. Now, Sir, I have every desire to be brief, so I do not want to go into the details at any great length, but it happened that 12 months ago we had exactly the same position. A firm in Calcutta had actually paid duty at the old rate of Rs. 1-4-0 on the 26th November, yet on the 2nd of March could not get delivery of that same salt. The Government refused to deliver that salt unless the excess was paid. Now in this year's case we have it that since the 1st of March the Government have refused to take any duty under the rate of Rs. 2-8-0, and in order that the merchants may come up to the top chalans, they had to pay Rs. 2-8-0, and we heard to-day on official authority that no less than thirty lakhs of rupees duty have been paid on that basis. Now, Sir, if we are going to steal half of that duty, I think really it is a robbery of fifteen lakhs of rupees. These chalans are at the bottom, and they will not come to the top—I cannot tell you at the moment for how long; but it is some weeks, but by that time everybody knows that the salt duty has not been raised and the merchant who has, on the good faith of the Government, deposited his duty at Rs. 2-8-0 will not now be able to get it back. That, Sir, is a position which I cannot accept, and I cannot allow this Bill to pass without lodging protest against it. I do not know what further course is open to me except either to advocate the restoring of the duty to Rs. 2-8-0 so that it may be the same for everybody, or to oppose the passing of this Bill.

Sir Montagu Webb: I understand, Sir, that the motion now before the House is that the Bill, as amended, be passed. The result of the amendment is to leave us where we were before with a deficit, I understand, of 3 crores 68 lakhs of rupees. The efforts to provide alternative taxation in the form of a surtax on customs revenue have failed and I should like to make it known officially that I have received a large number of telegrams both from Bombay and Karachi most strongly protesting against any such increase of Customs Duties. The Honourable the Home Member in his very impressive speech advocating the doubling of the salt tax said that there was no alternative tax. I submit, Sir, that there is at least one alternative tax to which I have already referred, namely, the silver tax. In that connection the Honourable the Finance Member speaking on the subject of rebates remarked that in one year upon which quite casually he had to put his finger, the exports of silver from India were greater than the imports; and that consequently Government in that year instead of collecting money would have lost money. Now, Sir, I have the figures here of the last fifty years, and I cannot find any year except that very one year in which the exports of silver have exceeded the imports. So I think that Government need have no fear that even if they re-impose the silver duty and give a rebate on exports, they are likely to lose money.

Further, Sir, in making his appeal for the doubling of the salt duty, the Honourable the Home Member stated that although we have made our retrenchments, yet we cannot meet our expenditure, and therefore he advocated the imposition of a double salt tax. Now, Sir, I suggest the position is really this. The Inchcape Committee have made certain recommendations for retrenchments amounting to over nineteen crores of rupees. It has been impossible, naturally quite impossible, to bring into effect all those recommendations for this coming year. But we take it that Government are going to endeavour to bring into effect the whole of those retrenchments later on. So that the real position, as I see it, is not that we have made our retrenchments and cannot meet our expenditure, but that we have made as many retrenchments as are practicable during the forthcoming year and that we cannot meet our expenditure during the forthcoming year. But, I presume that the year after, when all these retrenchments are made, we shall be able to meet our expenditure. Therefore, Sir, the difficulty, the crisis, if I may so put it,—which we have now to overcome is this 8-68 crores deficit which has to be covered in some way during this coming year.

Now, Sir, I submit that there is an alternative to further taxation which we have not yet discussed, and which we have not yet considered. There is lying at this moment in London to the credit of the Secretary of State for India over sixty crores of rupees—inoperative and doing nothing. The Honourable the Finance Member towards the end of his budget speech, paragraph 49, proposed to make use of a portion of that Reserve towards covering the deficit. I estimate that portion to be somewhere about a crore of rupees. This sum he proposes to utilise from that Reserve towards covering the deficit. (The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: “The interest only.”). Now, why should we limit that appropriation to one crore? By appropriating 3 or 4 crores, say, our temporary difficulty for 1928-24 could be overcome. (The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: “Why have any revenue; why not take that?”) Now, Sir, that reserve to which I am referring is the Gold Standard Reserve and I would ask your permission and the indulgence of this House to devote three or four minutes to an explanation of what that Gold Standard Reserve is. It was formed, in the first instance—built up of the profits on the coinage of rupees with the object of providing a means of remittance to England in case exchange fell below 1s. 4d. On every rupee that is coined at the present day from new silver, Government makes about 3 pence or 4 pence profit. Originally, it was intended that that profit should be held in India in the form of gold so that when the balance of trade turned against India, the gold could be remitted if necessary to London. Owing to a whole list of incidents and circumstances into which I need not go now, and against many of which I have often protested, the whole of that Reserve has been transferred to London, and it is now kept, not in gold but in securities.

The particular point to which I wish to invite attention this evening is the magnitude of that reserve,—over sixty crores of rupees. I believe every authority at this moment is agreed that this reserve is unnecessarily swollen,—unnecessarily big, and that we might very well utilise some portion of it for other purposes. A couple of years ago, the Bengal Chamber of Commerce gave evidence before the Babington Smith Committee in this connection. They said that, in their opinion, if the Reserve was large enough to meet a two years' balance of trade against India, that was all that was necessary. What exactly a two years' adverse balance of trade might be was not defined. It was often thought in pre-war days to be about eight million sterling per annum. Even if it were taken at ten million sterling, that would make the Reserve only twenty million sterling. Well, from the balance of trade point of view—and I am supposed in some quarters to be an authority in these matters—I myself have often urged that thirty million sterling was sufficient. But let me recall to the House for a moment the opinion of the late Sir Lionel Abrahams. Sir Lionel Abrahams was undoubtedly one of the greatest financial authorities that the India Office has ever sheltered. Now, Sir Lionel Abrahams only two years ago expressed the opinion that twenty-five million sterling would be quite sufficient; but he added that it would be better perhaps not to lay down any hard and fast rule at the moment. Now, Sir, note that figure, from the greatest expert—25 million sterling. I am prepared personally to make it 30 million sterling. But suppose even you make it 35 million sterling. There is, I submit, Sir, in that Reserve a considerable surplus of which we might very well take advantage in the present crisis. I should be very surprised indeed to learn from the Honourable the Finance Member that he considered forty million sterling, that is to say, sixty crores, was necessary at the present day in London. I feel convinced that he will—I should be very surprised if he does not—admit that that is a very substantial reserve, and larger perhaps than there is any necessity for.

Now, Sir, the problem which is before us at this moment is whether or not it is expedient to make use of any portion of the Gold Standard Reserve. We have before us this crisis of a deficit, and the possibility of the Governor General in Council being asked to double the salt tax in face of the opposition of this House. Personally I should regard that as a crisis, a very grave crisis indeed. I fear that it would be treated by the public as a general breakdown of the Reform Scheme. It would be said, “Here is a general, and practically unanimous opinion of the people as far as we can see, against any doubling of the salt-tax and yet, for the third year in succession, we are called upon to vote more taxation, and that too at the last moment, just when the Parliament is dissolving, just when the Members are returning to their constituents asking for re-election,—just when the feelings of hostility against the Government are dying down,—at that very moment, Government ignoring public opinion, doubles the salt tax. I think, Sir, that such a course would be a calamity; and it is for that reason I would urge upon the Government to weigh very carefully the possibility of utilising from the Gold Standard Reserve not merely the one crore which the Honourable the Finance Member himself proposes to take from the Reserve but a further three or four crores, and all our difficulties vanish without any financial mishap, and without any political disaster.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: What a pity we retrenched!

Sir Montagu Webb: Well, Sir, I do not think it is a pity. It is a pity we did not retrench two years ago. The more we retrench the better. I put it for the serious consideration of Government that in a grave political crisis of this kind, with this Reserve of money at their disposal which can be utilised,—I suggest they should give this alternative way out of the present difficulty their very serious consideration.

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas: Sir, I have no desire to detain the House at this late hour, but I do believe that while we are at the final stage of the Finance Bill, it is necessary that the constitutional aspect dealt with, with his characteristic skill by the Honourable the Home Member should also be considered by us. The Honourable the Home Member, it must be said to his credit, has not minced matters. He has told us—and there, I think, we are in agreement with him—that we are on the verge of a crisis, that for the last three years in the life of this Assembly, to use the words of the Honourable the Finance Member, we have somehow or other pulled together, that in this very Session we had various controversial questions which came up before the House and that by the efforts, the most laudable efforts, both of the Government as well as of the House, even on those controversial questions we have come to an unanimous conclusion, and it is a pity that on this question of the Finance Bill, there should exist between the Members of the Government and the Members of this House a difference which is not merely in the nature of an ordinary difference, but which is likely to assume the shape of a crisis, threatening to endanger, if I may say so, the bona fides of the Government of India, threatening to embitter more the already embittered feelings of a certain section of the people against the Government. It would be nothing short of a calamity. It would be nothing short of a calamity if the Government in spite of the almost unanimous opinion of the country and the opinion expressed here by a large majority of the House (A Voice: "Not very large") were to get certified the tax which the House has rejected. I want to say in answer to the remarks made by the Honourable the Home Member and other Members that the Government must take it from us when we say that it is not merely for the purpose of getting ourselves re-elected that we have voted against the enhancement of the salt duty. No.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: The Honourable Member would do me the credit to say that I did not suggest that.

Mr. Jannadas Dwarkadas: I did not mean that the Honourable the Home Member suggested that, but it has been suggested by some Members that the reason that has guided many of the Honourable Members of this House to take up the attitude that they have taken against the enhancement of the salt duty is political and sentimental. Now as regards the reason being political, I want at once to say to the Government that I do not think that most of the Members of the House, at any rate, are actuated by the feeling that they would not be returned at the next elections if they voted in favour of the enhancement of the salt duty. The reason is neither altogether sentimental, but it is the conviction of many of us that it is a most unpopular tax, that it is a tax which will embitter the feelings of the poorest people of this country, that it is a tax which will weigh heavily on the shoulders of the poorest people of this country. (A Voice: "No.") It is that reason, it is that conviction, right or wrong (A Voice: "Wrong") which has led many of us to take up the position that we have taken. The Honourable the Home Member spoke on the necessity of having the courage on this question to support the enhancement of the salt duty and avert a difficult situation. Now, Sir, I need hardly give an assurance both to this House and to the Government that there are Members in this Assembly who by their past record can claim that the personal consideration of election or any consideration of that character has never stood in their way of doing their duty even by displeasing a large section of the people by their support of Government when they thought it necessary to do so, and if speaking for myself I had thought that it was necessary to support Government, that it was right to support Government, I would have done so at any cost. I know many Members of this House would have done so at any cost, but I repeat that it is this feeling that we should be doing something wrong, that we should be doing something that is detrimental to the interests of the people of this country,—nay, more than that, it is the feeling that we shall have dis-served the Government itself which asks for our support—it is that feeling that has guided us in coming to the decision that we have come to. What, then, is the Government to do? Two ways are open to the Government. The Government might yield to the wish expressed by this House, or the Governor General may use the extraordinary power vested in him in order to certify the enhancement of the salt duty which the House has rejected. I do not want to mince matters. I want to imitate the good example set by the Honourable the Leader of the House. I do not want to mince matters. I want to tell the Government very frankly that the consequences of certifying this enhanced tax over the heads not only of the Members of this House but against the expressed opinion of the people of this country—that the Government's restoring the tax against the almost unanimous vote of the people of this country will be very grave. In the past before the Reforms came into existence, many a time it fell to the lot of the Members of this House and public bodies outside this House to warn the Government of the danger of ignoring public opinion in many matters. The Government on most questions paid no heed to public opinion and this obstinate attitude on the part of Government became the parent of many a disaster to this country. I stand here to repeat the warning that has been given in this House and outside this House in the past on many measures; it may be in a small measure, but it seems to me that the situation is similar to what it has been in the past. It is perhaps, more serious, because you are on the eve of undoing the great work that in the first three years of its existence the reformed Legislature has done for this country. I therefore warn the Government, whatever may be the result of the House's attitude, let them stand by the constitution, let them respect the wishes of this House. It might mean temporary injury or it may not. I am not sure that it will. But in the end by respecting the wishes of this Legislature, by carrying out even against its own pet theories the desire expressed by a large majority of this House, the Government, I am sure, will ensure the solid foundation on which the Reforms have been built. I appeal to the Government to lay aside all other considerations. The credit of the Government of this country will not suffer. Sir Montagu Webb has suggested one remedy. I am not prepared to say that I am in agreement with that remedy, but I do feel that many a remedy can be suggested, that further retrenchment, if necessary, may be effected; other steps may be taken; a small deficit may be left uncovered; it is not likely to imperil the credit of this country in the eyes of the world; but the restoration of the salt tax in the teeth of the opposition of the people is going to imperil the credit, the bona fides of this Government in the eyes of the people of this country, a consideration which is more important than any other consideration. Only last year we were on the verge of chaos in this country. This House stood by the Government like one man then. But for the support of this House the Government would not have been able to put down a movement which threatened to bring disaster to this country, which threatened to transform this country into a place of chaos and anarchy. That fortunately has disappeared from this country. Let not Government, by any unwise action, bring about in this country again a situation which they might at a future date have to repent, and which will not be conducive to the good and the welfare either of this country or of its relations with Great Britain. I appeal to the Government once more. Exercise patience, exercise commonsense, do not suffer, as Lord Curzon pointed out, from the fault of not looking ahead sufficiently. Take a long view of things. Try to pacify the people of this country on every reasonable question. I say that this is one of the most reasonable demands that the House has made, and I trust, that the Government will not propose an enhancement of the tax on salt against the wishes of the people. It is not too much to demand from the Government to carry out in this respect the wishes of this House. Sir, I appeal to the Government to respect the wishes of the people.

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: Sir, I do not wish to detain the House at this late hour, but there are one or two points which it is necessary that I should not leave completely unanswered. I do not propose to follow Mr. Jannadas Dwarkadas in his very eloquent appeal; all I would like to say on that subject is that, speaking here, I regret exceedingly that the House has missed what seems to me a unique opportunity for confounding for ever any questioners outside this country of the reforms scheme. But I will say no more on that subject; I will deal with the two other points raised. As regards the point raised by Mr. Willson in regard to salt, the Government will be prepared to consider the point which he has raised and will, if necessary, consider whether any action need be taken in another place. The Honourable Member from Karachi seems to founder deeper and deeper in sentimental finance, as it has been called to-day, with every stage of the crisis; the more he is driven to face the necessity of adopting sound methods of dealing with the difficulty, the more unsound are the expedients which he tries to find to slip out of it. He has again repeated that this is a temporary crisis, it is a temporary financial stringency. I have stated more than once, and it has been said by others, that that is a view which cannot be put forward with any certainty, I would like just to make this point. He said that the cuts suggested by the Retrenchment Committee are something over 19 crores, and though we cannot put them all into force this year, we ought to put them in to force next year. I hope we shall put into force next year every possible retrenchment, but I must point out that at least 6 crores out of those 19 crores are non-recurrent savings: non-recurrent—there is the lag and terminal charges this year, which make our total actual savings, I think, about 12 out of the 19 recommended by the Retrenchment Committee. But of those 12, I think I am right in saying that at least six are non-recurrent; they do not recur next year; so that we cannot take too rosy a view of next year's situation.

Sir Montagu Webb has a rather indistinct idea as to where the line is to be drawn between capital and revenue. He says we are using part of the Gold Standard Reserve this year; I would point out that we are only using the interest on the Gold Standard Reserve, which is recurrent. If we do not touch the total reserve this year, that interest is a recurring item—it is a recurring interest item we are using, we are not using the principal. I will not be diverted at this moment into discussing whether or not the gold standard reserve is sufficient or insufficient for its purpose or enter into other arguments as to its use. Obviously the gold standard is needed and required for the purpose of dealing with our exchange and stabilising our exchange when the moment comes for doing it. That would be the moment to consider how finally to dispose of our available resources for stabilising exchange. If we were simply to use them for the purpose of meeting our current outgoings, we should be spending Capital on Revenue purposes, but I think it is a little beyond. (A Voice: "Use it for deflation.") If we use it for deflation, it is not revenue. I think Sir Montagu Webb said that 8 million pounds was about the maximum needed to cover any two years' adverse balance of exchange. (Sir Montagu Webb: "Eight millions a year.") In 1920-21 we had an adverse balance of 48½ crores, and in 1921-22 a total adverse balance of 32 crores, or a total adverse balance of 80 crores in two years. (Sir Montagu Webb: "Surely, Sir, not the balance of trade.") I am sorry to hear at the last moment a suggestion, which might mislead public opinion, put forward that there is a possibility of covering the deficit by a sound means and it would be very unfortunate if that went out to the world as a possibility, when I believe, as even Sir Montagu Webb must know, that it is not in any sense a suggestion for balancing the budget. It is a suggestion for devising ways and means which we need not discuss. It is not in any sense a suggestion for making the Budget balance.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That the Bill to fix the duty on salt manufactured in; or imported by land into, certain parts of British India, to vary the duty leviable on certain articles under the Indian Tariff Act, 1894, to fix maximum rates of postage under the Indian Post Office Act, 1898, to amend the Indian Paper Currency Act, 1923, and to fix rates of income-tax, as amended, be passed."

The motion was adopted.

STATEMENT OF BUSINESS.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: I should like to make a statement, Sir, regarding business. Lists of business for Wednesday and Thursday have been distributed. It is not proposed to hold a meeting on Friday. On Saturday we propose to take any business that may be left over from Thursday, and after that to devote, what I hope will only prove to be half a day, to private business. For that purpose we propose to ballot for two Resolutions. We propose to keep the list open from 10 to 1 P.M. to-morrow and have an informal ballot at lunch time. On Monday we propose to take Government business and on Tuesday there may be a little Government business remaining over to be taken, and after that is finished, we propose to proceed to complete as far as possible the list of private business which was down for Thursday next and some of which will no doubt be remaining over for completion. (Munshi Iswar Saran: "Is that the last day?") I hope, Sir, that we shall be able to inform you that we have no further business after Tuesday.

The Assembly then adjourned till eleven of the Clock on Wednesday, the 21st March, 1928.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

Wednesday, 21st March, 1923.

The Assembly met in the Assembly Chamber at Eleven of the Clock.
Mr. President was in the Chair.

GOVERNOR GENERAL'S ASSENT TO BILLS.

Mr. President: I have to acquaint the House that His Excellency the Governor General has been pleased to give his assent to the following Bills:

The Indian Cotton Cess Act, 1923;
The Indian Income-tax (Amendment) Act, 1923;
The Government Savings Banks (Amendment) Act, 1923;
The Prisoners (Amendment) Act, 1923;
The Criminal Law (Amendment) Act, 1923.

THE CODE OF CRIMINAL PROCEDURE (AMENDMENT) BILL.

Sir Henry Moncrieff Smith (Secretary, Legislative Department): Sir, in the absence of the Honourable the Home Member I move the motion which stands in his name to-day, namely:

"That the further amendments made by the Council of State in the Bill further to amend the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, and the Court-fees Act, 1870, be taken into consideration."

The House is well aware, Sir, that the Council of State, so far as the volume of amendments made by it is concerned, has done very little to the Bill. They have in fact made four amendments, three of which were put forward at the instance of Government and the fourth by a non-official Member. The three matters in which Government sought to amend the Bill as it was passed by the Legislative Assembly were in respect of the changes made by this Assembly in sections 162, 195 and 406. I do not think, Sir, at this stage I need enter into details as to Government's motives or reasons for putting forward these amendments which the Council of State accepted. As the individual amendments are taken into consideration, it will be open to the House to discuss them and Government will then have an opportunity of explaining its own position with regard to them.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That the further amendments made by the Council of State in the Bill further to amend the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, and the Court-fees Act, 1870, be taken into consideration."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. President: Amendment made by the Council of State:

"That in clause 34 of the Bill—

(a) in the proviso to the proposed sub-section (1) of section 162, the words 'allow inspection to the accused and' were omitted; and

(b) after the same proviso the following proviso was added, namely:

'Provided further that, if the Court is of opinion that any part of any such statement is not relevant to the subject-matter of the inquiry or trial or that its disclosure to the accused is not essential in the interests of justice and is inexpedient in the public interests, it shall record such opinion (but not the reasons therefor) and shall exclude such part from the copy of the statement furnished to the accused.'

The question I have to put is that this Assembly do agree with the Council of State in the said amendment.

Bhai Man Singh (East Punjab: Sikh): I have sent notice of two amendments but I do not know if copies have been received or not.

My first amendment is that this whole change should be omitted and that the clause, as passed by the Legislative Assembly, should be re-instated. In the alternative I have suggested that the words "or that its disclosure to the accused is not essential in the interests of justice" should be omitted.

Mr. President: As regards the first proposal made by the Honourable Member, an amendment must be in a form which can be put from the Chair in its proper place in the Bill, and therefore, the first proposal of the Honourable Member is one that I cannot accept. The second one is in order.

Bhai Man Singh: May I then, Sir, propose the second amendment only. I am just now told that it is the result of some compromise effected, of which I of course have got absolutely no knowledge, but if some of our Members have got this knowledge and declare that it is a compromise then I have nothing to say. As a matter of fact, I really object to the words "that its disclosure to the accused is not essential in the interests of justice", because they are so wide that anything could be brought under them, and, practically speaking, if we retain these words, the whole change that we have made becomes a nullity. As I have been told that there has been a compromise, I do not wish to move this amendment.

Dr. H. S. Gour (Nagpur Division: Non-Muhammadan): Sir, as there may be two conflicting views regarding this amendment, I may be permitted to say a few words in connection therewith. As Honourable Members are aware, when this clause was under discussion in this House, the non-official Members moved and carried an amendment that all statements made to the police should be available to the accused for the purpose of cross-examination. The Honourable the Home Member took exception to the generality of this amendment and pointed out a case of a widespread conspiracy in which the names of persons not directly concerned in the trial of the case might be involved and which would highly prejudice the administration and not serve the immediate purpose of the accused, and consequently it was moved by the Honourable the Home Member that this clause required some modification. Honourable Members will remember that we on this side of the House were prepared to accede to the suggestion made by the Honourable the Home Member, and while several drafts were exchanged nothing could be settled and nothing was settled. In this state the amendment went to the other House and then after some discussion the clause which the Honourable Members find now before them for consideration was drafted. I find one Honourable Member suggesting that this disclosure to the accused is not essential in the interests of justice (Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: "Unnecessary.")—is unnecessary. I wish to point out that that is a very necessary safeguard in the interests of the accused. That is to say, if it is essential in the interests of justice to the accused, copies shall be given and the exception that finds a place now in section 162 seems to me a very limited exception, and it is not likely to frustrate the ends of justice. If it does and cases do arise in which the accused is deprived of the right of cross-examining witnesses in the light of the statements made to the police it will be open to Honourable Members to move for the further amendment of this section later on; but for the present I think it worth while accepting the clause as it has been drafted and accepted in another place.

Mr. President: The question is that this Assembly do agree with the Council of State in the said amendment.

The motion was adopted.

Mr. President: Further amendment made by the Council of State:

"In sub-clause (5) of clause 47 of the Bill, for the proposed new sub-section (5) of section 195, the following sub-section be substituted, namely:

'(5) Where a complaint has been made under sub-section (1), clause (a), by a public servant, any authority to which such public servant is subordinate may order the withdrawal of the complaint and, if it does so, it shall forward a copy of such order to the Court and, upon receipt thereof by the Court, no further proceedings shall be taken on the complaint.'

The question I have to put is that this Assembly do agree to the amendment made by the Council of State.

The motion was adopted.

Mr. President: Further amendment made by the Council of State:

"For clause 109 of the Bill the following clause be substituted, namely:—

'109. For section 406 of the said Code the following section shall be substituted, Amendment of section 406, Code of namely:— Criminal Procedure, 1898.

'406. Any person who has been ordered under section 118 to give security for keeping the peace or for good behaviour may appeal from order requiring security for keeping the peace or for good behaviour. against such order—

(a) if made by a Presidency Magistrate, to the High Court:

(b) if made by any other Magistrate, to the Court of Session:

Provided that the Local Government may, by notification in the local official Gazette, direct that in any district specified in the notification appeals from such orders made by a Magistrate other than the District Magistrate or a Presidency Magistrate shall lie to the District Magistrate and not to the Court of Session:

Provided further that nothing in this section shall apply to persons the proceedings against whom are laid before a Sessions Judge in accordance with the provisions of sub-section (2) or sub-section (3A) of section 123.'

Dr. H. S. Gour: Sir, I oppose the proviso and I wish to give my reasons for doing so. Honourable Members will remember that this clause was the subject of a lengthy debate in this House. The object of constituting the Sessions Judge as the sole appellate tribunal in cases of apprehended breach of peace and security of behaviour was justified on the broad principle that the District Magistrate is technically and in many cases in reality the head of the district police, and proceedings, whether under section 107 or section 110, are initiated by the police with his cognizance and at times with his approval. Therefore if a Magistrate subordinate to him decides a case under these sections it is but just and fair that the appeal should lie to an independent tribunal, neither prepossessed nor prejudiced nor suspected of prepossession or prejudice in favour of or against either side. Honourable Members will realise that for a long series of years the country at large has been crying for what is now known as the separation of the judicial and executive functions, and a small beginning was made in this House by transferring these appeals from the head of the district police to an independent judicial officer. All that could be said for and against our amendment was said by the representatives of either side, and after full consideration we decided that such cases must go to the Sessions Court who is a judicial officer and before whom the accused is likely to get better justice. That amendment has been substantially altered in another place and I wish to point out to the Honourable Members here that if we accede to the clause inserted elsewhere we shall be neutralising the effect of the amendment we made after long and anxious debate. What is the effect of this proviso which is sought to be inserted? The effect is that the Local Government may by mere notification completely frustrate the declared policy and object of the Indian Legislature and that all such cases shall be heard in appeal by the Court of Session. It arms the chief executive authority in the Province to constitute a special tribunal in derogation of the wishes of this House. Sir, Honourable Members are not unfamiliar with the constitution of such exceptional tribunals by executive notifications. My lawyer friends also know the great danger of arming the executive with this power. The Central Legislature is the sole judge and shall not allow the executive to do its work in designating officers to hear appeals from these cases. If Honourable Members desire that the District Magistrate should continue in future as he has been empowered in the past to hear appeals against these police cases, let them cut out the proviso and let them also cut out what they decided on the last occasion. But let there be no doubt that if this proviso is allowed to obtain a place on the Statute Book, it will completely neutralise the effect of the amendment which this House made, because the Local Governments always prefer rough and ready justice to considered and deliberate justice which the Sessions Judges deliver. Executive Governments will complain and I know the Honourable the Home Member will lay before you considerations of economy, of convenience, and appeal to you in the name of economy and convenience to allow the proviso to go on the Statute Book. But I ask, Sir, was this not the consideration presented to you on the last occasion when this amendment was under discussion in this House, and did you ignore that consideration presented to you by the occupants of the Government Benches? What fresh facts could be brought to light have been brought to light. What facts are there now to ask you to reconsider your judgment and go back upon the amendment which you deliberately made, despite the opposition of the Honourable the Home Member and his colleagues? I submit that the time has now come when cheaper justice, expeditious justice must be subordinated to the higher considerations of purer, unadulterated and unsuspected justice. It has been said and it was said on the last occasion that these are after all preventive sections. They penalise nobody and what harm is done if an accused is bound over to be of good behaviour or to keep the peace? Well, Sir, I am sure that those who advance that argument would not like to be bound over on the mere ground that no harm is done if security is demanded of them for being of good behaviour or to maintain the peace. We know, Sir, that a man's character is at times blighted by proceedings taken under these sections; he becomes a police suspect and the proceedings under section 110 expose him to a systematic persecution which curtails his liberty, exposes him to the ignominy and shame of a person who is or suspected to be a habitual criminal, not because there has been any conviction against him, but because he is bound over to be of good behaviour. Who is bound over to be of good behaviour? Who can be bound over to be of good behaviour? A person who has been of bad behaviour, who is a habitual criminal, does mischief, commits thefts, robbery, dacoity and all the allied offences which are categorised in that section. Listen not, therefore, to the plea that might be raised that no conviction is made in an order passed under section 110. Dismiss from your consideration that these are mere preventive sections and they do no harm but are merely intended to preserve the public peace. Reflect for one moment on the great injury that has been done to individuals in proceedings instituted against them under these sections; and I ask, therefore, that these sections cannot be dismissed as sections of a purely preventive character. These are all the arguments that have been advanced, arguments based on considerations of economy and of convenience and of what is called the comparatively trivial character of the proceedings under these sections. I have dealt with them, and I have no doubt that the House will agree with me that this provision is a dangerous provision and that it should be deleted from the Statute Book.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Halley (Home Member): May I ask that the Honourable Member will put himself in order by informing us exactly what motion he is putting forward?

Dr. H. S. Gour: Sir, I move that the clause which runs thus be not accepted by this House:

"Provided that the Local Government may by notification in the local official Gazette direct that in any district specified in the notification appeals from such orders made by a Magistrate other than the District Magistrate or a Presidency Magistrate shall lie to the District Magistrate and not to the Court of Session."

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Halley: Sir, I am afraid the Honourable Member has not quite put himself in order yet. At this stage of the proceedings the motion that will be made is dictated by the following rule:

"The other Chamber may either agree to the Bill as originally passed in the originating Chamber or as further amended by that Chamber, as the case may be, or may return the Bill with a message that it insists on an amendment or amendments to which the originating Chamber has disagreed."

Dr. H. S. Gour: I therefore insist that I want the restoration of this clause as it was originally passed by this House and we do not accept the amendment made in another place.

Mr. President: Does the Honourable Member wish to put the motion in the form that this Assembly do insist on its original amendment?

Dr. H. S. Gour: Yes.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar (Madras City: Non-Muhammadan Urban): They have added a further amendment to our amendment.

Mr. President: As far as I can see it does not apply to the whole of the new section.

Sir Henry Moncrieff Smith: The whole section has been redrafted by the Council of State, and if this House confines itself to insistence on the amendment that it previously made it must not only remove that proviso but it will set the clause back into the form in which it emerged from this House on the last occasion.

Dr. H. S. Gour: I may say in this connection, Sir, that we shall not quibble about words and if there are any verbal changes made for the purpose of improving the draft, we will treat it as substantially an amendment of this House, though there may be verbal variations. What we object to is the insertion of the proviso which I have read out and which substantially varies the amendment of this House in the Council of State.

Mr. President: The procedure laid down in the rule makes it evident that the Assembly must insist on the entire clause as originally amended by the Assembly and the rules will not permit the acceptance of the suggestion made by Dr. Gour.

Dr. H. S. Gour: Very well, Sir; to comply with the rule I insist upon the restoration of the clause as amended by this House.

Khan Bahadur Sarfaraz Hussain Khan (Tirhut Division: Muhammadan): Was notice given of this amendment, I wish to know.

Mr. President: It cannot be called an amendment. A special form of procedure is provided for the stage which we have now reached. Honourable Members will realise that the Bill originated in the Council of State and then it came to this Assembly and was taken in January; then it went back to the Council of State and now it has come back again from the Council of State a second time. The procedure is restricted to that laid down in rule 36, sub-rule (4), which is the operative rule for the purposes of the present discussion.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: Sir, I merely rise for the purpose of getting the motion in order. We quite understand the purport of the opposition of Dr. Gour. We merely wish to get the matter into such form that it will comply with the requirements of our Standing Orders, and in that connection I will explain to the House what exactly will happen if it follows Dr. Gour in what he has proposed. If the Bill is now returned with a message intimating that this Chamber insists on amendments to which the originating Chamber is unable to agree, then that Chamber may either report the fact of the disagreement to the Governor General or allow the Bill to lapse. We have, therefore, arrived at a somewhat interesting stage in the history of the Criminal Procedure Code (Amendment) Bill. I shall not weary the House by again reciting its long previous history, and it is quite unnecessary for me to remind the House of the fact that this Bill has engaged a considerable portion of the time of this Session. It has gone back to the other House, and the other House has returned it here. As a result of much work here, there and between, if I may so put it, we have now arrived at an agreement on practically every point at issue; or shall we say that if we have not arrived at an agreement, for that connotes a certain mental satisfaction which is perhaps present neither in our minds nor yours, we have at least arrived at a settlement on every point except this. If we do not arrive at a settlement on this point, then, as I have just pointed out to the House, the other Chamber will eventually be faced either with the necessity of reporting to the Governor General the fact of this disagreement or of allowing the Bill to lapse. Well, for my part, Sir, I should be sorry to see the Bill lapse, if only because of the great amount of time, labour and anxious care that has been bestowed upon it. Believe me, we should not have thought of introducing this proviso unless we had been fully convinced of its necessity, for we recognized the consequences its insertion was likely to bring in view of the opinions previously expressed in this House. I will admit at once that from what I may describe as a purely Home Department point of view there are some features about the Criminal Procedure Code, as it now stands, which do not greatly commend themselves to me. There are many improvements, I admit, and we should be glad to see those improvements introduced; but there are other features which, as I have said, do not greatly commend themselves to us, and the question will finally arise in our minds whether we, balancing the two, are so enamoured of the revised Criminal Procedure Code that we shall attempt to take any further steps to put it into final operation or whether we shall perforce be obliged to retain the law as it now stands. That is the decision at which we shall have to arrive. I should be glad to avoid having to settle those issues.

Now, Sir, the House will agree that we have tried to meet it in every possible direction, and here we have one item, not an item perhaps of the very first importance (Dr. H. S. Gour: "No") on which we have been unable to arrive at an agreement. Now what are the facts about this? We have conceded the principle that appeals ought to go to the Sessions Judge. So much we have conceded, but we have found ourselves unable to go with the position described by Dr. Gour. He says that the Legislative Assembly has decided and must insist that all appeals shall go to the Sessions Judge; but our point is that this Assembly has not yet provided the Sessions Judges to whom those appeals should go, and it cannot do so. I would remind the House, in the first place, that we have now open to appeal orders passed under section 107. Appeals, therefore, against those orders will be heard for the first time, and will swell the general body of appeals under these security sections. Now I have been unable to form any accurate calculation of what the total number of appeals will be that are likely to go to Sessions Judges. I can only tell the House there are on the average of the last three years 43,000 persons annually subjected to this class of orders in India. The House can form its own conclusion as to the number of such persons who are likely to appeal to Sessions Judges. They must be considerable. There will first be the appeals against the order of the District Magistrate in which there is now no appeal. Then as regards appeals against the orders of first class Magistrates, which are now heard by District Magistrates, I would point out that there is a much larger number of District Magistrates than of Sessions Judges, and take it whatever way you will, it is quite certain that we should have to increase the number of Sessions Judges to hear these appeals. That is to say, that although we have at present an organization which can and does hear the appeals and against whom I will not admit the charge that they do not hear those appeals properly,—yet we should add to the expenditure of the Local Governments by forcing them to appoint fresh Sessions Judges. Various calculations have been formed as to the numbers which will be required. I do not wish to pin my faith to those, for they cannot, in the circumstances, be accurate. It has been suggested, for instance, that in the Punjab from 5 to 7 Sessions Judges will be required; and in other provinces such, as the United Provinces, there would equally be a certain necessity of appointing fresh Sessions Judges. Now, Sir, how does the case stand with regard to our Sessions Judges? We have, as the House is aware, already thrown additional criminal work on them as a result of the enactment of our Racial Distinctions Bill. Local Governments pointed out at the time and High Courts also adverted to the fact that that would be the result. As the House is well aware, District and Sessions Judges have now practically to confine themselves in many areas to their appellate work and can do little original civil work; in some cases it is much worse. Listen to what the Patna High Courts said on the subject. They were writing on the subject of the changes introduced by the Racial Distinctions Bill. They said:

"The Judges entertain no doubt that in this province no District and Sessions Judge will have time to attend to any civil appellate business. It was once hoped that District Judges would occasionally take original civil suits, but in the majority of districts that hope is now impossible of fulfilment and the most that can be expected is that they should in the exercise of their appellate jurisdiction see something of the work of their Munsifs and Subordinate Judges."

Now, if that is the case already, have we any right here to add to the work of Sessions Judges to such an extent that they will not even be able to attend to their civil appellate work? Having already given up hope largely of their being able to take original work, we now intrench on the time which they can give to their appellate work, and the only alternative to that is appointing fresh Sessions Judges. Dr. Gour sought to make light of this consideration, and I think that when the matter was previously discussed other Members resented our taking shelter behind considerations which were mainly financial in their nature. Well, Sir, we have, I am afraid, learnt in the course of the budget debates the importance of such considerations in regard to our own finances, and I think that it is the duty of this House to show an equal consideration to the finances of Local Governments; nay, to show consideration also to the interests of civil litigation in the provinces. I believe that there are provinces where the Local Government would not find it necessary to use this proviso; there are places where the number of orders passed under Chapter VIII of the Criminal Procedure Code is small and there would be no reason for withdrawing such cases from the purview of the Sessions Judge; but there are undoubtedly provinces where the considerations to which I have referred would and must apply. Now, Sir, that is the ground and, I think, the substantial ground on which we have felt ourselves obliged to insert this proviso. May I add that there is nothing in it which justifies the criticism that Dr. Gour has extended against it as unusual, or as taking the matter out of the hand of the Legislature and placing it in the hand of the executive. You have parallels elsewhere. The Local Government can by Notification, for instance, decide whether trials shall be by jury or by assessors. The Local Government (although I know this provision is objected to) can decide when section 80 powers should be given to Magistrates. And you will find as the result of the investigations which we are now making, following the report of the Racial Distinctions Committee regarding the use of that section, that Local Governments will take their stand in regard to its use not on grounds of principle but on grounds of economy. There is therefore I say nothing unusual in this proviso and nothing unreasonable. I admit there is in many quarters a strong feeling that there should be a complete division of functions between the executive and the judicial, an old-standing feeling which has found fresh impetus from the Committees appointed at the motion of our Legislative Councils. Well, how far have Local Governments as yet found themselves in a position to carry out such recommendations? Nowhere, I believe, and it may be some time before they can do so. I say to the House this, that they may advisedly leave this question to be decided as part of the general question of the separation of executive and judicial functions, as indeed it is a part. When Local Governments are in a position to carry out the concrete suggestions of the various committees they have appointed in regard to the separation, then will be the time, but not before, to insist that all appeals against orders passed under Chapter VIII of the Criminal Procedure Code shall come before the Sessions Judges. But until then you must be swayed by exactly the same considerations as are swaying Local Governments in this respect: that is to say, that whatever desire there may be to completely separate these functions, yet for the present financial considerations are too strong. You have here in your Act a provision on which future action can be taken as circumstances permit. Leave it there. When the wider question is settled and provision is made for the administrative changes which that settlement will involve, then this section will stand in good stead. But meanwhile the proviso is in our opinion necessary.

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary (Calcutta: Non-Muhammadan Urban): Sir, I think the House must recognize the strength of the plea put forward by the Honourable the Home Member for the retention of the provision as a purely transitory measure. We all know, and the Home Member himself has admitted it, that we must do all we can to get judicial and executive functions separated. That is the ideal that we had before us for a long time, an ideal which the Government is just recognizing as needful but for the attainment of which active support was not forthcoming on its part so long. That support is now coming. One must admit the correctness of what has been stated with regard to the heaviness of the work of Sessions Judges. We feel that every day in Bengal. The instance of Bihar and Orissa has been quoted, but long-suffering Bengal complains as little as possible. The District Judge, who is also the Sessions Judge in most places, has absolutely no time for what would be considered his legitimate work, his original suits, his appeal work and miscellaneous civil work. The head of the judiciary of the district undoubtedly ought to see as much of appeal work both civil and criminal as possible, and he will do so where it can be arranged for; where it cannot be is the only area in regard to which I understand this provision is to apply and for as short a period as possible. Having regard to that view of things, about which there can be no gain-saying, and fully conceding the soundness of the proposition that economic grounds ought not to be a reason for the denial of justice, it is impossible to insist that this provision shall rigidly stand out. The District Magistrate, I hope, will soon be relieved of all work of this kind; when the District Magistrate entirely takes over the judicial work, he will have to do work of this kind to a very considerable extent. Where the Local Government feels that a particular District Magistrate is not fit to be entrusted with this work, or where this is not desirable, I have no doubt that the proviso will be judicially interpreted and judicially administered. For this reason, Sir, and not for the first reason put forward by the Honourable the Home Member do I object to Dr. Gour's motion. The first objection put forward was that, for fear of possible lapse of the Bill, the House ought to agree to the alteration made by the Council of State. If unfortunately that is the position of things created by the Standing Rules.

and Orders, you have got to face it, and think about amending it in a way that will not involve the lapsing or rejection of a whole measure because, with regard to a small part of the Bill like this, there happens to be a difference of opinion between the two Houses. Even if there be an acute difference of opinion, the undesirable results that the Home Member has indicated ought not to take place and nothing should interfere with our reaping the fruits of long-drawn labours like those we have gone through. But the likelihood of the result indicated would not itself influence our consideration. On other grounds, however, on the somewhat low ground of expediency, I think we might allow this provision to stand for the present, absolutely on the understanding put forward by the Honourable the Home Member that it is a temporary, transitory provision necessitated by the exigencies of the case, to be remedied as soon as possible, and never to be applied unless there is the clearest possible necessity for it.

Mr. P. B. Haigh (Bombay: Nominated Official): Sir, my reason for rising to address the House this morning is because Dr. Gour has made use of some expressions which I do not think ought to go unchallenged. I believe, Sir, that I am the only Member of this House who is actually at this moment a District Magistrate, and I trust therefore that the House will forgive me if I attempt to make some reply to what Dr. Gour has said. Sir, Dr. Gour has told the House that the justice administered by District Magistrates is rough and ready in comparison with the considered and deliberate justice of the Sessions Judge. Well, Sir

Dr. H. S. Gour: I rise, Sir, to a point of order. I am afraid my friend, Mr. Haigh, must have entirely misunderstood me. What I said was that Government wanted rough and ready justice

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary: And wanted Magistrates to administer it.

Dr. H. S. Gour: Yes, I repeat that statement.

Mr. P. B. Haigh: I cannot see the point of order. As for the statement that Government wants rough and ready justice, well, Sir, I am not in a position to answer for the Government; the Honourable the Leader of the House will no doubt do that. But Dr. Gour went further and went on to say that the justice administered by the District Magistrate, as compared with that administered by the Sessions Judge, was impure, adulterated, suspect. Sir, I repudiate those charges, and I would beg Dr. Gour to remember that even District Magistrates are not devoid of a sense of professional probity: and when a case in which a man who was bound over to be of good behaviour comes up to the District Magistrate on appeal, he has no right to assume that the District Magistrate will not undertake consideration of that case without a due sense of his responsibility towards the accused and towards the Government whom he is serving. Sir, I feel it my duty to protest in the name of District Magistrates against charges of that kind and language of that sort being used in this House. Sir, as regards the general question, I do not wish to add anything to what the Honourable the Home Member has said; and from the words of the last speaker it is quite clear now that the consideration that he has urged will carry their due weight with this House. But I would point out one thing to Honourable Members, and that is, that if Dr. Gour could have his way, and if the effect of his motion would simply be to exclude the proviso, then the very large number of persons who will be affected by this section and who will be compelled to go on appeal in every case, not to the District Magistrate but to the Sessions Judge, will inevitably in many districts be subjected to great delay, and I doubt whether, even in the interests of those persons, it is desirable that this proviso should be exercised.

Mr. Pyari Lal (Meerut Division: Non-Muhammadian Rural): Sir, we are driven to a very unfortunate position. The Honourable the Home Member has laid before us the procedure in case Dr. Gour's motion is accepted. It will mean that the work on this Bill for the last three years, that is, of all those persons who went before us and our work for the last three months on this Bill, will be completely lost, and it stands a chance of being destroyed at the hands of the Council by its allowing it to a lapse. Well, Sir, who is responsible for this position? We from the very beginning have been, and as has been conceded by the Honourable the Home Member, the whole country is very strong on this point. They want to have the executive functions of the District Magistrate to be separated from the judicial, and it was to give expression to our feelings on this point that this particular amendment was introduced by this Assembly in the Criminal Procedure Code. We knew at the time that 12 noon. the Honourable the Home Member was opposed to it, but he is a strong man and he must have his way. The Government go to the Council of State and force their will on that august body. They come back again to us and they want to force our hands. Either we must accept it at the point of the bayonet or throw it out. Now, being in this position, our difficulty is that we do not know what to do. We do not want that the Bill for which we have spent such anxious thought and time for so many months should go by the board in this manner; at the same time, we do not want that this proviso objected to by Dr. Gour should receive universal recognition; because in the same breath you say that the appeal should go to the Sessions Judge and yet that the Local Government should undo all what we have done here, that it may transfer these appeals again to the District Magistrate. But, however, situated as we are, we must accept the inevitable and there is only one way out of it, and that way has been suggested by the Honourable Member himself, the gentleman who is responsible for all our misfortunes, and that is, if we let this proviso go now, afterwards when the separation of the executive from the judiciary is carried out, we can come back to the Legislature with a fresh amendment of the Criminal Procedure Code. That is the only alternative left. I know it, Sir, for a fact that all criminal cases, whether they be original or appeal, before the district Magistrate do not give much satisfaction. In spite of what the Honourable Mr. Haigh has said, I join issue with him. Is there a gentleman in this Assembly who has any experience of cases heard by District Magistrates who can lay his hand on his heart and say that the District Magistrate is the proper judicial officer to hear judicial cases? I know it for a fact for the last 40 years that there are very few appeals, if any at all, which are accepted by the District Magistrate. In fact they have a printed form ready which says: "I see no reason for interference". These are the only words that the parties receive, and naturally so, because they are such busy officers who have so many and multifarious duties to do. The District Magistrate is not sitting there as a judicial officer, but he is there as a Magistrate, whose functions, according to him and according to all accepted notions, are very different from those of a judge and therefore we cannot

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: Is a Magistrate not a judicial officer?

Mr. Pyari Lal: He might be just technically so to suit the exigencies of the executive Government; otherwise he cannot possibly devote the amount of time required to decide judicial cases. Therefore, on all hands it is very desirable that he should be relieved of this work. I understand that the United Provinces Government have already decided this matter and they have formulated their views and submitted them to the Government of India; and if that reform is accepted, of course as a matter of fact the amendment above referred to will have to be introduced at a very early date in the Assembly and if other Governments also follow suit, I suppose not much harm will be done if we let the present occasion pass and come afterwards and have this suggested amendment introduced.

Mr. Harchandrai Vishindas (Sind: Non-Muhammadan Rural): May I enquire from the Government whether they will undertake to issue instructions that this power should be very sparingly exercised, so that the apprehensions that have been entertained by Dr. Gour that as a rule all Local Governments will be empowered under this, may be removed?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: In a matter of this kind we consider it proper to leave that discretion to Local Governments. I should be very sorry indeed to think that any instructions that were issued from the Government of India could be interpreted in the sense that we ourselves thought that the charges which have been levied here to-day against the judicial character of District Magistrates had any justification. I consider that this is a matter which must be left to the Local Governments and to the public opinion as expressed through local Councils.

Munshi Iswar Saran (Cities of the United Provinces: Non-Muhammadan Urban): Sir, I wish to say at the outset that I neither agree with Mr. Haigh nor with my friend, Mr. Pyari Lal, about their estimate of the judicial work done by District Magistrates. There are some very excellent District Magistrates who write elaborate, well reasoned and well thought out judgments, while there are others who do not do it. But there is one fact which we ought to take into account and it is this, that as far as a District Magistrate is concerned, it is his duty to hear all sorts of reports from the police. Influential and important men come from all over the district, they relate to him their own troubles, their own grievances, and thus a great deal of information reaches him which does not reach the Sessions Judge. The Sessions Judge, therefore, has certainly to depend more on the record before him than on outside information. Be that as it may—there is a very strong feeling that it would be far better if these appeals were decided by Sessions Judges. I shall ask the Honourable the Home Member to consider one particular matter. He may feel convinced that these appeals could very well be heard by District Magistrates but he ought to take into account the very strong feeling that exists in the country. As a matter of fact, a European lawyer of eminence, while I was coming up here, said to me "If you can get nothing done please see that these appeals in what are called in my province badmashi cases, should on appeal go up to the Sessions Judge and should not be heard by the District Magistrate." It may be a wrong feeling, but there the feeling is, and I venture to think that a careful and cautious administrator will make a note of that feeling and will try to do all that he can in order to remove it. If the Honourable the Home Member will tell the House that this provision is really temporary, for 2 years or 3 years or 4 years, and that there is not the slightest apprehension of its remaining long on the Statute Book, I venture to think that, as a matter of compromise, it will be acceptable even to my friend Dr. Gour and to Mr. Pyari Lal.

Mr. Pyari Lal: I have accepted it already under those circumstances.

Munshi Iswar Saran: Sir, there is no doubt that the acceptance of this provision may lead to a few more appointments of District Judges, but I shall ask the Honourable the Home Member to consider the new arrangement which has already been made. Subordinate Judges in many places have been given the status of Additional Sessions Judges and they hear criminal appeals. Moreover, as appeals from Magistrates of the first class generally go to Sessions Judges, I do not see why this provision should be introduced, which would be an exception.

I must confess that the Home Member laid great stress, and very rightly, on the financial or the economic consideration, and he did not seriously combat the view that it would not on the whole be better and more advisable that these appeals should go to the Sessions Judge. I shall say this, that a little expense for the production of the belief amongst the vast masses of the people that justice is done to them would be well justified. I shall say only one word, Sir, and it is this. The Honourable the Home Member has said, if you insist on it there is this trouble, that either this Bill will lapse, or the matter will have to be reported to the Governor General. Sir, prudence and compromise are most admirable virtues, but there are occasions when they degenerate into either weakness or vice. This is the situation. It was the same thing over the Racial Distinctions Bill—accept this or that condition or the whole Bill drops. It is the same thing here again—we are told to accept this proviso, otherwise the whole Bill lapses. I do not say it is the Home Member or Government that has brought us face to face with this situation. Whether it is due to the intervention of some mysterious power I know not, but we are confronted with a position which is not acceptable to us, and then it is said, "Look here, the work of so many years will be wasted if you do not agree with this proviso, there are so many improvements you can have by accepting it." Too much stress is being laid on this line of argument, and I should say that it is time now, or perhaps the time will soon come, if it has not come to-day, when this House will have to make up its mind and say "Well, we are clear, we adopt this attitude, and we are ready to take the consequences." I shall say to the Honourable the Home Member that he will shorten the debate and there will be no necessity for voting if he will state that this is only a temporary measure, and we need not entertain any apprehension regarding its becoming permanent.

Mr. Darcy Lindsay (Bengal: European): I move that the question be now put.

Mr. P. E. Percival (Bombay: Nominated Official): Sir, as a Sessions Judge myself I am not likely to be unduly biased in favour of District Magistrates; but I may say I have had some experience of the work of Magistrates, because I have been taking appeals for the last 15 years from Magistrates, including District Magistrates. I believe that Honourable Members have an idea that the District Magistrates are sometimes influenced by considerations other than the actual evidence before them. This, however, is not really so except in an infinitesimal number of cases. Well, Sir, I would also like to confirm the statement of the Honourable the Home Member that Sessions Judges, especially in Sind where I come from, have very little, if any, time for civil work. They are occupied the whole time with criminal work. Sessions cases and criminal appeals take up practically the whole time of Sessions Judges; and the additional work thrown on them by the Racial Distinctions Bill and this Bill will still further the criminal work of Sessions Judges. There is one other point to which I should like to draw attention, as I think, it has not been realised by Honourable Members; and that is that the alterations made by this Bill in section 406 have had the effect mentioned by my Honourable friend Sir Henry Moncrieff Smith in regard to another clause, namely, that the Government have already gone nine-tenths of the way to meet the wishes of the Assembly. I believe that 90 amendments, large or small, have been made in this Bill by the House, and have been accepted by Government, that is to say, cases in which Government have been out-voted, and cases in which Government have accepted the amendments; and there remains only this one little item, in which case too Government have gone nine-tenths of the way to meet non-official opinion. Now the existing law is that there is no appeal in the case of security against a breach of the peace. Under the present Bill there is going to be an appeal in the case of security against a breach of the peace as well as of security for good behaviour. That is one alteration. The second alteration is that there is at present no appeal from an order of a District Magistrate or of a Presidency Magistrate. Now there is going to be an appeal from the Presidency Magistrate to the High Court and from the District Magistrate to the Sessions Judge. So in that case the wishes of the Assembly have been entirely met. There remains the third case, that is an appeal from a First Class Magistrate. Now Honourable Members will see that even in that case the wishes of the Assembly have been met to a very great extent, that is to say, the normal procedure will be in future that appeals from First Class Magistrates will go to Sessions Judges and not to District Magistrates. The one and only distinction that has been made in this Bill, which is not in accordance with the suggestions of this Assembly, is that the Local Governments, where they think it necessary in districts such as those in Sind where there is a great deal of criminal work, and in those districts only, can, by notification, direct that such appeals will go to the District Magistrate. I think it is not probable that Local Governments will apply this provision in districts which are not very criminal. There are districts in which there is not a very large amount of crime, and in those districts only the appeals will go to the Sessions Judge; but there are districts in which the Sessions Judges have no time to take these appeals. Therefore I do suggest, in the interests of the Local Governments themselves, that this proviso might be allowed to stand. I appeal to Honourable Members that, as in the case of the Racial Distinctions Bill, so in this Bill also they will act in a spirit of compromise and accept this small amendment which will meet the wishes of the Local Governments.

Mr. Harchandral Vishindas: I move that the question be put.
The motion was adopted.

Mr. President: Amendment moved:

"That this Assembly do insist on clause 109 as amended by the Assembly."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That this Assembly do agree with the Council of State in the said amendment."
The motion was adopted.

Mr. President: Further amendment made by the Council of State:

"That in clause 145 of the Bill in the proposed sub-section (8) of section 526 the words 'prior to the accused entering on his defence' were omitted."

The question is that this Assembly do agree with the Council of State in that amendment.

The motion was adopted.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That this Assembly do agree to the Bill further to amend the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, and the Court-fees Act, 1870, as further amended by the Council of State."

The motion was adopted.

THE INDIAN OFFICIAL SECRETS BILL.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey (Home Member): Sir, I beg to move:

"That the amendments made by the Council of State in the Bill to consolidate and amend the law in British India relating to official secrets be taken into consideration."

As will be seen, Sir, the amendments introduced are small and I think I am correct in saying that they merely give effect to two small amendments that were put forward in this Assembly by a somewhat keen critic of our Bill, but which he did not move. We ourselves thought, however, that it was our duty to move them as rendering the Bill more complete and carrying out generally the ideas which had actuated the Select Committee in dealing with the Bill.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That the amendments made by the Council of State in the Bill to consolidate and amend the law in British India relating to official secrets be taken into consideration."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. President: Amendment made by the Council of State:

"In part (e) of sub-clause (1) of clause 6 of the Bill, for the words 'or uses' the words 'or knowingly uses' were substituted."

The question I have to put is that this Assembly do agree with the Council of State in that amendment.

The motion was adopted.

Mr. President: Further amendment made by the Council of State:

"In Part (b) of sub-clause (2) of clause 6 of the Bill, for the words 'neglects or' the word 'wilfully' was substituted."

The question I have to put is that this Assembly do agree with the Council of State in that amendment.

The motion was adopted.

THE ABOLITION OF TRANSPORTATION BILL.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey (Home Member): Sir, I beg to move:

"That the Bill to provide for the abolition of the punishment of transportation in respect of criminal offences be referred to a Select Committee consisting of Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar, Mr. J. N. Mukherjee, Mr. K. B. L. Agnihotri, Mr. N. M. Samarth, Mr. P. E. Percival, Colonel Sir Henry Stanyon, Munshi Iswar Saran, Chaudhri Shahab ud-Din, and myself."

The circumstances in which I put this motion will no doubt be perfectly clear to the House when it remembers the terms in which a motion for introduction was put forward by Sir William Vincent in September 1921. We are taking action to do away with the punishment of transportation in consequence of the Report of the Jails Committee. As Sir William Vincent explained in introducing the Bill, there was little difficulty on the question of principle. The whole difficulty arose in detail, that is to say, on the Schedules. We then stated that we would place the Bill before Local Governments and take their opinion. Those opinions are now complete, but some of them have only just arrived and we have not therefore had time to circulate them, but we shall place them at the disposal of the Select Committee, if my motion is accepted. I have said before, there is probably no difficulty on the subject of principle. The question of detail presents great difficulties and we therefore wish to have the matter considered in the light of the opinions of Local Governments as soon as possible by a Select Committee. That is the reason why I make this motion at this stage, hoping that the Select Committee may possibly be able to commence its sittings a few days before our session in July next.

Khan Bahadur Saiyid Muhammad Ismail Khan (Patna and Chota Nagpur cum Orissa: Muhammadan): Sir, may I have your permission to suggest that two more names be added to the Select Committee, namely, those of Khan Bahadur Sarfaraz Hussain Khan and Rai Bahadur Lakshmi Prasad Sinha. They are both Honorary Magistrates of great experience and if their names be added to the personnel of the Select Committee proposed by the Home Member I am sure they will be of great assistance to the Select Committee.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That the following names be added to the list of Members of the Select Committee, namely, Khan Bahadur Sarfaraz Hussain Khan and Rai Bahadur Lakshmi Prasad Sinha."

The motion was adopted.

The question is that the Bill be referred to that Select Committee.

The motion was adopted.

THE INDIAN MERCHANT SHIPPING BILL.

Mr. President (to the Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes): The motion for the consideration of this Bill to consolidate certain enactments relating to Merchant Shipping has already been passed.

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes (Commerce and Industries Member): Yes, Sir.

Mr. President: Will the Honourable Member now move his amendment to clause 4?

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: May I explain, Sir, why I bring this Bill forward again for consideration. I should just like to explain to the House why I have again ventured to place this Bill before the House. The House will remember that last March when I moved that the Bill to amend our Mercantile Marine law should be taken into consideration, I explained that our Mercantile Marine law was contained in no less than 21 different enactments some of them dating back 75 years and many of them overlapping and interlocking in the most complicated and confused way. The result is that our ship-owners, our sea captains, the Maritime Local Governments and the Government of India have the very greatest difficulty in ascertaining the law on any particular point. In addition to that, the law in many respects is out of date. Consequently, when the Statute Law Revision Committee was established, almost the first thing we asked them to take up was the consolidation and amendment of these laws. Well, I believe that they departed in this matter from the usual procedure. Instead of proceeding first with amendment and then going in for consolidation, they decided that, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, in this particular instance consolidation must be taken up first as a condition precedent to amendment; but acting again on the advice of the Statute Law Revision Committee, I did not move last March that the Bill should be passed into law. On the contrary, I suggested that we should be given time to prepare an amending Bill, that the amending Bill should then be placed before the House, and that, at a convenient stage, the amending Bill and the Consolidation Bill should be referred back to a Joint Select Committee in order that a final Bill might be placed before the House. Well, Sir, further experience has shown that it will be a long time before we can place an amending Bill before the Assembly. We have already addressed Local Governments on two matters which will involve an amendment of certain Chapters of this Consolidation Bill. We have also had an officer on special duty in the Department, and we have advanced a considerable way with our amendments to the Bill. But these amendments will require reference to Maritime Local Governments and it will certainly take a considerable time before I am in a position to place final proposals before the House. Consequently, the Statute Law Revision Committee has again addressed the Government of India and has suggested that this Consolidation Bill should be passed into law. They suggest that this Bill, though possibly it contains defects especially in the matter that it does not deal with the registration of ships, is a very useful measure in the clarification of our Shipping Law; and, therefore, acting on the advice of that Committee, I have again brought the Bill before the House.

I now beg to move:

"That in clause 4 for the words 'used for the public purposes' the following be substituted, namely:

'employed otherwise than for profit in the public service'."

This clause, Sir, exempts from the operation of the Act ships belonging to His Majesty or the Government of India and ships belonging to any foreign Prince or State and used for the public purposes of that foreign Prince or State. It has been suggested to us that the words "used for public purposes" are obscure and require clarification, a special point being that certain foreign States, the United States Government and the Australian Commonwealth also, have started State lines of passenger steamers, and it has been suggested to us that there is no reason why these State lines should be exempted from the operation of our Shipping Law. The existing law is also rather obscure on the subject, the actual phrase used being different in different Acts. We have referred the point to the President of the Statute Law Revision Committee and on his advice we have suggested this amendment. I move that amendment, Sir.

The motion was adopted.

Mr. President: The question is that clause 4, as amended, stand part of the Bill.

Mr. R. A. Spence (Bombay: European): Might I ask the Honourable Member for Commerce, Sir, exactly what the words "or the Government" mean in this clause 4—is it the Government of India?

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: The Government of this country, Sir.

Clause 4, as amended, was added to the Bill.

Clauses 5—16, inclusive, were added to the Bill.

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: Sir, I beg to move:

"That in sub-clause (1) of clause 17, for the words 'Lieutenant, Sub-Lieutenant, Navigating Lieutenant or Navigating Sub-Lieutenant in His Majesty's Navy or of Lieutenant in the Royal Indian Marine,' the words 'Lieutenant in His Majesty's Navy or in the Royal Indian Marine' be substituted."

This is purely a drafting amendment. The clause exempts from the necessity of examination for certificates of competence certain officers of the Royal Navy and the Royal Indian Marine. We are advised that the wording I am now suggesting is necessary in order to bring our law in accordance with the fact.

The motion was adopted.

Clause 17, as amended, was added to the Bill.

Clauses 18 to 92, inclusive, were added to the Bill.

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: Sir, I beg to move:

"That in clause 93 for the word 'revocable' the word 'irrevocable' be substituted."

I am here, Sir, correcting a printing error. This clause is based on section 73 of the Indian Merchant Shipping Act of 1879 and by a printing mistake they have put in the word "revocable" instead of "irrevocable."

Sir Montagu Webb (Bombay: European): In my copy of the Bill the word "irrevocable" duly appears.

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: I think the explanation of that, Sir, is that the Legislative Department thought they might possibly treat this merely as a printing error, but afterwards decided that the amendment ought to be brought before the House. In the original copy of the Bill as placed before the House the word is "revocable." I think that is the explanation.

The motion was adopted.

Clause 93, as amended, was added to the Bill.

Clauses 94 to 296, inclusive, were added to the Bill.

Schedule I was added to the Bill.

Schedules II, III, IV and V were added to the Bill.

Clauses 1, 2 and 3 were added to the Bill.

The Title and Preamble were added to the Bill.

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: Sir, I beg to move:

"That the Bill as passed by the Council of State and as amended by this Assembly be passed."

The motion was adopted.

THE INDIAN PENAL CODE (AMENDMENT) BILL

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey (Home Member): Sir, I beg to move:

"That the amendment made by the Council of State in the Bill to give effect to certain Articles of the International Convention for the Suppression of the Traffic in Women and children, be taken into consideration."

As the House will see, the amendment consisted merely in introducing the commencement clause as to the necessity of which, and I hope the justification for which, I previously addressed the House in asking for the passing of this Bill.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar (Madras: Nominated Non-Official): Sir, I am still in doubt as to the object the Government have in view with regard to this matter. I take it, Sir, that the clause has been inserted in order that time may be given to the Honourable the Home Member to ascertain from the Local Governments their view on the amendment which we adopted. Supposing, Sir, it happens that Local Governments are against raising the age from 16 to 18, does it follow that the Act itself will not be brought into force at any time? This clause says simply:

"It shall come into force on such date as the Governor General in Council may, by notification in the Gazette of India, appoint."

There is no obligation apparently on the part of Government to bring it into force at any time. Supposing on the receipt of opinions, the Government of India is convinced that the Local Governments are opposed to the raising of the age from 16 to 18, is it the intention of Government not to bring the Act into force at all? If that is the object, the result will be this, that although we have passed the Act here the Government by executive order may never bring it into force. That will be the situation which would arise by the amendment made in the other House. I should like to know what the view of Government would be in case the Local Governments are opposed to the raising of the age from 16 to 18.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: The purpose of the commencement clause is not that which Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar has suggested. It is that we may have an opportunity of consulting Local Governments and the public with regard to the action which should be taken not only in respect of this one new clause in the Indian Penal Code but in regard to the effect which its addition would have on existing sections of the Code. We wish to have an opportunity of consulting Local Governments and local bodies on both questions. Now he asks me what would happen if public opinion—he says the Local Governments, but I am going to say, if I may, instead, public opinion—is opposed to the raising of the age as originally proposed in our Bill from 16 to 18. I ask him in return, would there not be an obligation on us, if public opinion really were against this, to bring the matter before the Legislature again? A commencement clause was necessary, first, in order that we might have an opportunity of such consultation; and that such consultation is required in view of the effect of the new Bill on the existing clauses of the Indian Penal Code I think every one here will admit. Now, what would have been the alternative? The alternative would have been to ask the Governor General not to give his assent to the Bill until such consultation had taken place—an undesirable alternative. It is far better that it should be effected in this natural and constitutional way. As for the future, Sir, I cannot of course bind myself here. If we find that there is a general feeling in favour of raising the age to 18 throughout the Indian Penal Code, if that is a very general feeling throughout India, we should have no hesitation in coming up on the subject to the Legislature. That is one possibility. The other possibility is that there may be an equally strong feeling on the other side. It is suggested that if we find that feeling so strong, and if, therefore, in consequence of it we do not bring the Bill into operation at all, then . . .

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: Suppose the opinions are equally balanced?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: The Honourable Member is presenting me with a conundrum so difficult that I cannot at present see an answer to it, for I find it difficult to assume that opinion can be really equally balanced on a question of this nature. However, at present I am on the alternative suggested by the Honourable Member himself, namely, if opinion were strongly against the proposed general raising of the age I am afraid that I should be inclined to give the Governor General the advice that, if public opinion were really seriously against the Assembly on this matter of social legislation, if it were seriously against the Assembly—I am not using the word lightly—that he should refuse his assent to the Bill. I am afraid, that if public opinion were seriously against the Assembly—and I say again seriously—I should give the Governor General the advice not to put the Bill into operation until those who were in favour of the change from 16 to 18 had persuaded public opinion that it was wrong. That, I think, is a perfectly reasonable and logical position, and the only one consistent with our own responsibility. I do not think that anybody can complain if an executive government, on whom after all the burden of carrying a measure of this sort into effect must rest, should have some consideration of what would happen if there were wide popular opinion expressed against a measure which the Legislature had passed. That is the position, Sir. I have tried to put it perfectly frankly. But for the present I do not think the Honourable Member need envisage the further possibilities that he has suggested. For the present all we want is an opportunity of consideration.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar (Madras City: Non-Muhammadan Urban): Sir, I was rather surprised at the question put by my Honourable friend to my left who is here to press public opinion always; his question rather suggests a lurking feeling that in this matter public opinion may assert itself against the advanced social reformers who are responsible for the passing of this measure in this Assembly. If that is not the fear, then we need not be afraid of public opinion. (Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: "I am not afraid.") I am glad to hear that my Honourable friends are not afraid of public opinion. But there is a great deal of necessity for taking public opinion in this matter, for the very simple reason that we are taking the public by surprise by this measure. When this Bill was introduced it was introduced to suppress white slave traffic. Let us remember that. The public paid no more attention to it, because it concerned white slaves, and not brown slaves. If . . .

Mr. J. Chaudhuri (Chittagong and Rajshahi Divisions: Non-Muhammadan Rural): On a point of order, my friend is not correct.

Mr. President: That is not a point of order. If the Honourable Member wishes to correct Mr. Rangachariar he can do so later. If Mr. Rangachariar chooses to give way, he may do so, but he is in possession of the House.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: Sir, I am perfectly in order. I know the contents of the Bill as it was put forth to the public; it was a Bill, as it was introduced, to suppress white slave traffic in this country; the public therefore did not care what provision you enacted. They wanted to suppress white slave traffic and they were quite willing to have it suppressed; you may put any age you like, 21 or 25; they did not care about it. But, Sir, this Bill has now assumed a new shape in that you have enacted a new provision concerning a domestic crime, a crime committed inside the country, with reference to people in the land. Of this the public had no notice; of this the public had no opportunity to give expression to their views. Therefore, Sir, I think Government are acting with a full sense of responsibility in saying that they will consult public opinion before they put this into force. Sir, when the Government say "we want to consult public opinion," that we, the representatives of public opinion, should cry against it seems to me an enigma.

Dr. H. S. Gour (Nagpur Division: Non-Muhammadan): Sir, as I was the first on the last occasion to raise a question which involved a constitutional issue, may I once more ask the House to consider what position they would be put in if they consent to the course suggested by the Honourable the Home Member. We have already a second chamber; the Honourable the Home Member wishes now to introduce a third chamber, the Chamber of public opinion. (Cries of "Hear, hear.")

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: I acknowledge the compliment, Sir.

Dr. H. S. Gour: Now, Sir, I ask Honourable Members what is public opinion and how do the Government collect public opinion? Are there any written rules about it? Is there any constitutional way of gathering public opinion? There is no referendum, no plebiscite; the public letter is a letter drafted by the Home Department to the Local Governments with a direction to consult such bodies or persons as the Local Governments may deem fit. The Local Governments thereupon collect the opinions of such bodies and persons as they think fit; these opinions are then collected in the offices of the Local Governments and transmitted with the opinions of the Local Governments themselves to the Home Department. There they are digested, summarised and laid before the Home Member. Afterwards the thing passes out of the sight of man into the inner cabinet of the Government of India; that is public opinion. There is no constitutional way of collecting public opinion, and the history of the last twenty years shows that whenever Government have collected public opinion, public opinion has always sided with the Government. I give you a few examples. When the question of mass education was agitating the late Imperial Legislative Council, the Honourable Mr. Gokhale pressed for free and compulsory mass education. That motion was opposed by the Government. Afterwards they acceded to the wishes of that House and said that they will consult public opinion. Honourable Members will be surprised to hear that the public opinion collected by the Home Department was universally against free primary education . . .

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: Compulsory.

Dr. H. S. Gour: Yes.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: And that is exactly the position at the present day in most provinces.

Dr. H. S. Gour: There are numerous examples where public opinion, the so-called public opinion, collected in the manner in which it is done, has not voiced the true sentiments of the people of this country.

Mr. President: The Honourable Member is straying away from the motion before the House. After all, this is the arena of public opinion.

Dr. H. S. Gour: I therefore submit that the setting up of another tribunal, another body, to revise and correct the proceedings of this House is unconstitutional. It is not provided by any part of the written law. The Honourable the Home Member says that under the Act this Bill cannot become law unless it is assented to by the Governor General. That is a constitutional position, and the Governor General is entitled to withhold his assent which he may do on a sufficient cause shown. I submit that is a sufficient safeguard against any hasty or ill-advised action taken by this House in the matter of social or other legislation. Why do the Government now wish to forge another weapon and add it to their already too powerful armoury? You had an example this morning of the deliberate opinion recorded by this House, modified in another place, and, as an Honourable Member put it, thrust down the throats of this House at the point of the bayonet. Well, Sir, that is bad enough, but it would be much worse if the ram rod of public opinion is to be thrust into the delicate machinery of the Central Legislature. I therefore submit that we should not submit to this departure from the established constitution which gives Government sufficient safeguards against ill-judged and hasty legislation, and we should not give the Government the power of withholding their assent or of indefinitely postponing the commencement of a measure passed by the two Houses. Sir, it is a dangerous precedent; it is unconstitutional; it is unworkable, and I submit there is no machinery which this House has prescribed or accepted for the purpose of collecting public opinion—public opinion of what classes, of what persons, of my friend Mr. Rangachariar? If his opinion is to guide social legislation we shall have to wait till the Greek kalends before any advance is made in this direction. When we were told that we do not want this piece of legislation because it does not suit a certain class of landholders in my friend's presidency who would be prejudicially affected if the age of consent is raised from 16 to 18 [A Voice (from the Madras Benches): "It is not true"—that was his plea, that was his statement, that was his sole justification for resisting this motion. He is now prepared to trample under foot the established rules of constitution merely because he thinks that this is a fine moment for postponing the bringing into operation of this most salutary piece of social legislation. My friend must remember that he may get an immediate advantage, but at what cost? He is sacrificing a principle which might hereafter be used against this Legislature. Some of his pet schemes might pass through in both the Houses, and yet the Government may say, 'we are not bound to enact these into law until we have consulted public opinion.' Remember, then, that it is a weapon which might be used as much against my Honourable and learned friend, as against the social reformer. I therefore ask, Sir, that this House should not give its assent to a departure from the ordinary constitution and reinforce the executive Government who may, upon what they consider to be public opinion, refuse to bring into operation a measure which we have passed and which has passed the other Chamber. I ask, Sir, do not Honourable Members know, do they not realise that in a vast body of opinions collected there are bound to be opinions some for and some against social legislation? All social legislation cannot be supported by the unanimous voice of the people. It must of necessity be supported by people who believe in the utility of social advancement. Conservatives and those who desire to make no advance will always oppose any movement directed towards the amelioration or advancement of their fellow-men. I therefore submit, are you to leave to this unsafe judgment of the executive as to what they consider to be public opinion on a matter of this great national importance? In the printed compilation which was presented to the Members of this House in connection with this measure, has not this question been thrashed out in all its details? (A Voice: "No.") My friend Mr. Rangachariar said that the public were misled into thinking that this had something to do with the White Slave Traffic. I deny that state-

I P.M. ment. If Honourable Members will turn to any page of that compilation they will find that all the public bodies and Associations were dealing with, not the International Convention, but the specific amendments of the Indian Penal Code, and they were asked whether the age should be limited to 16 or extended to 18 or 21. This question, Sir, was the subject of a debate in this House, and surely, intelligent public opinion, if it follows the debates in this House and in the other House, could not be unaware of the true nature of the reform that Members of this House then desired and have since enacted by a measure of legislation. I therefore submit that it would be creating an abnormal and dangerous procedure if this House in a moment of weakness, in a moment of supine indifference, were to allow the Government to seize hold of an advantage by referring to what they call public opinion, a question upon which our voice, the voice of the constituted representatives of the people should be final and should not be open to further revision.

Then, Sir, my friend the Honourable Mr. Rangachariar said, you need not be afraid of public opinion, the public have been taken by surprise. I have answered both those questions. My learned friend does not disguise his real sentiments. (Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: "Never does.") He never does, he says. But whether he ever does or not, on this occasion his intention is manifest. He is prepared to oppose this measure by hook or by crook. I do not know, Sir, as he said the other day, whether that crook is going to be a straight one. I have a shrewd suspicion that it is not. But whether this measure is to be opposed by Mr. Rangachariar by, for the time being, lending his support to the Honourable the Home Member or not, I appeal to this House for the sake of its own dignity, for the sake of the constitution which it is called upon to work, and lest dangerous precedents should be created, to resist this additional power which the Honourable the Home Member wishes to confer upon the executive Government. I submit, if the existing constitution gives the Governor General the power, and that power is being enlarged because the Governor General cannot indefinitely withhold his assent to a measure of legislation passed by the two Houses (The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: "Why not?") If he can I do not see, Sir, why you should not rely upon that power and why you should add a commencing clause. Please justify it yourself. I do not understand it. If the Governor General possesses the power under the existing law to withhold his consent and he can withhold it for any length of time, then I ask, why have you inserted this commencing clause? What is the real object? Why do you not avail yourself of it? No explanation of it has been given, and I submit, in the absence of explanation, I feel suspicious that this clause will unduly enlarge the power of the Government to refuse to extend the operation of an Act which would otherwise be extended if the Government had the power merely to advise the Governor General to withhold his assent.

On these grounds, Sir, I oppose the commencing clause.

Mr. President: The question of the assent of the Governor General is not a proper thing to be brought in here. It is part of the constitution that laws are passed by the Indian Legislature, which is composed of the two Chambers and of the Governor General for that purpose. Here the sole question in issue is whether the Governor General in Council, that is, the body commonly described as responsive to this Chamber, is to be given a discretion in the choice of the date when this measure is to come into force.

Mr. N. M. Joshi (Nominated: Labour Interests): Sir, I rise to support my Honourable friend Dr. Gour. This, Sir, seems to be a day of surprises. During the course of the last few hours the Honourable the Home Member seems to have developed a very wonderful love for the public opinion of this country. It was only yesterday that he appealed to the Members of this House that, in order that they should do what he considered to be just and right, they should flout the opinion of their constituencies and follow the Honourable the Home Member's lead. Sir, to-day he wants the Honourable Members to consult public opinion, not the public opinion as represented by this House, but as represented by some other organizations in the country. I do not know which organizations he referred to. Did he refer to the Indian National Congress? Does he consider that the Indian National Congress or any other Congress is more representative of public opinion than this body. Sir, my second surprise is that my Honourable friend Mr. Rangachariar, who I thought had some opinion of this Assembly as a representative body, has shown to-day that he has no respect for the representative character of this Assembly. (Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: "Not in social matters.") Sir, he says, not in social matters. If he considers this Assembly to be a representative body for legislation then it is as representative of public opinion in social legislation as in any other legislation. (Hear, hear.) Sir, my Honourable friend Mr. Rangachariar said we need not be afraid of public opinion. Certainly I am not. I am quite sure if you go to the public again public opinion will support the view which I have put forward on two previous occasions. But that is not the question. I feel that this Assembly represents public opinion in India more than any other body in this country. I am not prepared to accept the verdict of public opinion in this country as represented by any other body. That is the reason why I support my Honourable friend Dr. Gour. Sir, if public opinion has not been consulted, whose fault is this? It is more than a year since this question was discussed by this Assembly. When it was brought forward first in this Assembly a large section of this House expressed its views on certain matters. The Government of India knew that they were going to bring forward a Bill to give effect to the Convention. They consulted the Local Governments and the Local Governments have consulted public opinion. We do not know on what points public opinion was consulted. Unfortunately, I have not got here the letter which the Government of India wrote to the Local Governments and to organizations representing public opinion. If we had that letter before us we would know on what points public opinion was consulted. Sir, I think that public opinion was consulted on the main question before us, and if it was not consulted it is not our fault but the fault of the Government of India. And I also feel that this House should not accept the main amendment which the Council of State has made. What is the use of that amendment? If the Government of India is against the Bill, let them advise the Governor General to withhold his assent to that Bill. If the Government of India is in favour of this section but the Government of India want to consult public opinion as regards the raising of the age from 16 to 18 in other sections of the Penal Code, then the way open to Government is to allow this Bill to be passed and then to consult public opinion as regards the change of age from 16 to 18 in the other sections of the Penal Code. I assure the Government of India that I shall give my fullest support to that proposal of theirs if they come forward with such a proposal at all. Therefore, I think, if this House accepts the amendment made by the Council of State, it will stultify itself in the first place as being an unrepresentative body, and in the second place as showing by their own vote that they had made a mistake. I therefore hope that this Assembly will do nothing of the kind and throw out the amendment made by the Council of State.

Mr. S. O. Shahani (Sind Jagirdars and Zamindars: Landholders): Sir, I also rise to support what has been stated by the Honourable Dr. Gour. In matters of social legislation we feel very reluctant to be guided in any manner by my Honourable friend Rao Bahadur Rangachariar. I trust that the House will not be misled on this occasion by my friend whom I have just now mentioned. It is only reasonable that a measure that has been passed by this House should receive better consideration. After it has been passed, that it should be referred to certain bodies for an expression of opinion which is to be deemed public opinion, this procedure is reprehensible; I daresay that this procedure is not being adopted anywhere else, and this is a novel procedure intended to defeat the measures that found any favour with this House. With these remarks, I resume my seat.

Rai Bahadur Bakshi Sohan Lal (Jullunder Division: Non-Muhammadan): Sir, I have to ask one question. May I specially ask for the rule or order under which a Bill may be circulated for public opinion after it has been concurrently passed by both the Chambers of the Legislature, and also what would be the fate of this Bill, which has been passed by both the Houses, if the public opinion is not collected before the end of this Session, which is quite close, and if the Home Member does not like to move under order 4 (2) given at page 29.

Mr. President: The word 'opinion' has been used in a somewhat confusing sense. There is the purely official and technical sense in which the phrase 'eliciting opinion' is used. That consists—I am not sure that I accept Dr. Gour's description of it as exact, but I accept it as a roughly accurate description—of the process by which Government consults Local Governments, High Courts and certain other constituted authorities regarding the applicability of a measure in certain circumstances. The Honourable Member is thinking of something totally different; he is thinking of consulting the friends of the Honourable Members below him and other persons supposed to represent a certain state of social opinion. The point at issue here is whether the Government is to have a discretion in applying this; and the Home Member has put forward the plea that the Government ought to have such discretion, because it wishes to assure itself regarding the general state of opinion on this subject in the provinces. There is no real point of order that can be raised here.

Rai Bahadur Bakshi Sohan Lal: The Standing Order has not been noted, as I asked, under which any matter connected with the Bill is to be referred to

Mr. J. Chaudhuri: Sir, may I ask the Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey to remove some misapprehension? My friend, Mr. Rangachariar, said that the measure was called white slave traffic, but is it not the case that this measure was brought first in the form of a Resolution before this House which related to the International Convention, and then, it was distinctly stated that it was not merely the white slave traffic which came within the scope of the Convention but it related to traffic in women and children generally? I would further ask if the object of the circulation of this Bill is not only to ascertain opinion on this particular measure but also with regard to the raising of the age-limit in the cognate sections of the Indian Penal Code, which are not before us? I do not oppose, Sir, the decision of the Government, for this reason that if the cognate sections of the Indian Penal Code are modified in the light of this, of course, that too will be in the interest of social reform or rather protection of women and children. And the third question that we raise is, is not the scope of this Bill independent of the consent of the person who is procured? In the Indian Penal Code, if anyone procures another without her or her guardian's consent, for immoral or illicit purposes, then only the person procuring will be punishable. The International Convention is different from the scope of the existing provisions of Indian Penal Code, inasmuch as it would punish the procurer irrespective of any such consent. Those are the three points that I would like the Honourable Member to clear up.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: Sir, I am astonished to hear that to-day is a day of surprises. When I moved for the final passing of this Bill, dealing perfectly frankly with the House, I said that I intended to secure, if I could, the insertion of a commencement clause. I explained the reason, and the House, with full knowledge of that, passed the Bill. Where then have I sprung a surprise on an astonished House? It knew all about it from the very first (Mr. N. M. Joshi: "Your love of public opinion, that was the surprise.") And it agreed from the first. It is only when the Bill comes back again, that some reason is found for what Dr. Gour described as a suspicion. Well, I hope that we may in the future manage to take such a course as may avoid arousing suspicion in Dr. Gour's breast,—for those suspicions seem to take an unconscionable time to explain, and to involve a good deal of fervent language. 'Unworkable, unconstitutional, flouting the Assembly'—all that arises out of a little suspicion. Now, Sir, let me first, before I proceed to deal with those suspicions, deal with his facts, or may I rather say, his mis-statements. He said that the exact terms of the Indian Penal Code amendment which would be necessary had been placed before the public, and that that fact was fully shown in the opinions recorded in the mass of correspondence that was placed before Members. Well, I have here the original documents; they do not, as the House will see, constitute a mass of correspondence. The terms on which the matter was placed before Local Governments and the public are here; the letter began by reciting the fact that we had acceded to the International Convention for the suppression of the traffic in women and children and the like. It referred to the Resolutions that were brought forward in the Council of State and in the Legislative Assembly. It mentioned that Mr. Joshi pressed for the acceptance of the convention at the age accepted by other countries, that is 21 years, and lost that motion by 8 votes. On the other hand, it pointed out that Dr. Gour thought that the age should be 18 instead of 16. It stated briefly the objections to that change in the age which were voiced in the Assembly. It said in conclusion that as a result of the opinions received, necessary steps would be taken to draft the sections that were required in the Indian Penal Code. It is, therefore, incorrect to say that the public had before it the amendments of the other sections of the Indian Penal Code which are now involved; and Mr. Rangachariar was perfectly correct in saying that no one has yet been consulted on the effect—the net effect—which this amendment would have on the remaining sections of the Indian Penal Code. He is further perfectly correct—the House will know how much it goes to my heart to have to agree with Mr. Rangachariar—in saying that one object of introducing a commencement clause was to give us an opportunity of consulting not only with regard to the age which should be taken for this particular offence, but for the remaining and more serious offences in the Indian Penal Code. We sought an opportunity in fact to deal with the question as a whole, and if possible to avoid the surprising illogicality that the age of 18 should apply to what will strike most people as a comparatively minor offence while the age of 16 would apply to some of the gravest offences which a man can commit. (Voices: "Why pass this measure?") (Dr. H. S. Gour: "Don't pass this measure.") Don't pass the Bill. In effect, I am only seeking delay in bringing it into operation. Sir, this measure, which was accepted by the House by a majority of three, after they had originally thrown out a somewhat more strenuous attempt to raise the age of majority on the part of Mr. Joshi, is now described by Dr. Gour as so sacrosanct that we must consult nobody any further on the subject. He says that public opinion has been sufficiently ascertained already in these opinions. Let me say that if anybody will refer again to those papers,—he will find that it was a matter which aroused very little public interest at the time, owing no doubt to the fact that it seemed to deal at first sight purely with external traffic.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: And I think we gave the title "White Slave Traffic" in our Bill.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: It had that title undoubtedly.

Dr. H. S. Gour: May I point out in this connection that Sir Reginald Craddock introduced a similar measure at the instance of the Honourable Mr. Dadabhoy in the old Council and the matter has been before the public since the last 10 years.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: Yes, Sir, and the late Council would not have it. That is the case. The particular proposal contained in this Bill was undoubtedly introduced to the public—don't let us blind ourselves to the facts—under the title of the White Slave Traffic, and that is the reason why it received so little examination on the part of the various people to whom it was submitted; and indeed many of the opinions recorded turn entirely on the question of the age which should be taken in penalising the procurement of girls from outside India. But, Dr. Gour adds that it is no matter if public opinion was not sufficiently ascertained before; there is no other standard of public opinion than this House. I can very well understand a gentleman in Dr. Gour's somewhat peculiar position objecting to the collection and the recording of public opinion. He has had a somewhat sad experience. He exhibits in his own case an almost theological hatred of other people's opinion when directed against a measure to which he is devoted. I can understand that in his case the experience is such that it does not incline him to go to the public again. I have a great admiration for those social reformers—there are some in India but more perhaps in Europe—who live and work among the classes adversely affected by our social organisation and seeks to ameliorate their conditions. I have somewhat less admiration for the social reformer whose chief efforts are in the Legislature, not that I object to anybody taking legislative action, but because he himself does little to prepare the ground for the steps which he wishes to carry into legislation. But I have always noticed with regard to your social reformer that he is as a rule peculiarly unreceptive in regard to other people's opinion. When he has once made up his mind on the desirability of a measure, then nobody else is right and nobody else has a right to say a word. That is exactly the case here. By a majority of some 8 Members, the party which wished this reform in the Legislative Assembly has secured the passing of the Bill, and, as far as I can see, their one object now is to prevent anyone else throughout India having a word to say on the subject. (Voices: "No.") That, I think, is an attitude which hardly redounds to their credit, and indeed, I think, many of the opinions which they have used here to-day on the subject of the undesirability of Government consulting public opinion, will strike the outside world in a somewhat curious light. (Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary: "There is no they in it. It is singular.") The final question has been asked us, "Why, if you think it wrong yourselves to introduce this Bill without further delay and consideration, why don't you advise the Governor General to refuse his assent to it?" I have explained before that I am quite prepared to advise the Governor General to refuse his assent to it. (Voices: "Do so.") But this, I consider, is a far more desirable way of effecting what we want. After all, when the Governor General has refused his assent to the Bill that refusal cannot subsequently be withdrawn. The Bill goes; but by the process I suggest we keep it alive. I think that in itself ought to be a sufficient answer to those who would have us place the whole responsibility on the Governor General. As I say, that in itself should be a sufficient answer to those objections.

(Voices: "No.") But if it is not a sufficient answer let me quote to Honourable Members the fact that in a very considerable number of the Bills which we have introduced in the Legislature, there is a commencement clause. There is no novelty about it whatever. It is one of the commonest of devices of legislation, and indeed . . .

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: We did it the other day in the Racial Distinctions Bill.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: You have done it in the Racial Distinctions Bill and in the Criminal Procedure Code; you have done it to-day in yet another Act. My friends, who are a little better acquainted with drafting of legislation than I, could probably recite you the names of a hundred Acts with a similar beginning. Simply because we wish to take this very ordinary procedure in this case we are treated at once with suspicion. We are told that we have broken through every constitutional safeguard and the most extraordinary exaggeration is used in speaking of our proposal. This last is perhaps the worst. We are told that we should invoke the power of the veto powers of the Governor General merely in order to delay the operation of a Bill about the effect of which we wish to inquire. That is, we are invited to use the heaviest machinery of the State in order to effect a purpose which can be equally well achieved by the very simple, very ordinary and the entirely constitutional device which I have placed before the House.

Mr. Pyari Lal (Meerut Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): I am sorry to observe that the Honourable the Home Member has invited all this hostile criticism by his 'over-honesty.' If he had not stated in the very beginning that he was going to elicit public opinion on the point, we would not have said anything about it, and if this commencement clause were introduced just as it was, that is, silently, there would have been an end of the matter. But the difficulty arises from the fact that he states that he is going to consult public opinion now after we have passed the Act. What Dr. Gour says is that this is unconstitutional. Surely, we are putting the cart before the horse. If public opinion was to be invited, it ought to have been done before the Bill came to be considered and passed by this Assembly. That stage is long past. Let the Honourable the Home Member keep his own ideas to himself of what he means to do before allowing this Bill to have force. It is I suppose perfectly open to him, as Home Member, to ask for any information that he likes and this Assembly need not know it, and he may postpone its enforcement for five or ten years or for any length of time he likes. It is perfectly in his power to do so.

Mr. R. A. Spence (Bombay: European): I move that the question be put.

Mr. President: Amendment made by the Council of State:

"Clause 1 was re-numbered sub-clause (1) of clause 1, and to that clause the following sub-clause was added, namely:

(2) It shall come into force on such date as the Governor General in Council may, by notification in the Gazette of India, appoint."

The question is that this Assembly do agree with the Council of State in that amendment.

STATEMENT OF DEMANDS REFUSED BY THE LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY AND RESTORED BY THE GOVERNOR GENERAL IN COUNCIL.

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett (Finance Member): Sir, in pursuance of Standing Order No. 73, I lay on the table a statement showing the action taken by the Governor General in Council in pursuance of section 67A (7) of the Government of India Act in regard to certain demands for grants which have been refused by the Legislative Assembly and are regarded as essential to the discharge of his responsibilities. It is just a formal statement:

"In pursuance of section 67A (7) of the Government of India Act the Governor General in Council is pleased to declare that the following demands which have been refused by the Legislative Assembly are essential to the discharge of his responsibilities, namely:

Number of demand.	Service to which demand relates.	Amount of demand refused by the Legislative Assembly.
8	Railways—Working Expenses	Rs. 1,14,00,000
44	Miscellaneous—Public Services Commission	8,01,000

E. M. COOK,

The 28th March, 1923.

Secretary to the Government of India."

ELECTION OF MEMBERS FOR THE PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE.

Mr. President: Before adjourning, I would invite the attention of the Assembly, particularly the non-official Members of the Assembly, to the fact that at the end of the business to-day an election of Members to serve on the Committee on Public Accounts has been set down. Eight Members have to be elected by a procedure which ought by now to be familiar to Members. The following candidates have been proposed for election to the Committee:

Mr. Braja Sundar Dass,
Mr. B. N. Misra,
Mr. N. M. Joshi,
Mr. Syed Nabi Hadi,
Mr. Ambica Prasad Sinha,
Mr. K. Ahmed,
Mr. K. G. Bagde,
Mr. K. C. Neogy,
Rao Bahadur P. V. Srinivasa Rao,
Sardar Gulab Singh,
Rai Sahib Lakshmi Narayan Lal.

I may also remind Honourable Members that the ballot for Resolutions to be set down for Saturday will take place during the luncheon interval.

THE INDIAN FINANCE BILL.

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas (Bombay City: Non-Muhammadan Urban): Before you adjourn, Sir, I should like to put one question to the Honourable the Leader of the House with regard to procedure. We are informed that in the other House the Finance Bill has been laid on the table as a recommended Bill. What will be the exact procedure which will come into effect now? Will the Bill at all come back to this Assembly. We should like to know this, because some of us are rather anxious to get away. As there is not much time before us, I should like to know from the Honourable the Leader of the House if the Bill is likely to come back to this Assembly.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Halley (Home Member): I will take it from the Honourable Member that such a recommendation has been made. I must take the facts from him.

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas: I am only informed of this; I do not know whether it is true.

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett (Finance Member): Sir, I can confirm the fact.

Mr. President: The Honourable Member cannot expect an answer to a hypothetical question.

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas: The Honourable the Finance Member has confirmed the fact.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Halley: In those circumstances I can only refer the Honourable Member to section 67B of the Government of India Act from which it will be clear that if the recommended Bill is passed by the Council of State it will have to come back to the Assembly.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar (Madras: Nominated Non-Official): When will the other House take up the Finance Bill?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Halley: On Friday, and our intention is to bring it back to this House on Monday.

The Assembly then adjourned for Lunch till Three of the Clock.

The Assembly re-assembled after Lunch at Three of the Clock. Mr. President was in the Chair.

THE MALKHARODA AND GAONTIA VILLAGES LAWS BILL.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Halley (Home Member): Sir I beg to move:

"That the Bill to declare the law in force in certain territories of the district of Sambalpur and to provide that the past administration of those territories shall not be called in question on the ground that they were not included in the territories administered by the Government of the Central Provinces, as passed by the Council of State, be taken into consideration."

The object, Sir, of this Bill will be sufficiently clear to the House in the Statement of Objects and Reasons, and indeed I think that if I were to attempt to add to that Statement of Objects and Reasons by any verbal statement of my own, I might perhaps add great complexity to what is already, as I am sure the House will feel, a sufficiently complicated question.

Babu Braja Sundar Das (Orissa Divisions: Non-Muhammadan): Sir, I beg to oppose the consideration of this measure on the following grounds. This Bill originated in the Council of State and properly speaking the people affected are not represented there practically, and moreover there is nothing on paper to show whether the consent of the people affected has been obtained or not. Then it is well known to the Government of India that there has been an agitation going on for a very long time that the tracts of the Ooriya-speaking people should be placed under one Government. But that is a larger question which I do not like to bring in here. Let me mention incidentally that instead of putting all the Ooriya-speaking tracts together, some small portions are being taken from the Government of Bihar and Orissa. Two years ago some villages were taken away from the district of Balasore and added to Midnapur in Bengal, and the people of those villages were never consulted. Here again, it is doubtful whether the people of the villages concerned have been consulted. As we see from the Statement of Objects and Reasons, it will appear that a few Zemindars were left out in Central Provinces at the time of the redistribution of districts by Lord Curzon in 1905 and Sambalpur was added to Bengal. Phuljhar, Padampur and some other Ooriya-speaking Zemindars were left in the Central Provinces. Those Zemindars have certain villages under them in what now constitutes the Province of Bihar and Orissa. These Zemindars carry on their litigation work in the Criminal Courts of the Central Provinces therefore the people, ignorant as they are, did not object to it, and this created a precedent for their demanding that these villages should be added to the Central Provinces. As I have already stated, the Bill originated in the Council of State where had there been a single representative from Orissa I think he would have questioned it; but there was no representative practically and therefore the Bill had an easy passage in the Upper House.

My friend, Mr. Joshi, just mentioned a few minutes ago that the Honourable the Home Member has surprisingly developed a love of public opinion recently. That love, I find now is completely lost here in this piece of legislation. The Honourable the Home Member asked us to defer our consideration of the previous measure simply because the people had not been sufficiently consulted, and here I think the people have not been consulted at all. Sir, this small piece of legislation does not affect the Government of India, nor does it affect the other advanced Provinces, but it really affects a small people like Ooriyas—therefore I commend it to the Government that the consideration of the Bill, or the passing of the Bill, should be postponed and public opinion—I mean the opinion of those really concerned, i.e., the people of the villages affected—be obtained as well as the opinion of the Governments concerned be obtained. I do not know—there are no papers to show—whether the Bihar Government has been consulted or not, or whether the people of those villages have been consulted at all. As far as I do know, public bodies in Orissa have not been consulted; and therefore I put it to the Government to defer the consideration of this measure for a little longer. It won't affect anybody. At the same time it will give satisfaction to the people themselves, and particularly as the larger question is hanging in the balance before the Government of India, and as we have been agitating for the last 20 years and still we do press on the Government of India to put all Ooriya-speaking tracts under one administration. Therefore I would submit to the Government and to the House to defer the consideration of this Bill a little longer. With these few words, I oppose the motion.

Mr. B. N. Misra (Orissa Division: Non-Muhammadian): Sir, I also beg to oppose the consideration of this Bill which the Honourable the Home Member has brought forward, though my attitude is one of a friendly critic of Government.

I shall invite the attention of Honourable Members of this House to the several proclamations referred to in the beginning. That is, the proclamation of the Government of India in 1905; then again in 1912; then again in 1923. Honourable Members will find that this part of the Ooriya country is being kicked like a football from one Government to another Government. If I tell them a little more they will be surprised to learn that this part of the Sambalpur district prior to 1860 formed part of the Orissa Commissioner. Then it was transferred to the Chota Nagpur Division and it remained for some time under the Commissioner of Chota Nagpur. Then it went to the Central Provinces. About 1905 it again came back to Bengal and then to Bihar and Orissa. So that Honourable Members will find that the people residing in this border land between the Ooriya country and the Central Provinces are being treated very lightly. Of course they are really a sort of backward people in those parts and I must say that the Reforms Scheme has not, I think, been extended to that part as it is a backward tract and there is no representation of it either in the Central Provinces Government, not to speak of the Council of State. The fact remains however that for the purposes of judicial administration or civil administration this part has been under the Sambalpur District all along and for a long time under Bengal and now under Bihar and Orissa. As for the case referred to, when I was practising at the Calcutta High Court the case was there; then after a separate High Court was established at Patna it was transferred there and then on some grounds it went to the lower court and then again it was tried in the Sambalpur and Manbhum District and it then went to the High Court and so on. So practically these people for the last so many years are accustomed to look to the Patna High Court and the Calcutta High Court for their litigation, and now if this Bill is passed then the result would be that these litigants or perhaps all the pending cases will have to go to the Central Provinces administration because clause 3 says "and the said territories are hereby declared for all the purposes of the Central Provinces Courts Act, 1917, to form part of the territories to which that Act extends." So the result will be that these litigants will again have to go to the Central Provinces and will have to go to the Judicial Commissioner at Nagpur.

My other objection is this; the Honourable the Home Member will remember that in reply to certain questions of mine about uniting all the Ooriya-speaking tracts under one Government, he was pleased to reply that the matter was under the consideration of the Government of India and of course Honourable Members are aware that a Resolution was moved in this very Assembly before the Reforms Scheme in 1920 and the Government of India promised to consider the matter and they have obtained the opinion of the Local Governments and the matter is finally awaiting their finishing hand to give a final stroke to the long desired object of the Ooriyas, that is to bring all the Ooriya-speaking tracts under one administration and if that is the case, this Bill can wait. If the Government of India consider the case favourably and all the Ooriya-speaking tracts are brought under one Government, these people from this Malkharoda Jaghir and Gaontia villages will come back again to the Ooriya province; then in that case it will be a great hardship if this Bill is passed now, and the consideration of this Bill may therefore be postponed till that question is decided. I do not think it will take such a long time as the Local Governments have already been asked for and the local Council of Bihar and Orissa has already expressed its view as required under the Government of India Act, for the transfer of territories from one administration to another. Under these circumstances this may be postponed and it will not act as any hardship. With these remarks I oppose this motion.

Dr. H. S. Gour (Nagpur Division: Non-Muhammadian): This discussion is proceeding, Sir, under some misapprehension. The Sambalpur District of the Central Provinces was detached and made a part of the Province of Bengal some 18 or 20 years ago, prior to which it was an integral part of the Central Provinces and the first settlement of that district was made by an officer of the Central Provinces administration. Honourable Members who have spoken on this Resolution seem to be of opinion that the Government are trying to filch the district of Sambalpur from Bihar and Orissa and tack it on to the Central Provinces, and the last speaker seems to have taken for granted that the zemindari of Malkharoda is an Ooriya-speaking Zemindari. Nothing can be further from the truth. The Malkharoda and Phuljhar Zemindari with which I am very intimately familiar is a Hindi-speaking Zemindari and it is wrong to assume that it is a part of the Ooriya-speaking tract. What happened is this. A portion of the Sambalpur District is no doubt Ooriya-speaking; but interspersed in that district there are a very large number of Zemindaris which are purely Lariya-speaking or Hindi-speaking Zemindaris. It has been ever since the annexation of the District of Sambalpur first in the Province of Bengal and later on after the formation of Bihar and Orissa it has been a standing grievance with the people of that district that they are not able to obtain administration of justice with that despatch which their position deserves. Now, let me illustrate to the Honourable Members the position of these unfortunate people. If they have got any case in court, the Sessions Court is in Cuttack and if they want to go to Patna they have first to go to Calcutta and then go on to Bankipore or Patna. Their long connection with the Central Provinces, their revenue laws being the same as the Central Provinces Revenue Laws, and the whole district being subject to the Central Provinces Land Revenue Act and the existence of the Gaonti tenure in that district which is the tenure generally prevalent in the division of Chattisgarh of which Raipur is the headquarters, and of which Sambalpur formed a district, has always tended to remind them of the good old days when they were part and parcel of the Central Provinces; and they have never become reconciled to the position that has been allotted to them as a border district first of Bengal and later on of Bihar and Orissa. But as I have said, Sir, this is a larger question. We must not confuse the issue. We are here concerned with the very small matter referred to in Schedule 2. The names of the Malkharoda Jaghir and Gaontia villages are set out there. These are the people regarding whom the Government of India propose legislation. It is a matter of doubt and it is to settle that doubt that the Government of India have undertaken this legislation to declare that they are part and parcel of the Central Provinces and are subject to the jurisdiction of the courts in that province. I do not see what advantage will be gained by further delay and further consideration. Of course, I do not share the passion for popular opinion of the Honourable the Home Member, but nevertheless I recognise that there may be a time and occasion when delay would improve matters; but in this small matter upon which the Statement of Objects and Reasons appended to the Bill is sufficiently clear, I do not see what further light can be thrown on the subject and I therefore support the motion of the Government and oppose the motion made by my two Honourable friends.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: I am very glad to have obtained the assistance of Dr. Gour who with his local knowledge has been able to dissipate, and I hope finally to dissipate some of the doubts which my Honourable friend behind had cast on this case. I am not going to run the risk of further confusing the House by any lengthy statement on the subject. There are, however, one or two considerations that I must put forward in order to explain our position. What is the exact operation that we are undertaking? There were certain villages which we thought we had left with the Central Provinces. They are under the Central Provinces revenue law; they have been accustomed to go to the Central Provinces courts. Their civil administration, since their transfer or since their assumed transfer, has been in the Central Provinces.

Mr. B. N. Misra: My Honourable friend will find that since this territory was transferred to Calcutta in 1905, the people always went to the Calcutta High Court, and after 1912 they are under the Patna High Court.

Dr. H. S. Gour: They are under the Central Provinces law.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: I will explain how far they have since 1905 been under the Calcutta or Patna High Court. Our intention was to leave these villages which were under the Central Provinces revenue law in the Central Provinces. Now it has been discovered that in the notification which we issued we had not carried out our intention, and I imagine that this has come as a considerable surprise to the people themselves. The Honourable Member said that they are accustomed to look to Patna for their appellate jurisdiction. As far as we know only one case has gone to Patna. Some acute legal brain discovered that there was a doubt as to where their appeal lay. It was finally decided that it lay with Patna, but until that discovery was made,—I believe, that the people were under the impression that the whole of their appellate jurisdiction lay in the Central Provinces itself. We have issued a notification, as we are entitled to do, assigning these villages to the Central Provinces, and we merely ask for legislation in order to clear any doubts or remove any difficulties that may have arisen owing to the fact that our intention was not properly carried out in our Notification. That is all that the Bill sets out to do.

Now, I am told that we should delay this case on one major and one minor consideration. The major consideration is this, that the Ooriya-speaking peoples have for a long time been seeking union under one administration. There are certain Ooriya tracts in Madras, some in Bengal, some in Bihar and Orissa and some in the Central Provinces, and this much-divided people desire for union under one of the existing administrations or a new administration of their own. The Honourable Member says that as the matter is under our consideration, he has no doubt of a favourable decision. If there is a favourable decision, so much the better for him, but I very much doubt if it can be an early decision. Here you have four Governments, all of whom want to keep under them their existing Ooriya-speaking populations—a great compliment to my friend. Each Local Government is prepared, I think, to take over more Ooriyas from another Local Government, but not to give up what they already have. I should not be surprised that the proper solution of the whole question did not lie in the constitution of a sub-province or a new province. That, indeed, is, I believe, the only solution which will give complete happiness to my friend. But it is not a solution at which one can arrive easily, nor is it one which we could carry it into execution speedily in our present financial condition. And indeed, Sir, with the lessons before us of what has happened when we previously attempted to re-arrange the boundaries of provinces, I feel myself that a good deal of hesitation is required before we put any such scheme into execution. That, Sir, is the case, and I do not think, after what I have said, that anybody would feel that it is worth while delaying this small piece of legislation which relates only to a few villages until the larger consummation arrives to which my Honourable friend looks forward so fondly.

Then, there is the minor consideration, namely, that the people themselves have not been consulted. We have, of course, consulted the Local Governments. I cannot trace here any definite expression of opinion on the question of what my Honourable friends have been pleased to describe as a transfer,—I cannot trace any definite expression of opinion from these villages, but may I point out to them the case is exactly the opposite to what they put. They say that we are transferring these villages from one province to another. We say that these villages have been under the Central Provinces administration, they have been under the Central Provinces revenue law, and that they themselves believe that they are under the Central Provinces, and all we are doing is to confirm that decision and not to make a change. If we were really proposing to take these villages from one province to another, then there might be good reason to consult them. All we are seeking to do is to leave them where we thought they were and where, in my opinion, they themselves believe they are. But with regard to any question of their transfer to Ooriya-speaking confederation, might I point out to my Honourable friend that Dr. Gour was perfectly correct in saying that the larger portions of these villages, namely, those in the Malkharoda Jaghir, are not Ooriya-speaking at all. On that point, we, of course, have consulted the people, I mean on the point whether they wish to join any Ooriya-speaking confederation. Malkharoda it is stated to have no Ooriya element in its population or language. As might be expected therefore, considerable opposition was there expressed to the proposal to amalgamate the tract with the Province of Bihar and Orissa. That does not look, Sir, as though there was any need to consult them on the question now before us.

Then again as regards certain villages in the Chandrapur-Padampur Zemindari, the people there speak a variety of Hindi, and here we are told the feeling is the same, and the preference to present arrangements is unanimous. Some of the villages state that they suffer great inconvenience and many disadvantages from the difference in language and habits of life, and they would like to be amalgamated with the Bilaspur district, rather than with the Ooriya-speaking tracts. So all the evidence we have is that these villages would very much prefer to be in the Central Provinces.

[Sir Malcolm Hailey.]

That, Sir, is our case. If after that the House considers that we are doing an injustice to these people, then we are perfectly willing to take any other measures to rectify our decision that may be required. (A Voice: "Commencement clause.") As I said before, it must be an unhappy situation for these people who imagined that they were in the Central Provinces, suddenly to discover that they have to take their appeals to Patna—an exceedingly difficult and long journey for them, and an inconvenient matter in another way, for all their institutions, as far as we know, and certainly their revenue law are those of the Central Provinces.

Mr. B. N. Misra: Sir, the Honourable the Home Member said that the law of the Central Provinces applies in Sambalpur. No doubt the whole district of Sambalpur was under the Central Provinces revenue law and the whole district has been transferred and there is no dispute about that. But what is the good of keeping these 20 or 30 villages separate when you have transferred an area of over 4,000 square miles? What is the good of keeping about 50 square miles?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: Then perhaps the best thing we could do would be to take away Sambalpur and return it to the Central Provinces.

Mr. President: The question is that the Bill be taken into consideration.

The motion was adopted.

Clauses 1 to 5 were added to the Bill.

The Schedule was added to the Bill.

The Title and Preamble were added to the Bill.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: Sir, I move that the Bill be passed.

The motion was adopted.

THE LEGAL PRACTITIONERS (WOMEN) BILL.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey (Home Member): Sir, I move for leave to introduce a Bill for the removal of doubts regarding the right of women to be enrolled and to practise as legal practitioners.

Sir, the circumstances under which I introduce this Bill, of which I may say in the language used by after-dinner speakers the pleasant duty has been conferred on me of introducing this Bill, are of course known to the House. The original author of the measure was Dr. Gour and to him the credit is due. We found on examination of his Bill that merely on a matter of drafting it did not meet the situation. We therefore proposed to take the sense of the House on that occasion on the matter of principle. The House approved the principle, approved it I think unanimously. We then undertook to bring in a Bill ourselves which should give full effect to it and here, Sir, is the Bill. I think I need say little myself in commendation of a measure which in effect has already been passed by the House, and which I know has the approval of the House. Nominally it is a Government measure, but we are only too glad to recognize that it is not in reality a measure promoted by Government and that the credit for it is due to those progressive non-official Members who have had the cause of the women of India at heart. (Hear, hear.)

Mr. President: The question is that leave be given to introduce the Bill.

The motion was adopted.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: Sir, I beg to introduce the Bill. With your permission, Sir, I beg to move that the Bill be taken into consideration.

The motion was adopted.

Clauses 1 to 3 were added to the Bill.

The Title and Preamble were added to the Bill.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: I could wish that every measure I have to introduce to this House could have as easy a passage. But perhaps, Sir, the measures which I have to introduce to the House are not, all of them, quite so beneficent as this.

Sir, I beg to move that the Bill be passed.

Munshi Iswar Saran (Cities of the United Provinces: Non-Muhammadan Urban): Sir, I wish to most heartily congratulate Sir Malcolm Hailey and the Government on the introduction of this beneficent measure. Unfortunately it is on rare occasions that I am filled with such gratitude to and admiration for Government as I am filled with at this moment. I have no doubt that this measure will be welcomed by the entire educated community all over the country. I am glad Sir Malcolm Hailey did not wait for his hat to be blown off by Indian suffragettes before introducing this measure. He and the Government have profited by the experience of other countries and I most heartily congratulate them.

Dr. H. S. Gour (Nagpur Division: Non-Muhammadan): Sir, I shall be failing in my duty if I also do not join in offering my most hearty congratulations to the Honourable the Home Member for the despatch with which he has carried out the promise that was given to this House that, if the House by a majority carried my motion, to refer my motion to the Select Committee, the Government would introduce a more comprehensive measure drafted on the same lines. And I am glad, Sir, that before this Session is over this beneficent piece of legislation will find its place on the Statute Book. It is the commencement of the emancipation of womanhood, and I can only hope that the benevolence which the Government have shown in this connection will also be extended to other similar matters.

Khan Bahadur Sarfaraz Hussain Khan (Tirhut Division: Muhammadan): Sir, I have never yet made any speech on the motion for the passing of a Bill; but on this occasion my heart is so filled with joy that I cannot help giving expression to my feelings. The House may perhaps consider this to be a small matter, but this time I find that India is giving woman her proper place.

Mr. President: The question is that the Bill be passed.

The motion was adopted.

ELECTION OF MEMBERS FOR THE PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE.

Mr. President: The House will now proceed to the election of Members to serve on the Committee of Public Accounts. I announced before the Lunch adjournment that there are 11 candidates for 8 seats on that Committee. Honourable Members will find the 11 names printed on the ballot paper and the instructions in their usual form. I think Members understand by now the procedure by way of the single transferable vote. I presume that all the 11 candidates still wish to keep their names on the ballot paper.

As only non-official Members take part in the election of Members to serve on the Public Accounts Committee and as there is another item of business which if disposed of would enable official Members to go away if they so choose, I call upon the Honourable the Home Member to oblige the House by moving his motion for referring the proposed amendments to the Standing Orders to a Select Committee.

AMENDMENT OF STANDING ORDERS.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey (Home Member): Sir, I have to move for leave to amend the Standing Orders of the Legislative Assembly by adding to them a Standing Order in the form annexed, on petitions relating to Bills pending before the Legislative Assembly. The motion which I make is the outcome of proposals put forward originally from a non-official quarter and, as the House will perhaps remember, those proposals were referred to a Committee on which non-officials were fully represented. The draft Standing Order itself is practically in the form recommended by that Committee, it is I think fully in accord with modern parliamentary practice.

Mr. President: Honourable Members will see the form of the draft Standing Order, which I need not read to the House. I have to ask whether objection is taken. As no objection is taken, the Honourable Member has leave.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: I now move that the proposed amendments be referred to a Select Committee.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That the proposed amendments be referred to a Select Committee."

The motion was adopted.

The House will now proceed to the election of Members to serve on the Committee on Public Accounts. Members will come to the table to receive the ballot paper.

(Election Proceeding.)

Mr. President: The result of the election will be announced in due course.

STATEMENT OF BUSINESS.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey (Home Member): As several Members were absent yesterday evening when I made an announcement about the course of business, I should like to again remind the House that on Thursday we are taking private Bills. We propose, after we have finished Government business on Monday, to continue with those Bills, and again on Tuesday, in order that we may dispose of as many as possible before the Session ends.

Mr. S. O. Shahani - (Sind Jagirdars and Zamindars: Landholders): Sir, may I inquire as to when the Session ends?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: To the best of our belief, Sir, on Tuesday.

The Assembly then adjourned till Eleven of the Clock on Thursday, the 22nd March, 1923.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

Thursday, 22nd March, 1923.

The Assembly met in the Assembly Chamber at Eleven of the Clock.
Mr. President was in the Chair.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

POWER OF THE LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY TO REDUCE THE PAY OF OFFICERS OF THE CIVIL SERVICE OR THE ARMY.

604. Mr. Mohammad Faiyaz Khan: Has the Assembly got the power if it wishes to reduce the pay of Indian or British officers in the Civil Service or the Army?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: As far as Members of the All-India services and officers of the Army are concerned, the answer is in the negative. As regards other services, the power to influence pay is limited to such effect as may be produced by voting or refusing supply on Demands for Grants.

BHATKAL RAILWAY EXTENSION.

605. Mr. Mahmood Schamnad Sahib Bahadur: 1. Will the Government be pleased to state whether the Bhatkal Railway extension has been given up?

2. Is the Government aware that the proposed railway extension to Bhatkal does not connect the general railway system with the West Coast (Malabar) railway of the Madras Presidency?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: 1. The reply is in the negative.
2. Yes.

POSITION UNDER THE INDIAN ARMS ACT OF RETAINERS OF MAHARAJAS, RAJAS AND NAWABS.

606. Lieutenant Nawab Mohammad Ibrahim Ali Khan: I. Are the Government aware that in Schedule I of the New Indian Arms Rules, class 3, all Maharajas, Rajas and Nawabs are exempted under the Arms Act but nothing is laid down about their retainers, in consequence of which the local authorities are not in a position to allow the same liberty in the use of arms as is allowed to the retainers of the exemptees of class 6 who are of inferior standing?

II. Do Government propose to extend the same privileges to the retainers of exemptees of class 3 which are enjoyed by the retainers of class 6; and remove the great anomaly as soon as possible by amending the law or issuing Circulars to local Governments, making the necessary correction?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: 1. Yes.

2. The Arms Rules Committee recommended no change in the provisions regarding retainers; and the Government of India are inclined to accept this recommendation unless very good reason to the contrary is shown.

Lieutenant Nawab Mohammad Ibrahim Ali Khan: Has effect been given to this?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: Not yet; we are consulting the Local Governments regarding some of its details.

Baba Ujagar Singh Bedi: Is there any hope of giving us some information before the next Session at Simla?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: I should hope that we may probably by that time be in a position to give effect to some of the recommendations of the Committee.

OFFICE OF THE MILITARY ACCOUNTS DEPARTMENT, POONA.

607. Mr. B. S. Kamat: With reference to the Office of the Military Accounts Department, Poona, will Government be pleased to state:

- (i) If Government are aware that there is still some discontent amongst a section of the clerical staff on the ground that the pay of clerks in Divisional Offices, even though they were given temporary or supernumerary promotions, has been fixed at a lower stage than that of their juniors in field offices similarly situated?
- (ii) If any representations have been received, how have they been dealt with by Government?
- (iii) If it is true that the rates of pay of accountants and clerks in the Civil Accountant General's offices and those in the Military Accounts offices are the same; if the reply is in the affirmative, will Government kindly state why rates of increment to those clerks who have passed the Subordinate Accounts test are lower than in the Civil Department, although conditions of service in Military Accounts offices are perhaps more onerous; if any representations on this subject have been received by Government how have they been disposed of?
- (iv) If any temporary clerks entertained during the war and being made permanent in the Department are receiving higher rates of pay than those of the permanent clerks senior in service; if so, will steps be taken to remove the anomaly?
- (v) If it is true that the service of Deputy Examiners who were promoted to this grade during the war in place of absentees is not allowed to count towards pension; is it contemplated to remove any discontent on this ground by amending the rules?

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: (i) and (ii). Some representations on the subject were received by the Government of India from the clerks of the Military Accounts Department at Poona, but the grant of the special concession in question was not considered necessary in view of the liberal treatment accorded to the Military Accounts establishments generally under the orders introducing time-scale rates of pay.

(iii) The rates of pay of accountants and clerks of the Military Accounts Department are generally similar to those prevailing in the Civil Accountant Generals' offices; but the rate of increments of clerks who have passed the Accountants' test is lower in the Military Accounts Department than in the Civil Accounts Department. A representation for the grant of the higher rate of increment was received from the Military Accounts establishment at Poona, but the Government did not feel able to agree to it.

(iv) Men who had been entertained temporarily in the Military Accounts Department during the period of the war on higher rates of pay for special qualifications have been confirmed on those rates of pay. The Government of India do not consider that others in receipt of lower rates of pay have any legitimate claim to have their pay raised accordingly merely on the ground of length of service.

(v) Accountants who were promoted temporary Deputy Examiners during the period of the war were not allowed to count the higher emoluments towards pension. This decision was arrived at by the Government of India after careful consideration of the rules on the subject and they do not propose to make any amendment in the rules.

COMPLETION OF CUTTACK-TALCHER LINE.

608. Babu Braja Sundar Das: Will the Government be pleased to state when the Cuttack-Talcher line is likely to be completed?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: Work on the line has only lately been commenced and it is estimated that it will take about 2½ years to complete.

MILEAGE OF THE B.-N. RAILWAY RUNNING THROUGH THE ORIYA-SPEAKING COUNTRIES.

609. Babu Braja Sundar Das: Will the Government be pleased to state how many miles of the Bengal-Nagpur Railway run through the Oriya-speaking countries under the Government of Bihar and Orissa, Bengal, Central Provinces and Madras?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: The mileage of the Bengal-Nagpur Railway running through the Oriya-speaking tracts is approximately as follows:

	Miles.
Bihar and Orissa	540
Central Provinces	13
Madras	58

COACHING TRAFFIC EARNINGS OF THE B.-N. RAILWAY.

610. Babu Braja Sundar Das: Will the Government be pleased to state the amount received annually by the Bengal-Nagpur Railway from Coaching Traffic stating specially the amount derived from the Coaching Traffic to Puri, Bhubaneswar, Baitarani and Jajpur?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: The Bengal-Nagpur Railway received from coaching traffic, Rs. 2,21,47,000 during 1921-22 which included sums of Rs. 9,65,794, 1,28,213, 1,03,606 and 43,696 on account of passenger traffic booked to Puri, Bhubaneswar, Baitarani and Jajpur, respectively. Particulars of other coaching traffic booked to these stations are not available.

NUMBER OF MEN IN THE HIGHER GRADE SERVICES OF THE B.-N. RAILWAY.

611. Babu Braja Sundar Das: Will the Government be pleased to state:

- (a) the number of men employed by the Bengal-Nagpur Railway in the higher grade services in their various departments stating how many of them are Europeans, Anglo-Indians, and Indians? Is there any Oriya in the higher grades of services?
- (b) the number of employees who are getting over Rs. 50 per month classifying them according to their nationality? How many Oriyas are there in the employment of the Bengal-Nagpur Railway getting a pay over Rs. 100 and over Rs. 50?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: The information in the detail asked for is not available. It can be collected only by special compilations by the Bengal-Nagpur Railway and the Government are reluctant to put the Railway Administration to this trouble.

PASSENGER SUPERINTENDENTS.

612. Babu Braja Sundar Das: (a) In pursuance of the Resolution by Mr. Joshi regarding Passenger Superintendents will the Government be pleased to state if the Bengal-Nagpur Railway have appointed any Passenger Superintendent at Howrah and Puri?

(b) Is it a fact that most of the third class passengers to Howrah between Howrah and Puri are Oriya-speaking?

(c) Do the Passenger Superintendents at Howrah and Puri (if appointed) know anything of the Oriya language?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: (a) The reply is in the affirmative so far as Puri station is concerned.

At Howrah there are two Passenger Superintendents under the control of the East Indian Railway. These men attend both East Indian Railway and Bengal-Nagpur Railway passenger trains.

(b) Government understand that the percentage of Oriya-speaking passengers between Howrah and Puri is comparatively small.

(c) The Passenger Superintendent at Puri and one of the Superintendents at Howrah have a knowledge of the Oriya language.

Babu Braja Sundar Das: I beg to put another question.

Mr. President: Does the Honourable Member wish to ask a question of which notice has not been given? If it is a private notice question, that must come at the end.

Mr. K. Ahmed: Sir, in view of the fact that there is no Bengali-speaking Passenger Superintendent on the Eastern Bengal Railway, do Government propose to replace some of the Superintendents when they retire by a Bengali-speaking Superintendent?

Mr. President: Does the Eastern Bengal Railway run into Howrah?

Mr. K. Ahmed: Then I put both the East Indian Railway and the Eastern Bengal Railway.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: We were asked to collect certain information about Oriya-speaking Superintendents on the Bengal-Nagpur Railway running into Howrah and Puri. I do not think the Honourable Member is in order in asking about Bengali-speaking Superintendents on the Eastern Bengal Railway.

IMPERIAL INSTITUTE.

613. Mr. W. S. J. Willson: 1. Is Government aware that:

- (a) The Princes and people of India subscribed a very large sum of money towards the building of the Imperial Institute?
- (b) When the building became the property of the British Government this important Indian share was recognised by earmarking a certain portion for Indian purposes and placing it under the India Office?
- (c) The India Office has announced its intention, owing to the discontinuance of the Government of India grant, to hand over this portion of the building to the British Government to be used for other purposes?
- (d) The Indian Committee of the Imperial Institute (which includes distinguished Indian representatives) has protested against the action of the India Office, maintaining that this portion of the Imperial Institute should continue to be Indian and used for Indian purposes as at present?

2. In view of these facts and in addition the expressed wish of the Associations of Commerce, both in India and Great Britain, that India's long connection with the Imperial Institute should be preserved, also of the continued requests which are being received from India for assistance from the Institute, will the Government of India take steps to ensure that the recognised occupation of certain parts of the Imperial Institute for Indian purposes is not disturbed?

Mr. J. Hullah: 1. (a) Yes.

(b) The arrangement made was that the India Office should occupy, as lessee of the British Government, free of rent, firstly a portion of the basement for use as store-rooms and office, and secondly a corridor with passages, stairways and a subsidiary room. The Government of India understand that only the first area, which does not form part of the main building, is to be surrendered.

(c) The intention is believed to be as I have already stated, but I am not aware that the India Office has made any announcement on the subject.

(d) The Government of India have no information of any such protest.

2. The Government of India believe that the portion of the main building which was leased to the India Office is still in possession of the Imperial Institute, and will continue to be used for the Indian Exhibits, which will not be removed. They will, however, ascertain definitely whether this is so.

CONDITION OF PERMANENT QUARTERS AT RAISINA.

614. Lieutenant-Colonel H. A. J. Gidney: 1. Will Government kindly state how many of the recently built permanent quarters at Raisina leaked during the rains, last February, and to what extent?

2. In view of the experience gained during the above period is the Government prepared to say that these quarters will be habitable during the monsoons?

3. If not, are they taking steps to make the roofs really water-tight?

4. Will the Government state what has been spent up to date in electro-wiring the houses in question?

5. Is it a fact that the electric-wiring has been done so unscientifically that much of the material put down only 4 or 5 years ago has perished to such an extent as to need renewal?

Colonel Sir Sydney Crookshank: 1. The total number of complaints of leakage during the rains referred to, received by the Executive Engineer in charge was six.

2. Yes.

3. Does not arise.

4. The total sum spent on wiring residential quarters to date is about Rs. 5 lakhs.

5. No.

Mr. S. C. Shahani: Are the Government aware that the doors and windows, as also the furniture in the Raisina quarters are all ill-made?

Colonel Sir Sydney Crookshank: May I ask the Honourable Member to state exactly what question he has put?

Mr. K. Ahmed: I suppose leakages are generally found in the buildings?

Mr. President: Order, order. Mr. Shahani.

Mr. S. C. Shahani: My question is—are the Government aware that the doors and windows in the permanent quarters at Raisina are badly made and that the furniture which is provided in the permanent quarters is badly made?

Colonel Sir Sydney Crookshank: I am not aware that either the doors or the windows, or the furniture is badly made. The best wood procurable has been obtained and is used in the manufacture of these articles and the best labour available has been employed.

CIRCULATION OF ONE-RUPEE NOTES.

615. Sir Montagu de P. Webb: Will Government having regard to the unsuitability of the one rupee note as currency in this tropical country and to the fact that, according to the Report of the Indian Retrenchment Committee, the one rupee note is apparently more expensive to produce and maintain in circulation than the silver rupee, now revert to the pre-war practice of issuing the silver rupee only in future?

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: The matter is under consideration.

Mr. S. C. Shahani: Are the Government aware that the public in this tropical country now consider the one-rupee note as fairly suitable?

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: Government are aware from statements that have been made to them both that it will be a disaster if the one-rupee note is not withdrawn and that it will be a disaster if it is.

Mr. S. C. Shahani: Will the Government be pleased to state if it has been found difficult to maintain the one-rupee note in circulation and, if so, why?

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: I understand it was a little difficult in the first instance. In certain quarters it is now extremely popular. The whole question is a difficult one. It is very hard to say whether or not it is more expensive to keep the one-rupee note or the silver rupee in circulation and it is hard to say whether the public does or does not want the one-rupee note. The best criterion always in deciding whether a particular form of currency should be kept in circulation or not is whether the public want it or not, and that will ultimately be the criterion in this case.

Mr. S. C. Shahani: Will the Government be pleased to ascertain what the attitude of the public in the matter is before withdrawing the one-rupee note from circulation?

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: The Government are endeavouring to do so.

Mr. K. Ahmed: Is the Honourable the Finance Member aware that contagious disease is prevalent especially in this city of Delhi? I suppose plague and small-pox are contagious diseases?

Mr. President: The Honourable the Finance Member is not responsible for Public Health.

COST OF MILITARY SERVICES.

616. Sir Montagu de P. Webb: Will Government be pleased to say what percentage the cost of "Military Services" in India in (1) 1913-14, and (2) 1921-22, bears:

- (a) to the total expenditure of the Central and Provincial Governments combined; and
- (b) to the total cost, excluding Commercial services of administering India of the combined Central and Provincial Governments?

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: The percentages required are:

	1913-14	1921-22.
(a)	19.5	23.8
(b)	32	38.3

I may add that the corresponding figures for 1923-24 are approximately (a) 21.6 and (b) 35.2.

Dr. H. S. Gour: Is this percentage arrived at after taking into calculation military expenditure distributed over the heads of civil expenditure, as, for instance, 50 lakhs of rupees under the civil works in Waziristan, the Frontier Military Police and the like?

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: I did not work out the figures myself, so I cannot answer finally such detailed questions, but certainly we have not included political expenditure as part of military.

UNSTARRED QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

FOOD SOLD BY LICENSED STATION VENDORS.

247. Rai T. P. Mukherjee Bahadur: (a) Is the Government aware that the licensed station vendors generally supply inferior food and sell all food and articles at an exorbitant high rate and dupe the passengers?

(b) Is there any officer to supervise the work of station vendors just to see whether they are supplying inferior things or selling things at a higher rate to the passengers than the bazar rate?

(c) Does the Government intend to take steps to protect the poor passengers against extortion by station vendors?

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley: (a) Government are not aware that such is the case. Vendors are bound by their contracts to supply good and wholesome articles at current rates.

(b) The reply is in the affirmative.

(c) The Honourable Member is referred to replies to (a) and (b) of his question.

CHANGES IN LAW AFFECTING THE HINDU SOCIETY.

248. Babu Braja Sundar Das: (a) Will the Government be pleased to state if they consult the opinion of any body of Pandits connected with a religious institution regarding changes in law which affect the Hindu Society?

(b) Has the Muktimandap of Puri been ever consulted with regard to changes in social laws of the Hindus?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Halley: (a) and (b). No. Public opinion is elicited by publication; if the opinion of particular bodies or individuals is sought, the selection is made by Local Governments.

RAJKUMAR COLLEGES FOR ARISTOCRATS.

249. Babu Braja Sundar Das: (a) Will the Government be pleased to state how many Rajkumar Colleges for aristocrats are there in India?

(b) Were they started at the initiative of the Government of India or the Provincial Governments?

(c) Is it a fact that minor sons of Landholders and Zamindars are sometimes forced to go there even against the protest of their natural guardians?

(d) What is the standard up to which education is imparted in each Rajkumar College?

(e) Is any method of administration imparted to the students of those colleges, bureaucratic or democratic?

Mr. Denys Bray: (a) There are five Chiefs' Colleges in India.

(b) They were started at the initiative of the local authorities.

(c) Not so far as the Government of India are aware.

(d) There is a Diploma Examination at all the Colleges which is accepted by Universities as equivalent to the Matriculation examination, and there is a Post-Diploma Class at the Mayo College, Ajmer.

(3864)

(e) This question is not fully understood. The subjects connected with administration, in which instruction is given, are " Law " and " Land Revenue and Surveying ".

REDUCTIONS IN THE STAFF OF B.-N. RAILWAY.

250. Babu Braja Sundar Das: (a) Is it a fact that great reductions in the staff have taken place in the Bengal-Nagpur Railway owing to retrenchment?

(b) If the reply to (a) be in the affirmative, will the Government be pleased to state the number of hands that have been discharged classifying them under heads, (i) Europeans, (ii) Anglo-Indians, (iii) Indians?

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley: I would refer the Honourable Member to the second part of my answer to Mr. Agnihotri's question put on the 12th March, which deals with the matter. Government do not propose to enquire into the number of hands discharged or the classes to which they belong.

FEMALE WAITING ROOMS AT SAMTHAL HATIM SERAI RAILWAY STATION ON THE O. AND R. RAILWAY.

251. Mr. Syed Nabi Hadi: Is Government aware that there is no female waiting room at Samthal Hatim Serai Railway station on Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway and the Indian women feel much inconvenience there?

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley: Government have no information. Railways provide separate waiting accommodation for female passengers where necessary.

IMPERIAL WIRELESS.

Sir Jamsetjee Jejeebhoy: With your permission, Sir, I should like to ask a question about which I have given notice to the Honourable Member in charge. Will Government be pleased to inform the House how the case stands regarding Imperial Wireless?

Colonel Sir Sydney Crookshank: Sir, before replying to that question in so many words, perhaps I may be permitted to take up a few minutes of the time of the House briefly to explain how the position stands, as it may enable Honourable Members better to judge and form their opinions. I would at the outset ask Honourable Members to frame a mental picture of the geographical position of India in relation to Africa, Europe and Asia. From this they will see in their mind's eye that India stands in the centre of a circle comprising South Africa, East and West Africa, the United Kingdom, Egypt, Europe generally, the Near East, the Far East, Singapore, Hongkong, Australia and New Zealand within its perimeter. Honourable Members will thus realise that India's position in the wireless field is one of very great importance indeed, both strategically and commercially. I will not go into the past history of the development of wireless, but, beginning at the year 1920, it will interest the House to know that an Imperial Wireless Telegraph Committee, ordinarily known as the Norman Committee, sat in London to investigate the Imperial Wireless position at large. The conclusions they arrived at were that the programme to be followed should be to develop on steps averaging about 2,000 miles a piece, that is to say, England to Egypt, Egypt to India, India to Singapore, and on to Port Darwin, or Perth and Brisbane. This proposal, which was based on Government management throughout, did not, however, receive any favour either from the Government of India or from the Commonwealth, Dominion and Union Governments. The reason why we in India had no particular use for this arrangement was that for strategical purposes direct communication between England and India was of the highest importance and for commercial purposes to work on these short stages would be unpractical and unprofitable. These views were communicated to the Home Government and the next stage in the development of Imperial Wireless was that in 1922 an Imperial Wireless Co-ordinating Committee sat and recommended that the Indian station should be an Imperial station and more or less left it open to the Union, Dominion and Commonwealth Governments, who, I may remark, had already taken the matter into their own hands by entering into negotiations with branches of the main Marconi Company for the erection and working of their own stations. The Indian Government being reluctant to embark on the programme of expenditure involved the Home Government then offered to provide the money for the construction of this station on the understanding that we worked it and gradually repaid the capital by means of amortization or sinking fund. They proposed, however, to instal a station which in our opinion was not sufficiently powerful to give us the commercial traffic which we considered would be thrown on this central station and would be required in order to make it pay its way. Our views were communicated to the Home Government and as a result the British Cabinet decided that no restrictions should be placed on the arrangements for establishing Imperial wireless long-range stations outside the United Kingdom but that in England itself Government would erect and work its own high-power station. This therefore left us in India with a free hand and the question was then one of the comparative merits of Government erection and control versus private enterprise. In the case of Government capital and working, according to the advice which we received from our experts in this direction, the cost of the station was estimated to amount to about £421,000 or say £500,000 to be on the safe side. The ordinary working expenses would be on an average £41,000 per annum—probably more making allowance for the interest and sinking fund charges. There were therefore great difficulties in the way of Government taking up the construction of the installation itself—not only on account of the large amount of capital involved but also because we had no experts of the specialized technical standard required to construct and operating the station. And, moreover, and this is a very important point, we had not the full rights to utilise the Marconi patents and get the advantage of the best apparatus and means of conducting the service. The advantages and disadvantages of private enterprise on the other hand will be fully realised in that Government would not be required to put down capital; possibly they could enter on a contract for majority shares in the same way as the Commonwealth Government did which took 500,001 shares out of a million pounds worth of capital; or they could do what was done by the Union Government—that is to say, give a ten-year contract with the option of taking over the whole concern at a valuation at short notice. A further advantage of private enterprise would be that by coming into a contract with a branch of the Marconi Company we should get the full use of those patents which would make all the difference to the success of the concern. Therefore the balance of considerations was on the side of private enterprise and it remains so still. What form private enterprise should take has not been fully gone into by this Government. We have had offers from two Indian firms, and also from a branch of the Marconi Company, but our arrangements would naturally be that we would give preference, if we had eventually to decide on going in for a contract, to a Company which was an Indian Company with a large proportion of Indian Directors and floated with Indian rupee capital.

[Colonel Sir Sydney Crookshank.]

That is the position at present and Government is now investigating further in that direction. That does not necessarily mean that wireless telegraphy throughout India and abroad will revert to contract working. It really means that there will be a blend of State and Company management which I think offers the best solution of this problem. That is to say, the Government would retain in their hands the working of the inland and coastal stations which we now have in India and in Burma and along the coast, and would also encourage the opening of feeder stations within the limits of these inland stations by Local Governments, by commercial undertakings or other bodies such as groups of coal mines, tea gardens, oil fields, or other concerns having occasion to take advantage of having small wireless installations of their own. There would also be the smaller wireless installations which would be worked under licence by the Indian States for the advantage of the communications within those States. So that, as I explained before, Government would still retain in their hands the working of wireless throughout India and Burma and along the coast, and if the proposal to enter upon a contract for the opening of Imperial wireless is found suitable and satisfactory, that would be handed over to private enterprise. It is not possible to state exactly where this high-power station in India would be situated, but it would probably be in a group of stations at places like Agra, Tundla and Hathras, those being about the right distances apart for the grouping of this central high-power world station and having the advantage of close connection with the main telegraphic heart or centre of India at Agra. It will thus be seen that Government have this very important problem under consideration as a part-Government-part-private-enterprise scheme. The traffic which would be thrown on this long range station in order to be of value for commercial purposes, without which it would be insignificant, would be in the nature of 2 million words per annum out of probably a total of 12 million words which pass over the cables; and the rates, although nothing has been fixed or settled in that matter, would probably be about 75 per cent. of the cable rates—that is to say Re. 1 for wireless per word as against Rs. 1-4 for cable transmission. That is the position in which we now stand and we propose to investigate further this field of private enterprise in the shape of an Indian company with Indian capital.

Mr. N. M. Samarth: May I inquire, Sir, whether the Government of India obtained the opinion of the law officers of the Crown as to whether it is legally permissible to the Government of India to grant a licence to any one in regard to wireless telegraphy within British India?

Colonel Sir Sydney Crookshank: I am not quite sure whether I fully understand the Honourable Member's question, but there will be no objection to entering into a contract by the Indian Government in India, as the British Government have already decided that that may be left entirely in the hands of the Indian Government; but I think what the Honourable Member probably has at the back of his mind is the utilisation of the patent rights which are possessed by the Marconi Company. These the Government of India will not use, except by arrangement and payment of royalty fees to the Marconi Company as the law authorities in England have stated that payments which were made by the General Post Office to the Marconi Company in connection with the utilisation of some of their patent rights before and during the war cannot be extended to apply to the utilisation of those patents in India.

[Colonel Sir Sydney Crookshank.]

Mr. N. M. Samarth: I am afraid I have not made myself quite clear. My point is specifically this. Under the Indian Telegraph Act as it stands at present, have they obtained the opinion of the law officers of the Crown as to whether it is legally permissible to the Government of India to grant a licence at all to anybody for wireless telegraphy within British India?

Colonel Sir Sydney Crookshank: So far as I know, it is.

Mr. N. M. Samarth: My question is, have the Government of India obtained the opinion of the law officers of the Crown on that point?

Colonel Sir Sydney Crookshank: I am not quite sure; I shall look up the case and I will inform the Honourable Member later as to the exact position.

Sir Jamsetjee Jejeebhoy: May I inquire, Sir, whether wireless telephony would come within the scope of the proposed company?

Mr. H. A. Sams: Wireless telephony would not, I think, come within the scope of the proposed company which would be simply like any other land line.

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary: Before entering into any contract would the Government exhaust its inquiries with regard to other methods of wireless under investigation in India and abroad?

Mr. H. A. Sams: What other methods has the Honourable Member in mind?

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary: For example, regarding those about which question were asked in this House some time ago; that was one class of wireless I had in mind.

Mr. K. Ahmed: As for instance, I handed over a pamphlet of Khan Bahadur Habibur Rahman Khan regarding his original research in wireless telephony and telegraphy, and the Honourable Sir Sydney Crookshank promised that he would read that pamphlet and see if there is any good in it.

Colonel Sir Sydney Crookshank: I can assure Honourable Members who have just spoken that Government would be very careful indeed to make inquiry into every possible method of wireless transmission, whether of the kind to which I gave an answer some days back, or otherwise.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: May I ask in what form the Government aid is going to be given to this enterprise, whether it is to be in the shape of guarantee or in the shape of shares in the capital? Have they decided?

Colonel Sir Sydney Crookshank: Sir, there are several alternatives in this particular direction; but we have not got as far as going into the details of the exact proposals of any agreement which may be made, but we would naturally be very careful to see that the interests of the Government were properly safeguarded and also that in the case of emergency or war the Government would have the full use of the Imperial Wireless stations in India.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: Will the Government when they have made up their mind inform the public as to what aid the Government is going to give in this matter, because the public are not likely to form a company without knowing beforehand what the Government proposes to do?

Colonel Sir Sydney Crookshank: Every opportunity of consulting public opinion would be taken before any agreement was entered into in a case like this.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: My point is, before concluding any agreement with any private firm or other people, will the public have an opportunity to tender on the terms proposed by Government?

Colonel Sir Sydney Crookshank: The public will be given every opportunity of tendering. There will be no intention of restricting the form of tender or the extent of it.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: Have any Indians been hitherto trained in the Government Wireless Branch?

Colonel Sir Sydney Crookshank: A number of Indians have been trained at the Wireless School at Karachi. If my memory serves me right, I think 141 operators and wireless telegraphists have passed out quite recently.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: How many officers are there and how many of these are Indians?

Mr. President: I think if the Honourable Member wants details he had better put his questions down on the paper.

Dr. H. S. Gour: Will the Government be pleased to consult this House before entering into any final contract regarding wireless transmission?

Colonel Sir Sydney Crookshank: I will make a note of the Honourable Member's wish to do so, but I do not know that it is altogether possible to do so.

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary: Having regard to the recent lessons in connection with the State management of railways, does the Government consider that mixed enterprises of the kind to which the Honourable Member has just referred is likely to be acceptable?

Colonel Sir Sydney Crookshank: As far as I can see, every advantage lies in the combined arrangements which I have outlined because Government retains the working of wireless within the Indian Empire and there will be every advantage in using private enterprise for long distance wireless.

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas: May I take it, Sir, that the object of Government in giving the Imperial Wireless to a private company is that they think commercially it may prove successful which in the case of State management, I am afraid, will not prove so? Is that the reason?

Colonel Sir Sydney Crookshank: I think I may say that it is very largely so.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: Is the Government aware that they managed the Post Office and that it has given a profit of Rs. 1½ crores this year?

Mr. President: I think Honourable Members might consider now any further questions more carefully and put them down on the paper.

OUTSTANDING RESOLUTIONS OF THE ASSEMBLY.

Dr. H. S. Gour: May I put one question to the Honourable the Home Member, Sir? There is a very wide-spread feeling in this House that a very large number of Resolutions which have been admitted by you, Sir, will have fallen into arrears for want of dates for non-official business; and will the Honourable the Home Member see that some dates are set apart for working off a few of these Resolutions? Some of them are very important and which Honourable Members are anxious should be moved during the next Simla session.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: I can only make a note of that desire. I cannot of course undertake at present to say anything about the course of business during the Simla session. I would remark, however, that the House must not expect that we should during the Simla session be able to set apart enough days for private business to have any substantial effect on reducing the number of Resolutions outstanding. Those number, to the best of my recollection, something like 260.

INDIA'S CONTRIBUTIONS TO THE GREAT WAR.

Mr. E. Burdon: With your permission, Sir, I should like to inform the Honourable Members of the Assembly that the Government have now completed and published an account of India's contribution to the Great War. The production of this Book, it will be remembered, was undertaken by Government at the request expressed more than once by Members of the Legislature. Copies of the Book will be found in the Library of this House, and copies can also be obtained from the Superintendent, Government Printing, Calcutta.

INDIAN DELEGATION FROM KENYA TO LONDON CONFERENCE.

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary: I asked a question, Sir, of which the Honourable Mr. J. Hullah has private notice. It is as follows:

"Will the Government be pleased to say whether the Secretary of State for the Colonies has acceded to the request of Indians in Kenya that their representatives should be heard at the forthcoming conference in London regarding the affairs in that Colony?"

Mr. J. Hullah: Evidently the Secretary of State for the Colonies has acceded to that request, for we have just received a telegram from the Secretary of State for India as follows:—"I have ascertained that the Indian delegation from Kenya will be treated on the same footing as the European delegation. First class travelling allowance and subsistence allowance at the rate sanctioned for Europeans is being granted to the Indians up to the same number as the European delegation, that is 3 or 4 as the case may be, if the Indians wish to send more than 2 representatives.

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary: Would that apply to the deputation sent from India?

Mr. J. Hullah: The telegram refers only to the deputation of Indians from Kenya.

REPORT OF THE N.-W. FRONTIER COMMITTEE.

Sir P. S. Sivaswamy Aiyer: May I ask the Foreign Secretary for information as to when the Report of the North-West Frontier Committee which was presided over by him will be published, and whether an opportunity will be given to the House to discuss the questions arising out of that Report?

Mr. Denys Bray: I am afraid I am not in a position to give a definite answer to this question. The Report, as the Honourable Member is aware, is still under the consideration of the Government. The Honourable Member is aware, but possibly other Members are not aware, that the Report is exceedingly voluminous and the questions it raises are very complex, and it will necessarily take some little time for Government to conclude their consideration.

Mr. W. M. Hussanally: May I know, Sir, if the Report is confidential?

Mr. Denys Bray: I may add this also that the Report in its present form is confidential, as reference has been made in parts of it to very confidential matter. Before it would be fit for general publication, that matter would have to be expunged.

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas: Am I not correct in saying that the practice after the Reform Scheme came into existence has been to publish the Reports without Government first considering them. All the other Reports, for instance the Fiscal Commission Report and other reports, have been published without Government giving their consideration to them in the first instance.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: That is not the general practice. The House will remember that we did not publish the Racial Distinctions Report until we fully considered it and indeed until we were prepared to put forward a Bill on it.

With regard to the Frontier Committee's Report, that general consideration does not arise. Mr. Bray has already explained the reason why it is not at present possible to publish that Report, namely, it contains confidential matter which must be expunged.

Mr. W. M. Hussanally: May I enquire whether this expunging will take place with or without the consent of the Members?

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: I may mention that my minute on the Racial Distinctions Committee was not published in full with my consent.

Mr. President: These are not matters, strictly speaking, within the cognizance of the Assembly. Where the Assembly appoints a Committee, it has complete control over the publication of the Report. But if Government chooses to take the advice of Members of this Assembly or of other Members outside, the publication or non-publication of the Report is a matter entirely within the discretion of the Government.

NORTH BENGAL FLOOD.

Mr. K. Ahmed: With regard to the North Bengal flood, the Honourable Mr. Hindley,—I think in February last,—when I put a starred question, gave an undertaking in this Assembly and promised to lay on the table a statement.

Mr. President: Will the Honourable Member say if he is asking a question of which he has given notice?

Mr. K. Ahmed: No, Sir, I am not asking a question, but in regard to . . .

Mr. President: The Honourable Member is out of order. He has given no notice of the question, and it cannot be answered.

Mr. K. Ahmed: Sir, I am simply inquiring

Mr. President: The Honourable Member is not entitled to make even a simple inquiry without notice.

REDUCTION UNDER HEAD "OPIUM."

Babu Braja Sundar Das: Sir, I beg to ask a question of which I gave private notice. It reads as follows:

"1. (a) Will the Government be pleased to state the authority responsible for giving the understanding to the Indian Retrenchment Committee that a reduction of Rs. 19,80,000 on the estimate for 1922-23 will be made under the opium head in 1923-24?"

(b) Is it a fact that owing to this given understanding the Committee make no recommendation for any reduction under the head 'Opium'?"

(c) The Incheape Committee state that 'there will be thus a saving of approximately Rs. 20 lakhs in 1923-24'. Where is the saving in the present Budget?"

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: Sir, the Retrenchment Committee requested the Finance Department to supply them with advance proofs of the Demands for Grants as soon as these were ready. Copies of rough proofs were accordingly furnished and these included a rough proof of the opium demand which the Committee assumed to be final. The demand for the purchase of opium at this stage was shown as Rs. 147 lakhs and included no provision for Malwa opium. Subsequently the demand was revised and the provision increased to the present figure of Rs. 169 lakhs which includes provision for necessary payment for special cultivation in Malwa. This change was, I understand, communicated to the Committee too late to allow of alterations being carried out in their Report.

As regards the rest of the question, I think it is clear from the recommendation of the Committee that they merely assumed an automatic reduction of 20 lakhs in expenditure on the purchase of opium, which assumption, as I have already stated, was based upon incorrect data. Apart from this, they say: "In view of the importance of safeguarding this important source of revenue we recommend no further reduction". It does not appear to have been the intention of the Committee to effect any reduction in the amount which the administrative authorities considered necessary to enable them to finance their opium operation. The greater part of this opium is required for sale to foreign Governments under contract. Any reduction of the provision in the budget would, it is estimated, result in a loss of about four times that amount of revenue as there is only a very limited reserve.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE.

Mr. President: I have to acquaint the Assembly that the following Members have been elected to serve on the Public Accounts Committee:

Mr. K. C. Neogy,
Mr. K. Ahmed,
Mr. N. M. Joshi,
Mr. Ambica Prasad Sinha,
Mr. K. G. Bagde,
Mr. Syed Nabi Hadi,
Rao Bahadur P. V. Srinivasa Rao, and
Mr. Braja Sundar Das.

AMENDMENT OF STANDING ORDERS.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey (Home Member): Sir, I made a motion yesterday, which was accepted by the House, in regard to the appointment of a Committee to consider an amendment of the Standing Orders, the particular Standing Order being that relating to Petitions. The rules provide that the Committee shall be elected by the transferable vote. As the time is somewhat short, I have suggested to some of my friends opposite that we might together put up a combined list which, if it were accepted by the House, would avoid the necessity of electing the Committee. If I have your permission, Sir, I will read out the names to the House, and if no further names are forthcoming, no ballot will be required.

The names are:

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar,
Mr. N. M. Samarth,
Mr. J. P. Cotelingam,
Mr. K. G. Bagde,
Mr. Ahmed Baksh,
Colonel Nawab Muhammad Ibrahim Ali Khan, and Sir Henry Moncrieff Smith.

Mr. President: The question is that:

"Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar, Sir Henry Moncrieff Smith, Mr. N. M. Samarth, Mr. J. P. Cotelingam, Mr. K. G. Bagde, Mr. Ahmed Baksh, and Colonel Nawab Muhammad Ibrahim Ali Khan be elected to serve on the Select Committee on the Standing Order on Petitions."

The motion was adopted.

THE MUSSALMAN WAKF REGISTRATION BILL.

Maulvi Abul Kasem (Dacca Division: Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I beg to move:

"That the Report of the Select Committee on the Bill to provide for the registration of wakf estates and the proper rendering of accounts by the mutwallis of such estates in British India be taken into consideration."

[Maulvi Abul Kasem.]

Sir, in doing so, I have to offer a few words of explanation to the House. The Bill which was introduced in this House and which was referred to the Select Committee had elaborate provisions for the control and management of these waqf estates. From the opinions that we received from the Local Governments, Government officials and public bodies, it appears that there was a great difference of opinion as regards the manner and method and the constitution of these controlling authorities and some objection was taken too about the details. Therefore, Sir, the Select Committee has decided to avoid not only the details about the constitution of controlling bodies but has left control out of the Bill itself. We have in this Bill, as it is now before the House, only confined ourselves to the registration of waqf properties and to the rendering of accounts by mutwallis. As unfortunately, human memory is very short, I have to repeat what I said on a previous occasion that this registration of waqf estates was absolutely necessary in the interests of these waqf properties because it has been found, and it is admitted also, that a large number of these waqf estates has passed out of the hands of the Muhammadans, and the purchasers of these estates who have in the majority of cases bought them for good money, when they are asked to return the same, raise the plea—and it is a justifiable and reasonable plea no doubt—that they have had them for good value and without notice. So now, what is proposed is that every mutwalli will now be compelled to register in a public office the full details of the waqf property. So that, if anybody in future advances any money on the mortgage of this property, or purchases any part of that property, he will do it with his eyes open and the Muhammadan community will have every right and chance to take it away from him whenever they want to. The second matter which is dealt with in this Bill, as it now stands, is that each mutwalli has to register the waqfnamah which lays down the conditions of the waqf and will have to submit an audited account annually before any public office for the inspection of any Muhammadans interested in the waqf estate. And these are the two simple provisions about which I think I will not be far wrong when I say there is almost unanimity of opinion from our sections. Whatever objections may have been raised to the method of control were in regard to investing some Government officials with executive powers and similar measures. But these have been done away with now. The only thing is that I and the Bill want that waqf properties shall be duly registered and we may have an opportunity of knowing what is a waqf property and what is not. And secondly, that the mutwalli, who is a trustee and only a trustee, and nothing more, may be made to submit an account of his income and his expenditure, so that the Mussulman public, which is at the present moment under the Statute law entitled to sue a mutwalli if he is guilty of misappropriation, may have the necessary information and facts before him before he proceeds to take action against the mutwalli. These are the only two provisions that now remain of the old Bill, and I think the House will have no objection to consider the proposals favourably. Before I take my seat, Sir, I might inform the House that the Select Committee had the advantage, in its deliberations when it considered the provisions of the Bill, of the experience and advice of the Honourable the Law Member of the Government of India. I mention this because he is not only the Law Member of Government and the Law Adviser of Government, if I may say so, but he is a distinguished Muhammadan lawyer and he has considered the Bill very carefully and we came to a settlement that these are the only two important clauses that ought to be retained and the rest could be dropped out; that we ought to see how the Bill works and then we might take further steps, if necessary, on a future occasion. I think, Sir, I will be lacking in my duty, if at the same time I did not acknowledge my gratitude and my thanks to Mr. Wright, Secretary in the Legislative Department, for the trouble he has taken in redrafting this Bill. The Legislative Department has very hard work to do, what with Government Bills and with having to revise and redraft the amateur efforts of legislators like myself, they have had hard work to do in connection with my Bill. I have also to acknowledge my thanks to my Honourable friend Mr. Percival for the great trouble he has taken in considering the clauses of the Bill and drafting the same, and I hope that this House will receive this motion favourably.

Mr. Mahmood Schamnad Sahib Bahadur (West Coast and Nilgiris: Muhamadan): Sir, I may be permitted to say a few words about this Bill. Sir, this is a very useful piece of legislation, because all over India there are several religious and charitable endowments created by Muhammadans, the income of some of which is very large but of most very small. Still most of them are not properly managed by the mutwallis. The income is not devoted to the objects for which the endowments are created. And, if this Bill is passed, the Muhammadan public will be under a great debt of gratitude to those who have helped to pass it. And, of course, as was said by the last speaker, the Bill as it was introduced had many objectionable features; but now as it comes out of the Select Committee, it is shorn of most of these objectionable features, although there are some impracticable provisions which I hope, if some of the amendments are carried, will be removed. For instance, as I said, many of the waqf estates are very small. Even poor Muhammadans are anxious to secure salvation for their souls by dedicating their small holdings, and the income of such dedications is necessarily small. Sometimes it will be only Rs. 15 or Rs. 10 and if the accounts of these also are to be audited and auditor's fees are to be paid, from the income of such wakfs it will be very hard and the remainder left for the expenses of the object will be very little. Clause 3 provides that every statement of account shall, before it is submitted to the Court, be audited:

"(a) in the case of a waqf the gross income of which during the year in question, after deduction of the land revenue and cesses, if any, payable to the Government, exceeds two thousands rupees, by a person who is the holder of a certificate granted by the Local Government under section 144 of the Indian Companies Act, 1913, or is a member of any institution or association the members of which have been declared under that section to be entitled to act as auditors of companies throughout British India; or

"(b) in the case of any other waqf (i.e., whose income is less than Rs. 2,000), by any person authorised in this behalf by general or special order of the said Court."

The Bill provides later on that for such auditing of accounts of income of small estates also fees has to be paid; if fees has to be paid for such auditing, then of course the income left will be very small. Besides that, there is a penalty clause also for not getting the accounts audited. I think there is an amendment in regard to that.

Mr. President: Order, order. I must ask the Honourable gentleman to reserve his remarks on these subjects till we come to the particular clauses on which they arise.

Mr. Mahmood Schamnad Sahib Bahadur: I hope that the House will pass the necessary amendments.

Mr. K. Ahmed (Rajshahi Division: Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I am entirely in the hands of this Assembly in moving my motion that the Bill be re-circulated for the purpose of obtaining further opinion thereon. After I gave notice of this amendment Sir, I have been approached by many Members of this Assembly, including the mover of the Bill, and I am exactly in the position which I have stated. I find, Sir, there are good points in support of it, because it is better that the consensus of opinion from the Provinces should be invited further on the Bill. As I have said, I do not like to oppose the Bill in any way. Patience is a great virtue. But if the requirement of this Bill is so urgently welcome—my friend might say “the sooner the better; make hay when the Sun shines; a bird in the hand is worth two in the bush.” Again my friend may not be returned by his constituency to this Assembly again, because there will be a lot of difficulties and obstruction put up in the way of the Bill by inviting opinion from the Provinces, and as you know, Sir, to borrow from my Honourable friend Dr. Gour, the ipsissima verba of the speech that he had made this morning

Mr. W. M. Hussanally (Sind: Muhammadan Rural): May I rise to a point of order, Sir? I am afraid the Honourable gentleman is blowing hot and cold at the same time. I am not aware whether he is speaking in favour of the Bill or whether he is going to speak in favour of the amendment which he has put down on the paper. I think he ought to make up his mind whether to move the motion or not.

Mr. President: I was just going to insist on it by asking him myself. Does the Honourable Member move the motion for re-circulation or not?

Mr. K. Ahmed: The result will come out, Sir. If it is the opinion of the Honourable Members of this House

Mr. President: The Honourable Member must give me a direct answer. We have got a long programme for legislation before us to-day and I want to know whether he wishes the Bill to be re-circulated. If he does, he had better move the motion.

Mr. K. Ahmed: If the Government has no objection that the Bill should be re-circulated and further opinion invited. On that point, as I have said, patience is a great virtue. The Government of India tries its utmost to give the best consideration in all matters no doubt. I was also one of the Members in the Select Committee on this Bill and also was engaged for a couple of days in giving my best consideration to it. There is a minute of dissent by my Honourable friend Khan Sahib Abdul Quadir. There are a number of amendments on the agenda. There are 10 amendments on the paper. From the gist of these amendments it appears that it is not probably advisable to go on with the Bill at present, and I, Sir, should certainly think that it is advisable in the circumstances

Mr. President: I understand the Honourable Member is advancing arguments in favour of re-circulation. I ask him now to move the motion.

Mr. K. Ahmed: I am in the hands of the Government. I am in favour of circulation if they accept it; if they do not, then I withdraw it.

Mr. President: It is not for the Government to accept or to refuse. The opinion of the Government may assist the Honourable Member, but the decision rests with the House.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey (Home Member): Sir, I have been asked for the opinion of Government on this question and I am quite prepared to give it. It will be remembered that when the Bill originally came before us, it involved the organisation of managing committees by Government and a very considerable amount of control to be directed by Government, and I may say at once that Government was opposed to any such proposal. That feature of the Bill has however now been excluded. The only new burden which the Bill now places upon Government is the receipt of accounts. For the rest, it will merely be for the Civil Court to take action on the lines of the Act of 1920 on the motion of persons interested in these wakfs. Therefore, from the point of view of Government, the Bill remains one entirely for the community. If they desire to see this system of registration applied to their accounts and are willing that these religious institutions should be compelled to submit those accounts to audit, we on our part are willing to stand aside and allow them to get their case through the Assembly without interference on our part. At the same time, I do not think, Sir, I should be doing my duty to the House if I do not state to it a certain fact which has just come to my knowledge. The representatives of one particular community in Bombay approached me as late as a few days ago with the complaint that the circumstances relating to the religious endowments in that community would not permit of the application of the Bill to them. I had to express regret that we had no previous notice of any such objection nor had it come before the Select Committee. But I wired that day to the Bombay Government asking them to give us its advice as to the attitude we should take on this particular subject as arising from the objections—if they were real objections—of that community. I have just received a wire in which the Local Government says: “This Government is informed that Muhammadan opinion generally is adverse to the whole Bill” and suggests the publication of the Select Committee’s report before proceeding further and have promised us a fuller report on the subject. I could not, consistent with my duties to my fellow-Members on the Select Committee and to the Bombay Government have refrained from laying this fact before the House. It is possible that the Bombay Government, in wiring to us, had in view only the original Bill and not the Bill with the very much restricted scope which is now before the Assembly. But if you will permit me, though perhaps it may not be strictly cognate to this point, I would go one step further. My remarks grow out of the fact which I have just mentioned that we have had placed before us very strong objections from one section of the community. It is our intention subsequently to propose an amending clause whereby Local Governments will be able to exclude religious endowments of any one section of the Muhammadan community. I state that fact now because it might clear discussion subsequently. I feel myself strongly that it is a wise precaution, for cases might arise which are not now before us and which have not been represented to us. We might be at considerable inconvenience if we were obliged at the request of Local Government to put forward an amending Bill.

Mr. K. Ahmed: As I say

Mr. President: I cannot allow the Honourable Member to make a second speech. Is the Honourable Member going to move his motion?

Mr. K. Ahmed: I have not finished my speech

Mr. President: If the Honourable Member is going to move his motion he can move it. I am not going to allow him to make a second speech.

Mr. K. Ahmed: I have been supported by the telegram sent by the Government of Bombay to the Honourable the Home Member. That is in my favour that the Bill should be re-circulated. Furthermore, there is one difficulty that arises as will appear from the preamble of the Bill, that is, that the mutwallis should render an account. To render an account means preparing it and preparing it means some money is necessary, and I may tell you, Sir, that the majority of the Muhammadan Members who are here to-day—I have been told directly by some of them—think that to spend the money that will be required to prepare an account is certainly against the wishes of the donor, but I am ashamed myself because I was convinced by the Honourable the Home Member when we were sitting in the Committee room No. A a few days ago that this was a necessary cost,—I did agree with my Honourable friend that this was a necessary cost just to keep an account, to buy paper and stationery

Mr. President: The Honourable Member cannot go into the merits of the question just now. He must move the motion for re-circulation.

Mr. K. Ahmed: Sir,

Mr. President: Order, order. The Honourable Member, if he is moving his motion, must address his argument to prove that there has not been sufficient consideration of the measure and that therefore it is desirable to elicit further opinion thereon. I hope he will confine his remarks to that point but I am prepared to stretch the point in his favour and to regard the Honourable the Home Member's speech merely as an interruption.

Mr. K. Ahmed: I move my amendment, Sir:

"That the Bill be re-circulated for the purpose of obtaining further opinion thereon."

Mr. President: The original question was:

"That the Report of the Select Committee on the Bill to provide for the registration of waqf estates and the proper rendering of accounts by the mutwallis of such estates in British India be taken into consideration."

Since which an amendment has been moved:

"That the Bill be re-circulated for the purpose of obtaining further opinion thereon."

Khan Bahadur Maulvi Amjad Ali (Assam: Muhammadan): Sir, I never dreamt that my friend Mr. Kabeeruddin Ahmed would ever move his amendment. He knows full well that it is a notorious fact that all mutwallis have been dealing with the wakf estates with an amount of dishonesty which up till now has not been detected by any Court of justice.

Mr. President: Order, order. Is the Honourable Member addressing himself to the motion for re-circulation? He has just referred to facts which he calls notorious. If they were notorious it is obvious that they do not need to be elicited by re-circulation.

Khan Bahadur Maulvi Amjad Ali: I am addressing my speech so far as to oppose the amendment of my Honourable friend. This Bill as originally drafted was not acceptable to the country because it was a hard measure as put by my Honourable friend Maulvi Abul Kasem, but after the opinions of the Local Governments were received and a Select Committee was constituted, the Select Committee, thanks to them, have made the Bill acceptable to the country by removing all objectionable clauses. Sir, there is nothing in the opinion of the Select Committee so far as this Bill is concerned, which is objectionable, and accordingly the Select Committee has recommended the passage of the Bill. Now, if this Bill goes again to the country for further opinion, the result will be that the Honourable Member who has moved this Bill may not be here any more and perhaps this Bill may not come before the House in the next Simla session, so that the whole object is going to be frustrated by this amendment which will do no good to the community, rather it will do immense harm to the Muhammadan community. Therefore I oppose this amendment.

Mr. W. M. Hussanally: I rise also to oppose the amendment that has just been proposed by my Honourable friend Mr. Kabiruddin Ahmed. The Bill as it has emerged from the Select Committee is a perfectly harmless measure so far as the mutwallis and wakfs are concerned. There can be absolutely no objection to the mutwalli being called upon to register his wakfnamah and file his accounts of income and expenditure from time to time. So far as those two points are concerned, there is an absolute certainty that the Local Governments and the public could have no objection, and my Honourable friend Mr. Kabiruddin Ahmed has advanced no reasons whatever in support of the amendment he has proposed. The measure that is now before us is of a very urgent character from the fact that several large wakfs have been misappropriated and the matter requires speedy remedy. If the Bill is re-circulated, it will take time and the very object that we have in view will be frustrated. My Honourable friend Maulvi Abul Kasem said that the Bill as it is now presented to the House has received the full support of the Honourable the Law Member. That being the case, I think there is absolutely no reason for re-circulating the Bill for further opinion. In regard to the opinion of the Government of Bombay which has been put before us by the Honourable the Home Member, so far as we are concerned I think there will be no objection on our part to give power to the Local Governments to exclude any particular sect of the community or any particular limits within their territory, and so far as we are concerned we can leave that matter safely in the hands of Local Governments. If any particular sect of the community do not wish that this Act should apply to them, it will be open to them to approach the Local Government concerned which for good reasons may exclude them from the operation of the Bill. To that I will have no objection, but I certainly have a very strong objection to the Bill being re-circulated on the grounds that I have just mentioned. I therefore strongly oppose it.

Maulvi Abul Kasem: Before the House comes to a decision on the amendment of my Honourable friend I beg to inform the House that the original Bill contained amongst others these two conditions about registration and the rendering of accounts. They were circulated and it took just two years for the Government to ascertain opinion and in this volume of papers that have been supplied to Honourable Members they will find an expression of opinion on these two provisions as well as on others. But before I sit down I would remind my redoubtable friend Mr. Kabir-ud-Din Ahmed of the condition of the mosque in Maldah which has gone into waste and for which Lord Curzon and the Government of India offered Rs. 50,000 for repair but the mutwalli was not prepared to add Rs. 5,000 to it. (A Voice: "Rs. 60,000.") Government was prepared to pay Rs. 60,000. In this House questions are put about the ruin of mosques, their repairs and the use of the compound of mosque buildings by Government or by non-Mussalmans. There is a real grievance about this but I must say that if the Mussalmans want the Government to protect their religious institutions and their mosques, they ought to do everything that lies in their power to protect them from misappropriation and misuse by the so-called trustees. It has been said that there will be expense which the wakf donor never contemplated. I ask, did the donor ever contemplate that these trust properties or their income should be misappropriated by the mutwallis for their own use, for their own pleasures and for their own mischief. I would remind my friend Mr. Kabeer-ud-Din Ahmed of another mosque which lies near his door between the Malda Railway station and the English bazaar, a few yards from that station where the passengers are eaten up by tigers.

Mr. K. Ahmed: If I understand the Honourable Member

Mr. President: I allowed the Honourable Member to make a speech and a half but I will not allow him to make a second speech.

Mr. K. Ahmed: I was going to say, Sir

Mr. President: Is the Honourable Member going to withdraw his amendment or not?

Mr. K. Ahmed: Otherwise there was no necessity for my standing.

Mr. President: The Honourable Member can withdraw but cannot make a speech in doing so.

Mr. K. Ahmed: Since reference has been made and

Mr. President: The question is that the Bill be circulated for obtaining further opinion thereon.

The motion was negatived.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That the Report of the Select Committee on the Bill to provide for the registration of wakf estates and the proper rendering of accounts by the mutwallis of such estates in British India be taken into consideration."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. President: We will postpone the first clause (Short title, extent and commencement) till the end.

Khan Bahadur Maulvi Amjad Ali (Assam: Muhammadan): Before I move my amendment I would invite my Honourable friends of this House to very kindly listen to my submissions. With regard to the merits of the amendments I shall move one after another in due course. The amendment that stands in my name runs as follows:

"In clause 2(c) after the words 'appointed by a Mutwalli' the words 'or by the Court' be inserted."

I shall be very brief in making my submission. The word 'mutwalli' has been defined as follows:

"Any person appointed either verbally or under any deed or instrument by which a wakf has been created, to be the mutwalli of a wakf and includes a naib mutwalli or other person appointed by a mutwalli to perform the duties of a mutwalli and, save as otherwise provided in this Act, any person who is for the time being administering any wakf property."

Now, my submission is that in line 6 after the words 'appointed by a mutwalli' the words 'or by the Court' shall be inserted. Disputes like this, namely, that if the donor makes no provision in the deed as to who will be mutwalli after the death of the existing mutwalli, may arise among the beneficiaries. For instance, I am a donor, and also a mutwalli. Under Muhammadan law, I fail to nominate my successor at my death bed, because suddenly I become unconscious and die. There is also no provision in the deed itself as to how this vacancy is to be filled up. Is that vacancy to remain vacant or to be filled up? Who is to fill it up? There is no provision in the deed itself. Secondly, you fail to nominate your successor. At this juncture the only remedy is to approach the Kazi. That is the Muhammadan law. It may be asked now, who is the Kazi? The District Judge has been held by the Honourable High Court of Calcutta to be the Kazi. I am myself a mutwalli of a certain wakf property and I had to approach the District Judge to appoint me a mutwalli because the last mutwalli could not nominate his successor. Nor was there any provision as to who would succeed. The difficulty arose and I had to approach the District Judge with a petition and I was appointed by him. In order to cover those cases this amendment is necessary. Now, Sir, it may be contended at least by one Member of this House that this argument may be met by the last sentence "any person who is for the time being administering any wakf property." I do not think this portion will meet my argument. Any person administering a property means any person who is already a mutwalli and administering. It is a present progressive tense. For instance, if the post of mutwalli falls vacant and there is no occupant of that post, then who is administering? There is nobody administering. So, I submit to this Honourable House that my amendment may be accepted as it is an innocent one and will at the same time prevent certain disputes to which reference has already been made by me. I think that my amendment will commend itself to the House. With these words I move my amendment.

Maulvi Abul Kasem: Sir, to save the time of the House I rise to say that I have no objection to accepting this amendment if there is no technical difficulty of a drafting nature, because I admit that a mutwalli may include a person appointed by a Court as mutwalli. Of course, not being a lawyer I cannot go into the details, but I am quite prepared to accept the amendment.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey (Home Member): Sir, we have considered this point on the drafting side and find the amendment not very appropriate as it stands. It would assume that a person was appointed by the court to perform the duties of mutwalli. Now, Sir, if I am correct the case which would arise is that under section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code the Court may have appointed a trustee. It is as such trustee that he would be performing the duties of mutwalli; and on the whole we think that the purpose of the Honourable Member would be best attained by inserting the words a little further up in the sub-clause which would then run:

" 'Mutwalli' means any person appointed either verbally or under any deed or instrument by which a waqf has been created, or by a court,"

The reason for using that particular form of words (a Court instead of the Court) is that, under section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code it would not necessarily be the District Court which had appointed a trustee. If therefore the Honourable Member still feeling that the existing concluding words of the sub-clause are not a sufficient safeguard for him, I would suggest that after the word "created" be inserted the words "or by a court."

Khan Bahadur Maulvi Amjad Ali: I have no objection, Sir.

The amendment was, by leave of the Assembly, withdrawn.

Mr. President: Further amendment moved:

"That in sub-clause (c) of clause 2, line 4, after the word 'created' the words 'or by a court' be inserted."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Mahmood Schamnad Sahib Bahadur: Sir, I move:

"That to clause 2(e) the following be added:

'and includes the mosques and the other Moslem institutions referred to in section 4 of the Religious Endowments Act, 1863, as not falling within the control of the committee appointed under the provisions of the Act.'"

Sir, before 1863 all charitable and religious institutions were managed and supervised by Government through mutwallis. After that year the Government divested itself of the burden and under the Religious Endowments Act the institutions were divided into two classes, one falling under section 3, another falling under section 4. The institutions whose mutwallis were appointed by or whose appointment were subject to the control of the Government were those falling under section 3; and all the institutions whose mutwallis were only under the supervision of Government fall under section 4. Now, only the institutions falling under section 3 were placed under the control of the committee appointed under the Act; and the latter kind of institutions, that is, those under section 4, are not under the control of any committee or any other authority; they are not liable to render any account to anybody, and so large properties belonging to such mosques are misappropriated and the incomes are not properly applied to the objects for which they were intended. I therefore want that those institutions which fall under section 4 of the Act may also be included in this Bill, that is to say, section 2, sub-section (e) may be read with the addition which I have proposed. If that is done there will be no objection; it will do a lot of good in the management of such institutions and help the cause of charitable foundations which otherwise fall into disuse. Many such institutions in my own district have been ruined; the properties have been misappropriated and sometimes alienated while the buildings are crumbling to ruin. So I hope my amendment will be accepted.

The Honourable Dr. Mian Sir Muhammad Shafi (Law Member): Sir, I venture to submit to the House that the amendment moved by my Honourable friend is entirely unnecessary. From the definition of "wakf" as embodied in this particular sub-clause it will be clear to Honourable Members that wakf means the permanent dedication by a person professing the Mussulman faith of any property for any purpose recognized by the Mussulman law as religious, pious or charitable, but does not include a certain kind of wakf mentioned in the concluding words of the sub-clause ordinarily known as "wakf-alal-aulad" or family endowment. It will thus be clear that every kind of wakf recognized by Muhammadan law, whether of a religious or charitable or any other character, falls within the purview of this Act in so far as registration and rendering of accounts is concerned. It follows therefore that wakfs which are outside the particular section of the Act of 1863, to which my Honourable friend has referred, do fall, by reason of this definition, within the purview of this Act. Where then is the necessity of amending the definition in the manner in which my Honourable friend proposes? Such an amendment cannot but create confusion. The definition as embodied in the Bill as it has emerged from the Select Committee, I submit, is all-embracing, and in consequence the amendment put forward by my Honourable friend is absolutely unnecessary.

Mr. President: The question is that that amendment be made.

The motion was negatived.

Mr. President: The question is that clause 2, as amended, stand part of the Bill.

Mr. S. C. Shahani (Sind Jagirdars and Zamindars: Landholders): Before you put clause 2, Sir, to the vote, I request that I may be permitted to suggest that the definitions may be made applicable to all religious and charitable endowments. It appears to me that this Bill can be easily made applicable to all religious and charitable endowments. It will be a very useful Bill, and I, therefore, submit that this extension may be sanctioned by the House.

Mr. President: That is entirely outside the scope of the present Bill. The Honourable Member proposes to bring under this Bill religious and charitable endowments other than those of the Mussalman community, and therefore, it is entirely outside the scope of the measure.

Clause 2, as amended, was added to the Bill.

Mr. President: Clause 3.

Mr. Mahmood Schamnad Sahib Bahadur: Sir, I beg to move:

"That in clause 3 (1) (a) after the word 'property' the words 'and also of the property purchased from the income of the Waqf property' be inserted and the necessary consequential changes be made."

The income of many institutions which have got large estates are not fully utilised for the benefit of the institutions; from the surplus income other properties are purchased and they are enjoyed as the property of the mutwalli. If this Bill is not made applicable to those properties, their accounts will not be rendered. Therefore, I submit that those properties which are purchased from the income of the Wakf properties should also be included.

The Honourable Dr. Mian Sir Muhammad Shafi: I venture to submit to the House again that this amendment too is entirely unnecessary. It is obvious that the property in the hands of a mutwalli being Wakf property, its income is also Wakf and property purchased from the income of this property must necessarily be treated in law as Wakf property. The amendment, therefore, is entirely unnecessary.

Maulvi Abul Kasem: I quite appreciate, Sir, the remark which has just fallen from the Honourable the Law Member that property itself ought to include the property purchased from the income of the Wakf property, but I would just tell him, Sir, that in many cases the properties purchased from the income of these Wakf properties are not admitted to have been purchased from that, unless we can prove it. In that case to make it more clear, if we could add this definition . . . (Voices: "No, no.") Of course I leave it to the House.

The Honourable Dr. Mian Sir Muhammad Shafi: That, I submit, is a pure question of fact in each case. There will be an issue in each case whether that property has been purchased out of the income of Wakf property.

(Mr. Mahmood Schamnad Sahib Bahadur then got up.)

Mr. President: Does the Honourable Member want to withdraw his amendment?

Mr. Mahmood Schamnad Sahib Bahadur: No.

Mr. President: I will then put the amendment.

The amendment was negatived.

Clauses 3, 4 and 5 were added to the Bill.

Mr. President: The question is that clause 6 stand part of the Bill.

Maulvi Abul Kasem: There is an amendment by Maulvi Abdul Quadir, Sir.

Khan Sahib Maulvi Abdul Quadir: I beg to move, Sir:

"That in clause 6, for the words 'Every statement of accounts shall, before it is furnished to the court under section 5, be audited' substitute the following: 'Any person may, after a statement of accounts has been furnished to the court under section 5, apply to the court that such statement of accounts be audited and on such application the court shall direct that it be audited'."

Sir, I am against compulsory pre-auditing of the accounts to be submitted by the mutwallis. They can be so audited after the public interested in the proper management of the various Wakf estates are satisfied that the accounts have been fudged up and that they should get them audited for the purpose of finding out as to how and where the money has been spent; otherwise, Sir, if the House makes yearly audit incumbent on the mutwallis, there would be diversion of a considerable portion of the revenue from the charitable purposes for which the donors originally intended. This would be a regular tax on all Wakf property every year. It is quite undesirable to levy such a tax unnecessarily for all time to come. I therefore oppose the levying of such a tax and move my amendment. I submit, Sir, that if this amendment is accepted, it would have the effect of doing away with the yearly audit of the statement of accounts to be submitted by the mutwallis. Otherwise they will have to submit yearly accounts and engage the services of a trained auditor, and that would be an unnecessary charge on all waqf properties, which is not desirable. It would be resented and the use of the revenues of the waqf would be diverted. So I oppose this and submit this amendment which I hope will be accepted.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: As we have only just seen this amendment and as, to a certain extent, we shall be answerable for the drafting, might I in the interests of the House ask the Mover of the amendment if it exactly expresses his own intention? His proposal, if we take the wording of the amendment, is that any person, after a statement of accounts has been filed, may apply that it should be audited. Does he mean that any person, for instance myself who am not a Muhammadan, may force the Mutwalli to have his accounts audited? Or was it his intention to repeat in effect the provision which we have in the Act of 1920 which allows an interested person to apply?

Khan Sahib Maulvi Abdul Quadir: I mean an interested person.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: If the intention is an interested person, the wording must follow that intention.

Mr. President: Does the Honourable Member desire the insertion of the word "interested" before "person"? If so, it ought to be moved as an amendment.

Khan Sahib Maulvi Abdul Quadir: Yes.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: We can supply the Honourable Member with the wording which it will be necessary to adopt. The wording which I assume would be adopted, subject to the draftsman, is that of section 3 of Act XIV of 1920.

Mr. President: Perhaps we may postpone consideration for a moment unless the form of words is actually ready for submission to the House in the form of an amendment.

Khan Bahadur Saiyid Muhammad Ismail (Patna and Chota Nagpur cum Orissa: Muhammadan): Sir, I submit that every Muhammadan is not in sympathy with the amendment moved by Maulvi Abdul Quadir, and I would suggest that the amendment be drafted for the consideration of the House and it would then be possible to the House to consider it on its merits.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: I would suggest that the House might discuss the matter on the substance, understanding that the word "interested" will subsequently, if the substance is approved, be substituted by a more correct form of wording.

Lala Girdharilal Agarwala (Agra Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I beg to oppose the amendment moved by my learned friend on the ground that it would turn the proposed legislation into a sort of Homeopathic pill of legislation. I submit, either have a law or have no law. There is no use having a middle course. If my Honourable and learned friends desire that there should be only a nominal registration, I personally have no objection, but the only reason I oppose this amendment is to draw the attention of the Honourable Members of the Assembly to the fact that, by accepting that amendment, the proposed law will lose all its force. Secondly, I may inform Honourable Members that I have a mind to bring forward subsequently, if possible, a Bill which might apply to Hindus, and if this principle is adopted, the same principle will have to be accepted for the Hindus, and I am not prepared for that. On these grounds, Sir, with the greatest respect for Muhammadan sentiments, I strongly oppose this amendment.

Mr. W. M. Hussanally: Sir, I rise to do the same and for exactly the same reasons as those advanced by my friend Lala Girdharilal Agarwala. The matter was very fully considered in the Select Committee and we came to this unanimous conclusion. No reason has been shown by my friend Maulvi Abdul Quadir for upsetting the decision we arrived at in Select Committee, and as this Bill is likely to be applied to all communities, in the near future I think we ought to come to an understanding which will be applicable to every kind of charitable endowment.

Khan Bahadur Sayid Muhammad Ismail. Sir, I rise to oppose the amendment moved by Maulvi Abdul Quadir. As a Muhammadan interested myself in the management of a religious waqf and also of a charitable waqf property I offer my support most unhesitatingly to clause 6 of the Bill as drafted by the Select Committee. After mature consideration if the House is really anxious that Muhammadan property should be protected from mismanagement and misappropriation of its income from abuses of dishonest Mutwallis, then the only safeguards which have been proposed are embodied in the provisions of the Bill. If any amendment of clause 6 as is suggested is made, the Bill will be of absolutely no effect. Then what will remain will be the simple registration of the waqf property with a copy of the waqfnamah filed in the Registration office. Without compulsory provision for the auditing of the accounts there can be no check over the accounts submitted by the Mutwallis. The audit of accounts is absolutely necessary. I therefore very strongly oppose this amendment and support the provision of clause 6 of the Bill as it stands.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: I only wish to speak for the assistance of Members of this House in the matter. I recognise that the question whether these trusts should be audited or not is largely one for the community, but I should like to point out to Members of this House that there already exists in our Legislature a provision which allows an interested person to apply for audit. That is to say section 3 of Act XIV of 1920, the words of which run that an interested person may obtain an order embodying a direction that the accounts of the trust shall be examined and audited. We already have this provision for audit in our law, so that, if the Honourable Member's intention, as embodied in his revised amendment, is carried out, it will be merely repeating an existing section of the Act of 1920.

Khan Sahib Maulvi Abdul Quadir: I submit, Sir, that it is not my intention that they should not be audited. I take objection to the fact that they should be always audited before they are submitted to the Court in which they are registered. If the accounts are to be submitted after they are audited, that would entail a charge, which, I submit, is unnecessary. This is not necessary in all cases, because we know there are only certain estates in which the revenues are misappropriated. Now, the public or any Muhammadan who is interested in waqfs knows in what estates the revenues are misappropriated, so, after the statements are submitted to the Court in which the estates are registered, he can apply . . .

Mr. President: Order, order. I allowed the Honourable Member to speak under a misapprehension. I thought the Honourable the Home Member had moved an amendment to his amendment. I must now call upon Maulvi Abul Kasem.

Maulvi Abul Kasem: Personally speaking, I have no objection to accepting this amendment, because it will practically mean that, if anybody wants to get the accounts audited, he will have to take action either under this Act or the Act of 1920. I might say that the main objection of my friend Maulvi Abdul Quadir is that there will be a recurring expenditure and a charge on the waqf property. May I submit to him and to the House that the auditing of accounts is a necessary charge on all properties. If you want to save money by avoiding audit, then I think the Government of India can save a large amount of public money by giving up their Audit Department; but that is not practicable. The object of making the mutwalli submit an audited account of income and expenditure was to ensure that the mutwalli will always take care not to submit what has been called in this House "faked" accounts of his income and expenditure, and the dread of having to face an auditor will make him keep his accounts at least in a more decent form than he would otherwise do. Unless there is this provision for the auditing of accounts, I think a mutwalli will be as free to misappropriate and misutilize trust funds as he has been in the past. Of course this expenditure need not be incurred by a small estate. Here the discretion is left to the court to certify anybody to audit the accounts and he can give this certificate to a muharror or a pleader who is specified. I think my friend Maulvi Abdul Quadir will be well advised to withdraw his amendment, because that will be the only possible check that this law will bring to bear upon the conduct of the mutwalli and upon his expenditure of public trusts. I may tell my friend and the House that, according to Muhammadan law, which has been much referred to, a waqf is nobody's property, it is public property and it should, I think, be willing and agreeable to pay the cost of audit.

The amendment was negatived.

Clause 6 was added to the Bill.

Khan Bahadur Maulvi Amjad Ali: Sir, in moving this amendment I would like to inform the House that the Bill as originally drafted contained a provision to enable anyone interested in a Waqf to file a suit against a Mutwalli for misbehaviour; but unfortunately the Select Committee has not thought fit to retain this clause to which I refer—No. 20 of the original Bill. That clause as it was drafted ran as follows: as Honourable Members of this House may not have the original Bill with them, I will read it out:

"20. Notwithstanding anything contained in any law for the time being in force, any person interested in any Waqf or the trusts relating thereto may, without joining as plaintiff any of the other persons interested therein, sue before the Civil Court, the Mutwalli of such Waqf or the members of Central Committee or any District Committee appointed under this Act for any misfeasance, breach of trust or neglect of duty committed by such Mutwalli, member of Committee, or local Agent in respect of the Waqf or the trusts vested in or confided to them respectively, and may in such suit pray that the plaintiff himself be appointed Mutwalli or that the Court may appoint any other person to be the Mutwalli and the Civil Court may—

(a) direct the specific performance of any act by the Mutwalli, member of Committee or local Agent,

[Khan Bahadur Maulvi Amjad Ali.]

- (b) decree, damages, and costs against such Mutwalli, member of Committee or local Agent, and
- (c) direct the removal of such Mutwalli, member of Committee or local Agent, either on grounds set forth in the plaint or on any other grounds that to the Court may appear just and proper."

The Honourable House is aware that the object which actuated my Honourable friend Maulvi Abul Kasem to take the trouble of presenting this Bill to this House was to bring the Mutwalli to his knees in case of misdeed, misfeasance, malfeasance, malversation or other neglect of duty in respect of any Waqf. Mutwallis often consider themselves the owners of the Waqf. They do not consider that they are simply the agents of the donors. The Mutwallis thus mismanage the property in any way they think fit. Now it is to put a check on these things that this legal measure has been devised. But I find to my greatest pain and disappointment that even if this Bill is passed in its present form, the Mutwalli's misbehaviour will remain where it is now. The only thing this Bill has sought to enforce is to compel the Mutwalli to submit to court first of all a deed of waqf, a schedule of the Waqf property, an account of income showing receipts, etc. For instance, the mutwalli submits his accounts, and the account submitted by him shows that he has been spending the income of the property in his own way on his own account. How can you punish him or bring him before a court for punishment for his misbehaviour? The Bill under consideration makes no provisions for that. What is the advantage gained if this Bill is passed? For instance, I am a mutwalli; I am asked to submit accounts; I submit accounts; very well; I say that I have appropriated Rs. 2,000 to my own account. I am bound to submit a true statement of account and I do so, and that is all; I have submitted a true account saying that I have spent this amount. Is there any provision of law under the Bill to punish that conduct? Is there any control in this Bill? Why are you going then to pass this Bill? For no earthly reason; only for this purpose, to compel me to submit to the court of the District Judge a copy of my account. I have been dealing with this for the last 20 years. In my district I make bold to say that, ever since I have joined the Bar, I have been dealing with hundreds of cases of this character; sometimes I have opposed the appointment of a mutwalli, sometimes I have supported it; at last my turn came and I was appointed. However this law under debate is altogether defective. I am not prepared to agree to all the provisions. You are always saying that you are going to save the waqf property of a pious Mussalman who gave his property for the purpose of general charity and you are requested by this Bill, by the author of this Bill, to accept it simply for the purpose of saving the property from the hands of dishonest mutwallis. That is the object. Now, Sir, it struck the author of this Bill before, to put in this clause, but unfortunately I find that when the matter came before the Select Committee it was thrown out. Why? I do not understand the reason why it was thrown out; there were so many Mussalman members of the Select Committee, including the author himself; why did they agree to this proposal that this clause should be deleted from the Bill and to make the proposed Bill altogether infructuous? I submit, therefore, that such a provision should be made in this Bill.

Now, Sir, before I sit down after moving my amendment I would seek your permission to say one word for the edification of the Honourable House.

This Bill seeks to achieve something. By that something I mean that under the Muhammadan law, as Honourable Members probably know, there are three classes of waqf, viz., purely public, quasi-public and purely private. These are the three classes of waqfs recognised by the Muhammadan jurists. So far as the purely private waqf or quasi-public waqf is concerned, this Bill has nothing to do with it. It is excluded from the operation of this Bill. It only deals, as Honourable Members are aware, with public waqf, or in other words, with waqfs in which the donor has dedicated all his income for the use of the public, and has not kept even a single pice for the use of his descendants or for himself. Now, so far as the other two waqfs are concerned, when the donor gives a certain amount to his descendants and certain amount to charitable purposes, it is a quasi-waqf, and when he gives the entire benefit to his descendants, it is a purely private waqf. That waqf was validated by the Act of 1913 when the Waqf Validating Act was passed. Now, Honourable Members are concerned only with the purely public Waqf. Before the passing of the Civil Procedure Code of 1908, I find that the District Judge—I have already said that the District Judge is a Kazi under the Mahomedan law—was dealing with disputes arising out of Waqf properties as a Kazi, but by a recent provision of the law I find that the powers of the District Judge as Kazi have been curtailed with regard to the procedure to be followed in any suit or in any application in respect of Waqf property in which purely public interests are concerned. When there is a litigation, when there is an application or a suit before the District Judge in regard to a dispute arising out of a public waqf, I find the powers of the District Judge with regard to procedure have been curtailed by section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code. I will read the section with your permission, Sir:

"In the case of any alleged breach of any express or constructive trust created for public purposes of a charitable or religious nature, or where the direction of the Court is deemed necessary for the administration of any such trust, the Advocate General or two or more persons having an interest in the trust and having obtained the consent in writing of the Advocate General, may institute a suit, whether contentious or not, in the principal Civil Court of original jurisdiction or in any other Court empowered in that behalf by the Local Government within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the whole or any part of the subject matter of the trust is situate to obtain a decree, removing any trustee—in this case Mutwalli—

- (a) removing any trustee;
- (b) appointing a new trustee;
- (c) vesting any property in a trustee;
- (d) directing accounts and inquiries;
- (e) declaring what proportion of the trust-property or of the interest therein shall be allocated to any particular object of the trust;
- (f) authorising the whole or any part of the trust-property to be let, sold, mortgaged or exchanged;
- (g) settling a scheme; or
- (h) granting such further or other relief as the nature of the case may require.

(2) Save as provided by the Religious Endowments Act, 1863, no suit claiming any of the reliefs specified in sub-section (1) shall be instituted in respect of any such trust as is therein referred to except in conformity with the provisions of that sub-section."

This being the law, this being the stringent law, would you think for a moment that, where there is a waqf of the nature of a purely public character, anyone of the Muslim public will think it necessary on his part to institute a suit of this nature to the District Court? How is he interested? You know, in the first place, that in a public trust nobody is interested individually. In a public trust everyone is interested only as one of the Members of the public. Everybody's business is nobody's business. So, in this case would you think that in the case of a public waqf, as contemplated by this Bill, if the mutwalli is found guilty of breach of trust or any other neglect of duty, any one Mussalman in the whole of India would come forward of his own free will to pay a large sum of money from his own pocket! Why should he? He is not personally interested in the property; he will not gain anything thereby. It is in the interest of the public. The usufruct will go to the public and to no particular individual. So, not a single Muhammadan from any part of India will come forward with a suit like this because of the fact that he is not individually interested, he will not pay a single farthing out of his own pocket. People are not so liberal. This is one ground, Sir, why, when a mutwalli of a public trust is found guilty of misconduct, his action is not sought to be brought before the Court. This has been my experience for the last 20 years. This is one ground.

Let me point out another ground why this provision of law, that section 92, is an insuperable bar in the way of bringing a suit against a mutwalli in the Court. The second ground is that he has to go to the Collector or if it is a Presidency town, then he has to go to the Advocate General to obtain his sanction. This is a condition precedent to the filing of the suit, under section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code,—before instituting a suit, he must go to the Advocate General or to the Collector for permission to institute a suit. Would anyone think that any human being is so generous as to spend large sums of money, to go to the Advocate General to institute a suit simply to punish the dishonest mutwalli. I do think there is none. It might be contended that instead of going to the Advocate-General, one can go to the Collector for permission. Yes, one can go to the Collector for permission. But who will go to the Collector for permission? There also the same question arises, i.e., spending money. If in seeking permission a man has got to spend money, he may not go to Court at all. So, I think this provision of law stands in the way of bringing dishonest Mutwallis before the Court of the District Judge for punishment for his misbehaviour. This law is very stringent one whereas the Muhammadan law which is in force in this country is not so stringent. In the case of quasi-public waqfs, in the private waqfs, the parties interested and aggrieved by the conduct of the Mutwalli run to the Court of the District Judge and file petitions against him and the District Judge entertains their petitions and adjudicates upon them. There it is only a question of petition. This law under consideration does not make any provision of that kind. This Bill makes the aggrieved party take protection under section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code, which is impracticable and nobody will ever think of doing it. I therefore submit to this Honourable House that if it really desires to punish the dishonest Mutwalli and save the trust property, it should make some easy provision as was made by my friend, the author of this Bill. But he put it "suit", but in my amendment I have "application". If you put in "suit", who will care in this world to pay a large amount on stamps? There are properties yielding crores and lakhs. Who will care to pay the necessary amount on stamp? Nobody is personally interested, as I have already submitted to you. You must make some provision which will make this Bill acceptable to the country and at the same time useful to the country. You have got something which is not at all useful for the purpose for which it has been brought here, namely, to bring the dishonest Mutwalli to book. By the present provision you have not made any provision to safeguard the interests of the property, so to say. You are simply by this provision compelling him to go to the District Judge and file an account. It may be that he has purchased some beer for a certain amount of trust money as a luxury. How are you to punish him for this conduct of his? This Bill has made no provision, and as I have already submitted that procedure is impracticable. No one having no personal interest would have recourse to protection under section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code. If you want to save Muhammadan trust property which has been vested in the Mutwallis, if you really wish to do it, as I feel in my heart of hearts should be done, then I hope that this House will be very pleased to accept my amendment, which runs in these words:

" Clause 7 be re-numbered as 7 (2) and the following new sub-clause (1) be inserted before sub-clause (2) in the following terms:

(1) Notwithstanding anything contained in any law for the time being in force, any person interested in any Waqf or the trust relating thereto, may, without joining as party any one interested therein, and without obtaining previous sanction under section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1908, file a petition before the Court against a Mutwalli for any misfeasance or breach of trust committed by such Mutwalli or for his any other improper conduct in respect of the Waqf property of which he is the Mutwalli and may, inter alia, pray that either the applicant or any one interested in the Waqf be appointed Mutwalli and the Court may—

- (a) direct the removal of such Mutwalli and appoint any one in his place; or
- (b) direct the specific performance of any act by the Mutwalli; or
- (c) grant any other consequential relief which the Court may, under the circumstances of each case, deem just and proper."

This is my amendment. Before I resume my seat I may say that though the Select Committee have made the Bill acceptable to the country, unfortunately they have lost sight of this salutary provision of law for which the dishonest Mutwallis would never dare commit any act of breach of faith so far as the waqf properties are concerned, and if any Honourable Member of this House opposes this amendment, I think he will be doing injustice to the Muhammadan community. There should be some provision under this Bill under which the dishonesty of the Mutwalli can be punished by the District Judge. With these words I move my amendment before the House. The amendment is worded very carefully and I hope it will commend itself to the acceptance of the House.

The Honourable Dr. Mian Sir Muhammad Shafi: Sir, by the amendment now before the House my Honourable friend seeks to get rid of the provision embodied in section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure whereby the previous sanction of the Advocate General or of the Collector under section 93 is necessary in order to enable a person to institute a suit for the reliefs mentioned in that section. I venture to submit to the House that the provision embodied in section 92 is a very wholesome provision and in support of that contention I cannot do better than cite from a judgment of the Calcutta High Court reported in I. L. R. 24 Cal. 418. This is what the learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court say:

"The real object of the special provisions of section 539 seems to us to be clear. Persons interested in any trust were, if they could all join, always competent to maintain a suit against any trustee for his removal for breach of trust; but where the joining of all of them was inconvenient or impracticable it was considered desirable that some of them might sue without joining the others, provided they obtained the consent of the Advocate General or of the Collector of the District; and this condition was imposed to prevent an indefinite number of reckless and harassing suits being brought against trustees by different persons interested in the trust."

A wholesome provision like this, I venture to submit, is absolutely essential in the interests of justice and to prevent frivolous suits by any one and every one who chooses to come into the court in cases of this kind. The object of Maulvi Abul Kasem's Bill is twofold. In the first place it seeks to secure registration of Mussalman waqfs and in the second place he seeks to secure the publication and audit of accounts once a year, the object being that instead of groping in the dark as is the case at present, those who are interested in the maintenance and welfare of these charitable and religious endowments may have furnished to them materials upon the basis of which, should the trustee misappropriate, they may be able to go to the court and ask for the reliefs which are mentioned in section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code. The accounts rendered under this Act by the trustees once a year will enable persons interested in the maintenance of these charitable and religious endowments to see that the trustee is administering the property in the right way and should the accounts disclose to them any ground for a reasonable relief, then they will be in a position to go to the Collector or the Advocate General and on the basis of the proof which they have obtained from the statement of account filed in the court by the trustee under this Act, to obtain the previous sanction which is necessary for the institution of these suits. To go beyond this in this particular enactment, I submit, would be entirely unnecessary as well as undesirable. Further you will see according to section 6 of the Charitable and Religious Trusts Act of 1890, if a trustee without reasonable excuse fails to comply with an order made under sub-section (5) of section 5, such trustee shall without prejudice to any other penalty or liability which he may incur under any law for the time being in force be deemed to have committed a breach of trust affording ground for a suit under the provisions of section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, and any such suit may so far as it is based on such failure be instituted without the previous consent of the Advocate General, so that if the case comes within the purview of section 6 of the Act of 1920 no previous sanction of the Advocate General will be necessary. On all these grounds, I venture to submit that whatever may be the motive underlying the amendment which has been placed before the House, and I have not the slightest doubt that the motive is an excellent one, the amendment is both unnecessary and undesirable. If the trustee renders correct accounts, correct in the manner described by my Honourable friend, that is to say, if he marries his own son or his own daughters or his own brother out of assets in his possession belonging to the charitable or religious endowment, then I can assure my Honourable friend that that trustees will not remain Mutwalli of that endowment for long. If he imagines that by rendering correct accounts in that manner he is discharging himself of the liability and of the duties which are cast upon his shoulders by the law of wakfs as ordained by the laws of Islam, then I am afraid he will be labouring under a hallucination, and I have not the slightest doubt he will soon realize that persons interested in the maintenance of that wakf can without any difficulty go to court and obtain his removal.

Mr. President: The question is that that amendment be made.

The motion was negatived.

Clause 7 was added to the Bill.

Clauses 8 and 9 were added to the Bill.

Khan Bahadur Maulvi Amjad Ali: I move:

"That in clause 10 the words 'with imprisonment which may extend to three months, or' be deleted."

(Cries of "Withdraw, withdraw.")

Before crying "withdraw, withdraw" will Honourable Members be pleased to listen. My amendment relates to certain drastic measures proposed by this Bill. I want to convince the House and I won't sit down till I convince the House of the truth and the force of my argument before this Honourable House. It is provided that if a Mutwalli is remiss in submitting accounts, on the first occasion he is to be punished with fine. If he is guilty of the same thing for a second or third time, he may be punished with imprisonment for three months or with fine which may extend to a thousand rupees. Now, in the first place, the word "imprisonment" is not qualified; it may be either rigorous or simple. In most sections of the Penal Code providing imprisonment for offences provision is made for simple or rigorous imprisonment. But here power is vested in the court to punish a Mutwalli with imprisonment which may be either simple or rigorous. So on this ground it is objectionable that a Mutwalli who has failed in filing the account should undergo hard labour. Secondly, imprisonment is not necessary at all in my humble opinion. For Honourable Members know that a guardian appointed by a court to administer a minor's property who may remiss in his duties is liable only to a fine. There is no provision in that Act for punishing him with imprisonment. So, I think, this provision in the measure before us is very drastic. Fine will be quite sufficient in my opinion. The law says that he may be punished with fine which may extend to Rs. 2,000. That I think will quite meet the requirements of the case. Is not this measure a drastic one? I hope Honourable gentlemen will agree with me and throw out this provision, so that the Muhammadan people of India may accept the Bill with some amount of eagerness; otherwise when people go through the Act, they will see that a Mutwalli is liable to be punished with imprisonment in addition to fine and they will not like it. It will be difficult for donors to find Mutwallis. Who will come to do service for nothing? The Mutwalli will accept it so long as there is no risk in it. He would not get anything beyond his allowance. His children would not get anything. Who will be such a fool as to undertake this business of the Mutwalli in this way? This is a most drastic measure indeed. In the interests of the people of this country this provision should not be allowed to stand, and my submission is that such a provision is altogether uncalled for and unwelcome, and I hope that my submission will commend itself to the House. With these few words, I move my amendment.

Mr. President: The original question was that clause 10 do stand part of the Bill.

Since which an amendment has been moved:

"That the words 'with imprisonment which may extend to three months, or' be omitted."

The question is that that amendment be made.

The motion was adopted.

Clause 10, as amended, was added to the Bill.

Clause 11 was added to the Bill.

Mr. S. K. Barodawalla (Bombay City: Muhammadan Urban): Sir, on the assurance given by the Honourable the Law Member that he is going to provide that the Local Governments will be empowered to exempt any community that they like from the operation of this Act, I beg leave to withdraw this amendment.*

Clause 12 was added to the Bill.

Mr. President: As a matter of fact, the new clause to be moved by the Honourable the Law Member covers the point raised in the next amendment.

The Honourable Dr. Mian Sir Muhammad Shafi: Sir, I beg to move that a new clause, clause 13, be added, as follows:

"13. The Local Government may by notification in the local official Gazette exempt from the operation of this Act or of any specified provision thereof any waqf or waqfs created or administered for the benefit of any specified section of the Mussalman community."

* "At the end of clause 12 of the Bill the following be added:
'(c) apply to the Dandi Bohra (Muhammadan) community'."

The Honourable Members will, I think, see quite easily the object of this amendment. Administration of trusts is a provincial transferred subject in charge of Ministers and, therefore, it is wise that, in so far as the actual working of the two main principles embodied in the present Bill are concerned, the fullest liberty should be left to the Ministers to apply those provisions. There may be in certain provinces some sub-sections of the Moslem community who stand on an entirely different footing from the rest of the community with regard to the position as well as the administration of trusts which they may have created. It is prudent in these cases to leave it to the Local Government, should the circumstances of a given province or waqf so require, liberty to exclude that waqf or those waqfs from the purview of this Bill. Such a liberty of action to the Local Government is in the best interests of the community itself.

I hope, therefore, that the House will accept this amendment.

Mr. W. M. Hussanally: If the Honourable Member will permit me, I would like to add a little proviso.

"with the consent of the local Legislature."

The object I have in view is this that whereas I am not—against Bohras being excused from the operation of this Act, it is likely in the near future that this Act will be made applicable to other endowments besides Mahomedan and in that case a difficulty will arise, and that is this, that in certain cases while a particular sect may like that a particular endowment may evade the operation of this Act, the general community may not like it. Therefore if the matter is discussed in the Local Legislatures and thereafter the exemption is made it will be in the interests of everybody; and that is why I suggest that amendment.

The Honourable Dr. Mian Sir Muhammad Shafi: I suggest to my Honourable friend, Mr. Hussanally that the Minister being in the discharge of his ordinary duties responsible to the Local Legislature, is not likely to take action under this section unless he fully realises that in that action he is supported or will be supported by at least the majority of the Local Legislature. In a matter of this kind to add such a proviso as is suggested by my Honourable friend, is, I think, undesirable.

Lala Girdharilal Agarwala: Sir, I want simply to say one word. I am greatly thankful to the Honourable the Law Member for his amendment which I suppose, will cover a large number of cases, but may suggest a word to be added to that amendment—"may exempt or restrict" from the operation of this Act. The object is that there are some Waqfs belonging to the Shia Community and they would not like that persons who do not belong to their own community should take action under this Act. There are Waqfs belonging to other communities also who live in air-tight compartments and who do not like to be interfered with by persons belonging to other communities. So if Waqfs are totally exempted that will not be quite sufficient; but if the application of the Act is restricted in the way I suggest, it will meet the case. My object is that in the application of this Act, certain Waqfs may either be totally exempted from the operation of the Act or that its operation might be restricted, and that was the reason I put forward my own amendment:

"Nothing herein contained shall authorise any Mussalman to take action under this Act in regard to Waqfs of a sect to which he does not belong."

Mr. President: I see that the Honourable Member does raise a somewhat different point from that raised by the Honourable the Law Member. The Honourable the Law Member's new clause empowers the Local Government to exempt any section of the community from having the Act applied to it at all. The Honourable Member's point is different. He does not want the provisions of the Act set in motion against one sect by persons belonging to another sect, which is a different question.

Mr. K. C. Neogy: Sir, I rise to a point of order. The Honourable the Law Member not being a Member of this House, is he entitled to move an amendment?

Mr. President: The Honourable Member is quite right.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: Sir, we seem to have fallen into error on that point. My Honourable friend, Sir Muhammad Shafi, is so well known in this House that we regard him as one of ourselves; but if you will allow the amendment to stand in my name, I shall be grateful.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That the following new clause be added to the Bill:

"13. The Local Government may by notification in the local official Gazette exempt from the operation of this Act or of any specified provision thereof any Waqf or Waqfs created or administered for the benefit of any specified section of the Mussulman community."

The motion was adopted.

Lala Girdharilal Agarwala: I beg to move that a new clause be added at the end, namely:

"13. Nothing herein contained shall authorize any Mussalman to take action under this Act in regard to waqf of a sect to which he does not belong."

Sir, I have already explained my object; the amendment which has just been carried would not exactly cover this case and it is necessary to safeguard the interests of various different classes and communities, who although they are Muhammadans, still observe differences of opinion and differences of custom to some extent and who might not like persons belonging to other sects to interfere in their affairs. It is for this reason and with this object that I beg to move my amendment.

Mr. S. K. Barodawalla: Sir, I will not take up the time of the Assembly, but I give my full support to the amendment. As has been pointed out, no community has a right to interfere with the affairs of another community and no very long speech is needed on this as we have instances in other communities also; among the Hindus also we know that one community does not like that any other community should interfere in its affairs; I think, therefore, this amendment should be accepted by this House.

Maulvi Abul Kasem: Sir, I would have been very glad to accept the amendment moved by my Honourable friend, Mr. Girdharilal Agarwala. I want to tell him that, distinguished lawyer as he is, there is nothing in the provisions of this Bill which asked any Muhammadan or anybody to interfere with anything. It is only the Mutwalli who is asked to register his waqf and to submit accounts, so there is nothing in it. If he has to move an amendment like that, he will have to move an amendment to section 192 of the Civil Procedure Code.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: May I point out to Mr. Abul Kasem that Mr. Agarwala's amendment obviously has reference to clause 4. If he will read that clause, he will see that "any person may apply to the Court by a petition in writing for the issue of an order requiring the Mutwalli to furnish further particulars or documents. Now let us take a case in point. If it were a case of a Shia wakf, then a Sunni could not move the Court. It is a matter, I think, in which the community must decide for itself whether they wish to restrict action under clause 4 to Members of the particular sect or to a section of Mussalmans for whose benefit the endowment was intended. But I myself see some difficulty in the amendment as it stands. Let us assume again that a Sunni wakf has left money for purely charitable purposes or for purely education purposes. Will the Court be able to decide whether that wakf is, in the words of the amendment, a waqf of a particular sect? Does the particular sect of the donor determine the nature of the endowment if the endowment is for purely general purposes? I can quite understand that if the endowment was for the purposes of Shia education or charity to Sunnis or to Khojahs, then the amendment might apply. I suggest that if the Court is to be able to decide exactly what is meant by a waqf of a particular sect, then some better definition than that will be required than is given in the amendment.

The Honourable Dr. Mian Sir Muhammad Shafi: Sir, should an endowment or a wakf be purely for the religious purposes of a particular sect, it is obvious that any member of another sect would not be a person having an interest in the maintenance of that wakf. Should, however, the wakf be for a general charitable or pious purpose, then every Muhammadan would have an interest in the maintenance of such a wakf. Therefore, whether in a particular case a particular person applying for relief is a person having an interest in the maintenance of the wakf, is a question which will depend upon the circumstances of each case, and it would, therefore, I submit be unwise, if I may venture to say so, to enact a provision of this kind.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: Might I make one additional remark, Sir, that, if the amendment is carried in its present form, it will, as the House will see from clause 4, allow a Hindu to apply to the Court but not a Muhammadan of a different sect.

Mr. President: The question is that the new clause be added.

The motion was negatived.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: Might I suggest a purely formal change which has just been brought to our notice; it may save trouble hereafter. We proposed the addition of the words "by a Court" in sub-clause (c) of clause 2. We think that the words should be "a Court of competent jurisdiction" in order to fall into line with the language used later on in the Bill.

Mr. President: On the motion that the Bill be passed that amendment can be made.

Clause 1 was added to the Bill.

The Title and Preamble were added to the Bill.

Maulvi Abul Kasem: I now move, Sir, that the Bill, as amended, be passed.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: I now make the motion I referred to:

"That in clause 2, sub-clause (c), for the words 'or by a Court' the words 'or by a Court of competent jurisdiction' be substituted."

Mr. President: The question is:

"That in line 4 of sub-clause (c) of clause 2, after the words 'or by a Court' the words 'of competent jurisdiction' be added."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That the Bill, as amended, be passed."

The motion was adopted.

The Assembly then adjourned for Lunch till Fifteen Minutes Past Three of the Clock.

The Assembly re-assembled after Lunch at Fifteen Minutes Past Three of the Clock. Mr. President was in the Chair.

THE SPECIAL MARRIAGE BILL.

Dr. H. S. Gour (Nagpur Division: Non-Muhammadan): Sir, I have already presented the Report of the Select Committee to amend Act III of 1872, and I now move that the Bill be taken into consideration. Honourable Members will see that the Bill as it was originally introduced by me in this House was a purely Civil Marriage Bill, that is to say, it was a marriage Bill in which two persons, subject only to the law of consanguinity which I need not advert to now, were free to marry under the Act as I proposed to modify it. Since then, the Select Committee have made certain changes restricting the scope of the Bill, and I should like Honourable Members to realise the changes made and its effect upon the Bill as introduced in this House and committed to the Select Committee. As I have said, the Bill, the principle of which was accepted by this House, was a purely Civil Marriage Bill. It included all classes and excluded no community. When it went before the Select Committee Members of that Committee thought that we must go along the line of least resistance and exclude from the provisions of our Bill classes which did not want to come within its scope. As such we have excluded Muhammadans, Parsees and others and have restricted the operation of the Bill to four designated classes of persons, namely, Hindus, Sikhs, Jains and Buddhists. We have also out of deference to the opinions received set out certain rules regarding succession and also inserted other provisions relating to adoption and management and succession to religious endowments. I should like briefly to justify the changes made by the Select Committee and point out to the House why it is now an acceptable measure. Some of my friends who voted for the Bill upon its second reading when it was referred to the Select Committee feel dissatisfied that the measure has been truncated and deprived of all the provisions which they regard as essential. I should like to explain to them that the measure which I ask the Honourable Members of this House to take into consideration has in no way abridged or curtailed the pre-existing rights which existed under the original Act III of 1872. Those who object to the added provisions are still free to contract marriages under the original Act. They may entirely ignore the provisions of the added sections. But, as I have said on the last occasion when I had the honour of speaking on this Bill, one objection which persons who are required to sign a declaration under that Act raised was that they could not conscientiously sign a declaration with a mental reservation and that it was not right that the law should compel them to sign it. I shall very briefly point out the reasons—the historical reasons—which culminated in the framing of that form which constitutes a declaration under the Act. As far back as 1832 a Royal Commission was appointed by an Act of Parliament for the purpose of revising and codifying certain important branches of Indian law. That Royal Commission sat and framed what is now known as the lex loci Act, the official designation of which is the Removal of Caste Disabilities Act. That Act was enacted as Act XXI of 1850. The underlying principle of that Act was that no person shall suffer any penalty by the mere fact of his renouncing a caste or religion. Later on, in 1856 the Legislature passed what is known as the Hindu Widows' Re-marriage Act. That legalised the re-marriage of widows. In 1868 that great jurist and lawyer Sir Henry Maine, the then Law Member of the Viceregal Council, pointed out in the late Imperial Legislative Council that it was the bounden duty of the Sovereign to provide for the marriage of all his subjects and if they wished to marry, no impediment by caste, creed or otherwise should stand in the way. If the State does not enact a Civil Marriage Law the consequence is that it leads to promiscuous intercourse and concubinage. He therefore placed before the Legislative Council a Civil Marriage Bill. But before that Bill could become law his term of office ended and he was succeeded by another jurist, Sir James Stephen and he again circulated the Bill, collected all the opinions and made the following summary of the cases to which he adverted. This is what he said:

"The cases which I have quoted appear to me to establish in the broadest way that on the most general principles it is just, equitable, and according to good conscience that all men should have a right to marry although the law to which they are subject may prescribe the manner in which their right is to be exercised. In India, as we all agree, there is no fundamental common law other than the law of justice, equity and good conscience upon this subject. If a man is not a Hindu, nor a Muhammadan, nor a Parsi, nor a Christian, nor a Jaina, no form is prescribed for him by law. Does it follow that he cannot marry at all? Certainly not. What follows is that his right must be determined by the general maxim that contracts for a lawful object and made on good consideration are valid and must be performed, and I have yet to learn that marriage is in a general sense, unlawful or immoral or a promise to perform conjugal duties by the wife or the husband is not a good consideration for the promise to perform reciprocal duties by the husband or the wife."

He then said that we must have a Civil Marriage law. Then the question arose whether there was a large public opinion to support the enactment of such a marriage law. The Brahmos of Bengal who had moved the Imperial Legislative Council to enact a law for themselves were of opinion that they were perfectly prepared to declare themselves as non-Hindus and therefore they accepted the form which was then prescribed and Act III of 1872 became an Act of the Imperial Legislature. A very large number of marriages have been contracted under the Act of 1872 but in a recent case their Lordships of the Privy Council laid down that both Brahmos and Sikhs as well as Jains were Hindus and the decision of Sir James Stephen, who had in 1872 taken for granted that if the Brahmo said he was not a

Hindu there was an end of the matter, was upset by the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council. Well, Sir, that was the state of the law till the judgment of the Privy Council was given. About 13 years ago the Honourable Mr. Bhupendra Nath Basu, now a Member of the Secretary of State's Council, revived this piece of legislation which Sir Henry Maine had placed before the Legislative Council and it was considered but afterwards it failed to become law. Later on Mr. Patel wanted to introduce and did introduce a more restrictive measure legalising the marriages between the Hindus of different castes and it was referred to a Select Committee, but after it emerged from the Select Committee, it was considered that as the reforms were about to be announced and the constitution of the Imperial Legislative Council revised, it would be better if this measure was reintroduced in the popular Chamber. Well, Sir, taking the cue from the deliberations of that Council, I took the earliest opportunity of reintroducing a measure which has been referred to the Select Committee and which emerges from that body with a unanimous report. This is, Sir, shortly the history of marriage law in this country. After it came back from the Select Committee I have been besieged with inquiries by my friends of both complexions, reformers and orthodox and I shall now briefly explain the reasons which have led the Select Committee to recommend for enactment this measure in the form in which it is presented to this House. I shall first deal with the objections of the reformers. They say "What we wanted you to do is to enact a general civil marriage law. What you have done is to decapitate the measure the principle of which we accepted and it has come out of the Select Committee in an extremely crippled, restricted and circumscribed form. If we are to fight for civil marriage law, let our fight be continued but we are not prepared to accept this half-way house. To them I say, Sir, that the Select Committee have very carefully considered this objection of the reformers and they came to the conclusion that it is much better in a case of this kind to take along with them public opinion and it is better that we should have a narrow and restricted measure than to work for a Civil Marriage law. Then, Sir, to them I say that if the Bill is not acceptable they are not better off and no worse off than they were under Act III of 1872. The additional sections which are awaiting your judgment are sections which are purely permissive and they entitle every man, be he a Hindu, Jaina, Sikh or Buddhist, to ignore the provisions of those sections and resort to the pre-existing law. It binds nobody; it obliges no one; it is a purely permissive measure and it is made amply clear that it is so. Therefore, I submit that if anybody has any objection on the ground that the measure now before the House is a narrow and a more restricted one, he has only to say to himself, "I shall ignore it; I am in no way prejudiced by it and therefore I should not object to it." Then, Sir, it has been said that this measure creates a paradox. Under Act III of 1872, a Hindu contracting a marriage by subscribing to a declaration that he does not profess the Hindu religion still remains subject to Hindu law regarding succession and the enjoyment of his property; but by making a declaration under this part of the Act that he is a Hindu he will be deprived of his personal law and he will be subjected to the restrictions now embodied in the various sections of my Bill. My answer is that, here again it is a matter of opinion. If you wish to make a declaration under the first part, by all means do so, and you will continue to enjoy all the rights and privileges which are given to you under that part of the Act. But if, on the other hand, you have conscientious scruples in the making of a declaration under that part of the Act, then you declare under the second part and place yourself under the disabilities created by that part. You are in no way prejudiced. Your position has been improved to the extent that you are not bound to make a declaration which you cannot conscientiously subscribe to, for you are given the option of subscribing either to one declaration or the other.

Then one of my esteemed friends asked me, what about collateral succession. Well, Sir, the Members of the Select Committee have anxiously considered this question and they came to the conclusion that regarding collateral succession a person who contracts marriage under this part of the Act should not be placed in a position of greater disability than a person who comes under the lex loci Act; in other words, that a person who contracts a marriage should not be put in a worse position than a convert; and therefore whatever may be the law relating to converts and to persons subject to the Act or coming under the Act of 1850 that shall be the law which will apply to a person who contracts marriage under this part of the Act. So that, Sir, so far as that question is concerned, it has been settled by the Select Committee in the manner I have indicated regarding succession. Regarding succession and the enjoyment of religious rights I have to say a few words. Regarding succession the Members of the Committee were divided, as is mentioned in the report of the Select Committee. The reason why the majority of them agreed that succession should be regulated by the Indian Succession Act, rather than under the normal Hindu Law was that under the Indian Succession Act, daughters and wives acquire a certain vested right of which they are deprived under the Hindu Law. The special disabilities created by Hindu Law against the succession of females would be removed if the general Law of Succession as embodied in the Succession Act is made applicable to persons who marry under that part of the Act. Here, again, I wish to remind the Honourable Members of this House that they are at liberty to marry under either the first part or the second part, and if they wish to come under the Indian Succession Act, then and then only they need marry under that part.

Then, Sir, it has been said "What about religious endowments and their management?" Well, Sir, the mere fact that inter-caste marriages and marriages between Hindus and the followers of allied faiths would be possible under this Act makes it impossible that persons who contract marriages under this Act should continue to enjoy as of right the right of management of religious trusts; and, therefore, the Select Committee have made that provision.

Now, Sir, as regards the law of adoption. So far as the law of adoption is concerned, two questions arise, one that the father of such married person may adopt a son to himself and, secondly, that he may wish to make an adoption. As regards the father's right to adoption, if he chooses and if he finds that the son has gone out of the family by contracting a marriage which he disapproves of, he is entitled to make an adoption. Honourable Members will know with the larger powers of testamentary disposition which are coming into force in this country, the law of adoption is now receding into the background. Every Hindu possessing his self-acquired property is entitled to bequeath it to anybody he likes; and so far as the person who marries under this part of the Act is concerned, he, having elected to be bound by the provisions of that part of the Act, to which I refer, has been deprived of the right of adoption. I do not say that these provisions are all justifiable, but what I do say is that these are the provisions which have been inserted in the Bill on a compromise made with my orthodox friends. The Honourable Sir Sivaswamy Aiyer on the last occasion when he enlightened the House with his views said that the time had come for a measure of this character, but he demanded that certain restrictions should be embodied in the Bill so as to make it clear upon the points to which I have adverted. I have, Sir, carried out his wishes, and I hope that after the restrictions that have been inserted, my friends, orthodox friends, Rao Bahadur Rangachariar and Sir Sivaswamy Aiyer, will accord to my Bill the whole-hearted support which it now deserves. There remains, Sir, the question of Muhammadans. No one was more grieved than I was when the Select Committee deleted the Muhammadans from the provisions of this Bill. But, I felt, Sir, that if we are to carry our Muhammadan fellow-subjects with us, we could not force this measure down their unwilling throats. And as the majority of them were not yet prepared for this piece of legislation, we thought it wise and right that we should exclude them. We have been told, Sir, by some of my over-cautious Muhammadan friends, "you have excluded the Muhammadans to-day, but some person might include them to-morrow, and so the Muhammadans will come in for the disabilities of this part of the Act." But my friends have merely to read my Bill to see how utterly impossible it will be for the Muhammadans to come under this part of the Bill. They have no adoptions; they have no shibais, their law of succession is different, and the Bill expressly mentions that it applies only to Hindus, Jains, Sikhs and Buddhists, and I therefore say, Sir, that if some enterprising spirit were to bring in an amending Bill, what is there to prevent him from introducing an independent measure. I submit therefore there is nothing in this objection. The fear of any Muhammadan reformer bringing in a measure hereafter is a standing fear, and is certainly not aggravated by the introduction of my Bill. These are all the objections which have been addressed to me and I have striven, very briefly, to reply to them. I commend, Sir, my proposition to the acceptance of the House.

Rai Bahadur Pandit J. L. Bhargava (Ambala Division: Non-Muhammadan): Sir, I move:

"That the Bill as reported by the Select Committee be recirculated for the purpose of obtaining further opinion thereon."

At this stage I consider it quite unnecessary to enter into the merits of the principle of the Bill, or the history of Act III of 1872, or the subsequent attempts that were made to modify or to extend it. In this connection it will suffice to say that the Bill, though permissive in its nature, is of a highly controversial character, and all the motions that have been made by the Honourable Mover of this Bill have met with strong opposition in this House. The Bill was opposed when it was introduced. When the motion for referring it to Select Committee was made in January 1922 that motion was negatived by this House after a very lengthy and full discussion; and when it was referred to a Select Committee in September last, it was only by a bare majority of one vote. I am also not unaware of the fact that the Bill in its original form was circulated for opinion, and the opinions that were obtained on it were before the Select Committee; but the Bill as it is presented in its amended form is so much modified and altered that the members of the Select Committee themselves have considered it necessary to recast it, and the object of my motion is to circulate the Bill as it has emerged from the Select Committee for opinion of the persons who are affected thereby. It has been pointed out by the Member in charge of the Bill that the scope of the Bill has been restricted, and there is no doubt that the Christian, Muhammadan, Jewish and Parsee communities have been excluded from the scope of the Bill, but that is no reason why these communities should not consider and see whether this Bill is good for the communities which will be affected by it. The communities which remain are the Hindu, Sikh, Jaina and Buddhist communities. These communities will remain affected and the exclusion of other communities will not affect them in the least so far as the main principle of the Bill is concerned.

Sir, as has been pointed out by the Honourable Member in charge of the Bill, certain matters have been introduced by the Select Committee. One of them is that marriage according to this Act will have the effect of separating the person marrying from the joint family of which he is a Member. The other is that in matters of succession the party marrying under this Bill will be governed by the Indian Succession Act, and there is also a provision that the person marrying under this Bill shall have no right to adopt. These are matters of vital importance and of great significance. It is stated in the Report of the Select Committee that "all reasonable and legitimate objections urged against the original Bill in the opinions received on it have been sufficiently met." The question is whether these objections have been sufficiently met or not, and whether the Select Committee had the opinions of those communities whom the Bill will affect on the questions which have been introduced into the present Bill before them. It might be said that these opinions had reference to these questions and it is reference to these questions that has led the Select Committee to introduce these matters. No doubt there is a passing reference incidentally made in some of the opinions about these questions, but the reference is simply to the effect that these questions will arise. There is no definite and considered opinion upon all these matters and it is therefore necessary, before this House is in a position to pass this Bill or to consider the motion that has been made before it, that the opinions of all those persons who will be affected on these points which have been introduced by the Select Committee, and upon which they have had no opportunity of expressing their opinion, should be before this House. And the fact that on a very important question the Members of the Select Committee themselves were not agreed is a strong argument that the opinions of the representatives of those persons who will be affected by the Act should be obtained. Looking to the nature of the amendments that have been made in the Bill and to the nature of the changes that have been introduced, it is highly desirable that the Bill should be recirculated for further opinion.

With these remarks, Sir, I move my amendment.

Munshi Iswar Saran (Cities of the United Provinces: Non-Muhammadan Urban): Sir, it is a cruel irony of fate that I find myself supporting my Honourable friend, Mr. Bhargava, on this point. The House will see that I had given notice of the same amendment but with a different object. My Honourable friend wishes somehow to kill this Bill, I wish that the Bill should be improved; but, according to the rules, both of us had to give notice of the same motion. I do not wish, Sir, to make a secret of my own views and convictions on this question. I am one of those who are thoroughly, completely, dissatisfied with the Bill as it has emerged out of the Select Committee. Without meaning any offence, I think that its opponents on the Committee got the better of my Honourable friend the Mover of this Bill and introduced clauses into this Bill which have made it practically ineffectual. Sir, when this Bill was circulated for opinion the House will remember that there was a very short Bill which only sought to take out certain words from the Special Marriage Act of 1872. The opinions that were given by the various High Courts and by various public bodies related to the Bill as it stood then, but since this Bill has been modified in the Select Committee in very important details and as it is a measure of a far-reaching character I do think that it is fair to the public and fair to us that we should know what they think about the changes thus introduced. My friend has airily brushed aside all these objections. He says, "Oh, well, if you do not agree with this Bill, then you take advantage of Act III of 1872; but if you do agree with it, then come and marry under this Act." Now I am afraid my Honourable friend does not realise the position which I and those who think like me occupy. I am with him whole-heartedly—I might almost say, enthusiastically, on the question of reform in this matter; but I look at the whole question from the standpoint of a Hindu. What I say is this. A Hindu cannot go and get married under Act III of 1872. He cannot go before the constituted authority and say "Well, I do not profess Hinduism." That is a lie. What is the alternative that he has? He comes here, the same man, and says "All right, I shall marry under this beneficent measure which has been given to us by Dr. Gour." And what does he find? He finds that he practically ceases to be a Hindu.

(An Honourable Member: "How?")

Munshi Iswar Saran : Quite right—how? That is a very pertinent question and a very relevant question of my Honourable friend. Now if my Honourable friend will refer to any book on Hindu law or if he will take care to consider all those fundamental principles on which Hindu society is based, he will find that a very great deal of importance is attached to adoption, to succession and to other matters like these. What do you find here? I am a Hindu. Let the House remember that it can only form an accurate idea of my position if it does not forget that I am a Hindu. I have practically all those feelings, all those convictions, all those emotions which most Hindus have; but I feel that on this question there has grown up a custom which places an unnecessary restriction on the liberty of our action. But look at the difficulties created for us. Suppose I am a Brahmin and I marry in a Kshatriya family under Dr. Gour's Bill and I find that I have not got any issue and I believe in Pinda dan and the spiritual benefit that a son can confer on me, what do I find? I cannot adopt. I say, it gives a rude shock to my notions on this particular subject. I do not wish to be governed by the Indian Succession Act; I wish to be governed by the Hindu law. You say "Either you go and tell a lie before the sub-registrar or you consent to this." I say I will not accept this position; because you rob me of my right to be governed by the Hindu law and in its place you give me the Indian Succession Act which has been introduced into this country for the regulation of inheritance amongst non-Hindus. Then my friend says "Well, here is the Caste Disabilities Act." Sir, by my marrying under this Bill you deprive me of my right to live with my brother, you deprive me of my right to adopt; you deprive me of my right to be governed by my own personal law and you say that this is a measure which is going to be used by anybody. It may be used; it may be used by those who are not Hindus, but Hindus of that class would much rather go and marry under Act III of 1872 than come and marry under the present Bill. These are important far-reaching changes which have been introduced by the Select Committee into this measure. I do not wish to speak at length at this stage, and I say that it is necessary, it is advisable, nay, it is imperative that you should collect the opinions of those who are entitled to speak upon it. My Honourable friend says public opinion will be satisfied. If the motion of my Honourable friend is rejected and if this Bill comes to be considered you will form a measure of public opinion by the voting that will take place. The fact of the matter is this. Let me say quite frankly—I am keener than Dr. Gour for this reform, but I do not wish to conceal it from myself that the vast majority of our people do not like it. This being so, some people say "Why do you then introduce it?" My answer to that is this: it is a permissive measure, it does not force you to marry under this measure if you do not care; there is a large and growing body of Hindu dissenters and it is for their protection, for the protection of a minority—call them a microscopic minority if you like, but still a minority—that this Bill has been brought forward. You say "Remove this restriction; remove this bar; let us be free to marry according to our choice." The law has imposed the restriction that if I marry against the custom of the locality or of the family, then the marriage is not a marriage in the eye of the law, the wife is not a wife in the eye of the law; and the children are not legitimate in the eye of the law. I cannot by any means get over this difficulty created by the law and it is therefore to the Legislature that I come for redress. If the House will permit me I wish to refer to a case which was decided by the Allahabad High Court. There was a case of marriage between a Brahmin man and a Kshatriya woman; it was argued that this marriage was contracted according to the custom prevalent in Nepal and the parties were Nepalese; the High Court did not sustain the plea put forward by the widow about the validity of her marriage. Now, it is against this position that we complain; we say that the law has created this difficulty for us, and it is the law alone which can remove this difficulty. But I say, if you want to remove this difficulty, remove it in a way that honest and genuine Hindus with Hindu ideas may be able to take advantage of this Act and I pray you, do not give us an Act which is not worth having. But, Sir, be that as it may, I do not wish to speak as to the various provisions that are contained in this Bill. I only wish the House to consider this question whether it is prepared to take up this Bill at the present moment in spite of these important changes that have been introduced or whether it thinks it advisable to send it round for public opinion. I support the motion of Mr. Bhargava and I am distinctly of opinion that the Bill should be sent round so that Judges and others may be able to express their views on it.

Rai Sahib Lakshmi Narayan Lal (Bihar and Orissa: Nominated Non-Official): Sir, I stand to support this amendment. I do not like to traverse the grounds so ably put forward by my Honourable friend, Munshi Iswar Saran, but I want to support this amendment only on one ground. My Honourable friend, Dr. Gour, has kindly issued a pamphlet regarding this Bill. I have carefully gone through that pamphlet many a time, and if

[Rai Sahib Lakshmi Narayan Lal.]

I could rightly understand that pamphlet, I thought that the Honourable Dr. Gour was of opinion that this Bill would be of great political advantage for the Hindus. I am sorry I cannot agree with him in this view, but I do not like to labour that point at present. What I want to say at present is this, that if there was any political advantage in that Bill, that has been lost by excluding the other communities, and if this Bill as it is put now is pressed and passed into law, it will do a lot of harm without any good which it is supposed by Dr. Gour to do. I trust that this House will carefully consider this measure and vote for postponement of the matter at present.

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas (Bombay City : Non-Muhammadian Urban): I rise, Sir, to support the motion for taking the Bill into consideration introduced by Dr. Gour. We have on the other hand a motion for circulating the Bill for inviting public opinion thereon by my friend, Mr. Bhargava. Now, Sir, we are accustomed in this House to opposition to measures of this character by those who avowedly belong to the orthodox view, and I do not for a moment object to the view put forward by my friend, Mr. Bhargava. But I must confess to a sense of surprise and amazement at the support that he has been getting, and a powerful support too, from my Honourable friend, Munshi Iswar Saran, because if I correctly interpreted the views of my friend, Munshi Iswar Saran, he never belonged to that section of Hindus which take a pride in calling themselves conservatives or orthodox. Now, Sir, what is the attitude taken up by Munshi Iswar Saran? Why does he object to the Bill? He says there is not much difference between the Act of 1872, and the Act which will come in force if you pass this Bill into law. Now, Sir, can that objection stand? Those of the Honourable Members who were present in Simla when Dr. Gour introduced this measure, will remember that my sole reason for supporting it was that it secured to the individual the liberty of conscience which the Act of 1872 as it stood denied to him. I want to ask Honourable Members a serious question, whether if you pass the present Bill into law, it does or does not ensure that liberty of conscience that we want, it does or does not ensure that liberty of conscience that we wanted. (Mr. B. N. Misra : "No, it doesn't.") It does. What will be the effect of this Bill? My Honourable friend, Mr. Biswa Nath Misra, ought to know that it does secure that liberty of conscience which we want, and I will prove it to him in a minute if he will have the patience to hear me. What was our objection to the Act as it stood? Our objection was that, if a man belonging to one caste of Hindus married a girl from another caste, also of Hindus, both of them had to go and declare on oath that neither of them was a Hindu. That is, in order to secure the marriage they had to tell a lie on that solemn occasion and renounce their faith altogether. Now, the moment this Bill becomes law, if a boy of one caste of Hindus wants to marry a girl of another caste of Hindus, neither of them will be called upon to say "We are not Hindus and therefore we shall take advantage of this Act and get married." Both of them can retain their faith, both of them can be Hindus and yet the law will recognise their marriage as legal. Now, what are the objections which my Honourable friend, Munshi Iswar Saran, urged? He said: "Yes, it might secure to them this liberty of conscience, they may not have to renounce their faith, but in the eyes of the law they will not retain the power to be Hindus. They will not be able to make the Hindu law applicable to them in all instances as it would be applicable in the case of ordinary Hindus." Now, I want to point out to any Honourable friend, Munshi Iswar Saran, that we are faced with a great difficulty in getting this measure through. There is an opposition from the orthodox community. I do not for a moment admit that that opposition is from a majority of Hindus. I do feel that at any rate at the present moment there are a majority of my community of Hindus who are prepared to confer on their fellowmen the liberty of conscience which has been so far denied to them. So that, so far as that argument is concerned it does not appeal to me that Hindus are not yet prepared to grant to their fellowmen the liberty of conscience that is wanted. But I want to point to my Honourable friend, Munshi Iswar Saran, the difference between these two things. First the highest thing that a man values, namely, liberty of conscience, which this Bill secures for him. Secondly, the objection which he has pointed out refers to the application of that law in those instances which gives him all the worldly rights which a man's being a Hindu entitles him to. Now, assuming for the moment that for the sake of compromise we have in the Select Committee not been able to give to such Hindus as will take advantage of this Act when it becomes law, that we have not been able to confer on them all the rights which ordinary Hindus enjoy on account of the worldly rights, after all what is that loss compared to the great and, higher gain that is a man's property if liberty of conscience is secured to him. To me it seems to be a very futile objection to urge for the purpose of defeating this measure. I wish, Sir, that I could persuade Members of this House not to delay for a moment, not to make a moment's delay in doing justice to those who have for long claimed and justifiably claimed at our hands the liberty of conscience. Not to allow this measure to go through at the present moment is to risk this measure being thrown out, is to risk inviting perpetual blame on the community that, while we are claiming and rightly claiming freedom from other quarters, we are not prepared to give to our fellowmen the liberty of conscience which as human beings it is their right to demand. I feel, Sir, that it would be a great mistake if this Bill was not taken into consideration. I feel that it would be a great mistake if this Bill was sent back to the people for eliciting their opinion thereon. Where is the necessity of sending this Bill again to the people? Has not this question been before the country now at least for the last 12 years? Was it not in 1911 that Mr. Bhupendra Nath Basu first introduced a measure of this character? Was it not again for years together that Mr. Patel's name was associated with a Bill entirely of this character? This subject has been before the people for a long time and now, after 12 years of agitation on this question, when we are on the verge of seeing this Bill through in this House, when we are on the verge of doing justice—bare justice—to our fellowmen who belong to our community, to come forward and put this argument before us that it should be re-circulated is, I believe, not in accordance with our claim for doing justice to all as representatives of the people. Another thing. When Dr. Gour first introduced the measure, it was in a very wide form. It allowed a Hindu not only to enter into inter-caste marriages but it even gave him the right of going outside his communities and it was made applicable to all communities in India. Now, I personally would have welcomed that reform. But if the House is not prepared for it, if all the communities have some objections to urge against a wide and sweeping measure of that kind, I will respect their feelings and I think the Select Committee has done wisely in respecting the feeling of those communities, with the result that the scope of this Bill is very much narrowed down, and with the Bill in its present form, even that pillar of orthodoxy, my Honourable friend, Mr. Rangachariar, has nothing to say against it.

Munshi Iswar Saran: That is the danger.

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas: Honourable Members will see that he has himself appended his signature to the Bill as the Chairman of the Select Committee to which this Bill was referred, and it appears to me absolutely futile that effort should be made at this stage to throw out the measure on grounds which the House need not seriously consider. I strongly appeal to the House, Sir, not to accept my friend, Mr. Jawahar Lal Bhargava's amendment but to pass my friend Dr. Gour's motion.

Mr. J. N. Basu (Burma: Non-European): Sir, it is rather a big thing to find oneself within the focal distance of the President's eye. The problem is to find the loci of the President's focus within this Assembly and being a new comer, the problem seems to be insoluble to me. I leave it to my veteran friends to solve and if they fail, they may present it to the University examinees in the question papers. However, Sir, I will not detain the House long, for I had almost taken a vow not to open my lips; but when I glanced through the Bill I found that there was a sub-conscious conspiracy on the part of the Select Committee to compel me to speak, although I candidly admit that I share the common weakness of this House in having an itchy tongue. Now to the Bill. Most of the speakers have all along dwelt on the Hindu aspect of the question. I have followed closely my Honourable friend, Dr. Gour; to find out whether he would make any reference to Burma or the Burmese Buddhists in Burma. I fail to find any reference to that. My province has been included in this Bill only for one reason and that I find from the Statement of Objects and Reasons. The reason is given in paragraph 2:

"Some of us are doubtful whether Buddhists should be included, but the majority are of opinion that they should be included, as Indian Buddhists, equally with Sikhs and Jainas, have been held by the Courts to be Hindus for purposes of succession, marriage, and other matters."

Now, as Indian Buddhists have been declared to be Hindus for certain purposes, a fortiori Burmese Buddhists can also be included as Hindus. That is the line of reasoning I understand adopted in this. Well, Sir, you can easily see that Burmese Buddhists are quite different in their law of succession, inheritance, marriage, adoption and so forth. There are also Chinese Buddhists in Burma. The Burmese Buddhist law is quite peculiar to themselves. Their law of succession is not at all anything like the Hindu law. They have no will at all, and their ideas of adoption are not at all similar to the law of adoption in India. There is no libation of water or pinda offered to the soul of Burmese Buddhists. They do not believe in souls. They are concerned more with the care that should be taken by the adopted children for the living parents and they have recourse to adoption during their lives. Now, they can adopt many children, even the fathers of children and adoption is open to both the parents. Now, that law is going to be affected by one of the sections of this Bill. (Dr. H. S. Gour: "How?") You deny that right of adoption to certain persons. (Dr. H. S. Gour: "I do not deny the right of marrying under the Burmese law.") You deny the right of adoption to certain persons if there is a marriage under this law. (Dr. H. S. Gour: "You can ignore it.") Then, Sir, their law of succession is quite different. I do not see how that law can be restricted in this way. There are Burmese Buddhists and Chinese Buddhists who stoutly repudiate to be dictated to or be governed by any law other than their own. Their opinion has not been elicited on these vital matters. And apart from the merits of the question, apart from the merits of the Bill which I heartily approve, I certainly take my stand on this point that the Chinese Buddhists' opinion, the Burmese Buddhists' opinion have not been elicited on these matters. I for one cannot undertake the risk of voting in favour of this Bill unless I know the views of my constituency. Have they been given an opportunity of ventilating their views? I submit, Sir, not. On the Bill as it has emerged from the Select Committee at present their opinion I submit has never been elicited. Burma has been treated in this way all along by the Government of India. What prevented, I submit, the Government of India or this Honourable House from having at least one Member of Burma on the Select Committee? If in matters affecting Burmese Buddhists and Chinese Buddhists their interests are very studiously neglected by this House,—I must say candidly,—and by the Government of India all along, I submit that the Burmese Members feel—I mean thereby the Members who represent Burma—that they are ignored. Their presence would have been helpful to the Select Committee in matters like these and would have saved them from the pitfalls of hasty legislation. My point therefore is simply this—that this Bill should be republished for eliciting the opinions of the Burmese Buddhists. It is contended by my Honourable friend, Mr. Jamnadas, that this Bill should be wholeheartedly supported. All the remarks that he has made do not affect Burma at all. I shall be happy if Dr. Gour leaves Burma completely out of the jurisdiction of the Bill. None of the Members of the Select Committee happen to have considered the Burmese point of view. They seem to have taken it for granted and have fallen into the fallacy that because Indian Buddhists are Hindus for certain purposes, therefore the Burmese Buddhists are also Hindus. Now there are ordinary Hindus and Privy Council Hindus. But there are no Privy Council Buddhists in Burma yet. They are all ordinary Buddhists. I must also refer to another aspect of this matter. I must again protest that the treatment meted out to Burma as the milch cow of British India, as British India is the milch cow of the British Empire. I therefore move that this Bill be re-circulated. I shall then be in a position to support wholeheartedly the principle of the Bill.

Mr. Manmohandas Ramji (Indian Merchants' Chamber and Bureau: Indian Commerce): I had no intention of taking part in this debate. I felt that I should be satisfied with exercising my right to vote but as Mr. Jamnadas emphasised the liberty of conscience and the opinion of the majority, I think I must give him some reply. As far as the majority question is concerned, I ask Mr. Jamnadas whether he has approached his own community on this question and ascertained their views, whether there is a majority or a hopeless minority in his favour; and if the question is put to masses of Hindus I have no doubt that not more than two or three per cent. will come to his side. In order to prove my contention I may tell the House that opposition meetings have been held all over India and there is not a single meeting in support. There has been opposition all over and there have been petitions also. Therefore that feeling is there. Of course, there is no objection for any Hindu to marry in any fashion he likes. There is that liberty of conscience, but that liberty under the present Bill before us does not meet the actual requirements of the case. It is patch work simply, because these people think that if they carry this now they can go further later on; but when we take the trouble of legislating, let us not be satisfied with half measures, but let us give full measures, which they dare not do.

Bhai Man Singh (East Punjab: Sikh): Sir, I oppose the motion that the Bill be taken into consideration and support the amendment that the Bill be circulated for opinion on quite a different ground. I think the Select Committee has gone far beyond the mandate that was given to it by the House. The House when it made over the Bill to the Select Committee was simply concerned with one point, namely, whether marriages between men and women of different castes or different religions should be allowed under the Act or not; there was already an existing law regulating such marriages with the condition that the parties had to state that they do not belong to the Muhammadan or Hindu religion and the question was that this declaration should be dispensed with. The Select Committee has assumed to itself powers that were never given to them and has brought before us a Bill which we could never dream of. They now come to us with the proposition that if a Hindu marries a Hindu girl of another caste he shall not adopt; if he marries a girl of another caste he shall be deemed to have separated from his family; a Hindu who marries a Hindu girl of another caste or a Jaina girl shall not be allowed to follow the rules of succession according to Hindu law but shall have to follow the rules of Indian Succession Act, which, so far as I understand, is very much akin to English or Christian law in this respect. Sir, I was never prepared to give those powers to the Select Committee to enable them to spin out a huge system of succession, adoption and joint Hindu family law for us. There is a very good precedent against this sort of thing in another measure which was called the Cantonment House-Accommodation Bill. That Bill was referred to a Joint Committee and the Committee found that it was necessary to make many drastic changes in the Bill, but the Joint Committee, being true to the mandate which had been given to them, did not think themselves capable of going beyond the limits under which they thought the Bill had been referred to them and they reported to the House that as they wanted to make certain drastic changes they would like the Bill to be re-submitted to them. I really wonder how the Select Committee on this Bill has assumed to themselves powers which were never given to them, and it is on this ground of principle, Sir, that I would strongly oppose their report being taken into consideration on the floor of the House. They have not stuck to the principle of the Bill only, they have gone far beyond our mandate; and if the principle is once conceded that a Select Committee can change the whole fabric of a Bill and give us quite a new law on the subject, I think it will be a very bad precedent from the point of view of the principles of legislation. I therefore, Sir, strongly oppose the Bill being taken into consideration.

I should like to draw the attention of the House to another anomaly in the Bill as it has emerged from the Select Committee. So far as I understand, a gentleman who marries another Hindu girl after declaring that he does not belong to the Hindu, Muhammadan or Jaina religion, has to follow the ordinary rules of succession. At least the present Special Marriage Act does not lay down that he shall follow the law laid down in the Succession Act. But a Hindu who is not prepared to say that he is not a Hindu who marries under the provisions of this amended form of marriage is told by the law 'No, my dear Sir, though you are a Hindu, though you are not prepared to say that you are not a Hindu, you shall not be allowed to follow the Hindu Law of Succession.' I do not find anything special in the latter case that makes it necessary that he should be forced by this measure to follow a different law of succession from what is followed by the rest of the society. I think if Dr. Gour presses that this Bill should be passed in its present form, as it has emerged from the Select Committee, in my humble opinion, he will be doing a distinct disservice to the cause of reform, because those who marry under this Bill would practically become outcasts. Again they shall lose the power of adoption. That is a privilege which perhaps every Hindu, at least a Hindu who is not prepared to say that he is not a Hindu, cherishes to his heart; and is it not downright tyranny to force him not to have the power of adoption? I am sorry my Honourable friend, Mr. Jannadas Dwarkadas, is not present in the House. He claimed the liberty of conscience. I too claim the same thing, but I ask why we should snatch away the right of adoption from a person who is liberal enough to marry a girl of another caste. Why should you snatch away the rights of succession to him under the Hindu Law who is liberal enough to marry a girl of another caste? In the end I should like to make my own position clear. Let it not be understood that I am at all against inter-caste marriages. My religion very freely allows inter-caste marriages. In fact the Sikh religion observes no castes at all. Again, I know that marriages between Hindus and Sikhs are at present prevalent and inter-caste marriages amongst the Sikhs are valid according to the Anand Marriage Act and their marriages with Hindu girls are also valid according to the present law. I would at the same time very much wish that inter-caste marriages be as much more prevalent as possible, but I strongly oppose the Bill as it has emerged from the Select Committee, and I strongly oppose the motion for taking it into consideration for the Select Committee have gone so much beyond the mandate of the House and the Bill creates so many difficulties in the way of persons marrying under it.

Mr. J. N. Mukherjee (Calcutta Suburbs: Non-Muhammadan Urban): Sir, I would not have risen, if I did not think that I might draw the attention of the Honourable Members to a few points of some complexity to which attention has not hitherto been drawn; and that I propose to do by a reference to some of the features of the present Bill. It seems to me, Sir, on a careful perusal of the Bill, that it creates an anomaly of a character which it is impossible to obliterate by means of amendments. The first point I take up is that the Bill provides that succession to the property of a person marrying under the Act or to that of the issue of persons marrying under it will be governed by the Indian Succession Act. Now, Sir, there are certain sections of the Indian Succession Act which say that it does not apply to Hindus, etc., e.g., section 331 of the Act. (Mr. K. Ahmed: "Amend and get rid of them.") You have got therefore to reconcile this inconsistency in the first place. You have to do many other things, besides. You have got to get rid of the Hindu Wills Act, also, if you have to submit to the Indian Succession Act entirely, all cases arising out of the present Bill. The law on the subject, it seems, will have to be harmonised. Then, suppose, Sir, a person marries under this Bill and thereby separates himself and his wife from the joint family. Under the Bill he is not then entitled to adopt a son to himself; and succession to the property of a son who has been adopted under the Hindu Law, but who marries under the Bill, will also be governed by the Indian Succession Act. Now, it may be, that there is a collateral or a lineal ascendant, who is to succeed to the man who marries under the Bill. The law by which that collateral or ancestor is governed, it may be presumed, is Hindu Law and, yet he will succeed to that man's or his adopted son's property under the Indian Succession Act. Reversing the situation, these persons will succeed to the property of their collaterals or ancestors under the Hindu Law. If it be the case of sons who are to succeed to a person marrying under the Bill, of course the proposed new law clearly provides that it will be the Indian Succession Act that will govern the succession, but in the other case where collateral or lineal succession to the property of an orthodox Hindu is open to the man, marrying under the Bill or his issue, the succession will be governed by Hindu law in spite of the Bill. Then, Sir, I am here reminded of a case of two brothers marrying, one according to this proposed law, and then dying without any issue, but leaving his mother, widow and brother; what then will happen? According to the Indian Succession Act we find that unlike the provisions of the Hindu Law, a division of the estate takes place; that a certain share goes to the widow and the remainder to the children or the children's children or to the kindred, as the case may be, but in lineal succession direct succession stops, with children's children, and does not go further down as in Hindu Law. The proposed law when it comes to be practically applied to such and similar cases will be found sometimes to militate against the principle of both the Mitakshara and the Bengal school of the Hindu law of succession. And if with reference to the same person two different sets of laws under two different conditions are found to be applicable at the same time, I submit to this House, that the greatest confusion will arise in the practical application of the law. The question of succession is not the only question with which we are concerned. We are concerned also with wills. If a man is to be governed by the Hindu Wills Act, then, there are only certain sections of the Indian Succession Act which must be used in interpreting the wills of Hindus but not others. He is also governed by the provisions of the Probate and Administration Act, in this connection, and not by the Indian Succession Act. It must be remembered that there are again certain sections which are applicable under the Indian Succession Act, which are a counterpart of the English law on the subject and they are not applicable to Hindus. Those questions will also have to be disentangled and faced in applying the provisions of the Bill. Sir, these are matters, no doubt, of detail, but the whole question, if it is to be solved at all, will have to be solved by reference to these matters of detail, and by not shutting our eyes to the practical difficulties of the situation. Again, Sir, we have here in this Bill, forbidden adoption, but if we take into account Hindu wills, we shall find that under the Hindu Wills Act, in interpreting the will of a Hindu, it has been laid down that the word 'son' should include an adopted son and a daughter-in-law should include the wife of an adopted son. I could multiply instances of this nature to some extent, but I do not propose to do so. All these difficulties would, however, vanish if a separate and well-defined class was created by the Bill, say "Hindu Dissenters," or something of that sort, but as it is the word "Hindu" without any qualification has been retained in the Bill and the word "Hindu" as it has been authoritatively interpreted means one who professes any form of the Brahmanical religion.

Dr. H. S. Gour: Where is it laid down? Where does a Hindu mean a Sikh or Jaina?

Mr. J. N. Mukherjee: The latter is not the point. I think I am correct in what I have stated. The House has been often told by Dr. Gour that the Privy Council has held that a Brahmo is a Hindu. It is not so. What has been held by the Privy Council is that although a man adopts European habits of life, if he is born a Hindu the birth mark of Hindu sticks to him until there is a formal act of renunciation by him. That is what has been held by the Privy Council in Sardar Dyal Singh's case, and not what my Honourable friend has stated to the House more than once.

Dr. Nand Lal (West Punjab: Non-Muhammadan): Sardar Dyal Singh's case?

Mr. J. N. Mukherjee: Yes. And the House has been told that the Privy Council has decided that Brahmos are Hindu dissenters governed by Hindu Law. This has never been the decision. We have the highest respect for the Privy Council, and I cannot think that they have ever decided anything of that kind. The fine gradations between one defined community and another will always exist, and the line of separation between the larger communities has always to be drawn somewhere, and in the practical application of the law to communities questions of detail will always crop up, which will have to be solved from time to time, by reference to the general principles laid down in the law. I may say that I have paid some attention to the subject, and with all humility, I would ask the House to take it, that I could quote authority for my statement of the law. At page 551 of this book (Henderson's Law of Succession) the House will find it stated that the word "Hindu" mentioned in section 381 of the Indian Succession Act is meant to denote persons professing any form of the Brahmanical religion.

At a time, Sir, when others thought that all complicated questions connected with the original Bill of Dr. Gour's would be satisfactorily solved by the Select Committee, I confess I had my doubts as to such a possible achievement; and, when the Bill emerged from the Select Committee, I found that confusion with reference to matters of law had been worse confounded. All this confusion must have emanated from an anxiety to minister to the desire of a small class of people to appear to be something or to profess to be something, which is not the reality. Well, it is always very difficult to reconcile two different systems of law in one enactment and the difficulty of the situation in the present instance was considered for some seven or eight years by those eminent men who were at the helm of affairs at the time, the Law Members in and before the seventies, and after all the various suggestions for a non-sacramental general marriage law for India were placed before them, they ultimately came to the conclusion that unless persons who belonged to the Hindu, Mussalman, Jaina, Christian, Sikh or Buddhist communities were excluded from its operation, any General Act of the nature of the present Civil Marriage Act, was not possible. Such a General Act, they decided, could not be made applicable to these communities as they had special marriage and succession laws of their own. That was the line of least resistance in fact, the only line possible which was followed by the Legislature in those days. Now we hope to achieve the impossible, or the impracticable. Sir, take the case of a man who marries under the provisions of the Bill and his wife then dies. He continues to be a Hindu, and then he marries a second wife in the Hindu form. He has sons by both wives. Now, what will be the law of succession applicable to the widow and the children? The law of succession in the case of one class of children will be under the Indian Succession Act and in the case of the other class of children, that under the Hindu law. How will they claim their right of succession to their common father and how in each case will the succession be governed?

Sir, I need not detain the House with details of this character, but I should like to draw its attention to one more point, namely, to the case of impartible estates. Sir, suppose a man, who is the possessor of an impartible estate or zamindari, marries under the provisions of the Bill, and dies leaving sons and daughters. What happens? If the Indian Succession Act is to apply to the case, the estate has to be divided. A portion would go to the widow if she survives the husband, one-third in the circumstances, it would be one-half in other circumstances, i.e., if there were no children or lineal descendants but certain other relatives. Now, I ask, again, what will be the law applicable to the succession in such a case? It is very easy for those who are impatient for reforms and things of that kind, to clamour for reformed laws without waiting to examine them, immediately the law is formulated, or even before it is formulated. I do not address myself to that class of impatient reformers, but to those who would calmly think over and consider the situation. Of course, we must admit, that the Honourable Mover of this Bill has behaved like a skilful general, like a Napoleon or a Von Moltke. He believed in the art of defeating the enemy by divisions, and therefore, he thought it proper to exclude from the operation of his Bill, the Muhammadan and other communities who, he thought, might by that means be brought over to his side on his march to victory. Well, I can admire his generalship—his strategy,—but I cannot admire his legislative capacity. He thinks his Bill is good for the class of people who wish to have the benefit of his reforms whatever his Bill for reforms may be, his Bill to amend the Civil Marriage Act, and to amend it practically out of existence, if not to do worse.

Sir, if there is already on the Statute Book a general Act like the present Civil Marriage Act, and if the liberty of conscience which is proclaimed in this House in season and out of season is not in the slightest degree limited or restricted in the case of any marriage performed under that Act, by anything contained in that Act, I submit, Sir, that when there is absolutely no interference with the free exercise of a man's choice, or of his conscience,—in any manner whatsoever, there is hardly any occasion for introducing monstrosities, into our legislative system if I may so characterise a measure of the character proposed by the Bill. Nothing is gained by the process. A new Bill may be framed if anybody thinks that such a Bill ought to be framed for the benefit of mankind, but let it be framed after taking notice of all the difficulties, or, at least, of the fundamental difficulties which exist in connection with legislation of the character proposed by the Honourable Mover. It is very easy to hastily adopt anything that may smell of reform and things like that; but it is quite another thing to legislate for all. One must not consider himself merely as a separated individual airing his own opinion, in such circumstances, but when he is supposed to legislate for everybody within the reach of his authority, he must place himself in that position of trust and take note of and realize all the difficulties of the situation. We have had already instances of incongruities arising out of the Bill placed before the House, and are they going to be completely ignored? And again, what do I find in the personnel of the Select Committee? No one, I find, from Bengal, or Bihar and Orissa, Assam or the United Provinces likely to be affected by the Bill, was on the Select Committee,—only Bombay, Madras and the Central Provinces, were represented on that Committee. Sir, the world has been going on as before all this time. Then, why when the whole of the original Bill has been changed, lock, stock and barrel,—when practically nothing remains of its identity, there should be such hurry about it? It took my breath away when I found that even under such circumstances, the Committee did not think that the Bill should be re-circulated. It is said that the opinions urged against the original Bill have been sufficiently met by the revised Bill, and its sponsors cannot therefore agree to its re-publication. They fail, however, to consider that new principles have been enunciated in the amended Bill, a new process of hybridisation has been started which did not exist before, and the country is perhaps gazing with wonder and curiosity upon a new legislation of the kind, formulated by the Bill. Here is a patchwork on the fabric of our Statute Book, and nobody knows as yet, how it will succeed in working itself harmoniously into the existing texture. These, Sir, I venture to think, are weighty considerations which have to be taken into account. This amended Bill was never circulated with a view to obtain opinion thereon. The important questions of principle involved in the amended Bill, the deviations from the scheme of the original Bill, were never placed before the country, and opinion was never obtained thereon. I submit, Sir, there never was a better case for re-circulation than in the case of the present Bill. I beg to support the motion for re-circulation.

Mr. S. O. Shahani: (Sind Jagirdars and Zamindars: Landholders): Sir, I beg to oppose the amendment that has been proposed, namely, that the Bill be re-circulated for opinion. I fail to understand what further opinion would be forthcoming on the Bill if it were re-circulated. The scope of the Bill has been restricted and I suppose it is the intention of some of those who have supported this amendment to have it ascertained if those who are for more thorough going reform would oppose the Bill on account of its restrictive character. That then would not be, I take it, the intention of those who are supporting the amendment. According to me no useful purpose will be served by once again referring it to Local Governments and to local bodies for their opinion. As we know, something is better than nothing. It is to me ludicrous that Sikhs should be distinguished from Hindus. In our Province Sikhs marry freely from among the Hindus, and the Hindus marry freely from among the Sikhs. But in Gujrat and Kathiawar, for instance, a Bunnia cannot marry from a Sikh family and a Sikh cannot take to wife a Bunnia girl; and if this Bill can in places like Gujrat afford some relief, I do not understand why we should not welcome it. Why should spouses be compelled anywhere to forswear themselves before marriage by declaring that they belong to no religion. It is very desirable that we should for homogeneity go in for inter-marriage. I am on that account very sorry that the scope of the Bill has been restricted. I was hoping to see that permission would be granted to Muhammadans to intermarry with Hindus and vice versa in these days of advancing social progress. I am greatly disappointed. I must confess that Muhammadans, Parsis and Christians have been excluded; but as I have said, something is better than nothing, and we should therefore whole-heartedly go in for the measure under consideration, which will, I hope, be passed by the House.

Mr. Pyari Lal (Meerut Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, as a Jaina, on behalf of my community I most strongly support the amendment which has been moved by Mr. Bhargava. Before I proceed any further, Sir, I am bound to say that I am a little surprised at the attitude which my Honourable friend, Mr. Shahani, has taken up in this matter. Of all persons in the world I expected that he would repudiate most the idea of a man being false to himself. As I take it, under this Bill you make a declaration that you are a Hindu or a Jaina or a Buddhist or a Sikh, and yet by the very provisions of the Act you put yourself beyond the pale of Hinduism and beyond the pale of the social and religious laws of the Jainas and Sikhs. For instance, a most cherished principle either among Jainas or among Buddhists or Hindus is that of adoption. This Bill takes away that. One of their most cherished principles is that marriage is a sacramental right the object of which is that the father should derive some spiritual benefit from his having sons. The Hindu joint family which is the unit of Hindu society and not the individual as in European countries, that Hindu family will be broken up because of this Bill. Their cherished laws of succession which have been handed down for generations for so many centuries will be absolutely demolished by a stroke of the pen of Dr. Gour. Now, Sir, when he does all those things, I wonder whether there is any Hinduism left; yet he wants to go before the world and he wants to be a Hindu. (Dr. Gour here interrupted the speaker.) Please do not disturb me because I am sitting near you, therefore, it does not mean that I should be disturbed like this. The man is pledged to stultify himself. It is said by Dr. Gour "Oh, under the Act of 1872 a Hindu in reality, in order to contract a marriage, has to make a declaration that he is not a Hindu. He was false to himself." But under the present law, I say, a man wants to be a Hindu and yet not a Hindu. How is he going to reconcile that position? Therefore, I submit under this Bill the position is worse than under the former Bill. Well, Sir, the observations made by my Honourable friend from Burma in regard to Buddhists apply with equal force to Jainas in this country, and I have their authority to state in this Council as emphatically as I possibly can, that they too oppose this measure tooth and nail. Sir, my learned friend, skilful lawyer that he is, in order to placate his Muhammadan colleagues in this Assembly and Members of other communities, has exempted them from the operation of this Act, thereby thinking to win them over to his side. Now he wants to concentrate his affections on the Hindu and Jaina communities and I always turns up. But this time it has come to us in its most ugly form, I say, it is neither fish, flesh nor red-herring. At first, it pretended to be something, but now it is mutilated in such a way and has introduced changes of such far-reaching character that its re-submission to the public is inevitable. How are the people to know the Bill in its present form? The Select Committee's Report was put into our hands only two days ago and Dr. Gour introduced it only last week. The public had no opportunity of considering the measure as to how far they can agree with it and how far they cannot. Under these circumstances, I defer going into the merits of the question any further, and I would strongly support the proposition that the Bill be re-circulated for public opinion.

(Voices from several parts of the House "The question be now put.")

The motion that the question be put was adopted.

Dr. H. S. Gour: Sir, I shall very briefly reply

Dr. Nand Lal: I thought the order of the Chair was that the question be now put.

Dr. H. S. Gour: I shall not take up the time of the House a minute longer than is absolutely necessary. Nine Honourable Members have spoken on this subject, five are in favour of the principle of the Bill and four are for circulation, but their social complexion I was not able to clearly discern. Now, Sir, I ask one question. Suppose this Bill goes back to the country for eliciting public opinion. What public opinions are likely to enlighten this House? Surely this House is the forum of public opinion and we are the representatives of the public opinion in the country, and all that could be said of the pros and cons has already been said by the protagonists of the measure and its opponents. A very large number of members complain that if this provision is passed into law, it would deprive the Hindus of certain valued rights and thus place them in a much worse position than they are at present. That was an argument which I met at the outset of my speech. Did I not point out to the House that the measure is a purely permissive measure and it makes absolutely no advance upon the existing law unless you wish to take advantage of the special provisions which have been inserted. You may turn an absolutely deaf ear and a blind eye to these provisions. Treat them as if they were non-existent. How are you damaged by its provisions? That, I submit, is a short question and a short answer to my friend Mr. Basu who says "what about the Burmese Buddhists?" Burmese Buddhists have to tear up their copy of the Statute there if they do not wish to abide themselves by its provisions. If you wish to come under the provisions of this measure, you are subject to certain disabilities and entitled to certain rights. You contract the marriage with your eyes open, and after that you have no right to complain. If you do not wish to take advantage of the provisions of this Bill, you are at liberty to ignore it. Well, that is my answer to a very large number of friends who have spoken and emphasised upon the disabilities which this Bill casts upon those contracting marriages under my Bill. I have already said, Sir, that they need not marry under this Bill; they can continue to make false declarations of which they complain under Act III of 1872. It remains unaffected by the supplementary provisions which this Bill seeks to add to Act III of 1872. Then, Sir, it has been 5 P.M. said public opinion has not been consulted. Now, I wish to ask the Honourable Members whether public opinion has not been consulted. (An Honourable Member: "No.") I think those who cry "No!" must have for the time being forgotten that elementary axiom with which we start the study of Euclid, namely, that the greater includes the less. When on the larger measure public opinion was consulted, on this narrower and more restricted measure public opinion need not have been consulted and all the objections of which we know and which have been presented to us, not during the last 10 or 12 years but during the last 50 years, have been considered and given effect to, so far as it was necessary, in the Select Committee. I submit those who oppose this measure, those who want that we must once more go to the country for the purpose of eliciting public opinion, are trailing a red-herring. If they are honestly opposed to the Bill, let them move a motion that the Bill itself be rejected. Let them not, I submit, deliver a flank attack on the measure. And those of my friends who profess to be supporters of the measure and yet desire to widen its scope, I warn them that no public opinion, no delay is likely to widen the scope of the Bill because the more you widen it the more opposition it is likely to receive from the orthodox section of the community.

[Dr. H. S. Gour.]

I make no secret of the fact that the Bill is a compromise and you cannot justify all the provisions of a compromise. You must take it as a whole or not at all. That is my answer to my friends who say I have gone too far. That is my answer to my friends who say I have not gone far enough. I say, Sir, I have taken a middle course and that middle course I ask this House to endorse by their vote.

Mr. President: The original question was:

"That the Report of the Select Committee on the Bill further to amend the Special Marriage Act, 1872, be taken into consideration."

Since which an amendment has been moved:

"That the Bill as reported by the Select Committee be re-circulated for the purpose of obtaining further opinion thereon."

The question I have to put is that the Bill be re-circulated.

The Assembly divided.

The motion was negatived.

Mr. President: Clause 2.

Mr. J. N. Basu: The clause includes Buddhists. It says:

"The following words shall be inserted, namely:
'and for persons who profess the Hindu, Buddhist, Sikh or Jaina religion'."

From the Statement of Objects and Reasons, the Select Committee mean apparently the Indian Buddhists. Reference is not made to Burmese Buddhists or Chinese Buddhists in Burma. As their wishes have not been consulted,—I have said that their personal law is different and this Bill affects seriously the Burmese Buddhists and Chinese Buddhists. Therefore, I submit that the word 'Buddhists' may be deleted, or at least that Burmese Buddhists and Chinese Buddhists may be excluded from the operation of this Bill. I move therefore my amendment.*

Mr. President: Amendment moved in clause 2:

"Omit the word 'Buddhist'."

The amendment was negatived.

Clauses 2 to 4 were added to the Bill.

Mr. President: The question is that clause 5 stand part of the Bill.

Dr. Nand Lal: I rise to a point of order. We have not had a sufficient debate so far as opposition to this motion is concerned.

Mr. President: I do not catch the Honourable Member's point of order.

Clause 5 was added to the Bill.

Clause 1 was added to the Bill.

The Title and Preamble to the Bill were added.

Dr. H. S. Gour: I move that the Bill be passed.

Dr. Nand Lal: So far as I know, no measure of this character has excited so much criticism and hostility as this Bill has done. You know this is a private Bill and a private Bill can be passed only when the community which is concerned with it approves of it. There is no approval of that kind here. In any case, no need or necessity for this Bill is shown in the form of a Resolution or expression of opinion at the bar of the public. But on the contrary, the whole orthodox Hindu community is against it. (Cries of "No, no.") (Cries of "Yes, yes.") Barring Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas's community whom he represents, as he says (Cries of "No, no.") The other day in Delhi there was a big meeting and in that meeting Resolutions were passed unanimously and, if I mistake not, a copy of those Resolutions was sent to the Government of India and to us, the representatives of the people of this country. If I were to give my individual opinion, perhaps I may not have opposed the motion, but I am here to represent the views of the public and echo their voice. Therefore, I feel constrained to oppose this Bill. Marriage with the Hindus is a sacrament. It is not a contractual tie. They look upon this measure as an encroachment upon and a dreadful violation of the sanctity of their personal law. They cannot tolerate this sort of measure which may violate the sacred canons and principles which are involved in the sacred Hindu Shastras, which are the outcome of the brain and intelligence of the great Jurists Manu and other Hindu Law-givers. A good many novel expressions have been used on the floor of this House. Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas has coined and so often repeated the phrase "liberty of conscience". In the first place the phrase is inapplicable here. I remember an anecdote—A thief, who had committed a theft. When asked why he stooped to this crime, he said "It is according to the liberty of my conscience. Because I wanted to relieve the big sowkar (rich man) of his excessive wealth—a burden of anxieties. I have acted up to my conscience." Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas, do you seriously take it as liberty of conscience, when a man falls a victim to passions and vicious impulses?

* "Omit the word 'Buddhist'."

Mr. President: I think the Honourable Member had better address the Chair.

Dr. Nand Lal: Sir, is it liberty of conscience if a man violates the canons and the sanctity of one's personal law? I think no Member in this House, who has got respect for his own religion and faith, will come forward and say that an infringement of personal law can be taken synonymous with or equal to the liberty of so-called conscience. I may say, the word "Conscience" is a relative term. Conscience among robbers is to rob others. Conscience among honest people may be to act up to a certain standard of honesty. But really the question of the liberty of conscience has got no force whatsoever here. Will any orthodox Hindu have the courage of saying that this Bill is an improvement? To my mind, so far as the useful institution of adoption is concerned, it seems to be violated, it seems to be mutilated. I think, Sir, that when a law is to be made, the first thing which should be given prominence by every legislator is the view of the people whom that law is going to govern.

(At this stage Mr. Deputy President took the Chair.)

How can you thrust a law on any community when the whole community is opposed to it? Has the author of this measure any sort of support from any quarter? Not at all. There has been opposition after opposition. Take the United Provinces (I say this subject to correction). Take the Punjab. Take Delhi. And what is this Bill after all? I submit, an unnecessary burden on our Statute Book. The Muhammadans are very lucky, very intelligent. They are out of the clutches of this. I should give them great credit for their wisdom, for the sincerity which they have evinced on this occasion, in paying due regard to the sacred principles of their Muhammadan law. They in the last debate on this measure said—"No, we are not going to countenance a measure of this character. We are Muhammadans. We have got better character and calibre." It is the Hindus who have shown their weakness, who have shown, I may be allowed to say, that they have not so much respect for their religion, and for their sacred and wholesome canons. This is a direct violation of the sanctity of orthodox principles. And, Sir, the Mover said in this House that "after all I have met the various objections that were raised by the Members of the Select Committee." In other words, he admits that the Bill as it stood originally has been mutilated. What is then the object he has in view? Simply to show that he is the author of a certain Bill. On the one hand he says that the stringency of the law, as embodied in the original Bill, has been removed; on the other hand he still holds very vehemently and urges that this Bill, as it has been recommended by the Select Committee, may be accepted. I do not find any consistency in that at all. There should be some good object in passing a measure, which, to a certain extent, directly contravenes the views of the people. The other day, on the floor of this House, a number of speeches were made, when we were discussing the question of salt, to the effect that it was the voice of the people, the opinion of the people of this country against the proposed increase in duty, and, therefore, we felt constrained to oppose it. Can any one here, especially the Hindus, say with any show of force that there is public opinion in support of this measure? Not at all. Can any gentleman, who is an advocate of this measure, place on the table any appreciable and sufficient expression of opinion, favouring this Bill? If I were the author of a private measure I would place my cards on the table and I would have said, "here is the necessity for this measure, here you can see I have been pressed to put forward this measure before the House." There is no support, no moral support even, no support backed up by the opinion of the orthodox people at any rate, and, yet, this measure is being passed, a measure which is diametrically opposed to the sacred views of the orthodox Hindus in this country. And I am sorry to say that after all the whole Assembly will be considered responsible for passing this measure, which is uncalled for and which is wicked and vicious altogether. What good will be done, Sir? The object, as I have submitted before to the House with which this Bill brought forward, most probably was that to a certain extent it may bring about the political unity of different classes of various religious in this country. Now the Muhammadan community does not come within the purview of this Bill; where is the political object? That argument loses force at once. The natural result of this measure will be that this Assembly will be criticised, and very rightly criticised, especially, by the orthodox Hindu community.

Another argument which has been advanced by the Honourable author of this measure is that the Honourable Mr. Rangachariar has subscribed to it and some other gentlemen have subscribed to it who are strong advocates of orthodoxy—these gentlemen have yielded. Well, they may have yielded for reasons best known to themselves. But I would submit before this House that after all you cannot ignore the feelings of the largest majority of the other orthodox people. They are, in fact, in the large majority and if you are going to set their sacred views at naught, there will then, I am afraid, be discontent and unfortunately the Government of India will, to a certain extent, be wrongly held responsible, by some ill informed critics, though it is the work of one or only some of us. I may say at once here, that our Government is not responsible for this measure at all. With these few remarks I strongly oppose this motion and I submit that this Bill be not passed at all.

Bhai Man Singh: I had given notice of these amendments. I do not know what has happened to them. At least I was in the Hall and I did not hear my names being called. I should like to know whether they have been ruled out of order.

Mr. Deputy President: I am afraid I am not in a position to help the Honourable Member. It was his duty to be here and protect his own rights.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar (Madras City: Non-Muhammadan): Sir, I am very proud indeed to have a neighbour so staunch, so eloquent in defence of orthodoxy, in defence of Hindu sentiments and feelings. Sir, it reminded me of our habit, when I saw my Honourable friend, on his feet, of being afraid of dead cobras. When we see a cobra on the road, dead or alive, we always get afraid. That is the feeling which came upon me when I heard my Honourable friend, Dr. Nand Lal, haranguing against this proposed measure. Sir, I have been accused of unholy alliance in having concerted with Dr. Gour. Sir, there is an unholy alliance over this Bill. It is a Civil Marriage Bill and a Civil Death Bill. We have conceded by the proposed measure all that can reasonably be conceded to orthodoxy of the most rigorous type. What is it that man wants? He wants a son who will perform his shraddhas and what else can be a greater loss to him than the loss of a son. Here, by this measure if a son is so dead to his parent's sentiments that he feels so strong on such a point that he would marry in the way he likes, you give him liberty and at the same time you liberate the parents from possessing such a son; and therefore Dr. Gour was perfectly right; when he advocated liberty of action on the part of one, he freely conceded liberty of action on the part of the others also whose happiness is involved by the liberty of action of this individual; so that, Sir, the compromise effected in this case concedes rights to individuals, concedes also liberty of action to others. My Honourable friends complained, who are whole-hoggers in this reform like my friend Munshi Iswar Saran, "Why not retain for him all the personal law of the Hindu, why do you allow him to marry and deprive him of the personal law of succession, adoption and all that?" Let us think about it a little. Who are the people who are likely to marry under these special provisions? Persons who are grown up and, who are so imbued with love, and decide to act, that is to say, sentiments of love come into play in this case, and drive them to this course because it is a marriage which will take place after the man or woman has begun to be capable of thinking for himself or herself. So it is a marriage of love, which we all respect. In such cases if you allow personal law to come into play, what will happen? According to the personal law of the Hindus, the sons take everything to the detriment of the daughters. The sons take everything to the exclusion of the widow. Therefore, in a case like this, what is the injustice in allowing a different Law of Succession to prevail? The man marries a woman and she contracts this alliance and both of them, as society now stands, will be put out of it, by contracting such an alliance. Therefore the woman stands to gain by the provision we have made, and the man stands to gain by the provision we have made in that the sons will not exclude the parent from inheritance. That is a great advantage. The daughters of this marriage will get a share in the estate of the parent. So that there was every advantage in applying this Indian Succession Act to alliances of this sort. If people are willing to resort to this course, why should we prevent them from resorting to it? Is Hinduism going to be affected by this? Your home is safe; your joint families are safe; your religious trusts are safe; your charity is safe; where is the danger to society? I fear, and that fear is not unaccompanied with a feeling of joy also, that very few people will really resort to this form of marriage, and if they do, they are not worthy of keeping in society—I mean from the point of view of the people who oppose it. If people are prepared to leave our society and contract this form of alliance with their eyes open that the personal law of the Hindus will not apply to them, then why should the family care for such people? Therefore I do not see why any reasonable objection should be taken to this measure. Sir, orthodoxy is not blind to world forces; I wish to emphasize that proposition by my attitude to this Bill as recast.

Mr. N. M. Joshi (Nominated: Labour Interests): Sir, I do not wish to make a long speech on this occasion, but I thought it was my duty not to allow this occasion to pass without saying one word in appreciation of the services rendered by my Honourable friend, Dr. Gour. Sir, as my friend, Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas has said, this is a matter of the freedom of conscience for the progressive section of the Hindu community, and if there had been a fight, it was a fight for this principle. There are a large number of Hindus who, when they marry, have to renounce their religion, and this Bill only helps them to retain their religion and marry among themselves. This Bill has done nothing more than this. Sir, while we pressed forward this reform we were not oblivious of the rights of the orthodox section of the Hindu community. If we wanted our freedom of conscience to be preserved, we were anxious to recognise the right of the orthodox section for their freedom of conscience, and with that object in view, we made every concession that was required to be made, and the fact that my Honourable friend, Mr. Rangachariar is in favour of this Bill ought to satisfy any orthodox member of this Assembly. (Honourable Members: "No, no.") Sir, I do not wish to argue this point in order to satisfy those Members of this Assembly who are not yet satisfied. I hope time will change their attitude if nothing else will. Sir, on behalf of the progressive section of the Hindu community I therefore offer a hearty vote of thanks to my Honourable friend, Dr. Gour.

Sir P. S. Sivaswamy Aiyer (Tanjore cum Trichinopoly: Non-Muhamadan Rural): Sir, I wish to say a few words in support of the proposition which has been moved by my Honourable friend, Dr. Gour. In the first place I think we ought to congratulate him upon the persistency with which he has piloted this measure in the face of very considerable opposition, and congratulate him upon the success which has so far attended his efforts, and will, I believe, crown his efforts this evening. The fact that the Bill as it has emerged from the Select Committee has exposed Dr. Gour to a fire from all sides is, I think, some proof of the earnest attempt which has been made by the Select Committee to meet all reasonable objections. He has been exposed to criticism from those gentlemen who think that this Bill ought never to have been launched. He has been exposed to criticism from gentlemen who think that it has not gone far enough to meet the views of the social reformers. On a former occasion when Dr. Gour sought to introduce this Bill, I put forward the necessity for providing safeguards in the interests of those members of the orthodox community who might entertain a reasonable objection to being put to any hardship or inconvenience by such marriages being contracted by members of their families. The objections which I put forward on the last occasion have been met, the safeguards which I desired have been provided. I do not think that it can be reasonably suggested that the orthodox relations of a person who wishes to contract a marriage in this form are likely to be put to any hardship at all by reason of the provisions of this Bill. Now, if the question merely were what is the sentiment of the community at large which is likely to be effected by this measure, I must admit that that sentiment will be almost entirely against Dr. Gour's legislation. If I vote in favour of this legislation, it is not because I flatter myself or flatter my conscience that it is in accordance with the sentiments of the orthodox Hindu community at large, but it is because I think that a higher consideration comes into play, namely, the liberty of the conscience of the individual.

(At this stage Mr. President resumed the Chair.)

[Sir P. S. Sivaswamy Aiyer.]

No community has any right to dictate to any individual that he shall be obliged to make a declaration against his conscience if he wishes to take a particular line of action in regard to one of the most solemn relationships of life. It is because I felt that the cause of liberty of conscience was sacred and must override other considerations that I have supported the introduction of this Bill. On the one hand it grants that liberty of conscience, which all civilised Governments must recognise and which the Government of India has always recognised in its past legislation. It is that principle which has underlain the Freedom of Religion Act and many other measures affecting Hindu society. Much of the opposition to this Bill is due to the fact that people do not sufficiently realise the changes which have already been brought about by the Freedom of Religion Act. It is because people think that the Freedom of Religion Act has made no encroachment upon Hindu usages that they think that Dr. Gour's Bill makes a novel and unprecedented attack upon Hindu usages. Now I think the principle of individual liberty requires that we should grant to the individual the right to contract a marriage without being put to the necessity of making a false declaration. On the other hand, I do not think that this principle of individual liberty gives any right to a person to cause any serious inconvenience to the members of the family from which he separates by his conduct. The attitude of some of those gentlemen who criticised Dr. Gour's Bill as amended by the Select Committee is that while departing from actual Hindu usages and customs, they should have all the privileges conferred upon Hindus—without any of the responsibilities or duties forming part of such customs. That, I think, is a proposition which is not demanded by the exigencies of the principle of individual liberty. You have no right, if you depart from social usages to inflict your company upon those relations who wish to remain in the orthodox fold and from whose ways you have parted. Nor have you any right to thrust upon your orthodox relations heirs to their property whom according to the existing usages they would not be bound to recognise. These would be objections founded not merely on sentimental but on reasonable grounds, and the Bill as amended by the Select Committee has provided for all these reasonable objections. It is because I think the Bill has met all possible reasonable objections which may be urged in orthodox circles, and on the other hand, it recognises that principle of individual liberty which has been in the past acted upon by the Government in legislation of this kind, that I vote in favour of the motion.

Mr. Harchandrai Vishindas (Sind: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, although it is not an illegal practice, still I think it is rather a novel practice and I do not remember its having been followed at any time previously, that after a Bill has been passed, clause by clause, when the Mover moves for its passing, there is opposition raised. But there was one particular occasion for that in the present instances. That is, that Dr. Nand Lal has been honestly feeling very strongly on this question, and as he did not get any opportunity in the course of the debate to speak, I am glad he has ventilated his grievances sufficiently and of those whom he considers he represents here.

But some remarks have fallen from some other Honourable Members in the course of the debate which require to be answered. Now, great play has been made with the fact that the Hindu marriage is a great sacrament and not a civil contract. Well, what follows? Supposing this Bill is passed, is this sacramental nature of Hindu marriage going to be changed? So far as this sacramental nature of marriage as recognised in Hindu law, is concerned, certainly not. Then again those people who are great sticklers for every particular form of Hindu law forget that thousands and thousands of years have elapsed since the great Manu laid down his laws, and forget in how many directions we have undergone changes, revolutionary changes, in the Hindu law. Mr. Pyari Lal was very keen on the fact that we are violating the principles of Hindu law, that we are offending against Hindu law because this form of marriage was not recognised by the Hindu law. Is that so? Is there any passage in the law laid down by Manu which would go against a marriage of this kind? I think this point need not be laboured at great length. The very dresses that you are wearing, the very atmosphere that you are breathing, the very food that we are eating in many cases is not strictly orthodox as it existed in the days of Manu. Without naming names, but only looking in that direction, I can point out people who have opposed Dr. Gour's Bill and ask them whether they really adhere to all the rules of clothing and diet and other things that prevailed amongst Hindus. Certainly not. I think we shall be false to our education, we shall not be true to the civilization which we have inherited if we did not adapt ourselves to the changing circumstances. Therefore all those sentimental objections that have been raised to the Bill, according to me, are of no value whatever. Now, Sir, this Bill recognises a very great principle. What does it recognise? Briefly summed up, it is to put it in a nutshell, contained in a proverb which prevails both in Hindustani and other vernaculars, namely: Mian bibi rasi to kya kerega qazi. "If husband and wife are agreed, then why is it the business of anybody else to interfere?" Therefore, I say that those people who are opposing this Bill are doing great violence to this great principle of freedom which has been recognised in all countries. Why, an Englishman can marry an Irishwoman or a Frenchwoman; but a Brahmin cannot marry a Kshatriya, nor a Vaisya. Why should that be so? Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas tells me—his knowledge of Hindu law is better than mine—that in old days it was allowed.

However, there was one remark in this connection which must not be allowed to go unchallenged. Mr. Rangachariar has found himself in a dual position. Having been a member of the Select Committee and having attempted his best to truncate the Bill to the utmost possible limits—for which I am very sorry and I share the disappointment of Mr. Shahani,—he has signed the report of the Select Committee and by doing so has roused the ire of those of his orthodox colleagues who had seen him valiantly and with great pleasure fighting the battles of orthodoxy before the Bill went to the Select Committee. Now, Sir, finding this inconsistency of the dual position, when he was attacked here, he managed to reconcile his irreconcilable position by making a sneering attack upon those who will take advantage of this Act and marry according to its principle; and the remarks that he made—with due submission and with all the respect that is always due to him—were rather unwarranted. He said that these marriages will be love marriages and therefore he did not oppose them. But a man who takes advantage of the Act and marries under it will be like an outcaste; he should be driven out of society. That is to say, he is against this Act being taken advantage of. Now, Sir, I ask him to reflect as to what was the original object of the author of this Bill as well as of his predecessors to have brought about this Bill? Cases which Mr. Rangachariar condemns will be, I say, only one in a million. The cases for which Dr. Gour, Mr. Patel and Mr. Basu were striving to provide for are cases of inter-caste marriages which are at present prohibited. According to a ruling that was quoted by Munshi Iswar Saran, the Allahabad High Court ruled that a marriage between a Brahmin and a Kshatriya was null and void, and I say, Sir, with all confidence that in 99 cases out of 100, advantage of this Act will be taken by men with the consent of their parents. When there is a Brahmin and a Kshatriya family who are very friendly to each other, when the Brahmin father wishes his Brahmin son to be married to his friend Kshatriya's daughter, then alone these marriages will be contracted, and does Mr. Rangachariar dare say that that man becomes an outcaste and unworthy of society? Certainly not. There may be very rare instances of such a nature as are contemplated by Mr. Rangachariar, but I think the original object of the authors of this Bill has always been to provide for those hard cases, those cases which are an outrage to society, where man and woman come under the pale of different societies, under different labels, and are prevented from marrying each other on account of the existence of such a horrid law. If they come together, if both love together, is it not a much better marriage than when two people are forcibly brought together? Do the latter class of marriages prove happy marriages? If this Bill has for its object the provision for all kinds of marriages, it is a Bill that we should heartily welcome, and let me add my congratulations to those that have been very rightly heaped upon Dr. Gour by Mr. Joshi and Sir Sivaswamy Aiyer by saying that where the great Basu failed, and where Mr. Patel failed, Dr. Gour has succeeded, and it is another feather in his cap and a crown of glory.

(Cries of 'The question be now put' from different parts of the House.)

The motion that the question be put was adopted.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That the Bill further to amend the Special Marriage Act, 1872, as amended, be passed."

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

Saturday, 24th March, 1923.

The Assembly met in the Assembly Chamber at Eleven of the Clock.
Mr. President was in the Chair.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

NUMBER OF MEMBERS OF LEGISLATURES.

617. Mr. Mohammad Ahsan Khan: (a) Will the Government be pleased to give the number of Members of:

- (i) Council of State;
- (ii) Legislative Assembly;
- (iii) Madras Legislative Council;
- (iv) Bombay Legislative Council;
- (v) Bengal Legislative Council;
- (vi) United Provinces Legislative Council;
- (vii) Punjab Legislative Council;
- (viii) Bihar and Orissa Legislative Council;
- (ix) Central Provinces Legislative Council; and
- (x) Assam Legislative Council who became the recipients of Indian titles during the years 1921, 1922 and up to 1st January, 1923?

(b) Is it a fact or not that the United Provinces Legislative Council gives a greater number than any other Council?

Mr. Denys Bray: The information asked for is not available. It could only be obtained by a reference to Local Governments but the expenditure of time and labour in making these inquiries would be incommensurate with the value of the results to be obtained.

Mr. S. O. Shahani: Will Government be pleased to state if the Members of Council referred to in the question have been the recipients of titles for services rendered inside or outside the Councils or both inside and outside?

Mr. Denys Bray: The question sounds so complicated to my ears that I must ask for notice.

ASSISTANTS TO DIRECTOR GENERAL, POST OFFICE.

618. Mr. K. O. Neogy: (a) Is it a fact that the Director General of Post offices had one Deputy Director General and one Personal Assistant, associated with him in his office at Simla and Delhi, prior to the creation of a Deputy Postmaster General's appointment for Sind and Baluchistan, last year?

(b) Is it a fact that the post of Personal Assistant to the Director General was abolished on the creation of the Deputy Postmaster Generalship for Sind and Baluchistan?

(c) Is it a fact that an appointment of Assistant Director General has recently been transferred from the main office in Calcutta to Delhi, although the section of which he held charge is in Calcutta; and has not this practically resulted in the substitution of the post of Personal Assistant by a higher appointment in the office of the Director General?

Colonel Sir Sydney Crookshank: (a) and (b). Up to March, 1922, the Director General had at Simla and Delhi one Deputy Director General of the Post Office and one Personal Assistant. The appointment of the latter was abolished from the 1st April, 1922, but its abolition was in no way connected with the creation of an appointment of Deputy Postmaster General for Sind and Baluchistan.

(c) The Assistant Director General in charge of the Establishment Branch has been transferred to the Simla Delhi office as a matter of administrative convenience. Establishment cases which require special care in preparation are dealt with by the Deputy Director General who is stationed in Simla and Delhi and it is convenient for him to have the Assistant Director General who works up these cases close at hand rather than in Calcutta. This arrangement has not resulted in the replacement of the post of Personal Assistant by a higher appointment.

RECOMMENDATIONS OF ARMS RULES COMMITTEE.

619. Baba Ujagar Singh Bedi: Will Government be able to give the information to this House in this Session regarding my question No. 367?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: The Honourable Member is referred to the statement I made in the House on the 22nd February. A letter is under issue to Local Governments on certain questions of detail and we are asking for very early replies.

BABU WISAKHA RAM, REGISTRATION CLERK.

620. Dr. Nand Lal: (a) Will the Government be pleased to state if Babu Wisakha Ram, Registration clerk, Post Office Multan City, was tried, under section 52, Act- 6, 1898, in May, 1922, for the theft of an insured bundle containing two insured articles for Rs. 1,200 each?

(b) Was he discharged by the City Magistrate who tried him?

(c) Has Babu Wisakha Ram been re-instated after his discharge?

(d) Did he receive the pay of the period of suspension and the expenses incurred in his defence.

(e) Has he submitted any representation to the Postmaster General, Punjab?

(f) If answer to the above is in the affirmative, will the Government be pleased to lay a copy of it (representation) on the table of this House, and state as to what response was given?

(g) What are the expenses that the Government incurred in the case against said Wisakha Ram?

Colonel Sir Sydney Crookshank: (a), (b) and (c). Yes.

(d) Babu Wisakha Ram will get full pay for the period of his suspension when the case is finally settled on receipt of the decision of the Court on the Civil Suit filed by the sender of the article. His application for expenses incurred in his defence has not yet been received by the Postmaster General, Punjab and North-West Frontier.

(e) No.

(f) In view of what has just been stated, these questions do not arise.

(g) The required information is not available.

CONVICTIONS UNDER FRONTIER CRIMES REGULATION.

621. Dr. Nand Lal: Will the Government be pleased to state as to (a) how many men have been bound over under section 40 of the Frontier Crimes Regulation with effect from January, 1920, to May, 1922;

(b) how many of them are still in jail on account of their not having given security;

(c) in what jails they are confined?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: The information is being collected and will be supplied when available.

CONVICTION OF PANDIT AMIR CHAND BAMBWAL AND HAKIM ABDUL JALIL.

622. Dr. Nand Lal: (1) Is Government of India aware that Pandit Amir Chand Bambwal and Hakim Abdul Jalil, of Peshawar City, were under section 40, of Frontier Crimes Regulation, bound over to furnish security of Rs. 10,000 each for the period of three years?

(2) If the answer to question No. 1 be in affirmative, will they be pleased to lay on table the copy of that order?

(3) Is Government of India aware that they have failed to furnish security and are undergoing rigorous imprisonment?

(4) If so, will the Government be pleased to state as to what jail they are confined in?

(5) Will the Government of India be pleased to state as to whether it is a fact that the aforesaid Pandit Amir Chand and Hakim Abdul Jalil, were bound over because they were agitating for the amalgamation of the North-West Frontier Province with the Punjab?

(6) If the answer to question No. 5 be in negative, will the Government be pleased to state the cause of and ground on which they were so bound over?

(7) Will the Government of India be pleased to state as to why so excessive security, for rupees ten thousand each and for so long a period of three years was demanded?

(8) Will the Government of India be pleased to state that the aforesaid Pandit Amir Chand or Hakim Abdul Jalil had asked for a copy of the documents alluded to in the aforesaid order, dated the 22nd February, 1921, and it was refused?

(9) Is it true that they (the aforesaid Pandit Amir Chand and Hakim Abdul Jalil) applied within time to give evidence personally or in writing before the North-West Frontier Committee, and they either were not allowed to do so or no answer was given to them?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: The information is being collected and will be supplied when available.

NORTH-WEST FRONTIER PROVINCE JUDICIARY.

623. Dr. Nand Lal: (1) Is Government of India aware that a large section of the people of North-West Frontier Province are very anxious that it or at least its judiciary may be amalgamated with the Punjab?

(2) If answer to this be in affirmative, will the Government of India be pleased to say when are they going to appreciate people's wishes and order the aforesaid amalgamation?

Mr. Denys Bray: Government are not aware that the section who desire amalgamation in any form is large relatively to the size of the section who oppose it. As the Honourable Member is aware the whole question is now under the consideration of Government.

WORKING OF INCOME-TAX DEPARTMENT.

624. Dr. Nand Lal: (1) Is Government of India aware that there is a great discontent and dissatisfaction owing to the ill-treatment of the Income-tax Department with Assesseees in the Punjab?

(2) Is the Government of India aware that some questions, in connection with the aforesaid treatment of the income-tax Department were submitted in the Punjab Provincial Council by a certain Member of that Council and were not allowed to be asked, because the income-tax was a Central subject?

(3) Is Government of India aware that in the Punjab, in some cases the income-tax returns duly verified and signed by the assesseees were wrongly disbelieved and assesseees were unduly put to hardship?

(4) Is Government of India aware that in the Punjab in some cases, the income-tax assessors summon a large number of busy and respectable assesseees on a certain day for the examination of their accounts and they or their Munims have, in some cases, to come again and again and in some cases they are unduly detained and put to a great hardship?

(5) Is Government of India aware that, in the Punjab, there were a number of complaints, against certain income-tax assessors and officers, to the Local Government?

(6) If answer to question No. 5 be in affirmative, will the Government of India be pleased to state as to what action was taken on those complaints?

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: The replies to parts (1), (3) and (4) are in the negative, and the reply to part (2) is in the affirmative.

(5) and (6). One complaint against an income-tax assessment from a firm in Amritsar was received by the Punjab Government and forwarded to the Government of India. The Board of Inland Revenue have asked the complainant to address the Commissioner of Income-tax in the Punjab in the first instance.

RECRUITMENT OF TELEGRAPH SIGNALLERS.

625. Dr. Nand Lal: Will Government be pleased to say:

(1) Whether recruitment of signallers to the Indian Telegraph Department has been entirely stopped, if so, when?

(2) If the answer is in the affirmative, will Government be pleased to say whether it is a fact that Eurasian boys of the 4th and 5th Standards from the Lovedale School at Ooty are still regularly recruited annually without any entrance examination?

(3) Are Government aware that there is an intense feeling among the Indian community on account of the frequent transfers of signallers from one corner of India to another, say from Madras to Lahore, Karachi to Calcutta, Lahore to Rangoon and so forth? If so, will Government be pleased to state the object of such frequent transfers causing extreme inconvenience to the transferees and financial loss to the tax-payer consequent on the payment of heavy travelling allowances?

(4) Is it a fact that in recruiting men for the General Scale, Eurasian and Anglo-Indian boys who have not studied even up to the 4th or 5th standard are freely admitted, while in the case of Indians, the minimum educational qualification insisted upon is the B. A. degree before they are selected for the General scale, and even then there is a considerable disparity in the salaries and allowances paid to the two classes of employees?

Colonel Sir Sydney Crookshank: (1) and (2). No. The recruitment in departmental training classes only, with the exception of certain vacancies already promised, has been stopped since the 22nd August, 1922. The telegraph training classes attached to approved educational institutions are still open.

(3) Government are not aware of the existence of any such feeling. Transfers are ordered in the interests of the public service and considerations of economy are not ignored. One of the conditions of the General Service for the signalling staff, which enjoys a higher rate of pay, is liability for transfer anywhere in India or Burma. Signallers who object to this condition may join the local or station service.

(4) The reply is in the negative. In April, 1920, 12 vacancies for probationers for the General Service were offered, as a temporary measure, to Indian graduates; whereas Anglo-Indians, who were recruited at the same time for vacancies in the same service were of lower educational qualifications, but none of them had passed anything less than the 7th standard. It is not the case that this differentiation in educational qualifications has been a regular practice.

Mr. S. C. Shahani: Will Government be pleased to state if, specially for Sind, they will be prepared to recruit for the Indian Telegraph Department annually students from the only first grade College in Sind—the D. J. Sind College—with or without an entrance test?

Mr. H. A. Sams: I shall be glad to consider the question.

Mr. S. O. Shahani: Are Government prepared to state that hereafter in the Indian Telegraph Department transfers from one corner of India to another will be discouraged?

Mr. H. A. Sams: These transfers are never made without necessity.

INDIAN TROOPS IN IRAQ, PALESTINE, ETC.

626. Mr. W. M. Hussanally: (a) What Indian troops are at present serving in Iraq, Palestine, the Persian Gulf or the Persian Frontier?

(b) How long have they been so employed?

(c) When is it proposed to return them to India?

(d) What is the nature of their employment?

Mr. E. Burdon: (a) It would not be in the public interest to give the information asked for regarding the troops serving in Iraq and Palestine. There are one battalion and two companies of infantry serving in the Persian Gulf and on the Persian frontier respectively.

(b) There have been changes of composition from time to time in accordance with the ordinary system of reliefs and from other causes. Subject to this qualification, Indian troops have been employed in the localities referred to since the war.

(c) There is no immediate intention of withdrawing the troops employed in the Persian Gulf and on the Persian frontier. It would not be in the public interest to give the information asked for so far as the troops employed in Iraq and Palestine are concerned.

(d) The employment of troops in Iraq and Palestine is in pursuance of the Resolution adopted by this House on the 28th March, 1921. The troops in the Persian Gulf and on the Persian frontier are employed for the protection of British and Indian interests on the Persian Gulf littoral and in Western Baluchistan.

Mr. K. Ahmed: Will Government say what prospect or advantage there is for India in sending out troops to Iraq, Palestine, Persian Gulf and the Persian frontier?

Dr. H. S. Gour: Before that question is answered, Sir, may I ask the Honourable Member to say as to who pays for these troops?

Mr. E. Burdon: The troops in Iraq and Palestine are paid for entirely by His Majesty's Government. The Persian Gulf charges are divisible, as my Honourable friend can see from the Army Estimates, between His Majesty's Government and Indian revenues.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: Does it include the transport charges from India to these places? Is it paid by India or by England?

Mr. E. Burdon: As far as Iraq and Palestine are concerned, every item of extra expenditure is borne by His Majesty's Government, including pensions and including mustering out charges and disbanding charges when the troops are returned.

Mr. K. Ahmed: May I repeat my question, therefore, Sir? What prospect India has or what advantage do we get by sending out Indian troops to the Frontier of Iraq and Palestine and Persian Gulf and the Persian Frontier? Is there any prospect of getting anything by spending so much from the revenue of India?

Mr. President: The question of advantage is a matter of opinion.

Mr. K. Ahmed: No, Sir; it is a matter of settled fact that we must pay. I want to know if there is a prospect of getting any advantage out of it; otherwise what is the use of sending our army to those places?

Mr. E. Burdon: I have already explained, Sir, that the troops in Iraq and Palestine are employed there in pursuance of a Resolution adopted by this Assembly.

Dr. H. S. Gour: Was it not, Sir, the Resolution of this Assembly that by service overseas these troops acquire a wider experience of actual warfare which strengthens the Indian Army?

Mr. E. Burdon: My Honourable friend is correct; that is one of the reasons.

RETAIL SALE OF POSTAGE STAMPS.

627. Mr. W. M. Hussanally: (1) When was the system of the departmental retail sale of postage stamps introduced in supersession of the system of selling them on commission to stamp vendors?

(2) What were the reasons for the change and what are the advantages of the departmental sale?

(3) (a) What is the total cost to the post office per year of selling stamps departmentally to the public?

(b) What would be the cost if the old system of sale on commission were reverted to?

(4) (a) Is it a fact that at the time of the introduction of the present system the public strongly protested against the change in the press?

(b) Were any protests received by the Government; if so, from whom?

(5) (a) Are Government aware that the public are put to great inconvenience in purchasing stamps from the Post Office?

(b) Are Government aware that on the Post Office holidays and Sundays no stamps are sold and the inconvenience is greater?

(c) Is it a fact that this inconvenience leads to loss of revenue?

(6) (a) Do Government propose to arrange that stamps be sold to the public at every post office on holidays and Sundays?

(b) If not, do they propose to revert to the old practice of sale to stamp vendors on commission?

Colonel Sir Sydney Crookshank: (1) 1st April, 1907.

(2) Prior to the 1st April, 1907, there were two classes of postage stamp vendors, namely, postmaster, and licensed vendors. So far as postmasters were concerned, it was as much their duty to sell postage stamps as to perform any other postal work, and there was no reason why they should be given special remuneration for doing this duty. It was considered that if the discount was to be withdrawn from post office officials, it could not be allowed to licensed vendors. With the large and rapidly increasing number of post offices, not only in towns but in rural tracts as well, and with postmen and village postmen selling postage stamps at the doors of the public everywhere, there was little need for any person to have recourse to a licensed vendor in order to obtain postage stamps. In the circumstances, it was considered that no inconvenience to the public would be occasioned by the withdrawal of the discount allowed on these stamps, nor would the sale of postage stamps be checked in any way.

(3) (a). It is regretted that the required information is not available.

(b) About 10 lakhs.

(4) (a). No such protest is on record.

(b) Yes; from the Indian Merchants' Chamber and Bureau.

(5) (a). No.

(b) Government are aware that on Post Office holidays and Sundays no stamps are sold by the Post Office except at certain important towns; but they do not consider that this causes any real inconvenience. The public, knowing that the Post Office is closed, presumably provide themselves with stamps beforehand.

(c) Government do not consider that any loss of revenue is involved.

(6) (a). No.

(b) No, the old system cannot be reverted to for financial and administrative reasons.

Mr. S. C. Shahani: Are Government aware that the public would be put to great inconvenience if they have to purchase stamps only from the stamp vendors?

Mr. H. A. Sams: Sir, I do not think the public are put to any inconvenience at all. This question of Mr. Hussanally has been brought up after the lapse of nearly 18 years. Since then it has not been found that the public has suffered any inconvenience whatsoever from the introduction of the new system in 1907.

Dr. H. S. Gour: Is the Honourable Member aware that stamps are sold by grocers and public-house keepers in England?

Mr. H. A. Sams: Yes, I am aware that this is the case so far as grocers are concerned; about public-houses I do not know. As far as I know grocers do not get any fee for doing so; they do it to suit their customers.

Mr. S. C. Shahani: Will Government be pleased to state if they will think it suitable to combine the two practices, the old practice of sales to stamp vendors on commission and the new practice of the departmental sales of postage stamps?

Mr. H. A. Sams: No, Sir, I do not think it will be any convenience to the public.

COTTON COMMITTEE.

628. Mr. J. N. Basu: Will the Government be pleased to state whether it is intended to appoint a representative of cotton-growers in Burma, on the Committee to be formed under clause (4) of the Bill for the creation of a fund for improvement and development of cotton-growing in India, passed on 24th February, 1928, in the Assembly?

Mr. J. Hullah: The Committee provided in the Bill which has now become an Act is a large one and the Government of India do not at present propose to add to its membership. The Act provides that a representative of the Department of Agriculture in Burma shall be a Member.

COMMISSIONERS OF FEUDATORY STATES.

629. Babu Braja Sundar Dass: (a) Will the Government be pleased to state if there have been two Commissioners and Superintendents of Feudatory States in the Geographical Orissa Division in the place of one?

(b) Was the appointment sanctioned by the Government of India?

Mr. Denys Bray: (a) Formerly the Commissioner of a neighbouring division of Bihar and Orissa held political charge of the Orissa Feudatory States assisted by a Political Agent and an Assistant Political Agent. Since the 1st April, 1922, the Commissioner has ceased to carry out any political duties, the status of the Political Agent has been raised and he is styled Political Agent and Commissioner, Orissa Feudatory States.

(b) The appointment was sanctioned by the Secretary of State for India.

POLITICAL AGENT OF FEUDATORY STATES, ORISSA.

630. Babu Braja Sundar Dass: (a) Will the Government be pleased to state if the Political Agent of the Feudatory States of Orissa is a public servant of the British Government paid by the Government of Bihar and Orissa or by the Government of India?

(b) Are the Members of the Indian and Provincial Legislatures competent to ask questions regarding his actions in his official capacity?

Mr. Denys Bray: (a) He is a Government servant paid by the Government of India.

(b) Attention is invited to rule 8 (1) (ii) of the Indian Legislative Rules.

DESIGNATION OF LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY AS "LOWER HOUSE."

631. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala: Have the Government decided to style the Legislative Assembly as the 'Lower House' officially? If not, do the Government propose to delete the words 'Lower House' printed in the Council of State Debates for Legislative Assembly (Vide Volume 3, No. 28, page 969 of the Council of State Debates)?

Sir Henry Moncreiff Smith: The answer to both parts of the Honourable Member's question is in the negative.

Mr. S. C. Shahani: Is the so-called Lower House constitutionally the Upper House in the control of the public purse?

Sir Henry Moncreiff Smith: That is a matter of opinion.

Maulvi Abul Kasem: Sir, with your permission I would ask a question of which I have given private notice to the Honourable the Home Member?

Mr. President: I thought the Honourable Member was going to ask a supplementary question.

Mr. S. O. Shahani: Is the so-called Upper House constitutionally competent to revise the decisions of the Lower House relating to the public purse?

Sir Henry Moncrieff Smith: That also, Sir, is a matter of opinion.

Dr. H. S. Gour: Sir, is it a matter of opinion, or is it part of the constitution?

Mr. K. Ahmed: Is red distinguished from black in the opinion of the Government of India?

GOLD STANDARD RESERVE.

Sir Montagu Webb: Sir, I desire your permission to ask the Honourable the Finance Member a question of which I have given him private notice. Will Government be pleased to state:

(i) the present amount of the Gold Standard Reserve, and

(ii) what portion of this amount is made up of interest as distinct from profits on coinage?

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: (i) The balance of the Gold Standard Reserve on the 31st December, 1922—the latest date up to which detailed figures are available—was £40,142,620.

(ii) The profits on coinage from 1900 onwards amounted to £28,578,606. There was a net profit on investments of £14,801,740. On the other hand, a sum of £1,123,655 was devoted to capital outlays on railways in 1907, and £2,109,071 was devoted to the reduction of created securities in the Paper Currency Reserve in the last two years.

Sir Montagu Webb: Do I understand, Sir, that there is no interest in that amount at all?

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: Interest is included in the figure of fourteen millions and odd on net profits in these figures.

Sir Montagu Webb: May I ask if the Honourable the Finance Member will take into consideration the expediency of using some portion of the interest of fourteen millions as revenue during the coming year?

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: 150 lakhs is included in the estimates of our revenue of the year or rather for the year 1923-24 representing the interest on the forty million in the Gold Standard Reserve.

Mr. B. S. Kamat: What is the rate of interests which the Gold Standard Reserve is earning in England?

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: That depends on the money market in England from time to time. The figure for next year is calculated at the rate of 2½ per cent.

Mr. B. S. Kamat: Is it not possible to earn a better rate for all this money there?

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: The difficulty of course is, if you are going to keep the money so as to be readily available and in a form in which it may be turned into cash at short notice, under the conditions under which the Gold Standard Reserve is invested, it is impossible to earn anything better than the short money rate of interest, which, as the Honourable Member is aware, is not very much above 2 per cent. in London at present.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: Is it not a fact that last year more than a year's interest was used for the purpose of meeting the deficit?

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: Last year no part of the interest was used towards meeting the deficit.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: Was it done at any time before?

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: The Budget for 1923-24 is the first Budget in which any credit to revenue is taken for interest on Gold Standard Reserve.

Dr. H. S. Gour: Is not the rate of interest for short term loans in India higher than the corresponding rate in England?

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: Certainly it is. If the Honourable Member's point is that it would be desirable if we could earn the short money rate in India rather than in England, it is obviously a higher one, but then the Gold Standard would cease to be a support for exchange.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: Is it necessary to keep the full amount on short terms? Won't it be possible to keep part of it as long term and another part as short term?

Dr. H. S. Gour: Before that question is answered, I should like to ask, if it is not possible to transfer a portion of the Gold Standard Reserve in India and utilise it here at better rates of interest, so that it may serve the same purpose?

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: The transfer of the Gold Standard Reserve from England to India would have a very serious effect on Exchange unless it were brought here in the form of gold bullion. In that case it would earn no interest whatever.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: You have not answered my question.

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: With regard to Mr. Rangachariar's question, the question of the best use of the Gold Standard Reserve is intimately bound up with the question of the future of our exchange policy. I think it is possible that when the question of our exchange policy has been gone into a little further, it might be found that something better than 2½ per cent. could be earned on some part of the Gold Standard Reserve.

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary: Can the Government give us any idea as to what has been the longest period of these short loans?

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: I think the rule is that no investment must be made out of the funds of the Gold Standard Reserve, the maturity of which is more than a year ahead.

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary: And that is the shortest period of the loan?

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: Yes.

Sir Montagu Webb: If the Honourable Member is going to utilise over a crore and a half of interest for revenue during the forthcoming year, is there any reason, in principle, why the interest of the current year should not be similarly used?

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: The interest during the current year has already been devoted to writing down all created securities, and so it is no longer available.

OLD MOSQUES IN AND AROUND DELHI.

Maulvi Abul Kasem: Sir, I asked a question of which I gave private notice to the Honourable the Home Member. Will the Government be pleased to state if they have taken any steps to repair the old mosques in and around Delhi, if so, how much have they spent on the mosques which they have repaired and are they open to Moslem public?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: I am very glad, Sir, to be able to give this information, because I think that from a number of questions which we have received on the subject an attempt has been made to create an impression that we are devoting our energies in the neighbourhood of Delhi demolishing mosques and tombs. Now we have on the contrary spent a great deal of money in the conservation and repair of Muhammadan mosques and tombs, of historic and archaeological interest, and I think perhaps the House will bear with me if I give some full details of it. In the twelve years 1911 to 1922-23, we spent:

	Rs.
On the Kutab mosques and grounds
On repairs to the Kadam Shariff in 1921-22	1,38,075
On the Khirki Mosque in 1911 to 1923	8,559
On Sher Shah's Mosque in Purana Killa in 1912-22	6,355
On the Jama Masjid in Ferozshah Kotla in 1914-22	4,154
On the Wazirabad Mosque in 1913-16	3,029
On Moth ki Masjid in 1911-13	2,751
On Shah Abdul Nabi's Mosque on the Delhi Muttra Road in 1917-18	1,720
On the Chauraj Mosque on the Ridge in 1913-23	978
	804

We have spent minor sums on the Begumpur Mosque, the Mahrauli wall mosque, Jhunan Shah's mosque at Nizamuddin, the Maulana Jamali Kamali tomb and mosque, and Shah Alam's mosque amounting in all to Rs. 1,550. This gives a total expenditure on special works on mosques in the twelve years of Rs. 1,65,877. This does not include the annual recurring repairs which cannot be separated from the total Public Works Department expenditure on repairs.

In addition to this, Sir, we were instrumental in obtaining from His Exalted Highness the Nizam a sum of Rs. 11,000 for expenditure on the Nizamuddin buildings. Then let me take tombs.

	Rs.
On Humayun's tomb in 1911-13 to 1922-23
Ghayazuddin Tughlak's Tomb in 1913-23	60,412
Safdar Jang's Tomb in 1914-15 and 1921-22	5,503
Nizamuddin's Tomb in 1912 to 1920	3,978
Darya Khan's Tomb in 1919-20	3,316
Sikander Lodi's Tomb in 1912 to 1916	2,124
Isa Khan's Tomb in 1911 to 1916	1,753
Adham Khan's Tomb in 1918-19	1,535
	1,526

Smaller sums spent on Razya Begum's tomb, the Pir Ghaib, and Farid Murtaza Khan's tomb amounted to Rs. 631. Including an expenditure of Rs. 1,17,651 in the nine years 1914-15 to 1922-23 on the maintenance of the gardens attached to the Humayun, Isa Khan and Safdar Jang tombs, the total expenditure comes to Rs. 1,98,129. As in the case of the mosques this does not include the ordinary annual repairs expenditure. We have, I may add, been in the receipt of comments based on the belief that we had spent considerable sums of money on Hindu temples and Sikh shrines and had spent nothing on Muhammadan monuments and mosques. But this is incorrect; we have spent nothing on the former objects in the New Delhi area. We are, it is true, repairing the wall round the Rikabgunj Quidwara, but that is part of the ordinary lay out of the New City.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: Has Government spent nothing on Hindu temples, or Sikh shrines or Jain temples?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: No, Sir. We have spent a certain amount of money on the gardens round two of the Sikh shrines in the new City, but on the shrines themselves we have I think spent nothing.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: Why is this, Sir?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: Mainly because, Sir, they have not the same archaeological interest and the Sikh shrines did not ask for assistance. Our motives were to preserve monuments of archaeological and historical interest. I have quoted the above facts simply to refute the statement that we have shown no care to preserve Muhammadan tombs or mosques.

Maulvi Abul Kasem: Sir, may I ask, in connection with all these mosques and tombs which are now under the control of Government and which the Government is not repairing or putting under repair, are they prepared to hand them over to the Muhammadans if they ask for it?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: I assume that the Honourable Member refers to buildings within the new City area. He suggests that the proper course is for us to hand these over to the Muhammadan community. Now, I might say in the first place as a general rule there is no body or authority to whom these could be handed over. They are our property and I consider that our obligations towards them end when we see that those buildings which have historical or archaeological interest or which are required for present religious use are not allowed to fall into further decay.

Mr. W. M. Hussanally: Sir, is it a fact that any of the smaller mosques in or round about Pahargunge or within the new Imperial Delhi City have been demolished by Government after they began building the new City?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: I have given all the information I can to the House in regard to the charges that have been levelled against us for demolishing these mosques. I believe that it is the case—it happened indeed in my own time—that a mosque to which some local importance was attached, although it was a very small one, was demolished, but we rebuilt it. The charge of demolishing mosques has been denied by the local authorities, and, as one inquiry after another comes up as to whether such and such mosques have been demolished, I invariably make further inquiries and give an answer on the subject. I think I may say that to my knowledge at all events, with the single exception that I have now given, no mosque has been demolished.

Mr. W. M. Hussanally: Is it a fact that recently, within the last few days, a compound wall of a small mosque in Asoka Road was demolished by the Public Works Department?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Halley: If the Honourable Member will furnish me with further details on the subject, I will make further inquiry into the matter.

Mr. W. M. Hussanally: Would it be possible to appoint a small local committee for the purpose of investigating these complaints and settling the question of mosques within the new Imperial Delhi City area?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Halley: I understand, Sir, that certain Members of this House have already approached the local administration on the subject. I need not point out that we have in Delhi a Chief Commissioner with the powers of a Local Government, and that suggestions of this nature should be made in the first instance to him. I believe, however, I am correct in saying that the answer given by the Chief Commissioner was that he was quite prepared to have a local committee's advice on the subject of these various buildings.

Mr. K. Ahmed: Did you not, Sir, within the four walls of this House give an undertaking and promised since the 15th of January last, that inquiries would be made and efforts would be given to them? What has happened about the circular handed over to you, Sir . . .

Mr. President: Order, order. The Honourable Member handed me no circular.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Halley: Well, Sir, the circular was handed to me and it was handed to me, as Mr. Kabeer-ud-Din picturesquely said, within the four corners of this House. I have already replied to at least three of the points that were raised in that circular. If Mr. Kabeer-ud-Din's recollection is good, he will remember that he referred in that circular to two mosques in the Lady Hardinge College grounds, one at No. 27, Asoka Road. I have already given answer to these points. There were three or perhaps four other points mentioned, about which I have made inquiries and have not yet received the answers. As soon as I have done so, I shall place the answers at the disposal of the House. The mosques had existed for some centuries before we came here. They had for the most part fallen into disrepair some generations before this House assembled, and, if the Honourable Member has to wait another day or two before I am able to place the information in his hand, I hope he will not be impatient. But, Sir, I may also add that, as regards part of circular, I can give no answer to the Honourable Member, for it contains general allegations and appeals to Muhammadans on the subject which do not in my opinion require an answer. All I can promise to do is to take up any point in which any definite statement is made and give the best information in my power to the Honourable Member.

Mr. K. Ahmed: I take it, Sir, that Government is afraid to come forward and meet these points that are in the circular and only on a few points they will answer questions here.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Halley: No, Sir, where definite questions are put to me by Honourable Members, Government, so far from being afraid to take up the question, are fully prepared to take up the matter both in its own interests and those of the Muhammadan community. All

I said was that I was not prepared to enter, in reply to questions or otherwise, into general allegation that all the mosques in the neighbourhood of Delhi were being demolished, because I have already proved to the House that such allegations are false.

Mr. J. Chaudhuri: Sir, are not the ruins of Hindu temples at Brindaban, Muttra, of archaeological and historical interest, and will the Honourable the Home Member . . .

Mr. President: The original question referred to Delhi. I understand the Honourable Member is now referring to Muttra.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Halley: Sir, I may add, as it is a corollary to questions that I was asked from the other side just now, that the reason for our spending so much on Muhammadan monuments in the neighbourhood of Delhi is, of course, that the history of Delhi is mainly a Muhammadan history,—(Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: "Why not Hindu also"?) and that, although Delhi may have by tradition great connection with the Hindu Delhi of mythology (Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: "Three generations") and has an historical connection with the era which considerably preceded the Muhammadan conquests, yet there are no noteworthy remains of those periods; at all events such Hindu temples as we have in the particular area to which I am referring, namely, the New Delhi area, are not of any historical or archaeological importance.

Mr. S. C. Shahani: Are Government aware that the public will be against the Government handing over to the care of any groups of people buildings of historical and archaeological interests?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Halley: I am of opinion myself that we are better guardians of such buildings than anybody else.

Mr. J. Chaudhuri: What has been done with regard to Hindu Rao Koti?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Halley: Hindu Rao Koti is a hospital.

Mr. J. Chaudhuri: Is it not a Mahratta building?

Mr. President: Order, order.

UNSTARRED QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

RAILWAY SLEEPERS.

252. Dr. H. S. Gour: (1) With reference to the reply given by Government, to my question on the difference in price between the sleepers tendered for, on the 9th instant, will the Government be pleased to state the difference in price between the sleepers tendered for and the jarrah sleepers ordered by the Great Indian Peninsula Railway?

(2) What was the total amount spent upon the jarrah sleepers?

(3) (a) What is the life of a jarrah sleeper compared with the deodar sleeper?

(b) Is it a fact that jarrah sleepers are more perishable than deodar sleepers?

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley: (1) The price of a deodar sleeper delivered in the locality where these sleepers are required would be about Rs. 9-12-0 including freight, whereas the jarrah sleepers will cost about Rs. 8-14-0 each.

(2) A contract has been made for the supply of 1,00,000 jarrah sleepers at Rs. 8-12-3 each.

(3) (a) and (b). The life of a sleeper depends on the local conditions, such as climate, soil, etc., and in the very wet locality in which these 1,00,000 sleepers are to be used, the Agent, Great Indian Peninsula Railway, states that experience has proved the jarrah sleeper to be more satisfactory than deodar.

TRANSFERS OF POSTAL SUPERINTENDENTS.

253. Mr. K. O. Neogy: (a) Has the attention of Government been drawn to statements made in the General letter of the All-India Postal Union, dated the 7th February, 1923, relating to the transfers of Maulvi S. Ahmed and Mr. J. Newton, Superintendents of Post Offices?

(b) Is it a fact that Mr. Ahmed has been transferred from the Central Provinces to Mymensingh, and Mr. Newton from Dibrugarh to the Central Provinces?

(c) What is the amount of travelling allowance drawn by each of these officers on this occasion?

(d) Will Government be pleased to state particulars of transfers of Mr. J. Newton during the last five years, and the reasons for these transfers?

Colonel Sir Sydney Crookshank: (a) No; this matter had reference to an ordinary transfer and would not necessarily have been brought to the notice of Government.

(b) Maulvi S. Ahmed was transferred to Mymensingh, but took leave and asked for a transfer to the United Provinces, which request has already been granted on the occurrence of a vacancy in that Province. Mr. Newton was transferred from Bengal to the Central Circle.

(c) The amount of travelling allowance drawn by Mr. Newton is not known, but he will be entitled to the amount which is ordinarily admissible under the rules. Mr. Ahmed received his order of transfer to the United Provinces while at Delhi from which place he will get the travelling allowance ordinarily admissible when he joins his appointment.

(d) In September, 1919, Mr. Newton was transferred from the Bengal and Assam to the Bihar and Orissa Circle in the interests of the public service. In March, 1922, his re-transfer to the Bengal and Assam Circle was ordered as a result of the abolition of the post of the Reserve Superintendent in Bihar and Orissa. The Reserve Superintendent happened to be a Bihari and it was desirable to retain him in Bihar and transfer another Superintendent. In October last he was ordered to change places with Mr. Ahmed of the Central Circle whose transfer from that Circle was necessary in the interests of the public service.

CANTONMENT MAGISTRATES AS SUB-DIVISIONAL MAGISTRATES.

254. Mr. Mohammad Yamin Khan: Does the Government propose to appoint the Cantonment Magistrates as Sub-Divisional Magistrates under the District Magistrates?

DUTIES OF CANTONMENT MAGISTRATES.

255. Mr. Mohammad Yamin Khan: Do the Government propose to give option to the Cantonment Magistrates either to accept Magisterial post under the District Magistrate or executive career as Secretary to the Cantonment Committee?

Mr. E. Burdon: I propose to answer questions Nos. 254 and 255 together. Before this Session ends, Government propose to initiate legislation which, if carried out, will, amongst other things, have the effect of depriving Cantonment Magistrates of their judicial functions. The measures which it may be necessary to adopt in order to safeguard the legitimate interests of existing Cantonment Magistrates, if their conditions of service are affected in the manner which I have indicated, have not yet been finally considered by Government; and Government are accordingly not in a position to make any statement in regard to the suggestions of the Honourable Member.

COMMUNICATION FROM HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR GENERAL.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey (Home Member): Sir, in pursuance of the rule of practice laid down as No. 137 on page 45 of the Manual of Business and Procedure, I hereby beg to hand you a communication from the Governor General.

Mr. President: The following Message has been received from His Excellency the Viceroy:

"In pursuance of the provisions of sub-section (1) of section 67B of the Government of India Act, I, Rufus Daniel, Earl of Reading, do recommend to the Legislative Assembly that it do pass the Bill to fix the duty on salt manufactured in, or imported by land into, certain parts of British India, to vary the duty leviable on certain articles under the Indian Tariff Act, 1894, to fix maximum rates of postage under the Indian Post Office Act, 1898, to amend the Indian Paper Currency Act, 1923, and to fix rates of income-tax in the form in which it was passed by the Council of State.

(Sd.) READING,
Viceroy and Governor General."

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: (Madras City: Non-Muhammadan Urban): Sir, arising out of that Message, might I draw your attention to section 67B under which this Message has been sent to us? Are we to pass the Bill again, Sir? We have already passed the Bill, Sir. I thought it only remained for us to agree or disagree with the amendments made by the Council of State. I see the recommendation is to pass the Bill. Is there any further procedure of passing the Bill in this House?

Mr. President: A motion will have to be made in relation to the Bill, on the day on which it is set down for consideration, by Government.

RESOLUTION RE RAILWAY CONCESSIONS AND REDUCTION IN FARES.

Mr. K. Ahmed (Rajshahi Division: Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I beg to move:

"That this Assembly recommends to the Governor General in Council that in all State Railways return tickets for the 1st, 2nd and inter class passengers be issued at a fare and a third during the Puja, Christmas and Easter holidays and fares for the third class passengers be reduced by one-fourth immediately."

Sir, this House is aware that it is a recognised principle of Railway economies that passenger traffic is a great contributor to the total revenues of the Railways and that the passenger traffic consists mainly of third class passengers. The importance of the third class passengers, Sir, is so great in the balancing of the Railway Budget that it has been suggested that the Railways would make a lot more profit by paying a premium to every first and second class passenger to induce him not to travel in order that the accommodation thus rendered available might be occupied more profitably by the third class passengers. In the interest of equality, particularly in these days of rampant democracy, I propose to include in the benefits to be derived by the passing of my Resolution the richer classes as well, because it is not equitable that a man should be penalised for no other reason than that he has more money in his pocket than his fellows. My Resolution, moreover, Sir, is as much in the interests of the Railways themselves as in that of the classes and the masses, for whom the facilities are provided by the Railways. It is well known that increased passenger fares tend to reduce the revenues of Railways from this particular source of income. As a matter of fact, Sir, the principle was so well understood by the authorities that Railway concessions in fares had long been in existence in this country and it was only during the unfortunate years of the last great war that these long-enjoyed concessions were ended, not because by that measure the Railway authorities hoped to increase their revenues, but because the war conditions made it impossible for them to cope with the large traffic that the concession rates usually promote. Now that the war conditions have ended, I beg to suggest in their own interests that the Railway authorities ought to grant concession rates for all classes of passengers, because thereby not only will they benefit the public but themselves as well.

I need hardly spend more than a few minutes, Sir, upon the social and the commercial sides of the question. People travel, Sir, for a variety of reasons; some for business, some in search of employment, some for pleasure or pastime, some for marriages, some for funeral ceremonies and so on. Besides, there is a large portion of the public that travels either in search of work or in execution of the work they have obtained. Fairs and festivities also draw a large number of people. We have an example of it in the fair held at Meerut close by, at Ajmer, at Bindhachal and other places. The social side of the railway question is as important as any other aspect and it is highly desirable that the concessions which had been long enjoyed by the people of this country should be restored to them. Again, Sir, the educational aspect of the question is a very important one, but it is not necessary for me to lecture to the Honourable Members of this House upon the broadening effects of travel as almost all of them more or less must have at one time or other written their school essay on the subject. It is known everywhere that labour in India is cheaper than in any other country in the world, and in comparison to those countries the Indian labour has got very little asset, very little saving to pay the rate, I mean the increased rate of railway fare in order to travel in this country, considering his income is so small,—it is, I believe, one-sixth, or some say it is less than one-sixth.

Mr. President: Order, order. The Honourable Member seems to have composed his speech for a different Resolution altogether. I must draw his attention, lest other Members should fall into the error of following him, to the fact that his Resolution is confined to concessions during certain holidays and to the reduction of the 3rd class passenger fares. He must confine his remarks strictly to that.

Mr. K. Ahmed: If you follow me patiently, Sir, you will find that I am not very far away. It touches third class passengers, and I shall deal with the first and second classes along with the third class when I come to give the statistics. So I have a perfect right so far as the Resolution is worded. The language also will not take me far away.

Mr. S. C. Shahani (Sind Jagirdars and Zamindars: Landholders): I beg to rise to a point of order. Are not tickets being issued at concession rates during holidays now?

Mr. K. Ahmed: That is not a point of order. It will be for the Honourable Member to enlighten the House when I have finished if he has got any additional information. In Japan the third class fare is 5 and one-fifth pice for the first 50 miles gradually reduced to 4 pice. Second class is double third class, and first class treble third class. 20 to 50 per cent. of the third class fare is reduced in the case of schools and colleges. 50 passengers or more travelling together get a reduction of from 10 to 60 per cent. 3rd class passengers here render possible a larger profit to the railways than the 1st and 2nd class passengers. I shall give the

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

[24TH MARCH 1923.]

statistics later on. In the 1886-87 account of the East Indian Railway we find the receipt from 1st class was 17.17 pice whereas the haulage was 11.77. Therefore at that time there was a profit of 5.40. Of course, now there is no profit. Honourable Members will remember that on the 1st March 1922, the Honourable the Finance Member stated that there was a lot of deficit, several crores. This year also you have heard that there is a large amount of loss of revenue from the railways. I shall bring out that point also later. The income from second class was 21.08 and the cost was 11.77. Therefore there was a profit at that time of 9.20. In the 3rd class we had 56.05 income and haulage was 11.17. Therefore the profit was 44.88. I now come to the statistics relating to the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway. First class income was 18.20 and the haulage was 14.89. Therefore there was a loss of 1.69. With regard to the second class, income was 12.60 and haulage was 14.89, thereby giving a minus balance of 2.29. So, the first and second class did not fetch any income at all. Now, with regard to the third class it was 66.27 against a haulage of 14.89. Therefore there was a substantial profit of 51.38. That is the income from the third class passengers and that is how the railways get their revenue and how the salaries of high officers are paid as lump sum out of the income of the poor third class passengers who are looked down upon as is evident from the debate in the Assembly last year and this year, especially from the speech of Mr. Joshi. Then, I shall come to the Administration Report of the Indian Railways for the year 1921-22, Volume I, page 15. The number of passengers carried (in thousands) of third class was 490,783 and the amount of money that was earned in that year from third class passenger fares was about 28.5 crores of rupees. The Report says:

"In respect of the last year it will be noticed that the numbers of passengers by first, second, and intermediate classes have declined compared with 1920-21, while the third class shows a small increase. In spite of the fall in numbers the earnings from the first two classes have risen, while the yield from the intermediate and third classes has fallen compared with 1920-21. This latter result which is very significant is due to decreased load. Economic factors have in fact forced the third class passengers in India to forego indulgence in long journeys in the same way as has happened elsewhere in the world, and have checked the rapid increase in the numbers travelling which is evidenced in the figures of previous years. Decreased third class travelling is also to some extent attributable to the fact that insufficiency of stock has forced many railway administrations to refuse to make special arrangements for melās which in the ordinary course of events attract large numbers of passengers."

Now, Sir, last year in explaining the budget of 1922-23 the Honourable the Finance Member, Sir Malcolm Hailey, said "There can, 12 Noon. I imagine, be no room for diversity of opinion, namely, that the railways must pay their own way. The estimates which I have given already take account of a substantial increase in goods rates"

Mr. President: The Honourable Member must address himself to the subject of his own Resolution, which is concessions during certain holidays.

Mr. K. Ahmed: Last year when the Finance Member introduced the Budget he said that he wanted 6 crores of rupees to be raised by increasing railway fares to the extent of 25 per cent. and, Sir, this year on the 1st of March you have heard that in spite of that increase the railways did not get the income which the Finance Member anticipated. That is the reason why I am making this argument, that the way of thinking of the Railway Department and of the Finance Member was no good and that it was futile for him any longer to think that by increasing the rate of fares he will get a higher income.

Khan Bahadur Saiyid Muhammad Ismail (Patna and Chota Nagpur cum Orissa: Muhammadan): Is a quorum present in the House?

Mr. President: As a quorum has been demanded, the division bell will ring for two minutes.

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary (Calcutta: Non-Muhammadan Urban): Is it in order for Honourable Members to lure away others as is done?

Mr. President: The quorum is present.

Mr. K. Ahmed: What has been the result of the enhancement of passenger fares. The Honourable the Finance Member in his budget speech only on the 1st of March, said that the receipt from passengers has been disappointing and that there has been an appreciable falling off in the passenger traffic.

Mr. President: I have pointed out four times to the Honourable Member that he is not addressing himself to the terms of his Resolution.

Mr. K. Ahmed: I therefore say, Sir, that following the precedent set by some company managed railways that have already introduced the concession rates, for instance the Bengal Nagpur Railway, and other lines, the proposal in my Resolution should be accepted, not merely in the interests of the travelling public but also in the interests of the Indian railways and the financial interests of the Government of India itself because, Sir, the Government of India at the present juncture is in a hopeless financial condition and more revenues will be, in my opinion, very welcome indeed. With these few words, I strongly and emphatically move my Resolution which is:

"This Assembly recommends to the Governor General in Council that in all State Railways return tickets for the 1st, 2nd and inter class passengers be issued at a fare and a third during the Puja, Christmas and Easter holidays and fares for the third class passengers be reduced by one-fourth immediately."

I commend my Resolution to the acceptance of the House.

Dr. H. S. Gour (Nagpur Division: Non-Muhammadan): I am not in a position to support the Resolution moved by my Honourable friend, but so far as I am able to support it, I have set out in my own amendment and I therefore move it:

That the following be substituted for the original Resolution:

"This Assembly recommends to the Governor General in Council to take such steps as may be necessary to ensure the resumption of return tickets on Railways and the reduction of third class fare for passengers."

The two points involved in my amendment are the resumption of return tickets on railways and the reduction of third class passenger fares. I need not dilate on the first point because I have no reason to doubt that Government will be in a position to give us a reassuring reply. As Honourable Members are aware, return tickets were issued before the war on almost all the railways, but owing to the shortage of the rolling stock the return tickets were discontinued and I understand return tickets have been resumed in several railways, but I think they have not been generally resumed. I happen to know that there is no resumption of return tickets on the Great Indian Peninsula Railway. All I want is that Government should do what all countries, including England, have done to restore the conditions of normal traffic.

[Dr. H. S. Gour.]

As regards my second point, the reduction of third class fares, I think, Sir, I am voicing the general complaint of the public that the third class fare has increased of late to such an extent that it has a marked effect upon traffic of that class. I therefore request Government to see whether third class fares cannot be reduced. With these words, Sir, I commend my amendment to the vote of the House.

Mr. K. Ahmed: I accept the amendment, Sir.

Mr. President: I have some difficulty here. The Honourable Member who moved the Resolution explicitly confined himself to State Railways and the issue of concession tickets; but I am not very certain of the bearing of the last 8 or 10 words of his Resolution. If the Government wishes to reply to the point raised by Dr. Gour I am prepared to overlook the point of order.

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley (Chief Commissioner, Railways): I do not think, Sir, I need take up the time of the House very long over this question. It is purely a practical question, a business question, and we have, as the House is aware, been urged very strongly for the last year or two and again very recently by the Retrenchment Committee to deal with railway business on commercial lines. Now, Sir, the House itself has I think absorbed that idea very rapidly as the result of perusing the Retrenchment Committee's report and Honourable Members of this House have been very insistent upon our carrying out such measures as will ensure the railways earning a profit. It really seems to me very inconsistent that one week some Members of this House wish to reduce working expenses of railways by 4 crores in order to show a profit and in the following week other Members come forward with a proposition which, taken literally, would reduce the revenues of railways by $7\frac{1}{2}$ crores. If the House is looking for commercial management and for a satisfactory return on the capital invested in railways, it cannot expect to get these results by making arbitrary reductions in earnings such as the Mover of this Resolution demands. The matter of making rates for railways is a very complicated and difficult one, but there are certain essential principles which must be observed in fixing rates. In the first place, these rates must be such as to pay for the working cost of carrying the traffic. That is the lower limit. The upper limit should be fixed in such a way as to produce the maximum revenue without causing a shrinkage of traffic. Those are the two limits, and as the House is aware, we leave the actual rates to the local administrations to settle. It is only by judging local conditions and watching the traffic that appropriate rates can be fixed for different kinds of traffic. These remarks apply equally to the question of reducing or otherwise altering third class passenger fares and to the so-called administration which finds that it can increase its revenue by reducing fares, either partially for special occasions or wholly for all third class passengers, will do so at once. There is no question about that. It is purely a matter of business and it is a matter which is being watched most carefully by all Agents. Having regard to the fact that the only scientific way of fixing rates is to fix them with regard to traffic in different parts of the country it is necessary for the Government to confine itself to fixing maxima and minima rates, as the House is well aware; and Government do not interfere in these matters of fixing actual rates. The maximum rate for third class passengers stood at 3 pies per mile from the year 1887 until it was raised in April, 1917, to 4 pies for mail and fast passengers, the old rate remaining in force for slow trains. And Honourable Members will be aware that practically through the whole of the war years the railways of India were almost alone amongst all the railways in the world in not increasing fares appropriately to meet increased costs. It was only as the result of the two years following the war, when we were faced with enormous increases of wages and materials, that it became absolutely essential to raise the fares again last year. In Great Britain, for instance, the fares were raised early in the war by 50 per cent. and again subsequently raised to a point which brought them up to 75 per cent. above the pre-war level. They have been recently slightly reduced but they still stand somewhere about 50 per cent. over pre-war rates.

With regard to the Honourable Mover's remarks about the falling off in numbers of passengers, the figures for the complete year are not yet available; but Honourable Members have been given the figures for the first 9 months of the year, that is, to the end of December, in the memorandum which was issued with the budget. I think perhaps these were the figures to which the Honourable Mover referred. If Honourable Members will bear with me a moment I will remind them that during the nine months the total number of third class passengers carried fell from 358½ millions in 1921-22 to 357·9 millions in 1922-23, a total reduction of about 650,000 passengers out of 358 millions, or rather less than 2 per cent. At the same time the increase in earnings was over 2 crores in the 9 months. It will therefore be seen that the increase in fares has brought in increased revenue without any very serious reduction in the number of passengers who travel. During those 9 months the earnings from third class passengers amounted to 22·37 crores, and on the same average it may be expected that the total earnings of the year will amount to 30 crores of rupees from third class passengers. Now, taking the Honourable Mover's Resolution literally, that third class fares should be reduced by one-fourth, during the coming year we should have to expect a drop of $7\frac{1}{2}$ crores in earnings on third class passengers. I do not think, Sir, it is necessary for me to labour that argument any further. It is perfectly obvious that the railways, if they are to be worked at a profit, could not stand a reduction of revenue of that kind.

In regard to the concessions, the question of cheap return tickets at certain holiday and festival times during the year, and the larger question which Dr. Gour has mentioned regarding the resumption of return tickets, this is also a matter of business. They are not concessions doled out to the public for being good. They are purely a matter of business and they are so regarded by every railway administration in the world. They are purely a matter of business and they are so regarded by every Railway Administration in the world. If a Railway can increase its traffic and increase its earnings by offering cheap fares at certain periods of the year or over certain distances or for certain occasions, it will do so; but they cannot be regarded by the public as rights or even as concessions which the railways should hand out as the result of exceptional prosperity or anything of that sort. It is a matter of business. If a railway can earn more traffic and has the carrying capacity to increase its traffic, it will undoubtedly see the business side of it and give these cheaper fares, cheaper rates and cheaper return tickets or concessions of that kind at holiday times. But as every Honourable Member is aware, the railways are not in a position at the present time to cater for a very large increase of traffic. We still have to some extent, not perhaps overcrowding but distinctly, crowding—complaints about overcrowding have, I am glad to say, dropped for some time, but there is no question about the practical impossibility of attempting to attract much traffic by offering cheap terms when we cannot carry the traffic which would in that case offer. The amendment which Dr. Gour has proposed, I understand, reads thus: "This Assembly recommends to the Governor General in Council to take such steps as may be necessary to ensure the resumption of return tickets on railways and the reduction of third class fares for passengers." I do not think, Sir, that I can accept that amendment as it stands, because it requires the Government to take steps to ensure the resumption of return tickets. Now, Sir, as I have pointed out, this is a pure matter of business. Railways are being compelled by public opinion and by their own good sense to work on business lines, and it would be impossible for Government to force an early resumption of return tickets or a reduction of third class fares unless it could be shown that that was a sound business proposition. I would suggest that the following might perhaps take the place of the Honourable Mover's Resolution if this meets the views of the House, and as I believe the House wishes to express an opinion on this subject, I would suggest an amendment in this form:

"This Assembly recommends to the Governor General in Council that the effect of the last increase in third class passenger fares be carefully watched, and that Railway Administrations be advised to reduce them if experience shows that they are greater than the traffic can bear."

That, Sir, is the amendment which I propose.

Mr. President: I informed the Assembly before I called upon the Chief Commissioner of Railways, that I was prepared to overlook on this occasion the point of order which would otherwise arise regarding the character of Dr. Gour's amendment which I have not accepted. I should be creating an awkward precedent if on this occasion

Dr. H. S. Gour: It is not objected to by the Government, Sir, and we are prepared to accept the Government amendment in supersession of both the Resolution as well as my amendment

Mr. President: Then some day on a Resolution of much greater importance the Honourable Member will attempt to trip the Chair up with the proceedings of this day. I must treat this merely as an undertaking by Government and not as an amendment,—and then I think I must put the original Resolution to the vote unless of course it is withdrawn.

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: Perhaps the Honourable Mover will withdraw his Resolution on the understanding that we give the assurance which is contained in the draft amendment which has been handed in to you, Sir?

Mr. K. Ahmed: I have not followed the amendment, Sir. I do not know the amendment, Sir.

Mr. President: It is not an amendment, it is an undertaking given by Government.

Mr. K. Ahmed: What is the undertaking, Sir?

Mr. President: The form in which it is given is this:

"That the effect of the last increase in third-class passenger fares be carefully watched, and that Railway Administrations be advised to reduce them if experience shows that they are greater than the traffic can bear."

Mr. K. Ahmed: I accept the amendment. I beg to withdraw. The Resolution was, by leave of the Assembly, withdrawn.

RESOLUTION RE STOPPAGE OF RECRUITMENT FOR SERVICES OUTSIDE INDIA.

Mr. B. Venkatapatiraju (Ganjam cum Vizagapatam: Rural): Sir, the Resolution which stands in my name runs as follows:

"This Assembly recommends to the Governor General in Council that with a view to effect substantial reduction in expenditure under service heads, necessary steps be taken for stopping further recruitment for services, outside India, excepting the employment of Foreign experts on special terms when necessity arises."

This is an important Resolution, Sir, and to adopt the phrase of the Honourable Mr. Innes, if I am honest to myself and to my country, if my candid criticisms may not be agreeable I only request the indulgence of the House that they should be taken in the spirit in which they are offered. A Resolution was moved by the Honourable Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas on this subject on the 11th February, 1922, to this effect:

"That having regard to the Declaration of August 1917 the recruitment for all-India services excepting those of a technical character shall be made as far as possible in India and provide educational facilities for Indians to enter technical services in large numbers."

An amendment was moved and subsequently adopted by the House which ran as follows:

"That inquiries should without delay be inaugurated as to the measures possible to give further effect to the Declaration of August 20, 1917, in the direction of increased recruitment of Indians for the all-India services."

But so far as I am aware, I do not know whether any inquiries were inaugurated; nothing was done to our knowledge. But, my Resolution, Sir, is quasi-economic rather than wholly political. Lord Inchcape's Committee made it abundantly clear that the country cannot afford to spend money on the present scale, and that in spite of post-war new taxation estimated to yield 49 crores annually being enforced, and the tax-paying capacity being limited, substantial retrenchment of expenditure is inevitable. Though grateful to the Committee for what they have said, we must say that theirs is not the last word on the subject. On the eve of their recommendations, the already heavily burdened people are now threatened with additional taxation, especially the poverty-stricken masses. My object is to suggest measures in this Resolution to reduce the heavy burden and emancipate the nation. We have heard their words and empty promises in abundance, which have not availed us much. I propose in my Resolution a drastic change of policy, nothing short of which can satisfy public opinion. The British policy of seeking primarily the advantages of the mother country must be entirely reversed, and the paramount motive of the good of India alone should guide every action of the Government of India. It should seek first, last and only the good of the country, unswerved by any other considerations. Queen Victoria of blessed memory, in the memorable words of her Proclamation on assuming the charge of direct rule of our land, said:

"In their prosperity shall be our strength, in their contentment our security and in their gratitude our best reward."

And may God grant to us and those in authority under us, strength to carry out these our wishes for the good of our people. The disability of Indians in the matter of appointments was removed as far back as 1833, and the Government of India were instructed in 1834 to admit Indians to places of trust as freely and as extensively as their individual aptitudes justified. Queen Victoria stated further in her Proclamation that Indians should be freely and impartially admitted to offices in her service. Their Majesties King Edward and King George echoed the same sentiment. After seven decades of these declarations what do we find? We find 18 per cent. of Indians employed in the Indian Civil Service, 5 per cent. in the Police, 14 per cent. in the Forest, 26 per cent. in Agriculture, 38 per cent. in Educational, 38 per cent. in Engineering, 11 per cent. in Medical, and 23 per cent. in Customs. Are we to take it that Indians have been impartially and freely admitted to appointment during all these 70 years? I am aware that this Assembly or even the Government of India has no control over the recruitment of all-India services, unlike the self-governing colonies. Sir William Vincent told us that from 1897 to 1916 recruitment to the Civil Service was 66 Indians out of 960. From 1917 to 1921, it was 59 Indians against 126 Europeans, and in 1921 87 Indians and 38 Europeans. In the Medical Service the proportion was 48 Indians and 112 Europeans before, and after 1917-1921, it was 78 Indians and 48 Europeans. We must be thankful for little mercies. The only point of view that is reasonable according to my humble submission, is that the importation of officials from outside India should be limited to clear cases of necessity. The question is not how many or how few Indians should be employed, but how many it is indispensable to recruit from abroad for want of men in India. If the question is not approached in that spirit, self-government as the goal is mere camouflage and economical administration is impossible. The suggestion that in the Civil Service there should be 33 per cent. of Indians rising by $1\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. every year till the maximum of 48 per cent. is reached in 10 years, in Education 50 per cent., in the Indian Police 33 per cent., Engineers 75 per cent., State Railways 50 per cent., Telegraphs 50 per cent. and so on is based on wrong and untenable grounds. I do not understand the necessity for recruiting not only to the Indian Civil Service, but also the Indian Medical Service, the Military, Military Finance (I do not know if the figures are to be scanned differently), Education, Police, Public Works, including Railway Engineering, Telegraphs, Agriculture, Forest, Survey, Mines, Mint and Assay. They account for 3,426 officers drawing average pay of Rs. 800 to Rs. 1,600, of whom the Indian Civil Service average 1,350. There were only 269 Indians, of whom 69 were promoted from the Provinces by 1913. My suggestion is that the public services of India and all these branches of all-India services should be recruited in the country itself. If the assumed British responsibility for the good Government of India necessarily implies the perpetuation of British officers, then it is high time that we should ask for responsible government, with its concomitant power of control over recruitment. Fixing any proportion for recruitment is postponing the date for conferring self-government indefinitely. This Assembly should definitely pronounce their opinion that when qualified Indians are available, recourse should not be had to recruitment elsewhere except in India, both on economic and political grounds. The standard of qualifications required should be fixed high for the superior services so as to secure efficient men from all communities without showing undue favour to any one community or another, to the prejudice of others. The salary should be fixed according to the qualifications and demands made of the candidates and the financial resources of the country, and the market value of the services. Naturally experts recruited abroad should be paid higher salaries according to the competitive value. In the military, as was pointed out by Lord Incheape, since 1913-14 the pay and allowances of British officers alone was increased from Rs. 4½ crores to Rs. 8½ crores. British other ranks from 3.6 crores to 10.39 crores. In Military Works 225 draw 27½ lakhs, and in Civil Services, 2,890 was increased to 3,242 with salaries and allowances 172 lakhs raised to 259 lakhs; clerical establishment from 231 to 533 lakhs; Industrial and Technical, 68,094 from 193 to 402 lakhs; temporary staff 172 officers draw 16 lakhs. Railway traffic expenses increased from 488 to 964 on account of staff. State Railways employ 425 Europeans and Anglo-Indians drawing a monthly salary of Rs. 1,35,000, and 164 Indians drawing Rs. 40,000. State Railways worked by Companies unfortunately employed 1,143 Europeans drawing Rs. 8,92,000 against 42 Indians drawing Rs. 16,000. I may mention, Sir, when we compare the pre-war wages of our railway officials in India with those of officials employed in Europe, it looks as if we are paying extravagant salaries. Danish State railways paid only Rs. 73 to Rs. 900 per mensem; Swedish railways pay Rs. 63 to Rs. 1,387 per mensem; Norwegian railways pay Rs. 55 to 450 rupees . . .

Mr. President: Order, order. I do not understand how that is in order on this Resolution.

Mr. B. Venkatapatiraju: I may mention, Sir, that the Government of India has complete control over the appointments made on State railways, whether managed by the State or by Companies, because all appointments have to be confirmed by the Government of India, and therefore I believe I am in order.

Mr. President: Questions of pay do not arise here. The Honourable Member is moving a Resolution to stop recruitment outside India for services under the control of Government, except in cases where experts are required. He must address himself to the substance of the question, which is the stoppage of recruitment in England.

Mr. B. Venkatapatiraju: Most of these railway employees are imported from abroad . . .

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey (Home Member): Might I further make a request? I think we might know exactly what case we have to argue. Is the Honourable Member referring only to the civil service or the military services? As he proceeded to quote a large number of facts about military services, he has left a doubt in my mind as to the exact proposition I have to answer.

Mr. B. Venkatapatiraju: I am referring to all services under the control of the Government of India, where they have to employ men, and whether Indians or from abroad. If they have no control over them, I have no business to bring it to the notice of this Assembly at this stage.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: Then may I inquire whether the Honourable Member wishes to argue the case of the Indian Army also?

Mr. B. Venkatapatiraju: I am mentioning all officers that are imported with reference to whom the Government of India or the Secretary of State has control, because I want steps taken by the Government of India in order to see that further recruitment from abroad for the services is stopped.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: I cannot demand that the Honourable Member should tell me what points he intends to raise. I merely ask as a matter of courtesy if he would inform me whether his proposition includes Indian Army officers or only others. I do not see that there would be any difficulty in mentioning it.

Mr. B. Venkatapatiraju: I was not able to catch the Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey. I was only mentioning those services which have been employed by the Government of India. If the Army officers are to be placed on a different footing, I do not mind leaving them aside. I am only mentioning those matters in which the Government of India can join with us in asking the Secretary of State or the British Parliament to stop recruitment in England. Therefore, for the convenience of the Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey, I will not refer to military officers. I will only refer to those branches of the service which are employed in India under the control of the Government of India.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: The Civil Services?

Mr. B. Venkatapatiraju: Yes. I may mention, Sir, that the Railway Board in their Administration Report for 1921-22 state that in the superior posts the number of Indians was increased from 85 in 1916 to 212 in 1922. The Railways employ a staff of 6,858 Europeans, 11,831 Anglo-Indians and 735,789 Indians, in lower grades where others are not available for those salaries. The Railway Board states that no definite arrangements have so far been attempted to meet the needs of indigenous Railway recruitment. Both the Public Services Commission and the Industrial Commission recommended that there should be secured for all normal requirements properly trained Indians and that every educational facility should be offered. Why was this neglected? Is it because they think that the country need not provide such services? I am rather doubtful why the Honourable Mr. Hindley should state on the floor of this House, when he was asked about it, that the Government policy is not to interfere. I may mention that State Railways, although they are managed by Companies, are subject to the controlling authority of Government and State Railways are the property of Government, and all appointments made by the railways are subject to the confirmation of the Government of India. As long ago as 1879 the Secretary of State impressed on the Government of India the expediency of employing Indians in posts of importance. I might quote the authority of Mr. T. W. Tutwiller, the General Manager of the Tata Iron and Steel Works, who states that "Indians are very intelligent and quick to learn, more amenable to discipline than the foreigner, less costly, and work has not suffered either in quantity or quality." If we say there were difficulties in technical branches. I ask, was there any difficulty in administrative branches? Mr. Houldcroft, late Carriage and Wagon Superintendent, Bombay, Baroda and Central India Railway, expressed the same view. The Industrial Commission were forcibly struck, when visiting large Railway workshops throughout India, with the complete absence of Indians from the ranks of foremen and chargemen. What was the policy underlying the Government neglecting to secure recognition of the claims of Indians and thus economising expenditure, if they had not adopted a step-motherly attitude? Sir Michael Sadler, than whom we cannot find a greater friend of India, and for whom the Government also has some respect, stated before the Students' Committee of Lord Lytton, with special reference to educational policy, "the bold road towards the recognition of Indian independence is the safest one which the British nation can follow in its relation with India. Under present conditions it seems more likely that this road will lead to voluntary and close alliance than to disruption. Frank acceptance of this aim would remove all animosities." He urges, therefore, that in education and therefore in what our educational ideas pre-suppose, we should be prepared to give India, if she deliberately asks for it, what we consider best for ourselves. It is proposed in my Resolution that recruiting should generally be confined to India. This does not at all mean that the privileges and rights which the persons already appointed possess have to be disturbed. Mr. Fisher admitted that this, the poorest country, has the costliest administration. The Honourable Mr. Reddi has pointed out in his budget speech of 1922 that Lord Hardinge has admitted that the Government is under an obligation to give the greatest service for the lowest possible cost. He quoted the comparative figures to show the extravagant salaries paid in India. The Prime Minister of Canada does not get more than Rs. 3,000 per mensem; other heads of departments, Ministers, Rs. 1,750 per mensem; Deputy Ministers Rs. 760 to Rs. 1,500 per mensem. In Australia the Prime Minister gets Rs. 2,625 per mensem, Ministers Rs. 2,062, Secretaries Rs. 875 to Rs. 1,875 per mensem. In New Zealand similar salaries are paid to these officials. I will not weary you with other figures, but I would ask the Honourable the Home Member to compare the salaries paid in India with the salaries paid in other parts of the world, by richer countries, by countries where there is no deficit year after year, either pre-war or post-war. In those countries I may mention for the information of the Honourable the Home Member, who already is aware of it, that the wages of unskilled labourers range from Rs. 5 to 10 a day, while our labourers get four annas to twelve annas on the average. Such being the difference between one country and another, should we be prepared to pay higher salaries, and it is plain that even these higher salaries are not enough to secure proper recruitment in other countries. Why should you not utilise indigenous talent? You may say efficiency would suffer but I doubt whether the Ministers in the Provinces and the Executive Members here are unable to discharge their duties efficiently. Is it not nobler for individuals as well as for nations to struggle towards excellence with its natural force and vitality however imperfectly than to work efficiently under expert guidance from without in all matters? Do you think artificial limbs better than natural ones? We call a people free when they have some voice in the Government, and in the appointment of recruits for the services. When India was rich, Sir, we found nation after nation came here to secure those riches by one means or another, and when India is so poor we find people are coming here from one colony or another to exploit cheap Indian labour. Should we continue this sort of administration which would bring poverty to such a pitch as to compel us to send our countrymen for a pittance of 6 annas or 8 annas a day to other lands than our own? Is my suggestion at all a really strange one? Has not the Government of India itself issued a circular called the 'O'Donnell Circular' postulating the possibility of stopping further recruitment abroad? Even if it is stopped from now, it will take 25 years more to complete Indianisation of the services. More pertinent, is it not a fact that you are afraid to part with administration on account of British Service and trade interests?

[Mr. B. Venkatapatiraju.]

If we want the British character of the administration, does it mean uprightness, just treatment and progressive amelioration of the people and has Britain the monopoly of all rare virtues?

Don't you think that if Indians have the controlling voice India would be better in more respects than one because they can enter into the feelings and spirit of the people and understand their difficulties better than is being done now? We are always told that the country is so prosperous. Is it not a fact, Sir, that if you dive deep enough into the matter, you see that there is only a thin crust of prosperity above ground covering immense layers of squalor, misery and suffering? Have you ever passed through any village in any province and noticed if they have got decent homes or clothing or even sufficient food? Are you afraid of Lord Sydenham's attack on that O'Donnell Circular, characterised by him as which I think is quite absurd, as lacking in statesmanship and discretion on the part of the Government of India in offering to employ Indians for the Indian services? Are we not grateful to the Government of India for issuing that circular? When we heard of that circular we eagerly waited to see the phase of pressing reforms to the issue of self-governing India. We have also heard of Indianisation of the Indian Army instead of the miserly concession of gradually Indianising eight units to be completed in 26 years. It is a pity that in Parliament some gentlemen should have objected to Englishmen serving under an Indian. Is it such a strange thing? Persons who are prepared to eat the salt of India, are they not prepared to serve under Indians, and are they not doing it now? Why should there be this racial claim of superiority? We were told Lord Reading—to his lasting glory it must be said—went a step further and sent a despatch setting up a gradual scheme of appointment of Indian officers to mature in 30 years. This was published in the papers, which also reported that the Cabinet had considered and rejected it. Is it not a serious denial of the spirit of the Reforms? Sir William Vincent said very truly that without an Indian Army the Indians cannot have self-Government. Then when are we going to get self-Government if you do not do one thing or the other? When are we to expect the transfer of ultimate authority from the British Parliament to an Indian Legislature, and from the British electorate to an Indian electorate? Are we to pass our days under the certificated system of Government even with regard to the services? The Secretary of State sanctions scales of pay and allowances and appoints men as he pleases and the amount wanted will be put as non-votable items and we have to sit here wringing our hands. Is it not necessary for us, as Captain Sassoon boldly pointed out, that we should serve our country better outside than inside the Legislature and to be sure, as Mr. Lloyd George seemed to be sure, that the position of the Indian Civil Service will in future remain unchanged and their decreasing number will still remain the still frame of the whole structure of Indian Government? If the policy announced is carried out, it will spell disaster both to England and India. Are Indians so dead to all the feelings of liberty as voluntarily to submit to be slaves for ever? I do not believe that our quondam trustees, the British Parliament and the British electorate, are so neglectful of their duty as to believe that the beneficiaries, Indians, can so easily be duped to lose their birth-right as British citizens. But we must tell our justice loving Viceroy that we prefer liberty before the easy yoke of servile pomp. When the birth-right of British citizenship is denied to us, no station, no rank, no authority, no power can safely disregard the unmistakable declarations that have been made from time to time that we should be masters in our own homes. When we are claiming this privilege for ourselves, we are claiming it for the Government of India who have no control at all in the matter of recruitment. May I invite your attention, Sir, for a moment to the Civil Service in the Colonies? An English Civil Servant employed in a colony holds his post there at pleasure, but by practice he holds it during good behaviour. There would be a Civil Service Commission (unlike our Staff Selection Board) to hold examinations and decide the fitness of candidates for the posts. They are also to give certificates for increases of salary, for promotion and improvement of status. For instance, Canadian Civil Service Legislation includes no provision for pensioning officers but provides a superannuation fund based on contribution of 3 per cent. on the officer's salary and grant from Government. Unlike the Imperial Service it has not the compensation of a pension at its close and is not redeemed by social consideration and marks of Royal favour. In the colonies, civil servants are servants, not masters as in India. They are a comparatively poorly paid service as the salary does not exceed the wage of unskilled labourers by more than five or six times. I may mention, Sir, that the Inchcape Committee say that the number in military service was increased by 3 per cent. and in civil services by 9.9 per cent. while the increase in pay and allowances is 101.3 per cent. from 20 crores to 40 crores. But the Committee point out that in 1920 when the cost of living was at its highest the rate of pay was increased by about 100 per cent. without any stipulation as in England to reduce the pay when the cost of living came down. They also speak of the reduction of travelling allowances.

Leaving alone all those cases of those who are already employed, may I not appeal to the Government of India, that they should strengthen the hands of the Assembly by carrying out our wishes that in order to reduce our expenditure it is far better wherever possible and wherever available qualified Indians should be employed in India, and only in extreme cases we must go to other places. By experts I mean persons who have specialised in any branch of knowledge. How is this necessary in India when no colony has suffered by not employing men from abroad? In America none other than an American will be employed permanently in their service and in colonies only persons born in that colony are employed. Only in exceptional cases, which are very few, others are employed. Is it because the Government do not find sufficient Indian talent or capacity to run this administrative machinery? Therefore, I earnestly appeal to the House that in order to secure contentment and happiness and to reduce the unnecessary expenditure and abolish deficits and the consequent necessity of taxing the poor, I appeal once more to recruit in India before I sit down. This is the first step in the direction of granting self-Government and if you do not take this step, I am afraid that by fixing any proportion you are postponing the grant of self-Government indefinitely, which the country cannot brook for any longer time. Therefore, I move my Resolution.

Rai Sahib Lakshmi Narayan Lal (Bihar and Orissa: Nominated Non-Official): Sir, I rise to support this Resolution very strongly. The first term of the first instalment of Swaraj is almost over, and let us see what this Swaraj means to the country. We have taxed our poor countrymen to the extent of not less than 28 crores of rupees. And notwithstanding the reductions made under the recommendations of the Retrenchment Committee we are again this year going to force a taxation of about 4 crores on the poor man's salt. The poor masses were all along expecting in their heart of hearts that after the recommendations of the Retrenchment Committee, there shall be some relaxation in the unpopular taxes

Mr. President: The Honourable Member cannot discuss questions arising out of the Finance Bill on this Resolution.

Rai Sahib Lakshmi Narayan Lal: The financial crisis, Sir, is sure to continue in the country unless some change of policy is adopted by the Government like the one covered by the Resolution under discussion. The whole difficulty is that this poor country is being governed on a standard which is really more costly than it can afford, and unless there is some change of policy in the administration, neither the financial crisis will improve, nor will there be any money to relax the unpopular taxes or for developing the resources of the country which the Honourable the Finance Member kindly referred to in his Budget speech and for which the country is very thankful to him. But where is the money to spend for the development of the resources of the country? Where is the money to relax the unpopular taxes? Where is the money to remove the financial crisis of the country? Money is badly needed for these three purposes, and unless some change of policy is adopted by the Government, the financial crisis will continue and with it will also continue the discontent in the country which means more expenditure. Sir, I support this Resolution.

Dr. Nand Lal (West Punjab: Non-Muhammadan): Sir, if I could rightly follow the scope of this Resolution, it is this, that India will make recruitment for our services and that England may not take the trouble of making these recruitments in that country, and the reason which has been suggested in the terms of this Resolution is this, that if this policy is adopted, if this recommendation is accepted by this House, then there will be a reduction in expenditure, and India will become a rich country. Unless and until the present policy is changed and the recommendation embodied in this Resolution is accepted, India will remain as poor as she is now. The genesis of the question has been given by the Honourable Mover. He has made reference to the declarations of Queen Victoria of blessed memory, he has made reference to various other Acts which gave us certain rights; he has made reference to certain statistics which prove to the hilt that the salaries which are being given in India to Government officers and other officials are much higher than those in other countries. And this is a fact which cannot be denied, and if I can think aright, it is one of the chief causes of the present poverty of India. The machinery which is set, I mean the official machinery, is so expensive, that India cannot afford to pay such heavy salaries. I adopt some of his arguments and substantially hold with him that our present pay scale is very high. He has made reference to a number of other points which I need not repeat. But shall offer a few remarks which are pertinent to the question suggested by this Resolution, Sir, the present question, before this Assembly, so far as this Resolution goes, is not what proportion of a certain nationality, European or non-European, should be recruited; the question is that, if recruitment is to be effected with a view to bringing officers or employees for the services in India, then India herself will be the fittest country to decide, and England should not take that trouble. I think there could be no two opinions about this. Our Government of India is the best Government to see what sort of officer is really capable of doing a particular branch of service in India. The Government of India is fully cognisant of the merits and capabilities of the people living in this country and therefore that Government, it cannot be denied, is the best suited to do this work of enlistment or recruitment. Therefore, on this ground, the Resolution deserves the general support of the whole House. The other ground is that, if enlistment or recruitment is effected in England, naturally we shall have to pay travelling allowance and oversea allowances and the people who are going to be recruited there, who are going to be employed in England, naturally will lay claim to higher salaries. I am not here to discuss the comparative merits and abilities of the candidates. I would concede at once that some of the people who come from England are really capable men, very able men, whose merits are of a very high order, no doubt, but here economically we have got to see that, if those officers themselves come to India in order to seek for appointment, then we shall not have to pay so much as they would claim when they are in their own country or their own homes. If I shall try to secure appointment, I shall make a competition. Then my employer will dictate terms. But, if the same employer makes a requisition to a province or a country that he wants so many men to have a certain administration carried on, then the candidates will demand inflated salaries. This is a question of common sense. So, therefore, India suggests to England that this method, which "I propose" and which this Resolution is proposing, will be better, will be less expensive. We shall be able to get men of equal capabilities on less salaries if recruitment is effected here in India. These men may come to India. There is no question of nationality, if I can rightly understand the terms of this Resolution under debate now.

The other ground which I find in favour of this Resolution is this, that, if some candidates are really in need of service and the posts are to be filled up, then the employer, who has got to see that those appointments are conferred on the ablest candidates, will naturally hold competitive examinations and go by merit and merit alone. And, when this policy is adopted, it will become known to every body in India and in England, and very efficient men will come here, we shall hold examinations—competitive examination will be held by the Government of India—and we shall choose the best men. So, therefore, the efficiency of the services will also be increased. These are the grounds, in brief, which I place before this Assembly. I hope this Assembly will appreciate them. I have got an amendment of a similar nature and character. It suggests some verbal changes simply. I do not agree with the phraseology of the Resolution which has been moved by my learned friend and so I propose some changes. The changes which I propose, Sir, are, as submitted above, of a very verbal character. They are

Mr. President: I propose to take the amendment of greater substance and, then, if it is not carried, we can deal with the verbal changes of the Honourable Member.

Dr. Nand Lal: Very well, Sir. With these few remarks I support this Resolution.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: I think that most Members of this House will agree with me in regretting that this motion has come on at this moment at a time when the minds of most of us are directed to another problem of an anxious nature. It has another disadvantage. For,

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

[24TH MARCH 1928.]

[Sir Malcolm Hailey.]

at the end of a long Session, after we have discussed many other questions of the highest importance it puts before us a proposition which properly should be the subject of what we know as a full-dress debate; and to-day a full-dress debate on this subject is not psychologically possible. The House is my proof; when the Honourable Member was speaking, the House was thin; as he proceeded it got thinner, and still thinner. That was not because the House was not interested in this question. It is one of the questions on which on all sides there is always the greatest interest manifested. It was because the House obviously felt that the occasion for discussion was inopportune, not only with reference to the circumstances of this Session but for another reason. In essence, this is one of the questions which must come before the Royal Commission

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: Would it?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: And the Royal Commission will be obliged to form opinions bearing on the general subjects discussed to-day; representative opinions will have to be collected, weighed and examined. It is quite clear, therefore, that it is not one of those Resolutions on which there can be that free and fruitful discussion as between Government and the Assembly which can be of value to both. Take the case as it stands. How can we in these circumstances undertake to send any recommendation to the Secretary of State on the subject? All that the Secretary of State could reply, and would certainly and reasonably reply, would be that the whole field opened by the question is about to be examined by a Royal Commission, and it would be of little value, therefore, for us to make any recommendation to him on the subject now. We had of course a long debate on one aspect of this case in Simla and in Delhi. That debate dealt with Indianisation, pure and simple. The Honourable Member who proposes this Resolution now proceeds to go much further. The exact progress of Indianisation necessary or suitable in view of the administrative changes following in the wake of the reforms is yet to be settled. But the Honourable Mover is not for that; there is no half measure for him; he would thrust aside the whole question at once. He will admit of no progressive stages of Indianisation. He would admit of no advance in the proportion of Indian recruitment, gradual, speedy, or otherwise. He would at once lay down a rule that except in the case of technical services there should be no recruitment at all in Europe. He does not merely mean, as Dr. Nand Lal thought,—that the Government of India should take the recruitment into its own hands instead of allowing the recruitment to be made at Home. That is not his meaning at all. His meaning obviously is, and he expressed it in so many words, that we should cease at once to attempt any process of gradual Indianisation as defined by any progressive rule of proportion,—and that we should forthwith, barring the exception of a few technical appointments, recruit Indians purely and simply. That is a proposition which goes a great deal further than anything which was advanced in the course of our previous discussions. He admits that his proposition is drastic, and demands an entire change of policy. I am impelled to ask, what support has he behind him when he puts forward this proposition? I do not want to examine his arguments, because, his arguments hardly deserve examination; they hardly deserve indeed the name of arguments. I do him I think little injustice if I say that all he had to produce before us to-day was a series of jottings and cuttings from a common place book, strung together without system or connection.

He began by referring to the declaration of 1833. He glanced at irregular intervals at the history of our services during seventy years. He indulged us with a variety of irrelevant information regarding topics so wide apart as position of the civil servants in the colonies, and the pay of the Prime Minister of Norway. But I would stop there. I will not trouble the House with what he said; the House has been troubled enough with it already. What he did not say was more important. He never once adduced himself to the definite question whether he had behind him any considered body of opinion in demanding that all European recruitment should immediately cease. I ask him where is his support for that proposition. (Mr. B. Venkatapatiraju: "O'Donnell's Circular.") I have yet to learn that that circular was supposed to represent public opinion. His proposition has never received any support in this Assembly. It has not, as far as I am aware, received support from the Legislative Councils of the Provinces. I am aware that in Madras there was a proposition that the pay of the services should be reduced at once and that of European recruits re-assessed on a new basis. There was no proposition that the recruitment of Europeans should immediately cease. There was a proposition much like his put forward the other day in the Bengal Council; and it was voted down. I ask what province demands this. Begin at the North. Does the North-West Frontier Province demand it? Does the Punjab demand it? The Punjab which is at present racked with one of those recurring spasms of communal differences which we all regret so deeply in the interests of the Punjab itself. Is the United Provinces demanding it? The United Provinces where at the moment the chief topic which agitates people's minds seems to be the legitimacy of the wholesale conversion of Muhammadans back to Hinduism—is the United Provinces demanding it? I have shown the feeling in Bengal; can he quote any legitimate support from Bombay or Madras or Burma? But let me have this, and come to a second point. He has put it forward as an economic proposition. Now let me ask him what Provincial Retrenchment Committees have asked for this? I can quote him an instance to the contrary. The Bengal Retrenchment Committee which reviewed the whole range of their expenditure did not ask for it. I am therefore justified in saying that in this demand for the complete and immediate cessation of European recruitment the Honourable Member cannot quote to us the valid authority which lies behind his proposition. Let us be a little more precise in our own minds as regards the exact economic effect: I could have wished that for my own information and that of the House the Honourable Member instead of giving us a series of extracts from his commonplace book could have proved to us the exact value to our central finances of the proposal which he advocates. He talked of our immense central deficits; he did not tell us what effect he expected his proposal, if carried, would have on the position. I admit at once that if the whole of the services of India could be Indianised on a proper Indian basis of pay, and the amendment put forward by Dr. Gour is at last constructive on this point, there would be a saving in the charge of the services. But while the Mover proposes that we should immediately stop European recruitment, he does not propose to take the initial step which would secure us the financial advantage of doing so. He does not apparently propose that we should immediately place all-India services on an Indian pay. He may assume it; but if so that only gives me another point; for that is a process which must be considered and considered in detail by the Royal Commission—another reason why I say that this proposition at this moment lacks reality. But when he talks of the effect on our central finances, it is of little use to quote to us the figures of employment of European officers throughout India. If he is to make any serious inroads on our deficit by the proposals that he has put forward, he will have to do it within the expenditure of the Central Government itself. He will find it difficult. Some of our purely central service such as Audit and Accounts, or Posts and Telegraphs, or Customs are very largely Indianised at present, he would not effect much by stopping European recruitment there; and to stop European recruitment would of course have practically no effect on the cost of our Secretariats, until the whole of the pay were reorganized on an Indian basis, and even then the saving would not be anything which would have an effect on the budget. In most of his remarks, however, he is obviously referring to our recruitment of the all-India services, which of course are paid for by the provinces. All this talk of reducing our deficits by stopping the recruitment of Europeans is really quite beside the point and to pursue the discussion on these lines would be fruitless.

Well, Sir, that is how the case stands from my point of view. I need not say that as far as I am concerned this is not a question on which one can compromise or a proposition which one can accept. I am not here going into the grounds why we maintain that a proportion, whatever that proportion may be, of Europeans is necessary in the services of this country. I am not going into the long history of what the European services have done for this country in the past. I am not going to fight again the battles which we had when the Public Services Commission reported. I am not going to fight again the contest which we waged when Mr. Jamnadas's Resolution was put forward. It seems to me that little is to be gained by doing this now. I put it to the House that discussion at this moment is of little use in view of the fact that the whole of these questions will now be gone into in an orderly manner by the Royal Commission—and when I say gone into in an orderly manner, I mean to say that they will have to take regard not only of one aspect of the question as the Honourable Member has done, but of every aspect, namely, how far the all-India Services can with profit be provincialised: how far it is possible to re-organize pay generally on a purely Indian basis: whether in doing so we should also re-organize our leave and other service conditions on an Indian basis: and what additional pay, if any,—I won't say "if any" because everybody allows that additional pay is necessary for Europeans—what additional pay, leave or pension should be given to Europeans who are brought out here either on the Honourable Member's system or on any other—those are the questions they will have to consider; and over and above all they will have to consider what proportion of Indians and Europeans will still be required in this country. That the House should now be asked to vote on a proposition which puts the whole of these questions on one side and merely assumes, assumes without proof and as far as I can make out without support, that it is advisable that from henceforth there should be no European recruitment at all except for certain technical posts—that the House should be asked to answer that proposition at present seems to me unreasonable. I say that the House would be well advised to adjourn this debate; it would be well advised to wait until the Royal Commission sits and to allow public bodies to place their views before it. But in making that proposition I wish to make it also perfectly clear that in no circumstances can Government itself accept the proposition as it now stands. I wish to move, Sir, that the debate be adjourned.

Mr. President: The question is that the debate be now adjourned.

Mr. B. Venkatapatiraju: Before it is adjourned, may I have the right of replying to Sir Malcolm Hailey?

Mr. President: The question is that the debate be now adjourned.

Mr. B. Venkatapatiraju: Sir, I am thankful to the Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey for stating that at the fag end of the Session he does not want to deal with it as a full-dress debate

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: Sir, I stated that the House obviously did not wish to deal with it,—and if the Honourable Member wishes any proof of that, I refer to the state of the House when he was speaking.

Mr. B. Venkatapatiraju: There are some people, Sir, who bury their heads in hand and do not see anything. Does the Honourable the Leader of the House mean to say that he has convinced the people in this House or outside that there is no demand at any time? Has he not referred to the 1887 Commission, has he not referred to the 1912 Commission,—and what were the views expressed before them, what was the recommendation made by Mr. Justice Abdur Rahim?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: Certainly not the same as yours.

Mr. B. Venkatapatiraju: At that time they had not considered whether Self-government was within the reach of the people. The recruitment question comes only when we are thinking of Self-government. The Honourable the Leader of the House gave absolutely no reply as to why during all this period of 70 years, recruitment of Indians was neglected when statesman after statesman, His Majesty after His Majesty, proclaimed and gave pledges to the people that they would be freely and impartially admitted, is there any reply from the Leader of the House on the point whether you are impartially and freely admitting the people of this country? That requires an answer,—not whether

Mr. President: The Honourable Member must address himself to the question that the debate be now adjourned.

Mr. B. Venkatapatiraju: Now the only point that was raised in favour of adjourning this debate was on account of the pending arrival of the Royal Commission which this House on more than one occasion never wanted. I ask, Sir, if the Royal Commission would consider, according to the Leader of the House, whether recruitment outside India should be stopped, if I understand from the Leader of the House that they will consider not only what services should be provincialized, whether there is any necessity for recruitment outside, and, if so, to what extent, if that point is to be considered by that Commission, Sir, I do not at all stand in the way of having the debate adjourned, because it serves no useful purpose at this time when the Royal Commission will consider those points.

Dr. H. S. Gour (Nagpur Division: Non-Muhammadan): Sir, though we are met in an atmosphere of great depression, I should like very briefly to state what advantage would be gained if we went on with the discussion of this motion and did not accede to the proposal of the Honourable the Home Member for the adjournment of the debate. The main part of his argument was that a Royal Commission on Public Services had already been appointed, and, therefore, that Commission will go into the whole question, to which my friend, Mr. Venkatapatiraju, replies that we did not want the Royal Commission. But that is no answer. A Royal Commission has been appointed, but because a Royal Commission has been appointed, therefore it is necessary that this Resolution and its amendment should be put to the vote, because when the Royal Commission comes, the Royal Commissioners will have the view of this House before them, of which they would be deprived if this debate is adjourned. Judging from the reports which come to us from the English press and in Reuter's telegrams, there is an anxiety on the part of the Home Government to send out this Royal Commission almost immediately. At any rate, Sir, even if it comes later in the autumn or early in the winter, this House will not be then sitting, and the Royal Commission, therefore, will not have the collected views of this House, and it is therefore necessary that we should decide as to what is the view of this House regarding the future of all-India services. The second point made by the Honourable the Home Member, which I take in connection with his motion for adjournment, was that this question is of such paramount importance that it requires a full-dress debate. That is perfectly true, but unfortunately we cannot put in all the Resolutions for a full-dress debate. A very large number of important questions are awaiting their fate and the fortunes of the ballot box. Consequently, I submit that when the Honourable the Home Member promises no date on which there can be a full-dress debate, we are I think justified in utilising the half day that has been given to us for discussing this very important motion. The third argument used by the Honourable the Home Member was what Provinces want, or are in sympathy with the Honourable the Mover's Resolution. Very shrewdly he omitted to mention the Central Provinces. I think Honourable Members will know the reason why. Only recently the Central Provinces Council, not by a majority, with the officials and the Civilians dissenting, but unanimously, with the concurrence of the Civilians present in the House, passed a Resolution for the stoppage of all over-seas recruitment

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Halley: Not quite unanimously.

Dr. H. S. Gour: There was only one Member belonging to the depressed classes, who never understood the proceedings and therefore he did not vote for the motion. With his exception, every one, official and non-official, Government Members and Non-Official Members, voted in favour of that Resolution

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Halley: Do you really represent that all the Government Members voted in favour of it?

Dr. H. S. Gour: I ask the Honourable the Home Member to correct me. The statement I make is, with the exception of one Mahar representative, the whole House unanimously voted and supported the Resolution, and Mr. Mitchell, who spoke on behalf of the Government, supported the Resolution on the ground of economy. And it is because I am encouraged by the attitude of my own Government and the very good reasons given by the exponent of the official view, that I have tabled my own amendment, namely, that a reduced pay must be fixed for all posts in India, and as far as possible the Indian services should be Indianised subject to the limitation with which my amendment closes. I am at present speaking on the subject of adjournment, and therefore I submit, that nothing would be gained, and this opportunity lost, and the Royal Commissioners deprived of our views as expressed in this Assembly, if we acceded to the Honourable the Home Member's request for an adjournment.

Sir Campbell Rhodes (Bengal: European): I move, Sir, that the question be put.

Mr. President: The question is that the question be put.
The motion was adopted.

Mr. President: The question is that this debate be adjourned.
The motion was adopted.

The Assembly then adjourned till Eleven of the Clock on Monday, the 26th March, 1923.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

Monday, 26th March, 1923.

The Assembly met in the Assembly Chamber at Eleven of the Clock.
Mr. President was in the Chair.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

DOUBLE STORIED QUARTERS IN RAISINA.

682. *Maulvi Miyan Asjad-ul-lah: 1. Is it a fact that double storied quarters for single clerks are under construction at Raisina behind Taylor Square in close proximity to the single storied family quarters already built for and occupied by married men.

2. Are the Government aware that the residence of single men (especially) in double storied quarters in such close proximity to (single storied) family quarters is considered objectionable by all sections of Indian clerks, the overwhelming majority of whom observe strict parda system.

3. If the reply to 1 and 2 above be in the affirmative, will Government please say whether they propose to stop further progress of the building of the single quarters at once? If not, why not?

Colonel Sir Sydney Crookshank: 1. Yes.

2. It is understood that the existence of single quarters in the immediate neighbourhood of family quarters is considered objectionable only in cases where the latter can be overlooked by the occupants of the former.

3. Government are informed that this is only possible in a very few cases and then only to a negligible extent, far less in fact than in the vast majority of houses in Delhi city and elsewhere. In these circumstances, Government see no reason to stop further progress in connection with the construction of the quarters in question, but steps are being taken to prevent all overlooking by increasing the height of the screen walls where it is necessary or possible to do so.

STOPPAGE OF TONGAS OUTSIDE DELHI STATION.

683. *Maulvi Miyan Asjad-ul-lah: 1. Is the Government aware (a) that tongas and other vehicles carrying outgoing Inter and Third Class Passengers are not allowed to stop in front of any gate of the Delhi Railway Station (Main) and that such passengers including respectable ladies and children have to alight on the Queen's Garden side of the road which they have to cross on foot;

(b) that this causes extreme hardship and inconvenience to the passengers;

(c) that taking advantages of the helpless position of passengers Railway porters demand and in fact extort exorbitant charges for carrying luggages to the station?

2. Will the Government state when, by whom and under what provision of the Railway or Municipal law this practice was introduced?

3. Will the Government take steps to remedy this real grievance of the passengers as soon as possible?

Mr. O. D. M. Hindley: Government have no information on the subject but inquiries are being made.

DEFICIT ON GREAT INDIAN PENINSULA RAILWAY.

634. Mr. K. O. Neogy: Is it not a fact that the Great Indian Peninsula Railway has been working at a deficit for the last two years?

Mr. O. D. M. Hindley: During the last two years the net earnings of the Great Indian Peninsula Railway were not sufficient to meet the interest and annuity charges.

TRANSPORTATION SCHEME ON GREAT INDIAN PENINSULA RAILWAY.

635. Mr. K. O. Neogy: (1) (a) Has the Transportation Scheme been introduced with the object of economising expenditure in the Great Indian Peninsula Railway?

(b) If so, will Government state the extent of economy up to the present and the particular classes in which reduction has been effected, i.e., the official, subordinate and menial classes?

(c) How many of official grade appointments have been abolished?

(d) How many subordinate or menial posts have been abolished, and how many Europeans, Anglo-Indians and Indians respectively have been prejudicially affected by the retrenchment?

(2) How many official (superior) appointments have been created under the Transportation Scheme and to what extent has that scheme brought about an enhancement of the salaries of each?

(3) Is it a fact that the Loco. Superintendent and General Traffic Manager of the Great Indian Peninsula Railway while being relieved of all their staff responsibility under the said scheme continue to enjoy their old rates of pay?

(4) Will Government be pleased to state the total expenditure in salaries of officers under the Transportation Scheme, as compared with their salaries previously?

(5) Will Government state the cost to the Great Indian Peninsula Railway in organising this scheme, i.e., in opening new offices, changing stationery, etc., for the different Departments?

Mr. O. D. M. Hindley: 1. (a) Yes.

1. (b) to (d) and 2 to 5. As the changes to which these questions relate have not yet been completely carried out, it is not possible to give a reply. It is however anticipated that the result when complete will be a great gain both in economy and efficiency.

Lieut.-Colonel H. A. J. Gidney: Is it a fact that not one single official's appointment has been abolished?

Mr. O. D. M. Hindley: I am not in a position to answer that question categorically. I should like to have notice of it.

RETIREMENTS ON GREAT INDIAN PENINSULA RAILWAY.

636. Mr. K. O. Neogy: (a) How many of the subordinate staff over 55 years of age have been required to retire on the Great Indian Peninsula Railway?

(b) Is it a fact that a very different rule is followed in regard to officers of the same age?

Mr. O. D. M. Hindley: (a) The matter is within the discretion of the Agent and Government do not propose to call for the information asked for by the Honourable Member.

(b) Government have no information.

Lieut.-Colonel H. A. J. Gidney: Is it a fact that, although there are officers at present on the railway over the 55 years limit, not a single one of them has been retired?

Mr. O. D. M. Hindley: I did not quite understand the question. Will the Honourable Member repeat it?

Lieut.-Colonel H. A. J. Gidney: Is it a fact that the rule dispensing with the services of subordinates over 55 years of age has been put into operation, but it has not been applied in the case of officers?

Mr. O. D. M. Hindley: I cannot say whether it is a fact or not. In any case it is a matter within the discretion of Agent.

Lieut.-Colonel H. A. J. Gidney: Has the Honourable Member's attention been drawn to the Resolution passed at a mass meeting held in Bombay on the 12th instant?

Mr. O. D. M. Hindley: Yes, Sir.

Lieut.-Colonel H. A. J. Gidney: Have Government made up their minds as to what action they intend taking in this matter?

Mr. O. D. M. Hindley: Government do not propose to take any action, Sir.

TRANSFER OF A CASE FROM NORTH-WEST FRONTIER PROVINCE COURT.

637. Dr. Nand Lal: (1) Is it a fact that an application from Muhammad Akbar and others for the transfer of a case from the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, North-West Frontier Province, to any High Court in India was forwarded to the Government of India for orders under Section 527, Criminal Procedure Code?

(2) Was the application of Mohammad Akbar and others placed before His Excellency the Viceroy and Governor General of India and will the Government be pleased to lay on the table the correspondence on the subject between the Judicial Commissioner, the Chief Commissioner, North-West Frontier Province, and the Government of India?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: (1) Yes.

(2) Orders issued under section 527 of the Code of Criminal Procedure are orders of the Governor General in Council. The Government of India think that no useful purpose would be served by laying on the table copies of the correspondence in question.

JUDGES IN PATNA HIGH COURT.

688. *Mr. B. N. Misra: (1) Is the Government aware that two Additional Judges have been appointed to the High Court of Patna?

(2) Is the Government aware that no Oriya has ever been appointed as a High Court Judge ever since the creation of the High Courts at Calcutta, Madras and Patna?

(3) Is the Government aware of the strong feeling of dissatisfaction amongst the Oriyas for the constant neglect of their claims by the several Governments of (a) Bihar and Orissa, (b) Madras, (c) Bengal and (d) the Central Provinces for high appointments, such as High Court Judgeships, Members of the Executive Councils in the several Provinces referred to above?

(4) Do the Government propose to take steps that the claims of the Oriyas are not overlooked in future?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: (1) Yes.

(2) Government have no definite information.

(3) and (4) The Honourable Member is referred to the answer given on the 6th instant to question No. 471, asked by Khan Bahadur Saiyid Muhammad Ismail.

Dr. Nand Lal: Are the Government of India aware that some of the Local Governments sometimes slavishly depend on the recommendations of the High Courts in filling up the appointments of High Court Judges?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: Does the Honourable Member suggest that it is the Local Governments who fill up these appointments?

Dr. Nand Lal: They slavishly depend on the recommendations of some of the High Courts in filling up the appointments without scrutiny or without examination for themselves.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: From all that I have heard in this House I should not have thought that Government would be accused of anything unreasonable if they followed the opinions of the High Courts.

Mr. B. N. Misra: Has the attention of the Government been drawn to the representations made by the Oriya District Association and the Oriya Samaj, Ganjam, to His Excellency Lord Pentland and to His Excellency Lord Willingdon, and to the representations made by the Oriya Peoples' Association and other Associations to the Honourable Sir Charles Bayley and to the Honourable Sir E. Gait at Cuttack and Puri?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: I think we have seen those representations.

PAY OF ACCOUNTS CLERKS, BURMA.

689. *Mr. J. N. Basu: 1. (a) Is the Government aware that two memorials were submitted by the Civil Accounts office clerks of Burma, in October 1922, one to the Viceroy and another to the Auditor-General, Delhi, with regard to their pay?

(b) If so, what steps have been, or are contemplated to be, taken on the grievances mentioned therein?

2. Do the Government propose to classify such clerks into Upper and Lower Divisions on the lines adopted by the Government of Burma? If not, what are the reasons?

3. (a) Do the Government of India propose to keep the pay of their own clerks below that sanctioned by the Government of Burma for their local clerks working in the same office?

(b) Do the Government intend to revise the scale of substantive pay of these clerks soon? If so, when? If not, why not?

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: A duplicate copy of the memorial has been received by the Government of India, but they have not yet received any recommendation from the Auditor General on the questions raised.

OFFICERS IN FEUDATORY STATES, BIHAR AND ORISSA.

640. *Rai Bahadur Lachmi Prasad Sinha: (a) Is it a fact that all the officers deputed on special rates of pay to Feudatory States of Bihar and Orissa are Europeans?

(b) If so, will the Government be pleased to state the reasons for keeping such appointments reserved exclusively for Europeans?

Mr. Denys Bray: (a) No, Sir.

(b) Does not arise.

Mr. K. Ahmed: How many Indian officers are deputed on special rates of pay to these Feudatory States of Bihar and Orissa who are not Europeans?

Mr. Denys Bray: I am afraid I have not got such detailed information at my finger tips. I must ask for notice of the question.

Mr. K. Ahmed: Do I take it that as the first question was answered without reasons for keeping Europeans excluding reserved for such appointments, it necessarily follows that the authority was not consulted before the answer of the (a) portion read out?

Mr. Denys Bray: I had the information at my finger tips when the answer was prepared; I have not now.

Mr. K. Ahmed: May I ask the Honourable Member to refresh his memory?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: May I ask the Honourable Member to remember that he is not cross-examining a witness in Court?

Mr. K. Ahmed: I am sorry, Sir. I was not cross-examining but putting supplementary questions.

UNSTARRED QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

INDIANS AS SECRETARIES, DEPUTY SECRETARIES, ETC.

256. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala: Have the Government decided or do they propose to direct that henceforward Indians may in future be appointed in larger numbers than heretofore as Secretaries, Deputy Secretaries, and Under Secretaries to the different Departments?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Halley: Government cannot bind themselves to any ratio between European and Indian officers in these Secretariat appointments, but they intend to do their best to obtain Indian officers in increasing numbers from the provincial Secretariats.

EXEMPTION FROM ARMS ACT.

257. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala: What class of persons do the Government propose to exempt from the operation of the Arms Act for life?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Halley: The matter is under consideration.

THE INDIAN FINANCE BILL.

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett (Finance Member): Sir, I beg to move:

"That the amendments made by the Council of State in the Bill to fix the duty on salt manufactured in, or imported by land into, certain parts of British India, to vary the duty leviable on certain articles under the Indian Tariff Act, 1894, to fix maximum rates of postage under the Indian Post Office Act, 1898, to amend the Indian Paper Currency Act, 1923, and to fix rates of income-tax, be taken into consideration."

This motion, Sir, raises serious issues, not all of them of a financial nature. I do not propose in the few remarks that I shall make now to deal with any but the financial question; but I do wish to draw the attention of the House to the fact that a serious financial decision has to be taken. From the financial standpoint the question before us is whether the deficit of 369 lakhs for 1923-24 is to be left uncovered or whether it is to be covered by an enhancement of the duty on salt. Sir, I wish it were possible to recapture for a moment the atmosphere of the time when the Budget was introduced and the general discussion was taking place. When I introduced the Budget on March the 1st I drew attention to the serious consequences of five years of continuous deficits and to the urgent need for balancing our Budget in 1923-24. The House from the first showed some dislike to the salt tax but I think we were unanimous in holding that somehow or other the deficit must be covered. That unanimity has been decreasing, I am afraid, since. I have seen it stated—not I think in a responsible quarter—that the Government are making a fetish of balancing the Budget. Well, Sir, the last time I heard that statement made was in defence of the absence of balance in the Austrian Budget; and I have heard that defence made for all the unbalanced Budgets in Europe. I was reading yesterday the columns of a newspaper, the editorial part of which has been thundering in truly Olympian fashion against the Government and against the salt tax; but I was not reading the editorial portion—I was reading the financial columns, and this is what the financial Editor said:

"The business community thoroughly sympathises with the Government in its effort to create a balanced Budget and the opinion is gathering strength that the opposition to the salt tax is mainly political and sentimental and that economically the duty is sound. The country's financial salvation depends on a balanced Budget and the Government's rate of borrowing in the next official year also depends a great deal on it, as a deficit Budget will again create doubt and distrust in the minds of the investing public."

Now, Sir, which is the best guide for the Government and for this House in considering a financial question—the leader writer or the financial editor? Sir, when I introduced the Budget I appealed to this House for united action to bring to an end the era of deficits and to put India back into the position which she has normally enjoyed of having a balanced Budget. The need for a balanced Budget is not less but more since that day, simply because we have expressed our determination to balance the Budget and expressed our conviction that it is necessary. If we fail to do so now we are failing to live up to our convictions. That cannot but have a detrimental effect. Sir, I venture to appeal once again for united action. I lay stress on united action. Some, at any rate, of the advantages of a balanced Budget will not be secured if our action is not united, and all the satisfaction and pleasure that this House and the Government could feel in balancing the Budget will be lost if the effort is not united.

The motion was adopted.

Mr. President: Amendment made by the Council of State:

"In sub-clause (1) of clause 2 of the Bill, after the words 'construed as if' the words 'with effect from the 1st day of March, 1923' were inserted, and for the words 'one rupee and four annas' the words 'two rupees and eight annas' were substituted."

The question I have to put is that this Assembly do agree with the Council of State in that amendment.

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas (Bombay City: Non-Muhammadan Urban): Sir, I rise to oppose the amendment made by the Council of State in the Finance Bill. The amendment, if carried, would restore the original proposal made by the Government in introducing the Budget of enhancing the salt duty that is levied in this country to the extent of Rs. 1-4. As you are aware, Sir, this House by an overwhelming majority while discussing the Finance Bill voted against this increase and carried by a large majority the amendment moved by my Honourable friend, Mr. Rangachariar, that the duty should remain at its original level. Subsequently, the Bill went to the Upper House (Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: "The other House"), to the other House, I am sorry, and it went with a recommendation from His Excellency the Governor General. The other House, as was expected of it, without meaning any disrespect to the personnel of it, has supported the proposal made by Government. I want to tell Government very frankly that the Government would be making a great mistake if it took it for granted that the opinion expressed by the other House is the view that is held by the majority of my countrymen. I repeated that I have to say nothing personal against the Honourable Members of the Council of State; they are men of wealth, they are men possessing large estates, men who are rich and prosperous . . .

Mr. President: I think the Honourable Member had better leave the other House alone.

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas: I shall bow to your ruling, Sir. But I can assure you that I have no intention to run down the Members of that House. All that I meant to point out was that the Government would be making a sad mistake if, relying on the opinion of the other House, they took it for granted that the opinion expressed there was the opinion of the country and allowed themselves to persist in putting forward their proposal for the enhancement of the salt duty. Well, Sir, this House had rejected it when the Bill was being discussed before and I am sure that even those Honourable Members who were on that occasion neutral or who voted in favour of the Government proposal will, if for nothing else, for the purpose of maintaining the dignity and self-respect of this House as the only representative of public opinion, will reconsider their decision and vote against the enhancement of the salt tax. My Honourable friend Sir Basil Blackett in moving the consideration of the Finance Bill has laid stress on the financial necessity of passing this enhancement. My Honourable friend has taken the safe course of avoiding altogether a reference to the political consequences of passing a measure of this character. But surely my Honourable friend cannot but be aware that you cannot divide the financial aspect and the political aspect and the other aspects of the question into water-tight compartments. Each aspect has a bearing on the other and if for the sheer necessity of satisfying your financial point of view you are going against the expressed wishes of the country to enhance the duty on salt, the political situation that is likely to arise then is sure to bear considerably on the financial aspect. All the financial considerations and calculations made by the Honourable Finance Member and the Government are likely to be upset by the political consequences that will accrue as a result of your obstinacy. Let me make myself clear. You are keen on balancing the budget. For the purpose of covering a deficit of 369 lakhs you want to force down the unwilling throat of this country an enhanced duty of Rs. 2-8 on salt. The result of it will be that you will have political disturbances. In the past you had measures carried in the teeth of the opposition of the people, when you had a majority in the old Imperial Legislative Council. The political consequences were such as threw the whole country into a state of chaos, from which this Assembly has helped you gradually to emerge; but even those measures did not affect every human being that lives in this country. So far as the enhancement of the salt tax is concerned, I repeat what I have frequently said in this House, that in the shape of this enhanced salt duty you are sending to every village home in India a messenger of revolution; every home, every person in this country is likely to be affected; every one who is already bitter against the Government or even those who are not yet embittered against Government will have reason to believe that in spite of the expressed opinion of all our countrymen, the Government, in spite of the opposition of the majority of this popular House, have persisted in forcing down the unwilling throat of the country an enhanced salt duty. What will be the result? There will be political disturbances everywhere. And is it not the experience, has it not been the experience of the Government, I ask, that whenever there are political disturbances in the country, they affect trade, they affect the prosperity of the country, they affect the ordinary avocations of the people in the country, and the result is that all your estimates with regard to revenue are frustrated? You will get much less revenue than you expect in this budget. So that, even from the financial point of view you are keen on balancing the budget by covering this small deficit of 369 lakhs, although that may seem to be a gain on paper it will never be in reality a balanced budget because you are likely to lose far more than 369 lakhs by the situation that will come into existence as the result of your obstinacy. I hope Government even at this late stage will be guided by wisdom, by the experience that they have had in the past. Many people in this country had no faith in the reforms, especially because of the extraordinary powers that are vested in the Governor General. We were loath to believe that these extraordinary powers would ever be used on an occasion like this, for ordinary purposes, when there cannot be the slightest justification for the Governor General to use his extraordinary powers. We shall have to hang down our heads in shame when we go to our countrymen and tell them that in spite of the promises that we had made, that we were going to use all the powers that were vested in us by means of the Reforms, in spite of the fact that we had claimed that our powers were very wide and that the extraordinary powers would remain on paper and never be brought into use by the Governor General, we have now come to you with an admission that extraordinary powers are being used for ordinary purposes, on occasions on which no sane Government, let me say, could think of using extraordinary powers. We have to admit to them, whether we like it or not, that there is hollowness in the reforms given to us and that we should all agitate, by all means constitutionally, but agitate violently in order to secure full self-Government at the earliest date possible in this country. (Hear, hear.) Sir, I do not want to pursue the point. I do not know whether the Government is alive to the danger of forcing this measure on the country. I am not blind to the difficulties with which the Government is faced. I realise that on the top of the retrenchment that the Government have undoubtedly effected, it would be rather hard if they did not balance the budget, but the question does remain, are you likely to balance the Budget or are you merely going to secure the balance of the budget on the paper? On the one hand, you have the whole of this country standing like one man opposing the enhancement of the salt duty. You say that you must balance the budget and therefore you must have the salt tax. The country says 'No'. We recognise the need of balancing the budget, but we refuse to allow you even to balance the budget by the enhancement of the salt tax which will bring about a very difficult situation both for you and for us.

Mr. S. C. Shahani (Sind Jagirdars and Zamindars: Landholders): Who is right?

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas: Who is right? On the other hand, you have pressure exercised on you from Whitehall that the budget must be balanced. You have also the opinion of the whole country against the enhancement of the salt tax. If you do not accept the opinion from Whitehall you will not be able to secure the balancing of the budget. As I said, from a financial point of view, you may flatter yourselves that you have secured the balancing of the budget on paper, but you are not going in reality to secure the balancing of the budget. You have Whitehall pressing you to balance the Budget.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey (Home Member): Is the Honourable Member speaking by the book when he says that?

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas: I should be very glad if my Honourable friend is in a position to contradict what I am saying. But that is the general impression not only in this House but throughout the country? Well, Sir, if the Honourable the Home Member does not like me to refer to Whitehall, I shall not refer to it, but there is the public opinion in England, in Great Britain, on which our credit unfortunately depends. It is said that public opinion there demands the balancing of the Budget. We know what public opinion in England about India is; it is confined to the four corners of Whitehall. Well, you have here a choice. You have the whole people asking you not to enhance the salt duty; on the other hand, you have a few,—and after all, many are not interested in Indian problems in England,—you have a few asking you to balance the budget. You know that you cannot secure the real balancing except on paper. The Assembly which has stood by you at most critical moments in the history of this country has also expressed its opinion that you should not enhance the salt duty. You have a choice. You may yield to the wishes of the Assembly, you may respect the wishes of the Assembly, and you will respect public opinion in this country. You will evade the trouble that threatens again to place this country in a state of disorder. You will secure permanently the friendship of the Members of this Assembly who have stood by you at most critical moments in the history of this country. If ingratitude is not one of your weakness, I say that it is necessary that at this most critical moment, that you should stand by this Assembly, in spite of your pet theories. You will be respecting the wishes of the country as expressed in this Assembly. There is a choice before you. You may respect the opinion of this country and avoid all trouble and prove once and for all that you are going to respect the constitution, that you stand for reforms, that you stand for progress, nay that you respect the statement made by the late Viceroy Lord Chelmsford here that autocracy is for all time abandoned. Further, you will respect the message sent through His Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught to us by His Majesty the King Emperor himself that these reforms will establish the beginnings of Swaraj.

Mr. President: I cannot allow the Honourable Member to bring in the name of the Crown in this debate.

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas: I bow to your ruling, Sir. You will respect all the statements that statesmen and high personages at most critical moments have made, statements which have gone a great way in soothing the feelings of this country. You can prove them. There is an opportunity for you to prove that you stand by the progress of this country, that you do not believe in autocracy any longer, and that you want to lead this country to the goal of responsible Government; while by not respecting the wishes of this Assembly by flouting public opinion on an occasion like this, not only will you be undoing every good that the reformed Legislatures have undoubtedly done, but you will be sowing seeds of suspicion in this country which will bring into existence again a great political movement, creating disturbances, disorder and chaos everywhere in the country. It is neither good for you nor for us. Exercise your imagination. I am sorry, Sir, that in this country we have had the sad experience that the powers that be have never exercised their sense of imagination. We thought that the reformed Councils and the presence of our own countrymen in the Executive Councils were going to supply what you lacked. But it seems to me that if this demand to enhance the salt tax is persisted in, all these difficulties and all the sad experience that you had in the past and the altered circumstances after the introduction of the Reforms have been lost on you altogether. The moment the movement that used to disturb the country is on the wane, you come forward again with your might to overrule the majority in this House and force on us a measure which this country like one man detests. You will be responsible for the consequences. As friends of the Government, as friends of this country and its relations with Great Britain, as persons who have stood by you in the midst of slanders, in the midst of calumny, in the midst of opposition of all kinds from our countrymen, we appeal to you not to have recourse to a measure like this. I hope, Sir, my appeal will not fall on deaf ears.

Sir Campbell Rhodes (Bengal: European): Sir, I think, I shall voice the opinions of all in this House when I say how much I regret the constitutional episode which has unfortunately arisen over this salt tax. It has arisen, and while on the one hand I feel that there is nothing to be lost by candour, on the other there is nothing to be gained by heat. (Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: "Don't produce it.") I will do my best, Sir, not to do so, and I don't think my reputation in this House has been such as to justify the suggestion. I am very willing, Sir, to grant to the Members on my right credit for their honesty of view. They hold these views—political views admittedly—they hold them very strongly. Personally, if I saw any chance of a compromise, which I do not, I would have sacrificed some of the views which I hold very strongly on the other side in order to meet them half-way. But I fear that that is hopeless. But Sir, I do ask them in turn to give us credit for honesty in the views we hold. In speaking about the salt tax and its pressure on the poor, it must be remembered that none of us are speaking for our constituents. (Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary: "Nor are we.") The poor that will be affected have no voting power and, therefore, we can only find their views out by inquiry. I have spent some little time in making these inquiries from the man in the street. They tell me that salt has risen slightly during the last two months—they are not quite certain when—but during the last two months it has risen. I asked them the reason for the rise, the answer I got was that they supposed the dealer is trying to make a little extra profit. Well, I said, why don't you kick up a row? The answer I got was: It is such a small item in our expenditure; why should we? People talk about the deficit as if it was a paper transaction. I mentioned in my previous speech on this occasion that I regard the deficit as another method of putting a burden on the poor. I referred to the evils of inflation which means that a rupee buys less than previously. The Honourable the Finance Member has referred to the permanent impost, a deficit will make on the new loan which we hear from telegrams from Home will be shortly floated. The rate of interest, and the price at which that loan can be issued depend largely, I desire to warn Members, on their action to-day. Now, Sir, both sides—and I stand in a position here from which I can observe both sides—have not put any alternative proposition to the salt tax which has found general acceptance either on the one side or the other. Why is that? Not, I submit, because there has been no desire to effect a compromise. Not, I submit, because we have not the ingenuity to suggest an alternative. But simply because no alternative exists. (An Honourable Member: "Retrench.") Year after year, the salt tax has been proposed and defeated. We have retrenched, we have put up, before we put up for the salt tax, all other taxes to the point at which to raise them further would mean less revenue. And, when finally we come to salt, obviously because it is final, there can be no alternative. It has been suggested that this salt tax is in the nature of poll tax collected in its simplest form. I see no objection at all myself to that definition. It has been suggested that it presses equally on the rich and the poor. It is not intended at all to press on the rich. It is very much in the nature of poll tax levied on every inhabitant of the country, and as regards the rich, as we all know other forms of taxation are resorted to and I have it on the authority of my friends on the right from Bombay, that some of these taxes have reached the limit. If Members like to have something to think about during a very well earned recess, which will shortly ensue, I suggest they might seriously consider the question whether low taxation and a low standard of living do not go together and whether perhaps they have not been an evil rather than a good to the country. Well, Sir, we have found it impossible to reconcile the two positions, both honestly held, both held with great conviction, and we have, therefore, what has been called a crisis. My Honourable friend,

[Sir Campbell Rhodes.]

Mr. Jamnadas seemed to me to hint that, if the salt tax was passed, he was prepared to lead the country in revolution. (Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas: "I never said so.") He did not say so, Sir, and, I expected his denial, but I beg to inform Members that this salt tax has now been in existence for a month and, if this revolution is to start, it will only start because it is started, not by people who are already and who have during the last four weeks been paying more for their salt. Well, Sir, let us admit the crisis. But let us also admit that crises are normal to a democratic Government and this must now be faced. We are all here, Sir, pledged to work the constitution as we find it—and I think I should be the last man to stand up as an advocate of this constitution—but we are all here pledged to work it. I would like to draw Honourable Members' attention, in the Manual of Business and Procedure, to clause 62-A:

"Subject to the provisions of the Act, the Indian Legislature consists of the Governor General and two Chambers, namely, the Council of State and the Legislative Assembly."

The Governor General is as much under the constitution as we are. (An Honourable Member: "Very much above it.") He cannot alter it. He is bound by its rules as much as we are. Mr. Jamnadas said that it was his duty to do all in his power under the constitution to resist this tax. I agree with him if he feels that the tax is a wrong one; but I think he must give to others the same measure of justice as he demands for himself. If the Government had not proposed an amendment in the Council of State to put the tax up to Rs. 2-8-0, they would have deprived our fellow legislators in that House an opportunity which we had, of discussing whether it should be Rs. 1-4-0 or Rs. 2-8-0. They gave them that opportunity and the Council decided in favour of Rs. 2-8-0, by a non-official majority. Had the Governor General not recommended this Bill a very much more difficult position would have arisen. Now, that we have disagreement between the two Houses, according to the ordinary Bill procedure we should have to wait six months for a Joint Sitting and, therefore, no tax, neither income-tax, the enhancement of customs duties, nor the salt tax, could have been collected, during that time. Personally and speaking entirely from my own point of view, I should have no objection. Therefore, we should have to wait for a Joint Sitting, which according to the adding of the two votes together, would have resulted in 72 votes to 62, I think, in favour of Rs. 2-8-0. To-day, I do not know, Sir, quite what we are discussing, whether we are discussing the salt tax or the constitutional issue. But I think it would be a convenience if we were to refer to it as a salted red-herring. Sir, I have mentioned that I personally would have gone half way. Last year, it will be remembered, I hope, to my credit, that I supported my friends on the right in a constitutional crisis on the subject of cotton. I took rather a definite line there, because the crisis, to my mind, was a much more serious one. That duty was open to implications—unjust implications possibly, but not unnatural implications—to which this duty is not open in spite of what Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas has said. There is none to gain or to lose by what we are doing to-day, but India herself. Of that there can be no question, and every man's vote, I hope, will be cast whether in the one lobby or the other to-day in the interests of India. It is, I maintain, Sir, the duty of every man to exercise his responsibility. This House must not claim a monopoly of responsibility. His Excellency the Governor General has his responsibilities and the Council of State have theirs, and if we are to defend our rights, as I shall always be the first to do, we must admit that there are rights to others, and I think we must fairly abide by the constitution which we are endeavouring to work.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar (Madras: Nominated Non-Official): Sir, I shall not speak for more than a few minutes on this question, because, as was pointed out, the situation is a grave one and the fewer the words spoken, the better would it be for all of us. There is also one other consideration that weighs with me and that is this. I do not think that anything that I say this morning is going to convert any Member of the Government Benches, and therefore, there is not much use in speaking largely upon a question of this nature. Sir, ever since I took to politics, I have been taught that it is a sin to consent to the increase of the duty on salt. Great men who have gone before us—I would not repeat their names—have said that if we consented to an increase in the salt duty, we would be betraying the interests of the people. Sir Campbell Rhodes has just now told us that the persons who are most affected are not the persons who have votes. That is the very reason why we, who are representing the people, should do our very best that those men who have no voice, who have no votes, are saved from the tragedy which the Government is bringing upon their heads. Sir, in some other place it has been said that the battle cry of old is gone, the battle cry of the Congress is gone, and a new cry must take its place. With all respect, may I say that that cry can never go, that so long as we continue to represent the people, so long as this House claims to be a representative Assembly, that battle cry of saving the poor can never go. Other cries may be added, but the cry against salt will remain for all time to come. Sir, one other matter was mentioned in the other House and it is this. Whatever may have been the want of justification for imposing an additional duty on salt in the old days, the same want of justification does not exist to-day, because the purchasing power of the rupee is more now than it was in the old days. Sir, those that put forward this reasoning forget that almost all the articles of necessity have gone up in price. If you take the index figure of 1914 and compare it with what it is to-day, you will find that the price of almost every food-grain, of almost every necessity of life, has gone up more than 100 per cent.

Mr. E. A. Spence (Bombay: European): Why has it gone up?

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: And the result to-day is that you will not be able to purchase for a rupee the same quantity of things which you could have purchased some years ago. There is no doubt about it. My friend asks "Why has it gone up?" The answer to it is because Government has been piling taxes upon taxes. That is the answer to that.

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: It is due to the deficits.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: Rs. 60 crores of deficit has certainly added to the increase in the prices.

Sir, let us look at the situation now. What is the situation? The Government never came to us with any alternative proposals. They never asked us to discuss any other form of taxation. They told us at one time that there is no unanimity as regards any other form of taxation. Do the Government really believe, and seriously believe, that in any civilised country, any Legislature, would unanimously consent to any new taxation? Can you expect that there will be no objection to a taxation? There will be objection, as my friend puts it, from interested quarters. Rather than face those objections, what have you done? You are now going against the entire and unanimous wish of the people of this country. You do not want to offend classes, sects and communities. But you have no compunction in setting your face against the unanimous wish of the people of this country. Is that the proper way for any Government to act? I say that you have chosen the wrong way of meeting the deficit, if you want to cover the deficit. Sir, a grave political situation has been created, and if it is said at the end, that the Reforms have not worked successfully, the fault, the sin for that would lie upon the heads of the Government and not upon the people. As Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas has pointed out, we have done our best to help you when you had heavy deficits. We have always come to your rescue by imposing fresh taxation. But in the case of taxing the poor, in the case of imposing a duty on salt, it is impossible for us to come to your rescue and if you find that this tax makes the Government very unpopular and makes the working of the reforms almost impossible, the fault for creating such a situation will be entirely yours and not ours. Sir, by again bringing this Bill with a recommendation, the Government have raised some new issues, issues which are going to divide the country very seriously, issues as regards the powers of revision which is possessed by another House, issues as regards the safety of the constitution as against the executive will of the Government, issues which would go to show that the Reforms do not contain sufficient safeguards to enable the people to express their sentiments and their views. These are very important issues which must necessarily arise because Government have chosen to take this extraordinary step of recommending that the Bill be passed into law. We have to do our duty. In the face of the determination which the Government have shown, there is only one thing that we can do. We must show consistency, courage and dignity. If we do not show consistency and courage, we will be betraying the trust that people have reposed in us.

Sir Montagu Webb (Bombay: European): Sir, I rise to oppose this amendment made by the Council of State in our Finance Bill which has come back to us with a "recommendation" from the Governor General. I do so, Sir, with a very heavy heart, because I can see and understand many of the difficulties which Government have to deal with. I recognise, too, the consideration ordinarily shown by Government to the opinions expressed by this House; and I do appreciate the magnificent work done by Government for the great benefit and advantage of this country. But on this occasion, Sir, in connection with this Finance Bill, some strange Nemesis seems to have intervened, with the result that we now find ourselves face to face with a situation so complicated, so fraught with danger to the continued successful development of the Reform Scheme that I feel it my duty to do all I can to put matters right before it is too late.

First of all, Sir, I want to recall just for a moment what this House has done in the past in matters of finance. When we first met here two years ago we were told by Lord Chelmsford, the late Viceroy, that the Government of India Act had "closed one era and opened another." His Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught brought us a message of hope and inspiration from the King Emperor, and the Honourable the Finance Member himself said that in this new period this House would have to take upon itself the financial responsibility of carrying on the affairs of this country. Now, Sir, these were not mere words. The financial responsibilities were very real, for in the year that was just ending, we found ourselves with a deficit of nearly eight millions sterling. In the new budget which the Honourable the Finance Member then presented to this House we found ourselves face to face with a deficit of nearly eighteen million sterling, taking exchange at 1s. 4d. Now, what did this House do? This House courageously faced the situation and voted large increases of taxation in all directions. They put up the Customs duties, they put up the taxes on income, they assented to increases in the Railway Fares, and increases on Postage, in the hope of getting matters straight,—a truly fine record, I submit, for a young democratic Assembly. That was the first year.

Now, take the last year. When we came back to this House twelve months later we found that the anticipated deficit of eighteen millions, notwithstanding all these increases of taxation had become twenty-two millions sterling. Not only that, we were once more faced with a further anticipated deficit for 1922-23 of over twenty millions sterling; and once more this House was asked to assent again to an all round further increase of taxation. The House again most courageously faced the situation and once more voted all round increases in Customs duties, increases in Railway Fares, increases in Postal and Telegraph rates, and an advance in Taxes on Income; but they said in effect—"We will not vote any increase in Salt Duty because we think it is the duty of Government to effect retrenchment." Now, once again, I ask you, Sir,—could any young popular Assembly in the world (Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: "Except a submissive one.") have taken a wiser and a more statesmanlike course?

Government recognised the wisdom of this advice. They did not attempt to increase or double the Salt Duty. They went to the other House and said "We will accept the recommendation of the Assembly and we will endeavour to retrench."

Now, what followed? On the strength of a Resolution passed by this House I think in last June or July, a Retrenchment Committee was appointed including six of the finest business brains available, eastern and western. That Committee got to work as soon as possible. So successfully did Lord Inchcape and his colleagues swing their axe that in the course of a few weeks they succeeded in recommending retrenchments to the extent of thirteen millions sterling. That, Sir, was only I think three weeks ago. Very naturally, the Government found it extremely difficult, if not impossible, to put all these retrenchments into operation at once. But I must say that Government met the situation with the greatest vigour, with the greatest loyalty to the desires of this Assembly, and they made beyond doubt every possible retrenchment that they thought could be done. And with what result? Could the whole of the Inchcape Committee's recommendations have been carried out next year, there would be no deficit at all and all our difficulties would have vanished. But unfortunately, it being a practical impossibility to carry out the whole of these retrenchments in one year, Government had to postpone about two or three millions of them till the next year,—1924; and it is this very sum of two or three millions which they have not been able to retrench in the coming year that produces the deficit about which we have all been talking a purely temporary deficit. (A Voice: "No.") I put it to you that that deficit is an office-made deficit, and that that deficit need not have appeared at all if the Honourable the Finance Member had so desired. Assume, for example, that the Honourable the Finance Member had been of a little more optimistic turn of mind and had cared to increase his estimates of receipts from Railways, from Posts and Telegraphs and from Income-Tax (as he might very well have done, for we have got this cold weather the finest crops that India has almost ever had)—had he taken that course, well, things might have been very different. Had he even debited some of our expenditure on roads and buildings on the North-West Frontier, had he spread that over two or three years instead of putting the whole of them into current revenue (as he might well have done for we have paid for a whole war out of current revenues), the situation would have been very different. Had he assented to the proposals made to him for additional taxation, say on silver, or a temporary surtax on Customs, he could with the greatest ease have, by an enormous majority, carried them through this House, and the deficit would have disappeared. But he elected to do otherwise. Finally, if he had appropriated a sum of three or four millions from that over-swollen, inoperative Gold Standard Reserve from which he is already taking one million,—if only he had taken another 2 or 3 millions, there would have been no deficit. I ask this House if I am wrong in asserting that this deficit is simply an office-made deficit and that it has only appeared at the will of the Finance Member. And, Sir, it is with the object of covering this relatively small and merely temporary deficit of under two and a half millions, that he proposes now to raise four millions sterling by doubling the salt tax,—I say four millions sterling because the salt tax, if doubled, will surely yield six crores of rupees.

Now, Sir, I say unhesitatingly, and with all the emphasis at my command, that the doubling of the salt tax at the present moment is unnecessary financially, and is provocative politically. I have already shown, I think, that it is a mere product of the office of the Finance Department. I go further, and I would urge that rather than raise the political ferment which will be caused by the imposition of a doubled salt tax I would prefer to allow these two millions to dissolve themselves in the coming retrenchments. It may be said in some official directions 'Oh, this would spoil our credit.' Well, Sir, I deal in credit myself. I unhesitatingly deny that assertion. Speaking for myself, (and I can claim special knowledge as a practical merchant and financier, as a railway manager and ship manager), I say most unhesitatingly that India's credit at the present day is first class. Throughout the period that this country has been suffering from the most appalling series of deficits on record, we have succeeded in raising the greatest loans ever known in the history of India. Does that indicate loss of credit? And now, we are told, Sir, when India's financial and political difficulties are practically over, when we are enjoying a period of splendid crops,—now, at this moment when we are dealing with a more or less artificial and temporary deficit we are told that if we leave this small deficit to be wiped out by the retrenchments ahead, our credit will suffer. I say unhesitatingly that those who nurse this belief, are hugging a delusion.

At the present moment the position of this country is economically as strong as if not stronger than that of any other part of the British Empire. It is certainly economically stronger than that of any other country outside the British Empire in Europe, Asia or America. I go further and I say that we are in a position of quite exceptional strength. We are one of the few countries in the world who in spite of our enormous population, can feed ourselves without the slightest difficulty, who can produce enormous surpluses of valuable commodities for sale to the rest of the world; and given only a period of political tranquillity in which the peace-loving and industrial millions of this country can get to work on their economic and social development, I say, Sir, that the credit of this country and the future of India are as assured and as sound as those of any country in the world.

Now, Sir, I used the words "given only a period of political tranquillity." It is to avoid all hazard of any disturbance of this period of political tranquillity that I am opposing the doubling of the Salt Duty. Sir, the life of this Assembly is now drawing to a close, and there must of necessity be during this year a certain amount of ferment,—of bubbling up of political activity in connection with the forthcoming General Elections. I ask—Is this the moment, when Members of this House will be seeking re-election, is this a moment when we should discredit them, when we should disarm them, when we should antagonise them just as they are going back to explain to their constituents the success of the work of this Assembly? Is this the moment to multiply noxious political activities by throwing into the political arena so dangerous a firework as a doubled Salt Duty? Is this the moment to place a weapon in the hands of ignorant and malicious people who have been persistently hostile to this Government, and who have throughout represented that this Assembly is a mere make-believe, a mere "Mock Parliament" to whose views an irresponsible and autocratic Government pay little or no heed?

Sir, I have finished. I only want to read to this House two small extracts from the records of our proceedings,—one, Sir, by His Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught when opening this Assembly. He said:

"The principle of autocracy has all been abandoned. Its retention would have been incompatible with that contentment which had been declared by Her late Majesty Queen Victoria to be the aim of British Rule. It would have been inconsistent with the legitimate demands and aspirations of the Indian people and (listen to this, Sir) it would have been inconsistent with that stage of political development which they have now attained."

Now, Sir, listen to the second extract—the words of the Honourable the Home Member spoken a few days later. He was introducing the first Budget to this House on the 1st March 1921. He was explaining what a great change had come over the country, and that in future instead of a Finance Member having it all his own way and shouldering all the financial difficulties himself, this House would have to take their share. He then said. (this was the Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey):

"For the future this House will have to share that (financial) responsibility. If we incur expenditure, it will be under your mandate. If we impose taxation, it will be by your vote."

What is the position now? We are being asked to assent to unnecessary taxation,—unnecessary financially, provocative politically—and against the wishes of this House. What for? To fill a relatively paltry, temporary deficit of two millions which will automatically disappear a year later. Sir, when Herod promised the dancing girl anything that she might ask, and when that irresponsible young creature demanded the head of John the Baptist, Herod at once acceded to her request. Now, Sir, how different things might have been,—how different history might have been written if Herod had only reconsidered his promise. Now, I implore my Honourable friends of the Government Benches to reconsider this matter. No matter what promises they may have made,—no matter what policy they may have decided on,—I appeal to them to reconsider this matter at this stage, because I feel sure that if a little further consideration be given to the situation, wiser counsels will prevail. I cannot believe that the House of Commons, the "Mother of Parliaments," who has stood throughout the ages for the right of the people to control the public purse, I cannot believe that the Mother of Parliaments will cut the throat of its youngest and most promising offspring merely because it refuses to assent to financial legislation the demand for which rests on no solid and proper foundation.

Mr. Ashruff O. Jamall (Bengal: Nominated Non-Official): After the eloquent and admirable speech of my Honourable friend Sir Montagu Webb, I am afraid I will not be able to speak so well. We have talked about salt for many days and perhaps I stand to-day to address a House that is tired of talking salt. But I wish to make my position clear. I have voted already twice against this duty and I am afraid my Honourable friend the Finance Member will again not find me in the same lobby as himself to-day, not because I think that the salt duty will be a messenger of revolution, and I cannot think that it will be unbearable to the people, but I do maintain that it will be very unpopular, that it will not be liked, and above all that it is not necessary. Several of my Honourable friends here have asked the Finance Member as regards his methods of Book-keeping, with reference to charges made to revenue and capital. If I may be allowed to say, Sir Dinshaw Wacha the other day in the Upper House said that he wanted to know how this was done. He challenged the Finance Member, if I understood him right, to prove his contention. To all these demands there has been no satisfactory explanation coming forward. Therefore, Sir, I do maintain that there is no deficit, I do not think that the tax is necessary and I cannot conceive why we should be asked to give a present to posterity, why should we to-day be taxed for the benefit of our successors who will come in our place. I do admire the way in which Sir Montagu Webb has put the whole matter. I do think that the tax if levied will have some effect on the political aspect of India, and I do not agree that this amendment should be accepted.

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary (Calcutta: Non-Muhammadan Urban): Sir, I am glad that tension in the House has to a certain extent been relieved by our resourceful friend behind. And we recognise the soundness of some of the position indicated by Sir Campbell Rhodes. Every one has rights to his own convictions and ought to act up to them. In those circumstances I wish the suggestion made by some of our friends that we should avoid if possible speaking at all to-day, but proceed to the business of the day in a business-like fashion was acceptable. Since, however, that is not to be so, I think the position of people taking a different line has to be made quite clear. The Honourable the Finance Member has not taken pains to clear up matters, probably because he will do so later or his Colleagues who speak later on will be left to deal with what he has left unsaid. He has contented himself purely with the financial aspect of the question, as is no doubt his place to do; but there are other questions, bigger vital questions. We have been often told that it is the fear of facing our constituencies at the next election that is guiding the action of many of us.

Possibly it is so, possibly it is not. Constituencies in the broader sense are powerful, they can be if they want to be; they are not yet as powerful in some places as in others. There is a Madras constituency, for example, which sent a Member to the House, whose place we see vacant for the last few days; ever since he had the hardihood to propose a surcharge on customs and on the income-tax, his place knows him not.

Mr. R. A. Spence: Sir, his constituency did not censure him; the European Association were not his electors.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: I may also mention that Sir Gordon Fraser left on business. He would be the last man to have deserted his post.

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary: I am sincerely glad to have that correction, because that has been the impression abroad. Yet constituencies can make themselves felt and I hope they will do so in the case of every one who goes back from this House after having voted for increase in the salt tax, for they will have forfeited their right to come back, judged from the popular point of view. Apart from that, Sir, as I explained on a previous occasion, this question has practically nothing to do with the limited constituencies, because those who form them have to pay a considerable tax, judged by the standard of the resources of those who will have to pay the most if this increased taxation is agreed to. Therefore, that question does not arise. It is because it is distasteful to the people from the lowest to the highest, not even excluding those in the Upper House at least in some cases, that the representatives of the people have felt it their duty to oppose it strongly and I hope they will persist in their objection and see it prevail.

Coming to the practical side of the question, we have had our say, the Government have had their say. The story about a paltry increase of 3 annas per head and 12 annas per family a year is absolutely exploded, judged by the standard and method of living, judged by the standard of the income of the people who are most affected. That does not hold the board at all, but we have another diehard untruth. What are the facts of the case? Last year, there was solid opposition to increased salt tax, the same this year, at least I hope the result of the voting will prove that. Last year the deficit was much heavier and much more real, this year it is much less, and business men in responsible position like Sir Montagu Webb have challenged as to whether the deficit is a real deficit, in the strict and proper sense of the term or not! Last year, there was no retrenchment, no talk of retrenchment on the Government side, the very suggestion of retrenchment was resented to begin with, though, later on, the House imposed its will upon the Government and the Retrenchment Committee came. Last year, when we ventured to ask for a paltry 5 per cent. cut in the whole of the expenditure, there were prophecies that the Government could not go on, that there would be serious difficulties in the way and that administration would be impossible. No such catastrophe followed. Retrenchment came and in the judgment of many of us, in spite of the admirable work done by the Irchape Committee, the retrenchment has not gone far enough. Much has been attempted to be made of the fact that the retrenchment recommended cannot be fully given effect to this year or the next. Whose fault was it? Why was not retrenchment begun early in the year? The fault is not that of the Assembly. The Assembly made up its mind fairly clearly and early and it was not going to take further risks when the next Budget came on, but no steps were taken so far as we know. This year we have had retrenchment suggested to us and there are certainly possibilities of other retrenchments. Last year there was no certificate, no restoration, in spite of all the more adverse circumstances referred to; this year it is apprehended that, if the House does not do what it has been recommended to do, restoration and the certificate procedure will come. That will not be right nor expedient, but is a matter over which we have no control. As has been pointed out, we have our powers, our rights, our privileges and our obligations under the constitution; so has the Governor General. If the Governor General's powers are exercised, I shall not view it as in what in debate parlance is being called a grave constitutional crisis. We shall have to face many of these things. We, who are pledged to support the reforms to the best of our power and ability, and shall have to face these questions oftener than we think, whatever the Government does, we cannot yet non-co-operate. But that need not bring in references to Herods and Tudors and Stuarts and Revolutions and much else that has been gratuitously mentioned. All this is now in the day's work, and, God willing, we shall succeed in doing our work and evolving a better constitution in time. It has been correctly suggested that, if this deficit is really there, having regard to its temporary character, a surcharge in some shape or another would have met and ought to have met the requirements of the case. But the cat did come out of the bag later on through the speeches of some European official and non-official Members and still later on I believe by advocates of the restoration procedure. Much later than the introduction of the measure question of provincial equilibrium and various other permanent Government obligations awaiting to be discharged and not merely the transient need of balancing the budget were brought in to support the tax. The salt tax, therefore, judged from those points of view, is not for temporary purposes. It is going to be, if it can be, a permanent addition to our taxation—though taxation has even, according to the occupants of the Benches to my left, attained the limit or nearly the limit. We are asked to vote this double increase in salt taxation, not to meet the passing exigencies of the hour, supposing they did exist, but for the purpose of equilibrating Provincial contributions and solving various other vexed questions with which the Government is faced and always will be faced. I am sure the Provinces which under the Reforms will have them from Retrenchment and their own taxation will make their minds unequivocally clear that if the Provincial contributions have to disappear on the terms of doubling salt tax permanently and on no other terms, they would much rather not have reduction on those terms.

Mr. T. E. Moir (Madras: Nominated Official): May I ask what Bengal is going to submit to, Sir?

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhiary: Bengal is going to submit, and I can assure the Honourable Member from Madras that Madras is also going to submit, and the United Provinces, the Punjab and everybody else is going to submit, for extra salt duty will hit the Provinces hard. If the raising of the salt tax to Rs. 2-8 and nothing else will equilibrate, there will not be the slightest difference of opinion so far as non-official Indian Members are concerned.

Sir, I shall not attempt to cover the ground that has been so admirably covered by Mr. Jamall and Sir Montagu Webb on the business side of things.

Amateur financiers are rightly nervous if they have to speak on these things "without the book," as was suggested. Business people—at least some—who know the business side of the situation, who know how our credit stands at home and abroad, assure and re-assure us that we need not feel any nervousness with regard to any of these things. Sir, there are what may be called technical difficulties that also weigh with some of us. We have been told that conventions grow, conventions can and will grow from our point of view as well as from the Government point of view. The impression so long has been that the Viceroy is entitled to recommend a Bill. Whether he can recommend any particular amendment in a Bill or not seems to me open to doubt. Then there is the question as to whether the Governor General can ask this House to pass a Bill that has already been passed. Those are aspects that will have to be carefully looked into in connection with this question. There are serious doubts in the minds of many of us as to whether the right procedure is being followed but we can only suggest and not judge. At all events, no occasion has arisen for the Governor General to recommend to this House the particular form in which an amendment has been passed by the other House. I do not mind calling it the Upper House, because if they be the Upper, we are the sole, and without the sole no "upper" can last and without the foundation, obscure and unseen though it be, no "upper" can stand. I do not mind that so long as we are what we should be and are true to ourselves and our trust and are able to justify ourselves. (An Honourable Member: "Use some salt.") Well, the architect of old used to avoid salt as the basis of strength. There would not, if it could be avoided, be those forces that are now attacking modern Delhi building even before they are finished. However, that is another story. Those are serious difficulties which weigh with some of us, but they are small when compared to the major issue standing out in the situation. It is not because we opposed extra salt last year; it is not because we opposed the proposal when it was first brought in this year; it is not because Government did not give us any alternative opportunities, although we offered to go a long way, to find other means for covering the supposed deficit, that we still continue to oppose it. If we happen to be wrong, if it is clearly pointed out that we have erred in our opposition—is it up to us to continue to oppose it? Decidedly no. If proper facts had been placed before us, if proper materials were forthcoming here, in the other House or in the Press to convince us that we have been in the wrong, we should be wrong in voting against enhanced salt duty. No such fact and materials—except the will of the Government—are forthcoming. We must therefore do our duty once more and oppose the change suggested by the Council of State.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Halley: I have during the last two years had to wrestle in spirit somewhat frequently with this House, and I confess I had hoped that during this session I should be sailing on easier seas and that a time of comparative peace had come for me. But this apparently is not to be; for not only does it seem to my Honourable friends here that we are at present engaged in something of the nature of a constitutional crisis, but Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas has threatened us that its effects will extend far beyond the financial sphere of my friend Sir Basil Blackett and will invade my own. And so, disappointed in my hopes of personal peace, I must again join battle with my Honourable friends opposite.

[Sir Malcolm Hailey.]

Now let me if I may first try to define what is common ground between us. Sir Campbell Rhodes has with great justice pointed out that we have here a proposition which can arouse none of those suspicions which have unfortunately been involved in some of our previous discussion on Budget proposals. What we have put forward here is obviously and patently not on behalf of European trade or commerce, nor calculated indeed to support any European interest. I am aware that Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas, somewhat late in the day, has made a suggestion that Whitehall was pressing for the Salt tax. Whitehall has become a painful obsession to him. He sees its dark and mysterious influence everywhere. He was unable to give any ground for his suggestion; having no proof himself, he took the simpler course of inviting me to deny the imputation. I can do so honestly; the suggestion was our own. The desire to square our Budget is our own. We put forward the salt tax last year as our own proposition and we have repeated it again this year as our own proposition. The haze of suspicion that he has endeavoured to create can be cleared away as far as that aspect of the matter is concerned. Yet again it is clear that we are putting forward here a proposal which cannot be misinterpreted on the ground that we wish to place ourselves in fresh funds for any forward military policy, that we are yielding to the dictates of a forceful military section to increase the number of our combatant troops or raise our scale of equipment at the expense of an impoverished Exchequer. So much, I say, is to the good; and it must be put into the balance when the final issue is struck. And yet once more it is clear that we are not asking here for fresh funds to support the desire of civil departments to extend their useful but possibly expensive activities. We have many schemes of civil expenditure entirely beneficent in themselves, full of promise for the country, nay, essential for the progress of the country; but we are not putting forward a proposal for fresh taxation to finance them. On the contrary, we have deliberately refused to consider new expenditure on this account. So much, again, must be admitted on our account; so much I say must be put into the balance on our side. But I can go further in my analysis of our common ground. It has been admitted that our sole motive here is to re-establish our credit, and as an immediate step to that end, we ask the Legislature to pass—and we can ask it to pass for this year only—a definite increase to our taxation for this year, leaving it when the time comes again, to decide whether or not the increased sources of revenue which will be at our disposal shall be continued and utilised for fulfilling our obligations in regard to the provincial contributions. I have never heard any suggestion that our motive went beyond this; and if there is a point of difference between us it lies in the assertion that we have placed too much importance on the immediate balancing of our budget as a means of restoring our credit and that in seeking to get the Legislature to balance it by this particular method we are asking India to bear a burden disproportionate to the value of the financial gain to be derived from the mere balancing of our revenue and expenditure. I think I have stated the present issue fairly on both sides. It may have been that at an earlier stage there were some different issues on the record; it was then perhaps the case that the Assembly doubted whether a deficit really existed, whether it might not have been met by a more optimistic view of our revenues, whether it might not have been met by some adjustment of our accounts.

whether the additional revenue might not have been raised, failing the former solutions, by some different form of taxation. If I do not now discuss these issues at length it is because I regard them as spent. Can anybody in the present state of our export trade and of the troubles in Europe venture to suggest that our Finance Member should again take stock of his revenue receipts and deliberately add to them two or three crores of rupees? Such action would at this stage be impossible in itself, and in its result, disastrous to our financial credit. Equally impossible is it at this stage to suggest any such wholesale readjustment of our accounts as to cause this deficit to disappear; for I claim as I have claimed before that if there is to be a readjustment of our capital and revenue accounts it must be of our accounts throughout and not of one selected item. Finally is it feasible now to suggest that there is an alternative form of taxation? We explored that possibility together. Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar said that we did not come down and consult the House as to alternatives. Sir Montagu Webb said that if we had proposed to increase our customs and our income-tax we should have carried it by a large majority in this House. Yet he knows that this is not the case; he knows that strenuous efforts were made to find some common ground between us; he knows that one section of the House was bitterly opposed to any increase in direct taxation, and that another section was equally opposed to any increase in the customs duty. He himself was equally opposed to both proposals. We are told that if we had been firm we might perhaps have carried some of these alternatives through. What guarantee had we? We had none at all; yet I must say this on behalf of Government and I will say it with all sincerity, that there never has been a time during the course of these budget discussions when we would not have been glad to have found some common ground of understanding on this question; there never has been a time when we would not have been prepared to accept any alternative form of taxation which would have been accepted by this House at large. The difficulties occurred not with us, and did not lie in our lack of good will or determination; the difficulties occurred within the House itself. I am justified, I think, in dismissing those side considerations and can return to the case as it stands between us now and at this moment, and take up the issue as I have already described it. Is it true, as you say, that we are exaggerating the evils of an unbalanced budget? Is the balance a mere shibboleth? Is it a fetish, a punctilio of finance? Our ground is, that it is an operation necessary to the early restoration of our credit. Sir Montagu Webb says that our credit is sound, that even at the worst, when we had to face those large previous deficits we could raise large sums of money. He goes further, and tells us that even if we leave this deficit uncovered then it does not matter; two hundred million or so of unproductive debt will only be increased by two or three million more. He expressed himself in terms of the greatest optimism of the financial condition of this country and of its future prospects. That is well; optimism is all to the good so long as it does not lead you into neglect of the immediate steps required to secure the results you hope for. Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary took Sir Montagu at his word. As an amateur in finance himself, he spoke with some hesitation, but fortified with the opinion of a business man, he felt that nothing was now required to establish further India's finance and credit. He spoke of that opinion almost as one might speak of the final, definite and decisive opinion of a great consulting physician.

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary: Something to go upon at all events.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: I will show how much. These physicians like ordinary mortals have their inconsistencies. Sir Montagu Webb will forgive me—I have known him much longer than any Member of this House—I am an old friend and he will forgive me therefore if I handle him as I should not like to see others doing. I will remind him that, cheery optimist as it now suits him to profess himself, there have been times when his optimism was not so pronounced in regard to our financial condition. Let me read to him an extract from a speech which he delivered not very long ago—only in January last. He has taken the opportunity to quote what I said two years ago; I will be more considerate and will read to him what he said only two months since. He will appreciate its bearing; and if he does not I am sure that others will. "I put it to you that if any one of us here had been running a business on a 30 crores deficit every year for the last five years and somebody were to say to me 'don't worry, the position is not very grave,' I should feel inclined to tell him, 'get thee behind me Satan'" (Laughter). Sir Montagu Webb has admitted to-day that we had been running on deficits of more than 30 crores; Sir Montagu Webb has said to-day in almost exactly the same words "don't worry, the position is not very grave." Mere politeness demands that I should follow him and say "get thee behind me, Satan" (Laughter). Sir Montagu Webb cannot persuade us that we can meet the situation by taking into ourselves just a little balm of optimism. I appeal from him to other business men. I quote to the House (since we are all fond of quotations to-day), what was said by that important body of merchants who attended on a deputation on His Excellency the Viceroy only last summer. It was equally representative of European and Indian Chambers of Commerce. They stated, and with the utmost conviction, that until India could balance its budget, and make its expenditure equal to its revenue or its revenue equal to its expenditure, we should be paying more for our money, our industries would suffer and the whole course of trade in India would remain insecure and uncertain. That was their lesson; and it is that lesson which I quote against Sir Montagu Webb. With some regret I must warn the House not to accept as an infallible guide, a thinker so inconsistent that he could sign the Fiscal Commission Report in one sense, and advocate almost exactly the opposite conclusions before the Associated Chambers in Calcutta. It may seem that I am attempting only to attack the opponent's advocate. That is not so, I am pointing out to the House that it should not place too great a reliance on the confident and optimistic suggestions of Sir Montagu Webb either about our present situation or about the effect of failing budgeting for a balance.

Let me take for a minute the question of our credit as I see it, and I shall be very brief on the subject. It is not merely a question of restoring our credit in the money markets of the world; it is also a practical question of immediate importance to everyone in India. As we have always pointed out here, as long as we are in deficit, we have to come to the market for large temporary loans. We lose our control over interest rates, and that affects everybody engaged in commerce or industry in this country. I go further than this and I say that the balancing of our revenue and expenditure is necessary if we are to have security from the possible prospect of inflation. It is true that a small deficit does not mean in itself the issue of a large number of unbacked notes. That is true, but no one doubts that continued deficits do in some form or other, directly or indirectly, spell inflation. Again, distasteful as the means may be, our ultimate aim must be to bring the rupee to an internal value corresponding more nearly to the value of the past, and thus reduce that enhancement of prices which has weighed so heavily on the people. After all the discussions and theories on exchange and currency, there is only one fact, I think, that remains clear, that if your rupee is to be worth anything in the outside world, you must first of all make it worth something in India. It is a misfortune that the remedies necessary to restore an unfavourable position are so often painful, unpopular, provocative of criticism, while the effects are slow, difficult to appreciate, and only come to hand too late to mitigate the criticism which the effort has caused. Yet that is in the nature of things, and a difficult financial situation will not yield to a cheerful bedside manner or homœopathic drops. But if the operation on which we are engaged is distasteful, have we not given our own proof of the earnestness with which we believe in its necessity? If we were engaged in satisfying a mere punctilio of finance, as some Members suggest, or a mere point of honour in regard to our budget position, should we have been prepared on our part to go so far in measures which must have been so extraordinarily distasteful to any Government? It was no small matter for the Indian Government to arrive at a determination to reduce combatant British troops in India and to succeed in persuading the Home Government to accept its necessity. Take again the frontier. I am not going into the rights or wrongs of the question, but we have had to choose on the frontier a policy which many of our advisers here told us is only the second best, and for financial reasons we have been unable to follow the advice of the many experts who would have us pursue a more thoroughgoing policy. Again we have given proofs in regard to our civil expenditure, for we have carried out reductions which as has so frequently been pointed out here, and not only on this side of the House, will leave many of the departments of the Central Government lifeless and inanimate. Do not for a minute believe that all we have done as some of our amiable critics tell us—is to lop off excrescences.

And now, Sir, with regard to the position of our opponents. They may perhaps be prepared to accept much of what I have said, and may yet nevertheless hold that we are asking them to pay too heavy a price for the benefits which we are attempting to secure, because the measure in itself will involve such grave political consequences. Is that really so? Mr. Jamnadas is the chief apostle of that theory, an apostle who has already begun to bear the fiery cross. He told us to use our imagination. Sir, I ask him not to misuse his. When he told us that the salt tax is a messenger of revolution, I must remind him that he is misquoting from a speaker in this House in 1921 who told us that each half-penny post card would be a messenger of revolution. That only shows how it is easy to be betrayed into error by the possession of a somewhat facile vocabulary. I myself have been much struck by the arguments used by Sir Campbell Rhodes that for a month people had been paying this increased tax.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: What do you expect them to do?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: What Mr. Jamnadas obviously expects them to do is to rise in revolution on the subject. I say that he has clearly exaggerated the effect of this tax on the people. And just as he has entirely exaggerated its economic effect, he and Sir Montagu Webb have exaggerated the effects on the Reforms of our attempting to force it into law. That there is a deep-seated and long standing sentiment in India on the subject, I am the first to recognise. That there is an old tradition of dislike behind it I equally recognise. But, Sir, that we are by this measure wrecking the reforms I entirely refuse to believe. I do not for the moment intend to place any stress on the argument which has sometimes been used here that the objections against this proposal are based on apprehensions concerning the approaching elections. I should consider it unfortunate if I had to use such a charge when better arguments will serve my turn. Actually the point of attack has changed. It is not now the tax itself which is going to impose such hardship that we have to fear agitation or danger to the reforms; to-day the real charge is that we know that we cannot get it through this branch of the Legislature, and are preparing to use the special powers of the Government of India Act to secure our ends. That is unconstitutional, and that is the danger to Reforms. If, says Mr. Jamnadas, you cannot get this tax through your Legislature, then you should make no further effort to go on with your proposal. If you use your reserved powers you will break down the constitution because, though the law contains certain safeguards and exceptional provisions, we have always been telling the people that these are paper provisions. What authority had he for preaching that it was intended that these powers should be paper provisions? Certainly not the Parliament which framed them, or the Joint Committee which recommended them to Parliament, and I cannot remember that the Congress or other witnesses before that Committee ever suggested that the reserved powers should be kept only for show and not for use. If this measure is really essential for British India, and if it is refused by an adverse vote (and it may be only a small deciding vote) of this branch of the Legislature, then I say that the use of the reserved powers would be entirely within the terms of the constitution, as handed to us by Parliament. (Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: "Not the letter of the law.") (Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas: "Refer to Mr. Montagu's speeches.") If Mr. Montagu ever said anything which will prove that the position which I am now putting before the House is an incorrect one, I should be glad to hear it. For what is this exceptional provision meant? In every country, even the most democratic, the Executive must have the final power as it has the responsibility, of carrying out measures necessary for safety or stability. As far as possible and as long as possible, we must carry the Legislature with us. In England or elsewhere we should do so by the assistance of our majority in the Legislature; in India the reservation of the Governor General's powers is meant solely for this; that in the last resort the Executive Government may be placed in the same position as a Government possessing a majority in a representative Assembly. Now, that is its meaning, and the whole question is not whether the Government has or has not the right to use such a power, or is guilty of arbitrary executive action in using such a power but whether the occasion justifies it. The true test is whether a Government with a majority would not, in spite of a certain unpopularity likely to result from the exercise of its vote, feel that the occasion justified its use. Now, I maintain that the occasion does justify it. I maintain that if we do not take the occasion now to restore our finances when we have had two good harvests, when prices are falling and people are in a position to bear the increased tax without the slightest hardship, it is impossible to conceive circumstances in which such powers can legitimately be used. I say again, that the real question is not one whether we shall be acting constitutionally or not; we simply have to judge as to the sufficiency of the occasion. And I claim that the occasion has arisen. (Honourable Members: "No, no.") And the occasion does justify the use (Honourable Members: "No, no.") Well, Sir, that is the feeling of my Honourable friends. I am glad to have brought them back at all events to the point that it is a question merely of the merits of the occasion that there is no suggestion that the use of the powers is unconstitutional. But, they will say, even if it is constitutional, it is dangerous and undesirable, for used at this juncture it will endanger the success of your Reforms. I have no belief that this will break up the reforms. I myself am too much interested in them to view with equanimity anything which would have that result. I have equally too robust a faith in their inherent vitality to think that an incident of this kind would bring disaster. They have weathered far worse shocks than this; they will weather more still. That there would be troubles ahead of us we knew, just as we know there are anomalies involved in the Reforms scheme; but those of us who believe in it as a whole have been content to neglect those anomalies and to look beyond those troubles, in the confidence that any anomaly or any trouble can be surmounted if the spirit of the scheme is loyally preserved. It is true many in this Assembly are opposed to this tax; they are entitled to their opposition if it is genuinely on the merits, they are not entitled to charge us with breaking the spirit of the Reforms if we insist on a measure which is not initiated in order to maintain the arbitrary authority of an executive Government but genuinely designed for an object purely for the benefit of India. That the restoration of our credit, the attainment of stability, with all its implications on provincial finance and the possibility of fostering subjects committed to Ministers, is such an object, no one can seriously dispute. If it is said that this will be the death-blow to the reforms. I myself believe that it is the opportunity of the Reforms. I believe it is the opportunity for the Legislature to complete the work which it has begun, a work which has required great courage and determination on its part and which I am the first and the most willing to recognise. I believe it is not only the opportunity for the Legislature to complete that work but to show that it can revise old traditions of thought and old beliefs in the light of new requirements, that, if it has in view an object of real value for the good of India, it can be strong and independent in that view. If so, it is an opportunity for it to increase its status in the eyes of the world for that status must in the long run depend not on the unsubstantial basis of its aspirations but on the sure and solid foundation of its achievements.

Mr. S. C. Shahani (Sind Jagirdars and Zamindars: Landholders): Sir, we have all heard with very great interest what has been said by Sir Montagu Webb on the subject. While I sympathise with what has been generally said by him in his capital speech, I too, like the Honourable the Home Member, must come forward to point out that the deficit does not appear to me to be merely a paper deficit, and that if retrenchments are not made much more extensively I would not feel inclined to take any very optimistic view of the deficit with which we are confronted. I am surprised that in this House the real remedy for the deficit has not been insisted on. It is being said that our credit outside the country will not suffer even if our deficit remains uncovered. Our credit is bound to suffer if our unproductive debt amounting to 226 crores, of which 100 crores are due directly to successive deficits, is to increase by 4 crores more this year. What is desirable just now is to severely revise our expenditure. Our Finance Member, who is undoubtedly a very able Minister, should realise, I respectfully submit, that our expenditure has not been reduced to its legitimate limits. It is true that the Retrenchment Committee has recently brought its axe to bear upon our expenditure, and this year a very large cut has been made. I quite agree that for a beginning this is a very desirable step. But I respectfully submit that undue expenditure is being incurred in most departments. I would give one or two instances. Take the Bengal-Nagpur Railway. For an Assistant Traffic Superintendent, Nagpur, a bungalow is to be built at a cost of one lakh and 18 thousands.

Mr. President: Order, order. The Honourable Member cannot discuss that now.

Mr. S. C. Shahani: Well, Sir, I merely wish to say that instead of a lakh and eighteen thousand rupees, a few thousands only might appropriately be spent on an Assistant Traffic Superintendent's bungalow. Similarly, on the formation of bunds on the Amda-Jamda Railway, the sanctioned estimates come to about 13 lakhs; still the total expenditure to end of 1923-24 is to come to 35 lakhs. Such a procedure, I maintain, ought to be sternly prevented. Secondly, in this year of deficit, we ought certainly to remove some of the newer items included in the budget. Provisions for new Railways made in the Budget might be stayed; and by doing so I am strongly of opinion that we would be able to cover our deficit. The whole of our deficit may not be covered this year; it may be done in the next year. By keeping the actual expenditure below the budget figures, we can respect public opinion, and we can go without the additional salt tax. The salt tax is in reality a great political danger. The statement that was put forth by my Honourable friend Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas has been poopooed. It has been said that the enhanced salt tax will have no prejudicial effects upon the country. I am sincerely very doubtful. The immediate result may not be a revolution. The discontent may come to be latent, even more latent than it is at the present day. But beware of just latent discontent. Just latent discontent ought to be avoided at all costs. I am surprised that in this House the economic evil of the salt tax has not been properly pointed out. The Honourable Sir Campbell Rhodes the other day ridiculed the economic knowledge of Dr. Gour, and what was told him in confidence was said in public, namely, that on his own authority the position that was put forward by Dr. Gour would appear to him to be a ridiculous one. I must own I have seldom admired the economic advice that has been given us by the Honourable Sir Campbell Rhodes himself. He has on the present occasion come forward to tell us, like my Honourable friend the Member for Commerce and Industry, that the wages have risen and that there is economic prosperity in the country. This would be a camouflage prosperity obtaining in the country like the camouflage surplus pointed to by Sir Montagu Webb. It has been made out that we do command a surplus when a surplus would with our best efforts be impossible for another two or three years together. It has been represented that the poor people are flourishing because their wages have risen. The wages have risen, it is to be remembered, as a consequence of a still greater rise in the cost of living; and it has also to be remembered that the material prosperity in the country is very much less now than it was before. The Honourable Mr. Innes at one time came forward to point out as absolute certain tests of increased prosperity in India that when he was Foodstuffs Commissioner in Madras in 1919, when crops had badly failed, only 5 lakhs of people were to be found on relief as against 65 lakhs of people on relief in an equally bad year, 1901. When I contemplate the actual condition of things known to me, I feel that if there were no other causes probably the arrangements that were made in 1919 were so bad, the rations supplied were so rotten, that people preferred death to the rations that were distributed to them then. He also referred then to the increase in the revenue derived from drink. He said that in 1903 it was Rs. 7 crores and now it is over Rs. 16½ crores. Does he not forget that drink is an unhealthy luxury, and that if the people are just now showing a greater liking for this unhealthy luxury, we have got to remember that our economic condition is distinctly very much worse on that account than it was before? These are no illusions. It has been said by some very responsible men again that we earn per annum about Rs. 60 per head. This is I submit an unreliable estimate. Our average income could never be more than Rs. 30 per year and not per head but per family of four, a sum that would hardly suffice even for the maintenance of one man throughout the year. Our income is miserably low. It is again said that 12 annas per family of four per year will be the additional charge to the poor from the enhanced salt tax. That calculation appears to me to be incorrect, because we are 380 millions of people, and two-thirds of these would be the people inhabiting British India, and if our total revenue from salt duty is estimated now at about Rs. 20 crores, we see that the charge per head will be much heavier. But supposing for the sake of argument that my calculation is wrong, supposing for one moment that 12 annas per head comes to be the additional charge from increased salt duty, we have got to remember that the poor people of India cannot afford to shoulder an extra annual burden of even 12 annas. Even 12 annas will go a long way to buy them, as it was said by Sir Evelyn Baring in 1882, a dhotie or a lota, which they so much need and which will be so serviceable to them that live often on gram or bhugras alone. That is a phase of Indian life that was rightly referred to by the Honourable Sir Dinshaw Wacha in the other House the other day, and it might very well be revolved here to day. I again hold that the economic condition of the poor people is very unsatisfactory, and on that account this tax ought not to be tolerated. I for one am not afraid of encountering my constituency because I may not be in a position to tell them that I have not helped in the imposition of the increased salt tax. The question of questions now is, is it right to increase the salt tax or is it not right? If the Government is right, then do impose the increased duty, and I have not the slightest doubt that the people will not mind it. But my position is that the salt tax is an economically unsound tax because salt is used by the lower classes too, and not merely by the upper; and that if it is an economically unsound tax, do not go in for it. My respectful submission to our new comer, the Honourable the Finance Member, as I have said on a previous occasion, would be that he should with due care consider the expenditure which is being gone in for here in India. It is very heavy, and it must be radically reduced. Camouflage the situation as you will, the people will never be satisfied until the retrenchments are gone in for to a much greater extent than they have been gone in for now. It is being said that the Inchcape Committee have rendered a service to the country. They have merely skimmed the surface and that even the proposals from various offices that were put before them were not properly considered. I knew no contact with the Committee and I think most of the Members of this Assembly knew no contact with the Committee and the Committee had no means of knowing the actual condition of things in India. I therefore once again repeat my request, which I make with all humility, that the expenditure is unconscionable and unreasonable and if you retrench, there will be no deficit and if there is no deficit, there is no need to risk this unconstitutionality. It has been said that the power that is given to the Governor General by law justifies his certification. Sir, this is a reserve power and the exercise of it will be extremely unpopular. Do not attempt it and do not superciliously ignore the attitude that has been put before you at the present moment.

Mr. Darcy Lindsay (Bengal: European): Sir, unlike my Honourable friend Sir Montagu Webb, I rise to strongly support the amendment made by the other House. I regret I have not his oratory to place before the House the other side of the rosy picture he portrayed, the prosperity with which India is at present blessed. I had proposed to deal with some of the points he raised and review his arguments but, I think, they have been very effectively dealt with by the Honourable the Home Member, who has pricked the somewhat gaudy air balloon he has raised and which found so much favour with the House. I hope my Honourable friend will hang his head in sorrow and follow the Honourable the Finance Member into the proper lobby. A point, Sir, was raised by my Honourable friend, Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary, when he referred to Sir Montagu Webb, and Mr. Jamall and the respect he had for the opinion of businessmen in this House. I much regretted he made no reference to my Honourable friend Sir Campbell Rhodes. Does he wish the House to believe that Sir Campbell Rhodes is not a businessman, and a very able man at that? We all know that the House, whenever they can, follow Sir Campbell as against Sir Montagu.

Sir, there is one vital question at issue in this matter, and that is to what extent the tax will assist in the promised reduction of the provincial contributions. My Honourable friend, Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary, briefly referred to this point, and I believe, he was quite satisfied that the provinces, if such a bait was held out to them, would strongly resist the taxation. I, on the other hand, hold a different opinion. I have heard expressions of views outside the House and by some very prominent leaders of the House that if the Honourable the Finance Member would only give us a pledge that he would devote the tax or the surpluses that he may secure from the tax to a reduction of the provincial contributions, then, the House would be entirely with him. (Cries of "No, no.") These were the expressions of opinion as given to me outside when my vote was being canvassed. I am not giving away any name, but that is an absolute statement of fact and to my mind is another bubble pricked in this great cry of the injury to the poor men of India by the imposition of the salt tax. The fear was expressed that as there was no definite assurance the money might be devoted to other purposes. But, I think, the Honourable Member can re-assure the House on that score for we have already been told that the 9 crores of contributions is a first charge on the coffers of the Government of India, and a debt that must be liquidated at first opportunity. It is undoubtedly the salt tax which will enable the Government to set their house in order, and quite possibly, next year, with a surplus in hand relief will come to the provinces including Madras who will get the bulk of the relief. (A Voice: "That is another vote catching.") This is not vote catching. This is an absolute truth. What stronger argument can we, the elected Members, have than the direct benefit reduced contribution will bring to our particular province and, therefore, India as a whole? When the question is asked, what have you done for the benefit of the province when you return to your electorate, is the reply to be "I strongly resisted the increase in the salt tax as a constitutional crisis was involved but at the sacrifice of our provincial contribution, which will consequently have to continue for years?" Is that an argument that will appeal to the people who want to see money spent in works that will directly benefit them? What do they care about your so-called constitutional crisis as against the improvement of sanitation, education, and many other benefits that the provinces are waiting to bring about, but for want of money cannot do so? What is the cost to the people? Three annas per head. (A Voice: "Exploded.") It is not exploded. My Honourable friend Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas who in his speech carried me back to a Sunday afternoon in Hyde Park has told us that this salt tax is a messenger of revolution to every village home. I say, Sir, it is more likely to be a messenger of hope. (Voices: "No, no.") Sir, it was only a few days ago that my Honourable friend, Sir Basil Blackett, placed his hand on his heart to emphasise a particular point he wished to make. I wonder how many of us can place our hands on our hearts and honestly affirm that the proposed increase in the salt duty is going to be a burden to the people. Let us be honest with ourselves and admit that our reasons are political and partly pique at the will of the Assembly being set aside. Sir, I appeal to all Members of the House to support the tax under the battlecry of reduced provincial contributions. (Cries of "No, no,") and I particularly appeal to the Members from Bengal to in this way give their support to the interests of other provinces who do not at the moment enjoy the remission that Bengal has received. With these few words I strongly support the amendment made by the Council of State.

(Cries of "Let the question be now put.")

Mr. President: The question is that the question be now put.

The motion was adopted.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That this Assembly do agree with the Council of State in the amendment that in sub-clause (1) of clause 2 of the Bill, after the words 'construed as if' the words 'with effect from the first day of March, 1923' be inserted and for the words 'one rupee and four annas' the words 'two rupees and eight annas' be substituted."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas: Is it necessary to put the other amendments at all because these are consequential amendments? As the original amendment has been thrown out, I submit that these amendments do not arise.

Mr. President: That is a matter of interpretation.

Sir Henry Moncrieff Smith (Secretary, Legislative Department): As the original amendment has been thrown out, I think the House for consistency's sake should also get rid of the other amendments, as they were consequential to the amendment which the Council of State made in the Bill. If these words stand, one might think that they were superfluous and the House may be charged with inconsistency. I think, the main question was whether the salt tax should be Rs. 1-4-0 or Rs. 2-8-0. This House has decided on Rs. 1-4-0 and, therefore, such introductory words as "with effect from the first day of March, 1923", and so on, will become unnecessary.

Mr. President: I think we had better proceed with the division.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: I shall not ask for a division on this matter.

Mr. President: Further amendment made by the Council of State in the Indian Finance Bill:

"At the beginning of sub-clause (2) of clause 2 of the Bill, the following words were inserted, namely:

"With effect from the first day of March, 1923."

The question I have to put is that this Assembly do agree with the Council of State in that amendment.

The motion was negatived.

Mr. President: Further amendment made by the Council of State in the said Bill:

"Sub-clause (3) of clause 2 of the Bill was omitted."

The question I have to put is that this Assembly do agree with the Council of State in that amendment.

The motion was negatived.

Mr. President: Further amendment made by the Council of State in the said Bill:

"To clause 3 of the Bill the following new sub-clause was added, namely:

"(3) The amendments made in the Indian Tariff Act, 1894, by this section shall have effect from the first day of March, 1923."

The question I have to put is that this Assembly do agree with the Council of State in that amendment.

The motion was negatived.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar (Madras City: Non-Muhammadian Urban): Sir, before you call on Mr. Burdon, I beg to call your attention to page 46 of the Manual and to inquire whether this House is entitled to send a message to the Governor General. The Governor General has sent us a message, to which a reply is due. My motion, Sir, is to send a reply to that message, which I trust that you will hold we are entitled to send. My object, Sir, it may be mentioned is to point out to His Excellency the Governor General that he is being advised on a wrong course altogether in the matter of certifying under clause 67B of the Government of India Act. I propose to point out that clause 67B could not apply at this stage. That is my legal point. I also propose to address His Excellency through my speech here that he should not follow the advice which is being given to him behind our backs by other people. Therefore, Sir, I want this House to emphasise its vote given on the last occasion by imploring His Excellency not to use this reserve power which the law has entrusted to him. I think, Sir, you will hold that we are entitled to send that message to His Excellency. I have handed to you, Sir, a slip of paper containing the further message which is to the effect that this House do also implore His Excellency not to exercise the power which he has got under this section. Sir, I submit it will be fitting on an important occasion like this that this House should send such a message and I am sure that His Excellency with all his liberal instincts will pay that attention which is due to this Assembly, which is the popular House. However responsible the advisers in His Excellency's Cabinet may be, we also claim to represent the people. We claim to be true friends of His Excellency the Governor General. We want His Excellency to continue in this country as Viceroy and to earn the love and respect of the people of this land. Therefore, Sir, I want this opportunity to move this proposition so that this House may send its humble message to His Excellency not to embark upon this measure upon which he is advised to embark. I hope, Sir, you will hold it in order.

Mr. President: The Honourable Member will observe that the debate this morning on the salt tax verged not merely upon what was disorderly but upon what was actually forbidden, namely, comment on the conduct either of the Crown or of the Governor General in his actions apart from the Government of which he is the head. The action which he is entitled to take under the constitution, as Governor General and not as Governor

[Mr. President.]

General in Council, is to set in motion this very procedure which begins by recommendation and ends, on this assumption, by certifying a Bill. If I were to allow the Honourable Member to move this motion, the debate must inevitably reflect upon his conduct as Governor General. I ask the Honourable Member on that ground, therefore, not to press his motion. It must be assumed that the Governor General is fully seised of all the aspects of the question, including those presented in public debate on the floor of this House, before he takes such action as is contemplated under the constitution.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: I have always great respect for and a desire to follow your ruling and advice, but there are certain legal aspects of the question, which perhaps have not been placed before His Excellency. That is one reason why I wish to move this motion.

Mr. President: If the Governor General desires legal advice over and above that which is officially available to him from the Honourable the Law Member, he no doubt will seek it where he desires to find it. The Honourable Member is a distinguished lawyer himself. I imagine the doors of Viceregal Lodge are open to him equally as to others.

THE CANTONMENTS BILL.

Mr. E. Burdon (Army Secretary): Sir, I move for leave to introduce a Bill to amend the Cantonments Act, 1910.

The purpose and scope of the Bill are clearly and simply set forth in the Statement of Objects and Reasons. Moreover, the subject with which the Bill deals must already be familiar to many Honourable Members of the Assembly and, consequently, the further observations which I will make in support of my motion will be very brief. Cantonments exist primarily for the accommodation and for the service generally of troops, and it may safely be said that, when the cantonments were first established, the needs of the troops constituted not only the primary but the sole consideration by which the system of governing cantonments had to be determined. In the course of time, however, conditions have materially changed and there are many large cantonment areas in India which contain a considerable civilian population, whose presence in the cantonments has no specific connection with the troops or with the military administration. In the cases to which I am referring the civilian part of the settlement has been created by economic causes of one kind or another. This change of conditions has led to a demand, a justifiable demand, for changes in the system under which cantonments are administered. In the past few years the question has formed the subject of a considerable amount of public discussion between, on the one hand, those sections of the public that are directly interested in cantonment affairs and the military authorities, and indeed the Government of India on the other hand. In the result, about this time last year, His Excellency the Viceroy, in receiving a deputation of the All-India Cantonments Association, gave an undertaking that Government would introduce liberal reforms into cantonment administration without at the same time doing anything to the prejudice of the discipline and comfort of the troops for whose benefit cantonments primarily exist. The fruit of these discussions and the undertaking which I have just mentioned is to be found in the Bill which I seek leave to introduce, and it is perhaps desirable that I should take this opportunity of stating once more in definite terms the general position which Government desire to adopt in the matter. It is still held that in all cantonments the essential requirements of the troops must come first. It is vitally important, for example, that troops should live in absolutely healthy conditions, so far as it is humanly possible to achieve this end. I will give one very brief illustration of the reason why Government must take so definite a line in the matter. I remember that, when the great war broke out in 1914, a certain regiment was found to be infected with malaria through no fault of their own, but merely as a result of the insanitary state of the cantonments in which they were stationed. The regiment was consequently declared to be unfit for active service. It is easy to see what this means. It means that the expenditure which had been incurred on maintaining that particular regiment and the labour which had been spent in organising and training it failed of their effect at the very moment when the regiment was most needed. The cantonment, I am glad to say, has since been abolished. It is equally necessary to protect the troops from other forms of contamination, from possible contamination of their morals or of their discipline and morale. It is not that troops are specially susceptible to evil influences. Here in India we know very well that the contrary is the case. But the troops are too valuable to risk. That is the point.

Subject then to these essential requirements of the troops being provided for, Government recognise that in the larger cantonments it is right and indeed necessary to apply methods of administration which shall be of a progressive character and consistent with Government's general policy in other departments of the administration. In many of the smaller cantonments of India no such question of reform arises. There are many small cantonments in which the civilian population is negligible in amount and consists almost entirely of persons engaged in occupations which are directly ancillary to the maintenance of the troops. In cantonments of this character representative institutions would be out of place and would, of course, be quite unworkable, but in the larger cantonments, where the ordinary conditions of civic life largely prevail, the Government desire to apply, subject to the safeguards which I have mentioned, municipal methods of administration and to make the cantonment authority a responsible local self-government body. I am confident that the principle by which Government has been guided in framing this measure will commend itself universally to this Assembly. I move therefore for leave to introduce the Bill.

The motion was adopted.

Mr. E. Burdon: Sir, I introduce the Bill.

Sir, I move:

"That the Bill be circulated for the purpose of eliciting opinion thereon."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. President: In view of other proceedings here this afternoon, I now propose to adjourn the House till to-morrow morning Eleven O'clock.

The Assembly then adjourned till Eleven of the Clock on Tuesday, the 27th March, 1923.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

Tuesday, 27th March, 1923.

The Assembly met in the Assembly Chamber at Eleven of the Clock.
Mr. President was in the Chair.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

RESTORATION OF GRANTS.

641. Mr. K. O. Neogy: Will Government be pleased to refer to my starred questions No. 40, dated the 6th September, 1922, and No. 76 of the 16th January, 1923, and to state the result of their examination of the extent of the authority of the Governor General in Council to instruct a Governor in regard to the exercise of his statutory powers for the restoration of grants rejected by the Local Legislative Council?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: The examination of the question referred to by my predecessor is still proceeding.

Mr. K. O. Neogy: When did the process of examination begin and when is it likely to end?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: It began, Sir, about the time that my predecessor made the statement; it will end, Sir, as soon as we have full time to give to a question so important. As the House will realise it is really quite impossible for us to take up questions of first class importance like this during the sittings of the Assembly.

Mr. K. O. Neogy: Do I take it that the Government of India did not go into this question before they actually issued instructions to the Governor of Bengal to restore certain grants which were refused by the local Council?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: I can only say now that the question is one which needs further consideration.

CAPITAL EXPENDITURE ON RAILWAYS.

642. Mr. K. O. Neogy: (a) With reference to the provision for capital expenditure for the Railways in 1923-24, will Government be pleased to state whether the Central Railway Advisory Council was consulted in regard to the different items of the expenditure proposals?

(b) What control, if any, is exercised by the Finance Department over proposals for capital expenditure on Railways?

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley: (a) The reply is in the negative.

(b) The Finance Department fix the total allotment to be made for capital expenditure on railways in each year, subject to the sanction of the Secretary of State and the vote of the Legislative Assembly, but do not interfere in the distribution of the grant among the railways or as to the precise objects of expenditure on which the grant is spent. Their business, however, is to see that the total allotment is not exceeded without a supplementary vote, and also to scrutinise such projects as require the sanction of the Secretary of State, before that sanction is applied for.

GRANT FOR RAILWAY QUARTERS.

643. Mr. K. C. Neogy: (a) With reference to the provision of Rs. 1 crore, 75 lakhs and odd made in the Railway Budget for 1923-24, for additional quarters for staff, will Government be pleased to state how much of the amount is likely to be spent for construction of quarters for European and Anglo-Indian employees, and how much for Indian employees, in the different railways?

(b) How much of the said amount is to be devoted towards construction of quarters for employees drawing a monthly salary of Rs. 50 and below?

(c) What will be the total approximate annual recovery in the shape of rent from the staff occupying these quarters; and what is estimated to be the rate of net annual return on the capital spent in the construction of these quarters after making allowance for depreciation and repairs?

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley (a), (b) and (c). The information asked for is not available.

Mr. K. C. Neogy: Do I take it that these details are never examined before provisions are made in the budget for such expenditure?

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley: The Honourable Member is not correct in making that assumption, Sir; they are examined, but they are not examined on the basis which this question indicates.

Mr. K. C. Neogy: With reference to sub-clause (c), is it a fact that no return is actually expected on the capital invested in the building of these quarters?

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley: No, Sir; it is not a fact.

DISMISSAL OF RAILWAY EMPLOYEES.

644. Mr. K. C. Neogy: (a) Will Government be pleased to make a statement showing, Railway by Railway, the number of European and Anglo-Indian employees whose services have been dispensed with as a result of the "economy campaign" during the current year, referred to in paragraph 17 of the Explanatory Memorandum on the Railway Budget for 1923-24? What is the total annual saving effected thereby in each railway?

(b) Will Government be pleased to make a similar statement in respect of Indian employees whose services have been so dispensed with?

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley: The information in the detail asked for is not available. It can be collected only by special compilations by the different railways and the Government are reluctant to put Railway Administrations to this trouble.

ISSUE OF RAILWAY PASSES.

645. Mr. K. C. Neogy: (a) With reference to the answer to starred question No. 446 (a) of the 5th March, 1923, to the effect that officers of the Railway Board are granted free passes over all railways in India subject to a limit of two passes per annum, will Government be pleased to state if it is a fact that the total number of passes issued to Railway Board's staff and staff of Accountant General, Railways, during the year 1922, was 277 for the First Class and 626 for the Second Class?

(b) What is the total number of officers of the Railway Board and the Accountant General, Railways, who are entitled to travel first and second class, respectively?

(c) Will Government be pleased to state why no money account is maintained of the passes and P. T. Os. issued to the said staff?

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley: (a) The rule in this connection is that one set of passes over State and Company-managed railways taken separately or combined and one set over State-managed railways only are allowed under an arrangement with the various railway administrations similar to that which exists between the administrations themselves by mutual agreement. A set of passes means passes to cover the return journey of the employee and his family and the family is allowed to travel separately. It is regretted that the expression used in the reply referred to was open to misinterpretation but it is the expression generally used in this connection. The numbers are as stated by the Honourable Member but I should explain that the rule referred to above does not apply to Gazetted Officers.

(b) 27 and 112.

(c) Government do not consider that any object would be served in expending the time and labour involved in compiling such an account.

VOTABLE ITEMS IN RAILWAY BUDGET.

646. M. K. Reddi Garu: Will the Government be pleased to state whether it is the practice to place all new votable items of the Railway budget—capital as well as the revenue—before the Standing Finance Committee? If not, why not?

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: I would invite the attention of the Honourable Member to the statement made by the Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey in this House on the 15th March, 1922, when a similar question was raised in the course of the discussion on the Demand for railways. As Sir Malcolm Hailey then pointed out, it is not possible to place all proposals for railway expenditure before the Standing Finance Committee. For instance, a large proportion of the expenditure on railways falls under the head of working expenses, and expenditure of that kind cannot be controlled by budget or the ordinary provisions relating to expenditure control. An undertaking was given, however, that all questions of expenditure relating to establishment would be laid before the Standing Finance Committee, and effect has been given during the year to that undertaking except in cases of lesser importance which can be disposed of by the Railway Department, under the ordinary powers delegated to them, without reference to the Finance Department.

RAILWAY EXPENDITURE ON EDUCATION.

647. *Mr. K. G. Bagde: Will the Government be pleased to state:

- (i) Whether it is a fact that the E. I., A. B., G. I. P., B., B. and C. I., M. & S. M., S. I., B. & N. W., R. & K., N. W., O. & R. and E. B. Railways spent in 1921-22 the sum of Rs. 6,21,331 or thereabouts for helping education of the children of their European and Anglo-Indian employees and the sum of Rs. 96,446 or thereabouts for helping the children of their Indian employees?
- (ii) The total number of the Europeans and Anglo-Indians and also the Indians employed by the said railways?

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley: (i) The reply is in the affirmative.

(ii) The information will be found in Appendix 23, Volume II, of the Indian Railway Administration Report for 1921-22.

RAILWAY HILL SCHOOLS.

648. *Mr. K. G. Bagde: Will the Government be pleased to state:

- (i) Whether it is a fact that schools are maintained in the hills by some of these railways for the special benefit of the children of their European and Anglo-Indian employees?
- (ii) And if so, what is the total capital expenditure incurred for such institutions up to now; and further what are the annual recurring charges borne by the railways in this behalf; and
- (iii) Under what head in the Railway Accounts are the above different items of expenditure shown?

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley: (i) There is one such Boarding School maintained in the hills, namely, the East Indian Railway Oak Grove School, Mussoorie.

(ii) At the end of 1921 the construction account of the School stood at Rs. 8,07,000. The total recurring expenditure for that year was Rs. 2,85,250 met as follows:

	Rs.
By fees	1,96,888
By interest on the endowment fund	7,000
By grant in aid from the United Provinces Government	28,000
By contributions from the various railways whose employees' children attend the school	1,13,862

(iii) The money charged to the construction account has been contributed from time to time from the East Indian Railway Fine Fund, the East Indian Railway and North-Western Railway, Capital and Revenue, and from other miscellaneous sources. The property is vested in the Secretary of State. The portion of recurring charges met by Railway is brought to account as part of the working expenses of the railway concerned in the Revenue Account, Abstract "G" Special and Miscellaneous Expenditure.

EXPENDITURE ON COUPE COMPOSITES.

649. *Rai Bahadur G. O. Nag: Are there any proposals for increasing any expenditure on Coupe composites on any other railways during the year 1923-24? Why is the A. B. Railway going to provide coupe composites on its lines? Did this suggestion for providing such a class of carriages come from the tea planters of Assam?

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley: Government have no exact information as to the extent to which the various railway administrations are providing coupe accommodation in the ensuing year but presume that the particular case referred to is an indication that the Assam-Bengal Railway is acting on a suggestion made by the Railway Board that some compartments should be provided which can be reserved for passengers who desire to travel with their families particularly in the lower classes of accommodation. The suggestion did not come from the tea planters in Assam.

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary: May I ask a supplementary question, Sir? Has there not been a suggestion made to the Railway Board that these coupes, particularly in the lower classes, should be extended as far as possible, for the benefit of those who use these classes when travelling with their families?

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley: Yes, Sir. That suggestion was made to the Railway Board, they have acted upon it and have made a strong suggestion to that effect to the Railways. This action of the Assam-Bengal Railway is in consonance with the course which was then suggested.

EXPENDITURE ON B.-N. RAILWAY STOCK.

650. *Rai Bahadur G. O. Nag: (a) Is it a fact that on the B. N. Railway the proportion of third class passengers to total passengers per train during 1920-21 was 94 per cent. and that of first class was 1 and of second class 3?

(b) Is it true that while this railway proposes an expenditure of Rs. 2,93,000 on pure third class carriages, while a sum of Rs. 87,000 is provided by it for expenditure on touring saloons? For whose benefit are the touring saloons being provided?

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley: (a) The percentages given by the Honourable Member may be accepted as approximately correct.

(b) The provision for coaches for third class only is Rs. 11.73 lakhs and that for touring saloons is Rs. 0.87 lakhs. These touring saloons or tourist cars are required for public traffic.

ELECTRIFICATION AT LUMDING.

651. *Rai Bahadur G. O. Nag: Is it true that there is a proposal for electrification at Lumding (A. B. Railway) at a cost of about Rs. 2½ lakhs?

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley: The reply is in the affirmative.

ELECTRIFICATION OF COACHING STOCK OF A.-B. RAILWAY.

652. *Rai Bahadur G. O. Nag: Is there a proposal also for electrification of coaching stock of the A. B. Railway at a cost of 2 lakhs?

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley: There is a provision of Rs. 2 lakhs for equipping some of the coaching stock on the Assam-Bengal Railway with electric light in place of gas. This is desirable in the interest of public safety and is in accordance with the general policy on all railways.

DEPRECIATION OF FLOUR MILLS.

653. Bhai Man Singh: 1. Will the Government be pleased to state on an average of how many hours a day is the rate of depreciation of flour mills, etc., fixed at 6½ per cent. on prime cost for the purposes of Income-Tax Act under rule No. 8 of the Indian Income-Tax Rules printed on pages 41—44 of the Income-Tax Manual, 1922?

2. Will the Government be pleased to state whether the mills working much more, say double than the average hours, are entitled to double depreciation under the said rule?

3. If not, is the Government prepared to reconsider the matter and make the rule more equitable by fixing depreciation rates according to the working hours?

4. Will the Government be pleased to state the considerations that led to fixing this average?

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: I refer the Honourable Member to the reply I gave to question No. 451 at a meeting of the Legislative Assembly on the 5th March, 1923. The Government are not prepared to alter the depreciation rates until statistics are forthcoming showing that the rates at present fixed are unsuitable.

SIKH HOLIDAYS.

654. Bhai Man Singh: 1. Will the Government be pleased to state how many Sikh holidays are allowed in the Post and Telegraph offices in India or in the Punjab, Sind and United Provinces of Agra and Oudh?

2. Is the Government aware that Guru Nanak's birthday and Guru Gobind Singh's birthday are the festivals universally observed by the Sikhs and they are all declared as general holidays by the Punjab Government and the High Court, Lahore?

3. Is the Government considering the question of declaring these Sikh festivals as general holidays in the Post and Telegraph offices and under the Negotiable Instruments Act?

Colonel Sir Sydney Crookshank: (1) A reference is invited to clause 2 of the Post and Telegraph Guide which contains a list of all the holidays observed in the Department.

(2) Yes.

(3) No.

FIRMS OF ACCOUNTANTS FOR INCOME-TAX ACCOUNTS.

655. Bhai Man Singh: 1. Is the Government aware that the Income Tax Commissioner, Punjab, has approved the following three firms of Accountants for the preparation of Profit and Loss statement for Income-tax purposes:

(a) Messrs. Nisson Dignesse & Co.

(b) Messrs. Basant Lall & Son.

(c) Messrs. Aiyar & Co.

2. Is the Government aware that the majority of Indian firms in the Punjab keep their accounts in Hindi or Gurmukhi?

3. Is it a fact that none of the members of the above approved Accountants' firms know Gurmukhi or Hindi nor do they undertake to audit accounts in Hindi or Gurmukhi?

4. Is the Government aware that the inability of all the approved Accountants in Punjab to audit Hindi or Gurmukhi accounts has led to great inconvenience to those firms who keep their accounts in Hindi or Gurmukhi?

5. Will the Government be pleased to state the considerations on which approval is extended to the practising firms of certified and chartered accountants?

6. Will the Government be pleased to state the consideration which led to the exclusion of Messrs. Sodhbans & Co. of Lahore, the only Sikh and the only Gurmukhi and Hindi knowing firm of certified accountants in the Punjab from the list of approved accountants?

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: I would refer the Honourable Member to the reply given to question No. 452 at a meeting of the Assembly on the 5th March, 1923.

EXPENDITURE ON E. I. RAILWAY STOCK.

656. Rai Bahadur G. C. Nag: (a) Is it true that on the E. I. Railway a sum of over 4 lakhs has been sanctioned for "betterments" of upper class stock for 1923-24, and a sum of over 3 lakhs is provided for betterments of motor vans, whereas no expenditure is proposed under the head of "Betterments" or "Renewals"—"Sanctioned" of third class carriages?

(b) Is it a fact that out of an average of 248 passengers per train, 223 or 90 per cent. are third class passengers? Will the Government kindly ascertain from the railway concerned why no expenditure is proposed for "betterments" of third class carriages?

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley: (a) The additional upper class stock and motor vans mentioned were sanctioned as betterments during 1922-23 and have been carried forward into 1923-24.

(b) The reply to the first part of this question is in the affirmative. It is not a fact that no provision has been made for "betterments" of third class carriages for which Rs. 19 lakhs have been allotted against 1923-24.

EXPENDITURE ON S. I. RAILWAY STOCK.

657. Rai Bahadur G. C. Nag: Is it a fact that S. I. Railway has got Rs. 6,67,000 sanctioned for bogie coaches of sorts under "Betterments"? How much of this is to be spent on the upper classes (1st, 2nd and tourist) coaches, and how much on third class?

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley: The answer to the first part is in the affirmative. The information asked for in the second part is not available but will be obtained and supplied to the Honourable Member.

ADMISSION TO ENGINEERING SERVICE, E. I. RAILWAY.

658. Rai Bahadur G. C. Nag: (a) Has the attention of the Government been drawn to a notice, dated 12th December 1922, issued over the name of Mr. G. L. Colvin, Agent, East Indian Railway, regarding examination for selection of Anglo-Indian, European and Indian Apprentice Inspectors and Draftsmen for employment in the Engineering Department, East Indian Railway, which stated that sons of East Indian Railway employees and boys educated at Oakgrove School would have preference among those who passed a satisfactory examination?

(b) Does the Oakgrove School admit sons and boys of the Railway employees of pure Indian descent? If the answer is in the affirmative, will Government kindly supply the number of such boys now on the roll of that school? If the answer is in the negative, will Government kindly state why the boys belonging to a particular community should have preference over boys of other communities in the Engineering Service of this particular railway?

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley: (a) and (b). Government have seen the notice from which they gather that there is no preference for a particular community. As regards Indians, sons of East Indian Railway employees will have preference. As regards Europeans and Anglo-Indians two criteria will be applied. First, that they are sons of East Indian Railway employees and secondly, that they have been educated at the railway's School at Mussoorie.

MEDICAL SERVICES ON RAILWAYS.

659. Rai Bahadur G. O. Nag: (a) Are there any Indians in service in the Medical Department of the East Indian Railway? If so, how many are there?

(b) What is the total number of Medical officers, e.g., Chief Medical Officers, District Medical Officers, and Civil Surgeons in the employment of the railway classified according to nationality?

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley: The information asked for by the Honourable Member is being collected and will be sent to him in due course.

ISSUE OF RAILWAY TICKETS.

660. Babu Baidyanath Prasad Sinha: (a) Is the Government aware of the fact that there is great inconvenience to third class passengers in purchasing tickets on account of the Booking Clerks issuing the tickets only a few minutes before the arrival of trains?

(b) Do the Government propose to issue instructions to the Railway authorities in this connection?

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley: (a) and (b). The Honourable Member is referred to the answers given in this Assembly to the following questions asked on the same subject:

(1) Questions Nos. 633 and 635, asked by Rai Bahadur Pandit Jawahar Lal Bhargava on the 26th September, 1921.

(2) Question No. 237, asked by Khan Sahib Maulvi Abdul Quadir on the 6th February, 1922.

INCONVENIENCES TO THIRD CLASS PASSENGERS.

661. Babu Baidyanath Prasad Sinha: (a) Is the Government aware of the fact that there is great inconvenience to third class passengers on account of their not being permitted to go to the railway platforms directly after they purchase tickets and that at many stations they have to wait long in enclosures before the gates to the platforms are opened for them?

(b) Do the Government propose to issue instructions to the Railway authorities to admit the passengers to the platforms at once when they are in possession of tickets and that they must not be kept waiting in enclosures?

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley: (a) and (b). Government are not aware that great inconvenience is caused to 3rd class passengers owing to their not being allowed on the platform as soon as they have purchased their tickets. It is not possible to lay down any hard and fast rule in this matter. It is the usual practice to admit passengers to the platform in ample time for the train, but the amount of platform space available, the density of traffic, and the safety of the passengers themselves must determine the period they may occupy the platform.

INSUFFICIENCY OF SEATING ACCOMMODATION ON RAILWAYS.

662. Babu Baidyanath Prasad Sinha: (a) Is the Government aware of the fact that there is not sufficient supply of benches or other seating accommodation on first class railway station platforms and in the third class passenger waiting rooms?

(b) Do the Government propose to order the Railway authorities to make arrangements for their supply as soon as possible?

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley: (a) Government have no special information on the subject.

(b) The matter is within the competence of Railway Administrations but I may inform the Honourable Member that the question of the provision of benches or raised seating accommodation in third class waiting halls at important stations has already been brought to their notice.

OVERCROWDING IN THIRD CLASS CARRIAGES.

663. Babu Baidyanath Prasad Sinha: (a) Is the Government aware of the fact that there is great overcrowding in third class compartments in through trains?

(b) Do the Government propose to order more through trains to run up and down so as to remove the inconvenience of third class passengers?

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley: (a) and (b). The Honourable Member is referred to paragraphs 85 to 88, Chapter VIII of the Administration Report, on Indian Railways, 1921-22, Volume I, copies of which are available in the Library.

RAILWAY TECHNICAL SCHOOLS.

664. Babu Baidyanath Prasad Sinha: (a) Will the Government be pleased to say how many technical schools there are in connection with locomotive, carriage and wagon workshops at different railway centres where Indians are trained as mechanics and mechanical engineers?

(b) If there are not anywhere Indians receiving training as mechanics do Government propose to take any action in the matter?

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley: I would refer the Honourable Member to paragraph 34, Volume I, of the Administration Report on Indian Railways, 1921-22

LOCAL ADVISORY COUNCILS.

665. Babu Baidyanath Prasad Sinha: (a) Will the Government be pleased to say when the Local Advisory Councils recommended by Acworth Committee will be established?

(b) Will the Government be pleased to define their functions and to publish the scheme for public criticism before it is finally adopted?

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley: The Honourable Member is referred to the reply given to starred question No. 376 on 19th February, 1923. Since that reply was given, the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway Administration has established a Local Advisory Committee.

FUNCTIONS OF DIRECTOR GENERAL, INDIAN MEDICAL SERVICE.

666. Mr. K. C. Neogy: (a) What is the relation of the Director General, Indian Medical Service, to the Indian Medical Service as a service, i.e., is he the head of both the civil and the military sides or of the civil side only?

(b) If he is head of the military side also, in what respect does he function as regards appointment, transfer and promotion of Indian Medical Service officers?

Mr. E. Burdon: (a) The Director General, Indian Medical Service, is the head of the entire Indian Medical Service, both military and civil.

(b) Officers of the Indian Medical Service in military employ are under the immediate orders of the Adjutant-General in India so far as questions of appointment and transfer are concerned. All promotions are made by the Government of India on the advice of the Director General, Indian Medical Service.

Lieut.-Colonel H. A. J. Gidney: Will the Honourable Member tell me whether the Director, Medical Services, has any control over this department?

Mr. E. Burdon: Not the service as a whole?

Lieut.-Colonel H. A. J. Gidney: May I know in what capacity the control is?

Mr. E. Burdon: He has the usual control over those serving under him.

INDIAN MEDICAL SERVICE OFFICERS.

667. Mr. K. C. Neogy: (a) Is it a fact that there are six Indian Medical Service Major-Generals appointments out of which four are allotted to the civil side and two to the military?

(b) Is it a fact that the two Major Generals' appointments on the military side are held by officers transferred from the civil side?

(c) Is it a fact that there are 16 Indian Medical Service Colonels appointments, out of which 10 are on the military and six on the civil side? How many out of the 10 military Colonels appointments are at present held by officers transferred from civil department?

Mr. E. Burdon: (a) and (b). Yes.

(c) The answer to the first part of the question is in the affirmative. As to the second part, 3 of the 10 Colonels now employed on the military side spent a portion of their service in civil employment, and were so employed when reverted to military duty on promotion to their present rank.

PROMOTIONS IN INDIAN MEDICAL SERVICE.

668. Mr. K. C. Neogy: Is it a fact that when a vacancy occurs in the administrative grade of the Indian Medical Service on the civil side it is invariably filled up by promotion of junior officers on the civil side, passing over much senior officers of the service in the military department?

Mr. E. Burdon: No. The claims of all officers, whether serving on the military or the civil side, are considered for such appointments.

Mr. Ahmed Baksh: Is it a fact, Sir, that an Indian officer holding a military appointment was recommended, by the United Provinces Government to be made Inspector General, Civil Hospitals, and his claims were overlooked because he was serving on the military side?

Mr. E. Burdon: I should like to have notice of that question.

Lala Girdharilal Agarwala: Is it Colonel Kampta Pershad of the United Provinces?

Mr. E. Burdon: I cannot tell you. I do not know.

TRANSFERS FROM MILITARY TO CIVIL IN INDIAN MEDICAL SERVICE.

669. Mr. K. C. Neogy: (a) Is there a law or regulation laying down the exact time of service when an Indian Medical Service officer may be transferred from military to the civil side?

(b) Is there a law or regulation laying down that an Indian Medical Service officer may be transferred and promoted to higher grade from civil to the military side, and that similar transfer may not take place from the military to the civil side?

(c) Will the Government be pleased to state as to who is responsible for this one-sided arrangement, the Director General, Indian Medical Service, as head of the Indian Medical Service or as head of the civil side?

(d) Is it a fact that there is no Major General's appointment on the military side of the Madras cadre and if the practice referred to in question (b) is to hold good, then is it intended that military officers on that cadre should not rise above the rank of Colonel?

Mr. E. Burdon: (a) No.

(b) No.

(c) In view of the replies I have just given, this question does not arise.

(d) The Honourable Member is mistaken in assuming that there is a military cadre for Madras. In view of the answer given to part 4 (b) above, the latter part of this question does not arise.

FAILURES IN INDIAN MEDICAL SERVICE.

670. Mr. K. O. Neogy: Is it a fact that the Esher Committee had attributed the failure of the Indian Medical Service in the great war to the fact of the officers being too long in the civil employ in consequence of which they deteriorate from point of view of military efficiency?

Mr. E. Burdon: The Indian Medical Service was not a failure during the Great War, and the Esher Committee did not assert that it failed. I presume that the Honourable Member is referring to the passage in which the Esher Committee endorsed a military opinion expressed to them that the Royal Army Medical Corps, owing to its superior organisation and military training in peace time, and certain other causes, had proved itself on the administrative side more efficient in the field than the Indian Medical Service. It was admitted, on the other hand, that the officers of the Indian Medical Service were quite as efficient professionally as the Royal Army Medical Corps.

Lieut.-Colonel H. A. J. Gidney: Can the Honourable Member tell the House what the recommendations are that are going to be adopted by the Esher Committee?

Mr. E. Burdon: No, Sir.

SELECTION OF POSTS IN INDIAN MEDICAL SERVICE.

671. Mr. K. O. Neogy: The medical being a transferred subject, is the selection for civil administration posts made by the Provincial Government or by the Director General, Indian Medical Service?

Mr. E. Burdon: The Director General, Indian Medical Service, is not consulted about the ordinary postings of Indian Medical Service officers in civil employ. These are made by the Local Government. The Director General, Indian Medical Service, is consulted when the services of an officer outside the provincial cadre are required.

MARRIAGE ALLOWANCE IN R. A. M. C.

672. Lieut.-Colonel H. A. J. Gidney (i) Is it a fact that while a marriage allowance has been sanctioned for the personnel of the R. A. M. C., a similar concession has been refused to members of the Indian Medical Department?

(ii) Is it a fact that while Indian Medical Department officers stationed at Quetta receive a free allowance of 20 pounds of coal a day, R. A. M. C. corporals in the same station get a free issue of 80 pounds a day?

(iii) What is the reason for this difference of treatment?

Mr. E. Burdon (i) The grant of marriage allowance to members of the Indian Medical Department has not, so far, been refused. The question is still under consideration, and it is hoped that a decision will shortly be arrived at.

(ii) and (iii) The Government of India have no information on the subject but are inquiring. I will inform the Honourable Member of the result in due course.

Lieut.-Colonel H. A. J. Gidney: In the list of questions which I submitted to the Legislative Department, there were two others included, Sir, and I have heard no explanation as to why they have not been answered. May I ask the Honourable Member to inform me?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: The practice is that the Government of India as such is cognisant only of questions which are admitted under the orders of the President; these are the questions that are answered.

UNSTARRED QUESTION AND ANSWER.

IMPROVEMENTS TO STOCK ON A.-B. RAILWAY.

258. Rai Bahadur G. O. Nag (a) Is it true that the estimates for improving third class carriages and Coupe composites of the A. B. Railway amount respectively to Rs. 8,53,000 and Rs. 5,83,000, and during 1923-24 a proportionately larger expenditure is proposed to be incurred on the latter than on the former? Will Government ascertain from the railway concerned the reasons for this differential treatment?

(b) Is it not a fact that during 1920-21, third class passengers accounted for 96 per cent. of the total passenger traffic on this railway?

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley: (a) The amounts provided during 1923-24 against the two estimates mentioned are for completion of the work and therefore no question of differential treatment arises. Further provision has been made against 1923-24 to the extent of Rs. 6.7 lakhs for additional third class carriages and Rs. 2.2 lakhs for upper class stock.

(b) The reply is in the affirmative.

MESSAGES FROM THE COUNCIL OF STATE.

Secretary of the Assembly: Sir, two Messages have been received from the Secretary of the Council of State as follows:

"I am directed to inform you that the Council of State have, at their meeting of the 26th March, 1923, agreed without any amendments to the Bill for the removal of doubts regarding the right of women to be enrolled and to practise as legal practitioners, which was passed by the Legislative Assembly on the 22nd March, 1923."

The second Message is as follows:

"I am directed to inform you that the amendments made by the Legislative Assembly in the Bill to consolidate certain enactments relating to Merchant Shipping, were taken into consideration by the Council of State at its meeting of the 26th March, 1923, and that the Council has agreed to the amendments."

BILL LAID ON THE TABLE.

Secretary of the Assembly: Sir, in accordance with Rule 25 of the Indian Legislative Rules I lay on the table the Bill to provide for the forfeiture of the estates and other property of Mahendra Partab Singh and for their grant to his son, subject to certain conditions, which was passed by the Council of State on the 26th March, 1923.

AMENDMENT OF STANDING ORDERS.

Mr. President: I present the Report of the Select Committee on the amendment of the Standing Orders.

ELECTION OF MEMBERS TO PUBLICITY ADVISORY COMMITTEE.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey (Home Member): Sir, I beg to move:

"That this Assembly do proceed to elect, in such manner as the President may direct, seven Members to the Advisory Committee to assist in the conduct of the publicity work of the Government of India."

As is well known to the Members of the Assembly, we have at present a nominated Advisory Committee for Publicity matters for whose services I think we and the Assembly are under a great obligation. Lately the question of the constitution of the Committee was re-examined by a sub-committee appointed, and they advised that a change should take place, namely, that seven members of the Committee should be elected by the Members of this Assembly, two by the Members of the Council of State, and six should be nominated by Government of whom three would be representatives of the press, and that Government should appoint a Chairman of the Committee. Therefore, except for the Government nominations, the bulk of the Committee would be elected instead of being, as at present, nominated. The functions of the Committee would be to advise Government in regard to its publicity work and to draw up the budget dealing with publicity work. These are the main functions. All I seek at present, is to ask the House to approve of the election of some seven of its Members to serve on this Advisory Committee, the election being held in such manner as you, Sir, may direct.

The motion was adopted.

THE EXCLUSION FROM INHERITANCE BILL.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar (Madras: Nominated Non-Official): Sir, I beg to move:

"That the Report of the Select Committee on the Bill to amend the Hindu Law relating to exclusion from inheritance of certain classes of heirs and to remove certain doubts, be taken into consideration."

Sir, I do not propose to make any long speech on this occasion. The object of my measure is to remove the disqualification set forth in one of the texts of Manu which says that certain persons who have some defects from their birth or who suffer from certain diseases, should be excluded from inheritance. Already, as regards one portion of it, there has been legislation at the instance of the Government. So long ago as 1850, in the Act known as the Caste (Removal of Disabilities) Act, a portion of this text was legislated upon and the disqualification relating to exclusion from inheritance by having become a convert was removed. I am trying, Sir, by this Bill to remove the other disabilities which are mentioned in the subsequent portion of the same text. I explained the matter more fully on the last occasion. Therefore it is not necessary to say much. There is only one matter to which I should like to refer, and that is this, that there has been different interpretations upon the words in the text which says that the defect should be from birth. Whether the words "from birth" qualify all the clauses or whether it applies only to a particular class of cases is a matter upon which the Courts have taken different views. When the matter was before the Select Committee, Sir, they examined the matter very fully and their Report shows that all possible attention was given to the various contentions raised on this matter. They have made a recommendation, Sir, on one matter on which I should like to say a word. They say that the Bill should not be taken into consideration in the event of Bengal being included in the Bill. The reason is that when I originally introduced the Bill I excluded Bengal, and they say, if Bengal is to be included, there should be republication. It is for this House to say in the first place whether Bengal is to be excluded, and, if Bengal is to be excluded, then the recommendation of the Select Committee that the Bill be taken into consideration may be accepted by this House. But in the event of this House coming to the conclusion that Bengal should be included, this House will have to decide whether it is not necessary to republish the Bill and whether we may proceed to consider the Bill. As regards other matters, I made a number of speeches on previous occasions and I do not like to weary the House any further. I move, Sir, that the Bill be taken into consideration.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar (Madras City: Non-Muhammadan Urban): With great regret, Sir, I beg to move:

"That the consideration of this matter be deferred."

Sir, this is the last day when we are going to be detained here and from the restless way in which my Honourable friend's remarks have been received in this Assembly, Honourable Members will gather that their minds are pre-occupied with the serious crisis which has arisen in the constitution to-day. Sir, we want to meet and decide as to what further course of action we should take. My object in moving this motion for postponing the consideration of this measure is that the rest of the day may be available to the Non-Official Members of this Assembly for concerting such measures as may be taken constitutionally to prevent the certification procedure which His Excellency the Governor General proposes to take. In that view I hope Honourable Members will support me in this motion. I do not think this is the time for us to spend on this child's play, legislating on this and on that when we have got serious constitutional questions at issue. Sir, these measures may wait. They have waited so long. I do not think I shall be doing any injustice to my Honourable friend—I am sorry I have to do it—I do not think I shall be doing any injustice to my Honourable friend by making this motion. On the other hand, I hope that all other Members whose motions stand on the list to-day will join with me in making this application to the House, so that we may have the rest of the short hours that we have at our disposal to decide what course of action we should take. Sir, I move the postponement of the consideration of this measure.

Mr. President: I am not sure that I can accept a dilatory motion in the circumstances, except in the form of re-circulation, which is on the paper. As the Honourable Members are aware, a dilatory motion virtually means that the Bill cannot be passed. I think it would be unfair on the part of the Chair at this stage to accept a dilatory motion of that character.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: If I put myself in order, Sir, I will propose the motion that it be re-circulated.

Mr. President: The original question was :

"That the Bill be taken into consideration."

Since which an amendment has been moved :

"That the Bill be re-circulated for the purpose of obtaining opinion thereon."

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary (Calcutta: Non-Muhammadan Urban): Sir, I beg to support the motion, though not exactly on the grounds that have been put forward by Mr. Rangachariar. If Members have other duties, they must find other time for it, and if it is right for us to go on with this Bill, we should go on apart from the considerations of expediency that have been put forward. I do not know how Bengal came to be included within the purview of the Bill. It was not included in the original Bill. Bengal certainly objects to being included. I believe Assam also does so. So far as the tracts governed by the Dayabhaga School of Hindu Law are concerned, they have enough reason against the Bill. There are other reasons which may be gone into later. For the present I support the motion for re-circulation.

Mr. J. N. Mukherjee (Calcutta Suburbs: Non-Muhammadan Urban): Sir, I beg to have a ruling from the Chair as to whether after this motion, which has just been made regarding consideration of the reasons underlying the Bill, other people who have given notice of motions that the Bill be re-circulated, will be heard or not. If that be so, Sir, and they be heard, of course we need not go into the question of consideration of principles, at this stage. As to the defects in the report of the Select Committee, I may submit to the House that there is a difference of opinion as to what class of persons should be excluded, and there are various other reasons which arise in connection with the question for re-circulation.

Mr. President: I am not quite sure that I appreciate the Honourable Member's point of order. Two questions have already been put from the Chair, one in the form of an amendment to the other. I shall again put these questions when this debate comes to an end. The House will first of all decide whether the Bill be re-circulated or not, and if not, then whether it be taken into consideration.

Mr. J. N. Mukherjee: For instance, Sir, what would be my own position? I have given notice of a motion for re-circulation. It is as those standing in the name of others. (A Voice: "Do you support or oppose the motion?") I support. There are other reasons besides those already given. This is my submission, and if the House is disposed to hear me on these points, I am prepared to urge them. The first point as to the report of the Select Committee, to which I invite the attention of the House, is the nature of the report itself. My Honourable friend, Mr. Rangachariar says in his note of dissent in the Select Committee's report that the meetings of the Select Committee were convened in a very irregular manner. In fact, many of the Members could not be present, and in a matter of such great importance, where for the first time a new principle is going to be enunciated, or rather no principle is going to be enunciated in violation of the principles which find favour in the Hindu Smritis in a matter of such grave importance, a systematic and well-considered opinion was not attempted to be obtained. In the second place, my submission to the House is that this Bill does not stand by itself. In this connection I may be permitted to refer the Honourable Members to certain passages in the opinions which have been circulated to us. Apart from the other questions that it was treated throughout as a purely administrative measure and so on, the opinions of religious heads of Hindus who are primarily concerned in this matter, apart from their holding any position as Members of an Association—of a Bar Association, I mean to say, not any other Hindu Association—or any official position, were never obtained.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: You are wrong. I can show you the contrary.

Mr. J. N. Mukherjee: I put a question in the Assembly and the reply to it was as follows. My question was put on the 10th March, 1923. It was:

"Will Government be pleased to state what Hindu associations, religious heads of institutions, representative Hindus of the orthodox communities, and other prominent persons and associations outside the Hindu community were consulted by them with a view to obtain their opinion on the following Bills?"

and amongst the Bills mentioned was Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar's Bill for alteration of the Hindu Law of Inheritance. The reply given was:

"The Honourable Member is no doubt aware that no motions were made in this Chamber for the circulation of these Bills for opinions. In order, however, to enable Government to come to a conclusion as to the attitude to be adopted by them towards the Bills, the Government of India circulated them inviting the opinions of Local Governments and Administrations, the High Courts, Chief Courts and Judicial Commissioner's Courts, the Bar Associations and such other authorities as the Local Governments thought fit to consult."

These are the classes of associations and persons who were consulted in this matter. Now, under cover of a private Bill, as the Honourable the President is fully aware, a matter of grave public importance is going to be introduced by the Bill for legislative treatment. Of course, a great deal of the present situation is due to our ignorance of the exact procedure that obtains in Parliament in such matters, where under cover of private Bills questions affecting the public at large are attempted to be introduced, and I shall presently draw the attention of the House to that aspect of the question. But for the present I should like to invite the attention of Honourable Members to page 13 of the printed notes which were circulated to the Members. Here is one, from Mr. V. M. Ferrers, District Judge of Canara. This is what he says, and his observations seem very pertinent to me:

"Being myself much addicted to a religion of my own, I observe with recurring surprise the readiness of some Hindus and some Muhammadans to submit their sacred law to the manipulations of a secular Legislature."

Then he goes on to say:

"In my own opinion these operations are perilous. A proposal for the reformation of an ancient faith may seem attractive and liberal; but to such a process there is no end. The theory of the Hindu Law is (I believe) similar to the theory of every other religion. The revelation once delivered by the Rishis is the very Dayspring from on high. It may be too dazzling to be clearly seen. It cannot possibly be in need of correction. When the navigator . . ."

Mr. President: Order, order. That quotation is hardly relevant to this question. The Honourable Member is supporting the motion asking for further opinion on the ground, presumably, that the Select Committee in considering the Bill was not fully seised of the issues before it. The issue is quite narrow.

Mr. J. N. Mukherjee: What I was going to submit to the Honourable Members of this House is that, I should like to point out in the first place the gravity of the present situation. As I have already submitted to the House, in matters of this kind, perhaps in another place, in the Mother of Parliaments, this procedure which has been taken would not have been allowed. We are on the brink of a great . . .

Mr. President: Order, order. The Honourable Member will see that he could repeat that speech word for word on the motion that the Bill be considered. These are arguments for considering or not considering the Bill. The issue now is whether the House and the Select Committee had sufficient materials before them to pass a judgment which this House ought to endorse or not. That is the sole issue.

Mr. J. N. Mukherjee: I can understand it, Sir, and I will address myself to that point, but it is so very difficult to detect one aspect of the question from another because they are parts of the same point. But if we have to classify the two parts of the argument, I must say that so far as recirculation of the Bill is concerned, my observations end there. Only official bodies and administrations, and Bar Associations and similar societies were consulted. Now, the second point in this connection is that the report of the Select Committee itself contains sufficient materials to enable the House to come to the conclusion that the Bill was not properly considered. Mr. Rangachariar, as a Member of the Select Committee, says:

"I have in the first place to place on record my protest against the way in which the Select Committee meetings on this important measure were convened, cancelled or held. The first meeting was convened for Wednesday the 21st February to be held after the Assembly rises for the day . . ."

Mr. President: Again the Honourable Member is entitled to put forward these arguments on a motion that the Bill be re-committed to the Select Committee. These are arguments to show that the Select Committee did not discharge its duty properly. There is a motion for re-submitting the Bill to the Select Committee and I must protect the discussion of that motion.

Mr. J. N. Mukherjee: But, Sir, if these points be taken together, that is to say, the want of full consideration, and along with that, what I have already submitted, viz., that public opinion from the religious heads and other people who can speak authoritatively on the point has not been elicited,—if these two be taken together, a good case for re-circulation would be made out. I move, Sir, that the Bill be re-circulated for obtaining opinion thereon rather support such a motion.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: May I say a word? I can understand a motion that the Bill be scrapped, but the motion that this Bill be re-circulated, I think, ignores the steps that I have taken to get the opinions of as large a number of people in India as is possible. I shall tell you in a minute what I did. I was not content with the Government circulating the papers. What I did was this. I had about 2,000 copies of the Bill printed and with a copy of the Statement of Objects and Reasons I sent a copy to every religious head in this country, to every Member of the Legislature, whether it be the Central Legislature, or the Provincial Legislatures. I addressed every Bar Association throughout the length and breadth of India, I sent copies to every newspaper in India, and I addressed specially an article, to two important orthodox papers and asked those newspapers to invite opinions from orthodox gentlemen. I have done all that is possible because I did not want to hurry this matter through. In these circumstances to say that full opinion has not been obtained and therefore the Bill ought to be re-circulated, I cannot understand. I can understand an honest motion that this Bill be not proceeded with, because the House does not want this Bill, but to say that every step has not been taken to get the opinions of as many people as are competent to give it is a thing which cannot be said in the case of my Bill.

Mr. President: The original question was:

"That the Report of the Select Committee on the Bill to amend the Hindu Law relating to exclusion from inheritance of certain classes of heirs and to remove certain doubts, be taken into consideration,"

Since which an amendment has been moved:

"That the Bill be re-circulated for the purpose of eliciting opinion thereon."

The question that I have to put is that the Bill be re-circulated.

The Assembly divided.

Mr. M. G. M. Ayyangar (Madura and Ramnad cum Tinnevely: Non-Muhammadan Rural): There is no doubt that under the existing Hindu law, a person who is from birth blind, deaf or dumb and a person who is insane either from birth or when succession opens are disqualified from getting property from inheritance or from claiming any share in the joint family property. The object of the Bill was to remove the grounds on which these people were excluded from inheritance or a share in joint family property because in the opinion of the author of this Bill 'that in the times that we live in, such grounds of exclusion should not be allowed to deprive a person of temporal rights and the grounds of exclusion according to him as stated in the objects and reasons of the Bill were that their present condition is due to sins in their former birth and that they are therefore not entitled to share in the patrimony.' The Honourable author of this Bill had given at an earlier date the grounds on which this exclusion is based. He stated then "If the exclusion is not based on original sin or subsequent incapacity to offer oblations and the like, the suggestion that it was due to a belief in the inability of the heir to manage temporal affairs is more plausible—very likely, the rule is an outcome of a hazy notion that the property should be preserved for the disqualified person by those who are related to him." It seems to me that it is not complimentary to the ancient jurists to say that they based the exclusion from inheritance of these unfortunate persons because of their sins in former birth and inability to offer oblations.

I wish to impress upon those who seem to be in favour of this Bill, one thing, namely, that they are not attempting to do any good to the disqualified persons but only trying to do them harm by this piece of legislation. Some of the Members of this House and some outside this House seem to me to think that the reason for the exclusion is only superstitious. It is not really so. But it is based purely on secular and business like considerations. It only prevents these persons during the continuance of the incapacity from becoming tools in the hands of designing persons because they are incapable of taking care of themselves. The reason is nothing but a desire, a sincere desire to do good to these disqualified persons. Honourable Members will see that the rules of the law which excludes these disqualified persons from inheritance or a share in the joint family property preserves the property intact for their issue or their successors and grants maintenance to them, their widows and their unmarried daughters. It is not that their share of the property is swallowed by their coparceners to the detriment of these disqualified persons and their heirs. It is not that their widows and daughters are not entitled to maintenance. All these rights are preserved intact. Only the disqualified persons are not allowed to manage their property. Thus, Sir, you see that this rule of law preserves the property intact for the benefit of his heirs or successors. It only guards against scheming people taking advantage of the helpless condition of these disqualified persons and making them lose their property. By the doing away of the present restriction and conferring absolute powers on these disqualified persons the near relations such as coparceners and others who would ordinarily have taken care of them, would naturally neglect them and become indifferent. And that will be the ultimate result of this Bill if it should be passed into law. Now I ask you, Sir, can anybody say, a rule of law which grants maintenance to these disqualified persons, their wives and daughters and which preserves the property intact for their heirs and successors—can anybody say that this is not good, that this is based on superstition and that this law should therefore not be allowed to exist in the times that we live in? It is this rule of law, Sir, that is now attempted to be changed by this measure now before the House.

The theory propounded in the 43 Madras case which seems to have influenced to a large extent the opinions of the Government of Madras and that of the Central Provinces and also that of most of the Judges of the Madras High Court—and I may here be permitted to point out that these are almost the only opinions in favour of this Bill whereas the whole body of the rest of the opinion is against this measure,—the theory propounded in the 43 Madras case by that social reformer Judge—Justice Sadasiva Aiyar that "the rule of Hindu Law preventing a person born blind from claiming an interest along with his brothers as a co-owner in ancestral property has become obsolete"—this theory the correctness of which was doubted in the later case in 44 Mad. 704 has been entirely disagreed by a still more recent Full Bench case of the same High Court reported in 45 Mad. 949. The only reason assigned by Justice Sadasiva Aiyar in support of his conclusion that the rule of law has become obsolete, namely, that a rule becomes obsolete when the reason of the rule disappears through change of circumstances and environments in the society which was governed by that rule has been criticised and stated to be not correct. His Lordship the Chief Justice Sir Walter Salis Schwabe in page 962 of 45, Madras says, "A Law does not cease to be operative because it is out of keeping with the times. A Law does not become obsolete because it is an anachronism, or because it is antiquated, or because the reason why it became originally the law would be no reason for its introduction of such a law at the present time. To hold the contrary would be an entire misunderstanding of the meaning of the legal maxim cessat ratio cessat lex which is relied upon in support of the contrary opinion."

I am sure that if the Madras Government and the Government of the Central Provinces had had the latest Full Bench case in 45 Madras, they would surely have modified their opinion.

Another objection I respectfully urge is this that such a measure should not be brought in the Central Legislature of the country. As observed by the Honorary Secretary of the Calcutta Vakils' Association in his letter to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal on the 20th December 1921, in connection with this Bill and the Hindu Inheritance Bill which is also on the agenda of to-day "the principle underlying both these Bills, aiming as it does, at an alteration of the Hindu Law by a process of direct legislation with the aid of a majority of votes in the Assembly, composed as it is of persons belonging to communities other than Hindus or whose sympathies with Shastric injunctions are sometimes of an attenuated character is likely to prove distasteful to the vast majority of orthodox Hindus, and this House will fail to appeal to it as an appropriate machinery for effecting such a change. A far more satisfactory course would have been the one suggested by the Government of Bombay in their letter of the 24th July 1922, namely, such measures which affect the intimate personal and sectional interests of particular communities can be more fairly and effectually debated in the provincial councils, which are more closely in contact with the phases of public opinion which are most entitled to be consulted; and the communities concerned are more fully and perhaps more effectually represented in them.

Sir, the Honourable the Mover has said in the Statement of Objects and Reasons of the Bill that public opinion had expressed itself strongly against the disability which the present scale of the Hindu Law imposes on them. I do not know when and how public opinion expressed itself so strongly. If Honourable Members will only go through the papers circulated in connection with this Bill, they will see that the contrary is the case.

The original Bill which was introduced wanted that no person should be excluded from inheritance or from a share in joint family property by reason only of any disease, deformity, physical or mental defect; and the Bill which has emerged from the Select Committee states that persons other than one who is and has been from birth a lunatic or idiot shall inherit and have a share in joint family property, i.e., persons who are from birth blind, deaf or dumb shall inherit and get a share in the property. The rule of Hindu Law as contained in Manu, does not make any distinction between persons born blind, deaf or dumb and a lunatic or idiot. If persons born blind, deaf or dumb are entitled to any consideration in the present day, the lunatic and the idiot also are entitled to the same consideration. I am not able to understand why the Select Committee gave this unequal treatment to these disqualified persons. The exclusion and the inclusion of the class of persons seems to be arbitrary and not guided by any principles.

In a matter of this sort which as I stated aims at the alteration of the existing laws, unless there is a demand by the whole community of Hindus, it is not safe for us to undertake legislation in this manner. This piece of legislation may, I am afraid, offend the religious susceptibilities of the vast majority of the community. Whatever may be said about sentiments in other matters, I submit that sentiment in a matter like this ought to be respected and no innovations should ever be attempted to be made which are not in accordance with sentiments.

I make bold to think that even the very few who were in favour of the original Bill may not like this mutilated Bill.

The case in 43 Madras has been overruled by the Full Bench in 45 Madras. Bengal which was excluded by the original Bill has been included by the Select Committee. So far as Madras is concerned, I do not see any opinion collected from the mofassal. I presume it is the same thing with regard to most of the other provinces.

In matters of this kind, it is better that the opinions of expert Sanskrit scholars and Pandits are also obtained. For as was said by the editor of the Madras Law Journal:

"One thing that the educated man is clearly to realise, if he wants to really effect any reform, is that his influence in matters religious is slender and in fact bears little relation to his position and influence in matters secular. If he imagines that he will be able by his secular influence to effect religious opinions in the country, he is suffering from a totally wrong perspective and his attempts at reform have little probability of success. Even in matters in which the religious susceptibilities have little reason to come in, it is well that the suspicion of the ordinary man is not roused, and with that view, we would have the committee investigating the matter composed not only of advanced reformers but also of men about whose orthodoxy, there is no question."

With these words, Sir, I oppose the consideration of the Bill.

Mr. President: I intended to call the Honourable Member to move his amendment to clause 2, but . . .

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: I do not know, Sir, that you have yet put the motion for consideration.

Mr. President: As a matter of fact it escaped my mind and I was consulting the Secretary at the moment whether I had done so. The House is now on the motion for consideration.

Rai Sahib Lakshmi Narayan Lal (Bihar and Orissa: Nominated Non-Official): Sir, I am very sorry that I have to oppose our respected Leader, the Honourable Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar, but I do so, I think, in pursuance of the noble lessons imparted by him, always to have the courage of one's conviction. The Honourable Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar is a scholar of Hindu law and was an eminent Judge. I appeal to him to decide his own case on the collected record of the opinions from all the provinces. I am confident that, if he will carefully examine the collected opinions, he will have to decide his own case against himself. Opinions have been invited from thirteen provinces. The opinions of five of them are almost equally divided; three of them are in favour of the Bill and five of them against it. So, on the whole, the opinion of the country is against this Bill; and even those who are in favour of this Bill are only in favour of the principle of the Bill but not in favour of the Bill as it has been laid before this House. Sir, conservatism is not always bad; the wisdom of conservatism is being gradually realized by science. I may be pardoned for giving one example. The Hindus are said to be conservative in enunciating the rule that if the finger comes in contact with the tongue it becomes untouchable so long as it is not washed. The principle enunciated therein has been, now, recognized by science. I find in all railway trains, as well as in big buildings, a notice hung up saying, "Please do not spit on the floor." What is that? It is just the same principle; if your finger comes in contact with your tongue you are likely to touch other articles which may come in contact with other persons. So we should not dislike everything which is old. We should carefully examine it; not so hurriedly as is being done in the case of the Hindu Law which should be considered, in a proper body constituted for the purpose. Piecemeal legislation in a matter like Hindu Law is never advisable, many eminent persons hold that the whole of Hindu Law should be considered together by Commissioners appointed for the purpose if any legislation is at all required to be undertaken. With these few remarks, Sir, I oppose this Bill.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: Sir, I beg to oppose this motion. It is a very serious measure which my Honourable friend has tabled. It requires considerable thought on the part of the Legislature, and I do not think my Honourable friend is doing justice to his community or to the ancient Hindu Law by trying to press this motion at the far end of a Session like this when the House is thin and perhaps much tired and worried. Sir, that on such occasion like this my Honourable friend should press his motion for consideration of such an important measure, to which he says he has devoted his life, passes my comprehension. Sir, I would have expected from the Leader of a Party, as my Honourable friend is, to agree to the wishes of people who are vitally interested in a matter like this, not to snatch a victory by the votes of Muhammadans and Europeans, but to get the approval of the Hindu Members of this House to his measure. Sir, I ask the House to glance at the last Division List; can it be said that my Honourable friend is getting the support of the Hindu Members of this House for his measure, for whose benefit he is enacting a measure which is making an inroad into the law of inheritance. Sir, let us secure a victory after a fair fight. Sir, I ask the House, I ask my Honourable friends, both European and Muhammadan, not to lend the weight of their support to a measure like this when they find that the whole of the Hindu Members are opposed to it. It is not fair to the Hindu community. It is not right on our part to come and make the piecemeal inroad into our legislation. Sir, on the Select Committee, I did try my best to make such improvements as may be made, and I am not one of those who are wholly opposed to the measure. I am quite willing to say that some portion of the law of exclusion should be set right. But, Sir, here is a matter which requires our consideration. The Select Committee, as Honourable Members will see from my minute, met haphazardly. Most of the Hindu Members were absent, and, Sir, to say that this is a measure which ought to be forced on the consideration of the House at this juncture seems to me a travesty of justice and fair play. Sir, I ask the House to oppose this motion. He has educated public opinion on this matter. I am sure my Honourable friend will come back to this House in July and he should have this measure fully considered then. I am sure my Honourable friend will not lose anything. I ask him to accede to the wishes of the Hindu Members. If he does not, I ask the House to oppose the motion.

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary: Sir, I feel bound to oppose the motion for taking this Bill into consideration, and in doing so, I am obliged at this stage to make a statement which I was very unwilling to make earlier as the Bill was likely to be deferred. The amount of rush that has attended the consideration of this measure is to me unintelligible. Mr. Rangachariar has brought out one or two facts in connection with the Select Committee proceedings in his minute of dissent, I am bound now to add to them. The Select Committee meetings were called several times, and the meetings were not held at the time and place advertised and were held at time and places of which I had no due notice. As a Member of the Select Committee I had no opportunities of attending any of the meetings of the Select Committee—not my fault. Then, Sir, whoever was responsible for it did not think it necessary even to send the draft Report of the Select Committee to one of the Members to see whether he would sign it or annex a note of dissent to it. That is the position, and that is the explanation why my name does not appear on that Report. I do not want to apportion the blame to anyone,—it might be the office or it might be anybody else, but what was right was not done. My friend says he had nothing to do with the matter; I do not suggest he had. Anyway as the mover of the Bill, he might have seen that this was attended to.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: May I offer a personal explanation, Sir. I think Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary told me that his name did not appear in the Report. I asked the Joint Secretary at once why his name did not appear and why the report was not circulated to him. I want him to bear that fact in mind; I wanted to be as fair as possible.

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary: And even then it did not come to me.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: I was not responsible.

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary: I do not say he is. I am stating this to the Assembly that it is voting away the rights of Hindus, rights or wrongs whatever they may be, by what Mr. Rangachariar has stated to be the votes of Europeans, Muhammadans and non-Hindus in general. I do not deny the right of this Assembly to legislate with regard to all communities after due consideration, but this Bill has not received anything like due consideration, and it will be wrong and absolutely wrong to pass it without that consideration being vouchsafed to it.

Mr. J. N. Mukherjee: Sir, I should like to supplement what has fallen from my Honourable friend by referring to one or two points in connection with this Bill, and in connection with the fact that in a measure of this importance it has not received the consideration that it ought to have received at the hands of the Select Committee. Sir, the mischief which is invariably present when private parties wish to put forth their individual ideas and try to reach victory by means which satisfy their own desires is present in a far larger degree in a case of this kind than in the case of ordinary private Bills which are registered as such in the House of Commons; and I crave the indulgence of the House to refer to one or two passages in May's Parliamentary Practice (edition of 1920):

"In passing public Bills Parliament acts strictly in its Legislative capacity. It reiterates the measures which appear for the public good, it conducts inquiries when necessary for its own information, and enacts laws according to its own wisdom and judgment. The houses in which its deliberations are conducted are established for public convenience, and all its proceedings are independent of individual parties who may petition indeed and are sometimes heard by counsel who have no direct participation in the conduct of the business or immediate influence upon the judgment of Parliament."

Now, Sir, we are in the very beginning of Parliamentary life. We are still unfamiliar, not only we but the officials are still unfamiliar, with the detailed rules of Parliamentary procedure. Indeed, we have not yet the right of petition, and I think, that right of petition is still in the cauldron, and people have not yet come to know that there is a right of petition by which objection can be taken, whereas in Parliament it has a long history,—it dates back to a time before all this. The difference which exists in the Mother of Parliaments as regards private and public Bills has been obliterated in our Legislature. Rules and standing orders have been framed, but we find that the whole procedure is now, if I may say so, boiling in a cauldron. Therefore, Sir, it requires great care with reference to private Bills which in reality are public Bills affecting the country at large; and in a measure of this kind . . .

Mr. President: The Honourable Member is confusing two questions in using the words "private" and "public". He calls the Honourable Member's Bill "private" because it is non-official—using "private" in the technical English Parliamentary sense. In that, he is mistaken. This is, in every sense, a "public" Bill.

Mr. J. N. Mukherjee: That is what I am submitting to the House. The whole difference will at once strike the House, if the House takes into consideration the fact that when the originating source is the Government the treatment is different . . .

Mr. President: The Honourable Member is wrong: for the distinction between "public" and "private" does not arise in that case, as Private Bill Legislation in England is solely concerned with specific matters of limited application and local concern, such as the municipal boundaries and the like in contradistinction to matters—as our phrase runs—of "General Public Interest." The Honourable Member is mistaken in thinking that the distinction between Private Bills and Public Bills in England is the same as the distinction between Official Bills and Non-Official Bills in India. The two distinctions are quite different.

Mr. J. N. Mukherjee: Of course the classification is entirely different, and that classification unfortunately does not exist here. In England, I find in May's Parliamentary Practice that if a Bill of that character affecting classes or a locality is brought before Parliament, there is a special department which scrutinises it; counsel are heard on both sides and evidence is taken and so forth. The question of private Bills here, without using the word "private," I may submit to the House, is purely of a public character, and as such, it ought to have originated from the central authority in England. There it should have found ample consideration. The Legislative Department, I think, and the different Law Members from time to time have been considering this question of codification and how to tackle different points of Hindu Law; and if there has been any delay, the delay is due to the fact that the Government wishes to consider all aspects of the question, to ascertain public opinion and if there is a residue upon which the Government can start legislation; that is not so in the case of a private individual. A private individual conceives an idea. He thinks the idea is very good. He has the chance of handing down his name to posterity as a legislator. All these considerations actuate him, but not the Government. Therefore, I submit, Sir, the initial difficulty that meets us in the case is this: that we are landed in a decision at the fag end of the Session when we are about to rise, and a Bill of this important character is attempted to be rushed through; and the impatience is so great because it may slip through one's fingers and, therefore, whether it is good, bad or indifferent, this Bill must be passed. Then, Sir, if objection is taken as regards a Bill of this character, as the Honourable the President will support me, a Bill is removed from one class to another and made a public Bill and then evidence is taken. Where was evidence taken in this matter? You have not the slightest means of coming to know what public opinion is on the point. We are asked to legislate in the dark. But one thing I do know, that a question of great importance is going to be decided for the first time in this House and in spite of anything to the contrary, we are engaged in a House like this composed of religious bodies, in making a law that will over-ride Hindu Law, without the Hindu community as a whole being consulted in the way one would like to be consulted, not privately, not for the satisfaction of one's private desires, but from an exactly opposite point of view.

Now, Sir, let us consider the grave questions of importance that are involved in the Bill itself. There is not the slightest doubt that very little attention was paid to this Bill when it was first launched in this House, because we find that even insane persons are included as persons in respect of whom the Law of exclusion should not operate. The slightest thought would have disclosed the fact to any member taking an interest in the question that to vest an insane person, with property and right over property is something which is very difficult to understand. The rule as to him can be excluded from operation simply by supposing that it is the superstitious Hindu who enacted this and it is not in consonance with modern ideas. Let us see, Sir, whether it is consonant with modern ideas. That it is not so will appear from the fact that at least so far as the case of insane persons is concerned, it has been placed outside the law which is in vogue, namely, that if a person is insane from birth, in respect of him the Bill should cease to have operation. But those people who are insane at the time of succession come within the operation of the Bill. Now, Sir, the Honourable the Mover of this Bill is himself a Judge and well versed in Hindu Law. He knows that it is a very controversial matter,—a controversy which arose not in respect of anything said in the Hindu Law itself, but by interpretation; and that is the way the Hindu Law has been altered or interpreted so far. To ignore authority to set at naught all authority, is a procedure, I submit, which has been for the first time placed before this House. Then, Sir, let us take the case of the leper. According to Hindu Law and according to the interpretation of the Hindu Law, lepers of a very virulent type have been excluded, that is to say, persons in respect of whom people would feel a sort of repugnance to associate with and association with whom is forbidden. Now, let us take his case. He is a person in respect of whom propagation of the species is not desirable. To make him in the first place the owner of property is to draw people into marriage, into union with him, and thereby transmit the disease. Apart from that the leper may have his intellect warped and in an unnatural condition owing to the disease itself. In such cases it is dangerous to invest him with rights over property to the detriment of the man who follows him. So is the case with deaf and dumb. Only in respect of eunuchs and persons devoid of limbs, can it be asked when they have got the mentality to enjoy why we should refuse them. I submit, Sir, that is also a point which has to be considered by the Hindu community itself. Then, Sir, if we consider such a case, a man has got his mind in order, his brains in good order and he is capable of acting in a rational manner. We can sympathise with the man if he is deprived of property, but not in the case of a man who is devoid of his senses. Therefore, in the case of a mad man, how can we say that we have deprived him of a right and that we have put him to trouble. Sir, these are questions which are of very great moment and according to the modern socialistic points of view the individual must yield to the social well-being. We all follow these principles more or less. Some people lay more emphasis on one aspect of the matter; others lay more emphasis on other aspects. But we all have to acknowledge that there is a higher consideration in these things. Simply to assert that because a man is a human being, though he has no mind, though he is born blind, and deaf and mute, and in that way has no conception of the world itself, that such a man should be vested with dominion over property is a matter which may seem to be not absolutely clear to many minds. Therefore, apart from the various questions of Hindu Law which might arise there is the danger to which I have referred, that is to say shaking the fountain head, that is the source of all authority in the Hindu law. If we once allow that and allow that the passing fancy of any individual Member of this House is sufficient for legislation to be set in motion, if the satisfaction of being able to contemplate one's offspring, as it were, be enough for the purposes of the legislator, then I submit, all stability is jeopardised so far as legislation is concerned. We are, as I submit to this House, on the brink of a precipice. We know in whose hands we are placed, and by party cliques and various other ways, we may carry certain ideas of ours through the Assembly and consider ourselves sufficiently required by our success. That I submit, Sir, ought not to be the attitude of this House with reference to questions of this kind. The Removal of Caste Disabilities Act has been very often paraded in this House, but once this is done there will be no end to its being done ad infinitum. I submit even there

[Mr. J. N. Mukherjee.]

Government proceeded with great caution. Of course even from before the commencement of the British administration they were very careful not to interfere with the social laws and rules of the people. Even before Warren Hastings became Governor General and took an active part in the administration that was the principle that was observed, and now we openly come forward and say, "in spite of anything to the contrary in the Hindu Law, we want this according to our own personal liking." The very Mover who thought that insane persons should never be deprived of their rights, came to the opinion that insane persons, if born insane, may be kept out of the rule. Sir, it is well within the experience of the President that in the House of Lords, and by the Chairman of Ways and Means in the House of Commons a strict check is kept when Bills introduced by private individuals are concerned. They are looked upon with jealousy. There is examination, counsel is heard, and very often when objections are made, the objections are allowed and the Bill is sometimes moved from one class and placed in another class and the initiation of the matter is left in the hands of Government which is a disinterested party. There is then no private end in view but only the public view. Articles written and considered in the Madras Presidency itself go to show the dangers which lie in piecemeal legislation. The Hindu Law of Inheritance, for instance, must be taken up in its totality. It is not that I bring in a certain person from one place and put him in another place; it means a consequential denial in the whole line of succession. It has to be repeated times without number. So in the present instance in the consideration of this Bill upon the materials which are now before the House and the consideration which the Select Committee has given to it, or has not been able to give to it, these are weighty considerations against the Bill. Sir, I oppose the consideration of this Bill.

Khan Bahadur Sarfaraz Hussain Khan (Tirhut Division: Muhammadan): Sir, the Honourable Mr. Rangachariar seems to have taken some objection to the participation of non-Hindu Members. I am sorry. Does he mean to say that, even if a cause be just, a non-Hindu should not take up the cause? Does he suggest that? (Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: "Yes.") Did he himself not take part in the Waqf Bill? It is simply because this is his case, that he takes objection. I hope he will excuse me for saying so. Now, why Muhammadans and other non-Hindus supported the Honourable Mover of the Bill was simply because they felt and I say that it was a just cause. I therefore, appeal to all my Hindu friends asking them to advance with the times. They should do away with meaningless customs and advance with the times. Swaraj is coming sooner or later; it is only a question of time. It has come from the mouth of the Sovereign of Great Britain and it is bound to come. If you remain behind at present there will be a hard struggle afterwards. Hitherto we have been simply as minors in the Court of Wards. The time will come when we will have to take care of ourselves, and we must not therefore lag behind, but take time by the forelock; and as a friend, and as an Indian, I say go forward. No doubt I do not know Hindu law, but I understand sufficiently what it means. It says:

"Notwithstanding any rule of Hindu Law or custom to the contrary, no person governed by the Hindu Law, other than a person who is and has been from birth a lunatic or idiot, shall be excluded from inheritance or from any right or share in joint family property by reason only of any disease, deformity, or physical or mental defect."

Do you mean to say that simply because a man is lame you would exclude him from inheritance? (Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: "That is the law they want.") I give credit to the Honourable Mover of the Bill for his earnest desire to remove hindrances to development and I give the Bill my whole-hearted support—paying the Honourable Mover my tribute of respect for his courage and patriotism.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: Sir, may I say a word? So many things have been said about my desire to snatch a personal victory that I do not think I should take up the time of the House by replying to them. I believe I am known fairly well to Members of this House, both Europeans, Muhammadans and Hindus, and I believe they know that I am not in the habit of snatching victories, or of placing undue importance upon personal considerations. Therefore, Sir, I shall say nothing upon that part of the subject. A red herring was sought to be drawn by appealing to Europeans and Mussalmans not to vote for this measure. Now, Sir, I wish to say a word about this. I have been myself a judge and as a judge I have decided cases between Muhammadans and Muhammadans and between Europeans and Europeans, and to-day in the Privy Council a Muhammadan Judge decides questions of Hindu Law, and you will find throughout the length and breadth of this country Europeans engaged in deciding cases between Hindus and Muhammadans and between Europeans and Hindus and so on. Can there be a disqualification simply because a man happens to be a Mussalman or European; would he not give his unbiassed opinion as a juror after hearing the arguments on both sides and decide whether I am in the right or whether the Members who oppose me are in the right? That is the question which I wish to put before the House; and as was pointed out by Mr. Sarfaraz Hussain, when we had to deal with a Bill affecting a Muhammadan question we Hindus took part in the debate Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: We did not go against the Muhammadan view in that matter.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: What is the Muhammadan view and what is the Hindu view is a matter very difficult for me to understand. Sir, under these circumstances I hope my European friends—I shall not call them friends because it might be misunderstood—the European Members of this Assembly will not be led away by the fact that A brought in the Bill and B opposed it; I ask them to give their impartial judgment, not because I have moved, or because somebody has opposed it; I ask them to consider deeply the whole matter and the reasons given, and say whether my object in bringing forward this measure is a humane one or not, and then to give their votes.

Sir, it has been said that the Hindu law is of divine origin and therefore it is sacrilegious for any man to legislate. I do not think I sufficiently clearly placed one aspect of this question, before the House. Upon this very same text there are catalogued about half a dozen disqualifications. As regards the foremost of them, that is to say, conversion from caste, the Government, 70 years ago, brought forward a Bill; it enacted that mere conversion from one religion to another, from Hinduism to Muhammadanism or Hinduism to Christianity, shall not be a bar for inheritance. Therefore 70 years ago, by Act XXI of 1850, the Government of the day thought that this portion of the law was inhuman and one which ought not to be acceded to; and they brought in a Bill and that is the law to this day. Then, Sir, there is a Bill regarding the re-marriage of Hindu widows; that has been law all these years. Does anybody seriously say that this is in accordance with Hindu law? It was made law; and that law was passed because . . .

Mr. J. N. Mukherjee: May I say that there is a text of Hindu law supporting such marriages—Parasara Samhita?

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: I think my Honourable friend in his anxiety to support his view is forgetting the whole trend of Hindu law. If he had read the pamphlets upon that subject, if he had read the various writers, he will find that, though Parasara might support that view, a large number of other writers, among whom for example there is Manu whom he is so anxious to support, have declared that re-marriage should not be allowed, and still a law was passed by the Legislature; that is the law to-day; under those circumstances can it be honestly said, can it be seriously said that it is not open to bring forward measures of this kind in this Legislature? Can it be honestly said that Europeans and Muhammadans are not entitled to take part in the discussion? I hope my Honourable friends will not be led away by anything that has been said upon this matter. If I may say so, these Members are the better judges in the matter; we are biassed one way or the other; they are not; they can be expected to be impartial and after hearing the various views to give their considered judgment upon a matter of this description, they will not be in the least affected by considerations which affect us, personal considerations, party considerations and what are called orthodox considerations; but the others would on the merits of the question come to a conclusion, and I ask them to give their verdict not upon the fact that A or B proposes it or C or D opposes it, but upon the fact whether it is a good law, whether it is desirable that it should be discussed and carried through. Sir, there was one question put by Mr. Mukundaraja Ayyangar, to which I must refer. He said that this is a matter which ought to be considered in the local Council. Sir, nobody would have been happier if it were possible to have this matter disposed of in the local Council. If the Honourable the Home Member will remember, when Malabar Act came before this House, even at the risk of being considered irrelevant, I suggested that that portion of the India Council's Act should be removed which makes it impossible for questions of this nature being considered in the local Councils; and I said that he would be conferring a great boon if he acceded to my request. My object was this. I would have then ceased to inflict myself upon this House, I would have taken my work to a place where my character and antecedents are known, and where the insinuations which have been made in this Assembly would not have been made; seriously I would have been most happy if the Honourable the Home Member had acceded to my request to have that portion of the India Council's Act removed. He has not done it yet. Unfortunately what is the position now, Sir? Some years ago when there was a decision of the Privy Council relating to Hindu law, I had the temerity when I first became a Member of the Madras Legislative Council to introduce a Bill which would do away with the interpretation placed upon it by the Judicial Committee; that related to the gift to unborn persons, and I carried the measure through although there was some opposition. Nobody in Madras ever said anything against my character, either that I was anxious to snatch a victory or to do anything which would show that I was doing the thing only for the purpose of personal popularity. That Act was passed there. Well, what happened after that? It was held that that Act had no application whatsoever to the presidency town because of the existence of a section in the India Council's Act. As soon as I came to Delhi, the very first thing that I had to do was to try and make that Act extend to the presidency town. That is the position. It is impossible to pass an Act of this nature in Madras because it cannot apply to the presidency towns. If this is removed, there will be no difficulty. I do not like to take the time of the House any further; I was getting a little excited in consequence of certain reflections made against me personally. I do not want to make the same kind of reflections on those who have spoken in this matter. I daresay they are actuated by the best of motives and as pillars of orthodoxy they are anxious that nothing should be done which would in the least affect orthodox principles, but they must remember these were challenged times without number in the local Councils. It has been done in various local Legislatures, and I myself was instrumental in having it challenged in Madras. Under these circumstances, I would ask my European and Muhammadan friends to give their verdict upon the merits of the case and not to be influenced by anything that has been said just now.

Mr. President: The question is that the Bill be taken into consideration.

The motion was adopted.

Mr. President: Clause 2.

Mr. M. G. M. Ayyangar: Sir, in the amendment standing against my name on the paper, there seems to be some mistake and therefore instead of the amendment as it is on the paper, if I have your permission, Sir, I would move the amendment, namely:

"That instead of the word 'and' between the words 'who is' and the words 'has been' in clause 2 of the Bill, the words 'at the time the succession opens or partition is effected or' be substituted."

Clause 2 of the Bill after the amendment I desire to make would read thus:

"Notwithstanding any rule of Hindu Law or custom to the contrary, no person governed by the Hindu law other than a person who is at the time when the succession opens or partition is effected or has been from birth a lunatic, etc."

Sir, the object of this amendment is to place the disqualified heirs whether the disqualification is congenital or one supervening on the same footing; I do not see why a person whose disqualification is congenital alone should be excluded but one who is disqualified subsequently and continues to be disqualified when the succession opens or partition is effected should not be excluded. If there is reason, sentimental or otherwise, for the exclusion in the one case, I submit there is reason for the exclusion in the other case also.

The existing law, so far as insanity is concerned is clear that it need not be congenital to exclude a person. I would refer only to the recent case of the Madras High Court in 43, Madras 464 wherein our Honourable friend, Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar, when he was a Judge, says after stating that Courts here and the Judicial Committee have regarded the injunction of law relating to exclusion as a living principle. If the exclusion is not based on original sin or subsequent incapacity to offer oblations and the like, the suggestion that it was due to a belief in the inability of the heir to manage temporal affairs appears more plausible. Very likely the rule is an outcome of a hazy notion that the property should be preserved for the disqualified person by those who are related to him" and finally he decides that insanity need not be congenital. If that be so, I ask, Sir, why should there be this change in the law? I submit, Sir, no valid reasons have been assigned for the change that is now sought to be introduced. I therefore, Sir, move my amendment.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: Sir, may I say a word? The principles of Hindu law in this point are this. There are two principles—one is incapacity to manage, and the other is that, if a man has some defects, it must be taken that he must have committed some serious sin in a previous birth and that is why he is born like that. If the House will read the text of Manu, the idea running through that text will be found to be that there has been some sin in a previous birth and as a result of that sin he has been born in a particular manner. Sir, if my learned friend's arguments are taken seriously, what would be the position? Suppose a man commits a sin late in life, which makes it impossible for him to perform certain religious ceremonies, can it seriously be contended that he must be divested of his property? It is really, Sir, for the purpose of showing that congenital defects show that their possessor has not been good or honest in his previous birth, that this disqualification text finds a place in the Smriti, I do not think any civilised person in these days would consider that such a disqualification should be allowed to exist. Supposing a man drinks or commits other sins, can you say that this man is so sinful that he should not have the property? I think the Hindu law has for some reason or other imposed disqualification only in cases where there was congenital defect. And I do not think my Honourable friend is right in saying that that safeguard should be ignored. I think it would be inconsistent with the tenor of the Bill if we were to insert the words which he wants to insert.

The motion was negatived.

Lala Girdharilal Agarwala (Agra Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I move the amendment which stands in my name:

"At the end of clause 2 add the following:

'Provided that during the continuance of any such disqualification, such person shall neither claim partition of joint family property nor transfer any property except for legal necessity.'

I am the last person who would consent to any alteration in the Hindu law, and like my Honourable Mussalman friends who would never like or recommend any alteration in their Holy Koran. At this moment I might be allowed to make one observation with regard to the remarks which fell from the mouth of my Honourable friend, Khan Bahadur Sarfaraz Hussain Khan, and also the Mover of this Bill to the effect that persons who belong to other castes, namely, Muhammadans and Christians, have a right to legislate for the Hindus. Now, I will say—they will excuse me for saying so—that we Hindus regard the practice of circumcision as barbarous. But would the Muhammadans like us to legislate on that point? Certainly not. I submit that there should be a convention in this Honourable House and elsewhere that, when a measure affects any particular caste or community, that caste or community only should decide and not others. Otherwise, what I have said just now would be the result and would create unpleasantness, both inside and outside, and I say with all the emphasis at my command that a similar unpleasantness has already been created by my Honourable friends, Christians and Mussalmans, voting and supporting Dr. Gour's Bill. I do not want that to be repeated.

Khan Bahadur Sayid Muhammad Ismail (Patna and Chota Nagpur cum Orissa: Muhammadan): May I rise to a point of personal explanation, Sir? I think the Honourable Member has entirely misunderstood the attitude of some of the Muhammadan Members when we voted for Dr. Gour's Civil Marriage Bill. We did not vote because the Muhammadans were excluded from the scope of that Bill, but considering it a piece of permissive legislation, I further submit that even if the Muhammadans had been included in the scope of the Bill we would have probably adopted almost the same attitude.

Lala Girdharilal Agarwala: One of the Honourable Members has declared his own intention. I do not know how far it is assented to. However, I leave this question aside. What I submit is this, that this is our own affair. It is the affair of the Hindus and I appeal to my Honourable friends although they have got the legal right to give votes on all measures which come before this House, yet, as a matter of convention, as a matter of principle, to refrain in future from supporting any measure which might be considered by the orthodox Hindus as subversive of Hindu law in the same way in which they would themselves not like the Hindus to legislate for them on any matters which might be subversive of their own laws. With these few words, Sir, I want to move my amendment which has already been read out. One word more, Sir. Under the Hindu law, as strictly interpreted, persons who are suffering from a disqualification are entitled to maintenance. Now, it has been represented to me by some Honourable Members that we should be more pitiful and more merciful towards the disqualified persons, and it is only as a matter of concession that I have agreed to the Bill as it has come out of the Select Committee, on the condition that a provision like this is added so that the disqualified persons may have the entire profits of the property throughout his life but may not have any right to claim partition of any joint family property.

Mr. President: Amendment moved:

"That at the end of clause 2 add the following:

'Provided that during the continuance of any such disqualification, such person shall neither claim partition of joint family property nor transfer any property except for legal necessity.'

Mr. P. E. Percival (Bombay: Nominated, Official): Sir, I rise to discuss the amendment from the point of view of drafting. I do not understand how this clause is to be read with the previous one. Clause 2 runs:

"Notwithstanding any rule of Hindu Law" and so forth, "no person" except lunatics and so forth, "shall be excluded." Then my Honourable friend adds "Provided that during the continuance of such disqualification." I do not see how disqualification comes in in connection with the previous sentence. And then my friend goes on to say: "Such person shall neither claim partition, etc." It is not clear who "such person" is, and in particular, I do not see how "such disqualification" can come in and how it can be read with the previous clause 2.

Mr. President: The question is that that amendment be made.

The motion was negatived.

Clauses 2 and 3 were added to the Bill.

Mr. J. Chaudhuri (Chittagong and Rajshahi Divisions: Non-Muhammadan Rural): I gave notice of a similar amendment to those of my friends Mr. Raju and Mr. Neogy, but on reconsideration I have amended the same for greater precision, and my amendment will read thus. Clause 1 (2) reads thus:

"It extends to the whole of British India, including British Baluchistan and the Sonthal Parganas."

To that I move a further sub-clause (3) be added:

"(3) It shall not apply to any person governed by the Dayabhaga school of Hindu Law."

Now, this makes the object I have in view quite clear and precise. My reason for moving this amendment is that the law of coparcenery does not apply to those who are governed by the Dayabhaga school of Hindu Law and they can dispose of their property any way they like.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: I accept the amendment.

The amendment was adopted.

Clause 1, as amended, was added to the Bill.

The Title and the Preamble to the Bill were added.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: I move that the Bill, as amended, be passed.

Maulvi Abul Kasem (Dacca Division: Muhammadan Rural): I have no business in rising to stand and speak on this motion, but I rise simply to express my regret that if we have offended in any way by our voting on the matter of circulation, I have only this to say that the question on which we did vote was that the Bill be recirculated for public opinion, and we did it not on the ground that it affected the rights of anybody or anything of the kind. If the question had been about any particular section of this Bill being passed or not, we should have refrained from voting, but the question was whether to put the whole machinery of the Legislative Assembly into action for re-circulating the Bill, and if we have offended any section of the Assembly here, we are sorry for it and we leave it to the Hindu Members of the Assembly to decide whether this Bill should be passed or not.

The motion that the Bill, as amended, be passed was adopted.

THE CODE OF CRIMINAL PROCEDURE (AMENDMENT) BILL.

(AMENDMENT OF SECTION 4.)

Maulvi Abul Kasem (Dacca Division: Muhammadan Rural): I move:

"That the Report of the Select Committee on the Bill further to amend the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898 (amendment of section 4), be taken into consideration."

The motion was adopted.

Clauses 1, 2, the Title and the Preamble to the Bill were added.

Maulvi Abul Kasem: I now move that the Bill, as amended, be passed.

The motion was adopted.

THE HINDU LAW OF INHERITANCE (AMENDMENT) BILL.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar (Madras: Nominated Non-Official): I hope this Bill will have an easier passage in this House, than the previous one, because I find my friend Mr. Rangachariar who is very orthodox is in favour of this motion. Very orthodox people have been from the earliest days of opinion that to make the son's daughters, daughter's daughters and the man's own sister to come after seven degrees of agnate relationship is an anachronism that ought not to be tolerated any further. I move therefore:

"That the Report of the Select Committee on the Bill to amend the Hindu Law of Inheritance in certain particulars, and to remove certain doubts, be taken into consideration."

Lala Girdharilal Agarwala (Agta Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): I oppose this motion. My submission is that this is a matter which will have very far-reaching consequences and at the far end of the session, when the House is very thin and when a large number of Honourable Members have left the station and some of them are packing their luggage and phoning to the Station Master to reserve their berths I submit that it would not be proper for us in the absence of our other Honourable colleagues to consider this motion and pass it. On these grounds I would very earnestly and respectfully appeal to my Honourable friend and colleague not to press this Bill for consideration this afternoon.

Mr. President: The question is that the Report of the Select Committee be taken into consideration.

Mr. J. N. Mukherjee (Calcutta Suburbs: Non-Muhammadan Urban): I cannot record a silent vote in a matter of this kind and I have a motion that the Bill be re-circulated for obtaining opinion thereon. My reasons are practically the same as I urged in connection with the other Bill of my Honourable friend, Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar, but in a matter of succession as I have already submitted to the House the whole thing ought to be considered in its totality. Honourable Members will see in the instance under consideration now the Honourable the Mover of the Bill has followed the inclination of his own mind. First of all he has gone down to the brother's grandson, that is to say, in lineal succession. His case is not based upon the ground of natural affection and as the Bill includes as it does only cases where there has been a separation and the brother is living apart, one cannot imagine how the brother's grandson should have a preferential claim to the grandson's daughter. He has stopped with son's daughter but excluded grandson's daughter. Now in a Hindu family the picture is very common of a person having the daughter of a grandson. She is brought up, she is loved and so forth, but if we are to follow the bent of our minds we exclude the grandson's daughter. Similarly other instances may be found where a brother lives in Bombay and he has no connection with his other brother. Why should his family or progeny have preference over the family of his sister, so that as Honourable Members will see, the whole question hinges upon personal likes and dislikes and the impulse of the moment. Nothing else. On the impulse of the moment we are going to alter the law of succession and under circumstances over which the Hindu public affected will have no opportunity of expressing their views. Sir, the matter stands thus. It is difficult to make a constructive proposal unless and until the whole country has been appealed to, and the opinions of men who are entitled to pronounce an opinion on the subject are in the first place obtained. Now, it is correct to say that it is impossible to obtain unanimity on a subject like this, and it is owing to this fact that the question of succession was left to the customs and usages of Hindu law. Of course I for one should think that if there is a sister living with the propositus that sister should have preference over remoter relations. But he has not followed that principle. Again, Sir, let us take the case of the father's sister. The father's sister has been completely ignored. (Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: "No.") Yes, in this Bill. At least she occupies the position which the Mitakshara law assigns to her. But the father's sister is very often the presiding person in a Hindu family; she looks after the household, and there may be considerable personal attachment between the propositus and the father's sister. So that if these questions were considered in detail it will appear that the rule of succession which has been now placed before the House depends very largely upon accident, the accident of the persons or friends who formed the Select Committee and their personal views. (Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: "That is not fair.") Honourable Members will see that there was no discussion on the original motion to refer this Bill to Select Committee. I stood up three times when this Bill was going to be referred to Select Committee, and if Honourable Members will refer to the proceedings of the Legislative Assembly they will find that there was not a single speech made on this Bill. That is how, I submit, social legislation of such far-reaching consequences is rushed through the House and made dependent purely upon accident. I deprecate that, Sir, to the fullest extent and in matters of this kind that ought not to be the case. At any rate, if there is going to be a change in the Hindu law, I think the system which has been advocated by Government is the best, namely, a Commission, where we can have represented the heads of different sects and people who are going to be affected by the Bill. First let us get a working basis on their opinions and then start the work. As I have submitted to the House, it is impossible to arrive at unanimity in a matter of this kind; but at any rate we can build something upon the resultant public opinion if I may put it that way. Now that method has been given the go-by in the present case and the House has been driven to the position that it must accept the Bill as it stands, for it is impossible for individual Members to suggest amendments because they have not consulted the country and they do not know how any proposition put forward by them will affect the country at large. At any rate it will be seen that great difficulty exists. Here we have a small class of people excluded from inheritance who are suffering from certain disease; but here the whole law of succession is affected.

Then, Sir, another submission which I should like to make to the House is that we now have the power of making wills. The Bill applies to separated property, so that the question of power to make wills will not arise. In this respect my submission to the House is that the modern world is different from the ancient world, because now if a person desires to leave his property to a particular person he can leave it to him or her by will, especially in cases of this kind where we are not concerned with joint property. Therefore, Sir, I submit it is difficult to say—unless one is to suppose that any change sought to be brought about in the law is good for the country at large. Unless that be the position that the House wishes to occupy, I submit that the procedure which the Honourable the Law Member, Dr. Sapru, as he then was, suggested to the House in connection with the question of codification was the right one, vis., that there should be a working basis like that—that would in my opinion have been a more satisfactory manner of dealing with the subject, and therefore I submit, Sir, in the Bill as it is, considering the question piecemeal and apart from the dangers of following the Hindu law, the Muhammadan law, the Christian law, a convention might be introduced which would have the most disastrous effects, and therefore I submit that this Bill is of far greater importance than the other one. It assumes that some particular thing in Hindu law must be considered as barbarous, but that is not the only point here,—there are other weighty considerations which affect a Bill of this kind, and I therefore oppose the consideration of the Bill.

Mr. President: Did the Honourable Member move his motion?

Mr. J. N. Mukherjee: I move, Sir:

"That the Bill be re-circulated for the purpose of eliciting opinion thereon."

Mr. President: Amendment moved:

"That the Bill be re-circulated for the purpose of eliciting opinion thereon."

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: Sir, if my Honourable friend, Mr. Mukherjee, had posted himself in the first principles of Hindu law, if he felt anxious to do justice rather than sling mud at persons who want to make changes in Hindu law, he would find that I am advocating in this Bill principles which have long been accepted as salutary. For example, Sir, I want to bring to the notice of the Members of this House some first principles on which Hindu law is administered. As regards bandhus, there are three classes,—what are called one's atma bandhus, that is one's own descendants, and then the pitri bandhus, that is, the father's descendants, and then the matri bandhus, that is, the mother's descendants. The rule of succession is,—first of all, one's atma bandhus should come in; secondly, the pitri bandhus, or the father's descendants, and then the matri bandhus, or the mother's descendants; and then there is a second principle, which every Hindu lawyer knows, that the class of bandhus should not go beyond three degrees. That is the answer to the first of the conundrums which my friend has just now been propounding here. The grandson's daughter is more than three degrees removed, and therefore she does not come under the heading of atma bandhus. There can only be three degrees. Now, I take the son's daughter and the daughter's daughter, because they come within the three degrees; they must be given preference before the sister because she is the father's daughter. The sister being the father's daughter, whereas the son's daughter is one's own atma bandhus, the latter goes before the former. That is the principle upon which I base my order of succession, and that is the principle which commended itself to such a great lawyer as Sir V. Bashyam Ayyangar, and such an orthodox Hindu Judge as Sir T. Muthuswami Ayyar. I wanted to say this much because I do want this House to understand that I have framed the Bill on my own whim and fancy and not based it on well-known principles.

Mr. President: The original question was:

"That the Report of the Select Committee on the Bill to amend the Hindu Law of Inheritance in certain particulars, and to remove certain doubts, be taken into consideration."

Since which an amendment has been moved:

"That the Bill be re-circulated for the purpose of eliciting opinion thereon."

The question I have to put is:

"That the Bill be re-circulated for the purpose of eliciting opinion thereon."

Mr. President: The question is:

The motion was adopted.

Mr. President: Clause 2.

Mr. M. G. M. Ayyangar (Madura and Ramnad cum Tinnevely: Non-Muhammadian Rural): Sir, I move:

"That in clause 2(c) after the word 'sister' the words 'during her lifetime' be inserted."

I have taken this amendment from the Bill which originated from the late Sir V. Bashyam Ayyangar, called "A Bill to provide for the succession of a sister and certain other relatives under the Hindu Law." In that Bill the sister's son is defined to include a son by adoption, provided such adoption was made with the consent of the sister during her life time. The safeguard that the adoption should have been made during the lifetime of the sister was provided to remove any difficulty if any dispute should arise. After the death of the sister, there may be cases in which misunderstandings arise between a man and his sister's husband. If the sister should have died without a son, it is quite possible that the sister's husband may, to spite his wife's brother and to harass him, make an adoption setting up a false consent from the deceased sister. The sister having died, it will be difficult to disprove consent. But if the adoption itself should be made during the lifetime of the sister, this difficulty will not arise. When you are making the adopted son of a sister, or rather of the sister's husband as an heir, I submit the safeguard suggested by me that the adoption should have been made during the lifetime of the sister is absolutely necessary.

Mr. President: Amendment moved:

"In clause 2(c) after the word 'sister' the words 'during her lifetime,' be inserted."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. President: The question is that clause 2, as amended, stand part of the Bill.

The motion was adopted.

Mr. President: The question is that clause 3, as amended by the Select Committee, stand part of the Bill.

The motion was adopted.

Mr. M. G. M. Ayyangar: Sir, I move that:

"To clause 4 the following new sub-clause be added:

'(c) enable more than one of several son's daughters, daughter's daughters, sister or sister's sons to succeed by inheritance to the estate of a deceased Hindu male which by a customary or other rule of succession descends to a single heir'."

This amendment also I have got entirely from Sir V. Bashyam Ayyangar's Bill. This amendment is to provide for cases in which, according to the custom in some families, and in some zemindaris, properties descend only to a single individual. There are some zemindaris which are impartible properties under the Madras Impartible Estates Act. In the case of these zemindaris and families, it is only the eldest of the heirs that succeeds. The others have no share in the property. The Bill as it is drafted does not provide for such cases, but would allow more than one of the heirs now provided by this Bill to inherit such impartible zemindaris with the result that they may be partitioned between them. This is exactly what the Impartible Estates Act provides against. It is only to remedy this defect that my amendment desires that in the case in which by a customary or other rule of succession property descends only to a single heir, no more than one of the heirs now brought by the Bill shall succeed. This amendment also I have borrowed from the late Sir V. Bashyam Ayyangar's Bill.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: May I say a word, Sir? I am not opposed to the amendment, but I think it is unnecessary to make it clearer, I would suggest that the language be different, I would make the clause read "affect any special law, and any family or local custom having the force of law." That would make it all right. In my section 4 I intended to provide for the inheritance of heirs to zemindaris. Generally as regards this class of heirs, the Privy Council have laid down that it is the family law that applies, therefore they should be excluded from the operation of the ordinary law; but if my friend wants that the provisions of the Impartible Estates Act should be saved, the proper way of doing it would be by inserting the words in clause (a)—"affect any special and/or Local law and any family or local custom having the force of law."

Mr. M. G. M. Ayyangar: My amendment would read much better than that.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: I have no objection to the principle being extended, but I believe that I have provided for it in clause (a). I believe that the words I have suggested would make it all right. But I have no objection to the amendment, Sir.

The amendment was adopted.

Clause 4, as amended, was added to the Bill.

Clause 1 was added to the Bill.

The Title and Preamble, as amended by the Select Committee, were added.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: Sir, I move that the Bill, as amended, be passed into law.

The motion was adopted.

The Assembly then adjourned for Lunch till Twenty Minutes to Three of the Clock.

The Assembly re-assembled after Lunch at Twenty Minutes to Three of the Clock. Mr. President was in the Chair.

THE CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE (AMENDMENT) BILL.

Lala Girdharilal Agarwala (Agra Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I beg to move:

"That the Bill further to amend the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, be referred to a Select Committee consisting of the Honourable the Home Member, Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar, Bhai Man Singh, Sardar Gajjan Singh, Chaudhri Shahab-ud-Din, Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar, Mr. B. Venkatapatiraju, Maulvi Abul Kasem, and myself."

Sir, my Bill is a very short one and I have spoken more than once about it in this House and I don't think I need say anything more than that it is to the effect that the privilege of appearing without a vakalatnama or power-of-attorney which is at present enjoyed by Barristers and Advocates only may be extended to Vakils.

The motion was adopted.

THE CHARITABLE AND RELIGIOUS TRUSTS (AMENDMENT) BILL.

Mr. M. G. M. Ayyangar (Madura and Ramnad cum Tinnevely: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I beg to move:

"That the Bill to amend the Charitable and Religious Trusts Act, 1920, be taken into consideration."

Honourable Members will notice that this is a very small and non-contentious measure. The object of Act XIV of 1920, the Religious and Charitable Trusts Act, was to provide for a speedy and cheap remedy by which the assistance of the Court may be had both by the trustees and by the persons interested in the trust. The trustees may seek the assistance of the Court for advice in matters connected with the trust, and the persons interested in the trust may seek the assistance of the Court for a direction to the trustee for the rendering of the account of the trust for a period of 3 years. All these may be done under the Act by means of an application to the Court and not by the institution of a suit which means in these days enormous delay and spending of money. It is to avoid this, that the Act XIV of 1920 was passed. But that Act has got one defect, namely, that in the mofussil it gives jurisdiction only to District Courts to entertain and hear applications under the Act. It was only the other day the Honourable the Home Member and the Honourable Mr. Percival told us the large volume of work Sessions, criminal appeals and other miscellaneous work that these District and Sessions Judges have got to do. They scarcely find time to take up civil work and the result is that these applications might be pending for a long time. This was exactly the thing which the original Act wanted to remedy. Honourable Members will see that my short Bill wants that jurisdiction under the Act may also be given to subordinate courts so that such applications may have a speedy disposal at a less cost.

The motion was adopted.

Clauses 1 and 2 were added to the Bill.

The Title and Preamble were added to the Bill.

Mr. M. G. M. Ayyangar: Sir, I move that the Bill be passed.

The motion was adopted.

THE ILLEGITIMATE SONS' RIGHTS BILL.

M. K. Reddi Garu (South Arcot cum Chingleput: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I move:

"That the Bill to amend the Hindu Law of Succession be referred to a Select Committee consisting of the Honourable the Home Member, Mr. A. B. Latthe, Mr. K. C. Neogy, Mr. B. Venkatapatiraju, Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar, Munshi Iswar Saran, Maulvi Abul Kasem, Mr. N. M. Samarth, and the Mover."

Sir, the Bill has been long before the public and it has been circulated for opinion. We have received about 49 opinions of which nearly 26 are in favour of the Bill, 10 are neutral, and only 13 are against it. I introduced the Bill more as a piece of social legislation, and I leave the legal point of view to the Honourable Members who are better fitted to deal with the legal aspect of the question.

The motion was adopted.

Mr. B. C. Allen (Assam: Nominated Official): May I speak on this motion, Sir?

Mr. President: The motion has just been carried, and has carried with it the Honourable Member's right of speech.

THE LEGAL PRACTITIONERS (AMENDMENT) BILL.

Mr. K. C. Neogy (Dacca Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I beg to move:

"That the Bill further to amend the Legal Practitioners Act, 1879, be referred to a Select Committee consisting of the Honourable the Home Member, Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar, Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar, Mr. N. M. Samarth, Mr. A. B. Latthe, Sir D. P. Sarvadhikary, Mr. J. Chaudhuri, Mr. K. Ahmed, Mr. J. N. Mukherjee, Maulvi Abul Kasem, Dr. H. S. Gour, Munshi Iswar Saran, Mr. P. P. Ginwala, Chaudhri Shahab-ud-Din, Bhai Man Singh, Rai Sahib Lakshmi Narayan Lal, Rai Bahadur Pandit Jawahar Lal Bhargava, and the Mover."

Sir, this Bill was introduced on the 12th of September in Simla and it forms part of a wider scheme about the formation of an independent Indian Bar. These questions have been before the public for sometime, and the opinions that have been elicited are on the whole favourable to the underlying principle of my Bill. I therefore move this motion.

The motion was adopted.

THE INDIAN EVIDENCE (AMENDMENT) BILL.

Lala Girdharilal Agarwala (Agra Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I beg to move for leave to introduce a Bill further to amend the Indian Evidence Act, 1872.

The Bill will show that the amendment which I propose to make is a very short one and it is based upon a ruling of the Allahabad High Court. The Evidence Act defines primary and secondary evidence and in the definition of secondary evidence it is laid down that a person who has seen a document can be a competent witness. Now, the Allahabad High Court has ruled in the case of Ghure versus Chattrapal Singh, in which I had the honour to appear, that "seen" does not mean a person who has seen as one would look at a toy but a person who has seen with mind's eye. So, I want to substitute the word "read" for the word "seen."

The motion was adopted.

Lala Girdharilal Agarwala: Sir, I beg to introduce the Bill.

THE INDIAN LIMITATION (AMENDMENT) BILL.

Lala Girdharilal Agarwala (Agra Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): I move for leave to introduce a Bill further to amend the Indian Limitation Act, 1908. The Indian Limitation Act, as it stands at present with respect to section 19, is in accordance with the old English law and not in accordance with the present English law. There are other matters which are always the subject of great discussion. It is for this reason that I beg to move for leave to introduce this Bill in order to correct those errors and that the law may develop. The present doctrine in England as to the theory of acknowledgment is that an acknowledgment to be effectual must amount to a fresh promise to pay. The old theory which has been exploded forms the basis of our present law. Hence I move for leave to introduce this Bill.

The motion was adopted.

Lala Girdharilal Agarwala: I introduce the Bill.

(4046)

THE PREVENTION OF DEFERRED REBATES BILL.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar (Madras: Nominated Non-Official): The Bill which I seek leave to introduce is one of great importance to the development of the mercantile marine in this country. There are two principal matters mentioned in the Bill. One is as regards what is known as the deferred rebates and the second is as regards the fixing of maximum and minimum rates. As regards the deferred rebates question there is no doubt that it would hamper Indian enterprise if companies of long established reputation offer rebates in the way in which they are doing. There was a Royal Commission appointed in England in 1908 to consider this question, and although it was only by majority that the Commission came to the conclusion that the rebate system should be continued. Recently when the Imperial Shipping Committee had to deal with the subject, though they admitted the evils of the rebate system, they recommended that the shippers should be given the option of an agreement also. I may mention in this connection that the Indian shippers who gave evidence before the Imperial Shipping Committee unanimously—I am speaking of a large number of Europeans also—the Indian shippers unanimously gave evidence to the effect that the rebate system should be done away with; that is my reason for including the subject so far as the first portion of my Bill is concerned. As regards the fixing of maximum and minimum rates, a rate war went on in this country for a long time; I can give instances of one or two companies having come to grief by well-established companies charging a low rate for the time being in order to crush out the Indian enterprise; after the enterprise was thus crushed out they went back to the old rates. The Deck Passengers' Committee recommended that a minimum rate should be fixed, and that is the second subject which I have introduced into this Bill. I may say that my Bill is based largely upon similar enactments in the United States and other countries. Therefore I ask the House to give me leave to introduce the Bill.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That leave be given to introduce a Bill to provide for the prevention of deferred rebates and for the prevention of rate wars and resort to retaliatory or discriminating practices in the Coastal traffic of India."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: I introduce the Bill, Sir. I now move:

"That the Bill be circulated for the purpose of eliciting opinion thereon."

The Bill has been in the hands of Honourable Members for some time. As a matter of fact, even before they had the Bill as printed, I sent them a copy and I sent a letter to them explaining the reasons why this Bill should be introduced. I move that the Bill be circulated for the purpose of eliciting opinion thereon.

The motion was adopted.

THE INTEREST ACT (AMENDMENT) BILL.

Khan Sahib Maulvi Abdul Quadir (Central Provinces: Nominated Non-Official): Sir, the measure to introduce which I am asking leave of this Honourable House is a very simple and a modest one. It consists of two sections only and refers to the amount of interest recoverable at the date

(4047)

[Khan Sahib Maulvi Abdul Quadir.] of the suit. It provides that no creditor of a secured or unsecured loan should be entitled to recover interest in excess of the principal amount due at the date of the suit. I tried to introduce this measure last year in this House but it was a pity that it was thrown out both by the Government and by the Members of this Honourable House and I did not get permission to introduce the same. In spite of my previous failure, I am again trying to introduce it because I have got a real grievance and I am fully conscious that if this grievance is not redressed during the régime of this Honourable House, there is no chance of its being redressed at all or at any rate in the near future. This is the chief reason why I am troubling this Honourable House over again. If the House will kindly bear with me for a few minutes, I will place my grievance before it. The House will be surprised to hear that in Berar and Bombay Presidency if a Hindu creditor sues a non-Hindu debtor to recover say Rs. 1,000 as principal and Rs. 4,000 as interest, he is allowed by the Courts of Justice a decree for Rs. 5,000 in full. But if a non-Hindu creditor sues a Hindu debtor under exactly similar circumstances and conditions the Courts of Justice do not give him a decree against his Hindu debtor for a single pie more than Rs. 2,000. Now, I am not exaggerating facts. I am telling actually what is happening in these provinces every day. My friend, the Honourable Mr. Jatkari, will bear me out in every word I have uttered in this respect. The Honourable Colonel Sir Henry Stanyon and the Honourable Mr. Rustomji Faridoonji, Members of this Honourable House, are also fully aware of the anomalous state of affairs prevailing under the name of the rule of Damdapat. Now, I leave it to the Honourable House to judge it for themselves as to whether the grievance I am complaining of is a real one or a creation of my own imagination and whether this Honourable House should or should not redress it. The Provincial Governments cannot do anything in matters of this nature. They cannot amend Dharam Shastras and make the principle of Damdapat applicable to Hindus and non-Hindus of the province alike and remove the invidious distinction at present existing. Those who profess Hindu religion are with the exception of a few against such a change being effected. Consequently there is no alternative left open for this Honourable House but to amend the Interest Act as I have ventured to suggest in order to bring justice to those who are subjected to most unjust and iniquitous treatment in the above stated provinces. If the Government and the Members of this Honourable House can remove this iniquity and bring relief to the suffering non-Hindus by any other means than this, so much the better. They are welcome to do so but I am afraid they cannot. The amendment sought for by me is bound, as given in the Statement of Objects and Reasons, to result in immense good to the public in general of the whole of India but if the House thinks otherwise they may make a provision in the amending Act giving option to the Provincial Governments to apply to their respective provinces by notification in their Provincial Gazettes if they considered it beneficial. Otherwise not. The Usurious Loans Act, X of 1918, has been on the Statute Book for the last five years, but it has failed to bring relief to the non-Hindus of Berar and Bombay in this respect. Besides this, the Act gives discretion to the Judge to go through the past account books and readjustments in cases in which he thinks it necessary to do so. Thus the using of this discretion is an arbitrary thing depending upon the choice of the particular judge deciding the case. In Damdapat cases no question of using such a discretion arises, but in the majority of other cases they do not use such power at all, while in some cases in which it is exercised there is no uniformity of decisions, because two different judges under exactly similar circumstances may come to two different conclusions regarding the rate and the amount of interest to be allowed to the creditor.

As a matter of fact, so far as the administration of justice in Berar is concerned it is the duty of the Government of India to see that justice is done equally to all classes of people in the province which they retain in their hands specially for administering better justice. They should not allow one section of the people to suffer at the hands of another section as is done at present. This sort of unequal justice was not meted out to the different sections of his subjects by His Exalted Highness the Nizam before the province was taken over by the Government of India for purposes of better administration.

I appeal to Government Members and to other Members of this House to kindly take a sympathetic view of what I have brought to their notice and allow permission for introducing the Bill instead of throwing it out summarily as they did last year. My Bill is altogether different in principle from the Bill of Mr. Yamin Khan.

With these words, Sir, I move for leave to introduce a Bill to amend the Interest Act, 1839.

Mr. P. B. Haigh (Bombay: Nominated Official): Sir, I desire formally to oppose the motion for leave to introduce this Bill. As the Honourable Member who has brought forward this motion has reminded the House, the Bill was before the House a year ago and leave to introduce it was refused after a speech by the then Home Member. And in the course of the present Session the House has had before it a Bill one of whose provisions was very closely allied to the provision which is contained in the Bill which the Honourable Member now seeks leave to introduce. I do not think it necessary, Sir, therefore, to repeat at length all the arguments which Government have already brought forward against this principle of Damdapat. Government still adhere to the view that a prescription of law universally applying, what is known as the rule of Damdapat, is not desirable and they are not prepared therefore to accept the motion made by the Honourable Member. Government are still of opinion that a better remedy is provided in Act X of 1918—an Act to give additional powers to courts to deal in certain cases with usurious loans in money or in kind. On the other hand, Sir, I desire to make it quite clear to the House and to the Honourable Member that Government do realize the immense importance of this question and they do not want it to be supposed for a moment that they desire to close the discussion altogether without any further inquiry. Government are prepared to make a full inquiry into the working of Act No. X of 1918 and into the questions raised by the Honourable Member; but instead of supporting his Bill, to which they cannot consistently lend support, they would prefer on the conclusion of their inquiries if the necessity is made apparent, to introduce a Bill of their own. I desire, therefore, to assure the Honourable Member that Government will cause the fullest inquiry to be made into the grievances which he has alleged to exist, and I trust, Sir, that on that assurance the Honourable Member will withdraw this motion and leave it to Government to undertake such further steps in the matter as may appear necessary and advisable on the conclusion of their inquiry.

Mr. W. M. Hussanally: Then, why not allow it to be introduced and circulate it for eliciting opinion?

Khan Sahib Maulvi Abdul Quadir: In view of the assurance given by the Honourable Member, I beg to withdraw my motion.

The motion (for leave to introduce a Bill to amend the Interest Act, 1839) was, by leave of the Assembly, withdrawn.

THE GENERAL CLAUSES (AMENDMENT) BILL.

Lala Girdharilal Agarwala (Agra Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I beg to move for leave to introduce a Bill further to amend the General Clauses Act, 1897.

Sir, the present General Clauses Act, which is Act X of 1897, was passed so many years ago. The earlier Acts were Act I of 1868, and Act I of 1887. Act X of 1897 was passed as a sort of consolidating Act. Now, the present Bill deals only with a very small matter, but yet a very important matter, namely, the definition of the legal term 'sign.' In days gone by when the thumb impression system was unknown to scientists the mere mark of an illiterate person whether made by himself or by any other person was considered sufficient. In the present times we have got an elaborate system of thumb impressions which can be easily identified, and I know in cases in which I had personally had the honour of appearing, even persons have been sentenced to death on the evidence afforded by thumb impressions. But we find neither in our Law of Evidence nor in the General Clauses Act, thumb impressions find a place. The main object of my introducing this present measure is to give legality to thumb impressions. I have taken the opportunity of introducing another matter, namely, to safeguard the signatories who are illiterate or half-literate by the affixation of signature of an attesting witness to any such signature of an illiterate or half-literate person, who should certify that he personally knew the person was signing and that the person so signing understood the contents of the document which he was signing. Of course I am not wedded to the details of the Bill but that is the main idea underlying my Bill. With these few words I move the motion which is put in my name.

Mr. President: The question is that leave be given to introduce a Bill further to amend the General Clauses Act, 1897.

The motion was adopted.

Lala Girdharilal Agarwala: Sir, I introduce the Bill.

Mr. P. B. Haigh: Do I understand, Sir, that it is too late for me to speak on the subject?

Mr. President: Yes, I am afraid it is.

ATTITUDE OF GOVERNMENT RE CERTAIN BILLS INTRODUCED BY NON-OFFICIAL MEMBERS.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey (Home Member): Sir, I hope you will allow me to make a short statement, necessitated by the unfortunate fact that I was called away from the House on very urgent business and before it. As the House knows, Members of Government are at times liable to be called away at short notice on work which will not brook delay, and they are not, therefore, always able in consequence to discharge their duties in the Legislature. This was a case in point, and I think it only therefore proper that I should be allowed to enter a caveat on the part of Government in regard to its attitude with regard to certain of these measures. I do that in order that it may not be assumed that because we made no opposition to some of these measures that we have thereby necessarily assented to them in principle or in detail. If that were assumed, it might cause disappointment to their promoters, and it is in fairness to them that I am bound to say that if it had not been for the unfortunate accident which called me away, I should have opposed certain of these measures. That refers in particular to Lala Girdharilal Agarwala's Bill entered as No. 12 (a) on the list to amend the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908. It refers also in part at all events to No. 16 (b) Mr. Neogy's measure regarding the Legal Practitioners Act. It refers also to Lala Girdharilal Agarwala's Bill, No. 17 (c). It refers to Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar's Bill No. 23 (d). Sir, I only wish to state that when these measures come forward at a later stage, we may in some cases have to oppose them and in other cases to ask for material modifications.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: May I say a word, Sir, as regards those gentlemen who have introduced Bills including myself? I do not believe that the Honourable the Leader of the House intended to say that we have hurried these Bills through. It is very unfortunate that friends on the Government Benches were unable to be present. I myself was looking to Mr. Innes being here and to say something against my Bill, and when I found that nobody spoke against it, I looked about and it was said that the Bill be carried. I think my friends understand that Government is not committed to anything in connection with these Bills and when the Bill comes up again before this Assembly, the Government could explain their position and consider the whole question afresh. We do not understand that Government have in any way committed themselves.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: Sir, I am very much obliged to Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar for what he has said. He understands and appreciates the difficulties which sometimes occur in our work. Mr. Innes, of course, has partaken on this occasion of the same misfortune as myself.

The Assembly then adjourned till Eleven of the Clock on Monday, the 2nd July, 1923.

(a) 12. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala to move that the Bill further to amend the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, be referred to a Select Committee consisting of the Honourable the Home Member, Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar, Bhai Man Singh, Sardar Gajjan Singh, Chaudhri Shahab-ud-Din, Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar, Mr. B. Venkatapatiraju, Maulvi Abul Kasem, and the Mover.

(b) 16. Mr. K. C. Neogy to move that the Bill further to amend the Legal Practitioners Act, 1879, be referred to a Select Committee consisting of the Honourable the Home Member, Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar, Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar, Mr. N. M. Samarth, Mr. A. B. Latthe, Sir D. P. Sarvadhikary, Mr. J. Chaudhuri, Mr. K. Ahmed, Mr. J. N. Mukherjee, Mr. Abul Kasem, Dr. H. S. Gour, Munshi Iswar Saran, Mr. P. P. Gindwala, Chaudhri Shahab-ud-Din, Bhai Man Singh, Rai Sahib Lakshmi Narayan Lal, Rai Bahadur Pandit Jawahar Lal Bhargava, and the Mover.

(c) 17. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala to move for leave to introduce a Bill further to amend the Indian Evidence Act, 1872.

(d) 23. Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar to move for leave to introduce a Bill to provide for the prevention of deferred rebates and for the prevention of rate wars and resort to retaliatory or discriminating practices in the Coastal traffic of India.
