42. Public attention is usually concentrated on the annual budget of revenue and expenditure, but the Ways and Means budget is of equal importance, for after all it is the Ways and Means budget which shows the sums which the Government has to pay out under one head or another during the year and the sums which it has to get in from the public. Whether it is a provincial overdraft or an advance on capital account, or whether it is a revenue deficit, the money to meet the outgoing has to be got in before it can go out. The Ways and Means budget is, however, one which it is difficult to present in a clear and easily intelligible form. It is never possible to adhere to a strict programme in regard to Ways and Means operations. In financing the country's various liabilities and in finding cash for our own and the provinces' day to day disbursements, we have to be guided very largely by the changing conditions of the money market both here and in London.

43. During the current year we expect to meet liabilities, over and above what has been met from revenue, amounting to 106 crores. These will have been financed mainly out of the proceeds of our rupee and sterling loans which have been on an unprecedentedly large scale. Our rupee loan realised nearly 47 crores and ₹31½ millions was borrowed in London during the year. One satisfactory feature of the year, to which I have already referred, is that out of these borrowings we have been able to reduce our floating debt by 40.6 crores, of which 32.4 crores consists of a net discharge of Treasury Bills held by the public and 8.2 crores of a cancellation of Treasury Bills held in the Currency Reserve. We cannot hope to continue the reduction of floating debt on the same scale over a long period, but I feel sure that the House will agree with me that it must be our constant policy to secure the early extinction of the floating debt by its conversion into securities of longer term.

44. Our sterling borrowings have facilitated the provision in London of the sums required to meet our sterling obligations during the year. But advantage has been taken of the strengthening of exchange which occurred at the New Year to effect remittance by the method of selling Council Bills. Weekly sales have been taking place of moderate amounts since the beginning of January, and we have thereby been placing funds in London at a moment which, although somewhat in advance of actual requirements, is nevertheless convenient to the market. We anticipate that our balance in London will be about £8 millions on the 31st March 1923 as against a normal minimum balance of £4 millions, but the surplus will be required early in the new financial year.

45. The following statement summarises the Ways and Means operations for India and England together during 1922-23 and 1923-24:

Summary.

Liabilities.

	(Crores of rupees.)
	Revised.	Budget.
Railway capital outlay	21.4	38.6
Delhi, Irrigation and Telegraph capital outlay	8.0	2.9
Discharge of funded debts, etc.	12.4	5.2
Discharge of Treasury Bills—
With the public	32.4	5.5
In the Paper Currency Reserve	8.2
Loans to Provincial Governments	11.4	18.5
Central Government's revenue deficit	17.8	...
Drawings of Provincial Governments	...	1.8
	1,06.1	67.0

Met as follows:

Central Government's revenue surplus	...	2
Surplus revenue of Provincial Governments	1.0	...
Rupee loans	46.9	25.0
Sterling loans (converted at 1s. 4d.)	47.3	22.7
Net receipts from Savings Bank deposits, etc.	3.1	5.0
Miscellaneous items	2.5	2.2
Reduction of cash balances	5.3	11.0
	1,06.1	67.0

[Sir Basil Blackett.]

46. In 1923-24, if the measures which I propose are adopted, we shall not again have to face the necessity of financing a large revenue deficit. Our largest liability will be for Railway Capital outlay. During 1922-23, it has not been possible to spend the full 30 crores allotted under the 5-year programme; there will be a large carry forward. We are adding this to the 30 crores for next year, making a total of 38.6 crores to be provided for capital expenditure on Railways in 1923-24. We have about 5½ crores of maturing bonds to meet, and our other Capital outlay is expected to reach about 3 crores. Loans or overdrafts to the Provincial Governments will absorb 13½ crores, the greater part of which will go to the Bombay Government for expenditure on their Development scheme.

47. We expect to start the year, as I have already said, with a cash balance of £8 millions in London. We are assuming, for the purpose of the Ways and Means estimate, that we shall be able to raise £15 millions by new sterling borrowings. We are assuming for budget purposes also that we shall be able to secure a rupee loan of 25 crores. With these resources, we hope to meet the liabilities I have mentioned, and in addition to effect a further reduction of five or six crores in our floating debt. In addition to the new sterling borrowings of £15 millions we estimate that we shall require to remit £27 millions to London from India during 1923-24. It is unnecessary, I think, for me to discuss at the present moment the various alternative methods of effecting this remittance. In addition to the ordinary method of purchase of exchange, the £5½ millions in the Paper Currency Reserve in London, and after that the Gold Standard Reserve of £40 millions, can be drawn upon against an equivalent earmarking of rupees for those Reserves in India. Which particular combination of the various methods available will be adopted is a matter upon which it is impossible for Government to commit themselves in advance, since much must depend upon exchange conditions during the year.

VI.—PROVINCIAL CONTRIBUTIONS.

48. There is another subject on which I should like to say a word owing to its close connection with the problem of covering our deficit, and that is the vexed question of the provincial contributions. I do not think that any one considering Indian finances at the present time can fail to be impressed by the undesirability of a long continuance of the present unsatisfactory position in regard to the provincial contributions. The Government of India have stated plainly that, as soon as they are able to do so, they intend to reduce, and eventually extinguish, these contributions. I am aware that this is not the solution which finds universal favour, though I think this is what the majority of the Provincial Governments desire. But so long as we have a deficit in the Central budget, it is obviously impossible for us to make a beginning with the reduction of provincial contributions. Meanwhile, every Provincial Government, without exception, is finding very great difficulty in balancing its budget. The majority, I am afraid, did not succeed in doing so in 1922-23, though they are doing better I am glad to see for 1923-24 though we did not help them by our action in regard to the Stamp Duty Bill earlier this week. It has been suggested to me by more than one spokesman for the provinces that there is a feeling in the minds of the Provincial Governments and of their Legislatures that it would be unwise for them to show balanced budgets. — This are, it is hinted, taking a leaf out of the book of some charitable and religious bodies which make a habit of showing an annual deficit in order to make a striking appeal to their supporters to come to their rescue. The Provincial Governments think, it is said, that they will get more sympathy from the Central Government and get rid of their provincial contributions quicker if they can show a handsome deficit and appeal to the charity of the Central Government. I should like to say for my part that the strongest appeal that the Provincial Governments can make to me in this matter of the Provincial contributions is to show themselves worthy of assistance from the Central Government by strenuous and successful endeavours to make both ends meet for themselves. Much, therefore, as we should have liked to be able to make a beginning of the reduction of the provincial contributions, it is obvious that this year we must confine ourselves to an attempt to deal with our own deficit. I would, however, add this appeal to all who are interested in a reduction in the provincial contributions. Let them give us their full support in any measures we propose for securing a balanced Central budget in the certainty that by so doing they are hastening the day when the contributions can begin to be released.

VII.—PROPOSALS FOR DEALING WITH THE DEFICIT.

49. What then is to be done about the deficit of 5.85 crores? First of all, we propose to make an adjustment which, though little more than a change in methods of book-keeping, has the effect of reducing the apparent figure of the deficit by 1.59 crores. It is proposed to ask the House to continue during 1923-24 the arrangement made a year ago for crediting to revenue the interest on the securities in the Paper Currency Reserve. There is a similar source of income in the interest on the £40,000,000 in the Gold Standard Reserve, which is expected to amount to 1.59 crores in 1923-24. This is, in essence, of the same nature as the interest on the Paper Currency Reserve's investments, and we propose for 1923-24 to treat it in the same way. This change does not really add anything to our available resources or alter our Ways and Means position, but I think it is justified on merits.

50. We are thus left with a deficit of 4.26 crores, and the only way left for meeting it is by additional taxation. If the House will turn its mind back for a moment to what I said about the accrued deficits of the last five years, it will recognise that it cannot leave the deficit of 4½ crores untouched. It will perhaps be asked whether the fact that several crores in the military expenditure and a considerable additional amount in the non-military expenditure represents non-recurrent expenditure due to "lag" and "terminal charges" would not justify the deficit being allowed to continue for one more year. This argument unfortunately does not represent the full facts. If some crores in the military budget represent non-recurrent expenditure, on the other hand over 2 crores of the cuts made in the military budget represent non-recurrent savings, being arrived at simply by a reduction in stores. Similar considerations apply to some of the other cuts both in the military and the non-military budgets, in particular in the railway budget. Moreover, some terminal charges will still have to be met in 1924-25. Whatever our hopes may be, we have no reasonable certainty that the budget for 1924-25 would balance on the basis of present taxation. Moreover we have not yet begun to provide anything towards making good past deficits. If 1924-25 were to turn out much better than it is possible to promise at this moment, we can, if we have got through 1923-24 without a deficit, turn our thoughts to reduction of the provincial contributions.

[Sir Basil Blackett.]

51. Our conclusion, therefore, is that we must ask for some increase in taxation. No one likes new taxation. It is a disappointment to the House, and it was a great disappointment to me, that new taxation is needed at all. If he is wise, a Finance Member dislikes new expenditure and dislikes new taxation even more. But most of all, he loathes and abhors a deficit. I hope the House will agree that I have demonstrated to the full the absolute impossibility of its leaving a sixth year's deficit of 4½ crores to be added to the appalling aggregate of 100 crores of the deficits of the last five years. The House would be false to its trust if it allowed the Government to adopt so pusillanimous and mischievous a course. The credit of India is in jeopardy. It is already under the cloud of the deficits of the last five years. But India's financial record has been so good for decades preceding those five years that hitherto the damage is not irreparable. The world has trust in India's record and has felt sure that the era of deficits could only be a passing phase. It is our duty to-day to justify that trust. We have made drastic cuts in our expenditure, but we have not achieved a balance. New taxation is, therefore, inevitable.

52. What form then is the new taxation to take? We have carefully reviewed the existing taxes. In particular, we have examined those taxes which were proposed last year and not accepted. One after another we have had to reject promising expedients, and finally we have come to the conclusion that the right course is to ask the House to agree to an increase in the salt tax to Rs. 2-8 a maund. In a full year, this increase is estimated to yield 6 crores, but we cannot count on its bringing in more than 4½ crores in 1923-24. The House will see that this additional revenue is just sufficient to cover the deficit of 4½ crores, to give us a balanced budget, and to leave us a small surplus of 24 lakhs. In view of the uncertainties of our estimates of expenditure, this House will agree that this is not an undue margin to leave over for contingencies.

CONCLUSION.

53. My allotted task is finished. I have laid before the House the Government of India's account of their stewardship for the year that is passing and their proposals for the year 1923-24. I am painfully conscious of the responsibility which attaches to the Member introducing the budget. He cannot hope that his proposals will receive universal approbation. I have no doubt that when the details of our proposed expenditure come up for discussion, some Members will criticise this or that retrenchment as iniquitous and the retention of this or that item of expenditure as outrageous. Some other Members will disagree entirely with them on one or other or both of these criticisms. But all will manage to disagree with me on some point or other. I hope none the less that the Government of India will receive the credit which I claim is their due for courageously shouldering their burden and boldly coming forward with a budget which, at one and the same time, effects drastic reductions in expenditure and calls for a further sacrifice in the form of new taxation. I appeal to the House for one last long and strong pull, all of us pulling together, in the confident assurance that so doing we shall quickly get the boat out of the vicious current which is threatening to drag India down on to the rocks of insolvency. Once back in safe waters, I have every hope that in a surprisingly short time we shall find ourselves on the flood tide of prosperity, and shall be able to turn our minds to pleasant thoughts of reduced provincial contributions, reduced taxation, and increased devotion of our resources to the development of India. I was struck a little more than a week ago by a remark that fell from Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary when, speaking on the Racial Distinctions Bill, he said that the House had had three red letter days in succession. Let us crown our successes by a fourth red letter day, and end our Session with a balanced budget.

THE INDIAN FINANCE BILL.

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett (Finance Member): Sir, I ask for leave to introduce a Bill to fix the duty on Salt manufactured in, or imported by land into, certain parts of British India; to vary the duty leviable on certain articles under the Indian Tariff Act, 1894; to fix maximum rates of postage under the Indian Post Office Act, 1898; to amend the Indian Paper Currency Act, 1923, and to fix the rates of income-tax.

The motion was adopted.

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: Sir, I introduce the Bill.

The Assembly then adjourned till Eleven of the Clock on Monday, the 5th March, 1923.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

Monday, 5th March, 1923.

The Assembly met in the Assembly Chamber at Eleven of the Clock.
Mr. President was in the Chair.

MEMBER SWORN:

Rao Bahadur P. T. Srinivasa Achariyar, M.L.A. (Madras: Nominated Official).

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey (Home Member): With reference to the information promised in reply to Rai Bahadur Bakshi Sohan Lal's question regarding the passed and unpassed candidates of the Staff Selection Board, I may state that the information was supplied on the 28th February last.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

" POOLING OF WAGONS."

442. Mr. K. O. Neogy: (a) Has the attention of Government been drawn to an editorial article appearing in the Eastern Mail dated February 18, 1923, under the head " Pooling of Wagons " ?

(b) If so, will Government be pleased to state whether it is a fact that under the wagon pooling arrangement, referred to therein, the two Company-managed lines of Bengal, vis., the B. N. R. and the E. I. R., have profited most, and that the traffic of other Railways in foodstuffs and in general merchandise was restricted in order to enable the said two lines to carry more traffic in the very same commodities?

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley: (a) Yes.

(b) The wagon pool was introduced for the benefit of railways as a whole and the country generally and the traffic of other railways in foodstuffs and general merchandise was not restricted in order to enable the East Indian and Bengal-Nagpur Railways to carry more traffic in these commodities. The fluctuations of traffic to which the article in question refers were not the result of the pooling arrangements.

SEPARATE ESTABLISHMENT FOR COLLECTION OF INCOME-TAX.

443. Rai T. P. Mukherjee Bahadur: (a) Are the Government aware that a separate establishment for the collection of income-tax, headed by an Income-tax Commissioner in each Province, is proposed to be introduced?

(b) If so, will the Government be pleased to state the amount of additional expenditure to be incurred for the proposed separate establishment for each Province?

(c) Will the Government be pleased to state what is the amount of expenditure on that head incurred in the last three years in each Province for the collection of income-tax?

(d) Will the Government be pleased to place on the table a statement showing the number of officers, peons, etc., with their respective pay of each Province?

(e) Will the Government be pleased to state the reasons for introducing this additional expenditure in these days of retrenchment?

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: (a) The answer to the first part of the question is 'Yes.'

(b), (c) and (d) Statements giving the information asked for are laid upon the table.

With regard to part (e) the figures given in the statements which are laid in reply to previous portions of this question show merely the expenditure upon the whole-time income-tax staff. They take no account of the cost of the assessment and collection of the tax where the work was or is done by the revenue officers of the Local Governments. The collection and assessment of income-tax is a Central subject and it is no longer possible to arrange for the work being done through the agency of Provincial Governments. Moreover before the introduction of the Reforms the work had become too intricate to be carried out by the ordinary Provincial revenue staff in addition to other duties, and it was necessary to entertain special whole-time officers in increasing numbers. The all-India Income-tax Committee in paragraph 61 of their report placed on record their opinion that "a matter of greater importance than the amendment of the Act is the increase in the number and efficiency of the staff which should consist of officers of the highest training and integrity. The department should include experts of high standing trained in accountancy whose remuneration should be such as to reflect the market value of their professional experience and attainments." The entertainment of the additional staff has not only resulted in greater convenience to assesseees but the cost of the staff has been more than covered by the resultant increase in the receipts.

Statement showing the details of the Income-tax Department in the various Provinces.

MADRAS.

- 1 Commissioner of Income-tax on 2,000—100—2,500.
- 4 Assistant Commissioners of Income-tax on 1,000—100—1,500.
- 33 Income-tax Officers on 300—40—500—50—900.
- 29 Accountants, 21 (100—10—250), 8 (110—10—260).
- 18 Surveyors on 150—5—200—10—300.
- 201 Clerks, typists and stenographers on pay ranging between Rs. 35 and 210.
- 2 Shroffs on Rs. 23—35.
- 154 Peons on pay ranging between Rs. 12 and 25.

BOMBAY.

- 1 Commissioner of Income-tax on 2,000—100—2,500.
- 5 Assistant Commissioners of Income-tax, 1 (1,500—100—2,000) and 4 (1,000—100—1,500).
- 37 Income-tax Officers 1 (1,000—100—1,500) and 36 (300—50/2—900).
- 46 Inspectors and Sub-Inspectors, 22 (200—25/2—500), 6 (150—25/2—325), 9 (150—15—225) and 9 (115—5—150).
- 60 Examiners and Assistant Examiners, 1 (550—25—700), 26 (225—25/2—500); 8 (175—25/2—325), 14 (150—15—225), and 11 (115—5—150).
- 284 Clerks, typists and stenographers on pay ranging between Rs. 30 and 450.
- 33 Bailiffs, 10 (100—5—150), 9 (75—5—100), 10 (50—3—65), 4 (40—2—50).
- 250 Notice servers and peons on Rs. 14—1—50.

BENGAL.

- 1 Commissioner of Income-tax on 2,000—100—2,500.
- 6 Assistant Commissioners of Income-tax, 2 (1,500—100—2,000), and 4 (1,000—100—1,500).
- 67 Income-tax Officers on 300—50/2—900.
- 15 Assessors on 125—5—150—10—300.
- 247 Clerks, stenographers on Rs. 35—300.
- 6 Bailiffs, 1 (60), 3 (40), 2 (25).
- 190 Duffries and peons on Rs. 12—60.

UNITED PROVINCES.

- 1 Commissioner of Income-tax on 2,000—100—2,500.
- 4 Assistant Commissioners on 1,000—100—1,500.
- 50 Income-tax Officers, 36 (350—30—800—25—900), 14 Assistant Income-tax Officers (250—12½—350).
- 216 Clerks and stenographers on Rs. 40—250.
- 131 Peons on Rs. 10/8 to 16.

PUNJAB.

- 1 Commissioner of Income-tax on 2,000—100—2,500.
- 3 Assistant Commissioners of Income-tax on 1,000—50—1,500.
- 26 Income-tax Officers on 300—40—850.
- 6 Accountants on 120—7½—240.
- 50 Inspectors on 120—7½—240.
- 97 Clerks and muharrirs on pay ranging between Rs. 30 and 350.
- 147 Peons on pay ranging between Rs. 14 and 18.

BURMA.

- 1 Commissioner of Income-tax on 2,000—100—2,500.
- 1 Deputy Commissioner on 1,500—50—2,000.
- 2 Assistant Commissioners of Income-tax on 1,000—100—1,500.
- 18 Income-tax Officers on 350—25—750—50—950.
- 10 Accountants, 2 (200—15—500); [1 (250—10—300), 7 (250)]—Temporary.
- 8 Inspectors on 200—10—300—25/4—325.
- 19 Examiners 8 (200—15—500), 11 (100—5—200—6½—250).
- 44 Clerks and stenographers on pay ranging between Rs. 40 and 300.
- 2 Bailiffs, one on Rs. 100 and one on Rs. 100—150.
- 44 Duffries, Process servers and peons on pay ranging between Rs. 12 and 40.

BIHAR AND ORISSA.

- 1 Commissioner of Income-tax on 2,000—100—2,500.
- 1 Assistant Commissioner of Income-tax on 1,000—50—1,500.
- 10 Income-tax Officers on 300—50/2—900.
- 20 Inspectors on 100—5—200.
- 67 Clerks on pay ranging between Rs. 30 and 275.
- 79 Peons and duffries on pay ranging between Rs. 13 and 25.

CENTRAL PROVINCES.

- 1 Commissioner of Income-tax on 2,000—100—2,500.
- 2 Assistant Commissioners of Income-tax on 1,000—50—1,500.
- 13 Income-tax Officers on 300—900.
- 37 Inspectors, 12 (175—25/2—275), and 25 sub-Inspectors on (80—100—10/2—150).
- 6 Examiners on 175—25/2—275.
- 58 Clerks on pay ranging between Rs. 30 and 300.
- 78 Servants on pay ranging between Rs. 10 and 15.

ASSAM.

- 1 Income-tax Officer on 275.
4 Clerks on pay ranging between Rs. 50 and 150.
3 Peons on Rs. 14—17.

NORTH-WEST FRONTIER PROVINCE.

- 3 Income-tax Officers on 300—40—850.
2 Munims temporary on Rs. 100.
6 Inspectors on 120—7½—240.
10 Clerks on pay ranging between Rs. 30 and 125.
12 Peons on Rs. 14.

DELHI.

- 1 Income-tax Officer on 300—40—850.
1 Munim on Rs. 100.
2 Inspectors on 120—7½—240.
7 Clerks on pay ranging between Rs. 30 and 125.
4 Peons on Rs. 14.

Statement showing the expenditure incurred under "2—Taxes on income" in the various Provinces during 1919-20 to 1921-22.

Provinces.	1919-20.	1920-21.	1921-22.
	Rs.	Rs.	Rs.
India, General	48,966	44,855	51,467
Baluchistan	...	...	...
North-West Frontier Province	4,489	18,825	22,511
Madras	1,49,341	3,48,722	4,40,836
Bombay	4,42,885	5,84,630	6,63,927
Bengal	2,66,623	3,11,468	3,81,301
United Provinces	2,64,601	3,72,169	4,84,059
Punjab	1,09,818	2,07,814	3,84,507
Burma	1,21,772	1,46,335	1,75,908
Bihar and Orissa	52,165	64,257	1,04,359
Central Provinces	61,732	82,480	2,04,678
Assam	4,927	5,295	7,108
Total	15,27,269	21,86,850	28,70,656

Statement showing the cost of the income-tax staff in the various Provinces.

	Rs. •
Madras	8,00,000
Bombay	15,50,000
Bengal	10,81,900
United Provinces	7,61,000
Punjab	7,06,000
Burma	5,35,600
Bihar and Orissa	2,71,600
Central Provinces	4,27,600
Assam	13,200
North-West Frontier Province	73,000
Delhi	21,700

EXCLUSION OF MEMBERS OF THE INDIAN LEGISLATURES FROM THE WARRANT OF PRECEDENCE.

444. *Rai T. P. Mukherjee Bahadur: (a) Are the Government aware that in the "Warrant of Precedence" issued last year, no place has been given to the Members of Indian Legislatures which they had before?

(b) Will the Government be pleased to state the reasons for it?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: (a) Yes. The Honourable Member however is mistaken in supposing that Members of the Indian Legislature as now constituted had a place in the old warrant. The fact that Members of the old Legislative Council were assigned a specific place was a relic of the position under which such Members were persons added to the Executive Council when it sat for Legislative purposes.

(b) It was desired to treat Members of the Legislature in India in exactly the same way as Members of the House of Commons in England who have no such precedence. The warrant is primarily intended to regulate the position of officials holding appointments in India.

Mr. J. Chaudhuri: I may mention for the information of the Honourable the Home Member that most of the Members of this House are not anxious for any warrants of precedence. My Honourable friend does not represent the sentiments of this House.

INCOME FROM SALE OF POST CARDS.

445. *Rai T. P. Mukherjee Bahadur: (a) Will the Government be pleased to state the amount of sale-proceeds of post cards from 1922 April to the present time and also the amount of sale-proceeds of post cards for the year 1920-21?

(b) Has the Government received the estimated amount budgeted last year by the sale-proceeds of post cards?

(c) If not, how much has it fallen short?

Colonel Sir Sydney Crookshank: (a) Separate information regarding the revenue from the sale of post cards is not available, but it may be stated that the gross amount realised from the sale of ordinary postage stamps and postal stationery of all kinds (excluding the amount attributable to telegraphic traffic) for the period from April to December, 1922, was Rs. 343.56 lakhs as compared with Rs. 280.55 lakhs for the corresponding period of 1921.

(b) and (c) As already stated, separate figures in respect of post cards are not available. The increase in revenue due to the enhancement of the postage rates on letters and post cards will probably fall short of the estimate by between 70 and 80 lakhs of rupees.

FREE RAILWAY PASSES.

446. *Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary: (a) Is it a fact that all classes of officers of the Railway Board are granted free passes as well as Privilege Ticket Orders over all Railways in India?

(b) If so, will the Government be pleased to state why and under what circumstances this special concession is granted to the Railway Board staff? Is this concession allowed to other employees of the Imperial Secretariat in other Departments?

(c) What is the total cost of the passes and P. T. Os. granted to the employees of the Railway Board during the last 12 months and how is this expenditure met? To what accounts are they debited in case of State Railways?

(d) Has the Government taken this factor into consideration in fixing the salary of the Railway Board's employees? If not, will the Government be pleased to state the reason for this preferential treatment?

(e) Will the Government be pleased to consider the question of extending this concession to their confrères in other Departments of the Government of India?

(f) Is Government aware that the staff of the Railway Board avail themselves of railway passes for the journeys of their families to their home and back and at the same time draw separation allowances during the Delhi Season, whereas the staff of the other Departments of the Government of India under similar circumstances do not enjoy this concession?

(g) If the answer to the above is in the affirmative, will the Government please explain the cause of this inequality?

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley: (a) Yes, subject to a limit of 2 passes per annum and at the discretion of Railway Administrations concerned.

(b) This is an ordinary condition of Railway service all over the world. It is not applicable to anyone outside the Railway Department.

(c) No money account is maintained and Government are therefore unable to state the cost.

(d) Yes.

(e) No, in view of what is stated in reply given to Part (a).

(f) Yes, subject to condition referred in reply to Part (a).

(g) As already stated the privilege is a usual incident of Railway service.

EXPENDITURE UNDER "SUPPLY AND SERVICES" AND "CONTINGENCIES."

447. Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary: Will the Government please lay on the table a statement showing:

(1) expenses during the last 3 years under the heading

(a) supply and services,

(b) contingencies.

(2) Is it not a fact that contingency expenditure has considerably increased?

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: (1) and (2) Full details of expenditure on supplies and services and contingencies will be found in the demand statements placed before this House.

EXPENDITURE ON LEAVE AND ALLOWANCES.

448. Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary: Would the Government please lay on the table a statement showing the:

(a) budget allotments and actual expenditure on leave and allowances during the last 3 years?

(b) what has been done with the balance under this head in each of the different departments?

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: (a) Separate figures of actual expenditure for leave allowances are not available as the expenditure is included under salaries in the accounts.

(b) The unspent balance of the budget grant for leave allowances would lapse unless reappropriated for other expenditure and the rules provide that such reappropriation cannot be made from the head "Salaries" without the sanction of the Finance Department.

EXPENDITURE OF DIFFERENT DEPARTMENTS.

449. Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary: Would the Government please lay on the table a statement for 3 years showing the expenditure for every year out of the budget allotments of the different departments during the last fortnight of March of every year?

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: I regret that it is not possible to furnish the information as the Government accounts are only kept month by month.

AUCTION SALE OF WAGONS OF UNCLAIMED COAL.

450. Mr. N. M. Joshi: With reference to the answer given on 20th January, 1923, to starred question No. 204, will Government kindly ascertain and inform the House of the facts of the auction sale of wagons of unclaimed coal?

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley: Inquiry has been made and the result will be communicated to the Honourable Member in due course.

PERCENTAGE OF DEPRECIATION IN A FLOUR MILL.

451. Mr. Pyari Lal: In the Income-tax Manual 1922, the percentage of depreciation given for a flour mill on page 42, is 6½. Will the Government be pleased to say for how many daily working hours is this percentage allowed?

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: The percentage is a fixed percentage for the trade and does not vary with the number of working hours.

PROFIT AND LOSS STATEMENT FOR INCOME-TAX PURPOSES.

452. Mr. Pyari Lal: (a) Is the Government aware that the Income-tax Commissioner, Punjab, has approved the following three Firms of Accountants for the preparation of Profit and Loss statement for Income-tax purposes?

(i) Messrs. Nisson Digneese & Co.

(ii) Messrs. Basant Lal & Sons.

(iii) Messrs. Aiyer & Co.

(b) Is the Government aware that the majority of the Indian Firms keep their Accounts in Hindi?

(c) Is it a fact that none of the approved Accountants undertake the audit of Hindi Accounts?

(d) Will the Government be pleased to state why the Firm of Messrs. Sodhbans & Co., Lahore, is excluded from the list of approved accountants?

(e) Will the Government be pleased to specify the considerations on which this approval is extended to practising Firms of certified Accountants?

(f) Is the Government aware that the inability of all the approved Accountants in Punjab, to audit Hindi Accounts has led to great inconvenience to those Firms who keep their Accounts in Hindi?

(g) Will the Government be pleased to reconsider the appointment of approved Accountants for Income-tax purposes in the Punjab with a view to include therein firms capable to audit Hindi Accounts?

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: The information is being called for and will be supplied to the Honourable Member as soon as available.

ELECTRIC INSTALLATION AT AMBALA.

453. Mr. Pyari Lal: (a) Has the attention of the Government been drawn to an article in the Cantonment Advocate of 10th January, 1923, under the heading "Electric Installation at Ambala"?

(b) Is it a fact that a contribution of Rs. 60,000 has been made to the Ambala Electric Installation from the Cantonment Fund?

(c) Is it a fact that a sub-committee was appointed to suggest the portion of the Sadar Bazar where the Electric power was to be supplied, which submitted its report some six months ago?

(d) Will the Government give reasons why the Electric power has not yet been supplied to Sadar Bazar, whereas it has been supplied to the Mall Road, the Staff Road, etc.?

Mr. E. Burdon: (a) Yes.

(b) No.

(c) Yes.

(d) It has not yet been found practicable to supply electric power either to the Sadar Bazar or to the rest of the cantonment.

PURCHASE OF PETROL BY GOVERNMENT DEPARTMENTS.

454. Mr. R. A. Spence: (1) In reference to the reply to question No. 354 on 16th February, 1923, will Government state the prices paid in Rangoon and Calcutta or Bombay by the Military authorities or the Postal Department for direct petrol supplies in the years 1915 to 1922?

(2) Has any Department of Government including the Military authorities, a direct contract with any of the oil companies for the supply of petrol, and if so, on what terms?

(3) Have Government at any time (a) approached the oil companies in India and Burma for special terms, and (b) invited tenders for the supply of petrol from companies operating in India, Burma and other parts of the world?

(4) Are Government aware that the Asiatic Petroleum Company who have no oil refinery in India or Burma effect large sales of petrol in India approximating it is commonly reported to over 30 per cent. of the total annual consumption?

(5) If the answer is in the affirmative has Government any information as to the source of the supplies and what import duty is collected thereon as it is noted from the reply to question 356, that the imports in 1921-22 only amounted to 1,848 gallons?

(6) Will Government consider making strong representations to the Burma Oil Company Limited, with a view to securing a substantial reduction on present prices?

(7) Have Government any information as to the cost of production of petrol in India and Burma and whether the declared value of Rs. 18,91,246 on the exports for 1921-22 equal to about 1½ annas per gallon is a correct figure?

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: 1 and 2. The military authorities do not think it advisable to disclose the prices at which their contracts have been placed, but I take the opportunity of correcting an error in my answer to the Honourable Member's question of the 16th February. Since that answer was given I have ascertained that apart from the rebate of excise duty the prices paid by the military authorities are slightly below the ordinary market rates for motor transport spirit in Calcutta. A statement is laid on the table showing the prices paid in Calcutta by the postal authorities since 1915.

3. (a) The Controller of Contracts has approached the oil companies.

(b) Tenders have been called for by State Railways and also at different times by the Post and Telegraph Department.

4 and 5. The Government are aware that petrol is sold in India by the Asiatic Petroleum Company and they understand that this petrol is obtained from Burma. No import duty is levied on such petrol.

6. As at present advised the Government doubt whether any useful purpose would be served by adopting this suggestion.

7. Government have no information as to the cost of the production. In respect of the latter part of this question the Honourable Member's attention is invited to the reply given to a similar question on January 15th last.

Mr. R. A. Spence: Is the motor spirit bought by the military what is known as commercial spirit,—is it petrol in tins or petrol supplied in bulk?

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: There are two kinds—the motor transport spirit and the aviation spirit. In what form it is bought or sold, I do not know.

Mr. B. S. Kamat: With reference to sub-clause (2) of this question, is it a fact that the Petrol Companies allow a better discount to trades people than to the military authorities although the spirit supplied to the military authorities is much more in quantity than that taken up by the ordinary trades people?

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: I have no exact information, but I understood the military got the benefit of the reduction in price given to all large bulk purchases.

ACQUISITION OF LAND FOR THE VIZAGAPATAM HARBOUR SCHEME.

455. Rai Bahadur G. O. Nag: With reference to the answer given on 15th January, 1923, to unstarred question No. 40, is it a fact that the amount of Rs. 11,80,175 spent towards acquisition of land for the Vizagapatam Harbour Scheme to the end of 1921-22 has been met from borrowed funds and that interest thereon is and will be accumulating until the Scheme materializes; if so, why was land bought when the project itself is still under consideration?

Mr. O. D. M. Hindley: The answer to the first part of the question is in the affirmative; the object of acquiring the land was to prevent the inflation of the cost of the land by speculation which might lead to such an increase in the cost of the project as to seriously embarrass its further consideration.

RESEARCHES IN WIRELESS TELEGRAPHY AND TELEPHONY.

456. Mr. W. M. Hussanally: (a) Is it a fact that Khan Bahadur Habibur Rahman Khan, M.R.I.; M.I.M.E., has been for sometime past engaged in researches in Wireless Telegraphy and Telephony?

(b) Has he ever applied for Government help in the matter of his researches?

(c) If yes, what help have the Government so far extended to him?

(d) Is there any other gentleman to the knowledge of Government employed in the same direction in India?

Colonel Sir Sydney Crookshank: (a) Khan Bahadur Habibur Rahman Khan, M.R.I., M.I.M.E., has been a licensee of Government for the purpose of research on his own account in radio telegraphy and telephony since March 1922 but no information is available as to the use which has been made of the license.

(b) Yes.

(c) In April and October 1912 and again in May 1918 he was offered facilities to experiment in the Post and Telegraph Storeyard at Calcutta, but no advantage was taken of these offers.

In August 1920 he asked for a license and help in the way of apparatus and loan of staff and other expenses. He was granted "permission" to continue his "research" work but was told that no help of men or money could be guaranteed him.

In October 1920 he again asked for apparatus and expenses and was given the same reply.

In March 1921 he applied for a permit to purchase and import wireless apparatus but apparently was unable to purchase such.

Finally, in March 1922 he was the first person to whom a license was granted.

He recently sought further facilities and financial aid and was informed that such could only be considered if he would demonstrate the possibilities or utility of his alleged discoveries. It is understood that he is unwilling to afford such a demonstration.

(d) The direction of his experiments is unknown. Eleven other licensees of Government are in possession of experimental licenses.

Mr. K. Ahmed: May I hand over a pamphlet by Khan Bahadur Habibur Rahman Khan, whose services have already been recognised, but the importance of whose research work Government is neither fully aware of, nor has at all appreciated?

Colonel Sir Sydney Crookshank: I shall be very pleased to receive this pamphlet.

(Pamphlet was handed over by Mr. Ahmed.)

Mr. K. Ahmed: Will the Government be pleased to consider the desirability of granting any other additional help and monetary assistance to Khan Bahadur Habibur Rahman Khan in connection with the admirable researches which he is conducting?

Colonel Sir Sydney Crookshank: We are already in touch with this gentleman and we have asked him to tell us in what direction we can help him. He has not, so far, shown us how we can help in any way, and he is not prepared to state exactly what he wants. If he were to do so, we should be very pleased to help as far as possible, provided we did not go to any expense unless we saw that his research work was in a direction which was likely to be useful.

Mr. K. Ahmed: Is it not a fact, Sir, that in the correspondence which the Government of India had with him they informed him that he had made these researches and that he was within his rights in asking for monetary help of the Government similar to the research grants made to other people for research work on the same lines?

Colonel Sir Sydney Crookshank: Sir, I am not aware that Government has made any monetary advances to anybody else in this field of research. As I pointed out, every facility has been offered to this gentleman: he has been told that, if he wishes to go down to Karachi, he will be helped down there in the Wireless School. He has taken no advantage whatever of the offers which have been made to him.

Mr. K. Ahmed: Will the Government be pleased to inform this gentleman, Khan Bahadur Habibur Rahman Khan, that, in response to the appeal made to the Government of India, the Government are able to give him assistance in any way he desires?

Captain E. V. Sassoon: Sir, is it not a fact that the Government have offered to allow this gentleman an opportunity of proving his contentions and that he has not taken advantage of the offer of the Government?

Colonel Sir Sydney Crookshank: That is so.

POOLING OF WAGONS.

457. Mr. W. M. Hussanally (a) Is it a fact that after the pooling of wagons was introduced on Indian Railways the East Indian and the Bengal-Nagpur lines have carried more traffic than before, whereas the other broad gauge lines have carried less in consequence of the pooling?

(b) Will Government please give the figures for all broad gauge lines from 1916-17 to 1921-22?

(c) Do these figures show that the first two lines have profited at the expense of the other lines?

Mr. O. D. M. Hindley: (a) The Honourable Member is referred to the answer given to Mr. K. C. Neogy to-day on the same subject.

(b) The figures are given in Volume II of the Railway Administration Reports, copies of which are available in the Library.

(c) No.

COST OF THE POOLING OF WAGONS.

458. Mr. W. M. Hussanally: (a) What is the total cost per year of the pooling of wagons?

(b) Who bears the cost?

(c) Has the gain been commensurate with the cost? If so, how?

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley: (a) The estimated cost of the establishment for the direction of the wagon pool, which is also employed for certain accounting and statistical work, is Rs. 1,20,000 a year, excluding an initial outlay of Rs. 7,000 for the purchase of furniture, registers, etc.

(b) The expenditure is divisible between the railway administrations parties to the wagon pool.

(c) Yes. Because it has enabled Railways to make better use of the rolling stock available and thereby facilitated the movement of traffic.

EXTENSION OF THE DEOLALI CANTONMENT.

459. Mr. W. M. Hussanally: (a) Is it a fact that the Cantonment of Deolali in the Bombay Presidency has been extended to the adjoining village of Bhugar?

(b) If so, when?

(c) Were objections invited from the residents of the village before the extension was sanctioned?

(d) Will Government be pleased to place on the table the correspondence relating to the extension?

2. (a) Is it a fact that on the representation of the people, they were excused payment of taxes levied in the Cantonment?

(b) Is it a fact that these taxes have been re-imposed on the villagers?

(c) If so, why?

(d) Will the Government be pleased to lay on the table the correspondence relating to the matter?

3. Is it a fact that in consequence of the re-levying of the taxes in question there is serious discontent among the people?

4. Is it a fact that they have in consequence observed Hartal for 45 days?

5. What do Government propose to do to allay the discontent?

Mr. E. Burdon: 1. (a) Yes.

(b) In November 1918.

(c), (d) and 2-5. The Government are making inquiries on the further points which are raised by these portions of the Honourable Member's question and I will communicate the result to the Honourable Member as soon as possible. When the correspondence has been concluded, I will also inform the Honourable Member whether that part of it to which he has referred can be laid upon the table.

HEDJAZ PILGRIMS AND REPATRIATION OF DESTITUTES.

460. Haji Wajihuddin: Will the Government be pleased to lay on the table a statement showing the numbers of outgoing Hedjaz Pilgrims in each of the last 10 years, also the numbers in each year who were repatriated at the expense of Government or public bodies with the amounts spent by the Government of India in each year?

The Honourable Mr. A. C. Chatterjee: In 1913-14 and 1914-15 the pilgrims numbered 16,838 and 11,700. From 1915-16 to 1918-19 owing to the war the number of pilgrims was very small. It amounted to 7,764 for the four years period. From 1919-20 to 1922-23 the numbers have been 12,121, 22,689, 10,854 and 12,550 respectively. The Government of India have not full information about the numbers repatriated from year to year. But 500 were so treated in 1921-22 at a cost to Government of Rs. 40,000. In 1922-23 the Central Haj Committee repatriated 1,054 persons at a cost of Rs. 29,664-11 as stated in my reply to a question on the subject put on 16th January 1923.

FIRING OF TIME GUN AT 12 NOON IN THE MEERUT CANTONMENT.

461. Haji Wajihuddin: Will the Government be pleased to state (a) why firing of Gun at 12 noon has been stopped in Meerut Cantonment, (b) In how many other places this scheme has been adopted, (c) What amount is spent in each firing, (d) What amount was budgeted and how much spent during the year, (e) Why it was not stopped in Delhi?

Mr. E. Burdon: (a) So far as the Government of India are aware, no orders have been issued to stop the firing of the time gun in the Meerut Cantonment.

(b) and (e). No orders have been issued stopping the firing of time guns at any of the other stations for which these guns are normally authorised.

(c) Approximately Rs. 1/8 per round of blank ammunition but the cost depends on the nature of the ordnance used.

(d) Figures of the actual cost are not available, but approximately a sum of Rs. 50,000 is budgeted for.

SEPARATION OF SUDDER BAZAR FROM THE MEERUT CANTONMENT.

462. Haji Wajihuddin: What has been decided regarding the separation of Sudder Bazar from the Cantonment of Meerut and whether the introduction of Hydro-Electric system under progress will be extended to Sudder Bazar?

Mr. E. Burdon: No decision has yet been arrived at on the question of the separation of the Sudder Bazar from the cantonment area. As regards the second part of the question, I stated on the 22nd September last in reply to the Honourable Member's question No. 228, that it had been decided that the Cantonment should not participate in the joint hydro-electric scheme. The separate cantonment scheme is still under consideration and it cannot yet be said whether it will be possible to include the Sudder Bazar in it or not.

MUHAMMADANS ON THE S. A. S. OF THE POST AND TELEGRAPH ACCOUNT DEPARTMENT.

463. Haji Wajihuddin: Referring to the reply given to my interpellation on 25th January, 1922, will the Government be pleased to state whether any steps have since been taken to make the adequate representation of the Mohammadans on the Sub-Account Service of the Post and Telegraph Account Department?

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: The information is being collected and will be furnished to the Honourable Member as soon as possible.

RUINED MOSQUES AND GRAVEYARDS AROUND THE NEW SECRETARIAT BUILDINGS.

464. Haji Wajihuddin: Will the Government be pleased to lay on the table a detailed statement showing location of all the ruined mosques and graveyards within a radius of 7 miles from New Secretariat Buildings under construction and whether a portion of or any of them has been demolished or sanction of repairs disallowed and if so, why?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: The area specified comprises not only the whole of the present city of Delhi and its suburbs to the north, but also the sites of the six previous cities of Delhi beyond the Kutub to the south. In this area there are innumerable ruins of graveyards, mosques and tombs. Government are not prepared to undertake the expense of preparing such a detailed statement as the question indicates.

Mr. K. Ahmed: Is it not a fact, Sir, that the Honourable the Home Member, only last week, I suppose, promised when I handed over to him a vernacular circular printed in Urdu saying that there were demolitions of the mosques and disallowance of sanction by the Chief Commissioner of Delhi with regard to certain mosques?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: The circular referred to certain allegations that the mosques were being demolished. The present question relates to the preparation of a survey of a very large area containing very numerous ruins. The two questions are not, I think, connected.

Mr. K. Ahmed: Do I understand, Sir, that the Honourable the Home Member is not keeping up his promise?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: No, Sir; the Honourable Member must not understand that.

Mr. K. Ahmed: Is it not a fact, Sir, that the Honourable Member did promise in this Assembly last week when I handed over that circular to him, that he will take proper steps to remove the anomaly?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: I promised that I would make inquiry, and the inquiry is not yet complete.

OPENING OF PORT OF CALCUTTA FOR OUTGOING HEDJAZ PILGRIMS.

465. Haji Wajihuddin: What arrangements are being made to have the port of Calcutta opened for the outgoing Hedjaz Pilgrims as was recommended by the Assembly in the last winter Session at Delhi?

The Honourable Mr. A. C. Chatterjee: The question is under consideration in consultation with the Government of Bengal.

Mr. K. Ahmed: Is there any arrangement, Sir, or any scheme set on foot or under contemplation for starting the port of Chittagong in Eastern Bengal?

The Honourable Mr. A. C. Chatterjee: This question does not arise.

DISTRICT HAJ COMMITTEES IN INDIA.

466. Haji Wajihuddin: Will the Government be pleased to lay on the table a list of all District Haj Committees in India showing names of Chairman and Secretaries also the work done by each of them during the last 10 years, also the amount of funds available with them and the amounts of contributions (if any) given by them during the said period to help destitute Indian Pilgrims for return journey from Jeddah?

The Honourable Mr. A. C. Chatterjee: I understand that District Haj Committees have been formed by Local Governments in many provinces. The Government of India do not possess the detailed information required by the Honourable Member.

UNSTARRED QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

2ND CLASS WAITING ROOMS AT VICTORIA TERMINUS.

213. Khan Bahadur Sarfaraz Hussain Khan: (a) Is it a fact that the station Victoria Terminus on the G. I. P. Railway is not provided with 1st and 2nd class waiting rooms for gentlemen passengers?

(b) If so, why so, and

(c) Will the Government be pleased to state what action they propose to take to remove this grievance of the travelling public?

(d) Will the Government be pleased to state the number of 1st and 2nd class tickets sold at that station during the year 1921-22?

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley: (a), (b) and (c). I would refer the Honourable Member to the reply given on the 15th September, 1921 to Question No. 197 asked by Mr. B. S. Kamat on the same subject.

(d) The number of first and second class tickets sold at the Victoria Terminus station during the year 1921-22 was as follows:

	1st Class.	2nd Class.
Passengers	47,435	180,015
Season tickets	315	4,928

GUARD OVER LANSDOWNE BRIDGE, SUKKUR.

214. Mr. W. M. Hussanally: (a) Is it a fact that the Lansdowne Railway bridge at Sukkur is being guarded by the military ever since the war?

(b) If so, is it a fact that there have been complaints against the guard interfering with men and women pedestrians over the bridge?

(c) Why is it necessary to maintain this guard now that the war is over?

(d) Who pays for the guard, the Army Department or the Railway?

(e) If a guard is necessary why cannot a guard of the Railway Police be substituted?

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley: The matter is under enquiry and a reply will be sent to the Honourable Member later.

CLOSING OF LANSDOWNE BRIDGE.

215. Mr. W. M. Hussanally: (a) Is it a fact that the Lansdowne Railway Bridge, Sukkur, is closed at 6 P.M. to vehicular and pedestrian traffic?

(b) Is it a fact that the public have made representations for extending the time of closure to 9 or 10 P.M.?

(c) Are the Government aware that the Indus at this point separates the two large and populous towns of Sukkur and Rohri, and that there is a considerable amount of vehicular and pedestrian traffic over the bridge?

(d) What are the objections to keeping the bridge open to such traffic up to 9 or 10 P.M.?

(e) If not, do the Government propose to issue orders that the convenience of the public be respected in this matter?

Mr. O. D. M. Hindley: (a) and (c). The reply is in the affirmative.

(b) No such representations have been received by any of the head offices of the railway.

(d) For the safety of the public no vehicular and pedestrian traffic can be permitted after dark.

(e) The convenience of the public is given every respect consistent with the safe use of the bridge as a means of railway communication.

LINKING OF BOMBAY AND KARACHI BY RAIL.

216. Mr. W. M. Hussanally: (a) Is it a fact that there was a proposal before the war to link Bombay and Karachi by a broad gauge of Railway through the Runn of Cutch or passing by the Runn?

(b) Is it a fact that the Rao of Cutch would not allow the railway to pass through his territory?

(c) Is it a fact that the project has been all along held up on that account?

(d) Have any efforts been made since to obtain his consent?

(e) If not, has the project been definitely given up?

(f) If so, which is the next best route proposed?

(g) Is there any likelihood of any such line being constructed within the next few years?

Mr. O. D. M. Hindley: The Honourable Member is referred to the reply given on the 22nd September 1921 to his unstarred question No. 9 on the same subject. The survey of the line has since been resumed and is now in progress.

BROAD GAUGE CONNECTION BETWEEN KARACHI AND DELHI.

217. Mr. W. M. Hussanally: (a) Was there any proposal to connect Karachi and Delhi by a broad gauge before the war by converting the J. B. Railway?

(b) Why was the proposal abandoned?

(c) Is there any likelihood of connecting Karachi with upper India within the present generation?

(d) What was the route then proposed and now finally adopted?

Mr. O. D. M. Hindley: (a) to (d). Karachi is already connected with Delhi by a Broad Gauge Railway. The practicability of providing a more direct connection has been the subject of investigations for several years. Two main alternatives have been considered, i.e., (a) the conversion of the metre gauge between Agra and Hyderabad and (b) conversion of the metre gauge between Hyderabad and Balotra in continuation of a new broad gauge line east of Balotra. No final decision as to the best alignment has been arrived at. The cost of either scheme would be very considerable and it is not possible for Government to say when funds will be available.

REFRESHMENT ROOMS ON N.-W. RAILWAY.

218. Mr. W. M. Hussanally: (a) How many Refreshment Rooms for Hindus and Mohammadans are there on the N.-W. Railway?

(b) Was there formerly a Refreshment Room at Dadu? Has it been abolished now? If so, why?

(c) Is it proposed to re-open it again?

(d) Is there any Refreshment Room for Hindus or Mohammadans in the Sind Section of N.-W. Railway?

(e) If not, do Government propose to open any at Rohri, Sukkur, Ruk, Shikarpur, Kotri, Hyderabad or Karachi?

Mr. O. D. M. Hindley: (a) There are eleven Hindu and ten Mohammadan refreshment rooms on the North-Western Railway.

For the names of the stations at which these rooms are provided the Honourable Member is referred to the North-Western Railway Time and Fare Table.

(b) and (c). Government have no information but enquiry will be made.

(d) The reply is in the negative.

(e) Government understand that it is proposed to open, in due course, refreshment rooms for Indians at Rohri, Ruk and Hyderabad.

CONTRACT OF REFRESHMENT ROOMS, N.-W. RAILWAY.

219. Mr. W. M. Hussanally: (a) Is it a fact that Messrs. Naser Wangee & Co. of Karachi, held the contract of Refreshment Rooms and Dining Cars on the N.-W. Railway for many years?

(b) Is it a fact that one Sheikh Jalalud-Deen had the Kotri Refreshment Room sub-let to him by Messrs. Naser Wangee & Co., and conducted the same for several years?

(c) Is it a fact that the Railway had leased to him the Tea Room at Jungshahi, which he conducted for several years?

(d) Is it a fact that the contract of Messrs. Naser Wangee & Co. was terminated recently? If so, why?

(e) Is it a fact that on termination of contract of the above firm no tenders or applications were invited from the public by advertisement or otherwise but the business was entrusted to a European firm of Madras?

(f) If so, why?

(g) What were the terms of the contract with Messrs. Naser Wangee & Co., and what are the terms of the contract with this new firm (Messrs. Spencer & Co.)?

(h) Was there no European or Anglo-Indian available all over Sind and Punjab, to be entrusted with this business, if a European was necessary?

(i) Is it a fact that when Messrs. Naser Wanjee & Co. were deprived of their business, Sheikh Jalalud-Din was not only deprived of Kotri but also of Jungshahi Tea Room which he held independently?

(j) If yes, what were the reasons?

(k) Is it a fact that he made several applications against the deprivation to the Railway but without effect?

(l) Is it a fact that since Messrs. Spencer & Co. have taken up the business there have been several complaints specially by Indian passengers against incivility and want of attention shown to them by their servants?

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley: (a) Yes.

(b) The Railway Authorities have no knowledge of this. Messrs. Naser Wanjee's contract contained a clause prohibiting subletting under the penalty of termination of contract.

(c) Sheikh Jalaludin worked Jungshahi tea room for some years on the usual arrangement for Khansamah run tea rooms subject to one month's notice.

(d) Yes. Messrs. Naser Wanjee and Company resigned giving 6 months' notice on the 20th May 1922.

(e) Yes.

(f) In the interests of the travelling public it was considered advisable to employ a firm with large resources and of known experience in successful railway catering.

(g) The agreement with Messrs. Naser Wanjee and Company was for an indefinite period subject to termination at 6 months' notice on either side and the agreement with Messrs. Spencer and Company has been drawn up on the same lines.

(h) A number of firms in the Punjab and elsewhere put in applications for the contract but it was given to Messrs. Spencer and Company, for the reasons mentioned in answer to (f) above.

(i) Messrs. Naser Wanjee and Company resigned—vide answer to (d) above. Sheikh Jalaludin was given notice at Jungshahi in October 1922.

(j) His services at Jungshahi were no longer required.

(k) No such applications have been received by the Agent, North-Western Railway. Sheikh Jalaludin, however, asked for a recommendation to Messrs. Spencer and Company, which was given, and it is understood that he is now in Messrs. Spencer's employment as Manager of one of their refreshment rooms.

(l) On the contrary, general satisfaction has been expressed at the marked improvement in the North-Western Railway catering arrangements.

RATES FOR CARRIAGE OF RAILWAY COAL.

220. Mr. N. M. Joshi: With reference to the answers given last month to unstarred questions Nos. 80 and 98, is it a fact that the rates for the carriage of railway coal were reduced from 1st April, 1920, without any calculations having been made as to the net gain or loss to Government from the reduction?

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley: No. The rates for carriage of railway coal were not reduced on 1st April 1920 but the rates for public coal were increased from that date.

DR. GOUR'S MARRIAGE BILL.

221. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala: Will Dr. Gour be pleased to state whether his attention has been invited to a note in the Nation of Lahore, dated the 15th February, 1923, at page 2, headed "Dr. Gour's Marriage Bill—Delhi Hindus' Protest"?

Dr. H. S. Gour: The answer is in the negative.

INCHCAPE COMMITTEE'S REPORT.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar (Madras: Nominated Non-Official): May I ask the Leader of the House whether the Government will give us a special opportunity for discussing the Inchcape Committee's Report apart from the opportunities we may have of discussing along with the Budget?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey (Home Member): As the House is well aware it will be exceedingly difficult to give any time up till about the 25th or 26th of the present month, as all the days are fully engaged for discussions connected with the Budget. If we gave time after that, it would mean prolonging the sittings of the Assembly. I will, however, bear this in mind and see if it is in any way possible to make any arrangement. But I may say that Government thought that the best opportunity for discussion on the Inchcape Committee's Report would be in the course of the general discussions and during the discussions on the Demands for Grants.

MESSAGE FROM THE COUNCIL OF STATE.

Secretary of the Assembly: Sir, the following Message has been received from the Secretary of the Council of State:

"I am directed to inform you that the Bill further to amend the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, the European Vagrancy Act, 1874, the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, and the Central Provinces Courts Act, 1917, in order to provide for the removal of certain existing discriminations between European British subjects and Indians in criminal trials and proceedings, which was passed by the Legislative Assembly at its meeting on the 21st February 1923, was passed by the Council of State at its meeting on the 1st March 1923 with the amendments indicated in the attached statement. The Council of State requests the concurrence of the Legislative Assembly in the amendments."

Sir, I lay on the table the Bill as amended by the Council of State.

GENERAL DISCUSSION ON THE BUDGET.

FIRST STAGE.

Mr. President: We shall now proceed to the general discussion of the Budget, and for the purposes of Rule 41, I appoint 15 minutes as the time-limit for speeches.

Dr. H. S. Gour (Nagpur Division: Non-Muhammadan): Is it for to-day, Sir, or for to-day and to-morrow? Do I understand the Chair to appoint 15 minutes as the time-limit for speeches for to-day only or for to-day and to-morrow?

Mr. President: I see the Honourable Member has last year's precedent in his mind. I appoint 15 minutes for to-day.

Mr. S. C. Shahani (Sind Jagirdars and Zamindars: Landholders): Sir, in the general discussion of this year's Budget, I must first give expression to my satisfaction with the character of the Budget generally. The budgets of the last five years have shown a deficit of 100 crores—a rake's progress undoubtedly to ruin. This year's Budget shows that the rake has realised his peril and begun the safe policy of balancing his revenue and expenditure. I am not going to content myself with singing the praises of the new budget, however carefully and well it has been squared. It will be my endeavour to-day to draw the attention of the Honourable the Finance Member to what have appeared to me to be the chief defects in the Budget of the present year. The first unsatisfactory feature of the Budget, according to me, is that the rake is squaring his budget by taxing the poorest man. The general position that has been assumed is unexceptionable, namely, that the annual expenditure of India must come out of the savings of the country, whether on capital or revenue account. While no one will dispute this his general position, I think no one in the House will share the belief of the Honourable the Finance Member that the poor man in India has any margin of saving. The Finance Member is a new comer to India, if undoubtedly a very able new comer. I trust that he will take due note of the local conditions and quickly realise that the poor man in this country is indeed very badly off. It ought to be no news to him, for he must have generally acquainted himself by now with the actual condition of things here in India, when I come forward and say that most of the poor men in this country are already living a sub-human life. Judging from the condition of things on my own lands I must state that the poor people have often to go without two meals a day. They have no pakka or permanent houses to live in; they have no hospitals to go to when they fall ill; they have no mosque or temples to go to for daily prayers; and they have no schools for their children. This is the condition of things in India. So that when the budget is sought to be balanced by doubling the price of the poor man's salt, I must make bold to say that this is a very bad device. I think the best way to balance the budget would be to cancel the expected deficit of 4½ crores by making further cuts in the expenditure of the country. It is most gratifying to see that the Retrenchment Committee has been able to suggest a saving to the extent of 18 crores. (A Voice: "19½ crores") 19½ crores. But if we take into consideration the actual incorporation in the present budget of the reductions recommended by the Retrenchment Committee, we find that only 6½ crores have been reduced on the civil side and 5½ crores on the military side, i.e., 7 crores less than the Committee's recommendation. I might here in this connection state that it is a matter for pride for the Honourable the last Finance Member that he was able to so properly constitute the Committee of Retrenchment. Lord Inchcape, the Chairman of the Committee, has been prominent for his persuasive qualities. He has persuaded our Commander-in-Chief, our able Commander-in-Chief who, we are happy, is not merely a soldier but a statesman, to consent to a reduction of numbers in the military forces, both British and Indian. But for this consent I think we would have found it very difficult indeed to get the War Office to accept the reduction. I am not sure that the War Office has yet accepted the reduction; but I do know that the great man who is just now presiding over the military affairs of India has consented to the reduction, and should therefore think that it would be difficult for the War Office to refuse to accept the recommendations that may be said to have been jointly put forward by Lord Inchcape and His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief. While I say it is a matter for gratification to see such a joint effort made for the reduction of military expenditure, I think it my duty to point out that the proposed reduction is yet very inadequate. India has so far gone in for a very wasteful military expenditure. In no other country I think is such a large standing army ready for war maintained; and it has to be recognised that this large standing force with no reserves is maintained for the purposes of safeguarding the imperial interests in Asia, although England does not undertake to share the expense. The system of no reserve forces in India should be discontinued as early as possible. It is a novel system which does not obtain anywhere else in the world. It is also essentially necessary that the territorial forces should be organised from among the citizens of India. The Government of India will be able to materially reduce its military expenditure only then. I mention all this in order to show that the poor man's salt should not be doubled in price, but that further cuts should be gone in for especially on the military side of expenditure. But let us for one moment assume that these further cuts are not possible. If they are not possible, then what should be done? I respectfully submit that the cotton import duty should be raised from 11 to 15 per cent. (Cries of "No, no.") I hear "No, no", but you, Sir, would permit my expressing my views. I know what happened last year in this connection, and I know the impression left then upon the country. In the face of a terrible deficit, a proposal had emanated from Government to raise the cotton import duty, which had been found to be paying, from 11 to 15 per cent. I say in the face of such a deficit this Government proposal was dropped by the House. Nay, the House in discussing it trifled with it. A Member went the length of suggesting that the duty be raised from 11 to 11½ per cent. and so on. The impression on the country generally, I must respectfully point out, is that the interests of India are being subordinated to those of Lancashire and this impression will only receive some kind of confirmation, if even this year the price of the poor man's salt is doubled, and the course left open to the Government of India to supplement its revenue by an enhancement of the cotton import duty is not adopted. I remember very well last year injury to the interests of the consumer in the shape of high prices was urged as being the one great objection to this course being adopted. I know this is the main shaft in the quiver of those having vested interests here to wound protection with. You remember only a few days ago the amendment on the fiscal policy of India of the Honourable Mr. Innes was passed, though it omitted all reference to the policy of protection which has been after such careful consideration recommended for adoption by the Fiscal

[Mr. S. C. Shahani.]

Commission. The Honourable Mr. Innes' ground was the one urged on the occasion of the debate on the enhancement of the cotton import duty by the Honourable Sir Campbell Rhodes, namely, that the interests of the consumer would suffer. I have got to point out that it is not a right view to contemplate a nation as being a body of consumers, rather than as a body of producers, that is to say, entities working in industry which while it supplies their needs also conduces to their growth by exercising their faculties. It is a wrong thing to imagine a nation as being merely a body of consumers. A vigorous national life will be impossible without industries; and for the sake of vigorous life, for the sake of our necessary growth in culture, skill and powers of united production, we ought to secure for ourselves, even at some sacrifice of material prosperity, the adoption of a bold national policy of industrialisation, which will not be possible at this stage if even reasonable import duties are not levied, and not levied on account of considerations which would be extraneous in their nature and which would not be in keeping with the real welfare of the people. This much for my first point. Then I pass on to the consideration of the Currency Exchange of the country, and of the attitude that has been assumed by the Finance Member in regard to this. As I have said, the Finance Member is a shrewd observer. He also has the reputation of being an expert in Currency and Exchange. He has in my opinion given us valid reasons for adopting just at this time a waiting policy. He says it would not be easy just now to stabilise the rupee-sterling exchange by fixing the rupee at 1s. 4d. True, but how about the intrinsic merits of this gold exchange standard. We expected some pronouncement upon it. Has it or has it not succeeded? Is it likely to succeed hereafter? My respectful submission is that our present Currency system of the gold exchange standard is essentially a managed system, that is to say, it is operating in consequence of the interference of the Government by sale of Council Bills and Reverse Councils. The Government seeks to link the rupee to the pound sterling at the rate fixed by itself. It is obvious that so long as this system remains in force, the Secretary of State, if he be so minded, can use his powers of management and control to manipulate the system to serve interests other than our own. The system must therefore be changed. We have all known the stress which devolved upon the system from the rise in the price of silver and other causes and how it broke down under that stress during the war. If this managed system did break down during the war, it should, according to me, be vigorously attacked; and the Honourable the Finance Member should give us the benefit of his opinion whether or not the system which was pronounced by the Chamberlain Commission in 1913 as being a most scientific system is really so. My opinion is that it is high time that we reverted to the system that was recommended by the Fowler Committee in 1898, namely, the gold standard and gold currency with notes based on gold and rupee a token coin and not the gold exchange standard. Even if the Finance Minister comes to the conclusion that at the present time we ought not to revert to the gold standard and gold currency as recommended by the Fowler Committee, I would request a further expression of opinion from him with regard to the interference of the Secretary of State in our present currency system. He has often managed it, by the issue of Council Bills and by other methods of transferring money to England for the payment of Indian liabilities there to the detriment of our commercial and industrial interests. Is it not right then that this power of management and control should be transferred to the High Commissioner who is now an Indian and who, I trust, will hereafter be an Indian. He is the accredited agent of the Government of India and he should have the power to manage the necessary transferences rather than the Secretary of State who should be shorn of his power of mischief. The proper function of the Secretary of State is the management and control of the administration of India, and surely it is no proper function of his to govern the issue of Council Bills or to direct the adoption of other measures relating to our currency policy. I would now refer to one other subject, namely, the provincial contributions, which have been discussed to a certain extent, in the new Budget. The Honourable the Finance Member has told us that the present is not the time to consider the reduction of the Provincial contributions. He, however, shrewdly refers to a recent pronouncement on this point by the Government of India. He tells us that the Government have very plainly laid it down that these provincial contributions shall be reduced and eventually extinguished. I feel thankful for this his statement. I should have liked it very much if he had added reasons as to why these provincial contributions should be abolished. My idea is that the provincial contributions should not be continued because of our goal which is autonomy or responsible Government, and for which separate finances are a necessity. So long as provincial contributions continue the Government of India will depend upon the Provincial Governments and will become their pensioner and the Provincial Governments on the other hand will suffer from interference from the needy Central Government. The sooner they are done away with the better. No doubt the first consideration is the covering of the deficit in the Budget.

Mr. President: The Honourable Member has exceeded his fifteen minutes.

Mr. S. C. Shahani: I will take only a minute more. It is a pity that no mention has been made of Education in the Finance Member's budget speech. If I refer to the condition of things in my own province, I find that but 20,000 rupees a year are spent on the higher education of my Province, and not more than 5,000 to the technical. This is to say the least a deplorable condition. Taxes raised by the State come back to the tax-payers in the shape of the education of their children. Look to what is being done in England and in other European countries or in America where Governments study the lasting welfare of the people. I would request the Honourable the Finance Member to turn his attention to the education under the control of the Central Government. The Government of India alone of all modern Governments has been unwilling to spend more than a mere pittance on higher education. If the present policy is continued, the consequences will make themselves painfully prominent for a long long time to come in the lowering of the culture and other mental equipment of the Indians.

Mr. R. A. Spence (Bombay: European): I trust that the Honourable the Finance Member will permit me to give him my tribute and to congratulate him on his first Budget speech. I think, Sir, that it is a good omen for the future that once again the burden of the finances of India are placed on the shoulders of one whose family has for generations served India and I trust that the connection of what I may call "service" families will long continue with India for the benefit of India. I also wish to join with him in the note of regret which he sounded that he who had sown in lean years, who had ploughed amongst storms and the rumblings of storms is not able to introduce a Budget which showed the results at least of his hard work. He had had the bad time before and when at last the good time came, he was not able to present his budget. Various papers have asked what is the most outstanding feature of this Budget? I think that the outstanding feature of this Budget is the readiness which the Government has shown to act on the wishes of the taxpayer and reduce expenditure, and whilst we feel a debt of gratitude to the Inchcape Committee for what they have done and the way they have shown how we can reduce expenditure, I would ask this House not to forget the debt of gratitude which they owe to that hide-bound bureaucratic Government, the Government of India, who have shown themselves so ready even to anticipate the findings of the Inchcape Committee. Sir, the Finance Member first reviewed the results of the year now drawing to a close, and it was, Sir, satisfactory to know that despite that drain on India—not the same drain as other people think—the drain of the import of bullion, the balance of trade in our favour was no less than 20 crores. But Sir, I must cross swords with him when he gives as his opinion the fact that the heavy duty on so-called luxury articles has not adversely affected the trades concerned. He doubts whether the duty of 30 per cent. is responsible for the practical stoppage of the trade in European motor cars and the substitution therefor of cheap American cars. Well, Sir, if he had been resident in India during the past year, if he had made his inquiries as I am sure he will do in the future, or if he had merely sat still and listened, he would have learnt that unquestionably this duty has affected the importation of cars. Why do the people of this country import cheap American cars? It is because they have to; because the duty compels them to, because the cheaper the car the less duty they have to pay. Motor traffic, Sir, in this country is a necessity and not a luxury. The Honourable the Finance Member in the same speech that he defended this tax of 30 per cent. on motor cars said that there was practically no limit to the amount of money which might be usefully spent on the development of transportation in India. He said it was limited mainly by the amount of capital available, and yet in his speech he defended the tax which is hampering the development of transportation in India. Sir, are we to look to that hoary annual, the migration to Simla, for the reason for classing motor cars as luxuries? Is it because the Government of India live in the clouds and do without motor cars for six months in the year that they look upon them as luxuries? If it is, then, Sir, I look forward to the day when Government will spend the hot weather in the cool Secretariat of Raisina. The Honourable the Finance Member when comparing the imports of motor cars in the past year with the year 1921-22 forgets the reasons for the very small import of cars in 1921-22, namely, that in that year the merchants in India were disposing of the very large accumulations of imports of the previous year, that is, the year 1920-21, when stocks valued at over 12 crores of rupees—compare that with last year—had been imported. And I think if he compares his figures with those of the year before that, 1919-20, the year when exchange was high, he will find that imports were four crores, considerably more than last year. I maintain that you cannot develop transportation in India with a duty of 30 per cent., and I hope that all those Members of this House who are interested in transportation in India will join with me in trying to get a reduction of this duty.

[Mr. R. A. Spence.]

Sir, still sticking to the past, there is another bad tax which has been brought forward from the past and which I would like to see reduced. I refer to the tax of 15 per cent. on imported foodstuffs, by which I mean mainly tinned foodstuffs. These are a necessity to many people in the mofassal and if the importation of these tinned meats were encouraged there would probably be far less slaughter of animals for food in this country—I think that is an argument which ought to appeal to a lot of you—It is a very good argument, Sir, and it ought to appeal to the House. Then let us take another argument, the policy of the free breakfast table. That is a policy which has been adopted at Home, and, judging from the howls of “No, never” which I heard when a duty was proposed on salt, I should say it is a policy which is believed in in this country. It cannot be said, Sir, that a duty of 15 per cent. is put on imported foodstuffs for purposes of protection. There is no indigenous industry to be protected, and therefore, as it is not put on as a protective duty, I hope that all those who are in favour of protection will support me in asking for the reduction of this duty. Similarly, Sir, all those in favour of free trade ought also to support me.

Well, Sir, coming to the budget for this year, the Honourable the Finance Member stated that Government had reviewed the various proposals for new taxation which had been put forward last year and that one by one they had been rejected, and finally the Government had had to come on to the salt tax. Well, Sir, I was one of those who supported the salt tax last year, and despite the tone of this House I support it this year. The burden of taxation over many years has been laid on the shoulders of the middle classes and has been steadily reduced from the poor, the salt tax itself has been lowered. Now, why should not this tax be put on to the shoulders of everybody? It weighs on the poor but as a feather. It is about 12 annas a family. (A Voice: “Three annas a head.”) Well, that is not so very burdensome. Anyhow Sir, this tax was proposed because the Honourable the Finance Member abhors a deficit just as much as nature abhors a vacuum. He is, I am convinced, an able strategist, and he is aware therefore of that fundamental rule that you must not merely plan an attack but also prepare a way of retreat. I hope, Sir, in the presence of the Commander-in-Chief that I have put that rule correctly. Well, Sir, I will give him two avenues of retreat in case his salt tax is thrown out. The first is one which we advocated last year and which I am sorry the Government did not see their way to accept. It is that hoary-headed annual the tax on silver. We are all agreed that India must be a free country as regards the transit of silver and so we propose that there should be a tax only on silver consumed in this country. Well, Sir, I can almost hear the Members of the Finance Department as they hear this old hoary-headed annual being put forward saying, “We do not like it.” Far be it from me, Sir, to compare them to children, but may I remind them of their childish days when they said “I do not like it”. It was nasty stuff, the medicine which they had to take, but it did them good; so also, Sir, will the tax on silver. The other avenue is concerned with petrol. At present there is an excise tax on petrol of six annas a gallon, and I suggest that that excise tax be abolished and that a tax be put on the production of petrol. Now, Sir, if a tax of 6 annas a gallon is put on the production of petrol, the amount of money that Government will get is double what they have at present. But as we are going to have a salt tax, and as we are going to have a silver tax, we do not want quite as much money as that; so I suggest that we should have a reduction in taxation for this country, and that this tax on the production of petrol should only be increased by 3 annas, and that would give Government just the same as at present. A tax of 3 annas on production all round would give Government the money that they get at present from the excise tax, that is, on the petrol annually consumed in this country, and people in India would benefit. If, however, Government reversed their present policy and put a tax on production of 6 annas a gallon, and gave a rebate on the petrol consumed in this country, then we should get the same figure. I do think, Sir, that the price of petrol in this country is far too high, and although I do not like slang, and the language of the late Prime Minister has not always appealed to me, I might mention here that Oil Companies are excellent "hen roosts." I hope, Sir, they will take the warning, and that they will reduce this burden which India has been labouring under as to the price of petrol. Sir, finally, I join in the Honourable Finance Member's appeal that we should courageously shoulder this Budget and, with the help of the increase in taxation which he has proposed, and with the help of the change in taxation which I have proposed, we should in this last Session of the first Legislative Assembly under India's reformed constitution make one long strong pull, all together, whatever we may be, Democrats, Moderates, Independents or even Labour, to join with him in squaring this deficit. And then we can go back to our provinces with a very glad message to them. Just think of what we can say to them! We can say, 'we have effected retrenchment, we have done that—, and by wise taxation, we have done away with deficits—well, a good bit of the taxation has been passed by this Assembly, and therefore it must be wise—we have dug deep the foundation for future surpluses, and we bring you the glad tidings that, because of our action, Provincial contributions are going to be reduced and done away with; and, because Provincial contributions are going to be reduced or done away with, Provincial taxation will be reduced, and if we bring to the provinces that message, I think, Sir, I can hear the reply:—'Well done, good and faithful servants, return thou to the next Assembly'.

12 Noon.

[Mr. R. A. Spence.]

Maulvi Abul Kasem (Dacca Division: Muhammadan Rural): Sir, in the first place I will join my Honourable friends who have just spoken in offering my congratulations to the Honourable Finance Member for the improved condition of the Budget which he has been able to produce and for the very impressive speech with which he has presented it to us. In the first place, Sir, I must confess that I found this year's Budget less gloomy than I apprehended and more satisfactory than I anticipated; and the main feature of the Budget, if I may say so, Sir, is that an honest effort has been made by the Government to reduce our expenses, to follow the policy of retrenchment for which this House has cried hoarse, and that they have taken the pains to give some effect to the recommendations of the Inchcape Committee so far as they could in this short time at their disposal. While speaking of the Retrenchment Committee, I think I voice the view of this House and of my countrymen when I say that we are grateful to the Members of that Committee. Sir, it has been said, and said with a good deal of reason and justification, that Committees in this country were sometimes appointed by the Government or at the express wish of the people, but the object more or less has been to have a whitewash of the administrative policy, or to silence the people, if not to satisfy them. This much must now be said that at any rate the Inchcape Committee, for which this House is responsible, was formed with a different purpose altogether and great credit is due to the Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey for his work in this connection. He ought to be congratulated, Sir, for having secured for that Committee the services of distinguished personages whose opinions will carry weight not only with the Government of India, with the people of India, but with all Governments in the world; and they have also made a very careful examination of our finances and our administrative policy and expenses. This was, I believe, the first examination of our financial circumstances, and they have acquitted themselves very creditably. Now, Sir, as has been said and as is so evident, the one thing in the Budget to which the people will have the greatest objection, as has been said and will be said repeatedly, is the proposed tax on salt. I might take you back a few years and say that, whatever the relative merits from a financial or revenue-producing standpoint may be, the salt tax has a history of its own. It was a tax, when the Government was absolutely bureaucratic, which was imposed upon the people and which was strongly protested against and criticised. My late lamented countryman, Mr. Gokhale, strongly agitated for the removal of this tax; and it must be said to his credit that it was he who got it reduced. Sir, even in those gloomy days of the war when everything was dark, the Government at the first, in the beginning, hesitated to re-impose the salt tax and it was towards the close that Sir William Meyer imposed, and that also I believe hesitatingly and reluctantly, a very small tax. And now, after the war is over, during peace times, when circumstances I believe have improved, to try and attempt to raise that tax by a hundred per cent. will certainly be protested against and will be resented by the people. But at the same time I would submit, Sir, that it will neither be advisable nor desirable to leave an uncovered deficit; and the only way to meet that deficit is either by further attempts at retrenchment or by fresh taxation. I think, Sir, that as long as the present conditions remain, as long as further efforts are not made by Government to raise the tax-paying capacity of the people, and to remove the economic distress under which the country is suffering, it will neither be advisable nor politic to impose any taxation whatever. Retrenchment, then, would be our whole remedy. Sir, the military expenses have been the subject of attack for many years past. We are glad to find, Sir, that the question of military expenses was permitted to be considered by the Inchcape Committee, and we are glad that the Inchcape Committee has made recommendations for some reductions in our military expenses. The Honourable the Finance Member has also gone a good way to accept the recommendations of the Committee in respect of the military expenditure, but, I submit, Sir, there is still room for reduction in that branch, and I believe with the sympathetic attitude of His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief and in consultation with the army authorities, it will still be possible to reduce the military expenditure so as to cover the deficit and to have no deficit at all in our next year's Budget.

Sir, several suggestions have been made by the Honourable Mr. Spence for fresh taxation. He proposes a tax on silver and on the production of petrol. I believe, Sir, there is a general feeling among my countrymen that there ought to be an export duty on petrol sent from this country, because we understand from reports in the press and from other sources that petrol produced in this country is sold at a much cheaper rate in Europe and America than it is sold in this country. Therefore, Sir, that is a source of revenue which will greatly help the Honourable the Finance

[Maulvi Abul Kasem.]

Member, and at the same time such a step will not be resented by the people of this country.

Then, Sir, I might say that there is great room for reduction of military expenditure by carrying out the policy which has been accepted by this House, I mean the Indianization of the Army. His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief has been pleased to say that some units in the Indian Army will be officered by Indians, and that should reduce our military burden to some extent, but I would go further and respectfully submit for his consideration that the experiment may be extended, and if the Indian units cannot be allowed to be completely officered by Indians, some Indian officers should be placed in every regiment both with a view to reduce the expenditure and also to Indianize the army. I would further submit, Sir, that my idea of the Indianization of the army is that gradually as circumstances, the safety of the country and efficiency would permit, Indianization should proceed by changing British units for Indian units. But in order to enable Indians to qualify themselves for offices in the army, I submit, Sir, that it is one of the essentials that we should have a Military College in this country, and I believe this House and my countrymen will gladly pay for the maintenance of that college.

Sir, it has been said that taxation, direct or indirect, is always unwelcome, but if we the people of India protest against fresh taxation, it is not on sentimental grounds, but because we think that we have reached the limit and any further taxation will be the last straw on the camel's back.

Before, I conclude, Sir, I would say that we in this House fully appreciate the endeavours made by the Honourable the Finance Member to produce such a satisfactory Budget, and I can assure him that he will have our support to make his Budget balance evenly so as to meet the revenue and expenditure as long as we can and as far as we can go without offending the country and without neglecting our trust and responsibility which we owe to the people whom we represent here. I trust, Sir, that he will be able, with the assistance of the other Departments of the Government, to further reduce the military expenditure and to make both ends meet. The office of the Finance Member is, I believe, the most arduous in the whole constitution of the Government. Every Department calls upon him to pay funds for its efficiency and for their wants. Some of these wants are no doubt reasonable and legitimate, but he has not sufficient money to meet all their demands, and therefore, Sir, his task is very hard; but I believe, Sir, in the person of the Honourable Sir Basil Blackett we have a man who can undertake the task and carry it out successfully. I hope and trust, Sir, that, if in the morning of his office he has been able to produce an improved Budget, when he lays down the reins of his high office he will be in a position to present a Budget so as to leave the finances of the country in a way which will enable the Government to reduce the economic distress of this country, and that he will leave the land and the people of this country which he was pleased to call his native land, happier, more contented and more satisfied than he found them.

Mr. Sambanda Mudaliar (Salem and Coimbatore cum North Arcot: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I desire to offer a few remarks on the Budget presented by the Honourable Finance Member. Let me first thank the Honourable Finance Member on his lucidity and candour which characterised his speech. But it is a matter of great regret that the country is confronted with a serious problem of finding ways and means to meet a deficit of 4½ crores of rupees for 1923-24. One may be inclined to be unduly critical of the Budget which the Finance Member placed before this Assembly but our thoughts should be sobered by wisdom and prudence. It will be remembered that year before last the Home Member who was in charge of finance said that notwithstanding the restrictions in regard to the vote of this House in respect of certain items of expenditure (non-votable), this House is invested with a real power in regard to the control of expenditure inasmuch as this House can give or withhold its assent to proposals of new taxation, where it becomes necessary, in consequence of the insufficiency of revenue. This House co-operated with the Government by acquiescing substantially in all their proposals for taxation in the expectation that revenue and expenditure will be so adjusted as not to leave a deficit. We see, however, that there is a considerable fall in our revenue and abnormal increase in our expenditure especially on the military side. The question for consideration is how best to meet this deficit. There are four ways of meeting the deficit, namely,—(1) cutting down expenditure, (2) borrowing, (3) increased taxation and (4) budgetting for a deficit. The Finance Member has clearly stated that it would be unwise to budget for a deficit and I concur in his view. In regard to borrowing, the Finance Member clearly stated that the Finance Department has been hard put to it in the task of financing the 100 crores of deficit accumulated in the past 5 years and that further borrowing may not be desirable. In dealing with this question, the Finance Member has told us how this deficit of 100 crores has been financed. He said that about 31 crores have been covered by the creation of paper money, representing nothing but the I. O. U.'s of the Government of India. The remainder amounting to 69 crores has been raised by borrowing. Moreover to the extent of 22 crores has thus far taken the form of issues of Treasury Bills to the public.

He has pointed out the dangers of financing further deficits either by the issue of unbacked currency notes or by an increase in the floating debt. He has further told us that the proceeds of Rupee or Sterling Loans should not be availed of for financing deficits but should be left free for financing existing capital liabilities and productive expenditure on our Railways. There is another method of financing a deficit by means of the issue of paper money without cover, but that is not a good expedient to be resorted to as it would lead to the debasing of the currency and consequent rise in prices. There remains the device of meeting the deficit by increase of taxation. The proposal of the Finance Member to increase the salt duty may be examined. In regard to the proposed increase in salt duty I am sure the whole country will protest with one voice. Salt is an article of necessity and no man, however poor, can afford to live without it. Besides, salt is required for feeding cattle. Salt duty is the one tax that is paid equally by the rich and poor in inverse proportion to their ability. The Finance Member wants to raise it by 100 per cent. at a stroke. This is a callous mockery of the poor. I am sure that the House will reject the proposal.

Then the only course left to make both ends meet in the Budget presented is the reduction of expenditure. The possibilities of economy in the civil and military expenditure of the Government have been completely exploited by the Retrenchment Committee, over which Lord Incheape presided, and I am glad they have recommended a reduction of about 19 crores. From their report it will be seen that the field where economy could most be effected is in military expenditure. The provision made in the Budget under this heading is 62 crores as against Rs. 57,75,00,000 recommended by the Incheape Committee for 1923-24. The country cannot afford to bear this large military expenditure—21 million pounds; now it is 42 million pounds. There must be not only economy but there should be retrenchment also. The army should be Indianised. The army in India was organised for war against a first-class European military power. It is not likely in our time to have to wage war against a first-class European power. The military problem in India at present is totally different from what it was some years back. It is now a question of protecting the Frontier and of assisting the civil in maintaining law and order. The Finance Member has not offered any excuse or justification for the inordinate proportion which the military expenditure bears to the total revenue. About 50 per cent. of the total revenue is absorbed in military expenditure. There is obviously no necessity for maintaining a huge army in the Frontier. The Afghan scare is over. Treaty with the Amir of Afghanistan was concluded. The trouble in Waziristan is almost over. These facts suggest the need for fresh exploration of ways and means to effect a substantial retrenchment in military expenditure. Under ordinary circumstances, an excessively cautious policy may not and should not meet with opposition. But the deplorable financial position of the country, the excessive poverty of the people and their inability to bear further burdens of taxation and the present unrest and discontent in the country render the situation so acute that a revision of the military policy has become imperatively urgent. It cannot be too often repeated that no nation can wisely allow its army to have the ordering of the Budget. According to the practice of every modern State, it is first for the nation to decide through its representatives how much it can afford to spend upon its defence; it is then for its military advisers to do the best they can within the prescribed limits. I devoutly wish that this principle should be accepted and acted upon by the Government.

[Mr. Sambanda Mudaliar.]

The position, then, is this. We are presented with a veritable non possumus. I feel I shall be failing in my duty to my country if I do not oppose the proposal of additional taxation on salt put forward only to meet a deficit essentially due to an expenditure over which the Assembly has no control. Any additional taxation which would go to impoverish the people or hinder the industrial development of the country has to be strenuously opposed.

Let me have a brief say, before I resume my seat, in regard to the increase in railway fares and postal rates. Sir, you are aware that last year the Government increased the passenger fare on railways by 25 per cent. in spite of considerable opposition by the country and by many of the Honourable Members of this House. The Government in their anxiety to find money overlooked the fact that the increase in railway freight would hit the third class passengers who are generally poor and cannot afford to pay more. I understand that the income from passenger traffic has considerably fallen. Similarly, the increase in the postcard rate to half-anna and the letter rate to one anna was strenuously opposed. Honourable Members will remember that last year it was said on behalf of Government that even with the increase in the postal rates India enjoys the cheapest postal service in the world. But it must be admitted that India is a poor country and cannot be compared favourably with other wealthy countries in the world. I strongly appeal to the Honourable Finance Member to reduce the third class railway fares and the postcard rate, so that the status quo may be restored. To make up any deficit that may occur, I would like to suggest an export duty of 6 annas per gallon on petrol exported from Burma to foreign countries. I hope this suggestion of mine will meet with the approval of the House. The Honourable Mr. Spence has already dwelt on this subject and I entirely agree with the views he expressed.

Lastly, I cannot but express my feeling of grave disappointment at the attitude of the Central Government not coming to the relief of such of the provincial Governments as are hard hit by their contributions to the Central Government. There was widespread expectation, before the budget was presented, that one of its features would be a welcome step towards the extinction of the provincial levies. I thought that there would be a commencement of reduction of the provincial contributions from this year, however small it may be, but my hopes were not realised. In our province, the Madras Presidency, there is a deficit of about 40 lakhs. Sir, our Presidency owes a debt of gratitude to the Madras Mail for its organised opposition to the levy of this unjust contribution. The Madras Government did not lag behind in their efforts to have the contribution entirely wiped out. In this fight, both Europeans and Indians joined together. All our combined efforts proved infructuous. Our Ministers are handicapped from carrying reforms in education, industries, irrigation and other vital matters by funds not being available. The sooner this knotty question is solved, the better it will be for the provinces. May I not appeal to the Honourable Finance Member to do something towards the relief of the provinces? I strongly urge for the consideration of Government that the first charge on any savings effected in pursuance of the recommendations of the Incheape Committee should be to afford relief to the provinces actually suffering from the iniquitous results of the notorious Meston Committee. This unholy loot must cease and this can surely be achieved by drastic cuts made from the military side of the Government of India.

Sir, the Honourable Mr. Spence suggested that a tax on cotton fabrics should be resorted to. But I think most of the Honourable Members here will agree with me when I say that this should not be done because it will affect the poor; the interest of the consumer is a matter of paramount importance to us. On the other hand, though perhaps many may not agree with me I would suggest that the excise duty may be increased.

Sir, I venture to place these considerations before the House and I hope they will meet with their acceptance.

Dr. Nand Lal (West Punjab: Non-Muhammadan): Sir, I admit that the speech of the Honourable the Finance Member is characterised by straightforwardness and candidness, but I am sorry to say that because it demands more money in the form of increased taxation, I do not welcome it. The Honourable the Finance Member should not repeat that he is a new-comer. I may say that he is a very honourable acquisition to the Government of India. Sir, the country expected that the people will be relieved, to some extent, of the existing taxation. Last year we were confronted with a number of questions from the people who sent us here. They asked, "What have you done for us? You have thrown a greater burden upon our shoulders." Then we held out promises to them that we shall try to see that they are relieved, substantially, of the burden. I am sorry to say that we shall have no favourable answer to give to them. I expected that this year's Budget would show that the people of this country, namely, the tax-payers, were relieved to a certain extent, but that hope has not been realised at all. On the top of it we have been asked that an increased duty on salt may be imposed. I beg to differ from that suggestion. Sir, I know that the Government wants money for running the administration, and it is the duty of the people to supply Government with the money which is requisite. But in supplying that money it is the birth right of the people to suggest to the Government to run the administration on certain lines and to see that the Government machinery is worked economically and further that suggestions which are made in a true spirit and in an honest manner to the Government, are duly appreciated. Something should be done effectively to extend a favourable reply to the people to the effect that the Government realises the force of public opinion and that it will do its level best to see that the people's suggestions are accepted. Sir, when I turn my face to the various phases of the administration, I feel constrained to say that the result has not been up to our expectations, and there seems to be disappointment to a great extent. Take, for instance, the case of the Income-tax. Last year and the year before last we suggested that the people who pay Income-tax are feeling the burden very deeply and that they should be given some sort of relief. Our voice was not adequately heard, and an additional burden, in the form of further Income-tax, was imposed upon them. Now, we find that this year there is no reduction at all. We are not here to pay compliments. We are here to convey the views of the people to the Government of India. That is our duty, and I must say to the Treasury Benches, that the people of this country, especially the tax-payers, who are heavily burdened, expected some sort of relief, and they will be sorry to hear that there has been no reduction at all.

[Dr. Nand Lal.]

Now, Sir, adverting to the question of the North-West Frontier Province, the so-called Waziristan, which is considered to be "a white elephant", money is being spent there lavishly and whenever we raise our voices and say "Why don't you see that all these expenses are cut down? What is the necessity for them?", we are always told—and that is a stock answer—that the money which is spent in the North-West Frontier Province is in pursuance of a policy which is called the Waziristan policy, and is well spent, because, as a matter of fact, the North-West Frontier Province policy acts as a police service and it saves all India from a number of difficulties. That answer is given to us. Now, we ask, who are responsible for that policy? For how long is that policy going to be continued? When will that policy come to an end? You sent out a North-West Frontier Province Committee. They spent some weeks in their deliberations. The report is not out yet, though the country has been very anxiously awaiting the publication of that report. Questions have been put and answers have been given no doubt, but they have proved very discouraging answers. What is the condition of affairs in that country? You know there are raids upon raids, dacoities upon dacoities. I concede, however, that there has been some sort of decrease since last year. Sir, may I ask, what you have done to relieve the country of this standing menace? How can human beings live happily in that part of the country when there is dacoity after dacoity, murder after murder—diabolical acts on the part of certain clans who inhabit the part of the country, which you call Waziristan? You sometimes pay them in the form of an allowance. In some cases, you construct roads and the raiders use these very roads in making raids upon you. When are you going to put an end to that? Why should the tax-payers of India pay you for running that show? I suggest to the Government of India that they should try to realise the weight of the suggestion which I am very respectfully offering to them.

Now, Sir, last year, on the occasion when there was a debate in connection with the Income-tax Department, it was submitted before this House that this separate Department, which you have created or opened to realise or collect income-tax would prove very expensive, and it had not got the support of the whole country at all. What has been the result? Have you gained anything? Do you know what are the feelings of the people who have been unduly taxed? They say that this separate Department which has been created is not only expensive but that it is also a standing terror to them and some of them have been put to great disgrace. Some Inspectors go round to have valuations of house property made, but in some cases, without making faithful and good inquiries they come back with wrong information and make reports accordingly saying that the value of the house is so much, that it is being used by the owner or occupant of the house, and that the owner or occupant of the house is liable for heavy tax. The most respectable merchants have got Muniyams and agents who are drawing respectable remuneration. They send their accounts to your Assessing Department and they are badly treated. They are disgraced. You ask them to make certain returns. Those returns are honestly and sincerely made and submitted to the Department which is called the Income-tax Assessing Department, but those returns are in some cases wrongly disbelieved, and then, in contravention of those statements which are made in those returns, the assesseees are very heavily assessed.

Now, the assesseees have observed the letter of the law. They have obeyed the provisions which are laid down in the Income-tax Act. They are respectable people,—tax-payers, the backbone of the finances of the Government, so to speak. Now, they are in some cases wrongly disbelieved and heavy taxation is imposed on them, heavier than it ought to have been. What are their feelings? They feel this separate department, which has been brought into being to collect income-tax, has been created to realise money unduly and to put them to difficulties. I have been in receipt of a number of letters from a number of merchants for whom I have the greatest respect. If I read the contents of some of the letters to you it would tax your patience. However, I am sure you will feel the greatest sympathy for the authors of those letters without my reading the contents. So, I throw out the suggestion before the House that they will advise the Government of India that the old machinery, which was in full association with the people of the country, may be brought back and the separate department be abolished, in the first place, because it is more expensive and, in the second place, because it is intolerable to the people.

Then, Sir, last year some of us raised our voices to ask you to be sympathetic towards your customers, the third class passengers. The first class passengers do not pay, on the other hand you spend something for their comforts. I think every Member of this House knows that first class passengers do not contribute any profit to the Railway Department; you incur expenses for them and they do not make any addition to your revenue but on the contrary, they take away money from you. It is the third class passenger who is the best customer. What have you done for him? What active measures have been adopted to see the condition of these poor third class passengers ameliorated? What have you done? You have got first class carriages in thousands. What increase have you made in the number of third class carriages? The answer which will be given is this that we are in want of money and that no sooner our financial condition is better than we shall see that that want is first attended to, and that a fresh supply of carriages is requisitioned for. That answer will not do. The Government of India ought to have asked the Railway Department specially to take very effective measures in this direction and to give a proper response to the suggestion of this House, which response would have been considered as a true appreciation of the recommendation made and would have been taken as a sign of real, active sympathy with those dumb people. You have increased the railway fare. What gain have you got? Have you got any gain? Nothing. You have lost and your explanation is that the people were not used to it and by and by they will get used to that sort of payment and then there will be an increase in the revenue. I doubt that very much. Business ethics require that you should try to see what kind of rates will be the most attractive and what sort of business will pay and what will not pay. It is the third class passenger who pays the most, and he is comparatively poor. If there is any increase in the railway fares, naturally some of the third class passengers will discontinue using the railway. In consequence of their poverty, in consequence of their inability to meet your railway fares, they will walk from village to village and from place to place. Then where is your business talent, where is your business intelligence? This country is quite prepared to pay the expenses of the Government if Government will use that money in the right method; if the Government of India will try to safeguard the revenues in the best possible manner. The people of this country do not give you money which you are to spend lavishly and without exercising due discretion and intelligence. Excuse me saying that. I am voicing the feelings of the country. I am not here to flatter you but I am here to do my duty. Personally I have the sincerest respect for every Member who is in charge of the Departments which I have referred to, but here I have got to convey the message of the people. If I allow you to remain in darkness, I shall not only be failing in my duty, but also proving dishonest to you. What are the feelings of the country? What are the views of the people? Sir, I am here to echo them. They say that nothing has been done in the way of ameliorating their condition.

[Dr. Nand Lal.]

Mr. President: I must tell the Honourable Member that his time is exhausted.

Dr. Nand Lal: And so far as the question of increasing the duty on salt is concerned, the country seems to be averse to it. You must try to see that retrenchment is effected. I wish this budget were put before the House after the report of the Retrenchment Committee was published and something substantial would have been done to satisfy our people. They would have seen that we have done something for them and they would have thanked the Government of India. I hope the Honourable the Finance Member will try to see that the recommendations of the Retrenchment Committee are incorporated in the budget if possible, and given a practical shape, so that the people of this country may be relieved to some degree of the heavy burden which has been placed upon them both by the Government of India and by us. With these few words I close my remarks.

Mr. P. P. Ginwala (Burma: Non-European): The Honourable the Finance Member has told us that he is a new-comer to this country. But I hope, Sir, that he has got all the credulity of a new-comer to this country, and if he has, he will believe me when I tell him a few things about his Budget—what I may call the few recurrent phases of the Indian budget. Probably he knows them already, but there is no harm in my reminding him of them. First of all, every Indian budget is extremely orthodox in principle, secondly, it is a hand to mouth budget, and thirdly, and generally speaking, it is a rich man's budget on the whole. With regard to the orthodox character of the budget, I want to ask the Honourable the Finance Member whether in the history of taxation in India during the last 20 or 30 years any new principle of taxation suited to the requirements of the country has been introduced? The Indian budget is, on the whole, a servile copy of the principles of the British budget along the lines of least resistance. If England imposes super-tax we impose super-tax. If she has excess profits duty, we have excess profits duty. But I venture to suggest that we do it all apart from the conditions of the country. What takes place in the office of the Honourable the Finance Member every year when he prepares the revenue side of the budget I can well imagine. He sits in his chair. He has got three men generally with him. On his right is perhaps Mr. Cook, on his left is Mr. Ayyar and in front of him Mr. Sim. Then he asks "How much do these people require?" They say, "Oh! this year they want 80 crores of rupees only from taxation." "Is that so? What did they have last year?" "64 crores." "Very well. Give me a copy of the Tariff Act, a copy of the Income-tax Act and a copy of the Opium and the Salt Acts and a blue pencil." He takes the blue pencil in his hands and says, "Here 11 per cent. on this. No. I will put 15 per cent. That will give us 2 crores. Is that not so, Mr. Cook?" "Yes, approximately that." Mr. Sim then says, "Income-tax has been rather sterile these last few years. We will try a little super-tax on something," and he adds on something to the super-tax. Then he goes through the Opium and Salt Acts and the same process goes on until he thinks he has secured the additional sixteen crores. I submit that this is not the way in which any longer the Indian budget ought to be prepared. Every country in the world has at definite periods undertaken an examination of the taxation of the country with reference to the taxable capacity of the people. They have got figures and they study all the conditions with reference to the requirements of the country. I maintain that though the Finance Department claims to know every thing they have got no data upon which they can determine the taxation with reference to the taxable capacity of the people. There I submit is the orthodoxy of the Budget.

Now, as to its being a hand to mouth Budget. This is a more important circumstance and in this respect I think I shall cause some disappointment both to the Government and to my Honourable friend on this side of the House, for I do not propose to lay much stress on the question of retrenchment. I am a great believer in retrenchment to a certain limit but that limit must be sometimes reached and if we transgress that limit, the Government will have the fate of the Irishman's horse. This gentleman, as you may remember, wanted his horse to live on nothing. He gradually reduced his rations but on the day the horse learnt to live on nothing, he unfortunately died. That is what would happen to the Government in course of time if we get obsessed with the idea that nothing remains to be done except retrenchment in order to meet our expenditure. The time has arrived when we should look about for other sources of revenue and to extend the scope of those sources. If you examine the Honourable the Finance Member's Budget and his main heads, you will find that there are already signs of decay, if not of death in some of the items from which he derives his revenue. Take the Customs. Honourable Members on this side of the House suggested that the import duty on Customs be raised from 11 to 15 per cent. for protective purposes. My Honourable friend from Bombay suggested 2 annas on silver and various other things. But we forget that we have also adopted a policy of protection. Now, it is a well known principle of taxation that you cannot make those duties have a protective effect from which you wish to derive your revenue also. If we are going to have this protection, you are bound to lose your revenues from those protective duties and that is a factor which I submit has got to be taken into account. It will go a long way towards making your customs a diminishing source of revenue. Then take Opium. That ought to have disappeared long ago as a source of revenue and I hope, Sir, that whatever else the Honourable the Finance Member may do, he will get rid of this disgraceful source of revenue by which you obtain your money through the degradation of a very large number of your fellowmen in other parts of the world. That is a form of taxation which ought to be done away with as soon as possible. Then you have got the provincial contributions. We have been promised that they are dying or about to die. Of course, their death-knell has not yet been sounded but we hope that the Honourable the Finance Member will in course of time be able to get rid of them. Then what do we fall back on—Salt. We have heard from Dr. Nand Lal what the people think about salt and I do not wish to add much to it. Last of all we have to look to our Railways. There also we have adopted a change of policy. I am not in agreement with many of my Honourable colleagues on that aspect of the case and I may state this that however good it may be from the point of view of sentiment and patriotism, State management is, from the business point of view, unprofitable. We have made it a business of our lives, at least many of us on this side of the House, to criticise the bureaucracy, but I think the bureaucracy will admit that we have expiated all our sins by surrendering ourselves to them on this question of railways. They themselves admitted that they were incompetent as a business agency. We said "However incompetent you may be for other purposes, for business purposes you are very competent fellows." We handed over the railways to them. I venture to think that in course of time the railways which might have been a profitable proposition would be a losing concern and that if you do make them a profitable concern you will wring out the profits from the poor and that would be the worst way of indirect taxation that I can imagine. Therefore, Sir, my suggestion to the Honourable the Finance Member is that he should not only find some way by which he can provide by way of makeshift to make both ends meet by retrenchment on this side and a little additional taxation on the other, but he must devise some policy by which the future revenues of this country may be placed on a more satisfactory basis and we cease to live from hand to mouth as we have done for many a long year in the past.

[Mr. P. P. Ginwala.]

Then about the third point. I said at the beginning that every Indian Budget was essentially the budget of the rich and I stick to that proposition. You examine your sources of taxation. I have already enumerated them. So far I am merely taking the Central Revenues. I am not concerned with the provinces. In the Central Revenues the only direct form of taxation that you have is income-tax. That is paid by 200,000 people I believe roughly speaking out of 330 millions. The rest of it is indirect taxation. Indirect taxation necessarily means the taxation of the poorer classes of the community. You tax their food. You tax their clothing by increased tariff duties. You tax their matches. You tax their kerosine oil. You tax their salt and you want to increase the tax on that salt. Now the poorest man in the country has got to pay a tax on these commodities I have mentioned. The rich man may pay, less or more on these same commodities but I venture to say that he does not pay more in proportion to his wealth than the poorest man does. Therefore, the time has arrived, when the Honourable the Finance Member should inquire into the whole question and spread his net as wide as possible. You cannot expect to derive all your direct taxation only from 200,000 people. There are heaps of men who derive fortunes from what they call agriculture. Now, it is not my intention that the poorest agriculturist should be taxed. He would come within the limit that is prescribed by the law as the lowest limit. But why should a man who owns a hundred thousand acres of land, who does not pay himself a pie of land revenue out of his pocket, who invests his saving, if he does, in Government paper free from income-tax, escape the payment of Income-tax? I hear whispers in the House suggesting that they do not get anything out of their land. (A Voice: "I say they do not escape taxation.") I venture to say that they do escape taxation. The man at the top is probably the sixth man from the bottom. The man at the bottom pays land revenues and the other five men who do not do the least bit of work on the soil escape all income-tax. I submit, Sir, that that is a vicious principle. If income is to be taxed at all, it ought to be taxed apart from the source from which it is derived, subject, as I have said to the minimum which is prescribed as not liable to income-tax in all civilized countries which is different from the minimum prescribed by our law. How is your minimum in this country? A man may have four wives and may have four children apiece by them: he pays the same income-tax as the improvident bachelor who has no wife and no children. This is only one of many directions in which the Income-tax Act requires close scrutiny.

Take another source of revenue which has not yet been tapped though it is the intention no doubt to tap it, and that is death duties. I do not see why when I die my son who may inherit Rs. 5,000 has got to pay Rs. 100 or Rs. 150 to the Government, whereas the son of any one of these Honourable gentlemen who may inherit a million escapes entirely, if he is a Hindu or a Muhammadan. (Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: "He does not inherit.") He does not inherit but he succeeds to the estate. I submit, Sir, that that is a mere trifling with words. Why should they escape when we are made to pay? There is racial distinction if you like. We are fighting for the removal of racial distinctions; let us fight on this point and remove the grievance of the Hindu or the Muhammadan that he is left out of his share of payment to the exchequer. (Hear, hear.)

Sir, there is one other question I would like to ask the Honourable the Finance Member. It is claimed that we cannot maintain our army just now at least under 50 or 60 per cent. of our total revenues. Who gets the protection from this army? Is it the people from whom you get the largest bulk of your revenues? Or is it the wealthy landowner, the wealthy merchant or the wealthy money-lender? And who in proportion to his means pays so small a share of taxation to the country? If he wants this protection he must be made to pay for it. The proletariat of the country do not require the maintenance of peace and order, for in disorder they find their means of livelihood; in disorder they can loot and they can plunder; they have nothing to lose. But the wealthy land-owner, who sits in his castle and looks at his estate, and the wealthy money-lender, who has, like him, the satisfaction of knowing that when he dies whatever happens, the fortune which he has made out of the poorer people, will be left untouched by the Government. Sir, these are the persons for whom you are providing this army, and you must make them pay. First, I say, tax their income; secondly, tax their savings by imposing death duties and thirdly, tax their luxuries. Why should they not pay for their luxuries? I am made to pay. If I buy a hat I have to pay three annas extra in every rupee, but my Honourable friend on my right (Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas) who wears a golden turban pays nothing extra for it.

[Mr. P. P. Ginwala.]

Sir, I appeal to the Honourable the Finance Member to lay the foundations of his future finance deep and broad. He must make every man pay who ought to pay, but no man ought to be made to carry a bigger burden than his shoulders can bear. That ought to be the basis of his future financial policy and if he succeeds in carrying out that policy I have no doubt that when he leaves the country he will be always remembered not only as an honoured statesman but also as a successful financier.

Maulvi Miyan Asjad-ul-lah (Bhagalpore Division: Muhammadan): (The Honourable Member spoke in the Vernacular.*)

Mr. P. E. Percival (Bombay: Nominated Official): Sir, we have, as has already been stated, three alternatives for consideration before us now. The first is a further reduction of expenditure beyond the proposals made in the Budget, the second is to budget for a deficit; and the third is additional taxation, in order to equalize the Budget. Now, Sir, in regard to the first point, we have just had, as everyone knows, a most powerful and independent Committee on Retrenchment, which has gone into the whole question and has proposed most drastic reductions both on the civil and military side of the Budget. Now can it be reasonably said, when this matter is just before Government, and has not yet been considered by Government in consultation with the Secretary of State,—is it advisable or reasonable to suggest a further reduction in expenditure beyond even the reduction proposed by the Incheape Committee? Another point, to which I wish to refer and which has not been mentioned, is this, that it is not the case that Government have refused to make certain reductions; what the Honourable the Finance Member has said is that, owing to 'lag' and 'terminal charges,' it will not be possible to make a reduction till next year to the full extent of the Incheape Committee's proposals.—that is, up to the full extent of those proposals so far as they may be accepted by Government. So it seems to me that it would be futile to propose reductions in this particular Budget, whatever may be the case later on. It cannot be contended that the Budget should be equalized by further reductions in expenditure beyond that proposed by the Government, when these economies, which are to be effected in accordance with the proposals of the Incheape Committee, can only come into effect gradually and, to a large extent, in the following year. A large reduction is proposed this year, but still the whole amount, or the whole amount finally approved by Government, cannot possibly come into effect this year.

* The original speech together with an English translation will be printed in a later issue of these Debates.

The second alternative is that we should budget for a deficit. Now the Honourable the Finance Member, who, if I may be permitted to say so, has a worldwide reputation for knowledge of high finance and international exchanges and who has had the advantage of discussing the whole question with the leading financiers of the world at the League of Nations, has given a solemn warning that the country cannot go on with further deficits, that it will only bring the country into a morass, from which it will be extremely difficult to extract it, when it has once fallen in. Surely it is far better that we should prevent the country from falling into this state of affairs than to let it fall in and try to drag it out afterwards. But it is not merely the case that the Honourable the Finance Member has so warned the Assembly, but the Incheape Committee have also given a solemn warning to this Assembly. I will read their remarks, Sir. The Incheape Committee state that "if India is to remain solvent immediate steps must be taken to balance her budget." Therefore, however much we regret it, whether we like it or not, it seems to me that the only possible, the only logical, position that we can take now, is to balance the budget by increase of taxation. If we do not increase the salt tax, then let us balance the budget by some other taxation, which Honourable Members should not merely propose but should actually vote for and carry through the House. It is no use making proposals that are not going to be carried through the House, or not going to give us the additional $4\frac{1}{2}$ crores required for the Budget. I do suggest that we should really carry proposals to make up this $4\frac{1}{2}$ crores deficit and thereby balance the budget.

Now, Sir, there are one or two other points to which I would like to refer as being one of the Members of the all-India services. There is an opinion in the country, which I hope is not held in this House; you hear people in the country saying that the heavy increase of expenditure that has been incurred in recent years is due to large additions to the pay of the Imperial services. Now, Sir, there are two points which are overlooked here. The first point is that people who say this always overlook the fact that prices had vastly increased during the last 7 or 8 years. (A Voice: "They are falling.") They are falling now, but, according to the Incheape Committee, they are still 56 per cent. above the pre-war level. I entirely agree that, as prices come down, the enhancements of salary should come down; but, if Honourable Members will refer to page 283 of the Incheape Committee's Report, they will find that it is there stated that the average increase, if allowance is made for the abolition of exchange compensation allowance, in the all-India services, did not exceed 20 per cent. The members of the all-India services have got an increase of roughly 20 per cent., while prices as a matter of fact rose from 60 to 80 per cent. Sir Montagu Webb referred to the matter last year, and I think he stated that the increase of prices was not merely 60, the figure recently given by the Labour Bureau Office, Bombay, but was in fact more than that amount. Turning on to the next page of the Report of the Incheape Committee, we find that: "The cost of the subordinate services, i.e., Clerical, Industrial, Technical and menial, has increased by 121 per cent., due partly to additional staff but mainly to increased rates of pay." The point I wish to bring out is this, if we press for retrenchment, it must necessarily come from the lower-paid Indian services. I do not know whether Honourable Members wish this or not, but they have to remember the fact that the people who are going to be reduced and must be reduced are the lower-paid clerks and menials and other low-paid services. Another reason why it is necessary to do that is this fact, which some people do not realize, namely, the very small number of Europeans serving in India. On this point I would like to refer to the interesting remarks made by the Honourable Mr. Lawrence, the Finance Member of the Government of Bombay, in his recent Budget speech. He there mentioned that the number of Europeans belonging to the all-India services serving in the Bombay Presidency amounted to 370. Eight years ago the number was 430 but it is steadily decreasing. He also pointed out the very interesting fact that if for the whole of these European officials in the Bombay Presidency Indian officials were substituted at two-thirds of the pay of the former, the result would be that Government would secure a gain of only one-fourth of one per cent. of the annual income of the Bombay Presidency. I do not wish to go into the question of the Indianization of the services, I am in favour of Indianization; I always have been. But the point I wish to make is that the actual financial gain which the country is going to derive from doing away with Europeans and substituting Indians at two-thirds of their pay is a very small amount, when regarded simply from the point of view of the tax-payer. As a matter of fact, it would be impossible to get rid of all the Europeans at once. Suppose, however, for the sake of argument, we were to reduce one-fifth of the Europeans serving in the Bombay Presidency at once; in that case the gain would be only 1/20th or 1 per cent. of the annual income. These figures apply to Bombay, but no doubt similar figures could be obtained for other Provinces and for India as a whole.

[Mr. P. E. Percival.]

The final point to which I should like to refer is that my Honourable friend, Mr. Abul Kasem called this additional taxation the last straw on the camel's back. I think my Honourable friends do not perhaps quite realise that India is very lightly taxed as compared with countries in a similar state of civilization. (Cries of "No, no.") Wait a minute, please, I can substantiate my statement by one or two figures. I do not wish to compare India with the United States, England or any other industrial country in the West; but I should just like to give one or two figures to show that India is lightly taxed when compared with countries which are similarly situated financially and economically. I do not guarantee that the figures I give are quite correct, and, if Honourable Members have better figures, I shall be glad to accept them. These are the figures:—

India.
Population, excluding Indian States	.	247,000,000
Revenue	.	187,000,000
Average taxation	.	11 sh.
Japan.
Population	.	56,000,000
Revenue	.	146,000,000
Average taxation	.	£2-12-0
Java.
Population	.	38,000,000
Revenue	.	61,000,000
Average taxation	.	£1-12-0
Phillipines.
Population	.	10,000,000
Revenue	.	19,000,000
Average taxation	.	£1-18-0
Egypt.
Population	.	13,000,000
Revenue	.	23,000,000
Average taxation	.	£2-3-0

So it will be seen that for every rupee taken in taxation from each individual in India, in these other countries they take Rs. 3 or Rs. 4. As I have said, I do not guarantee the correctness of these figures, and let us take for the sake of argument that we are 50 per cent. wrong, even so we have it that individuals in these other countries pay either two or three times as much taxation as people do in India. The point is that India is not heavily taxed as compared with other countries which are in a similar state of financial and economic development. I submit, therefore, for these reasons that the 4 or 5 crores additional taxation proposed for India will not seriously injure the country; whereas, if we have another deficit, then it will do very great damage to the credit of the country.

Chaudhri Shahab-ud-Din (East Central Punjab: Muhammadan): Sir, usually every speaker in this House begins or ends his remarks either by complimenting the speech of the Honourable the Finance Member and praising it as unexceptionable or by criticising it severely but I will do neither. I will say simply this much, that his speech elucidates the financial condition of India very thoroughly and clearly. India is a big Empire. People say they are very heavily taxed. I will accept their word for it. But may I ask whether they consider themselves heavily taxed, because their income is too small for the taxes they are paying, or whether they are more highly taxed as compared with the people of other countries? I think, Sir, India on the whole, whatever might be the opinion of the other members in this Hall, is not more heavily taxed than she ought to be. We want a democracy but we expect England or some other country to pay our expenditure. Democracy in all parts of the world is and has always been a very expensive form of Government. I think if India aspires to see its status raised, she must be prepared to pay every year a heavier tax than the previous year. (Cries of "No, no.") Allow me to proceed, I shall explain my meaning.

As regards the paying capacity of Indians, I admit that it is much lower than the paying capacity of the tax-payers of countries. Up till now India is, on the whole, an agricultural country, and as such it cannot bear a very heavy taxation. It is not an industrial country yet, but are we not striving to make it an industrial country? Do we not require capital for productive purposes? Should that capital be our own or should we borrow it and then re-pay it with interest? How shall we pay the principal and interest? By taxing the country or in some other way? No other country will pay for us. I think, considering the population of India, and the taxes people are paying, on the whole the country is not very heavily taxed. And if we want to raise our status, if we want to see ourselves compared favourably and honourably with the other civilized nations and countries, we must be prepared to pay more and more every year. I am aware that railway fares have been raised and probably the increase is pinching the common people, I mean the lower class people, but the passenger traffic has never been paying in any country. It is always the goods traffic which has been paying. (Cries of "No, no.") My position is that passenger traffic is seldom paying, while goods traffic is always paying and I maintain this without any fear of contradiction. Passenger traffic has to be maintained for the sake of maintaining it, but it is always the goods traffic which really pays. Now by all means reduce the railway fares and postage, and also reduce the military expenditure either by Indianizing the army or otherwise, but at the same time find money for maintaining the Government and its machinery. Where is that money to come from? My answer is, it must come from the pocket of the Indian tax-payer who must pay it willingly.

[5TH MARCH 1923.]

[Chaudhri Shahab-ud-Din.]

Now, the salt tax may not be a very desirable tax but it should be unhesitatingly imposed if it is necessary to do so. In my opinion the country should resent having to pay the tax. Some Members in this Hall may differ from me, but with due deference for their opinions, I stick to my own view. It is common knowledge that people are consuming daily cigars and cigarettes worth millions of rupees. Is not that a luxury? (Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: "I do not smoke.") I also do not smoke, but I do not resent or object to the salt tax. Possibly it is an undesirable tax and should not be imposed if we can help it. But if it is necessary to impose it, I see no reason why it should not be imposed. What can't be cured must be endured. In villages the agriculturist pays land revenue, and that is a direct form of tax, if it can be called a tax. But the menial, the village servant, and the agricultural labourer, is paying absolutely no direct tax. He is paying, no doubt, indirectly for matches, kerosine oil, etc., but in the shape of a direct tax he is paying absolutely no tax beyond what is called the chowkimenials are much better off to-day than they were 20 or 30 years ago. Well, you may question it. I am speaking for my own province, and I can say without fear of contradiction that they are much better off to-day than they were 20 years back. If you go to their houses, you will find that, while, formerly they had only earthen vessels in which they used to cook and eat, now they have got utensils not of gold or silver, but of metal in all houses without an exception. I am talking of the Punjab and not Sind. In the Punjab, I think the labouring classes in the villages are much better off to-day than they were before and, if the salt tax has to be imposed, I see no reason why it should not be imposed. What will this tax come to? The 4½ crores are to be distributed over a population of 300 millions. It will be about 3 annas per head per annum. Well, I think one pice per head per mensem is not a very heavy tax about which we should grumble. But I do not think that a strong case has been made out for imposing this tax. Of course, a case may be made out and the time may come when it will have to be imposed. (An Honourable Member: "I hope not.") You may not be here to say "I hope not". Probably it will be our successors in this Hall who shall have to impose the tax if it is not imposed this year. Perhaps the time has not yet come for imposing the tax because the small deficit of 4½ crores can be met otherwise. The recommendations made by Lord Incheape's Committee have already suggested a reduction of 19½ crores, which will be effected gradually. It is possible that by a little retrenchment this small deficit may be easily met. I have not gone into the details but I have reason to believe that, if we were to put our heads together, we would be able to effect a retrenchment to the extent of 4½ crores and thus save the country, at least for the present, from any further taxation. In every country and at all times taxes have always been a very irksome thing for the poor. He has never liked to pay, in fact no one has ever liked to pay a tax. Therefore, I would suggest that, if possible, the salt tax should be avoided. One of the speakers made some remarks about income from agriculture being taxed. Well, you may tax the agriculturist if you will, but for what? For protecting the towns people? I accept the principle that the rich people should pay taxes. Let rich people pay taxes. But what rich people? The urban or rural? In villages if we were left to ourselves, we would be able to manage our affairs. We wouldn't require much of the police or army. It is the towns people who require the army and police not only for maintaining peace and order but also for protection from dacoits. Villagers can protect themselves not against Waziris and

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: (a) It is impossible to say.

(b) In view of reply to (a), this question does not arise.

Sir Jamsetjee Jejeebhoy: May I ask what P. T. O. means?

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: I do not know.

GOODS SUPPLIED BY BIRKMYRE BROTHERS.

578. Mr. Manmohandas Ramji: Will the Government be pleased to state:

- the description, quantity and rate of goods supplied to Government during 1922-23, by Messrs. Birkmyre Brothers, from their own mill, and also, separately, those supplied through them from outside,
- whether Messrs. Birkmyre Brothers were left the choice of supplying from their own mill, or whether Government gave the order to them after comparing the prices outside,
- if the firm were left the choice, before fixing their price for their goods whether the firm had invited tenders; and if so, how their price as finally charged compare with others,
- whether in the case of goods supplied from outside, before purchasing them, Messrs. Birkmyre Brothers invited tenders for those goods,
- whether Government still think of obtaining expert advice from Messrs. Birkmyre Brothers, and
- if the answer to (e) is in affirmative, will Government consider the advisability of fixing commission for expert advice only; and make purchases themselves directly from the open market, thus saving that portion of the purchasing commission now given to Messrs. Birkmyre Brothers?

Mr. A. H. Ley: (a) The statement desired by the Honourable Member involves details of over 400 items. A list of these items has been prepared and is available for inspection by the Honourable Member in my office.

(b) Messrs. Birkmyre Brothers had full discretion to supply the articles required from their own mill, or to obtain them from other suppliers, having due regard to the interests of Government.

(c) Government are unable to say whether in the case of every item to be supplied tenders were first called for by the firm. As they were not required to submit tenders received by them to Government, the information desired by the Honourable Member in the matter of comparative prices is not available.

(d) Messrs. Birkmyre Brothers usually invited tenders for orders entrusted to them as Government agents, but were not obliged to do so. They were at liberty to purchase as they thought best, their responsibility to Government being that of an agent to his principal.

(e) and (f) The Honourable Member is referred to the reply given on the 16th January last to part (c) of his question No. 100. Until the Indian Stores Department has been developed further, it is not proposed again to revise the contract now in force with this firm.

Mr. K. Ahmed: After the expiry of the contract of Messrs. Birkmyre Brothers, will the Government be pleased to try their level best to get a cheaper market through some other firm?

Mr. A. H. Ley: Government will consider the situation when the contract expires.

MR. V. SRINIVASA SASTRI'S WORKS ON COMMITTEES.

579. Maulvi Miyan Asjad-ul-lah: Will the Government be pleased to state:

- On what committees did the Right Honourable Mr. V. Srinivasa Sastri serve since he became a Member of the late Imperial Legislative Council and of the Council of State?
- What total amount by way of travelling and other allowances has he drawn for serving on those committees?
- What amount has the Right Honourable Mr. V. Srinivasa Sastri drawn for his work in connection with (1) the League of Nations, (2) the Washington Conference, (3) his recent Dominion tour?
- Is it a fact that he took some one of his relations in the capacity of an assistant at the cost of the Government in his dominions tour? If so, in what capacity?
- Is it a fact that the Right Honourable Mr. V. Srinivasa Sastri has been appointed to the Royal Commission recently announced?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: (a) and (b) The Honourable Member is referred to answer No. 40, which was given by Sir William Vincent to Mr. Reddi Garu's question on the same subject during the September Session, 1921.

(c) Mr. Sastri was not deputed to the League of Nations. For the Washington Conference the following terms were sanctioned:
Honorarium £200 per month.

Hire of Car.

Outfit allowance £40.

Daily allowance 10 shillings a day while on board ship.

First class travelling expenses including Pullmans and subsistence allowance of 10 dollars daily while in the United States plus the cost of rooms.

Entertainment allowance of £100.

The terms sanctioned for the recent Dominion tour were—Honorarium £200 per month.

Entertainment allowance £100.

All travelling expenses.

Subsistence allowance at £3 per day in Canada and £2 per day elsewhere when not in receipt of Government hospitality plus the actual travelling expenses of a servant who received a subsistence allowance of half a guinea per day.

The accounts have not yet been finally settled but the aggregate amount drawn by Mr. Sastri was approximately Rs. 32,400.

(d) The answer is in the negative. The second part of the question does not therefore arise.

(e) Government have no information. The personnel of the Commission has not yet been settled.

Munshi Iswar Saran: Is Government aware that the Right Honourable Mr. Sastri gets Rs. 125 a month from the Servants of India Society, of which he is the President just now?

Mr. President: I do not think that is a matter "within the special cognisance" of any Member of the Government.

POLITICAL CONFERENCE HELD BY MRS. BESANT.

580. Maulvi Miyan Asjad-ul-lah: Will the Government be pleased to state:

- Whether permission has been granted by the Government to hold the recent Political Conference of Mrs. Besant in the hall of the Eastern Hostel?
- If so, whether any rent has been charged by the Government for the use of the hall under reference?
- If so, what was the rent charged for the hall and the rooms occupied by the delegates who came to attend the Conference?
- How many delegates actually occupied these rooms?

Colonel Sir Sydney Crookshank: (1) Permission was asked for and given to use the hall for the Conference on the understanding that no residents of the hostel objected to the use of the hall for the purpose.

(2) No rent was charged by Government for the use of the hall.

(3) 9 rooms in the Eastern and Western Hostels were occupied by delegates who came to attend the Conference. A sum of Rs. 214-15-0 is the amount of rent charged for the use of these rooms.

(4) It is not known how many delegates occupied these rooms.

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas: Sir, may I correct the question asked by the Honourable Member. He refers to the Conference of Mrs. Besant. My answer to him is that it was not a conference of Mrs. Besant. It was a conference of all those who believe in parliamentary action as against direct action, and it was presided over by Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru, the late Law Member of the Government of India.

RENTS OF OFFICIAL RESIDENCES.

581. Mr. W. M. Hussanally: (a) With reference to answer to question 395, will Government please state why the percentage of rent payable by officers goes on decreasing as the salary goes on increasing?

(b) Do Fundamental Rules leave it to the option of Government to charge as rent any percentage of the salary up to 10 per cent. or do they require that 10 per cent. should be charged?

Colonel Sir Sydney Crookshank: (a) The Honourable Member is referred to the concluding portion of my reply to question 395, to which I may perhaps add in explanation that, although the basic accommodation is more or less the same for senior officers and junior officers alike, the additional or more commodious accommodation required by the former does not as a rule bear the same proportion as to cost as does the difference of salary of the former over the latter.

3682

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

[19TH MARCH 1923.]

(b) The rules regulating rent are contained in Rule 45 of the Fundamental Rules, copies of which are available to Honourable Members in the Library of the House. Under the Fundamental Rules 10 per cent. is the minimum rent charge which can be levied when a Government residence is supplied both at Simla and Delhi unless the total of the combined rents for the period of occupation of each residence comes to less than 10 per cent. in which case the combined rents will be charged.

When a residence is supplied in one place only Government may fix on any percentage up to 10 per cent. of emoluments to be recovered as rent, or in the alternative charge the actual rent of the house if it happens to be less than 10 per cent. of the officer's emoluments.

INCOME AND EXPENDITURE OF NEW DELHI.

582. *Mr. W. M. Hussanally: (a) With reference to answer to question 396, is it a fact as stated at page 249 of the Inchcape Report that while the total income from Imperial New Delhi is 9 lakhs a year, the upkeep costs about 16½ lakhs a year?

(b) If so, what will be the total income and expenditure when all buildings and other works are completed, and what will be the net loss a year?

(c) Does this loss take account of the interest charges on capital borrowed and sunk?

(d) Do Government propose to revise rents and all other sources of revenue from New Delhi so as not only to make up this heavy annual deficit to the tax-payer but also to make up the interest charges and sinking fund upon the capital invested?

Colonel Sir Sydney Crookshank: (a) and (b). The figures of maintenance charges and receipts given in paragraph 2, page 249, of the Report of the Indian Retrenchment Committee relate to the conditions which will exist after completion of construction of the New Capital.

(c) Partially.

(d) It is not possible to say as the New Capital will not be completed and formally occupied until 1925-26.

RENTS OF QUARTERS IN DELHI.

583. *Mr. W. M. Hussanally: (a) With reference to answer to question 398, if full recovery of rent is not possible, how is it that Government neither gains or loses on these rents?

(b) Will the Government consider the question of altering the Fundamental Rules so as to recover a larger percentage with a view to save the tax-payer the heavy loss?

Colonel Sir Sydney Crookshank: (a) As implied in the reply which I gave to question No. 398, the recovery of rent sufficient to recoup Government from loss can only be effected if the house is in occupation at the full assessed rate throughout the whole year.

(b) Government do not propose to amend the Fundamental Rules in the manner suggested.

ELECTRICITY CHARGES IN DELHI.

584. *Mr. W. M. Hussanally: (a) With reference to answer to question 400, why is it that Government servants are charged only three annas per unit and others only 6 annas when the rate in the city is 8 annas?

(b) What is the cost of production including interest on capital invested, superintendence and all other charges?

Colonel Sir Sydney Crookshank: (a) The three-anna rate is a special provisional rate and is based on averages on which Government gets a reasonable margin of profit in supplying current. Private consumers are few in number at present and are charged at six annas a unit, the rate formerly charged by the local supply company, subject to certain conditions. Government do not wish to encourage those who are not Government servants to obtain their current from Government instead of from the local supply company.

(b) The information is being collected and will be given as soon as it is available.

Mr. W. M. Hussanally: Does the rate of three annas leave any margin of profit to the Government, and, if so, how much?

Colonel Sir Sydney Crookshank: In supplying current at the three-anna rate Government pays its expenses and has a small margin of profit, but I am not in a position to say exactly what profit is made. The cost of production for bulk supply is somewhere in the region of two annas per unit.

FURNITURE DEPARTMENT.

585. *Mr. W. M. Hussanally: With reference to answer to question 401, will Government please state if they propose to consider the question of transferring the Furniture Department to a private firm on certain conditions?

Colonel Sir Sydney Crookshank: No proposals in this direction are before Government and no recommendations to this effect have been made by the "House Committee" of the Legislatures. Enquiries will, however, be made from time to time as to whether any arrangements for private agency which do not cause discomfort or additional expense to tenants are feasible.

RENT OF BUNGALOWS IN DELHI.

586. *Mr. W. M. Hussanally: With reference to answer to question 402, will Government please state:

- the number of bungalows leased;
- what is the aggregate rent per year paid thereon;
- the aggregate rent recovered thereon;
- the total gain or loss;
- the names of officers occupying the same;
- do these officers pay rent for all the year round or only for the period of actual occupation?

Colonel Sir Sydney Crookshank: (a) 16 for migratory Officers.

(b) Rs. 39,492 which includes repair charges.

(c) Rs. 17,050.

(d) Loss per annum, Rs. 22,442 maximum. This is reduced by letting these bungalows in the hot weather when possible.

(e) See list below.*

(f) For period of actual occupation.

Names of occupants.

The Honourable Mian Sir M. Shafi.
The Honourable Sir B. Blackett.
The Honourable Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma.
The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes.
The Honourable Mr. A. C. Chatterjee.
The Honourable Sir W. M. Hailey.
Mr. B. N. Mitra.
The Honourable Mr. E. M. Cook.
The Honourable Sir A. Muddiman.
The Honourable Mr. D. Bray.
Mr. A. V. V. Aiyer.
Mr. E. W. Baker.
Mr. S. C. Gupta.
Mr. E. Burdon.
Mr. J. McGregor-Cheers.
Mr. P. P. Hypher.

INCOME OF IMPERIAL DELHI MUNICIPALITY.

587. *Mr. W. M. Hussanally: With reference to answer to question 403 (c) and (d), do Government propose to levy any such taxes; and come to some understanding with the Delhi Municipality?

The Honourable Mr. A. C. Chatterjee: The question of the most suitable form of local taxation to be imposed in the Imperial Delhi Municipal Area will be considered when that area is more fully developed than it is at present and acquires a permanent population for whose benefit the proceeds of such taxation will be expended.

MOSQUES IN DELHI.

588. *Mr. W. M. Hussanally: (a) With reference to question 421 (3), was it a condition of the land acquisition proceedings that the repairs to mosques would be allowed only if the architectural features conformed to those of the surroundings? If not, under what authority is this condition being insisted upon?

(b) Will Government please state what were the grounds of refusal for repairs to Kalali Bagh Mosque, vide Mr. Wazir Dyal, Executive Engineer, I Project Division, No. 5693, dated 22nd October, 1921?

(c) Have any such applications been refused, if so, will Government please place on the table a statement thereof showing the mosques, the names of applicants, the grounds of rejection of the application?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: (a) The answer is in the negative. Government as owner of the land has an unquestionable right to lay down conditions for buildings on its property.

(b) The detailed layout of the locality was not ready in October 1921. Since then the details of the layout have been completed, and an estimate has been sanctioned for a compound wall which actually encloses more land for this mosque than was originally attached to it. This will tend to the convenience of the users of the mosque and of the residents in this locality.

(c) The correspondence is so ephemeral in character that Government do not think it would serve any useful purpose to prepare any such statement.

MOSQUE IN RAILWAY AREA, DELHI.

589. *Mr. W. M. Hussanally: With reference to Railway Board's letter No. 155-W.-23, dated the 6th March, 1923, to my address communicating to me answers to questions regarding questions relating to mosques within the new station area:

- (a) Will Government please order the publication of the answers?
- (b) With reference to answer (b) are Government aware that they would be wounding the feelings of an important section of the community by appropriating the court-yard as proposed?
- (c) Will they consider if there is no other way to save the court-yard of the mosque from the station platform?
- (d) With reference to answer 2 (a), what arrangements are to be made to allow ingress and egress to the mosque at all times and at the same time ensure public safety?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: (a) Yes.

(b) Government recognise that objection would be expressed as to this course and regret that so far it has not been successful in persuading those concerned of the impossibility of adopting any alternative.

(c) Every possible way of doing this has been considered without finding any other solution of the matter.

(d) The arrangements cannot be foreshadowed until the new Railway Station is built.

Mr. K. Ahmed: Will the Government be pleased to state in what way they have tried their level best to come to some understanding with the Muhammadan community and to please them, on the one hand, and, on the other hand, how there is no other alternative that they can take in order to satisfy Muhammadan opinion?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: As regards there being no other alternative, I can only say that the engineers who are designing the railway station have done their best to find one and that, if this court-yard were not taken, it would involve a diversion of the line at great additional cost.

As regards the negotiations, I believe that those who are concerned have been approached in the matter and it has been suggested to them that they may receive compensation in a form which would enable them to put up a building elsewhere. Unfortunately, those negotiations have not been successful.

Mr. K. Ahmed: Will the Government be pleased to lay on the table the correspondence that passed between the Engineer, the Chief Engineer, and the Government of India showing why it was impracticable for them to do the needful, as the Honourable Member says?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Halley: I do not think any correspondence has taken place between the Executive Engineer and the Government of India.

Mr. K. Ahmed: May I ask how and under what circumstances the Government of India was in a position to come to that conclusion, as it has been answered in this Assembly that they could not adopt any other way but to adopt the principle they have adopted in order to save the courtyard of the mosque?

Mr. President: I think that is a little too complicated for a supplementary question.

Mr. K. Ahmed: Is the Honourable the Home Member satisfied that neither the Chief Commissioner nor the Government of India had any other alternative method open to them?

Mr. President: The Honourable Member is already aware that the Home Member is satisfied with the course taken.

VOTING BY NON-OFFICIALS.

590. Mr. Mohammad Faiyaz Khan: Will the Government be pleased to state if it issues instructions to the non-official nominated Members of the Legislative Assembly regarding their voting and other matters?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Halley: The reply is in the negative.

Rai Bahadur Bakshi Sohan Lal: Sir, does the Government issue instructions to official Members of the Assembly to give their votes in a particular manner?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Halley: Official Members are, of course, under the ordinary obligation of officers of Government to support the Government to the best of their ability at all times and in all places.

Lala Girdharilal Agarwala: Does that apply to social legislation like Dr. Gour's Bill?

Mr. President: That question does not arise. The Honourable Member can study the division lists and satisfy himself?

QUESTION OF FREE VOTING.

591. Mr. Mohammad Faiyaz Khan: (a) Is it true that one or two non-official nominated Members of the Legislative Assembly were brought to task by the heads of their District or Division on their return to their homes, for having given their votes against the Government wishes according to their free will?

(b) If the above statement is true, will the Government consider the question of stopping this practice and allow the non-official elected and nominated Members of the Assembly to vote according to their wishes and conscience?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Halley: (a) Government have no information.

(b) No restrictions have been imposed by Government on the voting of non-official Members of the Assembly.

I should like to do it.

MILITARY PASSES ON RAILWAYS.

592. Mr. Mohammad Faiyaz Khan: (a) Is it true that British soldiers while on leave are granted second class passes on the Indian Railways?

(b) If it is true, are the Indian soldiers too granted second class Railway passes?

Mr. E. Burdon: (a) No.

(b) The question does not arise.

BOMBING ON FRONTIER TRIBES.

593. Mr. Mohammad Faiyaz Khan: What has been the cost of bombing the Frontier tribes by aeroplanes?

Mr. E. Burdon: The attention of the Honourable Member is invited to part (ii) of the reply given on the 28rd January to Mr. Kamat's question No. 258.

Mr. K. Ahmed: Is there any prospect of getting any profit out of this inhuman work of bombing people on the Frontier?

ARMS ACT EXEMPTIONS.

594. Mr. Mohammad Faiyaz Khan: When is the Government going to allot a day for discussing the non-official Resolution regarding the life exemption from the operation of the Arms Act of the Members of Indian Legislature signed and sent by so many Members?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Halley: The Government do not propose to allot any official time for the discussion of the Resolution referred to by the Honourable Member; but if the Government can give up any official time during the present Session they are prepared to allot such time for the discussion of one or two non-official Resolutions to be selected by a ballot held in the usual way.

THIRD CLASS BOOKING OFFICE AT SHOLAPUR.

595. Mr. B. S. Kamat: (i) Will Government be pleased to state if it is contemplated by the Great Indian Peninsula Railway administration to abolish their third class passengers Booking office situated in Sholapur city in Bombay Presidency?

STATEMENT LAID ON THE TABLE.

Mr. E. Burdon: Sir, I lay on the table the information promised in reply to a question by Rai Bahadur Lachmi Prasad Sinha asked on the 9th March, 1923, regarding Select Committees on Bills and other Committees summoned during the period between the 7th October, 1922, and 6th January, 1923.

Statement showing the information promised in reply to a question by Rai Bahadur Lachmi Prasad Sinha asked on the 9th March, 1923, regarding Select Committees on Bills and other Committees summoned during the period between the 7th of October, 1922, and 6th January, 1923.

No.	Committee.	Department concerned.	Number of days on which the Committee held its meetings.	Amount spent.	REMARKS.
1	Joint Committee on the Indian Cotton Transport Bill.	I.—Joint or Select Legislative Department.	Committees on Bills. One day (27th November, 1922).	Rs. A. P. 1,843 9 0
2	Joint Committee on the Indian Mines Bill.	Ditto.	Two days (6th and 8th January, 1923).	3,951 13 0
3	Joint Committee on the Indian Soilers Bill.	Ditto.	One day (4th January, 1923).
1	Standing Finance Committee.	II.—Other Finance Department.	Committees. Five days (4th to 8th December, 1922).	4,101 8 0
2	Depreciation Fund Committee.	Railway Department.	120 days (25th October, 1922 to 28th February, 1923).	11,000 0 0	The Committee had to visit the headquarters and important workshop stations of each State owned railway in India and Burma.
3	Statistics Revision Committee.	Ditto.	123 days (9th October, 1922 to 28th February, 1923).	7,000 0 0 Approximately.	The Committee is still sitting.

UNSTARRED QUESTION AND ANSWER.

RESERVED ACCOMMODATION ON E. I. RAILWAY.

239. Rai Bahadur G. C. Nag: (a) Are the Government aware, (1) that the public experience difficulties in getting reserved accommodation at Howrah, on the Mail trains of the East Indian Railway, and (2) that applicants for reserved accommodation are not usually informed beforehand as to whether their applications will be complied with or not?
(b) Will Government kindly see to the removal of the above inconvenience?

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley: (a) As regards (1) the reply is in the negative. Accommodation on the mail trains is limited and if sufficient notice is not given it may happen that applicants are disappointed. As regards (2) Reserved accommodation by any particular train is not guaranteed, but if not available applicants are at once advised accordingly.

(b) In the circumstances no action is necessary on the part of Government.

Mahsuds, but against their own countrymen. So, if you propose to impose the tax on agriculturists, I welcome the proposal provided that you pay for your own protection and we pay for our own. There is no reason why you should benefit from our tax. Sir, I think it is the urban people who are not sufficiently taxed. Mr. Ginwala's experience in Burma may be otherwise. I am talking of another province. If you want to tax the agriculturists, do so by all means. But let that tax be spent for their benefit and on their protection. We do not want all the luxuries that the people in towns require, and, therefore, we should not be called upon to pay for them. I may inform my Honourable friend from Burma that rural people are doing much more than urban people are doing for the country and the empire. Here, seated on these Benches under fans or before fires, you make laws, and impose taxes. But who gives their blood, when it comes to that? The urban people do not go to the front. In fact, they have never gone yet. You say, tax the agriculturist. They give both money and blood, while you give only money and that too grudgingly and yet seated in this Hall you say "tax them." Is it meant that the poor people, the agriculturists, who are the backbone of the country and the Government, must pay and the urban people must spend on themselves. If this is the case, it is most unfair, and I think any Government in the country, so long as it is strong enough to rule in the country, will see that such an injustice is not done. (Mr. P. P. Ginwala: "Quite right, that is what I want.") Dr. Nand Lal has made a very uncompromising tirade against the expenditure on Waziristan. I think there are better heads than mine in this Assembly who will have their say on this important question, but I think I also may be allowed to say a word on the point. I am expecting another very learned attack from my friend, Mr. Rangachariar, if I can anticipate him aright. (Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: "I am not going to make an attack.") Well, I am glad to learn he is not going to make an attack. I may say that in discussing Waziristan and Mahsud territories, and the Afridis and other tribes, all the Honourable Members, seated in this Assembly Room, know very little about the difficulties of the Government in regard to the transborder area and tribes. Go there, live there for some time, and see how difficult the situation is. It is very easy to say: "Oh! what has the Government been able to do?" Does history tell us that any Government at any time was able to do more than the present Government has done? No. Even Nadir Shaw with his army of 40 lakhs had to pay a ransom for a woman who was kidnapped from his camp. (Mr. S. C. Shahani: "6.") I accept your figure. But had he not to pay the Afridis despite that big army? Their geographical position is such, it is so advantageous that they can defy any authority on this or on the other side of their country. Some people say, "Well, why don't you occupy that territory?" Good, occupy it. But, have you got manhood, have you got money to conquer them? India must fight for at least 25 years with all its manhood and with all its resources to occupy that country which is dry like a bone and where there does not grow even a blade of grass. If this is worth trying, do try and occupy that rugged stony country if you can. Then and then alone you will be able to protect effectively the inhabitants of North-West Frontier Province. Otherwise, you can protect them only partially and not completely from the depredations of their trans-frontier neighbours. You cannot defy nature. Their natural position is such, they are so placed geographically that you cannot do more than adopt protective measures to the best of your ability and there can be no denying the fact that the Government is doing its level best. As regards expenditure on the North-West Frontier, some people have always criticised it in this Hall. For the last three years we have been hearing speeches from responsible and irresponsible persons on this subject. Government is accused of wasting money on the frontier. I think the Members of Government are a set of sane people, they have not lost their heads yet. They are doing simply what they are obliged to do and nothing more than that. We must give them credit for that. I do not think they have got any sympathy for the Mahsuds, Waziris and others. There is nothing in common between a barbarous Mahsud and a civilised Englishman. It is by sheer force of necessity and compulsion that they are doing what they are doing on the frontier. As regards tendering advice, sitting here in this Assembly room, we may give any advice, but the best advice can be given only by those who live on the spot or who have got some personal experience. By merely paying flying visit, as some of us did last year in motor cars under the protection of our army, one does not become an authority on frontier matters. You must go and live there on the spot and then, and then alone, you will be in a position to give a sound advice. The English officers, both civilian and military, are there on the spot. They know the position. The position is undoubtedly very difficult and it will be unjust and unfair on our part to criticise Government in season and out of season regarding the expenditure which is being incurred in protecting the five districts of the North-West Frontier Province from the raid of the trans-border marauders. With these remarks, Sir, I will sit down.

[Chaudhri Shahab-ud-Din.]

The Assembly then adjourned for Lunch till Twenty Minutes to Three of the Clock.

The Assembly re-assembled after Lunch at Twenty Minutes to Three of the Clock. Mr. President was in the Chair.

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary (Calcutta: Non-Muhammadan Urban): Sir, till a few minutes before lunch one thought that this year's budget debate was going to be dull and lifeless for intelligible reasons. The Inchcape cuts have extended far not only to nation building activities but even to the extent of cutting the ground from under our feet. The usual platitudes and stock figures and arguments freely indulged in on the budget field days are all upset this year. They are not available for debate purposes, because of several disturbing factors. We had recently the Railway debate, the Fiscal debate, and last but not least, the Inchcape Report. They are more or less stupefying, and are certainly upsetting worked up ideas. If Government had difficulty in dealing fully with Inchcape Committee's recommendations in 15 days, much more have been our difficulties who are supposed to be able to master this Inchcape Report in less than 72 hours. Therefore, there was a sort of masonic understanding in many parts of the House that instead of indulging in platitudes and generalities now we should let the debate proceed as best as it might and attack the real issues, the practical side of things, when opportunity comes later. I regret my Honourable friend Mr. Ginwala is not now here. He gave a new turn to the course of the debate. His breezy original view of things always set forward when it suits his purpose, was a sort of red-herring which must have been very helpful and will be helpful to the Honourable the Finance Member if the line is taken up by other Members.

I hope that will not be the case. Fairly revolutionary in his ideas, some of his ideals if he was serious would not commend themselves to many. On the question of taxing agricultural income,—(public memory is proverbially short)—we have to remember not only the last year's debate on the subject at which open official voting took place and when almost the last word was supposed to be said on the subject. It was agreed that agricultural incomes would not be interfered with, if it could be helped. That question has a long history behind it. When income-tax first came, it came because it was felt that agriculturists and people interested in land were practically the only people who were paying anything like appreciable tax. Business people, officers and people making income otherwise were fairly exempt. There was a tremendous uproar against the proposal for the tax in the early seventies of the last century, or even earlier. In Lord Northbrooke's time there was practically a pact that agricultural income would not be interfered with. Since then there have been developments. Agricultural produce, if it took the shape of any business proposition, has been taxed and this original understanding has been otherwise circumvented. I do not know whether Mr. Ginwala was airing his views about the necessity of having a Committee for considering taxing capabilities of the country. One could understand that if he did that in a direct fashion; but this is hardly the occasion to raise the question in this fashion. Mr. Ginwala pleaded that he did not believe in retrenchment beyond a certain limit. Quite so. But I do not know whether he is satisfied that that limit or anything like it has been reached. On the other hand, if without impertinence one may say so, the man in the street, because it is he who really counts in these matters, feels that nearly all that could be done has not been done by the Inchcape Committee for reasons that it is unnecessary to go into now. These are matters that one would like to leave over for another occasion in spite of Sir Malcolm Hailey's suggestion this morning that Budget debate would be a suitable occasion for the Inchcape Report. Mr. Ginwala rather forgot that he was responsible for the first step in the matter. It was on his initiative really that a retrenchment committee was resolved upon and came, and that credit is his. (Mr. P. P. Ginwala: "No, I never said so.") Well, I am corrected. It was Dr. Gour's Resolution. Anyway the Retrenchment Committee came and has done its work as well as could be expected under the circumstances, though labouring under restricted cultural outlook. That has been the advantage, and that has, to a certain extent, been the difficulty attendant on the budget preparation this year and consideration of the Budget. Naturally, on account of the Report coming in so late, Government could not give full effect to all that has been recommended and "lags," to give currency to a new budget time coin, have to be reckoned with. But one must not lag behind far too much, lest one should lag for all time.

We do not want to complain, but we cannot help feeling that if immediately after the Resolution was carried a Committee had been appointed and they had gone into work earlier, speedier determination of the whole issues would have been possible. It is undoubtedly a great advance to have military expenditure cut down even by 10 crores if and when they come. One difficulty that I feel with regard to questions of further taxation is this. We have not positive information of the cuts that are going to be accepted as a whole by those who have the last word on the subject. The recommendations of the Esher Committee and the Military Requirements Committee are still awaiting decision in England.

[Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary.]

There is a belief or impression abroad,—I hope it is entirely unfounded—that if this Assembly fails to do what is considered to be its duty either by voting for salt tax or otherwise balancing the budget, an awful catastrophe will follow in the shape of scrapping of some of the most important military recommendations of the Incheape Committee. I refuse to believe such a possibility. If they stand scrapped, why, the rest will naturally and necessarily fall through. From a telegram this morning, according to the Times there has been difference of opinion between Whitehall and Delhi regarding the Budget. Probably this has given colour to the belief to which I refer. But I am quite sure that there cannot be lack of vision or imagination to the extent that if the Assembly fails in the direction indicated anything like the apprehended catastrophe will follow. On the other hand our faith is large in statesmanship and also in the capacity of the Government here to make the two ends meet and to meet the purely temporary deficit that has arisen on account of the cuts not being given effect to in time. Possible alternative taxation has been referred to. We need not labour the points of taxation to-day. We shall do that in due time. Various proposals have been made; cotton export duty is one having regard particularly to what is happening in America now, import duty on silver, export duty on petrol, which at this very moment is finding disfavour in another Chamber, more import duty on the coarser counts of yarn, not much favoured as some others. Various other suggestions have been made which Government will have been to examine and may not again reject. They have fallen back on salt tax in connection with which some people would be inclined to raise constitutional questions whether the objections are not so much constitutional as those of expediency; after having done all that we did last year with regard to this tax and ultimately rejected it, is it fair to the Assembly to ask it to go over the whole ground again, particularly in view of the feeling prevailing in the country. The objection to it is not a matter merely of sentiments, nor is it pressed because the elections are ahead. For more solid reasons both sides of the House feel it their duty to oppose it. As was my duty to explain last year in the earlier part of my life I thought that salt duty was ideal, from the point of view of stock arguments that have always been advanced in its favour. I am therefore not troubled with difficulties that are generally attributed to those who oppose salt tax. I go upon the larger issues; now is not the time when further irritation should be caused in the country by what might easily be avoided if the civil and the military authorities will be more helpful. They have been undoubtedly more helpful than in other years. His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief has just come in. I should like to voice the unanimous sense of appreciation of this Assembly that he has assisted the Incheape Committee to an extent that has resulted in saving about 10 crores of rupees. Still one feels that more, even pending the final consideration of the question, may be done by which the immediate temporary difficulty may be tided over.

We have to make up 4½ crores. Supposing we could get between cuts that are on the waiting list, so to call them, an additional two crores and a half, further assistance may be had by disposal of portions of the tremendous amount of accumulated stores, with about 60 crores, I believe indicated by the Incheape Committee. Even if the apprehensions of the Incheape Committee are well founded that immediate sale on good terms cannot be secured, there might be some relief in this direction. Then there are the large contingencies, allowances, supply and services and other heads under which some cuts would be possible even now. Even the accepted cuts do not happen to be reflected in the detailed statements before us, nor are our Fiscal and Railway Resolutions. Mr. Ginwala is always frank. He has at last spoken out his real mind about railway policy this morning. He was asked by Munshi Iswar Saran on which side he voted. He may have erred in voting. That does not matter. What he has given expression to will be a warning to all who hope that railway revenue will ever come to the rescue of the country. It cannot and I believe it ought not. Be that as it may, our Resolution was passed and steps are probably being taken to carry out the Railway Resolution and the Fiscal Resolution of the Assembly and some of the Incheape Committee's recommendations. Pending this it ought to be possible to defer some of the big railway expenses that have been again budgeted on insufficient materials. Last year either because they had no scheme ready or on account of other reasons Government could not spend the whole allotment for Railway rehabilitation and the balance is to be carried over to this year. Let it not be, for you do not know that you are better prepared this year. Then as Sir Basil Blackett told us, the whole of the interest charges provided last year were not incurred. Between the last year's savings on railway and the interest charges there was some saving. There may be things like that again and up the capacious sleeves of the Department there are possibly means out of which the present small and temporary difficulties of the country may be tided over.

Sir Basil has been complimented, and with that bait appeals have been made to him. I thought the Honourable the Leader of the House had effectively destroyed the microbe of eulogy in this House, earlier in the session. Though no healthy minded Englishman looks out for compliments or eulogiums on occasions of this kind, he is entitled to the consideration and courtesy due to a new comer, and we are prepared to give him more. But we also want him to examine over again this question of salt tax about which his veteran colleagues know what the country feels. We must see whether by further retrenchment and by some less objectionable taxation, (because no taxation can ever be wholly unobjectionable) and by disposing of some of the surplus stores, by selling and not mortgaging property in the sense that the Finance Member indicated, by means far short of cheating apprehended by him the would-be insolvent could get rid of his liabilities. All these different avenues have to be and could be yet exploited. It ought to be possible to find these 4½ crores; official negative cannot be the last word on the subject as we found last year. No one would be more pleased than myself to be associated in the evolution of this fourth red letter day in the short annals of the Assembly for participating in which the Finance Member has done me the honour of inviting the Budget must be balanced if possible. Coming to some of the details, we find that dealing with the military budget, more than general agreement has not been arrived at between the Government of India and the Home Authorities for which reason full effect has not been given with regard to the military units or parts of units that are to be dispensed with. We find also that there has been increases in the Royal Air Force which was probably necessary because on the efficiency of that force would depend the extent to which reduction in the other directions would be possible. Coming to the second item on page 5 of the military demand I notice and notice with regret that a reduction of 10 lakhs in the development of the territorial forces has been made. Well, Sir, when the Auxiliary and the Territorial forces question came up before the late Council, we were given definitely to understand that both would be treated alike and all possible efforts will be made to develop the territorial forces. So far as Bengal is concerned, I am afraid I cannot bear testimony to the rapidity of that development or to facilities for that purpose. We have a sorry tale to tell, which I would rather not go into now; but the materials are there. If means and will are forthcoming, much larger development would be possible and I do not think because of seeming failure here and of disappointment for the time being on the part of those who are organising these territorial units, there ought to be any lack of support such as reduction of funds would indicate.

[Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary.]

The whole of the subject being still under consideration I do not think we could usefully take up the time of the House by going into details of the military budget beyond expressing the hope that either under the heads of motor transport and stores, or some of the costlier improvements in buildings or soldiers' comforts and such like things temporary and slight relief could not be given to tide over our passing difficulties.

With regard to the civil estimates the same remarks and request would apply. To a certain extent undoubtedly one has to wait for proper fruition of the recommendations in a legitimate way and things cannot be forced on. But here also, as a matter of extreme necessity, could we not appeal to the authorities to find about a crore or so out of the three crores which have to remain on the waiting list? If this is achieved and if the small taxes in the other directions that have been indicated are resorted to it would be possible to tide over the difficulties.

I am sorry that, before I left the military budget, I did not refer to what many of us have felt. In addition to the training colleges and schools that have been suggested, it is worth while considering whether special classes in selected general schools could not be opened, as has been done in England, with a view of providing at a comparatively small cost, at a large number of centres, materials for the special schools and colleges which cannot come to every body's front door. This has been found practicable in England and with very small expenditure and a great deal of capable and sympathetic organization it would be possible to work out a similar scheme here.

These are some of the observations that strike one on a general view of things and without closer study of the Inchcape Report for which there has been no time. For greater and detailed consideration of what really should be done for tiding over the difficulties which the Assembly must entirely set its mind upon, we must wait for another opportunity. In the meantime I think it is our duty to let Government know that in both sides of the House the feeling against the salt tax is strong and it would be as well to think of the second or even the third line of defence so that deficits may be covered.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: (Madras City: Non-Muhammadian Urban): On an occasion like this it used to be the fashion to review the general administration of the country in all its aspects. But time being so short it is hardly worth while attempting such a huge task, and I therefore, Sir, propose to offer a few remarks on what impressions or depressions have been created in my mind with reference to the budget of this year. Sir, for the last two years it has been our fate to take depressions from the presentation of the budgets, and it is the good fortune of my Honourable friend, Sir Basil Blackett, to give us more impressions than depressions. He comes at a time when our finances are attempting to steady themselves, thanks to the efforts made by this Assembly, the constant and determined attempt to bring down the expenditure of the country. Sir, there were not wanting those who were ready to tell His Excellency the Viceroy that the Assembly had misbehaved in this matter, that he must restore the grants which had been cut down and that the Government could not afford to follow the advice given by the Assembly. I hope, Sir, that the eminent people who offered that advice to His Excellency the Viceroy are now satisfied that the Assembly were perfectly justified in taking the stand which they did last year. It is a matter for great congratulation, indeed it is a matter for thankfulness on the part of the whole country that we had a strong Committee to sit on the expenditure of India presided over by such a great statesman as Lord Inchcape. He was assisted by eminent persons, both Indians and Europeans, who approached the question with a fresh mind; and the bottom limit which we were told last year had been reached in many a Department proves indeed to have a still deeper bottom to which you can go. Sir, the Honourable the Finance Member, unlike his predecessor who was drafted into this Department from outside the Civil Service, Sir Guy Fleetwood-Wilson, has youth on his side, unimpaired health and an equally well-established reputation for ability. With all that, from his reference to India as his native land, I gather that he is imbued with a love of the country, a love of the heat of this country and a love of the people of this country. Sir, imbued with that love and the times being so propitious, I am sure, with two good monsoons behind and I hope with two good monsoons in front of him, he will have a better tale to unfold at the next budget and the country will be relieved of some portion of the burden of taxation which we unfortunately had to impose upon it during the last two years. Sir, he may also congratulate himself that he has not got in this Assembly—with all respect to the Members present—to meet the incisive eloquence and informed criticism of a Gokhale, or the torrential eloquence of Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya, or the emphatic utterances of Mr. Vijayaraghavachariar, or the journalistic thunder of Sir Surendra Nath Banerjee, which his predecessor had to face.

Sir, we have the year 1922-23 to review. So far as expectations went, I think they have been pretty fairly realized except in two or three matters which are rather striking. On the income side it is a grievous disappointment that Bengal has behaved so shabbily as it has done in the matter of income-tax. We have been told that we are to pay her $3\frac{1}{2}$ crores in the shape of income-tax and not to collect from her; and I think that $3\frac{1}{2}$ crores does not all represent the refund amount; it was really two crores which actually had to be refunded. Anyway our expectations fall short by $3\frac{1}{2}$ crores in the matter of receipts. In the matter of estimates of expenditure, it is when we come to the Military Department presided over by His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief that we find estimates made which have proved far out of the truth. For instance, in the matter of demobilization charges—I do not know whether His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief is responsible or the Secretary of State—the estimate of 52 lakhs has gone up to 280 lakhs. I do not understand why there should be such wide divergence between the estimate and the actual. So also in the matter of the established military charges; the actual expenditure is Rs. $4\frac{1}{2}$ crores less than the estimated expenditure on the established charges. We were told last year that they had to frame such high estimates because of the rise in prices, but as a matter of fact the prices were falling last year, and when they framed such high estimates, the actual expenditure, when they based such estimates on high prices, their actuals have come down by Rs. 4½ crores in the matter of the established charges. Reviewing the condition of the country during the passing year, we cannot congratulate ourselves that trade has very much revived. Wherever you go, if you meet traders they speak of the depressed condition in the trades. Capital is very difficult to get; the rates of interest, both the bank rates and those in the market, continue to be high. General prosperity is very low. Railway earnings and the Postal and Telegraph Department tell their own tale in that direction, and most important items stand neglected; we have not been able to show any achievements in the nation-building Departments. There are sources of wealth which have not been tapped; we have forests and mineral wealth in the country for which Indians have not been educated and trained to work them up and bring out the wealth for the use of the country. The much-talked of school of mines at Dhanbad has still to come into existence, and I see that the Rerenchment Committee have proposed that that scheme should be held in abeyance for another two years; and I do not know that the wealth of the country has increased during the current year. It is true we are eking out a living existence. But we cannot show that any of our scholars have added to the literature of the world. None of our chemists, none of our inventions can be said to have added to the reputation of this country; so also regarding education in every direction, we cannot lay much flattering unction to our souls and say that our country has shown its strength in these matters; and with the deep insight which our Honourable Finance Member must now have got into the finances of this country, I had expected in his speech that he would have dealt with the economic condition of the country what story the figures tell him as to the economic condition of the ryot in this country and of the middle class people in this country; I had expected some criticism on his part, with the aid of the figures which he must have gone through very carefully. I suppose the speech on the Budget is not the occasion for any such revelation or disclosure to this Assembly as to what impressions in that direction they made on his mind. But we would have welcomed any such criticisms on his part as being informing and useful for us to turn our activities in the direction which he may have indicated. Sir, I had thought we had sung the last song in connection with military expenditure last year, but I am sorry to say that the time has not come for us to cease to sing in that direction. My Honourable friends speaking both this morning and this afternoon have been congratulating themselves too soon, I think, on the effects on the military expenditure so far achieved, on the result so far achieved. Sir, we were told last year that the time had not yet come, at any rate last year was not the time for making reductions because there was the Moplah trouble, that there was a doubtful factor in the interior conditions in the country, that the ink of the Afghanistan Treaty was not yet dry, that there was rise in prices, and various other doubtful interior and exterior factors, which induced His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief to take the view that the time was not yet for diminishing the strength of the units or the number of the fighting units in this country, but I hope His Excellency has now satisfied himself that he was rather too pessimistic in his estimation of the situation of the country. The country has behaved magnificently during the year, and the exterior borders have not given as much trouble as they used to, thanks to the efforts, the strenuous efforts made by the Chief Commissioner of the North-West Frontier Province during the last year. I wish such efforts had been made in previous year; in fact if action had been taken in previous years in the direction in which Sir John Maffey took action, last year, the conditions in the frontier would have been much better. It was due to the neglect of the internal condition of the districts and of the people therein due to the vacillating policy which was adopted, due also to the policy of petting and fondling with the tribes across, that one heard of the unfortunate conditions in the North-West Frontier districts. But things being so much better than they were, I hope His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief will see his way to accepting the recommendations and to strongly recommend the adoption of the recommendations made by the Inchcape Committee with reference to the fighting units in the military forces of this country. I find, Sir, that there is a fatal fascination for No. 62 in the Military Department. We began our career with 62 crores in 1921-22. We were told last year to budget for, or rather to agree to the allotment of 62 crores last year, although it was really 67.75 crores, and this year also we are told that the allotment is 62 crores! It is rather a fatal number, and I hope His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief will see his way to consenting to some other figure than 62, and I hope to be able to satisfy him that it is quite possible to adopt a much lesser figure than 62 (A Voice: "32.") Sir, if you compare the military expenditure in this country and either the gross revenue of the whole country or the net receipts or the gross revenue or the net receipts of the Central Government, the burden of expenditure is nothing which can compare favourably with any other country in the world. It was justified last year, as I have stated already, on false grounds. As a matter of fact, far from there having been a rise in prices, there was a fall in prices, so much so that the estimates fell by 190 lakhs,—the actuals fell by 190 lakhs less than the estimates for stores and stocks. Now Waziristan, after all, accounts only 3.85 crores. What about the rest? The rest is concerned in what is known as the established military charges. It is the established military charges that we should seek for further reduction in. Excluding the two uncertain items of the discharge of surplus officers and Waziristan, let us examine the figures. Sir, out of a recommendation for reduction made by the Inchcape Committee of 13.95 crores, I find the military authorities have adopted only 5.75 crores for the next year's Budget. If the civil portion can adopt 6.6 crores out of 8.5 crores recommended, if the non-military portion can adopt 6.6 crores out of 8.5 crores recommended, why should the military not take off more for the coming year? If we examine it more closely, we find that in the matter of established charges there has really been no change effected in the coming year. In 1922-23 the established charges were budgeted for at 65.9 crores, whereas the actual was only 60.59, and for the year 1923-24, for established charges we are budgeting for 59.68—a difference of 90 lakhs. This difference of 90 lakhs is made up of, and in fact is more than made up by reductions in the marine and military works. Marine accounts for 62 lakhs, and the military accounts for 70 lakhs, so that the two together come to 132 lakhs, whereas in the established charges there is only a reduction of 90 lakhs. So that when you come to think of it, there has really been no effort made in reducing the established military charges. It is in that direction that reduction has to be made. Unless substantial reductions are made in the established military charges, the recurring charges are bound to continue. Waziristan is not going to be an eternal burden. The discharge of surplus officers is not going to be an ever-lasting question, but the established military charges are going to be an eternal burden, and it is there recuts have to be made; it is there cuts have been recommended, and it is there, I am sorry to see, no effort has been made to reduce the expenditure. That is why I stated that my Honourable friends who have been congratulating His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief have been doing so too soon. Sir, reductions made are due to automatic causes, such as fall in prices, windfalls, namely, large stock of stores on hand due to war and other things. Such reductions are really no reductions for which we can take credit. Reductions due to reduced activities and real economies are the reductions we have to look for. Now let us see if you have done so. Have the number of Units been reduced? Has the strength of the Units been reduced? Has the proportion of officers to men been reduced? Have the command charges and those of the District Commands been reduced? Has there been any economy effected in transport? Has there been any change in the system of contracts by which you really introduce economy in the purchase of things? Has there been the substitution of the Indian agency for the more costly British agency? And has there been any real change of system? It is in these directions that we have to look for real reductions, and when I look for changes in these directions, I fail to trace any change—it may be my ignorance of the figures—but I fail to see any change in any of these directions. The figures do not disclose, nor do the marginal notes, which also I carefully searched, any such tendency. It may be, as I said, my ignorance of the figures, but I tried my best in the last two days in the spare hours I could get to find improvement in these directions, but I regret to say my search has been in vain. Sir, much also depends upon the determination of the policies, both as regards the frontier and as regards the Indianization of the services. These are matters, I know, in which His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief has not a free hand, nor for the matter of fact the Government of India—I am sure these matters will be dictated from elsewhere, but I hope the Government of India and His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief will put their heavy pressure in one direction and see that the country is relieved substantially in these directions.

[Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar.]

[Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar.]

Now I think the time has come for the Honourable the Finance Member, like the Chancellor of Exchequer in England to say; I will give you only so much, say 40 per cent. of our net revenue. I do not object to it. I daresay it will be admitted as a high percentage, but let it be 40 per cent. of our net revenues which we should give for the military and they must make their budget according to that. (Mr. Jamnadas Dvarkadas: "The Brussels Conference recommended 20 per cent.") I know, but I am prepared to go up to 40 per cent. Let the military be satisfied. I think the time has come for some such thing to be done, not by this Assembly because we are powerless in the matter, but I hope the Government of India will tell the military authorities 'thus far and no further and you must make your budget according to that amount.' That was done by the Geddes Committee.

Mr. President: Will the Honourable Member bring his remarks to a close?

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: I will, Sir, in a moment. There are various other matters of policy which this Assembly has now settled, for instance the Fiscal policy, the railway management and so on. This leads me to another important matter. What are the Indian Members of the Executive Council doing? Three of them there are. What portfolios are they in charge of? Are they going to be entrusted with the carrying out of any of these broad policies which the Assembly has laid down or is it to be left to be carried out by the conservative section in the Government of India? I wish, Sir, that an ambitious Indian will take charge of one of these important departments and see that the policy laid down by this Assembly is really carried out, so that it may not be said, as was said by Mr. Ginwala 'Oh, the railway management is going to be a failure.' Well, place it in the hands of an ambitious, youthful Member who will really put his heart and soul into it. I promise Mr. Ginwala that it will be a source of profit and the crores and crores which we have sunk in railways will be redeemed for the country. As I said already, Sir, this is a tempting occasion on which you can indulge in all sorts of things, but as I said the time is too short. I would therefore once more point out that we really need have no deficits. In the matter of Railways, the Retrenchment Committee have suggested a reduction of 4.59, and I see that the Railway Budget is taking credit only for 3 crores this year. What about transferring redemption of annuities to the capital amount? That will give you at least a crore to your credit. That may be transferred excluding the interest. Why should it not be added and also various other things such as the Secretary of State's expenditure in England? I see the Retrenchment Committee have advised considerable reduction in the Secretary of State's establishment. Why should it not be carried out this year? So also there are various other ways in which the 4 crores can be got, the military after giving up the figures of 62 can come to 58 or 59 or even 60, so that it will give us another 2 crores. The Railways can give us one crore, and the other civil establishments can give us another crore. I therefore think that we can certainly make up our budget without any deficit, and if really there is a deficit of one crore or more, by all means put an export duty on petrol. Make it that way instead of making the poor people pay, as my friend Mr. Ginwala suggested. I leave the landholders in the hands of my friend, Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar, against Mr. Ginwala. But I will say only this. Does he know that the Madras Government is carried on by the revenue paid by the landholders? Out of the 12 and odd crores they spend, nearly 9 crores come out of the landholders. Does he know that when other people pay 3 or 4 annas, as income-tax, we pay 9 annas in the rupee as tax? Let him take lessons in that direction instead of being envious of landholders. I can advise him to safely entrust his savings to me for investment in lands and I will render a true account to him and he will find that he will get less than 2 per cent.

Lala Girdharilal Agarwala (Agra Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I congratulate the Honourable Sir Basil Blackett and his staff for production of the insolvency budget for the ensuing year with great lucidity and clearness. Congratulations are no less due to the Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey for his substantial help and guidance.

Poor India shall ever remain grateful to the Right Honourable Lord Inchcape and every member of His Lordship's Committee for their Herculean labours in the line of retrenchment in her abnormal expenditure especially the military.

They rightly say "the expenditure which has been incurred in the past may have been inevitable, but the question is whether India can afford to maintain military expenditure on the present scale as an insurance against future eventualities." "In our opinion," they say, "the repeated huge deficits of the last few years in spite of imposition of heavy new taxation have made it abundantly clear that India cannot afford this expenditure. So long as peace conditions obtained the first essential is for India to balance her budget and this can only be secured by a very substantial reduction in the military estimates."

[Lala Girdharilal Agarwala.]

It is surprising to find that in the British Infantry the peace strength of the army is more than the war strength. On comparing the figures we find in 1913-14 British officers 28, British other ranks 1,004, followers 37, total 1,059, while in 1922-23 we find the same number of British officers, 1,012 British other ranks, 45 Indian ranks, 73 followers, total 1,158.

The proposed strength for 1923-24 shows that while only 62 Indian officers with King's Commission in fighting units, cavalry, infantry and pioneers are to be appointed, the number of British officers is 3,324. Out of a total of 6,828 officers holding the King's Commission, not more than 66 places are reserved for Indians. Artillery, engineers, signals, armoured car companies are all barred against Indian commissioned officers.

The commissioned officer of the Royal Air Force 227, military training and education 222, remounts 21, even ordnance and clothing 100, veterinary 38, medical 780, supplies 200, mechanical transport 141, animal transport 63, army headquarters, headquarters of command, district and brigades, embarkation staff and railway transport staff 518 are all Europeans. May I ask why are not any Indians employed for these posts even now?

The reduced budgeted military expenditure still stands at the appalling figure of over 65 crores of which it is said 3 crores might perhaps be realised.

Rs. 4-25 crores have been allowed for special expenditure over Waziristan. India cannot afford the luxury of Waziristan any longer. The Government policy requires complete overhauling. India is groaning under the weight of heavy taxation and while in other countries taxes, duties and railway rates are on the decline, our country has unfortunately to double the duty on salt, what to say of reduction. India is being crushed under the steam hammer of local, provincial and Imperial taxation and instead of any relief being offered, it is proposed to raise a rupee loan of 25 crores, and a sterling loan of 15 million pounds.

His Excellency the Viceroy has taken the lead in economy by retrenching his own body guards and band thus saving Rs. 82,000. Thanks to His Excellency. In my province the Honourable the Ministers and the Deputy President of the Legislative Council, all Indians, have agreed to make substantial reductions in their salaries, and the Indian Member of the Executive Council of my provinces has agreed to forego his salary altogether. Their self-sacrifice is commendable.

The current year's deficit in the Central Government alone in India stands at the appalling figure of 17½ crores as compared with the British finances where revenue exceeds expenditure by 86 million pounds sterling. The bad financial condition of India and the present policy of the Government are the cause of heavy taxation which lead to widespread discontent in the country. I suggest export duty on petrol, instead of doubling the duty on salt, increase of duty on salt will be greatly resented in the country.

Mr. W. S. J. Willson (Bengal: European): Sir, my feeling upon the conclusion of the Honourable the Finance Member's speech was one of profound satisfaction that the position was no worse. We had known all along that revenue was not coming up to expectation and we had known that expenses had been largely exceeded. We have now piled up the high debt of 100 crores, and I quite agree with the Finance Member that the time has come when we must balance our budget. We all know that money at 5 per cent. interest only doubles itself in 13 years and a fraction and we have been piling up this debt from the beginning for five years out of that time. It was, therefore, a great satisfaction to me to find that he was attempting to balance his budget by genuine retrenchment and had only suggested one extra tax. I am sure he will find the House will support him through thick and thin in all his efforts at retrenchment, and having recently had this very wonderful report of the Inchcape Committee in our hands, the first thing that strikes us all is that we must look to our biggest spending department for our biggest retrenchment. I do not think anybody can read this through without realising that it took to get this retrenchment not what Mr. Rangachariar called a great statesman but one of the finest commercial brains in the British Empire. These retrenchments are suggested by a business Committee and therefore they are entitled in every way to our support. Sir Basil Blackett said that he would like to see the saving habit finding its way into an investment habit. My Honourable colleague, Mr. Darcy Lindsay, in some very good work which he did in propaganda in war time found in selling his post office cash certificates that there was a feeling against them on the part of the public because they were issued in single pieces of paper which were apt to get lost. I therefore make to Sir Basil Blackett a present of the suggestion that, if he can explore that matter and possibly issue cash certificates in the form of either a post office savings bank book which again might be deposited at the post office in exchange for a metal token he might be able to arrive at a higher percentage of investments on the part of the public. I regret very much, Sir, as one always must that he has found no means of reducing the taxation. Now, of course, we know that, when you have to balance the budget, that is the first duty, and until it is done, we cannot come and ask for grants for the nation-building departments. But I feel that I may ask for, as I am directed by my constituents to ask for, some consideration for the taxes on food-stuffs which press very hardly upon the public. That matter was dealt with this morning by Mr. Spence who pointed out very rightly that the public would not buy tinned food-stuffs and bottled food-stuffs imported into this country if fresh equivalents could be got here and I know of no more unpopular tax than the tax on food.

Another point that I am strongly to press for is for some consideration in regard to the motor taxes. That was also dealt with by Mr. Spence and as Sir Basil Blackett used the expression "so-called luxuries"—I think he does not call them luxuries and it is unnecessary to argue that point. But I do wish to point out that we have first of all to pay our income-tax and then to turn round and tax us on the motor cars which are used as a means to go to our offices and business to earn that income is extremely hard. Motors are a necessity, or firms would not, as they do, provide several for their staff to save their time and expedite their affairs. Sir Basil Blackett gave a figure. He said that he found imports last year were double the year before. The figures I have are only for 10 months of the year but they were 3,658 last year against 2,895 the year before.

The point I wish to make there is that the year before, 1921-22, was an extremely bad year and therefore, even if his figures are correct (which of course they ought to be), that the import has doubled, it in no sense shows that the taxes are not pressing hardly on the trade. This 30 per cent. tax has had the further effect of reducing the import of British cars down to 10 per cent. of the total, it was 24 per cent. the year before. Now, the Customs House is supposed to be one of our commercial departments but it does not seem to me to be a very sound commercial principle to overcharge the cars which burn the most petrol, which pays you 6 annas a gallon and which used the biggest tyres which also produce most revenue. The tax has, in the opinion of the trade, directly resulted in making a present of the highest percentage of the trade to Canada and America and I am not aware what Canada or America have done for India that we should assist them to acquire the trade at the expense of the United Kingdom. The taxes have also pressed very hardly on the taxi cab industry and have reduced it to an absolutely unpayable proposition. The motor car firms are losing enormously. One firm in Calcutta lost 14 lakhs last year. Another one lost 8 lakhs and another 4 lakhs. They are losing all round and you have not to go very far from this House itself, to find a notable example in Delhi. On the question of petrol taxes, Sir, I am bound to agree with other speakers who have said that we would willingly see a production tax put on if thereby we can get some relief for the petrol tax we have to pay as consumers. On the whole, Sir, there is this one point I did not notice in the new Finance Member any particular sympathy towards this particular trade. But I hope the facts which I have now put before him will elicit his sympathy, and I hope he would give his consideration to those points, because I am convinced that it will not cause him loss of revenue which he is not in a position to face. I firmly believe that with this encouragement given to the trade, the added trade will more than compensate for a loss of percentage of tax.

[Mr. W. S. J. Willson.]

Mr. K. Muppi Nayar (West Coast and Nilgiris: Non-Muhammadian Rural): Mr. President, I have heard it said that a budget speech resembles, what we call in my part of the country, aviyil—a preparation of all kinds of vegetables cooked together. I, however, propose to make only a few general remarks on our position as revealed by the Honourable the Finance Member on the 1st. I listened to his speech with mingled feelings—with feelings of pride, gladness, and some amount of satisfaction, at his courage, frankness, optimism and his endeavours to meet the present situation, and with feelings of disappointment, pain, and regret at his results and conclusions. None in this House, and largely outside it for the matter of that, will grudge him the sympathy that he so richly deserves on the sudden and almost superhuman uphill task with which he has been confronted almost in the very beginning of his present official career. And, if some of us on this side of the House fail to rise up to his expectations or to wholly endorse his conclusions, I am sure we can count on our Honourable colleague's viewing our position with equal sympathy. Sir, I agree there is little use in referring to the irreparable past. One could only wonder how the Government could have been in the past so utterly negligent of the future of this country, how they could have got into such a mire that dragged them deeper and deeper into it as year after year passed by. Only if wisdom had dictated a few years back some of the present reforms, how much happier would have been our position. But, there is no use crying over spilt milk. The fact remains that continuous years of annual deficit, of over-estimating our revenues and under-estimating our expenditure, of neglect in necessary economy and of large borrowings have stranded us on the verge of insolvency which the Honourable the Finance Member warns us against. Our expenditure has gone up and our national debt has increased in spite of heavy additional taxation and we are now trying to see how we can get back to a place of comparative safety. Our grateful thanks are due to Lord Incheape and his Committee, who have acted as our guides in cutting a path, for their valuable suggestions in the matter of retrenchment, to the departments concerned for realising at least now the absolute necessity of agreeing to cuts and to the Finance Department for so quickly translating into action some of the proposed reforms.

But, in spite of all efforts what is our actual position. All the life of this House we allowed fresh taxation, and we had been a set of Micawbers. This year at least I hoped that we might approach the electorate saying, "We have made no fresh call on your purse." In fact, I hoped we might have shown them something on our credit side, something in the way of reduction in Provincial contributions which must indirectly benefit the people. On this subject, the Honourable the Finance Member first calls on the Provinces to exhaust all their resources; but, so far as Madras is concerned, no one will say that she has failed to do her best, not only now, but all along. He then says that it has been suggested to him that the Provinces are copying certain charitable bodies which make a habit of showing an annual deficit in order to make their supporters come to their rescue. But cannot the same argument be used by the Provinces? Cannot the Central Government be equally strongly accused of taking a leaf out of the book of the institutions referred to, so that the Provincial contributions, or the charities from the Provinces, may be continued? Why, I have heard it suggested that the present taxation proposal is only a false alarm and that the deficit is unreal—one which is made out that we may not cry out for any reduction in taxation or worry the Government with any of our schemes. But to come back to the point, as a matter of fact, not only has my second hope been most regretfully unfulfilled but even the former that of no fresh taxation this year has been shattered. We are actually asked to raise fresh taxation to the extent of 4½ crores and this on salt. Are we not already in darkness? Why then add to it? I say to the Honourable the Finance Member, "Let there be that one last, long and strong pull you demand, but from the heavy expenditure branches." If, even after that, taxation is found necessary, well, then, this House must co-operate with the Government. But do not make the test so hard for us. Let us tax something that is not quite so essential as salt, something which will not tell on man and beast equally, something which will not wound quite so much the popular feeling. Let there be no mistake. The non-co-operators, who are to be our rivals at the ensuing elections, are only doing this, we are told, to thwart the Government's efforts. They wish to come here with no good intentions towards the Government, and, in my opinion, they are not coming here in the best interests of this country. Let us not anyway present them now with a serious and effective weapon to attack our friends. One word more and I have done. If the Honourable the Finance Member and we put our heads together and avoid any fresh taxation and also at the same time manage to give something to the stricken Provinces, that, Sir, will be the fourth red letter day for which he is looking out.

Rai Bahadur Pandit J. L. Bhargava (Ambala Division: Non-Muhammadian): Sir, it would be an act of ungrateful stinginess if the Assembly withholds its acknowledgments to the Finance Member for the able and lucid manner in which he has presented the budget. It would at the same time be an act of unpardonable pusillanimity if the Assembly agrees to give the last and the strong pull appealed for, taking all the angularities of the budget rounded off by the pleasant suavity of the Finance Member.

[Rai Bahadur Pandit J. L. Bhargava.]

Great hopes were raised in the country that the trident of Lord Inchcape will mutilate the demon of military expenditure and prune out the fungous growth of civil expenditure thereby bringing the financial position of India to a healthy level.

The appointment of such a renowned financial expert as we possess in the person of our distinguished Finance Member to the Finance Portfolio of the Government of India promised to us the solution of the currency and exchange difficulties and the rehabilitation of Indian finances on a sound and firm basis.

It must, however, speaking in the language of plainness itself, be stated that the hopes have received a shock and the rock of military expenditure has proved too adamant and hard to have been sufficiently impressed even by the sharp axe of Lord Inchcape and the firm grasp of our Finance Member.

In fact, the axiomatic truth that the straight line represents the least distance between two given points cannot be circumvented and howsoever clever the doctor you may engage, whatever expedients you may employ to put off the evil day, unless the root causes are removed the disease will grow desperate and desperate and end fatally.

The present exorbitant expenditure in the administration of India is bound to continue as long as the present system of administration continues and full responsible Government is not granted to the country and the services are not fully Indianised. The military expenditure alone absorbs about half the revenues. In the civil expenditure also, on account of the alleged indispensableness of the non-Indian agency the services are very highly paid and despite this the Royal Commission on services is thrust upon India in defiance of the wishes of the Legislature and perhaps of the Government of India.

This costly administration is popularly regarded as the sine qua non of bureaucratic rule. When the relations between the Government and the people are strained and both do not see eye to eye the employment of C. I. D. establishment on extensive scales and the engagement of military and police forces on a scale more excessive than a popular and national Government need employ are necessary consequences.

In spite of some superficial cuts at the hands of Lord Inchcape's Committee on the military expenditure the public believes that the military expenditure is much more than a national Government need incur in the interests of India and if the Indian Finances are to return to normal and healthy conditions the military expenditure must be considerably reduced.

It is not at all strange to find in the budget that the revenues from the railways have not come up to the estimates. An abnormal rise in railway fares and freights does not connote corresponding or necessarily much increased income.

The public expected that the fares and freights in railways and the postal and telegraphic charges would be reduced but they have been sorely disappointed.

The present deficit in the budget is very deplorable but the remedy suggested is much more so.

The doubling of the salt tax involves the taxation of the poor people in a commodity of their daily use.

To deprive or lessen the supply to the poor of the only thing other than grain consumed by him, i.e., salt which is all by way of vegetables, condiments, dal and meat which he uses with his bread is to inflict an injury more real and substantial than that which those to whom the price of salt in their dietary is a matter of no moment can imagine. It is generally said that this House is not the true representative of the masses because the franchise is so limited. I would ask the House if it will be justified in taxing the poor who are unrepresented in that sense in this Assembly. Will the Assembly by consenting to such taxation not be pleading guilty to the charge that it does not look properly to the interests of the poor masses of the country? I would fain be charged with pusillanimity at not facing the issue in the face rather than be credited with gallantry by injuring my poor countrymen at their back.

If the deficit cannot be met in any way other than fresh taxation, tax the rich or the middle classes.

I am therefore strongly against the doubling of the salt tax.

As regards exchange I would press upon the attention of the Government that half remedies and make-shifts will not do.

We all remember the capricious changes in the exchange last year, how it ruined trade in India and eluded all calculations of the commercial classes doing incalculable injury to Indian finances and credit. If the question is not seriously tackled and solved under the able guidance of our present Finance Member one may have nothing but disappointment for its solution in the near future. I would therefore submit with all the emphasis at my command that this question may not be indefinitely postponed but immediately tried to be solved.

The only other subject which I would touch in the short time at my disposal is Provincial contribution.

Sir, on this subject I speak with some feeling. The Punjab from which province I have the privilege to come, has in spite of increased taxation and retrenchments shown a heavy deficit this year and the uneasy feeling is hard to conceal that the Punjab has not been fairly treated as regards these contributions.

It was expected that the Financial Member shall rise to the occasion and come to the rescue of the Punjab but we have been disappointed.

The Finance Member's prospective assurances will not avail us much and his call for loyal co-operation from all the provinces for hastening the day of release was hardly merited by us who have never spared men or money for the sake of Imperial concerns.

I do not think it is too much to hope that the claims of the Punjab in this connection will receive the due attention they deserve as soon as opportunity offers for the solution of the difficulty.

Mr. J. Chaudhuri (Chittagong and Rajshahi Divisions: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I shall not indulge in any platitudes and in that respect I hope I shall not disappoint my Honourable friend, Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary. I shall confine myself to the very simple issue that this budget can be balanced without a single pice of additional taxation. I look at the Honourable the Finance Member sitting on the opposite bench and I find crores concealed within his sleeves. Not only there, but I also look at His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, who, in anticipation is shaking his head, he has also many a crore up his sleeves. I do not find my Honourable friend, Mr. Innes, who is hiding his lights somewhere in the corner, but he too has got some crores up his sleeves. But if they are not available just now, I am sure that they will be forthcoming before long. Now, Sir, the Honourable the Finance Member has no reason to take a pessimistic view and I do not believe that he takes a pessimistic view in his budget. He has used certain expressions which might create some alarm in the minds of the Members of the Assembly, but I shall disabuse them of it. As Finance Member, as a responsible Minister, he is bound to err on the side of caution. But my complaint against him is that he is overcautious. Sir, when two years ago the first Budget was placed before this reformed Council, we took a very despondent view, and to-day I see a ray of hope. No, not only that. I have reasons for robust hope, that we are not guiding the bark towards insolvency, but we are on the high road to solvency. I shall refer to a passage in the speech of my Honourable friend the Finance Member where he says:

[Mr. J. Chaudhuri.]

"We should quickly get the boat out of the vicious current which is threatening to drag India down to the rock of insolvency."

I used a similar expression when the budget was presented in 1921. What was the position then? We had to face a deficit of 34 crores, and what did we suggest? Retrenchment. Not only that. I do not find my Honourable friend, Sir Malcolm Hailey, here. He not only presented us with a deficit of 34 crores, but he gave us a legacy of another 30 crores carried over from pre-reform days. Now, I have asked certain questions in this House, I seldom ask questions, but when I do ask questions I do not ask them without a purpose. Sir, to some questions I asked not long ago, and the Honourable the Finance Member told us in reply that our losses through the reverse Council Bills came up to 28 crores. My Honourable friend, Mr. Burdon told us also, and he gave us an account, that Waziristan had cost us nearly another 28 crores. Further, as I said before, when we came to this Council Sir Malcolm Hailey gave us a legacy of another 30 crores. That was chiefly due to the Afghan War. My Honourable friend the Finance Member refers to an increase in our public debts of 100 crores through deficits and says that our credit is in jeopardy. I say nothing of the kind. He puts our unproductive public debts down as 224 crores. From memory I account for 100 crores in this way.

4 P.M.

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett (Finance Member): If the Honourable Member will study the accounts, he will see that the loss of 28 crores which was incurred in Reverse Councils is not included in the 100 crores. I think that will show that the figures he is quoting are incorrect.

Mr. J. Chaudhuri: In the last five years, up to last year, our deficits came up to 121½ crores.

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: The Honourable Member is mistaken.

Mr. J. Chaudhuri: First, since 1918 to 1921 our deficit was 56 crores, then in 1921-22 it was 34 crores, then again in 1922-23 it was 31½ crores and thus the deficit amounted to 121½ crores. We also remember that we made a war contribution of one hundred crores, nay, more, 150 crores. That is what our predecessors did. That accounts for 224 crores, nay, more. The whole of it is due to military expenditure.

But what is the whole of our public debt? The balance of our public debt 557 crores is revenue earning debts. So, if our finances are on the high way to rehabilitate themselves, then this debt does not trouble us. The Finance Member points out that our unproductive public debts come up to 224 crores. He also points out what it is in England. The interest that Great Britain pays on account of debts to-day comes up to her pre-war revenue. So we may put aside the question of our public debts for the present. If we can put our finances on a sound footing, then I see no cause for alarm. We shall get enough time to work off our unproductive public debts by a suitable sinking fund.

I have said, His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief has kept a number of crores up his sleeves. The Budget that my Honourable friend, the Finance Member, has presented comes to this, that his deficit comes up to 4½ crores. I shall read a passage from his speech:

"If these reductions and the others which have been agreed upon could have been fully and effectively in operation on the 1st April 1923, then the military budget for 1923-24 would be 57 crores, 75 lakhs, but a sum of 4 crores, 25 lakhs has to be allowed for special expenditure in Waziristan."

This is exactly the amount he wants to raise by levying a salt-tax. I know, my Honourable friend is fond of humour. I do not know whether he has put down this identical figure for fresh taxation as a practical joke.

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: It is rather difficult when the Honourable Member is constantly inventing figures out of his inner sub-consciousness to keep correcting all the time, but if the Honourable Member will read the sentences further on he will see there is nothing like what he said about 4 crores, 25 lakhs being spent in Waziristan. If he will read on he will see that it does not say what he thinks it says.

Mr. J. Chaudhuri: I will read the sentence again and read it through:

"If these reductions and others which have been agreed upon could have been fully and effectively in operation by the 1st April 1923, then the military Budget for 1923-24 would be 57 crores, 75 lakhs, but a sum of 4 crores 25 lakhs has to be allowed for special expenditure in Waziristan and for the fact that the reductions cannot be in full force throughout the year."

That is, for the next year we have to make provision for 4 crores 25 lakhs for Waziristan. I shall show now what amount of money we have sunk in Waziristan and we are sinking at the present moment. I read from Sir Malcolm Hailey's budget speech in the year 1922. He says:

"Under military expenditure, it will be remembered that we allowed 62 crores 20 lakhs of which 3 crores was attributable to Waziristan and one crore expenditure on demobilisation."

Later on he says:

"During the year, however, operations in Waziristan continued, contrary to our expectations on the extended scale set up in the concluding months of 1920-21 and altogether our expenditure on operations in that quarter have cost us 6 crores, 75 lakhs."

I say that now that the Retrenchment Committee has recommended a reduction of 10 crores in our military budget, we are told that recommendation cannot be given effect to till the end of the next year because of our Waziristan policy and further I would draw the Finance Member's attention to the fact that the Inchope Committee also recommend that it is possible to reduce the military expenditure further by 7 crores and bring the budget down to 50 crores. With regard to that His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief even before I mentioned the fact began shaking his head, because he believes he has done a lot. But with regard to Waziristan policy I would ask His Excellency to display the same courage in the field of finance as he has done in the field of battle and reduce expenditure to the limit of our revenue. What will the common tax-payer, the man in the street, say after you have raised the price of salt to double its present price. I am sure His Excellency would not like it to be said by the poorest of the poor from every home in India that we owe this to His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief. He will be a great public benefactor if he will co-operate a little further and relieve the Indian tax-payer of $4\frac{1}{2}$ crores.

[Mr. J. Chaudhuri.]

Then I shall ask my Honourable friend, Mr. Bray, how long are the Government going to pursue this policy in Waziristan? A fortune has been sunk in the gap and what have we got in return? We are told every year that two crores or less will suffice and in a supplementary budget we find crores piled up and this year again the Finance Member says that we have incurred expenditure over and above the budget estimate to the extent of 175 lakhs.

I do not wish to go into the detailed figures. I have given sufficient indication that unless the forward policy in Waziristan, in that no-man's land, in which no improvement has taken place during the last two years and in which nothing has been achieved but the killing of a few sheep and cattle by dropping tons of bombs from aeroplanes—unless this policy is abandoned and if we continue to indulge in this pyrotechnic show, then the whole of India's fortune will be swallowed up in that bleak and barren mountain-country. Sir, I shall now leave His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief and my Honourable friend, Mr. Bray, to initiate a policy which will save the Indian tax-payer.

I shall say one word with regard to the railways. I shall reserve my further comments for the time when the demands are made; but I would draw the attention of the Finance Member to the fact that year before last we paid $9\frac{1}{2}$ crores out of our revenues to the railways. Last year we paid another crore. Were not these $10\frac{1}{2}$ crores paid for charges for renewals, interest and current expenditure? Leaving aside the question of the separation of the railway from the general budget, may I ask, are we not entitled to get back that amount now that the prospects of railway earnings are much improved? You have enhanced the freight and fares and in a year or two you will get an ample return. Would you not get back that $10\frac{1}{2}$ crores? If so, why impose this taxation? Even if we have to wait for another year, what will it mean to the tax-payer? A deficit of $4\frac{1}{2}$ crores uncovered will mean in interest only 25 lakhs or a little more. But pending this re-adjustment of the budget, why enhance your taxation? That is not sound finance. I say, if you cannot balance your budget at once, keep it in abeyance for a little while and you will surely be able to wipe off the deficit, if you are in earnest. With these remarks I will close.

Mr. Denys Bray (Foreign Secretary): Sir, the Honourable Mr. Chaudhuri took credit to himself at the outset of his speech that he was not going to indulge in platitudes. I think the House would have been better served had he done so. For there is at least one admirable element in platitudes, and that is some degree of accuracy and verisimilitude. Take that amazing discovery of which he made so great a play. He discovered that the Honourable Finance Member had said "we are thus left with a deficit of 4.26 crores"; and then he discovered in the Honourable Finance Member's statement further back that "a sum of 4.25 crores has to be allowed for special expenditure in Waziristan and for the fact that the reductions"—namely, the reductions in troops, reductions that have nothing to do with Waziristan—"cannot be in full force throughout the year." Let me say at once that the special military expenditure in Waziristan estimated for the coming year is 1.69 crores, which, if all goes well, will practically disappear from the budget next year. The special political expenditure is estimated at 91 lakhs, of which 52 lakhs is non-recurring expenditure on the building of roads and posts.

Now when he spoke of Waziristan in general, indeed he was indulging in platitudes. He may have thought that he was delivering a trenchant attack on Government policy in Waziristan. Sir, he was doing nothing of the kind. He was arraigning an authority infinitely higher than any earthly Government for allowing the very existence of a scourge like Waziristan on India's borders. He is not the first to have 'troubled deaf Heaven with his bootless cries' over Waziristan; nor assuredly will he be the last.

But let me endeavour to explain to the House what Government policy in Waziristan really is. And, as the matter is somewhat technical, I think I can probably help the House best by giving an outline, as brief as possible, first, of the general frontier problem, and secondly, of those solutions which two famous schools of frontier thought in the past have propounded for it. For although the House of course contains Members like my friend Mr. Abdul Rahim who knows the problem from bitter first-hand knowledge; Members like my friend Mr. Samarth who has made the frontier problem his study; Members like my friend Dr. Nand Lal whose speech apparently implied that neither knowledge nor study was needed for it; and Members like my friend Mr. Chaudhuri, of whose speech I will say nothing more, it doubtless also includes Members like a friend of mine somewhere on my left who said to me that he would be grateful if I would expound to him the very A. B. C. of it. Well, the ingredients in the frontier problem are essentially three.

Dr. Nand Lal: Sir, I rise to make a personal explanation. If my learned friend will advert to the speech which I made last year, then he will have to admit that his view of my knowledge of the Waziristan policy is wrong. I know as much about the North-West Frontier as he does.

Mr. Denys Bray: I have so far made no claims to knowledge for myself.

Dr. Nand Lal: Then you have no right to . . .

Mr. President: Order, order.

Mr. Denys Bray: If I have said anything that offended my Honourable friend in any way, I gladly withdraw it.

I think I had not yet finished with the three ingredients in the frontier problem:—the frontier districts, the neighbouring friendly State of Afghanistan, and the so-called independent territory. Now, if British India and Afghanistan had co-terminous frontiers, we should of course have a frontier problem and a frontier problem of great magnitude; it would be a straightforward frontier problem between two great and friendly powers. But between British India and India there lies this belt of so-called . . . (A Voice: "Between India and Afghanistan.") I am glad of the interruption, but the Honourable Member will find presently that I was correct.

[Mr. Denys Bray.]

Between the limits of British India and of India there lies a belt of so-called independent territory, peopled by so-called trans-frontier Pathan tribes, untamed, fierce, truculent, aggressive, who have from time immemorial descended from their mountains to raid and harry, pillage, murder and outrage the inhabitants of the plains.

Now the interruption I received just now makes it advisable for me to pause here and dwell on an elementary and historical fact, a fact often forgotten, its implications more often ignored. British India does not march with Afghanistan. India does. India marches with Afghanistan from the Pamirs in the extreme north to Koh-i-Malik Siah in the extreme west, where Persia, India and Afghanistan meet. That is a great historical fact. I go no further back than 1893, when that fact was placed beyond all cavil and dispute by the agreement entered into on behalf of Afghanistan by His Highness the Amir Abdur Rahman Khan, perhaps the most striking personality in modern Central Asian history, and Sir Mortimer Durand. The Durand line, as it is known to ourselves, is India's frontier. It is demarcated by boundary pillars for the greater part of its length. And it is boundary pillars that mark off Waziristan from Afghanistan; it is boundary pillars that include Waziristan in India. We are apt to call Waziristan independent territory; to call the Wazirs and the Mahsud trans-frontier tribesmen. But it is not in reality independent territory; and it is only from the point of view of our British districts that these tribes are trans-frontier tribes. From the point of view of India, from the international point of view that is, they are cis-frontier tribesmen of India. If Waziristan and her tribes are India's scourge, they are also India's responsibility—and India's alone. That is an international fact that we must never forget.

Now, our responsibility for Waziristan and its tribes was vivid to us long before 1893 of course. And for years there were two great contending schools of frontier thought, struggling one with the other for the adoption of the particular solution they favoured. There was the forward policy and the backward policy, or, as I should prefer to call it myself, the policy of close border defence. Now if I were to run over the long list of names of men who have advocated a forward policy, it would be a list of famous men I should have to recite. But a pound of practice is worth a ton of preaching. And when you turn to the actual exponents of that policy, there are only two who stand out:—that great Afghan ruler, the Amir Abdur Rahman, and that great English administrator, Sir Robert Sandeman. Hardly was the ink dry on the 1893 agreement, when His Highness the Amir inaugurated campaign after campaign against his frontier tribes and subjugated them, and thus made Afghan rule effective—in the Afghan sense of the word—up to the Indian frontier. But Sir Robert Sandeman had been before him in the field. For by 1893 Baluchistan was already effectively administered—in the Sandeman sense of the word—up to the Afghan frontier. Sir, there are many of us who believe that, if Sandeman had been translated from his work in Baluchistan to the north-west frontier, he could have, and would have, succeeded there also. We believe this in spite of the vaster dimensions and the different character of the problem that would have faced him; for the tribes here are made of much sterner and more intractable stuff, and their mountain homes far more inaccessible. Nevertheless a Sandeman, some of us believe, would then have achieved success here also, at no over-great expense in blood and treasure. But what was a practical proposition 20 or 30 years ago is not necessarily so now. The task is infinitely more difficult to-day, chiefly because the tribesmen are infinitely better armed; their arms have increased at least tenfold during the last 20 years. True, if we had to fight them in the plains, this would matter little. But it is in their mountains that we have to fight them, and it is their mountains, those inaccessible mountains of theirs, that give them their strength. It is one of the striking things in modern warfare that these modern inventions of ours do not give us the advantage in savage warfare in the hills. The hills remain unchanged, and prevent us from using our inventions to the full; and with the improvement of armaments the advantage lies with the tribesmen rather than with us. In short, in these days of acutest financial stringency, the conclusion stares one in the face that a thorough-going forward policy all along the line is a mere counsel of perfection.

Then there is the close border policy. It may seem a waste of time, Sir, to explain what that means, for every one surely can understand a policy that simply bids you defend your own border within your own border. But here again the House will remember that our border does not lie here, it lies ahead along the Afghan frontier; and it will remember also that, if nature abhors a vacuum in the physical world, human nature does not allow a vacuum in the world of high politics. Now, the crudest and most logical form of a close border policy is of course a Chinese wall, a vast wall right along the borders of your districts high enough to keep the trans-frontier tribesmen beyond the pale. A vast wall all along the borders of our districts high enough to keep the trans-frontier tribes out of our districts has indeed been seriously suggested from time to time, regardless apparently of the fact that you would have to build up the wall a foot or two higher year after year, to keep out tribesmen who would be becoming more and more powerful every year and more and more difficult to exclude. A more modern form of course would be a line of barbed wire, of live wire, linking up posts strongly held at intervals, with possibly a gate here and there to let a few well-behaved tribesmen through. Here again one has to remember that all the time the problem in front of us would be going from bad to worse, with the inevitable increase of arms in the trans-border and with that inevitable increase in the economic stringency in this mountainous tract, which would make the tribesmen more and more desperate, more and more thrown back on barbarism. The most modern form of all is of course mechanical transport roads running right along the border, patrolled by constabulary in motor cars, ready to move out at a moment's notice to any point they are required. The great future that mechanical transport has before it in cis-border defence can hardly be exaggerated. Nor can the necessity for cis-border defence itself, but by itself it is not enough. A rigid close-border policy is really a policy of negation and nothing more. It is all very well to say that we should leave the tribesmen to stew in their own juice; but what we should be doing in reality would be to leave them free in their devil's kitchen of mischief to brew incalculable trouble for us. We might gain for our districts a momentary respite from raids, but we would be leaving behind a legacy of infinitely worse trouble for their descendants.

With this introduction, I will expound to the House what the Government policy is. Now we have been for thirty years in occupation of parts of Waziristan. For shortly after the Durand agreement of 1893 we began to drive roads up the great highways of the Tochi and the Gumal, and we have occupied as far forward as Dakka Khel in the North and as far forward as Wana in the South by regulars or irregulars since 1894. But this partial occupation left the real crux in Waziristan untouched. For the crux in Waziristan is not the Wazirs whom this occupation directly affected, but the Mahsuds who live in the strategical heart of Waziristan, separated from Afghanistan by the Wazirs and separated from our British districts by the Bhattanis. In their inaccessibility lay their strength, lay also the root-cause of the persistence in utter barbarism which has made the Mahsud a by-word among other Pathans and an Ishmaelite wherever he goes. Hence, when an appalling series of bloody outrages against our fellow-subjects in the frontier districts forced us into a punitive expedition against them, and when after the severest fighting we have ever experienced in a frontier campaign, we found ourselves in military occupation of the heart of their country, it was thought that the time had surely come to bring the Mahsud country finally under military domination and to rid our frontier districts once and for all of this hideous scourge. The task, of course, was not beyond the power of the gallant Indian army, difficult and laborious though the final subjugation and disarmament of these magnificent fighters in their rugged mountains would have been. But it has proved beyond our financial resources at this time of financial stringency. Hence, though Government are determined to bring Mahsud country under control, it is not on the military occupation of Mahsud country that their policy is based. On the contrary, the military occupation of Mahsud country will shortly cease, to be replaced partly by internal control through scouts and Khassadars, and partly by the domination of Mahsud country from two posts on the edge of but outside the Mahsud country itself, held in force and linked together by a connecting road. In the south there is the post of Jandola in Bhattani country which we have occupied for years. And in the north, at the renewed invitation of its Wazir owners, we have just occupied, after a most successfully planned peacemarch, the open plateau of Ramzak, which from a height of 6,000 to 7,000 feet overlooks and dominates northern Mahsud country. We had calculated on being able to withdraw our troops entirely from Mahsud country itself simultaneously with the occupation of Ramzak. But the political situation took an unexpected turn for the worse towards the autumn, and our programme received a serious set-back. In consequence, though a mechanical transport road from the Tochi to Ramzak is almost completed, we have been unable to complete the road linking up with Jandola. For the time being, therefore, a reduced number of troops will remain in Mahsud country. But as soon as the construction of this road is assured, all regulars will evacuate the Mahsud country, and the protection of the road will then be committed to the Mahsud tribe itself, to locally enlisted Khassadars representing the various sections of the tribe, reinforced by irregulars at Sararogha and Kotkai. Now the Mahsud is a natural strategist of no mean calibre, and he will soon feel that, though the regulars have left this country, he lies within a grasp that can be tightened at any moment. The consciousness of this fact will have a sobering effect upon him. Henceforth the Mahsuds will be robbed of much of the inaccessibility in which lay their strength. And if the Mahsuds should again force us by their misdeeds into an expedition against them, then instead of having to force the Mahsud defences at a cost in blood and treasure that would be assuredly far higher than the high cost in the recent campaign, we shall have in Ramzak, above and behind his natural defences, an advance base the possession of which will enormously facilitate our task.

[Mr. Denys Bray.]

But our policy is not merely designed to provide a preventive menace to the Mahsuds or to serve as an insurance against the abnormal frequency of expeditions or against their abnormal cost. It is essentially positive and constructive in character, in marked contrast to a negative system of rigid close-border defence. The central feature of it is the tribal levy or Khassadar, providing his own rifle and ammunition, and policing the country for us. This Khassadar system was of course the keystone of Sandeman's policy, perhaps his most potent agency in the grand work of civilization he achieved. In essence, it is a means of giving the tribe a stake in our administration of law and order; of controlling the tribe as far as possible by self-Government; of keeping alive that spirit of tribal responsibility which is the basis of our relations with all trans-frontier people. But tribal levies cannot be expected to function in the trans-frontier if they are left in the air, without some form of external force within reasonable range to keep them up to their work. The most economical form of outside force that we can devise is the irregular. But irregulars, again, cannot be safely employed in the trans-frontier unless they are in effective range of military support in case of emergency. Hence the necessity for roads suitable for occasional mechanical transport use, linking up a minimum number of irregular posts in the trans-frontier with military posts in the rear. These roads are thus an alternative to military occupation, and a very much cheaper alternative. But they are something much more. Like the Khassadar, they are civilisation carriers. And complementary to the arrangements in the trans-frontier itself, our policy includes a cis-border road about 100 miles in length, providing a much needed lateral communication, for the immediate defence of the sorely-harassed inhabitants of the Dera Ismail Khan district. The policy of Government in Waziristan is, therefore, the control of Waziristan—though a road system, of which about 140 miles lie in Waziristan itself and 100 miles along the border of the Derajat, and the maintenance of some 4,600 Khassadars and of some 5,000 irregulars. And this policy Government is resolved to carry through with vigour and determination in the interests of our fellow-subjects in the Zhob and the Derajat, and in the interests of the security of all India.

Now, in so far as a forward policy means a move forward to the Durand Line, the Government policy is not a forward policy at all, for our new post at Ramzak, for instance, is farther from the Durand Line than our old established posts in the Tochi. In this sense of the term, indeed, our policy is in one signal respect a backward policy. For, whereas we have held Wana close to the Afghan border by regulars and irregulars since 1894, we shall now hold it by Khassadars only; and our irregulars on this side will be no further forward than Sarwekai, which we have occupied for years. None the less, the Government policy is a forward policy in a very real sense of the word. It is a policy of progress. It is a big step forward on the long and laborious road towards the pacification through civilisation of the most backward and inaccessible, and therefore the most truculent and aggressive, tribes on our border. Come what may, civilisation must be made to penetrate these inaccessible mountains, or we must admit that there is no solution to the Waziristan problem, and we must fold our hands while it grows inevitably worse. It is the inaccessibility of these mountains which breed more than they can feed, that lies at the root of the problem. For from this inaccessibility arise the economic stringency, the gross ignorance, and the wanton insolence and barbaric cruelty that spring from a sense of security. And these are diseases for which civilisation in some shape or form is the only cure. It may be thought visionary to talk of the civilisation of the Mahsud. But you must take long views on the frontier. Civilisation, after all, has succeeded often enough with material far more unpromising and intractable than the Mahsud, who, for all his barbarity and ignorance, is a man of magnificent virility and courage and with no small share of natural wit and intelligence.

[Mr. Denys Bray.]

I have spoken of the forward policy as being, in these latter days, a counsel of perfection. I have spoken of a rigid closed border policy as a policy of negation, degenerating into a counsel of despair. I have expounded the Government policy and have endeavoured to make plain to the House its essentially constructive and progressive character. But of one policy—if policy it can be called—I have said not a word. I had thought that the old cry of “Back to the Indus” had long since been silenced for ever. I was wrong. It has been re-appearing of late in our press; it even found its way into the evidence adduced before us on the Military Requirements Committee. Back to the Indus? Shall we betray our fellow-subjects on the frontier? Shall we hand them over to the tender mercies of the independent tribesmen in the first instance, and thereafter to—who shall say? Back to the Indus? If India ever went back to the Indus, not all the five rivers of the Punjab would set the mark to the erosion of India's soil that would then ensue. Back to the Indus? Let the House say here and now whether India is ever going back to the Indus. (Mr. J. Chaudhuri: “No! Arm your own frontier people!”) In the domain of India's foreign politics, I know of one fixed and immutable rule only: What India has, let India hold. India is large enough to covet not a single square mile of ground that is not already her own. But India is not large enough to allow any invader of India—be he independent tribesman or foreign power, from south or north or east or west,—more of her soil than a plot of ground 7 feet by 2½ and 4 feet deep.

Mr. Marmohandas Ramji (Indian Merchants' Chamber and Bureau: Indian Commerce): Sir, before I begin to discuss the Budget, I hesitate whether I am to congratulate the Finance Member or to criticise him. I find, that with all the efforts of the Finance Department and after accepting some of the proposals of the Incheape Committee, the Finance Member has failed to present a balanced Budget, without resorting to additional taxation. I think, if he had not included in the Budget the proposals for increases on Demands for Grants, on the figures of last year (the details of which I have in my hand, and shall hand over to him presently), he could have saved nearly 1½ crores of rupees. You will therefore see that while retrenchment is made on the one hand, increase in expenditure is also made on the other hand. Thinking a little deeply, I am at a loss to know why Government proposes such increases in expenditure while there is a general cry for all-round retrenchment.

Again, a Demand for Rs. 91,30,000 is made under the heading North-West Frontier Province, under items, Public Works and Civil Works. That could also wait for some time.

Coming to the proposals of the Incheape Committee, I feel that the Government ought to have allowed a larger amount as ‘retrenchment’ in this Budget, than is indicated by their present proposal.

Turning to another aspect of the Budget, I may point out that in the last year's Budget Estimate (1922-23) under Demand No. 46, a provision was made for refund of more than Rs. 6 crores. This year only a little more than a crore of rupees is asked. If the Expenditure was maintained at the same level as last year, this difference alone of more than Rs. 5 crores would effect a small saving, instead of the deficit that is now shown. I, therefore, consider that the deficit shown is not a real deficit, and that there is no necessity for increasing the tax on Salt—a duty which is condemned by politicians and statesmen in particular, and by every one, in general.

Speaking of the Exchange question, Sir, the Finance Member said, “I repeat that the time has not yet come for a new attempt to fix the rupee”. I may point out at once that there is a considerable body of commercial men who opine that as sterling has reached its good parity, it is now an opportune time for making a change of the policy pursued by the Government. However, this is not the time to consider that question.

The Finance Member in the course of his speech remarked, that as India had £240 million sterling Debt, it would show a considerable less amount in rupees at a higher Exchange, and he goes to point out that at the rate of 1s 8d. Rs. 9½ crores would have been saved to India. Before admitting that, I should ask him to state what would have been the saving to the country on the total amount of export trade, at the rate of 1s. 4d. instead of at 1s. 8d.

Undoubtedly, it would amount to considerably more than Rs. 9½ crores. What India wants is to get rid of fluctuations in Exchange, and the only way to achieve that object is to adopt a real gold currency with an open mint for coining gold.

I am surprised to find that there is no provision made in the Budget for giving effect to the recommendations of the Fiscal Commission. The Minority of the Members have recommended the total abolition of the excise duty of 3½ per cent. on cotton cloth manufactured in India, a duty which is obnoxious in its character, and which finds no place in any other country in the world. As we all know, it only serves to quieten the Lancashire agitation and to give indirect protection to foreign goods. And, I should have very much liked the Government to have thought it advisable to make a beginning to give effect to this recommendation and made provision in the Budget to give at least partial effect by reducing a portion of the excise duty and ultimately abolish the same,—which action is long overdue. As I intend to move an amendment to this effect, I do not want to take any more time on this subject.

Before I finish, I would like to draw the attention of this House and the Government to one important fact, and that is, that both of us are neglecting a very important item, namely, Irrigation, which is one of the most paying sources of Revenue. Far less attention is at present given to this item, than to the development of Railways, where it is proposed to spend about Rs. 38 crores, on capital works.

Lastly, I would ask the Government not to raise more loans in India than it is absolutely necessary, as it affects adversely the money-market in this country and paralyses in a general way the trade.

When I speak of Loans I am reminded of another subject dealt by the Honourable the Finance Member. There is an unspent balance of Rs. 8,63,95,000 under the Head—Railways—which the Government wants to spend this year; and instead of spending Rs. 30 crores, they propose spending Rs. 38 crores. I venture to ask where is the necessity of including this amount, of nearly Rs. 9 crores, in the Budget at a time of financial stringency, and when it was found impossible to spend this amount last year. A provision of Rs. 30 crores for the next year seems to me to be quite sufficient for the present and the spending of Rs. 9 crores may wait for a few years more. Or, if need be, it may be spread over the remaining 4 years. That I am sure will not affect in any considerable degree the working of Railways and I would suggest that the Government should raise only 17 crores of rupee loan. In ordinary business no one would think of spending huge amount on capital works at a time of financial stringency.

[Mr. Manmohandas Ramji.]

In this connection I would suggest that a portion of this grant to Railways should be utilised for opening new lines which could bring in a good revenue and a handsome return for the investment.

Speaking about Provincial contribution the Honourable the Finance Member remarked about the Provincial Governments following the policy of some charitable or religious bodies in showing handsome deficits in order to appeal effectively to the charity of the Central Government. This remark applies with equal force, in my opinion, in his own case. He seems to think, that he can effectively appeal to this House only by showing a deficit, and to cover it, by proposing a tax on Salt. We are as shrewd as he is. I would like to tell him that he should try first to minimise extra expenditure, and then to have full effect given to the recommendations of the Retrenchment Committee to bring about a balanced budget and not to propose additional taxation to cover what I have already called an 'unreal' deficit. I am quite sure, it would have been possible for the Government to have produced a balanced Budget.

Rai T. P. Mukherjee Bahadur (Burdwan Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, this is the third year of the reformed era. When the Reform was first introduced it was welcomed by many including myself as the dawn of a happy franchise for the good of our country. But, alas, what a great disappointment! I hoped that this year I would be able to congratulate our new Honourable the Finance Member for his first prosperous budget, but to our utter disappointment, we again find a deficit budget, a budget of despair. However, I congratulate him only for the reason that he is a new-comer and he has taken recourse only to one tax and not more. To crown all, Sir, there is again a proposal for an additional taxation—a tax on salt. Sir, we are on the threshold of a new election and I fully agree with Dr. Nand Lal, our Honourable Member, that we are really ashamed to approach the electorate. What are we to answer when we will be asked to state the good works we have done for our country in the course of the last three years? The answer would be that we have introduced innumerable taxes. Sir, the prospects are very gloomy, the people are all discontented, and the happy vision of those who welcomed the reform is also fast disappearing in thin air and the people are now under the impression that "Reforms" means only successive deficit budgets, of Provincial and Imperial bankruptcy—and endless additions of taxation. Sir, when there is again a proposal for increasing the duty on salt, even after the report of the Retrenchment Committee, I think there is no hope of salvation and this state of things would continue for ever. Sir, the repeated introduction of new taxes by the Government every year induces men to believe as if the Government does not think it their first duty to keep the people satisfied and well-fed. Otherwise, they would have never thought of introducing such endless taxation every year.

Sir, we had a great hope that after the receipt of the report of the 5 P.M. Incheape Committee our Honourable Finance Member would be in a position to introduce a prosperous budget even at a time when our life is about to come to an end. But alas, we are disappointed; we cannot appreciate the report of the Incheape Committee even when we have received it at such an enormous cost. Sir, such a repeated deficit budget could not be tolerated any more. The repeated deficit budgets clearly indicate that there is something very wrong and rotten somewhere in the administration. Mere superficial tinkering with such a difficult problem will not do any good. The root causes lay deeper than they are generally considered to be and the Government is the best person to make a correct diagnosis of this chronic disease.

Though I am a lay man I am inclined to attribute this deplorable condition of our finances to two causes, first to the extravagance of the Government, and secondly to the enormous increase of military expenditure of the country. Sir, the super-structure of the administration is sure to crumble and fall, unless cautious steps be taken now and the material welfare of the country is attended to, so that the people might appreciate the worth of your Reforms. Sir, we were under the impression that the new Finance Member would try to balance his account in any other way instead of imposing an additional duty upon salt which is a poor man's commodity. Sir, it should be clearly understood that the salt duty would be opposed by every non-official Member as they are in duty bound to do it. It is admitted on all hands that military expenditure in India is enormously heavy and is found to be unprecedented in the annals of the history of the world. Sir, this is admitted even by the Incheape Committee which I quote below:

"But the question is whether India can afford to maintain military expenditure on the present scale as an insurance against future eventualities. In our opinion, the repeated huge deficits of the last few years, in spite of the imposition of heavy new taxation, have made it abundantly clear that India cannot afford this expenditure."

Sir, the Incheape Committee with a throbbing heart, after giving the military authorities of India a great credit for their work, has at last recommended the budget estimates for the year 1923-24 to be 51.47 crores, thus making a reduction of about 9 crores. Sir, this reduction is nothing, the proposed estimate is still full of water, and the watery portion is so great that if you make another 9 crores reduction out of it, I think you will not be able to touch the milk. Sir, I therefore propose that the Honourable the Finance Member should try his level best to carry out all the recommendations of the Incheape Committee as early as possible, and drop the proposal of introducing an additional duty on poor man's salt.

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: I rise to a point of order. I do not know whether I shall be in order, but so many Members appeal to me to carry out the recommendations of the Incheape Committee as an alternative to the salt tax, that I must, I think, repeat that the two together are necessary. I tried to explain in my speech that we are carrying out the recommendations of the Incheape Committee to the fullest extent possible within the year. Even so, there is a deficit. So many Members keep on asking us to do something that we have done, as an alternative to the salt tax, that I think it is necessary for me to make this intervention at this stage.

Rai T. P. Mukherjee Bahadur: If I remember right, the Honourable the ex-Finance Member, Sir Malcolm Hailey, said last year that the salt-tax works to about three annas per head per annum extra cost, but the

[Rai T. P. Mukherjee Bahadur.]

Honourable Member should not forget that salt is not only used by the people, but it is also largely used for cattle and for agricultural purpose as a manure.

With these few remarks I oppose the Budget.

The Assembly then adjourned till Eleven of the Clock on Tuesday, the 6th March, 1923.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

Tuesday, 6th March, 1923.

The Assembly met in the Assembly Chamber at Eleven of the Clock. Mr. President was in the Chair.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

POLICE DUTIES IN LEGISLATURES.

467. *Mr. R. A. Spence: (a) Is it a fact that since the creation over two years ago of:

- (i) The Imperial Legislative Assembly;
- (ii) The Council of State;
- (iii) The Chamber of Princes;

no extra Police have been entertained for duty at these Chambers?

(b) In consequence is it a fact that the local Police both in Simla and Delhi have to perform this extra work at the expense of their sanctioned duties with the result that all have to work long hours overtime throughout the entire Session of 2½ months twice a year?

(c) If the facts are substantially as stated, is Government prepared to take the matter into consideration?

Mr. E. Burdon: (a) No extra police force has been entertained solely on account of the creation of these Chambers, but one of the factors which influenced the Government of India in determining the strength of the Delhi police force has been work in connection with the Sessions of the Legislature and other special duties during the Delhi winter season. Last year the total strength of the force was increased with a view inier alia to strengthen the reserve. In Simla also the strength of the police force in the summer is based partly on the ceremonial and other duties required to be performed. A small guard is provided from the local force with the exception of a few sergeants who have been drafted in from outside for the purpose.

(b) During the Delhi Sessions a proportion of the men have to be withdrawn from their normal executive duties, and no doubt some of them are on duty for longer hours than usual but the duty at the Chambers is not continuous or arduous, though responsible, and compensation is afforded by lighter duties in the summer at Delhi and in the winter at Simla.

(c) Government are not aware of any present necessity of changing the existing arrangements but will make further enquiries.

HEDJAZ PILGRIMS.

468. *Haji Wajihuddin: Are the Government aware of the sufferings and hardships that Hedjaz pilgrims generally underwent last Haj season on their journey from Mecca to Medina?

Mr. Denys Bray: Government are not aware that Hedjaz pilgrims generally underwent sufferings and hardships, but have heard with grave concern that in certain cases Indian pilgrims had legitimate cause for complaint.

GOVERNMENT OF INDIA SECRETARIATS.

469. Baba Ujagar Singh Bedi: (a) Is it a fact that all proposals for additional staff required in the various Departments of the Government of India are placed by the Departments concerned before the Finance Department, for scrutiny and sanction, and that similar proposals emanating from the Finance Department are sanctioned by the Department itself?

(b) If so, do the Government propose to lay down that such proposals emanating from the Finance Department, should be scrutinized by the Home Department or some other Department before they are finally sanctioned.

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: (a) Yes.

(b) Such proposals are considered in that branch of the Finance Department the business of which is to scrutinize proposals for new expenditure. I have no reason to think that this branch scrutinises proposals emanating from other branches of the Finance Department with any less care than in the case of proposals emanating from other departments. I do not consider that the course suggested by the Honourable Member would be likely to result in any economy.

HIGH COURT JUDGES.

470. Khan Bahadur Saiyid Muhammad Ismail: (a) Will the Government be pleased to state the number of Judges permanent and additional sanctioned in the High Courts of India including Burma?

(b) Will the Government be pleased to specify their names and nationalities with the date of their appointments?

(c) Will the Government be pleased to state in how many High Courts of India there are Muhammadan Judges already appointed with their dates of appointment?

(d) If, in case, there is no Mussalman Judge appointed in any of the High Courts of India to state the reason why none has been appointed since 1921?

Mr. E. Burdon: (a) The total number of Judges in all the High Courts in India, including Burma, is 75.

(b) and (c) The Honourable Member will find all the information he requires in the various civil lists.

(d) The Honourable Member is referred to the answer which will be given to part (a) of his next question.

JUDGES IN PATNA HIGH COURT.

471. Khan Bahadur Saiyid Muhammad Ismail: (a) Will the Government be pleased to state the reason why no Muhammadan Judges was appointed to the Bench of the Patna High Court since the year 1921 permanently, also to state the reason and the circumstances under which that Muhammadan Barrister who was appointed to officiate after Mr. Justice Atkinson's death was not confirmed in 1920-21 and instead of his being confirmed an Englishman was brought from Straits Settlements?

(b) Is the Government aware that in the Patna High Court 2 Additional Judgeships have been created after Puja vacation and that out of the 2 appointments made, the claims of really qualified Muhammadan Members of the Legal Profession have been completely ignored? If the reply be in the affirmative, will the Government be pleased to give full reasons for ignoring the claim of qualified Mussalman from selection?

(c) Is it a fact that one Mr. Abdur Quadir, Bar-at-law, who had already acted as officiating Judge of Punjab High Court for several years had been made to resign? If the facts be true will the Government be pleased to state the real circumstances of such a contingency?

(d) Will the Government be further pleased to state who has been appointed in the vacancy thus caused?

Mr. E. Burdon: (a) Permanent appointments to the High Courts are made by His Majesty under section 101 of the Government of India Act. Courts of Justice are not representative institutions, and the main consideration in filling up vacancies in high judicial appointments must always be that of efficiency: subject to this the claims of Muhammadans no less than those of members of other communities receive due consideration.

(b) The reply to the first part of the question is in the affirmative. As to the second part of his question the Honourable Member is referred to the answer given to (a) above.

(c) No. He left the Court on the termination of his appointment.

(d) Does not arise.

WORKING OF BENGAL AND NORTH-WESTERN RAILWAY.

472. Khan Bahadur Saiyid Muhammad Ismail: (a) Will the Government be pleased to state the control which they exercise over the Company-managed and the Company's own Railway called the Bengal and North-Western Railway?

(b) Will the Government state if they are aware of the circumstances under which this Company is causing serious inconvenience to the passengers, by the unpunctual running of the trains without any arrangement for the foodstuffs over the line between Katihar and Cawnpore and its several other branches?

(c) Do Government propose to take any step to impress upon the Company the necessity, (1) of improving the Rolling Stock, (2) of making suitable arrangements for water supply and foodstuffs at every Railway Station?

(d) Is the Government aware of the very serious inconvenience caused to the passengers when crossing the river between Digba and Pahleza Ghats owing to the absence of a platform and a passenger-shed at the newly constructed station at Digba Ghat which have been shifted from its original position causing a very serious inconvenience to the frequent travellers, crossing the Ganges between Digba and Pahleza Ghats starting from Patna Junction Railway Station?

(e) If the reply to the above be in the affirmative, will the Government be pleased to state why the Railway Station Digba has been shifted from its old situation?

(f) Is the Government aware of the fact that while in Mokamah and Semaria Ghats, Bengal and North-Western Railway ferry stations, sufficient autolux lamps are provided for convenience of passengers, none is provided at Pahleza Ghat and Digha Ghat although steamers are plying not less than 3 times between the two latter Ghats during the night and that the absence of brilliant light causes serious danger to the passengers in getting in and out of the Steamer?

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley: (a) The Honourable Member's attention is invited to Appendix A of the Administration Report on Indian Railways, 1921-22, Volume I, copies of which are available in the library.

(b) and (c) The working of the Bengal and North-Western Railway was recently the subject of a special enquiry by the Senior Government Inspector of Railways, Circle No. 3, Lucknow, in conjunction with the Agent, Bengal and North-Western Railway, and certain representatives of the Bihar and Orissa and United Provinces Governments. The result of this enquiry showed that the Railway Administration was paying careful attention to the convenience of the public and was willing to meet all reasonable demands. The grievances which exist are chiefly due to the fact that during the war period it was extremely difficult to obtain materials, and Government are satisfied that the Administration is doing its best to bring the line up to a high standard.

(d), (e) and (f). Government have no information but enquiry will be made.

TIRHOOT STATE RAILWAY.

473. Khan Bahadur Saiyid Muhammad Ismail: (a) Will the Government be pleased to state the method and the system under which the Tirhoot State Railway is being managed?

(b) Is the section under the direct management of the Government? If so, what was its income between 1920 and 1922, and the consequent expenditure in the upkeep and maintenance? If the section is not directly managed how is it managed and what guarantee the Government provides?

(c) Will the Government be pleased to state the total number of high-paid employees, with their nationalities, employed over the Tirhoot State Railway; also to state how far and how long the management of the Bengal and North-Western Railway overlaps that of the Tirhoot State Railway Section?

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley: (a) and (b). The Tirhut State Railway is managed and worked by the Bengal and North-Western Railway Company. For the terms of working the Honourable Member is referred to the History of Indian Railways, a copy of which is available in the Library.

(c) The Bengal and North-Western Railway Company employ conjointly the higher paid staff required for this section and their own main line. In regard to the concluding portion of the question the Honourable Member will find full information in the History of Indian Railways already referred to.

ROLLING STOCK ON TIRHOOT STATE RAILWAY.

474. Khan Bahadur Saiyid Muhammad Ismail: Will the Government be pleased to state if the Tirhoot State Railway maintains any independent Rolling stock or the Bengal and North-Western Railway stock is running over the section? If the fact of the Bengal and North-Western Railway stock running over the section is true, will the Government be pleased to state the conditions under which they are utilised.

C. D. M. Hindley: The Bengal and North-Western and the Tirhut State Railways are worked as one system and rolling stock is provided and worked in accordance with the requirements of the whole system. The capital cost of the stock is allocated to the two railways in proportion to their respective average gross earnings.

CONCESSION TICKETS ON RAILWAYS.

475. Khan Bahadur Saiyid Muhammad Ismail: (a) Will the Government be pleased to state the reason and the circumstances under which the concession tickets for the 1st and 2nd classes that used to be issued during Poojah and Christmas vacations have been discontinued by the authorities of the East Indian Railway?

(b) Will the Government state if such discontinuance of practices requires sanction of the Railway Board in case of Company-managed Railways or the Company-managed Railways are themselves competent to exercise such authorities?

(c) If the reply to the first part of (b) is in the affirmative, will the Government be pleased to state the reason as to why such sanction has been accorded?

(d) Do Government propose to take immediate step to direct the East Indian Company to adhere to the old system of issuing return 1st and 2nd class tickets at reduced rates according to the practice that was in vogue a few years before and also to issue concession return tickets during the Poojah and the Christmas holidays?

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley: (a) In consequence of the abnormal conditions caused by the War the concessions allowed during the Poojah and Christmas holidays to 1st and 2nd class passengers had to be withdrawn. The East Indian Railway Administration, however, granted this concession during the last Christmas holidays.

(b) and (c) The grant and withdrawal of concessions of this kind are within the competence of Company-managed railways.

(d) The Honourable Member is referred to the answers given to questions Nos. 145 and 292, on the 17th and 29th January, 1923, respectively.

RESERVED ACCOMMODATION ON EAST INDIAN RAILWAY.

476. Khan Bahadur Saiyid Muhammad Ismail: (a) Will the Government be pleased to state if they are aware that the practice prevalent a few years before in the East Indian Railway of reserving 1st class compartments by paying 3 fares and 2nd class compartments by paying 4 fares respectively has been supplanted by charging actual fares of 4 tickets in case of 1st class and 5 tickets in case of 2nd class compartments, respectively?

(b) If the reply be in the affirmative will the Government be pleased to state the circumstances under which this change in practice has taken place and also whether such a change had been contemplated after taking the approval of the Railway Board?

(c) Do Government propose to issue instructions to the East Indian Railway to continue reserving 1st class compartments by paying 3 fares and 2nd class compartments by paying 4 fares for the period of their contract which will expire in December, 1924?

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley: (a) The reply is in the affirmative.

(b) The change was introduced with the approval of the Railway Board, not only on the East Indian Railway but on all the other important railways, and was one of the measures adopted to increase railway earnings and to ensure the best use of the accommodation available in the interests of the general travelling public.

(c) The reply is in the negative.

ACWORTH COMMITTEE'S RECOMMENDATIONS.

477. Khan Bahadur Saiyid Muhammad Ismail: Will the Government be pleased to state how far effect has been given to the unanimous recommendations of the Acworth Committee contained in Volume 1 of their Report, also to state specifically if their recommendations, vide paragraphs 156 to 172 of the Report re: the constitution of the Rate Tribunal have been given effect to? If not, why?

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley: It is impossible to give a comprehensive reply to the Honourable Member's question. The Acworth Committee dealt with the whole subject of Railway Administration and management and their suggestions have been systematically considered and given effect to wherever possible at once. A good many of their proposals involved, however, large changes in policy and there are some cases, including the recommendation regarding the constitution of a Rates Tribunal, still under the consideration of Government. This question of establishing a Rates Tribunal involves matters of very great financial and administrative importance and it is not in the general interest should be hurriedly decided.

EMBARKATION PORTS FOR HAJIS.

478. Khan Bahadur Saiyid Muhammad Ismail: Will the Government be pleased to state as to what steps have been taken by them to give effect to the promise made by Sir Henry Sharp last year during the course of the debate over Haji Wajihuddin Saheb's Resolution re: making Calcutta the port of embarkation for the Hajis intending to go on pilgrimage to Hejaz? If no steps have been taken as yet in the matter, do Government propose to expedite opening Calcutta as the port of embarkation for the pilgrims going to Erak and to Hejaz?

The Honourable Mr. A. C. Chatterjee: The Honourable Member is referred to the answer given yesterday to a similar question put by Haji Wajihuddin.

Mr. K. Ahmed: Is there any likelihood of opening the Chittagong port for the embarkation of pilgrims and other passengers who want to go to Hedjaz and other places?

The Honourable Mr. A. C. Chatterjee: I said yesterday, Sir, in reply to a similar supplementary question that the supplementary question did not arise.

Mr. K. Ahmed: The question contained, Sir, the wording: "do the Government propose to expedite opening Calcutta as the port of embarkation for the pilgrims going to Erak and to Hedjaz?"

Mr. President: If the Honourable Member wants information regarding the port of Chittagong, he should put his question on the paper and then he will get an answer.

PILGRIMS FOR JEDDA.

479. Khan Bahadur Saiyid Muhammad Ismail: Will the Government be pleased to state if it is a fact that at the port of embarkation at Bombay the pilgrims proceeding to Jedda have been compelled to buy return tickets? If it is so, to explain the reason and the circumstances?

The Honourable Mr. A. C. Chatterjee: So far as the Government of India are aware no such compulsion is being exercised.

INFECTIOUS DISEASES HOSPITAL ON KUTAB ROAD.

480. Mr. W. M. Hussanally: (a) Is it a fact that the building at Delhi on the Kutab Road, now used as Municipal Infectious Diseases Hospital and through the compound of which the new road passes, was originally a mosque?

(b) If so, when, under what circumstances and with whose permission was it handed over to the Municipality to be used as a hospital?

(c) Do Government propose to hand it back to Muhammadans to be used as a mosque?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: (a) The building in question has some times been described as a tomb, but is generally believed to be a disused mosque dating from the time of Feroz Shah.

(b) This derelict Nazul building was transferred by Government to the Municipality in 1873, and put into order by that body for use as a Hospital for patients suffering from Infectious Diseases. It has therefore been used for this purpose for the last 50 years.

(c) The Infectious Diseases Hospital can no longer be located on this site because the new alignment of the Kutab road passes through the compound. When the road works are completed it is proposed by the local authorities to hand over this building, as well as another mosque and tomb in the same compound, to a responsible local Muhammadan Association which already administers several mosques, if the Association will accept the charge.

INFECTIOUS DISEASE HOSPITAL, DELHI.

481. Khan Bahadur Saiyid Muhammad Ismail: Is the Government aware that there exists in the town of Delhi on the Pahargunj road a Hospital for the infectious diseases owned by the Municipality which is situated in a building resembling an old mosque, an Imambara or a shrine and is surrounded by a graveyard? Will the Government be pleased to make a statement after necessary enquiry as to the origin of this building and also as to how it was used before its present occupation by the Delhi Municipal Infectious Diseases Hospital?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: The Honourable Member is referred to the answer just given to Mr. Hussanally's question.

UNSTARRED QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

ESTABLISHMENT OF OFFICE OF CONTROLLER, MILITARY ACCOUNTS, MEERUT.

222. Mr. Mohammad Yamin Khan: Will the Government be pleased to give information as to the following matters—

(a) How many candidates did pass in the departmental examination held on 5th November, 1921, for appointments as clerks in the Controller's Military Account Office, District Meerut?

(b) When and at how much salary was the person who stood first appointed?

(c) When and at how much salary were the persons who stood 2nd, 3rd, 4th and 5th appointed respectively?

2. Is there any difference in pay of European and Indian clerks in the Department mentioned in the preceding question?

3. Up to what time have the clerks to work in the Controller's Military Account Office, District Meerut?

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: (a) 186.

(b) On Rs. 50 per mensem from 3rd December 1921.

(c) The individuals who stood 2nd and 5th at the examination were already in Government employ as temporary clerks and were confirmed from 1st March and 1st April 1922 on pay at Rs. 90 and Rs. 70 per mensem respectively. Those who stood 3rd and 4th are employed as temporary clerks on Rs. 50 each per mensem.

2. The reply is in the negative.

3. Working hours have recently been changed from 10-30 A.M. to 6 P.M. to 10-30 A.M. to 5 P.M.

BURMA MEAT TRADE.

223. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala: (a) Is the Government aware that the United Provinces Legislative Council and the Central Provinces Legislative Council have passed Resolutions to stop the Burma Meat Trade?

(b) Whether the Government of India have approved of those Resolutions and from what date effect has been or will be given to either of them?

Mr. J. Hullah: (a) Yes.

(b) It is not known what action, if any, was taken by the Government of the United Provinces on the Resolution passed by the United Provinces Legislative Council. The Government of India did not take any action in the matter. As regards the Resolution passed by the Central Provinces Legislative Council, the Government of India suggested to the local Government that action might be taken under the Central Provinces Slaughter of Animals Act, if they considered it desirable or necessary to do so. The Central Provinces Government have taken the requisite action under that Act—vide the Rules published on pages 565 to 568 of the Central Provinces Gazette, Part I, dated the 3rd June 1922. These Rules probably took effect from the date of their publication viz., the 31st May 1922 but the Government of India have no definite information on the subject.

(3026)

INDIAN CATTLE WEALTH.

224. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala: Have the Government taken any steps or do they propose to take any in the near future to protect and improve the cattle wealth of India?

Mr. J. Hullah: The matter is primarily one for the local Governments, whose attention has been drawn to the importance of the matter.

IMPROVEMENT OF CATTLE.

225. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala: Do the Government propose to undertake any legislation for protection and improvement of cattle in India?

Mr. J. Hullah: The answer is in the negative.

SLAUGHTER OF CATTLE.

226. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala: What safeguards if any are at present provided in India by any law or rule against indiscriminate slaughter of cattle, especially pregnant animals, animals in milk, and prime cattle?

Mr. J. Hullah: The Honourable Member is referred to the Central Provinces Government's Notification No. 1236-955-XIII, dated the 31st May 1922, which appeared in the Central Provinces Gazette of the 3rd June 1922. The Government of India have no information of any other regulations on the subject but they shall try to secure all available information in regard to it.

CATTLE IMPROVEMENT BILL.

227. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala: Will the Government be pleased to lay on the table for the information of the House my last Cattle Improvement Bill and the letter of the Government as a result of which I was prevented from asking leave of the House for its introduction?

Sir Henry Moncrieff Smith: The Honourable Member is referred to the answer given on the 1st February last to Babu Ambica Prasad Sinha's unstarred question No. 132.

GOVERNOR GENERAL'S ASSENT TO BILLS.

Mr. President: I have to acquaint the Assembly that His Excellency the Governor General has been pleased to give his assent to the following Bills passed by both Chambers of the Indian Legislature:

The Malabar (Completion of Trials) Supplementing Act, 1923.

The Cotton Transport Act, 1923.

The Indian Mines Act, 1923.

The Indian Boilers Act, 1923.

The Indian Factories (Amendment) Act, 1923.

The Indian Naval Armaments Act, 1923.

The Indian Paper Currency Act, 1923.

The Repealing and Amending Act, 1923.

The Cantonments House Accommodation Act, 1923, and

The Workmen's Compensation Act, 1923.

MESSAGE FROM THE COUNCIL OF STATE.

Secretary of the Assembly: Sir, the following Message has been received from the Secretary of the Council of State:

"I am directed to inform you that the Council of State has at its meeting held on Monday, the 5th March, 1923, agreed without any amendments to the Bill further to amend the Married Women's Property Act, 1874, which was passed by the Legislative Assembly on the 15th of February 1923."

Mr. President: I appoint for the purposes of to-day's debate a period of 15 minutes for each speech.

GENERAL DISCUSSION ON THE BUDGET.

FIRST STAGE—contd.

Sir P. S. Sivaswamy Aiyer (Tanjore cum Trichinopoly: Non-Muhamadan Rural): Sir, last year I presumed upon your forbearance and the kindness of the House and wearied the House with some detailed criticism of the Military expenditure. I do not propose to repeat that course this year. I have no intention of occupying the attention of the House for more than a very few minutes, and it is due for two reasons. In the first place, ill-health has prevented me from examining the Budget with any care. In the second place, the Inchcape Committee has done its work so well and so thoroughly that it would be a work of supererogation to go over the same ground. I desire to associate myself with the tribute of praise that has been so deservedly paid to Lord Inchcape and his colleagues for the splendid work they have done on the Retrenchment Committee, for the thoroughness and promptitude with which they have done their work. But whatever the intrinsic merits of their recommendations might have been, they would have lost very greatly in value but for the concurrence of His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief. I congratulate Lord Inchcape and his colleagues and I congratulate the House on the fact that the Committee have been able to secure the whole-hearted co-operation of His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief in the work which they have done on the Retrenchment Committee and in the recommendations which they have made. Sir, last year I did not refer to one or two things to which I might have referred. One is the question of the Indianisation of the auxiliary services as a possible avenue of retrenchment. I did not dwell upon it for the reason that I thought that the fruits of that policy in the way of retrenchment would be rather gradual and slow. But I think it high time that that question should be examined. It is a matter of regret that the question of the admission of Indians to the auxiliary services—a question upon which this House passed a Resolution when considering the report of the Esher Committee—should be still under the consideration of the Imperial Government. I remember reading in the papers an answer given by Mr. Burdon to a question put to him as to what had been done upon the Resolutions passed by this House in 1921 on the Esher Committee's report. The net result of the answer, as I gathered it from the papers, was that upon those Resolutions which did not count, this Government had been able to secure the orders of the Government at Home, but on anything that really did matter, it was said to be still under correspondence. I must express my very great regret at the delay which has taken place in this matter. We all recognise the great difficulty there is in breaking the ice—I would say the huge ice barrier of War Office conservatism—but I do hope that His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief will use every means in his power to press this question again and again upon the attention of the Imperial Government and not desist until he obtains favourable orders. It is one of those matters—upon which our Resolutions were passed with the entire concurrence of His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, and with the approval of the Government of India, and it is a matter of great disappointment to me—and I am sure to the whole Assembly—that upon a matter like this there should have occurred this unconscionable delay of over two years in coming to a decision. I hope it may be possible for His Excellency to signalise his term of office by announcing the decision to give effect to these Resolutions and by making an effort to carry them into effect. Some of these recommendations which the Inchcape Committee have made may possibly have caused His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief some searchings of the heart, but I ventured on the last occasion to appeal to His Excellency as a statesman and I am glad to find that His Excellency has not been slow to respond. He has co-operated in a most whole-hearted fashion with the Retrenchment Committee. But even a layman like me cannot reconcile himself to all the proposals for retrenchment which the Inchcape Committee have made. Some of my colleagues on the non-official side will perhaps be surprised to hear this note of disapproval. The question to which I wish to refer is the proposal to effect a retrenchment in the matter of providing improved accommodation for the Indian sepoy. There were proposals under consideration for reconstruction and improvement of the Lines of the Indian sepoys. I have seen several of these barracks and Lines myself on the way to Khyber, at Peshawar, at Rawalpindi and other places, and I may say that some of us take better care of our horses than the Government of India takes of the Indian soldier. They live in miserable quarters, through which the burning rays of the sun or the burning winds or the cold of the winter pierces, in huts with thin walls and thinner roofs open to all the inclemencies of the weather. I know that one of my colleagues here suggested that it was a training in endurance for our troops. Logically it should be carried to the point of having an army of emaciated saints, but I do not think that that is a sound policy. If you want to make good use of your soldiers as fighting men you must keep them in good condition; and it is not the way to get the best value for your money or the best service you can for the country to expose your soldiers to the inclemencies of the weather, hot or cold, or to make them suffer such privations and hardships. The Inchcape Committee proposes that you should revert to the old arrangement of hutting grants, a system which I have no doubt must have been obviously unsatisfactory and must have been given up on that account. It is somewhat like the silledar system in the Indian Cavalry which has been abandoned. The system is bound to result in very unsatisfactory housing conditions. I was rather sorry therefore to read this recommendation but I reconcile myself to it on the ground of hard times, and I do hope that when our finances improve this question of the reconstruction and improvement of the sepoys' lines will be one of the first to engage the attention of the Government and to receive the sympathy and support of this Assembly.

Another matter in which I should like His Excellency to use all his influence and bring it to bear on Headquarters is that of an equitable, if not a lenient, adjustment of the capitation charges which have risen to an amount nearly three times what they were before the War. We are well aware that prices have risen though during the last year or so there has been a tendency to a slight fall. But the rise in the capitation grant even to £25, which I believe is the latest provisional rate adopted is something which goes very much to swell our non-effective charges, if I may perhaps call them so, and goes to swell our military expenditure. It is that which induced my Honourable friend Sir Dinshaw Wacha to move his proposition for the reconsideration of the Army amalgamation scheme in the other House; I do not believe that the annulment of the amalgamation scheme will effect any greater economy in the recruitment of soldiers. While I do not share that view I feel that this question of the capitation charges is one which has to be hammered at and hammered at till we get an equitable, if not a lenient, adjustment of the charges. I hope that in view of the value which England derives from the experience acquired by her soldiers in India under diverse conditions and the improvement in their fighting qualities, if not in view of our financial condition, the Imperial Government will find itself able to take a broader view of the question and effect a more satisfactory settlement, I mean satisfactory to us.

[Sir P. S. Sivaswamy Aiyer.]

Sir, I now proceed to make a few observations upon the question of the policy of leaving an uncovered deficit. Speaking for myself, I do not like this policy of leaving an uncovered deficit, and I do hope that the House will not be inclined to follow the course which it adopted last year as a rough and ready expedient for bringing pressure to bear on Government for the purpose of enforcing economy and for the purpose of bringing about measures for retrenchment in our expenditure. But there are two ways of avoiding this policy of deficits. The first way is to avoid a deficit altogether or to minimise it. The other way is to cover the deficit. The Finance Minister told us that the recommendations of the Inchcape Committee had not all been received, that the last instalment was to be received only after the presentation of the budget, and that they had not had time to fully consider all the recommendations. I hope that the interval ~~that~~ has intervened since the presentation of the budget and will intervene before the date when the Finance Bill will come on for consideration will be utilized by the Honourable the Finance Minister for the purpose of exploring every possible avenue of retrenchment, every possible direction in which it may be feasible to bring the Inchcape Committee's proposals into effect in the course of 1923-24. This would be the most satisfactory method of avoiding the policy of uncovered deficits. The next thing is that, if there is an unavoidable deficit, it has to be covered somehow. It is unfortunate that the Finance Minister should in his inexperience of public opinion in this country, though I am sure he has been assisted by his colleagues in this matter, have thought of resorting to the enhancement of the tax on salt. I hope that the Government will not persist in pressing for this form of taxation. In theory a tax upon the necessities of life is objectionable; politically it is most unwise. I hope therefore the Government will discover some other expedient. I remember it was said by my friend the Honourable Mr. Innes on another occasion that the salt tax had always been looked upon as an ultimate reserve. But there are many powers which you have in reserve which you can never think of using. Could anybody dream of imposing a salt tax in England, or of reviving the window tax or reviving the hearth tax? Of course the British Parliament is constitutionally omnipotent; it can do anything; there are many things which we can theoretically do but which are not practical politics. Well, fortunately or unfortunately, the salt tax will have to be looked upon as no longer available for enhancement in the financial scheme of this country. There are many things which it is theoretically possible to do, but which are not practicable. To give an analogous case, though not in the sphere of taxation, it is possible for you to reduce the suffrage, but you can never think of raising it again. The question is not so much whether the salt tax will be such a burden upon the consumer that he cannot bear it. It may be or may not be; it is not necessary for me to say whether this one anna per head per annum is going to be the last straw upon the camel's back or not; but it is one of the accepted axioms of politics in this country that the salt tax is an odious impost, and the result of a resort to this piece of taxation will be that the Government will lend a handle to the agitator, and it is not always the wisest thing to ignore the agitator. We have sometimes to take account of his doings and their probable reactions on the public. I hope therefore that the Government will not persist in proposing this method of covering their deficit. Let them think of something else. It may be said, "well, we have explored other ways, our resources are limited, this is the only thing we can do; can you propose anything constructive?" I confess that in my present state of health it is beyond my effort to think of something else. Perhaps it is a fault, but I am sorry I cannot suggest anything. But I daresay the Finance Minister with all the experience he has acquired in the Treasury, and his colleagues with their large administrative experience will be more fertile in suggesting expedients than it is possible for me to do.

His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief: In the altogether exceptional circumstances under which this year's budget has been presented it is hardly necessary for me to give a detailed exposition of the military estimates for 1923-24. The basis on which these estimates have been framed is already known to Honourable Members of this House from the Report of Lord Inchcape's Retrenchment Committee and from those portions of the Finance Member's speech of the 1st of March which related to military expenditure. I do not propose therefore to deal with various individual criticisms and queries which have been made by previous speakers in this discussion, except to say that the suggestion of one Honourable Member that the Commander-in-Chief still has several crores of rupees in his pocket ready to take the place of the salt tax is a surmise entirely without a shadow of foundation. Another Honourable Member referred to the possibility of reducing the military budget in the future to 50 crores, as was envisaged in one of the paragraphs of the Inchcape Committee's Report. I should like, however, to emphasize the fact, stated in that Report, that the Commander-in-Chief did not subscribe to this recommendation—and I may add that it is unlikely that he will do so. I am sorry that I was not here this morning in sufficient time to hear the commencement of the speech of my Honourable friend sitting on the opposite bench (Honourable Sir P. S. Sivaswamy Aiyer), but I did hear two suggestions made by him, one in reference to the improvement of the barracks for Indian soldiers, of which he has some knowledge, and in which I am in entire agreement with him, the other in which he referred to the capitation grant, and again he has my entire sympathy, and I quite agree that the present temporary arrangement under which the sum has been agreed upon as between the Imperial and the Indian Government is not satisfactory, and I shall use my best endeavours to bring about a final and equitable arrangement. Now I will confine myself in what I have to say to-day to the larger issues of this problem, and in the few observations that I propose to make, I will endeavour to explain, for the information of this House, the considerations of general policy, military and otherwise, which have rendered possible the economies which are now contemplated. Speaking broadly, the Army estimates of 1923-24 represent the consolidated work of the past year. That time has been largely devoted to a searching investigation of the possible reductions in military expenditure. This House is aware that last summer the Government appointed a Committee under the presidency of my Honourable colleague Mr. Innes to examine the question of reducing the cost of the staff at Army Headquarters. This Committee was followed by the Braithwaite Committee appointed in the autumn for the purpose of recommending economies in the Quarter Master General's Services, and also for the purpose of preparing material for the more comprehensive inquiry which Lord Inchcape's Committee was about to undertake. The Braithwaite Committee included in its numbers Lieutenant-General Sir Walter Braithwaite, then the Commander-in-Chief of the Western Command, Honourable Members representative of both Houses, both this House and the Council of State, and Lieutenant-General Sir Walter Campbell, who has just been appointed Quarter Master General. The composition of the Committee in itself is evidence of the thoroughness with which the Government were determined to attack the question of retrenchment in the great spending departments of the Army, and I should like to take this opportunity of acknowledging the great value of the work that these important Committees performed with great skill and understanding and in a remarkably short space of time.

[H. E. the Commander-in-Chief.]

Finally, of course, we have had the inquiries of Lord Inchcape's Committee in which the proceedings and recommendations of the two previous Committees have been merged. Now, I must assume that Honourable Members of this House have made themselves acquainted with those portions of the Retrenchment Committee's Report which deal with military expenditure. Those who have done so will realise that the reductions proposed are real and substantial, that the whole field of military expenditure has been thoroughly explored and that a considerable reduction in the number of fighting troops, both British and Indian, stands in the forefront of the Committee's recommendations. I think I have on a previous occasion impressed on this House that no considerable reduction in military expenditure in India could be effected without cutting down the number of fighting troops. Last year I told the House that under the conditions then prevailing I could not agree to a reduction in the fighting strength of the Army and I gave my reasons for holding this view. On the present occasion you will find it stated in the Report of the Retrenchment Committee that the reductions in military expenditure include reductions in troops, and that this has been generally accepted by myself. It may be thought by some that my present attitude is inconsistent with that which I felt bound to adopt last year. I wish, therefore, to make it quite clear that, in giving my general concurrence to the Retrenchment proposals, I have been influenced primarily by the financial considerations which must have an important bearing in determining the general policy of the Government. The Finance Member has described very graphically the perils and the dangers of our financial position, and I have been greatly impressed by the paramount need of balancing our Budget this year. I further realise that conditions, both internal and external, have much improved during the past twelve months and that we are justified in taking risks which we should have been wrong to incur a year ago. At the same time, I do not, and cannot, admit that the Army is either too strong or too efficient for the needs of India. The equipment of the Army has not yet reached the standard of completeness which this Assembly by a Resolution passed in connection with the Esher Committee's Report itself postulated. Again, I do not admit for one moment that the military expenditure of the recent past has been unnecessarily high, and I should like to refer the House in this connection to the observations which the Retrenchment Committee themselves have made on that point. In paragraph 3 of Lord Inchcape's Report the following remarks will be seen:

"We appreciate the great difficulties with which the military authorities in India have had to contend during the transition period from war to peace conditions, when large armies had to be demobilised concurrently with re-organisations undertaken in the light of the lessons of the war. Hostilities with Afghanistan and operations on the frontier intervened whilst demobilisation was in progress and the growing cost of the Army coupled with the deterioration of the general financial condition of the country have more than once necessitated complete revision of the schemes proposed for the future composition, organisation and distribution of the Army in India."

I recognise, on the other hand, that India's first necessity is to achieve a balanced Budget and that no substantial advance can be made in other departments of the State until the financial position has been stabilised. There are times when risks must be taken. The reductions which have been proposed and to which I have agreed do involve a certain degree of risk from an exclusively military point of view, but they are risks which, in my opinion, the Government are justified in taking when confronted with the financial disaster which an unbalanced Budget would force upon this country. I can confidently say with a full sense of my responsibility, as Commander-in-Chief that the risk is one that, in the circumstances, I am prepared to advise the Government of India to accept. The House will appreciate and is well aware of the marked improvement that has taken place in India during the last twelve months, both in the external and in the internal situation, and I may remind the House of what I impressed upon them last year, namely, that, before I could conscientiously recommend a reduction in our military forces, there must be a definite and a permanent cessation of violent civil disorder. A great change for the better has taken place and we are in a very different position now compared with 1921-22, when the Moplah rebellion had only just been quelled and the Government were faced with possibilities of serious disturbances elsewhere. It will not be necessary for me to detain the House by any technical comment on the details of the retrenchment to which I have given my general agreement. The facts and proposals which will chiefly interest Honourable Members of this Assembly are clearly stated in the Retrenchment Committee's Report, and a further discussion of them on this occasion would serve no useful purpose, more particularly as it is only the reductions in infantry which have received the approval of His Majesty's Government.

The proposed reductions in Cavalry and Artillery are still under consideration, and no definite conclusions have yet been arrived at. There is, however, one point of special interest and importance which I would wish to emphasise strongly. If the reductions contemplated are carried into effect they will leave practically unimpaired the fundamental organization of the Army in India. This organization has been introduced since the War in the light of the lessons learnt during the War. In collaboration with the Retrenchment Committee I have aimed at a reduction of a kind which will give the maximum saving of expenditure and do the least possible harm to our military machinery of defence. Obviously the preservation of the fundamental structure of the Army in India is a matter of vital concern both to India as a whole and to the representatives of India in this House. If the structure remains, it is always possible to add to it and to reinforce it in case of emergency.

[H. E. the Commander-in-Chief.]

I should like to take this opportunity of assuring the House that the present organisation of the Army in India is highly efficient and is one of which India may be justly proud. I say this deliberately; and I would add that the system is the result of the devoted efforts of the most efficient body of Staff officers that the Indian Army has probably ever possessed at any period of its history—officers who have been trained during the War, whose capacity was proved in the War and who are imbued with the lessons of the War. The passage I have already quoted from the Retrenchment Committee's Report indicates very clearly the difficulties which they have had to surmount, and the condition of the Army in India to-day redounds very greatly to their credit. I have seen unmistakeable evidence of it myself recently in the inspections of troops both on the parade ground and under training. The standard of efficiency has shown a very marked improvement since I came to India some two years ago, and if further evidence were required it is to be found in the results which British and Indian troops on field service have recently achieved in Waziristan.

In conclusion I would say one further word on Waziristan. Last year I referred to the halo of doubt and uncertainty which obscured the situation in that part of the Frontier. I hazarded the opinion that the solution of that difficult problem lay in the subjugation of the Mahsuds by force of arms and the construction of roads through their country. This policy has been and is being carried into effect, and there are definite indications—I cannot say more at the moment—that as a result the object of our policy will be achieved at no very distant date. If a final settlement can thus be effected, and I have every hope that it may, we shall be able to withdraw our military forces during the coming autumn, leave the control of the country in the hands of our Frontier Political officers and thus effect a very considerable saving in our next year's Budget. But in the meantime we shall have built our roads and thus be in a position rapidly to support the Scouts and Khasadars and assist the friendly section of the tribes in case of trouble. Mr. Bray has already explained to you very fully the details of the situation and the general policy of the Government. I need therefore say no more, except that in my view there is a reasonable hope of peace in this turbulent country and a considerable reduction in our financial commitments. I hope the House will weigh carefully the considerations which I have tried very briefly to place before them and will appreciate the efforts which the Government and their military advisers have made at the first propitious opportunity of reducing the burden of military expenditure. We have effected it without sacrificing the essential requirements of Indian defence; but a limited degree of risk is involved. The improvement in the internal and external conditions of the country is such that in my opinion the Government is justified in accepting that risk in order to attain financial equilibrium. (Cheers.)

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar (Madras: Nominated Non-Official): Sir, the Honourable the Finance Member has been congratulated so often that it is not necessary to add to the volume of the praise bestowed on him. My own, Sir, is rather a personal one. I congratulate him upon the anxiety he has shown to grapple with a difficult problem, upon the spirit which has animated him and upon the skill with which he has brushed aside many a difficult problem. Sir, this is not the time for bestowing praises when you have only fifteen minutes to deal with the whole situation; therefore I shall proceed at once to speak on some of the subjects which I intend placing before the House.

Before I proceed further, Sir, I must express the disappointment which is felt on this side of the House regarding the failure of Government to appreciate the endeavours of the non-official Members to set right the finance of the country. Sir, last year, notwithstanding ridicule, notwithstanding contempt poured upon us, some of my friends very valiantly pleaded for retrenchment, pleaded that the time had come when the overburdened offices of the Government should be shorn of some of their officers. It was in consequence of that plea, I take it, that the Inchcape Committee was appointed, and therefore, Sir, it would have been but fair if the Government had recognized the efforts made by us to relieve them from a very embarrassing situation. No doubt, Sir, we find our reward in the Report of the Inchcape Committee; but it would have come very gracefully from the Government, if they had recognized that we had done our best to assist the Government out of a very difficult situation.

Sir, what do we find in reading the Report of the Inchcape Committee? That since the year 1913-14 the expenses of manning the various establishments have gone up over 100 per cent. in almost every department of the State. If you look, Sir, at the military expenditure, you will find that there the expenses have gone up from 1913-14, in 1920-21 by 120 per cent. In the case of Railways, it is over 90 per cent. In the General Administration it is 90 per cent. In the Civil administrative departments it is 100 per cent. Even as regards the Ecclesiastical department the expenditure has gone up by 75 per cent. Sir, if time were given us to discuss the Report of the Inchcape Committee, we are confident that we shall be able to show that the cuts should exceed far beyond the 19½ crores which the Committee have recommended; because the Report shows that there are many avenues for effecting retrenchment which have not been touched by the Inchcape Committee. Before I take leave of the Inchcape Committee's report, I should like to point out one thing which the Committee has done and with which I do not think the House will find itself in agreement, and that is as regards the recommendation to cut down expenditure in the nation-building departments. As regards education and as regards some of the departments which are absolutely necessary for the progress of the country, there ought to be no attempt made to reduce expenditure; for example I am told that the expenditure relating to the Hardinge Medical College is to be reduced by a lakh of rupees. I think it would be a most serious thing to do, and I do not think the House will tolerate or that the country will tolerate the cutting down of expenditure in that department.

As regards the military, Sir, I would like to say a few words. Yesterday we listened to a very eloquent—I think it was too eloquent for this House—but a very eloquent speech from the Honourable Mr. Bray, and to day we have had a well-balanced and a carefully thought out utterance from His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief. If I have followed the utterances of these two responsible officers, and if it is possible for an arm-chair politician to join issue with such great experts, it seems to me, Sir, that they do not realise that there is a possibility of cutting down expenditure beyond those which the Inchcape Committee have recommended. His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief read out to us paragraph 3 of that Report. May I with his permission and with the permission of the House draw attention to the 4th paragraph in the same report? This is what the Committee say there:

[Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar.]

"The expenditure which has been incurred in the past may have been inevitable, but the question is whether India can afford to maintain military expenditure on the present scale as an insurance against future eventualities. In our opinion the repeated huge deficits of the last few years in spite of the imposition of heavy new taxation have made it abundantly clear that India cannot afford this expenditure."

Sir, nothing can be more moderate, nothing can be more sober than this condemnation of the huge military expenditure which this country is shouldering. In peace time, when everything is normal, it is not necessary to finance this huge military expenditure; as my friend Mr. Rangachariar put it—an expenditure which costs you 50 per cent. of the income of the country. I think, Sir, that His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief and the Government at Home and the Government here should devise means by which a great deal more of this expenditure can be usefully cut down; I hope His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief will apply his mind to further cutting down the expenditure, so that this country may not continue to groan under this heavy burden which is sure to starve every other department of the State.

Sir, yesterday the Honourable Mr. Bray said that statesmanship abhors a vacuum and, if I followed him rightly, he seemed to suggest that it was the intention of the Government to civilise the Afridis. Now, Sir, if that is the settled policy of the Government, it is desirable that the House and the Government should realise what it would land us in. If you are going to fill up the vacuum, you will have to fill it up by untold sums of money and by the sacrifice of innumerable lives.

Mr. Denys Bray (Foreign Secretary): If I may venture to interrupt, Sir. When I referred to the filling up of the vacuum I did not refer to filling up of the vacuum by a forward policy. I thought I made it perfectly clear.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: The Honourable Mr. Bray says that it is not a forward policy that he advocated; but if I heard him rightly, he first said that there was one kind of forward policy which would go up to the borders of Afghanistan; he then said there was another kind of forward policy which meant civilising the Afridi. I think he said that, if I remember aright. Now if you are going to civilise the Afridi—I mean the Mahsuds—the result of it will be that this country will have to bleed white to the whitest limit. I think you will find that you will have to starve expenditure in every department of the State, if your scheme of civilising the Mahsud is to be taken in hand, and therefore I hope the Government will realise that it is impossible to proceed further in the path of civilising the Mahsud. I think some attempt ought to be made to cut down military expenditure in that direction.

Sir, there is another matter on which I should like to say only a word, and that is this: the Inchcape Committee has drawn attention to the fact that by bringing in the new Department of Railways, there will have to be a readjustment of the portfolios in the Government of India. I am glad the Inchcape Committee have not recommended the creation of another office, because that would be intolerable. I take it that the object of that Committee's report is that the existing offices should be readjusted. There may be eight Executive Councillors, not nine. If that is going to be undertaken—and I am quite sure it is going to be—I would make a suggestion, namely, that some of my Indian friends who are in the Executive Council may be trusted to discharge the duties of some of the administrative posts under the Government of India. I find sitting here day after day, the Honourable Mr. Innes, the Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey and the Finance Member who are growing thin by the heavy work they have to do, and I find that my friends, the Honourable Mr. Chatterjee, the Honourable the Law Member and the Honourable Mr. Sarma are growing fat from want of work; and I think it is time that Government so arranges their work that one section may not grow thinner and the other fatter. The thinner men should have more rest than they enjoy. That is a suggestion which this part of the House is anxious should be conveyed to the Government and I am quite sure it will be considered.

There is one other matter which I should like to touch upon and that is railway policy. Sir, I would like to give the House some figures. Since 1858, in consequence of having to pay guaranteed interest, this country up to the year 1900 disbursed from the general exchequer something like Rs. 77 crores. From 1900 onwards there have been surpluses which resulted in giving to the country about Rs. 66 crores—I think my figures are correct—and there is still a deficit of Rs. 11 crores to make up. That is to say, the country has had to pay about Rs. 11 crores from the general exchequer so far as railways are concerned. Since the year 1921 and 1922 the income has again shown a tendency to go down and the result, I believe, is there was a deficit last year and there will also be a deficit this year unless some attempt is made to cut down the expenditure. As I said the expenses have gone up by more than 90 per cent., and it is desirable that a serious attempt should be made to cut down that expenditure. In this connection I may draw the attention of Government to the fact that in other countries some attempt has been made to reduce the rate of third class passenger fares. In England when they found that the income was not up to the mark, what they did was to reduce the fares; and I found the other day that in Mysore when they found that the income was going down they were going to reduce the passenger fares. I hope the Government will do something in the same direction. After all one must remember, although as was recommended by the Inchcape Committee it is desirable that our railways should bring in an income of 5½ per cent. on the capital outlay, that it is a public utility department; we have to manage this department in the best interests of the people who have to travel; that ought not to be forgotten, and I dare say that if we keep this in mind and reduce the passenger fares we will find that our income is larger than it is at present. This is a matter, Sir, to which the Honourable Mr. Innes will have to give his attention. One other subject more, Sir—I am not looking at the clock, but I am looking at the face of the President, and that is an index that my time is almost up—there is one more matter, Sir, on which I should like to say a word, and that is this: When the Honourable Sir Basil Blackett was appointed to his responsible post, there was a feeling in this country that on the question of exchange he was going to bring a fresh mind to bear and that he would settle the difficulties with which India had been confronted for a long time as early as possible. But his speech in introducing the Budget has been received with great disappointment all over the country on this subject. We have had what is called a settlement of 2s. exchange for a long time. That has been found to be altogether unworkable. Two years ago, Sir, in Bombay it was said that the merchants were not able to meet their commitments and that they were behaving dishonestly. The truth is that there has been such a fluctuation in the exchange that without being reduced to bankruptcy it was impossible for these merchants to have met the commitments into which they had entered. Commercial morality is suffering, the country is suffering and everything is being dislocated; a serious attempt must be made to stabilise exchange. I think, Sir, the time is very propitious for undertaking that step, and with the ripe experience which Sir Basil Blackett has upon this matter, I hope he would take upon himself at the earliest possible opportunity to settle this difficult question.

[Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar.]

Sir, I wish to say a word more generally upon the various recommendations of the Inchcape Committee. As I began by saying if one reads the report, it would be abundantly clear that they have not given attention to all the possible modes of effecting retrenchment in the country. It is felt on this side of the House that if, in carrying out the recommendations of the Inchcape Committee, some attempt is made to associate the Non-Official Members in effecting retrenchment, a great deal more can be done than can be done by the officials themselves. The officials... (At this stage Mr. President rose) Sir, I am sitting down in a minute. The officials, if they are left to themselves, are likely to feel tender towards their own subordinates. But if they are associated with Non-Official Members, they will find that their task is made easier and that they will not be subjected to the same amount of reproach as they would otherwise be.

Dr. H. S. Gour (Nagpur Division: Non-Muhammadan): Sir, about two years back, when first this Assembly assumed office, it was confronted with a deficit Budget, and the Members of the Assembly then pointed out what has since become obvious that the Government's first duty was to balance its Budget. We then pointed out that the military expenditure of the country had far exceeded its paying capacity. Last year, in the second year of our Budget, we once more returned to the charge. We pointed out that the military expenditure was excessive and that the appointment of a Retrenchment Committee was essential for the purpose of restoring equilibrium in the Government of India's Budget. Later on, we followed up this suggestion by tabling a Resolution for the appointment of a Retrenchment Committee and in the teeth of opposition on the part of the Government we carried that Resolution. The result has been the appointment of a Retrenchment Committee. My Honourable friend the Finance Member, when he speaks of the storm and stress through which his colleagues have laboured during the last two years, could not have forgotten that we were ploughing our lonely furrow in the first and in the second year of the Budget, pressing upon the Government the necessity of balancing their Budget and of retrenching their national expenditure. Ours was the voice in the wilderness in the first year and the second year, and it was only after we pressed to the vote and carried by our majority the Resolution on the appointment of a Retrenchment Committee that Lord Inchcape's Retrenchment Committee was appointed. My friend Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar is perfectly right in saying that my Honourable friend must be suffering from lapse of memory if he has not adverted to what is written large upon the pages of the Indian Hansard. But, Sir, when we look at the question from the standpoint of the tax-payer, what do we find? The military expenditure, which stood in 1913-14 at 29.70 crores, had gone up in 1921-22 to 77.87 and in 1922-23 to 72.29 and in the Budget for the next year, after the reductions proposed, it stands at 62 crores. Last year we pointed out that in the Brussels Financial Conference it was resolved with the full concurrence of the Government of India and the representatives of the India Office that no nation could afford to pay more than 20 per cent. of its gross revenues on the upkeep of the Army, and even 20 per cent. was excessive. Now, Sir, if we apply that test, what is the result? The expenditure on the Indian Army works out at 44 per cent. of the gross revenue even if the recommendations of the Inchcape Committee are fully carried out; and it is more than double what the Brussels Conference regarded as perilous and leading to national bankruptcy. I have not forgotten, Sir, the gross revenues of the Government of India and of the Provinces. If they stand in the neighbourhood of 200 crores, this expenditure would still be far in excess of what was admitted to be the maximum at the Brussels Conference. Now, Sir, His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief has drawn attention to the fact that the Army of India cannot be reduced without due regard to efficiency. May I point out to His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief that immediately after the Mutiny the Army of India was re-organised and fixed at 65,000 British and 140,000 Indians and the Army to-day is 71,702 rank, 902 reserves, a total of 72,622, that is, 7,622 more than what was proposed at the close of the Mutiny, of British troops, and as regards Indians we have 170,968 rank, 15,529 reserves, a total of 186,497, that is, 46,497 more than what was settled as the maximum in the post-Mutiny re-organisation. May I point out, Sir, in this connection that those were the days when we had to take account of what was then characterised as the Russian menace, we had to take account of the frontier tribes, and we had also to take account of a hostile Afghan nation. We have now a treaty with His Majesty the Amir of Afghanistan. Russia is in the military sense no longer able to disturb the peace of this country, and so far as the frontier is concerned, the frontier remains to-day what it was in the post-Mutiny period. What justification, then, is there for the increase of the Army from those days to now? Then, Sir, in those days the principle laid down for the proportion of White and Indian troops was somewhere in the ratio of 1 to 2, and it was adhered to upon the assumption that the Indian troops might again break out into another mutiny, and therefore it was necessary to maintain a number of white troops as a counterblast. But, surely, Sir, after we have heard what His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief has said of the gallantry and loyalty of the Indian troops tried in the arena of war, what justification is there for maintaining that ratio between the white and brown soldier? His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief could not be unaware of the fact that the white soldier is the costliest soldier in the world. The Inchcape Committee have pointed out that he costs more than Rs. 200 a month, and he is therefore at least 5½ times as costly as the Indian soldier. This House therefore demands to know why the British soldier should not be replaced by the Indian soldier, and why the white British officer should not be replaced by the gradual process of elimination be replaced by Indian officers. That I submit is the only means of effecting economy in the military expenditure of this country. Frequent references have been made both by His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief and other speakers to passages in Lord Inchcape Committee's report. May I, Sir, read one sentence from the very first page of that report. It says:

[Dr. H. S. Gour.]

"So long as peace conditions obtain, the first essential thing is for India to balance her budget, and this can only be secured by a very substantial reduction in the military estimates."

The question therefore arises—Has there been a very substantial reduction in the military estimates? If Honourable Members will turn to the statistics I have given, they will find that far from there being any substantial reduction in the military estimates, the expenditure is far in excess of what it was a few years back. I have informed the House that in 1913-14 the percentage of expenditure to the total revenue stood at 23.5. In 1917-18 during the War year our expenditure was 43.14 crores, and Lord Meston in his Award fixed 42 crores as the normal military expenditure. But a few years later that expenditure had risen from 42 crores to the neighbourhood of 72 crores. What justification I ask is there for this appalling rise in the military expenditure? Lord Inchcape himself, or rather the Lord Inchcape Committee write with reference to military expenditure in the following terms:

"Since 1913-14 the fighting efficiency of the Army has been enormously increased by the introduction of modern rifles, machine guns, etc., and that a large portion of the Army is maintained for internal safety."

I listened, Sir, to a lecture delivered by His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief and there he pointed out that roughly speaking one-third of the Indian Army was maintained for the internal security, that another third was what are called covering troops and the remaining one-third was for frontier and other defences. Now, Sir, I beg to ask, why should not this internal security force one-third of the Army maintained for the maintenance of internal security be replaced by the police. I ask why should the military be maintained for the purpose of securing internal peace which is primarily the object of the police? Honourable Members will bear me out when I say the mere maintenance of this Army is an incentive to the civil authorities to draw upon the military in time and out of time when it is not necessary for the peace and security of the country that they should be drawn upon. It is the duty of the civilians to maintain peace and order in the country and if they require any extraneous assistance they can have the armed and unarmed police, but it is not the primary function of any army, much less a national army to maintain internal peace and order. That I submit is not the function of any army in the world and it should not certainly be the primary function of the army in India. If this fact is borne in mind, we shall have a very substantial reduction in the military expenditure of this country. I have already pointed out that if the British troops are replaced by Indian troops, and if the Army is reduced by one-third and replaced by police, armed and unarmed, the cost would then approximate to what this country is able to bear. But when I read in the Honourable the Finance Member's speech a reference to the fact that the Army in India must not be altered so as to essentially impair its structure and organisation, I felt some doubt whether the policy of the Government of India is not to perpetuate the policy adumbrated at the close of the Mutiny and since persisted in in spite of the protests of the people's representatives in this country. Turning, Sir, from the military to the civil side what do we find? We find that in almost all the departments the administration consumes the bulk of the nation's revenue. Let me give Honourable Members some startling figures. I shall only trouble the House with the figures for the last four years. In Posts and Telegraphs in 1920-21 the income was 9.61, expenditure 7.57, profit 2.04, percentage of expenditure 78; in 1921-22 income 9.55, expenditure 8.98, profit diminished to .57. Expenditure rose to 94 per cent. In 1922-23, income 10.23, expenditure 9.53 profit dwindled to .70, expenditure stood at 93 per cent. In 1923-24 the Budget under discussion, income 10.71, expenditure 8.68, profit 2.03, percentage of expenditure 80. Now, in this connection what do the Inchcape Committee recommend? They recommend a reduction of 1.37 out of 9.53 crores; net reduction 50 lakhs. Now take another department—Customs. In 1921-22 income in crores 34.40, expenditure 65.87 lakhs, percentage 19.1. In 1922-23 income 42.30 crores, expenditure 72.74 lakhs, percentage 18. In 1923-24 income 45.09 crores, expenditure 77.19 lakhs, percentage 18. Now take again the Income tax department and the figures here are still more startling. In 1921-22 income 18.74 crores, expenditure in lakhs 20.50, percentage 1.0. In 1922-23 income 18.69 crores, expenditure 47.01, percentage 2.5 and now look at the next year's figures. In 1923-24 income 19.04, expenditure 63.79, ratio 3.3. And now take the railways the last of all.

Mr. President: I must warn the Honourable Member that he has exhausted his time.

Dr. H. S. Gour: I shall finish very soon. I shall give the Honourable Members the figures for railways. I shall only give for 1913-14 and the last year's figures, though I worked them out for the last 15 years. In 1913-14, gross receipts 56.81 crores, expenses 29.35, percentage 52. In 1921-22, gross receipts 81.69, expenses 65.66, percentage 80. In 1922-23 revised receipts 92.7, expenditure 66.33, percentage 72 and next year income 95.57, expenditure 6.51, percentage 69.6. I submit, Sir, that this is an excessive expenditure upon the raising of revenue and upon the management of the commercial departments of the Government of India. Lastly there are the recommendations of the Inchcape Committee. Following the same train of reasoning, Honourable Members will find that while the Retrenchment Committee have left the general administration, audit, Ecclesiastical and Political Departments almost untouched, they have attacked these scientific departments, such as education, medical, public health, industries and the rest. Now the General Administration expenditure in 1921-22 was 128.48.

Mr. President: I must ask the Honourable Member to draw his remarks to a close. He is still embarking on details.

Dr. H. S. Gour: I will take only two or three minutes more.

Mr. President: I have given the Honourable Member more than two or three minutes.

Dr. H. S. Gour: I will just point out that while in the general non-paying administrative departments the Inchcape Committee have made no substantial reductions, they have practically applied their axe to all the nation-building departments and cut out education, medical, public health, industries and the rest. I ask the House whether this is the right method of effecting retrenchment. I have no doubt that the House will unanimously support the proposal made by my Honourable friend Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar, namely, that the cuts should have begun first with the non-paying departments and not with the nation-building departments such as education, medicine and public health and I hope that the Honourable the Finance Member will bear that fact in mind. Finally Sir, while we have no doubt to congratulate the Honourable the Finance Member upon the lucid presentment of the Budget we cannot disguise the fact that we shall not be in a position to impose any addition to the existing salt tax. To use the expression I used in another connection the salt tax is res judicata. It was sought to be imposed last year and we vetoed it.

[Dr. H. S. Gour.]

Mr. A. V. V. Aiyar (Finance Department: Nominated Official): It may be convenient to the House if I at this stage deal with some of the points which have been raised by Honourable Members in the course of the discussion yesterday and this morning. I know, Sir, that the time of the House is very precious to-day and I will make my remarks as brief as possible. If I have followed the discussions correctly, there is a general satisfaction with the amount of retrenchment which Government have found it possible to effect in next year's budget. There is, I believe, also a general agreement, with the possible exception of Mr. Chaudhri, that we should not leave any part of the next year's deficit uncovered. Some of the Honourable Members however hold a belief that this can be effected by further retrenchments beyond those already made and without additional taxation. Speaking on the last point, Sir, several Honourable Members yesterday referred to several hidden crores in the budget here and there, and one Honourable Member went so far as to suggest that the deficit was purposely put in to produce a false alarm. I wish this were the case. If I may say so, and I do so with great respect, I rather think that the comparatively favourable character of the budget has produced in the minds of Honourable Members a false sense of security. I claim some knowledge of the figures in the budget, and I have been at some pains since the discussion yesterday to discover some of these crores. I have not so far succeeded in discovering even lakhs, not to speak of crores of hidden money. I think, Sir, before these crores have been brought to light, it will not be safe for the House to act on the assumption that the crores are there.

Speaking of the Retrenchment Committee's report, I wish to solve two points in regard to which doubts appear to exist in the minds of Honourable Members. The first is that the deficit of 4½ crores inserted in the budget allows for all the retrenchments which the Government of India expect to be able to effect in the course of the next year. These consist of 260 lakhs of reduction in the budget figures for the next year which had already been taken into account in the civil budget. A further reduction of 4 crores which the Government of India entered in lump on the 1st of March pending distribution among the Departments and a further reduction of 5.75 crores in the military budget, a total of 12.35 crores. Therefore the deficit of 4.26 crores assumes that the Government of India will effect during the course of next year all the retrenchment proposed by the Retrenchment Committee except to the extent of the unavoidable delay involved in bringing them into effect. The second point refers, Sir, to the remark which fell from Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar this morning that the Retrenchment Committee have left unexplored several avenues of retrenchment. The Committee, of course, knew their business best, and as my friend knows, they have throughout the report entered certain figures which they think ought to go into the budget for next year; and if they left out any particular item for subsequent investigation it is because they knew very well that they could not be brought into effect in time for the next year's budget.

Mr. Rangachariar, Sir, made certain specific suggestions which he thought would secure equilibrium in the budget without additional taxation. If I followed him correctly, he suggested a further reduction of military expenditure, a reduction of 1½ crores on the railways, a further reduction of 1 crore in civil expenditure and the removal of the railway annuities from the revenue portion of the accounts. I need not speak about military expenditure, because that has been dealt with by His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief. As regards railways, I am afraid the suggestion is based upon a misapprehension. It is true that the Retrenchment Committee proposed a total reduction of 4½ crores, but that was on the budget figures for the current year. Of that reduction 1.20 crores has already been given effect to in the original budget figures for the next year. So, with the lump reduction of 3 crores which we now propose, it makes a total reduction of 4.20 crores against 4.59 crores proposed by the Committee. The difference is thus 39 lakhs; a very different figure from 1.50 crores which Mr. Rangachariar mentioned.

As regards civil expenditure, Sir, the House will no doubt indicate in the course of the discussion of demands next week the particular directions in which they think further reductions possible. But as I have already said, the figures for which we propose to ask for the vote of the House are those which have been arrived at after taking into account all the reductions which the Retrenchment Committee propose. If therefore a further reduction of 1 crore is to be made it must be made in one of two ways, either by further reductions to the extent of 1 crore beyond those proposed by the Committee, or if the House thinks this possible, by bringing into effect the greater number of the recommendations of the Committee much sooner than Government anticipate it will be possible to do. Speaking frankly, Sir, I think the possibility of any further substantial saving in civil expenditure beyond that which has been put into the budget is very remote.

There remains, Sir, the suggestion about railway annuities. This question was considered last year and since then the House has had an opportunity of studying the correspondence with the Secretary of State on this question. It was placed on the table of this House in reply to a question by Mr. Joshi and it will be found printed in the proceedings of this House of the 6th September, 1922. The simple reason why we cannot accept that suggestion is that these annuities are of the nature of sinking funds and sinking funds are recognised to be a legitimate charge against current revenues. If Honourable Members will kindly read the Despatches printed in the proceedings I have referred to, they will find ample reason why we are not able to accept that suggestion. I may put another consideration in this connection before the House. The House will remember that the year before last in dealing with the budget here we transferred the capital outlay on the Telegraph Department from the revenue to the capital section of the accounts. Again last year we transferred to the credit of revenue the interest on currency reserve investments; and further this year we are putting to the credit of revenue the interest on gold standard reserve investments. The relief to revenue from these three sources totals 5.12 crores and I suggest, Sir, that we have gone sufficiently far already in the direction of securing relief to the revenue account by a mere manipulation of the figures.

[Mr. A. V. V. Aiyar.]

A few words, Sir, about the additional taxation proposed next year and I have finished. Speaking of additional taxation I am reminded of the fact that no less than 47 Honourable Members of this House gave notice of a Resolution early this Session recommending the imposition of additional taxation in order to wipe off the provincial contributions. It would be interesting, Sir, to watch the attitude of those Honourable Members when the Finance Bill comes up for consideration. If that Resolution was meant seriously, the proposal put forward by Government affords the surest way of achieving that object. If that proposal is accepted, it is reasonably certain that the contributions will be wiped off not in six years but in a shorter period. On the other hand, if it is not accepted, the remission of the provincial contributions must, as a corollary, be deferred to a more remote date.

Just two more points, Sir, which I wish to mention. Looking at the question of taxation from the orthodox point of view which Mr. Ginwala attributed to us yesterday, I cannot find, Sir, any other single source of taxation which will give us the money we want, that is 4½ crores. We will have to put together a number of expedients. Some of them are of doubtful expediency. We had instances of this yesterday. One Honourable Member proposed an increase in the cotton excise: it was received with murmurs. There were murmurs again when another Honourable Member proposed an increase in the import duty on cotton goods. Even if satisfactory substitutes are found, I will not be surprised if eventually the House finds that it has gone through the form of passing additional taxation without giving us the money we want.

One small point, Sir. Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar referred to a proposal of the Retrenchment Committee to reduce the contribution to the Hardinge Medical College. I may not have read the Report carefully, but I have not been able to find anything about it in the Report.

Sir Montagu Webb (Bombay: European): Sir, the Honourable Member in presenting his Budget claimed the privilege of a new Member. May I join with other Members of this House in saying that we heartily welcome him in our midst bringing as he does to the study of the problems on which we are engaged, not only a fresh mind to bear upon the Indian situation but one fortified and strengthened by personal familiarity with the far greater and more puzzling complications of money and finance on the Continent of Europe. I must at the outset express my whole-hearted admiration for the courage that he has shown in venturing to come to India at this particular juncture to help us in putting our monetary problems right. Undaunted by a long succession of most appalling deficits and also by a rupee,—a fickle, elusive rupee, capable of doing anything from a shilling to two shillings, he nevertheless has addressed himself to the work of gathering in the harvest of the past.—a harvest, as he truly and fairly said, sown by his predecessors, predecessors not only in India but also, I would add, at the India Office. The results have been very much what we had anticipated,—accounts wherein the revenue expectations have disappointed us, leaving us in a worse position than we were in a year ago, and a Budget containing the same old noxious features with which we have become so familiar in the past, yet another deficit, and yet another proposal for additional taxation! I should be concealing the truth, Sir, if I did not say at once that the Budget gave us rather a chill directly we heard it. But, on going through it, Sir, we find that after all it is not such a bad Budget. In fact, I am inclined to think that possibly many people may think it a very good Budget. If perhaps it is not as good as all of us may desire, at any rate it has many good features and I hope this House will pass it, if not exactly in its present form, then perhaps modified in some small degree.

I take it, Sir, that nobody in this House would think of holding the Honourable Member personally responsible for the state of affairs in which we now find our finances. (An Honourable Member: "Not at all.") He very rightly and fairly protested that the two months in which he has been in this country were hardly sufficient in which to enable him to prepare a Budget. Well, Sir, if two months are not sufficient, what are we to say of the two or three days only in which Honourable Members have had to study the five thick volumes of statistics and material supplied with the Budget, including the large 300 paged volume of the Inchcape Report? I should like, Sir, at this moment to say that I have endeavoured to read through and study the whole of that Report and the first impression left on my mind is that this is the most valuable document that Government have published for many years past. Apart from the many penetrating and illuminating suggestions and comments on the work of the various Departments of Government made by the Committee, the fact that they have recommended a retrenchment of nineteen and a quarter crores in our expenditure is a great thing. If that retrenchment can be carried out without seriously affecting the efficiency of the administration, then indeed, Sir, will the Inchcape axe have fallen with effect. I think, Sir, that everybody in this House and the whole of the public of India should express their gratitude and indebtedness to Lord Inchcape and his Committee, all of them leading business men, who have devoted their time and talents to the solution of this problem and laboured so strenuously to bring about the desired result. And I think we ought not to forget, Sir, to congratulate Dr. Gour of this House, who is responsible for putting forward the motion on which this Retrenchment Committee was appointed.

Now, Sir, the Honourable the Finance Member said in his Budget speech that it was no use crying over spilt milk and that we should not expect him to go back and delve very deeply into the past. That, Sir, is quite true; but I will venture to recall one or two matters in the past in order that we may have a better understanding of the position with which we are now dealing. First of all, I would remind the Honourable Member that for over two and a half years after the outbreak of war, no War Loan was raised in India by the Government of India. Now, what was the effect of that omission? During that period the Government of India were paying out money the whole time on behalf of the British taxpayer without collecting any money in the form of loans to pay for the war. I do not know if it is everywhere realised in this House that the British tax-payer during the war paid this country very nearly two hundred and fifty millions sterling for services and goods supplied for war purposes. Now, the effects of paying out all that money in India without at the same time collecting the money in the form of War Loans were two. First of all, we very nearly at one time ran out of currency altogether. There was one never-to-be-forgotten Saturday in Bombay when the Currency Office very nearly suspended specie payments. That situation was followed by the issue of a large quantity of paper money, and an enormous coinage of silver to restore the currency. The ultimate result was that prices in this country were forced up to higher levels than they might otherwise have reached had this particular financial policy not been carried out.

[Sir Montagu Webb.]

Now this condition of high prices is most important. For it is high prices which are the cause of half our difficulties, probably of 75 per cent. of the difficulties with which we are faced at the present day. I was very glad to notice that the Honourable Member made a reference, in fact more than one reference, to the level of prices in this country, because the purchasing power of the rupee in India is of far greater importance to the great mass of the people of this country than the purchasing power of the rupee out of India; that is to say, in relation to the pound sterling. I consider that it is much more important that the rupee should not lose its purchasing power in India,—that prices should not so rise, that the necessities of life are out of the reach of the great mass of the poor people,—in short, that it is much more important that the rupee should be stabilized in India than that it should be stabilized in relation to currencies out of India; although as a matter of fact, most attention is usually concentrated upon our foreign exchanges. And in this connection, I may say, Sir, that I am fully in accord with the Finance Member with regard to our foreign exchanges. Firstly, I agree with him that there is no sanctity in any particular rate,—2s., 1s. 4d., 1s. 3d., 1s. 2d.—and, further, that I am in accord with him that the time has not yet come to attempt final stability in our foreign exchanges. I think, that if Honourable Members will study the present condition of Europe,—if they will study the dependence of our foreign exchanges upon our exports to Europe and then finally if they will take into consideration our external, sterling debt, they will see very clearly that the moment has not come for attempting to stabilize our foreign exchanges. It is quite possible that we should fail! In this connection I notice that the Honourable Finance Member says that if we were to stabilize exchange at 1s. 4d., internal prices would have to go up. I cannot help thinking that that is a slip of the pen (The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: “No.”), that the Honourable Member intended to say that prices in India would have to go down. The reason is this, that prices are already up; prices in India have been 100 per cent. and more above pre-war levels, and what is taking place now is that prices in India are gradually but steadily going down. If we could fix the rupee at 1s. 4d., then prices in India would have to go down to pre-war levels. The fact that prices are at present over 50 per cent. up, and that the probability is that they will not return to pre-war levels for a long time, if ever, is a good argument for fixing the rupee, or trying to fix the rupee, at 1s. 3d. rather than 1s. 4d.

In this connection I should like to say, as there is a good deal of discussion in the West of India about the foreign exchanges, that the uncertainty, I will not say the danger, which is before us at the present moment is not that Government may not be able to raise the rupee to two shillings; it is not whether 1s. 4d. is the most suitable point at which to attempt to stabilize the rupee; it is whether Government can prevent the rupee from slipping back to substantially below 1s. 4d., possibly to one shilling. That is the problem; that is the uncertainty; that is—some people would say—the danger which is before us.

Now, Sir, I am very glad to see a reference made by the Honourable Member to the desirability of stimulating the investment habit in this country. That is certainly one of the means by which this country can progress in all directions. I can only hope that, holding the views he does, he will support the Resolution which I have attempted to bring forward more than once in favour of Bonus Bonds. Surely, Sir, it is business-like, to take advantage of the universal desire to win a prize by issuing Bonds in a form whereby some small portion of the interest can be distributed in the form of bonuses thus stimulating the investment habit. (A Voice: “That is gambling”).

Now, Sir, I come to the Budget for next year. I should like to make, first of all, a few comments on the form in which the Budget has been presented. I will commence by saying that I think that it is wrong,—radically unsound that the accounts of our business undertakings,—the accounts of our commercial Departments, should be mixed up with the accounts of the general administration. I think, Sir, that they should be entirely separated. Not only are the positions and financial results of our State commercial undertakings greatly obscured by the present way of showing the accounts, but the true cost of administration of this country is magnified out of all proportion to reality. The Honourable Member has on this occasion unwittingly added to the distortion by mentioning figures of gross expenditure instead of net expenditure. I confess that when I heard him say that our expenditure next year was estimated at 204 crores, I received a terrible shock. The expenditure as we have been accustomed to speak of it, is only 130 crores; and if you take out of the Budget the expenditure on the Commercial Departments—Railways, Posts and Telegraphs, Forests, etc.,—then the actual expense of administering this country is only a trifle over one hundred crores, that is to say, about £66 million sterling, per annum,—a decidedly small sum for a country of the size, wealth and population of India.

Now, Sir, what are these Commercial Departments. I mentioned just now that they are the Railways, the Posts and Telegraphs, and the Forests. May I read to you what Lord Inchcape's Committee say in their Report about the Forest Department:—“The Government of India are in possession of a very valuable forest property. We have found it impossible to obtain any satisfactory information either in regard to the working or the financial results of forest operations. We consider it is essential that forests should be managed on commercial lines”; and, lastly, “The accounts of the Department should also be placed on a commercial basis.” Now, Sir, exactly the same remark applies to the accounts of our Posts and Telegraphs and to the accounts of our Railways. I should like to explain, Sir, if I may, what a business man means by putting the accounts on a commercial basis. In the business world, where we are familiar with profit and loss accounts and balance sheets, what we want to see is the income from our commercial Departments placed on one side of a Profit and Loss account, and the expenses of earning that income on the other side; the balance being carried to a Balance Sheet wherein on the liability side we show our debts,—our capital outlay expended in acquiring or building our railways, in developing our forests, in erecting our public buildings, and on the other side of the Balance Sheet, a list of our assets with the present day values of our railways, with their plant, lines, permanent-way, rolling stock, lands, buildings, and so forth, our telephones, our telegraphs, our wireless installations and all public buildings connected therewith, our stocks of saleable timber, etc. I venture to say that if those accounts were separated from the general Budget, and the businesses run properly we should find not only a handsome surplus in the profit and loss account, but we should find a still more handsome surplus of assets over liabilities that would add enormously to the credit of this country, not only in India but out of India, thus facilitating the raising of further capital. I commend this suggestion to the consideration of the Honourable Finance Member. Now, Sir

[Sir Montagu Webb.]

Mr. President: The Honourable Member has exceeded his time.

Sir Montagu Webb: I am sorry; there are two or three very important matters to which I should like to draw attention at length but I will now compress them into two minutes. First of all, with regard to the railways. Lord Inchcape's Committee have advocated a severe cut under the heading of Railways. I think this cut will be regarded with very great apprehension in many business quarters, especially in the case of the North Western Railway, which I am surprised to see has been classed as an "unremunerative" railway. I should like to point out that the North Western Railway includes in its system over 1,500 miles of strategic lines. I should also like to point out that it is equipped for military mobilisation on the North-West Frontier; and further I should like to mention that for the last three years the export of wheat from India has been prohibited for reasons not concerned with the North-Western Railway, but for political and economic reasons which concern all-India. If all those matters be taken into consideration, Sir, I think it will be seen at once that statistics based on the traffic of the last three years and not considering the 1,500 miles of strategic railways are not a reliable or accurate basis on which to decide whether that railway is remunerative or unremunerative.

The other matter to which I would like to refer briefly is Military Expenditure. I said just now that if we took out the commercial accounts from the general Budget, our expenditure was only about 100 crores. Of that 100 crores, 62 crores are to be devoted next year to military expenditure. Now, at first glance that looks like 62 per cent. But I would remind the House that in calculating the proportion of military expenditure to the whole, the expenditure of all Provincial Governments must be taken into consideration. If that expenditure be taken into consideration, then, Sir, our Military Services cost only about—I worked it out at about 33 per cent. Now thirty-three per cent. is certainly higher than we would like to see it, but we must all remember that conditions in this country are very different from what they are in the United Kingdom. Not only have we great numbers of illiterate, ill-informed people to deal with, but also great differences in race, creed and caste that are all liable to develop difficulties, so that great proportions of the population are liable to combustion. Then too, we have the North-West Frontier. I think these outstanding and unquestionable facts have all to be taken into consideration.

If you will allow me to say so with regard to the deficit on the Budget, Sir, I should urge that Government abandon at least a portion of the proposed Salt tax. I would suggest in place of it, Sir, to be brief, the possibility of a small export tax on petrol. I do not think it would bring in very much, but I am not yet satisfied that it could not be levied to advantage. I would further suggest a four annas duty on silver. I know some of my friends in Bombay do not like the idea of a return to that 4 annas import duty but I would assure them that if they feel that the four annas duty is likely to depress the sterling value of silver, I would urge that the one rupee note be abolished and that one rupee silver coins be substituted. This will mean an increased demand for silver. The one rupee paper note is quite unsuitable for a tropical country in peace time; I am glad to see in the Inchcape Report that the Controller of Currency says that it is more expensive to maintain one rupee notes in circulation than one rupee silver coins. Those are a few suggestions; the other is that the proposed salt tax be at least halved. ("No, no.") If the silver duty be imposed and a small tax levied on petrol, and savings be made elsewhere, we shall be able to balance the Budget; and I submit to this House that we MUST balance this Budget.

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas (Bombay City: Non-Muhammadan Urban): Sir, I am afraid the task of dealing with the Budget of this year has been rendered more or less easy by the report of the Inchcape Committee. We do not find, for instance, Member after Member getting up as they got up last year and the year before last asking for cuts in this department and retrenchment in that department and so on. We find that discussion is focussed on whether it is possible to have a further cut to do away with the deficit and on the point whether the salt tax should be accepted by this House or not. We have also the usual criticism on military expenditure rendered less forcible, I think, because of the proposals made by the Retrenchment Committee. And so, one finds that the Retrenchment Committee has certainly carried out an admirable piece of work in submitting this report, and I join with those that have congratulated not only the Inchcape Committee, but this House also for bringing about the state of affairs by which it was possible for the Inchcape Committee to present its report; and, Sir, this "enthusiastic and inexperienced Legislature," as the Under-Secretary was pleased to characterise it the other day, may well congratulate itself that it has helped in the presentation of a document which ought to be an eye-opener not to the Legislature but to the "experienced administrators" of the country; and I may here digress for a moment and say to my Lord Winterton what he said to Colonel Wedgewood when Colonel Wedgewood irrelevantly, I am afraid, attacked Mr. Thompson. I may say to Lord Winterton in his own language that if he had used these words not away in the Parliament of England, but in this House, in the presence of the Members of this House, then, to use his own words, "he would have got something from some of the Members of this House which he would have for a long time remembered."

Passing on, now, Sir, to the proposals made by the Honourable the Finance Member, I join with the other Members of the House in offering him my congratulations. I do not for a moment admit that it is a Budget that in any way ought to make us cheerful, but I do think that he has handled the subject in a most admirable manner, if I may say so. Apart from that, my reason for congratulating him further is that he has made certain admissions in the Budget which endorse the opinion—public opinion—expressed in this country for the last few years in their condemnation of the policy that was adopted by Government. For instance, I find my Honourable friend saying on page 59 of his speech:

"And the State which is driven to cheat its creditors does not always realise what it is doing although its unsound methods are adopted at the expense not only of the wealth and happiness of its own citizens, but also at considerable risk to social order within its borders. Much of the present unrest in the world is due to the way in which States in all parts of the world have cheated their creditors by unsound currency manipulation and the creation of paper money with no real assets behind it."

[Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas.]

My Honourable friend Sir Montagu Webb was pleased to say that during the war Great Britain gave to this country in exchange of services and exports made from this country to the other country 250 million sterling. I want to ask my Honourable friend how much that amounted to in rupees. Was it in any way the same that we expected to get at the time when on the credit of England we exported articles from here or was it rendered much less by the currency manipulation adopted at the instance of Government? I am glad to find that in the very first Budget that my Honourable friend the Finance Member has presented he has, although not openly at least in the language that he has adopted made an admission of the danger of adopting a policy of currency manipulation in this country. Then my Honourable friend has also practically admitted the need of stabilising the exchange. I hope the House will not accept the fallacious argument of my Honourable friend Sir Montagu Webb that the time has not come when exchange should be stabilised. The time has come, and the country has been demanding it for the last few years that exchange should be stabilised, and unless the exchange is now stabilised, no confidence can be placed in the currency policy of the Government by the people, the result of that being that the trade of the country and the industrial development consequently, will always be in a state of depression. I feel, therefore, that the time has come for stabilising the exchange, and if one reads the arguments presented on each side of the case by the Honourable the Finance Member, one would find no difficulty in believing that at heart my Honourable friend himself would like to stabilise the exchange. He himself was connected with that Committee in Geneva which recommended strongly the stabilising of exchange as the first step to be taken. If he held that view about European countries in spite of the present uncertain state of their currency, I think the case for India is much more hopeful.

And the only argument that the Honourable Finance Member has been able to present against the stabilizing of exchange is that it might be of advantage to you not to stabilize the exchange because a higher exchange may mean a reduction of your debt, and in the payment of your Home charges. Now that argument, I am sure, my Honourable friend could not have meant seriously because what, after all, is the gain that you would make by a reduction in the payment of your debts, and in your Home charges, as compared to the great loss that this country, the community at large, would incur by getting smaller prices and a much smaller sum of money for its exports on which the country depends? You cannot consider this question from the point of view of gains to the Government. The question has to be considered from the point of view of gain or loss to the community, and if there is no doubt whatsoever that it would mean a tremendous loss to the community then the need of stabilizing the exchange under any circumstances becomes absolutely obvious. My friend also has pointed out the need of balancing the budget, and on that I am entirely at one with him. Although the deficit is only 4½ crores, it is necessary that we should not leave it uncovered, and here again is an admission from the Honourable Finance Member for which he deserves congratulation. His predecessors did not realise until the deficit went to the extent of 100 crores of rupees, that it was wrong in the interests of this country to allow this deficit to accumulate. The deficit was not due to the fact always that this House was not prepared to vote the necessary taxation. Last year may be taken as an exception, but the deficit was in most cases due to the failure of the Department to bring about correct approximate estimates. In all cases we find that the revenue fell short of the approximate estimate that the Department had made, and I am glad that, after five years, when the deficit had reached a figure of 100 crores,—it will now be only 4½ crores. My Honourable friend, who is an able financier, realises the importance of leaving the deficit not uncovered, and I think there is great force in that argument. Our credit is bound to suffer if we leave this deficit uncovered and I emphasize the need of covering this deficit at any cost. But while I agree to that proposition, I may at once tell my Honourable friend that this House will never agree to covering this deficit by raising the tax on salt. That proposition I must assert with all the emphasis that it is in my power to command. Last year I characterised the proposal for the enhancement of the salt tax as a messenger of revolution in every village home. I ask the Government not to repeat the mistakes that they have in other instances made in the past in the teeth of the opposition of the people. I ask this House to reject this proposal and to urge upon the Government, if possible, to make further cuts in order that the deficit may be avoided, and if that is not possible, to suggest, with the help of Government, alternative proposals for covering the deficit. And in this connection I may also state that I am not yet convinced by the argument advanced by my Honourable friend Mr. Aiyar that the annuities should not be taken to the Capital Account. In a year like this, we would be perfectly justified in doing what many other countries have done. If we could take the interest on the Gold Standard Reserve and the Paper Currency Reserve to the Revenue Account, what can prevent us from following the practice which other countries have adopted for the past many years. And talking about the Gold Standard Reserve brings me to the importance of urging upon my Honourable friend the Finance Member the urgency of locating the Gold Standard Reserve here in this country. To-day Honourable Members will find that the interest that the Government is able to get on the Gold Standard Reserve is 2 per cent. from its investments in England, while the Bank rate here goes to 8 per cent., and industrial concerns and agriculturists and traders find it difficult to obtain money, and consequently there is bad trade, and the revenues fall short of the estimate, our own money is being invested in England at 2 per cent. What then can be a better policy than locating the Gold Standard Reserve here and investing it at 5 or 6 per cent., with this advantage to the community, that the Bank rate will not go up, and money will be available to traders and industrial concerns at a much cheaper rate of interest. And I may also point out that the majority of the Babington Smith Committee had, in their recommendation, suggested an alteration of the Paper Currency Act with a view to enable the Government to make 5 crores available to the Imperial Bank at 8 per cent. for advancing to agriculturists when the seasonal demands for moving crops came up. Now I may make a suggestion to my Honourable friend the Finance Minister, that this Paper Currency Act should be further modified and that the amount available to the Imperial Bank should be not merely 5 crores, but 10 to 15 crores, to give substantial relief to agriculturists and also that it should not be lent out at 8 per cent. to the Imperial Bank so as to lend it out at 10 per cent. against hundies, but it should be lent out at 5 or 6 per cent. so that the agriculturists may not have to pay more than 7 or 8 per cent. Then, Sir, I support also the proposal made by my Honourable friend Mr. Sahani that the time has come when you should adopt in this country a Gold Standard and a gold currency. Sir, I appeal to the House not to accept the suggestion to enhance the salt tax; but I may also suggest an alternative if I may. My Honourable friend the Finance Member told us that there was no alternative proposal made by any Member of the House. Sir, we have not got an able staff at our disposal to work out all the figures

[Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas.]

Dr. H. S. Gbur: Have we got any staff at all?

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas: But if I may venture to make a suggestion, it seems to me that the proposal to raise an export duty on jute would not be out of place. The Fiscal Commission itself, while it has condemned export duties in general, has pointed out that jute, being a monopoly in this country, can stand an export duty, and in times of stringency we would be justified in resorting to a further export duty on jute. The argument that if we raise the duty further a substitute may be found does not hold water, because the finding of a substitute does not depend on the existence of an export duty, but is a matter of scientific research. Then, Sir, my Honourable friend Mr. Ginwala has made a general suggestion with regard to taxation. In this connection I may also point out that some of us expected that the recommendations made by the Fiscal Commission and accepted by the Government here in this House might find a place in this year's budget. Perhaps the Honourable Finance Member was not to blame; it was too early for him to give effect to these proposals this year at any rate. But I think that when the Tariff Board has been appointed—and I hope it will be appointed at a very early date—and when the Tariff Board has completed its investigations in some cases, we shall have a much better system of tariff than the present haphazard arbitrary system which is adopted by the Government of India. I also agree with my Honourable friend Mr. Ginwala that the time has come to make an examination into the whole question of taxation, for it seems to me that the burden of taxation falls unequally in this country and there are institutions which, although they deserve to be taxed, are being left alone because Government regard certain facts as permanently settled. (Dr. Nand Lal: "As, for instance?") The time has come when those institutions should be made to bear their burden of the administration of India.

With these words, Sir, I resume my seat.

The Assembly then adjourned for Lunch till Half Past Two of the Clock.

The Assembly re-assembled after Lunch at Half Past Two of the Clock. Mr. President was in the Chair.

Sir Gordon Fraser (Madras : European): Sir, I listened with great interest to the very interesting speech of the Honourable the Finance Minister and I would like to congratulate him on placing the position before us in so practical and businesslike a manner. We have to accept the fact that we are faced with this deficit of 4½ crores. The Honourable the Finance Minister proposes to square this by raising the Salt Tax by Rs. 1-4. May I suggest with all due deference that the new taxation be spread more equally over the present existing taxation? I am afraid that one's efforts to assist the Honourable the Finance Minister in making Budgets are very much of an amateurish nature. I personally feel very great diffidence standing up here and making suggestions to him. But I cannot help thinking that it would be more equitable to distribute the amount, especially as in doing so I am quite sure it would not be inflicting any hardship on any particular individuals or communities. Also I think we all hope that the times ahead will be more prosperous and that the bulk of any taxation that may be imposed now will be only temporary. I admit at once that I cannot find any sound or practical reasons for opposing the imposition of this Rs. 1-4 per maund enhanced duty on salt. But we must not forget that the whole sentiment of the country is very strongly against it, and we must admit that in India sentiment looms very large and very often it overshadows hard and material facts.

Dr. Nand Lal: Not always.

Sir Gordon Fraser: I think personally the feeling against the enhancement of the Salt Tax might perhaps not have been so strong amongst Honourable Members if it had not been the only means by which the Honourable the Finance Minister proposed to balance his Budget. As I said before, it would be more equitable to distribute the tax more equally, and it would then give all Honourable Members in this House the satisfaction of contributing their share towards the deficit put before us by the Honourable the Finance Minister.

I suggest therefore as a first step that the enhancement of the Salt Tax might be reduced to 8 annas instead of Rs. 1-4. This would bring the tax to Rs. 1-12 instead of Rs. 2-8—an enhancement of very little more than one anna per maund per head per annum, a very small sum indeed. Then I would retain the export duty on raw hides and skins. I have no figures available to ascertain what amount this would give us, but I put it down at 20 lakhs. I speak subject to correction on this point as there are no figures before me at all. Then I would suggest as a temporary necessity to terminate on the 31st March 1924, just for a period of one year and to terminate automatically at the end of the financial year, that the Honourable the Finance Minister should impose a temporary surcharge of 6 pies in the rupee of tax collected under the headings of Customs and Income-tax. This, with the modified Salt Tax, would give us an amount that would enable the Honourable the Finance Minister practically to meet his deficit.

Dr. Nand Lal: Income-tax is already two annas.

Sir Gordon Fraser: Under Customs the receipts expected are 45 crores. Six pies in the rupee on that will give us Rs. 1,40,00,000. Under taxes on Income, the figure expected is 19 crores. Six pies in the rupee here gives us 60 lakhs. I put the raw hides down at 20 lakhs, and then we have the Salt Tax—8 annas on that would give us Rs. 1,80,00,000. This brings the total to 4 crores against the 4½ crores required. I would leave the Honourable Finance Member to find the extra quarter crore; possibly if 8 annas is considered too low a figure to reduce the salt tax to, we could take it at 12 annas instead of the original Rs. 1-4. That would increase the figure by another 90 lakhs, giving us Rs. 490 lakhs as against Rs. 4½ crores required. Now, it may seem a somewhat retrograde step to take to suggest an increase of the customs duties and income-tax, but this six pies in the Rupee of tax collected is a very small figure indeed, and I cannot see that it will hurt anybody. If we take goods liable to 5 per cent. duty on importation, those goods with the surcharge added would only pay 5-15 per cent., goods incurring a duty of 10 per cent. would be paying 10-3 per cent., and even when we come to the luxury tax—a tax against which so much has been said—of 30 per cent., it would only come to 30-9 per cent. Then as regards income-tax and super-tax, here again the extra tax would be so small that it would not be felt, and yet at the same time these two items would give us half the amount required by the Honourable Finance Minister. If you take a salary of Rs. 500 per mensem or Rs. 6,000 per annum, under the present schedule it pays a tax of Rs. 190 per annum, and if you add a surcharge of six pies per rupee on the tax collected, it only means an extra Rs. 5-15, or less than eight annas a month. Then again take a salary of Rs. 1,000 a month or Rs. 12,000 per annum, the tax on it under the present Act is Rs. 560 per annum; the surcharge would only be Rs. 17-8, or under Rs. 1-8 per mensem. When we get into the higher incomes liable to super-tax, when we take an income of a lakh of rupees per annum, under the present Act the tax-payer has to pay Rs. 12,500 and the surcharge on that would be Rs. 390—it means only Rs. 32-8 a month. I think I am right in saying that the Honourable the Finance Member has to pay income-tax and super-tax to the extent of about Rs. 10,000 a year; the increase in his case is only Rs. 25 a month. I do not think this is very much; it only amounts to a 3 per cent. increase on our present customs duties and income-tax.

[Sir Gordon Fraser.]

Then again it may be contended that this will upset the present methods of accountancy; but the collection of this tax would be extremely easy; it would not upset the present methods of accountancy in any way at all. Take for instance goods imported into this country on which the import duty payable is say Rs. 125-14; we cut out the odd annas; on Rs. 125 at six pies in the rupee we get 62½ annas or Rs. 3-14-6, to be added to the original amount calculated as duty on those goods. I contend that my suggestion would be fairer and more equitable than the suggestion to raise the whole sum by a tax on salt alone. All would contribute on the basis of the present taxation, and it would not in any way upset the balance of taxation as it exists at present. In putting forward this suggestion it must be distinctly understood that I only make this suggestion as a temporary one, as with the prospects of improved trade in general I am optimistic enough to think and hope that the extra taxation now suggested would not be necessary for more than twelve months.

I think the Honourable the Finance Minister in his speech made a remark that we must cut our coat according to our cloth. The attitude of some Members of this House towards the attempts to provide sufficient wherewithal to meet our requirements rather reminds me of a remark made by a fellow-commissioner of mine on the Madras Corporation some years ago. His remark was that we must cut our coat according to our body. Now, that is a very nice idea indeed. If you are going to do that you will have to provide sufficient cloth to make the coat fit the body. That is what at the present moment Honourable Members of this House are rather shying at. Along with this suggestion of the surcharge on customs duties and income-tax, I propose that we should allow the duty on raw hides and skins to remain as it is at present. I may be wrong in my estimate of what this will bring in because I have not got the figures. I have just received a telegram from Madras which reads as follows:

“Madras Chamber of Commerce and the South India Skins and Hide Merchants' Association (the latter being entirely an Indian Association) strongly protest against the reduction in export duty on raw hides and skins and at a joint meeting held to-day it was unanimously resolved that no rebate be allowed to Empire countries and that export duty at 15 per cent. should apply to all countries. If proposal now before the Legislative Assembly be adopted, the tanning industry of India which at present is in a very critical condition will be further seriously affected if not crippled.”

Now, in connection with that I would like to refer to a letter from the Government of India, Department of Commerce and Industry, dated the 13th June 1916, dealing with the question of the export of raw hides. The Secretary then wrote:

“As you are aware for several years before the War this lucrative trade had passed, at any rate so far as Calcutta was concerned, almost entirely into German hands. On this side firms consisting of Germans or of naturalised persons of German origin and with German trade connections had formed an effective ring and although one or two English and other firms had on occasions attempted to enter the trade they had been unable to break this ring and had practically in all cases abandoned the attempt. In the case of an Indian firm, it would appear that before the war a determined and partially successful attempt at boycott was carried out by the German ring of hide exporters.”

That was the position before the War, and from figures that I have taken out it seems to me that the trade necessity referred to by the Honourable the Finance Member for the removal of this export duty does not exist. If we take the export figures of raw hides, for the 9 months ending December 1922 and compare them with the figures for 1911, 1912 and 1913, we find that Italy and Spain, two of the largest importers into the Continent of raw hides from India, are practically back to pre-war figures. Taking the case of Germany, in spite of her present disorganised condition, I see that for the nine months ending 1922, the total value of raw hides exported from Calcutta was 72 lakhs. If you take it for twelve months, it is equivalent to 96 lakhs presuming that exports continue on the same scale. Well, the figures before the war, that is the time referred to in this letter from the Government of India, were:

1911	1,19,00,000
1912	1,23,00,000
1913	1,64,00,000

So, in spite of the troubles in Germany, she seems likely to secure at an early date the same monopoly in India in connection with this trade that she had before the war.

Now in putting forward this suggestion regarding the surcharge, as I said before, it may be considered as a retrograde act, but I cannot see myself that it is going to hurt anybody, because the amount is so small. It is not a question of a 3 per cent. increase of the duty, but it is purely a surcharge of 3 per cent., or 6 pies in the rupee, on the amount of tax collected. That is going to give us 2 crores. If you take the salt tax at 12 annas, that gives another 2,70,00,000, plus something from hides. If we stick to the 8 annas only on salt, the total will be reduced by 90 lakhs, and if it is left at this with the Honourable the Finance Member, he may be able, either by retrenchment or by taxation, to find the 20 or 30 lakhs still required to balance his budget.

Mr. N. M. Samarth (Bombay: Nominated Non-Official): Sir, at this late stage of the debate, I propose to address myself to only one question, and it is this. Is it a fact that there is really a deficit of 4 crores and 25 lakhs? I submit that if the budget figures are recast in accordance with the well recognised canon of public finance as to what is chargeable to revenue and what is chargeable to capital, the deficit will ultimately result in about 30 lakhs only. The House will remember that in the first year of this Assembly, I was instrumental in reducing the deficit by one crore by pointing out the error of book keeping which the Government of India committed in regard to posts and telegraphs. Well, since then that mistake has been rectified. But I do find still that amounts which really ought not to be charged to revenue have been charged to revenue in the Budget of the Government of India, for March 1923, at pages 10, 11, 12 and 13 under the heading "Statement of the Expenditure charged to the revenue of the Central Government, in India and in England." Now before I substantiate my criticism, I should like to point out that it is not right that money spent on durable public works, whether military or civil irrigation and so on, should be at all chargeable to revenue. A high authority on public finance, Professor Bastable, makes the following observations on the subject:

"Abnormal expenditure", he says, "frequently occurs in a somewhat different way, as in the case of durable public works or other improvements"

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett (Finance Member): Abnormal?

Mr. N. M. Samarth: Yes, abnormal, because they are not necessarily normal. Military roads made in Waziristan from which posterity also will benefit have been charged to revenue. Now why should the present generation be penalised by this amount being charged to revenue? If the Honourable Member will have patience, he will find that the distinguished author says further:

"It may be a part of State policy to erect extensive public buildings, to carry out a system of fortifications, of railway roads or canals, to drain and plant waste lands to promote colonization or to develop industry that requires the aid of its capital. Outlay of this kind"—he goes on to say—"is in mercantile phraseology chargeable to capital and not to revenue, and is clearly abnormal. The method almost invariably adopted is to meet the abnormal outlay by abnormal receipts, namely, borrowing, or, to put the point in another way, to turn the extraordinary expense of a given year into the ordinary one of interest on debt."

There should be no question about the canon of public finance which he has laid down, and I wish to apply it now. I say rightly capital outlay at New Delhi has not been charged to Revenue. The Honourable the Finance Member has expressed some doubt on the subject. He has said, "Apart from our revenue receipts, we have spent many crores on unproductive purposes, the expenditure on which is classed as capital expenditure. New Delhi is the most obvious example. I can see no justification other than sheer necessity for not treating this expenditure as chargeable against revenue and in any case it ought to be repaid out of revenue at an early date."

With all due deference, I venture to question the correctness of the dictum of the Honourable the Finance Member, and my authority is Professor Bastable. Now, Sir, I shall apply this to three items in the Statement of Expenditure. At pages 12 and 13, Honourable Members will find Item No. 50 "Military Works." The Budget estimate for 1923-24 is given as 4,23,55,000. Now if Honourable Members will turn to the Military Budget, page 199, they will find the entry under the head "Military Works",—Works, Capital Expenditure 1,96,00,000. I submit there is no justification for charging this sum to revenue. It must go to capital account. Now take another entry, No. 41, Civil Works. The Budget estimate for 1923-24 under this head is 1,87,63,000. If you look at the Demand for Grants, Demand No. 41, at page 121, it will be found that 92,82,000 out of the total amount is for original works. That is what Professor Bastable calls durable public buildings, and which ought not to be charged to revenue. Take again a third item in the Statement of the Expenditure charged to the Revenue of the Central Government, say No. 16, the heading of which is Irrigation, etc. Capital Account (charged to Revenue)—Construction of Irrigation, etc., Works—financed from ordinary revenues, total 2,16,000. There is absolutely no justification for charging it to revenue and swelling thereby the expenditure. I take my stand again on Professor Bastable's principle. Now if these three items are totalled together, the total comes to 2,90,98,000. Calculating interest on it at 6 per cent., it will amount to 17,45,880. I charge that to revenue, and let these 2,90,98,000 be transferred over to capital account. Then,

8 P.M. out of the deficit of 4.26 crores if you deduct this sum of Rs. 2,73,52,120 you get a deficit of Rs. 1,52,46,880. Now, another point upon which there was discussion on the last budget occasion and which has been referred to by previous speakers, especially I believe by Mr. Jannadas, Sir Vithaldas Thackersey raised the question of the railway annuity. The debate will be found at page 2798 of the Legislative Assembly Debates, Volume II, Part 3. He observed:—"The second item I object is that we are debiting to revenue the 586 lakhs which we pay as annuities for the purchase of railways. I can understand debiting to revenue interest charges, but I cannot understand how we can debit to revenue our capital charge, namely, the amount we pay in instalments to the shareholders for the purchase of the railways. It is really not a revenue charge but a capital charge." And if you take an account you will find that out of a total of 5 crores 3 lakhs 62 thousand which is the amount of the annuities for the purchase of railways, the capital portion of that is Rs. 1,21,70,000. There is no reason why the amount should not be sent over to the capital account. Well, if you deduct that then from the amount of Rs. 1,52,47,880, the balance is Rs. 30,77,880, which alone is the real deficit. And surely ways could easily be found in the course of the year to meet this 30 lakhs 77 thousand odd rupees. Therefore, there is no real deficit which we have to provide for and, therefore, there is no need for additional taxation, and consequently all the discussion as to ways and means and the alternatives is in my humble judgment outside the scope really of the present discussion. Of course I saw Mr. Aiyar nodding his head whenever I said that the items should not be charged to revenue but I have given my authority for saying why they should be charged to capital. I say there is no reason why the present generation should be penalised and made to pay for the benefits which posterity will also derive. It is a wrong principle, wrong budget framing, wrong book-keeping to have these charges included in the expenditure with the result that the expenditure is swollen and the deficit is increased. I submit therefore that there is no case made out for any additional taxation. That, Sir, is my point.

Now, Sir, I should have liked to finish, but as reference was made by Mr. Bray to Waziristan, in which I take some interest and to which I referred at the time of the last budget discussion, I may be permitted just to make a few observations. Last year I attacked the policy of Government in regard to Waziristan. I said that, whatever the political reasons may be, whatever the military reasons may be, from the financial point of view I oppose it. And throughout my position has been that you cannot go and occupy and administer the country. A downright forward policy is out of the question. That was my position, and therefore I asked Government to abandon that policy. I am glad to say that the enunciation of the policy which I heard from Mr. Bray yesterday means the abandonment of that policy. I am not in favour of a burn and scuttle policy, a policy of sending punitive expeditions and then withdrawing afterwards, with the result that you leave behind a legacy of tribal hatred and cause tribal emboldenment by the weakness of the withdrawing Government. That policy also is out of the question; and a policy of occupation and administration, a downright forward move, is also out of the question. I have been throughout an advocate of what is called the Sandeman policy, or a policy approximating to the Sandeman policy, namely, controlling the tribes without annexing them, and I am glad that that is the policy which I find adumbrated in the speech which Mr. Bray made. I feel gratified that my fight has been ultimately successful. With these words, Sir, I will close my remarks.

[Mr. N. M. Samarth.]

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes (Commerce and Industries Member): Sir, it is not usual for the Commerce Member to intervene in this general discussion, but Sir Basil Blackett has specially asked me to deal with one suggestion which has been made in the course of the debate. It is a suggestion which has been freely canvassed in the public press, a suggestion which was made with engaging simplicity by Mr. Spence of Bombay yesterday and a suggestion which has been repeated by more than one Honourable Member. I refer to the suggestion that we should impose an export tax upon motor spirit or petrol. Now, Sir, let me state the problem. In 1917 we passed an Act by which we imposed an excise duty of 6 annas a gallon on all petrol produced in India and an equivalent surcharge on the import duty of all petrol imported into India. In accordance with our usual practice, we allow a drawback of that excise duty on all petrol exported from India, and that is the cause of the complaint. In India we produce 34 million gallons of petrol. Of those 34 million gallons, 14 million gallons are consumed in the country and the remaining 20 million gallons are exported. Now, two complaints are made. In the first place it is said that we treat the Indian consumer unfairly; we charge him an excise duty of 6 annas a gallon and we let the foreign consumer go free. Secondly, we are accused of sacrificing wantonly a large possible revenue; if we imposed an export duty of 6 annas a gallon on the 20 million gallons of petrol exported from India, it is said that we should make 75 lakhs of rupees per annum provided, that is, there is no decrease in exports. Consequently, two suggestions have been made. One is that we should impose that tax of 6 annas a gallon on all exports of petrol. The other suggestion is that we should lighten the load on the Indian consumer by reducing the excise duty to 3 annas a gallon and charging that excise duty not only upon petrol consumed in the country but also on petrol exported from the country. It sounds exceedingly simple, but perhaps the House will not be surprised when I say that had it been as simple as all that we would have adopted this expedient long ago. I will first deal with the theoretical aspect. I won't take very long with that. Theoretically an excise duty is essentially a duty upon consumption and that is what we intend it to be. We remit that excise duty on petrol exported because we do not wish to place our producers in an unfavourable position compared with producers in other countries. We cannot be sure that our producers can pass on the duty to the foreign consumer and we are never quite sure that the duty will not recoil upon ourselves and upon our own producers. That is the theoretical reason why we give a drawback of the excise duty on exports. We give that drawback in respect of the cotton excise and we give it in respect of this petrol excise duty. But, Sir, I will take the purely practical question of what is likely to be the probable effect of imposing this export duty, as I may call it, of 6 annas a gallon on exports of petrol. How much revenue are we going to get out of it and what are the other effects going to be? Those are the points to which I shall address myself and I will ask the House to remember three material facts. First, the production of petrol is a mere incident in the manufacture of kerosene oil. In fact before a use was discovered for petrol in connection with motor cars and vehicular transport of that kind, the Burma Oil Company actually used to burn their petrol. They had no use for it. Secondly, only surplus petrol is exported from India. India's demand for petrol is fully met, and it is only the surplus above the requirements of India that is exported; and thirdly, the exports of petrol from India, or rather from Burma, are merely a drop in the world's supply. Most of that petrol, most of those 20 million gallons, go to the United Kingdom. The United Kingdom's imports of petrol are 210 million gallons. This last fact is very important indeed. It means that if we impose this export duty upon petrol, the Indian Oil Companies could not pass on that duty to the foreign consumer; the Indian Oil Companies could not raise their price for the foreign consumer; they would have to sell their petrol at the world's price. Well, what would the effect be? The Oil Companies would have to pay that 6 annas a gallon themselves. They would have to pay 75 lakhs of rupees per annum themselves, and the inevitable effect would be that the Oil Companies would not be able to export petrol from India at all. I do not know what the cost of production of petrol in India is. I do not think anybody knows.

Dr. H. S. Gour: Two annas a gallon.

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: Then Dr. Gour is wiser than I am; all I can tell you is this. We have studied this question with reference to the experience in other countries. The question of an export duty on petrol from Mexico is a very old question, and after long experiments the rate of export duty at Mexico has crystallized down to half an anna a gallon. In the Dutch East Indies the export duty on petrol was fixed in August 1921. There again they fixed it at something like half an anna a gallon, and I believe that the future of that tax is very uncertain. But the most instructive history of all is the history of Roumania. In 1919 Roumania imposed an export tax of 20 per cent ad valorem upon mineral oils. What was the effect? The effect was that they crippled their export trade. In the first four months of 1919, 900 tons of kerosene oil represented their exports. There was another result—production in Roumania was seriously affected: and the result of Roumanian experience is that the export duty on petrol from Roumania is now fixed at the equivalent of one farthing per gallon. Now I have given the House the experience of other countries. I have shown that in other countries where they tried this export tax, they have not been able to fix the tax at a higher figure than one-half penny per gallon. I think that it will be clear to the House now that it is entirely out of the question for us to think of imposing an export tax on petrol exported from India at anything approaching either 6 annas, or even the 3 annas a gallon proposed by my Honourable friend Mr. Spence. If we go by the experience of other countries, the very most that we can safely impose would be a tax of half an anna a gallon. That would yield us a revenue of just over 6 lakhs of rupees a year. Then, Sir, there is another side to the shield. We cannot take this question of an export tax on petrol apart from the question of kerosene oil. Now, whatever may be the complaints of the consumer in India and in this House against the Burma Oil Companies in respect of the prices they charge for petrol, I do not think that there is any one here who can cavil at the policy adopted by the Burma Oil Company in respect of the price they charge for kerosene oil. They fixed their price for kerosene oil, inferior yellow kerosene oil, as far back as 1905 at the range of prices obtaining then. They fixed it at Rs. 2-14 per unit of 8 gallons ex installation at the ports; that was for inferior oil. They maintained that price for many years, they are maintaining it still. But, as inevitably happens, the demand in India gradually overtook the supply with the result that at the present time the demand for kerosene oil is something between 150 to 180 million gallons a year, whereas the amount of kerosene oil produced in Burma is only 100 million. Now the effect of these factors became most evident in the latter days of the war. The Burma Oil Company still supplied the inferior oil at Rs. 2-14 a gallon, but it was unable to meet the whole of India's demand, and petrol had to be imported from abroad in order to supplement the Burma supplies. For a time the price of these imported supplies was governed by the price of the Burma oil. But, as the war dragged on, the importing Companies were unable to import kerosene at that price. Consequently the Burma Oil Company were unable to make their price of Rs. 2-14 a gallon effective. We all remember in 1917 and 1918 what profiteering there went on in kerosene oil; how the Burma Oil Company tried to maintain their price, but how the middlemen, how the profiteers, drove the price up. It would have been perfectly simple for the Burma Oil Company to raise its price to the level of the price of the imported oil. It did not do so. With the full cognizance of Government, though we had no share in it,—they came to an arrangement with the Asiatic Petroleum Company. It was a pooling arrangement. They pooled their supplies, and they pooled their prices. It is a complicated arrangement, and I am not going into it now, but all I will say is that as a result of those pooling arrangements, the price of inferior kerosene oil in India at the present time is estimated to be 3 annas a gallon below the world's market price. It is estimated—I give the figures for what they are worth, I saw them in the report of the annual meeting of the Burma Oil Company recently,—it is estimated that India has scored by that arrangement since 1919, 32 crores of rupees in kerosene oil alone. On the one side you have these Oil Companies maintaining a price of kerosene oil three annas a gallon below the world's price. They have always got a margin up to that. They could raise their price. On the other hand, you have this possible export tax. I have shown that if you put a tax of 6 annas a gallon or even 3 annas a gallon on those exports, you get no revenue at all; you merely kill the trade, and if you put on a small tax, you take this 6½ lakhs out of the Burma Oil Company and other oil companies, but there is nothing in this world to prevent them from recouping themselves by increasing the price of kerosene oil. Now does this House want the price of kerosene oil to be increased in order to get a very small amount of duty out of this export tax on petrol? Sir, Government has been accused throughout the country by propaganda spread by the motoring trade, Government has been accused of deliberately sacrificing this revenue. I have shown that it is nothing of the kind. The whole matter has been explored, and we have come to the deliberate conclusion that the thing is not worth doing. We should get very little revenue out of it, and we might send up the price of kerosene oil for the poor man in India.

[Mr. C. A. Innes.]

Mr. Ashruff O. Jamall (Bengal: Nominated Non-Official): Sir, at the outset I must congratulate my Honourable friend Sir Basil Blackett for the very able and lucid manner in which he presented the Financial Statement to us last Thursday. The Budget, Sir, though it shows a deficit of Rs. 4½ crores, will, I am sure, be better received than has been the case in recent years. Sir Basil Blackett very rightly remarks that he is the inheritor of the three years' work of my Honourable friend Sir Malcolm Hailey. But he has realised from the last two days' discussion that his position is by no means an enviable one. As a commercial man, Sir, I would be the first to endorse the necessity of balancing the Budget. But the contemplated tax on salt which has been proposed by the Honourable Member to attain that object is going to be a very unpopular one and not well received. This House last year this time discussed at great length this subject and the result of it was that it was rejected. My Honourable friend Mr. Samarth has given some suggestions and I agree with him that some charges have been made to Revenue which should go to Capital account. If those suggestions are taken into account, the Budget, I daresay, will balance itself. This morning before lunch when I was sitting here I admired the eloquent speech of my Honourable friend Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas until such time as he touched jute. Sir, I come from Calcutta and I am very closely associated with that industry. I know that at the present moment it is under no healthy conditions. The jute mills are working only 4 days in the week. We are piling up stocks and we are running into large finances. Our buying power all depends on foreign countries and everyone knows distinctly how very much depleted the foreign buying power at the present day is. Under the circumstances, I think if the suggested jute tax is at all levied, it will go to hamper the jute trade of Bengal. According to Mr. Samarth's remarks, as the Budget balances itself, Sir, I venture to advocate that let us close this last year of this Assembly—India's First Parliament—without any fresh taxation and with a real effort to curtail expenditure wherever it may be possible, so that in the next 3 or 4 years we may have surpluses going not only to reduce provincial contributions but to reduce the taxes that have been levied in recent years. In concluding, I would like to associate myself with my Honourable friend Sir Basil Blackett in expressing our grateful thanks to the Incheape Committee for their devoted work which would not only be of great assistance to this House but of invaluable service to the country at large.

Mr. Harchandrai Vishindas (Sind: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, coming as one does at this very late stage of the debate, one has necessarily to run the risk of slithering down the groove of repetition, although I shall attempt as far as possible to avoid it. Now, I do not think I need go over the ground of praising the Finance Member or praising the Incheape Committee, because that ground has already been traversed too much. I rather think that one faces a danger in praising the Finance Member, because if you praise him he might be spoiled. He has been already praised so much that he would not be able to present such a felicitous report and speech as he has done this year. It was a great pleasure to me to read that speech from beginning to end and I do not want to be deprived of that pleasure for the next year, which will be the case if he gets puffed up by too much praise. The first thing I have to remark is that the impression which I first formed as to the motive underlying Sir Basil's imposition of salt tax may be described as under. But first I will make a digression. Mr. Manmohandas Ramji told us yesterday that he could easily detect a defect in the Finance Member's Memorandum in that he had allowed 38.6 crores for the railways, whereas only 30 crores that had been originally sanctioned would be enough, so that, this saving, of between 8 and 9 crores he suggested, would be quite enough for doing away with the proposed extra taxation. Then, he went further and said that in finding out that defect we were far shrewder than the Finance Member had thought us to be. But to my mind the Finance Member is far more astute than any of us and for this reason. Here I will come to the motive which according to me has actuated the Finance Member to impose the Salt Tax. I was under the impression that the Finance Member must have read the whole debate of last year including the debate that turned upon the motion of Mr. Joshi on the Finance Bill to substitute Rs. 1-4-0 for Rs. 2-8-0 salt duty as it stood in the Bill which meant that the enhanced duty be not allowed, which motion was carried by a large majority. Having read the whole of that debate, as he must have done as a matter of duty, I could not for the life of me understand how he came forward with that proposal again this year. But one solution suggests itself to me. I thought that he was playing a deep game. He wanted to elude us and to take us off the scent, so that we may not howl for the reduction of any existing taxation. It was a kind of strategic move knowing full well as he did that the salt tax would never be accepted by the Assembly. He said to himself that if he did not propose some kind of fresh burden to cover some fresh deficit, Members would make a hue and cry for cutting down some of the taxation that is already in force. He has succeeded in that. Nobody has come forward and suggested the reduction of the present taxation. Therefore, I think that all those Members of the House who have taken the Finance Member seriously about the proposed taxation on salt are mistaken and they ought to modify their opinion, because the Finance Member is almost certain that this tax will be thrown out by the Assembly. Now, Sir, I quite agree—in fact it would be foolish on my part not to agree—with the main principle of finance laid down by the Honourable the Finance Member that the budget should be balanced and deficits not left uncovered. I do not think there has been a single Member of this House who has had the temerity to challenge that maxim. Only it has been pointed out by Member after Member that there are ways and means of substituting something for the salt tax which will make a great leeway in eliminating the deficit altogether. I need not waste the time of the Assembly by repeating the suggestions which have been made by several Members, by Sir Gordon Fraser, Sir Montagu Webb, Mr. Samarth and other Members, but I can say this much that the House will not meet with the slightest difficulty in substituting some other source for the salt tax. We the Democratic party intend, when the proper time comes, i.e., when the Finance Bill and the Demands for Grants are discussed—to put forward proposals in lieu of the salt tax which will balance the Budget without the least difficulty. Now, Sir, there are one or two points with reference to the Finance Member's speech which I want to emphasise. The Honourable the Finance Member has said that we ought not to be wise after the event so far as the question of exchange is concerned, and that there is no use crying over spilt milk. He is referring to the fact that the exchange that was originally fixed has turned out to be a delusion and a snare and that we did not look ahead at the proper time. But with due submission, Sir, I inquire who are the culprits responsible for that mishap? Not we, the public, but the Government. We were not wise after the event. We were wise before the event. The public went on clamouring to the Government that they were adopting a suicidal policy by fixing the exchange at the high rate of 2 shillings a rupee while there was a steady tendency of falling exchange. And we were not guilty of crying over spilt milk, but rather we were telling the man who was deliberately spilling milk not to do so. (Laughter.) If there is any blame in the matter, it attaches to the Government. Then, again, Sir Basil Blackett has told us that this is not the time for stabilising the exchange, and Sir Montagu Webb also agreed with him. But the reason that Sir Montagu Webb gave rather goes the other way. He says there is a great danger of exchange going downwards and downwards up to even one rupee a shilling. What does that show? That shows that you have to stabilise it to avoid all kinds of disastrous fluctuations. There should be no fluctuations. As Mr. Jamnadas has pointed out, these fluctuations have been the ruin of the country. As Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar has pointed out, they compromise commercial morality; they create a kind of distrust on the part of European merchants who deal with Indian merchants. It is not the fault of the Indian merchants at all. The Indian merchants have been crying themselves hoarse from time to time that it is this exchange policy of the Government that has been responsible for these unfortunate results. Then I say, Sir, that as the prophecies of the Indian merchants have been true and the Government prophecies have been falsified, the present prophecies which the Indian public are giving to the Government should be accepted, its own prophecy should be rejected, and exchange should be stabilized. That will make for sound finance in the future. Sir, now I will touch only one more subject, although it will be considered to be a very threadbare one. There are some points in it in regard to which I may be excused for resorting to repetition, which I have myself at the outset of my observations condemned. Sir, I refer to the military expenditure of Government, and the long drawn out wail of the public regarding it. I know that at the present juncture, by the very nature of the case, my observations will partake of an academic rather than a practical nature. Still nothing will be lost in pressing the points year after year that strike one to bring to the attention of this House and the Government. His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, when he came this morning, told us that it was possible for Honourable Members to discover a kind of inconsistency in the assertion he made last year that it was not possible to reduce the British units or Indian units at all, and his concession to the Inchcape Committee in that respect this time. This was a point I had proposed to make, but he forestalled me. He said there is no inconsistency because the state of affairs has considerably altered, the internal as well as the external conditions having both improved. And therefore it was that he agreed to the reduction in forces suggested in the Inchcape Committee's Report. Quite right, but all I say is that the concession is rather a grudging and a narrow one. If the internal conditions of the country and the external conditions have improved as we all know they have, I think a much vaster reduction should have been allowed than His Excellency is prepared to concede. Then, Sir,

[Mr. Harchandrai Vishindas.]

[Mr. Harchandrai Vishindas.]

Sir Basil Blackett, the Finance Member, showed some kind of impatience, quite naturally from his point of view, at Member after Member talking of the Inchcape Committee's Report not being acted upon in the Finance Minister's speech, but what I say is this, that not a very valid or adequate justification has been shown in the Finance Member's speech as to why such a very tardy and such a very small and inadequate acceptance of the proposals has been made instead of very liberal reductions. The belief of those who have gone through the Inchcape Report is that many of the suggestions can be immediately given effect to not to the fullest extent that they have been made by the Committee, but to a very liberal extent. Now, Sir, I will briefly refer to certain pages of the Report where these strike me. First of all we come to page 11, paragraph 10, relating to the present Command system:

"Army Headquarters, Staff of Commands, etc.—A considerable portion of the large increase in expenditure under this heading since 1913-14 is due to the introduction of the four-Command system in 1921."

Then an explanation is given as to how this new system came to be introduced and five reasons have been assigned. But I have been informed from other sources that this four-Command system is entirely unnecessary and unnecessarily expensive. If a judicious and economic arrangement were devised, it would be very easy to bring all the four Commands within the compass of two Commands, because you find that so far as my own Province of Sind is concerned, (I think it comes under the Western Command) a great deal of it is merely desert. Likewise you have the Northern and the Eastern Commands. These two could be very easily combined, and the Southern and the Western Commands could be very easily combined, and a great deal of saving effected. My estimate is that that saving would come to between four and five lakhs of rupees. Why that should not be done at once I see no reason. Of course the Inchcape Committee say they would give it a trial, but I think as it has failed, on the very face of it the trial is merely a waste of money.

Then proceeding to page 12, paragraph 12:

"Army Headquarters—

The total expenditure for 1922-23 is more than double that of 1913-14"

a point that has been referred to by Dr. Gour,

"although the number of troops in the fighting services has decreased by 15,517 and provision has been made for decentralising the control of minor matters to the Commands. The establishment of Army Headquarters has increased as follows."

And they add later:

"It is obviously not practicable in the limited time at our disposal to make any very definite detailed recommendations but we consider that the provision for officers at Army Headquarters should be reduced to the full extent recommended by the Innes Committee."

This suggestion should be carried out. Then, Sir, before I proceed further with reference to this Report, I pause for a reflection, and that is this. It strikes me that the soldier, the Army man and the Army officer is imbued with the idea that as he is the saviour of the country, as he gives his life, all the other Civil departments are no good as compared to him and why should these civilians grudge him lavish expenditure? When trouble comes, external or internal, it is he who would be called upon to shed his blood and therefore why should he not be allowed to spend lavishly? This engenders a sense of indifference, irresponsibility and overlordship in the military department. Of course, the highest officers like the Commander-in-Chief and the Generals and other men with a sense of responsibility are not at all influenced by that idea. I sincerely believe that His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief is always prompted by the desire of carrying out the wishes of this Assembly, and of effecting as many economies as possible. But the lower ranks, the ordinary soldier or man, or small officer has got no sense of frugality at all. He does not want to cultivate that sense; that is not in his nature. Now as an instance of that I was only recently told that in Karachi one motor lorry was employed in carrying a few bottles of beer, etc., from Kamari to Karachi, 5 miles. (Laughter.) I find that the prevalence of this tendency has received corroboration from the following remark in the Inchcape Committee's Report. On page 15, paragraph 20, they say:

"We have examined the position in regard to mechanical transport and attach a statement showing the estimated military requirements and the present stock of vehicles, classified at our request," and so on, and they continue:

"We consider there is no justification for providing the stock of vehicles which the military authorities estimate is required, and we recommend that, while the present financial conditions obtain, the authorised establishment of motor vehicles including reserves should not exceed 1,600 vehicles, excluding motor cycles. The holding of large excess stocks must necessarily result in increased costs for maintenance, garage accommodation, interest on capital, depreciation and personnel, and in addition there is a tendency to use the vehicles, if available, for non-essential purposes. In this connection we examined the records maintained by one motor transport company and found they were far from satisfactory; the number of vehicles in use was considerably in excess of the requirements, and in many cases the daily loaded mileage run by individual lorries was only 2 to 4 miles with light loads of about 5 maunds."

His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief: This has already been accepted.

Mr. Harchandrai Vishindas: Then I am thankful to His Excellency.

Mr. President: I must warn the Honourable Member that his time is exhausted.

Mr. E. Burdon (Army Secretary): I wish to reply very briefly to certain observations which have been made in the course of this debate on the subject of the recommendations of Lord Inchcape's Retrenchment Committee in regard to military expenditure and the Army estimates for 1923-24. My object in doing so is not to embark upon any form of contention but really to give the House certain information which I feel sure that Honourable Members would like to have.

I will deal first with certain remarks made by my Honourable friend Mr. Rangachariar. If I remember his speech correctly, he raised two points of special importance. In the first place he referred to a statement in the speech of the Honourable the Finance Member made with reference to the revised Army estimates for 1922-23. The statement was to the effect that the budget for 1922-23 provided 85.10 crores for the established charges of the Army, whereas, according to the revised estimates, the charges will now amount only to 80½ crores; and I think my Honourable friend's point was that it was unjustifiable for Government to frame so high an estimate in the first instance. The explanation of the apparent which has actually been considered, and it is one which the Army, if the decision were left to them, would like very much to adopt, as I can assure the House there is nothing the Army hates more than to be called out for the suppression of civil disturbance. There are, however, certain objections to it. The first objection is that it would to a very large extent merely amount to robbing Peter to pay Paul. It is true that armed Police Battalions, according to the calculations which we have made, would probably cost less than a regular Indian Infantry battalion, but there would be no very great difference and the charge would, as the House will understand, merely be transferred from Central to Provincial estimates. There are military reasons of great cogency also against the proposal, but the House will understand that it is impossible for me to discuss seriously on the present occasion a large question of policy of this kind. My Honourable friend Dr. Gour had also something to say in regard to further reductions of British troops. Well, as the House are aware, the Retrenchment Committee, who were in a good position to judge of the matter, and the Commander-in-Chief do not consider that any larger reduction can with safety be made than that which has been proposed. That reduction, as I have shown, is considerable. There is one other distinguished authority whose support I think I may claim for the view that greater reductions should not be embarked upon at this stage. I am referring to my Honourable friend Sir Sivaswamy Aiyer. He told the House this morning that he does not altogether share the opinion of the Honourable Sir Dinshaw Wacha on the subject of the abolition of the amalgamation scheme. I think I may assume that by this he means that India must for the present continue to rely in some measure upon the services of the British Army. My Honourable friend Sir Sivaswamy Aiyer has an intimate acquaintance with the whole matter. I need hardly remind the House that it is not so very long ago that he was a Member of the Committee which dealt with the military requirements of India. My Honourable friend Sir Sivaswamy Aiyer, in the course of his speech this morning, mentioned two matters to which he desired to draw the particular attention of His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief; His Excellency being detained in another place did not hear these particular observations and was therefore unable to reply to them. I feel sure, however, that I can promise my Honourable friend on behalf of His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, that the question of admitting Indian officers to departments of the Army as distinguished from the combatant formations, will be carefully examined, and also that His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief will do everything in his power to secure a favourable decision on those Resolutions which were passed in this House in connection with the Esher Committee's Report and which are still under consideration either by the Government of India or by the Secretary of State.

[Mr. E. Burdon.]

Khan Bahadur Abdur Rahim Khan (North-West Frontier Province: Nominated Non-Official): Sir, yesterday I must say that I was thankful to this Honourable Assembly that the view of those Honourable gentlemen who used to be authorities on the Frontier question was most favourable; but it is very painful to me to see that my learned friend Dr. Nand Lal, who always speaks with a full voice and from a full heart, is just as obstinate and as far astray as ever. I will appeal to him and I will just offer some observations to him in particular and to other Honourable Members in general to be more charitable towards our Province.

Sir, I will take the situation on the North-West Frontier from three aspects and deal with it. Firstly, from the aspect of the people who are living there; secondly, from the aspect of the Civil officers, and lastly but not least, from the aspect of the Military officers in order to show that we don't deserve his remarks. I must say that we have all been treated very badly and we have all been criticised very disgracefully. My Honourable friend Mr. Bray yesterday and His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief to-day made a full statement concerning the Waziristan question, which prevents me from enlarging on the same. I would like just to describe before this learned Assembly the characteristics of the people with whom we have to deal in order to show that the close border policy is rightly adopted by the Government.

War is at every door and warlike virtues behind every door, under a brute there is a free man and a man with a heart. They abound in courage and ready for sacrifice. Amid their perilous mode of life and the perpetual appeal to arms there exists no sentiment much warmer than friendship nor any virtue stronger than heroism. To him who loses everything vengeance is left and if the conquered can enjoy this, he will find himself happy and will sleep softly even under his chains. Every clan forms a league of which all the members are "brothers of the sword." They are united together by the strong ties of community of race, of language and community of common interest, and consider it their sacred duty to defend one another. They are imbued with the noble spirit to lay down their lives for the sake of their fellow tribesmen. They value neither their own lives nor the lives of others. As a horse kicks instead of speaking, they pull out their knives instead of explanation. Strife for strife's sake such is their pleasure; when caged in by melancholy or violent sensations they are bent on a fighting blood-spilling life. In their eyes the world is warfare and heroism the greatest excellence. It is not strange to see them seek their happiness in battle and their beauty in death. Such is the life of those with whom the Government is engaged in an endless struggle. Their country is barren and yields no produce, so the occupation would have been mere waste of money and loss of valuable lives without any return.

Now, Sir, I will prove to the Honourable gentlemen that since the last few years our duty as citizens of that Province we performed beyond expectation. We have always been ready to co-operate with the Civil officers, and always ready to respond to the call of the Military officers. We have been spending money out of our own pockets for our safety which fund ought to have been provided by the Government as it is the duty of our Government to safeguard the person and property of every citizen. We are entitled to claim that from our Government, and I am assured this Assembly will support me in urging this point. Sir, we buy our own rifles and pay for them; we buy our own ammunition and pay 4 p.m. for them; and you know very well, Sir, that for every rifle we buy a chowkidar must be maintained; and when occasion arises we residents aid the constabulary and the police. In spite of this, my Honourable friend is not satisfied. He will always call out "Murder after murder; dacoity after dacoity." I would request him to go there and settle there and see with his own eyes the state of affairs there . . .

Dr. Nand Lal: I rise to give an explanation, Sir, because my name has been referred to. The Honourable Khan Bahadur Abdur Rahim seems to be imbued with the official view as the Honourable Mr. Bray was . . .

Mr. President: The Honourable Member from the North-West Frontier Province may be left to give his own explanation. I understood the Honourable Member was going to give a personal explanation.

Dr. Nand Lal: I explain that I approached the subject, connected with the North-West Frontier Province, with reference to the standpoint of the tax-payers and in the interest of law and order. I did not attack any individual officer.

Mr. President: I cannot allow the Honourable Member to deliver another speech. If the Honourable Member thinks he has been misrepresented he is entitled to give a personal explanation; he is not entitled to add a long foot-note to his own speech.

Dr. Nand Lal: Sir, I was never obstinate in my views, nor unfair, I was just in my remarks and I may emphasise the soundness and correctness of my remarks. The criticism which has been levelled against me is altogether unfounded.

Khan Bahadur Abdur Rahim Khan: Well, Sir, I am glad that the Honourable gentleman gave vent to his feeling; I think it must have been a great relief to him. What I am saying is the fact, the naked fact, and none can deny it; and it can be corroborated by the statements in official papers. Now, the Honourable gentleman knows very well that last session a statement was made that so many rifles were distributed. What does this show? Those who keep these rifles do so not only for the sake of the safety of their own person and property, but for guarding those passes of which we are the door-keepers, these passes had always been and are and will be a source of trouble to India. I would bring to your notice, Sir, that when disturbances arise our legitimate demands are ignored and no constructive work is done. I would specially refer to the city of Dera Ismail Khan for instance; that city is in danger; I have been approaching each and every official and told him "For God's sake, do attend to it." The people are crying at the top of their voice and sending representations and deputations to the Chief Commissioner and to every available officer everywhere but up to now no practical step is taken to satisfy those people. We have been doing our work and duty as good citizens and co-operating with all officers concerned, still the Honourable gentleman is not satisfied, he can now see what funds are spent on us. I say this for this reason, that the Honourable gentleman should go there and he should see things for himself.

Dr. Nand Lal: Again a personal explanation, Sir. I have been to the frontier province and I have seen with my own eyes a number of places of importance and interest in this direction.

Khan Bahadur Abdur Rahim Khan: That is only for a day.

Dr. Nand Lal: For many days altogether, so far as I can recollect.

Khan Bahadur Abdur Rahim Khan: Well, I am glad that he has been there many days; unfortunately he has not been to that part

Dr. Nand Lal: I have been to that part too.

Khan Bahadur Abdur Rahim Khan: Take the case of my friend, Mr. Samarth; take the case of our Leader, Mr. Rangachariar. They at least have realised the difficulties of the officers there and they have supported their views. I am glad that this close border policy is adopted and settled to the entire satisfaction of the public, the forward policy if followed no constructive work will be done in India for ages and ages to come.

I will draw your attention now, Sir, to the officers working under Sir John Maffey, they are all doing their best. I cannot help mentioning one or two names because they have been doing extraordinarily good work. For instance, I have much pleasure in mentioning Major Parsons, who has just been saved from death; he got wounded while he was flying in an aeroplane, and I have just heard from him that he has got a stiff elbow for which he will have to go to England. We would be lacking in gratitude if we ignore the services and sacrifices of this gentleman. Then again I would mention the Deputy Commissioner of Bannu, Major Garstin, who has been so successful particularly against the outlaws that in the last two months I think he has beaten the record in arresting outlaws and killing them. I would also recall to memory those officers who have been doing good work on the constabulary and sacrificing their lives.

Now, Sir, when these officers are doing such good work and when the residents of that Province are doing their duty, I think it is very undesirable and very bad policy to criticise them. If we had any sense of gratitude I think we should feel the greatest sympathy with them as good citizens. What I would plead here and what I want to do for my fellow-citizens is that each fit man should be provided with a rifle. It should be the duty of Government to give us rifles; it should be the duty of Government to provide us with ammunition; it should be the duty of Government to provide us with these things and our officers with the necessary funds to deal with the border tribes and then you will see what we will do and what the saving will be. The close border policy is the only effective and least expensive policy, which must be followed and stuck to.

Mr. K. Ahmed: That is not a question arising under the Budget.

Khan Bahadur Abdur Rahim Khan: I am sorry; if you do not know these things you need not mention them. I have been watching what sacrifices have been made and what dangers have been braved by these military officers, they require no comment as they speak for themselves. Some gentlemen say that the money spent there is a waste. I was reading some time back that there was a serious complaint that the English people do not take so much interest in Indian affairs as they take in football. I think we are justified in saying that these Honourable gentlemen do not take so much interest in our North-West Frontier Province as is taken in a small boarding house by people playing ping-pong. They simply criticise it and that is all their interest. They should realise what was the condition after the third Afghan War. If you had not got an Army what would have been the condition of the frontier? If you did not have an army, you could not have established this cantonment at Razmak and in other places without great sacrifice and loss of men and money. No doubt the expenditure is there. But if you claim to have the pride of having a big country like India of course you must have an Army. I have been reading some literature some time back, somewhere a philosopher described beauty as Royalty without force but never read anywhere that there can be an Empire without forces. Perhaps my friend, Dr. Gour, wants to have an Empire without forces. I quite agree with him that there should be retrenchment in the Army. But when we see His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief gracefully giving in where he thinks that he should give in, it will not be proper on our part to oppose him and criticise him. He is without doubt an expert in these matters and he always looks at it from the Indian point of view, therefore his opinion should be respected and accepted. I must say that I like that there should be retrenchment, but it should be reasonable and essential. In that way, if you want to have a saving, do away with the army altogether. Then there will be a saving. Do not have an army and see what will happen. So I say this; we must criticise these things in a good spirit but not in a way which may not be an honour and credit to our courtesy, intelligence and judgment. With these remarks, Sir, I would appeal to Dr. Nand Lal that he should be more generous towards our province and that he should take an interest in our province with the spirit of doing us good and not with the spirit of always criticising us. With these remarks I will resume my seat and not waste the time of this House any further.

[Khan Bahadur Abdur Rahim Khan.]

Dr. Nand Lal: I shall be failing in my duty if I shall shirk the responsibility of echoing the voice of the people in general and of doing my duty conscientiously.

Mr. B. N. Misra (Orissa Division: Non-Muhammadian): Sir, I do not think really the congratulations or the curses of Honourable Members on this side affect the Honourable Members on the Treasury Benches. They are doing their duty that appertains to their office; we have to do also a certain duty as representing the people. If we go through the whole budget we find, Sir, that it is practically a budget for the maintenance of the administration. As pointed out by Dr. Gour, the whole money that you find is to be spent upon the administration and administration alone. Sir, when the tax-payer pays his hard-earned money, he expects also some benefit. What benefit does this budget provide for the tax-payer? Sir, the only benefit that the tax-payer can ever get is from the improvement of industries and agriculture or from irrigation and such other works and projects by which the people really get the benefit that they desire. I am sorry if I do not swim with the current and with other Honourable Members in talking about retrenchment, in certain directions especially. Sir, I find really that a very very poor provision has been made in the budget for what are called nation-building Departments. India is an agricultural country, and it is known that most of the Government revenue, about 81 crores, is realized from the land. But what actually are we spending for the improvement of Agriculture? I see from the Budget Demand, No. 32 I think, that a very small sum has been asked for for the improvement of this Department. For Agriculture they have asked for 7 lakhs, and for industry only Rs. 44,000. Sir, every one knows the abject condition of Indian industry. I shall ask you just to turn for a moment and look at the articles on your desk, the ink bottle, the pen, the writing paper, the blotting pad; look at all those things and you will find that they are of foreign manufacture. Can you point out anything of Indian make? Is not such a vast country entitled to provide those things the trade in which is dominated by foreign countries? I will ask the Honourable Members also just to look round at the clothes they wear. Of what make is the cloth? All is foreign, Sir. Everything is of foreign manufacture, the thread with which their clothes are stitched and the needle which has been used for the purpose, all are of foreign make; nothing is made in India. (A Voice: "What about yourself?") I am also one of you, not from outside. I wish to point out really the wretched condition of Indian industry. I think that any amount spent on improving Indian industry will not be objected to by any Member of this House and will not be spent uselessly.

As regards agriculture also we find a very small sum of money budgetted for. I speak subject to correction, but from a Year Book I have ascertained that in a country like Ireland, of which, Sir, you are well aware of the size and which also from your travels in India you know to be but a fraction of the size of India, I found that in the year 1916-17 the Board of Agriculture in Ireland demanded £76,177 for the improvement of agriculture. They provide there for all kinds of agricultural education; they conduct scientific research in agriculture, and they also provide for lectures on agriculture, horticulture, book-keeping, butter-making, and so forth. But what is being done in India on those lines to improve agricultural conditions or industry? Ireland is perhaps less than one-twentieth the size of British India, yet we only are asked for Rs. 44,000 for industry. I submit, Sir, this expenditure on Indian industry is really farcical. Perhaps some Members may say that it is a provincial subject. Sir, we all know what the condition of provincial finance is. The Ministers are everywhere crying themselves hoarse for money. We take provincial contributions; we take the income-tax; the Central Government takes in many other ways the income of the provinces. They have nothing and those Departments are starving. I submit, Sir, that more money ought to be spent on Indian industry and agriculture.

Sir, I do not wish to travel over the same grounds which other Members have covered in regard to the expenditure, especially on railways and on the military. Strictly speaking, the working expenses of railways have increased abnormally. In the budget of 1913-14 you will find that the expenses amounted to 49.26 crores; the estimate for 1922-23 amounts to 94.72 crores. I do not think that that increase is at all justifiable. Honourable Members will see that the same figures have been used, 4 and 9, but the 4 and 9 have been reversed and 94 makes a vast difference. I find from the replies given to some questions which I put that the railway staffs have been greatly increased. I do not see what the justification is for increasing the staffs by 30 or 40 per cent. on some lines, as far as I have been able to gather. I cannot understand why the staff should be increased when they are working the same length of line and the same number of stations. Probably the reason was to provide employment for war-returned men. That seems to be the only object. An increase might reasonably have been expected on account of the increased price of coal and other commodities but not on account of staff.

As regards the military, there is no doubt that we do not know whether we are living in peace or war. Certainly during the war, in a time of emergency, demands on account of military expenditure have to be met anyhow. But the war ceased in 1918; five years have since nearly passed, but still we are living in war conditions. I fail to see why. Sir, as regards Waziristan and the Mahsud country it is admitted on all hands that it is not at all a productive country; also the Honourable Mr. Bray has said that Government have no intention of occupying it. If so, why should we waste so much of our money upon it? It is described as a rugged, hilly country, but I think so far as our money is concerned, it is a bottomless pit. You can pour in any amount and there will be no result. Before so many of our soldiers were not located there, and the people of the province managed very well for a long time, the people for whom my friend, Mr. Abdur Rahim, has pleaded so vehemently. But now for three or four years the province has been kept filled with troops, because the frontier tribes are coming and making raids and committing dacoities and so forth. Are our brave soldiers to be kept there to arrest those dacoits? That is the duty of chaukidars or of the police. The duty of our soldiers is to fight. Are those people waging war against us? They are not doing anything of the kind, and why should our brave soldiers be wasted there simply to catch dacoits and raiders. I have read in the papers that even in the broad streets of Calcutta dacoities are committed, and also in the streets of London; but no soldiers are kept there to catch the dacoits. I believe that the people could very well deal with the situation themselves. It is only the Arms Act, Sir, which brings all this trouble upon those people. If they are exempted from the operation of the Arms Act they can very well defend themselves against the dacoits. What is the good of keeping soldiers if a dacoit comes after midnight and if he will shoot me and carry away my property? What will the soldiers do? Sir, really, if we are exempted from the Arms Act, if we, Indians, are provided with our own arms, I think we can defend ourselves, and, Sir, there will be no need for our soldiers to defend us and there will be no need for so much money being spent. I won't detain the House much longer. I will only say something, Sir, about the taxation. It was my unpleasant duty last year to oppose taxation vehemently, and also I think nothing has been changed, or no case has been made out, why these poor men should be taxed. Sir, of course, some people say, these poor men are smoking cigarettes, also that the rich men are spending money on motors and on petrol. But granting all that, so far as human nature goes, there must be some waste, but that is no reason why there should be this taxation of the poor. There is one thing. If such a Government as this deals in crores and crores of rupees, it will not be respectable for a Government like this to go to these poor people. Sir, if you are in need, perhaps if you are failing in business, you can approach your respectable Banker or you can approach some respectable friend to accommodate you in your difficulties, but, Sir, I ask you, if you go to your own chaulkidar or to your own mehtar and say, 'give me something,' what would be the result? I think it would be against your own sentiment, and what will those people be thinking? They would think that this Government has gone bankrupt, this Government has no prestige, they are asking us for even a pie, what is their worth? Sir, it will create a very bad impression amongst the poorer classes of the people; they will say, "Government is doing nothing; the Honourable Members are only sitting there to get us taxed." That will be the feeling no doubt. With these words, Sir, I oppose the salt tax.

[Mr. B. N. Misra.]

Khan Bahadur Sarfaraz Hussain Khan (Tirhut Division: Muhammadan):

Sir, I would not have risen to make any general remarks to-day at this late hour but for certain observations made by some Honourable Members. My Honourable friend Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas, Sir, has indirectly referred to the permanent settlement. Sir, the permanent settlement was made at the time of Lord Cornwallis; and to do away with the permanent settlement or to make any change with regard to that now would be disastrous, and suicidal. The Zamindars have hitherto been loyal to the core, and any attempt to do away with the permanent settlement would be looked upon by them as a breach of faith. Industrialists have no idea whatsoever of the services rendered by Zamindars in this country. A reference was made to these services by His Excellency the Viceroy in his speech the other day—and any attempt on the part of capitalists and industrialists to do away with the permanent settlement is to be deprecated.

Now I have to make some remarks with regard to the military budget. In my opinion it would be most unfair and ungrateful to criticise the military expenditure after the speech of His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, and after his having graciously accepted the position and reduced the expenditure, and you will find in the Retrenchment Committee's Report that they come to the conclusion and recommend that 'military expenditure after a few years be brought down to a sum not exceeding Rs. 50 crores.' Situated as India is,—and you cannot compare India to countries in Europe,—it is urgently necessary that the strength and efficiency of the Army is maintained with a view to stop aggression from beyond and to suppress insurrection within; and in these circumstances, if His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief has been able to accept the reductions, we ought to be thankful and grateful to him, and not to criticise him; and I think it would be very ungrateful on the part of the Honourable Members not knowing much about the military affairs to do so. Now, Sir, I come to the present question. The question before the House is whether we are to accept the enhanced tax on salt, or whether we should allow the deficit budget to remain unbalanced. I must say I am against any enhancement of the duty on salt on two grounds, economic as well as political. Politically, I say, Sir, the masses are now adapting themselves to the changed conditions created by the increased taxation of last year, and an increased tax on salt would I am sure spread further discontent amongst the already discontented people. Unrest amongst them is gradually subsiding and further taxation is apt to add fuel to the fire, giving as a matter of course an opportunity to the agitators to exploit the excited feelings of the masses—a contingency which in my opinion should be avoided. Now the question is, whether the Budget should be allowed to remain as it is. But at the same time I must say that I will be the last person to agree to an unbalanced budget, with an uncovered deficit of nearly 4½ crores, and I fully agree with the Honourable the Finance Member that it would be a most unsound financial policy to leave the deficit in a Budget uncovered. How is this deficit to be met? In my opinion the deficit can be met by further cuts from the Demands than have hitherto been made, as well as from an export duty on petrol and an import duty on silver; and I may also suggest that if it would be possible, something may be done in connection with stores. I have seen the Retrenchment Committee's Report, and I find in paragraph 7, page 292, of their Report, the Retrenchment Committee say—and I may add that the adoption of the Committee's recommendation would bring in a decent amount. The quotation is:

"We also desire to draw attention to the magnitude of the stocks of stores held by many departments, as shown in the following statement:"

Department.	Value of stores held on March 31st, 1922, or, nearest date.
	Rs.
Army	20,14,71,000
Marine	75,11,000
Military Works—
Mobilization stores	87,89,000
Ordinary stores	35,41,000
Telegraphs—
Mobilization stores	44,09,000
Ordinary stores	1,53,40,000
Post Office	1,77,000
Indo-European Telegraphs	11,00,000
Mathematical Instrument Office	11,72,000
Railways	34,58,00,000
Railway Institute	6,32,000
TOTAL	58,99,22,000

[Khan Bahadur Sarfaraz Hussain Khan.]

The country cannot, in our opinion, afford the lock-up of capital which this huge sum represents, apart from the consequent expenditure on the establishments engaged on the maintenance of the stores, the buildings for their accommodation and the inevitable loss from depreciation. We recommend that an early and progressive reduction be effected in these large holdings."

I cannot say, Sir, as to how much can be deducted from these stores, but taking all these things into consideration, I think that reductions can be made; and I oppose the salt tax and I suggest the other duties.

Mr. K. Ahmed (Rajshahi Division: Muhammadan Rural): Sir, as a non-official Member elected by the people of this country I shall have to offer certain criticisms on behalf of the people for the benefit of the country in general. The Honourable the Finance Member in his introductory speech has said many things, but, Sir, if I level any attack on the Honourable the Finance Member and the Government both here and in England, I hope my Honourable friend, the Leader of the House, and the Government Members will kindly pardon me. In dealing with the discussion on the subject of the Budget, Sir, I shall have to begin by saying that I heartily congratulate the Honourable Sir Basil Blackett, the Finance Member, who has been able within the short compass of time to get by heart the full 15 pages of the Gazette of India, dated 1st March, 1923, and I hope he must have digested them in full and realised that he is the inheritor of the fruits of the hard labour of the Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey. Sir, among all the items of the coming Budget, the military expenditure has again taken the major portion of the whole revenue of the country. The Honourable the Finance Member at the outset expressed the congratulation for securing the appointment of the so-called strong and able Retrenchment Committee presided over by Lord Inchcape who has been described as a fore-runner in the whole show in the matter of retrenchment. On the morning of the 1st March, before the commencement of the business of this House, I was taken in confidence by some of my distinguished colleagues to consider whether it would have been desirable or advisable at that stage, Sir, to move for an adjournment of the introduction of the Budget. The country is aware, Sir, that the Members of the Inchcape Committee were nominated by the Government, neither on the principles of representative character, nor was this House, which is the Parliament of the country, taken into confidence by the Government in the matter of making nominations. I daresay, Sir, that this Assembly is well aware that the number of interpellations and the volley of supplementary questions on my starred questions, have been put and fired at, at the last Session at Simla, but the Government was too slow to move in the matter, and the voice of the people of this country remained a voice in the wilderness. The voluminous report of the Retrenchment Committee has hardly done any good so far as this Budget is concerned. I take this opportunity to congratulate one of the most able and energetic Members of the Committee, the Honourable Mr. Purshotamdas Thakurdas, who has taken great pains in writing supplementary notes on various subjects.

(Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar at this stage took the Chair.)

Now, with regard to the military expenditure which has made this country insolvent, the less I talk of the present Government the better, because the country understands and the Government, I believe, realises in full, that there is no other country which has a worse top-heavy administration than India, owing to its extraordinary, all-absorbing, drastic and blood-sucking military expenditure, it will remain a dark spot in the history of the British Administration of India. One of my Honourable friends, a nominated Member of the Assembly, had said a few days ago—I think it was my Honourable friend the Khan Bahadur of the North-West Frontier Province, who is not in the Assembly now—that India is a God-forsaken country; that is why the people are poor and helpless. But, Sir, I find India cannot be without a God; moreover, the people are religious and devoted to the Gods and Goddesses. The Brussels International Economic Conference, about which my Honourable friend, Dr. Gour, has also made a reference, have also passed a Resolution recommending all nations not to spend more than 20 per cent. of their revenue on the military expenditure. Even in England, Sir, the military expenditure comes to about 16 per cent. and the Dominions and Canada spend much less. Our expenditure comes to about 60 per cent. (A Voice: 'Forty per cent.') Make it 58 per cent. at the utmost, Sir. It is surprising, Sir, that out of the total expenditure in India only 4 per cent. is spent on education and only $\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. on sanitation. The Assembly will be horrified to hear that in Bengal there have been more deaths in some districts than births for want of sanitation. After 150 years of British rule the people of India have remained backward for want of education and thousands are dying of starvation every day.

Sir, the Honourable Mr. Denys Bray, the Foreign Secretary, in his impressive speech, attracted the attention of the Honourable Members of the Assembly by the remark that in Waziristan this reckless and would-be insolvent Government has already spent twenty crores of rupees. We have not got a clearly defined policy in respect to Waziristan which has been the sinkpot of the Indian revenue. The Foreign Secretary, while speaking the other day, said that "human nature cannot tolerate a vacuum" when he was describing the Frontier situation by the Durand line which is situated between Afghanistan and British India—not India but British India. Sir, there have been certain comments over this phrase, because it was denied by the Honourable the Foreign Secretary. My Honourable friend, Mr. Ses'agiri Ayyar, quite rightly pointed it out and those were the ipsissima verba of my Honourable friend, Dr. Gour, who also commented on them. This reminds me of a story Sir, where a child was crying for the moon in the lap of its mother not realising the immense 'vacuum' that is left between the earth and the moon. Lord Inchcape who has achieved a brilliant success amongst the interested Europeans in India in the sphere of commerce and industry and who has now become the prize-boy of the Government of India has gone to Waziristan, I think on the night before last after the Retrenchment Committee's Report was placed before us, to measure the same 'vacuum.' There started the introduction of the Budget on the 1st of March. May we not say, Sir, that there is thus seen a similar 'vacuum' in the Retrenchment Committee's report as well? Let us accept the close border policy and hold our Frontier secure leaving the tribal country alone. It is a potent fact, Sir, that the services of our Army have been utilised abroad in South Africa and France in the past. I do not think, Sir, that the elected Members of the Assembly will approve of the action. Our poor people, the payers of the revenue, cannot bear the burden of such military expenditure any longer. The sooner the non-votable system is wiped out from the budget the better will it be for the country and the Government. Sir, doubling the tax on salt is a drastic measure adopted by the Government and it will be better if this most outrageous habit of recommending every year a salt tax be changed. About 97 per cent. of our population is poor and this measure will take the taste from the food of our people and thereby lead to manifold evils such as malaria, cholera, kala azar, etc., etc. Salt is also a food of the animals that plough the land and it is also used as manure, and by increasing the salt tax, the growth and fertility of our soil will be affected and diminished. I am surprised that the Finance Member, without appreciating the real situation, has taken a leap in the dark by introducing this measure which will hurt and finally kill the major portion of our population. I am sure he will realise nothing from them after they are dead and gone. The present system of taxation will bring the wreck and ruination of the country. He will make the country not only insolvent, but she will be so much bankrupt that the Honourable the Finance Member will not be able to raise any loan from abroad on the payment of any higher rates of interest. The charm of the Government of India Act will no more be able to enforce any payment of high rates of taxes saying that the military expenditure is non-votable. Great chaos and darkness will await the country and the crushing military expenditure will be responsible for it. The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett has referred to our pulling together with the hope of quickly getting the boat out of the vicious circle which is threatening to drag India down on the rock of insolvency, but Sir, as I have pointed out, shall we join the Honourable Finance Member in pulling together the dead bodies and carcasses of our people to take them to the burial ground for their cremation or is there still a ray of hope in the mind of the Finance Member that . . .

[Mr. K. Ahmed.]

Mr. Chairman: Will the Honourable Member bring his remarks to a close?

Mr. K. Ahmed: . . . that he will be able to realise large sums of money to be paid out of the Indian revenue on the non-votable absurd system. With these few words, Sir, I protest very strongly against the military expenditure and the enhancement of taxes on salt. I support, Sir, the budget as far as Posts and Telegraphs are concerned because, Sir, they are the messengers of the poor people of this country and we cannot get on without their help, though my Honourable friend, Dr. Gour, has opposed it very vehemently. I suppose the taxes on petrol . . .

Mr. Chairman: The Honourable Member must bring his remarks to a close.

Mr. K. Ahmed: Sir, only a second. Many Honourable Members of this House have taken part in supporting a proposal to levy a tax on the export of petrol to foreign countries. I fully agree as it is an extraordinary thing that the petrol raised in this country is exported to foreign countries and sold there much cheaper than we get it here in this country . . .

Mr. Chairman: The Honourable Member must stop there.

Mr. N. M. Joshi (Nominated: Labour Interests): Sir, at this late stage I shall not take the time of the House at great length. I shall content myself by making a few brief remarks on some of the points of this hope-inspiring budget. Sir, in spite of the explanation given by my Honourable friend, Mr. Ayyar, I am not quite convinced that there is no room for retrenchment in this budget. The Retrenchment Committee have proposed certain figures for retrenchment for the year 1923-24. The Government Members have interviewed the Retrenchment Committee and they have certainly explained to them in which items retrenchment was not possible this year, and after receiving this explanation of the Government Members, the Retrenchment Committee have recommended that in the civil estimates there should be a reduction of 9 crores of rupees. Government have proposed only a reduction of 6½ crores, so there is still a margin of 2½ crores. Mr. Ayyar asks for the crores which some Members said were hidden in the budget. I will show him some of them. Sir, there are about a dozen departments of the Government of India which altogether show an increased expenditure of about 1 crore and 40 lakhs, whereas in these very departments the Retrenchment Committee ask for a retrenchment of 1,20 lakhs. My Honourable friend, Mr. Ayyar, will say, yes the Government of India is going to make a retrenchment. They may make a retrenchment of 1,40 lakhs and bring down expenditure to the normal level, but that is not retrenchment. You only keep the expenditure of these departments at the level at which it stood last year. Therefore at least 1,40 lakhs are hidden in the figures which Government have presented to this House. Then Sir, if the Government consider that there are some items suggested by the Retrenchment Committee which they cannot accept, so every one of us has got some fault to find with the Retrenchment Committee. I myself do not approve of the recommendation of the Retrenchment Committee recommending the abolition of the Labour Bureau and also the alteration of the leave rules of the workers of the Government Printing Presses. But we all agree on one point, that there should be a total retrenchment of 19½ crores of rupees. Let Government also agree with that proposal; let them show that they have made a retrenchment of that total recommended by the Committee and then the House will be satisfied, but it is necessary for them to satisfy the House on this point.

Then my Honourable friend, Mr. Ayyar, again persisted that the annuities should not be charged to capital and he said the annuities are a sinking fund. But my Honourable friend ought to know that there is a separate item for sinking fund in the railway accounts. Why should there be two items for sinking fund in the railway accounts? Moreover, the House must see that there is a great danger in wiping out capital as is being done by charging the annuities to the revenue. If you wipe out capital, there will be the incentive for the railway management to keep down working expenses. It is not therefore a wise policy to wipe out capital of railways, especially so as the Government is thinking of separating railway accounts from those of general revenues. The railway expenses have grown tremendously, as will be seen clearly from the Retrenchment Committee's Report. Sir, talking of railways, I want to protest against the action of Government in not accepting my suggestion that the establishment roll of the railways should be supplied to the Members of this Assembly. I asked the Government whether they would supply the establishment rolls. They said no; but on what ground? On the ground that the printing of the establishment roll will cost a good deal of money. I was told on the same occasion that Government prints the establishment roll for the use of the office. If they print the establishment roll for the use of the office, the printing of an additional 100 or 200 copies will not cost more than Rs. 100 or Rs. 200. I therefore strongly protest against the action of the Railway Board in not supplying the establishment rolls to the Members of this Assembly. Without having sufficient details we cannot really criticise the railway budget at all.

[Mr. N. M. Joshi.]

Then, Sir, I want to make one additional remark. The Government of India have placed before us certain information about the steps they have taken to improve the lot of the third class railway passengers, but I am not satisfied with the scrappy information which they have given in their memorandum. We want a clear statement from the Government of India as to what they have done to improve the condition of third class railway passengers and we want them to compare the amounts spent on improving the second class and first class railway facilities with the amounts spent on improving the railway facilities for third class railway passengers as well the revenue obtained from these classes of passengers.

Then, Sir, there is still lurking in the budget a tendency which we have been seeing on the part of the Government of India to go on increasing their own expenditure. I have already explained how expenditure is still increasing in certain departments and especially so in the Political Department. Sir, in spite of the eloquent speech of my Honourable friend, Mr. Bray, I am not satisfied that the expenditure on the Political Department should have gone up by 38 lakhs, whereas the Retrenchment Committee has asked for a retrenchment of 45 lakhs.

Sir, I shall only say one word as regards the new taxation, and it is this that if Government consider that the poor people in his country are not sufficiently taxed, let them make an inquiry as my Honourable friend, Mr. Ginwala, has suggested to us. If, after inquiry, it is found that the poor people in this country are not sufficiently taxed, let them be taxed, but let not Government shirk the inquiry. Let them see too what is the incidence of taxation on the poor people and what is that incidence of taxation on the rich people. Sir, I was greatly surprised at the remarks which two of my English friends in this House made about the taxation of imported foodstuffs. While these two English gentlemen oppose the taxes on imported foodstuffs, they have supported the salt tax. They oppose the first tax on the ground that it was a tax on food. Do they not know that salt is an article of food? (A Voice: "Yes.") Why do they support the salt tax then? I was very sorry that these two gentlemen should have shown a racial bias in this matter. With these words, I resume my seat.

Haji Wajihuddin (Cities of the United Provinces: Muhammadan Urban): Sir, nothing but a deep sense of duty compels me on this occasion to stand up and express my opinion on the budget and the new taxation, proposed by my friend, the Honourable Finance Member. It has been a very tedious tale to hear of deficits every year, and we are, of course, sick of it. However, it is our fate, and we must hear it with due resignation. But how to satisfy the people, who are already overburdened with multifarious taxations, and consequently uneasy and dissatisfied, is to be weighed well before a further step is taken to impose a fresh one. India is threatened with insolvency and loss of trust in the eyes of the world, and in order to avoid the appalling humiliations and foreboding disaster, we are told, the new taxation is inevitable, and that new taxation can take no other form than that of an increased duty on salt. I may be pardoned if I remark that my Honourable friend, while referring to the old records of the last two years has overlooked the study of the opinion almost unanimously held by this House, regarding the self-same question of salt taxation. Was not the same proposal made last year? Are the conditions changed since then? Are we ourselves changed in any way? Why! What also should then be expected from us this time? Whatever may be the calamity to be faced, we must not forget our duty. Loyal to the Crown, as we are, we cannot be less faithful to our own motherland. The aim of every good Government is to seek the welfare of the people governed by it, and it is our duty to guide it to the right path, when it is going astray. We know that the deficit must be met somehow. We realise the necessity of finding means to achieve the end. But we likewise know that there are a hundred and one ways other than to cut the throats of the poor people. Every one of us knows that the proposed taxations will solely fall on the heads of the poor people. For it is they who consume salt mostly. Well-to-do people may indulge in luxuries but the suffering multitude who can hardly earn three annas a day have as their only luxury salt. Salt is the only savoury in their food. If the Government deprives them of this luxury even, it does not favourably acquit itself in the eyes of the people, whose destinies are given in its hands.

Now the question is, if this new tax is to be imposed upon the poor man's luxury, will it serve the purpose of its imposition? I think not. In the days of Lord Curzon this tax was raised to Rs. 2-8 as now proposed, and people began to refrain from consuming salt and its total consumption was reduced to a considerable limit. Will not the same result follow now? Will not then the reduction in the amount of consumption tell upon the income and will not then it become unnecessary to keep it any longer? What will it bring? Nothing but discontent and suspicion. Agitation will again find a foothold in the country and the peace and tranquillity of the people will be disturbed once again. It will be another great shock to the foundations of the Reformed Scheme at a time when the convulsions produced by the speeches of the ex-Premier and the present Secretary of State for India have hardly subsided, and also non-co-operation is not dead but is thinking of joining its forces to wreck the Reformed Councils.

If deficits are to be met with by taxation, let it be imposed upon those who can pay it. Let it fall upon the luxuries of the rich rather than upon the direct necessities of the poor. Let the suffering multitudes be left undisturbed. If taxes are to be levied, let them have some moral force behind them. Let them be supported by some noble considerations other than mere money making. If taxes on liquors and other intoxicants are levied, will they not serve the purpose? Will they not fall on those who can pay? Will they not have the hearty thanks and the support of the nation along with the blessings of Almighty God?

If we raise a tariff wall against the foreign manufactured goods, will it not bring a big income as well as help the Home industries? So, why not do that and why tread under foot the poor who are already below the poverty margin in all the civilized countries of the world and who can afford no other seasoning to their meals other than this devoted salt?

6 P.M. For a long time, salt has been an eyesore to the Government but it is beyond comprehension how it came to be so. Time after time the Government have raised this particular tax and it was found again and again that they had to retrace their steps. Perhaps they had a notion that this tax can be easily collected, falls on all, and so is lightly felt. But alas, past experience tells a different tale. It has proved beyond any doubt that it falls on one class, is keenly felt throughout the country and is strongly opposed by the Press, on the Platform, and in the Councils.

Mr. B. Venkatapatiraju (Ganjam cum Vizagapatam: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I rise to congratulate the Honourable the Finance Minister not for his masterly and lucid exposition of the budget, not for his grasp of principles, not for his mastery of details but because he has the sturdy independence to call a spade a spade. He has stated, Sir, for the first time in the face of the Government that their progress in the administration of this country during all these years has not been moral or material progress of the land but a rake's progress. When some three years ago I stated that the several departments of the Government of India were suffering from squander-mania, the then Finance Minister, Sir Malcolm Hailey, said "No, every Department is doing its best to economise their expenditure." But fortunately things have happened differently. We have Lord Inchcape's Committee which has now presented its report. Any knowing man who reads that report between the lines cannot help criticising the Government of India for their maladministration of all these years. The figures which they give show the way in which public money, the money of the poor man, has been wasted year in, year out, by the Government who have always used plausible language but without saying anything definite except that the time was not yet come when they could reduce the expenditure. Now, Sir, both the Government of India, and I am grateful to acknowledge, His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief have admitted that they agree with these conclusions to reduce expenditure. Now, I would like to ask, Sir, why there is this necessity to reduce expenditure in the year 1923-1924 which our friends on the Treasury Bench ignored last year when there was a deficit of 27 crores? If anything, the necessity was greater in the previous year. Was there never any necessity from the year 1917-1918 until now? They have failed to discharge their duty in reducing their expenditure and thus saving the poor. Why should they have taxed the country nearly fifty crores extra which they should repent of having done?

[Mr. B. Venkatapatiraju.]

Now, Sir, it is not the fault of the Assembly, it is the fault of the Government, if we have failed to balance the Budget. The new Finance Minister, with all his ability and eloquence wanted us to believe that the world would come to an end if we do not cover the balance. May I respectfully tell him, here we have the Commander-in-Chief who has generally accepted the recommendations of the Inchcape Committee, in spite of—I say it with all due respect to Mr. V. V. Iyer who is an authority on accounts,—that he is juggling with words, when he stated that the Government has practically given effect to the recommendations in the Budget. Why should not the Finance Minister prepare the Budget in accordance to the recommendations of Lord Inchcape Committee to avoid all deficit. The Honourable Mr. Burdon has admitted that 14,000 people in the fighting services recommended by the Inchcape Committee for reduction was not given effect to in the Budget, and the Commander-in-Chief stated that he agreed to that proposal. Let alone the removal of the units of cavalry and artillery, with reference to the fighting strength, there was a recommendation for 14,000 people to be reduced. What would be the cost of reducing 14,000 people, and the followers and others? It would have amounted to more than 4 crores and odd. Would not that have been enough to cover the deficit? It is true the Finance Minister has told us they are still corresponding with the Secretary of State on the subject. Then why should we now provide for it in covering this deficit. Let them press it on the Secretary of State and say we cannot get on here. The one excuse the Secretary of State has hitherto had all along is that the man on the spot, the Commander-in-Chief who is responsible for the safety of the country, does not agree to it. Now

His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief has stated on the floor of this House that he has agreed to the proposal. Where is the difficulty now? Why should the Secretary of State not respect the word of the man on the spot. If the Commander-in-Chief now thinks that it is safe to reduce the strength and take the risk then the saving effected thereby may be used in the direction of covering this paltry 4½ crores—paltry when compared to the deficits we have had to face in past years. May I invite the attention of the Finance Minister with his thorough mastery of all these things, to what we have done decade after decade in the matter of expenditure? Several of my friends here have stated the facts with reference to the last decade and I may tell him, though perhaps he is already aware, that we have increased our expenditure in a manner startling and quite in keeping with the policy adopted in the previous years. In the decades to which I refer we spent Crores.

In the year 1883-84	41.66
" " 1893-94	51.87
" " 1903-04	73
" " 1913-14	82.80
" " 1923-24	131

And how have we increased the military expenditure during the said five decades that I have mentioned. From 18 to 20 crores and then it jumped to 26, and then 31 and now 62 crores; and that is the figure he suggests we should accept. Now my suggestion is that as has been pointed out by Dr. Gour we have exceeded very much more than 20 per cent. of the whole revenue of India. Is it not then the duty of the Finance Minister to safeguard our interests and to see that under no circumstances we spend more than what is absolutely necessary. Does he not know that every Province is groaning under its burden and every Provincial Budget shows a deficit. The Finance Minister spoke as if he doubted that the deficits in the Provinces may not be real, and he stated that some Member reported to him that the deficits were kept up while they could easily cover their deficit. The same plea may be adopted in our case, and we may also doubt whether the Finance Minister could not cover up the deficit if he had a mind. I shall only refer him to certain figures in other parts of the Budget. You find various recommendations made by the Inchcape Committee were not given effect to in the estimates. I have referred to the reduction on the military estimates, and I may mention, Sir, with reference to the Railways' working expenses, what was recommended by the Inchcape Committee was not taken in the Budget but a very much higher figure was given. I might also mention, Sir, that they have not only mentioned the reduction in the strength of the fighting force, but they have also suggested that 20 per cent. should be reduced from the war strength in order to bring it to peace strength. That was not done. We are still waiting for the reduction in the cavalry and other regiments; we have got an assurance that the capitulation rate could very well be reduced. If that could be reduced, was it not the duty of the Secretary of State, who wanted that we should know our own duty, that he should have recovered this amount not only now, but long before, instead of foregoing income which he ought to have realised on that account? Unfortunately, we have discussed the matter of State and company management of railways, and decided State management not because we were enamoured of State management, but because we found that Company management was worse and therefore we preferred bad to worse. I would ask the Finance Member to find out what was the working expense of the railways when the Railway Board was established. Till then our working expenses were limited to 46 or 48 per cent. of gross receipts during the years from 1890 to 1905, then when we got the Railway Board the expenses went up in 1906 to 50 per cent., in 1907 to 57 per cent., in 1908 to 62 per cent., in 1910 to 55 per cent. and in 1911 to 56 per cent. and in 1913-14 to 51.79 per cent. and in 1921-22 to 76.22 per cent. Since these guardians were appointed and expected to watch our interests we find the expenses growing. Perhaps there may be some reason or other and it may be said "Oh, circumstances were beyond our control," but all the same it does not bring any satisfaction to the poor tax-payer. When it was stated that the Railways were being treated as a commercial concern, they ought to remember how much of the poor man's money was invested; we have been spending without acknowledgment 300 crores from the revenues of this country besides the money borrowed. That was not taken account of. I would also invite your attention, Sir, to the growth in this compensation for thefts committed in the railways. Do you know how far it has grown? In 1916 it was 18 lakhs, but in 1921-22 it was 116 lakhs. Are we to tolerate that these thefts should be committed and we should be made to pay 116 lakhs compensation? Is this the good management under the company? Now, whatever may be the contractual relations it looks odd that the person who is the major partner who has paid 9/10th of the capital has to suffer loss of 926 lakhs whereas the surplus profits are paid to the companies to the extent of 106 crores; at a time when this amount was not sufficient to pay the interest on the capital the surplus profits are being paid. They say that we entered into the contracts and we have to fulfil them. The Indian would never say not to do that; he is ready to fulfil all his contracts, but he says "Who are those persons who entered into such one-sided bargains whereby we have to lose crores and the other persons take huge profits?" That, Sir, is what is called Company management.

[Mr. B. Venkatapatiraju.]

It is urged in this House that when salt tax was discussed the poor man was not at all taxed. Even Sir Malcolm Hailey last time committed that mistake when he said that the poor man did not contribute towards the central revenues besides salt tax. He is no doubt a great authority, but may I remind him of an equally great authority, Sir Edward Law who stated that out of the whole customs duty 25 per cent. was paid by the poor man and not by the rich millionaires. If our leader, Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar, had had time he would have stated that it is the unanimous opinion of the House that the salt tax is an oppressive tax and will never be tolerated if we have any power to vote for it; and so far as we have the power we shall certainly reject it; and now it is for the Finance Minister to consider how best to retrench or provide otherwise.

A tax on petrol has been suggested, against which Mr. Innes has given certain reasons. It is for you to judge whether those reasons should stand in the way of preventing the imposition of export duty on petrol which will bring in about 75 lakhs of rupees. There are other things also to be considered. But is it not worth while for the House to consider, as we have adopted a policy of protection for our country, should we not prevent $\frac{1}{2}$ or nearly $\frac{1}{3}$ rd of the salt that is imported into the country by imposing some import duty to help the salt industry? Is it impossible for such a vast country like India to produce sufficient salt to provide for the 815 millions of her people? That aspect might perhaps be taken into consideration, because the Government has got the power of controlling the price. They could as well adopt that import duty without increasing the price of the salt and without restricting the production in India and preventing the minor salt owners to bring in large grounds under salt pans; it might also help the Governments in various provinces to bring in vast lands under cultivation so that it could be done to alleviate the poor people and prevent the unnecessary introduction of foreign salt, because it is imported without any cost; it is loaded as ballast in these ships and they are dumped on our shores and we are unable to compete with it because it comes in without any extra duty. I do not think any other country would have tolerated such an injustice of allowing foreign salt which does not pay any excess duty to come into our land whereas the production of salt in the country was restricted directly or indirectly. I mention one more point, Sir. If an import duty on salt is levied and necessary steps taken not to increase the prices here we would get 159 lakhs because there will be . . .

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: I rise to a point of order. The Honourable Member has talked for the last five minutes about imposing an import duty on salt as if it were a new recommendation. There is an import duty on salt and it is proposed to increase it.

Mr. B. Venkatapatiraju: Perhaps the Finance Minister did not understand me. I know perfectly well when I am talking of the salt duty on imported salt to be increased that it is being imposed on imported salt; I am perfectly cognisant of that fact. What I say is "Do not tax what is manufactured in my country to an equal extent with imported salt but tax it in such a manner, not as a measure of providing revenue for the Finance Member, but as a protection to improve the manufacture of salt in this country, so that it would suffice and India need not depend upon foreign imported salt." Now if we refer to . . .

Mr. President: I must tell the Honourable Member that he has exceeded his time.

Mr. B. Venkatapatiraju: Just a minute, Sir; we can realise on jute, if we impose 5 per cent., about 2 crores; on motor spirit we can raise about 75 lakhs and on imported salt 150 lakhs; all this together will cover the deficit; but I might say that it is not the duty of the House to cover the deficit; it is the duty of the Finance Member to reduce the expenditure; and if he had accepted the proposals of the Income Committee he could have done it.

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: Sir, before I proceed to deal with the debate as a whole I think it is necessary that I should make a few remarks about the last speech. We have tried very hard to explain to the House that the estimates before the House are based on the assumption that the Retrenchment Committee's recommendations are accepted in full and put into force at the earliest possible date. The idea persists that there are extra crores up our sleeve which we can produce by putting these recommendations into force at an earlier date, or that it is only necessary to antedate them in order to get more out of them. But, of course, that is an impossibility. The suggestion that the budget deficit can be balanced by making use of the recommendations of the Retrenchment Committee to a greater extent than Government has done is an impossibility. The deficit is there after making full use of those retrenchments and making allowance only for the fact that it is impossible for us to antedate them or to bring them into force to-day. Perhaps it would be useful if I read one or two remarks made by the Retrenchment Committee themselves on this question of the date on which the recommendations should come into force. On the military services, page 58, they say:

[Sir Basil Blackett.]

"If our recommendations are accepted, and, if they could all be brought into effect at once, the military budget for 1923-24 could be reduced to Rs. 57½ crores, but we recognise that it will take some time for the whole of these savings to materialise. The Finance Department in framing their estimates will require to make an allowance for terminal charges and for the expenditure which must necessarily be incurred during the period required to give full effect to the changes which we recommend. We are not in possession of the data necessary for framing such an estimate."

We have framed such an estimate and it is on that basis that we presented the military budget of 62 crores. The same applies in regard to the civil expenditure. At the end of their report the Inchcape Committee say:

"We recognise that it will not be possible to secure in the ensuing year the complete reductions proposed, as under the rules notice must be given to surplus establishments, large reorganisations cannot be effected immediately, and large terminal payments will be necessary in some cases. It will also be necessary to make provision for increments to establishments on time-scale salaries. We recognise, also, as stated in paragraph 3 of our general conclusions on the Military Services

(which I have just read)

"..... that some of the reductions proposed represent reductions in stocks of stores and are therefore non-recurring. Even allowing for those factors, however, we believe that our recommendations, if carried out, will go far towards solving the problem of restoring India's finances to a secure basis."

The effect of the recommendations of the Retrenchment Committee, Sir, has been estimated as far as possible by the Government, so far as their effect on the year 1923-24 is concerned, and it is on that basis that we have arrived at the estimates for 1923-24, which show as against the expected revenue a deficit of 4.26 crores. Our problem still remains, how to cover that deficit. The speeches, of which there have been 40, I have listened to in the course of the last two days have all been very interesting and instructive. I have to thank, I think, every Member for a very kind personal reference to myself. Let me at this stage also incidentally make good an omission which has been remarked on in my speech last Thursday. It was, Sir, far from my thought to deny to this House its full share of the credit of securing the appointment of the Retrenchment Committee. If I did not make a specific reference to that in my speech, I must make the same excuse as was made by my friend, Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar, for cutting short his compliments, there was not time; I did not want to spend too much time on other than essential matter. All the speeches have been interesting too from the point of view that almost without exception—and this is a matter upon which I congratulate the House and myself—almost without exception it has been recognised that this deficit cannot be left uncovered. It is an unpleasant necessity which we have to face. Mr. Shahani who opened the discussion recognised that we could not leave the deficit uncovered; Mr. Spence who followed joined in the appeal to cover the deficit. Right through every speech I think it was recognised that the deficit must be covered and more than one Member appealed to me to examine, in consultation with the House, the possibility of avoiding the salt tax, and the whole of our discussions really come back to that—how we can cover the deficit and avoid the salt tax. As I have already explained, try as hard as we will, we are honestly convinced that there is no possibility of a further reduction in expenditure in 1923-24. I am not prepared to say that all possible reductions for all time have been made, but for 1923-24, I think the House should take it from me that there is going to be very great difficulty in carrying into effect the reductions which we have taken the responsibility of including in the budget figures. There is no possibility in 1923-24 of reducing our estimates of expenditure below the figures we have taken. Again and again in their deep anxiety to avoid the deficit Members have harked back, as the last speaker did, to hopeful expectations that something more may be got out of the Retrenchment Committee's proposals. But they are only doing what the Government of India had done before. I think if you were to wander round the various Departments to-day and ask them what had happened to some favourite project, they would all repeat a couplet which we knew as children, that is, those of us brought up in England:

"The ship went down with a shiver and a shock
'Fore God it is the Inchcape Rock."

I do not think there is any hope of further reductions; they have all gone down; all the extravagances and a great many desirable items have gone down on the Inchcape rock. I ventured to prophesy in my speech last week that all the Members would manage to disagree with me on some point or another, and I think I have been justified. Quite apart from the salt duty, individual retrenchments suggested have been criticised. The most common form which that criticism took, though not the only one, was a criticism that the so-called nation-building departments had suffered most. Now, I do not think that that is really a fair criticism. Under the federal system under which India works to-day, Education, Public Health, Irrigation as well as Land Revenue are provincial subjects. All that the Inchcape Committee has done in regard to these subjects is in one or two cases to recommend a certain amount of reduction in the provision made in the Central Government's estimates, and their justification for doing that is nearly always something in this form. At page 120, the Committee say: "In view of the essential modification of the position of the Central Government vis-à-vis the provinces under the Reforms Scheme in respect of education and medical administration, which are now transferred subjects, over which the Government of India exercise a very limited control, we do not consider that there is any justification for the retention of the Educational Commissioner." Indeed any economies that are suggested by the Retrenchment Committee in that direction are small ones, and they scarcely touch the problem of the nation-building expenditure to which reference has been made. I do not think therefore that it is quite fair to make that sort of criticism of the Retrenchment Committee. I would like to add just one other observation. We have not yet effected those reductions. Part of the actual giving of effect to these reductions will take place next week when we are discussing the Demand Grants. Now I refer again to my speech last week; I said that I never heard of any retrenchment except one which was universally popular. I think that it is necessary when we come to that to keep our minds on the Budget as a whole and realize that if one of us dislikes one particular bit of retrenchment very much, another Member probably regards another bit of retrenchment as equally wicked, and we have got to take the good with the bad; in order to get the reductions which are essential, some of us have got to accept reductions which rather go to our heart. It is impossible to characterize all reductions as mere cutting down of expenditure; some of them are undoubtedly the cutting down of what may be described as desirable expenditure. But for the time being the position is that we cannot afford it; and I do hope that when we come to the actual discussion of the reductions, we shall keep the broad fact that we cannot afford expenditure, in our minds rather than the more obvious factor in dealing with detail that it is a very desirable bit of expenditure.

[Sir Basil Blackett.]

There was a very famous cartoon during the war which pictured a soldier who afterwards came to be known as old Bill standing in a shell hole with two others—there were shells falling all around him, and he was looking particularly uncomfortable, and he was saying, 'if you know of a better hole than this, then take me to it.' Now that is the position of the Government in regard to this question of the salt tax. If any of you know a better hole than this, take me to it. But I have listened with great interest to the suggestions that have been made from one quarter or another. Bombay wants an export tax on jute—it has even been suggested by some non-Bombay Member, that we should increase the cotton excise duty. (A Voice: "Not seriously.") One very interesting suggestion was entirely new to me; I think that I may honestly say that it was not the only one that was new to me; the Government of India spent a great deal of time in reaching the unfortunate conclusion that it knew no better hole than this. It was a suggestion made by Sir Gordon Fraser; he only partly escaped the hole because he was going to retain a portion of the salt tax, the rest he was going to cover by an increase of half an anna in the rupee in the revenue from customs and income-tax. That was a novel suggestion, and the Government will be very ready to examine it, but it has obvious difficulties on the face of it. I should not care to be the Customs Collector who was collecting 1/32nd additional on each invoice that he had to make out; it is a very awkward fraction to work, to say the least of it, but it is a suggestion that I should like to have the opportunity of following up a little further. Various other taxes have been suggested which we had already very carefully considered. Mr. Innes has already explained the unfruitful and dangerous character of an export duty on petrol. The tax on silver is a hardy annual. It would bring in something like a crore or a little more; therefore it would not itself cover any large portion of the deficit. But it is a tax to which there are many objections, and I am not sure that the House would desire me to repeat what has been said almost annually as to the theoretical and practical objections to that tax. But it is obviously not anything more than a partial solution, nor do I think it is a desirable solution. The only point I think in which it differs from nearly all the other suggestions of new taxes that have been made is this, that it is the only one which does not cost the poor man more than the salt tax. Now the Government of India when it came to suggesting the salt tax, and I must speak for myself, the new Finance Member was not unaware of the history of this salt duty—they did not propose it lightly; they did not propose it for the fun of proposing it, as was suggested by somebody. They proposed it because it was the expedient which seemed to them to be the one which would do the least damage to the country and would most easily cover the deficit. Now people have been fairly frank in speaking about it. I do not think anybody, beyond saying that it was a tax on the poor man, has spent very much time in showing its economic ill effects. A great many people have referred to the fact that it is politically objectionable; it is really the sentiment here rather than a fact that has to be combated. I do not deny that it is a very difficult position; but, after all, that is the position. It is a tax which would cost,—what is it, 3 annas a year per head? It cannot be claimed by anybody who just repeats that to himself that it is going seriously to upset the position of even the poorest. Three annas per head per year. (A Voice: "5½ annas.")

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas: 15 annas for a family.

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: That is, less than a rupee per family per annum. I venture to say that the suggestion for an increased customs duty on cotton or an increased excise duty on cotton, both of which have been made and neither of which would in themselves bring in such a large revenue as salt, would cost the poorest man more per head than salt. The last speaker mentioned that 25 per cent. of the customs duties are paid by the poor man. It is not for the fun of suggesting a tax which everybody knew in advance would be a very difficult one that this tax has been suggested, but because Government is honestly convinced that from the economic point of view it is the tax which is the least objectionable—all taxes are objectionable taxes—to India economically, socially and in every respect, and that it is nothing but the atmosphere of sentiment, and I may add the real political difficulty in which Members of this House will find themselves that causes the objection which has been nearly unanimously expressed in this House to the salt tax. I felt bound to make that defence of the salt tax, and I do not think that I have said anything that Honourable Members will take objection to. But we are still faced with the position,—if we don't have the salt tax, what other tax can we have? The Government of India's suggestion was, and is, that we should increase the salt tax. We are prepared, as we have been asked to do by more than one Member of the House, to examine in consultation with the House any other expedient that really is available for getting rid of the deficit, but we did and we do put forward as the least objectionable method of raising taxation to cover the deficit, the proposed increase in the salt tax. One other means of covering the deficit has been put forward and that is that we should somehow or other so alter our accounts that either the deficit disappears or is reduced to small proportions. Mr. Samarth misquoted or at any rate misinterpreted Bastable in trying to prove that the Budget as it stands contains items which should not be charged against the annual revenue; and he went further even than that. He took such items as expenditure on Military Works, the greater part of which represents, I believe, repairs (Mr. N. M. Samarth: "No; I did not say that. My amount does not include that.") I apologise then if he did not take that figure; it seemed to me that he did. Now, I do hope that the House will not be led away into by-paths in which deficits will suddenly reappear as surpluses. It is so easy to manipulate accounts. But what is the position at the end of the year supposing you say that this or that building is a capital expenditure, this or that expenditure on irrigation which will not yield any revenue,—most of which indeed involves expenditure in the future years? Once you have got a building, you have got to maintain and repair it. You say it is a capital charge and therefore you are not going to charge it to Revenue. It is not part of the revenue of the year. Supposing 4 crores are spent in that way in the year; at the end of the year your unproductive debt is 4 crores higher, you have got to find interest. You have indeed got an additional asset which may possibly be a costly one. There is the cost of keeping it up. This particular question of military works being charged to Capital formed the subject of a long controversy in England in the Nineties up to about 1906, and so far as England is concerned, it was definitely decided that that should be stopped. In 1906, when Mr. Asquith became the Chancellor of the Exchequer his first action was to insist that this method of pretending that your expenditure was not against Revenue but was against Capital should be stopped. It was simply piling up debt. The other suggestion that Mr. Samarth made—and others made—was that that portion of the annuity in the railways budget which represents sinking fund should not be charged against Revenue. Sinking fund—real sinking fund—can only come out of Revenue. You can call it sinking fund; and you can borrow it. But that simply means you borrow in one form in order to pay off in another form. That is not a sinking fund. That is merely movement of Capital. There are arguments certainly when you are in a tight place for temporarily suspending sinking fund. "Raid on the sinking fund" is a common phrase or it was so before the war in England. But it is only a confession of weakness. And anybody who studies the Indian Budget of the present year will come to the conclusion that so far from there being too much provision for reduction of unproductive debt, one of the problems we have got to face when things are a little better is some increase in the provision we make for preventing our unproductive debt in time of peace growing up against us. I have made no suggestion of that sort this year, and although I made a passing reference to the fact that nearly two crores of our expenditure this year and a certain amount in previous years has been spent for purely unproductive purposes,—although it may be an asset, the building of a large new Capital is certainly going to increase the cost. Expenditure will have to be incurred in keeping it up. I made a reference to the fact that this unproductive expenditure was at present being charged to Capital. I did not suggest that we should cover it in this year. But if we are removing such sinking fund as there is inside our present revenue out of it, we ought at the same time undoubtedly to bring into the charges against Revenue the unproductive charges which are at present charged to Capital, and if we did that the deficit would, I am afraid, be increased and not decreased. We come back, therefore, to the position that there is a deficit of 4½ crores, and, with due respect, the suggestion which holds the field for covering that deficit is an increase in the duty on salt.

[Sir Basil Blackett.]

The House will probably desire me to deal with one or two of the other subjects which were raised by Honourable Members in the course of the discussion. The most important of which I have a note here are questions of railway policy, the general question of the incidence of taxation and the question of exchange. Now, one of the unsatisfactory features undoubtedly of this year's Budget is that the cut of 3 crores which we have made in the railway budget represents a postponement of necessary renewals and repairs. We made the same mistake,—it is again a question of being wise after the event. Most of us would have made it if we had been in charge of the finances of India at the time. During the war when there were large surpluses—apparent surpluses—on the railways, they were used to avoid increases of taxation, although now looking back we can see that these surpluses represented mainly the fact that owing to the war the railways of this country were not being repaired and renewed to the extent that was necessary, because materials could not be obtained for the purpose. The result was that after the war we had to take on a very heavy programme of renewals and repairs to make good what had been left undone during the previous years. It is possible, and there are some passages in the report of the Retrenchment Committee which suggest it, that some of the expenditure on renewals and repairs was not so well thought out as might have been; but it is undoubtedly undesirable that we should avoid a deficit or show a surplus simply by postponing charges for repairs and renewals which belong to this year to the next year or the year after next. Still the cut we have made this year will probably be justified but it is obviously not a cut which you can repeat, unfortunately. It would be thoroughly unsound finance that we should be inventing surpluses, simply by not spending money on keeping our railways up to the mark.

Mr. Ginwala made a very interesting speech in which he discussed the whole subject of the incidence of taxation and the same subject has come up incidentally in a great many other speeches. Of course, one of the difficulties here is that we are living under a federal system. There is at present a fairly clear demarcation between what are subjects for provincial taxation and what are subjects for Imperial taxation, taxation by the Central Government. The suggestion, for example, of the death duties, which was made by Mr. Ginwala, is a subject which might very usefully be explored for the purposes of improving the position of the provincial Budgets. But it is not going to help us to cover our Budget. The same difficulty of the Provincial versus Imperial claims on the taxable subjects of India arises in connection with the suggestion of raising income tax upon receipts from agricultural lands. It is a matter obviously of great interest. But that suggestion was answered by a gentleman sitting behind me this afternoon who claimed that it would be a breach of faith if the permanent settlement was touched. There is therefore the difficulty both of the permanent settlement question and of the claims of the Provincial Governments standing between us and the possibility of making any use in the budget we now have before us of the suggestions which Mr. Ginwala's very interesting speech would lead us towards.

I now come to the question of exchange. There has been a fairly even division of opinion as between those who partly agreed with me that the time had not yet come for the fixation of the exchange, and those who expressed considerable disappointment. The expectations of one Member were so great and he was so flattering to myself that he expected that, on landing at Bombay, I had only to say "let the exchange be fixed" and it was fixed. But that is not the way things happen unfortunately. We can say that we are going to fix exchange, but unless we do the right thing and have sufficient resources and apply them in the right way, exchange won't remain fixed in spite of our statements. Sir Montagu Webb agreed with my general conclusion that the time had not yet come, but he went on to disagree fairly generally with the rest of what I had said on that subject. I think the point that he made was that the level of prices to-day is such that the exchange, if fixed at the moment, ought to be at ½ instead of ¼, and might even have to be lower. That is a reading of the level of prices with which one may not entirely agree. It is a question of very careful study of not very satisfactory data, namely, the index numbers, but my reading of the position was that, comparing the index numbers of wholesale prices here with those in England and America, and making allowance for the fact that you would expect, owing to the large increase in import duties that has been imposed in India between 1918 and the present day, the index number in India to be higher relatively to the English number than if it had not been for those import duties, it seemed to me that, judging by the price levels in the two countries, there were a good many prices here which had not yet accommodated themselves to the fall which has taken place in the exchange value of the rupee all the way from 2s. 8d. to 1s. 4d. or lower. Therefore if you were going to fix exchange at 1s. 4d. now you would probably have to look for a further rise in prices. The subject is a difficult one to discuss on the spur of the moment like this. There is a reference which Sir Montagu Webb made about the fall in prices to pre-war levels that I should like to deal with. Prices in England have not fallen to pre-war level; they are something like 160 to 170 as compared with 100 before the war. Now it is quite uncertain whether prices may not be in for a rise rather than a fall. If America finds the large quantity of gold which she has in her federal reserve system too large to deal with in other ways, she may be driven to build new credit upon that reserve of gold, and no one can foretell, but it is quite a possibility that there may be a considerable rise in American prices. When sterling is at par sterling would almost inevitably have to follow suit. Then India would again be faced with the problem whether she wants to keep prices more or less stable or whether she wants to keep the rupee more or less stable; just the same problem that she had in 1914. And considering the social difficulties which changing levels of prices cause in a country like India it is quite possible that it would be much more to India's advantage to let the external value of the rupee alter rather than to let the internal value of the rupee alter and internal prices go up. All this may sound as if the Government of India was very anxious to manipulate the exchange, but it is not really a question of manipulating the exchange, it is a question of dealing with a problem which in the era of instability which has followed after the war has taxed the ingenuity of every country. In a sense the exchange of every country has to be manipulated in these days; you cannot simply go to a gold level. No one knows what would be the consequences in the world if that were rashly attempted by any country. The value of gold is one among the many commodities the price of which in these days is changing rapidly and you do not get stability of prices by simply being on a gold level. However I have wandered rather deeply already into a subject on which I did not want to spend time, and I will return now to a few words as to the budget for 1923-24.

[Sir Basil Blackett.]

I ventured to make an appeal to the House when I spoke last week for a long, strong pull together. If we balance our budget this year I believe we have very good hopes for next year, but we cannot take any risks. We have had two good monsoons; we cannot be sure that there will be a third good monsoon, and if there is not a third good monsoon, there is not the least doubt that our estimates of revenue in this year's figures are optimistic. We cannot foresee what would be the position a year hence, but we can be quite sure that it will make an enormous difference to our position whether we succeed this year in balancing our budget, restoring our credit thereby possibly enabling ourselves to borrow at lower rates, or whether we go on with one more year of Micawberism, hoping for the best, hoping that something will turn up. The House agreed right through that that was impossibility and I end on the note that I began, the salt tax remains the only suggestion which really holds the field, and in the opinion of the Government of India the best suggestion for dealing with the situation.

Mr. N. M. Samarth: I have just one word to ask. I understand the Honourable Finance Member to say that I misquoted Bastable.

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: I tried to withdraw the word "misquoted." I meant misinterpreted.

Mr. N. M. Samarth: You said "misquoted."

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: I think I said "misquoted" and "misinterpreted" but I meant the latter.

Mr. N. M. Samarth: As to misinterpretation, Sir, the Honourable the Finance Member may have his interpretation; I have mine. The passage quoted speaks for itself.

The Assembly then adjourned till Eleven of the Clock on Thursday, the 8th March, 1923.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

Thursday, 8th March, 1923.

The Assembly met in the Assembly Chamber at Eleven of the Clock.
Mr. President was in the Chair.

DRAFT NOTIFICATION RE EMIGRATION OF UNSKILLED LABOUR TO MAURITIUS.

Mr. J. Hullah (Revenue and Agriculture Secretary): Sir, I lay on the table in pursuance of the provisions of sub-section (2) of section 10 of the Indian Emigration Act, 1922, a draft notification specifying the terms and conditions on which emigration for the purpose of unskilled work shall be lawful to Mauritius.

No.

GOVERNMENT OF INDIA.

DEPARTMENT OF REVENUE AND AGRICULTURE.

EMIGRATION.

Delhi, the March 1923.

NOTIFICATION.

IN exercise of the powers conferred by section 10 of the Indian Emigration Act, 1922 (VII of 1922), hereinafter referred to "as the Act", the Governor General in Council is pleased to issue the following Notification in the form in which it has been approved by both Chambers of the Indian Legislature:—

Emigration to Mauritius for the purpose of unskilled work shall be lawful for a period of one year with effect from a date to be notified in the Gazette of India by the Governor General in Council after the matters requiring determination under clause 10 of this notification shall first have been determined subject to the following terms, and conditions, namely:—

- (1) The number of adult male labourers which may be recruited within the period shall be limited to 1,500.
- (2) The emigrant shall
 - (a) have been recruited by a person licensed for that purpose by and responsible to an officer (hereinafter called the Emigration Commissioner) appointed by the Government of Mauritius, or
 - (b) have applied direct to the Emigration Commissioner for an assisted passage and have been accepted by him.
- (3) The emigrant shall not, before leaving British India, have entered into any engagement to labour for a period exceeding one month.
- (4) Engagements to labour entered into by an emigrant in Mauritius for a period exceeding one month shall be void.
- (5) The Government of Mauritius shall, at any time when so desired by the Governor General in Council, admit and give all facilities to an Agent appointed under section 7 of the Act.
- (6) No part of the cost of his recruitment, subsistence during transport or transport, shall be recoverable from any emigrant, and all expenses in this connection shall be defrayed from the fund created by the Government of Mauritius under section 45 of the Labour Ordinance, 1922.
- (7) Any emigrant shall, if he desires to return to India at any time after two years from the date of his introduction to the Colony, be repatriated at the cost of the Government of Mauritius to the place of his recruitment.

(3095)

A

- (8) Any emigrant shall, at any time within the period of two years from the date of his introduction to the Colony, be entitled to be repatriated at the cost of the Government of Mauritius to the place of his recruitment if he satisfies the Agent appointed under section 7 of the Act that his return to his home is desirable either on the ground of the state of his health or on the ground that the work which he is required to do is unsuitable to his capacity or that he has been unjustly treated by his employer or for any other sufficient reason.
- (9) If any emigrant at any time within the period of two years from the date of his introduction to the Colony satisfies the Agent appointed under section 7 of the Act that he is unable to obtain a wage which will provide the cost of living for a man with a wife and three children and also a reasonable margin for savings, sickness and old age, he shall be entitled to be repatriated at the cost of the Government of Mauritius to the place of his recruitment.
- (10) The Government of Mauritius, in consultation with the Government of India or the Agent appointed under section 7 of the Act, shall from time to time determine the amount of wage which is sufficient to meet the requirements laid down in clause 9 of this notification.
- (11) If at any time there is no Agent appointed under section 7 of the Act the Government of Mauritius shall appoint a person to perform the duties of the Agent as set forth in clause 8.
- (12) The Government of Mauritius shall furnish such periodical reports and returns as may be required from time to time by the Government of India in respect of the welfare of the persons emigrating to the Colony in accordance with this notification.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

CONVICTION OF PANDIT KIRPA RAM.

482. *Dr. Nand Lal: (1) Is the Government of India aware that one Pandit Kirpa Ram was convicted, on 27th July, 1916, by a Special Tribunal, constituted under the defence of the Government of India Act, 1915, at Port Dufferin, Mandalay, under sections 121 and 121A, I. P. C.?

(2) Is Government of India aware that the Commissioners constituting the aforesaid Tribunal mentioned in their judgment that the aforesaid Pandit Kirpa Ram was subsequently seduced to join the party in August, 1915?

(3) Is Government of India aware that no overt act of the positive kind was alleged against him and that according to the very prosecution he was more or less a passive member of the conspiracy?

(4) Is Government of India aware that the wife of the aforesaid convict Pandit Kirpa Ram, submitted a memorial to His Excellency the Viceroy and Governor General of India, through the Chief Secretary, Government of Burma?

(5) Will the Government of India be pleased to state as to whether consideration was given to paragraphs four, five, six and seven of the aforesaid memorial, namely, a petition under section 401 of the Criminal Procedure Code?

(6) Will the Government of India be pleased to state whether the Governor General in Council will graciously, in consideration of the aforesaid petition (memorial) for mercy, remit the whole or any part of punishment to which the aforesaid convict was sentenced?

(7) Will the Government of India be pleased to state—

(a) Where the aforesaid convict is now?

(b) Is he in good condition of his health?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: (1) Yes.

(2) What the Commissioners actually said was that he was seduced to join the conspiracy by two other conspirators. But as he was in the Military Police, the Honourable Member will recognise the grave nature of his offence.

(3) No. The evidence shows that Kirpa Ram became an active member of the conspiracy, and the Commissioners described his guilt as particularly heinous.

(4) and (5) A memorial from Kirpa Ram's wife was received by the Government of India through the local Government early in the year 1920, and was rejected.

(6) Kirpa Ram's case has been several times considered. The Government of India are not prepared to reconsider it now.

(7) (a) He is in the Andamans.

(b) I will enquire and inform the Honourable Member of the result.

INDIANS AS MINISTERIAL OFFICERS.

483. *Khan Bahadur Saiyid Muhammad Ismail: Will the Government be pleased to state the total number of Indians employed at present as Ministerial Officers in all the Departments directly under the control of the Government of India specifying in particular the total number of Hindus and Muhammadans and also specifying in full the Provinces from which they come?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: The Honourable Member is referred to the statement laid on the table on 15th January 1923. Government are not prepared to obtain the further information now asked for as its collection will entail an amount of work out of all proportion to its utility.

The statement laid on the table was very full in itself.

Mr. K. Ahmed: Is there not a classification list showing the names of those who hold these ministerial posts? From the names is it not possible to say to which class of the people of India the holders of these appointments belong, and the province from which they come? Is that expensive to find out, Sir?

Mr. President: That question has already been answered.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: I might ask the Honourable Member if he has seen the statement to which I have just referred, namely, the statement laid on the table on the 15th of January 1923. If he will see that statement, he will be able to ask a more fully informed question on the matter.

RELEASE OF POLITICAL PRISONERS IN THE UNITED PROVINCES.

484. *Khan Bahadur Saiyid Muhammad Ismail: Was the action of the United Provinces Government in withdrawing the operation of the Criminal Law Amendment Act and in releasing all the political prisoners soon after the departure from the province of His Excellency Sir Harcourt Butler, G.C.I.E., K.C.S.I., in concurrence with the policy of the Government of India or were the Local Government entitled to exercise their own discretion in the matter?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: The remission of sentences and the application or withdrawal of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, Part II are matters within the competence of the Local Governments, subject, in any case where this question arises, to the general control of policy vested in the Government of India. The Honourable Member is no doubt aware that the measures taken by the Government of the United Provinces were more restricted in their scope than his question would suggest, and the Government of India have no reason to suppose that they were not justified by the circumstances of the case.

Khan Bahadur Sarfaraz Hussain Khan: May I ask the Honourable Member what is the general practice in regard to the release of political prisoners. In such cases, do the Local Governments take the permission of the Imperial Government, or can they act independently?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: As the Honourable Member is perhaps aware, there is no rule of procedure laid down. I said where the question arises, they are subject to the general control of the Government of India, and, whether the question arises or not depends, of course, on the circumstances and importance of the case.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: Were the Government of India consulted in this matter?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: In which matter?

Mr. N. M. Joshi: In the matter of the release of political prisoners?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: No, Sir.

Mr. K. Ahmed: If the matter is of any importance at all, why does it not apply, Sir, in the case of the other provinces, but only in the case of one province?

Mr. President: If the Honourable Member wants information in regard to the other provinces, he can put a question about them. This question refers solely to the United Provinces.

MAINTENANCE OF BUILDINGS IN DELHI.

485. Khan Bahadur Saiyid Muhammad Ismail: Will the Government be pleased (a) to lay on the table the list of all the buildings declared under the Ancient Monument Preservation Act, within the Province of Delhi and the amount which they spend in the upkeep and maintenance of each of the ancient buildings and the agency by which they are spent?

(b) To specify in particular the amount, if any, paid for the maintenance and the upkeep of the Juma Masjid, Delhi?

The Honourable Mr. A. O. Chatterjee: (a) The preparation of a list of the protected monuments in the Delhi Province has recently been undertaken by the Archaeological Department, and will take time to complete. The amount spent on annual repairs in 1920-21 on these monuments was Rs. 31,052. Details are given in the annual report for that year. The repairs are ordinarily executed by the Public Works Department but some minor works are executed direct by the Archaeological Department.

(b) The Juma Masjid, Delhi, is maintained out of the income from its own endowments and investments and from charitable donations. No subvention is given from public funds, but the local Civil and Public Works officers have given in the past and still give advice and assistance regarding important maintenance works when asked to do so by the Managing Committee.

ART COLLEGES AND SCHOOLS IN DELHI.

486. Khan Bahadur Saiyid Muhammad Ismail: Will the Government be pleased to state the names of the Art Colleges and Schools, within the Province of Delhi, with the number of students that appeared in the College and matriculation examinations in the year 1922, also to state the grants, if any, made to the Hindu and the St. Stephen's College in Delhi?

The Honourable Mr. A. O. Chatterjee: A tabular statement giving the information required is laid upon the table.

Statement regarding Arts Colleges and High Schools in the Delhi Province.

Arts Colleges, presenting candidates at the Punjab University Examinations in 1922.	INTERMEDIATE.		B. A. & B. Sc.		M. A. & M. Sc.
	Candidates.	Passed.	Candidates.	Passed.	Candidates.	Passed.
1. St Stephen's College, Delhi	44	27	59	25	9	8
2. The Hindu College, Delhi	74	49	53	20	...	...
3. The Ramjas College, Delhi	23	19	19	10	...	...

Schools presenting candidates for the Matriculation and School Leaving Certificate Examinations of the University of the Punjab.

	Candidates.	Passed.
A.—Boys' High Schools.
1. The Government High School, Delhi	74	45
2. The Anglo-Arabic High School, Delhi	104	36
3. The Anglo-Sanskrit High School, Delhi	45	28
4. St. Stephen's High School, Delhi	51	40
5. The D. A. V. High School, Delhi	39	23
6. The Jain High School, Delhi	11	10
7. The Bengali High School, Delhi	4	1
8. The D. B. High School, Mahraulti	14	8
9. The Ramjas High School, No. 1, Delhi	88	50
10. The Ramjas High School, No. 2, Delhi	37	25
B.—Girls' High Schools.
1. B. M. Girls High School, Delhi	3	2
2. Queen Mary's High School, Delhi	2	2
3. The Indraprastha Girls High School	4	2

2. The following grants were paid in the year 1922 :—

	Rs.
1. St. Stephen's College	37,550
2. The Hindu College	38,476 including Rs. 7,476 on account of furniture and building grant.

DELHI UNIVERSITY.

487. *Khan Bahadur Saiyid Muhammad Ismail: Will the Government be pleased to state the amount which they have sanctioned for the upkeep of the maintenance of the Delhi University with the list of the Members of the Court, the Syndicate and the Executive Council; also to state the total number of the Colleges and the Schools affiliated to it?

The Honourable Mr. A. O. Chatterjee: The Government of India have so far made payments totalling Rs. 30,000 to the Delhi University.

There is no provision for a Syndicate in the constitution of the Delhi University. The lists of members of the Court and the Executive Council as constituted to date will be supplied to the Honourable Member.

The Delhi University has three recognised colleges. The constitution of the University does not provide for the affiliation of schools.

Mr. B. S. Kamat: Has the sanctioned amount for the Delhi University been spent during the year?

The Honourable Mr. A. O. Chatterjee: I have said that Rs. 30,000 have already been paid by Government. I have no further information.

BENARES HINDU AND ALIGARH MUSLIM UNIVERSITIES.

488. *Khan Bahadur Saiyid Muhammad Ismail: Will the Government be pleased to state the control, if any, the Government of India exercise over the Benares Hindu University and the Aligarh Muslim University?

The Honourable Mr. A. O. Chatterjee: The Honourable Member is referred to the Acts incorporating the universities to which he refers and to the orders made thereunder. A copy of these will be placed in the Library.

SANITARY COMMISSIONER WITH THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA.

489. *Khan Bahadur Saiyid Muhammad Ismail: Will the Government be pleased to state the functions of the Sanitary Commissioner with the Government of India and also as to what authority do they exercise over Provincial Directors of Public Health?

The Honourable Mr. A. O. Chatterjee: The Public Health Commissioner is the Adviser of the Government of India with respect to matters included in items 2, 8, 39 and 41 in Part I, of Schedule I, of the Devolution Rules. He also advises when references are made to the Government of India with regard to items 8, 22, 26 (g), 28 and 45 in Part II of Schedule I, of the Devolution Rules.

2. Provincial Directors of Public Health are subordinate to Local Governments.

DIVISIONAL COMMISSIONER, BIHAR AND ORISSA.

490. *Khan Bahadur Saiyid Muhammad Ismail: Will the Government be pleased to state if they have received any recommendation from the Government of Bihar and Orissa regarding abolition of the post of the Divisional Commissioner in that Province?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Halley: No.

Mr. K. Ahmed: Have recommendations been received from the Government of Bengal regarding the abolition of the posts of Divisional Commissioners?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Halley: I was under the impression that the Government of Bihar and Orissa is now separated from Bengal.

Mr. K. Ahmed: I am asking, Sir, with regard to the abolition of the posts of Divisional Commissioners in Bengal and the abolition of them, if already recommended by the Government of Bengal.

MOSQUES IN VICINITY OF LADY HARDINGE HOSPITAL.

491. *Haji Wajihuddin: Is it a fact that (a) at the time of construction of Lady Hardinge Hospital, two old mosques were taken within the boundary wall of the said Hospital, (b) whether one of them is only at a distance of a few yards from the boundary wall on Lady Hardinge Road, (c) whether all the Professor's bungalows have got passages and gates on this road but none has been given for the mosques in question and if so, why? (d) are the muslim public not allowed to enter the said mosque to say prayers, (e) have several representations been made by certain Moslems to the Chief Commissioner, Chief Engineer and the Principal and if so, what fate have they met and what action do the Government propose to take, (f) have the Government any objection to allow repairs of the inner mosque which is badly needed for the use of saying prayers by the Muslim staff of the said Hospital? (g) If the answers are in the affirmative reasons be given?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Halley: The facts in connection with this are that one old disused mosque has been surrounded with a wall and lies within the boundary wall of the Lady Hardinge Hospital. The other lies on the edge of the compound, and that part of the mosque which has always been in use as such has not been interfered with in any way. The first named mosque had not been in use for many years before the construction of the hospital and it was arranged that it should be enclosed by a wall and saved from further decay. No representations have been received regarding it, and as it lies within the walls of a purdah hospital for women it is not practicable to allow it to be taken again into use by the general public. The question of permitting its use by the Muslim staff of the Hospital will be referred to the Principal.

Several requisitions have been received regarding the mosque on the edge of the compound, which has remained in use continuously. Applications to repair this mosque have been acceded to.

Mr. K. Ahmed: In view of the fact that several representations and memorials have, as admitted by the Honourable the Home Member, been received since last January in this Assembly and as far as we are concerned, Sir, will the Government be pleased to state, what action they have taken and to lay on the table a statement, in regard to any steps that have been taken since January last explaining how they are going to give effect to these grievances?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Halley: Steps taken in regard to what?

Mr. K. Ahmed: In regard to the removal of the grievances about which the people have submitted memorials to the Government?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Halley: We have shown ourselves very willing to give all the information in our power regarding definite cases brought up to us. If the Honourable Member has any case in which we have not given information, if he will mention it to me, I will do my best to give it to him.

Mr. K. Ahmed: My case was put before the Government since last January in the form of supplementary questions.

Mr. President: Did the Honourable Member's question refer to the Lady Hardinge Medical College?

Mr. K. Ahmed: No, but there are many.

Mr. President: Others are not in order.

Mr. W. M. Hussanally: Sir, in regard to the mosque which is going to be walled round, may I ask if there is any possibility of a way being given to Mussalmans to use it by walling a passage through the compound of the Lady Hardinge Hospital, because a Muhammadan mosque can be used at any time even if it has been disused for some time?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Halley: I may point out that there is another mosque in close proximity to this mosque which is used by Muhammadans. I would put it to the Honourable Member with regard to his question whether it would not be more suitable if arrangements could be made that this particular mosque, which is inside a purdah hospital, should be used by the Moslem staff of the hospital, as it is not necessary in the general interests of the Muhammadan population, to make it accessible to the outside public in view of the fact that there is another mosque within a few yards distance.

Mr. W. M. Hussanally: Will any steps be taken to see that this mosque is not allowed to go to rack and ruin in course of time and then demolished?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Halley: I think my answer stated that steps had been taken to prevent further decay in this mosque. I do not think the Honourable Member need have any fear on the subject and, as I say, we are taking steps to see whether it can be made accessible to the Muhammadans resident within the hospital itself.

Mr. K. Ahmed: Do I understand, Sir, that the mosque was used before the building of the hospital and that recently, since the Government have taken it up, it has got into a dilapidated condition?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Halley: I am correct, the facts regarding the mosque inside the hospital are as follows. It was originally inside a village which occupied the site on which the hospital is now built. It had for many years, I think, been falling into dilapidation and was not used at the time we took it over. It has not suffered in any way by being enclosed within the walls of the hospital. On the contrary, it has been prevented from falling into further decay.

Mr. K. Ahmed: So it has been forfeited on account of the lapse of time. May I ask for how many generations it had not been taken care of by the Muhammadan population, and the justification for the Government forfeiting it for its own use?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Halley: It is not correct to say that it has been forfeited for use by the Government.

Mr. K. Ahmed: Anyhow it has been taken.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Halley: It was part of a number of buildings which were acquired at the same time under the Land Acquisition Act. The land surrounding the site on which it stands was given by Government to the Lady Hardinge Hospital. The mosque has not in any sense been forfeited.

FEROZESHAHI MOSQUES ON QUTAB ROAD.

492. Haji Wajihuddin: Is it a fact that the big four-domed Ferozeshahi mosques on Qutab Road, are being used from sometime past as an Infectious Diseases Hospital, by the Delhi Municipality also three small mosques as sweeper and menial quarters and if so, by what authority and whether the Government will take early steps to have them vacated?

MOSQUE USED AS DISPENSARY.

493. Haji Wajihuddin: Is it a fact that a mosque on Qutab Road has been encroached upon and is used as a Dispensary and whether the new road under construction has passed through one of the mosques on that road, if so, will the Government be pleased to have the mosque vacated immediately and to give the road a curve and to pass it behind the deori of the mosque?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Halley: The Honourable Member is referred to the answer already given on the 6th instant to question No. 490 on the same subject put by Mr. Hussanally.

ENCROACHMENT ON MOSQUES.

494. Haji Wajihuddin: Are the Government aware that two mosques have been encroached within the Bungalows Nos. 27 and 9 on Asoka Road (Imperial Delhi), and that no passages were left for them which is causing great discontent throughout the Muslim community at large and whether the Government are prepared to remove the complaint with least delay?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Halley: Government are aware that an old praying platform lies partly in the compound of No. 27, Asoka Road, and that a ruin which may have been a mosque lies within the compound of No. 9, Asoka Road. Neither have been used for a number of years and Government sees no reason to deal with these particular remains otherwise than has been done.

ALLEGED DEMOLITION OF MOSQUES.

495. Haji Wajihuddin: Are the Government aware that strong rumours are current among the Muslim public of Delhi that, (a) old mosques, mausoleums and graves near Purana Qila, are being demolished by the Public Works Department contractors and the chamar labourers? (b) that sanction to repairs of such old sacred buildings are not granted by the Government? (c) will the Government under the circumstances issue a communique giving general sanction to have such buildings repaired on old grounds, if the Muslims undertake to do so, (d) will the Government be pleased to quote the numbers of applications received to have the mosques of Raja Bazar, Kalali Bagh and Sonehri Bagh, repaired and orders passed on them?

[8TH MARCH 1923.]

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Halley: (a) The question presumably refers to the conservation works in progress at Khair-ul-Manazil, and Sher Shah's gate, opposite the south-west entrance to Purana Kila, which are being carried out at Government expense. It is not correct that demolition is being carried out as suggested.

(b) Government itself repairs many of these buildings.

(c) I should like to have more precise information as to the buildings which are held to need repair.

(d) Government have no knowledge of the actual number of applications made to repair the mosques at Raja Bazar, Kalali Bagh and Sonehri Bagh, but permission has been given to execute repairs which have been effected. Government are themselves engaged in making a small garden round Sonehri Bagh.

STOPPAGE OF REPAIRS OF MOSQUES.

496. Haji Wajihuddin: Is it a fact that the Public Works Department stopped ordinary repairs of certain mosques in New Delhi, known as 'Shah Kamal,' 'Chapar Wali,' 'Raja Bazar' and others and if so, the reference to acts and bye-laws under which this was done may be given and whether Government are prepared to issue necessary instructions and declare its policy regarding the protection of such buildings.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Halley: The Department has not stopped ordinary repairs on any mosque capable of being used as such. Applications for extensions have been refused, and in at least three cases the applicants have been asked to come and discuss a site for a new mosque, but no answer to the invitation has been received.

The policy of Government has already been fully stated by me in answer to a question put on the 6th February, 1923.

MUSLIM CEMETERY, DELHI.

497. Haji Wajihuddin: (a) Is it a fact that the cemetery allotted to the Muslim community in New Delhi is situated at a distance of 7 miles and do the Government know that it is considered generally an unsuitable site?

(b) Are Government prepared to consider the question of allotting a plot behind Syed Hasan, on Ridge Road, where a large number of graves already exist?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Halley: The answer to the first part is in the negative. The new cemetery will be within easy distance of residents in the eastern portion of New Delhi, when that is built. Government have always supposed that Muslims living in the New Delhi area would for the most part, use the burial ground lying to the west of the old city, which is at present used by their co-religionists.

CONSTRUCTION OF WALLS AT SHRINES.

498. Haji Wajihuddin: Is it a fact that a new boundary wall of 'Rikabganj Gurdwara' has been constructed and repairs of 'Kadam Sharif' wall was done at the expense of the Government and if so, do the Government propose to make similar treatment in the case of Dargah of Syed Hasan Rasul, Numa on Panch Kuian Road?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Halley: A new boundary wall is under construction round the Rukab Ganj Gurdwara, partly at the expense of Government and partly at the expense of the Sikh community. Repairs at 'Kadam Sharif' have also been executed by the Archaeological Department. Government proposes to repair suitably the walls round the Dargah alluded to in the last part of the question.

DISCUSSION OF RESOLUTIONS.

499. Sardar Gulab Singh: 1. How many non-official Resolutions have been admitted by the Honourable the President, during the past three Sessions?

2. How many such Resolutions have come up for discussion during each Session before this House and how many have been left over for want of time or otherwise?

3. Will the Government be pleased to take steps to give more days for non-official business than has hitherto been done?

4. Is the Government aware that fixing of days for non-official business so much sparingly is the only cause for so great a number of Resolutions not being discussed in this House each Session?

Mr. E. Burdon: The attention of the Honourable Member is invited to Sir Henry Moncrieff Smith's answers to Mr. B. N. Misra's questions Nos. 33 and 34, printed on pages 978-980, of the Legislative Assembly Debates, of the 15th January, 1923 (Vol. III, No. 16).

Mr. K. Ahmed: Will the Government be pleased to state how many Resolutions were not admitted by the President as well as by His Excellency the Viceroy?

Mr. President: That does not arise.

CONTINGENT EXPENDITURE.

500. Babu J. N. Mukherjee: 1. Will Government be pleased to state the total contingent expenditure incurred by the various departments and offices of the Central Government during the last five years, taking each year separately?

2. Has the attention of Government been drawn to the action taken by the Government of Bengal with a view to a detailed examination of the contingent expenditure by that Government with the help of an experienced accounts officer?

3. Will Government be pleased to state if they are prepared to undertake a similar examination of the contingent expenditure of the Central Government?

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: (1) Details of expenditure on Contingencies are given in the demand statements placed before this House.

(2) and (3) Government do not consider such action necessary as this item of expenditure has like all other expenditure been fully investigated by the Retrenchment Committee.

REGISTERED ARTICLES, ETC., DEALT WITH BY POST OFFICE.

501. *Mr. K. O. Neogy: Will Government be pleased to state—

(a) the number of (i) registered articles of the letter mail, (ii) parcel mail articles, (iii) money orders, and (iv) insured articles, that were dealt with by the Post Office in India in the month of January, 1928; and

(b) the number of unregistered articles of the letter mail so dealt with, as ascertained by the enumeration taken in February, 1928?

Mr. H. A. Sams: (a) and (b) It is regretted that the information asked for is not available at present.

POSTAL DELIVERIES.

502. *Mr. K. O. Neogy: (a) Is there any proposal under consideration for curtailing the number of postal deliveries with a view to reduction of postmen staff?

(b) If so, will Government be pleased to state to what extent the deliveries are proposed to be curtailed in the different places, and the percentage of reduction of postmen staff likely to result therefrom?

Mr. H. A. Sams: (a) Yes.

(b) The extent of the proposed curtailment in different places cannot be stated at present, but the general reduction contemplated is one of 8 per cent. of the whole staff of postmen and village postmen, involving 900 men.

CHARGING OF INTEREST ON TELEGRAPH EXPENDITURE.

503. *Mr. K. O. Neogy: (a) On what basis was the interest of 60 lakhs charged in 1921-22, against the telegraph revenue for capital expenditure?

(b) Is it a fact that a very large portion of the capital expenditure of the Telegraph Department, prior to 1921-22, was provided out of revenue? If so, what was the aggregate amount thus provided, and what is the justification for charging interest on the said amount?

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: (a) The Honourable Member is presumably referring to the revised estimate for 1921-22.

Pending the determination of the actual capital outlay of the postal and telegraph departments in the past after examination of the recommendations of the chartered accountants with regard to the allocation of expenditure between capital and revenue, it was decided, for the purpose of the revised estimates for 1921-22, and subsequent estimates, to treat the total cost of telegraph lines, telegraph buildings and telegraph apparatus and plant as representing capital outlay. The estimate of 60 lakhs in question was made up of 40½ lakhs, being interest at 3.9252 per cent. per annum on the capital expenditure on these objects incurred up to the end of 1916-17, the balance being interest at 5.1979 per cent. on capital outlay from 1917-18 to 1921-22. The rates of interest are the average rates paid on loans raised in the open market during the periods mentioned.

(b) Prior to 1921-22, capital outlay of the nature referred to above was charged to the revenue account of the Department though a pro forma account of such outlay was separately maintained.

The aggregate amount of such capital outlay met out of revenue to the end of 1920-21 was 14.42 lakhs.

The practice of charging interest on the total capital outlay on the Telegraph Department up to date irrespective of the source from which the outlay has been met follows that obtaining in the case of other commercial departments, viz., railways and irrigation works, and is necessary if the tax-payer is to be secured against loss on the running of such commercial undertakings.

I may add that the Government are endeavouring to put the accounts of these Commercial Departments on a proper commercial basis at the earliest possible moment.

QUARTERS FOR POSTAL STAFF.

504. *Mr. K. O. Neogy: (a) With reference to the statement made by Mr. G. R. Clarke, in this House on the 22nd March, 1922 (at page 357C of the Assembly Debates), about the necessity for providing the staff of the Post Offices with suitable quarters, and the "big building programme" in connection therewith, will Government be pleased to indicate the details of the programme showing particularly how far the Postal staff in the interior will be benefited thereby?

(b) When is the said programme proposed to be undertaken?

Mr. H. A. Sams: (a) The proposal referred to by the Honourable Member is under the consideration of Government and no details can be given at present.

(b) In view of the existing financial stringency, it is not possible to say when the programme will be undertaken.

POST OFFICES IN CALCUTTA.

505. *Rai Bahadur G. O. Nag: 1. Are the Government aware (i) that there is a proposal of Government to amalgamate the Simla and Beadon Street Post Offices in the city of Calcutta, and remove the combined office to a building on the Central Avenue Road, and (ii) that this proposal has evoked strong adverse comments in the public Press of the city?

2. Do the Government anticipate any large savings out of the proposed amalgamation, if so, what will be the possible savings, and under what heads the savings will be effected?

3. Is it a fact that the rents paid for the buildings in which the Simla and Beadon Street offices are located together cost Government Rs. 375 only per mensem, while the rent of the building to which the proposed combined office is to be removed will be about Rs. 1,800?

4. If the facts are as stated, do the Government propose to reconsider the proposal of amalgamation and abandon it in interest both of public convenience and economy?

Colonel Sir Sydney Crookshank: 1. (i) Yes.

(ii) Yes, the proposal appears to have been criticised in one or two local papers.

2. It is anticipated that some savings will be effected by the proposed amalgamation, but it is not possible to state at present what the amount will be nor the particular heads under which the savings will be effected.

3. The rent at present paid for the two post offices is Rs. 375 a month. The Simla post office building was, however, considered insanitary and unsuitable, and the matter had also been taken up by the local papers. The District Health Officer and the Corporation of Calcutta were then approached but nothing could be done to improve matters. As for the Beadon Square post office building, apart from its unsuitability for use as such, the landlord was determined to eject the post office. Endeavours were made to secure two separate buildings for the two offices, but nothing suitable could be secured even on a total monthly rental of Rs. 1,000. The rent of the proposed building is Rs. 1,500 and not Rs. 1,800.

4. The new building is under construction and the proposal could not be abandoned even if this course were desirable, which is not the case.

Mr. K. Ahmed: Have the Government realised the question of economy and the difference of amount that it costs to Government?

Mr. H. A. Sams: Sir, I am not aware whether the Government have realised it or not.

THE PRISONERS (AMENDMENT) BILL.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey (Home Member): Sir, I beg to move:

"That the Bill to amend section 29 of the Prisoners Act, 1900, as passed by the Council of State, be taken into consideration."

This is a Bill that is required merely to amend a deficiency in the existing law. Section 29 of the Prisoners Act empowers the Governor General in Council to move any prisoner confined in any prison to any other prison in British India, and sub-section (2) of the same section confers the same powers on the local Government to make transfers within their own jurisdiction. There has been inconvenience experienced in the jails in Berar, which are under the administrative control of the Government of the Central Provinces, because they do not come strictly within the terms of section 29. The situation now is that some of the jails in Berar are partially unoccupied, whereas many of the jails in the Central Provinces proper are unduly congested. We therefore propose to give powers under this amendment to the Government of the Central Provinces to move prisoners freely as between Berar and the Central Provinces, and also to give to the Governor General the same power of moving prisoners to Berar as he would to other provinces in India. As the matter is a formal one I do not delay the House with any further reference to the details of the Bill.

The motion was adopted.

Clauses 1 and 2 were added to the Bill.

The Title and Preamble were added to the Bill.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: I beg to move, Sir, that the Bill as passed by the Council of State be passed.

The motion was adopted.

ION OF MEMBERS TO PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE.

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett (Finance Member): Sir, I beg to move:

"That this Assembly do proceed to elect 8 Members to be Members of the Committee on Public Accounts."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. President: For the purpose of this election, the office will be open to receive nominations for membership to the Public Accounts Committee up to 4 O'clock in the afternoon of the 12th March 1923, and the procedure for this election will be that laid down by the Chair in the year 1921.

DEMANDS FOR SUPPLEMENTARY GRANTS.

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett (Finance Member): Sir, I beg to move:

"That for the amounts against each head of demand shown in column 3 of the Statement entitled 'Statement comparing the expenditure included in each grant for the current year as modified by the Assembly in September 1922 with that indicated in the revised estimates, 1922-23', be substituted, the amounts shown in column 6 of the same Statement, the savings indicated in column 9 being transferred to the extent necessary to meet excess expenditure shown in the same column."

This is to a large extent a formal motion, and I think the Note which is printed on the outside of the Statement to which I have referred gives sufficient information on the purpose of the motion. The net result is, as explained in my Budget speech last week, a certain saving on expenditure for the whole year.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar (Madras: Nominated Non-Official): What is the total due to loss in Exchange?

Mr. A. V. V. Aiyar (Finance Department: Nominated Official): The total adjustment for exchange is Rs. 15,62,00,000.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: Is that the saving?

Mr. A. V. V. Aiyar: That is the total debit for Exchange.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: Has there been any saving as compared with last year?

Mr. A. V. V. Aiyar: There has been a saving.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: Can you give us the figure?

Mr. A. V. V. Aiyar: I think roughly it is something like half a crore.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: Is it in consequence of the sale of Council Bills?

Mr. A. V. V. Aiyar: It is in consequence of the expenditure in England being less than what we anticipated. The actual expenditure in England has fallen short of the amount which was anticipated in the Budget, and therefore there is a saving in the debit for exchange.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: Has there been no saving in cost of the sale of Council Bills?

Mr. A. V. V. Aiyar: The average rate has been slightly lower than 1s. 4d.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar (Madras City: Non-Muhammadan Urban): There is an entry on page 13 "Credit for transfer of the Eastern Hostel, Raising, to the Telegraph Department". May I know what it means?

Mr. H. A. Sams (Director General, Posts and Telegraphs): The idea was that when the Telegraph Department took over the Eastern Hostel, it transferred as much of the expenditure as possible to the charges for this year. I understood from the Secretary, Public Works Department, that lapses this year will be utilised to that extent for the purchase of the Eastern Hostel.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: Does it mean that the Eastern Hostel is going to be abandoned as residential quarters?

Mr. H. A. Sams: That, I understand, is the case, because we have already taken it or about to take it to use as the Telegraph Office for New Delhi.

Mr. President: The question is that that motion be adopted.

The motion was adopted.

The Assembly then adjourned till Eleven of the Clock on Friday, the 9th March, 1923.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

Friday, 9th March, 1923.

The Assembly met in the Assembly Chamber at Eleven of the Clock. Mr. President was in the Chair.

MEMBER SWORN:

Mr. Albert Frederick Lucas Brayne, M.L.A. (Finance Department: Nominated Official).

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

PILGRIMAGE TO HEJAZ AND ERAK.

506. Khan Bahadur Saliyd Muhammad Ismail: (a) Will the Government be pleased to give the total number of pilgrims who went to Hejaz and to Erak, respectively during the years 1921 and 1922 and also to state how many out of them have been stranded for want of sufficient money on their return journey?

(b) Do Government contemplate directing the High Commissioner at Basrah and the Consul at Jeddah to afford every facility to every intending Indian pilgrim to the shrines in Mesopotamia and Arabia and to afford them every opportunity of returning back to their respective residences in case they are stranded on account of any unforeseen circumstances?

The Honourable Mr. A. O. Chatterjee: (a) As regards the Hedjaz reference is invited to the reply given to Haji Wajihuddin's question on the same subject on the 5th instant. As regards Iraq information is being obtained and will be communicated to the Honourable Member in due course.

(b) The High Commissioner in Iraq and the British Consul at Jeddah do everything they can to help Indian pilgrims.

Mr. K. Ahmed: Will the Government of India be pleased to give the total number of pilgrims who went to Hejaz or to Iraq and who died, settled down, disappeared or otherwise whose whereabouts are not known at all?

The Honourable Mr. A. O. Chatterjee: I think the Honourable Member will realise that it is impossible for me to give information about people whose whereabouts are not known at all.

Mr. K. Ahmed: Can you give us at least the number of those who have come back to India?

LADY HARDINGE MEDICAL COLLEGE.

507. Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: 1. Will the Government be pleased to state:

(a) whether it is true that the Lady Hardinge Medical College was founded in 1916 on the initiative of Her Excellency Lady Hardinge with the active co-operation of the Director-General, Indian Medical Service, Sir Pardey Lukis,

(b) and whether with the exception of two members of the Women's Medical Service for India, all the other members of the Governing Body are officials of the Government of India?

2. Will the Government be pleased to state whether it is a fact that the Patron is the Vicerine for the time being and the President of the Governing Body, the Honorary Secretaries and the Honorary Treasurer are all officials either belonging to the Household of His Excellency the Viceroy or are holding responsible positions in the Secretariat?

The Honourable Mr. A. C. Chatterjee: (a) Yes.

(b) With the exception of two ladies the other members of the Governing Body at present happen to be Government officials.

2. The reply is in the affirmative as regards the Patron and the Honorary Secretaries. The President is the Director General, Indian Medical Service, and the Honorary Treasurer the Deputy Accountant General, Central Revenues.

Mr. K. Ahmed: I suppose these are all credits due to the Government officials who, without any help of the Delhi public and in spite of want of local patronage and the patriotic sympathy like that of the questioner's Indian public of Delhi, and others, had to undertake such a huge duty and discharge them to their credit for which India ought to be thankful?

LADY HARDINGE MEDICAL COLLEGE AND HOSPITAL BUILDINGS.

508. Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: Will the Government be pleased to state:

(a) What sum have the College authorities allotted, in the current year, for the repair of the buildings attached to the Lady Hardinge Medical College and Hospital?

(b) Is it true that these buildings constructed by public subscriptions are in a state of disrepair?

(c) How much do the Government of India contribute annually for the maintenance of buildings erected at their own cost?

The Honourable Mr. A. C. Chatterjee: (a) Rs. 12,568.

(b) No.

(c) No college buildings have been erected at the cost of the Government of India. The Government of India make an annual recurring grant of Rs. 2,00,000 towards the maintenance of the Institution in addition to contributions (amounting in 1921-22 to Rs. 51,675) made through the Countess of Dufferin Fund.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: May I know when these two lakhs were fixed?

The Honourable Mr. A. C. Chatterjee: I think the two lakhs have been given since 1920-21. I was coming to that in answer to a subsequent question.

GRANT TO LADY HARDINGE MEDICAL COLLEGE.

509. Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: Will the Government be pleased to state:

(a) Whether Government proposes to consider the necessity of giving a grant to the Lady Hardinge Medical College in order that it may not depend upon voluntary contributions?

(b) In what stage does the proposal to affiliate the College with the Punjab University stand?

The Honourable Mr. A. C. Chatterjee: (a) The Government of India already contribute Rs. 2,00,000 out of a total budgeted income of Rs. 2,91,600. Also as stated in answer to the previous question they provide staff through the Countess of Dufferin Fund at an expenditure (in 1921-22), of Rs. 51,675.

(b) The college is affiliated to the Punjab University for the F. Sc. examination and for the M.B., B.S. degree.

Dr. H. S. Gour: May I ask, Sir, what is the number of students in the Medical College and what is the incidence of cost per student?

The Honourable Mr. A. C. Chatterjee: I should like notice of that question.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: In regard to the first part of the question, as regards the grant made, will the Honourable Member state whether the grant is found sufficient for the maintenance of the institution and whether there has been any complaint that the grant is not sufficient for its maintenance.

The Honourable Mr. A. C. Chatterjee: I think it will be more convenient to answer that supplementary question when we come to 512.

Mr. W. M. Hussanally: Why can't the College be affiliated to the Delhi University now?

The Honourable Mr. A. C. Chatterjee: I don't think the Delhi University has got a Medical Faculty at present.

Dr. H. S. Gour: Hasn't the Delhi University got an Intermediate Science Faculty? Is the Honourable Member unaware of the fact that a proposal was made to affiliate the Science class to the Science Faculty of the Delhi University and that the offer was refused, entailing an additional cost for the maintenance of a separate establishment in the Medical College?

The Honourable Mr. A. C. Chatterjee: Who made the offer?

Dr. H. S. Gour: The Delhi University.

The Honourable Mr. A. C. Chatterjee: I think the Honourable Member's question should be addressed to the authorities of the College, Sir, and not to Government.

Dr. H. S. Gour: Well, the authorities of the College are empowered to manage the College and the Government has to pay the money for it.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Halley: Not necessarily.

SCIENCE DEPARTMENT, LADY HARDINGE MEDICAL COLLEGE.

510. Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: Will the Government be pleased to state:

- (a) Whether it is a fact that the Government of India informed the Lady Hardinge Medical College authorities that they were unable to provide funds for starting in Delhi an intermediate science College for women?
- (b) Have the Government refused to give sufficient funds to the College authorities to maintain even an efficient preparatory science department for women?
- (c) Would Government be pleased to reconsider their decision on both these points?

The Honourable Mr. A. C. Chatterjee: (a) Yes, in view of the replies from local Governments and the financial stringency.

(b) The annual contributions made by the Government of India have been stated in the reply to a previous question.

(c) In view of the existing financial conditions the Government of India are unable to give further financial assistance.

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary: Does the Government consider that the College fulfils an all-India want?

The Honourable Mr. A. C. Chatterjee: Yes, so far as women are concerned.

Dr. H. S. Gour: Can the Honourable Member state as to how many women students from the whole of India attend the College?

The Honourable Mr. A. C. Chatterjee: I have already said, Sir, that I should like notice of that question.

MAINTENANCE GRANT TO LADY HARDINGE MEDICAL COLLEGE.

511. Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: Will the Government be pleased to state:

- (a) Whether it is a fact that the Government promised in 1915 to give a maintenance grant, rising by degrees to a maximum of two lakhs per annum to the Lady Hardinge Medical College?
- (b) Has that promise been kept?

The Honourable Mr. A. C. Chatterjee: (a) and (b) The Government of India have raised their annual recurring grant for the maintenance of the college from Rs. 1,00,000 in 1916-17 to Rs. 2,00,000 since 1920-21, and have given the further help, already stated, through the Countess of Dufferin Fund.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: Might I put a supplementary question, Sir, of which I gave notice a few minutes ago, as to whether the college authorities consider that the contribution made by the Government would be sufficient to maintain the College in an efficient manner?

The Honourable Mr. A. C. Chatterjee: Would the Honourable Member ask the question after 512?

CURTAILMENT OF EXPENDITURE IN LADY HARDINGE MEDICAL COLLEGE.

512. Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: Will the Government be pleased to state:

- (a) Whether any attempt has been made by the Lady Hardinge Medical College authorities—
 - (i) to cut down expenses,
 - (ii) to increase the income of the College from internal sources, and
 - (iii) to secure grants from provincial Governments and Indian States?
- (b) Is it true that there has been a deficit in the finances of the College during the last year and that a further deficit is expected during the current year?

The Honourable Mr. A. C. Chatterjee: (a) and (b) The Government of India are informed that the reply is in the affirmative.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: I put the question now, Sir. I do not think it is necessary to repeat it again.

The Honourable Mr. A. C. Chatterjee: I think it is quite clear from the reply I have given that there is a deficit.

Dr. H. S. Gour: Will the Honourable Member inquire whether the incidence of cost in this College is out of all proportion to the number of students trained in the College and out of all proportion to the number of students trained in the other Medical Colleges of India where women are admitted?

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: May I ask my Honourable friend Dr. Gour if there is not a great deal of difference between women's colleges and men's colleges?

The Honourable Mr. A. C. Chatterjee: I do not think, Sir, that the Government of India are called upon to make any special inquiries of the nature referred to by the Honourable Dr. Gour.

Dr. H. S. Gour: What guides the Government in making grants to Medical Colleges?

The Honourable Mr. A. C. Chatterjee: I do not think the Government of India make any grants to any Medical College except this College.

Dr. H. S. Gour: Yes, but what guided the Government in making the grant to the Lady Hardinge Medical College?

The Honourable Mr. A. C. Chatterjee: The requirements of the College, Sir.

Dr. H. S. Gour: Irrespective of its efficiency?

The Honourable Mr. A. C. Chatterjee: The College is supposed to be efficient and the Government consider that it is efficient.

Dr. H. S. Gour: If the students were reduced to half their number would that be regarded as a sufficient test of efficiency?

The Honourable Mr. A. C. Chatterjee: I do not think I am required to answer a hypothetical question of that nature.

Mr. J. Chaudhuri: Is it not a fact that the Government of India and the Local Governments spend much more money in this country for the education of males than for the education of females?

Mr. President: I do not think that question arises.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: As regards the efficiency of the College is the Honourable Member aware that it has got a great reputation not only in India but also with the people from abroad who have visited the College?

The Honourable Mr. A. C. Chatterjee: I believe that is the case, Sir.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: May I ask a question, Sir. Is it not a fact that although there is an efficient medical institution in Madras, it does not attract more than 2 per cent. of the female students, whereas this College has attracted as many as 14 women from Madras for its students.

Mr. President: The Honourable Member is giving information.

Dr. H. S. Gour: Does the Honourable Member regard the visitors' opinions as the true test of efficiency?

The Honourable Mr. A. C. Chatterjee: I do not know to whom the Honourable Member refers as the visitors.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: May I ask whether the Honourable Member is aware that Dr. Gour is the Vice-Chancellor of the University of Delhi which probably made the offer to the Lady Hardinge Medical College and which offer was not accepted?

The Honourable Mr. A. C. Chatterjee: I have said, Sir, that I am not aware of the circumstances regarding the offer which was mentioned by the Honourable Member from Nagpur.

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary: Is it not a fact that the costs of the College are to a certain extent increased by reason of the absence of an independent capable medical profession in Delhi and the absence of a medical atmosphere?

Mr. K. Ahmed: That is a matter of opinion, Sir.

The Honourable Mr. A. C. Chatterjee: I do not think this question arises, Sir.

SELECT AND OTHER COMMITTEES.

513. Rai Bahadur Lachmi Prasad Sinha: Will the Government be pleased to state:

- (a) The number of Select Committees on bills or other Committees summoned during the period intervening between the 7th of October, 1922, to the 6th of January, 1923?

(b) The number of days each of such Committees held their meetings to finish the deliberations on matters for which they were summoned?

(c) The amount spent on each of such Committees in the shape of payment of halting and travelling allowances for members?

(d) The number of days with dates on which each of such Committees met for the purpose for which they were summoned?

Mr. E. Burdon: The information is being collected and will be laid on the table when complete.

APPRAISERS AND EXAMINERS, KARACHI CUSTOMS HOUSE.

514. Mr. Harchandrai Vishindas: (a) Will Government be pleased to state if it is a fact that the Government of India had authorized the Bombay Government to give promotion of 50 per cent. maximum to the Appraisers and Examiners of the Karachi Customs House?

(b) Will Government be pleased to state what percentage of promotion has been actually given to Examiners and Appraisers of the Karachi Customs House?

Mr. A. H. Ley: I have been asked by the Honourable Member for Commerce to answer these questions, Sir.

I would refer the Honourable Member to the reply given to the question by Mr. S. C. Shuhani, No. 158, dated the 7th September 1922.

FOOD-STUFFS AND PAY OF CUSTOMS DEPARTMENT.

515. Mr. Harchandrai Vishindas: (a) Will Government be pleased to state by what percentage the prices of necessities of life especially food-stuffs have risen in Karachi and Bombay respectively since the war?

(b) Will Government be pleased to state if it is a fact that Appraisers and Examiners in Bombay get more pay than their compeers in Karachi?

(c) If the reply is in the affirmative will Government be pleased to state the reason why there is difference of pay between the officers of the same grade in the two parts?

(d) Is there any difference of pay between the Assistant Collectors and Collectors at the two ports?

Mr. A. H. Ley: (a) The rise in the retail prices of food-stuffs at Bombay and Karachi, during the month of December, 1922, is estimated in the Bombay Labour Gazette issued in January last to amount to 77 and 56 per cent. respectively over those prevailing in July, 1914.

(b) Yes;

(c) The difference is explained partly by the greater expensiveness of living at Bombay and partly by the fact that the pay of the staff at each port is fixed independently with reference to local conditions of service which are not the same at all the ports;

(d) The Assistant Collectors stationed at Bombay are entitled to a local allowance of Rs. 75 a month.

ASSESSMENT WORKS ON PARCELS FROM ENGLAND.

516. Mr. Harchandrai Vishindas: (a) Will Government be pleased to state if they have received any representation from the Chief Collector of Customs, Karachi, regarding increase in assessment work of parcels received from the United Kingdom?

(b) If so, what action have the Government taken on the matter?

Mr. A. H. Ley: (a) The reply is in the negative.

(b) Does not arise.

BOMBAY INCOME-TAX OFFICES.

517. Mr. Harchandrai Vishindas: Will Government be pleased to state what was the pay of (1) Income-tax Officers, (2) Inspectors, (3) Examiners, (4) clerks of the Bombay Income-tax offices, before their pay was revised?

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: A statement giving the information asked for is laid upon the table.

Statement showing the pay of Income-tax Officers, Inspectors, Examiners and clerks of the Bombay Income-tax Office before re-organisation.

	Designation.	Pay.
Bombay City	1st Income-tax officer	1,500-2,000
	2nd Income-tax officer	1,000-1,500
	Other Income-tax officers	Varying pay according to grade in Provincial service cadre.
	Inspectors	16 on 150-225 4 on 250-350 2 on 375-475
	Examiners	2 on 250-350 6 on 150-225
	Clerks, 1st Grade	80-100
	2nd Grade	60-75
	3rd Grade	40-55
	Examiners' Clerks	80-100

PAY OF INCOME-TAX OFFICERS.

518. Mr. Harchandrai Vishindas: (a) Is it a fact that the pay of the Income-tax Officers, Inspectors and Examiners in Bombay city has been fixed at Rs. 300-50/2-900, 200-25/2-500, 225-25/2-500?

(b) Is it a fact that the pay of the Income-tax Officers, Inspectors and Examiners in Sind, has been proposed as under in the new organization—

300-50/2-900, 150-25/2-350, 175-25/2-350 against 390 to 1,000, 150 to 250, 150 to 250 of their present salary?

If not, what are the facts?

(c) Will Government be pleased to state why the pay of Examiners and Inspectors in Sind has been fixed at such a low figure as compared to Bombay while no difference in pay has been made between the Income-tax Officers in Bombay and in Sind?

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: (a) Yes.

(b) A statement giving the actual figures is laid upon the table.

(c) The work of Income-tax Officers throughout the Presidency is identical. A higher pay has been fixed for the Inspectors and Examiners in Bombay City than in the rest of the Bombay Presidency owing to the more intricate and responsible nature of their duty. The pay fixed both for Inspectors and Examiners in Sind is higher than that fixed for Inspectors and Examiners in the rest of the Bombay Presidency excluding Bombay City. Examiners in Sind receive a pay of 175-325, while the other Examiners receive only 150-225. Inspectors in Sind receive 150-325; Inspectors in other areas outside Bombay City, 150-225.

Statement showing the previous pay and the proposed pay of the income-tax officers, Inspectors and Examiners in Sind.

Designation.	Previous pay.	Proposed pay.
	Rs.	Rs.
Income-tax officers	1 on 1,000-50-1,250 2 on 500-50-750 1 on 300-30-450	Sanctioned temporarily for three years only. 300-50-2-900
Inspectors	1 on 175-10-2-225 2 on 150-10-2-200 1 on 150 1 on 125	150-25-2-825
Examiners	1 on 150 1 on 125 1 on 175-225 3 on 200	175-25-2-825

HOUSE RENT OF OFFICIALS IN KARACHI.

519. Mr. Harchandrai Vishindas: (a) Will Government be pleased to state what house rent allowance officers of the same grade as Inspectors and Examiners get at Karachi?

(b) What house rent do Government propose to give to Examiners and Inspectors at Karachi, and what house rent is given to men in the Telegraph and Railway Departments at Karachi?

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: (a) If the Honourable Member refers to allowances granted to officers serving under the Provincial Government, I suggest that he obtain the information from the Provincial Government.

(b) It is proposed to give a local allowance of Rs. 30 per mensem to Inspectors and Examiners posted to Karachi, in the Income-tax Department. As regards the employees of the Telegraph and Railway Departments, I refer the Honourable Member to the statement laid upon the table in the proceedings of the Legislative Assembly for the 25th September, 1922, in reply to question No. 167, asked on the 7th September, 1922.

. MUHAMMADANS ON SERVICES COMMISSION.

520. Mir Asad Ali Khan Bahadur: (a) Is there any Muhammadan Member in the Royal Commission on Services to safeguard the interests of the Muhammadans?

(b) If not, do the Government propose adding a Muslim Member or two to the Commission?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: (a) The personnel of the Royal Commission has not yet been settled.

(b) The Members of a Royal Commission are appointed by His Majesty the King-Emperor and not by the Government of India.

Munshi Iswar Saran: Will Government suggest the appointment of a Kayastha member to represent the interests of the Kayastha community?

Dr. H. S. Gour: Will Government appoint a member of the Kshatriya community?

Mr. S. O. Shahani: Will Government appoint a Sikh?

Khan Bahadur Abdur Rahim Khan: Will there be an objection to a Muhammadan being appointed?

Mr. K. Ahmed: Will that be confined to the class of pious Brahmins or to the class of people of his way of thinking?

Mr. President: It has been said already that the appointments do not lie with the Government of India.

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas: Will Government take note of the fact that in spite of the demands made by the various communities to have representation on the Royal Commission the opinion of this Assembly does remain confirmed that there is no need for a Royal Commission.

EXPRESS MADRAS TO DELHI.

521. Mir Asad Ali Khan Bahadur: (a) Is it a fact that Railway authorities are thinking of running a through express from Madras to Delhi, as was the case before the war?

(b) If not, will the Government influence the Railway authorities to start a through express from Madras to Delhi, via Wadi, Dhond and Manmad?

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley: (a) Government have no information.

(b) It is very doubtful whether the number of passengers travelling would warrant the running of such a train but the matter will be brought to the notice of the Railways concerned.

RETURN TICKETS.

522. Mir Asad Ali Khan Bahadur: (a) Will the system of return tickets in railways be re-introduced in near future?

(b) If not, do the Government propose introducing the system to facilitate saving and convenience?

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley: (a) and (b). As promised in the reply to the supplementary question asked by Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary in connection with question No. 145, dated the 17th January, 1923, Government have brought the matter to the notice of railways in order that they may consider whether now or at some later date they may be in a position to restore these concessions.

LALA GULZARI LALL.

523. Mr. Pyari Lal: 1. With reference to the Government reply to my question, contained in the letter of the Army Secretary, No. 331-S., dated 20th February, 1923, will the Government be pleased to state if the period for which Lala Gulzari Lall was appointed as a member of the Committee was specified in his letter of appointment?

2. If so, what was the period?

3. Will the Government be pleased to state what is the ordinary term of a non-official member of a Cantonment Committee appointed under section 4 of the Cantonment Code?

4. Is there a uniform practice in all cantonments about such term of appointment?

5. If not, what is the determining factor of such a term?

Mr. E. Burdon: (1) Yes.

(2) One year.

(3) There is no statutory limit to the period of appointment of a non-official member of a cantonment committee. The period is usually stated in the order of appointment issued under section 4 of the Cantonment Code, 1912.

(4) No.

(5) Under section 4 of the Cantonment Code, the matter is left to the discretion of the nominating officer.

QAZI SIRAJUDDIN AHMED AND AMBALA CORRUPTION ENQUIRY.

524. Mr. Pyari Lal: 1. With reference to the Government reply to my question regarding the engagement of Qazi Sirajuddin Ahmed, Bar-at-law, for assistance in Ambala Corruption Enquiry, has the attention of the Government been drawn to an article headed "Is the Government anxious to suppress Corruption"? published in the Cantonment Advocate of 10th December, 1922?

2. Is the Government aware that the All-India Cantonments Association in its telegram dated 27th November, 1922, to the Northern Command, made a clear offer to bear the expenses of Qazi Sirajuddin Ahmed's appointment?

3. If so, will the Government be pleased to state why this offer was not accepted?

Mr. E. Burdon: (1) Yes.

(2) Yes.

(8) Chiefly because at the time it had been found that the legal assistance previously contemplated was not required, and because it had been ascertained that if it should be required at a later stage, Government themselves were prepared to bear the cost.

TRANSFER OF LAND TO SOMDATT RAMLALL, AMBALA.

525. Mr. Pyari Lal: 1. With reference to the Government reply regarding the transfer of a piece of land to Messrs. Somdatt Ramlall, given on 15th January, 1923, is the Government aware that the All-India Cantonments Association wrote to the Cantonment Magistrate, Ambala, and to the G. O. C., Ambala, about their readiness to substantiate the relationship between Somdatt Ramlall and Pandit Shugan Chand, head clerk of the Cantonment office?

2. Has the attention of the Government been drawn to a letter of the All-India Cantonments Association to the Cantonment Magistrate bearing on the subject published in the Cantonment Advocate of 10th November, 1922?

3. Will the Government be pleased to state how this letter was dealt with?

4. Will the Government now direct the Ambala Local Authorities to give the All-India Cantonments Association chance to substantiate this relationship now?

Mr. E. Burdon: 1, 2 and 3 Government have no information on the subject apart from the passage in the Cantonment Advocate mentioned in the second part of the Honourable Member's question, which the Government have seen.

4. The matter to which the Honourable Member refers is one of the matters dealt with by Colonel Lawrenson in the inquiry which he recently conducted in the Ambala Cantonment. Colonel Lawrenson's report is at present under the consideration of Government, and Government are not at present in a position to say what action will be taken in regard to it.

Mr. W. M. Hussanally: May I ask, Sir, if the Honourable Member will obtain the information and place it before the House?

Mr. E. Burdon: What information?

Mr. W. M. Hussanally: The information called for by Mr. Pyari Lal. The Honourable Member said just now that the Government had no information.

(No answer.)

GOVERNMENT GOLD AND STERLING OBLIGATIONS.

526. Mr. Harchandrai Vishindas: Will Government be pleased to state:

- (i) what steps have the Government of India and the Secretary of State taken to limit, reduce or alter the extent of their large gold or sterling obligations, since the demonetisation of silver by European States in the seventies of the last century?

- (ii) what was the extent of such gold or sterling obligations (a) total, (b) in India, (c) in England in the years 1872-73, in 1900, in 1914, i.e., before the war, and in the year 1920-21?
- (iii) leaving aside borrowings on account of war expenses, what factors have operated in increasing our gold or sterling obligations?
- (iv) whether "charges" due to Exchange variations from time to time and Exchange Compensation Allowances have anything to do with this increase?

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: (i), (iii) and (iv). I am afraid this is too large a matter to be dealt with by way of answer to a question.

(ii) The obligations referred to are entirely in England. The direct sterling obligations amounted at the end of—1872-73	to	£39 Millions.

1899-1900	to	£124 „
1913-14	to	£177 „
1920-21	to	£191 „

Mr. W. M. Hussanally: May I, Sir, know if I cannot get any answer from the Army Secretary with reference to my supplementary question on No. 525?

Mr. E. Burdon: I was studying the first three parts of the question which were answered together.

Mr. President: The Honourable Member can raise the point again at the end of the questions.

REMITTANCES TO ENGLAND.

527. Mr. Harchandrai Vishindas: Will Government be pleased to lay on the table figures for each year from the year 1872-73 up to date with regard to following:

- (i) total Remittance to England to cover Home charges and all other kinds of charges including interest, annuities, etc.
- (ii) charges or net loss due to Exchange variations on these remittances?
- (iii) charges due to Exchange Compensation Allowances?

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: (i) The Honourable Member is referred to supplementary account No. 1-A, on pages 370 to 374, of the "Statistics compiled from the Finance and Revenue Accounts of the Government of India from 1st April, 1912, to 31st March, 1920." These give the net expenditure in England for each year from 1814-15 to 1919-20. The corresponding figures for 1920-21 and 1921-22 are £28,200,250 and £27,747,795, respectively.

(ii) The figures required for the 8 years 1912-13 to 1919-20 will be found in accounts Nos. 51 and 51-A on pages 236 and 237 of the above volume. Figures for previous years will be found in the earlier issues of the same publication.

(iii) A statement is laid on the table giving the figures from 1912-13 to 1920-21. Figures for earlier years will be found in the Finance and Revenue Accounts.

Statement showing the charges for exchange compensation allowance.

Year.	Imperial.	Provincial.	Total.
	Rs.	Rs.	Rs.
1912-13	33,45,737	16,76,262	50,21,999
1913-14	33,43,223	16,91,747	50,34,970
1914-15	33,07,317	17,38,177	50,45,494
1915-16	33,84,993	16,64,659	50,49,652
1916-17	33,91,610	15,86,672	49,78,282
1917-18	30,71,628	13,03,882	43,75,510
1918-19	5,97,547	2,23,435	8,21,982
1919-20	...	...	...
1920-21	26,291	35,731	62,022

PAYMENT OF SALARIES OF GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES.

528. Mr. Harchandrai Vishindas: Will the Government be pleased to state:

- (i) whether it is a fact that under terms of contract, the Government pay salaries and emoluments of all their employees in rupees or sterling only?
- (ii) whether the terms of contract of persons recruited in England contain provision for Exchange Compensation Allowances?
- (iii) if not, the reasons why Government award such compensations on remittances made by their servants employed in India but resident in England?
- (iv) what is the extreme variation in points in the last thirty years, (a) in the value of gold, (b) in the value of silver?
- (v) maximum fall in pound sterling (or gold value) of the salaries of public servants resident in England?
- (vi) when were the salaries, emoluments, etc., last improved: (a) of members of the Imperial Services; (b) of members of Provincial and non-gazetted services?

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: I am afraid I cannot deal adequately with this matter in a reply to a question. Moreover, the collection of the information asked for would involve an amount of labour quite incommensurate with the results.

PAY OF BRITISH AND INDIAN SOLDIERS.

529. Mr. Harchandrai Vishindas: Will the Government be pleased to state:

- (i) (a) why is it that the pay of the British soldier while he is in India is paid in terms of sterling, and that of the Indian soldier, even while he is taken abroad outside India is fixed in rupees?

(b) whether the Exchange Compensation Allowance paid to the British soldier and other British employees on account of Exchange fluctuations has ever been paid to the Indian soldier and employees when they have been affected by these variations?

- (ii) when was it originally undertaken that the payments of retired servants of the Government resident in England should be paid in sterling?
- (iii) have the Government considered or do they propose to consider the desirability of modifying the above arrangements?

Mr. E. Burdon: (i) (a) The pay of the British soldier in India is based on a sterling rate and is disbursed in rupees, at a rate of conversion which does not vary with the fluctuations of exchange. The pay of the Indian soldier, which is fixed in rupees, is disbursed to him in the currency of the country in which he is serving.

(b) No exchange compensation allowance is paid to the British soldier. Compensation on account of fluctuations of exchange has, at various times, been paid to Indian soldiers when serving outside India in countries which do not have a rupee currency.

(ii) In June 1863.

(iii) In the opinion of the Government of India the arrangements described above are equitable and it is not proposed to alter them.

POWERS OF SANCTION OF SECRETARY OF STATE AND INDIA OFFICE.

530. Mr. Harchandrai Vishindas: Will the Government be pleased to state:

- (i) whether it is a fact that the Secretary of State and the India Office enjoy absolute power and unchecked authority to initiate, control or sanction additional expenditure of almost every kind, over and above the budgetted one?
- (ii) how many times during the last thirty years has this authority been exercised by them?
- (iii) whether they would be pleased to lay a statement on the table recounting the nature of each item on which extra expenditure has been made by the Secretary of State or the India Office in the above manner?

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: I presume the Honourable Member means to refer to the powers of the Secretary of State in Council.

(i) The Honourable Member will find the financial powers of the Secretary of State in Council defined in section 21 of the Government of India Act.

(ii) and (iii) It is not possible to furnish the information desired by the Honourable Member without an elaborate investigation.

RAILWAY BOARD PASSES.

531. Maulvi Miyan Asjad-ul-lah: (a) Will Government be pleased to lay on the table a statement showing separately the number of family and single passes as well as privilege ticket orders granted to each officer of the first, second and third class belonging to the Railway Board and the Office of the Accountant-General, Railways, over the Company and the State-managed Railways respectively during the year 1922.

(b) What average additional emoluments does each class of officer get per month in the shape of passes and P. T. O.'s?

(c) How does this rate compare with the rates of pay drawn by similar class of officers in other departments of the Government of India?

(d) What is the total annual cost of these passes and P. T. O.'s and to what accounts is this expenditure debited?

(e) What is the aggregate loss of profit to Government on account of the grant of these free passes?

(f) Do the conditions of service in these offices provide for the grant of these concessions or they are granted merely as a matter of convention?

(g) Who is the sanctioning authority and what is the criterion for eligibility for these concessions?

(h) Is it a fact that the pass holders are allowed to travel by the mail trains and this often causes inconvenience to passengers who travel on payment particularly during the X'mas and other holidays?

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley: (a) A statement showing the number of passes and privilege ticket orders issued is laid on the table.

(b), (c), (d), (e), (f) and (g). The Honourable Member is referred to parts (a), (c) and (g) of the reply given to question No. 446 on 5th March, 1923.

(h) Not always but in all cases ticket holders have preference for accommodation.

Statement showing the number of single passes and P. T. Os. issued to Railway Board's staff and Accountant General, Railways, during the year 1922.

Class.	Over State Railways.	Over Company-managed Railways.	Combined State and Company Lines.
First Class passes	95	95	87
Second Class passes	351	98	179
Inter Class passes	134	21	46
Third Class passes	185	8	25
Second Class P. T. Os.	24	14	2
Inter " "	69	54	19
Third " "	15	126	25

MEMORIAL FROM COORG.

532. Rao Bahadur C. S. Subrahmanayam: 1. Will the Government be pleased to state whether a memorial dated September, 1918, addressed to His Excellency the Viceroy and Governor General by the leading inhabitants of Coorg, was received and were any orders passed thereon?

2. Will the Government be pleased to lay on the table a copy of the memorial and the orders thereon?

3. Have the Government under consideration the amalgamation of the Province of Coorg with the Presidency of Madras and thereby save a considerable sum now spent under separate Supervising and Controlling establishments?

4. Is not the area of the province of Coorg just about that of a Madras district?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: (1) and (2). A copy of the memorial referred to was received by the Government of India from the Chief Commissioner in 1919, but no orders have been passed on it. Government think that no useful purpose would be served by laying a copy of it on the table, but such a copy will be supplied to the Honourable Member, if he so desires.

(3) No.

(4) The area of the Coorg Province is 1,582 square miles, which is much smaller than the area of most districts in the Madras Presidency.

IMPORTATION OF SLEEPERS.

533. Mr. K. C. Neogy: (a) Has the attention of Government been drawn to a statement dated Delhi, January 17 last, from the Associated Press of India, in which it is stated that "sleepers are only imported from outside India to make good the shortage of supplies in India"?

(b) Was the said statement issued under official authority?

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley: The answer to (a) is in the affirmative.

(b) The sentence quoted forms part of information furnished by the Railway Board to the Press which represented the position as known to them at that time.

Mr. K. Ahmed: May I enquire, Sir, the names and particulars of those who are the suppliers of these sleepers from outside India?

Mr. President: The question that arises is the authenticity of the statement made regarding the importation of sleepers from outside, not whence those sleepers come.

SLEEPERS AVAILABLE IN INDIA.

534. Mr. K. C. Neogy: Are Government aware that there are several lakhs of deodar and other sleepers available in India at present?

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley: Yes. But the relative price has also to be taken into consideration.

Dr. H. S. Gour: What is the relative price which has to be taken into consideration? What is the difference between a country-made sleeper and an imported sleeper?

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley: I am afraid I am not able to give exact figures in reply to that question, but, obviously, in purchasing sleepers we have to take into consideration the price at the point at which they are landed.

JARRAH SLEEPERS FOR G. I. P. RAILWAY.

535. Mr. K. C. Neogy: (a) Are Government aware that the Great Indian Peninsula Railway has recently called for tenders for one lakh of Jarrah sleepers?

(b) Is it a fact that the Great Indian Peninsula Railway has called for these tenders in spite of the fact that it was offered deodar and other sleepers available in India?

Mr. O. D. M. Hindley: The answer to (a) and (b) is in the affirmative.

Mr. S. C. Shahani: Are Government prepared to forbid the importation of sleepers from outside India?

Mr. President: That question does not arise.

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas: Will Government kindly state whether they have tried to obtain sleepers from the Canara forests?

Mr. O. D. M. Hindley: I am afraid I have no information. I should like notice of that question.

Dr. H. S. Gour: What were the tenders for the deodar sleepers referred to in clause (b), and what was the price of the jarrah sleepers ordered by the Great Indian Peninsula Railway?

Mr. O. D. M. Hindley: I should like to have notice of that question.

Mr. R. A. Spence: Would Government be pleased to give the reasons for the decision of the Great Indian Peninsula Railway in this case?

Mr. O. D. M. Hindley: The Great Indian Peninsula Railway, like all Companies' Railways, are exercising their own competence in the matter.

Dr. H. S. Gour: Is it not a fact that the Great Indian Peninsula Railway, being a subsidized railway, acts under the direction and control of the Railway Board?

Mr. O. D. M. Hindley: Not in the matter of making contracts for sleepers, Sir.

Dr. H. S. Gour: Could the Great Indian Peninsula Railway pay more than the current rate for sleepers, and the Railway Board be powerless to check them?

Mr. President: That is a hypothetical question.

THIRUMALVASAL PORT.

536. Mr. Narayandas Girdhardas: (a) Has the attention of the Government been drawn to the written memorandum submitted to the Acworth Committee (Railways) by Lieutenant-Colonel E. Barnardiston, regarding the agreement between the South Indian Railway and the British India Steam Navigation Company, about Thirumalvasal Port, in Tanjore district, and to the annexure to the oral evidence of Messrs. Ross Logan and C. S. Rowbotham, relating to the same subject?

(b) Are the Government prepared to consider the question of getting the said agreement cancelled or of taking any action in the matter?

Mr. O. D. M. Hindley: (a) The reply is in the affirmative.

(b) Government already have the matter under consideration in communication with the South Indian Railway.

INDIAN COMPANIES AND PROVINCIAL REGISTRATION DEPARTMENTS, MADRAS.

537. Mr. Narayandas Girdhardas: 1. Will the Government be pleased to state whether a representation was made to the Honourable the Commerce Member when he visited Madras in December last, by the Southern India Chamber of Commerce, urging the separation of the Indian Companies Department in the Presidency from the Provincial Registration Department on the score of—

- (a) Economy to the Central Government,
- (b) Greater efficiency in the administration of the Companies Department, and
- (c) The desirability of dispensing with a number of Assistant Registrars in the districts?

2. Will the Government of India consider the desirability of placing the Indian Companies Department in the Madras Presidency on an independent footing as is the case in Bombay and Calcutta?

Mr. A. H. Ley: 1. Yes.

2. The question raised by the Honourable Member was fully considered in 1913, and again only last year in consultation with the Local Government and it was decided that the existing arrangements were the most economical. An establishment of the nature of that retained in Calcutta and Bombay would be more costly than the present separate establishment now entrusted with this work in Madras City. The existence in the mofussil of Madras of a large number of nidhis or mutual loan associations necessitates a district staff which can only be economically supplied by utilizing the services of some of the officers of the Local Government. In Bengal and Bombay such conditions do not exist and there is no need for any officers in the districts. The Government of India do not therefore propose to disturb the existing arrangements.

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary: May we have your indulgence, Sir, in getting from the Honourable the Finance Member some . . .

Mr. W. M. Hussanally: Sir, I wanted to know from the Honourable the Army Secretary if he would call for the information which I asked for and place it before the House—the information which he said the Government of India had not got.

Mr. E. Burdon: Parts, 1, 2 and 3 of Mr. Pyari Lal's question No. 525 deal with certain not very important details of a matter, which as I have said in reply to part 4, of same question was one of the matters dealt with by Colonel Lawrenson in an inquiry which he recently conducted in the Ambala Cantonment. I explained also that Colonel Lawrenson's report is under the consideration of Government, and it is only when consideration of the report has advanced further that Government would be able to say whether it is necessary to call for further information in regard to the details dealt with in the first three parts of the question and any other details which may be thought relevant.

Mr. President: I have allowed the Honourable Member from Sind to re-open a question after we passed the substantive question. It would be improper to allow reference back to questions after we pass the answers unless, as in this case, the supplementary question had already been put and the answer was not ready. Solely because the answer was not yet ready, I allowed the Honourable Member to go back, which otherwise would not be proper.

UNSTARRED QUESTION AND ANSWER.

INDIANIZATION OF EIGHT INFANTRY UNITS.

228. Rai Sahib Lakshmi Narayan Lal: 1. (a) Will the Government be pleased to state whether any scheme or programme has been prepared for the Indianization of the eight infantry units of the Indian Army for which His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief announced steps would be taken immediately?

(b) If so, will the Government be pleased to lay the same on the table?

(c) If not, will the Government be pleased to state when the scheme or the programme is likely to be ready?

(d) In what time do the Government propose to complete the Indianization of the said units?

2. Do the Government propose not to undertake the Indianization of any other unit before the completion of the Indianization of the said eight units?

Mr. E. Burdon: A statement will be laid upon the table of this House to-morrow, which will deal fully with all the points to which the Honourable Member's question is directed.

PARTICULARS RE LUMP RETRENCHMENT FIGURES.

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary (Calcutta: Non-Muhammadan Urban): Sir, we ask for your indulgence in getting some very necessary information from the Honourable the Finance Member. The lump retrenchment figures distributed under the various budget items are not yet available and without those figures, anything like reasoned and reasonable proposals in connection with the Demands for Grants would not be possible. Therefore, the first thing that I should like to know is as to when those figures will be available, and the second thing is whether the two days rigid limitation about proposals will be insisted on, having regard to the fact that the figures are not yet available. After we get the figures, they will have to be studied in connection with the Inchcape Report as well as the original Demands for Grants, and then and then alone can we frame anything like proposals that will be helpful to the department, if they ever can be.

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett (Finance Member): Sir, I recognise that the House has been put to a considerable amount of difficulty owing to the way in which it has been necessary first of all to circulate the detailed estimates for the Demand for Grants without the special cuts and then to follow that up by a new paper showing the special cuts. I hope to be in a position to distribute either this evening or early to-morrow morning the further paper promised showing the distribution over the various heads of the special cut of 4 crores. I hope very much that that will be in the hands of Honourable Members first thing to-morrow morning. We are doing our best. We, like them, have been in a certain amount of difficulty over that matter.

As regards the second point raised, speaking for myself, I should certainly not desire to raise a formal objection, because an amendment has been put in regard to which the notice required under the rules has not been given, such notice not having been given because of the absence of the paper showing the detailed reduction.

MESSAGES FROM THE COUNCIL OF STATE.

Secretary of the Assembly: Sir, two Messages have been received from the Secretary to the Council of State. The first one is as follows:

" Sir, I am directed to inform you that the Council of State has, at its meeting held on the 8th March, 1923, agreed without any amendments to the following Bills which were passed by the Legislative Assembly:

- (i) A Bill to provide for the creation of a fund for the improvement and development of the growing, marketing and manufacture of cotton in India.
- (ii) A Bill to amend the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922.
- (iii) A Bill further to amend the Government Savings Banks Act, 1873."

The second Message runs as follows:

" Sir, I am directed to inform you that the Bill to consolidate and amend the law in British India relating to official secrets, which was passed by the Legislative Assembly at its meeting of the 24th February, 1923, was passed by the Council of State at its meeting on the 8th March, 1923, with the amendments indicated in the attached statement.

The Council of State requests the concurrence of the Legislative Assembly in the amendments."

Sir, I lay on the table the Official Secrets Bill as passed by the Council of State.

Statement showing the amendments made in the Indian Official Secrets Bill by the Council of State.

" 1. In part (c) of sub-clause (1) of clause 6 of the Bill, for the words 'or uses' the words 'or knowingly uses' were substituted.

2. In part (b) of sub-clause (2) of clause 6 of the Bill, for the words 'neglects or' the word 'wilfully' was substituted."

THE CRIMINAL LAW AMENDMENT BILL.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: I beg to move:

" That the amendments made by the Council of State in the Bill further to amend the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, the European Vagrancy Act, 1874, the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, and the Central Provinces Courts Act, 1917, in order to provide for the removal of certain existing discriminations between European British subjects and Indians in criminal trials and proceedings be taken into consideration."

The amendments made by the Council of State are before the House. They will be found to be few in number, and with one exception, formal in nature. The exception to which I refer is the amendment which we introduced in order to give effect to the vote in this House on the subject of appeals in cases where sentence of whipping was given without a sentence of imprisonment. I shall not refer further to that matter now as an opportunity for discussion will arise, if discussion is necessary, when you place that amendment before the House.

The motion was adopted.

Mr. President: Amendment made by the Council of State:

"That clause 1 be re-numbered as sub-clause (1) of clause 1 and to that clause the following sub-clause be added, namely:

'(2) It shall come into force on such date as the Governor General in Council may, by notification in the Gazette of India, appoint."

The question is that this Assembly do agree with the Council of State in that amendment.

The motion was adopted.

Mr. President: Further amendment made by the Council of State:

"For sub-clause (2) of clause 2 the following be substituted, namely:

'(2) In clause (j) of the same sub-section, after the word 'Rangoon' the words 'and the Courts of the Judicial Commissioners of the Central Provinces, Oudh and Sind' shall be inserted'."

The question is that this Assembly do agree with the Council of State in that amendment.

The motion was adopted.

Mr. President: Further amendment made by the Council of State:

"After clause 4 the following clause be inserted, namely:

'4A. In sub-section (1) of section 29 of the said Code, for the words and figures 'provisions of section 447' the words 'other provisions of this Code' shall be substituted'."

The question is that this Assembly do agree with the Council of State in that amendment.

The motion was adopted.

Mr. President: Further amendment made by the Council of State:

"In clause 5, in the proposed new section 29A, the words 'Notwithstanding anything contained in section 28 or section 29' be omitted."

The question is that this Assembly do agree with the Council of State in that amendment.

The motion was adopted.

Mr. President: Further amendment made that:

"For clause 11 the following clause be substituted, namely:

'11. In section 266 of the said Code, after the word 'includes' the following words shall be inserted, namely:
'the Courts of the Judicial Commissioners of the Central Provinces, Oudh and Sind, and'."

The question is that this Assembly do agree with the Council of State in that amendment.

The motion was adopted.

Mr. President: Further amendment made:

"After clause 19 the following clause be inserted, namely:

'19A. In section 390 of the said Code, after the word 'shall' the words 'subject to the provisions of section 391' shall be inserted'."

The question is that this Assembly do agree with the Council of State in that amendment.

The motion was adopted.

Mr. President: Further amendment made:

"After clause 19 the following clause be inserted, namely:

'19-B. In sub-section (1) of section 391 of the said Code, for the words 'is sentenced to whipping in addition to imprisonment in a case which is subject to appeal' the following shall be substituted, namely:

'(a) is sentenced to whipping only and furnishes bail to the satisfaction of the Court for his appearance at such time and place as the Court may direct, or

(b) is sentenced to whipping in addition to imprisonment'."

Dr. H. S. Gour (Nagpur Division: Non-Muhammadan): Might I suggest in this connection a slight improvement in order to bring the provisions of clause (a) into conformity with the general Code of Criminal Procedure. I suggest that the words "or executes recognizances" be added after the word "bail". The sentence, as amended, would then read:

"is sentenced to whipping only and furnishes bail or executes recognizances to the satisfaction of the Court for his appearance at such time and place as the Court may direct."

Mr. President: Amendment moved:

"After the word 'bail' insert the words 'or executes recognizances'."

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: I think the House will agree with me that, when an offender has been sentenced and it is proposed to release him pending appeal against that sentence, the right form is bail. The House will remember that we considered that point, when we discussed the question relating to an appeal against whipping, and the suggestion made to us in this House was bail. That is the suggestion we have accepted and to which we have given effect.

The motion was negatived.

Mr. President: The question is that this Assembly do agree with the Council of State in the said amendment.

The motion was adopted.

Mr. President: The question is that this Assembly do agree with the Council of State in the re-numbering of the said clauses.

The motion was adopted.

THE INDIAN PENAL CODE (AMENDMENT) BILL

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey (Home Member): Sir, I move:

"That the Bill to amend sections 362 and 366 of the Indian Penal Code, as amended, be passed."

The House will remember that when we dealt here with this Bill, which was known as the White Slave Traffic Bill, I did not at the time put the final motion for passing, as we wished to have an opportunity to consider the effect of the amendment which was made in this House, namely, the amendment which raised the age from 16 to 18. I now propose to ask the House to pass the Bill. At the same time I think the change made is one which will require consideration. As will be remembered, we pointed out on a previous occasion that the age in other parallel sections of the Indian Penal Code was 16, sections which in themselves involve what seem to be more serious offences. We desire to have an opportunity of considering with the Local Governments whether it will be possible to allow these two differing ages to stand side by side in the Penal Code. What I propose to do, therefore, is to ask that the Bill be passed, but subsequently to take an opportunity of suggesting elsewhere the provision of a commencement clause which will give us time to consider the effect of the change that has been made. The House will, I think, appreciate my point in this matter. It is inconsistent in itself to have two different ages in the Indian Penal Code applied to offences which may be described as more or less parallel, and it is advisable that we should have an opportunity of discussing with Local Governments whether any other changes may be advisable in the Indian Penal Code before we proceed further in the matter. It is for that reason that I shall propose elsewhere the introduction of a commencement clause. That is a very usual feature in these Bills. We have had to introduce a commencement clause, for instance, in the Bill which the House has just passed. Subject to this understanding, I now ask that the Bill be passed.

[Sir Malcolm Hailey.]

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar (Madras: Nominated Non-Official): Sir, I do not quite follow the Honourable the Home Member when he says that a commencement section will be introduced later on. I take it that those sections which are in the Indian Penal Code already are now amended and that they will stand part of the Code. Is it intended that before these provisions are given effect to, a commencement clause will be introduced later on and that meanwhile these clauses will not be operative. If the meaning is that it is not to be operative until the commencement clause comes in, I do not see the object of passing the Bill now, and then trying to introduce a commencement clause later on. Is it intended that the commencement clause should be introduced in another place?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: Yes.

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary (Calcutta: Non-Muhammadan Urban): I do not quite agree with Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar that there is no object in passing the Bill now. On the other hand I think this is quite a good opportunity. When we parted on the day that the Bill was considered clause by clause, we parted under a sense—I do not mind calling it so—a sense of disappointment. The usual thing on these occasions is for the Honourable Member in charge of the Bill to ask that the Bill be passed, and when the motion was not made some of us got the impression that there was a rift in the lute that did not quite conduce to the usual procedure being adopted. It has been explained to-day that the Government wanted to consider how the passing of such a measure as raising the age limit for the limited purpose in view was likely to affect the other sections in the criminal law of the land. Much does not seem to have been done in the meantime and we are about where we were when we parted on that occasion. The Honourable the Home Member is at liberty to take any steps he desires or thinks necessary, elsewhere; but I should like to press again a point of view that some of us tried to press the other day, this particular measure stands on a footing all its own. The other sections are more or less different and can be differentiated. This section deals with the creation of a new offence as it was put, in whatever sense that might have been intended; we were recognising that a crime that had so long escaped was being dealt with now and in the light of advancing knowledge and facts the Assembly thought that the age limit should be higher. Even if it takes some time to bring the other sections into line—and we suggest again that that is the remedy that should be invoked in the case of the other sections—there is no reason why effect should not be given to the provisions of this measure pending the remedying of the other sections. From that point of view the Assembly would, I think, be of the same mind as it was when the clauses were considered one by one, viz., that as soon as possible effect should be given to what has been enacted. That would be somewhat in line with the undertaking that we have practically given in Europe, following up which lead we have taken up this matter. One does not know how long it may take to get the other sections into line with the present section; but in the meantime there seems to be not much reason why the matter should be held up in the way that is suggested. In giving our accord to the passing of the measure, I am sure we should like to put that point of view before the Honourable the Home Member so that he may see that the enforcement of this measure may not be unduly delayed. On the other hand the other sections should be brought into line as soon as possible.

Dr. H. S. Gour (Nagpur Division: Non-Muhammadan): Sir, there is another aspect of the question upon which I should like to address the House. It is this: supposing this House passes this Bill with the clauses inserted in another place for postponing its commencement to such date as the Governor General in Council may notify. In the meantime the Government of India consult the local Governments and public opinion on the subject of the other cognate sections of the Indian Penal Code being brought into line with the amendment made in this section; and suppose the local Governments and public opinion oppose any changes in those sections. What will then be the attitude of the Government of India regarding the commencement of this solitary section? Will they then never bring it into force at all? If so, the result would be a measure passed by both the Houses and ripe for enforcement immediately might be indefinitely deferred by the executive action of the Government of India. Now, that is a contingency which we in this House should certainly deprecate and we want an assurance from the Honourable the Home Member that suppose public opinion and the local Governments do not support the enhancement of age in the other sections of the Indian Penal Code, what would be the attitude of the Government regarding the measure which is to pass into law with the vote of this House and of the other House? The Honourable the Home Member is no doubt aware that the Government opposed the raising of the age limit and supported its attitude by a reference to the opinions of the local Governments and certain public bodies. The local Governments and public bodies who have opposed the enhancement of age under this section are not likely to change their views regarding the enhancement of age under the two or three other sections to which the Honourable the Home Member made reference on the last occasion, and therefore I submit the contingency I have pointed out is by no means a remote one, namely, that it may be that the local Governments and public opinion may not support the raising of age in respect of the other cognate sections. In that case I should like to have a definite assurance from the Honourable the Home Member that it would not jeopardise the enactment of the measure which we are about to pass.

Colonel Sir Henry Stanyon (United Provinces; European): Sir, I strongly support the proposal to introduce a commencement clause. I think it is necessary from every point of view, and chiefly from the point of view of legislative consistency in this House. In a number of sections relating to offences against minor girls, the Indian Penal Code fixes the maximum age at 16 years. In the case of this one particular section which we are now engaged in passing into law, this House has decided the limit of age to be 18 years. That is to say, this House has in a sensible and correct way decided that a minor girl under this law shall be in accordance with the law of majority in India. (Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary: "And for this purpose"). Now, I do not at all share the apprehensions of my learned friend Dr. Gour. He thinks that if this Bill is held up, public opinion in India may insist on retaining 16 as the proper limit of age. I am not for one moment prepared to admit that the decision of this House, fixing the limit at 18 years, is not in accordance with the public opinion in India. If, in fact, on further reference it is found to be against the general body of public opinion in India, then this House will have to recognise that it has come to a decision which is contrary to the public opinion which it is supposed to represent; but I have no such fear. I think that, without any delay, while this Bill is held up so as to secure consistency, a measure should be introduced officially,—and if not officially, then non-officially,—to bring the limit of age up to 18 years in all the cognate sections of the Indian Penal Code; and I feel sure that public opinion, and any future Assembly which may represent us who are here to-day, will sustain a measure of that kind; but it certainly would be confusing and undesirable that one of the same class of acts should be an offence when committed against a girl who has not yet attained 18 years, while in all other cognate offences the age limit should be 16 years. That would be legislative inconsistency. I therefore think that on these grounds the House will be well advised to accept the proposal that a commencement clause should for the present be introduced.

[Colonel Sir Henry Stanyon.]

Mr. J. N. Mukherjee (Calcutta Suburbs: Non-Muhammadan Urban): Sir, I also wish to add a word or two in support of the Government position, and in doing so I venture to point out the position in which the House finds itself at the present moment. As has been explained by the Honourable the Home Member out of a group of cases of a similar nature those of a less serious character with which we are at present concerned in connection with the present Bill, this House has fixed the age limit at 18 years, in constituting an offence under the Bill. Therefore, the position is something like this. Where a person deals in the traffic of sale or hire of girls for immoral purposes, the age limit at present is 16 years under the Penal Code. Whereas in the present Bill where single cases of behaviour may be contemplated, where say, by an abuse of authority, a person induces a woman just on one occasion, to go from any place with a certain intent, the age is fixed by the Bill at 18 years. That is, a larger class of cases of a less heinous character but punishable with the same punishment as in the more heinous offences say, for example, under section 372, Indian Penal Code, have been brought within the operation of this Bill. Therefore, as has been pointed out by my Honourable friend, Sir Henry Stanyon, there will be a real inconsistency in the Indian Penal Code, as soon as the Bill is passed and that is the position in which we are placed by the passing of the present Bill. The House is not at present concerned with the means by which it can get rid of this inconsistency because, after consideration of the whole situation, and of the opinions of local Governments, etc., some means may be devised by which this inconsistency can be got rid of. We are not concerned with that. The question, at the present moment, is whether time should be taken in the manner proposed to consider the situation and to obtain the opinion of the local Governments on the point. The present Bill is a Bill to give effect to the International Convention held at Paris and in that view it has become necessary to pass legislation in this country. The initiation of the Bill did not commence in this country but it was from outside, and therefore the country can wait in a matter of this kind and, as has been pointed out, it may be necessary in order to avoid the inconsistency to raise the age limit of 16 years, in section 372 and the next section of the Indian Penal Code where the sale or hire of girls for immoral purposes and so forth, are dealt with to 18 years. So that, that is the broader question with which the House is faced, not the exact way in which this Bill is to be dealt with in future. There are means, no doubt, in the Government of India Act itself by which situations like the present, in which the House now stands, can be dealt with. Therefore, I submit, Sir, that the House need not now worry to consider in anticipation the measures it may have need to take after opinion of the Local Governments shall have been taken on the matter, and after considering the situation further. I therefore, Sir, support the observations which have been made by the Honourable the Home Member in connection with the passing of this Bill.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: I should like to make clear the attitude of Government on this subject. It is necessary that I should do so, because Dr. Gour has asked me a definite question on the matter and asked for a categorical undertaking. He asks whether, if as a result of our inquiries from Local Governments and the public it appears that the latter is opposed to any change in other sections of the Indian Penal Code, that in itself will cause us to delay the application of the Bill which is now before the House. I think Sir Henry Stanyon has already given him the answer. It would be impossible for me to give that categorical undertaking for which he asks. If it really appears that the country at large, when the definite issue in its net form is before it (as it never has been put before it yet) is opposed to raising the age from 16 to 18 in those other sections, 373 and the like, then I think Government would be justified in considering that the House had made an error in raising the age from 16 to 18 in regard to the procurement offences and would be justified in reconsidering the question whether it should give effect to the Bill which is before the House. I may point out that the fact that a Bill has been passed in both Houses of the Legislature, even the fact that it has been passed by an overwhelming majority, which would certainly not be the case in this particular Bill, cannot deprive the Executive Government of a certain responsibility in regard to it. If it were made abundantly clear from subsequent inquiries, that the matter needed reconsideration, and that the public voice of the country itself demanded delay and reconsideration, then it would be the duty of the Governor General to refuse his assent to the Act in order that such reconsideration might take place. That position is a perfectly constitutional one; but is of course one with which I have not desired to confront the House in the past and do not desire to confront the House with now. I have suggested a more reasonable remedy, one which, I think, has been approved by speakers this morning, namely, that we should ask the Council of State to put in a commencement clause in this Bill, as we sometimes do in regard to other Bills; that would give us the opportunity of putting the whole matter before Local Governments and the public in a clear and definite form. I claim that so far, the problem never really has been before them. What was before them was a somewhat mixed problem connected with the ratification of the convention to which the representatives of India had agreed to adhere. But we have now a definite Bill, which shows exactly how the matter will stand under the criminal law and enables the public to make a comparison with other sections of the Code. If it appears that there is a general consensus of opinion that the age generally should be raised to 18, then of course we shall take it that the public agrees with the view expressed by a majority of this Assembly. If it appears, on the other hand, that there is a general consensus of opinion throughout the country that the age throughout should remain at 16, then we have very good ground for reconsidering the whole matter. I have stated the case to the House frankly in order that it might be under no misapprehension as to our attitude on this subject. But I can only claim that I think that attitude is a reasonable one in itself.

[Sir Malcolm Hailey.]

Mr. President: The question is that the Bill, as amended, be passed. The motion was adopted.

RESOLUTION RE EMIGRATION OF UNSKILLED LABOUR TO MAURITIUS.

Mr. J. Hullah (Revenue and Agriculture Secretary): I move, Sir:

"That this Assembly approves the draft notification which has been laid in draft before the Chamber specifying the terms and conditions on which emigration for the purpose of unskilled work shall be lawful to Mauritius, and recommends to the Governor General in Council that the notification be published in the Gazette of India."

I am sorry, Sir, that we have to ask the House to discuss this Resolution at such short notice, especially at a time when they have many other important matters to consider. But our negotiations with the Mauritius Government continued until a few days ago, so that we could not put the Resolution before the House sooner. On the other hand the state of business before the House for the rest of the month is, I understand, so congested that it would have been perhaps impossible to put the Resolution before the House later in the month. We have however done our best and have supplied Honourable Members with a full copy of the papers.

I come now to the subject of the Resolution. So far as the composition of its population is concerned, Mauritius may fairly be described as an Indian Colony. No less than 70 per cent. of the population of the island consists of Indians who have either emigrated from India or are the descendants of persons who have done so. And we may dismiss completely and immediately from our minds the troublesome question of equality of status. Indians in Mauritius have complete equality of status in every particular with all classes and communities in the island. Mauritius is a small place, but has a revenue, I understand, of not less than 2 crores of rupees. In area it is good deal smaller than many a tahsil or taluka in India, and I doubt whether anywhere in the world you could find an area of similar size, and dependent on a single agricultural industry, so rich or so prosperous. The cause of this prosperity is the sugar industry, almost the sole industry of the island, and one that is carried on certainly with very great success and, I believe, with very great efficiency. But the industry is now threatened seriously by a shortage of labour. There are two causes of this shortage. Although the area under cane has increased by 26,000 acres in the last few years from 146,000 to 172,000 acres, the increase of the population has been very slow. The causes of this are firstly that Mauritius suffered very severely from the epidemic of influenza three or four years ago and secondly that the capital and chief sea-port, Port Louis, is very insanitary and has a high rate of mortality. The number of able bodied labourers is less by 9,000 than it was 10 or 12 years ago. But there is another and a more important cause of the shortage of labour. When I spoke about a month ago on the question of emigration to Ceylon, I was chaffed for having been so enthusiastic that I might have been speaking as a planter. If I am accused to-day of speaking with the voice of a planter, I can at least claim that 46 per cent. of my voice is Indian. The Indians who went out to Mauritius many years ago as poor labourers have now by thrift and consequent prosperity acquired no less than 46 per cent. of the sugar area in Mauritius and hold this area, not as tenants of the bigger estates but in full proprietary right, to dispose of as they please and to do whatever they like with it. But, as Honourable Members will have seen from the papers before them, it is not merely for the planting industry that labour is needed. Even more it is needed, and in the forefront of the Governor's proposals is a demand for labour, for large Government works, sanitary works and water-works, to improve the admittedly unsatisfactory health of the island and particularly of Port Louis. No less than one crore and 40 lakhs of rupees are lying in the treasury in Mauritius because they cannot be spent, owing to the want of labour, on a programme of works which will above all benefit the town of Port Louis, which is very largely, I believe mostly, populated by Indians.

Emigration from India to Mauritius has a very long history, but we need not go back very far. I go back to 1910 when a Committee, known as the Sanderson Committee, appointed to inquire into the question of emigration from India to the Protectorates and Crown Colonies, recommended that there should be no further emigration. It was said that the population was already dense; it was said that the supply of agricultural labour at the time was sufficient and there would come a time when the Indian labouring population, then unwilling to work, would be forced by dire stress of circumstances to do so. That prophecy has not been fulfilled. It was also said that pauperism was growing in the island. After this on several occasions, chiefly before the war, the Mauritius Government re-opened the question and asked the Government of India to resume emigration from this country. But those negotiations came to nothing, until in 1921, the Governor of Mauritius again opened the question and asked us to let him have 1,000 Indian labourers for public works and 200 artisans. We told him that a change had come over our emigration law and that the Government of India had no power to allow emigration without the consent of both Houses. We also told him the points on which the Legislature would no doubt want to be satisfied and the conditions that the Legislature would probably demand if Emigration was to be allowed. In every respect the wishes of the Government of India have been readily acceded to by the Government of Mauritius. And this has not been done as part of a bargain. They have not said to us "If we do this will you allow emigration?" They have acted first and have left it to us and to the Assembly to allow emigration if we please. Of the conditions which are before the Assembly in the Draft Notification, several have already been incorporated in the law of Mauritius. They are numbers 2, 4, 6, 7, 8 and 11. The rest either do not require to be incorporated in the law or are the result of our most recent negotiations. Finally, at our invitation a deputation came from Mauritius to Delhi, and here I should like to acknowledge on behalf of the Government of India and, I feel sure, on behalf of the Standing Emigration Committee, the fullness, the clearness and the frankness with which they stated their case and supplied us with all the information that we desired.

[Mr. J. Hullah.]

The Standing Committee was exercised over only one point,—as in the case of Ceylon, the question of wages, but for a very different reason. Whereas it was thought that in Ceylon wages were certainly too low, there was no question but that in Mauritius wages were high, very high indeed. But it was feared by some members of the Committee that to allow an influx of Indian labour into Mauritius would depress the high rates of wages already prevalent there. It was pointed out, on the other hand, that we proposed, as we do in the Notification, to allow only 1,500 labourers to go, and that this small number could have no appreciable effect in depressing wages.

Dr. H. S. Gour (Nagpur Division: Non-Muhammadan): What is the total number of labourers there already?

Mr. J. Hullah: The number of labourers, I think, is about 40,000. (Mr. J. Chaudhri: "59,000.") The agricultural population is very much bigger, and my point is that the agricultural population has grown at the expense of the labour population. It was also pointed out that the planters would certainly not import more labour than they needed on account of the very great expense of importing; it will cost about Rs. 800 to import a single labourer; if he takes his wife and children with him, it will cost of course very much more. Moreover, under the new Emigration Act and Rules, the Government of Mauritius will have to maintain an Emigration Commissioner in India and an emigration staff at very considerable expense, all of which goes to swell the cost of the labourer. Thirdly, we were reminded of the very large scheme of improvement which I have mentioned and which the Government has in hand—that works that are going to cost a crore and 40 lakhs can obviously provide labour for 1,500 persons and indeed a very great deal more. Nevertheless we negotiated in order to get and to secure a really sufficient wage. We had been shown a schedule of the cost of living, based on prices in 1921, which showed that the cost of living for a labourer, his wife and three children amounted to about Rs. 38. At the same time we were left under the impression that the present rate of wages for day labourers was Rs. 2 a day for a month of 26 days,—Rs. 52 a month. We were confirmed in this, we thought, by a telegram from the Government of Mauritius which was sent to us in June last year in which they stated:

"The normal rate for day labourers on estates does not now exceed Rs. 50. This Government is fully prepared to engage for labour at local market rates and to consider payment of such wages and under such conditions as the Government of India may suggest, subject to this being comparable with those now paid and afforded locally."

The meaning and intention of that telegram is not very clear to us, but at first we proposed to the Mauritius Government that they should pay wages which would be roughly equivalent to Rs. 50 per month, and we therefore asked that they should guarantee a wage which would provide the cost of living according to the schedule, which was then put at Rs. 38, plus a margin of Rs. 12 a month, in all Rs. 50, with free housing and medical attendance. Failure to obtain this wage was to be a condition of repatriation.

Any labourer who within two years could show to the Protector of Emigrants, or to our agent when appointed, that he could not obtain this wage including this margin was to be entitled to repatriation immediately. The Mauritius Government could not accept this proposal as it stood and replied "that they consider the fixed margin of 12 rupees to be excessive."

"This", they said,

"would bring wages with the cost of living calculated on a liberal scale, above the actual market rates, and such wages paid to newly landed immigrants would have a disturbing effect on all classes of labour in the island. With regard to the rate of Rs. 50 referred to in my telegram of the 20th of June, this referred to day labourers on estates not getting housing or medical attendance and is the rate paid during the crop season when wages are at their highest owing to the demand for labour. Even at that date lower rates were being paid for labour engaged on roads, etc. It should be realised that rates vary considerably in and out of the crop season. On estates at present a labourer with family receives besides free housing and medical attendance 28 to 30 rupees in cash and rations."

So we had another meeting of the Standing Emigration Committee and it was admitted by the majority that it was hardly reasonable to demand from the Mauritius Government a fixed wage irrespective of the cost of living at the time and one stated to have been in force last year at the very height of the busy season of the sugarcane crop. So our final proposal to the Government of Mauritius was that as the condition of repatriation there should be a wage equivalent to the cost of living for a man, his wife and 3 children, plus a reasonable margin to be determined in consultation between the Government of India and the Government of Mauritius. That proposal has been accepted by the Mauritius Government and it appears in the conditions that we have placed before the House. It is very liberal, I think; if a man goes all by himself and does not take his wife or any children, he will, nevertheless, get a wage equivalent to the cost of living for a man, a woman and three children plus a margin to be determined by discussion between the two Governments. The notification further provides that emigration to Mauritius shall be lawful with effect only from a date to be notified in the "Gazette of India" by the Governor General in Council after the matters requiring determination under clause 10 of the notification shall first have been determined, so that if the Assembly passes the notification to-day, it does not mean that emigration begins forthwith. This Government and the Government of Mauritius have to discuss and settle what shall be the wage and what shall be the margin, and we ask the Assembly to leave this matter in our hands.

I have now shown, Sir, I hope to the satisfaction of the Assembly, that Mauritius is a country to which we can confidently allow Indian labourers to go. When they get there they will find themselves among thousands and thousands of their brethren who speak the same language as themselves. They will find that they are equal in status with every section of the community. They will find themselves getting wages equal to what is required for the subsistence of a family of five. They will receive free housing and free medical attendance. They will not be able to make contracts of service for a period exceeding one month, so that nothing like the indenture system can arise. They will have extraordinarily liberal conditions of repatriation. Up to two years a man can secure repatriation for any reasonable cause, including the very liberal condition that he shall be repatriated if he cannot obtain work suitable to his capacity, and after two years he has an absolute right to repatriation without assigning any reason whatsoever. I have also told the

[9TH MARCH 1923.]

[Mr. J. Hullah.]

Assembly of the readiness with which the Mauritius Government have accepted all the terms which we put before them during the course of the earlier negotiations and how without bargaining they have gone ahead and actually embodied these conditions in their law. I think there is no real fear that the addition of this small number of 1,500 persons to the labouring population of Mauritius can possibly operate to depress wages, for there will be sufficient work for them on the large sanitary works of improvement, which will benefit the whole island and especially the present Indian population. And I believe that if we allow this small body of labourers to go to Mauritius, they will find themselves in a country where the conditions of life for them are happier and more prosperous than anything that they know in their own. Sir, I commend my Resolution to the Assembly.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar (Madras City: Non-Muhammadian Urban): Sir, I beg to move an amendment which stands in my name to the Resolution moved by the Honourable Mr. Hullah:

"That for the original Resolution the following be substituted:

"This Assembly recommends to the Governor General in Council that the consideration of the draft notification specifying the terms and conditions on which emigration for the purpose of unskilled work shall be lawful to Mauritius be postponed pending investigation on the spot by an officer of the Government of India of the probable effects of emigration of fresh labour into the colony on the Indian labour population already settled there."

Sir, the Honourable Mr. Hullah, in moving this Resolution, has given a pretty accurate account of the conditions prevailing in Mauritius. In fact, speaking once or twice before in this Assembly, I referred to Mauritius as a colony where conditions were quite favourable for the people who were already settled there. There are one or two aspects of the question which require careful consideration at the hands of the Assembly. In the first place we have already got there, settled in this very small colony, which as has been described to us, is no bigger than a taluka or frika even in many parts of the country, only about 520 square miles, has a population and a very large population indeed of Indians, who went there as indentured immigrants and of whom now about 40 per cent. have become peasant proprietors of small quantities of land. I may mention for the information of the House that there is no land available for purchase for new goers there, unless it be that the owners of big estates parcel out pieces and sell them. In fact the Indian settlers acquired property only in this way from owners of big estates parcelling out their estates and selling them at various prices. There is no land available to the Government which can be placed at the disposal of these new settlers there. That is one aspect of the question which has to be remembered.

Another aspect of the question which has to be remembered is that there are about 50,000 Indian labourers who have to depend upon the market conditions of labour prevailing there. An influx, therefore, of Indian labour to compete with Indians already settled there is a matter which requires very careful consideration at the hands of the Assembly. We have not to look at it from the point of view merely of the new goers there. If you look at it only from that point of view, I have no doubt myself that these people will lead a better life than they do in their own homes. On that subject I have not the least doubt, because the wages in Mauritius are better than the wages prevailing in rural areas and slightly better than the wages prevailing in urban areas; but the question of emigration to Mauritius stands on a new footing in view of the past history of emigration to that Colony. The matter was thoroughly investigated by a Committee appointed by the Government of India in 1909 and in 1910 it was resolved on the report of that Committee, as Honourable Members will see, that emigration should not be permitted to Mauritius on the grounds, as Honourable Members will find on page 3, "that the Indian population there was large enough to supply all the necessary demands and that a state of things was approaching in which the pressure of existence would compel them to do so. They also considered that, as the Indian population increased, and the amount of undeveloped land diminished by the steady growth of peasant proprietorship, the openings for the immigrants whose term of indenture had expired would constantly diminish, with the result that the free labour market would become overstocked."

That was in 1910. Immediately afterwards, in 1912, within two years, the Governor of that Colony tried to re-open the question more or less on the same grounds as are now urged for re-opening that question, namely, that there is a dearth of labour, that there is not so much congestion, and in fact the Committee were misinformed and came to wrong conclusions. Almost the identical grounds which are urged now in support of allowing emigration were urged within two years of that Committee. It is not that the conditions are alleged to have changed after 10 or 12 years; it was alleged even within two years that the conditions were changed and in fact that the Committee came to wrong conclusions. That was the ground on which the Governor tried to re-open the question, but both the Government of India and the Secretary of State were satisfied that they could not allow emigration. Again, in 1915, the Governor tried to re-open the question and then he wanted only 200 or 300 labourers at that time. The Government of India however stood firm and said they would not allow emigration because the effect on the Indian population there would be mischievous by the introduction of fresh Indian labour. In fact, the Government of India have persistently refused to grant the request for the following reasons which Honourable Members will find at page 6. I emphasise grounds 3, 4 and 5:

"(3) If additional labour is introduced, the congestion in the country will not be removed by the opening out of waste land.

(4) Indian opinion in Mauritius is opposed to the introduction of additional labour.

(5) The gain to prospective emigrants is negligible, as high wages can be earned in the principal towns of India."

These are the grounds on which the Government of India strenuously refused to re-open that question. Now the Government of the Colony in 1921 renewed the request by making an appeal to the Government of Madras which was transmitted to this Government. At that time we were considering the Emigration Act. Honourable Members are aware of the policy which underlies our Emigration Acts, that assisted emigration should not be permitted unless we are satisfied that the conditions in the place where we send our labour population are satisfactory, and that is why we took the control of emigration into our hands. Now Honourable Members will find that in May 1922 the Government of this Colony made an offer, or rather proposed to this Government, that we should allow emigration for Government works, and they were prepared, as Honourable

[Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar.]

Members will see from the telegram just read to us this morning which appears at page 21,—which is dated the 20th June 1922, they state:

"The normal rate for day labourers on estates does not now exceed Rs. 50. The Government is fully prepared to engage day labour at local market rates and to consider the payment of such wages and under such conditions as the Government of India may suggest, subject to these being comparable with those now paid and afforded locally."

So that they were prepared to pay a little over Rs. 50, which was then the prevailing normal rate. This was confirmed in their letter, dated 14th August 1922:

"As stated in my telegram of 20th June, this Government is fully prepared to engage labourers at local market rates and to consider the payment of such wages and under such conditions as the Government of India may suggest, subject to those wages and conditions being comparable with those obtaining locally."

That was in August 1922. The deputation left the Colony about the end of December 1922 and arrived here in the middle of January. The deputation met us about the last week of January, and at the first meeting of the Committee, as Honourable Members will see at page 32, the deputation informed this Committee; speaking in January 1923, the deputation stated—that is the non-Indian portion of the deputation stated:

"Current wages for day labour are approximately Rs. 2 per head for 26 working days."

Therefore that comes to Rs. 52 a month. Current wages, Honourable Members will note the language. Therefore in January, 1923, the Committee were informed that the current wages were Rs. 2 a day:

"The Estate supplies quarters for married people, etc., and Government are prepared to pay the market rate for labour, which is at present Rs. 2 per head for efficient labour but are unable to offer a guarantee."

The two Indian members of the deputation, who are now big planters, stated, as Honourable Members will find at page 33:

"All daily labourers can get Rs. 2, Rs. 2/8 and Rs. 3 at the present daily rates, the higher rate being paid at harvest time."

So that the lowest rate was Rs. 2

Dr. H. S. Gour: No, the lowest was Rs. 1/8.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: The lowest for road-making was Rs. 1/8. Then the secondman, the Sardar says that he had to pay labourers Rs. 3, Rs. 4 and even Rs. 5. On this information the Committee acted; I think it was in the second meeting, with due regard to the cost of living as given to this committee—which Honourable Members will find at page 53—viz., Rs. 38 which includes Rs. 3 as rent for the quarters which these people allow—the rent of these quarters which is now Rs. 3 was only one rupee in 1914 for the same accommodation—a calculation was made. Now we argued: well, the cost of living is Rs. 38 and people have to perform a journey of twenty days from Calcutta as Honourable Members will remember. And having to go such a long distance and having regard to the wages in the presidency towns like Bombay, Calcutta and other places and having regard to the cost of living in the locality, we thought that a margin of Rs. 12 for saving in this distant place was only proper, also having regard to the wages prevailing there, which was admitted, viz., that in January 1923 the current wages were not less than Rs. 2 per diem; therefore, taking 25 days' work in a month or Rs. 50 per month a safe margin had to be allowed for the people who go there to make a decent living and saving. Although Honourable Members may be struck with the fact that these people get nearly Rs. 2 a day, they have to remember also the cost of living in that place which is Rs. 38, so that only Rs. 12 is left as a margin for their festivities and for old age and sickness and other things; so that the Committee thought that if they fixed this condition, that is, if any labour is unable to get this wage then he should be repatriated, that is how we resolved unanimously on the 30th January as Honourable Members will find on page 37, it would be the proper course; the permission should be subject to the condition that if any labourer now imported is unable for a period of two years after landing to obtain a wage of Rs. 2 a day which shall not include medical relief or quarters and satisfies our agent of this and wishes to return to India, he shall be entitled to repatriation free of charge. That was a very reasonable proposal we thought. Honourable Members will remember that at about that time the Ceylon and Malay States question came up for consideration in this Assembly and I am afraid that the attitude of this Assembly in reference to those colonies has influenced a slight backing away or back-sliding of this colony and going back upon the terms which they were prepared to offer at that time. Now, what has happened? Those who formed the deputation told us in January 1923, the Government told us in August 1922 and also in June 1922 that the current normal rate was Rs. 2 a day; we did not want to interfere with the market conditions in that place by putting in 1,500 families there. Honourable Members will notice the proposition is to send 1,500 adults; adults includes dependants and therefore you are sending 1,500 families which means nearly 3,000 or at least 2,500 labourers; so that you are introducing in a place where there is an Indian labour population an additional labour population of 2,500. Therefore it will have its economic effect on the law of supply and demand. Honourable Members will remember that in 1921 the average rate of wages was Rs. 82; in 1922 it fell to Rs. 50; so that the wages have already shown a tendency to fall and we do not want to introduce another factor to put pressure in the labour market and make the wages go further down. Therefore we thought it was a very good condition to impose, so that the people who go there will have something to save and it will not adversely affect the labour market there. That is what they say themselves; they say "If you fix this condition it will have a tendency to keep the wages at that level." I quite admit it. But you yourself admitted that that is the normal rate and therefore we are not introducing any new rate. You yourself having admitted that is the normal rate and that is the rate which you were prepared to offer, we do not want to reduce it. Then we met a second time; and although I was for taking a different course the majority of the members resolved, as Honourable Members will find at page 39:—"The remaining members considered that the criterion for repatriation should be the cost of living, calculated in the manner, and on the scale shown by Mr. Walter, plus Rs. 12". Very well, I did not object to that very much, although I was for fixing Rs. 50 per mensem. Now this was about the 3rd of February. On the 10th of February we passed our Resolution about the Ceylon and Malay Settlements. Of course, they went on pressing and we went on yielding. So it was a question of bargain; it depends upon who is able to stand firm. So the deputation perhaps thought that this Assembly was quite prepared to agree to whatever people from other

[Mr. B. N. Sarma.]

Committee, were unable to see their way to sending labourers to Mauritius. But the Government of India as well as the Committee have fully examined again the question as to what the existing conditions are in order to see whether there is any demand for new labour or whether this demand is put forward only to depress the labour conditions in Mauritius and they have come to the conclusion that more labourers are needed for the purposes of that Colony. It has been proved to us—and Honourable Members will see that—that the area under sugarcane cultivation has gone up between the years 1911 and 1922 and that the number of labourers who are available for the sugarcane cultivation has been reduced. It has been said that at least one labourer would be required for 3 acres. There are at present 162,000 acres under cultivation. 54,000 labourers are therefore said to be the proper requisite for getting the best out of those 162,000 acres—for getting the proper yield and for proper cultivation, whereas the number of labourers has been reduced by about 9,000 as between 1911 and 1922. That is, there were more labourers available in 1911 for the cultivation of a smaller area and the Committee was satisfied therefore that a larger number is required to carry on efficiently the sugarcane cultivation which is the main staple crop of that Colony. Honourable Members might ask why the number of male labourers should have been reduced as between 1911 and 1922. The reason is simple. A number of the old indentured labourers have in the ordinary course of nature disappeared from the scene of their labours. The number of adult labourers therefore has been reduced considerably. Some of them have also taken to other occupations and the net result is that the number of labourers between the ages of 20 and 49 is at present only 30,907 and the members in charge of the agricultural department from Mauritius have told us that about 54,000 would be the proper number for the adequate cultivation of that area, but I shall not labour this point further. There were one or two reasons which induced the Government of India and the committee to consider that there was a real need for labour. Large irrigation works have to be undertaken. A sum of 1 crore 40 lakhs which is available for public works including irrigation works has to be spent, and it is proposed to be spent over a period of ten years, it has been proved that the existing labour population is inadequate to carry on efficiently even the present area under sugarcane cultivation. Therefore if another additional 50 thousand acres of waste land are to be brought under cultivation and if these public works are to be undertaken, the existing labour population would certainly be inadequate, inadequate as it is considered even for present purposes. The main point that was urged was that the new labourers might take out of the mouth of the existing labour population their bread, may compete with them and consequently depress the labour market. We feel that there will be no such danger whatsoever because the men that are to go from here would not be engaged on the same work, except that they would be free to do so if they liked, but have got new work allotted for them and consequently for the same quantity of work an additional number would not compete and we therefore felt that there was no danger whatever in allowing a small number to go from India. What would be the result of our refusing to grant assistance that is so sorely needed by the colony. I think the effects would be disastrous from the point of view of the Indians themselves who are settled there. It may be that the ignorant labour population may grumble. It may be so. I am not stating that it is so. Let us take a long view of things and consider as to whether it would not be to the advantage of the existing Mauritius Indian population to enable them to live under healthier conditions, to enable public works to be built when the money is there, to bring new land under cultivation which would be shared by them and possibly by the new emigrants from India and consequently the Government have felt and the committee have felt in the earlier stages that they would be doing the right thing to assist the colony by the supply of a small labour force and that they would be jeopardising the true interests of the existing population itself by refusing the assistance that has been asked for. Now, Sir, I come to the question as to whether Government should really ask and this House can ask for different terms than those proposed in this notification. Honourable Members will remember that we are no longer dealing with an indenture system. If we could guarantee the labourers that go from here to the Government then a different set of considerations would arise. The Government could say, we will pay the 45, or 50 or 60 rupees per labourer and we can fix him by means of a contract. But we have deliberately set our face against the continuance of the indenture system. The labourer is now a free man. When he lands there he can work under the Government or under a planter or earn his living in any way he likes. There is nothing to tie him down to Government work or to work for a planter. Consequently, it will not be possible for this House or for the Government of India to fix any rate of wage which must be guaranteed over a period of years. Honourable Members will see the difficulty under which we have to work the new system. That being so, we have to satisfy ourselves whether when these 1,500 men go there they will really be confronted with a situation in which they would not only be unable to seek their living on proper lines but would be compelled to accept such a low wage as would really handicap them. The only way out was to stipulate with the Mauritius Government that they would repatriate unconditionally any labourer whenever such a state of things obtains in that colony as would compel a labourer to work without getting a living wage with some reasonable margin. The only way out therefore was to provide a repatriation clause under which this would be guaranteed to the labourer who goes from here, and such a repatriation clause has been provided for. At the end of two years a labourer will be entitled to demand repatriation, whether he can earn a living wage plus a reasonable margin or not. And further, before the end of the two years if he can satisfy our agent whom we hope to employ there that he cannot earn a living wage plus a reasonable margin, then also he would be entitled to be repatriated at the expense of the Colony. I suggest to the House that that is a very reasonable position, while the fixation of a definite sum, such as Rs. 12, would not be quite the best thing to do, especially since we have to deal in this Assembly with broad principles and not details. Honourable Members will understand that we have to determine the principles here and leave the working out of the details to the Executive Government. And any principle which we may apply to this case would ordinarily be applicable to the other Colonies also. We cannot fix as a Legislature Rs. 12 in the case of Mauritius, Rs. 5 in the case of Ceylon, Rs. 3 in the case of the Straits Settlements and Rs. 4 in the case of Fiji—I am only giving hypothetical figures. What we can insist on is a living wage plus a reasonable margin and here I think the Committee have done as much as they could in asking for a living wage not only for the man himself but sufficient for a wife and three children besides. That is a new principle and a principle I think which would help the labourer considerably in his struggle in this as well as in other Colonies, and I would draw the attention of the House to the supreme importance of the acceptance of this principle as a line of policy which we are initiating for the first time in dealing with Mauritius.

[Mr. B. N. Sarma.]

Now, coming to the question whether the negotiations which have been taking place here have not really depressed the labour market there and are not calculated to depress the market further, and whether the reason for the Colonial Government stating that they would not be able to agree to Rs. 12 wage is the one suggested by the Honourable Mr. Rangachariar, we shall have to take two or three points into consideration.

We have been told by Mr. Walter and the other Members as well as by the Indians who came here that the wages fluctuate remarkably in that colony in the busy season and in the busier season. The fluctuation is between Rs. 1½ and Rs. 3½ and even Rs. 4. At the time when the Colonial Government addressed us, it was about Rs. 50, and we were told that the cost of living as then computed in 1921, was Rs. 38-8. We have asked the Colonial Government as to what this means as to what the state of prices is at the present moment, and we have got information to show that during this period there has been a fall in prices to the extent of about Rs. 10—that between 1921, when it was stated that it was Rs. 38-8 and the period we are now thinking of, that is at the present moment, the cost of living of a man, woman and three children, we are told now, has fallen from Rs. 38-8 to Rs. 28-8. That accounts really Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: May I draw the Honourable Member's attention to page 51, the fact is, the note is added on the 20th February, 1923, to the table,—page 51, at the bottom, the note added on the 20th February? This explanation is only added after the meetings were over.

The Honourable Mr. B. N. Sarma: I was anxious to know as to what these fluctuations mean, and before I came to this House I wanted the Colonial Government to supply me with figures showing what the actual cost of living is at the present moment because I wanted to be satisfied as to why it was that they stated that the wages obtaining in the market at that time were about Rs. 30 or Rs. 32, and in answer to my query the Mauritius Government has kindly supplied us with information which would show that this fall in prices has been due to . . . (An Honourable Member: "Since when"?). The papers were put up to me yesterday; I think Mr. Hullah obtained the information only very recently, it must have been two or three days ago. I think it was after those papers were printed off,—that is the reason I had this information given to me last evening; and I am mentioning them to show that the Colonial Government have not assumed an unreasonable attitude in the matter and that the effect of the discussions on the Ceylon question were not really the factor which influenced or could have influenced the attitude of the Colonial Government in this respect. Honourable Members will find at page 53, that there is a fall of nearly Rs. 5 in the price of rice—it is no wonder—what Mr. Walter gave us was the prices in 1921, and Honourable Members will realize that there has been a considerable fall in the price of rice since 1921; so then we were proceeding on the basis of the 1921 prices, and we are now proceeding on the basis of the 1923 prices; there has been a fall of Rs. 5 there, a fall in the price of dhal of about Rs. 1½; I need not go into all the details, the total works out at

Rs. 10 less, so the cost of living for a family is Rs. 28-8 as against Rs. 38-8. That accounts really for the Colonial Government being cautious in their attitude as regards the fixation of a specific sum which must be guaranteed as a condition of repatriation. They are willing to accept the principle, and we can proceed only on general principles, so long as we are satisfied that the acceptance of the principle, if translated into action, is not likely to prejudice either the existing labour population in Mauritius or the man that goes from here. There is one point, Sir, I would ask the attention of the House to, and that is this. What we are now dealing with is the question of minimum and not the question of maximum or the question of the wage which would be earned by the labourer hereafter in Mauritius. The minimum was Rs. 1½ as Honourable Members will notice. The maximum was Rs. 3½ or Rs. 4. That is, when there is the stress, when there is demand for labour, labour is able to dictate a higher wage and it gets it. It will be able to do so exactly in the same way hereafter also, because there is nothing to prevent the labourers, either now there or those who will be going there hereafter, from dictating the wage on which alone they would work, provided we do not over-stock the labour market. But we have already tried to show that we are not likely to over-stock the labour market, because if the Mauritius Government are going to undertake the new works costing Rs. 140 lakhs, if they are going, by means of irrigation works, to bring in another 50,000 acres of waste under sugarcane cultivation, surely it follows necessarily that these men, small as they are, only 1,500, would not be able to do even the new work that lies before them. Therefore, the labour market would be exactly in the same position, it will perhaps be in a better position, by reason of the new works which are contemplated by the Colonial Government. I would therefore put it to the House that the conditions that are adumbrated are likely to improve the condition of the existing labourers and the labourers that are going from here, and that what we have to see is that the labour market is not over-stocked. Then, if we cannot fix a wage because we cannot guarantee that these labourers would work only for the Government or would work for the planters, what is the other course open to this House and to the Government? The provision of a minimum, the non-receipt of which would entitle them to repatriation. The only point, then, before the House is whether it ought to be Rs. 12, or Rs. 10 or some indefinite sum which is to be fixed by the Government; it may be in excess of 12, it may be smaller than 12, but it will be some sum which ought to be determined in relation to some accepted principles. If the Government of India find that it should be more than Rs. 12 and the Mauritius Government are not going to accept it, then no emigrants will go from here. I am not suggesting that there is that possibility or probability. All that I am saying is that we shall have to accept the margin as a margin for what?—for sickness and for old age and such other things. We shall, therefore, have to proceed upon some data, some scientific data, which would give us on an insurance basis the amount that would be required in the case of these labourers as a provision for sickness, old age and other contingencies. The Government of Mauritius or the agent of the Government of India, should communicate to us, what the margin ought to be, and it would be for Mauritius. It is impossible for us as a House to determine what the margin should be. Honourable Members will also see that this has a very great bearing upon the determination of the margin with reference to such earlier colonies also. What is the ground upon which this Rs. 12 has been fixed for two years, I for? This Rs. 12 has been asked for because Rs. 38 was the living wage and Rs. 50 was the wage of the labourer at that particular moment. Therefore, Honourable Members said that Rs. 12 shall be the reasonable margin. But it may not be a reasonable wage, reasonable margin, supposing insurance money for sickness and old age happens to be a larger sum having regard to the fall in the living wage.

[Mr. B. N. Sarma.]

My position really is that the question of a margin should be determined by some scientific principles. I will not say there is anything very scientific in this matter, but I mean some basic principles of action which would be applicable to all colonies alike, and that the House would be doing the right thing if on a matter of that kind they left the margin to the Government to settle. It is always open to this House if the Executive do not exercise their discretion correctly, to take the necessary measures for the purpose of preventing any evil which may be growing up. After all I would suggest that the cost to the Government of Mauritius of employing an agency and of taking these 1,500 men will be a very large sum. They are not likely to pay as much as 150 or 200 rupees per labourer unless they are really wanted there. That is a point I would like to press upon the House. The Mauritius Government is not likely to spend Rs. 200 or 250 per labourer at the risk of having to repatriate them at their own cost within two years, and certainly after two years, unless there is real work which has to be given to them the moment they go there. And if there is new work to be given to them, I would suggest to the House that there is no danger whatsoever of the labour market being depressed by this small number being allowed to go there. What is the Government Officer going to report on at the present moment? It is only experience that will tell us whether our expectations are going to be realised or not. If the fluctuations in the market price of labour are as wide as a rupee and a half and three and a half rupees, a few months' stay in the island would not enable him to tell us what it is going to be. Therefore the Committee fixed on the small number of 1,500 and that only for one year in order to watch the effect of the new immigration upon the existing local market. They have deliberately given to the Mauritius Government only a small number with a view to watching the effect on the labour market there before a larger number is sent of the 7,000 men that were asked for. Government are as anxious as any Member in this House to see that the Indian population there is not prejudiced. We do not want to get rid of labourers from here. That is not in the slightest degree the wish of the Government or of any Member of this House. We want to safeguard the interests of the existing population of Mauritius, which may be truly said to be an Indian colony, and we feel that it would be prejudicing the interests of that colony if we did not supply the small number which that Government has been asking for continuously for the last many years. 1,500 is not a large number. The effect thereof will be watched with care by the Government and, as already stated, we are not going to agree to a worker leaving the shores of India until we are satisfied that he would be able to get a fair wage. All that we are asking the House should accept the principle and leave the working out of the 1921 principles to the Executive Government, and having regard to the prices that have been made in this House, the Government would endeavour about Rs. 12 to ascertain the conditions in Mauritius before they took

Mr. B. S. Kamat (Bombay Central Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): How?

The Honourable Mr. B. N. Sarma: How? By means of such inquiries as may be possible. It may be that if on further inquiry we feel it is necessary, we may have to send an officer. I am not going to say that the Government will not find on further examination that it is necessary that they should know the exact state of things. All that I am asking is that we should not be bound down to a particular policy. We have got the interests of the labouring population at heart and if we are not satisfied with these wide fluctuations, we shall ourselves embark upon an examination of the question by sending such officers as we desire to see that neither the new immigrants nor the existing labouring force is prejudiced by any action that this House may leave it to the Government to decide. The reason why we have been obliged to place this question before this House at such short notice is that we may not have an opportunity in the near future of asking the House to agree to this notification, and it may be a very long time before we might be able to do so. It is undesirable, especially having regard to the fact that we shall have to postpone indefinitely the execution of public works in Mauritius, which would be very helpful to the Colony, to delay, if delay can be avoided; but Honourable Members may rest assured that we will not hurry in this matter so as to prejudice the interests of Indians already in that Colony.

Mr. President: If Honourable Members wish to continue the debate, I think we had better adjourn now till Twenty Minutes to Three.

The Assembly then adjourned for Lunch till Twenty Minutes to Three of the Clock.

The Assembly re-assembled after Lunch at Twenty Minutes to Three of the Clock. Mr. President was in the Chair.

Mr. B. S. Kamat: Sir, with reference to Mr. Rangachariar's amendment, I am sorry I cannot agree with him either in his motion or his arguments and inferences. What he wants is that this question should be postponed pending an investigation on the spot by an officer of Government with an idea of finding the probable effects of immigration of fresh labour into the Colony of Mauritius. He bases his argument for postponement chiefly on the ground that he apprehends an influx of labourers that is affording from India to Mauritius.

That raises, Sir, two or three distinct issues: in the first place, whether there would be really an influx; in the second place, whether this stage of the negotiations is an opportune moment—whether it is not too late at this stage, I mean, to open up that point; and thirdly, whether we have to look at the whole question from the point of view of the inconvenience to the settlers in Mauritius or whether we have also to look to the prospects and the interests of the labourers who will go from India to Mauritius.

Now, taking one of these points first, namely, about the propriety of starting this issue at this stage, I for one, Sir, think that Mr. Rangachariar, who was a Member of the Emigration Committee, should have raised this point about the influx and its probable effects much earlier. These negotiations have been going on for something like two years, I believe. From the correspondence it would appear that the Government of Mauritius re-opened negotiations about fresh labour from India so far back as April, 1921, and the matter has been pushed backwards and forwards—telegrams, cables, correspondence, etc., passing between the two countries for nearly two years. They also called out a deputation to meet this Emigration Committee, and it seems to me, if at all, Mr. Rangachariar wanted to raise this question of whether 1,500 labourers would flood the country to the detriment of the settlers there, he should have started this point as a preliminary point in the Emigration Committee before calling a deputation to come all the way here. If for any reason, either political or general, he thought it was undesirable to send even 1,500 people from here to Mauritius, well, he should have said it was undesirable to do so at the very beginning, and by a stroke of the pen it is open to us to say we shall send no more labourers to that country. It is too late in the day in my opinion for this Government or for this Assembly to open up that point now after all these negotiations and after practically coming to a definite conclusion with the Government of Mauritius now to say that we wish to hold another inquiry into that subject is, I believe, to make the position of this Assembly and even of the Government of India rather—well, if not ridiculous, at least unfavourable in the eyes of the world.

[Mr. B. S. Kamat.]

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: Sir, will you permit me to make a correction. If my Honourable friend will refer to page 37, he will find that even at the very first meeting we raised this question and that we were very apprehensive of the influx of this labour and that is why clause 4 was added at page 37.

Mr. B. S. Kamat: If that question was raised, still, as further negotiations were carried on I take it that the question of the result of this influx was waived, and that these 8 or 9 conditions were acceptable to the Committee. The Committee cannot now go back to the first preliminary issue and raise that point again here.

Now, secondly, he wants to find out the probable effects of this influx into Mauritius. I wonder how that is practicable at all. Even if a Committee goes there, or a Government officer goes there, how can they in a week, in a month or even in two months find the probable effects of the influx of 1,500 people on the market rates of labour there? If such a Committee or a Government officer examines the labourers there they will probably give him one view; they will naturally say "we do not want any more labour to come in at all" and if the Committee examines on the other hand the capitalists, the employers of labour there, they would desire as many more as is possible. In fact, it would be very difficult for any man or any committee to gauge approximately and forecast the result of 1,500 people going there, whether it would be adverse or favourable. In fact any opinion formed would be so vague, so indefinite, and without any practical value that I do not think it is possible to gauge the probable effects of it even supposing we decide to have a committee of inquiry into Mauritius conditions. Therefore I do not think it is necessary to press for an inquiry at this stage. The results of such inquiry would be impracticable and of no earthly use whatever for the determination of the question we have in view. Mr. Rangachariar further told us that he looked at this question from the point of view of those who have settled in Mauritius. I beg to differ from him. The Government of India and the Legislative Assembly must not take only a one-sided view about what would be the effect on the settlers there; we have also to look to the interests and the prospects of the people who will go from here. We must keep an open mind on this question. Mr. Rangachariar thought that there would be a depression of rates there and probably these 1,500 labourers who would go to Mauritius would find themselves in a very bad plight. I for one think that the position of the settlers in Mauritius at the present moment—at least looking at this report—so strong that there will hardly be any effect by the addition of only 1,500 labourers. Mr. Rangachariar has only to look at one or two figures in this report to see in what strong position the settlers are at the present moment in Mauritius. We are told here that the real property which changed hands, that is which was purchased by the Indian population there during 1921 was no less than a crore of rupees in value. Now if a population of say 260,000 can really buy property worth a crore of rupees in one year they must be in a very strong position indeed; I doubt, Sir, whether even in South India or Madras Presidency one district or two districts or even three or four districts put together can show such a good result and such a very strong position of the coolies there. If that is the state of things,—why even further on there is another statement in this report that during the last five years ending 1920 the settlers in Mauritius have bought land which is worth Rs. 29½ millions, or nearly Rs. 3 crores. I doubt I say whether in Southern India you can show such a strong position among the labouring classes, that they can purchase in five years Rs. 8 crores worth of land. If that were to be so, I am sure many of the representatives from Madras would not come here, moaning and beseeching this Assembly for a reduction in the provincial contributions.

That being the strong position in which labourers settled in Mauritius are, I doubt whether 1,500 more people would ever affect their position at all; they would be a drop in the ocean; and therefore the fears of my friend, Mr. Rangachariar, are rather misplaced.

He further went on to show that he has a shrewd suspicion that there was the change of front or change of attitude either on the part of the deputation or on the part of the Government of Mauritius with reference to the fixing of a standard minimum wage. I do not know what basis he has for drawing that inference or having that suspicion. I do not know any of the Members of that deputation here, neither was I on the Emigration Committee; but reading this report carefully I find no such ground for believing that there was any backsliding or anything to draw a definite inference that there has been a change of front. Mr. Rangachariar laid stress on the fact that a telegram from the Government of Mauritius came to the Government of India dated the 12th February, and that probably this being after the debate in this House on the 10th of February there was some sort of hidden connection between the event which occurred on the floor of this House on the 10th February and the receipt of that telegram dated the 12th. If Mr. Rangachariar sees that the Government of India had sent a telegram to the Mauritius Government on the 6th February and that this telegram of the 12th is in reply to that telegram of the 6th, I do think that it is not possible to draw any inference from those dates adversely to the Government of Mauritius. Indeed, I doubt whether the deputation could send a telegram after the debate here on the 10th which would be on 11th, and the Government of India could get a reply from the Government of Mauritius on the 12th. Therefore, too much stress cannot be laid on the two dates of 10th and 12th February.

[Mr. B. S. Kamat.]

Then my friend Mr. Rangachariar went on to show that the deputation at one time told the Committee here that the minimum amount of wages which labourers earned in Mauritius was Rs. 82, subsequently they came down to Rs. 50, and that at present they are not prepared even to accept Rs. 50 and therefore he seems to think that there was some mysterious sort of attitude on the part of the deputation here. In reference to this, Sir, I find on page 33 that the deputation had distinctly told the Emigration Committee that all adult labourers can get Rs. 2, Rs. 2-8-0 and Rs. 3 at present as daily wage, the higher rate being in harvest time. They went on however to make it clear and to say further that the lowest rate was Rs. 1-8.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: For road making.

Mr. B. S. Kamat: At any rate, they had not concealed that the rate was Rs. 1-8, and if this is a fact, and if the deputation had distinctly given the Committee to understand that the lowest rate in one particular trade at least was Rs. 1-8, I do not think it is fair to accuse the deputation that they did not give us proper information.

Then Mr. Rangachariar quoted another paragraph about the current wages. There again the deputation had distinctly said that Rs. 2 was approximately the current wages per day for 26 working days in the month for daily labour and Rs. 32 per month for engaged labour. Here also they had told the Committee that Rs. 32 was the current wage in Mauritius under certain circumstances. Taking all these things into consideration, I do not think there is room to say that there has been back-sliding on their part at the present moment.

I now come to the question what is the desirable thing to do. Mr. Rangachariar says that he is in favour of a fixed scale. He wants the Mauritius Government to be committed to Rs. 50 as the minimum standard, Rs. 38 to cover the cost of living and Rs. 12 to be the margin of saving. I put it to the House which is the better course? Should we insist on a minimum wage and arbitrarily fix the sum of Rs. 50 under the idea that the present cost of living being Rs. 38 a man will be able to save Rs. 12, or should we go in for elasticity? The question to be decided is whether it should be a fixed scale or elasticity, which is the better principle? I for one think that elasticity is a better principle. If we arbitrarily fix that Rs. 50 should be the minimum wage, it will depend entirely on the cost of living for the moment. The cost of living may go up or go down, so also the margin of savings. After all, whatever one's expenses per month may be, what I look to is how much one has saved. If I get Rs. 500 per month, and if I spend Rs. 450, I consider that my net gain is Rs. 50. If in the next month I earn Rs. 600 and if I have to spend Rs. 550, the net gain is still Rs. 50.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: There again I must correct my friend. The proposal is not to fix Rs. 50. It must be the cost of living plus Rs. 12.

Mr. B. S. Kamat: Whatever it is, the principle remains. The Government of Mauritius are prepared to commit themselves to fixing the basic wage plus a reasonable margin for saving. Mr. Rangachariar wants a definite figure—which might be Rs. 50 or anything—he wants a definite figure to be laid down for all time to come as a limit.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: No, no. That Rs. 12 is the margin of saving.

Mr. B. S. Kamat: I don't think there is any advantage in committing oneself to any set figures in respect of the cost of living and a particular margin of saving. We should leave it elastic. Supposing a Government officer who is to be sent to Mauritius says that the margin of saving should be one-fourth of monthly earnings and if at any particular time the man is able to earn, say Rs. 60, if one-fourth is fixed as the margin of saving, he will be able to lay by Rs. 15 instead of Rs. 12. Why fix Rs. 12? In any case, therefore, I am for elasticity rather than fixity even in the matter of the margin of savings for these people. And then again, as the Honourable Mr. Sarma put it, when we are sending these people for Government work, we must remember that, after all, those settlers for whom Mr. Rangachariar is speaking will be benefited by the labour of these 1,500 additional men, in the shape of the sanitary works and other things for the development of Mauritius in which they will participate. After all, what Mr. Rangachariar now wants to do is to keep the standard of living of the settlers there in precisely the same position as they now have without improving them whatever. What the Government of Mauritius want to do is to have large development works with the assistance of 1,500 men from here so as to give a better standard of living for all those settlers already there. I think we ought to send these 1,500 men not only in their own interests but also in the interests of the settlers because they will be able to develop the country, so that the standard of living of the settlers will be much higher than it is at the present moment. For these reasons I think we ought to accept this Draft Convention as proposed by Government in the precise form in which it is put forward.

Mr. K. B. L. Agnihotri (Central Provinces Hindi Divisions: Non-Muhammadian): Sir, I gave notice of an amendment more or less similar to that of the Honourable Mr. Rangachariar, but with this difference that Mr. Rangachariar proposes to send out a Government officer to inquire into the condition of Indians in Mauritius, while I propose a Committee of inquiry consisting of two or three or such number of persons that the Government may think proper. Therefore, Sir, with your permission, I would rather like to amend the amendment of Mr. Rangachariar than to amend the Resolution as I gave notice. I move the amendment in this form:

"In Mr. Rangachariar's amendment omit the words 'an officer of the Government of India' and insert the words 'a committee into the conditions of the existing Indian labourers in Mauritius and'."

The Honourable Mr. Sarma, while defending the attitude of the Government in permitting emigration of 1,500 people to Mauritius, said that the number of labourers we propose to send was not so large as to affect the labour conditions of Indians already settled in Mauritius. But I venture to submit that he seems to have forgotten the economic principle of supply and demand. May be that this emigration may not affect their condition to such an extent as to be described as disastrous to the interests of the Indians there, but I cannot believe that the emigration of these 1,500 or even a thousand persons would not affect their condition at all. The Honourable Mr. Sarma went on to say that in Mauritius there was a very great need for the labour from this country. I may take the liberty to inform him that, even in this country, the Assam Tea Garden and other plantations who require labour for their work are always in constant need of labourers, so much so that they also have to pay very large sums for recruitment of labour for their plantations. This would not mean that

[Mr. K. B. L. Agnihotri.]

India had not sufficient labour to supply to the Assam Tea Gardens or the planters in Bihar or other places in India. It is thus fallacious to argue that because there was a demand for Indian labourers from this country or that there was need for labourers there. The conclusion should necessarily be that there are not enough men in Mauritius to do the work of Government or in the sugar factories.

Sir, the Honourable Mr. Sarma as well as the Honourable Mr. Kamat have based their opinion as to the need and desirability of sending labourers from this country on reports and evidence supplied to us by the Honourable gentlemen who came down from Mauritius as well as on the Despatches of the Governor of Mauritius, but we seem to forget that the Government of Mauritius as well as these gentlemen who came to this country to give evidence were all interested persons and none of them represented any independent body of Indians in Mauritius. Mr. Kamat also said that "How would it be possible for the Committee or any Government officer to find out the actual condition of Indians in Mauritius within a short space of a week or 10 days or a month's stay". I would only reply to Mr. Kamat by a counter question as "How could it be possible for us to form any opinion on the mere evidence and reports of interested persons as to the actual condition of people who have gone over from this country to that country?" We should not be led away by the evidence of interested persons and the papers that have been put before us. It is desirable that some further inquiry be made before we can allow any emigration from this country. As to the need for an inquiry the Honourable Mr. Rangachariar has also spoken at very great length and made out a case which has not been successfully refuted by the Honourable Mr. Sarma. How do we lose if we allow an inquiry to be held in that country by a deputation or by a Government Officer, it may not take more than, say, 2, 3 or 4 months? If these people in Mauritius could wait for so many years from 1915 to 1923, they can very well afford to wait for about four months more and moreover the inquiry will give us a more satisfactory idea of the condition of Indians in Mauritius and we shall not be committing a mistake if thereafter we were to send our people to work for the benefit of the Government or the settlers in that country. I am of opinion that an inquiry is absolutely essential before we go against the principle which we adopted so far back as 1909 of stopping all emigration from this country to that country. Sir, it is common knowledge that Indians in general deprecate the idea of emigration from this country to any place whether they find that Indian labourers will not have better wages and better conditions than what they are getting in this country. It has been pointed out by some gentlemen that Indian labourers would be better off in that country because there was a possibility of their getting wages of Rs. 2, 3 or even Rs. 4 a day. But I am afraid those gentlemen forget to compare the difference in the cost of living in this country and in that country. It may also be said, as was said on the last occasion when we permitted emigration to Malay and Ceylon, that people would not migrate to that country if they thought that the conditions there were not favourable to them or that they would only migrate when they were satisfied that the conditions were much better and superior to those prevailing in this country. But I think that this is not a proper thing to rely on, because, we have seen from our experience in the past that the people from this country went to that country on similar considerations that they would be better off there, but what was the result? We found their conditions actually much worse, than what it was here or that the further emigration would make it worse and we had to stop emigration. There was a very strong opinion in this country against emigration to countries like Fiji, Mauritius and so on.

On the other hand it may equally be said that persons who want the labour to migrate to their country, be it Fiji, be it British Guiana, be it Canada or be it any other place, are sure to paint very bright pictures of the condition of the people settled there and it is not only the poor and illiterate persons that are carried away by such bright prospects and conditions but even the educated people are sometimes duped by the propaganda work done by a interested group of persons. It may just as well be possible that the evidence before us be only a one-sided and a garbled version and be quite different from the actual state of things in that country. It will do no harm to anyone if we were to ask for a deputation to be sent to that country to find out the actual conditions there. Sir, I would be satisfied if even one Government officer or a non-official Indian were to go to that country to find out the conditions of Indians and the possible effect of emigration, but I think that the country in general will not be satisfied with the deputation of a Government official alone. I do not mean to say that the Government officials who were deputed in the past to inquire into the conditions of labour and Indian settlers overseas have done in any way any harm to the Indian interests or have not done so well as an Indian would have done while on the other hand we are deeply grateful to those Government officers like Sir Benjamin Robertson or Mr. Corbett who went in the past from this country to South Africa and other places and who have done their best to better the conditions of Indians, they had as much interest of Indians at heart in all their inquiries as any Indian could have, but in order to pacify the strong public opinion against emigration and also as a sort of propaganda work and to remove the prejudice against emigration which exists in the minds of people in this country, it is more desirable that a deputation consisting of an official and non-officials be sent to make the necessary inquiries. There is also some principle involved in it. We find in the courts of law that a judgment of a Bench or even the judgment of opinions of two or more persons is generally considered more weighty and in many respects is more acceptable than the judgment or opinion of a single person however good and sound that opinion may be. It is therefore desirable and necessary, that a deputation of two or more persons should go instead of only one Government officer as proposed by Mr. Rangachariar.

It may be said that in the case of Ceylon and Malaya we did not insist on sending out any officer or deputation to inquire into conditions of Indians there, but the case of Ceylon and Malaya is different from Mauritius. Ceylon and Malaya are close to India. Everyone here more or less knows the conditions of Indians in those places whereas in the case of Mauritius it is far away from India and it is very difficult to find out the actual conditions from here. The Honourable Mr. Kamat asked how can an officer or deputation find out such conditions simply by examining the representatives of labour or the representatives of capital? I would reply that it is more possible that by closer contact with the persons there they would be better able to find the actual state of affairs in that country as to how the labourers will benefit by emigration and how the Indians already settled will be affected. It is necessary therefore that a deputation should go. I just remarked a few minutes ago that I would rather prefer an Indian to an European for such inquiry. I do not thereby mean to imply that an European officer would not look to our interests better than an Indian but I think that the Indian labourers will be more confiding and will have more confidence in an Indian officer or an Indian deputation consisting of Indians than in Europeans. They would not have the courage to approach the European officer and will hesitate to speak out their grievances freely to him. Moreover the Indian going there and knowing as he does the customs and habits and manner prevailing in this country will be in a better position to understand the conditions there than the European. I therefore submit that it is desirable that a Committee of inquiry be sent to Mauritius rather than an individual to inquire into the conditions of people and the effect of any fresh emigration before we permit the emigration of persons from this country to that country. With these words, Sir, I move my amendment.

[Mr. K. B. L. Agnihotri.]

Mr. President: The question is that the following amendment be made:

"In Mr. Rangachariar's amendment omit the words 'an officer of the Government of India' and insert the words 'a committee into the conditions of the existing Indian labourers in Mauritius and'."

Maulvi Abul Kasem (Dacca Division: Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I have heard with interest and attention the speech of my Honourable friend, Mr. Agnihotri, and I do not at the present moment propose to take the House into the details of the various letters and telegrams that have passed between the Government of India and the Mauritius Government. That I leave in better hands. I will only draw the attention of the House to certain broad facts which are admitted on all hands. The facts are that the terms under which it is proposed in the Government Notification to permit the emigration of 1,500 adult labourers to Mauritius are that the Government of Mauritius undertake to provide the food and clothing of the labourer, his wife and three children, plus some margin of profit or saving if you like to call it. This much is admitted. The bone of contention is whether we should fix the margin at Rs. 12 more or less or leave it to the Government of India to decide the point. I would like to ask my Honourable friend, Mr. Rangachariar and Mr. Agnihotri, if they can say whether in their opinion or in their experience they have found any unskilled labourer in this country earning sufficient wages even to maintain himself, his wife and one child, not to speak of three or four. The question we are to consider is not what will be the effect of this emigration on the people who are settled in Mauritius, but what will be the effect on the people whom we are sending from this country to that. There is another question, Sir. From the speech of Mr. Agnihotri I understood that the question before the House was the condition of labour and capital in Mauritius itself and not whether we are to send 1,500 men or not. If conditions are bad in Mauritius that is not our business. So far as this House and this question is concerned, that is not under consideration . . .

Mr. President: I would draw the Honourable Member's attention to the fact that that is the proposal in the amendment moved, and that the issue before the House now is the method by which that inquiry is to be conducted. So long as Mr. Rangachariar's motion and the original Resolution were alone before the House, the whole question was open for discussion. But once the additional amendment by Mr. Agnihotri was moved and put from the Chair, then the issue was narrowed down to the method by which the inquiry is to be conducted. If the House does not wish to discuss that issue I had better put the question.

Rao Bahadur C. S. Subrahmanayam (Madras ceded districts and Chittoor: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I do not understand what this inquiry would elicit and what light it would throw on the matter. Now . . .

Mr. President: The Honourable Member has not quite understood. We must assume for the purposes of the discussion as restricted by Mr. Agnihotri's amendment that there is going to be an inquiry. That is only assumed for the purpose of debate. The question is whether it would be better carried out by an officer of the Government of India or by a Committee. I think I had better put that question. Does the Honourable Member wish to discuss it?

Rao Bahadur C. S. Subrahmanayam: Yes, Sir. The question is what is going to be the constitution of the Committee? How many are to go from here? What is to be the cost of the Committee? Have we not in the Retrenchment Committee's report the remark that too many Committees have been appointed and something like 60 lakhs spent on them, and with what results? Is not that a fair question? Besides, suppose a Committee, that is, a number of men go from here to Mauritius, what are they to do? Go and examine the coolie lines and ascertain the wages drawn there? Can we not get all that information through a single individual going there? Why do we want a Committee to sit on this matter? I think time was when we were very fond of Committees, but now it appears that we are not very much in favour of Committees. A good many people are not satisfied with the labours and the results of Committees or the fruits of those labours. Therefore, Sir, from that point of view I do not think this question of a Committee should be pressed. As that is the only narrow point on which I am now allowed to speak . . .

Dr. H. S. Gour: May I rise to a point of order? I understood the Chair to rule that only the narrowed question as to whether it is going to be an official inquiry or a non-official inquiry is now before the House. May I point out to you, Sir, that if the House decides on Mr. Rangachariar's main amendment, that there should be no inquiry at all, it will be supererogatory to go into this further question raised by Mr. Agnihotri, and I therefore suggest that the main question should now be debated and decided upon, and if it is decided by this House that there should be an inquiry, then it will be open to the House to discuss the further question as to the form of that inquiry. I therefore suggest, Sir, that it would be convenient to the House that we should discuss the broad question whether there should be an inquiry or not, and then go into the further question if necessary.

Mr. President: There can be no decision as to whether there shall be an inquiry or not until I put the issue raised by Mr. Rangachariar's amendment against Mr. Hullah's original Resolution. After that is once decided, no further debate can arise, and therefore, as I said, we must assume that there will be an inquiry for the purposes of the debate on Mr. Agnihotri's amendment; as to whether that inquiry should be conducted in one form or another, the Honourable Member will understand that the debate will be closed if I put Mr. Rangachariar's amendment against the Resolution.

Dr. H. S. Gour: That is exactly, Sir, what I suggest should be done, and under the Standing Orders . . .

Mr. President: If the Honourable Member's meaning is that, he had better move that the main question be now put, and the debate will come to an end.

Rao Bahadur C. S. Subrahmanayam: So I understand, after the decision of this simple matter, there will be a further discussion of the question whether there shall be an inquiry by a Committee or not, but so far as this point of inquiry is concerned, I think many of my friends will agree that there is no magic in a Committee of inquiry into this matter; we can get all the information by one single officer going there and giving us the fruits of his labours.

Mr. J. Chaudhuri (Chittagong and Rajshahi Divisions: Non-Muhammadan Rural): May I move that the main question be put.

Dr. H. S. Gour: I move that Mr. Agnihotri's amendment be put.

Mr. President: The question is that the question be now put—the question refers to Mr. Agnihotri's amendment. Amendment moved:

"Omit the words 'an officer of the Government of India' and insert in their place the words 'a Committee into the conditions of the existing Indian labourers in Mauritius, and'."

The question I have to put is that that amendment be made.

The motion was negatived.

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary (Calcutta: Non-Muhammadan Urban): Sir, some innocent-looking things have at times such an aptitude of sprouting into unexpected dimensions that in dealing with them one does not know where one is. Quite gratuitously have we heard of people coming here, moaning and beseeching for reduction in their Provincial contribution. I am sorry I am one of them, and I or my successor in this seat in the Assembly will have to go on moaning and beseeching till justice is obtained and right done. Mine happens to be also. Sir, a province where the emigration question, inland emigration was at one time very acute and one should have thought that to-day on the floor of this House we were in all seriousness discussing the old Assam slavery laws and trying to get rid of it and of all they stood for. There is however a change and a considerable change, and emigrant labour is now able more or less to lay down the law where it can. Sir, I should not like the proceedings of this House to go forth to the world, and if you had power of keeping them confidential and secret, I should have appealed to you to exercise that power. I should not like these proceedings to get into the hands of unsuitable people—say in Canada or in Australia or other places where the Right Honourable Mr. Sastri would have a warmer reception in another sense, when he goes next and when he will be confronted with what some of us have been trying to lay down here to-day. What is it we are trying to do? There are some people comfortably settled down in the land of Paul and Virginia, the land of honey and everything nice and good. We do not want to have them upset or unsettled. They are our own people and are able to dictate the law there, they are able to get good terms and other things which they think they ought to have. Why send another 1,500 men and say they bring in questions of rate-cutting, wage-cutting and other uncomfortable things that unsympathetic people in other parts of the Empire try to press against us when we go to them. I should not like to envy the Right Honourable Mr. Sastri during his next world tour, when these proceedings are hurled at him. He will in pleading again for justice for his countrymen, in other parts of the Empire, have the ethics now advocated, relentlessly quoted against him?

Sir, Mr. Rangachariar has reminded us that the Assembly must not vote away our people to other parts of the world, and he has told us that because of some things that this Assembly was guilty of not many weeks ago, in connection with Malaya and Ceylon emigration question, the Mauritius Government has taken advantage. In reply to a telegram of the 6th of February and relying on what had happened here on a later date between the 6th and the 12th of February, they changed their mind and resorted to other tactics and tried to beat us down. That may or may not be so. My reading of the correspondence is not that. On the other hand, I should have thought that a trained and practised special pleader like Mr. Rangachariar would have laid some stress on or tried to get rid of the closing sentence of the letter of the Mauritius Government of the 12th of February which I find translated in term No. 10 of the Notification before us. What do they say there? Mr. Kamat has very rightly reminded the House that in these matters it is better to have something elastic to go upon than to have a rigid, hard and fast hide-bound limit of Rs. 12. Who knows that Rs. 12 may not be insufficient later on? Mr. Rangachariar interrupting him said "Oh, this Rs. 12 is plus the food, medical treatment, housing and everything else." But Rs. 12 as savings may not be quite enough for all time. The sugar industry may be doing much better than it has been doing of late, and Government probably may be able to induce employees to give more. The Government of India has accepted, as far as the draft notification goes, what the Government of Mauritius state in its letter of the 12th February. It says:

"As stated in telegram of June 20th, this Government fully prepared to pay for imported labour at prevailing local rates."

That is supposed to be where the mischief of the situation comes in. They go on:

"Government suggest that figure for margin should be determined by your Agent or in his absence Protector of Immigrants. Government further undertake to agree to pay a wage to be determined in relation to cost of living and satisfying such authority" (that is our agents) "and to repatriate if such wage cannot be obtained."

That is what I find translated in term No. 10, as follows:

"The Government of Mauritius, in consultation with the Government of India or the Agent appointed under section 7 of the Act, shall from time to time determine the amount of wage which is sufficient to meet the requirements laid down in clause 9 of this notification."

Here, perhaps, Mr. Agnihotri's amendment, if it does come on, will be useful, that is fixation of wages shall not only be determined, but also reported to the Government of India, so that the Assembly may from time to time itself determine as to whether the right thing is being done or not and whether anything further is needed. Sir, on this occasion, we ought to congratulate the Government on achieving the reverse of what it did on a recent occasion—unlike on the previous occasion they have been good enough to circulate papers. They had also the advantage of a deputation which met the permanent Committee, of which Mr. Rangachariar himself is a member. We have made considerable advance in this direction we have had the question examined not only by the Government, but by the permanent Committee, which by a majority has passed in substance the terms of this notification, and it is to be in force for not more than a year. Supposing we are not quite satisfied with the state of things in Mauritius because of the factors Mr. Agnihotri has referred to affecting Ceylon and Malaya, further information can be necessary only from the point of view of future action.

[Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary.]

From that point of view I quite see the necessity and reasonableness of inquiry of the kind adumbrated by Mr. Rangachariar. It has been abundantly made clear that no inquiry can be usefully held while the materials upon which the inquiry should proceed are wanting. How this fresh labour emigration is going to affect the labour situation there cannot be determined either by an individual or a Committee unless progress has been made to a certain extent and materials are available upon which a reasoned opinion could be given. Therefore if I have your leave, I should like to move a rider to Mr. Hullah's Resolution somewhat in the following terms:

"That the Assembly further recommends to the Governor General in Council that a competent person be immediately deputed to inquire and report within six months the effect of importation of further labour on the labouring population already settled in Mauritius."

This should have the advantage of leaving things open to the Government either to send one of its officers or such other person as the Government might think fit; after six months' trial of the present measure it would be possible for that person or persons to report to the Government of India; and when later on, after a year, if there was an indent for further labour, we might go into the question upon some basis that would be intelligible and upon which we could base any further action. I do not think that upon the materials that the Government have placed in our hands, or upon which the debate has proceeded so far, there is a case for throwing out Mr. Hullah's Resolution. Well, I am not concerned with what Mr. Hullah has said about there being no Assembly sitting when the result of the inquiry comes in later and giving sanction. It is the look out of the Government whether the Assembly will be sitting or not. It is not a matter in our hands . . .

Mr. J. Hullah: I really have never made any remark of the kind.

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary: I beg Mr. Hullah's pardon. The Honourable Mr. Sarma's remarks were to this effect. I do not agree with people who are saying that we are possessed with a megalomania. I am not going to characterise our present discussion in that fashion. It is quite right that we should do what we can for our people leaving India; they are not quite free agents. About this assisted emigration, people apply a stronger name, which I do not wish to use on the present occasion. But it is up to this Assembly now that it has opportunities, to use all possible circumspection and at the same time not to be guilty of endlessly blocking where no real danger exists. I do not want to ask myself or any one in this connection the question as to how much India pays its own labourers. Those are somewhat awkward questions and questions difficult to answer. We have had elaborate inquiries into prices by Mr. K. L. Datta and Mr. Shirras, who went into the thing. We never knew however where we were. It is impossible without proper appreciation of all difficulties to fix down these things by hard-and-fast rigid rules. If the notification errs at all, it errs on the side of caution and in the interests of the labourers themselves. It leaves the whole thing open. The Government of India will have its own agent and, added to that, if my rider is accepted as an addition to Mr. Hullah's motion, the Government of India representative will investigate the question on the spot and then we can have further materials on which later action can be taken.

Mr. President: I understand the purpose of the Honourable Member's amendment is to accept the publication of this draft notification, but to add an inquiry thereafter. In that case, the amendment must come after we have disposed of Mr. Rangachariar.

Dr. H. S. Gour: Sir, we have been reminded this afternoon of a very salutary principle that we must be guided by in the determination of this principle, namely, the economic principle of supply and demand. Now, do Honourable Members and particularly the Member who used that expression realise the full effect of that expression. If we are to be guided by that principle of supply and demand, we have no business to interfere and should let the labourers go out as they choose and come back when they so desire and if they can. The principle which underlies the notification is a Socialistic principle, in which the State guides and controls the emigration of labour. The question, therefore, is how far will the State be justified in interfering with the free emigration of labourers from this country. Now, Sir, it is a well-known principle that, when the State does interfere, its interference must be limited to the very minimum, and for that purpose it must pay due regard not only to the welfare of the out-going labourers but to the general condition of the labouring population in this country and the country to which the labourers emigrate. Now, if I ask the House to advert for a moment to the condition of labour in Mauritius, what will they find? The Census Commissioner at page 42 of this compilation tells us that there were in 1921 only 39,185 labourers available against a demand for 57,185. We thus find that in 1921 Mauritius wanted 18,000 more labourers than were available in the country, added to which we have been told that, due to the expansion of further works and the initiation of irrigation and other projects taken on hand or about to be taken on hand by the Mauritius Government, the labour market would require more labourers than it is able to obtain in the Island. Consequently, the first question raised by my friend the Mover of this amendment that we might dump Indian labourers on to Mauritius and depress the local labour market is, I submit, entirely unjustifiable, so far as the facts and figures given in this compilation disclose, and there is ample room not merely for the emigration of 1,500 labourers but I think two or three times as many as 1,500.

Then comes the next question—the question of wages. It has been pointed out by the Honourable Mover of this Resolution that the wages in the island of Mauritius fluctuate according to the season, and I find from this book that they fluctuate between Rs. 82 and Rs. 30. Now, that is a fact we cannot ignore. The labourer who goes out from this country stands to make as much as Rs. 82, and he equally is exposed to the chance of making as little as Rs. 30. Now, I ask Honourable Members of this House, if one of their labourers was to ask them and say "I want to go out to Mauritius: I stand to gain as much as Rs. 82, though there is a risk of my making as little as Rs. 30," what would be their answer? I am perfectly certain, Sir, there is not one Member in this House who would, if one of his men were going out on these conditions, dissuade him from doing so. The contingencies of the labour market are such as exist everywhere. During the busy season labourers make more; during the slack season they make less; and I do not think that we can fix a rule, such as has been suggested, that we must fix Rs. 12 and the cost of living as the irreducible minimum to entitle a labourer to go out of this country.

Then, Sir, we pass on to the third question. My Honourable friend, Mr. Rangachariar, could not have forgotten the fact that a very large number of people who have settled down in the island of Mauritius and acquired fortunes were originally labourers, and that there is a prospect before the labourers of this country going out to Mauritius to get plots of land and become proprietors. The Honourable Mr. Sarma has pointed out that about 50,000 acres of virgin soil will be shortly irrigated and brought under the plough, and that I submit is a hopeful prospect for the would-be emigrant; and I think we should not lose this opportunity of endorsing the Government Resolution in view of the fact that the Government undertake to institute an inquiry as time and convenience may permit in the interests of the labourers; and we know for a certainty that the Government will keep an eye upon the condition of the labourers who go out from India. That, I submit, is as much as this House should ask and expect the Government to do.

[Dr. H. S. Gour.]

Then, Sir, it has been said, and said with a certain degree of force, that 1,500 people going out from this country would not affect the labour market in Mauritius. We know that about 57,000 odd labourers are there, and as I have pointed out, the demand for labour in Mauritius is expanding every day and I do not think that there is the slightest possibility of these labourers getting stranded upon landing at Mauritius. If they did, the Government of India have provided that they would be entitled to repatriation for any reasonable cause, and the fact that they are not able to make a sufficient living in that colony would be regarded as a sufficient cause. I therefore submit that on every ground, due regard being had to what has been said by the Honourable Mover of this amendment, we should not be justified in delaying the emigration of these labourers to Mauritius which would be only possible if we supported the Government Resolution. My friend, Mr. Rangachariar, no doubt moved by humanitarian motives wants that an inquiry should precede the emigration. Now, Sir, if such an inquiry were to be taken in hand there can be no doubt that it will be a matter of six or eight months, or perhaps even a year. The result would be that this notification would be delayed for another twelve months or perhaps more. Has a sufficient case been made out to the House for delaying publication of this notification for twelve or more months? There is an underlying suspicion in the mind of the Honourable Mover of the amendment, reiterated by my friend, Mr. Agnihotri, that all that is written here is by the people who are interested in emigration and consequently we cannot trust all we read in their report . . .

Mr. K. B. L. Agnihotri: No, I never meant it.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: Speaking for myself I did not have that suspicion underlying my remarks.

Dr. H. S. Gour: I am extremely glad to hear that there was no suspicion in anybody's mind—overt or suppressed. Consequently, the only ground upon which this Resolution could be resisted does not exist and I therefore submit that this House should support the Government Resolution.

The Honourable Mr. B. N. Sarma: May I make an explanation, Sir? The Government do propose to send an Agent at as early a date as practicable and get reports from time to time as to the working of this emigration, and I think there is no necessity for Dr. Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary to propose a rider at all, because the Government do contemplate to get a report and the substance of it will be communicated to the House . . .

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: As early as possible?

The Honourable Mr. B. N. Sarma: As early as practicable. We have taken power under section 7 and I therefore do suggest that Mr. Rangachariar might in view of that assurance withdraw his amendment.

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary: Having regard to the assurance given by the Honourable Mr. Sarma which really is what I wanted to elicit, I do not propose to press my rider.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: I think, Sir, having regard to the turn the debate has taken I will place more faith in the Government and therefore I shall withdraw my amendment with the leave of the House.

The amendment (of Mr. Rangachariar) was, by leave of the Assembly, withdrawn.

Mr. W. S. J. Willson (Bengal: European): Sir, I would like, if I may, to make one point in connection with the amendment—to correct a statement . . .

Mr. President: The amendment has now been withdrawn. The discussion must turn on the main proposal contained in Mr. Hullah's Resolution.

Mr. R. A. Spence: I move, Sir, that in view of the Government statement, the question be now put.

Mr. W. S. J. Willson: May I have the permission of the House, Sir, to mention one point before the question is put? Being a Member of the Emigration Committee, I would not like the statement which was made this morning to go out of this House that the deputation from Mauritius had been guilty of back-sliding. I do not like the impression to get abroad from the statement made that a responsible deputation from a Colonial Government has been accused of back-sliding, and that it had not been challenged in the House.

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary: It was the Mauritius Government that was so spoken of and not the deputation.

Mr. W. S. J. Willson: A statement was made that the deputation went back on their promise that they would pay a wage of Rs. 50, and with the permission of the House I would like to call the attention of Members to page 21 of the Note prepared by the Revenue and Agriculture Department on Indian Emigration to Mauritius in which the telegram from Mauritius quotes "Normal rate for day-labourers on estates does not exceed now Rs. 50." At page 23 Honourable Members will find the letter from the Mauritius Government confirming their telegram which says "As stated in my telegram of the 20th June, this Government is fully prepared to engage labourers at local market rates." I think, therefore, there should be no question about back-sliding, I would like to associate myself, on the other hand, with all Mr. Hullah has said about the extremely nice way in which the Mauritius deputation have met us in every way after the heavy expense they had incurred, and I think it is only fair to admit and not to dispute any statement they have made.

Mr. K. B. L. Agnihotri: I do not wish to say anything more, Sir.

(Several Honourable Members: "The question be now put.")

Sir Montagu Webb (Bombay: European): Sir, I should like to mention one little matter for the information of the House which I find in the

[Sir Montagu Webb.]

Mauritius Year Book,—the last issue of the "Mauritius Almanac, 1922" to which no reference has so far been made; and it is this (on page A. 5). In the year 1920 the whole of the Mauritius sugar crop was purchased by the British Government for twenty-five crores of rupees. At the suggestion of the Governor of Mauritius a portion of this sum was utilised to create a fund for the carrying out of the much-needed improvements in sanitation, dock accommodation, etc. Therefore, it is that the Government there require the labour for this new work of improving the harbour, for carrying out irrigation developments, and other matters of which Members have heard. Here is this enormous sum of money in the hands of the people and Government of Mauritius; and as nearly one half of the land in Mauritius belongs to Indians, I presume that a substantial portion of this enormous sum is in the hands of Indians. Some of it is now about to be spent in improvements and extensions. Therefore it is, Sir, that I have heard with amazement to-day the proposal that we should prevent Indian labourers from going over to Mauritius and sharing in the great prosperity there.

(Several Honourable Members: "The question be now put.")

Mr. President: The question is:

"This Assembly approves the draft notification which has been laid in draft before the Chamber specifying the terms and conditions on which emigration for the purpose of unskilled work shall be lawful to Mauritius and recommends to the Governor General in Council that the notification be published in the Gazette of India."

The motion was adopted.

The Assembly then adjourned till Eleven of the Clock on Saturday, the 10th March, 1923.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

Saturday, 10th March, 1923.

The Assembly met in the Assembly Chamber at Eleven of the Clock. Mr. President was in the Chair.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

DACOITY IN GURDIT SINGH'S HOUSE, TIMARPUR.

538. *Khan Bahadur Sarfaraz Husain Khan: 1. Is it a fact that a daring dacoity with sharp weapons has been committed recently in the house of one Gurdit Singh at Timarpur in Delhi?

2. Has the attention of Government been drawn to the news as published in the last week's Eastern Mail?

3. Is it a fact that it has created a panic in the hearts of the residents of the Indian quarters at Timarpur?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: 1. No dacoity has been committed, but a case of house breaking by night was reported on 15th February 1923, and is under investigation.

2. Yes. This is probably however an exaggerated reference to the case just mentioned.

3. A petition to this effect has been received from the clerks residing at Timarpur.

PATROL PARTIES AT TIMARPUR.

539. *Khan Bahadur Sarfaraz Husain Khan: (a) Is it a fact that the residents of the Timarpur quarters have formed themselves into parties for patrolling there at night?

(b) If so, will the Government be pleased to state what steps the Government have taken or are proposing to take to help such parties in their honorary work?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: (a) The petition mentioned in the previous answer stated that this was the case, but Government has no official information.

(b) The Superintendent of Police will welcome the assistance of such honorary helpers if they will put themselves into communication with him.

PROTECTION AGAINST DACOITIES AT RAISINA.

540. *Khan Bahadur Sarfaraz Husain Khan: (a) Is it a fact that some dacoities took place in the quarters at Raisina, last year and year before last?

(b) Is it a fact that a Member of the then Executive Council inspected the quarters?

(c) If so, will the Government be pleased to state whether the Honourable Member in question suggested any safeguards for preventing the recurrence of such dacoities in future; and if the answer is in the affirmative, will the Government be pleased to state what suggestions were made?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey (a) No dacoities took place in the clerks' quarters at Raisina in 1921-22, but in 1920 four cases of house-breaking by night were reported. The strength of the Raisina Police was strengthened in the cold weather of 1919-20.

(b) and (c) The question presumably refers to a visit of inspection by the late Member in charge of Commerce and Industries Department (Sir Thomas Holland). Various suggestions for increasing the height of compound walls and putting broken glass on them, and providing bars for windows, etc., were examined, and any practicable remedies were adopted.

PROVISION OF DOORS AND WINDOWS TO QUARTERS AT RAISINA.

541. Khan Bahadur Sarfaraz Husain Khan: Is it a fact that the Indian quarters on the Cantonment Road, Raisina, are not provided with any windows or doors on the road side; if so, will the Government be pleased to take steps to provide them with doors and windows on the road side?

Mr. H. A. Sams: The main entrance door is on the Cantonment Road side of the quarters. The quarters are provided with clerestory windows on the same side. Windows at a lower level were not provided for the reason that, were they provided, purdah would not be complete.

POLICE PATROL, RAISINA.

542. Khan Bahadur Sarfaraz Husain Khan: Have arrangements for police patrol been made at Raisina, for the Indian clerks quarters?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: Yes—patrols of 1 head constable and 10 constables are deputed for watch and ward in these quarters. The sanctioned grant for the Delhi Police force will not admit of the placing of an officer above the rank of head constable on this patrol duty.

REPEAL OF FRONTIER CROSSING REGULATION IN UPPER BURMA.

543. Mr. J. N. Basu: Will the Government be pleased to state whether it intends to repeal so much of the Frontier Crossing Regulation of Upper Burma, as affects the areas falling within the jurisdiction of the High Court at Rangoon?

Mr. Denys Bray: Government propose to leave the matter to the Government of Burma in the first instance.

PRODUCTION OF SALT IN BURMA.

544. Mr. J. N. Basu: (a) Whether salt is manufactured or produced at any place in Burma? If so, what is the value of the annual output and expenditure?

(b) Whether the Government is aware that in Shwebo District in Upper Burma, there are salt-wells? If so, whether the cultivators have been prevented from working them?

Mr. A. H. Ley: (a) Yes. The Honourable Member is referred to the figures given on pages 170 and 171 of "Statistics of British India, Volume II (Financial Statistics)." These figures show the quantity and value of salt produced in Burma from the years 1915-16 to 1919-20. Later figures of value are not yet available, but the total output in maunds for the years

1920-21 and 1921-22 was 15½ lakhs and 11½ lakhs, respectively. Government have no information regarding the expenditure incurred in manufacture, the salt not being manufactured by Government.

(b) The information has been called for from the Burma Government and will be supplied to the Honourable Member on receipt.

INTERMEDIATE CLASS CARRIAGES IN BURMA.

545. Mr. J. N. Basu: Will the Government be pleased to state why the Burma Railways Company do not provide inter class carriages for the travelling public? Will the Government be pleased to direct them to do so at an early date?

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley: Government understand that intermediate class carriages are not provided on the Burma Railways as there has been no demand for this class of accommodation. In the circumstances Government do not propose to take any action.

ELECTION EXPENSES.

546. Mr. J. N. Basu: Will the Government be pleased to state—

(a) whether any scale of election expenses have been sanctioned or notified?

(b) whether the candidates returned to the Legislative Assembly or Council of State are entitled to a refund of all or any portion of expenditure incurred by them?

Mr. E. Burdon: (a) The Government of India have not yet fixed any maximum scales of election expenses under rule 18 of the Electoral Rules. The question of fixing such scales will however be considered.

(b) The answer is in the negative.

Mr. K. Ahmed: Sir, is it not a fact that candidates for election for the House of Commons are permitted to circulate pamphlets free of postage amongst the electors?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: I understand that there are certain concessions in regard to postage in England; but the Honourable Member will, I think, realise that the question referred to laying down a scale of election expenses. I may say as supplementing the reply which my Honourable friend has just given that we do not think that we have had sufficient experience of elections in India to justify us in attempting to lay down any scale of election expenses. We may possibly be able to do so when we have had further experience of the expenditure actually incurred by candidates.

MILITARY COLLEGE IN BURMA.

547. Mr. J. N. Basu: Will the Government be pleased to state whether a military college or feeder school is to be established in Burma?

Mr. E. Burdon: The answer is in the negative.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar (Madras: Nominated Non-Official): I will put the question later on, if you will permit me, Sir.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: (a) No dacoities took place in the clerks' quarters at Raisina in 1921-22, but in 1920 four cases of house-breaking by night were reported. The strength of the Raisina Police was strengthened in the cold weather of 1919-20.

(b) and (c) The question presumably refers to a visit of inspection by the late Member in charge of Commerce and Industries Department (Sir Thomas Holland). Various suggestions for increasing the height of compound walls and putting broken glass on them, and providing bars for windows, etc., were examined, and any practicable remedies were adopted.

PROVISION OF DOORS AND WINDOWS TO QUARTERS AT RAISINA.

541. Khan Bahadur Sarfaraz Husain Khan: Is it a fact that the Indian quarters on the Cantonment Road, Raisina, are not provided with any windows or doors on the road side; if so, will the Government be pleased to take steps to provide them with doors and windows on the road side?

Mr. H. A. Sams: The main entrance door is on the Cantonment Road side of the quarters. The quarters are provided with clerestory windows on the same side. Windows at a lower level were not provided for the reason that, were they provided, purdah would not be complete.

POLICE PATROL, RAISINA.

542. Khan Bahadur Sarfaraz Husain Khan: Have arrangements for police patrol been made at Raisina, for the Indian clerks quarters?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: Yes—patrols of 1 head constable and 10 constables are deputed for watch and ward in these quarters. The sanctioned grant for the Delhi Police force will not admit of the placing of an officer above the rank of head constable on this patrol duty.

REPEAL OF FRONTIER CROSSING REGULATION IN UPPER BURMA.

543. Mr. J. N. Basu: Will the Government be pleased to state whether it intends to repeal so much of the Frontier Crossing Regulation of Upper Burma, as affects the areas falling within the jurisdiction of the High Court at Rangoon?

Mr. Denys Bray: Government propose to leave the matter to the Government of Burma in the first instance.

PRODUCTION OF SALT IN BURMA.

544. Mr. J. N. Basu: (a) Whether salt is manufactured or produced at any place in Burma? If so, what is the value of the annual output and expenditure?

(b) Whether the Government is aware that in Shwebo District in Upper Burma, there are salt-wells? If so, whether the cultivators have been prevented from working them?

Mr. A. H. Ley: (a) Yes. The Honourable Member is referred to the figures given on pages 170 and 171 of "Statistics of British India, Volume II (Financial Statistics)." These figures show the quantity and value of salt produced in Burma from the years 1915-16 to 1919-20. Later figures of value are not yet available, but the total output in maunds for the years

1920-21 and 1921-22 was 15½ lakhs and 11½ lakhs, respectively. Government have no information regarding the expenditure incurred in manufacture, the salt not being manufactured by Government.

(b) The information has been called for from the Burma Government and will be supplied to the Honourable Member on receipt.

INTERMEDIATE CLASS CARRIAGES IN BURMA.

545. Mr. J. N. Basu: Will the Government be pleased to state why the Burma Railways Company do not provide inter class carriages for the travelling public? Will the Government be pleased to direct them to do so at an early date?

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley: Government understand that intermediate class carriages are not provided on the Burma Railways as there has been no demand for this class of accommodation. In the circumstances Government do not propose to take any action.

ELECTION EXPENSES.

546. Mr. J. N. Basu: Will the Government be pleased to state—

(a) whether any scale of election expenses have been sanctioned or notified?

(b) whether the candidates returned to the Legislative Assembly or Council of State are entitled to a refund of all or any portion of expenditure incurred by them?

Mr. E. Burdon: (a) The Government of India have not yet fixed any maximum scales of election expenses under rule 18 of the Electoral Rules. The question of fixing such scales will however be considered.

(b) The answer is in the negative.

Mr. K. Ahmed: Sir, is it not a fact that candidates for election for the House of Commons are permitted to circulate pamphlets free of postage amongst the electors?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: I understand that there are certain concessions in regard to postage in England; but the Honourable Member will, I think, realise that the question referred to laying down a scale of election expenses. I may say as supplementing the reply which my Honourable friend has just given that we do not think that we have had sufficient experience of elections in India to justify us in attempting to lay down any scale of election expenses. We may possibly be able to do so when we have had further experience of the expenditure actually incurred by candidates.

MILITARY COLLEGE IN BURMA.

547. Mr. J. N. Basu: Will the Government be pleased to state whether a military college or feeder school is to be established in Burma?

Mr. E. Burdon: The answer is in the negative.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar (Madras: Nominated Non-Official): I will put the question later on, if you will permit me, Sir.

UNSTARRED QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

ONE HUNDRED RUPEE CURRENCY NOTES.

229. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala: 1. Are Government currency notes of rupees one and one hundred allowed to change hands without any signatures?

2. How are the prices of such notes repaid to their holders in case their numbers are destroyed by fire, water or whiteants and when no record of their numbers is kept?

3. How do the Government propose to prevent loss being caused to possessors of such notes as compared with possessors of gold and silver coins, so as not to put possessors of notes at a disadvantage?

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: 1. All currency notes are payable to bearer on demand and the question of signatures on transfer does not arise.

2 and 3. The Honourable Member's attention is invited to the Government of India, Finance Department, Notification, No. 3201-F., dated the 24th November, 1921, which contains the rules on the subject.

ESTATES HELD UNDER REGULATION 3 OF 1818.

230. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala: What estates are at present held by the Government under Regulation 3 of 1818?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: The only estates held under the Regulation are those of Kunwar Mahendra Pratap Singh.

CONFISCATION OF PROPERTY UNDER REGULATION III OF 1818, AND OTHER LAWS.

231. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala: Have the Government carried out the proposals mentioned in answer to my question No. 118, printed at pages 116-117 of the Legislative Assembly Debates, dated the 6th September, 1922? If not, when do the Government propose to do so?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: It is hoped to introduce a Bill in the Indian Legislature whereby the interests in the estates of Kunwar Mahendra Partap Singh will be conveyed to his minor son. The estates and lands of Ghulam Qasim Khan, ex-Nawab of Tank have been released from attachment.

HINDU OPINION ON DR. GOUR'S AND MR. SESHAGIRI AYYAR'S BILLS.

232. Babu J. N. Mukherjee: Will Government be pleased to state what Hindu associations, religious heads of institutions, representative Hindus of the orthodox communities, and other prominent persons and associations outside the Hindu community were consulted by them with a view to obtain their opinion of the following bills—

(a) Dr. Gour's Civil Marriage (Amendment) Bill.

(b) Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar's Bill regarding exclusion from inheritance of certain Hindus.

(c) Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar's Bill for alteration of the Hindu Law of inheritance.

(3172)

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: The Honourable Member is no doubt aware that no motions were made in this Chamber for the circulation of these Bills for opinions. In order, however, to enable Government to come to a conclusion as to the attitude to be adopted by them towards the Bills, the Government of India circulated them inviting the opinions of Local Governments and Administrations, the High Courts, Chief Courts and Judicial Commissioner's Courts, the Bar Associations and such other authorities as the Local Governments thought fit to consult. The opinions received from the Local Governments have been made papers to the Bills and have already been distributed to the Honourable Members.

RESOLUTION RE RESERVED RAILWAY COMPARTMENTS.

Mr. W. M. Hussanally (Sind: Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I beg to propose the following Resolution which stands in my name:

"This Assembly recommends to the Governor General in Council that he will do away with reserved compartments for particular communities on all Indian Railways by all passenger trains unless fully paid for."

My object, Sir, is to ask the Governor General to remove compartments reserved now for Europeans and Anglo-Indians on the different Railways in India. Sir, in September, 1921, at the Simla Session, I moved a somewhat similar Resolution and on the day fixed for the discussion of that Resolution Colonel (now Sir Danvers) Waghorn, then President of the Railway Board, approached me for a compromise. I understood him to say that first and second class reserved compartments for Europeans and Anglo-Indians on all Railways had been abolished; and in the course of a little conversation that we had then he agreed to instruct all the Railway Administrations to do away with intermediate and third class compartments as well, on all trains except the mail trains. To this arrangement I agreed because I thought that the chief point was to break the ice, and if the Government agreed to the principle, I thought that it would be time enough for removing these latter compartments altogether on all Railways later on. I wish, Sir, with your permission, to quote a passage from Colonel Waghorn's speech on that occasion:

"A possible solution, which I will put before this Assembly for their consideration, is that the reservation be eliminated gradually, that is to say, that the reservation of a third class compartment for Europeans and Anglo-Indians should be done away with on all slow trains and only retained for the present on mail or fast passenger trains."

I would ask Honourable Members to mark this word "or" as this is important as I shall show a little later on.

"If the Honourable Member is prepared to accept this modification of his Resolution I shall be glad to consult Railways accordingly with a view to the introduction of this measure, and with this undertaking he will perhaps be prepared to withdraw his Resolution."

This passage, Sir, did not appear to me to have been correctly reported. As a matter of fact, Colonel Waghorn then also mentioned the word "intermediate," but in this passage the word "intermediate" does not appear. I therefore had correspondence with him upon the subject and with your permission, Sir, I shall read that correspondence of which I have obtained a copy from the Railway Board. I wrote to him on the 25th October, 1921, as follows:

[Mr. W. M. Hussanally.]

"I beg to call your attention to Volume II, No. 10, page 1215 et seq. of the proceedings of the Legislative Assembly on 28th September last.

If you remember, when you came over to me and made an offer for a compromise in regard to my proposition regarding Reserved Compartments, I agreed to it only on condition that the reservation of Interclass Compartments would also be done away with along with third classes, on all but Mail trains,—mark the words 'on all but Mail trains'—and you consented.

This is clear also from my reply to you, page 1218. In your speech as delivered you also mentioned inter class carriages. I have a vivid recollection. And I withdrew the proposition on that understanding as will appear from my reply.

In your speech as published the words 'and intermediate' are omitted after the word 'third' in line 5, page 1218. Probably this is due to the fact that you forgot to add these words to your typed speech which you might have passed on to the reporter for printing.

I shall feel obliged by your kindly informing me if you have advised the Railway Administrations to do away with the inter class reservation also or not; inasmuch as I have been getting a number of inquiries on the subject."

To this I got the following reply:

"I write in reply to your demi-official, dated the 26th October last, in regard to the subject of the removal of reservation of Inter and 3rd class compartments for Europeans and Anglo-Indians on all but mail and fast passenger trains—please mark the words 'and fast passenger trains'.

You are quite correct—I did use the words 'intermediate and 3rd class', but for some reason the word 'intermediate' has been omitted in the printed copy of the Legislative Assembly Debates.

However, you may rest assured that action has been taken on the lines indicated in my reply to your Resolution, and Agents of all Railways have been consulted with a view to removing this restriction on all slow trains; and furthermore, we have suggested that the accommodation reserved in third class compartments on mail and fast passenger trains should be reduced to a small compartment. It is quite possible we may find exceptional cases in local traffic or on certain sections where there may be good grounds for continuing the reservation.

As a matter of fact, the Railway Administrations had already been addressed some three weeks previously on the lines indicated in the reply which I gave you, and their answers are now coming in."

Then I wrote to him again on the 13th November, as follows:

"Many thanks for your demi-official of November 8th. I am glad you have issued instructions in regard to Inter class also. But you say you have confined your instructions to slow trains only and have excluded not only the Mail trains but also fast passenger trains as well, I need hardly point out that no reservation is at all necessary on the latter kind of trains considering the fact that the European and Anglo-Indian passengers by inter and 3rd class are infinitesimal. As such they should travel by Mail trains only if they wish to have reserved compartments to themselves. This is all the more necessary inasmuch as rolling stock on almost all lines is inadequate and the complaint of shortness of accommodation for Indian passengers is universal; and you did not exclude such trains in your reply.

There have been so many inquiries from me in regard to this matter from people who wish all distinction between class and class removed that I would strongly urge that you should exclude only the Mail trains at present and no other.

I hope you have no objection to my publishing this correspondence."

The reply to this is dated the 19th November, and runs as follows:

"I am in receipt of your demi-official dated the 13th November. You will find on reference to page 1218 of Volume II No. 10 of the official report of the Legislative Assembly Debates on the 28th September 1921 that I used the following words in replying to your Resolution:—

"That the reservation for Europeans and Anglo-Indians should be done away with on all slow trains and only retained for the present on mail and fast passenger trains."

Then he says:

"As I mentioned in my previous demi-official the question has been referred to Railway Administrations and is still under consideration.

"I should prefer therefore that this correspondence should not be published at the present stage."

Now, Sir, what I would ask the House to look to is that in the quotation from Colonel Waghorn's speech which I have just read the word "or" is used, whereas in his reply to my letter, dated 13th November, he uses the word "and," which makes all the difference in the world. He in the first instance said that the reservation would be restricted to mail "or" fast passenger trains: whereas in his reply to me he uses the word "and," which means mail and fast passenger trains. He also admits, Sir, in the correspondence that the word "intermediate" does not appear in his speech although he did use the word and he was going to do away with the reservation of intermediate class compartments as well. Then what happened is that some time after, my friend, Mr. Sinha, put a question to Colonel Waghorn, on the 6th of September, 1922. The question ran as follows:

"(a) In view of the assurance given by Colonel Waghorn in connection with the Resolution moved by Mr. W. M. Hussanally asking for the abolition of the reservation of compartments on railways for Europeans and Anglo-Indians, will the Government please state what action have the different Railway Companies taken in the matter and how far they have acceded to the recommendations underlying the Resolution?

(b) Is it a fact that so far only the Great Indian Peninsula Railway has taken action in the matter on the representation made by the Railway Board?

(c) Do the Government propose to correspond with the Railway Companies who have not yet taken action in order that prompt action is taken by them?"

The reply that he then gave is as follows:

"(a) and (b) In April last the Railway Board issued instructions Please mark the word "instructions."

"... to railways to the effect that the reservation of an inter or third class compartment for Europeans and Anglo-Indians should be restricted to through mail and fast passenger trains"

Here again he uses the word "and"

"... the accommodation in such cases being limited to one compartment designed to seat about 10 passengers only. Reports received from the principal railways show that the instructions have been carried out generally, in order to suit local conditions, a few railways still retain reserved third-class compartments for Europeans and Anglo-Indians on certain slow passenger trains."

Now this is also important, as this last part was not in accordance with the undertaking which he gave in the discussion and I think is a subsequent addition. Then again, he proceeds further:

"In the circumstances mentioned above, Government do not propose to take further action in the matter at present."

Now, Sir, what I complain of in this answer is that it is indefinite and evasive, and therefore I hold that Colonel Waghorn did not keep to his undertaking which he gave me at that time. My information, Sir, is that so far as the large lines of Railway are concerned, the reservation of intermediate and third class compartments on almost all trains is still being made. I can speak from my personal knowledge of the North Western Railway and the East Indian Railway, but I have also received information from several friends that that is the case on almost every other line. It may be perhaps that some line or other has taken off these reserved compartments from some trains, but my information is that it is not the case that these compartments have been taken off generally, as Colonel Waghorn said in his reply to Mr. Sinha. It is for the House, therefore, to decide whether Colonel Waghorn kept to his promise or not. Then again, Sir, quite recently another question was put to the present Honourable Railway Member whether it was a fact that Indians travelling in European costume were allowed to travel by these reserved compartments, and the reply was that the Railway Board believe that in practice no objection is taken to Indians who have adopted European dress travelling in compartments reserved for Europeans on the different railways. Government do not propose to call for further information on this point from Railway Administrations at present. Now, Sir, this reply adds insult to injury, and puts a premium upon Indians who choose to ape Christians in this respect. What does this reply mean? My son, if he puts on a hat, can travel by these reserved compartments, but unfortunately I, who do not put on a hat but choose to appear in my Fez, cannot do so, and I can be kicked off from the reserved compartment, but my son is allowed to travel. (Dr. H. S. Gour: "What about your tie and collar and your waistcoat?") I preserve my nationality. But, Sir, is it a fact that Railway Administrations do not take objection to Indians travelling in European costume by these reserved compartments? I say it is not so, and I heard only the other day from a friend that a few months ago a party of Indian gentlemen who were travelling by one of these reserved compartments from Howrah to Delhi travelled as far as Tundla; up to that point nobody objected, but at Tundla they were forcibly ejected to make room for some European or Anglo-Indian or whatever else he is called. But even supposing this objection will not be taken in the future, I say that it does not satisfy me in the least; what I say is that all these reserved compartments must go, and there is no reason now to have any reserved compartment for any particular class or community. We must all be treated alike. The next question, Sir, that I have to consider is whether it is in the interests of these Europeans or Anglo-Indians to travel by these reserved compartments, for their own sake. I say, Sir, that chiefly by reason of the fact that very often only a solitary individual or a family travel by these reserved compartments. And the result is that on occasions even murders have been committed in these compartments. I would draw your attention to the unfortunate murders that took place quite recently on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway somewhere near Lakhsar station when a lady and a gentleman travelling by one of these compartments were ruthlessly murdered. I say, therefore, that in their own interests it is not right that they should travel by such compartments which are not full. Then, again, Sir, there is another point to which I would beg to draw the attention of the House. These compartments are reserved for Europeans and Anglo-Indians. Now, who are Anglo-Indians? My friend Colonel Gidney is there. He distinctly told us only a few days ago that the community to which he had the honour to belong is Indian and he took pride only a few days ago in calling them Indians. I hope the Anglo-Indians call themselves Indians to all intents and purposes; and not merely when it suits their purposes to share the loaves and fishes, or I may say, the crumbs that fall to our lot. If that is so, that is to say if Anglo-Indians are Indians and wish to sail in the same boat as ourselves, they should travel in the same compartments with us and not claim any preference of this kind. Well, if that is conceded then the only other class of people for whom these compartments are to be reserved are the Europeans. Let us then come to the Europeans. Colonel Waghorn told us that there were no reserved compartments for first and second class passengers. What class of Europeans then travel by intermediate and third class? It is rarely, if ever, you find a non-official European travelling by intermediate or third class. Probably the bulk of the Europeans who travel by intermediate and third class are European soldiers. Well if they travel in large numbers, a compartment can be reserved for them under the ordinary rules. But if they are not, then I do not see why they should have the privilege of travelling by a compartment entirely to themselves. They ought to share with us. Colonel Waghorn in his speech on that occasion said as follows. I would like to quote his words:

[Mr. W. M. Hussanally.]

"It is true that this demand was made 18 years ago which is a long time, but prejudices and dislikes do not necessarily disappear; and Government have felt hitherto that while recognising the desirability of eliminating all racial distinctions, the continuance of this reservation was on the whole desirable in order to avoid the possibility of the unpleasantness and ill-feeling which may readily be created by some trifling incident and which may possibly lead to much greater friction than is likely to arise under the existing arrangements. It will be noted that there is no idea of any racial discrimination."

If there is no idea of any racial discrimination, I do not see any reason why the European soldier should have a compartment reserved to himself. And as regards any ill-feeling that may be created by them while travelling by railway with Indian passengers, it would bespeak nothing else than want of discipline, for which the Military Department would be responsible and not the soldiers. If they are properly disciplined, I do not see any reason why there should be any ill-feeling or any breach of the peace in a railway compartment when they are travelling with their Indian fellow passengers.

For a number of years past Sir, accommodation on railways for Indian passengers has been very limited and frequent complaints have been made that the accommodation supplied for Indian passengers particularly Intermediate and Third Class passengers, has been very insufficient, and I have myself seen, especially on the North Western Railway, that whereas an adjoining compartment goes vacant, the next compartment, reserved for Indian ladies, is so over-crowded that there is hardly any room even to stand, much less to sit. Our ladies generally travel with their children, so if there are 8 or 10 ladies and about 10 or 12 children in the compartment, the compartment is over-full; and even then the railway authorities will not allow the adjoining compartment, which goes vacant altogether, to be occupied by these ladies and children. That being the case, I think there is all the more reason that these reserved compartments should go. And we have been recently doing away with racial distinctions as far as we could. That would be another reason for me to urge to the House to pass this Resolution so that this restriction also should go. A Conference held in Lucknow in 1903 has been referred to, at which some Indians also attended. I do not know who they were and what representative character they had, but it seems that it was with their consent that these compartments were reserved on Indian railways. That might have been so, but times have changed since and are changing very fast, and I think what then looked to be quite innocent is not the case now. The political consciousness in the country since then has been attained so much that it is high time that any distinctions of the kind should now be abolished. I can assure the House, Sir, that there is a considerable feeling in the country with regard to this matter, and during recent years there have been several cases, both civil and criminal, in the various courts. It will serve no useful purpose that I should quote these cases in extenso, but I may refer to some cases the references to which I have got. One is reported in XLV I. L. R. Bombay, page 1324, another is in XLV I. L. R. Madras, page 215, another XLII I. L. R. Allahabad, page 327, and the last case on the subject is reported in XXV Bombay Law Reporter, page 26. As I said, some of these cases have been civil and others have been criminal. In some of these cases people who were forcibly ejected from these compartments brought suits for damages and in other cases they were prosecuted under the Railway Act for riding in a compartment which was reserved for somebody else. I would refer to only two cases. One in 45 Madras, in which Mr. Justice Krishnan disagreed with his colleague—I believe it was Mr. Justice Oldfield and this is what Mr. Justice Krishnan says:

[Mr. W. M. Hussanally.]

"With all respect to my learned brother I regret I am unable to concur with him in this case; for I have come to the conclusion that the accused are entitled to be acquitted on the short ground that the third class compartment in question is not proved to have been properly reserved for Europeans and Anglo-Indians as the prosecution alleged."

The case was referred to a third Judge, Mr. Justice Ayling, and it was decided of course that this compartment was properly reserved under section 42 of the Railway Act, and, therefore, the accused were guilty. In all these cases, Sir

Mr. T. E. Mcir (Madras: Nominated Official): I rise to a point of order. The Honourable Member said "it was decided of course that this compartment was properly reserved." I wish to know whether the Honourable Member is entitled to use the words "of course" which seem to be an imputation on the Honourable Judge.

Mr. W. M. Hussanally: That was very far from my intention. I have the highest respect for the Judges of the High Courts and that was not my intention. What I was referring to was that the decision was arrived at on an interpretation of section 42 of the Railway Act. I was just going to read a portion of that section when I was interrupted. Clause 2 of section 42 of the Railway Act says:

"A railway administration shall not make or give any undue or unreasonable preference or advantage to or in favour of any particular person or railway administration, or any particular description of traffic, in any respect whatsoever, or subject any particular person or railway administration or any particular description of traffic to any undue or unreasonable prejudice or disadvantage in any respect whatsoever."

This is the clause, Sir, upon which these cases have been decided, and nearly all the cases hinged upon the interpretation of the words "undue or unreasonable preference." In almost all these cases it has been held that, while these reserved compartments do constitute a preference they do not constitute an undue preference. That is the distinction that has been drawn, and it is, unfortunately, on these decisions that these persons who were prosecuted were sentenced.

Mr. President: I must ask the Honourable Member to draw his remarks to a close.

Mr. W. M. Hussanally: Well, Sir, I shall only say a few words more. Unfortunately, Sir, I have not got sufficient time to quote from the judgment of Justice Sir Lalubhai Shah of the Bombay High Court, which would have been very interesting. But suffice it to say, Sir, that he disagreed with his colleague Mr. Justice Crump and the case was referred to Mr. Justice Marten and the eventual decision was that the conviction was good and they upheld the decision of the lower court.

But what I want to draw the attention of the House to is that of late people have been getting into these reserved compartments deliberately in order that they may be prosecuted and in order to take the case up to the High Court for a decision; and what I want to draw the attention of the House to is that there is so much feeling in the country against these reserved compartments that people go deliberately into these compartments for the purpose of drawing attention to this matter and that is also one of the reasons why I would ask this House to vote for the proposition that I have brought in order that these reserved compartments should now be abolished. The only alternative would be to bring in a Bill for amending the Railway Act, but that I think is not necessary at the present moment; and I would therefore ask that this House do pass this motion to ask the Governor General in Council to do away with these reserved compartments.

Mr. K. N. Mitra (Bengal: Nominated Official): Sir, I think that the Resolution moved by my Honourable friend, Mr. Hussanally, is inopportune. The grievance is a real one and the cases to which he has referred only go to show that the state of things in this matter is not what it should be. But, Sir, it was only yesterday that we passed the Racial Distinctions Bill—a Bill which it is universally admitted will go to promote goodwill and fellow-feeling among the two communities, Indian and European, whom destiny has woven into the picturesque mosaic of India's national life. I think, Sir, that it is regrettable that a Resolution of this kind should be brought before the House almost immediately after the passage of the Racial Distinctions Bill. I do not for a moment mean to imply that the enjoyment of this privilege by a particular community is desirable, but probably what the Honourable Mover has in his mind is the wanton feeling of superiority which this reservation of carriages or compartments on railways gives to a particular class of people. But to my mind this sense of superiority is due purely to a narrow and partial outlook on life which is bound to go in the course of time. (Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas: "Why encourage it?") I say we should not encourage it, but if it is a matter of mere convenience, then I do not see how we can promote our object by depriving a particular class of our fellow-subjects of a privilege which they have enjoyed for such a length of time. If we consider this question carefully, we will find that this privilege is not extended to 1st and 2nd class passengers, but still there have been cases of rough handling, of insult and even of forcible ejection from railway carriages. After all, what is all this due to? To my mind, it is due, as I have already said, to a partial and narrow outlook on life, and when a broader, larger and more human sympathy and neighbourly feeling prevails, I am sure that this distinction will ultimately go. It is no use forcing the progress of things. So far as the 1st and 2nd class carriages are concerned, the distinction does not exist, because the people who use these two classes have got almost the same habits or can adapt themselves to the same mode of life as those of Europeans or Anglo-Indians, but the habits of life are different in the case of 3rd and inter-class passengers who may roughly be regarded as constituting the middle class people. They are respectable

3180

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

[10TH MARCH 1923.]

[Mr. K. N. Mitra.]

men, but generally they are orthodox in their habits and mode of life. So if you want to have the same type of carriages for Europeans or Anglo-Indians as well as for Indians it will not be convenient to either; because neither the Indians nor the Europeans or Anglo-Indians will feel comfortable, and the result will be that those Anglo-Indians who travel in Inter and 3rd class compartments will be obliged to travel in a higher class, which they can ill afford to do. My contention is that we have no right to do it, we have no right to force them to travel in a higher class of carriage which will cost them more money and it will not be profitable to the railway authorities themselves to have all the inter and third class carriages fitted up with the same conveniences. So I think the whole question resolves itself to one of expediency and comfort, and when there is mutual understanding between the two communities, I hope that we will not grudge any community any special privilege which they may enjoy, for they will also come to respect our feelings better. It also seems to me, Sir, that it is not fair for a legislative body like ours to pass a Resolution of this character because in this Assembly, as Honourable Members will see, there is a very inadequate representation of the community whom we are going to deprive of this particular advantage. Even if we could carry this Resolution by the sheer weight of numbers, still it will not make for the establishment of that good feeling and sympathy for which we so much care.

Maulvi Abul Kasem (Dacca Division: Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I regret very much that the vagaries of the ballot box has brought forward this Resolution and given it a place for discussion in to-day's agenda. I am sorry, Sir, that my Honourable and esteemed friend—I may go further and say—my patriotic friend, Mr. Wali Muhammad Hussanally, should have spent so much powder and shot on such an insignificant question as this. I am sorry, Sir, that he should have burnt his candle and spent hours of the night on studying this question, hunting out Law Reports and previous proceedings of this House, to prepare his speech on this Resolution. I think, Sir, the time he has spent over this would have been better spent in studying the Budget and in showering bomb shells on the Honourable the Finance Member. Sir, speaking as an Indian I might say that our grievances against the administration are numerous and there are many more questions of greater importance in which we have to ventilate those grievances and the question referred to in the Resolution unfortunately does not come up to that standard. We can very easily overlook it. But, examining the question on its merits, Sir, my friend in the course of his speech said that a third class compartment in a fast train or a mail train or it may be a very slow train is reserved for Europeans and Anglo-Indians and what is the result? The other compartments which are occupied by my countrymen are crammed full and we were given some vivid descriptions of these compartments. But may I ask the Honourable Member to say: suppose in a fast train or a mail train, where there are numerous compartments, sometimes 100 compartments, if one more is added for the third-class passengers, will it in any way improve the position of the passengers travelling in these compartments? (An Honourable Member: "It will.") An addition of 10 to 200 or 300 does not make much difference, and at the same time what are the conditions of reserving this compartment? It has been said: Why should there be any friction? But it goes without saying that if an Anglo-Indian travels in a third class compartment with Indians, there will be friction every fifty miles if not every ten miles. We have been told, if the soldiers do anything wrong, it is for the military authorities to control them. I might remind this House and my Honourable friend that human nature can never be controlled either by military or civil authorities. The people who travel in third or inter class compartments do not belong to that class either of Europeans or Anglo-Indians who have got a high education or at any rate who have got broad political views or who can understand the political situation. They are people who would not like to travel with Indians; their habits are different and naturally there is every danger of their picking a quarrel with their fellow passengers which may lead sometimes to disturbances. Our difficulties are always very great. Why add to them by removing this distinction?

The second question is that the definition of "European" in the railway administration is not the one which this House or, at least, this side of the House would like to be put on it, nor the one which the other side of the House has put upon it under orders from Whitehall. But they have got a wider definition. Just as my friend has said they define a European or an Anglo-Indian in a way that people who wear a European costume generally come under it, and I believe the railway administrations do not insist upon a fez being substituted for a hat. Therefore, Sir, I think that this Resolution is not only inopportune, as my friend behind us said, but I think it is absolutely unnecessary. Speaking for myself, I think that I would much prefer to have as my fellow traveller in a railway compartment an Indian than a European and sometimes, when coming to this city or going to Simla or elsewhere, I have taken pains to go to the Inquiry Office at the Howrah Station to see that I was booked with an Indian fellow passenger and not with Sir Alexander Murray. But I might tell my Honourable friend, Mr. Wali Muhammad Hussanally that, not only as regards Europeans and Indians, but it will be even more convenient for me to travel if my other Indian fellow companion in the carriage was a Muhammadan and not an orthodox Hindu. Mr. Jogendra Nath Mukherjee and I happen to be very great friends and friends of long standing but he and I would be both inconvenienced if we were locked up in the same compartment. Not for this reason, but because he has got his religious objections that I should not touch his food, and I may have—although I particularly at present have not—an objection to my food or anything eatable being touched by a non-Mussalman. But it is not practicable to reserve any compartments in a country like India for Hindus or Muhammadans. But I think it will save trouble and inconvenience if we reserve a third and intermediate compartment for, as you call them, the Europeans and Anglo-Indians who cannot afford to pay higher. Sir, if I may say so, these Europeans and Anglo-Indians are more extravagant than the Indian population in this country, and if he could afford he would rather travel first than third. But it is sheer necessity which makes him travel third class or intermediate class. Therefore I think it will be a sheer injustice, it will be impolitic and undesirable to pack him in the same compartment with Indians, remembering, as we must do, the class of Indians who travel also in those compartments. It has been said that they will not create any friction, but in spite of the progress we have made, in spite of the fact that we are looking much ahead and that we have got a great sense of nationality in ourselves, it must be remembered that the class of Indians who travel third and inter-class even at the present day have got a certain amount of terror of these Anglo-Indian citizens, and . . .

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas (Bombay City: Non-Muhammadan Urban): No, no.

Maulvi Abul Kasem: They will be to a large extent inconvenienced by being in the same compartment with them. My friend there says "No." I believe he is thinking of the educated section of his countrymen.

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas: Even the uneducated men have self-respect now. You may rest assured of that.

Maulvi Abul Kasem: I am glad to hear him say so. If he has self-respect I think he would prefer to travel with his own countrymen and not mix up with others.

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas: He does not want to be treated as his inferior.

Dr. Nand Lal (West Punjab: Non-Muhammadan): We are all brothers.

Maulvi Abul Kasem: Therefore, Sir, I would advise my friend to withdraw the Resolution which he has moved and not press it before this House. As regards the inconsistencies and back-sliding that has been attributed to Colonel Waghorn, in spite of large extracts read by my friend I do not think that Colonel Waghorn has been guilty of any of those charges that have been brought against him. He laid down a broad principle and I believe he has honestly and steadily followed that principle and whatever he has done, I think he has carried out the wishes of my Honourable friend and he has done what he has thought as the head of the Railway Administration to be desirable and necessary in the circumstances.

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes (Commerce and Industry Member): Sir, I would just like to take up the point taken by my friend, Maulvi Abul Kasem. I think that Mr. Hussanally has moved this Resolution under a sense of grievance. He had a sort of feeling that Colonel Waghorn did not carry out the pledge given in the House in September, 1921, on the strength of which Mr. Hussanally withdrew his former Resolution. I should like to correct that misapprehension at once. The misapprehension has risen entirely out of the fact of the word "or" being used in the printed record instead of the word "and." I have taken the trouble to look at the printed notes which preceded the moving of that Resolution and I find it clearly stated there that Colonel Waghorn suggested to His Excellency whose orders he took that a solution should be arrived at on the understanding that the reservation should be retained only in the case of mail and fast passenger trains. That shows that that was always the intention of Colonel Waghorn and in accordance with that pledge, within ten days Colonel Waghorn addressed all Railway Administrations. He addressed them not only in respect of third class carriages but also in respect of intermediate class carriages. I have got the replies of all the Railway Administrations here. On some Railways this distinction does not exist at all, and on other Railways it has been restricted to mail and fast passenger trains only. On still other Railways owing to local conditions the reservation still exists on other trains. But we have reduced the practice to the narrowest possible limits. Mr. Hussanally has suggested that by this small reservation we are making the congestion of third class carriages worse. Maulvi Abul Kasem has dealt with that objection. On these trains we reserve one or at most two,—I find in one or two Railways they reserve two compartments—one or at the most two compartments,—that is, seating accommodation for 10 or at the most 20 passengers, and that in a train which carries two hundred or three hundred passengers. That can make no impression upon the congestion and I do deprecate this attempt to treat this thing as a racial discrimination or a racial question. I do deprecate this attempt to show that these carriages are reserved in order to mark some distinction between a poor European and the Indian third class passenger, so as to show that the one is inferior to the other. Let me tell the House that there is absolutely no such idea at all. I would ask the House to remember that the Railway administrations regard this question, as their replies show, purely as a question relating to the convenience of their passengers. Those Railway Administrations which retain this discrimination say that they do it merely because of the difference in the habits between the European passengers and the Indian passengers and they think that by retaining this reservation they are consulting the convenience of their clients and that is the reason why this reservation is continued. It seems to me wrong especially at this time to try and make a racial question out of a small thing of this kind. As I say we have addressed the Railway Administrations, we have taken up the question with the Agents. The practice has been restricted to the narrowest possible limits and I think that the wisest course is not to make too much of a question of this kind but to let time correct it. I think myself that possibly we could do more with regard to the intermediate class compartments. I do not see any reason myself—why intermediate compartments should be reserved and I am quite prepared to suggest to the Railway Administrations that they should consider very seriously whether there is any necessity to continue this distinction in respect of intermediate class compartments. I consulted some of the Administrations by wire and I have already had a wire from one Administration saying that it does not think it necessary to continue the distinction at least in respect of intermediate class compartments but it wishes to continue the reservation of third class compartments. I think that will show that the Railway Administrations themselves are tackling the subject in a reasonable way and I suggest that the House should leave it at that. I hope Mr. Hussanally will take it from me that there is no desire on the part of the Railway Board or Colonel Waghorn or anybody else anywhere to evade a promise or pledge and I hope that in view of what he has said himself that a question of this kind must be tackled gradually and slowly and in view of what I have said he will withdraw the Resolution.

Lieut.-Colonel H. A. J. Gidney (Nominated: Anglo-Indians): Sir, my Honourable friend, Mr. Hussanally, has practically asked me to take part in this debate. He may call me an Anglo-Indian or whatever he likes. The only thing I ask him not to do is to call me too early in the morning. Judging from the speeches of the two previous Honourable Members Mr. Mukherjee and Maulvi Abul Kasem, who have opposed this Resolution in strong terms it appears as if any intervention on my part is not necessary but representing the Domiciled Community in this Honourable House I feel I am called upon to say a few words on this Resolution, because the aim of this Resolution is to deprive a few of the poorer members of the European and Anglo-Indian communities of a railway travelling reservation that has existed for a very long time. It is not my desire, Sir, to claim on behalf of my community any special privilege or any racial distinction whilst travelling on Indian railways. The Indian pays the same fare as I do and it would be absurd for either of us to claim preferential treatment in the same way as it would be out of the question for either of us to submit to any differential treatment. But the Mover of this Resolution seems to be singular in the tenacious way in which he has put it forward for this is the second time that he has brought this Resolution before this House. I would bring it to the notice of this Honourable House that on 1st March, 1921, my Honourable friend, Mr. Haji Wajihuddin, asked a question from the Member in charge of the Railway Department as to whether Government would be willing to reserve special accommodation in the first and second classes for Indians. Government said that it was not desirable. The same Member asked another question on 28th March, 1921, to the effect that, since Government did not consider it desirable to reserve these special compartments in the first and second classes for Indians, would they now discontinue the reservation of third and intermediate class compartments for the European and Anglo-Indian communities. Now, Sir, the necessity for some racial reservation must have been apparent to the Honourable Member when he put those questions otherwise he would never have asked them. The Honourable Member was again told by Government that it was not desirable to discontinue this reservation. Then later on on 10th September, 1921, my Honourable friend Mr. Reddi Garu, in a series of questions drew the attention of Government to Resolution II of the Madras Legislative Council, which purported to provide for the entire disappearance of all racial distinctions both in Railway accommodation and in retiring rooms, etc., and asked Government what action they were prepared to take on the matter. Government stated that there was no distinction whatever in the first and second class carriages between Europeans and Indians but that a slight distinction did exist in the shape of a reservation of 6 or 8 seats for the poorer members of the European and Anglo-Indian communities in the third and intermediate classes. My Honourable friend, Colonel Sir Danvers Waghorn, also told the Honourable Member that the reason for continuing this reservation was a matter of policy and the desire was to study more the interests of the Indian passengers, than the comforts of the few Europeans and Anglo-Indians who travelled in these reserved compartments. Mr. Hussanally was apparently not satisfied with this for I find that he moved a Resolution on the 28th September, 1921, identical with the one which he now moves with this difference: that ladies are not included or considered in it. In this Resolution Mr. Hussanally asks us to withdraw this reservation of 6 to 8 seats in third and intermediate classes for Europeans and Anglo-Indians. But, Sir, previous to this Resolution it may interest this Honourable House to know that it was the Indian members themselves who asked Government for similar special reservation whilst travelling. Mr. Hussanally, severe as he was on this doubtful privilege and extra comfort which these few poorer Europeans and Anglo-Indians enjoyed, was severer still on those Indians and Indian Christians who pretended to be Europeans by the clothes they wore and so managed to travel in these compartments and enjoy this extra comfort. To support this Resolution, he has unfortunately introduced the racial question and commented on other aspects of this matter which to me have appeared not only undesirable but unnecessary. He also referred to certain criminal cases which resulted through the action of certain Indians who took the law into their own hands and transgressed the Railway Act, by trying to forcibly enter these reserved compartments. Now, Sir, as I said before I ask for no special privileges even for the poorer members of my community. But I do believe in the truth of the adage that 'prevention is better than cure.' But let us look more carefully into this Resolution, Sir, and ascertain whether these 6 or 8 seats that are reserved for Europeans and Anglo-Indians is the only special or particular communal or caste privilege enjoyed by the travelling public in India, and when I make this comparison, I do not do so with a desire to be odious, bitter or complaining. This House knows that there are many caste privileges and reservations given to Hindus and Muhammadans when they travel and which are denied to Europeans and Anglo-Indians. To mention a few of these, there are special water-carriers, there are special water-supplies, there are special carriages reserved for Indian ladies, there are special waiting rooms, and to-day there are special refreshment rooms for the supply of food. I do not look upon these as privileges, I look upon them as necessities, because your caste principles, and your customs, demand such protection.

[Lieut.-Colonel H. A. J. Gidney.]

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas: What is the quality of special arrangements made?

Lieut.-Colonel H. A. J. Gidney: The Honourable Member must I fear put that question to the Railway Member and not to me. Well, Sir, these are a few of the special privileges the Indian passengers enjoy. Against these, put this small, doubtful, meagre privilege of reservation that my community enjoys to-day. Then, Sir, who was it that resolved on this reservation? 18 years ago a conference was held at Lucknow in which many Indian members were also present, and it was they who, realizing that unless they had this reservation which they said was to be restricted to Europeans and Anglo-Indians, there would be trouble; it was these very Indians who consented and who saw that, unless this reservation was made, it was likely to lead to petty squabbles and disturbances which I am sure everyone in this House wishes to see avoided. But, Sir, since then times have changed. But communal peculiarities, prejudices, customs and caste necessities change very slowly,—some of them do not and cannot change. I am aware, Sir, that there have been a few criminal cases, and recently there have been important criminal cases in which very serious issues have been involved, but, Sir, I believe, judging from what I have heard to-day, that the opposition against this privilege is not universal, and I have to thank those Members who have just spoken for the support they have given to what I have said. I believe, Sir, this reservation is not objected to in this Honourable House. In my opinion it amounts to a sort of dog-in-the-manger policy. The Honourable Mr. Innes has told us that any lingering idea in the minds of Honourable Members that this reservation is based on political motives or on any racial superiority is not true. It is a matter of policy; it is not a matter of racial distinction, but one of necessity, so as to avoid any unpleasant sequelae arising from mixed travelling of Indians and those of other communities who do not have the same customs. I have tried to show to this House that even if it did feel disposed to view this reservation as a racial matter surely I am entitled to ask, "why have you claimed, and why are you given, such a number of special privileges? Why should I whose customs are different to yours be denied these 8 seats in a few trains? Why cavil at the small privilege that my community has? You have your customs, I respect them. Equally in common with you, my community, both Europeans and Anglo-Indians, have their customs. If you do not respect them, surely I am not asking too much when I ask you to respect them." Sir, let me visualise or portray what might be an any day occurrence. Let us assume that this reservation is discontinued. We have one or two Europeans or Anglo-Indians travelling in an intermediate or third class carriage. Into this same carriage arrive say two orthodox Muhammadans and two Brahmins as passengers. The meal time comes as it must. These poor Anglo-Indians or Europeans have not got the money to have a meal at the dining car or the refreshment room. There is indeed no third class refreshment rooms as are provided to-day for Indians. This class of passengers usually carry their own food with them. The food, Sir, consists of food which is certainly objectionable to such fellow-passenger, what is the result? Objections—a heated argument and a disturbance.

[Lieut.-Colonel H. A. J. Gidney.]

These are the unfortunate incidents which are likely to happen any day and it is to avoid these unpleasantnesses that this reservation is necessary and was arranged 18 long years ago. My Indian friends in this Honourable House know, that I claim no privileges for my community but I do ask of them to respect my customs just in the same way as I am willing to respect theirs. My Indian friends in this House know that I lose no opportunity in impressing upon my community, especially those employed on Railways that they must treat their Indian brethren with the same respect which they expect to be treated by them but I am confident, Sir, that if this reservation is removed, it will only lead to trouble. It will open the path to quarrels which Indians, Europeans and Anglo-Indians are equally desirous of avoiding. I, therefore, request my Honourable friend Mr. Hussanally to withdraw his Resolution and even if it is pressed and accepted, the resulting gain to him and Indian travellers will not be commensurate with the trouble that is likely to arise in consequence, and it is to avoid this eventuality that I ask for the withdrawal of the Resolution and I ask Mr. Hussanally to be satisfied with what the Honourable the Railway Member promised him in September 1921. We have only to look at the trains to-day, with enhanced railway fares, to realise that hundreds of Anglo-Indians and Europeans, who a few years ago, could afford to travel in second class carriages find it impossible to do so to-day. I, therefore, challenge the Honourable Mover of the Resolution to prove that to-day these reserved compartments go empty. They go over-crowded. (Voices: 'No, no.') This is my personal experience, and I say, Sir, that overcrowding and not emptiness does exist to-day in these reserved compartments for Europeans and Anglo-Indians. This emptiness may have existed a few years ago but certainly not to-day. I therefore again ask my Honourable friend Mr. Hussanally to withdraw this Resolution, and I am sure the Honourable House will support me in what I ask.

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley (Chief Commissioner, Railways): I think, Sir, I may perhaps be able to clear away one or two misapprehensions which may have arisen since the Honourable Mr. Innes spoke a few minutes ago. With all deference to Colonel Gidney, I think perhaps he has introduced some, what I may call, irrelevancies into this discussion. I look upon this primarily as a practical question of railway working, where the railway administrations must make the best arrangements they can for the different classes of passengers which they have to deal with. I think perhaps I can sum up all that has been said by Colonel Gidney and others when they referred to this matter on racial lines by putting a little formula forward in this way. I think the difficulties which arise on railway journeys when passengers are cooped up together for long distances may be best described as mutual irritation. We cannot hope to define these things any further, and I think it is inadvisable to do so. We all know that mutual irritation does occur between passengers of all classes and creeds and races wherever they travel and I believe this small reservation which we have now brought about, the limitation which we have placed on this reservation on the trains, is going to assist in removing those slight causes of mutual irritation between fellow-passengers. I should like to repeat what the Honourable Mr. Innes has said we in the Railway Department are prepared to do in this matter. We are prepared to suggest to Railway Administrations that the reservation of Intermediate Class carriages should be done away with, though it must be left to the Railway Administrations to decide whether this can be carried out practically in all cases. Then I would like to refer again to an answer which I gave recently to a question put in the House in regard to Indians wearing European dress. It is understood to be the practice not to object to Indians wearing European dress travelling in these reserved carriages. We will, however, address the Railway Administrations and suggest to them that if this is not the practice in any case, it should be made the practice in the future. With these words I think, Sir, I may suggest again to Mr. Hussanally that he would be well advised to withdraw the Resolution.

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas: Sir, I must confess to a feeling of amazement at the speeches made by my Honourable friend, Mr. Khagendra Nath Mitra and by my Honourable friend, Mr. Abul Kasem. I cannot understand, in the first place, why only a one-sided view should be taken of this question. My friend Mr. Abul Kasem has come forward, I do not know whether of his own accord or whether because he has been requested by some one, to defend the action of Colonel Waghorn. If there is one thing clear in Mr. Hussanally's indictment of the Railway Administration, it is this, that for some reason or another Colonel Waghorn has not been able to carry out the pledge that he had given to the Assembly. I am not here to find fault with him. I quite appreciate the difficulties that he may have to encounter. But there is no reason to defend Colonel Waghorn on the part of my Honourable friend, Mr. Abul Kasem. Now we have a philosophy preached by my Honourable friend, Mr. Khagendra Nath Mitra and my Honourable friend, Mr. Abul Kasem. We have just passed the Racial Distinctions Bill, why, they ask, do you want these racial distinctions by doing away with the reservation of compartments for Anglo-Indians and Europeans? I cannot understand the logic of this philosophy. After all what are we doing when we ask that this distinction should be done away with? We are only carrying out in practice what we have passed here. I do not know whether Honourable Members realise, or even Government realise, that a good deal of discontent in this country is due to the treatment that we receive because of the Railway Administration in this country. I can recollect, Sir, that one of the first things that I said to one of the highest officials on his arrival in India was that a good deal of discontent in this country prevailed because of the scenes that were repeated every day during the railway journey or on railway platforms: and any step taken to do away with any injustice that is being done to Indians by the present Railway Administration will be not a disservice, but will be a great service to the country. We are asked to believe that we have "privileges," why should Europeans or Anglo-Indians not have "privileges?" My friend, Mr. Joshi, last year gave us a picture of what our "privileges" were. If such are the privileges that the European or Anglo-Indian demands, well, in fairness to them, we shall not have the hardihood to give them those privileges that are extended to our own countrymen. It is not a racial question. I want Honourable Members to believe me, and I want Government to believe me when I say that I am absolutely free from racial bias or racial consideration. Government will pardon my saying so, but if they perpetuate this distinction in cases like these of reserving compartments for Anglo-Indians and Europeans, we shall not be held guilty of perpetuating racial distinctions; those who advocate that policy will be held guilty.

[Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas.]

Now, we were asked a question here, "is this going to help congestion if one more compartment is thrown open to you." It is not a question of whether it is going to help or not; as a matter of fact, it is bound to help. I will give you an instance from my own experience, that happened last year. We came here, leaving the work of the Fiscal Commission, to be present for the visit of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales to Delhi. When I was going back the train was overcrowded with the result that my servants could not get into the servants' compartment; the Indian Princes' servants and the sahibs' servants were there. So my servants got into the compartment anyhow for the time being and stood for a station or two and then they found that there was a third class compartment available reserved for Europeans and Anglo-Indians, which they got into. There was no other way; it was an empty compartment and they got into it. Well, after midnight, the guard at a railway station went and asked them to clear out. There was a carriage and there were three compartments in that carriage absolutely unoccupied. The servants refused to get out. They said they could not get into the servants' compartment; there was no other room available in the whole train and so they had got into that compartment. The servants refused to get out and the guard threw them out bag and baggage. The servants came and woke me up. I went and asked the guard why he wanted to clear these people out. He said "this compartment is reserved for Europeans." I said "this is unoccupied, the train is full, why will you not let them get in." He said "there is one Anglo-Indian who wishes to occupy one of these three compartments and he objects to these people being there." I call it unconscionable and inhuman conduct not to allow these people, when there was no room in the train, to stay in other two compartments which were absolutely unoccupied. Sir, these things happen every day. Fortunately for myself, I had an eminent English lady travelling with us, my wife and myself. I do not mind mentioning her name, I have her authority for doing so. She was Lady Emily Lutyens, the sister of the present Governor of Bengal, and she characterised this conduct on the part of the railway authorities as appalling, and said that if these things happened in this country every day certainly there was some justification for the discontent and for the prejudice that prevailed.

Sir, all that is asked for is that we should do away with distinctions in railway carriages. The talk that we have had of the different habits and customs and my Honourable friend, Maulvi Abul Kasem's eloquent appeal that he did not want to travel with Mr. Mukerjee and Sir Alexander Murray but wanted to be left alone, all this is absolutely out of the question. Here is a bar placed against Indians, a badge of inferiority, I call it, in spite of what my Honourable friends have said. What often happens, as I described last year, is that you find an Anglo-Indian stretching out his legs and smoking a cigarette comfortably in one compartment while in the other third-class compartments you find Indians huddled together and kicked by the guard. It is a thing which happens every day on every railway platform and, when the subject is brought forward, we find four or five speeches made even by my Honourable friends, Mr. Khagendra Nath Mitter and Maulvi Abul Kasem with a view to attacking my Honourable friend who has brought forward this Resolution. He demands nothing more than that fair treatment should be meted out to us, that this injustice should be removed and that a grave cause, which perpetuates the discontent among the poor masses, should be removed.

Sir, with all the power that I can command, I support this Resolution.

Maulvi Abul Kasem: I want to make a personal explanation, Sir. My name was mentioned by Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas. I did not like to interrupt his eloquence but the insinuation made by him that I was set up by any one is incorrect, unfounded and unjustifiable.

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas: Sir, I am sorry I gave that impression. Nothing was further from my thoughts. If I have done so, I apologise.

Colonel Sir Henry Stanyon (United Provinces: European): Sir, after the heat generated by the last speaker, who worked himself up into a good deal of emotion over the hard case, the undoubtedly hard case, of his servants, my endeavour will be to try and get this Honourable House to look at this matter in its proper proportion.

British India is full of social difficulties and social anomalies. Education and a spirit of compromise are at work and are steadily overcoming a good many of these difficulties and anomalies. In education and the spirit of compromise to which I have referred is to be found the real remedy for them. The hard and fast cleavage and distinction between class and class, and race and race, is being steadily and gradually eliminated. The question is whether this Central Legislature is going to allow itself to be used as a social reform club, and to exercise its great powers and responsibilities for the purpose of wasting time over pinpricks of this kind. Distinctions do exist. Call them racial if you like. I myself think that many which are so-called are not really racial distinctions in the proper sense of the term. But they do exist, and for a long time to come they must continue to exist, and we must try, working together, to make the best of them.

Sir, I see railway stations with refreshment rooms reserved for Hindus and with refreshment rooms reserved for Muhammadans. I do not see at any station a refreshment room reserved for Europeans; and I am very glad not to see it. I am glad, however, to see that there are reservations of that kind made for Hindus and Muhammadans, because I have the highest respect for the conservative feelings which those communities entertain with regard to their food, their habits and so forth. I would no more dream of trying to force my way into one of those refreshment rooms, as one of the public having a right to go everywhere, than I would try to fly. There is no question among third class passengers now, whatever it may have been in the past, of racial superiority. It is a question, not have "privileges?" My friend, Mr. Joshi, last year gave us a picture of what our "privileges" were. If such are the privileges that the European or Anglo-Indian demands, well, in fairness to them, we shall not have the hardihood to give them those privileges that are extended to our own countrymen. It is not a racial question. I want Honourable Members to believe me, and I want Government to believe me when I say that I am absolutely free from racial bias or racial consideration. Government will pardon my saying so, but if they perpetuate this distinction in cases like these of reserving compartments for Anglo-Indians and Europeans, we shall not be held guilty of perpetuating racial distinctions; those who advocate that policy will be held guilty.

[Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas.]

Now, we were asked a question here, "is this going to help congestion if one more compartment is thrown open to you." It is not a question of whether it is going to help or not; as a matter of fact, it is bound to help. I will give you an instance from my own experience, that happened last year. We came here, leaving the work of the Fiscal Commission, to be present for the visit of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales to Delhi. When I was going back the train was overcrowded with the result that my servants could not get into the servants' compartment; the Indian Princes' servants and the sahibs' servants were there. So my servants got into the compartment anyhow for the time being and stood for a station or two and then they found that there was a third class compartment available reserved for Europeans and Anglo-Indians, which they got into. There was no other way; it was an empty compartment and they got into it. Well, after midnight, the guard at a railway station went and asked them to clear out. There was a carriage and there were three compartments in that carriage absolutely unoccupied. The servants refused to get out. They said they could not get into the servants' compartment; there was no other room available in the whole train and so they had got into that compartment. The servants refused to get out and the guard threw them out bag and baggage. The servants came and woke me up. I went and asked the guard why he wanted to clear these people out. He said "this compartment is reserved for Europeans." I said "this is unoccupied, the train is full, why will you not let them get in." He said "there is one Anglo-Indian who wishes to occupy one of these three compartments and he objects to these people being there." I call it unconscionable and inhuman conduct not to allow these people, when there was no room in the train, to stay in other two compartments which were absolutely unoccupied. Sir, these things happen every day. Fortunately for myself, I had an eminent English lady travelling with us, my wife and myself. I do not mind mentioning her name, I have her authority for doing so. She was Lady Emily Lutyens, the sister of the present Governor of Bengal, and she characterised this conduct on the part of the railway authorities as appalling, and said that if these things happened in this country every day certainly there was some justification for the discontent and for the prejudice that prevailed.

Sir, all that is asked for is that we should do away with distinctions in railway carriages. The talk that we have had of the different habits and customs and my Honourable friend, Maulvi Abul Kasem's eloquent appeal that he did not want to travel with Mr. Mukerjee and Sir Alexander Murray but wanted to be left alone, all this is absolutely out of the question. Here is a bar placed against Indians, a badge of inferiority, I call it, in spite of what my Honourable friends have said. What often happens, as I described last year, is that you find an Anglo-Indian stretching out his legs and smoking a cigarette comfortably in one compartment while in the other third-class compartments you find Indians huddled together and kicked by the guard. It is a thing which happens every day on every railway platform and, when the subject is brought forward, we find four or five speeches made even by my Honourable friends, Mr. Khagendra Nath Mitter and Maulvi Abul Kasem with a view to attacking my Honourable friend who has brought forward this Resolution. He demands nothing more than that fair treatment should be meted out to us, that this injustice should be removed and that a grave cause, which perpetuates the discontent among the poor masses, should be removed.

Sir, with all the power that I can command, I support this Resolution.

Maulvi Abul Kasem: I want to make a personal explanation, Sir. My name was mentioned by Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas. I did not like to interrupt his eloquence but the insinuation made by him that I was set up by any one is incorrect, unfounded and unjustifiable.

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas: Sir, I am sorry I gave that impression. Nothing was further from my thoughts. If I have done so, I apologise.

Colonel Sir Henry Stanyon (United Provinces: European): Sir, after the heat generated by the last speaker, who worked himself up into a good deal of emotion over the hard case, the undoubtedly hard case, of his servants, my endeavour will be to try and get this Honourable House to look at this matter in its proper proportion.

British India is full of social difficulties and social anomalies. Education and a spirit of compromise are at work and are steadily overcoming a good many of these difficulties and anomalies. In education and the spirit of compromise to which I have referred is to be found the real remedy for them. The hard and fast cleavage and distinction between class and class, and race and race, is being steadily and gradually eliminated. The question is whether this Central Legislature is going to allow itself to be used as a social reform club, and to exercise its great powers and responsibilities for the purpose of wasting time, over pinpricks of this kind. Distinctions do exist. Call them racial if you like. I myself think that many which are so-called are not really racial distinctions in the proper sense of the term. But they do exist, and for a long time to come they must continue to exist, and we must try, working together, to make the best of them.

Sir, I see railway stations with refreshment rooms reserved for Hindus and with refreshment rooms reserved for Muhammadans. I do not see at any station a refreshment room reserved for Europeans; and I am very glad not to see it. I am glad, however, to see that there are reservations of that kind made for Hindus and Muhammadans, because I have the highest respect for the conservative feelings which those communities entertain with regard to their food, their habits and so forth. I would no more dream of trying to force my way into one of those refreshment rooms, as one of the public having a right to go everywhere, than I would try to fly. There is no question among third class passengers now, whatever it may have been in the past, of racial superiority. It is a question, as has been rightly pointed out from the Government Benches, of travelling convenience. We have to face the fact, which is beyond our control, that a large number of Indians object to travel with Europeans, and a large number of Europeans object to travel with Indians. We are not concerned with whether there is any justice in these feelings. The feelings are there, and the Railway Administration have to deal with them. Now Indians travel in thousands, while Europeans travel in tens. If there are a hundred third class compartments in a train, surely, in order to serve this desire of the communities to travel apart, the natural thing for a Railway Administration to do is to reserve one compartment for the 10 Europeans rather than attempt to reserve 99 compartments for the thousand Indians. That is really, I think, very largely at the bottom of this reservation in third class carriages. I have had many journeys, and most interesting journeys, on railways in company with Indian passengers whom I had never seen in my life before, and I have always found them helpful, courteous and accommodating in every possible way. But I must confess that I myself have felt uncomfortable many times, not because I thought I was superior, but because I was afraid I might say or do something hurtful to the habits or feelings of my fellow-passengers. I recently travelled in the company of a pious Muhammadan who had liked to say his prayers in the carriage while the train was in motion. I was glad to see that he did not give up his habits, but I was uncomfortable. Similarly, if I were to travel with a high caste Brahmin, I should be most uncomfortable, lest I with my calf-skin boots and my European habits, should jar him at any moment. Sir, these differences are found even where there is no reservation. I daresay my friends have heard of and some of them may even have been to, such a place as a Cinema, where, in the one-rupee seats, you see both Europeans and Indians, you can see the same instinctive segregation there. You see the Europeans sitting together in one place and the Indians together in another; unless they happen to be Europeans who know Indians, and Indians who know Europeans and like to mix with them. The whole thing is so difficult to define that all that the railway people seem now to do is merely to look to the convenience of the different classes of passengers. I do not think for a moment that to-day there can be any talk in third class carriages of racial superiority. In 1st and 2nd class carriages reservation has been done away with, and we have the undertaking from the Government Benches given to-day that the same rule of non-difference is to be brought into effect in the intermediate class carriages. No blame attaches to a guard, who is bound by orders, for not allowing a compartment to be occupied which is reserved for a particular purpose. Such exclusion is not the act of the guard, and there should be no irritation against him; that man is merely doing his duty. I have been evicted over and over again for getting into a ladies' compartment which I found for the time being unoccupied by any lady; and I am very careful now. Sometimes I have found myself there to my surprise and horror; but I have never thought that the guard who turned me out was in any way abusing his powers. I think, on the whole, Sir, that the matter has been thoroughly ventilated. I see that there is a broad-minded view on the Indian side. I hope it will be believed that there is an equally broad-minded view on the European side, and that nothing will be done by a Resolution of this House to give room for any impression that the House uses its majority for the purpose of furthering what, in one or two of the speeches, has been rather treated as if it was a racial question. I am jealous, as a privileged Member of this House, of the reputation that it holds, not before a small electorate, but before the world, as a Central Legislative Assembly; and for this House to pass hours in speaking of and arriving at a Resolution on the little question whether in one out of the 20 or 30 third class compartments the Railway Administration shall put people who want to travel by themselves and who are not wanted by the rest of the travellers, is, I think, a procedure that is far beneath the dignity of this Honourable House. The only matter that I would refer to is one other question that was raised of soldiers being given compartments to themselves. Sir, I say it with a considerable knowledge of this country that the average rustic who travels by the third class carriage would consider himself very badly treated if he was forced to travel with a lot of men who do not know one word of his language, whose habits are entirely foreign and who are brought up more or less to think of no one except themselves, apparently. (Mr. W. M. Hussanally: "They need not be in that compartment: they could go to another.") Moreover, this segregation of the soldier is a matter of discipline. Would my friend say that, when a regiment marches through a town, that they are occupying a reserved part of the street in going up together, and that they should indiscriminately march up with the rest of the population walking along the street out of order? Therefore, I say it is a very wise provision that soldiers should be put into separate compartments and travel by themselves. It is fair to them and it is fair to the Indian community also, and absolutely just. And I put it again to the Honourable Mover of this Resolution, as has been put by others, that the matter has now been thoroughly ventilated and that he will not try to drive this House to any Resolution on the question.

[Colonel Sir Henry Stanyon.]

(Several Honourable Members: "I move, Sir, that the question be now put.")

The motion was adopted.

Mr. W. M. Hussanally: Sir, I should like to say a few words.

Mr. President: I will give the Honourable Member his reply but, as the closure has been carried unanimously, that ought to show that the debate has been exhausted.

Mr. W. M. Hussanally: I wish to say a few words if you will permit me. Since I have been pressed to withdraw this Resolution, I will do so, though I am not very pleased in doing so. I wanted, Sir, to reply to all the criticisms that were offered to my speech, but even that I will forego. I shall only say that I take up the challenge from Colonel Gidney when he said that these compartments go full. I still maintain and very emphatically too that in 9 cases out of 10 these compartments go empty or only with a solitary individual. But, Sir, Mr. Innes has given us an assurance that he will persuade the railway administrations to do away with the reserved intermediate compartments, though Mr. Hindley qualified that offer by a condition. I hope they will see their way to persuade all these Railway Administrations to do away with these intermediate class compartments for the present, and, in withdrawing the Resolution, I reserve to myself the right to bring it forward once more if I find that adequate steps have not been taken.

The Resolution was, by leave of the Assembly, withdrawn.

RESOLUTION RE SELECTION TO APPOINTMENTS UNDER GOVERNMENT OF INDIA.

Mr. K. Muppil Nayar (West Coast and Nilgiris: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Mr. President, the Resolution that stands in my name reads as follows:

"This Assembly recommends to the Governor General in Council that the Government of India in making appointments to offices under its direct control shall ordinarily, where the qualifications of candidates are adequate to discharge the duties efficiently, by their education, ability, and integrity, give preference to those that belong to classes or communities which are not well represented in the service, due regard being had to provincial considerations."

I wish an abler advocate than me had moved this Resolution. But the fortunes of the ballot are such and I shall content myself mainly with an introduction. I shall not detain the House long especially in view of the short time before us, but I shall leave the expert handling of the present important and delicate Resolution to its abler—I almost said natural—guardians. There are, however, some plain truths and the most important among them in my opinion is, Sir, that it is not enough if only the man who has passed an examination or who wants an employment to keep his body and soul together is represented in the Government services of a country. The executive of the Government has not only to carry out the Government's policy but has also much to do in the shaping of it, inasmuch as the officials form the Government's advisers and possess all practical experience in most matters. Viewed from this aspect, it will be seen how essential it is that every class and community must be properly represented in the services. It is also plain that the more the stake in the country, the more ought to be the representation. I am sure my friends will speak for their communities and I wish to supplement that with only emphatically urging the necessity of encouraging recruitment from my class, the landed interests. I am sorry their claims have not been adequately appreciated in the past. Then again, in a vast continent like India with her millions of people of various religions and languages, classes and castes, I believe it will be impossible to maintain general satisfaction without some such means as suggested in the Resolution for a long time to come—a time when we may find something more in common among her different communities. The Resolution is a very modest and moderate one. It is couched in such terms as to offend none. So, in commending my Resolution, I hope it will have the universal support of this House.

Mr. President: Resolution moved:

"This Assembly recommends to the Governor General in Council that the Government of India in making appointments to offices under its direct control shall ordinarily, where the qualifications of candidates are adequate to discharge the duties efficiently by their education, ability, and integrity, give preference to those that belong to classes or communities which are not well represented in the service, due regard being had to Provincial considerations."

I may inform the House that, of the four amendments on the paper, the amendment standing in the name of Mr. M. K. Reddi Garu appears to me to raise much the same question as that raised by the original Resolution. The amendment standing in Mr. Mukundaraja Ayyangar's name is out of order in so far as it invites Government to enumerate the population of India. It is in order in so far as it proposes to add a minimum educational qualification, and as far as the last six lines of it are concerned, they are a mere repetition of the original Resolution. Khan Bahadur

(3192)

Zahiruddin Ahmed's amendments are not in order because they propose to deal with matter which properly ought to be raised only in the Legislative Council of a Province. The amendment of substance which is in order stands in the name of Mr. Jayanti Ramayya Pantulu whom I now call.

Mr. J. Ramayya Pantulu (Godavari cum Kistna: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I beg to propose:

"That in the Resolution which has just been moved by my friend Mr. Nayar, for all the words after the words 'shall ordinarily' the following be substituted:

'be guided by considerations of capacity, efficiency and character irrespective of caste or creed'."

Sir, the object of my amendment is to ask the Government not to accept the Resolution moved by my Honourable friend, Mr. Muppil Nayar, but to continue to follow the practice which they have been following hitherto. My objections to the Resolution are fourfold. The first is impracticability. The Resolution wants Government to give preference to communities that are not at present properly represented in the services "with due regard" also "to provincial consideration." I think that if this contention is pushed to its logical extent we shall have to consider not only provincial considerations but also religious considerations, communal considerations, caste considerations and so many other considerations. Let us take the provincial considerations. We have a fairly large number of provinces in India, but if you combine linguistic and provincial considerations, how many linguistic areas have you got in India? According to our old books there used to be 56 countries making up the whole Indian Empire. Probably their number is larger now. Let us take it at 56. Then you will have to take 56 areas into consideration, that is so far as provincial and linguistic areas are concerned. Then you will have to take castes and communities into consideration—Muhammadans, Hindus, Jains, Sikhs, Buddhists (A Voice: "They are all Hindus.")—I do not think our Jain friends will admit that. In each community there are sub-communities. Take the Hindus. Do the Hindus form one community? There are at least four castes, and each caste has many sub-castes, and in each sub-caste there are many subdivisions, and if statistics are to be compiled on the lines suggested by my Honourable friend, Mr. Mukundaraja Ayyangar, you will have a very big book. How is the Government to apportion the appointments among all these communities? First by provinces, then by languages, then by religion, then by castes, by sub-castes—how is it to apportion these appointments among all these different communities? This communal constitution if it is to be properly constructed will be a labyrinth and one would lose himself in it. Therefore, I say that it will be simply impracticable. Then take the case of the Panchamas, the lowest class, the outcastes. Where will they be in a system of communal representation in the services? The Panchamas—are they to be represented in the services or not? If you are going to give representation to each community, here is a community which forms by far the largest community in the whole of India. The Panchamas, in numbers, exceed any other community, I think, and where will they be? If you want to have regard to efficiency or competency, not one Panchama in a thousand or even in ten thousands will be found fit to occupy any of the appointments. Practically, then, all of them will have to go unrepresented. Then, where is your communal representation? What is the great grievance that those communities which are not well represented in public service at present have? Why is it that they are not so well represented? Let me take the case of a few communities in my own part of the country. Take the case of the community to which my Honourable friend the Mover of this Resolution himself belongs. The Nairs, Sir, are one of the most intellectual communities in the Madras Presidency; not only the males, but the Nair ladies are among the best educated ladies in the whole of India. They are educated not only in Malayalam but also in Sanskrit. I am told that there are very good Sanskrit scholars among the Nair ladies. The Nair community is the community to which Sir Sankaran Nair belongs and to which the late Dr. Nair, the founder of the non-Brahman movement belonged. I am surprised, Sir, that a member of that community should come forward to move this Resolution as if his community has any grievance. So far as the Nairs are concerned, they are already at the top.

[Mr. J. Ramayya Pantulu.]

Then take the case of the Vaisiyas or Banias who are non-Brahmans. You do not find them well represented in the services, and why is that? The entire trade of the country is in their hands; and being tradesmen they are naturally very shrewd people. You do not find them wanting in intelligence; the wealth of the country is in their hands and yet you do not find them represented in the services and that is because they do not think it worth their while to get into the services and give up the more lucrative business of traders and merchants. And that could be the only reason why they have not entered the services, for nobody could have prevented them if they had wanted to enter. Why they are not found in the services is simply due to the fact that they have not found it worth their while to enter them.

Then again, Sir, take the case of another community to which my Honourable friend, Mr. Reddi belongs. The Reddis of the Nellore district are well known to be a very intelligent and highly educated class. Here again I would say that the ladies of this community are traditionally known to be highly educated and intelligent. In this community you will find several Telugu and Sanskrit scholars. They are very rich people, some of them are zamindars and they have a virtual monopoly of the agriculture of the country. The reason why they are not represented in the services is that they do not find it worth their while to enter service; it does not pay them, and they are much better off as they are. But in any case, at least under the British Government, has there ever been anything in the nature of a restriction upon any class or community trying to better its position? All that is aimed at even in the most democratic country is equality of opportunity for all people. Can anyone say that under the British administration, any community has been deprived of opportunities of improving and distinguishing itself equally with any other community? I do not think, Sir, that anybody can say that. The British Government has always proceeded on the policy of governing the country in the equal interests of all people without any distinction of caste, creed or colour, and I believe they have on the whole acted up to that principle; although in my own part of the country we sometimes come across advertisements of appointments with a nota bene—“No Brahmin need apply.”

1 P.M. Bureaucracy, whatever sins it may have to atone for, can undoubtedly be credited with having filled up the public offices only with a view to efficiency and the proper discharge of the duties appertaining to the offices. Favouritism there has been certainly, but it has not been in favour of the intellectual classes; favouritism whenever it has been exercised, has been exercised to the detriment of the intellectual classes.

Nevertheless, they have had always an eye on the efficient discharge of the duties attached to the offices. I, therefore deny, Sir, that any community has been deprived of any opportunity of entering the public service by availing itself of the educational facilities which have been offered by the Government, and if certain communities have not availed themselves of those facilities, it is because they have found that it does not pay, it is not worth their while to do so, that it pays them better to do something else. Let us go to Bombay. What do you find there? The trade and commerce of the country is entirely in the hands of Parsis,—or in the hands of Parsis and Guzeratis. Are we going to say that these people have had a monopoly of these things and therefore, hereafter, there should be communal representation in commerce, that you must distribute this trade and commerce among the different communities according to their numbers? I suppose, Sir, this has only to be stated to be condemned. Each community or each individual chooses whatever course of life seems to him to be good for him, and whatever course of life it or he is fitted for; it is a case of free choice and free competition, and, if, as a result of that free competition, some people have more of one thing than others, I do not think you can attribute it to any favouritism or nepotism or jobbery, and I do not see how you can improve things by simply insisting upon everyone of these professions being apportioned among the different communities on simply a numerical basis. What would be the effect of any such communal representation on the administration of the country? What does a private employer do? The private employer wants to employ the best men that he can get for his money because he finds that it pays him best. Take the case of an architect, of an industrial man, a mill-owner, he will employ the best labour that he can get for his money, he will not look to communal representation in it. Himself may belong to a community which is not well represented in the services in his own mill; I do not think any mill-owner who is a business man, who does business on business lines, would be so foolish as to insist upon a certain number of people in his mill belonging to his own community. Such a man will not be able to keep his business going, I think, for a month. Well, if that is the case with the private employer, who should ask Government, which is the largest employer in the country, why should it follow any other principle? Is not the tax-payer entitled to get the best value for his money? You want a certain type of man for doing a certain piece of work; you attach a certain salary to the job to attract a really useful, capable man. Having done that, is it not your duty to try to get the best man that you can possibly get for your money for discharging the duties of that appointment? Is it not reasonable that the only consideration with you in filling that appointment must be efficiency, which out of all the applicants can be trusted to discharge the duties of that post most efficiently and intelligently? What do you do if you have got a case in a Court of Law in which you are to be defended or you want to prosecute or you are to be represented in a civil suit? You naturally go to the best Pleader that you can get for the fee that you can afford to pay. There, you do not think of communal representation. You do not necessarily go to the Vakil who belongs to your sect or race or creed, you go to the best man that is available. Then, take the case of doctors. If you are in bad health, you naturally go to the doctor who you think will be most useful to you, the only limit being the limit of the money that you can pay him; and I do not see why you should adopt another procedure in the case of the public service. Then, take the case of military service. Our Indian Army is monopolised by two classes, the Pathans and the Sikhs (A Voice: “No.”) largely. At any rate you do not maintain that all the communities in India are represented in it. You do not, on that account, ask the Government to disband all these regiments and re-fill them on a communal basis, consisting of so many Hindus, so many Muhammadans, so many Brahmins, etc.; and will an army constituted like that be able to defend India? Will it be of any use? The rule which ought to be followed in this as in all other cases is to put a man in the place for which he is best fitted. That is the only rule. Once you depart from that rule, you do not know where you will go. It will be impossible to depart from that course and give any weight to the considerations of communal representation without demoralising the whole service.

[Mr. J. Ramayya Pantulu.]

Mr. President: I must ask the Honourable Member to draw his remarks to a close.

Mr. J. Ramayya Pantulu: There is only one other consideration which I want to put before the House, namely, the political consideration. What will be the effect of communal representation in the services on the political future of the country? We all want self-Government and immediate self Government also we want. Self-Government presupposes a nation, consolidated nation, and we want to build up a nation as fast as we can. Now, is not communal representation not only in the Legislative Councils but also in the services calculated to emphasise and perpetuate the communal differences which already exist in matters of religion and quasi-religious customs? Is it not calculated to emphasise those differences also in the public life of the people? Does it conduce to this nation-building, or help the growth of the nation, this perpetuation of the differences not merely in matters which are purely religious, or quasi-religious, but also in the public life of the country? I think, Sir, it will be impossible to ask for self-Government if you insist upon having communal representation in the services. Communal representation is entirely opposed to the spirit of self-Government and it lays the axe at the very root of your demand for self-Government. The answer which this Assembly gives to the question raised in this Resolution will indicate the measure of the depth of the desire which this House has for our self-Government, and I want the House to bear this in mind in deciding this question. Sir, I oppose the Resolution.

Maulvi Abul Kasem (Dacca Division: Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I this morning regretted the Resolution brought forward by my Honourable friend, Mr. Wali Muhammad Hussanally, and I consider that the Resolution which has followed is really unfortunate; but as it has cropped up and as it is being discussed, I will be failing in my duty to my constituency if I do give only a passive support to the Resolution moved by my friend, Mr. Muppil Nayar. Whatever my friends may think of it, I would draw their attention to the amendment which has just been moved by my friend from Madras. I would tell him that what he states in that amendment has been clearly and more solemnly and definitely stated in the great Proclamation of the Great Queen Victoria. That Proclamation exists; it has been re-affirmed by the successors of Her late Majesty and the Government of India. Where was then the necessity for our friends on this side of the House to come forward with Resolutions in season and out of season for the Indianisation of the services and the Indianisation of the Indian Army? The reason was that there was some defect on the part of the Government in giving effect to that Proclamation, not only in its letter, but in its spirit.

Sir, my friend over there says that the Government, in making these appointments, should be guided by character, integrity and efficiency. I believe, Sir, he will agree with me when I say that these qualifications are not the monopoly of a particular community or a particular sect. The Resolution as placed before the House is very wide and elastic. It does not ask for the sacrifice of efficiency or in any way the utility of the office by putting into it unqualified men, simply because they happen to belong to a particular community. But I submit for the consideration of this House that there is ample justification for demanding that where the necessary qualifications, whatever they may be, are available, communities and classes which are not represented, should be represented in the public service. May I have the indulgence of the House to say, Sir, that a community in a country derives its importance, its influence and its powers on various grounds, on population, on wealth, on education, and I may add, on the share it has in the administration of the country. How are you going to give that share in the administration of the country if you do not get those communities adequately and properly represented in the services? A reference has been made, Sir, to self-Government which is looming large before us and to nation-building. Now-a-days it has become a custom with some of my countrymen and friends to build constitutions and to draft them, but I believe that an attempt at nation-building was made—that the first attempt that we made to build a nation and to lay the foundations of self-government was that in the historic sitting at Lucknow when we entered into a compact. I am sorry, Sir, that in this House I find very few members of that compact. My friend, Mr. Iswar Saran, myself, Mr. J. Chaudhuri and Nawab Sarfaraz Hussain Khan are the only people left, and I believe Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas was one of them. We entered into that compact, and I claim, Sir, on behalf of that body, which sat in the tent at Lucknow, that we made self-government possible in this country by entering into that compact, and that greatly helped in the Montagu-Chelmsford Report which would have been quite impracticable but for that compact. I draw attention especially to that compact, because in that compact it has been laid down that a certain proportion of the seats in the legislative bodies—and the proportion was defined therein—should be held by Muhammadans and Hindus. And what was the reason that guided us in that compact? It was because we found that, as long as the minority or the Muhammadans were not given sufficient strength and sufficient representation on these legislative bodies, it would be impossible to take the country with you. You want to build the nation. And what does the nation consist of? It consists of individuals and individuals are grouped together in various communities and classes. If you want to build a nation, it will be by raising each community and each class and not by suppressing others at the expense of one particular class or community. That is not the real nation-building spirit. Sir, yesterday morning a question was asked, and I think asked very injudiciously, whether a Muhammadan was to be appointed on the Royal Commission that is coming out to this country. That was beyond jurisdiction, but I was pained and shocked when some of my most distinguished friends in this House, for whom I have the greatest respect, came forward with supplementary questions ridiculing the idea. (Cries of "Shame".) That was a thing I regretted very much. This policy of pin-pricks does not go a long way towards nation-building. If we want to build a nation, we have to consolidate it and in consolidating it we have to help to raise all those various factors which make up the nation, and the real way to get self-government and build the nation would be to raise your younger brother or those who are not in such fortunate circumstances as you are placed.

[Maulvi Abul Kasem.]

Reference has been made, Sir, to commercial houses and millowners, but I should like to submit for the consideration of my Honourable friend over there that commercial houses and the State do not occupy the same positions. In a commercial house or in a mill it is the owner who has to decide which way his interest is to be best served; in the State it is the public money, the money subscribed and paid by the public at large that is spent, and the State exercises a dominating influence over the people and the various communities have a right, and a justifiable right, to demand that they shall have a finger in the administration of the country. If we do not recognise the principle of communal representation in the services, we have no business to demand the Indianisation of the services. Leave it to the discretion of the Government and have the best man for the Army and for the Civil Service, whether he is an Englishman, an Australian or an Indian; and, if you admit it in one case, you must admit it in the other.

With these words I oppose the amendment that has been moved and support the Resolution as it stands.

Sardar Bahadur Gajjan Singh (Punjab: Nominated Non-Official): Sir, I rise to support the original Resolution. I know that in so doing I shall be incurring the displeasure of many eminent and distinguished Members of this House, but I recognise that, as long as the question of minorities with which the important question of communal representation is primarily concerned is not solved in a statesmanlike manner or I should think in a generous and liberal manner by those who are in a majority, it is idle to have any idea of Swaraj or self-government. We, Sir, here representing minorities are not at all prepared to commit suicide and bring down on ourselves self-annihilation. I represent a minority in the Punjab, not of Hindus or of Muhammadans but of the Sikhs, who were not at all a party to the so-called compact of Lucknow. In fact, this is one of the main objections on behalf of my community that that compact was not just and right in so far as it ignored the Sikh community altogether. Those who know the Punjab, those who know the Sikhs—for them it is impossible to ignore an important community like ours. We in the Punjab, Sir, occupy a unique position. It was only some 70 or 80 years back that we were the rulers of that Province, and I beg to assure the House that we are not at all prepared to accept any humiliating and subordinate position in the Province as well as in the affairs of the Empire. The ideas of past glory are still fresh in our minds. When there was no communal representation, I dare say that during the old Punjab Council days in one election not a single Sikh was elected, because we are scattered here and there and it was rather difficult for us to be in a majority in any single constituency. We brought our grievances to the notice of Sir Michael O'Dwyer, the then Lieutenant-Governor, who agreed that unless communal representation was given to the Sikhs, they would be nowhere. We came here to Delhi in a deputation and called upon the then Secretary of State and the Viceroy.

Mr. J. Ramayya Pantulu: May I rise, Sir, to a point of order? The Honourable Member is speaking of communal representation in the Legislative Councils, while we are now dealing with the question of communal representations in public services.

Sardar Bahadur Gajjan Singh: This constitution was then under consideration. Of course, communal representation to the Sikhs was allowed. Now, I submit, Sir, when the original principle of representation in the Councils has been recognised by communal representation, I see no reason why the same principle should not be applied to the public services. It is probably true that such communal representation is obstructive in nation-building, but those who desire to build the nation—it is their duty to formulate plans and schemes for safeguarding the interests of minorities. It is impossible for them to ignore us. If they think that they can carry things in this Assembly by sheer force of majority, let me warn them that by so doing they will be taking themselves far from the goal of self-government. As has been pointed out by my Honourable friend, Mr. Abul Kasem, in India the nation would essentially consist of communities, and unless all communities are properly represented in the service of the country, no nation-building is possible. May I ask the House why we should grumble at the domination of the bureaucracy if we, on the other hand, by our own action produce an element who can dominate us in place of the bureaucracy. To make myself more clear, let me ask why we should remove one sort of domination only to replace it by another? We in the Punjab—I am referring, of course, to the Sikhs and the Muhammadans—and I think that the position is the same in the Islamic world,—though we are in the minority, we do not want to sacrifice ourselves altogether. We wish to take our share in the government of the country, and unless a fair share is assured to us, I must say that the work of those whose goal is self-government must be very very difficult if not impossible. I may perhaps freely admit that, to start with, communal representation is an evil in the way of nation-building; I maintain that it is a necessary evil, but it ought to be respected and given effect to. My friend opposite while speaking on the last Resolution pointed out that there are anomalies, and difficulties which have to be overcome by tact, by education and by other legitimate means. Similarly, I appeal to those who are so anxious for nation-building, to try and safeguard the interests of the minorities in the public services. If we get no representation, as has been rightly pointed out by my friend, Maulvi Abul Kasem, our social position will at once dwindle down. Now, Sir, speaking of my own community, as probably many of the Honourable Members of the House are aware, though we are one in 100 in the population of India, yet we supply one-fifth of the Army of the British Indian Empire. We have got historical and political importance in our favour. We feel that what little is conceded to us is not at all sufficient for our purposes. Now take the case of this Assembly. Out of a total number of 140 or thereabouts, there are 2 elected Sikh Members here, namely, Sardar Gulab Singh and Bhai Man Singh—I am by nomination only—while my friend, Baba Ujagar Singh Bedi, does not represent the Sikhs; he is a representative of the big landholders of Hindus, Muhammadans and Sikhs. Anyhow, though we are very few, we are here, and we can place our point of view before the House, and I have no doubt that, if you exercise your sound common sense and impartial judgment, our grievances will be listened by you. I do not claim, Sir, that the various communities should find representation in the services even if they are not qualified. Far from that. The Resolution on that point is very clear. I am not in favour of sacrificing the efficiency of the services, but where efficiency, education and character are the same, then I submit there is absolutely no reason why preference should not be given to those communities who are not adequately and properly represented in the services of the country. The principle of communal representation, as I have said, is a necessary evil, but it has been recognised by the leaders of the most important political bodies of this country—I refer to the Moslem League and the Indian National Congress. Those bodies very wisely at Lucknow entered into a pact and met the objections of the minorities. Similarly, I appeal to you, the leaders of majority communities, to deal with this question in a similar statesmanlike and sound manner. Do not throw us out of court by a mere vote of the majority. Deal with us with justice, deal with us even with liberality. We are with you. But if you deny our just rights, I am afraid we will not agree to that course. As I have submitted, we are not prepared to commit suicide. We want Swaraj, local self-government, in which all communities are duly and properly represented. We are certainly against a Swaraj in which one community will dominate all others. I therefore with all the strength that lies at my command beg to oppose the amendment of my friend, Mr. Pantulu. The case of a doctor and engineer is entirely different and therefore I am only sorry that a gentleman of his standing and education should advance such instances. I must remind him, that if it is the case of a doctor, if I am sick and I find that there is a Muhammadan and Sikh, members of the various communities equally qualified, I would no doubt prefer my own man because for the simple reason that he understands me, my customs and habits, my way of eating and drinking. He will be more useful for me. And the same remarks apply to others. The case of the millowners is entirely irrelevant, and has nothing to do with our case. Here the Government of India is in charge of the funds of all the communities and these funds have to be doled out to services. We have kept our funds in that exchequer, therefore it is perfectly clear that we have force in the administration of those funds. And I think his objections are all met by my saying and by the words of the Resolution that efficiency must be the principal thing to be taken into consideration. We do not say, if a graduate is required for the proper discharge of the duties, take an unqualified Sikh or Muhammadan. We say, we have got our graduates and you have got your graduates. But you are strongly represented in the public service. You can give us preference. That is all we say. I have no doubt that the claims of the minority communities will be treated in a generous and liberal way. With these words, Sir, I strongly support the original Resolution and oppose the amendment of Mr. Pantulu.

[Sardar Bahadur Gajjan Singh.]

The Assembly then adjourned for Lunch till Twenty-Five Minutes to Three of the Clock.

The Assembly re-assembled after Lunch at Twenty-Five Minutes to Three of the Clock. Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar was in the Chair.

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary (Calcutta: Non-Muhammadan Urban): Sir, like the present occupant of the Chair, I am I hope a tolerably good Hindu, and I am not likely to benefit much by the sartorial concessions announced this morning by Mr. Hindley, in respect of third class railway compartments reserved for Europeans. I sometimes look up the almanac. To-day's astral influences seem to be adverse so far as racio-communal differences are concerned for we were obsessed by them all the morning. One would have thought that this is the silly season of the Legislature, and we are usefully filling up the gap between the new reduced figures of the Budget being supplied to us in a lump and our attempting to formulate vapoury proposals about further reduction. We had however an interesting day. It was to have been half a day debate but has been extended. I hope by the extension the adverse astral influences have passed away and it will be possible now to arrive at some sort of a settlement that will prevent further dissipation of energies and be acceptable to all parts of the House, not excluding the Government. We cannot conceal from ourselves that differences exist, and they have to be reckoned with. Naturally, after the reforms came, they have crystallized themselves; when people find that there is substantial gain to be had by participation in public affairs, though some believe or pretend to the contrary naturally, different communities and provinces want their places. It would be wrong, it would be unpatriotic, not to take note of them and to allow for them and to make up differences as best as may be. Sir, speaking for Bengal, I have no hesitation in conceding that the other provinces have claims which should be recognised and given effect to, though my province may suffer thereby, as it has been steadily suffering in the recent past. But Bengal is very glad. Bengal is almost proud that the work that began there and gradually spread to the other provinces and that it is to grow from more to more, that all the provinces and communities are, in the wake of self-consciousness that has followed, realising that they are capable of formulating and enforcing their demands accordingly. Sir, if in the result some communities or provinces that have so far done well have to suffer, I say, it is all in the day's work. That position has been accepted. I do not want to refer in detail to the question of pacts and percentages. If we have to go on and get on, as we must, these are factors that must be taken into consideration and given due effect to. If any one had substantively put forward considerations to the contrary, that like all claims in favour of bare vested interest would have to be brushed aside. But have we any real difference to-day so far as the Resolution and the amendment before us are concerned? Reading closely between the lines of the original Resolution as moved by Mr. Nair and the amendment of Mr. Pantulu, I myself do not see much difference. So long as the test of efficiency is not to be discarded, and it can never be discarded, how can any one object to all the country sharing equitably? Whether in regard to legislative powers or administrative powers there can be no valid objection to their being fairly divided among those that desire and are entitled to them. Neither the Resolution nor the amendment seek as we understand and as we have been assured to do away with the efficiency test. And Government must be left a free hand. It is after all a little difference in wording that has been detaining us all day and if by further clarifying these matters it is possible to arrive at some settlement that will be acceptable to all, I would ask for your leave, Sir, and that of the House to move an amendment somewhat to the following effect:

"That this Assembly recommends to the Governor General in Council that in making new recruitment for the services under the control of the Central Government steps should be taken to secure that the services are not unduly over-weighted with representatives of any community or province."

Mr. W. M. Hussanally (Sind: Muhammadan): May I suggest "any one community"?

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary: If that makes the position clear I do not mind it, but 'any' is sufficiently expressive

Mr. J. Ramayya Pantulu: May I request you to read it once more?

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary: "That this Assembly recommends to the Governor General in Council that in making new recruitment for the services under the control of the Central Government steps should be taken to secure that the services are not unduly over-weighted with representatives of any one community or province."

The reason why this is somewhat more restricted than the wording of the Resolution, particularly, with regard to the new recruitment, is that no Government can be asked or expected to upset what is in existence already and whatever may be decided on will, therefore, have to apply to the making of new recruitment. I have not introduced words regarding insistence on efficiency and other tests because that is commonplace and that is common ground. All are agreed that that test can never be given up. (A Voice: "Why not include it?") I do not consider it necessary because it would be as absurd to expect Government to tolerate inefficiency test as to ask it overtly to do the obvious and exercise the efficiency test. What we want to aim at has been freely given expression to. It is that other things being equal there shall be no undue monopoly on the part of any community or province. Provided, the other tests are passed, all the provinces and all the communities must have due consideration of their claims and must have those claims recognised in a practical manner. That is the position that this amendment tries to bring out, and I believe it is in a line both with the essential spirit of the Resolution and the amendment that has so far been moved. The elements of disintegration are already far too great and I do not think that we need accentuate and aggravate them further. A great deal of hurt will follow as our enemies want it to follow—if anyone community or representatives of any community decide to take their own action towards further disintegration. That will be hurtful to the general weal, and we have to close up our ranks, from that point of view, and as a method of settlement, that I believe should be acceptable to all, and if not to all, I hope to the majority of my Honourable friends here, I have ventured to put the further amendment before the House. Sir, I do not want to go into detail or notice the various cross current references that have been made. There have been unfortunate differences in the past. Those differences we are trying to make up in order that enemies of the Reforms and opposers of their expansion may not profit by them. Reference was made to the question of Indianisation of services and it was asked if Mr. Pantulu's argument was to hold the board. Why think of Indianisation at all? There would be some sense in that if our object was mere Indianisation and for the sake of so-called Indianisation at any cost and at the expense of every thing else. That is not so. We are troubled with serious financial difficulties and they will be more soon. We have to economise and economise very largely in every direction. The question naturally arises whether for the money that we are prepared to spend and can spend by anything short of Indianisation, in the sense that we have accepted financial equilibrium will be possible and whether popular aspirations would be met. These are the two points of view from which the question of Indianisation has to be considered. If Indianisation for the sake of mere Indianisation is not the objective of those who press for it, an inefficient Indianisation is not our goal. Either it would be bad economy. We are in this position that we cannot pay the large salaries that would be involved if rigid Indianisation was not insisted upon. Therefore I do not think that that question can arise on the present occasion. Conceding that Indianisation is to follow, all the different elements that make up India will have to be considered. The Resolution need hardly have been brought forward, certainly not because the Government are not alive to the situation. Government has already made repeated announcements that the claims of the different communities and provinces would be taken into consideration; when Government makes further recruitment this announcement is to be acted upon. I do not think that it can be the object of any one responsible either for the Resolution or any of the amendments, that the existing state of things should be upset or that the principles advocated should be carried so far as to be applicable even to the grading and the promotions and various other details of office procedure stage by stage and from time to time that would be impractical and intolerable. It should not be necessary and obligatory on the part of Government to have these considerations constantly before them and to give effect to them. I think those are considerations that ought to be clearly outside our mind. Once recruitment has taken place the meritorious will succeed and there ought to be no further reason for grievances. Well, Sir, Madras gentlemen have made themselves responsible for this Resolution and the amendments. I do not know whether Madras itself can have any grievances. Those who have been watching the progress of events and going round the offices come across Madrasis in abundance there

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar (Madras: Nominated Non-Official): There are more Bengalees.

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary: There are more Bengalees in the lower grades but the higher grades are being gradually absorbed by our Madras friends. I never grudge that or envy that. We are Indians first and Bengalees afterwards. I openly and expressly said that Madras by dint of diligence and industry is getting its due and I wish them joy about it. That ought to be so with regard to every province and as I began by saying that Bengal is the last to grudge this, it does not want to make a grievance of the situation. To my Bengalee friends I have had occasions to remark that Madras is now trying to do what Bengal used to do, and if Bengal has had a setback, it is up to it to make up this deficiency and compete with Madras and Bombay and the Punjab and regain its position. It can, if it will, but that is no reason why it should grudge what other provinces, by their industry and diligence, are acquiring. There ought not to be any grievances, so long as the tests of merit and efficiency are rigidly adhered to. Amity that ought to exist between the provinces and the communities should not be artificially interfered with.

(At this stage Mr. President resumed the Chair.)

Having regard to all these considerations, Sir, I beg to move the amendment that I have read out, which I hope will meet the views of all the sides of the House and ought to find acceptance.

Prince A. M. M. Akram Hussain Bahadur (Calcutta and Suburbs: Muhammadan Urban): Sir, I have seldom ventured to open my lips in this House, and if I rise to-day to break that golden silence for which I have almost acquired a reputation in this House, I do so because I feel strongly about the subject and because I have had the honour of representing the views of the community to which I belong in another capacity elsewhere. Sir, I am perfectly aware that the subject which we are discussing this afternoon is a very delicate subject; it is a subject on which many eminent authorities have pronounced their opinions; it is a subject which they look upon with great disfavour, I mean the question of communal representation. There is no doubt, Sir, that this question has been stigmatized by them as a pernicious principle which is calculated to destroy and to counteract the influences of patriotic politicians and wise statesmen. With due deference to the views held by eminent authorities, I beg to differ from them. To my mind, whether it be in the matter of franchise, or in the matter of services, it is a principle which is both sound and wholesome, and I say it is essential, wherever Governmental action is concerned. Sir, the transplantation of ideas and systems bodily into this country from the United Kingdom or from any other European country is generally the vogue, although those ideas, may not be suitable to the peculiar conditions of this country. It is so easy to view a thing from your own particular standpoint, and so very difficult to look at the same matter from an opposite point of view. Generalizations and formulations of principles which look very attractive on the surface are a craze in the educated world, although in their application these principles may sometimes act to the detriment of certain classes and certain interests. India, Sir, is a heterogeneous country of diverse communities, not infrequently jarring against one another, where any provision that tends to reduce friction is a positive necessity. The degrees of civilization and culture between men and men are so wide and varied that it is impossible for the different sections of these inhabitants to march abreast. India, Sir, is at present really in a melting pot and Western culture and civilization which the Britisher has introduced into this country have revolutionized the whole aspect of affairs. Our sensibilities and perceptions are at once quickened and we are more than ever anxious to cling tenaciously to the rights and privileges which we possess and to claim others to which we think we are legitimately entitled. No community views with equanimity the superseding of another community in any branch of human advancement. Some are more perturbed than others but none is unconcerned. The task of governing this country will be more and more complex and difficult as years roll on. To attempt, therefore, to ignore the rivalry and competition that exist between one community and another is the height of folly. To treat them as a whole and leave them to the course of nature to sink their differences, to overtake those far ahead of the others and to eventually come up in a line without in the mean time suffering loss of opportunities and without losing hearts is to expect the impossible. They are in this unequal race liable to be side-tracked to avenues of discontent and even bitterness towards a Government that has refused to recognise the unequal start. To advance all sections of the people and to enable them to come up in a line is an essential duty of every good Government, and if Swaraj or Self-Government is to be attained the process lies in holding the balance even until the backward communities have come up in a line with the more advanced ones and have learnt not to think of their little selves but to think of the Indian nationhood as a whole. It is then and then alone that the necessity of communal representation either in franchise or services shall vanish. Until that stage is reached it is the paramount duty of Government, if it has at heart the equal development of the component parts of the country under its rule, to see that every part receives that fair treatment which it has a right to expect and that it is protected against the inroads of stronger rival factions. It is the duty of Government to see that no one section, however large in number and however clever, is allowed to dominate the situation. Every community must know its place and must have its due share of the loaves and fishes of office which are at the disposal of the Government of India. When I say this I am keeping in view the claims of important minorities and majorities who differ fundamentally from one another and not of lesser sub-divisions and still lesser sub-divisions of castes and classes, where variations in the matter of faith and conduct are not sufficiently great to warrant their recognition as a separate entity. To try to be just to these minute ramifications of classes and creeds is again to attempt the impossible. But there is no reason why the broad divisions which in characteristics are essentially different from one another should not be recognised and should not be represented in the services of the State. It has been said, Sir, with much show of reason that the services are not representative institutions. It is true that they are not. But if India is to travel on the road to self-Government, it is of the utmost importance that she should be prepared for it and that these services whether in the Central or the Provincial Governments should be representative institutions, and the sooner Government show its wisdom in recognising it, the better for it. No forced attempt to develop India into 3 P.M. nationhood will succeed unless the composite parts of it have been taught to be in their proper places and to respect the just and proper rights of the other parts. It will never do to believe and make believe that India is automatically welding itself into a national unit wherein petty selfishness and mean communal jealousy will never be known. This Utopia can only exist in imagination, unless the parts of this unit are properly adjusted and function in their places sufficiently long to forget the past by force of their acquired habit. Therefore unless and until all the communities of India have attained a uniform standard of education and civilization and unless they have learned to love and respect one another, the much desired and longed for Swaraj and self-Government will be impossible of attainment. I say that most emphatically and deliberately. I feel sure that this particular aspect of the question, namely, the representation in their proper proportion of the important sections of the people of this country is a problem that will have to be tackled by Government sooner or later. If they fail to take note of it when it presents itself in an acute form, which perhaps it does not do at the present moment, I trust I shall not be taken to be an alarmist if I sound a note of warning to Government that, so far as the Muhammadans are concerned, failure to give them an adequate representation in all the services will manifest itself in a discontent second only to the loss of equilibrium which sometimes is evidenced on religious questions. In my humble opinion the terms of the Resolution are such that nobody need have any objection to it. It fairly lays down that the services should be manned by all communities proportionately only if sufficiently qualified men from each can be got. I think Government would be well-advised to accept the Resolution, to which I accord my whole-hearted support.

[Prince A. M. M. Akram Hussain Bahadur.]

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey (Home Member): I have almost been tempted to-day to sit in my place, serenely watching what seemed to be something like an internecine warfare develop itself in the House. But I cannot do so. We have here a question in which many Members of the House obviously take an intimate and almost a morbid interest, a closer interest indeed than in many general questions of policy which come before them. I recognize the reason for that feeling and the depth of the sentiment which actuates it; but convenient as it might be to me, I cannot assume the pleasant position of the onlooker described by the poet. "Pleasant," said the great Roman poet, "pleasant it is to sit on the shore and see those who are tossed on the sea in ships." If I could watch this question evolve itself on the floor of the House, and if I thought that the House would be likely to come to a decision profitable to Government and profitable to India, I should be glad to do so; but I have a doubt that the result will be so happy. Moreover a Resolution passed by the House in a matter of this kind must, unless there are strong and valid reasons to the contrary, be translated into regulation by Government; and those regulations might have an important effect on our administration. That is my excuse for intervening in a controversy which otherwise might be left to the representatives of communal interests and their opponents in the House. We had last January a debate which covered much of the ground which has been opened to-day; I then took the opportunity of explaining to the House our attitude in the case of the service which was then under discussion, namely, the Indian Civil Service. I can claim that on the whole the explanation I then gave was accepted as sufficient and adequate by the majority of the House. I explained then that we could not and did not seek to represent the claims of each community: nor to protect the interest of minor communities; all we could hope to do was to prevent the preponderance in the Indian Civil Service of the representatives of any one community or any Province; this result we secured by nomination if the examination for the 67 per cent. of Indian vacancies which we opened to competition in India did not give us the desired results. We feel that we have adequate reasons for maintaining that principle. If our administration is overweighted by any one community, then there is an administrative loss. Officers serving in that particular service will feel that their prospects in the service and their claims to recognition are likely to be put aside. But the mischief does not end at discontent in the service; there is discontent among the public, for there is no doubt that if a large community is inadequately represented in our services, it feels itself slighted, it is hurt in its pride, and more it actually feels at a disadvantage which is likely to work to its injury. I can make that statement on purely practical grounds, and I prefer to take those grounds without entering into any of the more controversial aspects of the case which have been discussed here to-day. It is unnecessary for me to discuss whether procedure such as is advocated in the main Resolution before us is really a corollary of the terms of the Queen's Proclamation. It is unnecessary for me to discuss whether the full admission of members of minority communities to our services is an essential factor in building up India as a nation. Those considerations I can for my part put aside. But addressing myself to the terms of the main Resolution, I am bound to discuss the question of its practicability. I have reminded the House that if we are to be called upon in the terms of this Resolution to represent adequately the claims of different communities or to protect minority communities, we must translate those terms into regulations. How are we to do so? The Resolution suggests that, not neglecting the claims of efficiency and the like, we are to give preference to those who belong to classes or communities who are not well represented in the services. But we must have some means of deciding what those classes or communities are, and we must have some standard for deciding if they are adequately represented. Previous references have been made to the extraordinary difficulty which we should find in adequately classifying the communities throughout India and standardizing their requirements. Believe me, I do not want to approach this proposal in any spirit of carping criticism or to raise meticulous points against it; the sentiments which lie behind it are too strong to allow me to take so unconvincing a course of argument; but I must represent to the House the practical impossibility of carrying out a regulation on anything like these lines. Those who have attempted to study the question in our Census Reports, or who have followed the proceedings of the Franchise Committee, will realize the great difficulty of interpreting requirements of this nature. The main criterions which are taken for determining the existence of a community are of course religion, language or caste and tribe. Now take first religion. For census purposes we classify the Hindus as one community; but the very reason why this Resolution has been brought to-day is because a large number of Hindus in Madras consider that Hindus do not make a community in Madras and that Brahmins should be separated from non-Brahmins. That is, a large section claims representation not because they are Hindus, but because they are not Brahmins. Then again take the difficulty which confronted us when the Franchise Committee visited Bombay. Lingayats are classified as Hindus, but the Lingayats who number, I think, about two and three quarter millions, claimed separate representation from other Hindus; and I remember further that in the Census of 1901 the Lingayats claimed that it was 'offensive and mischievous' to enter the Lingayats themselves under one classification. I will go further and quote the case of a religion which is not subject to the infinite variety of Hinduism—I mean the religion of Islam, a religion almost unique in its religious solidarity. It is by no means sufficient to think that you can satisfy the claims of Muhammadans by merely fixing a proportionate representation for followers of that religion. If you were to ask a Pathan of the Punjab what he was, his first claim would be for representation as a Pathan; it would not satisfy him to be told that you were admitting the claims of Muhammadans generally. There are obviously cases in which the tribal formation would be the basis of demand and the religious basis would not be sufficient. The term tribal is not precise; but my illustration of the Pathan will suffice; and I could enforce it by others. There are some five million Marathas; there are nine and a half million Rajputs; and both of them would reject a discrimination based on religion as insufficient and claim recognition on a tribal or national basis. And the matter is not capable of settlement in advance; the claim may arise at any time that the tribal or national consciousness grows strong and asserts itself. We have seen something like this arising among the Ahirs in Northern India; it might arise among the Gujars (and there are two millions of them) and the Jats of whom there are seven millions. But I will not dwell longer on the difficulty in the way of basing discrimination on the large classification of religion. Let me go to language. That itself is perhaps even less reliable. You have, I think, some 15 main divisions in the Indo-Aryan group, some 14 divisions in the Dravidian group and numerous sub-branches of the Tibeto-Chinese group; but the ordinary man would hardly recognize the division established by the scholar, and attaches more importance to his own dialectical sub-division. In any case, the linguistic divisions are not sufficient either for combination or differentiation; a common language will not unite the Lingayats and Marathas, still less will it unite the Sikhs and Punjab Muhammadans; while on the other hand, just at present at all events, a difference of language does not seem to keep apart the non-Brahmans of Madras. For the moment it seems of political importance mainly in one area, that occupied by the Oriyas; it assumes a momentary importance because those tracts are split up among four provinces and is quoted as a reason for re-uniting them; unite them, and I have no doubt that the linguistic basis will then cease to be of importance and other differences will re-assert themselves. I take our last basis of division, somewhat loosely known as caste and tribe. I fully join with those who say that it is unnecessary for us to adopt any meticulous classification on a basis of this kind, the more so when it is realized that there are in India altogether, as shown by the analysis made in 1901, which took reckoning only of groups with an aggregate of over ten thousand persons, some 2,378 main castes and tribes, and 43 races or nationalities. Even so, the classification is uncertain; it is continually under process of change and revision. But I do not desire to place too much stress on this; I know that a large number of these groups could be neglected at once. My point is this. At any particular moment when a group or community begins to feel itself, it is difficult to say whether we should place more emphasis on the caste, designation or on the tribal configuration or on its local distribution. Let me give the House one instance. There are, I think, some fifteen million Brahmins in India. Now the Gour Brahmins, a community of Northern India, have claimed in the Punjab that they stand apart as constituting an agricultural tribe for the purpose of the Agricultural Tribe legislation and when during the War they were recruited in considerable numbers—they did very well in recruitment—they claimed that we should form a separate regiment for the Gour Brahmins of the Punjab and United Provinces. Any particular time we may have to face the fact that the claims of one section of a large caste or community based on local or other special considerations outweigh caste or other communal considerations. I have stated these general difficulties; and I put it to the supporters of the main Resolution that they would make it impossible to frame any regulation on the lines suggested. How, I ask again, are we to tell whether a "class or community" is not adequately represented? How are we to decide which minority community to recognize? Firstly, the distinctions which we are asked to observe are not standardised. They are not mutually exclusive. It is difficult in numerous cases to determine the factor on which a large group of individuals place the most importance. It would not be sufficient, if the Lingayats were claiming larger representation in our Services, to tell them that Hindu interests are already represented; they would claim that the Lingayats must be represented as such. In Madras the claim for separate recognition by a large section is not on the basis that they are Hindus but on the fact that they are not Brahmans. That is a sufficient distinction for immediate purposes; but can hardly be an enduring one, when its present object is attained. Then, secondly, there is no basis for deciding, even after you have managed to get your classification of communities, the proportion in which each should be represented—in other words, their claim to recognition. Obviously, you cannot take the Census enumeration as all sufficient. You have had sufficient proof of that, I think, this morning, in what was advanced on behalf of the Sikh community. The House will remember the facts; the Sikh community had no part in the Lucknow compact, and when we came to arrange the franchise for the Punjab, they represented that any attempt to give the Muhammadans and Hindus the percentage laid down for them in that compact would injure their position; in fact their demand has always been that they should receive a representation exceeding that which their actual numbers would give. I am not going into the merits of that claim; I am only pointing out one of the difficulties of attempting to find an accepted or equitable basis of representation in the Central Services. I must take all India figures; and I am making no kind of comparison except numerical; but will any one give me a common denominator which will allow me to establish the fractional proportions of representation for the Gajars (two millions), Sikhs (two and a half millions), Mahars (three millions), Marathas (five millions), Rajputs (nine and a half millions), Parsis (one hundred thousand) and Pathans (three and a half millions)? I purposely include classes widely differing in their claims. A third difficulty is that you could not say at what particular point a community, using the word in its larger sense, became so important as to require representation in the services. Everybody realizes that we must pay no regard to sub-castes or such minor divisions. But at what point are we to say a community has shaped itself and assumed a distinct individuality; that it has made itself felt; and that we must begin to represent in the services?

[Sir Malcolm Hailey.]

[Sir Malcolm Hailey.]

Well, these are the general difficulties. But I would point out that we, the Central Government, have an additional difficulty. It is not impossible perhaps that a province desiring to put into application the principle of this Resolution might do so in regard to its own services, because it works within a confined area; it can assess values with some accuracy; and taking the total population of its area and dividing it up as best it may between various classes and communities, it might possibly arrange, taking its services as a whole, to give something like proportionate representation to the various sections. But that proposition becomes very different for us. Our Central Services are at work all over India. Let me take a case in point—the Customs Service. I have said that there are five million Marathas in India. How are we to secure adequate representation of the Marathas in a service which works only at the ports of India, where practically no Marathas live, or few? Again, how are we to secure adequate representation for Sikhs, a localized community, in our Accounts Service which is at work all over India? It will be seen at once that, when you apply the problem to the Central Government, the difficulties are enormously increased; for you have to take into account factors enormously wider than those which apply in the case of the local Governments. Not only so, but there is another factor. Even if you secured an All-India classification of values, obtained by weighing the claims of different classes or communities, you would have to overhaul it all again on a new requirement—the demand that within each class or community the provinces should be adequately represented. For the local Government, a Muhammadan is perhaps only a Muhammadan; for us, he must be a Muhammadan of Bombay or Bengal or the Punjab.

Now, Sir, I have stated the difficulties which I should feel myself in accepting the Resolution as put forward in its present form. I am under apologies to the House for detaining it on the subject; but it is a question of as great importance to us on our side, though for different reasons, as it is to the Members of the House who have raised this issue. I have given my reason why I should oppose the main Resolution in its present form. They are practical reasons; and purely on practical grounds, I must decline to be a party to any agreement on the part of Government unless we can honestly give effect to it. I have explained to the House on a previous occasion what we have done in regard to the Indian Civil Service. It may interest the House to have in the briefest form a few details as to what we have done in regard to our other All-India Services, which did not then come under discussion. In the Police, we take of course 66 per cent. of our recruits through the open competitive examination in England and of the remaining 33 per cent. which we take in this country, we take 11 per cent. by promotion of subordinates and 22 per cent. by competition among nominees. Both these two avenues, the promotion of subordinates and competition among nominees, give the local Governments a certain opportunity, which they have used in some cases to see that their Police service is not over-weighted with any one class of recruit. That is as far, however, as they are able to go. In the Imperial service of Engineers, local Governments select Indian recruits for themselves, but mainly by open competition, and there again, where we have to recruit for a technical service, it is difficult to arrange for anything like adequate representation. I come now to an interesting case, that of our Indian Audit and Accounts Service, which as the House knows, has for many years looked to competition for a greater part of its recruiting. It has a long and distinguished record, and it has maintained that record by open competition in India. There has for the most part been no restriction on the competition. There were for a few years restrictions in this sense, that it was a competition among nominees and that we attempted in accepting nominations to see that one class in particular did not appear in too great numbers at our examination. I mean the Madras Brahmans. But lately, the restriction has been felt to be unnecessary and it has now been removed. The results will interest the House. We have 28 Madras Brahmans and 3 Madras Non-Brahmans, 2 Syrian Christians, 21 Bengali Hindus, 8 United Provinces Hindus, 6 Punjab and Delhi Hindus, 3 Punjab Muhammadans, 3 Bombay Hindus and 1 Sikh. For my part, I should be loath to see the fine record of that service, which has been obtained by open competition, altered to any system of close nomination to secure representation of different communities or minor classes. I admit that when promoting subordinates we can do something to redress the results achieved by open competition, but here again I confess that I should prefer to see merit and good work the predominant consideration. I will not trouble the House with the case of other services; they are largely recruited on a technical basis; though I might mention the great difficulty felt in the last two years in securing anything like adequate representation of provinces among the Indian recruits to our Imperial Forest Service. With the best of us, will in the world the thing proved to be impossible. But the House will desire to know what we do in the case of the subordinate services under the Central Government which are not recruited by competition and do not involve technical qualifications. In the case of our Secretariat, as the result of the Llewellyn Smith Committee we have laid down that the Staff Selection Board should see that as far as possible there is something like an adequate representation of the different provinces and that one community does not unduly outweigh the rest. The difficulties are obvious, for in the case of lower paid posts, the representation must largely depend on the locality in which the Central Government offices are situated. I find that in regard to our post offices, circulars have from time to time issued—I have here one before me—requiring that recruitment should be deliberately arranged to prevent overweighting by any one community. I have not the record of other services such as the Railway before me. But I noticed to-day a curious fact; there was a notable absence of any definite proof in the way of figures or even allegation based on instances, that we have allowed the claims of any community to outweigh the others in our Central Services. There has been much argument on general grounds; many a priori reasons have been given why we should adjust recruitment to the requirements of different communities; very little has been said to prove that our regulations are really defective in denying those communities their opportunity. Am I not perhaps right in thinking that the Honourable Members who have put forward their case to-day were thinking of their own provinces and not of us? If they were referring to Madras, the House, of course, knows the steps which have been taken in Madras to attempt, whether rightly or wrongly, to redress the predominance of one class. That is a provincial question into the merits of which I do not enter; but I have here a circular order of the Madras Government which shows that they are attempting not only so to arrange their recruitment but even, if I am correct, so to arrange their promotions as to secure that end. I am bound to state that when I read that circular I was somewhat puzzled as to the exact methods adopted; the task is obviously not an easy one. I noticed also the fact that even they themselves could not issue orders in the full sense of the terms of the Resolution which we have before us, because at the best they are only able to distinguish between Brahmans and non-Brahmans; they are not able to break up the non-Brahmans into the different communities of which they are permanently composed. But that is by the way. As I have told the House, our own objective in the Central Government has simply been to prevent any one community or the representatives of any one province preponderating over others. As I said on a previous occasion, we ourselves would rejoice if we could avoid altogether any consideration in recruitment other than the test of character, intelligence and efficiency. We certainly do not wish to be led, as the Mover of the main Resolution would lead us, into any system under which we should be under the imputation of favouring one community at the expense of others or neglecting any community for motives which would lay us open to criticism. At the best, or the worst, our present procedure involves a species of negative requirement which is very different indeed from the positive operation which the Honourable Member who put forward the Resolution would impose on us. If you have an objective such as the one which I have just described as that of the Central Government, it is obvious that you can use the word 'community' or the term 'class' in a sufficiently elastic and liberal sense. Turn the operation over, and demand that Government shall pick recruits from different communities or different sections of a community, or engage on an accurate representation of provinces, and it immediately becomes necessary to face all those difficulties of detail which I have placed before the House. Our method of approaching the question, as I say, does not involve us in the attempt to assess values as between different classes or communities, nor does it give rise to those invidious comparisons or antagonistic claims which would be the inevitable result of the procedure advocated in the Resolution. I would ask the House to affirm our policy, and not to seek to go any further; I have deliberately avoided a discussion of principle, and dealt only with the practical issues in the proposition put forward. I chose that ground purposely and in the interests of the House; for the discussion of the principle and the object which lay behind it had already led the House into differences of opinion which do no good outside. It was betrayed into an exhibition of the existence of separatist tendencies which only supply arguments to those who claim that Indians can never combine. I would therefore ask the House to put aside the main proposition, based on the claims of separate classes and minority communities, and to affirm the wide, the simple and the reasonable policy which I have enunciated. It is recognized in the amendment which Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary read out to the House. That amendment has my whole-hearted support; the House can adopt it with safety; and I would urge that it accept it in the cause—I can only put it in this way

[Sir Malcolm Hailey.]

[Sir Malcolm Hailey.]

--of its own dignity and its position as a representative of all-India interests. We shall do well to avoid placing before the world at large differences which are not edifying in themselves and the airing of which here can lead to no good result.

Mr. President: The amendment moved by Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary has not been put from the Chair. I put it now:

"Substitute for the original Resolution the following:

'This Assembly recommends to the Governor General in Council that, in making new recruitment for the services under the control of the Central Government, steps be taken to secure that the services are not unduly over-weighted by the representatives of any one community or province.'

That amendment is not, strictly speaking, an amendment to the amendment already before the House, but I will allow the discussion to proceed upon all three propositions. When I come to put the question, I shall have to put it in a form to which I shall invite the close attention of the Assembly.

Munshi Iswar Saran (Cities of the United Provinces: Non-Muhammadan Urban): Sir, before I make any remarks on the subject under discussion, I wish to say that I was sorry to hear that a little innocent question of mine yesterday has caused pain to some of my Honourable friends. I can only say this that I did not mean to cause any offence at all. If I explain the reason why I put it, I am afraid there may be some to whom the explanation may not be quite acceptable; I therefore leave it at that. Sir, after the exhaustive speech of the Honourable the Home Member . . .

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: Sorry, sorry.

[An Honourable Member (to Munshi Iswar Saran): "You meant 'exhaustive' and not 'exhausting'?"]

Munshi Iswar Saran: And I said 'exhaustive'—it is not necessary to make a long speech. What I wish to say is that Sir Malcolm was perfectly right when he said that this internecine warfare was not dignified. No one believes, and at any rate I am not one of those who believe that India can make real progress if any one of its communities or if any one of its provinces is subjected to any hardship or to any disadvantage. Sir, I always avoid making any personal reference, but on this occasion I shall, if I may, make a reference to my own self; those who have known me in my own province know very well that when this controversy between Hindus and Muhammadans was very acute, when the whole province, as it were, was divided sharply into two camps, I kept aloof. Sir, I deplore this debate and I do not wish to make any secret of my feeling. Why I deplore it is because, as the Honourable the Home Member has said, it is taken advantage of by those of our opponents who wish to prove to the world that India in spite of its tall talk is yet divided between these warring communities, castes and tribes. The position of everyone of us, and I think of every nationalist, is that each and every community must have its share in the services of the Government, provided that efficiency is not impaired by the introduction of this principle; and no Hindu would like any Muhammadan to suffer, and I hope no Brahmin would like any non-Brahmin to suffer. But the non-Brahmins, I am told,—I speak subject to correction—have successfully turned the tables in Madras and I hope the non-Brahmins will not allow the Brahmins to suffer now. (A Voice: "No, no.") If that is not so, I am very glad. (A Voice: "It will take ten years.") It will take ten years according to my friend to make the Brahmins suffer for their past sins. Sir, I only hope that any remarks which are made by subsequent speakers will not be of a kind which will generate more bitterness or more unpleasantness. As I have made no secret of my own conviction I say that I do deplore these communal questions. I do not approve of either communal representation in the Legislature or communal representation in the services but I do recognise that unfortunately there is this feeling in the country and it has got to be taken note of. A policy may be just, but it is necessary that all those who are affected by it should have the conviction that it is just. It is the business, I submit, of the majorities in this country to so act that the minorities may have no cause to entertain a grievance real or, may I say, even fancied, because if they entertain that feeling, it only retards our progress towards the goal which, I hope, Hindus and Muhammadans, Brahmins and non-Brahmins, all have at heart. (Mr. K. Ahmed: "Example is better than precept.") Example is better than precept. It is perfectly true. I hope my friend will set the example and in future will not by needlessly raising these questions hurt the cause which, I trust, even he has at heart. Sir, I support the amendment of my Honourable friend, Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary, and I do hope my Honourable friend, Mr. Nayar, will withdraw his Resolution in favour of the amendment which has been moved, because, as the Honourable the Home Member has shown, apart from other higher considerations, it is difficult to give effect to the Resolution in the form in which it has been moved. I therefore hope that the amendment of Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary will be accepted. Let us show our dignity and statesmanship by unanimously accepting this proposition and thereby removing all difference of opinion on this question in this House.

Colonel Sir Henry Stanyon (United Provinces: European): Sir, in all humility, in a very few words, I venture to offer this House a little advice as a House. Shortly put, my recommendation is a combination and a suppression of all elements of apparent disintegration. A proposal and two amendments have been put forward. All parties are agreed on two main principles, namely, (1) efficiency as the paramount test, and, subject thereto, (2) a fair treatment to all communities, in the making of appointments under the Government. The proposer of the Resolution and the proposer of at least the second amendment have expressly embodied these principles in the forms advanced by them, while the proposer of the first amendment does not exclude the principle of fair treatment to all communities. But, Sir, whichever of these three proposals is pressed to a division will reveal some in favour and some against. If there was unanimity with regard to any one of them, I would say by all means go ahead and let us have a unanimous decision; but as a unanimous decision does not seem possible on any one of the three, the result of decision will be differences of opinion on mere forms, and this shadow of a split on this side of the House, which has no reality in substance, will go forth and display to a watching world the mirage of a House divided against itself. With the budget deficit before us, what we want is combination into a solid phalanx to contend against the common enemy of State insolvency. I advise, after an opportunity has been given, sufficient in the judgment of the House, for an expression of views from all points with regard to each one of these formulae, that the proposer of the original Resolution and the proposers of the amendments do not drive the House into a division, but, by timely withdrawal, after the subject has been ventilated, as we have had a most important and clear and by no means exhausting explanation from the Honourable the Home Member, leave the question unasked. We should be content with that, and should settle our differences by leaving the matter undecided.

[Colonel Sir Henry Stanyon.]

Dr. Nand Lal (West Punjab: Non-Muhammadan): Sir, I approach this subject without any bias. I am not in favour of one community or another, but I shall express my views as an Indian. Sir, it is regrettable that on the floor of the Central Legislature a Resolution of this type has been moved. At the same time it looks very inconsistent that only a few hours back we were in favour of the removal of a certain distinction which was visible in reserving certain compartments of the railway carriages, and in the same breath we are showing ourselves in favour of communal representation. It is simply regrettable; this inconsistency has got no explanation at all. It makes me believe that perhaps some Members, who are advocates of this Resolution, think that holding an appointment in Government service is of less importance than taking a seat in a railway compartment. I think the whole world will laugh at us, that, being Members of this Central Legislature, representing the whole of India, we are thinking of Muhammadanism, Hinduism, Brahminism, non-Brahminism and not of India as a whole, it is, I may say, simply deplorable.

Sir, those, who are in favour of the purity of administration and of the real political advancement of India, will agree with me that this Resolution is suicidal to our Indian interests and unity.

(An Honourable Member: "Not a bit.")

Dr. Nand Lal: On some occasions I happened to hear from some ill-advised critics that it is due to the policy of Divide and Rule that Government appointments are conferred.

I always held, rightly or wrongly, the view that this was wrong criticism. Now I am confirmed in my opinion that Government is not responsible for this at all, that our own people,—at least some of them,—have forced the hands of Government, and that they have been levelling this wrong criticism against Government without having sufficient knowledge of the true circumstances. Now the 'cat is out of the bag.' Now we know that it is we, at least some of us, who have been troubling the Government and making the administration of the Government a little more difficult than it need be. We are the authors and we ought to be ashamed that being thus the authors, being thus, the cause of the troubles of Government, we have been criticising them for nothing. Sir, the Resolution says that preference should be given to the equally efficient members of certain communities. That is the gist of the whole thing. The Mover has introduced the word "preference" which makes the whole motion simply unacceptable. If the drift of the Resolution were that Government appointments may be conferred in consequence of the result of competitive examinations, I would have endorsed it; Sir, when we employ servants to serve us whether in our mills or in our private offices, we always prefer efficiency to any question of caste or creed. Supposing a merchant, or say, a millowner, were to decide as to whom he should employ, Sir, will he act upon the principle of communal interest? If he did so, his mill would be stopped in no time. Will a Muhammadan merchant think of discrimination and prefer communal interest to efficiency? Will a Sikh millowner say that all appointments in his mill should be given to Sikhs only irrespective of merits? No, not at all. When there is a private affair, they will prefer ability and respect efficiency, but when the question of Government appointments comes in, they say "Oh, don't think of efficiency." They say "Think of preference." I say there is no justification for it. We should be fair both to the Government and our Indian interest. We should always advocate a non-sectarian cause and general interest of Indian nationalism.

Then, Sir, will communal preference do any good at all to the so-called minorities? Will it do any good to them at all? I say that those, who stand on the legs of others, will never be able to walk without the help of others. That is the fundamental principle. I say the Education Department is open to you. Is it closed to you? Ask your members to join the educational institutions and pass examinations. Let them make themselves efficient. There is the medical line open to every one, and there are also other lines. Let them try and qualify themselves. Let them come forward as men. Don't beg for posts for them on the score of communalism. Let them depend upon their merits and abilities. In the name of nation building, I appeal to the Honourable Members, that we should not raise our voice in favour of sectarianism and we must not ask for preference in these matters. Try to make yourself fit and able to deserve and secure the appointments. If you are capable, Government themselves will invite you. Why are you begging for these posts on the ground of communal representation?

Now what do the advocates of communal representation mean? They say that they are not well represented. In what way? Do they mean to say that their numerical strength is greater and consequently they deserve to secure larger number of appointments? If so, I should venture to say that it won't do. The best thing for them will be to make themselves efficient. If they mean thereby that the number of their highly educated men is smaller as compared with that of other communities, then it amounts to this, that they want that superiority of character and academic achievements, which ought to be the proper criterion for securing Government appointments, should not be respected. I submit it is not just. Now, Sir, I have endeavoured to show that these minorities, who are seeking for help will not eventually be benefited. They will remain as poor as they are now. Unless and until they try to raise themselves morally and intellectually, they cannot, in all fairness, ask for any sort of preference. May I ask the advocates of certain communities that they instead of spending their time in asking for favours (A Voice: "It is not a favour, but it is a right.") in the matter of Government appointments, on the ground of communal representation, may advise their constituents to secure those appointments on the ground of efficiency. They ought to impart this lesson to them, that they should elevate themselves morally and intellectually, so that they may try to inspire confidence in the minds of the public, so that this baneful question of communal representation may be removed once and for all. This ought to be done, but I am sorry to say, it is not done. Instead of resorting to proper remedies, they are trying to conceal their defects. Just like a miserable patient, suffering from a malady, instead of trying to see that proper medicine is administered, he likes to become a glutton and takes too much sweets. Don't take sweets. Think of your malady. Your malady is that you are fighting with each other, there is no unity amongst you. Try to cultivate that unity which is so absolutely essential; do away with all these distinctions. Government appointments should not be given on these wrong principles. Government service should be the purest thing, and purity ought to be maintained, and that could be maintained only if there is no communal representation. Only merit, ability, efficiency, good character, honesty and sincerity should be the criteria. Not because I am a Sikh, not because I am a Muhammadan, not because I am a Brahmin or non-Brahmin that I should ask for appointments. We must feel ashamed of making these claims on communal representation, and the people of other countries will simply laugh at us. On the one hand, we say that we should be given Swaraj, that we are fit for it and that we have unity; while on the other hand, we are fighting with each other for loaves and fishes. Is there any consistency in it? Do you think our conduct is compatible and consistent with that which we happily evinced in a number of other Resolutions? If Brahmins are capable and efficient men, let them get the posts. Create public opinion and if you find that a Brahmin does not behave well or does not do his duty impartially and in the right manner, let that public opinion against him reach Government and they will, if that complaint were found to be correct, take action. Similar arguments could be adopted in the case of Hindus versus Muhammadans and vice versa. The Honourable Mr. Abul Kasem has put forward a wonderful advocacy before us. He says the Lucknow compact may be respected if you want to build your nation. If you want to complete your work then try to act up to the behests given by that compact. May I ask my Honourable friend is he really obeying all of the dictates of the Congress? I believe he has made it convenient for himself, on this occasion, to place reliance on that compact.

[Dr. Nand Lal.]

Maulvi Abul Kasem: I did not say the Congress: I said the Lucknow Pact.

Dr. Nand Lal: If I mistake not, I think that compact was made or adopted by the Congress at Lucknow.

Maulvi Abul Kasem: Which is dead and gone.

Dr. Nand Lal: Well, dead or not, I don't know. But you have taken it as an argument at this juncture. Since my learned friend does not as it appears, seem to adhere to the other principles, the other tenets and conditions laid down by the Congress, he has then no justification for putting forward this plea.

Maulvi Abul Kasem: Sir, I have to offer a personal explanation. The Pact was not made by the Indian National Congress; as my friend was not a part to it, he does not know. It was a Pact between the Indian National Congress and the All-India Moslem League.

Khan Bahadur Sarfaraz Hussain Khan (Tirhut Division: Muhammadan): Maulvi Abul Kasem is perfectly correct. Dr. Nand Lal does not know.

Dr. Nand Lal: Another Honourable Member says "our community has been serving in the Military Department." Well, it shows the justice you receive at the hands of the Government: the members of your community were considered the fittest persons to serve in the Military Department. Therefore they have got the monopoly of posts there. What grievance have you got? Have you not been drawing salaries and then pensions? Were you not compensated for that service? On that ground, you are going to ask the Government that all responsible appointments should be conferred on your community simply because many of you were in the Military Department? Will the Rajputs not come forward with that claim? Will Kshatriyas not come forward with that claim? And will not other members of the Hindu community come forward with the same claim? Your claim should be such as may have some sense of justification. We should not make the task of our Government more difficult. We should be just. Then my learned friend says, we were ignored. I say, where were you ignored? You were one of the Hindu communities. Subsequently, you raised your voice that we should be given separate representation. You were given it. Now, you are going to make an encroachment on the right of the whole Hindu community, saying that we should be given Government appointment specially. That is not fair. I quite agree with the expression of opinion made by the Honourable the Home Member, that there are a very large number of divisions and sub-divisions of caste and creed in this India. If the question of giving appointments is to be decided with reference to the numbers in a certain community, then the other sub-divisions thereof will come forward. Take the case of the Muhammadans. One sub-section of Muhammadans may come forward and say, well, Muhammadans have been given this special privilege, but our interests are being jeopardised, because, we belong to a different sect of Muhammadans. What answer will be given to that? What answer will be given by the advocates of this theory which is put forward and which is altogether inconsistent? Similarly, one sub-division of the Hindus will come forward and lay claim to Government appointments. What answer will be given to them? So, therefore, this motion is altogether impracticable.

Mr. President: I must ask the Honourable Member to draw his remarks to a close now.

Dr. Nand Lal: Thank you, Sir, I shall. I oppose this motion which is suicidal to Indian interests and with these words I resume my seat.

Mr. Braja Sundar Das (Orissa Division: Non-Muhammadan): Sir,

4 P.M. I have heard with rapt attention the discussion on this communal question. It has been said from the Government Benches as well as from the opposite Benches that this is a Resolution that tends to disintegrate India and to put it before the eyes of the world that India is not united and can never be united. On the other hand, I would rather say that this Resolution is a unifying one. It is the outcome of the disintegrating policy followed by the Government of India. (An Honourable Member: "No.") You say, "No", I say "Yes". Some figures that were supplied to a question put by perhaps Lala Girdharilal Agarwala will show that disintegration is not in the Indian people but in the Government of India itself. It is thus. Of the 1,961 posts in the Government of India 105 are Europeans, 147 Anglo-Indians, and 647 Indians, and of these, Madras claims 35, Bombay 14, Bengal 259, the United Provinces 51, Punjab (to which my Honourable friend, Dr. Nand Lal, belongs) 260, Burma nil, Bihar and Orissa 7, the Central Provinces nil, Assam 1, North-West Frontier Province 4, Coorg nil, Delhi 24, Native States 11. These figures speak for themselves. (An Honourable Member: "What appointments are they?") This is a statement showing the number of Europeans, Anglo-Indians and Indians employed in the Government of India Secretariat on the 1st June 1921 on salaries of not less than Rs. 25 per mensem and in the case of Indians the provinces to which they belong. That is the statement, which I put before the Assembly and which clearly proves that the existing things in the Government of India, as they are, tend to disintegrate and disunite the Indians. The Honourable the Home

[Mr. Braja Sundar Das.]

Member has said, it should not be looked upon from the point of view of different languages, castes and creeds and so forth, but I ask the Government as well as the people, that when they think of India, they should think of it as a geographical unit, as one geographical whole. Taking the standard of geography, we find that a certain portion of India has far greater advantages over certain other geographical portions of India. That is the question that counts. It is not the question of communal representation that really counts in this Resolution. It is practically the question of geographical deficiency in matters of appointment that matters. Again I say that when we think of India we should not shut out a certain portion of it from the Indian geography. This will serve as an apt illustration. Sir, I once put a question as following:

"Will the Government be pleased to state if there are any Oriyas in any Department of the Government of India?"

"Will Government be pleased to state if ever any notices regarding recruitment of services into the Government of India Departments were published in any leading papers of Orissa?"

To this the reply was:

"The Honourable Member is referred to page 187 of the Legislative Assembly Debates, Volume II, No. 3, from which he will observe that on the 1st June, 1921, seven appointments on salaries of not less than Rs. 25 per mensem were held by persons belonging to the Province of Bihar and Orissa."

I asked for the Oriyas and the reply was for the province of Bihar and Orissa:

"The communiqués of 1920 and 1922 announcing that the Staff Selection Board intended holding examinations for outside candidates were published in the 'Searchlight' which is issued from Patna."

Well, these replies speak for themselves. I need not go into their merits. From the above illustration it would be clear what the disintegrating force is working there. The Resolution is one that tends to do away with this pernicious principle and to unite India at least in matters of the services under the Government of India. It is again, let me repeat not a disuniting one. It only seeks to unite India in the services of the Government of India. Why should one part of India get preference over the other portions of India? That is the question. My Honourable friend Mr. Jayanti Ramayya Pantulu said that no honest attempt on the part of any community or any class to enter into the service of the Government of India has been shut out. Well, I can say from what I know that for the last 20 years the Oriyas have been trying to enter the higher grades of Postal Service and till now they have not been able to secure even one appointment. So in all other Departments. I can challenge the Honourable the Home Member to say if there is one man from the geographical portion of India—called Orissa—either Hindu, Muhammadan, Brahmin or non-Brahmin, Anglo-Indian, Indian Christian or any man of any creed or community or class or whatever it be? I speak of that geographical portion which is now called Orissa—and not from the Oriya-speaking tracts as a whole for they are scattered under four different Governments, such as under the Madras Government, the Bihar and Orissa Government, Bengal and under the Central Provinces Government—I again ask if from the country which they call Orissa is there one man of any caste, creed or community in the Government of India? One man? This is what creates disunification. In order that India may be united geographically, it is necessary that it must work as one body, and if one part of the body draws all the blood to itself and gets unusually swollen it is plethoric. So the whole body is not a sound body but it would be something like a body with elephantiasis. Those that care for the growth of Indian nationality should see that one part of India does not grow at the cost of the other parts of India. Unification of India does not mean that all languages should go, all castes should go, all creeds should go. I do not think that those who want the growth of nationality of India would like to do away with all these differences. There they are and must continue to be. We must seek unity amidst this diversity. If the outside world say that India is disunited, I ask, is that world united in itself? Are they united in England? There are different political parties struggling for power and ascendancy; there are the conservatives, the liberals, the labour and so forth and in that respect they are not united there. They may be united as regards their creeds, but they may be disunited in other matters. So are we here in India. We are united in certain matters, we are disunited in other matters. It does not matter. I assert that I am proud to belong to the Indian nationality, and I think, in spite of the differences of language, creed and community, India will grow and is bound to grow as one nationality. What forces are there that can prevent the growth of one Indian nationality? I say there is no power on earth that can check that progress; and at the same time let me reassert that our progress very much depends upon the healthy growth of each part of Indian nationality. And therefore, without making any further comments on the Resolution, I commend it to the Government to consider India as a geographical whole and think of distributing the services with reference to the geographical position of all parts of India and not to any differences in caste, creed, or communities; and if that is accepted, then the whole proposition put forward by my friend, the mover of the amendment, is accepted. With these words, I support the Resolution.

Rai Debi Charan Barua Bahadur (Assam Valley: Non-Muhammadan): Sir, I beg to rise to move an amendment to Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhi-kary's amendment. My amendment is of a verbal nature. He concludes the Resolution with the words 'any one community or province,' and my amendment seeks to change it to 'any one community or communities or province or provinces'—because if that is not amended, Sir, then two provinces may combine together to the exclusion of another province. Punjab and Bengal may combine to exclude Madras and Bombay. So, Sir, the logical sequence of these words, if left as they are, will be that. If two provinces will combine, if two provinces taken together, are allowed to get into the services, then they may exclude the other provinces; so, Sir, I beg to point out that these words should be changed into what I have suggested, and I hope the House will kindly consider the sequence of those words. Then, Sir, I do not want to dilate at length upon what Mr. Braja Sundar Das has said; I will simply content myself by saying that this is a very plain Resolution; it does not want to appropriate the services for one particular community. The Sikh does not want to get all for himself, nor does the Parsi, nor does the Muhammadan, nor does the Hindu. As my learned friend, Mr. Braja Sundar Das said, it is wanted by everybody to distribute the loaves and fishes of office to everyone of the provinces, so that all parts of the country may unite,—that is the only weapon of unification; and if the services are to be reserved by one particular community or disproportionately by one particular community or particular communities or by two or three provinces, it is not fair.

[Rai Debi Charan Barua Bahadur.]

Now there are nine major provinces, and besides there are similar other minor provinces. The minor provinces also should not be overlooked, neither the major provinces. Now, Sir, that statement given by my friend showed that Assam contained only one member, one man, in the service. And since then, I beg to submit, Sir, even that one has vanished. It is nil now. Take the case of Orissa or Assam. Is it to be supposed that there is not a single person in the sub-province of Orissa or in the province of Assam who can fill even a clerk's post on Rs. 25 or a little more than that in the Indian Secretariat? Then, what is it due to? It is due to the combine of some of those who are in the departments to exclude others from the service. It is the inevitable conclusion. We may be wrong in the conclusion, but it is quite inevitable. So, Sir, I beg to submit that something ought to be done so that all the parts of India may be represented in the services of the Government of India. With these remarks, Sir, I beg to support the amendment as proposed by Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary, subject to the amendment proposed by me.

Mr. President: The amendment proposed by the Honourable Member does not differ enough in substance to justify my putting it. The words he adds make no difference in essential purpose of the amendment moved by Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary.

Mr. N. M. Joshi (Nominated: Labour Interests): The question may now be put.

(Several Honourable Members: "The question may now be put.")

Mr. President: Colonel Gidney.

Lieut.-Colonel H. A. J. Gidney (Nominated: Anglo-Indians): Sir, . . .

Chaudhri Shahab-ud-Din (East Central Punjab: Muhammadan): Sir, many of us have yet to say something. This is a very important question.

(An Honourable Member: "The question is an important one and we all want to speak on it.")

Mr. President: Order, order. I call on Colonel Gidney to speak.

Lieut.-Colonel H. A. J. Gidney: Sir, the part I shall take in the debate at this late stage will consist of a very few remarks. This very Resolution stood against my name on the 24th of last month, but for some unknown reason it was omitted and for it substituted my Resolution on the I. C. S. examination and communal participation in it. The remarks that have been made on this discussion up to now show that there is strength and reason on both sides, both on the Government side and on the side of those who are claiming communal representation. I shall not emulate my friend, Mr. Jamnadas and spectacularly speak of that Nirvana of which he so frequently talks, and which he interprets as Swaraj. That Swaraj is a very dim and distant vision indeed. It is in the transitional stage from now till when that Swaraj is reached that the minor communities are bound to suffer. It is during that transitional stage that I, as a leader of one of the minor communities, even though my friend Mr. Rangachariar calls it a pampered and favoured community, desire to make my voice heard and my claim of equal rights recognised with those major communities who are to-day endeavouring to swamp us in the various services in India. Now, Sir, we have before us for acceptance the Resolution as proposed by Mr. Nayar and we have two amendments, the last one by my friend on my left Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary. The amendment moved by him seems to be acceptable to us, the leaders of the minor communities in this House with this one objection. We take serious objection to some of the words in it, and an effort was made by me to get him to alter that amendment so as to suit all parties. Unfortunately my efforts failed. The alteration we asked to be made was the omission of the word "one" from his amendment. We feel that the amendment as it stands is so worded as to be of negative value. What we want is to convert this value of negation to one of positive value so far as the practical participation of all communities in all services is concerned. This was objected to by the Party, the leader of which is on my left (Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary: "The leader is ill.") As the amendment stands now, we the minor communities in this House can not accept it, because it places us nowhere and leads us to nothing. We feel—indeed we feel acutely—that in the rush in India as it is changing before our very eyes to-day that we occupy a position of insecurity, that the time is not far distant, when this monopoly which is complained of the Civil Service and other services will be substituted by one or two of the more advanced and educated communities in India.

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas (Bombay City: Non-Muhammadan Urban): Which?

Lieut.-Colonel H. A. J. Gidney: The two communities to which I wish to particularly refer (all credit to them) are the Madras Brahmins and the Bengalees. I say it is to their intellectual credit, but at the same time if we in India to-day are objecting to a bureaucratic Government controlled by one community—or mainly by one community, the Englishmen—we are simply lending ourselves, if we do not object to this amendment which has been put forward, to a change of bureaucratic Government from one community, which I hope will not go from this country, that is the Englishmen, to two communities in India, and as the leader of one of the minority communities I strongly object to it. The Honourable the Home Member has shown us real difficulties in the practical application of the Resolution we are discussing to-day. I agree with him that there are serious and insuperable difficulties, but at the same time we ask him to find some via media out of this impasse and so help us, both major and minority communities alike in our task, the almost impossible task of forming a homogeneous nation out of the heterogeneous masses of castes and creeds which to-day go to constitute India. All minority communities ask to be allowed a fair share in the development of India and its administration. The minorities are determined not to force their rights and we are determined to sink or swim on the vote on this Resolution. As a leader of one of the minority communities myself I cannot give my support to the amendment as moved by my Honourable friend, Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary. I therefore whole-heartedly support the Resolution of my friend, Mr. Nayar.

Khan Bahadur Abdur Rahim Khan (North-West Frontier Province: Nominated Non-Official): Sir, I have been listening to the different Honourable Members and to my learned friend, Dr. Nand Lal, in particular. I appreciate their views as idealist but not realistic ones. Unfortunately he has been arguing on quite a different line. Our grievances are not this, that there should not be an united India. Our contention is not that we should not feel as one India. The question is that we have to face the real difficulty, we have to deal with the problems which are daily facing us. It is all right to say that we should all aspire to this and that, but when we come to the real facts, and when we come to daily dealings with one another, we are also obliged to feel as men, and we have to study human nature, so we have to look at it from the human point of view. It is all right to utter sentimental words; it is all right to have an ideal, but our object is to give that ideal a practical shape. But what I will say to my learned friend, Dr. Nand Lal, when he says that there should be competition, is that India does not require competition; India requires men of character; India requires men who can defend her; India requires men of whom she can be proud. Book worms are not wanted, they can do India no good. Books are for us and not we for the books. My point is this, that I quite welcome anybody whose mind is developed and character is perfect but will not attach any importance to a person with a developed mind but no character whatsoever. That is the point to be always borne in mind so far as India is concerned.

[Khan Bahadur Abdur Rahim Khan.]

Dr. Nand Lal: I said merit and character also; my friend was perhaps not attentive.

Khan Bahadur Abdur Rahim Khan: I am sorry that my learned friend is so fond of me that he always tries to interrupt when I am speaking. I am very much obliged to him. I am not saying that we should not have this standard of competition, but the thing is that we have to look at India. India is not unfortunately a country with one religion, one race and one language. India is just like a continent, and I say, Sir, it is just like expecting the Prime Minister of England to be Prime Minister of Europe. I do not want to make insinuations against any one and I feel very sad to have to say these things, in our short experience of one year, how many leaders have we seen coming to the throne and how many have we seen leaving the throne? And that is only within a single year, all this is due to lack of tactfulness on their part. So I say this, Sir, that in the case of India it is the business of our leaders to see how they can best steer the ship of the nation in this stormy weather, and in this stormy sea.

My learned friend (Dr. Nand Lal), in speaking of us Muhammadans, said that we have been serving in the Army and enjoy pensions. My learned friend grudges us those pensions. But he ignores the blood that we have shed. He ignores the fact that we have sacrificed many lives. There are gentlemen here who, for simply uttering words, get more than pensions; they make fortunes—in fact, I would say they mint money: while here is a man who risked his life and only gets a pension of something like ten or fifteen rupees, which is grudged by my learned friend, it is just like adding an insult to an injury. My learned friend, who considers himself as a real leader, grudges him that trifling sum. So I say this is not in the interest of India; and I can say this much that unless the advanced communities will look to and respect the interests of the minor communities, they will never advance. You cannot expect co-operation from the minor communities unless you make some sacrifices on their behalf; only that would appeal to their hearts. In other words, if you are willing to part with something, you will be respected in return. If, on the other hand, you say I am entitled by competition to this and that and expect people to respect you, you will before long find yourself living in a fool's paradise; those days, I am afraid, now are gone. Everybody now is wide-awake. Everybody can look to his own interests, and unless you draw the people to you, you cannot expect the people to follow you. It is the duty of the leaders to draw the people to them, it is not the duty of the people to follow their leaders blindly. Those who have the real good of India at heart must be very careful, they must be more charitable, they must be more generous. If they do that, then there is a chance for India to advance. Otherwise I must say India will always remain as she is.

I am sorry to say that unfortunately our real statesmen and leaders, those who are leading the political life of the country, do not realise this difficulty and are not facing it bravely, but always shun and avoid it purposely. I say all rights of minorities should be respected. There are my friends who loudly appeal to sentiment and say these should be ignored. But I ask, Sir, how can human nature be ignored? What is the real grievance that the Indians have got against the English? The grievance is that all the higher services are monopolised by them. If we have got a right to claim a fair share in the administration, if you complain against the monopoly which is enjoyed by the English people in the matter of higher appointments, I say that we the minorities have got similar rights and complaints against the other advanced communities that they have a disproportionate share in the appointments open to Indians in general to the exclusion of the minorities, and we expect justice from these advanced communities and want them to stick and adhere to the same principle in their own cases too. I was surprised to hear from the Honourable the Home Member that there are only 3 Muhammadans in the Indian Civil Service

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey (Home Member): The Honourable Member will, I am sure, allow me to correct him. I was referring to the Accounts Department, in which I said that 3 Muhammadans had succeeded in the competition; I did not refer to the Indian Civil Service.

Khan Bahadur Abdur Rahim Khan: But I could say for certain that Sikhs and Muhammadans are very poorly represented. That means that we are in the home but not at home. I can say both with regard to my community as well as the Sikh community that they are in the home but not at home. Now I should say to the advanced communities—for instance the Brahmins of Madras—I hope my friends from Madras will not take my views in any other light—the Brahmins of Madras are well advanced in education—and they would naturally rule the country, but they must realise this that there are other communities too to be considered. They should not stick to the principle “what is yours is mine and what is mine is my own”. I was surprised to hear the views of my friend Dr. Nand Lal. I will appeal to him and ask him to think over for a single moment coming as he does from Lahore, from the very heart of the Punjab, what is going on there? Can he say there is no Hindu-Muhammadan question there? I don't want to be personal, but can he ignore the fact that big personalities are dragged in every day and criticised? In spite of that he will neither admit his mistake nor change his views.

Dr. Nand Lal: A personal explanation, Sir. Since I am against that, I have raised my voice against communal representation.

Khan Bahadur Abdur Rahim Khan: Sir, with one small quotation from a newspaper which I read the other day, I will end my speech, and I should like to put those words into the mouth of the community which monopolises these services:

"We are the sweet selected few,
Let all the rest be damned;
There's room enough in hell for you,
We'll not have heaven crammed."

If that is the policy to be pursued, Sir, then I am sure the minorities are done for ever.

Chaudhri Shahab-ud-Din: Sir, at this late hour of the day, I do not propose to make a long speech. I think every aspect of the question has been debated upon and discussed very ably by the previous speakers. Sir, communal representation is an unavoidable evil. We must face the fact. The evil is there and we cannot ignore it. Let us try to overcome the evil if we can, but I think the tide is too high and the water too deep. The Government of India as well as the Provincial Governments have always tried to do justice to every Province and every community. They have been issuing circulars and letters from time to time to all heads of departments to keep in view as far as possible claims of all communities consistently, of course, with efficiency and ability, in the matter of Government appointments. The principle is there and the Government have always recognised and acted upon it. Now as regards the opposition to the principle of communal representation, I think those who are the strongest opponents of the principle are in fact its strongest advocates and supporters. I would like to make myself clear....

Dr. Nand Lal: I am not at least.

Chaudhri Shahab-ud-Din: Well, they say that they are against communal representation, but in reality they are in its favour. If they are against communal representation, it does not lie in their mouth to say that a Sikh, a Parsee, a Muhammadan, a sweeper or a Christian should not try for loaves and fishes. For them it should be immaterial who gets the Government appointments. Why should they say that the claims of minorities should not be recognised and considered in the services? That shows their real object. Those communities and classes which have got the so-called loaves and fishes are the very people who are opposing communal representation. If they are sincere, that is to say, if they sincerely are against communal representation, they should not mind whether a sweeper or an untouchable gets a loaf or a fish. They should not object because they are against communal representation. Logically, their position is indefensible. However, that is a question which I need not pursue further. In my opinion every community must have a fair share in the services, and our Government have happily always recognised that wholesome principle. The object of the Mover of the Resolution is not to harass Government or to place obstacles in the way of the officers of Government. There are very many difficulties in their way. It is not an easy task to adjust the claims of so many rival communities and sub-communities, sects and sub-sects, or castes and sub-castes. That is a very difficult task. In view of these circumstances, I would advise the Mover of the Resolution not to insist upon the wording of his Resolution but to accept the amendment of Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary with the addition which I am going to propose.

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary's amendment is as follows:

"That this Assembly recommends to the Governor General in Council that in making new recruitment for the Services under the control of the Central Government, steps be taken to secure that the Services are not unduly overweighted with representatives of any one community or province."

I would like to add with the permission of the Honourable the President and the Members of the House the following words at the end of that amendment:

"and that, as far as possible, the claims of all communities and provinces are considered."

I am perfectly satisfied with this addition and I think so are some of my friends who are really responsible for the Resolution in question. I may inform the House that Sir Malcolm Hailey has very kindly assented to this addition being made to Sir Deva Prasad's amendment and I hope now the Honourable Members of this House will accept the amendment with my addition unanimously.

Mr. President: Further amendment moved:

"To add to the amendment proposed by Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary the following:

"and that, as far as possible, the claims of all communities and provinces are considered."

Mr. J. P. Cotelingam (Nominated: Indian Christians): Sir, as the solitary representative of one of the minorities in the Assembly I would like to say a few words on the motion before the House. There is nothing new or startling in the Resolution moved by the Honourable Mr. M. M. Nayar. The principle underlying that Resolution is, as Honourable Members know, the policy pursued by Government from the days of Queen Victoria of gracious memory. All that the Resolution seeks to do is to emphasise or reiterate that policy. Where all qualifications are equal, it asks of the Government of India for consideration in the case of classes or communities not adequately represented in the various services. It asks for a share in the administration as the country is marching on its onward progress towards the goal of self-Government. It asks for equal opportunities for all sections of the community that have the necessary qualifications for such service. The Indian Christian community has stood in the past and stands for a fair field and no favour. I repeat what I have said, namely, that the community that I have the honour to represent in this Assembly stands for a fair field and no favour. I have confidence that the Government will hold its balance even in the midst of the conflicting claims of the various communities and that in the recruitment for the various services, it will see to it that no one community gets the monopoly or is particularly favoured. After the pronouncement made by the Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey, I venture to think that, taking into consideration the Resolution moved and the amendments for and against, the amendment moved by the Honourable Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary is a happy solution of the problem.

(Several Honourable Members: "I move that the main question be now put.")

Mr. President: The question is that the main question be now put.

The motion was adopted.

Mr. K. Muppil Nayar: Sir, though I am not able to follow the advice of my Honourable friend Dr. Nand Lal, I wish to say a few words in conclusion. Let me assure the Government that I have no intention at all of embarrassing the Government and I quite realise the difficulties mentioned by the Honourable the Home Member. But it is the very existence of these difficulties that has called for a sort of communal representation, and until those difficulties are wiped out, I am sure some sort of communal representation will be essential. I would, however, like to withdraw my Resolution in favour of the amended Resolution as amended by Chaudhri Shahab-ud-Din, and I accept that amendment, of course once more urging the claims of the landed interests.

Mr. President: The original question was:

"This Assembly recommends to the Governor General in Council that the Government of India in making appointments to offices under its direct control shall ordinarily, where the qualifications of candidates are adequate to discharge the duties, be guided by considerations of capacity, efficiency and character irrespective of caste or creed."

Since which an amendment has been moved:

"For all the words after the words 'shall ordinarily' the following be substituted: 'be guided by considerations of capacity, efficiency and character irrespective of caste or creed'."

Further amendment moved:

Substitute the following for the original Resolution:

"This Assembly recommends to the Governor General in Council that in making new appointments for the services under the control of the Central Government, steps be taken to secure that the services are not unduly overweighted with representatives of any one community or province."

Further amendment moved:

To add at the end of that amendment the words 'and that, as far as possible, the claims of all communities and provinces are considered'."

The question I have to put is that those words be added to Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary's amendment.

The motion was adopted.

Mr. President: Now, I want the Assembly to pay particular attention to the way in which I shall put the question now. I propose, first of all, to put the question that all the words after and including the words 'where the qualifications of candidates' down to the end of the Resolution be omitted.

Mr. W. M. Hussanally: As the Resolution has been withdrawn, it need not be put to the House.

Mr. President: If Mr. Muppil Nayar withdraws his Resolution with the consent of the House, there is no decision and all the amendments fall.

I put the question that the words

Mr. K. Muppil Nayar: I have withdrawn my Resolution in favour of Chaudhri Shahab-ud-Din's amendment.

Mr. President: The Honourable Member can vote for it.

The question is:

"That the words 'where the qualifications of candidates are adequate to discharge the duties, etc.' down to the words 'Provincial considerations' be omitted."

(While the question was being put, it became clear to Mr. President that the position was apparently not clear to the House.)

Mr. President: If I am to leave an opportunity for Mr. Jayanti Ramayya's amendment to be carried, I can only do so by omitting those words in the original Resolution and I must still after that leave an opportunity to put Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary's amendment, if possible.

Mr. J. Ramayya Pantulu: I am willing to withdraw my amendment in favour of the amendment proposed by Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary.

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary: I am willing, Sir, to accept the addition of the words suggested by Chaudhri Shahab-ud-Din.

Mr. President: The position at this moment is that the Honourable Member's amendment has been amended by the addition of the words proposed by Mr. Chaudhri Shahab-ud-Din. Do I understand the Honourable Member from Madras (Mr. Ramayya) to withdraw his original amendment?

Mr. J. Ramayya Pantulu: In favour of the amendment

Mr. President: Do I understand him to withdraw it? He cannot withdraw it in favour of any amendment.

Mr. J. Ramayya Pantulu: I withdraw it.

The amendment was, by leave of the Assembly, withdrawn.

Mr. President: The question is that the following be substituted for the original Resolution:

"That this Assembly recommends to the Governor General in Council that in making new recruitment for the services under the control of the Central Government steps be taken to secure that the services are not unduly overweighted with representatives of any one community or province and that as far as possible claims of all communities and provinces are considered."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. President: The question is that the Resolution, as amended, be adopted.

The motion was adopted.

The Assembly then adjourned till Eleven of the Clock on Monday, the 12th March, 1923.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

Monday, 12th March, 1923.

The Assembly met in the Assembly Chamber at Eleven of the Clock.
Mr. President was in the Chair.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT PASSED BY ASSEMBLY ON 26TH JANUARY 1923.

548. Mr. Harchandrai Vishindas: (a) Will Government be pleased to state if they have forwarded to the Secretary of State for India the Motion for Adjournment passed by this Assembly on the 26th January last, under rule 11, of the Indian Legislative Rules?

(b) If so, will the Government be pleased to state whether any official changes or any other action has taken place as a consequence of the passing of that motion?

(c) If not, will Government be pleased to state how effect can be given to the passing of such motions?

(d) Does a Motion for Adjournment in Indian Legislature have the same effect as one passed by the British Houses of Parliament?

(e) If not, in what direction lies the difference?

The Honourable Mr. A. C. Chatterjee: Sir, on behalf of the Honourable the Home Member I shall answer parts (a) and (b) of this question. I understand that parts (c), (d) and (e) are in the competence of the Chair.

“ (a) Yes, on the 8th February.

(b) The Government of India are not aware that any official action has been taken. The appointment of a Royal Commission is made by His Majesty the King Emperor and not by the Government of India.”

Mr. President: Parts (c), (d) and (e) of this question, strictly speaking, are not matters within the special cognisance of any Member of Government; but as they relate closely to the procedure of the Legislative Assembly, I propose to answer them myself.

“ (c) No direct effect can be given to an Adjournment Motion of this House. The rule itself only provides a convenient method by which the ordinary business of the Assembly may be put on one side in order to make way for the discussion of some sudden emergency. The only question put from the Chair on that occasion is “ that this House do now adjourn.” If this motion is carried, the action of the Assembly may be taken (a) as evidence of the serious view which the majority of the House takes regarding the matter, and (b) as possibly a vote of censure on Government. (d) An Adjournment Motion in the Indian Legislature has the same motive and purpose as a similar motion in the House of Commons. It can hardly he said to have the same effect, however, because in the House of Commons the Government of the day might regard the passage of such a motion as evidence of such a loss of parliamentary confidence that it would have no course but to resign, whereas I may add, as far as am aware, the Government of India does not resign.

The Honourable Member will now perhaps be able to judge for himself how far there is any specific difference between Adjournment Motions in Delhi and Westminster.

Mr. P. P. Ginwala: Supplementary question, Sir. Is there any foundation for the rumour that, in consequence of the vote of censure, implied in the adoption of this Resolution by the House, His Majesty's Secretary of State has tendered his resignation to His Majesty?

The Honourable Mr. A. C. Chatterjee: I have not seen that reported, Sir.

FUTURE COURSE OF NON-OFFICIAL BILLS.

549. Mr. Sambanda Mudaliar: Will Government be pleased to state whether the present Session is the last one of the present Legislative Assembly? If so, what is to become of the various non-official bills either introduced already and circulated for opinion or referred to the Select Committee?

The Honourable Mr. A. C. Chatterjee: I am again answering on behalf of the Honourable the Home Member, Sir. "Government are not in a position to state whether the current session will be the last session of the present Assembly. As the Honourable Member is aware, the dissolution of the Assembly is a matter which is in the discretion of the Governor General. Government are advised that all Bills, whether official or non-official, which are pending in the Assembly at the time of its dissolution, will lapse."

Dr. H. S. Gour: May I ask, Sir, if there is anything in the Standing Orders of the Legislative Assembly to justify the advice or the ruling given just now, namely, that all non-official and official Bills pending at the moment of dissolution will ipso facto lapse. So far as I am aware, there is a Standing Order in favour of lapsing in the House of Commons but there is no corresponding rule in the Standing Orders of the Legislative Assembly. And, because there is no rule providing for the lapsing of these Bills, I submit that it cannot be laid down by analogy that all Bills pending on the dissolution of the present Assembly shall ipso facto lapse.

The Honourable Mr. A. C. Chatterjee: I don't quite understand, Sir, whether the Honourable gentleman asked me a question or wished to lay down a proposition. He asked me whether there was anything in the Standing Orders. The Standing Orders are as well known to him, Sir, as they are to me.

Dr. H. S. Gour: I wish to ask the Honourable Member whether the opinion of the Government providing for the lapsing of Bills is based upon any explicit direction contained in the Standing Orders of the Legislative Assembly.

The Honourable Mr. A. C. Chatterjee: I should like notice of that question, Sir.

Mr. K. Ahmed: Are the Government aware that there is a rumour afloat that they suspect very much that Government are not holding or giving assurance of holding a session at Simla and that thereby they are going to deprive the country of the benefit of moving these Bills and getting them passed?

Mr. President: The Honourable Member evidently assumes that it is a matter for the Governor General in Council. It is not: it is a matter for the Governor General.

Mr. K. Ahmed: About the rumour, Sir.

Mr. President: The Government has no attitude on this subject.

Mr. K. Ahmed: The danger, Sir, of the rumour?

DATES OF NEXT ELECTIONS.

550. Mr. Sambanda Mudaliar: Will Government be pleased to state whether it is a fact that the elections of some of the local Legislative Councils are to be held in July or August next? If so, will Government be pleased to state whether the elections of Members of the Assembly from those provinces will also be held simultaneously as was done last time?

The Honourable Mr. A. C. Chatterjee: The answer to the first part of the question is "we have no information on the subject" and the answer to the second part is "No date has yet been fixed for the next elections to the Legislative Assembly".

Mr. Sambanda Mudaliar: Will the Honourable Member be pleased to state whether any communication has been received by this Government from the Madras Government in regard to the date of the election being fixed in August or some other date?

The Honourable Mr. A. C. Chatterjee: I am answering this question on behalf of the Honourable the Home Member, Sir, who is unavoidably absent elsewhere, and I regret I cannot give any answer to this question. I think it will be best for the Honourable Member to put down the question on the paper.

Mr. Mahmood Schamnad Sahib Bahadur: Will the Government be pleased to arrange to have the elections for the Legislative Assembly and the Provincial Councils to be held simultaneously as was done last year?

Mr. President: The Honourable Member heard the last answer given by the Member of Government. I think it will be advisable both in the interests of question and of answer that he should wait until the Honourable the Home Member is able to be in his place. If he puts another question he will no doubt get an answer.

ISSUE OF RAILWAY RECEIPTS AT DELHI.

551. Mr. R. A. Spence: (a) Is it a fact that Railway Receipts are not always issued at Delhi Railway Station on the same day as goods are delivered for despatch from that station?

(b) Is it a fact that goods left at the Delhi Railway Station, for which a Railway Receipt has not been issued are often tampered with?

(c) What steps do the Railway Board propose to take to see that Railway Receipts are always issued on the day goods are delivered at the Railway Station?

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley: (a), (b) and (c). Government have no information. The East Indian, Bombay, Baroda and Central India, Great Indian Peninsula and North-Western Railways have separate goods offices in Delhi and if the Honourable Member will indicate the name of the Railway to which his question refers inquiry will be made.

COAL TRAFFIC FREIGHT RATES.

552. Mr. N. C. Sircar: (a) With reference to His Excellency the Viceroy's reply to the address presented by the Indian Mining Federation, Calcutta, on the 16th December last, will the Government be pleased to state if steps are now being taken towards a reduction of the freight rates for the movement of long distance Coal Traffic?

(b) If the reply be in the affirmative, will the Government give an idea as to the extent to which the reduction is likely to be effected and as to the time when the reduced rates are likely to come into operation?

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley: (a) and (b). The feasibility of making a reduction in the rates for long distance coal traffic is under consideration but Government is not at present in a position to make any more definite statement regarding the matter.

ORIAS IN GOVERNMENT SERVICE.

553. Mr. B. N. Misra: Will the Government be pleased to state the number of Oriyas:

- (a) In the Postal and Telegraphic Department;
- (b) In the Income-tax Department;
- (c) In the several Departments of the Secretariat establishments of the Government of India drawing a salary of—
 - (i) Rs. 500 or upwards;
 - (ii) Rs. 100 or upwards?

The Honourable Mr. A. C. Chatterjee: The information is being collected and will be furnished to the Honourable Member in due course.

Mr. K. Ahmed: Will the Government be pleased to enquire with regard to Bengal Muhammadans if there will be any in (a), (b) and (c) Departments drawing a salary of (i) Rs. 500 or upwards and (ii) of Rs. 100 or upwards?

Mr. President: This question has nothing to do with Bengal Muhammadans.

LAC RESEARCH WORK.

554. Babu Braja Sundar Dass: Will the Government be pleased to state:

- (a) The amount realised as the lac-cess after passing of the Bill?
- (b) The amount of unspent balance, if any?
- (c) The conditions on which officers and men have entered service?

(d) The number of men and officers engaged in the lac-research work stating their personal pay, status and qualifications?

(e) Is the department of research in this direction going to be permanent one?

(f) What amount, if any, do the Government contribute for the lac-research work?

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: (a) and (b). As already notified an abstract of the accounts of the Indian Lac Association for Research will be published in the Gazette of India as soon as they are received by the Government of India. The information asked for is not available at present.

(c), (d) and (e). The Lac Association is not a Government body and Government have no information on these points.

(f) A sum of Rs. 43,427-10-1 being the net realizations on the balance of shellac deliverable under the Munitions Shellac Purchase Scheme after the Home Government had ceased to purchase shellac, was made over to the Association as a grant with which to commence its scientific work. The money was derived from the trade generally and was allotted by consent to the benefit of the trade. The Government had no claim to this money and no contribution has been made by Government to the Association.

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary: Do these receipts and expenditure in any way appear in any Government account and do they at all come up before Government except in the way of report?

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: No, Sir. They come up to Government and are published for general information in the Gazette of India.

DELHI POLICE SERGEANTS.

555. Khan Bahadur Sarfaraz Husain Khan: (a) Is it a fact that the Delhi Police has got a class of officers as Sergeants?

(b) If the answer is in the affirmative, will the Government be pleased to state as to the methods of recruitment of such officers?

(c) If not, will they be pleased to state whether sergeants are placed on deputation to Delhi, from the Punjab Police; and if so, whether such officers on deputation are paid from the Delhi Police grant?

The Honourable Mr. A. C. Chatterjee: (a) Yes; there are 9 Sergeants on the sanctioned strength of the Delhi Police.

(b) Vacancies are filled in accordance with Police Rules by the Senior Superintendent of Police by selection from a list of approved candidates maintained in his office.

(c) Does not arise.

DELHI POLICE SUB-INSPECTOR.

556. Khan Bahadur Sarfaraz Husain Khan: Will the Government be pleased to state as to what is the minimum pay of Police Sub-Inspector of Delhi?

The Honourable Mr. A. C. Chatterjee: The minimum pay is Rs. 80 in a time-scale of Rs. 80 rising by quinquennial increments of Rs. 10 to Rs. 130. There are also three selection grades on Rs. 140, 150 and 160.

REFRESHMENT ROOM CONTRACTS.

557. Sardar Bomanji A. Dalal: 1. Will the Government be pleased to state whether it is a fact that Government are taking away Railway Refreshment Room contracts from Indians and that they are giving such contracts to Europeans?

2. Is it a fact that Government intend to give the monopoly of such contracts to Europeans?

3. If so, will Government be pleased to state what led them to take this step?

4. Will Government be pleased to state whether they intend to give Railway Refreshment contracts to Indians of established reputation in future or not?

5. Why do Government not invite tenders from the public for such contracts?

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley: 1 and 2. The reply is in the negative.

3. Does not therefore arise.

4 and 5. Government have no doubt that Railway Administrations will continue, as in the past, to give Refreshment Room Contracts to the most suitable persons available irrespective of their nationality.

Mr. K. Ahmed: Is it not a fact, Sir, that in the case of Messrs. Sorabji and Company who are the contractors for the supply of refreshments on the Eastern Bengal and other Railways there have been complaints against them that their food is not only inferior in quality but insufficient in quantity? Is it not a fact, Sir, that some Railway Companies, as for instance, the Bengal Nagpur Railway Company, have taken over the management of these (refreshment rooms) and the management is going on better than on the Eastern Bengal Railway?

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley: It is a fact Sir, that the Bengal Nagpur Railway Company manage their own catering department.

Mr. K. Ahmed: Do Government propose to adopt the same in regard to all the Railways?

Munshi Iswar Saran: Will Government state if in future it will invite tenders from the public for these contracts?

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley: This matter is one which the Railway Companies deal with within their own competence. So far as State Railways are concerned, I believe it has been the case that tenders have been called for.

Munshi Iswar Saran: Will a suggestion be made to these Companies to follow the excellent example set by the State-managed Railways?

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley: I will make a note of that suggestion, Sir.

B. N. RAILWAY WORKSHOP STAFF.

558. Mr. K. B. L. Agnihotri: (a) With reference to Mr. Joshi's question No. 142, dated 5th February, 1923, will the Government be pleased to state whether they are aware that the termination of services of certain number of daily paid staff, in the Bengal-Nagpur Railway workshops, has created much discontent among the other workers of the Railway?

(b) If not, will the Government be pleased to make an enquiry?

(c) Will the Government be pleased to state, (i) the number of daily paid staff whose services have been terminated; and also (ii) the number of daily paid workers; and (iii) the monthly paid workers at the Kharagpur workshop before the termination of the daily paid workers; and (iv) also the saving in expenditure per month by this termination of services?

(d) Were the persons whose services have been terminated ever punished before this occasion for their bad or negligent work or were they reported against by their superior officers in charge of the Departments concerned and were these punishments noted in their history sheets?

(e) Is it a fact that the Bengal-Nagpur Railway Workmen's (or Labour) Union approached the Agent of the Bengal-Nagpur Railway to receive their deputation to hear their grievances in this connection and the Agent gave a curt refusal to that request?

(f) (i) Will the Government be pleased to state if there was not enough work for these workers at the workshop before their services were terminated? (ii) If the work was enough for such men, then will the Government state the arrangements which the Railway Company intends to make for the speedy and efficient work in the workshop?

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley: In reply to the whole of this question I have to say that the reduction in the daily paid staff on the Bengal Nagpur Railway workshops has been made in the interests of economy in working which all railway administrations are now endeavouring to effect.

The necessity for retrenchment in working expenses has been strongly impressed upon them and the Railway Board must leave it to the discretion of the Agents to effect reductions in the best manner possible. The Railway Board believe that where reductions in staff have to be made the Agents are giving the fullest consideration to the claims of the staff in order to avoid as little hardship as possible. Government do not therefore propose to enquire further into the circumstances of the particular case of retrenchment to which this question refers.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: May I ask, Sir, whether during this period, at the time when these people were dismissed, the number of officers in the Supervising grade was increased actually?

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley: I believe, as far as my knowledge goes, that there was no such increase.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: Has the Honourable Member scrutinised the figures given in the present Budget?

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley: I have scrutinised the figures in the present Budget for the last few days very carefully, but I do not know how that bears on this particular question.

B. N. RAILWAY ASSISTANT DISTRICT TRAFFIC SUPERINTENDENTS.

559. Mr. K. B. L. Agnihotri: a) What was the number of the Assistant District Traffic Superintendents working on the 31st December, 1920, in each of the Railway districts in the Bengal-Nagpur Railway and what was the number of such officers in such districts on 31st December, 1922?

(b) If the number has increased, will the Government be pleased to give the reasons for such increase?

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley: The number of Assistant District Traffic Superintendents sanctioned for the Bengal Nagpur Railway in 1920 was 27. This sanction has not been altered since.

The Company distribute their staff in accordance with the needs of Traffic working and without reference to the Government of India.

N. W. RAILWAY SLEEPER CONTRACT.

560. Mr. K. C. Neogy: 1. Is it a fact that the North-Western Railway placed a contract for cement sleepers for 1921-22, with a certain firm in Calcutta? If so, for how much and at what rate?

2. Is it a fact that the said firm did not supply the full number of cement sleepers required, but was at the same time given another contract for the same at a higher rate later on? If so, what was the number for which the later contract was given, and at what rate?

3. Will Government be pleased to state whether cement sleepers have proved a success on the Railway lines?

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley: 1. The North Western Railway placed a contract in May 1921 for the supply of 50,000 cement concrete sleepers before 31st March 1922 with Messrs. Concrete Products (Bird and Company), Delhi, at Rs. 13 per sleeper, f. o. r. Delhi, Kingsway.

2. The firm did not supply the full number of sleepers by the 31st March 1922, but as more of these sleepers were required, a fresh contract for the supply of 100,000 sleepers at Rs. 16-12 per sleeper was entered into, the rate being fixed after a very thorough examination of the case.

3. The concrete sleepers have not been in use for a sufficiently long time to prove whether they will be a complete success but experience so far gives promise that they will be a great success owing to their having much longer life than wooden sleepers.

Mr. W. M. Hussanally: Had any tenders been invited before the rate of Rs. 16 and odd was fixed?

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley: I am not in a position to state whether tenders were called for for these concrete sleepers. I do not think there are any other competing firms.

Sir Montagu Webb: May I ask the reason why the original contract was not carried out?

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley: I am not able to say exactly, but there were various difficulties met with in the manufacture of this particular article and the outturn was not as great as had been anticipated.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: Were the difficulties which were experienced peculiar to the firm, or were they the general world-wide difficulties?

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley: As far as I know there is no other firm making these concrete sleepers and so I suppose these difficulties were peculiar to the particular firm.

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas: Is the Honourable Member in a position to state what is the relative cost of the teakwood sleeper and cement sleeper?

Mr. R. A. Spence: Can the Honourable Member state how many sleepers of the original contract were not delivered at the rate of Rs. 13?

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley: I am afraid I have not got the figures. I must require notice.

Mr. W. M. Hussanally: Have they since been delivered?

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley: I am not in a position to say that without notice. I wish to have notice.

SURMA VALLEY—INCLUSION IN BENGAL.

561. Rai Bahadur G. C. Nag: Are the Government aware that in 1920 just before the introduction of the Reforms, the people of the Surma Valley in Assam were agitating for inclusion of their districts within Bengal on the ground that unless they were so included they might run the risk of being deprived of the benefits of the permanent settlement of the Calcutta High Court, and of the Calcutta University, and Sir Nicholas Beatson Bell, the then Chief Commissioner of Assam, issued a communiqué in the following words:

“Sir Nicholas Beatson Bell has authority from the Government of India to give an unqualified denial to all the allegations? The permanent settlement will remain for ever inviolate; so also will the connection of Sylhet with the Calcutta High Court and the Calcutta University unless and until the people of the Surma Valley through their elected representatives express a clear desire for a High Court or a University of their own?”

The Honourable Mr. A. C. Chatterjee: The reply is in the affirmative.

Rai Bahadur G. C. Nag: Are the Government aware that there are two Bills now pending before the Bengal Legislative Council for re-modelling the Calcutta University and that neither of these Bills makes any provision for the control and management of the schools and colleges of Assam. If any of the Bills is passed into law what is to become of the pledge given by the then Chief Commissioner of Assam?

The Honourable Mr. A. C. Chatterjee: The Bills to which the Honourable Member refers are before the Legislative Council of Bengal which is competent to legislate with regard to the Calcutta University.

Rai Bahadur G. C. Nag: Are the Bengal Council competent to legislate in respect of the schools and colleges of Assam? That is the point.

The Honourable Mr. A. C. Chatterjee: The Bills do not refer to the schools of Assam at all. As regards the colleges I should like a question put on the paper so that I can give a considered answer.

Mr. J. Chaudhuri: May I ask the Honourable Member whether he has considered the question that under the Devolution Rules the Central Government is to legislate for the Calcutta University and is the Government competent to delegate its powers to the Bengal Legislative Council in that respect?

Mr. President: That is rather a large question to ask as a supplementary question.

Mr. K. Ahmed: How are the Government going to fulfil the pledge about the Calcutta University being always continued so that the people of the districts may not run the risk of being deprived of the benefit of that University.

The Honourable Mr. A. C. Chatterjee: I did not hear the question.

UNSTARRED QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

POSSESSION OF AEROPLANES BY UNIVERSITY CORPS.

233. Mr. Saiyed Muhammed Abdulla: In reference to the reply given to my question No. 317 of 1922 (page 3397, of the Debates, Vol. 2, Part 3), do the units of the University Corps or any members of it possess any aeroplanes? If so, what is the number and what arrangement is observed for their proper custody and lawful use?

Mr. E. Burdon: The answer to the first part of the question is in the negative and the second part does not arise.

AEROPLANES.

234. Mr. Saiyed Muhammed Abdulla: In reference to the reply given to my question No. 315 of 1922 (page 3397 of the Debates, Vol. 2, Part 3), will the Government be pleased to lay on the table the particulars of the 12 aeroplanes registered till 1922, and also of any others registered since then?

Colonel Sir Sydney Crookshank: Particulars of all civil aeroplanes registered up to date under Rule 15 of the Indian Aircraft Rules, 1920, are laid on the table.

Statement showing the number of registered civil aeroplanes with the names of their owners and their stations, up to date.

No.	Type of machine.	Owner's name and address.	Station.	REMARKS.
1	Handley Page	Handley Page Indo-Burmese Transport, Ltd., 16, Chowringhee.	Calcutta	Cancelled.
2	Ditto	Messrs. G. McKenzie & Co., Ltd., 17-3, Chowringhee Road, Calcutta.	Dum Dum	Ditto.
3	Avro	Mr. E. Villiers, Clive Buildings, Calcutta.	Dum Dum aerodrome, Calcutta.
4	Handley Page	Handley Page Indo-Burmese Transport, Ltd., 6, The Mall, Dum Dum, Calcutta.	Ditto	Cancelled.
5	Avro	Mr. W. P. Wills, Riverside, Egmore, Madras.	Egmore, Madras	Ditto.
6	D. H. 9	Raja N. Muntaz Ali Khan, Raja of Utraula.	Utraula	Ditto.
7	Ditto	Assam Government	Dum Dum	Ditto.
8	Ditto
9	Ditto
10	Sopwith	Mr. E. Villiers, Clive Buildings, Clive Street, Calcutta.	Dum Dum aerodrome, Calcutta.
11	D. H. 9	Mr. L. Murphy	Karachi.
12	Avro	Mr. E. Villiers	Dum Dum aerodrome, Calcutta.
13	Ditto	Messrs. G. McKenzie & Co., Ltd.	Ditto.
14	Ditto	Ditto.	Ditto.

NOTE:—Excludes one aeroplane registered in an Indian State.

ARTICLE re "NON-CO-OPERATION BY GOVERNMENT AND COMPANY RAILWAYS" re GRIEVANCES.

235. Rai Sahib Lakshmi Narayan Lal: 1. Has the attention of the Government and the Railway Board been drawn to the articles headed "Non-co-operation by Government and Company Railways" in the Tribune of 19th December, 1922, and 9th February, 1923?

2. Have the Government or the Railway Board taken any step to remove the grievances of the people referred to therein?

3. If not, will the Government and the Railway Board be pleased to consider the advisability of removing the said grievances or such of them as they think fit?

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley: 1. Yes.

2 and 3. The comfort and convenience of all classes of passengers are matters which are receiving the earnest attention of Government and the railway administrations and endeavour is made to remove grievances wherever practicable.

THE BUDGET—LIST OF DEMANDS.

SECOND STAGE.

Method of Presentation.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar (Madras City: Non-Muhammadan Urban): I wish to repeat the remark which I made in the first year of our existence as regards the way in which these Demands are placed before the House. Under clause 130 of our Manual of Business at page 43 you will notice that it contemplates that different days shall be allotted for different heads of Demands. Now, fixed days are allotted for all the Demands put together. I do not think it is consistent with the spirit or the intention or the language of that rule that these Demands should be placed lumped together for all the days. On the first occasion when I raised this question on the 7th March 1921 the Honourable the Leader of the House, Sir Malcolm Hailey, pointed out that he wanted to acquire experience of the way in which these Demands were disposed of by the House so that for future years he would note the request and give us separate days for separate heads of Demands. I am sorry he is not here to-day and I am raising the question in his absence, but if his absence causes any inconvenience to the Government Benches I will repeat the question later on when he comes, but it seems to me that it would be more advantageous to the House if different days are allotted for the different heads of Demands so that we may come prepared. Not only that, we may not rush our amendments so as to be within time, that is, the two days' notice. In fact, as the House will notice, Members have given notice of a lot of amendments which they would not have done but for this procedure being adopted, because then they will consider very carefully before they send notice of their amendments.

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett (Finance Member): No question I think is more difficult than the question of how to place before a Parliament the estimates of the expenditure for the year. I do not understand whether the Honourable Member in moving this desires to complain of the six days being insufficient as a whole, (Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: "That is one of the points") or of the general procedure. I think that experience, so far as I understand it, of the last two years has not made it appear that on the whole the six days are really insufficient. There is a difficulty always in conducting a debate on estimates which is apt to get diffused in a large Assembly. During the last two years I do not understand that there was any very great complaint as to the sufficiency of the period. But as regards the question of the form in which they are put I may perhaps refer to the procedure in the House of Commons in London. The system there is that a certain number of votes or demands are chosen usually by the leaders of the opposition parties. They take in order whichever votes they desire to have discussed and the debate on most days is confined to a general discussion of the subject on one or two or at most three votes. That enables the House of Commons to devote a full discussion, shall we say, to the Home Department, or Foreign Department, or some other Department, but although there are 20 days allotted under the British system, it is the usual experience that three-fourths of the votes are passed on the last day of the twenty without discussion. (A Voice: "As here.") The difficulty is to get away from that system. The Government would be very glad to consider further what method would lead to the convenience of the House in dealing with these matters as a whole and I do not know whether I may possibly suggest that a small committee might be appointed to discuss the subject. It is not an easy one. If that suggestion would commend itself—I would speak to the Leader of the House to consider what action we can take with a view to improving the procedure, but I think it must be for next year.

[Sir Basil Blackett.]

CUSTOMS.

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes (Commerce and Industries Member): I beg to move:

"That a sum not exceeding Rs. 66,17,000 be granted to the Governor General in Council to defray the charge which will come in course of payment during the year ending the 31st day of March 1924 in respect of 'Customs'."

The Demand as shown in the printed* book has been reduced by Rs. 69,000 to correct a misstatement in budgeting made by the Bengal Government in regard to the expenditure on over-time allowances.

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: Sir, I do not know whether I shall be in order, but I think it will be for the convenience of the House if I were to give a little explanation in regard to the supplementary sheet which was circulated on Saturday. The original figures as shown in the blue Detailed Estimates and Demands for Grants are altered under various heads by this statement, the total reduction on those being Rs. 4,07,27,000, slightly more than the 4 crores which was the figure used in my Budget statement. That reduction together with reductions already taken account of in the Budget make a total reduction of 7,09,96,000 as compared with the total reductions of 9,04,92,000 recommended under the corresponding heads by the Retrenchment Committee. It will be seen therefore that the Government according to this sheet has given effect in regard to Civil

* Blue Book on Detailed Estimates for Demands for Grants for Expenditure of the Central Government charged to Revenue and Capital and also of Disbursements of Loans and Advances for 1923-24.

Estimates to rather more than 7 crores out of just over 9 crores of the recommendations made by the Retrenchment Committee, the difference of rather less than 2 crores being the amount which we have thought it necessary to allow for the lag for the fact that all these reductions cannot be enforced in full by the 1st April. There are however included in the cuts totalling 4,07,27,000 cuts to a total of 5,78,000, on which the Government of India has not yet been able to come to a final decision as to whether it will or will not be able to accept those particular recommendations. The details of that sum are under the Head of Education a sum of 1,67,000, under the Head of Medical 50,000, provision for Public Health Commissioner 20,000 and two large items—School of Mines 2 lakhs and the provision for the Indian Stores Department 1,41,000. The Government of India is still engaged in considering whether or not it is able to accept the reductions recommended by the Retrenchment Committee under these heads. In regard to the remainder the Government of India after careful consideration of the items has decided that it will do its best to put the recommendations into force. As I explained the other day it is difficult in estimating to say how much the lag may be and it is possible that an insufficient allowance has been made for the difficulty of bringing reductions into force at once but these items totalling 5,78,000 have not reached that stage. The Government of India has not yet decided that it can recommend those reductions.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: With reference to the statement made by the Finance Member just now, I notice that the 7 crores for which he claims credit includes a sum of 59 lakhs under miscellaneous adjustments, so that the proper sum of retrenchment effected is 6.50 out of 9.04 and not 7.09.

Mr. A. V. V. Aliyar (Finance Department: Nominated Official): That is merely transferred from the head Miscellaneous adjustments to the Head Political. You will find it explained in the explanatory note attached. If you take the two heads together there is an actual reduction.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: I do not know whether it is to be considered as carrying out the retrenchment recommendation. It requires to be carried out further to the extent of 2.50.

Mr. A. V. V. Aliyar: The reduction of 59 lakhs is set off by an addition under the Head Political. So it does not affect the question of reduction made or to be made.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: I beg to move:

"That the provision for pay of establishment under the head 'Customs' be reduced by Rs. 103."

I wish to raise a question here of some importance to us as regards the personnel of the establishment in the Customs Department. This is one of the big departments under the control of the Government of India. Honourable Members will notice we voted nearly more than 40 lakhs under this head for establishment charges which consists of both the Imperial Service and the ordinary Indian Civil Service. This is one of those departments where the Indians have found it very difficult to gain admission. The Public Services Commission recommended a modest proportion of 50 per cent. of these services in the Imperial Services to be allotted to the Indians. The present proportion in that service is about 23 and as regards the other important services carrying salaries of Rs. 200 and upwards I tried to get the figures but I am sorry to say the figures are not available in the Government of India. The Government of India who control this establishment have not even got the establishment list which will show these figures. They are not able to give me information as to how many Indians there are on this service carrying a salary of Rs. 200 and upwards. This department is administered for the Government of India by the provincial Governments as the agents of the Government of India and early in the history of this Assembly Honourable Members will remember we made a strenuous fight that lump provisions should not be granted. However on the undertaking that the matter will be examined thoroughly by the Finance Committee these lump provisions were allowed to remain and one of the lump provisions was in regard to Customs Service. When the matter came up before the Standing Finance Committee on the 2nd June 1921 and when they discussed these lump provisions for establishments, the Standing Finance Committee pointed out (I am reading from page 7 of the proceedings of the Standing Finance Committee of the 30th and 31st May 1921):

[Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar.]

"This gave rise to considerable discussion particularly as to the necessity of employing officers of the class now employed and whether Indian establishment could not be obtained at cheaper rates. Eventually after long discussion the Committee agreed to accept the rates of pay proposed by the Government of India subject to the recommendation that efforts should be made to recruit Indians in large numbers."

This was in May 1921. Sir, we had hoped that the Government of India would take steps to see that Indians are employed in larger numbers in this department but from the way they are neglecting this recommendation of the Standing Finance Committee, because they have not even got the establishment list in their hands, how are they going to safeguard the interests of Indians in this department if they will not even keep a list in order to guide them and to control the Local Governments in the matter of the filling up of these appointments and I fail to see how they are going to discharge the trust which they have undertaken to carry out. I am not able to inform the House whether there has been improvement between March 1921 and to-day. Two years have passed. How many vacancies have arisen in this service; how many of these have been filled up, and how many have been filled up by Indians, are all questions of the deepest interest to us. I do not think, Sir, that we come here merely to raise academic questions, pass pious Resolutions and then walk out. Sir, we expect that when the Standing Finance Committee lays down a recommendation of that sort, that the Government of India will take active steps to see that the recommendation is carried out. I am therefore surprised that the Government of India who are really responsible for this establishment have not even got this information to give us; they are not in a position to give us that information to-day. Sir, how can they be discharging their duty? Sir, we all witnessed that very sad and heavy spectacle the other day when the communal question was discussed; it was one of the saddest days I have passed here in this Assembly. When that question was discussed and when the Resolution was finally carried, the Government of India were placed in a more difficult position than they would have been if merely it had been a question of Indianization. It is not only a question of Indianization; it is a question of—I find it difficult to manufacture a word—shall I call it communalization or sectification; whatever it may mean, the Government of India cannot afford to neglect this important duty of theirs. Sir, let us have Indianization first, then let us afterwards, when Indianization is complete, find out whether communalization should come in or not. Let us not talk of communalization before Indianization has begun. This is a very important service under the control of the Government of India in which I trust earnest steps will be taken towards Indianization. I know, Sir, that the Honourable Member in charge cannot afford that time which is necessary to attend to these small matters. But surely the Secretary or other officers in the Department should have this information, because how else can they keep an eye on the service; how else can they keep a watch on the way in which the recruitment to this service is made? I therefore, Sir, in order to emphasise the position that this Assembly insists upon this Department being more Indianized, move this motion.

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: Sir, as regards the superior establishment of the Imperial Customs Service Mr. Rangachariar is entirely off the mark. My claim for the Imperial Customs Service is that we are probably doing more in the way of Indianization than in any other service. Out of every three vacancies, two are filled by competitive examination in India; that is to say, 66 per cent. of the vacancies are filled by competitive examination in India. I think that the House will realize that that is a very great advance in the matter of Indianization.

As regards the, what I may call, subordinate services, the only two in which the question arises are the Appraising Department and, particularly, the Preventive Service, and I think that Mr. Rangachariar has probably got the Preventive Service chiefly in his mind. It is perfectly true that the question was raised in March 1921. It was also raised when the question of incurring expenditure out of a lump grant was placed before the Standing Finance Committee, and it is quite correct that the Standing Finance Committee did suggest that efforts should be made to increase the Indian element in the Preventive Service. Well, action was immediately taken on the recommendation of the Standing Finance Committee. All Local Governments were addressed on this point. A copy of the Standing Finance Committee's recommendation was sent to all Local Governments and they were all asked to instruct their Customs Officers, subject to local conditions, to carry out the wishes of the Standing Finance Committee and of the Government of India. It is perfectly true that I have not got information as to what progress has been made since that letter was issued in August 1921. These Customs Houses are under the direct administrative control of Local Governments. We do not have the establishment list, or the establishment roll, with us. Mr. Rangachariar says that I ought to have had this information here ready in order to give it to the House. He complains that I have not got it. Now, Sir, surely the remedy was in Mr. Rangachariar's own hands. If Mr. Rangachariar had so desired, he could have put a question; he could have put a question in any one of the sessions which have intervened since August 1921 and he would have had the information promptly placed upon the table. The fact of the matter is that Mr. Rangachariar forgot all about it till the budget demand came on and then he makes the complaint that I have not got the information ready here. If Mr. Rangachariar likes to put the question now, I will get the information collected as soon as possible and place it on the table. I have inquired into this matter in going round Customs Offices. In Madras I think they have made an advance and in Calcutta. Approximately, one-third of all the vacancies to the Preventive Service are now being filled as a matter of course by Indians. In the Customs House in Bombay, all I can say is—I have no exact figures—that a beginning has been made.

[Mr. C. A. Innes.]

That, Sir, is my explanation, and I repeat what I said before, that had Mr. Rangachariar let me know that he required this information the information would have been ready here. But I say he has no right to complain that I have not this information stored ready for budget debates.

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary (Calcutta: Non-Muhammadan Urban): Sir, I am somewhat surprised at Mr. Innes' explanation that because Mr. Rangachariar did not put questions at some meetings of this House, he has not with him what he certainly ought to have. (The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: "Why?") We have heard explanations like that or something like it in regard to railway establishment books, only a few copies of which are said to be printed off for the elect and they have not been made available although question after question has been put for their production by our indefatigable friend Mr. Joshi. I do not know what the result of Mr. Rangachariar's questions would have been, but we do maintain, Sir, that record of expenditure for which the Government of India are responsible, although they may be administered by their agents the Local Government whom they are quite right in trusting as the Government on the spot, ought to be kept here. Without that, no verification is possible, and we have had an illustration of that need only this morning. When I looked at the lump figures circulated on Saturday last showing the reductions under the various budget items, I saw that there was under the heading 'Customs' an explanation at page 6 that the reduction of Rs. 69,000 is on account of contemplated savings in overtime charge. I see Mr. Innes shaking his head, and quite rightly, in the light of the further explanation that we had this morning. What is the difference between those two explanations, the one given on Saturday morning and the other on Monday morning? Those of us who, in the absence of these revised figures, had owing to the exigencies of the moment thought fit to send in motions good, bad and indifferent were misled—my friend to the right says 'mostly bad'; I am not surprised and I am glad they are not worse. Well, Government is no better off. The explanation heartened up some of us who are wanting to attack the overtime provision from their own points of view.

Mr. President: The overtime allowances are not under discussion.

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary: Sir, I am illustrating, merely illustrating the necessity of having information of this kind with the Central Government, for verification without which, I say, the Budget figures are not fit to be presented to the House for the purposes of voting grants. That figure is incorrect, or that explanation is incorrect, the Government of Bengal made a mistake in calculating the overtime and the mistake has been corrected; it is not a saving at all. I do not know what further mistakes they have made; I do not know what other mistakes other Governments have made and there is no means of checking. Then, Sir, on the general question: I am sure, on both sides of the House with which we are concerned, there will be a feeling of disappointment that much that could have been done in the way of further Indianizing this service, has not been done; where Indianization can proceed without any detriment to the interests concerned, enough progress has not been made. I am prepared to bear out my Honourable friend that in Bengal a beginning has been made, but I also know, and desire to voice the feeling in Bengal, that nearly all that could be done has not been done. The class of people from which these recruits come, are somewhat sore, very sore I ought to say, that much further has not been done in the matter. The essential matter is to revise the pay from the point of view of suitable Indianization, because the objective, as I explained in another connection not long ago, of Indianization is not merely to keep the non-Indian out—there may be a desire like that in some quarters—but that is not all the object; we want to economize, and from that point of view, what is essential and what should have been begun is what the Incheape Committee says:

"The strength and pay of the staffs of the various Customs Houses should be examined with a view to possible economies."

That has not yet been attempted, and I hope someone on the Government Benches will not say that the Incheape Committee has just made that recommendation and therefore there was not time to go into the question of revising the strength and pay of the staffs. That is the essence of proper Indianization, and without that I do not think successful Indianization or economy would be possible either in this Department or in any other. A great deal will have to be done before we have finished, and the question has been prominently brought forward in connection with this Department in which Indianization could have been most carried out without detriment to the interests concerned.

Mr. W. M. Hussanally (Sind: Muhammadan Rural): I rise, Sir, to point out, in defence of the Government, that after this Resolution passed by the Finance Committee, some effort has been made, at least in my province—I am referring to the Karachi Custom House in my part of the province, not to the whole Presidency of Bombay, as my friend on my left corrects me. I am referring only to Sind,—so far as the Karachi Custom House is concerned, there were some few appointments sanctioned in 1921 in the preventive service, and so far as I am aware about 8 or 10 appointments were filled up. Out of these 8 or 10 appointments about 3 or 4 were given to Indians, and therefore I say that the policy of Indianizing these subordinate appointments, so far as the Karachi Custom House is concerned, has been begun; and the Government of India are not blameable so far as my Custom House is concerned. Another point that I was going to refer to is that to expect the Government of India to have establishment returns, and nominal rolls, for all subordinate posts in every Custom House is not possible, and therefore, if the Honourable Commerce Member has not got these nominal rolls for all the Custom Houses in India, I should not wonder. It is for the Local Governments and Departments to have nominal roles for these subordinate posts, and it cannot be expected that the Commerce Department of the Government of India should have them to be placed before the House. Thirdly, I want to say a word with regard to what fell from our revered friend, Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary. He said that the object of Indianization was not only getting in more Indians into this kind of service, but also to revise the pay, by which I think he meant reducing the pay, of these subordinate staffs. I do not think that there is any room at all for reducing the pay of these subordinate posts; in fact the cry all over India has been that the pay and prospects of these subordinate offices is not sufficient even for Indians to live upon decently, and if I tell Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary that the highest pay of a preventive officer is only Rs. 500 or Rs. 600 a month . . .

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary: I did not use the word "subordinate".

Mr. W. M. Hussanally: Well, by "subordinate" I mean all these preventive Services which are subordinate services. I do not think that Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary thinks that the preventive service is any high service; it is after all a subordinate, non-gazetted service so far as I know, and the highest pay being only Rs. 500 or 600 a month, I do not think he would advocate that that pay should be reduced. The preventive service officers begin on a pay of Rs. 120 a month or so and I do not think he expects Government to reduce this pay for Indians, for if the pay is reduced, I do not think we can get the right kind of men to come and offer themselves for this kind of service. Therefore, so far as reducing the pay of these preventive service officers is concerned, I think it should be out of the question altogether.

Dr. H. S. Gour: (Nagpur Division: Non-Muhammadan): Sir, I am afraid Honourable Members have entirely misunderstood the object and scope of the Honourable Mr. Rangachariar's motion. The point he made was that two years back we passed a Resolution in favour of the Indianization of the Customs Houses. The Public Services Commission recommended that 50 per cent. of the appointments should be thrown open to Indians. The question therefore which Mr. Rangachariar raised was as to how far the recommendations of the Public Services Commission have been given effect to by the Government. We have been told by the Honourable Mr. Innes that Mr. Rangachariar has forgotten all about the question which he raised some months back, and that is the reason why the information which he sought is not available. But is the Honourable Mr. Innes quite sure that he did not forget all about the question himself? Surely, Sir, it was the duty of Government to see that a Resolution passed and a recommendation made was carried out, and for the purpose of ensuring compliance with recommendations and Resolutions of this House and of its Committees, it was the duty of Government vigilantly to inquire into the Indianization question and satisfy themselves that Indianization had been made to the extent demanded by this House. It is not a question of supplying statistics to the Members of this House; it is a question of doing a plain duty following upon the recommendations of this House, and from that point of view I deprecate the reply of the Honourable Mr. Innes. Now, Sir, he says, "we do not know to what extent the recommendation made by this House has been carried out." That is exactly the point upon which I submit the Government should have been prepared. They are not prepared. It is not merely a question as to whether any Member wishes to pursue that inquiry by reminding the Government; it is a question upon which the Government should have asked for no reminders. Then, Sir, we are not here dealing with the details of the subordinate preventive service or of the pay which members of this service should receive. We are dealing here with the broad question of policy. And it is from that standpoint that Mr. Rangachariar views this question, and it is from that standpoint that Members of the House generally view this question.

Lieutenant-Colonel H. A. J. Gidney (Nominated: Anglo-Indians): Sir, the remarks that have just fallen from my Honourable friend Mr. Rangachariar in his quest for Indianisation of the Customs Service, seem to have elicited no satisfactory reply from the Honourable Mr. Innes so far as the practical effect of the recommendations of the Committee is concerned.

But if it would please and satisfy Mr. Rangachariar and others who are thirsting for this information, I might tell him that the information at my disposal indicates that Indianisation of the Customs service, to which he has drawn attention is being put to very serious and practical effect, so much so that it is the opinion of various members of my community who are thereby seriously prejudiced that this Indianisation is going on at a very rapid rate indeed. Let there be no doubt. The Government is putting this into very rapid effect—although Mr. Innes is not in a position to give this House the exact figures.

Mr. K. Ahmed (Rajshahi Division: Muhammadan Rural): Sir, it is surprising that the Government Member in charge of the Department is not aware of the exact number of officers who are serving in this department. Roughly speaking, taking, I suppose, from the chaprassis and petty clerks, he has stated that 66 per cent. of the people are Indians. Sir, I invite his attention to page 5 of the Demand for Grants, Bengal. We find that the existing strength is set out there as follows:

"247 Preventive officers at varying rates from Rs. 140 to Rs. 675.

310 Clerks at varying rates from Rs. 40 to Rs. 600.

27 Appraisers, 1 on Rs. 800 and rest at varying rates from Rs. 290 to Rs. 725."

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: Sir, on a point of explanation, I think perhaps I will save the time of the House and of Mr. K. Ahmed if I point out that what I said was that 66 per cent. of the recruits to the Imperial Customs Service were now being recruited in India. I did not refer to the subordinate services. I was talking of the Imperial Customs Service.

Mr. K. Ahmed: I am very much obliged, Sir. Even then there is no room for my Honourable friend to discuss the subject, because the other officers of the remaining Customs offices are ignored. There is no justification. I am sorry I did not quite catch my Honourable friend at the time. But, Sir, that is not the argument which we want to deal with. There are 27 appraisers, one on Rs. 800 and the rest at varying rates from Rs. 290 to Rs. 725, 281 servants at varying rates from Rs. 8-8-0 to Rs. 35, temporary establishment and 144, boat establishment. Sir, leaving those officers or servants at varying rates from Rs. 8-8-0 to Rs. 35, and leaving the 144 people in the boat establishment, is my Honourable friend, the Government Member, in a position to give us the names of the other people? Sir, if my Honourable friend takes the trouble to walk through the Calcutta Customs office, he would not find very many higher officers getting that salary as my Honourable friend the Mover pointed out from Rs. 200 and upwards. Government have not met that point at all. The Honourable Member in charge is not in a position to enlighten the House as to how many officers are working there. As far as I am concerned, Sir, I know for certain—I do very often walk through the Customs office—I have hardly seen, in fact I never saw one Muhammadan from Bengal; Sir, although the Muhammadans of Bengal form 56 per cent. (or 60 per cent. according to the last census) of the whole population of Bengal; and still my Honourable friend put the number at one-third. Sir, if these poor Indians are to serve only in the lower ranks and not in other places, I fail to see how my Honourable friend is satisfied with regard to the grant that he asks for. After eleven months he comes with his Budget ignorant of particulars of what he is asking for. Will this House have any sympathy for that sort of grant that he wants? I do not know. Probably later on he will stand up and say it is "non-votable" and we are blindly to accept the proposals made. He says, further, Sir, that if my Honourable friend Mr. Rangachariar had put a starred question, the answer would have been given. No doubt about it. But is he not in a position to ask the department to give him the facts and figures at this stage when he asks for the grant? He says, Sir, a good beginning has been made, without knowing how many officers were recruited since 1921. Without giving the particulars and the figures, which this House expects to know, I do not think there is any justification for saying that a good beginning has been made. I, therefore, most emphatically oppose the grant asked for and support the motion for reduction by Rs. 100.

[Mr. K. Ahmed.]

Mr. N. M. Joshi (Nominated: Labour Interests): I move that the question be now put.

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas (Bombay City: Non-Muhammadan Urban): Sir, I only want to remind the House that the question raised by my Honourable friend Mr. Rangachariar has not yet been answered. Neither the statement made by the Honourable the Commerce Member nor the intervention of my Honourable friend Colonel Gidney, who thought that the pace of Indianisation in the Customs Department was very rapid, has taken away anything from the vagueness of the answer given by the Government. The question that Mr. Rangachariar has definitely raised is this. The Standing Finance Committee made a recommendation and it was when the Committee sanctioned certain grants that came before the Finance Committee, that the Committee made certain recommendations with regard to the conditions on which hereafter further grants of a similar character would be sanctioned. What has the Government done to carry out the recommendations of the Standing Finance Committee? That is the plain question of my Honourable friend Mr. Rangachariar. My Honourable friend Mr. Innes says the recommendation of the Standing Finance Committee has been communicated to the Local Governments, but no further information is available, no figures are available; the Local Governments are probably doing their best. But if the Government of India sent out instructions to the Local Governments is not the Honourable Member in a position to state whether the Local Governments have sent any answers to those instructions or not, namely, whether it is possible for them to carry out the instructions or not, or whether they are going to make efforts to Indianise the services in the Customs Department? After all, to borrow the words of my Honourable friend, Mr. K. Ahmed, we are in absolute darkness, we are taking a leap in the dark, as he always says. We do not know anything about what is happening in the matter of the recommendation that the Standing Finance Committee had made; and that is a pertinent and a definite question raised by my Honourable friend Mr. Rangachariar, and, I think, the Government have not been able to give an answer to that. As for the argument adduced by the Honourable Mr. Innes that if a question had been asked by Mr. Rangachariar, the answer would have been supplied, it has to be remembered that when an important body like the Standing Finance Committee makes a recommendation, it is no longer the duty of the member of the Standing Finance Committee to put a question to the Government, but it becomes the duty of the Government to give practical effect to that recommendation. But, as a matter of fact, if I may remind the Honourable Member, I was myself a member of the Standing Finance Committee which undertook to do all that they possibly could to introduce Indianisation in the services.

It is the duty of the Government themselves to see that every effort is made by them and by all Local Governments concerned to put the recommendation into practice. I feel, therefore, that the answer is not yet given and the House would be justified in carrying the motion.

Mr. R. A. Spence (Bombay: European): I move that the question be now put.

(Several Honourable Members: "The question may now be put.")

Mr. S. C. Shahani (Sind Jagirdars and Zamindars: Landholders): Sir, in connection with the cost of establishments in the Customs Department I have got to point out that the salaries of the Assistant Collectors need to be revised, that the scale which has been fixed for these salaries is a very high one. It is Rs. 350 rising to Rs. 1,500. I have to point to the scale of salaries adopted in the Income Tax Department. Collectors of Income Tax all over India draw Rs. 300 to Rs. 900 only, and so far as I can see very competent people, very competent Indians can be secured for this salary. It goes without saying, according to me this is a field in which retrenchments might very reasonably be effected. I pointed this out last year and I was told by the Honourable Member for Commerce and Industries that the appointments were made by competitive examination and therefore this scale could not be reduced. I think it would be wrong to assume that I ever intended that the present incumbents should come to be affected by this proposal that I am making. I am making this proposal with regard to future entrants, and my submission is, and I trust that due notice will be taken of it, my submission is that the scale of salaries needs to be revised here, and by the revision of this scale a substantial saving will be effected.

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: Sir, I should like to take up the point made by Mr. Shahani, namely, that the scale of salaries in the Imperial Customs Service is too high. The scale of salaries (I am speaking from memory) is Rs. 300 rising to Rs. 1,500, plus the usual overseas allowance

Mr. S. C. Shahani: Rs. 350 to Rs. 1,500.

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: That scale is precisely the same scale as that for the Accounts Service. We hold a joint examination. And I do not think it is too high for the Imperial Customs Service because I should like to point out that all our Customs officers live in the most expensive towns of India, the seaports. Every one knows how exceptionally expensive Calcutta, Bombay and other seaports are. On the general question whether, as Indianisation goes on, we should reduce the scales of pay, there is a great deal to be said, but obviously that is a question which has got to be taken up for all the services and not for a single service like the Customs Service. I think every one will agree with that point. I should like to correct a mistake made by Dr. Gour. Dr. Gour said the Public Services Commission had recommended that 50 per cent. of the Customs Service should be recruited in India, and we had taken no action on that. The Public Services Commission was referring entirely to the Imperial Customs Service, and as I have already explained, we have gone beyond its recommendations because 66 per cent. of our recruits are now recruited in India. Then I am accused of not knowing what has been done regarding the Indianisation of the Preventive Service. As a matter of fact, on looking through this file here, I find I have a bit of information which I did not know I had, namely that, when we issued this circular in August 1921, one of our Collectors of Customs, namely, the Collector of Customs for Karachi, wrote back at once and told us that during the last few months he had already taken action in this direction and that he had appointed six Indians to the Preventive Service. I gave another bit of definite information which I do not think my friend Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas noticed, namely, that, as a matter of practice, we recruit one-third of the Preventive Service in Calcutta from Indians. Now you have got to remember that ten years ago there were no Indians at all if you exclude Anglo-Indians from that term, in the Preventive Service. It was thought that the Service was not suited to Indians. You have got to remember that it is extremely hard work; the men have to be out at all hours patrolling. In Calcutta they have to go down the river in boats; they have to board ships at all hours of the night, and it was considered that the service was not suitable to the Indians. The Collector of Customs took up the question of Indianisation first and he began recruiting the Indian officer class and he found them quite satisfactory. That is why we had great pleasure in telling the Standing Committee that we would make efforts in this direction. I am sorry, I have not got the actual results of these efforts, but as I have already explained, all our difficulties arise from the fact that these Customs Houses are under the Local Governments. They are under the administrative control of the Local Governments. When we carry out the recommendation of the Inchcape Committee, which as a matter of fact was our own idea, the recommendation that we should appoint a Commissioner of Customs, a Contoller General of Customs, then the Customs Offices will pass under our direct control and we shall be in a very much better position to answer questions of this kind. As it is a question comes up in a budget debate, and I must confess I forgot all about it, as Dr. Gour has suggested. I forgot all about it and so did my friend Mr. Rangachariar. I did not know what this reduction of Rs. 100 in establishment referred to, and it is very difficult for us to answer questions on particular items in establishments which we have not under our control. I am quite prepared to write round to all Collectors of Customs and to find out from them exactly what has been done in this direction, what proportion of vacancies has been filled up, and if necessary, I will then issue further instructions on the matter.

[Mr. C. A. Innes.]

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar : I would ask for a quarterly report.

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: I do not think a quarterly report is necessary. I am prepared to ask them to let me have this information before the budget debate. Vacancies do not occur in these services so very frequently and it may be a waste of time to have quarterly reports. Every year I will instruct Collectors of Customs to let me have a statement so that, in the budget debate, we may be prepared in the future. In view of that Mr. Rangachariar might well withdraw his motion.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: On that assurance I do not press my motion.

The motion was, by leave of the Assembly, withdrawn.

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary: I beg to move:

"That the provision for Travelling and Tentage Allowance under sub-head 'Madras' be reduced by Rs. 3,600."

Of course the difficulty that I labour under is also the difficulty of the Government as we found earlier in the debate: we have not enough information upon which one could exactly indicate how that Rs. 3,600 is to be cut out of the sum of Rs. 9,600. This item stands on a footing entirely different from that of establishment either permanent or temporary, or even of over-time allowances. One does realise that in doing work of this kind it would be necessary to give some allowances for travelling and for tentage, but there should be further limitation. What is the position to-day? We have to economise and economise all round. I do not mean to say and Government will not take me to mean that a reduction of this Rs. 3,600 will achieve wonders. On the other hand as an earnest of doing all that can possibly be done in the way of getting rid of avoidable expenditure, this small item would be as serviceable as any large item. Sir, scattered over the whole of these Demands is a large provision for allowances of different kinds, and this is one of them. We cannot interfere with establishment straightaway. I have already drawn the attention of the House to the recommendation of the Inchcape Committee on this matter and it has been gone into in the present budget to a certain extent. In the course of the early debate I do not propose to labour that point. The Committee is of opinion, I am sure, the Government are also of opinion that all that can possibly be done to reduce expenditure to which we are not absolutely committed during the course of the year should be done. In connection with charges of this kind the necessity of waiting and exigencies of delay and other considerations of that character cannot be urged. We are met with a peculiar difficulty. Unless we succeed, with the assistance no doubt of Government, in adding out of the "lag" list a crore of rupees to what has been already deducted, we shall be in real difficulty. From that point of view these and various other amendments for which I have made myself responsible will have to be considered. Those of us who have gone into the matter in some detail do believe that another crore of rupees would not be too much for Government to make a present of to us in order that we might meet the situation as we ought to. I don't want, in a small matter like this, to take up much of the time of the House; but it is these small items that can be most easily reduced—items to which we are not absolutely committed, items which can be reduced without any serious detriment to the efficiency of the department. There may be some negligible detriment; retrenchment would mean for the time being, at all events, interference with routine system and probably proportionate inconvenience also. But that is all I should be prepared to admit. But, in regard to a matter like this, and not matters relating to permanent establishment to which we are committed, some assistance may be given to us by the Government.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: Sir, in supporting the motion made by my Honourable friend, Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary, I want to impress upon the Government the necessity of giving their serious consideration to the question of travelling allowances. Sir, not only is the scale of travelling allowances very liberal but it is the common belief that many officers by resorting to unnecessary travelling make certain savings and get an addition to their salary. Sir, as a Member of the Public Accounts Committee, we recently came across a very glaring instance of this kind. An officer of the Archaeological Department

Mr. President: Order, order. We have nothing to do with the Archaeological Department.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: I wanted, Sir, to make out a point that this question of travelling allowances requires the serious consideration of the Government.

Mr. President: The Honourable Member does not seem to be aware that the motion before us is for the reduction of the provision for travelling and tentage allowance in Madras.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: I, therefore, hope that the Government will give their serious consideration to this question.

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: Sir, this particular item of travelling allowance which Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary has suggested for reduction is intended to cover the expense of travelling of the Collector and Assistant Collector when he inspects the out-ports of Madras, and these out-ports are very numerous. However, the Government have already anticipated Sir Deva Prasad in this matter. The Finance Department have made a cut already of 20 per cent. on all travelling allowances in this Budget and I think in other Budgets.

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary: On these figures?

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: On the figures shown in the Budget estimate of last year. They have all been reduced by 20 per cent.

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary: On the figures now presented?

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: For last year. What the Government have done is they have reduced the provision made in the Budget of last year by 20 per cent. in the Budget of this year for travelling allowances. They have made a 20 per cent. cut. And, as far as the Customs is concerned, we do not relish that cut very much because it may mean that our Collector in this particular instance will not be able to do as much travelling and as much inspection of the out-ports as ordinarily he would do. But we recognize that in these days of financial stringency it is necessary to sacrifice something, and so that cut has been made. The original provision made by the Commerce Department in our Budget has been cut down by the Finance Department by 20 per cent. and so, as I say, we have anticipated Sir Deva Prasad's objection.

Mr. S. C. Shahani: Sir, I may point out that in the case of Bombay, I find that travelling allowances have been increased from Rs. 9,900 to Rs. 11,440. I also find that in the case of Sind, travelling allowances have increased from Rs. 3,000 to Rs. 3,040. I do not notice these cuts in the case of these two places, and I beg, therefore, to point this out to the Honourable Member for Commerce and Industry.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That the provision for Travelling and Tentage Allowance under sub-head Madras be reduced by Rs. 3,600."

The motion was negatived.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: Sir, I move:

"That the provision for Overtime and Holiday Allowances under the head Customs be reduced by Rs. 2,00,000."

If Honourable Members will turn to page 8 of the Demands for Grants, they will find that there are three classes of overtime dealt with, what are called (1) Crown overtime, (2) Merchants' overtime, and (3) Sunday and holiday overtime. Crown overtime entirely comes from the revenues of the country. The revenues of the country suffer to the extent of Rs. 1,29,000. It is not recovered from anyone, it comes out of the general revenues. The point is this. We undertake to the public that we will give them 12 hours' service. But we tell our servants, "You work for 9 hours," so that the extra 3 hours have to be found and therefore we pay for the extra three hours by paying this overtime to our own servants whom we employ. Now, in the first place, if really our establishment is not sufficient to carry on the work which we have to do, I do not see why the establishment should not be increased. Look at it from the point of view of the men in the first place, look at it from the point of view of the Government in the next place, and look at it from the point of view of the public in the third place. It was pointed out on the last occasion by my Honourable friend, Mr. Joshi, that, when a man works 9 hours a day, they expect him to do work which is very difficult work, and to induce him, to offer temptations to make him work more is not humanitarian. Looking at it from the point of view of the Government, this more important point impresses me and that is this. Now, supposing, Sir, we were told that we will get an extra allowance of Rs. 50 per day if we stay after 5 p.m. every day, what will be the inducement to us? We will try to shirk as much work as we can during the working hours, pile up our speeches, delay the business and try to stay every day after 5 p.m. Honourable Members may say "No!" I know how many Honourable Members come here, although they are not expected to come here, they come here 7 days beforehand and stay 7 days afterwards because allowances are paid for these days. Human nature being what it is, we always try to make something out of travelling allowances and that sort of thing. Let us not pretend to be above human and therefore, I say when you really place inducements in the way of that man, you say "you work for 9 hours but if you work extra time, I will give you more", the work done during the 9 hours will not be the full work which we are entitled to get out of him. If you want more establishment, get the establishment. What is the meaning of offering this inducement to this man? The public and the Government are likely to suffer by this system continuing. The other thing is that after the 12 hours' work has to go on, and you raise from the public Rs. 4,49,000. That is from the merchants. That is the second item. Add to it this Rs. 1,29,000. That really comes to nearly Rs. 6 lakhs. You pay your establishment Rs. 25 lakhs. I have made a rough calculation. You pay this establishment Rs. 25 lakhs and you pay them over-time Rs. 6 lakhs. If you add to it this Sunday and Holiday fees, which is Rs. 1,29,000, that comes to about Rs. 7,50,000. That is to say, you have an establishment which can do only three-fourths of the work and you are short of establishment to do one-fourth of the work, and to do that one-fourth work, you pay to the same people who have to work for 9 hours a day, and you make them work not only beyond the 9 hours but you make them work on holidays also. We have been preaching so much about labour, about the Geneva Conventions and other Conventions. We have heard that it is inhuman to extract labour like this for more than 54 hours a week and all that. Here are merchants who are apparently prepared to tolerate this system going on. If the Government are really short handed, let them employ more men. There are so many men seeking for employment. We are going to have retrenchment and so many hands are going to be thrown into the streets. Why go on feathering the same nests? In fact, the officers get it. The preventive establishment gets it. I see, Sir, in the distribution scale, that 10 per cent. is given to the superior officers and 40 per cent. goes to the men actually working. That is so, I find, in Calcutta. Whether the officers do extra work, I do not know, or whether it is really an inducement to the officers, because they get a share in the overtime allowances. They get 10 per cent. whereas the actual workers get 40 per cent. and the other 50 per cent. goes somewhere else to charities and other things. Why should we maintain such a system? These are the questions which were raised during the last two years, and the Honourable Mr. Innes undertook to place the whole matter before the Standing Finance Committee. I find, Sir, that in December last the matter was placed before the Standing Finance Committee and the Standing Finance Committee paid this Assembly the compliment of merely recording that note. Did they consider the difficulties which were raised during the debate? These three points were raised distinctly by my Honourable friend Mr. Kamat to my right, by Mr. Joshi and by Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar. Why should charitable institutions, social clubs, be maintained? Why is there this difference in system between port and port? Why this over-time at all? Why offer this temptation in the way of our men? All these questions were raised, and we are no wiser by the matter being placed before the Standing Finance Committee. If the Standing Finance Committee had recorded their decision on each one of these points which had been raised in the debate here, I should not have troubled this Assembly with this vote. As it is, I do not know what the Standing Finance Committee did. They simply recorded the note a copy of which by the courtesy of the Honourable Mr. Innes I happened to look at this morning. I saw the note which was placed before the Standing Finance Committee. But what did the Standing Finance Committee do with reference to these various questions which arise? Is it right that we should collect from the public and maintain charitable institutions—social institutions? Nearly 50 per cent. of the collections on Sunday fees and Holiday fees goes to that, and the Honourable the Finance Member last time (the Honourable Mr. Hailey) told us that he would look into it carefully. What is the result of his looking into I do not know. We have no information on that point. Still, we are told in the note made to the Standing Finance Committee that the Local Governments are looking into the question of these fees. I do think, Sir, that the whole matter must be placed once for all on a satisfactory footing. I daresay there must be some allowance for overtime. I do not deny that there will be necessity for some overtime, but not to this extent of nearly $\frac{1}{2}$ of the work which you put down for over-time. It seems to me that there is something remarkable about it. I think the officers in charge really want to get this overtime and over-payment. They get tentage allowance; they get motor car allowance; they get other allowances; leave allowance, salary allowance, and other things, and in addition to these, they get also overtime. I fail to see why we should not employ more men. If we are short-handed, let us employ more people. There are so many people going about the country in search of employment. I can assure you that. Therefore, if there is money—Rs. 8 lakhs—to spare, why should we not spend at least Rs. 6 lakhs in entertaining more establishment? I am not a merchant myself. I am not unloading or loading. But I look at it from this broad point of view, and I hope, Sir, the matter will be satisfactorily settled. With these words I move my motion:

[Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar.]

"That the provision for Overtime and Holiday Allowances under the head Customs be reduced by Rs. 2,00,000."

Mr. R. A. Spence: Sir, I am sorry I am anticipating Sir Campbell Rhodes speaking. We generally listen with great pleasure when Mr. Rangachariar does speak. But on this occasion he told us that he was not a merchant. If he had been, Sir, he would not have spoken as he did and it is because he is speaking of what he really does not know that we have not listened to him with pleasure. As Sir Campbell is more competent to deal with this matter and as I see he is willing to speak, I will leave the rest of the matter to him.

Mr. Manmohandas Ramji (Indian Merchants' Chamber and Bureau: Indian Commerce). Sir, in this connection, I may say that the practice generally is that when a ship is to be emptied in a given time, and some holiday or some Sunday intervenes, they have to complete the discharging of the ship or the filling of the ship. It is a matter of great convenience to the authorities and to the merchants to expedite matters in this direction, and therefore it is that overtime in connection with this work is charged and is willingly paid by merchants connected with the transaction to the staff. It is for the extra work, work which cannot be delayed, that this is charged, and I hope this House will not accept this motion.

Sir Campbell Rhodes (Bengal: European): Sir, I have great sympathy with what Mr. Rangachariar has said about overtime in general. There is a temptation, when a merchant pays overtime, for his employees to slack during the day in order to get overtime at night. I think this House may be sure, as Mr. Rangachariar has pointed out, that when an employee has got the temptation of overtime, he can very often slack during the day. But the position is slightly different as regards the Customs House Preventive Officers, for it is not within his power to decide how long he will work. A steamer comes into port and desires quick discharge. Say it is unloading salt. There must be a Preventive Officer on board and the speed with which that officer works is decided entirely by the speed with which the salt is unloaded. The steamer is there to do all the work it can and therefore the Preventive Officer must keep working at the same pace. As a matter of fact, the work is very light. It is work of supervision and seeing that the salt is properly weighed over the side and there is no hardship on a man working even as long as 12 hours. The scale may be stopped for an hour or two during the day for repairs in which case, though he is there, he has nothing to do. But the point I wish to make to the House is this, that it is not within his control to slacken off. Mr. Rangachariar pointed out that if there is overtime regularly paid, then a larger staff might be employed. I may point out that that would be a very extravagant way of meeting the difficulty from the point of view of the country. Steamers do not come in regularly every day to discharge a fixed number of tons every day and therefore it is desirable that these men should do a little extra work when business presses and then the staff so to speak, can be automatically reduced when times are slack. Under Mr. Rangachariar's scheme we should frequently have periods during which half the number of customs officers would have nothing to do and I suggest that the moral effect of that would be even worse. As regards Sunday and holiday fees, these are fines to discourage work on Sundays and holidays and they are paid by the merchants and shippers and they are quite willing to pay anything they can to what Mr. Rangachariar calls charitable objects. In Calcutta a portion of the Sunday fees has gone to hospitals to pay for the seamen who come out and have to go into hospital, and personally I think that is a worthy cause to which the money is devoted. On these grounds I oppose this amendment.

[Sir Campbell Rhodes.]

Dr. Nand Lal (West Punjab: Non-Muhammadan): I support this amendment. The Government should, before keeping such a sort of establishment, see whether this kind of system is not creating some sort of temptation in the way of the employees of the Government. Government's attention should always be focussed on this question and Government itself should not give any opportunity to any of its employees to be tempted or to stoop low. Now, I ask the Government Benches, under the present system is it not the strongest possible temptation in the way of these servants to idle away their time? (A Voice: "No, no. Certainly not.") To my mind they will not employ their minds so much on the work as they will anticipate that they will be drawing extra money for their overt-time. I think it cannot be denied. Mr. Spence may say, "No." Other merchants may say, "No," but it is the fact and it ought to be confronted and cannot be denied. These workmen are sure to be tempted as I have stated. The other point which prompts me to be in favour of this amendment is this that if they are made to work on Sundays they will have no time for taking rest at all. During the week days, that is, six days of the week, they will not be able to work so hard as they would be doing otherwise, because it is a fundamental principle which does not require great elaboration and argument that a human being after hard work requires some sort of rest. After having worked for six days it is quite natural that these workmen would like to take rest. Now they are told, "You should not take rest. We shall pay you for Sundays and other holidays even". They will not take rest but they will work on these rest days and pocket the money, and on the working days they will try to idle away their time to a certain extent. Therefore, on these two grounds this system which has been adopted by Government seems to be one which should be condemned. The other point which requires appreciation is why a distinction should be made in favour of this Department alone. This distinction will naturally create an idea in the minds of the employees of the other Departments of the Government that they should also try to avail themselves of such allowances though they have not got work of a similar type, but all the same that very idea will prompt them not to apply themselves to work to that extent to which they would have done if they had not had that idea in their minds. You will kindly see on page 1, we have got overtime and holiday allowance for Madras. On page 2 we have got over-time and holiday allowance for temporary establishment. On page 3 we have got over-time and holiday allowance. On page 4 the same thing and on page 5 the same thing. The aggregate total of this allowance is a very appalling figure which should not be parted with by Government. On this ground also this expenditure should be condemned and especially at this juncture when we are in this financial embarrassment we cannot afford to allow ourselves to spend money in this fashion. (Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas: "It is paid by the merchants.") It is not paid by the merchants, it is paid by the Government, Mr. Jamnadas. Kindly see the remarks . . .

Mr. President: The Honourable Member must address the Chair.

Dr. Nand Lal: Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas says it is paid by the merchants. May I invite his attention to the remarks on page 8 of this Book:

"These are fees paid to the staff by Government for overtime work and not recoverable from merchants."

(Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas: "Am I right or you?") (A Voice: "Address the Chair.") Then the other explanation which is given by the Government is this:

"as the work for which they are earned is performed during the free service hours but is in excess of the prescribed hours, viz., 9 hours a day or 54 hours a week. Such fees are also necessitated by the performance of work outside the free service hours or on holidays and Sundays."

(Mr. R. A. Spence: "May I ask the Honourable Member to read the whole of it?") (Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas: "Will you finish all the footnotes?") A certain payment is made by the merchants no doubt, but that is set apart. As Mr. Rangachariar has said, I agree with him that a certain amount is charged, but when it is realised it is set apart, namely, it goes to the income side. It is the Government then that pays it subsequently. I am not discussing the source. I am discussing who is the paymaster. The paymaster is the Government and the merchants are not the paymaster. Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas's opinion, I am sorry, does not appear to be correct technically.

In opposition two arguments have been advanced that on some occasions Government requires employees and workmen and at that time there is a great rush and it will be extremely difficult to keep a permanent staff to cope with such sort of work. The other argument which has been advanced on behalf of Government is this—that if you keep a special staff for this purpose and for these hours only, it will prove very expensive. I think these two arguments can very easily be answered. The first argument can be met with this reply. It has been conceded on behalf of Government that these ships do not come every day and that it happens occasionally. This point has been conceded by Government and other speakers. I am availing myself of their arguments. For this purpose other workmen could be employed to do temporary work, so that the Government employees may not be tempted to idle away their time for which they are paid and this system of making allowances on holidays and making extra payments for overtime is not sound in principle. So on all these grounds I support the amendment heartily.

Mr. Darcy Lindsay (Bengal: European): My Honourable friend Mr. Rangachariar has made a reference to the Standing Finance Committee and he has taken them to task for not doing their duty. The Standing Finance Committee had placed before them a very able memorandum prepared by my namesake Mr. H. A. F. Lindsay in reference to the discussion that took place in this House last March and I am quite sure that if this memorandum had been placed in the hands of all the Members of the Assembly this motion for reduction would never have been made. Government in dealing with the matter abbreviated the memorandum as appears in the footnote on page 8 and which has been referred to only in part by my friend Dr. Nand Lal. It seems to me that there is a misunderstanding on the part of some of the Members about these fees. As Mr. Rangachariar has pointed out, there are three types of fees. One is for the extra three hours the men may be kept at work in addition to the regulation nine hours and they receive an allowance of so much per hour for this overtime. It is very much cheaper to keep the same man employed on the steamer than to send down another man to relieve him. A second charge is the merchant's overtime fees. This money is entirely paid by the merchant, the shipowner or agent who wants to get the steamer away by a particular time. Unfortunately, my friend Dr. Nand Lal comes from a part of India where they have only canals and no sea water ways and therefore no experience of tides but the river Hooghly is a tidal river where steamers of heavy draught can only get away at certain tides and it is most essential unless the steamer is to remain for possibly another fortnight, that there should be overtime work at night, on holidays and on Sundays when occasion arises. The men are paid for this special work and the money recovered from the merchants or the owner of the ship. It does not at all follow that the same man who works on a Sunday will be put to work on the Monday which is one of the points made by my Honourable friend Dr. Nand Lal. The Customs authorities have a considerable staff at their disposal who are not working every day—the work being dependant on the number of ships in port and there are always available a certain number for extra work who have to be paid their monthly wage whether or not they are put on to this extra work on Sundays and holidays. Then my Honourable friend Mr. Rangachariar appeared to think that it was at the option of the Preventive Officer to secure the three hours' overtime by possibly neglecting his work during the day. This I think has been very satisfactorily explained by my Honourable friend Sir Campbell Rhodes. I can only tell the House that if this reduction were made it would most seriously interfere with shipping and the general trade of the country. We could not get our ships away in time or load and unload them with expedition. Consequently the expenditure on importing and exporting goods would increase. On these grounds I ask the House to reject this amendment.

[Mr. Darcy Lindsay.]

(Voices: "The question may be put.")

Mr. President: The question is that the question be put.

The motion was adopted.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That the provision for Overtime and Holiday allowances under the head Customs be reduced by Rs. 2,00,000."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. Harchandrai Vishindas (Sind: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I move:

"That the provision for Bombay under the head Customs be reduced by Rs. 100."

The point I wish to make in this Resolution is one which will interest the House and which I beg to submit for the guidance of the Government in the future. From the very nature of the amendment I have proposed it would appear that I do not really want a regular reduction of Rs. 100 but I have to refer to certain questions of principle and of policy for the Government to take into consideration. I shall be very brief in making my suggestion to the Government departments by pointing out what is the particular question that I wish to refer to. Now I am concerned with the province of Sind. Therefore I shall not take up the time of the House in any way by referring to the other provinces. The Sind Division appears at page 4 of the Book of Demands and Sind as you are all aware is a part of the Bombay Presidency, so that the main sub-head under which I am speaking begins at page 2. Bombay. What I want to point out is that—and the point was incidentally referred to just now by my friend Mr. Shahani,—and as that was with reference to remarks upon another point I do not think I am wrong in repeating it as it now comes under a regulation motion. Now, the pay of the Assistant Collectors in Sind appears to be, as at page 4, Rs. 350 rising to Rs. 750. My point is that such a heavy pay is not at all necessary in the case of the Assistant Collectors. By way of analogy I would refer to

Mr. President: The question of the pay of the establishment has already been discussed. If the Honourable Member wished to raise the question he should have raised it on the reduction moved by Mr. Rangachariar, when the House discussed the general question underlying the pay of the establishment.

Mr. Harchandrai Vishindas: I submit that I am referring to a specific item. So far as the general question is concerned that has been dealt with. What I say is that although in regard to the pay the Government has to consider several counter-considerations in fixing it, it need not be more than Rs. 350 to Rs. 900.

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: May I point out that this is an Imperial Service and there is a uniform scale of pay in all Ports for Assistant Collectors and therefore Mr. Harchandrai Vishindas's point is not a good one. This particular point, moreover, has been discussed and has been discussed by Mr. Shahani.

Mr. Harchandrai Vishindas: Yes, that is what I said

Mr. President: If the Honourable Member acknowledges that it was discussed by Mr. Shahani and Mr. Shahani was not stopped by the Chair, then he is out of order.

Mr. Harchandrai Vishindas: Very good, Sir. I won't say anything more on this particular point. My other point is that the Assistant Collectors, Appraisers and Preventive Officers have all been lumped together. It would be much more enlightening if they were separately mentioned. I mean to say, if the pay of each grade was separately mentioned. As it is, I am speaking subject to correction,—in the first place the word "Inspector" is rather a misnomer and should be altered to "Examiner"—the number of Appraisers is 13, including one Head Appraiser, and the number of Examiners is 15. The rest are Preventive Officers. The pay of the Head Appraiser is Rs. 700 a month, that of the other Appraisers is Rs. 200 rising by Rs. 25 annually to Rs. 600; and that of Examiners . . .

Mr. President: Order, order. We have had that interesting information already from the Honourable Member from Bengal. Unless the Honourable Member can bring his remarks into order with special reference to the circumstances of Sind, he is not in order.

Mr. Harchandrai Vishindas: I am referring to that, Sir. I also said that my remarks would not be in order unless they were specific, and these remarks are all applicable to Sind, not to the general question, because the scales of pay in other provinces would be different. But if the Chair disallows me I will sit down. But I submit that my remarks apply especially to Sind. Now, the pays in Bombay are different from those in Sind in so far that in Bombay the Head Appraiser gets Rs. 800, every other Appraiser Rs. 250 rising by Rs. 20 to Rs. 450 and then by Rs. 25 to Rs. 675, Examiners Rs. 150—10—350 and Head Examiner Rs. 450.

[Mr. Harchandrai Vishindas.]

The point I am going to make in this connection is one that has not been previously raised and it is that there is no reason why the Sind establishment should be placed on a different footing from that of the establishment in Bombay when the cost of living and house rent, as appears from various Government reports, is very nearly the same. I refer first to Mr. Findlay Shirras' Labour Gazette and also to Mr. Datta's inquiry regarding rent and prices in Karachi. So my point is, with regard to this particular question, that the level of pay in the two places should be the same. Since January 1922 the lower paid men have in most cases been given an increase of 5 to 10 per cent. and some from 20 to 40 per cent., although the Government of India has authorised the Local Government to give these men a maximum promotion of 50 per cent., which has not yet been carried out. That point should be taken into consideration by Government. Government have recognized the principle of one promotion for every year's service in the case of Preventive Officers in the same office, but the present Appraisers and Examiners, the majority of whom began their life as clerks, will not be able to rise to their maximum unless one-third of their services in the ministerial grade is also counted. The majority of the Preventive Officers began life as Preventive Officers and so one promotion for every year's service has resulted in their getting 18 promotions for 18 years' service, while Examiners and Appraisers with even about 30 years' total service are getting Rs. 150 and Rs. 400 respectively. Sir, this point also of the equitable regulation of promotions, both in the interests of economy and in the interests of the men, should be taken into consideration. That is all I have to say.

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: Sir, I understand that the first point raised by Mr. Harchandrai Vishindas was that he would like a little more detailed information under the head "pay of establishment for Sind." Is that so? (Mr. Harchandrai Vishindas: "Yes.") I will certainly see what we can do in that direction.

The other point raised by Mr. Vishindas was that we discriminate unfairly between the Custom House staff in Karachi and the Custom House staff in Bombay. As I have explained already to the House on more than one occasion, these Custom Houses are under the administrative control of the Government of Bombay. They send up their proposals to us and we examine them. In this case, the Bombay Government did not think it necessary to give the same rate of pay, or the same scales of pay in Karachi as they give in Bombay; and as far as the Government of India is concerned, we must accept the view expressed in a matter like that by a responsible Local Government.

As regards the next point, namely, as to how these men were brought on to the new scale of pay, it is rather a complicated matter and, at the request of the Local Government, we left them to deal with the matter. I think that is the only explanation I can give on that point.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That the provision for Bombay under the head Customs be reduced by Rs. 100."

The motion was negatived.

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary: Sir, I move:

"That the provision for Leave Allowance under Bombay be reduced by Rs. 22,000."

This is another direction in which we seek for retrenchment. Not only here but elsewhere have we spoken about travelling and tentage allowance as being capable of suitable reduction. Contingencies can also be similarly dealt with. The Inchcape Committee has made quite clear what had long been clear to us that our leave rules are—I shall not call them extravagant—but far too generous and some of our avoidable expenditure is due to that. With the Government of India it is not quite like a Bengal household used to be obliged to do not very long ago, viz., to keep up two establishments, one to get ill with malaria and the other to work and wait for an attack of malaria. That is sometimes necessary, but I do not think that with increased facilities for travel for going home and other conveniences the leave rules need be as liberal as they are now—and the Inchcape Committee has drawn pointed attention to that. I do not mean to say that people should work themselves to death and should not have any leave, and generous leave also, but the impression all around is . . .

Mr. President: Order, order. Are these leave allowances paid under rules made by the Customs Department or under general rules made by the Government of India?

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: I understand that the allowances are for leave enjoyed in India, which leave is granted under the general rules of the Government of India.

Mr. President: The question of the amendment of the leave rules cannot very well be brought in here. The Honourable Member must take other opportunity of discussing them.

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary: I shall not discuss the question of principle; I am now on the question of staff, and I submit that things should be so arranged that with lesser staff the work of the Department can go on, so that the leave allowances to which my motion refers may be minimized.

Sir Montagu Webb: Greater staff?

Mr. President: The question is:

"That the provision for leave allowances under Bombay be reduced by Rs. 22,000."

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: Sir, I feel it rather difficult to deal with a Motion like this, for, obviously, if we are going to reduce leave allowances, it can only be done by altering the rules, by making the rules less liberal. The provision here is the best estimate we can make of the amount we are likely to expend during the year in paying allowances to people on our establishment who are on leave in India. I do not think it is right that, as a method of retrenchment, we should refuse our officers the leave which they have earned and which is due to them under the Fundamental Rules. You have got to remember these allowances for leave are for all our establishments, officers as well as men, when that leave is taken in India; and if the leave is due to them, and if they require it, whether it be for sickness or private reasons, then I think we ought to give it, and I think that our Custom House establishments are already overworked, very greatly overworked: indeed my own opinion is that if Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary's idea is that we should definitely restrict the leave of our establishments during the course of this year on account of financial stringency, well, my own opinion is that that will probably be false economy, it will probably mean that the men will break down and will have sickness. In these circumstances I hope Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary will see that the question which he has raised is contingent upon the alteration of the rules, and that he will not move this reduction in respect of a particular service like the Customs service.

[Mr. C. A. Innes.]

Mr. W. M. Hussanally: Sir, on a point of order. I should like to know from the Honourable the Commerce Member whether a motion for reduction of this kind does not force the Government to reconsider the rules. I believe that this provision of leave allowances is provided for under each head of expenditure in each Department, and if that be so, a motion for the reduction of one grant will compel Government to consider the amendment of the rules—the leave rules, I mean, and if that be so, the Motion will be perfectly in order?

Mr. President: The Honourable Member is putting the cart before the horse.

Mr. R. A. Spence: May I ask the Honourable Commerce Member for some information, Sir? I see that these leave allowances that we are discussing only occur on page 3 under Bombay. May I ask what happens to the leave allowances in the case of Bengal and Madras and Burma? They must be necessary surely, in which case it seems to be only a matter of detail how they are put, but these leave allowances which figure under Bombay do not figure under any of the other Presidencies, and therefore if we were so unfortunate as to have this motion for a cut carried, it seems to me that Bombay would suffer and the rest of the Presidencies would go scot-free.

Mr. A. V. V. Aiyar: Sir, the explanation is that these estimates are prepared by different officers. The Bengal estimates are prepared by the Accountant General, Bengal, the Bombay ones by the Accountant General, Bombay, and the Madras ones by the Accountant General, Madras, and so on. Some people mix up these leave allowances along with the pay of the ordinary establishments, and some people show it separately and say that it represents leave allowances; that is the simple explanation why there is no definite provision in other provinces.

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: I think, Sir, it may be to the convenience of the House if, with your permission, I make the statement that the Government of India have for some time had under consideration the desirability of reconsidering the whole of their leave rules and have been waiting for the Report of the Retrenchment Committee to do so, and intend forthwith to institute an inquiry into that subject.

Mr. J. Chaudhuri: May I ask Mr. Aiyar that in future uniformity should be observed in furnishing similar details under each sub-head in each Presidency with regard to the Customs estimates for facility of comparison?

Mr. A. V. V. Aiyar: We will do our best, Sir; but the Budget is prepared in such a hurry that such small matters I would ask the House to overlook.

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary: Having regard to what the Honourable the Finance Member and the Honourable Member for Commerce have said, I do not wish to press this motion. What has been explained by Mr. Aiyar shows our difficulties in Budget time. The Government, he says, had to hurry the Budget which accounts for its imperfections—Government had 365 days, and we had 5 days.

The motion for reduction was, by leave of the Assembly, withdrawn.

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary: In connection with my motion *No. 30, Sir, dealing with commodities of a very succulent and luscious nature one would like to have some explanation. Mr. Kabeer-ud-din Ahmed will probably be satisfied both as to quantity and quality. When we are obliged to neglect important research of other kinds, I do not know whether research in edible oysters ought to find a place in this Budget. I should like to ask for a word of explanation, and then perhaps I shall see my way to withdraw the motion.

Mr. President: So far as I see, no provision has been made.

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: I think that Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary has omitted to notice that though there does appear an entry of expenditure of Rs. 1,675 on account of improvement of edible oyster culture in Sind, there also appears later on the page a deduct entry—"contribution from contractors on account of edible oyster culture in Sind, Rs. 1,675", and so the two entries cancel each other, which I do not think Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary has noticed. What the entry was I am afraid I cannot explain in a moment; I remember I noticed it last year in the Budget, and I enquired why it appeared in the Customs Budget, and for accounts reasons, they apparently retained it in the budget, but as I explained, they have made a deduct entry which cancels the provision.

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary: Sir, I should like to withdraw my motion.

Mr. R. A. Spence: Before the motion is withdrawn, might I ask Government that some provision be made in the next Budget, Customs or other budget, with a view to doing something to improve the edible oyster culture in Karachi?

Babu Braja Sundar Das (Orissa Division: Non-Muhammadan): Sir, I am feeling extremely diffident to extend my pruning knife to this very important branch of the financial pagoda tree of the Government of India. The Incheape Committee have not dared to do it. There are certain things which seem to me inexplicable. Therefore, Sir, I venture to bring forward this motion† of mine. With an apology of a Customs Department in my own province, I mean Bihar and Orissa, I do not pretend to claim any knowledge in the travelling, halting, worshipping, talking, eating, drinking and other contingent allowances that have been just talked over. But, Sir, there are other things for which I propose this reduction. I know that any cut that I might propose in this Department will hit my province very hard, because, fortunately or unfortunately, my province has no non-votable or untouchable item to its credit. You will find from the figures that 01 per cent. has been reduced in the case of votable items in the other provinces. My province claims a reduction of 25 per cent. as an effect of the retrenchment that has already been made. But the figures which have been presented to us during the last three years tempt me

* "That the provision for Improvement of Edible Oyster Culture in Sind under Sind Division be omitted."

† "That the demand under the head 'Customs' be reduced by Rs. 11,31,564."

[Babu Braja Sundar Das.]

to ask a few questions of the Government Member in charge of this Department. If we look up the non-voted item in 1921, it was Rs. 42,600 in the Budget, and this year in the proposed Budget it is Rs. 5,51,600. The voted item was Rs. 7,67,400 and this year it is Rs. 7,05,400. It will take a good deal of time to read all the figures. In 1921-22 the non-voted item in Madras was 42,600; Bombay Rs. 1,13,700, Bengal Rs. 69,000, Burma Rs. 28,800, Bihar and Orissa nil, Punjab Rs. 23,000. So the total non-voted item in 1921 was Rs. 4,68,900, and in the present Budget, total item under the head non-voted—

		Rs.
The Government of Madras		5,51,600
"	Bombay	1,13,700
"	Bengal	69,000
"	Burma	28,800
"	Bihar and Orissa	Nil
"	Punjab	23,000
"	Central Provinces	Nil
Total		9,14,600

It is clear that the non-voted item has gone up by about 105 per cent. while the voted item when compared with the figure of 1921, will be seen, has come down by '01 per cent. as an effect of the retrenchment proposals that we made in the Assembly. Here, Sir, the Retrenchment Committee make no recommendation whatsoever excepting one item, that the Commissioner of Customs in Bombay should be cut down. They say that the strength and pay of the staff at the various Customs Houses should be examined with a view to economy. That is their recommendation. But they have not gone further to examine the question on its merits. We see from the figures that I have already quoted that the expenditure under the head "Customs" is going up very much from year to year and particularly on the non-voted side. But proportionately there has not been a rise in the income. We should like to know how, in what proportion and how long this increase will continue, whether it will ever stop, or whether it will be an ever-growing concern that will swell further from year to year just as the non-voted item has doubled and trebled itself in the course of two or three years. We have been asked during the last three years to meet deficits by paying extra taxations. As an ordinary tax-payer, I should like to demand an explanation. Though I may not touch this non-voted item, it is fair that I should demand an explanation from the Government as to why and how the expenditure under this head is going up out of all proportion and particularly I would ask the Member in charge to say as to why in Madras the non-voted item Rs. 42,600 in 1921 has gone up to Rs. 5,51,600 this year. This is unintelligible to me, Sir, and I think it is unintelligible as well to many of my colleagues. We should at least know why this non-voted item goes up every year. Then, Sir, allow me to give the reason for reduction that I propose. The Honourable the Finance Member appealed to us to make sacrifices by consenting to pay an extra tax. I suggest that instead of paying an extra tax, we would rather try to keep the expenditure up to a certain level that was in vogue in 1921. The reduction that I have proposed, namely, Rs. 11,31,564, is the figure, which if deducted, will give us the actual expenditure for 1921-22. So with these few words, I want to be enlightened by the Government as to the reason and nature of the enhancement of the non-voted item from year to year, where it will stop and in what proportion it grows.

and then I ask Government to cut this item to this extent, so that we can arrive at the figure that we had in 1921-22 and be saved from paying an extra tax.

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: Sir, the first question asked by my Honourable friend related to the increase in non-votable expenditure in Madras. The answer to that question is simple. It will be found on page 2. The Honourable Member will see that since 1921-22 our assignments to Travancore and Cochin have increased from Rs. 2,87,000 to a budget provision of Rs. 5 lakhs. That increase is entirely beyond our control. It is due to the increase in the trade at Cochin port and the consequent increase in the receipts at Cochin port; and by the Inter-portal Trade Commission of 1895 a proportion of those customs receipts has to go to the Native States of Cochin and Travancore. Sir, the House will see that this trade increase is entirely beyond our control. As regards the general suggestion that, in view of the financial stringency, we should cut our expenditure on the Customs Department down to a figure which obtained in 1921-22, I can only say that I hope that the House will do no such thing. The Honourable Member complained of our constantly increasing expenditure. Has he looked at the constantly increasing revenue? Does he realise that our revenue under the head Customs since 1921-22 has increased from 34 crores of rupees to an expected revenue of 45 crores in the coming year? This increase of revenue inevitably means a great increase of work of our Customs staff. Merchants tend to criticise appraisements more. It is matter of great importance to them. The Preventive Officers have more smuggling to deal with. Merchants generally are more keen about their rights and there is more correspondence, and where your customs revenue is increasing year after year, as our customs revenue is doing, it inevitably means a considerable increase of staff. After all we are collecting this very large revenue for the Government of India at a cost of 1·7 per cent., and I think the House will agree with me that that is not a very excessive cost. The Inchcape Committee has examined this and no cuts to recommend. It has suggested that we should inquire whether the staff cannot be reduced at the different Customs Houses. Naturally we shall take up that suggestion, but I should not be honest if I were to express any hope that we are likely to be able to reduce that staff. I do not mean to say that we shall begin the inquiry with a prejudice against it, but our experience shows that our customs officers are continually coming up to us pointing out grave breakdowns in their offices owing to increase of work and the inadequacy of staff. We have had more than one breakdown in more than one Customs House entirely owing to the inadequacy of staff. In these circumstances I hope that the House will not accept this reduction.

Mr. S. C. Shahani: Sir, I rise to point out that the figures that are given to us in these demands for grants do not show that our receipts go on increasing from year to year . . .

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: Page 296, Mr. Shahani.

Mr. S. C. Shahani: I see, Sir, that the total revenue in 1921-22 was Rs. 34·40 crores. In the year 1922-23 it was estimated at 45·41 crores, and actually amounted to 42·30 crores, but this is due to the revised schedule. If you will look into the figures for 1923-24 you will find that there has been a slight decrease.

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: That is compared with the estimate, not the actual.

Mr. S. C. Shahani: We are dealing now with the estimate. It is not estimated that the receipts will be larger, and yet, if you will look into the expenditure figures, you will find that the expenditure has increased from 70,01,000 to 76,28,000. Deduct from that 69,000 and it comes to Rs. 75,59,000. I find that the expenditure increased by 5,58,000. According to me there is no justification for this increase, especially when we have a deficit of $4\frac{1}{2}$ crores. I would no doubt be inclined to reduce my cut of 8 lakhs to Rs. 5,58,000, but so far as the figure of 5,58,000 goes, I see absolutely no justification for this increase, and I am going to support it by reference to a few figures which have attracted my attention here in Demand No. 1. The Appraisers, Preventive Officers, clerks, etc., were shown at 265, and this number has increased to 269, and I find that quite a new provision has been made in respect to the entertainment of 3 Appraisers, 1 Auditor and 3 clerks in the Presidency of Madras. I find that in Bombay the rewards are estimated to increase from Rs. 36,400 to a lakh. This increase again, according to me, is unjustifiable. Coming to my own Province, I find that the number of Preventive Officers has been increased. I have made inquiries and I find that if we reduce the number by about 5, we would not in any manner suffer so far as our collections go. The Government have provided sergeants for a very careful scrutiny of the Harbour of Karachi and I understand that thefts are prevented by them, and also smuggling to a great extent. If this is so, the increase in the number of Inspectors and Preventive Officers here is also according to me unjustifiable. I have also to draw attention to one other thing, namely, that officers are being imported from the Revenue Department. I suppose that accounts for the deputation allowances from other departments. This custom of importing officers, to whom deputation allowances have to be given, I think ought to be discontinued. I have also to point out that the maximum pay of the Head Appraiser in Calcutta and in Bombay ought to be reduced, and the maximum pay that is allowed to the Appraisers in all Presidencies should be nearly the same. With these remarks, Sir, I resume my seat.

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: Sir, may I ask if Mr. Shahani moved an amendment? Because the motion before the House is a reduction of 11 lakhs. I understood that Mr. Shahani only wished to reduce the figure to last year's figure.

Mr. S. C. Shahani: I want to reduce it to 5 lakhs.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That the demand under the head Customs be reduced by Rs. 11,31,564."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. Manmohandas Ramji: Sir, I see that this demand under the head 'Customs' was passed in last year's budget for Rs. 60,49,000 in the voted portion. In the revised estimates, we find that it has come to Rs. 61,60,000. There is, therefore, an increase of Rs. 86,000 after allowing for exchange of Rs. 25,000, according to the revised estimates. Now, let us take the total, both votable and non-votable. The total, according to the revised estimates, is Rs. 70,01,000 and the total according to the budget estimate for 1922-23 after allowing for exchange at the revised estimate rate comes to Rs. 67,53,000. There is thus an increase of Rs. 2,48,000. Now, as against this, the demand before the House is

Rs. 66,17,000, which is an increase by Rs. 4,57,000 over the voted portion of the revised estimates for 1922-23, and, if we look at the total, which is Rs. 75,59,000, we find that the increase over the total of the revised estimate is Rs. 5,58,000, and that this total expenditure of Rs. 75,59,000 is Rs. 8,09,000 more than what we had originally budgeted for in March last year after allowing for exchange at the rate according to the revised estimate.

With regard, Sir, to a point raised by my friend here, the Honourable Mr. Shahani, that there is a proposal to increase the sum under Rewards. My view on this subject is that that system ought to be abolished and no rewards ought to be paid. That in itself works very hard and therefore it is a system which ought to be deprecated. Let us look at the Revenue, page 296. We find that there is not much difference between the Budget estimates for 1922-23 and 1923-24.

Mr. President: Order, order. I cannot allow this question to be referred to successively on every amendment that is moved. If Honourable Members desired to take part in the debate, they should have discussed it on the motion of Babu Braja Sundar Das.

Mr. Manmohandas Ramji. With these remarks, Sir, I move my amendment:

"That the demand under the head Customs be reduced by Rs. 4,00,000."

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: Sir, the increase in the budget for 1923-24 over the budget for 1922-23 is due to various miscellaneous items. There is an increase of Rs. 4,36,000 under the pay of establishments. Now, partly that is because we have had to make provision for Rs. 80,000 for 3 more Assistant Collectors. The reason why we have had to do that is that, so far, in the Imperial Customs Service, we have had no leave reserve at all. We have merely been allowed 3 probationers. The Public Services Commission recommended a proper leave reserve but for various reasons we postponed creating a leave reserve until we were absolutely compelled to do so. The House will see that a probationer makes a very bad form of leave reserve as, when a man is on probation he is not fitted to take charge of a branch of a Custom House. That has been passed, as all the new items of expenditure—I wish to emphasise that—have been passed by the Standing Finance Committee. Then there has been a certain augmentation of the preventive and ministerial staff in the various Custom Houses. They have been explained in the foot-notes to the demand. Let me take one. We have had to augment the preventive staff in the land customs in Madras, the reason being that we found that very large quantities of gold thread and matches were being smuggled across the land frontier from Pondicherry into Madras. The matter got so bad that people who imported in the ordinary course gold thread found that it no longer paid them to do it. Consequently, we have now increased the staff. Then again, we have made provision in the budget for one lakh for allowances for leave salaries in India. Last year this was not shown.

The next point that has been taken is about Rewards. Mr. Manmohandas Ramji complains that the reward system is a bad system. That may be so or it may not be so, but, especially when you have your customs rates as high as they are now, you do find dishonest merchants trying to evade the customs and you do find in practice that the practice of giving rewards does give an incentive to your Preventive Officers properly to discharge their duties. Some very bad cases of smuggling of feathers out of India against prohibition have recently been detected. Fines have been imposed amounting to over a lakh of rupees and there are many other cases of ordinary traffic. Under the Sea Customs Act, we are entitled to and we do give a proportion of these fines as rewards to the men.

[Mr. C. A. Innes.]

I do not think I need go through all the items one by one. I need only say that each separate case of new expenditure has been placed before the Standing Finance Committee and has been passed by it. In addition to that, owing to the incremental system of pay which obtains in our Custom Houses, there must be some increase in the budget and as I said before, we are collecting a very large revenue out of a very small rise. I hope the House will not make this reduction.

Mr. N. M. Samarth (Bombay: Nominated Non-Official): Before we vote on this amendment, may I be permitted to ask what is really meant by the figures on page 3 of this revised schedule of demands supplied to us? On that page is given the statement comparing the budget estimates of civil expenditure for 1923-24 as now revised with the budget for 1922-23 and the reductions recommended therein by the Retrenchment Committee. Now, the second and third columns of that statement show that in regard to customs the budget figure for 1922-23 which the Retrenchment Committee took was Rs. 72,74,000 and the reduction recommended by the Retrenchment Committee therein was Rs. 47,000. Therefore, the recommendation of the Retrenchment Committee is that the figure of expenditure on Customs for the year 1923-24—if I am wrong I hope to be corrected—shall be Rs. 72,27,000. Now, take the budget figure for 1923-24 as given in the estimates presented on 1st March, namely, 77,19,000. Therein a further reduction on distribution of lump deduction is made of Rs. 69,000. And, thereafter, in the sixth column you get the figure as revised, namely, Rs. 76,50,000. Now, in the seventh column there is a figure—3,76, which is supposed to be the reduction made in the revised budget for 1923-24. Now, really it means that it is an addition to the figure for 1922-23 assumed by the Retrenchment Committee. I take it that the Retrenchment Committee—if there is any meaning in these figures—took the figures for the Budget of 1922-23 under Customs expenditure as Rs. 72,74,000. You then put in the Retrenchment Committee's reduction; only Rs. 47,000 out of this shall be deducted. Therefore they recommended that the budget expenditure for 1923-24 was to be reduced by Rs. 3,76,000. Instead of which, the real budget expenditure is Rs. 76,50,000 with the result that the expenditure is Rs. 4,23,000 over the figure recommended by the Retrenchment Committee. Am I right or am I not?

Mr. A. F. L. Brayne (Finance Department: Nominated Official): Sir, I may say that the Retrenchment Committee, when working on the figures for 1922-23, did not take into account various new expenditure which may have been given sanction to during the year. They merely worked on the estimate and unless they became aware that some new items had been given sanction to and new expenditure incurred they were not in a position to take these into account in estimating a reduction. For example, on the last page of their report they say that it is necessary to make provision for increments of incumbents of posts on time-scales; they had not got such estimates before them and they only worked on the figures shown in the budget, but they left it to be understood that had other items been sanctioned or new expenses incurred for such matters as increments of salaries, those should be taken into account. Their intention was not as the Honourable Member supposes.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: But they were given a provisional budget also for 1923-24. I see there they refer to provisional budget figures being given to them for 1923-24.

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: In certain cases only, but not by any means in each case.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: Why was it not done?

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: They were not ready.

Mr. N. M. Samarth: My point is this. Is it or is it not a fact that you have exceeded the recommendations of the Retrenchment Committee? And how many lakhs have you exceeded it by?

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: Had the Honourable Member been present at the beginning of the Session he would have heard my explanation of it. We are speaking at the moment of the Customs head alone. If it is the Customs head alone that the Honourable Member is speaking of, then it is perfectly true that as compared with the total budget figure of 72.74 last year, the budget figure for this year is 76½, and the difference, reduction or increase which is shown in the last column, is in this case shown by a minus, that is to say, it is an increase over the figure as it appeared on the figures that were in the Inchcape Committee Report. But as has already been explained by Mr. Brayne, the Inchcape Committee had not and could not have before them the exact budget figures for 1923-24; we were working pari passu with them all through the last three months, but the budget figures which have gone into our estimates were only ready a week or fortnight at the most before the date on which I had to present the budget. The difference of 376 lakhs in this case is an increase as compared with the figures as they left the Retrenchment Committee. But as has already been explained by Mr. Innes, nothing was included for the increments; nothing was included for the additional inspectors whose appointment was sanctioned by the Finance Committee and has been proved to be necessary, and the Inchcape Committee very carefully guarded themselves against saying that the budget figure of 1922-23, plus or minus their recommendation for retrenchment or increase was to be the budget figure for 1923-24; they did not say that and they did not mean it. In this case the increase of 3 lakhs has been fully explained by Mr. Innes as being necessitated by special increases required in order to collect revenue. If the Honourable Member will kindly look down this sheet, he will see there is a minus quantity in this case and under Taxes on Income and under Opium; and broadly speaking in all the other cases where there is a minus figure it will be at once explained; but in the other cases there is a very big reduction, and as compared with the total figures 14,769.53 that left the Retrenchment Committee—who have recommended a reduction of 9 crores, we have been able to effect a reduction of just over 7 crores, that is to say, a little less than 2 crores less than the figures that they gave.

Mr. W. M. Hussanally: Sir, there is one point that I should like to be a little further explained, and that is, that all the items of new expenditure sanctioned by the Standing Finance Committee were subject to the approval of the Retrenchment Committee and the question that now arises is whether all these items of new expenditure were submitted to the Retrenchment Committee and whether they were approved of by them. If these items of new expenditure were not subjected to the scrutiny of the Retrenchment Committee, then I say there is no reason why these new items of expenditure should be included in the budget. That proviso was specially made by the Standing Finance Committee, in all items of new expenditure sanctioned by them, and if these new items of expenditure have not been approved by the Retrenchment Committee, I think they ought to be taken off.

[Mr. W. M. Hussanally.]

Mr. R. A. Spence: Sir, is not the greater part of this excess of 3.76 lakhs accounted for by this excess payment to Travancore and Cochin States—a non-votable item? (Cries of 'No') If Honourable Members will look at the figures they would not perhaps say 'No.' They will see that the figures for payment of compensation to Travancore and Cochin States have gone up by Rs. 2,70,000, and that has been explained by the Honourable Commerce Member as being payment made over to Travancore and Cochin States for services rendered and therefore under contract and therefore the budget has not gone up over the Inchcape figures. I take it that is how it has gone up, anyhow by Rs. 2,70,000.

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas: Sir, such increase in the expenditure raises what I consider a very important issue for this Assembly to decide. Here you have a recommendation made by the Retrenchment Committee, that Rs. 47,000 be reduced out of the budget estimate of 1922-23, which means that the Retrenchment Committee thought that the budget estimate of 1922-23 was too much, was in excess by Rs. 47,000 over the required figure. Well, instead of a reduction now we find that the Government proposes to increase the expenditure by about Rs. 4 lakhs. The issue now before the Assembly is this: the Retrenchment Committee having proposed a reduction, would the Government be justified at this stage in this year in bringing proposals for increased expenditure? If we allow that in this case, it would only mean that next year we shall have all kinds of new proposals made by Government under all items, saying that the Retrenchment Committee could not go into the circumstances that arose in the year 1923 and therefore the proposed increase is due to the fact that the Retrenchment Committee was not able to consider those circumstances. Here the Retrenchment Committee has made its report and as my Honourable friend Mr. Hussanally pointed out the Standing Finance Committee whose authority has been quoted made it a special condition that the grant was subject to the approval of the Retrenchment Committee. (Mr. N. M. Samarth: "All their recommendations.") If we give in on this question, we shall not only be going, as I take it, against the wishes of the Retrenchment Committee for reduction, but we shall be involving the House further in sanctioning certain proposals for increased expenditure which in the interests of retrenchment we are not called upon to do. I therefore support my Honourable friend Mr. Manmohandas Ramji's motion.

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: Sir, I should just like to clear up certain misapprehensions which have arisen owing to the intervention of my friend, Mr. Samarth. It has been suggested that the Inchcape Committee expressly passed the Customs budget for 72.74 lakhs subject to a reduction of Rs. 47,000 on account of the pay of the Commissioner in Bombay. Now, let me take the first point about the pay of the Commissioner in Bombay. That recommendation of the Inchcape Committee for reduction of that amount is contingent upon the appointment of a Controller General of Customs. If we appoint a Controller General of Customs we shall be able to oust the local Governments from the administration of customs and then we should be able to save that amount of Rs. 47,000 under the pay of the Commissioner. Well, we have still got to create the post of the Controller-General and until we do so we must have somebody in Bombay to hear appeals against decisions of collectors in customs cases. Therefore that proposal to reduce Rs. 47,000 cannot for the moment be given effect to.

Now, the next point I wish to make is this. The Inchcape Committee asked us for our budget figures for 1922-23; we sent them and they worked upon those figures; but I deny altogether that their report is meant to be interpreted as passing our budget for this year on the figure of last year. Now, what have we done? The new items entered in our budget for 1923-24 are shown in big black ink in this budget; they amount to Rs. 39,000 only.

The only other increases which appear in the Budget are on account of proposals sanctioned in our last Budget or by the Standing Finance Committee between the last Budget and the September meeting, and they were sanctioned by the Assembly during the demand for Supplementary Grants. There are no new proposals—this is the point I wish to make—there are no new proposals in this Budget other than those shown in big print in the Budget. One is the pay of the three Assistant Collectors. Now it is perfectly true, as Mr. Hussanally has said, the Standing Finance Committee passed that proposal regarding the provision of Rs. 30,000 for three Assistant Collectors subject to reconsideration in the light of the Retrenchment Committee's recommendations. The Standing Finance Committee did not suggest that that proposal should be placed before the Inchcape Committee; nor could the Inchcape Committee have dealt with individual items of this kind. The only reservation the Standing Finance Committee made was that that proposal might require reconsideration in the light of the Inchcape Committee's Report. Now you have got the Inchcape Committee's Report here. Is there any charge against the Customs Department of extravagance? Is there any charge against us that we made greater provision than is necessary? Not at all. Absolutely nothing of the sort. And I have already given an independent explanation and justification for that extra demand of Rs. 30,000. We cannot go on as we are doing now with a leave reserve on a service of 25 officers of only three probationers. The usual leave reserve in any Government Department is 30 per cent. We have now got in the Customs Department a leave reserve of only 15 per cent. or so with the result that when our officers go on leave we cannot man the Department properly.

The other item is the entertainment of 3 Appraisers, 1 Auditor and 3 Clerks in Madras. That is due to the new system adopted in regard to the assessment to custom duty of registered letters and parcels coming from England. Formerly the English Post Office used to prepare a way-bill. That way-bill came out a week before the letters and parcels. The valuations were worked out on that way-bill and the whole thing was done in Bombay. Now the British Post Office have refused to go on with that system unless we pay £5,000, and we have had to adopt another system. Part of the system is the decentralisation to Madras of their own assessing work. That has necessitated the small increase of establishment.

[Mr. C. A. Innes.]

The only other item is the revision of the pay of the Chemical Examiner's Laboratory Assistants in Bengal. That is simply because with the existing sanctioned pay we cannot keep the Laboratory Assistants: they are tempted away to other posts.

Now what I have tried to make out is this. It is not right that the House should think that the Inchcape Committee passed the Budget for the following year. All they did was they examined our Budget for the current year and they said they had no recommendations to make. We now put up a Budget before you which shows certain new items—they are printed in black letters—and it shows the effect of certain new proposals already sanctioned by the Assembly—sanctioned, that is, by the Standing Finance Committee, for which Supplementary grants have been given by the Assembly in September. That being so, I hope the House will not accept this recommendation to reduce the Budget by 4 lakhs of rupees.

Mr. T. E. Moir (Madras: Nominated Official): Sir, my only justification for intervening is that for part of the period, at any rate, to which this additional expenditure relates I served as Chairman of the Standing Finance Committee. Unfortunately I have not with me a copy of the document to which the Honourable Member for Commerce and Industry referred which declared our intentions as regards the items of expenditure which we had passed in their relation to the recommendations of the Retrenchment Committee. There has been a certain looseness of phraseology regarding our intentions. As far as I remember, and as far as I am able to gather from the proceedings of the Standing Finance Committee, we never used the phrase "subject to the approval of the Retrenchment Committee". Our expression throughout was "subject to the recommendation of" or some such phrase; and I think the other Honourable Members of that Committee will bear me out when I say that our intention was that the mere fact that we passed a particular item of expenditure was no justification for the Government undertaking that expenditure if, in doing so, they ran counter to the recommendations of the Retrenchment Committee. (An Honourable Member: "Quite so.") I am unable myself to say whether in any item in connection with the expenditure on Customs the Government have contravened that intention and understanding; but I am perfectly ready to accept the assurance of the Honourable Member for Commerce and Industry that in no case has that understanding been contravened. I hope that these few remarks will clear up the point about our recommendations so far as the Standing Finance Committee is concerned.

If I might add one more word; if I am in order, may I say that the attitude in which the Standing Finance Committee regarded all recommendations in respect of increase of expenditure in revenue producing departments was that they examined every recommendation most closely and in every case they satisfied themselves before giving their assent to such expenditure being included in the Budget that it was essential in the interests of revenue. That was a commonsense standpoint to take and it was with reference to that consideration that they scrutinised every item throughout.

Mr. N. M. Joshi (and other Honourable Members): I move that the question be now put.

Mr. President: The question is that the question be put.

The motion was adopted.

Mr. President: The original question was:

"That a sum not exceeding Rs. 66,17,000 be granted to the Governor General in Council to defray the charge which will come in course of payment during the year ending the 31st day of March, 1924, in respect of 'Customs'."

Since which an amendment has been moved:

"That the Demand under the head 'Customs' be reduced by Rs. 4 lakhs."

The question I have to put is that that reduction be made.

The Assembly divided:

AYES—52.

Abdul Majid, Sheikh.	Kamat, Mr. B. S.
Abdulla, Mr. S. M.	Lakshmi Narayan Lal, Mr.
Agarwala, Lala Girdharilal.	Latthe, Mr. A. B.
Ahmed, Mr. K.	Mahadeo Prasad, Munshi.
Asjad-ul-lah, Maulvi Miyan.	Mudaliar, Mr. S.
Ayyangar, Mr. M. G. M.	Mukherjee, Mr. T. P.
Ayyar, Mr. T. V. Seshagiri.	Nag, Mr. G. C.
Bagde, Mr. K. G.	Nand Lal, Dr.
Barua, Mr. D. C.	Neogy, Mr. K. C.
Basu, Mr. J. N.	Pyari Lal, Mr.
Bhanja Deo, Raja R. N.	Ramayya Pantulu, Mr. J.
Bhargava, Pandit J. L.	Ramji, Mr. Manmohandas.
Bishambhar Nath, Mr.	Rangachariar, Mr. T.
Chaudhuri, Mr. J.	Reddi, Mr. M. K.
Dalal, Sardar B. A.	Samarth, Mr. N. M.
Das, Babu B. S.	Sartaraz Hussain Khan, Mr.
Faiyaz Khan, Mr. M.	Sarvadhikary, Sir Deva Prasad.
Ginwala, Mr. P. P.	Shahani, Mr. S. C.
Girdhardas, Mr. N.	Singh, Babu B. P.
Gour, Dr. H. S.	Sinha, Babu Ambica Prasad.
Gulab Singh, Sardar.	Sinha, Babu L. P.
Hussanally, Mr. W. M.	Sinha, Beohar Raghubir.
Iswar Saran, Munshi.	Srinivasa Rao, Mr. P. V.
Jamnadas Dwarkadas, Mr.	Ujagar Singh, Baba Bedi.
Jatkar, Mr. B. H. R.	Venkatapatiraju, Mr. B.
Joshi, Mr. N. M.	Vishindas, Mr. H.

NOES—51.

Abdul Quadir, Maulvi.	Hindley, Mr. C. D. M.
Abdul Rahim Khan, Mr.	Holme, Mr. H. E.
Abdul Rahman, Munshi.	Hullah, Mr. J.
Abul Kasem, Maulvi.	Ikrumullah Khan, Raja Mohd.
Achariyar, Rao Bahadur P. T.	Innes, the Honourable Mr. C. A.
Srinivasa.	Jamali, Mr. A. O.
Aiyar, Mr. A. V. V.	Ley, Mr. A. H.
Aiyer, Sir P. S. Sivaswamy.	Lindsay, Mr. Darcy.
Akram Hussain, Prince A. M. M.	Mitter, Mr. K. N.
Allen, Mr. B. C.	Moir, Mr. T. E.
Amjad Ali, Maulvi.	Muhammad Hussain, Mr. T.
Blackett, Sir Basil.	Muhammad Ismail, Mr. S.
Bradley-Birt, Mr. F. B.	Mukherjee, Mr. J. N.
Brayne, Mr. A. F. L.	Nayar, Mr. K. M.
Bridge, Mr. G.	Percival, Mr. P. E.
Burdon, Mr. E.	Rhodes, Sir Campbell.
Cabell, Mr. W. H. L.	Sams, Mr. H. A.
Chatterjee, Mr. A. C.	Schamnad, Mr. Mahmood.
Clark, Mr. G. S.	Shahab-ud-Din, Chaudhri.
Cotelingam, Mr. J. P.	Singh, Mr. S. N.
Crookshank, Sir Sydney.	Sircar, Mr. N. C.
Faridoonji, Mr. R.	Spence, Mr. R. A.
Gajjan Singh Sardar Bahadur.	Stanyon, Col. Sir Henry.
Gidney, Lieut.-Col. H. A. J.	Townsend, Mr. C. A. H.
Haigh, Mr. P. B.	Webb, Sir Montagu.
Hailey, the Honourable Sir Malcolm.	Willson, Mr. W. S. J.

The motion was adopted.

3274

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

[12TH MARCH 1923.]

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: Sir, I should like to make it perfectly clear that a reduction of this sort in expenditure could not be taken into account so as to reduce our budget deficit, because it is one which I cannot possibly regard as in any way reducing the deficit as it stands at present. If I was really expected to make that reduction, I should have to take at least a crore from my estimate for revenue. From the point of view, therefore, of the deficit, the whole still remains to be covered, and I myself cannot regard that as a real cut and therefore it does not affect the amount of the deficit remaining to be covered.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That a reduced sum not exceeding Rs. 62,17,000 be granted to the Governor General in Council to defray the charge which will come in course of payment during the year ending the 31st day of March, 1924, in respect of 'Customs'."

The motion was adopted.

The Assembly then adjourned for Lunch till Twenty Minutes Past Three of the Clock.

The Assembly re-assembled after Lunch at Twenty Minutes Past Three of the Clock. Mr. President was in the Chair.

TAXES ON INCOME.

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: Sir, I beg to move:

"That a sum not exceeding Rs. 58,93,000 be granted to the Governor General in Council to defray the charge which will come in course of payment during the year ending the 31st day of March, 1924, in respect of 'Taxes on Income'."

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: Sir, I beg to move:

"That the provision for Re-organisation of Income-tax Officers under the head 'Taxes on Income' be reduced by Rs. 2,00,000."

Honourable Members will notice from page 3 of the memorandum circulated to us that the Retrenchment Committee did not propose any reduction over the Budget figure of 1922-23 under the head 'Taxes on Income.' It stood at 47.01 lakhs. As Honourable Members will notice from column 6 the demand is now 63.79 lakhs. There is an increase therefore of over 16 lakhs over what the Retrenchment Committee said they would not reduce. In fact, all this extra expenditure is due to the re-organisation of the Department in the various provinces. I do not deny that there is necessity for re-organisation. But I do deny that there is necessity for so much pace in the re-organisation scheme. We can get on with the existing arrangements in several places. It is only in important places, in cities where you have got large income-tax amounts to deal with, that these re-organisations may be necessary and be given effect to. But in other places the old arrangement may last. Therefore, while I recognise the necessity for re-organisation, I think we may safely reduce the expenditure by Rs. 2 lakhs. If Honourable Members will turn to page 10 onwards they will notice that in Madras a provision for re-organisation of the Income-tax staff of Rs. 58,000 is provided. On page 11, in the Bombay Presidency, the re-organisation costs about Rs. 3,50,000, and similarly also, in Burma there is a provision of Rs. 1,25,000 on page 13. There are several other provisions which are scattered here and there. I will not go in for the whole of the re-organisation scheme, but I do think that here there is room for reduction. Honourable Members will also remember that in the year 1921-22 our expenditure was only 23.05 lakhs and what we voted for last year was only 45.31 lakhs as against a proposed demand of Rs. 47.55 lakhs. What they now want is nearly 40 lakhs over the 1921-22 figures and nearly about 17 lakhs over the demand for last year and nearly 18 lakhs over what we granted last year. I propose only a reduction of Rs. 2 lakhs. I therefore commend this modest proposal for the acceptance of the Government and of the House.

Mr. A. V. V. Aiyar: Sir, the Honourable Mr. Rangachariar has in making this motion conceded that it is desirable to proceed with the scheme of re-organisation. That point will no doubt be referred to again by other Honourable Members, and as they may not concede the point so readily, I will make a few remarks about the desirability of going on with this scheme as rapidly as possible. In dealing with this demand in the last two years the Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey has stated to the House the reasons for going on with the scheme. He claimed that improvement in the Income-tax administration results in just assessments and that it brings into assessment a very large number of people who have hitherto escaped assessment. I will just cite one instance where the improvement in machinery has brought in an increased revenue. There are 20 districts in Bihar and Orissa where we shall ultimately have to employ a special staff for income-tax collection. In 6 districts a special whole-time staff was entertained in the year 1921-22 and in 5 districts a special staff has been entertained only from the beginning of January 1923, while in the remaining 9 districts no special staff has yet been entertained. In those 6 districts the number of assesseees increased from 3,484 in 1921-22 to 8,881 in 1922-23 and the tax increased from Rs. 19,82,000 to Rs. 33,70,000, while in the 9 districts in which no special staff has yet been entertained the number of assesseees increased only from 2,500 to 2,527 and the tax from Rs. 6,58,000 to Rs. 7,92,000. I think, Sir, these figures show conclusively the desirability of proceeding apace with this re-organisation. Sir, we have provided in the Budget for the extent to which we hope to be able to effect re-organisation. But I quite concede that it may not be possible to give effect to our re-organisation to that extent and that there may be some savings. I will show to the House that those savings are required for a definite purpose. As the House is aware, Income-tax was a divided head of revenue before the reforms. The Local Governments then collected the tax for us. They took half the tax under the division of revenue then in force and paid in full for the establishment. Since the reforms income-tax has become a Central subject. We have not got our staff throughout all the provinces and we have to leave the collection to the provinces. They can now only act as our agents and they expect payment for the services which they rendered to us. This question of payment was raised first immediately after the reforms and it has since been in continual discussion with the Local Governments. We discussed the matter on the last occasion at the Conference which was held in Simla in May last with the representatives of the different provinces. It was then decided that the Government of India should work out some formula for determining the remuneration to be paid to the Local Governments and refer it for the opinion of the Local Governments concerned. The matter is still under consideration and we have not come to any final conclusion with the provinces but we have put to them certain definite proposals. We have our own Central Government's income-tax staff in the bigger cities and the task of collection is left to the provinces mainly in the case of the rural areas. We find from an examination of the cost of collection in the rural areas where we have got our own staff that the cost of establishment in the rural areas is roughly ten per cent. of the revenue collected. We have made a suggestion to the Local Governments that they should accept from us for the services they render to us payment on that basis. The figures from one of the Local Governments which I have before me show that while we consider this offer very liberal the Local Governments are not of that opinion. As a matter of fact, they are asking for a very much higher percentage of the revenue collected. It follows, Sir, from what I have said that we have a definite payment to make to the Local Governments for the collection of revenue in areas where we have not got our own staff. We have made a certain amount of provision for the expansion of the Central Government's staff in the provinces. If we are not able to carry out that scheme to the extent to which we anticipate, it only follows that we should pay to the Local Governments a larger sum in respect of the areas where we expected to introduce the Central Government's staff but where we have not been able to do it. We have made a provision of Rs. 9 lakhs in the budget for next year on account of payments to the Local Governments, but if we are unable to introduce the Central Government's staff to a larger extent than now anticipated, the result will be that we will have to increase the payments to the Local Governments to a corresponding extent or to be more correct, to a larger extent, as the rate at which they require payment from us is larger than 10 per cent. (A Voice: "How much are they asking?") I have not got detailed figures for all the provinces but I will give them for one province if you like. I have got figures for the Madras Presidency. The total cost of the whole scheme sanctioned for the Madras Presidency, that is, the scheme for the introduction of the Central Government's staff throughout the Presidency amounts to Rs. 8 lakhs, while the cost of the staff at present entertained amounts to Rs. 6 lakhs. The Government of Madras have asked the Government of India for a payment of Rs. 6 lakhs on account of work done by their officers, that is to say, for a payment of Rs. 4 lakhs in excess of the expenditure which will devolve on the Central Government if the scheme for re-organisation is introduced throughout that province. That shows the difficulties in coming to a settlement with the Local Governments. My point is that in the first place it is desirable to introduce this re-organisation and to employ the Central Government's own staff as rapidly as possible in the provinces and in the second place, that to the extent to which we are unable to do so we have only to make an increased payment to the Local Governments. I hope I have satisfied the House that there is no room for any reduction in this total demand because while we admit that there will be some saving in the provision for re-organisation, the amounts are required for a definite purpose. But if the House decides to make a reduction, we will expect the House to indicate how they would make that reduction, and how they would wish us to meet the demands from the Local Governments.

[Mr. A. V. V. Aiyar.]

Mr. J. Ramayya Pantulu (Godavari cum Kistna: Non-Muhammadan Rural): I am glad that my Honourable friend Mr. Rangachariar takes the view he has taken to-day of the special establishment for collecting income-tax. If I remember aright, during the discussion on the Income-tax Bill he hailed the prospect of the income-tax work being, after all, taken away from those great sinners, the revenue officials. But I now see he is himself afraid that the pace at which this separate establishment is being increased is rather too fast. It seems to me, Sir, that a separate establishment for income-tax work is likely to lead to one of two evil results and I want Government to take steps to avoid those consequences. One is that the establishment may become bloated and eat up a good portion of the revenue it produces. On the other hand, it may try to justify its existence by increasing the revenue by over-assessments. Both these alternatives are very bad and I hope Government will take steps to see that neither of these consequences happens. In this connection I wish to suggest to Government the advisability of re-introducing in the Income-tax Act a provision for the composition of income-tax which existed in the old Act. A provision like that will, to some extent, reduce the work of the Department and may result in some saving under the establishment charges.

Dr. Nand Lal: Speaking for myself, I am of opinion that the old system was less expensive and was more convenient for the assessee. I find from a survey of the past years that the expenditure so far as the Income-tax Department goes, has been increasing, and this year's budget demand is decidedly very heavy. You will be surprised to see the increase which we have been witnessing on the expenditure side so far as the collection of income-tax goes. In 1911-12 the whole expenditure was Rs. 4 lakhs only. In 1912-13 it rose to Rs. 8 lakhs. In 1920-21 it again rose to Rs. 11 lakhs. In 1921-22 it rose to Rs. 28 lakhs and for the current year the demand was for Rs. 44,80,000 and for the coming year it is much more. If we take an account of the collection the result of our analysis is very discouraging. It has not been proved by making a reference to the various provinces that on the whole this new organisation has helped us in collecting more irrespective of the increase in rates. The result is otherwise. Take the case of Bengal. The Honourable the Finance Member I think will have to concede this point that the collection in that province has been much less than it was expected. Take the case of the Punjab. Of course, so far as the Madras Presidency is concerned, there has been some increase, but one province is not sufficient to be taken as a criterion. Therefore, so far as the revenue side is concerned, we have not profited very much. There are other phases of it, the convenience and comfort of the assessee. There has been a number of complaints that this department is not properly managed. Assessee are summoned to produce their books and registers on a specific day, without knowing how many registers and accounts will be examined and irrespective of the convenience and comfort of respectable assessee. What is the result? By the end of the day four or five registers have been examined. The other assessee shall have to go back after they have been detained for more than five hours or six hours in some cases. It gives rise to a great amount of discontent. Though the intention of the Government is good that this department may be separated from the old system which was being run by each Local Government separately, experience shows that it has not added to the convenience of the public. Perhaps it may be urged on behalf of Government that your own argument establishes that the Government wants more employees, more examiners to see the registers. In reply to that I may submit that the staff which has been given to the collectors or assessors is more than sufficient. In any case it is more in strength than it used to be under the old system. Now there are Assistant Commissioners and a number of collectors. A collector is put in charge of one district and then sometimes two collectors are deputed in some big towns, as for instance, Lahore has got two collectors. Then there are so many inspectors. So the strength of the establishment is greater than it used to be. There is a third phase of it. It is extremely difficult to see who is responsible for this inconvenience and discomfort. I have been told by very responsible men one of whom put a question in the Punjab Legislative Council complaining against the management of the income-tax department. The reply which was given to that gentleman was that this is a Central subject. I myself put some questions and I was told that the question should be put in the Provincial Council. So the assesseees do not know where to go and lodge a complaint and get their grievances redressed. I submit that there is a great amount of dissatisfaction and discontent on account of the duplication of this management. So therefore the suggestion which has been offered by my learned friend Mr. Rangachariar, I do not think, will meet the need. Therefore I feel forced to say that the old system should be resorted to. The reorganisation will not prove paying to us, nor will it ameliorate the conditions to which a good many assesseees have been subjected. With these few remarks I support the reduction and resume my seat.

[Dr. Nand Lal.]

Dr. H. S. Gour: Income-tax is a direct tax, and all direct taxes are odious, but when we deal with this income-tax it becomes doubly odious by reason of the fact that a regular Star Chamber inquisition has been ordered since the reorganisation of this department. Accounts books are ransacked, pages after pages turned over and when the accounts are properly kept and produced before the income-tax-inspectors they are only inspected to be rejected and an arbitrary assessment made upon the assesseees. I entirely endorse the remarks made by the last speaker that the assessment of the income-tax in this country has been a fruitful source of widespread discontent, and I think this House certainly would not be justified in lending its assistance to the reinforcement of a department which has certainly not justified itself during its short career. (Mr. R. A. Spence: "No.") I shall very briefly point out to the Honourable Member who cries 'No.' He has probably no sufficient experience of the assessment. I shall briefly point out to the House that the incidence of charges on the realisation of income-tax has been steadily growing. In my budget speech I gave the figures to the House. It was originally 1 per cent. and has now gone up to 3.5 per cent. What is the justification for this great rise? The occupants of the Treasury Benches have not justified this great rise. Only a few minutes ago the Honourable Member for Commerce and Industry justified the Customs Department by saying that the incidence of charges of collection was in the neighbourhood of 1½ per cent. If that be the standard of collection, I submit the income-tax collection charges which come to 3.5 per cent. are excessive and there comes a time when I think the assesseees must protest against the kind of inquiries made, the delay occasioned and the general dissatisfaction caused by the mode and manner in which the income-tax is assessed in this country. My friend Mr. Aiyar says that the income-tax administration has to be strengthened because we shall get more money from the people. Surely, Sir, that is not the sole purpose of strengthening the income-tax administration. The object of increasing or revising income-tax administration is to make an equitable assessment and the question therefore is whether the reorganisation of the income-tax department has been conducive to the more equitable assessment of this tax. On that point Honourable Members on this side of the House join issue with the occupants of the Treasury Benches. We say that a very large increase which has been made in the administrative departments of income tax during the last two or three years, and which is proposed to be made during the ensuing Budget year, is not justifiable and has not been justified in the past. Reference has been made by my friend to certain rural areas. I do not know what income-tax is collected from the inhabitants of the rural areas, and how we shall stand if we were to centralise the collection in the rural areas rather than leave its collection to the Provincial Governments. Those are the facts upon which my friend Mr. Aiyar has been studiously silent, and unless we were given the figures as to what we stand to gain by having a central organisation for the collection of income-tax from these rural areas, we would not be justified in voting away the people's money for the purpose of paying the income-tax collectors and inspectors. Then, Sir, it has been said by my friend that in Bihar and Orissa where they were formerly collecting 19 lakhs of rupees they are now in a position to collect 33 lakhs of rupees. But I ask, at what cost? My friends here will be soon translated to the Olympian heights of Simla, but we have to go down to our constituencies. We mix with the people; we ask them what their difficulties are and we are told that ever since we have taken office this tax has been increased year by year; the inquisition has become more and more oppressive to the taxpayer; the account-books which the people keep never satisfy the inspectors, and even the accounts of the very best accountants are rejected by the inspectors only to make assessments at a fancy figure. This, I submit, is the grievance of the people against which this House must rally to the support of the Mover of this amendment. I support it.

Captain E. V. Sassoon (Bombay Millowners Association: Indian Commerce): Sir, I think this House quite realizes that when you increase direct taxation like the income tax you are liable to make the desire to evade it stronger. Those of us here, I mean all the Members of this House, no doubt disclose our true incomes and pay our proper dues to the Government. Therefore it is to our advantage that others who may not so honestly put forward their complete incomes should be brought to book. (Hear, hear.) I therefore think that we are all agreed that we want to give all the help that is necessary to Government to get the right amount of income from this direct taxation. But I must join issue with the Government when it comes to the question of the charges of the cost of collection against the amount that is received. Mr. Aiyar mentioned that 10 per cent. was offered to the Provincial Governments. I made an interjection and asked how much the Provincial Governments had offered to do the work for. It may be due to my lack of intelligence but all I understood was that instead of an outlay of 8 lakhs by the Central Government the Madras Government offered to do something for 6 lakhs. That, as I have said, may be due to my lack of intelligence; but I was expecting to get percentages. I was . . .

Mr. A. V. V. Aiyar: What I said was that the Madras Government wanted 12 lakhs for a work which the Central Government could have done for 8 lakhs.

Captain E. V. Sassoon: Well, I cannot compare horses with donkeys. Mr. Aiyar told us that we offered them 10 per cent. I would like to have something to compare that with. Perhaps Mr. Aiyar or some other occupant of the Treasury Bench will give the information. What I am interested in knowing is this. I see that something like 17 lakhs of extra expenditure is required by the Government for extra collection. Are we going to receive this 1,70 lakhs revenue through this expenditure of 17 lakhs, or what are we to expect to get therefrom? That seems to me to be the real point at issue. If the Treasury Bench can prove that we are going to get a really justifiable return for this expenditure, I for one will support it. But if we are simply going to spend this money without getting a proper return for it, then I am not at all certain that I will not support Mr. Rangachariar, not because I oppose the reorganization of the Revenue Department, but because the subject has not been put before this House in a clear and definite manner which would enable us to understand it. Therefore I do hope, Sir, that we will get some definite, lucid statement from the Treasury Bench showing us what we may expect to get in return for the 17 lakhs we are asked to spend on this Revenue Department.

[Captain E. V. Sassoon.]

Maulvi Abul Kasem (Dacca Division: Muhamnadan Rural): Sir, the Honourable Mr. Rangachariar in making his motion clearly stated that he acknowledged that there was a need for the reorganization of the Income-tax Department, but he brought the issue within the narrow limit of whether the cost this House was asked to sanction was absolutely necessary for that reorganization. It has been said by the Honourable Mr. Aiyar that by spending this larger amount we can get more money and do get more money, and some figures were quoted. But may I ask whether, because a larger amount of income-tax was collected in a particular year, it was due to the rise in the income of the people in that year or due to the additional taxation I mean in the rate of income-tax or entirely to the ability and energy of the income-tax officers themselves? I will not, Sir, go into the question of the hardships which are felt by the assessee. Dr. Gour has dealt with it. But I want to know, Sir, why it is that in maintaining a staff of income-tax officers we pay such generous salaries and emoluments? I have no experience of any other province, but in Bengal I know that when these income-tax officers were being appointed advertisements were published in the papers calling for applications; and for about 62 appointments something like 15,000 applications came in. From my personal knowledge I can say that the men recruited from the Provincial Service were given a much higher pay than they received in their service. Am I to understand, Sir, that the work of the Provincial Service, I mean Deputy Collectors, etc., who have to deal with both judicial and executive work, is less arduous or requires less of what has been termed character, integrity and education than the work of income-tax officer? If not, why is it that an income-tax officer is paid at a higher rate than a Deputy Collector or a judicial officer like a Munsiff? If we can get Munsiffs and Deputy Collectors on a particular scale of pay, how is it that we cannot get the same class of officers as Income-tax Officers? Therefore I think, Sir, that the Income-tax Department is not only too generous in the matter of salaries, but in many cases extravagant. For instance, Sir, in the city of Calcutta the Collector of Calcutta was the Collector of Income-tax, Excise and Land Revenue. Now that officer has been relieved of his work of income-tax collecting which has been placed under an official designated a Commissioner of Income-tax, and he is, I believe, paid a very good salary. —I do not know the figure, but a very good salary. But may

I ask, could not that very officer be secured for a much smaller salary than he is now receiving? If he was working as the Collector of a District or as a District Judge he would get much less pay than he is getting as Commissioner of Income-tax. I could understand if it was necessary to get a very senior member of the service that he would have to get his grade pay—a high pay. But if you can do the work with a junior member of the Indian Civil Service why not pay him at the rate he would get in the ordinary cadre? As regards the statement made by Mr. Aiyar that the efficiency of the staff is to be judged by the amount of money collected, I would agree with him if these assessments made by them were subject to any judicial investigation or to a non-official board which examined his assessment and examined the case of the assessee as well. But the facts are that the Income-tax officers assesses an assessee, and if the assessment is not agreed to an appeal is made to his immediate superior who also is an Income-tax official and there the matter stands. So naturally there is not much credit due to the staff for collecting the larger amount of income-tax. I think that the expenditure in this Department is not only on a generous scale but has been spent extravagantly. I therefore support the motion of my friend Mr. Rangachariar.

Mr. R. A. Spence: Sir, I wonder in my heart whether I approve or disapprove of a motion to cut the Income-tax Department. I wonder whether it is going to do my pocket any good. Personally I am afraid it is not, because my money is collected in an easy way. As Dr. Gour stated, we want equitable assessments, and in order to get equitable assessments, it is necessary that we should have assessments, collecting from everybody who is due to pay income-tax, and it is because of the difficulty of doing that that we have to have this heavy expenditure on income-tax. We have had a very interesting electioneering speech from Dr. Gour in this matter. He seems to assume that it is as easy to collect income-tax as it is to collect the customs duty, and therefore he thinks that the charges necessary for collecting income-tax should be in the same proportion as the charges necessary for collecting the customs. Well, if he would make the collection of income-tax as easy as the collection of customs duties, I would join with him in pressing for a reduction of this demand. Dr. Gour says that by passing this we are voting away the people's money. Well, Sir, I think that if we do not spend money on this Department, we are also voting away the people's money, and in this case we are voting away the people's money that would be coming in to the State. There were some interesting figures given by Captain Sassoon. I think he seems to forget the maxim that when business is bad, it is occasionally necessary to spend a little more money in order to increase one's business or to prevent one's business going away. Well, anyhow the more you spend, the more apparently you get, but if you are going to look at figures from that point of view and merely calculate on the amount of money you spend, and not take other things into consideration, it is not right. Just look at the case of Bombay. Poor Bombay spends more money on income-tax than any other part of India, but she does give Government something for it. (Mr. N. M. Samarth: "The whole of it practically.") She spends Rs. 14,79,000 on this head, and she gets in Rs. 6 crores 80 lakhs, whereas Bengal, true, only spends half the amount Bombay does, but she is two crores of rupees down. I do not think that Captain Sassoon's argument holds good. The reason that we are not getting the same amount of income-tax that we got last year or the year before is palpable to him, I should say, as it is to me and various other people. We are not making the same amount of money that we made before. Well, I think unless we spend this amount of money in the Budget, we shall not get in as much income-tax as we were doing. My Honourable friend, Maulvi Abul Kasem, referred to the generous salaries paid to the people in the Income-Tax Department. Well, I do not want to cast a slur on anybody either to cast a slur on the Collector of Income-Tax or upon the Deputy Collector on the revenue side. But surely, Sir, it is commonsense that when you have people who have to go round and make these inquisitions, as I think Dr. Gour called them,—anyhow very unpleasant inquiries, into people's incomes and extract true figures out of them, then surely, going by human nature, it is wise to pay these people well, and to put out of their minds any idea of temptation. If you pay them badly, they will collect badly. We heard a great deal said against the police in the beginning of this Assembly and really I believe a good bit of it was due to the fact that the police were badly paid; and I think you will hear far less against the Income-Tax Department, and the Income-Tax Department will do its work with less hardships to the people of India if you pay the Income Tax Department well. The Department is going to collect a lot of money for us, and we deserve to have a good Department in order that this tax may fall equitably upon everyone; and that it will not fall merely on the person who has his mercantile books in the city, it will not merely fall on the party who has one set of books for himself, one set of books for his partner and one set of books for the income-tax collector, but that it may fall equally on all people. Sir, I oppose this reduction.

[Mr. R. A. Spence.]

Mr. S. C. Shahani: Sir, the Honourable Captain Sassoon told us that we would be prepared to incur the additional expenditure that has been suggested, namely, 17 lakhs, if we were told exactly how much would be collected by this new reorganization scheme. I submit that we have been told in distinct terms that our revenue for 1923-24 may be estimated at 19.04 crores; that is to say, that our revenue in 1923-24 is as compared to that in 1922-23 to increase by something less than 2 per cent. Now I say 17 lakhs more on the expenditure side mean an increase of about 40 per cent. in our expenditure. I shall give the figures. The actual revenue for 1919-20 is 22.43 crores, for 1920-21 20.91 crores and for 1921-22 18.74. For 1922-23 the estimates were 22.11 crores, and actual collections, 18.69; and the estimated figures, as I have already mentioned, for the year 1923-24 are 19.04 crores. If we look at our expenditure, we find that in the year 1919-20 our expenditure amounted to 15.29 lakhs, in 1920-21, 22.15, and in 1921-22, 22.50. In 1922-23 the estimated expenditure was 47 crores, and our actual expenditure, 45.88; and the estimated expenditure for 1923-24 is 63.79 crores, that is to say, 40 per cent more than our expenditure in 1922-23. If we consider our receipts and expenditure, we find that we expect to realize about 35 lakhs more, and we want to spend on the collection of this 35 lakhs, 17 lakhs more. (The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: "No.") I say, yes. Now this state of things is I think unjustifiable, and a much larger cut than has been proposed by the Honourable Mr. Rangachariar should be deemed necessary in the circumstances. It has been said by my Honourable friend, Maulvi Abul Kasem, that the salaries of the income-tax collectors are high. My study of the figures does not however justify such a statement. I think that the salary of the income-tax collector has been properly fixed: it has been fixed at Rs. 300—900, which is the scale of salaries fixed for Deputy Collectors. The trade depression has of course been considerable, which accounts for our revenue for 1922 falling below our revenue for 1919, but still the difference in the cost of collection now and the cost of collection sometime ago is very great, and on that account I feel that a much larger cut would be justified. But we ought to remember I suppose the remark that was made by the Honourable the Finance Member that if we went in for large cuts, the Government would give effect to them. Of course such a statement is objectionable on several grounds since the fiscal policy is in the keeping of this House. Still to be practical, I would support the motion that has been made by the Honourable Mr. Rangachariar, and I would commend it strongly to the support of the House.

Rao Bahadur C. S. Subrahmanayam (Madras ceded districts and Chittoor: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, in this matter of the reduction proposed by my friend, Mr. Rangachariar, of two lakhs, I am afraid, so far as his argument went, there was nothing said definitely about the manner in which these two lakhs could be cut down. Well, I think, last year speaking on the budget grant, we were in a position of inability to suggest definite grounds for cutting down the demands, and we, therefore, said that we would make certain lump sum reduction and would leave Government to settle their accounts as best as they could. But, this year, we have something to go upon. Now, for instance, the Retrenchment Committee's recommendation in this matter may be referred to. I do not propose to read the whole of it, I will read only one sentence, which is the final sentence in their recommendation:

"Having regard to the importance of maintaining a revenue, we do not recommend any reduction in the estimates in this department for 1923-24 as compared with current year's estimates."

The current year's estimates are 47 lakhs. Does that mean that the Retrenchment Committee said that the Budget for 1923-24 should not exceed 47 lakhs? That is the question and . . .

Mr. President: I am afraid that is not the question. The question is whether we shall reduce the provision for the reorganization of income-tax officers by an amount of Rs. 2 lakhs.

Rao Bahadur C. S. Subrahmanayam: That is the basis of my argument. Did they suggest any reduction in last year's figures? Now, they say that reorganization must be made. The grounds on which the reorganization is suggested are the refusal of the provincial Governments to do the work of the Central Government and claiming a remuneration for the work so done. Now, that matter is at the root of this higher demand. If the provincial Governments are willing to do it at a cost cheaper than the proposed establishment run by the Central Government, it would be a different matter. Are they willing to do it at a cheaper rate? Now, we are told that their rates are not cheaper. In fact, they want a larger sum for the work they do. That is another fact on which we can come to a conclusion. If the provincial Governments refuse to do the work of the Central Government for the same sum which will cost us to do it, and if they want a larger sum, then is it or is it not the economical way of doing it if we do it by the staff of the Central Government? That is one consideration which ought to be taken into account in deciding this matter. Now, in the case of the province of Bihar and Orissa, the same trouble has arisen and additional staff has been provided. That subject was placed before the Standing Finance Committee and as that Government would not do the work for the Central Government and they had to be provided with a separate staff the Standing Finance Committee agreed to that demand. Therefore, it seems to me, Sir, that before rejecting this proposal of my Honourable friend Mr. Rangachariar of approving of it, on general grounds the question ought to be considered from a business point of view. Do we want the staff or not? In the general argument about the oppressive character of the investigations which the income-tax staff makes there is a considerable amount of truth and it is inevitable that any staff put on that sort of work, assessment and collection of taxes, must cause a considerable amount of irritation. But on that ground I do not think that this demand should be cut down. The remedy should be sought elsewhere, in some other reduction, not in a lump sum reduction of a demand that is made. It is no doubt true that owing to the manner in which in different provinces Indian merchants, who do not adopt the English methods of book-keeping, maintain their accounts, there is always a certain amount of difficulty, a considerable amount of disagreement between the assessing officers and the assessee. Now, what is the remedy? The only remedy is their going round to adopt the methods insisted upon by the income tax department and the income-tax officers also understanding their methods and treating them with a certain amount of consideration. That, again, is not a matter on which you could base an argument for reducing this demand. Looking at it from whatever point of view, it is purely a business matter, a matter which concerns the collection of revenue, and in that, unless from a practical and administrative point of view a definite sum is pointed out as being unnecessary in this demand, I do not think this Assembly could reasonably throw out the demand. In regard to the rural areas, it is no doubt true that there are men, wealthy men, not living in large towns, who could afford to pay income-tax, and probably under a new system they have been escaping the payment of any tax. Why should anyone have any sympathy for a man who has escaped paying the tax or who evades paying the tax when every honest man has to pay. Assuming the fact that a man has really evaded the tax, I will not spend my sympathy towards that man, because while every honest man is paying the tax, he keeps the money to himself. Unless you say that the man is assessed on income which he does not get, and therefore it is unjust, unless you can make out cases of large numbers of unjust assessments, there is no use putting forward that argument. There is no doubt that some people who ought to pay do escape when your staff is not sufficiently able, sufficiently efficient and sufficiently numerous. In regard to the pay which my Honourable friend Maulvi Abul Kasem referred to, I understand the rule to be that if a man who is doing work as a Deputy Collector and Magistrate is taken on to do any of these special branches of work he is paid a sum of Rs. 100 extra, because he is taken away from work to which he is accustomed, there is extra trouble and he loses certain amenities which he possesses as a Deputy Collector and Deputy Magistrate. Therefore, if he is taken to some special departments, such as income-tax, settlement or co-operative work, I understand in some provinces the rule is that he is paid an extra sum that is fixed at Rs. 100. I do not think that any slight increase or even that Rs. 100 is a matter to be complained of, because we have to remember that the deciding officer or the superior officers of income-tax must be paid decently, otherwise there will be considerable danger. I need not dilate the dangerous consequences of under-paying officers entrusted with the work of assessing incomes. Therefore, Sir, the only ground on which my Honourable friend Mr. Rangachariar could suggest reduction is if it is possible for the department to say with an increase of nearly 15 lakhs which they propose to be able to cut down 2 lakhs. If they could say that there is some direction in which we could take away the 2 lakhs,—I hope they would exercise their minds and state if it is possible,—then only I think we could support Mr. Rangachariar.

[Rao Bahadur C. S. Subrahmanayam.]

Mr. P. B. Haigh (Bombay: Nominated Official): Sir, I should like, if I may, very briefly to answer some of the questions put by my Honourable friend who is no longer sitting behind me. He stated that he would be prepared to vote against the proposed reduction if he were quite satisfied that re-organization would really pay. Well, Sir, it was my fortune to serve for some time as Assistant Collector in the City of Bombay just about the time when the reorganisation of the Income-Tax Department was being undertaken, and I acted as Collector of Income-Tax there during temporary vacancies on two occasions, and later on I was Collector of Bombay, and for the time being, under the old arrangements, Commissioner of Income-Tax. So, Sir, I have had some small personal experience in this matter. About the year 1907 a vacancy occurred in the office of Collector of Income-Tax, Bombay, and the Government of Bombay appointed as Collector an officer who now occupies the position of Commissioner of Income-Tax, whose name is well known I have no doubt to the Finance Department of the Government of India. (An Honourable Member: "Mr. Hartley.") Before that officer had been in Bombay as Collector of Income-Tax for more than a year, he set himself steadily to press upon the Government the necessity of thoroughly reorganising the Department so far as the City of Bombay was concerned. The result of his efforts and of the reorganisation which the Government largely on his recommendation undertook was that, in the space of a very few years, the income-tax collections in the City of Bombay were doubled. Later on, on his advice also, the system of special income-tax officers was extended to some of the larger cities in the Bombay Presidency. The results everywhere were the same, the collections increased considerably and finally he was asked to suggest a scheme for extension of the system to the mofussil and now in the Bombay Presidency there are a number of special income-tax examiners and other officers for assisting in the collection of income-tax in the rural districts of Bombay. Everywhere the scheme has been successful. So my friend Captain Sassoon, if he will take the trouble to pay a visit to the Office of the Commissioner of Income-Tax in Bombay, will be able to satisfy himself that there is not the slightest fear that the Government of India will lose—on the contrary they will gain enormously by a thorough reorganisation of this Department.

With regard to the point made by Dr. Gour about what he calls the inquisition in the rural parts of the country. I have no doubt that many official Members of this House have had experience of the duties of Income-Tax Collectors or Commissioners in the rural districts. Under the old system when the assessment was made by an unskilled staff, by the ordinary revenue staff of mamlatdars or their subordinates we had the greatest difficulty in arriving at the proper estimate of an assessee's income, but now with the assistance of trained inspectors, we are really able to find out actually what a man's books reveal and what the state of his income is, and the assessee is also benefited because he has to deal with a man who is trained on definite principles, who can point out to him in what respects his accounts are wrong, in what respects his accounts fail to reveal his proper income. Under the old system, the assessee was apt to be met with a vague statement that the examining officer cannot believe your accounts are right and your income must be so and so. Under the present system the assessee has to deal with a trained man who has to work on a system, and the superior officer, the Collector or the Commissioner of Income-tax, when he is hearing the petition has an opportunity of examining the assessee's accounts systematically with the assistance of a man who can point out in what respects the accounts are wrong. It is a far more satisfactory system when it comes to the actual petition than the old haphazard way. The honest assessee has nothing to fear from a trained staff. Of course there is no doubt that many more people are now assessed than before because of the more searching investigation that is made, and that can never be popular. But as the Honourable Member has pointed out, we cannot have sympathy with people who ought to pay income-tax and don't, and you cannot condemn a department as inquisitorial because it finds that certain people have not paid income-tax hitherto who ought to have done so. I am quite satisfied, Sir, that if the reorganisation now proposed is carried out in the other Provinces, especially in the big cities, on the same lines on which it has been carried out in the City of Bombay, an immense increase of revenue will accrue to the Government of India, and both assesseees and the Government of India will be benefited.

[Mr. P. B. Haigh.]

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: Sir, the position in regard to this estimate is the same as in regard to the estimate for Customs with which we dealt this morning in that no new provision is made in this estimate except such as had the approval of the Standing Finance Committee. Further all the new provisions, in fact the whole provision that is included in this estimate is included for the purpose of raising money. It is impossible, of course, to give exact figures, but for every 10-rupee cut made in the estimate as it now stands, it is the view of the Government that it would have to pay 12 rupees instead of 10 rupees to the Provincial Governments, and would in addition lose an amount of revenue at which we can only make a shot, but which may be put at, say, 30 rupees. The comparison with previous years is startling. It startled me when I first saw it. It was:

	Rs.
Actual expenditure for 1921-22	23 lakhs.
Revised estimate for 1922-23	44 "
Estimate for 1923-24	62 "

Those were startling figures when one noticed that there had been an increase of, I think, only 36 or 37 lakhs in our estimate of receipts from income-tax this year. I naturally inquired into this change. The real fact is that the expenditure for the last two years at any rate does not represent the actual expenditure as we have not settled with the Provinces. The Provinces have asked and have been promised some suggestion from the Government as to how the expenditure which they have incurred in collecting income-tax should be recouped to them, and as has been already explained, they have been offered, and some of them are dissatisfied with an offer of 10 per cent. of what they collect. It does not mean that the cost of collection is 10 per cent., but if the tax is collected in rural areas there is some justification for a higher percentage than in city areas. But the real increase is not the increase seen from 44 lakhs to 62 lakhs. That 44 lakhs takes no account or only takes a very small account of a sum estimated at about 15 lakhs which has to be paid to the provinces in order to fulfil the promise which the Government of India made to them to pay them a share in the cost of collection. If you add 15 to 44 you get 59 or say 60 lakhs as compared with our 62. The increase this year is therefore 2 lakhs, which possibly is the reason why Mr. Rangachariar hit on that figure to suggest a reduction. The Government would be most happy to accept a reduction if they thought that it would not have a serious effect on the other side of their ledger. The Government are always in this difficulty, of course, when the House comes forward with proposals for reduction and this year they are in a special difficulty because the Government themselves have spent the last two months in making reductions as hard as they can go everywhere and in their opinion the figures that are in these estimates represent,—I was going to say their honest, but I am not quite sure they are honest—their hopeful view of the figures to which they will be able to reduce their expenditure this year. That being so, it is very difficult for the Government to say that they think possibly a cut could be made here because, if they were not budgeting their hardest, they would probably say that they think a small increase ought to be made in order that they may be safe. However, the position there is—I will repeat the figures that I gave—that for every ten-rupee cut which might be made, we should have to pay twelve rupees to the provinces, so it would not be a cut, and we should lose at least Rs. 30 of revenue.

There is one other point to which I should like to refer and that is the complaints that have been made as regards the hard dealing of the income-tax authorities with the assesseees. Well, of course there are points of view from which we have no particular sympathy with an assessee who is under-assessed and a man who ought to be an assessee and is not. Everyone of us is paying more income-tax than he should, if the other fellow was paying properly. It might conceivably be true that, if no one were evading the taxes this year, the budget deficit might be very much smaller than it is, if it existed at all. The man who evades taxes while his fellow is paying is not merely getting off with less than his share but is increasing the share of the other fellow in the burden of taxation. That is one side of the picture. At the same time, the last thing that an income-tax authority ought to do is to incur any just accusation of unfairness or of being too sharp or in any way taking advantage of the tax-payer. One of the important reasons for paying your staff well is that you may get the right class of staff that does not do that sort of thing. But, further, the Board of Revenue and the Finance Department are most anxious that, if you have got to have income-tax, there should be as little injustice as possible about the income-tax, and, though we do not invite all and sundry to send us in complaints about the way in which the income-tax collector has treated them, we are prepared to receive from Members of this House any cases where they think there has been a real reason to suspect that there has been undue hardship on the part of the revenue officer and we should be only too glad to find that after all the assessee has not got much to complain of or, if he has, to see that injustice is not done.

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary: Sir, Mr. Aiyar has asked and Mr. Subrahmanayam has repeated the suggestion that, if the House is really to carry this proposal of Mr. Rangachariar, some indication should be given as to how the two lakhs was to be met. I recognise reason in that and, wherever the Assembly can do it, it should. Not that it is its duty to do so. Sir, scattered all over the income-tax budget and other budgets we have considered amounts budgeted for honoraria—a thing that I do not understand in this concern—allowances, contingencies, and travelling allowances. They are necessary, undoubtedly, and no department can go on without some budget provision under those heads. I would not like to press and do not propose to press the other proposals standing in my name in view of the larger proposal before the House. I have taken up certain items of the kind that I have indicated and making all the allowance that I thought should be made for tolerable efficiency—possibly not ideal efficiency—I make out that about Rs. 3,22,000 could be saved in this department and corresponding sums in other departments which would be helpful. I have tabled various proposals for doing away with the proposed increased expenditure for revision of staff. I will be giving this up. I am afraid introduction of questions of the necessity of revision of staff and of hardships of assesses has to a certain extent clouded the real issue. It is not necessary to raise those issues for the purpose of getting a reduction of two lakhs of rupees on the whole. Out of the budget allotments under the heads that I have indicated it is possible to reduce Rs. 3,22,000 and I am prepared to give the figures to the Honourable the Finance Member and Mr. Aiyar if they would like to go into the matter. Halving it again or nearly halving it, you do get two lakhs of rupees, and that is after all not a very large deduction to ask in this year of stringency.

[Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary.]

Well, I am glad, Sir, the Honourable the Finance Member has told us before the voting on this item which is much nicer and more to the purpose than after the voting would have been, as on a previous occasion,—he has told us that the financial result will be a loss of revenue. Is it seriously urged that, if a small portion of the travelling allowances, the contingencies, and honoraria, and allowances amounting to two lakhs of rupees, is cut out, without touching the establishment in any way, without even interfering with the proposed revision of staff? Is it seriously to be urged that that will affect the revenue to the extent of Rs. 30 for every Rs. 10, in other words, that we shall lose six crores over a reduction of two lakhs?

Mr. President: The reason why the Honourable the Finance Member did not refer to that is that it would have been out of order if he had. The Honourable Member is not in order in referring to it. This is an amendment to reduce the provision for re-organisation of income-tax officers.

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: Sir, I should like just to say that the Government would be quite willing to cut out all the honoraria in the estimate. It would have no effect on the total.

Mr. B. S. Kamat (Bombay Central Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, it seems to me that a great deal of time has been spent to-day in speaking about generalities without coming to the specific issue which we ought to discuss. It stands to reason that, as a general proposition, if we strengthen our staff, so far as the income-tax department is concerned, we shall have better revenue. I don't quarrel with that. We need not dispute it. So also it may be perfectly correct, as Mr. Aiyar pointed out, that a 10 per cent. basis for payment to the provinces for collecting income-tax would be rather expensive, for the simple reason that our total expenditure for income-tax now is 58 lakhs of rupees, whereas if we pay to all the provinces on the 10 per cent. basis, as our total income-tax is 19 crores, 10 per cent. of 19 crores comes to 190 lakhs. Instead of 58 lakhs we shall have to pay 190 lakhs. So even that proposition I accept without demur. But the real specific issue before the House ought to be this. Granted, that a re-organisation scheme is necessary and that it is beneficial in the long run, is 17½ lakhs of rupees the minimum for its re-organisation? That is the point. In other words, can you not cut down the 17½ lakhs and yet have re-organisation? Now, to answer this question I take the example of the Bombay Presidency and the specific allotment in this re-organisation scheme for that Presidency, let us examine it from the point of view which I have placed before the House. The total expenditure for the re-organisation of the Department in the Bombay Presidency is Rs. 3½ lakhs. Let us go into the details and find out whether all that Rs. 3½ lakhs is really necessary. I contend, it may be possible to cut down there, either in the new posts to be created or in the new salaries to be fixed. Now, the details of Rs. 3,50,000 are as follows. One Commissioner, on Rs. 2,000, one Assistant Commissioner on Rs. 1,500, four Assistant Commissioners on Rs. 1,000, 36 Income-tax officers, 46 Inspectors, 284 clerks, 243 menial servants and so on. Their salaries vary from Rs. 15 to Rs. 500 or more. The real question which I ask is, are these so many posts necessary, and if Rs. 2 lakhs, as Mr. Rangachariar wants, are cut down and spread over, say, 9 provinces, giving a reduction of only Rs. 25,000 for each province on an average,—it may be Rs. 50,000 for one province and Rs. 10,000 in others—will that little reduction of Rs. 25,000 on an average be or be not permissible in a total of Rs. 17½ lakhs? In other words, cannot the Department cut down, say, Rs. 25,000 from each province and yet have the re-organisation? I do certainly really think, Sir, if you examine the proposition from this logical point of view, that Rs. 2 lakhs in these days when we are scraping every penny in order to meet our deficit would be a reduction perfectly possible which the Government can I think certainly effect without injuring the re-organisation scheme. Sir, I support the amendment.

Khan Bahadur Abdur Rahim Khan (North-West Frontier Province: Nominated Non-Official): Sir, it is painful for me to get up. I would have accepted the explanation which has been given by the Honourable the Finance Member, but I think I will be false to my province if I do not repeat the sad story of its people and the bad treatment, which they have received at the hands of the subordinates of that Department. I can assure this Honourable House that in a good many cases they have been treated so very badly that they have altogether forgotten the Mahsuds and are quite prepared to prefer them to these subordinates of that Department. The Honourable Captain Sassoon said that we should co-operate with the Government. By all means, when I get up and say this I am co-operating with the Government. It is but proper that the Government should collect its dues, but by no means in such a summary way. But my point is this, that the Honourable the Finance Member, while encouraging this Department by his remarks must at the same time tell it that it must behave properly, because this Department is directly under us and we are responsible to our constituents if it won't behave properly. No one says that money which is due to the Government should not be paid. But they should not get money which is not their due. If the standard of collecting money is that they should realise more money any how, then, Sir, I will be the last person to support Government in this respect. I will say that it is much better that we should not have any money at all than displease so many people who are the real back-bone of Government and I assure you, Sir, that if anything will stimulate, if anything will make civil disobedience successful, it will be the misbehaviour of this Department. To-day I have received a letter. A generous Hindu gentleman, called Kishan Chand Jain, who always supported not only Government but also various charitable institutions with big donations and subscriptions, went to the officer there and said "My health is bad. Kindly give me 2 months' time and I will submit my accounts, because a part of my accounts has to come from Calcutta." The officer said, "No. You must submit your accounts at once." The result was he left Dera Ismail Khan soon in order to submit his accounts, reached Calcutta and died there of pneumonia. Can you expect the members of his family to co-operate with Government? He did not say that he did not want to submit his accounts and pay the money. He only wanted time and he was entitled to get that time. I say that those officers must be told that they should collect money in a proper way after making a full and thorough inquiry. It should be impressed upon them that a Department which is under the Central Government should be an example for the rest of the provinces to follow. So, if my Honourable friend says that competency means that they should collect more money, if competency is to be measured by the amount of collection of money, I would say "Hand over the Department to the Police. It will do as well if not better." My view is this. When this Income-tax Commissioner comes, the Honourable the Finance Member should ask him how many Hindus, how many Muhammadans, how many European officers are subordinate to him and about the misbehaviour of his subordinates. If you are going to have this Department, go on like this. I will be the first Indian—to say, "For goodness' sake, don't Indianise this Department. Do not have Hindus or Muhammadans in that Department. Their behaviour is so curious and strange that the people are quite fed up with it". I can assure the Government that the people who pay income-tax will lose their confidence in the Government in no time. I will say, Sir, that the Honourable the Finance Member should not only give us this assurance but he should issue orders to the subordinates of this Department to be popular with, and just to, the people. I will add one word more. A gentleman, the President of our Bar, on my return from Simla told me in the Bar Room that if our Inquiry Committee would have taken his evidence after coming in contact with the subordinate officials of that Department, he would not have given evidence in favour of amalgamation with the Punjab.

[Khan Bahadur Abdur Rahim Khan.]

Mr. President: The Honourable Member is wandering away from the question.

Khan Bahadur Abdur Rahim Khan: As I am the only member from my province, Sir, and as my province is very much more concerned and interested in this subject I had to dilate a bit. The men from Bengal and Madras and other provinces can at least make their voices heard somehow or other. But unless I appear to the Honourable the Finance Member here, our people have no remedy whatsoever any where else. This Department is not under the local Government. As long as it was under the Local Government every thing went on smoothly and well. I would not be so harsh as to say that there should be a reduction but at least I will raise my voice on behalf of the people of my Province and request the Honourable the Finance Member to take special interest in our people in order to remove and remedy their grievances.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: How enforce?

Khan Bahadur Abdur Rahim Khan: Sorry, could not catch your words.

Lieut.-Colonel H. A. J. Gidney: Sir, my remarks will be very brief on this motion. I was once told by a very experienced officer that if the Central Government obtained from India all the income-tax that was legitimately due, Budget deficits would be an unheard of event and I believe that there is more than a veneer of truth in this statement. We are asked here, Sir, to support a motion for a reduction of Rs. 2 lakhs. The Honourable the Finance Member has said that if this cut were passed by this Assembly, for every Rs. 10 we cut, we would lose about Rs. 30. Mr. Rangachariar objects to all extra expenditure of 17 lakhs even though the revenue accruing therefrom is about 35 lakhs i.e., a return of over 200 per cent. There is no doubt that the Income-tax Department is one of the most productive Departments of the Government, if properly administered and if we, in this Assembly, were to give our support to a cut which will reduce our revenue, I have no hesitation in saying that we will be cutting our nose to spite our face.

Mr. President: The original question was:

"That a sum not exceeding Rs. 58,93,000 be granted to the Governor General in Council to defray the charge which will come in course of payment during the year ending the 31st day of March, 1924, in respect of 'Taxes on Income'."

Since which an amendment has been moved:

"That the provision for Re-organisation of Income-tax Officers under the head 'Taxes on Income' be reduced by Rs. 2,00,000."

The question is that that amendment be made.

The Assembly divided:

AYES—48.

Abdul Majid, Sheikh.
Abdul Quadir, Maulvi.
Abdulla, Mr. S. M.
Abul Kasem, Maulvi.
Agarwala, Lala Girdharilal.
Ahmed, Mr. K.
Aiyer, Sir P. S. Sivaswamy.
Asjad-ul-lah, Maulvi Miyan.
Ayyangar, Mr. M. G. M.
Ayyar, Mr. T. V. Seshagiri.
Bagde, Mr. K. G.
Bhargava, Pandit J. L.
Bishambhar Nath, Mr.
Chaudhuri, Mr. J.
Faiz Khan, Mr. M.
Gowala, Mr. P. P.
Girdhardas, Mr. N.
Gour, Dr. H. S.
Gulab Singh, Sardar.
Hussanally, Mr. W. M.
Iswar Saran, Munshi.
Jatkar, Mr. B. H. R.
Kamat, Mr. B. S.
Lakshmi Narayan Lal, Mr.

Mahadeo Prasad, Munshi.
Mudaliar, Mr. S.
Muhammad Ismail, Mr. S.
Mukherjee, Mr. J. N.
Nag, Mr. G. C.
Nand Lal, Dr.
Nayar, Mr. K. M.
Neogy, Mr. K. C.
Pyari Lal, Mr.
Ramji, Mr. Manmohandas.
Rangachariar, Mr. T.
Reddi, Mr. M. K.
Samarth, Mr. N. M.
Sarfaraz Hussain Khan, Mr.
Sardhikary, Sir Deva Prasad.
Shahani, Mr. S. C.
Singh, Babu B. P.
Sinha, Babu Ambica Prasad.
Sinha, Babu L. P.
Sircar, Mr. N. C.
Srinivasa Rao, Mr. P. V.
Ujagar Singh, Baba Bedi.
Venkatapatiraju, Mr. B.
Vishindas, Mr. H.

NOES—49.

Abdul Rahim Khan, Mr.
Achariyar, Rao Bahadur P. T.
Srinivasa.
Aiyar, Mr. A. V. V.
Akram Hussain, Prince A. M. M.
Allen, Mr. B. C.
Amjad Ali, Maulvi.
Barua, Mr. D. C.
Basu, Mr. J. N.
Blackett, Sir Basil.
Bradley-Birt, Mr. F. B.
Bray, Mr. Denys.
Brayne, Mr. A. F. L.
Bridge, Mr. G.
Burdon, Mr. E.
Cabell, Mr. W. H. L.
Chatterjee, Mr. A. C.
Clark, Mr. G. S.
Cotelingam, Mr. J. P.
Crookshank, Sir Sydney.
Faridconji, Mr. R.
Gajjan Singh, Sardar Bahadur.
Gidney, Lieut.-Col. H. A. J.
Haigh, Mr. P. B.
Hailey, the Honourable Sir Malcolm.

Hindley, Mr. C. D. M.
Holme, Mr. H. E.
Hullah, Mr. J.
Ikramullah Khan, Raja Mohd.
Innes, the Honourable Mr. C. A.
Jamall, Mr. A. O.
Jamnadas Dwarkadas, Mr.
Joshi, Mr. N. M.
Ley, Mr. A. H.
Lindsay, Mr. Darcy.
Mitter, Mr. K. N.
Moir, Mr. T. E.
Muhammad Hussain, Mr. T.
Percival, Mr. P. E.
Ramayya Pantulu, Mr. J.
Rhodes, Sir Campbell.
Sams, Mr. H. A.
Sassoon, Capt. E. V.
Schamnad, Mr. Mahmood.
Shahab-ud-Din, Chaudhri.
Singh, Mr. S. N.
Spence, Mr. R. A.
Townsend, Mr. C. A. H.
Webb, Sir Montagu.
Willson, Mr. W. S. J.

The motion was negatived.

Dr. Nand Lal: The motion which I propose to move runs as follows:

"That the provision of Rs. 9 lakhs for payment to Local Governments for part services of their staff in income-tax work, under sub-head 'India' be reduced by Rs. 2,00,000."

Sir, I am not one of those who would seriously think that the local Governments should be deprived altogether of the money which may be due to them had they worked properly. But from the number of complaints which have reached me I can easily deduce that their staff and their employees who were entrusted with this work have not been working satisfactorily. Now according to the provisions of the Income-tax Act, returns would be submitted, properly subscribed

Mr. President: I want to know whether the Honourable Member is not discussing the same subject which we have been so far discussing. I gather from his opening remarks that the Honourable Member is proceeding to discuss the subject which we have been discussing for over an hour and three quarters.

Dr. Nand Lal: I am expressing my view as to why this cut should be made and the whole sum should not be given to the local Governments for the services rendered by them to the Central Government, so far as the assessment of Income-tax goes.

Mr. President: The Honourable Member is aware that this subject was discussed along with the question of the reorganisation of the Income-tax officers. I want to know whether the Honourable Member is proposing to continue that discussion.

Dr. Nand Lal: I, during my to-day's last speech, referred to the general phase of it. I am now referring to a particular item and a particular aspect of it. I will not take a minute so far as the general phase of the question goes. I will purely confine my remarks to the value of the services rendered by the local Governments for which they ask for a certain sum of money. I quite realise that I should work within the scope of this amendment and I can give an assurance that I shall not go beyond that scope. The reason why I move this amendment and ask that a cut amounting to 2 lakhs may be made is this, that some of the local Governments do not deserve the money which is being provided for under this item. (Cries of "Withdraw.") I shall see whether you lose your patience or I. When I am determined to do a thing I should do it because I think it is my duty. You are not approaching this amendment with the same seriousness as I do but I am very serious about it. The services must be paid for no doubt, but while we are making payment we ought to see whether the services in lieu of which we are being asked to make payment were good services or not.

Mr. President: This question has been discussed already and answered by Mr. Venkatarama Aiyar. The Honourable Member is not entitled to re-open that subject.

Dr. Nand Lal: May I understand that the Chair means to order that no argument with reference to the character of the services rendered by the local Governments in the direction of the collection of income-tax may be raised. If that is the ruling of the Chair, I shall bow to it.

Mr. President: The question which is raised by the Honourable Member has been already discussed in relation to the motion for reduction which preceded it. The two questions are closely related and I allowed the discussion to proceed on that basis, because otherwise it could serve no useful purpose. The Honourable Member is perfectly in order in asking for a decision whether this money shall be voted or not but he is not entitled to go into the merits of the question which, as I have already said, has been already discussed in the previous debate.

Dr. Nand Lal: I shall then offer my suggestion to the Honourable the Finance Member that he will convey my suggestion to the local Governments that their employees have not rendered full services in the manner we had expected. Since I am not allowed to pursue my arguments further, I will finish with this final suggestion which I repeat that the Honourable the Finance Member will convey an expression of our opinion that we are not satisfied with the working of the employees of the local Governments in this direction, namely, the manner in which they assessed and collected the Income-tax.

Mr. Harchandrai Vishindas: Sir, I move:

"That the provision for Bombay under the head 'Taxes on Income' be reduced by Rs. 100."

The object of this motion of mine is similar to the one in my previous amendment. I want to say that the Karachi staff, especially the subordinate staff of the income-tax department should be treated on the same footing as the Bombay staff, because the Karachi staff are equally worked as the Bombay staff, if not more. Now, in regard to the Customs Department I made a similar observation. The reply of the Member for Commerce and Industry was that as this work had been delegated to the local Governments they do the proper distribution between Bombay and Karachi and therefore it was not open to the consideration of the Central Government. My reply is that this is really not an admissible or a valid argument, because as the income-tax revenue is under our control, we have a voice in the matter and how can we have a voice in the matter if the Central Government throws its responsibility off its shoulders and delegates it to the local Government. The question is whether or not we can make suggestions for the consideration of the Central Government. If we are told that the local Governments make these distributions, then we are abdicating our functions. Therefore I think that the proper course for the Government would be to certainly investigate by inquiries or otherwise whether or not our complaints are correct and the fact that the distribution of this expenditure is delegated to the Bombay Government should not relieve the Central Government of its responsibility. That is all my intention.

[Mr. Harchandrai Vishindas.]

Mr. A. V. V. Aiyar: Income-tax officers in Bombay and Sind unlike Customs officers are entirely under the Government of India. We are prepared to note the suggestion which the Honourable Member has made in regard to the disparity in rates between the two places.

Mr. Harchandrai Vishindas: I beg for leave to withdraw my amendment.

The amendment was, by leave of the Assembly, withdrawn.

Mr. J. Ramayya Pantulu: I move:

"That the demand under the head 'Taxes on Income' be reduced by Rs. 100."

My object in moving this amendment is to draw the attention of Government to one or two points in connection with the administration of the Income-tax Act in connection with the assessment of the income of Firming. Some of the matters I am going to refer to are dealt with in the rules issued under the Act but apparently those rules are not being properly carried out. I therefore wish to draw the attention of Government to some of the grievances that the people in the mufassal seem to be labouring under. I am instructed by a friend of mine, an important merchant in the Godavari District, to point out that when one of the partners to a firm contributes capital to the firm on the understanding that he should get interest for his capital, and that after the interest has been deduced, the profits should be shared amongst the partners, the interest paid to the financing parties from the profit for the purposes of taxing the firm to income-tax, that is, the firm is assessed on the profits including the interest which is really paid to one of the partners. I see that there is a rule in the rules issued under the Act that where one of the partners contributes the capital and he is entitled by an agreement that he enters into with the other partners to interest upon the capital and the claim for interest can be enforced in a civil court, the interest paid to him should be deducted from the profits on which the firm is liable to be taxed. But I understand that this rule is not strictly enforced, and I therefore think that the Government should issue instructions to the Income-tax establishments to interpret the rule in a sympathetic manner and make allowance for the interest paid on the capital so borrowed.

Another instance, Sir, in which some hardship is caused is when a firm borrows money in one year and pays interest thereon in the next year. I am told that no deduction is made for the payment of interest so made because the money is not borrowed in the year in which interest is paid. I should not have believed such a thing if it had not actually been put to me by a responsible and respectable merchant. You borrow money in the year 1923 and you pay interest thereon in the year 1924, and in assessing you for income-tax for the year 1924 the income-tax officer, I am told, makes no allowance for the interest paid in that year because the money is not borrowed in that year but in the previous year. I do not think that is a proper thing to do.

Then, there is another point, Sir, which I wish to bring to the notice of Government. Under the old Act interest was liable to be assessed to income-tax if it accrued though it has not been actually collected. Under the present rules only the interest that is collected is liable to income-tax. Now, suppose interest which has accrued in the last few years has been assessed to income-tax from year to year, as it accrued and suppose all that is collected in this year, then it is liable to be taxed because it is income actually received. But that amount has already been taxed in previous years because it accrued in those years, and thus there is double assessment. The assessee has no means of showing that this sum has been already assessed in the previous years, because he has not got the details of the sum on which he has been assessed in the previous years. Those details are only available with the assessing officer. It may very easily be that though an assessee has been assessed on certain sums of money on account of interest which has accrued in previous years, but was not collected, he is again assessed on the same income in a succeeding year when it is actually collected. It should be in the power of the assessee to show that he is not liable to be taxed again because that amount has already been taxed. For that purpose he must have with him information to show that these amounts have been already taxed. That information is with the assessing officer, though it does not appear in the order of assessment. I propose, therefore, that the assessing officer should be instructed to give a copy of the details of the assessment to the assessee if he asks for it. Otherwise he cannot show that he has already paid the tax on an amount on which it is proposed to tax him again. These are the points which I wish to bring to the notice of Government.

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: Sir, I do not think that the Honourable Member who made this motion will expect me to deal across the floor of the House with the somewhat intricate detailed methods of assessing a very difficult tax. If the Honourable Member will let me have an explanation of the exact point which he wants looked into, I shall be very happy to do so at once.

The motion was, by leave of the Assembly, withdrawn.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That a sum not exceeding Rs. 58,93,000 be granted to the Governor General in Council to defray the charges which will come in course of payment during the year ending the 31st day of March, 1924, in respect of 'Taxes on Income'."

The motion was adopted.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey (Home Member): I understand that this morning suggestions were made with a view to the re-arrangement of the demands for grant in an order in which the Assembly would find it most convenient to debate them. I have consulted with some of our friends and with your permission, Sir, we propose to take, beginning from to-morrow, the demands in the following order:

[Sir Malcolm Hailey.]

- No. 8 Railways.
- No. 3 Salt.
- No. 4 Opium.
- No. 14 General Administration.
- No. 10 Posts and Telegraphs.
- No. 11 Indo-European Telegraph.
- No. 7 Forests.
- No. 6 Stamps.
- No. 5 Excise.
- No. 12 Interest on debt and sinking funds.
- No. 43 Stationery and printing.
- No. 34 Commercial Intelligence.

We propose that after further consultation we should to-morrow evening issue a further list giving the order in which the remaining grants should be taken. I believe from what I have heard that the order of demands which I have read out to the House will suit its convenience, and it will also suit Government if the debate is taken in that order.

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas: I have only one suggestion to make with regard to the statement made by the Honourable the Leader of the House. I wonder if the Honourable the Leader of the House is aware that a suggestion was made this morning in the House for an informal committee. But, apart from that I thought that before making the statement to-morrow it would be to the convenience of some of us here if the Honourable the Leader of the House and the Honourable the Finance Member could consult some of us as to which items should be taken first.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: I am sorry that Mr. Jamnadas was omitted from the consultation; but this statement I have made is, of course, the result of consultation. I should not have drawn up such a list without seeking advice on the subject.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar (Madras: Nominated Non-Official): I may mention that I consulted many of my Honourable friends as regards the order in which these demands should be taken. The feeling is that we should have some of these important subjects first disposed of, so that when the final day comes we may not be hurried in the disposal of these important subjects. I therefore told the Honourable the Leader of the House and the Honourable the Finance Member that this would be the best order in which the subjects may be discussed; and I think that is agreeable to most of us here.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: If I had had more time, and if the House had not been busily engaged at the moment, I should of course have asked Members of the various Parties in the House to meet me and discuss the matter. I regret I had no opportunity of doing so, but I understood that the matter had been previously discussed between parties in the House, and that very list represented the conclusions to which they had come.

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas: Sir, my only object in pointing that out was that some items should not be left out, because I do feel that even in this list some important items that we should like to consider have been left out.

Mr. R. A. Spence: May I ask, Sir, with a view to our not being hurried, whether you are going to fix any time this week for our sitting—are we going to sit till 7 or 8?

Mr. President: That depends entirely upon the sense of the House as gathered by the Chair. I may point out that the Punjab Legislative Council recently sat till 10-30 p.m. on one day.

Chaudhri Shahab-ud-Din (East Central Punjab: Muhammadan): Till 10-15 p.m., I was there.

Mr. President: The arrangement proposed by the Honourable the Leader of the House is not only eminently suitable but is certainly in order, and we shall follow that course.

The Assembly then adjourned till Eleven of the Clock on Tuesday, the 13th March, 1923.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

Tuesday, 13th March, 1923.

The Assembly met in the Assembly Chamber at Eleven of the Clock.
Mr. President was in the Chair.

DATE OF FUTURE SESSIONS OF THE LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey (Home Member): I am sorry that I was not in my place yesterday when my Honourable friend Mr. Chatterjee kindly accepted a number of inquiries on my behalf regarding the future sittings of the Assembly. I am now able to announce that there will be a Summer Session of the Assembly. It has been arranged provisionally that this will commence on the 2nd of July. This date has been arranged with the assent of the President.

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas (Bombay City: Non-Muhammadan Urban): Can the Honourable Member give us any idea as to how long the Session is likely to last?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: I am afraid not, but we anticipate in the light of the business that we can foresee that it will be a short Session.

Mr. K. Ahmed (Rajshahi Division: Muhammadan Rural): What about the September Session as usual? Do I understand that instead of the September Session, we are going to have a July Session?

Mr. President: I understand that the Honourable Member will probably be engaged at that time in meeting his constituents.

THE BUDGET—LIST OF DEMANDS.

SECOND STAGE—contd.

RAILWAYS.

The Honourable Mr. O. A. Innes (Commerce and Industries Member): I beg to move, Sir:

"That a sum not exceeding Rs. 54,47,79,000 be granted to the Governor General in Council to defray the charge which will come in course of payment during the year ending the 31st day of March, 1924, in respect of 'Railways'."

Mr. P. P. Ginwala (Burma: Non-European): I beg to move:

"That the Demand under the head Railways, sub-heading Working Expenses be reduced by Rs. 4 crores."

This is a slight verbal modification of the amendment No. 173 which stands in my name. It was all along my intention to confine my arguments solely to the reduction of working expenses and I did not wish to touch upon any other items, so far as this amendment was concerned. Sir, a layman like myself handling figures against the financial experts of the Government of India is necessarily at a great disadvantage for it is very difficult for him sometimes to follow the reasoning of our financial experts.

[Mr. P. P. GINWALA.]

To give an instance yesterday, we moved a reduction of Rs. 4 lakhs under the head Customs and the Honourable the Finance Member got up and said that the effect of that would be to increase the deficit by one crore of rupees. Applying that principle, I feel that if I succeed in carrying this amendment of mine, the deficit will be increased by 100 crores. That, however, is the difference between the expert and the lay mind and as the difference is of a permanent character, I suppose it must be allowed to remain. Subject to that limitation, I would invite the attention of the House to a few figures. The original Budget estimate as framed and presented to this House on the 1st of March for working expenses was Rs. 66.51 crores. Now, it has been reduced to Rs. 63.51 crores. It is stated that by this further reduction of 3 crores, Government have given substantial effect to the recommendation of the Inchcape Committee. No doubt, there is a literal compliance with the recommendation of the Inchcape Committee in that adjustment. But I venture to submit to the House that it does not give effect to the implications or rather the opinions of the Inchcape Committee taken as a whole as embodied in the Chapter on Railways. It is within the recollection of the House that the Inchcape Committee laid down a broad general principle that as compared to the Budget estimate for 1922-23 there shall be a reduction of $4\frac{1}{2}$ crores but that as compared with the proposed budget for the present year there shall be a reduction of $3\frac{1}{2}$ crores. In coming to that conclusion they adopted rather a peculiar line of reasoning. They say at page 76 of the Report, paragraph 30, in effect that first of all there was a reduction of 4 per cent. on the estimated revenues, and therefore there ought to have been an automatic reduction of 4 per cent. on the expenditure, and by this reasoning they arrive at the conclusion that as compared with the budget estimate for 1922-23 the estimate for 1923-24 ought to have been less by 2.44 crores, but that, compared to the preliminary estimate for 1924, it ought to have been less by 165 lakhs. Then they go on to say that if the railway administration carry out their other recommendations suggesting economies in certain directions, (but apart from the drop in the price of materials,) the Railway Administration ought to be able to reduce their expenditure by, say, an additional one crore and 75 lakhs. It is in that way that they get their figure of $4\frac{1}{2}$ crores as compared to the budget estimate for 1922-23, and $3\frac{1}{2}$ crores as compared to that of 1923-24. It is a very curious circumstance that in coming to their conclusion they should have forgotten many recommendations that they had made earlier in the Report, and which apparently have not been taken into account in stating their conclusion in those words which you find at the end of the chapter, clause 6 of the conclusions. My submission to the House is this, that though in so many words they only recommend a reduction of $4\frac{1}{2}$ crores on the budget estimate for 1922-23, they really intended to recommend a reduction of at least 8 crores, if not more, and this is how I work out the figures. I will give the figures in their proper order.

	Rs.
Budget estimate, 1922-23	67.99 crores.
Revised estimate according to the Memorandum furnished by the Chief Commissioner	66.33 " being a saving of	1.73 " on the actual figures.

The Inchcape Committee had not apparently the correct figures for they estimated the actual saving at 1.15 crores, but according to this Memorandum, it should be 1.73 crores, that is to say on the actual figures. But if you take the hypothetical basis applied by the Inchcape Committee, it ought to be 2.44 crores. Then at page 76 also, paragraph 29, they deal with what is called the Programme expenditure on revenue account. The original estimate of 1922-23 was $12\frac{1}{2}$ crores and apparently that was going to be the estimate for this next year in furtherance of a general policy, which it seems has been laid down by the Railway Administration and is to be followed for a series of years. The Inchcape Committee remark in connection with this:

"As a result of our consideration we are of opinion that the budget provision for programme revenue expenditure in 1923-24 should be limited to 9 crores, and that the Agents of individual railways should be empowered to utilise the amounts allocated to their railways at their discretion for either additional repairs or renewals, which, as we have already pointed out, are very closely inter related."

So that there is a clean cut there of $3\frac{1}{2}$ crores, not for every year, but at any rate for the present year, 1923-24.

Then take another heading, the Staff, page 72, paragraph 22. They have come to the conclusion that the Railway Administration is over-staffed and that substantial reductions are necessary, and they point to the very laudable instance of the Great Indian Peninsula Railway which proposes to reduce its staff by 50 lakhs of rupees in this year 1923-24. After referring to the Great Indian Peninsula Railway, they go on to observe:

"Other Agents stated they were gradually affecting reductions, but we consider that in present financial circumstances the employment of staff in excess of requirements cannot be justified. We recommend that a further saving of at least rupees one crore should be effected in salaries and wages in 1923-24."

This gives us an additional one crore, which added to the 50 lakhs of the Great Indian Peninsula, makes a saving of a crore and a half.

Take another item, Fuel. Under Fuel, they budgeted for 10 crores 2 lakhs for 1922-23. They saved about 38 lakhs actually in fuel last year, and according to the Memorandum of the Chief Commissioner, they expect a saving of one crore of rupees on fuel during the present year. I refer to paragraph 19 of the Memorandum where it says:

"The provision in the budget for fuel in the current year was placed at rupees 10.02 crores as compared with the actual expenditure of 9.79 crores in 1921-22. In the revised estimate it has been reduced to 9.64 crores; (that is about 38 crores reduction) due to a smaller quantity of imported coal having been purchased."

The budget for 1923-24 provides for Rs. 8.69 crores. Therefore there is a reduction of at least one crore, if not more, compared to the budget estimate for 1922-23. It really comes to a crore and 30 lakhs. The Inchcape Committee, in referring to that, says at the bottom of page 67:

"In view of all the circumstances we are of opinion that a considerable reduction in the expenditure on fuel should be possible in 1923-24 and we understand that it is proposed to reduce the estimate to Rs. 8.68 lakhs by an arbitrary cut of 1 crore on the demands made by the Agents, included in the preliminary estimates for 1923-24."

So they do not consider the reduction of one crore too high. In fact upon the figures appearing in the Memorandum, compared to 1922-23, there ought to be a reduction of at least one and a quarter crores, but I have taken only one crore. Now, if you total up only these four items which I have mentioned, namely, the actual saving during the current year of 1.73 crores, the recommended reduction of 3.50 on the revenue programme expenditure, a crore and a half on the staff and one crore on the fuel, you get a total reduction of 7.73 crores on the budget estimate for 1922-23, whereas, if you take the Inchcape Committee's hypothetical basis, in deriving the saving which, I submit, is the basis upon which any business man would act, namely, that if there is a fall in revenue there ought to be a corresponding fall in expenditure,—you get these figures, 2.44, + 3.50 + 1.50 + one crore, or a total reduction of 8.44 on the budget estimate for 1922-23. Now, if you deduct from the budget estimate of 1922-23, which was 67.99 crores this first total, namely, 7.73, you get 60.26 crores, which ought to have been the budget estimate for this year. But, if you take this 67.99 crores and deduct from that 8.44 crores, which, I submit, is the correct recommendation of the Inchcape Committee, you get 59.55 crores, which is just under 4 crores less than the revised estimate which is presented now of 63.51 crores. So that I venture to submit that, whichever figure you take, there is an excess of about 4 crores in the estimate submitted by the Honourable the Finance Member over what the Inchcape Committee actually recommended. If it is our intention, and if it is the intention of the Government that we must do our best to wipe out this year's deficit, it would be their duty first of all to convince the House that they have done their best and that they are doing their best to reduce their expenditure. If they are able to convince us, we should be the last persons to refuse them any additional taxation that is required. But under these conditions which I have just now mentioned to the House and having regard to the figures, it is perfectly plain that, unless they reduce their estimate by at least four crores of rupees, they would not be doing that which every Member in this House expects them to do, namely, to cut down their expenditure with due regard to efficiency to the lowest possible minimum.

[Mr. P. P. Ginwala.]

The figures which I have given do not make any allowance for many other causes which may lead to the reduction of expenditure. No doubt we shall be met with certain arguments such as that the staff cannot all at once be reduced, that there may be more fuel used if there is more traffic, and so on; but remembering all these circumstances, there is yet much to look to by way of economy. First of all, I will refer to the drop in prices of materials. Except perhaps, with reference to fuel, there is no account taken whatsoever in my figures of the general drop in prices. We have no evidence, so far as I know, upon which the House can definitely act as to what that drop is, but we have some indication in the Memorandum of the Chief Commissioner himself from which we can reasonably deduce what may be expected. When he deals with the revenue programme of 12½ crores, he suggests a reduction of one crore. That, I take it, is mainly due to the drop in prices of materials. So that, if you take that as your basis, namely, one crore in every 12½ crores, you will probably find that there is room for a further reduction of 3 or 4 crores only on the ground of a drop in prices.

Then, there is one other item that also deals with this revenue programme expenditure. There is no more damning condemnation of the system adopted by the Government in their valuation of depreciation than is to be found in the remarks of the Inchcape Committee. The Government apparently seem to follow what I may describe as the actuarial basis.

that is to say, they fix the life of a locomotive at 25 years or of the rails at 30 years and something else at so many years. When that period has expired they think it is their duty to scrap those articles. I want to ask Honourable Members whether in insuring their own lives they would follow that principle. If an actuary told them that the insurable value of their lives is 20 years, will they after 20 years, commit suicide? I can see no distinction whatsoever between that and the principle that is followed by the Government. You cannot scrap locomotives, for instance, simply because they are 20 or 25 years old. Any Honourable Member from Bombay or Calcutta would tell the Railway Administration how they manage repairs and renewals to their machinery in their mills. They do not scrap their machinery simply because their adviser has told them that it ought to be scrapped after 25 years. Sir, there is a very pathetic story here in this Inchcape Committee's Report of how an Agent tried to persuade the Railway Administration that it was not necessary to go in for a length of 60 miles track. (A Voice: "What page.") Page 65. That, as I say, is a very pathetic account of what takes place in our Railway Administration. The Report says:

"It was represented to us by one of the Agents that a considerable portion of the expenditure on his Railway was for renewals which were in his opinion absolutely unnecessary and that 60 miles of line to be renewed in 1923-24 and a similar mileage in 1924-25 could easily be strengthened at about one-third of the cost to last a further 15 or 20 years."

This is how the Chief Commissioner meets him:

"On the other hand the Chief Commissioner stated that the renewals were part of a programme framed with a view to avoiding the necessity of having to renew any unduly large portion of the line in any one year, which would mean a large financial outlay and considerable interference with traffic working."

Then the Inchcape Committee go on to say that that was not the way the Railway Board ought to carry on its business; it ought to be left to the discretion of the Agents. I do not think I am exaggerating the case when I state that most Members of this House will agree with the remarks of the Inchcape Committee and of this Agent, whoever this unfortunate individual was, whose advice was not accepted by the Railway Board. It is all very well to talk of inconvenience, but the far more important thing is balancing the budget and saving public money. It may be that they may be inconvenienced if this procedure is adopted, but that, I say, is a comparatively small matter, and no business man, I venture to submit, will scrap 60 miles of track simply on the ground of inconvenience alone. As I said before, any Honourable Member from Bombay, for instance, my friend, Mr. Manmohandas Ramji, or Sir Campbell Rhodes, from Bengal or anybody else, who has experience of these things, will be able to tell you that that is the most unbusinesslike way of dealing with renewals and repairs. No business man follows this method in practice. So that, far from this 9 crores which the Inchcape Committee allowed for the revenue programme being unduly small, I say it is excessive. The whole system must be thoroughly overhauled and if possible, pending an investigation into it the whole of this 9 crores ought to be saved, if the Railway Board find no other way of making these renewals in a business-like fashion. I think, I can fairly claim that there has not been a single occasion when I have spoken in this House in favour of any proposition which is likely to interfere either with our revenue departments or with our business departments, if expenditure is necessary; but I must protest against the manner in which the Railway Administration is conducted and their business methods, or rather I should say their unbusinesslike methods. Then again you will find, that in dealing with stores, for instance, they speak of "an excessive quantity stores" at page 78. Now, I do not know I will try to get the figures—they are not given in any of the documents supplied to us—as to how much stores they are going to purchase out of revenue during the next year; but if what the Inchcape Committee say is right, that they are overstocked with stores, then there must be room for economising in the purchase of stores within the next twelve months.

[Mr. P. P. Ginwala.]

There I have pointed out at least three sources from which further economies could be effected, if the Railway Administration made up their minds to do so; and if they did so there is ample provision in those economies for what the Honourable the Finance Member described as "lag" in connection with the reduction of staff and other matters. A proposal has been made for increased taxation. It has been condemned in the country so far as the Salt Tax is concerned, not on economic grounds, I admit, but on political grounds. I say that political grounds in this particular case are far more important than economic grounds. I have no hesitation in saying that for I am not one of those who would go out of my way to give an advantage to my political opponent. I know he will make capital out of this against me at the election and I am not going to give my enemy an advantage. I put it plainly and simply on that ground, and this House will be perfectly justified in refusing any further additional taxation from salt only on that ground. Under the circumstances on economic grounds it is not necessary to discuss. If the Budget has to be balanced, the expenditure on railways must be reduced by a further 4 crores, and I do not believe that the Railway Administration will suffer in the point of efficiency by that reduction in spite of what the Honourable the Finance Member said yesterday. I do not think there will be a deficit of 100 crores if we reduce this estimate by 4 crores on the basis employed by the Honourable the Finance Member yesterday; and in any case the Railway Administration would be able to prove what they have failed to prove up to now—that they have at least some business ability to handle with a difficult financial situation by making both ends meet without affecting efficiency in any way. The Inchcape Committee, I need not remind the House, consisted of business men who knew what they were talking about but who forgot to say in so many words what they actually intended. There was satisfaction in the House when it was represented to it that the Government had given effect, more or less full effect, to the recommendations of the Inchcape Committee. That may be literally true, but I venture to submit that that was not the intention of the Inchcape Committee, in so far as it can be gathered from the Report read as a whole. It is the duty of this House, after having insisted upon the appointment of a Retrenchment Committee, to see that its recommendations are fully accepted by the Government. If it does not do that, it might just as well have not asked for the appointment of that Committee at all. It is not necessary to attribute any infallibility to the Inchcape Committee; but I do not believe that if Government wanted to take advice from business men they could have selected a better lot of men than those who sat on that Committee; and for that reason alone, subject to whatever correction the Government may choose to make in my interpretation of the Inchcape Committee's Report, it is the imperative duty of the House to accept this amendment. I move it, Sir.

Mr. S. C. Shahani (Sind Jagirdars and Zamindars : Landholders): Sir, I beg to support the amendment that has been proposed by my Honourable friend Mr. Ginwala; and the reasons why I support this amendment are these. I would request the Honourable Members to look at page 22 of the Explanatory Memorandum on the Railway Budget for 1923-24. On this page they will find a statement of the working expenses of the railways from 1917 to 1923. I would request the Honourable Members to note the figures that are given there. In the year 1917 the working expenses amounted to 31.34 crores; in 1918 to 37.06 crores; in 1919-20 to 45.45 crores; in 1920-21 to 54.51 crores; in 1921-22 to 65.66 crores; and in 1922, revised Budget, to 66.33 crores. The estimated working expenses for the year 1923-24 amount to 66.51 crores, minus of course the 3 crores that have been deducted in accordance with the recommendations of the Inchcape Committee. I would now request the Honourable Members to compare the 1917 figures on the one hand, and the 1922 revised estimates on the other, and to note the increase in the working expenditure amounting to 35 crores. Then I would request the Honourable Members to compare the gross receipts of the railways during the same period. I have worked out these figures. The net receipts are given on page 23. If you add the working expenses and the net receipts, you find that the gross receipts amounted in the year 1917 to 68.90 crores, in 1918-19 to 76.24 crores, in 1919-20 to 79.08 crores; in 1920-21 to 80.97 crores, in 1921-22 to 81.69 crores, and in 1922-23, revised estimates, to 92.07 crores. The estimates for the present year will be 95.57 crores. Now if we compare the gross receipts of 1917-18 with the gross receipts of 1922-23, we find that the increase in the gross receipts has been 23.17 crores. I want the Honourable Members to note that while the increase in the gross receipts amounts to 23.17 the increase in the working expenditure amounts to 35 crores, and after the cut of 3 crores referred to above, to 32 crores. The increase in the receipts has been due to the higher rates. The increase in the working expenses has been something abnormal. I would request Honourable Members to bear with me a little and look into the statement of demands for expenditure chargeable to revenue in India—page 4, appendix B. Here the main heads of the working expenditure are given. The first is maintenance; the second is operative expenses, divisible again into general superintendence and running expenses, and the third the programme revenue expenditure. I request the Honourable Members to note that the programme revenue expenditure budgeted in 1922-23 amounted to 11.81 crores. The whole of this amount was not expended upon the railways during the year, probably because materials were not available; there was a slight fall in prices, and on account of other causes. Only 9.47 crores were spent upon the programme revenue expenditure; that is to say, 2.34 crores were left. I want the Honourable Members to note that this programme revenue expenditure is really not a part of the working expenditure, and that but for this unspent balance of the programme revenue expenditure amounting to 2.34 crores, the Chief Commissioner of Railways would have shown a deficit and not a surplus. The total working expenses in 1922-23 amount to 71.36 crores in the budget, and to 70.22 crores in the revised estimates; that is to say, the saving amounts to 1.14 crores only as against an unspent balance of 2.34 crores. As it has been already rightly pointed out by the Inchcape Committee it is a bad principle to include programme revenue expenditure in working expenditure. The suggestion that the Committee make is certainly worthy to be adopted, namely, that a sinking fund should replace the programme revenue expenditure. Take the year 1922-23. If the programme revenue expenditure had been set apart and not included in the working expenditure last year, what would have been the result? The result would have been that this amount of 2.34 crores would have been available this year for the repairs and renewals of the railways. The railways got into disrepair during the war, and it is on that account, it has to be remembered that we have to incur such a large expenditure on repairs and renewals now. On account of a bad system of book-keeping this amount for repairs and renewals comes to be included in the ordinary working expenses, and the Chief Commissioner of Railways is able, of course nominally, to show a surplus.

[Mr. S. C. Shahani.]

I would now request Honourable Members to look at pages 80 to 85 of this Appendix B. I am seeking to make out that the expenditure that is being gone in for on the railways is abnormal. I want therefore that the Honourable Members should realise that a very large number of officers is being unnecessarily employed. On pages referred to above you will find the officers drawing Rs. 1,000 and more are enumerated—Chief Commissioner of Railways, Members, Chief Engineers, Chief Mechanical Engineers, Secretary and so on. I have put together the number of officers that have been employed. Of course here, as elsewhere whole lists are not available; and I would collaterally request the railway authorities to kindly supply a complete list of the more important officers so that we may be in a position to institute comparisons; but such information as has been furnished leads us to realise that the number of highly paid officers employed on the various railways is much too large. On the Bengal Nagpur Railway we have 174 officers, and the total mileage is 2,820; on the Bombay, Baroda and Central India Railway the total number of officers is 170, while the total mileage is 3,641; on the Eastern Bengal Railway the total number of officers, drawing of course more than Rs. 1,000, is 91, while the total mileage is 1,734; on the East Indian Railway the total number of officers is 208 while the total mileage is 2,773; on the Great Indian Peninsula Railway we have got 223 officers when the total mileage is 3,335; on the Madras and Southern Mahratta Railway we have 115 officers and the total mileage is 2,938; on the North-Western Railway we have 208 officers while the total mileage is 5,682; on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway we have 53 officers while the total mileage is 1,625; on the South Indian Railway we have 50 officers while the mileage is 1,850. Now, if we compare these figures we realise what a waste of public money is made in the expenditure on railways. Contemplate kindly the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway with a total mileage of 1,625 and with 53 officers; take then the Great Indian Peninsula Railway which has got 223 officers while the total mileage is 3,335; the mileage is double or slightly more than double, but the number of officers employed is four times as much. Then kindly contemplate the Eastern Bengal State Railway with 1,734 miles and 91 officers while the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway, with which I began, has only 53 officers although the mileage is about the same—1,625. (Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: "They are State-managed railways.") I am going to show that company management is not so good as it is represented to be. The Great Indian Peninsula Railway for instance has four times as many officers as the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway. That is however by the by. But contemplate these sets of conditions to which I have referred, and you will realise that even when you make allowance for the variation of conditions you find that there is great room for economy in the Railway expenditure.

I would now request you to look at page 10 and a few following pages of the same Appendix. Here we find revenue receipts and working expenses for 1921-22 to 1923-24. You find on comparison that on the Bengal Nagpur Railway the working expenses amounted to Rs. 303 lakhs in 1918-19; in 1923-24 they are estimated at 498 lakhs. On the Bombay, Baroda and Central India the working expenses amounted to 419 lakhs in 1918-19, while they are estimated at 813 lakhs in 1923-24. Every other line shows excessive rise in working expenses between 1918 and 1923. Eastern Bengal Railway 225 lakhs against 431, East Indian Railway 465 against 1,017, Great Indian Peninsula Railway 728 against 1,143, Madras and Southern Mahratta Railway 290 against 532, North Western Railway 686 against 1,212, Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway 132 against 260, South Indian Railway 157 against 372. Here too, I would request you will consider with some care one or two sets of conditions. Take the Eastern Bengal Railway; and you will find that the working expenses in 1918 amounted to 225, whereas the working expenses are now estimated at 431. Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway shows 132 lakhs in 1918, but its working expenses are estimated at 260. South Indian Railway shows 157 in 1918 and 372 now. And note the mileage too of these Railways. Eastern Bengal Railway a mileage of 1,734, Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway of 1,625, South Indian Railway of 1,850. Now this mileage will be approximately, roughly of course, the same, still what a difference do you find in the working expenses. On the Eastern Bengal Railway you have 225 lakhs as against 135 on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway and against 157 on the South Indian Railway. Then contemplate one other condition of things, and it is this. On the Bombay, Baroda and Central India Railway the working expenses for 1918 amounted to 419, and in 1923-24 they have been estimated at 813. On the Great Indian Peninsula Railway the working expenses for 1918 were 728, and now they have been estimated at 1,143. Now is not all this exceptionally irregular and abnormal? I would earnestly request the Honourable Members to remember these figures which show such an abnormal increase in the working expenses of the railways and to go in for the cut that has been proposed by my friend, Mr. Ginwala. I think we may experience a sniff such as we experienced when we proposed a cut in the Customs expenditure, but I would request the Honourable Members who are in the habit, I think, of vying with each other in outbursts of admiration to remember that these sniffs ought not to be allowed. We now have the fiscal autonomy; and the executive Government has no business to seek to minimise that privilege. If, for instance, we are told that although we pass any Resolutions, we may take it no effect will be given to it we might, I think, very kindly but very firmly put our hand down on any nonsense of that kind. I would request the House to bear this in mind and go boldly forward proposing cuts in all exceptionally irregular expenditure. It is no use enduring abnormal expenditure any longer. The finances of the country have been disorganised, and we realise on studying facts and figures that it is time and high time that we intervened and boldly came forward to suggest necessary reductions of expenditure. If we feel convinced that the reduction in expenditure proposed by us is reasonable, we need not be afraid of any threats that may be held out to us. Excessive expenditure has been a continual theme of discussion in the country, and every effort must be made to end it.

Sir Montagu Webb (Bombay: European): Sir, I find myself in considerable sympathy with the Mover of this motion. I think that the recommendations which Lord Inchcape's Committee have made, are deserving of the most serious study revealing, as they do, in the Railway Department, opportunities for many savings and retrenchments which I trust Government will be able to make. At the same time, I must point out that the Lord Incheape's Committee have made recommendations for very severe retrenchments both in regard to the expenditure from capital which comes out of loans and expenditure from current revenue in respect of maintenance and working expenses. These proposed retrenchments are so severe that I am quite sure that will cause much anxiety among many of the sections of the community who make great use of the Railways. I should like to draw attention to one or two matters which show that all the statistics quoted by Lord Incheape's Committee cannot be accepted at their face value so readily as my Honourable friend, Mr. Shahani, would have us to believe. Now the Retrenchment Committee have prepared a statement of ten of the leading Railways of India showing their receipts and working expenses; and as a result of that statement we find that the most unremunerative Railways in India are the North Western Railway, the Eastern Bengal Railway and the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway, all of them, be it noted, State-managed Railways. I have no doubt that the advocates and also the opponents of direct State-management will take careful note of this fact. Of these "unremunerative" Railways the worst is the North Western Railway—according to the Report of the Retrenchment Committee. Not only is it the worst statistically, but it is accused of "extravagance" in more than one department.

[Sir Montagu Webb.]

Now I want to draw the attention of the House to one or two important facts in this connection. The North Western Railway is the main arterial system of the Punjab and Sind, so that anything that is done that affects the efficiency of that Railway, must check the development of the Punjab and Sind. The first point I would like to draw the attention of the House to is this. In the North Western Railway system is included over 1,500 miles of strategic railways. These railways are maintained not for the benefit of the North Western Railway, not for the benefit of the Punjab and Sind, but for the benefit of all-India.

The second point to which I want to draw the attention of the House, is that the North Western Railway has to maintain locomotives and stock in order to be prepared for mobilization,—in case there is any difficulty in the North-West Frontier. That again is a matter which does not solely concern the North Western Railway the Punjab or Sind; but it concerns the whole of India. These two points are briefly referred to by the Retrenchment Committee, but I submit, Sir, that the importance which they deserve has not been adequately recognised by the Committee. But there is a third matter of far greater importance. As Honourable Members of this House are no doubt fully aware, the North Western Railway serves one of the largest wheat-growing tracts in the British Empire, possibly one of the largest wheat-growing tracts in the world. For the last three years, Sir, the export of wheat from India has been prohibited partly for economic reasons and partly for political reasons, and the result has been that the North Western Railway has been deprived of a very large portion of its long distance traffic. Most of this long distance wheat is conveyed 800, 900 or 1000 miles to the sea board. Now, Sir,

12 Noon statistics which altogether ignore the fact that one of the main sources of income of the North Western Railway had been checked owing to the prohibition of exports of wheat, statistics that do not take into account rolling stock for mobilization purposes or the 1,500 miles—think of the figure Sir,—1,500 miles of "strategic" railways maintained for the benefit of all India, can you be surprised that such statistics of the last three years are not very satisfactory? I submit, Sir, that no reliance as to whether the North Western Railway is "unremunerative" or not, can be placed upon figures which omit these considerations. If these considerations be fully weighed, and if we exclude the "strategic" railways and the mobilization consideration, I am confident that the North Western Railway on its commercial sections can earn 5 per cent. and more than 5 per cent. when normal conditions are restored. I would therefore ask the Government of India and the Commissioner for Railways in particular to be extremely careful how he accepts any recommendation of restricted expenditure on the North Western system on the ground that it is "unremunerative."

In the same way, Sir, I do not think that any reliance can be placed upon the figures which were quoted by my friend, Mr. Shahani, comparing the period immediately after the close of the war with the present day. We all know the reason why expenses of all railways and of all other businesses have greatly increased. It is also common knowledge that in this country that our Railway officers in the highest grades receive salaries on a far lower scale than is paid to officers of similar grades in other parts of the world, particularly in America. (Mr. Shahani: "Question.") If my Honourable friend who says "question" will investigate this matter himself he will find that what I have said is a fact. These are the reasons, Sir, which impel me to urge Government to exercise great caution in accepting the recommendations of the Retrenchment Committee in the matter of cutting down expenditure on renewals and maintenance and on capital outlay on the North Western Railway.

At the same time I confess when reading the Retrenchment Report, I do feel that Government ought to be able to save more than three crores of rupees on Railways; and although I am not prepared to jump quite so far as an additional cut of four crores which my friend, Mr. Ginwala, urges—I was not quite able to follow his figures fully,—still I do hope that Government will see their way to make a saving of more than the three crores which have been put down in the amended Demand.

Mr. B. S. Kamat (Bombay Central Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir I support Mr. Ginwala's amendment although I cannot accept his figures. Mr. Ginwala proposes to cut down 4 crores of rupees from the original demand as put forward by the Finance Member. That demand stands at 67 crores 47 lakhs. Mr. Ginwala, I think, wants 4 crores cut down from that. (Voices. "No. no. Four crores more. Cut down to 63.") In that case, Sir, I shall confine myself to my own amendment in which I propose that the demand for railways should be 64 crores as recommended by the Incheape Committee. Without formally moving my amendment I shall just speak on the general question of railways.

The Incheape Committee's Report, so far as the question of railways is concerned, has been a great eye-opener to me. That report gave me two good lessons. One was with respect to the exploding of certain military shibboleths, and the second was with reference to the railway budget. The story of waste, extravagance and negligent management which I believe the Incheape Committee has unfolded ought to be a lesson to every Legislator in this House and to Government as well. I attach a great deal of importance to the remarks made by the Incheape Committee about these matters for the simple reason that I believe that

[Mr. B. S. Kamat.]

Our general national finance depends upon railway finance. And further, the difference between solvency and insolvency, between a deficit and a surplus, from year to year, depends greatly upon the vigilance which both Government and this House exercise on the railway budget. Now, the Inchcape Committee has indicated directions in which the waste to which I have just referred goes on. Taking only one head, for instance, the Working Expenses and out of that the railway programme Revenue Expenditure they have pointed out how engines, for example, are actually lying surplus to the requirements of the railways and yet we are going to spend this year a great amount of money on engines. Taking only the revenue account of expenditure, in revenue account alone I believe Government propose to spend something like 12½ crores, or, if we follow this memorandum, 11½ crores of rupees on revenue programme expenditure, and out of that I find that Government want to spend on engines alone 1.66 crores; they want to spend on coaches 95 lakhs and on wagons they want to spend 1.23 crores, making a total of 3.84 crores of rupees on rolling stock and engines. Now, the House must bear in mind that in addition to expenditure on engines and rolling stock from revenue account, we gave Government authority to spend a capital sum of something like 38 crores of rupees, a big item which will react on the purchase of engines and rolling stock from the revenue account. I know we are not going to discuss to-day the capital side of the 38 crores of rupees, but that fact has some bearing on this sum of 3.84 crores for the simple reason that the Inchcape Committee has definitely told us that the number of engines and rolling stock, with reference to the needs of the railways, is in excess of requirements and yet we are going to spend 3.84 crores on engines and rolling stock in addition to the amount we shall spend from the capital account. Now, I know from the capital account we are going to spend in England something like 28 crores of rupees; in India we shall spend only 10 crores. Out of that 28 crores I certainly think that a large amount will be spent on engines and other rolling stock, and I ask the House and the Member in charge of this Department whether it is necessary to go in for this purchase of engines and locomotives in spite of the fact that the Inchcape Committee has told us not to do so on certain railways.

My friend, Mr. Ginwala has referred to the great waste under the head of the staff and that a saving could be made if we followed the recommendation of the Inchcape Committee. Then in connection with renewals again the Inchcape Committee's recommendations reveal the same tale. Now, if renewals are to be carried out on the scale which the railways are pursuing at the present moment, I believe it will lead to an extraordinary amount of wastage on many of the railways. I believe it will mean an extraordinary amount of wastage on many of the Railways. I do think this is a year when the renewals ought to be a little bit restricted in view of the fact that we have a very large deficit. The expenses on the traffic account also are, as the Inchcape Committee have pointed out, extremely heavy; and on the whole, on all these sides, the Locomotive Department on the traffic side, and on the general administration side there is plenty of room for the cutting down of the whole thing. Indeed if the whole of the recommendations are carried out in full, there ought to be a great deal of saving, as we have seen; and if the objection be that there ought to be a certain amount for "lag", the only reply to that is that probably we shall be able to save in many more directions than what Government are proposing to do themselves; further in the second place, I wish to point out that our receipts are likely to improve far better than what Government anticipate. My reasons for this view are these. In 1921-22, in spite of a bad year so far as trade was concerned, the receipts from railways were something like 81 crores of rupees. We have increased since then both the fares and the freight charges by say 25 per cent. Very well, if 25 per cent. is added to 81 crores, the receipts in 1921 it ought to be say 101 crores, not 95½ crores as the Government are forecasting. I know that probably there are one or two adverse circumstances, but we have a set-off in one or two favourable circumstances. In the first place, during the next year this increase in rates, both in fares and freight charges, will work throughout the 12 months. Last year it did not work throughout 12 months; and in the second place, there is the revival in trade. In 1921-22 the trade was very very slack compared to the next year, I expect. Therefore, on the ground that there is going to be a better revival of trade, and secondly that the new increased rates are going to work throughout the 12 months, there is every reasonable prospect that instead of our realizing 95½ crores, it is possible, if the whole 25 per cent. increase works that is one-fourth of the additional amount comes in, we shall expect receipts to the extent of something like 101 or 102 crores instead of the 95 crores—an increase of 6 or 7 crores. No doubt the whole thing will depend on the monsoon, but I do think on the whole that Government have underestimated their railway receipts, and there is a great deal of margin to cover the lag, or even to cover some of the drastic cuts which my friend, Mr. Ginwala, wants to carry out. It is possible, in spite of the Inchcape Committee's recommendations, to carry the economies still further, and although they recommend 4 crores 59 lakhs, it is possible to carry it out till further and to cover it by the expected receipts from railways to which I have drawn the attention of the Honourable Member. On these grounds, I support the large amount of cuts on the railway Demand which has been proposed.

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: Sir, Mr. Kamat has said that the first lesson he learnt from the Inchcape Committee's Report on Railways was that there had been waste, extravagance, and negligent management in the administration of those Railways. I propose, Sir, first to take up that point with reference to the Report of the Inchcape Committee, and then later to deal with Mr. Ginwala's somewhat extraordinary motion. Now, Sir, as regards this Report of the Inchcape Committee, in many ways it is a most valuable report. It has made suggestions which undoubtedly must be followed up, and will be followed up, but the Report has given rise to these remarks made by Mr. Kamat and also made by Mr. Ginwala, and that being so, I must claim liberty to defend the Railway Department against the criticisms made in that Report. The scheme of the Report is that it compares the working of the Indian Railways in 1913-14, with the working of the Indian Railways in 1921-22 and 1922-23. That was the method adopted by the Inchcape Committee in dealing with all the Departments of the Government of India. It was a rough and ready method, naturally it was the only method that the Inchcape Committee could adopt having regard to the time which they had at their disposal and the immense task which lay before them. Also, I may point out that it was a quite suitable method for adoption in regard to non-commercial Departments. But I dispute entirely the suitability of a method of that kind when you are dealing with a commercial subject like Railways. The Railways depend for their prosperity upon the trade of the country, the state of the trade in the country.

[Mr. C. A. Innes.]

and it is not fair to judge the working of the railways by comparing the figures of two years taken in isolation. Railways are a going concern and you have to judge them by their working over a series of years. The unsuitability of this method becomes all the more apparent when you consider the exact years selected for the purpose of comparison. As I have said, a railway depends for its financial results entirely upon the state of trade in the year; that is to say, it depends upon conditions entirely beyond its own control. Now, the first year taken for the purposes of this comparison is 1913-14. That was a year of record trade, record prosperity. The other years taken are 1921-22 and 1922-23. Those are years when India is in a trough of post-war depression. Now, let me prove that assertion. I will take as my criterion the import and export trade of 1921-22, as compared with the import and export trade of 1913-14. I have just got a proof copy of the Review of Trade for 1921-22. In that Review of Trade, the trade of that year has been re-valued at the prices in 1913-14. Now what does it show? It shows that there has been a drop in trade amounting to 121 crores of rupees. Again in 1919-20, there was a decrease in trade, as compared with 1913-14, of 128 crores; in 1920-21 a decrease of 113 crores. Now there you see the first explanation. You take one of the worst years you ever had, judged by the volume of trade, and you take one of the best years you have ever had, you lay the figures side by side, you hold up your hands in horror and say, 'how shocking!' It is not fair to the railways; nor does the story end there. Not only, as I say, are we in a trough of post-war depression, but also we are in the throes of rehabilitation. Everybody in this House knows that during the war years the Government of India took everything it could out of the railways and put nothing back. The consequence is that we are faced now with arrears of maintenance and arrears of renewals. Moreover, we have to buy the materials for that maintenance and for those renewals at topmost prices. Mr. Ginwala talked about the drop in prices. But we do not get the benefit of that drop in prices for a year or 18 months. We are passing into use now materials brought when prices were absolutely at their highest pitch. And what does that mean? Let me give you one instance. In 1913 the price of a ton of finished steel in England was 113 shillings, at the end of 1920 it was 359 shillings; and it is the same with every other material. Sleepers have gone up, from Rs. 4 for deodar to Rs. 8-8, sal sleepers Rs. 5 to Rs. 8-8; rails, in 1913 Rs. 130 a ton I think, now Rs. 158, and so on with all materials, and finally during the war, as everybody knows, the purchasing price of money decreased, with the result that there was an immense increase in the wages Bill. So there you have got your first explanation: arrears of renewal and maintenance to be completed, with materials purchased at topmost prices; a heavy increase in the wages Bill, combined with a period of great trade depression. Is it surprising that if you compare the figures of these last two years to the figures of 1913-14, a year of record prosperity, the results appear somewhat startling? But is that peculiar to Indian Railways? Certainly not. I have here an extract from the report of a speech made by the Chairman of one of an important British Railway Companies. What he said was this speaking in the year 1922:

"The volume of traffic both in passengers and goods was smaller than in 1913 and there was a corresponding reduction in train mileage. Our working costs had risen to more than double the 1913 costs."

That is precisely what has happened in the Indian railways. In paragraph 1 of the Inchcape Report it is stated that the working expenses have gone up since 1913-14 by 131 per cent. If you exclude our programme revenue expenditure, that is our special expenditure from revenue upon renewals, the figure is 114 per cent. That is roughly what has happened to British Railways according to this Chairman of one of the important British Railway Companies, namely, that the working cost had gone up to more than double. If you apply the same method to the accounts of that company, if you point out that their train mileage had decreased considerably and their working expenses had gone up by double, you get very much the same results as the Inchcape Committee has brought out against the Indian Railways. Now, taking a broad view, has the management of our Railways been so disgraceful as Mr. Ginwala would make out? As I have said, you cannot take Railways and judge them by the working of single years; you must judge them over a series of years. Now, what has India made from Railways in the years since 1916-17? It has made a net revenue of over 46 crores of rupees. In the last three years naturally we have not earned our interest, we have not covered our interest charges. The figures given in this report are wrong, because in 1921-22 it shows a loss of 9 crores of rupees; but it is not a real loss. You took 6 crores out of the Railways in the shape of surtax. It came out of Railways. So, if you take that 6 crores, your loss that year was 3 crores. This year it is 1½ crores, and next year we hope it will be smaller still. We hope to cover our interest charges and get a little more. Over this series of years the Indian Railways have been paying the Indian tax-payer a net revenue of 6 per cent. Is that so bad? Compare then the operating ratio of these Indian Railways with the operating ratio of Railways in other countries. I have the figures here. Now, Sir, the operating ratio of the Indian Railways in 1921-22 was 80 per cent. If you give us credit for surtax you took out of us it is 75 per cent. In 1922-23 it was 72 per cent. In 1923-24, we hope to bring it down to 69.5 per cent. In 1920, the operating ratio for the Canadian Railways was	...	97 per cent.

English Railways	...	98 "
France, Northern Railway	...	140 "
Eastern Railway	...	121 "
Paris-Lyons-Mediterranean	...	115 "
State Railways generally	...	157 "
Belgian Railways	...	135 "
Italian Railways	...	137 "
Norwegian Railways	...	102 "
South African Railways	...	78 "
Japan Railways	...	65 "
New South Wales	...	73 "

In 1921 the figures are almost equally startling.

Canadian Railways	...	92 per cent.
United Kingdom Railways	...	104 "

Mr. B. S. Kamat: Are the amount of comfort and facilities for third class passengers just the same?

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: French Northern Railway 109 per cent. I have shown that in our working for the last six years we have paid 6 per cent. If you judge us by our operating ratio compared with the operating ratio of the Railways of other countries, you find that we are better than most of them. If you take into consideration the fact, as I said now, that during a period of trade depression we have got to spend money on the recommendation of our expert Committee, the Acworth Committee, on the rehabilitation of the railways, if you take this special expenditure, if you take into account the enormous increase in the price of materials and the enormous increase in wages and salaries, you find that the case against the Indian Railways is not nearly as black as Mr. Ginwala would have it.

[Mr. C. A. Innes.]

Now, Sir, we come to the actual recommendations of the Inchcape Committee. I will deal with Mr. Ginwala later on. Their first recommendation is that steps should be taken to curtail working expenses. That recommendation is made in paragraph 22 of the report, and it is suggested that at least a saving of one crore should be effected. This is what they say:

"We recommend that a further saving of at least Rs. 1 crore should be effected in salaries and wages in 1923-24."

I do not mean to say that there is no scope for reduction in wages. I do not take that attitude. We are prepared to do our best to make these reductions. But I should like to examine the arguments on which they have based their recommendation. In paragraph 22 they give a statement of the staff. They show increase in that staff, and they also make a mistake. They say that the increase in the technical and industrial staff is 33 per cent. If you examine the table, you find the increase in the technical and industrial staff is only 27 per cent. On the one hand, therefore, you have got an increase in staff amounting to 27 per cent. On the other hand, you have an increase in passenger traffic amounting to 21 per cent., increase in your goods traffic, which taken in bulk only amount to 8 per cent. If you take goods traffic in terms of ton mileage, the increase is 41 per cent. In addition you have got a very large increase in your Capital expenditure, a very large increase in your programme revenue expenditure, necessitating obviously increased staff. You have more Capital expenditure, more works going on and therefore it means more staff. Therefore, the argument as it stands is not particularly a strong one. Stress is also laid on the fact that the Agent of the Great Indian Peninsula Railway has recently effected a reduction of 50 lakhs. I should like to inform Mr. Ginwala that the reduction has already been carried out in the Budget. Well, Sir, I am very glad to see that the Agent of the Great Indian Peninsula Railway has effected that reduction, for the working of the Great Indian Peninsula Railway as judged by its operating ratio is certainly more extravagant than that of other lines. Judged by the figures for 1921-22, the Great Indian Peninsula operating ratio was the highest of all important lines in India, higher even than the North-Western Railway in spite of the special circumstances of the North-Western Railway which extends over a very large area. In 1922-23 the operating ratio of the Great Indian Peninsula, the ordinary working expenses excluding programme revenue expenditure was higher than any other big railway. This year they have got it down, though it is still high. Therefore, the argument based upon the increase of staff, which I have explained, and what the Great Indian Peninsula has been able to do, is not a particularly strong one. Still, as I have said, we are prepared to explore every possible avenue, and I do not wish to be misunderstood. There are many valuable suggestions in this Report which we will examine and follow up as closely as ever we can, but we cannot undertake to make too rapid, too sudden and too drastic reductions in matters of staff. I am glad to say, since the strike on the East Indian Railway last year, we have had a very quiet year on the railways. But we have had signs of trouble on the Bengal Nagpur Railway owing to reductions of staff, and we have just had a protest from the Great Indian Peninsula staff against the reductions made. It is a specially delicate subject on which I do not want to say too much, but the House must realise that drastic and sudden reductions of staff may have very undesirable results on the railways. That is why we have only made a reduction of half a crore in the ordinary working expenses because we have to allow for time to carry out this reduction Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar (Madras City : Non-Muhammadian Urban): How much has been allowed out of one crore?

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: Half a crore. Then I come to this programme revenue expenditure. I would like the House to remember that early last year, in 1921, we had an elaborate examination of our Indian railways by special committee containing many railway experts, who spent over a year travelling about India examining the subject and writing a report which generally commanded very great respect throughout the country. On the one hand you have got to remember that you had that expert report written after a very long inquiry in the country. On the other hand you have got a Committee of six very distinguished, very authoritative business men devoting just the small fraction of three months to the subject of railways. What was the whole burden of the Acworth Committee's Report? The first point the Acworth Committee made was that even in 1913-14 our railways were totally inadequate to the needs of the country. They pointed out that in 1921 the position had become ever so much worse. The whole of Chapter II of this Report contains extracts of evidence from all parts of the country complaining of the paralysing effect upon trade of the inadequacy of our railway system. In one case there was a complaint that enormous losses had been incurred in Calcutta because seeds could not be moved up by the East Indian Railway to fulfil contracts; and there have been complaints of that kind from every part of the country. The Acworth Committee found that this was due to two causes. In the first place the railways had not looked far enough ahead. In the second place the Government of India had starved the railways during the war and had not taken the necessary steps to keep the railways up to the mark and to put in a proper amount of renewals. Let me read what the Acworth Committee said (page 30):

"There are scores of bridges with girders unfit to carry train loads up to modern requirements; there are many miles of rails, hundreds of engines, and thousands of wagons, whose rightful date for renewal is long overpast."

They go on to say that what the Government had done by not providing money for these renewals was merely to postpone the expenditure. It was a liability which would have to be faced. Well, Sir, we considered this subject most carefully last year and I thought that the policy of the Government of India, a policy inaugurated, I thought, with the full approval of this House, was that we should make a real effort to overtake these arrears, that we should make a real effort to put our railways into proper order, to rehabilitate them, to make them fit not only to carry the traffic at present, but also to make them fit to carry the traffic of the future, and that is what we are trying to do. That is the policy which we are now engaged upon. It may be that we have made mistakes with particular railways. It may be that we have been too enthusiastic in some respects, but the whole policy which we undertook, I say with the approval of this Assembly, was to make a real effort to effect these renewals as quickly as we could and to bring these railways up to the mark, and that is the policy on which we are now being attacked, not by the Inchcape Committee mind you, but by Members of this House. The first suggestion they make is that we should distinguish between unremunerative railways and remunerative railways. That seems to me a somewhat doubtful proposition. Naturally it has been received with great respect since it comes from this very authoritative Committee. But I do regard the proposition with a certain amount of doubt. It is no use quoting to me the experience of England in this matter. England has its railways converging on London and running out to the various ports. In India the thing is entirely different. Our railways depend on each other for their trade. The East Indian hands over to the Great Indian Peninsula at Jubbulpore, and the Great Indian Peninsula hands on to others. They are all exchanging traffic between one another. Shall we say some of these are remunerative and there we will put money into them and not into the unremunerative railways? What is the result going to be? Let us go back to history and look at it in the light of what happened in the war. This Chapter II of the Acworth Committee's Report is full of complaints from one railway that the other railways could not receive traffic from them. I will just quote one instance. It is an instance I may make use of later. On the Great Indian Peninsula Railway, which figures largely in this Report, "inwards traffic from the East Indian, Bengal Nagpur, Bombay, Baroda and Central India, Madras and Southern Mahratta, Nizam's Guaranteed State and other railways is restricted at 15 junctions to form 600 to 80 wagons daily."

[Mr. C. A. Innes.]

That is to say you would have the East Indian rehabilitated, able to carry its maximum amount of traffic, and yet the Great Indian Peninsula unable to take over its due quantity of traffic from the East Indian, and unable to hand to the East Indian the amount of traffic it can carry. That is the first point I want the House to remember. And the second point is, I would like to follow up Sir Montagu Webb's suggestion about the North-Western Railway. That railway is being condemned in this Report as an unremunerative railway. In 1913-14 the North-Western Railway carried 1,300,000 tons of wheat and it carried that wheat a long distance mostly to Karachi. In 1921-22 the North-Western Railway carried 500,000 tons of wheat and it carried that wheat only short distances, most of it to other railways. That is one of the reasons why the North-Western Railway is not doing very well at present. Take the Eastern Bengal Railway. In 1913-14 the Eastern Bengal Railway carried over 1,100,000 tons of jute. In 1921-22 it carried 300,000 tons of jute less due to reduction in the cultivation of jute. Sir, I think I have shown that the suggestion that we should treat certain railways as unremunerative is a suggestion which is to be approached with a certain amount of care. Then we are up against the practical difficulty in this matter that it is extremely difficult to make a sudden cut in programme revenue expenditure. This programme revenue expenditure is being carried on in accordance with a programme which has been sanctioned. A good deal of material which was ordered last year will arrive this year and will fall due for payment. The first preliminary allotment was made to railways as far back as November because we had to give them, in accordance with the recommendations of the Acworth Committee, as much time as possible. We do not know what our actual commitments are compared with the amount provided in the budget, so it is very difficult for us. It is taking a risk even to make this cut of 2½ crores from programme revenue expenditure because we cannot say exactly what our commitments are. We may be able to cut down this expenditure, but it is a very serious thing to do. As the Acworth Committee pointed out, capital expenditure and revenue expenditure are inextricably mixed and if you cut down the programme revenue expenditure too much you may not be able to make full use of your capital expenditure. You may have locomotives or whatever it may be arriving and may be unable to put them on to the line because we cannot provide the necessary revenue expenditure.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: May I ask what your revenue programme now is. You budgeted for 11½ crores.

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: We have taken off 2½ crores.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: It is now only 9 crores.

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: That is right, the same as recommended by the Inchcape Committee.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: The Committee recommended 9 crores and you have adopted that figure.

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: Yes, I have tried to deal as well as I could with certain general aspects of the problem raised in the Inchcape Committee's Report. Let me come now to Mr. Ginwala's amendment, and I hope, Sir, you will excuse me if I go beyond my time. Mr. Ginwala's speech, if I may venture to say so, is an almost entirely cynical speech. I felt greatly in doubt as to whether I was intended to take it seriously or not. Let me quote just one phrase from the speech. He said that the Inchcape Committee consisted of very prominent business men. He went on to say that they knew what they were talking about and then he proceeded to say but they forgot to say it. Now, Sir, the Greeks had an expression which exactly summed up that remark of Mr. Ginwala's. It was called an oxymoron, and I will explain it later to Mr. Ginwala. Does anybody in this House suggest that this business Committee, composed of Lord Inchcape, notoriously one of the greatest business men in the world, and 5 of our leading business men in India forgot to say what it really meant? Surely the House, Sir, will see it is nonsense. We have carried out to the very best of our ability the recommendations of the Committee. We have fallen half a crore short, I admit, because we have to allow for lag, but I should like to say that, though we have carried these reductions out, we have done so with great hesitation, because we are extremely doubtful whether it is practicable to cut down the staff as suggested by the Committee and whether it is actually practicable to reduce the revenue expenditure in view of commitments already existing. However, we have done our best. Does anybody in this House suggest that we have got to go beyond this and deduct over another 4 crores? On what ground? Mr. Ginwala suggests in the first place—I am not sure that I understood this—that, because our revenue this year was less than we expected, therefore, there ought to be an automatic reduction in our working expenses. Next year, we hope to get a revenue much bigger than our revised estimate of revenue this year, and Mr. Kamat has suggested that it might go up to 100 or 101 crores. If it does go up to 100 or 101 crores, then on Mr. Ginwala's argument we ought to provide a very much larger sum for working expenses. (A Voice: "That is our only hope for it to go up.") Then he suggested that we could get 1½ crores out of reductions in staff, that is one crore recommended by the Committee and 50 lakhs already proposed, as he put it, by the Agent of the Great Indian Peninsula Railway. Well, Sir, the Agent of the Great Indian Peninsula Railway has already made that reduction of 50 lakhs in his budget for the coming year. Then, Sir, Mr. Ginwala suggested that we should effect another large reduction in fuel. We have already made an arbitrary reduction of one crore on the revised estimates of last year. Here again Mr. Kamat tells us that we are going to have a very large increase of trade and traffic; that again means a very large increase in our fuel expenditure. As regards this fuel, you have got to remember that we are bound by contracts. We have got to pay the price in those contracts, and fuel does not offer very much scope for reduction unless we can effect economies. Here, I should like to correct a mistake in the Committee's Report. They said that we did not take steps to watch the consumption of fuel in our locomotives. That is not correct. I understand from Mr. Hindley and from the Chief Mechanical Engineer, Railway Board, that the consumption of fuel in locomotives is checked most carefully and that the increments in the pays of drivers depends upon economy in their consumption of coal. Then again Mr. Ginwala said that the drop in prices ought to be able to lead to a very large reduction. I have just explained that we do not get the benefit of that drop in prices for a very considerable period. It takes from a year to 18 months to get our materials out from Home, and we are now receiving materials which were purchased at the very high prices of a year or 18 months ago. Mr. Ginwala also made great play with paragraph 12 of the Report. He drew a picture of the Railway Board forcing upon an unwilling Agent expenditure which had no right to be incurred. Well, Sir, the facts of that case are these. The Great Indian Peninsula Railway, as I have just explained, has been allowed to get into rather a bad state, I will not put it higher than that. I have already read out a paragraph from the Acworth Committee's Report which showed that at 15 junctions the traffic had to be restricted owing to the lack of capacity of that line. We know that the line is not in good order; we know also that the Great Indian Peninsula Railway Company has not got very much longer to live and naturally the Company under these circumstances—I am not accusing the Company of anything—look more to getting revenue than to keeping their line in good repair. Surely it is the business of the Railway Board to see that a line which is our property is kept in good condition. In this particular case I have no doubt at all that it was a fair difference of opinion. The Agent thought that this particular line could be propped up so as to last for a further period. The line was inspected by our Senior Government Inspector and he was of opinion that it ought to be renewed. One of the Members of the Railway Board also went over it and the Railway Board for technical reasons definitely thought that the line ought to be renewed. That is the whole secret of that particular paragraph of the Report. I should like to challenge the statement that it is not the proper function of the Railway Board to insist on expenditure against the advice of the Manager and Engineer of a railway. It is the proper function of the Board, I say, to see that the Agents and Engineers of Company Railways maintain our property in good condition, and I am quite sure that I will have the whole House behind me in that remark.

[Mr. C. A. Innes.]

Well, Sir, I am afraid I have detained the House a very long time, but I hope that, in the circumstances of this case, the House will excuse me, and I do hope also that the House will not insist upon this further reduction of 4 crores. We have done our very best to carry out the actual recommendation made by the Inchcape Committee with reference to the budget of the coming year and I say that it is perfectly useless for Mr. Ginwala or for anybody else to get up now and say "the Inchcape Committee did not mean that; they meant you to take off another 4 crores". We have carried out their reduction; we are quite prepared to follow up their other suggestions for economy and we may be able to effect economies; but I must say definitely that we could not accept responsibility for another reduction of 4 crores. With reference to what Mr. Shahani said, it is perfectly true that this House has a right to make that cut if it so pleases. And I do hope that the House will not think that we in any way resent the criticism we get on these Budget Demands. We do not. We value them very greatly. On the other hand, it is we, it is Government who has to take the responsibility. I am advised by the Chief Commissioner—and he has examined the question most carefully—that we could not possibly run the railways if this extra 4 crores is cut out. It would not be a real reduction of the deficit and I do hope the House will not put me again in the difficulty they put me in yesterday. Yesterday they put me in the difficulty of refusing me the money which I know to be necessary for the administration of the Customs Department. What am I to do there? Am I to go to His Excellency the Viceroy and ask him to restore it? I hope the House will not put me in the same difficulty in this matter. I think they will realise that we, on the Government Benches, have tried to co-operate with the House during the last three years; and I do put it to the House that this motion moved by Mr. Ginwala is not a motion which should be accepted by the House, and that if the motion is accepted by the House, I do not believe that it can be carried out, and if it is carried out, it means, in the first place, that train services will, probably must, be out down; and, in the second place, we are almost certain to have the gravest possible labour unrest all over the railways by the immense reduction in staff which the making of this cut would necessitate. In these circumstances, Sir, I hope the House will reject this amendment.

Rao Bahadur T. Bangachariar: Sir, I am in a somewhat difficult position even after the elaborate explanation of the Honourable Mr. Innes. I quite realise that he was in a difficult position as he had to defend the Railway Board against the Inchcape Committee's Report and the criticisms founded thereon. What we are now immediately concerned with is the Budget for 1923-24. I should have received considerable help in forming my own opinion if the Honourable Mr. Innes had told us under this head and this head the Inchcape Committee made this recommendation; we have carried out that recommendation to this extent under each head, and under the other heads we are unable to carry it out, or how far we have been able to carry out, their recommendations. It is that aspect of the question on which I would like to have information. Probably in the lengthy explanation he had to give he forgot this point with which we are now concerned. I think Mr. Ginwala and the Honourable Mr. Innes are at cross purposes in this matter, due to a misunderstanding perhaps of the Inchcape Committee's recommendations. As we understand those recommendations, they have recommended a cut of 4.50 crores irrespective of the 3 crores recommended under Programme Revenue and also the 1 crore they recommend under Establishment. They recommend 1 crore addition under Establishment; and they recommend 3 crores reduction in the programme of revenue and expenditure by bringing it down to 9 crores from 12.50 crores. We also understand that they recommend a saving of 1 crore under Fuel.

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: We have done that: that is carried out.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: We should like to know how the 4.59 crores recommended by the Inchcape Committee is made up, what it comprises; and there are also other paragraphs in the Report which make certain recommendations which we fear have not been carried out and are not included in the 4.59 crores. If the 3 crores are included in the 4.59 crores; if the 1 crore under Establishment is included in the 4.59 crores; then what is really the retrenchment that has been effected? What about the Fuel 1 crore?

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: That is carried out in the Budget?

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: What about the 3 crores and the other 1½ crores, including the Great Indian Peninsula Railway, which with 1 crore under Fuel make 5½ crores. There are also other savings which they expect under stores and other things. All this must be more than 4.59 crores. So we are in this difficulty. I have been very carefully reading this Report and I have not been able to make out how this 4.59 crores is made up; what they have taken into account in arriving at this figure. There are several paragraphs in the Report which recommend further reductions, but we fear these have not been taken into account. If that can be explained, probably this misunderstanding of which I spoke will disappear. This recommendation of Mr. Ginwala is not a recommendation made at random. We think we are carrying out the recommendations of the Inchcape Committee, and if we really are satisfied that we are not carrying out the recommendations of the Inchcape Committee, it is better that the House should be informed in that matter.

I may draw the attention of the House to this paragraph at page 80 of the Retrenchment Committee's Report:

"We have discussed this Report with the Chief Commissioner of Railways who accepts the conclusions of the Committee in the present circumstances. Reductions in the Railway Budget are unavoidable. Naturally we may find it convenient in working up to them to make certain alterations in the method of arriving at them and this, we quite realise, he is in general agreement with many of our recommendations."

So that I did not expect this outburst of criticism on the part of the Honourable Mr. Innes against the Inchcape Committee's recommendations when we find the Chief Commissioner was in agreement with them. And in fact they proceed to say:

"The Chief Commissioner was good enough to say that he considers the Report extremely valuable."

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: I said that too.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: With that certificate from the authority responsible for the running of the railways, I was rather surprised at the criticism levelled at this Report by the Honourable Mr. Innes. In fact, my Honourable friend relied a great deal on the Acworth Committee's Report, but I find that two of the Members were Members of both Committees, and therefore they could not have forgotten what they wrote as Members of that Committee. We on the other hand are inclined to attach the greatest importance to the recommendations made by the Inchcape Committee. We are trying to see if we can balance the Budget. That is the plain truth. We have got to reduce the Budget by hook or by crook, so long as it is a straight crook—not by misunderstanding each other; we do not want to misunderstand each other. Let us understand the facts correctly.

Now, Sir, one other matter I may mention, and it is this. Last year we were asked to vote 73,67,00,000 for the working expenses of the railways. The voted expenditure was Rs. 73,67,00,000, and the non-voted expenditure was Rs. 20,96,00,000 whereas under the voted head we were asked to vote 6½ crores more than what was actually needed. If Honourable Members will turn to pages 2 and 3 of the revised statement furnished to us a few days ago, Honourable Members will see that in column 9, page 3, the amount actually spent out of the amount voted by us is Rs. 6,61,00,000,—that is less than what we were asked to vote. Why was that extravagant estimate made last year? On the other hand, I find under the non-voted expenditure, they have increased it by 6 crores, because from 20 crores they have increased it to 26 crores. They seem to be budgeting extravagantly in the Railway Department when they ask us to vote more than what is really needed for expenditure. I therefore think on these points a clear explanation is needed; otherwise I should be bound to support the motion for reduction.

Captain E. V. Sassoon (Bombay Millowners Association: Indian Commerce): Sir, I would like to preface my remarks by saying that I do not support Mr. Ginwala, partly because I do not quite understand his figures, and partly because I, like him, have a great deal of respect for the members of the Retrenchment Committee, and I do not think that had a further cut of 4 crores been justified they would not have made different recommendations to what they did. I rather follow the lead in this case of Mr. Kamat who suggests that we should follow the recommendations of this Committee. I understand from what Mr. Innes has said that the Government are prepared to do that. If I am right in my calculations the Inchcape Committee suggested that a sum of Rs. 64 crores should be sufficient for the provision of working expenses including surplus profits and if I am right I gathered that the budget to-day has made a cut of 50 lakhs less than the recommendation of the Inchcape Committee; that is to say, they have reduced the Inchcape cut by half a crore, roughly speaking. But I would like to draw the attention of the House to the remarks at page 77 of the Inchcape Committee Report in which they point out that they think that much greater reductions can be effected in the near future, and I therefore am not satisfied that it would be impossible for the railway administration to make further reductions to counteract this lag and my feeling therefore is that the Inchcape Committee's recommendation as it stands in the Report and as I believe will be given effect to by a motion of Mr. Kamat, would probably be the practical solution of the wishes of a number of Members of this House. Now, Sir, the Honourable Mr. Innes complained bitterly that it was not fair to judge two years separated as widely apart as 1913-14 and 1921-22, and I think he rather unfairly criticised the Report and Mr. Ginwala for doing this. But I am sure that the Report has in no place suggested that the cost should be the same as in 1913-14, and I do not think I understood that Mr. Ginwala suggested that we should have the same working expenses as in 1913-14. These figures have been simply put down as a guide, and all the members of the Committee and all Members of this House fully realise that we cannot possibly expect to work at the same rate of expenditure as in 1913-14. Now, the Honourable Mr. Innes asked that we should treat these railways as a commercial concern. I, Sir, am more than ready to deal with the subject on those lines. I am prepared to criticise the railway management, not only as regards state-managed lines, but also as regards company-managed railways—I shall do so on commercial lines. One of the points laid down in this report is that there is a large surplus, an unnecessary surplus of stores. Now, Sir, all business concerns during the war had to carry big surplus of stores. It was necessary because one did not know when one could get renewals, but directly we knew, the war having ended, that we could get normal supplies, I think that most carefully managed business concerns reduced their orders for stores so as gradually to work off their stocks. I know that in my own concerns I have been doing this during the last three or four years. I suggest, therefore, there was no reason why the railway administration should not have done the same and should not therefore be in a position of carrying surplus stocks of stores, of which I understand from the Inchcape Committee Report, the present price is 50 per cent. below the book value of the stores. That is one of my criticisms.

[Captain E. V. Sassoon.]

Another of my criticisms is that though I am fully in agreement with the rehabilitation of railways I am also fully in agreement with the recommendation of the Committee which states that we should repair as much as possible instead of renewing as much as possible. Sir, in this connection only yesterday I was asked by a very charming lady to explain to her the points at issue in the railway demands in the budget. I did so to the best of my ability and she then replied to me "Oh, I understand what it is; the Indian railways are rather like me; I would like to buy new silk stockings, but I have to darn them." I think that that is a very good description of the position of the railways in India; we would like to buy new silk stockings, but we cannot afford to, and therefore we must darn them; we would like to renew, but we cannot afford to and therefore let us repair. Sir, in my business I have been doing this; instead of renewing my machinery I have been repairing it. I am glad to say that my policy has been successful. Only three days ago, when I was in Bombay, a machinery manufacturer was going through one of my mills, and I showed him a department the machinery of which was 30 years old and asked him whether he considered that I ought to scrap that machinery and give him an order for new machinery. His reply was "You would be a fool if you did, because although it is true that the new machinery would be a little more efficient than your repaired machinery, it would only be 5 per cent. more efficient and this 30-year old machinery of yours will be able to give you good service for a large number of years." Now, Sir, when the Honourable Mr. Innes drew attention to the point raised by the Retrenchment Committee whether an Agent should repair or renew a portion of a line, he maintained and quite rightly that the Railway Board should control the Agents. But, Sir, I consider that if the Railway Board insists on renewing a line when repairs would make that line carry on efficiently and effectively for another 15 years, which I believe is the time mentioned in this Report, then I would challenge the wisdom of that Railway Board in insisting on renewals.

The Honourable Mr. O. A. Innes: What about restrictions on the traffic?

Captain E. V. Sassoon: I understood the Honourable Mr. Innes to maintain that a line was in a very bad state. If you have got 15 years more by repairs, you can always arrange to make the renewals spread over the last portion of the 15 years for portions of the line that are entirely worn out.

Now, Sir, another point that the Honourable Mr. Innes mentioned, I think, in criticism of Mr. Kamat's remarks was that we should not compare the two years, because one of the two years was a boom year and the other was a very bad year for the trade. I think that a railway administration which, I take it, prides itself on being run on commercial lines, should have the business foresight of commercial houses and try to anticipate what the future is going to be like. If the railway administration anticipates a good monsoon and extra trade, I do not think, Sir, that we would grudge it a supplementary grant later on, if it could show that the profits were coming in. On the other hand if it does not consider that we are going to have an increase of trade what is the point of increasing the carrying capacity of our railways at a very high cost, at a particularly high cost because as the Honourable Member has pointed out the prices of materials are still very high? I am not ordering new machinery to-day unless it is absolutely necessary, because I consider that prices will drop. Why, therefore, should the Government do so for its railways, unless it is convinced that the increased expenditure will bring in a profitable return? and in that respect I would like, Sir, to join issue with Sir Montagu Webb as regards the North-Western Railway. If he will turn to page 75 of the Inchcape Committee's Report he will see that the reason why the Committee does not encourage further expenditure on the Railway is because it did not appear to them that the economy to be effected by the use of large engines would be sufficient to justify the heavy expenditure which is apparently necessary to bring the line up to the required standard. Let the North-Western Railway, whether by wheat or any other traffic, show that that expenditure is justified, and I for one would be prepared to agree to it, but if it is not justified then, I think, it should quite rightly be abandoned.

Sir Montagu Webb: The Inchcape Committee apparently forgot all about the wheat export traffic.

Captain E. V. Sassoon: If the Agent who does not appear further up in that paragraph to be very enthusiastic about extra expenditure, if the Agent who is the man on the spot, and who is the executive officer of the Railway and who does know about the wheat traffic, considers that there is likely to be a sufficiently large import of wheat into Karachi at the particular time which Sir Montagu Webb has in mind to justify the capital expenditure in these engines, let the Agent come forward and say so to the Railway Board; let the Government ask us for a supplementary grant, and I think this House will grant it. Let us run these Railways as commercial concerns. If the extra expenditure will bring in extra profits, let us agree to it; if not, let us postpone it as would be done by any commercial house. Sir, that is the line on which my criticism of the Government and the Railway Administration is based. And, Sir, although, as I have said, in prefacing my remarks that I do not propose to follow Mr. Ginwala because I think that his cuts are excessive, I do propose, when the proper time comes, to follow Mr. Kamat into the lobby and insist on the Inchcape Committee's recommendations being carried out.

Mr. N. M. Joshi (Nominated: Labour Interests): Sir, the motion for reduction proposed by my friend, Mr. Ginwala, technically is a motion for reducing the voted portion of the Demand. But I submit to the House, that when Government tries to give effect to the reduction which the House may sanction, Government is not restricted to make the reduction only in the voted portion of the Budget. I shall therefore at the outset draw the attention of the House to some items in the non-voted portion of the Railway Budget. The first item to which I would like to draw the attention of the House in the non-voted portion of the Budget is that of Annuities . . .

Mr. President: We cannot deal with Annuities under a motion for reducing the working expenses.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: I suppose, Sir, Mr. Ginwala's motion is

Mr. President: I can understand the Honourable Member's difficulty. The Honourable Member may easily have made a mistake, because Mr. Ginwala's motion for reduction is printed in a wrong place; it should have been "working expenses", and the motion which he has moved is that the Demand under the head Railways and the sub-heading Working Expenses be reduced by Rs. 4 crores. Therefore that restricts the debate to working expenses.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: Sir, I am sorry I misunderstood the point. I shall first deal with the working expenses out of the total demand. The first point I would like to make is about the establishment charges. My Honourable friend, Mr. Shahani, has already drawn the attention of the House to the great rise in the establishment charges of the several Railways. He has compared the establishment charges of the different Railways, but I propose to compare the present year's establishment charges of one Railway with those of the previous year. The Railway which I propose to take for the purpose of comparison is the Bengal Nagpur Railway. In this Railway in the last year's Budget 68 officers drawing Rs. 1,000 and over were shown, whereas in this year's Budget in the same Railway 175 officers drawing Rs. 1,000 and over have been shown. There is thus an addition of 107 officers in one line. I know, Sir, that it may be said that all these 107 officers are not new officers. Some of them may have been promoted and therefore they have been included in the list of officers drawing a salary of Rs. 1,000 and over. But from the Statement it is not clear how many of these 107 officers are new recruits and how many of them have come there on account of promotions. I see however there are at least some offices which have been newly created. There are 4 Personal Assistants out of whom 2 Personal Assistants have not come in the list by promotion. There are some Superintendents. I do not know whether they have come by promotion or not, but it will be quite clear that during one year in the Bengal Nagpur Railway while there were only 68 officers last year drawing Rs. 1,000 and over, this year there are 175 officers drawing Rs. 1,000 and over. Therefore, this point makes it perfectly clear that the establishment charges of these Railways are very extravagant and that they are spending a good deal of money out of the working expenses for establishment charges.

Sir, while speaking about the establishment charges, I would like to make one remark which I also made in the course of my Budget speech, and it is this, that while we compare figures about establishments, we are in a great difficulty because we do not know whether the additional figures are there on account of promotions or on account of new appointments. I therefore feel that the Government, when they prepare the next year's Budget, should place the Members in a position to judge whether the additional posts shown there are new appointments or they have been made by promotions. I suggested to Government that in order to enable Members to compare these figures they should give us copies of the establishment roll. Unless we are furnished with copies of the establishment rolls, we cannot get this information at all, and I therefore trust that Government will accede to my request and enable the Members to compare these figures.

Sir, the Honourable Mr. Innes has made some reference to the retrenchments made by certain Railways, and on this point also I want to make one remark. The retrenchment made by these Railways has been made mainly in the low paid staff, and there is a great complaint both in the Bengal Nagpur Railway as well as in the Great Indian Peninsula Railway about this matter. I would therefore suggest to the Railway Board that when they ask these Railways to effect retrenchments they should exercise some control over them and ask them to make retrenchments in such a way that the burden will not wholly fall upon the low paid staff but at least a portion of it will fall on the highly paid staff. In the case of the Bengal Nagpur Railway, only yesterday I asked a supplementary question while Mr. Agnihotri's question was being answered, whether when low paid servants were being dismissed, any of the highly paid officers were also being removed. But from the figures I have quoted I have shown that on the Bengal Nagpur Railway there is not only no reduction in the highly paid officers, but while there were 68 officers drawing Rs. 1,000 and over in the last year's Budget, there are 175 officers drawing Rs. 1,000 and over in this year's Budget. My Honourable friend the Chief Commissioner yesterday asked me what was the bearing of my supplementary question. I will make it clear to him. The bearing was that the railways made reductions in the low paid staff only. If he had scrutinised the figures, he would have found in the case of highly paid officers that the number had increased to more than double. (A Voice: "What about the Great Indian Peninsula?") In the case of the Great Indian Peninsula also the same is the complaint. The Great Indian Peninsula has appointed an officer, a Mr. Heseltine or some such name, and that officer in making retrenchments has dismissed a number of low paid servants while the complaint is that he has not touched any of the highly paid officers. Sir, that is not the way to make retrenchment. I therefore think that there is a great room for retrenchment in the case of railways in the item of supervising officers. The establishment charges have grown tremendously and more and more officers are being appointed and their number as shown in the budget statement has been doubled in one year. I therefore hope that Mr. Ginwala's motion will be accepted.

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary (Calcutta: Non-Muhammadan Urban):

Sir, I have tabled a motion for a lesser cut (No. 179). Having gone through the figures, I originally asked for a reduction of Rs. 1,71,70,000, as shown in the printed paper. But on going through the revised figures as supplied to us on Saturday last and availing myself of what Sir Basil Blackett told us, I have sent in a motion reducing that figure to 50 lakhs. If Honourable Members will please read 50 lakhs for the figure 1,71,70,000, then my meaning will be clear. Those figures, with the marvellous plus and minus system brought into the revised paper, work out at 50 lakhs, as Captain Sassoon has pointed out, and leaves something over.

The reason why I ask for this smaller cut is that the Assembly having only recently carried a motion for State management I believe all the support that the railway administration can be given should be vouchsafed. Although it was my duty to take another view from some of my friends at that debate, I am loyal enough to their Resolution to perceive that if railway administration is really to do what is expected of it and must be expected of it, it ought to have a fairly free hand. Therefore I do not propose to go beyond, at least for the present, what the Inchcape Committee laid down. I shall read their words again:

"The budget provision for the working expenses including surplus profits in 1923-24 be limited to 64 crores, subject to"

[Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary.]

a variety of things mentioned in the concluding portion of the recommendations. I do not propose for the present to go into the somewhat hypothetical figures about 4.59 crores and 3.50 crores savings mentioned there, or undertake with Mr. Rangachariar a research into the unspoken thoughts, as Mr. Ginwala put it, of the Retrenchment Committee, nor stop to enquire how the 4.9 crores is made up. For my purposes for the present it would be enough if the Government were to accede to a very small reduction of 50 lakhs which would enable those of us who are wanting a reduction of at least a crore of rupees on the civil side of the expenses to suggest acceptable means for the purpose of balancing the budget. I do not for a moment concede that other reductions will not be insisted on. But for the present I do not think we ought to embarrass the railway administration by demanding more than a cut of 50 lakhs. I am perfectly sure, and I hope the Government will admit, that in dealing with large allotments like this it ought not to be difficult to find that sum of 50 lakhs. Sir, consciously or purposely inflated, but in the first presentment they were inflated, and later on for reasons that have not been made quite clear, it appeared that what was budgeted for last year was not really what was required. And quite naturally that has led us to believe that a small cut of 50 lakhs will not at all prejudice the situation. Sir, when some one proposed that a day should be set apart for discussing the Inchcape Committee's Report, the Leader of the House invited us to discuss the report in the course of the budget debate. The first fruits of that suggestion are now before us. We have had a very animated debate and had retorts from both sides of the House regarding the suggestions made by the Inchcape Committee. When my friend, Mr. Innes, got up I thought he was going to combat Sir Montagu Webb for flinging the first stone at the Inchcape Committee. Well, Sir, some of us will have to follow suit later on, but on surer grounds. Here however I believe the Inchcape Committee was occupying quite unassailable ground. Mr. Rangachariar reminded us that two members of the Railway Board were members of that Committee, and it is not a fact that all that the members learnt about railway administration and railway finance was hurriedly picked up in the course of three months of Delhi dissipation. Far from it. Well, I know in other concerns that there has been corridor talk about "Commercial Commission," about "Clive Street Commission," or as some prefer, the "Bengal Commission," because unfortunately most of the Members happened to come from Bengal or had their training in Bengal. That does not take away from the value of the recommendations of the Committee. Certainly in regard to business positions and commercial undertakings I am not prepared to enthuse to the extent that some Members have done over the Inchcape Recommendations. A great deal more could and should be done. Nor am I prepared to endorse Mr. Innes's severe criticism to-day and give the go-by to the Inchcape criticisms because they happen to be adverse. We are not concerned at present as to how matters of policy which have been introduced in the report, which Mr. Innes criticises, are to be carried out. Where is it however that the Inchcape Committee have erred in insisting on reductions? That is our objective so far as the budget deficit is concerned and I believe that can be met by the lower scale of cut that I am trying to put before the House. I do not think there ought to be any hesitation in acceding to the request for a cut of 50 lakhs. I do not know, Sir, what procedure you will be pleased to adopt when the debate is over and Mr. Ginwala's and other larger demands for reductions are disposed of. I submit that my motion ought to come last and then it will probably have a better result than the bigger demands.

Mr. President: I can put the Honourable Member's motion now, if he wishes, as an amendment to Mr. Ginwala's in order to give the House an opportunity of expressing its wishes.

The original question was:

"That the provision for working expenses under the head 'Railways' be reduced by Rs. 4 crores."

Since which an amendment has been moved to omit the words 'four crores' and to substitute in their place the words 'fifty lakhs'.

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley (Chief Commissioner, Railways): Sir, amid this welter of figures we have had this morning I feel that the House by now has perhaps realized what the actual cuts which are being made consist of. I think if I may refer again to the Statement which was placed in our hands on Saturday, on page 3 of that statement Honourable Members will see, against working expenses under Budget, 1922-23, the figure of 67.99. That is the figure on which the Retrenchment Committee were working when they proposed their reduction. They made the proposal for a reduction of 4 crores and 59 lakhs which will be found in the next column. In the meantime our Budget had been prepared for 66.51, shown in the next column, that is our Budget prepared for 1923-24. We now propose to make a further reduction of 3 crores on that figure, bringing down the working expenses to 63.51. Therefore, we have our working expenses under that head brought down from 67.99 to 63.51, a total reduction of 4 crores 47.50. Taking the next three figures below relating to surplus profits, etc., down to the bottom of the column, you will see that, as compared with the total cut recommended by the Retrenchment Committee of 4.59, we propose to make a cut of 4.19.93, leaving our total demand at 64.88, irrespective of interest, annuities, and sinking-funds. Now what I want to point out is that the actual retrenchment recommended by Lord Inchcape's Committee was that the working expenses including the surplus profits to Companies should be fixed at 64 crores. If you take the two figures representing working expenses in column No. 6, 63.51 crores for working expenses and 98.77 lakhs for surplus profits, and add them together, you will get the figure to which we have reduced our working expenses corresponding with the basis used in the last recommendation of the Retrenchment Committee, i.e., 64.50. I think those remarks of mine will perhaps meet the Honourable Mr. Rangachariar's request for a clear explanation of what cuts we have made. I may say that we have been going in for a great deal of retrenchment before Lord Inchcape's Committee began to study the question. For many months during last year special officers have been at work on nearly every railway making strenuous endeavours to reduce working expenses in all directions. Now having made those endeavours, the estimates were still in our opinion above what they should have been. I may just quote a few more figures, though I do not want to bore the House. The total demands sent up from the railways, i.e., the estimates made by the Railway Agents which they sent up for our consideration amounted to 70 crores. We reduced these in the first instance to 68, and further down to 66.51, the figure with which we started this Budget, and we have again reduced it now by 3 crores, so that you will see that, altogether, we have made a clear reduction of nearly 7 crores on the figures sent up to us by the Agents of the Railways for consideration. Now, Sir, I think that that shows that we have not been wanting in our endeavours to make retrenchments in every possible direction. With regard to many of the criticisms which have been made to-day against the Railway Administration, I am perhaps in the rather happy position of looking to the future than to the past, and yet although I admit that there is a great deal of truth in much that has been said, and a very considerable amount of truth in what is written in the Retrenchment Committee's Report, I should like to defend on general grounds the railway administration of the past, for I feel that there is no Department of Government perhaps which receives more adverse criticism. (An Honourable Member: "and for obvious reasons.") But one of the things that I was looking forward to doing when I took up this appointment was to try and clear away some of the mud thrown at the Railway Board, and I do hope I shall have a chance of doing so. Now with regard to some of the criticisms that have been recently made, I would like to refer to one point made by Captain Sassoon. He tells us that instead of replacing our worn-out material, our worn-out engines and stock, we should repair them. He says, 'darn your stockings, don't buy new ones.' Well, we have been doing this, Sir, for years, and we know perfectly well that third class passengers in particular are beginning to feel the darns in the stockings,—and that has been the trouble, dating back from the war period particularly. We have things, Sir, not 30 years old like Captain Sassoon's most excellent machinery, we have engines 40 and 42 years old still awaiting replacement. I should rather like to know whether Captain Sassoon does not find that his 30-year old machinery does not cost him more in maintenance than new machinery would. It is an actual fact that a 40-year old locomotive costs very much more in maintenance than a new locomotive does, and therefore you cannot be sure, deferring the renewals of locomotives, that you are not inevitably increasing the cost of maintenance, because locomotives must run and must keep up to the mark, and there, Sir, we come back to this very difficult question of programme revenue. What is programme revenue? We have heard it discussed in many different directions, and I am inclined to think that it is very hazily understood what programme revenue really is. The nature of programme revenue, that is to say, expenditure incurred according to programme on revenue account is purely part of working expenses and part of maintenance and upkeep. But for the purposes of budgeting some years ago, it was considered necessary and advisable to separate this from the ordinary working expenses account. One of the things about railway working is that your working expenses vary, fluctuate up and down in proportion to the traffic moved. Now in budgeting, especially when, as has unfortunately been the case, our railway budget has been dependent very largely on the exigencies of the finances of the Government of India for the particular year, it has been found very difficult in the past to arrange for this fluctuation in accordance with the traffic receipts. It was therefore considered necessary some years ago to separate that portion of the expenditure which does fluctuate with traffic from that portion which does not and which can be programmed, and that is the origin of the expression 'programme revenue'. It is possible to lay down beforehand what shall be renewed and what shall not be renewed and that is why we have this head of programme revenue, because it enables us, by standardizing to some extent the amount of renewals which is to be done year by year, to look ahead and arrange beforehand and set aside a certain amount of money each year which will be used for necessary renewals and replacements. Then, it will be said, how is the figure arrived at? Now in this connection the Retrenchment Committee, I think, were possibly led away into a misunderstanding of our actual process. We can, as a matter of fact, justify the expenditure which we proposed, viz., 12½ crores. We have estimates and proposals before us sent by the Railways for the replacement of actually worn-out materials, rails and locomotives which are lying there ready to be replaced and waiting to be replaced not strictly in accordance with any life figure as some Members have mentioned. Not because a rail is 30 years old do we take it out of the line; not because an engine is 35 years old do we replace it, but because those rails are incapable of carrying the traffic at the present time, incapable of carrying our heavier engines and the old engines incapable of hauling longer and faster trains. In other words we have got to make our renewal programme to fit the actual requirements of the different Railways. It is perfectly true, as the Acworth Committee pointed out, that there are hundreds and thousands of units of our stock which require immediate replacement, not because they have run an age limit, but because they are really falling to pieces and cost us a great deal in maintenance; and that is the real reason why our maintenance on locomotives and carriages and wagons have gone up during the last few years, because during the war period and for some years after the war, expenditure on these very necessary renewals was scamped and starved. If you see the figures, you will find that we were not able to expend any appreciable sum in past years owing to financial exigencies. It was impossible to carry out the renewals of engines which were worn out and could not haul the traffic. I think perhaps I have explained what is the origin of this programme revenue. You will see, Sir, that the Inchaape Committee's report refers to a certain Depreciation Committee. The object of that Depreciation Committee was to settle and if possible standardise the expenditure in regard to renewals. It was not intended that they should lay down an exact figure to be spent on any individual Railway each year but their investigations were intended to enable us to form a basis for fixing the amount of programme revenue which should be spent year by year in order to keep the Railways up to the mark. I think there is absolutely no disputing the figures which they have produced and which are now under examination. They have investigated into the case of every Railway in India and after careful consultation with the Agents and Engineers responsible, they show that the arrears of renewals can roughly be assessed at about 18 crores of rupees; and they also say that the normal amount to be used in replacing depreciation should be 9½ crores. I just mention these facts to guard against a fallacy. It is said that the arrears of renewals are 18 crores of rupees, that is to say about two years' arrears. Actually the renewals have been many many years in arrears and 18 crores is the accumulation of the arrears of depreciation in many years which actually exists at the present time.

[Mr. C. D. M. Hindley.]

I think, Sir, that I have explained, how we arrived at our figure which we placed in the original budget. You will see that as against the proposal of 12½ crores, it was anticipated that there would be a saving of one crore during this year, that is to say, we anticipated that there were possibilities of effecting that saving owing to the fall in prices or possibly late delivery of materials. We have brought our figure to 11½ crores, and now, as the result of the recommendation of the Retrenchment Committee we have reduced that figure to 9 crores and made a cut of 2½ crores in programme revenue. Now, it sounds very easy to take a pencil and cut 2½ crores, but I can assure you that it is going to be done with the very greatest difficulty and with the greatest detriment to the Railway property. There is no doubt whatever that you are deferring very necessary renewals which should be made at the present time. We have not done it year after year. During the war we passed it over because we could not get materials and we could not get money; subsequently also there was no money and we could not get on with the work; and it is now getting into a serious liability. What we are doing is that we are living on Capital. We are eking out the existence of our Railways, not replacing the depreciation that has occurred and we are seriously depreciating the asset; and what is much more important is that we are depreciating the earning power of these Railways. We might perhaps stand by and see the Capital book value of the Railways being reduced, but we are very seriously concerned with the possibility of reducing the earning power of certain parts of our Railways; and that is why I appeal very strongly that this House should not make a further reduction on that figure of 9 crores, programme revenue. We have already explained, I think what has been done in regard to staff. Out of the general head of working expenses, where the Retrenchment Committee recommended a reduction of 1 crore, we propose to make a reduction of 50 lakhs. Now, Sir, it is a very difficult matter to effect large reductions in staff at very short notice. The House has to remember that these reductions will have to come into force on the 1st of April. It is not always possible to get rid of men without notice whatever their stage in the service. You must allow a certain amount of latitude when you are getting rid of a man and depriving him of his occupation. I understand that so far as can be done on the Great Indian Peninsula Railway, the men who have to be unfortunately reduced are being given every possible concession in the matter of leave, provident fund or anything that is due to them. Any leave which they have earned is, I believe, given to them as is natural and right. Now, I ask anyone here, is it reasonable to expect that you can sack men on the 1st of April and give them no leave and no concessions? If that is the case, how are you going to allow for "lag" as it is called in connection with these reductions? For that reason, after very serious consideration we kept our figure at 50 lakhs reduction only. I must say that I have been very seriously impressed not only with the Inchcape Committee's Report, but with the criticisms which have been brought forward to-day. I feel on going through the whole of the report and through the whole of these criticisms that there is a feeling, a commercial feeling. I may say, that the Railways should be better managed and that they should produce a profit and that they should pay their way. I do not believe that it is right that you should ask your Railways to give a very large and substantial relief of general taxation. I believe you should be content to have your Railways paying their way as an ordinary commercial concern, and it will be our business here to carry out as far as we can those recommendations. I gather that Honourable Members do understand how we have arrived at the figures and there is no necessity for me to go further into the figures, but I would rather take advantage of a suggestion made, I think, by Mr. Shahani and Mr. Kamat, that in the event of earnings improving during the year,—as I am optimistic enough to believe they will prove—that it will not be made difficult for us to come forward for an additional grant to meet the necessary working expenses which must arise when greater traffic is being carried. On that understanding, I am prepared on behalf of Government to accept the recommendation made by Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary that the total figure of working expenses should be reduced by 50 lakhs. We shall do our level best to carry out that reduction, though in my opinion it is not a wise thing to do at the present moment. We will do our best to carry it out, and I may claim that it should be left to me, to the Railway Department, to decide how we should make the incidence of that cut fall. With these words, Sir, I oppose Mr. Ginwala's motion and accept Sir Deva Prasad's amendment.

[Mr. C. D. M. Hindley.]

Mr. P. P. Ginwala: Sir, I want to ask a question. Did I understand the Honourable Member correctly when I heard him say that he had cut down 12 crores 50 lakhs in the estimate to 9 crores in the programme revenue, and that he had effected a saving of half a crore in the staff?

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley: In ordinary working expenses.

Mr. P. P. Ginwala: 3½ crores plus half a crore?

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley: 2½ crores in programme revenue. It stood at 11½ crores and it is cut down to 9. I am talking about the present budget figures.

Mr. President: The original question was:

"That a sum not exceeding Rs. 64,47,79,000 be granted to the Governor General in Council to defray the charge which will come in course of payment during the year ending the 31st day of March, 1924, in respect of 'Railways'."

Since which an amendment has been moved:

"That the provision for working expenses under the head 'Railway' be reduced by Rs. four crores."

Further amendment moved:

"Substitute the words 'fifty lakhs' for the words 'four crores'."

The question is that that amendment ("Substitute the words 'fifty lakhs' for the words 'four crores'") be made.

The Assembly divided:

AYES—67.

Abdul Quadir, Maulvi.
Abdul Rahim Khan, Mr.
Abul Kasem, Maulvi.
Achariyar, Rao Bahadur P. T.
Srinivasa.
Ahmed, Mr. K.
Ahsan Khan, Mr. M.
Aiyar, Mr. A. V. V.
Aiyer, Sir P. S. Sivaswamy.
Akram Hussain, Prince A. M. M.
Allen, Mr. B. C.
Amjad Ali, Maulvi.
Barua, Mr. D. C.
Bhanja Deo, Raja R. N.
Bhargava, Pandit J. L.
Bishambhar Nath, Mr.
Blackett, Sir Basil.
Bradley-Birt, Mr. F. B.
Bray, Mr. Denys.
Brayne, Mr. A. F. L.
Burdon, Mr. E.
Cabell, Mr. W. H. L.
Chatterjee, Mr. A. C.
Clark, Mr. G. S.
Cotelingam, Mr. J. P.
Crookshank, Sir Sydney.
Dalal, Sardar B. A.
Faridoonji, Mr. R.
Gajjan Singh, Sardar Bahadur.
Ghulam Sarwar Khan, Chaudhuri.
Gidney, Lieut.-Col. H. A. J.
Haigh, Mr. P. B.
Hindley, Mr. C. D. M.
Holme, Mr. H. E.

Hullah, Mr. J.
Hussanally, Mr. W. M.
Innes, the Honourable Mr. C. A.
Iswar Saran, Munshi.
Jamall, Mr. A. O.
Jannadas Dwarkadas, Mr.
Jejeebhoy, Sir Jamsetjee.
Joshi, Mr. N. M.
Ley, Mr. A. H.
Lindsay, Mr. Darcy.
Mitter, Mr. K. N.
Moir, Mr. T. E.
Muhammad Hussain, Mr. T.
Muhammad Ismail, Mr. S.
Mukherjee, Mr. J. N.
Mukherjee, Mr. T. P.
Percival, Mr. P. E.
Ramayya Pantulu, Mr. J.
Ramji, Mr. Manmohandas.
Rhodes, Sir Campbell.
Samarth, Mr. N. M.
Sams, Mr. H. A.
Sarfaraz Hussain Khan, Mr.
Sarvadhikary, Sir Deva Prasad.
Sassoon, Capt. E. V.
Schamnad, Mr. Mahmood.
Shahab-ud-Din, Chaudhri.
Singh, Mr. S. N.
Sircar, Mr. N. C.
Spence, Mr. R. A.
Townsend, Mr. C. A. H.
Webb, Sir Montagu.
Willson, Mr. W. S. J.
Yamin Khan, Mr. M.

NOES—27.

Abdul Majid, Sheikh.
 Abdulla, Mr. S. M.
 Agarwala, Lala Girdharilal.
 Asjad-ul-lah, Maulvi Miyan.
 Ayyangar, Mr. M. G. M.
 Ayyar, Mr. T. V. Seshagiri.
 Bagde, Mr. K. G.
 Basu, Mr. J. N.
 Das, Babu B. S.
 Faiyaz Khan, Mr. M.
 Ginwala, Mr. P. P.
 Girdhardas, Mr. N.
 Gulab Singh, Sardar.
 Jatkar, Mr. B. H. R.

Lakshmi Narayan Lal, Mr.
 Mahadeo Prasad, Munshi.
 Man Singh, Bhai.
 Mudaliar, Mr. S.
 Neogy, Mr. K. C.
 Pyari Lal, Mr.
 Shahani, Mr. S. C.
 Singh, Babu B. P.
 Sinha, Babu Ambica Prasad.
 Sinha, Babu L. P.
 Srinivasa Rao, Mr. P. V.
 Subrahmanayam, Mr. C. S.
 Venkatapatiraju, Mr. B.

The motion was adopted.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That the provision for working expenses under the head 'Railways' be reduced by 50 lakhs."

The motion was adopted.

The Assembly then adjourned for Lunch till Three of the Clock.

The Assembly re-assembled after Lunch at Three of the Clock. Mr. President was in the Chair.

Mr. B. Venkatapatiraju (Ganjam cum Vizagapatam: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, my amendment as amended again runs as follows:

"That the provision for Working Expenses under the head 'Railways'"

Mr. President: We have passed from Working Expenses; that is finished.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: I have an amendment for cutting down the Working Expenses by one rupee.

Mr. President: We have had a whole morning's discussion on Working Expenses; that subject is now exhausted.

Mr. B. Venkatapatiraju: I had not an opportunity of speaking; I got up ten times as I wanted to speak on the general question.

Mr. President: Mr. Venkatapatiraju, No. 134.

Mr. B. Venkatapatiraju: I move:

"That the provision for Surplus Profits under the head 'Railways' be reduced to Rs. 65,00,000."

That point was raised because the Inchcape Committee at page 293 of their Report suggested that the amount might stand at that figure. Now, I propose to raise the question of principle instead of sticking up to that figure, because Surplus Profits have to be paid to the Companies under the terms of the contracts, and you cannot go beyond the terms of the contract, and the terms of the contract with reference to various companies differ, though we deplore the necessity for the Government to enter into different methods of agreeing to give surplus profits. For instance, I may mention that surplus profits were given in this wise. For the East Indian Railway, four-fifths of the Surplus Profits up to Rs. 25 lakhs, to the Government and one-fifth to the Company; in excess of 25 lakhs, fourteen-fifteenths to the Government and one-fifteenth to the Company. In the case of the Great Indian Peninsula Railway the Surplus Profits are divided as follows: nineteen-twentieths to the Government and one-twentieth to the Company. Similarly, with reference to other companies the profits are divided in the proportion of four-fifths and one-fifth. In the case of the Bengal-Nagpur Railway it is in the proportion of three-fourths and one-fourth and in the case of the Burma Railway three-fourths and one-fourth. My point is this, I was not able to understand why this excess amount was fixed in the present estimates, whereas at page 293, the Inchcape Committee suggested only 60 lakhs. Either they were not in possession of the figures or perhaps a larger amount is expected to be realised in the working of the current year. They wanted to provide 98 lakhs in order to give a margin over 60 lakhs provided in the Inchcape Committee's Report. I suggest 65 lakhs might be put in.

With reference to the Surplus Profits, Sir; I want to bring to the notice of the Government whether the terms of the contracts are properly scrutinised before the amounts are allowed under the head of Surplus Profits. The terms of the contracts are clear that the permanent way and rolling-stock should be maintained in good repair and that this should be met out of the gross receipts, that is out of the working expenses. If that amount is not realised, how can you take it under Surplus Profits and divide it between yourself and the Companies? So far as you are concerned, you need not think you are making a good bargain by taking it, because you have to pay interest and all the profits you are realising fall short of the interest. For instance, in the case of 8 companies out of 12 you have lost 20 crores and this year you propose a loss of 5 crores on these 8 companies. After all, you speak of a commercial concern, but how can this be when the nine-tenths shareholder loses. We do not grudge this division of Surplus Profits in the case of companies who are trying their level best to secure some profit to us, but what I say is, when you have allowed a profit, do you first of all see that renewals which ought to be maintained under the terms of the contract are really maintained by the companies instead of asking us to pay for this out of our revenues? If you put it under renewals it would come under general revenues because you may take it under the Capital Account. But what I want to show is that, in order to give Surplus Profits, you must provide for repairs and maintenance of the rolling-stock. Where you have paid, you are not doing any justice to yourself but doing unnecessary generosity in favour of the companies. During the period of the war, when repairs and maintenance were not properly maintained, because I want to use the words specifically, repairs and maintenance distinguishing them from renewals, i.e., to provide any fresh article or new addition the expenditure must be met out of the capital funds. Therefore, I do not take up that course. I would only concern myself with repairs and maintenance of the rolling-stock and permanent way which should be kept in proper condition. When you have not done that during the period of the War you have been satisfied in dividing this amount with the Companies even to the extent of giving 1 crore and 4 lakhs year before last; and last year you provided 60 lakhs. Not satisfied with that you are providing 98 lakhs. Now I suggest to you, Sir, in the evidence given before the Aoworth Committee some member stated this surplus profit is not properly earned at all. It is not commercially earned. It is true you may literally fulfil the terms of the contracts by stating whatever amount that is not actually spent on repairs and maintenance of rolling stock and permanent way might go towards surplus profits beyond the guaranteed interest, 4 or 5 per cent. and interest on the capital outlay according to the circumstances of the case. Now I ask if that course is adopted whether the Government is not a loser on that account, whether the Government was not to pay a larger amount as surplus profits because the Government supervision has not been effective in order to see that the amount is properly spent on repairs. If you cannot spend it, as suggested by Lord Inchcape, you keep the amount in suspense, because you cannot divide the profits without meeting the necessary obligations which were entered into under the contract, and therefore, Sir, I would ask for an explanation from Government. Lord Inchcape's Committee suggested 60 lakhs. Why have you put it at 90 lakhs when you have suggested 66½ lakhs surplus profits on 92 crores gross receipts; why have you put it at the higher rate of 98 lakhs on gross receipts of 95½ crores. Secondly, whether during all these years repairs and maintenance have been carried on as per contract, and where they failed to carry them out, what steps were taken by the supervising authority to see that Government did not lose on that account. I want an explanation, and therefore unless I am satisfied on these points I wish it to be reduced to the figure of 65 lakhs.

[Mr. B. Venkatapatiraju.]

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley: Sir, I can quite see that the figures put before Honourable Members may perhaps have given rise to a certain amount of misapprehension. As I mentioned this morning, the figures taken by the Retrenchment Committee are those of the Budget estimate for 1922-23 where will be found the figure of 60 lakhs for surplus profits paid to Companies. The Retrenchment Committee naturally did not propose any alteration in this figure, but I must point out that under the obligations of our contracts with these companies surplus profits are calculated by a definite formula which was laid down in each contract. To arrive at the surplus profits for these Companies we take the gross earnings and then we deduct from the gross earnings the working expenses (working expenses including all outgoings on maintenance and renewals). From that net figure, again, has to be deducted the standing charges in respect of interest on debentures and interest on the Company's share capital. We thus get at a net figure which is divided in a fixed proportion laid down under the contract between Government and the Company.

Now these contracts were made at various periods of our history. Some of them date back a great many years; some of them have been made comparatively recently; but all of them have been made with due consideration at the time to the market value of money and to the value of the property which the Company was taking over and the value of the services which Government was receiving. After the most careful consideration every one of these contracts has been prepared and in no case is the Company obtaining a larger share of the profits than is its due. With those contracts, therefore, before us, the amount which has to be paid is naturally an obligation on Government and one which cannot be avoided. We are told that we must run our railways on a commercial basis. One of the first principles of sound commerce is to honour your contracts, and we cannot avoid these demands which have been calculated, or will be calculated, on the actual net earnings received by the Companies. Now Honourable Members will see quite clearly that if the gross earnings remain untouched at the same figure we propose, and if the working expenses, including renewals, are reduced by a large figure, the net earnings on each railway will be largely increased and therefore, applying the formula in the contract, the surplus profits to each company will also be largely increased. That is the explanation of the change from 60 lakhs in the second column of this statement to 98 lakhs. In the last column 98 lakhs represents the best estimate we can obtain of the surplus profits that will be due to the Companies under their contracts. With this figure of gross earnings and this figure of working expenses as the result of the further cut which we have agreed to this morning, I anticipate that there will be some further increase to the surplus profits which we may have to pay to these Companies in the same proportion.

I have said that the surplus profits of each railway administration, arrived at in the way I have described, that is to say, by deducting the working expenses from the gross earnings and then applying the proper proportion between the Government and the Company, vary in many cases in accordance with the different contracts that have been made from time to time. To illustrate how this division is arrived at I can quote one or two figures. In the case of the Bengal Nagpur Railway, for instance, the surplus profits, the Company's share of surplus profits is 5.65 lakhs; the estimated Government share is 52.5 crores. In the case of the East Indian Railway the Company's share is estimated at 8 lakhs; the Government share at 239.22 lakhs. In the case of the South Indian Railway, the Company's share is 1.98 lakhs, the Government share 30.18. And so on. So that the House will see that the Companies are not getting a very large or disproportionate share of the profits earned.

With this explanation, Sir, I hope my Honourable friend will be satisfied that we cannot do otherwise than pay the amounts that are due under their contracts to those Companies.

Mr. B. Venkatapatiraju: What about repairs and maintenance?

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley: The Honourable Member, I think, raised a further point about whether these Companies have in fact repaired and carried out the necessary replacements to their property.

Mr. B. Venkatapatiraju: Under the terms of the contract. They must be met out of surplus profits.

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley: The Honourable Member desires to know whether the property has actually been kept in proper repair under the terms of the contract. That is so, Sir, in so far as Government has been able to finance them; but I must make it perfectly clear that there were periods when the finances available for these operations were not sufficient, and we are now reaping the harvest in the heavier depreciation expenses which we have got to meet.

Mr. President: I find from a note in front of me that the Honourable Member intended to move a reduction by Rs. 100 and not Rs. 33 lakhs. Which does he really wish?

Mr. B. Venkatapatiraju: Rs. 100, Sir.

The motion that the provision for surplus profits under the head Railways be reduced to Rs. 65,00,000 was, by leave of the Assembly, withdrawn.

Mr. K. O. Neogy (Dacca Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): I am perfectly aware, Sir, that the obligation under the contracts with the different railways cannot be avoided in regard to the payment of surplus profits . . .

Mr. President: The Honourable Member had better move his motion for reduction by Rs. 100 to put the discussion in order.

Mr. K. O. Neogy: I move:

"That the provision for Surplus Profits paid to Companies under the head 'Railways' be reduced by Rs. 100."

I began by saying that we cannot possibly avoid the obligation that the contracts have created; but it is quite clear from the statement that Mr. Hindley has made just now that the surplus profits have a sure tendency of increasing by postponement of legitimate repairs. That postponement may be due to avoidable and unavoidable causes. So far as the war period was concerned, I recognise that the postponement was inevitable to a certain extent. But Mr. Hindley was not certainly right when he said that this was a necessary incident of the war period and the war period alone. I would draw his attention to the observations made by the Acworth Committee to the effect that this aspect of railway policy has been in existence from before the war. If the Honourable Member will turn to paragraphs 70 and 71 of that Report, he will find what the Acworth Committee has had to say on this question. They observe:

"The Great War is an explanation, if not an excuse, for many particulars which no one would defend under normal circumstances. We cannot think that even the war is sufficient to explain the treatment of Indian railway revenue in the last few years At an early stage of the war it became difficult to obtain from Europe the customary supplies. Later on it became practically impossible. The inevitable result was that maintenance and renewals fell seriously into arrears from 1914 to 1918."

In the foot-note on the same page they say that the policy of undue postponement of revenue renewals, which in fact has meant taking as net revenue money that should properly have been treated as working expenses, is of long standing and not merely the result of the exigencies of the war period. So I should like to correct Mr. Hindley on this point.

Then, Sir, I propose to place the comments of the Acworth Committee on this aspect of the railway administration. They say:

"Obviously the expenditure was only postponed and had to be faced later on. An ordinary commercial concern"

(mark that, because too much is sometimes made of the commercial principles on which an administration like the railway administration should be run when we ask for any reduction)

"An ordinary commercial concern would as a matter of course have carried the money so underspent to a reserve for renewals, to be spent when the materials were again available. The independent railway companies did this. Not so the State. The money was treated as part of the ordinary revenue of the Government in the year in which it was not spent. . . . The apparent gain was not real. Had there been a separate railway budget the money underspent would have been earmarked in it as advanced to the Government for general purposes. It was indeed announced at one time that a reserve was being made, or would be made. The end of the war has come, and the money is not there; other liabilities had been too strong for the Government of India and so the reserve fund vanished"

Mr. President: The money is not there and is not included in the vote.

Mr. K. O. Neogy: Sir, connected with the question of surplus profits is the question of the creation of a depreciation fund. The question is whether any company or the Government have a right to credit to their general revenues or to their surplus profits any amount that ought to be kept aside in a depreciation fund with which to meet any deferred renewals which could not be carried out by reason of any exigencies of the moment. That is the point that I wish to make. Now, Sir, I will ask Honourable Members to bear with me for a few minutes. As early as 1917 Sir Hugh Bray raised this question in the old Imperial Council. He pointed out that the railways were making a great deal of money and they were putting by no reserve and at the end of the war, when it was possible to spend money it might be difficult to get hold of that money. In 1918 we find the Honourable Sir William Meyer provided a special reserve of Rs. 30 crores for this particular purpose; but two years later the Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey replying, I believe, to Mr. Crum, said that this amount went to increase the Secretary of State's ordinary ways and means balances, and in the evidence which Sir William Meyer gave before the Acworth Committee he said that this special reserve was raided by reason of the exigencies of the exchange situation created by the policy of Reverse Council Bills. This, in brief, is the history of the reserve that was actually provided by Sir William Meyer, and which is no longer there. Now, Sir, what about the share of the surplus profits that has been appropriated by the companies, a share which does not legitimately belong to them, a share that was swelled by reason of the postponement of renewals during the war period? They have been divided as dividends to the shareholders of the British companies. Sir, I want to inquire whether it is not possible to get the companies to make a refund of the excess amount which they got over the amount which belonged to them legitimately. It has been observed in the Inchcape Committee's report that the taxpayer in India received the benefit of the postponement of these renewals during the war period. I am afraid I have to join issue with the Inchcape Committee on this point, because I have shown that although the revenues of the Government were swelled at that time by reason of the postponement of renewals, the tax-payers have not been benefited; in fact, we are asked to foot a much larger Bill in the shape of programme revenue expenditure to-day than would have been the case if we had a reserve at our disposal to-day. Apart from this the spurious appearance of prosperity which this unspent amount gave to the general revenues of the Government of India, proved an excuse for raising salaries all round, and incidentally also lured us into a false sense of security under which we made a special war contribution of £100 millions to England.

Mr. O. D. M. Hindley: Sir, my Honourable friend, Mr. Neogy, has used in the course of his speech a good many of the portions of the Acworth Committee Report which I had marked in blue pencil to substantiate the position I took up this morning in regard to renewals. I am very grateful to him for bringing before the House this particular point that deferring renewals on railways is only deferring a liability. I think my Honourable friend was one of those who joined this morning in making a further cut in what we call programme revenue, which is, in effect, his depreciation fund which he wants us to put by. As regards the past, I quite agree with him, and I do not think that he had any reason for contradicting me in anything that I said, in fact I think we are quite in agreement that this process of deferring renewals on account of financial exigencies has been going on for a much longer time than from the war period. In fact, I have reason to believe that this portion of the Acworth Committee's Report was very largely based on the evidence which I myself gave to the Committee. I am glad to find myself for once so much in agreement with Mr. Neogy, but I cannot agree with him when he suggests that we should go to the shareholders of these companies hat in hand and say "give us back some of your surplus profits." (An Honourable Member: "Writ in hand and not hat in hand.") Well, Sir, I do not think even a writ would be productive; and what is more, it would not be just because they were compelled by the financial exigencies of the Government of India to withhold expenditure on these necessary renewals. That, Sir, was the particular point of my evidence before the Acworth Committee. As a company's officer, I felt acutely that the Government of India in those days was benefiting the general tax-payer at the expense of the Railways by withholding the necessary funds for renewals and repairs, and I am extremely sorry that that process is now being continued owing to the financial exigencies of the current year. It is, therefore, not fair to blame those companies and those shareholders for taking their just dues under the contracts.

[Mr. C. D. M. Hindley.]

Another point arises in regard to that, Sir. As the Honourable Mr. Innes pointed out this morning during the past few years the tax-payer has benefited by 47 crores of rupees derived from railway surplus profits. I am not in a position to give the exact proportion of those surplus profits which have gone to the shareholders, but it must be, from the figures I gave you a few minutes ago, a very much smaller figure than that. Now, the position we have arrived at is that the general tax-payer has benefited at the expense of the depreciation of the Railways, and that was exactly the point which I wished to make this morning but unfortunately the Clock did not permit me to make all the points that I wanted to make. By cutting down the necessary provision for renewals which I know are required actually, we are deferring the liability and benefiting the tax-payer at the expense of your capital invested in the Railways.

Dr. H. S. Gour: (Nagpur Division: Non-Muhammadan): Sir, the Honourable Mr. Hindley has not appreciated the true import of the Honourable Mr. Neogy's charge against the Government. What he wanted to point out was this, that all the earnings of the Railways are treated as gross earnings. You deduct therefrom the working expenses which consist of the actual cost of the maintenance of the Railways and what is known as programme revenue which, in popular terms, may be called repairs and maintenance. The residue left is called profits, and it is apportioned between the companies concerned and the Government. What Mr. Neogy wanted to accuse the Government of was that during all these years you have not been setting aside out of the working expenses a definite portion for repairs and maintenance but have been transferring this amount to your net profits which are divided between yourself and the companies concerned. What is the reply of the Honourable Mr. Hindley? He says the general tax-payer has benefited at the expense of the depreciation to the tune of 45 or 47 crores of rupees. But my Honourable friend could not have forgotten that the Railways belong to the general tax-payer and what was paid to the tax-payer was his own money. My Honourable friend must not also forget that in the Acworth Committee's Report, it has been very clearly pointed out that many of the companies, for instance, the East Indian Railway and the Great Indian Peninsula Railway, are really no companies at all in the right sense of the term, and therefore when you apportioned the general net profits and gave them over to the companies, you gave them money which was not justly due to them. I will go further and say that even if you benefited the general tax-payer, you did so at the cost of the railway concerned. It was your duty to see that the amount set apart for repairs and maintenance was not diverted to another purpose, and that is what Mr. Neogy complains of. In the long series of years, not merely during the war but in the years preceding the war and since, you have been sacrificing the amount intended for depreciation, for repairs and maintenance, and you have been transferring it to net profits and dividing it between yourself and the companies concerned. What justification had you for this course of action? That is a point on which my friend Mr. Hindley has vouchsafed no reply to this House, and I submit that is the gravamen of the charge levelled against the Government by the Honourable Mover of this amendment.

Rai Bahadur Bishambhar Nath (Allahabad and Jhansi Divisions: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I find that the working expenses of the Indian Railways have risen from 29.35 crores in 1913-14 to 67.99 crores in 1922-23. The percentage on this has been 131 per cent. on maintenance, 125 per cent. on locomotives, 235 per cent. on carriages and wagons and 136 per cent. on special and miscellaneous expenditure. These charges are serious and call for a searching inquiry. It is surprising that the cost of the same or similar works . . .

Mr. President: The Assembly has passed from the discussion on working expenses, and it is now discussing an amendment on Surplus Profits.

Mr. J. Chaudhuri (Chittagong and Rajshahi Divisions: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I would give a simple answer to my friend, Dr. Gour. If the tax-payers have taken that money out of Railways, we in our last year's estimates made amends for that. We not only voted 30 crores last year, we altogether voted 150 crores for five years. So whatever we may have taken out of railway revenue we are now refunding and a substantial portion of that 150 crores will surely be appropriated for renewal purposes. We have now made ample amends for appropriating railway revenue for general purposes.

Dr. H. S. Gour: Sir, I rise to a point of order. I think I made myself perfectly intelligible that I did not complain of the tax-payers receiving back their money, but what I do complain of is that the companies have received money to which they were not entitled.

Mr. J. Chaudhuri: As for that the Limitation Act would also stand in the way. If this was done three years ago, of course, we cannot sue the shareholders and get a refund. So, the only reasonable course left to us would be to keep the railway accounts now in proper order and allow for depreciation and build up a reserve; that will accomplish the object the Mover of the amendment has in view.

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: Just one word, Sir. I do not think there is anybody on the Government Benches, Sir, who will quarrel with what Dr. Gour has said. I think we all admit that the methods adopted during the war were unwise methods and we are paying for them now. We are all perfectly conscious that during the war we should not have paid away these large sums as windfalls to the general tax-payer and as surplus profits to the companies. The general tax-payer benefited and in accordance with the terms of the contracts the shareholders also benefited. It is merely a matter of the contracts. The only two points which seem to me relevant at the moment are these. In the first place it is no use crying over spilt milk and it is no use trying to recover this money from the shareholders. The other point is that it is up to us to see that we do not make this mistake in the matter again. That is the very reason why we are taking this advice of the Central Advisory Council. We set this Committee to work out proposals for a depreciation fund and those proposals have been approved in principle by the Inchcape Committee in paragraph 7 of their report. If we adopt these proposals I do not think that the House will in future have cause to complain against the Government of India in this manner.

[Mr. C. A. Innes.]

The motion was, by leave of the Assembly, withdrawn.

Sir Montagu Webb: Sir, I rise to a point of order. In the Demand for Grants which has been placed before this House, Annuities in purchase of Railways is shown under the head of "non-voted." But I have been unable to discover, Sir, why this has been done. I find that according to clause 67A of the Government of India Act that "the proposals of the Governor General in Council for the appropriation revenues or monies relating to the following heads shall not be submitted to the vote of the Legislative Assembly" and the only one of those heads that has any resemblance to this particular Demand for annuities is "Interest and Sinking Fund Charges on Loans." I submit, Sir, that this is not an interest or sinking fund Charge on Loans. This is purchase money which is being paid by Government for certain railways, and, that being so, Sir, I am unable to discover why this House should not express its views on the Demand for that purchase money which does not appear to be debarred under section 67A of the Act.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: On the point of order, Sir, I would like to draw your attention to the last year's budget statement, in which part of the annuities was shown to be votable, that is, these 167 lakhs of which I have given notice. I put that figure especially because I found from last year's budget statement that that item of 167 lakhs was shown as votable. I do not know what has happened in the meanwhile to make that item not votable. As a matter of fact that item of 167 lakhs 87 thousand appears in this year's statement also as Members will notice if they look at Appendix B, State Railways. And this same figure was shown in last year's budget to be votable. I therefore think that there must be some mistake in this.

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett (Finance Member): Sir, as regards the last point, taking it first because it is quite a simple question of fact, last year exchange was not distributed under the various heads voted and non-voted, but was taken as a single voted head. This year exchange has been distributed under each item. The item which therefore appeared as voted last year was really the exchange on this non-voted item of sinking fund and is now properly included as non-voted.

As regards the main point as to whether this is properly a non-voted charge, it seems to me rather far-fetched to say that an annuity which is an interest plus a sinking fund is not an interest and sinking fund charge. (Sir Montagu Webb: "On Loans.") On the general principle on which this interest and sinking fund charge was treated as non-votable, the procedure was based quite clearly on the procedure in the United Kingdom, where consolidated fund charges are not submitted to the actual vote of the House for the specific purpose of making it quite clear to the creditors of the State that sums which are due to them are not liable to run the gauntlet every year of voting in the House. But I would submit further that whatever the merits of the question on which I think there is no doubt, though certain Honourable Members seem to think there is doubt, section 67A (iv) of the Act, which has been quoted, says:

"If any question arises as to whether any appropriation of revenue or money which is made does not relate to the above heads, the decision of the Governor General on the question shall be final."

And it is in accordance with the directions of the Governor General that this has been included as non-voted.

Dr. H. S. Gour: May I ask the Honourable the Finance Member whether it is in accordance with the general directions of the Governor General that this has been transferred to the non-votable items or whether that is a decision of the Governor General?

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: This has not been transferred. It is a non-votable item.

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas (Bombay City: Non-Muhammadan Urban): Sir, I want to point out to refresh the memory of the Members on the Government Benches that last year we had the precedent of this item being discussed in this very House. I myself raised the point and the Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey then made a speech and gave an answer to the arguments that had been advanced in the debate. If an item has been admitted as discussable by this House in one year, I do not see how the Governor General, in spite of the powers vested in him, can in the next year rule that that item should be a non-votable one.

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: Sir, I think the Honourable Member is mistaken in thinking that this question of the annuities was discussed last year at this stage of the budget. It was discussed in the general discussion, and again this year, on the budget. Therefore, because under the specific directions of the Governor General it was submitted for discussion on the general budget, I submit that it is not in order now.

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas: It was not in the general discussion, Sir, but in the discussion of demands for grants that this item was discussed. If I had the debate here I could at once find

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: I submit, Sir, that this does not really affect the question.

Mr. President: The explanation given by the Honourable the Finance Member why the item appears under one head this year and under another head last year disposes of the matter. And in any case, as he has pointed out, the Governor General is the authority concerned and not the Chair. The point of order is one which cannot be settled by the Chair. I must assume that, with the exception of printer's errors, items printed in italics are non-votable.

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas: Is precedent not a sufficient ground for the House to insist on discussing this item? It was discussed last year.

Mr. President: I take the explanation given by the Honourable Sir Basil Blackett, that it appeared in one column last year and in another this year, as sufficient. Does the Honourable Member mean that if one mistake was made, it ought to be repeated?

Sir P. S. Sivaswamy Aiyer (Tanjore cum Trichinopoly: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I concede that if a question has been raised whether a certain proposed appropriation of revenue does or does not relate to the above heads, the decision of the Governor General on the question is final, however patently absurd it may be. But does not clause 4 imply that there should have been a question raised? Does it or does it not mean that a question has been raised, and that on the question so raised, the decision of the Governor General has been pronounced? Now I do not think it can be fairly contended that before any question arises the Governor General can pronounce a binding decision. Nor can I believe that this question could possibly have been submitted to the Governor General in anticipation and a decision obtained from him, before any question at all was raised. It seems to me that the finality declared by clause 4 postulates the previous raising of a question and the deliberate application of the Governor General's mind to a specific question duly raised. May I know when the question arose and when it was submitted to the Governor General for his decision?

Dr. H. S. Gour: Sir, I wish to raise another point in that connection. If you see section 67A, clause (5), you will find that it lays down the general rule that the proposals of the Governor General in Council for the appropriation of revenue or monies relating to heads of expenditure not specified in the above heads shall be submitted to the vote of the Legislative Assembly in the form of demands for grants. That, Sir, is a general rule. Then we have the exception. The exceptions are specified in the above heads. These are clauses (1) to (5). Now, therefore, we come back to clause (1). Clause (1) lays down 'interest on sinking fund, charges and loans.' My Honourable friend, the Finance Member cannot contend that an annuity is a loan.

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: I do.

Dr. H. S. Gour: He says he does. I submit that is a matter upon which a question has arisen between himself and the Members of this House, and the decision under clause (4) must be of the Governor General. Therefore, I submit my Honourable friend, Sir Montagu Webb's motion cannot be ruled out of order without a decision of the Governor General.

Mr. President: These demands are presented on the authority of the Governor General. I must assume from the point of view of the Chair that they have not been presented behind the back of the Governor General.

Dr. H. S. Gour: With due respect to the Chair, the directions and general control of the Governor General is one thing,—a decision on a specific point raised under clause (4) is quite another thing, and I submit there is no decision; and does my friend contend that he has ever taken the decision of the Governor General as required by clause (4) of section 67A? I ask him to answer that question.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: As this is a point of law which has been raised, I may draw your attention, Sir, to clause (2) also of section 67A, that is, sub-clause (ii) of clause (3), that is, 'expenditure of which the amount is prescribed by or under any law.' Under section 20 of the Government of India Act the revenues of India shall be received for and in the name of His Majesty and shall, subject to the provisions of the Act, be applied for the purposes of the Government of India alone. There shall be charged on the revenues of India all the debts of the East Indian Company—clause (3) is important in this connection—all expenses, debts and liabilities lawfully contracted and incurred on account of the Government of India. Under that clause, this sum, which is allotted really for the payment of this debt, for the purchase of railways, will come under sub-clause (ii) rather than under sub-clause (1), and therefore it may be rightly regarded as having been put under a non-voted head. As regards clause (4) of section 67A, there is a preliminary condition, Sir, that a question should arise. I am not sure that any question arose between the Honourable the Finance Member and His Excellency the Governor General with reference to this matter. A question should arise, and then only His Excellency has to decide. Before any question arises, there can be no decision. 'If any question arises'—that is a condition precedent: unless therefore this comes under sub-clause (ii), this should not be rightly placed under a non-voted head. My own feeling is that it comes under sub-clause (ii).

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: Sir, my Honourable friend, Mr. Rangachariar, points out, if this does not come under section 1, it does come under section 2, which is 'expenditure prescribed by an Act of Parliament.' As regards the other point that was raised, the whole of the question as to what should be voted and what should not be voted in the Demand Grants was specifically raised and studied, and it is under the orders of the Governor General that the classification now shown in these estimates takes place. The specific question as to whether these particular annuities should or should not be included as non-voted has not to my own knowledge been raised in the form of a question by anybody where there was any doubt on the subject,—I myself do not admit that there is any doubt—but the general point was raised, and these particular annuities were included under the orders of the Governor General as non-voted.

Dr. H. S. Gour: I think the Honourable the Finance Member could not be unaware of the fact that though the exception is 'of which the amount is prescribed by or under any law', the amount we are concerned with here is 3 crores and odd. Surely no Act of Parliament has prescribed the payment of this amount, and therefore clause (2) is entirely outside the question. If it comes under any clause, it would come under clause (1), and I submit it does not come under clause (ii), and there is no decision of the Governor General as provided in clause (4).

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: Sir, Dr. Gour is mistaken as regards the second point.

Mr. President: The discussion must necessarily be fruitless if Honourable Members think that they can obtain a decision from the Chair. If there is a point really in doubt, the decision rests with the Governor General and with nobody else.

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: It is not exactly in accordance with the facts to say that it appeared as voted last year; a portion of it, that is, the exchange portion, appeared as voted, but the main portion appeared, and always has appeared, as non-voted.

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas: A crore and 60 lakhs appeared as votable.

Mr. President: The Honourable the Finance Member stated last year—if Honourable Members will look at page 3129 of the Assembly Debates,

[Mr. President.]

Volume II, (Part III), that the "total sum given there as annuities for purchase of railways is Rs. 5 crores and odd, and that it consists of two items: Rs. 1 crore 67 lakhs, which represents the exchange portion"—that has now been transferred?

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: Yes. It is a sterling sum of course.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: Sir, I move:

"That the provision for Miscellaneous Railway Expenditure under the head 'Railways' (page 29) be reduced by Re 1."

My object in moving this motion for reduction is to raise two or three points as regards Railway management. Sir, if it be permissible for me to do so, the first point I would raise is that of the annuities. These annuities are being paid by the Railway Board from our revenues instead of making it Capital expenditure. Sir, this method of wiping out our Capital is a wrong method altogether, and in order to show that it is a wrong method, I shall quote one authority. Sir Henry Kimber in his evidence recorded at page 146 of the Report of the Indian Railway Committee, 1921-22, states:

"The principle of converting debt into terminable annuities is quite legitimate and a good plan for any nation to adopt as regards its national debt, but it is quite otherwise to apply it for writing off a valuable asset."

Sir, by this method the Railway Board is wiping out a very valuable asset and, as I stated in my speech during the general discussion of the Budget, if you wipe out your Capital, naturally you reduce the incentive for the Railway Board to economise the working expenses. I therefore feel that this House should express its opinion on this point by adopting my motion. The second point that I wanted to raise was about the sinking funds. Sinking funds are also debited to Revenue account instead of being debited to Capital account.

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: On a point of order, sinking funds are also a non-voted item. Is the Honourable Member in order, Sir, in discussing it?

Mr. President: I called on the Honourable Member to move motion No. 140.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: My motion is for reducing rupee one which should come out of the expenses of the Railway Board which manages our Railways. I thought in discussing the expenses of the Railway Board it would be a matter of principle for this House to give certain directions to the Railway Board as to how they should manage their financial affairs, and I therefore thought that I could therefore speak on this point. But still if you rule that I cannot make a speech on that point, I shall turn my attention to another point. Am I in order, Sir?

Mr. President: The Honourable Member is entitled to move Reduction No. 140, Miscellaneous Railway Expenditure, which includes the Railway Board.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: Sir, the Railway Board also pays the sinking funds out of our revenues.

Mr. President: The Honourable Member cannot move that. If he will look at the order issued by the Governor General in Council, he will find that the heads of expenditure specified in sub-section (3) of section 67A of the Government of India Act shall be open to discussion by the Legislative Assembly when the Financial Statement is under consideration, that is on the first two days of the General Discussion, and not on the Demand for Grants.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: Then, Sir, I shall turn my attention to another matter of principle. It is this.

Mr. N. M. Samarth: That clause says, Sir:

"That the proposals of the Governor General in Council for the appropriation revenue or moneys relating to the following heads of expenditure shall not be submitted to the vote of the Legislative Assembly, nor shall they be open to discussion by either Chamber."

This means discussion by both, this and the other Chamber, which latter has no power to vote; and it goes on:

"at the time when the annual statement is under consideration, unless the Governor General otherwise directs"

This cannot mean that we cannot discuss non-votable items at the time of the voting of grants. I submit that we are voting on the general head 'Railways,' and if anybody proposes a reduction of the demand by one rupee, we can go into the whole question as to the whole expenditure on Railways whether votable or non-votable. I submit we are quite entitled to do it. We shall vote upon whatever is submitted to our vote. That does not mean we are prevented from discussing the whole question of Railway Administration. That is my submission, Sir.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: May I also on the point of order state that during last year's budget discussion, we voted on a motion for the reduction of the establishment of Army Department by rupee one. If that could be voted upon and discussed in the House, I do not know why this should not be discussed.

Mr. President: The Honourable Member stated that reduction was made in a non-voted item. I am quite sure that the Honourable Member did not move for a reduction in the non-voted item. The Honourable Member is now attempting to move a reduction in a non-voted item, though in the disguise of a votable item. As I have said, the order of the Governor General referred to the general discussion of the Budget in the first two days. The Demands for Grants do not include the non-voted items. They only include the votable items.

Dr. H. S. Gour: May I in this connection point out that a question of this character can only arise after the estimated annual expenditure and revenue are laid in the form of a statement before both Chambers of the Indian Legislature? [Section 67, clause (1).] Consequently, the question as to whether a certain specific item is votable or non-votable cannot arise unless the estimated annual expenditure is laid before this House and then a question is raised and a decision come to by the Governor General. I submit, therefore, Sir, that both Sir Montagu Webb's and Mr. Joshi's amendments are in order unless a question is raised by the Honourable the Finance Member and a decision obtained from the Governor General as provided in clause 4.

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas: Sir, I think what Mr. Joshi wanted was not to cut down Re. 1 from the non-votable item. My Honourable friend, Mr. Joshi, cited the case of the debate that took place on the Army expenditure. We deleted Rs. 100 out of the Army expenditure which was votable in the course of a discussion. If you refer to the pages which contain that discussion, you will find that the reason for cutting down was the heavy military expenditure, the policy of which was criticised by this House. I hold, Sir, with due deference to you, that it is the right of the House in cutting down a votable item to bring the reason for cutting down the heavy expenditure on the non-votable item.

Mr. President: It is not in the power of the Chair to go behind the Government of India Act or an order made by the Governor General under the Act.

Dr. H. S. Gour: Where is the order?

Mr. President: The order only refers to the general discussion of the financial statement.

Mr. J. Chaudhuri: May I suggest that the question be referred back to His Excellency the Governor General and the debate be postponed?

Mr. N. M. Joshi: Sir, I shall, after your ruling, leave the annuities and the sinking funds. The third question that I would like to raise on this motion is about the necessity for the Railway Board to pay sufficient attention to the conditions of life and service of the Railway employees. Sir, it was only last year that there was a very big strike on the East Indian Railway, and on account of that strike our revenues have suffered.

Mr. President: The Honourable Member should not raise that on the present discussion. Payment for working expenses includes payment of wages by the Railway Administrations to the employees under their control. Miscellaneous Railway Expenditure includes the Railway Board and in the case of the Railway Board, it can only refer to the persons composing it. The Honourable Member cannot raise that question.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: May I, Sir, point out to you my difficulty. The only place where I thought I could raise certain questions of general principle was the expenditure of the Railway Board, because the Railway Board is in charge of our Railway management, and if I cannot do that, I shall be certainly handicapped because there may be no other item of such a general character where I could have raised it.

Mr. President: The Railway Board is not the direct employer of these persons to whom the Honourable gentleman has referred.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: Yes, Sir, to the extent to which the Railway Board manages the property of the Government. 95 per cent. of the capital of our railways is Government capital and therefore the Railway Board is naturally responsible for certain general conditions of life and service of the people. I am not going into the detailed question

Mr. President: It has been laid down that on a question of that sort the authority responsible is the Railway Administration itself, not the Railway Board. The precise responsibility of the Railway Board may be difficult to define, but if the Honourable Member wished to raise that question and the effect of reductions of the railway staff, he should have done so under Working Expenses. Indeed that question was discussed very freely this morning by the Chief Commissioner for Railways and others.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: Sir, I am not raising that question of retrenchments at all. I am raising a point which is only in the competence of the Railway Board, namely, the establishment of Joint Councils and Joint Boards of railways in order that the grievances of the railway employees should be heard. I think that is only within the competence of the Railway Board, and if I have your permission I shall only speak a few words on that point. Sir, last year's strike caused a great amount of loss to Government as well as to the railway employees. It is necessary that we should devise some machinery by which the grievances of the railway employees will be considered by a body on which they will be represented and by which strikes may become unnecessary, and if not prevented, at least delayed. Railway employees go on strike out of sheer helplessness and because they see no other way open to them to get their grievances redressed. Now such machinery has been created in England and other countries. Sir, I therefore request the Government of India and the Railway Board to establish such Joint Boards where the representatives of the employees and of the Railway authorities will meet together and discuss questions of the conditions of life and service of the railway employees. In England there are Local Committees and then above the Local Committees there are Sectional Councils, then there are Railway Councils, then there are Central Wages Boards, then National Wages Boards, where not only the representatives of the employees, and of the Railway authorities, but the representatives of the users of railways are also present. I therefore think that that machinery should be adopted by the Government of India without delay, so that the grievances of the employees may be redressed without resort to strikes. You can ask the Railway employees not to go on strike till these Committees and Councils consider their grievances. On the other hand, Railway employees also will have a right to have their grievances heard by a Committee instead of only one person in authority. I therefore think that the Government of India will take this point into consideration.

There is, Sir, another point which I want to raise on this motion and I shall do that very briefly. The point is the treatment given to third class railway passengers. Sir, the Government of India this year have been very kind to place before us a memorandum in which they have given certain details of the measures which they have adopted for the improvement of the travelling facilities for third class railway passengers, but my contention is that these facilities are inadequate. In order to show in a very few words that those facilities are inadequate and the expenditure incurred is insufficient I will only place before the Assembly a few figures. Sir, our passenger traffic consists mostly of third class passengers. If there is one person in the 1st. 2nd and Intermediate classes, there are 27 persons in the third class. The third class railway traffic is 27 times as much as the 1st, 2nd and Inter classes put together. And if you take our earnings, the earnings from the 3rd class are five times as much as the earnings of the 1st, 2nd and Inter classes put together. Sir, these are the figures as regards the number of passengers and as regards the earnings. But when we come to the expenditure for the improvement of the conditions of travelling for the 3rd class passengers what do we find? Unfortunately I could not find any exact figure in the volumes given to us, but from a little search that I made, I could form a rough estimate, that is, that the expenditure incurred by Government on improving the conditions of travelling for third class passengers was only one and a half times that of 1st, 2nd and Inter classes put together. Sir, I do not know why this should be. If you take the number, the third class passengers are 27 times as much as the 1st, 2nd and Inter classes put together; if you take earnings, the earnings from the 3rd class are five times as much as those from the 1st, 2nd and Inter classes together. If you take all human beings to be equal, the expenditure ought to be 27 times as much because the number of 3rd class railway passengers is 27 times that of the others. But, Sir, in this 'practical' world we look more to finance than to human life. But even taking the financial side, if the 3rd class railway earnings are five times as much as those of the 1st, 2nd and Inter classes put together, the expenditure on improving the conditions of 3rd class travelling ought to be at least five times as much as the expenditure on the 1st, 2nd and Inter classes together, but what do I find? I find that the expenditure is not even twice as much as the expenditure on the 1st, 2nd and Inter classes. I therefore think that the Railway Board will very soon present a statement showing what amount of money they have spent for improving the travelling facilities of the 3rd class railway passengers, and also what they are doing for the 1st, 2nd and the Inter classes. I want a comparative statement. Without comparison you cannot really find out whether Government are doing their level best or not.

[Mr. N. M. Joshi.]

Sir, I want to draw the attention of the Government to another matter, namely, that in their Advisory Councils for railways both central and local they ought to include representatives of the third class railway passengers. I do not say that the present members of the Central Advisory Councils do not look to the interests of the 3rd class railway passengers; but even they will admit that if one of them is nominated by Government as a representative of the 3rd class passengers, he will find his hands strengthened, and he will be responsible to the 3rd class passengers in the country who will look to him to represent their grievances to the railway authorities. I therefore think that the Railway Board should pay serious attention to this question and very soon put on the Central Advisory Board a representative of the 3rd class railway passengers and insist upon such representatives being put on local Advisory Councils.

Sir, I also want to make another point, that the Railway Board gives more attention to the goods traffic than to the passenger traffic. Sir, in the memorandum given us by the Railway Board they have stated that they are spending three crores of rupees on passenger traffic while they are spending 5 crores of rupees on goods traffic—I am only talking of improvements—while the revenue received from the passenger traffic is 40 crores and that from the goods traffic is 50 crores. The revenue from the goods traffic is only 10 crores more while the proportionate amount spent for goods traffic improvement is much more than the Railway Board ought to spend.

Sir, under miscellaneous expenditure I also want to raise one small point, and that is about 'Surveys.' The Government of India's present policy is not to spend a large amount of money on the construction of new lines and therefore there is no need for spending money on new surveys. The Government of India have already spent crores of rupees on making surveys and I do not know how many lines of railways have been surveyed by them. The list will go into thousands, and I do not know why they should add to the list which already exists by spending lakhs of rupees on new surveys. I therefore think that this expenditure on new surveys is absolute waste, because the lines which we have already surveyed cannot be constructed unless we have got hundreds of crores of rupees. Why, therefore, should we spend money on making new surveys?

Sir, these are the points on which I wanted to raise a general discussion, and I think the House, in order to show their sympathy with the railway employees and the third class railway passengers, will accept my motion.

Lieut.-Colonel H. A. J. Gidney (Nominated: Anglo-Indians): Sir, there is only one out of the many points which Mr. Joshi has touched upon with which I wish to deal and to which I wish to give my support. It relates to the general administration of the employees of the railways. He has put before this House certain facts which I, from personal knowledge, can corroborate, and in support of this he has asked the House to support his motion so as to get an expression of opinion from the Railway Board as to whether this state of affairs will be corrected. He referred to the dissatisfaction at the treatment that is meted out by Railway officials to the staff. Sir, I have ample evidence to support this state of affairs at least on one Railway in particular (Dr. Nand Lal: "Not to the staff.") I do not mean the superior staff. (Dr. Nand Lal: "He meant to the third class passengers.") My remarks regarding the staff come under the General Administration of Railways. (Dr. Nand Lal: "I cannot understand that.") There are certain committees and bodies that are in operation in England called the Whitley Committee, etc. I believe that the Post and Telegraph Department is introducing a similar Committee in some of their larger offices in India, and I think it would be a good plan if all Railways in India were to emulate this example, especially when one realises that it was quite recently that the Railway Board issued a circular to all railways (it seems to me that the various railways at their own sweet will and pleasure, and when it suits their own convenience, accepts or rejects circulars or mandates from the Railway Board) based on the Government Servants' Conduct Rules prohibiting any railway servant from bringing any grievances to the notice of any Member of the Indian Legislature. I consider that the employees of all Railways, be they State Railways or Company-managed, should not be deprived of this inherent civic right, and I will tell you why. Certain Railways seem to be singular in the limited application and attention they give to their subordinates when they appeal against punishments meted out to them by their Railway Officials. I have had occasion to write to various railways on this very matter. If a railway employee enjoys the right of a vote, I fail to see why he should be deprived from bringing his grievance to the notice of his representative. Besides that, there are innumerable cases in which Railway subordinates have for petty offences been summarily dealt with, and I consider that it is not fair to deprive these employees of this legitimate means of redress. This state of affairs once obtained in many departments in England and to remedy this the Whitley Committee were put into operation. I would suggest for the consideration of the Railway Board the introduction, as has been done in the Indian Post and Telegraph Department, of such a Committee of Adjustment on all Railways consisting as it does of representatives of both employers and employees. I wish to assure the House that on certain railways and in certain departments there is a very acute feeling of resentment and discontent on this subject and would be failing in my duty if I did not publicly state here that certain railway employees do not get adequate justice from their Departmental heads. It is to remedy this that I wholeheartedly support Mr. Joshi in his remarks and I therefore bring this matter to the very serious and early notice of the Railway Board and ask them seriously to consider whether this unjust state of affairs could not be remedied and the employees of all railways be given a safeguard against this treatment which I would call bureaucratic or autocratic administration of justice on the part of certain railway officials.

[Lieut.-Colonel H. A. J. Gidney.]

Mr. K. Muppil Nayar (West Coast and Nilgiris: Non-Muhammadian Rural): Sir, I have also a similar proposal which I gave notice of for the purpose of eliciting information.

In the first place I wish to mention that I had before the publication of the Railway Committee's Report, given notice of a Resolution recommending the appointment of representative non-official local advisory bodies to the various Agents of the managing agencies of Indian Railways. For one reason or another I was unable to move the Resolution, but when I wanted to bring up the matter lately I learnt that the Government contemplated taking action in this matter. I now wish to ask what the Government's proposals are both regarding State-managed and Company-managed railways in this connection.

I also want to know when we may expect an actual beginning of work in connection with the Shoranur Manantody Railway.

Lastly, I want to know if there is a chance of the restoration of the Mangalore mail which I understand was autocratically cancelled due to an inter-company quarrel without the least regard to the convenience and comfort of the public.

Munshi Iswar Saran (Cities of the United Provinces: Non-Muhammadian Urban): Sir, with your permission, provided I am in order, I wish to offer a few observations about the constitution of the Railway Board itself. I take it, Sir, that I am in order, and I shall therefore proceed. Ever since the constitution of the Railway Board, there has been in political circles a great deal of feeling against it, but we find that the Railway Board, which the Acworth Committee calls the step-child, I do not know of whom, has been severely criticised by the Acworth Committee as well as by the Retrenchment Committee. Before I proceed any further, Sir, I wish to say a word about the Acworth Committee's Report and the Report of the Retrenchment Committee. It is not for me to sit in judgment on the respective merits of the distinguished men who sat on these Committees, but I shall say this that, as regards any retrenchment or as regards any reforms that are advocated mainly on financial grounds, the proposals that have been made by the Retrenchment Committee carry far greater weight with us than the recommendations suggested by the Acworth Committee, and the reason is obvious. If the House will turn to the Report of the Acworth Committee it will find from its terms of reference that at the time that the Acworth Committee was appointed there was no question of retrenchment.

What that Committee was asked to do was to make recommendations about the following subjects: (a) direct State Management; (b) management through a Company domiciled in England and with a Board sitting in London; (c) management through a Company domiciled in India and with a Board sitting in India; (d) management through a combination of (b) and (c); and advise as to the policy to be adopted as and when the existing contracts with the several Railway Companies can be determined. I venture to think that the real question which the Acworth Committee had to decide was the case of Company Management versus State Management.

Now when we come to the constitution of the Retrenchment Committee we find from the terms of reference that it was to make recommendations to the Government of India for effecting forthwith all possible reductions in the expenditure of the Central Government, having regard specially to the present financial position and outlook. In so far as questions of policy are involved in the expenditure under discussion, these will be left for the exclusive consideration of Government, but it will be open to the Committee to review the expenditure and to indicate the economy which might be effected if a particular policy were either adopted, abandoned or modified. My submission is that as far as the cuts in expenditure and the policies and principles based on financial consideration are concerned, the House will do well in being guided by the recommendations of the Retrenchment Committee, not because I mean for a moment that there is any superiority in this Committee over the other, but because this Committee, the Retrenchment Committee, was called upon to consider the question of economy, when it had the advantage and the very great advantage of having the report of the Acworth Committee before it. I therefore say that the remarks made by the Honourable Mr. Innes about the Retrenchment Committee and its inability to fully appreciate some problems, have left me utterly unconvinced. Now both these Committees, as I said at the outset, are against the Railway Board. What do we find them say? The Acworth Committee say:

"The function of the Railway Board is not to carry out routine duty but to shape policy, to watch, to think and to plan;"

And by implication they say that the Railway Board has failed in discharging its function in these respects. They say how the details came to be centred in their hands, and have considered—I need not go into all the details—the various complaints that were made against the Railway Board. They tell you the number of communications sent up and so on. What they say in effect is that all this must change. The constitution of the Railway Board, they say, must undergo a change and they propose a scheme of their own.

When we come to the Report of the Retrenchment Committee, we find the same thing. They too are not very pleased with the Railway Board, and what they suggest is that there should be one Member of the Executive Council in charge of Railways who ought to have one Chief Commissioner for Railways and one Railway Financial Adviser. Now I understand, Sir,—that the reconstitution of the Railway Board is under consideration. I wish to know whether this Railway Board is to remain; but before I proceed any further I wish to make it clear that I have nothing to say personally against any Member of the Railway Board. If I make any remarks, those remarks should be taken as directed against the system and not against the men who administer it.

Now what I wish to know is what is going to be the constitution of the Board? Are these officers to remain under different names? Are these three officers to remain or is the Government going to adopt the recommendation of the Retrenchment Committee? Because it will be noticed that according to the Retrenchment Committee's Report, very large powers are going to be given to General Managers of different Railways and very many matters of detail will not be coming up to the Railway Board. Under these circumstances, I do strongly think that it is necessary that the recommendation of the Retrenchment Committee should be accepted on this point. Then there is another matter and it is this, the Railway Board has failed in Indianising the services under its control. (An

[Munshi Iswar Saran.]

Honourable Member: "What about Indianising themselves?" They can Indianise themselves after they have Indianised their services. I do charge the Railway Board most deliberately for not having taken all those steps which we might well have expected it to take. Of course, in reply the Honourable Mr. Innes, in one of his most sweet, reasonable, conciliatory, though not convincing ways, will say "We used to have four inspectors before, we have now appointed six. Isn't that progress?" and we shall cheer. "We used to have seven ticket collectors before. Their number has been increased to nine; and indeed we are in considerable sympathy with all that you say; but don't hustle us. Look at the progress made so far." And some of us are so constituted that we are transported to the seventh heaven of bliss and delight whenever any official announcement is made which may have even the faintest trace of what might be regarded as progress. Unfortunately I am not that way built. Whenever an announcement is made, I wish to look into it and examine it carefully. Now, look, Sir, at what happened in another place when the question of the appointment of railway inspectors was raised. One gentleman, I suppose some Member representing the Railway Department, said, "Oh, well, we are doing all that we can; we are in great sympathy, but we want men of proved merit and ability." This efficiency, according to the Hindu theory of transmigration, has been born again and has now got the name of 'proved ability and merit.' It is efficiency no longer. And the reply of this gentleman compelled a very distinguished and a most highly respected countryman of mine to get up in that same place and say, "Oh, we have had enough of your sympathy and we have heard enough of your efficiency." I repeat that remark, Sir. It was made by a very distinguished man indeed. I say, look at your workshops; what has been done? I shall be told—Mr. Innes will tell us—"Oh, we are considering a scheme of education, of taking these boys into the workshops;" but I shall beg Mr. Innes, if he will attach any importance to what I say, to get into our skins and to see how we feel really the way in which practically the door is banged in our face. It is no good saying that out of hundreds of appointments you have got a few Indians here and a few Indians there. I repeat, Sir, that I hold the Railway Board responsible for this, and I suppose there is no one in this House who will not sympathise with me including my Honourable friend, Colonel Gidney, who is not here. The gallant Colonel is in a most peculiarly happy position; when there is a question of appointments he is an Indian; when there is a question of opposing political progress and political reform, he is something which I cannot describe . . .

Lieut.-Colonel H. A. J. Gidney: That is not true, absolutely untrue.

Munshi Iswar Saran: Sir, the other day we talked about communal representation, but I say if there is one department where you do really want this Indian representation it is the Railway Department. Perhaps the remark will at once be made "Have you got knowledge of these railways and experience? Do not begin to run before you have learnt to walk." But what I pray of these gentlemen is to allow us to creep at least; they do not do even that. They will say "We are thinking, cogitating, discussing, appointing committees, considering reports; but we are in considerable sympathy with the object." But what is the result? I shall ask the gentleman who might answer for the Railway Board to tell us here and now in clear and distinct language what has been the progress that has been made since this Reform Council came into existence. Is not that a fair question? If my Honourable Colleagues are satisfied with the progress that has been made, then well and good; if they are not satisfied, I submit it is up to them to pass this vote as a vote of censure—I do not mind saying so—on the Railway Board for not having given effect to this policy. Why, Sir, the gentleman who represented the Railway Board in answer to a question of my friend Mr. Samarth said as follows: The question was:

"Will Government be pleased to state what action they have taken or propose to take on paragraph 32, pages 22-23 of the Majority Report of the Royal Commission on Public Services in India, as regards their recommendation that a determined and immediate effort should be made to provide better educational opportunities in India, so that it may become increasingly possible to recruit in that country the staff needed to meet all normal requirements of the Locomotive and Carriage and Wagon Departments of the Indian Railways?"

Listen to the reply:

"Government in despatch No. 15-Ry., dated the 16th August, 1919, advised the Secretary of State that it was difficult to obtain in India suitable recruits for the Superior Locomotive and Carriage and Wagon Departments and that no substantial change in the immediate future could be looked for . . .

But, of course, it ended with sympathy:

"At the same time, it was pointed out, that Government were by no means oblivious of the need for giving Indians the training recommended by the Commission and reference was made to proposals sanctioned in 1918 under which selected Indian graduates receive a preliminary training in the workshops of the East Indian Railway at Jamalpur or Lilloah and are then sent to England at the Company's expense to complete their training."

I need not read the other questions. Now, this is how the matter really stands. You are told that you do not get amongst Indians, specially of the respectable classes, men who will take off their coat and work. That might have been true sometime back; but go to the Benares Hindu University and go to the Engineering College; and you will find boys, bright lads of respectable families, who take their coat off and do work there. Sir, I have heard it from a very reliable gentleman whose name I shall not mention, that in Ajmer young man after young man went into the workshops but was not given admission. The answer given was "This workshop is meant for the sons of artisans and labourers." I have no reason at all to doubt the statement made by that gentleman to me; and I put it to the House, is that a satisfactory state of things?

I do not wish to detain the House. One word more. I was travelling the other day and I met an Anglo-Indian boy about 18 years of age; he was going to Delhi on business and that boy was getting Rs. 60 a month, and perhaps Rs. 2 a day as travelling allowance and that boy told me that he got this appointment two years ago. Can you imagine an Indian boy getting an appointment in the Railway Department at 16? So I submit, Sir, the Railway Board has failed to give effect to the policy of Indianisation and on that ground alone I shall ask and most earnestly ask the House to mark its sense of disapproval by accepting the amendment that my friend has proposed.

Dr. Nand Lal (West Punjab: Non-Muhammadan): Sir, I am not going to inflict a long speech on the House—I will offer a few remarks only. I share the views of my Honourable friend, Mr. Joshi, that the third class passengers are not properly treated and I agree with him when he says that these third class passengers are the most paying customers. I also agree with him that the Railway Board has not done anything effective as yet in order to ameliorate the condition of these dumb people. I am not prepared to assert that the Railway Board has been sleeping over it, but I raise my voice in regard to this point, that if they have done anything that thing has not proved practically good and effective. I ask them that they will be pleased to see that active steps are now taken so that the complaint of these poor and most-paying customers may be attended to.

[Dr. Nand Lal.]

Another point to which I wish to invite the attention of this House is this: that if my information is correct the Railway Department has got to pay about a crore of rupees in the way of compensating people who have lost their property in the railway. Now, may I ask the Railway authorities, can they not effectively manage that this railway pilfering and these railway theft cases may be reduced? May I ask the Honourable Mr. Innes what steps have been taken in this direction? For the last two years we have been harping on it, one Member after the other has been inviting the attention of Government to this. May I ask what step has been taken? Can he prove some sort of decrease in the number of theft cases?

There is a third point to which I invite the attention of this House and that is this: my impression is and it is based on oral complaints which have been brought to my notice, that in some cases the old stores are put up to auction and they are sold very cheap and unfortunately some of those old stores, after they are put up to auction and sold, will find their passage to the same railway stores again. If this information is correct, then we have got serious complaint against the Railway in respect of the money which is spent in the purchase of these so-called railway stores. I invite the attention of the Railway Board to this complaint. If there is real truth in this complaint then they will try to see that this is very seriously attended to.

Another point to which I seriously invite the attention of the Railway Board is this: that a considerable amount of money is spent in the purchase of stores and those stores are indented for from England. Sir, a portion of the stores ought to be purchased in this country if they are available. If those articles are not available, of course, the Railway Department will be constrained in indenting for them from England in the first place, or from other places if those articles cannot be obtained even there. These are the few points to which I would specially invite the attention of the Railway authorities, and if they will not take these suggestions seriously, I am afraid the mass of criticism which is subsisting will remain, and I may tell them that their administration will never be considered as a good administration at all. We have got a series of complaints against the Railway Administration so far as these points are concerned, and if the Railway Department will try to see that all these grievances are redressed, it will be a great boon to everybody, otherwise the money which we are voting will not give effect to our real desire. With these few remarks, I support the motion which has been moved.

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas (Bombay City: Non-Muhammadian Urban): Sir, I want to add my voice to what has been already said by my Honourable friends, Mr. Joshi, Munshi Ishwar Saran and Dr. Nand Lal. The other day an Honourable Member said here when we were discussing the question of reserving intermediate and third class compartments for Europeans and Anglo-Indians that it would not be proper for us to decide that question as there was only a minority of European and Anglo-Indian representatives in this House. I think it will be more proper to say that we would not be justified in deciding anything against the third class passengers, because in this House we have hardly a representative of the third class passengers as against a few representatives of Europeans and Anglo-Indians, and I believe that, although the third class passengers have no direct representation in this House, we shall not be doing our duty if we did not do our best to voice their grievances.

Now, Sir, I have a recollection of having been instrumental in approaching the Railway Board for removing a grievance of the Bombay suburban passengers. It has been pointed out here, and rightly too, that while the Railway Board considers it its business to interfere with every detail of the administration, on large questions of policy, which is its real function, it is generally silent and acquiesces in anything that the minor administrations decide to do. Here is one glaring instance of that. In Bombay suburban fares were unduly raised. There was an outburst of protests in all parts of Bombay. It was in opposition to the policy laid down by the Local Government itself of encouraging suburban traffic in order to remove the congestion from the city to the suburbs. I may also venture to say that the Local Government itself desired that living in the suburbs should be encouraged by any means that it was possible to adopt even by reducing the fares or by electrifying the Railways or by extending the tramway service. In spite of all that, the Railway Companies unduly increased the suburban fares. Protests were made in all parts of Bombay. I had myself the honour of presiding over a meeting called by the Railway Passengers' Association to protest against the step taken by the Railway in Bombay in increasing their fares unduly. I communicated with the Honourable Member, I communicated on behalf of the public meeting with the Railway Board. My Honourable friend, Mr. Innes, was, I very well knew, out of Delhi at that time and was not able to deal with the question, and I have no complaint against him. But I do want to point out here that the Railway Board failed to redress the grievance, a legitimate grievance, of the third class passengers, the poor suburban passengers of Bombay. Instances of this character can be multiplied. In the Acworth Committee's Report, and especially in the evidence placed before the Acworth Committee, we find that the Railway Board was instrumental in increasing the burden of correspondence on trivial matters with the Secretary of State. For instance, it was pointed out here that the increase in the pay of a foreman was a subject of correspondence which cost a good deal to the Government of India. No wonder that the expenses of the Government of India and the Railway Department should go up, but instances of this character can be multiplied. The whole point that I want to make is this. I do not want to weary the House with all the instances about which, I am sure, Honourable Members know full well, but I do want to say this that the Railway Board has to all intents and purposes failed to carry out the purposes for which it was created. If it has done anything, it has added to the burden of expenditure of the Government of India. It has not improved in any way the railway administration of this country; it has given no satisfaction to any class of passengers in this country, and therefore it is but fit that we should pass this vote.

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: Sir, I always look askance at the seemingly innocent and trivial reductions by a rupee, for I never know from what side and on what points I am going to be attacked. In the course of the last hour, I have noted down no less than 14 different points, and I am supposed to be able to stand up here and reply to each and every one of them. Now, let me first take the point raised last by my friend Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas. We have heard a lot this morning about the necessity of efficient, commercial, business management of our Indian

[Mr. C. A. Innes.]

Railways. That was the gravamen of the charge which was made by more than one speaker this morning. But when it hits Bombay, then we hear another story. Now let me tell the House the true story of the season tickets of the suburban traffic in Bombay. The rates for Bombay, Baroda and Central India season tickets in suburban traffic in Bombay had not been raised for forty years. Now how enormously prices have risen during these forty years is well known to Members of this House, and when after careful examination the Railway Company raised those rates—and mind you, I satisfied myself that the rates to which they had raised were very moderate,—there was a scream from Bombay 'how dare the Railway companies raise their rates?' We are asked, the Indian taxpayers are asked, to subsidise the Bombay suburban traffic, and it is quoted against us that the Bombay Government protested against this. It is very easy for a local Government to take this generous line, but it is the Central Government, it is we who have to pay. Is there anybody here who can dispute the reasonableness of raising rates which have been in force for forty years? Now, Sir, I have dealt with one point.

Mr. Joshi raised the question of Conciliation and Arbitration Boards and of the prevention of strikes on Railways. These two last questions, Conciliation and Arbitration Boards and the prevention of strikes in public utility companies have been taken up by the Government of India, and we are considering the question of submitting legislation not to this House at this stage, but of circulating it to the country for criticism. That is all I can say on that point at present. The Railway Board did also address the various Railway Administrations with regard to Whitley Councils, but I do not know exactly what progress has been made. At any rate, I do know that the East Indian Railway has made an advance in that direction by appointing welfare committees on which the men are represented as well as the staff. That step was taken after the East Indian Railway strike in order that there might be co-operation between the men and staff.

Then, of course, we have heard the grievances of the third class passengers. Well, the House knows that there was a debate on this question last September, and various points and suggestions were made not only by Mr. Joshi but by other Members of the House as well. We have addressed all Agents of the Railways putting forward to them the more important suggestions made in the course of that debate, and we have asked them to let us have a reply as to what action can be, has been, or should be taken on those suggestions. When we get those replies, we shall have to consider in what form we can make them public. I am rather puzzled as how best to make it public, but we shall make the information available to the House in some way or other, and I propose to consult the Central Advisory Board on that subject. As regards the local Advisory Councils

5 P.M.

Mr. Joshi raised the point that the third class passenger, if I got him right, was not represented on the local Advisory Councils. Well, Sir, again I am in a difficulty. I have not got here the actual circular letter we wrote to Railway Administrations on that subject. But we did make very careful provision in those suggestions for the representation on the local Advisory Council of, what I may call, representatives of passengers. We suggested representatives of the travelling public. The Central Advisory Council, as the House knows, exists for a rather different purpose. Whether we are right or we are wrong, we deliberately departed from the recommendations of the Acworth Committee in this respect. We decided that as we had got the Legislature sitting here the form of Central Advisory Council to have was not a Council in which commercial and other representatives from different parts of the country should be represented, but a Council which should be composed of Members of the Legislature. It exists mainly, at least in my view, for advising us on large question of railway policy.

As regards the Shoranur-Manantody Railway I must again remind my friend the Honourable Mr. Muppil Nayar that we have just been told by the Incheape Committee that we must treat our railways as strictly business concerns and we must try to show a net $5\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. profit on our capital expenditure. Now, Sir, if we apply that criterion to the Shoranur-Manantody Railway, I am afraid it will be the Greek Calends before that railway is constructed. There may be very strong reasons, and I am sure there are very strong political reasons why that railway should be constructed, but if that is the case, obviously it is the local Government which should construct the railway. We have been negotiating with the Government of Madras on that point. I have just had a letter on the subject, but I am sorry I have not had time to study it and I do not know what the latest development is.

Then we come to my friend Mr. Iswar Saran. I may assure him at the outset that I have not the slightest intention of saying anything sympathetic this afternoon. The first point he took up was about the reorganization and re-constitution of the Railway Board. Now, I think the Government of India has always recognized that there was something wrong with the constitution of the Railway Board. The Acworth Committee has, of course, brought that out, the real reason being that, through no fault of its own,—and that is a point I wish to make very clear—the Railway Board as we have had it so far has been absolutely crushed by the load of routine and case work which came up to it. Well, we have taken the first step in the direction of re-constituting it by appointing my friend, Mr. Hindley here as Chief Commissioner. We have given him larger powers than the President of the old Railway Board had, and Mr. Hindley was instructed that his first duty on assuming his new office was to submit his proposals for the reconstitution of the Railway Board. I have just received those proposals and all that I am in a position to say at the moment is that they are under the consideration of the Government of India and we hope to formulate our conclusions on them at the earliest possible date. The whole design of the proposals is to meet the objections which have been taken not only by the Acworth Committee but also by the Retrenchment Committee to the Board as at present constituted. That is, the whole design of Mr. Hindley's proposals is to relieve the Chief Commissioner and the men at the top of this load of routine work, to keep them free of the machine, to give them time, to use Sir William Acworth's phrase, to watch, to think and to plan, and above all to give the Chief Commissioner time to travel more about India to keep more in touch with Railway Administrations and more in touch with the local Governments. (A Voice: "Are you going to have a Member for Communications?") I am not in a position to say anything on that point.

Dr. Nand Lal in his interesting speech referred to the question of compensation and he asked what steps the Government of India proposes to take to reduce these very heavy claims for compensation. There is only one real step that we can take and that is to improve our system of watch and ward on the different railways. That, as the House will see, requires expenditure and more staff, and I am afraid the action taken by the House this morning may make it more difficult for us to do that. But still it is a matter which is being taken up by every Railway Administration.

[Mr. C. A. Innes.]

Then again, Dr. Nand Lal made a great complaint of the fact that the railways do not buy enough stores in India. He suggested that, too much as a matter of course, the Railway Administrations went to England for the stores and materials they require. Well Sir, not only am I Member in charge of the Railway Department, but also I am Member in charge of the Industries Department (A Voice: "and Commerce.") Thank you. And I have the very greatest sympathy with the idea and I do feel that we ought to do all we can to encourage the purchase of stores in India not only by the Railway Department but by other Departments of the Government of India. But here again I must point out to the House that the House cannot have it both ways. If the Railway Department is in future to show 5½ per cent. returns on its capital, then on behalf of the Railway Department we shall have to claim that we buy our stores, materials and everything else in accordance with the hardest business principles. As I say, the House cannot have it both ways. Are we to be treated purely as a commercial concern and are we to show this dividend? (Cries of "Yes.") If so, we must buy in the cheapest market. However, I am not stating that as a question of policy; I am merely pointing out that the Incheape Committee's report in that matter raises certain points which will require very serious consideration.

The only other question is that of Indianization, and here as I am on such difficult ground I think I had better leave my Honourable friend Mr. Hindley to carry on.

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley: I rather hesitate, Sir, to delay the House at this late hour with the recital of more figures, particularly when I look forward to this time next year when I shall be told with great certainty by Dr. Nand Lal that I have done nothing during the year. No matter what we do, Sir, the Railway Board is told year after year "What have you done? You have done nothing". Incidentally, in regard to third class passengers . . . (Dr. Nand Lal: "I did not say that. I pointed out what you might have done.") I understood Dr. Nand Lal to say that we had done nothing. I think those are the words he used. As regards third class passengers, there is a little bit of our Memorandum tucked away here which perhaps Honourable Members have not read which gives a very full description of what the railways are doing in regard to third class passengers.

Regarding Indianization, during 1922-23, in comparison with the figures of the previous year the number of statutory Indian officers on railways rose from 301 to 325. The total number of European officers remained stationary at 1,316. (A Voice: "How many statutory and how many pure Indian?") In the previous year pure Indians 236 and Anglo-Indians 65; at the end of the year pure Indians 251, Anglo-Indians 74. The number of European officers remained stationary owing to the fact that though 18 Europeans were appointed during the year, the same number left for one cause or another. Then, on the three State Railways, I can give details, the European recruits numbered 16, and Statutory Indians 24, of whom Indians were 15 and Anglo-Indians 9. In the Engineering Department on these lines the Europeans and Statutory Indians were 4 and 5, respectively, while in the Traffic Department alone the Statutory Indian recruits numbered 16, 8 Indians, 8 Anglo-Indians. There were no Europeans recruited in the Traffic Department in 1922. On the Company worked Railways, altogether 95 appointments had to be filled up during the year, of which 40 were filled by Statutory Indians and 55 by Europeans. (An Honourable Member: Can you tell us how many were gazetted officers, what rank of gazetted officers?) (Dr. H. S. Gour: "How many Indians?") I have not got the details. Taking the subordinates, the next grade, the total number of Indians and Anglo-Indians rose from 2,12,074 to 2,14,631, while the number of Europeans fell from 3,961 to 3,923. (An Honourable Member: "What is the maximum pay for these subordinate appointments?") I have not got the figure. The total number of employees of all classes was 754,500. I just incidentally would like to point out that on all railways the number of superior officers as a whole, is about 1,600 and the number of total staff 750,000. When you talk about making retrenchments of the officers, of the senior officers, where are you going to get crores out of these 1,600 supervising officers? This is not the point at the moment, but I thought it would be interesting to bring that out. With regard to Indianization in general, it is not true that we have not done anything. I would ask the House not to pay too much attention to the criterion figure. We know what you can do with statistics and what different kinds of statistics there are, but as a matter of fact I want to point out that we have during the last year made a very definite move forward in the direction of training the staff of all kinds, of all classes, for the work which they have to do. The House will remember that on the motion, I think, of my Honourable friend, Mr. Jannadas Dwarkadas, a Resolution was passed relating to the training of railway staff. In accordance with that Resolution Mr. Cole, a late Secretary of the Railway Board, was placed on special duty and he spent a great deal of time in collecting and collating information regarding the availability of places for training. We now have his report, which has recently been put in the hands of the members of the Central Advisory Council. It has not yet been published. I understand it has been distributed to the members of the Central Advisory Council. In this Report, when the Honourable Members have time to peruse it—it has been rather delayed in the Press, I am sorry to say—will be found a complete scheme which we hope to work if funds are available; we hope to work for the training of officers and other classes of staff with a view to improving the prospects of the men in the railways and enabling Indians and others in this country, Indians especially, to take advantage of railway training collaterally with the theoretical training of schools and colleges. I do not want to enlarge upon this at the moment because it is a long and difficult subject, but I do want to assure the House that the Railway Board during the past year have taken one of the greatest steps forward in this direction of perfecting the training of Indians for work on the railways.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That the provision for Miscellaneous Railway Expenditure under the head 'Railways' be reduced by Re. 1."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. Jannadas Dwarkadas: With your permission, Sir, I wish to correct a statement of fact that was made by my Honourable friend, the Finance Member, I am sure inadvertently. He said that the item that was discussed last year was one crore and 67 lakhs, which was the exchange item. I see now I have got a copy of last year's Debates—that the actual motion was for the reduction not of a crore

[Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas.] and 67 lakhs but for three lakhs of rupees. (Mr. President: "No.") These 3 crores included a crore and 67 lakhs, and it was also admitted by my Honourable friend, Sir Malcolm Hailey, last year, that there was an item of a crore and 17 lakhs which I said ought to be debited to the capital account but which he said was of the nature of a sinking fund, but he never raised this point that it was a non-votable item. The Honourable Finance Member says it could come under the head 'Exchange' but it also could come under the heading 'Sinking Fund' which is now declared to be non-votable. If you will refer to page 3124 of last year's Debates and also to the Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey's speech on page 3129, you will find that the statement that I am now making here is correct.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey (Home Member): If I may correct the Honourable Member, that motion that Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas refers to, was not a motion for a reduction of 3 crores. The motion was of the Demand under the head 'Railways,' that it be reduced by 25 lakhs. That obviously could not refer to a reduction of the amount which he mentioned. It is perfectly true that when Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas came to speak on the motion of Sir Vithaldas Thackersey, he mentioned that he also had a motion for reduction of 3 crores, and, doubtless, by the exercise of those arts which are not unknown to the House, he did include in Sir Vithaldas Thackersey's motion his own suggestion for a reduction of 3 crores.

Mr. President (to Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas): The Honourable Member should not take it upon himself to correct a statement made by the Honourable Finance Member when he himself turns out to be entirely incorrect. The Honourable Member said that a motion was moved which was not moved. The motion was to reduce the whole Railway Demand by Rs. 25 lakhs. The Honourable Member referred to his own motion, but it was not moved.

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas: But I referred to the motion and was ultimately prevented from moving it because of the explanation offered by the Honourable Finance Member.

Mr. President: Precisely. The Honourable Member referred to it; but no attempt was made to move the reduction of a non-votable item, for that would have been out of order.

Do Honourable Members desire to continue the discussion? (Voices: "No, no, no.") Or are they prepared to dispose of it now? I may say it is not much use continuing the discussion if the Executive Council disappears from the House, as they doubtless will, and we might go on to 162 and postpone the rest till to-morrow.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: May I move that the main question be now put.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That the main question be now put—(Demand as reduced by the vote of the Assembly this morning)."

The motion was negatived.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: I made the motion just now merely for the purpose of enabling the Honourable the President to take the sense of the House and not with any idea of closing the debate. I promised that we would, if possible, issue a further list this evening giving the order in which the Demands for Grants are to be taken. I have this list; it is not perhaps necessary that I should read it out to the House. I merely, with your permission, place this list on the table, Sir, with a view to its being distributed as governing the order in which the Demands will be taken when the previous list is exhausted.

The Assembly then adjourned till Eleven of the Clock on Wednesday, the 14th March, 1923.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

Wednesday, 14th March, 1923.

The Assembly met in the Assembly Chamber at Eleven of the Clock.
Mr. President was in the Chair.

STATEMENT OF BUSINESS.

Mr. W. M. Hussanally (Sind: Muhammadan Rural): May I, Sir, with your permission, inquire of the Honourable the Leader of the House if we are going to get any further day for non-official Resolutions this Session?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey (Home Member): I am afraid I shall have to consider that in the light of the progress we make with the voting on Demands for Grants and the Finance Bill. I shall hope to be able to give a definite answer to the Honourable Member about the middle of next week.

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary (Calcutta: Non-Muhammadan Urban): May I ask a similar question with regard to the Inchcape Committee's Report, the discussion of which has now become imperatively necessary, apart from the Budget.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: Does the Honourable Member wish that we should delay the further progress in voting on Demands for Grants in order that we may discuss the Inchcape Committee's Report? I see at present no other way of doing it than that.

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary: The Honourable the Leader of the House must know that I did not mean that.

INDIANISATION OF EIGHT UNITS OF THE INDIAN ARMY.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar (Madras: Nominated Non-Official): May I ask the Honourable the Army Secretary a question of which I have given him private notice? Will he be pleased to lay before the House and to explain to the House, the scheme regarding the Indianisation of the 8 Units which was promised sometime ago?

Mr. E. Burdon (Army Secretary): Sir, I have been asked to furnish the House with a statement giving full details, and explaining the implications, of the scheme for the Indianization of 8 units of the Indian Army, which was recently announced to this Assembly by His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief. I have accordingly had a statement prepared, which, with your permission, I propose to lay on the table. It shows exactly how the scheme will be put into operation and the conditions which govern the matter. For the convenience of Honourable Members, and in order to enable the whole question to be readily understood, I have embodied in the statement a brief account of the system of organization of an infantry battalion and a cavalry regiment of the Indian Army, in so far as their establishment of King's commissioned officers is concerned; and also a brief account of the system which governs the promotion of King's commissioned officers of the Indian Army up to and including the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel.

[Mr. E. Burdon.]

STATEMENT EXPLANATORY OF THE SCHEME FOR THE INDIANIZATION OF 8 UNITS OF THE INDIAN ARMY.

1. The units selected for Indianization are—

Cavalry.

7th Light Cavalry, late 28th Light Cavalry, Madras.
16th Light Cavalry, late 27th Light Cavalry, Madras.

Infantry.

2-1st Madras Pioneers, late 64th Pioneers.
4-19th Hyderabad Regiment, late 98th Infantry, Hyderabad.
5th Royal Battalion, 5th Mahratta Light Infantry, late 117th Royal Mahrattas.
1-7th Rajput Regiment (Q. V. O. L. I.), late 2nd Q. V. O. Rajputs.
1-14th Punjab Regiment, late 19th Punjabis.
2-1st Punjab Regiment, late 66th Punjabis.

2. An Indian Infantry battalion has the following establishment of King's commissioned officers :—

Appointment.	Rank.	Number.
Commandant	Lieutenant-Colonel or Colonel	1
Second in Command	Lieutenant-Colonel or Major	1
Company Commander	Captain or Major	4
„ Officers	Lieutenant or Captain	4
Adjutant	Ditto	1
Quartermaster	Ditto	1
		12

The posts of Adjutant and Quartermaster are filled by selection from officers of the unit. Generally speaking, the most efficient of the senior subalterns fill these posts. The establishment of King's commissioned officers of a cavalry regiment is on lines closely similar to the above. The designation of certain of the appointments is different; for example, a Squadron Commander and a Squadron Officer in a cavalry regiment correspond to the Company Commander and the Company Officer of an infantry battalion.

3. King's commissioned officers in the Indian Army receive promotion up to and including the rank of the Lieutenant-Colonel according to a time-scale, subject, in the case of each step, to certain prescribed examinations being passed. A King's commissioned officer should normally enter the Indian Army in the rank of Lieutenant at the age of 20 years. He receives promotion to Captain after 9 years' service, to Major after 18 years' service, and to Lieutenant-Colonel after 26 years' service. Details of the retention and promotion examinations which have to be passed are given in Appendix A to this statement. In addition to the prescribed tests and qualifications exacted from each individual officer, there are certain other subjects, included in the training of the soldier, in which a proportion of officers of every regiment must be specially trained; for example, physical training, including athletics, gymnastics and mental development; machine gun fighting; signalling, including the use of electrical appliances, etc. Further, in order to qualify for the post of Adjutant, a special certificate in musketry has to be obtained; and while, as has been shown, promotion to Lieutenant-Colonel is obtained by length of service and after passing certain qualifying examinations, the command of a unit is only given to those Lieutenant-Colonels who are selected ad hoc by the Selection Board. The Commandant of an infantry battalion is required to vacate his command on attaining the age of 52 years; and the Commandant of a cavalry regiment is similarly required to vacate his command on attaining the age of 50 years.

4. A list of Indian officers who already hold King's commissions in the Indian Army is given in Appendix B to this statement. These officers have been classified as follows :—

Table A.—Indore students who received their first commissions when over 26 years of age.

Table B.—Direct commissioned officers who received their first commissions when over 26 years of age.

Table C.—Previously commissioned officers who received their first commissions when over 26 years of age.

Table D.—Indore students who received their first commissions at the age of 26 years and under.

Table E.—Sandhurst cadets and others who received their first commissions at approximately the same age at which a British officer enters the army.

The tables show also the dates on which each officer would qualify for promotion to Captain, Company Commander, and Major, according to the time-scale and the normal course of promotion; and, in each case, the age of the officer on these dates. It will be seen that many of these officers, having received their first commission at an age much greater than the normal age, cannot hope for a normal career in the Indian Army. To indicate an extreme case, there is one officer who would be over 57 years of age before he could qualify for the command of a Company in the rank of Major, according to the prescribed tests applicable to all British officers. As previously stated, an officer is required to vacate the command of an infantry battalion on attaining the age of 52 years. It follows therefore that, for the purpose of officering, with Indian officers holding the King's commissions, the 8 Indianizing units, it will be desirable to rely mainly on those Indian officers who have obtained their first commission at approximately the same age as a British officer and can therefore hope to reach the highest posts within the age limits laid down. Of this class there are already 21 in the army.

5. It has accordingly been decided that 8 of the Indian officers of suitable age will be transferred at once as Company or Squadron Officers, one to each of the 8 units destined for Indianization, replacing in each unit a British Company or Squadron Officer who will be transferred elsewhere. In 1924, another batch of 8 Indian officers will be similarly transferred, replacing an equal number of British officers. In 1925, the same process will be repeated. But in that year the officers already available will be completely absorbed, and the numbers will in fact have to be made up by young Indian officers who have in the meantime qualified at Sandhurst. According to the process stated, at the beginning of 1927, all Squadron or Company officers of the Indianizing units will be Indians; the senior of these will be about 29 years of age and will have about 6 years' service. At this stage the situation will arise that any further postings in accordance with the process laid down would entail the appointment of the senior amongst these Indian officers to the command of Squadrons or Companies. These will be, in comparison with the officers of non-Indianizing units, young and relatively inexperienced. The nature of the further step will necessarily depend upon the development which have taken place in the interval.

6. Indian officers at present serving in the Indian Army who, for the reasons stated above, are not posted to Indianizing units, would ordinarily be passed to the non-effective list in the usual manner. A proposal is under consideration that their services should be utilized by appointing them thereafter to the Territorial Force, a course which might be of distinct benefit to the State.

7. The earliest date by which the 3 units could be completely officered by Indian officers, holding the same qualifications as are laid down in respect of British officers and having had the same advantages of training and experience as British officers, would be approximately 22 to 23 years from the present time. It might be possible to shorten this period to some extent if Indian officers of outstanding capacity come to the front during the process of development. Exceptional promotion could conceivably be given to such officers, since unusually rapid promotion has actually to be given in war time to specially good officers and men who are required to replace casualties. But the expedient could not be relied upon as a normal procedure: it would never be relied upon as a normal procedure in the case of British officers. The question would be not merely one of studying the pace of Indianization; the first obligation of the Government would be to study the safety and efficiency of the units under Indianization; and from this point of view, it would not be right, and it would not be prudent, to impose on an Indianizing unit a system which would never normally be imposed upon a British unit or a non-Indianizing unit of the Indian Army. Finally, there is the consideration that it might not be regarded as fair to place upon the first generation of Indian officers of the Indianizing army a burden of responsibility which normally a British officer of corresponding age and experience would never be asked to shoulder. Essentially, special promotion, such as has here been indicated, could only be given on the merits of individual cases. It is patently impracticable to attempt to regulate the matter by any a priori formula.

[Mr. E. Burdon.]

A question has been asked whether the experiment is to be fully tried before the next step is taken, that is to say, in dealing with the other units of the Indian Army. The point is one on which Government are not in a position to make a statement. It would obviously be premature to do so. The first measure of Indianization has only now been embarked upon, and the developments to which it may lead cannot be foreseen or foretold.

APPENDIX A.

EXAMINATIONS WHICH KING'S COMMISSIONED OFFICERS OF THE INDIAN ARMY ARE REQUIRED TO PASS FOR RETENTION IN THE INDIAN ARMY AND FOR PROMOTION.

I.—Examination for retention in the Indian Army. (To be passed within 3 years of appointment).

1. Preliminary test in Urdu (equivalent to the old Higher Standard Hindustani).
2. (a) Drilling a regiment of cavalry or battalion of infantry.
(b) Regimental duties, including matters relating to discipline, interior economy, pay and pensions, double company accounts and books, arms, ammunition, and equipment, supply of clothing and necessities, the classes of which the corps is composed and recruited, and, for cavalry officers, the supply of horses and saddlery.
(c) Indian military law and musketry if not in possession of an officer's musketry certificate.
(d) (For cavalry officers.) Veterinary treatment and shoeing, footing of saddlery.

II.—Examination for promotion from Lieutenant to Captain.—

- (a) Practical examination in the field without troops to test a candidate's knowledge of Cavalry, Artillery and Infantry.

Field Service Regulations, Map reading and Field Engineering, Military Hygiene.

- (b) Written examination 4 papers.

- (i) Military Organisation and administration;
Administration of Military discipline and Law.
- (ii) Imperial Military Geography.
- (iii) Military History.
- (iv) Tactics, Map reading and Field Engineering.

COURSES.

Qualify at an Army School of Education.

(In addition to the above certain technical examinations have to be passed by Artillery, Medical and other technical services.)

III.—Examination for promotion from Captain to Major.—

- (c) Practical examination. Tactical exercise in the field without troops embodying the employment of a mixed force of all arms, to be of such a nature to test the candidate's capabilities of appreciating a situation.
- (d) Written examination 5 papers.

- (i) Military organisation, Military administration, administration of discipline and military law.
- (ii) Government of the British Empire and Imperial Military Geography.
- (iii) Military History.
- (iv) Educational Training.
- (v) A short essay on a military subject.

COURSES.

Small Arms School (Rifle, Automatic, Grenade, Light Mortar).

(In addition to the above certain other examinations have to be passed by officers of technical services.)

IV.—Test for promotion from Major to Lieutenant-Colonel.—

Pass a Course of Instruction at the Senior Officers' School, comprising:—

(Practical and Theoretical.)

- (i) The organisation of all units within a division.
- (ii) The tactical employment of the various arms.
- (iii) The principles of training and system to be adopted.
- (iv) Co-operation between the staff and troops.

APPENDIX B.

List of Indian Officers who already hold King's Commissions in the Indian Army.

TABLE "A".

Indore students who received their first Commissions when over 26 years of age.

No.	Rank.	Name.	Where serving.	DATES.				AGES.
				1st Commission.	Captain.	Company Commander.	Major.	On 1st Commission.	At present.	On Captaincy.	On becoming Company Commander.	On Majority.
1	Lieutenant	Bakshi Chaud	56th Rifles	17th July 1920.	17th July 1929.	1st Jany. 1935.	17th July 1938.	36½	38	45½	50½	54½
2	"	Anter Singh	22-25th Cavalry	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	33½	35½	42½	48	51½
3	"	Sher Mohammad Khan.	18-19th Lancers	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	32½	34½	41½	47½	50½
4	"	Mohammad Ayab Khan.	22-25th Cavalry	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	30½	32½	39½	45½	48½
5	"	Jai Singh	45th Sikhs	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	27½	29½	36½	42½	45½
6	"	Partab Singh	5-8th Cavalry	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	26½	28½	35½	41½	44½
7	"	Sajjan Singh	11th Rajputes	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	26½	28½	35½	41	44½
8	"	Sabyabrata-Singh Roy.	2nd Rajputes	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	26½	28½	35½	40½	44½

TABLE "B".
Direct commissioned Officers who received their first Commissions when over 26 years of age.

No.	Rank.	Name.	Where serving.	Dates.				Ages.
				1st Commission.	Captain.	Company Commander.	Major.	On 1st Commission.	At present.	On Captaincy.	On becoming Company Commander.	On Majority.
1	Lieutenant	Lachman Singh	15th Sikhs	7th Oct. 1919.	7th Oct. 1928.	7th April 1934.	7th Oct. 1937.	41½	44½	50½	56½	59½
2	"	Bhimsing Thapa	3rd Gurkha Rifles.	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	39½	42½	48½	54½	57½
3	"	Hissam-ud-din	21-23rd Cavalry	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	37½	40½	46½	52½	55½
4	"	Janda Singh	72nd Punjabis	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	37½	39½	46½	51½	55½
5	"	Thakur Singh	47th Sikhs	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	36½	39½	45½	51½	54½
6	"	Sundar Singh	41st Dogras	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	36½	39½	45½	51½	54½
7	"	Amar Singh	33rd Punjabis	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	35½	38½	44½	50½	53½
8	2nd-Lieut.	Inder Singh	31st Lancers	14th Jan. 1922	14th Jan. 1931.	14th July 1933.	14th Jan. 1940.	36½	36½	45½	50½	54½
9	Lieutenant	Mit Singh	47th Sikhs	7th Oct. 1919.	7th Oct. 1928.	7th April 1934.	7th Oct. 1937.	31½	33½	40½	45½	49½
10	"	Khan Mohammad Khan.	35-36th Cavalry	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	27½	30½	36½	42½	45½
11	2nd-Lieut.	Najibullah Khan.	46th Punjabis	14th Jan. 1922.	14th Jan. 1931.	14th July 1936.	14th Jan. 1940.	Details not available.
12	"	Nur Ahmad Khan	9-10th Horse	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto
13	"	Kasimnath Dalir	116th Mahrattas	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto
14	"	Amrut Rao Mohite	103rd Mahrattas	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto

TABLE "C".
Previously Commissioned Officers who received their first Commissions when over 26 years of age.

No.	Rank.	Name.	Where serving.	Dates.				AGES.
				1st Commission.	Captain.	Company Commander.	Major.	On 1st Commission.	At present.	On Captaincy.	On becoming Company Commander.	On Majority.
1	Captain	Kanwar Amar Singh.	2-4th Cavalry	25th Augt. 1917.	25th Augt. 1921.	25th Feb. 1932.	25th Augt. 1935.	39½	43½	43½	35½	57½
2	"	Zorawar Singh	1-3rd Horse	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	34½	39½	38½	48½	52½
3	"	Abdal Samad Shah.	31st Lancers	15th Dec. 1919.	...	15th June 1934.	15th Dec. 1937.	36½	39½	...	50½	54½
4	"	Age Cassim Shah.	104th Rifles	25th Augt. 1917.	25th Augt. 1921.	25th Feb. 1932.	25th Augt. 1935.	33½	38½	37½	48½	51½
5	"	Ba'la Sahib Daphle.	16th Rajputs	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	33½	38½	37½	48½	51½
6	"	Mhd. Akhbar Khan.	1st Brahmans	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	32½	37½	36½	47	50½
7	"	Pirchi Singh	5-8th Cavalry	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	32½	37½	36½	46½	50½
8	"	Rana Jodha Jang	23rd Pioneers	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	27½	32½	31½	42	45½

TABLE "D".
Indore students who received their first Commissions at the age of 23 years and under.

No.	Rank.	Name.	Where serving.	Dates.				Ages.
				1st Commission.	Captain.	Company Commander.	Major.	On 1st Commission.	At present.	On Captaincy.	On becoming Commander.	On Majority.
1	Lieutenant	Mohammad Mauir Khan	18-19th Lancers.	17th July 1920.	17th July 1929.	1st January 1935.	17th July 1938.	26	27½	35	40½	44
2	ditto	Maung Ba Hpu	1-70th Buffans	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	26½	27½	35½	40½	44½
3	ditto	C. B. Ponappa	11th Malattas	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	26½	27½	35½	40½	44½
4	ditto	Chit'ar Singh	2nd Rajputs	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	25½	27½	34½	40½	43½
5	ditto	Daulat Sen	36th Sikhs	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	25½	27½	34½	40½	43½
6	ditto	C. Poonoose	75th Carnatics	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	25½	27½	34½	40½	43½
7	ditto	Maung Aye	1-70th Buffans	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	25½	27½	34½	40½	43½
8	ditto	J. R. Cama	69th Panjabis	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	24½	27½	33½	39½	42½
9	ditto	Bigvijay Singhji	1-15th Rifles	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	24½	27½	33½	39½	42½
10	ditto	Ajab Singh	22-25th Cavalry.	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	24½	27½	33½	39½	42½
11	ditto	Pritam Singh Bakhshi	38-39th Horse	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	23½	27½	32½	38½	41½
12	ditto	Hamidullah Khan	124th B. Lancers	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	23½	27½	32½	38½	41½
13	ditto	Ajir Amil Kudra	26th Panjabis	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	23½	27½	32½	38½	41½
14	ditto	Mahmud Havelat Khan	67th Panjabis	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	23½	27½	32½	38½	41½
15	ditto	Mohammad Akbar Khan	1-12th Cavalry	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	23½	27½	32½	38½	41½
16	ditto	Mohammad Abdullah Khan	29th Panjabis	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	23½	27½	32½	38½	41½
17	ditto	Mir Haider	92nd Panjabis	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	23	24½	32	37½	41
18	ditto	Gul Sher Khan	18-19th Lancers	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	22½	24½	31½	37½	40½
19	ditto	Mohammed Ali Khan	9-10th Horse	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	22½	24½	31½	37½	40½
20	ditto	Veshashar Nath Singh	20-29th Cavalry.	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	22½	24½	31½	37½	40½
21	ditto	Maung Kin Maung	1-70th Buffans	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	22½	24½	31½	37½	40½
22	ditto	Abdul Rahim Khan	Guides	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	21½	23½	30½	36½	39½
23	ditto	Arifal	123rd Rifles	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	20½	22½	29½	35½	38½
24	ditto	K. M. Carappa	2-125th Rifles	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	20½	22½	29½	34½	38½

TABLE "E".

Sandhurst cadets and others who received their first commissions at approximately the same age at which a British Officer enters the Army.

No.	Rank.	Name.	Where serving.	DATES.					AGES.
				1st Commission.	Captain.	Company Commander.	Major.	On 1st Commission.	At present.	On Captaincy.	On becoming Commander.	On Majority.
1	2nd-Lieutenant	Bedi Daya Singh.	16th Lancers	14th July 1921.	14th July 1930.	14th January 1936.	14th July 1939.	22½	23½	31½	37	40½
2	Ditto	K. S. Rajendra Singh.	3rd K. R. R. C.	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	22½	23½	31½	35½	40½
3	Lieutenant	Sikandar Ali Mirza.	33-34th Horse	16th July 1920.	16th July 1929.	16th January 1936.	16th July 1938.	20½	22½	29½	35½	38½
4	2nd-Lieutenant	Faiz Mohd. Khan.	Green Howards.	14th July 1921.	14th July 1930.	14th January 1936.	14th July 1939.	20½	21½	29½	35½	38½
5	Ditto	Mohd. Nawaz Khan.	7th Hussars	23rd December 1921.	23rd December 1930.	23rd June 1936.	23rd December 1939.	20½	20½	29½	34½	38½
6	Ditto	E. Yusuf Khan.	2nd Warwick's	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	Ditto	20	20½	29	34½	38
7	Ditto (N.B.—In addition there are 4 other officers newly joined from Sandhurst.)	Sarwar Ali Khan.	1st Worcesters	14th July 1921.	14th July 1930.	14th January 1936.	14th July 1939.	19½	20½	28½	34½	37½
48	Lieutenant	Maung Kin Maung.	1-70th Burmans.	7th October 1919.	7th October 1928.	7th April 1934.	7th October 1937.	20½	23½	29½	35½	38½
49	Ditto	K. S. Himat Singh.	4th Rajputs	23rd March 1918.	23rd March 1927.	23rd September 1932.	23rd March 1936.	20½	24½	29½	35	38½
40	Ditto	K. S. Madeo Singh.	3-39th Garhwalis.	24th October 1918.	24th October 1927.	24th April 1933.	24th October 1936.	20½	23½	29½	34½	38½

* Direct commission.

† Previously held Temporary Commission.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: Sir, may I know what period, the longest period, within which the Indianisation of these 8 Units is expected to take?

Mr. E. Burdon: The matter is one which requires to be stated with a considerable degree of precision. It has been explained very fully in the body of the statement, and I think it will be more satisfactory to my Honourable friend if he will wait till he reads the statement.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: Sir, may I ask if it is a fact that it will take 23 years before these 8 Units become Indianised.

Mr. President: I think the Honourable Member had better wait till he has the opportunity of looking at the paper and then he can put any questions.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: What is the total number of Indian officers in these 8 Units?

Mr. E. Burdon: The establishment of King's commissioned officers in an Indian Infantry Battalion is 12, and in a Cavalry Regiment 13.

THE EXCLUSION FROM INHERITANCE BILL.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: Sir, I beg to present the Report of the Select Committee on the Bill to amend the Hindu Law relating to the exclusion from inheritance of certain classes of heirs and to remove certain doubts.

THE CODE OF CRIMINAL PROCEDURE (AMENDMENT) BILL.

AMENDMENT OF SECTION 4.

Mr. Abul Kasem (Dacca Division: Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I beg to present the Report of the Select Committee on the Bill further to amend the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, amendment of section 4.

THE BUDGET—LIST OF DEMANDS.

SECOND STAGE—contd.

DEMAND NO. 8.—RAILWAYS—contd.

POINT OF ORDER—NOMINAL CUT ON VOTABLE EXPENDITURE.

Range of Discussion on Non-votable Expenditure.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey (Home Member): Sir, there was a discussion in the House yesterday, during part of which I was unfortunately absent, on a point of order. Briefly, it referred to the extent to which on a proposal for what we have come to know as a nominal cut on votable expenditure, questions might be raised and discussion might range over questions relating to non-votable expenditure. I appreciate the fact that you have given your ruling on the subject, but for my own part, and I may perhaps be blamed for not having raised the point last year, I am conscious of the fact that in previous discussion on the Demands for Grants, opportunities were taken by the House for raising questions ranging over non-votable expenditure in the course of discussing cuts of a nominal nature on votable expenditure. I am not, it may be well understood, desirous of arguing against your ruling; I am equally desirous to avoid putting forward any proposal which might embarrass the Honourable the Finance Member. I am far from either intention, but may I suggest, in view of the terms in which the Governor General's Order regarding discussion of non-voted items is couched; in view also of our previous procedure, that without in any way altering your previous decision, and without prejudice to any final decision that you may come to on the subject, it would be possible for you, during the next few days to allow the House, as an interim arrangement purely and without prejudice to the future, to discuss on nominal cuts relating to non-votable expenditure general questions relating to votable expenditure. I put that request forward, because I feel that the House would perhaps, during the general discussion, have taken a fuller opportunity of discussing non-votable expenditure had they been aware that it would not be possible for them to discuss these questions on motions placed on the paper in regard to votable expenditure. I of course wish to be precise on one point only, and that is that such motions should be actually of cuts of a nominal character. It is quite clear, Sir, that I could not put forward or support any proposal for a reduction in votable expenditure of such a nature that it was really intended to affect non-votable expenditure. My suggestion relates entirely of course to motions for nominal reductions.

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary (Calcutta: Non-Muhammadan Urban): Sir, I am sure we appreciate this concession to the weakness of the House, if I may put it so, its faults and defects to which they have got accustomed and which for a short spell might be permitted to continue. Sir, we have often been told that within the powers reserved to us larger conventions might grow up, and that is exactly what the House has been trying to do in this matter, and they have been allowed to do that. It is not as if there had been lapses which have to be condoned and need be now further condoned. I purposely refrained from taking part in yesterday's discussion for an obvious reason, and that is that these are matters that had best be allowed to grow their own way. And if they are not allowed to grow as they ought to grow, as conventions, then any concessions from the Government such as has been hinted at to-day would be valueless. Take for instance, what Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas referred to yesterday. He relied on the convention that sprang up last year. Unfortunately there were slight elements of inaccuracy owing to the exact proceedings not being before us. Mr. Jamnadas referred to what had been allowed before and this is exactly what the House has been trying to follow up. This proposed concession comes in another shape and I do not know whether it will serve any useful purpose or whether we had not better go on in the way we are doing. We do claim that by effecting cuts on votable items it is not only intended to raise a discussion but there is a desire to force the hands of the Government with regard to votable, that that is the clear object with which these cuts are proposed; and if this power is to be taken away, I do not much appreciate the value of the concession that has been announced to-day.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar (Madras City: Non-Muhammadan Urban): Sir, I did not understand you yesterday to rule that all discussion outside the particular item as irrelevant. You can, on a motion for a substantial reduction of a votable item, support your position by showing other ways in which that amount can be found. It is not an actual vote on a particular item; in the argument in support of the motion I refer to various items which might have been done by Government, and thereby they need not ask for so much vote from the Assembly. In that way I do not understand that you ruled out such discussions as out of order. If you did, Sir, because the matter was discussed at very short notice and without any previous preparation for it, I would ask you to reconsider it. We do not want any concessions; we want to stand on our rights such as they are and if we have not got those rights we must agitate for getting those rights. By all means let us cultivate the habit of making conventions, but not against law. I do not think, Sir, there is anything in the rules or in the Act preventing us from supporting our motions for reduction of particular grants, whether it be a nominal sum or a substantial sum. I do not want to take this recommendation which the Honourable Leader of the House has suggested that it must be a nominal sum. It might be a substantial sum, but in asking my substantial sum reduction I may be able to show there are other ways in which the Government could have found this money and therefore I need not grant it. I am asked to grant a particular sum and I tell the Government "You can find that sum elsewhere." Sir, it is a perfectly legitimate argument to adopt, and I do not think you will rule such an argument out as irrelevant.

[Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar.]

Mr. N. M. Samarth (Bombay: Nominated Non-Official): I support what Mr. Rangachariar has said, Sir. Take for instance, what we had last year. We made a certain cut of a lump sum in certain grants and left the Government to adjust it in any way they liked between non-votable and votable as they chose. Here is the list supplied to us—the statement of the expenditure that is appropriated and that is reduced. Take for instance, the North-West Frontier Province. We asked and we carried a vote for a reduction of Rs. 12 lakhs and 90 thousand. How have the Government adjusted it? In that sheet, on page 10, it will be found that the original amount which was non-voted was Rs. 1,38,08,000 and the net grant voted by the Assembly was Rs. 1,11,22,000. How did the Government adjust it? They reduced the non-voted item from Rs. 1,38,08,000 to Rs. 92,99,000 and reduced the voted item to Rs. 14,79,000. It is for the Government to cut out according as they choose. It is for us to say "We are not going to grant anything more than this; you had better adjust yourself in any way you like between voted and non-voted as you did last year."

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas (Bombay City: Non-Muhammadan Urban): Sir, I rise only to remove a misapprehension that might have been created by what my Honourable and esteemed friend Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary said. Yesterday evening I had no time to urge the point that I was laying emphasis on. All the time, Sir, I was trying to prove that the discussion had been allowed last year in the course of discussions on demands for grants on items which it is urged this year are of a non-votable character; and in doing so I referred to the motion which was on paper in my name but which I refrained from moving only because before moving that I wanted to obtain some information from the Honourable the Finance Member. The Honourable Finance Member in replying never raised the point and I am still prepared to maintain that he had not the slightest idea of raising the point of order if that motion had been moved; and if he denies it I am prepared to accept his statement. But the Honourable the Finance Member in dealing with that point treated me very fairly and answered all the arguments that were urged by me in speaking on my intention to move the motion. That alone prevented me from technically moving the motion; all the arguments were urged and in the course of discussion on Sir Vithaldas' motion for all practical purposes I urged also the possibility of my moving the motion if the Honourable the Finance Member's explanation was not satisfactory. I do not think, Sir, that I was inaccurate; besides, all that I was trying to prove yesterday was—and that I think has been proved beyond doubt—that last year in the course of the discussion on demands for grants, those items which are considered non-votable to-day were allowed to be discussed. Apart from that, the reason of the non-votable items being too heavy was allowed to be urged by Members as a reason for cutting down the expenditure on votable items. That was all that I wanted to urge and I do not think that I am guilty of inaccuracy.

Mr. President: The point in its essence is simple; but before I approach the main point put to me by the Honourable the Home Member I want the Assembly to clear up its mind of the confusion which arose owing to the fact that a certain item which appeared in last year's estimates as votable appears in this year's estimates as non-votable; therefore, though Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas' words were applicable to that point, they are not applicable to the main question.

The Home Member has put to me a point which is not only of great importance for this House but of great constitutional importance. As the Assembly is aware, I have endeavoured always to interpret the spirit rather than the letter of the Rules and Standing Orders. I have no intention of enforcing in a hard and fast sense the ruling given yesterday and I am prepared to acknowledge that the interpretation which I placed on the Governor General's order is open to argument. Therefore I may say that I am glad that the Honourable Home Member has taken this point in order that the further proceedings on the demands for grants may be put properly in order.

Mr. Rangachariar has suggested that if a large reduction is moved on the votable portion and carried then the Government must find means either in the votable or the non-votable portion of carrying that into effect. But I may point out to him that we should be establishing a very unfortunate precedent if I were to accept that without reservation; and the reservation which I must put to the Assembly in this: the non-votable portion in certain parts of the budget is much larger than the votable; and if I were to allow him to move a reduction on the votable item larger than the votable item itself, then obviously I should be allowing him to do a thing which is not permitted by the rules.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: I did not mean that.

Mr. President: But the Honourable Member meant it in essence though not in form. What the Honourable Member is asking me is to allow him to proceed not exactly on that line, but with that object and effect in view. Therefore, I think, for the purposes of the remaining discussion, I must adopt the more restricted procedure suggested by the Honourable the Home Member on the assumption that the Government itself is not impervious to argument and that where a reduction of a nominal amount is carried by the Assembly, the arguments used will carry their due weight with the Government. I may say in general that I am glad that the Honourable the Home Member has taken a liberal view of the constitution.

Dr. H. S. Gour (Nagpur Division: Non-Muhammadan): Sir, after what has fallen from the Chair, my perplexity has become greater. I understood, Sir, ever since the commencement of this Assembly that we were always at liberty to use pressure upon the Government to economise upon non-votable items by making corresponding cuts in the votable items and that we were not restricted to any nominal amount in our cuts on the votable items. I now find, Sir, that the practice of the last two years will have to be modified, and if I wish to make a cut of a lakh of rupees in the non-votable item, I shall not be entitled to make that cut in a votable item and use it as a lever upon the Government to transfer it to the non-votable item. All that the Honourable the Home Member has suggested is that a nominal cut should be made in the votable item and leave the Government to make such cuts as they desire to make in the non-votable items. That, Sir, would be reversing the practice and procedure which has been followed during the last two years and which we, Sir, have followed even during the last two days. I, therefore, submit that that is a practice which has developed into a convention of this House, and we shall be going back upon a convention, the validity of which was never challenged by the Honourable the Home Member when he was in charge of the finances of the country. I therefore submit that we must not break upon a rule which, at any rate, has been established and become established during the last two years.

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett (Finance Member): Sir, in making the motion yesterday and in asking you to give a ruling that the discussion on sinking funds on a motion for a reduction in the Railway Demand was out of order, I was following the practice which was in entire accordance with the practice in the House of Commons. A consolidated fund charge is not a charge which on any occasion in connection with the voting of the Demands or estimates in Great Britain the House of Commons can use as an argument for cutting down voted expenditure. The difference of course between the position in England and the position here is that, there are other things besides the consolidated fund charges which are non-votable. So far as the consolidated fund charges are concerned, the ruling that you have given, gives this House probably rather more liberty of voting, of expressing its view by voting on a consolidated fund charge than is granted to the House of Commons.

I would just like to refer to one other argument used by Mr. Samarth. He said that if this House were to reduce a votable item, it was open to the Government to spread that reduction over the votable and the non-votable portion of the vote. That is not so. The Government can only spend on voted expenditure such sums as are voted by this House, and if this House reduces a vote of 10 crores by one crore to 9 crores and there is a non-voted portion of one crore in addition to that sum voted, it is perfectly true that as a matter of money, the result at the end of the year might be that the Government had spent only 10 crores, by saving one crore on the non-votable instead of on the votable. But we should have to come back to the House and obtain its authority for that additional one crore on a supplementary vote. This Government can only spend on votable expenditure what the House votes. If this House reduces a voted item by a crore, the Government has either to reduce its voted expenditure by a crore or come back to the House for a supplementary grant. So that it is not true to say that the Government has liberty to adjust a cut in a votable portion of the vote by non-expenditure under a non-votable portion.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar (Madras: Nominated Non-Official): May I ask the Honourable the Finance Member a question. Supposing out of a sum which is regarded as non-votable there is an amount which is not spent, you can adjust the unspent amount of the non-votable portion and use it for votable items. Of course, it will come by way of a supplementary grant, but when you ask for a supplementary grant and when the House finds that there is money in the non-votable item which can be transferred to the votable portion, there will be no difficulty in giving you a grant. That will be the position.

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: That may be the position, but the technical position is that on a votable expenditure Government can only spend money that is voted. If you cut a Demand by a crore, the question whether there is money unspent has nothing to do with the case. It is simply a question that this House has the right to determine by vote what sums shall be voted for the Government to spend on certain services. The Government cannot spend a rupee more on these services without getting further money voted by the House.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: It was an old saying that the Greeks feared their enemies even when they brought them gifts. I thought that I was endeavouring to get over a difficulty that was raised yesterday and was asking your assistance to surmount it. The difficulty as I saw it and as I put it, arose purely out of one matter, namely, whether you could discuss non-votable questions on a motion relating to a nominal cut on a votable item. That I understand was the exact point on which you gave your ruling. I find, however, that my well-intentioned efforts have been misconstrued into an attempt,—I am sure I am right in using the word 'misconstrued' because that is the practical effect of what Dr. Gour said,—to curtail a convention of another nature at which the House is said to have arrived. Nothing was further from my thoughts; nor would that result be involved in the permission which I asked you to give. As for the alleged convention, Dr. Gour said that last year the House was in the habit—whether it was a good habit or bad habit I leave the outside world to judge,—of making large cuts from votable items on the suggestion that it would leave it to us to distribute those as we liked between non-votable and votable. It is true that the House took that course, but it is a process against the correctness of which we argued both on practical and constitutional grounds. As the Honourable Sir Basil Blackett said, the House by doing so could not alter the constitutional position; if we could not effect reductions on the non-voted section then the total budget provision under the head was insufficient; and even if we did so, the matter had to be regulated subsequently by a supplementary grant within the voted head. When I proposed this morning that when nominal cuts were proposed on voted items the House should be able to discuss non-voted heads of expenditure, I did not, of course, in any way suggest that the House should not be at liberty to vote reduced supply on voted items when it could indicate that such reductions could be met by a feasible reduction in the scale of voted expenditure. Nor could I suggest that the President should go behind the motives of the House in making such cuts. We well know that last year large cuts on votable expenditure were moved and were supported on arguments which really had nothing whatever to do with the subject matter in hand. That is to say, the House, while fully acknowledging that we could not earn our Customs revenue without a full establishment, nevertheless decided that 4 lakhs should go out of it. They argued it on grounds which they themselves will now admit had very little to do with the question whether a reduction in establishment was really possible. In other words, admitting that we still needed the establishment, they nevertheless voted reduced supply on this head and suggested we might make it up out of the army or elsewhere. We cannot go into the motives of the House in making these cuts on votable expenditure. I say nothing now as to the propriety or reasonableness of this procedure, nor do I suggest that it could or should profitably be followed again. I am not on that point—I only suggest that on motions for reduction of votable expenditure purposely placed on the list with the view of raising discussion or eliciting information you might allow the discussion to range over non-votable items.

[Sir Malcolm Hailey.]

Mr. J. Chaudhuri (Chittagong and Rajshahi Divisions: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, the question which was raised before this House yesterday involved two principles of great constitutional importance. One has been discussed and is being discussed to-day before this House. With regard to that, I would remind the Honourable the Home Member that his predecessor gave an assurance, when we made lump cuts last year, that, if the cuts could not be made from the votable items, the non-votable items would be reduced.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: Would the Honourable Member kindly say who gave that assurance?

Mr. J. Chaudhuri: Sir William Vincent. He gave an assurance that, although we cut down votable items, if the reduction could not be made from votable items without making administration impossible, he would make some reductions in the non-votable items.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: The Honourable Member will, I am sure, excuse me if I interrupt him to put him right on facts. It was suggested that a total reduction might be made under the head "General Administration." Sir William Vincent accepted that—that cut was not made by the House—he accepted that and said at the same time: "I am sure the House will not bind me to make it purely in one direction, but I shall spread it over the entire head, votable and non-votable." That, the Honourable Member will admit, is entirely different to what we are discussing now.

Mr. J. Chaudhuri: I quite admit that. My point is that that is a mode of bringing indirect pressure on the Government.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: No pressure was needed in that case.

Mr. J. Chaudhuri: I do not question for a moment that, so long as this distinction between votable and non-votable exists, of course we cannot effect a reduction in the non-votable items. But in that respect, what the Honourable the Home Member has said is a concession. The non-votable items are not a permanent fixture and the scheme of the Act is that they will gradually be made votable. Now, the other question of principle that was raised yesterday on the merits, I have looked into the Government of India Act, and there can be no question that annuities are non-votable under the existing arrangement. But I would point out that a question of principle as regards the privileges of this House that was raised was this. My learned Leader, Sir Sivaswamy Ayyar, raised the question that under section 67A, whenever a votable item is transferred to a non-votable head then the question should arise in this House. It would have been regular if, when this change was made, the matter was brought before the House and the change was effected in a regular way. That would have been a compliance with the requirements of section 67A to which Sir Sivaswamy Ayyar referred.

As on the merits, my friend Mr. Rangachariar referred to section 20, which says:

"All expenses, debts, liabilities, contracted and incurred on account of the Government of India should be a charge on the Revenue."

That is clause 20 (c). Now, if we refer to section 28, there is no doubt with regard to the question under the Government of India Act. These railways were acquired by the Secretary of State under powers therein referred to.

Mr. President: The Honourable Member is now arguing a question of merit, which is somewhat remote from the real point of order raised by the Home Member. I must ask him to bring his remarks to a close.

Mr. J. Chaudhuri: So I say on the merits of this question, the annuities are non-votable, but the other question that is indirectly involved is a constitutional question, and a question of the privileges of this House. Supposing next year a certain item is transferred from under the head of votable to non-votable without reference to us, that will be an encroachment on the privileges of this House and that will be an unconstitutional course.

Mr. President: That question has not yet arisen.

Sir Montagu Webb (Bombay: European): I beg to move, Sir, that the House do now proceed with the further consideration of the Demands for Grants.

Mr. J. Chaudhuri: That is indirectly involved and that is why I say I must enter my protest on constitutional grounds and on the ground of its being an encroachment on the privileges of the House.

Mr. President: I think I cannot allow the Honourable Member to raise a large issue like that. As far as I am able to understand, this is really a book-keeping entry.

The Honourable the Finance Member: Yes.

Mr. J. Chaudhuri: If any Member of this House does not appreciate the point, perhaps the Honourable the Finance Member will.

Mr. President: The Honourable Member has just said that he is satisfied that this particular item is non-votable.

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: Sir, the item in question is an annuity payable to the shareholders of the East Indian Railway Company. It is a sterling sum. Last year, owing to the way in which our accounts were drawn up, the sterling sum was shown in rupees with the equivalent of two shillings to the rupee. That left a gap of a very considerable sum between the amount of rupees required and the amount of rupees shown at 2 shillings to the rupee. Under another head "Exchange", the additional sum was included. That was under a general item for Exchange, but was treated as votable, obviously quite wrongly, purely by mistake. This year the exchange being shown at 1s. 4d. the rupee sum which is the equivalent of the sterling sum is shown entirely under one head as non-votable. The amount that has been transferred from votable to non-votable is simply the exchange difference between the rupee at 1s. 4d. and the rupee at 2s. on a sum something over three million pounds representing the shilling annuity. I think there is a certain amount of misapprehension as to what the House is doing when it is voting demands for grants. What it is doing is appropriating a certain sum of money for expenditure by the Government on certain items. It votes that a crore be spent on such and such a department, on the voted portion. It is not framing a budget; it is not providing money, it is simply appropriating a given sum for a given expenditure. If it appropriates a reduced sum or if it reduces that expenditure by half, that is at that moment a direction to the Government to spend half that sum on these particular items of the voted expenditure. But there is a good deal of confusion of thought, I think, on what it is doing. It is simply voting certain sums for certain purposes and if it reduces the sums voted, that is a direct reduction of the sums available to the Government for those purposes and has no other effect.

[Sir Basil Blackett.]

Detailed Discussion.

Mr. President: The House will now resume the discussion on Demand No. 8 under the head "Railways."

Munshi Iswar Saran (Cities of the United Provinces: Non-Muhamadan Urban): With your permission, Sir, I shall say only one brief word about all these three items.*

Mr. President: Do they come under the head Working Expenses?

Munshi Iswar Saran: Yes. According to the ruling given by you yesterday, I understood that all these proposals for reduction of smaller sums were included in the proposals for the reduction of larger sums and when the vote on the bigger issue was given, then the smaller ones went out. If that was your ruling, then, Sir, I cannot move these three items for the obvious reason that they are included in the head Working Expenses. But if, on the other hand, you are now pleased to hold that in view of the discussion that has taken place it may perhaps be more useful that these smaller reductions, which are really made to raise questions of principle and discussion on various matters should be allowed, then I shall, with your permission, make a few observations. It is a matter entirely for your decision, Sir.

Mr. President: The Honourable Member must not take the ruling regarding the discussion of a particular item in this case as applying to all cases. The ruling which I gave in the case of one of Mr. Joshi's amendments was not on the point of votable or non-votable but on the point that the matter had been fully discussed under Working Expenses and that it was the duty of the Chair to avoid as far as possible the repetition of discussion under successive motions for reduction. As the Honourable Member will remember, there was a long debate on Working Expenses and I think the Chair was entitled to assume that those who wished to discuss matters arising under Working Expenses would do so on the larger demand even though they themselves had put down smaller demands. The Honourable Member must not understand as regards the general application of the ruling that where a larger demand has been moved and voted upon, therefore ipso facto it rules out of order smaller demands, because that is not so. But in this case, from the point of view of orderly procedure, it would be improper to allow successive discussions of all smaller motions which come under Working Expenses in view of the fact that Working Expenses was fully discussed yesterday morning.

* "144. That the provision for Engineering Department, Appendix B (page 4) be reduced by Re. 1.

145. That the provision for Locomotive Department, Appendix B (page 4) be reduced by Re. 1.

146. That the provision for Carriage and Wagon Department Appendix B (page 4) be reduced by Re. 1."

Munshi Iswar Saran: Perhaps it is my fault, but if you will be pleased to turn to amendment 132A, on page 10, you will find the following:—

"That the provision for Working Expenses under the head Railways (page 29) be reduced by Re. 1."

After the discussion on the larger question you passed over this and similar other items. Perhaps it may be my mistake, but I understood that all these smaller items were ruled out simply because the discussion had taken place on the larger item. Your ruling would necessitate that in the discussion on the larger item, all those people who had given notice of amendments for smaller reduction will, as a matter of right, be entitled to speak. Otherwise, there will be this obvious difficulty. Assume, Sir, for the moment, that twenty of us have given notice for reduction of a particular demand by Re. 1, Rs. 2 and so on, and there is a discussion about the reduction of the same demand by Re. 1 lakh. Further assume that a discussion of the larger reduction takes place and the question is decided. Now, if it is to be held that all the people who have given notice of smaller reductions are ruled out, then it appears to me, Sir, perfectly reasonable that all these people should have the right of expressing their views in the discussion on the larger reduction.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: The President has not said "No" to it.

Munshi Iswar Saran: I do not say that the President has said "No". I am only pointing out that this would be the inevitable consequence of that position.

Mr. President: The Honourable Member means that a Member in whose name a motion for reduction stands, which is less than the amount in the motion under discussion, ought to have the right to be called by the Chair. Is that what he means?

Munshi Iswar Saran: As you have been pleased to put the question I must answer it. Yesterday after the discussion on the larger reduction was over, you called on other men. I did not like to jump up to be told that I was out of order. This is exactly what happened yesterday. As soon as that was passed, you passed over this item and went down to some other item and called upon some other Member of the House. If you mean that each Member is to get up, then I suppose you will be pleased to allow us to have a little breathing time, because, you announced the vote and then you passed on and called upon another man. It is really impossible for a man to stand up in the interval between the announcement and the calling up of another man. That is the difficulty. As regards this particular item . . .

Mr. President: If the Honourable Member thinks that he still had the right to move the reduction of Re. 1 after we carried Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary's reduction of Rs. 50 lakhs, we carried out his intention.

Munshi Iswar Saran: The reason is this. When there is a proposal for the reduction of a large amount that may be guided by considerations of a very different nature and it may not be necessary in the discussion of that large item to bring forward those matters which a man who proposes a reduction of, say, Re. 1, wishes the House to consider. I mean it is perfectly obvious.

Mr. President: I just called upon the Honourable Member to move 144. If he means that it is simply a vote reducing the Working Expenses, then it is out of order. But if he wishes to raise a particular point, then he is in order. I fail to understand his grievance regarding his motion for reduction of Re. 1.

Munshi Iswar Saran: As regards the reduction of Re. 1 it has nothing to do with the reason why that reduction of Rs. 45 lakhs or Rs. 50 lakhs should take place. I shall now come to this question* of 144, 145 and 146. I may take all these together. It is not necessary for me to make a long speech about it. I only put them down in order to draw the attention of the Honourable Mr. Innes and the Chief Commissioner to the grievance that there exists about the employment of Indians in these various Departments.

Mr. President: We have already had that discussion.

Lieut.-Colonel H. A. J. Gidney: Are you not satisfied? (A Voice: "Withdraw.")

Munshi Iswar Saran: That is perfectly so and I was therefore not going to move it. But you were pleased to call upon me. Take, for instance, the Carriage and Wagon Department. Not a word was said yesterday about it. If these are included technically under the head Working Expenses, then that goes. But if it is not, then I submit that I would be perfectly justified in moving my amendment No. 146, for not a word was said about it yesterday. But before I proceed, I shall beg you to consider that according to this view the right of a Member to move a particular amendment will depend to a large extent on the observations that have been made by the speakers in the discussion of the larger amount.

Mr. President: The Honourable Member will remember that the Commerce Member in replying said that he was replying
12 Noon. to no less than fourteen points under this vote and one of those was the very point of Indianisation. It is not the duty of the Chair to protect the right of any individual Member to raise a question at its proper point. He must realise that though it was somewhat disorderly the question of Indianisation was raised on two votes, Working Expenses and the Railway Board. The Assembly will appreciate the difficulty of preventing a repetition of discussions; but it is the duty of the Chair as far as possible to do so, because otherwise the same question would be raised on nearly every one of the votes. When once the question has been thoroughly discussed the Chair must protect the right of other Members of the House to raise other questions on other votes. (Hear, hear.) If the Honourable Member proposes to raise the question of Indianisation I am afraid he is not in order.

* Vide page 3380 of these Debates.

(Cries of 'Withdraw', 'withdraw'.)

Munshi Iswar Saran: The only word I wish to say to those who shout 'withdraw', is that I am withdrawing this motion not in response to that shout but in compliance with your ruling.

Corruption on Railways—Pilferage of Fruits, etc.

Dr. Nand Lal (West Punjab: Non-Muhammadan): Sir, I shall not make reference to those points which were adverted to yesterday and day before yesterday. I shall confine my remarks to one point alone which was not brought within the scope of discussion during these two days. That point is this. Two years back on the floor of this House I had the privilege of raising my voice and addressing the Railway Department that some of the stationmasters do not give a free supply of wagons to traders and merchants.

Mr. President: Order, order. That was thoroughly discussed on Working Expenses.

Dr. Nand Lal: With due deference, Sir, I remained present in this House during the last two days and so far as my recollection goes none of the Honourable Members of this House made any reference to the point which I am urging now. The point which I am referring to is this that the merchants and tradesmen . . .

Mr. President: The Honourable Member must have forgotten certain passages in the Debate in which under Renewals this question was very carefully gone into both by the non-official Members and by Members of the Government. If the Honourable Member has some other question to raise, I shall allow him to proceed.

Dr. Nand Lal: I am not referring to the question of renewals or the question of the number of carriages or the question of the difficulties of third class passengers. I am now referring to the conduct of certain stationmasters towards the merchants and tradesmen, that is, corruption. That point was never brought within the scope of any discussion during the last two days, and if I go beyond that point, then I may be asked to resume my seat. Since I am in favour of discipline I wish to ask your permission to proceed. May I proceed to that point?

Mr. President: The Honourable Member did not make it clear to me that he was going to discuss the question of the conduct of stationmasters.

Dr. Nand Lal: I thank the Chair for the permission granted to me. Sir, I shall not repeat the preliminary point which I had raised. It happens in many cases that a merchant applies to the stationmaster for the supply of wagons and the stationmaster tries to pretend that he has not got sufficient supply of those wagons which are required by the merchant or the tradesman as the case may be. But if that merchant or trader gives something to the stationmaster the wagons crop up in no time. The House is intelligent enough to understand what that thing is and I need not mention it. I address the Railway Department that the country will feel very much indebted to that Department if they will take effective measures so that the corruption, in any case, may be reduced, if it cannot be eradicated. It is impossible for any Department to eradicate it, because, unfortunately, this evil habit has got its existence in the whole world. Therefore, I will not ask the Railway Department to do that which is impossible, but I am fully justified in asking that they will do their level best to see that this evil is minimised. Perhaps it may be urged on behalf of the Department "This criticism is merely destructive. Have you got any constructive suggestions to make?" Here I may add it is my duty, as a Member of this House, to offer those suggestions. The suggestion is that a register may be kept, at every railway station, so that if any merchant or any tradesman wants to have the supply of one wagon or two wagons, he may put down in that register "I want one wagon or two wagons on a certain day", and that register may be subscribed to or signed, in the way of authentication, by the officer in charge of that station, it may be the Superintendent of the station, so far as the bigger towns are concerned, or the stationmaster, as far as the smaller stations concerned. This will, in a way, meet the requirement and there will be, in any case, less chance for that stationmaster to get his palms greased. Another point in connection with the Traffic Department which was not urged before is—most of us are quite alive to this fact and I think the Railway Department too—that if you send a parcel containing oranges or mangoes from one place to another, your consignee will not be fortunate enough to get the whole of the consignment, but he will find something less, in some cases half, and in some other cases one-third. May I invite the attention of the Traffic Department to this evil which exists on a very large scale. I think even some of the official Members may have felt very deeply the loss of fruits which they might have sent for from a certain place. I think this is a point, in which we are very much concerned, and an honest effort must be put forth to see that this evil is reduced. Sir, the purity and honesty of the Department are essential factors, which go to give a good name to that Department and if the Railway Department will do something in the direction I have suggested most of the criticism which is levelled against it will have been removed at once. I move:

[Dr. Nand Lal.]

"That the provision for Traffic Department under sub-head Ordinary Expenses (b) (i) (4)—Appendix B be reduced by Rs. 100."

Mr. R. A. Spence (Bombay: European): I think there is a good deal in what Dr. Nand Lal has said especially in regard to fruits. I well remember trying to discover what had happened to a basket of mangoes and at last when I traced my complaint and got into the clerk's office, I discovered the empty basket under the clerk's table. Dr. Nand Lal made a constructive criticism and offered a suggestion to the Honourable Member in charge of Commerce and Railways in regard to a register of wagons. May I ask him to carry the suggestion a little further? It is a difficult problem. Perhaps the railway people might get assistance if they referred this matter to one of the Secretaries of the Gymkhanas who have great difficulty in arranging a register for tennis courts. If it is a difficult matter to arrange a register for tennis courts I am sure it would be a very much more difficult matter to arrange a register for wagons.

Mr. W. M. Hussanally (Sind: Muhammadan Rural): The point that has been brought forward by Dr. Nand Lal is a very important point indeed. Corruption among railway station staff is a very common thing all over India. Not only does corruption exist in regard to the supply of wagons and pilferage of fruit, but corruption exists in almost everything connected with the railway station working. For instance even the foodstuff vendors pay annuities to the station staff and I have tabled a question upon this point of annuities of this kind to which I expect an answer in a few days more. The question I admit is a very difficult one for solution for one reason and that is that whatever is earned by this corruption is divided not only amongst the whole station staff, but also amongst the underlings and subordinates in the offices of the District Traffic Superintendents and others, with the result that these station masters are emboldened in their attempts to fleece the public. It has occurred within my own knowledge and experience that a station master drawing only about Rs. 50 or 60 a month has been kept at a particular station and only that station for years together, sometimes 15 or 20 years. At the time of transfer he carries a fortune of over two or three lakhs. In one instance I remember that a particular station master who was working on the Sind section carried a fortune of 2 lakhs at retirement and he had no son or daughter, and I do not know what he did with that money. Similarly with regard to foodstuff vendors, they have to pay regular annuities and even commissions to the station staff or the staff of higher offices, for securing a licence for the purpose of vending these foodstuffs. The result is that the travelling public is mulcted. They get very inferior stuff. No body cares to look at what is being sold to them what the public are given to eat and at what rates. The suggestion made by Dr. Nand Lal with regard to keeping a register in regard to the supply of wagons will hardly do. There are ways and ways of doing things and evading the supply. I consider this matter is so important that I have suggested the appointment of a committee to go into this matter regularly and make a thorough inquiry and find out how far this evil exists and what should be the remedies for stopping the same. The thefts are not confined entirely to parcels of fruits but to much more valuable articles, such as ghee, liquor and things of that kind. These are freely robbed while in transit. A tin of ghee or kerosine is tampered with and the contents removed. In some instances the public have complained that instead of ghee they found stones when these tins are received by them. Thefts of mangoes and fruits are common complaints on all railways and the fact that superior officers of the Railway Department have not paid any consideration to the complaints which are by no means new or tried to stop the nuisance has led the public to believe, though wrongly, that the railway officers themselves encourage their subordinates. I say that these things will never stop unless a regular committee is appointed and the matter is thoroughly gone into and some strong measures adopted for stopping this scandal. I would therefore draw the attention of the Chief Commissioner to this point very particularly.

Sardar B. A. Dalal (Bombay Northern Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): I rise to support and voice the grievance of Dr. Nand Lal. I represent the Northern Division and I have received a telegram a few days ago from the timber merchants of Godra that they applied to the Station Master and the Traffic Inspector to supply them wagons but unfortunately their request was not conceded. The same telegram was addressed to your goodself and to Mr. Jamnadas also. These grievances ought to be remedied. They have been waiting for so many months and still they have not been supplied with wagons. Consequently they were put to a loss of some lakhs. Some remedy must be found for this grievance and I suggest to the Railway Board to do their best in this matter, to make inquiries whether what I have said is a fact or not. It is a fact, because I have got a telegram a few days ago.

Mr. K. G. Bagde (Bombay Central Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): The evil which is now under discussion was brought to the notice of the Acworth Committee and in their report they have made the following remarks. I am reading at page 53, paragraph 165:

"It is not too much to say that petty payments for wagons have now grown into a system of organised blackmail. The Railway Board and the railway officials, though they hesitate to admit that the evil is as serious and widespread as the traders claim, do not attempt to deny its existence. They deplore it, but are disinclined to accept responsibility. The practice, they say, can only be stamped out by convicting and punishing the bribe taker. This has been done in some cases, but not with sufficient frequency or certainty to stop the practice. If conviction of the bribe taker in a law court were the only means of stopping the practice, it would evidently continue indefinitely. For normally the only witness against the bribe taker is the bribe giver and as he is particeps criminis and equally liable to punishment, he can hardly be expected to come forward to give evidence. The practice must be stopped, not by conviction of offenders, but by prevention of the offence. And this we are convinced can be done as soon as the authorities are sufficiently in earnest about the matter. We feel that the evil would not have grown so serious if the Railway Board has appreciated its magnitude, and after a thorough investigation had grappled with it as a general question affecting all India and had insisted on reforms of the methods of wagon distribution."

The report is signed 22nd August 1921. It is more than a year and a half since the report was published and I would like to know from the Honourable Member concerned what steps have been taken in this direction.

Mr. J. P. Cotelingam (Nominated: Indian Christians): With reference to the point raised by Dr. Nand Lal as also by Mr. Spence and Mr. Hussanally, I believe a Committee was appointed last year to go into the whole question of the revision of railway risk notes. That Committee went round the country, took evidence and dealt also with the question of pilfering referred to by the Honourable Member and we have received copies of that report. I do not know what action has been taken in the matter by the Railway Board.

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley (Chief Commissioner, Railways): Although this discussion when started by Dr. Nand Lal was perhaps received by the House with a certain amount of levity, I can assure Honourable Members that this matter of corruption and pilferage is a serious one, on which the Railway Board feel very acutely and we feel that definite steps must be taken to eradicate these abuses. In regard to the general question of the distribution of wagons between stations, I must again mention that this depends to some extent on the total number of wagons available. Individual stations in various parts of the country undoubtedly feel the pinch when the number of wagons which are available or the number of wagons which can be moved are in deficit of the number required for the total traffic. This symptom, which Honourable Members know from their own experience, of wagons not being easily available at stations does hang on the general question of the provision of facilities and the renewals of stock on the railways. That is the general aspect of it.

In regard to actual distribution, various railways have different methods of ensuring that the goods brought to each different station are carried away in turn. Acting on the suggestion of the Acworth Committee, very shortly after we received their Report, this matter was brought prominently to the notice of all railways, but the suggestions which have been made by Dr. Nand Lal and Mr. Spence are, if I may say so without disrespect, of a somewhat amateur nature compared with what we are actually doing and have been doing for some considerable time. It is not at all comparable to the difficulties of the Secretary of a Gymkhana Club, if I may say so. Each railway has its own special system of registers. When goods are brought to a station for consignment, they are entered in a register in rotation and on many railways—I am not prepared to say that it is the case on every railway—those registers are periodically submitted to and certified by the district officers. The penalties for changing the order of those consignments as registered are very severe indeed. I may say from my own experience on the East Indian Railway that no less than six station masters were dismissed for altering the order of consignments in registers without authority. I know from my own experience that this is a matter which is looked into very carefully by district officers. I say that their measures may not always be effective in every direction, and, in so far as they are not effective, we shall endeavour to tighten them up; but the measures are there and the machinery is there. (A Voice: "Perhaps that machinery is never used.") I think if Honourable Members have occasion to send consignments, if they make inquiries at their own stations, they will find out exactly what the practice is.

In regard to corruption, I must again mention what was mentioned to the Acworth Committee, namely, that both sides to the transaction are to blame, and I do deprecate putting the whole blame upon the receiver of a bribe in a matter of this sort and not on the people who offer it. (A Voice: "Shame.") I wish to clear to some extent these attacks that have been made upon a very hard-working body of people. There are black sheep in every flock, and we cannot expect every one to be absolutely honest, but I do not believe that they are as a class essentially dishonest. I should like to say here publicly that they are men with whom I have worked myself from the time I joined the railway; I have had many friends among them and I know, as a whole, that the station masters and men of that class, who have dealings with this class of business, are honest. There are dishonest ones among them no doubt, but it is the duty of any Honourable Member who wishes to traverse this statement, if he has individual cases within his own knowledge, to bring them forward. (Mr. Darcy Lindsay: "Is it always the station master?") I was referring to those who have to deal with the registration of goods. Mr. Hussanally, I think, went further and said some of the bribes which are collected or alleged to be collected in these cases are divided amongst some other members of the staff. Well, I say any case of this sort which is brought to notice will be and shall be properly investigated. I do not think it is quite fair to make general statements on some individual cases or upon hearsay. (Sardar Bahadur Gajjan Singh: "There are no parties in the case of mangoes and any other fruit.") I have not come to pilferage yet, Sir. I want to say on the general question that it is not a matter over which we are sleeping. We have had it under discussion and we are pressing on the railways at every possible opportunity to improve their methods of registration of goods and distribution of wagons. On certain sections of the North-Western Railway it may interest Honourable Members to know that we have been developing a system whereby by means of telephone instruments and what we call "train control," adapting it for another purpose, we have been getting gradually a system into force whereby the district officers themselves can be put in touch every day with the consignments which are waiting at the stations and the position of the requirements of wagons. This is a very definite step forward, and I believe myself that it will effect a great reduction of these complaints about inequality of treatment of consignments.

[Mr. C. D. M. Hindley.]

There we bring the small station directly under the district officer and the whole position can be reviewed. That is a matter we cannot go on very rapidly with, because the House is not giving me sufficient funds with which to carry on these improvements. These are the improvements I want to make, and, of course, we shall be stumped in some directions.

I must say with regard to pilferage that this is another matter which is causing us very great concern. We hear about fruit, apples and mangoes, being stolen and, looking at the matter from a very light point of view, I am afraid those are things that touch individual Members of this House; but the railways know full well and I agree quite definitely that pilferage on the railways has become a very serious evil and it is a matter which we are taking up on very definite lines. We have had the matter investigated, as perhaps Honourable Members will recall, in connection with the Railway Police Inquiry Committee, which sat either last year or the year before, and the steps which that Committee recommended us to take we are taking to the best of our ability. The re-organization of our watch and ward staff is one of the most important matters which we are taking up. It is a matter which varies in its different aspects in different parts of the country. Every province of the country has different aspects of this most important question owing to the different kinds of people who commit pilferage and the different classes to be dealt with. For that reason it has been taken up individually on the different railways. Some railways have already made a step in advance and appointed a special police officer to re-organise the watch and ward, for we are satisfied that it is only by making better security methods for the goods while in our care as carriers that we can hope to reduce to some extent this pilferage which has grown to such very large dimensions; and I hope that this House, the country and the public generally will realise that this is a somewhat slow matter and will take time. It is a matter of organization and of gradually countering the evil by suitable means wherever we can do so. I think, Sir, those are the main points.

There is one other point which I forgot to mention regarding vendors on the North-Western Railway. I am sorry I have not here with me the exact terms under which these vendors are allowed to be given licenses, but I believe I am right in saying that on the North-Western Railway these vendors do not pay anything for their licenses. On some railways they are made to pay a certain fee for licences, and it is possible that Mr. Hussanally may have mixed these two things up. I believe it is a fact on the North-Western Railway. There is no definite fee for licence, and of course I quite admit that it may be within his knowledge that certain of these vendors have paid money for their licences to sell food; but that I may say is not within the knowledge of the responsible officers of the railway or they would have taken action at once. It is not a recognised practice.

With regard to the statement that no one cares what food they sell or what prices they charge, I believe it is a fact that they have a definite schedule of food which they sell at each station, and that the prices are fixed and reviewed from time to time.

I think, Sir, those are all the points that were raised on this amendment.

Mr. Harchandrai Vishindas (and other Honourable Members): I move that the question be now put.

Mr. President: The question is that the question be put.

The motion was adopted.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That the provision for Traffic Department under sub-head Ordinary Expenses (b) (i) (4)—Appendix B (page 29) be reduced by Rs. 100."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. B. S. Kamat (Bombay Central Division: Non-Muhammadan): Sir, as I think since yesterday morning, Government has already come in for a great amount of ragging, and as we have only three and a half days left for the other Demands, I shall not move this amendment:

"That the provision for Government Supervision under the head Railways, be reduced by Rs. 5."

Mr. B. Venkatapauraju (Ganjam cum Vizagapatam: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I propose to take only a few minutes.

Mr. K. C. Neogy (Dacca Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): I have not had a chance of moving my amendment No. 150 yet.

Mr. President: I called on the Honourable Member just now. The Honourable Member must realise that is one of the subjects which we have discussed. What point does he wish to raise?

Mr. K. C. Neogy: I want to raise a specific point with regard to one particular railway. I beg to move, Sir:

"That the provision for Programme Revenue Expenditure—Assam Bengal Railway, Appendix B (page 8) be reduced by Rs. 100."

If Honourable Members will turn to page 8 of Appendix B, they will notice that the provision for Programme Revenue Expenditure is shown as Rs. 6,99,000 in the actuals of 1921-22. This year the figure stands at Rs. 14,61,000—that is to say, more than double. I will remind the House that the Assam Bengal Railway has cost the tax-payer 18 crores in capital cost and 9 crores in interest charges already, and that the line involves an annual net loss of about 40 lakhs to the tax-payer. Now, Sir, if Honourable Members will turn to page 63 of the Inchcape Committee's Report, they will find that they strongly recommend that that expenditure on unremunerative lines must wait until the financial position improves. I want to know from the Honourable Member in charge as to how he proposes to effect any cut in this amount of Rs. 14,61,000 and whether he has borne in mind the recommendations of the Inchcape Committee in sanctioning this Programme Revenue Expenditure for the Assam Bengal Railway.

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley: Sir, in the revision of the Programme Revenue figures which was made in the cuts as a result of the Retrenchment Committee's recommendations, we have, as I mentioned to the House before, made a cut of 2½ crores of Programme Revenue on our total figure as put before the House in the Budget. We had already made a cut of 1 crore and therefore the total amount which we budgeted, 12½ crores, will be reduced by 3½ crores. These figures in Appendix B relating to the Assam Bengal Railway were included in the original total figure, and we have not yet had time to distribute that total amount of cut over the different railways. It is a matter which requires very great care because there are certain railways which require more renewals perhaps than others; but I can assure the Honourable Member that in the case of the Assam Bengal

[Mr. C. D. M. Hindley.]

Railway we shall give full effect as far as we possibly can, having regard to commitments and liabilities, to the recommendations of the Retrenchment Committee. I am not in a position to make an announcement as to the exact figure to which the provision for the Assam Bengal Railway will be reduced.

Mr. K. C. Neogy: Sir, I beg to withdraw my amendment. The motion was, by leave of the Assembly, withdrawn.

Catering and Advertising Department—B.-N. Railway.

Mr. B. Venkatapatiraju: Sir, I move:

"That the provision for Catering and Advertising Department under the head Bengal-Nagpur Railway Company, Appendix B (page 13), be reduced by Rs. 100."

Sir, it must be admitted that reasonable facilities should be provided in India as in other places for passengers who are travelling; but unfortunately in India the railways do not compete for the travelling public and therefore they do not care for the comfort of the passengers. Of course it is true they provide refreshment rooms and dining cars

Mr. President: Order, order. I assumed the Honourable Member was going to raise some particular point in connection with the Bengal Nagpur Railway.

Mr. B. Venkatapatiraju: I am coming to that, Sir.

Mr. President: The Honourable Member has been embarking on a general discussion, which is not in order.

Mr. B. Venkatapatiraju: I want to show, Sir, that there are European refreshment rooms, not only for Europeans but for those who take European food, and in order to give additional facilities the Bengal-Nagpur Railway have established a Catering and Advertising Department. So far advertisements are concerned we find in the carriages whisky is advertised, and wherever we turn our eyes we have advertisements of whisky before us. But leave that alone. Unfortunately the Department which has been set up to provide comforts, so far as I am aware in our part of the country, is causing much inconvenience and discomfort to the passengers. It is in this way. Before Waltair station was taken up by the Bengal-Nagpur Railway it was under the Southern Mahratta Railway, when there was no complaint. The rooms were leased for Rs. 15 by the Southern Mahratta Railway to the Indian refreshment room contractor. Subsequently from the Southern Mahratta Railway the Bengal-Nagpur Railway took charge of that, and now instead of giving it to some respectable person on contract, they have given it to some Friends and Company, friends of somebody, who in their turn have given it to somebody else, and instead of realising Rs. 15, per mensem they wanted to take Rs. 300 the first month, then Rs. 400 and then Rs. 500. Out of sheer despair the party refused to pay and he refused to vacate. Things were at a standstill and then the public met twice or thrice and sent telegrams to the Agent concerned and he said he would not interfere because the arrangement had been made by the Catering Superintendent. What were we to do, if they wanted to charge Rs. 500. For better accommodation they do not charge for the European refreshment room anything. Therefore this amount must come out of the pockets of Indian passengers. Is it not the intention of the Railway Department in making these arrangements to provide facilities for passengers and not that certain people should make profits out of the poor unfortunate passengers who travel several hours a day in the train. Therefore, Sir, this matter is one which the Government should take serious notice of. They should not allow any one to sublet it to anybody else, who in their turn sublet it to somebody else, so that the last man might fleece the passengers by charging unconscionable rates for dirty food supplied to these unfortunate third class passengers. Therefore, Sir, I invite the attention of the Chief Commissioner to this point. As my friend points out this is the only refreshment room for passengers that you have on the line; you do not find it at other stations, except what we call kutchra food—puris and the like which are sold by vendors. Most of the southern people do not take these puris and kutchra food; they want rice and other things and that cannot be had unless provision is made for refreshment rooms. In this matter, Sir, though help was wanted, it was not actually given; when they have appointed three officers drawing Rs. 1,000, Rs. 800 and Rs. 700 per mensem to look after these small things, can they not provide better facilities for the poor passengers?

Mr. N. M. Joshi (Nominated: Labour Interests): I want to make one remark, Sir, before Mr. Hindley replies. In reply to one of my questions on this point the Honourable Mr. Innes stated that the Bengal-Nagpur Railway spends Rs. 33,289 on its Indian branch of the Catering Department and Rs. 2,79,700 on the European Branch, or nearly ten times as much. While spending Rs. 33,289 it makes a profit of Rs. 28,000 on the Indian branch; that explains the kutchra food mentioned by Mr. Venkatapatiraju. On the European branch they spend Rs. 2,79,000 and make a profit of only Rs. 20,000. I think, Sir, this is evident partiality and the Chief Commissioner will perhaps be able to explain this.

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley: Sir, with regard to the complaint of my friend, I found it a little difficult to understand exactly what his specific complaint was. He seemed to give rather scant recognition to the efforts that have been made by the Bengal-Nagpur Railway to put their catering arrangements on a proper footing. They have taken a great deal of trouble about it and I believe that the public generally who use the Bengal-Nagpur Railway are satisfied with the arrangements that have been made. (Cries of 'Not at all.') I stand corrected; I have not been on the Bengal-Nagpur Railway myself very much, but I have heard a great deal of praise of the arrangements made. In regard to Waltair I am afraid my knowledge does not extend to the details of the arrangements made at that particular station, but I will ask the Agent of the Bengal-Nagpur Railway to give attention to the complaint that has been made.

Regarding Mr. Joshi's figures—I beg the Honourable Member's pardon—they are my figures, I think the explanation of these figures is that the European branch as it is called was started first by the catering department because it was considered then that that was the department which wanted organising. The vendors and others on the stations at that time apparently met the requirements of passengers, but there had been subsequently complaints from the members of the Indian public about this, and the catering department therefore took over the Indian side of it as well. That possibly is the explanation of the figures for the Indian branch being considerably less than the European branch

Mr. N. M. Joshi: What about the profit on the Indian branch?

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley: Another explanation is that the European branch does not only the catering in the refreshment rooms but also supplies stores and provisions to the staff along the line. I am not in a position to explain the reasons for the profit on either side, but I must point out that in either case there was a small profit made and I do not think that the railway itself is looking to making a large profit on either branch. I am quite satisfied from the reports that I have seen that they are taking the matter quite seriously and not using it as a means of obtaining a heavy profit from the public, and I am quite certain that Sir Godfrey, the Agent of that Railway, would be the very last to attempt to make a profit out of food supplied to Indian passengers.

I will bring the matter of Waltair station to his notice at the first opportunity.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: I only want to add one word, Sir, because I have been travelling by this Bengal-Nagpur Railway. They may take a lesson from the Madras and Southern Mahratta Railway and the South Indian Railway in the matter of food supplied to Indian passengers; and if the Honourable the Chief Commissioner will travel in the south of India he would recognise what public opinion there has effected; there we make ourselves felt on the railway administration and we have had these arrangements improved. When I passed Waltair I had to suffer a lot; in fact I had to break the railway rules by having the food cooked in my own compartment; and you will find that there is a lot of trouble felt by the Indian passengers. You get unwholesome food vended on the railway platforms; you have no room to go to and all these things require to be looked into; it is not only the Waltair station, but all along the line you have these difficulties.

Mr. B. Venkatapatiraju: Hoping that the Chief Commissioner will attend to these difficulties I do not press my amendment.

The motion was, by leave of the Assembly, withdrawn.

Mr. B. Venkatapatiraju: The next motion is:

"That the provision for Engineer-in-Chief for Vizagapatam Harbour under the head 'Bengal-Nagpur Railway Company' be reduced by Rs. 5."

His pay is Rs. 3,000 and I propose by this reduction to raise the question. I have no complaint against the officer; he is a very able and sympathetic and energetic officer doing his level best; but my complaint is against the Government because they have taken money and purchased land to the value of Rs. 8 to 20 lakhs; they have kept that officer really without any work to do; they have demolished several buildings in the town of Vizagapatam and they have made the town congested, and now that they have got 38 crores for expenditure they have not provided a single pie for the extension of the Harbour there. What is their object in keeping the Engineer on Rs. 3,000 if they have not made up their mind and prepared to proceed in the matter? They have acquired hundreds of acres of land to the utter inconvenience of the people. When they started this project, did they not have estimates before them? Did they not have a clear understanding whether it was a profitable concern or not? If it is a profitable concern, when they have at present ample funds before them, about 38 crores, why should they not proceed and provide funds for it? If they think, on the other hand, that it will not pay, then why should they have acquired the land at all? Probably they might have seen several articles that appeared in the Statesman wherein it was shown that if proper facilities were provided the return would be not merely 5½ per cent. but more, because it would facilitate trade and bring foreign goods at less cost by steamer via Vizagapatam to Calcutta, and it would save a lot of money in traffic. I had a discussion with several officers and they at least made me understand that they are quite satisfied with the programme and that it will be a profitable concern. Under these circumstances I do not see what change of policy has come upon the Government of India. The other day when I asked a question they said they were considering—in the year 1921. I am told that the Bengal Nagpur Railway offered to do the work if certain facilities are offered to them, and when I asked a question the Government replied that they did not know whether any specific suggestion was made, but they were considering. How long are they going to consider it? Why do you keep an officer on such a salary without utilising him? Is it not a waste of public money? Therefore I appeal to the Honourable Mr. Innes to see that when there are ample funds available and when they have seen that it is an absolutely paying concern, they should launch it especially when they have spent some amount on it already for that purpose, instead of keeping an officer waiting in expectation of doing something from year's end to year's end.

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes (Commerce and Industries Member): Sir, I must admit that this project for a harbour at Vizagapatam has been hanging fire for some time. The original intention was that we should have a railway port at Vizagapatam. That was agreed to, and the intention was to go ahead. Then the financial difficulties arose, and when we did arrive at a solution of those financial difficulties by the large amount of money granted to us for capital expenditure, the House will remember that in accordance with the definite recommendation of the Acworth Committee, it was decided that that money should be devoted to the rehabilitation of Railways and not to new projects of development. That is the reason why we were unable to provide last year from this capital programme money for the development of the Vizagapatam harbour. Naturally we have been endeavouring to find out other methods of financing the scheme, and we have been in negotiation with certain financiers connected with the Bengal Nagpur Railway, and they are on the point, I understand, of putting up definite proposals for financing this project of constructing a harbour at Vizagapatam. We expect those proposals shortly and then we should be able to come to a decision whether to accept those proposals or to follow the suggestion which has been thrown out by the Incheape Committee, namely that instead of spending all this money upon the rehabilitation of Railways we should go in for new developments; but I must ask my friend to be patient for a little time longer.

Mr. B. Venkatapatiraju: Sir, in view of the observations made by the Honourable Member in charge, I do not wish to press my motion.

The motion was, by leave of the Assembly, withdrawn.

General Superintendence.

Dr. Nand Lal: My motion is that the provision of Rs. 12,638 for General Superintendence, Appendix B, (page 49) be reduced by Rs. 500. I shall not take more than three minutes. There is only one point, Sir, to which I should like to invite the attention of the House, and when the House hears me, I am sure it will appreciate my arguments, barring, of course, a few members, who have no mind to do their duty. Sir, if the

[Dr. Nand Lal.]

Chief Commissioner of Railways will give me some sort of undertaking, then I shall withdraw my motion at once. The point which I wish to bring to the notice of the House is this. That sometimes, not only I, but, other Members of this House also, must have seen women and children walking about at the railway station platforms being unable to get suitable accommodation. The train has arrived, and there is no Railway official to look after them; to see whether they are properly accommodated or not. Adult passengers are able to look after themselves if they are put to any discomfort or inconvenience. But old women and little children without their parents find it very difficult to find accommodation. Sometimes the children have their parents with them, but they are too old to find suitable accommodation. In such cases I think it is incumbent upon the Railway Department, which is the carrier, to see that their customers are properly accommodated in the carriages. If a passenger goes to the station master, he asks him to go to the platform inspector. If he goes to the platform inspector, he asks him to go to the ticket collector, and the poor passenger does not know how to steer himself. He has paid you the money and he claims that he should be given a proper seat, and it is incumbent on the railway authorities to discharge their obligation. If the Chief Commissioner of Railways will give me some sort of undertaking, that he will do something effective in this direction, I shall withdraw my motion at once.

Mr. C. D. M. Hindley: Sir, there are two points which occur to me in regard to this suggestion. One is that I do not think that, when a passenger takes a ticket, the Railway Administration is necessarily responsible for guiding his erring footsteps from the point where he steps on to the station premises up to the place where he gets into the carriage. We assume that the ordinary passenger has a certain amount of intelligence and he can get the information if he wants to as to where his train is and how he has to get into it. But the larger problem which I know Dr. Nand Lal is referring to is a difficult one, especially at large stations, and in the hurly-burly of getting into the train I appreciate the fact that it is very difficult for inexperienced people to find their way about. On larger stations, therefore, we have appointed on certain railways a class of Passenger Superintendents as is known to many Members of this House. These have proved very useful in some cases, in other cases they have not come up to the requirements altogether. I think that is a matter which the Railway Administrations will see to.

Now the other point that I want to come to is this. You are asking me to cut down expenditure on staff. At the same time questions are fired at me as to why more staff is not employed for looking after passengers, why more staff is not put on to stop pilfering and to stop corruption. Now, Sir, I am not able to do impossibilities. I will do my best, and certainly every Railway Administration will do its best under the very great difficulties which are being imposed upon them now owing to retrenchments. But we cannot have luxuries in the matter of passengers travelling if we are going to cut our working expenses down to the very lowest limit. I will take note of what Dr. Nand Lal has said on the wider aspect of the question with regard to larger stations, and I am quite sure that the Railway Administrations will do what they can in the matter.

Dr. Nand Lal : Since an understanding has been given, and I believe that it is a very sincere one, I beg to withdraw my motion.

Railway Board.

Mr. J. Chaudhuri: Sir, my motion is as follows:

"That the provision for establishment of the Railway Board under sub-head 12—Miscellaneous Railway Expenditure India under the Head B—Railway Revenue Account (page 78) Appendix B, be reduced by Rs. 100."

This is a motion for a nominal reduction of the establishment of the Railway Board. My object was to elicit some information from the Honourable Mr. Innes: I understood that the Railway Board was in a state of flux and he has given us some answer to it already and he further mentioned that the matter is under the consideration of His Excellency the Governor General in Council. If he can give us any further information I shall be very happy. We have cast upon him a very great responsibility by passing our Resolution with regard to such an important Railway as the East Indian Railway being taken over by the State. In order that the State may take it over and carry on the business efficiently, it is essential that the reorganization should take place as early as possible, and the Honourable the Member in charge ought to be in a position to enlighten us on it during the Simla Session. So I will not press that point.

But I would draw the attention of the Honourable the Chief Commissioner to a fact, that the Incheape Committee has mentioned. This Report is indeed very valuable in many ways. But in certain respects it

1 P.M. seems to be a little hasty. One of the items that the Incheape Committee mention is that the Railways showing the worst results relatively from 1913-14 are the North-Western, the Eastern Bengal State Railway and the Oudh and Rohilkhand. I have looked into the history of Railways and I find the Eastern Bengal State Railway is not at all a losing concern. I do not wish to refer in detail to the fact that it has raised its capital in recent years. I will put it generally to the Chief Commissioner that its capital has been raised to the extent of nearly 13 or 14 crores or more. If was, 10 years ago, only 27 crores, now it is 41 crores or more.

Mr. President: We cannot discuss railway finance now.

Mr. J. Chaudhuri: What I say is that this Railway is not getting the advantage of the additional capital, for this reason. Sara Bridge has been put up at a cost of 3½ crores, and the broad-gauge has been extended for about 50 miles beyond. That entailed an enormous outlay of capital. But as the Honourable Mr. Innes said the other day, its profits depend on the traffic in jute,—that is, from the jute area from Jalpaiguri down to Sara Bridge. And one of the reasons for the building of the Sara Bridge and the broad-gauge line was to obviate the necessity of transshipment. But now that we have spent this capital of about 13 or 14 crores, still we are precisely in the same position as before.

Mr. President: The Honourable Member should raise this point over the vote to the Eastern Bengal State Railway itself.

Mr. J. Chaudhuri: I do not raise it here, Sir. I just draw attention to it and will finish soon. I would not like to take up the time of the House again. But I say that if this line is to reap the full advantage of that capital, the broad gauge line should be pushed up to Jalpaiguri if not to Siliguri; to curtail the capital expenditure now will result in a loss. So these are matters . . .

Mr. President: The Honourable Member must pay attention to what I said to him just now. This should be raised on the Eastern Bengal State Railway. I cannot go back on my decision.

Mr. J. Uhaudhuri: I hope the matter will be gone into by the Chief Commissioner and the Honourable Mr. Innes, so I withdraw this motion.

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary: Before the Honourable Member is allowed to withdraw, Sir, may I ask the attention of the House to a definite question of importance under Miscellaneous Railway Expenditure in Exhibit B and that is with regard to audit and control. There was a question I asked some time ago as to whether it was intended in any way to relax the audit with regard to railway accounts. Some people are under the belief that there is a move in that direction. If that is so, it will be extremely unfortunate. Railway audit such as it is is good, but Government audit should on no account be relaxed. Then, Sir, on page 79 there is a reference to the Indian Railway Accounts Committee about which there is no allotment. I do not know quite what that means. If it is a question of the Railway Advisory Board in some way, I want to ask as to whether means could be found for making the deliberations of all Railway Committees accessible at least to the Members of this Assembly.

Mr. O. D. M. Hindley: There is only one point there, Sir, that I think I need refer to. I presume the Honourable Member is referring to page 79 of Appendix B—he said Exhibit B. The Indian Railway Accounts Committee was a departmental Committee appointed for a definite object, to look into certain matters in regard to accounts—I see that it is mentioned in the Report of the Retrenchment Committee. As far as I remember,—I am not quite acquainted with the facts,—but, as far as I remember, it completed its work in 1921-22 and therefore there is no provision for it in the current year's budget. With regard to the relaxation of audit on railway accounts, I do not think, Sir, there is any such proposal and I do not think the Government will entertain any proposal to relax in any way whatever the audit over railway accounts.

Mr. S. O. Shahani (Sind Jagirdars and Zamindars: Landholders): Sir, I beg to move:

“That the demand under the head ‘Railways’ be reduced by Rs. 5 crores.”

Since this appears to be a large amount, with your permission, Sir, I would reduce it to one crore and a half. There has been apparent to me a feeling in the House, nay a conviction, that the expenditure under this head has not been cut to the last limit. So far as I have been able to understand the opinion of my Honourable friends, I feel that this proposal of mine will find favour with them. (Mr. R. A. Spence: “No, no.”) I have already spoken on this subject and I therefore do not propose to inflict another speech on the House. I merely formally move it.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: I wish to move my amendment to this amendment of Mr. Shahani's, Sir,—my amendment No. 177.

Mr. President: You had better take the Honourable Member's instead. It is almost the same thing.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: Mine is for 1 crore and 14 lakhs, Sir. 40 is a mistake.

Mr. President (to Mr. Shahani): Will the Honourable Member withdraw in favour of Mr. Rangachariar's amendment?

Mr. S. O. Shahani: Very well, Sir, I withdraw.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: I beg to move:

“That the demand under the head ‘Railways’ be reduced by Rs. 1,14,00,000.”

Sir, my object in reducing this general demand by 1 crore and 14 lakhs

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas: In addition to the 50 lakhs?

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: Yes, that is already carried. My object is not to cut down the actual expenditure under the various heads which Honourable Members will find on page 29 of the Demands. They may make reductions here and there under Miscellaneous or they may find funds otherwise. I point out to the Government a ready method which it is perfectly open to them to adopt and I hope they will adopt it and if they adopt it they need not cut down the expenses under these heads. I am quite aware that against the 4 crores and 59 lakhs recommended by the Inchcape Committee they have already accepted a reduction of more than 4 crores and 59 lakhs, so that we have no complaint to make against the Railway Department that they have not carried out the recommendations of the Inchcape Committee, although these recommendations are still indefinite and hazy to me. But I take it, this is not the time to quarrel about it and I dare say we will soon understand it. I said, Sir, it is easy for the Government to find this money without in any way impairing the efficiency of the work next year. If Honourable Members will turn to page 7 of the Railway Memorandum circulated to us, there is a very handy entry of 1 crore and 21 lakhs which, by providing for interest for one year, reduces itself to 1 crore and 14 lakhs, which is readily available in the hands of the Government. And that is why I say, without in any way impairing the efficiency of the working, Government will find a method of recouping this expenditure. It is only a pen transfer which can be done in a second and without any effort they can find this money. I commend this motion for the acceptance of this House.

Mr. P. P. Ginwala (Burma: Non-European): Sir, I support generally the vote for reduction but I am afraid I cannot accept the reason that my Honourable friend, Mr. Rangachariar, has given for the acceptance of his motion. It is the worst way of financing that I can think of. If this method is sound, why not finance the whole of your Budget for borrowing money in this way to pay off an annuity which is nothing more than payment of a sinking fund plus interest. There are various other items here of this nature. It will be the easiest thing in the world for us to go and borrow money and reduce our deficit. I am surprised, Sir, that even such a distinguished authority as my Honourable friend, Sir Montagu Webb, is in favour of this financial method. It will be much more straightforward of us either to leave this deficit uncovered or to say that the deficit should be financed directly out of loan. But you are camouflaging your argument. You are like the ostrich hiding your head in the sand, and just because you cannot see anything, you imagine that nobody notices anything. That, I submit, is no ground whatsoever for making this reduction. But I put it on the general ground. I am not so satisfied as my friend, Mr. Rangachariar, seems to be that the Government has given full effect to the Inchcape Committee's recommendations. What the Government has done is simply this. They have no doubt, as I said yesterday, reduced the Budget by Rs. 4,50,00,000 as compared with the budget estimate of 1922-23. But this is how they have done it. They have deducted Rs. 3,00,00,000 which in ordinary circumstances is in the nature of capital expenditure—from the revenue programme. The other economies consist merely of economy in fuel added to Rs. 50 lakhs already saved by the Great Indian Peninsula Railway. That is how I account for these Rs. 4½ crores. If this is what the Inchcape Committee intended to do, I submit, that the Inchcape Committee has not done anything whatsoever, for practical purposes and it is no good our talking about the recommendations for economy that have been made by the Inchcape Committee. The plain truth of the matter is that the Honourable Members on the Government Bench ~~could themselves have effected these economies without the Inchcape Committee ever sitting~~, if that was really all that the Inchcape Committee intended to do. There is no economy in the general administration of Railways, if this is the method in which they want to give effect to their recommendations—I ask the House, to examine the way in which Government say they have given effect to the Inchcape Committee's recommendations. There is no element of permanency in this method. The Rs. 3 crores which they have deducted from programme revenue only applies to this year. It means that in the next year they will come forward and say "These Rs. 3 crores were deducted last year, because the Inchcape Committee said so. Let us have them back. As for the rest we have already saved one crore on fuel, and the Great Indian Peninsula has already saved Rs. 50 lakhs." I submit, Sir, that this is not treating the Inchcape Committee with respect. That is not what they could possibly have intended. That is what the Railway Administrations ought to have done themselves without the help of the Inchcape Committee, and I maintain, that there is a further Rs. 3 or 4 crores which can be deducted if the Inchcape Committee is treated with that respect which it deserves. This is camouflaging the figures to put it plainly. This deduction does not come from the general administration of Railways at all. It is merely postponing the evil day to the extent of 3 or 3½ crores. If that is what the House understands by economy, I have nothing to say. But if the House insists upon permanent economy in the administration of Railways, then it must ask for the further reduction, if not of 4 crores, as I asked for, to the limited extent proposed by my friend, Mr. Rangachariar, not for the reasons given by him but for the reasons I have given now. I have given them in a straightforward fashion. I do not wish to blind myself to the fact that if you accept the amendment for the reason that my Honourable friend has given, you will be simply throwing dust into your own eyes, but if you look at the position in a plain business like fashion, you must insist upon a further cut being made in the general expenditure on Railways. I support this amendment.

[Mr. P. P. Ginwala.]

Captain E. V. Sassoon (Bombay Millowners' Association: Indian Commerce): Sir, after the discussion yesterday Mr. Ginwala pointed out to me that he was not satisfied that the cuts that have been made really bore out the recommendations of the Inchcape Committee and at some little trouble, with the help of a Member of Government who had studied them,

I went through these accounts and I quite agree up to a point with Mr. Ginwala that the final recommendations of the Inchcape Committee do not actually carry out the detailed recommendations paragraph by paragraph. I take it that what happened is this. In the paragraphs, the Inchcape Committee recommend a cut on the 1922-23 Budget in the programme of revenue expenditure of Rs. 2½ crores, another cut of 1 crore on coal and Rs. 50 lakhs already cut by the Great Indian Peninsula on salaries and wages and an additional crore which the Committee thought could be cut by other Railways. Besides these, I see on page 70 an item of Rs. 23 lakhs, the difference between Rs. 81 lakhs and Rs. 104 lakhs which they consider could be made up by general tightening up of control. That is to say, we have a total recommendation of Rs. 5,23 lakhs, against which, on page 77 they advise Rs. 4½ crores, a difference of Rs. 73 lakhs. Now, Sir, I take it that after consideration and probably protests made by railway officials they decided to recommend Rs. 4½ crores, adding as you will notice a rider that they consider that other savings could be made. Well, Sir, one of my reasons for suggesting yesterday that the extra Rs. ½ crore should be made in spite of the Government provision for lag was because of these additional cuts. So, what we have really done is this. We have suggested a total cut of Rs. 4½ crores allowing this Rs. 73 lakhs as lag. If the Railway Administration is able during the year to catch up all that Rs. 73 lakhs, that will, in my opinion, enable them to give us the full Rs. 4½ crores. If we look at the lag, instead of having Rs. 50 lakhs they now have Rs. 73 lakhs. I think it is that Rs. 73 lakhs, which is the real amount recommended in the pages of the report and not in the summary which Mr. Ginwala has noticed but has not been able to calculate correctly. On the main motion which we are now discussing, we are asked to reduce the grant by Rs. 114 lakhs. Mr. Rangachariar's point is a sound one, because, Sir, the total amount of the grant is Rs. 67,47,00,000 less Rs. 3 crores, that is Rs. 64,47,00,000 less the Rs. 50 lakhs, which, roughly speaking, gives Rs. 64 crores. We have now got to the point of cutting the grant down to Rs. 64 crores. We agree that under the Inchcape Committee's recommendations we should give Rs. 64 crores for Working Expenses and for surplus profits. Therefore Mr. Rangachariar is quite correct in opposing the reduction of Rs. 64 crores by another Rs. 1,14,00,000. What Mr. Rangachariar is really doing—he has approached it in an indirect way—he is logically pursuing the course that was initiated this morning, of suggesting to the Government that they should consider seriously the motion that was raised by Sir Montagu Webb yesterday and which was ruled out of order. The suggestion of Mr. Rangachariar is that they should consider that suggestion and that that would be a method by which the Government could get money to pay for this cut of Rs. 114 lakhs. I personally would have preferred to have followed the advice which you gave us this morning. I would have preferred to have made the cut by the nominal amount of one rupee so as to use that as moral pressure on the Government to seriously consider the advice of capitalising these annuities. Still, there is no reason, as the Leader of the House mentioned this morning, why we should not make a cut of the total amount instead of a nominal amount. I think the feeling on this side of the House is strongly towards capitalising these annuities. I think if it had not been for that feeling we should not have had this motion before us to-day. Mr. Ginwala has argued probably from the point of view of Sir Basil Blackett on the disadvantages of capitalising these annuities. Some of us take the point of view that if you purchase an article, whether it is a railway or a mill, and if you decide to pay a certain amount in cash and a certain amount is spread over a period this amount could have been capitalised and borrowed, and for that reason, as the State cannot make both ends meet, we suggest capitalising some of these liabilities which are on the border line of capital and revenue,—we say put these over to capital. Let us spread the paying of that capital amount over a further period,—that is what we should be doing by borrowing—so as to give temporary relief I am not saying I like it. I am not saying that I would not have much preferred to put as much as possible to revenue, but we are looking forward to the Finance Bill when we shall have to supply the money for the paying of these grants. We see before us the proposal of the Finance Member in respect of salt. We do not like that. We find no other, at any rate, feasible suggestion put forward to replace that demand. We are therefore trying to cut our coats according to our cloth, and although I agree it is to a certain extent juggling, by a mere book entry, I think if we are even straining the point a little so as to balance our budget without having to refuse to pass a very unpopular measure we should do so. Therefore, I hope that the Finance Member may help us if not by taking this amount and putting it into capital, by showing some other means of getting at the same result.

[Captain E. V. Sassoon.]

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: Sir, after the speech that we have just heard I think it is quite unnecessary for me to argue the details of the thing behind the thing. This is one of those cases where as the Irishman said it is not the thing that is the thing but it is the thing that is behind the thing that is the thing. The last speaker said "We cannot balance our budget, we do not know how to make the budget balance and therefore let us fake it." That is what is being proposed. It is perfectly absurd to say that there is any real difference between charging to capital a sum which on certain arguments may or may not be on the border line and saying we are budgeting for a deficit. To pretend one thing when you are doing another is absurd. One of the objects we had in view in aiming at a balanced budget was to improve our credit. You will do much more damage to your credit if you fake a balance than if you budget for a deficit. This particular question about the capital portion of an annuity can be argued up and down, other things can be argued up and down. The Railway accounts by common consent are not in as good a condition as they might be. We ought to have undoubtedly a provision for reserve fund. We ought to have probably a depreciation fund. The only provision in these accounts which is of that nature is this small annuity and a small sinking fund in addition. It is the same in regard to our general accounts. We have totally insufficient sinking funds. Outside our general accounts we have—I have referred to it already—we can see no reasonable ground for not charging to revenue an amount which is charged against capital. Bastable has been quoted against me. I am not sure he has not been misquoted but I should like to say I entirely disagree with Bastable if he said anything of the sort. I should be very sorry if Bastable wrote anything of the kind. I should also like to draw the attention of the House to another technical point. This is a motion to reduce the voted portion of the Railway demand—the only portion with which this House is directly concerned—by Rs. 114 lakhs. If you carry that motion, that is a direction to Government to spend Rs. 114 lakhs less on the voted portion. I was rather shocked to hear it suggested that the Government can do it by underspending somewhere else, that is to say, that the Government has a right to spend more money than the House votes for it. Is that what you really mean? That it is a perfectly decent thing that we should be gaily spending more than the House has appropriated, on the expectation (A Voice: "Adjust or re-adjust?") that you can come back later on and ask for a supplementary vote? (A Voice: "Under-spend the non-voted.") If you under-spend the non-voted you are appropriating a certain amount to voted expenditure. If you invite me to over-spend what you have already given me you are inviting me to over-spend subject to under-spending the non-voted portion. Then you are inviting me to misappropriate (A Voice: "We sanction it by a general Resolution") in the hope that after the event I will get your sanction. I am taking this technical point because if the House is going to assert its authority to control the expenditure of Government it must insist on this golden rule that the Government shall not spend money above what the House has appropriated if it can possibly avoid doing so, in advance of the appropriation of that money by the House. And to suggest gaily at this stage that we should go ahead and by saving on non-voted portion misappropriate money (A Voice: "No, no")—that is what you are suggesting, I submit, Sir, that it is what is being suggested Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: If I may explain, keep it there and come to us and say "Here is the money and please allow us to spend it."

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: I am perfectly content to accept Mr. Rangachariar's definition of misappropriation. I should like to add this one remark. Government cannot accept the suggestion that any portion of these annuities should be transferred to capital. If a cut is made on that ground it will not be a cut which will have any influence on the total of the deficit as viewed by the Government.

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas: I do not know whether the House really is asking the Finance Member to fake up the accounts in order to produce a balanced budget, because if the House is doing that, when it suggests that the annuities should be charged to capital it is in very good company. I may for the information of the Finance Member quote here certain passages from Government documents themselves. I just want to point out to the Honourable the Finance Member that during all these years this point was not raised. From 1900 to 1920 except 1908-09 I think when we had a deficit we had years of fat surpluses. And when you have a year of surplus you do not mind its being chargeable to revenue, but on many occasions it has been pointed out

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: May I rise on a point of personal explanation? I think it will help to shorten the discussion. As I said, you can argue this question up and down but whatever we do about this particular point it will not alter the general fact that in my view we shall be attempting to fake instead of make a budget balance. You can take one single item by itself and say that it should not be chargeable to revenue, and you can argue on a dozen other items that they should not be chargeable to capital. As regards the statement that this question was not raised till 1920, I would point out that it was actually raised in 1906, as the correspondence which was circulated last year will explain. It arises now in a deficit year, because you are attempting to fake a balance when you have not got a balance.

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas: If you read the General Administration Report of 1910 you will find it there stated in paragraph 4 of the Report that the financial result of the working of State railways was a net gain of Rs. 298.75 lakhs. This result, however, and I want the Finance Member to notice this particularly, is arrived at after inclusion in the charges against revenue of a sum of Rs. 13.108 lakhs representing the portion of annuity payments and redemption of capital. Omitting this item which is not properly a revenue charge, the result is a net gain of 430 lakhs, but I do not merely stop here. You take the Financial Statement introduced by Sir William Meyer in the year 1914-15. There again he says: "Admitting that annuity payments are really of a capital nature amounting as they do to the discharge of debt." So there again Sir William Meyer himself admits that while in a surplus year you can make them chargeable to revenue, there is justification in making it chargeable to capital. So after all the House is not demanding anything like faked accounts. All that we are demanding is that these annuities should be chargeable to capital. I can quote paragraphs from report after report to strengthen the argument that we have advanced here. I do not know wherefrom my Honourable friend, Mr. Ginwala, brings his knowledge of finance, but in very many countries this practice is prevalent and the annuities are chargeable to capital. The late Finance Member, Sir William Meyer, has himself admitted it. Your own reports have admitted it that these are really a charge on capital. I will be very glad if the Government can cut down at the instance of my friend, Mr. Ginwala, a sum of one crore and 14 lakhs from the voted item. No one would be more pleased than myself but in order to secure a balanced budget, I think you would be perfectly justified in doing what your own past Finance Members and your own Administration reports have recommended should be done.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: If it is a question of direct vote whether annuities should be charged to capital account I would have no hesitation in agreeing respectfully with the Finance Member and disagreeing with my friends on this side of the House. But, Sir, I am going to give my vote to my Honourable friends, although I do not agree with them as regards their contentions. As was pointed out by the Honourable the Finance Member yesterday, the practice in England has been since 1906, since I believe Mr. Asquith became Chancellor of the Exchequer, not to charge annuities to the capital account. What would be the effect of charging annuities to the capital account? The result would be that you go to the world's market and say that as we are not able to pay from the revenues what we have been paying as annuities, we want to borrow; and what would be the state of your credit? Certainly you will have no credit in the world's market if you tell them that you are not able to pay from the revenue account what you have been paying hitherto: it would be mischievous and it would bring down the credit of this country if we say we are not able to do what we have been doing hitherto, namely, to charge to revenue these annuities which have been paid for a long time; but I am in agreement with my friends that this amount can come from the general accounts and therefore I shall vote for the proposition that has been put forward by Mr. Rangachariar.

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary: Reference has been made to the correspondence in 1906, which was circulated last year. Unfortunately I have not got a copy of the correspondence before me and I must make very guarded reference to it, but my recollection is that it was made abundantly clear that what was asked by the Government of India at that time was considered as the correct mode of keeping accounts and that could not be followed because of what was considered to be the law on the subject. There is some doubt whether the law is to that effect or not. But if that is the law, there would be no difficulty in changing the law. Fake and misappropriation are strong terms, even though they may be lightly used and I am sure neither this House nor the other House where the term was first used are going to be party to anything of that kind. If we vote for it, as I hope we shall, it will not be by way of being a party to fake. Supposing the whole of the amount that has been devoted to annuities had to be paid in the year in which the rights in the railways were taken over by the Government, what would you have done? Would you not have raised a loan? Instead of doing that you have been spreading over that loan on a number of annuities. In the ordinary course of things and if annuities were not then in vogue, you would have raised a loan and will have been paying the interest all these years. I admit that what goes by the term annuities may be divided into two parts, namely, capital portion payable during the year and interest portion. There may be differentiation with regard to that; but it cannot be soundly and legitimately urged that the whole of that is chargeable to revenue. Well, the Honourable the Finance Member has shuddered at the idea of professors becoming Financial Members. It is not a new thing in the world for Professors to have risen to higher posts than that. One of the corridor aphorisms, if I may so call it, is that when a civilian financier has bungled the finances of the Government of India expert financiers have come in and there is a variant of that aphorism also, viz., where experts have bungled, it is the civilians that have got the matters straight. There is room for legitimate difference of opinion and I do not think that the application of strong terms will be justifiable if the House decides that what ought to have been paid out of loan, on which interest is paid, has really been spread over a number of payments in the shape of annuities consisting of portions of capital and also of interest. That being the state of things, I do not think that the House would be wrong (if it is permissible to do so under the ruling proposed this morning), in voting for the reduction that has been proposed by Mr. Rangachariar. I should be free to vote for it, in spite of what I said yesterday. My observations yesterday were confined to working expenses and I did not believe in crippling the railway administration so far as the working expenses are concerned, after imposing fresh burdens upon it. But if there are other ways open to us, which we may legitimately fall back upon by way of reducing the deficit, we are entirely justified in resorting to them.

Sir Montagu Webb: Sir, there is one point on which I should like to say a few words. I trust that this House will not be misled by the expression "fake". With all respects to the Honourable the Finance Member, I think we can take it that the payment of capital liabilities out of loan money is not "faking" the accounts.

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: I do not think that was what I said. What I said was that this question could be argued up and down on its merits and that it was part of a very much bigger question. With regard to this question whether annuities should be charged to capital or not, what I did say was that it was impossible, in the circumstances of this year, having regard to the other condition of our Budget, having regard to the absence of reserve funds and other things and the presence of the Delhi capital expenditure and other things quite illegitimate, to pretend to have a balanced budget by saying this item should be charged to capital.

[Sir Basil Blackett.]

Sir Montagu Webb: It is a very common device in the discussion of matters of account, when you are making an amendment or attempting to make an amendment of which perhaps your own adversaries do not approve, for your opponents to say that you are "tinkering" with the accounts or "doctoring" the accounts. We were told to-day that, if we put capital expenditure to loan on this particular occasion, we shall be "faking" the accounts. Well, I submit, Sir, I have dealt with accounts—private and public—for 30 years and I know far too much about accounts—to be affected by the suggestion that any particular course of this kind would be "faking" the accounts.

I would like to recall to the House what are the facts of this case. I think it was about 1880, that Government first exercised its option of purchasing one of the Indian railways under the option in its contract. In those days to have had to pay for this railway out and out would have involved the raising of a loan of 26 millions sterling, possibly over 30 millions sterling if we take the premium on the value of the shares. Now, 30 or 40 years ago the idea of the Government of India raising a loan of 30 millions sterling was unthinkable. Why, only six or seven years ago, when I ventured to suggest that the Government of India should raise a loan of twenty millions sterling towards the war, the suggestion was received with universal ridicule and I was called the "wild man of finance" or something of that kind. Now, during the latter half of the last century there was a great vogue in favour of annuities. People at large, professors in colleges, financiers and others, all commenced to talk about annuities. People began to discover what a splendid thing it would be if you could pay off the whole of the National Debt by way of annuities. They said "Why should we go on paying interest on our National Debt year after year and, having paid interest for 40 or 50 years, or more, find that the debt remains at the end of that period just the same? Let us turn all our national liabilities into annuities." It was at this time that the Secretary of State for India had somehow or other to make a bandabast for purchasing the East Indian Railway. It is not unnatural that the idea of settling this difficult problem by way of annuities received favour, and the East Indian Railway was purchased by way of annuities. Unfortunately, the conclusion of the public was such that nobody liked annuities and, as the years went on, the idea of turning our debts into annuities completely failed because, however suitable they are from the point of view of the State, the public do not like annuities, because each payment that the public receives in the form of an annuity means that they are receiving not only their interest but also a little bit of their capital back. Of course, you ought to re-invest that little bit of capital if you are a wise person, but people who receive an annuity are liable to spend it all and not re-invest that little bit of their capital as they should do. The consequence was that annuities for the repayment of Public Debt have never been popular. But the fact remains that in its essence an annuity is the repayment of a portion of the capital and the interest. Now, in this particular case we are paying annually some five crores under the heading of Railway annuities; of that 5 crores about one quarter is capital and the rest is interest. Now, Sir, if our finances are in a thoroughly sound condition and we have a handsome surplus, there could be nothing wiser than to repay out that capital out of that surplus; but this coming year we shall not have any surplus; yet we are still invited to make a capital payment from revenue in spite of our deficit. I do not think that this House can be surprised that, in the circumstances, the suggestion has been put forward that we should, at least for one year, make this capital payment out of loan money, rather than out of revenue, which we have not got. That is the simple matter of the case and I naturally rise to say, Sir, that such a financial transaction appears to me, with some 30 years' financial experience behind me, to be a thoroughly sound proposition. I repudiate the suggestion that the House would be "faking" the accounts, if they made such an amendment.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: I must apologise for rising at this moment, when the House is suffering from the fact that the memory of its breakfast is long past, and its hopes of lunch seem infinitely dim; but I think we ought to get our minds a little clearer on the two avenues of thought which have been moving the House for the last half hour. We do not any of us want to base a vote either for or against a motion on matters of verbiage or expression. We want to get to the substance and we also want to be quite honest with ourselves. Now, here you have a motion which calls for a reduction of over a crore of rupees on the voted expenditure. It is supported on two grounds. First of all, there are certain advocates for it who say that we can reduce our railway working expenses by that amount, and they will vote that reduction on that account. There are others who believe that we have made all the reduction possible in our working expenses, but nevertheless they are going to vote for this motion on an entirely different ground which I need not now describe to the House. I say this is a matter on which the House needs to be honest with itself. I do not think it is possible that these two schools of thought can either honestly or logically unite on the same platform. The process savours too distinctly of a desire to refuse supply at any cost, in spite of any argument and indeed without reason. Now let us assume that the amendment is passed. Yet, what I take to be the larger part of the House agrees that we cannot really cut our working expenses any lower and that it would be dangerous to do so. (Several cries of dissent.) Yes, I hear murmurs to the contrary, but I have heard also speeches in the sense I am now voicing. There are undoubtedly—and I merely quote what has been said here this morning—a large number of the Members of this House, and some Members who are not lacking in business experience, who hold that we have already reduced our working expenses to the lowest possible figure. Then we have got to make this money up from elsewhere, or we shall not earn our full railway revenue. Here comes in the second school of thought. They say "You have your non-voted section, transfer a certain sum from that section to capital or loan, and you will be able to find the money." We can only do that if we are honestly convinced that this would be the proper course to take, and if, after being convinced that that is the proper course to take, we could come back to the House with confidence that, after we had effected that operation, the House would vote the necessary crore and a quarter to replace this cut in our working expenses. For, after all, the working expenses must be met. I say that we need, first of all, the conviction that we can properly effect this transfer and, secondly, a certain guarantee that if we come back to the House, they would supply us with the requisite crore and a quarter to replace working expenses. Now, can we with honesty to ourselves, work on that conviction? Sir Basil Blackett has admitted that the proposed transfer is one of those questions which you can argue up and down. That is perfectly obvious. It has been argued up and it has been argued down in the past; and argued both ways again to-day. The point on which we lay stress is this,—that whatever the rights of the case may be, though it is true that in the past the expenditure has at times been described as of a capital nature; though it is equally true, on the other hand, that there are many of us who believe that railway annuities being in the nature of a sinking fund should properly be a revenue charge; but balancing those two arguments or putting them both aside, if you like, we lay greatest stress on this, that this expenditure has been charged for a large number of years on revenue, and on what appeared at the time to be on reasonable grounds.

[Sir Malcolm Hailey.]

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas: In surplus years.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: Not entirely last year, if I may point out to the Honourable Mr. Dwarkadas, it was paid in a deficit year. He himself raised the point that it should not be paid in a deficit year and when I pointed out that it was after all in the nature of a Sinking Fund he very handsomely withdrew his objection.

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas: Sir, I rise to make an explanation. Last year the Honourable Member said the point would be considered, whether in a deficit year it should be charged to revenue, and on that I did not move the motion.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: At any rate, the result of it was that whether through lack of pressure on the part of Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas or for some other reason, it was paid in a deficit year, and it has been paid in previous deficit years in the same way.

We are applying continually to the outside world for money. An important item on which we must lay stress is our financial credit. We do not wish to present to the outside world the fact that for a number of years we have charged this considerable item against revenue but now, finding ourselves in a difficulty, we propose to pay it from our loan accounts. We do not consider that that would redound to our credit. Financial critics might say—"That is all very well in itself. It may be that there are arguments on both sides. It may be that from a book-keeping point of view or from a commercial point of view, this may not be an entirely incorrect transaction." As I said, there is something to be said on both sides; but they might say—"Why have you never adjusted the whole of your accounts on this basis? Why is it you take this particular item and charge it to loan account? Why do you not re-adjust the whole of your accounts in order to bring properly against your revenue account the many items which you are now spending from your loan account and which, on a more strict commercial basis, you should charge to revenue?" The question is awkward and inconvenient. We cannot deny that there is a certain number of items of no inconsiderable amount, which we are now incurring from loan accounts. Our justification for maintaining them in the present circumstances is—firstly, that we have done it in the past and that is a kind of justification in itself—that is, it at least keeps our accounts consistent in the eyes of the outside world; it knows exactly where they are in relation to the past. Secondly, we shall not be able, until we have re-cast our whole commercial and other transactions on a book-keeping basis, to effect the transfer. That is our case. Do not let us go into minute arguments as to whether this particular item can or cannot be charged to loan account. Let us bear in mind only what effect this transfer might have on the outside world from which we have to raise our money. They will say—"Are your finances in such a sound condition after all, if when you are temporarily pinched you have to take what has always been an item of the revenue account, and purely for purposes of convenience now charge it to loan account?" My own impression is that if one of the commercial institutions to which Sir Montagu Webb has referred, and with which he himself has been honourably connected in the past, if it were to do the same, then I do not say that it would be charged with any kind of misconduct, but I do say that its financial reputation, when they came to raise fresh money, might be impugned in the money market.

Mr. N. M. Samarth: I am sorry, Sir, to detain the House at this late hour, but as reference has been made to the subject as to what is to be done when the State is in such a state of financial stringency that it must keep its accounts in a particular way, I will again read another passage, a short passage, from Bastable on "Public Finance", who is my great authority. If I had to take my lessons in Public Finance from Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar or Mr. Ginwala, I would have to burn up all my text-books on the subject.

Mr. P. P. Ginwala: But from the Honourable the Finance Minister?

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas: There is a great deal of difference between you and the Finance Minister.

Mr. N. M. Samarth: Now, Sir, the substance of that passage—I will give the reference, it is in Book 5, Chapter 5,—the substance of those two parts of paragraph 2, is that the State is in a different position from a private individual in the case of loans and borrowings, and the passage says that in the case of the State there are some special features of public economy that give a peculiar colour to its borrowing, more particularly in the case of the Central Government. The sources of individual wealth reside in property or person or capacity to earn. It is from them that all private income comes; but the State's revenue is mainly derivative. It can compel the tax-payer to supply funds. Now comes the passage to which I refer:

"The method of borrowing is therefore naturally suggested, where heavy taxation is for the moment undesirable and is further encouraged by the fact that public credit has the advantage of resting on a broader and more enduring basis. So far as a public domain is in existence, loans may be regarded as virtually mortgages raised on its security, as many of the early loans were in form as well as in fact."

He again proceeds:

"A second peculiarity of public economy is the difficulty of sudden retrenchment in its case."

And, consequently, he says:

"when under any given state of things, a deficit is imminent and new taxes are not for the moment available, borrowing is necessarily prescribed."

Well, I again say, I prefer to have my lessons in Public Finance from Bastable than from Mr. Ginwala or Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar. The question specifically dealt with by him. Here we are faced with this necessity.

Mr. P. P. Ginwala: Sir, I rise to make a personal explanation. What I said was that if you said you were going to borrow in order to cover your deficit, I should have no objection for it would be a more straightforward course. What I was objecting to was the method.

Mr. N. M. Samarth: Again I say that Mr. Ginwala has some curious notions of public finance. When we say it is to be transferred into capital account, it means that it comes out of borrowing. Sir, this is not the only item that we ask to be transferred. There are several amendments of which notice has been given by me of the same character. I made the matter clear in my speech on the Budget. I am going to insist on the thing being done. It is not faking accounts but keeping accounts properly. It is improper book-keeping against which this Professor has protested, and he has said that if you ask any Department to make retrenchments you may take it that that Department will not make the retrenchments. If it is a complicated undertaking which the State undertakes, it is liable to resort to a bad or defective system of book-keeping. I can read you another passage to that effect. But there is no need to do so. I insist upon purity of book-keeping in the Government of India; it is not faked, it is proper book-keeping I insist upon and I trust that the House will carry it.

The motion that the demand be further reduced by Rs. 1,14,00,000 was put and the Assembly divided:

AYES—67.

Abdul Majid, Sheikh.
Abdul Quadir, Maulvi.
Abdul Rahman, Munshi.
Abdulla, Mr. S. M.
Abul Kasem, Maulvi.
Agarwala, Lala Girdharilal.
Ahmed, Mr. K.
Aiyer, Sir P. S. Sivaswamy.
Asjad-ul-lah, Maulvi Miyan.
Ayyangar, Mr. M. G. M.
Ayyar, Mr. T. V. Seshagiri.
Bagde, Mr. K. G.
Barodawalla, Mr. S. K.
Barua, Mr. D. C.
Basu, Mr. J. N.
Bhargava, Pandit J. L.
Bishambhar Nath, Mr.
Chaudhuri, Mr. J.
Clark, Mr. G. S.
Dalal, Sardar B. A.
Das, Babu B. S.
Gajjan Singh, Sardar Bahadur.
Ghose, Mr. S. C.
Ginwala, Mr. P. P.
Girdhardas, Mr. N.
Gour, Dr. H. S.
Gulab Singh, Sardar.
Hussanally, Mr. W. M.
Ikramullah Khan, Raja Mohd.
Iswar Saran, Munshi.
Jamali, Mr. A. O.
Jamnadas Dwarkadas, Mr.
Jatkar, Mr. B. H. R.
Jejeebhoy, Sir Jamsetjee.

Joshi, Mr. N. M.
Kamat, Mr. B. S.
Lakshmi Narayan Lal, Mr.
Latthe, Mr. A. B.
Mahadeo Prasad, Munshi.
Man Singh, Bhai.
Misra, Mr. B. N.
Mudaliar, Mr. S.
Mukherjee, Mr. J. N.
Mukherjee, Mr. T. P.
Nag, Mr. G. C.
Nand Lal, Dr.
Nayar, Mr. K. M.
Neogy, Mr. K. C.
Pyari Lal, Mr.
Ramayya Pantulu, Mr. J.
Ramji, Mr. Manmohandas.
Rangachariar, Mr. T.
Reddi, Mr. M. K.
Samarth, Mr. N. M.
Sarfaraz Hussain Khan, Mr.
Sarvadhikary, Sir Deva Prasad.
Sassoon, Capt. E. V.
Schamnad, Mr. Mahmood.
Shahani, Mr. S. C.
Singh, Babu B. P.
Sinha, Babu Ambica Prasad.
Sinha, Babu L. P.
Srinivasa Rao, Mr. P. V.
Subrahmanayam, Mr. C. S.
Ujagar Singh, Baba Bedi.
Venkatapatiraju, Mr. B.
Vishindas, Mr. H.

NOES—37.

Abdur Rahim Khan, Mr.
Acharyar, Rao Bahadur P. T.
Srinivasa.
Ahsan Khan, Mr. M.
Aiyar, Mr. A. V. V.
Allen, Mr. B. C.
Amjad Ali, Maulvi.
Blackett, Sir Basil.
Bradley-Birt, Mr. F. B.
Bray, Mr. Denys.
Brayne, Mr. A. F. L.
Bridge, Mr. G.
Burdon, Mr. E.
Cabell, Mr. W. H. L.
Chatterjee, Mr. A. C.
Crookshank, Sir Sydney.
Faridoonji, Mr. R.
Gidney, Lieut.-Col. H. A. J.
Haigh, Mr. P. B.

Hailey, the Honourable Sir Malcolm.
Hindley, Mr. C. D. M.
Holme, Mr. H. E.
Hullah, Mr. J.
Innes, the Honourable Mr. C. A.
Ley, Mr. A. H.
Lindsay, Mr. Darcy.
Mitter, Mr. K. N.
Moir, Mr. T. E.
Muhammad Hussain, Mr. T.
Muhammad Ismail, Mr. S.
Percival, Mr. P. E.
Rhodes, Sir Campbell.
Sams, Mr. H. A.
Shahab-ud-Din, Chaudhri.
Singh, Mr. S. N.
Spence, Mr. R. A.
Townsend, Mr. C. A. H.
Webb, Sir Montagu.

The motion was adopted.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That a sum not exceeding Rs. 62,83,79,000 be granted to the Governor General in Council to defray the charge which will come in course of payment during the year ending the 31st day of March, 1924, in respect of 'Railways'."

The motion was adopted.

The Assembly then adjourned for Lunch till Ten Minutes Past Three of the Clock.

The Assembly re-assembled after Lunch at Ten Minutes Past Three of the Clock. Mr. President was in the Chair.

DEMAND No. 3—SALT.

Mr. A. H. Ley (Industries Secretary): Sir, I beg to move:

"That a sum not exceeding Rs. 1,13,84,000 be granted to the Governor General in Council to defray the charge which will come in course of payment during the year ending the 31st day of March, 1924, on account of 'Salt'."

I only wish to say, Sir, that in making this motion, it involves, as the House will see, a reduction of Rs. 84,000 on the demand originally presented to the House, and that in effecting this reduction Government have proposed to accept in full the recommendations of the Retrenchment Committee.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That a sum not exceeding Rs. 1,13,84,000 be granted to the Governor General in Council to defray the charge which will come in course of payment during the year ending the 31st day of March, 1924, in respect of 'Salt'."

It will probably save the time of the House if we have a general discussion on the administration of this department, and then take each item for reduction, thus strictly limiting the subsequent debate to the points raised.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: There may be no motions.

Dr. Nand Lal: Sir, if the Honourable the Commerce Member will give me an understanding that the present system of issuing licences, in favour of a few merchants, which, to all intents and purposes amounts to a salt monopoly, will be abolished, then in the interests of economy of time I shall not move my motion.

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes (Commerce and Industries Member): Sir, if the Honourable Member wishes an undertaking from Government regarding the agency system, may I explain to him that we have already abolished to all intents and purposes the agency system in respect of certain Punjab sources, and that we have under consideration the question whether we should or we should not abolish the system altogether in respect of the Rajputana sources.

Dr. Nand Lal: I accept the explanation given, and therefore, I shall not press my motion, Sir.

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary: Sir, motions Nos. 83, 84, 86, 87 and 88 standing in my name on the paper seek to make a larger reduction than a lakh of rupees. Since the revised figures came to my hands, I sent in a revised motion asking for reduction of one lakh of rupees on the total demand, and I think it will be convenient if I take all the different items and indicate as to how that lakh of rupees can be made up without serious detriment to the working of the department.

Mr. President: I understand the Honourable Member is moving a reduction on the whole vote?

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary: If I may, Sir, with your permission.

Mr. President: Then I think I must go through the others first.

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary: As you please.

Dr. Nand Lal: I do not propose to move mine in the interests of the economy of time.

Mr. President: That proposes a specific amendment on a particular point. Am I to understand that the motion which Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary rose to move is to be taken as covering the large reductions upon the total vote?

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary: That is a bigger demand for cut, Sir.

Mr. President: Mr. Braja Sundar Das is not in his place.

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary: Sir, I base my request, I shall not call it a demand for further economy without attacking the department itself, the working strength of the department, establishment and other things, which cannot be attacked on short notice. The second thing that I want to avoid is, demanding anything that may not be within the limitations of the retrenchment recommendations of the Incheape Committee. If we save a lakh of rupees under this grant in other directions, it will enable us to get what we are trying hard to get, namely, a substantial reduction in the general expenditure. From that point of view, limiting myself strictly to expenses such as I have indicated in Nos. 83, 84, 86, 87 and 88 which relate in all cases to allowances, honoraria and such like things. In passing, I desire to acknowledge, Sir, that it has been pointed out to me that honoraria is not necessary. That is I have been told only an account head 'Allowance and Honoraria'. There may be no actual honorarium involved in that item. So when I speak of honoraria, I speak of the general account head 'Allowances and Honoraria.' I know, Sir, that in asking for a reduction in expenses under the heading 'Salt' we are somewhat in the position of a person in whose house hemp or rope was not mentioned because a forbear was hanged in some previous period of time; it is hanging in prospect which we are trying to avoid. But it is not from that point of view that I am trying to recommend this reduction. Whether the increased salt tax comes or not will not be much of a matter so far as these expenses are concerned. Taking for example the first item of allowance and honoraria under the Northern India Salt Department, we have a provision for about Rs. 1,21,000 including house-rent, compensation for dearth of food, and travelling allowances. I do not say that there should be no compensation for food or no house rents or no travelling allowances, but it is a big item and we want a reduction. Then going on to the next item of contingencies, we have the provision of Rs. 7,87,000 all over the place are strewn provisions for contingencies, travelling allowances, giving up some of which will not hurt efficiency but may bring us relief.

Then we come to the thick-lettered new items providing for Assistant Commissioner's bungalow, quarters for drivers and fitters, and various other new items of expenditure, some at least of which may stand over, and as I am cutting down my own demand for reduction to a lakh of rupees it ought to be possible for the authorities to distribute further cuts, so that a lakh of rupees may be saved. I do not want to touch the absolutely imperative items of expenditure such as godowns which may be required for the better working of the department, but providing quarters may in this year of financial stringency should stand over. About Rs. 40,000 could be saved under one item. I need not indicate the various other small items of allowances, honoraria and contingencies that are spread all over the budget. On the whole what I desire—and I hope the House will be with me in carrying out the suggestion—is that a small deduction of a lakh of rupees should be made. Incidentally we may take steps to see, if possible that the importation of salt should be brought down to a minimum and further facilities should be provided in this country for manufacturing a better class of salt. That can be done in some of the Bengal fields and other fields. But I shall probably be told that that will involve further expenditure. Not necessarily. It could be done by better organisation. At all events this small reduction of a lakh of rupees ought not to be impossible.

Mr. A. H. Ley: Sir, I am obliged to my Honourable friend, Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary, for stating that in the first instance he does not propose in this motion of his to suggest a reduction of staff or establishment. I understand him to say that he proposes to effect this reduction by small items scattered over various portions of this budget and one of the main points that he raised was the provision for new works and quarters for the staff. I quite realise that he does not wish to cut down items which are obviously required for preserving the output of salt. But he did suggest actually that we should cut out the Assistant Commissioner's bungalow at Khewra and I think he was aiming at quarters for clerks and such items. Well, Sir, I only wish to point out with regard to these items that these are absolutely essential items if we are to retain our staff at Khewra at all. As the Honourable Member, I am sure, is aware, we adopted the policy of extending the works at the Khewra mines with the object of increasing the output of salt. This led in the first place to the appointment of an Extra Assistant Commissioner at Khewra, and the appointment of extra clerks, and it is absolutely essential to provide quarters for them for the simple reason that there are no quarters there at all. Khewra is a little settlement in the salt range. There are no houses there—the only people who go there are Government servants—so quarters have got to be provided. If you don't provide the houses you cannot send anybody there. At present, the quarters for clerks there are hovels—they can only be called hovels at the present moment. We have had trouble with our clerical staff at Khewra for the simple reason that we have not provided adequate quarters so far, and I am afraid that, if we refuse to adopt this grant, the only result will be that we shall not be able to post the staff which we require to Khewra. And the same remark applies to the other items with regard to quarters. I may say that these proposals for new quarters have all been considered in detail. They are absolutely essential proposals which we consider necessary to keep up the manufacture of salt. They have been consented to by the Standing Finance Committee and I do hope the House will support us in pressing that these quarters should be built. Perhaps I should say that, with regard to allowances and honoraria, which my Honourable friend referred to, we are proposing a total cut of Rs. 84,000. We are proposing, here again, following the Retrenchment Committee's Report, a cut of Rs. 26,000 in these particular items. The other items are essential. To take this particular item of travelling allowances—there is a small reduction here on last year as will be observed, in spite of the increase in railway fares. And we consider that this is essential, because the staff obviously has got to undertake frequent visits of inspection to see not only that the manufacture of salt is maintained but also to visit the salt sources, for instance in the Native States, in order to see that no illicit practices go on. We cannot possibly cut down the travelling allowances further, unless we agree to reduce those activities of the department, which, I venture to think, would obviously have very undesirable results. And again in supplies and services, we propose to cut that down by Rs. 15,000, following the Inchcape Committee's Report, Rs. 5,000 in contingencies, and here again, following the Retrenchment Committee's Report, over Rs. 10,000 in petty construction and repairs. This is suggested by the Retrenchment Committee, although I feel that the Commissioner of Salt Revenue, Northern India, will experience great difficulty in giving effect to this recommendation, for the same reason as I have suggested in regard to quarters. I only wish to emphasise the fact that these proposals for new quarters and for new works, are all part of the general scheme which has been adopted for some years past in the Northern India Salt Revenue Department, and in Bombay and Madras to a certain extent, for developing our salt sources and increasing the supplies of salt. That is the main object to increase the supplies of salt, for three obvious reasons. They are, firstly, we want to make ourselves self-supporting. We don't want to rely more than we can help on supplies of imported salt. I think all Honourable Members will remember the difficulty which we experienced in 1918, for instance, when the imports of salt were curtailed during the war, and it was really then that this forward policy of developing our salt sources was started. Then secondly, as a corollary of that, it is felt, and I think all Honourable Members will realise, that this policy of the development of the salt sources in order to increase the supplies of salt is the one satisfactory, obvious, economical way of keeping down, as far as we can keep down, the price of salt, which is, I think, an object which everyone of us has at heart. And, finally, of course, the third reason is that if the amount of salt is increased, we get something like five or six times the amount of expenditure back in the shape of revenue. So that is the basis of all these proposals for developing the salt sources, building works and quarters for the staff, and I do trust that the House will take this into consideration and will not support a motion for any further reduction.

[Mr. A. H. Ley.]

Dr. H. S. Gour: Sir, there is one point in connection with my friend, Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary's amendment to which I should like to invite the attention of the House. The budget estimates for Salt appear to have been framed on the assumption that the enhanced duty on salt will be sanctioned by the House and increase the general revenue by $4\frac{1}{2}$ crores of rupees. Honourable Members will find, if they turn to page 300 of this book of Demands, that our revenue from Salt is $7\frac{1}{4}$ crores per annum, and the Government expect to raise this revenue by $4\frac{1}{2}$ crores by the doubling of the salt duty. The estimate of expenditure under this head is therefore framed on that assumption. At any rate, it is perfectly clear that, if this House votes the additional duty on salt, the Government are not going to revise their figures and the figures which they have set out under demand No. 3 will be the expenditure incurred for raising salt worth $11\frac{1}{2}$ crores of rupees. That is a fact from which the Government cannot get away. I, therefore, ask, Sir, that, if suppose this House refuses the enhanced duty on salt, we shall be making only the estimated sum of $7\frac{1}{4}$ crores. (The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: "Why?") Now, then I ask another question. Is expenditure of Rs. 1,14,00,000 odd justifiable for raising a revenue of Rs. $7\frac{1}{4}$ crores which works out to something like 15 to 20 per cent. of the gross revenue? I submit that there is ample room in this Budget for further curtailment of expenditure under this head. The Honourable the Mover of the amendment has drawn the attention of the House to various items appearing in black letters. Honourable Members will find that besides the construction of quarters for the Assistant Commissioner and the rest we have also on page 19 a very large sum earmarked for the revision of the pay of the establishment and so on. Now, I ask, Sir, is not this revision of the pay of the establishment contemplated in view of the additional revenue which the Government expect to make from this head of revenue?

The Honourable Mr. A. C. Chatterjee (Education Member): No, certainly not.

Dr. H. S. Gour: And I further ask, what urgent necessity is there for this revision of pay of the establishment in this year of straitened finance? As regards the building of quarters, Sir, if we have got no money, we do not erect new houses, but the Government seem to think otherwise. When they have no money in hand they complain that it would be an unwise policy to borrow money, and yet they ask the vote of this House for the construction of quarters upon which the return would be negligible. I therefore submit that so far as the construction of quarters is concerned, no case has been made out why this House should vote the additional sum demanded from it for the construction of quarters; and as regards pay and allowances, our best justification for refusing an enhanced grant is that we ourselves are passing through a severe financial crisis, and as the whole country suffers, our staff on the salt works must wait for another 12 months. On these grounds, Sir, I support the amendment.

The Honourable Mr. A. C. Chatterjee: Sir, the Honourable Dr. Gour has tried to confuse the issues and mislead the House. The proposal to enhance the salt duty has nothing whatever to do with this demand for a grant for the manufacture of salt and for the establishment of a preventive staff. It has nothing whatever to do with it. I think the Honourable Dr. Gour ought to have known that. He has been in this House for the last three years. This demand has been debated on year after year. It has been discussed before the Standing Finance Committee in detail and the Honourable Dr. Gour has been furnished with the proceedings of the Standing Finance Committee. Sir, I am pained and surprised to hear the line of argument which has been adopted by the Honourable Dr. Gour. The whole object of Government, Sir, as has been explained more than once, has been

Dr. H. S. Gour: True economy.

The Honourable Mr. A. C. Chatterjee: to develop a Swadeshi industry. We expected that this House would support Government in that enterprise. Instead of that, Dr. Gour comes and crabs us. He has taken exception to the revision. So far as I can judge, the only material point he has raised is with regard to the provision of quarters and the revision of the pay of the establishment. With regard to the provision of quarters, Sir, I should like Dr. Gour to go and live in Khewra and then he will know what it is like. I paid my first visit to Khewra last October. I was, I must confess, rather reluctant to be any party to the construction of a large number of quarters without knowing what was really required. So I paid a visit to Khewra. I came to the conclusion that I should not like to live there even if the most luxurious quarters were provided for me there. It is the bleakest spot I believe in India. It is right in the heart of the salt range. There are no villages and no habitations anywhere near there. These people have to go and live right down in the heart of that mountain without any shelter from rain or from sun, and it is only right when Government is a large employer and when Government is making any profits out of a particular industry that it should provide quarters for its labour. I think, Sir, it is inhuman to contemplate that we should employ people there, whether they are Assistant Commissioners or whether they are labourers and should allow them to suffer from the inclemencies of the weather in a most desolate spot such as Khewra is. I would most earnestly request the House not to cut down this provision for quarters. With regard to the pay of the establishment, that comes mostly in Bombay and Sind. The fact is that when salaries were raised all round two or three years ago, these people were not given the enhancements that were due to them. This was kept back for two years for scrutiny by the Bombay Government and by the Government of India. The most elaborate scrutiny was applied to these proposals and I may say, that after the Government of India had come to the conclusion that these increases should be allowed, the proposals were most elaborately scrutinised again by the Standing Finance Committee and any Member of the Finance Committee here will bear testimony to the fact that the proposals were most moderate and by no means generous. I think, Sir, it would be extremely unfair on the part of this House to cut out this provision for a revision of the pay of the establishment in the case of men who have been waiting for this revision for the last three years. I do not think, Sir, I have anything further to say. I hope, Sir, that now this demand will be passed by the House.

Mr. Pyari Lal (Meerut Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, the proposition before the House is what I would call a commonsense proposition. We are passing through very stringent times and our duty is to manage our house as best we can while we are tiding over these bad times. The position is, we are faced with a deficit of Rs. 4½ crores and we are trying to set our house in order. We feel that we can do, as we have done in the past for so many years, without these quarters for Assistant Commissioners.

The Honourable Mr. A. C. Chatterjee: No.

Mr. Pyari Lal: There is no reason why we should not do without them for another year.

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: Who is to do without them?

Mr. Pyari Lal: In the same way, the provision for the revision of the salaries of these clerks and other establishment could wait for another year as they have waited for so many years. Dr. Sarvadhikary originally proposed a cut of nearly 5 lakhs but now he has come down to a very proper figure of 1 lakh. This is a very modest sum especially when you cut 1 lakh out of a total expenditure of 1 crore and some lakhs, and this sum can be very easily met. The Department should consider that they are so hard up and should not incur any unnecessary and avoidable unpopularity in the country by imposing a salt tax. We want to avoid that, and the best way is to cut down our expenditure as best we can and act as a prudent householder. What would an ordinary householder do when he is confronted with a difficulty of that sort? He will cut down his expenditure in every direction and absolutely avoid all expenditure of a new character. The Government of India ought to do the same and it is in that sense that this reduction is proposed. Dr. Gour said that the Government of India or the Finance Member is contemplating an increase in the salt revenue by 4½ crores or 5 crores and that is why he has thought fit to indulge in the luxury of granting additional pay or additional houses or additional quarters. From that he drew the inference "because this provision is entered in the budget therefore I say that he wants this additional income," not that he said that it is expressly provided in the Budget and in that sense I think the Honourable Mr. Chatterjee wrongly understood him.

Mr. C. A. H. Townsend (Punjab: Nominated Official): I know Khewra well and that is my only excuse for taking up the time of the House. I have been more unlucky than the Honourable Mr. Chatterjee in that that place is in a sub-division in which I was stationed in the earlier part of my life in India. Strange to say, I was very happy there: it may, however, have been because I had a house there. I entirely agree with every thing that has fallen from Mr. Ley as to the necessity of providing quarters at Khewra. I can add nothing to what he and Mr. Chatterjee said as to the impossibility of finding any quarters for the new staff they are proposing to send there, to a village which entirely depends for its life on the salt industry. As regards the general remarks that have fallen from the last speaker and from Dr. Gour as to the advisability of postponing this expenditure till times improve, I would draw the attention of the House to the footnote (a) at page 17 of the Demand for Grants:

"Provision made for improvement of salt sources and development of mines which will yield increased revenue."

[Mr. C. A. H. Townsend.]

That point was made by Mr. Ley also, but I wish to draw the attention of the House to it. I was, as Director of Civil Supplies in the Punjab during the concluding years of the war, acquainted with the problems that confronted Government owing to the cessation of import of salt by sea into India and with the great trouble that people in the whole of north India were put to owing to the consequent very great rise in the price of salt. The Government of India is entirely right in trying to overcome these difficulties and to develop the salt industry in India and thereby help an indigenous industry. I earnestly ask the House to reject this amendment.

Mr. N. M. Samarth: I am afraid my Honourable friends who have raised the question of retrenching the expenditure of this Department are labouring under some misapprehension. If they refer to the statement, Revised Schedule of Demands, at page 3 they will find that the Retrenchment Committee recommended a reduction of Rs. 19,15,000 and they will find in the last column that the whole of the reduction has been given effect to. Unless Dr. Gour means that somehow or other the Members of the Retrenchment Committee were taken into the confidence of the Government of India and told that they were going to raise the salt tax by doubling it, I do not know how the Retrenchment Committee recommended only Rs. 19,15,000. It is unreasonable to suppose that they knew anything about it and the Department has given effect to the full cut recommended by the Inchcape Committee. Besides, as a Member of the Standing Finance Committee these proposals of the Salt Department came to us and we scrutinised the proposals of this Department very carefully and we sanctioned in some cases extra expenditure, say, at Tuticorin because we knew that the expenses incurred there for housing and other things, the construction of works and so on, would bring in more salt and practically, if I may say so, reduce the importation of European salt at Calcutta. If that is so, it is an indigenous industry and everything that is necessary to see that that industry thrives should be done, and I trust that the House will not accept any curtailment.

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary: I do not believe in a house divided against itself, and certainly not in section of the House divided into subsections. Therefore I ask your leave to withdraw my amendment after Mr. Samarth's rebuke.

The amendment was, by leave of the Assembly, withdrawn.

Babu Braja Sundar Das (Orissa Division: Non-Muhammadan): I move:

"That the Demand under the head 'Salt' be reduced by Rs. 14,78,000."

Sir, there is nothing in the budget to show what sum is spent on the production of salt and what sum on the prevention of the illicit manufacture of salt. From the figures that we have in the budget we cannot understand that. That puts us in a very bad position to make up our minds regarding the demands. The Honourable Mr. Chatterjee has just narrated that it is a growing Swadeshi concern and therefore no cut should be made under this head. I would refer to page 224 of the Indian Retrenchment Committee Report where you will find that the province of Bengal depends entirely on imported salt. So does the province of Bihar and Orissa to a certain extent. Nay, Orissa with a large seaboard entirely depends on the imported (either provincial or external) salt, and India with a vast seaboard of thousands of miles is depending on imported salt. On the 5th March 1921 I asked a question of the Government and there it was stated that about one-fourth of the salt consumed in India was imported from outside. So, I fail to understand how the Swadeshi concern helps us in getting all our needs from the country itself. In 1918 we in the Bihar and Orissa Legislative Council moved a Resolution for the manufacture of salt on the Orissa coast, but I think it was negatived by the Government of India. Therefore I think that the Swadeshi concern in respect of salt which is said to be a growing concern is not making much headway and hence I move my amendment that this amount be deducted from the expenditure that is incurred on the prevention of illicit manufacture of salt.

The amendment was negatived.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That a sum not exceeding Rs. 1,13,84,000 be granted to the Governor General in Council to defray the charges which will come in course of payment during the year ending the 31st day of March, 1924, in respect of 'Salt'."

The motion was adopted.

DEMAND No. 4—OPIUM.

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: Sir, I beg to move:

"That a sum not exceeding Rs. 1,85,53,000 be granted to the Governor General in Council to defray the charges which will come in course of payment during the year ending the 31st day of March, 1924, in respect of 'Opium'."

Dr. Nand Lal: The opinion on this side of the House is that no amendments may be moved.

Mr. President: The question is that that demand be granted.

The motion was adopted.

DEMAND No. 14—GENERAL ADMINISTRATION.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Halley: I beg to move:

"That a sum not exceeding 74 lakhs be granted to the Governor General in Council to defray the charge which will come in course of payment during the year ending the 31st day of March, 1924, in respect of 'General Administration'."

Honourable Members will see that the sum originally placed in the Demands for Grants was 81,58,000. The reduction now proposed as the result of the report of the Inchcape Commission is 7,58,000, making a net demand of 74 lakhs. If Members wish to compare the progressive reduction of expenditure under this head they will find the figures at the bottom on page 36 of the Demands for Grants. In 1921-22 the actual expenditure was 1,25,06,489. In 1922-23 our estimate was 1,03,32,000, exclusive of exchange. The revised estimate for 1922-23 was 1,32,05,000 inclusive of exchange, exchange accounting for 26½ lakhs. Our budget estimate is 1,20,20,000 inclusive of exchange which will now be reduced, owing to the reduction of 7,58,000, by a further 12 lakhs, of which 7½ lakhs are voted. It will therefore be 1,08,20,000.

Hill Journey Allowances of the Governor General.

Munshi Iswar Saran: With your permission, Sir, I should like to modify my amendment and move it in the revised form:

"That the provision of Hill Journey Allowance under sub-head 'Staff and Household of the Governor General' be reduced by one rupee and also that the provision for Hill journey allowance and Hill journey charges wherever they occur be reduced by one rupee."

[Munshi Iswar Saran.]

It will be in the recollection of the House that there was a debate in 1921 when the House had an opportunity of considering this question and I must say that the opinion of the majority then was that the present system of the move to Simla should be kept intact. But, in spite of that vote of the House this question will continue to come before us till it is finally settled in the way in which the country wants it to be settled. We have it in the report of the Retrenchment Committee that the cost of this move was about 3,87,000, in 1921-22, and it strengthens our position to find that the Incheape Committee itself has recommended a substantial reduction in the staff of officers that go to the hills as well as the amount of establishment and so on. I say, that is a vindication of the position that was taken by those of us who were against the Simla exodus in 1921. I venture to think that the position taken up by Government on that occasion was that the matter rested entirely with us. The question was left in our own hands and Government said distinctly that they were not going to take any part or express any opinion either way. That shows, I think, that the Government itself has now begun to see the wisdom of the step that is being advocated and which at the present moment I have the honour to advocate. This question, Sir, can be looked at from two points of view. One is financial and the other is the general point of view. Now, we all know that in the old Imperial Legislative Council there were many Members who raised their voice against this exodus to Simla. We also know that the National Congress, other political bodies, provincial as well as local, have expressed themselves clearly and emphatically against this exodus. It is true that the financial aspect of it may not be very serious and I do not wish to exaggerate it. For the last two or three days we have been hearing only of crores. Where crores are spent in this fashion, after all it does not really so much matter that a few lakhs of rupees are spent over the move to Simla; but I do venture to think that there are other considerations which make it imperative to express our opinion decidedly against it, and the reasons are these. No Government can successfully administer a country if it is not in close, intimate and daily touch with the people. (Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary: "How about Delhi?") My Honourable friend, Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary, seems to imagine that outside Calcutta there is no place a contact with which would be of any help to Government. That is not so. As regards Delhi, this is a closed question now, but if we were free to discuss it, I think my Honourable friend himself would admit that a great deal could be said in favour of Delhi as well as in favour of Calcutta. (Voices: "More so in favour of Bombay.") Now, Sir, there is no doubt that this proposition cannot be got over that for successful administration it is absolutely necessary that you should be in touch with the people. Sir, I venture to think, and I hope at least some of my friends will at least agree with me that, if Government had been in close touch with the people during recent times, some of the unhappiest and most unfortunate events that have taken place would perhaps have not occurred. Sir, I dare not prophesy, but, if I could, I would say that the historian of the future, when he begins to write the history of India, will feel amazed that a Government from the hilltops used to administer for about half the year this vast and great country. You cannot govern and administer a country from the clouds; that is perfectly obvious (Mr. R. A. Spence: "What about keeping your head cool?") (Dr. Nand Lal: "That is exactly the point.") Now, Sir, reference has been made to climate and there is no doubt about it that in April, and May, and in the hot weather generally some parts of India and, I must say most frankly Delhi also are hot. (A Voice: "And Allahabad.") Yes, Allahabad is hot. (A Voice: "Very hot.") Yes, but if you got a fee you would not mind going there. (Dr. Nand Lal: "You have got your home there.") Sir, let us look at the question seriously. The climate of Delhi is hot, but, if you undertake the responsibility of governing and administering a hot country, you cannot run away from the heat, you have got to put up with it. That is the first question and the fundamental question which you have got to face. Sir, as regards the principle underlying my amendment is concerned, I venture to hope that there will be no serious disagreement with me, but where the disagreement comes in is when you come to look into practical difficulties and personal considerations, and I wish to refer very briefly to those. It is said it is very comfortable and very pleasant to go up to the hills in the hot weather. Well, Sir, I cannot say that it is not so, but there are so many things which are convenient and comfortable, but which for good and valid reasons we dare not have. Sir, who is there, if he had the money, would not drive in a Rolls Royce? Who is there who would not live in the hills? Who is there who would not like to have all the comforts and even luxuries of life? But the financial and other considerations prevent a man from having them. Now, what I tell you is this. Here, in India, you have millions of people living and working in the plains in the heat. Do they all go up to the hill-tops? Do people go up to Simla and Naini Tal, I am speaking of my own province. How many do? Very few. (Lieut.-Colonel H. A. J. Gidney: "Many.") My Honourable friend, Colonel Gidney, is so displeased with my remark yesterday that I should not say that by this interjection of his he betrays his colossal ignorance of the real Indian community.

Now, Sir, it may be true that you work better on the hills; it is more comfortable; but, Sir, I ask, is it impossible to work in the plains? I shall run very hurriedly over all these arguments which have been repeated so many times. Do not Judges work hard here? I am only talking now of the case of Europeans. (Cries of "No, no.") My Honourable friend, Sir Malcolm Hailey, used to work in the plains, but, since his translation to the Executive Council, I suppose he has lost this capacity of working in the plains during the hot weather.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: I hope the Honourable Member does not suggest that I do not work now.

Munshi Iswar Saran: Now, Sir, you have a number of barristers, a number of big merchant princes; they all work on the plains. (Sir Campbell Rhodes: "Hear, hear.") My friend, Sir Campbell Rhodes, says, "Hear, hear," because he has got to work in Calcutta: he cannot leave his work and go up to the hills and do all his business from there. Occasionally he goes to the hills, but not like you from April to September, I think. (Dr. H. S. Gour: "Till the end of October.") Till the end of October. Sir, if you look at this question from the purely personal point of view, there is a great deal to be said in favour of this move to Simla and I would certainly vote myself in favour of this exodus to Simla if that was the real standpoint of looking at the problem, but if, as representatives of the people, it is our business to take into consideration these grave and serious questions of principle, then, I say it is our clear duty to say that the Government ought not to go up to the hills and that we ourselves should not hold our meetings in Simla. The Government, on the last occasion when this question was discussed, left the matter in our hands, but I am very sorry to say that by our own action we did not take advantage of the position taken by Government. I do sincerely hope that on the present occasion we shall give a better proof of our long-sightedness and of our patriotism by accepting this amendment.

[Munshi Iswar Saran.]

Sir, there is one question I would like to ask. I have never been to England but I am told that in winter it is very cold. That is what some of my friends who have been to England have told me. If that is so—I have no information about it myself—will some of the Honourable gentlemen occupying the Front Benches tell me if the Members of Government run away from England during the cold weather (A Voice: "They do.") in order to avoid climatic conditions. (A Voice: "They do.") I should like to ask my Honourable friend where the Parliament sits in winter. Let my Honourable friends name the place where for 4 or 6 months in the year British Government permanently resides away from London. That is the point; not that individual members go for short periods. It is no good, I submit, Sir, looking at this question in this light-hearted fashion. Do it if you like, but take it from me that in the next Council or in the Council after the next this question is bound to be settled and settled in the only way in which it ought to be settled—that is, the exodus will have to be stopped. (Several Honourable Members: "Certainly not.") Some of my Honourable friends who are opposed to it say "Certainly not." What is the good of saying it, when they know that the better mind of the country is almost practically unanimous on this point, that there should be no exodus to the hills. They have exposed the harmfulness and the wastefulness of this migration to the hills times out of number, and it is for us, if we feel for the country and represent its interests to say emphatically that this exodus to the hills is harmful, and to vote to-day in favour of the amendment.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: Sir, I rise to a point of order. I want to move a more substantial amendment. I do not want to play with the subject, but to be serious about it.

My amendment is No. 330.

Mr. President: I will put the first:

"That the provision for Hill Journey Allowance under sub-head 'Staff and Household of the Governor General' be reduced by Re. 1."

It must be understood that if I allow the discussion to proceed on Munshi Iswar Saran's amendment for the reduction by Re. 1 of the provision for Hill Journey Allowance under sub-head 'Staff and Household of the Governor General', the House cannot open the question again after it has decided that—open the question, that is to say, of the move to the Hills.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: Then, Sir, I will have to move my amendment about Hill Journey Allowances. No. 330.

Dr. H. S. Gour: I have also a question to ask. I have a series of amendments, not directed against the move to the hills but against the long stay of the Government and the Members in Simla, as I want to cut down the expenditure to a minimum.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: May I make a suggestion in regard to this matter? I have also two amendments at page 24, and my Honourable friend, Mr. Rangachariar, has one, No. 330. Would it be possible to have a general discussion, and then take votes upon the various motions? That would be the best thing. There are two amendments of mine, one of Mr. Rangachariar, and one of Munshi Iswar Saran.

Mr. President: All I was pointing out was that we cannot have the discussion twice. As far as the Chair is concerned, there is no objection for taking the discussion under any of these heads.

Dr. H. S. Gour: Sir, I think all the amendments can be boiled down to three points: that there should be no move, that the move should be for a shorter period, and that in any case the Legislative Assembly and the Council of State should not hold their Sessions in Simla. These are the three points upon which all these amendments converge, and if you, Sir, would direct the House upon these three points, it will help us.

Mr. President: It is obvious that the question of the sitting of the Legislature in Simla is a separate one to the move of the Government to the hills. These can therefore be taken as separate amendments. The other relates to the time which the Government of India spends actually in the hills, and I am afraid it is a little difficult to see on what amendment it can be taken. If that is the point which Mr. Rangachariar wishes to raise Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: Yes, Sir.

Move of the Government to the Hills.

Mr. President: We had better proceed with the issue in its largest form raised by Munshi Iswar Saran. The House will be restricted to the argument that there should be no move to the hills at all.

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary: That would not shut out observations on the cutting down of the demand under General Administration—say, for instance, in connection with my amendment No. 336; I gather from what has fallen from you, Sir, that reference to Hill charges would not be allowable later on when the question of detailed demand referring to Hill charges under General Administration comes on.

Mr. President: The motion for reduction made by the Honourable Member from Allahabad raises the issue in its naked form, that there should be no move to the hills. When we dispose of that question, I shall tell Honourable Members what is in order and what is not.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: We have an amiable habit in this House of discussing for nearly three quarters of the day what we shall talk about for the rest of the day; but I understand that we are now to discuss only the question whether the Government of India should move to the hills at all, and, by implication, I assume, also, whether the Legislature . . .

Dr. H. S. Gour: No, no. You have distinctly ruled, Sir, that the question of the Legislature will be the subject of separate discussion.

Mr. President: The Honourable Member from Allahabad, in the way he has put his question, has raised the question of the move of the Government of India to the hills, and those who wish to discuss that question will discuss it in this debate. Those who desire to speak on the subject of the Legislature sitting in Simla will presumably reserve their remarks till we come to the other amendment.

[Mr. President.]

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: I see I should have said nine-tenths of its time instead of three-quarters! Well, Sir, this proposition has not now been put forward nor is it being debated, for the first time. As Munshi Iswar Saran says, it was debated in 1920 first of all in the old Council. We then had thirteen capitals indicated to us, each with its own claims. It was debated again in some form in 1921, but in a form that did not allow of a definite decision as to whether the Government of India should go to the hills or not. There of course the motion was that the Assembly recommend that a Committee should be appointed to go into the possibility of establishing a permanent capital of India in a place possessing a salubrious and temperate climate throughout the year. The preliminary discussion whether such an attempt was necessary occupied most of an afternoon. It began at 3.10, I notice. At 4 o'clock, we had exhausted the claims of Nagpur, or it might have been perhaps Pachmarhi. We proceeded shortly afterwards to discuss other alternatives, and we got thoroughly tired of the question towards evening and took no vote on the matter. Now I hate to spoil sport. There I see sitting my Honourable friend, Sir Basil Blackett. He has before him some tiring days which may involve the cutting down of some of his demands for grants. If I did my duty by him, I should incite the House to prolong consideration of this engaging topic, hoping to occupy some considerable part of the remaining few days before the guillotine comes down and saves the remainder of his demands. But I suggest, Sir, that after all, if you move a nominal reduction in order to call forth an expression of the opinion of the Legislature, it should be in a matter which can have effect on the current Budget. It would be valuable no doubt if we could get from this Assembly an opinion as to what we should do in the summer, but whatever that opinion may be it would be impossible that we should give effect to it in the present year—that is to say, that if it were decided that we should go to one of the many capitals which have been recommended to us, it is of course clear that we could not do so for many years to come; and if the decision were that we should stay down here in the hot weather, even so it is well known that we have not as yet and will not have for a couple of years the buildings which will enable us to do so. Our Secretariat is not ready, our houses are not ready. Therefore, putting it on that ground only I think that the House would hardly be justified in proceeding to a discussion to settle this question under the impression that a decision could have any effect on the budget of the present year. There will come a time of course when the question will possess more relevance, that is to say, when New Delhi is complete and the House itself has some experience of what a hot weather in Delhi means. I speak of it myself without any apprehensions at all for two excellent reasons: it is probable that I shall not be at the time in India, and in the second place having spent six hot weathers here I shall not mind spending another. I can therefore be perfectly impartial when speaking on the subject, but I claim it is only a House with experience of our summer arrangements in Delhi and of the capacity of the New Council Chamber that can give a final decision whether it would recommend to the Government of India to stay here or go to the hills. I would suggest that the House refuse to enter into a discussion on this topic to-day or to delay the question so much in advance of a period when we can give effect to it. I would only note one thing, Sir, it is curious that we are now only the middle of March, in an exceptionally cold season, and yet at the very moment that Munshi Iswar Saran began to suggest that we should not go to the hills, somebody demanded that the fans should be put on!

(Cries of: "Withdraw, withdraw.")

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: Sir, much to the dissatisfaction of my Honourable friends who cry "withdraw", "withdraw", I am sorry to say it is impossible for us who take this view to agree to such a course. It was very well to say in the first year "Have experience." We have had experience of Delhi; we have had experience of Simla. Sir, the move of the Government of India to the hills, to delightful Mashobra and other sweet spots there, which I have myself enjoyed, is too attractive indeed. We are all human, no doubt. But at the same time we have to consider the year we are passing through, the financial crisis the country has been passing through, the burden of taxation which we have been putting upon the country year after year; and, Sir, to say "withdraw, withdraw" a serious motion like this, I really cannot understand. Sir, I will have my say notwithstanding the cries. Sir, I beg to suggest that a beginning should be made in this direction. It is not too soon to begin. If the House affirms its opinion that the move to the hills is undesirable, I think it is by means of a vote like this that we should express our opinion. I agree the time is not yet that you can abandon the whole move to the hills next year; that is not the suggestion of this motion. But this House, having had three years' experience of the way in which the Government of the country is run, having had intimate and close acquaintance with the way in which the Government of India is transacting its business, it is up to us to record our emphatic opinion that it is no longer desirable that this practice should continue. Here you are all elected representatives of the people who sent you here to watch their interests. Are we really advancing their interests when you say "By all means, go on, govern the country from the hills"? Why, Sir, London has become a very short journey just now. Why not govern the country from London? If the Assembly moved to London and held its summer Sessions there, probably we may be able to influence the administration much more effectively than we are doing here. The Noble Lords, Lord Peel and Lord Winterton might perhaps condescend to grace this Assembly with their presence more often to watch the debates in this House, before talking of this young and inexperienced and enthusiastic Assembly who have committed errors now and then. Sir, why not we move to London? Why not? It is as practical, as useful, perhaps as I said more useful than moving to the hills, and trying to govern the country from the heights of Simla. What happens? It is said they go there for six months. But really work is put out of gear for say a fortnight before and a fortnight after. Look at the move of the whole Secretariat including the army of clerks, peons, bearers and records and look at the extraordinary move which takes place in April and again in November. You have to see the train loads of people and goods and other things which pass between Delhi and Simla. Look at the enormous waste of expenditure. When are you going to begin to put a stop to this? I may be told that nobody can tell when New Delhi is going to be finished. Can anybody tell? Probably we will have to ask an astrologer to say when that day will come. Are not houses enough here? Is it necessary that the whole of the Secretariat, including this army of clerks, should go there? Cannot business be transacted if His Excellency the Viceroy and the Members of the Council stay there with their important Secretaries and

[Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar.]

Under Secretaries, the other people, poor mortals like myself, staying here and doing the work? Why should all these people be taken there? I have no doubt they are tempted by the Simla allowance, house allowance, local allowance and all those things. But look at the torture these people are put to. Look at the depths they have to go down every day and come up. Has any Honourable Member gone down to those places where the Indian clerks have to live and seen how after a heavy breakfast they have to walk up? I mean it is all very well for us to talk of joys for those of us who live in big palaces and all that on level roads and go about in rickshaws or ride. What about these poor people who have to go down and mount up immediately after a heavy breakfast, mount up perhaps a thousand feet? I do think, Sir, the time has come when this representative House should express its opinion. Even the unrepresentative House time after time recorded its opinion by its non-official votes. No doubt the official majority were able to defeat motions which were brought then. Now, Sir, with an elected majority of representatives of the people in this House, if this motion should be defeated, I do not think it will redound to our credit or add to our colours. It is quite true that it is not a practical proposition now as the Honourable the Home Member said; but they can cut short the stay there. Why should they stay there for six months all round? Could not Honourable Members stay there for three months? Have not the Provincial Governments set an example in this matter? I know Sir, that the Madras Government moved up to Ooty for six months, following the vicious example of the Central Government, and now they have come down; only the Governor and the Members go there and they stay there for only three months or four months; the Secretaries go and come and the whole of the Government is carried on at Madras. Madras is quite a hot place; in fact the weather there can only be classified into hot, hotter and hottest; you have no cold weather there at all. Therefore, when Madras has set an example, and other provinces have set an example, why should we, why should this Central Legislature set a vicious example to other Provincial Governments to follow? They have already set a good example. You have to recognise the financial limits, the financial resources of the country. Can we afford to have this costly move up and down year after year? We are all accustomed to be brought up in luxury, especially magnates from Bombay, and our Punjab friends are anxious for hill stations. (A Voice: "Supposing Bombay magnates are not in favour of going to the hills.") Then that shows they are not here sitting as magnates. I am proud of that. We are here for the toiling millions who cannot get even one full meal a day and from whom we wring and we propose to wring the salt tax, why? In order to meet this costly administration. And are we going to allow this costly administration? I am told "withdraw, withdraw" on a plain matter of this sort on which the country has been agitating year after year; Congress after Congress has been agitating over this question of exodus to the hills and the country has been crying hoarse for the last so many years. I do not know, Sir, if this was not the first question which every politician took up and was agitating time after time. In a matter of this sort when we have had enough experience an expression of opinion on our part will greatly add to the weight of the opinion of the country, and I do hope, Sir, this House will carry the vote which is clearly its pious expression of opinion in order that it may be given effect to in later years when Delhi is really fit for habitation to such Honourable Members who think that Delhi is not fit for habitation. What about the 2 lakhs of people who live here all the year round

Are we better than those human beings? Are they not human beings like ourselves. It is said that Delhi is unfit for habitation. I ask, do these 2 lakhs of people flee away from Delhi? Sir, it was not without a purpose that I called for a fan. I called for it deliberately because of the coming motion. I wanted to remind Honourable Members that Delhi is not what it was years ago. Thanks to our engineers, thanks for the other comforts which have been added time after time. You can make a cold room warm, and you can make a hot room cold. That is exactly the reason why I called for fans in order to remind Honourable Members of the existence of these fans. Therefore, I say, Sir, with all these modern conveniences, living in such open spaces as Raisina where you have got all the conveniences

Mr. P. P. Ginwala: No, no.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: It is all very well for Mr. Ginwala to say no, no, but I do enjoy this place, and if we really hold a Session in the hot weather, there is nothing to be afraid of. No doubt we have hot winds. You may have hot winds, but where have you not got them? Let us remember that we are born in this country. That is why I told my friend Sir Basil Blackett on the Budget speech 'love the heat of this country'. It was not without a purpose I mentioned that to him. If you love the heat of this country, then only you will love the people of this country, and therefore I say let us not flee from the heat of this country. Sir, I strongly support this motion.

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary: Sir, I desire to give this motion my very strong and hearty support, but I do not propose to walk into the trap and take up much of the time required to be devoted to other grants. I do not suggest that the trap has been laid by the Leader of the House, on the other hand he has frankly warned us against it. But before we get away from the confusion of issues I think this House owes an initial duty. As we are discussing the question of the staff of the household of the Governor General, I think it is up to us to acknowledge and appreciate what His Excellency has been pleased to do himself not only in graciously accepting, but in suggesting cuts in his own household, an example which might well be imitated by others

Mr. President: The House is now discussing the move to the Hills of the Government of India.

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary: Exactly, Sir. When we know and appreciate what the Governor General himself has done in effecting cuts in his own household, and as we know that the vote will come to His Excellency standing in the . . . he helpful in giving effect to the desires of this House in this concern if they are That is the bearing of my non-official portion of the House is concerned and it is up reference to what His Excellency has done. The . . . of my . . . take the first one good and 'the only good; in reducing the hill charges of the year, step this year by accepting some motion later on for cutting down the charges. We do recognise that we cannot do the whole thing in one year, and it will have to be done year by year; but the first step has to be taken this year. From that point of view and as a recognition of principle, I think this House should take the initial step of carrying this motion so that when the items relating to hill charges come up we may give effect to the principles we lay down and reduce the expenditure as far as possible.

Mr. President: The original question was:

"That a sum not exceeding Rs. 74,00,000 be granted to the Governor General in Council to defray the charge which will come in course of payment during the year ending the 31st day of March, 1924, in respect of 'General Administration'."

Since which an amendment has been moved:

"That the provision for the Hill Journey Allowance under sub-head 'Staff and Household of the Governor General' be reduced by one rupee."

The question I have to put is that that reduction be made.

The Assembly divided:

AYES—50.

Abdul Majid, Sheikh.
Abdulla, Mr. S. M.
Abul Kasem, Maulvi.
Agarwala, Lala Girdharilal.
Ahmed, Mr. K.
Asjad-ul-lah, Maulvi Miyan.
Ayyangar, Mr. M. G. M.
Ayyar, Mr. T. V. Seshagiri.
Barodawalla, Mr. S. K.
Basu, Mr. J. N.
Bhanja Deo, Raja R. N.
Bhargava, Pandit J. L.
Bishambhar Nath, Mr.
Chaudhuri, Mr. J.
Das, Babu B. S.
Faiyaz Khan, Mr. M.
Girdhardas, Mr. N.
Gour, Dr. H. S.
Gulab Singh, Sardar.
Hussanally, Mr. W. M.
Iswar Saran, Munshi.
Jamall, Mr. A. O.
Jamnadas Dwarkadas, Mr.
Jatkar, Mr. B. H. R.
Jejeebhoy, Sir Jamsetjee.

Joshi, Mr. N. M.
Kamat, Mr. B. S.
Lalshmi Narayan Lal, Mr.
Mahadeo Prasad, Munshi.
Misra, Mr. B. N.
Mudaliar, Mr. S.
Mukherjee, Mr. J. N.
Mukherjee, Mr. T. P.
Nag, Mr. G. C.
Neogy, Mr. K. C.
Ramji, Mr. Manmohandas.
Rangachariar, Mr. T.
Rhodes, Sir Campbell.
Samarth, Mr. N. M.
Sarvadhikary, Sir Deva Prasad.
Sassoon, Capt. E. V.
Shahani, Mr. S. C.
Singh, Babu B. P.
Sinha, Babu Ambica Prasad.
Sinha, Beohar Raghurib.
Srinivasa Rao, Mr. P. V.
Subrahmanayam, Mr. C. S.
Venkatapatiraju, Mr. B.
Vishindas, Mr. H.
Willson, Mr. W. S. J.

NOES—53.

Abdul Quadir, Maulvi.
Abdur Rahim Khan, Mr.
Abdul Rahman, Munshi.
Achariyar, Rao Bahadur P. T.
Srinivasa.
Ahsan Khan, Mr. M.
Aiyar, Mr. A. V. V.
Aiyer, Sir P. S. Sivaswamy.
Akram Hussain, Prince A. M. M.
Allen, Mr. B. C.
Amjad Ali, Maulvi.
Bagde, Mr. K. G.
Barua, Mr. D. C.
Blackett, Sir Basil.
Bradley-Birt, Mr. F. B.
Bray, Mr. Denys.
Brayne, Mr. A. F. L.
Bridge, Mr. G.
Burdon, Mr. E.
Cabell, Mr. W.
Chatterjee, Mr. H. L.
Clark, Mr. A. C.
Cotton, Mr. G. S.
Cotton, Mr. J. P.
Crookshank, Sir Sydney.
Faridoonji, Mr. R.
Gidney, Lieut. Col. H. A. J.
Ginwala, Mr. P. P.

Haigh, Mr. P. B.
Hailey, the Honourable Sir Malcolm.
Hindley, Mr. C. D. M.
Holme, Mr. H. E.
Hullah, Mr. J.
Ikramullah, Khan, Raja Mohd.
Innes, the Honourable Mr. C. A.
Ley, Mr. A. H.
Lindsay, Mr. Darcy.
Man Singh, Bhai.
Mitter, Mr. K. N.
Moir, Mr. T. E.
Muhammad Hussain, Mr. T.
Muhammad Ismail, Mr. S.
Nand Lal, Dr.
Nayar, Mr. K. M.
Percival, Mr. P. E.
Pyari Lal, Mr.
Sams, Mr. H. A.
Sarfaraz Hussain Khan, Mr.
Schamnad, Mr. Mahmood.
Shahab-ud-Din, Chaudhri.
Singh, Mr. S. N.
Sinha, Babu L. P.
Spence, Mr. R. A.
Townsend, Mr. C. A. H.
Webb, Sir Montagu.

The motion was negatived.

Move of the Legislature to the Hills.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: Sir, now that the Government have carried the day and as it has now been, so far as this House is concerned, established that the Executive Council should go to the Hills, my proposition reduces itself to this, that the Legislature should not move to the Hills.

Sir, something may be said in favour of the proposition that the Government which is largely manned by gentlemen from England who are accustomed to a cold climate should not be asked to remain in a hot place, but there can be no excuse, so far as Indians are concerned, for claiming that they should have the same privileges as are enjoyed by the Executive Government. We are born in this country and most of our lives have been spent in hot places and it seems to be unpardonable that we should claim the right to go to the Hills at the expense of the poor people of this country. Some of us, no doubt, Sir, do like to go to the hill station in order to recoup our health. If this has to be done, we must do it at our own expense and not at the expense of the people of this country. That is a point which I hope my friends will remember in speaking on this proposition and in voting upon this proposition. Sir, when I had an opportunity on the very first occasion some years ago of moving in this House this proposition, I asked the question: Is there any other country in which there are two different Legislatures, one at a place wherein the Legislature sits for six months, and another at a place where the Legislature sits for another six months? I do not think there is any parallel for what we have in this country.

Sir Montagu Webb: Sir, on a point of order, may I ask to which motion the Honourable Member is speaking?

Mr. President: He is moving the second part of Munshi Iswar Saran's motion.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: Sir, this is without any precedent and without any parallel. I think, Sir, as has been pointed out by my friend, Mr. Rangachariar, the country as a whole wants that we should not follow the bad example which has been set by the Executive Government by moving to the Hills. And I think we must show some sacrifice by refusing to go to the Hills and by consenting to work in the plains and that, Sir, will show to the country that we are really looking to the interests of the people and not looking after our own interests. I do not think, Sir, it is necessary to say much because a great deal has been said already. I move the motion standing in the name of Munshi Iswar Saran, namely:

"That the provision for Hill Journey charges wherever they occur be reduced by one rupee."

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: This is another of those herrings which, if I consulted only the immediate interests of my friend, Sir Basil Blackett, I should like to see trailed across the course of the discussion of the demands for grants—the question whether, if the Government of India goes to the Hills, the Assembly should not do so. May I hope that my friend, Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar, will not again advance the argument which he just used, that it is necessary for the Government of India to go to the Hills because it is so largely the concern of Englishmen. Believe me, I think there are very few Englishmen here who would claim that exceptional privilege purely on that ground. Certainly I should never think of doing so. It is quite obvious that there are a large number of Indian Members of this House also who consider that a move to the Hills is in present circumstances advisable. But taking the question whether, even if the Government of India goes to the Hills, the Legislature should not go there, may I point out to Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar that what he has put forward is not a proposition that would lead to the reduction of expenditure but one which would lead at present to some increase. For if the Government of India goes to the Hills and stays there, and the Legislature comes here, then it is clear that the Government of India—or a large part of it—would have to move down here at a considerable expense and the expenditure on the whole would probably be increased over the extra expenditure involved in the Legislature going up to Simla instead of meeting in Delhi.

[Sir Malcolm Hailey.]

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: What about the cost of the permanent buildings?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: The House on a previous occasion decided against Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar by voting 67 to 21 that the permanent buildings in New Delhi should go forward, and I take it that that, therefore, is a matter which has been settled.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: I am speaking of the permanent buildings in Simla.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: The permanent buildings are already in Simla, and I say it would cost very little more for this House to go to Simla to meet the Government of India, whereas, on the other hand, we should certainly be involved in a great deal of extra expenditure if the Government of India or a large part of it were to come down to meet the Legislature here. For I suppose that the Legislature would hardly like to come here and for the Government of India not even to pay them the compliment of appearing on the Benches. Then again, there would of course be very considerable expenditure in other directions connected with their visit. I would again repeat, that this, for the present moment, is not really a practical proposition. Let us wait until our Legislative Chambers in New Delhi are built. They are being completed, as I have said before, under a deliberate decision of this Assembly. A vote which has been repeated not once but twice, a vote which involved full discussion, much consideration and an expression of very decided opinion on behalf of certain members. Am I wrong, Sir, is my recollection betraying me, that Mr. Rangachariar himself told us in the course of one of our discussions that there was an occasion when in the hot weather he swooned on the platform of the Delhi Railway station? I can only congratulate him, on the fact that he has now found it possible to face with greater equanimity the rigours of our Northern summer and I congratulate my friend Sir Sydney Crookshank on the efforts he has made to make Mr. Rangachariar comfortable in Raisina.

Dr. Nand Lal: Sir, I am afraid most of us are becoming sentimentalists. We ought to show to the world outside the House that we are practical Legislators. In the name of economy arguments have been advanced and those arguments have been based on the ground that our countrymen are living in the hot places and why should we as Legislators go to Simla and enjoy the salubrious climate of that place? If it were not the question of real economy against the motion according to my way of thinking, I would have shared the view of the author of this amendment. But I am afraid he had not sufficient time to look into the items and to come to the right conclusion as good arithmetician, in order to see whether the arguments, which have been advanced by the Mover in favour of savings, are good and acceptable or not. Let us take the economic phase of the question. Have we got houses built in Simla? And if these Legislators live in Simla will there be additional expense? I think the whole House would have to admit that there will be no additional expense at all. We have got houses here in Delhi at Raisina, similarly we have got houses there at Simla. If we cease to go to Simla, if the exodus to Simla is not accepted, then those houses there will remain vacant. Who will be responsible for the cost of repairs? What answer have you got for that? Do you mean to say that after we have spent lakhs and lakhs of rupees in building those houses, those houses should remain vacant or that we should invite tenants to go and occupy them? Are you really serious? Now, let us take the question of travelling allowance. I think none of us can advance this argument that this Assembly should hold its sittings for 12 months. You shall have to admit that there must be some interval. If this Assembly will sit for three months in the winter at Delhi, there must be a summer session also, because we have to discuss the most important questions which may crop up in that season. If it is admitted that there will be no additional expense in our going to Simla, then naturally there will be no harm if we sit there and discuss these important questions at Simla. Another point which might have troubled my learned friends from Madras is that it is a very cold country. That is the only argument which was advanced a year before and which is for all intents and purposes advanced this time, too. Well, I say that if you are afraid of winter, then Delhi is as cold for you in winter as Simla will be in summer. It does not make any difference. On that score also, I may say, that your argument has not got much force. There is another point which supports my argument in opposition to this amendment, and that is this. The quality of work depends on mentality. I ask the gentlemen who are the authors of this amendment whether they will be able to apply their minds to the important work here at Delhi in summer or there at Simla? Once upon a time I took a note of the amount of work which we had done at Simla in the summer and then I tried to find out the amount of work which we had done here at Delhi and the result which I arrived at was that despatch of work at Simla was much more and better in quality than that in Delhi. Is there any Member of this Assembly to question the correctness of this result? If there is any I shall welcome him. Then, Sir, do you want to perform your duty efficiently and properly or not? If you simply want to say, purely on sentimental grounds, that, "If our countrymen are living in the plains why should we live in Simla?" my answer to it would be "Do not take your motor cars here. Do not drive in them. Do not charge any allowance at all, if you want to make a sacrifice, if you have got real sympathy with the people. There is no sympathy at all if you say, "We do not want to go to Simla, we shall sit here and charge the allowance all the same." There is no practical sympathy in it. Here, my learned friend Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas changed his clothes the other day. I asked him, "Hullo! summer has arrived?" He says "I cannot stand the heat". My learned friend has summer clothes just now on and that is a testimony which I can rely on. If this Legislature will not have the exodus to Simla, I am afraid the House will be very thin. Some of you fall sick and your doctor's bill will be very heavy. I wish you may have an experience of stopping here in summer in Delhi; then you will come to know. I am sure that none of you will then have the courage nor desire to move any motion or any amendment in regard to this matter. Then, Sir, to discuss the question of so-called touch or contact, I may say, it does not make any difference. You will remain in contact with your country at Simla. You will be in contact with your people at Simla.

[Dr. Nand Lal.]

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: Who are they?

Dr. Nand Lal: There are the newspapers. Do you mean to say that the Post Office will be stopped if you go to Simla? There will be no such thing at all. At Simla you will have the same channels of information which you could have in Delhi. There is therefore no force in this argument that we shall not be in close touch with the people if we are there. We shall be able to read from the newspapers what the conditions of the country are and what the views of the people are. That we do always. Does any of you go personally to your constituents individually to inquire how they feel and what their opinion is? Do they come to you at Delhi? You collect your information, you gather your information from the papers. Sometimes you receive letters. Therefore, this argument that we shall be far away from our countrymen has got no force. Allow me to point out that Simla is within your country. Simla is not separate from your country. Those who are living in Madras or Bombay may now be very well-informed that Simla is within British India and it is a part of our country. It is as good

5 P.M. a part as our Delhi. Now, the argument has been advanced that this Provincial Council and that Provincial Council decided in this way, and in that way. I may inform my learned friends, who pose to be well-informed,—and I am afraid they have betrayed their ignorance of what is going on in the country—that the Punjab Provincial Council some time back has passed a resolution in favour of the exodus to Simla, and here my Honourable friend on the right has very rightly informed me that a great majority of that House decided in favour of going to Simla and I am told that one of the reasons, which were assigned there, was that we would be able to put forward intelligent work at Simla. Bombay and Madras members have got little justification to be in support of this amendment. (A Voice: “Bombay is not.”) They did not take part in the debate but so far as the voting goes they, if my information is correct, sided with the other side. They are near the sea coast, as you know. They have, in summer, certainly a better breeze, which we may call technically sea breeze. They do not want any sort of change and they think that if the Council will sit here at Delhi it will not make any difference to them. Instead of attending this Assembly regularly and punctually and its full session they, in any case some of them, may not come here, for some days when it is very hot in Delhi and very nice at their sea coast. The correctness of my view on the point will be verified, if once, at least, as an experiment, this Assembly sits here in Delhi in the summer. I think the result of that will go to corroborate my argument which I am placing now before the House. I do not wish to make it a question of sentiment. We should try and assist this House by our views which can stand the test of practicability. On these grounds, Sir, I oppose this amendment which I am sure will be thrown out as its predecessor was thrown out.

Colonel Sir Sydney Crookshank (Public Works Department Secretary): Sir, as Honourable Members appear to be looking forward with great keenness to the day when they will be able to sit in Delhi in Session year in and year out, if I have the permission of the Chair to digress for a moment I will inform them how soon their expectations in this direction will be fulfilled. In 1924 electric light and power, irrigation, sanitation, miscellaneous, and railway diversion works in connection with the construction of the New Capital will be completed; the year 1925 will see the completion of the Secretariats and other buildings, that is to say, residential and such like buildings, the communications, and miscellaneous public improvements; lastly towards the end of 1926 Government House and the Legislative Chambers will, it is hoped, be complete and ready for occupation.

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas: I rise to give my support to the amendment moved by my Honourable friend Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar and I want the House to consider the question on its own merits. I do not want the House to be led astray by the remarks that have been made by my Honourable friend, Dr. Nand Lal, that it is only from a sentimental point of view that we from Bombay and Madras look upon the exodus to Simla as in itself undesirable. Now, the Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey replying to the arguments of Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar said that so far as the question of expenditure was concerned it would not only make no reduction in expenditure but that it would increase by reason of the Legislature not going up to Simla and the Government of India having to move to and fro from Simla to Delhi. We have lost the first amendment moved by my Honourable friend, Munshi Iswar Saran. What remains now for us to do is to pass this amendment so that we can compel indirectly the hands of the Government of India to suspend their intention of going to Simla. I know that if the Legislature is prepared to undergo this self-sacrifice of not going to Simla and is prepared to sit and legislate in Delhi the Government of India cannot with any sense of reason afford to go and spend their days in Simla. I want the House also to take another thing into consideration. It is not merely, after all when you come to look at it—not merely the financial aspect of the question that ought to weigh with this Legislature. I for one have absolutely no doubt that it would pay, that it would be a financially lesser burden on the country if we decide to remain for all time in Delhi, but there is another aspect of the question. I want every Honourable Member of this House to put this question seriously to himself. Is it possible for us for all time altogether to legislate for the country sitting in Simla? Are we really in touch with public opinion when we are far away in the clouds of the Himalayas? Are we really in a mood to legislate in the proper way for the country sitting in that far distant places where we have to take a few days before we acclimatize ourselves to the weather and secondly the weather conditions are such that they are not suitable to the exigencies of the modern way of living? I want the House also to consider the question from this point of view. At present we sit in the year about 2½ months here and about a month or less than a month in Simla. This is not going to be the case for all time to come. I was informed that the Parliament in England has to sit for 9 or 10 months in the year. I look forward to a time and I hope that time will come very soon, when people will take seriously to the service of the country and we shall have to sit not merely 2½ months here and one month in Simla, but for 9 or 10 months continually. (Cries of: “No, no.”) There can be no royal road to the service of a vast country like India and if there are people who will come out to serve the country by entering Legislatures they must put aside ideas of comfort. The most predominant idea should be to serve the country best at the least cost to the country and at the maximum sacrifice of everyone who is called upon to render service to the country. If you have that conception of service and if you place side by side with that conception the idea of having a comfortable time in Simla and legislating sitting in that Chamber,—they are more to suit the convenience of the powers that be rather than to suit the convenience of the country—well, I can only say this that there are other people besides ourselves in this country who whatever may be our differences with them are prepared to bear the exigencies of the climate and all the sacrifices that they may have to undergo for the purpose of rendering the best service to the country. I wonder if the House decides in favour of going and legislating in Simla whether it is really carrying out the wishes of the country in this matter. As has been pointed out, it is for years now that this cry against the exodus to Simla has been raised. The powers that be are out of touch with public opinion. Look at what is happening in India for the last three years. Perhaps that argument had less force in it a number of years ago than it has to-day. Before 1912 and 1913 perhaps public opinion had not been so developed in this country. Perhaps political consciousness had not reached the stage which it has reached to-day. Is it safe, I ask the Members of this House, and the powers that be in the interests of this country that while eventful things are happening every day in this country, when the political consciousness is so raised that you have got to be in touch with everything that is going on in all parts of the country that you should go and legislate at a place which seems to me the most distant place for being informed of what is happening in the country. We have to take a very serious view of our duties. I am afraid I must inform the House that in dealing with this question you cannot afford to take a light view. You cannot afford to treat the question from the point of view of your comfort or from the point of view of your convenience. What does your convenience matter compared with the convenience and comfort of the country, compared to the duties which you are taking upon yourself for doing your best to serve the country. I say it to the Government that it is no longer safe that they should remain away from touch with the public opinion of the country for such a long time as seven or eight months. I know myself when we discussed this question in 1921 we were told "Oh, you are all new. You wait here and spend a year or two and then you will find the advantages of Simla". Well, Sir, we have had sufficient time at our disposal to compare the respective merits of legislating in Simla and of legislating in Delhi. As regards the argument that my Honourable friend has advanced that in Simla we have done the work with more despatch, the record of the Legislative Assembly will speak for itself. I do hold in spite of what my Honourable friend has said that we have done far more important work in Delhi than we have done in Simla. That is an argument that does not arise. If my Honourable friend will not understand it, I cannot help it. I said that that argument is outside the question. The question is this. As a body representing public opinion in this country, entrusted to serve this country by means of our Membership of the Legislative Assembly, we cannot afford to be out of touch with public opinion. We cannot afford to allow the powers that be to go right away from public opinion. We must bring them into the centre of things. We must see that we locate ourselves in the centre of things, so that we may know what is going on outside the country and what is going on outside may affect our doings, as it is intended that it should affect in the Legislature. You cannot treat this question lightly. I think the effect of your going to Simla will be, I may be pardoned for saying so, that you take a very light view of our duties towards those who have sent us to legislate for them. Both from the financial point of view and also from the patriotic point of view of doing our duty to the country, it seems to me that we are approaching the time when we shall have to work far more and for a longer number of months than we are doing now. I believe it is necessary that we should consider the question from the proper standpoint and decide to remain in Delhi at whatever cost we may have to do it. I heartily support the motion and I hope Honourable Members will voice the public opinion of the country held for a long number of years if they support this motion. Only one more point. In 1920 we were told that the point was raised by the Imperial Council. If I remember rightly, one of the Members of the Government, my Honourable friend Mr. Sarma was a strong advocate, if I am not mistaken, of the policy of remaining in Delhi and not going to Simla. I do not know whether it was in 1920 that my Honourable friend held that view.

[Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas.]

The Honourable Mr. B. N. Sarma (Revenue and Agriculture Member): I never expressed that view.

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas: If I am not mistaken in 1921 when he was a Member of the Government he took a different view. I do not also know this, and my Honourable friend Mr. Rangachariar referred to it in the course of the discussion in 1921, that my Honourable friend, Mr. Sarma, took the other view at one time.

The Honourable Mr. B. N. Sarma: Mr. Rangachariar was mistaken. I never expressed an opinion on the question of the exodus to Simla.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: How did you vote?

The Honourable Mr. B. N. Sarma: I may inform Honourable Members that I was absent from Delhi when the Honourable Mr. Srinivasa Sastri raised the question. So there was no question of voting.

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas: That gives me one more argument to strengthen my case. I wonder how I forgot all about that argument. The Right Honourable Srinivasa Sastri can be said to have more experience than any one of us of the sitting both here in Delhi and in Simla. The Right Honourable gentleman has certainly a better idea of his duties to the country than many people have and I believe that his opinion at any rate ought to count but

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: I was present in connection with that debate. The Honourable Mr. Srinivasa Sastri complained greatly of Delhi and said that it was impossible to open your mouth without getting a fly down into it. I wish merely to mention that point.

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas: I hope my Honourable friend will not try to win me away from my support of Delhi. I believe the Right Honourable Srinivasa Sastri complained of Delhi, because it was probably in his mind

[15TH MARCH 1923.]

- (b) Whether the Sind Rajputana District consists merely of Nasirabad Brigade, the troops at Karachi and Hyderabad Sind, and small detachments at other cantonments which were formerly under the Mhow Division or the Bombay Brigade?
- (c) Whether approximately three quarters of the area under the Military charge of the Western Command is desert and very sparsely inhabited?
- (d) Whether the only portion of the North-West Frontier under the charge of Western Command is that extending from south, near Wana, to near Duzdap, in addition to the remainder of the frontiers of Sind-Baluchistan?
- (e) Whether under the circumstances, Western Command may not well be abolished?

Mr. E. Burdon: (a) Yes; and also Waziristan, which though temporarily under the direct control of Army Headquarters, forms part of the Western Command. I may add that the Baluchistan District includes a very considerable tract in the Zhob area.

(b) The Sind-Rajputana district comprises—

- (1) The defended port of Karachi;
- (2) The troops at Karachi;
- (3) The troops at Hyderabad (Sind); and
- (4) The Nasirabad Brigade area with headquarters, two battalions, and one battery at Nasirabad, and detachments at Ahmedabad, Ajmere, Baroda and Deesa.

(c) A large portion of the area controlled by the Western Command is desert and sparsely inhabited.

(d) The frontier line at present controlled by the Western Command extends from Wana along the Afghan frontier to Chaman, thence to Duzdap, thence southwards to the Persian Gulf, a distance in all of approximately 1,100 miles, or about two-thirds of the total extent of the North-West Frontier of India.

(e) There is no intention at present of abolishing the Western Command.

Mr. W. M. Hussanally: May I know, Sir, what is the number of troops stationed at Karachi and Hyderabad, (Sind)?

Mr. E. Burdon: I could not give you the exact figure offhand.

MR. LALKAKA OF THE KARACHI CUSTOM HOUSE.

564. Mr. Harchandral Vishindas: (a) Will Government be pleased to state if Mr. Lalkaka, an Assistant Collector, in the Karachi Custom House, is proceeding on leave shortly?

(b) If so, will Government be pleased to state if they will appoint as his successor an Indian or an Anglo-Indian?

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: (a) and (b) Mr. Lalkaka has applied for leave, but his leave has not yet been sanctioned. Government are not in a position to say what arrangements will be made if the leave is granted.

MESSAGE FROM THE COUNCIL OF STATE.

Secretary of the Assembly: Sir, a Message has been received from the Secretary of the Council of State, intimating that, in accordance with Rule 36 (3), of the Indian Legislative Rules, the amendments made by the Legislative Assembly in the Bill further to amend the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, and the Court-fees Act, 1870, were taken into consideration by the Council of State at its meeting on the 13th March, 1923, that the Council of State has made certain further amendments to the amendments made by the Legislative Assembly, and that the Council of State has agreed to the remaining amendments made by the Legislative Assembly. A copy of the Bill, as further amended, has been sent along with the Message.

THE BUDGET—LIST OF DEMANDS.

SECOND STAGE—contd.

DEMAND NO. 14—GENERAL ADMINISTRATION—contd.

Mr. President: The Assembly will now resume consideration of Demand No. 14; the question put from the Chair having been:

"That a sum not exceeding Rs. 74,00,000 be granted to the Governor General in Council to defray the charge which will come in course of payment during the year ending the 31st day of March, 1924, in respect of 'General Administration'."

Private Secretary to His Excellency the Viceroy—Postage and Telegram charges.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar (Madras City: Non-Muhammadan Urban): Sir, I beg to move:

"That the provision for Postage and Telegram charges under the sub-head 'Private Secretary to His Excellency the Viceroy' be reduced by Rs. 25,000."

Honourable Members will see this entry at page 37 of the Demand. Last year we voted Rs. 80,000 for this purpose and from the revised statement furnished to us, Honourable Members will find that this vote was exceeded by a sum of Rs. 40,000 and the reason given before the Finance Committee was this—at page 40 of the proceedings of the Standing Finance Committee, dated the 29th January, etc:

"Supplementary grant of Rs. 40,000 required to meet the excess expenditure incurred under the head of Postage and Telegram charges over the budget estimate for the Private Secretary to His Excellency the Viceroy."

The Committee agreed to the demand being put forward but viewed with anxiety the large increase in expenditure, which was understood to be mainly due to Telegraph charges. The Committee wanted to know if certain economies could not be effected in respect of Express Inland Telegrams by giving priority to ordinary Government telegrams over other telegrams at ordinary rates, and whether foreign cables could not more frequently be sent at Deferred rates; and there were some reasons given for this. Honourable Members will see that in that most eventful year, 1919-20, when Lord Chelmsford was Viceroy, the expenditure on Postage and Telegrams was only Rs. 95,604, and the next year, 1920-21, which was also an eventful year in the country, the expenditure was only Rs. 1,06,444. But in the year 1921-22, after His Excellency Lord Reading assumed charge, the Postage and Telegram charges rose to Rs. 1,87,961, and last year, as I have already said, we voted Rs. 80,000 and they came forward with a demand for a further demand of Rs. 40,000, so that the revised estimate stands at Rs. 1,20,000. Sir, this matter was investigated by the Inchcape Committee and Honourable Members will find references to it on pages 128 and 141. I may mention that telegraph charges and postal charges are incurred under the head "General Administration" in various Departments and directly under the control of His Excellency the Viceroy there is the Foreign and Political Department which incurs a very large sum under this head annually. That is, this sum incurred in the Private Secretary's office is in addition to this large sum spent in the Foreign and Political Department. On page 128 of the Inchcape Committee's Report, paragraph 10, it is said:

[Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar.]

"The cost of the telegrams despatched by the departments during 1921-22 was approximately Rs. 3,33,000, the heaviest expenditure being incurred by the Foreign and Political Department (Rs. 1,35,000)."

The Army Department comes next and next comes the Home Department:

"We are of the opinion that a large curtailment in the number and length of telegrams could be effected without any loss of efficiency."

Turning to the other side, Sir, from which the wire is pulled—I mean London—on page 141, paragraph 45, it is said:

"There has been a large increase in expenditure on telegrams, contingencies and miscellaneous items."

If Honourable Members will just pause and think over the figure of Rs. 1,00,000 and Rs. 1,80,000 spent on telegrams, it comes to Rs. 300 and odd per diem and nearly Rs. 10,000 per mensem—More than a Governor's pay is sometimes spent in one Department alone on this part of the administration. Sir, we have been told that we are ruled from Whitehall. Yesterday we tried to avoid the reproach that we are ruled from the heights of Simla. But I think it is a truth to say that now-a-days the wire is being pulled too often from Whitehall and that perhaps accounts for the large expenditure incurred in telegrams, and I am afraid that His Excellency's Government is not allowed that free and full play which they ought to have in the exercise of their responsible duties in this country. That accounts perhaps for the high amounts incurred in these various matters. I do think, Sir, in all conscience, that now-a-days the mails are so rapidly taken from place to place—London is only within about 13 or 14 days' reach,—probably from Delhi it may be about 16 days' reach,—and that being so why this large expenditure should be incurred in telegraph charges is rather difficult to see. We have not increased the cost of telegrams after we came into power here. Any increase there was was in the year 1920 before this new Legislature came into existence and therefore that does not account for this increased cost and increased number of telegrams. Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas referred us the other day to a passage in the Acworth Committee's Report where they make a reference to the extraordinary control from London over the question—I think it was—of some purchase.

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas: (Bombay City: Non-Muhammadan Urban): Foremen's salary and promotion.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: Over the question whether certain foremen should get promotion or not. If in such matters public money is to be spent in this extravagant scale, I think, Sir, the Assembly ought to record its opinion in a matter like that. The Foreign and Political Department and the Private Secretary's Office being under the control of His Excellency the Viceroy we have to help the Finance Department in this matter. They are rather in a delicate and awkward situation. They cannot exercise that wholesome check which they do exercise over other Departments. Their position is somewhat delicate and awkward, and therefore the Legislature has to come to the aid of the Finance Department in a matter like this, and I think, Sir, it is but proper that we should cut down the vote under this head. I propose that Rs. 75,000 be allowed under this head. That is a very large sum having regard to the fact that it is only for the Private Secretary's Office. Honourable Members will also notice if they turn down the page that there is a sum of Rs. 5,000 and odd which is to be spent by the Military Secretary in telegrams and postal charges, and if Honourable Members will turn over a page or two, they will find the Foreign and Political Department spending nearly Rs. 2,00,000 in postages, telegrams and contingencies, so that it is a very large sum which we are voting really and I do not think we are doing any injustice in this matter by urging this motion. I think we should impress upon those people who are responsible for this expenditure that we, as an Assembly, do insist upon economy in these matters because people are apt to be negligent. It is these small amounts which go to pile up the large amount which the country has to pay and now-a-days I think every pie saved will be to our credit. I do press this motion for the acceptance of the House.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey (Home Member): I had better explain exactly to the House what these postage and telegram charges are. We are of course considering not postal and telegraph charges connected with the Government of India as a whole but those which are despatched from the Private Secretary's Office. Now, these are of three classes. In the first place there are, of course, a number of telegrams despatched between His Excellency the Viceroy and the various heads of Provinces and the like in India. Those are included under this head. Work now-a-days proceeds—though perhaps it is not always admitted I know myself to be right in claiming this—much more rapidly than in the old days. A far greater variety of questions come up. Political situations arise very rapidly and they have to be dealt with with equal rapidity. That is the first class. The second class of telegrams provided for are those between the Viceroy and the Secretary of State. No one would hold that it is advisable that His Excellency the Viceroy should be debarred from constant communication and in the most rapid fashion with the Home Government. There are continually now-a-days questions of Imperial importance—take only such questions as those of Kenya—in which His Excellency's constant intervention is required or such questions, again, as the Turkish peace settlement. Communication on such topics cannot, owing to the rapidity with which events move, be conducted by letter. Everybody must in short agree that it is to the advantage of the State that His Excellency the Viceroy should remain in the closest touch with the Cabinet at Home.

Mr. Rangachariar has suggested that this all tends to regulation from Whitehall. I hope the House will not allow itself to be swayed by a suggestion of this nature. If Whitehall was going to regulate us, they could do so just as easily by letter, and indeed, on the whole, the constant facility of correspondence and of communication between the Home Government and His Excellency the Viceroy is one great means of preventing any such regulation. The Viceroy by means of telegrams can place himself almost in close touch with the Cabinet which is necessary to explain our views and position. The third class which contributes very largely to this expenditure is cipher telegrams sent from the Government of India. When our Departments have to send telegrams in cipher and on many occasions they have to do so—they pass through the Private Secretary's Office. That is as a measure of convenience because we can concentrate in one place the coding and de-coding arrangements. As to the cost that has been incurred in the past, Mr. Rangachariar had the figures correctly. In 1920-21 the cost was Rs. 1,06,000. In 1921-22 I admit there was a burst of expenditure (Rs. 1,87,000) but we are proposing in this year only Rs. 1,00,000. Therefore as between 1921-22 and the coming year we shall already be spending less by Rs. 87,000, and as between 1920-21 and the coming year we should be spending less by Rs. 6,000. I am only putting the case on those grounds and I suggest to the House that it is not well to attempt to curtail a communication of this nature between His Excellency the Viceroy and the Home Government.

[Sir Malcolm Hailey.]

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas: I hope the House will try to look at the question from the point of view of the interests of India in this matter. The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey has tried to answer my Honourable friend, Mr. Rangachariar's arguments by saying that on important questions like those of Kenya and the Turkish question the Viceroy has to communicate with the Home Government by means of telegrams. Now, Sir, I believe that the Honourable the Home Member could not have chosen worse instances to strengthen his argument in support of telegrams, for if there are two questions on which a considerable delay and an unjustifiable delay has caused a good deal of inconvenience to this country they are those questions of Kenya and the Turkish question. (The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: "Our delay?"). Ever since the beginning of this Session—and I think I myself was instrumental in putting a question or two on this subject—every day we inquired whether any cable had been received and the answer was in the negative. (The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: "You are referring to despatches.") On Imperial questions which seemed to be a strong point in the argument of my Honourable friend, Sir Malcolm Hailey, on Imperial questions on which this country no doubt feels very keenly, delay cannot be avoided by the increase in the expenditure on telegrams. Personally I feel that if we had the figures before us, if we had details of telegrams exchanged on Imperial questions and the telegrams on questions in which this House would consider the constant interference of the Secretary of State a most undesirable thing—if we had details of those we would have no difficulty in finding out that the cost of telegrams which come under the latter category is much heavier than the cost of the telegrams exchanged on Imperial questions on which Whitehall does not help us much in solving our problems. I was also anxious to know from the Honourable the Home Member whether the cost of the telegrams exchanged between the Provincial Governors and the Secretary of State was included in this and so far as my recollection goes (The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: "It does not include it.") Then the case is still worse. This does not include the cost of the telegrams which are exchanged between the Provincial Governors and the Secretary of State. Perhaps I do not know whether this is the right time to protest against this practice but look at what this means. The Viceroy has a certain policy. The Provincial Governors have their own views. They communicate direct with the Secretary of State and the Secretary of State in the light of the telegrams received from the Provincial Governors sends his instructions to the Viceroy. The Viceroy answers and the whole business of sending telegrams from here to Whitehall and from the provinces to Whitehall and back from Whitehall to provinces and back from Whitehall to the Viceroy—the whole business is multiplied. It is high time that we did put a stop to this in the interests of the country itself because the sanctioning of these telegram charges means countenancing and encouraging the continuous interference of the Secretary of State with the carrying on of the Government of India. I strongly support the amendment moved by Mr. Rangachariar.

Mr. N. M. Joshi (Nominated: Labour Interests): I only wish to add a few remarks to those that have already been made. Mr. Rangachariar has seen some danger in giving a large amount to His Excellency the Viceroy for his cablegrams, posts and such like communications. But, Sir, I see another constitutional danger in giving large amounts of money to His Excellency the Viceroy. If His Excellency the Viceroy can very easily be in communication with the Secretary of State, to that extent he will begin to depend for advice and guidance upon the Secretary of State more and more than upon his Executive Councillors and the Legislatures. That is, Sir, the greatest danger from my point of view. His Excellency the Viceroy is, after all, a constitutional ruler and we want him to be guided by the Members of His Executive Council and by the Legislatures in India.

Mr. President: The Honourable Member cannot go deep into constitutional questions. Telegrams are, after all, only a means of communication.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: I do not wish to go deep into the matter. I only wanted to point out the danger of placing a very large sum at the disposal of His Excellency the Viceroy for telegrams.

Sir Montagu Webb (Bombay: European): The Honourable the Home Member stated, I think, that a large portion of this expenditure went in the despatch of code telegrams on behalf of the Foreign Office and other Departments. Would it not be better, as a matter of accounting, if, where telegrams are sent on behalf of the various Departments, the charges were debited to those Departments so as not to swell artificially the debit to the Private Secretary to His Excellency the Viceroy?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: I will examine that point and see whether it would be convenient to adjust the account. As I say, the convenience of the present arrangement is that the coding and decoding staff is kept in one place and we utilise it. I do not want in any way to extend this discussion, for as you, Sir, have said yourself, we seem to be dipping rather deep into constitutional matters on a question of despatch of telegrams. But I must point out to the House that two very opposite views have been put forward to-day, one by Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas and by Mr. Rangachariar that the facility of sending telegrams helps the Secretary of State to overrule us; indeed there is a suggestion that the greater part of the telegrams that we despatch from here is by way of protest to the Secretary of State. On the other hand, Mr. Joshi's point of view is that the facility of sending telegrams, the fact that His Excellency the Viceroy knows that there is Rs. 25,000 more or less in the Private Secretary's budget for the purpose, may induce His Excellency to enter into an unholy alliance with the Secretary of State against the Members of the Executive Council. Take it one way or the other; but do not combine arguments so opposite as this in swaying your decision on this point.

[Sir Malcolm Hailey.]

Mr. President: The question is:

"That the provision for Postage and Telegram charges under the sub-head 'Private Secretary to His Excellency the Viceroy' be reduced by Rs. 25,000."

The motion was negatived.

Staff and Household of the Governor General—Tour expenses.

Mr. B. N. Misra (Orissa Division: Non-Muhammadan): Sir, I beg to move:

"That the provision for Tour expenses under sub-head 'Staff and Household of the Governor General' be reduced by Rs. 20,000."

We find in last year's budget the sum asked for was Rs. 3,65,000. We find that in the revised estimate the sum actually demanded was 4,32,700. Now we have been asked Rs. 4,26,900. We do not know whether when a supplementary budget comes like last year we shall be asked to vote for another Rs. 70,000. However assuming this figure to be correct I submit that the tour expenses form a very large amount. I do not mean to repeat my remarks of last year. I do not mean to say that His Excellency should not take special trains whenever His Excellency thinks this desirable. What I submit to the House is this. What object is gained by these tours of His Excellency. We know in olden times our rulers, the Rajas and Maharajas, used to go in disguise and find out what really the complaint and the grievances of the people were.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: How do you know that the Viceroy does not?

Mr. B. N. Misra: If that be the object even 40 lakhs may be spent to remedy the grievances of the people. We find that His Excellency's tours are either public or private. If it is a private tour, we find it in the papers that His Excellency will arrive on such and such a date at such and such a place and so on. Whether it is public or private, so far as the general public is concerned, they know very well where His Excellency is. Then, Sir, wherever His Excellency goes, we find that interviews are allowed. They are all practically arranged through application to the Private Secretary or whenever he happens to be in a mofussil through the District Magistrate and so on. And who are the persons that are allowed to interview His Excellency? If you will see the list of the interviewers you will find that they are Rai Bahadurs, Rai Sahibs, Khan Sahibs, Khan Bahadurs and so on.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: You might include Mr. Gandhi.

Mr. B. N. Misra: So far as I read the papers, Mahatma Gandhi came to see His Excellency. These men are generally either semi-Government men or demi-officials. I mean Rai Bahadurs and Khan Bahadurs or the officials. Further I do not know if my Honourable friends have read of or come to know of any instances in which His Excellency paid any visit in disguise and learnt from the common people their complaints against his administration or the oppressions of his subordinate officers at any place. I speak subject to correction. But as far as I know the papers say that His Excellency attended a ball, or a dance or gave a party or held a Durbar.

This is all that we find from paper and programmes published in Gazettes, etc. We see after the transfer of the capital to Delhi His Excellency has been invariably going to Calcutta and some other places every Christmas. Of course no other place can provide amusements and other things which Calcutta provides. If really the object is to find out how the people are living and how the administration is going on, His Excellency ought to divert his attention to other directions and I see no reason why he should always go to Calcutta or Burma and not to other parts of the country. We find also that when complaints are made to His Excellency personally, these complaints are sent to be dealt with by the departments and as a matter of practice that is systematically followed. These are forwarded to the local Governments who forward it to the Commissioners who forward it to the Collectors and District Magistrates who forward it to the sub-inspector of police and who again makes inquiries from the village chaukidar or dafadar and the complaints are again submitted to the District Magistrate, the Commissioner, the local Government and so on.

Mr. President: The Honourable Member cannot embark on a discussion on the entire administration on a vote for tour expenses.

Mr. B. N. Misra: My object is to show that the grievances of the people are not taken into consideration by His Excellency in his tour programmes. Many of these tours are made to the States, from which the British tax payers do not really derive any benefit. Most of these tours and tour expenses consist in visiting big States

(Cries of "Withdraw.")

Well, I do not mind withdrawing, if you think it is such a small matter. You propose to impose an additional tax on salt on the poor people and spend lakhs here. If that be the object, then I withdraw.

Mr. P. P. Ginzala (Burma: Non-European): Sir, before the motion is withdrawn

Mr. President: The motion cannot be withdrawn without the leave of the House.

Mr. P. P. Ginzala: Sir, I could not hear or follow the arguments of my Honourable friend on the opposite side. But whatever those arguments may be, I strongly oppose any reduction of this vote. I think the complaint is not that His Excellency the Viceroy and the Members of His Council, do too much touring but that they do not tour the country enough. If His Excellency the Viceroy does really wish to get acquainted with the country and wants to break away from the bureaucratic notions which he is bound to imbibe from the Government Benches, the safest thing he can do is to get away from both Delhi and Simla as often as he can and have a look at the outside Indian world. The immediate reason, however, why I got up to speak was with reference to my own province. During the last 22 years I believe only two Viceroys have visited that province, and I really do wish to know whether His Excellency is going to visit our province at all. When on former occasions a Viceroy did come, if he came during the first year of his office, and if we asked him to do anything he replied that he had not been long enough in the country: he must take time to consider and when he got back to Calcutta he forgot all about it. If a Viceroy came at the end of his term of office he said he was very sympathetic but he had no time left in which to give attention to our needs. Sir, I hope that on the present occasion the necessity of either kind of reply will be avoided by His Excellency the Viceroy coming to our province during the middle of his term of office.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: Sir, I of course cannot give any definite answer to Mr. Ginwala on the subject of a visit by His Excellency to Burma, though I can promise to convey to His Excellency as soon as possible what Mr. Ginwala has said on the subject.

The motion is being withdrawn and I am sure it is not the desire of the House that I should answer at length the arguments put forward by its Mover. But the House will permit me to say that, while it is fully within its competence to discuss the expenditure on His Excellency's tours, and the propriety of extending or restricting those tours, yet I am sure it will feel that any discussion which imputes to His Excellency motives of an undesirable nature in choosing one spot rather than another, or unsuitable motives in selecting his visitors and the like, is to be deprecated in this House. (Hear, hear.) I am sure that the Honourable Member did not really mean to overstep the bounds of what I may describe as delicacy in this respect, but certain observations did fall from him which I think might be somewhat misunderstood outside this House unless it was very clear that the House itself did not agree with the tenour of his remarks upon the subject. (Hear, hear.) That the House does not so agree is I think perfectly obvious from the attitude of the House in asking him to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Pyari Lal (Meerut Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I too oppose this amendment. (Cries of "He has withdrawn.") But I wish to make one observation and that is, that probably it is not generally known that most of His Excellency the Viceroy's tours are to the capitals of Indian Chiefs and Princes and these tours do a great deal of good. I wish that His Excellency would extend his tours in British India in the same way as he does in the Native States.

The amendment was, by leave of the Assembly, withdrawn.

Executive Council—Travelling and other allowances.

Munshi Iswar Saran (Cities of the United Provinces: Non-Muhammadan Urban): Sir, I beg to move:

"That the provision for travelling and other allowances under sub-head 'Executive Council' be reduced by Re. 1."

Sir, my object in bringing forward this proposition is not to ask that the travelling allowance be actually reduced, but it is to seek an opportunity to put before the House one or two matters of great importance. We find that the Acworth Committee as well as the Inchcape Committee have suggested the re-allocation of business between the various Members of the Executive Council. We find that the Acworth Committee as well as the Inchcape Committee are agreed that there should be one Honourable Member of the Executive Council in charge of Communications, which will include amongst other things Railways. Now, that being so, we would like to know if there is any prospect of these recommendations being given effect to in the near future? And if that be so, will Government take into consideration the strong feeling that exists amongst Indians that some of the Indian Members of the Executive Council should be put in charge of administrative Departments? There is a strong feeling on the subject as must have been plain to every body from the remarks made by different speakers on previous occasions. It is to reiterate those remarks and to insist again on the importance of its being taken into consideration

Mr. President: I want to provide the Honourable Member if possible with the opportunity of discussing that question; but I think it might be an unfortunate precedent if I allow him to discuss a question of that magnitude on so restricted a motion as a motion for reduction of travelling allowance. He had better reserve this question till I put again the total vote for General Administration. Then I think it will be the proper time to raise it, and I expect the Honourable Member to take his own opportunity of catching the eye of the Chair on that occasion.

Munshi Iswar Saran: Sir, you will please permit me to say that the effort to catch the eye is not the same thing as actually catching the eye.

Mr. P. P. Ginwala: I move:

"That the demand for tour expenses under sub-head Executive Council be reduced by Rs. 100."

Sir, I am afraid I am going to strike a provincial note once more in connection with this reduction proposed by me. I do not know whether it can be a real grievance for any province that Honourable Members of the Executive Council do not visit it at all. But in the case of my Province it happens to be a grievance I think and the time has arrived when it may be rectified. I know the Honourable the Home Member is in a very fortunate position. He has got one of our Secretaries in his office, who no doubt keeps him in the proper path and prevents him from making mistakes from pure ignorance of our conditions also has opportunities of supplementing his knowledge of the province by going through petitions for clemency which he gets at least four times a month and from which, I daresay he thinks he can gather the characteristics of my people. But apart from that, I venture to submit, that every Member of the Executive Council ought to make it his duty to visit this most interesting province which India possesses. This Assembly has got into the habit of complaining against the methods of Whitehall mainly on the ground of its colossal ignorance with regard to Indian affairs. I do not know whether I should apply that epithet to Honourable Members on the Treasury Benches with regard to Burma, but if I did I do not think I should be far wrong. There is one extenuating circumstance, however, in the ignorance of the Government of India about Burma, and that is that it is entirely indifferent to our affairs and therefore its ignorance does not do us so much harm as it might do. But the time for laissez faire is slowly passing away and it would be just as well that they should place themselves in a position to understand the various problems which unfortunately are bound to come up before them until we are able to claim our separation, our release, or rather our manumission from the Government of India. I know, how dangerous a thing it is sometimes to ask for a visit from any Member of the Government of India.—Mr. Innes was there I think for some time. He caught hold of all our rice I think, and he claimed that he made nine crores of rupees profits from this transaction. I do not know whether it was he who advised the Government or somebody else to make an attempt to stick to this amount, but the attempt was made and we eventually defeated them. But even if we should run a risk of this kind, we should welcome some sort of personal investigation into the problems of the province as long as they have to be determined by the Government of India or subject to the decision of the Government of India, and I would ask the Honourable the Home Member whether in these touring expenses any provision is made for a pilgrimage to my province (A Voice: "But there are elected Members here from that province.") I am afraid the elected Members cannot impart to the Government of India knowledge about places they have never seen. If any visit is contemplated I should like to know, which Honourable Members

3448

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

[15TH MARCH 1923.]

[Mr. P. P. Ginwala.]

intend to give us a visit, and whether it is going to be those American tourist visits of three days after which they will write their impressions in official documents and go entirely wrong, or whether there is going to be a really genuine visit which will give them some indication of our requirements. I move my motion.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That the Demand for Tour Expenses under sub-head 'Executive Council' be reduced by Rs. 100."

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: I quite recognize Mr. Ginwala's motives, Sir. But it is a queer way to get us to Burma by reducing the travelling expenses which are necessary to carry us there. But that is only incidental, and, of course, it was the only way open to him of approaching the question. When we discussed recently the question of His Excellency the Viceroy's tours, I ventured to suggest to the House that a little delicacy was required in approaching the matter. But when, Sir, you propose to cut the touring or other expenses of Members of the Executive Council, we are ready to admit that no delicacy was required at all, we are lambs ready for slaughter. Instead of that, Mr. Ginwala has extended to us a very charming invitation to his province. Now I believe that there are only two ambitions on the part of Members of the Executive Council. One is to see the end of the sittings of the Legislative Assembly, and the other is to get to Burma. I have again and again seen tours planned for Burma: again and again, unfortunate events have prevented their being carried out. This time, there are indications that at least two Members of Council are attempting to get there. For my own part I can only say that I hope they will be successful. The exact information therefore I cannot give to Mr. Ginwala, though I hope to be able to do so at a later date.

Mr. P. P. Ginwala: I ask, Sir, to be allowed to withdraw my motion. The motion was, by leave withdrawn.

Munshi Iswar Saran: In view of the suggestion made by you, I do not move No. 238.*

The motion was, by leave of the Assembly, withdrawn.

Dr. Nand Lal (West Punjab: Non-Muhammadan): I think, Sir, the provision is rightly demanded; therefore I do not propose to move these amendments. (Nos. 241 and 242).

Legislative Assembly—Daily allowance of non-official Members.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: Sir, I beg to move:

"That the provision for Daily Allowance of Non-official Members under sub-head 'Legislative Assembly' be reduced by Rs. 24,000."

† The Rs. 200 is an unnecessary addition. Honourable Members will notice, if they will turn to page 38 of the Demands, that the daily allowance provided for official and non-official Members of the Legislative Assembly for the year 1922-23 amounts to Rs. 95,960, and for the coming

* "That the provision for travelling and other allowances under sub-head 'Executive Council' be reduced by Re. 1."

† "List of motions,—No. 243, namely:

243. That the provision for daily allowance of non-official Members under the sub-head 'Legislative Assembly' be reduced by Rs. 24,200."

year they will amount to Rs. 1,20,000. I do submit, Sir, that there is a short paragraph in the Retrenchment Committee's Report which I think all of us should read, mark and inwardly digest; that is at page 127.

Mr. President: The Honourable Member is moving the reduction of daily allowance or of travelling allowance?

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: Daily allowance.

Mr. President: Then it is the larger figure.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: I will explain, Sir, how it is possible. I am sorry,—the daily allowance of official and non-official Members amounts to Rs. 2,84,200. At page 127 there is a very short and significant paragraph as regards this: "The large increase which has taken place in expenditure since 1913-14 is due to the appointment of full-time Presidents, since the expansion of the Councils, the longer sittings held under the reformed constitution, and the grant of more liberal allowances to Members present in Delhi and Simla. The bulk of the increase is inevitable, but we feel that the matter of reduction or otherwise in travelling and other allowances is one that should be left to the Legislature." Sir, reading between the lines, the Inchcape Committee, whose members were for the most part, it must be borne in mind, paid, hinted at a reduction. There is one rule to which I would draw particular attention, it seems to be erring on the side of extravagance, and that is this. The rule provides that Members who come here for 7 days before the actual meeting are entitled to draw daily allowance for 7 days, and you are also entitled to draw for seven days after the meeting is over. It seems to me a most extravagant allowance to allow such a long limit. I can understand 2 days, I can understand 3 days; I do not think, Sir, that for any meeting more than three days is really needed for us to come here or for us to stay after the meetings, either before or after the meetings begin. I hope Honourable Members will endorse that view. When we are preaching economy to the Government Benches, let us practise it ourselves and show to the Government that we are prepared to do, to forego extravagance. During the initial stages of the existence of this Assembly the Government were generous enough to make this provision and to make a handsome provision, and we are thankful to them for all the comforts they are providing us, but we do think we are provided with greater comfort than we need be. While we are grateful to them for this provision, we do think it is extravagant, and I therefore ask that the estimates which will be framed for the current year should be on the footing that only three days' allowance is granted either before or after the event. In this way, I have calculated the amount, assuming we have got two Sessions, you get a week beforehand, that is, 4 days beforehand and four days afterwards, that is 8 days, 8 plus 8, 16 days. Putting it at 15 days, and assuming that 50 Members will be drawing this on an average out of 150 Members, I think that it would not be a large sum which I propose to reduce. I have not asked for opinions. I have avoided going into personalities in this matter. If any Honourable Member considers it is a bad principle, do endorse it by your vote emphatically, but I do consider it is a very good principle I advocate and that we should affirm it, and I hope, Sir, the House will cut a fair amount. I should like to be informed, and I am quite prepared to substitute a nominal sum of Rs. 4,000 instead of Rs. 24,200—I am entirely in the hands of the Assembly in that matter, but it is the principle I wish to affirm, which is that this provision for seven days before and seven days after should be done away with. That is the object of my motion.

Mr. President: Motion moved:

"That the provision for Daily Allowance of Non-official Members under the sub-head 'Legislative Assembly' be reduced by Rs. 24,200."

Lala Girdharilal Agarwala (Agra Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural):

12 noon. Sir, I do not want to give a silent vote on this matter without strongly supporting the motion moved by my Honourable friend, Mr. Rangachariar. It is really very important that we should show some retrenchment in our own allowances and the case which has been rightly put by my Honourable friend appears to me just and proper. It is really not too much to expect Honourable Members to charge at the most for 6 days or 4 days or 3 days, as my Honourable friend says, both times put together. With these observations, I strongly support the motion.

Mr. R. A. Spence (Bombay: European): Sir, I should support, as I did before, the motion of my friend, Mr. Rangachariar if it was for the revised amount of Rs. 4,000. I think every one of us is agreed that seven days is far too much, but as was pointed out by Mr. Rangachariar there were very few people who draw that amount and the amount of Rs. 24,200 is therefore far in excess of the amount that would be saved by doing away with three days' allowances; and, therefore, as it is more than would be saved by doing away with the 3 days' allowances is it for us to cut down the allowances for Members of the next Assembly? Two years ago or three years ago, Sir, this Assembly voted this Assembly more money and more allowances—Rs. 20 instead of Rs. 15. Now, this Assembly's life is drawing to a close. Is it for any Member of this Assembly who is not absolutely certain that he is going to be a Member of the next Assembly to cut the allowances of the next Assembly? I say no, it is not. Acting in the interests of economy two years ago a number of us voted to reduce our own allowances and we quite rightly voted, although many of us sacrifice a great deal in coming here, and I suppose there is practically nobody in this Assembly who can say that he makes money out of coming here. But that is a very different matter. We should not cut more than the sum which would be saved by this very reasonable suggestion of my Honourable friend, Mr. Rangachariar, viz., that we should only be paid three days before and three days after we come here. But the sum of money which would be saved is only Rs. 4,000, and yet the motion before the House is to reduce the allowances by Rs. 24,000.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: You move an amendment.

Mr. R. A. Spence: If I may move an amendment to substitute the figure Rs. 4,000, I heartily do so. If we are to cut it by Rs. 24,000, I consider we would be in the wrong.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: We believe it will save about Rs. 10,000.

Mr. R. A. Spence: May I move an amendment that the allowances be cut down by Rs. 10,000?

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: I accept that amendment, Sir.

Mr. President: Further amendment moved:

"Substitute the figures '10,000' for the figures '24,200'."

The same purpose will be served if an assurance is given by Government that the suggested rule will be applied.

The Honourable Dr. Mian Sir Muhammad Shafi (Law Member): Sir, in regard to the definite proposal put forward in the amended motion, the position which Government propose to take is this. Should the decision of the Assembly be in favour of the motion as now amended, Government will carry that out in the ordinary way by reducing the demand by an amount which on calculation may be found to be equal to the allowances as now suggested.

Mr. President: Amendment moved:

"Substitute the figures '10,000' for the figures '24,200' (in amendment No. 243*)."

The question is that that amendment be made.

The motion was adopted.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That the provision for Daily Allowance of Non-official Members under the sub-head 'Legislative Assembly' (page 38) be reduced by Rs. 10,000."

The motion was adopted.

Legislative Assembly—Haulage of motor car and Conveyance Allowance.

Rao Bahadur C. S. Subrahmanayam (Madras ceded districts and Chittoor: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I move:

"That the provision for Haulage of motor car and Conveyance Allowance under the sub-head 'Legislative Assembly' (page 38) be reduced by Rs. 50,000."

The object of this amendment is to do away with the haulage allowances which Members bringing their motor cars to Delhi are entitled to receive now. This stands, Sir, on an altogether different footing from the allowances which seems to be the privilege of Members of this Assembly to draw. It is entirely different from the daily allowance, also from the travelling allowance. Motor cars, I suppose, are contrivances of recent years, and at one time—to answer the argument of my Honourable friend Mr. Spence—at the commencement of this Assembly, when we came to Delhi, it may have been considered that Delhi would not provide the necessary number of conveyances for Members living at a distance from the Assembly Chamber. Probably in order to make up for the lack of conveyance facilities and conveyance equipment in Delhi it may have been necessary to give this allowance for haulage of motor cars. But, now, we find that Delhi can supply all sorts of conveyances, from the high class tip-top motor car to the lowest conveyance of pristine times. So, I think the ground on which solely an allowance like this could be made does not exist now. Then, it might be said that you cannot deprive Members who are accustomed to this means of conveyance, or to their particular conveyance, when they come to Delhi in the service of the country. Motor folk like carriage folk of old are men of means; I assume that and I do not think that assumption will be questioned, and those Members are generally wealthy merchants or big land-owners or professional men who are in fairly affluent circumstances. It is not everyone that brings his motor car haulage does not arise at all, so this motion ought, I think, to be moved in the next House when it is formed.

* Vide page 3448 of these Debates.

[Maulvi Abul Kasem.]

Mr. B. C. Allen (Assam: Nominated Official): I rise, Sir, to a point of order. Surely this is a case in which we can apply the principle advanced by Mr. Ginwala. Mr. Ginwala explained to us how Viceroys who visited Burma in the first year of their office said that they had no experience and therefore could take no steps to alleviate their grievances. At the conclusion of their terms of office, they had no time to do so. My Honourable friend has objected to this House legislating with regard to motor haulage, but if we don't take action to reduce this allowance, how will it be possible for our successors to do so during the following year?

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary (Calcutta: Non-Muhammadan Urban): Sir, I am much indebted to Mr. Subrahmanayam for his appreciative reference to my efforts to get the travelling and similar other avoidable charges reduced. I desire to assure him that, when I came to move my general motion for a reduction of five lakhs, I was intending to refer to what he has attempted in the motion before the House, and, if he is able to carry this motion, I shall undertake to reduce my demand for reduction by Rs. 50,000 and ask the Honourable the Home Member to accept the lower figure of four lakhs and a half for reduction on General Administration. But, Sir, there are one or two matters about which I think apprehension ought to be removed. In Simla there is no rickshaw allowance and Members do get on without losing efficiency or suffering in any way in health or work. There is a difference in Delhi and that is demonstrated by the Rs. 5 allowance which Members are allowed. People who bring motor cars are allowed only Rs. 2-8 a day (Dr. H. S. Gour: "They are not allowed anything at all.") Oh yes, they are allowed Rs. 2-8 a day for petrol in Raisina. Whether therefore there will be a real saving or not if motor cars are not allowed to be brought is a matter that will have to be gone into. Reference has twice been made to the little paragraph in the Retrenchment Committee's Report regarding what is called there the more liberal allowance to Members at Delhi and at Simla than used to prevail before. Well, if both the Houses were agreeable, I am sure the Members of this House would be prepared to accept the lower allowance. It was as a question of principle and prestige that this House voted for a higher allowance. And incidentally I cannot help recalling to mind a somewhat inaccurate statement made by one of the Members of the Incheape Committee, not in committee but on a convivial occasion. He was complaining that, when he was a Member of the Legislature in the old days, he never got an allowance, like the Members of the present Legislature get. His complaint, Sir, was exactly the complaint of our Delhi colleague here. That Member probably never travelled out of Calcutta. He ought to have known that a three-figure allowance used to be given as a lump grant to Members from outside Calcutta and Simla attending meetings of the Council. Let us have these reductions by all means and I think it is up to the Members of this Legislature to bring forward Resolutions of this kind and the one we have just passed to show that when we want reductions elsewhere we are ourselves prepared to submit to cuts.

Dr. H. S. Gour (Nagpur Division: Non-Muhammadan): Sir, last year there was a similar motion for the reduction of the grant under the haulage of motor cars. This hardy annual has re-appeared again and my friend Mr. Subrahmanayam is the sponsor to this motion. The one question which concerns the Members of this House, and to which the Honourable Mover of this amendment has adverted, is that, if the Members are not allowed haulage for their motor cars in Delhi, how are they to get about? My friend Mr. Subrahmanayam has answered that question for the Members by stating that there is a sufficiency of motor cars and carriages of all descriptions which the Members can engage during their stay in Delhi. That is an invitation which I have no doubt Members of this House will gladly accept, provided my friend the Honourable Mover of this Resolution will foot the Bill; because my friend could not be unaware of the fact that the daily charges for motor cars in Delhi is in the neighbourhood of Rs. 80 to Rs. 100 per diem. Consequently, if my friend allows Members of this House to use motor cars in Delhi and that is a statement with which he opened his speech, I do not know where my friend would economise the Rs. 50,000 which he wishes the reduction to be under this head. And in retrenching Rs. 50,000 on this head, whether he would not swell the expenses of motor cars hired out and placed at the disposal of Members. Now, Sir, the other question which my learned friend raised was a very interesting question. He said Members of this House who bring motor cars to Delhi are all well-to-do people; they can all afford to pay for the haulage of motor cars, and therefore, there is no reason why Government should be made to pay for the haulage. But my friend surely could not have forgotten the fact that, if the wealthier Members of the Assembly possess motor cars which they can bring to Delhi at their own expense, the other Members of the Assembly are wealthy enough to provide their own maintenance when they are in Delhi; and if it be any argument at all that the wealthier Members of the Assembly should pay for their motor cars, is it not equally cogent an argument that the other Members of the Assembly should also pay for their own maintenance? As the one class can afford to pay for their motor cars, the other class can equally afford to pay for their subsistence in Delhi. But my friend could not have forgotten the fact that whether he refers to the one class or to the other, they come at immense sacrifice of time and money and come to Delhi to place their services at the disposal of the State, and, if they are to pay for their motor cars, surely my friend will not grudge them the payment which they would naturally expect for the loss of time which they devote to the service of the State, and what would be its value? Placed at its lowest estimate, I think if you were to value the services of a man like my friend Sir Campbell Rhodes, or my friend, Sir Montagu Webb, or my friend, Rai Bahadur Subrahmanayam, I am perfectly certain that the retrenchment of Rs. 50,000 will be merely a fleabite compared to the expenses which the State will incur in compensating them for the loss of time in coming to Delhi and placing their invaluable services at the disposal of the State. Then, my friend said that Members of the Local Council and the papers made some adverse criticism upon the pile of buildings in Raisina and the comparative ease and luxury in which Members lived there. I am afraid my friend has weakly yielded to these criticisms. He might have paused for a moment to think whether the comfort which he himself enjoys in the hostel at Raisina is anything compared to the comfort to which he is accustomed in the place he hails from, and, if he was to place side by side the comfort and the sacrifice he has made, the time he is spending and the inconvenience he is suffering during his stay in Delhi, I have no doubt that the comforts he speaks of are incomparably small to the service he renders the State and the sacrifice he makes in the name of patriotism.

[Dr. H. S. Gour.]

I am sure, Sir, that my Honourable friend has been unduly moved by the cheap criticisms of the yellow press. I am sure that if the Members of this House were given no allowance at all and if they came in clean clothes to this House, these newspapers will complain that these Members somehow or other are able to live in luxury and comfort. The poor man, Sir, always rails at the rich and when he becomes rich himself he realises that the difference between the poor man and the rich man is at times a lack of effort. Now, Sir, my friend Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary who has pronounced his benediction upon this amendment and come to terms with the Mover of this amendment

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary: And I hope with the Government Members.

Dr. H. S. Gour: with a promise that he would reduce his demand by Rs. 50,000 if this motion is carried has perhaps not vouchsafed to this House any explanation as to what will be the conduct of this House if you were to deprive it of the ordinary amenities of life, if you were to deprive the Members

Rao Bahadur C. S. Subrahmanayam: Not ordinary.

Dr. H. S. Gour: of the ordinary necessities of life

Rao Bahadur C. S. Subrahmanayam: Extraordinary.

Dr. H. S. Gour: and what would be the position of the future Members of this Assembly who would have to consider that not only would they have to come up to Delhi but they would be provided with no conveyance or haulage allowance which their predecessors had, thanks to the motion of the Honourable Mr. Subrahmanayam. I therefore submit, Sir, that my friend could not have seriously intended this House to commit itself to a proposal which, as my Honourable friend Maulvi Abul Kasem has pointed out, would not affect the sitting Members but is likely to prejudice the Members to come. One more word in connection with the cost of the haulage and the daily allowance given to the Raisina residents. I have heard from some Members that Members in addition to the actual haulage allowance for motor cars receive, some say Rs. 5, some say Rs. 2-8-0, per diem. Well, Sir, I do not know what Members are the fortunate recipients of these douceurs. It may be that those who live 8 miles away in the wilds of Raisina are paid these small amounts by way of solatium. I do not grudge it to them. I am perfectly certain, Sir, that so far as the haulage of motors is concerned, this House will signify its views in the manner in which it did last year when a similar question was debated in this Assembly.

Mr. W. M. Hussanally (Sind: Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I rise to oppose the motion brought by my friend Mr. Subrahmanayam. Before I begin, Sir, I must make it clear that I have no motor car and I do not charge for haulage allowance. Therefore, whatever I say does not apply in my case. Sir, a motor car for those who reside in Raisina is a sine qua non, for one reason, Sir, it takes my carriage nearly one hour to come here from Raisina in the morning and one hour more in the evening to go back. We are kept here very often after 5-30 P.M. and sometimes even up to 6 P.M. Last night we were kept till 6-30 P.M. by a Select Committee, going home after that time and taking an hour more to reach our home, if home it can be called, famishing for a cup of tea on the way before you get home to have one. Is that the way, Sir, in which the Assembly should treat those Members who come here to devote their time and energy for the work of the country? Whereas a motor car will take you home within about 10 or 15 minutes. On the other hand, Sir, there is another difficulty so far as carriages are concerned. You have to keep the carriage here the whole day. The horses will have to remain without any food or water perhaps. You don't know what time you are going to get off from the Assembly. Sometimes we get up early, sometimes late, so that every gentleman who brings his carriage or motor here has to keep it waiting nearly the whole day, as I suppose every one of us will bear testimony to. Therefore, Sir, bringing a motor car, for those who possess one is necessary though it is a little costly affair. I know a friend of mine has hired a motor for himself in Delhi and he pays Rs. 350 a month besides the cost of petrol and the pay of the chauffeur, if I mistake not. Thus it will appear that it is a very costly affair to hire a motor. But if you keep it for the day, the charges are much more heavy, as has been pointed out by Dr. Gour. Thus it is almost impossible to get on without a motor for those gentlemen who have got any value for time and to expect them to pay for the motor out of their own pocket and come and reside here for three months in the cold weather and a month in Simla is certainly more than what the Assembly can expect. I know, Sir, so far as the Bombay Council is concerned, there are several Members who do not attend regularly because they find the expenses too heavy in Bombay and Poona and the allowances they draw are not sufficient. This was the complaint made to His Excellency the Governor of Bombay only a few days ago so far as Sind Members were concerned during a visit which he paid to Karachi recently. Mr. Subrahmanayam thinks that the gentlemen who are residing in Raisina hostels are enjoying all the comforts of life that they possibly can expect at home, and yet, let me inform him that both the hostels are lying empty. There are only a few gentlemen who care to go into those hostels and no more, with the result that one of these hostels has been sold off to the Telegraph Department. That does not speak for the convenience and comfort of these big piles of buildings with their appendages. I think these hostels afford far less comfort than they ought to, with all the money spent upon them. Compared to these hostels the Windsor Place quarters are a little more comfortable. But you certainly demand a certain amount of comfort and convenience when you have to come and reside here nearly for three months. You cannot stay without convenience and comfort if you have to make a long stay. Gentlemen who go to the Provincial Councils have only to stay for 10 or 15 days at a time and they can go back home, so that their case is quite different from ours. We come all the way from our homes and stay here at a stretch for 2 or 3 months. Naturally therefore we expect rather better comfort than what the Members of the Provincial Councils have. I hope the House will not carry this motion.

One more reason that occurs to me is this that we cannot afford to be generous at the cost of other people. What does the motion as it is brought mean? It means cutting down the allowances of our successors.

[Mr. W. M. Hussanally.]

It is very easy to be generous at the cost of our successors. If Mr. Subrahmanayam was serious he ought to have moved his motion last year and touched his own pocket.

Sir Campbell Rhodes (Bengal: European): My Honourable friend Mr. Subrahmanayam seems to have so little support in this House that I am glad of the opportunity of taking my stand beside him on this occasion. My reason for supporting this motion is simply this. I am strongly in favour of following the precedent of other countries of the payment of Members in order to allow Members who could not otherwise afford to enter on a political career to do so. But I am not in favour of paying the rich man more than his poor neighbour and that is, in effect, what this Resolution means. (Cries of "No, no.") It means in fact that the man who has a motor car and therefore is able to afford some of the amenities of life is paid haulage of his motor car whereas a man without a motor car does not get that money and if he lives on this side of Delhi he gets nothing, but if he lives on the other side he gets an amount which as Dr. Gour has pointed out is hardly sufficient. I presume that all these allowances will be stopped as soon as we all get to Raisina. I do not share the pessimism of some Members of this House about not coming back next time and I cordially agree with what Mr. Allen said that we have the right to settle the budget for this year. I have not heard it suggested in the votes of grants in general that we should only budget up to the 1st November or whatever date the dissolution occurs, and having voted for this Resolution last year I feel I am perfectly consistent in voting for it again this year.

Bhai Man Singh (East Punjab: Sikh): I have to oppose this amendment. I have not got a motor car and so I have never brought one here and I cannot say whether I will do so in the near future, and even if I bring it I do not think I will be a loser if this amendment is passed for I think the haulage from Lahore to this place is less than the daily conveyance allowance for the Session. So far as I am personally concerned, I am not at all touched by the proposal or by the grant of motor haulage. But the main question is this. Delhi is not one city, but if I may say so, is a group of two or three towns. There is Raisina, there is this part of Delhi and then there is the big main city and it is not very easy to go from place to place without having a conveyance at your hands. Those gentlemen who at their own places are habituated to the use of motor cars—I cannot say why we should force them not to have the use of a car at Delhi when they come to discharge their public duties here. Moreover, it is quite easy to say that such and such a person being a rich man should pay from his own pocket. If that argument holds good, then if a man wants to come and live in Delhi he should pay from his own pocket for his living too. The question is whether a motor car is or is not a necessity or well-nigh a necessity. Of course, so far as I am concerned, I have never felt a motor car a necessity at my original place, Ambala, I have felt it rather as some necessity at Lahore, but I think I have always felt a motor car an absolute necessity at Delhi I have always felt great difficulty without having a conveyance at my disposal at Delhi. I know that many of my friends had to walk actually from this place for some distance before getting a tonga and whenever you phone from the hostel to a tonga stand they sometimes say "No tonga is available"; another time they say, "Tonga coming" and you have to wait half an hour and again you phone up and they say, "We have just sent a tonga and it may come in ten minutes." I think some may feel inclined to dispense with coming to the meeting altogether if they cannot get a tonga just in time. Suppose a man who is living in the Raisina Hostel is delayed half an hour after 11 o'clock it is practically impossible for him to get any conveyance from that place to this place. It is not only that we have to come here 4 or 5 days a week but we have got many other things also to do. We are not supposed to come here—only to come here in this Chamber, attend the Assembly and go back. Of course, as social men we have to move in the social life of Delhi. Not only that. I think there are many matters which we cannot always discuss on the floor of this House but in connection with which we should try to see Members of the Government or other officials in charge and bring to their notice the defects in the working of the several departments. There is therefore much more need for moving about in Delhi on our part than appears to be on the face of it. I therefore think that it is an absolute necessity that those who can at all afford to keep a motor car must bring their cars. If I can legislate I would say that every Member who has got a motor car must bring it up to Delhi not only that he may use it himself but also that he may give a lift to a poor man like myself now and then. I am really astonished at the remarks about the more liberal allowances given to Members of the Legislative Assembly. I shall feel obliged to any gentleman of the Assembly who can show how the Members of this Assembly or of the Council of State are given a more liberal allowance than their predecessors. I think that statement is based upon some misconception. No doubt, some people in the past have criticised our Resolution of 1921. But are we always to follow what the Press say whether it is reasonable or unreasonable? One word more. My friend Mr. Subrahmanayam grudges the little haulage allowance that is given to the Members but he forgets that Members of the Legislature in India are the lowest paid throughout the world, even as compared with the smallest colonies and the smallest countries, if not the lowest, well nigh the lowest as compared with all the countries. I remember to have compared the figures last year and if my memory does not fail me there is not a single instance where such allowances are less. I cannot understand why the country and the tax-payer should grudge a gentleman bringing his motor car to Delhi when he is using that car in his own place. It is said that it is simply giving an extra advantage to the rich man who can keep a motor car, but I submit that the rules allow a Member to bring a pair of horses also to Delhi if he wants to do so. I think a good many of us have got our horses. They can bring them here if they choose to, but I may remind my Honourable friends that the distances in Delhi are so great that even a pair of horses if used regularly are bound to grow much thinner though I would not say die. I have seldom seen any good horse in Delhi which is put to any great use. With these remarks I oppose the amendment.

1 P.M. (Voices: "The question may be put.")

Mr. President: The question is that the question may be put.

The motion was adopted.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That the provision for haulage of motor car and conveyance allowance under sub-head 'Legislative Assembly' be reduced by Rs. 50,000."

The Assembly divided:

AYES—34.

Abdul Rahman, Munshi.
Abul Kasem, Maulvi.
Achariyar, Rao Bahadur P. T.
Srinivasa.
Agarwala, Lala Girdharilal.
Allen, Mr. B. C.
Amjad Ali, Maulvi.
Asjad-ul-lah, Maulvi Miyan.
Ayyar, Mr. T. V. Seshagiri.
Basu, Mr. J. N.
Chaudhuri, Mr. J.
Clark, Mr. G. S.
Faridoonji, Mr. R.
Iswar Saran, Munshi.
Jamall, Mr. A. O.
Jatkar, Mr. B. H. R.
Joshi, Mr. N. M.
Lakshmi Narayan Lal, Mr.

Mitter, Mr. K. N.
Mukherjee, Mr. T. P.
Nabi Hadi, Mr. S. M.
Nag, Mr. G. C.
Neogy, Mr. K. C.
Percival, Mr. P. E.
Pyari Lal, Mr.
Ramayya Pantulu, Mr. J.
Rangachariar, Mr. T.
Rhodes, Sir Campbell.
Sarvadhikary, Sir Deva Prasad.
Sassoon, Capt. E. V.
Schamnad, Mr. Mahmood.
Sinha, Beohar Raghubir.
Subrahmanayam, Mr. C. S.
Venkatapatiraju, Mr. B.
Willson, Mr. W. S. J.

NOES—45.

Abdul Quadir, Maulvi.
Abdul Rahim Khan, Mr.
Ashan Khan, Mr. M.
Aiyer, Sir P. S. Sivaswamy.
Ayyangar, Mr. M. G. M.
Bagde, Mr. K. G.
Barodawalla, Mr. S. K.
Barua, Mr. D. C.
Bishambhar Nath, Mr.
Bradley-Birt, Mr. F. B.
Bridge, Mr. G.
Burdon, Mr. E.
Cabell, Mr. W. H. L.
Cotelingam, Mr. J. P.
Dalal, Sardar B. A.
Das, Babu B. S.
Gajjan Singh, Sardar Bahadur.
Gidney, Lieut.-Col. H. A. J.
Ginwala, Mr. P. P.
Gour, Dr. H. S.
Gulab Singh, Sardar.
Haigh, Mr. P. B.
Holme, Mr. H. E.

Hussanally, Mr. W. M.
Ikramullah Khan, Raja Mohd.
Jejeebhoy, Sir Jamsetjee.
Kamat, Mr. B. S.
Lindsay, Mr. Darcy.
Man Singh, Bhair.
Misra, Mr. B. N.
Moir, Mr. T. E.
Muhammad Hussain, Mr. T.
Muhammad Ismail, Mr. S.
Mukherjee, Mr. J. N.
Ramji, Mr. Manmohandas.
Reddi, Mr. M. K.
Samarth, Mr. N. M.
Sams, Mr. H. A.
Sarfaraz Hussain Khan, Mr.
Shahab-ud-Din, Chaudhri.
Sinha, Babu L. P.
Spence, Mr. R. A.
Townsend, Mr. C. A. H.
Vishindas, Mr. H.
Webb, Sir Montagu.

The motion was negatived.

Mr. P. P. Ginwala: I move:

"That the demand under the sub-head 'Legislative Assembly' be reduced by Rs. 100."

Sir, in moving this reduction I wish to draw attention to two or three outstanding facts. First of all, I will draw the attention of the Assembly itself to the fact that in these last 3½ days we have gone through five demands, and that in the remaining 2½ days we have 60 odd demands to deal with. If we go on at this rate I fear that at 5 o'clock on the last day the President will find that the whole burden of the Assembly will be thrown on himself of moving one demand after another until all the demands are finished. Now, Sir, the Assembly this morning showed rather a close-fisted patriotism in regard to money; but I think that if it had got close-fisted with regard to the use of our time when these demands are being discussed, there would be more national economy in the end. I know that this is the most unsuitable day for me of all the days in the year, for making remarks of this description because on this day the General Administration demand comes on and I have to make three or four speeches. But I have limited myself to my ordinary proportion for there are 710 amendments on the notice paper and if we divide that by 143 you get 5 and I have given notice exactly of 5 amendments. I may draw the attention of Honourable Members to the fact that there are important questions coming up even to-day on the General Administration demand, and if we do not perform our duty of speaking so strenuously we might be able to further the ends we have in view much better.

The second thing to which I wish to draw the attention of the Assembly and of the public at large is the fact that though I am guilty of drawing a motor car allowance I have attended practically every meeting of the Assembly from the beginning and I propose to do so to the end. There are a number of Members of this House who have not put in even one appearance, not only this Session but for two Sessions. It is imperative for the public to know, especially on the eve of the elections, how they have been treated by their representatives whom they have sent up to this House. I leave the matter at that.

The third point is that I want to know from the Honourable the Law Member how the position stands in regard to the separation of establishments. This question was raised by me during the last budget discussion in which I raised the point that the President should have a separate establishment, a separate Secretariat, and my friend, Mr. Subrahmanayam, brought up a Resolution to that effect during the Simla Session. The temperature of the Assembly, however, got so high then that we thought it best to adjourn further debate until, as the Law Member stated, the Incheape Committee had sent in its report. The Incheape Committee has come and gone, the report has been published, and I believe the Honourable the Law Member then gave us an undertaking that if this principle was accepted and if it did not involve any extra expenditure, he would be in favour of giving effect to it. And if I recollect rightly, Sir, you also admitted that the principle was a good one and that when the time came it should be given effect to. I would like to know from the Honourable the Law Member now, since the Incheape Committee have already recommended a reduction of one lakh and some odd thousand rupees in the Legislative Department, whether he is in a position to carry out this principle, which in substance was accepted by the Assembly on more than one occasion. I move my amendment.

The Honourable Dr. Mian Sir Muhammad Shafi: Sir, my Honourable friend, Mr. Ginwala, has referred to three points during the course of his speech. In so far as the first two points are concerned, I do not think that either he or the House expect any observations from me upon those points. With regard to the third point mentioned by him he has called upon me to make a statement as to the position at this moment with regard to a separate establishment for this House. Well, Sir, if I may venture to correct him in regard to one statement which he made, I would point out that in the debate which took place on Mr. Subrahmanayam's Resolution in connection with this matter, my predecessor the Honourable Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru did not give the undertaking that my learned friend mentioned in his speech. What he did say was that as a matter of principle he was in sympathy with the theoretical proposition enunciated in that Resolution; but when coming to the practical aspect of the question, he pointed out that the proposal would undoubtedly involve additional expenditure and mentioned that in view of the fact that the Incheape

[Dr. Mian Sir Muhammad Shafi.]

Committee was going to inquire into the expenditure of the Government of India in all their Departments, it would be wiser on the part of the House to postpone a discussion of this matter until after the Inchcape Committee had reported. It was in view of the advice, if I may so characterize it, given by my predecessor that the House adjourned the discussion on this matter. Honourable Members will remember that in his speech on that occasion Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru pointed out that the work in his Department was so voluminous that the staff at present employed in the Secretariat of the Legislative Department was just sufficient to cope with that work and that the proposal put forward by my Honourable friend, Mr. Subrahmanayam, that the existing staff in that Department could be apportioned between the establishment which he was advocating and the Department itself was not at all feasible. Now, my short experience of a little over two months compels me to endorse that particular statement made by Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru in this House to its fullest extent. It therefore follows that a separate establishment will mean additional expense. Now Honourable Members will have noticed that the Inchcape Committee in their Report have said nothing one way or the other about a separate establishment for the Legislative Assembly.

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary: But they proposed a cut in your Department.

The Honourable Dr. Mian Sir Muhammad Shafi: That is only one Additional Deputy Secretary and one of the three Solicitors. They realized, I have no doubt, that the work in the Legislative Department was so heavy that the staff of that Department was really barely enough to cope with it, and therefore their recommendations are as I have mentioned just now only those two recommendations. Well, Sir, I understand that the matter was discussed before the Inchcape Committee, but they left it alone. The only inference that I can draw from that fact is that, without incurring additional expenditure, the Inchcape Committee realized that such an undertaking could not be made by the Government of India. That is exactly the position at present. I myself have not had time to look into this matter, to examine what the exact position will be if the proposal for a separate establishment is actually carried out. I am sure Honourable Members realize that soon after I assumed charge of the Law Membership, came the Legislative Council Session, and that the Department has been so busy in connection with various matters concerning the Legislative session that, so far as I am concerned, I had no time to examine this matter. Sir, in the few observations which you were pleased to make when this matter was last discussed this is what you observed, if I may venture to quote from what you said on that occasion:

"I should have been glad to have on the records of the Assembly the explicit judgment of the House in favour of a separate establishment; but the reasons given by the Honourable the Law Member for the postponement of the consideration of that proposal seems to me to be cogent, and, therefore, I think the course which Mr. Rangachariar proposes is reasonable and proper. The only thing that makes me regret that we should have to adopt that course is that the next time we take up this subject we may have to deal with a different Law Member."

Well, Sir, I venture to take the liberty of assuring you that although it is a different Law Member with whom you have to deal in connection with this matter, he fully realizes the difficulties of the existing situation, and, in theory, he agrees with his predecessor that the change of form which Honourable Members opposite seek to introduce is one which is logical. I am sure the House will realize that I have not had an opportunity of examining this matter; I am not in a position just at this moment to give any undertaking on behalf of the Government of India, but I assure the House that as soon as the legislative session is over, I shall myself carefully examine the whole question, and whatever conclusions I may be able to arrive at will be carried out hereafter.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar (Madras: Nominated Non-Official): Sir, I rise to say two words upon this matter. The one relates to the actual subject-matter, the other relates to the appeal made by my friend, Mr. Ginwala. Sir, as regards the actual question before the House, I am unable to understand why there should be any difficulty in dividing the Department into two Branches and placing one under your control. Sir, I take it that the work is being done by the Department, both as regards the Executive Branch of it and as regards the Legislative Branch of it. If the work is being done by a number of people pooled together, looking into the work from these two standpoints, it should be an easy thing to divide the work among a certain number of clerks and the Superintendents, and to place one set of clerks and certain Superintendents under the control of the President, so that there may be no mixing up of the two classes of work, and I think that that ought to have been done long ago; I am rather surprised to hear from the Honourable the Law Member that he has not been able to give time to the consideration of a subject which was moved a year ago and upon which I think the House expressed fully and clearly its sentiments. So, Sir, I hope that before long he will take into careful consideration the desirability of dividing the two Departments. Sir, upon the other matter I hope my friends in this part of the House will pardon my saying a few words. We have got very important things coming up. I do not object to Members placing their views before the House, and putting them to the vote, but if we would put some restraint upon our speeches, I think we will be able to make a great deal more progress than we have been able to do hitherto. It is absolutely necessary that some of the very important matters which are coming on hereafter should also be placed before the House. If we go on at the rate at which we have been going on this morning and since yesterday, the result will be that a large number of important subjects will have to be given up, and they will be put en bloc by the President, and there will be no discussion whatever; we have got only six days—I think we ought to have longer time,—and I hope the Honourable the Leader of the House will hereafter consider the desirability of giving us more days. There are some Members on this side of the House who say that they ought to have longer time, and I agree with them. It has been decided that we shall have time only up to Saturday, and the question before us is,—are we going to have the same kind of consideration given to very unimportant matter as we have been doing hitherto, and leaving altogether to chance, when the time comes for the closure being applied, of important matters being put en bloc to vote? Are we prepared to contemplate a contingency of that kind? I appeal to my friends to put some restraint upon themselves in speaking upon the various matters that may come up.

The Honourable Dr. Mian Sir Muhammad Shafi: Sir, I should like, with your permission, to make one observation. My respected friend, the Honourable Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar, expressed his surprise that I had not had time to look into this matter. May I remind him that I was not a Member of this House when the discussion on Mr. Subrahmanayam's Resolution took place. I was not even present.

3464

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

[15TH MARCH 1923.]

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: I spoke of the Law Member, not of Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru or Sir Muhammad Shafi.

The Honourable Dr. Mian Sir Muhammad Shafi: And it was not until notice of this motion, which is now before the House, was received in the Department that I had an opportunity of looking into the literature connected with this matter. Before that, having assumed charge of the office only recently, I naturally did not know anything.

Mr. President: On that point, an attack should not be made on the Law Member but on me. I gave two undertakings to the Assembly,—the first, this time last year and the second, in September. Nothing has been done in this matter because, on a preliminary examination, it became clear to myself and to Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru, the then Law Member, that if any action were taken, it would inevitably create an additional charge on the revenues of the country and neither he nor I were prepared to make any proposals of that kind at that time. I will now add a further undertaking to what has been said by the Honourable the Law Member, that before the Assembly meets again for its final session in Simla in July, we shall examine the question in greater detail than we have hitherto done, and I hope we shall be in a position to place specific proposals before the Legislative Assembly, and possibly, I may inform Members, they may include the placing of similar proposals, linked proposals, before the other Chamber, so that when the time comes, if there is an improvement of our finances, and money is available for the purpose, these proposals may be put into operation at once. I think the Honourable the Law Member, like myself, has accepted the principle that it is desirable that the Indian Legislature should have a separate establishment of its own.

Mr. P. P. Ginwala: Sir, I beg leave to withdraw my motion (No. 246).

Mr. B. S. Kamat (Bombay Central Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, while we are discussing the question of a separate establishment, incidentally, I wish to invite attention of the Members to a want which I, at any rate, have been feeling, namely, the want of newspapers in the reading room of the Honourable Members of this House. I believe, Sir, that legislators while they are in session should be in daily touch with the press and the public opinion of the whole country; it is a necessity that there should be on the table of the reading room newspapers from all parts of the country if we are to formulate our opinion here after taking into consideration the views of various people. To illustrate my point, I may mention I noticed, for instance, in a Bombay paper—I mean the "Times of India"—various valuable articles recently on the Budget, regarding the salt duty and on Waziristan or Kenya. If these newspapers are on the reading room table, I do think Members will read such articles and then come to a mature judgment about these questions. I think also that there is a way to meet this convenience without any additional burden on the tax-payer. We have effected this morning a saving of Rs. 10,000 from the daily allowance of Members regarding the 7 days prior to and subsequent to the departure of Members. If we devote a portion of that Rs. 10,000 to the purchase of newspapers while Members are in Sessions here, I believe it will meet a great convenience and also help the deliberations of this Assembly.

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary: Sir, from the point of view that you have been pleased to suggest and which the Honourable the Law Member has also suggested with regard to the proposed division of establishment, I wish to bring to your attention for consideration the need of seeing that the establishment should not only be self-contained but should have full work during 12 months. This is necessary not only from the financial point of view but also from office management point of view which cannot be overlooked in this connection.

The motion was, by leave of the Assembly, withdrawn.

The Honourable Dr. Mian Sir Muhammad Shafi: Sir, may I be permitted to say that we will take note of the request made by Mr. Kamat and see what can be done in that connection.

Council of State—Travelling Allowance.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: I much regret, Sir, that I have to make this motion in this House, but under the constitution as it is, the other House has no vote on the Demands, and, therefore, it is for this House to express its opinion. I move, Sir:

"That the provision for Travelling Allowance under the sub-head 'Council of State' (page 38) be reduced by Rs. 30,000."

Rs. 30,000 is a mere rough guess, but whatever the figure may be, the principle which I wish to emphasise is this, and I hope the Honourable the Finance Member will take note of it for other people. Here in an extravagant scale people are allowed one whole compartment to travel all about the country. I do not know if it is the practice in any other country. Four first class ticket charges are allowed not only to Members of the Council of State but to other officers who are called first class officers. I do not know what they are. But I have seen them occupying a whole compartment to the prejudice of the public and to the prejudice of the tax-payer. I hope my Honourable friends in the other House will not take offence at this motion which I am making, but I do think it is not necessary to provide a whole compartment for Members to travel about. They must mix with people. You come across friends while travelling, and make friendship sometimes everlasting friendship and sometimes otherwise. But, be that as it may, I think the travelling allowance may be cut down conveniently, and I hope, Sir, that it will be accepted by the House.

The Honourable Dr. Mian Sir Muhammad Shafi: Sir, in connection with the motion made by my Honourable friend Mr. Rangachariar, I venture to appeal to the sense of delicacy of Honourable Members opposite. I venture to suggest to them that it is, to say the least inadvisable for this House on its own motion to cut down the privilege at present enjoyed by the members of the other House. (Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: "Nothing wrong in it. We attack no less a person than His Excellency the Viceroy.") I do not know whether such a proposal as this is calculated to promote that spirit of good-will and co-operation which ought to exist between the two Houses. What the Government propose to do in this connection is that they will place before the other House a motion for revision of the rules in this connection and if the other House agrees, Government will carry out the decision accordingly. But in any case Government propose to take away this privilege from the official Members. I think the House would be well advised to leave this matter at that.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: On that assurance, Sir, I withdraw my motion.

The motion was, by leave of the Assembly, withdrawn.

Dr. H. S. Gour: Sir, by a curious coincidence I had also given notice of a similar Resolution*, and I should like to justify the notice I gave with reference to a few facts not adverted to by the Honourable Mover of the last motion. Honourable Members will recall that a motion was brought forward before this House in the first year of its life for equality of status and treatment between the Members of the two Houses, and Honourable Members will also recall, that the Resolution was passed by the vote of this House. Now, equality of treatment and status requires that in the matter of travelling allowance, there must be equality. (Mr. R. A. Spence: "Also in voting on the Budget.") Consequently . . .

Mr. President: Does the Honourable Member raise the same question?

Dr. H. S. Gour: It is for reduction by Rs. 20,000.

Mr. President: It is the same question which Mr. Rangachariar withdrew on the assurance of the Honourable the Law Member. I think in view of that fact and in view of the fact that we have reached that stage at which we should economise time, I think it better that the Honourable Member should let the matter stand where it is.

(Cries of "Withdraw, withdraw.")

The motion was, by leave of the Assembly, withdrawn.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: Sir, this is only the matter which we passed for ourselves as regards one week's stay before and one week's stay after. On the same assurance, I am prepared to withdraw this motion (No. 249)†.

The Honourable Dr. Mian Sir Muhammad Shafi: I am prepared to give the same assurance.

The motion was, by leave of the Assembly, withdrawn.

Council of State—Conveyance Allowance.

Rao Bahadur C. S. Subrahmanayam: Sir, I move:

"That the provision for Haulage of motor car and Conveyance Allowance under the sub-head 'Council of State' (page 38) be reduced by Rs. 25,000."

Mr. President: Before the Honourable Member embarks on arguments, I must warn him and the rest of the Assembly that though they are entitled to a decision on the question, I fail to see the difference between a motor car owned by a Member of the Council of State and a motor car owned by a Member of the Legislative Assembly. Therefore, I think the House must come to a decision on the point without further argument.

Rao Bahadur C. S. Subrahmanayam: Am I to understand, Sir, that I should not make a few remarks?

* "That the provision of Rs. 80,000 for Travelling Allowance of official and non-official Members under sub-head 'Council of State' be reduced by Rs. 20,000."

† "That the provision for Daily Allowance under the sub-head 'Council of State' (page 38) be reduced by Rs. 30,000."

Mr. President: The Honourable Member may be more ingenious than I am. The difference is not between a Member of the Council of State and a Member of the Legislative Assembly, but between the cars that they own.

Rao Bahadur C. S. Subrahmanayam: Am I to understand that I cannot speak?

Mr. President: I will wait and see what the Honourable Member proposes to say.

(Cries of: "Withdraw, withdraw.")

Rao Bahadur C. S. Subrahmanayam: Whatever may be the cries of "withdraw", which cannot terrify me, just as the vote of the Assembly, on the Haulage allowance of Members of the Assembly has not terrified me, they have simply shown that Members cannot think aright when their own interests are concerned and that they can think very severely and very stringently when the rights of officials are concerned. I find that if it is an allowance for an official, say a motor car allowance for an official of the Council of State, it is said that he ought not to get it. But I cannot understand how it makes any difference. What is the special merit of the work or the quality of the work which a non-official Member does as distinguished from the quality of work which an official Member in this Assembly does. After all what are the arguments which were put against it? They said we want a car to go about and visit the ruins of Delhi. The only business on which we are here is to attend the Legislative Assembly.

Mr. President: The Honourable Member is repeating the speeches that were made before.

Rao Bahadur C. S. Subrahmanayam: It was said they wanted a car for going about Delhi, never mentioning the object for which the car was needed, namely, to come to the Assembly and go back to our quarters. To that extent any allowance which is given is relevant.

Dr. H. S. Gour: I rise to a point of order after the ruling from the Chair . . .

Rao Bahadur C. S. Subrahmanayam: By interrupting me you are not going to effect an economy of time . . .

Mr. President: Order, order. Dr. Gour.

Dr. H. S. Gour: Sir, I rise to a point of order. So far as I can see, in spite of the ruling of the Chair, my friend in his motion is repeating himself. He takes the risk of other Members striving to reply to him in case he is allowed to go on.

Mr. President: The Honourable Member need not usurp the functions of the Chair.

Rao Bahadur C. S. Subrahmanayam: I thought just as much; the Chair was quite competent to take care of itself. I feel considerably strengthened in the view I have taken that this motor car allowance is an illogical and unreasonable one by the number of votes I was able to secure in support of my motion.

Mr. President: The Honourable Member knows that he is out of order. Does he wish to proceed? He can move the motion and ask for a decision on it, but it is impossible for him to make a speech without repeating previous arguments.

Rao Bahadur C. S. Subrahmanayam: The rules are unreasonable. Some people living in Metcalfe House alongside the Council of State are allowed this privilege. Why should it be allowed?

Mr. President: I cannot allow the Honourable Member to continue. If I allow him to continue, I must allow others to do the same. I will put the question and take the decision on it.

The question is:

"That the provision for Haulage of motor car and Conveyance Allowance under the sub-head 'Council of State' be reduced by Rs. 25,000."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. President: Mr. Sarfaraz Hussain Khan. The Honourable Member's amendment:

"That the provision for Travelling Allowances of official and non-official Members under sub-head 'Legislative Bodies' be reduced by Rs. 25,000."

is the same question as the previous one. The Honourable Member will remember that Mr. Rangachariar moved a reduction of a similar kind and that the Leader of the House met him on that point saying that the question would be considered, whereupon it was withdrawn. Does not that satisfy the Honourable Member?

Khan Bahadur Sarfaraz Hussain Khan (Tirhut Division: Muhammadan): What I mean is that in 1922-23 the grant was Rs. 95,960 and this year, 1923-24, it is Rs. 1,20,000. If I am satisfied in regard to the figures I shall withdraw my motion.

Mr. President: More Members of the Assembly are expected to travel.

Khan Bahadur Sarfaraz Hussain Khan: Why?

Mr. President: More Members are expected to attend the sittings of the Assembly!

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett (Finance Member): Sir, the estimate is based on the latest available details of actual results this year. I have not got them before me, but the figure is based on the experience of the last year. We thought it necessary to make a slight increase in the light of that experience.

(Honourable Members: "Withdraw".)

Mr. President: That takes us down to the end of the Legislative Bodies. I think we had better adjourn.

The Assembly then adjourned for Lunch till Twenty-Five Minutes to Three of the Clock.

The Assembly re-assembled after Lunch at Twenty-Five Minutes to Three of the Clock. Mr. President was in the Chair.

Foreign and Political Department—Pay of Officers.

Dr. Nand Lal: My motion runs as follows:

"That the provisions for pay of officers under the sub-head 'Foreign and Political Department' be reduced by Rs. 1,000."

I recognise that the Government of India really means to give training to Indians in various important Departments, but, while conceding that, I feel constrained to submit before this House that they have not very seriously taken any effective step to initiate Indians into the Foreign Department, because my examination of the whole question leads me to believe that the Indian element in this Department is comparatively small, and I would like to suggest that the Government of India will kindly see their way so that Indian grievances in regard to this question particularly may be attended to at the earliest possible date. Sir, I admit that the officers, who are working in the Foreign and Political Department are those who have got great experience and they are such as are really capable of holding that responsible post or those responsible posts in that Department. But, when I go to the budget and I compare it with the expenditure of that Department in 1913-14 and then to subsequent years, then I feel shocked to observe that there is a tremendous and uncalled for increase in it, namely, in the expenditure. And, with a view to support my arguments, Sir, may I invite your kind attention to the opinion which is embodied in the Report of the Indian Retrenchment Committee? One of the Honourable Members wanted to know the page—the page is 129. Sir, in 1913-14, the actual expenditure was Rs. 7,16,900. In 1921-22 it rose, so far as the revised estimate goes, to Rs. 10,40,500. And, again, we find an uncalled for rise when we come to the year 1922-23. What do we find there, Sir? The budget estimate says Rs. 10,12,900. When we come to the year 1923-24, there, of course, we find that the demand is a little less than that which was asked for last year, that is the demand for next year amounts to Rs. 10,36,200. Now, Sir, I submit before this House that they will kindly compare these figures; compare the figure which is demanded for next year with that of 1913-14 and then you will agree with me that this expenditure is too much. It looks too much when we take into consideration the present financial embarrassment of our Indian Government. Then, Sir, after this, may I invite your attention to the demand, page 39? What do we find there? Secretaries—2—Rs. 4,000 a month. May I ask, why 2 Secretaries? Why not one Secretary? I should like to hear the explanation which may come forth. My submission is that one Secretary will be sufficient to cope with the work. What is the opinion of the Retrenchment Committee and what does their Report say? I am not simply making an unsupported assertion before you. I am the last person to put forward an assertion which has not got tangible support. Now let us examine the recommendation of the Retrenchment Committee. They say, on page 129:

"This Department has proposed savings of about Rs. 47,000 for 1923-24. The clerical establishment has increased from 102 before the war to 123 at the present time"

The Report has, if I mistake not and as it appears to me, proved itself a little hard on the poor clerks only. The Report did not think that there are two Secretaries and if one Secretary may be asked to leave this Department and to go to another Department, and that it would effect a saving of Rs. 48,000 a year more. The learned Members of the Committee did not give consideration to that. But the number of clerks specially occupied their mind. I do not know the reason. It is best known to them. Then they say:

[Dr. Nand Lal.]

"We have ascertained that the ratio of clerks to receipts and issues is high and we consider that establishment should be reduced to pre-war numbers, saving a further Rs. 50,000. The expenditure in the current year's budget for contingencies, Rs. 1,64,000, includes Rs. 1,00,000 for postage and telegrams . . ."

and so on. I am skipping over one or two lines to save the time of the House and I come to the conclusion, by which I mean the recommendation in its final shape. They say:

"The total reduction which we recommend together with the saving proposed by the department is therefore Rs. 1,47,000 . . ."

Has that recommendation been attended to? Has it been brought into practice? Perhaps the Government Benches may say: "We have already issued a statement showing the reduction in various Departments." In order to meet that anticipated answer may I invite your attention to it? There it is given "General Administration—Rs. 7,58,000". They have not specified any thing in connection with this Department at all, they have not given any note purporting to show that the reduction which has been recommended by the Committee has been brought into practice, or that they are going to do it in this very Department (Political and Foreign) had they made any note relating to that reduction, I would have been the last person to take even one minute of this Assembly. But since they have not done so, my fear is that perhaps the Department may go scot free which I should not like to see. With these few remarks, in the interest of economy of time I come to the conclusion which is this, that this House will give serious attention to the question which I have raised. So far as the details concerning the Indian element go, Munshi Iswar Saran, I think, will relieve me of that duty. With these remarks I submit my motion* before the House and I hope they will appreciate it.

Mr. Denys Bray (Foreign Secretary): Sir, I had expected my Honourable friend, Dr. Nand Lal, to confine his attack to the Foreign and Political Department, but he has devoted the bulk of his attack to the Incheape Committee. The Incheape Committee had very little to say against the Foreign and Political Department, and therefore it has borne the brunt of Dr. Nand Lal's attack. He asked whether we have effected the saving of Rs. 95,000 which is shown in the supplementary statement. We have. The reason why we have not been able so far to effect the full saving recommended by the Incheape Committee is that we cannot all of a sudden reduce those extra clerks for whom, I am glad to say, Dr. Nand Lal put in a word of sympathy. And I would here ask the House and those commercial Members in the House that may have vacancies in their firms to consider the claims of clerks not only in my Department but in other Departments who are shortly to be thrown forth upon the world. I myself can offer firms clerks tried and trained in the not least efficient—if my friend Munshi Iswar Saran for once will allow me to use the word—tried and trained in the not least efficient Department of the not least efficient bureaucracy in the world. Dr. Nand Lal asked why this Department has two

* "That the provision for pay of officers under sub-head 'Foreign and Political Department' (page 39) be reduced by Rs. 1,000."

Secretaries. I feel more inclined myself to ask why there is one Department and not two in charge of these very separate affairs, foreign and political. The relation between the two is of the flimsiest. I would remind Dr. Nand Lal that the combined Foreign and Political Department has not, as other Departments have, a Member in this House or the other. Our Member is His Excellency the Viceroy to whom we cannot turn, as other Secretaries can to their Members, at all hours of the day for advice and instructions and directions.

The only other point, I think, that Dr. Nand Lal brought forward was the question of the Indianization of the Secretariat. Now, among the officers in the Secretariat there is, as a matter of fact, one Indian officer. But he is an officer of comparatively low rank, and therefore, for all practical purposes I admit that the Secretariat of the Foreign and Political Department is not Indianized. But I would ask the House to consider our difficulties. I think the House will admit that in this somewhat technical Department we cannot draw assistance from Indians in the Provincial Secretariats. The work there does not lead on to the work in the Foreign and Political Department. We are therefore thrown back upon what we call the Political Department, that is to say, the Executive officers belonging to the Foreign and Political Department. Now, Sir, up till September, 1921, the doors of the Political Department were to all intents and purposes shut to Indians. True we had had one or two distinguished exceptions, notably that very distinguished frontier officer, Sir Abdul Quayyum, who ended his days as a member of the Political Department. But that was a very rare exception. Now, in September, 1921, we opened our doors wide. We opened our doors to Indians on exactly the same terms as to Europeans. The Department was opened to Indians in the Indian Civil Service and to Indians in the Indian Army holding King's Commissions. We went a step further. We provided for Indians what we have not provided for Europeans—I had almost said a back door, but I do not like the term—a side door, a "private entree" to Indians of the Provincial service who had shown special merit. Let me take the applications we have received from Indians of the Indian Army. Since 1921 there have been two—two men with splendid records, one with a most gallant war record. But the one is in his 40th year, the other in his 43rd or 44th year; and I am a little doubtful myself whether men who have reached that age without training in a civil department are altogether suitable for admission to the Political Department. Let me now turn to the chief avenue that leads to the Indian Political Department and to the Foreign and Political Department Secretariat—the Indian Civil Service. How many applications does the House think that we have received from Indians in the Indian Civil Service for admission to the Political Department since 1921? Not one.

Mr. K. Ahmed: Did you advertise that you wanted Indians?

Mr. Denys Bray: The announcement was made, I think, in this House. I certainly have referred to it more than once myself. It was issued in the public press and it was sent forth to all Local Governments. If this House can help the Political Department and help Government in bringing forward suitable applicants from the Indian Civil Service for the Political Department, we shall be most grateful. Well, Sir, as the Army has practically failed us, as the Indian Civil Service has failed us hitherto entirely, we have been thrown back upon the Provincial Civil Services. Far be it from me to suggest that we have not secured admirable men from those admirable Services, we have admitted five already. But Provincial Service training is not training for the Secretariat, and even for the executive line. Men of the proper stamp in the Provincial Services are necessarily not as plenty as blackberries. Before long the supply of really suitable men must become exhausted. Moreover, it is of paramount importance in my view that we should not continue indefinitely to confine ourselves to members of the Provincial Civil Services. For there is a great danger that Indians in the Indian Civil Service may come to look upon the Political Department as a service suitable enough for Provincial Civil Services but not quite suitable for themselves. It is therefore that I repeat again that any assistance that this House can give us in inducing Indians in the Indian Civil Service to come forward will be greatly valued. I admit that service in the Political Department is not always and everywhere attractive. We have many stations which are the reverse of attractive. I listened with some amusement yesterday to the discussion of various temperate and salubrious stations in India. I thought of Quetta—a station that I personally value very highly—I thought of Quetta where even at this time of the year I have known icicles hang by the wall, as long as myself. I thought of the barren trade route that leads from Nushki to Seistan. Not all the eloquence of Mr. Chatterjee's picture of the horrors of Khewra can come up to that. (A Voice: "That was a fancy picture.") The picture I draw of the Chaghai desert is not a fancy picture at all. I thought of Mekran, that howling desolation of abomination. I thought of those stations on the Persian Gulf which some of my Bombay friends probably know. (Dr. Nand Lal: "Is that the only reason why Indians should not be initiated?") I hesitate to follow up my Honourable friend's interruption, because I feel very strongly the force of the appeal made by my Honourable friend, Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar, for despatch of business.

[Mr. Denys Bray.]

Munshi Iswar Saran: An esteemed friend of mine who happens to be a Member of this Honourable House told me this morning that the discussion of this question is tiring. I have only to add another adjective and then I shall whole-heartedly agree with him, that it is tiring as well as distressing. My Honourable friend, Mr. Bray, has relieved me of the necessity of quoting any figures on the present occasion, for he says, and I hope I am doing him no injustice, in an apologetic tone that up to September, 1921, the door was shut against Indians and since then the door has been opened wide. Those of us who know how careful the Honourable Mr. Bray is in the choice of his language and how his language is not only elegant but also accurate will feel rather surprised that he should call this opening to be a wide opening. Now, we are told that the reason why there are only 5 or 6 Indians in the Foreign and Political Department is that suitable Indian candidates from the Army and the Civil Service are not forthcoming. Sir, this statement is something about which it is very difficult for me to express any opinion as I have no personal knowledge on the subject. By his remarks Mr. Bray wanted to create the impression that the members of the Indian Civil Service or of the Army are not forthcoming—I mean the Indian members—because of those horrible places where they might be posted. But he has forgotten to mention that there are so many attractions in the Political and Foreign Department. What about the Residents of Kashmir and what about the Residents of other equally good places where you can combine pleasure with business to a most perfect degree? Are there not those attractions before them, and are the Indian members of the Indian Civil Service and the Indian officers of the Indian Army so dense, or so unimaginative as not to know the prizes that they can win if they enter this Department? Sir,

I do not wish to question for a moment the statement made by my Honourable friend, Mr. Bray, but I must confess that I do not feel convinced that the sole and only reason why since 1921 only 5 or 6 Indian officers have been taken into this Department is that many candidates have not been forthcoming.

Mr. Denys Bray: May I interrupt? If I gave my Honourable friend, Munshi Iswar Saran, the impression that there has been any lack of applications from the Provincial Civil Services I was in great error.

Munshi Iswar Saran: I must have been very unfortunate in the choice of my language if I created the impression that there was any dearth of applications from members of the Provincial Civil Services. Mr. Bray made it perfectly clear and I understood him thoroughly. What he complains of is that the Indian members of the Indian Civil Service and the Indian officers of the British Army have not been sending up applications for being taken into this Department. Sir, as I said before, I do not feel convinced by Mr. Bray's explanation that the sole reason why you find so few Indians in this Department is the reason assigned by him. Here is an argument brought forward which at its face value seems to be forceful, but I have some suspicion in my own mind that this is not the sole and only reason of the fact that there are only a few Indians in this service. When I talk of Indians I do mean Indians of all classes, be they Indians or be they Anglo-Indians, be they Hindus or be they Muhammadans—they are all entitled to have their share in the Foreign and Political Department. I hope that some explanation which will convince and satisfy the House will be forthcoming next year and I hope that it will be the good fortune of Mr. Bray to get up in this House and say that the number has increased a very great deal. There can be no doubt that there exists and I hope Government will make a note of it, a great feeling of dissatisfaction in this House as regards the shortness of the number of Indians in the Foreign and Political Department.

There is another reason why I gave notice of the motion standing in my name and it is that I wish to ask this House to consider the question whether the attitude taken and the remarks made by the representative of the Foreign and Political Department in the other Chamber does not necessitate a protest and a very strong protest from the Members of this Assembly. And I wish, Sir, with your permission to refer to that. It will be in the recollection of the House that the Princes Protection Bill was thrown out by us. The question whether that was a wise step or was an unwise step is one with which I am not concerned at this moment. We all know that under the certificate of His Excellency the Governor General this Bill was introduced in the other Chamber and while introducing this Bill and whilst speaking on this question the representative of the Foreign and Political Department permitted himself to make these observations about this House. I shall, Sir, read a few lines from that:

"Surely, Sir, a Bill that comes before either Chamber of the Legislature with credentials of this nature is one which deserves the most earnest and the most serious consideration. And what is the answer that the Legislative Assembly have given? I am willing to believe that when they gave that answer they did not realize all that it implied. But, taken at its face value what does that answer mean? They refused to allow this Bill within the precincts of their House; they have flung it back practically in the face of the Government of India; they have told the head of that Government that his ideas about the interpretation of contracts, his ideas on the subject of honour are less than dust in the balance."

I shall beg the House to carefully mark the following words.

Mr. Denys Bray: On a point of order, Sir. Is this really relevant?

Mr. President: This is a vote for the Foreign and Political Department and under the arrangement come to,—I would not call it a ruling,—between the Chair and the Honourable the Home Member the action of the Foreign and Political Department is under review. I was waiting to see whether the Honourable Member would remain in order. I admit that he is getting near the border.

Munshi Iswar Saran: I shall keep on the right side, Sir.

"But what is more than this is that their decision at its face value means that in their view, contracts and treaties have no meaning, that honour is a plea that they will not discuss and that they recognise none of the agreements which have been concluded by the Executive Government of this country. Surely, Sir, that brings us to the edge of an abyss, and it is only the feeling that the Assembly did not really realize what their action implied that makes it possible for us to take a more optimistic view of the situation than we might otherwise have been able to do."

Sir, not only non-official Members of the other House took exception to these remarks but I am very glad to say that on that occasion the then Home Member raised his voice of protest and this is what he said:

"Sir, I should like to say at the outset that I do not take the same view as the Honourable Mr. Thompson took of the action of the Legislative Assembly in respect to this Bill. I do not believe and I have every authority for what I am saying that they ever intended in any way to flout His Excellency. I do not think that the suggestion that the honour of the Government of India or the honour of the Viceroy has not weighed with them as dust in the balance is correct."

And then he says:

"I believe that the Assembly acted unwisely (a matter of opinion and I join issue with the then Home Member on this question) in rejecting the motion for introduction and I believe that that feeling is shared by many here. But I feel with Mr. Kale that it is neither fair to them to criticise them in the manner adopted, nor do I think it will do this House or the Government any good. I cannot believe that remarks made here in antagonism to the other House can produce good results. I agree that we have been forced by the action of the Assembly into a very unfortunate position."

Mr. President: I agree that it is difficult to say whether the Honourable the Home Member was talking of the Political Secretary in his capacity as Political Secretary or a Member of the Council of State. I think the Honourable Member must now come more particularly to the vote to be given to the Foreign and Political Department in the forthcoming year.

Munshi Iswar Saran: I will make one submission, Sir, in regard to this. Mr. Thompson occupies a seat in the Council of State not in his individual capacity. Mr. Thompson occupies a seat in the other House as the representative of the Foreign and Political Department. Any remarks that are made for instance by the Honourable the Home Member here are made by him not, as Sir Malcolm Hailey but as the Honourable the Home Member. So, I submit, with great respect, that Mr. Thompson, when he made these remarks, made them as the representative of the Foreign and Political Department and it is this view I take it that Sir William Vincent took of those remarks. Sir, there were other Members as I have already said who raised their voice of protest, but I need not refer to them owing to the exigencies of our business. What I beg to say here in most clear and most emphatic language is this, that it is up to this House to enter the strongest protest against the remarks made by the Political Secretary on that occasion. There may be difference of opinion as regards the attitude adopted by this House towards the Princes Protection Bill, but I venture to hope and sincerely trust that there will be no difference of opinion between the various sections in this House that the dignity and the honour of this Assembly should be kept intact and that no official should take advantage of his position and attack us in the manner in which a responsible official of the Government of India has done in the other House. I submit, Sir, that it is up to us by our vote to show that we strongly resent these remarks and indignantly repudiate them and that the Political Secretary should not have attacked us behind our backs. If he wishes to attack us or for the matter of that any other official wishes to attack us, he should do so on the floor of this House.

Chaudhri Shahab-ud-Din (East Central Punjab: Muhammadan): Are we not doing the same here?

Munshi Iswar Saran: You are forgetting that the Foreign and Political Department is represented here by my Honourable friend Mr. Bray. You forget that the Indian Legislative Assembly is not represented by anybody there.

Chaudhri Shahab-ud-Din: For whom did Sir William Vincent speak?

Mr. President: My Honourable friend must be aware from these interruptions, that he is leading the debate into a dangerous course. I must ask him to desist now and come to the subject of the vote.

Munshi Iswar Saran: I shall say only one word in regard to the interruption of my Honourable friend, Chaudhri Shahab-ud-Din. He seems to be awfully simple; he imagines that some one in that House represents the Assembly. The Honourable the Home Member does not represent there the Legislative Assembly; that is a fact which he ought to understand.

Before I close my remarks, I say with all the earnestness that I can command, that it is up to this House by its vote to-day to show that it will stand no nonsense of this character and no accusation of this character from anybody, be he the Political Secretary or be he even a higher personage.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: I really do not believe that the House wishes to be led by Mr. Iswar Saran into a discussion on the merits of the speech delivered by a Member of the Council of State. I do not think that it could really desire by a vote given here to canvass a matter which we all know closed last summer. The interruptions which occurred in the course of his speech showed very clearly to me that Munshi Iswar Saran had been led by the fervour of his advocacy into using expressions which were likely in the long run to do little good to the relations between this House and that. Now, let me take his proposition. He proposes this motion for reduction on the ground that Mr. Thompson represented this motion for reduction and Political Department in the Council of State. But only the Foreign and Political Department in the Council of State, Mr. Thompson, however he comes into the Council of State, is just as much a Member of that body as I am, however I come to this Assembly, a Member of this House. As a Member of that body he is entitled to the same rights of free debate as any other Member of the Council of State. You cannot give him a dual personality and when what he says pleases you say that he is a Member of the Council, and when it displeases you, say that he is speaking only as a Government official, and is not entitled to the protection which ought to be extended by one House to views expressed in another. Let me go a little further. On that occasion the criticisms delivered by Mr. Thompson regarding the action taken by this House, into the merits of which I do not desire to enter here, were deprecated by Sir William Vincent. Did he do so as a Government officer or did he do so as a Member of this House? Of course he did so entirely as a Member of this House; he, more than anyone else, was affected by the manner in which the Bill was treated in this House, but he thought nevertheless that in the circumstances it was necessary to deprecate any attack on this House or suggestions as to its motives in refusing introduction of the Bill. But his protest was not (like that of Mr. Iswar Saran) against the Department, but against criticisms of the House by a Member of another.

[Sir Malcolm Hailey.]

Sir, we all value our position in this Assembly. We come here partly as Government Members to represent the Government view; but while retaining that position we have tried to identify ourselves with our colleagues in the Assembly, just as Government Members in the Council of State do try to identify themselves with the other Members of that body. I deprecate strongly the suggestion that we should, in speaking in either branch of the Legislature, be treated as though we need a position apart from other Members, and we ought, if we have to advert to action taken in another House, to be treated in the same way as non-official Members and not as officers of this or that Department. I agree, of course, that we ought also to follow the general conventions regarding criticism of one body by another. Now, Sir, I would only say I have heard Mr. Iswar Saran himself at times criticise the Council of State; I have heard from other Members of this House descriptions of the Council of State which I was a little sorry afterwards to see in print. Every time I have heard those criticisms, sometimes slighting, I have deprecated them. I hold that it is in the best interests of either body that it should not attack the other, either in the mass or as individuals. (Hear, hear.)

Munshi Iswar Saran: On a point of personal explanation, Sir, I wish to know if ever I have said that the other House did not pay due regard to questions of honour, etc., as did Mr. Thompson in the other House?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: I do not know why he should ask that question from me. I did not put it to him that he had ever said so. I said I had heard him criticise.

Munshi Iswar Saran: Criticism is another matter.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That the provision for pay of officers under the sub-head 'Foreign and Political Department' be reduced by Rs. 1,000."

The motion was negatived.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: I move:

"That the provision for Establishment under the sub-head 'Foreign and Political Department' be reduced by Rs. 100."

I framed this motion, Sir, as a protest against the way in which the Foreign and Political Department have behaved in three most important matters. First of all, Sir, in depriving this House of its privilege of voting supplies. In the second place, Sir, in attempting to place us in opposition to Princes of the Realm. In the third place, Sir, in their entire poverty of talent in finding Indians to fill the Foreign and Political Department. Sir, if Honourable Members will turn to page 281, they will find a footnote on an important fact, a political event of great importance, probably a historical event, concealed in a footnote; and this Assembly is taken into its confidence by way of a footnote. Honourable Members will remember that for the last two years we have been discussing the administration of the Bangalore Assigned Tracts, a small area which has been entrusted to His Majesty's Government by the Mysore Darbar. And year after year, in 1921 and 1922 this House examined the demands made and scrutinized the demands made on behalf of that small district. And now, Sir, Honourable Members will find that it "has been decided that the expenditure in the Bangalore Assigned Tracts should be treated as non-voted." What an easy job it is to deprive Honourable Members of their privilege, the small privilege which this House enjoys in the shape of discussing grants. I wonder who is responsible for this. Of course they claim no responsibility. This House need not be consulted in a matter of such great importance! It does not matter whether the people inhabiting that small district have any legitimate source through which they can ventilate their grievances! It does not matter whether, for instance, that small place maintains a costly police establishment! It does not matter how the revenues are extracted, how the income-tax is levied there, it does not matter how the hospitals are run there, whether private patients who resort to the hospitals are made to pay for the doctor's fees or not. Sir, these matters are now placed beyond the pale of criticism by this short footnote which you will find at page 281. Sir, I well remember, as a Member of the Standing Finance Committee, examining the proposals for revision of pay of the establishment in that small tract. We put some very inconvenient questions to the officers on the spot, as to why they maintained such a large number of police in such a small station which is no bigger than a suburb of Madras. We put inconvenient questions as to why clothing should be so largely availed of, more often than in other places, and these questions went in 1921 and 1922 to the Bangalore Administration. His mighty majesty the Resident of Bangalore became annoyed, and here comes the foot note to tell us that it has been put under the non-voted head. Is this Assembly going to allow such an important action to be unnoticed? Are we going to lend ourselves to these transactions? Are such steps to be taken without the consent of the people, without the people being informed, the people who are affected by such an action being even informed? Sir, I have a pile of grievances which I have been asked to ventilate in this House on behalf of the people of Bangalore. Sir, I am shut out altogether by this single entry. How can such an action be taken by any responsible Government I fail to see. Sir, in the next place, on what grounds have they tried to drag us into a quarrel with the mighty and noble Princes of this land? Why have they accused this Assembly of being hostile to the aspirations, to the rights and privileges of the Princes, who are our own blood, who are our own bone—far was it from our intention to put ourselves in opposition. Sir, the Princes are not to be separated from the people whom they govern. This Assembly was anxious, by the vote on the Princes Protection Bill, to tell the Government "we shall not deal with these States piecemeal. If the Princes require protection, the people require protection also; and therefore we said 'don't come to us with these piecemeal measures'." Sir, the rules and the Standing Orders prevent us from putting questions about what takes place inside these territories. Sir, as many Honourable Members will bear me out, by every mail we get complaints from one Resident or other of one Native State or some other

[Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar.]

Mr. Denys Bray: I rise to a point of order. "Indian States?"

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: Yes, Sir, Indian States. I forgot for the moment; I am sorry—asking us to take up this question and that question. You will remember, Sir, you ruled me out on an interpellation which I asked permission to put to this House about what took place in Hyderabad. You rightly, Sir, did so, I do not complain; this House and the other House are prevented from indulging in questions and Resolutions about what takes place in Indian States. Sir, our plea is, if the people of those States cannot claim protection at the hands of this Assembly, the Princes of these States can no more claim protection at our hands. That was the attitude we emphasised by our votes, that was the attitude which was emphasised by the responsible Committee in which a few Members of the Government took part. That was the attitude which was maintained by the Government of India till the year 1910. It was in the year 1910 for the first time that this Bill or law was enacted in order to give them protection. Having been once put on the Statute Book, within a few years it was repealed, and in 1910 this novel piece of legislation finds a place in the Statute Book of our country,—and it is no wonder that the Committee, the responsible Committee, advised its removal. This Assembly acted on the advice of such a responsible Committee without further examination. Without anybody being taken into confidence, all of a sudden, at the fag end of the session, we were asked to sanction the introduction of a measure which we felt was a piecemeal legislation, which we felt was one we had already advised against, and at that fag end, we said, 'no, you have not appointed another Committee to re-examine the matter.' We said that not on grounds of any hostility to the Princes. They tried to drag us into a quarrel with the Princes; we have no quarrel with the Princes; the people of this country have no quarrel with the Princes; this Legislature has no quarrel with the Princes. I give this assurance on behalf of the non-official Indian Members here in this Assembly to the Princes of this land, that we were not actuated by any motive of hostility. It was a red-herring

Mr. President: The Honourable Member will see that if I allow him to say that, I shall have to allow other Members to say other things. He is in order in discussing the action of the Foreign and Political Department in relation to the matter of the Princes Protection Act, but he must keep off the territory of the Princes.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: The subject was so tempting, Sir, that I was rather drawn into it. Sir, the point which we wished to emphasise was that we were unfit to legislate for them so long as we could not discuss them. Give us the power to discuss that, and we will legislate for them. It is no use asking this Assembly merely to record a decree passed elsewhere and to tell us that we did not observe the honour of contracts. Who made the contracts? When were the contracts published? Were they published? When were they made? By whom were they made? The way they have attempted to go in justification of the measure is rather novel procedure. Sir, the ink on the Resolution was hardly dry: when we passed our Resolution rejecting the motion on Saturday, on the Sunday morning, on the next Sabbath, comes the certification of the Bill! Up it goes to the other House, then to Parliament, and then it is passed: This is the way in which representatives of the people, a responsible Legislature, are treated. I wish to record by means of this vote our emphatic protest against the procedure adopted in respect to this Princes Protection Bill. They tied us down, they have dragged us into a quarrel with the Princes; they have not attached any importance to this Assembly. Sir, the Foreign and Political Department are responsible for that.

Sir, the third point which I wish to raise is the question of what we told to-day about the open door of the Foreign and Political Department. I wish, Sir, it were really open. May I offer a humble suggestion to the Honourable Mr. Bray? Instead of asking for applications from Army officers who hold the King's Commission, why did he not do something else? He complains very old people, people of 40 and 43, applied—you must have anticipated when you pass a rule like that, inviting applications from Army officers who hold the King's Commission, that people do not hold the King's Commission at the age of 25 in this country: and therefore that was merely a blind, merely to appear to satisfy the demand in this Assembly to throw open the Foreign and Political Department. Was it an advertisement this Assembly asked for,—to invite applications from Army officers who hold the King's Commission? Where are they to come from? Where are they? That is the question. This invitation was issued to the Indian Army officers holding the King's Commission,—and the Indian Civil Service while we know perfectly well how few are the Indians in the Indian Civil Service; you have to go all the way to England to get yourself enlisted in the Indian Civil Service. Lay down any test you want, and hold examinations here, young men will be forthcoming anxious to serve in those unhappy places that Mr. Bray mentioned. I am glad to see Mr. Denys Bray alive in this Assembly after all those unfortunate experiences. Look at his bright face, he delights this Assembly with his eloquence. One of the objects of my motion was to draw him into eloquence. Very seldom we can get him to talk, and when he gets on to his legs, we are simply charmed. Sir, here he is the product of Quetta, the product of the North-West Frontier. How is it impossible for my countrymen to also acquire those things there? Surely, the Assistants and Naib Tahsildars and others on the Frontier are Indians. There only the big appointments are held by the Civil Service. What about the other fellows who rot there along with the I. C. S. people? Surely, therefore, it is not a question of racial difficulty or racial unfitness. It is really a question of want of opportunities. Be honest, be sincere in your attempt to get Indians. Sir, have you ever walked along the corridor of the Foreign and Political Department? Have you ever glanced at the sign-boards which hang there? Sir, I have walked this side and that side and it is very difficult to find an Indian name in any of the sign-boards there. I am glad to see scattered here and there in this branch to my right some Indian names. Surely, it cannot be said, it cannot honestly be said, that Indians are not fit to enter the portals and keep company with those bright fellows whom I see sitting there working.

3480

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

[15TH MARCH 1923.]

[Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar.]

Sir, it is all an excuse. Let us make an honest and earnest attempt. I move my motion, Sir, as a protest against all these three points which I have mentioned.

Mr. K. C. Neogy (Dacca Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, Mr. Rangachariar has mentioned that the head "Bangalore" has been transferred from the votable list and has been classed as 'Political' and excluded from our vote to-day. There are two other small items which have been similarly excluded from our vote and included in the Political Department, to which I draw the attention of the House. Honourable Members will find, if they turn to Demand No. 45, adjustments with Provincial Governments, page 153, one is under Burma—Assignment towards the cost of the Burma Military Police, voted. The amount in 1922-23 was Rs. 45,74,000. Under Assam there is another item, Assignment towards the cost of Frontier Military Police, Rs. 14,00,000; and in the footnote you will find that "these assignments have been transferred to political." So, I want to reinforce the arguments which Mr. Rangachariar adduced, and I want an explanation from the Foreign and Political Department as to why this was done. Then, Sir, there is another point to which I wish to draw the attention of the House. It is to the recommendation made by the Incheape Committee regarding the increase of expenditure in the Political Department. It will be seen, if Honourable Members will turn to page 155 of the Incheape Committee's Report, that they condemn the lavish proposal of having a Legation built at Kabul at a cost of 16 lakhs of rupees. If Honourable Members will turn to page 152, they would find, moreover, that Kabul, which was responsible in 1913-14 for an expenditure of Rs. 49,000, has gone up in the matter of expenditure to Rs. 5,26,000 in 1922-23. I am perfectly aware of the important change that has been effected in the status of the representatives of the British Government at Kabul, I believe, last year or the year before. But, Sir, now that the representative of the British Government at Kabul is His Majesty's Minister, and is no longer a Resident of the Indian Political Department, it is but proper that the cost of his establishment should be borne by the British Treasury, or at least half of that cost should be borne by the British Treasury on the analogy of the Legation in Persia. Now, coming to Persia, again, we find that the Incheape Committee have pointed out that though in Persia the total Political expenditure is to be divided equally between the British Government and the Government of India according to the recommendations of the Welby Commission, there are certain items in which this division is not observed, and they urge on the Government of India the necessity of representing matters to the British Treasury in order to secure a more equitable adjustment of the financial responsibility as between the British Treasury and the Government of India. With these words, Sir, I beg to support the motion.

Mr. Denys Bray: Sir, not all the eloquence of Mr. Rangachariar will induce me to make a speech. His elaborate reference to Bangalore took me somewhat by surprise, though I must say at the outset that I have to thank Mr. Rangachariar for his courtesy and consideration in warning me beforehand of the three points that he wished to bring forward under the cover of this motion for a reduction. But I little expected to have a full dress debate on the three points. As regards Bangalore, the position is really quite simple, and I think, that if Mr. Rangachariar will carry his memory back, he will find that he did not discuss last year, and that the House did not raise, motion after motion for a reduction in the Bangalore Demand for Grant.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: I did it in the Finance Committee.

Mr. Denys Bray: Oh, I was not there. Bangalore, strictly speaking, is not British territory at all. This would not in itself be a sufficient reason for not submitting the Demand to the vote of the Assembly. The real reason is that Bangalore finances itself, and under an arrangement made with the Mysore Durbar many years ago, the surplus, after the needs of the Civil Station have been met, is handed over to the Mysore Durbar. Hence, if this House were to spend its time in cutting down the Bangalore Demand for Grant, it would not be enriching the Central Revenues; it would in effect be voting money to the Mysore Durbar to the detriment of the development of the Station itself and against the interests of the British subjects resident there.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: Can we discuss the administration?

Mr. Denys Bray: As for the grievances that the residents of Bangalore may have, it is perfectly open to any Member of this House to ventilate them at any time.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: You have not placed the Grant before us.

Mr. Denys Bray: The Burma and Assam cases which my Honourable friend, Mr. Neogy, referred to have been settled for us over our heads by the Auditor-General. If you will turn to the Notes at the beginning of the Supplementary Statement which was placed before us, you will see it there stated. The matter is automatic. I shall most certainly not follow my Honourable friend, Mr. Rangachariar, in initiating a debate on the Indian States (Protection against Disaffection) Bill. He made a speech to-day, Sir, that he was going to make, had the House allowed the introduction of that Bill. On the subject of Indianisation, I have little to add to what I have already said. The Honourable Mr. Rangachariar has put forward a suggestion that we should open our ranks to direct competition. We may be reduced to this. If we do not get the applications from the Indian Civil Service which I still look for and hope for, then I feel pretty sure that we may have to resort to some such method as this. But I personally think it would be a great mistake, a great pity. With regard to Europeans, we recruit from the Indian Civil Service and the Indian Army. Now, the work in the Political Department is in some ways rather special. Officers—admirable officers—sometimes come to us from the provinces or the army, and find after a time that either they do not suit the work or the work does not suit them, and they go back to the Civil Service or to the Army as the case may be. And it is very advantageous both to Government and to the men themselves that there should be this asylum to which they could go. But under the system Mr. Rangachariar proposes there would be no such asylum. If we had a bad bargain, we would have to keep him; and similarly if a man found that we were a bad bargain, he would have to keep us.

Mr. J. Chaudhuri (Chittagong and Rajshahi Divisions: Non-Muhammadan Rural): I rise to a point of order with regard to that. I raised the question yesterday whether it was competent for the Government of

[Mr. J. Chaudhuri.]

India or any of its departments to transfer a votable item to a non-votable item and my Honourable friend, Mr. Denys Bray, has to-day mentioned that the items to which my friend, Mr. Neogy, referred have been transferred under the orders of the Auditor-General. Now we understood that under section 67A of the Government of India Act the Governor General was entitled to transfer a votable item to a non-votable head.

Dr. H. S. Gour: No, surely not.

Mr. J. Chaudhuri: That was the contention put forward. My point of view was that unless that question was raised in this House and we expressed an opinion with regard to it, the Governor General has no power; that is, unless a question is raised and discussed in this House as to whether such a matter is or is not, it is not within the competence of the Governor General, to decide the question under section 67A, clause 4.

Mr. President: The Honourable Member is arguing a point of great constitutional and political importance which is too wide for a point of order. The terms of the Act are quite explicit. It speaks in section 67A, sub-section (2), clause (5) of "expenditure classified by the order of the Governor General in Council as:

- (a) Ecclesiastical,
- (b) Political,
- (c) Defence.

I do not find any words there, "by and with the assent of the Indian Legislature."

Mr. J. Chaudhuri (the Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey having also risen to speak): I am putting my point and the Honourable the Home Member may then speak

Mr. President: The Honourable Member asked me for a ruling on a point of order. I was pointing out to him that it is not a point of order; it is not for the Chair to settle. The matter is already, as far as I can judge, settled by the Act.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: I wish to point out to Mr. Chaudhuri that the point he is on at present does not really arise out of the classification of the Assam Military Police expenditure as Political. That case was dealt with by the Auditor-General as one of ordinary classification of expenditure for accounts purposes and on his classifying the expenditure as Political. It automatically fell under the provision of sub-clause (5) of sub-section 3 of section 67A, which reserves political expenditure from the vote. This was a new question of accounts classification, and as no question arose such as is contemplated in sub-section (4) whether the classification was proper for the purposes of the Act, it was not referred for the views of the Governor General. That sub-section runs as follows:

"If any question arises whether any proposed appropriation of revenue or moneys does or does not relate to the above heads, the decision of the Governor-General on the question shall be final."

That is a different operation. This present case was one of a purely automatic result of a change in accounts classification regarding a particular item.

Mr. J. Chaudhuri: I think that when such a change is made on the ground that it comes under the head "Political" it should be mentioned in a note or otherwise to give us an opportunity to discuss.

Expenditure in Bangalore District—relegation to non-votable list.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: Sir, the question which was raised by Mr. Rangachariar has not been answered at all by Mr. Bray or the Honourable the Leader of the House. The point is that during the last two years questions relating to expenditure in the Bangalore district were allowed to be discussed in the Standing Committee and also in the Assembly. This year we find a footnote to the effect that it is non-votable. That means that we cannot discuss it. The question on which we want to have a reply from the Leader of the House as well as from the Foreign Secretary is this. Under what authority has this expenditure which has always been open to discussion, been removed from its discussable position and been relegated to the category of non-votable expenditure? That is the point on which we want some explanation, and Mr. Bray, who spoke on this matter, has not given us any explanation. And, Sir, it has been said by the Honourable Mr. Bray that even if we reduced a portion of the expenditure, the result of it would be that the Mysore Government would get the benefit of it. The question is not what Indian Government is going to get the benefit of it, the question is whether we have a right to ventilate the grievances of the people which we have been allowed to ventilate heretofore, but which, without our consent, has been taken away from our cognisance. And that is a question on which we would like to have a fair answer from the Government Benches. Upon one other matter

Mr. President: Before the Honourable Member proceeds, I think we had better deal with that point which is in the nature of a point of order. It is a point of considerable importance and somewhat difficult to elucidate.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: I do not know whether I shall be able to elucidate the point fully to the Members of the House at such short notice, though I am the fortunate possessor of a copy of the Government of India Act while they probably have not copies before them. But may I point out the exact operation? In the first place the Act directs that the Governor General in Council shall lay the estimated annual expenditure before the Legislature in the form of a statement; it then goes on to reserve from the vote expenditure classified by the order of the Governor General in Council as Ecclesiastical, Political or Defence. This obviously refers to the primary classification, for instance, Army and Air Force as 'defence' or consular expenditure as 'political.' But there is a good deal of doubt sometimes regarding particular items, whether they should be entered in the accounts as Political or Ecclesiastical or defence. Such doubts frequently arise as a matter of ordinary accounts classification, quite apart from any effect such classification may have as a consequence of the terms of this Act. That is to say that while there is no doubt at all as to the pay of members of the ecclesiastical establishment, there might be some doubt whether, say, graveyards and their maintenance should be entered as ecclesiastical or not. Similar cases of course arise in regard to Political. I have known numerous cases of items of expenditure which are under the general control of the Political Department and which are very nearly akin to true political expenditure but about which a doubt arises as to exactly where they should be classified in the accounts. Shall we say that the Political Department has control over a certain police force? Are we to put that down under the head police, or is it to be put down under the head Political? I am speaking here, let me repeat, of questions arising regarding classification for ordinary accounts purposes. When such a question of doubt of mere accounts classification arises, we ordinarily refer to the Auditor General; he, of course, has a statutory position in regard to these matters. If the Auditor General says this particular item is undoubtedly Political, then it goes into the Political head of our accounts, and unless any question arises such as the propriety of its inclusion under that head for the purpose of this Act (and I shall deal subsequently with the method of solving such questions), it would automatically, as being under the Political head, be reserved from the vote. Now, that is what happened in the case of these two police battalions. There are I think three police battalions in Assam as the House no doubt knows. I mention the fact in order that they may have no suspicion that we are doing anything irregular in this case; they are kept there for the protection of that part of our North-Eastern frontier. Incidentally the fact that they are there saves us expenditure on military battalions in that quarter. Under the arrangement come to under the Meston Settlement, we pay for these battalions in a lump sum. Our Auditor General told us that as a matter of accounts classification they ought to go down under the head "Political." They have been entered there and it is simply because of this change in accounts classification that they are automatically excepted from the vote. There are other cases where by a change in accounts classification of a particular item it automatically comes under the vote. But, as I have said, cases sometimes arise not as a mere result of a change in accounts classification, but as the result of a question arising whether a particular item or series of items is correctly classified for purposes of 67A of the Act. Such cases may arise owing to discussions between two departments in the Secretariat; when such a definite question arises, and there is a difference of opinion, the Governor General issues an order on the subject, under sub-section (4) of section 67A, after consideration of the matter on its merits. He definitely, in other words, classifies it as "Ecclesiastical," "Political," "Defence," or otherwise. I do not think there is anything in the Act which at all . . .

[Sir Malcolm Hailey.]

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: May I point out that it must be done by the Governor General in Council?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: I think that Mr. Rangachariar is looking at the wrong clause. Sub-section 4 says:

"If any question arises as to whether any proposed appropriation of revenue or moneys does or does not relate to the above heads, the decision of the Governor-General—(he may trust my eyes in this matter)—on the question shall be final."

The House will remember that there is exactly the same provision in regard to provincial items, where the decision of the Governor is final. The cases which so arise are few and far between; but I do not think the House will find anything in the Act to support Mr. Chaudhuri's contention that the question can only arise as a result of doubts expressed in the Legislature.

Mr. J. Chaudhuri: If it arises before the Governor General in Council, then the Governor General's decision will be final. If it arises out of demands, it should arise in the House and, after we have expressed our opinion, then the Governor General may decide. Our point of view is that it should not be done behind our backs and I also maintain that, if it arises between Members of his Council, the Governor General would not be justified in deciding it behind the back of the Members of the Council. That is precisely my point.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: Mr. Chaudhuri says, that it is undesirable to decide the question behind the back of the Legislative Assembly. But I thought that he was speaking on a point of law, and I cannot find anything in the Act myself, which says that it is essential that the Governor General's order on this particular point shall only be taken as the result of a question having arisen in the Assembly,—that was his first point. He further says that the Governor General should not take a decision of this kind in regard to a matter which has come under the consideration of the Governor General in Council behind the back of his Council. May I ask Mr. Chaudhuri in the latter case to allow the Council to look after its own interests? If a case arises in the course of the discussions between Members of the Governor General's Council, the Governor General takes his decision as a result of such discussions. Let me repeat as to the main point which he has made, that there is nothing whatever in the Act which says that the discussion of the Governor General shall not be taken on a point which has been discussed in the Assembly until the views of the Assembly have been placed before the Governor General.

Mr. J. Chaudhuri: Sir, may I point out that there are certain matters in which the House has certain privileges. With regard to demands we can vote the demands and if any item under the demands is taken away from within our jurisdiction, we are entitled to raise that question. Similarly, with regard to the Governor General in Council, there are certain matters, such as Ordinances, for instance, which are within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Governor General. But there are certain other matters which are within the jurisdiction of the Governor General in Council and, if such questions as we are discussing arise in the Council of the Governor General, as it must under section 67A, clause 3 (v), and if the Home Member says that it would fall under the head "Ecclesiastical" or the Finance Member says that this should not fall under the head of "Ecclesiastical" then it will be quite competent and open to the Governor General to decide under section 67A, clause 4, whether it should or should not fall under the head "Ecclesiastical." That is my simple contention, with regard to our privileges as well.

Dr. H. S. Gour: Sir, I rise to a point of order. Lest the House should go astray from what my friend the Honourable Mr. Chaudhuri says, let me point out to the House and point out to you, Sir, that this is not the intention of section 67A of the Government of India Act. A plain reading of that section will disclose the following point . . .

Mr. J. Chaudhuri: Sir, I rise to a point of order. I asked for an answer from the Home Member and from the Government Benches,—not from Dr. Gour.

Dr. H. S. Gour: Very well, Sir, I shall rise to a point of order upon which I invite your decision,—on a substantial issue which I wish to state before this House. If you turn to 67A of the Government of India Act, paragraph 1, you will find, Sir, the genesis of the budget laid there, namely:

"The estimated annual expenditure and revenue of the Governor General in Council shall be laid in the form of a statement before both Chambers of the Indian Legislature in each year."

[Dr. H. S. Gour.]

This constitutes the proposal of the Government of India, as is clear from paragraphs 2 and 3.

Paragraph 2 says

Mr. President: That is not a point of order.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: May I mention, Sir,—I assume that there was a decision of the Governor General in Council classifying this as "Political." I protest against it. If there was no decision, I am on better ground. If there was a decision, I protest against it. That is my vote.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: Since the point was raised by Honourable Members, I was endeavouring to explain fully the processes by which a change may be made in the classification of items presented from time to time to the Assembly. I explained the process—it is a purely automatic process—by which a change may be due to a purely accounts classification, also the process by which the Governor General gives a decision when the point arises in connection with a correct classification for the purpose of 67A of the Act. Now let me come to the definite case before the House, that of Bangalore. That case did arise in discussion between the Departments and the Governor General gave his decision. I do not, of course, go into the exact reasons which actuated the Governor General in giving his decision.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: Governor General or Governor General in Council?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: Governor General.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: Not the Governor General in Council?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: No, Sir. It is a case under sub-section (4).

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: Look at clause (3) (v) please:

"Expenditure classified by the order of the Governor General in Council as—

- (a) ecclesiastical;
- (b) political;
- (c) defence."

Is there an order of the Governor General in Council classifying this as political?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: The general classifications of expenditure are laid down by the Governor General in Council. When a doubt arises regarding a particular item of expenditure, for the purpose of this section of the Act, then sub-section (4) comes into operation. On this particular question of Bangalore as I say the decision of the Governor General was taken. Bangalore is financed entirely from certain funds, the surplus of which goes to an Indian State. (Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: "Collected from the people.") As the surplus goes to an Indian State, which is more interested therefore than is the Assembly itself in the amount of the expenditure, the decision was to classify it as "Political." The decision was not taken with a view to closing to discussion the grievances of the inhabitants of Bangalore. The fact that it is not voted and is under the head "Political" does not necessarily close discussion of that nature.

It might have that effect if Bangalore were truly part of a Native State and were not under British Administration. I invite the Honourable Member to say whether we have in the past in any such similar case ever attempted to closure the discussion in regard to Administered Areas. This is not a single instance.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: My point is we cannot discuss it at this date—to-day, whereas if it was a voted head I can reduce the grant under that head. But I cannot do it to-day. I have to adopt this indirect manner.

Mr. President: Does the Honourable Member propose to give up the arrangement made yesterday?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: We have actually been discussing it. It is now only 4 o'clock. Even if the rest of the House would like to go home we are perfectly willing to listen to Mr. Rangachariar's account of the grievances of the inhabitants of Bangalore up to any time this evening, and we are perfectly willing to ask the Governor General to redress these grievances. There is really no bar to a discussion of this nature. As a matter of fact, Mr. Rangachariar knows that quite well.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: Am I to take it, Sir, that I can move to-day a reduction of the pay of the Superintendent of Police, Bangalore district, by Rs. 100? Can I do it to-day?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: The Honourable Member has already moved for a reduction of Rs. 100 in order to call attention to the alleged grievances. I would now ask him to pursue the enumeration of those grievances of which he speaks and which I confess appear to me somewhat hypothetical.

Mr. J. Chaudhuri: With regard to your ruling, Sir, yesterday when this point was raised, the Honourable the Chair said that it was a question of transfer of entry in the books of account. But here it is more than that. Something which was within the scope of our vote has been removed outside that scope. Of course we have had a discussion with regard to that, but I say, very rightly as it is a matter of privilege which we have exercised hitherto and cannot close without giving us an opportunity to discuss it.

Sir Montagu Webb: Sir, I move that the question be now put.

Mr. P. P. Ginwala: Sir, it is extraordinary how very little progress we make in constitutional matters within a year. Last year this House carried a Resolution that it was within the discretion of the Governor General to abolish this distinction between "votable" and "non-votable" items. The Government

Mr. President: I allowed a discussion of that matter on a point of order. The discussion on the point of order developed unfortunately into a debate. That point of order is now disposed of and the Honourable Member will address himself to the Foreign and Political Department.

Dr. H. S. Gour: How has it been disposed of, Sir?

Mr. President: Because the Chair says so!

Mr. P. P. Ginwala: My contention is with regard to the two points that Mr. Rangachariar has raised. First of all, the Political Department has somehow managed to place its expenditure under the non-votable head, and that, I say, shows that we are moving backwards and not forwards. We protested against expenditure which was once treated as votable being this year made non-votable . . .

Mr. President: Order, order. The Honourable Member has not understood what the Honourable the Home Member pointed out to the House. The transfer of these matters is done by order of the Governor General in Council on the advice of the Auditor-General who is the officer retained for that purpose amongst other things. It is not done by order, and cannot be done by order, of the Foreign and Political Department. I have allowed the House, as I said, to discuss that point of order at great length. The Honourable Member must now address himself to the Foreign and Political Department vote.

Mr. P. P. Ginwala: Yes, Sir. I am not discussing any point of order. What I meant to discuss is the Government method. They say they took the advice of the Auditor-General. We protest against the advice of the Auditor-General. He is not the Legal Adviser of Government. It is a question of law. The Auditor-General cannot decide what is obviously a point of law . . .

Mr. President: Order, order. After I have informed the Honourable Member once more what the position is, this discussion must cease. The Governor General in Council classifies expenditure. Whenever a doubt arises, and there is a dispute as regards classification in which the Legislative, Finance and Foreign and Political Departments take opposite views, the Governor General in practice refers it to the Auditor-General and his order is carried out.

Dr. H. S. Gour: May I ask, Sir, if the decision of the Governor General on the subject is available to the Members of this House?

Mr. President: The Honourable Member knows perfectly well that the decision is carried out in the Demands for Grants presented to the House.

Dr. H. S. Gour: I find no decision of the Governor General as contemplated in clause (4) included.

Mr. President: The Statute does not authorise or instruct the Governor General in Council to transmit his orders to the House. He transmits it to the Honourable Member concerned in the Department.

Dr. H. S. Gour: The Statute compels the Governor General to decide, Sir.

Mr. President: The Honourable Member must take it that this was decided.

Mr. P. P. Ginwala: I think that in view of your last remark I shall not pursue this point now. I shall find another opportunity later on. I shall confine myself for the present to the Political Department. Now, our grievance against the Political Department is this, that it brought before the House a measure for its approval which under the rules of debate the House would not have the power to debate properly. When that motion came before the House we could not have discussed the relations of the Indian Princes with the British Government and without a fair and proper discussion of the relations based upon treaties of the British Government with the Indian Princes we could not have decided whether such legislation was necessary. It was the Political Department . . .

Mr. President: The Honourable Member is trying to deliver a speech which would have been in order when the Bill was presented. I may remind the Honourable Member that it was open to any Member of the Assembly to have asked the Chair when that Bill was presented what the scope of the discussion would be. Had that point been taken then, the information available to the House might have been larger than it was.

Mr. P. P. Ginwala: I suppose we are expected to know what the rules of the House are and we anticipate that it would not be permissible for the Chair then to give us that latitude within those rules. That was the reason why this House would have nothing to do with a measure of that description. That was the position that this House took up. At least some of us did so. The rules are so framed that you could not possibly have allowed a discussion of the relations between the Indian Princes and the British Government upon which largely the utility of that measure depended. Therefore this House would have nothing to do whatsoever with a measure of that kind. The position that I take up is that the Political Department has no business to come to this House for legislation which on its merits cannot be discussed within the rules of procedure prescribed for discussion by this House. It is all very well for Honourable gentlemen on the Government Benches to say—as I heard Mr. Denys Bray say—that the debate would have been allowed. How does he know? As we understood the rules, and as we thought the rules would be interpreted by the Chair, such a discussion would not have been allowed. The main reason for the enactment of the Bill, according to the view then put forward and by the Government was that it was required in order to give effect to certain treaties, treaties relating to the relations of the British Government with the Indian Princes. We should have expected the Government to lay those treaties on the table of the House. We should have asked for Government's authority to enter into those treaties and we should have inquired whether Government's contention followed from the treaties. You would have been bound to tell us that according to the rules of business we could not be supplied with such information, and we would have at once been stopped from proceeding further. Did the Government suppose that we were going to give sanction to a measure at any stage of its passage without being placed in possession of all the necessary documents and information? They would never have told us enough of the treaties to enable us to judge of their binding nature with reference to the necessity of the proper legislation. They would have said "No, the rules forbid it." As a matter of fact, Mr. Neogy asked that the papers relating to the treaties should be laid on the table of the House and the question itself was disallowed. How did the Government expect us then to do anything else with a Bill of that description except to reject it the moment it came before us. Then if a question . . .

Mr. President: The Honourable Member cannot proceed with that point. I have pointed out that what Members are entitled to do is to discuss the action of the Political Department in relation to those matters that arose out of the preparation of the measure, such as the appearance of their representative before the Press Committee and so on, but to review now the speeches which were made, or which might have been made on a motion which the House rejected, is not in order.

Mr. P. P. Ginwala: I shall close my remarks with this one observation that we shall have nothing to do with the Foreign and Political Department in this House in so far as it has reference to the relations with the Indian Princes, and if it persists in bringing measures before this House in connection with these matters we shall show our disapproval of that Department by the adoption of this motion.

Khan Bahadur Abdur Rahim Khan: Sir, I have been listening to the speeches delivered by the Honourable Members on this matter. I will not go into the legal aspect of their speeches, but coming as I do from a part where we have a Resident at Kabul, I think my remarks will be of some use in the consideration of this question. My Honourable friend has said something about the waste of money at Kabul. Well, I am afraid these remarks must be very discouraging to those officers who have got troublesome and painful duties to perform. I am sure in their heart of hearts they must be expecting an expression of thanks and gratitude from us, but when they read in the newspapers the remarks made by a responsible House like this they will feel very disappointed. Now, I assure those gentlemen, coming as I do from the North-West Frontier Province, that it is due to their presence and their personality at Kabul that we have peace on the frontier. But for their diplomacy I am sure this country would have been taxed much more, would have been burdened with a lot of expenditure. It is their presence there that has saved us from a waste of money and it is due to their presence there that we are getting on splendidly with Afghanistan. At present our relations with Afghanistan are very friendly and it is wholly due to their presence and ability.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: May I rise to a point of order? Nobody has attacked those officers, we have not said a single word against those very noble people who are doing their work right loyally.

Khan Bahadur Abdur Rahim Khan: Of course, Mr. Rangachariar has been in that part of the country and he has got a very good opinion about them. I mentioned their names because attack is made on the expenditure of the institution of which they form a part. Leaving that aside, I will advise my Honourable friends that if they want to learn anything from the British people they will have to learn from the Foreign and Political Department. The thing is that this is the school where you see the life in practice, this is the school from which you can learn a lot, but if you criticise this Department which has got the interests or the destiny of India in their hands what would be the condition? (Cries of 'Oh.') My Honourable friends say 'Oh!' They do not realise what is going on. If you want to be strong you must have either a strong army to answer blow for blow, but if you cannot have that, you must have diplomacy. And if you are not going to have either a strong army or good diplomacy,—I do not know what will happen, and the speeches that are delivered will have no use and will be ineffective. I would suggest to Honourable Members that when we have got this Department, we should see what they have been doing, whether the work which was entrusted to them is being done faithfully and loyally and whether that has been fruitful. If that be the case, I think it will be unfair to criticise that Department or to drag it in in the newspapers. I would not have got up and said these words but for the fact that certain Honourable Members do not realise the effect of the newspaper attacks on the independent territory whose people do not know what is going on outside. By these attacks you compromise the prestige of the Department and belittle their services. I can say that this Department has produced personalities of whom India in general and the Foreign and Political Department in particular should be proud. The other day Mr. Bray mentioned the name of Sir Robert Sandeman, a gentleman who has got a glorious record and for generations he will be remembered. I do not think that there will be any Indian or any Englishman who enters the service of the Foreign and Political Department who will not study his books and profit by his advice. Then I will mention Sir Henry McMahon who followed Sir Sandeman's footsteps, Sir Louis Dane, Sir George Roos-Keppel and we have now Sir John Maffey who has been doing and is still doing wonderful work. (A Voice: "Who says they are not?") I do not mean that you blamed them, but I say that to criticise that Department which has produced such giant figures is not good in the interests of India and in the interests of those people who are serving us. (Dr. Nand Lal: "None of us has criticised the personality of any officer.") I am glad that my Honourable friend, Dr. Nand Lal did not keep quiet as he used to do. Of course, I agree with my Honourable friend Mr. Rangachariar that this Department should be Indianised. I will be the last man to say that there should be a bar against Indians in this Department. On the other hand I say, this service is a most important service and that it must be Indianised. I will be failing in my duty towards my country or my community if I say that this Department should not be Indianised. What I say is this that this Department expects some consideration and courtesy at our hands and that we should be a little generous towards them. (Cries of "Let the question be put.")

Mr. President: The question is that the question be put.

The motion was adopted.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That the provision for Establishment under the sub-head 'Foreign and Political Department' be reduced by Rs. 100."

The Assembly divided:

AYES—46.

Abdul Rahman, Munshi.
Abdulla, Mr. S. M.
Abul Kasem, Maulvi.
Agarwala, Lala Girdharilal.
Ahmed, Mr. K.
Asjad-ul-lah, Maulvi Miyan.
Ayyangar, Mr. M. G. M.
Ayyar, Mr. T. V. Seshagiri.
Bagde, Mr. K. G.
Barua, Mr. D. C.
Basu, Mr. J. N.
Bhanja Deo, Raja R. N.
Bhargava, Pandit J. L.
Bishambhar Nath, Mr.
Chaudhuri, Mr. J.
Das, Babu B. S.
Ginwala, Mr. P. P.
Girdhardas, Mr. N.
Gour, Dr. H. S.
Gulab Singh, Sardar.
Iswar Saran, Munshi.
Jamnadas Dwarkadas, Mr.
Jatkar, Mr. B. H. R.

Joshi, Mr. N. M.
Kamat, Mr. B. S.
Lakshmi Narayan Lal, Mr.
Mahadeo Prasad, Munshi.
Man Singh, Bhai.
Misra, Mr. B. N.
Mudaliar, Mr. S.
Mukherjee, Mr. J. N.
Nag, Mr. G. C.
Nand Lal, Dr.
Neogy, Mr. K. C.
Pyari Lal, Mr.
Ramji, Mr. Manmohandas.
Rangachariar, Mr. T.
Sarfaraz Hussain Khan, Mr.
Sarvadhikary, Sir Deva Prasad.
Singh, Babu B. P.
Sinha, Babu Ambica Prasad.
Sinha, Babu L. P.
Srinivasa Rao, Mr. P. V.
Subrahmanayam, Mr. C. S.
Venkatapatriaju, Mr. B.
Vishindas, Mr. H.

NOES—53.

Abdul Quadir, Maulvi.
 Abdur Rahim, Khan, Mr.
 Achariyar, Rao Bahadur P. T.
 Srinivasa.
 Ahsan Khan, Mr. M.
 Aiyar, Mr. A. V. V.
 Aiyer, Sir P. S. Sivaswamy.
 Akram Hussain, Prince A. M. M.
 Allen, Mr. B. C.
 Amjad Ali, Maulvi.
 Barodawalla, Mr. S. K.
 Blackett, Sir Basil.
 Bradley-Birt, Mr. F. B.
 Bray, Mr. Denys.
 Brayne, Mr. A. F. L.
 Bridge, Mr. G.
 Burdon, Mr. E.
 Cabell, Mr. W. H. L.
 Chatterjee, Mr. A. C.
 Clark, Mr. G. S.
 Cotelingam, Mr. J. P.
 Crookshank, Sir Sydney.
 Dalal, Sardar B. A.
 Faridoonji, Mr. R.
 Gidney, Lieut.-Col. H. A. J.
 Haigh, Mr. P. B.
 Hailey, the Honourable Sir Malcolm.

Hindley, Mr. C. D. M.
 Holme, Mr. H. E.
 Hullah, Mr. J.
 Hussanally, Mr. W. M.
 Ikramullah Khan, Raja Mohd.
 Innes, the Honourable Mr. C. A.
 Jamall, Mr. A. O.
 Jejeebhoy, Sir Jamsetjee.
 Ley, Mr. A. H.
 Lindsay, Mr. Darcy.
 Mitter, Mr. K. N.
 Moir, Mr. T. E.
 Muhammad Hussain, Mr. T.
 Muhammad Ismail, Mr. S.
 Nabi Hadi, Mr. S. M.
 Percival, Mr. P. E.
 Ramayya Pantulu, Mr. J.
 Samarth, Mr. N. M.
 Sams, Mr. H. A.
 Sassoon, Capt. E. V.
 Schamnad, Mr. Mahmood.
 Shahab-ud-Din, Chaudhri.
 Sircar, Mr. N. C.
 Spence, Mr. R. A.
 Townsend, Mr. C. A. H.
 Webb, Sir Montagu.
 Willson, Mr. W. S. J.

The motion was negatived.

Khan Bahadur Sarfaraz Hussain Khan: I beg to move:

"That the provision for service postage and telegram charges under sub-head 'Foreign and Political Department' be reduced by Rs. 20,000."

In 1922-23 the demand was one lakh and in 1923-24 the demand is 1,20,000 and then below that is another provision for service postage and telegram charges, Rs. 6,230 and the footnote explains "Provision intended for charges on the drop copies of messages intercepted at Karachi, Bombay and Madras for repetition to His Excellency the Viceroy. I do not see why this increase should be made and if I get an explanation which is satisfactory I will not press my motion. In view of the fact that the political atmosphere is better than last year, I do not see why this increase should be made. If I get a satisfactory explanation I will withdraw my motion.

Mr. Denys Bray: Sir, I am glad to give my Honourable friend the most satisfactory answer of all: the reduction has already been made—and more also.

The motion was, by leave of the Assembly, withdrawn.

Lieutenant-Colonel H. A. J. Gidney (Nominated: Anglo-Indians): Sir, my remarks will be brief, I wish to take advantage of this opportunity of approaching the Member in charge of this Department with a view to ascertaining from him an explanation on the administration of this Department. I take my stand on the general question and in doing so I wish to refer particularly to the replies which the Honourable Mr. Bray gave to certain questions that I asked him in September 1922. I approach the matter, Sir, with the same desire as did my Honourable friends, Dr. Nand Lal and Mr. Rangachariar, but from a slightly different angle of vision. He was pressed by these two Honourable Members for an explanation as to why the Political Department was not being Indianized. I am afraid I have to press him for an explanation as to why the Department is not being Anglo-Indianized and to ask him when replying to kindly reconcile his reply with the replies he gave me in September 1922, as to why members of the domiciled community are being excluded from the Political Department. Sir, when Mr. Jamnadas moved his Resolution on Indianization of the Public Services, he interpreted the word "Indianisation" as including all communities, and I therefore expect the Heads of all Government Departments to take that view, and which view this Honourable House has unanimously accepted. If I am so far right, Sir, then I should like to ask Mr. Denys Bray why he gave the following reply to my question in September 1922, when I asked him why members of my community had not been appointed in the Political Department:

"The appointments in question were made in pursuance of the policy adopted by the Government of India with the approval of the Secretary of State for India of admitting a substantial proportion of Indians in the Political Department. The question of admitting members of the Provincial Civil Service who belong to the domiciled community has not been considered."

I can see my Honourable friend, Munshi Iswar Saran, smiling at me and I feel sure that he will readily agree with me that if my community is included in the term "Indianization," then the Member in charge of this Department as also of all other Departments should give the same privileges and rights to the domiciled community, and if not, then in common with other Indian communities I have the right to ask "why not?"

Mr. Denys Bray: Sir, the reply I gave the Honourable Member was to the effect that the question of admitting members of the Provincial Civil Service who belonged to the domiciled community had not been considered. It has not been considered as a general question, for the Indianization that has been effected was put into effect definitely with the object of opening the Political Department to Indians in the strict, or rather the narrow sense of the word. But I can assure the Honourable Member of this, that if a suitable member of the domiciled community belonging to either the Indian Civil Service or to the Indian Army or to the Provincial Civil Service puts in an application for admission to the Political Department, that application will be considered on its merits.

Sardar Gulab Singh (West Punjab: Sikh): I move:

"That the provision for Foreign and Political Department under the head 'General Administration' be reduced by Rs. 20,000."

Sir, a comparison of the figures given in the detailed estimates and report of the Inchcape Committee and revised schedule of demands will show that the expenditure under the sub-head "Political and Foreign" has been increased. The recommendation of the Inchcape Committee especially supports my view. Now, Sir, at page 4 of the revised schedule of demands, the reduction recommended by the Retrenchment Committee is 49 lakhs 89 thousands; whereas the reduction made is 36 lakhs 37 thousands. My proposal for reduction, Sir, is very moderate; only Rs. 20,000 for one Departmental sub-head. Sir, it has been very rightly remarked by the Honourable the Finance Member that we have another reason for reductions. The budget is a budget with a deficit of 5 crores, which of course must not be made good by taxing the country which is already over-taxed. And as far as borrowing is concerned, Sir, the Government of India already stands in debt to the extent of Rs. 700 crores and money is scarce in the country and the Imperial Bank interest rate is 8 per cent. . . .

Mr. President: I am afraid the Foreign and Political Department are not responsible for the finances of the country.

Sardar Gulab Singh: Very good, Sir. Then I move my amendment that the reduction of Rs. 20,000 be made under this sub-head.

The motion was negatived.

Dr. Nand Lal: I move that:

"The demand under sub-head 'Foreign and Political Department' be reduced by Rs. 5,000."

Sir, as I have already taken part in the debate and as Mr. Harchandrai Vishindas has not had any opportunity of taking part and he is desirous of dealing with a special point relating to his province, I transfer my right of speaking on this motion to him.

Mr. Harchandrai Vishindas (Sind: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Now, Sir, I wish to bring to the notice of the Political Department as a general question of administration of a particular instance in which the Political Department have worked in a manner which is very much to be regretted. I refer to the well-known case of Sher Muhammad Bijoy Ali on the Sind frontier. Now there is a Sind Frontier Regulation which is under the jurisdiction of the Foreign and Political Department which vests summary powers of dealing with certain cases . . .

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: May I point out, that is a matter under the Bombay Government, and the Honourable Member will find that it was dealt with in the Bombay Legislative Council and by the Bombay Government . . .

Mr. Harchandrai Vishindas: That may be, but my submission is that it is a branch of the Political Department. I will simply, by unfolding the case, be bringing it to the notice of the Political Department, so that they may take any action they think fit in the interests of punitive administration.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: It was a question of privilege that was discussed in the Bombay Council. This matter is open to us on the vote as regards the Foreign and Political Department. I do not see how this can be ruled out. We are fully entitled to discuss this question when we have to consider a demand relating to the Foreign and Political Department. Whether the Bombay Council was justified or not, that is a different matter. It was a question of privilege which was discussed there, and I do not think we can be shut out from discussing this subject here.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: I wish to shut out nothing, but I am bound to point out for the information of the President, the final orders are passed by the Governor of Bombay, not by the Governor General in Council; and that the action taken under the Regulations was taken by an officer of the Bombay Government and not of the Government of India.

Mr. Harchandrai Vishindas: I may point out for the benefit of the Honourable the Home Member, this Sind Frontier Regulation No. 579 is a Regulation made by the Governor General, not by the Governor of Bombay and therefore, with due submission, it was entirely within the jurisdiction . . .

Mr. President: The question is not who made the Regulation, but who is responsible for its administration.

Mr. Denys Bray: Certainly not the Foreign and Political Department.

Mr. President: The Honourable Member denies all knowledge of it?

Mr. Denys Bray: Entirely.

Mr. P. B. Haigh (Bombay: Nominated Official): May I ask the Honourable Member if I am not correct in stating that the officer concerned in this case is the Deputy Commissioner in charge of the Upper Sind Frontier, and that that officer is an officer of the Bombay Government?

Mr. President: Then I think the point raised by the Honourable the Home Member originally that the Bombay Legislative Council was the proper place in which to raise this question in the first instance is correct; and as the Honourable the Foreign Secretary has said that he has no immediate responsibility in the matter, I am afraid the Honourable Member will only be ventilating a grievance with very little purpose.

Mr. Harchandrai Vishindas: After what has been pointed out by Mr. Haigh, I rather thought that this Deputy Commissioner's action that was taken, which is the subject matter of the complaint, was taken by the Deputy Commissioner of Jacobabad; and if Mr. Haigh is right, the Deputy Commissioner comes within the jurisdiction of the Political Department so far as this particular branch of the administration is concerned?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: He is an officer of the Bombay Government.

Mr. Harchandrai Vishindas: So far as the working of that Regulation is concerned, and the Baluchistan Frontier Regulation and other Frontier Regulations are concerned, I think all these are within the cognizance of the Political Department.

Mr. Denys Bray: No, Sir.

Mr. P. B. Haigh: May I point out that the Upper Sind Frontier Regulation is to the best of my knowledge concerned with one of the districts, the Upper Sind Frontier, which is a part of the Presidency of Bombay. It has nothing to do with the Foreign and Political Department.

Mr. President: It is clear now that the arena for this matter is the Legislative Council of the Presidency of Bombay.

Mr. Harchandrai Vishindas: May I ask your ruling, Sir, as to whether I can unfold the case here and then leave it to the Political Department eventually to take such action as they think fit, or not?

Mr. Denys Bray: That action will be nil.

Mr. Harchandrai Vishindas: And may I make my remarks . . .

Mr. President: I must assume that the President, Bombay Legislative Council, appreciated the fact and accepted the fact that this matter was within the competence of the Bombay Government and therefore, mutatis mutandis, within the competence of the Bombay Legislative Council; and especially in view of the fact that the Government of India Act is based largely upon the extension of the autonomy of the provinces, I think it is the duty of the Chair and this Assembly to respect that. It is the Honourable Member's misfortune that he does not sit in the Bombay Legislative Council.

Mr. Harchandrai Vishindas: Then I take it that I cannot make these remarks, and I bow to the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. B. H. R. Jatkar (Berar Representative): Sir, I move:

"That the provision for Foreign and Political Department under head 'General Administration' be reduced by Rs. 100,"

as a protest against the action of the Foreign Department. I am not concerned with the Political Department but with the Foreign Department in respect of action about their legislating for Berar. Very recently, Sir, the Foreign Department made an amendment to the Berar Land Revenue Code authorising the Government of the Central Provinces to increase the jaglia cess from 12 pies to 27 pies and the education cess from 6 to 18 pies. This House will be surprised to know that the Foreign Department is the legislative body for Berar which is not British India. It is administered by the Central Provinces Government; Members from Berar are sent to the Central Provinces Council, but they have no power to pass any legislation for Berar. Neither has this Legislative Assembly any such power. It is the privilege of the Foreign Department to legislate for Berar. The feeling in my constituency is very high against this piece of legislation, this amendment, which presses hardly upon the agriculturists in Berar. In fact it raises a cess, double or three times the old one because the Central Provinces Government wants the services of the Mahars in the Province at the cost of the agriculturists and not of the provincial funds. There is a surplus of Berar revenue in the hands of the Central Provinces Government and in spite of that fact they want to raise this cess to such an enormous amount. There is no other province, I believe, in which the cess ranges so high as 27 pies and 18 pies in the rupee of land revenue, and it is against this section of the Foreign Department that I raise a protest. It would have been far better, Sir, if the Berar Members of the Central Provinces Legislative Council or the Berar Members of the Central Legislature could have been consulted before the Foreign Department sanctioned the increase, and I would request the Government of India in the Foreign Department to take some steps in this matter and to lay out a procedure by which the elected representatives of the people would be taken into confidence before sanctioning any future legislation for Berar. The feeling in Berar is very high against this increased cess which was proposed in spite of protest after protest made by the people. The Berar Members in the Central Provinces Legislative Council are powerless, and nothing can be done here also; and hence I request the Government of India to find out some means by which they can take into confidence the Members from Berar while dealing with such matters. With these words, I move this formal amendment.

Mr. President: I cannot put this particular question because we have already decided not to do so. The question is:

"That the provision for Foreign and Political Department under the head 'General Administration' be reduced by Rs. 100."

(The Honourable Mr. B. N. Sarma rose to speak.)

Mr. J. Obaudhuri: On a point of order. Does the Honourable Mr. Sarma represent the Foreign Office?

Mr. President: The Government is entitled to use what mouthpiece it chooses.

The Honourable Mr. B. N. Sarma (Revenue and Agriculture Member): Sir, the Government of India fully appreciate the difficulties which have been represented to us by the Honourable Mr. Jatkar. They were faced with this difficult position, mainly, as to whether they were to give effect to the representations, the Resolutions of a duly constituted Legislative Council representing the Central Provinces and Berar, or as to whether they were to come to a judgment different entirely from the one recommended by that legislative body. I may state in a few words that the Central Provinces Government, which recommended the adoption of the measure now under discussion, were reluctant to move in the direction in which they were ultimately prevailed upon to do by the Central Provinces Legislature. The Central Provinces Government pointed out various difficulties in the way of the adoption of certain measures pressed upon them by some of the representatives of the Berar Province. With the assistance of the Members of the Central Provinces Legislative Council, these Berar Members passed a Resolution demanding of the Central Provinces Government to abolish the Baluta to raise a cess, if necessary, for the purpose of paying these hereditary service-holders, the Mahars and others in the Berar Province, and consequently the position which the Central Provinces Government were faced with was, 'shall we give effect to this duly constituted Legislative Council's representation, or shall we disregard their recommendation?' Much to the regret of the Honourable Mr. Jatkar, the Central Provinces Government followed the constitutional procedure of giving effect to the recommendations of that body. They brought these rules into operation in some form in order that they may carry out the wishes of those representatives and they came up to the Government of India for sanction. The Government of India, therefore, were faced with a situation in which a Provincial Government which has been given very wide powers have taken definite action in conformity with the wishes of the elected representatives of the people of Berar and the Central Provinces, and they felt that although technically the Foreign and Political Department of the Government of India would have to legislate in the matter, still it was not desirable, although there might be room for a difference of opinion, to veto the action which has been taken in pursuance of the recommendations of that body. I, therefore, think, Sir, that in this matter at any rate the Central Provinces Government and the Government of India have acted in conformity with the wishes of the people as represented in the Council and the grievances of the people, if any, should be directed towards those gentlemen in the Council who have misled the Government—it may be—into taking an action of the kind. If the Berar representatives are able to persuade the Central Provinces Government into considering again the matter, the Government of India may not be unwilling to deal with the position as it may arise hereafter. But I think Honourable Members will appreciate that we should encourage as far as possible the growth of a correct constitutional position and competition as between the Government of India and the Local Government, and it is, Sir, in order to promote the growth of that Convention, in order to give effect to the wishes of the people, that the Government of India have acted in the way in which they have acted; and I, therefore, think that far from condemning the Foreign and Political Department, Honourable Members of this House who have the future growth of representative institutions in this country at heart ought to welcome the action which the Government have taken after due consideration.

Mr. B. H. R. Jatkar: There was no Resolution in the Central Provinces Council to increase the cess.

The Honourable Mr. B. N. Sarma: With your permission, Sir, I will say this. Questions relating to revenue do generally come up to the Revenue and Agriculture Department on which we advise the Foreign and Political Department which ordinarily accepts the advice given. That is the reason why I have stood up to-day in order to defend the position of the Government of India in this respect.

Mr. B. H. R. Jatkar: I beg to withdraw my motion. (No. 260.)

The motion was, by leave of the Assembly, withdrawn.

Maulvi Abul Kasem: Sir, as a similar motion to mine stands in the name of my Honourable friend, Munshi Iswar Saran, I think 5 P.M. I shall ask him to move his.

Home Department—Inspector of Office Procedure.

Munshi Iswar Saran: Language, Sir, has been given to conceal thoughts and motives and intentions. I have the honour, Sir, to move this amendment which stands in my name, namely:

“That the provision for one Inspector of Office Procedure under the sub-head ‘Home Department’ (page 39) be omitted.”

Sir, the House will remember that there was a debate in the year, I think, 1921, about this matter and that debate was more or less a heated debate. As far as I am concerned, I can promise that in a very few cool words, I shall put my position before the House. There are Honourable Members in this House who have all along been of opinion that the utility and the necessity of this appointment is open to serious question. As one might have expected in 1921, there was an attempt made to justify the appointment, but fortunately for those who entertain this opinion, the Inchcape Committee has come to their rescue, and I shall only read the remarks made by the Inchcape Committee about this particular appointment. They say:

“The appointment of Inspector of Office Procedure costing Rs. 30,000 was created on the recommendation of the Llewellyn Smith Committee to re-organise office procedure in the Secretariat with a view to greater efficiency and economy.”

I shall request the House to mark these words:

“We understand that very little has so far been done in this direction, the officer having been diverted to miscellaneous duties.”

This is again very important, Sir:

“We have had evidence that the present procedure is in many ways defective, and that both economy and expedition could be secured by more businesslike disposal of receipts and in other ways. We consider, however, that it should be taken up by the heads of the departments concerned in present recommendations, and that subsequently, after a re-assessment of the Finance Department should be deputed to examine the possibilities of effecting further economies in staff. If this course is adopted the continuance of the appointment of Inspector of Office Procedure under the Home Department will be unnecessary.”

I submit, Sir, that I cannot put my own words in clearer and stronger language. In view of the remarks of the Inchcape Committee, I submit that the position use what mouthpiece it particular post need no longer remain is perfect.

down, Sir, I wish to say that on the last occasion unfortunately, Sir, discussion turned on to the personality of the officer. I have not the slightest intention of saying or suggesting anything about the present incumbent of this office. It is as a matter of principle that I am reluctantly forced to move that this item be omitted.

Dr. Nand Lal: Sir, I have got a similar amendment in my name and therefore I desire to take part in this debate. I endorse the view of my Honourable friend, Mr. Iswar Saran, that we have nothing to do with the personality of the officer, who is immediately concerned with this motion; and, as a matter of fact, I do not know who that officer is. We wish to fight against the expenditure only, and that is the main point which has prompted us to place this subject before this House. Sir, it is no less than a wonder to me as to why the Home Department is so anxious to stand decorated by the post of this officer, whereas, the other departments of the Government of India have been deprived thereof. I believe they do not grudge it; and, therefore, there seems to be no occasion why our Home Department should be given this peculiar and special privilege. My Honourable friend, Mr. Iswar Saran, has adverted to the opinion of the Committee—I mean the Retrenchment Committee, but he has—I cannot say designedly but perhaps by oversight—omitted, so far as I can remember, to read the concluding portion of that recommendation. Therefore, I feel bound to invite the attention of this House to those lines alone:

“Its abolition will secure a saving of Rs. 30,000, and we recommend that the budget for 1923-24 should be fixed at a certain amount.”

Now, Sir, this report was before the Honourable the Finance Member. He has very kindly supplied us with a list indicating retrenchments or reductions. There is no note appended to it, no explanation has been given whether the post of this officer, which I have already described, will be abolished or not. If any note were made or some explanation had been given from the Government Benches, I would have felt reluctant to take even one minute on this point. But in the absence of any explanation, in the absence of any note whatsoever pertaining thereto, I invite the House's attention to this specially, and I move this amendment and I hope this House will unanimously agree with me and support this amendment, namely, that this post may be abolished, which will give us a saving of Rs. 30,000 a year. The House will not forget this most important point that we are in financial embarrassment and we should try to see that money may not be spent in these unnecessary decorations. With these few remarks, and in the interests of the economy of time not going into details, I submit the amendment for the disposal of the House.

Mr. T. Rangachariar: Sir, I do not propose to address the question of the recommendation that this office be abolished, of India may show this from Government. How long this officer, who hereafter, of employment, has been in service, and what provision should encourage such people who are thrown into the street as it were position and contribute their active years of valuable service to Government; Local Government, the Government propose to make in carrying out such Convention, in order to Government of India.

and I, therefore, think Mr. Malcolm Hailey (Home Member): Sir, Dr. Nand Lal has given no indication of how far we intended to comply with the growth of representatives of the Inchcape Committee. (Dr. Nand Lal: welcome the action which is the point and post.) The Inchcape Committee, consideration.

[Sir Malcolm Hailey.]

working on the budget estimate of 1922-23, found the expenditure of the Home Department proper (I use that term as distinguishing it of course from the several attached offices which it superintends), found the expenditure of the Home Department proper to be Rs. 6,41,800, and it recommended that we should effect a saving of Rs. 97,000. Among the savings indicated was that of the post of the Inspector of Office Procedure. Now it will be readily understood that since the issue of the Report of the Inchcape Committee, we have not had time to go into the full details of the reductions which we expect to make in the Department, but we have agreed with the Finance Department that we shall make reduction of Rs. 87,000; that is to say we have allowed only Rs. 10,000 for lag in the present year. That Rs. 87,000 is included on account of general administration. The original demand grant being Rs. 81,58,000 we propose to reduce from that Rs. 7,58,000, and the Demand put to the House is Rs. 74,08,000. The Rs. 87,000 referred to is part of the reduction of Rs. 7,58,000. Considering the difficulty of making reductions of this kind in full immediately, I think the House will agree that we have acted loyally by the Finance Department. Whether the abolition of the post of the Inspector of Office Procedure will be involved in that cut of Rs. 87,000 I am not able to say at the immediate moment. All I can say is that we will make that reduction of Rs. 87,000 and I think that the House will realise that it will be unreasonable to ask us to make a larger cut, as this motion would do, than the Inchcape Committee itself has asked us to make. We are considering the position of the Inspector of Office Procedure. I am not going here into the merits of the question which has been raised by Mr. Iswar Saran. The House debated that point on a previous occasion. All I can say is that we are attempting to give full effect to the cut of the Inchcape Committee, and it is not impossible that this Office will have to go in order to realise that cut. Mr. Rangachariar asked what standing the Officer had and what arrangement would have to be made if an officer of this nature was turned adrift from Government service. I do not remember the exact number of years of service the officer has had, and with regard to the latter part of Mr. Rangachariar's question, he has raised just one of those difficult questions which it is difficult to answer at a moment's notice, though an answer will have to be found to it. Obviously if we are to make, not only here but elsewhere, the cuts which have been demanded by the Inchcape Committee, there will be a considerable number of officers and subordinates who will be deprived of their employment, and I intend to put later to my Honourable friend the Finance Member certain proposals as to the correct method of dealing with these officers and subordinates.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That the provision for one Inspector of Office Procedure under the sub-head 'Home Department' be omitted."

Munshi Iswar Saran: May I be permitted to withdraw my motion in view of the statement of the Home Member?

The motion was, by leave of the Assembly, withdrawn.

Raq Bahadur T. Rangachariar: With your permission, Sir, I wish to lump together motions 265, 266 and 271 as they all raise points of which I have given notice to the Honourable the Home Member. My first and most important point is the question of when the Government of India

Secretariat,—I mean the Secretaries, the Joint Secretaries, Deputy Secretaries, Under Secretaries and Assistant Secretaries in it,—will take in a large number of Indians. Sir, I may at once say that I have the greatest admiration for the Secretariat people with whom I have come in contact. I have come in contact with several departments of the Government of India, and I cannot find a better lot of people elsewhere. It is to that company, if I were young, I should have aspired to belong. (Dr. Nana Lal: "You are not too old yet.") I am too old, I am sorry to say. But I want my countrymen to imbibe that spirit of devotion, that intelligence, that culture which these people bring to bear upon the daily performance of their duties. When I turn to the Legislative Department, when I sat with them, their draftsmen, during the last two weeks, I simply admired their capacity, how they have been able to put into shape Bills which we non-officials bring forward without much thought, which they put into shape, and they oblige us in the kind way in which they put these into shape. When I go to the Finance Department, complex problems are solved in the most easy manner. When I go to the Home and other Departments similar assistance is rendered. And in the Finance Department I am glad to see my countrymen taking their legitimate share, and I hope they add to the improvement of that Department by their presence there. And I do not want to see my countrymen taking their fair share in the Home Department, Sir, under Sir Malcolm Hailey; in the Foreign and Political Department under Mr. Denys Bray, who is eloquent with facts; under Mr. Thompson, who is eloquent but without facts. And I want them also to associate with my Honourable friend, Mr. Burdon, whose office I have seen sometimes—when he was absent—but I have failed to recognise any Indian face, except in the matter of finance; there, of course, he has the competent assistance of my Honourable friend, Mr. Mitra, one of the ablest financiers the country has produced. Sir, this subject is a very thorny subject. It created a scene in the otherwise serene atmosphere of the Upper Chamber, so much so that my Honourable friend the Right Honourable Srinivasa Sastri himself lost his temper and was able to convince the Government Benches that they had a poor case. Sir, there are Indian members of the Indian Civil Service who have undergone experience in the various provincial Secretariats. I know some of them. Sir, for want of a better job in their own line, have distinguished themselves as Dewans of first-class Indian States. Is it not a matter for us to hang down our heads that our servants should be lent to foreign States when there is scope for them here in our own sphere of activities? No doubt, time was when Indians as such were tabooed. That was not so very long ago. But, Sir, since 1908, new days have come into existence. After 1908, at least I had hoped a departure had been made, and the doors of this sacred Secretariat would be thrown open to Indians in larger numbers. Sir, that is my appeal in that direction. I hope the Honourable Member will give us an assurance in this direction that both I. C. S. men and provincial service men will find their due share and I am sure that the men in the Secretariat, as it is, will welcome them as assistants, but I want they should extend that hand also as able lieutenants and as colleagues and sometimes to take their places with distinction.

Another question which I wish to raise is another constitutional question of great importance, which I know has troubled many a Member of Council, both European and Indian. Sir, the question of the direct access of the Secretary over the head of the Member to His Excellency the Viceroy and the Government in the provinces. But here, I confined to the position of

[Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar.]

Secretaries here. I mean it is an unheard of thing in any other constitution that such a thing should remain. It may be the vestige of ancient days when the East India Company ruled this country as Agents on behalf of the Crown. But, after the Crown took charge, why such a state of things should continue I fail to see. Sir, recently I was reading a very interesting book—Sir Guy Fleetwood Wilson's "Letters to Nobody," where he as a Member who was the Finance Member of this Government has written as follows:

(I am referring to pages 116 and 117 of this very interesting book, which I will ask Honourable Members to read.)

"From an Englishman's standpoint the great flaw in the Indian governmental system lies in the fact that Secretaries to Government, the equivalent of our Under-Secretaries of State, take the file papers which are to come under discussion direct to the Viceroy before the Council sits and discusses the question at issue with him in private. There is a two-fold objection to this method. It may in certain conditions enable the Secretary to intrigue against his Chief and it offers him the great temptation of indulging in wholesale agreement with the Viceroy, on whom his advancement depends."

And he adds (and I think we may add our testimony also in that matter—I have not searched the cupboards of the Members but I dare say, there is many a skeleton concealed in these cupboards:)

"Nothing but the conspicuous loyalty of the Indian Civil Servant has obviated a breaking-up of a machinery which combines in a Viceroy the dual functions of a Sovereign and a Prime Minister, and enables a permanent official to influence him, should he wish to do so, against the Minister in charge of the Department concerned."

Sir, that is a system which I think ought to be done away with now that Members are responsible to the Legislature—I hope they are now, and they act as Ministers, and here the Viceroy occupies a dual position. Whatever views the Secretariat have should end with their conference with the Member. They should be able to argue out the matter with the Member in charge and there their position must end. They should not have direct access elsewhere. Oftentime, I understand, the rule enables the Secretary to differ from his Chief and take the matter up and call for a Council meeting if he likes and in that way he is able to spoil the effects which the Minister in charge may be able to produce on the administration. Sir, this matter becomes very important. I do not think I should conceal my thoughts on this position. I have heard very responsible people who have occupied the position of Members, specially in the case of Indians who have been Members with European Secretaries to deal with. And if they want to carry out a particular policy, they find it difficult to carry it out unless of course they come across an amiable Secretary who will put up with it and look at it from his point of view. It appears to be a vicious principle. It has no precedent anywhere and it should not be allowed to continue any longer.

Sir, the third point which I wish to raise is the question turning upon the recommendation of the Inchcape Committee whereby they propose to veto the Resolution passed by this Assembly last September by which we voted the annual grant to this Medical Research Institute. We all had the matter discussed and thought it was going to be a very useful institution. And I hope the Government will not come to a conclusion on that recommendation without giving an opportunity to this Assembly to consider it again. For it has hopes not only for research in western science, I say it has hopes of opportunities for research into the Ayurvedic and Unani systems of medicine. Sir, it was in that view I supported the motion. We must have a Research Institute of that sort, where both the systems of medicine can be brought into operation and collaboration and therefore it should not be abandoned without further and careful consideration of the question.

Dr. H. S. Gour: Is that the Home Department?

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: I beg your pardon. All these general questions I think the Honourable the Home Member will take charge of, because they are general questions which arise. No doubt, it pertains to the Medical Department but I believe these general questions arising out of the Inchcape Committee's recommendations are under the Home Department.

Dr. Nand Lal: I thought the Medical Department was under Education.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: I think Honourable Members may well leave me to take care of myself. I am not acting without instruction and I am advised that the proper Member to address is the Honourable the Home Member. Sir, I raise these points and make my motion. Not all these three motions. I will move the last, Sir, with your permission.

Mr. President: We can take it all on the motion of Mr. Joshi:

"That the provision for Pay of establishment under the sub-head 'Home Department' be reduced by Re. 1."

Mr. N. M. Joshi: Sir, there is a mistake in my motion. I wanted to put in the word "Industries" and I put in the word "Home".

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: I will move 271:

"That the provision for contingencies under the sub-head 'Home Department' be reduced by Rs. 50."

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: Mr. Rangachariar refers to two points, the first relating to the increase in the number of Indians employed in the higher posts in our Secretariat; he is not I think referring to the ungazetted establishment—he refers entirely to the posts of Secretary, Deputy Secretary and the like. Now, the matter has so recently formed the subject of debate in another House that it is perhaps unnecessary for me to trouble this House with any elaborate display of figures on the subject. But it is within my own recollection that I heard Sir Harcourt Butler in the old Council make a speech congratulating India on the fact that he had in his Department one Indian Assistant Secretary. As the House knows the matter has gone far beyond that now. As Mr. Rangachariar says, he meets Indians everywhere now in the Secretariat and he speaks of their capacity with appreciation. In the other House the difficulty we found was that we were asked to lay down a definite scale for the employment of Indians in the Secretariat.

(At this stage Mr. President vacated and Sir Jamsetjee Jejeebhoy took the Chair.)

I do not think that Mr. Rangachariar is asking for that now, all he is asking for is a guarantee that their claims will not be overlooked in making future appointments in the Secretariat. Of course we make our appointments in the Secretariat mainly from the Provincial Secretariats: it is to our interest to select our men who have had experience of work in the provinces. Obviously they would not be of the fullest use to us if they had no such experience. Now, the number of Indians is growing largely in the Provincial Secretariats, 5 out of 71 Secretaries are now Indians; 2 out of 14 Deputy Secretaries, 15 out of 44 Under Secretaries, and 25 out of 44 Assistant Secretaries are Indians. We now, therefore, have there a growing field of recruitment and I think the House may rest assured that we shall not neglect it. We realise as fully as the House does the value of associating Indians with us in our work in the Secretariat. If the cases have not been numerous in the past, and it is so, it has largely been owing to the fact the Provincial Secretariats had not themselves trained up a sufficient number of Indians for us to draw upon. I can say nothing as to a definite ratio of Indians in the Secretariat, because these are selection appointments and it is always difficult to lay down a ratio for purely selection appointments. It is easy enough with regard to recruitment, but not so when you come to selection appointments. But, as I say, the House can rest assured that although we do not wish to bind ourselves to a definite ratio, we shall do our best to obtain recruits to our Secretariat from among Indians employed in the Provincial Secretariats. Now, as regards the second point, that is the position of Secretaries, it will be understood that I speak perhaps with a little delicacy on the subject as a Member in the presence of many Secretaries. But I think I may say with confidence that among the many Members of Councils with whom I have been associated at different times I have not found the feeling expressed in the quotation from Sir Fleetwood Wilson's book, and if I may say so, I am myself a little in doubt as to the experience on which he based his conclusion.

[Sir Malcolm Hailey.]

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas: Not while they are Members.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: When I look back on the Secretaries that Sir Guy Fleetwood Wilson had, when I realise that his Secretaries were for the greater part of his tenure Lord Meston and Sir William Meyer, I am astonished to think that he should have concluded that there was any danger in the constitutional position which I am about to discuss.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: With your permission, Sir, I may inform the Honourable Member that for want of time I did not read the last sentence. "Personally," he says, "I readily confess I never experienced a shadow of difficulty. My Secretaries to Government and myself were as one." He says so.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: I am very glad the Honourable Member has read us that addition, because it solved any doubt that the remarks of the author were drawn from any personal experience. Now, I do not wish unduly to delay the House with another constitutional discussion this afternoon. But the facts are interesting in themselves. I may remind the House that from the time of Warren Hastings and Sir Phillip Francis the Government of India was governed by a committee of which the Governor General was President. Up to about 1857 an individual Member of Council had no power to issue orders in the name of the Government of India on cases which had not been brought before the Council. The Governor General alone had that power and he exercised it on the papers submitted to him by the Secretary. That is clear from Lord Ellenborough's speech on the East India Council Bill in 1861. When Lord Canning made a formal division of business among Honourable Members after the passing of the Councils Act in that year, and they were empowered to issue orders in the name of the Government of India, it was felt essential to have some effective security against their committing the Government to important decisions of policy without the knowledge of the Council or the Governor General. Now that position is in essence the same to-day. We are a corporate body; our individual functions are exercised subject to a joint responsibility, and the co-ordinating factor is the Governor General. The Secretary's first task is to bring before the Governor General cases in which it is essential that he should decide whether decisions of a Member or of a Department should be seen by other Members of Council. The Secretary takes them to the Governor General for that purpose and the Governor General then, if he thinks the matter important, orders it to be brought before a full Council. I know of no other method by which the co-ordinating authority would be in a position to exercise his responsibilities. Unless we had this provision it would be possible for an individual Member of Council to issue orders over-ruling a Local Government, to issue orders that might affect largely other Departments and his Colleagues, and for effect to be given to those orders with results which of course would be destructive of the corporate nature of our work. There is of course a second provision in our rules of business, namely, that a Secretary can take any case to the Viceroy and express his opinion upon it. That again, I think, is reasonable, because it must be realised that Members of Council are appointed primarily not as heads of departments but as Members of a Council; they are only placed in charge of a particular subject at the order of the Governor General. Now, there are many technical points concerned in the work of some Departments—and when I say technical, I do not refer only to what is usually included in the term—but many points of specialised knowledge, let us say, relating it may be to educational, or revenue, or medical matters and such like, which require a special experience. I think it is well that there should be an officer possessing such experience who is able to put his views to the Viceroy, in view of the fact that the Member may often not have the same special knowledge. That is the reason for constitutional arrangement. May I add this that there has been one unhappy case in recent years within the Government of India which was entirely due to the breakdown of this constitutional provision, that is to say, orders were issued by a Member without reference to a Secretary; and had the usual Secretariat arrangement been carried out, the trouble which then arose, and which gave all of us so much pain would never have arisen. For my own part I am far from wishing to see this constitutional provision abrogated; I believe that it is a great safeguard to other Departments and to the Local Governments. The Secretary is a Secretary to the Government of India, and responsible not only to his own Departmental Member, but to all of us. The House will remember that when we discussed the Esher Committee Report there was put forward by that body a proposal that we should have a Secretary to the Army Headquarters and not a Secretary to the Government of India in the Army Department. A strong opinion was then expressed that the appointment of a Secretary to Army Headquarters, who was not responsible as Secretary to the other Departments of the Government of India, and who did not have the constitutional power of referring matters to the Viceroy, would constitute a great danger to the Civil Departments of the Government of India. I come to the third point, that is, that relating to the Medical Services. I am sorry if I gave Mr. Rangachariar to understand that I myself would be able to answer this question. I undertook that he should be answered on the point, and I would ask Mr. Chatterjee to do so either now if the Honourable Member so wishes or subsequently when he deals with the particular motion relating to Medical Services. (Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: "That will suit me all right.")

Dr. Nand Lal: Sir, I will make only one observation and that will be relating to a certain suggestion which has been offered by the Honourable the Home Member. He was pleased to remark that so far as recruitment goes he should like that our Secretaries and Assistant Secretaries should be taken from the Provincial Secretariats. My submission before the House is that it will hardly be compatible with justice, so far as the deserving subordinates in the Secretariats of the Government of India are concerned. Of course, there is some force in the suggestion that the Secretaries that we will have from the Provincial Secretariats must have had some sort of experience. But in reply to that I may submit that our own Assistant Secretaries, or those who are fully deserving of being promoted to Secretaryship here in the Government of India have got experience. So, if on the ground of experience Assistant Secretaries in the Provincial Secretariats are to be given promotion or elevation to the Secretariat of the Government of India, the claims of those Assistant Secretaries or such other men, who are entitled to be promoted to the post of Secretary and have been and are working in the Government of India should be given due consideration. I submit that the Honourable the Home Member will give consideration to this suggestion of mine, so that those who are working in the Government of India may not feel discouraged.

Mr. Deputy President: The question is:

"That the provision for contingencies under the sub-head 'Home Department' be reduced by Rs. 50."

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: I do not press it after the statement made by the Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey.

The amendment was, by leave of the Assembly, withdrawn.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: Mr. Chatterjee will deal with the other subject, that is, the one relating to Medical Services when we come to the subsequent grant relating to the Medical Services.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: Amendment No. 269.* I do not understand what the entry in the demand means. I want information on that point.

Dr. H. S. Gour: I raised the same question about two years back. I was informed that there was a very large number of surplus Army Officers. I believe the number was something like 2,800 or thereabouts,—I speak from memory subject to correction. In the speech I delivered last year on the subject of the appointment of a Retrenchment Committee I pointed out that a great many of these surplus Army Officers were employed in doing more or less clerical work. I have been reading in the newspapers an account that the surplus Army Officers are being sent away every week or every month in a certain ratio. I want to know what was the original number of surplus Army Officers, when they were discharged and how many

Mr. Darcy Lindsay (Bengal: European): I want to ask on what particular amendment my Honourable friend, Dr. Gour, is speaking. Has it been moved?

* "That the provision for Passage of Surplus Indian Army Officers selected for the Indian Civil Service under the sub-head 'Home Department' (page 40) be reduced by Rs. 9,120."

Dr. H. S. Gour: I am afraid my Honourable friend must have been engaged otherwise

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: It is true I did not formally move it, but I intended to. It runs as follows:

"That the provision for Passage of Surplus Indian Army Officers selected for the Indian Civil Service under the sub-head 'Home Department' be reduced by Rs. 9,120."

Dr. H. S. Gour: I should like information as to how many officers now remain, before how long they will be all sent away and what will be the total cost to the State of these Surplus Army Officers.

Mr. J. P. Cotelingam (Nominated: Indian Christians): This motion does not refer to the question of the 2,000 and odd surplus officers who have been allowed to relinquish their appointments. Quite recently the Secretary of State issued a notification offering a certain number of appointments to those amongst the surplus officers who have qualifications to enter the Indian Civil Service.

Dr. H. S. Gour: I am perfectly aware of what my Honourable friend, Mr. Cotelingam, has said, but I only wanted to enlarge on the question put by Mr. Rangachariar and generally address my inquiry about the surplus Army Officers. If the Honourable Member in charge is unable to give the information to-day I will not press the question.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: I understand that this definite motion refers to a sum which we have placed in our budget at page 40, "the passage of surplus Indian Army Officers selected for the Indian Civil Service." The House knows quite well what our arrangements are for recruiting for the Indian Civil Service. We have a progressive rate of recruitment of Indians—33 per cent. rising to 48 per cent. It is now 37½ per cent., the remainder of the recruitment is in Europe. The number of European recruits obtained by the ordinary competitive examination in England has fallen very far indeed below the average. And under the Temporary Provisions Act, which does not expire till 1924, it is open to us to recruit either by competitive examination or by nomination subject to proper tests. During the later stages of the war we recruited under the Temporary Provisions Act by nomination among British Army Officers. Now in order to complete our European recruitment, we have, instead of recruiting from among surplus British Army Officers, decided to take a certain number of Indian Army officers, that is to say, officers who were in the Indian Army, but have been declared surplus to establishment. There were altogether some 1,900, so declared surplus to establishment, and we thought that if possible we would obtain our recruits from this source rather than by nomination in England itself, for they would have some experience of the country and of the language, while there seemed little doubt that we could find from among the large number of surplus officers men who had commenced a university career in England and are well qualified to fulfil the literary tests. I may add that the officers apply in India. They undergo a literary test here and their papers are sent Home to the Civil Service Commissioners who are responsible, of course, for recruitment to the Indian Civil Service. If accepted by them, the officers then go Home to appear before the Civil Service Commissioners and complete their final tests. So far our arrangements contemplate sending 12 officers Home, but it is not known yet whether that number will be worked up to, because we do not know how many will be accepted by the Civil Service Commissioners when they see their papers. So it is possible that the full sum placed in the budget may not be required. I would add that it is perhaps purely an accident that the sum finds its place here, because the officers surplus to the Indian Army establishment who are being dispensed with are being given a free passage Home. So these particular officers, it may be 12, in number, would receive that passage Home in any case, but as they are going Home for the particular purpose of appearing before the Civil Service Commissioners, we have made provision for them in the Home Department estimates. I hope that explanation will satisfy my Honourable friend.

[Sir Malcolm Hailey.]

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: Then I do not press the motion* and withdraw it.

The amendment was, by leave of the Assembly, withdrawn.

Mr. K. G. Bagde (Bombay Central Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I beg to move:

"That the provision for other Contingent charges under the sub-head 'Home Department' be reduced by Rs. 5."

By moving this reduction I intend to raise the question regarding the working of the Standing Committee attached to the Home Department. Honourable Members might be remembering that on the 19th of January, 1922, the Honourable Mr. Neogy moved a Resolution recommending to the Governor General that Standing Committees elected by Members of the Legislature be associated with the different departments of the Government of India except the Army and the Foreign and Political Departments. This Resolution at that time was vehemently opposed on behalf of the Government, but it was carried by the House. Then on the 22nd August rules were published in pursuance of that Resolution. For the information of Honourable Members I may just read the rules which were intended to define the scope of the duties of these Committees:

"The following subjects will be laid before the Standing Committees.

1. All Bills introduced or proposed to be introduced by non-official Members of the Legislature and the Legislative proposals which the Department concerned intends to undertake and on which the Member in charge of the Department desires the advice of the Committee.
2. Reports of Committees and Commissions on which the Indian Legislature is not adequately represented and on which the Member in charge of the Department desires the advice of the Committee.
3. Major questions of general policy on which the Member in charge of the Department desires the advice of the Committee.
4. Annual reports."

There is a proviso which lays down certain limitation on this rule but I do not think it necessary for me to read that proviso. Now, Sir, we do not know what help these standing committees have rendered to Government. If we followed the debate on the original Resolution it will be very easy to find that the aim of the Mover was that Members who were on the committee should get experience in the administration of the various departments of the Government of India. I do not know how far that aim has been fulfilled. The rules which I have just read out will make it clear to Honourable Members that the functions of these committees are purely advisory. In that debate the present Home Member and his predecessor both made a great point that these committees would hamper and raise difficulties in the way of Government. Sir William Vincent said "Now that would not be the case exactly here because any Committees appointed would be advisory. But at the same time any Member of the Government might be put in a very difficult position by Members of a Committee. They ask for papers and the Government says 'No. They are not going to be put before you'. 'Very well, my friend' the Committee say 'you wait till we get the Assembly down on you; you are not going to accept our views on the subject; we will see what the Assembly has to say on that'." Now, no member of these committees has come forward before this Assembly at least with such a threat. From that I think that the Honourable Members who are on the committee have not raised any difficulties in the way of the Government. But our experience on the 20th of last month shows that these Committees, at least one of these Committees, has been used by Government as a handle to throttle our freedom of action. On that day Government depended upon the opinions of the Standing Committee attached to the Home Department for throwing out two Bills, one Bill introduced by our friend Dr. Gour, I think the Bill to amend the Legal Practitioners Act, 1879, and the other was the Inter-caste Hindu Marriage Bill of the Honourable Mr. Latthe. Now Sir, I do not think it is desirable on the part of Government to use the opinion of the Standing Committees for curtailing our freedom of action; because the Assembly would then be thrown into a very awkward position. There has been some talk about the Princes Protection Bill to-day and the Honourable Members might be remembering that some section of the press found fault with the fact that the Princes Protection Bill at its first reading was thrown out by the Assembly. Now Sir, Government at the instance of these Committees is laying down precedents by throwing out these Bills at the first reading. What I want to object to is that the Committee at least should be strictly neutral with regard to social legislation in which I am very keen personally. Now we have suffered a good deal from the opinion of this Committee with regard to these two Bills and I do not think there is any probability of our getting those Bills through in the life time of the present Assembly. And the other thing I want to bring to the notice of this House is that these Committees should be given more important work. I would like to know from the Honourable the Home Member what work, especially with reference to the third clause, i.e., major questions of general policy—have been referred to these Committees, and if no such questions are referred to these Committees, then I think the creation of the Committees has not been of any use, or at least has not been of that much use which was expected from their creation. I therefore request the Honourable Member to give me an explanation on this point.

* "That the provision for Passage of Surplus Indian Army Officers selected for the Indian Civil Service under the sub-head 'Home Department' be reduced by Rs. 9,120."

Mr. J. N. Mukherjee (Calcutta Suburbs: Non-Muhammadan Urban):

Sir, at this late hour I had no intention of detaining the House, 6 p.m. but owing to certain observations of a very general character which have been made, I feel it my duty to place an aspect of the question which has been held back from the House. The principal complaint of my Honourable friend, if I understand him rightly, was that in matters of social legislation the Committee attached to the Home Department, which is of an advisory character, should not give any opinion which would go to influence the decision of the Governor General or of the Executive

[Mr. J. N. Mukherjee.]

Government. My Honourable friend forgot that Bills of a certain class have to be introduced into the Assembly with the previous sanction of the Governor General. Now, in matters of social legislation, I must state to the House, that the communities affected by Bills of that character feel it as a grievance that their opinion is never taken before their introduction in the Assembly. The party who is going to be affected, the communities concerned, are kept in the background. Honourable Members in this House will readily see that the House was not constituted on a religious and social basis, but upon an administrative basis. Though, no doubt, under certain circumstances social legislation may be taken up by the Legislature, yet as a rule the Governor General has to inform himself as to the trend of popular opinion with regard to any piece of social legislation and to form his own opinion accordingly. Now, Members do not come to this House with a mandate from their communities. As matters stand now, a community is thrown on its back summarily in this House, and social legislation is attempted to be rammed down its throat. That is the sort of process that is attempted in this House. I, for one Sir, protest against such a procedure. The Governor General, before he grants his sanction to any Bill affecting communal laws, should have a full opportunity of knowing the views of the people who are going to be affected by the proposed legislation. The committees, it could be thought, afford some means for conveying the sentiments of the people with reference to social legislation. But that I submit, is unfortunately a view which, in the present state of things does not hold good for all practical purposes. The class of people who are coming into the Assembly have cut themselves adrift, more or less from the great masses of the people in certain respects, and if they take upon themselves the duty of expressing the sentiments of the people in matters of social legislation, I submit they do so on their own responsibility, but certainly without any mandate from the people at large. Therefore Sir, although advisory committees afford some check, that check, I submit, is insufficient. If the Governor General takes advice from these advisory committees, generally speaking he does the very thing he ought to do and what the country expects him to do. I am voicing the opinion of a large class of people with whom I am in touch, when I say that they wish that the Governor General and his Council should inform themselves as to the propriety of any social legislation before its initiation. As regards administrative questions, it does not matter Members of which community in the Legislative Assembly take part in their decision or what sort of religious views they hold. It is a pure question of administration in such cases, and I have nothing to say as to the functions of these advisory councils, in general, except that in administrative matters their advice should be obtained more readily than is the case now. Sir, I oppose the motion, on the whole.

Rao Bahadur C. S. Subrahmanayam: Sir, the point is a very narrow one. The question specifically raised is the advice which the Committee is said to have tendered to the Home Department. And only two points relating to that consultation were taken up for discussion. The first was with regard to Dr. Gour's Bill which I presume is a Bill relating to women being admitted to the legal profession. The objection was not on any social ground. There were certain technical difficulties in drafting, and therefore it was said that the drafting should be undertaken by Government, and that the matter should not be left entirely in the hands of a private Member, and Government were agreeable to undertaking legislation in the direction in which it was desired by the Mover; then the opinion that was given was in consonance with the opinion received from outside competent authorities. On that point I think the Committee, or any individual Member of the Committee, could not be blamed, and there is no element of social or racial or any other consideration governing the advice tendered on that matter. With regard to the other matter, that is, Mr. Latthe's Bill, the opinion was based more upon the convenience of the Members, the convenience of the Assembly, and convenience based upon economy. There was Dr. Gour's Bill, which he had strenuously during the last two years advocated before the Assembly, and it was taken up by a Committee; and I believe, judging by the event, that Bill has been put into shape and presented to this House. Well, that Bill was in course of consideration, discussion and shaping, and it was thought that another, not exactly on those lines but somewhat similar lines, would simply confuse the issues and would probably be a set-back to Dr. Gour's Bill. Then there was also for consideration this Bill introduced for the first time in this session and which may not have any chance of being passed into law before this Assembly dissolves, and it was on the ground of convenience, not on the ground that that Bill had anything to do with social or religious or other matters; it was on that ground, and when these matters came up for discussion, the Government said: 'This is our opinion, which is also confirmed by the opinion which we got from the country, and I think on these two points, it is only a matter which any legal man or any man who is slightly conversant with legislation and the methods of legislation would have advised. Those are the two points I think which require some kind of explanation from a Member.'

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: I am afraid, Sir, the discussion has taken an altogether wrong direction. The point which I wish to emphasise somewhat on this Resolution is this. These Standing Committees were appointed to get into live touch with the real internal administration of each Department; they were not appointed to examine non-official Bills merely, they were appointed to go and acquaint themselves with the internal machinery. With that object, we put them in, and our complaint is that, at any rate my complaint is that, so far as the Home Department is concerned, they used their Committee merely for the non-official Bills, and I do not see any evidence that this Committee was brought into touch with the internal machinery.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: I also support the motion made by my Honourable friend, Mr. Bagde. When the Standing Committees were elected, we thought they would do more useful work than advising the Government to throw out private Bills. If the Standing Committee's advice is to be followed by Government in certain matters, I am quite sure no private labour legislation will have any chance in this House.

(Voices: "I move that the question be put.")

Mr. Deputy President: The question is:

"That the provision for other Contingent charges under the sub-head 'Home Department' be reduced by Rs. 5."

The motion was negatived.

Dr. H. S. Gour: Sir, at this stage may I ask you to adjourn the House?
(Voices: "We must go on.")

Staff Selection Board.

Mr. Sambanda Mudaliar (Salem and Coimbatore cum North Arcot: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I will not detain the House for more than two minutes. You will see, Sir, that the main function of the Staff Selection Board is to provide clerical officers for performing duties under the control of the Government of India. Now in regard to this, the Inchcape Committee have recommended, on page 135, that it should be put on a self-supporting basis. They said:

"It is probably desirable that there should be an institution of this sort to recruit for the Secretariat, but when the Board again fully functions an endeavour should be made to render it entirely self-supporting."

You will see that in the present year's Budget provision is made for Rs. 4,880. My submission is that this amount is quite unnecessary, and, having regard to the recommendation of the Retrenchment Committee, it should be put on a purely commercial basis, and it should be made self-supporting. I think the expenses, whatever they may be, should be met from the examination fees, and it is hardly necessary that an amount of Rs. 4,880 should be set apart for this item. I therefore recommend this for the approval of the Assembly.

Mr. Deputy President: The question is:

"That the provision of Rs. 4,880 under the sub-head 'Staff Selection Board' be omitted."

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: Sir, we had previously been spending a sum of about Rs. 22,000 to Rs. 22,800 on the Staff Selection Board; we now propose to place a sum of Rs. 4,880 in the Budget. That expenditure is merely intended to carry on the Board on a minimum basis for six months until we have the Report of a Committee of this House on the operations of the Staff Selection Board. That Committee was appointed in 1921; we have not yet received its Report. When we receive the Report, we shall be able to take further action with regard either to the continuance of the Staff Selection Board or to its abolition. The sum of Rs. 4,880 simply covers a minimum office staff, for its move to Simla, and provides for the summoning of a few candidates and stenography and typing. It provides for nothing else, we shall be holding no examination, and is merely intended to give us an opportunity of deciding what we shall do with the Staff Selection Board.

Mr. Sambanda Mudaliar: Sir, I beg to withdraw the motion.

The motion was, by leave of the Assembly, withdrawn.

Central Bureau of Information.

Rai Bahadur G. C. Nag (Surma Valley cum Shillong: Non-Muhammadan): Sir, I move:

"That the provision under the sub-head 'Central Bureau of Information' under the head 'General Administration, ('Home Department')' be reduced by Rs. 50,000."

Sir, I have not been able to understand the utility of this Central Bureau of Information. So far as I have been able to follow its activities, I find that it only compiles the Moral and Material Progress Report of India out of materials supplied by the various Departments. How far this is justifiable, I would refer Honourable Members of this House to the remarks of the Honourable Finance Member made the other day; he said that the progress of the country was no better than a rake's progress. Now, my point is if the Government are anxious to bring out a narrative of the events touching on the moral and material progress of the country for a year or a number of years, I should not dispute the desirability of their doing so. Can they not do this without incurring such a heavy expenditure? I think they can place an officer on deputation for a period of three months and get the work done. I do not know why, for achieving this object, the Government should go to the expense of maintaining a whole-time Director of Information on Rs. 2,000 to Rs. 2,750 and a whole-time Assistant Director on Rs. 1,200 to Rs. 1,500 with a staff of clerks and servants, all costing the country no less than one lakh and a half of rupees annually. In these days of deficits when we are starving such useful departments such as Education, Medical Relief, Sanitation and the like, it seems nothing short of a folly to indulge in such a luxury as a Central Bureau of Information, in Delhi or Simla, and that at such a high cost. Then, again, Sir, there is another point. For whose benefit do the Government keep this Bureau? So far as the public are concerned, the Bureau seems to care precious little for its interests. By way of illustration I would invite attention of the House to the leaflet issued by the Bureau in the month of July last and re-published in the newspapers of the country dealing with the question of State versus Company management of the Indian Railways. The object of the leaflet was to influence public opinion in favour of Company management and to condemn State management of the Indian Railways. The Honourable Mr. Innes replying to an interpellation on the 6th September last admitted that the leaflet was published by the Publicity Bureau on the materials supplied by the Railway Board. In other words the Bureau acted in that matter as the mouthpiece of the Railway Board, which, it is well known, is in favour of Company management. This was the manner in which the Bureau served the public in a matter of such vital importance. If the Central Bureau exists to voice the opinion of particular departments of Government, why, what object could be more easily served by such department publishing its views on a particular subject in a leaflet of its own. The Bureau exists merely as a post office in this matter and serves no other purpose.

Then, there is one other point. The reason why the Inchcape Committee did not propose a cut out of this department of Central Bureau of Information is, I think, very simple. The Bureau stood on a temporary footing, being called into existence during the time of the War. The Bureau was not intended to live for all time to come. It is for this reason that the Inchcape Committee left the Bureau untouched.

Now, coming to the particular expenditure incurred by the Bureau, there is an item of Rs. 50,000 provided as a new expenditure. I invite the attention of Honourable Members to page 40, in column three against Miscellaneous charges in connection with publicity work. There is a new item of expenditure put down as Rs. 50,000. This, I think, can easily be cut down, without even abolishing the department or impairing its activity to any appreciable extent. No indication is given as to how this large amount is going to be spent and I think I am on safe ground when I suggest that this estimated expenditure of Rs. 50,000 may be cut down. Sir, I move my amendment.

Mr. B. S. Kamat: Sir, I believe the Mover of this amendment has taken a very narrow view of the duties of the Publicity Department. I believe the duties of a Publicity Department are two-fold, first in respect of publicity abroad, regarding the actions and the doings of the Government of India for information of people abroad, and publicity within India. So far as publicity abroad is concerned, I do not think there is any civilised Government which does not maintain some Publicity Department or other; and if we abolish our Publicity Department, probably we shall be doing a thing quite out of accord with what all the civilised Governments are doing at the present moment. Then, again, Sir, it is, I believe the Joint Parliamentary Committee which drew attention to the fact that the Government of India all these years were not doing their publicity work adequately, and the Joint Parliamentary Committee has pointed out that if the Government of India took necessary action in giving publicity to their policy and to their views in the right manner a good deal of misrepresentations and other unhealthy news which gets abroad or even which circulates within the country would be avoided. I, therefore, think that this Publicity Department has been brought into existence in pursuance of the recommendation of the Joint Parliamentary Committee. Then, Sir, so far as the work of this department is concerned within India, the Publicity Department is serving a very useful purpose in supplying both to the editors and to the public at large authentic information regarding various problems which the Government of India have to solve, the various policies which it initiates, and it is a link between the Government of India and the journals which circulate information for the country and the masses. Then, again, so far as the masses are concerned, they have to depend upon somebody, some agency, for authentic information. I believe the information supplied by this department is valuable in many respects. The Mover of this motion alluded to a certain pamphlet or leaflet with reference to the question of Company versus State management. Those who hang their argument on one particular issue or one particular incident and argue from it so large a question that the whole of this department should be abolished or Rs. 50,000 should be cut down, take indeed a very limited view of the matter. If, for instance, a particular Communiqué is issued, say, by the Government of India as a whole which is against the wishes of a particular section of the public or of this House and if someone were to propose that because a particular Communiqué was not in accordance with the views of a particular section of the community, is it fair that the whole of the Government of India should be censured or their activities cut down? I believe that would be carrying the matter too far. On the whole, I think this department is doing very useful work, and if the information which ought to reach the masses in larger proportion does not reach them it is an argument in favour of strengthening the department rather than curtailing the activities of that department.

[Mr. B. S. Kamat.]

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: Sir, as a Member of the Publicity Board and as Chairman of the Madras Publicity Board, I may mention what the functions of a Publicity Department are and should be. They act as interpreters of the Government to the people and of the people to the Government. These are the two-fold objects in view. When the Publicity Department was constituted in Madras and also, I take it here, in the first year when I came here, I found the Publicity Department of the Government of India was entirely an officially run organisation. In fact when this question came up in 1921, I pointed out to the Assembly and to the Government the desirability of forming a Board with non-official majority, so that the guidance of the policy of publicity should be in the hands of a responsible Board and not in the hands of merely interested Government Departments. Sir, that suggestion was acted upon in a way but not to my entire satisfaction. At the same time, I accepted a seat inside that body, and from inside that body I have been agitating for re-constitution of that Board, and I am glad to say we have succeeded in that attempt. Sir, instead of the Board being merely composed of selected non-officials and officials, we have provided for a new constitution by which the majority of the Board are to be elected, 7 from this Assembly and 2 from the Council of State, with 3 non-officials selected from outside, specially people connected with the press and 3 officials only. And we have also made proposals that rules for the guidance of the Publicity Department, including the Budget relating to that Department, should be laid down by that Board. Publicity is essential in all respects. My Honourable friend has referred to a single instance in which the Railway Board view was presented to the public. When the matter came to the notice of the Board, we passed a Resolution that opportunities should be given to those who hold the opposite view to express their view in the matter and we laid it down for the guidance of the Publicity Officer that, whenever any controversial question arises, equal opportunity should be given for both sides and well informed people should be invited to give expression to their views, whichever side they take. So that that is on the records. Sir I do not know how many Honourable Members have used that Department. I have used it myself for my work here. Whenever I want information on any question which comes up for discussion in the Assembly, I appeal to that Department and get the cuttings relating to the particular subject and post myself with regard to it. What prevents Honourable Members from using the Department in that way? It is intended for that purpose. Let us look at it from another point of view. You have here so many departments where you complain work is duplicated. If you go to the Industries Department, they refer you to the Commerce Department. If you go to the Commerce Department, they refer you to the Health Department; if you go to the Health Department, they refer you to the Education Department. In that way you have to go fishing for information, searching for information. Sir, my ambition is to have a clearing house where both the Government and public can get the information and statistics on every point which comes up for discussion in this Assembly and the Council of State. Where else can you get it? You must have co-ordination. Otherwise the Posts and Telegraph Department will have their department of information and intelligence and other departments will have their departments of information and intelligence, and in that way you will be employing numerous officers. There is great scope for Indians training themselves in publicity. This department ought to act as a means for collecting information, comparing statistics, presenting them to the public in a readable form. How many of us look at the reports and the statistics and figures in them and come to right conclusions based on those figures? Sir, the mission of this Department is to produce leaflets explaining the administration, the statistics bearing upon it and the right conclusions to be drawn from them, and to put people in the way of thinking for themselves on statistics and public questions. Sir, this is the work to be done. You do want a highly qualified man to run that Department. I ask my Honourable friend to read a recently published American publication called "Public Opinion." There is a whole chapter relating to intelligence, intelligence which the Government should have, intelligence which the public should have. Simply because Honourable Members are offended at one leaflet issued to go and launch upon a crusade like this upon a Department is rather discouraging for work of this sort. Sir, I think we ought emphatically to express our opinion that there should be only one department where all departments should go for information, where the public should go for information, and I hope the Government have agreed to our proposals. It was only last week we made our proposals about reorganisation and I hope His Excellency the Viceroy has accepted our recommendations in that case. I say it is a good beginning. I was very sorry when I saw in the papers that the Madras Publicity Board was abolished. Sir, we in Madras did not dabble merely with Government information, we issued leaflets on industrial matters, organised lectures on various matters of public interest and educated the people in various ways and made them think for themselves. On account of the financial stringency, thanks to the Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey's refusal to reduce the Provincial Contribution, Madras has had to starve in many ways and I am very sorry this Department has come under that ruthless blow. Sir, I hope we will not repeat that mistake here. I earnestly appeal to the House not to repeat it.

[Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar.]

Mr. Darcy Lindsay: Sir, I thoroughly agree with my Honourable friend, Mr. Rangachariar, in his strong advocacy of an increase rather than decrease in the grant for publicity work. To my mind, Sir, had there been more publicity in India, some of our past troubles would have been greatly lessened. The Government of India meets with much abuse, but all the same it does very excellent work that the people at large know nothing about. This never gets to them and it is only the alleged misdeeds that are magnified. What we want to get to the people is the good work done by the Government in the interests of the people. I know a little about this publicity work, Sir. When the war was on the Government of India formed a Publicity Department, with the special object of spreading throughout the country true news regarding the war, and the reasons for rise in prices which was so largely affecting the people. In Bengal as well as in Madras there was a Board formed for this publicity work. Pamphlets were issued, lecture parties were formed, and we started a newspaper, as I think was also done in many other Provinces. When the war came to an end, owing to the tightness of money, the Government shut down all this very useful publicity work. As I said in my opening remarks, had this only been continued, much of our recent troubles would have been prevented. With these remarks, Sir, I strongly oppose this amendment.

(Honourable Members: "The question may now be put.")

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: I know that there are many friends of this Department here and I need only add a few words to what they have said on its behalf. A Government without some organization for publicity is like a human being without eyes and without a voice. You may just as well try to govern in modern conditions without proper publicity, as to undertake any other difficult operation in life without being able to see what you are doing, or to express your ideas intelligibly. I am unfortunate this evening; I am indeed in a very difficult position. I believe the House wants us to spend a great deal more on this Department. I believe if we had put in twice the amount, the House would have seen it through, and the difficulty that I have to face is this, that having engaged to reduce some Rs. 87,000 on behalf of the Finance Department to satisfy the claim of Rs. 97,000 put forward by the Incheape Committee, my Department, in a fit of ill-timed thrift, has proposed to make certain deductions in the original demand for the Central Bureau of Information. I know that, if I were to go through these reductions now, revealing the details to those who have advocated the Department to the House, it would be so heart-rending to them that they would turn on me on some future occasion and vote a reduction which I did not want because I have made on this occasion a reduction which they do not want. I will only say this that I fully recognise what Mr. Rangachariar said regarding the necessity of having as wide a non-official basis as possible for the Committee which is to advise and guide this Department.

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas: Has the proposal for the change of name been accepted?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: The proposal put forward by the sub-committee for the constitution of the advising and guiding committee has been accepted and will be given effect to. The question of nomenclature is one which we could discuss at any time. I don't think the Department would do any better work under another name, but, if the Advisory Committee would like a variation, I should be prepared to accept it.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: I think it has already been done.

Mr. Deputy President: The question is:

"That the provision under sub-head 'Central Bureau of Information', under the head 'General Administration ('Home Department')' be reduced by Rs. 80,000."

The motion was negatived.

Dr. Nand Lal: Sir, I have studied the question again and I am, now, of opinion that this is a very useful Department, namely, the Bureau of Central Intelligence. Therefore, I do not propose to move this motion.*

Sir, the whole subject has been fully discussed with reference to a number of amendments, and therefore, in the interests of the economy of time, I do not propose to move this motion.†

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: Sir, as we are entering a new Department, Education and Health, and as there are one or two points especially with regard to the Army Department which will take time and which we cannot enter into to-day, may I suggest that we adjourn now?

THE MUSSALMAN WAKF REGISTRATION BILL.

Maulvi Abul Kasem (Dacca Division: Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I beg to present the Report of the Select Committee on the Mussalman Wakf Registration Bill.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey (Home Member): I wish to announce that various representations have been made to me on a matter of interest to the Assembly. It has always been customary before any of

* "That the provision for Bureau of Central Intelligence under sub-head 'Home Department' be reduced by Rs. 35,000."

† "That the demand under sub-head 'Home Department' be reduced by Rs. 50,000."

[Sir Malcolm Hailey.]

our previous Councils dissolved to have a photograph taken of the entire body. The question of dissolution is still no doubt far away, but it was felt by many of its Members that, as perhaps the meeting in Simla might not be a full one, it would be advisable to take a photograph here. It is proposed, therefore, to have a photograph taken at 10-30 on Monday morning at the Secretariat.

The Assembly then adjourned till Eleven of the Clock on Friday, the 16th March, 1923.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

Friday, 16th March, 1923.

The Assembly met in the Assembly Chamber at Eleven of the Clock. Mr. President was in the Chair.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

VENDORS AT N.-W. RAILWAY STATIONS.

565. Mr. W. M. Hussanally: 1. How many Mahomedan and Hindu Vendors of food-stuffs are there on the Sind Section of the North-Western Railway?

2. Are there any rules regulating the vend of food-stuffs on the North-Western Railway?

3. What stuffs are Mahomedan vendors allowed to sell and what the Hindu vendors?

4 (a) Is it a fact that the Railway have recently imposed a license fee upon these vendors?

(b) If so, how much per year?

5. Is it a fact that vendors of food-stuffs at Railway Stations are obliged to pay a sort of annuity to the station staff to propitiate them; and are also required to serve the station staff without remuneration?

6. Do Government propose to appoint a Committee of Officials and Non-Officials to inquire into the complaints against railway servants of corruption and suggest remedies?

Mr. O. D. M. Hindley: (1) There are 63 Hindu and 10 Mahomedan vendors on the Sind section of the North-Western Railway.

(2) The reply is in the affirmative.

(3) A list of articles sold by vendors on the station platforms, etc., on the North-Western Railway is being furnished to the Honourable Member separately.

(4) (a) and (b). No license fee is imposed upon vendors on the North-Western Railway.

(5) and (6) The reply is in the negative.

REHABILITATION OF GOVERNMENT PAPER.

566. Mr. R. A. Spence: Will the Government be pleased to state what action they propose to take in regard to the findings of the Committees appointed in 1921 in Bombay and Calcutta to consider the rehabilitation of the 3 per cent. and 3½ per cent. Government Paper?

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: After a great deal of enquiry and consideration, Government have come to the conclusion that no specific measure of rehabilitation is practicable and that improvement in the value of these securities must be the gradual result of the general rehabilitation of India's finances.

Mr. Darcy Lindsay: Will the information contained in the Report be published or made available for Members of the Assembly?

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: If Members of the Assembly desire it, it can no doubt be published.

Mr. R. A. Spence: May I ask that the information be published? I think it would be most interesting.

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: Possibly it would be better before answering that question to wait and see what the information is.

GAZETTED APPOINTMENTS IN ORDNANCE DEPARTMENT.

567. Mr. Sambanda Mudaliar: Will the Government be pleased to state:

- (a) The number of Gazetted appointments in the Ordnance Department of Government of India.
- (b) Whether any of these Gazetted appointments is being held by an Indian? If not, why not?
- (c) Whether Government is aware of the grave discontent among Indian Officers drawing a salary of Rs. 200 and more in regard to their claims to Gazetted appointments being overlooked?
- (d) Whether Government will be pleased to consider the advisability of appointing Indians for Gazetted posts in the Ordnance Department of the Government of India including Factories?
- (e) Whether Indians employed in the Ordnance Department including Factories are granted leave under Civil Service Regulations? If not, why not?

Mr. E. Burdon: On the presumption that the Honourable Member's question refers to civilian appointments in the Ordnance Department, the answers to his questions are as follows:

- (a) Twenty-six.
- (b) and (d) None of these appointments is held by an Indian. There is nothing to prevent an Indian from being appointed to any of these posts provided he possesses the requisite qualifications.
- (c) No.
- (e) The answer to the first part is in the affirmative. The second part does not arise.

WORKING OF SALT DEPARTMENT.

568. Bhai Man Singh: (a) Will the Government be pleased to state which of the salt mines are worked under the Northern India Salt Department and the expenses of which are charged under that heading; and which of these mines are situated in the Punjab?

(b) Which of the officers and other establishment mentioned in demand No. 3, under the heading of the Northern India Salt Department are common to all the mines under the Northern India Salt Department and which are working solely at the Warcha, Khewra, Jammu and other salt mines in the Punjab and at Sambhar, respectively, and what is the total pay drawn by such officers at each of these mines?

(c) Are the accounts of the said mines kept separately and if so, are shares of the pays of the officers common to all the mines adjusted in their accounts and if so, what are the respective shares charged to the account of each mine?

(d) Will the Government be pleased to state separately the expenditure on officers establishment and working of the Khewra, Warcha, Jammu and other Punjab salt mines including expenses incurred on preventive establishment and otherwise?

(e) Will the Government be pleased to state separately the income of the said mines?

(f) How much increase of income does the Government expect from these mines by the improvement made during the current year and proposed to be made during the next year (1923-24)?

Mr. A. H. Ley: (a) The salt mines now worked by the Northern India Salt Revenue Department are the Salt Range Mines at Khewra, Warcha and Kalabagh in the Punjab. Other salt sources worked by the Department are the quarries in Jatta, Bahadur Khel and Karak in the Kohat district of the North-West Frontier Province, the evaporation sources of the Sambhar Lake, Didwana and Pachbadra in Rajputana, and the small brine works at Sultanpur in the Gurgaon district of the Punjab.

(b) The staff which may be considered common to all the sources mentioned above (that is, mines, quarries and "evaporation" sources) is as follows:

1 Commissioner.
1 Deputy Commissioner.
1 Personal Assistant to Commissioner.
1 Consulting Engineer (temporary).
16 Clerks, permanent.	} In Central Office.
17 Clerks, temporary.
1 Kotgasht.
3 Jamadars.
1 Daftri.
21 Peons.

I will give the Honourable Member a printed list of officers and establishment of the Northern India Salt Revenue Department, which gives in detail information of the staff employed at the different sources and the rates of pay drawn.

(c) The accounts of the said sources are kept separately, but no share of the pay of the officers common to all is adjusted in those accounts.

(d) Figures for each source separately are not available. The expenditure for 1922-23 on officers, establishment and working of the Salt Range Division as a whole including expenses on preventive establishment but excluding expenditure on bags and despatches (recoverable from traders), as estimated to be as follows:

				Rs
Salt Range Division.
Pay of officers	...	...	...	93,000
Pay of establishment	...	...	...	1,97,000
Working charges	...	...	...	11,81,800
TOTAL				14,71,800

(e) The income of the Salt Range Division for 1922-23 is estimated at Rs. 69½ lakhs.

(f) It is impossible to give an estimate with any correctness of the increased output to be anticipated from a portion only of the developments ultimately projected, but the improvement scheme for the Khewra and Warcha mines as a whole aims at an ultimate increase in output of about 40,00,000 maunds annually, which means increased receipts in duty of half a crore at the rates of duty previously in force, viz., Rs. 1-4 a maund and a crore at the rates at present in force.

INSPECTION OF INCOME-TAX ACCOUNTS.

569. Bhai Man Singh: 1. Is the Government aware that paragraph 64 printed on page 105 of the Income Tax Manual, 1922, makes it discretionary for the Income Tax Officers to call for Account Books even after the submission of Audited Statement of Profit and Loss?

2. Is it a fact that this discretion is greatly abused and assesses are compelled to submit accounts even after they get them audited as provided in the Income Tax Manual?

3. Is the Government aware that such Account Books when submitted pass through several hands, the Munim, the Inspector, the Head Clerk and the Income Tax Officer?

4. Is it a fact that in the majority of cases facts coming to their notice in the course of examination of Account Books are disclosed, to the great detriment of the interest of the assesses?

5. Is the Government aware that a very respectable firm of Ambala Cantonment is alleged to have suffered through such disclosure and has complained about it to the Income Tax Officer concerned?

6. Are the Government prepared to consider the question of issuing instructions to the Income Tax officers directing them not to call for an inspection of the Account Books of an assessee where the statement of profits and loss has been duly audited by qualified Auditors or at least not to so call for the books unless there are very special reasons which should be recorded in writing for doing so as well as to direct that very serious notice be taken in the case of any such disclosure?

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: 1. Sub-section (4) of section 22 of the Income-tax Act empowers the Income-tax Officer to call for such accounts and documents as he may require from any person who is liable to make a return of income.

2. The accounts have to be examined even when an audited statement of profit and loss is produced.

3. Account books produced before an Income-tax Officer may pass through more than one hand in the Income-tax office, but all particulars contained in such accounts are to be kept confidential by the income-tax employees who are liable to be punished under section 54 of the Act for disclosing any such information.

4. No such complaint has been received by the Government.

5. No.

6. An audited profit and loss account is not a correct statement of the profits liable to income-tax, and it does not appear necessary to amplify the instructions contained in paragraph 64 of the Income-tax Manual against the unnecessary detention of the books of an assessee.

THE BUDGET—LIST OF DEMANDS.

SECOND STAGE—contd.

DEMAND NO. 14—GENERAL ADMINISTRATION—contd.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar (Madras: Nominated Non-Official): Sir, with Mr. Rangachariar's permission, I beg to move his motion No. 284, which runs as follows:

"That the provision for Assistants, Clerks, etc., under sub-head 'Department of Education and Health' be reduced by Rs. 100."

I shall confine my remarks solely to one institution in Delhi, and that is the Lady Hardinge Medical College whose finances as admitted by the Honourable the Education Member are in a very unfortunate position. It is a very unique institution and I think the Government should do something to make that institution a successful one and not allow it to die of starvation. It is an institution in which female students alone are allowed to pursue their studies; and when I say that we in Madras have got an exceedingly good institution and that it does not attract even two or three women for the medical degree whereas that even from Madras as many as ten women are studying here for the purpose of taking degrees, it shows how popular this institution is. In this country co-education is not possible to the same extent as in other countries. We can send here our girls to take their degrees in an institution entirely managed by women, in which male students do not study; and that is the reason why this institution is so very successful; I think nothing should be done to make that institution less useful than it is at present, and I am quite sure that the Government have no intention of doing it. I believe there is some difference of opinion as regards the position of this institution owing to the attempt which is being made by the college authorities to have the science department within the institution. The Vice-Chancellor of the Delhi University put certain questions to show that it should be affiliated to the University of Delhi. I may say that I have very great sympathy with the functioning of the Delhi University; but I will say this much also that if it comes into conflict with the Medical College I have no doubt what my position would be. I will certainly not allow the Medical College to die out and the Delhi University to gain by the dying of that institution. We must do everything that lies in our power to see that this institution is successful, and we want the science class in the Medical College itself, because if it is a science class in the University, male students will also attend it and as I said already female students will not go to a school largely where male students are reading. Under these circumstances it is absolutely desirable that there should be a science department in the Medical College itself and I hope the Honourable the Education Member will see his way to give sufficient funds; as he admitted the other day when I put a number of questions that there is a deficit; this institution should not be allowed to be in that unfortunate position. This institution has also got a hospital which is one of the most popular hospitals that we have in India. They have also an exceedingly good hostel attached to the institution. I am not quite sure whether I have set a good example, because I am particularly anxious that I should not set a bad example. I was almost going to ask you if it is in your province to fix five minutes limit for discussions this day, because there are a large number of subjects to be dealt with which we must get through; and I hope I have not set a bad example for speaking for a long time. I have tried to bring by remarks within the five minutes limit and I shall ask others also to impose this limit upon themselves.

[Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar.]

Dr. H. S. Gour (Nagpur Division: Non-Muhammadan): I do not know whether you have already ruled in anticipation of the request made by my Honourable friend, Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar, that all speeches shall be retrenched to five minutes, but I hope to curtail my remarks within that compass. I think my friend has entirely misunderstood me if I gave him the impression that I was opposed to the continuance of the Lady Hardinge Medical College for which I have the warmest regard. It is also wrong on the part of my learned friend to assume that we wish in any way to cripple the resources available for the management of that college. What we, on this side of the House desire, Sir, is to make the Honourable the Finance Member a little more charitable to the subject of Education. The Inchcape axe was particularly sharp upon Education and it seems to have got blunted after the Educational grants were cut. The result has been that the subject of Education, Public Health, Sanitation and all the nation-building departments have suffered heavily at the hands of the Inchcape Committee; and it is with that object in view that I put certain questions on the last occasion, but if the Honourable the Finance Member desires to take the sense of this House. I have no doubt that the sense of this House so far as the non-official Members are concerned is strongly and unanimously in favour of making generous grants to educational institutions, Lady Hardinge College as well as the University of Delhi and its constituent Colleges. If he is generously disposed, we have no doubt whatever, Sir, that the Lady Hardinge College will get the grant which it so badly and sorely needs.

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett (Finance Member): May I just ask, Dr. Gour, Sir, where he hopes to get the money from?

The Honourable Mr. A. C. Chatterjee (Education Member): Sir, my Honourable friend, Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar, has made this motion, I take it, to draw the attention of the Government to the needs of Lady Hardinge Medical College. I do not desire to interfere in the internecine warfare between the Democratic Party and what I may describe as the remnants of the Democratic Party. I think my Honourable friend, Mr. Seshagiri

Ayyar, knows perfectly well that Government have always been extremely sympathetic towards the needs of the Lady Hardinge Medical College. As a matter of fact, even at the present moment, the bulk of the amount needed by that College is furnished by Government, and I am sure that my Honourable friend, Sir Basil Blackett, will be sympathetic towards any reasonable demand that may be made on behalf of that College. But at the same time I hope that my Honourable friends here will endeavour to raise private donations on behalf of that College. I do not think it is desirable that any institution of this sort should depend entirely on Government support. I shall take this opportunity, Sir, to furnish the information which my friend, Mr. Rangachariar, asked for yesterday with regard to the Medical Research Institute. The position with regard to that Institute was that the Government made an annual grant of Rs. 5 lakhs to the Medical Research Fund Association, and Government have also, altogether, a staff of 25 officers in the Bacteriological or Medical Research department. Of these 25 officers, 9 are employed in provincial institutions and are paid for by the provinces. Three or four of these officers—I do not know exactly which—are attached to the Kasauli Institute which is a Central Institution. The remaining 12 officers—some Indians and some Europeans, some of them I.M.S. officers and some non-I.M.S. officers—are out in the field doing actual research work. Of the Rs. 5 lakhs grant to the Association, about Rs. 2½ lakhs are saved every year in order to make up a capital fund for the building of this institute. The rest of the money is spent on the activities on which these officers are at present engaged. The Government of India have always been extremely anxious to devote money to Medical Research in furtherance of the interests of India as a whole. The question, however, was examined by the Retrenchment Committee, and, as Honourable Members are aware, the Retrenchment Committee have recommended the practical extinction of the department. As my Honourable friend the Finance Member has already said, this is one of the questions which is at present under the consideration of the Government of India, and I am unable to say what the final decision would be. There are two possible courses open, either the course which has been recommended by the Retrenchment Committee or the alternative by which we can retain a skeleton machinery for continuing Medical Research and when finances improve to renew the grants to the Medical Research Association for the building of the Institute. Personally, Sir, I hope that a broader spirit will prevail, but, as I have said, it is impossible to anticipate the decision of the Government of India, and I hope my Honourable friend will be satisfied with the explanation that I have been able to furnish him.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: I do not press my motion, Sir.

Mr. J. P. Cotelingam (Nominated: Indian Christians): Sir, I would like to say a few words on the fate of Education at the hands of the Retrenchment Committee, and the action taken or proposed to be taken by the Government of India on the recommendations made. Honourable Members will see from page 196 of the Report of the Retrenchment Committee that they recommend that the scheme of the University of Delhi be reconsidered, and that the grant to non-Government Arts Colleges and to the Delhi University be reduced. Sir, I would like to say at the outset that while the Members that composed the Committee were expert businessmen and sharp in the use they made of their axe, they did not profess to be experts in matters educational. From the recommendations they have made, they do not seem to have realised that they were to a very large extent counting upon the educational experience of their student days. For example, in the matter of grants, they have proposed the apportionment of grants according to the number of students that attend schools or colleges. That is an exploded theory. We would like to give more attention to quality than to quantity. A school or a college may by lowering its standard attract a very large number of pupils and be able to earn a large amount of grant. In the Madras Presidency some years ago aided schools, especially primary schools, were given what were known as "results grants". On the results produced at inspection or examination, the amount of grant to the various schools was determined. It is a matter for regret that the Retrenchment Committee should give expression to a piece of fallacious reasoning, when in the matter of grants for primary education, they should state that the grants should be fixed on the basis of an average of one teacher per 25 pupils rising to one teacher per 30 pupils. It should be the other way about. Time was when, owing to the paucity of trained teachers in our schools, we were obliged to have a larger number of pupils in a class than an ordinary teacher of ordinary capabilities could manage. We are now looking forward to the time when we shall have trained teachers in all our elementary and secondary schools and have fewer pupils in a class so they can be handled in a satisfactory manner by the teacher. Therefore, instead of fixing the grant at one teacher for 25 pupils, we hope to provide larger grants on the basis of one teacher for less than 25 pupils.

[Mr. J. P. Cotelingam.]

The grants to the three colleges, the constituent colleges of the University of Delhi, are to be reduced. I must state that if the grants are cut down, these three colleges, and especially St. Stephen's College, the foremost of the three, cannot go on. Government has already laid down the policy of education, namely, the allotment of an increasing amount of grant to schools and colleges which continue to be efficient. If the grant is all at once to be cut down on the recommendation of the Retrenchment Committee, Sir, I must say that it will amount to a breach of faith. The cutting down of the grant to education, be it to the University or to aided colleges, or to secondary schools is "the most unkindest cut of all". Educational expense in the maintenance and in the strengthening of colleges is bound to increase, and to fix it, as the Retrenchment Committee has recommended, is tantamount to a reduction. The colleges are trying to cope with the situation created by the establishment of the University. They are trying to improve and increase their staff. It will therefore take not less than 10 years or so before they can reach their normal standard of increase and development. If the grant that is now proposed to be cut down on the recommendation of the Retrenchment Committee is to be given effect to, I fear these three colleges may soon go out of existence. There are no local bodies that will come to their rescue if Government should reduce or withdraw their grant. And if these three colleges should be weakened by the reduction of the grant as proposed by the Retrenchment Committee, it will mean this, that Government will have to establish a college of their own and maintain it at an exorbitant cost. There is only one other alternative, if the grant to the colleges is reduced. Fees will have to be increased, and if fees have to be increased, fees will also have to be increased in the Punjab. If the standard rate of fees is not raised the Delhi Colleges cannot afford to raise their fees. Depending upon the support that Government will give, the management of St. Stephen's College have obtained large support from their Missionary Society, as also from the Cambridge Mission, and if Government is to withdraw their grant I am pretty certain that their supporters in Cambridge and in the S. P. G. Society will withhold or reduce their support. Honourable Members know that the staff of the college is very efficient. There are seven Englishmen from the University of Cambridge or other Universities and on their Indian staff professors who are distinguished men of Indian and European Universities. If this support is withdrawn, the staff will soon find other places where their services will be required.

I trust that the appeal made on behalf of the Lady Hardinge College will receive due consideration, and that the grant required for the maintenance of that College will be increased, that the grant already promised to the Delhi University will be continued, and the secondary schools and colleges in Delhi will, instead of having their grants reduced, have them increased in proportion to the work that they are doing and are expected to do. Sir, in the same strain throughout the chapter on education the Retrenchment Committee have proposed reductions. No doubt they recommend that large grants should be given for the support of primary education and they are right there, but when they recommend that, in the interests of economy, grants to secondary schools and colleges be cut down I think they are making a fatal mistake. It would be a suicidal policy to reduce or cut down the grants that are being given to maintain educational institutions. With these few remarks I resume my seat.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: I do not press my motion.

The motion was, by leave of the Assembly, withdrawn.

Dr. Nand Lal (West Punjab: Non-Muhammadan): Sir, I move:

"That the provision for one Educational Commissioner under the sub-head 'Department of Education and Health' be omitted."

Sir, as you know the Education Department is a nation-building department. Education moulds the character and helps to maintain life, and I think every one of us will have the sincerest sympathy with this Department. I may thus suggest to the Honourable the Finance Member that he will try to see that the Delhi University, which is one of the most desirable Universities, though she is the youngest one, may not suffer in any way. She may be maintained; she may be supported

Mr. President: We have had that discussion. I thought the Honourable Member was going to raise some other subject.

Dr. Nand Lal: I am not referring specifically to that subject; I am going to make a submission before the Finance Member that he may try to protect these institutions. If he wants money, I shall give him cuts from other sources.

Mr. President: We have passed from that point. The money which Government are prepared to give for Education, was discussed on the previous amendment. The House is my witness that no one rose to continue that discussion. It is now closed.

Dr. Nand Lal: Thank you, Sir, I am always in favour of expedition of work. I want that all these colleges in Delhi may be supported and also the schools, that generous contributions may be made to them, and that in any case education here may not suffer in any way. But Sir

[16TH MARCH 1923.]

Mr. President: The Honourable Member is not paying attention to my ruling. He must discuss his motion to reduce the vote for the Educational Commissioner's Department.

Dr. Nand Lal: I have attained the point which I have wanted to achieve.

Now, Sir, while I am in favour of the Educational Department, I am not in favour of any kind of extravagance. Now, when I go into the matter, what do I find? On page 43 under the heading "Educational Commissioner", I find a salary of Rs. 2,500 to Rs. 3,000 or Rs. 35,470 allotted for the purposes of this officer. To my mind it does not seem to be at all necessary under the present state of affairs when Education is a transferred subject.

Mr. President: I did not quite appreciate what the Honourable Member was moving. The Educational Commissioner is a non-votable item.

Dr. Nand Lal: The Educational Commissioner is a non-votable item?

Mr. President: Yes.

Mr. R. A. Spence (Bombay: European): It is printed in italics on page 43.

Dr. Nand Lal: My motion is No. 289, and the next one, namely, 290 is also mine.

Mr. W. M. Hussanally (Sind: Muhammadan Rural): May I, Sir, know if the Chair has ruled that all speeches should be confined to five minutes. Dr. Nand Lal has exceeded that time.

Mr. President: In any case the Honourable Member must move something else.

Dr. Nand Lal: May I inform Mr. Hussanally that I am as obedient to the order of the Chair as he is; he should not intervene. I may be permitted to say that I am as amenable to discipline as he is. I am not satisfied, Sir, that this is a non-votable item.

Mr. President: I am quite satisfied that it is.

Dr. Nand Lal: If you say so, Sir, then I must accept it and resume my seat.

Mr. J. Chaudhuri (Chittagong and Rajshahi Divisions: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I move the motion that stands in my name, namely, "That the provision for Educational Commissioner under the sub-head 'Department of Education and Health' (page 43) be reduced by Rs. 40,000."

Mr. President: That also, I am afraid, is out of order because the entire vote for the Educational Commissioner is Rs. 54,210, of which the votable portion is only Rs. 10,740.

Mr. J. Chaudhuri: I move this for the purpose of eliciting information. As I have often stated, the total non-votable item might come up to that, but the salary of the Educational Commissioner comes up to Rs. 32,270, which is non-votable; the Curator, Bureau of Education, Rs. 10,140, is votable, and several other items which come up to Rs. 1,14,000.

Mr. President: The Honourable Member need not repeat this sum. I have already informed him that his motion is out of order in its present form.

Mr. J. Chaudhuri: Might I modify it and say that the amount be reduced by one rupee. I raise a question of principle and nothing more, and I want information from the Honourable Member in charge of Education. I moved a similar motion last year and I left it to the Department and also for the consideration of the Retrenchment Committee. On page 130 of the Retrenchment Committee's Report they take precisely the same view that we did last year. They say:

"We do not consider that there is any justification for the retention of the Educational Commissioner, the Bureau of Education and the Central Advisory Board, costing about Rs. 1,00,000 or for the retention of the Department as a separate entity."

The Honourable Mr. A. C. Chatterjee: May I interrupt at this stage in the interests of the economy of time. I expect that my Honourable friend, Mr. Chaudhuri, is raising the question whether these officers ought to be kept on in spite of the recommendations of the Retrenchment Committee. I wish to point out to him that my Honourable friend, the Finance Member has already taken credit for a very large sum in order that the recommendations of the Retrenchment Committee might be given effect to, so far as possible, and the question of the retention of all these officers and offices is at present under consideration, and I do not think any useful purpose will be served by a discussion at the present moment.

Mr. J. Chaudhuri: Sir, I do not press my motion but I may offer some suggestions with regard to that. We do not want that the useful work that is being done in this Department should be discontinued, but we only want that economy should be effected. There are, at present, two Departments, one under the Educational Secretary and another under the Educational Commissioner. The Educational Commissioner is a member of the Indian Civil Service and he might be usefully employed elsewhere. (A Voice: "He is not.") The work of the Department may be carried on by the Secretary and one Assistant Secretary. The Department collects a lot of information which is useful in the provinces. I do not wish at all that the purpose that this Department serves and the useful work that is being done by it should be discontinued, but I suggest that the two departments should be amalgamated and economy effected, and only a sufficient staff should be retained for the purpose of carrying on the work that belongs to the Central Government. Formerly, this Department looked to Education outside the Central Government, for instance, the Calcutta University, and education all over India. Those are now transferred subjects and the provinces look to their own education. But this Department should exist for this reason that they sometimes require information regarding other provinces and sometimes of the foreign Universities, and I know that the Central Government keeps up-to-date information with regard to the progress of education in other parts of the world. I do not wish that these activities should cease, but my contention is that the Department should only keep a sufficient staff and a minimum staff, through which they can carry on their work; and, as my Honourable friend has said that the matter is receiving consideration, I am prepared to withdraw my motion.

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: Sir, I rise in connection with the point of order that was raised just now. I think there is a certain amount of room for misunderstanding. Dr. Nand Lal's amendment No. 289 was that the provision for one Educational Commissioner be omitted. That would, I submit, be clearly out of order because it is one Educational Commissioner who is non-voted, but the whole of the Rs. 1,14,000 is for the Educational Commissioner with the Government of India, that is the office.

[Sir Basil Blackett.]

Mr. Chaudhuri's amendment No. 291 is in order or not according as whether Educational Commissioner means the particular item only or the general sub-head.

Mr. J. Chaudhuri: Sir, I have reduced it to Re. 1. I have taken off Rs. 39,999.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That the provision for Educational Commissioner under sub-head 'Department of Education and Health' be reduced by Re. 1."

Mr. K. Ahmed (Rajshahi Division: Muhammadan Rural): Sir, it seems to me rather extraordinary that the Government should take advantage of the provision that when you do not require to spend money at all the old item should not be wiped out from their Demand for Grants. The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett sits there without explaining in full and giving satisfaction to my Honourable friend Mr. Chaudhuri as to whether it is necessary at all to keep up the appointment of a member of the Indian Civil Service as Commissioner of Education. Education has become for some time past a transferred subject. We are paying Rs. 5,333, to a Minister per month in almost every province

The Honourable Mr. A. C. Chatterjee: May I rise to a point of order, Sir. May I ask whether Mr. Chaudhuri withdrew his motion or not? I thought, Sir, that he withdrew it.

Mr. K. Ahmed: Neither, Sir, has my Honourable friend, withdrawn it, nor has the leave of the House been granted; and I am perfectly right in asking again for our satisfaction on this question, whether you require the services of an Educational Commissioner at all. If you do not, is it right for you to say that the item is non-votable and therefore you must rule me out. He says "Look here, the Demand and the contents of this budget are non-votable and you cannot move your motions" and here is our President who says it is out of order to vote on the motion. My Honourable friend, Dr. Nand Lal, again, on account of an oversight, or probably his eye-sight being defective did not see the italics properly. However that may be, Sir, it is clear that the services of an Educational Commissioner are not necessary, and still Sir, this Government will not do anything. We have always accused the Government of spending money like this, and it seems to me this is the proper time when we may ask for an explanation to satisfy this House that this post of Educational Commissioner, on which we are spending so many thousands of rupees a year is necessary.

Mr. W. M. Hussanally: Sir, on a point of order. Can we discuss this question of the Educational Commissioner, which is a non-voted subject?

Mr. President: As I have already pointed out, the Honourable Member was out of order in attempting to move a reduction which included that particular item; but the question is open for discussion though not for a vote.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey (Home Member): Might I intervene for a moment? As I introduced the general head "General Administration" I should like to recall to the House the fact that it stood in the original demand for grants at Rs. 81,58,000. We propose to deduct from that, owing to the recommendations of the Inchcape Committee, 7½ lakhs. Might I suggest to the House that the real question at issue is whether from that general head we have now made the minimum necessary provision or not? That is really the main point at issue. Have we acted up fully to the recommendations of the Inchcape Committee and the requirements of retrenchment in this matter? If we have, the House should vote supply. As we saw yesterday, there are a large number of separate items, some of them votable, some of them non-votable, on which the House had its observations to make. I would say again that we are prepared to receive the observations of the House as regards the particular items under which we should make that retrenchment of 7½ lakhs to which we are bound. That reduction is in the voted head, but it is always possible for the House, as we know by experience to discuss other items on motions for reduction of establishment. That is to say, taking the case in point, the Educational Commissioner, himself a non-voted item, has an establishment. If the House thinks the retention of the Educational Commissioner to be unnecessary, it is always possible to point this out on a motion to reduce a clerk. So we do not really, by reason of the fact that he is non-voted, keep the question from discussion. But I wish to lay stress on this, that we are making a total retrenchment of 7½ lakhs out of a budget head of 81 lakhs. We are prepared to receive the criticisms of the House in regard to separate items. We do not in any way close a discussion because some of them are voted and others non-voted. But I suggest that the main point is, whether we have sufficiently complied with the requirements of the Retrenchment Committee, in deducting 7½ lakhs from a total of 81 lakhs.

Mr. K. Ahmed: Sir, I am nearly satisfied with the explanation that has been given by the Honourable the Home Member and I see his presence of mind is always ready to tackle a point, but it is not altogether satisfactory with regard to the point on which I wanted an explanation so that this House might have been satisfied that the Government of India, and specially the Finance Department, are not putting a thing which is not accurate.

Mr. President: The question is that the reduction be made.

The motion was negatived.

Mr. Harchandrai Vishindas (Sind: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, Mr. Kamat himself, being ill, has authorised me to say that as he has been satisfied, probably for the considerations that the Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey has just now put before us, that all that he wanted has been done, therefore this amendment* should drop out.

Sir P. S. Sivaswamy Aiyer (Tanjore cum Trichinopoly: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, with your permission I should like to make one suggestion which might have the effect of saving a large amount of discussion, saving the time of the House and enabling it to pass on to other items. The real question is, as was pointed out by the Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey, whether the Government have gone far enough to meet the recommendations of the Inchcape Committee. They have made a certain amount of cuts. If instead of indulging in detailed criticism, and making these nibbling proposals to reduce something from this, something from that demand, we move one of those propositions which propose a lump cut under the total demand for General Administration—proposals ranging from a reduction of 5 to 20 lakhs—if some one of these proposals is moved, then we shall have the opportunity of expressing an opinion as to whether the head General Administration can bear an additional cut, and if so, by how much. That, I think will concentrate attention upon the main issue in the case.

* "That all votable items under the sub-head 'Educational Commissioner with the Government of India' be omitted."

[Sir P. S. Sivaswamy Aiyer.]

I believe, so far as this side of the House is concerned, a very large number are of opinion that the head of General Administration can bear a little more squeezing. I for one should think that it can stand another cut of 5 lakhs. As a matter of fact, the proposals made by the Government fall short of the proposals of the Inchcape Committee by about 13 lakhs. Therefore if we propose an additional cut of 5 lakhs, the requirements of General Administration will not be seriously interfered with and we shall not be paralysing the activities of the departments connected with General Administration. If this suggestion commends itself to my friends here, I hope that one of these propositions at page 24, Nos. 333, 334, 335 or 336 will be moved. I am sorry that Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary is not able to be present this morning, but he was anxious that his proposition, No. 336, should be moved. If my friend, Mr. Samarth, or my friend, Mr. Ginwala, will move

Dr. H. S. Gour: You move it; we will accept it.

Sir P. S. Sivaswamy Aiyer: If you will permit me to do so, Sir, I should like to move:

“That the demand under head ‘General Administration’ (page 36), be reduced by Rs. 5 lakhs.”

This is the minimum amount of the cuts proposed under the head General Administration, in these Resolutions of which notice has been given—Resolutions Nos. 333 to 336. Among these proposals No. 336 is most moderate. I think from a practical point of view there is advantage in moving this proposal instead of many of these nibbling Resolutions.

Mr. President: But I have got to protect the rights of the nibblers. I should like to be able to assume with the Honourable Member that those Honourable Members are going to withdraw their motions in favour of his. (Cries of ‘Yes.’)

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: I may mention one point; there are departments with regard to which we want information; we do not want to move reductions by dribbles—that is not what we want, and we will no doubt accept the motion as regards the Rs. 5 lakhs. There are other departments as regards the expenditure on which we want information; we cannot raise such discussion if we are to have a general discussion only on the motion for reduction by Rs. 5 lakhs. These departments will have to be brought under the scrutiny of this House and we shall have to ask questions. We are quite willing to accept the suggestion made by my Honourable friend that as regards the general reduction there should be a reduction of Rs. 5 lakhs, but some of the departments will have to come under the scrutiny of the House; that cannot be avoided—for example, the Army.

Mr. President: May I take it that that is the general sense of the House that we should have a reduction of say Re. 1 or Rs. 100 on each department on which discussion is desired, and in the end Sir Sivaswamy Aiyer will move a reduction of Rs. 5 lakhs? (Cries of ‘Yes.’)

Lieutenant-Colonel H. A. J. Gidney (Nominated: Anglo-Indians): I rise to a point of order: I wish to talk on one Department in this amendment and I desire to know whether I shall be given an opportunity to do so.

Mr. President: Which department?

Lieutenant-Colonel H. A. J. Gidney: On the Medical Department. Sir, I wish to take advantage of this opportunity to ask the Honourable Member in charge of the Civil Medical Department certain information on various subjects. Sir, in my speech on the general discussion of the budget last year, I made certain general observations suggesting certain changes; one of the chief points I raised was that owing to the frequent overlapping, interchanging and dove-tailing of the functions of the Directors of both the Civil and Military Medical Departments, I considered that the appointment of one Director of the Medical Services in India, both civil and military, of course with an adequate staff, would be ample. Sir, from the Detailed Estimates we know what is the cost of the upkeep of the office of Director-General, Indian Medical Service; I am, however, unable to obtain a similar knowledge from the figures supplied to us in the Army Estimates as to the cost of the upkeep of the office of the Director, Medical Services in India, but I think I am right in saying that it stands at a much higher figure than the upkeep of the Director General, Indian Medical Service. We have here, Sir, two Directors with two complete and separate offices controlling one department in India, embracing as they do the medical needs, both civil and military of this country; each one necessitating a lavish expenditure of money. I submit that one Director with an adequate staff would be enough. Here I submit, Sir, is room for great economy in both civil and military Budgets. I regret to notice that in the Retrenchment Committee Report no remarks were made about this point. Certain retrenchments are suggested, such as the abolition of the appointment of Public Health Commissioner and the reduction of the clerical staff of office of the Director General, Indian Medical Service and other matters—making a total retrenchment in this department of something like Rs. 1,10,000. I find it very difficult to avoid referring to the military medical department; I am afraid I must do so. If one refers to the Retrenchment Committee Report on the expenditure of the military medical department it will be noticed that a total cut of over Rs. 50 lakhs is recommended. I consider that the time has come when these two departments or Directorates should be made into one. With such overlapping of functions and with such duplication of labour, I consider it is a waste of money to administer the medical needs of India from these two separate departments; each one costing such a large sum. I therefore put it for the serious consideration of Government as to whether further economies could not be effected on the lines indicated here. This is the first subject to which I wished to refer.

[Lieut.-Colonel H. A. J. Gidney.]

The second subject which I wish to refer is one which I am afraid the Honourable Member in charge of this portfolio will say that I am poaching on provincial preserves but I shall risk it because I feel I am treading on safe or already beaten ground. I refer to the Registration of Nurses in India. The various Provincial Councils who have been approached on this matter declare it to be an all-India question which can be dealt with by the Government of India only. Accordingly I approached the Government of India on the same matter and was told by the Honourable Member in charge that it was a purely provincial matter to be dealt with by them and not by the Government of India. I am therefore puzzled by the question of responsibility and I therefore ask for the indulgence of the House while I again refer to this matter. I would ask this House as also the Honourable Member in charge of this department to bear with me whilst I refer to the details in the training of nurses in India. We have in India various medical institutions giving a nurse's training to a large body of ladies, both Indian and of the domiciled community. It seems hardly necessary for me to refer to the very important place a nurse occupies in the treatment of the sick. Here in India we have a noble body of women who are given three or four years' training as nurses, who are allowed to practise their profession in this country, who are given diplomas as fully trained nurses, but who are denied the rights which are to-day possessed and enjoyed by even compounders so far as registration in India is concerned. These nurses are able to earn a livelihood in this country, but if they go to any other country, say England, they are denied recognition as trained nurses and in some cases the practice of their profession, because the Government of India has up to date refused to recognise this body of women by registering them under an Act. It is not so hard for them here, but when they elect to go to any other country they are denied the recognition of their profession and are looked upon as quacks. They are not so much affected now as they will be from July of this year because a recent communication has been received from the Secretary of the General Nursing Council of England and Wales to the effect that those nurses who wish to register under the Nurses Registration Act of England must do so before July this year. Otherwise they will have to subject themselves to certain examinations. Now, Sir, I consider this is not fair to the nurses in this country. The only province in India that has so far effected registration is Burma, a province, which my Honourable friend, Mr. Ginwala, complains, is being neglected, but which has led the way to other provinces in this respect and is worthy of emulation. I submit, Sir, that the Government of India must not and cannot shirk their responsibility in this important matter. I am not satisfied, nor are the nurses in India satisfied, with the Provincial Governments shirking and transferring their duties to the Central Government and the Central Government when approached doing likewise to the Provincial Governments. Surely I am not asking too much of the Central Government to give effect to this legislation, viz., "An All-India Nurses Registration Act". The Nurses Association in England refuses to recognise any Provincial Act in India and is prepared to recognise an all-India Act only. Will the Honourable Member in charge of Education inform me if he will be able to introduce an All-India Nursing Registration Act before next July. If he cannot do so by then, will he at least give me an assurance that he will be kind enough to ask the Director General, Indian Medical Service, to write to the Secretary Nursing Association of England and Wales, and assure him that he will move in the matter and ask that the time limit for Indian trained nurses desirous of registering as such in England be extended to July 1924. I should be grateful if the Honourable Member would do this.

12 Noon.

Now, Sir, the next subject I wish to talk on is also a matter which I fear encroaches on the domains of the provinces. It refers to a body of medical men in whom I am naturally very much interested, I mean the Military Assistant Surgeons. I do not mean the Military Assistant Surgeons who are employed in the Army. Their grievances will be discussed by me in a subsequent motion. I refer to those who are employed in the Civil Medical Service in the various provinces.

The Honourable Mr. A. C. Chatterjee: May I ask, Sir, if the officers under the Civil Medical Departments in the various provinces come under this head? They are not employed under the Government of India.

Mr. President: Does the Honourable Member mean in this case they are under the direction and control of the Local Governments?

The Honourable Mr. A. C. Chatterjee: Yes, Sir.

Mr. President: In that case, I think, the Honourable Member is out of order.

Lieutenant-Colonel H. A. J. Gidney: I wish to accept your ruling on that matter, Sir. But I beg to differ from the Honourable Member in charge of this portfolio in so far that I am not specifically or exclusively referring to those Military Assistant Surgeons who are civilly employed in the various provinces, and that I am also referring to those Military Assistant Surgeons in civil employ—(I submit, Sir, with all due respect to the Honourable the Education Member),—for whom the Director General, Indian Medical Service, is directly responsible.

Dr. Nand Lal: When you accept the ruling of the Chair, you must accept the assertion of the Honourable the Education Member.

Lieutenant-Colonel H. A. J. Gidney: With all respect to the Chair and to the Honourable Member in charge, I submit, the Director General, Indian Medical Service, is directly responsible for the Indian Medical Department, in fact it is impossible to dissociate him from the working of that department in whatever way the Military Assistant Surgeons are employed, and with your permission, Sir, I wish to push that point if I am in order.

The Honourable Mr. A. C. Chatterjee: So far as those officers who are employed directly under the Government of India, I have no objection to the Honourable Member airing their grievances, but I do not think he will be in order to ventilate the grievances of those Military Assistant Surgeons who are employed under Provincial Governments.

Lieutenant-Colonel H. A. J. Gidney: I beg to disagree even here with the Honourable Member. I submit, Sir, that since the Military Assistant Surgeons belong to a Department for which the Director General, Indian Medical Service, is directly responsible and since this comes under general discussion to-day I believe I am in order when I referred to those Military

[Lieut.-Colonel H. A. J. Gidney.]

Assistant Surgeons who are in civil employ. But, Sir, all that I desire is to obtain from the Honourable Member in charge of this Department an assurance that he will give this matter his sympathetic consideration. We have here the Director of Indian Medical Service as the head of a department which is known as the Indian Medical Department. Those Members who are employed outside the army,—they may be employed by the Central Research Institute or they may be employed in other civil capacities—are under the control of the Director General, Indian Medical Service, and it is in regard to these people that I am speaking. These officers are enlisted in the service from the middle class of the domiciled community. They undergo training for 4 or now for 5 years in well recognised medical institutions and are trained by the same class of professors—Indian Medical Service Officers—who train the Civil Assistant Surgeons. They receive a diploma of equal licensing value to any medical degree in India. If they are not graduates,—I am not going to draw comparisons to their disfavour, because I opine it is not the degree that makes the man but it is the man who makes the degree,—these men are now as good as any of the graduates of the Indian Medical Colleges. Some of these Assistant Surgeons, generally the more brilliant and experienced men, are appointed as Civil Surgeons in various provinces and so have come under Provincial control, Medicine being a transferred subject. Now, Sir, these Assistant Surgeons perform the same duties as do their Civil Assistant Surgeon colleagues who are similarly employed but strange to relate are in some provinces denied the same pay. How often have I not heard Honourable Members in this House declare that if an Indian does the same work as an Englishman he should be given the same pay. I ask this House to apply the same principle to these Military Assistant Surgeons of the domiciled community who are doing the same kind of work as their civil Indian colleagues but who are being given a lower rate of pay. If the Honourable Member in charge of this Department will give me an assurance that he will be kind enough to look into the matter and remedy what is really a crying need, I am sure he will earn the gratitude of the entire department, a department that has done much for India in the past and that is still doing much good for the country.

Sir, the last matter that I wish to talk on is the Senior Women's Medical Service. I believe that, though it is not quite a Government department, it is largely subsidized by Government, and I therefore think it comes within the purview of this general discussion.

Mr. R. A. Spence: May I know what this Senior Women's Medical Service is?

Lieutenant-Colonel H. A. J. Gidney: It is the opposite of the Junior Women's Service. It is really a quasi-official department which is controlled by a lady Chief Medical Officer. This service gets a large grant from Government and also depends for its maintenance on subscriptions from various Indian sources. Sir, my criticisms on this department will not be destructive in character, because the work that is done by this noble body of lady doctors is one that commands my unstinted admiration and praise as also the gratitude of India. But I have a few criticisms to make as to its constitution. Here is a service, Sir, that is entirely financed by Indian subscriptions including one annually from the Government of India. Here is a service, Sir, that is entirely devoted to giving female medical relief in India. Here is a service which I consider par excellence as one which should be recruited entirely in India and not as it is to-day a service for such large employment of English lady doctors recruited in England. I do not wish to decry the splendid services of these English lady doctors; but I do think that the time has arrived when a serious move should be made to recruit this service entirely in India. It is all moonshine to tell me that we have not got the right type of Indian and Anglo-Indian lady doctors in India. The Colleges in India to-day are getting full of Indian and Anglo-Indian domiciled women who have taken to the study of medicine. And I consider that the time has come for the Director of this service to pay greater attention to recruitment for this service in India and to cease recruiting so largely from England. India is quite capable to-day of supplying its own medical needs, both army and civil, both male and female, and I consider that further recruitment in this service should be confined entirely to India and India only.

The Honourable Mr. A. C. Chatterjee: Sir, the Honourable Member has raised several questions. He has discussed whether there should be one Director for all the Medical Services in India or whether there should be a Director General of the Indian Medical Service and a Director of Medical Services. I think my Honourable friend, Mr. Burdon, would be able to enlighten him on this point, and I will leave it to Mr. Burdon to answer Colonel Gidney in regard to this particular matter. Then, the Honourable gentleman passed on to the question of the abolition of the Public Health Commissioner. That matter is also under the consideration of the Government of India and it is not possible for me to say yet what would be the final decision. The third point which Colonel Gidney has referred to is the question of the registration of nurses. I think I indicated to the Honourable gentleman, in answer to a question some time ago, that this was a provincial transferred question, and really the Government of India could not interfere unless he could bring it within the Devolution Rules as a central subject. If the Honourable gentleman, to whom I shall give every opportunity of doing so, can convince me that this is a central subject, I shall be quite willing to go further into the matter. Then, Sir, he passed on to the question of the pay of Military Assistant Surgeons. So far as I could understand, he was comparing the pay which Military Assistant Surgeons received in the provinces with the pay of Civil Assistant Surgeons in the provinces. That, again, Sir, is a purely provincial subject, and I really do not feel that I am competent to answer on behalf of the provincial Governments. Then, Sir, he has spoken about the Women's Medical Service. This is a service which is controlled by a private Institution, to which it is true Government give certain aids. I shall bring to the notice of that Institution the remarks of my Honourable friend.

Lieutenant-Colonel H. A. J. Gidney: Sir, I thank the Honourable Member for what he has just said, and beg to ask that Government will kindly interest themselves and inquire into the matter particularly so far as Assistant Surgeons in the United Provinces are concerned.

Mr. E. Burdon (Army Secretary): Sir, I think my Honourable and gallant friend, Colonel Gidney, raised the question whether it would not be feasible to amalgamate the appointments of Director of Medical Services and Director General of the Indian Medical Service. Well, I should like to explain that this point was, so far as I know, specifically before Lord Inchcape's Retrenchment Committee. It was raised by certain of the questions in the Questionnaire. And it is clear that the Retrenchment Committee found it impossible to pursue the idea of securing an economy by the means which my Honourable friend has indicated. Speaking on behalf of the Army Department, I can say that, from our point of view, it would be quite impracticable to allow the Director, Medical Services, to sacrifice the amount of time which would be required if he were to discharge satisfactorily the duties of Director General of the Indian Medical Service in addition to those which he is already required to carry out. The Director of Medical Services is already very fully employed not only in supervising the Medical Services of the Army but in constructive work and research work which aim at the maintenance of the highest possible standard of health amongst the troops, both British and Indian. There is one other point I should like to suggest to the House, namely, that it would be entirely inappropriate for the Director of Medical Services, primarily a military officer serving under the orders of the Commander-in-Chief, to be concerned with the administration of the Civil Medical Services and with general questions of public health. I think the House will recognise that it would be quite unsuitable for the Director of Medical Services, an officer, as I say, directly under the orders of His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, to correspond with Provincial Governments on general questions of that kind.

[Mr. E. Burdon.]

Finally, the Director of Medical Services has hitherto nearly always been drawn from the Royal Army Medical Corps. I do not say that this arrangement will necessarily hold good for ever. It is possible that we may depart from it and recommendations to that effect, based upon certain proposals made by the Esher Committee, are actually under consideration. At the same time, it is certain that the Director of Medical Services will still from time to time be an officer of the Royal Army Medical Corps—an officer who need not necessarily have any knowledge of the problems of India except those which affect troops employed in India, and troops are employed under rather specialised conditions in India. That, I think, is a final and very convincing reason why it would be difficult, if not entirely impracticable, to amalgamate the two appointments which have been mentioned.

Dr. Nand Lal: Sir, I move:

"That the votable portion of the demand under sub-head 'Finance Department, Pay of officers,' be reduced by Rs. 100."

Sir, I want to invite the attention of the House specially to one point and that point alone has prompted me to offer this amendment. You will be pleased to see on page 130 of the Report of the Indian Retrenchment Committee that the expenditure on the Finance Department in 1913-14 was Rs. 4,10,200; in 1921-22, in the shape of revised estimates, it rose to Rs. 6,74,500; and again it rose in 1922-23, in the form of budget estimates to Rs. 6,91,200. Now, the recommendation which has been made and which is embodied in this Report, is that "this Department has already effected a reduction of Rs. 3,500 to meet the cut made by the Legislative Assembly and of Rs. 57,600 by the abolition of a post of Joint Secretary and by the amalgamation of two branches and by other economies, or in all Rs. 92,600,—allowing for further reductions in the number of peons which it may be possible to make." Here I pause for a moment and invite the Honourable the Finance Member kindly to give serious consideration to the suggestion which I am going to offer before this House, that these peons may not be dismissed and that instead of these peons the post of some other officer, whose salary may be sufficient to cover the salaries of a number of these poor clerks and peons, should be abolished. I, with due deference, disagree with this particular recommendation of the learned Committee if it really suggests the dismissal of peons. Had I the time, I would have tried to point out that many thousands of rupees more could be retrenched and I cannot see any reason why these poor peons are going to be victimised. With this brief suggestion, I submit that the Honourable the Finance Member will kindly see his way to save these poor men, namely, the peons.

The Honourable Sir Basil Blackett: Sir, the difficulties of an economist are great. Dr. Nand Lal has objected to the effecting of economy by the dismissal of peons. He suggests that it might be effected in other ways. But I would ask, "What is the purpose for which the House votes Government money to spend upon the Finance Department?" It is that the Finance Department may do a certain amount of work. For that purpose it requires a certain staff and that staff requires a certain number of, among other persons, peons. If the staff which is employed in doing a certain amount of work can do with less peons, is that a matter to which we should object? I do not think it is really necessary very seriously to deal with this proposal. Peons are not dismissed for the amusement of turning them out of work and peons are not employed simply for the purpose of their getting salaries. They are employed if they are needed and they are not employed if they are not needed. Surely the only criterion that we should use there is, what is the minimum number with which we can get through a certain amount of work.

Mr. K. Ahmed: I do not think, Sir, this question has been sufficiently understood. The amendment is:

"That the votable portion of the demand under sub-head 'Finance Department, Pay of Officers,' be reduced by Rs. 100."

