THE LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY DEBATES

(OFFICIAL REPORT OF THE SIXTH SESSION OF THE THIRD LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.)

V2, 31 'N30

N30-1

VOLUME I—1930.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY

Monday, 20th January, 1930.

The Assembly met in the Assembly Chamber of the Council House in New Delhi at Eleven of the Clock, being the first day of the Sixth Session of the Third Legislative Assembly, pursuant to S. 63-D (2) of the Government of India Act. The President (the Honourable Mr. Vithalbhai Javerbhai Patel) was in the Chair.

STATEMENT BY MR. PRESIDENT RE PROTECTION OF THE ASSEMBLY CHAMBER AND ITS PRECINCTS.

Mr. President: Before I call upon new Members desiring to take their seats to take the oath or make the affirmation in the manner prescribed, I desire to bring to the notice of this House a very serious situation which has arisen as a result of certain differences of opinion between the Government of India and the Chief Commissioner, Delhi, on the one hand, and the President of the Assembly on the other, regarding the question of control over admission of visitors in the outer as well as the inner precincts of the Assembly sector. The Government of India and the Chief Commissioner maintain that they, being responsible for the safety of the President and other Members of this House, are entitled to take such measures and post as many policemen in any part of the sector, with such instructions to them as they consider necessary, and that they are the sole judges of the adequacy of the protective measures to be taken in that behalf. The President of the Assembly, on the other hand, is of opinion that his authority within the precincts of the Assembly sector is so supreme and his control so complete, that his word as to the adequacy of the protective measures to be taken is final, and that no measures which have not his previous approval could be put into force within the precincts of the sector.

Last night, after the clock had struck nine, I received an urgent communication from the Chief Commissioner, Delhi, with a copy of a series of orders which have been issued by him to the police. I wish I could read these orders to the House, but as the communication is marked "Confidential", I refrain from doing so. Simultaneously I received the following communication from the Honourable the Home Member:

"Immediate.

Dear Mr. President,

The Chief Commissioner of Delhi has referred to the Government of India certain questions relating to the police arrangements for the protection of the Assembly Chamber, its precincts and the Council House Building, which I understand he discussed with you yesterday. The most essential of these relate to the proposals for checking admission to the Council House Building and the presence of police, including uniformed police, in the public gallery. These questions, after discussion, have been referred to His Excellency the Governor General and, with his concurrence, the considered view of the Governor General in Council is that, while supporting to the furthest reasonable limits the Honourable the President's dignity in consultation with him with regard to arrangements for protecting the Assembly and the public resorting to its precincts, if the Honourable the President is not prepared to concur in the advice of the Local Government, which is in law responsible, in essential matters of the provision for protection, Government must take the final responsibility for the adequacy of protective measures, on which point the authority immediately responsible is clearly the best judge.

The Chief Commissioner of Delhi has accordingly been instructed to carry out his proposals in respect of the two essential points which I have mentioned above.

I consider it, however, important that we should discuss the position personally, and I shall be glad to meet you at any time tomorrow convenient to you before the Assembly meets.

Yours sincerely,
(Signed) J. CRERAR."

The communication speaks for itself and needs no comment.

As Honourable Members are aware, the President of the Assembly had appointed a Watch and Ward Committee under the Chairmanship of the Leader of the House to consider the whole question of the precautionary measures to be taken and to advise him thereon. The Committee had recently submitted their Report, and the President has passed certain orders on their recommendations. The proposals which the Chief Commissioner, Delhi, with the full concurrence of the Government of India, has put into operation from to-day, after full knowledge of the orders passed by the President on the recommendations of the Watch and Ward Committee, are in deliberate defiance of those orders and constitute a challenge to the authority of the Chair. To take only one instance. The President has directed that the galleries shall be guarded by the Assembly Staff and that there shall be allowed only one policeman in plain clothes in the public gallery, in accordance with the practice in the House of Commons, while the Chief Commissioner has posted four policemen in uniform in the public gallery. I have carefully studied the large number of orders issued to the police by the Chief Commissioner, and I have no hesitation in saying that, taken as a whole, they seek to substitute the authority of the Government for the authority of the Chair in the whole Assembly sector including the galleries.

In these circumstances, I have no other course open but to direct that all the galleries except the Press gallery, be forthwith cleared and closed, and that no further passes be issued to strangers until further orders. I hope the authorities concerned will in the meantime reconsider their position, and I will also consider what further steps I should take to vindicate the authority of the Chair.

I express my regret to those who might be inconvenienced by this order.

The Honourable Sir James Crerar (Home Member): Sir,

Mr. President: Orders must be carried out first.

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: I request you, Sir, to give me an opportunity to make some observations on the statement you have just made.

Mr. President: Orders must be carried out first.

(All the galleries, except the Press Gallery, were then cleared.)

Dr. A. Suhrawardy (Burdwan and Presidency Divisions: Muhammadan Rural): Sir, may I inquire whether your order applies also to the Members of the Council of State, who are entitled to come without passes?

Mr. President: Yes.

Members desiring to take their seats

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: Sir, may I with all respect ask to be allowed to make some observations?

Mr. President: Will the Honourable Member kindly resume his seat? With regard to what does he wish to make his observations?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: With regard to the statement which you, Sir, have just made.

Mr. President: I have passed my order and it cannot be questioned. Gentlemen desiring to take their seats will come to the table and make the oath or affirmation in the manner prescribed.

Mr. R. S. Sarma (Bengal: Nominated Non-Official): On a point of order. Is it your ruling, Mr. President, that the Members of this House should be denied the opportunity of knowing the views of the Honourable the Leader of the House, not on the order that you yourself have been pleased to say that you had already passed but on the circumstances leading to that order, especially in view of the fact that his name had been frequently mentioned in your ruling and he presided over the Watch and Ward Committee?

Mr. President: No point of order arises.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

PROSCRIPTION OF THE BOOK "MOTHER INDIA."

1. Mr. Mukhtar Singh (on behalf of Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava): (a) Are Government aware that the United States of America have proscribed "Uncle Sham" by Mr. Gauba, written by way of reply to "Mother India" by Miss Mayo?

(b) Do the Government of India propose to proscribe "Mother India"? If not, why not?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: (a) No. My information is that the book is admitted by the United States Customs and is on sale in New York.

(b) Does not arise.

Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: Have the Government of India by this time read this book of Miss Mayo thoroughly?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: I have no doubt that many individual Members of the Government of India have read the book.

Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: Does the Honourable Member find objection to portions of the book or no?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: I think that the Honourable Member is asking for an expression of opinion.

Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: I ask not for an opinion but for information. Has the Honourable Member, by reading that book, come to know that it is a book fit to be proscribed?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: I do not think that the Honourable Member has successfully discriminated between information and opinion.

Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: I would request the Honourable President to give me a ruling on this, whether I am asking for an opinion or for information. I do not want the opinion of the Government of India, but I want to know whether, on the reading of the book, it appears to the Government of India that the book is objectionable or not. I ask it from that point of view.

(No answer was given.)

THE LAW OF BRIBERY.

2. Mr. M. S. Aney: (a) Has the attention of the Government of India been invited by the Government of Madras, as desired by the Chief Justice of the Madras High Court, to the observations made by him regarding the unsatisfactory nature of the present law of bribery, as laid down in section 161 of the Indian Penal Code, in Venkatrama Naidu versus Emperor in Cr. Revision No. 921 of 1928 and Cr. Revision, petition No. 762 of 1928, decided on 9th April, 1929, and reported in All-India Reporter, 1929 Madras 756?

(b) If so, when and with what effect?

(c) Do Government propose to undertake any legislation to amend the Indian Penal Code for the purpose of penalising the conduct—

(i) of a person who offers a bribe to any public servant, even when that public servant did not accept the same or indignantly refused to have anything to do in relation to it;

(ii) of a public servant who accepts the bribe for an object in regard to which he is functus officio?

(d) Do Government propose to undertake any legislation, either by amending the Indian Penal Code or in such other manner as the Government deem proper, in order to give effect to the following observations of Coutts Trotter, C. J., in the same case:

"It is time that fresh legislation were introduced into the Code to make these most dangerous offences of giving or taking bribes punishable in much wider terms than are contained in the Code at present. Moreover, there is no provision for the bribing of anybody except a public official, and no provision at all corresponding to what is known in England as Fry's Act?"

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: (a) Yes.

(b), (c) and (d). The matter was brought to the notice of Government in April 1929, and they have noted the amendments for consideration when the Indian Penal Code next comes under general revision.

Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: Is the Honourable Member aware that under section 161 read with section 109 of the Indian Penal Code, the offerer of the bribe can be prosecuted?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: The Honourable Member is, I think, raising a point of law. I have no doubt that with his knowledge of law, he is perfectly capable of putting his own construction.

Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: This was a preliminary question to my putting another question, and that is whether the Government have been using, against the persons who offer bribes, section 161 read with section 109?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: I must have notice of that question. I cannot undertake, without examination, to make any definite statement as to the action that has been taken in the circumstances suggested by the Honourable Member.

RAILWAY CONFERENCE SPEECHES.

3. Sir Darcy Lindsay (on behalf of Mr. E. F. Sykes): Will Government be good enough to place in the Library of the House, or otherwise make accessible to Members, copies of the speeches delivered at the Railway Conference at Simla in October, 1929, by the Honourable the Commerce Member and the Chief Commissioner for Railways?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: Copies of the speeches referred to have been placed in the Library of the House.

by the Inquiry Clerk at Howrah station, or by the Booking Clerk of the City Booking Offices in consultation by telephone with the Chief Operating Superintendent's Office.

(b) So far as I am aware, the answer is in the negative.

(c) Government understand that the arrangement referred to in item (a) above has worked quite satisfactorily, and in the circumstances they do not propose to take any action.

AMALGAMATION OF THE OUDH AND ROHILKHAND RAILWAY WITH THE EAST INDIAN RAILWAY.

9. Sir Darcy Lindsay (on behalf of Mr. E. F. Sykes): Will Government please say with what objects the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway was amalgamated with the East Indian Railway? To what extent have they been attained? Did the amalgamation result in any increase in earnings or reduction of working expenses?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: I am sending the Honourable Member a copy of the Report recommending the amalgamation, from which he will be able to ascertain the objects aimed at. The Railway Board consider that the objects have been, in a large measure, secured.

As regards earnings, numerous factors of varying degrees of importance contribute to the fluctuations in the earnings of a railway system, and it is not practicable to ascertain the extent to which the amalgamation of the two systems affected the gross earnings.

As regards working expenses, the reply is in the affirmative.

NAMES OF ROADS IN NEW DELHI.

10. Mr. A. H. Ghuznavi: (a) Are Government aware that pedestrians in New Delhi, particularly visitors, are often lost in a maze for want of means of identifying the roads except at the crossings and at the two ends?

(b) In view of the fact that almost all the roads stretch far away and that the crossings are few and far between, have Government considered the question of the desirability of inscribing, both in English and in the vernacular, the names of the roads on the street lamps at suitable intervals?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: (a) Government are not aware that any such difficulties have been experienced.

APPOINTMENT OF AN INDIAN TRADE COMMISSIONER AT MOSCOW.

11. Mr. B. Das: Do Government intend to appoint an Indian Trade Commissioner or Consul at Moscow to look into the special interests of Indian trade and commerce?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: No, Sir.

Mr. B. Das: Do I take it that in the opinion of the Honourable Member, the volume of trade between India and Russia is not sufficient to justify the establishment of a Trade Commissioner's office in Russia?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: No, Sir, I do not think the Honourable Member would be justified in drawing that inference. We have at present no Trade Commissioners anywhere except in London, although we contemplate the appointment of Trade Commissioners in several places. The position at present is that we are only starting our programme of the appointment of Trade Commissionerships, and the question of appointing a Trade Commissioner at Moscow does not really arise.

Mr. B. Das: Has not England got a Consular Official at Moscow?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: I presume there is a British Consul at Moscow. So far as I am aware, India has no Consular Office in Russia.

FARES CHARGED ON STATE RAILWAYS.

12. Sir Darcy Lindsay (on behalf of Mr. E. F. Sykes): (a) Will Government be pleased to state whether the current rates and fares charged on State Railways represent the amount which the traffic can bear?

(b) If the answer to part (a) is in the negative, have Government estimated how much additional net revenue it would be possible to raise from these railways?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: (a) Government are not prepared to state that a higher net revenue could not be secured if the freight rates on certain commodities or the fares of certain classes of passengers were raised.

PROHIBITION OF OPIUM-SMOKING.

13. The Revd. J. C. Chatterjee: (a) With reference to my starred question No. 472, regarding the prohibition of opium smoking in the provinces, and the reply given to it by the Honourable the Finance Member on the 16th September, 1929, will Government be pleased to state if the report from the Bombay Government has now been received?

(b) If the answer to part (a) be in the negative, have Government reminded the Bombay Government of the necessity of expediting their report?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: (a) and (b). The Government of India have ascertained from the Government of Bombay that the report may probably be expected in February.

CONFERENCE ON OPIUM.

14. The Revd. J. C. Chatterjee: (a) With reference to the Honourable the Finance Member's statement at page 870 of the Legislative Assembly Debates of the 16th September, 1929, that it was high time that the Conference on Opium was called, have Government fixed the date and the composition of the proposed Conference?

(b) Have Government circularised Local Governments, asking them to prepare for such a Conference as early as possible?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: (a) and (b). The Government of India have invited Local Governments to send representatives to a conference to be held in Simla in the first week of May next. Their replies are awaited.

REFUSAL OF A PASSPORT TO INDIA TO MR. SAKLATVALA.

15. Mr. Ram Narayan Singh: (a) Is it a fact that Mr. Saklatvala has been refused a passport by the Secretary of State for India to come over to this country to attend the session of the Indian National Congress at Lahore?

(b) Did any correspondence on the above subject pass between the Government of India and the Secretary of State for India before the refusal referred to above; and if so, will the Government be pleased to lay on the table the said correspondence?

(c) Are Government prepared to inquire from the Secretary of State for India as to the reasons for the refusal of the passport?

(d) Are Government aware of the fact that, as a result of the said refusal, a storm of indignation and discontent has passed throughout the length and breadth of this country?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: (a) The fact appears to be as stated.

CORRESPONDENCE REGARDING DELHI MANIFESTO OF INDIAN LEADERS.

16. Mr. Ram Narayan Singh: (a) Has the attention of Government been drawn to (1) a joint manifesto called the Delhi Manifesto of the Indian leaders, issued as a result of the recent Viceregal announcement regarding the ultimate political goal of India, and also to (2) the debate in the British Parliament on the same announcement?

(b) Has any correspondence passed between the Government of India and the Secretary of State for India on the said Delhi Manifesto, and if so, will the Government be pleased to lay on the table the said correspondence?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: (a) Yes.

(b) Government are not in a position to lay any papers on the table.

AMNESTY FOR POLITICAL PRISONERS.

17. Mr. Ram Narayan Singh: (a) Will Government be pleased to state whether they are really considering the question of amnesty, and if so, has any correspondence passed between them and the Home Government on the same subject?

(b) If the answer to the second part of part (a) is in the affirmative, will Government be pleased to lay on the table the same correspondence?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: (a) Under the conditions at present prevailing, it is not practicable for Government to consider such questions.

WITHDRAWAL OF PROTECTION FROM THE TINPLATE INDUSTRY.

18. Mr. Ram Narayan Singh: Will Government be pleased to state whether they have come to any decision on the recommendations contained in the Resolution adopted by the Legislative Assembly on Tuesday, the 24th September, 1929, regarding the withdrawal of protection from the tinplate industry in this country, and if so what is that decision?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: Government do not propose to take any action on the Resolution.

DUTCH AIR MAIL SERVICE TO INDIA.

19. Dr. B. S. Moonje (on behalf of Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh): (a) Will Government kindly state if it is a fact that a Dutch air mail service has been established to bring mails and passengers from Europe to India? If so, who owns the company, and under whose authority has such a foreign service been inaugurated?

(b) Since when has this service been started, and what are the stations to which mails are delivered by air through this agency?

(c) What facilities have been extended to this Dutch air mail service, and why?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: (a) No Dutch air mail service has been established for the purpose described by the Honourable Member. With the consent of His Majesty's Government and the Government of India, a Dutch air transport company is carrying out a series of trial flights between Holland and the Dutch East Indies with the ultimate object of establishing a regular air mail service.

(b) There is, as explained already, no regular service. On a few occasions small quantities of air mail correspondence have been carried by air and delivered to the Indian Posts and Telegraphs Department at Karachi, Jodhpur, Allahabad, Calcutta, Akyab and Rangoon on the east and west bound flights of the aeroplanes. There are no regular receipts of mails at any of these places by each flight. The receipts are intermittent. These flights are not being utilised by the Indian Posts and Telegraphs Department either for the inland transport of air mails or for air mails for destinations abroad.

(c) No special facilities are being afforded to the Dutch aeroplanes. They are allowed the use of the civil aerodromes on the route across India but will be called upon to pay the landing and housing charges for the time being in force.

AIR MAIL SERVICE BETWEEN KARACHI AND DELHI.

20. Dr. B. S. Moonje (on behalf of Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh): How far has the project of an air mail service between Karachi and Delhi progressed?

(b) Is it intended to hand over this service to an Indian company, or to be run by the Government?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: (a) The air mail service between Karachi and Delhi was inaugurated on the 30th December.

(b) This service is being operated as an Indian State Air Service with aircraft chartered from Imperial Airways, Limited.

CONSTITUTION OF AN INDIAN AIR FORCE.

21. Dr. B. S. Moonje (on behalf of Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh): (a) Will Government be pleased to state the total number of Indians and Europeans under training in the Air Force College at Cranwell, the number of those who appeared at the examinations, and the number passed separately?

(b) What is the method of selecting candidates, and is any Indian associated with the Selection Board, if any?

(c) Has any Indian air force been constituted, or is it intended to create one? If so, when; and at what cost?

(d) Is it proposed to withdraw from India the Royal Air Force, on the creation of an Indian air force? If not, is it the intention that India should be saddled with the cost of both? If so, why?

(e) Is there any statutory or other bar to the employment of Indians in the Royal Air Force as officers? If so, why?

Mr. G. M. Young: (a) 104 British cadets are now under training at Cranwell. No Indian has yet passed into Cranwell. Those now under training at Cranwell are those who passed at the half-yearly Entrance Examinations in 1928 and 1929. I am afraid it is impossible to give statistics of the numbers who applied for Cranwell but did not pass at all these examinations, as many of those who appeared may have also competed for Sandhurst, Woolwich or the Navy. For instance, at the last examination held in November 1929, 11 Indians altogether applied for Cranwell, but only two put Cranwell as their first choice.

(b) Indian candidates have to pass the Army and Air Force Entrance Examination held in India. The papers are set and examined by the Civil Service Commissioners in England. An Indian non-official gentleman is nominated by His Excellency the Viceroy as a member of the Interview Board in India which conducts the oral examination.

(c) The Honourable Member is referred to the reply given on the 2nd September last to part (b) of starred question No. 22. It is too early yet to calculate the cost of the proposed Indian Air Unit.

(d) It would be premature, as I am sure the Honourable Member will agree, to consider any reduction of the Royal Air Force until the new Indian Air unit has been raised, and has demonstrated its efficiency.

(e) The only bar to the appointment of Indians as Officers in the Royal Air Force is that the Royal Air Force is a British service. The object of founding an Indian Air unit is to build up an Indian service.

Dr. B. S. Moonje: Will the Honourable Member please say whether the boys who failed in the examinations failed in the interview or in the written examinations?

Mr. M. S. Aney: Did the boys who failed, fail in the written test or at the interview?

Mr. G. M. Young: Does my Honourable friend refer to the two candidates who made Cranwell their first choice?

Mr. M. S. Aney: Yes.

Mr. G. M. Young: I must ask for notice of that question.

CONSTRUCTION OF A RAILWAY BRIDGE OVER THE GANGES AT MOKAMEH GHAT.

22. Dr. B. S. Moonje (on behalf of Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh): (a) How far has the project of making a railway bridge over the Ganges at Mokameh Ghat in Bihar progressed?

(b) Are Government aware that, for want of a bridge at Mokameh Ghat coal, grain, piece-goods, glass, and other commodities are subject to great delay and damage in transit?

(c) Do Government propose to explore the possibility of constructing a bridge at Mokameh Ghat?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: (a) No definite proposals for a bridge over the Ganges at Mokameh Ghat have been drawn up yet.

(b) Government are aware that railway traffic takes longer to cross the Ganges at Mokameh Ghat by the ferry service than it would, if a railway bridge existed. But the chief cause of delay and of any damage to goods which may occur, is the transshipment which is necessary on account of the change of gauge at this point, and this would not be avoided by the provision of a bridge.

(c) The Railway Board will not overlook the possibility that at some future date a bridge at Mokameh Ghat may be required; but the prospect of funds being available for such a project is not at present such as to justify the preparation of a definite scheme.

APPOINTMENT OF INDIAN STATION MASTERS ON THE GREAT INDIAN PENINSULA RAILWAY.

23. Dr. B. S. Moonje (on behalf of Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh): Will Government be pleased to state how many Indians have been appointed A Grade Station Masters, and A Grade Assistant Station Masters on the Great Indian Peninsula Railway? If none has so far been appointed, why?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: One Indian was appointed in 1924. He is now working as a Yard Controller.

The Agent explains that the reason why Indians have not hitherto been appointed is that those who took up the lower posts, such as guards, from which promotions are made, had not the educational qualifications required for A Grade Station Masters and Assistant Station Masters. Recently Indians with the necessary educational qualifications have been recruited as guards, and this will lead to suitable men being available to be made A Grade Station Masters and A Grade Assistant Station Masters.

Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: Is it a fact that classes A, B and C of guards and station masters have been abolished?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: No, Sir.

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunru: I understood the Honourable Member to say that guards of the A class were men who had been promoted thereto from the lower classes; I want to know whether there are instances on record where direct appointments have been made to the A class of guards.

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: I am afraid I shall have to ask for notice, in order to discuss what the present position is with regard to guards. The question deals not with guards but with A grade station masters and assistant station masters who are taken from guards.

APPOINTMENT OF AN INDIAN AS CHIEF ASSISTANT PUBLICITY OFFICER, STATE RAILWAYS.

24. *Dr. B. S. Moonje (on behalf of Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh): (a) Is it a fact that the post of Chief Assistant Publicity Officer, State Railways, on Rs. 1,600 or so, is vacant? How long has this post been vacant? Do Government propose to advertise for it?

(b) How many gazetted officers are there in the office of the Publicity Officer, State Railways; and what are their names?

(c) Have Government considered the advisability of filling this post of Chief Assistant Publicity Officer, State Railways, by an Indian?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: (a) There is no such post, (c) therefore does not arise.

(b) Seven: Major F. H. Budden, Messrs. G. W. Dawson, G. Tait, F. M. Khan, F. W. Rose, Lieut. Commander H. A. Pelham and Mr. W. DeVerinne.

REFUSAL OF A PASSPORT TO INDIA TO MR. SAKLATVALA.

30. *Dr. B. S. Moonje (on behalf of Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh): Has a passport been refused to Mr. S. Saklatvala to visit India and attend the Indian National Congress? If so, why?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: As regards the first part of the question, I understand that this is the fact.

As regards the second part, there has been no recent correspondence between the Secretary of State and the Government of India on the subject; but it is to be inferred that the passport authorities were satisfied that it would not be in the public interest to grant the passport.

CASES UNDER SECTION 124-A OF THE INDIAN PENAL CODE.

31. *Dr. B. S. Moonje (on behalf of Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh): Will Government kindly state how many cases under section 124-A. of the Indian Penal Code have been instituted, since the statement of His Excellency the Viceroy was made on the 1st November, up to date?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: According to the reports received by the Government of India, the number of such cases is eight.

MAKING THE CHILD MARRIAGE RESTRAINT ACT KNOWN.

32. *Dr. B. S. Moonje (on behalf of Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh): Will Government kindly state what steps they have taken, in the form of propaganda, or otherwise, to bring to the notice of the people, especially in the villages, the provisions of the Child Marriage Restraint Act; and are they aware that misconceptions as to the true scope of the Act prevail in certain quarters?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: The Government of India have asked the Local Governments to take suitable steps to make the provisions of the Act widely known.

Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: Does the Honourable Member know what are those special efforts that are being made to make this public?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: That has been left to the discretion of the Local Governments.

Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: May I understand that the Honourable Member does not know if any scheme has been framed or any rules framed in regard to this matter?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: The Local Governments have received instructions in the matter and I have no doubt that they have acted upon them.

MILITARY EXPENDITURE OF INDIA.

33. *Dr. B. S. Moonje (on behalf of Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh): Will Government kindly state if and how far the question of international disarmament will lessen the military expenditure of India; and has this subject been under correspondence with the India Office, or His Majesty's Government?

Mr. G. M. Young: It is impossible to estimate the effect of the question of international disarmament on the military expenditure of India, or indeed of any country, until the question itself has been solved by international agreement, and the conditions and extent of the disarmament, if any, are known. It would therefore be premature at present to discuss the above effect with His Majesty's Government, and the answer to the second part of the question is consequently in the negative.

EFFECT OF INCREASED IMPORT DUTY ON YARN.

34. *Mr. C. Duraiswamy Aiyangar: (a) Will Government be pleased to state what additional income has been derived by the increase of the import duty on yarn in 1927?

(b) Will Government be pleased to state if Government allotted any portion of that amount for the benefit of handloom weavers?

(c) Have Government made any inquiries as to the effect of the enhanced duty on yarn on the handloom weavers?

(d) Will Government be pleased to state to what extent the spinning mills were benefited by the enhancement?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: (a) The additional revenue obtained is estimated at about 15 lakhs.

(b) No.

(c) The Government of India have made two inquiries. A copy of the replies received from the Local Governments to the first inquiry has already been placed in the Library. Replies from only two Local Governments have so far been received to the second inquiry which was made in October last, and these are also being placed in the Library.

(d) The minimum specific duty on cotton yarn was intended to meet Japanese competition at the point where that competition was most injurious to the Indian cotton spinning industry, namely, in yarns of 31s.

to 40s. The extent to which the mills in India have benefited by this duty may be judged from the statement of imports into and production in India of yarn of these counts which I lay on the table.

PROPOSED METRE GAUGE RAILWAY FROM TIRUPATI EAST TO MADRAS.

35. Mr. C. Duraiswamy Aiyangar: Will Government be pleased to state whether the proposal to make Tirupati East (Madras and Southern Mahratta Railway) a junction and connect it with Madras by a metre gauge is still under consideration or has it been dropped?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: The proposal for a connection between Madras and Renigunta or Tirupati East has not been finally dropped, but it is considered that the link could be more suitably constructed on the broad gauge.

RAILWAY TO CHIRTANOOR.

36. Mr. C. Duraiswamy Aiyangar: Have Government any idea of diverting the line between Renigunta Junction and Tirupati East so as to touch the village of Chirtanoor—a place of pilgrimage? If so, when will that proposal be given effect to?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: A survey for the realignment of the line between Renigunta and Tirupati East so as to touch the village of Chirtanoor has been sanctioned and the report is awaited.

BOOKING OFFICE FOR METRE GAUGE RAILWAY BETWEEN VILLUPURAM AND GUDUR.

37. Mr. C. Duraiswamy Aiyangar: (a) Are Government aware that the present location of the booking office on a platform where the trains do not arrive is causing a good deal of hardship to those passengers who arrive by the trains on the metre gauge section between Villupuram and Gudur?

(b) Will Government be pleased to state the reasons for the shifting of the booking office from the original place?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: If the Honourable Member will let me know to what station he is referring, I will obtain for him the information he wants. The South Indian Railway authorities, who were addressed, are unable to verify the station from the question.

RECOMMENDATIONS OF THE CIVIL JUSTICE COMMITTEE.

38. Mr. C. Duraiswamy Aiyangar: Will Government be pleased to state how many recommendations of the Civil Justice Committee have been given effect to and how many have been dropped?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: In the case of the recommendations of the Committee in which action was directly within the competence of the Government of India, 37 recommendations have been given effect to or are under consideration and 72 have not been proceeded with. These figures do not include many recommendations in which action was within the competence of the Local Governments or High Courts or the presiding officers of courts.

PROTESTS AGAINST THE CHILD MARRIAGE RESTRAINT ACT.

40. Mr. C. Duraiswamy Aiyangar: (a) Have Government been in touch with the number of protests against the Child Marriage Act which have been made by the Hindus as well as the Muhammadans from various centres?

(b) Do Government propose to introduce any measure in order to modify the rigour of the Act by suitable exceptions being provided for?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: (a) Yes.

(b) Government have not in contemplation any such measure.

CONSTRUCTION OF A RAILWAY TO BADRI NARAYAN.

41. Mr. C. Duraiswamy Aiyangar: (a) Are Government aware that the shrine of Badri Narayan in the Himalayas is a place of pilgrimage for the Hindus all over India?

(b) Have Government any idea of connecting that shrine from Hrishikesh or otherwise by railway communication?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: (a) Yes, (Badri Nath).

(b) There has been an investigation of a line from Rikbhikesh to Karanprayag which is on the pilgrim route to Badrinath, but it showed that the line would be unremunerative.

UTILIZATION OF KHADDAR FOR THE CLOTHING OF RAILWAY SUBORDINATES.

42. Mr. C. Duraiswamy Aiyangar: (a) Will Government be pleased to state the total value of clothing supplied per year by the Railway Companies to their subordinates?

(b) What is the extent to which Indian mill cloths or other Indian-made cloth is supplied by the contractors?

(c) Is it a fact that the contractors are asked not to supply khaddar cloth?

(d) Are Government prepared to order that as far as it may be available, khaddar alone must be supplied?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: (a) The approximate value of clothing supplied per year by the Class I Railway Companies excluding the Bengal Nagpur Railway to their subordinates amounts to Rs. 5,88,000.

(b) With the exception of the Assam Bengal Railway, the railways referred to in part (a) report that Indian mill cloth or other Indian made cloth form more than 86 per cent. of total supply.

The Bombay, Baroda and Central India Railway report that all cloth is from Indian mills, except blue serge and waterproofs.

(c) No.

(d) Government do not propose to interfere in the arrangements made by Railway Companies for providing uniforms for their employees unless it can be shown that unnecessary expenditure is being incurred.

TRAIN FROM PAKALA TO DHARAMAVARAM STATIONS.

44. Mr. C. Duraiswamy Aiyangar: (a) Will Government be pleased to state the distance between Pakala and Dharmavaram stations (Madras and Southern Mahratta Railway), and the time taken by the trains to go from one to the other?

(b) Is it not possible to run at least one train to and fro per day so as to cover the distance in at least five hours?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: (a) The distance between Pakala and Dharmavaram stations is 141½ miles.

The time taken to travel over this length by passenger trains is from 9 hours 5 minutes to 9 hours 50 minutes; and by mixed trains from 11 hours 20 minutes to 13 hours 25 minutes.

(b) It is not possible to run one train in each direction to cover the distance in 5 hours, as there are heavy gradients on this metre gauge section. The maximum permissible speed on this section is only 30 miles per hour.

REMISSION OF RENT DUE FROM RYOTS IN YEARS OF FAMINE.

45. Mr. V. V. Jogiah: (a) Are Government aware that the Famine Commission and the Decentralization Commission recommended the remission and suspension of rent to be paid by ryots to landholders in years of famine and failure of crop, and the former Commission laid down at pages 91 and 92 of its Report of 1901, definite recommendations on the subject?

(b) Are Government also aware that the Government of Madras drafted clause 124 of the Madras Estates Land Bill of 1905 on the lines of the said recommendations?

(c) Are Government aware that a non-official Member of the Madras Legislative Council, Mr. Biswanath Dass, introduced a Bill further to amend the Estates Land Act of 1908 on the lines of clause 124, above-mentioned, and that the Government of Madras intend to oppose the said Bill?

(d) Are Government aware that His Excellency the Governor General accorded sanction to the said Bill in his letter dated the 24th of November 1928, omitting sub-clause (5) of clause 2 of the Bill?

(e) Are Government prepared to place on the table the correspondence that passed between the Government of India and the Government of Madras on the subject of this Bill?

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter: (a) The Indian Famine Commission of 1901, in paragraph 268 of their Report, laid emphasis on the importance of suspensions and remissions of land revenue and rent. The Royal Commission on Decentralisation made proposals only in respect of suspensions and remissions of land revenue with the object of giving freer discretion to Commissioners and Collectors.

(b) The Government of India are not aware whether the clause to which the Honourable Member refers, namely clause 124 of the Bill as amended by the Select Committee, was inspired by the recommendation of the Indian Famine Commission referred to in the reply to part (a).

(c) The answer to the first part is in the affirmative. The Government of India have no information as regards the second part.

(d) Sub-section (v) of the section which clause 2 proposed to insert in the principal Act as section 29A required the previous sanction of the Governor under section 80C of the Government of India Act and the necessary sanction had been refused by His Excellency the Governor before the Bill was submitted for the previous sanction of the Governor General under section 80A(3). The Governor General's sanction was conveyed in a letter from the Legislative Department dated the 7th November, 1928.

PROMOTION OF MR. H. L. KEELAN ON THE EASTERN BENGAL RAILWAY.

46. Mr. V. V. Jogiah: 1. Will Government be pleased to state (a) if it is a fact that one Mr. H. L. Keelan, while employed in the North Western Railway as carriage examiner at Ghaziabad, was dismissed from service for making several unauthorised payments to the staff under him, and (b) whether, in spite of his dismissal from the North Western Railway, he was appointed as train examiner on the Eastern Bengal Railway on Rs. 150 per mensem and has been promoted to the post of head train examiner at Naihati on Rs. 375 per mensem within a very short time, superseding the claims of many senior Indian train examiners?

2. If the replies to items (a) and (b) of part 1 above be in the affirmative, will Government be pleased to state under what law a man dismissed from a State Railway for misconduct, has been appointed in another State Railway, and what are his special qualifications, for which he has got such rapid promotion in preference to senior Indians?

3. If the replies to items (a) and (b) of part 1 above are in the negative, will Government be pleased to state the reason for the man's dismissal from the North Western Railway?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: 1 (a) and 3. Mr. Keelan, who was working as Head Neutral Train Examiner at Ghaziabad on Rs. 500 per mensem, was dismissed in August 1927 by the Director of Wagon Interchange because he was unable satisfactorily to explain certain unauthorised payments made by him. The greater portion of the sum involved was recovered from him at the time under the orders of the Director of Wagon Interchange.

1(b). The Eastern Bengal Railway, not having a suitable man either Indian or European to fill a post of Head Train Examiner shortly to become vacant, appointed Mr. Keelan in July 1928 as Train Examiner on probation, on a salary of Rs. 250 per mensem with a view to promoting him to the post of Head Train Examiner should he prove satisfactory.

The Eastern Bengal Railway Administration were fully aware of the circumstances of Mr. Keelan's dismissal, and before appointing him, they made a reference to the Director of Wagon Interchange. That officer reported that he was a very smart Train Examiner, and a steady man and that he had no objection to his being given employment on the Eastern Bengal Railway. He was therefore appointed, and in August 1928 was promoted to act as Head Train Examiner. He has since been confirmed in this post.

2. It is not usual for an employee dismissed by one railway to be re-appointed to another railway, but in this particular case the Railway Administration, taking all circumstances into consideration, together with his history previous to his dismissal, his experience of interchange work, and the lack of suitable men on their own railway, decided to appoint him on probation. He has proved himself to be satisfactory, fully qualified and well above the average.

GRANT OF AN ALLOWANCE TO THE RAILWAY STAFF AT SILIGURI STATION.

47. Mr. V. V. Jogiah: (a) Will Government be pleased to state whether it is a fact that the Eastern Bengal Railway Indian Employees' Association represented to the Agent of that Railway to grant a Terai allowance to the staff posted at Siliguri Station, such as is granted to the staff of other Departments of the Government of Bengal posted at Siliguri to compensate them for the unhealthiness of the locality and expense of living at that station, and that the Agent has refused to grant any compensatory allowance but proposed to improve the sanitary conditions of the station instead?

(b) What steps have the Eastern Bengal Railway Authorities taken to improve the sanitary condition of the station and how long will it take to make the station healthy?

(c) If the reply to part (a) be in the affirmative, will Government be pleased to state why the Eastern Bengal Railway staff should not be given the compensatory allowance, till such time as the sanitary condition of the station is not improved, and Terai allowance at present paid to the staff of the Bengal Government employed at that station, is withdrawn?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: (a) Yes.

(b) A good deal has been done already towards improving the drainage by the filling up of low lying land and by connecting borrow pits and stagnant pools with running streams. The running rooms have been provided with mosquito nets and electric fans: a dispensary has been opened and an anti-malarial campaign has been inaugurated.

(c) As has been explained, action has already been taken to improve the sanitary condition of the station.

QUARTERS FOR RAILWAY STAFF ON THE EASTERN BENGAL RAILWAY.

48. Mr. V. V. Jogiah: (a) Will Government be pleased to state if it is a fact that, owing to financial stringency, the Eastern Bengal Railway has not yet been able to provide a large number of staff with quarters?

(b) Will Government be also pleased to state if at certain centres of the Eastern Bengal Railway, the Administration has not provided all the staff with quarters, on the plea that quarters are not available there, whereas the managing staff and other employees of the refreshment room contractors, Messrs. D. Sorabjee and Co., have been provided with railway quarters at these centres?

(c) If the replies to parts (a) and (b) are in the affirmative, will Government be pleased to place on the table a statement showing the names of these centres where such quarters have been provided, and the number of quarters allotted, with their respective area and the amount of rent collected for each quarter?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: (a) At certain centres of the Eastern Bengal Railway it has not yet been possible to provide all staff with quarters.

(b) One of the conditions of the agreement executed between the Secretary of State for India and Messrs. D. Sorabjee and Co. for the supply and sale of refreshments at stations and in restaurant cars on the Eastern Bengal Railway is that the railway should provide habitable and sanitary quarters for the Purveyors' staff at stations other than Calcutta. The reason for inserting this condition to the agreement is that, in the interests of the travelling public, it is desirable that refreshment room staff should be on railway premises.

(c) A statement showing the names of stations where such quarters are provided under this agreement, together with their number, area, and the amount of rent collected respectively, is laid on the table. The rents in some cases are too low and are being reviewed.

APPOINTMENT OF ASSISTANT TRAFFIC SUPERINTENDENTS ON THE EASTERN BENGAL RAILWAY.

49. *Mr. V. V. Jogiah: (a) Will Government be pleased to state if it is a fact that European and Anglo-Indian subordinates are being promoted to the rank of Assistant Traffic Superintendents in the Eastern Bengal Railway, who have no technical qualifications as Station Masters, Traffic or Transportation Inspectors?

(b) Will Government be also pleased to state if it is a fact that the names of European or Anglo-Indian subordinates recommended by the District Traffic Superintendents for promotion to the post of Assistant Traffic Superintendent are at once approved by the authorities and promoted to the posts of Assistant Traffic Superintendents without testing their technical knowledge?

(c) Will Government also be pleased to state why senior Traffic or Transportation Inspectors or senior Indian Station Masters who possess the necessary technical qualifications and who are still holding responsible posts are not promoted to the posts of Assistant Traffic Superintendents in preference to men not possessing such qualifications?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: (a) No; only suitably qualified persons are promoted.

(c) Permanent promotions to the rank of Assistant Traffic Superintendents are made by the Railway Board, and acting promotions are made by the Agent of the Railway; both promotions are made by strict selection of the most suitably qualified subordinates.

QUARTERS FOR RAILWAY STAFF AT SEALDAH.

50. *Mr. V. V. Jogiah: (a) With reference to Government's reply to part (b) of my starred question No. 521, in the Legislative Assembly on the 11th February, 1929, are Government aware whether it is a fact that rents of quarters provided by private enterprise at or near Sealdah (Eastern Bengal Railway), are so exorbitant that many Indian guards, being unable to pay such exorbitant rates have been compelled to hire quarters some two or four miles away from the station?

(b) Have Government considered the question of providing accommodation for this class of staff as near as possible to the Sealdah Station?

(c) If the replies to parts (a) and (b) above are in the affirmative, will Government be pleased to state, what steps they propose to take in the matter and when?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: (a), (b) and (c). From inquiries made, it has been ascertained that non-railway quarters are to be obtained in the vicinity of Sealdah at a rental of about Rs. 20 per mensem per room. It is realised that on men with families on a low rate of pay these rents bear heavily. To improve the position, a progressive programme for the building of quarters for Indian guards at Sealdah has recently been sanctioned, and under this programme a special effort will be made to build quarters so that, by the end of the next financial year, about 50 per cent of the Indian guards will be provided with quarters.

ARTICLE IN "THE INDIAN RAILWAYS" REGARDING EXCESS FARE TICKETS.

51. *Mr. V. V. Jogiah: (a) Has the attention of Government been drawn to an article headed "Hotch-potch Kings Hundy-dundy" appearing at page 16 of the monthly journal The Indian Railways in its issue of May and June, 1929?

(b) If the reply to part (a) be in the affirmative, will Government be pleased to state if the facts, as stated therein, are true, and will Government be pleased to lay on the table a copy of the Audit Inspection Report on the subject and state whether the amounts involved in the missing excess fare ticket books have been credited to the railway? If not, what action do the Government propose to take in the matter?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: (a) Yes: by the Honourable Member.

QUARTERS FOR THE STATION STAFF AT JHIKERGACHA.

52. Mr. V. V. Jogiah: (a) Has the attention of Government been drawn to an article headed "Quarters for the Station Staff at Jhikergacha" appearing at page 5 of the Eastern Bengal Railway Labour Review for July, 1929, and if so, whether the facts stated therein are true?

(b) If the reply to part (a) be in the affirmative, will Government be pleased to state if they propose to provide quarters for the Station Staff at that station? If not, why not?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: (a) and (b). Government have seen the paragraph mentioned. It is true that no quarters have been constructed for station staff at Jhikergacha Ghat station. The reason is that quarters exist for this staff at the old station, which is less than a mile away.

GRANT OF AN ALLOWANCE TO THE SUBORDINATE STAFF OF THE EASTERN BENGAL RAILWAY AT CALCUTTA.

53. Mr. V. V. Jogiah: Will Government be pleased to state whether on account of the dearness of living at Calcutta and its suburbs it is proposed to sanction a local allowance to all subordinate and inferior staff of the Eastern Bengal Railway working at Calcutta? If not, why not?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: I would invite the Honourable Member's attention to my reply to question No. 234 asked in the Legislative Assembly by Mr. Amar Nath Dutt on the 4th September, 1928, and to the information supplied to him in Railway Board's letter No. 6988-E., dated 9th November, 1928, which is in the Library of the House. They give information on the subject of the grant of compensatory allowances to employees of the Eastern Bengal Railway stationed at Calcutta.

2. I would add that the question of the suitability of the rates of pay of certain classes of the lower paid establishments of the Eastern Bengal Railway is at present under examination.

ANTI-INDIAN AGITATION BY RETIRED OFFICIALS.

54. Mr. B. Das: (a) Will Government be pleased to state the number of Indians in the service of the Government of India who have been punished for taking part in anti-Government and anti-Indian agitations?

(b) Are there cases where pensions of Government officials have been stopped as such people took part in political activities against the Government?

(c) If the reply to part (b) is in the affirmative, will Government be pleased to state if the officers of the Imperial services come under similar scrutiny after they are pensioned off?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: (a) The information is not available and I do not consider I should be justified in making the elaborate inquiries which would be necessary in order to answer the Hon'ble Member's question. Personally, and so far as my Department is concerned, I am not aware of any such cases. It is, I need hardly say, an uncommon thing for a Government servant to take part in an anti-Government or any other agitation.

(b) and (c). The pension of Government servants may be withheld, withdrawn, or reduced, if the pensioner is guilty of grave misconduct, and activities directed to the subversion of Government or resistance to its authority would certainly be regarded as grave misconduct.

ANTI-INDIAN PROPAGANDA BY RETIRED OFFICIALS.

55. Mr. B. Das: (a) Have Government noticed the propaganda in the British Press especially in the Daily Mail by Indian pensioners such as Sir Michael O'Dwyer, Sir Reginald Craddock and others against the Government of India and the Indian people?

(b) Will Government be pleased to state if they have asked the Secretary of State to prosecute these anti-Indian agitators in England?

(c) Have they asked the Secretary of State for India to stop their pensions for deliberate propaganda against Indians?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: (a) I have seen references in the Press to some articles contributed by these gentlemen on the present political situation.

ANTI-INDIAN PROPAGANDA BY RETIRED OFFICIALS.

56. Mr. B. Das: Will Government be pleased to state if ex-Government servants drawing pensions are allowed to carry out propaganda against the declared policy of the Government of India? Does the same principle govern the conduct of subordinate officers recruited (a) by the Government of India, and (b) by the Secretary of State for India?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: A Government pensioner, by whatever authority appointed to Government service, is no longer subject to the Government Servants' Conduct Rules regulating such matters. Government, however, retain to themselves the right to reduce or withdraw a pension in cases of grave misconduct.

MAKING THE CHILD MARRIAGE RESTRAINT ACT KNOWN.

57. Mr. B. Das: (a) Will Government be pleased to state what instructions they issued to the Provincial Governments to promulgate the Sarda Act for restraint of child marriage from 1st April 1930?

(b) What steps have the Government of India taken to inform the people of remote villages under their own administration about the Sarda Act and its consequences?

(c) In how many languages have the Government of India so far translated the Sarda Act, and has it been distributed freely to the villagers, and if so when?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: (a) and (b). The Government of India have asked Local Governments and Administrations to take suitable steps to make the provisions of the Act widely known.

(c) The practice of the Government of India is to have Acts of the Indian Legislature translated into Urdu. Distribution and translation into other languages are dealt with by Local Governments and Administrations.

MAKING THE CHILD MARRIAGE RESTRAINT ACT KNOWN.

58. Mr. B. Das: Will Government be pleased to lay a statement on the table showing the activities of each Provincial Government (a) in translating the Sarda Act in the different written languages within the province and (b) the specific methods of propaganda to bring the Act within the knowledge of every body?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: As already stated, the Government of India have asked Local Governments to take suitable steps to make the provisions of the Act widely known. They do not contemplate calling for reports as to the action taken, and are therefore not in a position to supply the information desired by the Honourable Member.

INCREASED EXPENDITURE ANTICIPATED FOR ADMINISTERING THE CHILD MARRIAGE RESTRAINT ACT.

59. Mr. B. Das: (a) Will Government be pleased to state whether they have increased the budget grant under the head "Administration of Justice" in (1) the Delhi Province, (2) Ajmer-Merwara, (3) the North West Frontier Province, (4) Coorg and (5) Baluchistan, in anticipation of a large number of cases that will arise in consequence of the Sarda Act?

(b) If the answer to part (a) be in the affirmative, what will be the anticipated increment on this particular grant in each of the administered areas mentioned in part (a)?

(c) What are the number of cases that the Government of India expect to occur in these areas in the light of experience gathered from Indian States where the Child Marriage Restraint Act is already in practice?

(d) Will Government be pleased to state if they anticipate an increase of their judicial staff in the above mentioned administrative areas in consequence of the Sarda Act?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: (a) The reply is in the negative.

(c) Government are not in possession of data which would enable them to frame any estimate.

INCREASED EXPENDITURE ANTICIPATED FOR ADMINISTERING THE CHILD MARRIAGE RESTRAINT ACT.

60. Mr. B. Das: (a) Will Government be pleased to state whether the provinces anticipate an increase of expenditure under the head "Administration of Justice" in consequence of the Sarda Act?

(b) Has any of the Provincial Governments asked for any financial help from the Central Government on that ground or has any of the provincial Governments complained of the imposition of an additional financial burden due to the Sarda Act being placed on the Statute-book? If so, which are these provinces?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: (a) There is no reason to suppose so.

CHILD MARRIAGES IN ANTICIPATION OF THE CHILD MARRIAGE RESTRAINT ACT.

61. Mr. B. Das: (a) Are Government aware that there has been a large number of child marriages all over India during the last few months to avoid the penal clauses of the Sarda Act?

(b) Will Government be pleased to state the number of such child marriages amongst (i) Hindus and (ii) Muslims since the Sarda Act was placed on the Statute-book?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: (a) and (b). I have seen some reports in the Press to this effect, but as such marriages are not ordinarily registered, Government have no definite information.

ESTABLISHMENT OF A CIRCUIT COURT AT DELHI.

65. The Revd. J. C. Chatterjee: (a) Has the attention of Government been called to the great hardship caused to litigants from the Delhi Province and the neighbouring districts, in taking their appeals to the Lahore High Court and to the oft-repeated public demand for the establishment of a Circuit Bench of the High Court at Delhi?

(b) Do Government propose to take steps in the near future to establish a Circuit Bench of the High Court at Delhi?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: (a) and (b). The Honourable Member is referred to the answer given to Mr. Abdul Haye's question No. 421 on the subject on the 10th September 1929, and the answer by the late Sir Alexander Muddiman to Sir Hari Singh Gour's question in the Legislative Assembly on the 25th January 1926, which is published in Vol. VII—No. 3, of Assembly Debates, page 148. The matter has not again been brought before the Government of India.

UTILIZATION OF VICEREGAL ESTATE AND OTHER GOVERNMENT HOUSES IN OLD DELHI.

66. The Revd. J. C. Chatterjee: What use do Government propose to make of the Viceregal Estate in Old Delhi, as well as of Flagstaff House and of other Government Houses in Kingsway?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: The question of the disposal of the Viceregal Estate and Flagstaff House in old Delhi is under the consideration of Government. The other Government residences at Kingsway are being used by Government officials and are likely to be so used for many years to come.

The Revd. J. C. Chatterjee: Have Government received an application from the Delhi University for the use of the old Viceregal Lodge?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: I think, Sir, the answer to the question is in the affirmative, though I am not in a position to give precise information to my Honourable friend at the present moment, not having got the relevant papers with me.

The Revd. J. C. Chatterjee: Are Government aware that the Delhi University, owing to the delay in getting an answer to their application, are incurring heavy expenditure and are finding great difficulty in finding suitable accommodation for the University?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: There also I am quite prepared to take the information which my Honourable friend seeks to impart to me.

The Revd. J. C. Chatterjee: When are Government likely to make up their mind on this matter?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: My Honourable friend is no doubt aware that His Excellency the Viceroy entered into occupation of the Viceroy's House, New Delhi, quite recently.

The Revd. J. C. Chatterjee: Will Government state when the application from the Delhi University for the use of this building was received?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: I shall have to ask for notice of that question as I have not got the relevant papers with me.

Mr. B. Das: Are Government aware that the Viceregal Estate is built from money provided by the whole of India, and, as they did with Government buildings in Bengal, when they left Bengal, they should not part with Government buildings to particular institutions without consulting the Provincial Governments?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: I am not sure that Provincial Governments are concerned in this particular matter. But I have already said that the Government of India have not arrived yet at any decision in regard to the disposal of the particular building; and before they arrive at a decision, they will undoubtedly take into consideration all relevant factors.

QUARTERS FOR THE STAFF OF THE RAILWAY CLEARING ACCOUNTS OFFICE.

67. The Revd. J. C. Chatterjee: Referring to assurances previously given by Government, have they started building quarters for the staff of the Railway Clearing Accounts Office and if not, when do they propose to do so?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: Government have not yet started building quarters for the Railway Clearing Accounts Office staff, as they have not yet been able to obtain a suitable site at reasonable cost. The matter is, however, being further investigated.

REVENUE DERIVED FROM OPIUM.

70. The Revd. J. C. Chatterjee: (a) Will Government be pleased to state, what revenue is derived by them on "Excise Opium", i.e., on opium sold to Provincial Governments for consumption within the boundaries of India?

(b) Will Government be pleased to state what income is derived by the different Provincial Governments, through the sale of opium, in the shape of profits or by way of licence fees?

(c) Do Government still adhere to their policy regarding the internal consumption of opium, as set forth in their Resolution published in January 1926?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: (a) None.

(b) A statement is laid down on the table.

(c) Yes. The Government of India have had no occasion for a general review of their policy since 1926.

NOTE.—(1) The figures have been taken from the Finance and Revenue Accounts of the Government of India. Figures for 1928-29 are not yet available.

(2) "Sale proceeds of Excise opium" include "Cost price of opium" and "duty" levied by the Provincial Governments. Separate figures for "duty" are not shown in the Accounts. The difference between the figures under "Sale proceeds of Excise opium" and "Cost of opium supplied to Excise Department" in a given year will not give the correct figure on account of duty in that year, since the quantity of opium supplied to the Excise Department by the Government of India in a given year will not coincide with the quantity sold to the licensed vendors in that year. In the long run the difference between the two sets of figures must approximate to the figure of duty realised. The "net revenue" figures in the above table are thus approximate only.

(3) Provincial Governments also get some revenue in the shape of fines, confiscations, etc. But in the Finance and Revenue Accounts, fines, etc., in respect of liquors, opium and other dangerous drugs are lumped together, and it is therefore not possible to calculate the share of opium. The amount of revenue is however not much.

Mr. M. S. Aney: May I ask when my questions, Nos. 62 to 64, will be answered?

Mr. President: I understand Sir Frank Noyce is ill and that he will answer them to-morrow. I thought the Honourable Member was informed.

QUARTERS IN NEW DELHI BUILT BY THE TELEGRAPH DEPARTMENT.

71. Mr. G. Sarvotham Rao: (a) Is it a fact that sites in New Delhi were allotted to the Telegraph Department for building quarters for their ministerial staff?

(b) Is it a fact that the Telegraph Department erected quarters by calling for tenders themselves, and is it also a fact that the funds were provided for this purpose in the budget of the Telegraph Department?

(c) Will Government be pleased to state the capital outlay on the different types of quarters in New Delhi built by the Telegraph Department as well as the capital outlay on the corresponding types of quarters in New Delhi built by the Public Works Department?

(d) Is it a fact that the capital outlay on the quarters built by the Telegraph Department is far less than the capital outlay on the quarters built by the Public Works Department, type by type? If so, will they be pleased to state the reasons therefor?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: (a). Yes.

(b) No. The quarters were erected by the Public Works Department. The cost was provided for in the budget of the Posts and Telegraphs Department.

(c) The types of quarters built for the Telegraph Department, and the outlay thereon, are the same as those of other quarters built by the Public Works Department at the same time.

QUARTERS FOR THE MINISTERIAL STAFF OF THE LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY DEPARTMENT.

72. Mr. G. Sarvotham Rao: Do Government propose to allot some sites in New Delhi nearest to the Council House for building quarters for housing the ministerial staff of the Legislative Assembly Department? If not, why not, and why was the Telegraph Department allotted sites for erecting their own quarters?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: No. The sites closest to the Council House could not suitably be utilised for this purpose. Within the limits dictated by financial considerations, Government propose to authorize the construction, during 1930-31 of additional quarters, on suitable sites, for ministerial and other staff employed in New Delhi. The staff of the Legislative Assembly Department will be eligible for tenancy of such quarters, with others, but Government cannot make special provision for any one Secretariat Department. Quarters were provided for telegraph employees in New Delhi as in other stations in accordance with the policy of the Posts and Telegraphs Department to provide housing as far as possible for its staff in places where special difficulty is experienced. To the extent to which these quarters were provided, the difficulty of other employees of Government in finding accommodation is reduced.

CLASSIFICATION OF QUARTERS IN NEW DELHI.

73. Mr. G. Sarvotham Rao: (a) Will Government be pleased to state how many times they have classified and reclassified the different types of quarters at New Delhi, since they were constructed?

(b) Will Government be pleased to state the pay limits that were in force in 1920 for the eligibility of the ministerial staff of the Government of India for the different types of quarters in New Delhi, and will they be pleased to state how many times these pay limits were raised since then up to date?

(c) Will Government be pleased to lay on the table a statement showing the changes that have been made between the years 1920 and 1929 in the pay limits governing the eligibility of the ministerial staff of the Government of India for the different types of quarters at New Delhi?

(d) Is it a fact that the reclassification of the Government quarters at New Delhi from time to time has on each such occasion resulted in depriving the various grades of the ministerial staff of their claim to classes of accommodation to which they were previously eligible?

(e) If the answer to part (d) is in the affirmative, is it a fact that Government have never considered the question whether the reclassification of the Government quarters at New Delhi from time to time has resulted in lowering the standard of living of the ministerial Government of India staff against their will? What steps do Government propose to take in the matter and when?

(f) Will Government be pleased to state the reasons why they have made such frequent changes in the classification of the quarters at New Delhi?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: The information is being collected and will be furnished to the Honourable Member in due course.

MEMORIAL FROM THE MINISTERIAL OFFICERS' UNION, BOMBAY.

74. Mr. Ram Narayan Singh: (a) Will Government be pleased to state whether they have received a memorial dated 1st September, 1929, from Mr. S. C. Joshi, the Honorary Secretary to the Central Board of Revenue Ministerial Officers' Union, Bombay?

(b) Has the memorial been considered and decided and if so, with what result?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: (a) Yes.

(b) Yes. After careful consideration, the Government came to the conclusion that no case had been established for a revision of the memorialists' pay.

AERO CLUBS IN INDIA.

76. Dr. B. S. Moonje: (a) Will Government be pleased to state how many aero clubs have been established in India?

(b) How many of them receive Government grants and what are the amounts of grant given to each of these clubs?

(c) How many Indians were trained by and are under training in each of these clubs?

(d) What are the courses of training and what fees are charged per student for a full term of training?

(e) Are there facilities for training for "B" certificates?

(f) How many Indians were granted "A" certificates and how many "B" certificates?

(g) Are any of these Indians with "A" and "B" certificates provided with any appointments in the Department of Civil Aviation?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: (a) Six.

(b) Four. Government have provided each club with two "Moth" aeroplanes, a spare engine and a grant of Rs. 9,000 towards the provision of a hangar. Government have also given to each club an annual grant of Rs. 20,000, and a bonus of Rs. 150 per pilot trained, up to a limit of Rs. 2,250 per club in the first year, and Rs. 5,000 per club in the second year of operation.

(c) The figures are as follows:

Trained—

Delhi, 5.

Bombay, 8.

Bengal, 3.

Karachi, 9.

Under training—

Delhi, 13.

Bombay, 13.

Karachi, 13.

(d) The length of the course of training and the expense involved are naturally dependent on the aptitude shown by the pupil. It can be taken that the average Indian pupil requires about 17 hours dual control instruction and that the average cost of training for an "A" licence is approximately Rs. 480.

(e) Government are of opinion that the clubs as at present constituted and equipped are not in a position to undertake the training required for "B" licences. They have not, however, actually prohibited clubs from undertaking such training.

"B" Licences, nil.

(g) There have up to date been no posts in which their services could be utilised.

Dr. B. S. Moonje: Do the Government propose to make provision for training for the B Certificate?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: Not in the immediate present.

Dr. B. S. Moonje: When is it likely that the arrangement will be made, if not at present?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: I cannot give my Honourable friend over there any definite information. He was a member of the Standing Finance Committee and has some information about our programme in regard to the development of air services.

Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: Can the Honourable Member give the approximate time?

Mr. Arthur Moore: Is it not a fact that the present pilot instructors of aeroplane clubs are sufficiently qualified to enable them to give B certificates?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: My information, Sir, is that the clubs as at present constituted and equipped are not in a position to undertake the training required for B licences, though they are not actually prohibited from undertaking such training. The point is this. Training for B licences includes training in meteorology, air navigation and certain other subjects.

Nawab Sir Sahibzada Abdul Qaiyum: On what principle is the selection of candidates made for this service?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: My Honourable friend is apparently under a misapprehension. We are now talking of training by aero clubs and there is no question of a service.

Nawab Sir Sahibzada Abdul Qaiyum: The whole question applies to the selection of candidates as well and I should like to know, on what principle candidates are selected for training?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: That depends on the aero club. The aero clubs train people who are members of those clubs and there is no question of selection by Government.

Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: Instead of giving us a vague reply, will the Honourable Member say at least approximately what time it will take to make provision for the training?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: I am sorry I cannot be a prophet. It depends on considerations over which I have no control.

Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: I know, if the Honourable Member were a prophet he would say exactly, but I wanted him to say approximately.

Mr. President: Dr. Moonje.

SELECTION OF INDIAN CADETS FOR TRAINING IN MILITARY AND NAVAL COLLEGES IN ENGLAND.

77. Dr. B. S. Moonje: (a) Will Government be pleased to state when the Interview and Record Board was first appointed in India for the selection of Indian candidates for training in the cadet colleges of Sandhurst, Woolwich and Cranwell and for the Royal Indian Marine?

(b) How many times has the Board been meeting every year since its appointment?

(c) How many Indian candidates have presented themselves each time for examination?

(d) How many of them presented themselves for each of these cadet colleges and for marine training?

(e) How many of them were selected for each of these cadet colleges and for marine training?

(f) Has the Board selected any candidates up to now, and if so, how many for Woolwich and for Cranwell?

(g) How many of those passed and selected by the Board here were rejected by the Examining Board in England?

(h) How many vacancies were reserved for Indians at each time the Interview and Record Board met for their training as Army, Naval, and Air Force cadets?

(i) Have Government noticed the opinion of Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru, M.L.A., as cabled by Reuter and published in the Hindustan Times of Monday the 16th December, 1929, on page 13, at the top of the third column, that after visiting Sandhurst and Woolwich, he found that "contrary to the impression prevailing in India, the standard of recruitment for Woolwich was not higher than for Sandhurst"?

(j) Do Government propose to ask for a report from the Interview and Record Board as to the reasons for their failure to select as many candidates as were required to fill up the vacancies available each time at the cadet colleges of Sandhurst, Woolwich and Cranwell, and for naval training, and if so, will Government be pleased to lay the report on the table?

Mr. G. M. Young: The answer to this long question is necessarily itself very long, and contains much statistical matter. Unless, therefore, the Honourable Member—unless the House—would prefer me to read it out, I propose to lay it on the table.

Most of the information required by the Honourable Member can be found in the pamphlets containing the results of the examinations to which he refers, copies of which have been placed in the Library. As, however, the Honourable Member appears to be under some misapprehension as to the character and functions of the Interview and Record Board, I propose to give a detailed reply. The Board is not, as one might suppose from the Honourable Member's question, a standing Board set up in India, to make a preliminary selection of candidates for admission to the written examination. On the contrary, the examinations themselves consist of two parts—a number of written papers, and an oral test,—which are conducted simultaneously in India: but whereas, in the written examination the papers are set and subsequently marked by the Civil Service Commissioners in England, the oral test is necessarily carried out by a Board sitting in India, on each occasion that an examination takes place. The answers to the various parts of the Honourable Member's question are as follows:—

(a) An interview and record test has been in force for Sandhurst candidates since 1919, but the present system of examination for entry to the Army and Air Force was introduced in November, 1928, and for the Royal Indian Marine in June, 1929.

(b) There was one examination in 1928 and two in 1929. An Interview and Record Board was constituted for each of these examinations.

(c) 59 candidates sat for the Army and Air Force examination held in November, 1928, and 88 and 75 candidates for the Army, Air Force, and Royal Indian Marine examinations held in June, and November, 1929, respectively.

(e) Seven candidates passed for Sandhurst at the examination held in November, 1928, and 11 at the examination held in June, 1929. No candidate passed into Woolwich, Cranwell or the Royal Indian Marine at either of these examinations. The results of the examinations held last November, have not yet been received.

(f) Three candidates for Woolwich and one for Cranwell passed the oral test in November, 1928. One candidate for Cranwell and two for Woolwich passed the oral test in June, 1929. The number of those who obtained qualifying marks in the oral test at the examination held in November, 1929, is not yet known.

(g) Nine of those who obtained qualifying marks in the oral test in November, 1928, and six who obtained similar marks in June, 1929, failed to pass the written portion of the examination.

(h) A statement is annexed.

(i) Government have seen the message referred to, but are not aware whether the Honourable Pundit has been correctly reported. The standard required for entry into Woolwich is considerably higher than the standard required for Sandhurst. There are certain subjects, viz., Lower Mathematics and Physics or Chemistry, which candidates for Woolwich are compelled to take, and obtain a qualifying mark in them, while Sandhurst candidates are not. Again, the minimum qualifying total of marks for Sandhurst is 540, and for Woolwich, 690.

(j) Government do not consider that the figures of any of the past examinations are such as call for a report or explanation from the Interview and Record Board. They are satisfied that the Board, on which the Honourable Member has served more than once, is competent to judge the suitability of the candidates who appear before it: and that it rejects only those who are definitely unsuitable. The Board's decisions must obviously be governed by this criterion alone, and not by any consideration of the number of vacancies available.

Statement referred to in the reply to parts (d) and (h) of the question.

APPOINTMENT OF INDIAN OFFICERS TO THE ARMY.

78. Dr. B. S. Moonje: (a) Will Government be pleased to state if it is a fact that there is a shortage of British officers in the Army?

(b) If the answer to part (a) be in the affirmative, what is the number of this shortage, and how do Government propose to make up this shortage, and what is this shortage due to?

(c) What is the number of annual wastage and of yearly recruitment of officers to meet the wastage?

(d) Are Government aware that to meet this shortage, it is proposed that all officers up to a certain rank, say Captain or Major, should be recruited from Indians and that the senior ranks be, for the present, held by British officers?

(e) Has the attention of Government been drawn to the following, which is a quotation from the book called the "Autography of General Sir O'Moore Creagh", one of the late Commanders-in-Chief of India?:

"The entrance examination (for selection of British boys for admission into the military colleges of England) was of open competition but it was very easy, as the qualification was low and there normally were more vacancies than competitors..... The curriculum, on paper, was very much as it is to-day but the passing out test which qualified for a Commission was much lower. The life of a cadet was less luxurious than is now the case. There were about 250 cadets and the ordinary course was one of two terms; but those who failed to qualify for a purchase commission (or in the competition for a non-purchase commission) at the examination held at the end of a cadet's second term were allowed to put in a third course in order to give them another chance."

(f) If the answer to part (e) is in the affirmative, are Government prepared to bring this point to the notice of the members of the Interview and Record Board, instructing them to bear it in mind while selecting Indian candidates for admission to the Cadet Colleges of Sandhurst, Woolwich and Cranwell and for the Royal Indian Marine?

Mr. G. M. Young: (a) There is no shortage in the actual number of British officers in the Indian Army at the moment. On the other hand there is some congestion due partly to exceptional recruitment during the war and partly to certain recent measures of reorganisation.

About three years ago there was a shortage in recruitment. Recruitment has however since improved, and the position is now satisfactory.

(b) Does not arise.

(c) The wastage is about 120 a year, and it is met by recruitment from Sandhurst and by transfer of officers from the British Service.

(d) Government are not aware of any such proposal, nor do they understand how it would be put into practice.

(f) If the Honourable Member's suggestion is that the standard of admission should be lowered for Indians in order to meet a shortage in British recruitment, my answer to the earlier parts of his question will show that such a course is unnecessary. In any case the conditions of recruitment prevailing 70 years ago, when the system of purchase Commissions was still in existence, would not, in the opinion of the Government of India, provide any argument for adopting that course to-day.

DEMOLITION OF INDIAN BAZAARS ATTACHED TO CANTONMENTS.

79. Dr. B. S. Moonje: (a) Are Government aware that the All-India Cantonment's Association have submitted a representation to His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, complaining that the military authorities are solicitous of giving a monopoly to coffee shop contractors and are therefore discouraging and demolishing long-standing Indian bazaars attached to Cantonments?

(b) Will Government be pleased to state their reasons for adopting the policy referred to in part (a)?

(c) How do Government propose to compensate the Indian shopkeepers of these Indian bazaars?

(d) Why do Government propose to establish a system of monopoly in favour of a few coffee shop contractors?

(e) Who are these coffee shop contractors, and will Government please lay on the table a list of these contractors and also of the firms, if any, they represent with their names and addresses?

Mr. G. M. Young: (a) Yes.

(b), (c) and (d). Government have not adopted the policy attributed to the military authorities in part (a). I am inquiring into the facts, and will communicate the result to the Honourable Member as soon as possible.

(e) I will send the Honourable Member a copy of the current list of approved contractors.

APPLICATIONS FOR ADMISSION TO THE CHANDAUSI TRAINING SCHOOL.

80. Dr. B. S. Moonje: (1) Are Government aware that the Divisional Superintendent, Moradabad, East Indian Railway, recently invited applications by public advertisements on the prescribed application forms obtainable from his office for Re. 1 per form, from Indians for admission in the Chandausi Training School?

(2) If the answer to part (1) is in the affirmative, will Government please state:

(a) What were the qualifications prescribed for eligibility for admission?

(b) What were the rules according to which selection was made?

(c) Who made the selection?

(d) What was the number, if any, that was previously fixed for admission into the school?

(e) Was the number so fixed mentioned in the advertisement calling for applications?

(f) Who authorised the Divisional Superintendent for fixing and according to what rule did he fix the price of one rupee per form of application?

(3) Are Government aware that about 700 applications on the prescribed forms were received and that only about 100 candidates were selected for admission into the School?

(4) Will Government be pleased to state if it proposed to return the amount of Rs. 600 or so, received as the price of the application forms from those candidates who were not eventually selected for admission?

(5) Will Government please state:

(a) If the rejected applicants have been informed of the fact of their rejection; and,

(b) If so, with or without mentioning the reasons for rejection?

(6) Will Government please state the numbers of candidates selected for admission into the school according to their religions and colours?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: I am making enquiries from the Agent and will communicate with the Honourable Member on receipt of his reply.

REPRESENTATION OF SIND AT THE ROUND TABLE CONFERENCE.

82. Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: (a) Had the attention of Government been drawn to the editorial in the Daily Gazette, Karachi, dated the 6th November, 1929, under the heading "Sind and the proposed Conference" regarding the representation of Sind on the proposed Round Table Conference to be called in England in consideration of Sind having its own problem requiring careful consideration by those who are to draw up a new constitution for India?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: (a) Yes.

(b) I am not in a position to make any statement on the subject.

Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: Will the Honourable Member tell me if any scheme or method of election or selection of the members of the Round Table Conference is being considered by the Government of India?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: I cannot add to what I have already said, namely, that I am not in a position to make any statement on the subject.

EXTENSION OF THE WAKF ACT TO THE BORAH COMMUNITY.

83. Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: In view of the representations made to the Government of India with regard to the extension of the Wakf Act to the Borah Community, will Government be pleased to say what decision Government have arrived at?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: The Honourable Member presumably refers to a petition submitted by Mr. Karimbhoy Adamjee Peerbhoy. It has been forwarded for consideration to the Government of Bombay. The matter is primarily one for the Local Government under section 13 of the Mussalman Wakf Act, 1923.

CONSTRUCTION OF A BROAD GAUGE RAILWAY FROM KARACHI TO BOMBAY.

84. Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: (a) Will Government be pleased to state when they intend to take in hand the constructional work of the Karachi-Bombay broad gauge through railway?

(b) Is it a fact that people in Sind have been asking for this railway for the last fifteen years?

(c) Is it a fact that the Bombay Council have shown the urgency of this Railway, and that H. E. the Governors of Bombay and even H. E. the Viceroy on their visits to Karachi have expressed the same view?

(d) Do Government propose to solve the financial difficulty which has always been brought in the forefront and provide for starting the work in this year's Budget?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: (a), (c) and (d). Government are unable to say at present when it will be possible to start work on the Bombay-Sind through connection. They recognise the importance attached to this by the Government of Bombay and the people of Bombay and Sind and will endeavour to find means to take it up as soon as possible.

(b) Yes.

Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: Is not Government still prepared, after the lapse of 15 years, definitely to take this matter in hand, especially when the necessity is being admitted?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: As I have already explained, we propose to take this line up as soon as our means permit. We can hardly be expected to take it up when our means do not permit us to do so.

Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: The means are always complained of.

ADVISORY COMMITTEES OF THE NORTH WESTERN RAILWAY.

85. Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: (a) Is it a fact that the North Western Railway Karachi Advisory Committee have resolved, by a majority of votes, more than once to hold monthly meetings instead of quarterly ones as at present?

(b) Are Government aware that quarterly meetings do not sufficiently serve the purpose for which they are designed?

(c) Is it a fact that generally meetings of all other Advisory Committees in other Divisions of the State Railways respectively are held once a month?

(d) If the answer to part (c) be in the negative, will Government be pleased to state the period at which each of Advisory Committee meetings in all the Divisions on the State Railways respectively are held?

(e) Do Government propose, in view of the opinion of the Karachi Advisory Committee, to ask the Agent, North Western Railway, to give a trial to holding monthly meetings?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: (a) Yes.

(b) No.

(c) No.

(d) I am laying a statement on the table giving the required information. It will be seen that the main Advisory Committee of each of these railways ordinarily meets once a month, but branch Committees, like that at Karachi, ordinarily meet once a quarter or once in two months.

(e) The Agent of the North Western Railway has reported that a meeting once a quarter suffices to deal with the business to be transacted, and that if he finds occasion to call for more frequent meetings, he will do so. Government consider that the present practice meets the requirements.

* This meeting was postponed to 4th week of July on account of certain members having been unable to attend the meeting.

Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: Is the Honourable Member aware that the members of the Committee hold different opinions to those of the Agent? Has the Honourable Member considered that question or inquired into that difference of opinion?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: I have, Sir, accepted the statement of the Agent that a meeting once a quarter is ordinarily sufficient for transacting the business. I do not consider it necessary, therefore, for the Agent to call meetings more frequently, even though possibly some of the members of the Committee may desire more frequent meetings.

Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: Will the Honourable Member be pleased to place the reasons of the Agent on the table?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: I can tell the Honourable Member the reasons immediately. The reasons are that a meeting once in three months is ordinarily sufficient for transacting the business that comes up before that Committee.

Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: The reason for the sufficiency there must be, and what I am asking the Honourable Member is to give the reason for showing how that one meeting in three months is sufficient, otherwise it is only an opinion.

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: It may be presumed that the meeting once every three months gets through the business which is laid before the meeting.

Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: I have been myself a member of that Advisory Committee, though not now, and I know that the work was not being properly conducted and finished within quarterly meetings. Is the Honourable Member going to contradict that too?

FARES ON THE JODHPUR RAILWAY.

86. Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: (a) Are Government aware that the Jodhpur Railway passenger fares for third class are about 65 per cent. higher than those of the North Western Railway for long distances?

(b) Are Government aware that this line is connected with the North Western Railway line from Hyderabad Sind and that British subjects travel from Sind to Gujrat, Bombay, and other places through the territory of the Jodhpur State by this line?

(c) Do Government propose, in view of the fact mentioned in part (b), to move the Jodhpur Railway authorities to reduce their fares?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: (a) and (b). Yes,

(c) No. Passenger fares on the different Railway Administrations are not uniform, financial and other conditions varying.

APPLICATION FORMS PRESCRIBED FOR CANDIDATES BY THE NORTH WESTERN RAILWAY.

87. Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: (a) Are Government aware that two Railway Selection Boards met at Karachi on 15th and 21st August, 1929, or thereabouts to select candidates?

(b) Is it a fact that the Railway called upon the candidates to send in their applications on railway prescribed forms and to appear in person at the headquarters at Karachi?

(c) Is it a fact that the North Western Railway sells to each candidate the railway application form at a cost of one rupee each?

(d) How much was spent by the Railway on the printing and paper of these forms sold on these two aforesaid occasions in August, 1929?

(e) How much was realised by the Railway by the sale of these forms and from the railway fares spent by these candidates in order to attend at the headquarters and what was the balance saved by the Railway in all the Divisions of the North Western Railway?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: I propose to reply this and the following question together. I am obtaining the information which the Honourable Member asks for and will communicate with him on its receipt.

CANDIDATES SELECTED BY THE RAILWAY SELECTION BOARD AT KARACHI.

†88. Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: (a) Will Government be pleased to state how many candidates actually appeared before the Railway Selection Board at Karachi on the two occasions mentioned in part (a) of my immediately preceding question and how many were selected?

(b) How many Sindhis appeared for the selection on the aforesaid occasions and how many were selected?

(c) Were there any such selected persons relations of railway employees who were given preference in these selections? If so, what are the names and the designations of these railway employees?

(d) Do Government propose in future to call only such candidates as are likely to be selected?

CONSTITUTION OF RAILWAY SELECTION BOARDS.

89. Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: (a) Have Government by now thought of making some change in the Railway Selection Boards? If so, which?

(b) If the answer to the above be the same as was given on 10th September, 1929, in answer to part (f) of my starred question No. 330, will Government be pleased to state the reasons for making no improvement and for not associating the non-official element with the official members of the Selection Board?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: The methods of recruiting subordinates are under examination. Government are unable to agree that it would be an improvement if non-officials were added to the Selection Boards.

APPOINTMENT OF PROVINCIAL SERVICE MEN AS OFFICERS IN THE IMPERIAL SECRETARIAT.

90. Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: (a) Will Government be pleased to state if there are Secretaries, Deputy Secretaries or Assistant Secretaries in all the Departments of the Government of India Secretariat, who may have been imported from the Provincial Service or are these appointments restricted to Imperial Service men? If the former, will Government be pleased to state how many and from which presidencies have they been recruited?

(b) If the answer to the first part of part (a) be in the negative, will Government be pleased to state if they propose to encourage and train Provincial Service men for the said appointments by giving them appointments in the Imperial Secretariats? If not, what are the reasons for it?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: (a) I would refer the Honourable Member to section 98 and the third Schedule of the Government of India Act, from which he will see that the posts of Secretary and Joint and Deputy Secretaries in some of the Departments of the Government of India are reserved for the Indian Civil Service. The posts of Assistant Secretary are ordinarily filled from the Imperial Secretariat Service. In the past some members of the provincial services have been appointed to posts of Deputy and Assistant Secretary. There are no such officers in the Government of India Secretariat at present.

(b) Government see no reason for making any departure from the present arrangements.

Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: Would the Government be pleased to say why office rules should not be amended in order to make the Indians enter as Secretaries and Deputy Secretaries?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: As I have already stated, the existing arrangements are working satisfactorily and, as the Honourable Member is aware, there is a considerable number of Indians who are holding these posts. The point I understood the Honourable Member to refer to particularly was with regard to the members of the Provincial Services, and my answer is that there is nothing to prevent such appointments being made on suitable occasions, and the heads of the Departments concerned will exercise their discretion.

Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: I hope so.

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: Is it the considered opinion of Government that no more opportunities are to be given to the members of the Provincial Services to hold responsible posts in the Imperial Secretariat?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: No, Sir.

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: What is the exact import of the Honourable Member's reply? I should like him to bear in mind the desire repeatedly expressed in this House for giving wider opportunities to the members of the Provincial Services for employment in the Imperial Secretariat.

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: I have no doubt the considerations mentioned by the Honourable Member are borne carefully in mind at the time of making these appointments.

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: The Honourable Member said that the present system was working satisfactorily. Is it to be inferred from this that no change will be made by the Government of India and that consequently Provincial Service men will in practice be as much debarred from holding Imperial Secretariat appointments in the future, as they have been in the past?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: A number of members of the Provincial Services have been appointed to these posts in the past and may be so appointed in the future.

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: These appointments have been few and far between. At present, as the Honourable Member has said, there are no Provincial Service men who are serving as Assistant or Deputy Secretaries in the Imperial Secretariat. Is the present system to continue as a rule? Is no special effort to be made to extend the appointment of Provincial Service men?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: I quite see the point raised by the Honourable Member, but I should like to make it clear in reply that there is no embargo on such appointments. Naturally, experience of the Imperial Secretariat itself is an important qualification for appointment to these posts, but that does not involve necessarily the exclusion of Provincial members. I will endeavour, however, to examine the particular point raised by the Honourable Member more fully.

Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: Will the Honourable Member please say that in future Provincial Service men will be taken in the Imperial Secretariat?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: I will examine the point more fully.

As regards a third class reserved compartment for ladies, the Agents of the railways concerned report that the number of through long distance third class passengers by this train is not sufficient to warrant the reservation of a third class compartment for ladies in the through third class coach, though such a compartment is provided in one of the other coaches on the train.

The lower ratings receive no house allowance, but their pay is consolidated to comprise a ration allowance, as is customary with men of their ratings when serving afloat. Any question of a house allowance for them would raise that of the continuance of their ration allowance.

No complaint has been received from the staff regarding the conditions of their service.

SUPERSESSION OF GENERAL SKEEN.

92. Sardar Gulab Singh: Will Government be pleased to state if it is a fact that:

(i) General Sir Andrew Skeen has been superseded in his rank by a far junior officer; and

(ii) the Anglo-Indians did not approve of Sir Andrew's report regarding the Indianisation of the military services in India?

Mr. G. M. Young: (i) No, Sir. Sir Andrew Skeen has not been superseded by anyone. The vacancy in the establishment of full Generals of the Indian Army caused by his retirement has been filled by the appointment of the senior Lieutenant-General on the list.

(ii) I do not know to whom the Honourable Member refers by the designation "the Anglo-Indians". There is no foundation, however, for the suggestion that Sir Andrew Skeen's retirement was not due to medical grounds, or that it was in any way connected with the Report of the Indian Sandhurst Committee. Sir Andrew Skeen had been selected for the post of General Officer Commanding-in-Chief, Northern Command, and would have been appointed to that post if he had been medically fit.

- (iii) the number of Indian candidates separately from India and England, who were approved for the permanent commission, and their respective qualifications;
- (iv) the number of the candidates declared unfit by the Medical Board;
- (v) the number of candidates put on the waiting list separately from India and England, along with their respective qualifications; and
- (vi) the numbers of rejected candidates for permanent commissions from India and England separately, with their respective qualifications?

(b) Will Government be pleased to state if the rejected candidates could reapply at any subsequent selection? If the reply is in the negative, will Government please give reasons?

(c) Are Government aware that no such clause, indicating that a rejected candidate shall not re-apply, exists in the current rules and regulations for appointment by selection to the permanent commission in the Indian Medical Service?

(d) Do Government propose to alter or amend the rules and regulations to enable such candidates to re-apply at any subsequent selection, provided they have also by that time improved their academic qualifications and experiences as desired?

Mr. G. M. Young: (a) (i). 124 candidates applied for permanent commissions in the Indian Medical Service between August 1927, when the last selection was made, and the holding of the Selection Board in July 1929.

(iii) Eight Indian candidates from India and five from England were approved for appointment in existing vacancies. A statement showing their qualifications is placed on the table.

(iv) Six.

(v) Nine approved candidates from India and one from England were placed on the waiting list. A statement showing their qualifications is placed on the table.

(vi) 22 candidates were finally rejected by the Indian Selection Board. A statement showing their qualifications is placed on the table. Three Indian candidates had previously been rejected by the India Office Selection Board. 32 candidates were not selected for immediate commissions, but were permitted to apply to appear before the next Selection Board.

(b), (c) and (d). There is nothing to prevent any rejected candidate from re-applying at any subsequent selection. The Selection Board does, however, classify candidates into the three main categories of suitable, possible and definitely unsuitable. Those placed in the last category are informed that further applications from them will not be considered, and it is obviously both in the interests of the applicants themselves and the efficient working of the Board that some such procedure should be observed. Government do not consider that any alteration in the existing practice is called for.

APPOINTMENT OF A HINDU AS MEMBER FOR EDUCATION, HEALTH AND LANDS.

94. Sardar Gulab Singh: (i) Is it a fact that since the introduction of the Montagu-Chelmsford Reform scheme in India, (a) the first Member in charge of the Education, Health and Lands Department was a Muslim, (b) the second Member selected for the same place was also a Muslim, and (c) the third Member that has just recently succeeded to the same place is also a Muslim?

(ii) Will Government be pleased to acquaint the House with the relative proportion of Muslims and Hindus employed in the Department concerned in the years 1920-21, 1921-22, 1925-26, and 1928-29?

(iii) Will Government be pleased to state if this appointment of the Member has been exclusively reserved for the Muslim community alone?

(iv) If the answer to part (iii) is in the negative, do Government intend to select a Hindu Member to take charge after the present Member retires, provided a really capable and an efficient hand be available?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: (i) The first Member in charge of the Education, Health and Lands Department was Sir B. N. Sarma. The second Member was Sir Muhammad Habibullah, who is still in charge, and his successor will, as already announced, be Sir Fazl-i-Husain.

(ii) The Department of Education, Health and Lands was created in 1923, by the amalgamation of the Departments of Revenue and Agriculture and of Education and Health. The percentage of Hindus and Muslims in the years 1921, 1922, 1926 and 1929 was as follows:

	1st January 1921.		1st January 1922.
	Hindus.	Muslims.	Hindus.	Muslims.
Department of Revenue and Agriculture	45.45	21.82	45.45	21.82
Department of Education and Health	51.43	25.71	46.15	25.64

	1st June 1926.		1st June 1929.
	Hindus.	Muslims.	Hindus.	Muslims.
Department of Education, Health and Lands	48.31	23.59	54.65	23.25

(iii) It will be apparent from what I have already stated that this is not the case.

(iv) Portfolios are allotted to Honourable Members of Council at the discretion of the Governor General.

UNEMPLOYMENT IN INDIA.

95. Sardar Gulab Singh: (a) Are Government aware that discontent due to unemployment in England has recently been met by the introduction of a law to provide pensions to the unemployed and helpless people there?

(b) Do Government intend to consider the problem of unemployment in India as well, a bit more seriously, and to devise some means to curb its rapid increase by putting a similar Bill before this House at their earliest possible convenience?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: (a) Government are aware that in England there is compulsory insurance against unemployment for persons engaged in certain specified occupations.

(b) The question of unemployment is in India a matter which is primarily the concern of Provincial Governments. In this connection the attention of the Honourable Member is invited to the reply given on the 25th September, 1929, to Dr. Moonje's starred question No. 852.

FLUCTUATIONS IN THE PRICE OF GOVERNMENT PAPER.

96. Mr. E. F. Sykes: (a) Has the attention of Government been drawn to the fact that the price of 3½ per cent. Government paper rose in the two years from 1925 to 1927 from 68 to 78 and in the following two years receded again to 68?

(b) Will Government let the House know the causes of those wide fluctuations and how far they are due to world causes and how far to causes over which the Government of India has control?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: (a) Yes.

(b) Fluctuations are caused partly by world causes and partly by causes which are local to India, though as regards the latter the factors which are operative may be beyond the control of the Government. The relative importance of the factors which are not local to India can be approximately gauged by studying the course of the securities of other countries. For example, British Government Conversion Loan fell from 77 in 1927 to 72½ in 1929. As regards the relative importance of local factors, this is to some extent a matter of opinion, but I shall be pleased to give the Honourable Member a fuller explanation if he will communicate with me personally. In the meanwhile, I would refer him to the annual reports of the Controller of the Currency and to the speech which I made in introducing the Budget last year, in which I reviewed the Government policy of capital expenditure and borrowing during the past years.

THE ADMINISTRATION REPORT ON INDIAN RAILWAYS.

97. Mr. E. F. Sykes: Will the Government kindly lay on the table or put in the Library a revised copy of Table 7 in Vol. II of the Administration Report on Indian Railways for the year 1927-28, replacing the column "Per cent. of gross earnings" by two columns headed "per net ton mile" and "per passenger mile" respectively?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: The compilation of the figures required will necessitate a considerable amount of clerical labour and Government do not consider that any useful purpose would be served by such compilation.

SUBSCRIPTIONS TO THE NEW INDIAN STERLING LOAN.

98. Khan Bahadur Sarfaraz Hussain Khan: (a) Has the attention of Government been drawn to the report published in the issue of the Statesman of the 19th December, 1929, page 8, under the heading "Today's News" to the effect that "The New Indian Loan for £6,000,000 has been oversubscribed by more than £2,000,000"?

(b) If so, will they please state if the report is correct?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: (a) Yes.

(b) The report is correct except that the use of the term "Indian Loan" to describe an issue of India Bills is not strictly accurate.

THE DELHI MUNICIPALITY.

99. Khan Bahadur Sarfaraz Hussain Khan: (a) Has the attention of Government been drawn to the paragraph published in the issue of the Statesman of the 26th October, 1929, page 15, under the head "Problem for Delhi Municipality—Future Status—Government Property Control Question"?

(b) If so, will they please state if the creation of a Municipal Corporation for Old and New Delhi including notified areas, as reported therein is under contemplation.

Sir Frank Noyce: (a) Yes.

JOINT PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS.

100. Khan Bahadur Sarfaraz Hussain Khan: (a) Has the attention of Government been drawn to the report published in the issue of the Statesman of 22nd November, 1929, page 9, under the heading "Indian affairs—Government to set up a joint committee"?

(b) If so, will they please state if the statements made therein are correct?

(c) If correct, will they please state the time when a motion to the effect is expected to be moved in the House of Lords?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: (a) and (b). Yes.

(c) The motion was agreed to by the House of Lords on the 5th December and the House of Commons concurred on the 19th December last.

OPENING OF A RAILWAY STATION AT NANDGAON BORSANA.

101. Mr. Mukhtar Singh: Are Government aware that Nandgaon Borsana, Muttra District, is a place of pilgrimage and Railway trains pass by this place? If the answer be in the affirmative, will Government be pleased to state if there is any difficulty in opening a railway station at this place?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: I am obtaining the information from the Agent of the Great Indian Peninsula Railway and I will communicate it to the Honourable Member.

POSTAL DELAYS.

102. Khan Bahadur Sarfaraz Hussain Khan: (a) Has the attention of Government been drawn to the letter published in the issue of the Statesman of the 27th December, 1929, page 8, under the heading "Postal delays"?

(b) If so, will Government please state if the statements made therein are wholly or partly correct?

(c) If correct, will Government please state what steps they are going to take to remove the grievances complained of?

Mr. H. A. Sams: (a) Yes.

(b) and (c). I have no information, but inquiries are being made. Such action will be taken as the results of the inquiries show to be necessary, and the facts will be communicated to the Honourable Member hereafter.

PAY OF NON-GAZETTED STAFF OF THE CURRENCY OFFICE, LAHORE.

103. Mian Mohammad Shah Nawaz: (a) Are Government aware of the fact that the scales of pay of the non-Gazetted staff of the Currency Office at Lahore are lower than those of the Currency Office at Madras?

(b) Is it a fact that Government of India on the basis of the comparative costs of living and the economic conditions prevailing in the various provinces have invariably classed Lahore above Madras in determining the scales of pay of the clerical and the Subordinate Accounts Service establishments of the Audit Office?

(c) If the replies to parts (a) and (b) are in the affirmative, are Government prepared to take early steps to redress the grievances of the staff of the Currency Office at Lahore by removing the apparent anomaly in the classification and restoring Lahore to its former position above Madras?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: The Government are obtaining certain information to enable them to reply fully to the Honourable Member's question. A further answer will be sent to him as soon as possible.

GRIEVANCES OF RAILWAY STATION STAFFS.

104. Khan Bahadur Sarfaraz Hussain Khan: (a) Will Government be pleased to state if it is a fact that (1) racial discrimination is freely practised in the Eastern Bengal Railway, (2) the "C" class important stations (scales of pay Rs. 420—20—500) are exclusively reserved for European and Anglo-Indian station-masters and that there is not a single Indian in this grade, (3) no facilities for education are afforded to the children of the Indian employees posted at a station where there is no school, whereas these facilities are always given to the European and the Anglo-Indian employees, (4) housing arrangements of the subordinates and menial staff are hopelessly poor in the Eastern Bengal Railway, (5) there is no proper arrangement for drinking water at many stations which are hot beds of malaria, (6) arrangements for medical aid to Railway employees and their family at out-stations is hopelessly poor, (7) no arrangements are made by the Eastern Bengal Railway to fill up the ditches and borrow-pits near the Staff Quarters although stagnant water accumulates there, breeds mosquitoes and forms poisonous gas—detrimental to the health of the staff?

(b) If the state of things described in the above question is correct what steps do Government propose to take to remove the grievances?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: (a). (1) No.

(a) (2) to (7) and (b). I am making inquiries and will communicate the result to the Honourable Member on receipt.

INCOME-TAX LEVIED ON CANTONMENT PROVIDENT FUNDS.

105. Mr. K. C. Roy: (a) Is it a fact that income-tax is levied on contributions to the Cantonment Provident Fund made by Cantonment Fund servants?

(b) Are Government aware that the contributions made by servants of all other local bodies to their respective Provident Funds are exempt from the payment of the tax?

(c) If the replies to parts (a) and (b) be in the affirmative, are Government prepared to take steps to remove this distinction?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: (a) It is true that such contributions are not allowed as deductions from the taxable income for assessment to income-tax.

(b) Such subscriptions to a Provident Fund of a local authority are exempt from tax under section 15 of the Indian Income-tax Act (XI of 1922) if the Local Government has directed under section 8 of the Provident Funds Act (XIX of 1925) that the provisions of the latter Act shall apply to such Fund.

(c) Local Governments and Administrations have been asked recently to extend the provisions of the Provident Funds Act to the Provident Funds of cantonment authorities. The following Governments and Administrations, namely, Madras, Bihar and Orissa, Assam, Baluchistan, North West Frontier Province, Delhi, Ajmer-Merwara, Hyderabad, Central India and Baroda have already extended the Act, or will extend it soon. Replies have not been received from other Local Governments and Administrations.

RESOLUTION RE ATTEMPT TO WRECK THE VICEROY'S TRAIN.

Sardar Gulab Singh (West Punjab: Sikh): Sir, there is no denying the fact that His Excellency

Mr. President: The Honourable Member will read his motion first.

Sardar Gulab Singh: I beg to move:

"That this Assembly heartily congratulates Their Excellencies Lord and Lady Irwin on their miraculous escape from the dastardly attempt to blow up their train near Delhi, and this House very strongly detests and condemns the insensate outrage."

(Applause.)

Sir, there is no denying the fact that His Excellency Lord Irwin's regime of the Viceroyalty in India has, so far, been a period of prudence and sympathy and a rule of remarkable equilibrium. Unlike some of his countrymen, His Excellency Lord Irwin has been fighting our cause in India and at home as best as his person, place and office could permit. Even in the teeth of a bitter opposition from the Press at Home he has been literally true to his word of honour.

His Excellency went to England last year as an ambassador of India and he did all what he could do there, even in the face of such an unfavourable atmosphere. He came to India when very few other men could have dared to face the country at such a political juncture, and permit me to say to my Honourable colleagues that he is performing his duties in such an efficient and appropriate manner that he enjoys the fullest confidence of our countrymen at large to-day. His name will most surely go down to history coupled with the names of Messrs. Hoover and MacDonald as the greatest peace-maker of our times. He spared neither occasion nor risk to do for India whatever lay in his province, and is acting as a true and an honest personage.

We heard with a very painful surprise that the life of the man of such professions and virtues was attacked. But we are extremely pleased to know that the attempt on Their Excellencies' life has met with the universal contempt and detestation that it deserved, through the agencies of the Indian Press and Pulpit alike, and that Their Excellencies have been shown a general and an all-round sympathy by the public of every shade and description. We are very glad to learn that His Excellency has taken the mishap in the proper spirit, and we are further glad to read His Excellency's declaration that the catastrophe will not cause the least divergence from the policy that has been taken up and established by the Government of India.

[Sardar Gulab Singh.]

Although the miscreants have given out that their motive was not to kill, we should assert that if we are fighting our battles against the present system of Government on the one hand, we shall equally oppose the anarchy on the other. It is very fortunate that Providence has saved Their Excellencies from any sort of calamity. Therefore we should congratulate Their Excellencies on their escape; and, with your permission, I move, Sir, that:

"This Assembly heartily congratulates Their Excellencies Lord and Lady Irwin on their miraculous escape from the dastardly attempt to blow up their train near Delhi, and this House very strongly detests and condemns the insensate outrage."

The Honourable Sir James Crerar (Home Member): Mr. President, I desire in a very few words, on behalf of Government, to endorse very cordially the terms of the motion which has been moved by Sardar Gulab Singh. I am sure that he has quite correctly represented the truth when he alludes to the shock of horror and consternation with which the news of this outrage was received throughout India. I may, perhaps, be permitted to quote a few words from the Message published by His Excellency the Viceroy in response to the numerous messages he received on that occasion. He says:

"Since the day on which an attempt was made by the explosion of a bomb to derail my train a few miles from New Delhi, I have received from every quarter of India hundreds of messages congratulating me and those who were travelling with me on the failure of the attempt, and repudiating utterly and without reservation the action of those who originated and carried out the design.

Every class and every community have joined in this universal condemnation; Ruling Princes and people of India; associations political, commercial, social and communal; and individuals in every walk of life."

He concludes:

"It is a convincing proof, if proof were necessary, that Indian public opinion condemns such methods and realizes that those who resort to them are the worst enemies of their own country."

I think, Sir, that I can add little to what has been so feelingly and so eloquently said by His Excellency. For this House there are very special reasons for joining in this motion of congratulation. We have also, in view of our responsibilities, very special reasons for joining in the condemnation of the perpetrators with which the motion concludes. We must share to the full the feelings of relief which were so universally felt in the country at the Providential escape of His Excellency and his party. In these sentiments I am sure that this House will unanimously join, and I can only add, having regard to my own responsibilities in the matter, that no effort will be spared to bring the perpetrators of this insensate and atrocious outrage to justice. (Hear, hear.)

Maulvi Muhammad Yakub (Rohilkund and Kumaon Divisions: Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I wish also to associate myself with the motion which has been moved by my Honourable friend Sardar Gulab Singh. On account of his genial courtesy, his sympathy with the aspirations of Indians and the manner in which he has carried on his administration in this country, no doubt, Lord Irwin has endeared himself throughout the whole length and breadth of India, and I can say without fear of contradiction that no previous Viceroy of India, probably with the exception of Lord Ripon, made himself so popular with the people of this country as the present Viceroy has done. We were all shocked that an attempt was made on the life of such a Viceroy, especially after the manner in which he fought our case in England and after the announcement about the Round Table Conference which he made in the teeth of opposition from the die-hards in England. A motion like this does not require a long speech. The unanimity with which this action has been condemned by all the people of all shades of opinion in this country shows the esteem in which the Viceroy is held in this country. Lady Irwin, too, like her noble husband, has shared in the welfare of the people of this country and she has earned the same popularity as her husband. We, the people of India, are really very grateful to Providence that the attempt which was made on their lives remained unsuccessful and no harm was done to Their Excellencies. With these words, I associate myself with the motion and wish that the congratulations of this House may be conveyed to Their Excellencies.

Sir Zulfiqar Ali Khan (East Central Punjab: Muhammadan): Sir, I desire wholeheartedly to associate myself with the remarks which have already been made by the various speakers. I remember when this news was made known to the public, it evoked such indignation as no such outrage on any previous occasion did. All sensible men felt that Providence, in saving the life of such a Viceroy, had saved India from a great calamity. Supposing anything more serious had happened to the Viceroy, I think the stigma on the character of the people would have been indelible. As it is, I think the mentality of those people who commit such outrages is inscrutable. That a Viceroy who is engaged in doing all that he can to help forward the cause of India should be subjected to such outrages is a thing which seems inscrutable to those who wish to help the Viceroy in his mission. Sir, I remember having seen His Excellency in London when he was in England on a short visit. I saw him so full of hope and so full of promise with regard to India that I felt that a man of this character and this moral feeling must be a great asset not only to England, but also to the whole of India. It is a great pity that a man of such convictions should be subjected to this kind of treatment. I do not think that the assurance given by the Honourable the Home Member that the culprit will be pursued and discovered will satisfy those who are the friends of India, but wish something could be done to trace the conspiracy behind this outrage and then put an end to this kind of occurrence.

Sir, I associate myself with the sentiments expressed by the previous speakers, and I wish on behalf of my Party to congratulate His Excellency on his miraculous escape, and I hope that His Excellency, as he has himself declared, will continue the benevolent work that he has undertaken on behalf of India.

Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya (Allahabad and Jhansi Divisions: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I join my friends in expressing my strong condemnation of the attempt made to blow up His Excellency's train. Such an attempt would be condemnable whoever the person was upon whom it was made. The fact that it was made upon the life of a Viceroy who has made himself so very popular adds to the strength of the condemnation which the attempt deserves. But, as I have said, an attempt like this made upon the life of any innocent fellow-man would be worthy of however, give a sufficiently clear idea of the savings accruing to India as a result of the transfer :

	Rs.	Rs.
(1) Civil (Central and Provincial)	7,01,731	10,19,072
(2) Political	6,74,934

Total Civil, Political, Military and Marine expenditure	62,37,037
Contribution to His Majesty's Government for Political and Military charges	..	33,33,333

The approximate saving to India on a comparison of the above is Rs. 18,84,632, and to this should be added a further sum of at least £100,000 from the year 1931-32, from which date the contribution to His Majesty's Government on account of political and military expenditure will be limited to one-third of the total actual expenditure, or £150,000 whichever is less.

THE INDIAN SALE OF GOODS BILL.

PRESENTATION OF THE REPORT OF SELECT COMMITTEE.

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter (Law Member): Sir, I beg to present the Report of the Select Committee on the Bill to define and amend the Law relating to the sale of goods.

THE INDIAN CONTRACT (AMENDMENT) BILL.

PRESENTATION OF THE REPORT OF SELECT COMMITTEE.

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter: (Law Member): Sir, I beg to present the Report of the Select Committee on the Bill to amend section 178 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872.

THE INLAND STEAM-VESSELS (AMENDMENT) BILL.

PRESENTATION OF THE REPORT OF SELECT COMMITTEE.

Mr. K. C. Neogy (Dacca Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I beg to present the Report of the Select Committee on the Bill further to amend the Inland Steam-vessels Act, 1917.

THE DANGEROUS DRUGS BILL.

APPOINTMENT OF MR. E. F. BAUM TO THE SELECT COMMITTEE.

The Honourable Sir George Schuster (Finance Member): Sir, I beg to move that Mr. E. F. Baum be appointed to the Select Committee on the Bill to centralize and vest in the Governor General in Council the control over certain operations relating to dangerous drugs and to increase and render uniform throughout British India the penalties for offences relating to such operations.

The motion was adopted.

THE CANTONMENTS (HOUSE-ACCOMMODATION AMENDMENT) BILL.

APPOINTMENTS TO THE SELECT COMMITTEE.

Mr. G. M. Young (Army Secretary): Sir, I beg to move that Sir Hugh Cocke be appointed to the Select Committee on the Bill further to amend the Cantonments (House-Accommodation) Act, 1923, for certain purposes.

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru (Agra Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): I understand that Sir Hugh Cocke's name is being proposed in place of Mr. Price who has resigned from the Assembly. Another member of the Committee, Mr. Misra, has unfortunately ceased to be a Member of the Assembly since the Committee was elected. I therefore propose that the name of Mr. N. C. Kelkar be substituted for that of Mr. Misra.

Mr. Muhammad Yamin Khan (United Provinces: Nominated Non-Official): Is a Member who has not taken his oath in the Assembly entitled to be put on any Committee until he takes the oath, whether he has been elected or not?

Mr. President: Whose name?

Mr. Muhammad Yamin Khan: Sir Hugh Cocke, Sir. He has not taken the oath yet.

Mr. President: His name can be proposed to the Committee, but he cannot sit on the Committee unless he takes the oath.

Mr. M. S. Aney (Berar Representative): Can any name be suggested before taking the consent of the Member concerned to serve on that Committee? Was the consent of Sir Hugh Cocke taken to serve on the Committee?

Mr. G. M. Young: Certainly it was.

Mr. President: Has the Honourable Member any objection to add the name of Mr. N. C. Kelkar?

Mr. G. M. Young: No, Sir, none at all.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That Sir Hugh Cocke and Mr. N. C. Kelkar be appointed to the Select Committee on the Bill further to amend the Cantonments (House-Accommodation) Act, 1923, for certain purposes."

The motion was adopted.

THE TRANSFER OF PROPERTY (AMENDMENT) BILL.

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter (Law Member): Sir, I beg to move for leave to introduce a Bill to amend the Transfer of Property (Amendment) Act, 1929, for a certain purpose.

I will explain the reason for this. In section 4 we provided for the case where a document was registered in a Presidency town, but we omitted to provide for the case where a document which dealt with property scattered in several sub-districts was registered in one sub-district. It is that omission which is sought to be filled by the present Bill.

The motion was adopted.

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter: Sir, I introduce the Bill.

RESOLUTION RE FIXING MINIMUM WAGES.

Mr. President: The House will now resume discussion of the following Resolution moved by the Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra on the 26th September, 1929:

"This Assembly, having considered the Draft Convention and Recommendation regarding the machinery for fixing minimum wages in certain trades adopted at the Eleventh International Labour Conference, recommends to the Governor General in Council that he should not ratify the Draft Convention nor accept the Recommendation."

Pandit Hriday Nath Kunzru: Sir, this Convention, as pointed out last year by the Honourable Member who moved the Resolution, was passed in June 1928. A year and a half has therefore already elapsed since the Convention was adopted by the International Labour Conference. It is true that, since the Convention was passed, a Labour Commission has been appointed with very comprehensive terms of reference which include an inquiry regarding machinery for fixing a minimum average. But considering the wide scope of the terms of reference, one need not be surprised if the Commission's Report is not available much before the end of the next year. There need again be no surprise if the Government of India take about two years to arrive at definite views with regard to the recommendations of the Commission. I should therefore personally have liked that this convention should, in the interval, be accepted by the Government. Unfortunately, however, when I read the various articles of the Convention, I found that article 9 of the Convention stood in our way. It says that:

"A member who has ratified the Convention may denounce it after the expiration of ten years from the date on which the convention first comes into force."

It is obviously impossible for us, therefore, to accept the Convention as we shall not be able to modify it earlier than ten years since its introduction in the light of the Commission's recommendations. I propose, therefore, that we should not dispose of the Convention finally today. I know that, even if the Resolution is passed in the present form, there is nothing to prevent us from reconsidering the matter at some future date. But I should like the matter to be kept alive in a more formal way and to throw upon the Government the responsibility of bringing the question again to the notice of the House at a subsequent date. If you will therefore permit me, I shall move the following amendment:

"That the following words be added at the end of the Resolution: 'pending the Report of the Indian Labour Commission'."

Maulvi Abdul Matin Chaudhury (Assam: Muhammadan): Sir, I want to oppose both the Resolution and the amendment. When, Sir, a particular convention is passed by the International Labour Conference, surely it is not meant only for the benefit of the Western countries. On the other hand the idea is to raise up the standard of wages and the working condition in the less progressive countries of the East to the level of the more advanced countries of Europe and America. After discussion in two annual sessions of the International Labour Conference, after consultation with all the various Governments, and after hard Committee work for about three weeks, the representatives of labour, of capital and of the Governments of over 40 countries of the world come to a unanimous decision that such and such a convention ought to be universally adopted for improvement of the conditions of labour, and when that comes before the Government of India, the usual practice here seems to be summarily to reject that recommendation, saying that the Government of India should not ratify the Convention. In this particular case, Sir, what is it that we are asked not to ratify? The first Article of the Convention says:

"Each Member of the International Labour Organisation which ratifies this Convention undertakes to create or maintain machinery whereby minimum rates of wages can be fixed for workers employed in certain of the trades or parts of trades (and in particular, in home working trades) in which no arrangements exist for the effective regulation of wages by collective agreement or otherwise and wages are exceptionally low."

Now, Sir, it is an admitted fact that in India the workers are too disorganised to effect regulation of wages by collective agreement, and in many trades in India wages are exceptionally low when the two elements of disorganised labour and low wages co-exist in India it was the duty of the Government to set up a minimum wage-fixing machinery without waiting for the International Convention, but to remind them of their duty whenever the Government do not desire to do a thing, they have plenty of excuses. Now the latest excuse is that the Labour Commission is sitting. I remember, Sir, in a speech that Mr. Joshi delivered at Geneva he said that, if the Government of India trotted up the inquiry by the Labour Commission as an excuse for postponing labour legislation, he would rather resign from the Whitley Commission than serve on it. Now, as a matter of fact, the Whitley Commission cannot help us very much in the matter. This Convention refers particularly to home working trades which are, I maintain, outside the scope of the terms of reference to the Whitley Commission. Will the Honourable Member kindly say whether the Royal Commission is going to inquire into industries such as lace-making, knitting, hosiery, and the carpet industry, or any other similar home-working trades? If they are not going to do that, Sir, the recommendations of the Whitley Commission will be of no use to us in regard to the question of ratifying this Convention, and I therefore urge that the House refuse to accept the motion.

Maulvi Mohammad Shafee Daoodi (Tirhut Division: Muhammadan): I think, Sir, that the ratification of the Convention and the acceptance of the Recommendations of the International Labour Conference should not be delayed any longer. It ought to have been done long before, because everybody knows that labourers in these home industries suffer very much as they are much scattered all over the country, and they have no resources at their back, and unless we, who understand their difficulties, help them, there are no chances of this being done. I think, Sir, that the International Labour Convention at Geneva has done the right thing. So many countries were represented at the Conference and all men interested in labour were those who have discussed the matter, and I do not think we have any other course to adopt. My friend Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru says that, if the recommendation is adopted today and the Whitley Commission reject it, it will take ten years for us to revise it, but I do not think such an axiomatic truth can be denied by the Whitley Commission or by any Commission. It is absolutely necessary that things like this should be expedited and not postponed till the Report of the Whitley Commission. I would urge upon Government that it is in the fitness of things that matters like this should not be postponed, otherwise I should say, in the interests of Government themselves, that they will have greater difficulties to face later on if they are not going to look to the interests of such people for whom there is nobody to speak strongly. Unless their case is taken up by Government, they will have much greater cause of grievance against the Government, and I should not like, Sir, that this popular Assembly, sitting here as the representative of the people, should give its vote for postponing the ratification of the Convention. I am strongly opposed to postponement and I would ask my friend over there, Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru, to consider this question again and see his way to throw out this Resolution of the Government and press the Government to accept the draft Convention and the Recommendations.

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra (Member for Industries and Labour): Sir, I may state at the outset that I am quite willing to accept the amendment proposed by my Honourable friend Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru, if you, Sir, are prepared to put that amendment to the vote of the House. The opposition on the part of my friends Mr. Abdul Matin Chaudhury and Maulvi Mohamed Shafee Daoodi to the course of action proposed by Government is, I submit, based on a misapprehension of the situation. Mr. Abdul Matin Chaudhury, if I heard him correctly, stated that this Draft Convention referred to home-working trades only. Article 1 refers to "workers employed in certain of the trades or parts of trades and in particular, in home-working trades . . ." From Article 2 it is also clear that the convention is not confined to home-working trades or parts of such trades. Now, Sir, supposing Government had decided to ratify this particular Convention, what would the implication be arising therefrom? Is it seriously contended that Government must forthwith take a plunge, a leap in the dark and ask this House immediately to pass any legislation which it might have been possible for them to bring forward? In fact I, who am the responsible Member of the Government in this matter, cannot yet even sketch out roughly in my mind what would be the form of that legislation. Before a Bill could be given proper shape, it would have been necessary to start extensive inquiries, in consultation with the parties concerned, as to what would be the form of the machinery. The Royal Commission on Labour is examining this matter already as one of the various problems to which it is devoting its consideration. My friend Mr. Abdul Matin Chaudhury is certainly not correct in saying that they will not deal with home industries. Now, the expression "home industries" is rather indefinite. Take the cotton mill industry of Bombay. Is it not partly a home industry? Is not part of the production intended for consumption in India?

Maulvi Abdul Matin Chaudhury: May I know if home-working trade includes the cotton mills of Bombay?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: I do not quite understand what my Honourable friend means.

Maulvi Abdul Matin Chaudhury: Sir, by home-working trade, the International Labour Conference meant those trades in which workers did their work at home and in which the difficulty of organising them was inherent in the nature of the work that they were doing.

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: I am afraid I did not quite follow my Honourable friend's arguments. I think, however, the Honourable Member specifically referred to the carpet industry. I know as a matter of fact that the Royal Commission went to Amritsar to examine the position of the carpet industry there. That being so, I am sorry that I cannot agree to take action on the lines suggested either by my friend, Mr. Abdul Matin Chaudhury or my friend, Maulvi Shafee Daoodi. At the same time, in order that the matter may not be lost sight of and may be again taken up for consideration by this House when the recommendations of the Whitley Commission have reached Government, I am quite willing to accept the amendment proposed by my friend, Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru.

Maulvi Abdul Matin Chaudhury: Do I understand that, after the Whitley Commission have made their recommendations, the Government will come up with this same Resolution before this House?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: There is no question of this Resolution being brought forward again. My Honourable friend must realise that this House will cease to exist in the near future and the Resolution, if not disposed of by them, will have in fact lapsed automatically.

Mr. President: The original Resolution was:

"This Assembly, having considered the Draft Convention and Recommendation regarding the machinery for fixing minimum wages in certain trades adopted at the Eleventh International Labour Conference, recommends to the Governor General in Council that he should not ratify the Draft Convention nor accept the Recommendation."

Since which the following amendment has been moved:

"That the following words be added at the end of the Resolution:

'pending the Report of the Indian Labour Commission'."

The question is that that amendment be made.

The motion was adopted.

Mr. President: The question is that the following Resolution, as amended, be adopted:

"This Assembly, having considered the Draft Convention and Recommendation regarding the machinery for fixing minimum wages in certain trades adopted at the Eleventh International Labour Conference, recommends to the Governor General in Council that he should not ratify the Draft Convention nor accept the Recommendation pending the Report of the Indian Labour Commission."

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

COMMISSIONER OF MEDICAL QUALIFICATIONS IN INDIA.

25. Dr. B. S. Moonje (on behalf of Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh): (a) Is it a fact that, in consequence of a letter addressed by Sir Donald Macalister, Chairman of the General Medical Council, to the Secretary of State for India, on the 12th June last, Colonel Needham was temporarily appointed Commissioner of Medical Qualifications in India, and that he was expected to assume charge on the 1st November, 1929?

(b) Is it intended to bring up again this question before the Legislative Assembly at the instance of the General Medical Council in England?

Sir Frank Noyce: (a) The General Medical Council of Great Britain, in its letter of the 12th June, 1929, emphasised the necessity for the appointment of a whole-time Commissioner of Medical Qualifications and Standards. Government decided to offer the post to Bt.-Col. R. A. Needham, but the offer was subsequently withdrawn. According to the original arrangements, Bt.-Col. Needham would have sailed for India on the 1st November, 1929.

(b) The question of the measures which should be adopted to ensure the continued recognition of Indian medical degrees by the General Medical Council is still under consideration of Government.

Dr. B. S. Moonje: Was any compensation paid for cancelling the appointment?

Sir Frank Noyce: No, Sir.

CONDITION OF INDIANS REPATRIATED FROM SOUTH AFRICA.

26. Dr. B. S. Moonje (on behalf of Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh): (a) Will Government be pleased to say how many Indians have been repatriated from South Africa since the scheme has been in force; and what provisions have been made by the Government, and what facilities have been provided for the repatriated Indians after their arrival in this country from South Africa?

(b) Has the attention of the Government been drawn to the Leader, dated the 20th October, 1929, (page 7) in which a letter is published over the signature of P. B. Naidu, Allahabad; a repatriate from South Africa, in which he complains about the distressing condition of the repatriates from South Africa on their arrival in India, and the failure of the Government to make any provisions for them in this country?

Sir Frank Noyce: (a) The total number of Indians who have so far returned to India from South Africa under the scheme of assisted emigration is 7,376. As regards the second part of the question, the attention of the Honourable Member is invited to parts (a) and (b) of the reply given on the 11th September, 1929, to Mr. Rafi Ahmad Kidwai's question No. 399.

(b) Yes. Mr. Naidu is not an "assisted emigrant" and returned to India long before the Cape Town Agreement was concluded. Strictly speaking, therefore, he is not one of those for whose assistance the special staff in Madras has been appointed. But the Government of India take a broad view of their responsibilities in the matter, and are doing what they can to secure employment for Mr. Naidu. Government have no reason to believe that the hardship complained of by Mr. Naidu is common among those who have come back from South Africa under the scheme of assisted emigration.

GRIEVANCES OF INDIANS IN FIJI.

27. Dr. B. S. Moonje (on behalf of Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh): (a) Is it a fact that in Fiji the number of Indians is more than 60,000 while that of the Europeans is about 4,000 only, but that in the Legislative Council of Fiji, according to the present constitution, the Indians elect three, and the Europeans six members, through separate electorates? Why is the representation of the Indians so small?

(b) Is it a fact that the motion of the Indian members recommending the provision of a common electoral roll was rejected by the votes of the European members in the Legislative Council, and that the Indian members resigned in protest?

(c) Are Government aware that a Royal Commission, which was recently appointed to inquire into the grievances of the Indians in Fiji, have recorded that "Indians have been deprived of representation on the Municipal Councils since 1915, and have no facility for participating in Municipal affairs to look after their requirements and interests"; that the Municipal Council of Suva "is not carrying out its obligations to Indian rate-payers"; that "most of the roads in Indian areas are in a disgraceful condition, lighting arrangements in such areas are bad, and measures of discrimination have been adopted on racial grounds in the matters of public baths and library"; and that the Levuka Municipal Council "collects education rate from Indian taxpayers, although Indian children are not admitted to the public school at Levuka"?

(d) Are Government prepared to make a statement indicating in brief detail when and what steps they have so far taken to remove the grievances of the Indians in Fiji, and with what result?

Sir Frank Noyce: (a) The attention of the Honourable Member is invited to the answer given by Mr. G. S. Bajpai on the 4th September 1928 to his unstarred question No. 22.

(b) The motion was supported only by the Indian Members of the Legislative Council who withdrew after its rejection and subsequently resigned.

(c) The statements quoted by the Honourable Member occur in the Minority Report of the Indian Members of the Municipal Franchise Committee set up by the Colonial Government and not by a Royal Commission.

(d) Papers relating to the Indian position in Fiji were published in the Government of India, Department of Education, Health and Lands, Resolution No. 24, dated 12th January, 1927. Since then the Municipal question, referred to in part (c) of the Honourable Member's interpellation, and the franchise question, referred to in part (b), have again come into prominence and are at present the subject of correspondence with His Majesty's Secretary of State for India. I regret that it is not possible for me to disclose the contents of this correspondence, which is confidential. I can, however, assure the House that the representations of the Government of India on such questions will always be framed with due regard to the legitimate views and wishes of the Indian communities concerned.

Dr. B. S. Moonje: The number of Indians is more than 60,000 and the number of Europeans is about 4,000. May I know what was the principle on which this representation of three for the Indians and six for the Europeans was based?

Sir Frank Noyce: As already stated I would refer the Honourable Member to the answer given by Mr. Bajpai to a similar question on the 4th of September.

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: Have Government received the Report of the Municipal Franchise Committee?

Sir Frank Noyce: Yes.

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: Will a copy of it be placed in the Library?

Sir Frank Noyce: I will see if that can be done.

Dr. B. S. Moonje: Who asked for the separate electorates? Was it the Europeans or the Indians or the Bureaucracy who asked for separate electorates?

Sir Frank Noyce: I am sorry I could not quite follow the Honourable Member's question.

Dr. B. S. Moonje: Who asked for separate electorates in Fiji?

Sir Frank Noyce: I should like to ask for notice of that question.

INTERESTS OF INDIANS IN CEYLON.

28. Dr. B. S. Moonje (on behalf of Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh): (a) Is it a fact that 40 to 50 per cent. of the Indians in Ceylon were permanent residents, and entitled to franchise, if otherwise qualified?

(b) Will Government be pleased to state how far the recommendations of the Donoughmore Report have been dealt with, in so far as they affect the rights and interests of the Indians in Ceylon?

Sir Frank Noyce: (a) Government have no information beyond what is given in chapter V, part II of the Report of the Special Commission on the Constitution of Ceylon.

(b) The recommendations of the Governor and the orders passed thereon are contained in the Ceylon Sessional Paper XXXIV—1929, a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House. The matter is now the subject of correspondence between the Government of India and His Majesty's Secretary of State for India.

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: Is it a fact that the orders recently passed by the Colonial Secretary will place the Indians, that is the emigrant Indians in Ceylon at a disadvantage?

Sir Frank Noyce: I think the Honourable Member is asking for an expression of opinion?

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: I am not asking for an expression of opinion at all. May I know whether the recommendations made by the Ceylon Reforms Commission were more liberal than the orders passed by the Secretary of State for the Colonies?

Sir Frank Noyce: That is so; but I think the Honourable Member is as capable of drawing that inference as I am.

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: May I know whether under the orders passed by the Secretary of State for the Colonies the number of Indian electors will be the same as under the recommendations of the Ceylon Commission?

Sir Frank Noyce: I cannot say off-hand.

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: Has the Honourable Member read the despatch of the Secretary of State for the Colonies to the Government of Ceylon?

Sir Frank Noyce: Yes, Sir.

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: Is it not a feature of that Report?

Mr. Arthur Moore: May I ask, Sir, if the Honourable Member is aware of it, why should he ask a question?

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: It is for the President to regulate the proceedings of the House. I did not know that there was more than one President.

Is it a fact that, under the orders of the Secretary of State for the Colonies, the number of Indian electors would be less than it would have been had the recommendation of the Ceylon Commission been accepted?

Sir Frank Noyce: That is so.

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: Have the Government of India brought that matter to the notice of His Majesty's Government?

Sir Frank Noyce: I have informed the Honourable Member that the matter is under correspondence between the Government of India and His Majesty's Secretary of State for India. I may also add for the information of the Honourable Member that the Government of India propose to refer the matter to the Standing Emigration Committee and obtain their advice.

THE EAST AFRICAN QUESTION.

29. Dr. B. S. Moonje (on behalf of Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh): (a) Has the attention of the Government been drawn to the following passage in their despatch of 1920 on the East African question?

"We desire to reiterate our opinion that there should be a common electoral roll, and a common franchise on a reasonable property basis, plus an educational test without racial discrimination, for all British subjects. We believe that this is the true solution of the East African problem."

(b) Have the Government, in their recent despatch of September last to the India Office, emphasised the above points and are they prepared to publish the despatch? If not, why not?

Sir Frank Noyce: (a) Yes.

(b) The Government of India still hold the views quoted by the Honourable Member. As regards the Honourable Member's request for publication of the despatch, Government regret their inability to consider the matter until the decision of His Majesty's Government on the East African question has been announced. Until then the correspondence must be treated as confidential.

RECOMMENDATIONS OF THE ROYAL COMMISSION ON AGRICULTURE.

39. Mr. C. Duraiswamy Aiyangar: (a) Will Government be pleased to state how many of the recommendations of the Royal Commission on Agriculture will be given effect to in this and the ensuing years?

(b) Which are the recommendations that will be given effect to?

(c) Do Government propose to recruit from outside India in carrying out the proposals of the Royal Commission?

Sir Frank Noyce: (a) and (b). Statements showing the action taken by the Government of India and by Local Governments and Administrations on the recommendations of the Royal Commission are under preparation and will be placed in the Members' Library as soon as they are complete.

(c) Yes.

†40*—42*.

REBATES FOR CO-OPERATIVE SOCIETIES.

43. Mr. C. Duraiswamy Aiyangar: (a) Is it a fact that rebates to the extent of 75 per cent. are granted to the co-operative banks and societies in the Bombay Presidency on the money order and insurance charges paid by them?

(b) Is a similar concession shown to similar societies and banks in the other Presidencies? If not, do Government propose to order rebates even in the case of other provinces?

Sir Frank Noyce: (a) In Bombay the Local Government refund to Co-operative Societies three quarters of the commission on postal money orders when these are employed for remittances between Societies.

(b) A similar concession has been granted in some other provinces. As the cost of the concession falls on provincial revenues, the Government of India do not propose to issue orders on the subject.

†44*—61*.

MEMBERS OF THE HISTORICAL RECORDS COMMISSION.

62. Mr. M. S. Aney: (a) Will Government be pleased to give the total number and names of the members of the Historical Records Commission?

(b) How is the selection of these members made?

(c) Are bodies carrying on historical research work in the country, such as Itihas Sanshodhak Mandal of Poona consulted?

(d) What are the facilities, such as travelling allowances, etc., given to the members of the Commission?

(e) Is any discrimination being made in regard to these facilities between ordinary members and co-opted members?

(f) If the answer to part (e) is in the affirmative, will Government be pleased to state whether they propose to take steps immediately to extend the same facilities to co-opted members as are being given to the ordinary members?

Sir Frank Noyce: (a) A list of the members of the Indian Historical Records Commission is placed on the table.

(b) They are appointed by the Government of India.

(c) The reply is in the negative. I may, however, state for the Honourable Member's information that two like members of the Itihas Sanshodhak Mandal of Poona (viz., Sir Jadunath Sarkar and Mr. G. S. Sardesai) are members of the Commission.

(d) Members of the Commission who are Government servants draw travelling and daily allowances, when they attend the annual meeting of the Commission, at the rates admissible to them under the rules for journeys on Government business. Non-official members are granted these allowances at the rates admissible to first grade Government servants.

(e) For the annual meeting of the Commission it is usual to co-opt members from the province or State in which the meeting is held. Other members are co-opted at the request of Local Governments, Indian States and Universities, which presumably meet their travelling expenses. A few corresponding members and other persons interested in historical research, who desire to attend the meeting of the Commission at their own expense, are also appointed as co-opted members.

(f) Government do not consider that the present rules are inequitable.

RULES FOR THE APPOINTMENT OF THE HISTORICAL RECORDS COMMISSION.

63. Mr. M. S. Aney: Will Government be pleased to lay on the table any circulars or rules which they might have framed for the appointment of the Historical Records Commission and regulation of the procedure, etc.?

Sir Frank Noyce: A copy of the Government of India Resolution No. 77, dated the 21st March, 1919, announcing the establishment of the Indian Historical Records Commission has been placed in the Library of the House.

SUPPLY TO RESEARCH INSTITUTIONS OF RECORDS OF THE HISTORICAL RECORDS COMMISSION.

64. Mr. M. S. Aney: (a) Will Government be pleased to furnish a list of the historical research institutions in this country to which the copies of the reports of the Historical Records Commission are supplied free of cost?

(b) If there be no such list maintained for the supply of copies free of cost, will Government be pleased to state whether they propose to consider the suggestion favourably in the near future?

Sir Frank Noyce: (a) A list of the institutions in India to which copies of the proceedings of the eleventh session of the Commission (last published) were supplied free of cost is placed on the table. The Indian Universities are also on the free distribution list.

List of institutions to which the proceedings of the eleventh session of the Indian Historical Records Commission were supplied free of cost.

CONGESTION OF DELHI CITY.

68. The Revd. J. C. Chatterjee: (a) Are Government aware that the old city of Delhi is greatly congested and that public health is endangered by the existence of a large number of iron foundries and factories within the city area?

(b) Are Government prepared to allot land outside the city for the removal of these foundries and factories?

Sir Frank Noyce: (a) Certain parts of the old city are greatly congested. There are several factories and iron foundries within the city limits, but they are under the supervision of the Municipal Health Officer. I would invite the Honourable Member's attention to section 121 of the Punjab Municipal Act, 1911, which is applicable to the Delhi Province. This section requires inter alia that a licence shall be obtained from the Municipal Committee before a place can be used as a manufactory, engine-house or place of business from which offensive or unwholesome smells, noises or smoke arise.

(b) If the Delhi Municipal Committee at any time decides to refuse such licences, and if application is made to Government for the location of the factories elsewhere, the matter will receive due consideration.

The Revd. J. C. Chatterjee: Are Government satisfied that the Delhi Municipality have used their discretion rightly in the matter of allowing factories and engine-houses to be erected in the admittedly congested parts of the old city?

Sir Frank Noyce: I have no information on the subject.

The Revd. J. C. Chatterjee: Will the Honourable Member make inquiries into the matter as it concerns a matter of vital importance to the public health of the city?

Sir Frank Noyce: Yes, Sir.

BUS SERVICE BETWEEN NEW AND OLD DELHI.

69. The Revd. J. C. Chatterjee: (a) Are Government aware that no regular bus or tram service exists between the old and the new cities of Delhi, or between the old city and its suburbs?

(b) Have Government taken any steps to provide suitable means of communication between these parts and if not, do they propose to take up the matter at an early date?

Sir Frank Noyce: (a) Yes.

(b) The question of providing transport facilities between Old and New Delhi was considered in 1926, when the railway authorities proposed to run a motor bus service from the Delhi Main Station to New Delhi. The proposal, however, involved the grant of a monopoly to the railway which the Local Government was not prepared to allow. A similar scheme put forward by the Delhi Electric Tramways and Lighting Company, Limited, was also negatived as the Company could not agree to the routes proposed. The next scheme emanated from the Gwalior and Northern India Transport Co., Delhi. This involved a Government subsidy and was eventually rejected by the New Capital Committee.

A scheme framed by Messrs. Govan Bros. was submitted to the Delhi Municipal Committee in 1929, but the Committee were not prepared to give the monopoly asked for.

The matter is primarily one for private enterprise, and Government are not prepared to provide a bus service themselves.

The Revd. J. C. Chatterjee: Do Government recognise that considerable hardship is caused to the general public by the absence of adequate communications between the two cities?

Sir Frank Noyce: That may be so, but their view is that the remedy for that hardship is that given in my reply.

The Revd. J. C. Chatterjee: Do I understand that in case the local bodies are not able or willing to do their duty, Government refuse to take any steps to provide these conveniences for the public?

Sir Frank Noyce: As I have said, Government regard this matter as one for private enterprise, which I understand is not entirely lacking in this matter. I believe there are a certain number of private buses which ply between Old and New Delhi, at any rate.

The Revd. J. C. Chatterjee: Are Government prepared to make an inquiry into the subject in order to facilitate the provision of this convenience between the two cities?

Sir Frank Noyce: No, Sir. I cannot give an undertaking to that effect.

GOVERNMENT POLICY RE MEDICAL COLLEGES IN INDIA.

75. Mr. Ram Narayan Singh: (a) Are Government aware of the fact that the attitude of the British General Medical Council towards the Universities and the Medical Colleges in India has caused great resentment all over this country?

(b) Will Government be pleased to state their own policy in connection with the subject referred to in part (a)?

Sir Frank Noyce: (a) Government are fully cognisant of public opinion on this question.

(b) The action which should be taken to ensure continued recognition of Indian medical degrees by the General Medical Council is at present under their consideration.

MEDICAL DEGREES IN BRITISH COLONIES.

81. Dr. B. S. Moonje: (a) Will Government please state whether the medical degrees of the British colonies such as Canada, Australia and South Africa are recognised as registrable by the General Medical Council in England?

(b) If the reply to part (a) is in the affirmative, is any British officer or are any officers of the Indian Medical Service or are any other officers appointed by the General Medical Council of England as Commissioner of Medical Qualifications for examining the system of medical education of those countries for certifying it as fit for recognition?

(c) If the answer to part (b) is in the affirmative, who pays for them?

Sir Frank Noyce: (a) The medical degrees granted by certain Universities and medical colleges in Canada, Australia and South Africa are recognised as registrable in Great Britain by the General Medical Council.

(b) No. These countries have their own Statutory Medical Councils.

(c) Does not arise.

MEMORIAL FROM INCOME-TAX OFFICERS IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY.

91. Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: (a) Will Government be pleased to state when orders will be passed on the memorial submitted by the Income-tax officers of the Bombay Presidency regarding annual increments?

(b) Do Government intend to give retrospective effect to the promotion of these officers, at least from the time when their memorial was received by Government?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: (a) The position at present is that this proposal has been before the Standing Finance Committee who have recommended that it might justifiably be postponed. The proposal, together with a number of other similar proposals, is still under consideration by Government.

(b) Is at present a hypothetical question and may not arise. I can inform the Honourable Member however that it is an almost invariable rule that retrospective effect should not be given to such revisions.

Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: Is it a fact that the pay of the Secretary of the Central Board of Revenue has been increased from Rs. 1,700 to Rs. 2,500?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: I do not see how that question arises out of the Honourable Member's question to which I gave an answer.

Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: It arises this way, that if that increase of pay has been sanctioned to the Secretary, there is absolutely no reason for postponing this increment in the case of subordinates.

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: I am afraid I must adhere to my own opinion that that question does not arise out of the question to which I gave an answer.

Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: I would submit that this arises in the way in which I have explained.

Mr. President: It does not arise.

APPOINTMENTS IN THE CUSTOMS DEPARTMENT, KARACHI.

92. Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: (a) Will Government be pleased to state if they have received a scheme from the Collector of Customs, Karachi, regarding an increase in the number of appraisers, examiners and clerks and as to increment of their salaries?

(b) If the reply to part (a) is in affirmative, will Government be pleased to state if the scheme has been submitted to the Standing Finance Committee? If not, why not?

(c) From what date will the scheme come into operation, after it is passed?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: (a) Yes, but no increase in pay was recommended by the Collector of Customs in respect of existing posts.

(b) Yes, the case was submitted to the Standing Finance Committee and that body has recommended that the proposals should be held over for the present.

(c) Does not arise.

APPOINTMENTS IN THE INCOME-TAX DEPARTMENT IN SIND.

93. Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: (a) Is it a fact that non-qualified men who are not eligible for Government service have been recruited in the Income-tax Department in Sind in contravention of Memorandum No. P-186/25 of the 5th February, 1926?

(b) If the reply to part (a) is in the affirmative, will Government be pleased to state reasons?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: The Government of India have called for a report, the result of which will be communicated to the Honourable Member in due course.

THE NEW PENSION RULES.

94. Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: Will Government be pleased to state how much more time they will take in passing the new pension rules?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: As regards the Provincial and Subordinate Services under the Provincial Governments, I would refer the Honourable Member to my reply to unstarred question No. 89 by K. B.

Sarfaraz Hussain Khan, published on page 81 of the Legislative Assembly Debates for the 2nd September 1929. The pension rules for the other Services are still under preparation. I must hesitate to promise any definite date for their completion. I can only give the Honourable Member the assurance that they are being proceeded with as rapidly as possible consistently with the claims of other work and without engaging special additional staff.

LEAVE PAY OF PEONS IN THE INCOME-TAX AND CUSTOMS DEPARTMENTS AT KARACHI.

95. Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: (a) Will Government be pleased to state if it is a fact that the peons in the Income-tax and Customs Departments at Karachi, when proceeding on privilege leave, do not get their full pay, if their substitute is appointed, whereas clerks and other officers get full pay while on privilege leave?

(b) Do Government contemplate passing orders that peons should get full pay while on privilege leave, even if their substitutes are appointed?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: (a) The Government of India have issued general orders under Fundamental Rule 2 continuing the restrictions formerly imposed by Articles 147 (iii) and 321 (a) of the Civil Service Regulations on the grant of leave to inferior servants. The result is that the absentee allowance of the substantive incumbent must not exceed what remains from his pay, after provision is made for the efficient discharge of his duties during his absence, except when, in the resulting acting arrangements, an inferior servant who has no substantive appointment is given more than half the pay of the appointment in which he acts, in which case the excess over half-pay granted to him may, at the discretion of the authority sanctioning the leave, be disregarded altogether in calculating the sum available for the leave allowance of the absentee, and the acting allowance paid in consequence of his absence.

(b) I would refer the Honourable Member to the first paragraph of the answer which I gave on 2nd September last to unstarred question No. 51, put by Khan Bahadur Sarfaraz Hussain Khan.

CHARGES FOR DISINFECTANTS AND FILE BOARDS IN SECOND CLASS HEAD POST OFFICES.

96. Mr. Anwar-ul-Azim: Will Government be pleased to state whether the feniles and flat files used in second class head offices are sanctioned from the allotment of fluctuating charges placed at the disposal of the Superintendents of Post Offices? If so, why are orders issued to some of the Superintendents of Post Offices to meet such charges out of the contingent allowance sanctioned for head offices?

Mr. H. A. Sams: It is presumed that the Honourable Member's question relates to the purchase of disinfectants and file boards by Head Postmasters from the allowances sanctioned for each second class head post office for the provision of stationery (twine and sealing wax, etc.), needed for the conduct of work in their offices. No orders have been issued by the Director General in the terms described by the Honourable Member. On the contrary, in prescribing a formula for calculating the contingent allowances for all post offices (including head post offices) it has been expressly laid down that the cost of such items as polish, brooms, etc., of like nature to disinfectants should be specially sanctioned by Postmasters General or Superintendents. If the Honourable Member can acquaint me with the names of the postal divisions in which the orders to which he refers have been issued, I shall correct any misunderstanding which has arisen.

APPOINTMENT OF INSPECTORS OF POST OFFICES.

97. Mr. Anwar-ul-Azim: Will Government be pleased to state whether it is a fact that the posts of the Engineering Supervisors of Telegraphs were formerly filled up exclusively by the telegraphists, and that now-a-days 50 per cent. of the posts are filled up by outsiders? If so, why cannot such procedure be introduced for the posts of the Inspectors of Post Offices?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: Yes. It is a fact that 50 per cent. of the posts of Engineering Supervisors are filled up by direct outside recruitment as a sufficient number of qualified candidates are not available departmentally.

Direct recruitment for the cadre of the Inspectors of Post Offices is not considered necessary, as a sufficient number of officials with the requisite educational qualifications and practical knowledge of Post Office work are available from men already in the service.

APPOINTMENT OF MUSLIM CLERKS IN OFFICES OF SUPERINTENDENTS OF POST OFFICES.

98. Mr. Anwar-ul-Azim: Are Government aware of the fact that Muslim clerks are never employed in offices of the Superintendents of Post Offices, and that, if employed, they act for very short periods? If so, why? How many clerks are there in the Office of the Superintendent, Post Office, Chittagong and how many of them are Muslims?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: Muslim clerks are employed in offices of Superintendents of Post Offices.

The second part of the question does not therefore arise.

In the office of the Superintendent of Post Offices, Chittagong there are four clerks, of whom at present none is a Muslim. There was lately a Muslim clerk in that office for a period of over a year and eight months, but he has recently been transferred to a post office as a signaller.

INCREASED WORK CAUSED BY MAINTAINING SERVICE ROLLS FOR POST OFFICE RUNNERS.

99. Mr. Anwar-ul-Azim: Are Government aware of the fact that orders have been issued to maintain service rolls for the runners and that the runners should get regular leave as is granted to other menials of the Postal Department, and that this has caused a heavy increase of work in the Accounts Branch of the head offices? If so, what action, if any, has been taken by Government to increase the staff to meet the situation? If not, why not?

Mr. H. A. Sams: The answer to the first part of the question is in the affirmative. As regards the second part, Government have no information whether the new procedure has resulted in any heavy increase of work in the Accounts Branch of Head Offices, but, if it has, it is within the competence of Heads of Circles to entertain such additional staff as may be necessary to cope with it.

REPRESENTATION OF MINORITY COMMUNITIES IN THE POSTS AND TELEGRAPHS DEPARTMENT.

100. Mr. Anwar-ul-Azim: Will Government be pleased to state whether it is a fact that the orders issued from time to time regarding the ill-representation of minority communities in the Posts and Telegraphs Department are not properly attended to? If so, do Government propose to introduce a chapter in the annual report of the Department regarding the minority communities in the Department? If not, why not?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: The attention of the Honourable Member is invited to the reply given to part (a) of his question No. 123, in the last Session of the Legislative Assembly. Government do not propose to introduce in the Annual Report of the Director General a chapter regarding minority communities, but the Director General will introduce a statement showing the distribution of new recruits by communities.

ADVERTISEMENTS FOR THE POST OF DEPUTY SECRETARY IN THE LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY DEPARTMENT.

101. Mr. Anwar-ul-Azim: Will Government be pleased to state in how many Bengal newspapers the post of the Deputy Secretary in the Legislative Assembly Department was advertised, and for how long?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: The advertisement relating to the post of Deputy Secretary in the Legislative Assembly Department was, according to the standing practice of the Public Service Commission, published in one issue of the following newspapers in Bengal:—

1. The Statesman,
2. The Anglo-Indian Review, and
3. The Young men of India, Associated Press.

It was also published in the Calcutta Gazette.

CONVEYANCE OF THE POST FROM CHITTAGONG TO COX'S BAZAR.

102. Mr. Anwar-ul-Azim: Will Government be pleased to state what is the distance of Cox's Bazar from Chittagong town and how long it takes now for the post to travel from Chittagong to that place?

Mr. H. A. Sams: The distance between Cox's Bazar and Chittagong is 84 miles. The mails take 34½ hours to traverse that distance. The question of speeding up the mail is receiving my attention.

EXTENSION OF THE DOHAZARI CHITTAGONG LINE OF THE ASSAM BENGAL RAILWAY.

103. Mr. Anwar-ul-Azim: Will Government be pleased to state whether the Dohazari-Chittagong line of the Assam Bengal Railway will be extended beyond Dohajari? If so, up to what place? Are Government aware that Sholasahar Station on the Chittagong Nazirhat Railway is at an awkward and uninhabited part of Panchalaish Thana, and that that is giving an impetus to the motor trade at the expense of the Railway? Is it a fact that Sholasahar Station is four miles from court and that mostly the people of the north side get down there to come to court?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: No extension of the Dohazari-Chittagong line beyond Dohazari is at present contemplated. Government are not aware that Sholasahar Station is awkwardly situated, but I am drawing the attention of the Agent, Assam Bengal Railway to this portion of the Honourable Member's question. Sholasahar Station is about three miles from the centre of Chittagong, but trains from Dohazari will run into Chittagong and not terminate at Sholasahar.

NUMBER OF MUSLIM LAWYERS EMPLOYED BY THE ASSAM BENGAL RAILWAY.

104. Mr. Anwar-ul-Azim: Will Government be pleased to state how many railway pleaders are employed by the Assam Bengal Railway and at what annual cost? How many Muslims are employed by this Railway system as lawyers?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: One pleader, who is a Hindu, is retained by the Assam Bengal Railway Administration on a retaining fee of Rs. 100 per mensem, besides which he receives fees for cases conducted on behalf of the Administration.

In addition, for the conduct of cases at out stations, local pleaders are engaged as found necessary, and paid fees for the work done by them.

ROAD BOARDS IN THE PROVINCES.

105. Mr. Anwar-ul-Azim: Will Government be pleased to state how many provinces in India have got Road Boards, and what are their relations with the Central Road Committee?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: So far as the Government of India are aware, seven provinces have Road Boards. The Boards have no relations with the Central Standing Committee for Roads.

THE ASSAM BENGAL RAILWAY.

106. Mr. Anwar-ul-Azim: Will Government be pleased to state whether it is a fact that they are abandoning their idea of making the Assam Bengal Railway a State Railway? If so, why?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: The question of taking over the Assam Bengal Railway on the expiry of the working contract with the Assam Bengal Railway Company on the 31st December 1931 is under consideration and no decision has yet been arrived at.

NAVIGABILITY OF THE PORT OF CHITTAGONG.

107. Mr. Anwar-ul-Azim: Will Government be pleased to state whether it is a fact that the port of Chittagong is not fit for navigation for 24 hours, and if so, why? Is that compatible with its status as a major port?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: The Government of India understand, on inquiry from the Port Commissioners, that the Port of Chittagong is fit for navigation throughout the day. The latter part of the question does not arise.

SITE SELECTED FOR QUARTERS FOR EMPLOYEES OF THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA PRESS IN NEW DELHI.

108. Mr. E. F. Sykes: (a) Do Government recollect replying to part (g) of my starred question No. 927 of 6th March, 1928, viz., "are Government prepared to consider the question of locating the press in the Industrial area, or in some site other than that at present selected?" and that the answer was in the negative?

(b) Are Government aware that nevertheless the press quarters have already been erected on the extension of Parliament Street beyond Barakhamba?

(c) Was this done with the approval of the Government of India?

(d) If so, will Government please explain the very sudden change in their determination not even to consider another site?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: (a), (b) and (c). Yes.

(d) The attention of the Honourable Member is drawn to the reply given by me in this House on the 3rd April, 1929, to part (a) of Mr. S. C. Mitra's unstarred question No. 459.

COST OF OPERATION ON VARIOUS RAILWAYS.

109. Mr. E. F. Sykes: (a) Has the attention of Government been called to the figures given below and abstracted from the Administration Report of the Railway Department for the year 1927-28, Vol. II?

(b) Will Government give explanations of the extreme variations exhibited therein, more especially with regard to the following comparisons?

(i) The North Western Railway with a passenger density slightly less than that of the Bengal and North Western Railway and a lead slightly greater, spends 2.61 times as much per passenger mile as the Bengal and North Western Railway.

(ii) The East Indian Railway with a passenger density more than twice that of the Rohilkhand and Kumaon Railway and a passenger lead nearly twice as great nevertheless spends ten per cent. more on carrying a passenger a mile.

(iii) The goods density of the East Indian Railway is 5.23 times that of the Bengal and North Western Railway, its haul 1.85 times as long, its wagon loading double, and yet its cost of haulage per ton-mile is only six per cent. less.

(iv) The goods density of the North Western Railway is three times that of the Rohilkhand and Kumaon Railway the haul a good deal over twice as much, and yet the cost of haulage per ton-mile is only two per cent. less.

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: Sir, as my reply is long and technical, I will, if the Honourable Member has no objection, lay it on the table.

(a) Yes, except that figures of 'costs-pies per passenger mile' are not to be found in the Administration Report referred to.

(b) The comparisons made are vitiated owing to the figures of cost per passenger mile as given by the Honourable Member not being correct. Apart from the fact that it is impracticable to allocate definitely to passenger traffic the cost of the numerous operations which are joint for all traffic, the allocation of cost as between "coaching" and "goods" services made by railways for statistical purposes is in proportion to the gross ton miles in each case; an arrangement which is purely empirical and, therefore, may not coincide with the actual facts. But even if a comparison were possible, there would be variations as between the railways referred to for the following reasons:

- (i) the North Western and East Indian Railways are broad gauge, whereas the Bengal and North Western and Rohilkund and Kumaon Railways are metre gauge. Their density figures to be comparable must, therefore, be expressed as a percentage of their respective capacity. Moreover, about one fourth of the total mileage of the North Western Railway consists of strategic lines where the cost of operation is higher than on the rest of the system.

- (ii) the Bengal and North Western Railway passes through flat country having only 1·6 per cent. of its line with a grade steeper than 1 in 300. Similar figures for other lines are:—

Rohilkund and Kumaon	9·1
North Western	22·3
East Indian	12·5

Consequently, less tractive effort is necessary to haul trains over the Bengal and North Western and Rohilkund and Kumaon Railways than over the North Western and East Indian Railways.

- (iii) The Bengal and North Western and Rohilkund and Kumaon Railways operate over areas where the standard of wages is low as compared with the areas traversed by the North Western and East Indian Railways.

- (iv) The cost of fuel on the Bengal and North Western and Rohilkund and Kumaon Railways is considerably lower than on the North Western Railway owing to the relatively short distance from the coalfields.

- (v) The Bengal and North Western and Rohilkund and Kumaon Railways' systems do not include important through routes as do the North Western and East Indian Railways'. Their trains are consequently comparatively slower and so large an expenditure on the upkeep of track, station equipment, etc., as on the North Western and East Indian Railways is not called for.

- (vi) The adoption of more modern practices in railway working in regard to the interlocking of points and signals, the provision of vacuum brakes on goods trains, high level platforms, etc., on the North Western and East Indian Railways necessitate greater expenditure.

INDIAN TRADE COMMISSIONERS.

110. *Mr. B. Das: (a) Will Government be pleased to state at what stage the correspondence with the High Commissioner for opening Trade Commissionerships at New York, Milan and Hamburg stands at present?

(b) Have Government reached conclusions in the matter and will the establishment of these Indian Consulates materialise in the near future?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: (a) A detailed scheme for the appointment of Indian Trade Commissioners at Hamburg, Milan and New York has been prepared in consultation with the High Commissioner for India.

(b) It is expected that a final decision in the matter will be reached shortly, but I am not yet in a position to say if and when the appointments will actually be made.

Mr. B. Das: Is it a fact that Government have gone beyond the recommendations of the Council of State and also the Advisory Committees to the Department of Commerce and are going to appoint men of the Indian Civil Service into these posts of Trade Commissioners?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: I must ask for notice of that question because it contains several points that I cannot answer off-hand. For instance, the question referred to a recommendation of the Council of State and that is not in my mind at the moment.

Mr. B. Das: Is it the intention of Government to appoint men in Indian commercial pursuits as Trade Commissioners in these places?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: The intention of Government with regard to these appointments, acting on the advice of the High Commissioner and the Trade Commissioner in London, is that, in the first instance, the officers selected for these appointments, if they are made, should be officers already in Government service.

Mr. B. Das: Do I take it that the High Commissioner in London has advised that they should be men recruited from the Indian Civil Service?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: Yes, Sir; that is the advice we have received from the High Commissioner.

INDIAN TRADE COMMISSIONERS.

111. *Mr. B. Das: (a) Will Government be pleased to state if they have come to any decision regarding the establishment of Trade Commissioners in Asiatic countries including European Turkey and also Africa?

(b) What was the recommendation of the Meek Committee on this matter?

(c) What steps have Government taken since the publication of that report to expedite the opening of trade relations with those countries?

(d) Did Government consult the various Chambers of Commerce, and if so what are their views?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: (a) A detailed scheme for the appointment of Indian Trade Commissioners in Europe and in the Near East and Africa has been prepared, and it is expected that a final decision in the matter will be reached shortly.

(b) The Trade Mission's recommendation was that Indian Trade Commissioners should be appointed at Durban, Mombasa and Alexandria.

(c) This part of the question is covered by my reply to part (a).

(d) No, Sir, but they have received several representations from commercial and industrial Associations strongly supporting the Trade Mission's recommendation.

TELEGRAPHIC ABBREVIATIONS.

112. Mr. B. Das: (a) Will Government be pleased to state whether abbreviations like "M. L. A." and "M. L. C." cannot be taken as one word in telegraphic transmission?

(b) Is "M. P." taken as one word for telegraphic communication by the British Post Office?

Mr. H. A. Sams: Presumably the information required is about the use of these abbreviations in the address of a telegram.

(a) The reply is in the negative.

THE CONTRACT WITH THE IMPERIAL BANK OF INDIA.

113. Mr. B. Das: (a) With reference to the reply of the Honourable Sir Basil Blackett to question No. 992 of 24th February, 1925, regarding the future contract with the Imperial Bank of India, will Government be pleased to state if the reply that no departure from the arrangements provided for in the Imperial Bank of India Act can be made unless the Act is amended still holds good?

(b) Have the Government of India been approached by the Governors of the Imperial Bank for the renewal of this contract, and if so have they reached any conclusions regarding amendment of the contract?

(c) Is it a fact that the agreement of the Government with the Imperial Bank of India will terminate in 1931?

(d) Will Government be pleased to state if they intend to renew the agreement and contract with the Imperial Bank thereafter, and if so for what period?

(e) Do the Government of India propose to introduce a Bill to amend the Imperial Bank of India Act, 1921, and if so for what period would the existing arrangement remain in force?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: (a) Yes.

(b), (c) and (d). Under clause 16 of the agreement between the Imperial Bank and Government, the agreement may be determined on the 27th January, 1931, or at any time thereafter by either of the parties giving notice of a desire to terminate it, and if such notice is given, the agreement will cease to operate twelve months after the giving of the notice. In the absence of such a notice by either party, the agreement automatically remains in force. The earliest date at which the Imperial Bank could give twelve months' notice of the termination of the agreement would be the 27th January, 1930. No such notice has yet been received from the Bank. Similarly, the Government of India could give twelve months' notice of the termination of the agreement on the 27th of January, 1930, or on any subsequent date. They have considered whether such notice should be given, but have decided not to do so for the present. There are many reasons why it is difficult to take a final decision at the present stage, pending the Report of the Banking Inquiry Committee, and the Report of the Statutory Commission. The position therefore is that, after January 27th of this year, the agreement will remain in force subject to termination at any time by either party on twelve months' notice.

(e) Government at present have no intention of introducing a Bill to amend the Imperial Bank of India Act, 1921.

APPOINTMENT OF AN INDIAN AS MANAGING GOVERNOR OF THE IMPERIAL BANK OF INDIA.

114. Mr. B. Das: (a) With reference to question No. 475 of the 30th January, 1925, of Mr. K. C. Neogy, regarding the appointment of an Indian Managing Governor and with reference to the reply of the Honourable Sir Basil Blackett to parts (c) and (d) thereof that, "the intention of the Government is to appoint the persons best qualified irrespective of race after considering the recommendations of the Central Board, which, I may mention, contains several Indians. The question of a duly qualified Indian has not hitherto arisen" will Government be pleased to state how many vacancies of Managing Governors have occurred since the above reply was made?

(b) Was the name of any duly qualified Indian recommended by the Central Board when these vacancies arose?

(c) Have Government taken any steps to train any Indian bankers with a view to their eventually becoming Managing Governors of the Imperial Bank?

(d) Do Government propose to fill up the next vacancy of the Managing Governor of the Imperial Bank by an Indian?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: (a) Two.

(b) No.

(c) It is not part of the functions of Government to train bankers, but the Imperial Bank have taken special steps to provide opportunities for the training of Indians, which is a step in the direction desired by the Honourable Member.

(d) As there is no immediate prospect of a vacancy, the Government cannot be said to have any proposal before them on this subject. The policy of Government has always been, as stated in the first part of the question, to appoint as Managing Governors the persons best qualified, irrespective of race, after considering the nominations of the Central Board.

Mr. B. Das: Is the Honourable Member aware that since 1927 when the Indian Currency Commission's Report was published, the Imperial Bank have not taken steps to enroll an annual quota of Indian probationers and officers?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: I shall be very pleased to give the Honourable Member full particulars of what has been done by the Imperial Bank in order to encourage the recruitment of Indians to the staff of the Bank. The figures on the subject showing the increase in the proportion of Indians in the supervising staff of the Bank are very convincing. I have not got them at hand as I did not expect the question to arise out of this question, but I shall be very pleased to furnish them to the Honourable Member after the sitting.

Mr. B. Das: I am grateful to the Honourable Member.

INDIAN MEMBERS IN THE CENTRAL BOARD OF THE IMPERIAL BANK OF INDIA.

115. Mr. B. Das: (a) Will Government be pleased to state the names of Indian members in the Central Board of the Imperial Bank of India and the specific qualifications for which each Indian Governor was nominated by the Government or by other interests?

(b) With reference to part (b) of the previous question, did any of the Indian members of the Central Board make any recommendations regarding the appointment of an Indian Managing Governor at the time of vacancies or did any of them record any protest regarding non-appointment of an Indian?

(c) In case any definite protest was recorded, will Government be pleased to place on the table a copy of the same?

(d) Will Government be pleased to lay on the table a copy of the rules governing the selection of the members of the Central Board, indicating the powers and privileges they exercise?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: (a) With effect from 27th January, 1930, the Indian Members of the Central Board nominated by Government are as follows:

Honourable Sir Dinshaw Wacha, Kt.

Honourable Sir Maneckji Dadabhoy, K.C.I.E.

Sir Rajendranath Mookerjee, K.C.I.E., K.C.V.O.

Honourable Raja Sir Annamalai Chettiar, Kt.

Government do not consider it desirable to attempt to specify the qualifications of these gentlemen who, on account of their intimate connection with and long experience of commerce, industry or finance, are obviously representative of these interests in the Provinces in which they reside.

The other Indian members are Sir Purshotamdas Thakurdas and Mr. S. V. Ramaswamy Mudaliar who are the representatives of the Bombay and Madras Local Boards respectively. The selection of these gentlemen is a matter for the Local Boards, and while it is not for me to express an opinion as to their qualifications, I would suggest that they must be sufficiently well known to the Honourable Member.

(c) Does not arise.

(d) The Honourable Member is referred to the Imperial Bank of India Act and the bye-laws framed under the Act.

Mr. Vidya Sagar Pandya: May I inquire from the Honourable Member how many times each member has sat on the Board, and for how many years at a time and in all and whether they can be removed except by an act of God? (Laughter).

LETTER FROM THE SECRETARIES OF ZAMINDARI RYOTS SANGAM,
ANDHRADESH AND GANJAM DISTRICT.

116. Mr. B. P. Naidu: (a) Will Government be pleased to state whether they are aware of the fact that an open letter was addressed to the Private Secretary to H. E. the Viceroy to be placed before him, on the 11th or 12th December, 1929, by Messrs. R. Mandeswara Sarma and Narayana Panda, Secretaries of Zamindari Ryots Sangam, Andhradesh and also of Ganjam District?

(b) If so, will Government be pleased to place the letter on the table?

(c) Has any inquiry been made on the questions raised in the letter?

(d) Did the Government of India have any correspondence with the Government of Madras on the question?

(e) If so, will Government be pleased to lay the correspondence on the table?

(f) What action is proposed to be taken in the matter?

Sir Frank Noyce: (a) Government have no information.

MANAGEMENT OF PROPRIETARY ESTATES BY OFFICERS OF THE INDIAN
CIVIL SERVICE.

117. Mr. B. P. Naidu: Will Government be pleased to state:

(a) Whether they are aware of the fact that officers of the Indian Civil Service are deputed on foreign service to manage proprietary estates either under zamindars or in zamindari under the Court of Wards in the Presidency of Madras?

(b) Whether they have considered the desirability of lending such officers, who very soon go as Collectors of Districts with prospects of getting into the highest offices under the State?

(c) Whether they are aware of the fact that the zamindari ryots have protested against this policy?

(d) Whether they would consider the inadvisability of such loan services being allowed to private persons and estates?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: The condition of employment of I. C. S. as of other Government officers on foreign service is that the duties to be performed must be such as should, for public reasons, be rendered by a Government servant. The question whether in a particular case the condition is fulfilled is for the Local Government to decide, and the Government of India do not propose to interfere with its discretion.

BIRTH AND MARRIAGE REGISTERS.

118. Mr. B. Das: (a) Will Government be pleased to state if they have consulted the Provincial Governments regarding up-to-date birth and marriage registers to suit the conditions imposed by the Sarda Act?

(b) Have Government come to any decision regarding the uniformity of these registers all over India?

(c) Is it not a fact that the village chowkidar at present registers births and deaths in every British Indian village?

(d) Is it not also a fact that in almost every case the village chowkidar happens to be illiterate?

(e) Do Government propose to utilise the services of village chowkidars for birth, death and marriage registers, or do they propose to introduce any elaborate machinery for register of births and marriages?

INDIAN MEMBERS IN THE CENTRAL BOARD OF THE IMPERIAL BANK OF INDIA.

115. Mr. B. Das: (a) Will Government be pleased to state the names of Indian members in the Central Board of the Imperial Bank of India and the specific qualifications for which each Indian Governor was nominated by the Government or by other interests?

(b) With reference to part (b) of the previous question, did any of the Indian members of the Central Board make any recommendations regarding the appointment of an Indian Managing Governor at the time of vacancies or did any of them record any protest regarding non-appointment of an Indian?

(c) In case any definite protest was recorded, will Government be pleased to place on the table a copy of the same?

(d) Will Government be pleased to lay on the table a copy of the rules governing the selection of the members of the Central Board, indicating the powers and privileges they exercise?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: (a) With effect from 27th January, 1930, the Indian Members of the Central Board nominated by Government are as follows:

Honourable Sir Dinshaw Wacha, Kt.

Honourable Sir Maneckji Dadabhoy, K.C.I.E.

Sir Rajendranath Mookerjee, K.C.I.E., K.C.V.O.

Honourable Raja Sir Annamalai Chettiar, Kt.

Government do not consider it desirable to attempt to specify the qualifications of these gentlemen who, on account of their intimate connection with and long experience of commerce, industry or finance, are obviously representative of these interests in the Provinces in which they reside.

The other Indian members are Sir Purshotamdas Thakurdas and Mr. S. V. Ramaswamy Mudaliar who are the representatives of the Bombay and Madras Local Boards respectively. The selection of these gentlemen is a matter for the Local Boards, and while it is not for me to express an opinion as to their qualifications, I would suggest that they must be sufficiently well known to the Honourable Member.

(c) Does not arise.

(d) The Honourable Member is referred to the Imperial Bank of India Act and the bye-laws framed under the Act.

Mr. Vidya Sagar Pandya: May I inquire from the Honourable Member how many times each member has sat on the Board, and for how many years at a time and in all and whether they can be removed except by an act of God? (Laughter).

LETTER FROM THE SECRETARIES OF ZAMINDARI RYOTS SANGAM,
ANDHRADESH AND GANJAM DISTRICT.

116. Mr. B. P. Naidu: (a) Will Government be pleased to state whether they are aware of the fact that an open letter was addressed to the Private Secretary to H. E. the Viceroy to be placed before him, on the 11th or 12th December, 1929, by Messrs. R. Mandeswara Sarma and Narayana Panda, Secretaries of Zamindari Ryots Sangam, Andhradesh and also of Ganjam District?

(b) If so, will Government be pleased to place the letter on the table?

(c) Has any inquiry been made on the questions raised in the letter?

(d) Did the Government of India have any correspondence with the Government of Madras on the question?

(e) If so, will Government be pleased to lay the correspondence on the table?

Sir Frank Noyce: (a) Government have no information.

MANAGEMENT OF PROPRIETORY ESTATES BY OFFICERS OF THE INDIAN
CIVIL SERVICE.

117. Mr. B. P. Naidu: Will Government be pleased to state:

(a) Whether they are aware of the fact that officers of the Indian Civil Service are deputed on foreign service to manage proprietary estates either under zamindars or in zamindari under the Court of Wards in the Presidency of Madras?

(b) Whether they have considered the desirability of lending such officers, who very soon go as Collectors of Districts with prospects of getting into the highest offices under the State?

(c) Whether they are aware of the fact that the zamindari ryots have protested against this policy?

(d) Whether they would consider the inadvisability of such loan services being allowed to private persons and estates?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: The condition of employment of I. C. S. as of other Government officers on foreign service is that the duties to be performed must be such as should, for public reasons, be rendered by a Government servant. The question whether in a particular case the condition is fulfilled is for the Local Government to decide, and the Government of India do not propose to interfere with its discretion.

BIRTH AND MARRIAGE REGISTERS.

118. Mr. B. Das: (a) Will Government be pleased to state if they have consulted the Provincial Governments regarding up-to-date birth and marriage registers to suit the conditions imposed by the Sarda Act?

(b) Have Government come to any decision regarding the uniformity of these registers all over India?

(c) Is it not a fact that the village chowkidar at present registers births and deaths in every British Indian village?

(d) Is it not also a fact that in almost every case the village chowkidar happens to be illiterate?

(e) Do Government propose to utilise the services of village chowkidars for birth, death and marriage registers, or do they propose to introduce any elaborate machinery for register of births and marriages?

(f) Do Government anticipate any extra expenditure over the maintenance of proper birth and marriage registers? If so, what will be the additional expenses per annum to be incurred by (i) the Government of India and (ii) Provincial Governments?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: (a) and (b). The Local Governments have been consulted on the recommendations of the Age of Consent Committee. Their views are awaited before a final decision is arrived at.

(c), (d) and (e). These matters relate to a provincial transferred subject, and are not primarily the concern of the Governor General in Council.

(f) It is possible that extra expenditure may be involved but Government are not able to state even approximately what it will be, if any.

DELIVERY OF LETTERS FROM THE BALDEO POST OFFICE.

119. Mr. Mukhtar Singh: (a) Is it a fact that within the circle of Baldeo Post Office, Muttra District, the post is distributed only once a week?

(b) Is it a fact that before the year 1926 when the Baldeo Post Office was opened, the post used to be distributed twice a week? If the answer be in the affirmative, will Government be pleased to state the reasons for making this change in the distribution of the post?

(c) Will Government be pleased to state whether the amount of work in this circle has increased or decreased during the period Baldeo Post Office has been opened?

Mr. H. A. Sams: (a) and (b). I have no information on the subject. Inquiries have been made from the local postal authorities and, as soon as a reply is received, the facts will be communicated to the Honourable Member.

(c) I have no precise information, but it may be assumed that the amount of work in the United Provinces Circle as a whole has increased since 1926.

DELIVERY OF LETTERS FROM THE JUGSENA POST OFFICE.

120. Mr. Mukhtar Singh: (a) Is it a fact that village Angai in Muttra District used to get its post daily till the time the post office at Jugsena was opened?

(b) Is it a fact that now the people of village Angai get their post only once a week? If the answer be in the affirmative, will Government be pleased to state why the people of this village have been deprived of this facility?

Mr. H. A. Sams: (a) and (b). I have no information in the subject. Inquiries have been instituted and the result will be communicated to the Honourable Member in due course.

POST OFFICES DISTRIBUTING LETTERS WEEKLY.

121. Mr. Mukhtar Singh: Will Government be pleased to state:

(a) the number of post offices in whose circle the post is distributed only once a week;

(b) whether these post offices are distributing their post only once a week since the time of their opening or the system has been introduced later; and

(c) if it has been introduced later, the reasons why the system has been changed?

Mr. H. A. Sams: I regret that I cannot answer the question as it would entail an elaborate inquiry and analysis throughout India and Burma. I may, however, assure the Honourable Member that the number of offices from which there is only one delivery weekly is very small, and that the tendency is in general towards an increase in the frequency of deliveries as indicated for example by the increase in the past five years of the number of village postmen from 8,461 to 9,003.

ABOLITION OF SERVANTS' COMPARTMENTS ON STATE RAILWAYS.

122. Colonel J. D. Crawford: Will Government please state whether the Railway Board have taken any decision on the question of the abolition of servants' compartments in their coaching stock?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: Government have informed railways that servants' compartments may be provided in designs for non-corridor upper class stock.

DELAY IN DELIVERY OF AIR MAIL AFTER ARRIVAL IN KARACHI.

123. Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer: (a) Has the attention of Government been drawn to the following editorial observation of the Sunday Observer (London) of December 8th, 1929?

"Muddling the Air-Mail—

In India, too, there is a manifest case for reform of postal methods, for the time saved by the air-mail is being squandered after it has been landed. Tests carried out by Imperial Airways show that the delays which admittedly occur in the delivery of the air-mail arise after the arrival of the mail-plane at Karachi. The matter should be thoroughly examined."

(b) Will Government be pleased to state:

(i) if it is not a fact that "the time saved by the air mail is being squandered after it has been landed"?

(ii) if it is not a fact that delays occur in the delivery of the air mail after the arrival of the mail-plane at Karachi?

(c) Will Government be pleased to state if they propose (i) to appoint a non-official cum Expert Committee to examine the matter or (ii) to examine it in some other way?

(d) If the answer to part (c) (i) is in the negative, will Government be pleased to state why?

(e) If the answer to part (c) (ii) is in the negative, will Government explain the reasons, and if the answer to the same be in the affirmative, will Government be pleased to state the method they propose to adopt to bring the subject under thorough inquiry?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: (a) No; but the Honourable Member's quotation from it has been read.

(b) (i) No. I may draw the attention of the Honourable questioner to the reply to Mr. Price's question No. 148, dated the 2nd September, 1929, and to the answer given to Mr. Gaya Prasad's question No. 145, dated 4th September, 1929.

(b) (ii) No evidences of any delays in the deliveries of the air mail have reached Government beyond those referred to in the reply to Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh.

(c) The answer to both parts of the question is in the negative.

(d) and (e). Government are satisfied, after due inquiry, that at the present moment no change in the method of handling the air mails for onward despatch after they are landed at Karachi is actually called for.

AIR MAIL SERVICE IN INDIA.

124. *Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer: (a) Are Government aware of the progress made in aviation in Europe?

(b) Do Government propose to consider the question of an inter-provincial air-mail service throughout India? If not, why not? If yes, when?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: (a) Yes.

(b) Government are proceeding with the organisation of the main air route across India as rapidly as funds will permit. Government hope that it will, later on and as funds can be made available, be possible to organise subsidiary services linking up with it.

AIR MAIL SERVICE IN INDIA.

125. *Sir Darcy Lindsay: With reference to the statement recently made in Bombay by the Honourable Member for Industries and Labour at the meeting of the Associated Chambers of Commerce, are Government again prepared to examine the position, with a view to providing for an air mail service (not necessarily with accommodation for passengers) between Karachi, Bombay and Madras and Karachi, Delhi, Calcutta and Rangoon or any of these services at a more early date than the end of 1930-31 and 1931-32?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: A weekly air service between Karachi and Delhi was inaugurated on the 30th December, 1929. Proposals for the extension of this service to Calcutta and Rangoon have been approved by the Standing Finance Committee, and subject to the provision of funds, Government hope to operate the extension to Calcutta towards the end of the year 1930, and to Rangoon shortly after, provided the necessary ground organisation is complete. It may, however, be necessary temporarily to discontinue the service to Rangoon, during the monsoon of 1931.

Any further extension towards Bombay and Southern India can only be put into operation as and when funds permit, but the importance of these services has not been lost sight of.

Sir Darcy Lindsay: Will Government examine the position as to the possibility of a counter-service between Allahabad and Karachi via Jhansi and diverting the present service from Karachi to Delhi to Karachi-Bombay?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: I shall be quite ready to have the matter considered, but I should like to warn my Honourable friend that it is bound to involve expensive ground organisation.

CONVEYANCE OF PASSENGERS ARRIVING AT KARACHI BY THE AIR MAIL.

126. *Sir Darcy Lindsay: Is there any obligation upon Government implied or otherwise to convey passengers by air service who may have arrived at Karachi by air mail?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: There is no actual obligation, but Government have announced that the Indian State Air Service between Karachi and Delhi will carry passengers and a schedule of fares has been published. It is obviously desirable to encourage through traffic, and with this object in view Government are in communication with Imperial Airways Limited regarding the issue of through tickets between places on the London-Karachi route and places on the Karachi-Delhi route. At present accommodation required for through passengers is reserved by telegram and rebooking is carried out at Karachi.

COST OF SMALL AND LARGE AEROPLANES FROM KARACHI TO DELHI AND CALCUTTA.

127. *Sir Darcy Lindsay: What is the approximate difference in cost between a 10/12 passenger and mail plane and a smaller plane suitable for conveyance of mails only, and the respective maintenance and running cost of either over a given mileage say Karachi to Delhi and thence to Calcutta?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: Government understand that it would be possible to purchase an aeroplane suitable for carrying up to 800—1,000 lbs. of mail matter for approximately a fourth of the cost of a larger plane capable of carrying 10—12 passengers and mails and that the maintenance and running costs of such an aeroplane over a given mileage, say Karachi—Delhi, would be approximately three-fourths of those of the larger aeroplane.

EXTENSION OF AIR SERVICE TO CALCUTTA.

128. *Sir Darcy Lindsay: (a) Were Imperial Airways asked to quote for extending to Calcutta the chartered service now arranged for Delhi only?

(b) Were Imperial Airways asked to quote for a mail service only?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: (a) Yes.

(b) No.

ESTABLISHMENT OF AN AIR MAIL SERVICE BY THE POSTAL DEPARTMENT.

129. *Sir Darcy Lindsay: (a) Has any air service company been formed in India, and have they made definite proposals for the conveyance of mails by air route? If so, will Government be pleased to state the terms proposed?

(b) Are Government again prepared to examine the position as to whether it would be practicable for the Postal Department with or without the assistance of the Royal Air Force to establish its own air mail service?

and maintain the same on a special grant or until such time as private enterprise can offer efficient services (mail and passenger) on reasonable terms and conditions?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: (a) Three companies have been registered in India with the object of engaging in commercial air transport. Of these, one company submitted to Government definite proposals for the carriage of air mails. After careful consideration of the proposals put forward, Government decided that the financial resources of the company were not such as to justify the placing of a contract.

(b) As the Honourable Member is no doubt aware, proposals for the establishment of a Government air mail service in extension of the existing service between Karachi and Delhi have recently been approved by the Standing Finance Committee.

AIR SERVICE BETWEEN INDIA AND EUROPE.

130. Sir Darcy Lindsay: Do the Government of India intend to make every endeavour to co-operate with the British Government in the efforts that are being made to establish a reliable air service between India and Europe?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: Although the Government of India have made no financial contribution to the air service between India and Europe, which was established in April of last year, they have co-operated with the British Government to the extent of supplying terminal facilities at Karachi, together with wireless and meteorological services. They are most anxious to see the service firmly established.

TIME OF AIR JOURNEY FROM CALCUTTA TO CROYDON.

131. *Sir Darcy Lindsay: Is it a fact that the air journey from Calcutta to Karachi has recently been completed by a non-stop flight in under 16 hours and with halts from Karachi to Croydon in about 3½ days?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: The journey by air from Calcutta to Karachi was recently accomplished by a non-stop flight in 15½ hours. Government have no information as to the further progress of this flight.

POSTAGE ON AIR MAIL LETTERS TO GREAT BRITAIN.

132. *Sir Darcy Lindsay: Will Government explain why the postage charge for ½ oz. air mail letters from India to Great Britain is nine pence (8 annas) as against 6½ pence for the outward journey? How much of either postage is retained by the Indian Post Office?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: It is presumed that the Honourable Member's question relates to the postage and air mail fees paid on correspondence travelling by air between Karachi and Croydon and vice versa only and not to the inclusive rates charged over the Indian State Air Service from Delhi. The charge of eight annas on westbound traffic conveyed to London is made up of postage at the rate of 2 annas an ounce or part of that weight and of an air mail fee of 6 annas per half ounce or part of that weight. The entire postage rate is retained by the Indian Post Office under the terms of the Universal Postal Convention.

Of the air fee, a sum of nearly 5 annas per half ounce is paid to the British Post Office in accordance with the Hague air mail regulations, for the conveyance of the air mails by Imperial Airways as the service maintained by them is under the control of the British Administration. The balance of slightly over one anna per half ounce is retained by the Indian Post Office and goes towards the extra expenditure incurred in connection with the handling of the westbound air mail. The charge of 6½d. in the reverse direction on letters originating in Great Britain is made up of an air fee of 5d. and a postage rate of 1½d. This air fee and postage are both retained by the British Post Office in accordance with the International Regulations already referred to. The Indian Administration could not afford to reduce its postage rate to the equivalent of the British rate. There is no element of reciprocity in these matters and the Postal Union allows each country to fix its rates of foreign postage on financial grounds. The air fee adopted is levied to cover the expense of the service, and only experience will show whether the margin allowed can with safety be reduced.

Sir Darcy Lindsay: Can the Honourable Member explain why the extra one anna for, as he puts it, handling the air mail is necessary when he is already charging two annas for the Indian postage?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: The reason is this, Sir. Additional expenditure will have to be incurred for handling the air mail. To give a specific case, for example, it may involve an extra evening delivery at Delhi for the purpose of delivering air mails.

Colonel J. D. Crawford: May I ask the Honourable Member how it came about that the British Post Office fixed the rate for air mail from England to India only up to Karachi and did not at that time include an additional charge for delivery throughout India?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: It is not possible for me to answer that question, Sir, as I do not know the precise reason why the British Post Office took that particular action.

Colonel J. D. Crawford: When the Government of India were consulted, did they consider this question of delivery throughout India?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: I should prefer to have notice of that question, but to the best of my recollection, the Government of India were not consulted at that stage.

Colonel J. D. Crawford: What is going to be the result to Indian revenues of allowing this to escape? Will not letters then be posted only to Karachi, and nobody pay the additional fee for delivery throughout India by air mail?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: I think I have already explained, Sir, that whatever air mail fee is charged by the British Post Office for letters posted in England is retained by the British Post Office.

Colonel J. D. Crawford: But the Indian revenues will get nothing out of delivery in India. People will not use the air mail throughout India. They will simply use the air mail for Karachi and you will not get the air mail in India used?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: That may be Sir, but we cannot possibly force people who do not want to use the air mail service from Karachi onwards to use that service.

Colonel J. D. Crawford: Am I to understand that there is some misunderstanding, some blunder, in this matter between England and India?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: There has been no blunder at all. The Government in neither country can force the users of the air mail service to take any particular course of action.

Sir Darcy Lindsay: Are we to understand then that the air mail service that has now been inaugurated between Karachi and Delhi is for the use of outward letters only, and not also for the air mail that comes from Europe?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: There is nothing, Sir, in any of the answers that I have given which can lead to that impression. The point is this: If an individual, say, in London, wants that his letters should be conveyed by air mail only up to Karachi and thereafter by the ordinary mail, say, to Delhi or Calcutta, neither the British Post Office nor the Indian Post Office can compel him to take any other course.

Sir Darcy Lindsay: That I entirely understand, Sir, but my point is how he can be put in the position of having his mail conveyed from Karachi by the air mail service throughout India?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: Well, Sir, if he pays the air mail fee, right up to Delhi, he will have his letters conveyed by air mail to Delhi.

Sir Darcy Lindsay: Is it known throughout Europe that, by an extra charge, the sender will have his letter conveyed by air mail throughout India?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: I believe, Sir, that is now known.

TIME SAVED BY INAUGURATION OF THE AIR MAIL SERVICE TO DELHI.

133. *Sir Darcy Lindsay: (a) Have arrangements been made to make it known in Europe that an Indian State Air Mail Service has now been inaugurated between Karachi and Delhi, giving the time that will be saved in delivery at important centres and the extra postage charge?

(b) With the inauguration of this Service what will be the saving in time of transit between say Calcutta and Karachi and vice versa, giving approximately time and days of train arrival and departure?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: (a) Yes.

(b) With the establishment of the Service, the transit time occupied between Karachi and Calcutta and vice versa has been reduced by 10 hours 21 minutes in the eastbound direction and by 14 hours in the westbound direction. The journey from Karachi by the combined use of aeroplane and rail can be accomplished in 50 hours 50 minutes against a train journey throughout of 61 hours 11 minutes and in the reverse direction, the use of aeroplane and railway reduces the journey to one of 45 hours 24 minutes against 59 hours 24 minutes by rail throughout. Departure from Karachi by air at 5 P.M. makes possible an arrival at Calcutta on the third day at 10 minutes to 8 P.M. Departure from Calcutta by rail at 6 minutes past 8 P.M. to Delhi and thence by air to Karachi provides for an arrival at 6-30 P.M. on the afternoon of the third day. The corresponding time of departure from Calcutta by rail throughout is 6 minutes past 8 P.M. and an arrival at Karachi at 7-30 A.M. on the fourth day, while in the reverse direction the departure is timed for 5 minutes past 10 P.M. and an arrival on the fourth day at 16 minutes past 11 A.M. The time given is Indian standard time.

Sir Darcy Lindsay: Does the Honourable Member consider that any advantage is gained by arrival in Calcutta at 8 P.M. as against arrival by train at 7 o'clock the next morning?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: I admit that there is no appreciable advantage, and for that reason we are trying to alter the time to 5 P.M. which will permit of an evening delivery the same day.

Sir Darcy Lindsay: Does the Honourable Member think that that will appreciably serve commercial correspondence after the offices are closed?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: Well, Sir, that is the most we can do. It is not possible for me to say whether it will meet the requirements of commercial correspondence, though I know that in some cases even business people are particularly anxious to get the evening delivery in preference to a delivery the next morning.

DELAY OF TRAINS CONNECTING WITH THE OUTWARD AIR SERVICE FROM KARACHI.

134. *Sir Darcy Lindsay: What has been the recent experience of trains not running to time to connect with the outward air service from Karachi?

Mr. H. A. Sams: There have been no failures of the trains to connect with the westbound aeroplane from Karachi.

DEVELOPMENT OF AIR SERVICES IN INDIA.

135. *Sir Darcy Lindsay: (a) With a view to the development of air services other than purely military, have Government considered the expediency of forming a Civil Branch of the Royal Air Force by recruitment in India for services such as air survey, carriage of mails and war on insect life (locusts and mosquito)?

(b) Have Government considered the possibility of recruitment in India for the Royal Air Force with a system of training for cadet officers holding temporary (five year) commissions similar to the arrangement at the training depots of the Royal Air Force located in Egypt?

(c) Will Government be pleased to state the location of the training depots in India?

Mr. G. M. Young: (a) The answer to the first part of the question is in the negative. The Royal Air Force is a fighting service, and it would not be practicable or desirable for it to undertake remunerative work connected with civil aviation.

(b) and (c). There is no training establishment of the Royal Air Force in India. A certain number of British cadets are selected for short service commissions in India, but when so selected they have to be sent to England for training.

RATE OF INTEREST PAYABLE ON STATE RAILWAY PROVIDENT FUND BALANCES.

136. *Colonel J. D. Crawford: (a) Is it a fact that the rate of interest payable by Government on State Railway Provident Fund balances was reduced from $5\frac{1}{4}$ to $4\frac{3}{4}$ per cent. from 1st April, 1927?

(b) If so, will Government please say, whether in view of the higher rates they are now paying on loans recently issued, they have under consideration an increase in the rates of interest payable on balances in State Railway Provident Funds, corresponding to that which now prevails?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: (a) The rate of interest payable by Government on balances in the State Railway Provident Fund was reduced from $5\frac{1}{4}$ to $4\frac{3}{4}$ per cent. with effect from the 1st April 1927.

(b) The matter is under consideration and I hope to be able to give a definite reply very shortly.

GRIEVANCES OF THIRD CLASS RAILWAY PASSENGERS.

137. *Mr. Sarabhai Nemchand Haji: (a) Is it a fact that the Railway Board invited the opinion of the Great Indian Peninsula Railway Administration on the subject of ameliorating the grievances of the third class passengers?

(b) Is it true that the Chief Traffic Manager of the Railway before dealing with the subject had invited Mr. Jivaraj G. Nensey and Khan Bahadur P. E. Ghamat, Honorary Joint Secretaries of the Passengers' and Traffic Relief Association, Bombay, to offer suggestions in the matter?

(c) Will Government be pleased to state whether those recommendations have been received by them, and if so, what action the Railway Board desire to take and when?

(d) Have the Railway Board likewise called for suggestions from other Railway Administrations, and Local Advisory Committees thereof? If the answer be in the affirmative, will Government be pleased to name them, and state how far their recommendations will be accepted by Government?

(e) Will Government be pleased to state whether the views of the Passengers' Associations in Bombay, Belgaum, Calcutta and Madras were called for by the Railway Board? If not, will Government state the reason why?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: I would refer the Honourable Member to the reply given by Mr. Rau to an almost identical starred question No. 1081, put by Mr. Ghanshyam Das Birla on the 18th March 1929.

OVERCROWDING OF THIRD CLASS PASSENGERS.

138. *Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: (a) Has the attention of Government been drawn to the contribution by Miss Mirabai (Miss Slade) published in November or December, 1929 in Young India and reproduced in the Sind Observer, dated the 20th December, 1929, as to her personal experience with regard to the unbearable overcrowding of third class passengers between Allahabad and Dacca and the note of Mahatma Gandhi thereon?

(b) Is it a fact that extreme inconvenience of overcrowding is caused to third class passengers on all the State Railways on account of care not being taken to provide additional carriages in time?

(c) Is it proposed to create special travelling officers to take a census of third class passengers in running trains and arrange for their accommodation by getting additional carriages attached wherever overcrowding occurs?

(d) Is it a fact that State Railways recently created the posts of inquiry clerks as a tentative measure at a few stations to afford convenience to third class passengers?

(e) Are Government aware that they stay at the gate and only guide the passengers to particular platforms and take no part in arranging their seats or removing overcrowding in trains?

(f) What steps do Government propose to take to uproot this nuisance of overcrowding in trains?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: (a) Yes.

(b) The inconvenience of overcrowding in third class carriages has been reduced during recent years by the provision of additional trains and more passenger coaches. During the five years ending 31st March, 1929, the third class seating capacity of the passenger carriages on all railways has increased by 14 per cent. and the mileage of passenger trains by 29 per cent., while the number of third class passengers carried has increased by 8 per cent. only.

(c) Railways have been taking a periodical census of third class passengers in running trains, and of the actual seating accommodation, to enable an opinion to be arrived at as to what extra carriages may be required.

(e) The primary duty of an inquiry clerk is to give information to passengers who arrive at a station to undertake a journey. This matter was discussed with the Central Advisory Council for Railways in September 1929, and the consensus of opinion was that the best place for an inquiry clerk was in the third class waiting hall. The actual placing of passengers in their carriages and the prevention of overcrowding is attended to by station masters and their assistants, platform inspectors, guards and travelling ticket inspectors.

(f) My reply to part (b) of the Honourable Member's question indicates that the overcrowding in trains is decreasing and not growing. The question of the provision of more trains and more coaches where necessary is a matter that receives the constant attention of Railway Administrations.

Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: Will the Honourable Member please explain to what extent the inconvenience referred to in this particular case is being reduced all round?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: I think it is clear from my reply that a great deal has been done. But it is impossible for any Railway Administration, either in this country or anywhere in the world, on all occasions to prevent overcrowding. I cannot say exactly how it occurred in this particular case, though I can well understand that the train might be overcrowded, if Mr. Gandhi was travelling by it.

Mr. K. C. Neogy: With reference to the personal aspects of Miss Mirabai's complaint, is it a fact that the Honourable Member has advised her to revert to her European name and her European mode of dress and travel in third class compartments reserved for Europeans?

Mr. M. S. Aney: Has the Honourable Member no reply to give?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: I am afraid, if the Honourable Member's question was addressed to me, I did not catch it.

Mr. K. C. Neogy: It was addressed to the Honourable Member who answered it on behalf of the Government.

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: I caught the question, but it struck me that it was more argumentative than asking for information.

Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: Will the Honourable Member be pleased to say if Government are prepared to remove this distinction between Indian and Anglo-Indian in the third class compartments also?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: To the best of my recollection, some instructions have been issued to that effect, which the Honourable Member, who put to me the previous supplementary question, is either not aware of or believes have not been followed.

REFUSAL OF RAILWAY CONCESSIONS FOR THE KUMBH MELA.

139. Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: (a) Are Government aware that the great Kumbh Mela at Allahabad takes place on the 14th January, 1930 or thereabouts?

(b) Is it a fact that the Railway Board was asked, in view of the great profit railways make on such occasions, to extend the time of the Christmas concession tickets to a few days more in order to enable passengers to return under concession tickets?

(c) Is it a fact that the Railway Board expressed inability to interfere and referred the matter to the Agents of the respective State Railways who declined to accede to the wishes of the public?

(d) If the answer to part (c) be in the affirmative, will Government be pleased to state if the Agents of the Railways concerned consulted their Advisory Committees?

(e) Will Government be pleased to state the reasons for which the Agents of the State Railways refused to extend the concession?

(f) Is it a fact that the State Railways have made a considerable profit owing to this Kumbh Mela having taken place?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: (a) Yes.

(b) Letters were received by the Railway Board asking that the period of availability of the Christmas concession tickets should be extended so as to include the Kumbh Mela at Allahabad.

(c) The Railway Board replied that such letters had been forwarded for disposal to the Agents of the railways concerned who were the competent authorities to deal the matter.

(e) The Railway Administrations were of opinion that an extension of the Christmas concession would not lead to sufficient additional passengers travelling to compensate for the lower fare charges recovered.

(f) I am unable to say whether this will be so or not.

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: Has any concession been made with regard to return tickets issued for the Kumbh Mela?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: I am afraid I must ask for notice. It is quite possible of course that some railways have given concessions with regard to the Mela; but they would not be the Christmas concessions to which the Honourable Member who put the original question referred.

INCOME-TAX RETURNS IN SIND.

140. Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: 1. Will Government be pleased to state whether they have under contemplation the amendment of section 30, read with section 48 of the Indian Income-tax Act in order to enable aggrieved parties to file appeals against the Income-tax Officer's refusal to grant refunds?

2. Will Government be pleased to state the following particulars showing for each of the Income-tax charges in Sind for the years 1927-28 and 1928-29:

(a) Number of cases in which the returns were sent blank by assesseees, with a forwarding letter supplying information about income but not actually filling the returns owing to want of proper assistance;

(b) Number of cases in which notices under section 23 (2) of the Act were issued in reference to such returns which were considered as valid;

(c) Number of cases in which notices under section 22 (4) were issued in consequence of the returns being treated as invalid; and

(d) Number of cases in which assessment orders under section 23 (4) were passed without issuing notices under section 23 (2) or 22 (4)?

3. Do Government propose to issue instructions to Income-tax Officers to render assistance to the assesseees in filling up the returns properly?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: With your permission, Sir, I will answer questions 140 to 146 and 148 to 151 together.

The Government of India have called for a report, the result of which will be communicated to the Honourable Member in due course.

Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: That saves supplementary questions.

INCOME-TAX NOTICES IN SIND.

†141. Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: Will Government be pleased to supply a statement showing separately for each of the charges of Income-tax Officers in Sind for each of the two years 1927-28 and 1928-29 the following information:

(a) Number of cases in which notices under section 23 (2) were issued;

- (b) Number of cases in which, after such notices were issued, evidence and accounts were produced and yet assessment orders were passed under section 23 (4) instead of section 23 (3); and
- (c) Number of cases in which action was taken by the Assistant Commissioner or Commissioner on inspection of the records, and the Income-tax officers were directed to issue proper notices of demand allowing the right of appeal?

ORDERS AND APPEALS UNDER THE INCOME-TAX ACT IN SIND.

†142. Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: Will Government be pleased to give the following information showing for each of the different charges of Income-tax Officers in Sind for each of the years 1927-28 and 1928-29:

- (a) Number of cases in which orders under section 23 (4) were passed and appeals preferred under section 30;
- (b) Number of cases in which appeals were thrown out simply because the assessment order purported to be passed under section 23 (4) without going into the merits of the case whether or not the order really fell under section 22 (3) or section 23 (4)?

INCOME-TAX NOTICES IN MOFUSSIL AREAS IN SIND.

†143. Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: Will Government be pleased to state if it is a fact that in several cases notices under section 22 (2) of the Indian Income-tax Act, are issued in English to Income-tax assesses residing in mofussil areas in Sind, although forms of notice and return have been translated and printed in Sindhi and are available for issue?

BUSINESS ACCOUNTS IN MOFUSSIL AREAS IN SIND.

†144. Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: (a) Will Government be pleased to state if they are aware that in mofussil areas in Sind it is customary to maintain accounts for two or three or more years according to the local usage, sometimes for the entire period of partnership at a stretch without being squared up every year?

(b) If the reply to part (a) be in the affirmative, will Government be pleased to state how such accounts are dealt with for Income-tax purposes and what instructions, if any, have been issued in regard to the acceptance of such accounts covering a period of more than twelve months?

PETITIONS FROM SIND SUBMITTED TO THE COMMISSIONER OF INCOME-TAX, BOMBAY PRESIDENCY.

†145. Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: Will Government be pleased to state the number of cases reviewed by the Commissioner of Income-tax,

Bombay Presidency, in each of the charges of Income-tax offices in Sind, in consequence of the petitions submitted to him and also those in which no such petitions had been sent and the number of cases in which he had cancelled or upheld the assessment or the appellate orders?

PROCEEDINGS FOR SUPPLEMENTARY ASSESSMENT IN SIND.

†146. Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: Will Government be pleased to lay on the table a statement showing for each of the years 1927-28 and 1928-29, the number of cases in which proceedings were instituted for the supplementary assessment of escaped income under section 34 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, in each of the seven charges of Income-tax Officers in Sind and in how many cases these proceedings were filed simply because the result of the supplementary proceedings were unfavourable to Government in that refund would have been made if orders were passed under section 23 (3) of the Act in such cases?

RULES FOR THE REGISTRATION OF FIRMS.

147. Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: Will Government be pleased to state whether they have received any representation in regard to the alteration of the rules relative to the registration of firms framed by the Central Board of Revenue under section 59 of the Act on the ground that after the amendment of section 26 of the Act by Act III of 1928, these would no longer be consistent with the spirit of the law? Do Government propose to issue an amended set of rules immediately?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: The Government have not received any such representation. The rule has already been amended so as to bring it into conformity with amended section 26 of the Indian Income-tax Act by the Central Board of Revenue Notification No. 15, dated 24th August, 1929.

ACTION TAKEN UNDER SECTION 34 OF THE INCOME-TAX ACT.

†148. Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: (a) Will Government be pleased to state if it is a fact that in the Karachi Income-tax Office, cases have occurred of action being taken under section 34 instead of section 35 of the Income-tax Act, because of the bar of limitation to take action under the latter section?

(b) If the reply to part (a) be in the affirmative, will Government be pleased to state if they propose issuing instructions in this behalf or amending section 34 of the Act limiting the period to the same extent as in section 35?

(c) If the reply be in the negative, will Government be pleased to give their reasons?

[Mr. President.]

elected, the safer course for me was to stand as an independent candidate in order to guard against any future misunderstandings. I accordingly did so and was returned unopposed. When the election of the President took place, the Leader of the Congress Party, among others, proposed me to the Chair and I was unanimously re-elected. I then made the following declaration on the occasion:

"From the brief experience that I had as the occupant of this Chair I have found, as I stated when I was addressing you last, that any one who aspires to fill this great office with any hope of success must lay aside all that is personal, all that is of party, all that savours of political predilection, and learn to subordinate everything to the great interests of the House as a whole. Not that it is possible for any one to divest himself so completely of the influence of his political associations and the teachings of a lifetime. He may have his political opinions, he may retain them; he may have his prejudices; but in his general decisions and in his treatment of individual Members no trace of them should find any place. I do not know whether I have in the past lived up to that ideal, nor can I say whether it would be possible for me to live up to that ideal in the future. All I can promise is that I shall ever endeavour to the best of my capacity to regulate my conduct in the Chair on the lines which I have just indicated."

Since the Resolution of the Lahore Congress, many friends are anxious to know how I propose to act on this occasion. I am making this statement to-day to set at rest all speculation on the question and to reaffirm and emphasise the principle that the President is above all parties and he would be unworthy of the confidence reposed in him if he were to allow his conduct to be influenced by any party in or outside this House. I venture to think that this principle must and will hold good under any form of Government. In these circumstances, I feel I would be nullifying and indeed destroying all the work it is claimed I have done during the last four years and more, were I to tender my resignation in obedience to the mandate of the Congress.

It has been suggested to me that the absence of the Congress Party in this House would materially handicap me in the discharge of my duties to the best interests of the country. I am afraid I am unable to agree with this view, for I have no reason to think that other parties in the House, as also those who would replace Congressmen, would not accord the same support to me as I have been fortunate enough to receive from the House as a whole during my term of office. In any case the moment I find that the holding of this office under altered conditions is inconsistent with the maintenance of that absolute independence and impartiality,—the two essential attributes upon which at once the influence of the President and the confidence reposed in him are founded,—that moment you will not find me in this Chair.

Whilst, therefore, I am quite clear that it would be wrong, and indeed dangerous, for any President to act on the mandate of any political party in or outside this House, I am equally emphatic that circumstanced as India is, a situation might arise when, in the larger interests of the country, the President of the Assembly might feel called upon to tender his resignation with a view to return to a position of greater freedom. Such a situation had, I thought, arisen when His Majesty's Government announced the personnel of the Simon Commission and the overwhelming majority of my countrymen decided to boycott the Commission. I was then seriously contemplating resignation with a view to actively participate in the boycott agitation. I was, however, advised that I would be serving the cause of the country better by my retention of the office than otherwise. I accepted the advice and issued a statement to the Press accordingly. That statement I to-day lay on the table for the information of Honourable Members. Irrespective of the general situation in the country, I had on several occasions in the past contemplated resignation because of my fundamental differences with the Government of India on matters of great moment. I was on each occasion advised that, so long as I retained the confidence of the House as a whole, I should continue to serve them, leaving the party dissatisfied to table a vote of no confidence. To be frank, I should not have continued so long in this Chair had it not been for His Excellency Lord Irwin, who on more than one occasion by his timely intervention had averted a crisis in the past.

I have given my most anxious consideration to the situation in the country to-day arising out of the Viceregal announcement and the Resolution of the Lahore Congress, and I have come to the conclusion that, in the interest of the cause itself, apart from other considerations, it is necessary that I should continue to occupy this Chair at this juncture. I have always maintained and still maintain, the change in the Congress creed in favour of complete Independence notwithstanding, that the relations between Great Britain and India can only be finally adjusted on the basis of India's right to Dominion Status being acknowledged without any reservation, and the method of giving effect to that decision being examined in some joint and equal conference between the plenipotentiaries of the two countries, and that the greater the delay in finding a solution of the problem on these lines, the lesser the chances for favourable atmosphere for the purpose and its general acceptance in this country. I have missed no opportunity during the last four years that I have been in this Chair, to press this view as strongly as I can upon the attention of the authorities concerned. I am aware that the Viceregal announcement does not go so far, but viewing the situation as a whole, I am bound to admit that it represents a genuine and honest attempt of a sincere Viceroy anxious to find a way for peace in the most difficult circumstances. The Congress no doubt remains dissatisfied at the announcement, and it will be a grave mistake to underrate the strength behind the Congress. I endeavoured in my own way to bring about rapprochement. I confess I have failed, but perhaps it is not still impossible, by mutual give and take, to evolve a formula acceptable to all parties. I only hope that it is not already too late.

In these circumstances, and holding the views I do, I have decided to continue to serve the House and the country as best as I can from this Chair for the present.

Statement issued to the Press by Mr. President after the Announcement of the Personnel of the Simon Commission.

A little over two years ago I accepted the post of President of the Assembly because I believed that I could thereby serve my country better. I thought then, and I still think, that it was not right for myself, or for any other patriotic Indian similarly situated, to reject this method of serving India. At the same time, it is evident that any occupant of my present post necessarily labours under a certain disability. There may be circumstances, as is the case today, by which strong political feelings are aroused, and in regard to which the President of the Assembly may hold pronounced views. If he were a private individual, he would naturally give full utterance to these views; but whatever may be the personal opinions of any President of the Assembly, the fact remains that he fills a quasi-judicial position and, while he occupies the Presidential Chair, he is bound in his official capacity to remember that he represents not one section but all sections of the body whose principal officer he is, and to act as the guide and director not only of all those who are his natural political associates, but of all sections of the House. My political opinions are well known, and they have not at all varied since I assumed the office of President of the Assembly. There will, therefore, be no doubt whatever of the opinion which I would publicly desire to express upon the question of the forthcoming Statutory Commission if I were not debarred from speaking freely by the reserve imposed upon me by my office. As a matter of fact, I have not hesitated to express that opinion privately to the authorities concerned in most unmistakable language, and repeatedly made it clear to them what sort of reception a purely Parliamentary Commission would have in India. Indeed, I and my friends of the Congress have consistently maintained that the question of the relations between Great Britain and India can only be finally adjusted on the basis of India's right to Dominion Status being acknowledged without any reservation, and the method of giving effect to this decision being examined in some joint and equal conference between the plenipotentiaries of the two countries. I am also aware that the general scheme of procedure sanctioned by the British Parliament, in so far as it ignores that claim, and also by reason of the exclusion of Indians from the Statutory Commission of Inquiry, stands condemned in the eyes of politically minded India. At the same time, while as President of the Assembly I have taken note of the views entertained by the originators and supporters of that scheme, that under it the constitutional position of the Central Legislature is more definitely recognised by His Majesty's Government than has previously been the case, and that this precedent, if ultimately established, may have far-reaching results, I cannot persuade myself to believe that this is in any sense any real advance towards the recognition of the position India is fighting for.

In these circumstances, I have anxiously considered whether I should vacate my office and return to a position of greater freedom and of a responsibility less restricted. I am convinced that I cannot enjoy that freedom and take my legitimate place side by side with my friends of the Congress in the agitation now going on in the country over this question unless I tender my resignation. After consulting friends, to whose opinions I attach the greatest weight, I have come to the conclusion that, for the present, no useful purpose would be served by my so acting. I have, therefore, decided to wait and watch future developments in the hope that they might bring into being a combination of circumstances making it possible for the British Government to recognise the justice of the claim made by the Congress and satisfactorily settle India's problem to the lasting benefit of India and Britain alike.

In the meantime, I feel I should be guilty of desertion of India's cause were I to throw aside the opportunity which my present office affords to me of proving that an Indian is not incapable of discharging the duty of one of the most responsible posts under the present constitution in circumstances however difficult, and of serving the Legislative Assembly as best as I can at this crisis of India's fortunes.

STATEMENT LAID ON THE TABLE.

REPORT ON THE CREW SYSTEM OF TICKET CHECKING AND COLLECTING.

The Honourable Sir George Rainy (Member for Commerce and Railways): Sir, I lay on the table a copy of the Report on the Crew System of Ticket Checking and Collecting, 1926—29, by the Chief Operating Superintendent, East Indian Railway, September 1929, with reference to the replies given to questions Nos. 1105 to 1111, 1371 to 1378, 1380, 1381, 1389 to 1391 and 1393, asked by Maulvi Mohammad Yakub and Mr. Amar Nath Dutt on the 18th March and 2nd April, 1929, respectively.

Report on the Crew System of Ticket Checking and Collecting 1926—29 by the Chief Operating Superintendent, East Indian Railway, September 1929.

1. Terms of Reference.—During the March-April 1929 Session of the Legislative Assembly a series of questions in connection with the working of the Crew System were asked, and the Railway Board in their letters Nos. (a) 109-T., dated 16th March, 1929, (b) 109-T.-1, dated 8th April, 1929 and (c) 109-T.-5, dated 20th May, 1929, called for a full and detailed report on the Crew System together with answers to these questions; it was further stated that this report would be laid on the table before the House, and accordingly the following has been prepared.

2. Railway, Functions of.—A Railway is primarily intended for the carriage of Passengers, Animals and Goods and is therefore a gigantic business organisation, operated for the convenience and benefit of the general public. To succeed in any business undertaking no matter how small or large, stringent measures have to be adopted to guard against possible financial loss, Railways have also had to devise suitable safeguards.

3. Fraud, Nature of.—(a) The general public who are a Railway's customers, are in the main honest, but there are certain sections of them who are not, which necessitate Railways adopting counter-measures to cope with the activities of the latter.

(b) The commonest form of Fraud perpetrated on Railways is that of Passengers Travelling Without Ticket and this evil is not confined to this Railway only, but it is to be found on all Railway Systems in India.

(c) The problem of combating this evil has for many years now been engaging the attention of the different Railway Administrations, who from time to time have adopted various measures; these have led and do lead, to the detection of a considerable number of such Ticketless Passengers but they do not in any way prevent Fraudulent Travelling.

3. Fraudulent Travelling.—(d) It may be of interest to detail what comprises Fraudulent Travelling, and the following are some of the principal items:

- (i) Adults Travelling Without Tickets.
- (ii) Adults Travelling on Child's Tickets.
- (iii) Children over 3 without Tickets.
- (iv) Travelling on ticket of Expired Date.
- (v) Over-riding.
- (vi) Travelling in Higher Class.
- (vii) Unbooked Luggage.

(e) Extent of.—The extent to which this evil exists on this Railway can be gauged from the following figures:

Period.	Total No. of Passengers carried and Earnings including Traffic from Foreign Railways.		Average fare per passenger.	Total No. of Passengers detected and Excess Fares exclusive of penalty and excess luggage realised.
	Number.	Amount.		Number *Approximate.	Amount.
1924-25 . . .	75,760,000	Rs. 6,43,14,000	0.86	715,487	Rs. 6,15,319
1925-26 . . .	71,705,700	6,03,89,000		Records not available.
1926-27 . . .	71,989,300	5,79,95,000	0.81	753,998	6,10,738
1927-28 . . .	76,365,000	6,18,05,000	0.81	515,658	4,17,683
1928-29 . . .	71,576,400	5,72,67,000	0.80	385,810	3,08,648

*Actual figures not available, these numbers have been arrived at by dividing the total amount of Excess Fares realised per year by the average fare per passenger obtained in that year.

(f) It will be observed that in 1927-28 and again in 1928-29 there is a progressive decrease in the Number of Passengers detected and in the amount of Excess Fares realised.

4. Existing Law.—The Law does not recognise Travelling Without a Ticket as a penal offence, for in Sections 112 and 113 of the Railway Act it is treated as Non-Cognisable and the Penalties prescribed are so mild that they do not act as a deterrent.

5. Indian Railway Conference Association—Views of.—Railway Administrations finding this evil widespread and being unable to devise effective means of prevention, came to the conclusion that the only remedy lay in amending these two sections of the Railway Act by making this offence Cognisable, and with this object in view the matter was referred to the Indian Railway Conference Association as far back as 1911.

(a) In 1911 the Conference resolved :

"This Conference do not think it desirable to ask for Legislation on this question and must leave it to individual Railways to prevent entry into their Trains of persons not having Tickets."

(b) In 1922 however, the Conference passed the following resolution :

"That in view of the increase of numbers of Passengers travelling Without Tickets and of the loss to Railways and to the Government caused thereby, this Conference recommends to the consideration of the Railway Board the advisability of revising the Railway Act in order to provide better security for Railways in recovering fares and penalties for travelling Without Tickets."

(c) The Railway Board, however, replied that it was not desirable to require an amendment of the Indian Railway Act until all other possibilities had been tried, and, they were of the opinion that the evil complained of should be met by improving the checking and collection of tickets.

(d) In 1924 the Conference again discussed the matter when it was decided that commencing from January 1925 all Railways in India should maintain certain statistics in connection with the total number of persons found travelling without tickets, of the numbers prosecuted under the different sections, and of the results of such prosecutions.

(e) In the Conference of 1926, it was decided to continue recording the above figures and in addition for each Railway to submit a note on the actual methods adopted to combat this evil of fraudulent travelling; also, a further request was made to the Railway Board to re-consider their previous decision.

(f) The Railway Board do not appear to have replied, but in view of their previous reply it is evident the Board do not contemplate approaching the Government of India to revise the existing Law, hence each Railway continues to concentrate on this problem of effectively checking Fraudulent Travelling.

6. Existing Method.—App. 1.—(a) Mr. W. H. Scott, a Senior Officer of the Accounts Department, in his printed Report on the "Experimental Introduction of the Crew system on this Railway" has very ably and forcibly summarised the existing methods adopted by Railways for dealing with this problem, their defects and the advantages of the Crew system over the former, and extracts from paras. 3 to 7 and 14 to 16 from part I of his report are attached as App. 1.

(b) On this Railway Ticket Collectors were employed at the larger Stations and also Travelling Ticket Examiners; their functions being for the former to check and collect Tickets at stations where posted and for the latter to travel in Trains and recover fares from those detected without tickets.

7. Main Issue.—(a) Any System to be successful, must in the main (i) Substantially reduce, if not eliminate entirely, Fraudulent Travelling, and (ii) Proportionately increase the Railways Revenue.

(b) Crew System, Introduction of.—That this had not been achieved is clear from the foregoing remarks, and a new scheme called the Crew System of Ticket Checking and Collecting was introduced as an experimental measure for 6 months on the Howrah-Asansol section including the Bandel-Naihati and Tarakeswar Branch, and operations commenced from 1st August 1926.

(c) This portion of the line was chosen for the experiment as it carries very heavy suburban traffic, and the Passenger earnings are approximately equal to about 1/5 of the entire Passenger earnings of this Railway.

(d) With the introduction of this System the existing staff of Ticket Collectors and Travelling Ticket Examiners were withdrawn and absorbed in the Crew.

8. Fundamental Principles.—The fundamental principles of the Crew System are :

- (i) To prevent any person who has not a proper ticket from entraining.
- (ii) To prevent over-riding.
- (iii) To see that all Luggage is booked.
- (iv) To collect Tickets from passengers at or before destination.

9. Method of Working.—(a) In actual working this system provides for a certain number of men or in other words a "Crew" to travel with each train throughout its run; each Crew consists of a man in charge designated "Crew-in-Charge" and sufficient number of Crewmen to enable one man being allotted to each 3rd Class and Inter Class Carriage.

(b) Duties.—The duties of each member of the Crew are to enforce the principles mentioned in paragraph 8 above.

(c) Crews-in-Charge.—The Crew-in-Charge attends to Upper Class Carriages, and in addition supervises generally the working of the Crewmen; further he alone is empowered to recover Excess Fares from passengers detected for any irregularity.

(d) Crewmen.—Crewmen attend to III Class and Inter Class Carriages and are prohibited from recovering Excess Fares; Passengers detected by them must be taken before the Crew-in-Charge.

10. Practical Application.—(a) It will be observed from the above brief description of the new procedure that it differs from the old in that its main feature is that of Prevention in contrast to that of Detection which belongs to the existing method.

(b) From the outset, however, it must be admitted that the first two items of the fundamental principles quoted above cannot at present be worked to in their entirety, as the existing conditions of working make this impracticable; there are two great obstacles, firstly the type of carriages in use which are Non-Corridor and are further divided into 4 entirely separate compartments, thus preventing the Crewman from moving from one compartment to another in the same carriage while the train is running between stations, and secondly the want of adequate fencing or other form of barrier, at a large number of stations, so as to prevent unauthorised ingress or egress to and from Station Platforms.

(c) In spite, however, of these handicaps it is claimed that the Crew System does tend towards the curtailment of Fraudulent Travelling and to a corresponding increase in Railway Revenue.

11. Experimental Stage.—App. 2.—(a) As previously stated the experiment of the Crew System was started on a portion of the Howrah Division from 1st August 1926, and after 5 months the results obtained have been detailed in Mr. Scott's Report.

(b) Extensions.—From these definite results which fully justified the experiment, the Railway Board in their letter No. 109-T., dated 30th March 1927, sanctioned the extension of the system to the whole of the Howrah Division including a small portion of the Asansol Division for one year from 1st April 1927, and to its introduction on the Lucknow Division from 1st May 1927 to 31st March 1928.

(c) On the Howrah Division the entire extension took place from 10th June 1927 and on the Lucknow Division the system was completely introduced from 5th June 1927; the executive control of the organisation was also at the same time vested in the respective Divisional Superintendents.

(d) The results continuing to be satisfactory the Crew System was further extended as under :

- (i) Lucknow-Shahjahanpur Section on the Moradabad Division sanctioned by the Railway Board in their letter No. 57675, dated 13th December 1927; operations commenced from 1st May 1928.
- (ii) Asansol-Moghalsera Section excluding Branches sanctioned by the Railway Board in their letter No. 6307-E., dated 15th May 1928, for one year from 1st April 1928. This brought practically the whole of the Asansol and Dinapore Divisions under the scheme; the Crew commenced working from 1st July 1928 and by 16th August 1928 was in full operation.

(e) The Railway Board in their letter No. 6307-E., dated 16th October 1928, sanctioned the extension of the Crew System to the whole of this Railway, temporarily till 31st March 1930, but no further extensions have yet taken place, as it was decided that before this was done the scheme should be re-organised with regard to the number of staff actually required, and accordingly a Revised Scheme is being submitted separately.

12. Results of Working :

(a) Howrah Division—Appendices 2 and 3.—Partial introduction from 1st August 1926. Complete extension from 10th June 1927 :

(i) Similar results for the period 1st January 1927 to 31st May 1927 prior to the complete extension compared with those for the same period of 5 months in 1926 before the System was introduced are also given in Appendix '2'; these again are on a par with those obtained during the first 5 months of the experiment.

(ii) A further comparison is made in Appendix '3' of the results obtained from June to December 1927, after the complete extension with a corresponding period in 1926 and 1925; the increases are satisfactory.

(iii) A final comparison is also detailed in Appendix '3' shewing the results of a complete year's working from January to December 1928, with the two preceding years 1927 and 1926; here the increases are remarkable.

(b) Lucknow Division—Appendix 4.—Complete introduction from 5th June 1927 :

(i) In Appendix 4 the results obtained after 6 months trial from July to December 1927, compared with the figures for a similar period in 1926 and 1925 are given; on this Division also there is a marked increase.

(ii) A final comparison of a complete year's working from January to December 1928 with the two preceding years 1927 and 1926 are also detailed in Appendix 4; here again as for the Howrah Division, the increases are surprising.

(c) Dinapore Division—Appendix 5.—Complete introduction from 16th August 1928.

The results obtained after 5 months of working from August to December 1928 as compared with similar periods in 1927 and 1926 are given in Appendix 5; here also there is a very appreciable increase.

13. Comments.—On 2 Divisions, Howrah and Lucknow, the Crew System has been in complete operation for over a year, and the results obtained after a full year's working can therefore be compared with figures of the preceding years with a greater degree of confidence than is possible for shorter periods. These figures for Howrah and Lucknow Divisions as detailed in Appendices 3 and 4 shew increases as follows :

(a) Under "Total number of Passengers booked from Stations on a Division to all Stations on the East Indian Railway with Earnings" :

Division.	Increase in Passengers.		Increase in Earnings.
	1927 over 1926.	1928 over 1927.	1927 over 1926.	1928 over 1927.
Howrah	831,079	1,046,769	Rs. 7,79,187	Rs. 7,87,810

Lucknow	11,506	„ „ 6,109

14. Non-Crew Divisions—Appendix 6.—Similar figures for 9 months—April to December—1926, 1927 and 1928 are detailed in Appendix 6 for the Allahabad and Moradabad Divisions where the Crew System has either not yet been introduced or extended; taking the first two headings only the figures are :

(a) Under "Total number of Passengers booked from Stations on a Division to all Stations on the East Indian Railway with Earnings" :

Division.	Increase in Passengers.		Increase in Earnings.

12. Results of Working :

(a) Howrah Division—Appendices 2 and 3.—Partial introduction from 1st August 1926. Complete extension from 10th June 1927 :

(i) Similar results for the period 1st January 1927 to 31st May 1927 prior to the complete extension compared with those for the same period of 5 months in 1926 before the System was introduced are also given in Appendix '2' ; these again are on a par with those obtained during the first 5 months of the experiment.

(ii) A further comparison is made in Appendix '3' of the results obtained from June to December 1927, after the complete extension with a corresponding period in 1926 and 1925 ; the increases are satisfactory.

(iii) A final comparison is also detailed in Appendix '3' shewing the results of a complete year's working from January to December 1928, with the two preceding years 1927 and 1926 ; here the increases are remarkable.

(b) Lucknow Division—Appendix 4.—Complete introduction from 5th June 1927 :

(i) In Appendix 4 the results obtained after 6 months trial from July to December 1927, compared with the figures for a similar period in 1926 and 1925 are given ; on this Division also there is a marked increase.

(ii) A final comparison of a complete year's working from January to December 1928 with the two preceding years 1927 and 1926 are also detailed in Appendix 4 ; here again as for the Howrah Division, the increases are surprising.

(c) Dinapore Division—Appendix 5.—Complete introduction from 16th August 1928.

The results obtained after 5 months of working from August to December 1928 as compared with similar periods in 1927 and 1926 are given in Appendix 5 ; here also there is a very appreciable increase.

13. Comments.—On 2 Divisions, Howrah and Lucknow, the Crew System has been in complete operation for over a year, and the results obtained after a full year's working can therefore be compared with figures of the preceding years with a greater degree of confidence than is possible for shorter periods. These figures for Howrah and Lucknow Divisions as detailed in Appendices 3 and 4 shew increases as follows :

(a) Under "Total number of Passengers booked from Stations on a Division to all Stations on the East Indian Railway with Earnings" :

Division.	Increase in Passengers.		Increase in Earnings.
	1927 over 1926.	1928 over 1927.	1927 over 1926.	1928 over 1927.

Lucknow	1,099,329	932,507	4,72,274	4,45,883

(b) Under "Total number of Passengers booked from Stations locally on a Division to all other Stations on the same Division with Earnings" :

Lucknow	466,786	328,715	3,56,160	3,20,541

(c) Under "Luggage Earnings" :

Division.	Increase in Earnings.
	1927 over 1926.	1928 over 1927.
Howrah	Rs. 50,550	Rs. 26,515
Lucknow	15,377	Less by 3,943.

(d) Under "Excess Fares Earnings" :

Division.	Increase in Earnings.
	1927 over 1926.	1928 over 1927.
Howrah	Rs. 30,828	Rs. Less by 15,471
Lucknow	11,506	„ „ 6,109.

14. Non-Crew Divisions—Appendix 6.—Similar figures for 9 months—April to December—1926, 1927 and 1928 are detailed in Appendix 6 for the Allahabad and Moradabad Divisions where the Crew System has either not yet been introduced or extended ; taking the first two headings only the figures are :

(a) Under "Total number of Passengers booked from Stations on a Division to all Stations on the East Indian Railway with Earnings" :

Division.	Increase in Passengers.		Increase in Earnings.
	1927 over 1926.	1928 over 1927.	1927 over 1926.	1928 over 1927.

Moradabad	515,865	„ „ 345,491	5,41,816	„ „ 2,43,120.

(b) Under "Total number of Passengers booked from all Stations on a Division to all other Stations on the same Division with Earnings" :

Division.	Increase in Passengers.		Increase in Earnings.
	1927 over 1926.	1928 over 1927.	1927 over 1926.	1928 over 1927.

Moradabad	436,145	„ „ 242,954	5,08,195	„ „ 2,00,378

15. Comparison of Results.—(a) Thus from these figures, paras. 13 (a) and (b) and 14 (a) and (b) it is seen that on each of the two Crew Divisions (Howrah and Lucknow) there has not only been an increase in Passengers and Earnings in 1927 over 1926, but also in 1928 when compared with 1927, but the position is different on the two Non-Crew Divisions (Allahabad and Moradabad) when though an increase both in Passengers and Earnings occurred in 1927 over 1926, there was a decrease under each head in 1928 when compared with 1927.

(b) When, however, comparing the results of these 3 years 1926, 1927 and 1928 it must be remembered that in :

(i) 1926.—Inter and III class long distance fares were reduced from 1st January which would tend to stimulate travel but the whole year was marked by a general decline in Passenger traffic.

(ii) 1927.—From 1st February there was a general reduction in Fares of all Classes and added to this stimulus was the great Kumbh Mela at Hardwar to which thousands of Pilgrims travelled ; the year was therefore propitious.

(iii) 1928.—Nothing unusual occurred but as in 1926 the year again witnessed a general decline in Passenger Traffic.

(c) The increases in 1927 over 1926 can therefore be accounted for by the stimulation of traffic brought about by these reductions in fares and to the increased bookings for the Kumbh Mela, but the continued increases in 1928 over 1927 occurring on the Howrah and Lucknow Divisions in contrast to the decreases found on the Allahabad and Moradabad Divisions, without the influence of any subsidiary factor, must in the main be attributed to the activities of the Crew.

(d) A more equitable comparison therefore lies between the figures for 1928 and 1926, and on this basis percentage increases and decreases have been calculated.

16. (a) Booking to Foreign Lines—Appendix 7.—The Chief Accounts Officer was unable to furnish readily figures similar to those mentioned in para. 13 (a) but shewing the total bookings separately by Divisions to Foreign Railways and the Home Line proportion of such Earnings ; the total Passenger traffic, however, from this Railway as a whole to Foreign Railways for the years 1926-1927, 1927-1928 and 1928-1929, are detailed in App. 7, but these figures naturally cannot be utilized for comparison by Divisions. Comparative figures as used in this Report are confined to Local Traffic only.

17. Percentage Increases and Decreases.—The percentage increases or decreases for the number of passengers carried and the earnings during August to December 1926 as compared with the period August to December 1925, and for 1928 as compared with 1926 are tabulated below :

(a) "Total number of Passengers booked from Stations on a Division to all Stations on the East Indian Railway with Earnings" :

Division.	PASSENGERS.		EARNINGS.
	Increase or decrease August to December 1926 compared with August to December 1925.	Increase or decrease in 1928 compared with 1926.	Increase or decrease August to December 1926 compared with August to December 1925.	Increase or decrease 1928 compared with 1926.
			Rs.	Rs.
Howrah	1.5 per cent.	12 per cent.	—1.7 per cent.	13 per cent.
Lucknow	..	21 "	..	11 "
Allahabad	..	—2 "	..	3 "
Moradabad	..	2 "	..	7 "

STATEMENT LAID ON THE TABLE.

(b) "Total number of Passengers booked from Stations on a Division to all Stations on the same Division with Earnings" :

Division.	PASSENGERS.		EARNINGS.
	Increase or decrease August to December 1926 compared with August to December 1925.	Increase or decrease in 1928 compared with 1926.	Increase or decrease August to December 1926 compared with August to December 1925.	Increase or decrease 1928 compared with 1926.
			Rs.	Rs.

Lucknow	..	8.8 "	..	11.6 "
Allahabad	..	—3.5 "	..	3.2 "
Moradabad	..	3.1 "	..	0.7 "

(c) If to the Earnings recorded under heading (b) above are added the increases or decreases resulting from "Unbooked Luggage" and "Excess Fares" the Percentage increase in Earnings become :

Division.	EARNINGS.
	Increase or decrease August to December 1926, compared with August to December 1925.	Increase or decrease 1928 compared with 1926.
Howrah	1.7 per cent.	20.1 per cent.
Lucknow	..	11.3 "
Allahabad	..	3.7 "
Moradabad	..	10.5 "

(d) Average Percentages.—Of these two main headings the latter (Total Number of Passengers booked from Stations on a Division to all other Stations on the same Division) is relatively the more important, for as it embraces all passenger Traffic within a Division, it is more directly connected with Crew working ; as such a comparison between the average percentage increases obtained from the actual results of 1928 over 1926 on the two Crew Divisions (Howrah and Lucknow) with those on the two Non-Crew Divisions (Allahabad and Moradabad) is of interest ; the figures are :

Division.	Average Percentage Increase or Decrease.
	Passengers.	Earnings.
Crew	9.7	15.7
Non-Crew	—0.2	7.1

(e) These average Percentage Increases which are far greater on the two Divisions where the Crew System is in operation than for the two Divisions where the system has not yet been introduced, clearly indicate, as also mentioned in para. 15 (c), the benefits derived from this System.

18. Financial Results.—(a) Continuing from the same figures quoted in paragraph 17 (b & c) above, the net increases in Earnings on the Howrah and Lucknow Divisions in 1928 over 1926 were :

Division.	Earnings.	Luggage.	Excess Fares.	Gross Total.
	Rs.	Rs.	Rs.	Rs.
Howrah	9,63,721	77,065	15,357	} 16,49,675 or 16,50,000
Lucknow	5,76,701	11,434	5,397

(b) From January to December 1928 the inclusive cost of the Crew staff employed on the Howrah and Lucknow Divisions was :

Howrah	4,83,522	} Total cost Rs. 7,73,468.
Lucknow	2,89,946

(c) Cost of former staff.—Prior to introduction of the Crew the former annual sanctioned cost of Ticket Collectors and Travelling Ticket Inspectors for the Howrah and Lucknow Divisions was :

Howrah	2,56,524	} Total cost Rs. 3,69,957.
Lucknow	1,13,433

(d) Additional cost.—The additional cost of the Crew staff on these two Divisions is therefore (b.c) or Rs. 4,03,511 per annum.

(e) Cost of Uniforms, etc.—Under either system (old or new) cost of Uniforms, House Rent Allowances, etc., would have to be added but as the Crew Staff outnumber their predecessors an estimate of 10 per cent. increase has been taken on the additional cost to cover all such expenditure ; the additional cost of the Crew staff therefore comes to Rs. 4,43,862 or in round figures Rs. 4,44,000.

(f) Net Profit.—Hence on these two divisions an additional expenditure of Rs. 4,44,000 has resulted in an increase of Rs. 16,50,000 in earnings.

(g) It is not claimed that the whole of this increase is due to the Crew System, but it may be considered that 75 per cent. of it is, and as such these figures furnish complete justification of the system.

19. Excess Fare Earnings.—(a) From the figures quoted in paragraph 3 (c) of the total amount of Excess Fares exclusive of Penalty and Excess Luggage realized on the whole Railway, viz.:

1924-25	Rs. 6,15,319
1925-26	Not available.
1926-27	Rs. 6,10,738
1927-28	Rs. 4,17,683
1928-29	Rs. 3,08,648

it will be noticed that in 1927-28 and 1928-29 there is a progressive decrease in the amounts of total recoveries realised ; this coincides with the extension of the Crew System made in 1927 and 1928.

(b) On four Divisions, Crew and Non-Crew, similar figures but including Penalty and Excess Luggage are :

Period.	Crew Divisions.		Period.	Non-Crew Divisions.
	Howrah.	Lucknow.		Allahabad.	Moradabad.
	Rs.	Rs.		Rs.	Rs.
Jan. to Dec. 1926 .	1,48,955	1,33,720	April to Dec. 1926.	76,106	52,460
Jan. to Dec. 1927 .	1,79,783	1,45,226	April to Dec. 1927.	1,01,844	54,491
Jan. to Dec. 1928 .	1,64,312	1,39,117	April to Dec. 1928.	71,581	52,638

(c) On the two Crew Divisions there is an appreciable rise while on the two Non-Crew Divisions the figures show no great variation. At first sight this would appear to stultify the remarks made in paragraph 19 (a) but it must be remembered that the nature of these two sets of figures differ from each other in that the figures in paragraph 19 (a) represent recoveries of Excess Fares only, while those in paragraph 19 (b) include Excess Fares, Penalty Charges and recoveries on Excess and Unbooked Luggage. Moreover, on the Crew Divisions there is now operating a greatly increased staff compared with the former staff of Ticket Collectors and Travelling Ticket Examiners employed on the Non-Crew Divisions, which in itself enforces a closer check resulting in an increase in the number of irregularities detected. These inclusive figures, in proportion to the increase in the number of passengers booked, do not show an increase.

This is illustrated by the following tables :

Division.	Period.	Total No. of Passengers booked.	Increase in Passengers over previous year.	Percentage increase over previous year.	Inclusive Excess Fare recoveries.	Percentage of Excess Fares to Total No. of Passengers booked.
					Rs.
Howrah .	January to December 1926.	15,585,541	..	..	1,48,955	.9
"	January to December 1927.	16,416,620	831,079	5.3	1,79,783	1.09
"	January to December 1928.	17,463,389	1,046,769	6.3	1,64,312	.9
Lucknow .	January to December 1926.	9,882,645	..	..	1,33,720	1.3
"	January to December 1927.	10,981,974	1,099,329	11.1	1,45,226	1.3
"	January to December 1928.	11,914,481	932,507	8.4	1,39,117	1.1

(e) These average Percentage Increases which are far greater on the two Divisions where the Crew System is in operation than for the two Divisions where the system has not yet been introduced, clearly indicate, as also mentioned in para. 15 (c), the benefits derived from this System.

18. Financial Results.—(a) Continuing from the same figures quoted in paragraph 17 (b & c) above, the net increases in Earnings on the Howrah and Lucknow Divisions in 1928 over 1926 were:

Division.	Earnings.	Luggage.	Excess Fares.	Gross Total.
	Rs.	Rs.	Rs.	Rs.
Howrah	9,63,721	77,065	15,357	16,49,675
Lucknow	5,76,701	11,434	5,397	16,50,000

(b) From January to December 1928 the inclusive cost of the Crew staff employed on the Howrah and Lucknow Divisions was:

Howrah	4,83,522	} Total cost Rs. 7,73,468.
Lucknow	2,89,946

(c) Cost of former staff.—Prior to introduction of the Crew the former annual sanctioned cost of Ticket Collectors and Travelling Ticket Inspectors for the Howrah and Lucknow Divisions was:

Howrah	2,56,524	} Total cost Rs. 3,69,957.
Lucknow	1,13,433

(d) Additional cost.—The additional cost of the Crew staff on these two Divisions is therefore (b-c) or Rs. 4,03,511 per annum.

(e) Cost of Uniforms, etc.—Under either system (old or new) cost of Uniforms, House Rent Allowances, etc., would have to be added but as the Crew Staff outnumber their predecessors an estimate of 10 per cent. increase has been taken on the additional cost to cover all such expenditure; the additional cost of the Crew staff therefore comes to Rs. 4,43,862 or in round figures Rs. 4,44,000.

(f) Net Profit.—Hence on these two divisions an additional expenditure of Rs. 4,44,000 has resulted in an increase of Rs. 16,50,000 in earnings.

(g) It is not claimed that the whole of this increase is due to the Crew System, but it may be considered that 75 per cent. of it is, and as such these figures furnish complete justification of the system.

19. Excess Fare Earnings.—(a) From the figures quoted in paragraph 3 (c) of the total amount of Excess Fares exclusive of Penalty and Excess Luggage realized on the whole Railway, viz.:

1924-25	Rs. 6,15,319
1925-26	Not available.
1926-27	Rs. 6,10,738
1927-28	Rs. 4,17,683
1928-29	Rs. 3,98,648

it will be noticed that in 1927-28 and 1928-29 there is a progressive decrease in the amounts of total recoveries realised; this coincides with the extension of the Crew System made in 1927 and 1928.

(b) On four Divisions, Crew and Non-Crew, similar figures but including Penalty and Excess Luggage are:

Period.	Crew Divisions.		Period.	Non-Crew Divisions.
	Howrah.	Lucknow.		Allahabad.	Moradabad.
	Rs.	Rs.		Rs.	Rs.
Jan. to Dec. 1926 .	1,48,955	1,33,720	April to Dec. 1926.	76,106	52,460
Jan. to Dec. 1927 .	1,79,783	1,45,226	April to Dec. 1927.	1,01,844	54,491
Jan. to Dec. 1928 .	1,64,312	1,39,117	April to Dec. 1928.	71,581	52,638

(c) On the two Crew Divisions there is an appreciable rise while on the two Non-Crew Divisions the figures show no great variation. At first sight this would appear to stultify the remarks made in paragraph 19 (a) but it must be remembered that the nature of these two sets of figures differ from each other in that the figures in paragraph 19 (a) represent recoveries of Excess Fares only, while those in paragraph 19 (b) include Excess Fares, Penalty Charges and recoveries on Excess and Unbooked Luggage. Moreover, on the Crew Divisions there is now operating a greatly increased staff compared with the former staff of Ticket Collectors and Travelling Ticket Examiners employed on the Non-Crew Divisions, which in itself enforces a closer check resulting in an increase in the number of irregularities detected. These inclusive figures, in proportion to the increase in the number of passengers booked, do not show an increase.

This is illustrated by the following tables:

Division.	Period.	Total No. of Passengers booked.	Increase in Passengers over previous year.	Percentage increase over previous year.	Inclusive Excess Fare recoveries.	Percentage of Excess Fares to Total No. of Passengers booked.
					Rs.
Howrah .	January to December 1926.	15,585,541	..	..	1,48,955	.9
"	January to December 1927.	16,416,620	831,079	5.3	1,79,783	1.09
"	January to December 1928.	17,463,389	1,046,769	6.3	1,64,312	.9
Lucknow .	January to December 1926.	9,882,645	..	..	1,33,720	1.3
"	January to December 1927.	10,981,974	1,099,329	11.1	1,45,226	1.3
"	January to December 1928.	11,914,481	932,507	8.4	1,39,117	1.1

20. Prosecution of Passengers.—(a) The total number of passengers prosecuted under the 3 Sections 112, 113 and 132 of the Railway Act, for the whole Railway are :

1926	32,547
1927	23,591
1928	12,594

Here also there is a progressive decrease similar to that given in paragraph 19 (a) above.

(b) On Divisions, Crew and Non-Crew, similar figures are :

Period.	Crew.				Non-Crew.
	Howrah.	Lucknow.	Dinapore.	Asansol.	Allahabad.	Moradabad.
1926	3,418	8,492	1,742	2,913	7,496	8,487
1927	1,167	1,482	1,759	2,100	8,140	8,943
1928	2,706	590	458	2,096	4,216	2,528

(c) Here also at first sight it would appear that the largest decreases occurred on the Non-Crew Divisions, but as the number of Passengers prosecuted bears a direct ratio to the numbers detected for Fraudulent Travelling, the reasons set forth in paragraph 19 (c) also apply here ; moreover the moral effect of the Crew System also in a measure makes itself felt in the neighbouring Non-Crew Divisions, the cumulative result being a marked decrease in the returns for the Railway as a whole.

21. Existing difficulties.—(a) As briefly mentioned in paragraph 10 (b) the System is being worked under very real difficulties. In accordance with the fundamental principles, the following instructions are issued to each Crewman :

“ A Crewman on taking charge before the departure of the train must examine tickets of all passengers travelling in the carriage allotted to him and any person found without a proper ticket or pass be at once removed.”

“ During the run he will be responsible for the prevention of passengers entraining without tickets and with unbooked Excess Luggage and for the collection and cancellation of tickets from passengers at their destination.”

(b) The working conditions under which these duties are required to be performed are easily visualised ; each train consists of from 10 to 12 carriages ; each carriage is divided into 4 or more separate compartments, and each compartment has at least one door on either side. A Crewman placed in charge of a carriage is responsible for carrying out his duties in respect of each of the 4 compartments. This can be done at Train Starting Stations which are generally provided with suitable barriers, but once the train commences running, one man cannot possibly even check the tickets of passengers entraining at Stations where the stoppage of the train is for only two or three minutes.

(c) Again while the train is running between stations the Crewman cannot move from compartment to compartment as there is no interior means of communication such as a corridor, hence particularly on long non-stop runs much valuable time is wasted owing to the Crewman being confined to one compartment, in which after the first 5 minutes occupied in checking, he must perforce remain idle till he can move into another compartment at the next stop. Thus on a run a Crewman can only enter each compartment of the carriage under his charge for purpose of recheck, once after every 5th stop.

(d) A passenger after having his ticket checked once will naturally object to subsequent inspections if called upon frequently to produce his ticket.

(e) Thus it is difficult under existing conditions for the Crew staff on a Running Train to prevent Ticketless Passengers from entraining and to prevent over-riding.

22. Suggestions.—(a) These difficulties could be overcome if each carriage was of the corridor type, and a very considerable saving in working costs would be obtained if not only carriages but entire rakes were so constructed.

(b) This type of carriage is now being used on the Light Train Rakes, Omnibuses and Sentinel Coaches in service on certain sections.

(c) The question of effectively barricading each station could only be done at enormous expense, but so far as the larger stations are concerned the matter is receiving attention by Divisional Superintendents.

23. Future Outlook.—Notwithstanding these drawbacks the success of the system, as is evident from paras. 12 to 18 of this report, is apparent, and the ultimate fulfilment of the fundamental principles is merely a question of time and future development.

24. Missing Tickets.—(a) No statistics shewing the percentage of missing tickets either by Stations or Divisions have for recent years been prepared, but it was evident from the Registers of Collected Tickets maintained at Stations that the figure was high ; this was not due, as would appear at first sight, to failure on the part of the Crew staff to collect tickets but rather to their mischievous disappearance after collection to avoid the labour involved in sorting and posting up these Registers.

New Punch.—(b) In order to prevent this a patent “ Ticket Collector and Punch ” was devised, manufactured and has now been issued for service. This Punch serves a dual purpose of automatically collecting one half of a ticket and at the same time stamping and dating the other half portion which is returned to the passenger ; furthermore tickets once collected in the punch cannot be destroyed or otherwise misused.

New Ticket.—(c) For the purpose of this Punch revised forms of Local Tickets both for Single and Return Journeys for all classes were introduced, and are now being issued to Stations in compliance with Indents.

(d) When the new form of Tickets are in complete circulation and with the use of this new Punch, there should be cent. per cent. collection of Local Tickets.

25. Further Advantages.—The activities of the Crew are not only confined to their fundamental principles of prevention of Fraudulent Travelling, but they are of immense benefit in other directions both to the Railway Administration and to the Travelling Public ; these are briefly :—

(a) The ready preparation of accurate and timely Census returns shewing the extent to which Trains are filled on different sections on which immediate action can be taken either to prevent overcrowding or to curtail running of non-paying trains.

(c) Added security and assistance to the Travelling Public due to the presence of a Railway Servant in each coach.

26. Hostels.—The method introduced by Mr. Scott of housing the large number of Crewmen employed by the provision of suitable Hostels has been found to be satisfactory ; no change is therefore contemplated.

27. Assembly Questions.—Replies to many of the Questions asked in the Legislative Assembly concerning the Crew System as mentioned in para. 1 will be found in the foregoing paragraphs ; in addition for convenience these Questions with their Answers will be found tabulated as App. “ 8 ”.

APPENDIX 1.

Extracts from Mr. Scott's printed report on the Experimental Introduction of the Crew System on the Howrah-Asansol Section of the East Indian Railway.

PARAS. 3 TO 7 AND 14 TO 16.—PART I.

3. Existing System.—Most of the Indian Railways have hitherto depended upon one or other of the following agencies to combat the evil of illicit travelling. These agencies have existed either singly or combined with one another. The agencies are :

(a) Station Staff.—This comprises the ticket checking and ticket collecting staff employed at important stations and junctions who in addition to this work are required to prepare reports of collected tickets for submission to the Audit Department. At roadside and smaller stations, these functions are performed by the Station Staff, in addition to their other duties.

(b) Travelling Ticket Checkers.—These are checkers who travel on trains and their duties are to detect persons actually found travelling without tickets or with improper tickets and to realise Railway fares and other penalties eviable from them under the Railway rules and the Indian Railways Act. They are also required to prosecute persons who are found committing any of the various offences in connection with travelling without or with improper tickets, under the Indian Railways Act.

(c) Squads.—These squads which are composed of varying numbers of Inspector and men carry out surprise checks either at stations or on running trains. Passengers found without tickets are excessed or, if legal action is called for in any case, it is initiated.

4. It has been stated that these agencies have proved a failure. This is evidenced by the fact that the Travelling Ticket Examiners, where they exist, recover large sums from the public. Further, lest it may be supposed that these large recoveries approximate to the sum total of ticketless travelling, it should be stated that the recoveries increase with the appointment of increased checkers.

5. Now the statement may be surprising but it is true nevertheless that the illicit travelling existing on Indian Railways is the direct result of the very methods which have been and are in force to stop it. In the first place the method of work has definitely the character of a system of detection. The machinery for the detection is primarily the Gate and Travelling Ticket Staffs as above indicated, and the efficiency of their work is gauged by the amount of their collections. The more illicit travelling there is, therefore, the more efficient appears to be their work. When, in addition to this, it is considered that it is the easiest possible thing for them to divert passengers from the booking office and excess them in the train, it is clear that not only are they in a position to encourage ticketless passengers to entrain but there is a strong inducement for them to do so, and very few, if any, are able to resist it.* The first indictment against existing methods is therefore that it fosters the diversion of earnings from the booking office under cover of what appears to be efficient work on the part of the staff.

6. The next point is subsidiary to this. The earnings having been diverted from the booking office it has not so far at any rate been possible to devise an account procedure to ensure that such monies ultimately reach the coffers of the Railway. A portion of it does and is reflected in the statements of recoveries made by the staff as already indicated; the balance is plundered. As a second count the system thus engenders a misappropriation of public monies.

7. There is one other fundamental defect in the system. It lies in the fact that personal responsibility for illicit travelling when it is detected cannot be brought home to any individual member of the staff. Thus if a Travelling Ticket Examiner finds a passenger without a ticket it is impossible to say what particular Ticket Controller let him pass through the gates; he may not have passed through the gates at all.*

14. The Crew System.—First with regard to the diversion of earnings from booking offices, as the system provides for the issue of tickets only by booking offices, it is clear that the effect in working must be that all earnings will be forced into the booking offices where there exist accounting arrangements which ensure that Railways actually receive, the monies collected on their behalf.

15. As regards the second defect in the old system, viz., that of an inducement to a misappropriation of Railway's monies, seeing that the staff under the new methods are prohibited from recovering any money from the public, there will in result be no Railway money in their charge to misappropriate. If a member of a Crew, nevertheless does receive money or other gratification he is not covered as a Travelling Ticket Examiner is by the transaction having all the appearances of a simple discharge of his duties, but he has manifestly rendered himself guilty of a very serious offence and is liable to heavy legal penalties. Further the staff do not work alone but are under supervision. Malpractices must either be carried out in collusion with other members of the Crew and the man-in-charge or it must be hidden from them. Neither of these alternatives is altogether easy.

16. Then as regards the question of personal responsibility, here again under the new scheme the discovery of any person without a ticket or with an improper ticket or with unbooked luggage lies at the door of the member of the Crew-in-charge of the coach in question and definite disciplinary measures can be taken. As regards the collection of tickets the issues by each train made by stations are compared with the collections of that train. Any laxity can be definitely taken up with the Crew and principally the Head of the Crew responsible for deficient collections. The position is in striking contrast to the conditions where with heavy illicit travelling, with luggage much underbooked, and poor collections of tickets, no personal responsibility for laxity can be brought home to any individual member of the staff.

THE HINDU WIDOWS' RIGHT OF INHERITANCE BILL.

Rai Sahib Harbilas Sarda (Ajmer-Merwara: General): Sir, in moving that the Bill to secure a share for Hindu widows in their husbands' family property be taken into consideration, I wish to point out that, owing to a mistake in fair copying the draft of the Bill or elsewhere, the words "under the Mitakshara law" were inadvertently omitted in line six of clause 3 of the Bill, and I ask that those words be restored or inserted when the Bill is discussed. The clause should read thus:

"Where the husband of a widow was at the time of his death a member of a joint Hindu family, the widow shall be entitled to such share of the joint family property as her husband would, under the Mitakshara law, have been entitled to, had a partition taken place in his lifetime; and may sue for partition. This share shall become her absolute property."

Sir, before I discuss the provisions of the Bill or give my reasons for bringing in this measure for enactment, I wish to make it clear that the Bill does not make any inroad into the basic principles of the Hindu law of succession or inheritance; nor does it propose to make any material alteration in the law governing the joint Hindu family. Its sole purpose is to ameliorate the lot of Hindu widows by restoring to them their right to be owners of their husbands' property and thus enable them to live their widowed lives without being left practically at the mercy of the male members of their husbands' families.

The right of a widow to inherit or rather become owner of her husband's property was allowed by Hindu law just as a right of inheritance is allowed by Muhammadan as well as English law to widows. And in the rapidly changing conditions of Hindu society it has now become necessary that Hindu widows, who enjoyed this right in old days should now be restored that right and be declared entitled to inherit their husbands' property. In old days a Hindu widow was legally entitled to be owner of her husband's share in the family estate. Old texts make it abundantly clear.

Under the Hindu law, as at present administered, a daughter does not get any share in her father's property as a son does, nor can she claim and sue for a share in her husband's property in the sense a son can do in his father's property. Where a widow does succeed to her husband, her right of inheritance is limited. For all practical purposes, her right has been reduced to a right of maintenance, and this right is often interpreted in courts of law in a very narrow sense. It is the modern case-law that has really reduced her to the position of a mere dependent on the family and entitled her only to maintenance and residence. The student of Hindu law who does not go to the texts themselves is led to believe that she has never been accorded any higher rights. If anything is primarily responsible for the great hardship which has fallen to the lot of Hindu women and which has reduced them to their present utterly helpless condition as regards their legal rights it is the false notion, harboured in the present system of Hindu law, that the woman has got absolutely no right in the property of her husband, except the right of maintenance. This was not what the law-givers of ancient times ever meant, much less did they lay it down. In order to remove misunderstanding, it is necessary that we should examine the import of the texts of the Hindu law.

The fact is, by marriage a girl is cut off from her father's family and introduced into the family of her husband as if she were born therein at the date of marriage, her Gotra becoming the Gotra of her husband's family, she being united with her husband in blood and body. Husband and wife constitute one individual, the wife being half, ardhangini. And, as the sage Datta puts it, "Wealth is considered as common to the married pair". Not only was wealth regarded as being owned by husband and wife jointly, but whenever occasion arose for dividing the estate among those having an interest in the family estate, the wife or mother was counted as a sharer as if she were a coparcener, and this is exactly the reason why the mother was given a share equal to that of a son on partition effected amongst her sons either in the lifetime of her husband or after his death. As an acute lawyer and an oriental scholar puts it:

"She gets a share in virtue of the co-ownership she acquires from the moment of her marriage in her husband's property, by reason of her being the lawfully wedded wife. It is erroneous to suppose that partition creates her right to get a share; for, according to the Mitakshara, partition does not create any right but it proceeds upon the footing of pre-existing rights."

It is thus clear that the fact that the wife is the co-owner of her husband's property is the only basis upon which her right to a share on partition can be explained.

(At this stage Mr. President vacated the Chair, which was taken by Mr. Deputy President.)

If maintenance was to be all that she was entitled to, that right could have been secured by making a provision to that effect, as has been made in favour of those who are regarded as dependents on the family. Where then was the necessity of giving her a share equal to that of her son or husband unless it was as an assertion of her right as co-owner in the property. Her right to succession to the property of her deceased husband was admitted on the basis of her status as co-owner with her husband, and Mitakshara expresses it in these words:

"If it be objected that jointness is declared even as regards ownership of property in the texts: yes, the wife's ownership in the husband's property is certainly shown by the text. Therefore the ownership in the husband's property is vested in the wife also."

Jimutavahana makes it clearer still. While criticising the position taken up by some commentators, he states:

"Nor is there any proof of the proposition that the wife's ownership in her husband's property accruing to her from her marriage ceases on his death."

In spite of the very liberal conception of a woman's status in the family of her husband as co-owner of his property, as formulated by the text-writers, as the foundation of all her rights either as wife or widow, English judges who decided the earlier cases, misunderstood this fundamental basis of her right, either because of their ignorance of the language in which Hindu law texts are to be found or because of the fact that, in their own country, rights of women were then not fully recognised. Mr. M. R. Jayakar in his learned presidential address to the 41st Indian National Social Conference thus speaks of the matter:

"The Englishman was not accustomed until the eighties to regard women in his own country as independently capable of acquiring or holding property. English women got this right at a very late stage. With this bias in his mind, it is not surprising that the English judge at Westminster, in interpreting ancient Indian texts written in a language which he did not understand, and of the context of which too he was personally ignorant, adopted a position inclining more towards limited female rights than towards absolute ones. In a celebrated ruling which laid down for all time that inheritance derived by women from a male in their husband's family can never become their absolute property, the Privy Council, being solely dependent upon confusing rival quotations cited on opposite sides, have actually abrogated the Mitakshara rule in favour of more ancient and doubtful text vaguely prescribing an ascetic life for Hindu widows. The bias thus acquired by judicial decisions has unconsciously survived to present day. The English judge in England and in India, owing to his natural caution born of his ignorance of the language and the habits of the people, has fought shy of liberal interpretations except when compelled by the clearest evidence."

We thus find that women's legitimate rights have been greatly curtailed in defiance of the texts. The Allahabad High Court in 1879, in the case of Jamna vs. Machul Sahu, recognised the wife's co-ownership in her husband's property in a subordinate sense, but this right was modified by the Bombay High Court in 1880 in Narmadabai vs. Mahadeo Narayan, Kashinath Narayan and Shamabai by implying that the co-ownership does not involve independent or equal powers of disposition or exclusive enjoyment or ownership in the ordinary sense, while the Calcutta High Court curtailed this right still further in 1903 in Punna Bibee vs. Radha Kissen Das, by stating that the wife cannot be regarded as co-owner so as to be able to enforce a claim for maintenance against a purchaser for value. This curtailment has been done in the face of clear texts to the contrary. It is however clear that the Hindu law-givers made wives co-owners of their husband's property and full owners of that property after the death of their husbands.

Until recently, when Hindu society was not subjected so much to outside influence, though women had been deprived of certain necessary rights enforceable at law, yet the social traditions and the noble influences of Hindu culture secured to the Hindu widow a position of respect and comfort in the family. And those who are acquainted with the conditions obtaining in Hindu family life know that in all families where Hindu traditions have not been forgotten but are still alive widows are treated with great respect and consideration, and elderly widows even exercise a predominant influence in domestic and social life. But with the gradual abandonment of those ideals which the originators of the joint Hindu family had in view in consequence of the slow disintegration of the joint Hindu family system under the impact of foreign political, economic and social influences, and owing to the acceptance in an increasing degree of new ideals of life and conduct, due partly to the introduction of foreign culture and partly to a new valuation of things, the entire fabric of Hindu society is undergoing a change, and the position of women and particularly of widows is becoming more and more difficult. With the disappearance of moral safeguards which existed while old Hindu traditions were honoured and acted upon, and owing to their non-possession of legally enforceable rights to property, the position of widows is becoming precarious. The only remedy now is to recognise the right of a Hindu widow in family property and thus safeguard her legitimate position. This is the raison d'être of this Bill.

It must be remembered that women all over the country are now awakening to a realisation of their precarious position and are demanding that the time has arrived when their rights should be recognised in law. In their Conferences held in different parts of India in recent years, they have demanded rights of inheritance. The All-India Women's Conference, which meets yearly, and which met at Poona under the Presidentship of Her Highness the Maharani of Baroda, at Delhi under the Presidentship of H. H. the Begum of Bhopal and last year at Patna with the Rani of Mandi as President, and the various provincial constituent conferences of women have been demanding for women rights of inheritance. The Gujarati Women's Conference held at Ahmedabad on 8th December last, the Benares Constituent Conference of Women on 10th December, the Simla Women's Conference on 10th September last, the Mysore Women's Conference, which met on 8th and 9th November, last, the Delhi Branch of the All-India Women's Conference, which met on the 26th November, the Ajmer-Merwara Women's Conference, which met on the 2nd December last and various other Conferences have demanded this right of inheritance. The Indian National Social Conference, which is the most important social organisation representing men and women of the whole of India, in its 42nd session held at Lahore during the last Christmas week, over which I had the honour to preside, unanimously supported the present Bill and demanded its passage into law. The Rajputana Women's Conference held in November, 1928, also demanded the passing of this Bill.

It is thus clear that there is a general demand on the part of the women of India that the law should recognise their share in the family property, and important public bodies like the Indian National Social Conference have given their support to the present Bill.

Mr. B. Das (Orissa Division: Non-Muhammadan): Do you concede the remarriage of widows?

Rai Sahib Harbilas Sarda: Yes, widows have a right to remarry. But on remarriage she becomes a married wife, and this Bill deals with widow's rights. Coming to the provisions of the Bill, I have to say that the Bill does not administer any deep cut across the Hindu law of succession; nor does it alter the line of succession by disinheriting persons who are coparceners under the Mitakshara school or who would be coparceners on the death of an ancestor under the Dayabhaga school. As I have said before, the Bill aims at improving the conditions in which a Hindu widow has to live by giving her a certain well defined right of inheriting property from her husband, without in any way materially altering the general law governing the joint Hindu family, and without creating new rights in addition to those already existing. This Bill in no way affects the rights of those who possess those rights by birth in a Hindu family under the Hindu law. It only affects those who acquire some rights in addition to their birth rights by the death of a member of the family, or those who had no rights in the family property at all and who, by the happening of a certain event, i.e., the death of a person leaving no male issue, acquire certain rights in the property of another family. In other words, it only affects the rights of survivors and reversioners, which rights have come into existence owing to recent interpretations of old texts. The Bill thus follows the line of least interference with the basic principles of the Hindu joint family-system.

[Rai Sahib Harbilas Sarda.]

Under the Mitakshara law, a male member of a joint family acquires coparcenary rights by birth. Under the Dayabhaga, the coparcenary rights accrue to sons not on their birth but on the death of their father. But as a widow can only claim the share which her husband would have got under the Mitakshara law, leaving intact the shares of her husband's sons and other male members of the family, even the widows in families governed by the Dayabhaga law will be able, under the proposed law, only to claim that restricted share without in any way interfering with the shares of her husband's sons or other coparceners. Thus, there is no disinheriting any coparceners or would be coparceners. And this is made clearer by the contents of the proviso to clause 3, which lays down that if the husband leaves no male issue and the widow adopts a son, she will share her husband's property with the adopted son.

Sir, I have known cases—and Honourable Members cannot be unaware of them—where people who all through the life of a married man, were at loggerheads with him and were his enemies, laid claim on his death to all his property, depriving his widow of her ownership of it. It is true the present law gives a widow a life interest in her husband's property if he was the sole owner of that property, yet the general illiteracy and ignorance prevailing amongst the women in this country, the pardah and the seclusion of women from society, and other special features of life in this country make it well nigh impossible for widows fully to get even their restricted rights enforced by law.

I find that the Honourable the Law Member has tabled an amendment asking that the Bill be circulated for eliciting public opinion thereon. If Government wish to adopt that course, I would not object to it and I would accept the amendment that the Bill be circulated for eliciting public opinion if the amendment provides that the Bill, after circulation, becomes available for consideration at the next Session of the Assembly before the life of this Assembly expires. Sir, I move that the Bill be taken into consideration.

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter (Law Member): Sir, I appreciate the object of the Bill which is to secure to the Hindu widow a share in the family property with full power of disposition. Sir, a Hindu widow's rights in the family property are now well settled by judicial decisions. The present attempt is not to elucidate what is obscure, but really a definite step towards the improvement of the widow's position in the family. To that extent the Honourable the Mover has my full sympathy.

Munshi Iswar Saran (Lucknow Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): May I know if this sympathy is confined to the Honourable the Law Member personally or extends to Government as well? I am only thinking of the source of this sympathy.

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter: I will explain the Government attitude. If the community which is affected by this measure generally favours it, Government will not stand in the way of its passing into law. But if the community affected by the measure is generally opposed to the measure, Government will not assist an unpopular measure to get through. That is the position of the Government.

Dr. A. Suhrawardy (Burdwan and Presidency Divisions: Muhammadan Rural): May I inquire what is the reason of this change of heart on the part of the Government so soon after the passage of Rai Sahib Harbilas Sarda's Marriage Restraint Bill, which was a highly unpopular measure and is an objectionable enactment?

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter: That is an irrelevant interruption. But when I say that I sympathise with the object of the Bill, which is to improve the position of the widow in a family, there is no denying the fact that the measure before the House is a wide departure from the existing law.

Take the Mitakshara school of Hindu law. On the death of a member of a joint Hindu family, his interest in the coparcenary property does not pass by succession to his heirs, but it passes by survivorship to the other coparceners, subject to the rule that where the deceased coparcener leaves male issues, they represent his rights to a share on partition. That is the existing law. The widow under the existing law is not a coparcener, but under this Bill she is being made a coparcener. That is a fundamental departure from the existing law. It cuts across the principle of survivorship. The widow steps into the shoes of the husband by depriving the other coparceners who would have got his share by survivorship. That is a departure from the existing law. Whether that departure is desirable or undesirable, I am not discussing at this moment. All I am saying is that this is a wide departure from the existing law. But if the majority of the community affected by this law were in favour of this departure, then certainly the Government would not stand in the way. The opinion of the community concerned has not yet been ascertained. The Bill has been introduced here and, probably, I am almost certain, that, excepting the lawyer Members of this House, no one has taken the trouble to examine the implications of the Bill. Such being the circumstances, I think it is only fair that the communities affected should have the fullest opportunity of examining the provisions of this Bill and expressing their views, whether they favour it or oppose it or whether they want any modification in it. For this reason, I am moving the amendment which stands in my name:

"That the Bill be circulated for the purpose of eliciting opinions thereon."

I hope this amendment will commend itself to this House as the Honourable the Mover has already expressed his willingness to accept it. As regards the condition which he lays down, that the opinions should be elicited in time for the next Session of this Assembly, I can give no undertaking. So far as the Government are concerned, every step will be taken to get the opinions as quickly as possible. This is a measure which affects the rich and the poor alike. In such circumstances, it is impossible to say when opinions from interested quarters—when I say interested quarters, I mean communities which are affected by this measure—when these opinions would be available. I can give no undertaking with regard to that. But subject to that, I submit that this is a measure which ought to be widely known and ought to be widely canvassed and opinions of everybody concerned should be known to the House before the House takes any definite step. With these words, I move the amendment which stands in my name.

Rai Sahib Harbilas Sarda: I am satisfied with the assurance given by the Honourable Member and I accept his amendment.

Mr. Deputy President: The original motion was:

"That the Bill to secure a share for Hindu widows in their husbands' family property be taken into consideration".

Since which the following amendment has been moved:

"That the Bill be circulated for the purpose of eliciting opinions thereon."

The question is that that amendment be made.

The motion was adopted.

THE IMPERIAL BANK OF INDIA (AMENDMENT) BILL.

Mr. B. Das (Orissa Division: Non-Muhammadan): Sir, I beg to move:

"That the Bill further to amend the Imperial Bank of India Act, 1920, for certain purposes, be taken into consideration."

Sir, the reason why I wanted this amendment to take place, I have mentioned in the Statement of Objects and Reasons. I will take back the House to the time when the Imperial Bank of India Act was passed in the old Imperial Legislative Council, and Sir Malcolm Hailey, who was then the Finance Member of the Government of India, described the Imperial Bank of India as a national bank intended to do great things for India.

(At this stage Mr. President resumed the Chair.)

The great things which were expected to be done by the Imperial Bank of India have been belied so far as the Indian Banking, Indian Trade and Commerce are concerned. The Honourable Mr. W. M. Hailey (Sir Malcolm now) then said:

"We ourselves have regarded it purely as a measure to extend banking facilities and to render the money resources of India more accessible to the trade and industry of this country; thereby promoting that financial progress which is an indisputable condition of the social and economic advancement of India. It was in this belief, Sir, that we first set our hands to this measure; it was in this belief that, in spite of some opposition and misunderstanding of our motives, we continued to press it on the Council; and it is in the belief that the measure will give to us a great national institution having ample resources for the assistance of trade, constituting itself an example of sound banking to other banks, an institution which will assist not only the State, but the public, and all sections of the public—it is in the firm assurance in this belief that I now ask the Council to pass the Bill."

He further said:

"I have referred to the honourable career of the Presidency Banks in the past. That chapter of their career is now about to be closed, but if our hopes are realised there will spring from their ashes, phoenix-like, a bank which, while not unmindful of the honourable financial traditions of the past, will partake of a wider outlook, and a larger, a more beneficial sphere as a national bank for India."

I may say at once that the Imperial Bank has not been the national bank of India. On the contrary it has been a great national menace to Indian banking, trade and commerce. If the Bank was to be a national bank, why did it help when a European bank failed, I mean the Alliance Bank of Simla. It immediately went to its rescue. At the same period certain Indian banks failed too. The Amritsar National Bank and the Standard Bank of India, the Oudh Bank of Lucknow all these failed more or less at the same time, but the Imperial Bank of India did not go to their rescue. The authorities of the Imperial Bank and the Government of which Sir Basil Blackett was the Finance Member at the time took no pains to see that those banks did not fail. They did not go to the help of those Indian managed and Indian owned banks and they did not rescue the shareholders and depositors of those banks. Very recently a bank in Calcutta failed, the Bengal National Bank. We did not see the authorities of the Imperial Bank coming to its rescue, nor was the Government of India mindful about the interests of the depositors or investors. Sir, if the Imperial Bank was really intended to be a national bank, as it was given out at the time of the amalgamation of the three Presidency Banks, it has failed in its purpose. It has failed in the matter of Indianisation of the staff and in the matter of appointments of Indian Managing Governors.

Of course I listened with great attention this morning to the reply which the Honourable the Finance Member gave to one or two questions appertaining to this matter on the floor of this House, and I am sorry I have not yet seen any list to show how the rapid Indianisation of the superior staff of the Imperial Bank has been going on. But this much I know that, when the Presidency Banks were amalgamated, they had 89 European officers, and at present they have much more than 250 European officers. Every year bank clerks from England are imported as Agents; and I have also definite information that Indians born of high families and trained in banking and commercial institutes in India have been taken as probationers and they have been allowed to drudge as clerks till 10 P.M. at night, while these young clerks who come from England, go away at 4 o'clock to play tennis or anything they like, and the Indian probationer rots in the second grade almost as a clerk. That is the tradition which the authorities of the Imperial Bank of India have developed. Sir, about this Indianisation of the Imperial Bank I will quote to the House the opinion of the Bombay Chronicle in its issue of the 12th February, 1926. It says:

"The Imperial Bank is the hotbed of racial nepotism; Indianisation of the staff is a mockery if we compare the appointments made in its development with the proportion obtaining before the programme of 100 branches was instituted."

At the same time the Forward of Calcutta also wrote on the 12th February, 1926:

"The State has therefore every right to press for Indianisation of the Bank; but there is a more urgent reason in addition to this. It is a matter of common knowledge, which has also been publicly expressed on more than one occasion, that the Imperial Bank makes racial discriminations in the matter of credit. Unless the Bank is Indianised more effectively this evil will continue."

With this question of credit I will deal later on, but it is a matter of pleasant surprise to me that on the same day an Indian paper in Bombay and an Indian paper in Calcutta expressed exactly the same view.

Sir, I have heard on the floor of this House and also outside that the shareholders of the Imperial Bank are all Indians and it is therefore an allows to Europeans and European concerns and how much to the Indians and Indian concerns. He will be surprised to see the racial discrimination shown by the Imperial Bank in this respect. My friend, Sir George Schuster, has stated that, until the report of the Banking Inquiry Committee is published, the present state of things will continue, and the Imperial Bank will not be asked to terminate the contract. I would much prefer that the contract is terminated, but I appreciate the difficulty. Pending the publication of the report of the Central Banking Inquiry Committee I would insist on the Government to pass this Bill so that the contracts may not be renewed without the assent of this House. The point I submit is that our national banking should be completely Indian-managed. My Honourable friend, the Finance Member, must be taking part in those deliberations regarding the grant of Dominion Status to India. If we can manage in the near future our House, we can manage our banking too, and if the Europeans who are controlling the Imperial Bank exclude every Indian and at every stage the question is put, "Who is that Indian who is fit to be the Managing Governor?" If I am permitted to point out, I will point out the gentleman (the Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra) who is sitting on the left of Sir George Schuster and who will shortly retire from the high office he holds in the Government of India. I think he will alone manage ten Imperial Banks put together.

With regard to the Indian probationers I have already stated certain things. In the discussions on the floor of this House Sir Basil Blackett often gave out that Indians with proper training in Europe were not found for being taken on the superior staff of the Imperial Bank. But Indian boys graduated in banking from English Universities are bound to receive banking training in British banks. There is an unholy combination to oust the Indian from English banking experiences. To avoid this handicap, I suggest that five Indians be trained every year in the London branch of the Imperial Bank, so that when they return they can be taken on the staff of the Imperial Bank in India on the same salaries as the English recruits. I remember I had once a talk with Sir Basil Blackett who told me that the London branch is a mere post office. If that be so, let five Indians be trained there every year, let them lick the postage stamps there and learn the intricacies of European banking and when they return, let them come not as clerks but as superior officers to work in the higher grades.

Sir, I wish to say one word why I want to limit the number of European officers to the number employed at the time of the amalgamation. I do not want to create fresh grounds for exploitation by young men from England. India should employ and engage her own best trained men. So if the Imperial Bank is going to be a national bank or is for the present acting as our national bank, it must work in that spirit. There should be only 89 officials and the rest should go and they must be replaced by Indians.

I ask the Government of India and the Honourable the Finance Member, as long as he is controlling the Imperial Bank, to see that such racial discrimination, whether as regards employment or as regards credit facilities to Indian industrialists, is no longer allowed against the interests of India. With these remarks, Sir, with these observations, I ask the House to take the Bill into consideration.

Mr. Vidya Sagar Pandya (Madras : Indian Commerce): I rise to support the motion of my friend, the Honourable Mr. Das, that the Bill be taken into consideration. But before I speak on the Bill, I wish to say a few words as to the time at which the Bill has been taken up. We know that members of a very important Party, the Swarajist or Congress Party, have absented themselves, that is, nearly 45 Members of the House who were always in standing opposition against the Government are absent. At the present juncture, I mean, just as things stand at present, it is possible for Government with a clear majority to defeat any motion, of whatsoever importance it may be, in this House. Secondly, the Government should not have put this piece of legislative business in the earlier part of the Session when Members are not yet present in the House in proper numbers. Government with their official Members, who draw salaries and allowances, and with the knowledge that their nominated Members are always at their beck and call, form a clear majority. Even when the Swarajist Party was present, the Assembly was a farce. To go on with business without the strong Opposition Party is a fraud on the public, and under these present circumstances to consider that any Bill has been rejected or any motion for grant of money has been passed by the House is a mere mockery. In these circumstances it will not be the voice of the people that grants funds for the Government to carry on, nor will it be right to say that, if a Bill is defeated, the non-official side has been given proper consideration. The Government have got a clear majority, and they are taking full advantage of it and with a vengeance. I do not think that any Bill or any motion has any chance of being properly considered as long as the Government have got a clear majority.

Mr. President: Whose fault is it?

Mr. Vidya Sagar Pandya: It is the fault of the Government, because when they know that such a united, solid, and strong Party of about 45 Members have resigned, the Government should have first ordered the bye-elections to fill up those seats and then challenged the strength of the other side. As long as Government have not done that, they are guilty of a gross dereliction of duty in going on with these measures and getting them passed in the name of this House.

Mr. President: You are not bound to move them.

Mr. Vidya Sagar Pandya: Sir, we must raise our little voice of protest against the Government's dereliction of duty. We are here to register our opposition. We are here to fill up the cup of their sins, and it is as our duty to our constituents that we bring all these matters to the notice of the public at large, and if in spite of these things being brought to the notice of the Government, the Government still insist on carrying on their work in this tyrannical way, we can only register our protest against it. Howsoever humble it may be, howsoever ineffective it may be, it is our duty to bring it to the notice of the Government and to the public at large. We owe it to our constituents, and if we fail to do that we will not be doing our part of the duty.

Now, Sir, I will come to the main point. The Bill, in my opinion, is a most modest measure that has been suggested. In my opinion the Imperial Bank of India Act of 1920 requires several drastic changes. Of course this is not the time to make them. But so far as this Bill is concerned, it is very modest, and I hope that the Honourable the Finance Member will accept it on behalf of the Government. I do not know what is his view. The present Bill seeks to limit the appointments to be held by Europeans to the number that they were at the time of the amalgamation. That is one part of the Bill. The second thing is that they should give training to Indians in banking work in England. The Imperial Bank at present does not do any real exchange business; it does it in a sort of way, but it does not do as much as any other Exchange Bank. If Indians are given proper training in England they will be in a better position to handle that kind of business.

The third part of the Bill is the appointment of an Indian Managing Director. At present the Bank is very much dominated by the European Directors who are always in a majority and the chief officers of the Bank are mostly Europeans. To know to what extent the Bank has been managed entirely by Europeans to the exclusion of Indians, we must go into the history of the three Presidency Banks which were amalgamated in 1921 and formed into the Imperial Bank of India. The Bank of Bengal was founded in 1806. From 1806 to 1930, that is, for a century and a quarter, the Bank of Bengal could not find any Indian to be either the Secretary, or Deputy Secretary or the Chief Accountant at the Head Office. In the several important Branches, Europeans only were put as Agents; Indians were not at all put as Agents. Similarly, if we take the case of the Bank of Madras, which was started in 1843, no Indian had ever been put as Secretary or Deputy Secretary or Chief Accountant at the Head Office or in any of the important Branch offices. Similarly again, take the case of the Bank of Bombay, which was started about when the Bank of Madras was started. It is said that Europeans are born bankers and nobody other than a European can manage a banking institution. But in 1866, the Bank of Bombay, which was entirely managed by Europeans, failed. It was again re-started, but even there, from the time it was started and even after the reorganisation of the Bank in 1866, they also have never had Indians as Secretary, Deputy Secretary, Chief Accountant, or Managers of important Branches. In 1921, when the three Presidency Banks were amalgamated, there was much opposition to the scheme, and it was even said that they wanted to wreck the scheme of amalgamation unless the Banks undertook to have Indians on the Board of Governors. It must also be stated that on the institutions from which the Imperial Bank was formed, from 1806 to 1917 or 1918 there was never an Indian Director on the Bank of Bengal. Similarly from 1843 to about 1917 there was not a single Indian Director on the Bank of Madras. On account of public agitation in Madras and Bombay and subsequently on account of the pressure brought by some of the Parsi shareholders of the Bank of Bombay, particularly, Mr. Bomanji the amalgamation scheme would have been wrecked, and it is to the credit of Sir Noreot Warren that he brought about a better understanding and they undertook to take up Indians as Directors of the Bank of Madras and the Bank of Bengal, and subsequently, in the amalgamation scheme, they provided for the appointment of Indians. Even now the appointment of Indians in the Board is entirely at the mercy of those other European Directors and the European Officers.

We have heard something about the scheme of apprentices; whenever there is any question of the Indianisation of the Imperial Bank, a list is brought forward and it is said "Here are so many appointments and probationers have been taken into the Imperial Bank service". I am sorry to say that those who have been taken into service so far have not been properly treated. A dozen of them have personally told me that they would be very happy to work in any other bank on half their present salary in the Imperial Bank. The way in which they are treated is simply disgraceful and so much is still talked of Indianisation and of probationers being taken. I say, Sir, unless they have got at the head among the Managing Governors Indians who are sympathetic, who only will take a real interest in seeing that the scheme is made a success, it would not be possible to have Indianisation of the Bank even in another two centuries. The treatment which these young men are given is not at all good. Similar men who are employed in England do not have even half the educational qualifications which these young men possess. These young men come from respectable families and are well educated and it is not as if they want to shirk work; they are quite prepared to do any work; but in this case, though we have got the Factory Act, under which the employer is not supposed to keep his labourers beyond particular hours, there is no such thing in the Imperial Bank. I know many cases where these young men have to go at about 8 in the morning and stay in the Bank till about 12 at night and sometimes till 2 in the morning at some places. The Agents go away at about four o'clock for their tennis, and then they come back at 6 or 7 p.m. and all these young men and office clerks have to wait and to dance attendance and then the Boss or the Bahadur comes and says "I shall now start work" and goes on working sometimes till about 9 or so. These poor men cannot make any protest against this; if they do anything they will be sacked, and it will be said that these young men want to shirk work. Under these circumstances, Sir, is it not necessary that we should have some scheme whereby we can compel the Imperial Bank to take proper steps to take Indians and make the Imperial Bank better? You do not find in any other country in the world that the Central Bank has got the least number of sons of the soil on its Board. But in the Imperial Bank of India, in the local Board at Madras there are only two Indians out of seven; similarly in Bombay there are only two or three, and in Calcutta there are only two—only less than one-third; and then, Sir, there are other methods by which the Imperial Bank contrives to keep out Indians from the Central Board. To this I have drawn the attention of the Honourable the Finance Member, and he has very kindly promised that it will receive his attention. Under the Act, the President and the Deputy President of a local Board are ex-officio members of the Central Board. I shall take only my own province of Madras. Since the Bank was established in 1921 there has not been one instance in which an Indian has been put either as President or Deputy President of the local Board. Similarly, except one or two instances, in Bengal, Indians are not made Presidents or Deputy Presidents. The result is that four of these posts, which might have been occupied by Indians in the Central Board, are now held only by European Directors of the Bank. This matter has been brought to the notice of the Imperial Bank by means of newspaper articles and by the Southern India Chamber of Commerce and other commercial bodies; but it has not been mended. Unless we have got a regular Act under which we can compel the Imperial Bank to take all these steps, it will not be possible to do all these things by any other method. I wish very much that we could persuade the Imperial Bank to adopt these improvements without any legislative action; but we have failed in persuading them to make all these reforms, and I do not know of any means other than legislative measures to compel the Imperial Bank to take the necessary action to Indianise the Bank.

[Mr. Vidya Sagar Pandya.]

The Imperial Bank now, like other exchange Banks in India, is practically a foreign bank where Indians are treated as foreigners in their own country. If I were to go on to detail the various things done and the methods adopted by them, it would take a long time; but I shall give you one or two instances. Take for instance a country like India where only 7 per cent. of the population has got education, and even of that portion only a few know English, and yet the Imperial Bank of India compels them to go to their office to sign a cheque. Recently they have made a little alteration, but if anybody has to sign a cheque in the vernacular and to draw his own money, he must go to the Bank; the Bank does not make any arrangements to verify and see whether the signature in the vernacular is in order. If you sign in English it is passed, but if you sign in the vernacular, the Bank says, "We do not know what your vernacular is". They do not even care to engage a clerk who will be able to compare the signatures; and we have a Banking Inquiry to find out methods of banking in this country. Every possible obstacle is put in the way of these men who wish to open accounts. On the other hand, Sir, when I was in England, when I went there about fifteen years ago, I had the honour of visiting some of the leading banks there and I found about a hundred or so, men in all the leading banks who knew foreign languages there. All the Continental bankers and Continental customers, when they open an account with any of the five big banks in England, write their letters in their own language; an Italian writes to, say, the Westminster Bank or Lloyd's Bank in Italian; the man from Spain writes in Spanish; the Frenchman writes in French, and the Russian writes in Russian and so on. Their letters are received in all these different languages and they are translated into English; the replies given in English are again translated into the language of the party addressed, and the result is that every man, when he writes a letter to the bank, knows what it is about. He does not know English or English idioms. But what happens in India? The Imperial Bank of India, like every foreign Bank, has not got vernacular cheque books printed in spite of all this agitation. They compel every man, in order to do his banking, to learn English first. I do not see, Sir, why a man should learn English in India while a Frenchman, a Spaniard, an Italian or a Russian who does not know English can keep an account with one of the leading English Banks without learning English. I do not see why Indians in India should be compelled to sign their names in English or else dance attendance on one of the officers of the Bank, sign in his presence, and put their initials in two places. An Indian has to go to the Bank. About 10 or 20 cheques are signed in the presence of the cashier or officer and if, by any chance, any of these cheques is lost or misapplied, the Bank does not take any responsibility in the matter; he is put to all the trouble and loss.

Now, these are some of the methods employed by the Imperial Bank of India in doing business with the public. Unless, therefore, we have Indian officers and an Indian Managing Director in the Bank to look after the wants of the Indian businessmen, it will not be possible to bring about any real reform. I know of many cases in which Indian constituents have to be practically at the mercy of the Cashiers of the Imperial Bank. (An Honourable Member: "Why?") The reason is this. The European Agent Bahadur in charge of the Bank does not care to learn the vernacular. So a constituent, when he wants to arrange for a loan, has to bring with him an interpreter. But the difficulty is when a man wants to make any financial arrangements with the Bank, he does not wish that others should know anything about his financial position or his arrangements with the Bank. At the same time he wants to have a talk with the Agent, but the Agent does not know the language, and so the constituent who wants to make the arrangement with the Bank is in difficulty. The result is that this man has to approach some of the underlings, and sometimes there is a danger of corruption in such cases . . .

Mr. B. Das: What about the Bombay Imperial Bank frauds?

Mr. Vidya Sagar Pandya: Never mind about the frauds; frauds will happen in any institution. But to treat the Indian public in these matters in such a shabby way is most deplorable. The Bank takes away all the public money; it takes away all the ratepayer's money, enjoys all the privileges, and yet treats the Indians as foreigners in their own country. It is only unfortunately in India that the people submit to such kind of treatment. No other nation would submit to such treatment.

Again, we are told that we should look to the Imperial Bank as an ideal institution. But is that the way in which the Imperial Bank should conduct its business with the Indian public? Surely, we require a change in the constitution of the Imperial Bank so that the Indians may be treated properly; and the object of this measure is to see that that object is attained. The Bill is a very small and modest one. There are of course many directions in which changes could be made. That can be done after the Banking Inquiry Committee has submitted its Report, and the Honourable the Finance Member in the light of that Report is able to make certain changes after the experience he gains from his contact with the Imperial Bank; but I may warn him that he should not be entirely led away by the Report of the Banking Inquiry Committee, because the Imperial Bank is such a strong and powerful institution that it is very difficult for most persons who have dealings with the Bank to come forward and tender evidence against such a strong banking institution . . .

Mr. B. Das: Right you are.

Mr. Vidya Sagar Pandya: The reason is this. If anybody, in the course of giving evidence, gives the slightest offence to the Bank, his business will be ruined completely. I can tell the House my personal experience in this matter. When I had to agitate for the inclusion of Indians on the Board of the Bank in Madras, there was great trouble. Some of my Directors were called upon by the then Secretary of the Madras Bank to explain why I was allowed to agitate. The Imperial Bank Secretary said to my Directors: "Why should Mr. Pandya dabble in these matters? Why can't you control him? Why should he interfere in these matters? See that he does not attend the next shareholders' meeting and speak there". In fact, the authorities of the Madras Bank wanted an undertaking from some of my Directors that I would not take part in the agitation or speak against the Madras Bank . . .

Mr. B. Das: Shame.

Mr. Vidya Sagar Pandya: So, Sir, unless we have got proper Indian officers to look after the interests of Indians, it will not be possible to effect any reform. Of course, I know that all the European officers in the Government of India as well as European commercial magnates think that they are Heaven-appointed trustees over us; that we cannot look after our own interests; and that they are the only and best people who can properly look after our interests. But, Sir, all those theories are gone. We have no faith in such grandmother's stories. (Laughter.) What we want is an effective hand in the management of the Imperial Bank. We know where the shoe pinches. We must be able to set right all our difficulties. It is no use our European friends telling us that we are yet children and we do not know how to manage our affairs. If at all we are allowed to manage our affairs, we can certainly manage them better.

Again, I might quote the instance of the Peoples' Bank of India, Ltd., which was an entirely Indian-managed institution. Unfortunately, when this Bank got into trouble, the Bank of Bengal declined to give an advance against Government Paper to people who wanted to take a loan against their Government Paper with a view to lend money to the Peoples' Bank. In fact the Bengal Bank wanted a clear undertaking from such people that they would not lend such money to the Peoples' Bank and only on that undertaking the Bank would agree to advance money against Government Paper. And, Sir, when the Industrial Commission was touring round the country, Lala Harkishen Lal, when he appeared before the Commission to give his evidence, made these serious charges against the Bank of Bengal. I was present on the occasion. The President said: "Well, Mr. Harkishen Lal, you are a barrister; you realise what you are talking about, I suppose". Lala Harkishen Lal replied: "Yes certainly, I do realise what I am talking about. I am speaking with a full sense of responsibility, and I am prepared to adduce the necessary evidence and my witnesses are here". Then there was a little whispering among the Members of the Commission and they perhaps thought it best to drop the matter and did not pursue it further. As against that, take the case of the Alliance Bank of Simla . . .

Mr. B. Das: What about the dinner on account of the failure of the Peoples' Bank?

Mr. Vidya Sagar Pandya: They have digested it long ago. (Laughter.) But take the case of the Alliance Bank. The Imperial Bank did not know fully what was the value of the properties held by the Alliance Bank. All at once 8 annas in the rupee were given to the depositors. Of course, there were certain political reasons behind this action, and I need not go into them now. But because the Europeans were in a majority on the Boards of all the three Local Boards and the Secretaries were also all Europeans, they at once consulted together and decided to come to the rescue of the Alliance Bank. If the Imperial Bank of India had not come timely to the rescue of the Alliance Bank, it would have revealed a number of bad things in the European management of the Alliance Bank, but everything was carefully hidden. With great and indecent haste the Imperial Bank advanced the money—I do not know yet what were the assets of the Alliance Bank—to the Alliance Bank without even carefully examining the assets or the financial position of the concern. We do not know how much property of the Alliance Bank has been taken up by the Imperial Bank themselves, which was originally given as security when they rendered the Alliance Bank financial assistance. In the case of the Peoples' Bank the depositors were paid at the rate of 19 annas in the rupee, whereas with all the much-trumpeted European management, the Alliance Bank has paid only 8 annas. Look at the difference.

Therefore, Sir, what I am trying to point out is that, unless you have got men who sympathise with us, who take a real and genuine interest in the country, unless you have men who are interested in developing the local industries, trade and commerce, you cannot run the Central Bank properly and efficiently. Most of the foreign banks are run practically by Britishers. Of course, I do not want to find fault with them, because they come here from a distance of 6,000 miles to make some money, and they are interested only in the export and import trade, and the Imperial Bank renders the foreign concerns financial assistance in bringing the crops from the interior. If we want to effect a real reform in the Imperial Bank, I would suggest that at least half the number of Directors should be Indians and one Managing Director; also a majority of officers should be Indians. It is only then that it will be possible to make any headway in the matter of financing our industries, trade and commerce. I shall not take up any more the time of the House. I support the motion of the Honourable Mr. B. Das to take the Bill into consideration.

The Assembly then adjourned for Lunch till Half Past Two of the Clock.

The Assembly re-assembled after Lunch at Half Past Two of the Clock, Mr. President in the Chair.

Mr. Sarabhai Nemchand Haji (Bombay Central Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, after the exposures made before this House by my Honourable friend Mr. Vidya Sagar Pandya, speaking on the motion of Mr. Das it is impossible for any independent Member of this House not to support the motion of Mr. Das. As a matter of fact the details of the Bill moved by Mr. Das have been before the public for many a long year. Ever since the Imperial Bank of India came into existence, or I would rather say, soon after the Bank came into existence, the people of India have been disillusioned as to the mighty results that were expected from it. It was stated when the consolidation of the three Banks was under consideration that this centralisation would lead to the policy of initiation of Indianisation, which in due course would give us all Indian Agents of the Bank at its various branches. That, Sir, has not happened. Not only that, but as my Honourable friend pointed out, since 1926 or 1927 the policy of further initial Indianisation seems to have come to an end. It is most regrettable that in matters of this character, the Government which, when it suits them, raise certain hopes in the public mind, soon afterwards, when their ends are served, forget all about their promises and leave the Indian side to shift for itself. This is not the only case, and if I had time, I could enumerate a large number of cases where high hopes were raised when Government wanted to carry a particular item through. But as months and years roll on, as the pressing need of the hour is no longer felt, a deaf ear and a blind eye are turned towards old promises. That is the reason why I have risen to support this Bill. I would like, if I may, to make a suggestion; that is particularly after what my Honourable friend Mr. Vidya Sagar Pandya has pointed out, I very much doubt the wisdom of clause 2 (c), namely:

"that from the date of the promulgation of this Act, as amended, the total number of European officers shall not at any period exceed the number employed at the time of the amalgamation of the Presidency Banks."

[Mr. Sarabhai Nemchand Haji.]

I do not see any reason why we should encourage the permanence of a European block in this national institution, particularly when we propose to make it national in due course. If it were possible, I would like that the Bill should be committed to a Select Committee wherein its various clauses which make it a very mild measure at the moment, may be strengthened, and other items incorporated with a view that this Bill should help to Indianise the whole of the character of the Imperial Bank as we know it to-day. I want Indianisation not merely with regard to staff, because that is a relatively minor matter; but the important matter is that there should be Indianisation of the Directors and Indianisation of the management. My Honourable friend Mr. Vidya Sagar Pandya has mentioned a majority of Indian Directors. Sir, our experience in the past has been that a mere majority of Indian Directors does not help. It must be an effective majority of Indian Directors. As is required by the various clauses of the Indian Companies law, I suggest that no effective Indian majority of Directors can exist unless the number of Indian Directors is 75 per cent. of the total. Moreover, those of us who have experience of business know that in this country under the present operation of the Company law, if the management is of a mentality different from even that of the majority of Directors, the view of the management holds. It has been our experience in a large number of cases that where management is European, with even an Indian majority of Directors, we have not succeeded in getting the Indian mentality instilled into that company. That is why from the practical point of view, I would also insist that, in addition to 75 per cent. of Indian Directors, we should have 75 per cent. Indian element in the management of the Bank in order that all those evils that have displayed themselves in the past and in the recent history of the Bank should no longer continue to operate, and in order that a brighter future might be held out to those merchants whose claims for help have not in the past been properly considered because they were Indians. This is not the time to go into details of the many cases in which parties have not been helped by the Imperial Bank at one or the other of their branches simply because the parties are Indians. Nor do I want to narrate cases in which large credits have been provided to parties because, as the outside world feels at least, the parties are Europeans. This kind of discrimination which has been going on and under which the public smart much more after the passing of the consolidation Act than before, should no longer be allowed to continue. I say, Sir, that the only way to do it is, not merely to get a majority of Indian Directors on the Board, but also to have a majority of Indians in the management. That majority, if it is to be effective, should be also 75 per cent. That much, Sir, with regard to the Indianisation of the Bank. Now I would just like, before I sit down, to say one word about the training. There is a clause here which says that the London branch shall provide training for at least five Indian graduates from recognised Universities every year. It may be stated in reply to this demand that as the London branch works merely as a post office, it is not possible for that branch to provide any adequate training. Even granting the full strength of that argument, may I suggest that, with a branch working, even as a post box, in London, that branch must have got certain business relations with other banks in London and elsewhere; and if a genuine desire were felt and if genuine efforts were made to help the training of Indians in England under the scheme, it would not be impossible for even this post office of a branch to arrange with the various banks in London to take up properly recruited Indian candidates. Whatever may be the fate of this Bill, I hope the suggestions that have been thrown out from the popular side will be borne in mind and as many of them incorporated into action as possible whenever opportunity arises. Sir, with these words I support the motion made by Mr. Das.

The Honourable Sir George Schuster (Finance Member): Sir, at the outset I should like to congratulate my Honourable friend Mr. Das, on his success in eventually finding a place in the active list for his Bill.

Mr. B. Das: After five years.

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: He has been a very patient supporter of this measure, and now, as he says, after five years he has found place for a debate on the second reading. I should like to say at the outset that I am in complete sympathy and that Government are in complete sympathy with what they understand to be the object of this Bill, namely, that the Imperial Bank should take every opportunity of training Indians and of associating Indians in the management of the Bank. I am sure my Honourable friend will admit that as regards that kind of policy and the spirit which I believe he has in mind, I myself have never neglected any opportunity to give effect to it in all that I have had to do out here, either working with the Public Accounts Committee or the Standing Finance Committee, or in any other way; so that I feel sure he will believe me to be genuine when I say that I am in complete sympathy with the spirit underlying his Bill.

I do not propose, Sir, to reply in detail to a great many of the general statements which have been made about the Bank. I think those statements have been to say the least exaggerated, as for example when we hear the Bank described as a "hotbed of racial discrimination", and words of that kind used. None of those statements has been supported in this debate by any sort of reliable evidence. It is very easy to make general statements of this kind, and I for one do not believe that they are justified.

I would like to refer to the remarks of my Honourable friend, Mr. Vidya Sagar Pandya, when he regretted the composition of the House which was here to-day to hear the discussion of this Bill. I myself also regret one particular absentee and that is my Honourable friend Sir Purshotamdas Thakurdas. I should have very much liked to hear what he had to say on the subject. So far as I have seen the working of the Bank,—and I have sometimes been insisted to attend the meetings of the Central Board in Bombay,—he has always been a most prominent figure on the stage; and from what I have seen in Bombay, if I had been asked to name an example of any place where there was perfect co-operation between Europeans and Indians in the working of practical business, I should have said it was in the working of the Central Board as I saw it at Bombay. I believe myself that at any rate for the next few years, that is the way in which success is to be achieved in the development of business and in the economic progress of India, and I had thought that in the Imperial Bank something of that kind was being done.

Sir, although I sympathise, as I have said, with the general object of this Bill, I regret to say that, speaking on behalf of Government, I must oppose the second reading. I do not feel that the terms in which the Bill is drafted are appropriate to the objects which the Mover has in mind; nor that sort of assurance even, and simply criticises the Bill in a destructive manner.

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: May I ask what sort of assurance is required? My point was that, from the figures which I gave, the Imperial Bank was advancing very fast in the direction of the Indianisation of its staff, and that the measures that have been already adopted were proving effective in attaining the object which my Honourable friend Mr. Das has in moving this Bill. If I had not been able to find evidence of that advance, I might have taken a different attitude, but in the circumstances my point is that no assurance is required so long as the Bank continues in its existing practice.

Mr. N. C. Kelkar: The assurance I want is not in the light of the interpretation of the figures of Indianisation on which the Finance Member relies, and in which he believes, but specially in the light of the demand made in this Bill, and that assurance again is half-hearted. He practically gives credit to the Imperial Bank for doing what is right, but we on this side of the House say frankly that we do not take the same view as he does about the figures of Indianisation that he has quoted. Therefore what I would have liked to have from him is an assurance, not in relation to the figures that he has quoted, but with regard to the demand that has been made in this Bill.

Now it is said that the treatment of the question of the agreement through a Bill, through statute, would not be very satisfactory. Perhaps there is something in that, but if the Charter of the Bank is given by statute, I do not see why there should not be any reference in the statute itself as to the agreement between the Bank and the Government. At present there may be an agreement, but it is entirely approved by Government alone, and the Legislative Assembly, as such, has absolutely no voice in determining the terms of the agreement, and as the Assembly is the chief custodian of the people's money, and as the Imperial Bank is chiefly supported by the people's money, this Assembly has certainly a right to claim a voice in determining the terms of the agreement also. Now, if it were a question of exchange banks or ordinary shareholders banks, we would not have been right in coming to this House with a demand of this kind, but the Imperial Bank stands on a separate basis altogether. As I have said, the Imperial Bank would not be so powerful or profitable to the shareholders were it not supported by the people's money.

What the Imperial Bank ordinarily does in the nature of training not only Indian students but also training the public at large in the methods and habits of financing—that question was sufficiently discussed when Mr. Haji some time ago moved for a Banking Inquiry. In the course of that debate it was pointed out by many speakers, including myself, that the Imperial Bank does not care a little with regard to the training to be given to the people in the methods and habits of banking. It is an absolutely imperial body, as its name shows; it is imperial and autocratic, and you have simply to attend at the office of the Imperial Bank for some time and again at the office of some private bank for some time to see the difference between the treatment given to the customers by the two banks.

The principal question raised by the Bill is manifestly Indianisation. That has been discussed already to some extent. The other question is as to the views, attitude and tendencies of the Imperial Bank; that also has been discussed and I do not want to go into the merits or demerits, the doings and the misdoings of the Bank; that has been sufficiently discussed. But what is directly aimed at in the Bill is Indianisation. Perhaps clause 2 might have been worded differently. I myself think that the wording, "that from the date of the promulgation of this Act as amended the total number of European officers shall not at any period exceed the number employed at the time of amalgamation of the Presidency Banks", in clause 2 is somewhat drastic. I personally would not make it so drastic, and I see there is some point in what the Finance Member has said with regard to abrupt changes to be made in the personnel of the Bank. Things of course could be done gradually, but there is no assurance that, even gradually, they will be made.

Then there is this demand that the London branch shall provide training for at least five Indian graduates from recognised Universities every year. Here also I am just inclined to agree more with the Finance Member than with the Mover of the Bill, and I think that the principal training that has to be secured for Indian candidates and probationers has to be secured in Indian finance and that will be done more properly in the Indian Bank itself than at the head office in London. But what Mr. Das probably had in mind was that there was such a thing as high finance, and training in that high finance cannot be obtained in India but only in London; and I do say that, even Indians deserve to be given that training in high finance which is to be obtained at the London office rather than in the Indian offices.

Now, Sir, with regard to this demand that Indians should be on the directorate or the management of the Imperial Bank, I do not think there is anything wrong in making that demand. In fact, I may point to the example of the Reserve Bank Bill which has now been dropped. If you look at that Bill, you will find that Indian directors were expressly sought to be secured by statute. Clause 8 (b) of that Bill distinctly says: "Two directors shall be Indians nominated by the Governor General in Council". That is a statutory provision in the name of Indians. I do not see why it should be supposed to be wrong to secure Indians as such by statute on the ground that it is not practicable to secure Indians at once. I may mention in passing that the Reserve Bank was supposed to be a much bigger bank in effect than the Imperial Bank itself; and if on the directorate of the Reserve Bank you could contemplate having Indians as such, I do not see any reason why there should not be a demand for Indian directors as such on the Imperial Bank. Then again in that Bill Indians were supposed to be coming in indirectly also. Clause (b) specifically mentioned Indians to be nominated by the Governor General in Council, but there were to be, in addition, directors to be chosen or selected by Indian Chambers of Commerce: manifestly the expectation was that the selected persons would be Indians. Then again a director was to be elected by the provincial co-operative banks. It was openly expected that that director would also be an Indian and very naturally. There was also a proposal originally, which was stoutly opposed by Government but on which the House never yielded its position, that three directors should be appointed by the Indian Legislatures. I take it that at least two of them would have been Indians; and if I remember aright, the entire effort on the part of this side of the House at that time was to secure, not quite a large majority of Indian directors, but a very considerable number of Indian directors to be appointed on the Board of the Reserve Bank. If that be the case, I suppose, if the Bill had not been dropped under peculiar conditions and if we could have reached the end of that Bill, I think the required number of Indian directors on the Reserve Bank would have been secured. If that is the case with regard to the Reserve Bank, which was a much more important and a bigger bank than the Imperial Bank, why should any difficulty be made about Indian directors to be provided for by statute for the Imperial Bank? In the case of the Reserve Bank manifestly there was an endeavour to be made to have Indian directors on the Bank by statute. Where is then the objection to make a similar attempt with regard to the Imperial Bank?

There is only one more remark I wish to make and that is with regard to the agreement. On that matter I have already said that what the Finance Member has said does convey a sort of assurance that what Mr. Das wants to be secured by the last sub-clause of clause 2 is going to be secured more or less; but the principal point is not yet made clear as to whether the Legislative Assembly will have any voice in settling the agreement as between the Imperial Bank and the Government. So far there is no Reserve Bank on the horizon, and even in the course of the Reserve Bank Bill debate, it was contemplated that the Imperial Bank might work as the agent of the Reserve Bank; and even then the question was raised and a number of amendments were tabled to the effect that the agreement with the Imperial Bank should terminate after a certain period and that future agreements should be subjected to the approval of this House. The same demand is made here. Of course, as I said, the Finance Member has given a sort of assurance that the Legislative Assembly will be kept informed as to what the agreement is; but that is quite different from giving the Legislative Assembly an actual voice in the matter of the settlement of the agreement. With these remarks I support Mr. Das's Bill.

Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya (Allahabad and Jhansi Divisions: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, we are glad to have had the assurance of the Honourable the Finance Member that his sympathies are with the object of this Bill; and I am also glad for the information that he has given with regard to the progress that has been made in the Indianisation with reference to this Imperial Bank. To the extent it has gone, it is a matter for satisfaction and thankfulness. I recognise that the Bill as it stands requires further consideration and I therefore suggest that, if the Honourable the Finance Member agrees, the Bill might be circulated for opinion.

The main points that have come out in the discussion, particularly from the Honourable the Finance Member's remarks, are the impracticability or rather the injustice, which is involved in the suggestion that the total number of European officers shall not in any period exceed the number employed at the time of the amalgamation of the Presidency Banks. I do not think that the House would desire that 89 officers or any number like that should be dismissed. What the Honourable the Finance Member suggested was a better course, namely, that it might be agreed that, from a certain date to be fixed, there shall be no further increase in the number of European officers. That is a suggestion which is very deserving of consideration. If we had time, possibly we might agree to lay down a proposition in a form which might be acceptable to the House generally. There is no doubt that, while the increase in the number of Indians employed has been considerable so far as numbers go, we have to take into account the emoluments and the offices which they hold, and it is high time that there was a definite policy adopted of increasing the number of Indians in the higher appointments in the service of the Bank. I therefore think that this is a matter which might very well be considered if the Bill were circulated and we had the opinions of those who have been working institutions and dealing with them.

With regard to the second point about giving training to Indian graduates in London, I agree with the Honourable the Finance Member and my friend Mr. Kelkar that provision should be made in India for giving as good a training as can possibly be given in India to suitable Indian graduates to qualify themselves as Managers or Assistant Managers in these Banks. If the Bill is circulated for eliciting public opinion, we might be able to get more definite opinions and more concrete proposals to improve the training which is at present given. It might also then be considered whether, in addition to the training which may be provided for here, there should not be a number of scholarships, say 20 or more or whatever the numbers might be, awarded to students who have taken degrees in economics to proceed to other countries besides England to take the necessary training. That is a matter which requires consideration, because when the result of the Banking Inquiry is known, whatever changes might take place in the constitution of the Government, it is obvious that in the near future a great deal of banking development must be a certainty. We cannot contemplate India going on with the present system of banking. There must be a very great expansion of banking in India, and you will require very well trained men; and men cannot be trained in a day. Therefore, Sir, I suggest that this question also deserves consideration which could be given to it if the Bill were circulated for opinions.

Thirdly, Sir, with regard to the suggestion thrown out by the Honourable the Finance Member that training might be given not so much as in the London Branch of the Imperial Bank as in other institutions, I think that supports what I have already said. There are young men who have taken the M. A. degree in economics in several universities. Several universities give degrees now in commerce. They learn a good deal of banking theoretically, but if we could arrange for institutions in London to receive a certain number of Indians as apprentices, they would be able to qualify themselves in time to be appointed as Managers and Assistant Managers.

Then we come to the appointment of one Indian at least by nomination by the Governor General in Council on the Central Board. I do not know what the practice at present is, but I do not think there should be any difficulty in accepting a statutory provision to that effect. We have been relying too long on a general desire to Indianise Departments. We want now statutory provisions, wherever we can put them in, in order to be assured that Indianisation shall be carried on in a definite way. I therefore think that this is also a matter which is well worthy of consideration.

*Speech not revised by the Honourable Member.

Lastly I come to clause 3, which says that "all future agreements with the Imperial Bank of India shall be subject to the approval of the Legislative Assembly and shall be of a temporary nature". The Honourable the Finance Member has said that no new arrangement will be made with the Imperial Bank of India without the Assembly being informed. Well, that no doubt is very clear. But I think the House on this side wishes to have an assurance that, when the period of the present agreement with the Bank is extended, the House should have an opportunity to review the action of the Bank in different directions, to point out any deficiencies there might be, and to draw attention to those deficiencies. I think an assurance is needed from Government on that score, that the extension of the period of agreement with the Bank will not take place without the House being given an opportunity to have a say in the matter. All these points are such that they deserve to be considered further. At this stage it would be wrong, in my opinion, to ask us to pass the Bill, and it would be equally wrong to oppose the Bill. I therefore venture to put forward the suggestion that, if the Honourable the Finance Member agrees, with the leave of the Chair, I wish to move that the Bill be circulated for opinion. I hope, Sir, I have your approval, and I do move that the Bill be circulated for opinion.

Maulvi Muhammad Yakub (Rohilkund and Kumaon Divisions: Muhammadan Rural): Sir, the discussion on the Bill this morning has shown that both sides of the House, I mean the Government and the non-official Members, are in sympathy with the real object of the Bill. What is required is a modification in the language of the Bill. We find that certain clauses are not properly drafted. But, Sir, in order to achieve that object, my learned friend Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya has suggested that the Bill should be circulated for eliciting public opinion. With due deference to the Honourable Pandit, I am unable to agree with him in the suggestion he has made. A motion to circulate the Bill for eliciting public opinion at this stage, when the Assembly is going to be dissolved in a few months, would mean killing the Bill altogether. Therefore, Sir, I would propose that, instead of the Bill being circulated for eliciting public opinion, it may be referred to a Select Committee, and after the Select Committee has met, say in the course of a week or ten days, the Bill will again be brought in the House for discussion, and then it may be passed. I hope, Sir, that the view which I have expressed will be accepted by the House.

Mr. President: Has the Honourable Member moved?

Maulvi Muhammad Yakub: I move, Sir, that the Bill be referred to a Select Committee.

Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya: May I have your permission to withdraw my motion? I agree with the motion moved by my friend Maulvi Muhammad Yakub, and if that is accepted, I shall be very pleased.

Mr. President: Both will stand.

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: Sir, I find myself in some difficulty in dealing with both these motions at the same time. I should like to make one point perfectly clear. The Honourable the Deputy President has made a statement that both sides are in agreement as regards the object of the Bill

Maulvi Muhammad Yakub: I said that both sides of the House are in sympathy with the object of the Bill. I thought from the speech made by the Honourable the Finance Member that he was in full sympathy with the object of the Bill.

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: I was going to say that that in a sense is perfectly true, but I want very definitely to state that, while I am in agreement with the objects which the Honourable the Deputy President has at heart, and I believe my friend Mr. Das has at heart, I am not in agreement that those objects can be achieved by legislation, and certainly not by legislation of this kind. I think that this Bill is a badly aimed shot at that particular target, which will never hit it, however far it travels. That, Sir, is my difficulty in dealing with the suggestion which came from the Honourable the Leader of the Opposition, that the Bill should be circulated for opinion. There again I am entirely in agreement with the object that it is desirable to get the opinion of the country on this subject, but I venture to suggest that he would be doing a disservice to the cause which he has at heart if he persuaded us to allow this particular Bill to be circulated, because I think that this Bill is misdirected and does not really get down to the root of the matter at all. Therefore, anxious as I should be to meet the Honourable and learned Pandit on this question, I feel that I should have to oppose even his moderate suggestion, and taking that line, I must all the more strongly oppose the suggestion which has come from the Honourable the Deputy President of the House. But, Sir, although I have taken that line, I should be very pleased to discuss with the Honourable the Leader of the Opposition any other method for arriving at the object which he has at heart. I do not think that any useful purpose would be served by allowing this particular Bill to be circulated for opinion. Therefore, Sir, I must oppose both the motions which have been moved.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That the Bill further to amend the Imperial Bank of India Act, 1920, for certain purposes, be referred to a Select Committee."

THE ARYA MARRIAGE VALIDATION BILL.

Mr. Mukhtar Singh (Meerut Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I beg to move:

"That the Bill finally to recognise and place beyond doubt the validation of inter-marriage of Arya Samajists be referred to a Select Committee consisting of Dr. B. S. Moonje, Mr. Vidya Sagar Pandya, Sardar Gulab Singh, Pandit Thakurdas Bhargava, Rai Sahib Harbilas Sarda, Mr. Fazal Ibrahim Rahimtulla, Mr. N. C. Kelkar, The Honourable the Law Member, the Honourable the Home Member, and the mover, and that the number of Members whose presence shall be necessary to constitute a meeting of the Committee shall be five."

Sir, I am indebted to the Honourable the Law Member for enunciating to-day the principle upon which Government have decided to act in the case of legislation of this kind. He has told us that, if the measure introduced has the support of the community which is affected by the measure, Government will not oppose the Bill. If this principle applies in the case of this Bill, which I had the honour to introduce, then I have simply to satisfy Government that my Bill is approved by the community to which it applies. In order to satisfy Government on this score let me point out a few relevant facts in this connection. At the time of the celebration of the centenary of the Arya Samaj at Muttra in 1925, all the Arya Samajists who gathered together decided upon the need of this measure. Then the matter was taken up in right earnest by the All-India

[Mr. Mukhtar Singh.]

Aryan League. They drafted a Bill and got it circulated to all the provincial Arya Pratinidhi Sabhas and through them to all the local Arya Samajes. The present Bill is thus the outcome of the approval of all the Arya Samajes in the country through their provincial Arya Pratinidhi Sabhas and then through the Sarvadeshak Sabha. I have taken the liberty of the introduction of this Bill at the behest of the all-India Aryan League, and this must be quite enough to satisfy Government on this point. The Bill has been before the public from the last Simla Session, when it was introduced in the Assembly. Since then I have received a number of resolutions, letters and telegrams which strongly support the Bill. Is it not enough then for Government to conclude that the Bill is really supported by the community which is affected by it? Where is the necessity then of delaying the measure any more, and why not pass it as soon as possible? If I had been an expert in the matter of drafting, like my friends Mr. B. Das and Rai Sahib Harbilas Sarda, I would have made a motion for the taking into consideration of this Bill at once. But I thought there was a likelihood of improving the language to a considerable extent in the Select Committee. It may be said that there is no harm in getting it circulated so that public opinion may also be consulted in the matter. I am not at all afraid of public opinion, rather I welcome it, but my difficulty is that, if the Bill is not referred to the Select Committee this Session, there is no likelihood of its being passed during the life of this Assembly. It is after continuous attempts for the last two years that the Bill has reached this stage, and any further delay will be a great loss to the Arya Samaj community. I appeal to Government not to take advantage of their majority over this non-controversial measure and give their whole-hearted support to this Bill.

So much for the Government. I may be asked by the Honourable Members where is the necessity for such a measure? They may very well say that the Special Marriage Act of 1872 has been amended and is made applicable to all the Hindus, and so there is no necessity of such a measure. I may be permitted to say in reply that the Special Marriage Act does not meet the need of the occasion. The Special Marriage Act has been conceived in the spirit that marriage is a contract and not a sacrament, while the Arya Samaj believes marriage to be a sacrament and not a contract. Besides this there are a number of other difficulties out of which I may be permitted to quote a few disabilities of the married couples under the Special Marriage Act. Firstly, it affects the severance of the husband from the joint Hindu family of which he is a member. Every Hindu knows what it means and how it affects the social life of a Hindu if one is forced to sever his connections from the joint Hindu family. Secondly, the married couple forfeits the right to manage the Hindu family trust and charitable property. Thirdly, succession to the property of the couple is governed by the Indian Succession Act and not by the Hindu law. And fourthly, the couple loses the right of adoption. These are some of the disabilities of the Special Marriage Act, and every Member who is conversant with the culture and civilization of the Hindus will at once come to the conclusion that such a measure is quite necessary.

Besides these, it is not a case of those Hindus who do not believe in the caste system and want to avoid the shackles of the present system, but this is a case of those Hindus who do not believe in the caste system based upon birth. I do not want to create any controversies on this point.

I simply beg to point out that every member of the Arya Samaj religiously believes in the doctrine that the caste system is a new innovation of the times and that everybody is entitled to belong to a higher Varna according to his qualifications, action and natural propensities. He further believes that marriage should take place according to the similarities of these three qualifications. Whether they are right or wrong in this belief is not a point for us to decide at this juncture; but when it is a fact that they religiously believe in this doctrine, I may ask, why do you force them to marry their children against their own convictions? I may tell the House that there is a large number among the members of the Arya Samaj who have acted up to their convictions and married their children without caring for the consequences. I may quote the instance of the revered late Swami Sraddhanand who married both his sons and daughters in a higher caste. Since then a number of inter-caste marriages have taken place in the country and they are now agitating for it. From the figures of the last year alone, no less than 1,682 marriages among different castes have taken place. This will at once convince the House and the Honourable Members about the necessity for such a measure. If the matter is delayed, there is a likelihood of unnecessary litigation in the country amongst the issues of such marriages which have already taken place.

With these words I move my motion.

Mr. C. W. Gwynne (Home Department: Nominated Official): Sir, I beg to move the motion which stands in my name:

“That the Bill be circulated for the purpose of eliciting opinions thereon.”

It is very necessary in the case of a Bill of this character, for the reasons stated this morning by the Honourable the Law Member in reply-
4 P. M. ing to the motion of Rai Sahib Harbilas Sarda, that the Assembly should be in possession of the views of the communities affected. In this particular instance, it is not only the Arya Samajist community which is affected but the Hindu community generally. They are vitally concerned with some of the proposals embodied in the Bill. (An Honourable Member: “Question.”) I hope to show that. The Bill was formally introduced in September last, but there has been no discussion by the several communities affected, so far as I know, on the principles underlying the Bill. Those principles may or may not be acceptable. On that point it is not for me to speak, nor am I competent to do so. But it is very desirable that the House should have more indication of the views entertained by those communities and that the public affected should have an adequate opportunity of making their views known and offering comments and criticisms and expressing their views generally as to whether the provisions of the Bill are acceptable, and if they are, whether the Bill in this form should be accepted. As I said before, the Bill affects other than the Arya Samajists, as is clear from the clauses of the Bill itself. Clause 1, sub-clause (2), clause 2 and clause 3 all embody principles which seem to require ventilation before any decision can be arrived at in regard to them. Without raising at the moment or at any time for my own part, any controversial issue, or discussing in any way the merits of the Bill, I would point out that sub-clause (2) of clause 1, by applying the provisions of the Bill with retrospective effect to marriages which have taken place before the Bill comes into force, affects closely the interests of other communities. The clause states:

"It shall apply to the whole of British India and shall apply to all cases that may come up for decision after the passing of the Act whether the marriage in question has taken place before or after the passing of this Act."

Clause 2 goes very wide in its definition especially in its extension of the privileges of guardianship. It is as follows: Defining an Arya Samajist, it says:

"(b) is a member of the family of, or a relative dependent on, or a person under the guardianship of, any person mentioned in clause (a)."

Sub-clause (c) of the same clause states as follows:

"and includes the members of the family of, relatives dependent on, and persons under the guardianship of, such a person."

Clause 3 closely affects a very important aspect of Hindu social organisation. It is as follows:

"No marriage of an Arya Samajist shall be invalid by reason of the couple having belonged to different castes or sub-castes of Hindus or to different religions, any law or usage or customs to the contrary notwithstanding."

Thus each of the three clauses of which the Bill consists contains a principle or proposal on which there might be a diversity of view, and for these reasons the prudent course and the wise course is that the Bill should be circulated for the purpose of eliciting opinion. I therefore hope that the Honourable Member will accept that suggestion, and that the House will agree to the motion that the Bill be circulated for the purpose of eliciting opinion.

Mr. Muhammad Yamin Khan (United Provinces: Nominated Non-Official): Sir, I have always held the view that this caste system in India has been the greatest disgrace to this country.

Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya: Not at all.

Mr. Muhammad Yamin Khan: If my Honourable friend, the Mover of the Bill, is limiting his Bill only to the Arya Samajists, that even receives my whole-hearted support. I wish he had brought in a Bill to apply to a wider circle than to the limited circle for which he is now moving this Bill, and I hope that, in the near future, there will be a Bill presented before this House with the full concurrence of all the Hindu Members, which would remove similar disabilities existing among them at the present time in regard to marriages. If this Bill comes into force, I know that it will at least mitigate the conditions under which the depressed classes are at present suffering, and this Bill seeks to do away with one disability under which they are now suffering. Sir, under the Hindu law a man of a lower class cannot marry a lady of a higher class, and if he does so, that marriage is null and void, although a man of a higher caste can marry a lady of a lower caste, though in the latter case he takes the caste of the lady, and the children who are born to them would belong to the lower caste. What my Honourable friend should do is to try to bring the children of such marriages to the caste of the father. Of course this will create a little difference of opinion in the country. Because, supposing a Jat marries a Brahmin lady, the children will have to take either the mother's caste or the father's caste. If they take the father's caste, then probably there will arise certain difficulties in the matter of inheritance. If the case is vice versa, then there will be still greater difficulties in the matter of inheritance. There are some other difficulties also in the matter which require careful consideration by the law courts also because that will bring a great change in the existing law.

With this object I think the amendment moved by my Honourable friend Mr. Gwynne is very reasonable. Before this is done, we have fully and properly to consider what the Hindu community as a whole thinks about this Bill and what the Arya Samajists, who belong to different castes at present, and who still regard themselves as belonging to the different castes, think about the Bill, and what the effect of this Bill will be in their case. Of course the Bill will receive my whole-hearted support if the Arya Samajists begin to say that they belong to no caste, that they are neither Brahmans nor Vaishyas nor Khatris nor Shudras. At that time the present Bill will be quite feasible, but until that time comes, and until they agree to this, there must be certain other provisions which ought to be embodied in the Bill which has been moved by my friend. I think that, in view of these difficulties, circulation to elicit public opinion is very necessary, so that the views of Arya Samajists may be ascertained, and the inherent difficulties which will come up in the way of inheritance may be done away with and the Bill may be drafted in such a way that no such ambiguity may remain when the law is administered. With these few remarks, Sir, I support the amendment moved by Mr. Gwynne.

The Assembly then adjourned till Eleven of the Clock on Wednesday, the 22nd January, 1930.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

Wednesday, 22nd January, 1930.

The Assembly met in the Assembly Chamber of the Council House at Eleven of the Clock, Mr. President in the Chair.

RESOLUTION RE STIPENDS OF THE MEMBERS OF THE CARNATIC FAMILY.

Mr. President: The House will now resume further consideration of the following Resolution moved by Mr. K. Ahmed on the 24th September, 1929:

"This Assembly recommends to the Governor General in Council that the stipends of the members of the Carnatic Family which were discontinued on account of their participation in the Khilafat movement be restored to them with retrospective effect."

Maulvi Sayyid Murtuza Saheb Bahadur (South Madras: Muhammadan): Sir, as has been pointed out by you, this Resolution was moved in the Simla Session by our friend, Mr. K. Ahmed, whom we miss here to-day. Sir, certain members of the Carnatic family took part in the Khilafat movement, because they were fully convinced of the fact that it was a constitutional movement and was sanctioned by the divines of the Muslim community; in that connection they were obliged to take to non-violent non-co-operation, as that also was sanctioned by the Jamiat-ul-ulema. After all, it cannot be gainsaid that neither the Khilafat agitation nor the non-violent non-co-operation movement was unconstitutional. It has been recognised even by the Government of India that these two movements were constitutional. As I said, a few members of the Carnatic family took part in those movements for which their stipends have been withheld. As regards those stipends I have to bring this matter to the notice of the House: that under certain treaties which were entered into between the Government and the then Nabobs of the Carnatic, even one-fifth of the revenue of the whole of Madras, including the Tamil Nad, a portion of Kerala and Andhra, was set apart towards the upkeep of the Carnatic family. Latterly it was reduced and reduced horribly. Now the members of that family get hopelessly poor and inadequate stipends. Even those stipends have been discontinued simply because a few members took part in these movements which, as I have already pointed out, were quite constitutional, and no religiously-minded Mussalman could but have taken part in those movements. Hence it was that a Resolution of this nature was moved in the Madras Council, where it was viewed sympathetically; but somehow or other nothing has come out of it. That is why this question has risen here, so that the Government of India may view the question sympathetically and see their way to ask the Government of Madras to restore those stipends, in view of the fact that those members of the family, as Mussalmans, could not have refrained from taking part in the movements which had been sanctioned not only politically but also religiously. In these circumstances I would request the Government of India to accept this Resolution and to restore the stipends which have been withheld with retrospective effect. So, I support this Resolution and expect that the House, including the Government Benches, will accord its whole-hearted support to it.

Maulvi Muhammad Yakub (Rohilkund and Kumaon Divisions: Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I wish also to say a few words in support of the Resolution which was moved in September last. As we know, the Nabobs of the Carnatic belonged to a very old and distinguished family, and it was that family which immensely helped the British Government when they at first settled in India. Their state was subsequently resumed and they were offered certain stipends. They were enjoying those stipends for a long time and there was nothing against the loyalty of the descendants of that ancient family. During the days of the Khilafat movement, when the whole Islamic world was in a state of turmoil and tumult, it is not surprising that some members of that family were also moved and probably they did certain acts which were not looked upon with favour by the British Government. All those things are now gone and forgotten. Even Germany, who was the greatest enemy of the Government during the great war, is now a friend of the British Government. Turkey itself is now not on unfriendly terms with the British Government, and all traces of that bloody war are now being forgotten. So it is quite in the fitness of things that the stipends of these descendants of an ancient Muslim family, of which they were deprived during those days, should also be restored. Since the announcement of His Excellency the Viceroy, the days of distrust and bickering have passed, and must pass in India, and every one of us is anxious that a calm atmosphere should prevail throughout the whole country in order to have an amicable adjustment for the future constitution of this country. So it will also be in the fitness of things, when we want a calm atmosphere throughout the whole of India, that this poor family should also be restored their stipends and their grievances removed. With these few words I support the Resolution.

Khan Bahadur Sarfaraz Hussain Khan (Patna and Chota Nagpur cum Orissa: Muhammadan): Sir, I wholeheartedly support this Resolution for, in my opinion, a fault committed by some members of the family cannot deprive them of their well-earned stipends. I have got nothing more to say except that I support the Resolution.

Mr. B. Das (Orissa Division: Non-Muhammadan): Sir, I wholeheartedly support the Resolution before the House. I do not like that political pensions of those who at one time owned mighty kingdoms and with whom the East India Company or the British Government came to a certain agreement at the time to give a certain pension, should be stopped and that they should be mere street beggars. The subject matter before the House is not a very difficult one for the Political Department to handle, and the sum of money involved is very trifling. So I do hope that my Honourable friend Mr. Howell, our new Foreign Secretary, whom I am glad to welcome once again in this House, will handle this matter sympathetically. I also hope that he will handle, not only this matter sympathetically, but that he will deal with similar questions in the same sympathetic spirit and will not be unusually hard on the descendants of the ex-Kings of India, whenever such similar questions crop up.

Mr. E. B. Howell (Foreign Secretary): Sir, I count it a piece of great good fortune that, on my return to the fold after an absence of three years, this should be the first occasion for me to take an active part in the proceedings of this House. It gives me great pleasure, Sir, to appear before you in the guise of a dove with an olive branch in my mouth. I should like to say that, although perhaps I do not accept as historically correct every word that fell from the first speaker,—I do not wish to enter into these matters now,—I wish to say that I am authorised on behalf of Government to say that they are not disposed to be at all vindictive in this matter. They are ready to let bygones be bygones and to adopt a most sympathetic attitude towards the subject matter of this Resolution. I would also like to say on my own part, in view of the very kind remarks which my friend Mr. Das made just now, that I hope I will always do my best to follow the great example left to me by my distinguished predecessor Sir Denys Bray. His attitude is well known to Members of this House, and in so far as in me lies I will try my best to imitate his example.

Mr. President: The question is:

“That this Assembly recommends to the Governor General in Council that the stipends of the members of the Carnatic Family, which were discontinued on account of their participation in the Khilafat movement, be restored to them with retrospective effect.”

The motion was adopted.

RESOLUTION RE CURRENCY OFFICES.

Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava (Ambala Division: Non-Muhammadan): Sir, I beg to move the following Resolution:

“This Assembly recommends to the Governor General in Council that he may be pleased to appoint a Committee of official and non-official Members to inquire into the grievances regarding the scales of pay, Provident Fund and other service conditions of the non-gazetted staff, both menial and clerical, of the Currency Offices in India and Burma, and to suggest ways and means for their redress.”

Sir, before I proceed to dilate on this Resolution, I understand that the Finance Secretary has a suggestion to make in this connection, and it would be to the best interests of the non-gazetted staff of the Currency Offices in India and Burma that he may be allowed to make that statement. (An Honourable Member: “The Finance Member is going to make a statement.”).

I am sorry, Sir, I mentioned that the Finance Secretary was going to make a suggestion. I understand that the Honourable the Finance Member himself is going to make a statement, and I would request you kindly to permit him to make a statement at this stage before I proceed further with the Resolution.

Mr. President: The Honourable Member must move his Resolution.

Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava: I have already moved it. Under your orders I again move, Sir, the following Resolution:

“This Assembly recommends to the Governor General in Council that he may be pleased to appoint a Committee of official and non-official Members to inquire into the grievances regarding the scales of pay, Provident Fund and other service conditions of the non-gazetted staff, both menial and clerical, of the Currency Offices in India and Burma, and to suggest ways and means for their redress.”

After moving the Resolution, I beg to make a request to you, Sir, that the Honourable the Finance Member may be permitted to make his statement, because, after that, it will be unnecessary to proceed with this Resolution.

Mr. President: I do not quite follow what the Honourable Member says. Does he wish to make any speech on this Resolution or not?

Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava: I will make a speech if necessary, Sir, after I hear the statement.

Mr. President: The Honourable Member will not be entitled to make any speech except by way of reply to the Resolution.

Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava: I accept the situation, Sir.

The Honourable Sir George Schuster (Finance Member): Sir, I have to make not so much a statement as a suggestion, and with your permission I should like to make that suggestion if I can do so without in any way interfering with the course of the debate in case it should not lead to the withdrawal of the motion. My suggestion is based on these considerations, Sir. These matters of improvement of conditions of service are matters of very grave concern to me, and I have given this particular matter very long and careful thought and study, and it seems to me, Sir, that a debate on the floor of this House is not the best method of arriving at a full discussion of the issues. The issues are very complicated. They involve a comparison of the terms applicable to the Currency staff with the terms applicable to the other staffs, and I believe that we are likely to get at cross purposes if we debate such a matter on the floor of the House. I think that a small meeting where there could be give and take and an examination of the points in detail would be a better method of arriving at a common understanding. That is one point which I have to make, Sir.

The second point is that, taking into account certain remarks that fell from my Honourable friend Mr. Vidya Sagar Pandya yesterday, I wish to make it clear that the Government have no desire to take advantage of their present majority in the House to prevent a full and fair discussion of matters of this kind.

At the same time, I must make it quite clear that I would, in debate, have to oppose the motion for the appointment of a Committee. I also wish to make it clear that I believe that full justice has been done by the Government to this particular staff. But I am open to listen to argument on the subject, and I also desire an opportunity to explain to those who have the interests of this staff at heart exactly what the position is and what considerations have influenced the Government. My suggestion, therefore, is that, if any Members who are interested in this question so desire it, I should meet two or three of them in the Finance Department, and we could then thoroughly discuss the whole question. I believe that I can convince them that the attitude of the Government is justified. On the other hand, as I have already said, I am quite willing to listen to their arguments, and if they can convince me that I am wrong, I shall be the first to acknowledge the fact. What we want to do in these cases is to arrive at justice, having due regard on the one hand to the fair claims of Government employees, and on the other not neglecting the urgent need for avoiding growth of expenditure and extravagance in the Government service. Sir, that is my suggestion.

Mr. President: Does the Honourable Member accept the suggestion of the Government Member?

Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava: I accept the suggestion of the Honourable the Finance Member and beg leave to withdraw the Resolution.

The Resolution was, by leave of the Assembly, withdrawn.

RESOLUTION RE SLAUGHTER OF MILCH COWS.

Raja Raghunandan Prasad Singh (Bihar and Orissa: Landholders): Sir, I beg to move the Resolution that stands in my name and which reads thus:

"This Assembly recommends to the Governor General in Council to take suitable and effective measures to prevent throughout British India the slaughter of all milch cows and prime calves except for strictly religious purposes."

At the very outset, Sir, I must say that, in commending my Resolution to the House, I take my stand solely on economic, as distinguished from religious or humanitarian grounds. I know religion is fast yielding place to secularism on the one hand and to communalism on the other, and in legislatures one has to steer clear of it if he wants to press his point home.

Sir, the question of cow protection is not a new one. Intrepid and indefatigable patriots and workers like the late Lala Sukhbir Sinha and my esteemed friend, Seth Govind Das, have spared no pains in the past to urge the point in the other House with all the warmth and earnestness they could command, but to no purpose. Seth Govind Dasjee moved his first Resolution on the subject in the Council of State as late as September 1927, but had to withdraw his Resolution in deference to the wishes of all sections of the House to avoid discussion on the question which was already engaging the serious consideration of the Unity Conference, which happened to be then sitting in Simla. Sethjee, true to his instincts, did not let the grass grow under his feet and came up with a more or less similar Resolution in February 1929, and with his characteristic zeal and wealth of detail, tried to convince the House and the Government of the indispensable necessity of some effective action in the matter, but the Resolution was unfortunately negatived.

Sir, if with the disappointing results before me of the noble efforts made by abler men in this direction I choose to bring up the matter once again, it is because I feel that it is so urgent and its immediate solution so indispensably necessary that it has to be dinned into the ears of the Government again and again until they feel called upon to stir and apply all their resources of statesmanship to it.

Sir, when one considers that about 83 per cent. of the Indian population depend solely on agriculture, when one considers that the chief implements of agriculture in this land are and must remain the bullocks, and that good bullocks can be had from good cows only, the necessity for some effective steps for preservation of the cow becomes quite obvious. Even the Agricultural Commission has had to admit that "good bullocks are very few in India". That the cow and its progeny are indispensable for the chief industry of the country, viz., agriculture, and their preservation and improvement matters of utmost necessity, is a proposition so obviously true that it indeed takes one's breath away to find the Government anything but fully alive to a sense of its duty in this behalf.

I know, in course of the debate on Seth Govind Das's Resolution in September, 1927, it was said by the Honourable Sir Muhammad Habibullah, that Government had been fully alive to its sense of responsibility in the matter, and that it had been trying in various ways to tackle the matter of improving the breed of cattle. He said more efficient agencies had been established for gathering statistics and for popularising and encouraging the sale and use of pedigreed stock of cattle. I know that ever since Lord Reading said to a deputation on behalf of the Cow Protection League in March, 1922, that India suffered more from the multitude of her cattle than from its fewness, and so what was wanted was not increase in the number of cattle but an improvement in their quality, this has remained the attitude and policy of the Government towards the question. But, Sir, I must say, with due deference to the Government, that it is not only a soulless but a bad policy. The Agricultural Commission itself, on whose recommendations so much in regard to this matter was made to hang by the Honourable Sir Muhammad Habibullah, has said that the improvement of cattle is a slow and difficult business. So, in view of the tardy ways of doing things that are generally adopted by the Government in matters like this, one would not be surprised if, by the time statistics are collected to satisfaction and full use of pedigreed stock is made, the cow species itself will have become virtually extinct from the country. On March 1929, in reply to a question from Seth Govind Dass in the Council of State as to the number of cows slaughtered in the country, the reply of Sir Muhammad Habibullah was that he possessed no statistics on the point. But it is not difficult to form a rough estimate from the reply given by His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief to another question by Sethjee. His Excellency said that in 1926, 8,510 tons and in 1927-28, 8,340 tons of beef were consumed by the Indian Army. 8,500 tons are equivalent to 2,38,000 maunds or thereabout. Taking each cow to be capable of supplying 30 seers of beef we come to the conclusion that 3,17,000 cows are slaughtered every year for beef supply to the Army alone. Sethjee was able to elicit some figures with regard to the quantity of dried beef exported from the country. The reply given on behalf of the Government was that in 1924-25, 2,222 hundredweights of dried beef were exported. Sethjee says in his presidential address at the All-India Cow Conference, held at Lahore in December last, that he has reasons to think the figures so supplied by the Government are wrong. He says that, according to the Collector of Customs of Burma, from Indian ports alone 4,28,598 hundredweights of dried beef reached Burma in one year. So, taking each cow to yield 8 to 10 seers of dried beef, it will be found that, for supply of dried beef to Burma alone, 23,40,144 cows were slaughtered. Add to this the number slaughtered in municipal butcheries and in notified areas. The All-India Cow Conference attempted to arrive at approximate figures and has found that 75 lakhs of cows and bullocks are slaughtered in the country annually. The total number of cows and bullocks in the country being 15 crores, one can imagine at what a horrifying rate the depletion of the stock is proceeding.

Over and above this, the cattle exported from the country are among the best of their kind, as no man in his senses would take away bad cattle. The number exported in 1924-25 was 10,195 and now it is 18,348. These figures are taken from the Report on the sea-borne trade in British India. It is also to be borne in mind that, of the cattle so exported every year, the bulk is formed by bulls. If fine bulls in such large numbers be exported from a land whose cattle wealth has so far deteriorated, one can understand what such a state of things means to it. If these bulls were to remain in the country, it can be imagined that good breeds could be raised from them. The Agricultural Commission, too, was forced to recommend that the export of cows and heifers is usually undesirable and should be closely watched by Government. The result of this unconscious depletion is that a pair of plough cattle is supposed to till 19 acres whereas the utmost it can efficiently till is 5 to 6 acres. Sir, in view of the state of things revealed by the figures quoted by me, is it any wonder if the average out-turn of crops per acre in India is found to be 11.5 bushels whereas it is 33 in Denmark, 14 in Spain, 13.5 in France, 29.8 in Great Britain, 13.7 in Italy, 23 in Norway, 30 in the Netherlands, 28 in Sweden, 32.5 in Switzerland, 17 in Canada, 14 in the United States, 32 in Japan and 29 in Egypt? I am sure His Excellency Lord Irwin, who has all along evinced such keen interest in the improvement of agriculture in the country, and whose sincerity of purpose and solicitude for the well-being of the peasantry even his worst critics do not and cannot deny, will be able to find some practical solution of the problem.

Sir, this is so far as the effect of this rapid decline in the cattle wealth of the country on agriculture is concerned. Let us turn to its effect on the health of the people. The rate of mortality per thousand in India is 36, whereas in other countries it ranges between 9.9 to 27.8. Infant mortality is simply appalling. It has been estimated that about 20 lakhs of babies die here mostly of preventible diseases owing solely to scarcity of milk. Colonel MacTaggart, Sanitary Officer of the United Provinces, says:

"By cheapening the price of milk so as to bring it within the reach of the poorer classes, more would be effected towards reducing the infantile mortality than the presence of any number of trained dais would accomplish."

The rate of infant mortality in India is the highest of all in the civilised world. And no wonder, for is it not a fact that good milk is not available even at the rate of three to four seers in the rupee in big cities? In 1857 milk sold at 4 maunds (160 seers), in 1890 at 64 seers and in 1918 at 4 seers in the rupee. Since then, though the prices of wheat, gram and rice have gone down, that of milk has remained stationary. Sir B. N. Sharma, Ex-Executive Councillor of His Excellency the Viceroy who happened to be in charge of the Agricultural Department, Doctor Harold H. Mann, Director of Agriculture, Bombay Presidency, Mr. Hamilton, Director of Agriculture, Punjab, Mr. R. C. Wood, Director of Agriculture, Madras, Mr. S. Miligan, Imperial Agriculturist, Pusa, Mr. C. M. Hutchison, Imperial Agricultural Veterinologist, Pusa and Mr. C. F. Pyne, I.C.S., Chairman, Calcutta Corporation, have all testified to the havoc played by the ruthless slaughter of cows with milk supply. I will not tire the patience of the House by quoting the opinion of each and every one of them in extenso.

The Agricultural Commission also has had to admit, "the necessity for efforts to secure for dry cows and cows-in-calf better treatment than they now receive". The treatment, Sir, that they receive now is that good cows are imported into towns from the country side, but as soon as they go dry, they are sold away to butchers.

Sir, it is to prevent this indiscriminate slaughter of milch cows and prime calves that I have ventured to bring up my humble Resolution. It will be seen that my purpose is a restricted one, confined as it is to the prevention of the slaughter of milch cows and prime calves. I am sure, Sir, if my proposal is accepted and given effect to, there will be a better supply of milk to the poorer classes, as also for infants, and the effect of that on the health of the population will be remarkably salutary. It will not do to say that only useless cattle are slaughtered for the Army.

[Mr. Mukhtar Singh.]

It is one of the main causes of high mortality in Bombay, Calcutta and other towns. I therefore submit that, if we agree to pass this Resolution, we shall be doing a really good service to the country. Though the prohibition of the slaughter of milch cows will not solve the problem, it will certainly help it to a very great extent. With these words, I second the motion.

Sir Frank Noyce (Secretary, Department of Education, Health and Lands): Sir, in rising to oppose this Resolution, I should like to make it clear at the outset that I do so on purely economic grounds. I am glad that those are the only considerations which have actuated my Honourable friends, the Mover and the seconder. The point on which I wish to lay stress is not that the Honourable Mover's Resolution is ill-timed or that it is impracticable, but that it is unnecessary. As regards its impracticability, I have been waiting throughout both his speech and that of the Honourable Mr. Mukhtar Singh to find what measures they would suggest that the Government should take to stop the slaughter of cows and calves. I have heard nothing on that subject. I shall proceed on the assumption that the Honourable Mover is desirous of protecting the agriculturist by providing him with an adequate supply of cattle both for draught and dairying, and that he is also anxious to safeguard the interests of the consumer of dairy produce by ensuring for him a supply of cheap milk. It is on that assumption that I shall now attempt to prove that his proposal to prohibit the slaughter of milch cows and prime calves is unnecessary for the reasons which I now propose to elaborate.

In the first place, there can, I think, be little or no doubt that the vast majority of the cattle in this country which are sent to the slaughter house do not fall within the category which the Honourable Member wishes to protect. I have taken pains to find out what the relative value of a cow is in milk and of that cow when it is sent to the slaughter house. A report received from Calcutta shows that on the 16th December last, the value of a first quality Nagava cow, as a milking cow, was Rs. 160, whereas its slaughter value was only Rs. 90. For a deshi milch cow the corresponding figures were Rs. 100 and Rs. 60 and for a Hatus cow—I must confess that I am not familiar with the names of these breeds—the corresponding values are Rs. 45 and Rs. 25. Similarly for Bombay, I have it on excellent authority that the slaughter value of a dry milch buffalo not pregnant varies from Rs. 100 to Rs. 120, whereas the value of a buffalo which is pregnant or with a newly born calf varies from Rs. 250 to Rs. 400. Similarly the value of the best type of cow varies from Rs. 75 to Rs. 150 when pregnant or newly calved, whereas the slaughter value varies between Rs. 40 and Rs. 60. It is, I venture to think, absolutely clear from these figures that milch cows are not in ordinary circumstances sent to the slaughter house. It is unnecessary for the Governor-General in Council to take effective steps to prevent them being sent there because financial considerations act as a far more effective deterrent than any action on his part could do. Most of the animals sent to the slaughter house in this country are old, and it could hardly, I think, be the desire of the Honourable Mover and seconder of this Resolution, who have displayed so much solicitude for the cattle breeder whose profession they want to make a lucrative one, to impose on him an additional tax by preventing him from selling his old cattle when they are no longer fit for work. I admit, Sir, that it is unfortunately true that there is a certain number of cattle in Bombay and Calcutta which are slaughtered when they are still capable of producing calves. The reason for that is, as the Honourable Mr. Mukhtar Singh pointed out, that selected cows purchased up-country at comparatively high prices are sent down to Bombay or Calcutta or other cities, are milked there as long as possible and then without being again brought into calf are sold to the butcher. It is unfortunate that this should be so, but the remedy for this state of affairs is not the prevention of their slaughter; it is to encourage people to buy them and to keep them for the dry period. The municipalities of India could make quite an appreciable contribution to the solution of this question if they were to make proper arrangements for keeping dry cows outside the municipalities for short periods on reasonable terms. The great progress in co-operative milk supply in Bengal shows what could be done. The number of societies in the neighbourhood of Calcutta in recent years has more than doubled. This is another way in which progress could be made towards the solution of this problem.

Sir, the problem of city milk supply is only one aspect of the question. The Honourable Mover of this Resolution brought forward the argument that the slaughter of cattle is depleting the cattle wealth of the country. He produced certain figures to prove his contention, but those which I have hardly bear him out. The first real cattle census in India, that of 1919-20, showed that there were 146 million bovine cattle in British India. The second census, held about five years later, between December 1924 and April 1925, showed that the number had increased to 151 millions. What evidence is there, as against these figures, that the slaughter of cattle is acting as a clog on the development of the cattle wealth of the country? There seems to be no ground for any feeling of apprehension that it has had any such deleterious effect. It is unfortunate that there are no figures available showing the number of cattle slaughtered for domestic consumption except the figures of the export trade in cattle to which the Honourable Mover also referred with some apprehension. Here again, Sir, the figures that I have hardly bear him out. For the last ten years the total amount of meat exported from India to Burma and from Burmese ports to foreign ports was some 820,000 cwt. or an average of 82,000 cwt. per annum. Experts tell me that not more than 82,000 animals could have been normally slaughtered for the export trade. A very simple sum in arithmetic will show what is the proportion between 82,000 and 151 millions. There is here no ground for any apprehension.

The true way to approach the problem, however, is from quite another angle. From one point of view, that of the Honourable Mover of this Resolution, the increase in the number of cattle, as shown by the figures of the cattle census, should be a matter for congratulation. I can hardly regard it entirely in that light. As the Royal Commission on Agriculture pointed out, what we want is not more cattle, but better cattle. They made an interesting comparison between conditions in this country and in Holland and Egypt. I may perhaps be permitted to refer to their Report. They selected Holland because it possesses the largest number of cattle in relation to the size of the country. They selected Egypt because conditions in Egypt and in certain provinces of India are very similar. What they found was that India had 67 head of cattle for 100 acres of net sown area, whereas Holland had 38 head of cattle for 100 acres of cultivated area and Egypt 25. That, Sir, shows what the Royal Commission emphasised time and again, namely, that in India there are far more cattle than the land can really bear. Another very interesting comparison between conditions in India and conditions in Holland is that a Dutch cow may give anything from five to ten times as much milk as an Indian cow. There, Sir, is the crux of the question. Mere addition to the number of cows in India without an improvement in breed and an improvement in grazing facilities will not solve the milk problem. What you have to do is to improve the quality of your cows. The action proposed by my Honourable friend the Mover of this Resolution would have the effect of accentuating the difficulties of the question. It would involve a burden both upon the cultivator and on the limited grazing facilities that exist. It would penalise him as well as the useful cattle whose available stock of fodder is in inverse proportion to the number of cattle to be fed.

I turn, Sir, to the lines on which the Government of India would tackle this problem and have been doing for many years past. The Imperial Department of Agriculture has a cattle-breeding farm at Karnal. It is only 70 miles from Delhi, and I very much wish that Members of this House would take the opportunity of going over there and of seeing for themselves what the Government are doing to improve the breeds of cattle in this country. We should welcome them there if they could spare the time. That farm is run under the auspices of the Imperial Institute of Animal Husbandry and Dairying at Bangalore, where there is a much smaller farm. We have another dairy farm at Wellington and a creamery at Anand. Pusa has also its pedigree herd. The efforts which the Imperial Department of Agriculture is making are supplemented by those of Local Governments. The Royal Commission's description of what has been done both by the Government of India and by the Local Governments will be found in Chapter VII of their Report, to which I would refer Honourable Members. The Royal Commission held that neither the Government of India nor the Local Governments were doing all that they could. They realised the magnitude of this problem. They knew how much Indian agriculture was dependent on bullocks and the country on its milk supply, and they therefore suggested that the Government of India should do more than they are doing, especially in the direction of co-ordinating the efforts of Local Governments. It was for that reason that they suggested that the Imperial Council of Agricultural Research should have as one of its expert officers an adviser in animal husbandry and veterinary matters. We are doing our best to get a suitable officer to fill that appointment and hope we shall be able to do so before long. Another step which the Royal Commission recommended was the continuance of the cattle conferences which have been held for some years past and which form a very useful meeting ground for the exchange of views between experts in animal husbandry. We are going a little further than that. The Board of Agriculture has now been split up into two sections, one of which will be entirely devoted to the consideration of animal husbandry and veterinary questions. I can therefore assure the House that this most important problem has engaged, is engaging, and will continue to engage the earnest attention of the Government of India. They will do all that lies in their power to further the interests of animal husbandry and to provide expert advice and assistance in this matter and I trust that, with that assurance, the Honourable the Mover of this Resolution will agree to withdraw it.

Mr. President: Does the Honourable the Mover wish to withdraw?

Raja Raghunandan Prasad Singh: No.

Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya (Allahabad and Jhansi Divisions: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I am sorry, but I am not surprised at the reply which the Honourable the Secretary of the Department of Education, Health and Lands has given on this Resolution. I also feel that it is useless to try to commend this Resolution to the House at this moment, but the Resolution having been brought before the Assembly, I feel it my duty to draw the attention of Honourable Members to a few aspects of the question. In the first place I wish to ask every Member of the House, what-12 Noon. ever his creed, whatever the community he may belong to, to think what we all human beings owe to the cow. I suppose most Members, if not all, use cow's milk—at any rate with the tea that they take in the morning and evening

Dr. A. Suhrawardy (Burdwan and Presidency Divisions: Muhammadan Rural): Mahatma Gandhi takes goat's milk.

Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya: I wonder if Dr. Suhrawardy takes goat's milk; but whether he does so or not, I wish my remarks to apply to the goat as well as to the cow. I wish Members when they take milk, whether goat's milk or cow's milk, to remember that there is such a thing as gratitude to those who confer benefits on them, and I wish them to think of the gratitude which mankind owes to the cow, even more than to the goat, though it owes it to the goat also; and I wish Members to consider whether it is right that the dear animal which helps mankind to substitute for the mother's milk, from the time that it ceases to get it, its own milk, and to live by and flourish on it, until the last days of our existence—to consider whether apart from any religious consideration, such an animal does not deserve our grateful sympathy. I know that during the days of the Ramzan, after the days fasting, my Muslim friends love nothing better in the evening than to take cow's milk, and I know that no European can fail to admit what a blessing cow's milk is, whether taken along with his tea or in other ways. I think therefore that it is the duty of every man, of every country and of every clime, to protect the cow, to protect in fact all animals which give us milk, but more especially the cow which stands at the head of the dear animals which supply milk to mankind; and I do appeal to everybody to look at this problem in this light.

Looked at in this light, the problem assumes a very much higher aspect than it wore in the remarks to which we have listened. We all know what reverence we pay to the mother because she brought us up on her breast, because she supported us by her milk; and the cow supplies her milk to us throughout our lives which the mother ceases to supply after some time. Therefore I submit in all humility and in all love, without any other religious feeling, than the feeling which should pervade us all, the common feeling of loving God's creatures, particularly those who do us good, that we should save the cow from being killed. That is the first aspect.

The second aspect of it is the economic aspect. Is there an animal living in this wide land of India to whom man is more gratefully indebted than the cow? You have heard of the milkers; you have heard of the draft cattle which the cow gives to the country. Where would India have been if the cow did not exist in India? The economic aspect of the question deserves more consideration than it has yet received either from the Government of India or from the agricultural population. Figures are easily stated and can be made to produce a certain effect; but I put two very simple questions. What has my Honourable friend opposite to say to the statement of Chaudhuri Mukhtar Singh that milk is dearer in Bombay and in Calcutta than it is in London? Is milk available to the people of India to the same extent to which it was twenty years ago? Have the Government taken note of the heavy mortality of children in Calcutta and Bombay? Have they also noted that in Eastern Bengal, among the Muslim population, the mortality of children is even greater than among the Hindus in that part of the country? Have they ever pondered over the question as to how much of this heavy child mortality is ascribable to the want of cheap pure milk? Can there be any answer to this question that milk has become very much dearer than it was twenty years ago, and that it has become very difficult for people to get pure milk even in the larger cities?

Mr. A. H. Ghuznavi (Dacca Division: Muhammadan Rural): Why milk only? Everything is becoming dearer.

Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya: Have the Government got any answer to give on that point? A military gentleman—I regret I do not remember his name—who gave evidence before the Royal Commission on Agriculture, stated that for meat there was a substitute in the shape of pulses, but that for milk there was no substitute. That was the evidence of an English military gentleman before the Royal Commission on Agriculture. I submit therefore that this aspect of the question deserves more consideration.

Then take the draught cattle. Has the Honourable Member any information as to the immense rise in the price of draught cattle throughout the country and of the difficulties which face the agriculturist on that account? Has he considered what a terrible waste the killing of cows involves? I will mention one simple instance. There is a goshala at Benares. The brahmachari who works it showed me a cow which was going to be sold to a butcher for four rupees. It was a small blind cow. The brahmachari purchased her and took her to the goshala at Rameshar in Benares; he told me that this cow had been with him for some years and had given three calves; two of them had become breeding bulls—one of them a small bull whom I saw fighting a very big bull in that goshala; and a cow which was giving a plentiful supply of milk. Now, put four rupees on one scale; and on the other, three calves, of whom two were bulls and one a cow at the time I saw them—perhaps there are three more by this time—and all the milk they have given and all the draught power and all the ploughing service which has been obtained from them. Can there be a greater, more tremendous, a more criminal waste of the great gift which God has blessed man with, than that such a cow should be sent to the slaughter house? I hope this aspect of the question at least might appeal to many Members to whom the first part of my submission may not. But looking at the question from both points of view, the humane and the economic it is a matter for serious consideration whether steps should not be taken to prevent the slaughtering of at least the cows mentioned in the Resolution. So far as I am concerned, I wish no cattle to be slaughtered, no cows, no goats, no sheep to be slaughtered. God in His bounty has given us plenty to eat, the daintiest of cereals and the most delicious of fruits, and at the same time plenty of milk to drink in addition. Gratitude to God demands that no creature of God shall destroy another creature of God either for pleasure or for profit. Let me support what I have said by the words of a great poet. Wordsworth was going through a village when he saw a well with an epitaph put upon it. His shepherd guide told him that a knight errant was chasing a deer, and that to save its life the deer, after running a long-distance, jumped into the well and died. The knight was chastened, and repenting of the wrong he had done, he put on the epitaph which was there. Wordsworth has incorporated touching that story in a beautiful piece of poetry—the Hart Leap Well—which concludes as follows:

“One lesson, shepherd, let us two divide,
From all that nature teaches and conceals,
Ne’er to blend our pleasure or our pride
With sorrow of the meanest thing that feels.”

Mr. M. S. Aney (Berar Representative): Sir, as my Leader has just said, the reply which came from the Honourable Sir Frank Noyce was disappointing, though not quite unexpected. The Resolution which has been moved by Raja Raghunandan Prasad Singh is itself a very limited one. It does not go over the whole question of the breeding of cattle or animal husbandry, but it is limited to the consideration of the question of milk supply in India, and I believe the question could have been more sympathetically and reasonably considered by the Government. I really find that the Honourable the Mover has approached this question entirely from the point of view of the supply of pure cow’s milk in this country, but there are other considerations involved in the subject matter of the Resolution before the House. Sir, every one of us knows that cow is not merely an animal for supplying milk to the people of this country, but she is the mainstay of the chief industry on which this country lives. The manner in which our friends on the Treasury Benches look at this question is different from the way in which we look at it. They look upon cow not so much as the one object on which the chief industry of the country depends, but they look upon it as an object for their enjoyment both for the sake of food and for getting some dainty things on their tables.

Sir, the Government Member who replied to this Resolution told us that he wanted to examine this question purely from an economic point of view. But he must know as a responsible Member of the Government that the question of the cow in India is not only an economic one, but there is a deep sentiment also that has gathered round the question in this country. That being the case, though the question admits of being discussed from an economic point of view as well, there is another aspect of it to be considered, and in giving a reply on behalf of Government, he should have borne in mind both these things. When he said that the saving of useless cattle was uneconomical, he did not know what amount of injury he was doing to the sentiments of those who look upon the cow as something far more sacred. What appears to him to be a useless uneconomic thing, a thing that ought not to live, is a thing for which a Hindu, out of his regard for his religious feelings, will lay down his life. I think, therefore, that the Honourable Member who spoke on behalf of Government did not give that serious attention to this question which it really deserved. As a matter of fact, even if we consider the economic aspect of the question, what did he prove? He quoted certain figures of the cattle census and showed that the number of cattle had not decreased. It may be so. But he forgot one thing. If we look at the figures of cattle and compare them for one period with the figures for another period, we have also to take into account the facts showing the requirements of the period selected for comparison and compare the requirements of one period with the other period for which he quotes the figures. It must be remembered that the population has increased, land under cultivation has increased, and the requirements of the people have also therefore increased correspondingly. Unless these factors are properly taken into account, it can not be found out that the number of cattle to-day are sufficient to meet the requirements of to-day. Merely quoting figures without any discrimination cannot and will not satisfy any reasonable man who has made a study of the economic position of the country. Sir, the efforts which the Government have so far made in this direction have been characterised in this book, I mean the Report of the Royal Commission on Agriculture, as having produced no tangible effect upon cattle breeding and upon giving a good supply of bulls which are required for agricultural purposes. This Report is not a certificate to the Government for the efforts they have made. It is rather a qualified condemnation of the comparative indifference they have shown towards the proper solution of this question. It may supply Government with some arguments to oppose Resolutions of this character, but generally the attitude of the Government towards the question of animal husbandry in this country has been far from sympathetic, systematic and just. It is no certificate at all to the Government. It only shows that the Government have not taken proper steps and have not done what they should have done in this matter. In this connection I would only draw the attention of the House to the observations made at page 213 of the Agricultural Commission's Report. The Honourable Member referred to the efforts that are being made by the Government and the amount of interest they are taking in the question, but let us see what the Agricultural Commission have to say in this matter. This is what they say on page 213 of their Report:

"When the British Government began to share in the work of livestock improvement some fifteen years ago, it was not necessary for them to breed bulls."

Here it must be remembered that the attention of the Government was drawn to this question only 15 years ago although they have been in this country for over 150 years. However, let us proceed to read what they say further:

"Suitable animals were already there; what was needed in Britain was to make these valuable cattle available to small farmers, who were, in many districts unable to afford to use them. With this object the 'premium bull' system was introduced. In India, as we have seen, really good cattle, once the property of professional breeders, are disappearing from many parts of the country, and when agricultural departments began, as one or two did thirty years ago, or more, to introduce in India the 'premium bull' system, they found it impossible to purchase useful animals. Thus, in India, the expensive but essential work of building up herds of pedigree cattle, which in Britain was accomplished by private enterprise, must fall on the taxpayer."

Further on they say this:

"Since, in a number of provinces, little progress has yet been made in breeding pedigree cattle, we propose to confine our review of this branch of activity to the work done in the Punjab, the United Provinces, Bombay, the Central Provinces and Madras, where most experience has been gained."

Sir, the experiments that have hitherto been made do not show that much progress has been made in the direction of cattle breeding. That is the attention which the Government have bestowed on this important question. The whole point is this. Shall we allow these milch cows to be indiscriminately slaughtered as they are being at present?

I am not now tackling the general question of cow protection. If that had been the case, I would have taken objection to the last clause in the Resolution. As a Hindu, I cannot tolerate the existence of the last clause in the Resolution. But the Resolution is there, and I am confining myself only to the terms of the Resolution, and I say that we should not allow milch cows to be indiscriminately slaughtered. From certain figures which have been read out by my Honourable friend, he makes an attempt to show that the cows which are generally slaughtered do not come under the category of milch cows. He tried to bring out that point by reading out to us certain valuations of slaughtered cows and other cows and so on. Sir, if milch cows are not slaughtered at all, and if Government is so sure of that then they must have some method by which they can exclude milch cows from being taken to the slaughter house. That is quite obvious from the very statement which my Honourable friend makes that milch cows are generally not slaughtered at all. If that is so, then I repeat that there must be some method by which those cattle are being excluded from being taken to the slaughter house. And then I further contend that if there is already some method like that, then it was not proper for him to have observed that no practical suggestions have been made to enable the Government to give effect to this Resolution.

Sir Frank Noyce: I pointed out that financial considerations are a great deterrent to milch cows being slaughtered, their value as milking animals being greater than when slaughtered. There is nothing secret about that.

Mr. M. S. Aney: I wanted to know definitely whether it was a fact that milch cows were not being taken to the slaughter house. If he only takes it as an inference drawn from certain valuations which he has cited, then he has not given us any fact, but he is only giving us an inference. Am I right?

Sir Frank Noyce: Quite.

Mr. M. S. Aney: This is not a matter that stands merely on inference. Merely because we find that at certain places the valuation of milch cows is something far greater than slaughter cows, it does not necessarily mean milch cows are not being taken to the slaughter house. One cannot accept that position. It requires further investigation into the matter. I have no doubt that the slaughter of these cows can be prevented and suitable measures taken. I hope that Government themselves will generally realise this much that the taking of milch cows to the slaughter house, if they are being taken at all, amounts to a very serious economic loss to the country. Even from the comparative figures of valuation which have been placed before the House, we can see that, in allowing milch cows to be slaughtered, not only does the country lose the cow, but also it is a serious economic loss to the country. For the sake of preventing that economic loss, it is up to the Government to take certain measures to prevent these cows from being slaughtered. If as they contend, these cows are not slaughtered at all, then so much the better. But whether they are being slaughtered or not is a point for investigation, not merely an inference to be drawn from the comparative valuation of the two things found in the markets of Bombay and Calcutta. That is not sufficient to arrive at the correct position in a matter of this nature. The Honourable the Mover of the Resolution has quoted certain figures which indicate that the evil against which he is making his complaint does exist and that it is not a mere imaginary evil against which he is raising his cry.

requirements of the people have also therefore increased correspondingly. Unless these factors are properly taken into account, it can not be found out that the number of cattle to-day are sufficient to meet the requirements of to-day. Merely quoting figures without any discrimination cannot and will not satisfy any reasonable man who has made a study of the economic position of the country. Sir, the efforts which the Government have so far made in this direction have been characterised in this book, I mean the Report of the Royal Commission on Agriculture, as having produced no tangible effect upon cattle breeding and upon giving a good supply of bulls which are required for agricultural purposes. This Report is not a certificate to the Government for the efforts they have made. It is rather a qualified condemnation of the comparative indifference they have shown towards the proper solution of this question. It may supply Government with some arguments to oppose Resolutions of this character, but generally the attitude of the Government towards the question of animal husbandry in this country has been far from sympathetic, systematic and just. It is no certificate at all to the Government. It only shows that the Government have not taken proper steps and have not done what they should have done in this matter. In this connection I would only draw the attention of the House to the observations made at page 213 of the Agricultural Commission's Report. The Honourable Member referred to the efforts that are being made by the Government and the amount of interest they are taking in the question, but let us see what the Agricultural Commission have to say in this matter. This is what they say on page 213 of their Report:

"When the British Government began to share in the work of livestock improvement some fifteen years ago, it was not necessary for them to breed bulls."

Here it must be remembered that the attention of the Government was drawn to this question only 15 years ago although they have been in this country for over 150 years. However, let us proceed to read what they say further:

"Suitable animals were already there; what was needed in Britain was to make these valuable cattle available to small farmers, who were, in many districts unable to afford to use them. With this object the 'premium bull' system was introduced. In India, as we have seen, really good cattle, once the property of professional breeders, are disappearing from many parts of the country, and when agricultural departments began, as one or two did thirty years ago, or more, to introduce in India the 'premium bull' system, they found it impossible to purchase useful animals. Thus, in India, the expensive but essential work of building up herds of pedigree cattle, which in Britain was accomplished by private enterprise, must fall on the taxpayer."

Further on they say this:

"Since, in a number of provinces, little progress has yet been made in breeding pedigree cattle, we propose to confine our review of this branch of activity to the work done in the Punjab, the United Provinces, Bombay, the Central Provinces and Madras, where most experience has been gained."

Sir, the experiments that have hitherto been made do not show that much progress has been made in the direction of cattle breeding. That is the attention which the Government have bestowed on this important question. The whole point is this. Shall we allow these milch cows to be indiscriminately slaughtered as they are being at present?

I am not now tackling the general question of cow protection. If that had been the case, I would have taken objection to the last clause in the Resolution. As a Hindu, I cannot tolerate the existence of the last clause in the Resolution. But the Resolution is there, and I am confining myself only to the terms of the Resolution, and I say that we should not allow milch cows to be indiscriminately slaughtered. From certain figures which have been read out by my Honourable friend, he makes an attempt to show that the cows which are generally slaughtered do not come under the category of milch cows. He tried to bring out that point by reading out to us certain valuations of slaughtered cows and other cows and so on. Sir, if milch cows are not slaughtered at all, and if Government is so sure of that then they must have some method by which they can exclude milch cows from being taken to the slaughter house. That is quite obvious from the very statement which my Honourable friend makes that milch cows are generally not slaughtered at all. If that is so, then I repeat that there must be some method by which those cattle are being excluded from being taken to the slaughter house. And then I further contend that if there is already some method like that, then it was not proper for him to have observed that no practical suggestions have been made to enable the Government to give effect to this Resolution.

Sir Frank Noyce: I pointed out that financial considerations are a great deterrent to milch cows being slaughtered, their value as milking animals being greater than when slaughtered. There is nothing secret about that.

Mr. M. S. Aney: I wanted to know definitely whether it was a fact that milch cows were not being taken to the slaughter house. If he only takes it as an inference drawn from certain valuations which he has cited, then he has not given us any fact, but he is only giving us an inference. Am I right?

Sir Frank Noyce: Quite.

Mr. M. S. Aney: This is not a matter that stands merely on inference. Merely because we find that at certain places the valuation of milch cows is something far greater than slaughter cows, it does not necessarily mean milch cows are not being taken to the slaughter house. One cannot accept that position. It requires further investigation into the matter. I have no doubt that the slaughter of these cows can be prevented and suitable measures taken. I hope that Government themselves will generally realise this much that the taking of milch cows to the slaughter house, if they are being taken at all, amounts to a very serious economic loss to the country. Even from the comparative figures of valuation which have been placed before the House, we can see that, in allowing milch cows to be slaughtered, not only does the country lose the cow, but also it is a serious economic loss to the country. For the sake of preventing that economic loss, it is up to the Government to take certain measures to prevent these cows from being slaughtered. If as they contend, these cows are not slaughtered at all, then so much the better. But whether they are being slaughtered or not is a point for investigation, not merely an inference to be drawn from the comparative valuation of the two things found in the markets of Bombay and Calcutta. That is not sufficient to arrive at the correct position in a matter of this nature. The Honourable the Mover of the Resolution has quoted certain figures which indicate that the evil against which he is making his complaint does exist and that it is not a mere imaginary evil against which he is raising his cry.

[Mr. M. S. Aney.]

The third thing is this. It is only as regards the slaughter that this Resolution has tried to suggest certain remedies. But the reduction in the number of milch cows is also due to the very indiscriminate policy which the Government has adopted as regards forest grazing. Restricting the grazing area and restricting the number of cattle to be admitted to the grazing area have also seriously told upon the number of milch cows to be maintained by the cultivators and peoples living in the neighbourhood and vicinity of forest areas. How it affects them is very well known to a man in my position because I live in the close vicinity of a forest area. One of the taluqs of my district was known as the breeding ground of fine cattle for the whole of Berar. As a matter of fact I have seen with my own eyes the deplorable change that has taken place during the last twenty-five years in the matter of maintenance of cows by the cultivators. Those cultivators who were maintaining something like 20 or 25 head of cattle in addition to those that were required for the purpose of cultivation cannot now maintain even five head of cattle because they cannot get admission of their cattle to the forest grazing areas on account of the stringent rules and regulations which the Government have introduced in the matter of allowing forest grazing. It is this forest policy of Government that has also helped in the reduction of the number of milch cows and consequently told upon the supply of milk in the provinces. So, if the problem of milk supply is to be solved, the Government have to take all possible steps to prevent indiscriminate slaughter of cows as well as to alter their forest policy with a view to enable the people to maintain a larger number of cattle in a suitable and efficient state of health. Unless these steps are taken, there is no hope of the country getting a proper and adequate supply of milk. Why do we often hear the cry of adulterated or vegetable ghee coming into this country? Do not the Government hear of that complaint from everywhere? In the markets you do not get pure ghee. The only nutritive articles of food in the dietary of those who are vegetarians in India are milk and ghee, and when these two essential articles in the dietary of those who are mainly vegetarians are not being had in sufficient quantity, it is a national problem which the Government of India have to tackle, and it is no use trying to brush it aside on certain a priori grounds. That point has been touched here at one place in the Report of the Agricultural Commission. They say:

"In a country so largely vegetarian, the room for expansion of milk consumption ought to be very great. A cow producing more milk for household use ought to be of great value to the cultivator in raising his standard of living and if there is a surplus for sale, there would be an increase in his cash receipts."

These are the natural advantages which the country in general and the cultivator in particular will gain if proper arrangements are made to enable the people to maintain the requisite number of cattle in the country. In the absence of any settled policy, in the absence of a determination on the part of Government to put an end to the indiscriminate slaughter of cows or at least to put an end to the slaughter altogether of milch cows, it is difficult for the people even to get the only two articles which really form the most nutritive elements in the dietary of Indians who are vegetarians. If you care for the health and prosperity of the country, then the Government have seriously to consider this Resolution and accept it and take such steps as they immediately can to give effect to it. With these words, I support the Resolution.

Maulvi Mohammad Shafee Daoodi (Tirhut Division: Muhammadan): Sir, while opposing the motion of my Honourable friend, I should like to say in the very beginning that I have every sympathy for the preservation of milch cows and prime calves. My opposition is based on two grounds. The first is that my Honourable friend has chosen a very wrong time for moving this Resolution, and the second is that he has chosen an absolutely wrong place for moving this Resolution. When I came to the House, I thought that I might not have to face this situation. At the time when you called out the name of the Honourable the Mover, Raja Raghunandan Prasad Singh, I saw that he was hesitating to rise and your attention was next drawn to the next item in the agenda and you actually called out the Honourable Member in whose name the next motion stood. I thought that my Honourable friend had got the best of counsel and that he would not commit the mistake of moving his Resolution.

Mr. B. Das (Orissa Division: Non-Muhammadan): He belongs to no party.

Maulvi Mohammad Shafee Daoodi: There is no question of party. I am not blaming any party here. I know that during the last six years that I have been in the Assembly, several attempts of this kind have been made, sometimes by my friend and sometimes by other friends, but on all occasions better counsel prevailed and the proposers were advised not to move their Resolutions. I had anticipated the same thing on this occasion, because I knew that my friends here who form the opposition now were not a bit less anxious than those who were in their place to keep harmony between the Hindus and Musalmans at the critical juncture through which we are passing. But I find that, soon after that group has gone away, better discretion has also gone out of the House. I thought we had a very important and urgent Resolution in the name of Mr. Lalchand Navalrai about political prisoners.

Mr. Lalchand Navalrai (Sind: Non-Muhammadan Rural): I will take the advice you gave just now and not move it.

Maulvi Mohammad Shafee Daoodi: I thought it was the most important Resolution of the day that had been tabled and he had been fortunate in getting his name in the ballot. The opposition would do its best to see that the Resolution was passed and all attention directed towards that object because that was really the prime object of the country at the moment. But I find now that we have got something else to face in this House. However fate ordained like this and we have got to meet it.

Now, Sir, as I said in the beginning my whole-hearted sympathies are for the preservation of milch cows and prime calves. There is no one with any sense in him who will try to kill a cow when she is giving milk or try to kill a calf while he or she is useful. So far as I know my country, I trust I am absolutely correct in saying that no one slaughters a cow while she is giving milk, or slaughters a calf while he or she is considered useful. But the question comes in when a milch cow does not give milk and a calf is useless for any purpose. Then the question comes what to do with it. I do not think we are at present in a position to devise means for the preservation of cows when we are not in a position to devise means for 32 crores of human beings. I do not understand how one can think of cattle and have his attention directed towards them when we are confronted with the fate of 32 crores of human beings, especially at this moment when the larger interests of the country are confronting us, and every effort has to be made to better the condition of the people while they are under foreign domination.

I find that my friend is thinking of cows who do not give milk and are a burden to their owners and who therefore consider it better to get rid of them after getting a few rupees for them. My friend comes from Bihar from which I also come. I think both of us know very well that the conditions in Bihar, so far as grazing grounds are concerned, are very deplorable, so much so that when I took up politics, my idea was that the first thing that I should do was to try to have grazing grounds in all villages to such an extent that the poor cultivators who own cattle may not feel the necessity of parting with them simply because they cannot maintain them. I thought efforts should be made towards that object in the Provincial Council and I therefore pressed upon my friends there that the first item in the preservation of cattle was to have grazing grounds all over the villages so that these poor people, who cannot now get sufficient fodder for their cattle, may have it; and that would be the most effective means of preserving the cows while they are not giving milk but are expected to give milk in the other seasons. But that effort has failed because the zamindars of Bihar have been opposed to it and they would not allow grazing grounds for cattle. They thought it would mean loss of money to them and they should not therefore lend their support to any scheme by which grazing grounds might be provided in the villages.

Raja Raghunandan Prasad Singh: I do not think the landholders were opposed to it.

Maulvi Mohammad Shafee Daoodi: That is my information, and I believe it has not yet been passed in the Council. It was opposed and was rejected. That is my information.

Mr. B. Das: Then do away with the zamindars and you will get better grazing grounds.

Maulvi Mohammad Shafee Daoodi: Therefore my submission in this case is that my friend is wrong in moving this Resolution at this stage. Whatever my friend might say, the idea behind the whole thing is, as Mr. Aney has rightly put it, the religious sentiment which my Hindu countrymen have got. I respect that sentiment. I feel that if that sentiment is so deeply rooted in the minds of my Hindu countrymen, I should respect it. But I would at the same time ask them not to impose it upon others. It is for them to do everything they can to preserve the cattle, but to ask those who do not worship the cow to bear the burden of feeding the cattle when they are not giving milk and are of no use is something not desirable. The implication of the Resolution of my friend is the one that I have just now said. It certainly means that every one in India would be compelled by some measure or other not to sell an animal, not to sell a cow or a calf when he or she is not of any use to him. That is too much to ask from men who do not worship them.

Raja Raghunandan Prasad Singh: The Resolution relates to milch cows and prime calves.

Maulvi Mohammad Shafee Daoodi: I have told you that milch cows and prime calves are not slaughtered. You do not require any Resolution for that purpose. But when the cows are not giving milk and when there is no fodder for the animal, when the man cannot keep the cow hanging on, it is only then that he sells it either for the purpose of slaughter or for any other purpose and makes the best use of it. I have said that already. Whatever my friend might say, the thing behind his back is that religious sentiment prevailing amongst the Hindus. He would like that in Hindustan this thing should become the law and that at the point of the bayonet, not by persuasion, by trying to win over the hearts of the people towards his side by showing the economic value of preserving the animal. I should say that is not the right course. The right course lies somewhere else. It is not right to ask the Legislature to enact a measure by which the cows which the Hindus consider very sacred should be preserved. Of course you have got every right to consider them sacred and you have got every right to preserve them yourselves. But you should not take the aid of law. You should not try to impose your will on others by enacting measures penalising any action which amounts to slaughtering the animal. I do not like to make the matter more bitter. I have given out my views to my friend. I would only say in the end that my friend should not have used these tactics of vote-catching in a cause like this. It is a very sacred matter and it ought to have been treated as most sacred, and it ought not to have been used for the purpose of catching votes in the next election.

Sir Darcy Lindsay (Bengal: European): Sir, my sympathies are undoubtedly with the Mover of the Resolution in his desire to preserve milch cattle for the whole country. But how this object is to be attained is not equally clear to me. My Honourable friend, Sir Frank Noyce, endeavoured to explain that it was most unlikely that milch cattle would be slaughtered. I think his point was that it was the barren cow that was no longer of any use for milking that was sent to the slaughter-house. As to whether that is quite the case, I am not entirely sure. I rather think that in big cities the milch cow is sent down from the country for milking, and when she becomes dry, owing to the heavy cost of returning her to the country, the owner finds that it pays him better to send her to the slaughter-house, and that is an aspect of the case that I would suggest to my Honourable friend to examine. If we could get the Government to assist his Department in any way towards the preservation of a perfectly good cow till it became a mother by returning the cow to grazing grounds, I think a very good object will have been served. I suggest, Sir, that the Railway Department are to some extent responsible for this not being more commonly carried out. The heavy railway freight is against the proposal that I make. My friend Mr. Aney, in referring to cattle, seems to have implied that it is the milch cow that is also largely used as a draught animal because he said it was not only in the matter of milk that these animals should be preserved but also for the general use of the country. I was always under the impression—I may be wrong—that it is not the milch cow that is used for draught purposes, for ploughing, etc.

Mr. N. C. Kelkar (Bombay Central Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): He did not mean that.

Sir Darcy Lindsay: As regards the price of milk in India, reference has been made to the high cost as compared with milk in other countries. I agree that the price is extraordinarily high. I think in cities—I can talk for Calcutta—we get about three seers to the rupee. In England I know the retail price is 2 s. per gallon. I am trying to find out from the Honourable Member in charge how many seers go to the gallon of milk.

Sir Frank Noyce: Ten pounds of milk to the gallon.

Sir Darcy Lindsay: That will be 5 seers. The wholesale price of milk in England is in the neighbourhood of 1s. per gallon.

Mr. Mukhtar Singh: And that is the price of guaranteed pure milk.

Sir Darcy Lindsay: I do not quite follow my Honourable friend. What is the difference?

Mr. Mukhtar Singh: In England you cannot sell adulterated milk.

Sir Darcy Lindsay: I hope you do not sell adulterated milk here. In the matter of milk supply I think every encouragement should be given. There is a great deal to be done by co-operation, by the co-operative societies. I was very interested the other day in going over an establishment in Calcutta entirely run by the co-operative society. It began in a small way and has grown up to a distribution of as much as 1,200 gallons of milk per day. Small farmers within a radius of 25 miles from Calcutta are the owners of this factory. They are the shareholders. They send in their milk which is brought in by rail. It is treated in the factory, pasteurised, and a very ready sale is found. The farmers are feeling the advantages of this good work and are using every endeavour to improve the breed of their cattle. It is in that way that the country can advance. It costs practically as much to feed a cow that is giving very little milk as a cow which is giving two or three times the quantity. The Indian cow is not a prolific milk giver due to breed and due to the absence of good grazing, and any steps that can be taken by Government and by individuals to improve the breed of the cattle and to secure a greater quantity of milk are the direction in which I consider we should move. Sir, I have nothing more to say on the point. I started by saying that I sympathise with the Mover of the Resolution and with the object he has in view, but I cannot see how the Government can move in the manner that he hopes for because it is entirely a question that rests with the owner of the animal as to whether he is going to go on feeding an animal that is of no use to him or send it to a market where he can get a return for his property.

Dr. A. Suhrawardy: Sir, I had no desire to intervene in this debate, but after listening to the speeches of the supporters of the motion, I feel that I should make a few observations to make my position clear. Two arguments have been put forward, broadly speaking, in support of the motion, the economic argument and the argument based on sentiment and gratitude. So far as the economic argument is concerned, that has been adequately dealt with by the Honourable Member who opposed the Resolution on behalf of the Government. As regards the argument based on sentiment, that argument appeals to me. But unfortunately the gentlemen who have put forward that argument have themselves weakened it by saying that they are not supporting the motion on the basis of sentiment. My Honourable friend Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya has declared that he is not in favour of the slaughter of animals at all, and he referred to certain lines of Wordsworth. I am in entire agreement with him, but I should wait for a comprehensive Resolution, proceeding either from the Honourable Pandit or from my friend Rai Bahadur Harbilas Sarda, which would make animal slaughter unlawful. So long as that is not before the House, I cannot really understand how I can or how any orthodox Hindu can support the Resolution of my Honourable friend Raja Raghunandan Prasad Singh, basing his support on an argument of sentiment or on the ground of the sanctity of the cow, because this Resolution, as it stands, does not prevent the slaughter of cows altogether. On the other hand, it permits the slaughter of cows for religious purposes.

As regards the argument based on gratitude, put forward by my Honourable friend Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya, I am sorry to find that this Resolution is really based on an argument of ingratitude. After the milch cattle has been sucked dry, it is the height of ingratitude then to permit of its being sent to the slaughter-house and slaughtered. That is what it comes to. You appeal to our sentiment, you remind us of our taking cow's milk with our tea or in the month of Ramzan, and you then support a Resolution which condemns that unfortunate cow after it had been sucked dry to be driven to the slaughter-house by Hindu goalas to be butchered to make a Moslem holiday or a Roman holiday. I think the Honourable Pandit, although I deeply sympathise with him, has really not understood exactly, if I may say so with deep respect, the implications of this Resolution.

Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya: I thought I made my position quite clear that I should like to save every cow, every goat and every sheep from the slaughter-house.

Dr. A. Suhrawardy: I am waiting for a comprehensive Resolution saying that no animal will be sacrificed, whether at Kalighat or anywhere else. I make the declaration on the floor of this House that I would support such a Resolution. But my objection to this Resolution is on the ground of its impracticability. No suggestion has been made as to what suitable and effective measures are to be taken to prevent the slaughter of milch cows and prime calves. Well, Sir, in replying to a remark made by my friend Maulvi Mohammad Shafee Daoodi, Mr. Lalchand Navalrai said he accepted his advice and had withdrawn or was going to withdraw the Resolution about political prisoners. I think, Sir, if he is going to do so, he does so because of the difficulty as regards the definition of "political prisoners".

Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: No, not at all.

Dr. A. Suhrawardy: That may not be the reason, but there are practical difficulties as regards definition of "milch cows" and "prime calves", and as regards "strictly religious purposes". Who is going to define, who is going to tell us on each occasion what is "strictly religious purposes"? Are the Police going to do that or any other agency? Is it the Chief Commissioner of Delhi or the Home Department that is going to determine the question whether a Mussalman can sacrifice a cow on a particular occasion for a purpose which he alleges to be religious? Let me disabuse the minds of my Honourable friends that Bakr-id is not the only occasion on which a cow can be sacrificed for religious purposes. That occasion may arise every day. Who is going to find out whether the purpose is a strictly religious purpose or not? Apart from this the question of the age when a cow ceases to be productive or until which a calf is considered a prime calf is not free from difficulty. Good breeding and good physique are the prime considerations now-a-days, and perhaps Rai Sahib Harbilas Sarda may be able to introduce a Bill for that purpose even though he may not be able to determine whether the purpose for which a cow is sacrificed is a religious purpose or not? I need not dwell upon this question further. Briefly, my reason for opposing this Resolution is based on the ground of its impracticability. With these observations, Sir, I oppose the Resolution.

Dr. B. S. Moonje (Nagpur Division: Non-Muhammadian). Sir, my Honourable friend Sir Frank Noyce made a rather long speech. I listened to it with feelings of surprise and disappointment—surprise because I was wondering whether in the end he was going to support the Resolution because all the arguments that he used were in support of the Resolution. I could summarise his speech into one single sentence quoted by him with so much approval as defining a principle which, he says, ought to govern this subject. He said that we do not want more cattle, but better cattle, and that is exactly what the Resolution wants us to do. Does he mean to say that milch cattle are not better cattle? Does he mean to say that prime calves are not better cattle? The Resolution does not want you to protect all cows and calves, whether good or bad. The Resolution only says, protect good cows, the better cows and calves, and that is the principle that my Honourable friend Sir Frank Noyce enunciated with approval. I do not want to deal with the extraneous feelings that have been imported. The Resolution is simple and goes straight to the point; it says that Government should take suitable and effective measures to prevent the slaughter of prime calves and milch cows. Is it not what my friend, Sir Frank Noyce, would ask the Government to do himself if he believes in the principle enunciated by him? If that is so, if milch cows are the better cows, if prime calves are the better calves, I have not been able to understand the reason why he wound up his speech by opposing the Resolution.

The same remark applies to the speech of my friend, Sir Darcy Lindsay. He said that he has got full sympathy with this Resolution; if he has got full sympathy, where does his objection come in? Let us all combine together and call upon the Government to accept this Resolution and suggest to the Government the ways and means as to how to bring about the end for which you and I have got so much sympathy.

As regards Maulvi Mohammad Shafee, I do not think this is an occasion when it is just or right to go behind to probe into the motives of a person bringing forward such a Resolution. The motive is clear and clean and straight; it is to prevent the slaughter of milch cows and prime calves. There is no other motive behind the Resolution as it stands to-day. When an occasion comes, if it comes at all, and when some one will bring forward a really objectionable Resolution on the subject, then it will be time enough to consider whether to oppose or support it as one thinks fit.

As for my friend, Dr. Suhrawardy, he must understand that this Resolution has not been inspired by the well-known religious sentiment of the Hindus in respect of cows. As far as I am personally concerned I give him full guarantee to do what he likes as needed for his religion, without provocation to others. The Resolution amply provides for it and says, "except for strictly religious purposes."

Dr. A. Suhrawardy: Who is to define the purpose?

Dr. B. S. Moonje: The Government are there and you can contribute all your intelligence.

Nawab Sir Sahibzada Abdul Qaiyum (North-West Frontier Province: Nominated Non-Official): Then I see that you are prepared to give this power to Government?

Dr. B. S. Moonje: Yes, to protect prime calves and to protect milch cows; that is exactly what the Resolution says, and why I am here to support it. I have nothing more to say.

Khan Bahadur Sarfaraz Hussain Khan (Patna and Chota Nagpur cum Orissa: Muhammadian): Sir, I do not understand the mentality of my Hindu friends in the matter. They ask Government to stop this thing, but is it not entirely in their power to do so? Are not the goalas all Hindus? The right thing would be to move in that direction and to ask the goalas to stop selling their cows to non-Hindus. As for the question of religion, Muhammiadans are permitted and allowed to eat beef. No one, no Government can stop them from eating beef; otherwise it will be pure and sheer interference with religion.

Mr. B. Das: What about the Christian?

Khan Bahadur Sarfaraz Hussain Khan: The Christians are, I think, non-Hindus. Government has no right to do it; it will be interference with religion. Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya said "Oh, God has given us cereals and other things; why should we kill animals?" But God himself kills animals.

Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya: He does not; he never does; it is blasphemy to say so.

Khan Bahadur Sarfaraz Hussain Khan: Yes, he does. These are my only remarks.

Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: Sir, I had no intention of speaking on this Resolution, but I have been impelled by two or three reasons to do so. The first is that this Resolution enures to general good: it is to the advantage not only of India but of the whole world that this Resolution should be passed. The Resolution aims at stopping the slaughter of milch cows only. India, Sir, cannot live without the cow and the bullock; indeed, the whole world cannot live without these animals; and if we take any step in the direction of preserving these animals, I submit, the whole House should be unanimous in supporting this Resolution.

Sir, the second reason that has impelled me to speak is the attitude taken by Government on this Resolution. I never expected that Sir Frank Noyce would surprise me by his arguments. The attitude of the Government should be a better one on occasions like this, when we are meeting without many of the representatives of the people being in the House. I was very glad to learn only a short time ago from Sir George Schuster, who is not in his seat now but for whom I have great regard for the way in which he has been dealing with the House—at least he never becomes cheeky—that the Government were not desirous of taking advantage of the thinness of the House—I have great respect for what he said but the facts speak for themselves. We have seen since yesterday what has happened; and there have been friends here who have advised Members, as my Honourable friend, Maulvi Mohammad Shafee did now with regard to this Resolution that non-official motions should not be moved as there was no chance of their succeeding owing to the small number of members on this side of the House. He also remarked, and I replied to it at the time and I repeat it now, that I would follow the advice in not moving my Resolution regarding the release of political prisoners. I must assure the Honourable Members that I do not drop it because I feel that the definition of political prisoners is a difficult one, as was remarked by Dr. Suhrawardy. The definition is plain and it was given in this House when my friend the Honourable Maulvi Mohammad Shafee moved his Resolution on 26th January, 1926 for the release of the political prisoners and quoted the Encyclopædia of the laws of England, Part II, page 208, defining the same.

Mr. President: Order, order. We are not dealing with that Resolution now.

Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: I am not dealing with it, Sir. I only made a reply to that remark. I shall proceed with this Resolution. As regards this Resolution, I submit it is a great mistake to think that there would be a difficulty in enforcing this Resolution when passed, or that it would not be practicable. We must know in the first place that no definition of milch cow is needed for an Indian or even for a European. People know what a milch cow is. The question is how are we going to carry out this Resolution in practice. Everybody knows—I think Honourable Members fully know—that in every municipal town and even in every municipal local area there are officers such as inspectors in charge of these slaughter-houses, and when cows are taken there, they can see for themselves whether a cow is a milch cow or not, such as to be prevented from being slaughtered. What difficulty is there, therefore, for Government to enforce it? I submit that this is a Resolution which can give no difficulty to the Government. If the Government have a mind to accept the Resolution, then no reasons are required to convince them of the necessity of passing such a useful Resolution as this.

Sir, I was very sorry to hear a remark from the Honourable Maulvi Mohammad Shafee that the object of this Resolution is something different from the object put forward in the Resolution itself. In the first place, we have no reason to doubt the bonâ fides of this Resolution, and we have no right to attribute motives like that to the Honourable the Mover who has the privilege of bringing forward such a commendable Resolution as this.

Then, Sir, the Resolution is a modest one; it is very plain; it interferes with no religion. There ought to be no fear on that score at all. Those who say they are in favour of not allowing all animals to be slaughtered should take the first step of accepting this Resolution to show that they are really serious about it. Of course, a general Resolution of that kind may be brought forward, but I doubt if many Members would support it. Let us however see their bonâ fides by passing this Resolution, which does no harm at all.

Sir, the Resolution refers to the slaughter of milch cows and prime calves as an economical problem only; it has nothing to do with any religion and specifically does not interfere with the religion of any community. If we want cows for all the communities, it is advantageous that Members representing all the communities in this House should accept this Resolution. This Resolution in plain words says what it seeks to achieve, and you are not to import anything else in it by mere implication. I would therefore request, without taking any more time of the House that all the Honourable Members in this House should pass this Resolution unanimously.

Colonel J. D. Crawford (Bengal: European): Many of the Members will wonder, Sir, what a man whose training has been mainly military can know about the cattle problem in India. But I have taken the trouble to go to Pusa and see for myself what steps are being taken to improve animal husbandry in this country. One of the first points that strikes me in this debate, and it is certainly a matter of regret to me, is that there is not a single practical farmer present in this House to represent the enormous number of farmers that there are throughout the countryside, who can get up and give his views on this subject. . . .

Dr. B. S. Moonje: Yes, there is Choudhry Mukhtar Singh here.

Colonel J. D. Crawford: I am glad there is one, but one Member cannot give adequate representation for such a big interest in India. It is really a matter of regret that the biggest industry in this country should be so inadequately represented in this House. Now, Sir, I am afraid of giving my sympathy to the Honourable Mover of this Resolution for fear that Dr. Moonje will at once pounce upon me and say that I must vote for it. That is not my point of view. But there is undoubtedly every necessity in this country to consider the question of an adequate milk and cattle supply to meet the requirements of this country.

Mr. Aney has, I think, very ungenerously accused the Government Members of having only one eye on the cattle question, and that on the provision of food for the table. Now, Sir, I have been to Pusa and I have discussed this matter with the Government officials there. . . .

Mr. M. S. Aney: I quoted it from the Agricultural Commission's Report.

Colonel J. D. Crawford: I may have misunderstood my Honourable friend, but I understood him to say that the Britisher looked upon this problem with the one object of providing food for the table. However, Sir, the real problem is to get in India a stamp of cattle that will be useful both for draught purposes and milk purposes, and Government are devoting their attention to that aspect of the problem. . . .

Mr. Mukhtar Singh: They are not. Their main purpose is to produce good milkers.

Colonel J. D. Crawford: They are trying to produce a combined animal that can give you milk and at the same time do the draught purposes for which cattle are undoubtedly necessary in this country. One of the difficulties with which they are faced is the fact that there is not enough grazing ground in India and that the ryot himself does not allot a portion of his land for purposes of cultivating forage for his cattle.

Now, Sir, if we are to allow our head of cattle to increase beyond our capacity to feed them, we shall certainly reduce our milk supply. That seems to be the difficulty. We have to-day got cattle for which we cannot find food; the cattle that we have to-day are eating the food that really belongs to the people, and therefore you must try and curtail your activities, and you must try and produce cattle that can give you more milk—not more cattle to give you less milk, but you must produce fewer cattle to give more milk, that is the true aspect of the problem. Now, does the Honourable Mover, in urging the stoppage of the slaughter of milch cows and prime calves, really tackle the problem before us? I submit not. I do not believe that legislation such as that suggested is practical to start with, and if it was introduced, I do not think it would have any effect upon the problem which we are trying to deal with. We should take a much larger view of the subject. I support what Sir Darcy Lindsay said in Calcutta, that you can do something there to prevent the goala from selling a cow that has gone dry. That is a problem that can be dealt with adequately by the Calcutta Corporation

Dr. B. S. Moonje: Do you prevent the milkmen from practising the system of phooka for sterilising the cows prematurely and unnaturally and from selling such cows?

Colonel J. D. Crawford: I think you can do something in that direction. That is only one small item in the large problem we have got to face. Personally, as I said, I regret the paucity of any practical farmers in this House, and secondly I believe the problem needs to be dealt with in a far larger manner than it has been dealt with in the Resolution put forward by the Mover. With these words, Sir, I oppose the Resolution.

The Revd. J. C. Chatterjee (Nominated: Indian Christians): Sir, I have very sincere sympathy with the motives and objects underlying the Resolution moved by Raja Raghunandan Prasad Singh, and especially after the very feeling appeal which my Honourable and learned friend Pandit Malaviya made, I would have very much liked to have voted for this Resolution. But, Sir, I find some difficulty in supporting this Resolution, because in the first place, it is couched in such general terms, and secondly the Honourable Mover has not set forth any practical means for achieving the end in view. He has made his Resolution so general that it seems to me that, if it were passed and Government accepted it, it would be impossible to give effect to it. No body can deny the need of good milk supply in this country. No body can deny that there is need in this country for immense improvement in the quality of milch cows and prime calves. All these things are certainly undeniable. But then, are the methods put forward, or rather, what is asked for in this Resolution at all a suitable method for obtaining the desired improvement?

Mr. President: What is the amendment of the Honourable Member?

The Revd. J. C. Chatterjee: I am not moving any amendment. I am speaking on the Resolution. Let us look at the practical aspect of the problem. Take for the instance, the city where we are sitting to-day. If we were to look at the records of the Delhi Municipality, we would find that, from 1861, the year in which it was constituted, almost every year or every few years, the Municipality has had to consider with all seriousness the nuisance caused by stray cattle and buffaloes that roam about in the streets. I believe all Honourable Members who come to Delhi have had a very great deal of difficulty in the way of traffic and in going about in the city owing to obstruction caused by these stray cattle that go about. The Municipality have had, on many occasions, to tackle the problem, namely, how to remove these stray cattle, and on every occasion they have failed. They once caught hold of these bulls and exported them to the other side of the Jumna, making a present of them to the farmers and cultivators living there, and told them to make use of these cattle as they were obstructing traffic in the city.

Mr. B. Das: Is it relevant to the subject matter of the Resolution?

Mr. President: The Honourable Member is relevant.

The Revd. J. C. Chatterjee: Thank you, Sir. After a very few days, those people came back with folded hands and said, for goodness sake take back these animals; we cannot get any work out of them. The result is these animals go on increasing in numbers and occasionally one finds them rushing into the shops and booths on the road side, breaking things and sometimes causing very serious injury to life and property. Finally the only method that could be found to decrease their number was to house them in the local pinjrapole to which the Municipality makes a contribution of Rs. 1,000 monthly. The Municipality made it known that any person who caught these bulls and took them to the pinjrapole would receive a reward of Rs. 5 per bull, and the Municipality itself is paying Rs. 7-8-0 per bull for its monthly maintenance to the pinjrapole. Therefore if these bulls go on increasing and if a motion of the kind contained in the Resolution were to be made law, their number might become legion and there would be great difficulty in finding fodder for them. The good citizens of Delhi would have unnecessarily to pay heavily to maintain these bulls in ease and comfort without doing any work.

Take another side of the question. For the last two or three years, we have had a serious famine and the worst effect of that famine has been that there has been a great scarcity of fodder. The number of cattle being what it is, they are miserably starving for want of fodder. No one has suffered more from this famine in the Delhi Province than the milch cows and cattle, many of which are economically useless, because fodder is not forthcoming. It has been urged that in England, the condition of cattle, of milch cows and of buffaloes is very much better than that in India. The reason for that is that useless animals there or animals that cease to be useful are somehow or other weeded out. That is the case with regard to every animal—even with fowls and birds. This is so in England because they are well looked after and their number is not allowed to increase beyond the limit where it becomes impossible to supply them with food. If the Honourable Mover had suggested some practical methods; if for instance, he had said that the export of dried meat to Burma was a very serious drain on the animals in the country, if he had been a little more moderate, or a little more practical in his demand and asked Government to prevent the export of dried meat to Burma, then he would certainly have had my vote in his favour. If he had described some practical means by which the wastage of good cows and good buffaloes could be prevented, then again one would have unhesitatingly supported his Resolution. But when he merely asks for legislation to prevent the slaughter of all animals, however one may sympathize with him, however one may feel the appeal on behalf of these dumb animals who certainly are benefactors of the human race, it is very difficult to vote for it. I believe, it would be quite impossible, by means of legislation, to prevent the slaughter of cattle nor would it be possible to make such legislation effective. Are we going to penalise slaughter of all cattle? And if such law were to be passed, would it not lead even to worse bloodshed perhaps than the slaughter of these poor animals? Therefore, Sir, I hope that the Honourable Mover of the Resolution will find it possible to put forward an amendment, or to further restrict its terms as will give this Resolution a practical shape and so make it possible for us to vote for it.

Mr. H. P. Mody (Bombay Millowners Association: Indian Commerce): It is a matter of very great regret that this question should have been discussed in the acrimonious and controversial way in which it has been. (Hear, hear). Constituted as the House is at the present moment, I should have thought that we on the non-official Benches at any rate, would resolutely eschew all temptation to give a religious or a communal colour to any question that comes up for our consideration. That is an obligation which is imposed upon us at all times, but I should have thought that that obligation is even more insistent at the present moment when the non-official Benches have been thinned so sadly as they are at present. Sir, the question is entirely an economic one and should be discussed entirely on its merits. I do not see where religion comes in. I do not see where the communal aspect comes in into a discussion of this question. An immense mass of literature has gathered round it in the past and the question has been debated at considerable length in the various important municipalities in India, and up to now, no practical solution has been found for it. I am therefore not surprised that the Government and a section of the House are opposed to the Resolution as it stands on purely economic grounds. I sympathise with their attitude in a sense, in that they find it impossible to accept the Resolution in the mandatory form in which the Honourable Mover has put it. I would therefore suggest for the consideration of Government whether they would not like to accept the Resolution if it is amended in a slight way. I would suggest that:

"For the words 'to take suitable and effective measures', the following be substituted: 'to take such measures as may be practicable'."

With your permission, Sir, I should like to ask the Honourable Mover whether he would accept my amendment.

Raja Raghunandan Prasad Singh: I am willing to accept the amendment.

Mr. H. P. Mody: The Honourable Mover has accepted the amendment and I therefore press it very strongly on the Government.

Mr. President: What is the amendment of the Honourable Member?

Mr. H. P. Mody: My amendment is to insert the words "such measures as may be practicable" in the place of the words, "suitable and effective measures". As the Honourable Mover has accepted my suggestion, the Resolution loses its mandatory character. I cannot conceive that the Government can have any objection to a Resolution of this sort, because if they find that particular measures for the prevention of the slaughter of milch cows and prime calves are not practicable, then they need not take those measures. My anxiety is this, that this Resolution should not be entirely got out of the way by being thrown out at this stage, because the question is one of very considerable economic importance, and if Government persist in their attitude, then what happens? The Resolution is thrown out and there is nothing else left for consideration, and the great economic grievance remains unremedied. I therefore hope that Government will accept the modified Resolution as it stands, and with your permission, I should like to ask the Honourable Member, Sir Frank Noyce, whether he is prepared to accept it.

*Speech not revised by the Honourable Member.

Mr. President: The Honourable Member will have his right of reply.

Mr. H. P. Mody: What I say, Sir, is this, that if the Government are not disposed to accept this amendment, then I am afraid they will have forfeited their right to be regarded as reasonable in this matter.

Mr. President: It is a matter of opinion.

Mr. H. P. Mody: Yes, Sir. I am merely giving my opinion, and I am afraid my opinion will be very strongly confirmed unless Government accept the point of view from which I have placed the matter before the House. My Honourable friend Sir Frank Noyce made a very well reasoned speech which went to show that the proposition could not be accepted as it stands. But when he comes to define his attitude towards the proposition as modified, if he still maintains that he cannot accept it, then I say a great deal of the force of what he said will be lost. If the Government are asked now to take whatever measures are practicable to prevent the slaughter of milch cows, how can they say that they will not even take these practical measures to prevent their slaughter? Does any man contend that milch cows and prime calves ought to be slaughtered if there are practicable ways of preventing that slaughter?

An Honourable Member: You have made no suggestion.

Mr. H. P. Mody: The question can at any rate be considered. We are not here to suggest practicable means. The effect of passing this proposition will be that Government will set about devising practicable ways. If there are no practicable ways, they will not do it. But if my Honourable friend persists in his previous attitude, what will happen is that an important question will be got out of purview by being thrown out and there will be nothing left. That is a position on which I do not think my Honourable friends can congratulate themselves, because the fact is undoubted that, so far as the main object of the proposition is concerned, it is a matter of very considerable importance that has been brought before the House. I move the amendment, Sir.

The Assembly then adjourned for Lunch till Twenty Minutes to Three of the Clock.

The Assembly re-assembled after Lunch at Twenty Minutes to Three of the Clock, Mr. President in the Chair.

Sardar Bahadur Honorary Captain Hira Singh, Brar (Punjab: Nominated Non-official): Sir, I feel that as a farmer I must also say something in connection with the Resolution moved by the Honourable Raja Raghunandan Prasad Singh. Sir, the Punjab used to be a famous place for good cattle, good bullocks and good horses. The Punjab Government, in my opinion, is still alive to the scarcity of good cattle. It is making all efforts to breed good cattle and it has started several cattle farms at several places in the new colonies such as Montgomery, Lyallpur and other places. But there is something wrong. The big areas of 100 rectangles or squares are allotted to the cattle breeders. But what happens? These people think that by keeping many cattle and by selling them at high prices they can make more money and live as rich men. Those cattle breeders have not been of any benefit to the farmers. As regards the Agricultural Department, they try to make every effort to improve the cattle breeding, but that is not done on any large scale. Good bulls are given here and there, but the heifers are not available to be given to the ordinary farmers. Of course I do not think that this Resolution has got anything to do with that. It is purely economic. Now, Sir, we see in the country the ordinary farmers possessing very poor draught animals which can hardly plough a biga of land throughout the whole of the day. There is no doubt that the good breed is gradually disappearing, both in respect of the draught animals and the milch cows. I see that half of the milch buffaloes are used as ploughing animals. I remember 30 years ago not a single male buffalo was seen in the ploughs. Most of them are using camels instead of bullocks because they think that the camels are little better than the male buffaloes. The result is that, unless the land is well ploughed and well tilled, no good and prosperous cultivation is possible.

As regards milk and ghee, everybody knows that it is a general cry in the country that we are getting more and more adulterated ghee and adulterated milk. In the big towns and in the cantonments I do not think anybody can get good milk unless it be from the military dairy farm or from one who maintains his own cow. It is impossible to get good milk even for a sick man. All that we get is either skimmed milk or adulterated milk or some cheap kind of milk. I know how important it is to have good milk when sick men are lying on their beds and they are prescribed seers of milk every day as their chief diet. About 30 or 40 years ago, Sir, I remember how much milk we used to have. If a passenger went to a village, he used to get as much milk as he could take. Now we all say that the deterioration of the race is due to want of good food and nourishing food like good milk. In my part of the country among the rural population they used to feed young children on cow's milk alone, and they possessed much better physiques than they possess now.

Sir, as for the draught animal, good bullocks and good milch cows are very scarce. There is no doubt there is something wrong somewhere. If the Agricultural Department extend their cattle breeding farm to every tahsil or sub-tahsil and to all districts and distribute good breeds among the cultivators, and also keep a register as they do for the horses, I think that would improve the breed of cattle. Of course it is a very big problem, but something ought to be done. There is no doubt that it is a very important question; it touches more the farmer than the citizens in towns who are simply keen on having good milk. If good breeds are preserved and are distributed, and a register kept, and an order issued that no animal will be destroyed out of that breed without the special sanction of the agricultural officers, I think that will make for improvement. As for grazing areas, Sir, as was suggested by some Honourable Members, I do not think that grazing in jungles can improve the breed more. It is the fodder, it is the grain on which the improved breed should live. I think it will be better, Sir, if some Committee is appointed and the question discussed as to how to improve the breed of cattle.

Mr. President: That is not the question; the question raised is of the prevention of the slaughter of milch cattle.

Sardar Bahadur Captain Hira Singh, Brar: About the slaughter of cows I support the Honourable Mover's Resolution that, except on religious occasions, the slaughter of cows of the improved breed should not be allowed and all good breeds should be preserved either locally or maintained by the agricultural farms. We want good bullocks of course for ploughing, and we want good cows for milk. Of course, if this question is brought before a Committee, they will reach some better conclusion. With these few remarks, I finish.

The Honourable Sir James Crerar (Home Member): I should like to take this opportunity of indicating very briefly the attitude of Government towards one or two points which have arisen in the course of this debate. I need not emphasise the fact that Government regard the subject-matter of the Resolution as one of the very greatest importance. I do not propose, and indeed it is not necessary for me, to traverse the ground which has already been covered much more adequately than I could cover it, by my Honourable friend, Sir Frank Noyce. The Resolution which has been moved is one which the Government consider, as I understand its Mover also contemplated, raises primarily and solely very important economic issues, and it is from that point of view alone and with severe regard to practical necessities and possibilities that Government have considered it. I am, therefore, disposed to agree with the view which was expressed earlier in the debate that it would be regrettable if matters which are really extraneous to the question before the House were unduly dwelt upon. As I said, the problem has been regarded by Government as a purely economic one. Far be it from me to deny due weight to the considerations of humanity which were so eloquently urged by my Honourable and learned friend the Leader of the Opposition, whom I am glad to welcome here in that capacity. Every man will doubtless give the fullest weight to those considerations, but I am also disposed to agree with the point of view which was urged in that connection that the welfare and the prosperity of the humanity of this country is the greatest and most compelling of humanitarian considerations. Nevertheless, as I have already suggested, the point of view from which I think the House will be desirous of considering this question, and the point of view to which the Government must restrict its own consideration of the question, is the economic point of view. Now, having regard to the importance of this question, I ask the House to consider this: that it would be an act of unwisdom on the part of Government and might indeed lead to charges of breach of faith if they accepted a Resolution which committed them in such vague, such general and such indeterminate terms. I am unable to see in what respect the amendment moved by my Honourable friend from Bombay really affects the substance of the Resolution. The original Resolution recommended to Government to take suitable and effective measures. The amendment proposed by my Honourable friend from Bombay, I understand, is to make a recommendation to the Government to take all such measures as may be practicable. I cannot myself distinguish in any way between the practical effect of the original Resolution and the amendment of my Honourable friend, and I hope that he will on reflection not be prepared to take the somewhat drastic view which he announced if Government were not prepared, or found themselves unable, as it is now my object to inform the House that Government find themselves unable to accept his amendment. And for this reason. If Government accept a Resolution proposed in this House in such terms as the present, they will be expected to do so with the intention of acting as fully as any practicable interpretation of the Resolution might require them to do. There are many constructions which could be put upon the amendment proposed by my Honourable friend, many constructions which Government would probably find impossible to carry into effect; and I am most reluctant therefore to accept, on behalf of Government, a Resolution which commits them in vague and general terms. Apart from that, the course of the debate has elicited some very important points of view and some very important particular considerations. I am glad to have had the opportunity of hearing the matter discussed from the point of view of the practical farmer and one or two other practical suggestions have been made. It has been pointed out by one speaker that the question of cows which cease to be milk-bearing in the cities and which might possibly be restored to a milk-bearing condition should be considered, and it has been suggested that the question of railway freights has a bearing in this. Other similar aspects of the problem have also been raised, and to this and other similar practical points which might contribute very materially to a solution of the question in certain of its aspects the Government will be fully prepared to give the closest possible examination. But I regret that neither to the original Resolution nor to the Resolution as it is proposed to be amended can Government give its assent, in view, as I have explained before, of the very vague and very general commitments by which Government would thereby be obliged.

Mr. President: Does the Honourable Mover wish to reply?

Raja Raghunandan Prasad Singh: Yes, Sir. I have carefully listened to the speeches in opposition to my Resolution. I do not want to give a long reply, as my friends who have spoken in support have already exhaustively dealt with the points taken. It has been admitted that a good case has been made out. Figures can be pitted against figures, arguments against arguments ad infinitum. But one cannot disbelieve the evidence of his own senses. So long as no pure milk can be had at more than five seers to the rupee, no genuine ghee at more than 10 chittaks to the rupee, so long as the vast majority remains vegetarian by long habit and temperament as also from sheer necessity, so long as lakhs and lakhs of infants in this country die like so many tiny insects for want of good milk, who can deny that things are not what they should be in so far as the caretaking of milch cattle is concerned. I beg to appeal once again to those who have misunderstood me to be kind enough to reflect on the matter calmly. Mussalmans too have to depend on agriculture as much as Hindus. Infant mortality makes no exception in favour of Mussalmans or Christians. I therefore say that the Honourable Mussalman Members will be rendering a valuable service to their own community as well if they will support my humble proposal or the amendment. If the Government will be pleased to assure the Assembly that a suitable scheme will be launched to achieve the end in view, this House, I am sure, will vote for the extra expenditure, seeing the immense relief that it will bring to the ill-fed and enfeebled millions and the poor nurselings.

Regarding the practical suggestions that my Honourable friends asked for, I would suggest first the transport of milch animals to places where breeding takes place and where it will not be profitable for a goala to sell them at cheap prices. I ask that the phooka system should be made penal under the Cruelty to Animals Act. I ask for more provision for pasture grounds in all places where it is practicable, and I ask for a change in the forest policy. These are some of my practical suggestions.

I appeal to the Government once again to take some effective action to stop, or at least to minimise, the appalling infant mortality which, as their own medical experts say, can be combatted only by cheapening good milk supply.

The Agricultural Commission in fact felt constrained to say as follows:

"The position may be summed up by stating that there is unquestionably a large unsatisfied demand for ghee; there is a relatively small unsatisfied demand for butter; there is also in all cities, an unsatisfied demand for milk at lower prices. It must therefore be inferred that consumers in general are not able to pay the prices which, in existing conditions, are required to produce the supply."

So, Sir, all that is needed is a keen imagination to visualise the pathetic state of things as also the will to put an end to it, and ways and means are bound to suggest themselves.

With these few words, I beg to leave the Resolution and the amendment in the hands of the House and I thank you, Sir, for having given me a patient hearing.

Sir Frank Noyce: Have I your permission to reply, Sir?

Mr. President: The case for the Government has been fully stated by the Honourable Leader of the House. Is there anything new which the Honourable Member wishes to say?

Sir Frank Noyce: One or two points I might be able to clear up with your permission, Sir.

Mr. President: The Leader of the House has just spoken and he had every opportunity of stating the full Government case. In that view I cannot give permission.

The original motion was:

"That this Assembly recommends to the Governor General in Council to take suitable and effective measures to prevent, throughout British India, the slaughter of all milch cows and prime calves, except for strictly religious purposes."

Since which an amendment has been moved,

"That for the words 'to take suitable and effective measures', the following be substituted: 'to take such measures as may be practicable'."

The question is that that amendment be made.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

Thursday, 23rd January, 1930.

The Assembly met in the Assembly Chamber of the Council House at Eleven of the Clock, Mr. President in the Chair.

MEMBER SWORN.

Sir Hugh Golding Cocke, Kt., M.L.A. (Bombay: European).

STATEMENT OF BUSINESS.

The Honourable Sir James Crerar (Leader of the House): With your permission, Sir, I desire to make a statement with regard to the probable course of Government business in the week beginning Monday, January the 27th. On Monday it is proposed to move for consideration, and if that motion is accepted, to move to pass, the Bill to amend the Indian Patents and Designs Act, 1911, for certain purposes. Honourable Members will remember that this Bill was referred to a Select Committee of this House and the Report was presented to this House during the Simla Session. On Wednesday, the 29th and Thursday, the 30th, it is proposed to proceed with the Bill to define and amend the law relating to the sale of goods and the Bill to amend section 178 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872. These Bills were referred to a Select Committee of this House in the last Session and that Select Committee sat before the beginning of this Session and the Reports were laid on the first day of the Session. If time allows, both Bills will be passed. In addition, motions will be made to take into consideration and pass the Bill to amend the Transfer of Property (Amendment) Act, 1929, for a certain purpose. This is the small Bill which was introduced by the Honourable the Law Member on the first day of the Session.

THE ARYA MARRIAGE VALIDATION BILL.

Mr. President: The House will now resume further consideration of the following motion moved by Mr. Mukhtar Singh on the 21st January, 1930:

"That the Bill to finally recognize and place beyond doubt the validation of inter-marriage of Arya Samajists, be referred to a Select Committee consisting of the Honourable the Home Member, the Honourable the Law Member, Dr. B. S. Moonje, Mr. Vidya Sagar Pandya, Sardar Gulab Singh, Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava, Rai Sahib Harbilas Sarda, Mr. Fazal Ibrahim Rahimtulla, Mr. N. C. Kelkar, and the Mover, and that the number of Members whose presence shall be necessary to constitute a meeting of the Committee shall be five."

Munshi Iswar Saran (Lucknow Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I rise to give my cordial support to the motion of my Honourable friend Mr. Mukhtar Singh. I must tell the House at the outset that I am not an Arya Samajist and therefore my support of the measure is disinterested. I take it that this Bill is intended to apply to Arya Samajists alone. My Honourable friend Mr. Mukhtar Singh has assured me that he does not wish this Bill to apply to anybody else. It may be that there are defects in the drafting of the Bill, but I submit that these can be rectified in the Select Committee. Now, in order to determine our attitude in regard to this Bill, we have got to put to ourselves two questions. The first question is, do the Arya Samajists want it, and the second is, if they want it, is there anything in the provisions of this Bill which is so open to objection that this House will refuse to give its sanction to it? As regards the first question, Sir, I submit with great confidence that no one will be able to assert that the Arya Samajists as a whole do not want this Bill. There is unanimity of opinion as far as the Arya Samajists are concerned about the urgency and the utility of this Bill. If that be so,—and I submit it is so,—then the second question arises, are the provisions of the Bill open to any serious objection? I submit that it is not for non-Arya Samajists to thrust their own views into this matter. What the Arya Samajists say is this: if the man belongs to the Arya Samaj and if the woman belongs to the Arya Samaj, they should be free to marry irrespective of caste or creed or even nationality. I ask, Sir, can there be any objection to this? A Hindu may have objection to this kind of marriage, but he is not affected by the Bill. It is the Arya Samajist alone who is affected by it, and it is therefore for him to say whether he wants it or not.

I wish also to submit, Sir, that the question of caste, which unfortunately was introduced by some Honourable Members, is wholly irrelevant to the measure before the House. We are not called upon at this moment to pronounce our opinion as regards the utility or otherwise of the caste system. We have got nothing to do with it here. We are to deal with a body of men who are avowedly dissenters, and they come to the Legislature and ask us to give them this relief as they find the present law unsatisfactory, and they want to get rid of it. Now I ask, Sir, what is there in justice or in common sense to advance against this view? My Honourable friend, Mr. Gwynne, on behalf of Government, moved an amendment the other day that this Bill should be circulated for eliciting opinion thereon. I must confess that I do fail to see the necessity for circulation. Whose opinions do they want? Whose opinions will matter in this case? Do they want the opinion of the general body of Hindus or of Muhammadans, or of Christians who are not affected by the Bill at all?

Dr. A. Suhrawardy (Burdwan and Presidency Divisions: Muhammadan Rural): Sir, may I invite the Honourable Member's attention to clause 3 where the words are "different castes or sub-castes of Hindus or to different religions"?

Munshi Iswar Saran: My friend is perfectly right. But what I already said was that there might be mistakes in the drafting. Here you have an assurance which my Honourable friend will give that he intends this Bill to apply where both the parties belong to the Arya Samaj, and that it will not apply where one of the parties belongs to any other faith. I fail to see then how any objection can be raised to this measure by a non-Arya Samajist.

Dr. A. Suhrawardy: We have not forgotten the Hindu Child Marriage Bill which, when it emerged from the Select Committee, was made applicable to the Mussalmans. It is still fresh in our memory.

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru (Agra Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): It was the Deputy President, Maulvi Muhammad Yakub, who suggested that the Child Marriage Bill should apply to everybody.

Maulvi Muhammad Yakub (Rohilkund and Kumaon Divisions: Muhammadan Rural): Certainly not; I repudiate that statement.

Mr. President: Order, order.

Munshi Iswar Saran: Sir, the Child Marriage Bill, some of our friends have got on their brains. In season and out of season they trot it out. What I say is this. Even if you circulate this Bill for eliciting opinions thereon, what guarantee is there that like that monster, the Child Marriage Bill, this Bill might not emerge out of the Select Committee and become another source of distraction and worry to my Honourable friends on those Benches? What they should do is to put up a good fight in the Select Committee and see that the provisions of this Bill do not injuriously affect the interests of Members on those Benches.

Dr. A. Suhrawardy: Who is there on the Select Committee to protect our interests?

Munshi Iswar Saran: Exactly. My Honourable friends forget then that it is up to them to nominate such men as will protect their interests. Quite right. It may be—I do not say so, but it may be—that the personnel of the Select Committee may not be satisfactory. If so, it is up to them to propose such names as will give them satisfaction and will give satisfaction to those whom they represent or profess to represent.

Mr. A. H. Ghuznavi (Dacca Division: Muhammadan Rural): How do we know that the Arya Samajists want it?

Munshi Iswar Saran: That is a reasonable question. After all he has put a reasonable question. (Laughter.) My friend asks how do we know that the Arya Samajists want it.

Mr. A. H. Ghuznavi: As a whole.

Munshi Iswar Saran: We know it. Is my Honourable friend in a position to assert that the Arya Samajists do not want it?

Dr. B. S. Moonje (Nagpur Division: Non-Muhammadan): No one.

Munshi Iswar Saran: My Honourable friend, Dr. Moonje, is much stronger and more emphatic in his statement than I can ever pretend to be. I can only say that I do not know of any organisation of the Arya Samajists which has ever declared against this Bill. I suppose my Honourable friend over there did not do Mr. Mukhtar Singh the honour of listening to his speech when he read out the resolution passed by the Sarwadesi Sabha, to which are affiliated all Arya Samaj institutions in the country. There would be great force in the position taken by Government if they told us that there was difference of opinion amongst the Arya Samajists themselves. But I throw out the challenge; I ask my Honourable friend to mention one single instance of an organised body of Arya Samajists which has expressed an opinion hostile to this Bill.

Mr. A. H. Ghuznavi: That we can get only by asking for their opinions.

Munshi Iswar Saran: It comes to this then. Notwithstanding the unanimity we find in regard to this measure at the time it has been brought forward in this House and the assurance that is given by every one who is connected with the Arya Samaj or who has any knowledge of the Arya Samaj that there is no difference of opinion as regards this Bill, and the fact—I will not mention the name—that an official member told me in the course of a private conversation that it was true that there was no opposition to this Bill on the part of the Arya Samajists, we are asked to send round this Bill in the hope that some one may come forward and say that this Bill is not wanted.

Mr. A. H. Ghuznavi: May I know what is your reason for not sending it round for eliciting public opinion?

Munshi Iswar Saran: The question is, what is the use of doing so?

Dr. A. Suhrawardy: What is the harm?

Munshi Iswar Saran: Now there is something vague, something imaginary which keeps these gentlemen in a state of perpetual nervousness and makes them grope in the dark in order to find something which may bring comfort to their palpitating hearts. Nothing, I say, Sir, will drive fear out of these Honourable Members whom the Child Marriage Bill has thoroughly demoralised. They will fight shy of every measure of social reform. That is the real trouble, and I hope Government are not as panic-stricken as my Honourable friends over there. I must tell Government here and now that if, in spite of the knowledge they possess that this Bill has the unanimous support of the Arya Samajists, they insist on the circulation of this Bill, they expose themselves to the charge, either of being hostile to social reform or of having the same nervousness as is being displayed by my Honourable friends on that side of the House. I do venture to hope that Government will not like that it should be accused either of hostility to social reform or of undue nervousness. There is a very plain matter before us. The Arya Samajists want this reform. This reform is not open to any objection. Let the Bill be sent to the Select Committee. Let us carefully go into its provisions. I do admit and I do not make a secret of the fact, that there are very serious drafting defects in this Bill. All that can be gone into; all the mistakes can be rectified and when the Bill emerges out of the Select Committee, it will give relief which the whole body of Arya Samajists want and for which they will feel thankful to this House as well as to Government.

Maulvi Mohammad Shafee Dacodi (Tirhut Division: Muhammadan): Sir, I have again to-day, so soon, got a very painful duty to perform and it is to oppose this measure which has been brought by my Honourable friend, Mr. Mukhtar Singh for the validation of the marriages of Arya Samajists. My grounds are these. Although the words used here are that it is a Bill for the validation of marriages of Arya Samajists, still the Bill has got more implications than that. When I read the Statement of Objects and Reasons, I was quite satisfied that they have got a full right to ask for what they have stated in that Statement. At the risk of taking some of your time, I would read it out because I find that the Statement is something different from the substantive clause which he wants to be made into law. This is what the Statement of Objects and Reasons says:

"As the Arya Samajists, who form quite an appreciable number of the Indian population, conscientiously believe that the present caste system is not in accordance with their scriptures, the Vedas, and as, according to the law as administered at present, marriages among couples belonging to different castes or sub-castes are considered invalid and there is a fear of the issue of such marriages being declared illegitimate, and as quite a large number of such marriages have taken place and more would have taken place had there been no such obstacles, it is necessary to have a law which would give relief to the Arya Samajists. Hence the above short law is proposed."

I admit, Sir, the justification of the claim made here, that is to say, that no marriage of an Arya Samajist shall be invalid by reason of the couple having belonged to different castes or sub-castes of Hindus. But when I read, Sir, the substantive clause, it goes much further than that. The third clause of the Bill runs thus:

"No marriage of an Arya Samajist shall be invalid by reason of the couple having belonged to different castes or sub-castes of Hindus"

So far all right because this deals with what the Mover states in the Statement of Objects and Reasons, but here, I do not know whether by mistake or intentionally, the words are added "or to different religions". I do not understand whence these words come, because there is nothing whatsoever to justify a claim of this sort in the Statement of Objects and Reasons. As you know, Sir, Moslems are not very politically conscious; they do not think that the Assembly is a place where their shariat can be invaded in a manner which may not be known to them at all unless it is given effect to. When my friends find that the Moslems are so backward in grasping the present situation, they should not have put in those words without mentioning something in the Statement of Objects and Reasons, so that our attention might have been drawn to it. Now, Sir, what I take objection to is this, that the Mover can not have those general words "different religions". He should at once make it plain that the marriage of a Moslem wife with a non-Moslem husband shall not be recognised. If he makes that amendment, if he excludes the Moslem women, I have got no objection to the Bill. They can have anything they like, but they cannot touch, Sir, the personal law of the Moslems. I am not claiming it, Sir, dogmatically. You know that the Moslems, so long as they are Moslems, cannot forget the clear injunctions of the Koran. I will read to you, Sir, the relevant passage from the Koran here. It is in Chapter II, verse. 222, Rukn. 27.

"Do not marry the mushrik women until they believe, and certainly a believing maid is better than a mushrik woman, even though she should please you; and do not give (believing women) in marriage to mushriks until they believe, and certainly a believing servant is better than a mushrik even though he should please you"

This is a clear injunction of the Koran, and there is no question of any interpretation. The aforesaid words, stated in Clause 3 of the Bill, Sir, are entirely opposed to the meaning in the verse of the Koran I have quoted, and therefore I strongly oppose these words in the clause of the Bill. If the Bill is going to Select Committee, Sir, I should say we should oppose it tooth and nail, otherwise it would mean that we have accepted the principles underlying the Bill. But if the Bill goes for circulation and for eliciting opinions, certainly every one will have a right to say what he thinks on the subject.

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: Sir, on a previous occasion when a measure relating to social reform was discussed in this House, the opponents of the Bill asked us to show that the law which was to be put into force would not be in advance of public opinion and that it would be capable of being enforced by the Government.

Mr. A. H. Ghuznavi: What is that social reform Legislation you are referring to?

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: The Child Marriage Restraint Act. It cannot be said, however, in the case of the present Bill that it is in advance of public opinion. It only seeks to legalise a practice that has grown up without the sanction of the law. Arya Samajists, who believe that there ought to be no castes, have taken upon themselves the risk of following their convictions, even though they may not have the sanction of the law behind them. What are you going to do in this case then? Are you going to say to these intrepid people who are prepared to suffer for their religion and their conscience that the law would step in and protect their rights, or will you leave their position as uncertain as it is to-day simply because certain people who are not Arya Samajists might put forward some objections to this Bill? I think, Sir, that as the Bill relates to Arya Samajists, and as Arya Samajists have in no uncertain terms declared themselves ready to support this measure, it is the bounden duty of the Government to see that it is passed.

Mr. A. H. Ghuznavi: What do you say to clause 3?

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: If my Honourable friend will have a little patience, he will find that his point will be answered. It was asked when my Honourable friend Munshi Iswar Saran was speaking, what was there to show that the Arya Samajists were behind this Bill. Perhaps it will be news to some of my friends that the great gathering which assembled in Muttra two or three years back to celebrate the centenary of the birth of the founder of the Arya Samaj, Swami Dayanand, discussed a resolution in favour of a law validating marriages between Arya Samajists, even though they might belong to different castes or religions; and as my Honourable friend Rai Sahib Harbilas Sarda knows, this resolution was passed unanimously. It is not open to anybody, therefore, to doubt that a law like this is desired by the Arya Samajists. Even during the last few days, the newspapers have reported the proceedings of many Arya Samaj Associations in the United Provinces and the Punjab giving their whole-hearted support to the motion brought forward by Chaudhuri Mukhtar Singh.

There is, however, another objection which has been brought forward against the Bill by my Moslem friends on the score of the language of clause 3 of the Bill. If they will read the clause carefully, they will find that it refers not merely to different religions but also to different castes and sub-castes. Now, a man, when he becomes an Arya Samajist, renounces his old caste. It is obvious therefore that this law is not meant to legalise marriages between people belonging to different religions and castes and sub-castes, but only to legalise such marriages between people who, whatever their caste or religion might have been originally, have allowed themselves to be converted to the Arya Samajist faith. The drafting of the clause might be bad; this shows that there is a clear case for sending it to a Select Committee, but there is absolutely no warrant for the statement that this Bill intends to legalise marriages between people of different faiths. That, as we know, is governed by a different law altogether. It was not necessary for Chaudhuri Mukhtar Singh to deal with a matter that has already been settled. It may be said, however, that this Bill will give an impetus to conversions. This will be a most far-fetched argument. Propaganda in favour of conversion is being carried on briskly by both Hindus and Muslims. This Bill will make no change in that practice, nor will it encourage conversions on either side. All that it seeks to do is that when men, whatever their faith may have been originally, have become Arya Samajists, their position within the pale of Arya Samajists should no longer be in doubt. This point is of considerable importance. In the case of those who were Hindus before they entered the fold of the Arya Samaj, it may be said that their rights would be governed by the Hindu law. But surely that cannot be said of people who have been converted from Christianity or Islam. Such conversions do take place. Now, what is the status of these converted people? They are outside the pale of the caste system. The Hindu law does not apply to them; then what is their legal position in regard either to property or to marriages?

I submit, Sir, that a very clear case has been made out for the further and immediate consideration of this Bill. There are drafting defects to be remedied. It might be necessary to put in certain safeguards which my friend, Chaudhuri Mukhtar Singh has failed to take into account; but I see no reason whatever for the circulation of this Bill for eliciting public opinion because the opinions of the people who matter, the people who are affected by this Bill, are already known both to Government and to the public.

The Honourable Sir James Crerar (Home Member): Sir, I desire to say only a very few words with regard in particular to what has fallen from Munshi Iswar Saran and Pandit Kunzru. I should like to emphasise, in the first place that, if this House agrees to a motion for circulation, it in no way expresses any disapproval of the principle of the Bill; nor does it imply any comment upon the views taken by its promoters. It is a motion which can be passed without any prejudice whatsoever to the principle of the Bill.

Now, if I understood my Honourable friends correctly, the two principal points which they took were these: firstly, that here was a measure which solely concerned a particular community and which has had the unanimous approval of that community; and the second point, I think, was this, that if any difficulties arise with regard to the Bill, they are of a character which can easily be remedied in Select Committee. I confess, though I see a great deal of force in many of the contentions advanced by these two Honourable gentlemen, that I am not quite convinced on either of these two points. I have no doubt whatever that the intention of the Mover of this Bill is to promote a measure which he considers has a very strong amount of support in his community. Nor am I at all disposed or concerned to question the fact that the Honourable Member has arrived at that conclusion on grounds which present themselves to him as very convincing. But I do suggest as a matter for caution that the views of a public meeting held a year or two ago are not absolutely conclusive as to the complete unanimity of a community which has branches throughout the whole of India; and I think that the House would desire to have a fuller assurance on that point, which can be more satisfactorily obtained by means of a motion for circulation.

[Sir James Crerar.]

Then I pass on to the second point, namely, that the sole difficulties which could possibly arise with regard to this Bill are such as can easily be removed in Select Committee. Now, Sir, that point does not appear to me to be satisfactorily established. The Statement of Objects and Reasons is decidedly obscure on that point; and certainly the actual terms of the Bill give ground for supposing that, if this House assented to the principle of the Bill, with the interpretation to be extracted from the Statement of Objects and Reasons and its plain and clear provisions, it might incautiously be committing itself to a principle which goes very much further and may have much wider consequences than we in the present state of affairs are fully able to appreciate. I would therefore emphasize once more that, in asking this House to agree to a motion for circulation, we are asking to place itself in a position to deal with more confidence with the measure at a later stage; and I would reiterate that it involves in no sense any attitude of hostility or of disapproval to the objects of a measure which its promoters may intend to be restricted solely to the concerns and interests of one particular community, and to have the unanimous or practically unanimous support of that community. I trust that, in view of the explanation which I have offered, the suggestion that Government is unfavourably disposed either towards general projects of social reform or to this particular project will be removed.

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: Will Government give an undertaking that the opinions will be received before the next Session of the Assembly and that a day will be given for the discussion of the Bill?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: I am afraid I could not give an assurance on that point.

Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya (Allahabad and Jhansi Divisions: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I support the motion that the Bill be circulated for opinion. I think the measure as it stands is a very important measure and it requires much more consideration before one can reasonably extend his support to it. In the first place, it has not been fully realised that the Arya Samaj is at present only a portion of the Hindu community. The Arya Samaj is not an entirely separate body from the Hindu community. The members of the Arya Samaj have lived and moved, married and prospered as members of the Hindu community. I have no objection,—no reasonable man will have any objection—to any set of men who are compact and well knit among themselves deciding to follow a certain course of action. Arya Samajists who declare themselves as Arya Samajists and who belong to this school of thought are perfectly entitled to ask that the Legislature should help them to regularise marriages which they perform among themselves for the benefit of those who belong to that body. But at present the Arya Samaj is not such a separate entity in Hindu society, and the measure, as it has been drafted, has not taken full note of that fact. For instance, as you will see, the provisions of the Bill are not confined to any adult man or woman who declares himself or herself to be a member of the Arya Samaj; but it says:

*Speech not revised by the Honourable Member.

Now, Sir, that at once introduces a very large question whether a man is entitled not only to change his own social and socio-religious ideas, but also impose those ideas upon those who happen to be members of his family or to be dependents on him, or to have been under his guardianship. This is a very extensive measure and requires very careful consideration. Secondly, Sir

Nawab Sir Sahibzada Abdul Qaiyum (North-West Frontier Province: Nominated Non-official): Just stay in an Ashram for a few days.

Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya: Secondly, Sir, it has not been sufficiently considered that this affects the question of succession. Succession is governed by marriage. According to the Hindu law, as it stands, succession goes in a certain way. When this Bill is passed, if it is passed, the Arya Samajists will be free to marry by deviating from the custom that prevails now. They may be perfectly free to do so and they may not be hampered in doing so, but then the question will arise about succession. They are related to Hindus, who follow a different code of laws so far as succession is concerned, and the Arya Samajists follow that code of laws at present. It is necessary that, if this measure is to be passed, the question of how succession shall be regulated should be considered, because at present an Arya Samajist is free to change his faith or to adopt what he might consider to be a more liberal interpretation of the faith which he believes in; but he is certainly not entitled to say that those who are related to him by birth shall be compelled to adopt his view on account of his having changed his faith, and therefore the question of succession to property should be carefully considered in connection with this measure. I, therefore, think that it is only fair that the Bill should be circulated. I know that Arya Samaj gatherings have supported this Bill, but I wonder if the implications of this Bill have been fully considered, and I think that my Arya Samaj friends will be wise in considering these important points in all their different aspects before asking that this Bill should be taken up for consideration in this House. The circulation of the Bill will afford that opportunity to them as well as to others who are interested in this matter.

Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava (Ambala Division: Non-Muhammadan): Sir, I am rather surprised at the speech which Pandit Malaviyajee has just delivered in this House regarding some questions which have come up for discussion on this Bill. So far as the question of succession is concerned, we know, even at present, the Arya Samajists have never raised any objection on that score. It is true that they are Hindus, and the fact that they form the vanguard of Hindus does not take away their character of being Hindus. The only questions raised in this Bill are those of legitimacy and marriage and, as a lawyer, I know that it is the business of the State and it is the special concern of the Legislature to see that marriage and legitimacy are recognised. This Bill only claims that the legitimacy of those persons which is in doubt, or the marriage of whom may be in doubt, may be finally declared to be valid. This Bill has nothing to do with succession and other matters.

The other objection which has been raised, so far as this Bill is concerned, is that the Government or some Honourable Members are still not satisfied that the Arya Samajists want such a measure. Fortunately or unfortunately I am also not a member of the Arya Samaj, but I can assure this House that the Arya Samajists are unanimous in demanding this Bill. This Bill does not impose any duty upon every Arya Samajist to marry in a different sect or sub-caste or in a different caste. It is only a permissive measure. Such of these who marry a husband or wife of a different caste or sub-caste want that their marriage may be declared valid and their issue declared legitimate. Now, the Resolution of the Sarva-deshik Sabha is conclusive on this point. The House will be interested to know that about 30 or 40 Arya Samajists have sent telegrams to Mr. Mukhtar Singh, and those telegrams have appeared in the public Press. The local Arya Samaj at Hissar, from which place I come, has also sent me a Resolution stating that I should support this Bill in the Assembly.

*Speech not revised by the Honourable Member.

[Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava.]

Now, Sir, everybody who is conversant with the state of things prevailing in Hindu society is sure to know, not to speak of Arya Samajists, that in the advanced sections of the Hindu community such marriages do take place. In the small community to which I belong, there have taken place some marriages between Bhargavas and non-Bhargavas, and the community as a whole is not now looking down upon such connections. Where is the community in the whole of India to-day among whom such inter-caste marriages have not taken place? In fact, such a measure, if it applied to the advanced section of Hindus, would not be out of place. Arya Samaj, as I have already submitted, represents the vanguard of Hindus, and therefore, if this measure is once adopted by the Arya Samajists, I have no doubt in my mind that, after some time, we shall want a measure for the Hindus on these very lines. I know that at present, under the Civil Marriage law, marriages between Hindus and non-Hindus are valid, but then their succession, the rights of adoption, etc. are governed by the Indian Succession Act. This is exactly the thing which is sought to be eliminated by a measure of this character. If a man wants to remain a Hindu, if he wants to remain an Arya Samajist, he clings to his succession law and to his adoption law, whereas if a man marries in some other way, then his law of succession and adoption is changed.

Now, Sir, it has been doubted by some that this Bill applies to persons who are not Arya Samajists, but I may tell them that this interpretation is wrong. To start with, the Bill says:

"Whereas it is expedient to finally recognise and place beyond doubt the validation of intermarriage of Arya Samajists", etc.

Now, "inter-marriage of", if it denotes anything at all, denotes that both the parties to the marriage would be Arya Samajists.

Now, Sir, objection has been taken to some words in clause 3 of the Bill; objection has been taken to the words "to different religions" appearing in clause 3 of the Bill, but that objection ignores the preceding words which read, "by reason of the couple having belonged to different castes or sub-castes of Hindus, or to different religions". Previous to the marriage, it is clear that they may have belonged to different religions. If a Jain, or a Sikh, or a Christian or a Muhammadan has been converted to Hinduism and has become an Arya Samajist, he belonged to a different religion once, but at the time of marriage he belongs to no religion, he belongs to no caste, except that of the Arya Samaj. Therefore, according to this interpretation, the fact that a person once belonged to a different religion does not in any way stand in the way of his marriage with a member of the Arya Samaj. I think, Sir, the Mover of this Bill has made it absolutely clear that this Bill is limited to those persons who have faith in the Arya Samaj doctrines, and if these words are doubtful, they can certainly be amended in the Select Committee in such a way that they do not import anything which the Mover does not want to import into the Bill.

The only effect of this dilatory motion will be that this Bill will not be passed into law either in this or in the next session of the Assembly. If the Government gave an undertaking that in the next session this Bill would be passed into law, or that sufficient time would be given for the discussion of this Bill, as it did in the case of the Child Marriage Restraint Act, I think the Mover of the Bill would readily accept the suggestion for circulation also. I think, Sir, that in a Bill of this kind the circulation ought not to be very extensive. The Legislature should seek to find out the opinions of those whom this Bill affects. The opinions of those who are not affected by this Bill are really irrelevant. The dominant voice should be of those who may be affected by this Bill, and even if there are Arya Samajists who do not like this Bill, even then I would submit that the opinions of such Arya Samajists as are orthodox and who do not favour or allow any marriages to take place between different sub-castes and castes would be irrelevant. The question is whether this Legislature is going to afford a measure of protection to those who believe in the validity of marriages between those who belong to different castes. As there may be doubts regarding the legitimacy of such marriages, I think it is the duty of this Legislature to afford protection to such people as believe in such marriages. We must see which way the wind blows. Times are changing. The entire opinion about marriages and about castes is changing and it is but fair that those who do not believe in antiquated doctrines should have the protection of law in regard to such delicate matters such as legitimacy and marriage.

Now, Sir, an objection has been taken that this Bill is rather too wide in so far as it includes persons who are relatives dependent on or under the guardianship of any person mentioned in clause (a). Now, I take it, Sir, that under every law and under the law of the land, a minor child, male or female, is generally taken to have the same religion as the parent. What is wrong with this principle of law that a relative dependent on or under the guardianship of any person mentioned in clause (a) should be regarded as an Arya Samajist? Are we to understand that an Arya Samajist, because he is an Arya Samajist, ceases to be the guardian of his minor son or minor daughter? I think the definition is not too large. It may be said that the words "member of the family" may include persons who are not members of the Arya Samaj. I can understand that criticism, but then it is a small matter. The Bill will be sent to the Select Committee and this part of the case can be considered there.

Mr. B. Das (Orissa Division: Non-Muhammadan): Do you want a Brahmin to marry a non-brahmin.

Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava: I do want that a Brahmin should marry a non-Brahmin. According to the tenets of the Hindu religion, even to-day, a marriage is perfectly valid between a Brahmin husband and a woman who belongs to any of the castes other than the Brahmin caste. My friend Mr. B. Das should go to a law class and take his lessons there.

[Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava.]

As regards those cases where a woman of a higher caste marries a husband of a lower caste, the Hindu law may be doubtful, but the Hindu law is absolutely clear on the point that the husband of a higher caste can certainly marry a woman of a lower caste. But leaving that aside, any person who knows the present state of affairs in the society knows full well that, even to-day, the offspring of such marriages between different sub-castes and between different castes among the Hindus are regarded as legitimate by society, and the offspring of such marriages are also married in the same baradari or in a different baradari. This Bill does not say that such marriages or unions are invalid. Their validity is only doubtful. I do not know of any cases which have gone to the courts.

Mr. B. Das: Then why do you want this Bill?

Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava: The question why we want this Bill is one which, I am surprised, my friend Mr. B. Das has raised. The Statement of Objects and Reasons makes it absolutely clear that there are some people who doubt whether the issue will be legitimate, or whether the marriage will be valid. To place the matter beyond all doubt, a measure of this kind is needed, and the fact that Mr. B. Das does not know even this much, does conclusively show that there are people in this country who may doubt the validity of such marriages and the legitimacy of the offspring of such marriages. Considered from all these standpoints, I think it will be no use sending this Bill out for circulation. It would only mean that it would not be passed as soon as one would desire to see it passed, and I think that the interests of the Arya Samajists and the larger interests of the country require that a Bill of this nature should be placed upon the Statute-book as soon as possible, so that there may be no doubt or dispute among persons interested in such disputes or litigation. I whole-heartedly support the motion.

Mian Mohammad Shah Nawaz (West Central Punjab: Muhammadan): I desire to make a few observations on this important measure of legislation. Undoubtedly clause 3 gives rise to grave misgivings. As the clause stands it may be interpreted to validate a marriage between an Arya Samajist and a Muslim, and to that extent it is contrary to Muhammadan law of marriage by which the Mussalmans are governed. A Muslim woman cannot lawfully marry a non-Muslim. Even if the woman is an Arya Samajist and the husband is a Mussalman, clause 3 will validate such a marriage. Such a law will be strongly opposed both by the Muslims and the Hindus, including the Arya Samajists. The Honourable the Law Member may enlighten us on this point, but I have no manner of doubt in my mind that clause 3 will not be acceptable to the Muslim community because it may be interpreted to make valid a marriage between an Arya Samajist and a Muslim. If the Mover of this Bill agrees to delete from clause 3, line 4, the words "or to different religions", the Bill may be referred to the Select Committee at once. I confess Sir, that I do not believe in the caste system at all.

Dr. A. Suhrawardy: Does the Honourable Member believe in Muslim law?
12 Noon.

Mian Mohammad Shah Nawaz: I do believe in Muslim law.

Dr. A. Suhrawardy: But the Honourable Member is misrepresenting it.

Mian Mohammad Shah Nawaz: I am not misrepresenting it at all. I do not understand what my friend means. Well, Sir, I do not believe in the caste system. I think that the Arya Samaj is a distinct community in itself; its members say that they do not believe in the caste system, and in order to remove any doubts that there may be about the validity of their marriages, they have brought forward this Bill in this House. They say that the cloud should be removed and the marriages, if doubtful, should be declared valid. Who can refuse legislation and justice to them? If the whole Arya Samaj community says—and I believe the whole community is behind this measure—that doubts as regards the validity of our marriages should be removed, then we have no business to deny this measure to that community. As I said, I am here only to protect my own community, and if the word "religion" is deleted, I think this measure should go to the Select Committee. Sir, I do not agree with the observation of my esteemed friend Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya, that this Bill will complicate or upset the Hindu law of succession. The Arya Samajists are, in matters of succession governed by the Hindu law. The Hindu law of succession will in no way be interfered with if both the parties to the marriage are Arya Samajists. All Arya Samajists are Hindus none the less. They are a sect of Hindu religion. Sir, I am inclined to support any legislation which would abolish the caste system throughout India particularly when Hindus desire to get rid of it.

Mr. Mukhtar Singh (Meerut Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): How would you safeguard the interests of converts to the Arya Samaj?

Mian Mohammad Shah Nawaz: That is quite a different matter. If conversion is allowed by the Hindu religion or Hindu law, then the marriage between an Arya Samajist and the person who has adopted the faith of Arya Samajist would be valid. In short the provisions of this Bill should apply only to those persons who are Arya Samajists at the time of marriage. Sir, I strongly object to the wording of clause 3 of the Bill. It is so ambiguous and gives rise to grave misapprehensions, as it allows marriage between an Arya Samajist and a non-Arya Samajist or a non-Hindu. The Honourable the Law Member may be called upon to express his opinion on this point. I believe the author of this Bill intended to restrict its application exclusively to Arya Samajists, but the language of clause 3 is extremely vague and the clause may be interpreted differently by courts of justice.

Dr. A. Suhrawardy: Sir, whatever doubts I had as to the wisdom or otherwise of the motion for referring this Bill to the Select Committee or that for its circulation for eliciting public opinion thereon have been set at rest by the speech of my Honourable friend Mian Mohammad Shah Nawaz. Though he has tried to make out a case for the reference of the Bill to the Select Committee he has, perhaps unwillingly, made out a strong case for the circulation of the Bill for eliciting public opinion thereon. He has throughout laid stress on the marriage of a Muslim woman and an Arya Samajist. He seems to be under the impression that the Muslim law forbids the marriage of a Muslim woman with an Arya Samajist. But the Muslim law is quite clear on the point. No marriage is valid between a Hindu, whether he is an Arya Samajist or Brahmo Samajist or any Samajist, and a Muslim woman or between a Muslim man and a Hindu woman. It is not the case, as my Honourable friend Mian Mohammad Shah Nawaz seems to think, that it is only a marriage between a male Arya Samajist and a Muslim female which is invalid under the Muslim law.

Mian Mohammad Shah Nawaz: I say that I agree with you. I was not dealing exhaustively with the law of marriage between a Muslim and a non-Muslim. I simply gave an illustration.

Dr. A. Suhrawardy: But you made out your case in such a way that it created the impression that it is only a marriage between a Muslim woman and an Arya Samajist man that is invalid under Muslim Law.

Now, I come to the strongest point in favour of the motion for circulation which has been raised in my humble opinion, not the one about difference of religion, but that pointed out by the Honourable Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya. The definition of an Arya Samajist is so wide as to include Christians and Muhammadans within its scope. In clause 2 (b) it is said that:

"An Arya Samajist shall mean a person who is a member of the family of, or a relative dependent on, or a person under the guardianship of, any person mentioned in clause (a)."

In these days of Shuddi it is possible for some Mussalman to be reclaimed as a Hindu by the agency of an Arya Samajist whose dependents and relations may all be Muslims. So, under this definition a marriage between a Muslim man or a Muslim woman with an Arya Samajist becomes lawful. That point should not be lost sight of.

Then there are various other points on which I need not dilate just at present. The Honourable the Home Member said that there were two points made out by the Mover of the motion for referring the Bill to the Select Committee, namely, that it solely concerns a particular community and that that community is unanimous in its demand. My Honourable friend Pandit Bhargava has helped me now so far as the second point is concerned by stating that that community is not unanimous in its demand. He said there are orthodox people who are opposed to it.

Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava: I never said that. I only said that this is a permissive measure and it is not binding on those who do not believe in it.

Dr. A. Suhrawardy: The Honourable Member has at least drawn attention to the fact that there may be orthodox Arya Samajists who may not like this measure, and therefore he has made out a case for the circulation of the Bill. I am grateful to him for bringing out this point to the House. With regard to the first point, namely, that it solely concerns a particular community, the Honourable Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya has pointed out, and I have also submitted just now, that it does not affect the Arya Samaj alone but it affects a large body of the Hindu public, of which the Arya Samaj is only a sect or a sub-sect, and it also affects the Christians and the Muslims because the definition as given in clause 2 (b) is so wide as to include them as well. With these remarks I oppose the motion for the reference of the Bill to the Select Committee and I support the motion for its circulation for eliciting public opinion thereon.

Khan Bahadur Sarfaraz Hussain Khan (Patna and Chota Nagpur cum Orissa: Muhammadan): Sir, I oppose the measure. More correctly speaking, I oppose the motion that the Bill be referred to the Select Committee because I see that there is some sinister desire behind it. I am for circulating the Bill to elicit public opinion thereon. We can only know the real facts of the case when the Bill is so circulated. I therefore oppose the motion that the Bill be referred to the Select Committee.

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter (Law Member): Sir, my Honourable friend Mian Mohammad Shah Nawaz invited me to say something on the legal aspect. The observations which I wish to make will be confined to the legal aspect of the Bill. The debate this morning has clearly established the necessity for circulation. The validation of marriages of Arya Samajists is mentioned in clause 3. Does that clause contemplate that both parties should be Arya Samajists or only one party? My Honourable friend Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava said that it was obvious that both parties must be Arya Samajists because of the expression "by reason of the couple having belonged to different castes, etc." But, Sir, the clause runs like this. "No marriage of an Arya Samajist shall be invalid, etc., etc."

Dr. B. S. Moonje: The definition of an Arya Samajist is given above.

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter: That surely implies that, if one of the parties to the marriage be an Arya Samajist, this clause will apply to that marriage. The definition of an Arya Samajist is given in clause 2.

Dr. B. S. Moonje: That shows who is an Arya Samajist.

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter: I am not concerned with that. All I am concerned with at the moment is to point out that clause 3 certainly contemplates a marriage to which one of the parties is an Arya Samajist.

Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava: Will you call it an intermarriage of Arya Samajists?

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter: The expression is, "No marriage of an Arya Samajist shall be invalid....." Therefore, whenever an Arya Samajist enters into marriage or contracts a marriage, this clause comes into operation. According to the ordinary grammatical meaning of this clause, if one of the parties be an Arya Samajist, this clause will apply. In that case the question arises, if the other party belongs to another religion, either Hindu or Muhammadan, what happens? Take the case which has been referred to in the debate, when the husband is an Arya Samajist and the wife is a Muslim. What personal law is to govern that marriage? This law which is sought to be enacted, or the Muslim law? It has been pointed out that a Muslim girl may not under the personal law of the Mussalmans marry a non-Muslim. That being so, you are affecting the Muslim law, to that extent. Then take the question which the Leader of the Opposition referred to, namely succession. Suppose the husband belongs to the Dayabhaga school of Hindu law and the wife is an Arya Samajist, who was, say a Christian or a Mussalman before the marriage. By what law will succession to the property of the husband be governed? The Dayabhaga law or any other law? Obviously the Dayabhaga law cannot apply because inheritance under the Dayabhaga law is governed by the capacity to offer spiritual benefit. The issue of such a marriage where the husband belongs to the Dayabhaga school of Hindu law and the wife was a non-Hindu before the marriage, the issue of that marriage cannot according to the Hindu religion offer spiritual benefit. Then, under what law will inheritance be governed? To that extent this Bill affects Hindus. I quite appreciate the motive of the author of this Bill, which is to validate intermarriages between Arya Samajists. Probably his intention was that both parties should be Arya Samajists at the time of marriage. Though they may cease to belong to other faiths or other religions, yet the question of succession remains, because after all the Arya Samajists are a sect of the Hindus. Now, I ask in the case I mentioned where the husband belongs to the Dayabhaga school and where the wife belongs to another religion, in such a case by what law is the succession to be governed? Certainly not by the Dayabhaga law:

Dr. B. S. Moonje: If both of them become Arya Samajists by executing a written document?

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter: If Hindu law applies—and Hindu law does apply to Arya Samajists, which Hindu law? Certainly the Dayabhaga law cannot apply because the issue of such a marriage is not competent to offer spiritual benefit, which is the test of inheritance under the Dayabhaga school. No one can inherit who is not capable of offering pinda, and there pinda means spiritual benefit. This, Sir, is an attempt to legislate in haste. You are legislating for one purpose, which is a very laudable purpose, that is to validable marriages, but you are in haste omitting to provide for the consequences. For these reasons, I submit that it is essential that the Bill should be circulated for the purpose of eliciting opinion from the communities affected. In the view I take of the interpretation of clause 3, namely, that clause 3 applies if one of the parties to the marriage is an Arya Samajist, if that view is correct and that view has been taken, at any rate, by some of the Honourable Members

Dr. B. S. Moonje: That may be corrected in the Select Committee.

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter: If that view is correct, then all the communities affected by this measure should have an opportunity to express their opinion on this Bill. If you say that the real intention of the clause is that both parties to the marriage should be Arya Samajists, then what are we committing ourselves to? Who is to say that? In the Select Committee a member may legitimately say, it was intended that it should apply to a marriage in which one of the parties is an Arya Samajist. What are we committing ourselves to, today?

Dr. B. S. Moonje: Intermarriage of Arya Samajists.

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter: Dr. Moonje knows very well that the Preamble is not the operative part of the Act.

Dr. B. S. Moonje: I am speaking of clause 3.

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter: Clause 3 says, "No marriage of an Arya Samajist . . ."

Dr. B. S. Moonje: It is "Validation of intermarriage of Arya Samajists".

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter: Clause 3?

Dr. B. S. Moonje: Refer to the Short Title.

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter: It is settled law that neither the Short Title nor marginal notes form part of the Act itself. The Short Title will not govern the clause. Leaving that aside, what I am submitting is this. What is it we are committing ourselves to if this Bill is sent to the Select Committee? Are we committing ourselves to a case where both parties are Arya Samajists or where one of the parties is an Arya Samajist? It is a matter of doubt. Both views have been expressed in this House. Then, we do not know what we are committing ourselves to. Sir, I submit that the Bill should not be referred to a Select Committee for valid reasons. Firstly, we do not know the views of other communities that are affected and their opinion ought to be elicited. Secondly, the Bill is defective in that it does not provide for succession and in certain events that may be a question of very great difficulty and all communities except the Arya Samajists may be affected by it. This is pre-eminently a measure on which the opinion of the communities interested should be elicited before it is sent to a Select Committee.

Mr. M. S. Aney (Berar Representative): Sir, I, for myself, have no objection to either of the two courses, viz., to the Bill being sent to the Select Committee, or being sent out for eliciting opinions thereon.

Maulvi Muhammad Yakub (Rohilkund and Kumaon Divisions: Muhammadan Rural): How can both be done?

Mr. M. S. Aney: Both cannot be done. That is precisely my difficulty. Otherwise, I would have given my votes for both the motions simultaneously and the Honourable Deputy President ought to know that. There are certain difficulties which have been pointed out, but the main difficulty on which the Honourable Law Member and some of my Muslim friends have laid great emphasis is one which relates to the wording of clause 3 of this Bill. I do admit that the wording is some what unhappy so as to give out something more than what the framer of the Bill originally intended. There is no question of that. If he really wanted to confine it, as I know for certain that he really did intend to confine the clause to marriages which he considers to be inter-caste marriages among the Arya Samajists only, then the present wording of that clause requires to be modified altogether. Having put in the singular term, "No marriage of an Arya Samajist, etc.", it assumes the possibility that the other party to the marriage may even belong to any other sect or religion except the Arya Samaj. That interpretation is inevitable; but I believe that if we precisely know what the real intention of the Bill is, then it should not certainly be difficult to tackle it successfully in the Select Committee. The Honourable the Law Member has said that we do not know what the principle of the Bill is. It is true that it creates some doubt. But I beg to point out, in all humility to the Honourable Law Member, that on more than one occasion in this House when the principle of a Bill was found to be ambiguous, it could be stated very clearly by the Honourable gentleman who moved the Bill, and the House on that assurance could send it to the Select Committee and consider the Bill on its own merits. That has been done on more occasions than one. Therefore, I believe that there should be no difficulty on that score in the way of the Honourable the Law Member or others in giving their consent to the motion for reference of the Bill to the Select Committee. I believe that these precedents are known to the Honourable Members and I need not remind the Honourable Law Member and others of the occasions on which we got the principle specifically enunciated here on the floor of the House, in spite of the fact that the draft of the Bill before the House sometimes implied more than what was thus agreed to be the principle at that time.

But there is another difficulty and that I really feel is rather a serious one, viz., the difficulty as regards succession, to which the Honourable the Law Member has drawn attention. The question as to what rule of succession will apply, whether the rule of Dayabhaga or any other rule will govern the progeny of the marriage of the kind contemplated by this Bill, is really a question which cannot be easily settled. And when we bear in mind the fact that when we wanted to make legal provision for marriages between two sub-sects of the Hindus we had to deny them the personal law of the Hindus and allow them to be governed by the provisions of the Indian law of succession only, it will be clearly seen by my friends, with whose laudable object in moving the Bill I have every sympathy, that the question of succession cannot be altogether separated from the question of marriages of such nature. Because the law of succession applicable to any body of persons is intimately related to certain principles of marriage inherent and prescribed in that system of law. If one abandons those principles of marriage even for very good reasons with legislative sanction, then the Legislature must simultaneously consider the question of succession or make adequate provision for difficulties arising out of the principles of succession in the Bill itself. I do not say the principle of succession according to Hindu law should be necessarily denied in all such cases. But if we do not make any adequate statutory provisions for that, legal difficulties will crop up. These difficulties cannot be satisfactorily solved without giving rise to very contentious and even expensive litigation unless there are statutory provisions already recognising in definite terms the application of the principles of inheritance and succession governing the progenies of these marriages. These are matters which have to be considered. My friend Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava has very eloquently and plausibly pleaded that the Arya Samajists being Hindus, they would be necessarily governed by Hindu law. But we know that in the case of Hindus for whom legislative provision of similar marriages had been made before, the ordinary Hindu law does not necessarily govern them as regards succession. How can it be then asserted that the present Bill will not have a similar effect on the rights of succession as regards the progeny of the marriages under this Bill? If we want them to be governed by Hindu law also as regards succession, we have to state that by a clear provision inserted in the Bill itself. Whether it will be necessary or not, is at least a point of sufficient importance requiring to be carefully threshed out by competent lawyers. These are the considerations that make me somewhat diffident in asking this House to rush through the Bill at once. As I said in the beginning, I want this Bill to be taken to the Select Committee at once, but there are other considerations which make me feel that a little more time should be bestowed on a detailed consideration of the provisions as well as the consequences that are likely to arise therefrom. In these circumstances I believe the House will give its best consideration to all the points of view and find out on what side the balance of advantage lies before voting on the motions that are before it.

Mr. K. V. Rangaswami Ayyangar (Madras: Landholders): Sir by clause 3 of the Bill it is not clear whether the conversion should be precedent to the marriage or not. It has been contended by the Mover and his party that the Bill refers only to a marriage among Arya Samajists, and whenever they marry a girl or a boy in their religion, he should be first converted to the Arya Samaj and then married. But it is not clear from the Bill whether the conversion should precede the marriage. I think it is better to make it clear before passing a Bill of this sort. Sir, the Arya Samajists are Hindus and yet they rush into the Assembly with a Bill to treat them as separate from the Hindus and enact a measure apart from the Hindu law! And yet the whole of the Arya Samaj have supported the Bill. I do not know how they have done that.

Further, there are not only difficulties of inheritance, but there are difficulties in the marriage itself. They have not defined all the bearings of marriage. What are their codes of marriage and what are their recognitions of a marriage, and do they practise polygamy and do they favour dissolution? It is not also defined who is an Arya Samajist. One may follow at heart the tenets of the Arya Samaj and at the same time he may have faith in other forms of worship and puranas. But without defining who is an Arya Samajist, and without defining all the bearings of their marriage customs, it is not proper to rush in with a Bill of this sort. At least I do not commend the wisdom of their having a separate law apart from the Hindu law. No doubt, Sir, it is a validating Act unlike the Child Marriage Act which is a penal measure, and they may say that it is only confined to their folds. But it has got very many difficulties behind it. The difficulties I have explained may not appeal to them, the Hindu law-giver may not appeal to them, but let me appeal to them in the name of protection. The Arya Samajists are patriots, and if anybody appeals to them that their industries or commerce should be protected, they at once support it. Sir, there are their humble sisters and daughters, and if I appeal to them in the name of protection, I do not know whether they will listen to me. Sir, in these days of competition, I appeal to them for the protection of their sisters and daughters in the face of foreign competition. I say, Sir, that our daughters and sisters are very humble in their winning ways and manners and in the name of protection even if a validating Act is to come into force, I do not know if there will be many suitors for their daughters and sisters as against foreign competition. I appeal to them in the name of protection. I do not know whether they will listen to my appeal or not. I therefore support the amendment that this should come to the Assembly after some time and not be passed into law at once.

Mr. M. K. Acharya (South Arcot cum Chingleput: Non-Muhammadan Rural): I find myself in this unhappy position, Sir, that I am unable to accord any support to either of the motions now before the House. Both on general and on special grounds I have got my difficulties. I cannot, speaking generally, accept the obiter dictum propounded by one of the sponsors of this Bill; in fact I would take great objection to it. He said that it was the business of this Legislature, nay the duty of this Legislature, to afford all possible protection to all kinds of marriages. That general statement I cannot subscribe to. It is funny to be told that all of us, non-official Members specially, come here just to do such odd work; that our most sacred duty is not to fight for Swaraj, nor to fight for getting some kind of political control over the Executive, nor to see that in some measure the burdens on the people are lessened; but that our duty is to afford protection to all kinds of marriages, good bad or indifferent, in this world. That is a dictum, I repeat, I cannot accept. I feel very strongly about this; and that is why I have been standing so many times in my seat this morning. I deplore keenly that, time after time, session after session, we waste all our energies, all our resources, Government and everybody else, on some one kind of marriage Bill or another. It was the Rai Sahib gentleman there at one time who kept us for a number of sessions busy with a measure which is now before the world for whatever it is worth, as a law. Now here is another gentleman—he is not yet a Rai Sahib—who wants to worry us with another Marriage Bill. So hereafter, every session some one or other will be tempted to come forward with one marriage Bill or another. I would not be surprised if in these very advanced days somebody comes forward and proposes some very civilised system of marriage between biped and a quadruped, and says that it is the duty of the Legislature to afford protection to his new race. That protection should be given, legislative protection, mark you, to every kind of marriage, is a dictum that I, in my humble capacity of a layman am unable to accept. I feel, Sir, a little nervous of what account I should give of myself when I go back to my electors, and when they put to me the question. "What have you done so far?": Am I say, "We spent about 20 days last September on some marriage Bill, and this year also we have had a marriage Bill to engage our most serious attention"? Now, this Bill will go out for circulation according to the Home Member's amendment; after circulation it will return to us and then go to a Select Committee, and the Honourable the Law Member and the Honourable Home Member and various other Members will have to spend no small part of their time on this precious Bill. Then we shall be examining clause after clause of this wonderful Bill; and then, if this be not passed the heavens will come down! With what honest face shall we go and tell the electorate that we have done all this as most essential and urgently needed for lightening the burdens on the toiling millions? My friend there seems to think that this is the real kind of work for which we are sent here, that these are the important items of legislation to which we should pay our best attention. It may appear so to faddists. Not being a faddist to-day, I cannot say that we are at all doing the right thing. On the other hand I have to state frankly that in my humble opinion we are wasting our precious time and the resources of the country. We are criminally wasting our energies in paying attention to all kinds of odd proposals, laying aside all good real business. It is, I repeat, an intensely immoral waste of time, attention and money, to consider such tenth-rate things.

I have got other difficulties too. Here are some people who claim that they belong to some kind of Samaj. I have no quarrel with them if they keep their fancies to themselves. I too started a Samaj in my own way, a Bhakta Samaj, some years ago, for I too had then my fads and fancies. But by what right can I force my fancies on others for their acceptance? I do not think that this is the place for talking about Arya Samajists either as vanguard Hindus or rear-guard Hindus, for speaking of Arya Samajism as the most ancient Hindu creed or the most modern, and their religious rites as either the best or the worst. My one main contention is that all of us are human beings; all are of one common humanity. I remember in the old days reading:

"When Adam delved and Eve span who was then the gentleman?"

We may think that all of us are the children of Adam or of Manu, or of apes, or of angels: why quarrel over these fads? Aryan and non-Aryan and all that is the manufacture of some idle busy ethnologists of old who in their half-learning—and half-learning is always more dangerous than no learning—fabricated, with the best of intentions, all kinds of rubbish, as also theories of the Aryan's original home having been in the Caucasian regions or in the Baltic or Arctic or other regions, and so on and so forth.

I find my Honourable friend, Mr. Kelkar, looking at me. Well, I had a long tussle once with the late Lokamanya Bala Gangadhar Tilak, some time before his death, about his book "The Arctic Home of the Vedas". I had my own views, and I put them before him. He was a great man, never afraid to confess if he thought he was wrong; so he admitted to me that he was misled in writing that book by the theories of European Indologists about which he had had his suspicions. He was ready to revise his theories and admit that the Aryans did not come from anywhere outside India.

All this is by the way. Now all this talk about Aryans versus Dravidians and so on is, in my opinion, wicked nonsense. It is true I come from the Chingleput district; but that does not mean that I belong to a Chingleputian race. It is no more safe to say that all those that come from North Western India are a race by themselves, or that those who come from Bengal are a race by themselves and so on. The thing is that 50 or 60 years ago Professor Max Muller and others wrote all kinds of learned nonsense, and we used to read all that in those days quite optionally and in the highest College classes. But all those silly fads with an "i" dotted here or a "t" dashed there are now crammed into the heads of unsuspecting boys and girls as facts proved of Ancient Indian History. Nor does the mischief end there. Older people come here saying they are Arya Samajists, Brahmo Samajists, or Adayar Samajists and so on; they want that the Honourable the Law Member, and the Honourable the Home Member, and others should lay aside all other work and deal with validating the marriages that each Samajist takes a fancy for! Sir, I think we must have a little more sense of proportion, distinguish between those things which are really essential and those which are not; and for some time to come consign the things that are non-essential to the best place to which they can be consigned—the waste-paper basket! I wish there were amendment or motion that the Bill be sent to the waste-paper basket, which would be a much more sensible proposal than either the original motion or the amendment of the Honourable the Home Member. I always object and on principle, to marriage legislation by a heterogeneous body. There is no principle in saying that people wanting to marry outside their caste must be protected. If I choose to marry whom I like, I do so at my risk; and I have no right for special protection of prestige or property and things of that kind. I do not think that any such protection is at all morally justified.

Now if my friend Mr. Sarda's Bill is going to come into effect from 1st April, I would rather take all the risks and consequences of disobeying the law than beg for protection from anybody's hands. Therefore, Sir, all this seems to me to be beating about the bush. I wish we had better work to do. I think that Members of this House who have any sense of responsibility should deal with really serious business in this House, or if there is no serious business to be done, they should go home and sleep soundly. That will be doing much better work. I therefore strongly oppose the motion before the House.

An Honourable Member: Is there any more serious work than this?

Mr. M. K. Acharya: I fear, I cannot enlighten my friend better than I have tried to do.

Now, Sir, I know we cannot always get what best we desire, that the lesser of two evils has often to be chosen, and on that score I shall vote for the Honourable Home Member's amendment. But on purely logical grounds and on moral grounds too I should consider that we have already wasted an hour and forty-five minutes of our precious time, and if any further waste of time like this is indulged in, it is a matter for which we shall be answerable in another place at least, those of us who having pledged ourselves to serve Mother India's highest call, are thus frittering away our energies. Let us beware of the answer that we shall have to give in that other place.

Mr. Mukhtar Singh: I am very thankful to the House for having given me a patient hearing and to the different criticisms made on this Bill. I am very glad, Sir, that Honourable Members here have given their very best consideration to the Bill that is now before them. There are a few objections that have been taken against my motion, and they may be divided under two different heads. The first point that has been raised is that, according to the Honourable the Home Member, it is doubtful whether the whole community of the Arya Samajists is behind the Bill. The same doubt has also been expressed by some other Members. I stated in my speech that the whole of the Arya Samaj community is behind the Bill, and my reasons were clear. I stated that in 1925 all the Arya Samajists gathered together at Muttra and they decided by a unanimous vote that such a measure was necessary. Not only that, they asked the all-India Aryan League (Sarvadeshika Sabha) to which all the provincial Arya Samaj associations are affiliated to draft this measure. The present Bill is the draft approved by the Sarvadeshik Sabha. This makes it quite clear that the whole community is behind the Bill. Not only that, I have received a number of resolutions by letters and by telegrams from the Punjab, from the United Provinces, from Guzarat, from Madras and from Bombay.

Mr. M. S. Aney: I have got two from the Central Provinces also.

Mr. Mukhtar Singh: My friend also has received resolutions from the Central Provinces. That clearly shows that the whole community is behind the Bill, and I am assured that a copy of these resolutions and telegrams have been sent to the Government also. The second point is the object in view to be achieved by this Bill.

Now, Sir, as I stated in the Statement of Objects and Reasons, there is really a very great difficulty in the way of the Arya Samajists; they have to do something which they do not believe in, and in order to remove that difficulty this Bill has been placed before this House. As my Honourable friend, Mr. Shah Nawaz, stated, if there is a real difficulty, the House should help the community. It is in that spirit that I have placed this Bill before the House. Objection was also taken on the ground that no harm would be done if the Bill was sent for circulation. If the Bill is sent for circulation, the result will be that you cannot pass it within the lifetime of this Assembly.

Mr. A. H. Ghuznavi: Why didn't you introduce it earlier?

Mr. Mukhtar Singh: I am asked why I did not introduce the Bill earlier. I sent my Bill more than two years back. It was on the ballot every time and on two occasions it was put on the agenda. It is not my fault that it did not come up earlier. This is generally the fate of all non-official Bills. When we can pass the Bill into law now, why should the House try to kill the Bill in this way?

Mr. A. H. Ghuznavi: It is too late now.

Mr. Mukhtar Singh: If the Government had given the assurance, which they could very well do, that after sending the Bill into circulation, they would agree to refer it to Select Committee in the beginning of the next Session, and then give a few days for its discussion, I would have had no objection, but the Government have refused to give any assurance of that kind.

Mr. A. H. Ghuznavi: How do you know there will be a next Session?

Mr. Mukhtar Singh: This is a real difficulty in the way of my consenting to the circulation of the Bill. As to the objections that have been raised, I see there are no points which cannot be remedied in the Select Committee. The Bill can very well be revised, modified and altered in the Select Committee, and there will be no harm if the Bill is sent to Select Committee. I may give the assurance, if that is needed, that it was not my intention, and is not my intention, that the Bill should apply to persons other than Arya Samajists, and when that assurance is there, the Government or the House should not have any objection to referring it to the Select Committee. I thought it was quite enough to put in the Preamble the words "inter-marriage of Arya Samajists". These words clearly show that it is not intended to apply to anybody else. Certainly, as I admitted in my speech, I am not a skilful draftsman and the language has to be improved. Unfortunately in this country we have to think, write and speak in a foreign language; and if the draft does not convey the sense, it is not my fault; it is the fault of the system under which we live. The Government and the other Members should help me rather than find fault with me on that score.

Certain objections have been raised, Sir, to which I consider it my duty to reply. It pained me to find that my revered leader also opposed my motion on a ground which hardly satisfied me at all as being a valid ground on which my motion ought to be opposed. It seems that my revered leader wants that the Arya Samajists should be governed by Hindu law. If that is so, it is also my desire that they should be governed by Hindu law; and the very fact that I sent this Bill, clearly shows that Arya Samajists want to be governed by Hindu law. Why then is objection taken on that score? If that was not our desire, we could very well have gone before the Registrar under the Special Marriage Act and declared that we are Hindus and we do not want to be governed by the caste system. The result would have been that we would have at once ceased to be governed by Hindu law, and perhaps my revered leader would have no objection then.

Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya: The matter requires consideration and adjustment.

Mr. Mukhtar Singh: If the matter requires consideration and adjustment, then the Select Committee is the proper place to do it; and that is the only thing I want. But the very fact that we do not want to take advantage of this Special Marriage Act clearly shows that the Arya Samajists do not want to sever their connection with the Hindus; rather they want to be governed by Hindu Law; and this is why they are forced to place this measure before you. No objection should therefore be taken on that score.

I was rather surprised to hear the speech of the Honourable the Law Member. He stated that there would be difficulty in governing succession, and he has told us how a couple—one belong to the Dayabhaga school and the other belonging to some other religion converted to Arya Samajism —would find difficulty as regards succession. I am afraid the Law Member did not realise that the difficulty was there when the Brahmos took advantage of the Civil Marriage Act. Hundreds of marriages had taken place amongst Brahmos who are all governed by Dayabhaga; if they could be governed by Dayabhaga law even after a declaration under the Civil Marriage Act—before its amendment took place in 1923—what is likely to be the difficulty in the case of the Arya Samajists? Mind you the Brahmos declared themselves to be non-Hindus. If in the case of those persons who declared themselves to be non-Hindus and were still governed by Hindu law there was no difficulty in interpreting the Dayabhaga law, I do not understand what difficulty there will be in applying the Dayabhaga law to the Arya Samajists.

[Mr. Mukhtar Singh.]

There is another point. The Law Member, if I may be permitted to say so, has entered into a fallacy. On the one hand he tries to understand how the succession will be governed, and on the other he tries to understand the principle upon which the succession is based. He considers that the theory of pindas is the guiding principle in succession amongst the Hindus. It may have been that it was so; but does he not know that the Arya Samajists do not believe in the pinda theory? Let me ask him this. If his son becomes an Arya Samajist, certainly he cannot give any benefit to the spiritual soul; rather he will refuse to do it, and what will become of his property? Supposing this Bill does not come into effect at all, will there be any difficulty in succession? (An Honourable Member: "He does not require any spiritual benefit from his son.") My Honourable friend suggests that there is no necessity of spiritual benefit in his case; but it is not an individual question, it is a question of all those who are Hindus, whose sons are Arya Samajists who do not believe in the pinda theory—whether their succession will be governed by the Hindu law or by something else. If in those cases there is no difficulty in interpreting the law

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter: In such cases it is the capacity to offer pindas that entitles a man to inherit, not his willingness.

Mr. Mukhtar Singh: But he has incapacitated himself by becoming an Arya Samajist, because he has converted himself to a faith which does not believe in that thing. And then what about the Brahmos, who do not believe in the Hindu religion at all?

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter: The case of Brahmos has created great confusion and we do not want confusion to be worse confounded.

Mr. Mukhtar Singh: I see; in the case of the Brahmos the Law Member or his Government do not want to set at rest the confusion that is said to have been created; but he is afraid of any further confusion. If that confusion can be set at rest by the Calcutta High Court, I think the analogy will apply in this case also; and if the Law Member does not want that litigation should be multiplied in this country, then it can very well be safeguarded by adding a clause to this Bill that the succession of the issues of such marriages will be governed by Hindu Law, though I do not consider there is any necessity for it; but if that necessity is there, then it can very well be safeguarded by adding a clause. You are not committed to this, that there should be only three clauses in this Bill; there may be four or more if need be.

The other and a very serious objection that has been raised by my Muhammadan friends is the apprehension that it will include those cases in which the woman may be a Muhammadan. I beg to submit that, as far as I can understand the English language, I have tried to meet that objection by saying "having belonged to different castes or sub-castes of Hindus or to different religions". I thought that it meant that, before the marriage had taken place they might have belonged to any religion, but at the time of the marriage they must be Arya Samajists; and if that meaning is not conveyed by the words that I have used, certainly the language can be improved. As I have already submitted, I do not want—the Arya Samaj community does not want—to take advantage of this Bill in the form which has been suggested or apprehended by my Muhammadan friends; and if there is any apprehension of that kind still, it can very easily be guarded against. But as regards conversions, there is really a very great difficulty. There are a number of Muhammadans, Christians, Sikhs and others who have joined the Arya Samaj. Their sons and their daughters have to be married. They are being married even to-day, but the question is about their status. They are not Hindus, because according to the opinion of some lawyers, the Hindu religion is considered not to be a proselytising religion, and therefore conversions are not recognised. But the Arya Samaj does believe in conversions; it has converted so many people. Do you want that a large number of men and women who have been converted should have no status at all? Not because the Hindu society does not want to give them any status but because the Government of the country does not want that any status should be given to them? I ask, Sir, that if a Hindu becomes a Muhammadan or a Christian and he can at once be assimilated by Christians or Muhammadans and he can at the same time inherit property without any difficulty, why should there be any hindrance in the case of those who become Arya Samajists? Rather the law of the land has gone a step further, inasmuch as according to the Punjab High Court, a Hindu who has become a Muhammadan can inherit the property of a Hindu. If that is so, Sir, why should there be any difficulty in the case of those who are converted to Arya Samaj? I consider, Sir, it will be far from my Mussalman friends to create any difficulty of that kind, because they themselves realise that they should be fair to others. If they only apprehend that an undue advantage of this measure may not be taken I shall be the last man, rather my community would be the last, to take any undue advantage of a measure like this. If an elucidation on this point is needed, that can very easily be done in the Select Committee. I am very much obliged to my Mussalman friends for having stated their own difficulties so frankly, but to suggest that there is any sinister motive behind this Bill or that the Arya Samajists want to take advantage of the Legislature in order to achieve their ends is rather too much, and I hope my Muhammadan friends will not entertain any such idea in their minds.

In conclusion, Sir, I want to say only a few words. Here is a community which does not believe in the caste system, which does not believe in the prohibition of marriages between a man of a lower caste with a woman of a higher caste. Do you want to penalise that community for that conviction? If that is their religion and they really believe that, according to the interpretation that they put on the Shastras, they should not restrict their marriages to the caste to which they belong, then why should they not be allowed to give a practical shape to their convictions? They have made up their mind to marry outside their own caste without caring for the consequences. They are already doing so. As I have told the House, in the year 1929, as many as 1,685 marriages have taken place. I would ask the House to consider the matter very seriously. It would have been much better if the Government had come to their help rather than that the Arya Samajists should be forced to bring in a measure of this kind; but that was not to be now when the Bill has reached a certain stage, and when it is likely to become law, why should the Government put obstacles in the way? If there are any doubts, and those doubts have to be cleared so as to place the law beyond all shadow of doubt, by all means suggest the necessary amendments and improve the Bill, but do not try to kill the Bill. With these words, Sir, I commend my motion to the House.

Mr. President: The original question was:

"That the Bill to finally recognize and place beyond doubt the validation of inter-marriage of Arya Samajists, be referred to a Select Committee consisting of the Honourable the Home Member, the Honourable the Law Member, Dr. B. S. Moonje, Mr. Vidya Sagar Pandya, Sardar Gulab Singh, Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava, Rai Sahib Harbilas Sarda, Mr. Fazal Ibrahim Rahimtulla, Mr. N. C. Kelkar, and the Mover, and that the number of members whose presence shall be necessary to constitute a meeting of the Committee shall be five."

Since which the following amendment has been moved:

"That the Bill be circulated for the purpose of eliciting opinions thereon."

The question is that that amendment be made.

THE RESERVATION OF THE COASTAL TRAFFIC OF INDIA BILL.

Mr. Sarabhai Nemchand Haji (Bombay Central Division: Non-Muhammadian Rural): Sir, I rise to move that the Bill to reserve the coastal traffic of India to Indian vessels, as reported by the Select Committee, be re-circulated for the purpose of obtaining further opinion thereon by the 30th April, 1930.

The reason which prompts me to make this motion is that this House at the present moment does not consist of its full normal complement. The issues raised by the Report of the Select Committee are of so great an importance that it is desirable that a full House should debate upon them. As you are aware, Sir, a full House can meet only after the by-elections and the by-elections cannot take place until after the last day allotted for non-official Bills this Session. Moreover, under the Standing Orders, a motion has to be made in regard to this Bill in this Session if the Bill is not to lapse. Under the circumstances I move the motion standing in my name.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That the Bill to reserve the coastal traffic of India to Indian vessels, as reported by the Select Committee, be re-circulated for the purpose of obtaining further opinion thereon by the 30th April, 1930."

The motion was adopted.

THE INDIAN STEAM-VESSELS (AMENDMENT) BILL.

Mr. K. C. Neogy (Dacca Division: Non-Muhammadian Rural): Sir, I beg to move:

"That the Bill further to amend the Inland Steam Vessels Act, 1917, as reported by the Select Committee, be taken into consideration."

Sir, this measure has been before the public for about four years, and during this period it sometimes seemed as if it would encounter serious opposition from certain quarters in this House, but I am happy to be able today to ask the House to consider a unanimous report of the Select Committee on which all the various sections of this House were well represented. Sir, this measure seeks an extension of the principle of State interference in private enterprise in the public interest. It arms the executive government with authority to regulate the rates and fares chargeable by inland steam vessels by fixing maxima and minima limits. In a subsidiary provision it authorises the setting up of statutory Advisory Committees to safeguard the interests of the customers of the inland steam vessels services.

*Speech not revised by the Honourable Member.

[Mr. K. C. Neogy.]

Sir, the principal provision is intended to prevent what has been compendiously termed "rate wars", of which my province has had a very sad experience in the past. Numerous instances are on record in which private Indian enterprise was throttled by unfair competition on the part of powerful combines which operated in the inland waters of Bengal. Sir, if this measure had been on the Statute-book years ago, we would by this time have, in my province at least, quite a number of indigenous concerns participating in the steam and motor traffic in the riparian tracts of Bengal. But, Sir, I do hope that now that we are in a position, with the concurrence of this House, to pass this very useful measure, the future will enable us to develop the indigenous industry on this line more effectively than has been possible in the past.

With these few words I commend my motion to the acceptance of the House.

Mr. B. Das (Orissa Division: Non-Muhammadan): Sir, I congratulate both the Government and also the Members of the European section of this House who sat in the Select Committee for the unanimity of the Report that has been presented to the House. Sir, when this Bill was taken into consideration, my Honourable friend Sir George Rainy was at the time feeling very diffident and so was also my friend Sir Walter Willson, who I regret to find is not a Member of this House any more. I am glad however that there were Messrs. Chalmers and Phillip in the Select Committee on behalf of the European Group, who with their Indian colleagues arrived at an equitable understanding and decision about minimum and maximum rates and about the Advisory Committees to control inland steamer companies.

Sir, I have only one little complaint to make. The Select Committee have left out Orissa, which has got certain steam vessel lines and large navigable waterways. Of course, the Honourable Sir George Rainy, who was at one time connected with my province, could have put in Orissa.

Mr. K. C. Neogy: The Bill does not exclude anybody.

Mr. B. Das: I expect that Orissa will be soon made a separate province and that there will be no rate war amongst the various inland steam vessel companies that would ply their vessels in the Orissa rivers.

The points that were raised by Mr. Neogy when he first moved the Bill were very pertinent and I need not go into the details again. I have however read a pamphlet which has been circulated by the Bengal National Chamber of Commerce and it publishes a letter addressed to the Secretary to the Government of India in the Commerce Department. I will only quote a paragraph to show that a rate war is still going on. This letter was addressed on the 7th September, 1929:

"Instances have been known of Bazar dealers importing portions of their stock by Indian-owned vessels being put to inconvenience by delay in allowing them space for jute consigned to the mills and presses, knowing full well that these mills and presses will not accept jute carried in Indian-owned vessels according to the terms of the agreement referred to. They are thus penalised for the 'offence' of patronising Indian companies."

This very pamphlet also contains a copy of the letter which the Managing Agents of the East Bengal River Steam Service Ltd., addressed to the Indian Mercantile Marine Committee:

"When the European companies found that this Indian Company was increasing its fleet and doing very good business and other similar companies were being started by Indians, they made an agreement with the mills restraining them from accepting jute carried on vessels owned and managed by Indians. And subsequently the Insurance companies, as if in sympathy, would not insure goods carried on our vessels at the same rate as goods carried on the European companies' vessels"

Further on it states:

"The Honourable Mr. Mackenzie of Messrs. Macneil & Co. even threatened us in so many words that, unless we sold or made over the management of this Company's business to them, they were determined to crush our Company. There are other weapons in use such as the arrangement that no rebate will be paid to shippers and consignees who have occasionally shipped their jute or coal by this Company's vessels and rate cutting."

I knew that my friend Mr. Haji was interested in Deferred Rebates for ocean-going steamers but I had no knowledge that such a state of things prevailed amongst the inland steam vessel companies as well. So, I am really grateful to my Honourable friend Sir George Rainy that he could come to an understanding and give Government support for placing on the statute a measure that will benefit the Indian Steam Companies plying in Bengal, Assam, Orissa and in various parts of India.

I may also bring it to the notice of the Honourable Sir George Rainy and the Government that it is no use our bringing forward measures like these unless Government co-operate with us to see them through. If Government could understand and appreciate the difficulties that Indian trade and commerce is passing through in the matter of inland steam vessels, navigation and inland water transport, and agree to place on the statute such a beneficial measure, they ought similarly to co-operate with non-official members of the House to place on the statute other beneficial measures and thereby the impression that has got about in the country that this Assembly is not serving any useful purpose, that impression will be removed from the minds of many. For that particular point alone, I thank my Honourable friend Sir George Rainy for taking that initiative.

The Honourable Sir George Rainy (Member for Commerce and Railways): I will not delay the House for more than a very few minutes. My Honourable friend Mr. B. Das has paid me a compliment which I in no way deserve. He expressed his gratitude to me for introducing the measure, but his gratitude is due to my Honourable friend Mr. Neogy for that, and not to me. Allusion has been made to what has been said in this House on previous occasions both by other Honourable Members and by myself. I frankly admit that at various times, the Government have had their doubts as to this Bill, and as Mr. Neogy himself admits, it is something of a novelty, and it remains to be seen how exactly the experiment would work. But Government have already accepted the principle of the Bill and they believe that the measure in the form in which it has emerged from the Select Committee is workable and that it can be administered so as to give fair play to all and to cause injustice to none. It is in that spirit that Government will attempt to administer this Bill if it is passed into law.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That the Bill further to amend the Inland Steam Vessels Act, 1917, as reported by the Select Committee, be taken into consideration."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 2 was added to the Bill.

Clause 1 was added to the Bill.

The Title and the Preamble were added to the Bill.

Mr. K. C. Neogy: I move:

"That the Bill, as amended, be passed."

The motion was adopted.

THE MUSSALMAN WAKF VALIDATING (AMENDMENT) BILL.

Mr. A. H. Ghuznavi (Dacca Division: Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I beg to move:

"That the Bill to amend the Mussalman Wakf Validating Act, 1913, be referred to a Select Committee consisting of the Honourable Sir James Crerar, the Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter, Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya, Dr. A. Suhrawardy, Mian Mohammad Shah Nawaz, Mr. Muhammad Ismail Khan, Maulvi Muhammad Yakub, Mr. K. C. Roy, Mr. Anwar-ul-Azim, Mr. Muhammad Yamin Khan, Maulvi Mohammad Shafee Daoodi, the Mover, and that the number of Members whose presence shall be necessary to constitute a meeting of the Committee shall be five."

Sir, I wish that this Bill was introduced by a lawyer who would have dealt with the subject more competently than a layman like myself. I shall presently show that it does not introduce anything new, and it only seeks to give a true interpretation of the Wakf Validating Act which was passed into law in 1913.

Mr. President: Is the Honourable Member going to take long?

Mr. A. H. Ghuznavi: No, Sir. I will only take five minutes. This Act was passed unanimously so far back as 1913. And it is only to amplify the meaning of this Act that this Bill has been introduced. I venture to hope that whether introduced by a lawyer or a layman, I shall get the unanimous support of the House. Sir, it is likely that the author being a layman, the Bill has not been drafted properly and requires modification. But it can be remedied in the Select Committee from which it will emerge in its proper form. I do hope that the House will agree with me that this Bill should be referred to the Select Committee and I hope Honourable Members would give it their unqualified support.

The motion was adopted.

THE COURT-FEES (AMENDMENT) BILL.

Rai Sahib Harbilas Sarda (Ajmer-Merwara: General): Sir, I move:

"That the Bill further to amend the Court-fees Act, 1870, for a certain purpose, be taken into consideration."

The Bill deals with a very simple and a small matter. It deals only with the court-fees payable on suits for maintenance by widows and it is applicable only to Ajmer-Merwara, though the matter the Bill deals with is no doubt an all-India one. The reason is this: Two years ago, I sent in a Bill in identical terms with the present Bill but applicable to the whole of India. Government declined to accord previous sanction to introduce to me, probably as the revenues derived from court fees having been provincialised, it was thought that the Bill might affect provincial revenues and therefore it should be discussed and decided in the Local Councils. The Legislative Assembly is the Local Council for Ajmer-Merwara as that province is under the direct administration of the Government of India. Hence the Bill comes before this House.

The matter is a very simple one. Under the present Act, a widow suing for maintenance has to pay court fees on ten times the annual value of the maintenance. This operates as a great hardship on poor widows who have to sue for maintenance. A widow claiming Rs. 10 a month as maintenance has to pay court fees on Rs. 1,200 and then process fees to get witnesses summoned have to be paid also on Rs. 1,200. Widows who claim maintenance are poor and can hardly afford to pay such high fees. They have often to forego the right to sue for maintenance and have to live at the mercy of people who are under a legal obligation to maintain them. In cases where these widows are able to raise money to pay the High Court fees, they do so on terms which impose a very heavy, and sometimes an intolerable, burden on them. The Bill proposes to give facilities to these widows to file suits on payment of court fees on the annual value of the amount of maintenance instead of ten times the annual value. Sir, if this Bill is passed into law, it will give facilities to the widows and I do not think the provincial revenues will suffer any loss. I therefore ask that the Bill be taken into consideration.

Mr. C. W. Gwynne (Home Department: Nominated Official): Sir, I beg to move the amendment that stands in my name:

"That the Bill be referred to a Select Committee consisting of the Honourable the Home Member, the Honourable the Law Member, Rai Sahib Harbilas Sarda, Munshi Iswar Saran, and Maulvi Muhammad Yaqub and that the number of Members whose presence shall be necessary to constitute a meeting of the Select Committee shall be three."

I have only to say, in explanation of that amendment, that the attitude of Government is very friendly, that they accept the principle of the Bill and that the principle of the Bill has been accepted by the local authorities of Ajmer. But we are advised that there are a number of technical drafting errors in the Bill which have to be set right and that the best and most appropriate place in which that can be done is in Select Committee.

Mr. President: I think the Honourable the Mover has no objection?

Rai Sahib Harbilas Sarda: I have no objection, Sir, since Government accept the principle of the Bill.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That the Bill further to amend the Court-Fees Act, 1870, for a certain purpose, be referred to a Select Committee consisting of the Honourable the Home Member, the Honourable the Law Member, Rai Sahib Harbilas Sarda, Munshi Iswar Saran and Maulvi Muhammad Yaqub, and that the number of Members whose presence shall be necessary to constitute a meeting of the Select Committee shall be three."

The motion was adopted.

The Assembly then adjourned for Lunch till Ten Minutes to Three of the Clock.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That the Bill further to amend the Inland Steam Vessels Act, 1917, as reported by the Select Committee, be taken into consideration."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 2 was added to the Bill.

Clause 1 was added to the Bill.

The Title and the Preamble were added to the Bill.

Mr. K. C. Neogy: I move:

"That the Bill, as amended, be passed."

The motion was adopted.

THE MUSSALMAN WAKF VALIDATING (AMENDMENT) BILL.

Mr. A. H. Ghuznavi (Dacca Division: Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I beg to move:

"That the Bill to amend the Mussalman Wakf Validating Act, 1913, be referred to a Select Committee consisting of the Honourable Sir James Crerar, the Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter, Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya, Dr. A. Suhrawardy, Mian Mohammad Shah Nawaz, Mr. Muhammad Ismail Khan, Maulvi Muhammad Yakub, Mr. K. C. Roy, Mr. Anwar-ul-Azim, Mr. Muhammad Yamin Khan, Maulvi Mohammad Shafee Daoodi, the Mover, and that the number of Members whose presence shall be necessary to constitute a meeting of the Committee shall be five."

Sir, I wish that this Bill was introduced by a lawyer who would have dealt with the subject more competently than a layman like myself. I shall presently show that it does not introduce anything new, and it only seeks to give a true interpretation of the Wakf Validating Act also the un-termed into law in 1913.

help and constructive criticism. I will make observations. I may say that up till now all the laws that have been made in any country in the world are made by man, and man being selfish and dominating has always allowed the woman to suffer and we find the woman always suffers. She suffers being the mother of the man, she suffers being the wife of the man and she also suffers at times when she is utterly helpless and man-made laws give her no chance of redress. There are few countries in the world where the woman had a chance to make any laws. It may be so in the Malabar territory where there is the Maramakathiyam system, where the woman has her social rights and status. She prevailed there from time immemorial to exact woman's rights. It might have been so in other countries in the old days. I read of the country of Amazons that Ulysses visited during his travels. I do not know whether there was any woman's Government existing when Ulysses made his entrance after the Trojan war to the island of these amazons. But as a country advances more and more in civilisation, civilisation in its higher essence always tries to conceal the fault of man and society. I want that the woman should not suffer any more. In this case the woman is punished and the man who seduces her, who leads her astray, goes unpunished. I think he should be equally punished. My friend, Dr. Moonje, asks me how do I know that the woman does not seduce the man. I will take only our social conventions, the Indian social environment. I know that in India such are the structure and environments of our social life that the woman gets little chance to seduce the man. Those who are accustomed to the

C. W. Gwynne (Home Department: Nominated Official): Sir, I life. With these remarks, I stand in my name:

Mr. C. W. Gwynne (Home Department: Nominated Official): I rise to state clearly at the outset on behalf of Government that they must oppose the motion moved by my Honourable friend Mr. Das that his Bill to amend the Indian Penal Code be circulated for opinions. Having said that, may I now pay my tribute to the earnestness, the sincerity, and the chivalry of the Honourable the Mover in his championship of those unfortunate women who expose or cause to be exposed their illegitimate children? I am sure the House and all right-thinking people will agree with the Honourable the Mover in his righteous indignation on the subject of the moral depravity of certain men. But, Sir, the cause is not to be found, as the Honourable the Mover has described in his Statement of Objects and Reasons, in any man-made law or in any man-made institution. It is a question of human nature itself, and a mere amendment of the law will not provide any adequate remedy. I find no fault with the Honourable the Mover's knowledge of law, but rather with the principle on which he would proceed. While I appreciate his sincerity and optimism, I can find no basis in reason for the propositions he has put forward, and for that reason it is necessary to oppose even the circulation of this Bill for opinions, because it is open to very serious objections, patent on the face of it, with the result that circulation would serve no useful purpose. The Bill proceeds on the assumption that a man, by seducing a woman, causes her, if she has an illegitimate child, to commit an offence under section 317 of the Indian Penal Code or a similar offence, and that therefore the man is really more culpable than the woman. But the circumstances with which the Bill is concerned is the exposure of a child and

Mr. B. Das: I will move it, Sir. I beg to move:

"That the Bill further to amend the Indian Electricity Act, 1910, for certain purposes, be referred to a Select Committee consisting of the Honourable the Law Member, the Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra, Mr. E. F. Sykes, Mr. Sarabhai N. Haji, Mr. Anwar-ul-Azim, Mr. Fazal Ibrahim Rahimtulla, Mr. K. C. Neogy and the Mover, and that the number of Members whose presence shall be necessary to constitute a meeting of the Committee shall be five."

This is not really an amendment of the Electricity Act. I wish to amend section 37 of that Act, sub-section (2) (b), by adding the words "in any newspaper published in the area of supply, or in absence of the same, in a newspaper published in the province" after the words already existing there "regulate the publication of notices". I have given the reason in the Statement of Objects and Reasons attached to the Bill. What happens now? The Indian Electricity Act of 1910 was passed long ago. In 1920, Mr. J. W. Meares the former Electrical Adviser to Government of India compiled a set of rules which are standing rules of practice among electrical engineers all over India. These rules are followed in all the electrification schemes all over India and all electrical engineers follow them. When anybody intends to electrify a town, he has to apply for a Government licence from the Local Government. The Indian Electricity Act and the Rules are at present a Central subject under the Central Government. Each Provincial Government has got an Electrical Inspector and the Department is a reserved subject; so if we have to amend the Act, we have to come to the Government of India. Now, in certain provinces there is a semblance of provincial autonomy; sooner or later every province will have provincial autonomy. The Rules at present require the applicant for an electric licence to advertise the same in three consecutive issues of a paper approved by the Government. Sometimes the Secretary to the Government or the Electrical Inspector gives a hint that the advertisement should be inserted in a Bombay or Calcutta newspaper, though it may happen that that daily paper is not read at all by the people of the town affected—it may be that only a few people read an English edited paper from Calcutta or Bombay. So it would be in the best interests of the local authorities and of the townspeople, who are going to be affected by the application of that electric licence, that the licence should be published in a paper published in that town or in that province. It is a very simple amendment that I seek to make. Of course I cannot ask the House to amend the rules, so I have sought to amend section 37 (2) (b) in order to enable the Government to make the necessary amendments in the Act and in the Rules.

I may make one further observation. Although the Government of India are in charge of the Electricity Act, they have had no electrical adviser since they did away with the post of Mr. J. W. Meares. Neither, since his departure, have they held any conference of the different Electrical Inspectors of the various provinces to see if the Rules require any change or any alteration. During the last ten years all over India the electrical engineering industries have gone up by rapid strides; and there have been various hydro-electric developments, and even the smallest town is being electrified to-day. What has been done by the Board of Trade in England may not be quite suitable to the Indian atmosphere; and if the Honourable Member for Industries and Labour holds a conference of Electrical Inspectors of the various Governments, he can find enough material and cases which would suggest the necessity for modification of some of these rules in order to suit changed conditions. With these observations I move my motion.

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra (Member for Industries and Labour): Sir, I am sorry that I cannot congratulate my friend, Mr. B. Das, on the success of his excursion on the present occasion into the field of legislation from the field of engineering. When I read this Bill and the Statement of Objects and Reasons, I failed to realise what principle my Honourable friend wanted to establish, or what was the precise reason underlying this Bill which he wants this House to enact. After I have listened to him, I think the position has somewhat clarified itself to me. What my Honourable friend really wants is a modification of the Electricity Rules and not a modification of the Act. If that is his real desire, the simplest course for him would have been to address my Department on the subject, suggesting for their consideration certain amendments to the Electricity Rules, and I can assure him that any such suggestion coming from him, or from any other responsible quarter, would have received due consideration from my Department.

My Honourable friend was not correct in stating that the Government of India, after the departure of Mr. Meares, lacks a qualified electrical adviser. We have got qualified electrical advisers employed in the Indian Stores Department: The head of that Department is a well-known expert in matters connected with electricity.

He then said that we have held no conference of Electrical Inspectors from the provinces for ten years. Well, Sir, I cannot vouch for ten years; but to the best of my recollection, we had a conference only last year where they discussed possible alterations in the Electricity Rules, which I believe are still receiving further consideration.

Now, Sir, I do not quite understand why my Honourable friend considers this particular amendment of law to be necessary. He has said that the Electrical Inspector in the Provinces or the Secretary in the Public Works Department who, I believe, works in a transferred Department in most provinces forces somebody to put his application or rather gives notice of his application in a certain paper. Now, Sir, Rule 13(3) of the Electricity Rules runs as follows:

"The advertisement shall be inserted by the applicant in at least three successive issues of the same newspaper published or circulated in the proposed area of supply."

So far as that part goes, there is no interference from anybody. Then the rest of the rule reads as follows:

"or any such newspaper as the Local Government may approve."

When I read the Statement of Objects and Reasons, I thought my Honourable friend particularly liked the last portion of it, because he was in favour of provincial autonomy.

Now, as I understand the matter, the person who applies for the licence is likely to insert his advertisement in the paper which has the greatest circulation in a particular area; and it seems to me that it would not be in the public interest to prescribe that notice of the application should be advertised only in newspapers published in the area of supply, or in the absence of the same, in a newspaper published in the province. I would give a concrete example. Take the Hindustan Times of Delhi. I understand it has a wide circulation in neighbouring tracts which lie in the Punjab and the United Provinces. Now, shall we by legislation stop the advertisement of notices of licences affecting, say a town lying in the neighbourhood of Delhi, in the Hindustan Times and insist on its publication in a paper which is published say in Lahore or Aliabad? I think my Honourable friend's real difficulty is that he does not want stress to be put in Rule 13 (3) of the Indian Electricity Rules on the words "or circulated", and that is brought out in one of the paragraphs in his Statement of Objects and Reasons. If that is so, I can give him this assurance. I shall get my Department to address the Local Governments and inquire whether the omission of those words from the Electricity Rules is likely to lead to any objection from the point of view of the public. If there is no such objection, I will follow the procedure provided for in section 38 of the Electricity Act and have the rule amended to that extent. Well, that is the most help I can give to my Honourable friend, and I hope with that assurance he will be kind enough to withdraw his Bill. If not, I shall be under the painful necessity of opposing it.

Mr. B. Das: Sir, I am obliged to the Honourable Member for the assurance he has given me, and with that assurance, as the purpose of my Bill is served, with your permission I would like to withdraw the Bill. I would, however, like to make one or two observations. I know the Honourable Member has got Mr. Pitkeathly as the head of the Indian Stores Department to manage the Indian Stores Department and also to purchase stores, but I never knew that Mr. Pitkeathly administered the Indian Electricity Act on behalf of the Government of India or built case-law regarding the Indian Electricity Act. I thought that the Indian Stores Department had nothing to do with the administration of the Indian Electricity Act.

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: I think, Sir, I must correct one misapprehension on the part of my Honourable friend. I did not say that Mr. Pitkeathly administers the Electricity law on behalf of the Government of India. All I said was that in him the Government of India possesses an electrical expert.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That leave be given to Mr. B. Das to withdraw his Bill."

The Bill was, by leave of the Assembly, withdrawn.

THE INDIAN RAILWAYS (AMENDMENT) BILL.

Mr. M. S. Aney (Berar Representative): Sir, I move for leave to introduce a Bill further to amend the Indian Railways Act, 1890. My reasons for the Bill are stated in the Statement of Objects and Reasons, and so I do not want to take further time of the House by making a speech.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That leave be given to Mr. Aney to introduce a Bill further to amend the Indian Railways Act, 1890."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. M. S. Aney: Sir, I introduce the Bill.

THE CODE OF CRIMINAL PROCEDURE (AMENDMENT) BILL.

Mr. M. S. Aney (Berar Representative): Sir, I move for leave to introduce a Bill to provide for treating offenders under the Child Marriage Restraint Act, 1928, as first offenders and enlarging the scope of the discretionary powers under section 562 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898. I have given my grounds in the Statement of Objects and Reasons, and I believe Honourable Members have read them. I therefore ask for leave to introduce this Bill without making any further speech.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That leave be given to Mr. Aney to move for leave to introduce a Bill to provide for treating offenders under the Child Marriage Restraint Act, 1928, as first offenders and enlarging the scope of the discretionary powers under section 562 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. M. S. Aney: Sir, I introduce the Bill.

THE INDIAN RELIGIOUS PICTURES TRADE MARKS (PREVENTION) BILL.

Mr. B. Das (Orissa Division: Non-Muhammadan): Sir, I beg to move for leave to introduce a Bill to penalise the use of pictures of gods and goddesses, scenes from scriptures or mythology of any religion whatsoever as marks or trade marks on any article imported to or manufactured in India. Sir, I have stated my reasons for this Bill in the Statement of Objects and Reasons, and so I don't think it is necessary for me to make a speech.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That leave be given to Mr. Das to introduce a Bill to penalise the use of pictures of gods and goddesses, scenes from scriptures or mythology of any religion whatsoever as marks or trade marks on any article imported to or manufactured in India."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. B. Das: Sir, I introduce the Bill.

Mr. President: Honourable Members will no doubt recollect that they have been summoned to be present here on Saturday, the 25th, at 11 O'Clock, when His Excellency the Viceroy will address them.

The Assembly then adjourned till Eleven of the Clock on Monday, the 27th January, 1930.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

Saturday, 25th January, 1930.

ADDRESS BY HIS EXCELLENCY THE VICEROY TO THE MEMBERS OF THE LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

H. E. the Viceroy: Gentlemen of the Assembly, I was unable, owing to my absence from Delhi, to greet you at the opening of your Session, but I desire now to offer you a cordial welcome to your labours and to express the hope that harmony and goodwill may attend your deliberations.

I regret that it was not possible for me to address both Houses of the Legislature this morning. That however would have involved either inconvenience to Honourable Members of the Council of State by summoning them to Delhi earlier than was justified by circumstances, or undue postponement of the opportunity of speaking in this place. I do not propose to make detailed reference to the programme of work that lies before you. Your attention this Session will be directed chiefly to the Budget, and the only preface I would wish to make to my more general observations is a brief allusion to matters that do not immediately concern the internal affairs of India.

Peace reigns on our borders. But for two of our neighbours the past year has been eventful. Nepal has suffered the loss of her distinguished Prime Minister, His Highness Sir Shumshere Jung, whose fame as a wise and progressive statesman had travelled far beyond the confines of his own country. India shares Nepal's sorrow in her bereavement, but shares also her gratification that the reins of office have fallen into the hands of so sagacious and well-tried an administrator as Sir Bhim Shumshere Jung, to whom we wish all success in the high duties which he now finds himself called upon to discharge.

It is a great satisfaction to India that Afghanistan has found a happy issue out of her recent calamities in the accession of His Majesty King Muhammad Nadir Shah. His Majesty carries with him our warmest wishes and goodwill, and I have every confidence that under his wise guidance Afghanistan will speedily enter upon a new era of prosperity, and that the ties of friendship which unite our two neighbouring countries will be maintained with ever-increasing strength and mutual trust.

The question of the future Government of Eastern Africa is now being considered by His Majesty's Government, on whom my Government have impressed the keen interest evinced in this question by all communities in India, and the importance of having due regard in their treatment of this matter to legitimate Indian feeling. I am glad to acknowledge publicly the valuable help which the Government of India have received from the Indian Legislature in this connection, and to give the assurance that it will always be our endeavour to champion the just cause of Indians overseas by all constitutional means open to us and in harmony with enlightened Indian opinion.

[H. E. the Viceroy.]

I much regret that sudden and serious illness has compelled Sir Kurma Venkata Reddi, our Agent in South Africa, to return to India. During the time he has held his post, Sir Kurma has amply justified his selection to this important office, and the House will, I am sure, join me in hoping that a speedy recovery may enable him before long to resume his work.

I must now deal with some features of the political situation, which has lately been engaging public attention.

On my return to this country from England, it was my duty to make a statement on behalf of His Majesty's Government. That statement stands as I made it, and indeed in the light of the appreciation which I had formed of the principal elements of the problem with which we all have to deal, and with a full knowledge of the weight that must necessarily attach to the considered opinion of anyone holding my present office, I should have felt that I had failed in my duty both to India and Great Britain, if I had tendered any different advice to His Majesty's Government, and when His Majesty's Government saw fit, as they did, to enjoin me to make an announcement on their behalf, I could have chosen no different language in which to make it.

The intention of my statement, of which I believe the purport to have been unmistakable, and which carried the full authority of His Majesty's Government, was to focus attention on three salient points. Firstly, while saying that obviously no British Government could prejudge the policy which it would recommend to Parliament after the report of the Statutory Commission had been considered, it re-stated in unequivocal terms the goal to which British policy in regard to India was directed. Secondly, it emphasised Sir John Simon's assertion that the facts of the situation compel us to make a constructive attempt to face the problem of the Indian States, with due regard to the Treaties which regulate their relations with the British Crown; and, lastly, it intimated the intention of His Majesty's Government to convene a Conference on these matters before they themselves prejudged them by formulation of even draft conclusions.

I have never sought to delude Indian opinion into the belief that a definition of purpose, however plainly stated, would of itself, by the enunciation of a phrase, provide a solution for the problems which have to be solved before that purpose is fully realised. The assertion of a goal, however precise its terms, is of necessity a different thing from the goal's attainment. No sensible traveller would feel that the clear definition of his destination was the same thing as the completion of his journey. But it is an assurance of direction, and in this case I believe it to be something of tangible value to India that those who demand full equality with the other self-governing units of the British Commonwealth on her behalf should know that Great Britain on her side also desires to lend her assistance to India in attaining to that position. The desire of most responsible opinion in India and that of His Majesty's Government is thus the same, and where unity of purpose is so assured we ought surely to be prepared to approach the practical difficulties with greater hopefulness. For my own part, if I am satisfied that someone with whom I have business to transact desires the same end as myself, I feel the better able to discuss any honest difference that may emerge between us, as to the means of its complete attainment, with a feeling of confidence that on the main purpose we do not differ.

Although it is true that in her external relations with other parts of the Empire India exhibits already several of the attributes of a self-governing Dominion, it is also true that Indian political opinion is not at present disposed to attach full value to these attributes of status, for the reason that their practical exercise is for the most part subject to the control or concurrence of His Majesty's Government. The demand for Dominion Status that is now made on behalf of India is based upon the general claim to be free from that control, more especially in those fields that are regarded as of predominantly domestic interest. And here, as is generally recognised, there are real difficulties internal to India, and peculiar to her circumstances and world position, that have to be faced, and in regard to which there may be sharp variation of opinion both in India and in Great Britain. The existence of these difficulties cannot be seriously disputed, and the whole object of the Conference now proposed is to afford opportunity to His Majesty's Government of examining in free consultation with Indian leaders how they may best, most rapidly, and most surely be surmounted.

The Conference which His Majesty's Government will convene is not indeed the Conference that those have demanded, who claimed that its duty should be to proceed by way of majority vote to the fashioning of an Indian Constitution which should thereafter be accepted unchanged by Parliament. It is evident that any such procedure would be impracticable and impossible of reconciliation with the constitutional responsibility that must rest both on His Majesty's Government and upon Parliament. But though the Conference cannot assume the duty that appertains to His Majesty's Government, it will be convened for the purpose hardly less important of elucidating and harmonising opinion, and so affording guidance to His Majesty's Government, on whom the responsibility must subsequently devolve of drafting proposals for the consideration of Parliament. It is thus evident that the intrinsic soundness of any particular proposals made, and the manner in which the argument for them is presented, will be more important factors in the Conference than the exact numerical representation enjoyed by any of the different sections of opinion that will participate in the proceedings.

I do not now pronounce between the alternative methods by which the British Indian Delegation to the Conference might be selected. It is safe to assume that the only desire of His Majesty's Government will be that this body should, so far as it may, be honestly and fairly representative of all opinion in India which can legitimately claim to be heard. In discussions where Central and Provincial issues must interact closely upon one another, many will no doubt be anxious that effective voice should be given to the Provincial, as well as to the All-India, point of view. There is no lack of men well equipped to deal with these several aspects of the problem, but while those who attend the Conference should clearly be men who command the full confidence of those they represent, I trust that they will also be men of wide vision, strong judgment and imbued with the single desire of utilising the occasion for the common good of all the people of India. I have as yet tendered no advice to His Majesty's Government on this matter of composition of the Conference, and before doing so I shall welcome any informal intimation of their views that Honourable Members of the Legislature, or spokesmen of different interests in the country, may be willing to place before me.

[H. E. the Viceroy.]

The Conference which His Majesty's Government will convene is not indeed the Conference that those have demanded, who claimed that its duty should be to proceed by way of majority vote to the fashioning of an Indian Constitution which should thereafter be accepted unchanged by Parliament. It is evident that any such procedure would be impracticable and impossible of reconciliation with the constitutional responsibility that must rest both on His Majesty's Government and upon Parliament. But though the Conference cannot assume the duty that appertains to His Majesty's Government, it will be convened for the purpose hardly less important of elucidating and harmonising opinion, and so affording guidance to His Majesty's Government, on whom the responsibility must subsequently devolve of drafting proposals for the consideration of Parliament. It is thus evident that the intrinsic soundness of any particular proposals made, and the manner in which the argument for them is presented, will be more important factors in the Conference than the exact numerical representation enjoyed by any of the different sections of opinion that will participate in the proceedings.

I do not now pronounce between the alternative methods by which the British Indian Delegation to the Conference might be selected. It is safe to assume that the only desire of His Majesty's Government will be that this body should, so far as it may, be honestly and fairly representative of all opinion in India which can legitimately claim to be heard. In discussions where Central and Provincial issues must interact closely upon one another, many will no doubt be anxious that effective voice should be given to the Provincial, as well as to the All-India, point of view. There is no lack of men well equipped to deal with these several aspects of the problem, but while those who attend the Conference should clearly be men who command the full confidence of those they represent, I trust that they will also be men of wide vision, strong judgment and imbued with the single desire of utilising the occasion for the common good of all the people of India. I have as yet tendered no advice to His Majesty's Government on this matter of composition of the Conference, and before doing so I shall welcome any informal intimation of their views that Honourable Members of the Legislature, or spokesmen of different interests in the country, may be willing to place before me.

which her credit has been pledged. I am confident that the great preponderance of Indian opinion, which is both loyal and sane, will, when it understands its implications, condemn decisively a programme, which could only be accomplished through the subversion of the Government by law established, and which would strike a fatal blow at India's economic life. It is evident that there are already some who regard violence, whether of individuals or of mobs, as the speediest and most effective solvent of political problems. Between such persons and all who believe in ordered society based upon the sanctity of life and respect for property and other lawful rights and interests, there can be no composition and no truce. And although the very authors of the present policy deprecate, some on grounds of principle and some on grounds of expediency, resort to violence, they can hardly be so lacking in either imagination or recollection of past events in India as not to be able to picture the results in this direction which must follow, as they have always followed, from the adoption of the policy they recommend. It remains my firm desire, as it is that of His Majesty's Government, following the recently professed wish of the British House of Commons, to do everything that is possible for conciliation in order that Great Britain and India may collaborate together in finding the solution of our present difficulties. But it is no less incumbent upon me to make it plain that I shall discharge to the full the responsibility resting upon myself and upon my Government for the effective maintenance of the law's authority and for the preservation of peace and order. And in the fulfilment of this duty I do not doubt that I should have the full support of all sober citizens.

The second thing I would point out is that, in any case, the Conference will be formed. The fact that some decline to take any part in deliberations so closely affecting their country's future only throws greater responsibility upon, and I would add, gives wider opportunity to, those who are prepared to face and solve difficulties in a constructive spirit. It is certainly no reason why His Majesty's Government should be deflected from their declared intention to call representatives of India to their counsels.

I entertain no doubt but that those who will go to the Conference from British India will be men who can speak authoritatively for the several component parts of the great volume of Indian public opinion which they will represent. To all that body of opinion I would say that, if India's case is to have full weight at the Conference, it is of the utmost importance that no efforts should be spared to enable it to find expression with something like unanimity. I do not apologise for dwelling upon this imperative necessity. From the time I first came to India, now nearly four years ago, I have laboured in public and in private to use such influence as I might possess in the way of assisting British India to win true peace among her own people, and so strengthen herself immeasurably before the eyes of the world. I would accordingly hope most earnestly that the leaders of all those who will be represented at the Conference may realise that no duty to which love of their motherland may impel them can transcend in dignity or worth this call to unity, and that they may utilise wisely the interval before the Conference in training the ears of their countrymen to hear it.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

Monday, 27th January, 1930.

The Assembly met in the Assembly Chamber of the Council House at Eleven of the Clock, Mr. President in the Chair.

MEMBER SWORN.

Rai Bahadur Raizada Bhagat Ram, M.L.A. (Jullundur Division: Non-Muhammadian).

THE INDIAN MERCHANDISE MARKS (AMENDMENT) BILL.

APPOINTMENTS TO THE SELECT COMMITTEE.

Mr. K. O. Neogy (Dacca Division: Non-Muhammadian Rural): I beg to move that Mr. W. Alexander, Mr. M. S. Aney, Mr. Abdul Matin Chaudhury and Mr. A. H. Ghuznavi be appointed to the Select Committee on the Bill further to amend the Indian Merchandise Marks Act, 1889. This has been necessitated by the resignation of some Honourable Members of this House who were members of the Committee.

The motion was adopted.

THE INDIAN PATENTS AND DESIGNS (AMENDMENT) BILL.

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra (Member for Industries and Labour): Sir, I beg to move that the Bill further to amend the Indian Patents and Designs Act, 1911, for certain purposes as reported by the Select Committee, be taken into consideration.

The House will recollect, as explained in my speech of last February when I moved the motion for the appointment of a Select Committee, that the Bill represents an attempt at overhauling the present Indian Patents law, to bring it up to date, and that the amendments proposed were based partly on the revision of the English law undertaken in 1917 and partly on the experience gained in India on the working of the present Act. The Select Committee, whose Report the House will observe is unanimous, and to whom my thanks are due for their care and patience

[Sir George Rainy.]

Industrial and Commercial Congress held at Madras. The Congress passed a Resolution to the following effect:

"That it was desirable in the interests of Indian trade and industries to introduce at an early date legislation for the registration of trade marks in India, in the absence of which the Indian merchants are put to considerable hardship, both in India and abroad, and India is unable to join the International Convention for the protection of industrial property."

The Commerce Department replied to that letter, and the reply was to the following effect, that we had noted the opinion of the Federation of Indian Chambers, but we added that the question of the introduction of the system of registration of trade marks in India had been considered on no less than ten occasions, and that, on every occasion, it was found that commercial opinion was either unanimously, or in the balance, against the proposal. We stated that in these circumstances the Government of India were not prepared to reopen the matter unless a statement were placed before them indicating clearly the reasons which were held to justify it, and, in particular, the extent of the disability which India suffered by non-adherence to the International Convention for the Protection of Industrial Property and the advantages which it was believed would result from the registration of trade marks.

Unless a reply has come in very recently, I think the matter stands there. That is to say, as far as my information goes, we have not yet had the statement from the Federation of Indian Chambers which we suggested they might send to us. On the other hand, Government are bound to attach weight to the opinion expressed by the Select Committee on the Patents and Designs Bill. The matter has already been examined in the Commerce Department, but I do think it will be helpful to our examination if the Federation of Indian Chambers can see their way to give us the statement we suggested they should send, because that will enable us to focus our minds definitely on the points which the Federation considered important. I can assure the House that any representation of that kind which we may receive will be most fully examined.

Sir Purshotamdas Thakurdas: I wonder, Sir, whether the Honourable Member can tell me when the last inquiry regarding this matter was made? Was it made more than 10 years ago or was it made recently?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: It was last under discussion in the years 1917 to 1919.

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: Sir, I wish to deal briefly with the second of the points to which my Honourable friend Sir Purshotamdas Thakurdas referred. That is the point mentioned in paragraph 2 of the Report of the Select Committee, and it refers to the desirability of tightening up the procedure in India, in regard to the examination of applications for patents, so as to bring it more in line with the procedure followed in England. Now, Sir, this matter received our consideration as soon as we received the Report of the Select Committee. We asked the Controller to examine the matter fully and let us have any specific recommendations he might consider it desirable to make. The one main difference between the procedure in India and the procedure in England refers to the systematic search for anticipation of inventions. Section 7 of the English Patents Act makes it obligatory on the examiner to investigate whether the invention claimed in a patent application has been wholly or in part claimed or described in any specification, other than a provisional specification not followed by a complete specification, published before the date of the application, and left pursuant to any application for a patent made in the United Kingdom, within 50 years next before the date of the application. Section 5 (1) (e) of the Indian Patents and Designs Act, on the other hand, enjoins that the Controller shall examine every application to see whether the invention, as described and claimed, is prima facie a new manufacture or improvement.

I understand that in India, there are great practical difficulties in following the English procedure in its entirety, i.e., that all specifications of a particular class published before the date of the application within fifty years next before the date of the application should be examined. In India, specifications filed prior to 1912 have not been printed, and the applicants would be put to a considerable loss of time and money in obtaining copies of specifications cited against them if the examination is to be pursued to a period of fifty years back. Even so, Sir, we have not for that reason rejected the recommendation of the Select Committee. We are still pursuing the matter in consultation with the Controller in order to determine to what extent it would be practicable to tighten the Indian procedure in the interests of the general public.

My Honourable friend Sir Purshotamdas Thakurdas was perfectly correct when he referred to the inadequacy of the establishment. As a matter of fact, we hope in the Budget for next year to get a few more examiners and also to raise the pay of the Controller himself, to the commendation of whose services by my Honourable friend I fully subscribe. When we have managed to come to definite conclusions as to the extent to which the Indian procedure can be improved, we will have to ascertain the amount of extra expenditure which this tightening of the procedure is likely to lead to; and thereafter when it is possible for us to get a grant for the extra establishment, there should be no difficulty on our part in making such improvements in the procedure as may be found to be necessary.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That the Bill further to amend the Indian Patents and Designs Act, 1911, for certain purposes, as reported by the Select Committee be taken into consideration."

The motion was adopted.

Clauses 2 to 32 were added to the Bill.

Clause 1 was added to the Bill.

The Title and the Preamble were added to the Bill.

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: Sir, I am sorry there is one point to which I have not drawn attention at an earlier stage. In fact it has just caught my eye. In clause 1, sub-clause (2) it is stated that the Bill shall come into force on the 1st day of January 1930. That might have been all right when the Select Committee made its Report, but it is not

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

Tuesday, 28th January, 1930.

The Assembly met in the Assembly Chamber of the Council House at Eleven of the Clock, Mr. President in the Chair.

CLOSING OF THE GALLERIES OF THE LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY CHAMBER.

Mr. Arthur Moore (Bengal: European): May I ask, Sir, whether it is your intention, without consulting this House, to keep the galleries closed indefinitely by refusing to issue passes to visitors and thereby causing inconvenience to Members?

Mr. President: The Honourable Member must give notice.

SHORT NOTICE QUESTION AND ANSWER.

REPORT OF THE HAJ INQUIRY COMMITTEE.

Maulvi Mohammad Shafee Daoodi: (a) Will Government be pleased to state when the Report of the Haj Inquiry Committee will be published?

(b) Will the recommendations of the Haj Inquiry Committee, which are of urgent utility to the pilgrims and can be enforced by executive order, be brought into practice during the present Haj season?

(c) Are Government aware that pilgrims proceeding to Hejaz in the present Haj season are very anxious to have the benefit of the unanimous recommendations made by the Haj Inquiry Committee?

(d) Will Government be pleased to state whether they intend to bring in some legislative measure on the lines of the recommendations of the Haj Inquiry Committee during the present Session of the Legislative Assembly?

Sir Frank Noyce: (a) As the Honourable Member is presumably aware, the Report of the Haj Inquiry Committee is still in the Press. It will be published as soon as circumstances permit. Every effort will be made to ensure its early publication.

(b) I am sorry, Sir, that I am unable to give an assurance on this point. The consideration of the Report and consultation with Local Governments and others concerned must necessarily take time. On our part, we shall deal with the Committee's recommendations as expeditiously as possible.

(c) This may be so, but Government have no information. In this connection, I may, however, point out that the pilgrims can have no knowledge of the recommendations of the Committee, as its Report has not yet been published.

(d) I do not think this will be possible, but I may repeat my assurance to the Honourable Member that no avoidable delay will be allowed to occur in taking such action as may be decided by Government on the Committee's recommendations.

Maulvi Mohammad Shafee Daoodi: Is the delay due to the pilgrim conditions not being considered sufficiently important by Government?

Sir Frank Noyce: No, Sir. The delay is due to the fact that the Report has not yet been officially received by Government but is still in the Press.

Maulvi Mohammad Shafee Daoodi: Will Government, on the publication of the Report, agree to the different Haj Committees putting into practice experimentally during the current pilgrim season such of the unanimous recommendations made by the Committee as are in the best interests of the pilgrims? If so, will they instruct the Haj Committees concerned on this point?

Sir Frank Noyce: I should not like to answer the question off-hand without a detailed examination of the recommendations of the Committee, but prima facie there would seem to be no objection to the Protectors of Pilgrims and the Haj Committees putting into force such of the recommendations of the Committee as are within their competence. If the Honourable Member will be good enough to discuss this question with me at an early opportunity I shall be very glad to go into the matter with him.

Mr. B. Das: May I enquire, Sir, if the Government will give this House an opportunity to discuss the Haj Committee's Report?

Sir Frank Noyce: I can only promise that that will be considered.

RESOLUTION RE RECRUITMENT FOR THE INDIAN MEDICAL SERVICE.

Mr. M. R. Jayakar (Bombay City: Non-Muhammadan Urban): Sir, the Resolution which stands in my name runs as follows:

"This Assembly recommends to the Governor General in Council that he be pleased to revive the competitive examination for recruitment to the Indian Medical Service, which has been held in abeyance for the last fourteen years, and to hold it annually at a convenient centre in India and to make it obligatory for the entrants to the examination to hold a medical qualification registrable in India."

Honourable Members are aware that, until 1915, this examination for recruitment to the Indian Medical Service used to be held regularly in India, and it was one of the avenues by which the middle classes of India could enter the superior medical services. In 1915, purely as a war measure, the examination was discontinued, and the reason given, so far as I recollect, was that it was necessary to obtain quick and rapid recruitment, and therefore, as a temporary measure necessitated by the contingencies of the war, the examination was stopped. The war ended long ago and nearly a decade has passed since the Armistice was declared and yet we find that the examination has still been held in abeyance. The present supply of Indian Medical Service men is obtained by a system of nomination entirely in the hands of a Committee which sits in England and another Committee in India controlled by the Government of India; and the closeness with which the rights of this Committee have been preserved will be apparent to Honourable Members when I mention that Government have refused, so far as my information goes, to give to the Public Service Commission the right of making or suggesting recruits for these nominations although that is an ad hoc Commission whose main function is to supervise the supply of candidates and make a selection from them. This system, therefore, has caused intense dissatisfaction in the country. And Honourable Members will follow my point more appreciatively when I tell them that European candidates—I am very sorry to introduce the racial element but I have to do it because the whole system is based upon racial selection—the European candidates are given special terms and also obtain a most extraordinary concession that, after six years of service, they get a handsome gratuity and can retire and do whatever they like in their own country. Besides, the established policy of the Selection Committee and the Government of India seems to be, when dealing with Indian candidates, to accept mainly British qualifications. However high an Indian may have risen in the examination instituted by Indian Universities, he has got to go to England, not for the purpose of acquiring more expert or technical knowledge but for the purpose of getting a qualification registrable in the United Kingdom, without which he may not be able to compete for this examination. Now Honourable Members can imagine the great hardships to which the middle class population of India are put. However intellectual and bright a young man may be, he has first of all to find the money to go to England. Secondly, he has to go and compete in a foreign language, the tyranny of which only those can understand who for their bread and butter purposes have to use that language from day to day. Thirdly, he has to compete with British candidates on their own grounds, very often with a few months preparation after arrival in England. But Honourable Members will be pleased to hear that Indian candidates have very creditably distinguished themselves in spite of these handicaps of travelling, expensiveness and language. But for some extraordinary reason a rule has been passed by the Secretary of State that only a certain percentage of places will be open to Indians. Only 33 per cent. are open to Indians and the rest, viz., 67 per cent. have to be competed for by British candidates. The result of that naturally has been—and I am assured by those who are entitled to express an opinion on that point—that European candidates of very poor qualifications have been introduced into the service. There are in this service a number of temporary appointments held by Indians and continued from the time of the war. For no reason which may be said to be satisfactory, the Government do not confirm these temporary incumbents. Government go on keeping them from time to time dragging on a precarious existence with the sword of Damocles always hanging over their heads. Honourable Members will remember that a few questions were put in this House in the last and previous Sessions, but with the characteristic reserve with which my Honourable friend, Mr. Young, always speaks on behalf of these services, he did not give any satisfactory reply as to why these appointments had not been confirmed. They are kept temporary from year to year, and in the meanwhile new recruits come up who are made permanent. The

[Mr. M. R. Jayakar.]

Similarly I got only this morning a letter from an important medical association called the All-India Medical Association, which passed a similar resolution, but going into greater detail than the other resolution. Well, this is the state of feeling in the country. I know many of my friends outside this House will doubt my wisdom in having moved this Resolution when my countrymen are asking for complete Dominion Status, and another section goes further and asks for independence; and I can well imagine many newspapers will criticise the wisdom of a Resolution like this, moved at a time when the entire government in this country is required to be transferred to the people. But, as the Resolution was there, and as many of my medical friends desired that it should be moved, although I am not sure what the fate of the Resolution is going to be in the present state of the House, it was my duty, I thought, to move the Resolution and put before this House the case of my medical friends.

Now, the time has come, I submit, Sir, when just as in the case of other examinations like the Bar and the Indian Civil Service—I am only taking two instances—the examination should be held in India. Provision has been made for the holding of superior competitive examinations in India—as an instance, I may mention Bar examinations. It is now unnecessary for an Indian to go to England to qualify himself for the Bar, because the rule has been made that he can pass the same examination in India and get qualified for the Bar and enjoy all the privileges except becoming the Chief Justice of a High Court which in most cases is a very remote possibility. Similarly, in the Indian Civil Service examination, provision has been made, though of a very defective and partial character, under which an Indian need not go to England to qualify himself; he can get the same qualification in India. There is no reason why the same should not be done in the case of the Indian Medical Service examination, except that it is of a quasi-military character and partakes of the nature and characteristics of that hush-hush secrecy which obtains in the Military Department of this country.

Honourable Members will find that the facilities for medical education in this country have increased considerably since 1915. Let me take three tests. As regards the increase of medical colleges, Honourable Members will find, according to the figures which are available, that in 1915 when the examination was closed, we had six big colleges in India giving medical instruction; now they have increased to ten—nearly double. The number of teachers has trebled—I do not wish to weary the House with figures, I am speaking generally. The number of students remains the same in spite of the absurd restrictions which have been imposed on their admission. Government in this country says: "We shall only educate a few"; though the traditions of the country, Hindu as well as Muhammadan, have been from time immemorial that he who wants to grow wise will have the opportunity given. The British Government however say: "No, we will have restrictions put upon the number of students allowed to receive medical instruction". It is therefore creditable that in spite of these restrictions, the number of students has gone up just a little. I have no doubt that, if there had been no restrictions at all, the number would have increased tenfold. Further, improvement has been made in the facilities which are available now in India. A number of places for acquiring medical experience, namely, house-surgeonships and house-physicianships have now been thrown open. Taking only Bombay, of which I know a little, we have four large teaching hospitals. Bombay is by no means an exception, and in other places in India we have similar facilities. In Bombay alone, a hundred places of this character exist, providing experience for the incumbents who occupy them. So much value was at one time attached to these places for acquiring experience that I remember there was a rule which provided that if an I. M. S. candidate possessed experience of this description, having acted in places like a house-surgeon or a house-physician, he received special facilities and encouragement. I do not know whether the rule exists now.

Likewise, the post-graduate courses in India, speaking only of my own University in Bombay, have considerably increased, and for the information of Honourable Members I may mention that in medicine, surgery, pathology, ophthalmics and midwifery, post-graduate courses have now been founded. We now get, on an average, nearly five to six hundred medical graduates every year, many of whom, I have not been able to find the percentage, are post-graduate students. All this supply is available in the country. I do not know whether I am going to be told by Mr. Young in his habitual way that an adequate supply is not forthcoming. That would be an absurd plea. The supply is there. The demand is there too. The total strength of the Indian Medical Service is about 620 roughly. Taking 25 to 27 years as the average length of service, we get every year 25 vacancies, speaking roughly. India turns out 500 to 600 medical graduates every year. Therefore, it is clear that there is excellent material to be had in this country which could be utilised for the purpose of filling these places. Speaking of the quality of instruction imparted in India, I have only to remind the House of what my Honourable friend Dr. Moonje said last Simla season when he was dealing with the appointment of an autocrat in medical studies. He called the attention of the House to the report of two English experts, General Megaw and Colonel Sprawson, who had borne testimony to the high quality of the medical instruction given in the Indian Universities. There is therefore no impediment in the way except the desire of the Government to keep this examination as a close preserve for British boys.

I shall now proceed to deal with the last part of my Resolution. That does not require much talking. It only provides that the Government of India should occupy a fair and just position with regard to the rights of the Indian medical profession. They must either observe the principle of reciprocity as other countries do, that is, tell the British Medical Council that, if Indian qualifications are recognised in England and Indians can go and appear for examinations or practise there, as the British can come and practise in this country, well and good; if not, they will have to submit to a test qualification in India before they will be allowed either to practise or to pass examinations in India. I do not think I am asking anything unreasonable when I say that this injustice should be removed, namely, that Indian candidates, after taking the highest medical degree in this country, have got to qualify themselves for another degree in England without which they may not be able to appear for the I. M. S. examination. It is not an examination for the benefit of the British people; it is for the purpose of being of use to the people of this country, and yet the extraordinary circumstance is that degrees of our Universities do not count; we have to submit ourselves to the humiliation of passing another degree. I can understand such a requisition of to year. After 1923 and 1924, in which years, as I said, no Indians were recruited, we had a Resolution moved in this House in September 1925 by the late Dr. Lohokare. His Resolution was for the re-establishment of the competitive examination, but he proposed that it should be held both in the United Kingdom and India. At that time the reorganization of the Service was not complete; recruitment, as I said, was in an abnormal condition. The line taken by the Government spokesman at the time was that it was too early to consider the re-introduction of the examination. A distinguished officer of the Indian Medical Service, who took part in the debate, also pointed out the practical difficulties if the competitive examination were held simultaneously in England and in India. In that year, the year 1925, 11 Europeans and 10 Indians were recruited. In the following years the reorganization of the Indian Medical Service was worked out. The ratio adopted, as my Honourable friend has said, was approximately 2 Europeans to 1 Indian. The actual numbers recruited from the year 1925 up to date work out to 86 Europeans and 47 Indians.

Now, Sir, I quote these figures only to show that, under the system of selection, there has been a very considerable advance in Indianisation. It may be possibly not so great as might have been expected from the figures for the one or two years immediately preceding the war, but taking everything into consideration, it does constitute a very great advance.

There is, however, one respect in which I have always thought the situation is most unsatisfactory; that is the rule to which the Honourable the Mover has referred, by which Indian recruitment has to wait upon European recruitment. It has been the practice in the last few years not to recruit to an Indian vacancy until two recruits have been obtained in England to fill European vacancies, with a view to maintaining recruitment in the proportion of 2 to 1. Indian recruitment was made to wait upon European recruitment which during those years has been fitful and flagging. The object of that arrangement originally was to prevent the proportion of Indians becoming too great at any given time. But all the same, I readily admit that, from the Indian point of view, that system is invidious and unsatisfactory; and I am glad to say that, on a representation by the Government of India, the Secretary of State has agreed to abolish that arrangement. In future, Indians will be recruited to Indian vacancies in the recognised proportion without respect to the rate at which European candidates are forthcoming for European vacancies . . .

Lieut.-Colonel H. A. J. Gidney: What is that recognised proportion?

Mr. G. M. Young: As I have just said, the recognised proportion is 2 to 1.

Lieut.-Colonel H. A. J. Gidney: Thank you, Sir.

Mr. G. M. Young: I claim that this step does meet the principal grievance underlying the Resolution, that the recruitment of Indians to this Service has been made to wait upon the recruitment of Europeans; in other words, an Indian candidate's chance of getting into the Service has been regulated by the enthusiasm or otherwise of British candidates to go to the Service. Admittedly, Sir, this reform would not meet the literal implication of the present Resolution, which is that European recruitment should forthwith cease. To those who do accept this Resolution in its literal sense, I would point out that such a step would go far beyond the recognised rate of Indianisation in any of the other All-India services. The Indian Medical Service is primarily a military service, but it also is a servant of the Civil Services. The two reasons for maintaining the present ratio are that a certain military reserve of European officers is required, and that, under the orders of the Secretary of State, a certain proportion of European medical practitioners is maintained to look after those Europeans who are members of the other Civil Services and their families. With regard to this actual proportion, I can only say that it is the outcome of the most careful examination and analysis. When the Government of India submitted their proposals to the Secretary of State 3½ years ago, they did not pretend that these proportions would be immutable and abiding for all time. They said that they would subject them periodically to review. If in the impending constitutional changes an advance takes place in the pace of Indianization in the other services, or if any other reason indicates that the modification of the proportion is prima facie desirable, the Government of India will have no hesitation in examining it afresh. The rate is merely the rate which holds good at the present time. For these reasons, Sir, I submit that the Resolution, in so far as it involves immediate and radical changes in the organization of the Service, is premature.

I will now turn, Sir, to the practical problem involved by the institution of a competitive examination in this country. If it were merely a question of securing a regular flow of Indian candidates from the Universities, there is much to be said for a system of competitive examination. But there is, as I have already pointed out, the question of European recruitment, and there is also the question of those Indian students who, after qualifying at the Indian Universities, have the means, the time, the enterprise and the ambition to proceed to Europe and study in medical institutions where, taking it as a whole, the standard of teaching is higher, the opportunities of learning are greater, and the qualifications obtained are ultimately higher. Indians will continue to do this in considerable numbers, whether their object is entry into the Indian Medical Service or into the far larger field of private practice. Would it be fair then to insist that they should come back to India to submit to an examination in competition with those who may have left their Indian Universities at exactly the same time and have spent the whole of the intervening period in studying at the same University and preparing themselves for this examination, and gaining no fresh or wider experience? I submit that a system of that kind would penalise your best source of recruitment for the Indian Medical Service. It would penalise them and it would handicap them.

Another objection to the immediate institution of a competitive examination is that it would be unfair to those temporary officers, of whom we hear so much. They have been several years in the Service. It would not be reasonable to expect them to sit down and pass an examination alongside of students who have just left the University and have been preparing for that examination. There is another point about competitive examinations which, though it does not apply to Indians in the same way as Europeans, is nevertheless worth noting. In no medical service in the United Kingdom has it been found possible to introduce a system of competitive examination since the war. The Royal Army Medical Corps, the Royal Air Force, Medical Corps, the Naval Medical Corps, and medical

Mr. M. R. Jayakar: My Resolution speaks of an exclusive examination in India only. But I am quite agreeable, having regard to the apprehended fate of my Resolution, that, if the Government of India agree to the first part of my Resolution, there should be simultaneous examination in India as well as in England.

Lieut.-Colonel H. A. J. Gidney: Thank you. I therefore wish to move an amendment to the original Resolution to the effect that the examination be held simultaneously in England and in India, and I am glad my Honourable friend has accepted it.

Mr. B. Das (Orissa Division: Non-Muhammadan): Is the Honourable Member speaking as representative of the European Group or representative of Anglo-Indians? I should like to have that made clear.

Dr. A. Suhrawardy (Burdwan and Presidency Divisions: Muhammadan Rural): He is speaking as Colonel Gidney.

Lieut.-Colonel H. A. J. Gidney: My Honourable friend, Mr. Das, has no reason to question me. I am not speaking as an Oorya.

Mr. M. R. Jayakar: May I know from my Honourable friend whether he has any hopes of such an amended Resolution being accepted by the Government of India? If so, I will agree; if not, I will push forward my own Resolution.

Lieut.-Colonel H. A. J. Gidney: I am not in the confidence of the Government of India. But I believe the European Group would support the Resolution if it contained a provision for simultaneous examination.

Mr. M. R. Jayakar: May I mention to my Honourable friend that, if I have the assurance from Honourable Members of the European Group that they will support the Resolution, I will accept it in the amended form rather than risk losing the entire Resolution.

Sir Darcy Lindsay (Bengal: European): I have not consulted all the Members of the Group, but from the indications given to me, the Resolution in its amended form will receive our support.

Lieut.-Colonel H. A. J. Gidney: I desire to congratulate my Honourable friend, Mr. Jayakar, on the very thorough and reasonable manner in which he has presented his Resolution. I agree with him in reopening the competitive examination and holding it in India. I have always maintained that it should not be necessary for India alone, of all the possessions of the British Empire, to be compelled to send her sons thousands of miles away to Europe to be trained for service in their own country. Admission into the I. M. S. has hitherto demanded a training and a degree in England, and, as such, has entailed great expense to parents in India to be able to send their sons to England to qualify. I have always objected to this demand for entrance into the Imperial services. But, if this Resolution is passed, it will certainly give Indians an opportunity of passing this examination in India. My Honourable friend, Mr. Jayakar, has stressed the point that Indian Universities provide ample opportunities to supply suitable candidates for entrance into the I. M. S. I am afraid, I cannot entirely agree with him, because some of the newer Universities do not offer adequate training to their students before giving them a degree.

Dr. B. S. Moonje (Nagpur Division: Non-Muhammadan): What about old Universities?

Lieut.-Colonel H. A. J. Gidney: I am not referring to them. There are certain Universities

Dr. B. S. Moonje: Does the Honourable Member mean to say that the old Universities cannot supply the requisite number?

Lieut.-Colonel H. A. J. Gidney: Will the Honourable Member Dr. Moonje—I mean Colonel Moonje—have patience and hear what I have to say and not interrupt me? There are certain Universities, such as, Bengal, Madras and Bombay which can supply suitable candidates in plenty and as good as can be had in any other country. There are other Universities, such as Patna, Rangoon

Mr. B. Das: I strongly protest against the inclusion of Patna.

Lieut.-Colonel H. A. J. Gidney: And in a way, the Punjab too where the training is not adequate. I believe this was the reason why the British General Medical Council demanded the appointment of an Inspector of Standards and Qualifications. However, that is not the point at issue in this Resolution. The question is whether the present system of obtaining recruits to the I. M. S., by nomination only is the best method. I agree with my Honourable friend, Mr. Jayakar, that nomination is not a good system. It certainly opens the door to nepotism and favouritism,—I would not say jobbery, because that would not be a fair term. In opposing this Resolution the Honourable Member, the Secretary to the Army Department, stated that nomination was the present system for recruitment into the R. A. M. C., and the Royal Medical Air Force. But, that is no answer to Mr. Jayakar's statement that nomination is not the best system for the I. M. S. on such an occasion and at such a discussion I would like to have seen, seated in this House, the Director General of Indian Medical Service answering this Resolution. He is more qualified to give a suitable and ample reply, for he is familiar with all the details of the matter. The system of nomination that is at present in vogue is, in my opinion, one that should certainly be stopped. The Army Secretary has given certain reasons why recruitment by nomination should continue. He stated that the I. M. S., was primarily an Army Department. He next referred to the medical needs of wives and families of European members of the services, for which reasons he said, there should be a sufficient percentage of Europeans in the I. M. S. Both these points certainly need careful consideration, but, they are not adequate enough reasons why to oppose the reopening of the competitive examination for which the Resolution asks. The Honourable the Mover was wrong when he said that, before one could enter into the I. M. S., it was a sine qua non, that he must possess a British medical qualification. The Honourable Member in charge of the Department has said that Indians have been accepted as permanent Members of the I. M. S., who did not possess British qualifications.

An Honourable Member: How many?

Lieut.-Colonel H. A. J. Gidney: Not many; but it is nevertheless a fact.

An Honourable Member: One swallow does not make a Summer.

Mr. M. R. Jayakar: My Resolution speaks of an exclusive examination in India only. But I am quite agreeable, having regard to the apprehended fate of my Resolution, that, if the Government of India agree to the first part of my Resolution, there should be simultaneous examination in India as well as in England.

Lieut.-Colonel H. A. J. Gidney: Thank you. I therefore wish to move an amendment to the original Resolution to the effect that the examination be held simultaneously in England and in India, and I am glad my Honourable friend has accepted it.

Mr. B. Das (Orissa Division: Non-Muhammadan): Is the Honourable Member speaking as representative of the European Group or representative of Anglo-Indians? I should like to have that made clear.

Dr. A. Suhrawardy (Burdwan and Presidency Divisions: Muhammadan Rural): He is speaking as Colonel Gidney.

Lieut.-Colonel H. A. J. Gidney: My Honourable friend, Mr. Das, has no reason to question me. I am not speaking as an Oorya.

Mr. M. R. Jayakar: May I know from my Honourable friend whether he has any hopes of such an amended Resolution being accepted by the Government of India? If so, I will agree; if not, I will push forward my own Resolution.

Lieut.-Colonel H. A. J. Gidney: I am not in the confidence of the Government of India. But I believe the European Group would support the Resolution if it contained a provision for simultaneous examination.

Mr. M. R. Jayakar: May I mention to my Honourable friend that, if I have the assurance from Honourable Members of the European Group that they will support the Resolution, I will accept it in the amended form rather than risk losing the entire Resolution.

Sir Darcy Lindsay (Bengal: European): I have not consulted all the Members of the Group, but from the indications given to me, the Resolution in its amended form will receive our support.

An Honourable Member: How many?

Lieut.-Colonel H. A. J. Gidney: Not many; but it is nevertheless a fact.

An Honourable Member: One swallow does not make a Summer.

Lieut.-Colonel H. A. J. Gidney: I know that, nor does one swallow quench a thirst. The Honourable the Mover of the Resolution also stated that the standard of officers who enter the I. M. S. today is not of a good quality. I am, in a way, inclined to agree with him. Speaking as I can as a retired Member of the I. M. S., one who had to stand a competitive examination in England, having obtained my education in this country, I can state, without any fear or hesitation, that the standard of officers who enter the I. M. S. today is certainly not the same as in the days when a competitive examination was the only door of entrance into this great service. I go further and state that this, in turn, has its effect on the quality of our graduates who are not adequately trained. It was in 1922, Sir, that I presented to this House a Resolution which I called, for want of a better term my Medical Swaraj Resolution, which asked that the medical institutions in this country be examined by a proper Committee with a view to elevating their standard of teaching and training and so enabling India to supply all her medical needs. That Resolution was thrown out by this House. I am however, glad to see that Mr. Jayakar has now come forward practically to substantiate my Resolution in as much that India should supply all her medical needs from top to bottom, and I again repeat this can only be done if we have efficient professors to train and supply a good standard of men entering the I. M. S. Now the question is, in view of the inferior class of men who have entered the I. M. S. since nomination has replaced competition, will you improve or reduce the quality and standard of the I. M. S. by having a competitive examination in this country? I view this question with some considerable anxiety and concern because I believe I am more familiar than the Honourable Mover is with the standard of medical education received at certain Universities in this country. The fault does not lie so much with the students, but with the class of professors; and this brings me to my original observation that the type of officers who have come out within the past decade and are coming out into the I. M. S. today is certainly not of that standard to maintain the past high level of the I. M. S. The really first class men in England refuse to come out today among other reasons, because of the uncertainty of tenure of service, with the result that a poor class of men are coming out today, men who will be our professors of tomorrow. I felt almost inclined to say that with some exceptions only third and fourth-rate men are coming out. The I. M. S. today, especially if graduates with Indian degrees are to be accepted, wants only the best and India's first-rate is better than the third and fourth-rate from England. Therefore, I submit that we have to move very cautiously in this matter, because if you recruit an inferior class of officers, men who will in time be appointed as professors to our Colleges, you must have a poor type of graduate. What I maintain is that, if this Resolution is passed we should demand that our Colleges and Universities be elevated to such a standard as to maintain the high standard of the I. M. S. and also to supply all our medical needs.

The Honourable Mover has quoted certain figures which showed that Indians do not have a chance of getting into the Indian Medical Service but the Honourable Secretary to the Army Department has certainly shown figures that disprove the accuracy of the Honourable Mover's statement, especially within recent years. I do not know if the Honourable Army Member referred to the 1929 figures when, I believe 23 or 24

Indian candidates entered the Indian Medical Service from India. I am not sure of my figures, but the Honourable Member will correct me if I am wrong.

Mr. G. M. Young: I gave the figures for 1925—29 inclusive. They are 86 Europeans and 47 Indians. The figures for 1929 are 24 Europeans and 13 Indians.

Lieut.-Colonel H. A. J. Gidney: That goes to prove that Government are certainly anxious to increase the recruitment of Indians in the Indian Medical Service. Sir, this is the last Department of the Government of India in which racial or communal discrimination should be allowed or tolerated, and I maintain that India should be encouraged to recruit all her medical needs from her own country, not all at once but more liberally than at present and the only way in which this can be accomplished is by holding a competitive examination for the I. M. S. in India only. But at the present time India is certainly not prepared for such a radical change because, with the present inadequate training that is given in certain Universities, I would prefer to go slower, and I therefore recommend simultaneous examinations and I am glad the Honourable the Mover has accepted my amendment that these should be held simultaneously in England and India on an acceptable percentage.

Mr. President: What is the Honourable Member's amendment? It is no use saying the Honourable the Mover has accepted his amendment. I have not been any amendment yet.

Lieut.-Colonel H. A. J. Gidney: I will move an amendment to the Honourable Member's Resolution now.

Mr. President: Will the Honourable Member give me a copy of his amendment?

Lieut.-Colonel H. A. J. Gidney: I have not sent you any written amendment but if you will permit me I will give it from my seat which is this, "That simultaneous examinations be held in England and India and not exclusively in India".

Mr. President: Will the Honourable Leader of the European Group move the amendment in proper form?

Sir Darcy Lindsay: I am having it drafted at the moment.

Mr. President: Then the Honourable Member has already exceeded his time limit.

Sir Frank Noyce (Secretary, Department of Education, Health and Lands): Sir, I do not wish to traverse the ground which has been fully covered by the Army Secretary. My only reason for intervention in this debate is that I should like to say a few words with reference to the question raised by the Honourable Mover's Resolution in regard to medical qualifications registrable in India. I am very glad indeed that both the Army Secretary and Colonel Gidney have emphasised the fact that there is no hardship involved at present in this respect, that the humiliation to which the Honourable Mover referred of a candidate for the Indian Medical Service having to go to England to secure a degree in that country before he is admitted to the service does not exist, and that candidates with Indian degrees have been admitted to the service. The only stipulation is that their degrees should be those of Universities which are recognised by the General Medical Council. That brings me to the point on which the Honourable Mover laid much emphasis. I should like again to reaffirm the position of the Government of India in that respect and to explain how matters now stand. The position of the Government of India is that they are as anxious that India should possess Dominion Status in this respect as is the Honourable Mover of the Resolution. It is their desire to see a statutory Medical Council established, the position of which in relation to the General Medical Council will be exactly the same as that of the Medical Councils which have been established in Australia, New Zealand and Canada. They hope shortly to be in a position to place before this House their proposals in that respect. The Bill which was originally circulated for opinion has to be redrafted in some respects. That will be undertaken at the earliest available opportunity, and we trust that, before long, the House will have an opportunity of expressing its views on this subject.

There is one point to which I should like to refer. I am not sure that there is not an impression in some quarters that the I. M. S. is in a favoured position as regards such registration as now exists by the provincial Medical Councils. I can assure the House that that is not the case and that in all provinces which have Medical Councils and in which there is compulsory registration, I. M. S. officers have to be registered on exactly the same terms as other practitioners. That I need hardly assure the House would be the case when we have an all-India Medical Council, certainly on the civil side.

That, Sir, I think disposes of the latter part of the Resolution. I can only once again emphasise that we will do our best to expedite the submission to the House of a Bill establishing an all-India Medical Council for India which will, I trust, meet with the approval not only of this House but also meet the views of the General Medical Council which has expressed its desire to be in a position to treat with an all-India Council and to hand over all responsibility in regard to the standards and qualifications necessary to ensure its recognition of Indian Medical degrees.

Sir Darcy Lindsay: Sir, I would like to move the following amendment to the Resolution moved by my Honourable friend, Mr. Jayakar:

"For the words 'at a convenient centre in India' substitute the words, 'and simultaneously in India and in England' and after the words 'entrants to the examination' insert the words 'in India'."

The Resolution would then read:

"This Assembly recommends to the Governor-General in Council that he be pleased to revive the competitive examination for recruitment to the Indian Medical Service, which has been held in abeyance for the last fourteen years, and to hold it annually and simultaneously in India and in England and to make it obligatory for the entrants to the examination in India to hold a medical qualification registrable in India."

Dr. B. S. Moonje: Sir, after listening to the speech of my Honourable friend, Mr. Young, leaving aside the verbiage, I think the only solid ground on which he has based his opposition to the Resolution is that the Secretary of State has fixed 67 per cent. for the Europeans and 93 per cent. for the Indians in the Cadre of the I. M. S. The second point on which he bases his opposition is that, fortunately or unfortunately, British young men do not come forward to join this service, and therefore he thinks that, if open competitive examination is to be held, it cannot be held for the Indians alone, but it must be held for Britishers also, and if it is held for them also, young British doctors will not come forward in sufficient numbers and the recruitment will not therefore be possible. That is the only solid argument on which he has based his opposition to the Resolution of my Honourable friend, Mr. Jayakar. He therefore favours the system of nomination, and in support of that he has stated that nominations are taking place successfully for recruitment of candidates to the R. A. M. C. and other Army medical services. If that is so, and if the cadre of I. M. S., like that of the R. A. M. C. had not been open to Indians, I would not have cared to know whether the recruitment was done by nomination or by open examination. Why we feel that open competitive examination should be revived is because we think that Indians also should have the chance to be recruited on equal terms with the Britishers.

Now as for the system of nomination, does Mr. Young mean to say that we have not suffered under the system of nomination? The figures that I have got with me show that, from 1910 to 1915, as long as there was open competitive examination, we secured on the average for these six years about 29·8 per cent. places in the Indian Medical Service, and after the open competition was closed and the system of nomination was instituted, say from 1923 to 1928, we secured only 18 per cent. places on the average for these six years. Under the open competitive examination we were fortunate enough to get 29 per cent. of the places, whereas under the system of nomination we got only 18 per cent. It is for this reason, and because we have suffered under the system of nomination, that we have come forward with this Resolution. It does not matter to us what takes place in England, whether the British people want to come or do not want to come forward for recruitment. What we say is that, under the system of open competitive examination, we were faring better and under the system of nomination we have suffered a good deal. Therefore the statement made that, under the system of nomination, no hardship has been created to the Indians, is not correct.

I do not know whether the Honourable Member, Mr. Young, is aware why the British boys are not coming forward for recruitment. Is it a fact, as we have heard, that some of the retired medical officers go about and create an agitation, saying that the prospects of the service are not good and that therefore the British boys should not come forward for recruitment? That is our information, and we want to know if it is a fact. If it is a fact, is it right that these retired officers should go and create agitation and then come forward to us asking for improvement in the pay and prospects of this Service? I should expect an explanation on that point. Also my information is that British people are taken on short commissions and after they have finished their term of short service, they are allowed to retire on a system of ample gratuity, whereas that system of gratuity is not applicable to the temporary appointments of the Indians. That is also a point on which I should like to have an explanation, whether that information is correct or not.

It is also stated as a reason in support of the system of nomination that if the system of open competitive examination is held in India, it will be unfair to those Indian boys who go to England. Taking into consideration the few Indian boys who go to England and the large number of Indians who are in India, would it be right to say that it will be unfair to those

[Dr. B. S. Moonje.]

Indian boys who go to England? To them recruitment is open in India, and instead of going to England they can have the chance of appearing at the competitive examination in India itself, and after having been thus recruited they can take study leave and go to England for higher examinations. One of the points made by Mr. Young is that these Indian Officers who are holding temporary posts should not be made to appear for the examination. I quite agree. But why are these temporary posts kept so long? If they are found necessary for the efficient working of the Department, they ought to have been made permanent long ago. If they are not found necessary and efficient, they ought to have been asked to go out long ago, giving them the alternative of retiring on the same system of gratuity which applies to the Britishers on short commissions. Under these circumstances, I should like to have an explanation on all these points before we shall be able to understand whether the opposition of Mr. Young to my friend's Resolution is on a sound basis. With these words I support the Resolution.

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru (Agra Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, the Resolution of my Honourable friend, Mr. Jayakar, asks for reversion to the old system of competitive examinations. Now the essence of a competitive examination is that it should be open, as the examination for the Indian Medical Service was before the war. If, therefore, the original Resolution or the amended Resolution is to be beneficial to the people of India, it can be so only in so far as the limit imposed on the recruitment of Indians by the Secretary of State is removed. My Honourable friend, Mr. Young, grasped this point and tried to make out that, although the Secretary of State had not removed this arbitrary limit, he had nevertheless done a great thing by agreeing that Indian recruitment in any one year should not wait upon European recruitment during that year. This change in the rule may enable the Government of India to appoint Indians more rapidly than they might otherwise have been able to do, but the Indian proportion in the Service as a whole cannot undergo any increase because of the new orders issued by the Secretary of State for India. Obviously, then, Sir, the most important point for us to consider is whether there is any justification for the limit of 33 per cent. imposed on Indian recruitment by the higher authorities.

My Honourable friend, Mr. Young, gave two reasons in support of the present position. One was that it is necessary to have a war reserve, which can be employed most economically in the civil medical departments of the Government of India, and under the various provinces. The other was that European medical officers were needed in order to treat European officers of Government and their families. I will take both these arguments in the order in which I have placed them before the House. We have been hearing for a long time, Sir, of the necessity, in the interests of economy, of employing the war reserve of the Indian Medical Service in the civil medical departments. It may be necessary, Sir, in the present circumstances to maintain a war reserve in the Indian Medical Service, but my Honourable friend Mr. Young has not used a single argument to show that this war reserve should consist of Europeans and Indians in certain proportions. You may have a war reserve and yet may widen the opportunities for the employment of Indians. It was only, Sir, in September last that we came to know that, in the war reserve of the Indian Medical Service, it was necessary to maintain a certain proportion of Europeans. My Honourable friend, Mr. Young, in replying to a question of Mr. Haji on the 17th September 1928 said that the present proportion had been fixed partly in order "to allow for the reserve of British officers required by the Army in war". I followed up Mr. Haji's question with several supplementary questions, in reply to which my Honourable friend Mr. Young elucidated the position further. He said the war reserve of British officers in the Indian Medical Service provides a reserve for the Royal Army Medical Corps. When I asked in a later supplementary question whether the principle of having only European officers to treat British soldiers during the war had been accepted by the Secretary of State for India and the Government of India, he replied:

"I am not aware that the question has ever been raised: it is an assumption rather. British troops are at present looked after by British medical officers, and it is naturally assumed that in time of war the reserve also should be British."

India owes many advantages to the presence of British soldiers in this country. One is that the existence of a British army in this country is supposed to be a serious impediment to a demand for self-government by India. The other luxury enjoyed by India on account of the presence of British troops, Sir, is this: it has to pay almost five times as much for a European soldier as it has to pay for an Indian soldier. Now, Sir, we see that the superior appointments in the Indian Medical Service are not all open to Indians because some of the I. M. S. officers are required for the needs of the British soldiers. The retention, Sir, of British soldiers in this country is bad enough, but to make either the organisation or the officering of the Indian Medical Service in any way dependent on what is supposed to be in the interests of European soldiers is worse. During a war, Sir, conditions are exceptional; nobody gets then what he has been used to in the normal course of his life. Well, if all those who have to do anything with war have to accept the exceptional circumstances in which they are placed, why should the British soldier also not accept those circumstances? Even if the principle enunciated by my Honourable friend Mr. Young were sound, why should the British soldier be the only person, during a war, who must expect all the arrangements followed during a time of peace to be strictly adhered to during a time of war.

I will now, Sir, deal with the second argument referred to by my Honourable friend Mr. Young, namely, that it is necessary for the treatment of European officers and their families that there should be a certain proportion of European medical officers in the medical services of the country. I am not sure, Sir, that before the year 1913, in spite of the orders issued by Lord Morley in 1908 for the restriction of the cadre of the Indian Medical Service, the question of having European medical officers only to attend on British officers and their families had acquired any prominence. Although, Sir, I have been following this question for a long time, I do not remember any serious controversy on this subject or serious representations having been made about it. It was left, Sir, to the Government of India themselves, taking perhaps some sporadic and eccentric complaints which might have reached them, to propose seriously that the contentions put forward by a few people merited the consideration of the highest authorities. The Public Service Commission, Sir, took evidence regarding the medical services in 1913, but the Government of India, writing on the 17th November, 1910, that is, almost three years earlier, to the Secretary of State, with regard to the growth of an independent medical profession in this country, and to Lord Morley's orders that the cadre of the Indian Medical Service should in no case be increased, and that endeavours should be made to reduce it, said:

"There is, however, a very decided and sharp line which indicates the limit of employment of these men (that is Indians) in the posts referred to, and that is the obligation which rests on the Government to provide medical aid to their European officers in the various services. Although it is nowhere laid down that European officers are entitled to attendance by European medical officers, it is perfectly natural that they should wish to be treated by such officers, just as it is natural that persons of other nationalities should wish to be treated by medical men of their own race. This is a matter of special importance in a country like India where Europeans are living under what are climatically very trying conditions. Still more important is it that European officers should know that they can, without unreasonable expense, procure the services of European medical officers for their families. Anything which would spread a belief that the Government were careless of the interests of their European officers in this respect would, we are convinced, have a very adverse effect upon the recruitment of the European services in this country. Nothing ought to be done therefore which would lead to such a reduction of European Civil Surgeons as would have the disastrous result referred to."

And what is the disastrous result that might have been the consequence of an increase in the proportion of Indians in the Indian Medical Service? It would have been that the European officers, rightly or wrongly believing that they were entitled to being treated by European officers, would have been dissatisfied. In private life, Sir, we know that Europeans do not select their medical officers on racial grounds. Anybody who lives in this country and who knows Europeans at all can say from his own experience that medical officers and lawyers and other technical men are chosen on the ground of their qualifications and not of their race. But when the Government of India and the responsible authorities go out of their way to buttress the irrational prejudices of a few people, can it be wondered that the members of the various services are taking advantage of this position, and insisting on the employment of Europeans, as it would lead to a reservation of a certain number of posts for their own countrymen? I do not think, Sir, therefore that the arguments used by Mr. Young in favour of the retention of the present proportion of Indians in the Indian Medical Service are at all sound. I can understand the need for maintaining a war reserve in the I. M. S. But the maintenance of the war reserve does not necessitate the employment of Europeans in such large numbers as at present.

My Honourable friend, Mr. Young, perhaps realised that his position was not a very strong one and therefore tried to make out that, whatever we might say on theoretical grounds against the proportion which had been fixed, Indians were faring much better at present than they did during the days when competitive examinations were in force. Now, Sir, according to the figures given by the Public Service Commission of 1912, at page 251 of their Report, it appears that in 1913, 33 per cent. of the successful candidates were Indians; and in 1914, it was 40 per cent. If we take the figures of recruitment for the years 1921 to 1929, we find that barely 33 per cent. of the recruits were Indians. Now, one of the main grounds for the attack on Indian officers by the European medical officers before the Islington Commission was the large increase in the percentage of successful Indian candidates in the competitive examinations in England. It was obviously thought that forty per cent. was not going to be the limit of successful Indian candidates. It was expected that their percentage would increase. In view of this fact, can the Government of India congratulate themselves by pointing out to us that, during the last nine years, the recruitment that they have maintained has enabled Indians to get 33 per cent. of the posts? Mr. Young said "But the suspension of the competitive examination is not peculiar to the I. M. S. We have the same thing in regard to the R. A. M. C. and other medical services in England". If, Sir, in England a sufficient number of English young men are not forthcoming for service in their own country, that may be a very good reason for the abandonment of the competitive examination and its supersession by some other method of recruitment. But in India, Indians have a prior claim to appointment in the service of their own country. If Europeans are not willing to come forward to serve India, that is not our responsibility. Indian youths cannot be told that they cannot be employed in larger numbers in the service of their country because there is not a sufficiency of European candidates for the posts for which they are competing.

Just one word more, Sir, and I have done. My Honourable friend, Mr. Young, urged one last point to convince the House that the present method, after all, resulted in no unfairness to Indians. He dwelt on the high standard of medical education in England and pointed out that it would be rather hard on an Indian candidate who had proceeded to England at his own expense that he should come back to his own country to compete in the I. M. S. examination. Now, Sir, in the first place, the amendment proposed by my Honourable friend, Sir Darcy Lindsay, meets that objection. But does not the present system itself as a rule require Indians to come back to this country before they can be selected for employment in the I. M. S.? I brought a particularly bad case in this respect to the notice of the Army Secretary some time ago. An Indian with good medical qualifications applied for admission to the I. M. S. in England; he appeared before the Medical Board there, but after an examination by the Medical Board he was told that he should come to India and present himself before the Selection Board here. He was chosen by the Selection Board, but I believe, a year after his appointment, the India Office intimated that his appointment could not be sanctioned as the Medical Board in England, before whom he had appeared originally, regarded him as unfit for holding a post in the Indian Medical Service. My Honourable friend, Mr. Young, tried to have justice done to this particular young man but failed. Even, therefore, if the Resolution of Mr. Jayakar stands in the form in which it has been proposed, it is not for Mr. Young to object to it on the ground that it would require Indian medical students to come back to India before they could take part in the competitive examinations for the I. M. S.

I hope, Sir, that the institution of simultaneous examinations will amount to a judgment on the part of this House that the present racial proportions should be done away with. After all, Sir, if the declaration made by His Excellency the Viceroy about three months ago is to be carried out, Government must be prepared for a speedy abrogation of all those rules and regulations which limit the employment of Indians and which deprive them of opportunities of service in their own country. The Government of India have, in connection with one department, an excellent opportunity of showing a change in their angle of vision, and I earnestly hope that they will grasp it.

Mr. President: Does the Army Secretary wish to say anything in regard to the amendment?

Mr. G. M. Young: Yes, Sir; with your permission I should like to say a few words. With regard to the amendment proposing the substitution of simultaneous competitive examinations in England and India for the original proposal of a single competitive examination in India, I have only to say two things. One is that it will alter the existing ratio of British and Indian recruitment; as my Honourable friend Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru has just pointed out. It would be impossible for us therefore to accept either the original Resolution, or the amended Resolution, without further consideration and without waiting a little longer. As I said in my first speech, it is not impossible that altered circumstances may bring about an alteration in that ratio; but as far as that aspect of the question is concerned, I am afraid that the Government must hold that the Resolution is at the moment premature.

The other difficulty about the amendment was brought out very prominently in the debate on Dr. Lohokare's Resolution in 1925. It is the practical difficulty of holding simultaneous examinations in England and in India for recruitment to the Indian Medical Service. I am not sufficiently an expert to say, Sir, that the difficulties are insuperable, and I can promise the House that the suggestion will be very carefully examined and that the Government of India will forward it with their comments to the Secretary of State. But it is not possible for us, as I said, without further consideration, to accept the proposal.

Mr. Fazal Ibrahim Rahimtulla (Bombay Central Division: Muhammadan Rural): Are 14 years not enough for Government to consider the question?

An Honourable Member: No, raise it to 16.

Mr. President: The original Resolution was:

"This Assembly recommends to the Governor General in Council that he be pleased to revive the competitive examination"

Does the Honourable Member (turning to Mr. Jayakar) wish to say anything?

Mr. M. R. Jayakar: No, Sir.

Mr. President: The original Resolution was:

"This Assembly recommends to the Governor General in Council that he be pleased to revive the competitive examination for recruitment to the Indian Medical Service, which has been held in abeyance for the last fourteen years, and to hold it annually at a convenient centre in India and to make it obligatory for the entrants to the examination to hold a medical qualification registrable in India",—

Since which the following amendment has been moved:

"For the words 'at a convenient centre in India' substitute the words 'and simultaneously in India and in England' and after the words 'entrants to the examination,' insert the words 'in India'."

The question is that that amendment be made.

The motion was adopted.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That the Resolution, as amended, be passed."

The motion was adopted.

The Assembly then adjourned till Eleven of the Clock on Wednesday, the 29th January, 1930.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

Wednesday, 29th January, 1930.

The Assembly met in the Assembly Chamber of the Council House at Eleven of the Clock, Mr. President in the Chair.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

COST OF UNDERFRAMES AT THE TATANAGAR WORKSHOPS.

153. Sir Darcy Lindsay: (a) With reference to the replies given to my starred question No. 1310 of the 28th March, 1929, and the further reply by letter of the 10th November, 1929, will Government confirm that the total capital cost of the Tatanagar Workshops, East Indian Railway amounts to Rs. 38,93,771 after crediting Rs. 2,66,574 for plant and machinery transferred or sold?

(b) Estimating an annual output of 550 underframes representing approximately Rs. 46,00,000 value, and for which it was stated the Works have been laid out, what amount of working capital will be necessary to finance this manufacture? Would 50 per cent. of the selling price be considered an unreasonably high figure? Is it proposed to debit interest thereon when arriving at overhead charges?

(c) What were the rates of recent tenders received for coaching underframes including those from the Tatanagar Workshops?

(d) Has the experience of recent tenders continued to show that the lowest tender remains at approximately Rs. 745 above the actual cost of underframes manufactured at these works?

(e) How many underframes have been completed at the Tatanagar Workshops during the year 1929 and at what average cost?

(f) On the assumption of an annual output of 550 underframes and the overhead charges to be as stated slightly over 8 per cent. of actual works cost, what would be the percentage of cost on half such output and how are the details arrived at showing interest on capital at charge, interest on working capital, percentage of depreciation and headquarter supervision? What would this represent per underframe and percentage on sale value taking same at Rs. 8,500?

(g) Is there any truth in the rumour that Government contemplate disposing of the Tatanagar Workshops and if so, will full opportunity be given to firms and companies in India to consider the position?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: (a) The figure of Rs. 38,93,771, mentioned by the Honourable Member, includes Rs. 3,84,000, which is an estimate of further expenditure on works now nearing completion. I should explain, however, first that there is an item of Rs. 42,916 representing expenditure in connection with the purchase which, though not included in the purchase price, should, I think, be included in the total capital cost of the Works; and secondly, that in addition to the credit of Rs. 2,66,574, a sum of Rs. 5,26,167 was written back to revenue on the completion of the purchase, after Government had satisfied themselves by a detailed examination of the plant and machinery taken over, that this amount was certainly not less than the difference between the purchase price paid for the Peninsular Locomotive Company's Works, and the value of the property at the time it was purchased. For if the Works had been burdened with a sum which, in effect, represented compensation to the Peninsular Locomotive Company, it would have been impossible to show the real cost of manufacturing underframes.

(b) The amount which should be taken as working capital cannot be determined exactly until the end of March, 1930, when the Works will have been manufacturing for their first complete year. Meanwhile, as the Honourable Member will see from the statements I am laying on the table, an approximate figure has been taken in calculating works on cost.

(c) and (d). The firms quoted nine different rates for broad gauge coaching underframes, as minor modifications were required for different railways. I have selected representative quotations for underframes without additions or modifications, and lay on the table a statement giving the information required by the Honourable Member. He will find two columns dealing with the Tatanagar Workshops. First, the original estimate which was submitted by the shops as a quotation and was considerably above the most recent cost prices—this was not accepted by the Railway Board; and second the actual cost of underframes recently constructed.

(e) 366 broad gauge bogie underframes were completed up to the 31st December, 1929, and it is expected that 85 more broad gauge bogie underframes, 159 broad gauge four-wheeled underframes and 66 metre-gauge bogie underframes will be completed by the 31st March, 1930. It will not be possible to give figures of average cost until the year has closed.

(f) On the same basis as previously adopted, the percentage of cost, if the output were halved, would be a little over 12½ per cent. I lay on the table a statement showing the details of these calculations. The figure per underframe is Rs. 970, compared with Rs. 555, the percentage on a sale value of Rs. 8,500 would be 8·8 compared with 6·5.

(g) The answer to the first part of the question is in the negative and the second part does not arise.

ORDERS FOR RAILWAY BRIDGE SPANS.

154. *Sir Darcy Lindsay: (a) To what extent do the Railway Board exercise control in acceptance of tenders for railway bridge spans in the case of other than State-owned railways, but in which the Government of India have interests?

(b) What orders exceeding Rs. 1,00,000 for railway bridge spans were placed out of India by Company-worked railways, in which Government have interests during the year 1928-29, and by how much was their landed in India cost lower than locally tendered prices?

(c) What similar orders have been placed abroad up to date in the current year 1929-30 and by how much was their estimated landed in India cost lower than locally tendered prices?

(d) Were the contracts placed out of India during 1928-29 completed in each case by the delivery dates stated in the contract, and if not, how much delay occurred, and were penalties inflicted according to the terms of contract?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: (a) The Railway Board do not exercise control on the placing of orders. Under the terms of the contracts, the decision rests with the Boards of Company-managed railways, or their Agents.

RAILWAY SLEEPERS.

155. *Sir Darcy Lindsay: (a) With reference to the questions commencing with starred question No. 355 asked by Pandit Nilakantha Das on the 11th September, 1929, will Government state the present policy of the Railway Board and Railway Administrations in which Government have a voice in regard to sleeper supplies and more particularly as to wooden and iron sleepers?

(b) Are Government aware that, owing to the recent falling off in the railway demand for wooden sleepers, there is a grave danger of an important and valuable local industry having to close down, particularly in places supplying the Eastern Group where, to meet the heavy overheads, a steady demand of sufficient volume is essential?

(c) Are Government aware that the industry gives employment to a large volume of labour in a part of the country where employment is difficult to find and that the closing down of the industry is likely to inflict great hardship on a poor class of people who have no other means of livelihood?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: (a) The policy of the Railway Board was explained in this House in a speech which I made on February 27th, 1929. Briefly, the Board consider that the interests of the railways are best served by keeping all the three industries in competition.

(b) Government are aware that the reduced demands of sleepers, due to the slowing down of the programme of new construction and to other causes, is affecting the operations of firms dealing in wooden sleepers, but this also applies to the steel and cast-iron industries.

(c) Much of the labour in connection with the wooden sleeper industry is, Government believe, imported, but undoubtedly the local inhabitants are also affected, particularly in respect of transport operations. Government regret that this should be the effect of a reduction in the demand for sleepers, but it is unavoidable, for it is impossible to place orders for more sleepers than are actually required. It is also believed that the local labour referred to by the Honourable Member has in the past been in the habit of migrating to localities where agricultural employment is available.

THE WOODEN SLEEPER INDUSTRY.

156. *Sir Darcy Lindsay: (a) Will Government be pleased to state whether due regard has been had to the importance of the wooden sleeper industry in opening out and developing large tracts of forest areas?

(b) Do Government propose to examine the position again with a view to this indigenous industry being given necessary support in a steady and sufficient volume of orders to insure that the employment of the people will continue?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: (a) Yes. It is with this object in view that the Railway Board have undertaken surveys for the construction of branch lines, when funds are available, in remote areas passing through tracts of forests from which sleepers will be obtained.

(b) The position is constantly under examination by the Railway Board and it is not considered that there is anything to be gained by a special examination of the position, at any rate until the demand for sleepers increases. The volume of orders must be governed by the funds available.

ROYALTIES PAYABLE ON SAL SLEEPERS.

157. Sir Darcy Lindsay: What royalties are payable to the Forest Department and Indian States on sal sleepers by suppliers to the Eastern Group?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: The royalties vary and are governed by local circumstances, such as the expense of getting sawyers to the leased forest and the cost of transporting the sleepers to railhead. The amount of royalty charged is a matter of private negotiation between the owner of the forest and the sleeper supplier. The information asked for is not available and would be difficult to collect, as suppliers to the Eastern Group carry on operations in Bengal, Assam, the Central Provinces, Bihar and Orissa and several Feudatory States.

Sir Darcy Lindsay: Is it a fact that in some cases as much as Rs. 3 per sleeper is charged as royalty?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: The Railway Board have no information for that is a matter of private negotiation between the suppliers of the sleepers and the owners of the forests.

COMPARATIVE COST OF IRON AND WOODEN SLEEPERS.

158. Sir Darcy Lindsay: (a) For what period have iron sleepers been in general use in India, and on what basis is a probable life of 50 years arrived at?

(b) Is the maintenance cost of iron sleepers on an increasing scale and if so, how does it compare with the maintenance cost of wooden sleepers?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: (a) Iron sleepers have been in general use in India for over 50 years.

The life of 50 years is based on actual experience of railways.

(b) I take the first part of the Honourable Member's question to mean whether, other things being equal, it costs more to maintain a cast-iron sleeper as its age increases. If so, the answer is in the negative. The cost of maintaining cast-iron or wooden sleepers may be taken to be identical.

Mr. E. F. Sykes: Is it not a fact that the maintenance cost depends rather on the nature of the bank than the nature of the sleeper?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: That is generally so, Sir.

SLEEPERS USED FOR THE RAIPUR-VIZIANAGRAM RAILWAY.

159. Sir Darcy Lindsay: (a) Is it a fact that the Raipur-Vizianagram Railway extension now under construction passes through sal forests?

(b) If the answer to part (a) is in the affirmative, were special tenders invited for delivery of sal sleepers at site and how does the rate compare with the steel or iron sleeper delivered at site?

(c) Why was it decided to use steel sleepers in the Raipur-Vizianagram Railway construction? Is it not generally recognised by engineers that new lines should be laid with wooden sleepers?

(d) Has the officer-in-charge issued any report as to the suitability or otherwise of the steel sleepers imported from the continent for this new construction?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: (a) Yes.

(b) No special tenders were invited for delivery of sal sleepers at site, as general tenders were called for sal sleepers throughout the area which includes this site.

The rates of tenders for sal sleepers in the whole area were:

Last sleeper year		Rs. 8 per sleeper
This sleeper year		Rs. 7-8-0 per sleeper

a very few sleepers being offered at Rs. 7/7-

Steel sleepers at site cost from Rs. 10 to Rs. 11 and are a better financial proposition than sal at Rs. 7/8.

(c) Engineers consider the steel sleeper is very nearly as suitable as the wooden sleeper for new lines, except in places where bad soil is met with.

(d) The Chief Engineer, Bengal Nagpur Railway, definitely considers steel sleepers suitable for this new construction.

REPLACEMENT OF SAL SLEEPERS ON THE BENGAL NAGPUR RAILWAY.

160. Sir Darcy Lindsay: (a) Will Government state the particular reasons for replacement of a large quantity of sound sal sleepers (believed to be over three lakhs) by steel sleepers on the Kharagpur-Waltair and Jarsaguda Bilaspur sections of the Bengal Nagpur Railway?

(b) At what cost were the sleepers replaced, and is it the intention to utilise these sound sleepers on other sections of the Railway, thereby reducing the volume of fresh purchases?

(c) Is it the intention of the Administration similarly to replace sound sal sleepers on the Jarsaguda-Nagpur section of the Bengal Nagpur Railway and if so at what cost?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: (a) The Kharagpur-Waltair and Jarsaguda-Bilaspur sections of the Bengal Nagpur Railway are being re-sleepered in conformity with a track strengthening programme which has been in progress during the last three years. Some 5½ lakhs of wooden sleepers are being replaced, out of which about 1½ lakhs are still in sound condition. The use of mixed steel and wooden sleepers is objectionable from a technical point of view.

(b) The original cost of the sal sleepers was Rs. 9 each, while the new steel sleepers cost from Rs. 10/4 to Rs. 10/12 each, depending on the type of sleeper used. All sound wooden sleepers released have been or will be used to replace unsound sleepers in other sections of the line.

(c) The strengthening programme referred to does not extend to the section Bilaspur to Nagpur.

Mr. B. Das: Is the Honourable Member aware that the relaying of the Kharagpur-Waltair section has considerably improved the permanent way and there is no more jolting on the Bengal Nagpur Railway in that section?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: I am very glad to know from the Honourable Member that one of the objects for which we started this relaying has been achieved.

RESOLUTION PASSED BY THE EAST AFRICAN NATIONAL CONGRESS AT NAIROBI.

161. Mr. B. Das: (a) Have Government seen the resolutions passed at the East African Indian National Congress held in Nairobi on the 6th, 7th, 8th December 1929, under the presidency of Mrs. Sorojini Naidu and as was published in the Democrat of Nairobi of the 7th December and reproduced in the Hindu of Madras of the 7th January 1930?

(b) Will Government be pleased to make a general statement as to action, if any, taken by them on the subject-matter of these resolutions so far?

Sir Frank Noyce: (a) Yes.

(b) The Congress appears to have passed no less than 26 resolutions on a variety of subjects, and I fear that a statement covering all of them would take up a period of time not altogether commensurate with the interest or importance of many of the subjects. If the Honourable Member will be good enough to specify the resolutions regarding which he wants information, I shall endeavour to comply with his request as far as may be possible.

STATUS OF INDIANS IN TANGANYIKA.

162. Mr. B. Das: With reference to the following resolution on Tanganyika, passed in December, 1929, at the East African Indian National Congress at Nairobi, will Government be pleased to state if the Honourable Sir Muhammad Habibullah, while he led the Indian delegation to the last session of the League of Nations at Geneva, did make any statement in the matter or did demand the guarantee of equality of status for Indians in Tanganyika? If so, will Government be pleased to make a statement on the representation made by Sir Muhammad Habibullah at Geneva?

"Whereas the mandate guarantees equality of status to all people inhabiting the Tanganyika Territory and whereas federation or closer union in any form is bound to prejudicially affect the autonomy of Tanganyika in particular the status of Indians, this Congress is strongly opposed to the inclusion of Tanganyika in any scheme of federation or closer union."

Sir Frank Noyce: The answer to the first part of the question is in the negative. The second part does not, therefore, arise.

APPOINTMENT OF A TRADE COMMISSIONER IN EAST AFRICA.

163. Mr. B. Das: (a) With reference to the following resolution on the appointment of a Trade Commissioner in East Africa, passed at Nairobi in December 1929, by the East African Indian National Congress, will Government be pleased to state the reasons for the delay of that appointment?

"This Congress regrets the delay on the part of the Government of India in regard to the appointment of a Trade Commissioner in East Africa, and urges that the appointment of a non-official Indian as Trade Commissioner be expedited."

(b) What were the recommendations of the Meek Committee regarding the opening up of a Trade Commissioner's office in East Africa?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: With your permission, Sir, I will answer questions Nos. 163 and 168 together.

As I have already informed the Honourable Member, in reply to his starred question No. 111, on the 21st January, the Trade Mission recommended the appointment of Indian Trade Commissioners at Durban, Mombasa and Alexandria. It is expected that a final decision in the matter will be reached shortly. These proposals form a part of the general scheme for the appointment of Indian Trade Commissioners abroad. The scheme is an important one involving considerable expenditure and its examination in all its aspects has necessarily taken some time.

ASSISTANCE RENDERED TO THE KENYA DEPUTATION TO LONDON.

164. Mr. B. Das: Will Government be pleased to state what assistance was rendered by (a) the Government of India, and (b) the India Office to the Kenya Deputation to London led by Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru, M. L. A. last October?

Sir Frank Noyce: No request for assistance was made by the Honourable Pandit.

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: May I inform the Honourable Member that I did ask for all possible assistance from the Government of India and the Secretary of State for India?

Sir Frank Noyce: I think the Honourable Member got all the assistance he wanted. He is in a better position to say than I am, but I think he received assistance from the India Office and the Secretary of State commensurate with the importance of his mission.

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: May I then ask the Honourable Member to correct his answer? He said I asked for no assistance either from the Government of India or the Secretary of State?

Does the Honourable Member realise that even now the assistance of the Secretary of State for India and the Government of India is needed? (Hear, hear.)

Sir Frank Noyce: Yes, Sir.

DISCUSSION OF THE EAST AFRICAN QUESTION IN THE LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

165. Mr. B. Das: (a) Will Government be pleased to state whether they intend to allot a day in the Assembly for the discussion of (i) Sir Samuel Willson's Report on the East African question, and (ii) the Hilton Young Commission's Report on the same? If so, when?

(b) Will Government be pleased to lay on the table a copy of the full text of the Report that the Right Honourable Srinivasa Sastri made to the Government of India on his visit to East Africa?

(c) Will Government be pleased to lay on the table all relevant correspondence with the Secretary of State for India on the Hilton Young Commission's Report and also Sir Samuel Willson's Report to enable the House to have complete material before the general debate on the East African problem?

Sir Frank Noyce: (a) Ordinarily this matter would have come up for discussion on the Resolution of which Mr. K. C. Roy has given notice. As Mr. Roy's Resolution has not obtained a place in the ballot, Government will find the time on a Government day for the discussion. It is not possible at present to say precisely when the discussion will take place.

(b) The Government of India hope to be able to comply with the Honourable Member's request shortly. The Report will be published simultaneously in England, India and East Africa, and the earliest date on which simultaneous publication could be conveniently arranged is now under discussion.

(c) I have already stated several times that the Government of India cannot consider requests for publication of correspondence until the decision of His Majesty's Government becomes known.

APPOINTMENT OF AN INDIAN TO OFFICIATE FOR SIR K. V. REDDI IN SOUTH AFRICA.

166. Mr. B. Das: (a) Will Government be pleased to state why no Indian was sent to South Africa to officiate during the absence of Sir K. V. Reddi?

(b) How long will Sir K. V. Reddi stay in India? In case his stay in India is prolonged, are Government prepared to send an Indian non-official to officiate for Sir K. V. Reddi?

Sir Frank Noyce: (a) and (b). Sir K. V. Reddi has come to India on short sick leave for medical reasons and Government very much hope that he will be able to return to his post in South Africa before long. In the circumstances, the most convenient and economical course was to appoint the Secretary to the Agent to hold charge of the current duties of the post of Agent. Should Sir Kurma's absence from the Union be unexpectedly prolonged, or reasons of health compel him to decide not to rejoin his appointment, the question of sending out a successor will be taken up, and the Honourable Member may rest assured that his suggestion will be fully considered at the time.

CONSULAR OFFICES.

167. Mr. B. Das: (a) Will Government be pleased to state at what state of negotiation the opening of consular offices at (i) Hamburg, (ii) New York, and (iii) Milan, stands at present?

(b) Will Government be pleased to lay on the table the complete correspondence on the subject between the High Commissioner in London and the Government of India, and will Government be pleased to state the causes of delay over these new offices?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: (a) The Honourable Member presumably refers to the proposal to appoint Trade Commissioners at the places named in the question, and I would refer him to the reply given by me to his starred question No. 110 on the 20th January.

(b) In view of the length of the High Commissioner's letter, Government do not propose to lay a copy of it on the table, but I am sending the Honourable Member a copy for his information. The scheme is an important one, involving considerable expenditure, and its examination in all its aspects has necessarily taken some time.

APPOINTMENT OF INDIAN TRADE COMMISSIONERS IN CERTAIN COUNTRIES.

†168. Mr. B. Das: (a) What are the countries in which the Meek Committee recommended the immediate establishment of Indian Trade Commissioner's offices?

(b) Will Government be pleased to state the reasons for the delay of opening such offices in East Africa, South Africa, Turkey, Russia, China and Japan?

PROVISION OF A GOODS SHED AND PLATFORM AT BURHANPUR RAILWAY STATION.

169. Mr. Abdul Qadir Siddiqi: (a) Is it a fact that the merchants of Burhanpur in the Central Provinces have submitted several representations to the railway authorities complaining of the want of a goods shed and platform sufficient to accommodate the incoming and outgoing traffic at that station?

(b) Is it a fact that at Burhanpur cotton bales, cotton seeds, oil seeds and other articles are always kept on the open platform exposed to the sun and rain and liable to damage by fire?

(c) Is it a fact that this question has been under consideration for several years and that yet no action has been taken to provide an adequate goods shed and platform, as has been done at several other stations?

(d) Will Government be pleased to state why the matter is being delayed and when the necessary goods shed and platform will be constructed?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: (a) Yes.

(b) and (c). The Agent of the Great Indian Peninsula Railway reported last April that facilities for dealing with goods traffic at Burhanpur are now inadequate, and that it has been decided to effect the necessary improvements, at a cost of about Rs. 1,00,000 at an early date.

(d) The delay is due to this work having been at first included in the larger and more expensive scheme for remodelling the station. It is expected that the work will be taken in hand this year.

ARMY CLOTHING FACTORIES.

170. Mr. Abdul Latif Sahib Farookhi: (a) Will Government be pleased to state how long the two clothing factories in Madras and in Shahjahanpur have been in existence?

(b) What is the history of the Shahjahanpur Factory?

(c) When and why did it replace the old Alipur Factory?

(d) What system of manufacture of clothing for the Army in India was followed in the Army Clothing Factory, Madras, till 1914? Has there been any change since then in the method of manufacture? If so, what is the change and who is responsible for it?

(e) What is the advantage gained by Government by the change in the system of manufacture other than financial considerations, if any? Will Government be pleased to furnish a statement of the loss or gain as the case may be derived by the change in the system? If it is a profitable concern, why is it not followed in Shahjahanpur also or fully carried out in the Madras Factory?

(f) Is it the policy of Government to endeavour to convert the Army Clothing Factory, Madras, into a "Contract Depot" and to strengthen and convert the experimental factory at Shahjahanpur into a modern factory and can this be done only at great expense to the State? What is the object underlying this policy?

(g) Why is not one uniform system of manufacture followed in the Clothing Factories at Madras and Shahjahanpur as it was before 1914?

(h) Are Government prepared to consider the desirability of allotting a greater share in the distribution of manufacture quota to the former than the latter?

Mr. G. M. Young: With your permission, Sir, I propose to answer questions Nos. 170, 171 and 172 together.

The information required by the Honourable Member is being compiled and will be communicated to him in due course.

OUTTURN OF ARMY CLOTHING FACTORIES AT MADRAS AND SHAHJAHANPUR.

†171. Mr. Abdul Latif Sahib Farookhi: (a) What is the normal capacity of production of the workshop in peace times and during the Great War for any one year for the Madras Factory Workshop and for the Shahjahanpur Factory respectively and what was the method adopted to increase the output during the War?

(b) What is the highest outturn of production at the Madras and the Shahjahanpur Factories respectively in any one year from 1922 to 1924 and the ratio of cost of establishment to the production in the manufacture of clothing for the Army in India?

(c) How far has Shahjahanpur, as a manufacturing centre, been able to compete with the Madras Clothing Factory in the manufacture of special clothing for the body-guards, and bands of the Viceroy and of the provincial Governors of the three presidencies and for liveries of the Viceroy's household and of the three provincial Government Houses?

(d) How far were the Madras Clothing Factory contractors able to compete in the manufacture of special clothing with the Madras Clothing Factory Workshop?

EXPENDITURE OF ARMY CLOTHING FACTORIES AT MADRAS AND SHAHJAHANPUR.

†172. Mr. Abdul Latif Sahib Farookhi: (a) Will Government be pleased to furnish separate annual financial statements from 1925—1929 for the Madras and Shahjahanpur Factories showing the expenditure for the Madras and Shahjahanpur Factories under the following heads?

- (1) Machinery.
- (2) Furniture, plant, etc.
- (3) Clothing materials and garniture.
- (4) Electricity.
- (5) Stationery.
- (6) Requirements necessary for manufacture other than what is shown in (1), (2), (3) and (5) above.
- (7) European Civil Officers.
- (8) European Military Officers.
- (9) Indian Civil Officers.
- (10) Indian Military Officers and Non-commissioned officers.
- (11) Clerical establishment.
- (12) Mechanics and menial establishment.

(b) (i) Will Government be pleased to furnish separate annual financial statements from 1927—1929 for the Madras and the Shahjahanpur Factories showing the expenditure for production of garments for the Army in India under two main heads, namely workshop and contractors?

(ii) Will Government be pleased to furnish similar statements for the years 1922 and 1924?

BUILDING CONTRACTS IN NEW DELHI.

173. Lala Rang Behari Lal: (a) Will Government be pleased to state if there was any understanding that building and other contracts in connection with the Imperial Capital be not given to contractors who were residents of Delhi?

(b) Will Government be pleased to state if there was an understanding that local Delhi labour be not employed in connection with the Imperial Capital?

(c) If the answer to part (a) be in the affirmative, how long will this understanding continue?

(d) If the reply to part (a) be in the negative, will Government be pleased to state how many contracts, and of what value, were given to the contractors who belong to Delhi?

(e) If the answer to part (d) be in the negative, are Government prepared to take into consideration the claims of the Delhi contractors in future?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: (a) and (b). There are no such understandings.

(c) Does not arise.

(d) A very large number of contracts have gone and do go to residents of Delhi. To provide the information asked for by the Honourable Member would involve a vast amount of work in compiling statistics from the records of 18 years, and the labour would not be commensurate with the benefit derived.

(e) Does not arise.

Mr. B. Das: May I inquire when the Honourable Member wishes to abolish the Delhi Capital department, now that the work is finished?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: There is no Delhi Capital department so far as I am aware.

Mr. B. Das: I mean the Engineering department.

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: The Engineering department, by which I presume the Honourable Member means the staff of the Chief Superintending and Divisional Engineers, cannot be abolished, as the staff will be required for the purpose of maintenance, while there will be a certain amount of construction work also to be done for the Central Government, not only in Delhi but in other areas.

Mr. B. Das: Do I take it that there is no desire to reduce the number of staff that was engaged during the period of construction of this huge Capital?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: The staff is being reduced from year to year and is being adjusted to meet the changing requirements of the situation.

CONTRACTS FOR SUPPLIES TO ARMY CANTEENS.

174. Lala Rang Behari Lal: (a) Will Government be pleased to state whether, after the abolition of the Canteen Board, contracts relating to canteens were given out to contractors?

(b) Will Government be pleased to state whether these contractors have to fulfill certain qualifications regarding experience, etc., and whether these contractors are entitled to sub-let their contracts?

(c) In case the contractors are not entitled to sub-let, will Government be pleased to state whether one contractor can take contracts relating to several units at the same time?

(d) In case the answer to part (c) is in the affirmative, will Government be pleased to state if they have made inquiries that such contractors do not sub-let?

(e) If Government have not made such inquiries, are Government prepared to make such inquiries?

(f) Is it a fact that contractors, by sub-letting, are realising rebates at double the rates at which they are paying to units?

Mr. G. M. Young: (a) Yes.

(b) The answer to the first portion is in the affirmative and to the second in the negative.

(c) Yes.

(d) and (e). The Honourable Member is referred to the reply given on the 20th March, 1929, to part (a) of starred question No. 1166 and to starred question No. 1167.

(f) This part of the question does not arise, as the sub-letting of contracts is not permissible. I may, however, draw the attention of the Honourable Member to the reply given on the 20th March last to part (d) of starred question No. 1166.

CONTRACTS FOR FIREWOOD FOR THE ARMY.

175. Lala Rang Behari Lal: (a) Will Government be pleased to state the rates at which the contracts for the supply of firewood to units have been placed in the United Provinces districts for various stations and in the Delhi Brigade Area?

(b) In case the Delhi Brigade Area rates be higher than the United Provinces districts' rates, will Government be pleased to state the reasons for the contract being placed at the higher rates in the Delhi Brigade Area?

(c) Is it a fact that the market rates for firewood are higher at Delhi, Agra and Muttra than at Meerut, Bareilly, Jhansi and other stations in the United Provinces Districts?

Mr. G. M. Young: With your permission, Sir, I will answer questions Nos. 175 to 179 together.

The information has been called for and will be sent to the Honourable Member in due course.

CONTRACTORS IN THE DELHI BRIGADE AREA.

†176. Lala Rang Behari Lal: Will Government be pleased to state if it is a fact that the names of certain contractors in the Delhi Brigade Area were removed last year from the list of the approved contractors in the Indian Army Service Corps?

CONTRACTS FOR FIREWOOD IN THE DELHI BRIGADE AREA.

†177. Lala Rang Behari Lal: (a) Will Government be pleased to state if, in the Delhi Brigade Area, contracts for the supply of firewood this year were placed at the highest tender while lower tenders were ignored?

(b) If the answer to part (a) be in the affirmative, what are the reasons for this procedure?

(c) Will Government be pleased to state if they are aware of the fact that this procedure was adopted in the interest of a certain contractor to the detriment of Government and the other contractors?

[29TH JAN. 1930.]

SUPPLY OF HIRED TRANSPORT IN THE DELHI BRIGADE AREA.

†178. Lala Rang Behari Lal: (a) Will Government be pleased to state if, during the last ten years, contracts for the supply of hired transport were given on competitive low tender rates in the Delhi Brigade Area for units and for manœuvres?

(b) Will Government be pleased to state if this policy was followed last year?

(c) If the answer to part (b) be in the negative, will Government be pleased to state the reasons for abandoning the previous policy?

(d) Is it a fact that, last year, a condition that the contractors would have no claim for transport for troops going to practice camps and passing through the Delhi Brigade Area was added to the usual form of contract approved by the Government of India?

(e) Is it a fact that, in the Delhi Brigade Area, a tender for hired transport for troops passing through the said Area was called for last year?

(f) Will Government be pleased to state if it is a fact that this tender was issued only to a few contractors and that there was practically no competition, as the tender was not issued to all the contractors?

ISSUE OF TENDERS IN THE DELHI BRIGADE AREA.

†179. Lala Rang Behari Lal: Will Government be pleased to state if they are aware of the fact that in the Delhi Brigade Area tenders are issued in a manner which avoids competition?

PAY OF THE STAFF OF THE AUDIT OFFICE, INDIAN STORES DEPARTMENT.

180. Lala Rang Behari Lal: (a) Will Government be pleased to state if it is a fact that, consequent on the location of the Audit Office, Indian Stores Department, in Delhi, three-fifths of the special pay originally sanctioned for the non-gazetted staff of that office, has been withdrawn with effect from the 1st September, 1929, on the ground that it contained an element of compensatory allowance granted in view of the extra expenditure involved in the move of the office between Simla and Delhi?

(b) If the reply to part (a) be in the affirmative, was it permissible under the Fundamental Rules to sanction special pay to cover compensatory allowance of the nature referred to above?

(c) If not, was any indication whatsoever contained in the terms of appointment offered to the staff that three-fifths or any part of the special pay represented compensatory allowance which might be withdrawn at any time after the cessation of the move?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: With your permission, Sir, I will answer questions Nos. 180 to 186 together.

The Government are obtaining certain information to enable them to reply fully to the Honourable Member's questions. A further answer will be sent to him as soon as possible.

PAY OF THE STAFF OF THE AUDIT OFFICE, INDIAN STORES DEPARTMENT.

†181. Lala Rang Behari Lal: Will Government be pleased to state:

(i) whether compensatory allowance counts for (a) leave salary, and (b) pension;

(ii) whether the full amount of the special pay as originally sanctioned for the Audit Office, Indian Stores Department, counted as emoluments for (a) leave salary and (b) pension;

(iii) whether in the course of about seven years during which this office has been in existence, the staff were informed of the real character of the special pay at any time before the 25th February, 1929, i.e., the date on which Government issued their Finance Department letter No. F./15-IX/R.-11/28?

PAY OF THE STAFF OF THE AUDIT OFFICE, INDIAN STORES DEPARTMENT.

†182. Lala Rang Behari Lal: (a) Will Government be pleased to state if it is a practice in the Offices of the Auditor General and the Accountant General, Central Revenues, to allow a substantial increase in initial pay to the experienced hands recruited from other offices as well as to the new recruits with high academic qualifications?

(b) Is it a fact that, for the sake of efficient working of a newly organised Department, the Audit Officer, Indian Stores Department, recruited young men with high academic qualifications as well as trained hands from various Government offices spread over different provinces in India, some of which are thousands of miles away from Delhi?

(c) Is it a fact that, as there was a "special pay" attached to the posts, no increase in initial pay was given by the Audit Officer either to the experienced men from other offices, or to the fresh recruits with high academic qualifications, and that it was believed by the men concerned that the special pay offered to them was in lieu of such remuneration?

PAY OF THE STAFF OF THE AUDIT OFFICE, INDIAN STORES DEPARTMENT.

†183. Lala Rang Behari Lal: (a) Will Government be pleased to state whether it has not been their recognised policy, approved by the Secretary of State, that no change in rules or revision of pay should so operate as to adversely affect the existing Government servants in the matter of any emoluments counting for the time being towards leave salary and pension?

(b) If so, will Government be pleased to state the reasons why the policy described in part (a) above was not followed in regard to those employees of the Audit Office, Indian Stores Department who joined that office on full special pay before the 25th February, 1929, i.e., the date on which the real character of the special pay is stated to have been revealed to the staff for the first time in the history of the office?

PAY OF THE STAFF OF THE AUDIT OFFICE, INDIAN STORES DEPARTMENT.

†184. Lala Rang Behari Lal: (1) Will Government be pleased to state if it is a fact that the considerations on which special pay is granted are the following:

(a) the specially arduous nature of the duties; or

- (b) a specific addition to the work or responsibility; or
- (c) the unhealthiness of the locality in which the work is performed?
- (2) Will Government be pleased to state:
 - (i) which of the above considerations they had in view when they sanctioned special pay for the non-gazetted staff of the Audit Office, Indian Stores Department;
 - (ii) which of the conditions referred to above changed or ceased to exist so as to justify the withdrawal of three-fifths of the special pay from the 1st September, 1929; and
 - (iii) how the proportion of three-fifths referred to in part (ii) above was determined?

PAY OF THE STAFF OF THE AUDIT OFFICE, INDIAN STORES DEPARTMENT.

†185. Lala Rang Behari Lal: (a) Is it a fact—

- (i) that one of the grounds on which the late Auditor General, Sir Frederic Gauntlett, originally recommended special pay for the non-gazetted staff of the Audit Office, Indian Stores Department, was recorded by that official to be the important and responsible nature of the work performed by the staff, and that the recommendation was accepted by Government; and
- (ii) that the retention, as a tentative measure, of two-fifths only of the special pay was recently recommended by the same official not on the ground that the nature of work is important and responsible, but on the ground that the growth of work is at present spasmodic and abnormal and that this recommendation was also accepted by Government?

(b) If the replies to parts (a) (i) and (ii) be in the affirmative, will Government be pleased to indicate the changes which the nature of work performed by the staff of the Audit Office, Indian Stores Department, has undergone so as to be considered to have lost the importance and responsibility previously ascribed to it and to have subsequently acquired the character of being merely voluminous?

(c) Is it a fact that the late Audit Officer, Indian Stores Department, Mr. P. N. Mukherji, when called upon by the Auditor General to submit his views regarding the continuance of the special pay, not only justified its retention, but also recommended the grant of a compensatory allowance if the move of the office between Simla and Delhi were to continue?

(d) Will Government be pleased to state what special investigations were made before they set aside the recommendations of the late Audit Officer and decided to withdraw three-fifths of the special pay?

PAY OF THE STAFF OF THE AUDIT OFFICE, INDIAN STORES DEPARTMENT.

†186. Lala Rang Behari Lal: (a) Is it a fact that the present Audit Officer, Indian Stores Department, Mr. P. M. Rau, while forwarding memorials from his staff, praying for the continuance of special pay, omitted to make any comments regarding the justification of the special pay, and merely referred, as examples to only a few out of a large number of cases in which hardship was caused by the withdrawal of special pay?

(b) Will Government be pleased to state if there was any object behind the recommendation of Mr. P. M. Rau?

(c) Is it a fact:

- (i) that the proportion which the amount of special pay withdrawn bears to the present pay drawn by the staff of the Audit Office, Indian Stores Department, is, in a very large number of cases more than 40 per cent.;
- (ii) that on the transfer of the headquarters of the Office of the Accountant General, Central Revenues, from Calcutta to Delhi, the existing incumbents, instead of being brought on to the lower scale of pay applicable to Delhi, were not only allowed to retain the higher Calcutta scale of pay, but also compensated in many other ways such as by the grant of bonuses and increases in pay; and
- (iii) that certain officers of the Northern India Salt Revenue Department were wrongly admitted to the benefit of the European Service or Special Leave Rules and that Government, in their Finance Department letter No. D.-366-R.-1/28, dated the 19th September, 1928, decided not to withdraw such privileges on the ground that, if concessions once allowed on their authority be withdrawn, it would cause hardship and serious discontent?

(d) If the replies to parts (c) (ii) and (c) (iii) be in the affirmative, will Government be pleased to state the reasons why, on the location of the Audit Office, Indian Stores Department in Delhi, the existing staff could not be accorded a similar treatment and allowed to retain full special pay, and the orders contained in the Finance Department letter No. F./15/IX/R.-11/28, dated the 25th February, 1929, be restricted to the new entrants only?

(e) Will Government be pleased to state the total number of non-gazetted officers recruited for the Audit Office, Indian Stores Department on full special pay before the orders for its reduction were passed?

REPORTS OF THE STATUTORY COMMISSION AND THE INDIAN CENTRAL COMMITTEE.

187. Mr. B. Das: (a) Will Government be pleased to state whether the letter of Sir John Simon, addressed to the Governor General on the 6th February, 1928, did contain the following passage?

"We shall report to the authority by which we have been constituted just as (if the Conference is set up) the Joint Committee would, we presume, be entitled to report its conclusions to the Central Legislature. It is obvious that these should be prepared and presented simultaneously."

(b) What are the reasons that led the Government of India to change the procedure and publish the Report of the Indian Central Committee a few months ahead of the Report of the Statutory Commission?

(c) Did the Central Committee or any of the members of that Committee protest against the advanced publication of their Report?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: (a) Yes.

(b) It was at the request of the Chairman, and in accordance with the wishes expressed by the Committee, in the 1st and 5th paragraphs of their own Report, that the Report of the Indian Central Committee was published by the Government of India without waiting for the publication of the Report of the Statutory Commission

(c) No.

Mr. B. Das: Is it a fact that the original publications of the Government of India were destroyed and a second edition was brought out and certain passages of the Central Committee's Reports were omitted?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: The Government of India had nothing whatever to do with the form and contents of the Reports.

Mr. B. Das: Is it a fact that the first publication of a thousand copies or more was destroyed and a second edition was brought out?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: I have no information to that effect.

Mr. B. Das: Will the Honourable Member kindly inquire into it?

THE BOMB OUTRAGE TO THE VICEROY'S TRAIN.

188. Mr. B. Das: (a) Will Government be pleased to state if the culprits who bombed the Viceregal train on the 23rd December, 1929, have been arrested?

(b) Is it a fact that bombs were thrown from both sides of the train?

(c) Were the bombs electrically operated or hand operated? Will Government be pleased to make a statement on this dastardly outrage and the result of their investigations up to date?

(d) Was the railway line guarded with the usual police forces that morning or not?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: (a) No.

(b) No.

(c) The explosion was electrically operated. The matter is under investigation and I regret I am not in a position to make any statement at present.

PAY OF TEMPORARY INDIAN MEDICAL SERVICE OFFICERS.

189. Mr. M. S. Aney (on behalf of Mr. Lalchand Navalrai): (a) Is it a fact that temporary Indian Medical Service officers get promotion only once after three years' service during their whole career, whereas permanent Indian Medical Service officers get their increase of pay after every 3rd, 6th and 8th year of service?

(b) If the answer to part (a) be in the affirmative, will Government be pleased to state reasons for such a distinction?

(c) Are Government prepared to formulate a scheme for the betterment of such temporary service?

Mr. G. M. Young: (a) The statement is correct, except that permanent officers get increased rates of pay after the third, sixth and ninth years of service, and not the eighth as stated by the Honourable Member.

(b) Temporary officers are not now retained in service after five years, unless they have been selected meanwhile for permanent commissions. During the five years they draw exactly the same rates of pay and allowances as permanent officers.

(c) The answer is in the negative. The terms offered are by no means illiberal or unattractive.

PAY OF TEMPORARY INDIAN MEDICAL SERVICE OFFICERS.

190. Mr. M. S. Aney (on behalf of Mr. Lalchand Navalrai): (a) Is it a fact that, in the Indian Medical Service, a temporary Lieutenant or temporary Captain, even though senior in service in the sense of having held a temporary commission for a longer time, is considered junior to a permanent Lieutenant or Captain recruited anew?

(b) Have there been instances in which temporary commissioned officers of long service have been made to work under permanent commissioned officers having comparatively shorter service?

Mr. G. M. Young: The answer to both parts of the question is in the affirmative, as stated in my reply to Diwan Chaman Lall's starred question No. 803 on the 2nd September, 1927.

APPOINTMENT OF INDIANS TO THE INDIAN MEDICAL SERVICE.

191. Mr. M. S. Aney (on behalf of Mr. Lalchand Navalrai): (a) Will Government be pleased to state the number of permanent medical commissioned officers in the Indian Medical Service at present and how many of them are Indians?

(b) What is the full strength of permanent medical officers in the Indian Medical Service?

(c) Will Government be pleased to state, with reference to the answer given by Mr. G. M. Young to starred question No. 1276 (a) by Mr. K. C. Neogy on the 27th March, 1929, as to when the full strength of the permanent officers will have been recruited? What is the ratio of Indian officers to British officers in such recruitment?

Mr. G. M. Young: (a) 616, of whom 170 are Indians.

(c) It is not possible to forecast the exact time when the full strength will have been recruited.

The ratio at which recruitment is being carried on at present is one to two.

CONTRACTS FOR LOADING AND UNLOADING GOODS ON THE NORTH WESTERN RAILWAY.

192. Mr. M. S. Aney (on behalf of Mr. Lalchand Navalrai): (a) Are Government aware that there was a departmental arrangement for the loading and unloading of goods and coaching traffic in the North Western Railway (Sind section) before about the year 1910?

(b) Will Government be pleased to state what was the actual expenditure incurred by the Railway per thousand maunds?

(c) Is it a fact that the former system was done away with and the loading and unloading business was given on contract?

(d) If the reply to part (c) is in the affirmative, is it a fact that the contract for Karachi Port was given to one Mr. Brice? If so, when and on what terms and at what rate per thousand maunds?

(e) Is it a fact that the contract has been allowed to continue up to now without inviting fresh tenders in the name of Mr. Brice, though he is said to be dead?

(f) Will Government be pleased to say who actually holds the afore-said contract now and on what terms and under what authority?

(g) What reason has necessitated the Government to continue the old contract to Mr. Brice for the benefit of the present holder?

(h) Do Government propose to give the contract at Karachi Port and at such other places on the North Western Railway, where a similar practice exists, by competition to the person offering the lowest rate?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: Information on all the points raised by the Honourable Member's question is not in the possession of Government. I am asking the Agent of the North Western Railway to supply such of this information as may be available and, on hearing from him, I will send a reply to the Honourable Member.

INCOME-TAX OF HINDU UNDIVIDED FAMILIES.

193. Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava: Do Government propose to amend the Indian Income-tax Act with a view to equalise the incidence of income-tax or super-tax in regard to Hindu undivided family, and if so, by what time?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: As I am unable to understand exactly what is meant by the expression, "To equalise the incidence of income-tax or super-tax in regard to the Hindu undivided family", I regret that I cannot give a definite answer to this question. I may inform the Honourable Member however that I have given careful attention to this matter as a result of certain points which were raised in last year's budget debate. I have satisfied myself, for example, that certain hardships which have been alleged do not arise in practice, and particularly that salaries earned by members of Hindu undivided families are not, as has been stated, added together and taxed as the income of the family, because, under the Hindu Law, as I gather, salary earned by individual exertion or skill cannot be family income, except in certain special circumstances. To place the matter beyond doubt, however, instructions have been inserted in the Income-tax Manual to the following effect:

"The income, profits and gains of a member of an undivided Hindu family are normally treated as joint family property. But where the income consists of his personal earnings and acquisitions by his own exertions, it will, unless it flows from a special education at the expense of the joint family over and above the ordinary education suitable to his position as a member of the joint family, or from the employment in business or otherwise of the joint funds, be treated as his self-acquired property and not as joint family property."

Whatever hardship may exist at present is really due to the provisions of Hindu Law, and as the House is aware, there is a Bill now before it—introduced by my Honourable friend Mr. Jayakar—to secure that gains of learning earned by a Hindu shall not be treated as belonging to the family, even in those circumstances which now make such gains family property. If that Bill becomes law, the Income-tax Department will of course apply it in assessing undivided Hindu families.

GRANT OF AMNESTY TO POLITICAL PRISONERS.

194. Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava: (a) Are Government aware that the various political parties and organisations in the country, except the Indian National Congress, are very much exercised over the failure of the Government to grant an amnesty to the political prisoners and the indifference shown towards them by the Government in this matter?

(b) Will Government kindly state how many cases of sedition and other political cases have been started by Government in the whole of India after the announcement of the Viceroy on the 31st October, 1929?

(c) Is it a fact that the Government issued instructions to the various Local Governments not to start such cases with a view to bring about a calm atmosphere in the country?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: (a) Government are aware that in some quarters there is a feeling that an amnesty should be granted to prisoners who have committed certain offences against the law with a political motive. They find it difficult, however, to appreciate how it can be expected that the Government should consider any action on these lines in the conditions that unfortunately at present prevail, namely, the existence of an active movement for the attainment of Independence, threats of civil disobedience on a large scale, and numerous inflammatory incitements addressed for the most part to young men and intended to convey to their minds ideas of violent action and revolution.

(b) According to the reports received by the Government of India, the number of such cases is nine.

(c) No, Sir. While Government have not desired to concern themselves with mere expressions of political opinion, which were not believed to be leading towards revolutionary action, their policy has been directed to checking the dangerous activities which I have mentioned in answer to part (a) of this question, and to this policy they must obviously adhere.

EXPENDITURE ON THE STATUTORY COMMISSION AND INDIAN CENTRAL COMMITTEE.

195. Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava: (a) Will Government kindly state what sum of money has been spent over the Indian Central Committee of the Simon Commission and the Simon Commission, so far?

(b) Will Government kindly state what sums have been paid to each member of the Indian Central Committee and of the Simon Commission by way of remuneration, travelling allowance and other allowances?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: The information asked for by the Honourable Member is being collected and will be supplied to him in due course.

CONTRIBUTORY PROVIDENT FUND SYSTEM FOR GOVERNMENT SERVANTS.

196. Mr. G. Sarvotham Rao: (a) Will Government be pleased to state what is the present stage of the proposal to substitute a contributory provident fund system for Government servants in place of the existing pension system?

(b) Will Government be pleased to say when it is their intention to put the former system into force?

(c) Will Government be pleased to place all relevant papers and correspondence on the table?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: (a) Local Governments and Service Associations were addressed on the subject on the 8th November, 1929, and it is expected that their replies will be received shortly.

(b) It has yet to be proved that a change in the direction proposed would be acceptable to the general body of Government servants; and it is therefore impossible to say if and when any such scheme will come into force.

(c) It would be premature at this stage to lay the papers on the table.

LATE OFFICE HOURS IN THE SECRETARIAT.

197. Mr. G. Sarvotham Rao: (a) Is it a fact that, during the Viceroyalty of Lord Curzon, the rule was laid down that the prescribed office hours should be strictly adhered to and that instructions were issued to the effect that officers and clerks should not stay in office late, and it was pointed out that staying late meant either incompetence or laziness?

(b) Is it a fact that this practice is being more and more infringed till of late it has become quite common for Secretaries of Departments and other officers in the Government of India to stay late, involving trouble and inconvenience to their clerks and peons, who have to stay late till the officers leave?

(c) If the answer to the above is in the affirmative, are Government prepared to issue instructions to see that the practice of staying late in office is discontinued?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: (a) I have not as yet been able to trace any such orders, but as very little time has been available I am having the search continued.

(b) Office hours are normally from 10-30—4-30, but at times, especially during the Sessions of the Legislature, the volume of work in the various Departments of the Government of India is so great that officers and others find it necessary to work later. I may add that the staff invariably respond with loyalty and cheerfulness to such occasional but inevitable demands, and that no complaints on this score have been made by the staff themselves.

(c) The Government of India consider that the issue of such instructions is unnecessary.

RENTS OF GOVERNMENT QUARTERS IN SIMLA AND DELHI.

198. Mr. G. Sarvotham Rao: (a) Will Government be pleased to lay on the table statements showing the various classes of accommodation given to officers and subordinates of the Government of India in Simla, and the rents charged therefor, together with particulars of accommodation, locality, etc.?

(b) Will Government be pleased to lay a similar statement in respect of the bungalows and quarters allotted to Government officials in New Delhi and old Delhi?

(c) Is it a fact that the rent charged for an "A" class quarter in Phagli is about the same as that for a "C" class cottage in Bemloe Estate?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: (a) and (b). The compilation of the statements on the lines asked for by the Honourable Member would involve considerable time and labour, and as they are not likely to serve any useful public purpose, Government do not propose to undertake the compilation. If my Honourable friend wants information on any particular point, and the information can be made available readily, I shall be glad to do my best for him if he will kindly meet me in my office some day.

(c) The answer is in the negative.

NUMBER OF MEMBERS OF VARIOUS COMMUNITIES IN CERTAIN RAILWAY OFFICES.

199. Khan Bahadur Makhdum Syed Rajan Bakhsh Shah: (a) Will Government please state the total number of appointments in the superior staff of the following Departments in the Indian Railways, with pay of Rs. 100 and above that, giving separately appointments for officers and subordinates of each community (Sikhs, Muhammadans, Hindus and others):

1. Inspectors of all Railway Depots.
2. Transportation and Accounts Branches.
3. Engineering Departments.
4. Running and Coaching staff.
5. Clerical staff of officers of Divisional Superintendents.
6. Audit and Accounts officers.
7. Stores Depots officers.

(b) How many subordinates are officiating as officers in each of the above branches and what is their number according to different communities?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: (a) I would refer the Honourable Member to Appendix "F" in Volume I and Appendix C in Volume II of the Railway Board's Report on Indian Railways for 1927-28, a copy of which is in the Library. The statistics were formulated in this form after consultation with and acceptance by, the Central Advisory Council for Railways, and Government consider that they give as much detail as is desirable or necessary for keeping a watch on the position on each railway to secure that their policy is carried out.

(b) Government have not the information and regret that they cannot undertake to call for it.

VENDORS AT RAILWAY STATIONS.

200. Khan Bahadur Makhdum Syed Rajan Bakhsh Shah: What is the total number of contractors and vendors engaged on Indian railway stations and how many of them are Muslims?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: As there are several thousands of vendors engaged on Indian railway stations, it would require considerable time and labour to obtain the information asked for. However, if the Honourable Member can inform me of any sections of railway where the number of Muslim vendors is considered to be inadequate, I shall be happy to have the matter inquired into:

APPOINTMENT OF MUSLIMS ON SUPERIOR RAILWAY STAFFS.

201. *Khan Bahadur Makhdum Syed Rajan Bakhsh Shah: What is the proportion of Muslims in the recruitment of officers and superior staff in case of the following Railways?—

- (1) North Western Railway, Punjab.
- (2) North West Frontier Province, Baluchistan and Sindh.
- (3) Delhi.
- (4) Muzaffarnagar,
- (5) Meerut and Saharanpur.

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: As superior officers are recruited for railways as a whole, I am afraid it is not possible to give the Honourable Member the information for which he asks. I can obtain for him, if he desires, the number of Muslims recruited to fill vacancies in the superior services on the North Western Railway as a whole in the last two years, and the proportion this number bears to the total Indians recruited.

RECRUITMENT OF SUBORDINATE STAFF FOR THE NORTH WESTERN RAILWAY.

202. *Khan Bahadur Makhdum Syed Rajan Bakhsh Shah: (a) Are Government aware that in the North Western Railway the recruitment of subordinate ministerial staff (clerical, coaching and running) is made by a Board under the control of the Divisional Superintendents of each Division?

(b) What is the number of Boards held in each Division of the North Western Railway during the last three years?

(c) What is the total number of appointments made by each Board during the last three years in each Division generally, and especially in the Multan Division?

(d) How many of these appointments were allotted to Muhammadans?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: I am collecting the information, which will be communicated to the Honourable Member on its receipt.

APPOINTMENT OF MUHAMMADANS TO SUPERIOR POSTS IN THE POSTS AND TELEGRAPHS DEPARTMENT.

203. *Khan Bahadur Makhdum Syed Rajan Bakhsh Shah: (a) Will Government please state the total number of the following appointments in the Indian Posts and Telegraphs Department, separately for each province?—

- (1) Postmasters.
- (2) Deputy Superintendents and Superintendents of Post Offices.
- (3) Deputy Superintendents and Superintendents of Telegraph Traffic.

(b) How many of these appointments are held by Muhammadans?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: There is no appointment of Deputy Superintendent of Post Offices in the Posts and Telegraphs Department. Assuming that, by "Postmasters", the Honourable Member refers to gazetted Postmasters only, a statement giving the information asked for is being furnished to him separately. As the distribution of the appointments referred to is made according to Postal Circles and not according to provinces, the figures in the statement have been shown separately for each Postal Circle.

UNSTARRED QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

SIKH HOLIDAYS.

106. Sardar Gulab Singh: (a) Are Government aware that there are 28 bank holidays in a year, out of which 11 have been allotted to the Hindus, 7 to the Christians, 6 to the Moslems and 4 extras?

(c) Are Government aware that out of the numerous Sikh Gurburbs (religious festivals), the birth anniversary of Shree Guru Nanak Dev (the first Guru and the founder of the Sikhs), the birth Anniversary of Shree Guru Govind Singh (the tenth Guru and the founder of the Khalsa Panth) and the death anniversary of Shree Guru Arjan Dev (the fifth Guru and the author of the Sikh Scriptures) are regarded as the most important of all the days in a year?

(d) Are Government considering the question of sanctioning the above-mentioned three days to be observed as public holidays in the banks and all the other offices of the Government throughout India?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: (a) The declaration of public holidays in the provinces is a matter for the Local Government concerned under the explanation to section 25 of the Negotiable Instruments Act 1881, and the number of holidays notified naturally varies in different provinces. The Honourable Member would seem to be referring to the holidays notified by the Punjab Government though his figures are not quite accurate.

(b) The Punjab Government notification prescribes holidays for the birthdays of Shree Guru Nanak and Shree Guru Gobind Singh.

(c) Government have no information, but accept the Honourable Member's assurance on the point.

(d) As already explained, the matter is one for Local Governments. The question of some increase in the number of holidays in offices under the Government of India is now under consideration, and it is hoped to issue orders in the matter shortly.

POSSESSION OF KIRPANS BY SIKHS.

107. Sardar Gulab Singh: (a) Are Government aware that the kirpan, which is a religious symbol of the Sikhs, has long been declared to mean a sword and, exempted from the Arms Act for the Sikhs by the High Court and the Punjab Government?

(b) Are Government aware of the fact that, in spite of the above provisions, the Sikhs are still being occasionally arrested for even peaceful possession of the said kirpan?

(c) Have Government considered the question of issuing a circular to all the Provincial Governments in India prohibiting such prosecutions in future?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: (a) Government are aware that no restrictions are imposed in the Punjab on kirpans possessed or carried by Sikhs.

(b) Government have no information.

(c) The reply is in the negative.

(d) Will Government be pleased to state the details of the staff of officers of the Power House who are drawing above Rs. 250 per mensem showing the following particulars?—

(1) Name, (2) age, (3) Indian or Anglo-Indian or European, (4) starting pay, (5) qualifications, (6) promotions, (7) allowances.

(e) Was there any recruitment made from outside India for this special work? If so, did Government make inquiries in India, before making such recruitment?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: With your permission, Sir, I will answer this and the following question together. The information is being obtained and will be furnished to the Honourable Member on receipt.

ELECTRIFICATION OF THE GREAT INDIAN PENINSULA RAILWAY FROM BOMBAY TO POONA.

†109. Mr. N. C. Kelkar: (a) Will Government be pleased to give information about the total cost for the electrification of the railway line from Bombay to Poona, and give details as regards the actual cost of material for construction, supervision, charges, etc.?

(c) Will Government give an estimate of the total savings, that can be made by electrification in the annual expenditure over this line in various departments?

(g) Will Government state what are the special facilities available in India, which do not exist in other countries, and which made it possible for the Great Indian Peninsula Railway to undertake electrification over such an unprecedented length as 120 miles, as stated in the opening speech of the Agent of the Railway?

THE HISTORICAL RECORDS COMMISSION.

110. Mr. N. C. Kelkar: (a) What is the constitution of the Historical Records Commission? Is it completely in the charge of the Government of India?

(b) What was the object of Government in starting the work of this Commission?

(c) What work has been completed so far by this Commission and what is the future programme of its work?

(d) What was the cost of the Persian calendars published at the instance of this Commission, and what was the amount realised by the total sales of these volumes?

(e) Are the historical records of the Mongol period in the custody of Government open to the public?

(f) Do Government charge any fee for a research student who wants to take advantage of these records?

(g) Have Government made any arrangements in Calcutta or elsewhere, to make them available to the public? If so, what is the annual expenditure incurred by Government, and for what purpose?

(h) Are the members of the Historical Records Commission paid any honorarium for the work they do?

Sir Frank Noyce: (a) A list of the members of the Indian Historical Records Commission is placed on the table. The members are appointed by the Government of India.

(b) The Honourable Member's attention is invited to the Government of India's Resolution No. 77, dated the 21st March 1919, a copy of which will be found in the Library of the House.

(c) The duties of the Commission are of a purely advisory character. It has not undertaken any definite programme.

(e) The records are open to the public for purposes of bona fide historical research, subject to the rules framed by the Government of India, a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House.

(f) No fee is charged from a research student who examines the records personally.

(g) The records are kept at Calcutta and are accessible to the public. All necessary work in this connection is done by the staff of the Imperial Record Department and no additional expenditure is incurred by Government.

(b) What is the present actual strength of the Bombay Urban Territorial Battalion and what is the expenditure incurred for the same under different heads?

(c) Are Government aware that the Poona District Territorial Force Association has mentioned in its last annual report that the arrangements for the training of a separate unit should be made in Poona, and that a new battalion should be formed under the Indian Territorial Force Act? If so, do Government propose to take any steps in this direction?

Mr. G. M. Young: (a) and (b). The following statement shows the authorized establishment and the present strength of the various Indian Territorial Force units constituted for the Bombay Presidency:

District.	Unit.	Sanctioned establishment.	Strength.

I am afraid that the Army accounts do not show expenditure in the form desired by the Honourable Member, and the information could not be obtained without the expenditure of an inordinate amount of time and labour.

(c) No, Sir.

AERO CLUBS IN INDIA.

112. Mr. N. C. Kelkar: Will Government be pleased to state how many Aero Clubs have been started in the whole of India, and how many Indians and non-Indians are trained in the art of flying at each of these clubs? What annual subsidy is granted by the Government of India to these clubs?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: The attention of the Honourable Member is invited to the reply given in the Legislative Assembly on the 20th January, 1930, to the starred question No. 76 asked by Dr. B. S. Moonje. The number of non-Indians trained by the Flying Clubs is:

Delhi ..	11
Bombay ..	4
Bengal ..	17
Karachi ..	15

CADETS FOR THE ROYAL INDIAN MARINE.

113. Mr. N. C. Kelkar: (1) How many candidates from each province appeared for the entrance examination of the cadets for the Royal Indian Marine held in July last? How many of them were successful in the examination and found fit for recruitment for learning marine engineering?

(2) Were there any candidates that were not taken up, although they were fit? Is it a fact that the Government of India granted only three scholarships for the same?

(3) Are Government prepared to make arrangements for the training of candidates who, being fit, can make private financial arrangements?

(4) How many new cadets will be taken up this year for marine engineering, and when is the next entrance examination likely to take place?

(5) Did Government send the notification about this examination to the various prominent newspapers, educational institutions, universities, with instructions to send these circulars to the Head Masters of the different high schools? If so, how many circulars were sent in each province and with what effect?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: It is understood that the Honourable Member's question refers to the examination for the grant of scholarships for the training of Indians as Marine Engineers for employment in the Mercantile Marine and not to the examination held for candidates for the Royal Indian Marine.

As regards parts (1) and (2) of the question, the position is as follows:

A competitive examination was held in July, 1929, for the grant of three State Scholarships of the value of £240 per annum, each tenable in England for the training of Indians in Marine Engineering. 44 candidates sat for the examination, and of these the first three successful candidates were, after an interview by a Selection Committee, selected for the award of the scholarships in question. The number of candidates appearing from the various provinces for the competitive examination was as follows:

(1) Madras	..	..	..	..	..	3
(2) Bombay	..	..	..	..	..	3
(3) Bengal	..	..	..	..	..	7
(4) United Provinces	..	..	..	..	..	11
(5) Punjab	..	..	..	..	..	9
(6) Central Provinces	..	..	..	..	..	1
(7) Bihar and Orissa	..	..	..	..	..	3
(8) Delhi	..	..	..	..	..	7
Total						44

(3) If any such candidate is prepared to make his own personal arrangements, Government are prepared to make inquiries whether facilities for his training can be provided.

(4) Three State scholarships will be awarded in 1930, and the next competitive examination will commence on the 7th April, 1930.

(5) Press communiqués regarding the examination were issued on both occasions and the rules and regulations were published in the Gazette of India. Copies of the Notifications were sent to all the Local Governments and Administrations with the request that they be published in the Local Government Gazettes and copies sent to the Universities and the Principals and Head Masters of all important institutions.

TRAINING OF CADETS FOR THE ROYAL INDIAN MARINE.

114. Mr. N. C. Kelkar: (a) Are Government aware that a large number of candidates who pass the entrance examination for training on the "Dufferin" are disappointed, as the number of cadets taken each year is limited?

(b) Are Government aware that in Japan arrangements for the training in the first year's course is made in ordinary schools which are situated somewhere near the sea shore? Are Government prepared to make such arrangements in places like Madras, Calcutta, Ratnagiri, etc.?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: (a) Government are aware that the number of candidates who pass the entrance examination for the "Dufferin" exceeds the number of cadets admitted each year. The number admitted must, however, be limited, in view of the capacity of the ship, the strength of the instructional staff, and the chances of eventual employment for the cadets.

(b) So far as Government are aware, there are at present in Japan one nautical college and ten prefectural nautical schools. As regards the latter part of the question, the attention of the Honourable Member is invited to the reply given by me on the 4th March, 1929, to Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh's question No. 879.

LOCATION OF THE MEDICAL RESEARCH INSTITUTE.

MILITARY SCHOOLS.

116. Mr. N. C. Kelkar: Will Government be pleased to make a statement about the opening of new military schools for the sons of those fathers who were not or are not in the military service?

Mr. G. M. Young: Government have already considered the desirability of issuing a statement on the whole subject of military education, but, in view of the fact that they have received notice of Resolutions connected with it that may come up for discussion during the present Session, they have decided to postpone the issue of a statement for the present.

PROPOSED RAILWAY FROM KOLHAPUR TO VIJAYADURGA.

117. Mr. N. C. Kelkar: Is it a fact that the Railway Board are proposing to make a survey for a railway line from Kolhapur to Vijayadurga or some other place on the coastal line of the Ratnagiri District? If so, has the Kolhapur State made any proposals in this matter?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: The reply to the first part of the question is in the negative. No proposal has so far been sent to the Railway Board by the Kolhapur Darbar.

DEFINITION OF INDIAN NATIONALS.

118. Mr. N. C. Kelkar: Is it a fact that Sir George Godfrey made a statement in the last International Marine Conference that all British subjects, whether Indians or Europeans, are regarded as Indian nationals? Do Government subscribe to this view?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: The Government of India have seen the text of a speech made by Sir Geoffrey Corbett at the 13th (Maritime) Session of the International Labour Conference where the following passage occurred:

"It is enough to say that we in India hold that we are all British subjects, have a common citizenship and have a common allegiance to His Britannic Majesty; and all British subjects resident in India have equal rights, irrespective of race. Similarly every Indian in the United Kingdom has the full rights of a British citizen if he is resident there."

The Government of India have no reason to regard this view as incorrect.

(2) Will Government state what is the number of persons sent by Government for the various international conferences and world conferences during the last ten years? Will Government give the names of those persons and the expenditure incurred for them during these years?

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter: (1) The League of Nations has framed no rules or regulations regarding the selection of representatives either at the Assembly of the League or at International Conferences generally or at any specific International Conference.

(2) The information is being collected and will be supplied to the Honourable Member in due course.

PROPAGATION OF INFORMATION ABOUT THE CHILD MARRIAGE RESTRAINT ACT.

120. Mr. N. C. Kelkar: Will Government state what arrangements have been made by Government for propaganda in the matter of the Sarda Marriage Act for educating public opinion?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: The Honourable Member is referred to the answers given by me on the 20th instant to starred questions Nos. 57 and 58 by Mr. B. Das.

STENOGRAPHERS FOR THE INDIAN LABOUR COMMISSION.

(2) What are the special qualifications that were found in these stenographers that were not to be found in the stenographers in India?

(3) Were the Government of India consulted in this matter when the appointments were made in England?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: (1) and (2). The attention of the Honourable Member is invited to the replies given by me in the Legislative Assembly on the 26th September, 1929, to the short notice question by Mr. Jamnadas M. Mehta and supplementary questions in that connection by him and Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh.

(3) No.

RESPONSIBILITY FOR THE ACCIDENT TO THE PESHAWAR-LUCKNOW EXPRESS.

123. Khan Bahadur Sarfaraz Hussain Khan: (a) Has the attention of Government been drawn to the news published in the issue of the Statesman of the 11th January, 1930, page 9, under the heading "11 killed in Head-on Rail Smash—Peshawar-Lucknow Express in Loop Line Disaster"?

(b) If so, will they please state if the statement is correct?

(c) If correct, will they please state who were the officers responsible for the accident, and what steps Government are taking or are going to take in the matter?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: (a) Yes.

(b) The number of casualties, as finally confirmed, was 11 killed and 19 injured, one of whom subsequently died.

(c) The Senior Government Inspector of Railways, Lucknow, who held an inquiry into the circumstances of this accident, has reported that the driver of the Express train was primarily responsible for the accident and that a pointsman of Clutterbuckganj station contributed to the occurrence of the accident by leaving his post without permission and before the arrival of his relief.

It is understood that the driver is being prosecuted. It is not at present known what action is being taken as regards the pointsman.

RAILWAY RATES PAYABLE BY GLASS FACTORIES.

124. Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava: (a) Is it a fact that the rates charged by the East Indian Railway, both in case of the raw material used in the glass factories and their products, are lower than those charged by the Great Indian Peninsula, North Western, and other railways?

(b) Are Government aware that on account of this inequality of rates the glass factories in provinces through which the East Indian Railway passes are in a position of advantage for trade competition in glass goods as compared with glass factories in other provinces?

(c) Do Government propose to remove this inequality and to equalise rates for the above description of articles on all railways?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: (a) The rates charged by the East Indian Railway for some of the raw materials used in glass factories and for their products are lower than those charged on certain other railways, though not in all cases.

(b) No.

(c) The rates charged on different railways for the same commodities are not always uniform owing to financial and other conditions varying. If individual interests consider that they are unduly prejudiced by variations in rates, the matter should be represented to the railways concerned or, if necessary, to Government for investigation by the Railway Rates Advisory Committee.

PROTECTION FOR THE GLASS INDUSTRY.

125. Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava: (a) Is it a fact that the Indian Glass Manufacturers Association have been submitting representations to the Government of India, for some measure of protection for the Indian glass industry since 1926?

(b) If so, what action have Government taken on their representation and has the question been referred to the Tariff Board?

(c) If no action has been taken so far, will Government please state by what time they propose to decide if protection is to be extended to the glass industry?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: The Honourable Member is referred to my answer to a similar question by Mr. S. C. Mitra No. 152, dated the 20th January 1930.

STATEMENT OF BUSINESS.

The Honourable Sir James Grerar (Leader of the House): Sir, I desire, with your permission, to make a statement as to the probable course of Government business in the week beginning February the 3rd. As Honourable Members are aware, Monday the 3rd is a gazetted holiday and there will be no sitting of the House. On Tuesday, the 4th, any business left over from this week in connection with the Sale of Goods legislation will be taken first. Thereafter the House will resume the discussion of the Resolution moved in Simla by the Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra regarding the recommendations of the Indian Road Development Committee. On Thursday the 6th unfinished business of Tuesday the 4th will be placed first on the list. Thereafter motions will be made to take into consideration and pass the Provident Funds Amendment Bill, as passed by the Council of State, and the Bill to amend the Indian Income-Tax Act, in connection with which the Report of the Select Committee is to be laid today. The last item on the list will be the Railway Supplementary Grants.

THE INDIAN INCOME-TAX (AMENDMENT) BILL.

PRESENTATION OF THE REPORT OF THE SELECT COMMITTEE.

The Honourable Sir George Schuster (Finance Member): Sir, I beg to present the Report of the Select Committee on the Bill further to amend the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, for certain purposes (Amendment of sections 2, 23, etc.).

THE INDIAN SALE OF GOODS BILL.

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter (Law Member): Sir, I beg to move that the Bill to define and amend the law relating to the sale of goods, as reported by the Select Committee, be taken into consideration.

THE INDIAN SALE OF GOODS BILL.

At the last Simla Session I gave this House a short history of the Bill and indicated the main lines on which it had been drafted. The Bill has been received in legal and commercial circles all over India with an amount of approval and commendation which cannot but be gratifying to those responsible for it. I shall not take up the time of the House by reading all the encomiums which the Bill has evoked. By way of sample I shall place a few before the House. The Bengal Chamber of Commerce observes:

"The Committee are glad to say that, as a result of their examination of the provisions of the Bill, they are able to approve generally of these, and this being so, they do not propose to comment on the clauses in detail."

The Indian Chamber of Commerce, Calcutta, says this:

"The opinions elicited go to show that, while the Bill is of the greatest importance to the commercial community, its examination is so greatly a matter for trained legal opinion that a commercial opinion must of necessity take quite a subordinate place with regard to the Bill. My Committee, however, are satisfied that the Bill is a considerable improvement on the existing legislation and deserving of support."

The Burma Government writes:

"The Rangoon Trades Association, the Burma Indian Chamber of Commerce, the Burma Chamber of Commerce, the Chettias Trades Association, Purma, the Chinese Chamber of Commerce have all replied supporting the Bill, and it may be taken that the Bill is welcomed by the whole commercial community in Burma."

The Marwari Chamber of Commerce, Bombay, writes:

"In conclusion I am directed to convey to the Government of India my Board's great appreciation of the careful, lucid and able drafting of the Bill under consideration. The Board tender their congratulations to the draftsman and are glad to record their view that, from the point of view of the mercantile public, the proposed Bill is a great improvement upon the existing law on the subject."

Sir, many of the opinions received by us contained useful suggestions for further improving the Bill and we adopted some of them in the Select Committee. I wish in this connection to acknowledge in particular, our indebtedness to Mr. Justice Lort-Williams of Calcutta, Mr. Justice Lal Gopal Mukherji of Allahabad and Mr. Ramfry, Chief Judge of the Court of Small Causes, Calcutta, the Bengal Chamber of Commerce, Calcutta, and the Indian Chamber of Commerce, Bombay. The Report of the Select Committee deals with the important suggestions received, those which we accepted, as well as those which we were unable to accept. The most important change made in the Select Committee is the redrafting of clauses 27 and 29 and the employment of the expression "mercantile agent" which we took from the English Factors Act. These clauses deal with sales by ostensible owners. We have limited these to sales by mercantile agents to bona fide buyers and have also limited avoidable contracts to sections 19 and 19A of the Indian Contract Act, irrespective of any element of offence in them. The reasons are fully set out in the Report of the Select Committee.

The important suggestions which we were unable to accept are, first, the inclusion of mates' receipts in the category of documents of title; secondly, the extension of the doctrine of "market overt" to India, and thirdly, the basis of damages in the case of anticipatory breach, being the market rate on the date of repudiation. I hope the reasons which we have given in the Report of the Select Committee will be found convincing.

[Sir Brojendra Mitter.]

Sir, the Bill as it has emerged from the Select Committee is the result of untiring labour, specialised knowledge and practical experience. We steadily kept in view the sanctity of freedom of contract and the protection due to the bond fide trader. Sir, I hope the Bill as amended by the Select Committee, will be passed by the House without any alteration.

Sir, I move.

Mr. G. W. Chambers (Associated Chamber of Commerce: Nominated Non-Official): Sir, I should like to endorse what has fallen from the Honourable Law Member, as it must be very gratifying not only to him but to the other members of what I might call the Technical Committee that so much approval has been given to their work. It may be said, therefore, that the appointment of that Committee was a very good investment. It is not often that so many and so varied public commercial bodies, both Indian and otherwise, cannot find some criticism. They nearly always do in my humble experience, but more than one of them says they have been so satisfied that they have no comments to make. Again I think it is an excellent thing that the Select Committee was able to incorporate various useful suggestions that they had received from certain bodies. I would therefore like to support the Bill.

Sir Purshotamdas Thakurdas (Indian Merchants' Chamber: Indian Commerce): Sir, I rise to give my very cordial support to the motion before the House. I owe an apology to the House for my inability to sign the Select Committee's Report for reasons which the Honourable Law Member knows and understands very fully. I have no hesitation in saying that those Members of the Government of India and also the other Members who put their hands to this Bill as it is now before the House deserve very well of both the Government and the public of India. I feel that the Honourable Law Member himself will endorse it if I say that the Government of India and this House owe a debt of gratitude to my friend, Sir Dinshaw Mulla, (applause) for all the assistance that he has given and for the readiness with which he put his expert knowledge at the disposal of the Government and this House. Having been unable to avail myself of my friend Sir Dinshaw Mulla's expert knowledge at the Select Committee meeting, I troubled him yesterday, and we spent the best part of two hours together in myself trying to understand some of the points which I was not able to understand owing to my want of intimacy with the legal points.

Section 29, Sir, is one which I think is a departure from the law in India as it exists now, and I am very much gratified to learn that, on the whole, it has met with the approval of people whose opinions were sought. My own Chamber devoted the best part of several weeks to a study of the Bill and has made suggestions to the Government regarding the Bill before the House and I have heard in several quarters general appreciation for the labour and expert knowledge which have been brought to bear on this draft Bill. I am particularly gratified, Sir, that the railway receipt is now brought in as a document of title to goods, and I am sure that the Indian commercial community that has to deal in railway receipts either as principal or as agent, either as buyer or as seller, will very much welcome this point being made clear and definite. I myself happen to be connected with a trade which handles railway receipts greatly, I mean the raw cotton trade, and I know what complications arise now owing to the railway receipt not being recognised as such. Although some of the suggestions of my Chamber have not been accepted by the Select Committee, I have no hesitation in saying that the measure now before the House is good enough to deserve their approval.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That the Bill to define and amend the law relating to the sale of goods, as reported by the Select Committee, be taken into consideration."

The motion was adopted.

Clauses 2, 3 and 4 were added to the Bill.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That clause 5 stand part of the Bill."

Lala Rang Behari Lal (Delhi: General): Sir, I beg to move:

"That in sub-clause (1) of clause 5, after the words 'or for the delivery or payment by instalments', the words 'or both' be inserted."

The object of the Bill is to define and amend the present law relating to sale of goods, or in other words to make such changes as will make it more definite. Clause 5, after stating as to how a contract is made, gives definite hints as to the matters which can be provided for by the contract. It is a guide to contracting parties as to the terms that can be provided for in the contract. In the beginning when the Bill was introduced, clause 5 made no provision for partial payment or partial delivery although the law as contained in the Indian Contract Act does provide for partial payment and partial delivery. It was only after the circulation and receipt of opinions that the Select Committee decided to recognise the principle. But the language used in clause 5 leaves it doubtful, or at least does not clearly express that in one contract there can be provision for part payment and part delivery, or instalments both as regards payment and delivery of goods. Now if the phrase relating to part payment and part delivery were altogether absent, then the contracting parties could have made a contract for part payment and part delivery, but the addition of this sentence, "for the delivery or payment by instalments" and the use of the words "or both" in the preceding and subsequent sentences makes it doubtful that a contract can have provision both for part payment and part delivery.

In interpreting statutes, courts interpret the words of the statutes as they stand and do not add any words which find no place in the statute itself. The intention of the Legislature is derived from the words used, and in a case like the present, where the words "or both" are used in the preceding and subsequent sentences, it will be assumed that the Legislature did not intend that one contract might provide both for partial payment and partial delivery. This clearly is not the intention of the Legislature. Surely, the Select Committee did not intend to prohibit a contract containing provisions for part payment and part delivery. Therefore, Sir, to put it more definitely and clearly, I submit the addition of the words is essential.

Sir, I move.

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter: Sir, I am sorry I have to oppose the amendment on the simple ground that it is not necessary. The clause as drafted does provide for what the Honourable Member wants, and the addition of these superfluous words, "or both" would not make the clause any the clearer. As the clause stands, both part payment and part delivery are permissible on the principle that the whole includes a part.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That in sub-clause (1) of clause 5, after the words 'or for the delivery or payment by instalments', the words 'or both' be inserted."

The motion was negatived.

Clause 5 was added to the Bill.

Clauses 6 and 7 were added to the Bill.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That clause 8 stand part of the Bill."

Lala Rang Behari Lal: Sir, I move:

"That to clause 8 of the Bill the following proviso be added:

"Provided that if only a portion of the goods contracted to be sold perishes or becomes so damaged as no longer to answer to the description in the contract, the buyer shall have the option to keep the agreement alive and enforceable to the extent of such portion, the contract relating to the portion so perished shall be avoided."

This clause is based on section 7 of the English Sale of Goods Act and provides for the case of the destruction or damage of the total quantity of the contracted goods, but apparently makes no provision for the case where a portion of the specific goods contracted for is destroyed or damaged. In face of the present provision, the whole contract would be avoided presumably, if the market is rising, by the seller. To illustrate my meaning, I would give a few examples. Suppose "A" buys from "B" 200 specific bales of long-cloth, but before performance, 50 bales are destroyed, the remaining 150 bales answer to the description in the contract; I may add that in the meantime the market has risen and there is an appreciable margin of profit. Under these circumstances the seller, taking advantage of the provisions of clause 8, refuses to give delivery and avoids the contract. Apparently the buyer has no remedy, but this is unjust and inequitable. So long as the buyer is ready to pay for and take delivery of the undestroyed portion, there seems to be no reason why he should be deprived of the benefits of his contract. Of course, the seller cannot force him to agree to take a lesser quantity than that contracted for, but, if the buyer chooses to accept a lesser quantity, he should not be allowed to refuse delivery. Section 63 of the Contract Act authorises him to remit wholly or in part the performance of the promise made to him, or to accept instead any satisfaction which he thinks fit. Now, this section is not proposed to be repealed; and although this section gives the buyer a right to remit performance of the contract, consistently with the spirit of this section, the buyer must have the option in cases of impossibility of performance of the whole contract to enforce or rescind the contract which remains capable of performance. Therefore, a provision providing for cases of partial destruction is essential.

Sir, I move.

Sir Dinshaw Mulla (Bombay: Nominated Non-Official): Sir, I oppose the amendment. The Honourable Member has no doubt made out a plausible case, but suppose that goods are sold for a lump sum, then what about the price of the rest of the goods, and, further within what time is the delivery of the rest of the goods to be made? You cannot split a contract. Moreover, clause 8 is concerned not with partial loss or partial delivery, but contemplates cases where the goods or bulk of them are destroyed, so that the goods pertaining to the contract are no longer in existence. In such cases the contract must come to an end.

The motion was negatived.

Clause 8 was added to the Bill.

Clauses 9 to 34 were added to the Bill.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That clause 35 stand part of the Bill."

Lala Rang Behari Lal: Sir, I move:

"That in clause 35, after the word 'express', the words 'or implied' be inserted."

This section apparently embodies the principle enunciated in section 93 of the Indian Contracts Act. But there is a slight change in the wording. In section 93 of the Contract Act the words used are "in the absence of any special promise", while in the present Bill the words are "apart from any express contract". Now, special promise includes or may include both an express or implied promise, but express contract excludes the idea of an implied term. This clause only deals with the application for delivery, but in a very similar case, i.e., place of delivery, in clause 36 of this Bill and section 29 of the English Act the words "express or implied" are used with the word 'contract'. There seems to be no reason why the contract, in the case of application for delivery, should be only express and not implied, especially when mercantile contracts are generally brief and leave more to implication than to express terms. Thus, in a case where, according to the course of dealings between the parties, the seller always delivered without application by the buyer and in the contract there was no such express term, there is no reason why such a term should not be implied and acted upon. I submit the absence of the word "implied" would cause hardship to the mercantile community who are in the habit of leaving those terms unmentioned which are implied from the language of the contract or course of dealings. I therefore submit that the word "implied" be inserted.

Sir, I move.

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter: Sir, I oppose this amendment. The expression contained in the existing law in the Contract Act, section 93, is, "in the absence of any special promise". The Honourable Member moving the amendment says that that means an express or implied agreement. I submit, Sir, that a special promise can only mean an express agreement and not an implied agreement. Implied agreements very often import usages of trade, but a special promise cannot import usage of trade. Therefore, "special promise", in my submission, means only express agreement. We have adopted the expression "express agreement" for the sake of uniformity because "express" and "implied" are the words used throughout the Bill. Then the Honourable Member said that in the English Act there is provision for an implied agreement. I am afraid the Honourable Member was thinking of English decisions and not the English Act, because the English Act is silent on the point.

Lala Rang Behari Lal: I said that the English Act refers to contract as to place of delivery, both express and implied.

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter: I refer Honourable Members to Notes on Clauses annexed to the Bill. It is true there is no specific provision in the English Act corresponding to it, but the principle seems to have been well recognised in England also. It has been held that in the absence of a contrary agreement, a seller is not bound to send or carry the goods to the buyer; he may leave or place the goods at the buyer's disposal, so that the latter is able to remove them. In the opinion of Chalmers there is nothing in the wording of the English Act to displace this rule; and Halsbury is also of the same opinion. There was much discussion amongst the members of the Special Committee on the question as to whether the expression "apart from any contract" or "in the absence of a contract to the contrary" should be substituted for the expression "apart from any express contract" and clauses 5, 36 and 62 of the Bill were considered. We preferred the expression "apart from any express contract", as the rule enunciated in clause 35 had been in existence since 1872 and had been adopted in actual practice. I may go further and say that the rule existed even before the Indian Contract Act was enacted in 1872, as an old case reported in I Madras High Court Reports, page 162 will show. That has worked well in practice and we saw no reason to make a change.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That in Clause 35, after the word 'express', the words 'or implied' be inserted."

The motion was negatived.

Lala Rang Behari Lal: Sir, I move:

"That in Clause 35, after the word 'contract', the words 'or any usage of trade to the contrary' be inserted."

In the construction of mercantile contracts, trade usages play a very great part. They are always recognised and given effect to. In the case of application for delivery in different markets there are trade usages, especially in relation to forward contracts, which require that the sellers will issue delivery orders. Now the issue of delivery orders suo moto is incompatible with the buyer applying for delivery. In such cases, to insist that, since there is no express term in the contract the buyer must apply for delivery, otherwise he is guilty of breach, would be very hard on the buyer and would be acting against the trade custom, and since mercantile law recognises trade usages, the addition of the words in the clause should be made.

Sir, I move.

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter: Sir, I am afraid the Honourable Member is under a misapprehension, because clause 62 expressly provides for usages of trade and it is not necessary to have usage of trade in every clause of this Bill. I oppose the amendment.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That in clause 35, after the word 'contract', the words 'or any usage of trade to the contrary' be inserted."

The motion was negatived.

Clause 35 was added to the Bill.

Clause 36 was added to the Bill.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That clause 37 stand part of the Bill."

Lala Rang Behari Lal: Sir, I move:

"That at the end of clause 37 (1) of the Bill, the following be added:
'and may claim damages for non-delivery of the remaining quantity'."

This clause, as it stands, conveys the idea that, in case of short tender of goods, the buyer may reject the goods as he is not bound to accept short quantity. But if he accepts them, "he shall pay for them at the contract rate", conveys the idea that the buyer accepts the goods in complete performance of the contract and forgoes his right to claim performance, or in its absence damages, for the balance. Now this clearly is not the intention of this clause and if it were it would be unjust and inequitable, because every seller in a rising market would offer short quantity, and if accepted escape liability for the balance. In these circumstances it is necessary to give recognition to the right of the buyer for damages for non-performance of a part of the contract.

Really the conduct of the seller in offering short quantity amounts to a breach of the contract, and the conduct of the buyer in accepting the goods amounts to a mitigation of damages, but this should not deprive him of his right to claim damages for the balance if he so desires.

Sir, I move.

Sir Dinshaw Mulla: Sir, I oppose the amendment. The clause as it stands runs thus:

"Where the seller delivers to the buyer a quantity of goods less than he contracted to sell, the buyer may reject them, but if the buyer accepts the goods so delivered he shall pay for them at the contract rate."

The proposed amendment is to add at the end of the clause the words "and may claim damages for non-delivery of the remaining quantity". The Honourable Member said that, unless those words were added, the seller might take advantage of a rising market and offer to the buyer a smaller quantity; but then the clause expressly provides that, in such a case, it is quite competent to the buyer to refuse to take any delivery at all, and he may sue the seller for damages for the whole. That being the case, there is no injustice involved. Moreover, this clause has been taken from the English Act of 1893. No difficulty of any kind has arisen. Such being the case, we do not consider it desirable to make any departure from it. So far as the suggestion of the Honourable Member is concerned, I submit that the answer which I have given is sufficient to meet the difficulty.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

[29TH JAN. 1930.]

Mr. President: The question is:

"That at the end of clause 37 (1) of the Bill the following be added:
'and may claim damages for non-delivery of the remaining quantity'."

The motion was negatived.

Lala Rang Behari Lal: Sir, I move:

"That in sub-clause (2) of clause 37 the words 'or he may reject the whole' be omitted."

This clause is based on section 30 of the English Act. Similar provisions, though on a modified scale, exist in section 119 of the Indian Contract Act.

The objection against the deletion of these words can be that the offer of a larger quantity is a fresh offer which the buyer may or may not accept; consequently he may reject the offer and call for damages for breach of the contract.

Now this position may sound very well in law, but in certain cases it may work very great hardship and may become inequitable. Take the case of a man who is a timber merchant in Delhi and who contracts to deliver, say 15,000 logs of timber, to another merchant at Lahore, but he has to purchase those goods from Halduani Mandi. He asks his agent to despatch goods to Lahore, but on receiving the railway receipt he finds that his agent has despatched 18,000 logs, i.e., 3,000 more than the contracted quantity. Now the Lahore merchant, if the clause stands as it is, would be entitled to reject the whole and put the seller to a great loss, but if the amendment is made, he is only entitled to reject 3,000, the excess quantity offered. The Contract Act, (section 119), provided that, if the excess quantity could be easily separated, the goods could not be rejected. Another instance may arise in the case of goods indented for from abroad. Suppose a bale of piece-goods of 50 pieces is ordered, and when supplied, it contains 52 pieces; under the circumstances if the bale is rejected, the seller suffers great loss. It is to safeguard such cases that I want this amendment to be made.

Sir, I move.

Sir Dinshaw Mulla: Sir, I oppose this amendment also. The clause now provides that if a seller delivers to the buyer a larger quantity of goods than he contracted to sell, the buyer may accept the goods included in the contract and reject the rest or he may reject the whole. The proposal involved is the omission of the words mentioned in the amendment. Supposing, in the case mentioned by the Honourable Member, instead of 15,000 logs, 18,000 are sent; the question may then arise whether it is competent to the buyer to select the 15,000 best logs and to reject the 3,000 worst. It is with a view to avoid difficulties of this kind that these words have been retained "or he may reject the whole".

Mr. President: The question is:

"That in sub-clause (2) of clause 37 the words 'or he may reject the whole' be omitted."

The motion was negatived.

Clause 37 was added to the Bill.

Clauses 38 to 54 were added to the Bill.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That clause 55 stand part of the Bill."

Lala Rang Behari Lal: Sir, I move:

"That in sub-clause (2) of clause 55 the words 'and the goods have not been appropriated to the contract' be omitted."

These words, if not deleted, would be a source of increasing litigation and consequently troublesome for the mercantile community. It may be said in reply that similar provisions exist in the English Act. They may exist, but in adopting them, we have to see whether they are good or bad and whether they suit our country and would be conducive to the well being of the society, or would be a source of litigation and harassment. The principles on which suits for price of goods are allowed are that, on the completion of a sale by delivery of goods, or by the passing of property in the goods, the buyer becomes a debtor and as such he is bound to pay. Thus, these suits owed in debt and not in damages.

But in cases where the goods are not even appropriated to the contract, not to say of ascertainment and passing of property the action cannot be said to be for debt. It can neither be an action for damages, as the measure of damages is the difference between contract rate and market rate. In any case, before an action for damages can be sustained, the plaintiff must show his readiness and willingness, that is, appropriation of the goods. Thus, this suit is out of the two categories of a suit for debt or for damages. Under what category it will fall I am at a loss to comprehend.

Then, Sir, the Civil Procedure Code makes no provision for a suit of this type. In addition to this objection, the retention of this clause would give unnecessary advantage to the seller over the buyer. He can, even without appropriating the goods or without in the least showing his readiness and willingness or even preparation for performance, realise the price of the goods, and subsequently fail to appropriate or deliver the goods, and in cases where, after realising big amounts, the seller becomes insolvent, the poor buyer has practically no remedy. Therefore I submit, in order to protect the interests of buyers and to keep trade at its normal, the deletion of these words is essential. Sir, I move.

Sir Dinshaw Mulla: Sir, I oppose the amendment. There is no question of any poor buyer in this case, because what the clause says is this:

"Where under a contract of sale the price is payable on a day certain irrespective of delivery and the buyer wrongfully neglects or refuses to pay such price, the seller may sue him . . ."

So, here there is an express contract between the buyer and the seller that the price has to be paid on a certain day. Not only that, but that the price has to be paid irrespective of delivery: and further "where the buyer wrongfully neglects or refuses to pay". The Honourable Member says it is neither a suit for debt nor a suit for damages. But it is clearly a suit for the price and a suit for the price is a suit for debt; it could not possibly be a suit for damages or a suit for anything else. Such being the case, I oppose the amendment.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That in sub-clause (2) of clause 55 the words 'and the goods have not been appropriated to the contract' be omitted."

The motion was negatived.

Clause 55 was added to the Bill.

Clauses 56 to 60 were added to the Bill.

Mr. President: Clause 61.

12 Noon. Lala Rang Behari Lal: Sir, I do not wish to move my amendment.

Clauses 61 to 66 were added to the Bill.

Clause 1 was added to the Bill.

The Title and Preamble were added to the Bill.

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter: Sir, I beg to move that the Bill, as amended by the Select Committee, be passed.

The motion was adopted.

THE INDIAN CONTRACT (AMENDMENT) BILL.

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter (Law Member): Sir, I beg to move that the Bill to amend section 178 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872, as reported by the Select Committee, be taken into consideration. This Bill is consequential on clauses 27 and 29 of the Indian Sale of Goods Bill, which has just been passed. Clauses 27 and 29 deal with sales by ostensible owners, whereas section 178 of the Indian Contract Act deals with pledges by ostensible owners, and in this Bill we have brought section 178 into line with clauses 27 and 29.

Mr. President: The question is:

THE TRANSFER OF PROPERTY (AMENDMENT) BILL.

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter (Law Member): Sir, I beg to move that the Bill to amend the Transfer of Property (Amendment) Act, 1929, for a certain purpose be taken into consideration. As I explained when I introduced the Bill, this short amendment is necessary, because there was an unwitting omission in the Transfer of Property (Amendment) Act. We provided for a case where registration of a document was effected in a Presidency town, but we omitted to provide for a case where registration was effected in a sub-registry when properties scattered over different sub-registries were embodied in the same document, and it is to provide for that omission that this Bill is necessary.

The Honourable Sir James Crerar (Leader of the House): No, Sir; the business on the Agenda, having been very expeditiously transacted today, there is no business for tomorrow.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

Tuesday, 4th February, 1930.

The Assembly met in the Assembly Chamber of the Council House at Eleven of the Clock, Mr. President in the Chair.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

INFECTED GARMENTS RETURNED BY THE ORDNANCE CLOTHING DEPARTMENT.

204. Mr. Abdul Latif Sahib Farookhi: What is the remedy followed by the Ordnance Clothing Department for garments returned made up by the contractors during an epidemic season, that is when cholera or small-pox breaks out in the city? Will that remedy prove effective in the case of stained garments which may be infected by venereal diseases?

Mr. G. M. Young: The information is being obtained and will be furnished to the Honourable Member in due course.

GRANT OF A GRATUITY TO TEMPORARY COMMISSIONED MEDICAL OFFICERS.

205. Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: (a) What compensation do temporary commissioned medical officers get from Government when they are thrown out of the service?

(b) Is it a fact that there is a similar temporary service in England in the Royal Army Medical Corps and Royal Navy?

(c) If the reply to part (b) is in the affirmative, is it a fact that they get a gratuity of £300 after three years' service? If not, how much do they get?

(d) Do Government propose, in view of the hardship to such Indian medical officers owing to being discharged after serving for a number of years, to provide gratuity or bonus for them on termination of their temporary commission?

(e) If the answer to part (d) be in the negative, will Government be pleased to state full reasons for not extending a reasonable concession to such temporary officers after their having done so useful a service?

Mr. G. M. Young: (a) There is no question of compensation. Temporary officers are engaged on contracts renewable yearly. The terms offered are by no means unattractive. The rates of pay and allowances are the same as in the permanent service.

(b) and (c). Government have no information of the practice in the Royal Navy. In the Royal Army Medical Corps there is a system of temporary officers whose services are liable to termination at one month's notice on either side. No gratuity is paid.

INFECTED GARMENTS RETURNED BY THE ORDNANCE CLOTHING DEPARTMENT.

204. Mr. Abdul Latif Sahib Farookhi: What is the remedy followed by the Ordnance Clothing Department for garments returned made up by the contractors during an epidemic season, that is when cholera or small-pox breaks out in the city? Will that remedy prove effective in the case of stained garments which may be infected by venereal diseases?

Mr. G. M. Young: The information is being obtained and will be furnished to the Honourable Member in due course.

GRANT OF A GRATUITY TO TEMPORARY COMMISSIONED MEDICAL OFFICERS.

205. Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: (a) What compensation do temporary commissioned medical officers get from Government when they are thrown out of the service?

(b) Is it a fact that there is a similar temporary service in England in the Royal Army Medical Corps and Royal Navy?

(c) If the reply to part (b) is in the affirmative, is it a fact that they get a gratuity of £300 after three years' service? If not, how much do they get?

(d) Do Government propose, in view of the hardship to such Indian medical officers owing to being discharged after serving for a number of years, to provide gratuity or bonus for them on termination of their temporary commission?

(e) If the answer to part (d) be in the negative, will Government be pleased to state full reasons for not extending a reasonable concession to such temporary officers after their having done so useful a service?

Mr. G. M. Young: (a) There is no question of compensation. Temporary officers are engaged on contracts renewable yearly. The terms offered are by no means unattractive. The rates of pay and allowances are the same as in the permanent service.

(b) and (c). Government have no information of the practice in the Royal Navy. In the Royal Army Medical Corps there is a system of temporary officers whose services are liable to termination at one month's notice on either side. No gratuity is paid.

1. All applications for employment in the Political Department should be submitted officially through the proper channels, with information in the form attached. Such applications will be considered by the Government of India in the Foreign and Political Department, and each candidate will be duly informed, through the military authorities, of the result of his application. Applications should not be submitted until the applicant has passed all the prescribed examinations for admission to the Indian Army, and officers will not be appointed to the Department until they have qualified for promotion to the rank of Captain.

Officers are not ordinarily eligible for appointment to the Political Department if they are married.

2. The name of an accepted candidate for the Political Department will ordinarily be removed from the list (a) in the event of his marriage; or (b) if he should obtain any other permanent extra-regimental employ, e.g., in the Military Accounts Department; or (c) when he completes seven years' army service; or attains the age of twenty-seven years.

3. In making selections much weight will be given to linguistic attainments, especially Urdu, Hindi, Persian, in the languages specified in the margin. Pushtu, Arabic, Russian and French.

4. Officers selected for employment in the Political Department will be required to undergo a medical examination.

5. First appointments to the Political Department will ordinarily be made with effect from the 1st April in each year; and all officers, who are appointed to the Department, will be on probation for a period of not less than three years, from the date of first appointment. No officer will ordinarily be confirmed in the Department unless he is free from debt.

6. An officer, on first appointment to the Political Department will, as a general rule, be attached to a district in the United Provinces of Agra and Oudh for a period of not less than eighteen months, to undergo a course of training in revenue and judicial work similar to that prescribed for Assistant Collectors in that Province, and to acquire proficiency in Urdu. During this period he will be required to pass a departmental test, which will be identical with that prescribed for members of the Indian Civil Service in the United Provinces, except that (1) the use of books will be allowed in all subjects, except in Urdu and in Treasury and Accounts, (2) probationers will not be expected to pass the local examination in Hindi. Particular importance will be attached to a probationer's ability to speak Urdu fluently and in a manner befitting the occasion.

7. Should an officer fail to pass the departmental examination within the period of his training, he will ordinarily revert to military duty.

8. On the expiry of the period of preliminary training, a probationer will be posted for six months to a Native State or a Frontier District for training in political or frontier work. At the end of this period, his general knowledge of Indian History and Political subjects or frontier conditions will be tested by examination, which will be both oral and in writing and include questions on the following works:

9. During the period of an officer's probation, reports on his work and general suitability for the Political Department will be submitted once every six months, through the proper channels, by the Collector or Political Officer under whom he is serving. Should an officer marry during this period he will ordinarily revert to military duty.

FACTORIES FOR THE MANUFACTURE OF ARMS AND AMMUNITION.

208. *Dr. B. S. Moonje: (1) Will Government please state if there are Government and non-official factories in India for the manufacture of rifles and sporting guns, revolvers and pistols and also for the manufacture of ammunition for these firearms?

(2) If so, will Government please state:

(a) how many Government and how many non-official factories there are; and

(b) the names and addresses of these factories?

(3) Is there any provision made for admitting non-official apprentices for training with or without remuneration in these Government factories?

(4) If the reply to part (3) be in the negative, do Government propose to make this provision?

Mr. G. M. Young: The Government of India have no information regarding private factories, but inquiries have been made and the result will be communicated to the Honourable Member in due course. As regards Government factories, the answer is:

(1) Yes, there are Government factories for the manufacture of rifles and ammunition.

(2) Two. The Rifle Factory, Ishapore, and the Ammunition Factory, Kirkee.

(3) Yes, Sir. A scheme for the vocational training of boy artisans and apprentices is already in force. They are recruited periodically through a competitive examination open to the public, and undergo a 5 years' course of training with remuneration.

PAY OF THE NON-GAZETTED STAFF OF THE AUDIT OFFICE, INDIAN STORES DEPARTMENT.

209. *Lala Rang Behari Lal: 1. Will Government be pleased to state the date on which the memorials from the non-gazetted staff of the Audit Office, Indian Stores Department, praying for the continuance of the special pay attached to their posts, were received in the office of the Auditor General?

2. Is it a fact:

(a) that the memorialists mentioned in part 1, despairing of any decision, addressed a second memorial to His Excellency the Viceroy praying that the orders reducing their special pay might be held in abeyance pending a decision on their former memorials?

(b) that having failed to elicit any reply the memorialists refused to accept pay until their case was decided but continued to do their duties as faithfully as before?

(c) that there was abnormal delay on the part of the late Auditor General in submitting the memorials to the Government of India?

(d) that the memorials in question were not submitted by the late Auditor General to the Government of India until after the memorialists had acted in the manner referred to in part 2 (b) above?

3. (a) Is it a fact that only two-fifths of the special pay originally sanctioned for the non-gazetted staff of the Audit Office, Indian Stores Department, has been retained subject to the condition, that, if the growth of work which is stated to be spasmodic and abnormal at present, is proved to have become regular and normal in the meantime, then two-fifths of the special pay will also be wholly and finally withdrawn from 1st September, 1931?

(b) If the reply to part 3 (a) be in the affirmative, will Government be pleased to quote another instance from the history of Government service in India in which the staff of a civil accounts office were subjected to a similar condition in the past?

4. Will Government be pleased to state whether they are aware that the Government of India orders contained in Finance Department letter No. F./15/IX/R. 11/28, dated the 25th February, 1929, have created, among the staff of the Audit Office, Indian Stores Department, a sense of uncertainty and constant anxiety about their future?

5. Will Government be pleased to lay on the table complete proceedings originating with the sanction of a special pay for the non-gazetted staff of the Audit Office, Indian Stores Department, and leading up to the issue of orders on their memorials praying for the continuance of the special pay?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: 1. 7th June, 1929.

2. (a) The memorialists submitted a second memorial on the 31st August, 1929. The first memorial was then still under consideration.

(b) Government cannot say what the motive of the memorialists was. They acted as stated by the Honourable Member, and were immediately informed that their case was before the Government of India.

(c) No.

(d) The Finance Department had been apprised of the situation informally at an early stage. The memorialists, however, took the action to which the Honourable Member refers before the Auditor General had had sufficient time in which to consider adequately the various issues which the memorials had raised.

3. (a) The Honourable Member's version of the Government orders is sufficiently correct.

(b) So far as I know, there has never been an instance possessing similar features.

4. No. On the contrary, the assistants of the Audit Office, Indian Stores Department, reported to the late Auditor General, after the orders issued, their deep-seated loyalty and their gratitude to him for all that he had done on their behalf in the past. They asked the Auditor General to forgive them for their hasty action.

5. The answer is in the negative.

EXEMPTION OF MUSSALMANS FROM THE OPERATION OF THE CHILD MARRIAGE RESTRAINT ACT.

210. Khan Bahadur Makhdum Syed Rajan Bakhsh Shah: (a) Will Government please state whether a unanimously passed Fatwa of Jamiat-ul-Ulma Hind, which is a recognised religious Muslim association in India, has been received by the Government, requesting that the Muslim community be exempted from the operations of the Sarda Marriage Act?

(b) Are Government aware that a severe agitation is prevailing in the Muslim atmosphere throughout India against the Sarda Act and that the Mussalmans are constrained to use the weapon of civil disobedience for non-compliance with the Sarda Act provisions? If so, are Government prepared to consider the question of exemption of the Muslim community from the operations of the Sarda Marriage Act? If not, how do Government propose to redress the grievances of the Mussalmans against this Act?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: (a) Yes.

(b) Government are aware that there is considerable feeling among Muslims regarding the provisions of the Act. They trust, however, that the difficulties at present felt may be resolved on fuller discussion and consideration of the problem.

POWERS OF THE FINANCIAL COMMISSIONER OF RAILWAYS.

211. Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: (a) Is it a fact that the Honourable the Finance Member exercises much less control over the Railway Accounts Service than over the Indian Audit and Accounts Service, and that in respect of the former the Financial Commissioner of Railways exercises even the powers which in the case of the Indian Audit and Accounts Service are exercised only by the Governor General in Council?

(b) Is it a fact that no administrative head of any other superior service has such extensive powers?

(c) If so, are Government prepared to take early action to assimilate the post of Financial Commissioner, Railways, to that of heads of other departments?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: (a) In accordance with clause (a) of the Resolution passed by the Legislative Assembly on the 15th September, 1925, on each railway system, where accounts have been separated from audit, the accounting staff is under the orders of the Financial Commissioner of Railways for the purpose of appointments, promotions and transfers. Officers of the Railway Accounts service are railway officers on a par with officers in the superior revenue establishment of State Railways. The question whether appointments, promotions and transfers to certain of the higher posts in the Railway Accounts Department should be referred to the Railway and Finance Members is being considered.

(b) No head of a Department under the Government of India has similar powers.

(c) The Financial Commissioner of Railways is not the head of the Railway Accounts Department; that position is held by the Controller of Railway Accounts.

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: Will the Honourable Member repeat his reply to part (c) which I could not hear?

372

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

[4TH FEB. 1930.]

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: The Financial Commissioner of Railways is not the head of the Railway Accounts Department; that position is held by the Controller of Railway Accounts.

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: Is it a fact nevertheless that in regard to all the matters to which the Honourable Member referred in his reply the Financial Commissioner exercises much more powers than, say the Auditor General, in regard to posts in Class I of the Indian Audit Service?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: I think that point arises in connection with a subsequent question put by the Honourable Member. It will be covered by one of the answers which I am about to give.

PROMOTIONS IN THE RAILWAY ACCOUNTS SERVICE.

212. Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: (a) Is it a fact that in the Indian Audit and Accounts Service, all promotions to selection grade posts require the approval of the Governor General in Council and that even the postings and transfers of officers filling selection grade posts cannot be made by the Auditor General without the approval of the Finance Department?

(b) Is the approval of the same authorities obtained in the case of promotions and postings of selection grade officers of the Railway Accounts Service?

(c) If the answer to (b) be in the negative, will Government state if they propose to adopt the same procedure in the case of the Railway Accounts Service as has been in force for officers in the case of the Railway Audit Service?

(d) If Government do not propose to do so, will they state what control they propose to exercise over the Railway Accounts Service and in what manner?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: (a) Yes, except that the Auditor General can grant any officer in Class I of the Indian Audit Department any leave that may be admissible under rule and, subject to the control of the Governor General in Council, may transfer any such officer.

(b), (c) and (d). The procedure is not at present the same for the Railway Accounts Service, but, as I have explained in my answer to the Honourable Member's previous question, the matter is under consideration.

POWERS OF THE FINANCIAL COMMISSIONER OF RAILWAYS.

213. Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: (a) Is it a fact that the powers of all authorities in India, from the Governor General in Council downwards, have been defined?

(b) Is it a fact that, although the Railway Accounts Department has been placed under the control of the Financial Commissioner in his individual capacity, his powers in respect of this Department have been nowhere defined?

(c) Is it a fact that the result of this arrangement is that he exercises far more powers of sanctioning expenditure in the Railway Accounts Department than the Auditor General does in respect of the Indian Audit Department?

(d) Is it a fact that in some respects these powers are even more extensive than those exercised by the Governor General in Council in respect of the Indian Audit Department?

(e) If the answers to the above be in the affirmative, will Government state reasons for these differences and are they prepared to take immediate steps to remove them?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: (a) Generally speaking this is correct.

(b) No. Under the arrangements sanctioned by the Secretary of State, the Financial Commissioner of Railways is vested with the full powers of the Government of India to sanction railway expenditure, subject to the general control of the Finance Member, to whom he has direct access. These powers have been defined in the Government of India, Finance Department Resolution No. F-102-F. of the 21st June, 1926, a copy of which is in the Library, and apply to all railway establishments, including the railway accounts establishment.

(c) Yes, but the position of the Financial Commissioner, Railways, does not correspond to that of the Auditor General; it corresponds with regard to railway expenditure more closely to that of the Finance Secretary with regard to other expenditure of the Government of India.

(d) Yes. For the Governor General in Council has larger powers to sanction expenditure on railways without reference to the Secretary of State than on other Central subjects.

(e) For the reasons why the powers of the Governor General in Council to sanction expenditure on railways are more extensive, I would refer the Honourable Member to paragraph 125 and the following paragraphs of the Acworth Committee's Report, and for the reasons why these powers are, subject to the general control of the Finance Member, exercised by the Financial Commissioner of Railways instead of the Finance Secretary, to paragraphs 58, 113 and 114 of the Report. It was on a careful consideration of these recommendations that the present duties and responsibilities of the Financial Commissioner of Railways were assigned to him.

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: Is it a fact that the Acworth Committee in the paragraphs to which the Honourable Member has referred generally recommended that the Financial Commissioner should be independent of the control of the Finance Department?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: I think the Honourable Member has raised a rather complicated question. I do not know if he quite followed my answer.

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: May I assure the Honourable Member that I read the paragraphs in question this morning before I came to the House?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: Then I am quite content to take the information from the Honourable Member.

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: Is the Honourable Member aware that neither the first nor the second Assembly accepted the principles mentioned in the paragraphs to which the Honourable Member has referred in his reply?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: I am afraid I cannot give an answer without notice.

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: Is it a fact that, when the separation of Railway Accounts was given effect to in 1924, the Assembly considered that the control of the Finance Department over the Financial Commissioner would be real and not as general and, if I may say so, as illusory as the Honourable Member has represented it to be.

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: I think the opinion entertained by the Assembly at that time could only be determined from the Resolution that was then passed by the Assembly. I should hesitate to endorse what the Honourable Member has suggested as regards the views of the Assembly.

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: Is it a fact that the Assembly and the Public Accounts Committee have asked for a stricter control of the Finance Department over the Financial Commissioner?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: I am not aware of that.

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: May I ask whether the Finance Department itself is controlling the Financial Commissioner now, in response to the demands of the Public Accounts Committee, more strictly than it used to do before?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: I am afraid I cannot answer the Honourable Member with strict reference to the demands of the Public Accounts Committee, because I have not got that particular passage in my mind, but I can tell him that the Finance Department are perfectly satisfied now with the measure of control which they can exercise over the financial policy of the Railways.

Mr. M. S. Aney: May I just ask, with reference to the reply given that the Financial Commissioner of Railways is generally subject to the control of the Finance Member, whether an appeal in regard to Railway financial matters will lie to the Honourable the Finance Member or to the Honourable the Commerce Member?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: Appeal about what?

Mr. M. S. Aney: An appeal with regard to certain financial questions on orders from the Financial Commissioner of Railways. Will that appeal lie to the Honourable the Finance Member or to the Honourable the Commerce Member?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: I am afraid I must ask the Honourable Member to give notice of that question, because I do not follow on what subject the appeal is supposed to be lodged.

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: Is it proposed also to consider this matter along with other matters referred to in my previous question?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: No, Sir. Naturally, if the Government of India had reason to believe that the existing system was not giving satisfactory results, they would take the whole question into consideration. But I am not prepared to give any undertaking at present that the matter will be considered along with the question about promotions and transfers, to which I referred in a previous answer.

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: Why is it, Sir, that the powers of the Financial Commissioner in regard to the creation of new posts or new classes of services should be greater than, say, those enjoyed by the Secretary to the Government of India in the Finance Department? Will the Government of India say that this delegation of control to the Financial Commissioner has not led to any complication or will not lead to any complication in the future?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: The present system under which we are working, by which very large powers to sanction expenditure are delegated to the Financial Commissioner of Railways, subject to the control of the Finance Member, was adopted by the Government of India quite deliberately and for definite reasons. I think that it is quite impossible, within the limits of an answer to a supplementary question, that I should attempt to summarise these reasons.

FUNCTIONS OF THE FINANCIAL COMMISSIONER OF RAILWAYS.

214. *Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: (a) Is it a fact that the Financial Commissioner, Railways, although he is a representative of the Finance Department in the Railway Department charged with the responsibility of exercising financial control on behalf of the former over railway transactions is also a Member of the Railway Board and takes part in the day to day administration of the Railway Department and is a party to all decisions, administrative, financial, etc.?

(b) Are the arrangements in the Army and Postal Departments similar?

(c) Are Government prepared to take early steps to put an end to this anomalous position and confine the role of the Financial Commissioner to that of a vigilant representative of the Finance Department?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: (a) In accordance with the recommendations of the Acworth Committee, the Financial Commissioner of Railways is one of the officials composing the Railway Board and takes part with the Chief Commissioner and the three Members of the Board in all business which comes before the Board. Where the subject under discussion has no financial implications, he is, like the other three Members of the Board, under the orders of the Chief Commissioner who, under the Member of Council for Railways, is solely responsible for arriving at decisions on technical questions and for advising the Government of India on matters of railway policy. Where the subject has financial implications, he has the right, should he not be in agreement with the Chief Commissioner or with the Railway Department on the financial aspect, to refer the case to the Finance Member, to whom he has free access.

(b) No.

(c) It was the Government of India who recommended the adoption of these arrangements to the Secretary of State, in order to give effect to the view at which they arrived on a consideration of the Acworth Committee's Report, that the financial control over the operations of the Railway Department must be exercised not from without but from within, and by an officer who would himself be responsible for the promotion of efficiency and economic working of the administration.

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: May I ask whether the adoption of a different arrangement in the case of the Army and Postal Departments has prevented co-operation between the Financial Adviser and the administrative authorities?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: I did not wish to raise that point before. But in the rules made by the Governor General regarding the Standing Advisory Committees, it was laid down that their proceedings were strictly confidential. I quite recognise that it is impossible, in a great many cases, strictly to carry that out. But it has not been our practice, at any rate in the Commerce Department, so far as I know, to disclose the opinion of the Advisory Committee. But I can assure the Honourable Member that we have not the least desire to mislead the Standing Finance Committee on the point.

Mr. Sarabhai Nemchand Haji: Do I take it that Government are agreeable to give the Standing Finance Committee another opportunity to give its decision on this subject, now that it is in possession of this information?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: The scheme placed before the Standing Finance Committee did not limit the appointment to officials. It made provision for the appointment of both officials and non-officials. We did not ask the Standing Finance Committee to commit itself to the approval either of the appointment of officials or the appointment of non-officials. That I understand is the position.

PAY OF OFFICE STAFF OF THE ASSAM BENGAL RAILWAY.

217. Mr. Anwar-ul-Azim: (a) Will Government be pleased to state the basis on which the increments of the office staff are given by the Assam Bengal Railway?

(b) What method is adopted in giving increased pay to Muslims?

(c) Will Government be pleased to state whether increments are given by the authorities of the Assam Bengal Railway irrespective of the length of service, efficiency and honesty of the individual concerned?

(d) Will Government be pleased to give figures with regard to promotion only at the head office of the Company at Chittagong?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: With your permission, Sir, I propose to answer this and questions Nos. 219, 222 and 223 together. Inquiries are being made from the Agent of the Assam Bengal Railway and I will communicate with the Honourable Member as soon as I get his reply.

Mr. Anwar-ul-Azim: Will the Honourable Member be prepared to place the information on the table of the House in addition to communicating it to me?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: I am quite prepared to put a copy in the Library.

RECRUITMENT OF MUSLIM CLERKS BY THE ASSAM BENGAL RAILWAY.

218. Mr. Anwar-ul-Azim: (a) What was the number of clerks in the following offices of the Assam Bengal Railway on the 1st January, 1926, and how many of them were Muslims?

- (1) Agent's Office;
- (2) Chief Engineer's Office;
- (3) District Engineer's Office;
- (4) Assistant Engineer's Office;
- (5) Executive Engineer's Office;

- (6) Signal Engineer's Office;
- (7) Chief Auditor's Office;
- (8) Traffic Manager's Office;
- (9) District Traffic Superintendent's Office;

- (11) Loco. Superintendent at Pahartoli, and
- (12) Chief Medical Office.

(b) How many clerks have since been recruited in the offices mentioned in part (a) and how many of them are Muslims?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: (a) I would refer the Honourable Member to Appendix 'F' in Volume I of the Railway Board's Report on Indian Railways for 1926-27, a copy of which is in the Library. The statistics were formulated in this form after consultation with, and acceptance by, the Central Advisory Council for Railways, and Government consider that they give as much detail as is desirable or necessary for keeping a watch on the position on each railway to secure that their policy is carried out.

(b) Government have not got the information, and regret that they cannot undertake to call for it.

APPOINTMENT OF CHIEF CLERKS IN THE ASSAM BENGAL RAILWAY.

†219. Mr. Anwar-ul-Azim: Who are generally appointed Chief Clerks in the head office of the Assam Bengal Railway? What are their respective qualifications? Is there any Muslim Chief Clerk in the service of the Assam Bengal Railway? If not, why not?

APPOINTMENT OF TRAVELLING INSPECTORS OF ACCOUNTS IN THE ASSAM BENGAL RAILWAY.

220. Mr. Anwar-ul-Azim: (a) What educational test or otherwise is wanted by the Assam Bengal Railway in appointing their Travelling Inspector of Accounts?

(b) What is their total strength now, and how many of them are Muslims? Is it a fact that the present holders of the appointments, who are Indian Christians, are not even matriculates?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: With your permission, Sir, I shall reply to this and the next question together.

I am obtaining the information required from the Assam Bengal Railway and will communicate with the Honourable Member on its receipt and I will also place copies in the Library.

DEFALCATIONS IN THE ASSAM BENGAL RAILWAY OFFICES.

authority primarily and finally responsible for not checking, such defalcation? What loss has this Company sustained by defalcations of this nature during the last ten years?

(c) In view of these losses will Government be pleased to state if they are willing to have them investigated by an expert body appointed by the Government of India?

VACANCIES ON THE STAFF OF THE ASSAM-BENGAL RAILWAY.

†222. Mr. Anwar-ul-Azim: (a) Will Government be pleased to state whether it is a fact that the Agent of the Assam Bengal Railway, by his letter No. E. (b) If the answer to part (a) be in the affirmative, how many vacancies have been filled up since, and in which of the Muslim newspapers were they advertised by virtue of that circular?

APPOINTMENT OF MUSLIMS ON THE ASSAM-BENGAL RAILWAY.

†223. Mr. Anwar-ul-Azim: Will Government be pleased to state whether the Agent of the Assam Bengal Railway issued any instructions to the heads of departments by his letter No. 22-1-A., dated the 5th July, 1926, regarding Muslim representation in the service of the Assam Bengal Railway, and if so, with what result?

APPOINTMENT OF AN ADDITIONAL ASSISTANT SECRETARY IN THE COMMERCE DEPARTMENT.

224. Mr. Anwar-ul-Azim: Is it a fact that an additional Assistant Secretary has been added to the Commerce Department, and if so, with what object?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: A temporary appointment of Assistant Secretary has been created to cope with the increased work in the Department.

226. Mr. Anwar-ul-Azim: Is it a fact that the committee appointed to report on the desirability or otherwise of amalgamating the Railway Budget with the General Budget has been shelved? If so, why?

†For answer to this question, see answer to question No. 217.

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: Government have not heard of any proposal for amalgamating the Railway Budget with the General Budget. If, however, the Honourable Member refers to the Committee appointed to review the convention for the separation of Railway Finance, I may say that a meeting of the Committee will be called at an early date.

227. Mr. Anwar-ul-Azim: Will Government be pleased to state what amount has been actually paid to the Secretary of State for India in London during this financial year to meet the commitments of this Government?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: The total amount remitted to the Secretary of State up to the 28th January, 1930, is £24,190,000.

228. Mr. Anwar-ul-Azim: Will Government be pleased to state who are eligible for appointments as District Medical Officers in the State Railways, and in Company-managed Railways? How many District Medical Officers are there now in the East Indian, Eastern Bengal and Assam Bengal Railways, and how many of them are Indians, and how many of them are Muslims?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: A candidate for appointment as District Medical Officer on State-managed Railways must possess qualifications registrable under the Medical Act in force in Great Britain and Northern Ireland. The L.R.C.P. and M.R.C.S. degrees of London are sufficient qualifications for these appointments.

Information as regards Company-managed railways will be obtained and supplied to the Honourable Member.

The information asked for in the concluding portion of the question is as follows:

Railway.	Total No. of D. M. O.'s.	No. of Indians.	No. of Muslims.

SALARIES OF TEACHERS IN THE EAST INDIAN RAILWAY INDIAN HIGH SCHOOLS.

229. Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: Have the salaries of teachers in the East Indian Railway Indian High Schools been raised to the level of the rates prevailing in the United Provinces Government High Schools in accordance with the circular issued by the Railway Board in August last? If not, why not?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: The Railway Board issued orders on the 5th August last to the Agent, East Indian Railway, that the revised scale of pay for teachers in Indian High Schools was to be introduced with effect from the 1st April, 1929. At the same time a further communication was promised as to the manner in which the expenditure was to be met. I regret that there has been unnecessary delay in deciding the latter question, but final orders were issued on the 29th January. I am indebted to the Honourable Member for drawing attention to the matter.

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: May I take it that, in the next Railway Budget, provision will be made for raising the salaries of these teachers from the 1st April, 1929?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: Yes, Sir. The orders that the revised rates of pay were to have effect from 1st April, 1929, hold good.

SALARIES OF TEACHERS IN THE EAST INDIAN RAILWAY, INDIAN HIGH SCHOOLS.

230. Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: (a) Has the Director of Public Instruction, United Provinces, recommended lower rates of pay for the East Indian Railway Indian High Schools than are in force in Government High Schools?

(b) Are the East Indian Railway authorities considering the substitution of the scale proposed by the Director of Public Instruction, for that decided on by the Railway Board?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: (a) and (b). The information will be obtained and supplied to the Honourable Member.

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: Will the Honourable Member be good enough to place it on the table of the House?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: I cannot say off-hand what the volume of the material would be. If the statement is a short one, I have no objection to placing it on the table of the House. But if it turns out to be a lengthy document, it might be more convenient to place it in the Library.

SALARIES OF TEACHERS IN THE EAST INDIAN RAILWAY, INDIAN HIGH SCHOOLS.

231. Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: (a) Have the Railway Board laid down that the new rates of pay should apply only to men possessing educational qualifications equivalent to those required from teachers on corresponding rates of pay in Government High Schools in the United Provinces?

(b) Are they aware that, when the salaries were last revised in the United Provinces, the Local Government made the new scales applicable to all existing teachers whatever their qualifications?

(c) Are the Railway Board prepared to reconsider their decision and allow all existing teachers to benefit by the new scales of pay?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: (a) The orders of the Railway Board were that the new rates of pay would apply to each of the existing incumbents on the condition that he possessed educational qualifications equivalent to those laid down by the Local Governments for their teachers of corresponding rates of pay.

(b) No.

(c) Not on the information at present before the Board.

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: With regard to part (b) of my question, will the Honourable Member be good enough to make inquiries on the subject?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: Yes, Sir. I am quite sure that the Honourable Member would not have stated that things were as he alleged them to be unless he had good reasons for doing so.

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: Will the Honourable Member be also good enough to make inquiries from the Governments of Bengal, Bihar and Orissa with regard to the manner in which they gave effect to increases in the salaries of their educational employees?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: If the Honourable Member is prepared to assure me that he has reason to believe that the position in those provinces is the same as he believes it is in the United Provinces I shall make the inquiry he asks for.

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: To the best of my knowledge, it is so. My inquiries show that, even in Bengal and Bihar and Orissa, there was no difference made between existing teachers, whether they possessed superior or inferior qualifications.

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: In that case, on the strength of the Honourable Member's statement, I am prepared to make further inquiries.

UNSTARRED QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

INDIGENOUS AND IMPORTED GLASSWARE.

126. Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava: (a) Will Government please state what kind of glasswares are imported from foreign countries through British India, into Kashmir, Nepal, Afghanistan, Persia, Iraq, etc., and in what quantities?

(b) Is it a fact that customs duty on these goods is refunded by Government at the time of their being imported into the above territories, and that specially reduced freight rates are charged by Indian Railways for carrying these goods from the port to the railway stations from where they are imported into the above-mentioned territories?

(c) Are Government prepared to consider the desirability of reducing railway freight rates in the case of glassware manufactured in glass factories of India, to place them in a position of equality for trade competition in this connection with the foreign firms?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: (a) Government are not in possession of the information.

(b) In accordance with the principle that import duties are not intended to operate as transit duties, a drawback of import duties is allowed under certain conditions in respect of goods imported through British India into Kashmir, Nepal, Afghanistan and Persia. A rebate of railway freight is also allowed on goods carried over the Nushki-Duzdap Railway which have been booked from the ports of Bombay, Karachi and Calcutta for export to Persia or Afghanistan. For glassware the reduced charge thus made is higher than the special reduced rates charged on bookings by rail from stations where glass works are situated.

(c) Does not arise.

PROSECUTIONS FOR DISAFFECTION AGAINST NATIVE STATES.

127. Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava: (a) Will Government be pleased to state the entire procedure adopted in giving sanction to prosecutions under the Indian States (Protection against Disaffection) Act of 1922?

(b) On whose initiative is the matter started and what channels does it pass through before the final sanction of the Governor General in Council is accorded?

(c) Is the whole material for a prosecution submitted to the Law Officers of the Crown and is their opinion in writing taken before the final sanction?

(d) Who represents the Crown in these cases? Is it a fact that outside persons not in Government service and not under Government control are allowed to represent the Crown in these cases? If so, why?

(e) Who pays the cost of these prosecutions?

(f) Who selects the place where a prosecution is launched, and on what considerations?

Mr. E. B. Howell: (a), (b) and (c). On receipt through the Political Department of an application on behalf of a Ruling Prince or Chief for authority to institute proceedings under section 5 of the Act, the Governor General in Council obtains the advice of the Law Officers, which is recorded in writing after examination of the whole material before them, and if he is satisfied that there is ground for thinking that a prosecution is justified, sanction to prosecute is accorded.

(d) Where the Governor General in Council is of opinion that the case is one in which the Government of India should launch a prosecution, the services of the Public Prosecutor would ordinarily be employed. In cases in which the complaint is filed with the authority of the Governor General in Council, it is for the complainant to make his own arrangements for representation.

(f) The complainant. The complaint must be filed in a court having jurisdiction under section 177 et seq. of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

PROMOTION TO OFFICERS' GRADE ON THE GREAT INDIAN PENINSULA RAILWAY.

129. Mr. N. C. Kelkar: (a) With reference to Mr. Parsons' reply to starred question No. 781 of the 26th February, 1929, regarding promotion to officers' grade of subordinates on the Great Indian Peninsula Railway, will Government be pleased to state whether it is a fact that a subordinate junior to the five acting officers whose confirmation was under consideration has already been confirmed?

(b) If the answer to part (a) is in the affirmative, will Government be pleased to state the reasons for overlooking the claims of the senior men?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: I have called for certain information from the Agent, Great Indian Peninsula Railway, and will communicate with the Honourable Member when his reply is received.

PROMOTION TO OFFICERS' GRADE ON THE GREAT INDIAN PENINSULA RAILWAY.

130. Mr. N. C. Kelkar: (a) Will Government be pleased to state the reasons for delaying the confirmation of the four out of the five subordinates referred to in starred question No. 11, asked by Mr. Joshi on the 1st February, 1928, regarding the number of Indians and Anglo-Indians officiating in the officers' grade in certain Departments of the Great Indian Peninsula Railway?

(b) What steps do Government propose to take so that these four men may not suffer any loss in regard to seniority and position in the cadre on account of the delay in their confirmation? If none, why not?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: (a) The subordinates in question have been considered, along with others, for promotion to the officers' grade in vacancies that have occurred in the last two years, but have not so far been selected for promotion.

(b) I must point out that these subordinates have no title to promotion, and that no question, therefore, arises of compensation for delay in confirmation. If any of the four subordinates are selected for promotion, the position of the men selected in the cadre of the Superior Revenue Establishment will be settled at the time.

LEAVE RULES ON THE GREAT INDIAN PENINSULA RAILWAY.

131. Mr. N. C. Kelkar: (a) With reference to Mr. Parsons' reply to starred question No. 784 of the 26th February, 1929, regarding rules for leave salary of subordinates officiating in officers' posts, will Government be pleased to state whether it is the intention of the Government that these acting officers should get the leave they earn as officers?

(b) Are Government aware that the leave rules applicable to officers and Indian subordinates are different on the Great Indian Peninsula Railway?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: (a) No.

ADMISSION TO THE AUXILIARY FORCE OF INDIANS ON THE GREAT INDIAN PENINSULA RAILWAY.

132. Mr. N. C. Kelkar: (a) Will Government be pleased to state whether it is a fact that, in terms of the service agreement, the Anglo-Indian and European employees, both subordinates and officers, are enrolled as members of the Great Indian Peninsula Railway battalion of the Auxiliary Force, whereas this privilege is denied to the Indian employees, both subordinates and officers, of the Railway?

(b) If the answer to part (a) is in the affirmative, do Government propose to remove the racial distinction? If not, why not?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: (a) In the service agreement in force on the Great Indian Peninsula Railway for Anglo-Indian and European subordinate employees, there is a clause which makes membership of the Auxiliary Force, India, compulsory. There is no such clause in the agreement signed by officers or in the agreement signed by Indian subordinate employees.

(b) Government will consider whether any and, if so, what action is required.

PROMOTION TO SUPERIOR SERVICE ON RAILWAYS.

133. Mr. N. C. Kelkar: (a) With reference to the reply to part (c) of starred question No. 779 of the 26th February, 1929, regarding the promotion of Indian subordinates on the Great Indian Peninsula Railway, will Government be pleased to state how many men were permanently promoted each year to the Superior Service from the subordinate and Local Services of the East Indian, North Western and Eastern Bengal Railways as well as from the subordinate establishment of the Great Indian Peninsula Railway since 1925 to date?

(b) Will Government be pleased to state what procedure is followed in working up a proper share of Indian recruitment from subordinate to Superior Services, and how is the allotment of the number of vacancies made to the East Indian, North Western, Eastern Bengal and Great Indian Peninsula Railways?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: (a) The information asked for is given below:

(b) The number of vacancies to be filled each year in each of the Superior Services is first ascertained and with due regard to the regulations for recruitment to each of the services the share allotted for promotion from the subordinate services is then calculated. No separate allotment of vacancies is made for each railway, as promotion is made by strict selection of the most qualified candidate from all State-managed railways.

PROMOTION TO OFFICERS' GRADE ON THE GREAT INDIAN PENINSULA RAILWAY.

134. Mr. N. C. Kelkar: (a) Will Government be pleased to state what leave reserve of officers has been provided for the various Departments of the Great Indian Peninsula Railway, and what percentage does this reserve bear to the total number of officers employed in each Department?

(b) Is it a fact that 16 subordinates in the Transportation and 9 subordinates in the Commercial Departments of the Great Indian Peninsula Railway have been continuously acting as officers for a considerably long period?

(c) If the answer to part (b) is in the affirmative, will Government be pleased to say if the subordinates officiating for a period of five years and over will be absorbed in the additional leave reserve? If not, why not?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: (a) There are at present no leave reserve posts.

(b) The question of providing a leave reserve is under the consideration of Government.

(c) Their claims for promotion will be carefully considered.

LEAVE RULES ON THE GREAT INDIAN PENINSULA RAILWAY.

135. Mr. N. C. Kelkar: (a) Is it a fact that a subordinate acting as an officer on the Great Indian Peninsula Railway enjoys the same rights and privileges as are enjoyed by the permanent officers of the Railway?

(b) Are Government aware that the Indian officers who come under class "C" of the Leave Rules, are affected more adversely than the Anglo-Indian or Statutory Indian officers who come under class "B" of the Leave Rules?

(c) Is it a fact that the average leave pay system was introduced with the object of removing the hardships imposed on officiating officers, and if so will Government please issue a clear statement as to the position of these men when they proceed on leave?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: (a) In some, but not in all matters.

(b) Yes.

(c) The answer to the first part of this question is in the affirmative. The special arrangement introduced on the Great Indian Peninsula Railway gives subordinates who had acted continuously as officers for three years or longer the benefit, while on leave, of the pay drawn by them during the last 12 months of their officiating tenure.

OFFICERS OF THE GREAT INDIAN PENINSULA RAILWAY ADMITTED TO NON-ASIATIC DOMICILE.

136. Mr. N. C. Kelkar: (a) Will Government be pleased to state the number of officers in the Great Indian Peninsula Railway originally regarded as Statutory Indians but subsequently admitted to be of non-Asiatic domicile and what was the overseas pay drawn by such men with back effect?

(b) Is it a fact that some cases decided by the Railway Board as not coming under non-Asiatic domicile were subsequently admitted to this class?

(c) What means are employed by the Railway Board to verify the answers furnished to the questionnaire issued for proving non-Asiatic domicile?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: I am making inquiries from the Agent and will communicate with the Honourable Member on receipt of his reply.

ACTING ALLOWANCES OF CLERKS IN THE GREAT INDIAN PENINSULA RAILWAY OFFICES.

137. Mr. N. C. Kelkar: (a) Will Government be pleased to state whether it is a fact that in the Claims Branch of the Chief Traffic Manager's Office, Great Indian Peninsula Railway, clerks in the grades of Rs. 80 and Rs. 120 are denied the privilege of drawing the acting allowances while working in the places of men of higher grades, whereas this privilege is granted to the staff of the General and Rates Branches of that office?

(b) If the answer to part (a) is in the affirmative, what steps do Government propose to take in order to remove the hardship? If none, why not?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: I am calling for information and will communicate with the Honourable Member on its receipt.

STATE RAILWAY FINES FUND.

138. Mr. N. C. Kelkar: Will Government be pleased to state what progress has been made in connection with the scheme for the better management of the State Railway Fines Fund and when they hope to introduce it?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: The replies from Railway Administrations have been received and a preliminary draft of the proposed rules for the establishment of a staff Benefit Fund is now under consideration of the Government.

If it is eventually decided to constitute the Fund, it is hoped to start it from the 1st April, 1931.

LEAVE RULES OF STATE RAILWAYS.

139. Mr. N. C. Kelkar: (a) Is it a fact that, in reply to the deputation of the All-India Railwaymen's Federation, Government stated that they hoped to introduce the new leave rules for the State Railway employees in December, 1929?

(b) Is it a fact that these rules have not yet been introduced, and if so, when are they likely to be introduced?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: (a) No.

(b) It is hoped that they will be issued in the course of the next few months.

PERSIAN CARPETS PURCHASED FOR OFFICERS OF THE GREAT INDIAN PENINSULA RAILWAY.

140. Mr. N. C. Kelkar: Is it a fact that new Persian carpets were purchased for (a) the Chief Transportation Superintendent, and (b) the Deputy Transportation Superintendents, Great Indian Peninsula Railway, during the year 1928-29? If so, will Government be pleased to state the cost of such carpets?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: No Persian carpets were purchased. One Anglo-Turkey and eight Mirzapur carpets were purchased for their offices at a cost of Rs. 3,650.

ADMINISTRATION OF FINE FUNDS ON THE GREAT INDIAN PENINSULA RAILWAY.

141. Mr. N. C. Kelkar: Will Government be pleased to state the total amount of fines collected from the Indian, Anglo-Indian and European employees of the Great Indian Peninsula Railway during the year 1928-29, and the amount spent therefrom for the welfare of the Indian, Anglo-Indian and European employees of the Railway during that year?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: The total amount of fines collected from employees of the Great Indian Peninsula Railway during 1928-29 was Rs. 51,898, and the disbursements from the Fine Fund during that year were as follows:

						Rs.
Hospitals	..	..	..	..	..	342
Schools	..	..	..	..	..	2,335
Recreation Clubs	..	..	..	..	..	44,781
Miscellaneous	..	..	..	..	..	24,378
Total						71,836

The amount of fines collected and expenditure incurred is not recorded by communities, so I am afraid the information on this point desired by the Honourable Member is not procurable.

QUARTERS FOR CLERKS OF THE RAILWAY CLEARING ACCOUNTS OFFICE.

142. Mr. N. C. Kelkar: Will Government be pleased to state what progress has been made in connection with the provision of quarters for the clerks of the Railway Clearing Accounts Office and when the quarters are likely to be made available to them?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: I would refer the Honourable Member to the reply given on the 20th January, 1930, to the Revd. J. C. Chatterjee's question No. 67.

PAY OF INSPECTORS OF POST OFFICES AND RAILWAY MAIL SERVICE.

143. Mr. N. C. Kelkar: (a) Will Government be pleased to state whether it is a fact that, as a result of the recent revision (September, 1927) of pay of Inspectors of Post Offices and Railway Mail Service, those officials who have put in more than 15 years' service as Inspectors, and others who were confirmed immediately before the revision, are drawing the same pay, viz., Rs. 160?

(b) When the Time-scale was introduced in 1919, were the Inspectors given one increment for every two years of service rendered as Inspectors?

(c) Are Government aware of the hardship and discontent amongst the Inspectors of Post Offices and Railway Mail Service, and are Government prepared to consider the question of advance increments on the same basis in exercise of powers under Fundamental Rule 27?

Mr. H. A. Sams: The attention of the Honourable Member is invited to the replies given to Mr. N. M. Joshi's similar unstarred questions Nos. 15 and 318 in the Legislative Assembly on 1st February 1928 and 11th March 1929 respectively.

PROMOTIONS IN THE INCOME-TAX DEPARTMENT, BOMBAY.

144. Mr. N. C. Kelkar: (a) What are the rules to enable the clerks of the Income-tax Department, Bombay, to rise to higher posts such as Inspectors, Examiners and Income-tax Officers?

(b) Is it a fact that many clerks who are either seniormost or experienced or well qualified were passed over and outsiders appointed whenever such high posts fell vacant? If so, why?

(c) Is it a fact that recently an Examiner with a few months service in the Income-tax Department to his credit was made an Income-tax Officer, while there were many who had passed the Income-tax Officers' examination?

(d) Is it because all those were unfit? If the answer is in the affirmative, why were they allowed to appear for the examination? Why was not permission to sit at the examination withheld as in the case of so many others?

(e) Is it a fact that the Examiner referred to in part (c) was recruited as an Examiner direct from some other Local Government Office? What are his qualifications which made him better qualified for the post than many having accountancy diplomas and working in the Income-tax Office itself? What was the nature of his work in his previous office to warrant his being given the officers' grade in a short space of time? What is his experience in accountancy?

(f) Is it a fact that knowledge of accountancy is necessary for any one to become an Examiner? Do outsiders recruited directly to such posts possess any such knowledge? If not, why were those, working in the office and possessing those qualifications, overlooked?

(g) Is it a fact that relationship and acquaintance count much in securing highly paid posts?

(h) Is it a fact that many officers are exempted from passing the prescribed Income-tax Officer's examination and subsequently confirmed? If the answer is in the affirmative, why is such a procedure adopted?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: Parts (a) and (h). I am calling for a report, after which I will furnish a written reply to the Honourable Member.

I am also calling for a report with reference to parts (c), (d), (e) and (f), though I would suggest to the Honourable Member that, as these questions are obviously put with reference to some particular case which he has in mind, the proper course for any person who is aggrieved by any action of the Commissioner of Income-tax is to address the Central Board of Revenue.

As regards part (b), I cannot admit the implication, while as regards part (g), I wish to repudiate in the strongest possible manner the insinuation directed in this part of the question against an Indian gentleman in a high official position in whose absolute impartiality I have complete confidence. It is also obvious that it is impossible to reply to a question that relates to no specific fact.

PROFESSIONAL ACCOUNTANTS EMPLOYED BY THE INCOME-TAX DEPARTMENT, BOMBAY.

145. Mr. N. C. Kelkar: (a) How many public accountants are there practising in the Income-tax Department, Bombay? Are they required to get a licence just as lawyers by a payment of any prescribed fee?

(b) If the reply to the last question in part (a) is in the negative, have Government considered the question of framing rules to that end?

(c) Has any complaint been received by the Commissioner against any accountant? If the answer is in the affirmative, what action has been taken against that accountant?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: (a) and (c). The Government have called for a report.

(b) As the Honourable Member is perhaps aware, the Government have in the Indian Income-tax (Amendment) Bill, 1929, which is now before a Select Committee, proposed an amendment of section 61 of the Indian Income-tax Act restricting the right of professional accountants to appear in income-tax proceedings. This amendment is still under consideration by the Select Committee.

THE SUPERINTENDENT OF ARCHÆOLOGICAL SURVEY, WESTERN CIRCLE.

146. Mr. N. C. Kelkar: (a) What is the pay of a Superintendent of the Archæological Survey and what are the maximum qualifications deemed essential for such appointment?

(b) Is it a fact that the present Superintendent of Archæology in the Western Circle is only a matriculate and has no higher qualifications?

(c) Is it a fact that, ever since his appointment to gazetted rank, he has been stationed in Poona continuously for over nine years, and that he has never applied for leave, nor has been transferred during this period?

147. Mr. N. C. Kelkar: (a) Is it a fact that there are three vacancies in the lowest selection grade in the Accounts Department of the Calcutta General Post Office?

(b) Is it a fact that recommendations to appoint qualified accountants to these three posts were sent by the head of the Bengal and Assam Circle to the Director General of Posts and Telegraphs six months ago?

(c) Will Government be pleased to state when the orders of the Director General on the subject are likely to be issued?

(d) Do Government propose to decide the matter at an early date?

(e) Will Government be pleased to state whether these appointments are still held by officials who have not passed the Postal Accountants' examination?

148. Mr. N. C. Kelkar: (a) Is it a fact that the Director General of Archæology received complaints about:

(1) work done by one Mr. G. C. Chandra of the Archæological Department in connection with the Poona Shanwar Wada excavations and the want of technical knowledge and incapacity disclosed by him in this work;

(2) Mr. Chandra's excessive and irregular claims for halting and travelling allowances contained in his travelling allowance bills submitted by him;

(3) irregular use of the official funds at his disposal;

(4) travelling allowances due to peons not being paid, where the travelling allowances were claimed and received by the Superintendent himself; and

(5) vouchers submitted or not submitted by the Superintendent for his bills?

(b) If the answer to part (a) be in the affirmative, will Government state what inquiry has been made into these grievances, complaints and irregularities and what action has been taken thereupon?

Sir Frank Noyce: (a) and (b). Yes; anonymous complaints have been received by the Director General of Archæology. One of these contains specific allegations and is under investigation.

SHORT NOTICE QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

TREATMENT OF POLITICAL PRISONERS.

Mr. B. Das: (a) Has the attention of Government been drawn to a statement made by Mr. Bhagat Singh before the Lahore Magistrate, as published in the Hindustan Times of the 30th January, 1930, regarding a letter addressed to the Honourable the Home Member by the accused in the Lahore conspiracy case, threatening to resume hunger strike within a week in case promises given regarding special treatment to political prisoners and removal of racial distinction by the Honourable the Home Member in the Simla Session of the Assembly be not redeemed?

(b) Will Government be pleased to state what action they have taken or propose to take in pursuance of the policy enunciated by them regarding the change of Jail Rules for political prisoners?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: (a) I have received the petition from the under-trial prisoners in the Lahore conspiracy case, referred to in the question. I must make it plain that, while a comprehensive inquiry into the present Jail Rules was undertaken by the Government of India and further enlarged in response to views expressed in this House, no assurances of the nature which the Honourable Member's question appears to suggest, were given to these prisoners by the Government of India, and that the decision regarding the changes in the Jail Rules now under consideration cannot be affected by the course of conduct they may choose to pursue.

(b) In pursuance of the inquiry above referred to, we consulted Local Governments, and thereafter held a Conference of provincial representatives on December 9th and 10th. As a result of the Conference, tentative conclusions on the more important points were reached, but a further reference to Local Governments was recommended by the Conference in regard to certain matters on which there was some divergence of view and practice. Their replies on these matters have now been received, and I am ready to confer with the party leaders at any time convenient to them, in accordance with the undertaking given by me on the 16th September last.

Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: Will Government be pleased to state when these Jail Rules are likely to be finished and when they are coming into operation?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: I hope to have a very early opportunity of discussing the matter with the Leaders of Parties in this House and thereafter I shall take the earliest opportunity of making the necessary further communications to the Local Governments.

Mr. M. S. Aney: May I ask the Honourable Member whether any reply has been sent by the Government of India to the petition sent by Bhagat Singh and others, in which they state that the promised reforms of the jail conditions have not been yet made?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: So far as the petition refers to questions of the treatment of these particular prisoners, the matter is for disposal by the Local Government, to whom the petition has been sent.

Mr. M. S. Aney: Am I to understand that there was no petition addressed by them to the Government of India?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: No, Sir. I have stated that a petition was received from them.

Mr. B. Das: With reference to the reply to part (a), do I take it that the Government of India have passed no orders regarding racial discrimination in the treatment of prisoners?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: No, Sir; no orders have yet been passed, because it was understood that, before final orders were passed, I should have an opportunity of further consultation with Leaders of Parties in this House.

DROP IN THE PRICE OF SILVER.

Sir Purshotamdas Thakurdas: (a) Has the attention of Government been drawn to the unprecedented drop in the price of silver?

(b) Is it a fact that the price of silver about 25th January last in sterling was under the lowest sterling price by about 2d. per ounce and more than Rs. 5 or 6 under the rupee price known in the last seventy years or more?

(c) Are Government aware that this drop in the price of silver seriously affects the savings of the masses of India and causes them grave anxiety?

(d) Do Government think of taking any steps to prevent further loss to the masses in their savings, and if so will Government be pleased to indicate what steps they intend to take?

(e) Does this depreciation of the savings of the masses of India give any anxiety to Government? If so, do Government feel that effective and substantial efforts to prevent further depreciation of the hard-earned savings of the masses are desirable?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: (a) Yes.

(b) During the last seventy years the price of silver was lowest in November, 1902, when the London price fell to $21\frac{1}{8}$ pence per standard ounce and the rupee price to Rs. 56, annas 12 per 100 tolas. On 24th January, 1930, the London price was $20\frac{3}{8}$ pence per standard ounce and the rupee price Rs. 48, annas 8 per 100 tolas.

(c) Government are aware that the habit of using silver as a store of value in the form of ornaments or bullion is widespread, and that the drop in the price of silver has resulted in a large depreciation of these holdings. Though they have no direct evidence that grave anxiety is being caused to the masses of India, they realise that holders of silver must be greatly disturbed by the fall in the value of their holdings.

(d) Government are informed that the primary influences causing the drop in the price of silver during the last year were heavy sales by China and Indo-China, while sales by various countries of surplus silver no longer required for coinage were a contributory influence. The depreciation of the value of silver stores in India has, therefore, been due to factors outside the control of Government, except in so far as they have sold silver from the Currency Reserve. Government do not consider that it would be to the advantage of India to hold indefinitely the very large stock of silver which has now accumulated in the Currency Reserve, but they propose to continue to regulate their sales so that they will have the minimum effect on the price of silver.

(e) Government are naturally anxious that the savings of the people of India should not depreciate in value, but they doubt if efforts on their part can influence the value of a commodity which is determined mainly by influences working outside India. If the Honourable Member has any concrete proposals to make for suitable action which might be taken by Government, I shall be glad to listen to his suggestions, subject always to the obligation of Government to consider the interests of the country as a whole and not only those of holders of a particular class of property.

Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya: Will the Honourable Member be pleased to state what is the amount of silver that has been sold by Government during the last two years?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: I have from time to time given information to this House about the sales of Government silver. I am afraid I should require notice of this question as I have not got the figures with me.

Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya: Can the Honourable Member give me rough figures? I do not want any exact figures.

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: I am afraid I cannot give any figures off-hand. I shall be pleased to look into the matter, but in giving that assurance I wish to make this point clear,—a point which I have made clear on many other occasions in this House,—that it is not in the interest of the public that Government should give up-to-date information of their operations. I will endeavour to give the Honourable Member the fullest information that I can, consistently with the public interest.

Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya: Will the Honourable Member be pleased to give a rough idea of the amount of silver which has been sold? I do not want any detailed information.

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: I have already said that I am not going to give the Honourable Member any figures until I look up my own record. I will look up the records, and if the Honourable Member likes to ask another short notice question, I will give him information on the subject. I can however tell him this, that the total stocks of silver held by the Government now stand at 108 crores, and a year ago they stood at under 100 crores, so that, in spite of Government sales, the stocks of silver are still increasing.

Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya: Is that due to purchases made by Government during the interval or to any other cause? If Government have been selling silver, how is it that the stock has increased? Is it due to purchases made by Government, or is there any other contributory cause?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: The stock has increased owing to the very large return of silver rupees from circulation.

Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya: Will the Honourable Member state whether silver has not been sold by Government largely to maintain the exchange at 1s. 6d.

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: That, Sir, has not been the primary object. The reason for selling silver is that it is a very uneconomical way in which to hold the currency reserves of Government.

Silver earns no interest; if it is sold and converted into sterling securities, they earn interest and that is to the advantage of the public.

Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya: Government being aware of the large hoards of silver with the people, and also of the fact that China and other countries have been selling silver, do they not realise that they were contributing largely to the drop in the price of silver by selling their own silver at this juncture?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: I have already stated in answer to my Honourable friend Sir Purshotamdas Thakurdas that Government sales of silver will be regulated so as to have the minimum effect on the price of silver.

Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya: In view of the enormous loss inflicted by the fall in the price of silver upon the mass of the people, who hold their savings in silver, do not Government think that it is their duty to stop the sale of silver altogether at this juncture?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: I am afraid I could not go so far as to say that. It is a question of weighing the advantages on one side against the disadvantages on the other. As I have already stated, it is a very uneconomic way in which to hold the currency reserves, to lock them up in stocks of silver which earn no interest. On the other hand I fully realise the effect of a fall in the price of silver on this country and on the large masses of people in the country. But, as I have explained in my original answer, it is not primarily the action of the Government of India which has brought about this fall. We are witnessing now a world movement as regards silver. Silver is an article which is produced on a very large scale as a by-product in the production of other metals. Therefore, contrary to the experience of what happens in connection with other metals, the total amount of production does not necessarily go down with the fall in prices. At the same time the use of silver as a medium of currency is steadily decreasing. As I have already explained, China and Indo-China have sold very large quantities of silver in the past year. At the same time practically every country is reducing the percentage of fineness of its silver currency. The British Government, for example, since 1920 has silver coinage of 50 per cent. fineness instead of 92 as previously. That means that the current demand for silver for currency is very much less than it was, and at the same time large stocks of silver have been released. It is thus really a combination of action in a great number of countries in the world that has brought about the present situation in the silver market. The action of the Government of India is only one small contributory cause to this general result.

Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya: I am surprised that the Honourable Member should say it is a small contributory cause. May I ask the Honourable Member again to consider whether, in view of the knowledge that the Government possessed of the decreasing use of silver in other countries, it was not the duty of the Government of India to stay their hands and not sell their own silver and thereby add to the causes which were bringing about its depreciation?

Mr. Arthur Moore: May we not assume that the Government. . . .

Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya: May I have an answer to my question before the Honourable Member puts his question?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: My answer to the Honourable Member's question is this. After weighing up all considerations on both sides, the Government of India decided, in accordance really with the recommendations of the last Royal Commission on Currency, that it was in the public interest that silver holdings should be reduced. That decision was taken having regard to the public interests as a whole.

Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya: My point, Sir, is this. . . .

Mr. President: Mr. Arthur Moore.

Mr. Arthur Moore: May we assume that the Government will refrain, in its own interests, from excessive sales at a moment when prices are disadvantageous?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: The question whether the price is disadvantageous or not depends on a long view of the market prospects. It is quite possible that silver may have stabilised itself now at a new level. As that may prove to be the case I certainly could not go so far as to say that the Government would refrain from selling silver at about the present level. On the other hand, taking a shorter view, it is obviously undesirable to put out large stocks for sale on the market at a time of violently fluctuating prices, when the market is exceptionally weak and disturbed. Those are the considerations which will be weighed by the Government in determining their policy as regards the sale of silver.

Sir Purshotamdas Thakurdas: Of the three countries which have been selling silver, is it a fact that India has sold the largest quantity?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: I am afraid that is a question which I cannot answer without notice.

Sir Purshotamdas Thakurdas: Of the three countries which have been selling silver, is it a fact that the other two countries have been selling silver in order that they may get on to a gold standard?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: That again is a question which I cannot answer without notice.

Sir Purshotamdas Thakurdas: Is it a fact that the last Royal Commission on Currency said that, if silver was sold, it should be replaced by gold assets?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: As far as I recollect, the Currency Commission did not actually go so far as to say that. They sketched out a programme for gradual reduction of the silver holdings, and they also sketched out a programme for gradual increase in the holdings of gold and gold securities. I informed the Honourable Member some time ago, in answer to a question, of the extent to which holdings in gold and gold securities had increased since the date of the Currency Commission's Report, and I think I was able to show that, in all the circumstances, the rate of increase had not been entirely unsatisfactory. But, when the Currency Commission reported, the stocks of silver held were something like 80 crores, and I do not think that there is anything in the Report of the Currency Commission to suggest that they ever contemplated that the holding of silver would increase in the way in which it has increased during the last three years. As far as I know, the Government have followed in spirit the recommendations of the Currency Commission because the proceeds of sale of silver have always been invested in sterling securities.

in order to suggest his postponement of any statement pending an opportunity for further discussion after His Excellency had returned. I had no reason to suppose that the President intended to make a statement when the House met as he had given me no intimation to that effect; but on receipt of His Excellency's telegram I at once telephoned to the President's house intimating that I had a very urgent matter which I wished to discuss with him personally. I was informed that he was unable to receive me and I accordingly wrote to him immediately repeating my request that I might see him at any time convenient to him before the House met. To that communication I received no reply.

Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya: In view of the urgency of the matter, could not the Honourable the Home Member go down to the house of the President to meet him?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: I should have been prepared to do so if the suggestion had been made to me.

Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya: Was there a definite indication that the President would not meet the Honourable Member, or was it a matter of the Honourable Member not being able to get the President on the telephone?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: The answer I received apparently from a domestic in the President's house was, firstly, that the President was having his dinner, and later, when I emphasised the urgency of the matter, I was informed that the President was in fact ill and in bed. I could hardly expect to convey verbally any further intimation to him in such circumstances.

Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya: The Honourable the Home Member's statement shows that, on the first occasion a domestic servant answered, but on the second occasion he was informed that the President was ill and in bed. Were not those circumstances sufficient to enable him to understand that the message had not been communicated to the President? In view of the fact that His Excellency the Viceroy had telegraphed to the Honourable Member to communicate his message to the President, did he not think it his duty to attempt, even on the morning of the following day, to see the President?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: After I heard that the President was in bed and recognising the urgency and importance of the matter, I immediately wrote to him a letter the purport of which is in possession of the House. To that letter, as I have already stated, I received no reply, and I think I was entitled to assume that, if the Honourable the President desired to see me, he would, having regard to the urgency of the matter which I had intimated, have so informed me.

Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya: In view of the fact that the Honourable the President was ill, could not the Honourable the Home Member understand that it might be due to his illness that he got no reply, and when the President came to the Assembly the next morning, did the Honourable the Home Member try to see the President in the President's room before coming to the House?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: I should have been perfectly prepared to respond to any request made by the Honourable the President in accordance with the terms of my letter.

Mr. M. A. Jinnah: In the letter to which the Honourable the Leader of the House refers, will he point out any word or words to indicate that he had received an important message from His Excellency the Viceroy and wanted to communicate that message to the President?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: I intimated that I had a very important and urgent matter to discuss with the President, and I think I was entitled to assume that it was hardly possible that, to such a request made by the Leader of the House to the President, he should receive no reply.

Mr. M. A. Jinnah: May I know why, when the Honourable the Home Member found that he had not received a reply to his letter, he did not send a demi-official letter conveying His Excellency's message to the President?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: I had already intimated that it was a very urgent and important matter on which I desired an interview. I considered that the communication which I desired to make to the President would most properly be made in an interview rather than in correspondence.

Mr. M. A. Jinnah: May I know why the Honourable the Home Member did not communicate the message to the President when he found that the President was not able to see him?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: I desired to make my communication in the most satisfactory way, which was by personal discussion, and as I have already stated, I could not have expected that the President would not be able to give the interview. Having asked for an interview, I had no reason to anticipate that my request would not be complied with.

Mr. M. S. Aney: Does the Honourable Member mean to say that the Honourable the Home Member would have seen the President only if the President would send for him, otherwise not? Is that the position?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: No, Sir, that was not my view of the position.

Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya: Can the Honourable the Home Member explain how, because he sent a letter to President Patel and did not receive a reply, he was justified in withholding the message from His Excellency the Viceroy altogether from the President?

Mr. M. A. Jinnah: May I know why the Honourable the Home Member when he found that a personal interview was not possible, did not communicate the message from His Excellency the Viceroy to the Honourable the President? Did not His Excellency the Viceroy say that his message should be conveyed to President Patel?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: As I have already stated, I had no reason to anticipate that my request would not be complied with.

Colonel J. D. Crawford: May I inquire from you, Sir, whether you got a telephonic message, and why you did not reply to the Honourable the Home Member's letter?

Mr. President: I expect that Honourable Members will not want me to give any answer now. I will only say that the facts about the message elicited so far are in some respects imperfect and in other respects incorrect. I do not wish to enter into a controversy at this stage; if and when the necessity arises for me to make a statement, I will do so.

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: May I say a word, Sir? It would be of great advantage to me if you could tell me in what respect my answers were incorrect.

Mr. President: I received no telephonic communication from the Honourable the Leader of the House. Does the Honourable Member want to know anything more?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: May I ask you, Sir, to state . . .

Mr. President: The Honourable Member cannot cross-examine the Chair. If and when the occasion arises, the President will make a statement.

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: I do not propose to address anything by way of cross-examination to the Chair. I desire merely to point out that the fact that I sent a telephonic message to your house and received an answer is perfectly correct.

Mr. M. S. Aney: Sir, is there any indication in the letter which the Honourable the Home Member addressed to the Honourable the President that he had telephoned to him once or twice and that he did not receive any reply?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: I made no statement to that effect, but my letter was very explicit and it contained a very urgent request for an interview.

Mr. M. R. Jayakar: Will the Honourable the Home Member state why, in the letter he addressed to the President, he did not specifically state that he was in possession of a very important message from His Excellency the Viceroy, and that he wanted to see the President in that connection?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: I have already answered that question.

Mr. Arthur Moore: May I ask the Honourable the Home Member to state how, in view of the statement he has made that this was a confidential message from His Excellency, the information came into the possession of the Honourable the Leader of the Opposition?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: I have no information to that effect, but I shall be very glad to hear it from the Honourable and learned Pandit.

Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya: I received this information from a very reliable person at Allahabad, and I wired my question on that information, and I am glad to find that that information has been found to be correct.

Mr. M. K. Acharya: One Supplementary Question, Sir?

RESOLUTION RE REPORT OF THE INDIAN ROAD DEVELOPMENT COMMITTEE.

Mr. President: The House will now proceed to discuss the amendment of Mr. Jayakar* . . .

*Amendment moved by Mr. M. R. Jayakar on the 26th September, 1929, to the following Resolution moved by the Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra on that date :

"This Assembly, after taking into consideration paragraphs 70 to 79 of the Report of the Indian Road Development Committee, recommends to the Governor General in Council that :

- (1) The increase in the import and excise duties on motor spirit from 4 to 6 annas per gallon, introduced by the Indian Finance Act for the current year, shall be maintained for a period of five years in the first instance;
- (2) The proceeds of the additional duty during the same period shall be allotted as a block grant for expenditure on road development to be credited to a separate road development account, the unexpended balances of which shall not lapse at the end of the financial year;
- (3) The annual grant shall be divided as follows :
 - (a) A certain proportion shall be retained by the Government of India as a reserve and such proportion will be 10 per cent. for the two years ending March, 1931, and the position shall be reviewed thereafter and the balance, if any, on 31st March, 1931, or any subsequent date of review, which is not required for the purposes approved in paragraph 75 of the Report, will be distributed among the provinces in the manner indicated in clause (b);
 - (b) Out of the remainder :
 - (i) An apportionment shall be made among the provinces in the ratio which the consumption of petrol in each province bears to the total consumption in India in the preceding calendar year;
 - (ii) The balance, representing the consumption of petrol in minor provinces and administrations and Indian States, shall be allotted as a lump sum to the Government of India.
- (4) If any part of the amount apportioned to a province in any financial year remains unexpended at the end of that year, it shall be carried over for expenditure in that province in the following year.
- (5) Grants shall be made to each province, up to the amount available for it in each year, for expenditure on schemes approved by the Governor General in Council with the advice of the Standing Committee for Roads. As an exception to this rule, the amount available for Burma may, for the present, be spent on any scheme of road development that is approved by the Local Government with the concurrence of the local legislature; but if at any future time the question of road connection with India becomes a live issue, the position shall be reconsidered.
- (6) A Standing Committee for Roads shall be constituted every year after the financial year 1929-30 consisting of one nominated official member of the Legislative Assembly, a second nominated official member, three members elected by the Council of State from their body, and six members elected by the Legislative Assembly from their body. The Member of the Governor General's Executive Council in charge of the Department that deals with roads shall be the Chairman of the Committee; and the members of the Committee who are members of the Legislative Assembly shall form its Finance Sub-Committee which will be presided over by the Chairman of the Committee if he is a member of the Legislative Assembly, and otherwise by the official member of the Committee who is a member of the Legislative Assembly.
- (7) The functions of the Standing Committee for Roads shall be :
 - (i) To consider the annual budget and accounts of the separate road development account of the Government of India;
 - (ii) To consider all proposals submitted by Local Governments to the Government of India, for which grants from the road development account are requested; provided that the function of the Standing Committee will be confined to determining whether the scheme is one for which an allotment from the Central Road Development Account should be made.

Mr. M. K. Acharya (South Arcot cum Chingleput: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Will you not allow me to put a question, Sir?

Mr. B. Das (Orissa Division: Non-Muhammadan): Last Session, Sir . .

Mr. President: Does the Honourable Member wish to say anything on the amendment? The amendment before the House is that:

"In clause (2), after the words 'during the same period' the following be inserted :
'after deducting such amounts as may be required for grants-in-aid to users of petrol for aviation purposes according to rules issued by Government, on a scale not exceeding the additional duty on petrol actually consumed for such purposes'."

Does the Honourable Member (turning to Mr. B. Das) wish to say anything on that amendment?

Mr. B. Das: I would like to discuss the main Resolution. That was the reason why you adjourned the debate last Session, Sir.

Mr. President: The question is:

"In clause (2), after the words 'during the same period' the following be inserted :
'after deducting such amounts as may be required for grants-in-aid to users of petrol for aviation purposes according to rules issued by Government, on a scale not exceeding the additional duty on petrol actually consumed for such purposes'."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. M. R. Jayakar (Bombay City: Non-Muhammadan Urban): I move, Sir, that:

"In sub-clause (a) of clause (3), for the word 'will' wherever it occurs, the word 'shall' be substituted."

Mr. President: Which amendment is the Honourable Member referring to?

Mr. M. R. Jayakar: I am referring to amendment No. 2, Sir.

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra (Member for Industries and Labour): No. 1 has not been moved yet, Sir. The one which has been adopted already is the first of the amendments of which Mr. Jayakar gave notice at Simla, and as that was before the House it was not necessary for him to give any further notice of that amendment.

Mr. M. R. Jayakar: I wish to move the amendment which is now No. 2 on the Agenda.

- (iii) To advise the Government of India generally on all questions relating to roads and traffic on roads and, in particular, on:
- any action to be taken by the Government of India on the proceedings of periodical Road Conferences;
 - central research in all matters connected with roads, road construction and maintenance;
 - statistics and intelligence, the preparation and publication of maps, and the collection and dissemination of information relating to road development, administration and finance in India—and in other countries.

All proposals for expenditure from the annual grant or its accumulated balance, shall be submitted for approval to the Finance Sub-Committee."

Mr. President: The amendment that I put to vote was the first.

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: That was the first of which notice was given at the Simla Session and about which no further notice was required.

Mr. President: That was carried.

Mr. B. Das: May I again point out, Sir

Mr. President: I cannot allow any general discussion now.

Mr. M. R. Jayakar: Sir, I move that:

"In sub-clause (a) of clause (3), for the word 'will', wherever it occurs, the word 'shall' be substituted."

It is merely a verbal amendment, Sir.

Mr. President: I do not exactly understand the position.

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: May I explain the position, Sir? At the Simla Session, my friend Mr. Jayakar gave notice of certain amendments. The first of those amendments was this:

"In clause (2), after the words 'during the same period' the following be inserted :
'after deducting such amounts as may be required for grants-in-aid to users of petrol for aviation purposes according to rules issued by Government, on a scale not exceeding the additional duty on petrol actually consumed for such purposes'."

Mr. President: I have put that amendment to the vote and it has been carried. It is for Mr. Jayakar now to move the second amendment which, I understand, he has moved.

Mr. M. R. Jayakar: I have already moved that amendment, Sir.

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: I am very sorry, Sir. We are apparently working on different papers.

Mr. President: The amendment which now stands as Amendment No. 1 in the name of Mr. Jayakar has been put and carried by the House. Now the Honourable Mr. Jayakar has moved his Amendment No. 2 on the paper. Does the Honourable Member in charge wish to say anything?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: No, Sir; I accept the amendment.

Mr. President: The question is:

"In sub-clause (a) of clause (3), for the word 'will', wherever it occurs, the word 'shall' be substituted."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. M. R. Jayakar: Sir, I move that:

"In sub-clause (a) of clause (3), for the words 'among the provinces in the manner indicated in clause (b)' the words 'among the Governors' provinces and the Government of India in the manner provided for the remainder in sub-clause (b)' be substituted."

This is a mere verbal amendment, Sir.

[4TH FEB. 1930.]

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: I accept the amendment, Sir.

The motion was adopted.

Mr. M. R. Jayakar: Sir, I move that:

"In sub-clause (b) (i) of clause (3), for the word 'provinces' the words 'Governors' provinces' be substituted, and for the words 'each province' the words 'each such province' be substituted."

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: I accept the amendment, Sir.

The motion was adopted.

Mr. M. R. Jayakar: I move, Sir, that:

"In sub-clause (b) (ii) of clause (3), for the words 'minor provinces and administrations', the words 'provinces other than Governors' province, administered areas' be substituted."

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: I accept the amendment, Sir.

The motion was adopted.

Mr. M. R. Jayakar: I move, Sir, that:

"In clause (4), for the words 'a province', the words 'a Governor's province' be substituted."

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: I accept the amendment, Sir.

The motion was adopted.

Mr. B. Das: Sir, I beg to move that:

"In clause (5), for the words 'Grants shall be made to each province up to the amount available for it in each year, for expenditure on schemes approved by the Governor General in Council with the advice of the Standing Committee for Roads' the following be substituted:

'Grants shall be made to each province to the full extent of the amount available for it in each year for expenditure on new road works, road reconstruction or substantial road improvements and their maintenance. Such expenditure shall be at the discretion of the Local Government; but such schemes shall be submitted to the Government of India for information, who will be entitled to see that the provincial share of the two anna petrol tax is not diverted to other purposes. The control of the Government of India shall be limited to works which they assist by contributions from their reserve or otherwise, but as regards other proposals submitted by Local Governments for information, the control of the Government of India shall be confined to considering whether the scheme is one for which expenditure out of the provincial share of the Road Fund should be incurred.'"

Sir, I hope, as the Honourable Member has accepted the amendments which my Honourable friend Mr. Jayakar moved, he will also accept the amendments which I have tabled. Last Simla Session the Honourable Member gave us to understand that this was not a controversial subject, but he knew full well that the motion which he brought before the House was not acceptable to any of the Provincial Governments and also to some of the Members representing different provinces in this House. Sir, once again I find that the Honourable Member for Industries and Labour is fathering a proposition which is not a creation of his Department. Last year, at this time, he brought forward the Cinematograph Report, which was originally brought forward by the Home Department, and the Honourable Member gave a decent burial to it. This year he is going to wet-nurse a scheme which was fathered in the Council of State by the Honourable Sir Charles Innes, the former Member for Commerce. I cannot understand why the Honourable Member is taking up the discarded and unwanted children of the other Departments. It is probably because it is thought that, being an Indian, we will not be suspicious of him and will allow his motions to be passed without much criticism. If that be the idea of the Government Members, then I am sorry they have not understood us. They must understand that some of us are fully suspicious of this Committee's Report, although we on this side of the House know that our late lamented revered leader Lala Lajpat Rai and our Deputy Leader, Mr. Jayakar, gave full consideration to the subject. Some of us are still suspicious that the Government of India are trying, through the back door, to have control over the Provincial Governments and are going to strike at the very basis of provincial autonomy. When this proposition was fathered in the other House, some of us thought and rightly too, that this was a military proposition and that Government were going to centralise the roads of India, so that the Military Department might get control of them at a period of stress. My Honourable friend, Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra, happens to be also in charge of the Irrigation Department. If he had read the economic history of India, he would know that between 1860 and 1870, there was a proposal from a great well-wisher—a great administrator—Sir Arthur Cotton, for having navigable channels and irrigation channels all over India. The Government of India never gave effect to that beneficial proposal. Instead the Honourable Member wants to bring forward a proposition for centralising the roads and controlling the roads in different provinces, thereby trying to control the action of the Ministers and the Legislative Councils, who are at present autonomous bodies, and who, in the changed circumstances that will be likely to come about in a year or two, may be completely autonomous. Now, my friend wants to put the Ministers under the control of half a dozen Members of this House and the other House, where the provinces are not going to be at all represented, nor even Members of each province that are in this House are going to be represented. Our basic suspicion is that this is a military proposition, and the Government want to control the roads in time of war or in time of revolution.

My friend Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra told us last year that, while discussing the Report of the Indian Cinematograph Committee, I was as if addressing my constituency, and that I was in a dream. I am addressing the Members on the Government side. It is our misfortune to find that a certain idea gets hatched by the European Chambers of Commerce and Government give their blessing to it in private and public and then it is brought before the House. In this case, the idea is clear that Government want to take over all the inter-provincial roads at a time of war or revolution, so that machine guns, tanks and so on may go on from Lahore to Calcutta and Cuttack. I am not going to quarrel with my Leader and Deputy Leader, who were parties to this Report. Of course, leaders are above those mean suspicions which back benchers often feel, and which they must ventilate on the floor of this House. The leaders never thought that Government would bring forward a proposition fathered by the Commerce Department that is really military policy and ought to have been brought before the House by Mr. Mackworth Young or the Commander-in-Chief. Now, if my Honourable friend had read the Report thoroughly, he would not have brought forward this Resolution, whereby the roads in the provinces would be controlled by the Government of India. He knew that every provincial Government was opposed to it. Nor is his Resolution complete. He ought to have brought in one or two more points that the Committee recommended. The Committee recommended that the Military Department should spend money in the construction of bridges and roads because it is they who cause most of the damage to the roads and add heavy weights to bridges. He ought to have brought out another clause for the development of provincial roads through the assistance of Railways. This is not the work of his own Department. It has been thrust on him by the predecessor of the Honourable Sir George Rainy, Sir Charles Innes, and my friend is wet-nursing it.

Sir, this idea of the distribution to provinces on the petrol consumption basis is a wrong principle. The Committee appointed a sub-committee, which was presided over by the Honourable Sir Arthur Froom. Mr. Mahmood Subrawardy of the other House was a member of it, and the only Member of this House, who was a member, was Kumar Gangnanand Sinha, and I do not think Kumar Gangnanand Sinha in any way could have influenced the Honourable Sir Arthur Froom and Mr. Subrawardy. Yet they recommended unanimously that the distribution of the money collected should be done on quite a different basis.

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: Is the Honourable Member in order in referring to that in connection with the particular amendment he has moved? If he did not accept the particular form of distribution which is provided for in this Resolution, it would have been open to him to move an amendment to that particular part of the Resolution.

Mr. B. Das: The Honourable Member did not bring forward the proposition before the House in such a way as to allow a full discussion. In fact, we never had a discussion on the subject.

Mr. President: The Honourable Member ought to restrict himself to the amendment.

Mr. B. Das: I will do so. Sir, provincial autonomy may be a farce. We, on this side of the House think so, and probably Honourable Members on the other side think the same. When the Honourable Member himself retires, and if by any chance he becomes a member of the local Legislative Council and accidentally also becomes a Minister, he himself will be the first man to oppose the very Resolution he has moved on the floor of this House. He will not like to see the Central Government have any control over Ministers and dictate terms to them. Sir, this is a very important Resolution. The Honourable Member may think that he has more heads on his side than we have on ours, but he must be reasonable and take a broad hint from the Honourable Sir George Schuster, who always likes to discuss subjects on their merits. I want, therefore, the Honourable Member to discuss this question on its merits. I know the Honourable Member does not dabble in politics because that is not his subject, but he may have to dabble in politics after six months or a year and face his brothers in the country. Will his countrymen tolerate the idea that he should give two lakhs of rupees to a province without the Minister having any control over it? Can we tolerate the idea that the policy with regard to the construction of roads in the provinces should be dictated by the Military Department so that their tanks and motor cars may reach a particular place? I cannot support that policy, and I do hope that my Honourable friend will discuss the point I have raised on its merits and not be guided by the mere number of his supporters.

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: Sir, I submit, that my Honourable friend, Mr. B. Das, following his usual custom, has been wasting the time of the House by placing before them not facts but fictions. He began by saying that I was fathering something which had been forced on me by the Commerce Department, over which my Honourable colleague to my right presides, and by the other House. Now, Sir, any Member of this House, who has been kind enough to read the Report of the Indian Road Development Committee, 1927-28, will have seen that the Resolution passed in the other House was to the following effect:

"This Council recommends to the Governor General in Council to appoint a Committee, including Members of both Houses of the Central Legislature, to examine the desirability of developing the road system of India, the means by which such development could be most suitably financed, and to consider the formation of a Central Road Board for the purpose of advising in regard to, and co-ordinating the policy in respect of, road development in India."

That is the text of the Resolution passed by the Council of State.

Mr. B. Das: Is not that a Commerce Department Resolution?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: I am not concerned with the fact whether it was a Commerce Department Resolution or not. The Resolution was unanimously adopted by the Council of State. In pursuance of that Resolution, a Committee was appointed which was presided over by my Honourable friend, Mr. Jayakar, the Deputy Leader of the Nationalist Party, and which included among its members the late Lala Lajpat Rai, the Leader of that party. It included also other Members of this House. That Committee submitted a unanimous report, and it fell on me, as Member in charge of the Department which deals with roads, to deal with that particular Report. My Honourable friend, Mr. Das, has said that in the last Session of this Assembly I refrained from bringing to its notice that, in certain matters embodied in this Resolution, there was a difference of opinion between the Members of this House and the Ministers in the provinces. I made that point perfectly clear, and if my Honourable friend at any time had cared to read pages 1637-1638 of the Legislative Assembly Debates for the 26th September, 1929, he would have found it stated clearly there.

[Mr. M. R. Jayakar.]

The view embodied in the Resolution and now put before the House represents a compromise between two opposite views which were advocated before the Committee. One view was that all important provincial roads ought to be centralised in the hands of a Road Board or an ad hoc Committee and taken out of the hands of the Provincial Governments. The other view was that the Committee should do nothing but find out a means of providing money for Provincial Governments from Central Revenue, but should recommend no change causing any interference with provincial autonomy. I can say for myself and also for the late Lala Lajpat Rai that we struggled hard in the Committee against centralising All-India Roads, and the Committee in its Report recommended minimum interference with provincial autonomy only to the extent necessary for the purpose of safeguarding the money. We recommended—and this Resolution carries out that recommendation—a via media, if I may say so, namely, that the control of the Government of India should be very limited, that the Government of India, in providing the money, should not go beyond the necessities of the occasion in exercising control over its application. What we recommended was this, that the control of the Government of India should be limited to only one single consideration, namely, that the schemes which come up from the provinces, asking aid for road development, should be analysed and tested on one important particular only, namely, whether it is a scheme of such a nature that the Government of India could sanction money on it from Central revenue. That is the only interference of the Government of India. But after the Government of India had once approved of the scheme, all questions relating to the spending of the money, e.g., how to spend it, whether to spend it on roads or bridges or culverts, and how much on what particular roads, all these details of road development are left entirely in the hands of Provincial Governments. The provincial view was—and I may state to the House that that is the view which the amendment of my Honourable friend Mr. Das embodies—that the Government of India should convert themselves into a collecting agent, that the Government of India should collect this money as Central revenue and hand it over to Provincial Governments as an agent does to the principal without any say in the matter. In other words, the Government of India were to serve merely as a conduit pipe between the taxpayer and the Provincial Governments, and that they should have nothing to do by way of control or supervision over this money, but should simply collect and hand it over to the Provincial Governments.

In accepting this view, the difficulties which my Committee felt were two, firstly, that the two annas petrol tax was a source of Central revenue, and, secondly, that the Legislative Assembly, being the custodian of that revenue, it would be wrong to suggest any arrangement by which the Legislative Assembly would be denuded of their powers of supervision and control. We could not therefore accept the view of the provincial representatives, which sought to convert the Government of India and the Legislative Assembly into a mere conduit pipe. The compromise which we found satisfactory was first to maintain some control which this Legislative Assembly could exercise as the custodian of the Central revenues, and, secondly, that such supervision or control should be strictly limited to the necessities of the case. That view is embodied in the Resolution which is put before the House. I can quite understand the opposition of the Provincial Governments because their view was, as I stated to my Honourable friends, that the business of the Government of India was only to collect this money and hand it over. That view obviously could not prevail. Constitutionally, it was wrong. Likewise, it turned this House into a collecting agent, without control or supervision over money which belonged to them and which they had to vote away.

Therefore my submission to the House is that what the Committee has recommended and what has been embodied in the present Resolution is the right view. The control, minimum though it is, is kept with a Committee on which the Assembly is represented by six Members. It will see whether a particular scheme is of such a character as to deserve support out of the central fund. The utility of this proposal, tested by another method, is also great. We recommended in our Report the holding of yearly conferences. To these conferences the provincial Ministers would come; schemes would come from the several provinces; all these schemes would be considered from one important aspect, viz., as to how they fit in with one another, from the view-point of All-India Development. For instance, a scheme comes from the Central Provinces Government; another comes from the Bombay Government the neighbouring Province. The Ministers coming from these two Provincial Governments will each put forward a scheme before that Conference, and the Conference will then examine them in the light of one important consideration, namely, how these schemes fit in with one another with the ultimate view of developing the entire country. After this stage is reached, the schemes go before the Committee with the recommendations of the Conference. Our six Members on this body and the Government of India behind them will examine these schemes, without interfering with the details of the schemes. These are left entirely in the hands of the Provincial Governments. The Committee and the Government of India behind it will only interfere so far as one consideration is involved, namely, whether that scheme satisfies one test, i.e., whether it is deserving of any support from the central source of revenue. Beyond that there is no interference with the Provincial Governments at all. Therefore the lurid picture which my Honourable friend Mr. Das drew that the Committee was anxious to take away as many powers as they could from the Provincial Governments is not true to facts. Speaking for myself and the late Lala Lajpat Rai, and also for several of our friends on the Committee, we were extremely watchful that the Committee did not make one single recommendation which went beyond the necessities of the occasion and caused undue interference. Therefore, my submission to the House is that the Resolution should be adopted and the amendment opposed.

Mr. Lalchand Navalrai (Sind: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I support the amendment and I will not enter into any discussion outside the merits of this matter such as may displease the Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra. Now, Sir, considering this matter which has been arrived at by a compromise, as was said by the Honourable Mr. Jayakar, I find that these proposals, as embodied in the Resolution, would not serve the purpose and would be dilatory. Sir, in paragraph 3 (b) (i) of the Resolution it is said that:

"An apportionment shall be made among the provinces in the ratio which the consumption of petrol in each province bears to the total consumption in India in the preceding calendar year."

[Mr. Lalchand Navalrai.]

This is all right and there can be no objection to this. But then in clause 5 it is said:

"Grants shall be made to each province, up to the amount available for it in each year, for expenditure on schemes approved by the Governor General in Council with the advice of the Standing Committee for Roads."

I am taking exception to this because it will be a dilatory process and would serve no useful purpose. In the first place it is true that the Local Governments object to this course on the principle of autonomy. That is also a very legitimate objection, but apart from it, I think that to leave the expenditure in their hands when they are restricted already, to use it for the purpose of roads and for no other, would not be objectional in any way. The process of asking them to prepare their schemes,—which would be approved of by the Ministers,—and to send over the same to the Governor General and the Finance Committee, which is appointed for consideration and interference in it, would be interference leading to very great detriment, and I am afraid the purpose for which the money is being given, namely, to improve the roads and put them in order would not be easily attained.

I find, Sir, that the latter portion of clause (5) says:

"As an exception to this rule, the amount available for Burma may, for the present, be spent on any scheme of road development that is approved by the Local Government with the concurrence of the local legislature; but if at any future time the question of road connection with India becomes a live issue, the position shall be reconsidered."

I cannot understand why the whole thing should not be done like that. Why should the power be given only to Burma to spend without sanction and not to the other provinces which are administered by Governors? I would submit that the question of delay plays an important part in the consideration of this matter, and I therefore support the amendment that has been put in by the Honourable Mr. Das. Now, already the purpose of having some control of the Government of India over the Local Government in this direction will be served since the amendment provides that information of what schemes the Local Governments prepare, and how the money will be utilised, will be given to the Government of India.

Then, Sir, it was said by my Honourable friend, Mr. Jayakar, that provision is made in this Resolution only with respect to the scheme being considered on one ground only and that is contained in paragraph (7) of the Resolution, clause (ii) which says that the functions of the Standing Committee for Roads shall be:

"To consider all proposals submitted by Local Governments to the Government of India, for which grants from the road development account are requested; provided that the function of the Standing Committee will be confined to determining whether the scheme is one for which an allotment from the Central Road Development Account should be made."

That is not only one ground which has to be considered, but it is so very comprehensive that it will include many objections and many considerations on which the scheme could be thrown out. I would therefore submit that the acceptance of the amendment would be a better way of dealing with this question.

With these words I support the amendment.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That in clause (5), for the words 'Grants shall be made to each province up to the amount available for it in each year, for expenditure on schemes approved by the Governor General in Council with the advice of the Standing Committee for Roads' the following be substituted:

"Grants shall be made to each province to the full extent of the amount available for it in each year for expenditure on new road works, road reconstruction or substantial road improvements and their maintenance. Such expenditure shall be at the discretion of the Local Government; but such schemes shall be submitted to the Government of India for information, who will be entitled to see that the provincial share of the two anna petrol tax is not diverted to other purposes. The control of the Government of India shall be limited to works which they assist by contributions from their reserve or otherwise, but as regards other proposals submitted by Local Governments for information, the control of the Government of India shall be confined to considering whether the scheme is one for which expenditure out of the provincial share of the Road Fund should be incurred."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. M. R. Jayakar: I move, Sir, that:

"In clause (5), for the words 'each province' the words 'each Governor's province' be substituted."

The amendment is purely verbal.

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: I accept the amendment, Sir.

The motion was adopted.

Mr. President: Sir Brojendra Mitter.

(The Honourable Member was not in his seat.)

Mr. M. R. Jayakar: Sir, I move that:

"In clause (7), after the word 'Roads' the following be inserted: 'including that appointed in pursuance of the motion adopted in the Legislative Assembly on the 2nd September, 1929'."

This amendment is for the purpose of bringing into the operation of this clause the committee which had already been appointed on the 2nd September, 1929. If these words were not added, it would be excluded from the operation of this clause.

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: I accept the amendment, Sir.

The motion was adopted.

Mr. B. Das: Sir, I beg to move:

"For sub-clause (ii) of clause (7), the following be substituted: '(ii) To consider all proposals submitted by Local Governments to the Government of India in consultation with provincial representatives, and to advise the Government of India on such proposals; provided that the function of the Standing Committee as regards proposals of Local Governments for expenditure out of the provincial share of the two anna petrol tax submitted by them for information shall be confined to considering whether the scheme is one for which expenditure out of that Road Fund should be incurred'."

Mr. President: Sir Brojendra Mitter:

Mr. Vidya Sagar Pandya (Madras: Indian Commerce): On a point of order, Sir. On previous occasions when some of the Members on the non-official side were absent, they were not allowed to move the amendments against their names later on, and I do not see why the Honourable the Law Member should now be allowed to move his amendment out of the proper time.

Mr. President: Order, order. This is merely a formal amendment, not a controversial amendment, and I think the general sense of the House is that the amendment should be moved.

Honourable Members: Yes.

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter: Sir, I move that:

"In clause (6), for the word 'will' the word 'shall' be substituted."

It is purely a drafting amendment.

The motion was adopted.

Mr. M. R. Jayakar: Sir, I move that:

"In sub-clause (ii) of clause (7), for the words 'Local Governments' the words 'Governments of Governors' provinces' be substituted."

This is merely a verbal amendment.

The motion was adopted.

Mr. M. R. Jayakar: Sir, I move that:

"In sub-clause (ii) of clause (7), after the word 'Committee' the words 'and its Finance Sub-Committee' be inserted."

The object of this amendment is to supply an omission which is purely inadvertent, and that is to bring the powers and control of the Finance Sub-Committee on to the same footing as those of the Standing Committee, so that there may not be given larger powers to the Finance Sub-Committee to interfere in Provincial Governments' decision.

The motion was adopted.

Mr. M. R. Jayakar: Sir, I move that:

"In sub-clause (ii) of clause (7), for the word 'will' the word 'shall' be substituted."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. M. R. Jayakar: Sir, I move that:

"After sub-clause (iii) (c) of clause (7), the following new sub-clause be added:

"(d) Proposals other than those relating to Indian States on which it is desired to incur expenditure out of the portions of the annual grant referred to in clauses (3) (a) and (3) (b) (ii)."

Now, in turning to clauses (3) (a) and (3) (b) Honourable Members will find that (3) (a) refers to the reserve of 10 per cent. which remains in the hands of the Government of India, and (3) (b) relates to the balance. The object of the amendment is to put both these parts of the fund on the same footing as the bulk.

The motion was adopted.

Mr. M. R. Jayakar: Sir, I move that:

"After clause (7), for the words 'All proposals for expenditure from the annual grant or its accumulated balance shall be submitted for approval to the Finance Sub-Committee', the following new clause be substituted:

"(8) All proposals for expenditure from the annual grant or its accumulated balance shall be transmitted by the Standing Committee to its Finance Sub-Committee for approval before recording its final acceptance; and the Standing Committee shall not record its acceptance to any such proposal unless it has received the approval of the Sub-Committee."

The object of the amendment, Sir, is to give power to the Finance Sub-Committee to scrutinise and approve of the financial aspects of the proposals, and it is only when the Finance Sub-Committee has done so that they will be passed by the Standing Committee for Roads.

The motion was adopted.

Mr. B. Das: I do not wish to move my amendment*, Sir.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That the Resolution, as amended, be passed."

The motion was adopted.

The Assembly then adjourned till Eleven of the Clock on Wednesday, the 5th February, 1930.

*"After clause (7), for the words 'All proposals for expenditure from the annual grant, or its accumulated balance, shall be submitted for approval to the Finance Sub-Committee' the following be substituted:

"All proposals for expenditure from the annual grant or its accumulated balance shall be submitted for approval to the Finance Sub-Committee, whose function shall be as defined in clause (7) (ii)."

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

Wednesday, 5th February, 1930.

The Assembly met in the Assembly Chamber of the Council House at Eleven of the Clock, Mr. President in the Chair.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

PROSECUTIONS FOR DISAFFECTION AGAINST INDIAN STATES.

232. Dr. B. S. Moonje: (a) Will Government be pleased to state the entire procedure adopted in giving sanction to prosecutions under the Indian States (Protection against Disaffection) Act of 1922?

(b) On whose initiative is the matter started and what channels does it pass through before the final sanction of the Governor General in Council is accorded?

(c) Is the whole material for a prosecution submitted to the Law Officers of the Crown and their opinion in writing taken before the final sanction?

(d) Who represents the Crown in these cases? Is it a fact that outside persons not in Government service and not under Government control are allowed to represent the Crown in these cases? If so, why?

(e) Who pays the cost of these prosecutions?

(f) Who selects the place where a prosecution is launched, and on what considerations?

Mr. E. B. Howell: (a), (b) and (c). On receipt through the Political Department of an application on behalf of a Ruling Prince or Chief for authority to institute proceedings under section 5 of the Act, the Governor General in Council obtains the advice of the Law Officers, which is recorded in writing after examination of the whole material before them, and if he is satisfied that there is ground for thinking that a prosecution is justified, sanction to prosecute is accorded.

(d) Where the Governor General in Council is of opinion that the case is one in which the Government of India should launch a prosecution, the services of the Public Prosecutor would ordinarily be employed. In cases in which the complaint is filed with the authority of the Governor General in Council, it is for the complainant to make his own arrangements for representation.

(f) The complainant. The complaint must be filed in a Court having jurisdiction under sections 177 and following of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

Dr. B. S. Moonje: May I know, Sir, who makes the first complaint and who looks to the first complaint before the Viceroy gives his sanction?

Mr. E. B. Howell: May I ask the Honourable Member kindly to repeat his question?

Dr. B. S. Moonje: I want to know who makes the first complaint and who looks into it to see that it is bona fide before the Viceroy gives his sanction for prosecution?

Mr. E. B. Howell: Presumably the person who makes the first complaint is the person who feels aggrieved, and the complaint is brought to the notice of the Viceroy through the officers of the Political Department, who deal with the relations of the Government of India with the particular State from which the complaint came.

Dr. B. S. Moonje: Is it a fact that the complaint first goes to the Political Agent of the State and afterwards to the Agent to the Governor General, and then through him it goes to the Viceroy?

Mr. E. B. Howell: I imagine, Sir, that would be the normal course of procedure. I have no definite information.

Mr. B. Das: With reference to the reply to part (j) of the question, will the Honourable Member please state whether the Court where the prosecution takes place will be in the town where the paper is published or will it be in a town which the Prince suggests?

Mr. E. B. Howell: The place where the trial is held is governed by the ordinary rules of the Code of Criminal Procedure on the subject.

Dr. B. S. Moonje: Is it a fact that in similar previous cases the cases were tried in the place where the papers were published?

Mr. E. B. Howell: If the Honourable Member would mind waiting till the next question is answered, I can tell him where as many prosecutions as there have been under this Act have taken place.

Dr. B. S. Moonje: Why I ask the question now is because it arises from part (j) of my main question as to how the place was selected in this case?

Mr. E. B. Howell: Which case, Sir?

Dr. B. S. Moonje: The present case.

Mr. E. B. Howell: I am not aware to which case the Honourable Member refers.

Dr. B. S. Moonje: The case in which Mr. Diwan Singh Maftoon, Editor of the Riyasat is being prosecuted?

Mr. E. B. Howell: That case is still pending. It was first tried in . . .

Dr. B. S. Moonje: I want to know how the place for prosecution was selected. Is there any procedure for selecting the place for prosecution?

Mr. E. B. Howell: Well, Sir, that question does not arise out of the present question.

PROSECUTIONS FOR DISAFFECTION AGAINST INDIAN STATES.

233. Dr. B. S. Moonje: Will Government be pleased to furnish the information required in the following table showing details in each of the cases instituted under the Indian States (Protection against Disaffection) Act since its coming into force:

1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8
Year of the case.	The Prince in whose interest the prosecution was launched.	The name and details of accused.	The place of publication of paper if the accused was a Newspaper Editor. Mr. E. B. Howell: With the Honourable Member's permission, may I lay this on the table? It is rather a complicated thing to read out, but I will read it out if the Honourable Member wants me to do so.

Dr. B. S. Moonje: It would be better if the Honourable Member would read out his statement, because it would help us to put certain supplementary questions if necessary.

Mr. E. B. Howell: I should be sorry to disappoint the Honourable Member.

Mr. President: Is it a long statement?

Mr. E. B. Howell: Yes, Sir.

Mr. President: Is it a very long statement?

Mr. E. B. Howell: That much, Sir.

Mr. President: I think the Honourable Member might read it out.

Mr. E. B. Howell: The particulars required are as follows:

Dr. B. S. Moonje: If in previous cases the places where the prosecutions were launched were the places where the papers were published, what special reasons were there for changing the place in the present case?

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter: In Criminal Law, wherever a paper is published, the Court of that place has jurisdiction. Publication does not mean printing. If a paper is circulated in five different districts, then the paper is published in each of these places, and a prosecution might be launched in any of these places.

Dr. B. S. Moonje: If the two papers in the previous cases were prosecuted in the place where they were printed, why was it that, in the present case, the prosecution was launched in a different place?

Mr. E. B. Howell: What reason has the Honourable Member for saying that the prosecution was not brought in the place where the paper was published?

Dr. B. S. Moonje: I said printed.

Mr. E. B. Howell: I gather that it was in Delhi all along.

Dr. B. S. Moonje: I could not catch the Honourable Member.

Mr. E. B. Howell: I ask what reason the Honourable Member has for saying that the prosecution was in one place, while the printing of the newspaper was in another?

Dr. B. S. Moonje: So far as my information goes, the paper is printed in Delhi.

Mr. E. B. Howell: And the case is being tried in Hoshangabad.

Dr. B. S. Moonje: It is being tried in Hoshangabad?

Mr. E. B. Howell: The case is still pending. Does the Honourable Member wish to press his questions?

Dr. B. S. Moonje: I do not know if there are any special reasons for trying this case in Hoshangabad even though the paper is printed in Delhi.

Mr. E. B. Howell: I am not aware of any special reasons.

Dr. B. S. Moonje: Then I suppose it is only a matter of autocratic choice as to the place to be selected for trying the case, irrespective of the fact that the printing and publishing establishment and office of the paper be somewhere else.

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter: The choice of forum always lies with the complainant.

Munshi Iswar Saran: Will the Honourable the Law Member try to understand the object of the question of my Honourable friend? It is perfectly open to the prosecutor to select his own forum, but the point is why that particular forum was selected. It is a question of policy and not of legality.

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter: If a prosecution is launched in a court of competent jurisdiction, then it is perfectly in order, but why a complainant chooses place "A" instead of place "B", that is for the complainant to answer.

Mr. B. Das: Is the Honourable Member aware that, at the time of the passing of the Princes Protection Act, an assurance was given by Sir William Vincent that there would be an appeal to the High Court? In the present case of Hoshangabad, there is no appeal to a High Court.

Mr. E. B. Howell: I think an identical question has been put down for future answer.

Mr. Abdul Haye: Are the Government aware that, in the past, highly defamatory statements have been published against His Highness the Maharaja of Patiala in certain papers, especially the Riyasat and the Akali? Have the Government considered this matter, and will the Honourable Member be pleased to state why no prosecutions were launched against these papers?

Mr. President: I do not think that question arises from this.

Munshi Iswar Saran: Will the Honourable the Law Member kindly state the reason why the prosecutor in this case selected that forum? It is perfectly open to the prosecutor to select the forum he pleases, but we wish to know the reason why that particular forum was selected, and the prosecutor should give an answer to the members here who want to elicit the information.

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter: I have already answered that question. It is for the complainant, who is generally the aggrieved person, to choose his forum. I understand the aggrieved person in this case is His Highness the Nawab of Bhopal. It is for him to answer that question, not for us.

Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava: Was this forum chosen with a view to

Mr. President: The Honourable Member has stated that it is the Nawab of Bhopal who is the complainant and it is not for the Government of India to answer.

Mr. Vidya Sagar Pandya: Did the Nawab of Bhopal select that forum?

Mr. President: How can the Government of India answer that question?

Mr. Abdul Haye: Did he apply to the Governor General?

Mr. E. B. Howell: I have no information. I must have notice of that question.

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: When sanction for the prosecution is asked for, is the place where the complainant wishes the case to be tried also stated?

Mr. E. B. Howell: I imagine there is no general rule.

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: The Honourable Member speaks on behalf of the Political Department here. Will he tell us what the practice is?

Mr. E. B. Howell: It cannot be said that there is a general practice when there have been only four cases since the Act was passed.

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: What has been the practice in those four cases?

Mr. E. B. Howell: Will the Honourable Member give me notice of that question?

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: With pleasure.

Mr. M. S. Aney: Was there any communication between the Nawab of Bhopal and the Political Department before this case was instituted in the Court at Hoshangabad?

Mr. E. B. Howell: I must ask for notice of that question also.

RECRUITMENT OF INDIAN TRADE COMMISSIONERS.

234. Mr. Sarabhai Nemchand Haji: (a) Will Government be pleased to state whether continuity of personnel is one of the grounds for confining the selection of Trade Commissioners to Government services? If so, do Government propose to take guarantees from the officers appointed as Trade Commissioners that for the remaining period of their service with Government they will not seek employment in other branches of Government where their prospects would probably be better?

(b) If not, will Government please state how else the recruitment from the services will lead to continuity?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: (a) and (b). It is certainly desirable to secure reasonable continuity of personnel in the appointments of Trade Commissioners, and probably this result might be more easily achieved by the appointment of officials than of non-officials. Government do not think that any special measures will be necessary to ensure continuity if officials are appointed, but they will consider the suggestion made.

Mr. Sarabhai Nemchand Haji: What has led Government to believe that recruitment from among non-officials will lead to a want of continuity?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: I have not said so. What I said was that probably continuity might be more easily secured by the appointment of officials than of non-officials.

Mr. Sarabhai Nemchand Haji: Will the Honourable Member accept my statement that probably equal continuity could be achieved by taking men from the non-official side?

Mr. President: That is a question of opinion.

RECRUITMENT OF INDIAN TRADE COMMISSIONERS.

235. Mr. Sarabhai Nemchand Haji: (a) Will Government please state the difficulties in the way of the realisation of the whole scheme of Trade Commissioners in a shorter period than the one contemplated?

(b) Have Government received any protest from commercial bodies before or since the publication of the scheme under which the recruitment of Indian Trade Commissioners will be confined to the services?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: (a) The difficulties are mainly financial.

(b) A representation has recently been received from the Indian Merchants' Chamber, Bombay, on the subject.

CARRAIGE OF MAILS TO COX'S BAZAAR.

236. Mr. Anwar-ul-Azim: (a) Will Government be pleased to state whether it is a fact that the Postal Department is not allowing the Bengal Burma Steam Navigation Company at Chittagong to carry the mails to Cox's Bazaar?

(b) Is it a fact that the income of the Department has undergone a great diminution since a non-official agency has been carrying letters and messages to Cox's Bazaar and other islands of that area?

Mr. H. A. Sams: (a) No. Negotiations between the Bengal Burma Steam Navigation Company and the Postmaster General Bengal and Assam, on the subject are still in progress.

(b) No.

RESIDENCE IN THE POST OFFICE BY THE SUPERINTENDENT OF POST OFFICES, CHITTAGONG DIVISION.

237. Mr. Anwar-ul-Azim: Will Government be pleased to state how much money was realised by Government from the Superintendent, Post Offices, Chittagong Division, who was transferred to Sylhet, for using the office as his home, referred to by Mr. Rogers in reply to my questions during the last Simla session of the Legislative Assembly?

Mr. H. A. Sams: It is not clear to which of his questions the Honourable Member is referring. But the Postmaster General, to whom the question was sent, reports that Rs. 62 were recovered from the salary bill of a Superintendent for January 1929. If the Honourable Member will give more precise details of his question, further information will be obtained and communicated to him.

RECENT APPOINTMENTS AND PROMOTIONS IN THE SECRETARIAT.

238. Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: (a) Will Government be pleased to state whether any posts, permanent or temporary, have been created in the Secretariat since the 31st March, 1929? If so, what are their designations and salaries?

(b) Will Government be pleased to state whether the salaries of any of the existing posts in the Secretariat have been increased since the 31st March, 1929? If so, to what extent have they been raised?

(c) If the answer to parts (a) and (b) be in the affirmative, will Government kindly state what is the additional expenditure that will be incurred in the current year?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: Yes. The information is being collected and will be supplied to the Honourable Member in due course.

PERIOD OF OFFICE OF THE FINANCIAL COMMISSIONER OF RAILWAYS.

239. Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: With reference to the reply given to starred question No. 461 regarding period of appointment of officers of the Finance Department, on the 15th September, 1929, will Government be pleased to state whether they have fixed the period of office of the Financial Commissioner of Railways?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: Before arriving at a decision regarding the tenure of the Financial Commissioner of Railways, Government thought it desirable to obtain the considered opinion of the new Chief Commissioner, Mr. Russell. That opinion is now before Government, and it is hoped that a decision will be reached at an early date.

Mr. K. C. Neogy: How is it that this matter did not engage the attention of Government before this?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: I think, Sir, that I said when I answered the Honourable Member's question last September that the omission appears to have been accidental.

Mr. K. C. Neogy: Accidents do happen on railways?

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: If the omission was only accidental, why was it necessary to consult the new Chief Commissioner of Railways on a settled question of policy?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: Because, Sir, on important matters one likes to have the opinion of one's constitutional adviser.

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: In a matter of this kind will Government decide the question, or will they be guided by the opinion of the Chief Commissioner of Railways?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: The Chief Commissioner of Railways is the adviser of Government on all important questions affecting the organisation of the railways.

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: May I ask what was the point on which the opinion of the Chief Commissioner of Railways was invited? Was it with regard to the tenure of the Financial Commissioner, or was it with regard to his permanent occupation of his office?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: As regards the tenure of the Financial Commissioner.

Mr. K. C. Neogy: Having regard to the fact that the Financial Commissioner has also some relation with the Finance Department, is the opinion of the Finance Department also being obtained in this matter?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: Naturally the Finance Department are very closely concerned in this matter.

Mr. K. C. Neogy: Has the opinion of the Finance Department been obtained in this matter?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: A decision has not yet been arrived at. The matter is under consideration by myself and by the Honourable the Finance Member.

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: Is the Finance Member deferring his decision till he receives the opinion of the Chief Commissioner of Railways?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: The answer I have given is the answer on behalf of the Government of India and not on behalf of a particular Department.

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: Are the Government of India in this matter represented by the Railway Department or by the entire Executive Council?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: The decision will be the decision of the Government of India, in which both the Railway and the Finance Departments will participate.

REQUISITION OF VILLAGERS TO GUARD THE RAILWAY LINE.

240. Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: (a) Has the attention of Government been drawn to the statement published in the Hindustan Times of the 25th January, 1930, under the heading "H. E. the Viceroy's Safe Arrival—Villagers' Complaint"?

(b) If the answer to part (a) be in the affirmative, will Government be pleased to state if villagers were required by the executive authorities to guard the railway line at night and to perform other duties? If so, under what law was action taken?

(c) If the answer to part (b) is in the affirmative, will Government be pleased to state whether the villagers referred to in (b) were paid? If so, at what rate?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: (a) Yes.

(b) It has been ascertained that no villagers were required to guard the railway line in the Delhi Province.

(c) The question does not arise.

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: I did not say that, Sir. Did I say that it concerned the Delhi Province? The complaint referred to the action taken somewhere in the Bombay Presidency, probably when the Viceroy visited the Baroda State.

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: I understood the question referred to arrangements made in connection with the arrival of His Excellency's train at Delhi. If it refers to other matters, I should like the Honourable Member to give me notice.

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: What is there in this statement to indicate that it was put with special reference to the arrival of His Excellency's train here. The statement in the Hindustan Times, to which I have referred, deals only with the question of guarding the railway train when His Excellency went to Baroda.

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: I understood the Honourable Member's question to refer to the arrival of the train at Delhi. If that was not his intention, I should be glad if he will give me notice of the specific particulars on which he desires information.

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: The Honourable Member said his attention had been drawn to the statement which appeared in the Hindustan Times. If he has read that statement and not answered my question correctly, why should it be necessary for me to give notice again?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: I have seen the article referred to, but the impression I derived from it was that it did refer specifically to the arrival of the train at Delhi.

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: Would the Honourable Member mind giving me the correct information desired without any further notice?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: The Honourable Member's question is of a general character and I should desire him to be somewhat more specific as to the particular information he required. If he will be good enough to do so, I shall endeavour to make inquiries and provide him with the information.

GRIEVANCES OF THE STAFF OF THE RAILWAY CLEARING ACCOUNTS OFFICE.

241. Mr. Muhammad Rafique: (a) Is it a fact that a committee with Mr. Mitra as its Chairman was appointed by the Railway Board to frame detailed rules for fixing the seniority in different grades of subordinate establishment of the Railway Clearing Accounts Office?

(b) Are Government aware of the fact that the work of inquiry was carried out only by the Chairman of the Committee in the absence of other members?

(c) Is it a fact that Rai Bahadur Faqir Chand was throughout present when the members of the staff presented themselves before the Chairman to place their grievances, and are Government aware that there was great discontentment among the staff for this action of the Chairman, and that as a result of this a certain section of the staff (specially North Western Railway) boycotted the Committee as their grievances were generally against Rai Bahadur Faqir Chand?

(d) Do Government propose to appoint another committee to inquire independently into the grievances of the staff? If not, why not?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: (a) Yes.

(b) The business entrusted to the Committee was conducted by it. The detailed investigation of representations made personally by the man on invitation to do so was made by the Chairman, as desired by the Committee at a preliminary meeting. The results of this investigation were placed before the Committee and accepted by them.

(c) Rai Bahadur Faqir Chand was present when the detailed investigations referred to were made. As far as the Chairman can ascertain, there was no discontent. Opportunity was offered to any member of the staff to see the Chairman alone and some availed themselves of it. The Committee were not boycotted.

(d) No. The Committee and the Chairman were absolutely independent of any influence.

APPOINTMENT OF MUSLIMS IN THE RAILWAY CLEARING ACCOUNTS OFFICE.

242. Mr. Muhammad Rafique: Will Government be pleased to state whether there is a single Muslim in the Establishment and Procedure Sections of the Railway Clearing Accounts Office? If not, why not?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: Communal representation is not provided for in the rules of recruitment for each section of an office.

OPPOSITION TO THE CLEARING HOUSE EXPERIMENT AT LAHORE.

243. Mr. Muhammad Rafique: (a) Will Government be pleased to state what the severe opposition was at the commencement of the Clearing House experiment at Lahore, as mentioned by Mr. Mitra in his report?

(b) Is it a fact that the staff was threatened to be bombed, and machines to be burnt down?

(c) If the reply to part (b) be in the affirmative, will Government be pleased to state what steps were taken, and whether the matter was reported to the police and if any departmental action was taken?

(d) If the reply to part (c) be in the affirmative, will Government be pleased to lay on the table a copy of the record proving these fears?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: (a) and (b). The opposition manifested itself in the shape of agitation in the Press, circulation of pamphlets containing wild allegations against the experiments, meetings held in the office of the Chief Auditor, North Western Railway, to dissuade the clerks from working for the experiment, and numerous anonymous letters threatening to burn the machines.

(c) The matter was not reported to the police, but precautions were taken to guard the machines by employing extra chowkidars and by allowing only reliable men to work the machines under strict supervision.

(d) If the records referred to are the pamphlets, anonymous letters and articles in the Press written four years ago, they are not available now.

RECRUITMENT OF THE STAFF OF THE RAILWAY CLEARING ACCOUNTS OFFICE.

244. Mr. Muhammad Rafique: (a) Is it a fact that according to Mr. Mitra's report 150 men were recruited in the Railway Clearing Accounts Office as a portion of nucleus staff for special, educational and other qualifications?

(b) If the answer to part (a) is in the affirmative, will Government be pleased to state how many were recruited (i) for aptitude, (ii) for outdoor work, (iii) as being men from minority communities, and (iv) for special reasons?

(c) Will Government be pleased to state what are the criteria to find out that a man has the abovementioned qualifications when he is taken direct from outside?

(d) Will Government be pleased to state what the special reasons were which led Government to take these men?

(e) Will Government be pleased to state why there is not a single Muslim among (i) 11 Officers (ii) 8 Superintendents and (iii) 18 Assistant Superintendents of the Railway Clearing Accounts Office?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: (a), (b), (c) and (d). Yes, this number had to be recruited from outside as all the staff required for the Clearing House experiment office were not available from existing Audit and Accounts offices, and in doing this the rules of recruitment in force at the time were observed, with due regard to the requirements of the experiment.

(e) The Honourable Member is referred to the reply to a similar unstarred question (No. 202) asked by the Honourable Member, Mr. Abdul Haye, in the September, 1929 Session of the Legislative Assembly.

RECRUITMENT OF STAFF FOR THE RATES SCHEME IN THE RAILWAY CLEARING ACCOUNTS OFFICE.

245. Mr. Muhammad Rafique: (a) What connection has Rai Bahadur Faqir Chand with the Rates Scheme?

(b) Is it one of Rai Bahadur Faqir Chand's duties to recruit men for this scheme?

(c) Will Government be pleased to state what will be the source of recruitment in this scheme? Will some examination be held as a qualification test or will recruitment depend on the choice of Rai Bahadur Faqir Chand?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: (a) Rai Bahadur Faqir Chand is in direct charge of the Rates Scheme.

(b) The recruitment is made under the direction of the Director, Clearing Accounts Office.

(c) Partly from the Clearing Accounts Office and partly from outside. No examination has been prescribed, as the appointments are purely temporary.

APPOINTMENT OF MUSLIMS IN THE OFFICE OF THE CONTROLLER OF RAILWAY ACCOUNTS.

246. Mr. Muhammad Rafique: Will Government be pleased to state what is the procedure adopted in the competitive examinations held by the Controller, Railway Accounts? Have Muslims got to compete with Muslims or with others as well? Has any percentage been fixed for them, and if so, how many candidates were taken on communal grounds in the last examination as (i) clerks and (ii) accountants?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: The examination is open to all and is conducted according to rules framed with the approval of the Standing Finance Committee for Railways.

Muslims compete with numbers of other communities. No percentage has been fixed for them. Thirteen candidates, of whom four are Muslims, will be taken in as clerks on communal grounds as a result of the last examination.

No competitive examination is prescribed for accountants.

APPOINTMENT OF MUSLIMS IN THE OFFICE OF THE CONTROLLER OF RAILWAY ACCOUNTS.

247. Mr. Muhammad Rafique: Will Government be pleased to state the total establishment of the Controller, Railway Accounts Office, and how many of them are Muslims?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: There are four officers, none of whom is at present a Muslim. Of the 46 permanent and temporary appointments, five permanent appointments are at present held by Muslims.

APPOINTMENT OF MUSLIMS IN THE OFFICE OF THE CONTROLLER OF RAILWAY ACCOUNTS:

248. Mr. Muhammad Rafique: (a) Have Government always refused to give the figures about the staff of the Controller, Railway Accounts Office, on a communal basis in spite of the repeated demands made by the Members of this House, and in face of the fact that it has done so in other Departments of the Government of India? If so, why?

(b) If the answer to part (a) be in the negative, will Government be pleased to state the total strength of the staff of the Controller, Railway Accounts Office, in different grades and the number of Muslims therein?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: (a) and (b). The Honourable Member is referred to the answer to his question No. 247. Of the five Muslims, one is an accountant, one a stenographer, one a typist, and two are clerks.

UNSTARRED QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

REST HOUSES FOR RAILWAY GUARDS AT OUTSTATIONS.

149. Mr. Muhammad Ismail Khan: (a) Will the Honourable Member in charge of the Department of Industries and Labour kindly state if rest houses and attendants are provided for mail guards who are detained at out-stations?

(b) Is it a fact that the mail guards of S./34 line S. Division, Eastern Circle, are being detained at the out-station at Patuakhali for nearly 24 hours since the 15th June, 1929?

(c) Is it a fact that no rest house or attendant has been provided at the out-station at Patuakhali and that the mail guards have been greatly inconvenienced and put to great hardship for want of an attendant and accommodation?

(d) Are Government aware that the mail guards arranged accommodation and conveyance of articles with a local shop-keeper?

(e) Is it a fact that the Superintendent, Railway Mail Service, S. Division, refused to sanction the monthly bills of hire of the shop-keeper which have been paid by the mail guards?

(f) Are Government aware that the local shop-keeper has turned the mail guards out of his room, one of whom sent a telegram to the Superintendent, Railway Mail Service, S. Division, for immediate arrangements?

(g) Is it a fact that the amount of telegraphic charge has been ordered to be recovered from the mail guard, but no arrangement for rest house has been ordered to be made by the Superintendent?

(h) Is it a fact that the Superintendent informed the mail guards that they had no right to occupy the rest house without his previous sanction?

(i) If the answers to the above questions be in the affirmative, will Government be pleased to state what notice, if any, they intend to take, of the action of the Superintendent?

(j) Have Government considered the question of the desirability of immediately ordering the arrangement of a rest house and attendant to the mail guards, S./34 at the out-station of Patuakhali and ordering the refund of the telegraphic charge if recovered and the payment of the shop-keepers' bills from July to December?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: The reply to part (a) of the Honourable Member's question is in the affirmative. As regards the remainder of the question, Government have no information, but inquiries are being made of the Postmaster General, Bengal and Assam Circle, and the result will be communicated to the Honourable Member in due course.

HOURS OF DUTY OF SORTERS IN THE RAILWAY MAIL SERVICE.

150. Mr. Muhammad Ismail Khan: (a) Will the Honourable Member in charge of the Department of Industries and Labour be pleased to state the number of hours a sorter is required to perform (i) day duty, (ii) night duty and (iii) combined day and night duty?

(b) Is it a fact that the sorters in stationary Railway Mail Service offices are required to perform night duty on alternate days which means that they have to keep awake fifteen days in a month of 30 days?

(c) Is the sick list among the officers performing night duty in the Railway Mail Service heavy as compared with those working in the Post Office or other Departments of the Government?

(d) If the answer to part (c) be in the affirmative, have Government considered the question of the desirability of obtaining expert medical opinion on the point and of reducing the night duties by introducing a third set in all stationary offices?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: (a) The duty which a sorter is ordinarily expected to perform in a week is:

In the mail van: 36 hours day duty, 30 hours night duty; or 33 hours combined day and night duty; while in stationary mail offices the hours are 49, 35 and 42, respectively.

(b) Yes. In those Railway Mail Service stationary offices which work at night and where there are only two sets.

(c) Government understand that night duty does not involve a heavy sick list because sorters working at night get more rest.

(d) Does not arise.

STATEMENT LAID ON THE TABLE.

REPORTS ON THE DAMAGE DONE BY FLOODS IN THE NORTH WEST FRONTIER PROVINCE AND BALUCHISTAN.

Sir Frank Noyce (Secretary, Department of Education, Health and Lands): Sir, I lay on the table the information promised in reply to starred question No. 941 asked by Mr. K. C. Neogy (on behalf of Mr. B. Das) on the 25th September, 1929, regarding the reports on the damage done by floods in the North West Frontier Province and Baluchistan in 1929.

Report on the Damage done by Floods in the North West Frontier Province.

Information has now been collected regarding the damage caused by the recent floods in the North West Frontier Province and will be found summarised in the four statements attached.

2. By reason of the nature and of the widespread extent of the damage in the areas most affected, the estimates framed, except in the case of the damage done to road communications and irrigation works, are of necessity only roughly approximate and in some cases are no doubt exaggerated, as for instance in the case of damage done to lands and standing crops, more so perhaps in the Dir and Swat States where the figures given are less susceptible of check. Even so, the figures serve to present a picture true enough in its main features of the very extensive and costly damage that has been done, from the effects of which, in many cases, it will take the province some considerable time to recover. The total damage under the main heads is estimated as follows:

(a) Human life	121
	Rs.
(b) Damage to private property	93,27,154
(c) Damage to property of local bodies	57,900
(d) Damage to buildings and communications	14,12,558
(e) Irrigation works	2,10,200
Total	1,10,06,912

3. Hazara.—The damage done in this district was to some extent, due to the heavy rainfall itself but chiefly to the consequent floods in the Haro, Daur, Siran, Kunar and Indus Rivers. In some villages large parts of the village lands were swept away and have completely vanished. There was, so far as can be ascertained no loss of human life. In addition, roads and buildings maintained by the District Board have suffered considerably and it is estimated that some Rs. 30,250 will be needed to make good the damage. A further sum of Rs. 10,000 will probably be required for repairs to minor irrigation works in this district.

4. With regard to the loss of buildings, nearly all the houses which collapsed were built of mud and, except in a few villages where lands together with the houses on them were swept away, materials for rebuilding are in the main still available. The loss, therefore, though considerable in the aggregate, is, if taken individually, comparatively slight. Such collapses are, moreover not infrequent in the Hazara District where heavy rains occur from time to time and the loss therefore is not so serious or abnormal as the figures might at first indicate.

5. Peshawar.—The damage in the Peshawar District was particularly confined to:

- (1) The area of the Charsadda Tahsil bordering on the Swat River.
- (2) The areas in the Nowshera and Swabi Tahsils situated on the Kabul River below Nowshera.
- (3) Certain tracts of the Peshawar Tahsil on the banks of the Bara River, which also came down in exceptionally heavy flood.

A careful inquiry has been made into the damage caused to landowners and cultivators in these tracts. It will be observed from statement "A" that the total damage to private property is estimated at Rs. 23,21,431. The Deputy Commissioner considers that these figures are somewhat exaggerated, but that the abnormal damage caused may safely be estimated at between 15 and 20 lakhs. Much of the land which was submerged has been covered with sand and also broken up by freshly formed nullahs. Before, therefore, cultivation can again be undertaken considerable expenditure will be required.

6. The special damage due to floods and excessive rainfall to District Board works is approximately Rs. 10,000. A proportion of this will, however, be covered by annual repairs which would in many cases have to be undertaken. The district canal system suffered very heavily in the Bara area, where Rs. 8,000 will be required to repair the head works, and also in the Doaba-Sholgira canal and in the various drains recently constructed. The total damage to district canals is estimated at Rs. 20,000.

7. Kohat.—On the whole this district has suffered but comparatively slight damage and the loss in crops is far less than the benefit likely to accrue in dry areas. The damage to private property has been confined to the riverain tract. District Board property and minor irrigation works have, however, suffered to the extent of some Rs. 15,000.

8. Dera Ismail Khan.—Thanks to the timely warning given to the inhabitants of the riverain tract, the damage has not been so extensive as was at first feared. There was no loss of human life and the losses of livestock and property were comparatively slight.

9. Immediately on receipt of information that a very heavy flood was coming down the Indus, steps were taken to ensure that villages likely to be effected were evacuated in good time and that relief measures were available on the spot. The entire riverain tract was divided into six circles, each of which was placed in charge of a Revenue Officer, who was authorised to supply food and firewood to the more indigent victims of the flood. In the riverain area practically all the houses have been destroyed, but here, as in the Hazara District, the materials, are available on the spot and the work of re-building is already proceeding rapidly. The general feeling throughout the riverain tract is that the loss of houses and standing crops will be of comparatively little consequence, provided that a sufficiently liberal grant of "taccavi" for the "rabi" crop can be given, and it is hoped that the grants of "taccavi" that have been made on a generous scale will convert what might have been a calamity into a definite blessing for the district. The soil is in excellent condition for the "rabi" crop and considerable areas have been irrigated which had hitherto remained dry.

10. The protective bund at Dera Ismail Khan stood the test well, but there has been a good deal of scouring and other damage, and the bill for the repairs will be heavy. The damage to irrigation works represents chiefly the repairs which will be necessary to the Paharpur Canal and the Kot Hafiz Distributary.

11. Malakand.—The heaviest damage in the province, both in human life and in property, occurred in this Agency.

Heavy floods occurred in the Panjkora and Swat rivers on the 7th August. The bridges at Chutiatan and Darora were carried away and the traffic on the Chitral Road held up. The Balambat Suspension Bridge, built by the Nawab of Dir, was also carried away. At Chakdarra the Swat River rose six feet above the highest known flood level, protective bunds were breached and the road approaches to the bridge carried away, while the road from Jalawan to Chakdarra was flooded for two and a half days. The Chakdarra Levy Post was also destroyed. In the Swat area the road at Landaki has ceased to exist and heavy damage has been caused elsewhere to roads and bridges, including the bridge over the Swat river at Mingaora. Many acres of land and crops near the rivers have either entirely been carried away, or have come under mud and stones.

12. Up to the time of the flood, the promise of harvest was a good one, but nearly all the water channels have been damaged, and in places scour and a change in the course of the river have made it impossible to repair the channels. There was consequently some withering of crops due to the breakdown of the irrigation system.

13. Relief.—A sum of Rs. 15,000 was immediately placed at the disposal of the Deputy Commissioner, Peshawar, and steps were at once taken to provide emergent relief in the form of food, medical attendance and blankets to villagers in the affected areas. Relief funds were also opened at Peshawar and Dera Ismail Khan. An application has been made for a grant of Rs. 50,000, from the "Indian People's Famine Trust Fund" for the relief of cases of genuinely poor people who have lost their means of livelihood, and in addition an extra "taccavi" grant of Rs. 4,50,000 over and above the annual budget grant of Rs. 2,25,000 has been sanctioned by the Government of India.

THE CODE OF CRIMINAL PROCEDURE (AMENDMENT) BILL.

(AMENDMENT OF SECTION 552.)

Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava (Ambala Division: Non-Muhammadan): Sir, I beg to move that the Bill further to amend the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898 (Amendment of section 552), be referred to a Select Committee consisting of the Honourable the Law Member, Mian Mohammad Shah Nawaz, Mr. M. S. Aney, Mr. Abdul Haye, Mr. Rang Bihari Lal, Mr. Mukhtar Singh, Mr. Lalchand Navalrai, Raizada Bhagat Ram and the Mover and that the number of Members whose presence shall be necessary to constitute a meeting of the Committee shall be four.

Sir, the present section 552 runs thus:

"Upon complaint made to a Presidency Magistrate or District Magistrate on oath of the abduction or unlawful detention of a woman, or of a female child under the age of fourteen years, for any unlawful purpose, he may make an order for the immediate restoration of such woman to her liberty, or of such female child to her husband, parent, guardian or other person having the lawful charge of such child, and may compel compliance with such order, using such force as may be necessary."

It would appear that abduction or unlawful detention by themselves will not bring the case of a female child or woman under the present law. To attract the provisions of this section it must further be proved that such abduction or unlawful detention was for some unlawful purpose. Moreover, the Courts empowered in this section are the Presidency Magistrate or the District Magistrate. Further, the cases of such women and female children are only provided for who have got a husband, parent, guardian or some other person having the lawful charge of such child. Then, again, the procedure adopted in this section is only to pass an ex parte order and set the persons in respect of whom these provisions are enforced at liberty. The present Bill is more extended in its scope and would empower not only the Presidency Magistrate or the District Magistrate with such powers, but Sub-Divisional Magistrates as well as Magistrates of first class especially empowered in this behalf. The persons who would come under the Bill are children under the age of 18 years and all persons, be they males or females. Thirdly, the words "for any unlawful purpose" are sought to be deleted, and, fourthly, the procedure which this Bill provides is quite different from the procedure which we find in the present section 552. The Bill provides that, as soon as such a complaint is made and an order is passed by the Magistrate concerned, he will send for the person for whose liberty he is out to make an order, and after hearing that person or any other person whom he desires to hear, the ultimate order shall be made by the Magistrate. As a perusal of this section will show, at present there is no provision for orphans. This Bill makes a provision for those persons also who have neither a husband, parent, nor any other person to look after them.

These are the main changes which the second section of the present Bill seeks to make in the present law. The present Bill is divided into two parts. Clause 2 deals with the substitution of section 552, and a further provision under section 552A is sought to be made. As regards section 552A, I would even at this stage submit that the purpose of that amendment is rather broad-based and, in the opinions that have been received that part of the Bill has been adversely criticised. I can give this undertaking, even at this stage, that if the Select Committee propose to delete that portion, I would agree to such a deletion, not because such provisions are unnecessary, but on the ground that the Government should bring in another measure, perhaps much more broad-based than the present one, and which may apply to the whole of India. At present there are provincial Acts which deal with a part of the subject covered by the present Bill; so far as they go they may be salutary, but they do not aim at the eradication of the evils which this Bill seeks to remedy. I have gone through these opinions that have been received on part II of the Bill, and I feel that the provisions of part II as they stand at present, are rather wide. I cannot however refrain from submitting to the House that those provisions can be so remodelled that the objectionable portion can be taken away and the rest can become part of the law. But if the Select Committee should decide that this subject is one for which a special law is necessary in the nature of a Children's Protection Act, I would even agree to such a course. Thus the opinions that have been received on this Bill are to be considered so far as clause 2 is concerned.

Now, Sir, so far as the principle of the Bill is concerned, I may deal with it shortly. I know that no person can take any exception to the principle of the Bill. The principle of the Bill, shortly stated, is this, that all unlawful detentions, all improper detentions, are such for which the law should provide a speedy remedy. Unlawful detention is by itself an evil and it is the business of the Legislature or the State to see that there is a handy and prompt remedy for such unlawful detentions. Whatever may be the purpose of the detention—the purpose is absolutely immaterial—detention by itself, if it is improper or unlawful, is an evil which ought to be remedied. Now, Sir, the principle is embodied in the Habeas Corpus Act of 1816, and a perusal of 56 George III Chapter 100, section 1, shows that the words there are, "any person confined or restrained of his liberty". So that I need not dilate on the principle involved. No Englishman will be true to the best traditions of his country if he wants to question even this principle. The whole of British constitutional history has been spun out on the basis of this principle. This principle has been recognised in the Criminal Procedure Code in three sections. Section 491 deals with this principle, and the High Courts are authorised to set persons at liberty in cases of improper or illegal detentions. Then section 100, where such a detention amounts to an offence, also provides a remedy. Barring these two sections, section 552 is the only section which provides a restricted remedy in cases of this nature. As I have pointed out, the persons in respect of whom such proceedings can be taken are restricted only to females under the age of 16 and women. Secondly, the Courts which are empowered are restricted and, thirdly, detention must be for an unlawful purpose. These are the restrictions. The question arises why these restrictions should be there. The reply that has been given so far is that, as section 491 provides for a summary remedy by the High Court, such a provision as the present one is unnecessary. The criticism received from the High Court of Calcutta is to this effect, that such provisions ought not to be made as give the subordinate Courts powers of this description. In the words of the opinion, "it will be an unwarranted interference with the liberty of the subject". I beg to submit before this House that, looking at it from a different angle, this is exactly the reason why there should be a change in the law. In a poor country like India where the average income of an Indian is Rs. 0-1-6, where railway connections do not exist for each and every village, and where it might happen that a case might occur hundreds of miles away from the High Court, does the existence of section 491 afford any the least protection to a poor man? My humble suggestion is that, if the Presidency Magistrates and District Magistrates are competent to decide cases under section 304 of the Indian Penal Code and other sections, is the administration of a provision like that of section 552 so exceptionally difficult that they cannot be entrusted with powers under this section? These powers under section 491 may be powers in the interests of the rich people and in the interests of those who can reach the High Court. In the High Court the Court language is English and the law is so technical that, unless you engage counsel and pay them fees, it is beyond the reach of an ordinary man and of a poor man to be properly heard. If you want that the protection of the Habeas Corpus provisions be real and genuine in the case of poor Indians, it is absolutely necessary that it must be within the easy reach of every person to have recourse to the provisions contained in section 552, as amended by this Bill. I would therefore submit that, if it be conceded that the poor man needs protection, and I claim, Sir, that the poor man is entitled to greater protection, it would follow that, if there is a provision in section 491, there ought to be a provision in section 552 that the Sub-Divisional Magistrates and the Magistrates of the first class be specially empowered with the power of setting persons at liberty. In the case of second class or third class Magistrates there may be some reason for withholding such powers from them. I do not think it is too much to wish that in every taluqa, there should be a first class Magistrate specially empowered under this section, so that every person living in a particular taluqa may be able to avail himself of these provisions. It is very good to have these powers vested in courts on paper and to say to the world that Indians enjoy so much liberty, but in point of fact it will be interesting to inquire as to how many applications have been made by poor people by going to the High Courts. In my experience of about 20 years, I can submit that I have not known any ordinary village man taking advantage of this section. I submit that these provisions relating to the personnel of the magistracy—Presidency Magistrate and District Magistrate—should be enlarged, and there is a consensus of opinion in these opinions received on this Bill, nay almost all of them opine, that there should be a change in the law so far as the personnel is concerned.

Now, Sir, coming to the second part, as regards the question of unlawful purpose, I would submit that the opinions received are diverse. Some of the opinions are very clear in saying that these words should be deleted. Others say that, having regard to the past history of this section, it is necessary to keep these words. When I made a motion in this House for the circulation of this Bill, I referred to a case reported as 16 Calcutta, page 487. With your permission, Sir, I will refer to that case again. In that case a Hindu girl of 14 years was taken to a Mission and subsequently her husband and mother applied to the District Magistrate under this section. The District Magistrate held that, in so far as the detention of the girl was against her will, it constituted unlawful detention, and as the purpose of that detention was conversion it was an unlawful purpose also. The District Magistrate consequently held that, as the case came within the ambit of section 552, the girl should be made over to the husband and the mother. Then the case went up to the High Court and the learned Judges of that Court held that the words "unlawful purpose" meant "immoral purpose", and as conversion could not be said to be an immoral purpose, the District Magistrate was not right in applying the provisions of section 552. It is true that the learned Judges did not in their discretion think it right to restore that girl to the missionaries again. Yet the interpretation of this section was that the words "unlawful purpose" would not cover a case of this nature. Now, Sir, in cases of this character where a Hindu girl is taken away by Christian missionaries or girls of any one religion are taken away by missionaries of different religions, generally religious hatred and fanaticism are excited, which lead to communal conflicts. Further, I do not think anybody would assert that boys and girls under the age of 18 should be forced to change their religion, or that even if they agree they should be allowed to change their religion before they arrive at an age of maturity or majority. I would therefore submit that these words, "unlawful purpose" have a meaning and, if the House will excuse me the expression, a sinister meaning. They impose a greater burden on the prosecution than it should be the policy of law to impose. Take the case of a brothel. A girl is found in a brothel, and as soon as the arm of the law reaches that girl and wants to set her at liberty, the defence of the prostitute mother comes in to the effect that she wants to adopt that girl, and then the District Magistrate or the Presidency Magistrate will have to decide whether this detention is for the purpose of adoption or for any other purpose. Instances can be multiplied in which unlawful detention for an alleged lawful purpose would certainly defeat the ends of law. The very words "unlawful detention" possess a meaning which is transparently clear. Unlawful detention as held by the Calcutta High Court clearly means detention against the will of the person detained or the will of those who are the guardians of that child. These words "for any unlawful purpose" should not be kept any longer in this section; and as a matter of fact, unless and until this provision of section 552 applies to cases in which the facts found do not constitute an offence, this provision clearly overlaps the provisions of section 100. The only difference between these two sections is that, whereas section 100 contemplates cases in which unlawful detention amounts to an offence, section 552 contemplates cases in which unlawful detention does not amount to an offence. Therefore, these words "unlawful purpose", which restrict the scope of section 552, detract from the value of this section as a giver of liberty to the person abducted or unlawfully detained.

Now, Sir, as regards the persons who can be protected by this section, the age of 14 was raised to 16 by Act XVIII of 1924, or perhaps 1923. As the House knows, the Age of Consent Committee have made a suggestion in paragraph 422 of their Report, recommendation No. 37, that this age should be increased to 18. Moreover, a perusal of the opinions would make it quite apparent that the general tenor of the opinions is that this age should be raised. Exception has been, however, taken that this section should not include the case of boys and men. In regard to this, I would refer the House to the recent kidnapping scare of boys which took place in Bombay and some time back in Lahore. It is not rare that even boys are abducted or unlawfully detained. As regards men I do not know whether the experience of many of the Members here would warrant their inclusion in this section. But any person conversant with the conditions of rural life will have to admit that cases occur in which tenants or persons belonging to the depressed classes are impressed into service and are unlawfully detained by big landlords and those interested in taking forcible labour from them.

(At this stage Mr. President vacated the Chair, which was taken by Mr. Deputy President.)

It is exactly these persons who cannot go to the High Court and it is for them that this amendment should be allowed.

Now, Sir, I come to the fourth change which I seek to make in this section, that is, relating to orphans. Nobody in this House would deny that this section does not provide for the case of orphans. In many cases a question of this nature has arisen and the Courts have been found quite impotent to dispose of persons who have neither husband, parent, guardian or other persons having lawful charge. Now with regard to orphans, may I humbly inquire from Government whether any section exists in the Criminal Procedure Code which affords them protection? Are they not exactly the persons who should be protected by Government? What provision is there in the Criminal Procedure Code, under which the orphan can be made over to a society or for the matter of that to any person, because no person can be said to have been in lawful charge of such a child? The foundlings, the waifs and the parentless young children should be given every protection by every right-minded man and by every Government which calls itself civilised or responsible. In fact it is unfortunate that we Indians are in this plight. Every child is an asset of priceless value to every State, and there is no Government or State in the whole world which has not made provisions for persons born or found as orphans in their territories except perhaps this Government. Now, Sir, in the opinions received I find that almost all of them favour the idea that there should be a provision in the law for the protection of orphans. I myself have found some difficulty in some cases when the question of making over of orphans came before the Courts. The Courts were helpless, and by providing a change in the existing law, I want to make provision for orphans.

Now, Sir, as regards procedure, you will be pleased to see that the wording of the present section does not contemplate any sort of inquiry before any order of setting a person at liberty is made. It is absolutely necessary that some sort of inquiry should be made and no order passed without an inquiry. The first person who has a right to be heard and in whose welfare it is absolutely necessary that an inquiry should be made, is the person who is sought to be set at liberty. The person who sets such an unfortunate being at liberty must be brought face to face with the liberator and occasion should be afforded to find out what is the best asylum for that unfortunate being. If need be, other persons should also be examined, and after that has been done, the ultimate order should be passed. I have provided for that in my Bill.

Now, Sir, exception has been taken to the fact that the words "on oath" do not appear in this Bill. So far as that point is concerned, I am sorry for the omission. At the time when this Bill was drafted, it did not occur to me that these words were omitted and I am disposed to agree with those whose opinion is that these words should appear.

So far as the first part of the Bill is concerned, I have submitted before you, in brief, the reasons why the present law should be amended. I have only one more remark to make in this connection. At present there are many societies and institutions existing in this country which have been very highly spoken of by the public and even by officials. I know of some institutions which have been visited by Governors and other big officials also and they have been very highly spoken of. Is there any big city where an orphanage does not exist? There is no reason why advantage should not be taken of such orphanages and why such waifs and foundlings and such unfortunate children, in respect of whom these provisions are intended, should not be made over to those institutions. There is the further provision in this Bill to the effect that bonds should be taken from those societies or institutions to produce such children if they are required by any Court at any time before they attain majority. This is to secure obedience to the final orders of the guardianship Court before a child attains majority and to issue that institutions which might at one time have been doing very good work and are subsequently found wanting, may be ordered to produce the children.

Now, Sir, as regards part two of this Bill, as I have already indicated, if two small amendments are made in this Bill, the greater part of the criticism which has been made against this Bill falls away. The magistracy who ought to exercise power in regard to section 552A, should be the same as in the substituted section 552, and the operative part of the section should apply to those minor children who have got no guardian, parent or husband, etc. With these two minor changes I think section 552A, will certainly answer the requirements which the adverse body of opinion, which has been received, have in view.

I submit, Sir, that if I am right in the enunciation of the principles which I have submitted before you, this House should accept the reference to the Select Committee. It would not do to say that such and such an opinion received from this Government or that Government is against this Bill. I know that some Governments give their opinions against this Bill. But there is a specific reason for it. In Calcutta there is a Child Protection Act and they do not require this law there. In other places the opinions received have been affected by the fact that this Bill contained two parts and many do not like part two to appear in this Bill. In their opinion it is a better subject for the Protection of Children Act rather than for the Criminal Procedure Code (Amendment)

[Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava.]

Association and the Childrens' Aid Society generally favour this Bill. I would, therefore, submit, Sir, that so far as the opinions go, they generally favour the first part of the Bill and they go against the second part on account of these provisions being sought to be incorporated in the Code of Criminal Procedure and not in a separate Act. The solution for this lies in the hands of the Government. Let the Government bring forward another Bill containing the provisions of section 552A, and I shall be quite content. As regards section 552, as I have already submitted, I think a strong case is made out for reference to Select Committee. I know that it is likely that the Government will oppose the reference of the first part also to the Select Committee, but in doing so the Government will be going, at least in respect of the five or six matters regarding which a change in law is necessary, against the almost unanimous opinions that we have received. I feel, Sir, that the House is not full, and we would certainly have carried the day if the House was full in regard to a measure of this character, as it deals with the liberty of the subject in general and with the protection to be given to orphans and poor people in particular. I would therefore appeal to the Government to give the first part of this Bill the consideration which it deserves, and I hope that they will see their way to accept this portion at least.

Mr. C. W. Gwynne (Home Department: Nominated Official): Sir, I rise, on behalf of Government, to oppose the motion before the House that this Bill be referred to a Select Committee. The House will perhaps recollect that when a motion for circulation was agreed to on the 20th of February, 1929, about a year ago, Mr. Shillidy, on behalf of Government, while accepting it, suggested several reasons why the provisions of the Bill might not meet with a favourable reception, and that anticipation has been abundantly fulfilled. On that occasion the motion was merely for circulation, and the acceptance of such a motion in no way committed the House to the acceptance of any principle. But the present motion, Sir, is of a very different character, and if it is adopted, it means, by the convention which governs these matters, that the principle of the Bill meets with acceptance by the Assembly. I am afraid that Government cannot be a party to such acceptance. The opinions which the Honourable the Mover has quoted in support of his own point of view, justify from my point of view an entirely different conclusion. But I do not for a moment suggest that there is not a good deal to be said, at any rate, for a portion of the Bill, and the Honourable the Mover, in so far as he desires to afford a larger measure of protection to orphans and minors, will have the general approbation of the House, because it is a beneficent and a humanitarian object. But our objection is that the means he has chosen to secure that object are not in any way suitable, and the measure of support which has been accorded to his Bill is not to its more vital principles. There is, I agree with him, a fair degree of support for the proposals that Sub-Divisional Magistrates and first class Magistrates should be empowered under this section as well as District Magistrates, with a view to rapidity of action in emergent cases, and also that the age should be raised from 16 to 18 years. As regards the first proposal, namely, the empowering of Sub-Divisional Magistrates, my own experience as a District Magistrate is that such extension is unnecessary. Very few applications are in fact filed under this section, and those which are submitted, come to nothing and tend,— that is my own experience—to be frivolous and vexatious. Genuine cases can always be dealt with under section 100 of the Criminal Procedure Code, under which any Presidency Magistrate, Sub-Divisional Magistrates and Magistrates of the first class specially empowered, who have reason to believe that any person is confined under such circumstances that the confinement amounts to an offence, may issue a search warrant and the person, if found, shall be immediately taken before the Magistrate, who shall make such order as in the circumstances of the case seems proper. This section thus gives wide powers, ample powers, for any first class Magistrate to exercise in regard to what is ipso facto a criminal matter.

Now, Sir, as regards the question of raising the age, at any rate, as far as girls are concerned, the matter is already under consideration with Local Governments in reference to one of the recommendations of the Age of Consent Committee. Local Governments have been consulted, and the matter in due course will come again before the Government of India. Now, these two matters, which the Honourable Member describes as part one, and which do receive some support, are of far less importance and relevance to the general principle and framework of the Bill than the second portion of his proposed amendment to section 552 and his new section 552A. It is this portion of the Bill which contains the Honourable the Mover's substantive proposals and which must be examined with particular attention. It does not seem to me to be sufficient to say, as the Honourable the Mover has declared, that because opposition has been raised to that portion of his Bill, that portion of the Bill may be entirely withdrawn. We have to deal with the Bill as it stands now before the House.

I do not wish to weary the House with an elaborate discussion of details, though from the point of view of detail the Bill is open to objections,—the Honourable Member himself has suggested one or two points in which amendments might be made,—but I wish to confine myself to stating our main grounds of objection to proceeding with a Bill of this nature and in this form. The Bill itself touches a very wide subject and one which, in the opinion of most authorities consulted, requires a different kind of treatment. Our objections are that, in the first place, the Bill may give very wide powers to Magistrates who are possibly inexperienced and who would find considerable difficulty in solving some of the problems which are likely to arise, particularly in connection with the new section 552A, where the Magistrates may deal not only with a witness or an accused person, but with any person who happens to come before the Court below a certain age. He then may make a suitable order regarding the commitment of that child, to an orphanage or society with due regard to its age, religion and so on; but all those matters will in practice create very real problems for the Magistrate who has to deal with them.

Our second objection is that the Bill involves an extension of the powers exercised by criminal Courts beyond what they should appropriately undertake. The existing sections of the Criminal Procedure Code, sections 100, 491 and 552 as they stand already confer on the criminal Courts adequate powers for speedy action in emergent cases, which are the only occasions on which criminal Courts should deal with such matters.

Thirdly, we have a root objection to the Bill in the form in which it stands, and the Honourable the Mover has already anticipated that in suggesting that he is prepared to drop this portion of the Bill on an assurance from Government that another Bill will be introduced in its place. I, Sir, am concerned with the Bill which is before the House and I must state clearly that our root objection is that this Bill in effect would import into the Criminal Procedure Code a measure which is really concerned with child protection. Now, however laudable and desirable measures of that nature may be in themselves—and I am sure that every one will appreciate the object of the Honourable the Mover—yet it is not appropriate that they should find a place in an enactment relating to the procedure of the Courts and the technical machinery of our criminal administration. And in these contentions I find very general support from the opinions which have been submitted to the Assembly. I will not weary the House with a lengthy citation of these opinions. The Honourable the Mover himself has referred to many of them, but I would refer to them very briefly in a manner which will indicate a somewhat different perspective from that of the Honourable the Mover and because I wish to make it clear that our opposition is based on advice received from very different sources. Nearly all the Local Governments are definitely opposed to the Bill. The Chief Commissioner of Delhi criticises its details and thinks that separate legislation will be more appropriate. The Chief Commissioner of the North-West Frontier Province considers that the Bill is dangerously wide in its scope and that the proposed amendment is unnecessary. The United Provinces think that no amendment is called for. Baluchistan and Coorg, if any action is to be taken, are in favour of a separate enactment. The Central Provinces are opposed to the Bill. The Honourable the Mover said in his speech that the Central Provinces Government were inclined to support it, but what is actually said is that the Governor in Council agrees with the majority of the opinions received, which are opposed to the principle of the Bill, and the Central Provinces Government are particularly opposed to the new clauses. The Government of Bengal are also opposed to the amendment. The Honourable the Mover has referred to the criticism made by that Government that there is ample remedy in the civil law, and has said that he cannot understand it, but the statement of the Government of Bengal refers to remedies provided by the civil law in cases of detention without criminal intent. The Criminal Procedure Code applies to cases where there is criminal intent. The Bihar and Orissa Government refer to the portion of the Bill to which I have taken exception as undesirable. The Burma Government are again opposed to the Bill. The Madras Government are opposed to the amendments on the ground that the Bill goes very far and that it represents a new departure in legislation and gives too much power and discretion to Magistrates. The Punjab Government are of opinion that the existing law is satisfactory and that no change is required. Turning to the Bombay Government, the Honourable the Mover claims that he gets very substantial support from that Government. I admit that the Bombay Government are prepared to accept the proposals to give jurisdiction to Sub-Divisional Magistrates and selected first class Magistrates. They consider, however, that the new section obviously goes far beyond the Mover's purpose and would be dangerous in practice.

That is a fairly complete summary of the objections taken by Local Governments, but I would like to refer for a moment to the opinions of the High Courts on this matter as the opinions of high judicial officers must obviously possess very great weight on a subject of this kind. The High Court of Allahabad are opposed. The Calcutta High Court are of opinion that the new section is objectionable on the ground that it confers too wide powers on Magistrates. The High Court of Bihar and Orissa are opposed to the section on the ground that it gives Magistrates too wide powers and might be exercised arbitrarily and without evidence. The Burma High Court, while agreeing with the principle of the Bill and thinking that the object of the Mover is commendable, consider that Central legislation is undesirable, and that provincial legislation is more appropriate, and that the provisions of the Bill itself are open to objection. The Judges of the Madras High Court are unanimously opposed to the amendment. The Bombay High Court are opposed to this new section. Even the Bombay Vakils' Association is of opinion that the subject requires separate legislation.

Finally, I would refer to the opinions, neither judicial nor executive, of societies and organisations not concerned with the administration of law and justice but with the practical problems, the solution of which the Honourable the Mover, to his credit, has so much at heart. The Country League of Cawnpore, while strongly in favour of measures which will effectively protect orphans, waifs and foundlings, is of opinion that legislation should be undertaken in a more direct way and not by attempting to change a Code which deals with matters of procedure. The European Association, Bengal, is opposed to the Bill. It points out that nothing would be easier under new section 552A than to contrive that a child should be summoned in a case in a criminal Court and that the Magistrate would find himself in a very delicate position. The Bombay Presidency Women's Council does not favour the provisions of the Bill on the ground that cases which the Honourable the Mover has in view would be more appropriately dealt with under a Children's Act. The Children's Aid Society, Bombay, considers that the new section should not be enacted. It would be possible to cite many more opinions to the same effect, but I think, Sir, that I have said quite enough to show to the House that this is a Bill which should not be referred to Select Committee in view of the very definite objections which are felt by the Government of India, and which have received the strongest confirmation from nearly all the authorities consulted, whether executive or judicial. I therefore ask the House to reject this motion.

The Revd. J. C. Chatterjee (Nominated: Indian Christians): Sir, although I compliment the Honourable the Mover on the very laudable motives that have prompted him to promote this measure of legislation, it seems to me that it is very difficult to accord support, especially to section 552A, wherein he tries to provide for the custody of persons whose liberty he wishes to restore and especially that of orphans and children. He provides that a person or a child who is to be set at liberty should, in the discretion of the Magistrate, be committed to the care of a person or of a society or of an orphanage. Then, again, he also provides in section 552A, or desires to provide in that section, that children involved in criminal cases should also be committed to the care of orphanages and societies and suitable persons. He has referred to the excellent work done by various orphanages, and he opines that there are orphanages in large towns all over the country which are competent to take care of these children and which can be trusted to produce them whenever they are summoned by the Court which committed them to the care of these orphanages. Sir, I have no pretensions to any legal knowledge. My only excuse for taking part in this debate is this, that I have had a good deal to do with the looking after of orphans and waifs and strays, not only of any particular religion or belonging to any particular society, but I have for several years, on behalf of the Delhi Municipality, conducted annual and periodical inspections of orphanages in this city belonging to all communities. It may well be argued that an orphanage or a properly constituted society is the right and natural agency to take care of waifs and strays, or of children concerned in criminal cases, but one's practical experience does not warrant that view in a great many cases. I gladly bear testimony to the excellent work done by various societies in this direction. Such good societies exist in many places and especially in large towns. I understand in places like Poona and Calcutta excellent societies are in existence. I would also bear testimony to the good work of some orphanages that are looking after children in this city. But when I think of the condition of a large number of orphanages that I have not once, but several times, visited I sometimes wonder whether the remedy that is suggested by the Honourable the Mover will not be very much worse than the disease, and whether those very children that he desires to protect or provide for will not be subjected at least in some cases, to a worse form of tyranny and to a confinement which may be more tyrannical than the one from which he wishes to release them. In this city itself there are orphanages about which every one must have read most ugly reports. These orphanages have been concerned in criminal proceedings, which do not reflect any credit on them. Only the other day, the members of the Municipal Committee of Delhi or, at any rate certain prominent members were shown certain police reports about an orphanage in this very town where the children are kept under the very worst form of tyranny and are very much worse off than any children in a jail would be.

Mr. B. Das (Orissa Division: Non-Muhammadan): What do the Municipal Councillors do? Why did they not visit these orphanages?

The Revd. J. C. Chatterjee: They do visit them, but the difficulty is that these orphanages have a wonderful organisation on paper, and for certain reasons they have powerful supporters, and it is impossible, in view of communal prejudices, to bring any direct action against these orphanages.

Now, Sir, what I am trying to say is this, that by giving the power to Magistrates to confine children or orphans in these orphanages, we are putting a very heavy responsibility on inexperienced Magistrates and perhaps may defeat the purpose which the Honourable the Mover wants to achieve. Take, for instance, the case of a child that is concerned in a criminal case, or the case of an orphan who is to be disposed off by the Magistrate by sending him to an orphanage. Now, the average Magistrate is a busy person and he may or may not have the local knowledge that is necessary of the inner working of any particular orphanage. He looks at the organisation, as given on paper, and he commits the child to a certain orphanage. Now, I know from my own experience that there are certain orphanages here that to a very great extent starve the children and keep them in virtual imprisonment. In one or two cases I have seen an armed guard placed on the door and the children are not allowed to go out. Now, it may be said that these children can always be sent for by the Magistrate, who will require a bond to be executed. If a child is concerned in a criminal case and he is confined to a certain orphanage, that child may be produced in a court of law when required, but what is there to prevent the greatest pressure, or even coercion being brought to bear on that child? He may be made to say exactly the things which he did not do, or give tutored evidence.

Then, again, the Honourable the Mover himself referred to the difficult case of a child who was received in a missionary orphanage for the purpose of conversion. I do not want to enter into the details of this aspect of the case at all, but the instance quoted shows that most of these orphanages and societies have a very strong religious leaning and bias. It is also known, at any rate in this city orphanages belonging to different religious persuasions or even different sections of the same community are always trying to steal the orphans belonging to each other. All these cases will show that the religious protection which the Honourable the Mover desires to provide may be not only nullified but even entirely destroyed by the committal of minors to the care of orphanages.

After all, I believe, that in a country like India where so many religious persuasions and so many faiths and so many communities, exist, the proper agency to run these orphanages is the State. In my opinion the right people whose duty it is to look after the orphans and the waifs and the strays should be the State. Till such time as a sufficient number of well run orphanages are available, it seems to me that it would be very dangerous to give powers to a Magistrate, or to make it obligatory for him in any way to confide these children to the care of any particular orphanage.

I entirely agree with the opinion expressed by certain High Courts and by some Provincial Governments that the proper method of dealing with these cases, especially in the case of orphans and children, is a carefully drawn up Child Protection Act. That is what we require, and I do not see any provision made in the Bill in the direction. What the Honourable the Mover desires to do would have been done much better in the Provincial Councils, who are better suited to provide for conditions prevailing in each province. Moreover, it is only the provincial Legislatures who are competent to say whether they have got orphanages and societies competent to take care of such people. My submission is that such a Bill should be promoted in the provincial Legislatures, and at all events, what is required is a Children's Protection Act and not a Bill of such very general and wide nature as has been brought forward by the Honourable the Mover.

Mr. M. K. Acharya (South Arcot cum Chingleput: Non-Muhammadan Rural): I just want to say this. We have had enough of my Honourable friend Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava's mountain in labour and it is high time we got the mouse out. I therefore move that the question be now put.

Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava: Sir, in reply to the two speeches which have been made in opposition to this motion, I have to thank the Honourable Members who have spoken in appreciation of my motives. Sir, I had enough appreciation when the motion to circulate the Bill was adopted by this House. I do not want any appreciation of the motives that actuated me in bringing forward this measure, not that I do not appreciate the kind-heartedness of those who have given the appreciation.

[Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava.]

but what I want is a bigger thing. I requested the Government to consider this Bill on its merits, and I am sorry to say that I feel disappointed in the replies that have been given. Much breath has been lost on Part two of the Bill, in respect of which I already submitted that, if the Select Committee so desired, I was willing to drop it, not because it was unnecessary, but because it may better form the subject of a separate Children's Protection Act. Now, it is no use lashing a dead horse. All these criticisms have been concentrated upon Part two of the Bill. Now the arguments that I submitted while moving the motion have not been met. The only argument or better expression of opinion in regard to those points was that which I got from the Honourable Member who spoke on behalf of the Government, when, he referred to his own experience as a District Magistrate, and said that such applications were generally frivolous

Mr. C. W. Gwynne: Not that all applications are vexatious or frivolous, but that such applications filed before me have been of that nature.

Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava: His experience warrants him in the statement that such applications are frivolous. But I do not think this advances his case. Anyhow his statement that section 100 is quite sufficient for such cases is one which cannot be accepted, for the simple reason that there is a section 552 also in the Criminal Procedure Code. As I submitted already, these two sections provide for different contingencies. Section 100 is applicable to cases in which unlawful detention or confinement amounts to an offence. Section 552 applies to cases in which abduction or unlawful detention does not amount to an offence. Abduction, as many Honourable Members are perhaps not aware, is by itself no offence under the Indian Penal Code. It is abduction with some purpose, unlawful purpose of course, which is an offence. The reasons that I gave, I do not want to repeat now. I would submit that the Government seem to have been affected by the reasons that I gave, and in so far as they have not even attempted a reply to those reasons, I take it that they want to take advantage of their numbers and they want to defeat this motion by sheer numerical force.

Coming to the second speaker, I sympathise with him in his sad experience of these institutions, but this argument cannot hold water. If there are bad orphanages, if the Magistrate is inexperienced, the remedy lies not in having no orphanages at all or not empowering the magistracy—the remedy lies in having good orphanages and in improving the magistracy. It is a poor argument that our magistrates are inexperienced and therefore they cannot be empowered. As I submitted already, why do they empower them in all other particulars, in much more serious matters? This power of making over a child to an orphanage is discretionary. It does not bind the Magistrate to make an order of this nature, and therefore, unless and until the Magistrate is satisfied that such and such an orphanage or association is working well, he may not make an order making over the child to the orphanage.

The Revd. J. C. Chatterjee: May I ask, in case the Magistrate is not able to find in any particular town any orphanage which satisfies him, what is he to do?

Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava: I am glad that my Honourable friend has put that question to me. He and I are at one in this matter. He suggested that it was the duty of the State to provide for such orphanages and I already submitted that no State could absolve itself from such responsibilities until and unless it took care of every foundling or stray child. So that it seems to me that my Honourable friend, the Revd. Chatterjee's objection to this Bill is that there are not many orphanages. But he ignores the fact which I mentioned in the last part of my speech, that if there is a single orphanage, and if a single orphan could be protected in this way, we should have this Bill. This Bill does not impose any duty upon any Magistrate to hand over every child to any orphanage, good, bad or indifferent. On the contrary, this Bill gives discretion to the Magistrate.

Under these circumstances, I leave the matter entirely in the hands of the House. But I would make this appeal to the House. The provision in the Bill, so far as the second part goes, may or may not be considered; it may be deleted. But in so far as the first part of the Bill is concerned, it makes provision for protection of orphans and it empowers the Sub-Divisional Magistrates and the Magistrates of first class with powers which can be utilised for the better protection of the poorer classes of people who cannot afford to go to High Courts. In so far as that first part is concerned, this Bill is decidedly an improvement upon section 552. If the House agrees in these two main facts, I think it will agree with me in referring this matter to the Select Committee.

Mr. Deputy President: The question is:

"That the Bill further to amend the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, (Amendment of section 552), be referred to a Select Committee consisting of the Honourable the Law Member, Mian Mohammad Shah Nawaz, Mr. Abdul Haye, Lala Rang Behari Lal, Mr. Mukhtar Singh, Mr. Lalchand Navalrai, Mr. M. S. Aney, Raizada Bhagat Ram, and the Mover, and that the number of Members whose presence shall be necessary to constitute a meeting of the Committee shall be four."

The motion was negatived.

THE CODE OF CRIMINAL PROCEDURE (AMENDMENT) BILL.

(AMENDMENT OF SECTIONS 205 AND 540A.)

Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava (Ambala Division: Non-Muhammadian): Sir, I move that the Bill further to amend the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898 (Amendment of sections 205 and 540A), be referred to a Select Committee consisting of the Honourable the Home Member, Mian Muhammad Shah Nawaz, Mr. Abdul Haye, Mr. Lalchand Navalrai, Mr. Rang Behari Lal, Mr. Mukhtar Singh, Raizada Bhagat Ram, Mr. M. S. Aney, and the Mover and that the number of members whose presence shall be necessary to constitute a meeting of the Committee shall be four.

Sir, section 205 of the Criminal Procedure Code runs thus:

"(1) Whenever a Magistrate issues a summons, he may if he sees reason so to do, dispense with the personal attendance of the accused, and permit him to appear by his pleader.

(2) But the Magistrate inquiring into or trying the case may in his discretion, at any stage of the proceedings, direct the personal attendance of the accused, and, if necessary, enforce such attendance in manner hereinbefore provided."

acquitted and discharged people was 1,70,438, whereas the number of convicted persons was 78,724. Taking India as a whole, the number of accused acquitted or discharged in the year 1926 was 10,86,894 and the number of convicted persons, 11,14,159. So that in a majority of cases, when you find that ultimately the accused is acquitted, I do not know what reason there is that the law should insist that the accused must be present at all costs. Barring this aside, I would quote as an illustration one or two cases in which this provision works as a great hardship. Suppose there is a riot case in which there are 20 accused. They are charged. Under section 256 they are allowed to consider which witnesses they want further to cross-examine, and the hearing is adjourned for two or three days, after which they must come up before the Court and put in their presence. The accused in this instance come from a village say 30 or 40 miles from the headquarters. Now these 20 accused must remain at the headquarters for the two or three days and spend at the headquarters, say a rupee a day. Now, Sir, those who mix with these people cannot fail to realise the great hardship which is inflicted on these people in a case of this nature, many of whom are likely to be acquitted when the judgment is pronounced. Now take another case. Two of the accused are in jail and 18 are on bail. One of them falls sick and the Superintendent cannot allow him to go to the Court. The case cannot be proceeded and therefore all the 18 accused come every day to the Court and go back disappointed. Even excluding this special reference to section 256, it happens that in every criminal case there are a number of hearings; interrogatories are sent and so on, and the replies are not received. Evidence is given in respect of a particular accused which does not affect the co-accused. Instances of this sort can be multiplied in which an accused person need not be present in the Court and should not appear if he has to consult his own interests. I would, therefore, submit, Sir, that in cases in which summonses are originally issued, there is no knowing what turn the case will take subsequently. It happens that when a person comes into Court, he presents the case to the Court in an exaggerated way, so that warrants may be issued to start with. At that stage of the case the Court has not heard both sides and the accused is not there, and it is likely that when the facts are exaggerated the Court may issue a warrant. As soon as the accused comes on the scene, he satisfies the Court that the case is not serious. But the original sin of the issue of a warrant comes in the way of the accused and he cannot claim dispensation on any particular hearing. Thus, Sir, in many cases a great hardship is inflicted. On reference to the provisions of section 205, I submit he must be a bold lawyer who will be able to say that any person except the Magistrate has got the power to dispense with the presence of the accused. But, Sir, those who administer the law are moved by humane considerations and they interpret the law in a different way.

Now, Sir, I would refer you to Section 353 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The heading is "Of the mode of taking and recording evidence in Inquiries and Trials", and the section reads:

"Except as otherwise expressly provided, all evidence taken under Chapters XVIII, XX, XXI, XXII, and XXIII, shall be taken in the presence of the accused, or when his personal attendance is dispensed with, in the presence of his pleader."

So that the dispensation of personal attendance can only have reference to section 205, but the Courts have construed this provision as giving them power for dispensing with personal attendance. I can quote several authorities in which, in spite of the provisions of section 205 being there, the Courts have interpreted section 353, which deals with the mode of taking evidence, into a provision which gives them power to dispense with the presence of the accused. Now, Sir, the first authority which I would quote is 24 Indian Cases, page 947. It was a case under section 494. Bailable warrants were issued in the first instance; the High Court discharged the bail bonds and directed the Magistrate to substitute summons for warrant, and thus in a tortuous way, in a way which is to say the least not straightforward and direct, they wanted to evade the provisions of section 205. Similarly in another case—a Bombay case reported in 15 Indian Cases, p. 96, reference was made to section 353, and the High Court held that section 353 conferred powers by implication on Magistrates, and that it was absurd to think that there was any power which that section conferred on a Magistrate which it did not confer also on the High Court. Again, Sir, the Madras High Court also construed from this analogy that, if a Magistrate has got powers, the High Court must have those powers. In a case reported in 66 Indian Cases, p. 330, Mr. Justice Kumaraswami Sastri held, considering the merits of the case, that in the interests of justice, the presence of the accused should be dispensed with. Again, the Calcutta High Court also, in a case reported in 23 Indian Cases, p. 489, held that they could dispense with, or even a Magistrate could dispense with, the attendance of the accused in cases in which warrants were issued in the first instance, where the Magistrate, after careful inquiry and after preliminary investigation, thought fit to issue a warrant. I could quote other cases in this connection, but I think my purpose is served by reference to these cases. It follows therefore that humane considerations, the interests of justice, and the compelling necessities of the case warrant the incorporation of an express provision in the law.

Now, Sir, when we come to the provisions of section 540A, which really is in the nature of an exception to the general rule, you will find that only in a very restricted number of cases this provision in section 540A applies. In the first place, the case must be one in which there are more than two accused. Suppose there is one accused, then this section would not apply, and his presence could not be dispensed with. Under the provisions of section 540A—and this is a point which I specially request the House to consider—unless and until the accused is present in Court, the Court is powerless. The words used are:

"When the accused is incapable of remaining before the Court, and if the Superintendent of the jail reports that the accused is suffering from plague, the Court is powerless and the case must be adjourned."

Only in one contingency, when the accused is there, the Court can order that the accused's presence may be dispensed with. It happens—and it is not a rare case—that a person is unable to come before the Court; as he has to come from a distance where there are no medical men and as he cannot produce a certificate he must come at the cost of his health and at great inconvenience. After he has come, and after the Court has satisfied itself that the man cannot remain there, the Court can dispense with his presence. After that, Sir, even if he recovers after a day or two, the Court has to make a special order calling on him to appear. Then, too, Sir, he must be a man who can afford to pay a counsel and must be represented by a counsel. Lately, Sir, Government brought in a Bill for amending the law in relation to hunger strikers, in which a very drastic change was sought to be made in the Criminal Procedure Code, whereby, in the absence of the accused also, the case could go on. When the necessities of the case force the Government to have recourse to a Bill like that, may I submit that the necessities of the case should at least actuate the Government to accept this motion and consider the Bill on its merits, on the ground that if an accused on account of certain difficulties cannot afford to be present on a certain hearing, the Courts should be empowered to give him relief.

Now, Sir, if you compare these provisions with the provisions relating to bail, you will find that disease, infirmity, old age are the considerations which, under the new provisions of section 497, can be considered as circumstances favouring the grant of bail, but these considerations which, even in capital cases can secure bail for the accused persons, cannot according to the present law secure for him dispensation from presence on a particular hearing. The objection usually urged against this change is that rich people will be able to secure such dispensation by corrupt means. Now, Sir, an objection of this sort, if I may venture to say so, is based upon inexperience. If the Courts are corrupt, they have subtle ways of doing things; they will acquit the accused rather than make an inconvenient or lenient order in his favour; and if they are corrupt, the best way is to improve the magistracy and not to run away from doing the right thing. It has been recently held that the period during which an accused remains in the judicial lock-up cannot be taken into consideration at the time of awarding sentence against him. Thus presence at the trial cannot be punitive and undue insistence for the presence of accused at every hearing is not reasonable. The Court may however insist that the accused should be there to receive his sentence. It is the business of the accused person himself to see that he is present at the hearings. Presence to hear judgment can be secured by taking a heavy bond. Generally speaking, this change in the provisions will only affect those who are bailed out in cases in which summonses are not usually issued, and as the provisions of sections 204 and 90 of the Criminal Procedure Code will indicate, in cases in which warrants are issued in the first instance, the Courts are competent to issue summonses and vice versa. So that this change, if effected, will only straighten the law. It will merely validate what is being done by some Courts even today, but not under the law. Moreover, Sir, this will not be a new change. As I have already submitted, the previous Codes of 1861 and 1872 had provisions of a like nature, and the law will become more humane if my suggestions are accepted. Sir, you have to consider the whole case from the standpoint of the accused, and the privilege which an accused enjoys is one of the criteria for judging whether the law is fair or not. After all, this Bill does not give any right to the accused. It invests discretion in the Court, which can award imprisonment, or acquit him, or do whatever it likes with an accused person. It will give complete discretion to the Court to allow him dispensation from being present for a hearing or two. I therefore submit, Sir, that the exemption from attendance should not be based upon the original sin of a summons or warrant having been issued, but should be based upon the humane necessity of the absence of the accused. It should not be regarded as an inherent right of the accused, but it should be regarded as one of the discretionary powers of the Court which can make proper orders in certain cases. In the interests of the speedy disposal of justice and convenience of the accused, it is necessary that these two sections, sections 205 and 540A, should be amended in the manner I have suggested. It may be said, Sir, that the words "need not attend" in section 540A are a bit too wide. I have indicated in the illustrations I have submitted that there may be cases in which really the presence of an accused person is unnecessary, and the Court may also, for reasons to be recorded, regard his presence to be unnecessary. In such cases these words are not too wide, but even if they are wide, the Select Committee can consider this point and ultimately decide whether these words should remain or some other words should be substituted.

Now, Sir, I know there will be one more objection urged against this Bill. It will be urged that the very wording of the form of warrant negatives such an exemption. As between a summons and a warrant, Sir, as you know, the difference is, that whereas a summons requires an accused to appear, the warrant gives an order to the police to bring him before the Court. Now, section 205, as it stands, relates to cases in which the accused is to appear for the first time as well as in the subsequent stages of the case, and the fact that the summons was first issued will determine in future whether the accused can be granted any exemption; so that the accused is prejudged and his fate is decided, so far as he is concerned, before he comes before the Court. I quite see, Sir, the force in the objection that a warrant is in the nature of an order to bring the accused to the Court, but there are bailable warrants also; in fact, this objection can also be considered in the Select Committee. I do not know of any other serious objection, otherwise I would have tried to meet it as well, and I think that, so far as the humane considerations go, there ought to be a change in the law. I may refer here to the law in Great Britain. It will be found in Halsbury's Vol. IX, at page 351. The foot-note at page 351 runs as follows:

"In case of an indictment which is found in the King's Bench Division or has been removed there or to the Civil Side of the assizes, if the charge is one of treason or felony, the defendant must appear personally in Court to plead, unless he has obtained the permission of the Court to plead by a Solicitor (Crown Office Rules, 1906, r. 121). If the charge is one of misdemeanour, or if the defendant on a charge of treason or felony has obtained leave to plead by a Solicitor, the defendant may enter a written plea (Short and Mellor, Practice of the Crown Office, 2nd edn. 100). As to prisoners standing in the dock, see R. v. Horne Took (1794), 25 State, Tr. 1, 12. A defendant in misdemeanour who is conducting his own defence may, after arraignment, by special permission of the Court leave the dock and take a seat at the table of the Court. After he has once pleaded, his presence is not indispensably necessary."

From what I have read just now, I understand that such a dispensation can be granted by Courts in Great Britain, but I am not sure on the point, and I expect an elucidation on the point from persons who know better. Whatever be the state in Great Britain, I submit, Sir, that in India when you are considering the case of poor people who have to attend headquarters for criminal cases, it is absolutely necessary that they should not be harassed by insisting on their presence for days together in warrant cases. Really one has to put himself in the position of a poor innocent man who is accused in a criminal case, and then finds that even the ultimate acquittal will not bring him any relief. He may be ruined before the case is decided, and it may happen that his absence at the bed of a dying child or a parent will always embitter the rest of his life for having gone to attend a case in which he is ultimately acquitted. I therefore move, Sir, that the Bill be referred to a Select Committee consisting of the persons I have named.

Mr. C. W. Gwynne (Home Department: Nominated Official): Sir, I regret that I am again compelled to oppose, on behalf of Government, the motion moved by my Honourable friend, Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava. I will endeavour to avoid the charge which he brought against us in connection with his last Bill that we wasted breath on that occasion, and I shall try to be as brief as I possibly can. I would like to remind the House that the Honourable the Mover himself was of opinion, so recently as August last, that the next stage after introduction in the case of this Bill should be circulation for eliciting opinions. He himself gave notice of such a motion. If I may say so, that notice was a correct and proper notice in the case of a Bill which affects the administration of criminal law. The Honourable the Mover then recognised that it is only right that the Local Governments, who are so intimately concerned with this subject, should have an opportunity of expressing their views and offering their criticisms and suggestions. My Honourable friend held that view as I say, up till August last, and I suggest that that is the view which should more appropriately be held today. Now, however, he asks the House to dispense with that stage of consultation and pass at once to the stage which implies acceptance of the principle of the Bill. Why has he suddenly become an apostle of haste? I would ask him whether there is any adequate reason for attempting to put on the Statute-book, in a hurry, a piece of legislation which cannot in any conceivable quarter be regarded as a matter of urgency. In the view of the Government, there is no justification for the omission of a stage which is particularly necessary in a Bill of this character on which the opinions of Local Governments, Courts and Judicial officers would be extremely valuable.

To turn for a moment to the provisions of the Bill. I will avoid altogether discussion of details. I have not the capacity for research, which the Honourable the Mover has shown in the matter of statistics, rulings and previous legislation. Nor do I wish to discuss the basis of the difference between the two kinds of cases. Whatever it may be, I am quite sure that it is better than the basis of differentiation suggested by the Honourable the Mover—the probability of a large number of cases resulting in acquittals. Now the provisions of the Bill are designed to give a very wide, and I think unwise, extension of the occasions on which the personal attendance of persons accused in criminal cases may be dispensed with, and to increase still further the opportunities for perhaps unnecessary and inconvenient adjournment. The Honourable the Mover, according to his Statement of Objects and Reasons, in his solicitude to provide for the non-attendance of the diseased and the aged, has proposed amendments which enjoin no such limitation, and their effect would be that any man, especially a man of means charged with an offence in which a warrant could normally issue in the first instance, would make every endeavour to avoid the unpleasantness and the publicity of personal attendance, or to secure an adjournment of the case and postponement of its decision. It is easy to see that the procedure would lead to very grave delay in the disposal of cases.

There is no question of corruption, as the Honourable the Mover seemed to think. If the Magistrate considers, on representations made, that there is ground for adjournment, under the Honourable the Mover's proposals he would have no option but to grant it. There is no question of the Court being corrupt. These provisions would not only lead to delay, but would seem to imply a complete disregard of the convenience and rights of the complainant, who is at least as deserving of as much consideration as my Honourable friend would show to the accused, and for whose convenience alone he seems to have regard. The well-to-do criminal or the well-to-do accused would find it easy to avoid appearance and postpone the conclusion of the trial. The Bill would thus place him in an advantageous position, and would virtually put him in such a position that he could control the procedure of the Courts. It would emphasize a distinction not known in the law between the rich and the poor and, as I have said before, completely ignores the unfortunate complainant who is anxious for his complaint to be heard without delay and expense. I am quite sure that the House will not wish to hear any further on this point. I oppose the motion for reference to Select Committee because the principle of the Bill cannot be accepted without prior consultation and because its provisions, as they stand, are open to grave objection.

(Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava rose in his place.)

Mr. Deputy President: How long will the Honourable Member take?

Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava: I will not take long. I will take about ten minutes.

The Assembly then adjourned for Lunch till Twenty Minutes to Three of the Clock.

The Assembly re-assembled after Lunch at Twenty Minutes to Three of the Clock, Mr. President in the Chair.

Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava: Sir, I am reminded of a story in which a wolf was drinking water up-stream.

Mr. President: Has that anything to do with this Bill?

Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava: Yes, Sir. When he saw a lamb who was taking water down-stream, the wolf accused it of spoiling the water. The poor lamb replied that, as the wolf was taking water which did not flow from the place where the lamb was taking water, there was no good reason why the wolf should accuse it. "But, then", the wolf replied, "if you have not spoilt the water, your father did!" That seems to be the position taken up by the Government in regard to this Bill. Instead of meeting the arguments which I advanced, they have brought forward arguments which cannot hold water. After all, the reply is that, if there was a motion to circulate this Bill for eliciting public opinion, Government would have agreed to such a motion, and, as I happened to table a motion in the Simla Session for circulation, I was not justified in now tabling a motion for reference to the Select Committee. May I submit that the original motion in regard to this Bill which I proposed to make on the 20th February, 1929, was for reference to Select Committee, as would appear from a foot-note on page 1027 of Vol. I of Assembly Debates for 1929. When I came to know that the Government did not agree to that motion, I thought that the motion for circulation might be made in the Simla Session. However before making the present motion, I took pains to find out the attitude of the Government and I was informed that the Government were not agreeable even to a motion for circulation. Anyhow, I do not know what restrained the Government themselves from tabling a motion to that effect. In regard to other Bills they have tabled such motions, but in regard to this Bill they have not tabled any such motion. If the Government did really want circulation, it was up to them to make a motion of this kind. In fact, the truth appears to be that the Government feel quite strong and feel that they will be able to defeat this motion, and therefore they have not thought it wise even to table a motion for circulation.

Coming to the merits of the Bill, I had thought that this time some good arguments would be advanced and it would be shown why the Government oppose this Bill. Only two arguments have been advanced, one of them being that such a change in the law would lead to delay. Now, a reference to the Bill, in so far as it relates to section 540A, would show that that change is only designed to effect a speedy trial of cases. The substituted section says that, when an accused person need not attend or cannot attend, the case can proceed on and the Court can dispense with his presence. If that provision is worth anything, it only brings about a speedy trial of cases and the question of delay does not arise. The second point that has been sought to be made out is that the Bill does not consider the case from the point of view of the complainant. Now, Sir, in the majority of cases, the complainant will be the Crown. In all cognizable cases the complainant is the Crown, and the Court, which is the repository of all justice, will weigh the scale between opposing parties and determine if the application of a particular accused is justified. In the law as it existed in 1861 and 1872 and previous to 1898, these provisions were there. And even now, as I submitted, the Courts have interpreted the other sections of the Criminal Procedure Code in this way, that practically they have usurped those powers which did not belong to them under the provisions of Section 552. I only wanted that the interpretation of the law should be straight and just.

The argument that rich persons will take advantage of this law cannot hold water. My complaint was that poor persons were harassed owing to the absence of a provision like this. Instead of meeting that now, the complaint is made that rich people will try to absent themselves and thus defeat the law. In fact this argument comes to this, that the rich people will be able to corrupt the judges and get exemptions. I already met this argument, and the reply is absolutely clear. See that good men are there, that the Magistrate is competent and not corrupt. But it is no use having provisions in the Criminal Procedure Code which make for such conditions that the human necessity of the absence of accused cannot even be considered by Courts. Therefore, I feel that, in relation to this Bill, the Government regard not argument but number as the deciding factor. I would appeal to every Honourable Member of the House to consider the provisions of this Bill dispassionately and see for himself whether these provisions should be incorporated in the Criminal Procedure Code.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That the Bill further to amend the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898 (Amendment of sections 205 and 540A), be referred to a Select Committee consisting of the Honourable the Law Member, Mian Mohammad Shah Nawaz, Mr. Abdul Haye, Lala Rang Behari Lal, Mr. Mukhtar Singh, Mr. Lalchand Navalrai, Mr. M. S. Aney, Raizada Phagat Ram, and the Mover; and that the number of Members whose presence shall be necessary to constitute a meeting of the Committee shall be four."

The motion was negatived.

THE INDIAN RELIGIOUS PICTURES TRADE MARKS (PREVENTION) BILL.

Mr. B. Das (Orissa Division: Non-Muhammadan): Sir, I beg to move that the Bill to penalise the use of pictures of gods and goddesses, scenes from scriptures or mythology of any religion whatsoever as marks or trade marks on any article imported to or manufactured in India, be referred to a Select Committee consisting of the Honourable the Law Member, the Honourable Sir George Rainy, Sir Hugh Cocke, Rai Sahib Harbilas Sarda, Mr. N. C. Kelkar, Mr. K. C. Neogy, Mr. Fazal Ibrahim Rahimtulla, Sir Purshotamdas Thakurdas, and the Mover, with instructions to report on or before the 28th February, 1930, or as soon as possible thereafter and that the number of members whose presence shall be necessary to constitute a meeting of the Committee shall be five.

Sir, my Honourable friend, Mr. Neogy, has a Bill before the House which is the Indian Merchandise Marks Bill which intends to purify commerce in the country. My Bill is rather a supplement to Mr. Neogy's Bill. I also want in a way to purify trade and commerce in the country, and I do not want trade and commerce in the country to take advantage of religious pictures and use them at a disadvantage to those who belong to that particular religion.

Mr. President: Why not take circulation and be satisfied?

Mr. B. Das: I will accept the motion for circulation. But before doing so, I wish to make a few observations. My own views, I have summarised in the Statement of Objects and Reasons. If I read it, my own views will be laid before the House.

"Many articles imported from foreign countries or manufactured in British India bear on them the stamp or picture of Hindu gods and goddesses, scenes from scriptures or mythology, as marks or trade marks. It is repugnant to religious sentiments that they should be so used and profaned by coming into contact with every day humdrum commercial life. Respect for Hindu sentiments demands that the pictures of gods and goddesses and the scenes from scriptures and mythology should not be used as marks or trade marks on any article sold in the market. In like manner, it is proposed to provide that pictures from life of Buddha, the Koran, the Bible should not be used as marks or trade marks on any article sold in the market. The object of this Bill is to penalise all such imports and manufactures so as to prevent the abuse that has grown up within recent years. Commercialisation of religious sentiments is anti-Indian in tradition, and culture and sentiment."

Sir, there is extensive vandalism going on committed by the trades people all over. My charges apply equally to imported goods as well as to goods manufactured in India, and my charge of vandalism against the Indian manufacturers is the greater because they being themselves Indians, understand Indian sentiments and the Indian feeling of the Hindu community and other communities, who do not like to see pictures of their gods and scriptures degenerated and commercialised as trade marks. I have got here certain pictures which I have collected from piece-goods, foreign imported piece-goods, which show that these are not the real pictures of the gods and goddesses whom they mean to represent. As a Hindu, I abhor to see God Krishna or any other god being caricatured in the pictures imported from abroad and used as commercial advertisement. I will place those pictures on the table* of the House so that Honourable Members may have an idea what they are like. The trading community in India have also used these pictures in their calendars as a source of advertisement for their profession and trade. At times we find certain pictures which are certainly not of the gods and goddesses, but pictures fit to adorn the night clubs of London or Parisian Saloons. Such pictures of gods and goddesses have certainly a great demoralising effect on the masses of the people. I want that trade and commerce should not tamper with our religion and with the morality of the people. I will pass on the pictures I have to the House, and Honourable Members will see how atrocious they are. It is very disgusting to see the pictures of Radha and Krishna in improper positions of cinema and theatres. 'Cinema actors' and actresses' photos—with their lustful and lewd faces—are passed off as pictures of Lord Krishna and Radha. Any human being, not to say a Hindu, will abhor seeing it.

An Honourable Member: They might do so on the stage.

Mr. B. Das: I am not discussing here whether such scenes should not be enacted on the stage. In fact I think my Honourable friend, Mr. Neogy, might bring in a Bill penalising such scriptural scenes being enacted on the stage by loose men and women, so that the Honourable the Home Member might have an opportunity of expressing his views in the House on that question. I am now concerned with such pictures being used as trade marks and for commercial purposes, and which have a most demoralising effect on the people. I already said that I welcome the proposition of the Honourable Sir George Rainy to circulate the Bill. But I would like to hear his views in the matter before I accept the motion for circulation, for if I accept his motion, it would mean the guillotine for the Bill during the next Session and I could proceed with the Bill only if I am returned at the next general election.

The Honourable Sir George Rainy (Member for Commerce and Railways): Sir, I desire to move the amendment which stands in my name: "That the Bill be circulated for the purpose of eliciting opinions thereon". I do not wish to take much of the time of this House on this question, but there are three or four points to which I think I am bound to allude. It seems to me that the Honourable the Mover has undertaken the task of initiating legislation on this subject somewhat light-heartedly, and without endeavouring to estimate the difficulties he might encounter, or considering the justification which he ought to give for his proposal.

*The pictures were laid on the table of the House.

The first point I wish to take is this. In the opinion of the Honourable the Mover the application to articles which are bought or sold in India of marks or trade marks representing mythological subjects—pictures of gods and goddesses and other pictures with religious association—is repugnant to Hindu sentiment. Now, the point I would like to put to him and the House is this. If in fact the application of these pictures in that way were repugnant to the sentiment of the majority of the buyers of these goods, is it conceivable that manufacturers and merchants would apply these marks so freely? Is not the natural inference rather this, that these particular marks and pictures attract customers rather than repel them? I think that is a very real and solid point, which sooner or later the Honourable Member will have to meet, if he decides to proceed with his Bill.

The second point that I wish to take is this. Has the Honourable 3 P.M. Member considered how, if his Bill became law, it would be possible to enforce it? That is a question which came prominently to notice in connection with my Honourable friend Mr. Neogy's Bill for amending the Indian Merchandise Marks Act. It is practically impossible, as things are in India today, to make a prohibition of that sort effective at the time of sale, and I am afraid that, if the Bill were passed into law, it might to a large extent be a dead letter. You might of course prevent the importation at the customs of goods to which certain marks, or trade marks, were applied; again you could conceivably—I do not know whether that is what my Honourable friend contemplates—have at every factory in India some sort of establishment which would check all goods before they left the factory and see that the marks thought to be objectionable were not applied. That might be possible, though it would be a considerable burden on the industry. But, even supposing we had all these precautions, if in fact it assists the sale of goods to have these marks applied, what is to prevent the merchant or middleman, after the goods have been imported and after the goods have been manufactured and have left the factory, from applying these marks later on? I think these are very real difficulties and it is precisely because they demand close examination that it seems to me necessary that the Bill should be circulated before the House comes to a determination about it.

My third and last point, Mr. President, is this. I quite realise the difficulties which private Members in this House have about the drafting of their Bills and I only mention this point because I want to be quite clear as to what the Honourable Member proposes. The operative clause in his Bill, clause 2, reads like this:

"Any person from whom a customs duty is levied in any place in British India for importing any article, or the manufacture in India of any articles . . ."

That apparently reads: "Any person from whom a customs duty is levied for the manufacture in India of any article . . .". I am not aware that customs duties are levied for the manufacture of any articles in India at present, but the point I wish to get at is this. Is it definitely the Honourable Member's intention and the intention of his Bill that this prohibition should be applied both to imported goods and to goods manufactured in India?

Mr. B. Das: Yes, that is so.

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: I am grateful to the Honourable Member. It was necessary to raise the point because, if the House decides to circulate the Bill, the Local Governments and others would have been unable to express an opinion if they had regard merely to the terms of the clause as it stands which seemed to me ambiguous and very difficult to construe indeed.

I do not think it is necessary, Sir, that I should take up the time of the House longer.

Mr. B. Das: Sir, I beg to withdraw the motion for reference to Select Committee and I accept the motion for circulation.

Mr. President: It is for the House to accept.

Mr. W. Alexander (Madras: European): Sir, when this Bill first came into my hands, I had considerable doubt as to whether the Honourable the Mover really intended to include the words: "It extends to the whole of India". And after waiting for his explanation, I am left guessing and wondering still. For this reason. In the course of a long business experience, and seeing the use of these pictures of gods and goddesses as trade marks, I can only say that, so far as regards the Madras Presidency, it does not apply at all, and that there is no repugnance, as stated in the Bill, to the use of those marks on the part of the people of that Presidency. In fact it is quite the other way. One has only to go into the bazars and see how those pictures are used in an ornamental way on the walls of shops and houses; and instead of the attitude towards them being one of repugnance, it is really that of admiration, respect, and I might almost say, veneration.

Then there is another aspect which I think requires elucidation. I do not know if the Honourable Member, in trying to stop the use of those tickets by this Bill, remembers that certain marks have been used over a long term of years and have become quite valuable,—owing very largely to the fact that they are usually identified with a reliable and good quality of cloth, or whatever it is,—say colour and general workmanship. They are owned by Indians as well as by other traders. Does the Honourable Member propose to compensate the owners for the loss they would incur through the cancellation of their right to use them? And if he does propose to compensate them, is he aware that the huge amount involved in doing that is a matter which no Government could possibly consider for a moment?

There is another point I would like to make, and this rather concerns the Honourable the Mover himself. I do not know if he is of a very religious turn of mind, but I think, we may assume from the fact that he has put forward this Bill, that he has considerable leanings in that direction. Now, I would like to point out that in this Bill he proposes to uproot very old custom and usage. I would ask him to consider that, in doing that, he may possibly get on to very dangerous ground. The Honourable Member may not be superstitious, but he and I have been friends for some years past, and I do not like to think of his possibly being harassed and worried by hosts of angry gods and goddesses disturbing his peace of mind for the rest of his natural existence, and, for all we know, perhaps far beyond that. I would therefore appeal to this House to vote solidly against this measure. Sir, I oppose the motion.

Mr. President: The original motion was:

"That the Bill to penalise the use of pictures of gods and goddesses, scenes from scriptures or mythology of any religion whatsoever as marks or trade marks on any article imported to or manufactured in India, be referred to a Select Committee consisting of the Honourable the Law Member, the Honourable Sir George Rainy, Sir Hugh Cocke, Rai Sahib Harbilas Sarda, Mr. N. C. Kelkar, Mr. K. C. Neogy, Mr. Fazl Ibrahim Rahimtulla, Sir Purshotamdas Thakurdas and the Mover, with instructions to report on or before the 28th February, 1930, or as soon as possible thereafter, and that the number of Members whose presence shall be necessary to constitute a meeting of the Committee shall be five;"

Since which the following amendment has been moved:

"That the Bill be circulated for the purpose of eliciting opinions thereon."

The question is that that amendment be made.

The motion was adopted.

The Assembly then adjourned till Eleven of the Clock on Thursday, the 6th February, 1930.

THE PROVIDENT FUNDS (AMENDMENT) BILL.

The Honourable Sir George Schuster (Finance Member): Sir, I beg to move that the Bill further to amend the Provident Funds Act, 1925, for certain purposes, as passed by the Council of State, be taken into consideration.

This is a very short Bill which was fully discussed and debated in the Council of State. Its objects are clearly stated in the Objects and Reasons to the Bill and I do not propose to take the time of the House with any further explanation of its purpose. Sir, I move.

The motion was adopted.

Clauses 2, 3 and 4 were added to the Bill.

Clause 1 was added to the Bill.

The Title and the Preamble were added to the Bill.

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: Sir, I move that the Bill, as passed by the Council of State, be passed.

The motion was adopted.

THE INDIAN INCOME-TAX (AMENDMENT) BILL.

The Honourable Sir George Schuster (Finance Member): Sir, I beg to move that the Bill further to amend the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, for certain purposes (amendment of sections 2, 23, etc.), as reported by the second Select Committee, be taken into consideration.

The main object of this Bill has been under consideration for six years. Different projects of legislation, including the original draft of the present Bill as it stands, have been circulated by one method or another a number of times and commercial opinion has thus had repeated opportunities of expressing itself on the provisions of the Bill. The subject was also considered by the Taxation Inquiry Committee. Two Select Committees have sat upon the Bill. I think, Sir, therefore, that the Government cannot be accused of undue precipitance in bringing forward this legislation, and I hope that the Bill, as now amended by the second Select Committee, will meet with the approval of this House.

The main object of the Bill is to prevent the avoidance of income-tax and super-tax by the formation or multiplication of companies or firms as a means of reducing the rate of tax payable by the individuals who are interested in these companies or firms. The Bill aims only at the improper use of this practice. It is a Bill which has sometimes been referred to as the Bogus Companies Bill. That in itself is a misleading term. It refers to companies which are formed for a certain purpose and which are utilised for a certain purpose. In order to come within the provisions of this Bill, Companies or firms must be in the control of one or a very small number of persons; but not only that, they must be used definitely for the purpose of avoiding tax. I want to make that clear. There is no intention in this Bill of penalising any company which happens to be controlled by one or by a small number of persons, unless it is used for the particular object of avoiding tax. The provisions of the Bill have, as I have already explained, been very fully considered by the two Select Committees, and I should like to take this occasion of expressing my thanks to the Members of the Select Committees for the care which they have given to this subject and for the assistance which they have given to me in drafting its provisions. I think, Sir, that the objects of the Bill are so clearly apparent from the clauses of the Bill and that the work done by the second Select Committee is so clearly explained in its Report, that it is not necessary for me at this stage to say anything further on the subject. If points are raised in the course of the debate, I should be very pleased to give further explanations. Sir, I move.

Mr. M. S. Aney (Berar Representative): Sir, I wish to state that I did not intend to move the amendment* that stands in my name, but I want to make one observation for which I think this is the proper occasion, and that is in connection with the presentation of the Report of the Select Committee on this Bill. It was unfortunate that, when the last meeting of the Select Committee was held, I could not be present owing to a previous engagement which I had made on that day. When the Report was being circulated to the Members for their signatures, it was sent to me, but somehow or other the man who brought the Report to me for my signature, whether he had instructions or not I could not say, said he could not wait even for ten minutes to enable me to go through it. I do not know why it should be so. I asked him to leave the Report with me so that I might go through it, consider it and then append my signature to it, but he said he had no time and I said, "All right, you can go". I was told that some time afterwards he came to me, but I could not see him, and I was surprised to find that the Report had been presented here although I wanted to go through it and put in my signature. After the Report was presented, I read it and did not find anything in any portion of the Report to which I should take objection, but what surprised me was that the arrangement for circulating the Report of the Select Committee should be of such a nature that members of the Select Committee could not have time enough to go through it, consider it and make any suggestions they might want to make. That is the complaint I have to make, and I thought I could make it on the day of the presentation of the Select Committee's Report, but I found that the Standing Orders did not permit it as it is laid down that no debate can be raised at the time when the Report is presented by the Member in charge to this House. That is why I have brought this little point to the notice of the Honourable Member in charge in connection with this Report, and also with a view to impress further that hereafter the arrangements for the circulation of Reports of Select Committees should be of a more satisfactory nature. I have nothing to say on the merits of the Report. I support the motion of the Honourable Member.

*"That the Bill, as reported by the Select Committee, be recommitted to the same Select Committee."

I have nothing to say on the merits of the Report. I support the motion of the Honourable Member.

*"That the Bill, as reported by the Select Committee, be recommitted to the same Select Committee."

Sir Hugh Cocke (Bombay: European): I sympathise with the Honourable Member, Mr. Aney, that he was not able to be present at the last meeting of the Select Committee and that he was not able to retain the Report of the Select Committee long enough for him to read it, but I am glad to hear that, having read it now, he is quite satisfied with the work of the other members of the Committee. I was a member of the first Select Committee on this Bill, and we found it a very difficult one to phrase satisfactorily. We made an attempt, and since then a further attempt has been made, and I think undoubted improvements have been made in the Bill. The Honourable the Finance Member, in his remarks just now, referred particularly to the fact that this Bill was not aimed at a genuine company; it was only aimed at companies which were out to hold up profits in order to avoid taxation. I just want to say one word on that point, because it has been one of the most difficult matters which the Select Committee have had to deal with, namely, the question of using phraseology which would make it perfectly clear that this Bill was not aimed at a genuine company. The opening words of clause 4(2) are:

"Where the Income-tax officer is satisfied that a company is under the control of not more than five of its members and that its profits and gains are allowed to accumulate beyond its reasonable needs, existing and contingent, having regard to the maintenance and development of its business without being distributed . . . etc. . . ."

Those words, Sir, "having regard to the maintenance and development of its business", that have been put in are very important, and the explanation of the Select Committee is equally important. The Select Committee's Report on clause 4 says:

"The first insertion we have made expands the words relating to the 'reasonable needs existing and contingent' of the business, and are designed to place it beyond doubt that accumulations made by a company as a matter of sound financial practice or in order to make provision for the development of its genuine business, shall not come within the scope of the sub-section."

Now, Sir, every one who is at all connected with business knows that companies do come into existence, in connection with which it becomes essential to hold up profits for perhaps a number of years, and there are companies which have had to do that, and might have to do it again, so that it was very essential that it should be made perfectly clear in this Bill that these companies should not be interfered with in their legitimate holding up of profits in connection with the development of their business. I think that has been made clear in this Bill, and as long as it is understood by income-tax officials throughout the country that they are not expected, under this Bill, to attempt to assess such profits, or rather not to deal with companies in the way the Bill provides, where those companies are genuine development companies, I think no harm will come from this particular feature of the Bill.

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: Sir, with reference to the amendment moved. . . .

Mr. President: No amendment has been moved.

Mr. M. S. Aney: I did not move it.

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: With reference to the amendment standing in the name of the Honourable Member, Mr. Aney, I should only like to say that I hope that, when he next serves on a Select Committee with which I am concerned, we shall have the benefit of his presence at our meetings and of the critical examination which he always gives in such a determined way to the provisions of any Government measure.

As regards the remarks of my Honourable friend, Sir Hugh Cocke, I have no hesitation at all in associating myself with what he has said. I intended to make it quite clear that this Bill, if it is passed into law, will not be used to interfere with genuine business operations, and I shall do my best to see that suitable instructions are issued to that effect.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That the Bill further to amend the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, for certain purposes (amendment of sections 2, 23, etc.), as reported by the second Select Committee, be taken into consideration."

The motion was adopted.

Clauses 2 to 11 were added to the Bill.

Clause 1 was added to the Bill.

The Title and Preamble were added to the Bill.

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: Sir, I beg to move that the Bill, as amended, be passed.

The motion was adopted.

DEMANDS FOR SUPPLEMENTARY GRANTS IN RESPECT OF RAILWAYS.

Expenditure from Revenue.

WORKING EXPENSES—ADMINISTRATION.

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons (Financial Commissioner, Railways): Sir, I beg to move:

"That a supplementary sum not exceeding Rs. 18,25,000 be granted to the Governor General in Council to defray the charges which will come in course of payment during the year ending 31st March, 1930, in respect of 'Working Expenses—Administration'."

Mr. K. C. Neogy (Dacca Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I desire to draw the attention of this House to the initiation of a new procedure that has been made by my Honourable friend, Mr. Parsons, in connection with this Supplementary Demand. Honourable Members will find that in the Statement of these Supplementary Grants, it is stated that the Standing Finance Committee for Railways has agreed to this particular Demand being granted. In the past the invariable practice has been to circulate the proceedings of the Committee bearing on these grants. On the present occasion, what I find is that the proceedings of the meeting of the Standing Finance Committee for Railways, dated the 27th September, 1929, have been stitched on to these Supplementary Demands Grants; and on going through that paper, I find that it has absolutely no bearing upon the Demands which we are expected to consider today. I do not know whether my Honourable friend intends to be more and more independent of the control of this House, as I understand he is getting more and more independent of the control of the Governor General in Council.

Sir, I find that one of the reasons assigned in justification of this excess expenditure in this particular grant is that there has been a slight increase in publicity expenses—I suppose (because of increased activities of the Publicity Department in Europe and America; but we in this House certainly can claim to have the benefit of the publicity activities of the Railway Department in trying to understand these Demands for Grants. My Honourable friend, Mr. Parsons, not merely did not care to circulate the proceedings of the Standing Finance Committee, but he thinks that this demand is so very reasonable that he need not even say one word in its support.

There is one other point, Sir, to which I wanted to draw your particular attention, and that is that there is one outstanding point of order in connection with these Supplementary Demands. If I may refer you, Sir, to your own observations made in connection with Supplementary Demands for Railway Grants on the 16th of March last year, you will see that you said on that occasion that, if these amounts represented monies that had already been spent, then these should more appropriately come up in the shape of Demands for Excess Grants and not as Demands for Supplementary Grants, and that, when in reply to that observation of yours it was pointed out that the practice had been in the past to undertake expenditure of this nature with the approval of the Standing Finance Committee, you were pleased to observe as follows:

“I think the Honourable Member will agree with me when I say that if money has been spent already in excess of the grant voted by this Assembly, the Government can only come by way of a motion for excess grant. That is, as I understand, the right Parliamentary procedure. However, as the Honourable Member points out that this practice has been in vogue for the last few years, I do not wish to raise any objection at this stage, but will see that the procedure is regularised in future.”

I do not know, Sir, whether it is your pleasure that this Supplementary Demand should be allowed to be brought up like this, if this particular amount or any portion of it has already been spent without the sanction of this House.

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: Sir, I am very glad that Mr. Neogy has raised his first point, for it enables me to make an explanation to the House. There is no intention whatsoever on the part even of a supposedly independent Financial Commissioner of Railways to alter the previous procedure. What occurred was this, I called a meeting of the Standing Finance Committee for Railways on the 4th instant, with the intention of passing one or two of these Supplementary Grants. I may say that they had agreed to the Supplementary Grant on which we are now speaking at a meeting held in December last in Calcutta, though by an oversight that agreement was not recorded in the proceedings of the meeting. I therefore got it confirmed at the meeting held yesterday. I called originally for a meeting on the 4th instant, so as to enable me to get the usual documents before the House, describing the proceedings of the Standing Finance Committee, before these motions were moved today; but the House sat rather later than was expected and several members of the Committee represented to me that it would be inconvenient to them to hold a meeting at that time. Therefore, to meet their convenience, I held a meeting on the morning of the 5th February. Actually at that meeting the only papers laid before the Standing Finance Committee were the papers which are already in the hands of Members of this House, and the only comments made by the Members of the Standing Finance Committee were that they approved of the proposals for these grants. But if there is any suspicion that, in bringing forward these motions now, I am attempting in any way to alter the ordinary procedure, I should prefer, with your permission, Sir, to withdraw the motions and bring them forward again on another day, if that would be in order. Actually I explained to the only Honourable Member who has put down a motion with regard to these Grants exactly what had occurred and showed him the Report of the Standing Finance Committee.

My friend, Mr. Neogy, then raised a question with regard to our publicity expenses. I may explain that the Railway Board are extremely keen to get extra traffic from a growth of the travelling habit among Indians and they are considering constantly the development of that side of the activities of the Central Publicity Office. I shall be quite prepared to have a memorandum drawn up by the Chief Publicity Officer showing exactly what we have done in that direction and to lay copies of it in the Library of the House and also, as is indeed my intention already, to place it before the Standing Finance Committee for Railways. I think that will meet Mr. Neogy's point.

Mr. K. C. Neogy: I beg my Honourable friend's pardon: I was complaining of the want of publicity of the proceedings of the Standing Finance Committee for Railways.

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: I am sorry I did not catch the Honourable Member properly. I hope I have satisfied him that there was no intention not to publish the proceedings of the Committee.

As regards the point whether a supplementary grant or an excess grant should be asked for for this expenditure, it is never very easy, when you are dealing with Railway expenses, to say exactly whether the money has already been spent or not. With regard to the portion of the Rs. 18 lakhs odd which is really due to our opening more new lines, I can say with absolute confidence that that money has not yet been spent; that is to say, that though the staff has been employed on these lines, we have not so far exceeded the grant we had when the Budget was passed. I could not say the same with the same amount of definiteness about the expenditure on the Central Publicity Office; but I think it may be assumed that the amount provided for the Central Publicity Office in the Budget has been sufficient up till now, and that if we had not to incur expenditure for two more months, we should not want more money. That deals with all the points, I think, raised by my Honourable friend.

Mr. President: The question is:

“That a supplementary sum not exceeding Rs. 18,25,000 be granted to the Governor General in Council to defray the charges which will come in course of payment during the year ending 31st March, 1930, in respect of ‘Working Expenses—Administration’.”

The motion was adopted.

WORKING EXPENSES—REPAIRS AND MAINTENANCE AND OPERATION.

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: Sir, I beg to move:

“That a supplementary sum not exceeding Rs. 1,39,85,000 be granted to the Governor General in Council to defray the charges which will come in course of payment during the year ending 31st March, 1930, in respect of ‘Working Expenses; Repairs and Maintenance and Operation’.”

[Mr. A. A. L. Parsons.]

I have explained the reasons for this Supplementary Grant, I hope in sufficient detail, in the Statement which has been circulated to Honourable Members.

The motion was adopted.

APPROPRIATION FROM THE DEPRECIATION FUND.

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: Sir, I beg to move:

"That a supplementary sum not exceeding Rs. 1,00,00,000 be granted to the Governor General in Council to defray the charges which will come in course of payment during the year ending 31st March, 1930, in respect of 'Appropriation from the Depreciation Fund'."

Mr. B. Das (Orissa Division: Non-Muhammadan): Sir, before these motions are passed, I should like to ask my Honourable friend, Mr. Parsons, a few questions. I do not want to make a speech, because a week hence we will be discussing the Railway Budget once again, when we will have sufficient time to go into details. However, I would ask my friend one question. How is it that his Department did not anticipate this huge expenditure of one crore when framing the Budget last year? Everybody knows that the Government of India are in financial difficulty, verging almost on bankruptcy, and one crore is a very big sum and it might affect the ways and means Budget of the Honourable the Finance Member.

The next question that I wish to ask is this. In the Notes relating to this Supplementary Grant it is written that 18½ lakhs are due to the adoption on the Company-managed railways of the procedure in force on State-managed railways for accounting for credits for material returned to stock from replacement and renewal works. I would like to know whether the old materials that are returned to the store are charged at their original value, or are entered at the depreciated market value of the day on which it is credited to the account of those Company-managed railways. I am very severe in my criticism about the Company-managed railways as they are often reluctant to utilise their appropriations from the Depreciation Fund because, under the contract, they always enjoy the benefit of the surplus profit share if they can show a large balance in the Depreciation Fund. For that reason I should like to know if Company-managed railways do not always underrate their estimates and gain large surplus profits.

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: Sir, the first point raised by Mr. Das was, how was it that we did not anticipate this large expenditure at the time the Budget estimates for this year were framed. Actually, as I hope the explanation in the book of Supplementary Demands shows, this does not represent extra expenditure except to the extent of 25 lakhs. The balance represents purely book adjustments.

Now, in regard to the sum of 57 lakhs which have to be credited to Capital and debited to Depreciation Fund, the position is as follows. I had no information myself that this adjustment had to be made until some time this month, although I believe it was brought to the notice of my office some time in November last. There is no doubt that these adjustments could have been made before partly in this year, partly in the previous year and partly in the year before. But there was some misunderstanding in the minds of the authorities of the East Indian Railway as to what should be done. I do not think, therefore, that it can be said there has been a failure here to anticipate expenditure; the failure has been to bring to account certain transactions on the Railways quite as rapidly as should have been done.

With regard to the 18½ lakhs due to the adoption on the Company-managed railways of the procedure for dealing with certain credits on State-managed railways, I shall endeavour to explain the point briefly. The change only relates to the Government accounts of these railways. It does not affect the Companies accounts at all, and it does not in any way whatsoever affect their surplus profits. We need not, therefore, be afraid that in this matter there has been laxity of control over or by Company-managed railways. We could not actually make provision for this particular change in the Budget, because at that time there was no decision to change our procedure. The old procedure was not in accordance with correct rules of accounting, and when it was brought to our notice, we decided to amend it.

The last item of 25 lakhs represents expenditure which, at the time the Budget for 1929-30 was framed, we expected to incur last year, I can only say that this is probably the most difficult point in making railway estimates that I have to deal with. It is almost impossible to say whether you are going to get, shall we say, the delivery of a large batch of locomotives on the 31st March in one year or on the 1st of April in the next year. All you can do when you frame your budget estimates is to make the best estimate you can.

Mr. President (to Mr. B. Das): Are you satisfied?

Mr. B. Das: Yes, Sir.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That a supplementary sum not exceeding Rs. 1,00,00,000 be granted to the Governor General in Council to defray the charges which will come in course of payment during the year ending 31st March, 1930, in respect of 'Appropriation from the Depreciation Fund'."

The motion was adopted.

STRATEGIC LINES—WORKING EXPENSES AND MISCELLANEOUS.

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: Sir, I beg to move:

"That a supplementary sum not exceeding Rs. 7,50,000 be granted to the Governor General in Council to defray the charges which will come in course of payment during the year ending 31st March, 1930, in respect of 'Strategic Lines—Working Expenses and Miscellaneous'."

The motion was adopted.

The Assembly then adjourned till Eleven of the Clock on Saturday, the 8th February, 1930.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

Saturday, 8th February, 1930.

The Assembly met in the Assembly Chamber of the Council House at Eleven of the Clock, Mr. President in the Chair.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

REQUISITION OF VILLAGERS TO GUARD THE RAILWAY LINE.

249. Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava: (a) Will Government be pleased to state if it is true that many village people were made to stand along the railway line between Delhi and Tughlaqabad and at other places during the recent tour of His Excellency the Viceroy for the purpose of watching the line or some other purpose?

(b) If the reply to part (a) is in the affirmative, will Government be pleased to state whether the services of these people were requisitioned through the police or through some non-official agency?

(c) Were these village people impressed into service by way of begar or did they come voluntarily on payment of remuneration?

(d) If any remuneration was paid what was the amount per head and what was the total cost?

(e) Will Government be pleased to state the hours during which these persons were on duty at the various places?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: (a) I can only deal with that part of the Honourable Member's question which is specific, and I have ascertained that the allegation to which it refers is without foundation.

(b) to (e). The questions do not arise.

ENGAGEMENT OF SCOTLAND YARD POLICE FOR INDIA.

250. Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava: (a) Is it true that Scotland Yard policemen have been imported in connection with the recent bomb outrages in India?

(b) If so, how many persons have been so engaged and on what pay and for what period?

(c) Are Government aware that the importation of a foreign agency is resented by the services concerned?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: (a) It is entirely untrue.

(b) and (c). Do not arise.

SUPPLY OF ELECTRICITY TO THE DELHI MUNICIPALITY.

251. Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava: (a) Are Government aware of the dispute about the rate at which electricity is supplied to the Delhi Municipality and its citizens by the Delhi Traction and Lighting Company?

(b) Is it a fact that there is a glaring disparity between the rates at which the said Company buys electricity from the Government and supplies the same to the Delhi Municipality and its citizens?

(c) Will Government kindly quote both the rates?

(d) Is it a fact that the Delhi Municipality have requested the Government not to enter into any fresh agreement or to sell the electricity generating plant to any person including the Delhi Traction and Electricity Company before consulting them or considering their offer?

(e) What reply if any, have Government given to the Delhi Municipality?

(f) If none so far has been given, what reply do Government propose to give?

Sir Frank Noyce: The necessary information has been called for and will be supplied to the Honourable Member on receipt.

SALE BY GOVERNMENT OF PLANT AND ELECTRICITY TO THE DELHI TRACTION AND LIGHTING COMPANY.

252. Pandit Thakur Das Bhargava: (a) Do Government contemplate the sale of its electricity generating plant to the Delhi Traction and Lighting Company and are any negotiations in progress in respect of such sale?

(b) Have Government entered into any fresh agreement with regard to the sale of electricity to the Delhi Traction and Lighting Company?

(c) If so, will Government kindly lay on the table a copy of such agreement?

(d) Are Government aware that the popular belief is that the Government wants to benefit the Delhi Traction and Electricity Company whose capital is mainly European at the expense of the citizens of Delhi?

(e) Are Government prepared to consider the advisability of having a Joint Electricity Board on the lines of the Joint Water Board for Old Delhi and New Delhi?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: (a) No, Sir. A committee has, however, been appointed by Government to report on a proposal recently received from the Company asking for a revised agreement for the sale of electricity. The Committee's Report has not yet been received.

(b) The reply is in the negative.

(c) Does not arise.

(d) The reply is in the negative.

(e) I am not prepared to make any definite statement on this suggestion at present, but it will receive due consideration.

SALE OF SILVER FROM THE PAPER CURRENCY RESERVE.

253. Mr. N. C. Kelkar: (a) Will Government be pleased to state precisely the statutory powers under which they have sold silver from the Paper Currency Reserve?

(b) Is it a fact that by the sale of silver undertaken by Government a certain portion of the notes in circulation was left without a corresponding liquid reserve?

(c) Will Government be pleased to state whether there was any loss arising from the sale of silver and if so, whether it has been charged to the revenues of India? If it has not been, has it been included in the suspense account, and if so, how long do Government intend to keep it in the suspense account?

(d) What was the reason that prompted Government to stop disclosing the details about the reserve in the form of securities in the annual report of the Controller of Currency since 1925-26?

(e) Are Government satisfied that the amount of Reserve mentioned in the latest Paper Currency Statement (December 31, 1929) is satisfactory and that it is actually represented by as much bullion or securities?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: (a) The constitution of the Paper Currency Reserve is at present regulated by the provisions of section 19 of the Indian Paper Currency Act (X of 1923). Subject to the restrictions laid down therein, Government, as the chief currency authority, have full power to vary the form in which the Reserve is held.

(b) The result of the sale of rupees as silver is that the backing to the note issue corresponding to the amount of rupees sold ceases to be rupees held at their nominal value and is converted into gold securities representing the bullion value of the rupees sold, supplemented by Treasury Bills for the difference between the nominal value and the bullion value. The intrinsic value of the backing, independent of the Treasury Bills, remains the same, but in a sense it becomes more liquid and it has the additional advantage of earning interest.

(c) In one sense there is of course a nominal loss, which arises because rupees are held at their face value, but the real value of the Reserve is not affected by the sale of silver. This nominal loss has not been charged to revenue but remains in suspense. The question of its final adjustment is under the consideration of Government.

(d) The published records show all that Government is required to publish under section 27 of the Indian Paper Currency Act. The publication of additional details was discontinued because it was considered not to be in the public interest that they should be disclosed. The practice now followed is in accord with that of the Bank of England and of central banking authorities in other countries.

(e) As regards the first part of the question, the Government consider that the assets held in the Paper Currency Reserve, combined with those in the Gold Standard Reserve, to represent a satisfactory reserve, although, as I have made clear on other occasions, they think it desirable that part of the large holding of silver rupees should gradually be converted into gold or gold securities. I do not understand the significance of the second part of this question. Of course the Government are satisfied that their returns are correct.

Mr. N. C. Kelkar: With regard to (d) will the Honourable Member give a somewhat clearer idea as to what sort of public interests are served by not giving the information?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: It is not desirable that the public should always be informed of the exact transactions in Government securities. That has been adopted as the practice by central banks in all countries.

Mr. N. C. Kelkar: Has there been a change in the practice? Were the details given before and stopped now, or has it been a continuous practice not to give the details?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: The change was made in the form of the return, I think, in 1925, and since then the same practice has been followed. There has been no recent change.

Mr. N. C. Kelkar: What was the reason for the change in practice in 1925?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: I have already given the reason that it was considered not to be in the public interest to continue to publish the details.

THE CASH ON DELIVERY SYSTEM.

254. Colonel J. D. Crawford: (a) Will Government be pleased to state the value of India's outgoing business on the C. O. D. system?

(b) What are the countries with which such business is done?

Mr. H. A. Sams: (a) The value of C. O. D. parcels sent from India to foreign countries during 1928-29 was Rs. 8,71,015.

(b) Great Britain and Northern Ireland, the Irish Free State, the Straits Settlements, Federated Malay States and Johore.

INDIANISATION OF SUPERIOR STAFF IN ORDNANCE FACTORIES.

255. Mr. K. C. Neogy: (a) Will Government be pleased to state what steps have been taken to Indianise the gazetted and the superior non-gazetted staff in the ordnance factories?

(b) How many Indians are working in the ordnance factories as (i) Works Managers, (ii) Works Inspection Officers, (iii) Assistant Works Managers, (iv) Foremen, and (v) Assistant Foremen?

(c) What is the standard of qualifications laid down by Government for the appointments mentioned in part (b)?

(d) Is it a fact that the posts of Assistant Works Managers are not advertised in the Indian papers?

Mr. G. M. Young: (a) Owing to the dearth of Indian candidates with the necessary technical and practical qualifications for the appointments referred to by the Honourable Member, the Government of India selected and appointed an Indian gentleman in 1926 as an Assistant Works Manager under training for a period of five years to acquire the necessary qualifications. This gentleman is still under training.

A system of apprenticeship training has also been in force in the ordnance factories for some time. After five years' training, the apprentice is appointed as a supervisor or a journeyman, and is given further practical experience to qualify him for the higher non-gazetted appointments.

(b) (i), (ii) and (iii). None.

(iv) One.

(v) Seven.

(c) I will furnish the Honourable Member separately with a statement giving these qualifications.

(d) No, Sir. Whenever there is any chance of securing a suitable candidate in India, the vacancy is advertised in the Indian newspapers.

Mr. K. C. Neogy: Is it the idea to defer appointing a second apprentice till the Indian gentleman mentioned by the Honourable Member has completed his five years' training?

Mr. G. M. Young: I must ask for notice of that question.

INDIANISATION OF SUPERIOR STAFF IN ORDNANCE FACTORIES.

256. Mr. K. C. Neogy: (a) Is it a fact that the post of (i) a Chemist Assistant Manager for the Cordite Factory and (ii) a Metallurgist Assistant Manager in the Metal and Steel Factory was advertised only in England in the recent past?

(b) What qualifications were looked for in these two cases? Did Government endeavour to ascertain whether there was any suitable Indian to fill in these appointments?

(c) Have departmental and warrant officers of the Indian Army Ordnance Corps been appointed as Assistant Works Managers, permanent and officiating, in these factories?

(d) What was the standard of technical and general education of these men?

Mr. G. M. Young: (a) Yes.

(b) A statement showing the qualifications required will be furnished to the Honourable Member separately. From this statement it will be apparent to the Honourable Member that there was no likelihood of an Indian with the requisite qualifications being forthcoming in this country. The posts were advertised in the United Kingdom where Indians with the necessary qualifications could have applied.

(c) A few departmental and warrant officers of the Indian Army Ordnance Corps employed in the factories have risen to the rank of Assistant Works Manager, but none have been appointed Assistant Works Manager direct from the Indian Army Ordnance Corps. The system of employing Indian Army Ordnance Corps men in factories is dying out and their places are being taken by civilians.

(d) The men possessed first class certificates of education and up-to-date practical knowledge of the work. They had passed the whole of their service in the class of work for which they were required and were considered suitable in every way for the particular posts to which they were appointed.

INDIANISATION OF SUPERIOR STAFF IN INDIAN ORDNANCE AND CLOTHING FACTORIES.

257. Mr. K. C. Neogy: (a) Will Government be pleased to state how many military departmental officers have been appointed as Assistant Works Manager in the Ordnance and Clothing Factory after retirement, on the age limit?

(b) Will Government be pleased to state the technical and general qualifications possessed by the Assistant Superintendents who were appointed just after the war? What are the present appointments held by these officers? Was no Indian available with the same or similar qualifications as these officers?

Mr. G. M. Young: (a) Two.

(b) Five civilian Assistant Superintendents were recruited just after the war, one of whom has since died. A statement showing their qualifications will be sent to the Honourable Member. Two of these men are now employed as Works Inspection Officers, one as a Works Manager, and one as Civil Engineer Adviser to the Director of Ordnance Factories and Manufacture, which is equivalent to a Works Manager's post.

At the time that these appointments were made, the posts were reserved for military officers and military officers were actually selected to fill them. Before they could take up the appointments, however, they were demobilised, and so they were taken on as civilians. The question of appointing Indians did not therefore arise, but in any case it is unlikely that Indians with the requisite qualifications would have been forthcoming.

RIVER EMBANKMENTS.

258. Mr. E. F. Sykes: (a) Are Government aware that one of their Secretaries made the following statement in the Council of State on the 19th September, 1929 (Council of State Debates, 11, 4, 120)?

"If these embankments are placed close to the ordinary trough the almost certain result is that the bed of the river will silt up."

(b) Was the Secretary speaking on behalf of Government or in his private capacity?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: (a) and (b). The passage referred to by the Honourable Member is a quotation from a note on the subject of double embankments by the Consulting Engineer to the Government of India, and the question whether the Secretary was speaking on behalf of Government or in his private capacity does not arise.

Mr. B. Das: Will the Honourable gentleman inquire from his Consulting Engineer about the fallacy of the argument in that particular sentence quoted?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: Well, Sir, that expresses the opinion of the Consulting Engineer, who, so far as I am aware, is considered to be an expert in this particular subject.

Mr. B. Das: Is the Honourable gentleman aware that with embankments on both sides of a river the velocity of the water increases and thereby no silt is deposited?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: I am quite prepared to accept the statement of my Honourable friend, Mr. B. Das, but the opinion expressed and quoted by my Honourable friend, Mr. Sykes, is that of another engineer, and this is probably a case in which two experts differ.

UNSTARRED QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

THE STATISTICAL ABSTRACT OF BRITISH INDIA.

151. Sir Hugh Cocke: (a) Will Government be pleased to state whether the Statistical Abstract of British India up to 1927-28, and up to 1928-29 have yet been issued, and if so, whether copies will be supplied to the Library? If they have not been issued when is this likely to take place?

(b) Will Government be pleased to state whether it is not possible to speed up the issue of statistical information such as that contained in the Abstract?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: (a) The Statistical Abstract relating to the year 1927-28 is now in the press for final printing, and should be ready for issue by the end of the current month. The issue for the year 1928-29 is in preparation. Copies of these publications will be placed in the Library as soon as they are ready.

(b) The time taken to compile the Abstract has been reduced, since the first two issues were published, from about 2 years and 4 months to about 1 year and 4 months, but the Abstract for the year 1927-28 has been unfortunately delayed by exceptional circumstances. The compilation depends upon the receipt of statistics from a number of Departments under each of the Local Governments, as well as Departments of the Central Government, and if one set of figures is behind hand, the whole publication is held up. Government do not think that it is practicable to reduce the time required for compilation to less than sixteen months, but they will take any steps which are found possible in this direction.

ADMISSION TO GOVERNMENT SERVICES OF CANDIDATES WITH DEFECTIVE EYESIGHT.

152. Mr. K. C. Neogy: (1) Will Government refer to my question asked on the 11th February, 1929, regarding the admission to the Indian Audit and Accounts, and other Service examinations of men with eyesight corrected by glasses (No. 503, Page 649, Vol. 1, No. 9, Legislative Assembly Debates) and to their reply that the standard laid down for the guidance of medical officers allows the admission of officers whose vision can be brought with the aid of glasses to a reasonable degree of normality?

(2) Will Government refer also to the case of the candidate who was told in letter No. D-3368/29-E., dated the 2nd November, 1929, from the Secretary, Public Service Commission, that it is for the Medical Board to decide whether a certain physical disability of a candidate is, or is not, a disqualification for entry into Government service and that the Public Service Commission is not prepared to dispute the ruling of the Medical Board?

(3) Is it a fact that this candidate was passed as medically fit and allowed to compete for the Indian Civil Service examination held in January, 1927, when he stood nineteenth, but has in subsequent years been rejected for the Indian Civil Service and even the Indian Audit and Accounts Service examination presumably on account of defective sight?

(4) Are Government aware that this is not the only case in which a candidate with shortsight is declared medically fit by one Board and rejected by a different Board?

(5) Will Government be pleased to state the number of candidates rejected for the Indian Civil Service and Indian Audit and Accounts Service examinations, in the last year, merely on account of defective eyesight where such eyesight can be remedied by the use of glasses?

(6) In view of the replies referred to in parts (1) and (2) above, are Government aware that there is an impression among some of the medical boards that the regulations for the medical examination of candidates laid down for their guidance on the subject leave them no discretion in the matter of passing candidates as physically fit, even though they are satisfied that the shortsight can be removed by glasses and will not interfere with the efficient performance of their duties?

(7) Do Government propose to consider the desirability of issuing explicit instructions to medical boards so as to make it clear to them that they have some discretion in the matter?

(8) Are Government prepared to consider also the desirability of relaxing the stringency of the existing rules and practice as regards the vision test, at least with regard to the Indian Audit and Accounts Service?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: (1), (2) and (3). The candidate referred to appeared at the Indian Civil Service examination in January, 1927. He was subsequently rejected by the Medical Board, which examined him for the Indian Audit and Accounts Service examination held in December, 1927, on account of enlarged spleen and defective vision. The Government of India are not aware of the reasons for his rejection at any of the subsequent examinations for which he may have applied, as applications of candidates who are ineligible, or pronounced to be medically unfit, are not sent up by Local Governments.

(4) The Government of India have no information to this effect.

(5) As already explained, Local Governments are not required to forward the applications of rejected candidates to the Public Service Commission and I am, therefore, unable to supply the Honourable Member with the information he requires.

(6) and (7). The regulations lay down a minimum standard of vision required, (i) without glasses, and (ii) after correction with glasses, for the guidance of the Medical Board. The regulations are not rigid, and direct that, in cases of serious abnormality, the opinion of an ophthalmic specialist should be obtained. The instructions are quite explicit in this sense and the Government of India do not see any reason for the issue of further instructions.

(8) In view of the above, Government do not consider that there are sufficient grounds for modifying the existing rules.

RESOLUTION RE RELATIONS BETWEEN RAILWAYS AND INLAND STEAMER SERVICES IN EASTERN BENGAL.

Mr. K. G. Neogy (Dacca Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I beg to move:

"This Assembly recommends to the Governor General in Council to appoint a committee of official and non-official Members of this House to inquire into the relations between the Eastern Bengal and Assam Bengal Railways, on the one hand, and the inland steamer services in Bengal on the other, and report particularly as to whether, and in what manner, the interests of the Railways are affected by their co-operation or competition, as the case may be, with the said steamer services."

Sir, those who are acquainted with the Eastern districts of Bengal and the province of Assam, and those who have studied the railway map of North-Eastern India, will realise the great importance that the waterways of this part of the country play in its transport organisation. More than one majestic stream, with numerous tributaries, carry the water from the hills to the Bay of Bengal traversing the deltaic area of Eastern and lower Bengal. In a sense there is a wide belt of water that practically separates the Eastern districts of Bengal and Assam from the rest of India, and from this it will be apparent as to what importance the water transport of the country occupies in relation to the railways that, together with the steamer services, supply the transport facilities.

Sir, the steamer services which are at present owned and controlled by private organisations, supply the link between the two State-owned railways, namely, the Eastern Bengal and the Assam Bengal Railways. But although there must be some amount of co-operation for the benefit of both the steamers and the railways, the railways are more dependent on the steamers than the steamers are on the railways because, apart from the feeder services that the steamers supply to the railways, they have the run of an all-river route to Calcutta from all the important riparian marts of Bengal, which enables the steamers to compete very successfully with the railways, particularly in regard to the goods traffic. Now, it will surprise not a few Honourable Members to know that the railways at one time actually did own and manage their own fleet of steamers and they were absolutely independent of the private enterprise on which they depend at the present moment.

The Eastern Bengal Railway came into existence as a guaranteed company about 70 years back and it was taken over by the State in 1884. Shortly after that a few steamers, owned and controlled by the railway, were disposed of and some of the services transferred to the private concerns that were running competing services in the rivers of Eastern Bengal in those days. Thus, we find that in December, 1884 some of the services were given up by the Railway and were taken over by the private concerns, who were, till then, a powerful competitor of the railways themselves. This process of gradual handing over of the fleet belonging to the railways continued till 1895, when the process was completed, and since that time the State Railways have been absolutely dependent on the help and co-operation that they manage to get from the private-owned steamer companies.

Now, why was this done? I inquired from the Honourable Member in charge by a few questions as to why it is that these steamer services, at one time owned and controlled by the State Railways, were discontinued in favour of private parties operating in the inland waters of Bengal? The reply that I got was that the railway steamer services were unremunerative and, secondly, that they were unpopular and really not required, as private enterprise was already rendering a satisfactory service.

Unfortunately, Sir, the Railway Department has never been very communicative in this House in reply to questions. They did not care to tell us as to why it was that the railway steamer services were found to be unremunerative and also why they were found to be comparatively unpopular. Sir, the reason is that in those days there was a severe rate-cutting competition going on between the private-owned steamers and the railway steamers, with the result that, whereas the State enterprise could not go beyond a certain point in reducing their rates in order to fight this competition, the private steamer companies practically recognised no limit to their unfair practice, and this resulted naturally in a loss to the State undertaking. It is not surprising also that, while the rates were made cheaper and cheaper so far as the private-owned steamers were concerned, the public at large did, as a matter of fact, prefer to patronise the cheaper private services than the State service. This really was at the bottom of the fact why the railway steamer services were found to be unremunerative and also comparatively unpopular. Personal testimony is even yet borne to the facilities that were offered to the public in those days by the private steamer concerns. I am told that payment of fares was almost a sort of superfluity in certain cases. Not only that, but even refreshments and other kinds of entertainment were provided for the travelling public.

Mr. A. H. Ghuznavi (Dacca Division: Muhammadan Rural): Silk handkerchiefs!

Mr. K. C. Neogy: Yes, as my Honourable friend, Mr. Ghuznavi, says, silk handkerchiefs were also presented to those who chose to travel by the private-owned steamer services. And, naturally enough, having regard to human weaknesses, the State service was found to be comparatively unpopular. In those early days the principles of fixation of maxima and minima rates had not yet been clearly recognised, and there was also reluctance on the part of Government to compete with private enterprise. As a matter of fact, while the Government committed themselves practically to parting with their steamers as early as 1885, the minima rates, so far as the railways were concerned had yet to come. It was as a result of a well known Resolution of Government, dated December, 1887 that minima rates came to be imposed so as to protect the railways from such cut-throat competition. The principle of minima rates was absolutely unknown in the days when this kind of competition had to be faced by the State Railways in waterways. I do not know if similar circumstances were to happen today whether the Government would take power by legislation to put down such a rate war in the waterways of Bengal. This withdrawal of the State enterprise from the rivers of Bengal was followed by understandings, contracts and agreements between the railways on the one hand and the steamers on the other. There were, however, constant bickerings between the two parties, the railways complaining that they were not being fairly treated, that the terms of agreement were not being adhered to, that the steamers were trying to filch away their traffic—the exact expression which I find used by a responsible railway officer is that steamers have been “filching away the traffic that ought rightly to belong to the railways”—and that the penalties that were contemplated in the agreements were not being imposed owing to reluctance on the part of railways to a certain extent and owing to certain other causes. When we come to the year 1905, we find that no less a body than the Bengal Chamber of Commerce itself made a complaint against the way in which the steamer companies were behaving, and the Chamber made certain suggestions to the railway authorities which were interpreted by them to mean that the railways should provide steamers of their own for the river carriage; that is to say, at that particular moment the Bengal Chamber of Commerce was prepared to support the idea of the railways reviving their own steamer services instead of depending entirely on private enterprise. But nothing came of this representation. So far with regard to the Eastern Bengal Railway.

Coming to the Assam Bengal Railway, we find that this railway came into existence, I think, sometime in 1892 or 1893, and ever since it came into existence it has suffered almost all along its length owing to the fact that it has to face very keen competition from the steamer services. This is a fact which is referred to in an official publication called, “A Monograph of Indian Railway Rates”, where, in Appendix I, it is stated that the Assam Bengal Railway is subject to competition of water transport almost throughout the whole length of this system and this accounts for the low rates that were in operation in this railway from the very first, traces of which still remain, although the relations have somewhat improved between the steamer companies and the railway. Now, Sir, this brings us to a very important question. As Honourable Members know, the Assam Bengal Railway has cost the Indian taxpayer, in capital charges something like 20 crores of rupees. But, apart from that, it has cost the Indian taxpayer in losses up-to-date to the extent of about 10 crores of rupees, that is to say, about 50 per cent. of the total capital has had to be found by the Indian taxpayer for meeting the losses of this railway, and it is stated on this official authority that the major portion of the trouble of this Railway, if not its whole trouble, is due to the fact that it has to encounter keen competition from these private-owned steamer companies. Now, Sir, I would leave it to my Honourable friend, the Member in charge, to make the calculations and tell us as to how much of these 10 crores of rupees, that had to be found by the Indian taxpayer for meeting the losses of this railway, has gone into the pockets of the shareholders of the two powerful combines that are operating in the waterways of Eastern Bengal and Assam.

So far as the Eastern Bengal Railway is concerned, it is undoubtedly true that it is more fortunately placed so far as finances go, than the Assam Bengal Railway; but yet, as the Honourable Members know, the finances of this railway have not been in a very satisfactory condition for some time, and the percentage of net earnings to the total capital outlay has been at a very low figure for some years, although it is showing signs of revival.

Now, let us turn to the opinion of a responsible railway official of the Eastern Bengal Railway as to what the effect of the steamer competition has been on the financial fortunes of this State-owned Railway which has cost the Indian taxpayer in capital charges to the extent of about 40 crores of rupees. This is what is stated:

“The history of these steamer services is well worth reciting showing as it does how from a very small beginning the steamer services have gradually appropriated to themselves traffic originally carried by the steamer cum railway route and the extent to which they have trespassed into spheres where once the railway had command of most of the traffic emanating from Eastern Bengal and Assam.”

It can therefore be very easily imagined as to how far the financial results of the working of this railway, disappointing as they are, have been influenced by this factor.

Now, Sir, with regard to the relations that subsist between the Eastern Bengal Railway and the steamer companies, it is stated as follows:

“While outwardly cordial, our relations with the steamer companies have not always been such as to produce a good understanding, our policy being one savouring more of concession than an equitable division of traffic, doubtlessly the outcome of a desire to show that we have no intention of crippling private enterprise. While the Railway has shown every desire to work fairly and amicably and with a view to the general good, the same can hardly be said of the steamer companies whose policy throughout has savoured of filching—unscrupulous it may seem, but desirable in the interests of the shareholders if they are to obtain a steady dividend.”

[Mr. K. C. Neogy.]

These are not my words, but they are the words of a very responsible railway official. That official goes on to observe:

"The steamer companies not being barred from showing undue preference, can and do guarantee space to large despatchers in a way that the railway cannot do There is no doubt that this affects the railway traffic adversely."

The again the railway officers go on complaining about the system of rebates, secret, as well as open rebates, that are granted by the steamer companies and which, these officers say, place the railway at a disadvantage.

Then again they refer to the block rates, a pernicious system, about which so much was stated in the Acworth Committee's Report. The block rates imposed by the steamer companies are characterised by these railway officials "as a bit of sharp practice". I am quoting the exact words used by them.

Now, Sir, they further complain that the steamer companies can quote any rates without regard to maxima and minima and are not obliged to give the notice that the railways are bound to give before making any changes in their rates; and the steamer companies can further give consignors free use of warehouses, free passes and other concessions which railways cannot do. These are some of the factors that handicap the Eastern Bengal Railway administration.

Now, Sir, at one time the Assam Bengal Railway wanted to have its own steamer service and that proposal was turned down. At another time the Eastern Bengal Railway authorities also were strongly of opinion that, if they were permitted to run their own steamer service, they could show a very decent profit on the additional capital outlay and they would be able to furnish a much more satisfactory service than the private owners are doing at the present moment; but all these proposals were, I understand, turned down by the authorities. With regard to this disinclination of Government to permit the Eastern Bengal Railway to have its own steamer service, I find in an opinion expressed by a responsible railway official that the Eastern Bengal Railway thought that:

"It was difficult to believe that the Government would really face a fight with the steamer companies. If it did and was prepared to spend money the Eastern Bengal Railway could, in my opinion, fight the steamer companies by itself and still show a profit on the working."

Sir, I have no desire to take up any more time of the House. This House was more than once likened by the Honourable Member and his predecessors in office to a shareholders' meeting when we were discussing the Railway Budget, because he said that the Members of this House represent the Indian taxpayers who own this great State-worked undertaking, the Indian Railways, and he compared himself to the Managing Director of the firm. Sir, taking advantage of that imagery, I invite the Managing Director on behalf of the shareholders to have a special inquiry made into the allegations that I have made and to associate a few representatives of the shareholders themselves in such an inquiry. I do not think that such a request would be considered unreasonable in any business concern and that the Honourable Member would readily concede this request.

The Honourable Sir George Rainy (Member for Commerce and Railways): I do not intend to-day, Sir, to take up much of the time of the House on this Resolution. I should like to congratulate my Honourable friend, the Mover, on the temperate and lucid manner in which he has presented his case. It is quite true, as he said at the end of his speech, that to a large extent the Members of this House in relation to the Indian Railways may be regarded as representatives of the shareholders, and if they are of opinion that conditions have come into existence as regards a section of the Indian Railways, which place them in a position of unfair disadvantage, then clearly that is a matter which the representatives of the shareholders would be entitled to investigate. I do not know, that if such a committee as is suggested were appointed, it would be necessary to explore in great detail all that happened in 1885 or in 1895, or even what was said by the Bengal Chamber of Commerce in the year 1905. I think that practically that committee, although no doubt it would look into the older history of this subject, would devote most of its attention to present day conditions and consider whether there were reasons for any particular action on the part of the Legislature or Government to influence the extent of co-operation with or competition between the railways on the one side and the inland steamship companies on the other. I do not wish to commit myself today or to commit Government to any view as to whether or not a committee ought to be appointed, because I think I shall be able to satisfy the House that, whatever opinion individual Members may entertain on this subject, the appointment of a committee at this stage would be premature, and I should like to give my reasons.

During the last few months the Agent of the Eastern Bengal Railway, Mr. Maffin, has been devoting special attention to this question of the relations between the Railway of which he is in charge and the steamship companies. He has submitted a report to the Railway Board on the subject, in which he has mentioned a number of points which in his opinion are not satisfactory and where, in his opinion, some re-adjustment of the relations between the Railway and the steamship companies is desirable, and he proposes, having completed his own examination of the subject, to approach the steamship companies and to discuss this question with them. That seems to me to be a proper and business-like way of attacking the subject. The first step to be taken is that there should be discussion between the Railway and the steamship companies. When that discussion is complete, and when the Agent has reported the results to the Railway Board, then the whole matter will be considered by Government, and they will then consider whether any further action is necessary or whether the suggestion made by the Honourable Member should be adopted. But the position, being what it is, it is very difficult for me to express any opinion on these questions at present because I have only heard what can be said from the railway side of the case and we have still to hear what the steamship companies will say to it. Because, while as Railway Member I am bound to fight like a lion on behalf of the Railways, yet Honourable Members must remember that I am inextricably linked with my Siamese twin, the Commerce Member, who is the particular guardian of private enterprise. Therefore, I must be careful before I commit myself to an opinion on this subject, and I must add that there is a third interest to be considered,—not perhaps so frequently mentioned in this House as it might be,—and that is the interest of the general public. Now, it is quite true that the railways may very often feel that, owing to the action, let us say, of a steamship company, they are being cut off from remunerative traffic and are not making as much a success of it as they would like to do. On the other hand, over a large part of India, as regards all heavy goods traffic at any rate, the railways are practically exempt from competition. I do not know that it is a bad thing that in one part of India at any rate, the railways should have to carry on under competitive conditions, which ought at any rate to keep them from going to sleep.

It is for the reasons I have given, Mr. President, that Government do not feel that they can accept at this stage the Honourable the Mover's Resolution. But I can assure him that the matter is already under consideration and will be considered further and that Government are not insensible to the important considerations he has advanced. I hope, Sir, that under these circumstances, my Honourable friend will not consider it necessary to press his Resolution today.

Mr. K. C. Neogi: Sir, I also desire to congratulate the Honourable Member on his very temperate and conciliatory speech on this Resolution. (Laughter). I certainly recognise his difficulties, but I do think that the points that I have mentioned in my speech will not be lost sight of either by himself or by the Agent of the Eastern Bengal Railway when he makes inquiries into all the various factors that are connected with the question.

Mr. Sarabhai Nemchand Haji (Bombay Central Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): What about the interests of the inland steamship companies?

Mr. K. C. Neogy: My Honourable friend, Mr. Haji, asks what about the inland steamship companies. The Honourable Member in charge mentioned only two parties to the Resolution, or rather three, the railways, the steamer companies and the public at large, and my Honourable friend, Mr. Haji, very pertinently raises the question of the indigenous steamer services. It is a pity, Sir, that my Honourable friend, Mr. Haji, had not the opportunity of elaborating this particular point. But I think I understand what exactly he has in mind, because it is a well-known fact that these steamer concerns have entered into certain agreements with different parties from whom they get their goods traffic, and have thereby practically succeeded in keeping out other rivals from the field. Now when this question is being investigated, I do hope that the Honourable Member in his character as Commerce Member will not lose sight of this particular fact, and that he will freely admit representatives of all parties concerned and allow the Indian steamship companies to come and lay their case before him. Sir, the Honourable Member did not exactly give the House an idea as to how long it will take for the Railway Department to complete their inquiries. I do not know whether, when the Railway Budget comes before us, it will be possible for the Honourable Member to make some sort of a statement bearing on the question. Whether that is possible or not, I would earnestly request him to give greater publicity to what happens between the steamship companies and others, than has been the case in the past. I do not think the secret conclaves and consultations are likely to inspire public confidence. Sir, with these words I beg leave to withdraw my Resolution.

The Resolution was, by leave of the Assembly, withdrawn.

RESOLUTION RE THE PRESENT SYSTEM OF EDUCATION IN INDIA.

Dr. B. S. Moonje (Nagpur Division: Non-Muhammadan): Sir, I move my Resolution. The Resolution runs thus:

"This Assembly recommends to the Governor General in Council to take early steps for appointing a committee of inquiry for examining the present system of education in India with the object of ascertaining the causes of the defective character training of the system as emphasised and brought to public notice by the Indian Sandhurst Committee, and of reforming the system by recommending measures for the removal of these defects in the system, so as to enable the educational institutions to provide a steady flow of really first class material for recruitment as Army officers."

Sir, in view of the several amendments that have been tabled, I feel that perhaps the meaning of the Resolution has not been fully and properly apprehended. The Resolution is a simple one and has been put in simple language and the issue is put in a straightforward manner. There are only three points in the Resolution. The first point is that the present educational system is defective. The Indian Sandhurst Committee has pronounced the opinion that the present educational system is defective in that it does not produce amongst the boys who go through that system a desire for taking their due share in the defence of India; neither does it develop power of leadership the spirit of initiative and the general aptitude for dealing with and controlling men. That is the first point. The second point which the Sandhurst Committee emphasises is that, unless this system is reformed, there will not be a steady flow of really good material for recruitment as officers for the Army. The third point which the Sandhurst Committee emphasises is that the whole system should be examined and the defects removed. These are the three points which the Indian Sandhurst Committee has emphasised, and these are exactly the three points which this Resolution of mine wants to put before the House. There is no other matter. It is a straight point and we expect a straight reply from the Government. There seems to be some misunderstanding about the meaning of the words, "the character training of our educational system". The words as used in the Report or as quoted in my Resolution do not mean that Indian boys are inherently deficient in military character, much less in general moral character. It has to be borne in mind that the Resolution as well as the Report of the Indian Sandhurst Committee, where they refer to the defective character training, do not at all imply that there is inherent deficiency of character in the Indian boys, but refer pointedly, clearly and only to that defect in the present educational system. What they, in one word, say is that the educational system is defective. They only emphasise the deficiencies in the present system of education. It is not, as some of my Honourable friends suppose, that they have impugned the character of the Indian boys as inherently defective. That is an important point that has to be borne in mind, and if that is borne in mind, perhaps some of the amendments may be needless. I am as proud of the character of my boys as some of my friends, who feel that there is at least some inference from this Resolution to the effect that the Indian boys are deficient in character. That is not the case. The Indian Sandhurst Committee does not say so. The Resolution does not say so. Who says so, I shall refer to later on. The Indian Sandhurst Committee says that the boys who go to England after having been selected in India are at a disadvantage in competing with British boys. An authoritative witness before the Indian Sandhurst Committee has said:

"It must be recognised that the system of education in India differs so widely from that in England that Indian boys are at a disadvantage in complying with the test such as is required for entrance into the Sandhurst."

In what respect do the Indian boys find themselves at a disadvantage? The Report says:

"... and consequently the Indian boy in present circumstances is handicapped in competition with British boys of equal age, especially in a sphere where physical considerations and general aptitude for dealing with and controlling men are of equal importance with purely intellectual attainments." (Page 14.)

The Report further says that this is due to the defect in the Indian system of education, which does not make provision for military training, military drill rifle practice, organised games and physical training as is made in the British System of Education in England. After thus referring to the defective character-training in the Indian system of education, and having also told in what respects Indian boys are handicapped when they go to England, the Committee goes further and says:

"It follows that material reforms will be required in the matter of educational organisation and methods before Indian Schools and Colleges can hope to produce a regular flow of Indian boys fitted in every way to hold the King's Commission." (Page 14.)

This is exactly what my Resolution intends to make provision for. The Committee as asked for in the Resolution, if appointed, will make inquiries, suggest reforms, and recommend a scheme of action to the Government.

As for our present schools, the Sandhurst Committee does not however speak of them with despair. The Committee says:

"We believe that, if the importance of the matter is brought to the notice of the educational authorities and their co-operation is enlisted, much can be done, even in the existing schools, in the direction of eliminating the weak points mentioned above, and we feel that it will enable a steady flow of first class material for recruitment as Army officers." (Page 27.)

Here is a point which should be properly understood, and taken to heart. The Committee itself has never said that there is any inherent defect in the Indian boys, but the defect is inherent in the system of education through which the boys have to go for passing the examinations. The Sandhurst Committee admits that, if certain defects present in the educational system can be remedied, the existing schools themselves will be able to provide a steady flow of really good material for recruitment as Army officers. But who is to move for remedying these defects? The Committee says that, "The main responsibility must rest on the educational authorities and experts", and expresses the opinion that, "It is imperative that the Government should give a clear lead in emphasising the paramount national importance of reforming the educational system of India in the directions we have indicated". (Page 28). The Committee has rightly said that the importance of the matter should be brought to bear upon the Government and that it is the duty of the Government to give a clear lead in the matter. Now, what do we find? The Indian Sandhurst Committee's Report has been with the Government for some years now, and practically nothing has been done in this respect by the Government. I should like to know definitely what lead the Government have given to the educational authorities and experts in the matter as suggested by the Indian Sandhurst Committee. They have done nothing of the kind. It is this that has impelled me to bring this Resolution before this House. If the Government desired that really the educational system, which has been found to be defective, should be improved, I should have expected the Government to move of itself in the matter, in the first instance instead of a non-official like myself, but having waited in vain so long for the lead that we expected the Government would give, and having despaired I have moved this Resolution, and I hope that Government will see the need of it, will see the relevance of it, will see the justice of it, and will see the imperative need of it, and will come forward, taking courage in both hands to accept it and to give a lead to the educational authorities and to the country in the matter of reforming the educational system under which our boys have to go and compete with British boys for Sandhurst under a handicap.

I said in the beginning that there have been some misgivings in the minds of my friends about the meaning of this Resolution. The Resolution does not intend to find fault with the character of our Indian boys; the Resolution clearly says—and the Indian Sandhurst Committee also clearly emphasised—that the defect does not lie inherent in the character of the Indian boys, but lies inherent in the educational system. It is no surprise to me, it is no news to the House, that the system is really so defective. The system which had been conceived not in a very commendable spirit could not be expected to bear a fruit other than what we all here condemn. I think it would be right at this stage to remind my Honourable friends how the present educational system was conceived about a hundred years ago. Lord Macaulay, in one of his letters to his father, said:

"The effect of this education on Hindus is prodigious. No Hindu who has received an English education ever remains sincerely attached to his religion. Some continue to profess it as a matter of policy, but many profess themselves to be atheists and some have embraced Christianity."

I should have thought that, if that were so, the twenty-two crores of Hindus would immediately have embraced Christianity and given an eternal lease of life to this foreign Christian Government. "It is my firm belief", he further says, "that if our plans of education are followed up, there will not be a single idolator among the respectable classes in Bengal thirty years hence." Fortunately it is not so. Having analysed, in the words of Lord Macaulay, the desire, the ideal, the ambition with which the present system of education has been conceived, an impartial Committee like the one presided over by General Sir Andrew Skeen goes into the details of that educational system and finds it defective. Is it surprising that that Committee should come to that conclusion?

"Boye ped babhool ke am kahante hoye."

"If you sow the seed of a Babool, a thorny tree, could you expect that a mango should come out of it?"

It is an impossibility. Having sown that seed, and having seen what fruit the seed bears, our friends, well-wishers, the Members of the British bureaucracy come and tell us to our face, with good grace, in a patronising mood, "You should not be in a hurry, you should be a little patient, and consult your better interests first, and you would feel that there is still need of British guidance". An Honourable friend of ours, whose towering personality we are missing, who has left India, but whose place is now occupied by my Honourable friend, Mr. Howell, gave a speech on the 23rd December last and told us the essence of his experience of life service in India. And what did he say? The occasion was a farewell dinner given by the Chelmsford Club at Maiden's Hotel. Our friend of the bureaucracy, Sir Denys Bray, in a patronising mood says:

"There is one practical lesson my long work at the Foreign Office has seared across my brain."

What is that one lesson which he has learnt throughout his long official career in India? Sir Denys Bray says:

"In the idea of complete independence as India's goal, there is in theory no doubt something most attractive even to a man like myself, but until," (please listen) "but until the time has come when a lamb and a lion will lie down together and the lion never opens its jaws except to recite the virtues of the Kellogg Pact to the admiring lamb, complete independence is a mirage, a treacherous luring of India."

He went on to say that, "India is therefore still in need of the generous and adventurous youths of England in her service". To my friends I say that neither the spirit nor the letter of my Resolution, nor of the Indian Sandhurst Committee's Report was to imply or to declare from the housetops that the character of Indian boys is deficient and should be improved. I had never had that intention; it is not the fact, and even the Indian Sandhurst Committee does not say so. With the experience of the last two examinations held in India, I stand convinced that, in spite of such defects in the educational system, our boys have been coming forward in larger and larger numbers to compete for vacancies fixed for Indians in the military colleges of England; but the 12 NOON. seats being few and the number of boys applying being larger than the numbers required, they could not all be taken. Therefore, good boys have to be refused; I feel it, I feel the pang of it that good boys have to be refused. But even under the present defective educational system, the inherent military character of the boys prevails. And why? My friend, Sir Denys Bray, said that we have become lambs and there are people in this world who are tigers and lions. I do not know which is more savage as between the tiger and the lion. (An Honourable Member: "The tiger".) I shall leave it to the Zoological experts to decide which is the more savage of the two. My friend, Sir Denys Bray, said, "The people who reside in India are lambs and therefore we, the progeny of the British lion, young boys, should be brought out to India to save the Indian lambs from the tigers." He has not said which country it is that the tigers and the lions inhabit; he has merely said that British boys are to be in the service of India to protect the Indian lambs, and that those British boys are adventurous and generous boys because they will leave their homes and come out to India to defend the Indian lambs as against the lions and the tigers who will devour them. If that is so, I ask those British people who are so generous as to send their boys to India, to be a little more generous and in a fit of generosity accept this Resolution of mine and say "Yes; in the system of education which our grandfathers brought into existence in India, they were not perhaps inspired with the same generous impulses by which we today their grandsons are inspired; we today are prepared to make amends for whatever mistakes were made in the past and we want to improve the present educational system under which Indian boys are to be trained, so that", (in the words of my patronising friend, Sir Denys Bray), "Indian boys may not remain lambs but become tigers and lions; so that two equal people on the face of the earth may remain friends and not merely one be the food of the other." That, Sir, is the object of my Resolution. I want to make tigers of Indian lambs and I hope the generosity of my friend over there would impel him to accept the Resolution and make a beginning in the direction of improving the educational system of India and of helping me in metamorphosing lambs into tigers.

Sir, there is an amendment in which it is suggested that, instead of a committee, a conference should be invited. (Laughter.) I have no objection to a conference being invited if the Honourable Member thinks that it will serve the purpose; but I can assure him that it will not serve the purpose; and why? Because this question has not been looked into from this point of view either by the Educational Ministers or by the Directors of Public Instruction, or by the British Government; none of them has looked at this question of improving the present educational system of India from this point of view, and therefore a conference will be of no use; it would serve no purpose

Mr. President: The Honourable Member is not entitled to refer to amendments which have not been moved.

Dr. B. S. Moonje: I am proving the imperative need of a committee—it is for that purpose that I am referring to it. This much of argument ought to be enough to prove to the gentleman, who has given notice of the amendment and to the Government that there is really need for a committee, which should go and apply a fresh informed mind and analyse and examine the present system of education and come to some conclusions on which their recommendations to the Government would be based to enable the Government to give a proper lead to the educational authorities and to the people at large. It is in this spirit that I move the Resolution. I have done.

Mr. President: I think we will have the amendments first. Mr. Acharya.

Mr. M. K. Acharya (South Arcot cum Chingleput: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Thank you, Sir. I move:

"That in place of the original Resolution the following be substituted:

"This Assembly recommends to the Governor General in Council that he do appoint a mixed committee of officials and non-officials:

- (a) to examine the present system of public instruction in India in the light of modern educational ideals and in relation to the economic conditions and needs of modern India;
- (b) to report how far the system is really a man-making system, and tends to train young men for active professions in life;
- (c) to report upon the causes leading to the defective character training among Indian youths emphasised by the Indian Sandhurst Committee; and
- (d) to recommend the measures that should be adopted in order to produce educated Indian youths qualified for recruitment and training as officers in the Indian Army."

Before proceeding further with the amendment I wish to convey my homage to Dr. Moonje for the very clear and very forcible manner in which he has placed the Resolution before the House. I agree with him in most of what he has said; and when I sent in my amendment, it was not that I had any doubt as to what the Resolution meant, but because I thought it did not go far enough, and if there is any possibility of the present system of education being changed, I thought it might be examined not only from the standpoint of recruitment to the Army but from the even more essential standpoint of the training properly of the men and women of India carrying on the nation's life and the nation's life work. I am glad that Dr. Moonje has referred to one of the great champions of English education in India, Lord Macaulay. I have of course my admiration for Lord Macaulay—for the style in which he wrote—and I have great admiration for his plain speaking, and I wish that present-day politicians were as plain-speaking as Lord Macaulay was. However, that may be, Sir, the system of Lord Macaulay has undergone several changes; and I in my own humble way, having been connected with education for many years in my life, have felt that the system obtaining in India is hardly education; and that is why I said, "the present system of public instruction"—there is very little of education in it. A lot of things are crammed into our heads—good, bad and indifferent—the bad and indifferent predominating over the good; and it is unfortunate that we have been made to learn all these things without any reference to the practical needs of life. I know there have been Commissions after Macaulay's time; I know there have been some changes; I know there have been more Universities established; I know there have been various kinds of attempts made.—the dotting of the "i's" here and crossing of the "t's" there,—my friend Mr. Chatterjee must know them all; but in spite of all the dotting of the "i's" and the crossing of the "t's", the system of education has remained the same. It is a system which I may really call a machine-making system; and, for God's sake, we cry out, let us have a few more men and a few less machines, and I agree with every word that Dr. Moonje has so vehemently and so forcefully put forward. We do not want always to be lambs,—in my humble opinion a lamb is a much better animal

Dr. B. S. Moonje: Lamb is an article of food for lions and tigers.

Mr. M. K. Acharya: It is really a nobler animal, which never dies even when it is eaten up, for in my humble opinion nothing dies in this world. So whether the lamb is a better animal

Mr. M. S. Aney (Berar Representative): The juxtaposition of the two is not the same.

Mr. M. K. Acharya: I wish we had more Indians with all the virtues and the innocence of the lamb and all the valour of the lion combined, not to eat but to protect, not to destroy but to create. That is India's ideal, and I want this ideal to be re-stated by India, because India is to educate the world. It is coming on, sooner than most of us imagine. Sir, I am aware that very many things have happened during the past few years; we have had many heroes of Sabarmati and heroes of Saroda, I wish some of them were in the Gallery today. But with all these rapid changes tending only to denationalise us we have not had the benefit of a man-making system of education in this country. It is not merely man-making education that we want in the technical sense of the term, but we want a system of education which will produce men for the higher and larger work of shaping the destinies of India, for educating the civilized world. That is our great mission as a nation. We have to civilize the world, educate the world; we have to draw out the God in man and enthrone him above the beasts of prey within. That is the great work we have to accomplish in life, and the lamb, therefore, is higher, nobler than the fiercer lion; it is the higher aspect of humanity presiding over the lower aspect, that is always crying out for more food, more prey, more destruction.

Therefore, Sir, I would suggest that, if at all there is going to be an inquiry,—I have got my own doubts whether even this mild request will be complied with by the powers that be; for probably between Mr. Mackworth Young and Sir Frank Noyce they will find a hundred and one difficulties in the way of appointing a committee or even holding a conference, and will tell us, "Oh, a great many things are in the air, and so you had better wait till political advance is made and everything else will follow that", and so on and so forth. But I wish, Sir, a larger outlook may be taken of the whole question of the training of Indian boys and girls. Some say they want co-education; but whether it is going to be this education or that education, whether it is going to be lamb education or the lion education, I want the whole system to be sifted scientifically in the light of modern educational ideals. That is the chief object. I am not in any way against the proposal made by Dr. Moonje. What I want to know is whether there is any chance of the present system being reviewed and examined; and I would certainly suggest that the sooner it is done the better. I wish there were some chance of a larger view being brought to bear upon the question of national education. I know that even in the western countries, all the old ways are given up; the old ideals are being re-examined and a great many experiments are being made; but unfortunately in India we are unable to advance, and as my friend has rightly pointed out, an iron system is cast in our teeth. We are asked, where are the qualifications, where is the English public school and where is American co-education? All this from men who do not know the higher laws of life. But there are even today sages in India, Parahamdas, men who know the higher laws of man's nature, the higher laws that control the emotions; and that we should be told that we are only fit to be the unquestioning admirers of the Sarda Act is a national insult, which I for one consider is very unjustifiably hurled against us. I, therefore, implore Members on the Treasury Benches to be a little more sane and liberal. Let them be liberal at least for this reason that very soon they will find in their place Dr. Moonje and other stalwarts, who will examine the whole question from a truly national standpoint. Let us clear the mist from our eyes and prepare ourselves for the dawn that is coming from the truly national standpoint instead of putting forward the shibboleth, "Wait and wait". I resent that policy as much as anybody else, and therefore I urge that, if ever an inquiry is going to be made, it should be as broad and full and scientific as any inquiry in India can possibly be expected to be. It should be as truly human as an inquiry into the question of the education of boys and girls ought to be.

Colonel J. D. Crawford (Bengal: European): Sir, I move:

"That for the original Resolution the following be substituted:

"This Assembly recommends to the Governor General in Council to take early steps to examine the present system of education in India with the object of remedying the defective character training of the system as emphasised and brought to the public notice by the Indian Sandhurst Committee with a view to the removal of these defects in the system for the purpose of providing a steady flow of really first class material for recruitment to the public services including the service of defence."

Sir, I have been a fairly stout supporter of the action which my friend, Dr. Moonje, is taking to improve the youth of this country. If I rise to move a slight amendment to his Resolution, it is for two purposes. The first is to throw the burden of answering this Resolution on the quarter in which the responsibility really lies, that is the Department of Education, and not to confine the debate to the Army Department, whose responsibility for education is really very small. Secondly, by using the words "for recruitment to the public services including the service of defence", I want to show that the qualities which are required for any service of defence are equally required for other public services in India, in fact for the whole of the national life of India. There is no difference of opinion in this House, I think, as to the fact that our existing system of education is in some respects defective

An Honourable Member: In many respects.

Colonel J. D. Crawford: Put it that way if you like.

The Revd. J. C. Chatterjee (Nominated: Indian Christians): Does it apply to the educational system in this country only or is it said about the systems in all other countries?

Colonel J. D. Crawford: All right, I shall say that the existing system of education in this country is thoroughly defective if that will please the House. The fact is, that certain qualities which we particularly desire at this stage are not brought forth. They may be inherent, but they are not brought forth by our present system of training, and we desire some alteration in that system. Dr. Moonje suggests that a committee would be possibly the best manner in which to tackle this question. Well, Sir, I see certain difficulties in a committee. If a committee is appointed by the Central Legislature to go round and examine this matter, which is a provincial subject, I think you might find a good deal of obstacles put in the way of any such committee. To my mind it is better to summon a conference of provincial educational authorities, from whom we can ascertain the actual system in vogue in each province, and to examine them and to find out what changes are necessary for the purpose of greater development of character and the qualities of leadership. It seems to me that it is a preferable line and an easier line to follow. There is an immense amount of information already available on the subject of education, collected by various committees, and if you can get the co-operation of the provinces in your general idea of improving the system and altering the curriculum with a view to developing the qualities that we particularly seek, that would be the best and easiest method of dealing with the problem. The difference between me and the Mover of the Resolution is that I suggest a conference of educational authorities called by the Government of India.

*Speech not revised by the Honourable Member.

An Honourable Member: There is another amendment to that effect.

Colonel J. D. Crawford: I have not considered that. I am asking the Government of India themselves to examine this question. How they examine it may be open to criticism. If the Government accept my amendment, and if they call such a conference, that would satisfy me personally.

My second point of difference with the Mover is to throw the responsibility for achieving this result on the Education Department, on which, according to the Sandhurst Committee, the responsibility lies.

Munshi Iswar Saran (Lucknow Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): The amendment which I have the honour to move runs as follows:

"That for the original Resolution the following be substituted:

"This Assembly recommends to the Governor General in Council that, in view of the remarks made by the Indian Sandhurst Committee about the present system of education in India, he be pleased, by way of a beginning, to establish, without any unnecessary delay, an all-India residential military school at a suitable and central place, capable of accommodating at least 500 Indian boys of all castes and creeds at the lowest possible rate of fees for tuition, board and lodging for the purpose of providing a steady supply of suitable material for training and recruitment as Army officers."

Sir Frank Noyce (Secretary, Department of Education, Health and Lands): On a point of order, Sir. I submit for your consideration that the amendment moved by the Honourable Munshi Iswar Saran raises an entirely different issue from that raised in the substantive Resolution.

Munshi Iswar Saran: I submit that the object of the Resolution is to provide a steady supply of really first class material for recruitment as Army officers. That is the object with which the original Resolution has been put forward. In order to achieve that aim, a certain remedy has been suggested. I have taken the liberty of suggesting another remedy for the realisation of the same object. I shall show you from May's "Parliamentary Practice"

Mr. President: The Honourable Member will go on.

Munshi Iswar Saran: Thank you, Sir. If we take the Resolution as it has been moved by my Honourable and esteemed friend, Dr. Moonje, and the amendments which have been proposed by Colonel Crawford and by Mr. Acharya, we will find that what they attempt to do is a staggeringly difficult task. At any rate it is a huge task which this Resolution proposes should be undertaken. What it says is, "Examine the entire educational system in India in order to find out its defects". Sir, I need not weary the House with details. If they really wish to embark on this examination, it will take an enormously long time, and the very object which we have in view will be frustrated. I, therefore, submit that, in order to achieve our end, we should straight away take up the question of providing a steady supply of really first class material for recruitment as Army officers. I have accordingly proposed the establishment of an Army school and the Sandhurst Committee itself is in agreement with this proposal. In their Report they say that the work done by the Dehra Dun School is excellent and they have recommended the establishment of another military school. Now, I submit that, if you have another military school, in which education will be imparted to Indian boys in such a way that the defects which have been pointed out in the Report of the Sandhurst Committee will be removed, that will take us quicker to the goal we have in view, than any examination of the entire educational system.

There is one word I should like to say about the fees, on which I have put emphasis in this amendment. Those Honourable Members who have studied the Report of the Indian Sandhurst Committee must have found that the Committee have laid stress on the fact that the fees should be such as the ordinary parents in India may be able to afford. The Committee says that India is much poorer than England and therefore it is necessary that the rate of fees should be much lower than what it is in England. One may well ask, "You are proposing another school; what will these boys do"? The first thing I submit is that these boys will be able to become commissioned officers. The second thing is that they may, under certain circumstances, be able to become non-commissioned officers. Moreover, I hope most sincerely this school will be able to provide education for the boys of well-to-do families who do not want any careers, but who will go to this school in order to get the training which will make them men and gentlemen. There are other advantages, but I need not discuss them here. It may be that the Honourable Member in charge of the Army Department will say, "What about the cost"? I do not wish to introduce any bitterness in my speech, but I will only say this to him with great confidence that, if he opposes my proposal on financial grounds, he will expose himself and the Department which he represents to the grave charge of being utterly unmindful of the vital interests of the country. Crores and crores of rupees are spent every year over the Army, and if they grudge this paltry sum, then it becomes perfectly obvious that they are completely out of sympathy with our desire to prepare ourselves for the defence of our country.

Sir, I do not think it is necessary to make a long speech in support of my proposition, but I shall say this from my place here, that the only thing that will satisfy India is the establishment of an Indian Sandhurst. Nothing else will. (Hear, hear.) Let it be perfectly understood, and let it be clearly realised, that by making the suggestion which I have taken the liberty of making in this amendment, I do not for a moment mean to give up our claim to the establishment of an Indian Sandhurst, which is the only solution of the problem.

Sir, there are some people who are enthusiastic about the Round Table Conference; there are others who are not. Unfortunately I am one of those who feel that, if we properly utilise this opportunity, the result will be something splendid and marvellous. But I shall take the point of view of those who are pessimists. Even they will have to recognise that the whole question is in the melting pot at the present moment. We do not know what shape the future army system in India is going to take. But I do maintain that this school will, in any event, prove very useful even if the present system unfortunately is continued. Out of this school you will be able to get boys who will be able to be trained and recruited as Army officers. If another system is introduced, even then this school will retain its utility and importance. I submit, Sir, that looked at from any point of view, this school, which I am proposing, will be very useful.

I shall now, if I may, address a word or two to the Members of the European Group. I wish to tell them that, if they are in sympathy, as they profess to be in sympathy, and as I hope they are in sympathy, with the idea underlying this Resolution, they should record their votes in favour of this amendment, which is perfectly harmless. It only says that Government should give us another school, as has been recommended by the Indian Sandhurst Committee. If you do not vote for it, then I am afraid it is obvious that you do not wish to give us help when help is really necessary.

In conclusion, I shall beg the House only to remember that an inquiry such as has been asked for in the main Resolution will hardly be practicable, more particularly in view of the fact that education is a transferred subject and it is very difficult for a few representatives to come together and evolve a satisfactory scheme. If you really wish to go into the entire system and overhaul it, then this is not the way of doing it. You will require a different machinery and a bigger machinery, and you will also require much more time than you wish to give to the machinery which you propose to set up.

The Revd. J. C. Chatterjee: Sir, I rise to move the amendment that stands in my name and runs as follows:

"That for the words 'for appointing a committee of inquiry', the following be substituted:

'to summon a conference of representatives of the Legislatures, the Army and Educational authorities'."

Mr. President: This amendment stands last, does it not?

The Revd. J. C. Chatterjee: Yes, Sir.

Mr. President: Then it was not necessary for the Honourable Member to rise in his seat every time from the start.

The Revd. J. C. Chatterjee: I thought, Sir, that you meant to take the amendment first and not the substantive Resolution.

Mr. President: It is quite true, but there was no justification for the Honourable Member to rise from first to last when his amendment was last on the paper.

The Revd. J. C. Chatterjee: I find, Sir, that the educational system of this country has come in today for a great deal of criticism. Dr. Moonje has criticised it and Mr. Acharya has shown himself to be an arch pessimist by calling it a system which is only meant to make machines. Now, Sir, this is not the first time that the educational system in this country has been blamed or criticised. Some criticism is deserved and some undeserved, but to condemn it so entirely as has been done today in some quarters is, I think, hardly fair. At any rate, I am not prepared to believe that the educational system in India is so thoroughly rotten. The very fact that it has produced so many men of whom any country or educational system would be proud, shows that it is not completely rotten. In this very House there have been men who would be considered ornaments to any educational system. Some of them have never crossed the borders of India and owe all their education to the educational system of this country. To mention one name, the Honourable the Leader of the Opposition (Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya). He not only is a product of this system, but also directs a great University on the banks of the sacred Ganges. What educational system could look for a more distinguished son than the Honourable gentleman whom I have named?

The particular charge that is today being brought against the educational system of India is that it results in a paucity of suitable young men who could officer the Indian Army. That fact has been brought out, we are told, by the Indian Sandhurst Committee and is emphasised today by the Honourable the Mover of the Resolution. Now, what I want to ask the Honourable the Mover of the Resolution is whether this paucity of suitable men as prospective officers is really due to any inherent defect, as he calls it, in the educational system in India? I will try to develop my argument by a very brief analogy. One of the many criticisms that have been levelled against the system of education in India is that it does not develop the faculty of thinking. I ask, can you teach people to think in the abstract? Can people think so long as there is no problem on which or about which they can think? Without a problem there can be no real thought. There is no such thing as thinking in the abstract. Now, we are told that this system is inherently defective because it has not produced efficient officers for the Indian Army. I want to ask, could the Indian educational system have produced Army officers when there was no demand for them, when no Indian Army officers were wanted from our schools? Was there any possibility put before them? Was there any opening or career which a distinguished student from a University could go and find in the Indian Army? What I want to submit is that this paucity is not due to any inherent defect in the educational system but to the lack of opportunities. Take a concrete case. If the Honourable and the gallant Mover of this Resolution, when he was a student at his college could look forward to the career of an Army officer, would he not today have been a great Army Commander? He would have been an army leader, well versed in the art of strategy, would have held command of armies on the field of battle. He might have been a Field Marshal. ("Hear, hear" from the non-official Benches.) But the fact that he is not a Field Marshal but a politician today, is because that career was never open to him. He never had the opportunity. It was not that he was defectively trained. He has all the makings of a fine military man and possesses all the inherent qualities of an Army Commander, and it is not because of any defect in the educational system that he does not hold the position that he ought to have held.

Even if we were to assume that the paucity of suitable candidates is due to a defective system, is a committee, I ask, the best way of removing these defects? The Sandhurst Committee has pointed out these defects. Now, I say that it is possible that the Government might not have taken sufficient notice of that Report; they might not have acted upon it as fully as they might have. But is there any reason to think that the educational authorities of the country have not taken advantage of it? We have only to read—to mention only one example—the deliberations of the Inter-University Conference which was held in Delhi only a few weeks ago. You find that a great portion of the time of the representatives of the Universities, who were not only educationists but also public men, was taken up by discussing this very question of fitting Indian students for a military career. The keenness that was displayed by not one representative, but by a vast majority of representatives clearly shows that people who are in charge of educational policy, or rather those who are working out that policy, are fully alive to that need and now that careers are forthcoming and now that there is a possibility of young men obtaining suitable careers in the Army, educationists and people who are doing educational work are not lagging behind, but are straining every nerve to fit their students to become good officers.

Mr. M. A. Jinnah (Bombay City: Muhammadan Urban): What conclusions were arrived at?

The Revd. J. C. Chatterjee: One of the conclusions arrived at was that military training should be provided in all the Universities, that all Universities should be asked to see that young men were trained in military drill, and that very great stress was laid on physical training. These were the main conclusions that were arrived at by a vast majority.

Mr. K. C. Roy (Bengal: Nominated Non-Official): What about character training?

The Revd. J. C. Chatterjee: We are thinking of officers, not of pious men. It is after all a question of supply and demand. The man who is in charge of educational institutions, the man who has got the care of young men, who must look for some employment, is naturally anxious to find new openings for his men. There is in fact no one so anxious to discover new careers for his men than people who have got charge of institutions. Now that a possibility has been put before us, year after year, you will find that better men are coming forward, better fitted for officering the Army. My Honourable friends, Dr. Moonje and Nawab Sir Abdul Qaiyum, would themselves bear testimony to the fact that each year there have been more suitable candidates coming before them while they have sat on the Interview Board. It is only a few years ago that military careers were thrown open to Indian Students and a change has already come into the entire outlook of educational institutions and Universities, and it is apparent that the class of men who come forward grows better each year.

Mr. K. C. Roy: What about the proportion of rejections?

The Revd. J. C. Chatterjee: I am not going to be drawn into that question because that would take me away from the point at issue. What I would point out is, that no committee can cure an educational system of its inherent defects, for after all an educational system is a growth of many years. There may have been initial mistakes, but no committee can rectify them. Take for instance, the public school system in England. No one can deny that the public school system has been the most fruitful recruiting ground for army officers. I hold no brief for the public school system, but I only state a fact, which cannot be challenged, that there have never been more efficient officers trained for the Army, the Navy or the Air Force than on the playing fields or in the class rooms of the public schools in England. I ask, can any committee go round and evolve a system of public schools? Could a public school system be evolved by any committee, however competent that committee might be, however comprehensive the terms of that committee might be? In the same way,

[The Revd. J. C. Chatterjee.]

I say, that no educational system can be evolved by a committee, however large or representative that committee might be. An educational system must grow, and the Indian educational system has grown for some years. No doubt it has certain defects, but I feel that it is only people who are working that system that can correct the defects, but not a committee. I would point out that a committee cannot—in fact it is impossible that a Committee could—go round and dictate a policy which everybody else would follow, and the results which the Honourable the Mover desires would begin to flow from it. I say that, even if a committee were to go round, what would happen? In the first place, how large would that committee be? Say about nine members. How would that committee be composed? Very likely a great many parties in this House would ask for representation. Judging from the experience of the composition of past committees, that would have to be carried into effect. You would not be putting many practical educationists on the committee. That committee would go round the country, it would call a few witnesses, take a lot of formal evidence and would afterwards sit down and write a report. The Government would take two or three years to make up their mind on the report and in the meantime, things would have advanced in the educational world, far beyond the scope of enquiry made by that committee.

Now, what about the cost of that committee? We know the Age of Consent Committee cost us Rs. 2,88,000. The educational inquiry which has just been concluded by the Hartog Committee cost us Rs. 2,02,000. The Sandhurst Committee, which has also given us so much data on the defects of the educational system, must have cost many more lakhs. Now, Sir, is this a reasonable way of finding out something which in some ways is already known and in other ways must be a question of time? I do not know what is the amount of money that is likely to be spent on that committee. Rather than give effect to the proposal made in the Resolution, it would be much better to carry out the proposal of my Honourable friend Munshi Iswar Saran. I am quite certain that the money that will be spent on this committee will go a very long way to endow the school he proposes. In that case, it would amount to something tangible and practical. After all, even if we have the report of a committee, it might be shelved or after a very short time, it might turn out that another inquiry was necessary.

Munshi Iswar Saran: Then, why not support my amendment?

The Revd. J. C. Chatterjee: I feel that the method that I have suggested would cost much less and would be much more effective and is a far more speedy way of getting what we want. There is something to be said for having an inquiry. Some sort of lead might be given. At all events it is a great comfort to people to ventilate their views and that can be done by appearing before a committee or by means of written memoranda. It can also be done by coming together in a conference and done much more quickly. I also submit that a conference would be much more representative of the people who will be called upon to cure these defects, if defects there are, and who are going to carry out the necessary developments in the educational world. You can have a conference of 200 persons if necessary, but a committee will be confined to nine or ten or at the utmost to 11 Members. After all, as has been said by Colonel Crawford, the people who count in this are the representatives of the provinces. Educational policy in every major province is now directed and guided by Ministers. The Directors of Public Instruction in each province carry out that policy. Those are the people whose views we ought to get, and their views, formed as the result of practical experience, would be much more valuable than those of public men who are not actually directing or carrying out educational policy. I submit that, if you have a conference of this kind, it will be perfectly easy to summon to that conference all the Ministers of Education from the various provinces. You can also summon the Directors of Public Instruction and educationists who are in practical charge of education as well as the Vice-Chancellors of Universities, and thus bring all of them together for mutual consultation. Along with these educationists, we can have men like my Honourable friend, Dr. Moonje, who are interested in these subjects and who have got independent and decided views to give. Then you can have a conference if necessary extending over a week or ten days, and the cost of such a conference would be much less than that of a committee that had to go round the country to take evidence and to publish its report. It will also be possible, as a result of that conference, to have one or two small sub-committees of practical working men who will, without remuneration, work out details and put forward practical schemes outlined by the conference itself.

My last point is that a conference is a much more expeditious way of getting at what we desire. It has been said just now that it is very necessary that things should not take very long. If that is so, then a conference can be called within three or four months, if not earlier, and it will take ten or twelve days. Then, even if sub-committees are appointed, the whole thing can be finished and a report written out and conclusions arrived at within six months at a much smaller cost. I believe such a report would be much more representative and much more acceptable to those who are actually carrying out the work of education in this country.

Mr. K. C. Roy: Sir, I am sorry that on this occasion I shall differ from my esteemed friend, Dr. Moonje. The reasons are these, Sir. The House will remember that in 1927 Dr. Moonje brought in his first Resolution on the Sandhurst Committee's Report. He wanted a start to be given almost immediately. He wanted that 50 per cent. of the cadre of the Indian Army should be Indianised within 15 years. He also wanted that a Sandhurst should be established almost without delay. These were his demands. The demands were modified by Mr. Srinivasa Iyengar, who is no longer a Member of this House, to this extent, that the main recommendations of the Sandhurst Committee's Report should be given effect to. What is Dr. Moonje seeking today? He wants the whole House to go back upon that accepted recommendation of the Legislative Assembly. It comes to that, although Dr. Moonje may shake his head as much as he likes. But today he wants us to go back upon that recommendation. That recommendation, as the House is aware, was not accepted either by the Government of India or by His Majesty's Government. Today Dr. Moonje is trying to provide an excuse for not looking at the recommendation even in the near future. That, Sir, is the reason of my principal objection.

Then, Sir, his amendment as drafted shows that our educational system has been inefficient in character training. This is a proposition which I cannot accept. The Indian educational officers, both Indian and European, have done great service; they have produced the best lawyers, best civil servants, jurists and excellent doctors. Do I understand now, Sir, that they could not produce two dozen cadets for the Indian Army? I absolutely decline to believe such a proposition, and although my friend Dr. Moonje has denied it very stoutly and said that there is nothing inherently defective in the Indian character, but it is the educational system, I deny even that. He in fact has pronounced an unjustifiable libel on Indian youths.

Dr. B. S. Moonje: I mentioned the educational system of India and nothing about the Indian youths.

Mr. K. C. Roy: I deny all that. You cannot separate the two, and there can be no fine distinction between them. If you are anxious to secure a free flow of recruits for the Indian Army, it is a question of high policy. My friend was a member of the Selection Committee last Summer. I happened to be in Delhi in those days and I know that my friend and his associates could not hold their own for the Indian boys against his British colleagues on that Selection Committee. That is the real truth. Why do you not come to the truth? The question whether there should be a sufficient supply of Indian cadets for the Indian Army is a question of high policy; it is not a question of education at all. With the present system of education we can produce at least 100 Indian youths every year for the Indian Army. Our clear duty is to stick to the recommendation made in 1927 and to do nothing more.

Now, Sir, with regard to the amendments, my friend Mr. Acharya has given a long order. He wants to reform the whole Indian educational system. He has forgotten that only the other day we had an excellent review of the educational system by Sir Philip Hartog and his friends. As regards my friend Colonel Crawford, I welcome his suggestion. When I read his speech at the Indo-British Union in London I thought my friend was coming back as a changed man. He believes in Indo-British co-operation and he has really given an example of that today. I greatly welcome his suggestion although I am not prepared to support it.

My friend Munshi Iswar Saran, whose example I want to follow so far as the making of speeches goes—I want to be as brief as he was,—recommends a school now. Having failed to get his Sandhurst, he now wants a school.

Munshi Iswar Saran: No, I stand by our demand for a Sandhurst.

Mr. K. C. Roy: You should hold by your gun and stick to your Sandhurst and not go in for a school.

Colonel J. D. Crawford: Where is the material for it?

Mr. K. C. Roy: There is plenty of material; you come with me any day and I shall show you.

Then, Sir, my friend the Revd. J. C. Chatterjee wants a conference. A conference to do what? To find out established facts. We have plenty of recruits in this country if only the Army authorities will care to take them. Ask any Director of Public Instruction. I have consulted some of them from time to time and they are quite satisfied with our educational system and quite satisfied with the character of the boys that we produce. But here there is an attempt to utter an unjustifiable calumny on the Indian educational system as well as upon our youths. The Revd. Mr. Chatterjee wants a conference. I shall give him an example of a conference with which Sir Frank Noyce is fully familiar. They had a conference the other day about some trouble with regard to the all Indian medical council or something else and about these we had a discussion in the Legislative Assembly. The conference held views quite contrary to the views of the Government of India. What is the good of a conference with the Provincial Governments on a matter which is primarily the concern of the Government of India and His Majesty's Government? No useful purpose would be served by a conference of this kind. What we do want is a policy that Indianisation must go forward, and that policy is wanted today.

Lastly, Sir, I consider Dr. Moonje's Resolution as very inopportune. My friend Munshi Iswar Saran has alluded to the question of the prospective changes in our constitution. Dominion Status has been held out to us by the Viceroy. We may get it soon or we may get it ten years hence, but it is there and it is bound to come. The whole question of the reorganisation of the Indian Army on the Dominion basis must be discussed at the Round Table Conference. It was discussed in connection with the Irish Free State and in the agreement which the Irish Free State drew up it occupies an important place and perhaps it is the most important place; and when the question of the future Government of India on the Dominion basis comes up for consideration, the question of the reorganisation of the Indian Army on the Dominion basis will certainly follow. And there my friend Colonel Crawford will turn out a true prophet because he advocated it in 1927.

I therefore consider that Dr. Moonje's Resolution is unfair to our Universities, unfair to our educational system, unfair to the Indian youths and inopportune for political purposes. I oppose the Resolution as well as all the amendments.

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru (Agra Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, the main object of the Resolution moved by my Honourable friend, Dr. Moonje, is to provide a steady flow of really first class material for recruitment as Army officers. In the course of the debate, Sir, references have been made in more than one quarter to the Report of the Skeen Committee and it is really not possible to consider this question without reference to the Report of that Committee. One of the terms of reference of the Skeen Committee required it to consider how the present supply of Indian candidates for the King's Commissions might be improved in regard to both number and quality. There is no doubt that this Committee made a review of our educational system in a general way and pointed out that there was need for improvement in it. But it did not confine itself to a general recommendation simply in regard to education. There were other questions also which it considered in this connection, but it recognised freely that the removal of the comparatively minor defects to which it had drawn attention would not solve the real question which it had been appointed to consider. The Report says:

"In order to attract to a military career the better material we believe to be available it will not suffice merely to remove the subsidiary obstacles which at present exist, it will not suffice to adopt better methods of publicity, to apply more effective propaganda, to introduce a system of open competition for entrance to Sandhurst, and to reduce the cost to the parent of his son's preliminary education and military training.

[Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru.]

It is also doubtful if it would be considered a practical proceeding to put forth so much effort for the sake of filling ten vacancies: and, above all things, it cannot be expected that the educational authorities in the schools and colleges of India will interest themselves in the special preparation of boys for the Army or will introduce the changes which are certainly necessary in the educational system of the country, so long as the prizes to be gained are limited to 10 vacancies at Sandhurst per annum for all India and so long as the prospects of an Indian boy in the Army are not set upon a more assured and progressive basis than exists at present."

Later on, it says:

"But at the same time we contend that, in order to induce the best material to accept the admittedly arduous preparation for a military career and in order to induce the educational authorities in India to lend their active co-operation, it is necessary to widen the field of opportunity. Apart from reforms in matters of detail, which would not in themselves be sufficient, we can find no other satisfactory answer to our first term of reference."

The Committee was impressed, as we are all impressed, by the defects in our educational system. There is no country the educational system of which is perfect. But let us not, in considering this question, forget the governing consideration to which our attention was directed by the Report of the Committee. As my Honourable friend, Mr. Roy, said, this matter is first and foremost a question of policy. The psychological conditions in India must be altered. The youths of India must have before themselves opportunities for pursuing a military career adequate to capture their imagination and to induce the educational authorities and other authorities to put forth the necessary efforts for changes in the present system.

Subject to these governing considerations of policy, the Committee made two recommendations for an improvement in the number and quality of candidates offering themselves for King's Commissions. In the first place, it did not concern itself with anything so radical as a complete overhauling of the entire educational system of India. It proceeded, Sir, on the principle on which the Calcutta University Commission proceeded. That Commission, as we all know, was concerned with one province only. Nevertheless, it shrank from recommending an entire reorganisation of all secondary schools in order to improve the material available to the Universities. It adopted a more modest course and recommended the establishment of intermediate colleges, so that even before the secondary schools are improved the Universities might have a means of obtaining a better material than at present.

The Sandhurst Committee proceeded upon the same lines. Instead of asking us to wait till our educational system was re-modelled, it proposed that institutions should be set up where the limited number of boys that we need for training as Commissioned Officers could be obtained. Its recommendation was that Dehra Dun should be expanded so as to accommodate about 250 or 300 boys. Another of its recommendations was that, when necessary, a similar institution or similar institutions might be started in other parts of India. In addition to that it recommended the establishment of a military college in India on the lines of military colleges established in the United States of America and in Canada. It drew attention to the fact that the education imparted by the civil authorities was regarded as inadequate for the needs of the Army by military authorities not only in India but also in the United States of America. In the United States the military authorities required a very high standard of education. The standards varied in the different parts of the States. Apart from this, the military authorities of the United States are not satisfied that the education given by the civil institutions develops the character of boys in a way in which they would desire to see it developed. They have, therefore, established a military college where, instead of giving training to cadets for 18 months as in England, they keep them under training for four years. The Skeen Committee recommended that we might follow the same model and asked that the course of instruction in the military college to be established in India should extend over three years.

These, Sir, were the basic recommendations of that Committee and what have the Government done in these respects? They have turned down the policy unanimously recommended by the Skeen Committee, of which we have a distinguished representative in this House, in the person of my Honourable friend, Mr. Jinnah. (Hear, hear.)

Mr. M. A. Jinnah: And endorsed by the House.

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: And endorsed by the House.

Mr. M. A. Jinnah: Without a division.

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: In the second place, Government have refused to establish a military college for the training of King's Commissioned Officers in this country.

Mr. G. M. Young (Army Secretary): May I ask my Honourable friend his authority for that statement?

Mr. President: Non-existence of a college.

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: I will merely refer to the debates of 1928. My Honourable friend held out to us the hope of the establishment of that college at some distant future, but we take it that that was only a euphemistic way of telling us that His Majesty's Government did not see their way

Mr. M. A. Jinnah: Has the Honourable Member given any order for the bricks and mortar for the college?

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: Perhaps, my Honourable friend, is asking us to believe that the Kitchner College which is meant to train non-commissioned officers, might ultimately develop into an institution where King's Commissioned Officers might be trained. But even that announcement has not been made authoritatively on behalf of His Majesty's Government. As regards the establishment of military schools where instruction of the kind given in the Dehra Dun Military College might be imparted, the Government have expanded the accommodation in the Dehra Dun College so that it might be able to admit about 200 boys. But they are still far from having carried out the recommendations of the Skeen Committee even in this respect. Sir, if Government are really desirous of extending the flow, of increasing the supply of Indian cadets available for the King's Commissions, they must first turn to the recommendations of the Skeen Committee.

But there are certain other proposals also that might be made in order to give a military bias, so to say, to the character of Indian young men. We might have an officers' training corps in Universities and schools; "A." and "B." certificates might be established. Again, military training might be more widely given in Universities—and this is a subject which has been impressed more than once upon Government, so far practically without any result. Again, Sir, we might give some military training to boys in our schools on the lines on which cadets are trained or meant to be trained in Australia. A debate took place on this subject last year, on the initiative of my Honourable friend, Dr. Moonje. The Resolution which the House finally passed on the 15th February ran as follows:

“This Assembly recommends to the Governor General in Council that, with a view to remove the defects in character training of Indian youths as emphasised by the Skeen Committee, steps should be taken as early as possible to provide compulsory physical training, games and drill, for Indian boys attending schools and colleges between the ages of 12 and 20 and to provide and encourage the use of miniature rifle ranges.”

So we have already considered the question of this character training, and we have laid down the lines on which we should proceed in order to remove such defects as are imputed to us by our critics. In September last a question was put on this subject and we were told that, while Local Governments have been communicated with in regard to that part of this Resolution which asked for compulsory physical training, etc., in schools and colleges, the question of consulting the Local Governments regarding the provision and encouragement of the use of miniature rifle ranges was still under consideration. I do not know, Sir, what has been done during the intervening three or four months.

An Honourable Member: Nothing.

The Honourable Sir James Crerar (Home Member): Local Governments have been addressed on the subject.

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: I am very glad to learn, Sir, that at long last Government have decided to take notice of that Resolution and to act upon it. Well, if that Resolution has been acted upon, I think, Sir, that will provide one of the most potent means of increasing the desire among Indian young men for a military career. But the suggestion made either in the Resolution or in the amendment of my Honourable friend, Colonel Crawford, will not take us very far. We cannot at this moment ask the Government to reorganise our system of education.

Colonel J. D. Crawford: No necessity for that.

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: I cordially agree with my Honourable friend and that is the main reason why I oppose both the Resolution of my Honourable friend, Dr. Moonje, and the amendment moved by my Honourable friend Colonel Crawford.

Sir, our main purpose is to put forward our demand for a better training for Indian youths in order that they may be better fitted to adopt a military career. Our object should therefore be to put as much pressure as we can on the Military Department. This Resolution, however, as it stands, concerns only the Education Department. The debate might go on without my Honourable friend, the Army Secretary, taking part in it. I think, Sir, that, even if the Resolution is accepted by my Honourable friend Sir Frank Noyce, it will be of absolutely no use for the purpose we have in view. We want no assurance from Sir Frank Noyce. We want to put pressure on the Army authorities to move rapidly in order to increase the number of Indian youths available for a military career. It is they to whom we must address ourselves. It is they who have to be put on their defence. Therefore, Sir, although I am unable to support either the Resolution of my Honourable friend, Dr. Moonje, or the amendment of Colonel Crawford, I am able to give my support to the amendment of Munshi Iswar Saran. I am also able to do so because the direction in which he proceeds is that favoured by the Skeen Committee.

An Honourable Member: Retrograde.

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: I have already pointed out that the Skeen Committee wanted an expansion of the institution at Dehra Dun and the establishment of similar institutions elsewhere, and secondly the establishment of an Indian Sandhurst. It is true that the amendment of my Honourable friend Munshi Iswar Saran does not provide for the acceptance of all the recommendations of the Skeen Committee. In view of the manner in which the debate has been initiated, perhaps that was not possible. But the House will note that the recommendation contained in the amendment of Munshi Iswar Saran is a part of the recommendations of the Skeen Committee. In the circumstances therefore it deserves the support of this House, and I trust that it will be favoured by the non-official section of the House at least.

Khan Bahadur Sarfaraz Hussain Khan (Patna and Chota Nagpur cum Orissa: Muhammadan): Sir, I oppose the Resolution, and in a few words I shall explain my reason. In a few months you will have the Round Table Conference, and that is the place where our political rights and military rights can be clearly argued and threshed out. To appoint a committee now will mean some money. It is no good spending money on this matter when only a few months hence you will have the whole threshed out. Whatever we do today will be of no use in view of the Round Table Conference. With regard to the amendment of Munshi Iswar Saran, I do not know whether he wants a military school to be established. I want to know this.

Munshi Iswar Saran: Yes, a military school.

Khan Bahadur Sarfaraz Hussain Khan: If you want a military school, then I support the amendment.

Mr. N. C. Kelkar (Bombay Central Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, it is somewhat difficult to choose between the Resolution and the different amendments, for they have been drafted from a particular angle by each of the members who have moved them. But when it comes to voting, I think I will vote for Mr. Munshi Iswar Saran's amendment as it contains a very concrete proposal that will solve some of the difficulties. But I have got to say this. In regard to Dr. Moonje's proposition, I find that his Resolution contains a kind of tacit admission of the Sandhurst Committee's scandalous observation about want of the required character at present among Indian boys. It may be military character, not moral character; all the same I protest against those scandalous observations.

Mr. M. A. Jinnah: You have no justification for that remark. Read the Report again before you say scandalous.

[Mr. N. C. Kelkar.]

homes? It is simply because the Government keep us out of all these careers that we are not able to put ourselves in positions to defend our hearths and homes. Do we want courage? Look at that red book in the Library which gives a list of V. C.'s won by Indians; it is not an easy thing to win a V. C. When so many Indians have won the V. C., do you mean to say that Indian boys are wanting in courage or resourcefulness or training or discipline? It is a blasphemy against any people to say so. It is only the racial pride of the Britisher and of the British Government and the evil genius of the Military Department which keep us out of our careers and it is simply absurd, simply ridiculous, to say that an easy flow of the necessary equipment of youthful people to enter into the ranks of the Army officers cannot be obtained. I really laugh at the pretension that extraordinary efforts have to be made to secure that small material every year. I find some people saying, without disclosing a lack of humour, that it will take us from 100 to 200 years to Indianise the Indian Army. (An Honourable Member: "Very moderate!") Yes, certainly it is very moderate, very considerate, to say that the Indian Army would be, if it is to be, Indianised during the next 100, 200 or 300 years. But if it is to be Indianised in 200 years, I tell this British Government

An Honourable Member: It won't last so long.

Mr. N. C. Kelkar: The Government itself may not last so long, but they are giving us an extension of a longer lease than they themselves are getting in this country if they maintain their present rigorous policy

Mr. M. A. Jinnah: I do not want to interrupt the Honourable Member, but I ask him whether he will give me a reference to the passage which he characterised as a scandalous observation in the Sandhurst Committee's Report.

Mr. N. C. Kelkar: That is my characterisation.

Mr. M. A. Jinnah: Will my Honourable friend give me the reference in the Sandhurst Report? Which is the paragraph to which he refers?

Mr. N. C. Kelkar: That is contained in the Resolution itself.

Mr. M. A. Jinnah: I do not think it is fair

Mr. N. C. Kelkar: What the Resolution says is

Mr. President: Order, Order. The House stands adjourned till twenty minutes to Three.

The Assembly then adjourned for Lunch till Twenty Minutes to Three of the Clock.

The Assembly re-assembled after Lunch at Twenty Minutes to Three of the Clock, Mr. President in the Chair.

Sir Frank Noyce: I think I may claim that I have served more all-India committees of inquiry than any other Member of this House, but it seems to be my invariable fate, when I rise to speak, to oppose motions for the appointment of further committees.

Maulvi Muhammad Yakub (Rohilkund and Kumaon Divisions: Muhammadan Rural): Because you are fed up with them.

Sir Frank Noyce: I do so on this occasion, not because I disbelieve in the efficacy of such committees, but because I do think that they are lengthy and cumbrous and, as one Honourable Member has pointed out, very expensive methods of bringing about reforms. I am not in favour of them when there are more expeditious means of obtaining the desired end, as I think possibly there are on the present occasion. Sir, I welcome the turn that this debate has taken or rather the turn that my friend Mr. Acharya and Colonel Crawford have, though not quite so successfully as I could have wished, endeavoured to make it take, for I welcome the recognition, which is implicit in Mr. Acharya's amendment, and which is more fully brought out in Colonel Crawford's, that character training is no less important for a civil than it is for a military career, that the characteristics which the Indian Sandhurst Committee described as so essential in an army officer, that ability to lead, that willingness to submit to discipline—for no man can hope to be a leader himself unless he has previously gone through the mill and learnt to follow a leader—and also that physical fitness on which Dr. Moonje lays so much stress, are as essential in civil as they are in military life. But, Sir, I cannot altogether agree that the paramount national importance of developing those characteristics has been neglected in the educational system of this country. I do not think, as my friend Mr. Chatterjee has very justly pointed out, that one need do more than look round this House to see that that is not the case. I must confess that I personally feel that the Indian Sandhurst Committee took rather too gloomy a view of the situation. It is true that the Committee examined a large number of educational authorities and appointed a sub-committee, which included Sir Andrew Skeen himself, to make a tour of Indian Universities in order to ascertain what materials for officer training the Army were available there, but they did not and could not make an examination of the schools, and it is in the schools that the most formative years of the life of the Indian youth are passed. It is therefore, Sir, I think it fortunate that we have had recently an exhaustive analysis of the state of education in India at the present day in the shape of the Report of the Auxiliary Committee appointed by the Indian Statutory Commission. I wish that more reference had been made in the course of this debate to the Report of that Committee. I cannot help feeling that the absence of such references show the possible fate which would overtake the recommendations of a committee such as that suggested by Dr. Moonje. The Hartog Committee have not shrunk from criticising the educational system of India. They have drawn special attention to the appalling waste in the primary schools. They have pointed to the fact that a very large number of boys are admitted to secondary schools who are not capable of profiting to the full from the education which they receive in them, with the result that much money is wasted and that the efficiency of those institutions is materially reduced. But on the other hand, Sir, the Committee have given a much more optimistic picture of what they call the education of the directing classes in secondary schools and Universities than is to be drawn from the pages of the Report of the Indian Sandhurst Committee. I should like to draw the attention of this House to certain passages in that Report which indicate that the general conditions of school life are materially better now than they were ten years ago, especially in regard to intensive physical training, the organisation of games, the Boy Scout movement, better teaching, and so on.

[Sir Frank Noyce.]

of approaching the question, which I venture to throw out for the consideration of the House. The Hartog Committee have suggested the resuscitation, or rather the revival in a some what different form, of the old Bureau of Education, which was abolished in the retrenchment era of 1923. The function of this Bureau would be to give opinion and advice to Provincial Administrations and keep them in close touch with each other. They have also recommended the revival of the Central Advisory Board which was also abolished about the same time. It is interesting, in the present connection, to know what the constitution of that Board was. It consisted of the Educational Commissioner with the Government of India, who was Chairman, an expert from the United Kingdom when required, two Vice-Chancellors of Universities in India, one of whom was a whole-time officer, two members of privately-managed colleges, four Directors of Public Instruction, and four non-officials interested in the subject of education. I would draw special attention to the last item of this list, namely, four non-officials specially interested in the subject of education, for among them was the honoured name of the Right Honourable Srinivasa Sastri. The revival of this Board is under the consideration of the Government of India. This question is also obviously one on which we shall have to consult Local Governments and educational authorities, but what I would urge for the consideration of this House is that that Board, if it were revived, would be a very useful means of enabling the Government of India and Provincial Governments to formulate a definite and continuous policy in regard to what is, after all, a most important part of any system of education, as all sections of this House without exception have agreed, the development of character.

I should like, in conclusion, Sir, in connection with the attitude that I have taken up, to refer to what the Prince of Wales said in his address to the Victoria Cross heroes at the dinner he gave them last year. He said:

"If any man thinks that valour is only called for in fighting our enemies on the field of battle, he must have a very distorted view of the life we lead in this world of ours."

I think Colonel Crawford has very rightly laid stress on the wider aspect of this question which is that we want all the character we can get not only for military but also for civil life.

The net result of my remarks is that the Government would be willing to accept Colonel Crawford's and Mr. Chatterjee's amendments to the original Resolution, subject, of course, to the clear understanding that Local Governments have to be consulted in this matter in which they are vitally concerned.

I am afraid I cannot agree to Dr. Moonje's motion for the appointment of a committee, and only to the limited extent I have indicated 3 P.M. to Mr. Acharya's amendment. As far as Munshi Iswar Saran's amendment is concerned, I must leave my Honourable friend the Army Secretary to deal with it, as that falls entirely within his province. I have only ventured to submit a few observations on the general aspect of this question from the point of view of the Department with which I am connected.

Mr. G. M. Young: Sir, I should like to say a few words about my Honourable friend Munshi Iswar Saran's alternative Resolution. My main objection to it is that it blocks the way to any further examination of the problem dealt with in the main Resolution. It has just now been said that the Government are prepared to accept the amendments moved by Colonel Crawford and the Revd. Mr. Chatterjee. If we were to accept the amendment of my Honourable friend, Munshi Iswar Saran, the whole of that question would go by the board. My main object in wishing for a further inquiry into the recommendation of the Skeem Committee is that that recommendation has given rise to considerable confusion of thought. It is, as Honourable Members probably know, professedly one of their subsidiary recommendations. It is couched, however, in sweeping language, and appears to deal with a very large problem indeed. This is the recommendation as it runs:

"The Government of India should impress upon educational authorities the paramount national importance of reforming the system of education in India with a view to developing in the pupils of the ordinary schools and colleges those characteristics so essential in an Army Officer to which little or no attention is at present paid by them and should appeal to them".—

that is, the Government of India should appeal to them.

Mr. M. A. Jinnah: What page is that please?

Mr. G. M. Young: Page 54.

"and should appeal to them to reorganise the institutions under their control to this end."

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: Have you accepted their policy?

Mr. G. M. Young: I shall deal with that later on. My Honourable friend Pandit Kunzru's observation in connection with this is that the Committee did not advocate any radical overhauling of the educational system in India. Well, if that is not advocacy of a radical overhauling of the educational system throughout India, in all the ordinary schools and colleges, I do not know what it is. That is the great trouble. Many of us do not know what the Skeem Committee were driving at.

Mr. M. A. Jinnah: Very sorry.

Mr. G. M. Young: However, it was an easy thing to comply with their actual recommendation; and that the Government have done. They have drawn the attention of the Provincial Governments and the educational authorities to this recommendation.

Dr. B. S. Moonje: They must give a lead to the Provincial Governments, that is what is wanted.

Mr. G. M. Young: The detailed recommendations are to be found in paragraphs 11 and 24 of the Report. The defects, so far as they have described them, appear to be, apart from character training, the development of the qualities required in an Army Officer, in which the Indian cadet at Sandhurst is, they state, at a disadvantage compared to the British cadet—English, military training, and physical training. These are the four matters which the Skeem Committee specify—character training, physical training, military training and English. The Government of India have, as I already said, drawn the attention of the Local Governments and also that of educational authorities to these recommendations. They have been asked by educational authorities for some further explanation of what these recommendations mean. I think an inquiry on some such lines as have been advocated, at any rate in the amendments moved to the Resolution today, would help to elucidate this recommendation of the Skeen Committee, and would get a more authoritative pronouncement upon it than could be got simply by the Government of India issuing a Resolution. My Honourable friend, Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru, went on to say: "This is all very well; but it is a minor recommendation of the Committee, contingent upon Government accepting the major recommendations". That is perfectly true. He went on to say that the Government have refused to establish an Indian military college, and that that was the main recommendation of the Sandhurst Committee. I asked him his authority for that statement. I think it was the Chair that was pleased to observe that the fact that the college is not there was a sufficient authority for that statement. May I remind the House, Sir, that the Skeen Committee recommended the foundation of an Indian military college in the year 1933, and that there are still three years to go?

Mr. N. C. Kelkar: We live in hope.

Mr. G. M. Young: My Honourable friend may certainly live in hope; and a very good hope too.

Dr. B. S. Moonje: Do the Government propose to start a college in 1933, as recommended by the Indian Sandhurst Committee?

Mr. G. M. Young: The Government of India have explained in full what their intentions in this matter are. The Indian Sandhurst Committee recommended an automatic increase in the number of vacancies, on the assumption that candidates would be forthcoming to fill those vacancies. They said that in 1933 there would be more candidates available than Sandhurst could accommodate, and at the same time enough candidates to start an Indian military college. Government accepted the position that, when more candidates would be available than Sandhurst could accommodate and in sufficient numbers to establish a military college in India, a college would have to be established. But they did not commit themselves to the prophecy that that would occur in 1933. In any case, my point is that, at the present time, some benefit would result from a further inquiry into this particular recommendation of the Skeen Committee. It is quite true, as my Honourable friend, Sir Frank Noyce, has pointed out, that the Hartog Committee have gone far more deeply into the question than the Skeen Committee were able to do. But, as my Honourable friend Dr. Moonje has said, they did not go into it from this particular point of view, that is, the point of view of producing officers for the Army. I think it would be very desirable that there should be a further inquiry from that point of view. If my Honourable friend, Munshi Iswar Saran's amendment, or rather, as I say, his alternative Resolution, is accepted, then the House automatically rejects the proposal for a further inquiry into this recommendation of the Skeen Committee. That is my primary objection.

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: Is it not for the Provincial Governments to consider it?

Mr. G. M. Young: I turn to the actual recommendation of my Honourable friend, Munshi Iswar Saran. He does not want a committee; he does not want a conference, or any other form of inquiry, into this question. He said—and the same arguments have been repeated by other Honourable Members—that there is a sufficient supply of candidates to be found in existing educational institutions in India; that these alleged defects do not really exist; and that good material for officering the Army can be had out of our existing educational institutions. In advancing his argument, my friend was only repeating what he said last year. I shall read to the House his actual words. He said:

"Sir, I may tell my Honourable friends here that if the competition is thrown open,—you may lay down as many hard and strict rules as you like about physical, moral and intellectual fitness, but if you do not tack on to them some other unnecessary conditions and qualifications—I undertake to give you at least 200 candidates of the right type from my own province, and if I do not do it, I shall make a sporting offer, I shall resign my seat here and shall not come and worry the Army Secretary any more."

I am glad, Sir, that he has not carried out the last portion of his threat. It is quite clear that if his province can produce no less than 200 candidates a year for the Army, the whole of India can produce a great deal more than that. If so, I ask, what is my Honourable friend's object in demanding the foundation of yet another military college in India? The material is there. There may be some defects in the system. In fact, he has himself stated that there are defects in the system of selecting the material. But surely the remedy is to put that system right? If the material is there, why found a new military college in order to create more material?

The school that my Honourable friend recommends is to be capable of accommodating at least 500 Indian boys of all castes and creeds, at the lowest possible rate of fees, with tuition, board and lodging. Now, Sir, perhaps I might say a few words about the existing military colleges. We have, as we all know, the Prince of Wales's Royal Indian Military College at Dehra Dun. That is an institution intended for the sons of well-to-do parents, who have a natural bent towards the Army. Nominations are made to the College, by the Commander-in-Chief, of boys whose intention, or whose parents' intention at the time they enter the College, is that they should go into the Army. This is admittedly an expensive institution, designed for a particular class, which is likely to furnish officers for the Army. That is our justification for maintaining Dehra Dun at the expense of military estimates. It is a thing which no other country in the world does, maintaining a secondary school in order to educate boys who will ultimately go into the Cadet Colleges and thence into the Army. Our justification for doing it in India, as the Skeen Committee discovered from their evidence, is that the material turned out by the Dehra Dun College is the best material that enters into the officer ranks of the Indian Army. There is no compulsion exerted to make a boy enter the Army after he has left Dehra Dun. But from the very class from which recruitment is made at Dehra Dun, we have a certain assurance that it will supply officers for the Army.

Another class of schools that we have are the King George's Royal Indian Military Schools at Jhelum and Jullundur. They are intended for people of smaller means, the sons of sepoy, non-commissioned officers, and Viceroy's Commissioned officers in the Army. They are nominated, I think, by the Commanding Officers of regiments. The general intention is that they should go on into the ordinary ranks of the Army; but we hope that, with the aid of the education that they have there, and of the further education that many of them will have at the Kitchener College at Nowgong, they will supply material for the King's Commissioned ranks later on, entering them through the Viceroy's Commissioned ranks. Here again there is no compulsion. There is nothing whatever to prevent a boy, having got a good education at Jhelum or Jullundur, from going on into the civil line. But, here again, we have some sort of a guarantee, in the classes from which these boys are drawn. They all come from classes that are recruited in the Army. Their parents are mostly ex-soldiers. Therefore, they have the influence of tradition and their natural inclination to render it likely that they will go on into the Army. Now the kind of school that my Honourable friend has suggested, a school with 500 boys, has neither of these safeguards to ensure that the pupils will proceed from there into either the officer ranks or the lower ranks of the Army. He is merely offering a first class education at very low fees to the public. The Army will never be justified in incurring that expense, with such dubious prospects of benefit to the Army itself. We have accepted the recommendation of the Skeen Committee with regard to the foundation of a second military college on the lines of Dehra Dun. That recommendation is:

"When the expansion of the existing college is complete, a second college on the same lines should, if circumstances demand it, be opened in some other part of India."

The Government of India accepted that; and when the time comes to establish another college of the same character as Dehra Dun, they will no doubt take steps to that end. In the same way we are contemplating, and will very shortly establish, another school on the lines of the Jhelum and Jullundur schools at Ajmer.

Dr. B. S. Moonje: For whom?

Mr. G. M. Young: It will be for Rajputs and Jats.

Dr. B. S. Moonje: For sons of soldiers?

Mr. G. M. Young: Yes, on exactly the same lines as Jhelum and Jullundur. But I say that in these two types of schools we have some guarantee that their products will go on into the Army. In the type of school suggested by my Honourable friend, we have no such guarantee. It is not the intention of the Army to provide a general education for the civil population. That, Sir, is the main ground on which I oppose the amendment moved by my Honourable friend.

Mr. M. A. Jinnah: Sir, I congratulate the Honourable Member who spoke on behalf of the Education Department on having given us a magnificent forecast of what is going to be done in the way of improving the general system of our education. He has never told us what he has actually done up to now. But he gave us a forecast. I have no doubt the Honourable Member, if he continues in his place, will perform wonders within a very short time. But I expected him to say something definite as to what he has so far done, and particularly what he has done with regard to the recommendation of the Sandhurst Committee which I shall presently explain to the House, although I regret that the Honourable the Army Secretary has not yet grasped the recommendations. I hope he will read them again, and I shall endeavour to make them plain to him and to the House, if I can. Now the recommendation which affects the Education Department and which relates to military training is a very subsidiary recommendation, as my Honourable friend, Pandit Kunzru, pointed out and I shall explain it to the House when I come to deal with the recommendations of the Sandhurst Committee. What was expected from the Government was this, and I will read it in the words of the Sandhurst Committee. You find it in paragraph 24, page 28.

"The main responsibility must rest upon the educational authorities and experts to lead in emphasising the paramount national importance of reforming the educational system of India in the directions we have indicated."

Now, what have you done? I do not think the House heard a single word from the Government that they have taken one particular definite step in order to give some help or some effect to this recommendation.

Mr. G. M. Young: Sir, may I draw the Honourable Member's attention to the fact that he has dropped one line in that passage which is the basis of his argument?

Mr. M. A. Jinnah: Quite right: I will read it again:

"The main responsibility must rest upon the educational authorities and experts to whom however it is imperative that the Government should give a clear lead in emphasising the paramount national importance of reforming the educational system of India in the directions we have indicated."

Now the directions indicated were that you must try, as far as you can, to co-ordinate the various educational institutions in the country, so that apart from the general training and the general education which they receive, certain essential matters, which would enable them to compete for a military career, were also essential and they were three. We emphasised three points. One was the English language. The other was military training and physical training. Now I should certainly have expected from the Government of India, whom the Honourable Member represents here in the Education Department, to do something definite. What lead have you given? What have you done? That is really shortly the question and that is how it stands. This Report was signed in 1927, and you have done nothing. Now my Honourable friend, Dr. Moonje, brings forward this Resolution. I am sorry I cannot agree with his Resolution, although I entirely agree with the spirit and the object that he has at his heart; I wholeheartedly agree. Now my Honourable friend wants to move this Resolution and wants a committee to be appointed. We have passed that stage of a committee. (Laughter.) We do not want a Committee. We want the Government to carry this out. Action is wanted. Therefore I do not want to reopen this question particularly as my Honourable friend, Mr. Roy, very rightly pointed out that the House, this very House, without a division, endorsed in toto the recommendations of the Sandhurst Committee. Now what more do you want? It is there; a gross neglect and callousness exists in the Treasury Bench. Now this is the only simple issue and that is the subject of this Resolution.

Now, Sir, we are told by the Army Secretary—his usual tale which he tells this House every now and then (Laughter). When you ask him: "What have you done about the establishment of Sandhurst", he says: "Oh! it is in 1933. You are now in 1930; last year you were in 1929 and the year before you were in 1928". Does he really think that this House is composed of children? A very nebulous argument indeed! Sandhurst is to be established, says he, when the saturation point is reached! Where does he get it from? He says that the Sandhurst Committee Report is a confused document. Now what is the Sandhurst Committee's Report? I shall describe it in a very few minutes. The first and the foremost and the fundamental principle that underlies the whole of this Report is that an Indian Sandhurst is to be established, not on the ground that when we shall reach a saturation point then the Army Secretary will run and collect bricks and mortar and start building a house. Not like that. I will point out to you, Sir, the recommendations on page 39 and the reasoning. The first ground was this:

"Accordingly we find at once one strong reason for the establishment of a Military College in India which will provide the facilities at present given by Sandhurst alone. It seems clear that like the progressive scheme of Indianisation which we have suggested, this step also is necessary as a means to improve both in number and quality the supply of Indian candidates for the King's Commission. Further, it is in our opinion very desirable and would be consonant with the general policy of administration as that is now conceived that India should have a Military College of her own and thus be self-sufficient in respect to one of the most important national needs."

That is the ground, and we give our reasons for it. The second ground, which is not the only ground as the Honourable Member, the Army Secretary, has mentioned or assumed, but is an important consideration, and that is as follows:

"There is one other consideration of a specially practical and compelling character in every educational institution. There comes a time when the authorities responsible for its efficiency must decide to set a limit to the further acceptance of foreign students for fear lest the character of the institution may be changed."

That is another reason. We apprehended, and I think, rightly apprehended that the authorities of Sandhurst might refuse admission to Indians when a certain limit was reached and we ascertained even the figures and facts which would show when the saturation point might be reached. We have got all the materials collected which the Government of India, I presume, under the advice of the Secretary, have up to now suppressed from the House and the public, namely the materials collected by the Sub-Committee and the Report of the Sub-Committee. Why don't you disclose them? Then you will understand the confusion of the Sandhurst Committee Report better. Then there was a third reason and the third reason is this:

"It is hardly necessary to add that there is a strong political demand for the establishment of a Military College in India. In a matter of this kind we should not ourselves attach great importance to consideration of a purely political character; but in the case of the Indian Sandhurst the political demand represents, we believe, a real force of growing national sentiment which cannot be ignored."

Now, Sir, what have you done about the Sandhurst? Nothing. Then we are told by the Army Secretary today the same old story again. He says when we get suitable candidates then we shall consider. You will never get suitable candidates if you go on in the manner in which you are going on. You do not want to get suitable candidates. I am convinced more than ever that you do not want to get them.

Now, Sir, having thus laid down the fundamental principle or the reasons which we have stated at great length—I only quoted a few passages—that an Indian Sandhurst must be established, we say, of course, it cannot be done at once. How can it be as a practical proposition? Hence we said that it should be an accomplished fact in 1933—a complete, accomplished, achieved object. In the meantime you must take the Sandhurst Committee's recommendations which are interdependent, interwoven. You cannot separate one from the other. In the meantime what has been done? The next question that the Sandhurst Committee considered was this: What should be the progress or the acceleration of Indianisation? There was a difference of opinion. Some thought it should be 15 years; some thought 20 years and some 25 years. But ultimately it was agreed that half the cadre should be Indianised at the longest period in 25 years subject to an examination five years after Sandhurst was established, that is, after 10 years, and it was open to us then to accelerate that limit of period. According to that, recommendations were made that you should gradually go on increasing the number every year. Now, I am told, and I will be told over and over again by the Honourable the Army Secretary that he cannot get that number of suitable candidates. What have you done in the way of giving a lead at least to those institutions from which you may get good material? And remember, Sir, we were dealing with this question from this point of view. Over and over again we were told, it was impressed upon us, and it is in the Report, that we will not be able to get efficient officers unless we have a system of public schools in our country. It was one of the most important questions. The controversy was this. You can never get really efficient officers who would be put in charge of large troops, lives and property—and the whole country's interest is at stake—you therefore want the best officers, you must get the best materials, and it is with that object that the Sandhurst Committee sat and examined the systems of other countries. We examined the systems of various countries, and having examined the whole lot of them, we came to the conclusion that it is not possible for India to follow England and have a system of public schools such as exist in England, and we found that there are many other countries where the system did not exist and yet they were able to get the finest material who stood side by side in the battlefields of France with British soldiers and fought as valiantly as any other soldier. And we referred to that. Then we say now that in order to make progress, in order to make headway, without waiting for a system of public schools to be established in this country, we find that we have already got Dehra Dun. We say: "Go ahead with that, it has given good results". We say: "Start other Dehra Duns", which is now the subject-matter of the amendment of my Honourable friend. He says: "Start another one", and we say further that if you co-ordinate the other educational institutions, and if you get facilities for the boys in these three matters particularly with regard to which they are handicapped, that is, English, military training and physical training, we shall then have such a large field that there will be a tremendous competition, and once the number has increased, we shall get not only as good material as we are getting, but first class material, because when you have got competition for 20 vacancies or 30 vacancies, supposing you have got 1,500 candidates coming up for examination, you are able to get the best out of 1,500; if there are only 500, your field is limited. Therefore, if you will co-ordinate your general educational system and your institutions as they are being done and have been done in other countries, for instance, Canada, you will get first class material. And further we say, instead of having an eighteen months' course, as you have at Sandhurst, we will enlarge the period of the course at the Indian Sandhurst to three years, so that the boys who will enter the Indian Sandhurst will have a longer period and better opportunities of getting the most efficient training. That, Sir, is the whole scheme. We cannot separate and take one bit out of it and say, we can do this, we cannot do that, that there is this or that difficulty. It is one interdependent scheme.

Now, Sir, what have you done? That is the question. You have done nothing, and the Army Secretary has up to now simply—what shall I say—fenced, evaded and put forward lame excuses every time this question has cropped up. I, Sir, think that none of these amendments are of any use. Neither is this Resolution of any use, but I am thankful that it has given us one more opportunity of placing our views before the Government humbly, and I hope that the Army Secretary to the Government of India will realise that the time has come,—it has come, you have allowed it to pass for a long time and delayed it, and I say that there is no justification for doing so. I quite agree with the observations that fell from some of the Honourable Members. The Round Table Conference is looming large in front of us. I ask the Government of India, are you going to wait until the question is settled there? Do you think that you should not make your preparations, at any rate give effect to these recommendations without any further delay? Don't you think that, when you are before the bar of that Round Table Conference, you will get much lighter punishment than otherwise you are likely to get? Will you stand there as an accused whose guilt will be proved and who deserves the severest punishment, or will you not prepare for mitigation and palliation? It is for you to decide, but I do ask you, don't go on with these excuses.

Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya (Allahabad and Jhansi Divisions: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I entirely agree with those Honourable Members who have expressed the opinion that no more committees are wanted in this connection. I feel with my Honourable friends who have spoken about the Skeen Committee, that the recommendations of that Committee are quite clear, and that it is a matter of great regret that the Government of India have not seen their way to give effect to them. I do not agree with the view that the system of education which obtains in this country should be condemned in such an absolute fashion. I think the Sandhurst Committee did not condemn it to the extent that the remarks of some Members would indicate, but if they did, the Honourable the Secretary to the Department of Education has rightly drawn attention to a later report, the Report of the Hartog Committee, which has pointed out how much progress has been made in the direction of promoting character building in our schools and colleges and Universities during the last ten years. Not only during the last ten years, but during a much longer period, for while I am myself a severe critic of the system of education in many respects, I feel that it does not lie with any Honourable Member to say that the system of education which has prevailed in this country has not helped to build up character. I ask any man to look around the country and to say who are the people who are carrying on the administration of this country. The vast bulk of the men who are carrying on the administration in the executive departments, in the judicial departments, and in the revenue and other departments, are Indians. These Indians are men of character. It has been demonstrated and thoroughly established that they are men of character.

The judicial service is a very pure service; cases of corruption are rare exceptions, and not the rule. The executive service is also, as a whole, a pure service; exceptions are very few. I claim that we Indians have demonstrated to the world that we possess character. And let me add that that character is not mainly the result of the present system of English education. I think any one who has studied history knows that Hindus and Mussalmans have inherited great civilizations, and that these civilizations have been responsible for producing men of character among us. In that light I do not think that there is any occasion to say that suitable Indians for the Army will not be found in sufficient numbers unless you start schools like those at Dehra Dun and Jhelum. Character-training has been going on in all our educational institutions and it has developed steadily during the last few decades. Nor is it necessary, as some people think, to have public schools in this country of the type they have in England before you can train Indians as officers for the Army. It is not correct to say that the English public school system, though it is a very valuable one and I appreciate it highly, is a sine qua non for training character among our young men. In their Report the Skeen Committee say:

"While we recognise that the Indian boy has not the same advantage as the British boy who is educated and trained up under the public school system and is therefore deficient in certain matters to which reference has already been made, yet at the same time it cannot be forgotten that in countries like France, the United States and Canada there are with a few exceptions no public schools of the English model, but nevertheless they have been able to produce officers of great character who possessed great powers of leadership."

I therefore fear that too much stress is being laid upon the value of the school which has been started at Dehra Dun. I claim that the schools which exist all over the country are training young men in character as much as in the intellectual sphere; and I claim that the character which our young men display is of a sufficiently high degree to fit them for admission for training as officers for the Army.

Now, Sir, let us apply a proper test; and I venture to put forward a proposal. Let a hundred young men be picked from the public schools of England and let me and my friends here pick up a hundred young men, from Indian schools and Universities, even such as they are at present; and let them be put to a fair competitive test—intellectual, physical and any other kind of test—a test of leadership, a test of power to command, and of power to organise; and let us have the verdict of a fair body of Judges, chosen by consent of both parties, as to whether the Indian youths, even with the handicaps under which he is placed, falls far below in comparison with his English confrère. I think that is a fair test; let us select a hundred young men each from the two countries, let us put them to competitive test and let us see what the result is. I make this offer here and now. Several of our Universities have already got training corps. Though the admissions to these corps are very limited, and though I regret to say that the Government have been very niggardly providing the necessary permission and facilities for expanding these training corps, still such as they are, you find the young men who have joined the corps have been able to render a very good account of themselves. I could not better express my conviction about the value of the training which our young men receive in these corps than by making the offer which I have made; and I venture to say that you will find Indian students trained at our Universities well able to give a good account of themselves. If they fail, in a competitive test, we shall then know that they fail. At present you are indulging in assumptions and theories.

Some of my friends on the other side are very rightly proud of the public schools of England. I agree they have reason to be proud of them, but I venture to say that they attach too much weight to the value of their system and too little value to the modern system of education through which the Indian youth has been passing. The result of that education is visible in every other department of life into which the Indian has found admission. On a fair trial, it will be equally visible in the matter of selection for the Army also. But the real question is this: it is not that you want a school of the type of the one at Dehra Dun, nor will two or three such schools suffice for the needs of the country. Mr. Jinnah referred to three deficiencies in the system of education available to our young men, to which the Skeen Committee have drawn attention. First, the Indian boy is placed at a disadvantage in the matter of a knowledge of English. He has to learn all that he has to in a foreign tongue and the English boy has a great advantage over him there. The second is in the matter of physical culture, and the third, in the matter of military training. In all these three points undoubtedly the Indian boy is at a disadvantage. But we must note that we have been progressing. As regards the first, that is a permanent disadvantage. But as regards the second, the scout movement, to which the Honourable the Education Secretary has referred is a very important movement: Its value in training character cannot be over-estimated. It promotes manliness and resourcefulness in our students. It has been making rapid progress. I myself have the honour of being the Chief Scout of the Seva Samiti scouts—who number about 25,000 young men all over the country and their number is growing every day. Besides, there is the other much larger body of scouts, the Baden Powell scouts, scattered all over the country. Recently in the Magh Mela at Allahabad, where about forty lakhs of people came, 2,800 young men of the Seva Samiti scouts contributed their share in the management of the Mela to an extent which is very generously acknowledged by the officers at Allahabad. It was a mela of forty lakhs of people and it was these young men who managed it to a large extent. Therefore the scout movement has come in to give Indian students a practical training in character as it gives to the youth of other countries. Physical culture is receiving increasing attention in our schools and colleges. The only thing that is wanted is military training. What has to be done is this: introduce military drill and exercises in the colleges and schools all over the country; supply military teachers to the Universities and give them funds to start military training; give them all the facilities that they need to develop training corps and encourage them by lending your officers to give instruction in military subjects. The Skeen Committee recommended that, in order to be able to supply officers for the Army, the Universities should introduce short courses on military subjects. The Universities are ready to do so. At Benares we have built a hall for the purpose, 120 feet by 80 feet, and we are preparing to erect a shooting range. If the Government will accept the recommendations of the Skeen Committee, and make up their minds honestly to carry out these recommendations, we shall see the beginning of a new chapter. But every time this question is raised in any form, I regret to say that the Army Secretary takes up an attitude which adds irritation to the sense of injustice which we feel. In the discussion today he tried to make us believe that the recommendations of the Skeen Committee were vague or confused. I think it is very wrong of the Army Secretary to say that of the recommendations of a Committee on which some of the best Members of the Assembly, some of our most esteemed Members sat, and which was presided over by so distinguished a General as Sir Andrew Skeen

Mr. G. M. Young: On a point of personal explanation, Sir. I never referred to the recommendations as a whole; I referred to this particular recommendation only.

Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya: I accept the statement of the Army Secretary; but his remarks gave the idea that he spoke of the general recommendations of the Committee and Mr. Jinnah's remarks on that point confirmed me in that view.

Now, Sir, I ask that the Government of India should make up their minds to give effect to the recommendations of the Skeen Committee. Let them take up the recommendations point by point, and let them tell this Assembly from time to time in what respect they have given effect to these recommendations, and tell us of the progress that is made.

My Honourable friend, Mr. Jinnah, has reminded the Government Benches of the Round Table Conference. To those who want a complete change in the system of government that obtains in this country, nothing can be of greater satisfaction than the attitude of the Government of India in this matter. The whole matter has to come up before the bar of public opinion that will be represented at the Conference. It will not be confined to that Conference. Through that Conference the whole matter will be placed before the bar of the public opinion of the civilised world. What a sorry figure will the Government of India cut there! Let them imagine; let them realise what answer they will have to make when their sins of omission in this matter are pointed out; when it is stated that for decades together, for over half a century, Indians have been asking that they should be admitted to the King's Commission and that the Government of India have been putting off that request, on one pretext or another; that eventually when they were forced by a Resolution of this House to agree to a committee being appointed—a committee over which one of their own most distinguished Generals presided, and on which some very distinguished Members of this Assembly sat, the Government gave the go-by to that Report; and that every time the matter has been brought up here since, some petty excuse has been brought forward for not giving effect to the recommendations of the Committee. No one can help feeling that the Government have been trifling with us in this matter. As far as I am concerned, I have lost all hope of Government taking the right step in this matter. I feel that unless some of us, who are sitting on this side of the House, occupy seats on the other side, I mean the Treasury Benches, unless such a vital change is brought about, this question of justice to Indians in the matter of the Indianisation of the Army, will not be solved. I feel that we are all wasting our time and breath in discussing this question. A question of policy is not going to be solved by suggestions for a further Committee. When the government of this country comes into the hands of those who are really responsible to the people, then alone will there be a chance of the Indianisation of the Army being carried out. Let us work for that.

Sir Zulfiqar Ali Khan (East Central Punjab: Muhammadan): Sir, I had no idea of taking any part in this debate, but as it has developed into a very interesting one, I feel impelled to say a few words. I quite agree with what Mr. Jinnah has said that the Resolution or the amendments as they stand form a mere jumble or confused mass of words which convey no concrete idea, but the recommendations made by the Sandhurst Committee are such as to need the support of this House. Sir, the spirit underlying the recommendations of the committee is very definite, and it is this, that the Indian young man should get an opportunity to develop character, a character which will carry him through the battle of life and make him the equal of the greatest characters in the world.

Sir, Dr. Moonje demonstrated in his speech that the Indian possesses every qualification; he possesses courage, composure, coolness and resource, but what he wants is the formation of character. I think, Sir, that the Indian possesses a good deal of character. Sir, it has been shown that the Indian soldier is able to face in the battles of the Empire a storm of bullets without fear of death, and in the face of this, I ask, can anybody say that he possesses no character? This is the best test of character. The greatest ordeal is to stand before the gun without flinching and without any fear of death, and I think in this matter the Indian has shown his character and courage in abundance on the different battlefields of the Empire. The Indian has fought in all the theatres of war. He has saved India for the British; he has fought in Egypt, in China, in France; in fact he fought in all the theatres of war in the last great war. Sir, I should like to know whether there is anybody to challenge the fact that the Indian has shown courage, resource and character? What we want now is scientific training, training which has made even the smallest nation in the world able to defend its rights, and then once having got that training, the Indian, I daresay, will become invincible. (Hear, hear.) He will not only defend his own hearth and home, but he will defend right and justice in the world.

Sir, the Indian youth is now ready to fight for his own rights. He wants an opportunity for it; he wants to conquer his own inertia. So far, he has been indifferent to his own fate, but the time has come when he will forge his own destiny, and I have seen youths all over India who are not only ready but anxious to engage in the battle of life and to show to the world at large that they possess the necessary character in them.

Sir, I agree with what Mr. Jinnah has said, that the Government have not so far shown any real desire to meet the demand in India. The initiative came from the Sandhurst Committee, and the recommendations of that Committee have not yet been carried out, and so I think the House has a right to demand that the Government should carry out those recommendations in a spirit of justice and in a spirit of helpfulness, sympathy and courage. With these few words I support what Mr. Jinnah has said that the House demands that the Government should carry out the recommendations of the Indian Sandhurst Committee.

Dr. B. S. Moonje: Sir, I am sorry that the whole debate has gone off at a tangent. If you will dispassionately read the language of the Resolution, as I have moved it, and the language of the Report of the Sandhurst Committee as it is drafted, you will find that there is nothing in either from which you could draw the slightest inference indicating that the Indian boys have no character. I will only quote one little sentence in this connection from this Report:

"Yet it is hard to believe, and we do not believe, that among the three hundred million inhabitants of India there does not exist a supply of potential valuable material sufficient to provide competent Indian King's Commissioned Officers in much larger numbers than are at present forthcoming." (Page 12.)

The whole idea appears to be that we have been carried away by the word "character", appearing in the Report and my Resolution and I may again repeat that neither this Resolution nor the Indian Sandhurst Committee ever intended to convey the least idea that Indian boys have no character. What the Report says is merely this:

"It is true that, even with their present organisation and system of training, they have turned out boys who have succeeded in obtaining Commissions through Sandhurst, but those who did so started on their course of training with an unfair handicap as compared with their British Comrades."

And therefore they say that:

"The handicap must be removed as far as possible in order to obtain really first class material for India's defence." (Page 27.)

This is exactly what my Resolution provides for.

Besides, the Indian Sandhurst Committee have made certain recommendations, and as for them it was not my desire by this Resolution to raise that question for debate on the present occasion. I had reserved that point for the general budget debate. This Resolution is preparatory to giving effect to the recommendations of the Sandhurst Committee, or rather I should say that the Resolution provides for a broad based foundation on which the edifice as envisaged by the recommendations of the Report has to be built. The idea underlying the Sandhurst Committee's Report has been something like this, and it has been very nicely put by Sir Prabhakankar Pattani when he says:

"My point of view is not from the point of view of Indianisation as against Europeanisation. I am only treating it as an Imperial question. It is in the interest of the Empire itself that every component part, every limb of the Empire, should be equally strong so that no weak link or organ, no weak part of the body should be so weak as to hamper the whole of the body in the event of a greater danger."

The Resolution has been conceived from this point of view so that, a broad basis may be provided or feeder agencies may be developed to supply ample first class material for an Indian Sandhurst when it will be established in 1933 as the Report says it should be. When the time comes a few days hence, the whole question of the Indian Sandhurst will be raised, —and I want to raise the question during the general debate on the Budget,—and we shall then raise the whole question of the recommendations of the Sandhurst Committee and press on the Government that they should be given effect to immediately. This Resolution merely provides a preparatory procedure to enable the Government to give the lead to the educational authorities. The Sandhurst Committee has pointed out that the defect in our educational system is that there is no provision made for military education, military drill, physical training, rifle shooting and such other things. There is no detailed scheme before the Government as to how to give the lead in these respects and it is for this purpose that I have brought forward this Resolution. As regards the objections of my Honourable friend Sir Frank Noyce...

Mr. President: He has accepted your Resolution in principle.

Dr. B. S. Moonje: I should like to have an assurance from the Honourable Member that he has accepted my Resolution.

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: May I ask whether Sir Frank Noyce has accepted any of the amendments or whether he would merely forward them to the Local Governments and wait until he gets their replies from them?

Mr. President: He has accepted Colonel Crawford's amendment and the Revd. Mr. Chatterjee's amendment.

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: I think my Honourable friend's intention was to convey that Government would support Colonel Crawford's amendment, and if that failed they would be prepared, in the alternative, to accept the Revd. Mr. Chatterjee's amendment.

Dr. B. S. Moonje: So my Resolution does not meet with the support of my Honourable friend Sir Frank Noyce. He has told us that the matter has been dealt with by the Hartog Committee. I shall refer him to what the Committee itself says as regards their terms of reference:

"The Commission understands its terms of reference regarding education as requiring from it not a general survey of the whole field of education in all its branches and aspects throughout British India."

Therefore my point is that the aspect which this Resolution brings before this House has not been considered by the Hartog Committee.

Mr. President: The difference between you and the Government is that you want a committee and they are agreeable to a conference.

Dr. B. S. Moonje: I have said in my first speech, in moving the Resolution, that I do not think that the needs of the situation will be met by convening a conference. This aspect of the question has not been brought to the notice of the educational authorities up to now, because the Government have so far failed to give the lead in the matter as desired by the Sandhurst Committee, and my Resolution says that a Committee should be appointed consisting of men who have paid attention to this subject and who shall bring to the notice of the Government certain points of a general scheme...

The Revd. J. C. Chatterjee: May I point out that the conference will not consist merely of educational authorities, but will include representatives of the legislatures, of educational authorities and of the Army Department?

Dr. B. S. Moonje: I am sorry even that will not meet all the needs of the situation. A conference sitting at one place will not be able to give a proper lead to the provinces because local conditions in different Provinces will have to be looked into on the spot from this particular point of view. An objection has been raised about the constitutional difficulty if this committee were appointed because education is now a transferred subject. I do not know whether at the time the Hartog Committee was appointed this obstacle came in the way. If there was no obstacle at that time, there could be no obstacle now, if the Government were so minded.

As regards the object of preparing the country for undertaking the responsibility of its defence, I should like to bring to the notice of the House what other countries do in the matter, and especially what England does in this matter. Under the heading "Military efficiency in preparatory schools in England" the following questions were sent round to the Preparatory Schools for their answers:

- (1) What percentage of boys learn to shoot?
- (2) What air rifles do they use?
- (3) What miniature rifles do they use?
- (4) If you have an outdoor range, what is its length?
- (5) If you have an indoor range, what is its length?
- (6) Is shooting independently of competition popular with boys?
- (7) Do your boys compete for the preparatory school's shields?
- (8) Do they otherwise shoot against other schools?
- (9) What percentage of your boys learn physical drill?
- (10) What percentage of your boys learn military drill?"

By the by, let it be remembered that the preparatory schools in England are those schools where boys between the ages of 8 and 15 years generally receive education. 188 such schools have sent their report in response to the questionnaire on the above lines. Of these, 38 schools show 100 per cent. shooting; 16 schools show 75 per cent. shooting; 22 schools show 60 per cent. shooting and 32 schools show 50 per cent. shooting. In the average of all schools, shooting is 60 per cent. Out of these 188 schools, 98 schools in all have military drill. Out of these 98 schools, 79 schools have cent. per cent. military drill. In the average 92.6 per cent. of schools have military drill. The average number of boys in each school is about 500. Thus it will be seen that thousands of boys in England receive preliminary military training. This is what is being done in England to prepare the whole country for undertaking the responsibility of its defence. This Resolution of mine is intended to bring about a similar situation in India. There is one more point and that is about the amendment of my friend Munshi Iswar Saran. Unfortunately the whole of my Resolution did not appear at that time in the ballot. The first portion did appear and the second portion did not. The second portion along with the first, which has been balloted in the name of my friend Mr. Sarabhai Haji runs as follows:

"That in the meantime a residential military school be established on the model of Jhelum and Jullunder as early as possible where provision should be made for accommodation of not less than 500 Indian students from all provinces and fees be fixed at not more than from Rs. 25 to Rs. 50 per month per boy for boarding, lodging and tuition."

I have therefore to say that I am in favour of the addition to my Resolution of the proposal of my friend Munshi Iswar Saran, and I should like to know if it can be added on to my Resolution at this stage. (Ironical Cheers).

Sir, under the circumstances, I press for my Resolution and I am prepared to take the verdict of the House.

Mr. President: I propose to put Munshi Iswar Saran's amendment first. Then, if that fails, I propose to put either Colonel Crawford's or the Revd. Mr. Chatterjee's amendment. I think it will be convenient from the Government point of view if I put Colonel Crawford's amendment. So I will take up Colonel Crawford's amendment second. If that fails, I will take up the Revd. Mr. Chatterjee's amendment and, last of all, I will take up Mr. Acharya's amendment.

The question is:

"That for the original Resolution the following be substituted:-"

"This Assembly recommends to the Governor General in Council that in view of the remarks made by the Indian Sandhurst Committee about the present system of education in India, he be pleased, by way of a beginning, to establish without any unnecessary delay an all-India residential military school at a suitable and central place capable of accommodating at least 500 Indian boys of all castes and creeds at the lowest possible rate of fees for tuition, board and lodging for the purpose of providing a steady supply of suitable material for training and recruitment as Army Officers."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. President: I will now put Colonel Crawford's amendment.

The question is:

"That for the original Resolution the following be substituted:-"

"This Assembly recommends to the Governor General in Council to take early steps to examine the present system of education in India with the object of remedying the defective character training of the system as emphasised and brought to the public notice by the Indian Sandhurst Committee with a view to the removal of these defects in the system for the purpose of providing a steady flow of really first-class material for recruitment to the public services including the service of defence."

RESOLUTION RE MEDICAL RESEARCH.

Mr. President: I understand the next Resolution is not a controversial one.

Mr. M. R. Jayakar (Bombay City: Non-Muhammadan Urban): That depends on the attitude taken up by the Government. I expect it will not be controversial so far as I understand.

Sir Frank Noyce (Secretary, Department of Education, Health and Lands): I think I shall be in a position to meet the Honourable Member more than half way.

Mr. M. R. Jayakar: Sir, I beg to move the Resolution which stands in my name and which reads as follows:-

"This Assembly recommends to the Governor General in Council (a) to appoint a committee with a non-official majority and an adequate representation of the independent medical profession to inquire into and report on the following points, and (b) to hold over the proposed transfer of the Medical Research Institute, Kasauli, to the Chandbagh building at Dehra Dun till this Committee's Report is considered by the Assembly:

- (1) The most suitable University centre for the establishment of the Central Medical Research Institute;
- (2) The constitution of the Governing Body of the Indian Research Fund Association; and
- (3) Recruitment for the Medical Research Department."

I shall not take long to explain the purpose of this Resolution. It is intended to voice forth the discontent which has been felt, not only by the independent medical profession in India but also by the several Universities and by the non-official section of the people in general at the decision of the Government of India to locate the Medical Research Institute at a hill station like Dehra Dun. Attempts have been made to draw the attention of the Government of India after time to the discontent that the decision has caused, and to the desire of the people in this country that this Medical Institute, which is intended for the carrying on of medical research, should be located at a place like Calcutta, Bombay or any other important University centre, where there is an independent medical public opinion which could focus its light of criticism on the working of this institution and also bring it into intimate contact with the activities of the independent medical profession. I am therefore asking the Government of India to hold their hand. It is a very small request indeed that they should hold their hands until the whole question is examined de novo by a committee. I do not care whether this examination is made by a committee or by any other equally representative body; that is a matter of detail. But what I want is that the independent medical profession and also the non-official opinion in the country should have an opportunity to examine this question. By non-officials, let me at once say, I do not necessarily mean politicians, but there is a considerable number of scientific men in this country, and some of them are very distinguished, who may look into this matter. The names of two or three such men at once occur to me, I mean Sir C. V. Raman, and Sir Jagadis Chandra Bose. I am anxious that scientific men who have been carrying on research in this country for 20 or 30 years should have a chance of examining this question with absolute impartiality and of deciding whether Dehra Dun or any other hill station is the proper place where this Medical Research Institute should be established, or whether a University place like Bombay or Calcutta will not be more suitable for the purpose. I am therefore asking the Government of India to give this chance to us in order that such men may consider the question once more and determine what is the proper place to locate this institution at.

Secondly, what is to be the constitution of the Governing Body of the Indian Medical Research Fund and lastly how is recruitment to the Medical Research Department to be made. These questions too will be considered by the Committee. I do hope that the Government of India will see the reasonableness of my view that this question should be considered by qualified and disinterested persons in the light of the opposition raised in the country. The question has so far been decided by the experts of the Government of India and by official or semi-official persons. I am anxious that, having regard to the far-reaching consequences of the location of this Medical Research Institute, the whole question should be examined once more by an independent Committee on which non-official Indian medical opinion will be adequately represented, and also the scientific expert opinion in the country. I do hope the Government of India will accept my Resolution.

Sir Frank Noyce: Sir, in view of the fact that, as I have already stated, I am in a position to meet the Honourable the Mover of this Resolution at least somewhere about half way, it is unnecessary for me to take up the time of the House to the extent that I should otherwise have had to do if that had not been the case. I am in entire agreement with him in the view that the location of the Central Medical Research Institute is a matter of the utmost importance. It is not a matter in regard to which we can afford to make any mistakes. Those who, like myself, have had the misfortune to travel to Pusa from time to time to visit the headquarters of agricultural research in India, know what an unwise location means. The view of the Honourable Member was also that of the Committee on the Organisation of Medical Research in India, which pointed out that a wrong choice could not fail to have far-reaching consequences on the future of medical research in this country. So, Sir, we are all in agreement that the location of this institution is a matter of the greatest importance.

Sir, I will not take longer than I can help, but it is, I venture to think, necessary to explain the circumstances in which Dehra Dun was chosen, for the benefit of those Members of this House who are not fully acquainted with the position. The Committee on the Organisation of Medical Research under the Government of India, now commonly known as the Fletcher Committee, consisted of four members. The Chairman of the Committee was Sir Walter Fletcher, a very eminent scientist in England, who is Secretary of the Medical Research Council of Great Britain and a Fellow of the Royal Society. The members of the Committee were Colonel James, a retired Indian Medical Service Officer, who is now Medical Officer and Adviser on Tropical Diseases in the Ministry of Health, London, Dr. Row, Professor of Pathology in the Grant Medical College, Bombay and Colonel Christophers, I.M.S., also a Fellow of the Royal Society, who is Director of the Central Research Institute at Kasauli. I venture to point out, Sir, that this Committee consisted of officials and non-officials and was therefore a Committee of the type advocated by Mr. Jayakar. I would go even further and say that it contained a majority of non-officials. Sir Walter Fletcher was as obviously a non-official as Colonel Christophers was an official. The other two members come in a rather doubtful category, but I personally consider that they should both be classed as non-officials. Dr. Row, though he is employed by Government, is, I understand, an independent medical practitioner. It is some ten years since Colonel James left India and the official atmosphere, so far as he is concerned, must have weakened considerably since then. I do not think it can be held that this Committee started with any bias in favour of a particular place. Colonel Christophers might have been prejudiced in favour of Kasauli and Dr. Row in favour of Bombay, but these two factors would naturally cancel out. Colonel James, if he had any predilection, would have been in favour of Madras where I believe he started his Indian career.

Now, Sir, the Committee laid down certain principles on which, in their view, the decision as to the location of this institution should be based. As regards the functions of the institution in relation to medical research in India as a whole, their view was that provided the Institute was reasonably accessible from the different parts of India and was reasonably near the winter and summer headquarters of the Government of India, it did not much matter where it was. But after a careful examination of the lines of medical research which would be pursued in it, they came to somewhat different conclusions. They held that, on the whole, it would be preferable to locate the Institute away from the large centres of population with their pressing every-day problems and away too from places where the climate during the greater part of the year made intensive thought and sustained effort difficult or impossible. It was only after the most careful consideration of all the various possibilities, that they came to a decision in favour of Dehra Dun. As will be seen from a reference to their Report, they discussed Bangalore, Bombay, Calcutta, Delhi, Dehra Dun, Kasauli, Madras, Nasik, Poona and Simla. In view of the claims which have been advanced from time to time in favour of the selection of Bombay or Calcutta, to which the Honourable the Mover of this Resolution has referred, it seems desirable to give in their own words the arguments against the location of the Institute in either of these cities. They pointed out that:

"The claims advanced for selecting Bombay are chiefly that it contains a wealth of clinical material, two medical colleges and the Haffkine Institute, some of the buildings of which could perhaps be utilised. It is strongly urged that medical research and medical education should go hand in hand. These and other reasons advanced relate almost exclusively to clinical research. We have recommended that this item of medical research should be arranged for by a 'Section' of the research organisation based on the central headquarters but with the members of the Section working in, and attached to, suitable hospitals, colleges or other institutions in the large cities. Apart altogether from the claims of basic research stated above in our remarks on general principles, we think it would be a mistake to locate a second institution in a city where an excellent provincial institute (the Haffkine Institute) has already been established."

They added that the objections to Bombay applied equally to Calcutta and Madras. For the reasons which led the Committee to decide in favour of Dehra Dun, I would again refer the House to their Report. I may briefly say that they were, the proximity of Dehra Dun to the headquarters of the Government of India, the fact that they considered it a centre of scientific, technical and educational activities under the Government of India and likely to become more so in the near future, the availability of ample accommodation and of buildings which could be taken over from the Forest College—a consideration of very obvious financial importance—and also suitable climatic conditions. I submit to the House, Sir, that, in view of the recommendations of this Committee, the competence of which to deal with the subject can hardly be doubted, and also the approval of the Standing Finance Committee, which was given to the proposals placed before it in August, 1928, the Government of India were justified in going on with the scheme. As the Honourable Sir Fazl-i-Husain stated in the Council of State in September last, various representations against the location of the Institute at Dehra Dun were made from time to time and were given the most careful consideration. He also stated at that time that the Government's decision remained in favour of Dehra Dun. Since then, however, I must explain to the House, fresh aspects of the case have come to the notice of the Government, and I am sure the Honourable the Mover of the Resolution will be glad to hear that Government are no longer prepared to regard the location of the Institute at Dehra Dun as a closed chapter. (Cheers.) The continued opposition to the selection of Dehra Dun, which has culminated in this Resolution today, is only one of those aspects.

I wish to be perfectly frank with the House and explain what the present position is. Another factor in bringing about the decision of the Government not to regard the location at Dehra Dun as a closed Chapter is the fact that the scheme, which will eventually come before them for consideration, will probably not be the scheme that met with the approval of the Standing Finance Committee. The Fletcher Committee recommended that the manufacture of sera and vaccines, which is carried out at Kasauli, should be transferred to the new Medical Research Institute at Dehra Dun. In the proposals which were submitted to the Standing Finance Committee, it was stated that it was intended to retain these activities at Kasauli for three reasons. The first was that Kasauli was climatically better adapted to the purpose than Dehra Dun. The second was that research and manufacture are best kept apart, and the third was that it was hoped that, by adding a section for the standardisation of drugs to Kasauli, it could be made a self-contained and a commercially successful undertaking. Unfortunately, when those views were put forward, General Graham, the Public Health Commissioner with the Government of India and Colonel Christophers, the Director of the Central Research Institute, Kasauli, who is obviously very keenly interested in the matter, were absent on leave. They have expressed grave doubts as to the wisdom of retaining the manufacture of sera and vaccines in a different place from the main activities of the Central Research Institute, and it is obviously desirable that their views should be given the most careful consideration.

Then there is the question of residential accommodation at Dehra Dun. When these proposals were placed before the Standing Finance Committee, it was anticipated that there would be no difficulty in finding residential accommodation for the staff of the Institute in Dehra Dun itself. There again, anticipations do not appear likely to be realised, as Dehra Dun is rapidly becoming congested, and it seems fairly clear that, if the Central Medical Research Institute is located there, it will be necessary to build accommodation for its staff. So, Sir, these are the reasons why the Government have not made up their minds definitely about the location of the Institute at Dehra Dun. I am sorry again for the second time this afternoon that I have to oppose the appointment of a committee. It does not seem that such a committee would be in a position to elicit any evidence which is not already before the Government. The arguments in favour of Dehra Dun are contained in the Fletcher Committee's Report. Those against it have been very powerfully stated in the representations which have been made from time to time to Government from various quarters. I should like to say in passing that no unanimity has been shown in the opposition, and that we seem to be as far as ever from being able to decide where the Institute should be located if it is not located at Dehra Dun. But that is by the way.

Now, Sir, I come again to what the Government are prepared to do, and I trust it will meet with the approval of the Honourable the Mover of this Resolution. They consider it desirable that our expert advisers, the Public Health Commissioner with the Government of India and the Director of the Central Medical Research Institute, Kasauli, should submit, as soon as possible, their considered views and revised proposals regarding the cost and activities of the Institute if it is located at Dehra Dun. A good deal of work has already been done in that connection and it does seem desirable that the Government should know exactly where they stand and what the cost would be if the proposals for the location of this Institute at Dehra Dun are eventually accepted. I hasten to reassure my Honourable friend opposite by telling him that practically nothing has been spent on Dehra Dun so far. To the best of my knowledge, the only amount that the proposed transfer has actually cost Government, so far, is the small allowance which has been made to Colonel Christophers for some months past for the work he has done, in addition to his very heavy duties at Kasauli, in preparing plans and estimates and in going into the question of equipment for a Central Medical Research Institute. Now, Sir, on receipt of the proposals of their expert advisers, the Government of India propose to convene a conference consisting of a representative of each of the Medical Faculties at Madras, Bombay, Calcutta,

[Sir Frank Noyce.]

Lucknow and Lahore, the Director General of Indian Medical Services, the Public Health Commissioner with the Government of India, the Director of the Central Medical Research Institute, Kasauli, two Members of the Legislative Assembly, one Member of the Council of State, one non-official non-medical scientist of eminence, and one representative of the All-India Medical Association which, Government understand, is the most influential representative Association of non-official medical practitioners in India. Over this conference it will be my lot, if I am still Secretary in the Department at the time, to preside. The conference would submit its recommendations and suggestions to Government, and I need hardly say that the Government would give them their fullest and most careful consideration.

The House will see that the consideration of the question will be entrusted to a body on which officials would be in a minority. To that conference Government are also willing to refer for consideration the two other questions which have been raised in the Resolution, namely, the constitution of the Governing Body of the Indian Research Fund Association and the question of recruitment to the Medical Research Department. The Government have already taken steps to meet the demand for making the Governing Body of the Indian Research Fund Association a far less official body than it was. It consisted until recently of the Honourable Member in charge of the Department who was President, the Secretary in the Department, the Director General of the Indian Medical Service, the Public Health Commissioner with the Government of India, the Director of the Central Medical Research Institute, Kasauli, the Director, Malarial Survey of India, the Assistant Director General, Indian Medical Service, and the Raja of Parlakimedi, who was a member by reason of the very generous donation he gave to the funds of the Indian Research Fund Association. Now the Government of India, realising that it is desirable that this body should be enlarged—and I have no doubt Honourable Members on the other side would say, liberalised—by an infusion of non-official medical and other enlightened opinion, have decided that it should consist of—I am sorry to have to repeat a list of names—the Secretary in the Department, the Director General, Indian Medical Service, the Public Health Commissioner with the Government of India, the Director of the Public Health Institute, Calcutta, the Director-in-Chief of the Medical Research Institute at Dehra Dun or for the time being of course, Kasauli, the Director of the Malarial Survey of India, the Raja of Parlakimedi, an eminent non-medical representative nominated by the Governor General, two representatives elected by the Legislative Assembly, one representative elected by the Council of State, and two representatives of medical faculties of Universities incorporated by law in India elected by such medical faculties: total fourteen, of whom seven are officials and seven are non-officials. That decision was announced by the Honourable Sir Fazl-i-Hussain in the Council of State last Autumn, and the Council of State proceeded to elect its representative. Unfortunately time did not permit of this House being asked to do the same, but I hope to move a motion to that effect in the course of the next few weeks. I will refer to that point again later. The Inter-University Board has also been asked to elect its representative. As I have said, this reorganisation will make the governing body consist of seven officials and seven non-officials, which I venture to think is a suitable composition for a body which is charged with the administration of large funds from Central revenues. I am aware, however, that even as it has been re-constituted, its constitution does not entirely meet with the views of some Honourable Members opposite, and as I have said, Government are quite willing to allow this question to be considered by the conference which they propose to call. I trust, however, that the House will have no objection to proceeding, in respect of the constitution of the Governing Body, on the lines we have already proposed, and that it will elect two representatives in due course. Obviously, if the conference, when constituted, recommends a different constitution and, if that view is accepted, steps will be taken to alter it, but in the meantime, it would I think be a matter of great regret from the point of view of Government, if this House did not decide at once to take part in the activities of the Governing Body of the Indian Research Fund Association.

Then I come to the third point, Sir, on which, as it is getting late, I will not detain the House much longer. That is, the question of the constitution and equipment of the Recruitment Board. There again I hardly think I need read to the House the personnel of the Board as it is at present constituted because that question will also be referred to the conference when it meets. The Recruitment Board, as I think the House is already aware, is to be set up for the selection of candidates for the Medical Research Department, and it is proposed to give it a non-official element, the particulars of which I regret I seem to have been mislaid for the moment.

Some Honourable Members: That will do.

Sir Frank Noyce: Then, Sir, that is the position, and I can only hope that the Honourable the Mover of this Resolution will agree that I have fulfilled my promise to meet him more than half way.

Sir Darcy Lindsay (Bengal: European): Sir, my Honourable friend, Sir Frank Noyce, has particularly stressed the point that the Standing Finance Committee gave their approval to this scheme of location at Dehra Dun. I have in my hand the paper that was placed before the Standing Finance Committee, and it was no particular demand for funds for the purpose, but a paper for mere information. I think the charge will largely be met out of the funds in the hands of the Indian Research Fund Association.

Sir Frank Noyce: May I ask the Honourable Member which meeting of the Standing Finance Committee he is referring to?

Sir Darcy Lindsay: The meeting of 29th August, 1928. The block expenditure item, I think, was put down as Rs. 9 lakhs of which Rs. 6 lakhs was for alterations in the buildings that were to be taken over from the Forest Department; and on the same paper, Sir, the Committee had to deal with a grant from the Rockefeller Fund for the erection of a Hygiene College in Calcutta. I think it was that item that was paid most attention to, because, unless it was settled then and there, the money might not be awarded for this purpose. I am very glad indeed to hear from my Honourable friend that this question of location at Dehra Dun is still an open question.

Mr. M. A. Jinnah (Bombay City: Muhammadan Urban): I am very sorry, Sir, to detain the House at a late hour, but this is a very important question. The Honourable Member, Sir Frank Noyce, started by saying that he was willing to meet half way the Mover of the Resolution (An Honourable Member: "More than half way.") I stand corrected. But I do not see where he has met him.

Mr. President: I think it would be much more convenient to have a general debate on this question. The House stands adjourned till Tuesday morning at 11 o'clock.

The Assembly then adjourned till Eleven of the Clock on Tuesday, the 11th February, 1930.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

Tuesday, 11th February, 1930.

The Assembly met in the Assembly Chamber of the Council House at Eleven of the Clock, Mr. President in the Chair.

MEMBERS SWORN:

Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh, M.L.A. (Muzaffarpur cum Champaran: Non-Muhammadan);

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad, C.I.E., M.L.A. (United Provinces Southern Division: Muhammadan Rural); and

Mr. Girja Shankar Bajpai, C.I.E., C.B.E., M.L.A. (Joint Secretary, Department of Education, Health and Lands).

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

ISSUE OF TREASURY BILLS.

259. Mr. Arthur Moore: (a) Will Government be pleased to state the total cost of discounting the Treasury Bills issued during the current financial year?

(b) Are Government aware that the continued issue of Treasury Bills is affecting the Government security market?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: (a) The amount of the discount on Treasury Bills issued between the 1st April 1929 and the 28th January 1930, is about Rs. 131 lakhs.

(b) This is to some extent a matter of opinion. I think myself that the question implies an exaggerated idea of the effect of rates paid to the money market for floating supplies during the busy season on the investment market in long-term Government securities. In any case, it is certainly not the fact that the Government issues of Treasury Bills have been the sole or indeed the main factor affecting the recent course of prices for Government rupee securities. This has been far more affected by the fall in the price of Indian sterling securities, and that was brought about first, by the wave of dear money by which all world markets were affected last year, and secondly, by the anxiety felt by British investors as to political conditions in India, which anxiety was undoubtedly accentuated by the doctrines preached at the recent Lahore Congress about the repudiation of loans. I need hardly say that these doctrines are not taken seriously by any responsible people in India.

SEPARATION OF RAILWAY AND GENERAL FINANCE.

260. Mr. B. Das: (a) Will Government be pleased to state if the Report of the Committee appointed for separation of Railway finance from General finance, will be available before the Railway Budget is presented?

(b) If the reply to part (a) be in the negative, will Government be pleased to state:

(i) The number of meetings held so far;

(ii) The stage of discussion at present; and

(iii) The time and the number of sittings required to complete the deliberation?

(c) Do Government propose to ask the House to reappoint new members in place of those already resigned from this Committee?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: (a) No.

(b) (i) Two meetings of the full Committee, and one of the Sub-Committee appointed by the Committee to examine in detail certain specific questions, were held in 1929.

(ii) Certain memoranda prepared by the Financial Commissioner have been circulated, but only preliminary discussions have so far taken place.

(iii) I am afraid it is impossible to say how long the Committee will take to complete its deliberations.

(c) That question is under consideration.

Mr. B. Das: Is the Honourable gentleman aware that he had exceeded the period of contract by three more years, and may I inquire if the Finance Member is going to take over the railway management and include its Budget under the general finance?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: I think the Honourable Member is under a misapprehension in suggesting that the original convention was established for a period of three years only. That is not so.

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: Is it a fact that Government agreed that the question might be re-examined after three years?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: I do not remember the precise period, Sir; but I do remember that at the time the convention was originally settled, the Government agreed that, if the House expressed a desire to review it, it should be reviewed.

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: Is the Honourable Member aware that, since 1927, the House has repeatedly expressed a desire to review the separation?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: Yes, Sir, by the appointment of a Committee.

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: How long does the Honourable Member expect that the work of this Committee will take?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: I have already said that I regret I am not in a position to say how long the Committee will take to complete its deliberations.

Mr. B. Das: May I inquire if it is not within the scope of the Committee's inquiry that railway finance should again come under the complete control of the Finance Member and form part of the general finances?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: The whole question of the convention is before the Committee and it is of course for the Committee to say what changes it considers desirable in the convention.

Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh: Was no time limit put before the Committee for the completion of its labours?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: No, Sir.

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: Why were so few meetings held last year?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: I do not think it is desirable that I should make any further statement on this question at present.

PROSECUTIONS UNDER THE INDIAN STATES (PROTECTION AGAINST DISAFFECTION) ACT.

261. Mr. B. Das: (a) Will Government be pleased to state the number of persons prosecuted under the Indian States (Protection against Disaffection) Act, 1922, since that Act was placed on the Statute-book?

(b) How many of these were editors of newspapers and how many were publishers of books or pamphlets?

(c) Will Government be pleased to state, in each case, the punishment awarded under section 3 of that Act?

Mr. E. B. Howell: I would refer the Honourable Member to the answer given to Dr. Moonje's question No. 233 on the 5th February, 1930, which gives the information required.

THE KANGRA VALLEY RAILWAY.

262. Mr. B. Das: (a) Has the attention of Government been drawn to a statement made by Mr. S. C. Sharma, an assistant engineer of the Punjab Public Works Department, before the Mandi Hydro-Electric Inquiry Committee, that the Kangra Valley Railway was originally a scheme of light railway simply to help the development of the hydro-electric scheme?

(b) Is it a fact that the original estimate was only Rs. 96 lakhs and formed part of the Mandi hydro-electric project?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: (a) Yes. Government have seen the statement, which does not correctly represent the facts. The reasons which prompted Government to undertake the construction of the Kangra Valley Railway are as stated in part (6) of the reply given to Mr. Hays's starred question No. 203, on 5th September 1929.

(b) The original estimate for the Kangra Valley Railway was Rs. 134 lakhs; it did not form part of the Mandi hydro-electric project.

COST OF THE KANGRA VALLEY RAILWAY SCHEME.

263. Mr. B. Das: (a) Will Government be pleased to state at what stage the Punjab Government entered into correspondence with the Railway Board regarding the Kangra Valley Railway scheme and if the original estimates of the Punjab Government were available to the Railway Board?

(b) What was the cost of:

(i) First estimate?

(ii) Revised estimate?

(iii) Final expenditure of the Railway Board?

(c) At what stage of progress of the Kangra Valley Railway scheme, did Government come to know that their original estimates would be more than doubled?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: (a) In June 1923 the Railway Board received a letter from Colonel Battye, Superintending Engineer, Hydro-Electric Circle, Public Works Department, Punjab, inquiring whether the broad gauge connection between Mukerian and Talwara was likely to be constructed in the near future; if so, it would not be necessary for him to include this section of the line in his estimate for a metre-gauge railway connecting Talwara with the site of the proposed hydro-electric power station in Mandi State. The estimates for this tramway framed by the Punjab Government were available to the North Western Railway, who prepared the estimates for the Kangra Valley Railway.

(b) (i) Rs. 134 lakhs.

(ii) Rs. 217.46 lakhs.

(iii) The final expenditure will probably be in the neighbourhood of Rs. 310 lakhs.

(c) In June 1928.

Mr. B. Das: May I inquire if the estimate of Colonel Battye for the metre-gauge railway was not Rs. 96 lakhs?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: I am afraid I have not got the figure; I can obtain it for the Honourable Member.

LOSSES ON THE KANGRA VALLEY RAILWAY SCHEME.

264. Mr. B. Das: (a) Will Government be pleased to state what were the reasons that led them to agree to recover only "actual loss due to construction and working up to a maximum of Rs. 4 lakhs per annum for 13 years" (App. XVI, Page 210, Vol. I, Public Accounts Committee's Report 1928-29) from the Punjab Government?

(b) Will Government be pleased to state if the Punjab Government have so far refunded "the actual loss due to construction" in excess of the original estimates, and if so, what is the amount recovered?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: (a) Rs. 4 lakhs was the amount that it was estimated that the net earnings of the line were likely to fall short of the interest on capital cost.

(b) So far, the Punjab Government have refunded nothing. The Kangra Valley Railway was only opened during the current financial year, and until the accounts of the year are closed, it will not be possible to ascertain what the net earnings have amounted to and what the actual loss is, if any.

ESTIMATES FOR THE KANGRA VALLEY RAILWAY SCHEME.

265. Mr. B. Das: (a) Will Government be pleased to state if the Railway Board inquiry into defective estimates of the Kangra Valley Railway as mentioned in the Public Accounts Committee's Report, Page 23,

Vol. I of 1928-29, has been completed, and if so, will Government be pleased to make a statement on:

(i) The findings of the Committee; and

(ii) The decision of the Railway Board on the Committee's report?

(b) Did Colonel Battye, the initiator of the Kangra Valley Hydro-Electric scheme interview the Railway Board officials at the time, and did he persuade the Railway Board regarding the profitability of the Kangra Valley Railway scheme?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: (a) The inquiry has not yet been completed.

(b) Colonel Battye was present at meetings which representatives of the Punjab Government had with the Railway Board in 1925. He cannot have persuaded the Railway Board that the Kangra Valley Railway was likely to be profitable, or the latter would not have demanded a guarantee from the Punjab Government.

QUARTERS FOR PRESS EMPLOYEES ON PARLIAMENT STREET.

266. Mr. E. F. Sykes: (a) Is it the intention of Government that the extension of Parliament Street beyond Barakhamba is to be ultimately the main artery connecting the new city with the old?

(b) If the answer to part (a) is in the affirmative, did Government consider the question of an appropriate frontage in their building scheme along that road?

(c) What were the considerations which led to the location on that road of quarters for the accommodation of workmen employed in the Government of India Press?

(d) Did the Government of India consult the convenience of those Press employees and their families who will be required to live in the immediate proximity of a busy thoroughfare? If so, to what extent?

(e) Will Government be pleased to state whether they contemplate any changes designed to utilise this frontage in a manner suitable to its importance?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: (a) The reply is in the negative.

(b) Does not arise.

(c) The location of the quarters referred to on the road in question was part of the general layout of the Press and the surrounding buildings.

(d) Before deciding on a site, Government did consult the convenience of the Press employees, and their families, and actually chose this site in order to meet wishes, which had been expressed by the employees themselves, that the Press and its attached quarters in which they would be required to live, should be situated near Delhi city.

CLERKS ATTACHED TO REGIMENTS.

267. Sardar Bahadur Captain Hira Singh Brar: (a) What is the total strength of clerks for each regiment and what are the instructions, if any, to Commanding Officers regarding the recruitment of such soldier clerks?

(b) Is it a fact that most of the regimental clerks are drawn from non-military classes, although plenty of young men belonging to martial communities are available for these appointments?

Mr. G. M. Young: (a) The authorised peace establishment of clerks for an Indian cavalry regiment or an active Indian infantry battalion is 10. All classes are eligible for appointment to the clerical establishment, but the practice is to give preference to the sons and other descendants of those who have actually served in the Army, provided that they possess the necessary qualifications.

(b) The Government have no information on this point. To verify the Honourable Member's allegation would involve an expenditure of time and labour which, in their opinion, would be disproportionate to the result.

CLERKS ATTACHED TO REGIMENTS.

268. Sardar Bahadur Captain Hira Singh Brar: (a) Will Government be pleased to state the total number of clerks at present serving in the following units, specifying the number drawn from classes that are not entitled to enlist in those regiments respectively:

2-9th Jat Infantry.

17th Cavalry.

18th Cavalry.

19th Cavalry?

(b) Do Recruiting Officers maintain a register of candidates belonging to martial communities qualified to serve as clerks?

(c) If the answer to part (b) is in the negative, have Government considered the question of the desirability of issuing instructions to ensure that arrangements are made to supply clerks belonging to military classes to different units?

Mr. G. M. Young: (a) The information is being obtained and will be furnished to the Honourable Member in due course.

(b) No, Sir, as the enrolment of clerks in peace time is not normally carried out by recruiting officers. Recruiting officers maintain a register of persons suitable for clerical employment on mobilisation, but this register is not confined to the classes recruited for the Indian Army, or to any other classes.

(c) Government do not think it necessary or desirable to issue instructions in the sense suggested.

EDUCATION OF THE SONS OF INDIAN SOLDIERS IN THE SOUTH EAST PUNJAB AND DELHI PROVINCE.

269. Sardar Bahadur Captain Hira Singh Brar: Is there any school in the South East Punjab for the education of the sons of Indian soldiers like those at Jullundur and Jhelum? If not, have Government considered the question of the desirability of making suitable provision for the sons of Indian soldiers in the South East Punjab and Delhi Province, to be educated together?

Mr. G. M. Young: There is no such school at present. It is hoped, however, to open a military school at Ajmer in 1930 for the education of Jat and Rajput boys. This school will take the place of the proposed school at Agra, to which I referred in my speech in this House on the 14th March 1929.

HOLIDAYS IN THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA SECRETARIAT.

270. Mr. Abdul Latif Sahib Farookhi (a) With reference to the reply given by the Honourable the Home Member to Sardar Kartar Singh's starred question No. 756 in the Legislative Assembly on the 24th September, 1929, will Government please state whether they have arrived at any decision in connection with the grant of more holidays in the Government of India Secretariat? If so, will they please communicate their decision to the House?

(b) If the reply to part (a) of this question is in the negative, will Government please state the reasons for the delay in arriving at any decision?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: (a) Yes. A copy of the orders has been placed in the Library of the House.

(b) Does not arise.

APPOINTMENT OF MUSLIMS IN THE OFFICE OF THE INDUSTRIAL SURVEYOR, DELHI PROVINCE.

271. Maulvi Sayyid Murtuza Saheb Bahadur: (a) Will Government be pleased to state the number of clerks employed under the Industrial Surveyor, Delhi Province?

(b) To what communities do they belong?

(c) Is it a fact that a post of Statistical Assistant under the Industrial Surveyor was sanctioned in 1929?

(d) Is it a fact that this post was also offered to a non-Muslim and that the claims of the Muslims were totally disregarded in this connection?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: (a) Two clerks are employed under the Industrial Surveyor, Delhi Province.

(b) The clerks are Hindus.

(c) Yes, as an experimental measure for one year. The appointment is included in (a) above.

(d) The post was offered to two Muhammadans and one Hindu, but the former two did not accept the terms.

RECRUITMENT OF MEMBERS OF MINORITY COMMUNITIES.

272. Maulvi Sayyid Murtuza Saheb Bahadur: (a) What steps do Government propose to take in order to ensure that the orders of the Government of India regarding special recruitment of minority communities are acted up to by the Local Administrations?

(b) Will Government be pleased to lay on the table a copy of the Government of India's Memorandum No. 176-25-Establishment, Home Department, dated the 5th February, 1926?

ACCOUNTS OF STATE RAILWAY COLLIERIES.

275. *Mr. B. Das: (a) Will Government be pleased to state when they propose to commercialise the accounts of State Railway collieries?

(b) Have the Company-managed railways been asked to commercialise accounts of their own collieries?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: I would invite the Honourable Member's attention to the Memorandum placed before the Standing Finance Committee for Railways on the subject of the system of accounting on railway collieries, recorded in the proceedings of the meeting of the Standing Finance Committee for Railways, Volume VI, No. 3. This contains the conclusions of the Railway Board on Sir Arthur Dickinson's recommendations on the subject.

ACCOUNTS OF COLLIERIES OF THE BENGAL NAGPUR RAILWAY.

276. *Mr. B. Das: With reference to the recommendations of the Public Accounts Committee 1928-29, page 23, para 70, as contained in the following lines:

" * * * Our attention has been called to the fact that the increase in expenditure on fuel on the Bengal Nagpur Railway is not due to increased consumption but to higher cost of coal ", * * * "

" We think that the collieries of the company should be treated as an independent commercial undertaking and that the price charged to the Railways should be a competitive commercial price. This means that a system of proper commercial accounts should be introduced on all collieries worked by Railways and that the loss or profit in working such collieries should be shown separately. "

will Government be pleased to state:

(a) if the Bengal Nagpur Railway have agreed to commercialise its colliery accounts?

(b) if it is going to work out its fuel cost on a "competitive commercial price" for all coal used?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: As will be seen from the Memorandum referred to in the last question, the Railway Board thought it undesirable to treat collieries as an independent commercial undertaking, but the question will be reconsidered in the light of the opinion expressed by the Public Accounts Committee.

REPORT OF THE INDIAN CENTRAL COMMITTEE.

277. *Mr. B. Das: With reference to my starred question No. 187 of the 29th January, 1930, will Government be pleased to state:

(a) If the first print of the Central Committee's Report published in London was destroyed?

(b) If copies supplied to members of the Central Committee were taken back?

(c) If the Secretary of State for India wired to the Government of India to expunge certain passages from their Indian edition?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: (a), (b) and (c). The Honourable Member is possibly under some misapprehension of the position of the Government of India in regard to the Central Committee's Report. That Report was formally presented to His Excellency the Governor General and was submitted by him to the Secretary of State for the purpose of presentation to Parliament. The function of the Government of India was limited to printing and distributing the papers received by it after formal presentation. The Indian Central Committee presented a signed copy of the Report in print to His Excellency and also sent Government a few spare copies. In order to avoid delay in publication simultaneously in England and in India which had been decided upon, the Government of India arranged to reprint from these spare copies received from the Indian Central Committee, but meanwhile received a caution from the Secretary of State to omit from the reprint two brief incidental passages which were thought likely to give offence in foreign countries and in whose omission their authors had concurred. The Members of the Indian Central Committee, who had received copies of the earlier print, have been asked to return them. The intention is that the first print should be destroyed.

Mr. M. A. Jinnah: May I know whether the Government of India did not think it right to leave those passages even to be judged by the public of this country?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: The Government of India was not concerned with the contents of the documents connected with the Committee's Report. As I have already explained, our function was strictly limited to printing and distributing the papers.

Mr. M. A. Jinnah: Will the Government of India represent to the authority that decided to expunge those passages that it was most undesirable for them to have done so and that they should have left it to the public of this country to judge?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: No, Sir; we have no locus standi whatever in the matter.

MINUTE OF DISSENT WRITTEN BY DR. SUHRAWARDY TO THE REPORT OF THE INDIAN CENTRAL COMMITTEE.

278. *Mr. B. Das: (a) Will Government be pleased to state if it is a fact that a certain minute of dissent which was written by Dr. Suhrawardy, M.L.A., has not been published so far as part of the Central Committee's Report?

(b) Will Government be pleased to lay a copy of the same on the table and give reasons for withholding publication of the same?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: (a) Yes.

(b) In reply to the Honourable Member's question No. 277 I have explained the general position. The minute was not included among the papers which Government received for publication and did not reach Government till after the Report of the Committee had been published. Government is unable to lay on the table of the House a minute which they have not themselves received for publication.

CONCESSIONS TO GOVERNMENT SERVANTS WHO SERVED IN THE GREAT WAR.

279. *Rao Bahadur M. C. Rajah: Will Government be pleased to state the concessions allowed by the Government of India to those who had volunteered their services during the Great War and who rendered satisfactory service under the Imperial Government in Mesopotamia and overseas, by way of recognising such service towards being counted for pension or from being exempted from the age limit for purposes of re-entering Government service in India?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: I would refer the Honourable Member to the Home Department Resolutions No. 2165, dated the 15th September 1921, and No. 1099, dated the 8th August, 1919, copies of which will be found in the Library of the House.

EMPLOYMENT OF EX-SERVICE MEN.

280. Rao Bahadur M. C. Rajah: (a) Will Government be pleased to state if they maintain a list for men who have rendered service in Mesopotamia and overseas and is re-employment sought for them according to their qualifications, as in the case of the re-employment of pensioners?

(b) If the answer to part (a) is in the negative, have Government considered the question of the desirability of maintaining such a register?

Mr. G. M. Young: (a) No such list is maintained; but those who served in Mesopotamia and overseas are given the same special consideration in the matter of civil employment as is given to all who served in the Great War.

(b) The Government of India are of the opinion that no useful purpose would be served by instituting such a register, even if it were practicable to do so at the present time.

PROSECUTIONS UNDER THE INDIAN STATES (PROTECTION AGAINST DISAFFECTION) ACT.

281. Mr. B. Das: (a) With reference to the following assurance given by Sir William Vincent in the Council of State during the discussion of the Indian States (Protection against Disaffection) Bill, vide the Council of State Debates of the 26th September 1922, page 501, will Government be pleased to state if the Governor General in Council, in each case of prosecution, was approached to give his sanction for the same?

"Those who offend against this law will not be liable to summary action at the hands of the executive. They will be tried before a Court of Law or a Magistrate and the accused will, I suppose, ultimately have a right of going up to the High Court. Surely that is a reasonable safeguard against any injustice. Further, there is the great safeguard of the previous sanction of the Governor General in Council".

(b) Has any of the parties prosecuted so far taken his case to the highest tribunal, the High Court? If so, with what result?

Mr. E. B. Howell: (a) Yes.

(b) The answer to the first part is "No". The second part does not arise.

PROSECUTION UNDER THE INDIAN STATES (PROTECTION AGAINST DISAFFECTION) ACT.

282. Mr. B. Das: (a) Will Government be pleased to state whether in all cases of prosecution sanctioned by the Governor General in Council under the Indian States (Protection against Disaffection) Act, the provision to appeal to a High Court of Judicature is borne in mind?

(b) Has there been any departure from this procedure in any of the cases sanctioned?

Mr. E. B. Howell: (a) Yes.

(b) No.

CASE OF EMBEZZLEMENT AT THE SYRIAM POST OFFICE.

283. Mr. Anwar-ul-Azim: (a) Will Government be pleased to state the amount of loss involved to Government in the embezzlement case generally known as the "Syriam Post Office V. P. fraud case" which occurred in the Burma Circle during the year 1928?

(b) Will Government be pleased to state what action was taken against the offending clerk?

(c) Will Government be pleased to state whether, during the period covered by the fraud; any inspecting officer visited the office, and if so, how many times?

(d) Will Government be pleased to state whether the investigation into the case has disclosed any apparent neglect of duty on the part of the inspecting staff, and if so, what disciplinary action was taken against such inspecting staff?

Mr. H. A. Sams: (a) The total amount embezzled was Rs. 1,145-14-0. The security of the accused was forfeited and the fine imposed on him by the Court was recovered. Monetary responsibility was also enforced on the sub-postmaster held responsible for contributory negligence. Taking into account all these recoveries, the net loss to Government in this case amounted only to Rs. 250.

(b) The offending clerk was prosecuted and sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for six months. The fine of Rs. 200 imposed on him by the Court was recovered from him.

(c) Yes, three times, but on these occasions only the cash balance of the office was verified and no inspection was made.

(d) The reply to the first portion is in the negative. The second portion does not arise.

PROMOTIONS IN POSTAL CIRCLES.

284. Mr. Anwar-ul-Azim: Will Government be pleased to state:

(a) How many officials in each postal circle have passed the Inspector's examination and are still borne on the waiting list for promotion to the posts of Inspectors and Divisional Head Clerks to the Superintendents of Post Offices; and

(b) For how long those officials are being borne on the waiting lists of different postal circles?

Mr. H. A. Sams: (a) and (b). Information is being collected and will be supplied to the Honourable Member in due course.

PROMOTIONS IN THE POSTAL DEPARTMENT.

285. Mr. Anwar-ul-Azim: (a) Are Government aware that several appointments on the Rs. 160—250 grade in the Postal Department have been kept vacant pending publication of the results of the first lowest selection grade examination?

(b) Will Government be pleased to state whether they propose to fill up the existing vacancies on the Rs. 160—250 grade by those passed candidates who have been already kept for long in the waiting list for promotion?

(b) Have Government considered whether it is desirable in view of the all-India character of this institution that the members of the Governing Body should be drawn from different parts of India?

(c) Will Government please state the number of meetings of the Governing Body held annually during the last five years?

Sir Frank Noyce: (a) and (b). In pursuance of the recommendation of the Standing Finance Committee, the Government of India propose to appoint a Committee to enquire into the financial position of the Lady Hardinge Medical College and Hospital, Delhi. The question of revising the constitution of the Governing Body will be referred to that Committee.

(c) The Governing Body met five times in 1925, twice in 1926, twice in 1927, twice in 1928 and five times in 1929. I may add that there is an Executive Committee of the Governing Body which meets at least once a month during the College session.

EXHIBITION OF THE WORK OF INDIAN ARTISTS.

292. Mr. Sarabhai Nemchand Haji: (a) Will Government be pleased to state why special stress has been laid on the Indian artist, who is to copy four Royal portraits for the Viceroy's House, exhibiting his work at the Delhi Fine Arts Exhibition?

(b) Is it the intention of Government to confine this copying work only to artists who think fit to utilize the good offices of the Delhi Fine Arts Exhibition Society?

(c) What steps have Government taken to see that the claims of other Fine Arts Societies elsewhere will be properly considered?

(d) What steps other than the notification in the Gazette of India have Government taken to convey this information to various Indian artists in different parts of India?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: (a) It was considered that, as the pictures are required by October, 1930, the most expeditious procedure was to afford those desiring to copy the portraits an opportunity of exhibiting at an early date where their work could be viewed.

(b) and (c). Not necessarily. There is nothing to prevent any artist submitting portraits to the Government of India direct and any portraits so submitted, if they arrive in time, will receive equal consideration. It was however thought that, as the Delhi Fine Arts Exhibition is open to the whole of India and is to be held at a date which fits in with the practical needs, it would afford to artists who can take advantage of it the best means of bringing their work to the personal notice of those with whom the selection rests.

(d) The notification in question, in addition to appearing in the Gazette, was sent to the Associated Press for distribution and has appeared in newspapers in different parts of India. It is understood that the Delhi Fine Arts Exhibition Committee has sent copies of its prospectus to a large number of artists all over India and that the response has been encouraging.

Mr. Sarabhai Nemchand Haji: With reference to the information that the Delhi Exhibition was the first in point of time, may I draw the attention of Government to the fact that in the month of February an exhibition is also held in Bombay and that being so, did Government make any attempt to extend their activities to the exhibits in the Bombay exhibition?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: I am afraid I have no information about what was done in connection with the Bombay exhibition but February was rather close to the date when the decision was taken and I imagine that there was not very much time.

Mr. M. R. Jayakar: Will Government take steps to see that intimation about this work is given to the several art schools in various parts of India?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: I have already said that the Committee of the Exhibition has sent copies of its prospectus to a large number of artists all over India. I think they have done all they can to bring the possibility of being selected to copy these pictures to artists all over India.

APPOINTMENT OF INDIANS FOR LIGHTHOUSE ADMINISTRATION.

(b) What steps have Government taken to enable the various posts, now held by non-Indians under contract, being filled in due course by Indians with necessary qualifications?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: (a) A statement is laid on the table giving the information required.

(b) An Indian will shortly be appointed as an Inspector of Lighthouses and will be trained under the Chief Inspector. The mechanics will be trained by the Foreman Mechanics and will, if they prove themselves qualified, be eligible for appointment to the post of Foreman Mechanic.

REMUNERATION OF MEMBERS APPOINTED TO COMMITTEES.

294. Mr. Sarabhai Nemchand Haji: (a) Will Government please state when they propose to appoint a committee to prescribe scales of remuneration and allowances for members working on committees appointed by the Government of India?

(b) What steps do Government propose to take to provide for economy in the scales of remuneration and allowances for members of committees appointed by the Secretary of State?

(c) Is there any reason why the remunerations fixed by the Secretary of State are regarded as non-voted? If any Standing Order is responsible for the above, are Government prepared to take steps to have it modified?

(d) Will Government be pleased to state whether it is possible to take steps to solve this problem during the lifetime of the present Assembly?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: (a) and (d). This matter has had my careful consideration and I had hoped to proceed further with it this Session. As the Honourable Member probably is aware, I discussed the question with a number of Members during the last Session, and I found that opinion was somewhat sharply divided on the subject. It is therefore a matter on which Government would hesitate to move without obtaining full opinions from all quarters, and Government would be glad of an opportunity to obtain the views of the House on the subject. I suggest to the Honourable Member that a suitable occasion might arise in connection with the discussion of Demands for Grants in this year's Budget.

(b) and (c). I would refer the Honourable Member to section 21 of the Government of India Act, which empowers the Secretary of State to fix the remuneration and allowances of members of Committees appointed by him, and to section 67A (3) (iii) of the Act, under which the salaries of persons appointed by him are not subject to vote. The Government of India feel unable to consider any questions involving amendment of the Act, pending the Report of the Statutory Commission.

Mr. B. Das: Has the Honourable Member collected information from the Provincial Governments as to the rate of allowances paid to the members of the different committees?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: I think we have that information.

Mr. B. Das: Is it not a fact that the Provincial Governments pay very low rates of allowances to members of committees?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: I believe it is a fact that the scale of allowances paid by Provincial Governments is considerably lower than the scale of allowances paid by the Central Government.

Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh: The travelling and halting allowances of members are also lower.

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: I thank the Honourable Member for the information.

Mr. M. A. Jinnah: Will the Honourable Member be in a position to give us, at the time he suggested a discussion might be raised, the total cost of all the committees that have been appointed during the last three years, or shall I give him special notice?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: I understand that the Honourable Member wishes to have placed before this House a statement of the costs of all committees appointed by the Central Government during the last three years and not by the Provincial Governments?

Mr. M. A. Jinnah: Yes, by the Government of India.

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: I shall be very pleased to make that calculation for the benefit of the Honourable Member.

REPAIR OF THE BHADRA TOWER IN AHMEDABAD.

295. Mr. Sarabhai Nemchand Haji: (a) Will Government please lay on the table a list of the protected monuments in Ahmedabad?

(b) Is Bhadra one of the protected monuments, and if so, what sums of money have been spent in its repairs?

(c) Is it a fact that the central tower in Bhadra is in a dilapidated condition? If so, do Government propose to take the necessary steps before that portion of the building tumbles down?

Mr. G. S. Bajpai: (a) A list of protected monuments in Ahmedabad is laid on the table.

(b) Yes; sums totalling Rs. 387 have been spent on the preservation of this monument during the last four years.

(c) Government have no information but have made inquiries. The Honourable Member may rest assured that such action as the result of these inquiries might suggest will be taken.

SUPERINTENDENT OF EDUCATION FOR DELHI AND AJMER-MERWARA.

296. Mr. Sarabhai Nemchand Haji: (a) Will Government please state if they propose to revive the post of Superintendent of Education in Delhi, Ajmer-Merwara?

(b) Is it proposed to confine the appointment to members of the Indian Educational Service, and if so, why?

(c) What would be the saving if a fully qualified officer from the Provincial Educational Service was appointed?

(d) What is the amount of overseas pay that is proposed to be paid to this Superintendent and what is the basis on which it is reckoned?

Sir Frank Noyce: (a) It is proposed to create a special post of Superintendent of Education for Delhi, Ajmer-Merwara and Central India for two years in the first instance.

(b) No.

(c) The pay proposed for the post is Rs. 400—50—1,250—50—1,500, plus overseas pay if the officer appointed is of non-Asiatic domicile. The scale pay of the Provincial Educational Service is Rs. 250—800. As the post is for the present temporary, it is impossible to calculate the saving which would result if an officer from the Provincial Educational Service were appointed to the post on the latter scale of pay, as this would depend upon the pay actually drawn by the officer at the time of his appointment.

(d) The rate of overseas pay, which it is proposed to attach to the post, if it is filled by an officer of non-Asiatic domicile, is the same as that for the Indian Educational Service, viz., from Rs. 150 to Rs. 300, or from £15 to £30 if drawn in sterling.

RECRUITMENT OF THE EMIGRATION AGENT, MALAY STATES.

297. Mr. Sarabhai Nemchand Haji: (a) Will Government please state if it is a fact that up till now the pay of the Emigration Agent in the Malay States has been in the grade of Rs. 300—800?

(b) Has this post been so far confined to the members of the Provincial Civil Service? If so, will Government please state their reasons for recruiting the next Emigration Agent in the Malay States from the ranks of the Indian Civil Service, which necessitates payment in the scale of Rs. 1,000—2,250?

(c) For how long has the present incumbent been in office?

(d) Did Government make attempts to recruit an equally qualified officer from the Provincial Civil Service to succeed the present Emigration Agent?

Mr. G. S. Bajpai: (a) There is no fixed scale of pay attached to the post of Agent as such. The basic pay is fixed at the scale of the service from which the officer concerned happens to be drawn, and a special pay of Rs. 300 per mensem is given in recognition of the extra responsibility of the post.

(b) The post is not reserved for any particular service, but the first and the present incumbent were both selected from the Provincial Civil Service. The question whether the present Agent's successor should be chosen from a provincial or an all-India Service will be considered after the deputation which is to visit Malaya this year presents its report. The deputation is expected to make suggestions regarding the status of the post.

(c) 3 years 2 months and 26 days.

(d) Does not arise.

Mr. B. Das: May I ask, Sir, when is this deputation likely to reach Malaya?

Mr. G. S. Bajpai: I think, Sir, some time in April.

Mr. B. Das: Have the Government fixed the personnel of that deputation?

Mr. G. S. Bajpai: No, Sir.

SHORT NOTICE QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

RIOTS IN DACCA.

Mr. Anwar-ul-Azim: Has the attention of Government been drawn to the Press reports about the riots in Dacca? How many so far have been killed, wounded and molested, belonging to the Hindu, Muslim and Christian communities respectively? What was the genesis of this trouble? Has the District Magistrate issued any communiqué regarding this matter?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: The Government of India have received reports from the Government of Bengal about the unfortunate riots which took place at Dacca. The trouble had its origin in the action of a body of 200 or 300 students, who were demonstrating in favour of independence on the 26th January, and raised cries and created a great noise in front of a mosque on the road side in which a number of Muhammadans were assembled for prayers. Protests were made by the Muhammadans, and on these being disregarded, it is said that stones were thrown at the processionists, who at once attacked and invaded the mosque. This led to subsequent sporadic assaults and rioting from the 27th to the 30th January. Two cases of assault took place on the 31st, since when no fresh outrage has occurred. Order has now been completely restored.

The reports received from the Local Government show that two Muhammadans have been killed and that twenty-three Hindus and fifteen Muhammadans have been taken into hospital for treatment. No communiqué has been issued by the District Magistrate.

Mr. A. H. Ghuznavi: Are the Government aware that they issued an injunction that no procession should be taken out, but the students refused to accept that position, and they did take out the procession which led to this riot?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: I think I have given in my reply all the material facts which have been received in the Local Government's report.

Mr. A. H. Ghuznavi: Are the Government aware that there was an injunction under section 144 or an order under some Act that no procession should be taken out on that day?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: I have no precise information to that effect so far as I am aware, but I shall be glad to inquire.

Nawab Sir Sahibzada Abdul Qaiyum: Do Government propose to take steps to see that orders passed by them are respected and that permissions given or refused by them are strictly observed?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: That, Sir, is a matter for the Local Governments immediately concerned. I have no doubt they take proper steps in the matter.

Mr. Anwar-ul-Azim: Is not there any co-ordination in matters of this nature between the Central Government and the Provincial Governments?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: In all important matters of policy there is communication between the Central Government and the Local Government concerned, but a particular occurrence of this kind is definitely and primarily the concern of the Local Governments and local authorities.

Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya: Will the Honourable Member tell us whether the issue of an injunction under section 144 may not have contributed to the trouble that arose?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: That, Sir, is a question of opinion.

Mr. Anwar-ul-Azim: Will the Honourable Member kindly tell us how many times in this country injunctions under section 144 were issued and violated by people with intimidation?

Mr. President: That is a very tall order!

Dr. A. Suhrawardy: Is it not a fact that the Honourable Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya himself defied that order not long ago?

Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya: And he will defy a similar order again if opportunity arises.

Dr. A. Suhrawardy: And there was no riot!

FAILURE OF THE INDIAN BROADCASTING COMPANY.

Dr. B. S. Moonje (on behalf of Mr. Lalechand Navalrai): (a) Will Government be pleased to state if it is a fact that the Indian Broadcasting Company inaugurated in Bombay in 1927 has suffered heavy losses?

(b) Is it a fact that it is unable to carry on from more royalty received by it from licences of the wireless sets?

(c) Is it a fact that the broadcasting stations at Bombay and Calcutta will be closed by the end of February, 1930?

(d) Will Government be pleased to state if the Company has been receiving any subsidy from the Government of Bombay or the Government of India?

(e) Is it a fact that, in order to save the situation, the Company applied for a subsidy from Government? If so, for how much?

(f) Was the subsidy asked for refused? If so, by which Government and for what reasons?

(g) Do the Government of India, in the interests of the usefulness of broadcasting in India, propose to help the Company to avoid the crisis?

(h) If the answer to part (g) be in the negative, do Government propose to make any other arrangement to establish broadcasting in India and which? If not, why not?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: (a) Government understand that the fact is as stated.

(b) It has been reported to Government that the Company is unable to carry on on the proceeds of its receipts both from licence fees and percentage of the value of imported wireless apparatus.

(c) Government have been informed that the Company intends to cease broadcasting at the end of this month.

(d) No direct subsidy has been given, but the Company receives 80 per cent. of the broadcast receiver licence fees realised by Government.

(e) Yes. Various methods of assisting the Company have been suggested. The latest suggestion was that a subsidy of Rs. 2 lakhs per annum for a minimum period of two years might suffice.

(f) The Government of India, with whom the Company has been in correspondence, have not seen their way to grant a subsidy, as they were not fully satisfied that such a grant would be justified or that it would be the best and most economical method of ensuring the development of broadcasting in India.

(g) Government have decided that it is undesirable for them to intervene in the affairs of the Company at the present juncture.

(h) The matter is engaging the attention of Government and I shall make a statement in the House on the subject as soon as I am in a position to do so.

Mr. M. R. Jayakar: Will Government consider the desirability of granting the subsidy on such terms as they think are economical?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: At the present moment, Sir, I regret that I can add nothing to what I have already stated.

Mr. K. C. Roy: Have the Government received any special advice from an expert body of opinion regarding the possibility of success of broadcasting in India?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: I do not precisely know what my Honourable friend means by "expert body of opinion", but I believe that some years ago the matter was discussed by Government with certain public men, including certain Members of this House, and my Honourable friend Mr. K. C. Roy was one of them. (Laughter.)

Mr. K. C. Roy: Do I understand that the Honourable Mr. Sams, who presided over the conference, was not included in the conference?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: I was referring to non-officials.

Mr. K. C. Roy: Will the Honourable Member be pleased to lay a copy of Mr. Sams' report on the table?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: I have not got the report here at the present moment, but I shall consider that suggestion.

Sir Hugh Cocke: Have Government considered the possibilities and the cost of developing broadcasting to towns and villages throughout India with a view to correcting the wrong news and the wild information which is spread at present?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: Government have not gone into the matter in any great detail.

Sir Hugh Cocke: Will Government consider that question and go into it in detail?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: Sir, the problem immediately before Government is whether they should attempt to maintain the existing avenues for the development of broadcasting in India. The problem to which my Honourable friend Sir Hugh Cocke has referred is a much wider problem and it may involve a considerable amount of expenditure. I submit that the consideration of that problem must appropriately come at a later stage.

THE CANTONMENTS (HOUSE-ACCOMMODATION AMENDMENT) BILL.

PRESENTATION OF THE REPORT OF THE SELECT COMMITTEE.

Mr. G. M. Young (Army Secretary): Sir, I beg to present the Report of the Select Committee on the Bill further to amend the Cantonments (House-Accommodation) Act, 1923.

RESOLUTION RE MEDICAL RESEARCH.

Mr. President: The House will now resume further discussion on Mr. Jayakar's Resolution* which was moved on 8th February, 1930.

Mr. M. A. Jinnah (Bombay City: Muhammadan Urban): Sir, on the last occasion I said that the Honourable Member, on behalf of Government, did not meet the Resolution. First of all I want the House to know this, that on this question of the location of this institution at Dehra Dun, there is a very very strong feeling against it, and I think the Honourable Member is aware of it, and I think the Government too are aware of it. There is a very strong feeling, not only among those who are entitled to speak as professional men, but I venture to say that there is a very strong feeling among the general public. Dehra Dun is hardly the place where this institution should be transferred. Several questions were put in this

*"This Assembly recommends to the Governor General in Council (a) to appoint a committee with a non-official majority and an adequate representation of the independent medical profession to inquire into and report on the following points, and (b) to hold over the proposed transfer of the Medical Research Institute, Kasauli, to the Chandbagh building at Dehra Dun till this committee's report is considered by the Assembly:

- (1) The most suitable University centre for the establishment of the Central Medical Research Institute;
- (2) The constitution of the Governing Body of the Indian Research Fund Association; and
- (3) Recruitment for the Medical Research Department."

House and it seemed at one time that the Government were determined to carry out that decision and to take this institute to Dehra Dun, but I am glad now, at any rate, that the door is just open a little and the Honourable Member, on behalf of Government, said that the chapter is not closed on that subject. But, Sir, having said that, he proceeded to say that he did not like a committee—and I can tell you, Sir, and the House that committees should not be appointed lightly in my opinion—but I think my Honourable friend Mr. Jayakar realised the strong resentment and the strong public opinion which compelled him to table the Resolution in the terms as he did, that a committee shall be appointed, to do what—I want the House clearly to understand—to do this, to enquire and report, firstly, on the most suitable University centre for the establishment of the Central Medical Research Institute. Now, to that what is the answer of the Government? The answer of the Government is this: "It is true we are open to consider whether Dehra Dun should be the place where the institute shall be located, but we are going to get the estimate of the cost for that purpose". When you have got the estimate of the cost, will that decide? That is the first question I want to know. Supposing you get an estimate of the cost, do you think that that would reasonably finish the question?

Sir Frank Noyce (Secretary, Department of Education, Health and Lands): No, Sir.

Mr. M. A. Jinnah: Then, will you consider other places, which are emphasised by this Resolution? And I can assure the Government that, as far as I have been able to understand public opinion, it is dead against Dehra Dun. The public opinion is this, that you must select some suitable University centre for the establishment of the Central Medical Research Institute. Having pushed yourself to the limit that you had closed the chapter, you yourself found that part of that institute would have to be at Kasauli, and you yourself found that it would be half and half. Therefore, I say that it is most essential that a place should be found which is a suitable University centre. Therefore, would you consider Dehra Dun along with that University centre or centres? That is the next question. Therefore the Honourable Member, on behalf of Government, if he insists on Dehra Dun, is not meeting my Honourable friend, Mr. Jayakar, who emphasises, in his Resolution, that the place must be a suitable University centre. I do ask the Government to give me an answer on that point, and I say that, if you are going to consider a suitable University centre along with Dehra Dun, then you should also get an estimate of the cost of the various University centres. How would your conference otherwise decide? On what facts and merits? Would the conference decide in favour of one or the other place without considering the relative cost of all the University centres? Therefore it seems to me that there is still the thin end of the wedge so far as Dehra Dun is concerned. I am not satisfied so far with the observations which the Honourable Member has made.

Then, let us take the second point. The second point is this, the constitution of the Governing Body of the Indian Research Fund Association. Now my Honourable friend's Resolution wants that a committee should be appointed to inquire into the constitution. I am told by the Honourable Member that they have already reconstituted this Governing Body. He said that there were seven non-official members—I think the Honourable Member will correct me if I am wrong—and seven officials. I think he also mentioned the names which, of course, I was not able to catch. It is very difficult to remember 14 names when they are rapidly mentioned. But I am assuming that they are all honourable men and they are also very good men, and that the Honourable Member has done his very best and exercised all the abilities that he, of course, possesses in selecting them. But that does not meet the point. Of course the Honourable Member qualified—and I must say this in all fairness to him—and said that even this question of the constitution of this body which has now been reconstituted will be placed before the conference. I must say, in fairness to him, that the conference will be given an opportunity to examine the merits, the qualifications and the status of these 14 men. So far I grant it is an advance.

[Mr. M. A. Jinnah.]

Then with regard to the third point, the recruitment for the Medical Department; this question also, he said, will be placed before the conference. Therefore, Sir, what the Honourable Member now suggests is this. Instead of a committee a conference will be held, and he was good enough to tell us that there will be two representatives of this Assembly who will be selected or nominated to that conference.

Now, Sir, I come to the most important point. Will this conference decide this very important question by votes? Supposing there is a difference of opinion in the conference, who will be the final arbiter? That is the next question. Will the Honourable Member come to this House finally before Government take their final decisions on these questions? I do not care whether it is a committee or whether it is a conference; and if the Honourable Member is very keen on having a conference instead of a committee, and if he thinks it is a more practicable way of dealing with this question, I have no special objection to that. But the point that I want to emphasise is this: Will Government place before this House the proposals which they formulate, before they take their final decision on this question? Because this is a very important question and Government should not take any final step without ascertaining the views of this House. The advantage of a committee is this: When a committee is appointed, they make their report; they give their reasons and their facts and figures for their conclusions, and when the report is submitted to the Government of India, it is ordinarily and normally expected that the Government of India, before they take any steps upon the recommendations of the Committee, would consult this House. That is what is normally expected; and I do not wish that, under the guise of a conference, Government should depart or run away with this question as if they had nothing more to do with this House, and that under the guise of this conference they will take the opinion of the members of this conference and then finally decide as they like without giving an opportunity to this House to pronounce an opinion on these very important questions. Therefore, unless the Honourable Member gives me this assurance, particularly with regard to my last point, I will certainly press this Resolution.

Mr. B. Das (Orissa Division: Non-Muhammadan): Sir, I rise to support the Resolution moved by my Honourable friend, Mr. Jayakar, and oppose the proposition advanced by Sir Frank Noyce. Sir, it seems that Sir Frank Noyce is patting the different major provinces. He has patted the gentlemen of Bombay, Madras and Bengal in their backs, and wants to exclude the medical profession of certain other provinces from being represented in the conference and in the Indian Medical Council. Sir, on behalf of the Patna University and on behalf of the Province of Bihar and Orissa I strongly protest against this discriminating attitude which my Honourable friend, Sir Frank Noyce, has adopted. I find that this discriminating policy of Government towards the Patna University is not confined only to the Department of Education, Health and Lands. It is also evident in the treatment of the Railway Board, in that it has not so far accepted the Engineering graduates of the Patna University as eligible for services in the Railway Department. Probably it may be the same with my Honourable friend, Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra, when he employs engineers for the Indian Stores Department. I cannot understand why this step-motherly treatment is sometimes adopted by Government towards provinces which are not adequately represented on the Treasury Benches. Yet I find that my province is only represented by Sir George Rainy on the Treasury Bench but probably he has forgotten his past connection with my province.

The Revd. J. C. Chatterjee (Nominated: Indian Christians): Why don't you have it in Delhi and settle all these provincial jealousies?

Mr. N. C. Kelkar (Bombay Central Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Delhi was rejected by Government themselves.

Mr. B. Das: If I had my own way, I should like to see the Delhi Province comprised of only Delhi town and not a bigger province.

Sir, after recording this strong protest on behalf of my province, I now ventilate before the House the unanimous protest that the Indian medical profession has recorded before Government and has placed before the country regarding Government's attitude about the Indian Medical Council and about the location of the Central Medical Research Institute at Dehra Dun. Sir, I was surprised to read a statement issued by Dr. Jivraj Mehta, a well-known medical man in Bombay, and at present the Director of a medical institute which is in no way inferior to the Grant Medical College at Bombay. He mentioned in a statement, which he circulated, that the Government had managed to spend a sum of money on the foundations of the buildings at Dehra Dun, which was equal to "the sum of money which had been donated by the Rockefeller Foundation on account of the cost of site of the buildings and equipping of the Public Health Institute at Calcutta". That shows how Government squander public money and how they, without respecting and ascertaining the views of the public, go on spending money on lime and mortar. And yet today we are still considering whether Dehra Dun will be a proper place for the location of the Indian Medical Research Institute.

Sir, the opposition that has so far been advanced by the Indian medical profession is that Dehra Dun is not a central place. It is only a place where different Government institutions are located, and it may be compared almost to a cantonment town in India or to Fort William in Calcutta. In that atmosphere, no public institution can thrive, as it is overridden by only Government officials and will always have an official prejudice, and will never allow the proper development of a national institution like the Central Medical Research Institute.

[Mr. B. Das.]

I will quote another eminent doctor, a well-known medical man of Bombay, Dr. G. V. Deshmukh, who happens to be the President of the Bombay Medical Union. In his letter to the Secretary to the Department of Education, Health and Lands, on the 30th August, 1929, he wrote:

"The Union cannot acquiesce in such an appointment and desires to reaffirm its opinion in favour of the creation of an all-India Medical Council, having on it representatives of all the Indian Universities",—

I lay stress on that, and Sir, the Members from Bihar and Orissa in this House will not tolerate the exclusion of the Patna University—

"the independent medical profession and the nominees of Government, and having the powers and privileges similar to those enjoyed by the General Medical Council of Great Britain and Ireland."

Sir, our complaint is, and everybody on this side knows, that this Council is not going to be an independent Council, for it is going to be controlled by the dictates of the Medical Council in Great Britain. It seems that those of the medical profession who are on the unemployed list in England want more and more jobs for themselves. So in this Medical Research Association, which is going to be created, the expert and research officers are not going to be Indians. Already an I. M. S. Officer was about to be appointed—I think his name was Colonel Needham—but his appointment had to be stopped. Who gave these heaven-born services all the spirit of research and all the knowledge? We are in the midst of reforms. One stage of reforms has passed and another stage is expected, and we do not want this spirit in the Government Departments of creating secret strongholds of their own race, so that when we try and encroach and establish our own rights, we find ourselves nowhere. We here find a Medical Council is going to be established which will find places for the senior men of the I. M. S. profession, and Indians will not have the necessary opportunities to do the research.

I will also quote a few lines from another letter that I have received. This is from the resolutions passed at the meeting of the medical profession of Bombay held on the 17th January, 1930. The I. M. S. is not represented there. In paragraph (b) of their second resolution, they suggest:

"That pending the creation of an All-India Medical Council, an Inter-University Board composed of representatives of the Medical Faculties of the Indian Universities be constituted to take organised action for the regulation of medical qualifications and standards."

This is a different point. But I am suggesting that, in regard to the establishment of the Council, the considered opinion of the Indian medical profession should be given effect to. (Interruption.) I am glad that my Honourable friend, Mr. Neogy, reminds me that my Deputy Leader's Resolution is for the establishment of a Research Institute with proper constitution of its governing body. The Government want to include his province because Bombay is too powerful. I want the Government not to back up always the major provinces, excluding the interests of other provinces.

Mr. M. A. Jinnah: Such as Assam.

Mr. B. Das: Yes, such as Assam. But Assam's interest will be looked after by my friend Mr. Abdul Matin Chaudhury.

Nawab Sir Sahibzada Abdul Qaiyum (North-West Frontier Province: Nominated Non-Official): Baluchistan.

Mr. B. Das: My province, Bihar and Orissa, where we have established a full-fledged medical college and a full-fledged engineering college, should have its recognition and its representation on the Medical Research Institute. My Honourable friend, Sir Frank Noyce, may not have visited my province because he comes from Madras. Why does he allow a Madras representative in that conference or on that Council? Why did he not leave out Madras? With these remarks, Sir, I plead for the Patna Medical College with all the earnestness at my command.

Maulvi Muhammad Yakub (Rohilkund and Kumaon Divisions: Muhammadan Rural): My Honourable friend, Mr. B. Das, has spoken on this Resolution in his usual way and made a speech which contained points, in no way relevant to the Resolution before the House. The Resolution is not about the appointment of a Commission or a Committee or this and that. The only point before the House is whether this Medical Research Institute should be located at Dehra Dun or at some other place. Now, Sir, we have got to see what is a suitable place for an institution like this. (An Honourable Member: "Moradabad.") Moradabad or Dehra Dun. The people of Bombay and the people of Calcutta are very jealous, and they want that everything of importance should be located in their places. They want that all important institutions should be established either at Bombay or at Calcutta. We know how much cry was raised when the Capital of India was removed from Calcutta to Delhi, and I find it repeated now. It is admitted by all educational experts that big towns like Calcutta and Bombay, where there are so many other engagements and amusements, can never be suitable for any research institute or any educational work which requires the concentration of mind.

Mr. M. A. Jinnah: Go to the Himalayas. (Laughter.)

Maulvi Muhammad Yakub: I would prefer the Himalayas rather than Bombay. People from Bombay and Calcutta certainly would like to have the institution in their own place which would be to their benefit. But really big places, big towns, are never suitable for such institutions. Now, Dehra Dun is a place where we have got a temperate climate, where one can stay without feeling inclement weather for 12 years. (Laughter.) I mean for 12 months in the year, and you will not incur expenditure on sending your officers to Simla or to some other hill station. Then again, in Dehra Dun you have got other sister educational institutions and all the other environments of that place are suitable for such an institution. It has been said that Dehra Dun is a place where there are many Government institutions and the atmosphere of Dehra Dun is full of officialdom. But if you compare Dehra Dun with Calcutta or Bombay, you will find that there can be no comparison at all. Calcutta and Bombay and such other big cities are much more saturated with the official atmosphere than Dehra Dun. (Cries of "No, no.") Then they say that Dehra Dun is not a central place. I say that, in a huge, big country like India, it is very easy to say that this is not a central place and that is not a central place. In fact if you take the majority of the provinces, for instance, the Punjab, the United Provinces, Bihar and Orissa, you will find that Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh (Muzaffarpur cum Champaran: Non-Muhammadan): It is nearer Moradabad.

Maulvi Muhammad Yakub: It is nearer to Benares, Aligarh and other places which are the central educational places in this country.

Nawab Sir Sahibzada Abdul Qaiyum: Nearer to Hardwar especially.

Maulvi Muhammad Yakub: As my Honourable friend says, nearer to Hardwar, which is one of the most sacred places in India where thousands of pilgrims flock every year. (Laughter.) Considering all these facts, I do not think that there can be any other place more suitable for an institute like this than Dehra Dun. I am really surprised that my Honourable friend, Sir Frank Noyce, has taken a faltering step and that he says that this question has been kept open. It is this faltering attitude of the Government (Hear, hear and Laughter) which spoils their schemes. I do not find the Government of India ever firm in any action they take. (Hear, hear.)

Raj Sahib Harbilas Sarda (Ajmer-Merwara: General): What about the Child Marriage Bill?

Maulvi Muhammad Yakub: There too they were hesitating until they were supported by my Honourable friend himself, and even now they are hesitating. I wish that this question were decided once for all, and let the decision be that the institute be located at Dehra Dun and Dehra Dun alone and at no other place. (Laughter.) With these words I oppose the Resolution.

Dr. Zia-ud-din Ahmad (United Provinces Southern Divisions: Muhammadan Rural): May I suggest for the consideration of my Honourable friend, Sir Frank Noyce, whether it is or is not desirable to separate teaching from research work? Opinion on this point is very much divided. Some years ago it was considered that research ought to be separate from teaching, but the opinion is now changing, and I hope that he will consider this point.

Mr. K. C. Neogy (Dacca Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I am very sorry to find that this important question is being discussed in a spirit of provincial competition. (An Honourable Member: "And levity.") I may tell my Honourable friend the Deputy President of this House that this Resolution is identically the same as the one that was passed unanimously at the last All-India Medical Conference which was held at Lahore during the Christmas week of 1929, and I understand that the medical profession of the province from which he comes was also amply represented on that conference.

Maulvi Muhammad Yakub: They must have been in a minority there.

Mr. K. C. Neogy: They might have been in a minority, but what I say is that this particular Resolution was unanimously adopted by all the representatives of medical opinion from all parts of India. I am very sorry therefore, Sir, that my Honourable friend made a special pleading in favour of one particular town about which the Government themselves do not appear to be very enthusiastic at the present moment.

Sir, with regard to the other point, to which reference was made by Dr. Zia-ud-din, as to whether the research activities of the Medical Department should be associated with or divorced from teaching, I find an authority to which some weight, I trust, will be given by Sir Frank Noyce. I understand that one Major Bradfield of the Indian Medical Service was deputed by the Government of Madras to the United States of America in 1921 to study the methods of medical instruction in that country, and that, on his return, he submitted a very detailed report on the subject, which has been summarised in the Indian Medical Gazette of August, 1922, in the course of which this doctor says that, except in perhaps the Rockefeller Institute, research and medical education in America are very intimately connected, and he further proceeds to say that the organisation of the research department of India as a separate department is a great loss to the country. It was in support of this particular idea, I take it, that the medical profession in India have expressed themselves in favour of the Central Research Institute being located at one or other of the University centres in India. So far as the claims of Calcutta are concerned, I may assure my Honourable friend the Deputy President of this House that, if a suitably constituted committee, which has the confidence of this House, decides against Calcutta, I would be the last person to grumble. So far as the complaint of my Honourable friend Mr. Das is concerned, I think it is a legitimate complaint. (Mr. B. Das: "Thank you.") He was not putting forward the claims of the different minor administrations which go by the name of provinces; all that he was claiming was that, while you are granting representation to the medical faculty of certain Universities in India, there is no reason why you should deny representation to certain other Universities which have got medical faculties of their own, and I have no hesitation in supporting that particular sentiment of my Honourable friend from Orissa.

Now, Sir, as my Honourable friend, Mr. Jinnah, has rightly pointed out, the most important point raised in this Resolution is that Government should stay their hands till the matter has been fully discussed in this House. My Honourable friend, Sir Frank Noyce, was absolutely silent on that particular point. This is one of the essential features of this Resolution, that the committee's report should not be acted upon unless and until an opportunity has been given to this House to express its opinion thereon, and I would emphasise this particular point, because, as my Honourable friend from Bombay has said, this is not a question merely affecting the interests of the medical profession alone, but the public at large have been taking a very great interest in the question. I trust therefore that the Honourable Member representing the Department of Education, Health and Lands, will find it possible to supplement his statement in such a way as to make his offer acceptable to this House.

Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya (Allahabad and Jhansi Divisions: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I congratulate the Department of Education on its decision to meet the Mover of this Resolution more than half-way, and I hope that when the Honourable Sir Frank Noyce speaks next, he will go further and accept fully the recommendation that is contained in the Resolution and which has been emphasised by my Honourable friend, Mr. Jinnah. The matter is of supreme importance to the country, and a consideration by this Assembly of the final report which may be submitted on the subject, will, I venture to say, be of practical help in arriving at a correct conclusion.

[Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya.]

As regards the question whether the Institute should be established at a University centre or at a centre like Dehra Dun, I would say unhesitatingly that a University centre has great advantages. A medical research institute will be an institution of deep interest and concern, not merely to the medical profession, but to the people of India as a whole. I expect great results from it. But it is of the essence of the success of such an institution that it should be situated at a University centre where you get a number of scientific men to co-ordinate their activities and to help one another by their suggestions and by their work in considering problems and finding solutions. A University centre which has got a number of scientific men working from day to day at it, is, I submit, by far the most suitable centre for such work. Dehra Dun has its advantages. I myself love the climate of Dehra Dun. But Dehra Dun is isolated—nobody can deny it—and if you place your institute and your research men at Dehra Dun, they will have to depend, in carrying on their work, entirely, on their own inspiration and knowledge, whereas at a University centre, they will be helped by one another, and the total accumulated wisdom of the men at the University will make a very important contribution to the work which the Institute will have in hand.

There are three factors which have to be borne in mind. The first and most important is the number of medical men who will be available at a centre, and I fear that the very fact that Dehra Dun has a very pleasant climate, a very healthy climate, makes it rather difficult to have a large number of medical men there. The number of medical men there must always be limited, and it is well that it should be limited. Dehra Dun would cease to be what it is if it became a place where a body of medical men would always be found to be necessary. It is only at important populous centres that you find a number of private medical practitioners. Whichever place you select, whether Calcutta, or Bombay, or Madras, or Lahore is not a matter of so much concern to those who are interested in this Institute, as that the place should be one where you can always expect to find a large number of eminent active medical practitioners who will have the necessary knowledge and who will have the interest and enthusiasm necessary for carrying on the work. So this is one important consideration in the matter of the location of the Institute, namely, the presence of a large body of medical men, both official and non-official, at the place to be selected.

The second important point is that the location of the Institute at a University centre makes it possible for the professors of various departments of science to co-operate one with the other and to co-ordinate their words. The professors of zoology, the professors of botany, the professors of chemistry, the professors of physics, all may contribute to some extent to the result of the labours of the medical men who are engaged on research work there.

The third is the number of cases that will be available to the Institute at the place at which it is located. You cannot expect to find at Dehra Dun as many interesting cases which will present problems to the Institute as you can find at an important centre like Lahore or Lucknow or Calcutta or Madras or Bombay or any other populous town. Therefore that also is an important consideration; and I hope that this point will also be borne in mind. There should be no question of any provincial jealousy in this matter. We can have only one central medical research institute; and we should be very grateful if such an institute is established and is properly supported by funds and encouraged to do its work in a centre which may be considered by the proposed committee or conference and by this Assembly to be the most suitable place for it; and I have no doubt that the Government of India will look at this problem in that light and accept the Resolution which has been moved by my Honourable friend, Mr. Jayakar.

Mr. M. R. Jayakar (Bombay City: Non-Muhammadan Urban): Sir, so far as I could follow the speech of the Honourable Secretary in the Education Department, I understood him to say that all the three points which are mentioned in my Resolution will be submitted to the consideration of this conference, namely, as to what would be the most suitable University centre

Sir Frank Noyce: Suitable centre, not suitable University centre.

Mr. M. R. Jayakar: Alright, as to what will be a suitable centre for the establishment of the Central Medical Research Institute; secondly, the constitution of the Governing Body and lastly, the recruitment for the Medical Research Department. I say so, because from the report of his speech which has appeared in the Press it is not quite clear whether he intended to leave all these three questions as open, to be determined by the conference; and therefore I want to know definitely whether he is agreeable that all the three points should be submitted for the consideration of the conference which he proposes.

The second thing which I wish to make clear is that his proposal only substitutes a conference for the committee which I want, and that the result will be the same, namely, that the result of the deliberations of this conference will be subject to revision or approval by this House. I may state that my Resolution asks for a committee, but it does not stop there, it goes further. In clause (b) I desired that the Government of India should hold over the proposed transfer of the Medical Research Institute to Dehra Dun till the committee's report was considered by the Assembly. Does he agree to this, that the results of this conference will stand in the same position as the report of the committee would have stood? Does he agree that this Assembly should have an opportunity of considering the decisions of the conference and that until the views of the Assembly on those decisions are obtained the Government of India will stay their hands? That is really the essence of my Resolution. I do not mind the substitution of a conference for a committee, although there are specific advantages which can be obtained by having a committee, e.g., a non-official majority. I am, however, quite agreeable that the committee should be replaced by a conference, provided the Honourable Member agrees that the result of the decision of this conference will stand in the same position as the report of my committee would have stood, and that this Assembly would have a chance of considering the merits of such decisions; and further that until such consideration was given by the Assembly, the Government would hold over all action on that matter. I therefore want to know specifically from the Honourable Member whether he agrees to this.

The third point which I should make clear, is in connection with the proposal of the Honourable Member, namely, that the medical faculties of Madras, Bombay, Calcutta, Lucknow and the Punjab would send one representative each—I wish to have it made clear whether the Government of India will go a step further and agree that this representative should preferentially be a non-official. I am anxious, Sir, that the point of my 588.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

[Sir Frank Noyce.]

of the conference, because I did my best to explain on Saturday that it will be the duty of the conference to submit its recommendations and suggestions to the Government which will give them their most careful consideration. It is for Government obviously to come to a final decision in this matter.

Mr. Jinnah asked me if the conference would proceed by a vote. I very much hope that no voting will be necessary, and that we shall be able to come to a compromise and to submit to Government suitable proposals acceptable to all parties, but if there is any difference of opinion, it will naturally be reported to Government.

He also asked me why the cost of Dehra Dun alone should be worked out and placed before the conference. The reason for that obviously is that we have got so far with Dehra Dun that we should like to work the whole scheme out and make the material complete before we summon the conference, but I can assure my Honourable friend that, if the conference desires to have the same information in regard to any University or other centre, we shall be glad to get it. The point is that we cannot have a roving committee going round to inquire into the cost of establishing a Central Medical Research Institute at different centres until we have a rather more definite opinion as to which is the best centre at which the institution should be located. Therefore, Sir, I think it is for the conference, in the first instance, to make up its mind and say what are the two or three places it would like considered, and if it does so, we shall then be happy to obtain for it the same material in regard to those centres as we hope to be in a position to place before it in regard to Dehra Dun.

Mr. M. A. Jinnah: You mean with regard to the cost?

Sir Frank Noyce: Yes. Now, as regards the point raised by Mr. Das, it was the desire of Government to keep this conference as small as possible, but I can assure him at once that we have no objection whatever to a representative of the Patna Medical Faculty being included. I think Patna and Rangoon were the only Universities left out, and we shall be glad to ask them if they wish to send any representatives to the conference.

Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya: I hope Lucknow also will be asked to send a representative.

Sir Frank Noyce: Lucknow is already in the list. I can also assure the Honourable the Mover of this Resolution that, in asking for representatives of the faculties of the different Universities, we will express a desire that they should be non-officials.

Now, Sir, I trust I have met the wishes of the House on all points except one, and that is perhaps the most important point of all. It is the question whether the proceedings of the conference will be submitted for the opinion of this House. I have no doubt in my own mind whatever that, as the result of the conference will involve a considerable modification of the original proposals which were placed before the Standing Finance Committee and approved by it, it will be obviously necessary for us to go to the Standing Finance Committee again for its approval of any new scheme and that the matter will, in the normal course, come before the House for consideration. Whether any other opportunity should be given for discussion must, I think, largely depend upon the results of the conference; but I can only promise that the question will be most carefully considered. I trust, Sir, that this assurance will satisfy the Honourable the Mover of this Resolution.

Mr. M. A. Jinnah: Will the Government stay their hands until the question is considered by this House, by whatever mode, whether at the time of Demands for Grants or in any other form? What I mean is, will Government stay their hands before taking action upon the conclusions of the conference until those conclusions are considered by this House in whatever form or in whatever stage, either when the Demands for Grants come up for consideration or in any other form?

Sir Frank Noyce: I can give the Honourable Member the fullest assurance on that point. I had hoped that it would be perfectly clear from what I said both on Saturday and today that Government have no intention of spending any more money on Dehra Dun beyond the sum involved in the allowance for Colonel Christophers for his work in connection with the plans and estimates, until the matter has come before this House, as the Honourable Member has said, in some form or other.

Mr. M. R. Jayakar: I beg to withdraw my Resolution.

The Resolution was, by leave of the Assembly, withdrawn.

Mr. President: Mr. Pandya.*

(The Honourable Member was not in his place.)

Mr. President: Mr. Acharya.

Mr. M. K. Acharya: I am not moving.†

Mr. A. H. Ghuznavi (Dacca Division: Muhammadan Rural): In view of the assurance given to me by the Honourable the Home Member that he would take action in this matter, I do not desire to move my Resolution.‡

Mr. President: Raja Raghunandan Prasad Singh§

(The Honourable Member was not in his place.)

* To move the following Resolution :

"This Assembly recommends to the Governor General in Council that he may be pleased to take steps for the enlargement of Delhi Province, into a Governor's Province, by the addition to it of the Meerut Division of the United Provinces, and the Ambala Division of the Punjab in response to the popular demand."

† "This Assembly recommends to the Governor General in Council to be pleased to appoint a committee of officials and non-officials to inquire into the allegations about the difficulties placed in the way of the development of inland water-transport, by Indians, contained in the representation (dated the 7th September, 1929) made to the Government of India (Department of Commerce) by the Bengal National Chamber of Commerce, Calcutta."

‡ "This Assembly recommends to the Governor General in Council that steps be taken at an early date for the formation of a committee of officials and non-officials to hold an inquiry into the management of Waqf administrations in India with a view to creating a Department of Pious Foundations like the Ministry of Waqf in Turkey and other Muslim countries."

§ To move the following Resolution :

"This Assembly recommends to the Governor General in Council that he may be pleased to arrange for early establishment of primary nautical schools in selected marine stations and the introduction of marine engineering as a subject of instruction in all Government engineering colleges."

RESOLUTION RE ENFRANCHISEMENT OF INDIANS IN CEYLON.

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru (Agra Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Before I move my Resolution, I request your permission to make a slight alteration in the Resolution. I should like to add after the words "Governor General in Council", the words "to represent to His Majesty's Government". I trust you will have no objection to my adding those words.

I beg to move that:

"This Assembly recommends to the Governor General in Council to represent to His Majesty's Government that the proposals of the Government of Ceylon regarding franchise, which have been accepted by the Colonial Office, in so far as they make possession of a certificate of permanent settlement and renunciation of the protection of the Government of India by Indian immigrants a condition of eligibility to vote should not be put into effect and that immediate steps should be taken to secure the adoption of the original recommendations of the Donoughmore Commission making five years' residence the basis of the franchise."

Sir, till recently Indian opinion was considerably agitated with regard to the position of Indians in East Africa. While we were fighting for the honour and self respect of our countrymen there, the Indian question in Fiji became acute, and we found that underlying the question of citizenship in the Empire were racial problems in Fiji as well as in East Africa. A few weeks ago we learnt, to our astonishment, that the same problem had cropped up in Ceylon also, which is at our very doors and which has been bound to us by economic and cultural ties for generations, in fact for centuries past.

Before I deal with the significance of the question I have placed before the House from the Indian point of view, I should like to state briefly the facts that have led to the present position. Some time ago, His Majesty's Government appointed a special commission to report on the Ceylon constitution. The Commission found that in Ceylon women were disqualified from being electors and that, so far as the male population was concerned, the franchise was based on literacy and possession or occupation of property and enjoyment of income of a prescribed value. The Commission came to the conclusion that, if a constitutional advance was to be made in the status of Ceylon, it was necessary that the electorate should be widened. It accordingly recommended manhood suffrage in the case of males and the enfranchisement of all women not less than 30 years of age. As this question had an important bearing on the position of Indians resident in Ceylon, the Commission devoted a section in its Report to the examination of this matter. There are about 700,000 immigrant Indians or labourers on tea and rubber estates in Ceylon at the present day. In considering the qualifications for the franchise, the Commission recommended that:

"A qualification of five years' residence in the island . . . should be introduced in order that the privilege of voting should be confined to those who have an abiding interest in the country or who may be regarded as permanently settled in the island."

and said:

"As will be seen later, this condition will be of particular importance in its application to the Indian immigrant population."

It is clear therefore that, in fixing the qualifications for franchise, the Commission considered carefully the relation of Indians to the rest of the population of Ceylon, and deliberately arrived at the conclusion that the qualifications it had fixed would be fair to all parties concerned. I would go further and draw the attention of the House to an important circumstance. At present the Indian community in Ceylon, known as Indian Tamils, are represented in the Legislative Council by two Members. As the Commission was in favour of the abolition of communal electorates, it had naturally to consider what the effect of joint electorates would be on the position of the Indian community. It expressed the view that, while the existence of two representatives of the Indian community in the Ceylon Legislative Council might have tended to improve its position, yet in the main Indian rights would depend on two other considerations. One was the continuous pressure exerted by the Government of India in favour of the Indian population in Ceylon. The other was that, in case franchise was granted to the Indian population on the same terms as to other communities in Ceylon, their position in the electorate would be a sufficiently strong one to enable them to protect their just rights. On these grounds therefore the Commission treated Indians in regard to electoral qualifications on the same basis as other constituent portions of the Ceylon population, and also recommended the abolition of communal representation, not merely for non-Indians but also for Indians.

Shortly after the Report of this Commission was made public, it was debated in the Legislative Council of Ceylon, I believe in 1928. It was generally felt there that the reforms recommended by the Commission were not substantial, and that they would not pave the way for the introduction of responsible government in that Colony. The Report of the Commission was therefore rejected by the Ceylon Legislative Council. Thereupon, the Governor of Ceylon sent a despatch to the Colonial Office dealing with the views of the Legislative Council as regards the Report of the Special Commission, and recommended some alteration in the franchise proposed by the Commission. But to anyone, Sir, who has read the debate that took place in the Ceylon Legislative Council on the Report of the special Commission, it must have been apparent that the strongest ground of objection to that Commission was the feeling of the Members of the Legislative Council that the Report did not substantially advance the political position of the Colony. If, therefore, His Majesty's Government wanted to conciliate the population of Ceylon, one would have thought that they would make proposals which would be in advance of those made by the Commission. We find, however, that, by arrangement between the Governor and the Colonial Office virtually a bribe was offered to Ceylon at the expense of the interests of Indians resident therein.

In order to prove what I have said, I will draw the attention of the House to the substance of the recommendations of the Governor with regard to Indian franchise. The Governor makes domicile the basis of the franchise in Ceylon. As regards those who are undomiciled, he proposes that, while five years' residence should certainly be insisted on, with residence there should be coupled the condition that those who wish to be registered as voters should produce a certificate of permanent residence in the Colony. It is desired that an Indian who is not already domiciled in the Colony and who has been residing there for five years should produce a certificate of his intention to reside there permanently, and at the same time make a declaration that, while registered as a voter, he or she would renounce any claim to special protection by the Government other than that of Ceylon, or to any statutory rights, privileges or exemptions to which residence of all races and communities were not entitled.

[Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru.]

I will deal, Sir, with the full implications of the demand made by the Governor a little later, but I must point out at this stage that the Colonial Office, in the despatch which it recently sent to the Governor of Ceylon, has accepted the principle recommended by him. It could not but be apparent to the Colonial Office that there is scarcely any question on which Indian opinion feels as keenly as the status of Indians abroad. It must have been clear to them in regard to East Africa that public opinion and this House and the Government of India have all together insisted on India being consulted fully and freely before any decision was arrived at affecting the position of Indians in that Colony. With these things before them, in regard to Ceylon, a decision vitally affecting the rights of our countrymen in that Colony has been arrived at without giving either the people of India or this House any opportunity of expressing themselves on a question of so grave a nature. I do not know whether the Government of India were consulted or not. I should like to know whether the Government of India demanded that they should be consulted in a matter of such fundamental importance. If they did put forward such a demand, I should further like to know what was the response to it from the other side. Did the Colonial Office, before it arrived at a final decision, give the Government of India an opportunity of making representations on behalf of our countrymen in Ceylon? If the Government of India failed in this respect, or if the Colonial Office did not give us an opportunity of making ourselves heard on a question of so grave a nature, we must enter our most emphatic protest against the course that has been pursued.

Sir, to those like myself who have gone out of India, nothing is more galling than the atmosphere of inequality in which Indians live and move and have their being outside this country. I do not for a moment mean to say that we have secured equal rights in our own country; but having been born and bred in this atmosphere, perhaps we have got slightly used to it. But whenever we go out of our land and find ourselves treated on a footing of inferiority as compared with other sections of the population outside this country, our blood boils. We find ourselves asking whether the entity known as the British Empire has any real existence for other people than the whites.

Sir, I have already said that the Governor of Ceylon proposed that only those Indians should be allowed to exercise the right of franchise who made a declaration renouncing all claim to the protection of the Government of India. It is best to look at this question from a concrete point of view. We all know what the condition of the Indian labourers in Ceylon was till about ten years ago. There was no one to look after them. Their rights were nobody's concern, and as a class they were deeply involved in debt, from which they could not extricate themselves while they lived there. It is only because of the increasing pressure of public opinion in India supported, I must say, as strongly as possible by the Government of India, that any improvement has been effected in their position. And what are the improvements that have been effected in the course of the last ten years? In the first place, an Indian labourer now starts free from debt. If an advance is made to him in India, the man who makes the advance does so at his own risk. I understand it cannot be recovered from the labourer by any process, civil or criminal. In the second place, I believe the old debts which were mostly irrecoverable were written off at the time the Government of India allowed emigration to Ceylon to continue. More important than this, Sir, is the fact that, 1 P.M. under pressure from the Government of India, changes have been made in law by which breaches of labour contracts have ceased to be penal. The importance of this will be recognised by those men who have taken any interest in the condition of their countrymen overseas during the last 15 years. The penal conditions governing the contracts of labour were the most powerful weapons in the hands of the capitalists to keep our countrymen down and to keep them tied down to particular estates. The abolition of the penal provisions enabled our countrymen to breathe freely and feel that they were to a certain extent free men.

Again, Sir, under the pressure exerted by the Government of India, the Ceylon Government have agreed that children under 10 shall not be allowed to be employed on estates. Recently we insisted that a minimum wage should be fixed for all labourers in Ceylon. Standard wages have now been prescribed and they came into effect on the 1st January, 1929. The payment of wages, which was formerly irregular and which led to labourers being involved in debt, has now been made far more regular. Indian labourers are now to be paid by the 10th of every month. This is not an exhaustive list of the reforms effected owing to the pressure of public opinion in this country, the interest taken by the Legislature and the intervention of the Government of India. There are certain questions that are still under discussion between the Government of India and the Government of Ceylon. I will mention only two of them. In the first place the Government of India have directed the attention of the Ceylon Government to the medical and sanitary requirements of Indians and asked that their housing accommodation should be better attended to than it has been hitherto. In the second place, the Colonial Government have been asked to provide better educational facilities for the education of the children of Indian labourers. The second request has been accepted in principle by the Ceylon Government. As regards the first point, I understand that a committee has been appointed to look into the question raised by the Government of India.

Now, Sir, what will be the effect in case Indians are forced to renounce their claim to the protection of the Government of India? Nobody seriously supposes that any of the reforms I have described would have been effected but for the pressure exerted by the people and the Government of India in unison. But the language used by the Governor of Ceylon in his despatch makes one fear that, should Indians give the undertaking he has asked for, not merely will all questions relating to future improvement be practically shelved, but that even their existing rights will be jeopardised. This question was discussed recently during the debate that took place in the Ceylon Legislative Council in December last, for a second time, on the Report of the Special Reforms Commission. The Colonial Secretary, referring to the speech of an Honourable Member during the debate, said when he wrote this despatch. "It was the intention of His Excellency that those privileges to which the Honourable Member made reference should be among the privileges to which claims would be renounced in certain circumstances." The Colonial Secretary, after this, used some reassuring language and said that the renunciation of a claim did not mean the same thing as its cancellation. But considering the special position of the Indian community in Ceylon, considering the stress that has been laid on this matter, we shall be deluding ourselves if we think children; there remain 470,000 labourers consisting equally of men and women. If we exclude those who have put in less than 5 years' residence and also women less than 30 years old, I think we may take it that the maximum number of Indian electors would be about 300,000. Now the maxim electorate under the recommendations of the Ceylon Commission would be about 1,800,000. Would the enfranchisement of 300,000 Indians in any way jeopardise the rights and interests of the rest of the population of Ceylon?

In order to understand the real cause of the trouble that now exists, I hope you will allow me to mention briefly one or two points before the House. I am sorry if I am exceeding the time limit, but I do hope that, in view of the importance of the matter, you will give me three or four minutes more.

Mr. President: In view of the importance of the matter, there will be many other Members willing to take part in the debate.

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: I promise, Sir, that I will not take long.

Mr. President: If the Honourable Member wants this question to be decided to-day, he should bring his remarks to a close now.

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: I do want the question to be decided to-day and without the least delay.

At present the Indians, because of their industry and enterprise, are playing a more and more important part in the economic life of Ceylon. We already know that the main agricultural industries of Ceylon depend on Indian labour. In the towns, the Indians' share in trade is increasing. Apart from this the House must bear in mind the position of Indians who emigrated from India long long ago, but who are called Ceylon Tamils. Their influence too is extending. They are coming to acquire a more and more dominant position in business and industry, and although these Ceylon Tamils are integral parts of the population of that Colony, yet I fear that the Cingalese, in considering the Indian question, lump together the Ceylon and Indian Tamils. That, Sir, is one reason, and a very important reason, of the prejudice that exists to-day against the Indians amongst the Cingalese.

Then, Sir, there is the fact that the existence of an Agent of the Government of India in Ceylon is not regarded with favour in certain quarters. To give only one instance, the Controller of Indian Immigrant Labour, who would otherwise be in supreme charge of Indian labour, now finds himself practically ousted by the Agent of the Government of India. It is not human nature, under these circumstances, that the presence of the Agent of the Government of India should be welcomed by the authorities in Ceylon.

In the third place, Sir, there is commercial influence against the Indian labourers. We have heard a great deal, Sir, of planters in various parts of the Empire. But in Ceylon it is not the planter that is responsible to-day for the prejudice that exists against the Indian. In Ceylon the word "planter" means the Superintendent of an estate. I understand that this functionary is sympathetic to the labour population under him. But he is only in the position of a Manager. He has to take his instructions either from the proprietors or from the managing agents and it is these managing agents, known as the agency firms, that objected to the improvement made in the condition of Indian labour when Ceylon labour was in a very different condition. Now it is not our fault that the conditions of Ceylonese labourers has not been improved. It is, I think, a stigma on the Government of Ceylon that they have neglected the welfare of the people of their own country. This is a warning to us as to what might happen to our countrymen.

Mr. President: Order, order. I think other Honourable Members who wish to participate in this debate must have a chance. It is very unfair and the Honourable Member will, I hope, realise it and discontinue his speech.

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: Half a minute, Sir, and I will finish. This shows what our countrymen might expect in case they had to renounce the protection of the Government of India. In a way we might say that we are really the benefactors of the labourers of Ceylon, for it is owing to the improvement in the condition of the Indian labourers that a movement has been set on foot in Ceylon to do something for the Ceylon labourers.

In view of what I have said, I trust that this House will accord its unanimous support to this Resolution. The Colonial Office probably seems to have thought that India is too much involved in her own domestic affairs to care about the fate of our countrymen elsewhere. This is a dangerous delusion and the sooner the Government of India take steps to disabuse the Colonial Office of this wrong notion, the better. In his despatch, the Governor of Ceylon speaks of his South African experience. We cannot have South African notions imported into other colonies. If the British Government propose to create another South Africa, I venture to say humbly but most emphatically that it would mean the beginning of the doom of the Empire. (Applause.)

Mr. President: Mr. K. C. Roy.

Mr. K. C. Roy (Bengal: Nominated Non-Official): Would you not like to adjourn for Lunch?

Mr. President: The Honourable Member can have only fifteen minutes to speak. Would the Honourable Member prefer to speak after Lunch?

Mr. K. C. Roy: I leave it to the House. That is a matter for the convenience of the House.

Mr. M. A. Jinnah and other Honourable Members: After Lunch.

The Assembly then adjourned for Lunch till Twenty Five Minutes to Three of the Clock.

The Assembly re-assembled after Lunch at Twenty Five Minutes to Three of the Clock, Mr. President in the Chair.

Mr. K. C. Roy: Sir, for the original Resolution I move to substitute the following:

"This Assembly recommends to the Governor General in Council that he be pleased to communicate to His Majesty's Government the respectful protest and regret of this House at the tentative acceptance by the Colonial Office of the proposals of the Government of Ceylon regarding franchise in so far as they make possession of a certificate of permanent settlement and renunciation of the protection of the Government of India by Indian emigrants a condition of eligibility to vote without affording an opportunity to the Government of India and to this House to express their views, and to urge upon His Majesty's Government that immediate steps be taken to secure the adoption of the original recommendations of the Donoughmore Commission, making five years' residence the basis of the franchise."

Sir, I have purposely used the word "tentative" because we have no information on the subject before us; and I have also put in the words "acceptance by the Colonial Office" and not "by His Majesty's Government". I think, Sir, the door is still open to us for negotiation. At the outset, I desire to pay my tribute to my Honourable friend, Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru who has said all that could be said on behalf of Ceylon Indians. Some of us who are interested in the problems of Indians in Ceylon cannot be too grateful to him. But my difference with him lies in two or three factors. The factors are these. When I read his Resolution, I at once concluded that he was imposing upon the Governor General in Council a duty which could not be discharged. He wanted the Governor General in Council to disallow the Ceylon Government's recommendation; he wanted the Government of India to restore the recommendation of the Donoughmore Commission. With the best of intentions in the world, the Governor General in Council could not have done these. However, Sir, he has amended his Resolution to that extent.

The second point that occurs to me, to which also he has made a reference, is the condition of Indians abroad. Sir, if you take an impartial retrospect of the condition of Indians who have gone out to the various parts of the British Dominions and Crown Colonies, you will realise at once that there has never been a gloomier period. In the Pacific, in Fiji, the Indians are now practically fighting for their rights. Three of the elected Members in Fiji resigned their seats and went out of the House on a question of policy, a contingency which I regret because I do not believe in resignations; fresh writs have been issued, but none have been forthcoming. This is the position in Fiji. In the Far East, in the Federated Malay States, Sir, as you are aware, the Indians are in a very bad condition. A motion on this subject is on the notice paper, and I do not know whether it will ever come up for discussion, because possibly the Federated Malay States are a British Protectorate. Then, Sir, coming to Africa, the East African position is as bad as bad can be. The British Cabinet, as far as I can find, is unwilling to take a decision, and possibly, Sir, the Hilton Young and Wilson Reports will be relegated to a Joint Committee of the House of Lords and of the House of Commons. But from our point of view a decision by His Majesty's Government would have been invaluable. But that is not to be and we shall be asked to risk a decision of the Joint Committee. This is the position in East Africa. If you look round His Majesty's Dominions you will find we are prohibited emigrants in most of these. Today, Sir, the fog-screen created by the Habibullah Mission has been slowly pierced and today the position in East Africa is far worse than it ever was before. This is not my wording, this is the wording of a telegram sent by the Transvaal Indian Congress to the Imperial Citizenship Association, Bombay, copies of which have been sent round to you as well as to Members of this House.

Under these circumstances, the Resolution which my Honourable friend, Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru, has placed before the House is timid and halting and not in keeping with the sentiments of this House as well as the sentiments of those outside. What does he want? He wants the Government of India to make a representation. He is asking the Governor General in Council to do things which it is their obvious duty to do. I should not be surprised at all if Mr. Bajpai tells me that this representation has already been made. Then what is the good of his asking us to practise this fine art of self-deception? It is a Resolution the wording of which is in perfect keeping with the constitution we had during the Viceroyalty of Lord Chelmsford? This Resolution, I believe, even in a thin House, is not in keeping with the traditions of this Assembly and the duties which it has from time to time performed.

Then, Sir, what do I want? Let the House examine the position in Ceylon. The position in Ceylon has been fully explained, and it is this, that for the first time in a Crown Colony an attempt is being made to introduce discrimination. Is it in keeping with the accepted policy of the British Government? I say, no. In war conferences, in Imperial conferences the policy has been distinctly laid down that there shall be no discrimination in British Crown Colonies, but we have been told now that Lord Passfield has accepted this doctrine of discrimination. I put it "tentatively" because the despatch does not bear the half-mark of the British Government. Lord Passfield's name is well known to most of us. His is an honoured name in India; he visited India several times; he is fully conversant with our position. It is surprising that a man of his knowledge, unless the proposal has been dictated by considerations of policy, has been a signatory to the despatch sent to the Ceylon Government dated 29th October. Let us see, what is the purport, the intention, of my amendment. I desire that the Government should communicate to His Majesty's Government the protest and regret of this House that this House has not been consulted. For this purpose I shall inform this House that the Donoughmore Report was published nearly two years ago. You know what happened after the Donoughmore Commission reported. On the 2nd June, His Excellency the Governor communicated his despatch to the Secretary of State for the Colonies, and on the 10th October, Lord Passfield sent out his reply. This was printed on October 20th and afterwards presented as a State Paper both in Ceylon and in England. What has really been the position of the Government of India for so many months and for so many years? The Ceylonese have in their possession the views of their Government. The British taxpayer has in his possession the opinion of the British Government. And here we are in India without any expression of opinion from the Government of India. I claim, Sir, that this has produced a great demoralising effect upon the Indian population in Ceylon. Till now, from the time of the publication of the Donoughmore Commission's Report, the Government of India have not favoured us with an expression of their views, as to what they think of the Report signed by the Donoughmore Commission and of the proposals of the Ceylon Government, as also of the reply to the memorial which was submitted by two Indian Members of the Ceylon Legislative Council. I claim that the Government of India have kept us absolutely in the dark, and it is by the merest chance that we have been asked to discuss this matter today. I balloted twice for a Resolution on Ceylon and my Honourable friend, Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru, was able to get an honourable place, seventh on the list today. Had there been a full House there would not have been the slightest chance of raising the Ceylon issue on the floor of this House. Under these circumstances the Ceylon issue would have been left to the Executive Government. On Sunday last there was a meeting of the Emigration Committee. My views of the Emigration Committee are well known and I have also no desire to go into what took place there. All I wish to say is we are entitled to know what views the Government of India expressed on the Donoughmore Commission's Report, on the proposals of the Ceylon Government and on the memorial submitted by the Indian Members of the Ceylon Legislative Council. I am sure, Sir, that the Government of India could not have lost any opportunity for the benefit of Indians; I am equally sure that, if there were any such opportunities, they have utilised them for the good of India; but I am not satisfied on one point, namely, that the transactions, if any, should have been withheld from us. I, therefore, consider it our duty to enter our respectful protest.

Now, Sir, the Member sitting on the Treasury Bench may say, "Pass your amendment on behalf of the House; but why drag in the Government of India?" That is because we have no indication that the Government of India have been consulted or that they have of their own accord given any expression of opinion to His Majesty's Government. That, Sir, is the position; and I want the House to consider, with due respect to our Secretary of State, whose good intentions we all acknowledge, how far it is consistent with his policy of "Dominion Status in action". Here is a most important transaction affecting 8,00,000 Indians in a colony, which by culture, by history and by civilisation is akin to us. Here is an attempt made to differentiate in a Crown Colony between a local native of Ceylon and an imported immigrant. What is our position so far as Dominion action goes? I do not know, Sir, whether at any stage the Secretary of State for India was consulted. The Secretary of State for India has a dual capacity, which I know from my experience as a member of the Indian Colonies Committee. He is the Head of the Government of India; he has got enormous power and overriding authority; he is also a member of the British Cabinet. That is his dual capacity. It may be that the British Cabinet discussed this proposal in a Cabinet meeting; it may be that he represented the Government of India, but he has voted as a British Cabinet Minister, I will not say that he has done it, but it may be that such a contingency exists. Where do the Government of India come in? Have the Government of India been consulted and have they published their views? Have they ever been called to a conference to decide this question? Nothing of the sort. And this is Dominion Status in action.

Now, Sir, what is the duty of this House? Time and again we have discussed these colonial proposals. Time and again we come to an amicable understanding with the Government of India that our position should not offend His Majesty's or any Government. These are wholesome maxims. But they are not just or fair political practices to the Members of this House or to Indians outside this House or to Indians in the colonies. Our clear duty is to enter our most emphatic and respectful protest against this discrimination. This is not the first time that discrimination has been sought to be made. Only recently an attempt was made to institute what is known as the Land Commission: the object of this Land Commission was to give lands on easy terms to everybody excepting Indians. I do not know what happened to it; but one discrimination leads to another. If this House permits, or leaves any room for doubt that we resent this discrimination, there may be more discriminatory laws in times to come. That point should be made clear. But, Sir, knowing as I do the methods of the Colonial Office, I fear that a mere representation couched in milk and honey as my Honourable friend has proposed, will not do; we ought to show the big stick (Hear, hear). The future of the Ceylon Government, the future of Ceylon is in our hands. They are dependant on us for their labour. For that, Sir, this House has a special responsibility, because we passed the Act, and so have the Government of India. If we cut off labour supplies tomorrow, the Ceylon Government cannot go on. The island of Ceylon is also dependant on us for their food supplies. In any representation that the Government of India may make, this point should be made absolutely clear, that in the event of any discriminatory legislation, the first and fundamental duty of this House, as well as of the Government, should be to stop further emigration. With these words, Sir, I commend my amendment to the vote of the House.

Mr. Arthur Moore: (Bengal: European): Sir, I think that in the whole House today there must be general agreement that Pandit Kunzru has called attention to a most important matter and that we are all, from the extreme right to the extreme left, with him. (Hear, hear). This is at any rate an aspect of Indian nationalism where we feel that we can all work together, and we do think that not only it is extraordinarily important that throughout the British Empire there should be a certain privileged position attaching to citizens of the Empire, so that although admittedly every part of the Empire is entitled to have its own immigration laws, a citizen of the British Empire should not be treated as if he were a complete foreigner and stranger who is called upon to take out naturalisation papers; but also we do feel that, in the case of the island of Ceylon, which is at our doors, and with which we have such important trade and intercourse, it is a very disturbing thing to find the possibility of such a law being passed, and passed without a realisation of the feeling that it must arouse in India. Therefore, Sir, it seems to me that the real question we have got to decide today is: what is the most effective form of action we can take and what course is open to us? Is the door open or is the door closed? I think that really we have got to choose between the Resolution of my friend, Pandit Kunzru, and the amendment of Mr. K. C. Roy. Mr. Roy describes his amendment as the big stick; he describes Mr. Kunzru's Resolution as milk and honey. I do not quite accept either description, but I feel that if all we can do is to frame a funeral wreath, then it may be better to accept Mr. K. C. Roy's amendment; but if the door is open, if negotiations are possible, if the thing is not a chose jugée, then I far prefer the Resolution of my friend, the Pandit. I do not think that the diplomatic effect of a Resolution from this House,—forwarded by the Governor General in Council to His Majesty's Government,—of protest and regret for their acceptance, (even if you qualify their acceptance by the word "tentative") will produce any favourable effect whatever. I think it is much more likely to be read as an acknowledgment that the protest comes too late, and I do not think it will be regarded as an effective threat.

Mr. Roy has just spoken of two possibilities of pressure. He referred to labour and he referred to food. We know quite well that those courses are not open to this House. We know that Indian labour goes to Ceylon for economic purposes, and that we cannot punish our own nationals, for that is what it will come to, merely to conduct a quarrel with the Government of Ceylon. We know also that we sell food to Ceylon for economic purposes, and we cannot again, in order to conduct a quarrel with the Government of Ceylon, prohibit the traders who are engaged in supplying food to the island of Ceylon or those who produce that food in this country; and furthermore, His Majesty's Government, which is the channel through which we have got to operate, is not the Ceylon Government, and it is not His Majesty's Government that is dependent either upon this food or upon this labour. Therefore, we have got to accommodate our means to our ends. We have got to attempt the most effective action open to us at this moment. I think we are entitled to believe,—and I was particularly glad in listening to the Honourable Pandit Kunzru to notice that he paid a tribute to the Government's action in the past both in Africa and also in regard to the improvement of the status of Indian labour in Ceylon,—I think we are entitled to believe that the Government have the very best intentions in this matter, and that after listening today's debate and having its hands strengthened, it will make a very great effort to see that, whatever space is left between the opening and the closing of the door, they will not allow that door to get shut permanently. Therefore, I suggest that the effective action for the House today to take is to support Pandit Kunzru as emphatically as possible, and I have no doubt that the Government, reinforced by that action, will take immediate steps to secure that any tentative acceptance, if such there be, does not become practical acceptance.

Munshi Iswar Saran (Lucknow Division: Non-Muhammadian Rural):

A word, if you will permit me, Sir, about the speech of my Honourable friend, Mr. Roy. He reminds me of a young man who was travelling in a boat and made a speech and thoroughly enjoyed it. He turned to a young lady friend of his, who was in the same boat and asked her "What do you think of my speech?" The young lady said, "The speech was very pointed, but not to the point". My Honourable friend has accused my friend, Pandit Hirday Nath, for having brought forward a very tame and halting Resolution. Is practical wisdom to be mistaken for timidity? He has talked a great deal about the big stick, but I fail to discover it in his amendment, unless it is concealed underneath the respectful protest which he wishes to lodge. I am very glad, Sir, that in future we on this side of the House can expect Mr. Roy to come forward with his big stick in dealing with such burning questions:

Now, Sir, I agree with my friend, Mr. Arthur Moore, that we are all indebted to Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru for having initiated this debate. On these occasions we are made aware of the misery and the agony of our present political position. A question like the one we are discussing at this moment brings home to us our degradation as nothing else can. The real solution, if I may be permitted to say so, lies not in the adoption of a reform in this country or in the removal of a grievance in another, but in the freedom of India and in the acquisition by Indians of the full rights of citizenship in their own country.

We may well ask, what is the position assigned to Europeans in Ceylon? Have they been treated in the same way as Indians have been treated in Ceylon? Obviously, the Europeans in Ceylon are not the inhabitants of Ceylon as are the Cingalese. This fact was not absent from the mind of His Excellency the Governor nor of the Donoughmore Commission. In their Report, at page 98, the Commission say:

"Some of the Europeans may be regarded as more or less permanent residents, but a large majority must be looked upon as having their main interests and domicile outside Ceylon."

They admit that most of the Europeans in Ceylon have their domicile as well as their interests outside Ceylon. Now the question arises, when the position of Europeans and Indians is similar, why should there be any discrimination between them? Why should you have one set of rules for Europeans and another set of rules for Indians? In the retention of this discrimination between the two communities, I submit, lies the root of future trouble, in it lies the root of a great deal of conflict which I hope may in time be averted. At page 9 of the Memorandum regarding the Indian franchise in Ceylon, this is what the Governor says:

"The Europeans also are not regarded as Ceylonese, but in respect of them apprehensions based on numbers and concentration do not arise. There is the obvious further point that Indian labourers for the most part have not enjoyed opportunities for the acquisition of education or of political experience comparable to those enjoyed by the Europeans. The general circumstances of their lives certainly are less conducive to the formation of an independent judgment, and not more conducive to the formation of a specifically Ceylonese outlook, on public affairs. It is feared in some quarters that the votes of a very large number of the Indians here would be at the disposal of high-caste personages from beyond the Palk Strait, who, if they thought it worth while, might manipulate them for purposes and in interests not necessarily appertaining to Ceylon nor unaffected by tendencies which neither Ceylonese nor Europeans would wish to see introduced."

I have considered it fair to read the entire passage in order to bring out the considerations which weighed with His Excellency the Governor in recommending a system which recognised discrimination between the two communities. I do not for a moment wish to say that we grudge the right that has been given to Europeans. They should have it. My point is that the same right should have been given to Indians. I advocate a process of levelling up and not levelling down. Subject to certain conditions, which are obvious, the treatment of Europeans and Indians should be the same, as long as Ceylon and India are in the Commonwealth. There should not be this glaring inequality between the treatment of these two communities.

I find myself in agreement with the remarks of Mr. Roy when he asks the representative of the Government of India in this House to tell us in clear and distinct language what they have been doing. I venture to hope that when he offers the explanation, we shall find it to be satisfactory. The point at issue is so obvious, the injustice is so flagrant, that a long speech is hardly necessary. I shall only say a word or two and then resume my seat.

It was only the other day that we read in the papers how an attempt was made in the House of Commons to show that Dominion Status was already in action in India. I ask, Sir, with all respect—it is a very timid and halting expression to use but I wish to use it all the same—is this Ceylon injustice a proof of Dominion Status in action? Is our treatment in Fiji, in East Africa, and in other parts of the Empire a proof of Dominion Status in action? In view of the trouble all over the Empire, I ask, is the more use of this expression going to convince people in this country that Dominion Status is already in action? It would be a very excellent expression and a very soothing expression if we only felt convinced of its truth and of its reality. I submit that it is only an oratorical expression used for the purpose of conveying a meaning and an impression which have no foundation to rest upon. I shall only tell Government and the Colonial Office and all those whom it might concern that, if this inequality is not done away with, if this wrong is not righted, the situation, bad as it is, will be worsened. They ought to understand it, and if they do not understand it, the blame will be theirs and not ours, because we have sounded the note of warning. We have told them how we feel the humiliation of our position, and if they do not improve it, they will have to thank themselves if any trouble happens or if the existing discontent and unrest become wider, deeper and more acute.

Mr. G. S. Bajpai (Joint Secretary, Department of Education, Health and Lands): I think, Sir, it might clear up the position if I intervene in the debate at this stage. I cannot claim for myself now the indulgence that is due to a complete newcomer, but I hope that the House will bear with me for such hesitancy of speech as may come of my interrupted association with the House.

My Honourable friend, Pandit Kunzru, has been congratulated, and deservedly congratulated, for the characteristic thoroughness and lucidity with which he has put forward the reasons in support of his Resolution. I would like, if I may, to add my tribute to the manner and the matter of his speech. I agree, and Government agree, with every section of this House that the question at issue is indeed a fundamental question, involving as it does the status of Indians in other parts of the British Empire, and that wherever, whether directly or indirectly, whether explicitly or by implication, whether consciously or unconsciously, there is a threat of the deterioration in the status of Indians resident in any part of the Empire, it is the bounden duty of the Government of India, as it is, I have no doubt the bounden duty of every one in this House, to stand up for equality of status for Indians. It follows therefore, that I am authorised by Government to accept the Resolution which my Honourable friend Pandit Kunzru has moved. Before proceeding further, I think, I ought to take up—I would not like to use the word challenge—to take up certain points which my Honourable friend Mr. K. C. Roy has made in the course of his speech, and also one particular point which Mr. Iswar Saran made, namely, what have the Government of India been doing up to this time, since the publication of the Donoughmore Commission's Report? I hope that all the Members of the House are as intimately conversant with the details of that Report as Mr. K. C. Roy appears to be. In that Report, with regard to the question of the franchise which is the question we are discussing now, it was definitely stated that the existing franchise was restricted in scope and should be modified by making five years' continuous residence the basis for eligibility to the vote for all sections of the community. No discrimination whatsoever was, again to use the words I have already used, explicitly or implicitly, suggested. In the circumstances there was nothing for the Government of India to do. The principle of equality of status for Indians, for which they have all along stood, was neither menaced nor jeopardised.

The next stage was when these proposals came up for discussion in the Legislative Council of Ceylon. I need not go into the details of that discussion. The upshot of it was, that, by a majority of three, the Legislative Council of Ceylon passed a Resolution in favour of imposing a literacy qualification upon the residential qualification which the Commission had recommended. There again the attitude adopted by the Government of India was what the principle I have already stated might lead one to expect. As the Resolution sought to make no discrimination between Indians and other sections of the community, the Government of India did not raise any objection. After that the correspondence between the Governor of Ceylon and His Majesty's Secretary of State was published. It is not necessary for me to recapitulate the substance of that despatch. The conclusion to be drawn from the despatch is perfectly clear, namely, that, in order to restrict the size of the Indian electorate, it has been suggested that not merely will the residential qualification apply, but that it shall be reinforced by certain declarations, one declaration being a declaration of renunciation of the special protection of the Government of India, and the other declaration being a declaration of intention to reside permanently in Ceylon. As soon as this correspondence was made available to the Government of India, the Government of India represented to His Majesty's Government that, consistently with their obligations to Indians in Ceylon, and consistently with the position which they have all along maintained as regards the status of Indians in other parts of the British Empire, it was not open to them to acquiesce in the conclusions which had been reached in the course of this correspondence; whether provisionally or otherwise.

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: May I put a question to my Honourable friend? Was the Government of India consulted before the Colonial Office despatch was sent out to Ceylon?

Mr. G. S. Bajpai: No, Sir. The Government of India were not consulted before the Ceylon despatch was sent out. Sir, the point that I was going to make was this, that as soon as it came to light that proposals had been put forward and accepted which aimed at the restriction of the size of the Indian electorate, indirectly, perhaps, but effectively, the Government of India made representations to His Majesty's Government.

Mr. K. C. Roy: May I ask the Honourable Member to tell the House whether the Government of India were at all consulted on the proposals of the Ceylon Government, or whether the Government of India made their representations after seeing the debate in the Ceylon Legislative Council?

Mr. G. S. Bajpai: I think that I have made the point perfectly clear. My Honourable friend asked whether before the Secretary of State for the Colonies addressed the Ceylon Government, he asked the Government of India to make any representation on the proposals of the Governor of Ceylon. I said, "No". That answers the question.

Mr. K. C. Roy: I want the Honourable Member to tell the House whether the representation which the Government of India made was made on the representation made by the Governor of Ceylon to His Majesty's Government.

Mr. G. S. Bajpai: There are, Sir, so many "representations" in the Honourable Member's question that it is rather difficult to follow it.

Mr. K. C. Roy: If you cannot follow, I am sorry for you, but what I wish you to tell the House is whether you were asked to express your views on the despatch which the Government of Ceylon sent to His Majesty's Government?

Mr. G. S. Bajpai: My Honourable friend is only repeating Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru's question in language which is more involved.

Mr. K. C. Roy: Mr. Kunzru asked whether the Government of India was consulted before Lord Passfield's despatch. That is not my point.

Mr. G. S. Bajpai: What the Pandit was asking was whether the Government of India were given an opportunity of making representations before the views of Lord Passfield were communicated to the Government of Ceylon. Obviously, the Government of India, if they had been given an opportunity, would have been given the opportunity on the basis of the Governor of Ceylon's proposal. There was nothing else to comment upon and, as I have said, the Government of India did not have that opportunity.

Mr. K. C. Roy: Then I understand that you made the representation after seeing the result of the discussion in the Ceylon Legislative Council.

Mr. G. S. Bajpai: No, Sir.

Mr. K. C. Roy: Then after receiving the report from the Agent!

Mr. G. S. Bajpai: I wish my Honourable friend had followed the newspapers as carefully as he expects us to follow them. The position is that the discussion in the Ceylon Legislative Council took place after the publication of the despatches. The Government of India made representations to His Majesty's Government as soon as the despatches were published. It was not necessary for them to wait for the debate in the Ceylon Legislative Council any more than it would have been consistent with their duty to wait for making representations, until this discussion took place in the House.

I am sorry that I was interrupted in the statement of the case in my own way. The position, as I have said, is that as soon as the Government of India became aware of the real purport of the proposals contained in that despatch they made representations to His Majesty's Government. Further, it has been said that the House has not had an opportunity of making its own views heard on this occasion. I think, Sir, that it is only fair to Government to concede that, if an opportunity for the expression of the views of the House has not offered itself, it is not through any fault of the Government. After all, Government do not control the hazard of the ballot; it is not in their power. The Government of India took the only constitutional step that was open to them, namely, to call into conference with them as soon as opportunity occurred, the members of the Standing Emigration Committee of the Legislature as well as prominent party leaders and Honourable Members of this House who were interested in this question. My Honourable friend, Mr. K. C. Roy, was one of them.

Mr. K. C. Roy: That was on Sunday last!

Mr. G. S. Bajpai: It is perfectly true, but how long has the House been in session? We called them into conference, and we propose to pass on their views, as also the views that have been expressed by Honourable Members already, or that may be expressed hereafter in the course of today's debate, to His Majesty's Government. But the substantial point is this, that the Government of India agree in the views expressed by the Pandit and others that His Majesty's Government be asked to reconsider the whole question because of the immensity of the issues involved. It is not that the Government of India wish to interfere unduly in the affairs of Ceylon, nor is it that they wish to arrogate to themselves the position of the protector of Indians for a day longer than is absolutely necessary; but, until the Indian community in Ceylon is capable of protecting its own interests, it is the business of the Government of India, it is their duty, a duty which they mean to discharge, to protect their interests to the best of their ability.

I now turn to one specific question. Is the door definitely closed to our representation? I say emphatically, no. The door is not closed.

Mr. M. A. Jinnah (Bombay City: Muhammadan Urban): Why not?

Mr. G. S. Bajpai: Why should it be?

Mr. M. A. Jinnah: I want to know the reasons why the door is not closed?

Dr. A. Suhrawardy (Burdwan and Presidency Divisions: Muhammadan Rural): If the door is not open, we shall force it open.

Mr. G. S. Bajpai: It seems to me that my Honourable friend, Dr. Suhrawardy, is also afflicted with the big stick mentality. I do not think that there is any occasion for anybody to force the door open at all. If my friend, Mr. Jinnah, will bear with me, while I read out the relevant extract from the despatch.

Mr. M. A. Jinnah: I do not want any despatch to be read out. My question is a very simple one. The Honourable Member has asserted that the door is still open and he said so most emphatically. I would like him to tell the House what are the reasons which makes him so hopeful.

Mr. G. S. Bajpai: I do not for a moment insinuate that my Honourable friend has asked that question in any spirit of hostility and my whole object in seeking his permission to read out a relevant passage from the despatch is to prove to him why we think that the.

Mr. M. A. Jinnah: Do not read that despatch, but tell me in your own words what is the position.

Mr. G. S. Bajpai: Very well. The despatch definitely says, "I propose to adopt your proposals". It does not say, "I have adopted your proposals". That is what the Secretary of State for the Colonies has stated to the Governor of Ceylon. I interpret that to mean that there is an avenue left to the Secretary of State for the Colonies to reconsider the matter, just the same as there is opportunity left to the Government of India to make representations. Further, it is not contended, either by the Secretary of State for the Colonies or by the Governor of Ceylon, that immediate steps shall be taken to introduce a particular franchise or a particular form of franchise. The Secretary of State in his reply very definitely says to the Governor: "You have raised this question of domicile. The question of domicile is a very difficult and technical one and I cannot off-hand say in what form I am going to accept it". It seems perfectly clear to me that when this question of domicile is being examined, we have

It seems perfectly clear to me that when this question of domicile is being examined, we have

[Sir Purshotamdas Thakurdas.]

Passfield's despatch. I will read it to the House in order that I may put before the House my apprehensions in this matter. Sir, the concluding portion of this despatch, dated 10th October, 1929, paragraph 10, reads thus:

"I propose that provision should be made for this qualification in the Order in Council."

Sir, I am not a lawyer, nor am I intimate with diplomatic language in State documents. I daresay that this means, "I have tentatively come to the conclusion which I will revise after hearing from the Government of India". If the Government of India in the relative Department have that assurance from His Majesty's Government or from the India Office, I will be very pleased to hear it. But I cannot help feeling that it is rather ominous that, where Indians are concerned to the extent of nearly three quarters of a million, and where Indians play a very important part in the development of a Colony, the Secretary of State for the Colonies should, without waiting to know what the Government of India think on a particular restriction which the Governor of Ceylon proposes to put on, pass an order. That, Sir, is to my mind, something which should make us think and think furiously. To that extent therefore I sympathise with what has generally fallen from my Honourable friend Mr. K. C. Roy.

Sir, Indians have lately been harassed in various parts of the British Empire ceaselessly. The previous speakers have already spoken about the unenviable position of the Government of India in the Department of Emigration as to the way in which they have to watch the interests of India in various quarters. In East Africa there is the Hilton Young Commission's Report and the Wilson Report, which still continue to hold the field, given the greatest anxiety to Indians in Kenya, and I am sure, to the Government of India too. Then there is a fresh question in Fiji, which has been already referred to. There is the question in South Africa, and if one is to draw an inference from the news about the sailing of a passenger lately, Mr. Tyson I suppose had to be deputed specially to South Africa in order to deal with the situation which has lately been created during the temporary absence of Sir Kurma Reddy, the Agent of the Government of India in South Africa. As if all this was not enough, there comes the question from Ceylon, and the most anxious part of the whole thing is that Lord Passfield, the Secretary of State for the Colonies, has, as looks to me from the extract I have before me, given his blessing to the suggestion of the Governor of Ceylon. It is quite possible that the Government of India, with all the great power which they enjoy,—I do not know whether they enjoy that power vis-à-vis the Colonial Office, but they certainly enjoy it vis-à-vis this House,—may have the question reopened. But that is hardly satisfactory. What is the position of the Government of India in this connection? The Governor of Ceylon may send a despatch which is available to the Cingalese and the people who want to minimise the Indian voting there; the Colonial Office passes an order which is available to the public: it is only for us,—Heaven knows for what sins of Indians except that she has not an executive responsible to her people,—it is only for us to be ignorant till now of what the Government of India have done. It is a most unsatisfactory state of affairs, and although one would not like to criticise the Government of India as at present constituted because of their constitutional position, one cannot help protesting against the manner in which these restrictions are being enforced on the Government of India. To that extent, therefore, our protest is most justified, and I think one is entitled to protest rather bitterly that the Secretary of State for India should not permit the Government of India to publish what they have done till now in this connection. Knowing as I do how the Honourable Member in charge of the Department, Sir Muhammad Habitullah, is keen to get for Indians all that is due to them in every Colony and in every Dominion

Mr. B. Das: He is not here.

Sir Purshotamdas Thakurdas: There are worthy representatives of his here. Knowing as I do that, I believe that the Government of India must be doing their best. But I think, Sir, it would be more satisfactory to the public and to this House if they could see the relevant despatches and telegrams before them in black and white. To that extent I think my Honourable friend, Mr. Bajpai, will agree that we in this House are at a disadvantage; and the Government of India should not be surprised if persons who have more inside knowledge of these things than some of us, for instance Mr. K. C. Roy, look at things with a suspicious eye. The position of the Government of India in this matter is unenviable, and whilst one does not wish to criticise them, one cannot help saying that it is highly regrettable that the Secretary of State for the Colonies should have thought fit to pass an order of this nature, even though it be tentative, without consulting the Government of India. I would like in the meantime to believe that the door is still open. Mr. Bajpai will readily recognise the undesirability of hearing a question reconsidered after a decision has been taken, even though tentatively, as compared to the more natural position that the Government of India should have had a say in this matter before the Colonial Secretary thought fit to pass any orders at all. I therefore feel, Sir, that our grievance is, if not against the Government of India for not telling us what they have done till now, certainly against the Colonial Office for having overlooked the Government of India and for having treated the Government of India with what I would call very scant courtesy and consideration which appear to have been shown to the India Office and the Secretary of State for India in this connection, I would like to speak subject to correction, but if there is no correction coming from the other side, I am entitled to infer that the Secretary of State for India was not consulted in this connection, and to that extent I think this House has a grievance against the Colonial Office and against His Majesty's Government.

Sir, the Resolution which is before this House has certain natural corollaries to it. If, as my Honourable friend Mr. Bajpai thinks, the door is open, and if we get what we seek today, as stated in the various lucid speeches which have been made, we have nothing more to say. But should the Colonial Office persist in upholding the suggestions of the Governor of Ceylon, the course of this House is clear and I think admits of no alternative. One wishes it were possible in this debate not to mention anything of what we may have to do hereafter, but I feel very strongly that, after passing this Resolution, the House will have to follow it up, should the Colonial Office not comply with what we consider to be the bare rights of Indians there. There can be no half-way house in the course that we shall have to follow. I believe, Sir, that the handicaps that have been sought to be put upon Indians there, at the best, can be said to be short-sighted and greatly wanting in statesmanship. We have been told that the cult of those in India whose ideal is Independence is misguided: I myself strongly think so. But here is His Majesty's Government which gives them handles and which makes some of us who wish to work against this Independence cult in India halt for a reply when we are faced with this sort of position. What justification was there for Lord Passfield to pass this order, knowing as he should do that Indians have played a very important part in the prosperity of Ceylon up till now? Sir, if the British Empire wishes to have the Indian only when and where it needs him and no more after that, and even then in a manner which should only entitle Indians to what would be looked upon as a seventh class passage as against a first class passage which the white man enjoys in Ceylon, truly can the Indian say that he has no use for such an Empire. It is to my mind most pusillanimous to think of even suggesting a thing like this after a Commission had unanimously recommended something which the Indians in Ceylon and the Government of India on behalf of Indians here were prepared to accept. I therefore feel that those who vote for this Resolution today must be prepared to realise what it means should His Majesty's Government not be prepared to do Indians the bare justice which we seek from them at this stage. I feel that there should be no misunderstanding about what this Resolution's natural corollary is. I hope that my Honourable friend, Mr. Bajpai's hopes regarding getting the Colonial Office to do the right thing will materialise. Should they not materialise, this House will have to keep a sharp look-out and cannot falter until they secure to the Indians in Ceylon what they are entitled to.

Sir Darcy Lindsay (Bengal: European): Sir, very few words of mine are necessary to give my entire endorsement on Pandit Kunzru's Resolution. I am strongly with him, Sir, at the grave injustice that has been done to India. I feel, Sir, that this House should raise the strongest protest at the action of the Government of Ceylon and the Colonial Office (Hear, hear) in arriving at this decision without any consultation with a very important partner in the Empire. (Hear, hear.) That is the point that I wish to emphasise, Sir. If we are members of the British Empire, we demand equal rights of partnership in that Empire. (Hear, hear and applause.) Here we have a case that vitally concerns us and yet the Governor of Ceylon and the Colonial Office throw us overboard for their own ends, they do not consult us at all and arrive at a decision of vital moment that is most injurious. That is what I feel, Sir, and we should show as vehement a protest as possible. I agree with my Honourable friend, Mr. Bajpai, that the door is still open. If it is not open, well then, we must re-open it. (Hear, hear and applause.) It must be borne in mind that while these despatches have passed between the Governor and the Secretary of State for the Colonies, the matter has still to be brought before the Ceylon Legislative Council and that is why I agree with my Honourable friend that the door is still open.

Mr. G. S. Bajpai: If I may interrupt my Honourable friend for a minute, I may say that the matter had been before the Ceylon Legislative Council but His Majesty's Government have not yet made any Order in Council.

Sir Darcy Lindsay: I am sorry that that portion of the door is apparently not still open. But as I remarked before, there are always possibilities of re-opening a door (Hear, hear) and that is where we must make our greatest effort. It appears, Sir, on the face of it that in order to get these reforms through Council something had to be done to placate a certain section of the population and it looks to me that the easiest way to attain that end was thought to be throw overboard. . .

Dr. A. Subrawardy: Sacrifice the minorities.

Sir Darcy Lindsay: Throw overboard what may possibly be regarded as the weaker side. There, Sir, I am not in agreement with the Government in taking that action and especially in taking that action without considering the consequences, as I said before, to another partner. It is a matter, as my Honourable friend, Mr. Moore, has expressed, of vital moment throughout the Empire and on those grounds alone it was surely the only right that the party most affected should be consulted. Sir, I again wholeheartedly support the Resolution so ably put before the House by my Honourable friend, Pandit Kunzru. (Applause.)

Nawab Sir Sahibzada Abdul Qaiyum: (North-West Frontier Province: Nominated Non-Official): Sir, I do not think it is necessary for me to make a long speech on this motion. I shall be content with simply associating myself with the views expressed by Sir Darcy Lindsay and some of the other speakers. I do not know at what stage the Government of India undertook to represent the case of Indians in Ceylon to the Home Government, but if, as I understand, the door is still open for discussion and all that the Colonial Secretary suggested in his despatch was that he intended to accept the views expressed, by the Governor of Ceylon, I should think that the door is really still open and that no final orders have been passed by the Colonial Secretary on the subject. I should therefore hope that the Government of India will try their best to solve this question of the intended injustice to the full satisfaction of the Indians in Ceylon and will not be content with the mere representation of their own views or the submission of the opinion of this House on the subject to the Secretary of State for the Colonies. This is all that I have to say, Sir.

Mr. M. A. Jinnah: Sir, I listened to the speech of the Honourable Member speaking on behalf of the Government and he was, I observed, as indignant and as enthusiastic, and he protested almost as any extremist in this country would have protested, both by his language and by his tone and by his gestures, (Laughter) that this was a monstrous injustice done to the people of India, whose guardians and trustees are sitting on that Treasury Bench, on whose behalf he was speaking. Sir, I welcome that indignation and I welcome that feeling which was expressed by the Honourable Member on behalf of the Government of India. Therefore, we are on common ground so far, that this will not do. I will not use any stronger language than that. This will not do. It raises up a very big question, not only a question of the three-quarter of a million people of India who happen to be there. But as has been pointed out by various speakers—and I wish to emphasise it—it raises a paramount issue as to whether India is to be a Dominion within the British Commonwealth or not, and it raises a very serious issue indeed. So far we are on common ground. But what puzzles me very much—and I regret it—is that I have not got any definite information from the Government of India.

[Mr. M. A. Jinnah.]

It seems to me that you stand there as the Government of India, thoroughly humiliated in this business. I wanted to know from the Honourable Member—here is an issue of paramount importance both to those who are in Ceylon and to this country at large—whether the Government of India or the Secretary of State had any intimation before orders were passed on the 10th of October, by the Secretary of State for the Colonies. I understand that no intimation of any kind was given. Am I correct?

Mr. G. S. Bajpai: The date of the despatch is 10th October.

Mr. M. A. Jinnah: Orders have been passed—and here I will not pitch my forensic ability as observed by the Honourable Member against a bureaucrat there, but I appeal to you, read the English language for yourself, and say whether the orders have not been passed. And when did you come to know of them? You have not mentioned it yet; I should like to know that from the Honourable Member. When did the Government of India come to know of it and how? Through the good efforts of my friend, Mr. K. C. Roy, who runs the Associated Press, or otherwise? How did you come to know of that? You have not told us. And when you did come to know of it, what did you do? You did nothing, and still you say that the door has not been closed. Don't you understand that the Government of India are thoroughly humiliated? Where is your Secretary of State for India? Is he living in London or not? What has he done? Did you communicate with him at once and what has happened since as result of it, and what is the substance of the communication, if any, that has taken place? You tell me here today that you hope that those orders do not close the door. And then further, the Honourable Member added that, even apart from that, such a big question as that surely must be reconsidered. I say the self-respect of the Government of India is at stake; and why are you sitting there humiliated, and not able to answer us today here as to what you have done, and acknowledging that you are devoid of self-respect, and you hope, because of a word here and there in the despatch, which you are hugging, that the door is still open? Well, Sir, I say the Treasury Bench cannot deserve any other treatment except the treatment that they are getting from the Colonial Secretary because they are not a responsible government.

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: Sir, before I say anything with reference to the reply given by my Honourable friend, Mr. Bajpai, I should like to dispose of my Honourable friend, Mr. Roy, in a few words.

Mr. K. C. Roy: I am very glad that the Honourable Member is going to say very few words about me.

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: My Honourable friend, sitting, as he does, on those Benches, I have no doubt, often finds himself in a difficult position. He has perhaps not infrequently to keep thoughts and feelings to himself, and it is not unnatural that those pent up thoughts and feelings should seek an outlet on an occasion like this. I do not therefore grudge him the relief that he has sought and found at my expense this afternoon. My Honourable friend said, in the course of his speech, that he had given notice of a Resolution on this subject twice before. I was therefore very curious to find out what his Resolutoin was.

I thought it must have been something which would have been strong meat for the Government, but his Resolution ran as follows:

"This Assembly recommends to the Governor General in Council to make an immediate representation to His Majesty's Government that Lord Passfield's tentative despatch on the Donoughmore Commission's Report relating to the rights and status of Indians in Ceylon is unacceptable to this House and to urge upon His Majesty's Government the revision of the decision with a view to enable Indians in Ceylon to enjoy fullest rights along with other subjects of His Majesty under any new constitution that may be inaugurated."

Well, Sir, I do not find here even a drop of the strong wine of respectful protest. If my Resolution was milk and honey, I fear, Sir, this is milk and water. Perhaps, Sir, the fact that my Resolution was coming up put new energy into him and induced him to give notice of the amendment which he has moved. If that is so, I may well congratulate myself on that fact.

Coming, Sir, to the reply of my Honourable friend, Mr. Bajpai, I am glad to find that Government are prepared to accept my Resolution. That indeed is the least that they can do in view of their special responsibility for the protection of Indians overseas. But, Sir, there is one important fact to be borne in mind in this connection. Reference has been made to it already by my Honourable friends, Mr. Jinnah and Sir Purshotamdas Thakurdas, whether the Secretary of State for the Colonies has given his final decision or not, we have to remember that the Ceylon Government recently accepted the reforms scheme on the basis of the approval he has given to the proposals made by the Governor. This shows, Sir, that our position is a particularly difficult one at this juncture, and we shall need all the force at our disposal to make His Majesty's Government do justice to us in this connection. I do not know, Sir, how so important a despatch was allowed to go out by the India Office without giving any opportunity to the Government of India to express their views on the matter. Knowing as I do the solicitude of Mr. Wedgwood Benn for the rights of Indians overseas, it is difficult for me to believe that he could have been a party to this decision, had he known its full implications. It seems to me, Sir, that the department that deals with emigration at the India Office ought to be better organised and ought to be more alert. In a vital matter of this kind the Secretary of State for India ought to have been informed of the important bearing of the decision of the Colonial Office on Indian rights throughout the Empire.

We still hope, Sir, since my Honourable friend opposite thinks the door of negotiation is open, that an honourable settlement might be found. But should the worst come to the worst, let us remember that we are not absolutely without resource. We have got the power to protect our rights and our dignity. We have used those powers in the past. The history of South Africa, of British Guiana, of Fiji affords more than one instance of our power to protect the self-respect and honour of our countrymen abroad. Should it be necessary to use that power in this connection also, I trust that the Government of India will not hesitate to do so. My Honourable friend, Mr. Arthur Moore, said that as Indians went to Ceylon to improve their economic opportunities, it would be hard on them to prevent them from going out to that country. Sir, even my Honourable friend, Mr. Arthur Moore, will admit that the balance of advantage lies on the side of Ceylon, and if that Colony is so ungrateful as not to recognise its obligations to those people who have made that Colony flourishing, we should at any rate know what to do—we shall place honour before pecuniary advantage. I trust, Sir, that when my Honourable friend, Mr. Bajpai, deals again with this subject, he will impress this aspect of it prominently on the mind of His Majesty's Government and inform them that, neither in this House nor outside it, is there the least divergence of opinion in this country on the issue of the status of Indians abroad.

(Mr. G. S. Bajpai rose in his place.)

Mr. President: Is there anything which the Honourable Member wants to say?

Mr. G. S. Bajpai: I wish to say a few words, Sir, in answer to my Honourable friend, Mr. Jinnah.

Mr. President: If there is anything which the Honourable Member wishes to say, anything of substance, I will allow him to speak; I hope he knows that he has no right of reply.

Mr. G. S. Bajpai: I was not aware, Sir, that I had no right of reply because I have spoken only once; but if you will give me permission, Sir, I should like to say a few words.

Mr. President: I am perfectly willing to give permission if there is anything of substance which the Honourable Member wishes to say.

Mr. G. S. Bajpai: My Honourable friend, Mr. Jinnah, has asked me certain questions on points of substance and I think it is only right that the House should have the answer to those questions.

Mr. M. A. Jinnah: I asked the questions when the Honourable Member was on his legs.

Mr. President: The Honourable Member was perfectly entitled to answer those questions when the Honourable Member put them.

Mr. G. S. Bajpai: If I may say so, I was under the impression that I would have an opportunity of answering them later on.

Mr. President: He should study his Standing Orders.

Mr. G. S. Bajpai: I shall apply myself to the Standing Orders hereafter, Sir.

Mr. President: Does the Honourable Member (Mr. K. C. Roy) wish to withdraw his amendment?

Mr. K. C. Roy: Yes, Sir, because we are very anxious to have a unanimous vote.

Mr. President: Does the House wish to hear Mr. Bajpai again? (Honourable Members: "Yes, yes.") Mr. Bajpai.

Mr. G. S. Bajpai: Sir, I shall not take more than five minutes, if as much as that. Mr. Jinnah asked when it was that the Government of India came into possession of the information regarding the proposals made by the Government of Ceylon and the reply of the Secretary of State for the Colonies. The Government of India came into possession of the facts when these despatches were published

Mr. M. A. Jinnah: When?

Mr. G. S. Bajpai: Early in November; and as soon as the Government of India came into possession of these facts, they made representations to His Majesty's Government. That answers the first question.

Mr. M. A. Jinnah: How did you come to know of the position?

Mr. G. S. Bajpai: By the fact of publication.

Mr. M. A. Jinnah: By the newspapers?

Mr. G. S. Bajpai: From the despatches.

Maulvi Muhammad Yakub: You were not officially consulted?

Mr. G. S. Bajpai: I have already said that we were not officially consulted.

Mr. B. Das: Did not the Secretary of State for India write to you?

Mr. President: Order, order.

Mr. G. S. Bajpai: The second point, Sir, which the Honourable the Leader of the Independent Party raised was why was it that we took it for granted that this question was an open question

Mr. M. A. Jinnah: I did not say that: I did not ask you why you took it for granted; I said you said that the question was an open one and your reason was that the correct interpretation of the despatch of the Colonial Secretary is this: I beg to differ from you, that is all.

Mr. G. S. Bajpai: Where there is a difference of opinion, it is not possible for any one individual to say that his opinion is better than that of another gentleman; but I would in all humility draw the attention of the Honourable Member to the language used by the Secretary of State for the Colonies. The language is, "I propose to adopt". He proposes to adopt

Mr. M. A. Jinnah: Kindly read the end of it.

Mr. G. S. Bajpai: It is his intention to adopt.

Mr. M. A. Jinnah: Read it to the House if you like.

Mr. G. S. Bajpai:

"I propose to adopt your suggestions under which, subject to special provisions being made for British subjects not domiciled in Ceylon being allowed to qualify for the franchise in accordance with the conditions of the present constitution, domicile should be the standard test for inclusion in the register."

Does the Honourable Member wish me to read any further?

Mr. M. A. Jinnah: Yes; go on further.

Mr. G. S. Bajpai:

"The definition of domicile involves legal questions of much difficulty and complexity and the qualification would hardly be suitable if it stood by itself. The difficulty would, however, be overcome by your proposal that the applicant, provided he can furnish satisfactory evidence of five years' residence, should be qualified for the vote on the production of a certificate of permanent settlement granted by some duly appointed officer. I propose that provision should be made for this qualification in the Order in Council."

[Mr. G. S. Bajpai.]

I do not think, Sir, that the whole passage which I have read out to the House at the request of my Honourable friend converts the word "propose" into the word "decide".

I will now refer for a brief moment to what my friend, Pandit Kunzru, had to say as regards the Government of India bringing the full implications of this controversy to the notice of His Majesty's Government. It is the intention of the Government of India to put His Majesty's Government in full possession of the views expressed by this House today. And not merely that; in consonance with the terms of the Resolution, it will be the duty of the Government of India to point out to His Majesty's Government, as they have already pointed out, that the proposals as they stand are not acceptable.

Mr. M. A. Jinnah: May I ask one question? Between November and today, have you had any indication, either from the Colonial Secretary or the Secretary of State for India, that the door is still open?

Mr. G. S. Bajpai: We have had no indication, Sir, either from the India Office or from the Secretary of State for the Colonies that the door is closed.

Mr. President: The question is that Mr. K. C. Roy be given permission to withdraw his amendment.

The amendment was, by leave of the Assembly, withdrawn.

Mr. President: The question is that the following Resolution be adopted:

"This Assembly recommends to the Governor General in Council that the proposals of the Government of Ceylon regarding franchise, which have been accepted by the Colonial Office, in so far as they make possession of a certificate of permanent settlement and renunciation of the protection of the Government of India by Indian emigrants a condition of eligibility to vote should not be put into effect and that immediate steps should be taken to secure the adoption of the original recommendations of the Donoughmore Commission making five years' residence the basis of the franchise."

The motion was adopted.

The Assembly then adjourned till Eleven of the Clock on Wednesday, the 12th February, 1930.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

Wednesday, 12th February, 1930.

The Assembly met in the Assembly Chamber of the Council House at Eleven of the Clock, Mr. President in the Chair.

THE INDIAN INCOME-TAX (AMENDMENT) BILL.

PRESENTATION OF THE REPORT OF THE SELECT COMMITTEE.

The Honourable Sir George Schuster (Finance Member): Sir, I beg to present the Report of the Select Committee on the Bill further to amend the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, for certain purposes. (Amendment of sections 14, 25A, etc.)

THE INDIAN MERCHANDISE MARKS (AMENDMENT) BILL.

PRESENTATION OF THE REPORT OF THE SELECT COMMITTEE.

Mr. K. C. Neogy (Dacca Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I beg to present the Report of the Select Committee on the Bill further to amend the Indian Merchandise Marks Act, 1889.

THE COURT-FEES (AMENDMENT) BILL.

PRESENTATION OF THE REPORT OF THE SELECT COMMITTEE.

Rai Sahib Harbilas Sarda (Ajmer-Merwara: General): Sir, I beg to present the Report of the Select Committee on the Bill further to amend the Court-fees Act, 1870, for a certain purpose.

THE INDIAN RAILWAYS (AMENDMENT) BILL.

PRESENTATION OF THE REPORT OF THE SELECT COMMITTEE.

The Honourable Sir George Rainy (Member for Commerce and Railways): Sir, I beg to present the Report of the Select Committee on the Bill further to amend the Indian Railways Act, 1890, for certain purposes.

THE INDIAN LAC CESS BILL.

The Honourable Sir George Rainy (Member for Commerce and Railways): Sir, I move for leave to introduce a Bill to provide for the creation of a fund for the improvement and development of the cultivation, manufacture and marketing of Indian lac. By the Indian Lac Cess Act of 1921 a cess was imposed on the export of lac, and its administration was entrusted to the Lac Association. Recently the Lac Association has expressed a wish to be relieved of its responsibilities on the ground that it does not feel that in all respects it is fully able to discharge them. It therefore has become necessary to provide otherwise for the control and administration of the cess. Also it was necessary to take into consideration a recommendation of the Royal Commission on Agriculture for the constitution of a body somewhat on the lines of the Central Cotton Committee. This Bill proposes to repeal the Act of 1921 and to set up a new Committee for the administration of the cess. Sir, I move.

[Sir George Rainy.]

The motion was adopted.

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: Sir, I introduce the Bill.

THE INDIAN COMPANIES (AMENDMENT) BILL.

The Honourable Sir George Rainy (Member for Commerce and Railways): Sir, I move for leave to introduce a Bill further to amend the Indian Companies Act, 1913, for certain purposes. This Bill, Sir, is limited in its scope. Its object is to provide more adequately for the audit of Companies' accounts and to prepare the way for the creation of an autonomous association of accountants throughout India. Under the existing law, the powers to grant Auditors' Certificates and to make rules on the subject rest with the Local Government. The Bill provides for the transfer of these powers to the Government of India, and it also provides for the setting up of a Central Accountancy Board with local Accountancy Boards in the various provinces. The scheme embodied in the Bill is the result of prolonged consideration and a very full discussion with those interested in the subject. Sir, I move.

The motion was adopted.

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: Sir, I introduce the Bill.

THE INDIAN TARIFF (AMENDMENT) BILL.

The Honourable Sir George Rainy (Member for Commerce and Railways): Sir, I move for leave to introduce a Bill further to amend the Indian Tariff Act, 1894, for certain purposes. This Bill, Sir, covers a number of minor changes in the tariff, and I think it will be necessary for me to refer to only one of them. The one to which I shall refer is that the Bill provides for the removal of the duty on barks for tanning, that is mainly wattle bark. All the other changes are quite small. Sir, I move.

The motion was adopted.

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: Sir, I introduce the Bill.

THE STEEL INDUSTRY (PROTECTION) BILL.

The Honourable Sir George Rainy (Member for Commerce and Railways): Sir, I move for leave to introduce a Bill to amend the law relating to the fostering and development of the steel industry in British India. In this Bill it is proposed to make two changes, the necessity of which has been established by experience. The first affects the duty on tie-bars. When the Steel Industry (Protection) Act, 1927, was passed into law, it was intended that tie-bars should be subject to the same protective duty as steel bars. It has become clear, however, that as the law is worded, effect has not been given to that intention. It is therefore necessary to change the wording of the relevant entry in the Schedule.

In the second place, under the existing law, steel bars under half inch diameter are exempt from the protective duty. It has been found that a special manufacture has grown of bars of 31/32 or 15/16 inch in diameter and these bars are imported into India in increasing quantities, and compete with the half inch bars manufactured by the Tata Iron and Steel Company. It has become evident, therefore, that there is a loophole in the tariff which requires to be closed. The Bill proposes to make subject to the protective duty all steel bars over 7/16 inch in diameter. Sir, I move.

The motion was adopted.

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: Sir, I introduce the Bill.

THE DANGEROUS DRUGS BILL.

The Honourable Sir George Schuster (Finance Member): Sir, I beg to move that the Bill to centralise and vest in the Governor General in Council the control over certain operations relating to dangerous drugs and to increase and render uniform throughout British India the penalties for offences relating to such operations, as reported by the Select Committee, be taken into consideration.

The purpose of this measure is clearly explained in the Statement of Objects and Reasons. I think it would be as well if I read two paragraphs from that Statement to the House:

"In view of the obligations undertaken by the Government of India by ratifying the Geneva Dangerous Drugs Convention, 1925, and the existing confusion of the laws governing the traffic in dangerous drugs in British India, it has become necessary to enact a Central Dangerous Drugs Act. The obligations that have been so undertaken by the Central Government are two-fold; firstly, in regard to the regulation of international traffic in all the drugs covered by the Convention, and, secondly, in regard to the regulation of the manufacture of, and internal traffic in, certain specified drugs, such as cocaine and morphine.

The subject matter of the Bill is one that, under the Devolution Rules, is partly provincial, but the Local Governments have assented to the passing of Central legislation on the subject in view of the special advantages of such legislation in the circumstances. In addition to centralising and vesting in the Governor General in Council the control of certain operations relating to dangerous drugs, the proposed Bill renders uniform, and in some cases increases, the penalties for certain offences relating to dangerous drugs."

[Sir George Schuster.]

Also I will take his advice and look back into the old reports of this House and read up the remarks of Dr. S. K. Datta. There are certain things which can be said in favour of the policy of the Government of India of which I think my Honourable friend has not drawn quite a fair picture. He talked, for example, of exports to China, but the exports to China were stopped many years ago. Exports to other places in the Far East are being extinguished over a period of 10 years, half of which is already gone. I think the Government of India can claim to have set a very fine example to the rest of the world by saying that revenue considerations would not stand in the way of their action in this matter. ("Hear, hear" from the Official Benches.)

With regard to the questions affecting the internal control of the consumption of opium, etc., the powers, as my Honourable friend knows quite well, of the Central Government are limited. But the Central Government are doing their best to take a lead in this matter. As is well known to Members of this House, a special inquiry was started some two years ago into what are known as the "black spots" for the consumption of opium and we have now invited the Provincial Governments to attend a conference at Simla early in May further to discuss the policy in this particular matter. I think, therefore, Sir, that in taking this action and in introducing this Bill, although in this we may be going no further than the matter has been carried by the Geneva Convention, the Government of India are living up to their record on these subjects, and in future, I hope, as in the past, the Government of India will continue to set an example to the rest of the world.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That the Bill to centralise and vest in the Governor General in Council the control over certain operations relating to dangerous drugs and to increase and render uniform throughout British India the penalties for offences relating to such operations, as reported by the Select Committee, be taken into consideration."

The motion was adopted.

Clauses 2 and 3 were added to the Bill.

Chapters II, III, IV and V were added to the Bill.

Schedules I and II were added to the Bill.

Clause 1 was added to the Bill.

The Title and Preamble were added to the Bill.

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: Sir, I beg to move that the Bill, as amended, be passed.

The motion was adopted.

AMENDMENT OF STANDING ORDERS.

The Honourable Sir James Crerar (Home Member): Sir, I beg to move for leave to amend the Standing Orders of the Legislative Assembly in the following manner:

"That after sub-order (3) of Standing Order 40 the following new sub-order be inserted:

"(3A) If the Chairman is unable to be present at any meeting of the Committee, the person present who is next in the order given in sub-order (3) may preside and exercise the powers of the Chairman."

Sir, I think that a very brief explanation of the purpose of the proposed amendment will suffice. Standing Order 40 prescribes in a mandatory form that, when the Honourable the Law Member is a Member of the Assembly, he shall be the Chairman of all Select Committees on Bills. When there is a considerable amount of business for consideration by Select Committees, experience has shown that a great deal of inconvenience and delay is caused by this mandatory provision, and therefore it is desirable to amend it in such a manner that it will be possible for two or more Select Committees to conduct their business simultaneously.

Sir, I move.

The motion was adopted.

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: Sir, I move that the proposed amendment be referred to a Select Committee.

The motion was adopted.

ELECTION OF MEMBERS TO THE SELECT COMMITTEE ON THE AMENDMENT OF STANDING ORDERS.

Mr. President: I have to announce that nominations for the Select Committee on the amendment of Standing Orders will be received up to 12 noon on Saturday the 15th February, and the election, if necessary, will be held in this Chamber on Tuesday, the 18th February, 1930. Under Standing Order 56(2) the Committee will be composed of the President, the Deputy President and seven Members elected by the Assembly by means of the single transferable vote.

The Assembly then adjourned till Eleven of the Clock on Thursday, the 13th February, 1930.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

Thursday, 13th February, 1930.

The Assembly met in the Assembly Chamber of the Council House at Eleven of the Clock, Mr. President in the Chair.

MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT.

STRIKE ON THE GREAT INDIAN PENINSULA RAILWAY.

Mr. N. C. Kelkar (Bombay Central Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I beg to ask for leave to make a motion for an adjournment of the business of the Assembly, for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance, viz., the situation arising out of the general strike on the Great Indian Peninsula Railway by the employees, and the attitude of the Railway Administration towards the strikers.

Sir, the matter referred to in this motion is very definite and very urgent. In fact I have got to mention only the subject of the strike to get the acquiescence of the Government and also an admission that the matter is definite and urgent. I may at once assure Government that I am not moving the motion in any unfriendly spirit. I only want to contribute to peace, if I can, by bringing such a motion before the House and giving an opportunity to Government to make a definite statement of policy with regard to the strike. It may perhaps be said that I might have made a motion some time ago, because it is now nine days since the strike commenced, but in a matter like this it will be admitted easily that the urgency increases with time, and perhaps it would not in fact have been right to move such a motion at an earlier stage. But the thing is now developing with a certain velocity, and in any case Government have got to step in to conciliate the strikers to a certain extent or justify their own action if they wish to do it. In any case a statement from them is necessary and called for. Now, Sir, nine days have passed since the strike commenced. Every day we were expecting that Government would take some action and come forward with certain measures calculated to end the strike in a conciliatory spirit.

Mr. President: The Honourable Member is now dealing with the merits of the motion.

Mr. N. C. Kelkar: I do not want to deal in any way with the merits of the case, but I want to say that the thing is going on as if it were a trial of strength and therefore the urgency is that we and the public cannot tolerate this any longer and allow the belligerents to indulge in this warlike pastime. I really regret on this occasion the absence of people like Mr. Joshi and Diwan Chaman Lall, who being Union people, connected with the Unions, might have been of some use in the matter.

[Mr. N. C. Kelkar.]

But even we, the independent Members of the Assembly, have got a duty to perform because we represent the public here though we do not represent the Trade Unions. I do not wish to embarrass Government in any way, but I think that as it is now nine days since the strike commenced, they have certainly thought out the action they would like to take to conciliate the strikers or to do at least as much as they can do to bring them round to accept the concessions and reforms that would be granted to them. The losses that are being caused by the strike are enormous to both sides, to Government as well as to the public and the strikers also. In the case of the strikers it is a personal loss and risk. Their demands may be all right or they may be all wrong; some may be right and some may be wrong; that is another matter altogether. But it is due to them to say that they might not have gone on strike in a light-hearted fashion because that involves considerable risk to their future employment. Therefore I say that Government should welcome this opportunity which I wish to afford to them by making this motion. I would only say this, that if they oppose this motion, there is just a chance that they might lay themselves open to some sort of blame or censure in the eyes of the public, because this is a genuine effort to raise a matter of public importance for discussion, and if we could not do even that in this Assembly, then probably the Assembly is useless if we are only to sit here with folded hands and are unable to raise even a point for discussion. I therefore say to Government that they should not oppose this motion and I appeal to the Members of this House also to support my motion.

The Honourable Sir George Rainy (Member for Commerce and Railways): Sir, I am not in any way disposed to dispute the public importance of the question which the Honourable Member desires to raise on the motion for adjournment. But I think I am bound to draw attention to the terms of the Standing Order, which require that it must be on a definite matter of urgent public importance. The Honourable Member dealt with the point of urgency and the ground he took was this, that the question would become more urgent with every day that passed. I think, however, Sir, that this is not the manner in which the question of urgency has usually been considered by the Chair in the past, and proposed motions for adjournment have in the past been ruled out of order on the ground that they ought to have been raised at an earlier date. Apart from that, I must draw attention to the terms in which the notice has been given. The definite matter is said to be "the situation arising out of the general strike on the Great Indian Peninsula Railway by the employees and the attitude of the Railway Administration towards the strikers". The urgent matter is a "situation" and an "attitude". I submit, Sir, that this is much too indefinite a notice to bring the question within the procedure of a motion for adjournment. I think it was incumbent on the Honourable Member to put much more clearly and definitely the precise point he wished to raise and to show what its urgency was. It is obvious, I think, that the more indefinite the matter raised is, the more difficult it must be to establish the urgency.

Finally, Mr. President, the Honourable Member said that his object in moving the motion would be to evoke a statement from Government. I quite understand the desire of Members that Government should make some statement on the matter, but I do not think that settles the point whether a motion for adjournment in these circumstances is the proper method of obtaining it. It would be quite open to the Honourable Member, for instance, to put down a short notice question if all he wanted was a statement from Government, and I submit on these grounds, Sir, that neither definiteness nor urgency has been established so as to bring the matter within the Standing Order.

Mr. M. S. Aney (Berar Representative): Sir, I did not think when I came to the House that the eminently reasonable terms in which the motion of my Honourable friend, Mr. Kelkar, was worded (An Honourable Member: "Louder please.")—that is the great difficulty for me today, particularly because I have been suffering from bad coughing—that the very eminently reasonable terms in which the motion of my Honourable friend, Mr. Kelkar, was worded could have been taken exception to on the ground that they neither disclose any ground of urgency nor even a definite issue as required by the Standing Orders. Now, the terms of the motion mention two facts, one the situation arising out of the general strike by the railway employees on the Great Indian Peninsula Railway. That is certainly a definite matter which everyone of us can easily understand. There has been a strike for nine days and it has caused serious dislocation to the traffic and inconvenience to the travelling public involving danger and risk to life of thousands of passengers travelling by railway. The words "the situation arising out of the general strike" in which something like 50,000 strikers have downed tools are clear. There can be no question of the issue being indefinite and in view of the other matters involved, it is also a question of urgency. Nine days have passed, and every day telegrams are being received that there has been no movement towards the reconciliation of the strikers or that there has been a movement to create difficulties in the way or to try to break the strike by using such powers as the Railway Administration may possess, and so on. These telegrams are being received every day. That indicates an attitude which will surely bring the strikers and the Railway Administration into conflict. On the other hand telegrams received from certain places disclose a very serious state of affairs. It is stated that the strikers insist on their right of being in the quarters allotted to them, while the Railway Administration is asking them to vacate their quarters, that the strikers want to have Satyagraha and other things. Such things we are hearing every day and is it not the duty of the House to consider the whole situation which is disclosed to us by the various telegrams received? They are of a conflicting nature no doubt. They may be exaggerated. "Situation" and "attitude", the two words which are mentioned in the motion itself are sufficient evidence for everybody who has followed what is being published every day to be convinced that the matter is certainly definite and is of a very serious and urgent nature. For these reasons it behoves the Government not to oppose the motion and gag the discussion but to give the House a fair chance of having a discussion and seize the opportunity to explain their conduct and to show what remedies they have got in contemplation to tide over the difficulties.

Mr. M. R. Jayakar (Bombay City: Non-Muhammadan Urban): I rise to support the motion moved by my Honourable friend, Mr. Kelkar. The purpose of the Standing Order, to which reference was made by the Honourable the Railway Member, is that the matter which is the subject matter of the adjournment motion should be stated with sufficient definiteness in order that the Government might know which are the points which are going to be raised in the course of the debate. That is the principle of the Standing Order. It does not go beyond that and if the House judges by that test, I do submit that the words of this motion bring it within the principle of that Standing Order. There are two definite matters of urgent importance mentioned in Mr. Kelkar's motion. The first is the situation arising out of the general strike on the Great Indian Peninsula Railway and second, the attitude of the Railway Administration towards the strikers. It is likely that the Honourable the Railway Member with the expert and intimate knowledge he has from the inside of things may possibly think that there are many aspects of the situation which are indefinite. But one has to judge of this from the point of view of a member of the public, from the point of view of those like my Honourable friend, Mr. Kelkar, who have to judge the situation from outside as members of the public. All that they know is that the situation created is undesirable and they therefore desire to discuss the attitude of the Railway Administration towards the strikers. Therefore, I submit, Sir, that it has been made absolutely definite, so far as Mr. Kelkar could make it, as to what is the object of this motion and Government have a very clear indication that what we want to raise in the course of the debate is the situation created by the strike and particularly the attitude of the Railway Administration with reference to the strikers. Reference has been made by Mr. Aney to one or two phases of the attitude of the Railway Administration, namely, that outsiders have been admitted, and secondly, that notices have been served on the strikers to vacate the premises in a very short time. These are two or three of the aspects which strike us as members of the public. It may be that the Railway Administration is aware of many more aspects of the situation. But all that I submit is that sufficient notice has been given to the Government as to the points which we want to raise in the course of the debate and I submit, Sir, therefore, it satisfies the tests laid down by the Standing Order.

Mr. K. C. Neogy (Dacca Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): If the contention of my Honourable friend, Sir George Rainy, were allowed to prevail and if it were pushed to its logical conclusion, a very complicated situation would arise. My Honourable friend says that the situation arising out of the strike is not a definite matter at all. Perhaps the Honourable Member would be satisfied if a catalogue of all the elements that go to make up that situation were appended to this motion; for instance the detention of trains, the late arrival of trains, the ejectment of the strikers and the non-appointment of a Conciliation Board under the Trade Disputes Act. Perhaps he expects a catalogue like that to be appended to the motion in explanation of what is meant by the term "situation". Then perhaps the objection would be taken that it is not one definite matter of importance that is contemplated, but there are so many different items of a specific nature which go to make up that particular motion. Now, is it the contention of my Honourable friend that a separate motion of adjournment would be permissible for the purpose of raising each of these different issues which, I submit, are equally important in the public interest and deserve to be raised on the floor of this House? I submit, Sir, that will be the logical consequence of my Honourable friend's contention, and I respectfully request you to overrule his objection in this particular instance.

Mr. President: The word "situation" is no doubt indefinite; but in the past this word has been used in connection with a large number of motions for adjournment of this kind. What is definite in this is "the general strike" and "the attitude of the Government". These two are definite matters and I have not been favoured with any precedent in which a motion of this character has been disallowed on the ground of indefiniteness, although Sir George Rainy in his speech stated that the Chair has in the past not regarded this as a definite matter. On the whole, I consider the motion to be in order and I will ask if any Honourable Member has any objection to the motion.

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: I am afraid I must object to leave being granted.

Mr. President: In that case those Honourable Members who are in favour of leave being granted will rise in their places.

Mr. President: As 25 Members have not stood, the motion falls.

THE HINDU GAINS OF LEARNING BILL.

Mr. M. R. Jayakar (Bombay City: Non-Muhammadian Urban): Sir, I beg to move: "That the Bill to declare gains of learning by a Hindu to be his separate property, be referred to a Select Committee consisting of the Honourable the Law Member, the Honourable the Home Member, Munshi Iswar Saran, Mr. N. C. Kelkar, Mr. K. C. Neogy, Rai Sahib Harbilas Sarda, Sir Purshotamdas Thakurdas and the Mover, and that the number of Members whose presence shall be necessary to constitute a meeting of the Committee shall be four".

The Bill before the House is nothing very new in principle. It is a repetition of a measure which was introduced and passed in the Madras Legislative Council nearly forty years ago. It was then introduced by a very distinguished member of the legal profession, the late Sir V. Bhashyam Iyengar, and had received a certain amount of public support. Later on Government discovered that there were certain objections to that Bill and that public sentiment was not ripe for its acceptance. On that ground mainly the Bill was scotched. That was forty years ago, and I submit that public sentiment in this matter has progressed during the forty years, so that it cannot be said now that this Bill is in advance of public sentiment. Stating the principle quite briefly—and I am purposely getting rid of all technical legal language—I may say that the Bill applies to Hindu joint families and its effect will be that the earnings of members of a Hindu joint family which are the result of any special education received while they are members of the joint family and which are now regarded as earnings of the joint family will be regarded as the earnings of the member who makes them.

My principal object in introducing this measure is this that I intend it to be one of those remedial measures which I have in view, the object of which is to improve the status and general condition of the dependent female members of a joint Hindu family. This is the main object of my measure, and, if passed, it will mean that, if a member of a joint Hindu family dies leaving his own acquisitions, they will pass to his own heirs, his widow or daughter. Supposing he was a member of the Bar or in Government service, or worked in some such capacity, and he earned money with the aid of his own intellect, with the aid of his own brains, and supposing he dies leaving a widow or a daughter—not a male child—then under the present law, his widow and daughter get only very meagre and limited rights, namely, the widow gets maintenance and residence, the daughter only gets a provision for her marriage, if she be unmarried at his death. But the entire bulk of his property passes to other members of the joint family. I submit, Sir, from my knowledge of the working of this rule of the Hindu law that it is an extremely unjust principle, especially so, in modern days when the disintegration of the family is taking place very rapidly, and new methods of making acquisitions are now coming into vogue. This law might at one time have been sound when individual enterprise and new methods of making acquisitions were unknown to society. But with the growth of individualism and new methods of making acquisitions, I submit, Sir, the time has arrived when the women of the family, namely, the widow and the daughter of the acquirer should be particularly protected.

The second reason why I am anxious that this measure should go through is—and all lawyers will appreciate my point of view—that the present law causes considerable uncertainty and consequent litigation. I shall just explain to the House how this is caused. The old law was absolutely clear. I do not wish to weary the House by going into ancient rules, but the old Hindu law was perfectly clear. Again I do not wish to confuse matters by quoting authorities; they are mentioned in my Statement of Objects and Reasons. I say that the old law was perfectly clear, namely, that a man's earnings made by his learning while a member of a joint family, all that he earned with the aid of his own brain and intellectual powers was regarded as his personal property. I have given references in my Statement of Objects and Reasons to Sanskrit writers like Manu and others. That was the old law with the one exception of a rishi called Katyayana. All these lawgivers in ancient times combined to lay considerable premium upon the power of initiative and declared that all that a member earned by his own intellectual powers should be regarded as his own self-acquisition which passed to his widow and to his daughter. Then came the intermediate stage with which we are concerned,—the stage of adjudication by British Indian Courts, the result of which has been to confuse the law. The law as it stands now—Honourable Members will be surprised if I state the law as it stands—is that if a member of a joint family—whom I shall in the course of my speech call a "co-parcener"—if a co-parcener earns something which is the result of his general education as against special education, though given at the expense of the family, it is his self-acquired property; but all that he earns as a result of his special education, whatever that term may mean, which qualifies him for a profession or an avenue of employment in life, becomes joint family property, if the expenses of that education are borne by the joint family. But this rule is even carried further and is extended to cases where for instance a co-parcener was living in England for education and during his stay there his wife and children in India were maintained by one of the members of the joint family out of his own funds and not out of the joint family funds. Even in such cases, when he returns from England and earns, all that he earns becomes the earning of the joint Hindu family. To clarify the unreasonableness of the present law, I shall give one characteristic illustration. If Honourable Members will turn to my Statement of Objects and Reasons, they will find it on page 2, and I do invite the attention of the House to the characteristic injustice of that illustration which is still the law. I am referring to paragraph 11 of my Statement of Objects and Reasons, I had better read it to the House:

"Likewise, the present rule is not favourable to the growth of self-reliance among the dependent members of the family. In a rich family, it offers a premium to extravagance, idleness and perpetual discord. Its injustice is manifestly galling . . ."

Now comes the illustration. Non-lawyer Members of this House will be surprised to learn that such is the law:

"Take e.g., the case in which a father has three sons and incurs the same expenditure on their education. He sends them all to England to be educated for the Indian Civil Service. One is successful, the other two fail. Of the two who fail, one takes to trade and the other is unwilling to do any work and remains idle. The trader earns a large fortune, which the present law allows him to keep to himself, because his education in England was for the Civil Service and not for trade. But, out of the earnings of the Civilian, two shares are claimed, one by the trader and the other by the brother who has been idle. The trader keeps his own earnings and also takes a share of the civilian's earnings."

That is the state of the law at present, the principle being that the huge fortune which the trader earned after being educated in England was earned in trade for which avocation he was not educated in England. His education in England was for the Indian Civil Service. Therefore the trader keeps his own earnings and wants a share of the earnings of the Indian Civil Service man who was equally with him educated in England. That is the present law. It may seem surprising to non-lawyers, but it is so; and the result of that is that there is a great uncertainty in joint Hindu families; nobody knows what is going to be the result of his earnings; after a member earns money up to the last moment of his life, he does not know what law is going to apply in his case, whether after his death, his widow or daughter may get the money or his co-parcener. The result of such uncertainty is that an amount of subterfuge is practised. It is naturally the co-parcener's desire that his earnings should be shared primarily by his widow and daughter and not by distant co-parceners, and therefore he takes to subterfuges and invests the money in the name of somebody else; benami transactions take place, and the money which would otherwise have been invested in open and easily convertible channel is put in concealed investments making detection and conversion very difficult. I need not here refer to the embitterment which is caused in the family by this state of the law; those who are members of joint Hindu families or who, in the course of their practice have had to advise Hindu joint families, will bear me out when I say that a perpetual sense of irritation is kept up which often finds its way into the courts. I do not want to exaggerate, but I am clear in my mind that if the cause-lists of the various High Courts are carefully scrutinised, it will be found that at least 15 to 20 per cent.—and the Honourable the Law Member will vouch for the accuracy of this figure—of the cases which relate to joint Hindu families spring out of this uncertainty and unreasonableness of the law. Therefore at present there is considerable need of making the law clear and rational.

I have so far explained to the House the distinction between general education and special education. Another distinction is made by present adjudication, viz., ordinary gains and extraordinary gains of such education.

ordinary or special. So we get four cross divisions, and between them nobody feels certain in Hindu families as to what particular category his own earnings may fall under, after his death. To give one illustration, out of many: If a co-parcener becomes a B.A. at the expense of the family, it is general education. Therefore if he stops there and makes money as a B.A., it is regarded as the ordinary gains of ordinary education and therefore it belongs to him; but if he should be so badly advised—and people do not always go to good lawyers—as to proceed to become an LL.B., which is the next stage after the B.A., that is special education; and all that he earns as a lawyer as a result of his LL.B. degree, becomes joint family property. I have merely to state this proposition to make clear the absurdity and the uncertainty of the present law. If he earns as a B.A., it is not joint family property; if he goes one step further and becomes an LL.B., it becomes joint family property. I can go on multiplying these instances which arise out of the present law. The result is a considerable amount of bitter and wasteful litigation in courts. I can give at least a dozen instances of my own knowledge where a small estate was wasted by the employment of counsel and attorneys, in the city of Bombay and of vakils in the mufassil.

My Bill, Sir, is not intended mainly as a progressive social reform measure, as some critics may describe it; this is a most elementary measure necessitated by two main considerations, namely, the improvement of the status of women in the family and putting a stop to the uncertain and unreasonable nature of the present law and thereby saving the wealth of poor Hindu families.

Now, Sir, let us take another uncertainty that is contained in the word "general education". It is a very indefinite word. What may be general ordinary education in one family may not be so in another. What may be general ordinary education in one class of society may not be so in another. What may be so in one province may not be so in another. The result is that an amount of evidence has to be led to show the character of the education which is the subject matter of the dispute in court, having regard to the status of the family, the community of the parties and all other surrounding circumstances. Honourable Members can imagine the amount of money which is generally wasted in such bitter inquiries, and the consequent harassment. Therefore my submission is that the time has come when all this uncertainty should be removed; and if this measure is passed, as I hope it will be before long, it will certainly have a very good effect in quieting the litigation which takes place now. A co-parcener will know exactly what will happen to his fortune. If Honourable Members turn to the provisions of my Bill, they will see that I have tried to remove this uncertainty in clause 2, where I say:

"(a) the expression 'learning' shall mean education, whether elementary, liberal, technical, special or scientific, and training of every kind, which is usually intended to enable a person to pursue any trade, industry, profession or avocation in life;

(b) the expression 'gains of learning' shall mean all acquisitions of property made substantially by means of learning, whether such acquisitions be made before or after the commencement of this Act and whether such acquisitions be the ordinary or the extraordinary result of such learning;"

All these wasteful inquiries will not have to be made.

I should like to mention one more circumstance before I sit down. All this harassing litigation generally takes place after the earning member is dead. During his lifetime his co-parceners have not the courage to fight him. They live together; but they do not raise the question that it is not the self-acquisition of the deceased; they wait until he dies. Very often he lives for a long time; very often after his death the inquiry does not take place until at the end of the period of limitation which in certain cases of immoveable property may be 12 years. The inquiry generally takes place with the widow or daughter on the one side and all the family on the other. The Honourable Members can imagine what an uneven fight this often is. The evidence is gone, account books long lost, the acquirer himself not present to say how the money was acquired; all these things together with the fact that the onus is on the unprotected woman to prove that it is the self-acquired property of her husband or father—it is a most unequal fight for the poor woman. The result is that a lot of money is wasted; and in 90 out of 100 of these inquiries, they terminate in the defeat of the widow or the daughter, because it is a very big handicap under which she labours. The case goes before a Commissioner in the case of a High Court; the Commissioner calls for accounts; no accounts are forthcoming; the acquirer is dead; he cannot come back to life and give evidence as to how he acquired the money. Perhaps his education was acquired fifty years back, of which no records are kept; it is not known where the money came from—whether the money came from the joint family property or whether it was the property of a particular member of the family—all these questions are absolutely impossible to determine at the stage when they arise; no record of them is kept, with the result that very often the doctrine prevails for sheer want of evidence that what is not proved to the contrary is joint family property.

The result is,—and I have seen many cases,—that destitute widows, destitute daughters of the acquirer have been thrown into the streets with a bare maintenance or residence, all his huge earnings, sometimes amounting to lakhs of rupees, going into the hands of the drones of the family, I mean the non-earning co-parceners. I think, Sir, the time has come when this should be stopped. I am one of those who believe that, within proper limits, full advantage should be taken of the powers of this House to legislate for evils which are troubling the society. I say, within proper limits, and the limits are that any thing which is an urgent need of society ought to be redressed. On that principle, and with abundant faith in the wisdom of this House in allowing this measure to go through, I move the motion that stands in my name.

Mr. N. C. Kelkar (Bombay Central Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I rise to support the principle of the Bill which has been introduced by my friend, Mr. Jayakar. As a practical lawyer, he has already dealt with the difficulties of the problem which come to his notice in law courts and in practical life, but I am going to speak on this Bill only from a general and theoretical point of view, because I am not a legal practitioner and do not know the practical legal difficulties arising out of the problem. Mr. Jayakar has defended himself against the charge that he is helping wilfully the disintegration of the joint Hindu family system. I also wish to say that that charge cannot be very well brought against him, namely, the charge of wilfully disintegrating the Hindu joint family system; for it is not Mr. Jayakar who is responsible for this, but the genius of the Hindu society itself in its present condition which is responsible. It is the new civilisation that is responsible for this partial disintegration. Then it is the new forces of economic conditions and new ideals of individual rights and liabilities. All these are in their turn responsible for the breaking up of the joint Hindu family system, howsoever we may want it. It was quite different in olden times. Then the family lived huddled up in one and the same locality; it lived upon limited economic resources, and there was no elbow room for professional or industrial development. In all those respects times have changed. In point of the distribution of wealth, the centre of gravity has now shifted from the family to the individual as a unit.

Now, it may be said that that is making for the development of selfishness in the society, but I think it is not so. Though the family is so breaking up, it is not exactly as if each one is now trying to live for himself alone. For, if you compare the charities and public subscriptions of olden times with those of the present times, you will find that, though there has been to a certain extent a disintegration of the family system, individual Hindus have not been living all for themselves but greatly contributing to public charities and giving public subscriptions, etc. The old Hindu family, if I may say so, was a sort of monarchical form of Government. Call it constitutional or call it unconstitutional but it was monarchical all the same. The head of the family, the father, the pater familias, enjoyed all sorts of power within the family, and in this respect he might be compared to the father in Roman Law. The head of the family governed the family society and treated his own sons as if they were practically slaves, so that they had to be liberated and released and made freemen by a kind of ceremony. I do not exactly know the word, but there was a kind of ceremony by which the sons had to be emancipated from their bondage and made freemen. At that time even the Hindu joint family system remained in the same condition, but things have been changing. I will just cite one or two things to show how things have been developing, and it is not now for the first time that we are thinking of enlarging the scope of individual male and female members of the family. Manu is the oldest of our law givers. In his time this was the text.

“Bharya putrashcha dasascha trayo wai adhanah smritah.”

In his time the text was, the wife, son and the slave were not entitled to any property rights. That was about two thousand years ago, but things have changed evidently. Coming after him, Yajnavalkya says:

“Tatra syat sadrisham swamyam pituh putrasya chaiv hi.”

At this later stage we come to a stage of life when the son becomes entitled along with the father to a share in the family property. That way things are moving. If you go to Dayabhaga, there also you will find a more liberal spirit than in the case of the Mitakshara. Now, the point is that from that stage of benevolent despotism in the family, we are now coming to a disintegrated kind of Hindu family in which the rights and liabilities are differentiated as it were. Individual life is now being more accentuated, it is being more specialised and cut up into facets, and aspects, by reason of the growth of individual tastes and the growth also of the means of gratification. Diversity of professions and occupations has now come, and the old caste system based on the pursuit of the same hereditary occupations from generation to generation is now being broken. Therefore, now we have come to a stage when co-parcenary may be good, but compulsory co-parcenary is certainly an evil; but on the other hand, conscious and willing co-operation may be good, and as I have said, even when the family is broken up, it is not as if members of Hindu families do not wish to co-operate with one another. The same sentiment of family affection remains, the same care and anxiety for the welfare of the younger generation or the younger members of the family and of the women of the family remains, though of course there is more latitude for the elaboration of individual rights and liabilities.

In this matter I may perhaps illustrate the point by just parodying to a certain extent the words of the Government of India Act. In the Preamble there, we have been told that we are to get a progressive realisation of responsibility in political matters. Now, the same thing is happening in the realm of the Hindu law, because here we are getting a progressive realisation of individual responsibility in family life. I may also illustrate the same thing by taking an analogy from history. Most of you have read perhaps of that famous ship in Grecian history, the ship in which Thesus returned as a victor after his victory over Crete. This ship was naturally looked upon as an object of national pride. In course of time it also became a historical relic and therefore a thing to be preserved by all efforts and endeavours. I do not know whether it was put in a dry dock or a wet dock, but in whichever dock it was, the devastating effects of time began to take their toll from the body of the ship, and what happened was that plank after plank began to get loose from the frame work of the ship and to be destroyed. But the ship was not to be left in that dilapidated condition. Anxious minds and skilful hands came to the rescue, and as soon as each plank was removed from the ship, another was neatly put into its place, so that again the ship became as whole as it was. I take this analogy for illustrating what is practically happening to Hindu society now and the interpretation of our Hindu Shastras. Even supposing we are standing on the same sure ground of Hindu law, yet bit by bit, step by step, stage by stage, we are drifting away from it to a certain extent. All this naturally is the work, not only of time, but also of our own endeavour, our own intellect and our own progressive sentiments. There is also the same good will that there was before for maintaining the integrity of the joint family life, but law has been finding it very difficult to maintain the exact stand that was taken before, and in that respect I may just say that what is happening now to the law-giver, whether commentator or judicial arbitrator or adjudicator, is practically what happens to a man who is enjoying the game in a skating rink,—whether the man is skating in a rink or on ice. He is determined to stand firm and dig the heel of his boot firmly into the ice or the rink floor. But he cannot escape sliding. He must slide, but he will only slide gracefully if he can. In that way the law courts are now dealing with Hindu law. They have been trying to keep the balance, but they are losing the balance in a number of cases. Now, what Mr. Jayakar does is not wilfully to destroy the joint family life, but as he has said in the Statement of Objects and Reasons, practically to restore or revive the old law. He is only cutting out the forest of doubt and conflict arising out of the vagaries of commentators and modern law-givers in the judicial courts.

Now, to show what the old law was, I will just refer to one or two texts and leave it to the House to judge whether the old law was not really what Mr. Jayakar wants it to be. I am giving you two quotations from Yajñavalkya. They are in Sanskrit and the House will bear with me if I quote them in the original:

*"Pitru dravya virodhena yadmyatswayamarjitam,
Maitramoudvāhikam chaiv dayadanan na tatbhavet,
Kramadabhyagatam dravyam hritamabhyuttaret tu yah,
Dayadebhyo na tat dadyat vidyaya labdhamevacha".*

It explains what you can enjoy yourself and what you cannot, that is to say, what you should enjoy in partnership and jointly with other people. First of all, that which is self-acquired, subject to this condition that it should not have caused detriment to the paternal property or estate. But there it ends. I have translated the first line. My contention is that there it ends. The next is an illustration of the property which a man has a right to enjoy by himself without a claim to it by any other man. They are the gifts you receive from friends, and the dowries you receive on the occasion of your marriage. These are not to be given to dayadars, that is relations, and they are not subject to partition. That is complete in itself. Then the next is:

"If something has come in a particular manner from old times to you as your own, then you can enjoy it yourself; and then if you have restored certain things by your own efforts, that also belongs to you and cannot be claimed by other people."

Then the last but not the least is this:

"Dayadebhyo na tat dadyat vidyaya labdhamevacha."

Whatever is earned by a man by his vidya is his own property and cannot be claimed by his relatives. Now the commentators enjoy their own vagaries like Judges of High Courts and Privy Councillors. All these have contributed to put the Hindu law out of shape and the Hindu law is not what it is or what it ought to be, simply because these commentators, along with judicial courts, have introduced the results of their vagaries into the interpretation of the law. Here is a case in point in which the commentators have played tricks with the original texts. What I read to you are two different and separate slokas and things are mentioned separately, but the commentators took it into their head to take the word Pitru dravya virodhena (that is, subject to the limitation that it should not be produced by any detriment to the family property), and made it govern everything else. Now, the question naturally arises—how is it proper to do so? Now, take maitram. What is the propriety of saying that gifts of relatives and friends should not be by way of detriment to the ancestral property? There is no meaning in saying that. The same thing applies to oudvāhikam, gifts received in marriage by way of dowry. How can you say that dowry should not be by way of detriment to the ancestral property? A dowry is a thing which comes by itself, certainly without detriment to the ancestral property.

Then there is another point. If you restore the property already destroyed, that becomes your own because you have done something for it and therefore you are entitled to the fullest enjoyment of that restored property. Here also you cannot say that it is governed by the limitation that it should not be detrimental to the value of the parental property. But the clearest thing is vidyaya labdhamevacha.

[Mr. N. C. Kelkar.]

If anything is got by learning, a thing put in the text separately by itself, then this limitation does not operate. Maitramoudvahikam says Yajnavalkya and Maitramoudvahikam chaiv madhuparik mevacha says Manu. You will see practically the same thing common to both Yajnavalkya and Manu. They are speaking definitely of the same subject, but Manu makes it quite clear. And there is Pitubhyan yasya yaddattam tat tasyaiv dhanam bhavet—whatever is acquired by learning, it must be left to himself and not to others.

Then there are also texts saying that if special gifts are made by the father to the son, they will also become a separate and special property, even if it is given by the father out of his own estate. It is a special gift, namely, the vidya, which is a special gift made to a particular son. Therefore, vidya as well as the accretions or the earnings of property arising out of the vidya must belong to himself separately. So, in my opinion there is absolutely no doubt that what Mr. Jayakar is attempting by this Bill is not to spoil the law or wilfully to help the disintegration of the family property, but to restore and revive the oldest law, and free it from, of course, the havoc that has been caused to it by the intervening commentators and the judicial law courts.

Now, with regard to the vagaries of the judicial courts, I would just give you a few illustrations. I am not a practising lawyer myself, but I can give you certain instances about this and I think you will find them rather interesting. Mr. Jayakar has already told you how case law differs and how equity in this matter varies with the whim of the translator. Every interpretation varies according to the whim or the vagary of the particular light in which a judicial officer looks at the matter. For instance, Mr. Jayakar has already told you that views differ as to what is general education and what is special education, and there is a very thin line, if there is a line at all, between the domains of general education and special education. It is very difficult to distinguish between special and general education. Special education as well as general education merely depends upon the condition of the society or the condition of the family in the particular case. Now, there are decisions which say that education given up to the B. A. standard is general, but if a boy only matriculates and does not take up the college course but goes to law and becomes an advocate or a pleader, then that becomes his special learning. Mr. Jayakar has already mentioned the difference in the interpretation of what special education is in the case of a man who goes in for the Indian Civil Service and the other who takes to the trade of his father. There, the interpretation is not the same. The last curious instance that I will mention to you is that in Chalakonda vs. Ratnachalam, in 2 Madras, in which the question was whether the gains of the girl were from special learning and accomplishments, and whether her mother, who educated her and trained her, was also entitled to them along with her and had a right to that property. Now, the court decided that, as she was only a dancing and singing girl, it was an earning in which the mother had a share. And on that point the commentator, Mr. Maine, who has written a very useful treatise on Hindu Law, humorously deals with the subject and says that if the woman, instead of being merely a dancing and singing girl, had actually taken up the profession of a prostitute and a concubine, then perhaps it might have been her special earning and not a general kind of earning to which the mother was entitled.

Now, I have given these illustrations only to show to the House how vagaries have been creeping in in the interpretation of the law as it stands, and therefore I think that Mr. Jayakar is doing a great service by this Bill because it seeks to cut up the forest of doubt and hesitancy. Sometimes the judges hesitate to give their decisions and are simply carried away by the impulse of the moment without necessarily following any definite rules of interpretation.

For these reasons, I think Mr. Jayakar's Bill should commend itself to this House and that it should be sent to the Select Committee. In my opinion, however, some amendments to the Bill may be necessary which may be carried out in the Select Committee. For instance, I think that, though the law should be as is stated in Mr. Jayakar's Bill, a provision might be inserted enabling the father to enter into a sort of contract or agreement with the son whom he is giving special education, so that he might be able to get back a share in the property arising out of that special learning. The point is this. Sometimes parents are enterprising. They find that the boy is intelligent and is also enterprising. They therefore take a large share out of the property in hand and invest it upon the boy. Now it cuts both ways. If it is inequitable, on the one hand, for the distant relations to claim a share in this man's self-acquired property, it is also inequitable on the other hand that this boy, who has been educated with the family property, should enjoy the whole gain obtained by him without taking any care of his younger brothers or other relations. Therefore, it may occur to a thoughtful father to make a contract or an agreement with the son, and I think that agreement or contract should be treated as valid in a Bill of this kind. The son should not have the power by reason of this Bill to say to the father: "You cannot even make that agreement with me, or if you make that agreement, it will be ineffectual". The father ought not to be prevented from entering into such an agreement, and if that is done, I think the equities of both sides would be properly met. This is only one illustration of a possible amendment that might be made in the wording of the Bill. Apart from this, I heartily support the principle of the Bill and say that it should be sent to the Select Committee.

Khan Bahadur Sarfaraz Hussain Khan (Patna and Chota Nagpur cum Orissa: Muhammadan): Sir, I rise to give my whole-hearted support to the motion made by my Honourable friend Mr. Jayakar. Though, unfortunately the Hindus and Muhammadans are not united at the present time in the country, yet I wish to give the whole House to understand that, so far as social rights and the social progress of my countrymen, the Hindus, are concerned, I am as much sympathetic to them as any one else. I do not want to give my silent vote in favour of the motion, but I want to give my vocal vote, so that the whole House might understand that, so far as the social rights and the social progress of the two wings of the Indian community are concerned, they are at one, and that the Muhammadans have real sympathy with the Hindus in this matter.

Mr. M. K. Acharya (South Arcot cum Chingleput: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, to the eloquent peroration of my Honourable friend, Mr. Jayakar, I may assure you, that I listened with great sympathy. But my old, orthodox and uncivilised brain always thought that Saraswati and Lakshmi very rarely lived together. Men of learning very rarely become laden with wealth, as my Honourable friend Mr. Jayakar is. My first difficulty is to ascertain in what measures the two opposites meet together, namely learning and the gains got therefrom. My second difficulty is this. As my Honourable friend, Mr. Jayakar, has admitted, some 35 or 40 years ago a greater lawyer, perhaps at least in his days, than even Mr. Jayakar, the late Sir V. Bhashyam, who later on became an ornament of the Bench of the High Court of Madras, brought forward a Bill of this kind. Doubtless in view of all the old and new and intermediate anomalies to which my Honourable friend, Mr. Kelkar, has referred and which we have had at the hands of lawyers and judges—I am not a great admirer of them

[Mr. M. K. Acharya.]

An Honourable Member: Oh! you are.

Mr. M. K. Acharya: No, I am not. However, in view of all that, when that great lawyer brought forward his Bill, the Bill was almost passed into law by the Madras Legislative Council. But in those days public feeling was so very strong against that Bill—that is 40 years ago—that the Governor did not give his assent to that Bill being passed into law. Now my difficulty is this, whether during the past 40 years, in spite of the great advances we have been making, in spite of the fact that there are great heroes and heroines who are emerging from Ahmedabad and Allahabad and many other places beginning with “A” and ending with “bad”, who think they are forming the public opinion of this country and who may be much enamoured of Mr. Jayakar’s Bill, in spite of all these considerations, Sir, I doubt if real public opinion wants this Bill badly. However I do not want to disappoint my Honourable friend, Mr. Jayakar, who has made such big appeals. I dare say that, later on, if public feeling is very strongly against it, my Honourable friend, Mr. Jayakar, who is always so anxious to keep the law in touch with public opinion and who I am sure will be here in another Assembly, will be the first to bring forward a measure to amend or modify his Act. I therefore do not propose to move the amendment* which stands in my name, but shall support the motion of Mr. Jayakar for referring the Bill to the Select Committee. I hope the Select Committee in which my Honourable friend, Mr. Kelkar, is going to be a Member will make valuable suggestions and will most carefully consider the Bill and give no room for the outside public to quarrel over the good intentions which my Honourable friend, Mr. Jayakar, has in view; and I should certainly be very happy in helping Mr. Jayakar to immortalise himself with an Act of his own to his credit.

Rai Sahib Harbilas Sarda (Ajmer-Merwara: General): Sir, I rise to give my whole-hearted support to the motion made by my Honourable friend, Mr. Jayakar. The object of the Bill is a very simple one. The Bill does not cover the whole field of the Hindu law of inheritance, nor does it affect all Hindu families in the country. It will affect stray cases here and there. As my Honourable friend the Mover of the Bill has shown, under the old Hindu law the gains of learning of a man were his personal property. But it was only when the commentators, with views of their own, came into the field and interpreted them in their own way, and also when judicial officers sitting in Westminster or in India with their own preconceived notions about things that obtained in their own country at the time and who were ignorant of the language in which these texts were written, it was only then these officers began to interpret the law that it took a shape quite different from what it originally had.

Now, however, with the invention of printing and the part which electricity and steam are playing in the production of books, which bring large profits, and which enable people to go about delivering lectures and earn large sums of money, when technical education and expert knowledge in the various branches of learning required in different walks of life are becoming more and more important, it has become increasingly necessary that the law should be so modified, or rather the old law should be revived so that it may not hamper the spread of learning.

Those who argue that because a man has been educated at the expense of a family, the gains of learning of that man should become family property, forget that, in the first instance, the law is not what they expect it to be. Secondly, they must also remember that it is not education only that enables a man to make large profits or huge earnings, but it is something which existed before education was given. It is the brains of a man, it is the moral powers of a man that enables him to earn large sums of money, and the brain is not the creation of any education given at the expense of the family. Education may sharpen the edge of the faculties of the brain, but brain exists independently of that education. We also find that education, by itself, is not sufficient to enable a man to earn large sums of money. As the Honourable the Mover pointed out, though education is given to a number of pupils reading in the same classes upto the same standard, only a few of the pupils attain marked success and earn large sums of money. If it was only a question of education, then all those who receive the same training should be able to earn large sums of money and attain the same degree of success. Thus it is not education only, though it may be helpful to some extent, but something which existed before education was imparted, that enables a man to earn large sums of money. The gains of learning must therefore, be the property of the person who possesses that brain. The question is essentially one which is acquiring great importance day by day and should be decided by the enlightened notions of justice and equity that obtain at the present time. I find that an attempt was to be made to kill the Bill by moving for its circulation and postponing the day when it may have to be passed.

An Honourable Member: The Honourable Member, Mr. Acharya, did not move his motion for circulation.

Rai Sahib Harbilas Sarda: I know that he did not move his motion. I appeal to the Government to consider this question in a spirit conducive to progress, take an enlightened view of the question, and cast their vote on the side of progress. The Government should not seek shelter behind the screen of immobile and no-change orthodox opinion which unfortunately regards every step forward, even the slightest change to keep pace with the requirements of time, as a blow to its existence. I hope that Government will help in the evolution of society not by lip sympathy alone but by giving practical aid in this process of evolution, and vote that the Bill be referred to a Select Committee, where, if necessary, amendments not touching the principle of the Bill, which principle I hope the Government now accept, could be made.

The Honourable Sir Brojendra Mitter (Law Member): Sir, the Bill before the House is a measure which concerns the Hindus only. It deals with secular rights and no religious principle is involved in it. As the general sense of the Hindu Members of the House is in favour of the principle of the Bill, Government will not stand in the way. The attitude which Government take up in the matter is one of neutrality and they leave it to the Hindu Members to shape the Bill in manner best suited to the conditions.

Mr. M. R. Jayakar: Sir, I am very thankful to those Members of the House who supported my Bill, and particularly I am thankful to Khan Bahadur Sarfaraz Hussain Khan for his excellent sentiments in the matter. I may mention that I made an attempt to have one or two Muhammadan Members on the Select Committee and in that connection I spoke to one or two friends; but they said that it would perhaps be better that they should remain outside the Select Committee and give their support in that capacity. That, Sir, is the reason why I have not included in my Select Committee a couple of my Muhammadan friends whom I should have very much liked to have on it. I am particularly thankful to my Honourable friend, Mr. Acharya, for having agreed, at my suggestion, to drop his amendment for circulation, because sending the Bill for circulation at the present moment means that it may not come back during the life of the present Assembly. It may or may not be dealt with in the next Assembly whose personnel may be different. The Mover may or may not be here and difficulties may arise. I am, therefore, very thankful to my Honourable friend, Mr. Acharya, for having consented to drop his dilatory motion. I may mention at once for his consideration,—I am referring to some of the remarks which he made,—that fortunately for me I am not a member of a joint family at all. Therefore, the Bill would not make the slightest difference so far as my own position is concerned. I am, therefore, not actuated by personal motives in pushing forward this measure. The main purpose of my Bill is to put a stop to the uncertainty and the harassing and expensive litigation which the present position causes. That is the main object, and the second purpose relates to the status of women, which will be improved by reason of this measure becoming law.

As for the amendment suggested by my Honourable friend, Mr. Kelkar, that would be considered by the Select Committee. I am very thankful to him for having accepted the principle. Leaders of his eminence accepting the principle will be of considerable help to me in getting this measure through and securing popularity for it. But I may mention to my Honourable friend, Mr. Kelkar, that if he looks at clause 3 of my draft Bill, he will find that all that it says is this, that no property, being the gains of learning, shall be held not to be the exclusive and separate property of a coparcener by reason of such learning having been imparted to him by any member, etc. Therefore, it leaves out cases where there is a special agreement of the nature he has in view. It only speaks of cases where, by reason of the learning being imparted, or by reason of the cases mentioned in clause (c), the property is regarded as joint family property. Therefore, the case which he wants to provide is not touched by clause 3. However, if he wants to have a specific provision made for the case of agreement between the man who supplies the money and the person for whose benefit it is supplied, I am quite sure that the Select Committee will consider this question. Speaking for myself I have no objection to the case of special agreement being specially provided for. I am very thankful to the House for the reception it has given to my measure.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That the Bill to declare gains of learning by a Hindu to be his separate property, be referred to a Select Committee consisting of the Honourable the Law Member, the Honourable the Home Member, Munshi Iswar Saran, Mr. N. C. Kelkar, Mr. K. C. Neogy, Rai Sahib Harbilas Sarda, Sir Purshotamdas Thakurdas and the Mover, and that the number of Members whose presence shall be necessary to constitute a meeting of the Committee shall be four."

The motion was adopted.

THE SPECIAL MARRIAGE (AMENDMENT) BILL.

Mr. M. R. Jayakar (Bombay City: Non-Muhammadan Urban): Sir, I now proceed to the second Bill which stands in my name. I do so with a certain amount of apprehension that it may not receive the same measure of support from the House as my last Bill did. I see my Honourable friend, Mr. Ghuznavi, shaking his head somewhat violently. However, I beg to move that the Bill further to amend the Special Marriage Act, 1872, be referred to a Select Committee consisting of the Honourable the Law Member, the Honourable the Home Member, Sir Purshotamdas Thakurdas, Nawab Sir Sahibzada Abdul Qaiyum, Sir Darcy Lindsay, Khan Bahadur Sarfaraz Hussain Khan, Munshi Iswar Saran, Rai Sahib Harbilas Sarda, Sir Hari Singh Gour, Sardar Gulab Singh and the Mover, and that the number of Members whose presence shall be necessary to constitute a meeting of the Committee shall be four.

(At this stage Mr. President vacated the Chair which was taken by Mr. Deputy President.)

This Bill is intended to complete the process of simplifying and regularising the marriage law of India, which process began in the year 1872. I may at once mention that the credit of bringing in this measure is entirely due to my Honourable friend opposite, Sir Hari Singh Gour. It is really his Bill, but it has been allotted in my name and therefore I am moving it. As I said, the process of simplifying the marriage law began in the year 1872, when the Government of India passed a measure which is Act III of 1872, the effect of which, stated briefly, is this, that any person in India could marry any other person in India irrespective of religion, caste, community or any other difference, provided,—and that is an important qualification,—that the parties to that marriage went before an officer called the Registrar and declared that they did not profess to belong to any particular religion. Taking an illustration, if a Hindu married a Christian, the man and the woman went before the Registrar and the Christian said, of course for the moment, that he or she did not belong to the Christian religion, and the Hindu said that he or she did not belong to the Hindu religion. That was the principle of that measure. In practical working, it was found that this measure bred insincerity and hypocrisy, and its practical effect in working was this, that a man and woman who took advantage of this measure and went before the Registrar had to forswear his, or her, religion momentarily, if I may say so. They came back five minutes after the marriage and were absorbed in their own religion once more.

Dr. A. Suhrawardy (Burdwan and Presidency Divisions: Muhammadan Rural): Can the Honourable Member cite instances of that?

Mr. M. R. Jayakar: I am speaking from experience.

Sir Hari Singh Gour (Central Provinces Hindi Divisions: Non-Muhamadan): Mr. Justice Greaves of the Calcutta High Court had to deal with an instance of this.

Mr. M. R. Jayakar: I know of several instances, though I have not got them in my pocket. But the Honourable Member will give me credit for knowing them in the course of my personal experience. I know several instances where the more honest minded and more cultured section of the community has been restrained from entering into this form of marriage by reason of the obligation to have to go before the Registrar and momentarily swear to what is not often a fact, namely, that they do not profess this religion. That was the obligation to swear to a falsehood under which alone such marriages could take place. The result was that the fullest benefit was not taken of the Act which was passed in the year 1872.

Then came the second stage of this marriage reform and a Bill was introduced by my Honourable friend, Dr. Gour, for which great credit is due to him and which measure should alone immortalise his good work as a Member of the Assembly. This Bill was passed into Act XXX of 1923. It was a very courageous and bold measure which he brought forward and it has been taken advantage of to a much larger extent than its supporters thought possible at that time. What that Act did,—speaking briefly again, because I do not wish to weary the House with all the technicalities of its provisions,—was that it was confined only to Hindus, Buddhists, Jains and Sikhs; that is, Hindus and those who profess to belong to allied religions. To them the Act applied, and it was provided that those who profess these four religions need not forswear their religion at all. I am stating its effect in brief because I realize that I am addressing a number of people who are not lawyers and I do not wish to weary them by going into the technicalities of this subject. Stated briefly, its effect was that the four communities, Hindus, Jains, Buddhists and Sikhs, that is Hindus and those who are more or less allied to Hinduism, if I may say so without disrespect to Jains, Sikhs and Buddhists, could contract marriages inter se without being required to make the declaration of which I have spoken. In regard to those who at that time were outside these four communities, especially the important communities of Muhammadans and Parsees, who were kept out, as Dr. Hari Singh Gour assures me, at that time those who represented the Government promised him that, if he was content with half a loaf at that time, in course of time, as these ideas advanced and as public opinion became educated, it would be more easy for him to push forward the entire measure which is now before the House. I have that assurance from Dr. Sir Hari Singh Gour and I hope he will make the matter clear in his speech in support of this Bill. Therefore, that Bill was ultimately confined to Hindus, Sikhs, Buddhists and Jains. But in order to arrive at a social equipoise, if I may say so, certain penalties were attached to those who contracted such marriages amongst Hindus, Jains, Buddhists and Sikhs, namely, that certain privileges and functions which the Hindu and the allied communities regard as the essence of their family life had to be given up. In other words if a person wanted to have the luxury of marrying outside his own community, and his own religion, he had to give up certain privileges, social and quasi-religious which were regarded as the essence of his family life. For instance, if a Hindu married under that Act, he could not marry another wife while one was alive. For marrying another woman he would be punished for bigamy. That was one important qualification of his personal law. The second was, the wife would be entitled to divorce, which is not allowed in Hinduism. Thirdly, he would be regarded as having, by his marriage under the Act, severed connection from his joint family. Fourthly, succession to the issue and to himself would be governed by the measure which is called the Indian Succession Act. Lastly, and this was a most important privilege, of which he was deprived as the price for his marrying outside his community, it was provided that as soon as he married, his father, if he happened to be the only son of his father, would be regarded as sonless and would be entitled to adopt a son immediately. In other words, that measure established a social equipoise, if I may say so. For marrying outside his own community he was called upon to give up five important privileges which he enjoyed as a member of the Hindu society.

That Act was passed in the year 1923. Now my measure goes further. It is the last stage, if I may say so, and completes the process of marriage reform which began in 1872. I will here give expression to one sentiment before this House, that I am full of admiration to find that, in the year 1872, that means nearly 60 years ago, the Government of this country was so moved by progressive, liberal and courageous notions, that they passed a measure in the year 1872 when the House with which they had to deal was not one-tenth as representative as the present House can be said to be, when British power had not consolidated itself in this country in one-tenth of the measure that it has now, when the Government Benches were not representative of Indian sentiment to one-tenth the degree that they are now, I say that, even in those days, when the charge that the Government is alien was far more true than now, the Government had the courage to pass this measure and put it on the Statute-book. That attitude is a great lesson for the present Government to copy, and I hope they will copy it with reference to this Bill. Measures of this description can only be pushed forward under present conditions with the support of that body which is called the Government, and I do submit that, having regard to the progressive nature of this legislation, Government will consider seriously what their attitude on a matter of this importance ought to be. It is obvious that a measure of this description must cause in orthodox sections of the Indian community a considerable amount of discontent and dissatisfaction. No measure of this character can be pushed through without causing somewhere some irritation, some discontent. But it is always a question of finding out what is the balance of benefit. If there is to be progress, nationalisation, Indianisation of the entire country on the one hand and there is the opposition of certain sections on the other, the choice ought not to be very difficult to make, and I hope Government will make that choice when their turn comes.

As for the principles of this measure, I just want to put three or four features before my Honourable friends. First of all, it is a purely optional, enabling measure. (Hear, hear.) It is not a compulsory measure at all. It does not say that a Hindu must marry a Muhammadan or a Muhammadan must marry a Hindu. It is not of that character. It is purely an enabling, optional measure. It only means that those who want to marry outside their caste under this Bill, must have their activity legalised and made valid.

The second consideration which I wish to urge before the House is this, that such a measure exists in all civilised countries. We have only to step outside British India and we will find that such marriages are permissible even in a State like Baroda. I am only mentioning one out of the three or four Indian States. One has simply to step outside British India and marry anybody he likes by going into a place like Baroda territory. Likewise he will be entitled to marry if he goes outside India into any foreign country like Europe. The limits of the present law are therefore purely territorial. A measure of this description makes marriage more or less a question of personal volition, personal affinity, apart from religious considerations. Conceptions about marriage are bound to progress on these lines as time advances. I say that the principle of this Bill has been accepted not only in Baroda but in all progressive countries outside India.

The third important principle of this measure is that it will make more and more popular, more and more common and acceptable to the people, ideas of monogamy. One of the principles of this measure is that those who marry under this Act can only marry one spouse at a time. Any marriage under this Act has to be monogamous. Therefore, I have a hope that, if this measure gets through, it will be a most powerful incentive in spreading and making popular notions of marriage being monogamous especially among the two sister communities, Hindus and Muhammadans. It will be one means of widening the salutary notion that marriage ought to be a monogamous transaction, that marriage means that the man and the woman will regard one another's love while they are alive as the only constituent tie between them, and that no other attachment is possible, and I have a hope that the beneficent effect of this notion will spread more and more widely if this Bill gets through.

Dr. A. Suhrawardy: May I inquire of the Honourable Member what he means by monogamous? Unless it was a slip of the tongue, and if I am not mistaken, he seems to mean thereby marriage once in one's lifetime.

Mr. M. R. Jayakar: I hope the Honourable Member, in the vehemence of his desire to oppose this Bill, has forgotten the plain meaning of the English word "monogamous". It means one wife or one husband at a time.

Dr. A. Suhrawardy: I wanted to know what the Honourable Member meant in the light of what he has been saying. I certainly know that monogamy means the union of one man with one woman for life.

Mr. M. R. Jayakar: Monogamous means the union of one man with one woman at a time. That is what I understood it to mean, but if the Honourable Member takes exception to this meaning, I can only say that he must have come here today with the determined intention to oppose this Bill tooth and nail. Monogamous means that a man cannot marry two wives at a time, just as a woman cannot marry two husbands at a time. That is perfectly sensible, and that is the only meaning of the word "monogamy". Let my Honourable friend oppose this Bill by all means, but let him not start hares which have no substance.

Therefore, my submission to the House is that the effect of this measure will be—and I am very hopeful about it—to make this notion of monogamy more and more popular, which is the great need of the two communities. I only speak of the Hindu community because my Honourable friend the learned Doctor may object to my speaking for the Muhammadan community. I speak of the Hindu community with great humility and say that there is great need for spreading this notion of monogamy, and one of the effects of this measure, if it becomes law, will be that this notion will become more and more popular. I am not suggesting that, among the intelligentsia of the Hindu community non-monogamous marriages are common; no, they are rare, but still the effect of this Bill is bound to be that monogamous marriages will become more and more acceptable to the community.

Another important effect of this Bill will be that it will leave no room for artificial conversions. At present what happens is this, that if a man and woman like one another and want to marry, they often change their religion, not because there has been a psychological change of religious belief which is the true foundation of religious conversions, but simply because they want to marry one another. I am aware of many instances; the latest of this kind is only three days old. (An Honourable Member: "Only three days old!") The House is aware of what was reported in the papers three days ago. I do not wish to mention names, but a European gentleman changed his religion and converted himself to another religion possibly because the religion of his intended wife was a different one. I am aware of several instances of this kind where a man changed his religion in order to marry a wife belonging to another religion, or a woman changed her religion in order to be able to marry a husband of another religion. I think such practices would stop in course of time if this Bill becomes law.

The last and the most important consideration which I would urge upon the House is that it will considerably facilitate the unification of Indian races. I do want the House to give its best consideration to this aspect of the case. I know I am treading upon very delicate ground when I say this, but I am one of those nationalists who look forward to a time when the distinctions which are more or less a question of personal religion—distinctions of Hindu, Muhammadan, Christian, and so on—will disappear. I am full of faith that allegiance to a religious tenet or tenets will become more and more a matter of personal choice and predilection and less and less a matter concerning a question like marriage. I am full of hope that this Bill, if and when it becomes law, will make this process easy. We are now dealing with a very small measure, but I am full of hope that it will be one of the most potent instruments for bringing about the unification of social practices apart from religion amongst the several races that inhabit this country. Such unification is absolutely necessary if this country is to become a self-governing one. This is no doubt a very small measure, but its effect has to be considered in the light of the forces which would be released and loosened, so that in course of time these man-made distinctions between one religion and another will interfere as little as possible with the processes of social aggregation. I think a measure of this kind is inevitable, and I think the time-spirit is in favour of a measure which takes marriage out of the controversies of religion and makes it more and more a matter of personal loyalty and personal attachment. This is the process which I want to see accelerated in course of time, and I submit this measure will be one of the means of doing that. Lastly, I would just say a word to the orthodox sentiment, not only in this House but outside. I will say this with great humility. Sir, I am aware that in many quarters it will generate forces of great opposition. Well, orthodoxy would not be true to itself if it did not do so. I respect orthodoxy as I respect many genuine sentiments in life, but my submission to these orthodox centres, wherever they may be, is that this step will have to be taken some day as we go on. If public sentiment is not ripe for it, that is the only ground on which the opposition can be put. Nobody can oppose the principle of the Bill on its merits. Nobody can say that India shall always have the distinctions of Hindu, Muhammadan, Christian and so on. Nobody can say that twenty, thirty or forty years hence these distinctions will not disappear. They may remain long so far as personal faith in religious tenets is concerned; but so far as the marriage law is concerned they are bound to disappear; it is only a question of time. Therefore, the opponents of this Bill can only rest their opposition on the ground that the time is not yet. I am not dealing with the ultra-orthodox, I am leaving them alone, but I am addressing those who are rational and look forward to the time when, though the religions may remain as matters of personal faith, these social distinctions between Hindus, Muhammadans, Christians, Parsis, Jains and Buddhists, will all disappear and there will be one Indian nation valuing its Indian domicile more than its religion. This Bill is an apotheosis of Indian domicile, if I may say so. If that process is to be accelerated, such a measure as this will have to be the law, if not today, ten years hence. The opponents can only postpone the measure, they cannot kill it outright. Let me tell them, in absolutely plain words, that this change of notions is bound to come. Some other man, ten years or twenty years hence, will rise in my seat and move this measure. They can only oppose it by saying that the time is not yet. I can understand that opposition, but my answer to that will be, "Very often we have to make the time". It is possible to exaggerate the objection, "The time is not yet", and I think we are exaggerating it. Look at the ease with which some orthodox communities, have digested this Bill. We cannot imagine a more orthodox community than the Hindus; we cannot imagine a more religious community than the Jains; we cannot imagine a more learned community than the Buddhist; we cannot imagine a more militant community than the Sikhs, the law already applies to them. Nearly five years ago it started applying to them. These four important communities have digested this Bill. No disaster has overtaken them. I remember the time in 1923 when there was a great commotion among these communities but the good sense of these communities has asserted itself, and these four important communities have digested this Bill. I have no doubt that the great and ancient communities, the Muhammadans, the Christians and the Parsis, will do likewise. I say, therefore, that it is possible to exaggerate the plea, "the time is not yet". The time is now, if only we will take courage in our hands and proceed.

An Honourable Member: We have not had time to digest even the Sarda Act.

Mr. M. R. Jayakar: If my Honourable friend had said this twenty years ago, he would have been right; he is not living in the present age, if he thinks so. He is a Rip Van Winkle. However, that is a different matter, and I therefore submit, do not exaggerate this plea of the time not being ripe. If the House is opposed to the principle of the Bill, let it throw it out. But if it is not opposed to the principle of the Bill and thinks that it is the next step in the stage of our evolution as one nation, let it not oppose the Bill. Let it give it its support and courageously fight for spreading the noble conceptions underlying this Bill as widely as it can. I submit, Sir, this Bill ought to go to the Select Committee I have mentioned.

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru (Agra Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): On a point of order, Mr. Deputy President. The Preamble of the Act which my Honourable friend, Mr. Jayakar, seeks to amend runs as follows:

"Whereas it is expedient to provide a form of marriage for persons who do not profess the Christian, Jewish, Hindu, Muhammadan, Parsi, Buddhist, Sikh or Jain religion [and for persons who profess the Hindu, Buddhist, Sikh or Jain religion.]"...

An Honourable Member: That has been changed by the law of 1923.

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: I am reading the amended Act:

"and to legalise certain marriages the validity of which is doubtful."

If the amendments which clause 2 of the new Bill seeks to introduce are accepted, the Preamble will run as follows:

"Whereas it is expedient to provide a form of civil marriage for persons domiciled in British India (and for persons who profess the Hindu, Buddhist, Sikh or Jain religion), and to legalise certain marriages the validity of which is doubtful."

Apart from defects of language, Sir, it seems that the effect of the amendment proposed in this Bill would be to restrict the law further. If the Preamble is made restrictive, I wish to know whether, when the Bill goes to Select Committee, it will be possible to widen its scope so that it may apply not merely to persons who profess the Hindu, Buddhist, Sikh or Jain religion, but also to other persons who profess the Christian, Jewish, Muhammadan or Parsi religion. The object of the Bill, of course, is to have a form of civil marriage, to insist on no declaration which would compel a man to renounce his faith. But I find that the Bill has been drafted in such a way that, if it is accepted, the law would become more restrictive than it is at present. I want to have your ruling, Sir, on the subject, as the attitude of many of us will depend on the ruling you give.

An Honourable Member: What is the precise question?

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: I want to know whether in the Select Committee it will be possible for us to achieve the real object of the Bill by making the law applicable not merely to persons who profess the Hindu, Buddhist, Sikh or Jain religion, but also to others who do not profess these religions or who profess the Christian, Jewish, Muhammadan or Parsi religion.

Mr. M. R. Jayakar: I am very thankful to my Honourable friend for drawing my attention to what is an inadvertent omission. He is perfectly right, but what happened was this. Unfortunately Members have not got before them the text of the old Act. The Preamble of the old Act is this:

"Whereas it is expedient to provide a form of marriage for persons who do not profess the Christian, Jewish, Hindu, Muhammadan, Parsi, Buddhist, Sikh or Jain religion and for persons who profess the Hindu, Buddhist, Sikh or Jain religion."

What my amendment seeks to do is to drop out all these words, namely:

"who do not profess the Christian, Jewish, Hindu, Muhammadan, Parsi, Buddhist, Sikh or Jain religion, and for persons who profess the Hindu, Buddhist, Sikh or Jain religion."

and in their place substitute the words, "who are domiciled in British India", so that the amended Preamble would read:

"Whereas it is expedient to provide a form of civil marriage for persons domiciled in British India."

[Mr. M. R. Jayakar.]

Unfortunately in print, the word "etcetera" has been omitted in sub-clause (3) of clause 2: it should be "who do not profess the Christian, Jewish, Hindu, Muhammadan, Parsi, Buddhist, Sikh or Jaina religion, etc." It is a purely inadvertent omission, and I am thankful to my Honourable friend for having pointed it out. My amendment is that all these words in the Preamble will go and the words "domiciled in British India" will take their place. That is the purpose of my amendment. In other words, anybody domiciled in British India, whatever the religion he professes may be, will be subject to this Act.

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: That is precisely the point of order—whether it would be possible to make this change in the Select Committee.

Mr. Deputy President: I think the question which my Honourable friend, Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru, has asked ought to be put in Select Committee when the Bill is before the Committee; and it will be for the Chairman of the Select Committee to give an answer to this question. I am not called upon to give any ruling on this point.

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: May I, with all respect, point out that on previous occasions the President has been appealed to in order to ascertain what is the principle of a Bill, and he has not unoften responded to that appeal. The question before the House is an important one and before we can vote upon it, we must know what the exact significance of this measure is.

Mr. M. R. Jayakar: I have explained it.

Pandit Hirday Nath Kunzru: I entirely agree with the purpose which my Honourable friend, Mr. Jayakar, has in view; but we must know whether the purpose that we wish to accomplish will be effected by this Bill or whether a state of things which we do not wish to introduce will be brought about. If the effect of this Bill will only be to make it restrictive, we would rather leave the law as it is and seek some other opportunity of extending it.

Mr. M. R. Jayakar: I have already explained that it is an inadvertent omission—that the word "etcetera" has been omitted in clause 2 (iii).

Mr. Deputy President: I think my ruling stands, that I am not called upon to give any ruling on this point at this stage, and that it will be for the Select Committee to decide it.

Mr. Abdul Haye (East Punjab: Muhammadan): Sir, it is with profound respect for my friend, Mr. Jayakar, that I feel called upon to rise and oppose his motion. It is not always a pleasant thing to oppose my Honourable friend in this House, but I do so for religious reasons. I want it to be clearly understood by this Assembly that for us, Muslims, it is a matter of vital importance that, in such matters, our religion should be left untouched. The law of marriage has been given to us by the Koran and we, Muslims, believe that it is a revelation made by God. Sir, with us, Muslims, religion is a living force, and it has not yet become a dead letter.

My Honourable friend when moving his motion said that the Act of 1872 was prone to breed insincerity and hypocrisy. That may be so, but I ask him what is his position today. You stand here today and you say, "You are a Muslim. According to your religion it is not permissible to marry a certain person, but if you really want to marry her I will give you the necessary legal sanction".

Khan Bahadur Sarfaraz Hussain Khan (Patna and Chota Nagpur cum Orissa: Muhammadan): May I ask my friend one question? Is there any Koranic law on the subject?

Mr. Abdul Haye: The Koranic law of marriage is that a Mussalman is at liberty to marry another Mussalman, and he is also at liberty to marry a Kitabiya, that is a female who believes in a revealed book, whether she be a Jewish or a Christian lady, and it is clearly laid down that no Mussalman shall marry an idolator or a fire-worshipper.

Khan Bahadur Sarfaraz Hussain Khan: May I ask my friend if Aryas are not idolators?

Mr. Abdul Haye: The Honourable Member ought to know it.

Khan Bahadur Sarfaraz Hussain Khan: I know more than you do.

Mr. Abdul Haye: What I was trying to . . .

Nawab Sir Sahibzada Abdul Qaiyum (North-West Frontier Province: Nominated Non-Official): What about the Moghul Emperors marrying Hindu ladies?

Mr. Abdul Haye: It was absolutely illegal. Merely because Akbar did it, we cannot hold it to be legal. He certainly did an unlawful act.

Dr. A. Suhrawardy: We have no evidence that their wives were Hindus.

Rai Sahib Harbilas Sarda (Ajmer-Merwara: General): There are in the Agra Fort places where the Hindu wives of the Emperors worshipped Hindu gods.

Mr. Deputy President: I think this is all beside the point.

Mr. Abdul Haye: If my friends will permit me, I will make one observation, and it is this. If you want to begin the unification of the communities in India, you cannot do so by passing this legislation. What about our social life in this country? My friend said that he had got nothing to say to those who believe that eating and drinking is also a religion with them. I ask what about the majority of the Hindus, that great community to which the Mover of this Bill has the honour to belong?

Mr. M. R. Jayakar: It already applies to Hindus.

Mr. Abdul Haye: Is it possible, I ask, for the Honourable the Leader of the Opposition to come to dinner with me tomorrow evening? If that is not possible, it is nothing but hypocrisy to talk of such legislation. (An Honourable Member: "It is permissive.")

Then, Sir, Honourable Members must bear in mind that legislation of his character will not create the Indian nation. It will not bring about the unification of the various communities in India. The Muhammadan law as it stands permits marriages between Mussalmans and Christians and Jews. Has the unification of the communities been brought about by such . . .

Mr. Muhammad Yamin Khan (United Provinces: Nominated Non-Official): You refer to Ahl Kitab, and you also refer to Mussalmans marrying with Christians and Jews, but there may be some other books also in which certain sections of the Mussalmans believe.

Mr. Abdul Haye: Unless it is specifically stated in the Koran that certain sections believe in a certain Kitab, we cannot draw upon our imagination.

Mr. Muhammad Yamin Khan: "We have sent our Messengers at all times", our prophet has said

Mr. Abdul Haye: I am perfectly aware of that, but is it possible for you to say that a certain person was a prophet and not a pretender unless you have the authority of the Koran?

What I was submitting was that this unification by inter-marriages between the various communities has not been brought about in Egypt where the Christians and Muslims live side by side, nor has such unification been brought about in Jerusalem, where only recently there have been communal riots resulting in bloodshed.

Then again, this Act of 1872, which is sought to be amended and made applicable to Mussalmans, comes directly in conflict with our personal law. For instance, under this law, if it is enacted, it will not be possible for a Mussalman to marry one of his cousins

Sir Hari Singh Gour: You will not be able to marry under the Act, but you can marry under your own law.

(At this stage Mr. President resumed the Chair.)

Mr. Abdul Haye: Sir, what about the law of Idat, the unique and celebrated doctrine under which a widow or a divorced woman is not permitted to contract another marriage for a certain period? Idat, I maintain, is absolutely necessary to preserve the legitimacy of descendants and avoid confusion of blood. Under this Act it would be open to a Mussalman widow to go and contract another marriage within the period of Idat and that marriage would be held to be perfectly legal. I submit, Sir, that we Mussalmans cannot but oppose this measure.

Mr. Anwar-ul-Azim (Chittagong Division: Muhammadan Rural): Sir, generally, I do not like to fish in troubled waters, but it seems that it will be pertinent on the part of those who are sitting in this Central Muslim Group, hedged in between by my friends here on one side and by my friends on the Treasury Benches on the other to express an opinion. My personal opinion, so far as the Bill as it stands now is concerned, is this. This measure, if it is passed into law, will give a sort of latitude to those people professing my faith—a loophole, as Mr. Jayakar puts it—to retain their own faith and at the same time to indulge in the luxury of contracting marriages with others; because, Sir, you find the Honourable the Mover has very tactfully suggested in his Bill the omission of certain words from Schedule II. That is perhaps the only redeeming feature of the Bill so far as those people who do not belong to his faith and who would like to marry with others are concerned. In short it will save a Moslem from the terror of declaring openly that he is not a Mussalman for the purpose of this marriage, but on the other hand it is likely to create troubles and complications which we now cannot foresee. But of course here in this country, unfortunately, as we are situated, personal opinions do not go far. Personal opinions have sometimes out of necessity got to be subdued and submerged into that vocal force which is known as public opinion and it is rightly so. The part of the country from which I come is a very orthodox part of the country, and if a man of my type wanted to give his goodwill, or for the matter of that his moral support, to this measure, he would be subjected to all sorts of unnecessary troubles not knowing perhaps that he is giving his best and acting according to his light.

An Honourable Member: You will not be returned again?

Mr. Anwar-ul-Azim: I can assure anybody that, even if Pandit Malaviya were to contest my seat, he would not be able to dislodge me by the grace of God.

So far as the amending section of this law is concerned, there is one other pertinent matter which I might ask my friend about and it is this. If he wanted really to do any good to the Mussalmans of this country, would it not have looked well if he had consulted the great associations of Ulemas at Deoband and other centres of this country as to whether the time had come when the Mussalmans believing in the unity of God and also believing in the Shariat could subject themselves to the clutches of the law as is sought to be enacted through this legislation? I think neither Mr. Jayakar nor Sir Hari Singh Gour, the real author of the Bill, had taken the trouble. While Mr. Abdul Haye was talking, it was perhaps supposed that there might be some difference of opinion amongst the Mussalmans themselves about this matter, but I can assure the House and also those who have got any respect for the sentiments of the Mussalmans of this country that there can be no two opinions so far as the Koranic injunctions are concerned and for that matter the Shariat.

Mr. Jayakar, in his very lucid statement of his case, has expressed the view that, perhaps, if this law is enacted, it will bring in some sort of fusion amongst the people of this country. I mean fusion of race. He will pardon me if I point to him that he has got a living example now-a-days in the Anglo-Indian community in this country. Natives of this country have contracted marriages with believers in Christianity and of course a community has grown up. May I not pertinently ask him how far the emergence of that class and also the emergence of a class of people in Burma known as the Karens and Kabayas have advanced the cause of India towards its national goal. On the contrary, at the time of the discussion of the Railway and the General Budgets, tall cries are raised to the effect that the Anglo-Indian community are monopolising the railways and are doing such and such things. If we encourage any measures of this kind at this stage, when the country is in such a ferment, it seems to me that we shall add another trouble to the already troubled waters. With these words I oppose the motion.

Maulvi Mohammad Shafee Daoodi (Tirhut Division: Muhammadan): I rise to oppose my Honourable friend, Mr. Jayakar's motion. I would like to place my views before the Honourable Members of this House in two distinct portions. One would relate to the technicalities of the matter and the other in regard to what my Honourable friend, Mr. Jayakar, has been pleased to call the broad view of the matter, the solidarity of the great Indian nation and so on and so on. In the first part of my speech I would like to draw your attention to the fact that I find from this paper that the Governor General has been pleased to accord sanction under clause (b) of section 67(2) of the Government of India Act to this measure. I do not know how my Honourable friend, Mr. Jayakar, has secured this previous sanction of the Governor General in a matter which relates to the Muslim community, without the community being consulted. I do not know who is the Honourable Member who has given the assurance to His Excellency the Governor General that this is a matter in which the previous sanction of His Excellency the Viceroy can be given without consulting the learned theologians among the Muslims and the large body of men who are well versed in Muslim law.

The Honourable Sir James Crerar (Home Member): I do not think that my Honourable friend quite realises that he is commenting upon an act of the Governor General. I submit that it is not in order.

Maulvi Muhammad Yakub (Rohilkund and Kumaon Divisions: Muhammadan Rural): Not the act of the Governor General but the advisers of the Governor General who gave the wrong advice.

Maulvi Mohammad Shafee Daoodi: I have got a very serious grievance in this matter. I brought it to the notice of the House on the former occasion when the Child Marriage Bill was being discussed here, and at that time also I very definitely pointed out that there was no previous sanction of the Governor General obtained in regard to the inclusion of Muslims in that Bill and still the learned Home Member put his own interpretation on the sanction given by His Excellency the Governor General in that case, and he said that by implication the Governor General had sanctioned the inclusion of the Mussalmans also. I find, Sir, that he has committed the same mistake in this matter also. It is not possible for His Excellency the Governor General to go into the details of these matters. The Governor General has got to depend upon the advice of some one else, be it the Department or the Executive Council. Now, I am certainly complaining against those who are concerned with this affair. Why it is that they have given this advice to His Excellency the Governor General to accord his previous sanction to a Bill which primarily concerns the Mussalmans? They ought to have known that it was absolutely against the personal law of the Mussalmans and therefore they ought not to have committed the same mistake which they committed not long ago in regard to the Sarda Bill. I am really surprised how they could commit this mistake so soon after their previous mistake. I fail to see how it is that the Department has gone rotten to this extent. Why is it, Sir, that the Department does not look into these matters properly, which are so serious? It is a very serious matter indeed, and to grant sanction to a measure which affects the interests of the Mussalmans so vitally is certainly far from desirable.

Mr. M. S. Aney (Berar Representative): Is the Honourable Member not criticising the conduct of the Governor General?

Mr. A. H. Ghuznavi (Dacca Division: Muhammadan Rural): He is criticising the Department.

Mr. President: I think the Honourable Member would be well advised to leave this subject there.

Maulvi Mohammad Shafee Daoodi: Thank you, Sir; I have finished with this aspect of the case.

It is true, Sir, that in regard to the subject-matter of this Bill the knowledge of the Honourable Members who are here is very limited indeed. I find that even my Muslim friends are not well versed as to what it really means and what its implications are. I am not complaining against any one, but my object is to tell my friends that they ought to know first what the Islamic law is and then they could, of course, give their opinion after having that knowledge.

Now, my Honourable friend, the very revered and respected Nawab Sahib Sarfaraz Hussain Khan asked the question whether there is anything in the Koran itself in regard to this matter. I have already quoted the relevant passage from the Koran in this Session and I would give my friend its reference in the Koran. It is in Chapter II, verse 221, and I think it is the 27th Ruku. I need not quote the Arabic words, but the translation of Maulana Mohammad Ali is this:

"And do not marry the mushrik women until they believe. And certainly a believing maid is better than a mushrik woman—even though she should please you."

Khan Bahadur Sarfaraz Hussain Khan: I quoted this passage at the time when Sir Hari Singh Gour's Bill was introduced and I know it fully well, although I am not a Maulvi. But the thing that I wish to know is what is your conception of a mushrik?

Dr. A. Suhrawardy: The conception is the conception of the Shia law!

Maulvi Mohammad Shafee Daoodi: The passage will be complete after I have quoted the other portion, otherwise it will remain incomplete. Therefore, let me complete it:

"And do not give believing women in marriage to mushriks until they believe, and certainly a believing servant is better than a mushrik, even though he should please you."

To my friend, Nawab Sahib, I would say that from this it is clear that a woman who is a Muslim is not permitted to marry a mushrik. That is very clear. If it is clear, then the matter is set at rest so far as the Koranic verse is concerned.

Sir Hari Singh Gour: This is so far as the women are concerned. What about the men?

Khan Bahadur Sarfaraz Hussain Khan: Are Aryas also Mushriks?

Maulvi Mohammad Shafee Daoodi: As you know Nawab Sahib, those persons are called mushriks who associate some other power with the Almighty. It is, of course, a matter for investigation to find out whether the Aryas are mushriks or not. We are not concerned here with Aryas alone.

Having explained to my friend, the Nawab Sahib, as to what the particular verse is in the Koran in regard to this matter, I would like to pass on to the other point. It is this. My friend, the Honourable Mr. Jayakar, was pleased to say that in 1872 the Government was so broad-minded that it had to yield to the wishes of the people and enacted this Act III of 1872. I think my friend might know that the Bill of 1872 was tabled after the Brahmo community had wished it. It was they who insisted on it at that time, and to meet their wishes it was enacted. This was perfectly right. I would say that every Government ought to be responsive to the public demands of a particular community. We cannot deny the fact that the Brahmos at that time had great difficulties in their social life, and when they made that demand it was right for the Government to come to their aid and enact a law by which they could marry, and the marriage might be considered valid in the eyes of the law. But it is not the same case now as you maintain. You are trying to thrust upon the Mussalmans what they have never demanded. If the Bill had come from a Mussalman Member, I would have understood that there was some change in the mentality of the Muslim community and that they wanted to take advantage of Act III of 1872; but that is not so.

Sir Hari Singh Gour: The two Muhammadan Members are the co-authors of this Bill.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad: Who are they, please?

Maulvi Mohammad Shafee Daoodi: I would like to know the names of the two Muhammadan gentlemen who are the authors of this Bill.

Sir Hari Singh Gour: Nawab Sahib is one, who is sitting to your right.

Maulvi Mohammad Shafee Daoodi: Who is the other, my friend? (Sir Hari Singh Gour did not reply.) That is the history of Act III of 1872. When my friend came to the first Assembly, he had the hobby of bringing in Bills of this type. At that time he brought forward a Bill which wanted to include the Mussalmans also amongst those who would marry without any restriction whatsoever under the Civil Marriage Act in question. At that time, Sir, I find from the debates, that my Honourable friend Dr. Sir Hari Singh Gour met with great opposition, and he was pleased to withdraw that portion which affected the Muslims.

Sir Hari Singh Gour: The Bill went to the Select Committee.

Maulvi Mohammad Shafee Daoodi: I do not know all that. The Honourable Member at first included Muslims also, but then he saw the difficulty

An Honourable Member: The folly.

Maulvi Mohammad Shafee Daoodi: Or as my Honourable friend suggests, he saw his folly, and so he withdrew that portion of the Bill which affected the Muslims. Now, I rather conjecture that it is not my esteemed friend over there, Mr. Jayakar, who has initiated this Bill of his own accord, because this appears to be the same Bill, containing exactly the same provisions as the Bill which formerly appeared in the name of my Honourable friend, Dr. Gour.

Mr. M. R. Jayakar: I am responsible for the present Bill and I take the odium of having brought it in.

Maulvi Muhammad Yakub: He is the adoptive father.

Maulvi Mohammad Shafee Daoodi: As it is now half-past one, Sir, will you not adjourn the House?

Mr. President: The Honourable Member can go on.

Maulvi Mohammad Shafee Daoodi: I have to attend congregational prayer punctually at 1-30, I cannot go on.

Some Honourable Members: These are days of Ramzan.

Mr. President: Is it the general wish that the House should now adjourn?

Some Honourable Members: Yes, yes.

Maulvi Mohammad Shafee Daoodi: Whatever you may decide, I am going for prayers.

Mr. President: The Honourable Member is a little disrespectful. The House will now adjourn till Quarter to Three.

The Assembly then adjourned for Lunch till a Quarter to Three of the Clock.

The Assembly re-assembled after Lunch at a Quarter to Three of the Clock, Mr. President in the Chair.

Maulvi Abdul Matin Chaudhury (Assam: Muhammadan): Sir, on a point of order. Is any Member in order in leaving the House without bowing to the Chair?

Maulvi Sayyid Murtuza Saheb Bahadur (South Madras: Muhammadan): When it is a religious matter and a Member wants to offer his prayers to God, there cannot be any point of order with regard to the question.

Mr. President: I think we will leave the incident there.

Maulvi Mohammad Shafee Daoodi: With all respect to the Chair, I beg to say that the question that I was discussing was that Dr. Gour knew full well what the opinion of the Mussalmans was on this question in 1923. And he or those who supported that measure ought to have known that, between 1923 and 1930, there has not been such a great change in the mentality of the people. I could understand it if some extraordinary thing had happened in the meanwhile which could have given reasons for those who are advocates of reform to bring in this measure again so soon. Believe me, Sir, my difficulty in these matters has been very great. I have been trying to understand what my progressive friends amongst my fellow countrymen are thinking, whether they want to have a pin-prick here and a pin-prick there, or whether they want to have some radical cure for what they consider the wrongs in the country. I could believe in reformers in India who could be bold enough to take steps in matters which are really the root cause of all the troubles in India. Then I could understand that they have got something very noble and high in their minds. I have been seeing for the last six years I have been in this House attempts of a very small character being made, and it is claimed that those attempts are in the interests of the Indians. I do not know how many people are benefited by such measures. If statistics were taken, I think a very negligible percentage would seem to be benefited by measures like these. A few Indians educated in India or in England and other foreign countries might be desirous of having a couple of the kind contemplated in this Bill, but my friend should understand that that is a very insignificant matter as compared with the great things with which our motherland is overburdened. I have said on other occasions also that the best course was to tackle the root cause of our troubles and then leave these minor things to adjust themselves. That would have been the best policy which my friend could adopt, but instead of that, I find at one time a question of marriage, at another time a question of preserving alive an animal, and so on and so forth coming up. I would once for all tell my friends who are desirous of seeing our motherland in a better condition to devote their attention to something higher and something nobler, and then they will find humble persons like myself also joining hands with them. I need not say what pernicious things in our country I am thinking of, for he who has any experience of this vast country knows what the trouble is. Therefore to talk of a big nationality and to talk of this advantage and that advantage does not appeal to me at all. It is simply side-tracking the real issue. The real issue is not so much hidden as one would pretend to think; it is as clear as daylight. I hope, Sir, my Honourable friend, Mr. Jayakar, for whom I have great respect, will not take my observations in any other spirit. It is only in a sincere spirit that I am addressing my friends who are supporters of this Bill. I would tell them again that, at this moment when we should be thinking of something higher, we should not meddle in such matters. My friend, Mr. Jayakar, is in a better position in this country and we who love our religion above everything else are in a very bad condition, I admit. The idea that all these things give to us is that, here is a measure which is meant to drive the thin end of the wedge into what we think the most valuable thing.

Sir Hari Singh Gour: What is that thing, marriage? (Laughter.)

Maulvi Mohammad Shafee Daoodi: Marriage may be a thing of joke to Sir Hari Singh Gour, but it is not a thing of joke to us Indians. It is something sacred.

An Honourable Member: He is also an Indian. (Laughter.)

Maulvi Mohammad Shafee Daoodi: It is no good telling me that the question of marriage is more important than other questions in this country. My friend, Sir Hari Singh Gour, knows that the foremost question in this country is how to eliminate those evils which are dividing the Indian people into so many sections.

Sir Hari Singh Gour: Marriage will do it!

Maulvi Mohammad Shafee Daoodi: A Doctor like you might think it, because you are a Doctor of—I do not know what it is Maulvi Muhammad Yakub: Doctor of the Faculty of Reformation.

Maulvi Mohammad Shafee Daoodi: With these words I would appeal to my friends on the other side not to press this measure and not to allow distrust and suspicion to grow more and more between the two communities which are concerned in the matter.

Munshi Iswar Saran (Lucknow Division: Non-Muhammadian Rural): Sir, I wish I could lift this debate out of the quagmire of distrust and bigotry. I plead for a little commonsense and I plead for an appreciation of the forces that are at work in India and indeed all over the world. My Honourable friend, Mr. Mohammad Shafee Daoodi, has really given us a peep into the working of the mind of himself as well as of his friends who, I suppose, support him. Why these pin-pricks? says he—that is the expression that he has used himself. Why not settle the bigger problems, says Mr. Shafee, and these problems will take care of themselves? Sir, to characterise as a pin-prick a measure like this is doing violence to language. To question the motives of those who have brought forward this motion or who support it is to betray a crass ignorance of the ideals of social reformers. I shall only recite to him a Persian couplet and he will appreciate it:

“Mā rāst rawem O tū kaj-bīnī
 Rau chāra dīda kun rihā mā-rā.”

“I am walking straight, but, you see that I am walking in a crooked way. Have your eyes treated and let me alone.”

Dr. A. Subrawardy (In reply to an Interruption) We recite it for your benefit.

Munshi Iswar Saran: My complaint against my Honourable friend, Mr. Jayakar, is that this Bill does not go far enough. (Interruption.) One gentleman says, “Make it compulsory”. I leave that feat to the opponents of the Bill. They can introduce a measure which will be in accordance with the views they possess. We only make it discretionary and optional.

Mr. M. K. Acharya (South Arcot cum Chingleput: Non-Muhammadian Rural): You did not last time. (Interruption.)

Munshi Iswar Saran: This kind of interruptions I do not mind. One gentleman says, why have marriage at all? I wish the kind and obliging interrupter were in touch with the trend of modern thought in Europe and he would find that many of the ideas which are pooh-poohed now will become the dominating ideas in times to come. (Hear, hear.) (An Honourable Member: “Question.”) My friend says “Question”. Yes, you may question it today, but you will cease to question it after some time. You did question the ideals of the Muslim College at Aligarh when it was founded by that great and illustrious son of India, the late Sir Syed Ahmad.

Mr. Abdul Haya: Where is the analogy?

Munshi Iswar Saran: The analogy is here. At that time the introduction of English education was considered to be a hearsay and 3 P.M. we well know how that distinguished man was subjected to abuse, calumny, misrepresentation and everything else that is horrible. (An Honourable Member: “Question.”) I therefore say, do not criticise and oppose this Bill on the ground of its being new. Go into the merits of the question dispassionately, and after having fully gone into it dispassionately, if you come to the conclusion that the measure should not be supported, do not support it. I only plead that you should not reject it simply because you have a vague fear that there is a catch somewhere, or that it has been brought forward to hurt this or that community. May I tell my Honourable friend, Mr. Mohammad Shafee, that Hindus are as . . .

[Munshi Iswar Saran.]

much opposed to this measure as Muhammadans? I do not disguise that fact. (Hear, hear.) I do not disguise that fact, because I find a very characteristic and vigorous interruption from my Honourable friend, Dr. Moonje. It appears that the reactionaries have joined forces against the social reformers. (Laughter.) We plead for freedom, we plead for justice. We are trying to discover a way out of the anomalies and difficulties of the present situation.

Mr. M. S. Aney: Come to the merits.

Munshi Iswar Saran: I am coming to the merits. (Laughter.) This is one of the merits.

Maulvi Muhammad Yakub: There is no merit in it.

Munshi Iswar Saran: My Honourable friend, the Deputy President, will say one thing today and will repudiate it to-morrow. So it does not very much matter.

Maulvi Muhammad Yakub: Just like a wise man.

Munshi Iswar Saran: I sincerely hope that the supporters of this Bill will never acquire the wisdom of the Deputy President.

Now, Sir, the first question is, does this Bill force any one to marry against his wishes? (Hear, hear.) It does not. If you believe that you are going against your religion in marrying some one who does not belong to your religion, you are perfectly entitled to observe your religious principles, injunctions, orders or whatever else you might call them. Now the point is this. Why should you deny, I ask you in the name of common-sense, this liberty to a person who says that he wishes to marry outside his religion, who says that he does not want to remain confined for the purpose of marriage within the limits of his own people? Why deny him that liberty? This, I submit, is the tyranny of the majority.

Maulvi Muhammad Yakub: We do not deny it.

Munshi Iswar Saran: Very good. If you do not deny it, then you are bound to support this measure. (An Honourable Member: "Leave out Muhammadans.") Leave out Muhammadans? Why? Muhammadans are as much my countrymen as the Hindus or the Parsees or the Sikhs and all of them are Indians. They must all have the advantage of this beneficent measure. This is the real reason why no community should be left out. I do not wish to make this debate far more bitter than what it has already been made by some Honourable Members.

Now, Sir, may I say with great respect, that old notions are changing, and every impartial student of comparative religions will have to acknowledge that the notions that we entertained on this and other matters, say, two centuries ago, are not the notions which are influencing our conduct to-day. There would be no meaning in evolution if we stuck fast to all the notions which were acceptable to our forefathers. Progress, Sir, I submit with great confidence, would come to a standstill if this process of transformation was obstructed. What my friends consider today to be a religious observance may not be regarded perhaps after the passing of a century or two in the same light. Now, you know, Sir, that amongst Hindus there is a class—that class happily is growing and increasing very fast—which believe that you do not lose your religion by taking food out of the hands of a man who does not profess your religion. I hope that my Honourable friend, the President of the Hindu Sabha (Dr. Moonje) at any rate will not contradict me on this point. As you know, a great many Hindus believe that, if they take food, say out of the hands of a Muhammadan or a Christian, they lose their caste or religion. But a class is springing up amongst Hindus (An Honourable Member: "What about the leader of your party?") On these matters I am not prepared to yield unquestioning obedience to any authority. I must exercise my own reason, which you refuse to exercise. Now, what is the position today? If a Hindu, or any man belonging to one faith marries a woman belonging to another faith, for which provision is going to be made in this Bill, what you say to him is this: "Either you become insincere or we will drive you out of the pale of our society". Is that a reasonable position to take up? (An Honourable Member: "What did the Hindu community do on the last occasion?") I do not know what my Honourable friend is referring to, but I shall accept his hint for the sake of argument. If the Hindu community made a mistake the other day, as he says, let the Muhammadan community learn by the folly of the Hindu community and behave better on the present occasion. Do two wrongs make a right?

I was submitting, Sir, when I was interrupted, that education unfortunately in the Western sense is spreading, and unfortunately, I shall say, people are going out to countries outside India. You find hundreds and hundreds of them scattered all over the world. What is there with the changed vision and outlook to prevent their contracting marriage relationships with people who do not profess their own faith? I know that the Bill as it stands unfortunately does not cover the case which I have mentioned, but that these marriages will take place, whether we like it or not, is a fact which you cannot deny. Indeed, in India to-day—if you will kindly not keep up that constant fire of interruptions and whispers, I shall be grateful—indeed even today in India you find these isolated cases—yes, they are limited and are not general—cases where people of different faiths are married. What is to be their fate? What this Bill says is, "Yes, you may marry, if you like, you may remain in your caste or in your creed, because your religion is a matter between you and your God; it has got nothing to do with these social institutions, social observances and social rules". Is there, I ask, Sir, anything in this to be frightened at? Is there any injustice, any hardship, any unreasonableness in this idea? Sir, the fact of the matter is this: these marriages are taking place, and, will continue to take place in increasing numbers. Take the case of the Indian Christian community. According to the Indian Christian Marriage Act, a Christian is entitled, has got the right, to marry a non-Christian. According to the law as it stands, we know that such a marriage is not prohibited. What Mr. Jayakar's Bill proposes to do is to extend this freedom to non-Christians. I ask, Sir, in all seriousness, what harm has the Indian Christian Marriage Act produced? The answer in all honesty will have to be that it has produced no harm. We know, Sir, that a distinguished Indian Christian Judge of a certain High Court not very long ago married a lady who was not a Christian and is not a Christian. I have cited this instance to show that such instances will multiply, and it is up to us in this Assembly to make some provision, so that there may be the minimum of hardship or of uncertainty.

Dr. A. Suhrawardy: Did that gentleman marry a Mussalman, or a Hindu, or a Jewish or a Parsi lady?

Munshi Iswar Saran: I should not like to mention the name . . .

Dr. A. Suhrawardy: But you have mentioned it by implication.

Munshi Iswar Saran: I do not wish to mention the name of the lady, but the point is that these marriages are taking place and they will continue to take place in spite of obscurantists and of reactionaries.

Mr. M. K. Acharya: Why then this Bill?

Munshi Iswar Saran: Why then this Bill? My Honourable friend, Mr. Acharya, has put to me a very helpful question. Simply that they may not have to declare that they do not belong to this or that religion.

Mr. M. K. Acharya: Let them.

Munshi Iswar Saran: I am shocked at this remark of Mr. Acharya—that you should force a man to give a false declaration in regard to his religion is something revolting to me. I declare, Sir, in perfect truth and sincerity that I regard Hinduism as the noblest heritage of my race, but I hold that Hinduism does not consist in marrying this person or that, nor does Hinduism consist in eating this or that out of the hands of this man or that.

Dr. A. Suhrawardy: Then what does it consist of?

Munshi Iswar Saran: I cannot give a satisfactory answer in a hasty manner. But let me tell you clearly that Hinduism does not consist in eating or drinking or in marrying this or that person.

Dr. A. Suhrawardy: Can a Hindu eat beef and remain a Hindu?

Munshi Iswar Saran: My Honourable friend wishes to provoke me, but he will fail. He may go on interrupting me till he is blue in the face, but he will not succeed in making me angry.

Sir, if you hold a private conference and if you ask a good many Honourable Members who are opposing this Bill to tell you in confidence what their own personal view is, they would surely tell you, provided give them a guarantee that you will keep their confidence, "My constituency is orthodox; therefore, whatever opinion I may have, I am bound, more particularly in view of the impending election, to oppose this Bill." I say, Sir, election or no election, my speech on this occasion may drive me into the wilderness for the rest of my life, but that will not prevent me from saying what I consider to be in the interest of my country.

Mr. M. S. Aney: Bravo!

Munshi Iswar Saran: My Honourable friend, Mr. Aney, appreciates my attitude. I hope he will follow me.

An Honourable Member: Face the electorate.

Munshi Iswar Saran: Mr. Jinnah says, "Face the electorate." I know . . .

Mr. M. A. Jinnah (Bombay City: Muhammadan Urban): I did not say that.

Munshi Iswar Saran: I was surprised that such an interruption should have come from him. I made a mistake; I suppose it was a remark for the benefit of my friend, Mr. Aney (An Honourable Member: "Quite so."), because I could not for the life of me imagine that a man of the education, culture and broad-mindedness of Mr. Jinnah would make my task difficult.

Sir, there is one word I have got to say to Government.

Sir Hugh Cocks (Bombay: European): Go on.

Munshi Iswar Saran: Yes, I am doing so. Are you in a hurry? What are they going to do? I understand—I hope sincerely that I am wrong—that they are going to oppose it. If they do—they are the best judges of their own policy and of their own action—they will then be accused by the enlightened section of public opinion as being in a blue funk—I apologise for the expression. Having supported the Sarda Bill, and I suppose having burnt their fingers over it, they say, "No more social reform legislation for us; we shall not go any further now; we are going to oppose blind-folded every beneficent measure, under the plea that the country does not want it and is not prepared for it." I ask you, why do you not, in all fairness, circulate this Bill for eliciting opinion thereon? There would be something in that position, and if any such motion is brought before us, I shall vote for it. But if you do not do that, if you try to kill the Bill at this stage, you cannot escape the charge of being extremely nervous, more nervous than even you ought to be. There is a difference between this Bill and the Sarda Act, a world of difference: the Sarda Act applied to everybody whether he or she agreed with it or not. Is that the case with this Bill? It does not say to my friends on the other side, "For heaven's sake, be sensible and marry sensibly." It introduces no compulsion; it only gives freedom to those who wish to take advantage of this Bill. So I shall ask Government and the Honourable the Law Member who, I suppose, is in charge of this Bill, to bear this distinction in mind before deciding what attitude to take up.

Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh (Muzaffarpur cum Champaran: Non-Muhammadan): But they have already decided!

Munshi Iswar Saran: I should feel very sorry to think that they are not open to reason and persuasion.

It appears to me that this display of fury, of partisanship and of bigotry is a sign of the travail of the birth of a new society and a new India. It does not distress me; this Bill may be rejected today; this Bill may be rejected next year; but take it from me, this Bill is bound to find a place on the Statute-book in the near future. Obscurantism against progress and enlightenment has never succeeded.

An Honourable Member: Wish you good luck.

Munshi Iswar Saran: I thank you and I hope you will support me.

Khan Bahadur Sarfaraz Hussain Khan: Sir, as my friend, the Honourable Maulvi Mohammad Shafee Daoodi, wants to know what is the root cause of the trouble in India, let me say point blank to him—and I hope he will excuse me for putting it bluntly—narrow-minded orthodoxy is the root cause (Hear, hear) that has stood in the way of social progress from time immemorial. Now, what are the Koranic laws? The Koranic laws refer to mushrikas and mushriks. Can you say that those who do not worship idols are mushriks? Does the Koran not say that there have been prophets all over the world who have appeared for the good of mankind? Is India not part of the world? Has the Prophet said anything against others who have been prophets in other lands and in other times? Has he said anything against Christ? Has he said anything against Gautama Buddha? Has the Koran said anything against the big men in the Hindu religion? Nothing of the kind. How can you therefore say that they are mushriks? How can you say that there have been no other prophets anywhere? That is the Koranic law.

Then, Sir, my friend, Maulvi Shafee Daoodi, takes shelter under the Shariat. The Shariat is human-made law—made by a man, howsoever great. Was it not only some time ago that Ulemas all over India considered that coming into the Councils was kufr, and is he not here in spite of that? He will pardon me if I refer here a very slang proverb in Hindi, which means, "That which is sweet eat as quickly as possible and spit the sour as much as you can". When it suited him, he repudiated the law of the Shariat, and when it does not, he takes shelter under it. I hope he will excuse me for saying this. I wish to have my religion respected throughout the world as much as it was in the time of the Prophet or even after that. I do not wish it to be understood that it is chiefly the Muhammadans in the Assembly who are opposed to reform. The impression may spread to England and other places that it is the Muhammadans who oppose reform at every stage. I feel pained to think that we stood in the way of social reform. We all want union; we all want to boast of ourselves as nationalists; and when the time of unification of the different peoples of this country comes, we stand and put on the cloak of religion. That is not right. I do not wish to be long and I am sorry to have to repudiate the remarks which have been made by my friend, Maulvi Shafee Daoodi. Sir, I wholeheartedly support the Bill.

Dr. A. Suhrawardy: Sir, it is an irony of fate that I find in the List of Business two motions for amending the Special Marriage Act of 1872, when I find on the same paper several motions for amending the Marriage Restraint Act of 1928. When I came to the House, with the fate of the Hindu Child Marriage Bill fresh in my memory, naturally I was rather anxious to go through the two Special Marriage Act Amendment Bills. When I went through them, I was struck by the identity of language employed by the two authors of the Bill, and I wondered whether this striking coincidence was due to the collaboration of two legal luminaries

Mr. M. R. Jayakar: I stated in my speech that the Bill was drafted originally by Sir Hari Singh Gour. (An Honourable Member to Dr. Suhrawardy: "You should resume your seat.")

Dr. A. Suhrawardy: I do not wish to give way. If the Honourable Member had allowed me to complete my sentence he would have seen before he interrupted me that I wanted to say that I wondered whether it was the result of collaboration of two legal luminaries or whether it was a case of great minds thinking alike, though working apart, in isolation, in distant places. Curiosity, Sir, led me to read the Statement of Objects and Reasons of the two Bills, and I noticed that from beginning to end they were identical, word for word, with one distinguishing feature that the first person singular "I" was changed into "Dr. Sir Hari Singh Gour" in the Bill which stands in the name of Mr. Jayakar. Of course, Mr. Jayakar revealed to us the truth that the real author of the Bill was Sir Hari Singh Gour, and that he was not acknowledging the paternity of that Bill, but perhaps he was adopting that child which may prove to be a veritable enfant terrible. Sir Hari Singh has further revealed to us the truth by way of interruption that, not content with the joint authorship or with the collaboration of my friend Mr. Jayakar, he had to call in the assistance of two Mussalmans, valiant and virile Honourable Members of this House. He has chosen to give us the name of one gentleman, that of my respected friend Nawab Sarfaraz Hussain Khan, but he has not chosen to reveal the name of the other gentleman. What a pity that there was not a fifth collaborator, who might have saved this offspring of polyandry from the deformity and defect to which my friend Pandit Kunzru has referred, and which might result perhaps in its being stifled or strangled in its cradle.

Now, Sir, before I pass on to deal with the arguments advanced by my friend, Mr. Jayakar, I should pause for a moment to dispose of the remarks of the last speaker, Nawab Sarfaraz Hussain Khan. He had referred to the Koranic law. He had some justification in doing so. When I find that my friend Maulvi Mohammad Shafee Daoodi has also done the same thing, it is not surprising that Mr. Sarfaraz Hussain Khan, who is not a lawyer, should be led into the belief that Koranic law is the law which is applicable to Muslims. The Koran is certainly the fountain-head of Muslim law, but as in the case of the Hindu law, you have got the Smritis, the Smritis and so on, such is the case with the law of Islam. Muslims are governed by the Shariat and the law applicable to Muslims is the law as expounded by the Shariat. It is no use taking up isolated texts from the Koran and saying this is the Koranic law. It is no use doing that. Every lawyer knows that the decision of the Privy Council is that you cannot refer to isolated texts in the Koran or to the sayings of the Prophet, or to even the decisions of the ancient jurists and attempt to draw from them your own conclusions, because they appear to modern lawyers to be naturally deducible from them. It is such an elementary rule that anybody who will take the trouble of looking up even an elementary handbook on Muslim law like Mulla, will find the principle enunciated there, and it is stated in the case of Anjumanara in 25 All. It is well known to lawyers, that it is no use to cite the Koran in order to support a weak case. The Koran lays down the broad principle that no marriage between a Muslim and mushrik is allowed and that marriage with a Kithabi is allowed. And what is a Kithabi? According to the interpretation of the ancient jurists, the Kitabia or Kithabi means those who follow the Jewish or the Christian faith. Even the Parsis or the Zoroastrians are not included in that, although the faith of Zarathustra is much older than the faith of the Brahmos and the Aryas. I want to dispose of the misapprehension as to what law is applicable to the Muslims. We are governed by the Muslim law, as interpreted and understood by the ancient jurists, and nobody can claim today, however eminent he may be, to be a mujtahid, entitled to make or propound a new code of law for Muslims. My friend, Mr. Sarfaraz Hussain Khan, knows very well that the Shia law is even stricter than the Sunni law in the matter of marriage. The Shia law will not permit, like the Sunni law, the marriage of a Muslim with a non-Muslim. The Shia law goes even further, and it will not permit a Muslim to marry even a Christian woman or a Jewish woman according to the orthodox Asna Ashariya view except in the form of what is known as the muta marriage, which I may freely render as the mutable or temporary marriage.

My friend Munshi Iswar Saran quoted a Persian line, and he also told the House that there are Mussalmans who would tell him in confidence

Munshi Iswar Saran: I did not say Mussalmans, I said Members opposing this measure.

Dr. A. Suhrawardy: He said that there are Members opposing the Bill who would tell him in confidence that they are in entire agreement with him, but because of the elections they have not got the courage to do anything else but to oppose the Bill. Well, in Allahabad and Benares I might also tell him something in confidence. He quoted a Persian line, and I think I might also quote a Persian line for his edification

Ba-chashm-i turk-i fattānash bi-bakhsham din o dunya rā”

Some Honourable Members: What does that mean? Translate it.

Dr. A. Suhrawardy: It means:

“If that faithless Hindu maiden captivates my Muslim heart,
For her wicked, cruel eyes, with faith and fortune I shall part.”

That is a different matter. That is an affair of love. Any infatuated youth may be carried away by his ardour and enthusiasm for any maiden, whether she be a Christian or a Hindu. He may even give up his faith and take advantage of the Special Marriage Act of 1872, and declare that he is not a Muslim, or some Hindu maiden may adopt the Muslim faith. But that is another matter.

My friend, Munshi Iswar Saran, said that I missed his point. I don't think I missed his point at all. On the other hand, the point of my remark went home. He has also complained of the tyranny of the majority, and yet he wants, encouraged by the infliction of the tyranny of the majority over the minority on a previous occasion in the shape of the Sarda Act,—encouraged and emboldened by that Act, he appeals to the majority of the Treasury Benches, to repeat that wrong so that he may scare once more by the weight of the majority. He admits that we are in a minority in the House though in the majority outside and he appeals to them to make an alliance with him and lend him the weight and strength of the majority to crush the minority. It does not lie in his mouth to complain of the tyranny of the majority

Sir Hari Singh Gour: How is the minority going to be crushed? By giving more freedom?

Dr. A. Suhrawardy: If my friend, Sir Hari Singh Gour, has a little bit of patience, I shall deal with him when I deal with the Bill itself. I wish Sir Hari Singh had come forward and delivered a speech in support of the Bill instead of taking shelter behind the Honourable Mr. Jayakar. Anyway,—I am limited to time I think. (Some Honourable Members: “No, no; go on; go on.”) All right, Sir, thank you very much. I had better take Mr. Jayakar first. Mr. Jayakar has told us that he is not the real author of this Bill. He has also paid a very high compliment to my Honourable friend, Sir Hari Singh Gour. He said that this Bill will immortalise him.

Mr. M. R. Jayakar: Not this Bill, the 1923 Bill.

Dr. A. Suhrawardy: Very well. The Bill of 1923, which is a similar Bill, has immortalised him and this Bill will immortalise both Mr. Jayakar and Sir Hari Singh Gour, the real father and the adopted father. So long as Sir Hari Singh Gour confines his zeal to going down to posterity as a modern Manu or Yajnavalkya, we have nothing to say. His ambition is now much greater. Returning fresh from Europe, and entertaining all the new ideas to which Munshi Iswar Saran has referred, where he, Munshi Iswar Saran and myself had been wandering in the streets of London and the boulevards of Paris, sometimes alone, perhaps sometimes together, may be under the subtle influence of the new gospel of love, he may very well foresee the day when all this question of polygamy and monogamy and other “gamies” will be solved by the doctrine of free love and free thought.

Maulvi Muhammad Yakub: The question is at what hour you were wandering?

Dr. A. Suhrawardy: My Honourable friend the Deputy President has not yet had the good fortune of having been to England or France. There the hour makes no difference. In those lands of gaiety and sunshine it is always afternoon.

Now, Sir, as I said, so long as my Honourable friend, Sir Hari Singh Gour, confines his all embracing love to Jains, Sikhs and Buddhists, I have nothing to say. He himself has set an example of that. I do not wish to be personal. Perhaps I would not be allowed by the Chair to be personal. I was going to say that, so long as his zeal is confined to those people whom Mr. Jayakar has described as allied to Hinduism, I have no quarrel with him. But now that his ambition is to go down to posterity as a new Moses with the tablets of the law for the Jews, Christians and Muslims, I as a descendant and follower of the faith of Abraham must protest against it and stand up here to oppose the Bill. And I will oppose not only the introduction of the Bill, but even the amendment suggested by my friend, Munshi Iswar Saran. When I was reading the Statement of Objects and Reasons of the Bill, I was struck by the window dressing here and there and it reminded me of “Gour-ism”, if I may coin a word. I found that Sir Henry Maine, that great jurist and Law Member, was mentioned there, but there was absolutely no reference to his distinguished successor, Sir James Fitzjames Stephen and therefore I took the trouble of finding out the exact position of the Act of 1872 by reading the debate on the subject. With your permission, Sir, I will presently place before the House the relevant portions of that debate, which will demolish the clever suggestion of Sir Hari Singh Gour that Sir Henry Maine was in favour of the Bill, and that the Government of the day were in favour of a Bill as framed today by Sir Hari Singh Gour and Mr. Jayakar. But before I do so, I should like to read the list of advantages of marriages under the proposed Act as enumerated in the Statement of Objects and Reasons, because those are the very reasons on account of which I oppose the Bill.

What is latent in the Bill itself has been made patent and clear in the Statement of Objects and Reasons; that it is a blow aimed at the personal law of the Mussalmans and it is aimed at the personal law of the Hindus. But I confine myself to the Mussalmans and leave it to my friend, Dr. Moonje, and others to deal with the Bill so far as it affects the Hindus. It makes it clear that the motive underlying this Act is "patriotic" and the object is to "develop national sentiment", "to free people from the thralldom of religious ritual". When reading the sentence about "freeing people from the thralldom of religious ritual", had I not known the personal opinion of Sir Hari Singh Gour, I would certainly have thought that it had been drafted by an emissary from Moscow or a member of the Anti-God movement in Soviet Russia. It makes it clear that this Bill is monogamous in its policy and therefore it would deprive Hindus of their privilege of unrestricted polygamy and also deprive the Mussalmans of their privilege of restricted polygamy. Now, according to Munshi Iswar Saran and other advanced thinkers, the world is tending more towards polygamy than towards monogamy, because when you abolish all "gamies", there will be nothing left but the law of personal affinities and the law of love. This Bill attacks the Muslim law of inheritance. It attacks the Muslim law of divorce. It attacks the Muslim law of dower. If I were to apply my mind closely to the subject, I would be able to show that the Bill attacks the Muslim law in innumerable ways. Although it pretends only to amend a small Bill, it really strikes at the root of one of the most sacred institutions of Islam.

Sir Hari Singh Gour: How does it affect Islam at all?

Dr. A. Suhrawardy: It affects Islam in this way, that Muslim law is considered part of the Muslim religion. In Islam there is no difference between law and religion.

Sir Hari Singh Gour: How will this Bill affect it?

Dr. A. Suhrawardy: It is an invasion of the Muslim law of inheritance. Not only is it an invasion of the Muslim law of inheritance, but it is also an invasion of the Muslim law of divorce and dower and various other branches of Muslim law, reference to some of which has already been made by previous speakers and by my Honourable friend, Mr. Abdul Haye. It is nothing but a Sarda Act in disguise. I am referring to the sections restricting the age of marriage. Marriage is only permissible if one of the parties is 16 and the other is 21. I do not remember the sections, but there is not the slightest doubt that, at any rate, it is the Sarda Act in disguise. If Sir Hari Singh Gour and my Honourable friend Mr. Jayakar had been living on earth instead of living in heaven, they would have known the strength of the popular feeling against the Sarda Act and they would have also realised that this was hardly the time to put on the Statute-book another Act touching the most sacred law of the Hindus and of the Mussalmans, or even make an attempt to do so. You give us scant consolation by saying that the enactment, if passed, would be merely optional and leave in tact the personal law which controls the performance of marriages. Need I tell the House that marriage in itself is optional. There is no compulsion for anybody to marry. What consolation do I derive from the fact that it is an optional law? I ask Sir Hari Singh Gour and the other lawyers who support this Bill, "What have you left for us? Tell me what part of Muslim law have you left for us if you introduce this Bill except perhaps the article of faith, and that is not a part of the law in your sense of the word."

Then, it has been said that it will develop the idea of monogamy. How would it do that? At the same time you blow hot and cold. It is optional, it is not compulsory. If it is not compulsory, then how does it help you? You are simply making a clever gesture to my European friends in order to mislead them and to get them on your side. You are holding out a bait towards the Treasury Benches. You are after their votes and you profess to popularise and pretend to admire and exalt the European notion of marriage. That is what you want. Then you say we are going to give women equal status in the matter of divorce. Have you studied the Muslim law carefully on this point? Do you know that, under Muslim law, women have a right of divorce? It is a qualified right, it is true, but that right can become an absolute right if a certain clause is inserted in the marriage deed. The woman may on her own initiative ask for divorce, although that is not done in practice. Why should we have recourse to your Act?

Sir Hari Singh Gour: Who wants you to do that? Nobody wants you to do that.

Dr. A. Suhrawardy: That is the thin end of the wedge. Mr. Jayakar has already said that the Marriage Act of 1872, which began so far back, is now having its fruition and culmination in the shape of the present Bill, and the name of Sir Hari Singh Gour will go down to posterity and will be immortalised because of the Act of 1923. That was "half a loaf" he said. Now, you are going to give us a full loaf and perhaps a bottle of wine along with it. But I can assure, Sir Hari Singh, we are not going to have that. Sir, Sir Hari Singh Gour is a great lawyer and a great author. The number of his books is so great and the volumes so ponderous that not only I, but the whole block of the Central Muslim Party, can be buried under them. Therefore, I ask for shelter. I will not put forward my opinion against the weight of his great opinion. But I will quote, as I said before, the views of Sir James Fitzjames Stephen. Sir Hari Singh asks me to show how this Bill affects our law. I will not answer the question myself. Let the great Law Member answer the question.

To those who have carelessly read this Bill, I will say this: Please read the Bill as originally drafted by Sir Henry Maine, the distinguished Law Member in 1868. That Bill was rejected and the Bill in its amended form was passed in 1872 excluding the Hindus, the Muhammadans, the Jews, the Parsees, the Christians and the Jains and all those communities that are mentioned therein. And the Government of the day did so because they were convinced that it affected the law of the Hindus and the Muhammadans and also because they protested against it. Sir James Fitzjames Stephen, the equally distinguished successor of Sir Henry Maine, after making a distinction in his speech between the territorial and personal law goes on to remark:

"Such being the nature of Indian personal law, it is, I think, self-evident that it ought not to be changed, except in extreme cases. Laws relating to such subjects as marriage have their root in the very deepest feelings, and in the whole history, of a nation; nor is it easy to imagine a more tyrannical or a more presumptuous abuse of superior force than that which would be involved in any attempt to bring the views and the practices of one nation, upon such subjects, into harmony with those of other nations, whose institutions and characters have been cast in a totally different mould. I should feel as little sympathy for an attempt to turn Hindus into Englishmen by Acts of the Legislative Council as for attempts to turn Englishmen into Hindus by Act of Parliament."

[Dr. A. Suhrawardy.]

I wish this passage had been read at the time when the Sarda Bill was under discussion. Later on he observes:

"So far, I entirely agree with my Honourable predecessor; but I must own that the manner in which his Bill was framed and the criticisms which have been made upon it have convinced me that it went a step beyond strict justice, and violated, in its turn, the principle which I have attempted to state as to the proper relation of the British Government to Native religions. It appears to me that the Bill introduced by my Honourable friend would, by direct legislation, change very deeply the Native law upon marriage. (These are not my words.) It applies to 'Natives of British India not professing the Christian religion, and objecting to be married in accordance with the rites of the Hindu, Muhammadan, Buddhist, Parsi or Jewish religion'. All such marriages are declared to be valid, if they are celebrated according to a certain form provided by the Act, and upon certain conditions. These marriages would, moreover, be monogamous. The Bill, in short, would introduce the European conception of marriage into the Hindu and Muhammadan communities, and give to it, by law, a place amongst Hindu and Muhammadan institutions. I do not think it can be denied that this would be a change, whether for better or for worse. You may change by addition, as well as by other forms of alteration."

Sir, I do not think I need take the time of the House more than I have already done. I have put forward the reasons for my opposing the Bill and also for opposing the amendment if that amendment is allowed by you that the Bill be circulated for eliciting public opinion thereon.

One remark more and I have done. I find the name of my Honourable friend, Nawab Sir Abdul Qaiyum, as a member of the Select Committee. I do not know whether it means his acquiescence in the principle of the Bill or whether he will go there as a Warden of the Marches to protect the interests of the Muslims, so that the Bill may not emerge from the Select Committee, like the Sarda Bill, in a more dangerous form than it is at present.

Nawab Sir Sahibzada Abdul Qaiyum: Sir, I do not wish to make a long speech on this occasion. It is only with reference to the mention of my name in connection with the Select Committee that I should like to clear my position. I have consented to serve on the Select Committee, if it is ever formed, and the Bill is allowed by the House to go before that Committee, but it does not mean that I agree entirely with the principle of the Bill. I look at the principle of the Bill from two aspects. The first is the general tendency of non-Muslims introducing Bills affecting the Muslim community and interfering with the religious and social laws of the various communities in the country. The other aspect is the spirit and the actual provisions of the Bill as drafted. As regards the first point, I am still of opinion that it is very dangerous to bring in these social reforms by Bills which are introduced in this House. These reforms had better be threshed out in public through Press and platforms in their different stages. If these social reform workers have really got the spirit of going before the public and convincing them of their personal views on these subjects, they will be justified in introducing these Bills. But if they only come to this small House composed chiefly of people who claim to be educated—I do not know whether they are or are not—but they claim to be educated; people who are ashamed of obstructing a measure of reform for advance, whether social or religious, and are taking advantage of the position of these poor people here, who cannot shut their eyes to these progressive ideas and cannot force the well-set speeches of the reformers characterising them as reactionaries, orthodox or conservatives, they are not justified in introducing such Bills.

As I have just said, if these reformers are ready to go to the country with their ideas and plead the cause of their reforms on platforms in public mass meetings or in other ways, they will be justified in introducing these Bills in this House. But if it is only here in this corner of the House, surrounded by high walls, well protected from public view and the criticisms and remarks of the public, for the time being, yes occasionally exposed to bombs but not on matters like this but only on political matters,—I say if they only talk in this House on social reform matters, well protected as they are, I do not think they are justified in pushing on this measure in this manner.

The second thing is whether Government should readily interfere in these matters or should try to be cautious. I think they should be most careful and need not be more than mere post office in these matters. I do not believe the Government will be justified in supporting one or the other community in carrying through a measure of general application without the consent of the majority of every community. It was not justifiable on the part of the Government, and I said this on the last occasion also, to have made a sort of coalition with a strong party in this House and carried out a measure which was repugnant to the majority of my community, although I am still of the opinion that the measure by itself is not a bad one and does not go against the spirit of my religion, according to my personal opinion. But when we moved a motion for referring back the Bill for the opinion of religious authorities, who had not had a good opportunity to express their opinion on it as stated by the Age of Consent Committee itself, when we made that motion, the Government were in such a hurry that they would not even wait for six months more, i.e., till the next Session

An Honourable Member: Only three months.

Nawab Sir Sahibzada Abdul Qaiyum: Yes, only three months; and the Government did not give an opportunity to the religious authorities to give their opinion on the measure. They did not realise what trouble and excitement and discontent that measure was likely to create among the Muslims, and also among a large section of the Hindus. Similarly there is no hurry about this Bill either. As stated by my Honourable friend, Maulvi Mohammad Shafee Dacodi, it will not affect even a half per cent. of the population, or except a few lovers or people of that sort who may care to avail themselves of the measure. But if these people are so infatuated with love, then as suggested by my Honourable friend, Dr. Sulrawardy, let them give up their religion temporarily and contract marriages, or whatever you may call it under the existing law instead of enacting a new law for the whole country.

It is said that it is only a law which is permissive and does not force people to follow it—but you must remember that, if you allow 4 P.M. this loophole for a lover to escape the rigours of the criticisms of his community, you will be only encouraging him to follow it. You protect him from the criticism of his community under the law and help him in escaping the criticism, ridicule and possible excommunications from his community by your law and thus encourage him in the achievement of his object, so much to the detriment of his people and his faith. I have got the same enthusiasm for social reforms as my friend Nawab Sarfaraz Hussain Khan has and really wish that all necessary social reform should be brought about in the country as fast as possible, and if our

[Nawab Sir Sahibzada Abdul Qaiyum.]

Hindu brethren are prepared to avail themselves of their opportunities of introducing those reforms, I should help them rather than stand in their way. But my help can only come forward if I am not affected by that movement. It is because there is a Persian proverb, which says, when translated, "First our own interest and then the interest of the general public". I must see that their activities do not affect me seriously in any way. But I was very much interested to hear from my Honourable friend, Maulvi Mohammad Shafee Daoodi, that a little higher and nobler spirit ought to be introduced in this country before any measure like this is moved. I am not going to refer to it in detail or in any particular way as I do not wish to refer to those obnoxious phrases, communal differences or various other things of the sort. If I may be allowed to express my view in the language of this Bill, I should say that I like a measure to be introduced not necessarily by private Members but rather by the Government themselves, a measure to force a permanent marriage between the two communities! They must force the two communities to marry one another and live as husband and wife in the country—no matter which is the husband and which is the wife! If a law of this magnitude and of this far reaching effect could be introduced, these differences would settle themselves of their own accord and we should feel happier. As suggested by some previous speaker it is only the distrust that has created the gulf between the two communities and assumed such an abnormal condition, with the result that the social and general progress of the country is retarded and the happiness and peace of the whole population are destroyed. Before we introduce these small reforms here and there, I think the first thing is to introduce a measure, of the kind mentioned above, whether it is before or after the Simon Commission's Report, it does not matter. The first thing to be done is to introduce some sort of measure by which we should be compelled to settle all disputed matters between the two sections of the population and fix up their respective rights and privileges and then we could attend to these marriage reforms, etc. Nobody will perhaps then care whether a Hindu marries a Muslim girl or a Muslim marries a Hindu girl. There was a time in 1920-21 when the people were so near in their hearts to one another that they could eat from the same dish and drink from the same glass; and so much so that here in this Capital of India, a Hindu social worker and reformer in the person of the late Swami Sradhanand was allowed to get up on a pulpit in the Juma Masjid and preach to the people there. I do not believe that this distrust and this estrangement which has since come in between the two communities is removable by mutual consent; we are too selfish. Let Government come forward and divide this joint property of the loaves and fishes in the country, this bone of contention, between us and if that is followed even by a year or two of trouble and risings, it will not matter much. You will have done the country good. That is the sort of reform that I should like to see introduced, instead of wasting the time of the House on matters like a marriage between a Hindu and a Mussalman and so on.

As one of the Honourable Members pointed out, who could have expected that on the same agenda where there was a Bill for the repeal of a certain enactment passed only four or five months ago, there would be another Bill of the same controversial nature? And no one could expect that there would be unanimity of opinion about passing this Bill, or referring it to the Select Committee. I think it is quite natural that there should be a more vehement dispute and quarrel over this Bill than in the case of the former Bill now called the Sarda Act.

But, Sir, I only wanted to clear my position, and to say that it will be for the reasons given above that I shall have to oppose the Bill in its first reading. If that fails, then I will support some amendment which may have the effect of circulating it in the country for public opinion. If that also fails and the Bill goes before the Select Committee, then I shall be delighted to serve on that Committee in order to safeguard the interests of the various communities as far as my humble self can help in the matter. But in the first two stages I must make it clear I shall have to act as indicated above—I am not in entire agreement with the general idea of the introduction of the Bill in the present day atmosphere prevailing in the country though I believe the measure is a good one and a bit of advancement towards that nationality to which we are all aspiring. But my personal opinion is that this piecemeal legislation will not do and that a wholesale nationalisation must come by legislation, whether in the shape of a revision of the Government of India Act or anything else; because we are so divided, so selfish and so quarrelsome, that we can never be expected to come to a mutual agreement about even a small matter in this country. That is our bitter experience, and I do not believe that we can agree on any measure of reform by mutual consent, not to speak of this Bill, which really affects the personal law of the Muslims. That, Sir, is all that I have to say.

The Assembly then adjourned till Eleven of the Clock on Monday, the 17th February, 1930.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

Monday, 17th February, 1930.

The Assembly met in the Assembly Chamber of the Council House at Eleven of the Clock, Mr. President in the Chair.

MEMBERS SWORN:

Sheikh Mushir Husain Kidwai, M.L.A. (Cities of the United Provinces : Muhammadan Urban); Mr. Adit Prasad Singh, M.L.A. (Darbhanga cum Saran : Non-Muhammadan); Mr. Satyendra Chandra Mitra, M.L.A. (Chittagong and Rajshahi Divisions : Non-Muhammadan Rural); Mr. Hari Prasad Lal, M.L.A. (Gaya cum Monghyr : Non-Muhammadan); and Mr. Albert Melville Hayman, O.B.E., M.L.A. (Railway Board : Nominated Official).

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS ON THE "AZAN" QUESTION IN ZAFARWAL.

298. Mr. Anwar-ul-Azim: Has the attention of Government been drawn to the order of the Commissioner, Lahore Division, about the Azan matter in Zafarwal in the Punjab? Is that consistent with Government's policy of neutrality in matters of religion? Have Government realised the fact that it has created consternation amongst the Muslims all over India?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: The Government of India have ascertained from the Local Government that the Commissioner of the Lahore Division has issued no order of any kind relating to the dispute in village Zafarwal regarding the calling of the Azan. The policy of the Local Government has been to obtain a settlement of the dispute which will leave behind no ill-feeling either among Muhammadans or among Sikhs. It was in accordance with this policy that the Commissioner of the Lahore Division gave advice to both parties when he visited the village on the 17th of January, 1930. The advice actually given is stated in his letter to the Muslim Outlook which was published in the issue of that paper dated the 23rd of January, 1930. The Government of India understand that the dispute has now been settled.

ACCIDENT ON THE BENGAL NAGPUR RAILWAY.

299. Khan Bahadur Sarfaraz Hussain Khan: (a) Will Government be pleased to state if their attention has been drawn to the paragraph published in the Bengalee of the 1st February, 1930, under the heading "Three Killed, Bengal Nagpur Railway Collision Tragedy, Several Injured"?

(b) If so, will they please state if the report is correct?

(c) If correct, will they please state who were responsible for the accident and what steps Government are going to take against them?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: (a) and (b). Yes.

(c) The Government Inspector of Railways reported that he was holding an inquiry into the cause of the accident on the 3rd February. His report is awaited.

RAILWAY CONSTRUCTION IN INDIA.

300. Khan Bahadur Sarfaraz Hussain Khan: (a) Has the attention of Government been drawn to the report published in the Statesman of January 31, 1930, under the heading "Rail Construction Check, Retarding Progress of India"?

(b) If so, will Government please state if the report is correct?

(c) If correct, will they please state the reasons for the rail construction check?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: (a) Yes.

(b) It is correct to say that the Government have decided that the time has come to make a pause in the rate of capital expenditure on railway development. Such capital expenditure, excluding sums spent on the purchase of railways, during the past five years, has averaged 22½ crores per annum. At present, it is considered that it is a great importance to restrict Government borrowings while it is, for other reasons also, a suitable time to pause and take stock of the position on the railways. This is only a normal phase in the execution of the general policy of the Government which will continue to be, as it has been hitherto, a policy of taking up the construction of extensions of the railway system that appear likely to be remunerative when money can be made available for them consistently with the needs of financing other forms of development, and at reasonable rates of interest.

(c) The conditions affecting the issue of loans for capital expenditure on railways at present and the increase in the rate of interest which must be offered to attract money to such loans.

Mr. K. C. Neogy: Is it a fact that in the case of one sanctioned scheme, namely, the Dacca-Aricha Railway, the check is really due to the anxiety on the part of the Government to placate the Statesman itself and the Bengal Chamber of Commerce?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: The answer is in the negative.

Mr. K. C. Neogy: With reference to the letter which the Government have lately addressed to the Bengal Chamber of Commerce on the subject, is it a fact that it is in the nature of a diplomatic document intended to give a decent burial to this scheme?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: No, Sir. I believe the Honourable the Railway Member is going to lay a copy of that letter on the table of the House very shortly,—today, I think,—and Honourable Members will be able to judge from the terms of that letter whether it justifies the description the Honourable Member has given of it.

Mr. K. C. Neogy: Is it not a fact that, although the Honourable Member promised to lay copies of the correspondence on the table in September last, the reply to the Bengal Chamber of Commerce has already been published in the Press?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: Yes, Sir. I regret that this should have happened. It ought not to have been published in the Press until the day on which it was laid on the table of this House, and I desire to apologise to the House for the mistake.

APPOINTMENTS IN THE POSTAL DEPARTMENT.

301. Khan Bahadur Haji Abdullah Haji Kasim: (a) Will Government be pleased to state whether it is a fact that there was a system of engaging men to learn work in the post office, with a view to employing them as vacancies arose in the Postal Department?

(b) If so, how many candidates were so selected in the Madras Presidency during the years 1928-29 and 1929-30?

(c) How many of them were directed to furnish security and how many did actually furnish security?

(d) How many of them did actually work as clerks during the said period?

(e) Are Government aware that the Postmaster General, Madras, abruptly cancelled the system of candidates on the "Waiting List" as per circular No. AX-7, dated the 16th September, 1920?

(f) If so, how many of them were thrown out of work thereby?

(g) Is it a fact that the subsequent vacancies in the Postal Department were filled up from men who were untrained strangers, ignoring the claims and protests of the candidates who had duly furnished security, who had worked in the post offices for months together without any remuneration and temporarily acted as clerks?

(h) If the replies to parts (a), (e), and (g) are in the affirmative, will Government be pleased to state what steps they propose to take in the matter, and whether, in making future appointments, preference will be given now at least to those who are out of work?

Mr. H. A. Sams: (a) The fact is as stated by the Honourable Member.

(b) to (h). If the year 1920 given in the Honourable Member's question is correct Government regret that they cannot undertake the compilation of information extending over the last ten years, as the labour and expense involved thereby will not in their opinion be commensurate with the value of the information to the public. I shall, however, inquire of the Postmaster General concerned whether there is any genuine grievance requiring remedy.

THROUGH BOOKING ON THE ASSAM-BENGAL RAILWAY.

302. Mr. Anwar-ul-Azim: (a) Will Government be pleased to state if it is a fact that special facilities for through booking from all stations of the Assam-Bengal Railway to Rangoon and Akyab have been conceded to the British India Steam Navigation Company Limited, with a special van for the passengers while the application of the Bengal Burma Steam Navigation Company, Limited, for similar facilities has been denied by the Assam-Bengal Railway although a promise was held out by the former Agent, Mr. Izat?

(b) If the answer to part (a) be in the affirmative, will Government be pleased to state the reasons therefor?

(c) Is it a fact that at the last meeting of the Assam Bengal Railway Local Advisory Committee held on the 16th January last the Indian members strongly recommended the grant of similar facilities to the Bengal Burma Steam Navigation Company?

(d) Will Government be pleased to state whether they intend to request the Assam Bengal Railway Company to grant the similar facilities to the Bengal Burma Steam Navigation Company?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: (a) Yes.

(b) In 1926, the Assam Bengal Railway came to an agreement with the British India Steam Navigation Company for through booking from certain stations on the Assam Bengal Railway to Rangoon by British India steamers. At that time there were no competitors for the traffic. In November 1928, through booking was also made applicable to the Port of Akyab. In December 1928, the Bengal Burma Steam Navigation Company applied for similar through booking to Rangoon and Akyab by their steamers and this was agreed to by the Agent of the Assam Bengal Railway, but it was subsequently found that the rates by the Bengal Burma Steam Navigation Company were higher than those by the British India Steam Navigation Company and the former company were told that through booking would be possible if they charged the same fares as the British India Steam Navigation Company. The Agent considered that different fares to the same place by the same route were open to objection and might lead to fraud.

(c) The matter was discussed at the meeting of the Assam Bengal Railway Local Advisory Committee on 16th January and the Agent explained the reasons which had led to his refusing to meet the request of the Bengal Burma Steam Navigation Company.

(d) I am asking the Agent for further particulars as to the difficulty he foresees in having through booking at two different fares and to further consider whether through booking with the Bengal Burma Steam Navigation Company could not be introduced.

Mr. Sarabhai Nemchand Haji: May I know, Sir, if the action of the Agent does not indicate one of the many directions in which the Government of India help non-Indian and British monopolies in this country?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: No, Sir. The action of the Agent was taken for the reason I have given, namely, that he considered that different fares to the same place by the same route were open to objection as facilitating fraud. But I am not sure that there may not be other ways of overcoming that objection, and it is for this reason that we are asking the Agent to reconsider the matter, and to see whether he cannot allow through booking by the Burma Steam Navigation Company.

Mr. Sarabhai Nemchand Haji: Why then is it, Sir, that the Government of India are helping one of the parties to the rate war, namely, the British India Company, who themselves have started a rate war against a genuine Indian concern?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: I should like to explain, Sir, that the Honourable Member's question is, I believe, the first intimation which the Government of India or the Railway Board have had of this matter. I have no reason to believe that the Agent's action in the matter has anything to do with the rate war which the Honourable Member states to be in progress.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Mr. Sarabhai Nemchand Haji: Do I understand the Honourable Member to say that the Agent did not know the existence of the rate war when, as the result of it, the rate was reduced from 14 to 4?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: No, Sir, nothing of the sort. I said that, as far as I am aware, the Honourable Member's question is the first intimation we had had of the matter. I was merely correcting the suggestion that the action of the Agent had anything to do with the Government of India.

PAY AND DUTIES OF EXTRA-DEPARTMENTAL AGENTS.

303. Mr. Anwar-ul-Azim: (a) Are Government aware that regular attendance hours are now prescribed for the Extra-Departmental Agents of the Postal Department, and that they get no time available for taking up other sources of income?

(b) If the reply to part (a) be in the negative, do Government propose to inquire into the matter?

(c) Is it a fact that the Postal Inquiry Committee recommended a slight increase in the emoluments of the Extra-Departmental Agents, but that in the subsequent revision of pay of all classes of employees the case of the Extra-Departmental Agents was entirely overlooked?

(d) Have Government included in the Budget of this year an adequate amount for the revision of the emoluments of the Extra-Departmental Agents, including the allowances for contingencies?

Mr. H. A. Sams: (a) Regular attendance hours, that is to say, the hours during which an office is open for business, have always been prescribed for Extra-Departmental Agents of the Postal Department. Government are not aware that the Extra-Departmental Agents get no time for their ordinary business. In fact Government are under the impression that this is not the case. If, however, in any particular instance it is so, it is open to the Extra-Departmental Agent to resign.

(b) No.

(c) No. The attention of the Honourable Member is invited to my reply to parts (c) and (d) of Mr. S. C. Mitra's starred question No. 1006 in the Legislative Assembly on the 11th March, 1929.

(d) In view of the reference I have just given, this point does not arise.

PAY OF MAIL RUNNERS.

304. Mr. Anwar-ul-Azim: (a) Are Government aware that the mail-runners are paid barely Rs. 15—19 per month?

(b) Are Government aware that the divisional administrative heads of the Postal Department are of opinion that the present pay of the runners is hopelessly inadequate? If Government have no information, what steps have Government taken to ascertain it?

(c) Have Government considered the question of increasing the pay of the mail-runners as proposed by the All-India Postal and Railway Mail Service Union? If not, why not?

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

ooting with postmen at all stations. Government do not propose to effect any further revision of their pay; they have not therefore provided any funds in the Budget for this year. The reasons are stated in part (e) of my reply to Mr. G. Sarvotham Rao's question No. 347 on the 7th March, 1928.

APPOINTMENTS AND PROMOTIONS IN THE POSTAL DEPARTMENT.

306. Mr. Anwar-ul-Azim: (a) Will Government be pleased to state the policy under which probationers in the Postal Department were recruited and the promotion of the officials to higher grades were made before the introduction of the examination for the confirmation of reserve clerks and the promotion to selection grades?

(b) Will Government be pleased to state the defects in the system for which the present system of examination has been introduced?

(c) Will Government be pleased to state the number of reserve clerks that have been turned out of the Department for failure in the test at the second time in the Bengal and Assam Circle during the last two years?

(d) Will Government be pleased to state the number of candidates that appeared in India for the selection grade examination held on the 16th and 17th December, 1929, and what amount has been received by Government from the sale proceeds of the copies of postal publications purchased by the examinees?

(e) Is it a fact that the General Secretary, All-India Postal and Railway Mail Service Union had an interview with the Director General of Posts and Telegraphs on the 19th November, 1929, and pointed out to that officer that the candidates did not receive in time the Initial Account Code and also represented to him certain other inconveniences and requested him to change the date but that the date was not changed?

(f) Is it a fact that since the creation of the Post Office Department in India eligibility for promotion was determined by seniority coupled with efficiency?

(g) Will Government be pleased to state the number of unsuccessful candidates in the Bengal and Assam Circle against whom there is nothing on record to pass them over for promotion to selection grades?

(h) Is it a fact that many junior time-scale clerks have been promoted to the selection grade as Town Inspectors without any examination merely on consideration that they were acting in that capacity for some time? If so, will Government be pleased to state why this consideration cannot be applied in case of time-scale Postmasters for promotion to the selection grade appointments?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: (a) The system of recruitment before the introduction of the confirmation examination was the same as it is now, viz., that except in certain backward provinces, candidates were required to possess certain minimum educational qualifications and to pass an examination conducted by gazetted officers. Promotion to the higher grades before the introduction of the lowest selection grade examination was made by seniority coupled with fitness as judged by the officials' past record and by the personal knowledge of the officer ordering the promotion.

(b) Before the introduction of the confirmation examination, probationers, after their first appointment, were often found to take too little interest in their work and to fail to acquaint themselves with the ordinary rules and regulations of the Department, knowledge of which is necessary for the efficient discharge of their duties. The introduction of the confirmation examination considerably lessened this tendency and its effect has been very salutary. The previous system of promotion to the selection grade did not provide a uniform and safe guide; selection by examination was therefore introduced.

(c) Information is being obtained and will be furnished to the Honourable Member in due course.

(d) 2652 candidates sat for the examination. The amount derived from the sale of departmental publications to examinees is being ascertained and will be intimated to the Honourable Member later on.

(e) Yes. The date was not changed as the difficulties pointed out were not considered to be insurmountable.

(f) Yes, but it does not follow that there was no scope for further improvement.

(g) Assuming that the Honourable Member refers to the lowest selection grade examination, I would observe that the results of the examination have not yet been published.

(h) The Honourable Member's attention is invited to the reply to part (f) of question No. 1334, dated the 2nd April, 1929, in the Legislative Assembly.

Mr. Anwar-ul-Azim: Will the Honourable Member kindly place the information with regard to part (c) of my question on the table of the House?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: The usual practice in these cases, Sir, is to place a copy of the reply in the Library of the House. This is done to avoid adding to the bulk, and the printing charges, of the proceedings of this House.

Mr. Anwar-ul-Azim: When the Government of India are in a position to spend crores of rupees on many other things, can they not also bear the expenses of this printing, Sir?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: Sir, the decision about the practice to which I referred was arrived at after due consideration of the circumstances of the case. If a copy of the reply is placed in the Library of the House, it will be equally available to any Honourable Member of the House who wants to get himself acquainted with the information.

Dr. A. Suhrawardy: May I inquire whether it will be available to Members of Parliament who would not have access to information which forms part of the proceedings of this House if such information is placed only in the Library of the House?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: The information in this particular case is not of a nature which will interest any Member of the Houses of Parliament.

Dr. A. Suhrawardy: That is a matter of opinion.

EXAMINATIONS FOR POSTAL OFFICIALS.

307. Mr. Anwar-ul-Azim: (a) Will Government be pleased to state whether in the Postal Department the administrative officers have to appear at any examination for higher grades and appointments? If not, why are the officials in the time-scale required to undergo an examination?

(b) Is it a fact that the departure from the old practice is due to loss of efficiency of the administrative officers in selecting able and efficient senior hands for promotion? If not, will Government be pleased to state the reasons for the introduction of the examination?

(c) Will Government be pleased to state the number of candidates that appeared for the examination in India, the number required for employment and the number turned out as unsuccessful and the amount recovered as fees for the examination and medical certificates and the purpose for which the fees for examination and medical certificates have been realised and for what purpose the amount will be utilised?

(d) Is it a fact that under the existing rule the officials on first appointment have to produce a health certificate from a competent medical authority without which pay cannot be drawn, and if so, why a fee of Rs. 16 has been recovered from them? Is any fee, at all, recovered from the new recruits into the Post Office for a certificate of health?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: (a) No. In reply to the second part of the question, the Honourable Member is referred to the reply to (b) of his previous question.

(b) No. The reply to the second part of the question is given in my reply to (b) of the previous question.

(c) No information can be given unless the Honourable Member will please state definitely the examination or examinations he has in view.

(d) The reply to the first part of the question is in the affirmative. The second part cannot be answered unless the appointments which the Honourable Member has in view are specified. The reply to the third part is in the negative.

MR. HARDY'S REPORT ON COTTON PIECE-GOODS DUTIES.

308. Mr. B. Das: (a) Has the attention of Government been drawn to the reply given by Mr. Wedgwood Benn to a question of Major Graham Pole in the House of Commons concerning Mr. Hardy's Report on the question of substituting specific duties for ad valorem duties on imported cotton piece-goods to India?

(b) Will Government be pleased to state what will be the increase or loss of revenue by adopting Mr. Hardy's method of charging specific duties on imported cotton piece-goods?

(c) Will Government be pleased to state the proposals they wish the House to adopt on the recommendations of the Hardy Report?

(d) Do Government propose to bring forward a specific motion in the Legislative Assembly to discuss the Hardy recommendations? If so, when?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: (a) Yes, Sir.

(b) The revenue effect of a change to specific duties must depend upon the rates of duty as well as the method of charging duty adopted. Mr. Hardy's Report made suggestions as to method only and the question cannot therefore be answered.

(c) and (d). Mr. Hardy's Report contains no recommendations.

TRADE DEPRESSION IN COTTON MILLS.

309. Mr. B. Das: Are Government aware that only the Bombay group of cotton mills suffer from trade depression and is it a fact that all agitation for compassion and help proceeded only from the Bombay Mill-owners' Association?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: Reports which Government have received indicate that cotton mills at other centres than Bombay are also suffering in varying degrees for lack of demand for their goods.

Requests made for assistance to the cotton mill industry have not been confined to the Bombay Millowners' Association.

TRADE DEPRESSION IN COTTON MILLS.

310. Mr. B. Das: (a) Will Government be pleased to state if they received any representation from mills situated at Ahmedabad, Delhi, Bengal, Cawnpore and the Punjab regarding external competition and consequent trade depression?

(b) What is the finding of Mr. Hardy regarding trade depression in those places?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: (a) Representations have been received recently from the cotton mill industry at Ahmedabad, Delhi and Cawnpore and in Bengal.

(b) I would refer the Honourable Member to the Report.

ENHANCEMENT OF DUTY ON IMPORTED COTTON YARN.

311. Mr. B. Das: Will Government be pleased to state the amount of revenue accruing to Government from the additional levy of duty on imported cotton yarn on the recommendations of the Tariff Board Inquiry (Cotton Textile Industry Inquiry) during:

(1) 1927-28:

(2) 1928-29: and

(3) 1929-30?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: On the quantities actually imported since the new duty on cotton yarn came into force in October, 1927, the amounts by which actual collections of duty exceeded what would have been collected at the former rate have been:

	Lakhs.
(1) 1927-28 (October to March)	5.9
(2) 1928-29	10.8
(3) 1929-30 (nine months)	7.9

This calculation, however, does not allow for the reduction of imports consequent upon the restrictive effect of the new duty, and it would be more correct to compare actual collections with the duty at the old rate on an estimate of the quantities that would have been imported if that rate had remained in force; on this basis, the additional revenue secured is calculated to be as follows:

	Lakhs.
(1) 1927-28 (October to March)	2½
(2) 1928-29	7½
(3) 1929-30 (nine months)	5

ENHANCEMENT OF DUTY ON IMPORTED COTTON YARN.

312. Mr. B. Das: (a) Will Government be pleased to state to what extent the Bombay millowners derived assistance to meet, (i) external competition, (ii) internal competition from India by such enhancement of duty on imported cotton yarn?

(b) Will Government be pleased to state whether Mr. Hardy was instructed to inquire into this aspect of the question, and if so, what are his conclusions?

(c) Is it not a fact that the Bombay millowners were the only party that cried for this protection in 1927?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: (a) I would refer the Honourable Member to my reply to Mr. Duraiswamy Aiyangar's question No. 34, dated the 20th January, 1930.

(b) Mr. Hardy was not so instructed.

(c) No.

OVER-CAPITALISATION OF THE BOMBAY COTTON MILLS.

313. Mr. B. Das: (a) With reference to paragraph 39 of the Tariff Board's Report (Cotton Textile Industry Enquiry, 1927) on over-capitalisation of the Bombay group of mills, will Government be pleased to state if Mr. Hardy was instructed to inquire whether the Bombay group of mills had taken any steps to reduce their war boom capitalisation, and if so, what is the conclusion of Mr. Hardy on the subject?

(b) Is it not a fact that the tendency of over-capitalisation was only observed in the Bombay group of mills?

(c) Is it a fact that the Tariff Board found the following abnormal conditions in the Bombay mills?

	Ahmedabad.	Bombay.
No. of Mills	54	54
Spindles	1,311,939	3,456,233
Looms	28,507	72,266
Paid up capital	Rs 3.25 crores.	Rs. 19.21 crores.
Ratio of looms and spindles of Ahmedabad/Bombay		3 times.
Do. paid up capital		6 times.

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: (a) Mr. Hardy was not so instructed.

(b) The conclusion stated by the Tariff Board in its Report on the Cotton Textile Industry Inquiry was that the tendency to over-capitalisation in the boom period was much more marked in Bombay than elsewhere.

(c) The figures quoted by the Honourable Member are as given by the Tariff Board, except that the number of mills in Bombay quoted by him should be 79 instead of 54.

Mr. H. P. Mody: Has the Honourable Member recently received statements showing that, whatever over-capitalisation took place during the boom period, in recent years a very considerable reduction of capital has been effected in the Bombay mills?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: That is so, Sir; but I wish to make it clear that I was merely stating what the view expressed by the Tariff Board was: I was not expressing any view on behalf of the Government.

Mr. H. P. Mody: I quite recognise that, Sir.

FINANCES OF BOMBAY COTTON MILLS.

314. Mr. B. Das: (a) Are Government aware that the Tariff Board reached the conclusion in paragraph 40 of their Report that the dividends paid during the boom years (by Bombay mills) were unduly high?

(b) Is it also stated in that paragraph that the Bombay group of mills did not provide sufficient funds for depreciation (vide paragraph 40 of the Report) as given below:

				Bombay.	Japan.
				(Depreciation allowed in per cent.)
Buildings	..	..	..	2½%	} 10 to 15% average being 13·6%
Machinery	..	..	..	5 %

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: (a) Yes, Sir.

(b) The Board's statement was that Japanese mills had shown greater foresight than the Bombay mills in regard to amounts written off to depreciation.

HARDSHIPS OF HANDLOOM WEAVERS.

315. Mr. B. Das: (a) Will Government be pleased to state if they made any inquiry as to the extent to which the handloom weavers suffered in their income due to the levy of additional duty on imported cotton yarn?

(b) Will Government be pleased to state if they are aware that the prices of handloom woven cloth have remained stationary and in some places gone down since 1927?

(c) Are Government aware of the hardship to handloom weavers all over the country owing to the increased price of yarn, both imported and indigenous?

(d) Is it a fact that the Directors of Industries of provinces with a majority of handloom weavers drew the attention of Government to this hardship?

(e) Did Government address any inquiry to the provinces, after the yarn duties were raised, as to the loss of trade and income to the handloom weavers?

(f) Is it a fact that the Indian millowners raised the prices of their yarn after the increment of duty on imported cotton yarn.

(g) Are Government prepared to consider the question of abolishing the duty on imported cotton yarn?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: (a), (b), (c) and (e). Government have made two inquiries into the effect of the duty on handloom weavers. Copies of the replies received from the Local Governments to the first inquiry, and the replies so far received to the second inquiry have been placed in the Library. The replies do not indicate that the interests of handloom weavers have been seriously affected by the duty.

(f) The exact effect of the duty on the price of cotton yarn is difficult to trace, but presumably it must have operated to keep the price at a higher level than it would otherwise have reached.

(g) Government will announce their intentions at an early date.

Mr. B. Das: May I inquire, Sir, whether from the reports received by the Government of India in reply to their inquiry, any Provincial Government has pointed out that there has been no increment in the price of handloom woven goods?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: I must ask for notice of that.

Mr. N. C. Kelkar: May I put the questions on behalf of Rai Sahib Harbilas Sarda?

Mr. President: Mr. Kelkar.

RELICS OF BUDDHA.

316. Mr. N. C. Kelkar (on behalf of Rai Sahib Harbilas Sarda): (a) Has the attention of Government been drawn to the news published in the Hindustan Times of the 31st January, 1930, that a bone relic of Buddha has been discovered during the excavation on Nagarjunikonda in the Palnad Taluk of the Guntur District?

(b) Are Government aware that great dissatisfaction and resentment was produced amongst the Hindus in India by the removal by Government a few years ago of Buddha relics found near Peshawar to places in Burma and Ceylon?

(c) Are Government aware that Buddha is worshipped by Hindus as one of the ten incarnations of God?

(d) Are Government aware that Hindus strongly resent the removal from India of any part of the remains of the greatest man that India has produced?

(e) Will Government give reasons why these relics are removed from stupas reverently built by ancient Indians as sacred places?

(f) What steps do Government propose to take to preserve in India this bone relic of Buddha, which is one of the greatest and most sacred heirlooms of India?

Sir Frank Noyce: (a) Yes. The information referred to by the Honourable Member was published with the approval of the Government of India.

(b) The Buddha relics found in a stupa near Peshawar in 1908-09 were presented to the Buddhists of Burma, which is a province of India. No portion of these relics was sent to Ceylon. Applications were received from certain Hindu Associations and individuals requesting the retention of these relics in India proper, as distinct from Burma, but in view of the much larger population of Buddhists in that province, the relics were presented to it to be preserved in a special pagoda at Mandalay.

(c) Yes.

(d) and (e). I have already explained to the Honourable Member the reasons for the removal to another province of India of the relics discovered near Peshawar. I can assure him that it is not the policy either of Government or of the Archaeological Department unnecessarily to disturb or to export sacred objects that come into their possession. Where legitimate archaeological activity puts them in possession of such relics, their one object is to utilise them in such a manner as to enhance their accessibility to all who may be interested in them.

(f) Presumably the Honourable Member is referring to the relic recently unearthed at Nagarjunikonda. The question of its disposal is under consideration.

BIRTH AND DEATH RATES IN THE TOWNS OF BEAWAR AND AJMER.

317. Mr. N. C. Kelkar (on behalf of Rai Sahib Harbilas Sarda): With reference to the answer given to me on the 11th September, 1929, to my question No. 385, regarding figures for birth and death rates, that information was being collected and would be supplied to me, will Government state if the information has been collected now that four months have passed? In view of the grave nature of the matter will Government supply me this information within the next ten days?

Sir Frank Noyce: The information has recently been communicated to the Honourable Member. I must express my regret that it was not possible to supply him with it earlier.

BIRTH AND DEATH RATES IN THE TOWNS OF BEAWAR AND AJMER.

318. Mr. N. C. Kelkar (on behalf of Rai Sahib Harbilas Sarda): (a) Has the attention of Government been drawn to the fact that while the average mortality of children below 10 years of age in the town of Beawar during the years 1921 to 1928 was 662.11 per thousand and the infantile mortality during the first year of birth 408.04, the child mortality under 10 years has arisen from 539.9 in 1928 A.D. to 573.82 in 1929 A.D.?

(b) Is it a fact that in 1929 the total number of births in Beawar with a population of 22,362 was 705 and the total number of deaths 955, showing a ratio of 135.4 deaths for every 100 births and that while the birth rate per thousand was only 31.52 the death-rate was 42.70?

(c) In view of the above facts and the statement made regarding the unsatisfactory sanitary conditions obtaining in and the consequent abnormal death rate prevailing in Ajmer and Beawar in the book "Beawar, ki Bheeshna Mritu Sankhya" published last year, do Government propose to make an inquiry into the causes of this grave state of affairs or to take any other action in the matter?

(d) Is it a fact that lack of money alone stands in the way of the Local Government of Ajmer-Merwara improving the sanitation of Ajmer and Beawar? If so, do Government propose to give financial assistance to the Local Government to enable it to take measures to reduce the appalling death-rate in Ajmer and Beawar?

Sir Frank Noyce: (a) and (b). Official figures for births and deaths for 1929 are not yet available and the necessary information, which has been called for, will be supplied to the Honourable Member on receipt.

(c) and (d). Schemes for the improvement of sanitary arrangements at Ajmer and Beawar are under the consideration of the local Municipal Committees. The Government of India are also alive to the necessity for removing the existing defects and deficiencies. The programme of medical and public health improvement in areas directly administered by the Government of India recently approved by the Standing Finance Committee provides for a grant-in-aid from Central revenues of Rs. 1,55,000 and Rs. 70,000 for the improvement of sanitation in Ajmer and Beawar, respectively. The total cost of the schemes is estimated at Rs. 3 lakhs in Ajmer and Rs. one lakh in Beawar. The Government grant can be paid only after plans and estimates have been approved by the Government of India and an assurance is given that the local body is able to meet the balance either from its existing funds or by raising a loan. I regret, however, to add that, owing to the severe financial stringency prevailing at present, Government have not found it possible to make any provision in the next year's Budget for these schemes.

Mr. B. Das: Will it not be better for the Government to wait till they see the effects of Rai Sahib Harbilas Sarda's Child Marriage Act before they give further assistance to any measures he proposes?

(Mr. President called the next question.)

AMENDMENT OF THE PRESIDENCY-TOWNS INSOLVENCY ACT.

319. Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: With reference to my starred question No. 3, asked on the 2nd September, 1929, with regard to the amendment of the Presidency-towns Insolvency Act, section 55, and the Provincial Insolvency Act, section 53, will Government be pleased to state if they have by now considered the matter and whether they propose to introduce a Bill amending the same during this Session? If not, when is it likely to be introduced?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: Government propose to introduce tomorrow a Bill to make certain amendments in the Insolvency Law.

BOAT HIRE OF POSTMEN IN THE DACCA DISTRICT.

320. Mr. Anwar-ul-Azim: (a) With reference to Government's reply to unstarred question No. 119 in the Legislative Assembly on the 2nd September, 1929, will Government be pleased to state the result of the inquiry held in 1927 by Rai H. K. Raha Bahadur, the late Postmaster General, Bengal and Assam Circle?

(b) Is it a fact that he recommended an increase of boat hire to a sum not less than Rs. 4 a month to all postmen who have to travel by boats in the Dacca District and the engagement of rowers?

(c) Are Government aware that Mr. F. T. deMonte, the present Postmaster General, Bengal and Assam Circle, in an interview with the General Secretary, All-India Postal and Railway Mail Service Union, Bengal and Assam Provincial Branch, on the 10th May, 1929, stated that the question of increasing instead of curtailing the monsoon charge is under consideration?

(d) Has the attention of Government been drawn to letter No. 5431, dated the 5th September, 1927, and letter No. 4531, dated the 27th August, 1927, respectively, from the District Magistrate and District Judge, Dacca, stating that they pay Rs. 25 a month to their menials for a single dingi boat and boatman copies of which have been forwarded by the Secretary of the Dacca Postal and Railway Mail Service Union to the Director General of Posts and Telegraphs and the Honourable Member, Industries and Labour, and the remarks made by the Sub-Divisional Officer, Manikganj, in presiding at the annual meeting of the Dacca Branch Postal and Railway Mail Service Union on the 4th August, 1929, and published in the Samitee, a registered organ of the Dacca Union in its issue of August, 1929?

(e) Will Government be pleased to state the amount of reduction, if any, made in the year 1929-30 in the monsoon charges in the Dacca Division and other divisions within the Dacca Range and what were the grounds for the reduction?

(f) Are Government aware that the postmen in rural post offices have to travel in several places in Bengal at their own expense? If not, have Government investigated the matter, and if so, what steps do they propose to take in the matter?

(g) What steps do Government propose to take in order to increase the boat hire and rowers' allowance with effect from 1930-31? If it is not proposed to take any action in the matter, will Government be pleased to quote the enactment under which Government can compel the postmen and runners to pay the taxes imposed on them in the shape of monsoon charges?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: (a), (b) and (g). Government are not prepared to disclose or discuss the recommendations of particular officers. I would, however, inform the Honourable Member that orders have already been issued revising the rates of boat hire and rowers' allowance at certain stations in the Bengal and Assam Circle, where justified, after considering the advice of Rai Bahadur H. K. Raha and others.

(c), (e) and (f). Inquiries are being made and the Honourable Member will be informed in due course.

(d) Government have seen the remarks of the Sub-Divisional Officer, Manikganj, and copies of the letters referred to. The latter do not however contain the statements alleged by the Honourable Member.

ABOLITION OF THE RANGE OFFICE AT DACCA.

321. Mr. Anwar-ul-Azim: (a) Will Government be pleased to state the result of the inquiry regarding the abolition of the Range Office at Dacca in the charge of a Deputy Postmaster General? (Vide Government reply to the starred question No. 82 on the 3rd September, 1929)?

(b) Will Government be pleased to state whether there are any more Range Offices in any province in India? If not, what really justifies the retention of the office at Dacca?

(c) Will Government be pleased to state what is the monthly cost of establishment, including the Range Officer's travelling allowance and other relevant expenditure of maintaining the Range Office at Dacca?

(d) What delays so long the abolition of the Range Office, which was strongly recommended by the Inchcape Committee long ago?

(e) Will Government be pleased to state when the Range Office is expected to be abolished?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: (a) The inquiry is not yet complete.

(b) There is another Range Office in Assam. The latter part of the question does not arise.

(c) The information is being collected and will be supplied to the Honourable Member in due course.

(d) I would invite the attention of the Honourable Member to the reply given to part (b) of his unstarred question No. 82 in the Legislative Assembly on the 3rd September, 1929.

(e) In view of the reply to part (a) above, Government are not in a position to give the information asked for by the Honourable Member.

APPOINTMENTS IN THE POSTAL DEPARTMENT.

322. Mr. Anwar-ul-Azim: (a) With reference to Government's reply to starred question No. 310 in the Legislative Assembly on the 27th February, 1928, will Government be pleased to state whether they have arrived at any decision on the question of the reservation of a certain percentage of vacancies for the sons and relatives of departmental officials?

(b) Are Government aware that the Divisional Superintendents and first class Postmasters take in recruitment their own nominees, superseding the claims of the sons and relatives of the departmental officials, although their nominees are not superior to them in educational or other qualifications?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: (a) I understand that the question refers to the recruitment of upper division clerks in the post offices. It is hoped soon to issue revised recruitment regulations in which provision will be made for preference to be given to a reasonable extent to relations of departmental officials.

(b) No. The officers referred to have full discretion to recruit the best candidates available, with due regard to the interests and claims of relatives of departmental employees.

RESIDENCE AND OFFICE OF THE SUPERINTENDENT OF POST OFFICES, DACCA DIVISION.

323. Mr. Anwar-ul-Azim: (a) With reference to Government's reply to starred question No. 357 on the 14th September, 1927, will Government be pleased to state the result of the inquiries?

(b) Is it a fact that after that reply, the office of the Superintendent of Post Offices, Dacca Division, has been shifted twice?

(c) Is it a fact that on receipt of information to the effect that Mr. N. Banerjee, the then Superintendent of Post Offices, Dacca Division, was looking out for a house to shift the office to suit his personal interest and comfortable residence, the Secretary, Postal and Railway Mail Service Union, Dacca Branch, in his communication No. P. R.-22/13, dated the 7th November, 1928, requested the Deputy Postmaster General, Dacca Range, to put a stop to the proposal and that the latter did not take any action?

(d) Is it a fact that Mr. F. T. deMonte, Postmaster General, Bengal and Assam Circle, during his visit to Dacca, found the office on the ground floor and the Superintendent's residential quarter on the first floor, for which he has to pay less rent than the office and the office has also to pay the entire municipal tax?

(e) Is it a fact that the Secretary, Postal and Railway Mail Service Union, Bengal and Assam Provincial Branch, in his letter No. P. R.-5/S. B., dated the 8th July, 1929, requested him to prohibit the joint tenancy of the house, but that on a representation of the fact that no house was available at a rent of Rs. 40 only for the office, the Postmaster General was not inclined to take action on the suggestion although the Secretary of the Dacca Branch Union assured him that a house could be hired for the office at a rent of Rs. 40?

(f) Is it a fact that the officials are not only compelled to occupy the inferior portion of the building but are also made to work under disadvantages arising from extreme heat and the absence of the orderly peon from the office on the plea of the domestic work of the Superintendent?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: (a) It is presumed that the Honourable Member is referring to question No. 357 of the 14th February, 1927. If so, the result of the inquiries was communicated to Khan Bahadur Sarfaraz Hussain Khan in reply to his starred question No. 391 of the 25th August, 1927, in the Director General's letter dated the 6th December, 1927, a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House.

(b) to (f). Government have no information, but inquiries are being made and the result will be communicated to the Honourable Member in due course.

FREE COMMUNICATIONS ON POSTAL SERVICE BY EMPLOYEES OF THE POST OFFICE.

324. Mr. Anwar-ul-Azim: (a) With reference to Government's reply to unstarred question No. 211 on the 23rd September, 1929, will Government be pleased to state whether Postmasters can communicate free of charge in the following cases:

- (1) In case of their illness asking for relief with a view to keep the office in working order instead of closing the office.
- (2) In case of casual leave which is treated under the rules of the department as on duty.
- (3) In case of an application for an advance of pay or travelling allowance on transfer in the interests of the public service.
- (4) In case of reference to rectify a shortness, or overdraw of pay or the non-receipt of a salary bill on due date.
- (5) In case of a shortness or overdraw of leave allowance and the non-receipt of leave allowance in time.
- (6) In case of the deduction of a subscription or retrenchment made from the pay bill without knowledge of the payee.

(b) Is it a fact that subordinate employees of all offices have to communicate free on postal service through the postmasters?

(c) Is it a fact that the Government reply to the aforesaid question (e) has been given on wrong information and the fact is that Mr. N. N. Banerjee, the Superintendent, infringed the rule and took advantage of free service?

(d) Is it a fact that the Secretary, Dacca Postal and Railway Mail Service Union, in his letter No. P. R.-10, dated the 5th November, 1928, requested the Deputy Postmaster General, Dacca Range, to take action to relax the rule in case of employees in active service but that he has not even acknowledged the letter?

(e) Have Government considered the question of relaxing the rule in the cases mentioned in items (1) to (6) of part (a) of this question?

Mr. H. A. Sams: (a) No, except in the case of a single-handed office where, owing to serious illness, the Postmaster has to ask for relief to avoid closing the office.

(b) Yes.

(c) No.

(d) No. The Deputy Postmaster General, Dacca, received no such representation.

(e) No. Government do not propose to relax the existing rule on the subject.

CONSOLIDATION OF THE INDIAN ARBITRATION LAW.

325. Mr. Lalchand Navalrai: (a) Will Government be pleased to state whether their attention has been drawn to the ruling in Indian Law Reports, 56, Calcutta, at page 761 where Mr. Justice Williams has remarked that the law on section 19 of the Indian Arbitration Act, 1899, (IX of 1899), is very conflicting and that many other sections of the Act are loosely drawn and are difficult to be reconciled and construed?

(b) Are Government aware that the late Mr. Harchandrai Vishindas sought to introduce in this House a Bill to consolidate the arbitration law in India, and is it a fact that Government was then inclined to introduce a Government Bill to consolidate the Indian arbitration law?

(c) Do Government propose to introduce such a Bill during this Session of the Assembly or at any other early date?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: (a) Yes.

(b) and (c). Before his death, the late Mr. Harchandrai Vishindas desired to re-introduce a Bill regarding the law of arbitration in India which had been circulated for opinion under the orders of the Legislative Assembly in 1926, but had lapsed. At that time the Government of India were considering the question of consolidating and amending the law with special reference to the recommendations of the Civil Justice Committee. Before proceeding with the proposed revision, the Government of India have decided to await any legislation which may be undertaken in England as a result of the recommendations of the recent Committee on the English Law of Arbitration.

INTRODUCTION OF AN EXAMINATION TEST IN THE POSTS AND TELEGRAPHS DEPARTMENT.

326. Mr. Lalchand Navarai: (a) Will Government be pleased to state whether they have introduced an examination test in the Postal and Telegraph Department for the promotion of officials from the time scale pay to the selection grade posts of Rs. 160—250, vide Director General, Posts and Telegraphs, G. O. No. 5, dated the 19th July, 1927, as amended by his Special General Circular No. 22, dated the 16th October, 1929?

(b) How was promotion to these selection grade appointments previously regulated?

(c) Was the necessity for the examination pressed by the Director General or any Postmaster General, and if so, how many of the Postmasters General pressed for it and for what reasons?

(d) Is it a fact that the Director General has not made any reference in his Annual Report of the Posts and Telegraph Department about the loss of efficiency and about the necessity for such an examination to improve the efficiency?

(e) Is it a fact that the public have generally expressed their praise about the efficiency of the Postal Department?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: (a) Yes.

(b) By selection made by the Head of the Circle on the basis of past records and his personal knowledge of the official's capabilities.

(c) The suggestion did not come from the Postmasters General, but from the Director General, who was of opinion, in which the Government of India agreed, that it was imperative to have an examination in order to secure that the best men should fill the selection grades, the pay of which had been considerably increased. The Heads of Postal Circles did however, in their Conference of 1926, express the opinion that promotion to the selection grades was far too easy.

(d) Yes.

APPOINTMENTS AND PROMOTIONS IN THE POSTAL DEPARTMENT.

327. Mr. Lalchand Navarai: (a) Is it a fact that generally no one is entertained in the clerical rank in the Postal Department unless he has passed the entrance examination of any of the recognised Universities in India and Burma?

(b) Is it a fact that no postal official is allowed to draw the first increment in the time scale until he has passed an oral and written examination test?

(c) Is it a fact that before an official reaches the maximum in the time scale of pay he has to pass two efficiency bars, to cross which the supervising officer of the official has to testify that the official has a thorough knowledge of the work of all the departments and that he has efficiently managed a department and a sub-office?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: (a) Yes, generally speaking.

(b) Yes.

(c) Yes. The facts stated by the Honourable Member are substantially correct.

EXAMINATION TEST IN THE POSTS AND TELEGRAPHS DEPARTMENT.

328. Mr. Lalchand Navarai: (a) What is the necessity to introduce the examination test in the Postal and Telegraph Department for the promotion of officials from the time scale pay to the selection grade posts of Rs. 160 to Rs. 250?

(b) Is it a fact that the Government of India, in their Resolution No. 4863, dated the 4th December, 1891, have laid down that whenever there is a change of procedure, the new conditions should not be made to operate harshly on officials affected by the change?

(c) Is it a fact that, when some conditions of service were changed in the Telegraph Department as a result of the recommendations of some departmental committees, such as the Ryan Committee, the existing telegraphists were told that the new changes would not apply to the existing men?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: (a) The examination has been introduced with the concurrence of the Standing Finance Committee in the interests of efficiency and to provide a uniform and safe-guard for making selections for promotion beyond the time scale of pay.

(b) Yes.

(c) A pledge safeguarding the prospects of the existing members of the staff was given in the specific case mentioned. This has no bearing on the present case, which relates to the introduction of a test to ensure that the most suitable men shall be promoted to posts the pay of which has been improved. The prospects of the staff have not been impaired.

EXAMINATION TEST IN THE POSTS AND TELEGRAPHS DEPARTMENT.

329. Mr. Lalchand Navarai: (a) Is it a fact that numerous telegrams were received by H. E. the Viceroy, the Honourable Member in charge of the Department of Industries and Labour and the Director General from officials over 35 years of age from all over India and Burma asking for exemption from the examination referred to in part (a) of my immediate preceding question, and if so, what action was taken on them?

(b) Is it a fact that when the system of examination was first introduced in the Audit Office for promotion to higher grades, Sir Frederic Gauntlett, the then Auditor-General, exempted officials of over forty years of age from such examination?

(c) Is it a fact that when an examination test was introduced in the Customs Department, the Collector of Customs, Madras, under instructions from the Central Board of Revenue, exempted officials of over 40 years from the examination?

(d) Have the Government exempted recently some junior Inspectors of Post Offices from the examination, and if so, why? And why was not similar treatment accorded to officials who acted for three years in the selection grade?

(e) Have Government perused the numerous contributions that have appeared in the various newspapers, pointing out the serious injustice done to senior postal officials by introducing the examination test?

(f) Have Government perused the editorial articles in the Statesman (Calcutta), dated the 23rd August, 1929; Basumati (Calcutta), dated the 25th August, 1929; Amrita Bazar Patrika (Calcutta), dated the 13th September, 1929; Swarajya (Madras); dated the 4th December, 1929, and Justice

(Madras), dated the 7th December, 1929, pointing out the hardship involved to the senior officials of advanced age to memorise rules and regulations and answer theoretical questions on audit, the grave dissatisfaction prevailing among the members of the service and sympathising with their lot and appealing to the Government to repeal the order?

(g) Are Government prepared to cancel the examination or at most make it applicable to the new recruits only? If not, why not?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: (a) Yes. No action was taken on them, because the telegrams did not disclose any new facts justifying a reconsideration of the decision already reached.

(b) and (c). Yes, but the examination was not one of promotion from the time scale of pay to selection grade posts.

(d) By "junior Inspectors", the Honourable Member perhaps means Town Inspectors attached to first class Head Offices. If so, his attention is invited to the reply to part (f) of the question No. 1334, dated the 2nd April, 1929.

(e) and (f). Yes, Government have read some of the newspapers mentioned.

(g) No. The examination was introduced after very careful consideration of all the points that could be urged against it. Nor are Government prepared to exempt ad hoc officials over 40 years of age. An official, who knows his work and is suitable for the selection grade, should have no difficulty in passing the examination, even if he be over 40 years of age.

CLERICAL POSTS IN OFFICES OF SUPERINTENDENTS OF POST OFFICES.

330. Mr. Anwar-ul-Azim: (a) Will Government be pleased to state whether the views of the Director General of Posts and Telegraphs in connection with Mr. G. V. Bewoor's report have since been received? (Vide Government reply to starred question No. 137 on the 12th September, 1929)? If the reply be in the negative, have Government requested the Director General to hasten the submission of his views?

(b) Will Government be pleased to state the principle which is followed in the revision of the clerical posts in the offices of the Superintendents of Post Offices?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: (a) The reply to the first part is in the affirmative. The second part does not arise.

(b) The clerical staff in the offices of Superintendents of Post Offices is fixed by the Head of the Circle concerned after a careful consideration in each case of the amount of work to be done.

SUNDAY AND HOLIDAY ALLOWANCE FOR POSTAL EMPLOYEES.

331. Mr. Anwar-ul-Azim: (a) Will Government be pleased to state if any statistics were called for in respect of Sunday and holiday allowance? If the reply be in the affirmative, will Government be pleased to state the year for which the statistics were called for?

(b) Is it a fact that this was a matter considered by the deputation of Postal and Railway Mail Service employees that waited upon the Honourable Member in charge of the Department of Industries and Labour and the Director General of Posts and Telegraphs and that the representatives were assured of consideration?

(c) Will Government be pleased to state who has been deputed to examine the question and with what result? If no decision has yet been arrived at, why has the consideration of this matter been postponed so long?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: (a) No.

(b) The attention of the Honourable Member is invited to item 3 (b) of Part I of the statement of grievances represented by the deputation of the All-India Postal and Railway Mail Service Union and of the conclusions arrived at thereon, as laid on the table of this House on the 4th March, 1926.

(c) Government have reviewed the position and have come to the conclusion that it is not possible to introduce, in the immediate future, any measure of relief involving additional expenditure.

LEAVE AND PENSIONS FOR INFERIOR SERVANTS OF THE POSTS AND TELEGRAPHS SERVICE.

332. Mr. Anwar-ul-Azim: (a) Is it a fact that the Post Office employees have to work for a much longer period in a year than the employees of other Departments of the Government for want of holidays in the Posts and Telegraphs Department?

(b) Is it a fact that, in consideration of this, Government was pleased to raise the status of the postmen and grant them the benefit of leave and pension?

(c) Do Government intend to extend this concession to the case of the menials of the Posts and Telegraphs service? If the reply be in the negative, will Government be pleased to state the reasons, and do Government propose to take any other alternative measure?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: (a) It is a fact that postal employees enjoy fewer holidays than Government servants in some other Departments of Government, but this has been recognised both in fixing the pay and in the grant to them of certain other concessions, e.g., 20 days' casual leave?

(b) No. Postmen have been graded as superior servants purely on account of the nature and responsibilities of their work.

(c) The reply to the first part is in the negative; as regards the second part, the Honourable Member's attention is invited to item 14 of Part I of the statement of grievances represented by the deputation of the All-India Postal and Railway Mail Service Union, to the conclusions arrived at, and to the action taken thereon, as laid on the table of this House on the 4th March, 1926.

OUTSTATION ALLOWANCES OF RAILWAY MAIL SERVICE EMPLOYEES.

333. Mr. Anwar-ul-Azim: (a) Has the attention of Government been drawn to the resolution No. 30, passed at the All-India (including Burma) Postal and Railway Mail Service Conference held at Peshawar on the 10th November, 1929?

(b) Is it a fact that at present a low rate of outstation allowance is granted to the Railway Mail Service employees in case they are required to stay out of headquarters for 12 hours or more, viz., 0-4-0 to the sorters, 0-2-0 to the mail guards and 0-1-0 to the van peons? Is it paid for their extra expenditure required for meals and tiffins outside the headquarters? Are Government prepared to increase these rates?

Mr. H. A. Sams: (a) Yes.

(b) For absence from headquarters in excess of 12 hours, but not exceeding 24, the rates are as stated by the Honourable Member, but as the allowances are paid merely as a contribution towards the extra expenditure which has to be incurred in taking meals away from home, Government do not consider that the existing rates are inadequate and are not therefore prepared to increase them.

APPOINTMENTS IN THE NARAYANGANJ RECORD AND SORTING MAIL OFFICES.

334. Mr. Anwar-ul-Azim: (a) Will Government be pleased to state whether the Postal Inquiry Committee recommended that where there are seven sorters there should be a selection grade appointment?

(b) If the reply to part (a) be in the affirmative, is it a fact that the Narayanganj sorting mail office has to work with eight sorters and the sub-record clerk has six sorters, daily for the office work?

(c) Is it a fact that in the Manual of Appointment and Allowances of Officers of the Indian Posts and Telegraphs Department three selection grade appointments have been shown for the "S" Division, whereas only one accountant at Silchar and one sub-record clerk at Barisal in the selection grade have been shown?

(d) Is it a fact that the Barisal Sub-Record Office has to work with a smaller number of sorters than the Narayanganj Sub-Record Office and in comparison of the selection grade appointments in the Post Office the number of selection grade appointments in the "S" Division is small?

(e) Are Government prepared to sanction two selection grade appointments for the Narayanganj record and sorting mail offices?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: (a) The Postal Inquiry Committee recommended that Head Sorters of stationary mail offices with seven or more sorters and Head Sorters of travelling sets consisting of six or more sorters should be in the selection grade.

(b) and (d). Government have no information but inquiries are being made and the result will be communicated to the Honourable Member in due course.

(c) No, four selection grade appointments have been shown in the Manual referred to but this is incorrect, as there are actually only three, namely, two on Rs. 160—250 and one on Rs. 250—350. Steps have already been taken to have the Manual corrected.

(e) The matter is within the competence of the Director General, Posts and Telegraphs, who, I understand, will consider the question when the information referred to in my reply to parts (b) and (d) above has been received.

HOURS OF DUTY IN RAILWAY MAIL SERVICE OFFICES.

335. Mr. Anwar-ul-Azim: (a) Are Government aware that in the Railway Mail Service stationary offices at Barisal and Narayanganj, the officials have to work from 8 P.M. to 6 A.M. each alternate day?

(b) Will Government be pleased to state the working hours of night and day sorters of the officials of the Railway Mail Service stationary offices?

Mr. H. A. Sams: (a) Yes. The working hours of the offices in question are as stated by the Honourable Member.

(b) 35 and 49 hours per week per sorter, respectively.

GRANT OF HOUSE RENT FOR OFFICES OF RAILWAY MAIL SERVICE INSPECTORS.

336. Mr. Anwar-ul-Azim: (a) Are Government aware that the Railway Mail Service Inspectors have to maintain their records and that they are in need of a house for their office?

(b) Is it a fact that the Post Office Inspectors have been granted house allowance for the purpose of locating their offices?

(c) Have Government considered the question of sanctioning a house allowance to the Railway Mail Service Inspectors?

Mr. H. A. Sams: (a) The answer to the first part of the question is in the affirmative and to the second part in the negative.

(b) In places where no provision for office accommodation exists and at which Sub-Divisional Inspectors of Post Offices have consequently to make their own arrangements, they are granted house rent allowance.

(c) Yes, and it was decided that such an allowance is not necessary in the case of Railway Mail Service Inspectors, as they are required to work at their headquarters in the Railway Mail Service offices located at railway stations.

SUNDAY AND HOLIDAY ALLOWANCE FOR POSTAL OFFICIALS.

337. Mr. Anwar-ul-Azim: (a) With reference to Government's reply to unstarred question No. 120 in the Legislative Assembly on the 2nd September, 1929, will Government be pleased to state if they have since come to any decision regarding the grant of Sunday and holiday allowance to Post Office and Railway Mail Service employees?

(b) If so, will they please state what their decision is, and if not, when the decision is expected to be reached?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: (a) and (b). The Honourable Member's attention is invited to part (c) of the reply which I have just given to his starred question No. 331.

QUARTERS, ALLOWANCES AND DUTIES IN THE BENGAL AND ASSAM POSTAL CIRCLE.

338. Mr. Anwar-ul-Azim: (a) With reference to Government's reply to unstarred question No. 61 in the Legislative Assembly on the 15th February, 1928, will Government be pleased to state the places where residential quarters have been provided in the vicinity of the Post Office in the Bengal and Assam Circle during the last two years?

(b) What are the particulars of conveyance allowance sanctioned in that circle?

(c) What is the number of additional staff sanctioned and the number of places where such staff have been sanctioned in the Assam and Bengal Circle?

[17TH FEB. 1930.]

(d) Are Government aware that in many towns of the Bengal and Assam Circle the split duty system tells upon the health of the employees? If so, what redressive measure has been taken?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: (a) to (d). Information is being collected and will be supplied to the Honourable Member in due course.

APPOINTMENT OF MUSLIM PEONS IN CERTAIN OFFICES.

339. Mr. Anwar-ul-Azim: (a) Is it a fact that there are no Muslim peons employed in some of the offices of Army Headquarters, the offices of the Financial Adviser, Military Finance and the Military Accountant General?

(b) If the reply to part (a) is in the affirmative, are Government prepared to issue orders to appoint Muslims in future permanent and temporary appointments unless the number of this minority community is fully represented in this service? If not, why not?

Mr. G. M. Young: (a) Yes.

(b) No, Sir, the deficiency is due to a lack of applicants.

APPOINTMENT OF MUSLIM POSTAL SUPERINTENDENTS IN THE MADRAS PRESIDENCY.

340. Mr. Abdul Latif Sahib Farookhi: Will Government be pleased to state the number of Postal Superintendents in the Madras Presidency? How many of them are Muslims?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: There are in the Madras Circle 28 Superintendents of Post Offices and Railway Mail Service. Of this total number, three are Muslims.

Maulvi Sayyid Murtuza Saheb Bahadur: Is it a fact that for the last ten years or so there has not been recruited even a single Muslim to this service?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: No, that is not correct. I know, for instance, that in the year 1929, we recruited three Muslims.

Maulvi Sayyid Murtuza Saheb Bahadur: Were the Muslims from the Madras Presidency?

An Honourable Member: What, as peons?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: It is not possible to confine recruitment to Mussalmans of any Presidency. We follow the standard rules under which one-third of the vacancies are filled from among the minority communities as a whole.

Mr. B. Das: Is the Honourable Member aware that he has neglected the interests of the people of Orissa always whenever the question of minorities has been concerned?

Mr. Abdul Latif Sahib Farookhi: Out of these three Muslims when was the last Muslim appointed?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: I cannot say, Sir, because I have not got the list with me.

GRANT OF OVERTIME ALLOWANCES TO POSTAL OFFICIALS.

341. Mr. Anwar-ul-Azim: (a) Has the attention of Government been drawn to letter No. P. R.-19, dated the 3rd October, 1929, from the Secretary, Dacca Postal and Railway Mail Service Union, to the General Secretary, All-India Postal and Railway Mail Service Union, Bengal and Assam Provincial Branch, published in the Samitee, an organ of that Union, in its issue of November, 1929, and a copy of which has been forwarded to the Postmaster-General, Bengal and Assam Circle, in which it has been stated that under the bona fide orders of Mr. N. N. Banerjee, the then Superintendent of Post Offices, Dacca Division, officials under him were frequently compelled to work over-time on account of working short-handed and that an over-time allowance of Rs. 1,359-6-0 should be paid to them?

(b) Are Government aware that, owing to a compulsory order of the Deputy Postmaster-General, Dacca Range, and the Postmaster, the Dacca delivery of the Calcutta mails is made at unusually late hours due to the late arrival of the Calcutta mails during the winter season and that the officials attached to the delivery, sorting, registration, and parcel branches have to work over-time?

(c) Is it a fact that, under rule 283 of the Posts and Telegraphs Initial Account Code, certain officials except those of the Post Office get over-time allowance, and the same is also paid to the postal officials working in the Presidency towns on foreign mail days?

(d) Is it a fact that over-time allowance for the telegraphists is calculated at a higher rate under rule 221 of the Telegraph Manual, Vol. IV (old edition), while the same for the postal signallers is calculated at a much lesser rate?

(e) Are Government aware that post office officials are always required to work over-time on account of the irregular arrival of mails, and sudden increase of work, and are compelled to work short-handed, but in no case are they paid over-time allowance?

(f) Do Government propose to grant to the postal officials over-time allowance and to issue uniform rules on the subject? If the reply be in the negative, what are the reasons?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: (a) No. Government have not seen the letter referred to.

(b) Government are not aware of the fact, but will inquire into the matter.

(c) No. The rule in question merely lays down in what form overtime allowance bills should be drawn.

(d) No. Overtime allowances paid to departmental telegraphists and postal signallers are calculated at the same rates on the basis of pay.

(e) and (f). No. The grant of overtime allowance to postal officials working in some offices is already provided for by certain definite rules, while in other cases the special orders of Government are obtained from time to time as required.

The conditions of service in the postal and telegraph branches of the Department are not uniform, and Government do not therefore consider that it is necessary to lay down uniform rules for the grant of overtime allowances to both branches.

CIRCULAR ORDERS RELATING TO THE GOVERNMENT EXAMINER OF QUESTIONED DOCUMENTS.

346. *Lala Rang Behari Lal: Will Government be pleased to place on the table all the circular orders relating to the office of the Government Examiner of Questioned Documents since its inception, and state the period of services of each successive examiner and the reasons for his severance or retirement from service?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: I am afraid I cannot undertake to lay on the table all the orders relating to the office of the Government Examiner of Questioned Documents, but if the Honourable Member will let me know what particular point he is interested in, I will see whether the information can be supplied. Mr. Hardless was Handwriting Expert from February, 1904, and he retired in August, 1917. Mr. Brewster held the post from August, 1915, to June, 1926. Mr. Hardless retired after completing 30 years' service. Mr. Brewster was allowed by Government to resign, after pleading guilty to several grave charges in connection with his private practice, involving systematic disobedience of standing orders.

APPOINTMENT OF ASSISTANT GOVERNMENT EXAMINER OF QUESTIONED DOCUMENTS.

347. *Lala Rang Behari Lal: (a) Will Government be pleased to state the manner of appointment of the present Assistant Government Examiner of Questioned Documents, viz., Mr. Hodgson, in London?

(b) Did the said Mr. Hodgson qualify himself before entering the service or did he qualify himself after joining in India, and if so, how long did Mr. Hodgson take to qualify himself and how before giving evidence as an expert in court?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: (a) Attention is invited to the answer which I gave to the questions by Mr. Mukhtar Singh on this subject on the 1st February, 1928.

(b) Mr. Hodgson joined his appointment in March, 1928, and gave evidence in Court for the first time in May, 1929.

METHOD OF REMUNERATION OF THE GOVERNMENT EXAMINER AND ASSISTANT EXAMINER OF QUESTIONED DOCUMENTS.

348. *Lala Rang Behari Lal: Will Government be pleased to describe the method of remuneration of the Government Examiner of Questioned Documents and his Assistant, that is to say whether they are paid on the basis of a percentage of the income of the Department or by monthly salaries and allowances?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: The Examiner and his Assistant receive monthly salaries on scales sanctioned for their posts.

SERVICE AND QUALIFICATIONS OF THE GOVERNMENT EXAMINER OF QUESTIONED DOCUMENTS.

349. *Lala Rang Behari Lal: (a) Will Government be pleased to state the date of joining service of the present Government Examiner of Questioned Documents, Mr. R. Stott?

(b) Will Government be pleased to state the length of time for which as well as the name of the place where the present Government Examiner of Questioned Documents qualified himself for the post?

(c) Will Government be pleased to state the date on which the present Examiner of Questioned Documents took service in the capacity of the official Assistant Expert as well as the number of the first case, parties' names, name and address of the Court and the Province in which he deposed as an expert?

(d) Will Government be pleased to state if a record is kept as to how many times the official expert's opinions have prevailed in Courts in preference to the opinions of independent experts?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: (a) to (c). Mr. Stott was a member of the Military Accounts Service, which he joined in May, 1915. He was appointed Assistant Government Examiner of Questioned Documents in September, 1920. He had studied the subject privately in India for about two years prior to his appointment. The particulars of the first case in which he gave evidence are not available.

RETIREMENT OF MR. FRANK BREWSTER, GOVERNMENT EXAMINER OF QUESTIONED DOCUMENTS.

350. *Lala Rang Behari Lal: Will Government be pleased to state if any circular letter was issued in January, 1928, from the Government of India, Home Department, addressed to Provincial Governments, notifying the disqualification from further Government service of Mr. Frank Brewster, Government Examiner of Questioned Documents, and, if so, will Government be pleased to place on the table a copy of any such letter and as to what action, legal or otherwise, has been taken or is in contemplation against the said Mr. Frank Brewster and as to when the said Mr. Frank Brewster set up in practice in Calcutta after his retirement?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: The circular letter referred to was a confidential document, which I am not prepared to lay on the table. The Local Governments were informed of the circumstances in which Mr. Brewster left Government service, but no further action was taken. He is understood to have commenced practice in Calcutta about the beginning of 1928.

PROVINCIAL EXAMINERS OF QUESTIONED DOCUMENTS.

351. *Lala Rang Behari Lal: (a) Will Government be pleased to state the names of such provinces, if any, which maintain their own experts as Examiners of Questioned Documents as wholetime servants or as consultants and their names and addresses?

(b) Will Government be pleased to state whether the Provincial Governments are free to appoint or recognise persons who have qualified themselves as experts, and if the answer is in the negative, will Government be pleased to state the reasons?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: The Government of India have no information whether any Provincial Governments maintain their own experts. The Government of India have issued no instructions which fetter the discretion of Provincial Governments in this matter.

RECREATION CLUBS FOR POSTAL AND TELEGRAPH EMPLOYEES.

352. Mr. Anwar-ul-Azim: (a) Is it a fact that certain recreation clubs of postal employees were granted a small donation during the year 1927-28?

(b) Will Government be pleased to state the amount granted to the clubs of the telegraphists for the last three years and the same to the clubs of the postal employees?

(c) Is it a fact that equipped halls are provided for such clubs of the telegraphists free of charge?

(d) Is it a fact that a certain club of the postal employees applied for construction of a house at the expense of the club on a plot of land attached to the post office?

(e) Do Government propose to continue the donation to the postal clubs and to lease out land for construction of club houses at the expense of the clubs?

Mr. H. A. Sams: (a) No, the first donations to Postal Clubs were made in 1928-29.

(b) The amounts granted to Telegraph Recreation Clubs during the last three years are: 1926-27, Rs. 4,000; 1927-28, Rs. 4,000, 1928-29, Rs. 4,795. No donations were made to Postal Clubs in 1926-27 and 1927-28, as stated in reply to (a) of this question. In 1928-29, Rs. 7,070 was granted to Postal and Railway Mail Service Clubs.

(c) Certain telegraph recreation clubs have been provided with partially equipped halls free of rent, but they are required to pay rental charges on the capital cost of electric installations in addition to the cost of current consumed. They also pay proportionate municipal taxes.

(d) Yes.

(e) The reply to the first part is in the affirmative; as regards the second part, Government cannot give any general undertaking, but they are prepared to consider sympathetically applications for such leases, if and when Government land is available.

THE POST OFFICE GUARANTEE FUND.

353. Mr. Anwar-ul-Azim: (a) Is it a fact that, in reply to unstarred question No. 45, in the Legislative Assembly on the 4th September, 1928, Government stated that the Post Office Guarantee Fund was started in the year 1873 by the recovery of the fixed rate of subscription of Rs. 2 and Re. 1 per annum according to pay with the purpose of meeting with emergent expenses among which one of the items was for compensation not exceeding one month's pay to postal officials for loss of private property due to accidents, e.g., fire, floods, suffered by them while on duty?

(b) Is it a fact that as the fund, amounting to about eleven lakhs of rupees, was not sufficient to meet these charges, it has been credited to the Post and Telegraph Capital Account with the intention that in future, expenditure under the various heads enumerated above should be budgeted for in full in the working expenses budget of the Department in the ordinary way?

(c) Are Government aware that the Postmaster-General, Bengal and Assam Circle, has started a charity fund in aid of the flood distressed officials in Assam, Comilla and Chittagong? If the reply be in the affirmative, will Government be pleased to state the number of officials affected in those places, the total amount of their monthly pay and the total amount budgeted for their relief?

(d) Will Government be pleased to state the amount budgeted for the following items in the account in the year 1929-30:

- (1) Losses caused by the negligence or misconduct of postal staff,
- (2) Rewards for specially honest service,
- (3) Compensation to postal officials for loss of private properties due to accidents?

(e) Will Government be pleased to state the particulars of the officials to whom such compensation has been made out of the fund in the affected area? If the reply be in the negative, will Government be pleased to state the reason and when the employees can expect to get the help?

(f) Will Government be pleased to state the manner in which the fund started by the Postmaster-General, Bengal and Assam Circle, will be expended?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: (a) and (b). The Honourable Member appears to have misread the reply given by the Honourable Sir Arthur McWatters to the question quoted by him. If he will kindly read it again, he will find the answers to parts (a) and (b) of his present question.

(c), (e) and (f). It is understood that the Postmaster General, Bengal and Assam Circle, started a private fund in aid of the officials affected by the floods in Silchar and other places in Eastern Bengal and Assam, but Government are not concerned with this, nor have they any detailed information on the subject.

(d) (1) Rs. 34,100.

(2) Rs. 4,000.

(3) This expenditure is not specifically budgeted for, but is met from the grant for contingencies as occasion arises.

ADMISSION INTO POST OFFICES OF SECRETARIES OF POSTAL UNIONS.

354. Mr. Anwar-ul-Azim: (a) Is it a fact that under rule 72 of the Post Office Manual, Vol. I (old edition), strangers are not allowed inside post offices? If the reply be in the affirmative, will Government be pleased to state whether or not the Secretaries of the District Postal and Railway Mail Service Unions, who are well known to the post office, may be allowed inside the post office? If the reply be in the negative, will Government be pleased to cite the rule which can be applied against their admittance inside the post office?

(b) Are Government aware of the letter No. D. O., dated 22nd November, 1927, from the Director-General of Posts and Telegraphs, to the General Secretary, All-India Postal and Railway Mail Service Union to the effect that before a grievance is put up in the form of a resolution the local secretaries should inquire and ascertain the facts from the district authorities?

REVISION OF THE LAND REVENUE POLICY OF THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA.

357. *Mr. Mukhtar Singh: (a) Have the Government of India revised their land revenue policy since the publication of their Resolution, dated the 16th January, 1902?

(b) If the answer to part (a) be in the affirmative, will Government be pleased to place a copy of that Resolution on the table? If the answer be in the negative, will Government be pleased to state if they have any intention to revise their policy now? If so, when?

Sir Frank Noyce: (a) and (b). The Government of India have issued no Resolution subsequent to the one referred to by the Honourable Member. Under the present constitution, Land Revenue is a provincial subject, and several Local Governments have already taken action to regulate by statute the process of revising land revenue assessments. I would refer the Honourable Member to the legislation enacted recently in the Punjab, the United Provinces and the Central Provinces, from which it will be seen that provisions regarding the pitch of assessment, limitation of enhancement and duration of settlement have all now been embodied in law and are not left to be regulated by rules.

RULES FOR THE ASSESSMENT OF LAND REVENUE.

358. *Mr. Mukhtar Singh: (a) Will the Government of India be pleased to state the land revenue policy adopted in different provinces in assessing land revenue on lands improved at owner's cost or at cultivator's cost?

(b) Have Government promulgated any rules for the guidance of the Local Governments for the assessment of revenue on lands improved at owner's or cultivator's cost as they promised to do in their Resolution, dated the 16th January, 1902?

(c) If the answer to part (b) be in the affirmative, will Government be pleased to lay a copy of these rules on the table? If the answer be in the negative, will Government be pleased to state why such rules have not yet been framed?

Sir Frank Noyce: (a) All improvements made by the expenditure of private capital are exempt from assessment in Madras. In Bombay, increase in the value of land or the profits of cultivation due to any improvement made during the currency of a previous settlement at the expense of the landholder is not taken into account in fixing the revised assessment. In the United Provinces, the settlement officer is required to make deduction from the calculated assets, for improvements constructed by or at the cost of the proprietor or under proprietor, or at the cost of a tenant, if the tenant could claim an allowance for the improvement in a suit for enhancement of rent. In the Punjab, land which benefits from irrigation works constructed at private expense or with the aid of a Government loan is exempted in respect of the benefit due to such improvement for periods which vary according to the nature of the improvement. In the Central Provinces, lands improved by the construction of substantial embankments for the rabi crop or of irrigation works are rated at the value they would bear if unimproved, provided the improvements have been made since the last preceding settlement, or have been specially exempted from assessment for a term which, at the time of settlement, has not expired. In Assam, also, the settlement officer is not allowed to enhance the land revenue of an estate on the ground of drainage or irrigation works, or similar improvements which have been carried out at the landlord's expense during the currency of the expiring settlement.

(b) and (c). Certain principles were formulated by the Government of India for the guidance of Local Governments in dealing with the assessment of improvements made by private enterprise. These principles were embodied in the Government of India Resolution No. 6-193-2, dated the 24th May, 1906, a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House.

SALE OF PARCHED GRAM AND JAGGERY AT STATIONS ON THE NORTH-WESTERN RAILWAY.

359. *Mr. Mukhtar Singh: (a) Is it a fact that contracts for the sale of chabena (parched gram and jaggery) are given on stations of the East Indian Railway?

(b) Is it a fact that no such contracts are given on the North Western Railway and that after a representation was made such a contract was only given for the Delhi Division?

(c) Are Government aware that in these days of scarcity and famine the want of such a contract is being felt by the poor people who are forced to buy food at more than double the price for which they would have purchased parched gram and jaggery and would have satisfied their hunger?

(d) Are Government prepared to issue orders that provision be made for the sale of chabena on stations situated on the whole of the North Western Railway?

(e) If the answer to part (d) be in the negative, will Government be pleased to state their reasons for not doing so?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: (a) Yes.

(b) to (e). The Agent, North Western Railway, reports that there is no objection to chabena being sold by the food vendors who now hold contracts for stations on the North Western Railway. No representation on the subject has been received by him, but it is understood that the Divisional Superintendent, Delhi, received a representation last year and agreed to vendors at the principal stations on that division selling chabena. If vendors on other divisions wish to sell this article, all that they have to do is to address the Divisional Superintendent concerned and obtain his consent.

There would not therefore seem to be any necessity for special contracts for the sale of chabena. A copy of the Honourable Member's question will be sent to the Agent of the North Western Railway and he will be asked to arrange for this edible to be included in the sanctioned price list provided for all food vendors on that Railway.

NUMBER OF MUSLIMS EMPLOYED IN THE RAILWAY CLEARING ACCOUNTS OFFICE.

360. *Maulvi Abdul Matin Chaudhury (on behalf of Mr. Muhammad Rafique): (a) Is it a fact that Government have always refused to give the figures about the staff of the Railway Clearing Accounts Office on a stations when necessary. The inconvenience referred to by the Honourable Member is a matter which might usefully be brought to the notice of the Administration by a member of the Local Advisory Committee and I am sending a copy of the Honourable Member's question to the Agent of the South Indian Railway.

RATES FOR TELEPHONES IN MADRAS.

366. Mr. M. K. Acharya: (a) Will Government be pleased to state whether they have received any proposals for the reduction of the rate for telephones now charged by the Madras Telephone Company in the City of Madras?

(b) If the reply to part (a) is in the affirmative, have Government approved of the reduction of the rate for the same?

(c) What is the reduction proposed to be made?

The Honourable Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra: (a) Yes. The Madras Telephone Company have proposed the introduction of the message-rate system which would secure the subscribers more favourable terms than obtain at present.

(b) Not yet. The Company have been asked to refer their proposals to the Local Government and public bodies in Madras for their views.

(c) The present and proposed charges are as follows:

	Present.	Rs.	A.	P.

DROP IN THE PRICE OF AGRICULTURAL PRODUCE.

367. Mr. E. F. Sykes: (a) Has the attention of Government been drawn to the unprecedented fall in the price of agricultural commodities, especially wheat, cotton and ground-nuts?

(b) Is it a fact that the Karachi parity of wheat is under four rupees a maund?

(c) Are Government aware that this drop in the price of agricultural produce seriously affects the earnings of the masses of India and causes them grave anxiety?

(d) Do Government think of taking any steps to prevent further loss to the masses of their earnings, and if so, will Government be pleased to indicate what steps they intend to take?

(e) Does this depreciation of the earnings of the masses of India give any anxiety to Government? If so, do Government feel that effective and substantial efforts to prevent further depreciation of the hard earned produce of the masses are desirable?

Sir Frank Noyce: (a) Government have naturally been following the course of prices of agricultural commodities. They would not call the recent fall in prices unprecedented. In January 1924, the price of wheat was Rs. 35-8-0 per candy as against Rs. 36-8-0 on the 1st of February, 1930. In January 1927, the price of Broach cotton was Rs. 253 per candy as against Rs. 265 on the 10th of February, 1930. Cotton, except for short periods, has been expensive as compared with other commodities ever since 1919. World's prices for cotton are now approximating to the level of prices for other commodities in relation to pre-war prices.

(b) If the Honourable Member means by "Karachi parity", the price at which wheat would have to be purchased in Karachi in order to export it profitably to London, his statement is approximately correct. The actual price of wheat in Karachi is about Rs. 4-9-0 per maund. The Karachi parity is, however, purely of theoretical interest, as there is at present no exportable surplus of wheat.

(c) The drop in the price of the commodities they produce must obviously affect the earnings of agriculturists. In this respect, India has felt at a later date than many countries the prevalent agricultural depression throughout the world.

(d) Government consider that no steps which they could take could have any material influence on the course of the real price of commodities, which is governed by factors which are outside their control and for the most part outside India.

(e) In common with other Governments throughout the world, the Government of India have observed with anxiety the fall in the relative prices of agricultural products as compared with those of other commodities. They have already taken measures, by the promotion of agricultural research and agricultural improvement generally, to increase the effectiveness of agricultural production, which is the most obvious method of placing the producer in a stronger position to face lower prices with equanimity. It is their hope to develop and intensify their efforts in this direction.

Mr. Mukhtar Singh: Are Government aware that a committee of inquiry for the stabilisation of prices was appointed in England 12 NOON. and it was found that the drop in prices was generally due to the manipulation of the money market, especially of exchange and currency?

Sir Frank Noyce: I have no information on that point.

Mr. Mukhtar Singh: Are Government aware that the drop in prices is due to the contraction in currency?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: Perhaps that is a question which concerns me rather more than my Honourable colleague. I suggest that a series of questions on this topic may lead to a long debate and it is perhaps not a suitable subject for question time. The only answer that I can give, and it is a full answer really to my Honourable friend's question, is as pointed out by Sir Frank Noyce in his answer, that we are now facing a world drop in prices. There has been a general fall in the prices of agricultural commodities throughout the world, which is due to world conditions, and it would be, I think, a very exaggerated view of the situation to suggest that any action by the Government of India has had any effect on the prices of such commodities as cotton and wheat throughout the world.

Mr. Mukhtar Singh: Are Government aware that in the inquiry made in England in 1924, it was found that the drop in prices was due to the contraction of currency, and if it was so, why can it not be assumed that the drop in prices in India is also due to the contraction of currency?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: I am afraid, I am not familiar with the particular Report which my Honourable friend refers to, and therefore, I should like to have notice of any question which refers to that particular Report.

Mr. Mukhtar Singh: Will the Honourable Member refer to that Report?

An Honourable Member: He wants notice.

Sardar Bahadur Honorary Captain Hira Singh, Brar: When the price is very low, will Government consider the question of fixing import duties on wheat and cotton and other products?

The Honourable Sir George Rainy: If any specific proposal were placed before the Government of India, I have no doubt it would be considered, but obviously when it comes to a question of imposing a duty on food products, it would require the most careful consideration in view of the very large body of consumers in India.

Mr. Mukhtar Singh: Do Government care to inquire as to what specific steps have been taken in order to guard against a drop in prices in other foreign countries?

Sir Frank Noyce: I am not aware that any such steps have been taken in any country, but I will make inquiries on the point.

Mr. Mukhtar Singh: Will the Honourable Member kindly inquire about the United States of America?

Sir Frank Noyce: Yes.

Sardar Bahadur Honorary Captain Hira Singh, Brar: When the prices are very low, will Government kindly consider the question of a substantial help to the farmers by giving part remission from the revenue?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster: That question brings me up again. I am afraid that our revenue is not inexhaustible and if remissions were made under any particular head, it would be necessary to supplement the gap by imposing an increasing burden under other heads. I presume that the question refers chiefly to land revenue which, of course, is not a question for the Central Government, and therefore I am afraid, I cannot give a very satisfactory answer now.

SHORT NOTICE QUESTION AND ANSWER.

ARREST OF SARDAR ABDUL HAKIM KHAN AND SARDAR AMINULLAH JAN.

Maulvi Abdul Matin Chaudhury (on behalf of Mr. Abdul Haye): (a) Is it a fact that Sardar Abdul Hakim Khan, late Afghan Trade Agent, and Sardar Aminullah Jan, a step brother of the ex-King Amanullah Khan, have been taken under custody by the Police at Peshawar?

(b) If so, why have they been arrested?

(c) Do Government propose to prosecute them or only to detain them at the King's pleasure?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: Sir, in the absence of my Honourable friend Mr. Howell owing to illness, I have been asked to answer the question on his behalf.

(a) Yes.

(b) As stated in the North-West Frontier Province communiqué of February 8th, there is reason to believe that both men were concerned in a conspiracy to disturb the peace of the friendly Kingdom of Afghanistan.

(c) Inquiries are still in progress and Government is not yet able to declare its intentions.

UNSTARRED QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

AUTHORISED LOADS FOR LOCOMOTIVES BETWEEN ASANSOL AND GAYA.

153. Mr. E. F. Sykes: Will Government be pleased to state what the authorised loads are in the different classes of locomotives between Asansol and Gaya on the East Indian Railway by:

- (a) the main line; and
- (b) the Grand Chord?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: I am placing in the Library a statement containing information obtained from the Agent, East Indian Railway, in connection with the Honourable Member's question, and sending him a copy.

GRADIENTS ON CERTAIN RAILWAYS.

154. Mr. E. F. Sykes: Will Government be pleased to state the percentage of the mileage of the following railways having gradients steeper than 1 in 200, that is, gradients up to 1 in 199:

- (i) North-Western Railway,
- (ii) East Indian Railway,
- (iii) Bengal Nagpur Railway.
- (iv) Rohilkhand and Kumaon Railway?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons: It is presumed the Honourable Member desires to know what proportion of the route mileage is on a grade steeper than 1 in 200. Particulars of the total length of gradients on Class I Railways are given in Statement 9 of Volume II of the Report by the Railway Board on Indian Railways for 1928-29. The percentage of the total length of gradients up to 1 in 200 to the total route mileage on the 31st March, 1929, was as follows:

(i) North Western Railway (broad gauge)	13.58
" " " (narrow gauge)	51.8
(ii) East Indian Railway	9.41
(iii) Bengal Nagpur Railway (broad gauge)	44.5
" " " (narrow gauge)	41.7
(iv) Rohilkund and Kumaon Railway	4.76

ASSISTANT STORE-KEEPERS IN ARSENALS.

155. Sardar Kartar Singh: (a) Is it a fact that the stores sections of arsenals in India are being gradually Indianised and that the scheme of Indianisation has been tangibly translated into action by the appointment of Indian civilian assistant store-keepers to replace British non-commissioned officers to the extent of 25 per cent.?

(b) Do the Indian assistant store-keepers, who are replacing British non-commissioned officers, get the same pay, status and other concessions, which the latter get, and if not, why not?

Mr. G. M. Young: (a) Yes.

(b) Civilian assistant store-keepers, whether Indian, Anglo-Indian or domiciled European, do not get the same rates of pay and allowances as the British non-commissioned officers whom they are replacing. One of the objects of the scheme is to reduce expenditure. The Government of India are however satisfied that the terms offered to the civilian assistant store-keepers are adequate, and this view is confirmed by the large number of applications which are received for these appointments.

EMPLOYMENT OF INDIAN STOREMEN IN ARSENALS.

156. Sardar Kartar Singh: (a) Is it a fact that Indian storemen will shortly be introduced in arsenals in India to relieve the British military subordinates in storekeeping?

(b) If the reply to part (a) is in the affirmative, will a certain number of British military subordinates be rendered surplus, and how is it proposed to employ the latter class of men?

Mr. G. M. Young: (a) and (b). A scheme is under consideration for the employment of Indian storemen in arsenals. I am afraid I cannot inform the Honourable Member of the details of this scheme until they have been settled.

APPOINTMENT OF INDIANS TO GAZETTED POSTS IN ARSENALS.

157. Sardar Kartar Singh: (a) Is it a fact that the civilian Indian clerical establishment of the Indian Army Ordnance Corps have been for some years past clamouring for gazetted appointments at the rate of one per each arsenal in India?

(b) If so, what attempts have been made to meet this demand?

(c) Is it a fact that there is not a single gazetted Indian civil officer in any arsenal in India?

(d) Is it a fact that an Indian gazetted officer will cost the State 50 per cent. less than a military officer? Is it a fact that the latter receives lodging and other allowances? If so, have Government considered the question of effecting a saving in the Military Budget by creating gazetted appointments for Indians?

Mr. G. M. Young: Owing to the fact that the Ordnance Branch of Army Headquarters is in Simla, I have not been able to obtain a full reply to the Honourable Member's question, but will send him one shortly.

APPOINTMENT OF INDIANS AS ESTABLISHMENT OFFICERS IN ARMY HEAD-QUARTERS.

158. Sardar Kartar Singh: (a) What are the duties in the Branches of Army Headquarters of the Establishment Officer? Is it a fact that he is a British military officer risen from the ranks?

(b) Have Government considered the question as to whether these duties can be efficiently performed by an Indian gazetted officer, with only Rs. 500 pay without any allowances?

Mr. G. M. Young: (a) The Honourable Member is referred to the answer given to starred question No. 1340, asked by Khan Bahadur Alimuzzaman Chowdhry on the 22nd March, 1926. The present Establishment Officer rose originally from the ranks, but he is a civilian and not a military officer.

(b) Government do not consider that the duties could be efficiently performed by any officer with a salary of Rs. 500 only.

BRITISH MILITARY CLERKS REPLACED BY INDIANS.

159. Sardar Kartar Singh: (a) Is it a fact that Indian clerks have replaced 28 British military technical clerks at Army Headquarters? If so, how have the latter been disposed of?

(b) If the ex-British military technical clerks have been drafted into arsenals, are they surplus to the existing authorized strength of each arsenal? If so, how are they being employed? If they are surplus, have Government considered the question of reverting them to regimental duties or of providing for them in other functions in existing vacancies?

Mr. G. M. Young: (a) and (b). 28 British military technical clerks at Army Headquarters have been, or will shortly be, replaced by Indian clerks, Indian Assistant Storekeepers of the Indian Army Ordnance Corps or British soldier clerks who will take civilian status on confirmation. The technical clerks have been absorbed in the authorised strength of British other ranks in the Indian Army Ordnance Corps with the exception of four, who are at present employed on the normal duties of storeholders or assistant storeholders and will be absorbed in the authorised cadre during 1930. They have not been reverted to regimental duty.

APPOINTMENT OF CHIEF CLERKS IN ARSENALS.

160. Sardar Kartar Singh: (a) Is it a fact that it is contemplated to employ the surplus military subordinates as Chief Clerks in all principal arsenals in India and to relegate the Head Assistants as subordinates? If so, will this deprive the Head Assistants of their existing status?

(b) Is it a fact that Indian Head Assistants have successfully carried out their duties from time to time, and specially during the difficult period of the Great War?

(c) Is it a fact that the Head Assistants have up till now acted as liaison officers to the Chief Ordnance Officer in the matter of complaints, petitions and other grievances of all Indians, and that he has been the interpreter of all representations affecting pay, budget, leave, etc.?

Mr. G. M. Young: (a) The answer is in the negative. As already explained in my reply to the previous question, the surplus British military technical clerks at Army Headquarters are being absorbed in the cadre of the Indian Army Ordnance Corps.

(b) Yes.

(c) Head Assistants are certainly consulted on these matters so far the clerical establishments are concerned.

RACIAL DISCRIMINATION IN ORDNANCE OFFICES.

161. Sardar Kartar Singh: Is it a fact that Indian clerks are not permitted to carry their bicycles inside an ordnance establishment, while European personnel have no such restrictions? Is it a fact that even Anglo-Indian men on daily rates of pay bring their bicycles inside the arsenal premises?

Mr. G. M. Young: I am making inquiries and will communicate the result to the Honourable Member in due course.

ELECTION OF MEMBERS FOR THE SELECT COMMITTEE ON THE AMENDMENT OF STANDING ORDERS.

Mr. President: I have to inform the Assembly that up to 12 Noon on Saturday, the 15th February, 1930, which was the date fixed for receiving nominations for the Select Committee on the amendment of Standing Orders only five nominations had been received. As the Select Committee will consist of seven members in addition to the President and the Deputy President and only five Members have been nominated, I appoint a further period up to 12 Noon on Tuesday, the 18th February, 1930, within which nominations will be received. The election, if necessary, will take place in this Chamber on Thursday, the 20th February, 1930.

STATEMENT LAID ON THE TABLE.

THE DACCA ARICHA RAILWAY PROJECT.

The Honourable Sir George Rainy (Member for Commerce and Railways): With reference to part (f) of my reply on the 3rd September, 1929, to question No. 61 by Mr. K. C. Neogy, I lay on the table the representation received from the Bengal Chamber of Commerce, and the reply which was sent, regarding the Dacca-Aricha Railway project.

COPY OF LETTER NO. 1938-1929, DATED 4TH JUNE 1929, FROM THE SECRETARY, BENGAL CHAMBER OF COMMERCE, TO THE SECRETARY, RAILWAY BOARD.

I have the honour to invite a reference to the Committee's letter No. 1647, dated the 2nd May, 1929, on the subject of the Dacca-Aricha Railway. In that letter the Committee explained that the proposal to undertake the construction of the railway had been engaging the serious attention of the Chamber, and they requested that, until their views had been received by the Board, any action committing Government definitely to the construction of the line should be suspended. The Committee are now in a position to submit their considered opinion in the matter, and they instruct me to communicate it to the Board.

2. The policy of the Board in regard to capital expenditure on new construction is defined in paragraph 28 of the Explanatory Memorandum of the Railway Budget for 1929-30. "In framing our programme of capital expenditure for next year", the Memorandum says, "We have acted on the principle that Railway Administrations should concentrate their efforts on a smaller number of new schemes, in order to push them through as rapidly as possible to completion, and obtain an early return on the money expended on them, instead of dissipating their energies by using up the funds available on a large number of projects and consequently lengthening the period before which they can be completed, piling up interest charges and postponing the date by which they will begin to yield a return on their cost". In view of the principle laid down in this paragraph, it is, the Committee think, reasonable to assume that a scheme would be selected for active prosecution only, if, in the opinion of the Board, it was considered to be urgently required in the interests of the area to be served, and if a fair return on the money expended was probable. It is the object of this letter to show that, in the opinion of the Chamber, neither of these criteria is applicable to the proposed Dacca-Aricha Railway.

3. Before dealing with the project itself, it is desirable to review very briefly certain matters in connection with it which were referred to in correspondence on the subject a few years ago. In the marginally noted letter the Board stated that it was for the Government of Bengal to decide whether the construction of a railway line in the area must be ruled out for reasons connected with the public health, and whether the requirements of the area in the way of communication could not best be met by an improvement of waterways. But if the decision should be in favour of some kind of railway communication, the Railway Board recorded the opinion that a light railway would sufficiently meet the requirements of the area. It may be recalled in this connection that at this date the scheme under consideration was for a metre-gauge line: there was no suggestion for a broad-gauge railway such as is now contemplated. The Board were themselves sceptical of the financial possibilities of a railway in the area; "they are bound to say", the letter remarks, "that they share Mr. Laughton's doubts whether the construction of a railway could be justified on ordinary commercial grounds..... the initial cost would be heavy, interruptions would be frequent, and maintenance would be expensive". Mr. Laughton (at the time Chief Engineer of the Eastern Bengal Railway) considered the area to be unsuitable for a railway link. The Chamber is not aware if the Government of Bengal came to the conclusion that the construction of the line could safely be undertaken without prejudicing the public health of the district, and whether Government were also of opinion that the requirements of the area could not be adequately provided for by an improvement of the waterways; for so far as they know, a public investigation of the whole position has never been conducted.

4. Particulars of the scheme are given in the Memorandum by the Financial Commissioner of Railways which is incorporated in the proceedings of the meeting of the Standing Finance Committee for Railways on 3rd and 4th January, 1929 (Vol. V, No. 5). The Memorandum frankly admits that the chief competitor of the Railway will be the water transport services, as the country is surrounded by rivers: in other words, even the modest return that is expected is dependent on the Railway appropriating traffic for which other means of transport are already available. The Memorandum explains the choice of a broad-gauge instead of a metre-gauge line, and estimates the total capital cost, including interest during construction, at Rs. 203 lakhs; and for the current year the Railway Budget provides a sum of Rs. 27 lakhs for expenditure in connection with the project. The anticipated return on capital, after the line has been opened for some years and has established itself as a through route between Bengal and Eastern Bengal and Assam, is 5.14 per cent. The Financial Commissioner's Memorandum does not explain how the figures of earnings are arrived at, but it is noted that the net earnings of the Dacca-Aricha line itself are estimated at Rs. 4½ lakhs, and that the additional net earnings of the existing main lines due to the new connection, are estimated at Rs. 10½ lakhs.

5. As is stated in the previous paragraph, the Financial Commissioner's Memorandum candidly admits that the line is expected to attract traffic from the inland steamer companies, and this matter is referred to at greater length in paragraphs 9 and 10 below. So far as the expectation is to attract a large share of the traffic to and from the Mymensingh area—principally coal inwards and jute outwards—the main incentive will be the somewhat shorter route that will be available as compared with the route by which the traffic is now conveyed. So far as the Narainunge-Dacca area is concerned, the object in view will be to compete with the inland navigation route between Narainunge-Dacca and Calcutta, and to deprive it of traffic that has been efficiently and adequately handled for many decades. It cannot be a matter for surprise if there is, in these circumstances, a marked feeling that in questions relating to the development of communications the possibilities and the achievements of inland water transport do not receive adequate consideration when the launching of new railway schemes in competition with existing water services is being examined.

6. It is desirable to analyse some of the important factors which bear on this scheme, and in the first place the geographical features of the area call for examination. The greater portion of the area to be traversed is bounded by the Padma and the Dhalleswari Rivers. Between Aricha and the site of the bridge over the Dhalleswari at Rajphulbari the country is a narrow strip entirely composed of alluvial soil, and liable to be cut through by the rivers during any monsoon. Such country is not suitable for a broad-gauge line, and can be better served by a system of tramways connecting the interior with the river ports. The Financial Commissioner's Memorandum states that no serious competition is anticipated from road services, but the Chamber is not so sure that this anticipation will prove to be sound. The extraordinary development of motor road services within recent years has falsified many anticipations, and although some of the services in the area have to close down during the rains—when, on the other hand, water transport is available to a greater extent—they are able to operate for the greater portion of the year, and the Chamber does not think it would be correct to assume that motor competition for local traffic—particularly passenger traffic—can be ignored.

7. As has already been mentioned, the greater portion of the area to be traversed is bounded by the Padma and the Dhalleswari Rivers, both of which have to be crossed. The Padma is to be crossed by a wagon ferry at Aricha, and this site is, in point of fact unusually exposed, being open to the storms which periodically sweep up the river. There is much less natural protection at this point than there is lower down at the present site of Goulundo Ghat, where the inland steamer companies already find it difficult enough at times to protect their vessels; and the Chamber thinks it is open to serious doubt whether it will be practicable to maintain a regular wagon ferry service at Aricha. They cannot but think that this feature of the project has not attracted the consideration which should be given to it.

8. In the case of the Dhalleswari, the line is to be carried over the river by a bridge. The Dhalleswari River bridge, and the design of the bridge will probably offer some difficulties as the river is a shifting one. On this account an opening span, or a single span bridge with a sufficiently high headway, would not be adequate, unless at any rate extensive training works were undertaken to ensure that the river keeps within a fixed channel. In either case—whether by the provision of training works, or by providing a bridge with a sufficient number of spans to ensure reasonable certainty that it will not be deserted by the river—the bridge and the works connected with it will prove to be a costly feature of the scheme. While on the subject of the Dhalleswari, it may be mentioned that the river is at present showing signs of opening out to an extent that has been unknown for many years past. This development has taken place during the current dry season, and there are indications that further changes are likely, resulting in a much greater depth of channel throughout the river from the Brahmaputra (Jamuna) to Dacca; the development may also result in changes in the course of the river which cannot at present be foreseen, and which might seriously affect the contemplated alignment of the railway and render it maintainable only at a cost of revetment of the river banks out of proportion to the financial possibilities of the railway. In the past, the lack of water has compelled the closure of the steamer service above Manickgunge during the dry season but, if the developments go on as they now promise to do, there appears to be no reason why a service of fast motor passenger vessels should not establish a line of communications equal in value to the railway. The inland steamer companies have stated that they would be prepared, with the sanction and support of Government, to provide such a service within a reasonable period, a step which they would have considered before this time had they not been prevented from doing so by (a) navigation difficulties, which a reasonable measure of waterways conservancy would go far to remedy, (b) the post-war financial stringency and (c) the problem of providing adequate block to meet the insistent demands for improved connections in the areas served by them.

9. Without going into the question in any detail, it is obvious that the financial results of the proposed railway must depend to a very large extent on the share it can attract of the Jute traffic. jute and coal traffic, a subject that has already been touched on in paragraph 5 above. Much of the jute goes direct to the jute mills, and it may not be appreciated that all jute mills prefer river delivery of their jute to delivery by rail. The reasons for this attitude on the part of mills are these:

- (a) that large consignments of jute can be brought alongside mill jetties by flat at one time;
- (b) that such consignments are properly arranged and loaded, with the result that unloading and storing operations are facilitated; and
- (c) that railway siding accommodation at practically all mills is limited, and consequently during the busy season great difficulty is experienced in handling jute arriving by rail, a position which is complicated by the fact that coal in practically all cases is received thus. The sidings are already rated to their full capacity.

In these circumstances jute mills could not cope with any increase in rail deliveries of jute, and on this account alone it is open to question whether the Dacca-Aricha line would be used to any appreciable extent for the carriage of jute to the Calcutta mills, particularly when the continuous trouble which would arise with regard to wagon demurrage is borne in mind.

10. The position is very similar with regard to much of the inward coal traffic to places like Narainunge and Dacca. The great bulk of the Dacca coal requirements is for brick burning, and the delivery of all this coal, and of the coal for jute firms there and at Narainunge, is required at scattered places on the river banks, many of which are not accessible to the railway: and in these circumstances it is unlikely that, apart from its own requirements, the railway would carry more than a very small share of the coal imported into the area.

11. A matter that is deserving of very serious consideration in connection with the scheme is the effect of an increase of the traffic over the main Eastern Bengal Railway line. Every year, during the height of the jute season, there is serious congestion, and it is sometimes impossible to obtain wagons, particularly in Northern Bengal, where large quantities of jute are held up indefinitely. In the unlikely event of much of the jute traffic to Calcutta being diverted by the new line to the railway—and on any other supposition the line could not show the estimated profit—the congestion would be multiplied, and the existing marshalling yards on the broad-gauge section of the line, already inadequate to cope with the traffic, would be hopelessly blocked.

Effect of increased traffic on existing railway facilities.
