Mr. President : The Honourable Member ought to have drawn the attention of the Chair to it if he regarded any expressions as unparliamentary. As soon as any unparliamentary expression is used, it is open to any Honourable Member sitting anywhere in the House to call attention to it. If that were done, the Chair would take action if it was satisfied that the expression was really unparliamentary. (Applause.)

Mr. B. Das : Sir, I regret that at the time I did not take objection. Now, Sir, my friend the Honourable the Home Member, while he was dealing with the undebatable hard facts which the Leader of the Opposition put forward this morning, ridiculed my leader suggesting he imputed motives against the executive as to wrong interpretations of the clauses of this Bill in actual practice and that my leader said that in actual discharge of responsibilities laid by these clauses on the executive they are liable to conduct which was indecent or improper. Sir, my leader never laid that charge against the executive or the district officials. Then the Honourable the Home Member suggested that there was a singular misconception of the position, a singular failure to face the plain facts of the position on this side of the House on the main principles of the Bill. Sir, I strongly repudiate that statement. I think, Sir, if the Honourable the Home Member was not backed by his 40 men behind him and also by his friends of the European Group, he would not say so bluntly that we do not understand the principle of the Bill or that we do not appreciate his position. He must pay some respect to us, Sir, and must admit that we do possess some intelligence and that we do understand the plain English language. Sir, we are willing to face the singular situation. We have always faced such singular situations. My friend, Mr. Ranga Iyer, and myself have made various statements in this House that we are here to face a particular singular situation, the singular situation that the Government of India Act of 1919 created, namely, that we should be always facing an irresponsible Government containing 26 Government

Members and 10 nominated Members who always flock like sheep to the Government lobby.

Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh : They are there for that purpose.

Mr. B. Das : Sir, my friend, the Honourable the Home Member made one suggestion which I wish had not come from a responsible Member on the Treasury Benches. He said, speaking like Cromwell—when Cromwell with his Ironsides went to the British Parliament and demanded the impossible and the members of those days did not agree, Cromwell and his Ironsides with sword in hand dissolved the Parliament—Sir the Honourable the Home Member said many nasty things. He may wish to imitate Cromwell. But I know my Honourable friend knows his limitations, his weaknesses ; he knows that if he comes with sword in hand like Mussolini of Italy, he knows that you, Sir, will not permit him to enter this Assembly Chamber. He knows that, although he controls the whole police force in India,—his so-called law and order—he cannot allow his policemen to enter this Chamber, though they are elsewhere located in these premises ; and yet he said that we may as well abolish ourselves as a legislative body altogether ! After this condemnation of the work of this Legislature which the Government sides themselves are party to, let the Honourable Member feel happy with the expressions of views he uttered ; but, Sir, we are here to voice the sentiments, the viewpoint of the people, and we have done that always. There the Home Member is sitting with his ironsides of 26 Government Members backed by his 13 nominated Members. (An Honourable Member : "Fourteen.") One of them is on this side—backed I say by his 13 nominated Members, and backed by the Anglo-Indian Press and by the Members of the European Group, and also backed by those few Members in this House who do nothing but always think that it suits their self-interest to follow the Government invariably. Well, nevertheless, if he thinks he can ridicule in this way the chosen representatives of the people, he is entirely in the wrong. I should have thrown out the challenge to him, if he was an elected Member, to resign on this very issue, to resign I say on clause 3 of this Bill, and to contest any seat in any part of India—excepting perhaps the European constituency (Laughter) ; and I would tell him that I would any day defeat him, and probably he would lose his security of Rs. 500 (Laughter). Sir, if my Honourable friend wants executive action, he had it six months ago when he advised the Viceroy to pass an Ordinance. Why does he not again have an Ordinance passed, and thus absolve us the elected Members from taking any responsibility ? To-day, Sir, he, with his majority, with his nominated majority, forces the Bill down our throats and involves us in the responsibility ; and the moment we criticise the measure, the moment we suggest something which will help him to appear in the role of a more civilized Government, more representative of public opinion, he says, "You are not representative of public opinion". Sir, I deny that charge which has been levelled against us.

One other thing I find is that the Honourable Member said that we must face the fundamental conditions, the fundamental conditions that persist and will persist in the country unless these powers are granted. What does the Opposition want ? The Opposition is willing to grant Government such powers as are controlled by judicial action of the High Court. It is not going to give Government any executive power, and if the Honourable Member is going to assume that power, let him go and advise the Viceroy to include this Bill in an Ordinance and the representatives of the people will not be responsible then for such a repressive enactment.

The Honourable Sir George Rainy (Leader of the House) : I should like to submit, Sir, that the Honourable Member is travelling very far from the amendment before the House.

Mr. President : That is perfectly true. The amendment before the House is that the amount provided in the clause be reduced from Rs. 1,000 to Rs. 500. At the same time it must be pointed out that the motion before the House is that clause 3 stand part of the Bill. To that motion this amendment is proposed. I hope the Honourable Member will be satisfied with what he has said already on the general aspect of the question and proceed to deal with the amendment now.

Mr. B. Das : I thank you very much, Sir, and I bow to your advice and suggestion. Sir, when feelings run high we must divert and digress a little to express our denunciation.

The Honourable the Home Member said that we have attempted to suggest no remedy. Here is a remedy suggested by my friend Mr. Mitra Ziauddin Ahmad, pointed out that he was very anxious for the Muslim printing profession. I hope the Honourable Member will see the reasonableness of it and will accept the amendment as moved by my Honourable friend, Mr. Mitra.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad : Sir, I rise to support the motion. One of the very important arguments that has been brought forward by the Honourable the Mover of this Bill is that the discussion is reducing the Assembly to the status of a school debating society. I have repeatedly drawn the attention of the House to the fact that the Government are treating the Assembly like a college debating society. But the distinguished Member went one step further. I used the expression, "college debating society" and he considers us a "school debating society". Of course the Government have got the votes in their pocket. They take advantage of the fact that a large number of Members on this side of the House have already gone down. The Honourable Member in charge of the Bill is intoxicated on account of keeping a majority of votes in his pocket; he can afford to say whatever he pleases. Sir, we on this side of the House also support the phrase that the Assembly is no better than a "debating society" but on entirely different grounds. We call it such on this ground, that our decisions have no value whatsoever in the eyes of Government, and in that sense certainly Government are treating this Assembly as a school debating society.

Sir, I raised four points of principle when I moved that clause 3 be deleted, and I expected that in the course of the day the Honourable the Mover of the Bill would reply to those points. But he did not touch on any of those points, and the only reply he gave was that our argument was only the argument of a school boy. Of course we have in our younger days followed many debates.....

Mr. President : I hope the Honourable Member is not going to deal in detail with his three points again.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad : No, Sir; I am not going to repeat those points. In college and school debating societies we often indulged in logical fallacy in our replies of this kind, when the speaker advanced one argument and the reply was quite different. In my first speech I very much emphasised the fact that this particular clause is exceedingly hard; we are really punishing the innocent, and the punishment is also very hard; because the sum of Rs. 1,000 for a small press, whose value does not exceed Rs. 200 or Rs. 300, is really a harsh punishment, and I strongly advocate that this quantum should be reduced. With these words I beg to support the amendment.

Sardar Sant Singh : Sir, I rise to support this amendment of my Honourable friend, Mr. Mitra. Before coming to the merits of the amendment, I want to add my humble protest against the language used by the Honourable the Home Member. I am new to this Assembly, and when I stood for election I thought this Assembly was not as bad as was suggested by the Congress people. But when I reached here, I found that it was worse, not only because it possesses no power to influence the Treasury Benches, but also because the Treasury Benches, instead of acting in a responsible manner, are showing an irresponsibility which is probably inherent in them. And I think, therefore, that there can be no more condemnation of this Assembly than the words which have been used by the Honourable the Home Member to-day on the floor of this House. I know that, soon after the division when we left the place, feelings were running high. I do not know whether the language used by my Honourable friend was unparliamentary or not, because I am new to the Assembly and he has got more experience than I have. But I know this that it was very undesirable, and instead of getting up and making amends, my friend was laughing in his seat when the ruling was given by the Chair, a laugh which we very rarely see on his face in this House. I am sorry that I have to say, on behalf of the elected Members on this side, that soon after hearing the Honourable Member.....

Mr. President : I would remind the Honourable Member that the amendment before the House is to reduce the sum of Rs. 1,000 in clause 3.

Sardar Sant Singh : Yes, Sir. I was saying that, I am sorry on this account that those Members who after hearing the Honourable Member voted for the Government did a dis-service to the country. In protest also they should have voted with the popular party.

Now, Sir, coming to merits of this amendment, my submission is that in these days of admitted financial stringency, which does not assail Government alone but has depleted the resources of private individuals as well, to demand such a heavy sum as Rs. 1,000 from a new press,—and for reasons which I need not repeat now as the first amendment has been defeated—will be very unjust. It will be an act of justice that the amount should be reduced from Rs. 1,000 to Rs. 500, especially when the press is a new one and the person who applies for a declaration has not any bad antecedents. I, therefore, support this amendment of my friend, Mr. Mitra.

The Honourable Sir James Crerar : Mr. President, in speaking on this amendment, I think I should be careful not to incur your censure, and I shall therefore restrict myself to the merits of the amendment which is purely arithmetical. The Honourable the Mover and those who supported him were strongly in favour of the reduction of this amount. I should like to point out to the House that in the Bill which was originally introduced, the amount proposed, following the earlier enactment, was a minimum of Rs. 500 and a maximum of Rs. 2,000, and I submit that in response to criticisms made on this point, Government have already gone a very long way to meet them. As the sub-clause now stands, the Magistrate has got a discretion which in the original Bill he had not got, and the intention of the change made in the sub-clause was of course that the Magistrate should exercise that discretion having regard to the merits of each particular case coming before him. It does not follow, nor is it anticipated, that the Magistrate would in all cases demand the maximum security. He has that latitude. His decision is of course subject to revision by the Local Government. I submit, therefore, that we have already gone a very long way to meet criticism on this point and I very much regret I cannot go further. I must oppose the amendment.

3 P.M.

[Sir James Crerar.]

Mr. President : The question is :

“That in sub-clause (1) of clause 3 for the words ‘one thousand’ the words ‘five hundred’ be substituted.”

The motion was negatived.

Mr. S. C. Mitra : Sir, I move :

“That in the proviso to sub-clause (1) of clause 3 for the words ‘three thousand’ the words ‘one thousand’ be substituted.”

My arguments are more or less the same as I advanced on the last motion I moved a few minutes before. I would only like to add this. Let not the world or the Government judge the Indians by the high salaries that we Indians pay to our officers. It is a fact, no doubt true, that the Indian Civil Servants get the highest pay in the world; but that should not be the standard by which we should be judged that we are a very rich people and we can afford to pay Rs. 3,000 as deposit. That is my submission. I move.

Mr. S. C. Sen (Bengal National Chamber of Commerce : Indian Commerce) : Sir, I support this motion of my friend, Mr. S. C. Mitra. I find the proviso says :

“Provided that if a deposit has been required under sub-section (3) from any previous keeper of the printing-press, the security which may be required under this sub-section may amount to three thousand rupees.”

Supposing the previous keeper had been ill and had to go away for bona fide reasons, and if another man has to take his place, why should three thousand rupees be asked for? I want the Honourable the Home Member to consider whether he should ask for three thousand rupees in every case. Why not make it one thousand rupees in all cases?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar : Sir, I regret to find myself opposing another amendment by the Honourable gentleman from Bengal. But I have drawn the attention of the House to the fact that on every occasion, so far on which an amendment has been moved, I have been able to show him that the matter has been carefully and sympathetically considered by the Government and that important mitigating changes had been made. With regard to this particular proviso, I should like to point out, in reply to what fell from the Honourable gentleman opposite, that three thousand is the maximum, and his suggestion that three thousand rupees would be demanded in all cases has no basis. I should like to point out also that this proviso applies solely in the case in which a deposit has been previously demanded from the same press, and that implies of course that the press must have been a source of offending matter. The position, therefore, is entirely different from that of a new press. There are I think clear and good reasons why this maximum should be provided, and I wish to make it perfectly clear that this is a maximum and not a fixed amount to which the Magistrate must in all cases go.

Mr. President : The question is :

“ That in the proviso to sub-clause (1) of clause 3 for the words ‘ three thousand ’ the words ‘ one thousand ’ be substituted.”

The motion was negatived.

Mr. Muhammad Azhar Ali (Lucknow and Fyzabad Divisions : Muhammadan Rural) : Sir, I move :

“ That in the proviso to sub-clause (1) of clause 3 for the words ‘ three thousand ’ the words ‘ two thousand ’ be substituted.”

The reasons have already been given and I do not wish to add any more.

Mr. Muhammad Yamin Khan : Sir, I think this amendment may be accepted (Hear, hear from the Opposition Benches) because as the security demanded in the first instance is one thousand rupees. I think it is but fair that the next time it is demanded, it must be the double of that amount. I think double of that amount will meet the case all right. Three thousand does not seem to be fair. Double the amount is quite sufficient and I support it.

Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh : Very good arithmetic. (Laughter.)

The Honourable Sir James Crerar : Sir, I have very little to add to what I have already said. The amount of three thousand was very carefully considered. It is a very reasonable amount in the circumstances, and I regret I cannot accept the reduction proposed.

Mr. President : The question is :

“ That in the proviso to sub-clause (1) of clause 3 for the words ‘ three thousand ’ the words ‘ two thousand ’ be substituted.”

The motion was negatived.

Mr. President : The next amendment is the one standing in the name of Mr. Sitaramaraju, No. 19.*

Mr. B. Sitaramaraju : I do not propose to move that amendment, Sir.

Mr. President : Then the next amendment is No. 23.

Mr. S. C. Mitra : Sir, I move :

“ That in sub-clause (2) of clause 3 the words ‘ on application by the keeper of the press ’ be omitted.”

I do not know why the Government should not return the money after the period, why it should be incumbent on the owner or the publisher to apply for it again. It is a simple point I think, and I hope the Honourable the Home Member will accept this amendment as a reasonable one.

The Honourable Sir James Crerar : Sir, I regret very much that I cannot accept this amendment. I must point out that my objection is in the interest of the keeper of the press whom Mr. Mitra, I think, proposes to subject to a very serious risk. If the money is refunded otherwise than on the application of the person who has deposited it, it is perfectly clear that there is a very serious danger that the money might get into wrong hands. In any case, merely as an ordinary piece of business, this money will have to be paid out from the Treasury on a chalan in the ordinary way, and the person who is entitled to the money must necessarily sign the chalan. I think, therefore, that the Honourable Member's amendment is a bit misconceived and perhaps on reflection he will consider the advisability of withdrawing it.

*“ That sub-clause (2) of clause 3 be omitted.”

[Sir James Crerar.]

Mr. S. C. Mitra : I beg to withdraw the amendment, Sir, with the permission of the House.

The amendment was, by leave of the Assembly, withdrawn.

Mr. S. C. Mitra : Sir, the next amendment which stands in my name reads thus :

" That in sub-clause (3) of clause 3 for the words ' Whenever it appears to the Local Government ', the words ' Whenever a Local Government is in possession of sufficient proof ' be substituted."

My main point is that the language employed is very vague—" Whenever it appears to the Local Government ",—and so I want that the words " Whenever a Local Government is in possession of sufficient proof " should be substituted to make the language clearer. The point is quite clear, and I hope the amendment will be accepted.

The Honourable Sir C. P. Ramaswami Aiyar (Law Member) : Obviously the amendment sought to be moved by my Honourable friend is out of place, because the wording of his amendment is very vague. Moreover, it will be remembered that in clause 23 there is a right of appeal given, and that will make it incumbent upon the authorities to consider what the proof is on which the action is proposed to be taken. It appears to me that considering sub-clause (3) of clause 3 with clause 23, the amendment of my Honourable friend is really beside the point and would not serve the purpose which my Honourable friend has apparently in mind.

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer : I would suggest to the Honourable the Mover of this amendment in view of what has fallen from the Honourable the Law Member, to withdraw his amendment. Personally I would very much welcome the Local Governments to take action whenever they were in possession of insufficient proof because when our pressmen go to the High Court they will have a chance of winning the case. (Laughter.)

Mr. President : The question is :

" That in sub-clause (3) of clause 3 for the words ' Whenever it appears to the Local Government ', the words ' Whenever a Local Government is in possession of sufficient proof ' be substituted."

The motion was negatived.

Sardar Sant Singh : Sir, before I move my amendment No. 25, I want to submit one thing for your kind consideration. As a matter of fact, this amendment, and amendments Nos. 28, 29 and 35 form part of one continuous amendment of the whole of sub-clauses (3) and (4) of clause 3. I hope you will permit me to move them together.

Mr. President : The Honourable Member in moving this amendment may explain the whole position relating to the other amendments also, preparing the House to vote for those amendments in due course.

Sardar Sant Singh : May I submit this for your consideration ? Without the other amendments this amendment would be meaningless. If one is carried.....

Mr. President : I have pointed out to the Honourable Member that he will be allowed to explain the whole position of all the amendments when moving this amendment. He can thus prepare the House to vote with him on each of those amendments. I will not restrict his speech to this amendment only. In his speech he can bring out all the points which he wishes to make out so that the House may be able to follow his whole case.

Sardar Sant Singh : I beg to move :

" That in sub-clause (3) of clause 3 for the words ' Local Government ' occurring in the first line, the words ' District Magistrate having jurisdiction in the place where the press is situated ' be substituted."

Sub-clause (3) as it is now worded reads as follows :

" Whenever it appears to the Local Government that any printing-press kept in any place in the territories under its administration, in respect of which security under the provisions of this Act has not been required, or having been required has been refunded under sub-section (2), is used for the purpose of printing or publishing any newspaper, book or other document containing any words, signs or visible representations of the nature described in section 4, sub-section (1), the Local Government may, by notice in writing to the keeper of the press stating or describing such words, signs or visible representations, order the keeper to deposit with the Magistrate within whose jurisdiction the press is situated security to such an amount, not being less than five hundred or more than three thousand rupees as the Local Government may think fit to require, in money or the equivalent thereof in securities of the Government of India as the person making the deposit may choose."

Now, in this sub-clause what I want to substitute is a judicial authority instead of the executive authority, and that is why I propose to substitute the words ' District Magistrate ' in place of the words ' Local Government ' in the first line. You have permitted me to refer to the other amendments also. In line 10, I want for the words ' Local Government ' the words ' District Magistrate ' should be substituted (amendment No. 28). In amendment No. 29, I want for all the words occurring after the words ' describing such words, signs or visible representations ' the following to be substituted :

" call upon the keeper to show cause why he should not be called upon to deposit security to such an amount not exceeding one thousand rupees as the District Magistrate may think fit."

Then after this notice has been issued, I want, (amendment No. 35), that,—

" For sub-clause (4) of clause 3 the following new sub-clauses be substituted :

- (2) When such keeper appears or is brought before the District Magistrate in compliance with, or in execution of, a notice issued, the District Magistrate shall proceed to inquire into the truth of the allegations upon which action was taken and to take such evidence as may appear necessary.
- (3) Such inquiry shall be made as nearly as may be practicable in the manner prescribed for conducting trials and recording evidence in summons cases.
- (4) Pending the completion of the inquiry under sub-section (3) the District Magistrate, if he considers that immediate measures are necessary for the prevention of using the press in the manner objected to, may, for reasons to be recorded in writing, direct the keeper of the press to deposit security not exceeding the amount entered in the notice until the conclusion of the trial.
- (5) If upon such inquiry it is proved that the press is used for the purpose of printing matter described in section 4, sub-section (1) and that the keeper should be made to deposit security in money or the equivalent thereof in securities of the Government of India as the person making the deposit may choose, the District Magistrate shall make an order accordingly.

(6) If on an inquiry it is not proved that the press is used for the purpose of printing matter described above the District Magistrate shall make an order discharging the keeper and ordering the refund of deposit, if any, made under sub-section (4) of this section.

(7) If the District Magistrate makes an order under sub-section (5) he shall appoint a date, not being sooner than the tenth day after the date of the order on or before which the deposit shall be made.'''

My submission is that this clause gives power to the executive to demand security without giving any opportunity to the keeper of the press who has offended against the Press law to show cause, or even without allowing any hearing to the person aggrieved. I submit this procedure is not in accordance with the principles of criminal jurisprudence. The executive may be very competent; they may possess exceptional abilities; but yet there can be no justice unless the person aggrieved has had an opportunity to put his case before some judicial authority. Sir, the penalising of an individual in whatever manner it may be, is not the object of any civilised administration.

If we look at the procedure prescribed in the Criminal Procedure Code of this land, we find that it is not doing the justice that is insisted upon but it is the impression created on the accused that justice has been done to him that is insisted upon. For that reason there is section 371 of the Criminal Procedure Code which makes it obligatory upon the Magistrate to supply a copy of the judgment to the accused. The accused can also insist that the judgment should be translated in the vernacular of the accused, so that he may be able to understand on what material he has been convicted. Now, this system is in vogue in India. Although there are certain exceptions in the Criminal Procedure Code, which were referred to by my friend, Mr. K. Ahmed, when he was quoting sections 109, 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code, I quite see that according to the strict interpretation of the principles of criminal jurisprudence, these sections do not strictly follow those principles. They are rather the exceptions which have been made in the criminal law of India. In England nobody is punished except for doing an act which is regarded to be an offence. Now, these preventive sections are not consistent with the principles of jurisprudence. Therefore, they should not be a guide to us in making future laws. If the practice is permitted to grow that the executive should replace the functions of the judiciary, then the position indicated in the following story will come into existence. An Anglo-Indian of the type of my friend, who sits on the Treasury Bench, was passing by the Houses of Parliament. He inquired what those buildings were and he was told that they were the Houses of Parliament. He was heard to say "Is this rubbish still going on?" If all the power is transferred to the executive, then we are coming to the days when the executive will virtually rule. As a matter of fact, the principles of democracy demand that no law should be made except with the willing consent of the people. Unfortunately, in this country we have only got an imitation of Parliamentary institutions. The form is observed but the reality is wanting and we are asked to give our opinion in a particular piece of legislation. Under the guise of passing the law through the Legislature, the executive is grasping all the power in its own hands. If the executive is to perform judicial functions as well, then the sooner the Legislature is abolished the better, because we will not be guilty of hypocrisy at least. Suppose for the sake of argument the necessity for this measure exists. Concede also the objection taken by some of the elected Members that we are not going to assist the murderer to have a free hand in this land. Assuming these two facts to exist in this country, the question still arises—are you going to hang the murderer without trial or are you going to give him a hearing at all. If you hang without trial, then in these days of financial stringency, you had better abolish all the High Courts and posts of Magistrates. That will be giving short shift to all judicial administration. If you want to defend the liberty of the subject, then my submission is that judicial authority should reign supreme. It is an unfortunate state of affairs in this land, that even the judiciary is not independent. In the lower rungs, the Magistrate is not only the judicial but also the executive officer. I have been practising for a quarter of a century in a mofussil court, and my experience is that in trying political or semi-political cases, the Magistrates, with rare but noble exceptions, act on the hints derived from the executive authorities. Not only that, judicial pronouncements amounting to conviction and sending the accused to jail have been made on a word from the District Magistrate. The Magistrates have also said openly that they are helpless in these cases. I wish this House could appoint a committee of inquiry and I can produce thousands of witnesses to say that Magistrates have openly said that they are helpless in such cases. If this state of things will not open the eyes of those who are responsible for the administration of justice, I wonder what will. Knowing these facts and feeling as I do, I would certainly not be a party to legislation which places power in the hands of the executive. For three quarters of a century we have been demanding the separation of judicial from executive functions, but still that reform has not been carried out. These grievances will probably remain till the present form of government is crushed away. Whatever the Magistracy do, let us have at least a form of trial. Give the accused a chance to defend himself. In that case the person aggrieved will have one satisfaction at least, that he has been heard. My submission is that the judicial authority will have the grace to give an opportunity to the accused to defend himself before he is punished. Here security to the extent of Rs. 3,000 is to be demanded without giving any opportunity to the culprit to be heard. My Honourable friend has refused to accept the amendment for reducing the amount to Rs. 2,000. Demanding a security of Rs. 3,000 means the strangulation of the press, the shutting up of the man's shop and sending him away. It means the ruining of the career of a man, and it means restricting the liberty of trade and freedom of action. Under these circumstances, Sir, my submission is that this clause should not stand as it is. Even in respect of the Act of 1910, Sir, I would like to quote our late friend, Mr. K. C. Roy, whose death we all mourn here. Let us see what was his opinion about the Press Act of 1910 and about this executive action? He said:

"I was present at the meeting of the Imperial Legislative Council on the 4th February, 1910, when the Press Act was introduced and am fully conversant with the discussions both in and outside the Legislature. While admitting that the presence of anarchy and anarchical crime demanded drastic treatment, I was not in favour of the Bill then, and ten years' working of the Act has but confirmed my earlier opinions. I am therefore prepared to ask the Committee to consider its repeal on the following grounds:

- (1) That the Act has failed to achieve the object which its author had in view;

[Sardar Sant Singh.]

- (2) That the loyalty of the press has generally stood the test of a Great War ;
- (3) That the political ideals have changed ("Swaraj", "self-determination" and "rights of subject nations" are now accepted political doctrines. Pressmen prefer taking responsibility to evasion of law) ;
- (4) That it has affected the growth of a healthy press in India ;
- (5) That it has added to the discontent among the Indian people ; and
- (6) That the Act is not in keeping with the spirit of the reform."

My submission is that herein our late esteemed colleague gave that Committee to understand that the Act had added to the discontent of the Indian people. From the day this Press Act was introduced, there has been protest after protest from all quarters of the country. Not only that, I would like my Honourable friend the Home Member to point out a single opinion of a single individual—of course that of an Indian, not a European or one of European descent—who has blessed this Act. On the contrary even in to-day's telegram it is stated that the Press of Calcutta observed a hartal and did not issue any newspaper on account of this Press Bill. Will my Honourable friend add to the contentment of the people by proceeding in that way ? My submission is that if he wants to win the confidence of the public, then the least that he can do is to substitute judicial action in place of executive action. Similarly, in the written statement of Mr. Kali Nath Roy, the Editor of the Tribune, we find him saying :

"The absurdity of making the executive the judge in their own affairs—for they are as much a party to every action taken against the Press as the Press itself—is self-evident. No newspaper need exist if it does not fearlessly criticize the Government ; and to place the Press at the mercy of the Executive Government as the Press Act admittedly does, is to say that this function shall either not be performed by the Press at all or at any rate shall be most inadequately and perfunctorily performed. It is no argument to say that in spite of the Press Act there is a good deal of strong and independent criticism in the country. The fact that there are men who are prepared to do their duty regardless of consequences does not divest an arbitrary, obnoxious and totally indefensible measure of its objectionable features."

Herein, too, Sir, the point emphasised by the witness is that the executive authority should not be permitted to keep the destinies of the Press in their own hands. Similarly, further on in his statement he said :

"Any modification of the Act, to be acceptable to the Indian public, must take these salient facts into account. It must restore the principle of liberty to its original position, and it must give the Executive no control whatever over the Press."

Sir, these are views expressed in 1921, after the Press Act had been in working order for eleven years, in the light of its working for eleven years. The Committee gave their opinions in paragraph 7 of their report as follows :

"On an examination of the third aspect of the case, viz., the comparative advantages and disadvantages of retaining the Act, we find that, while many Local Governments advocate its retention in the interests of the administration, on the other hand the Act is regarded with bitter hostility by nearly all shades of Indian opinion. Most of the witnesses examined before us believe it to be indefensible in principle and unjust in its application."

Now in face of this finding of a committee appointed by the executive Government to review the working of the Press Act for eleven years, it is singularly an irony of fate that the same Act, with the same evil, should be brought before this House. Sir, the least that can be expected is that the executive should divest itself of the power of punishing the alleged guilty party, be it the keeper of a press or the publisher of a newspaper, and substitute for its place an impartial tribunal. The executive Government may themselves come to a conclusion that some one has written something which is an incitement to murder according to them, but according to judicial authority, it may not be an incitement to murder. Why, I ask, should the word of the executive be considered as if it was God's word and cannot be altered ? Therefore, my submission is that if they really want to do away with the unfortunate activities of certain young men who commit assassinations of a political nature, they should rather try to produce more contentment in the country than discontent on which such anarchical crimes feed. Therefore, Sir, I move this amendment.

Sir Abdur Rahim : Mr. President, I support this motion ; and I hope the Honourable the Home Member will give it his calm and dispassionate consideration, if that be possible. (Laughter.) Sir, in a matter of this kind which is being debated in this House, it serves no good and useful purpose for anyone to lose his temper. Legislating in a fit of temper cannot be good statesmanship (Hear, hear), and I venture to hope that those who call themselves responsible ministers of Government will consider very carefully what would be the effect if this amendment is negatived. Sir, the Honourable the Home Member, in an earlier stage of the debate, charged us with disregarding the serious position of this country. I am afraid, Sir, he has a very short memory indeed. He has forgotten that we gave every support to him in his endeavour to suppress the terrorist movement in so far as it can be done by controlling writings of a certain character. He forgot that entirely when he brought that charge against us. We, on the other hand, are in a position to charge the Treasury Benches with trying to bring forward a measure really for controlling the Press, for establishing a sort of censorship over the Press, under the guise of preventing incitements to certain kinds of offences.

Sir, what is this new Bill ? The former Bill, the House will remember, was frankly one to obtain control over the

4 P.M.

Press. The present Bill is not of that character, I mean, it does not profess to be of that character, and I want the Home Member to stick to the scope of this Bill. The scope of the Bill is to prevent incitement to certain forms of crime, to violence and murder. Now, Sir, if the Home Member is really anxious to confine the provisions of the Bill to its preamble and its title, to what its real scope is, then I ask him in all seriousness to accept this amendment. What is the scope of this amendment ? As my Honourable friend, Sardar Sant Singh, has pointed out, this amendment ought not to be read by itself ; there are other subsidiary amendments which ought to be read with it in order to make the position clear. Amendment No. 25 is now specifically before the House and then there are amendments Nos. 28, 29 and 35. If all these amendments are read together, they amount to this : there ought to be some form of judicial inquiry, a proper inquiry before a Magistrate, in which inquiry the person who is charged with having committed an offence, or rather with having violated the provisions of clause 4 of this Bill, should be heard and should be given an opportunity of proving that his action and his writings do not come within the purview of clause 4. Is this asking the Government to concede too much ? Government, I understand, are agreeable to provide an appeal to the High Court at one stage or another. Are not Government aware, after all those decisions that have been given under the old Act, that it is no good giving such powers to the High Court if the very foundation is wanting for the exercise of that power? What is the foundation as laid down in sub-clause (3)? The foundation is purely executive. How can the High Court know what is working in the mind of the Local Government? The Local Government are merely an executive body; they act upon a certain class of information; they act upon suspicion and they act upon information which cannot be available to the High Court. They then make up their minds and they may be right. I am not one of those who say that the executive are always in the wrong, nor do I say that the police are always in the wrong. I know that the executive and the police often have information which cannot be placed before judicial tribunals, because it is not admissible under the Evidence Act. But that is a separate matter. But when you ask the High Court to review purely executive action, you are really not treating the High Court fairly. You are not giving them any opportunity to exercise their judicial power, or judicial discretion or judicial judgment. Where are the materials for them? That is why my Honourable friend, Sardar Sant Singh, has brought forward this amendment. You lay the foundation of a judicial procedure and then there will be very little objection to the provisions of this Bill. If the Magistrate holds an inquiry and finds that a certain press has issued matter which offends against the provisions of clause 4 of this Bill, let him call upon the accused to show cause why his press should not be forfeited, or rather why his security should not be forfeited. He may have good cause to show. Hear him at least and let him produce evidence. But you would not do that. All that you want to do is to act in a purely arbitrary and high-handed manner. What remedy has the High Court against that? The High Court cannot know the mind of the executive; it is impossible. The two things are inconsistent. Either you have an entirely executive provision for controlling the press or controlling any writings or speeches on the part of the public, or lay down a judicial procedure. I do not see what answer there can be. This mixture of the judicial and the executive is most unfair to both the parties it is unfair to the judicial authority because it cannot exercise its judicial functions properly, and it is unfair to the executive, which is hampered in its action. It cannot lead to a proper discontent. The public will say, "Here are these newspapers which have been suppressed or whose security has been forfeited on no proper grounds whatever because there has been no public inquiry into the matter". One of the things which this Government can well take credit for, and which we have given them full credit for, is this, that they have established what is called the rule of law in this country. We are indeed to Britain for having established the authority and rule of law in India. Are you not going to destroy that rule of law in this important matter? Where is the rule of law here? I would ask my Honourable friend, the Law Member, if he can tell us, can assure us, that this is the sort of rule of law that Sir John Simon contemplated or which is contemplated by English law and jurisprudence. If he could so assure us, then I should know what the position is. Then we would know where we stand. This is in fact the negation of all rule of law. I have had something to do with the administration of the old Press Act, and I know what the difficulties are. Every judicial authority has felt that and has expressed it in unmistakable terms. Are you going by this Bill to relieve them of those difficulties? Most certainly not. You are having the same provisions which have been condemned more than once. Cannot Government learn by experience, the experience of the past? We have offered our co-operation in order to enact a measure which would really prevent, as far as it is possible for any such measure to prevent, incitements to a certain class of offences. We are still willing to co-operate with Government to that extent, but we have made our position absolutely clear from the very beginning that we are not inclined to go further; we are not inclined to give the Government control over the entire Press, and that is what they are really seeking to have by a measure of this sort. I ask Government, therefore, to reconsider their position with respect to this clause and to enact a clause which will enable the Magistrate to hold a proper inquiry before declaring any security to be forfeited, even before demanding any security whatever. Why should there be such a demand for security, or why should there be any forfeiture of any security if it has been given, without a proper inquiry? Sir, I suppose it will be said that otherwise, it will mean a prolonged inquiry, it will mean giving further publicity. We are perfectly familiar with this argument. As a matter of fact, if you want any inquiry whatever, it must mean some delay. Otherwise an inquiry would be of little value. Then as regards giving publicity, has not this matter another aspect to it? Are you not exposing to public odium the writings which you condemn? Are you not inflicting a further punishment upon their author, a more deterrent punishment, I venture to think, unless the theory of the Government be that the public at large in India are in sympathy with such writings? Are they prepared to say that? If they are, then they themselves stand self-condemned. Surely in a matter of this sort the best course for Government is to give publicity to such writings at once and to bring them to the bar of public opinion and expose them to the condemnation of the public. I for one cannot admit, and I do hope the Members on the Treasury Benches will not allege, that the public of India are so misguided and so perverse that they will not condemn writings of the character contemplated by the Bill. If so, if I am right that the public condemn such writings as we are condemning them in this House, then what justification is there not to hold a proper enquiry before you mulct a press by forfeiting security or even by asking for security? I submit there is no justification for leaving such a matter entirely to the discretion of the Local Government. I submit there is no justification for leaving it entirely to the Local Government's discretion, which must be exercised in the Council Chamber of the Government to which nobody can have access, a discretion which is exercised on materials which are never placed before a court of justice. This amendment is very reasonably framed and I do hope that the Members of Government will accept it. It may not have been properly worded. That is a matter for the draftsmen to put right. Let it be put right if necessary, but let the public be assured that a press will not be punished unless there has been a proper enquiry.

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer : I only want to say one or two words on this amendment. The Honourable the Home Member, in a vigorous speech in which he reminded us that the discussion in the House was below the level to which sometimes interesting debates in the House of Commons rise, stated that Honourable Members have not even attempted to suggest a remedy. To my Honourable friend from the Punjab, the Honourable Sardar Sant Singh, has fallen the opportunity to suggest what I consider to be a sort of judicial remedy to what might otherwise be executive indiscretion. Sir, the Honourable the Leader of the Independent Party to whom the Honourable the Home Member gave a just and appreciative tribute, in his vigorous speech, as an ornament of the Bench when he was living a life of glorious exile from Bengal in the Presidency to which I have the honour to belong, has justified that tribute in an equally vigorous speech supporting the Honourable Member from the Punjab and attempting to judicialise the procedure which we very much wish the Honourable the Home Member had accepted when Member after Member had urged more or less a similar course in the Select Committee. Sir, the defect of this Bill is this. It is more or less an executive measure, clothing the executive with authority, which responsible Members on this side of the House cannot agree to entrust them with—I have already in my previous speech stated my reasons why we could not entrust the executive with that authority. It is natural for the Honourable the Home Member to complain that the Opposition does not give the authority to the executive which he wants. It is even more natural for the Honourable the Home Member to speak as he spoke with the vigour with which he spoke. But it is equally natural for us to feel that, so long as the Government have no responsibility to us but are responsible to a country separated from us by more than half the world, we cannot give the executive the powers which he demands for them, and in the transitional stage it becomes very difficult to grant them. These are not normal times, and therefore it becomes extremely difficult for us to give the executive the power that they want, especially when we are carrying on an agitation to deprive the executive of the power that they possess at present. Therefore, the danger of misuse—men being human—becomes aggravated when you entrust them with unrestrained power. The Government, as I said, are irresponsible—I do not say they are irresponsible, but I do say they are irresponsible. In the Parliamentary sense they are not responsible to us and so long as this system continues, we would seek, as the Honourable the Leader of the Independent Party in his closely reasoned speech pointed out, we would seek to substitute the reign of discretion which this Bill introduces by the reign of law. Sir, especially the reign of discretion cannot be granted to the executive when the executive are not responsible to us. The reign of law prevails in a country where there is responsible government and the reign of law ought to prevail even more in a country where there is irresponsible government.

Mr. K. Ahmed : Irresponsible.

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer : I say “ irresponsible ” because “ irresponsible ” does not convey the meaning that I want to convey, namely responsibility in the Parliamentary sense. When sometimes my Honourable friend interrupts, he rises to heights which ungenerous Members who do not appreciate his humour would describe as irresponsible. (Laughter.) But when the Government brings forward a measure giving more power to the executive we are often reminded of the fact that the Government are irresponsible. I believe now my Honourable friend (Mr. Kabiruddin Ahmed) understands exactly what I mean.

Sir, I do not think I need add much more to these few words. I for my part do not resent some of the hard words that the Honourable the Home Member has uttered and I say this because there has been resentment among certain Members and they have given expression to their resentment on the floor of this House. But my unhappiness in this House has always been that it seldom rises to the heights of parliamentary ferocity which the House of Commons often shows. Sir, it has been my good fortune to witness some of those stormy debates, debates in which the Honourable the Leader of the House, Mr. Baldwin, was not sometimes permitted to speak. I have often felt that this House and its reports have not become sufficiently attractive to the country outside because it does not even keep up the Swarajist level of opposition. A country which is supposed to struggle for more power, a country which is supposed to resent the Press Act, ought to show better representation on these Benches than it has been pleased to show. The Honourable the Home Member was pleased to send to this House what I may describe. As a new pulse. He sent a new pulse beating through this House because in Gladstone's words it has been “ afflicted with the premonitory lethargy of death ”.

The Honourable Sir C. P. Ramaswami Aiyar : Mr. President, Sir, I do not propose to contribute to the parliamentary ferocity in respect of which an appeal was made by my Honourable friend. Rather would I prefer to bring to bear upon the discussion of this subject—a very important subject indeed—that calm and dispassionate consideration for which my Honourable friend, the Leader of the Independent Party, pleaded. Giving the calmest and the most dispassionate consideration to this particular clause, let us first remember the scope of this Bill as the Leader of the Independent Party asked us to remember it. The intent of this Bill is surely this : that at the present moment a particular emergent situation has arisen in regard to which a special procedure has been found necessary. I lay some emphasis upon that for this reason. This House in its previous vote has given its consideration to that emergency and has come to the deliberate decision that two or three elements are essential : firstly, speedy action, secondly, close scrutiny of that speedy action. The general purport of the Bill might therefore be said to be that, in order to combat the evil which may now be taken to be admitted, speedy and effective action is necessary. Secondly, in order that that action may be tested and properly and adequately tested, the fullest possible safeguards should be given to see to it that that action is neither hasty nor irrevocable, nor subject to those grave objections to which expression has been given in the various speeches. Now, let us analyse not only clause 3 but also clauses 23, 24, 25 and 26, because these clauses must be read in conjunction with the other clause. Before doing so, let me say at once that there can be no mistaking the object and the motive of my Honourable friend opposite who has moved these amendments. Frankly and confessedly the object of his amendments is to judicialise the initial procedure ; in other words, before security is asked for from a press, to go through the form of a criminal trial from first to last. In fact the expressions, used by my Honourable friend in the course of his speech, lead to the conclusion—and that is the inevitable conclusion—that the procedure in a summons case is to be adopted. That being so, the question arises at once is what has been attempted by the Bill adequate and sufficient for the ultimate purpose which my Honourable friend has in view, or is it not? Or is there going to be any irremediable evil produced by the various sections of the Bill taken together, remembering always that the primary and immediate object of the Bill is to secure speedy and effective action in a dangerous category of cases? Now, clause 3 undoubtedly clothes.....

Sardar Sant Singh : Clause 4 provides for that.

The Honourable Sir C. P. Ramaswami Aiyar : I am much indebted to my Honourable friend for reminding me of it, and I shall advert to that presently. Clause 3 provides that whenever it appears to the Local Government that any printing press, etc., is used for the purpose of printing or publishing any newspaper, book or other document containing certain things described in clause 4.....

That being so, the first thing that has to be considered by the Local Government is whether this particular publication offends against clause 4. It comes either to the conclusion that it does offend or it does not offend. If it does offend, it takes a certain course of action prescribed in sub-clause (3). That having been taken, what happens next? Clause 23 begins to operate at once and under clause 23 practically the High Court is converted into what, in the language of the British procedure, may be called a Nisi Prius Court or in the language of the Indian procedure may be termed a trial court—a trial court vested with this jurisdiction of analysing those publications and seeing whether those publications come within the mischief of clause 4 or not.

Turning to clause 23, what do we find? As soon as this order is made, the person against whom the order has been made can apply to the High Court, and then it must be noticed that under clause 23 (1) the High Court shall decide if the newspaper, book or other document did or did not contain any such words, etc. A definite modification has been made there—I do not propose to enter into it at this juncture—but a definite modification has been made there in Select Committee with a view to get rid of some of the apprehensions felt as to the procedure before the High Court. But that is not all. The Special Bench shall set aside the order if it appears to the Special Bench that the words, etc., were not of the nature described in section 4. And then in section 26 permission is given for the giving of evidence in regard to this matter both on the one side and on the other. Thus, therefore, the objections which were so strongly emphasised as to the abdication of judicial procedure or the elimination of judicial discretion or responsibility—those observations are really out of place. For the purpose of immediate and speedy action, clause 3 begins to operate, and that action is taken. The moment that action is taken, the full armoury of what may be called judicial proceedings is donned both on the one side and on the other; and a judicial procedure begins to operate with liberty to give evidence on both sides and with the further duty laid upon the High Court to consider not only whether the particular publications offended within the mischief of clause 4, but also taking into account any evidence that may be given on the one side or the other. Thus, therefore, the primary and fundamental objection of my Honourable friend that there has been, in his own language, a nullification of all the doctrines of criminal jurisprudence, I submit, does not prevail.

Sardar Sant Singh : May I call the attention of my Honourable friend to the difference? Regarding my amendment, I have asked for the deletion of this clause 23 which is the High Court clause. One point more. What I complain of is this, that after proceedings before the District Magistrate, the onus of proof as in ordinary criminal cases will be upon the prosecution, who will be called upon, while in the case of a complaint to the High Court, the onus will be shifted on the person of whom security has been required.....

Sir Hari Singh Gour : No, no.

The Honourable Sir C. P. Ramaswami Aiyar : I am indebted to my Honourable and learned friend, the Leader of the Opposition, for having pointed that out. It is perfectly true that under the old Press Act there was considerable doubt as to whether in all cases and necessarily the one party, namely, the party complaining of the order should be the party to begin as having the burden of proof laid upon him. In order to make it abundantly clear that the object of this Bill is to see to it that only those people are hit who have offended against clause 4 and that nobody is put under any disadvantage, it will be noticed by my Honourable friend, if he turns to clause 23, that the High Court shall decide if the newspaper, etc., did or did not contain any words, etc. Therefore, the difficulty or the embarrassment of a definite throwing of the burden or onus of proof on the one party is really eliminated in that manner. It will depend upon the High Court, looking at the document. There may be some documents which on the face of them lay the proof on one party; here may be some which on the face of them lay the burden on the other: we have left it open therefore under clause 23.

In regard to the earlier portions of the interjections made by my Honourable friend, what I have got to say is this. I do not for a moment deny that my Honourable friend, if his object is to be attained, has completely altered and modified the scope and aim of this Bill. He has not only made clause 3 judicial, but has followed it up in other clauses so as to make it clear that the judicial procedure begins and ends completely judicially. My submission to this Honourable House is that from the point of view of speedy administration in the initial stages, it has been found necessary, and indeed no other course would eliminate the inevitable delays of a summons case dragging its weary length as is contemplated in this amendment,—in the initial stages it is undoubtedly action savouring of an executive character which is found necessary, but in order to rob that executive action of all those features which are objected to by the other side, we have given the fullest possible rights to the High Court which is by the combined operation of the various sections really converted into a trial court. I submit, therefore, that you get the speediness and the efficacy of the executive action, combined with all the safeguards of a judicial trial by the combined effect of the clauses to which I have referred. I submit, therefore, that this amendment is really inappropriate to the scope and the aim of this Bill.

Mr. S. C. Mitra : Mr. President, I should like to ask only one question, and my argument will be based mainly on that. In sub-clause (3) in line 11, I find the word "may". It is stated there, "That the Local Government may by notice in writing" and so forth. Why has the word "may" been used here? I shall be obliged if the Honourable the Home Member or anybody else on the Government side will explain this point.

[Mr. S. C. Mitra.]

Why do they make it optional for the Government to give notice in writing for deposit or forfeiture ?

The Honourable Sir C. P. Ramaswamy Aiyar : If I may interrupt my Honourable friend, I think he is under a misapprehension. Notice in writing is not optional. When the Local Government has to proceed, it may proceed in a particular manner after giving notice in writing. I may assure my Honourable friend that by no construction could it be said that under clause 3 the Local Government may take certain action without any notice whatsoever.

Mr. S. C. Mitra : In that case, Sir, what is the objection on the Government side to substitute the word "shall" for the word "may" ? Why do you give option in demanding security or forfeiting it. You make it binding on the Local Government to give notice with reasons thereof. If you use the word "may", they may give notice, but they may not give the reasons ; it will not be binding on them.

The Honourable Sir C. P. Ramaswamy Aiyar : On calmer reflection, I am sure my Honourable friend will realise that the substitution of the word "shall" would really be more prejudicial to the cause which he has at heart. Let me read the sentence as it would run after modifying it according to his ideas. "Whenever it appears to the Local Government, etc., the Local Government shall ask him to deposit....." Does he want to make it obligatory upon the Local Government in every case to do that ? What it says is, it may do so, but when it does so, it must be by notice in writing. My Honourable friend may take it from me, and I think eminent jurists who are present in this House will agree with me in what I say.

Mr. S. C. Mitra : May I take it then that it is obligatory on the part of the Government to give notice in writing ?

The Honourable Sir C. P. Ramaswamy Aiyar : Yes, that is what I have been endeavouring to point out.

Mr. S. C. Mitra : Sir, if by construction it is clear that it is obligatory on the part of the Government to give notice in writing and the reasons thereof, then I accept it.

Mr. President : The question is :

"That in sub-clause (3) of clause 3 for the words 'Local Government' occurring in the first line, the words 'District Magistrate having jurisdiction in the place where the press is situated' be substituted."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. S. C. Mitra : I move :

"That in sub-clause (3) of clause 3 the words 'less than five hundred or' be omitted."

My argument is why do you restrict the discretion of the Magistrate ? Are you suspicious even of your own Magistrates ? You put a maximum that the amount should not go to more than a particular amount. But I do not understand why you should say that it should not be less than Rs. 500. I hope that Government will see their way to accepting this amendment. Sir, I move.

The Honourable Sir James Crerar : I must point out to the Honourable Member that the particular portion of the sub-clause to which he refers deals with a case in which the press has already published offending matter. I think in those circumstances that it is perfectly reasonable to direct the Magistrate to demand a security not less than the amount mentioned in the sub-clause.

Mr. President : The question is :

“ That in sub-clause (3) of clause 3 the words ‘ less than five hundred or ’ be omitted.”

The motion was negatived.

Mr. President : The question is :

“ That clause 3 stand part of the Bill.”

The motion was adopted.

Clause 3 was added to the Bill.

Mr. President : The question is :

“ That clause 4 stand part of the Bill.”

Mr. S. C. Mitra : I move :

“ That in sub-clause (1) (a) of clause 4 the words ‘ or tend to incite to or to encourage ’ be omitted.”

My main ground is that the scope of this clause is too wide, and it is not necessary for the purposes for which this Bill has been introduced. I think it is sufficient if you have the words “ incite to or encourage ”, and any tendency to incitement to or encouragement of the commission of any offence should be omitted from the scope of this clause, because if there is no effect, the mere tendency should not be punished. So I should like to restrict this Bill only to incitements or encouragements and not to a mere tendency to incite or encourage, the main point to be kept in view being that intention should be the criterion and not mere tendency. Sir, I move.

The Honourable Sir C. P. Ramaswami Aiyar : Having regard to the object of the Bill, I think it will be realised that if a writer attempts to provoke that effect, that must come within the scope of the Bill. In these circumstances, I submit that the words “ tend to incite to or to encourage ” are necessary.

Sardar Sant Singh : I did not move my amendment No. 36 for the simple reason, that I thought that my object would be served by the amendment of my friend, Mr. Mitra. My submission is that, power having been given to the executive, it is absolutely necessary that we should restrict that power as much as possible. The words, “ Or tend to incite to or to encourage ” are so wide that they can embrace anything in the world. If the power is given to the executive whose actions we cannot control, in that case before we can come to the rescue, some injury may have been done to the person against whom the action has been taken. Therefore, it is absolutely necessary that the wording of the law should be restricted to its narrowest limit. A particular paper which in the opinion of the executive offends against the law may find itself in the grip of the executive and it may not be able to move the High Court to get redress. At the same time the object of the Bill has been stated to be that it would be restricted in its operation against those who incite to or encourage acts of assassination or murder. Now, there may be cases wherein a comment may be made by an honest editor in a bonâ fide manner, and that comment may go against certain actions of the executive in punishing the man who has incited to murder : I will illustrate my point thus. Suppose the executive has abused the legal power vested in their hands and a certain young man tries to take the law in to his own hands and he commits an act of violence against that particular person. It should be absolutely open to the Press to comment upon the high-handedness of the executive officer as well as condemn the action of the young man who has taken the law in to his own hands. If the writer tries to condemn the action of the executive officer, it may be considered as inciting to or encouraging murder. In order to provide against such a contingency, my submission is that the words of this clause should be restricted to the narrowest limit.

Mr. S. G. Jog (Berar Representative) : We are practically at the rag end of the day, and I am quite aware that it will be useless on my part to tax your patience any longer. It will not serve any useful purpose to discuss the provisions of this Bill, which has been introduced with a view to muzzle and gag the Press. Whatever the ostensible object of the provisions of the Bill may be, the real object is to discourage newspapers. However, we have passed that stage now, and although the Bill now before the House is in a much diluted form, still its sting or its poison remains in a virulent form, and even a small dose of it is sufficient to kill the growth, or the healthy growth, of newspapers. When the Bill was introduced, the main attack against the Bill was about its vagueness and its wideness. There is a certain school of thought which believes that there should be some restriction on the liberty of the Press which incites to murder and violence. What the newspapers are really afraid of is the executive action of the Government. It is all right when we sit here and pass this law. Ultimately it will have to go to the executive and there in many cases it will be abused. I am surprised at the statement made by the Home Member yesterday and at his stiff and stubborn attitude and certain allegations made by him, and I think it is my duty to resent those remarks. Yesterday evening, he said that every law is likely to be abused and if no law is to be passed, then it is better that this Assembly should be abolished. We have not come here to hear this lecture. We know our responsibility very well. We know what legislative bodies have got to do. We owe our duty to our constituencies and to the Press of India, and it is our duty to oppose measures which are likely to take away the liberty of the Press. As I have already said, one of the objects of attack on the Bill was its vagueness and its wideness. Unrestricted power should not be given to the executive, and although the provisions of the law should be strict, very little discretion should be left to the executive. With this object in view, I think that the retention of the words, “ tend to incite to or encourage ” is likely to lead to abuse. I think I shall be justified if I give out a secret. I am told that there was some controversy over the words “ tend to incite or encourage ”. Afterwards a suggestion was made that the proper words should be “ have the effect ”, which will convey the proper meaning. I do not know how the words “ tend to incite to or encourage ” came to be subsequently introduced. Sir, I support the amendment that these words should be dropped.

The Honourable Sir James Crerar : I do not think it is necessary for me to add anything material after what my Honourable colleague, the Law Member, has said on this subject to explain the necessity for the words ‘ tend to incite to or encourage ’. I merely wish to explain for the information of the House what happened in the Select Committee, as it was referred to by the learned gentleman from the Central Provinces and Berar. The particular words against which he has directed criticism were accepted on behalf of Government during the examination in Select Committee. The suggestion he referred to was from one of the Members dissenting and it was not the original proposition of Government. I do not wish to add anything more.

Mr. President : The question is :

“ That in sub-clause (1) (a) of clause 4 the words ‘ or tend to incite to or to encourage ’ be omitted.”

The motion was negatived.

Mr. S. C. Mitra : I beg to move :

“ That in sub-clause (1) (a) of clause 4 the words ‘ or any cognizable offence involving violence ’ be omitted.”

My object in moving this amendment is to restrict the very very wide scope of this clause 4. There are any number of punishable offences, and I think the real intention of this law is to restrict this Bill to acts of incitement to murder or abetment to murder. That will serve the purpose of the Government. Even the words under sections 325, 326 come under cognisable offences involving violence. I move that these words be omitted.

Mr. D. K. Lahiri Chaudhury (Bengal : Landholders) : Sir, I seldom stand on my legs on the floor of the House, and at the end of the day I do not want to prolong the debate ; but at the same time I feel it my duty to record a word of protest against the action which is being taken in this House in enacting this Bill, and I support the amendment which has been moved by my Honourable friend, Mr. S. C. Mitra. (Mr. K. Ahmed made an interruption which was inaudible.) My friend, Mr. K. Ahmed, seems impatient ; I think he ought to be a little bit patient. Sir, it is only a very legitimate demand which has been put forward by my friend, Mr. Mitra, that in sub-clause (1) (a) of clause 4 the words ‘ or any cognisable offence involving violence ’ be omitted. Sir, the interpretation actually placed in practice on the word ‘ violence ’ is of such wide scope—of which I may say we had such practical experience during the last non-violent movement, and the word was interpreted in such a way that really we are afraid of putting this word on a newspaper which I had from Bengal, the Amrita Bazar Patrika (Mr. K. Ahmed : “ Oh, oh ! ”), I will do so, Members of the House are aware of the fact that during the recent Hijli incident the police were guilty of barbarous action in shooting down non-violent detenus. Now, Sir, if this Bill is passed, then under it the mere quoting of an extract will amount to an incitement to violence. The extract runs, with the heading, “ A Touching Scene. Wife Breaks Down at the sight of Dead Husband ” :

“ It was a pathetic scene to witness when the body of Santosh Mitter was placed in front of his house in Akur Dutt Lane. His young widow came near the body, saw the face of her beloved husband for 2 or 3 minutes with her eyes dried of tears, and declared at the top of her voice, addressing her dead husband,—

‘ you are gone. But I am left behind to fulfil the mission cherished by you up to the last moment of your life.’

With these words, she broke down and was carried away inside the house. The old parents of the deceased were so much overpowered that, at the sight of their beloved son, they fainted and were removed from the place. Floral wreaths were then placed on the bier by other members of the house. Nobody could help shedding tears at the sight of this pathetic scene. The bier was then taken away from the place.”

Sir, this Bill has been criticized by the Press on the legitimate ground that, with the passage of this Bill, anything, even the quotation of the foregoing, will be taken as an incitement to violence. The word “ violence ” is of such wide scope that, really speaking, in this part of the House, every Member feels that it signifies something which really does not represent the real attitude of the Honourable the Home Member. With these remarks, Sir, I whole-heartedly support the amendment which has been moved by my Honourable friend, Mr. Mitra.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad : Sir, I also support the amendment, since the words in question render the scope of this Bill much too wide. We agreed to the words, “ incite to or encourage or to tend to incite or to encourage the commission of any offence of murder ”, and I think that is quite sufficient to meet the purposes for which this Bill is pressed. I should like to have one or two definite cases which are not covered by the first part of this paragraph and for which it is necessary to make the addition of the words, “ or any cognizable offence involving violence ”. I should like the Home Member or the Law Member to give us one or two definite illustrations of what may be called terrorist activities and which are not covered by the first part of this clause.

The Honourable Sir James Crerar : Sir, I think I may very briefly explain to the House the necessity for these words. In the first place, it would not meet the full scope of the Bill to deal solely with incitements to or encouragement of murder. Terrorist crime resorts to many other forms of violence than murder,—for example, arson, or causing grievous hurt. The threat, or incitement, to break every bone of some man's body, is a form of violence which obviously it is necessary to prevent. But the question, I may say, was very fully considered in Select Committee. Objection was urged that comparatively slight forms of violence, such as common assault and so forth, might conceivably come within the mischief of the Act. Therefore, the phrase “ cognizable crimes of violence ” was adopted in order to secure that such comparatively trivial offences were excluded. But as regards the necessity of providing for incitements to cognizable crimes of violence, I have no manner of doubt, that that is a very essential purpose of the Bill.

Mr. President : The question is :

“ That in sub-clause (1) (a) of clause 4 the words ‘ or any cognizable offence involving violence ’ be omitted.”

The motion was negatived.

Mr. President : The House is now adjourned to 11 O'clock to-morrow.

The Assembly then adjourned till Eleven of the Clock on Friday, the 2nd October, 1931.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

Friday, 2nd October, 1931.

The Assembly met in the Assembly Chamber at Eleven of the Clock, Mr. President in the Chair.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

SELECTION GRADE POSTS IN THE SIMLA GENERAL POST OFFICE.

1092. Kunwar Hajee Ismail Ali Khan (on behalf of Shaikh Fazal Haq Piracha) : (a) Is it a fact that there are eight posts of selection grade of 160—250 in the Simla General Post Office ?

(b) Is it a fact that out of the eight posts seven are held by Hindus and one by a Christian Sub-Post Mistress ?

(c) In view of the Muslims constituting a majority in population in the Punjab and North-West Frontier Circle, are Government prepared to order that at least half of the selection grade appointments should be held by Muslims in the Simla General Post Office ?

Sir Hubert Sams : (a) There are nine, including the town sub-post offices.

(b) Of the nine, one is held by a Muslim, one by a Christian and the remainder by Hindus.

(c) The composition of the selection grade cadre, which is a Circle one, depends on the fitness for promotion to that grade and cannot be regulated on a communal basis. Postings also are not made on communal considerations.

APPOINTMENT OF MUSLIMS IN THE SIMLA GENERAL POST OFFICE.

1093. Kunwar Hajee Ismail Ali Khan (on behalf of Shaikh Fazal Haq Piracha) : (a) Is it a fact that both the Town Inspectors in the Simla General Post Office are Hindus ?

(b) Is it a fact that the Head Clerk (Correspondence) and his six assistants in the Correspondence Branch, Simla, are all Hindus ?

(c) Is it a fact that the accountant of the Simla General Post Office is a Hindu ?

(d) Is it a fact that out of the four accounts clerks three are Hindus and only one is a Muslim ?

(e) Are Government prepared to order that at least half of the staff in the above cadres should be Muslims ?

Sir Hubert Sams : (a) Yes, but one of them is under orders of transfer and a Muslim is coming in his place.

(b) The Head Clerk is a Hindu. Two of his assistants are not Hindus.

(c) Yes, he being the most senior official in the office who has passed the Post Office Accountants' examination.

(d) Yes. They are employed in the Accounts Branch because they have passed the Post Office Accountants' examination.

(e) Postings are not made on communal considerations.

APPOINTMENT OF MUSLIMS IN THE SIMLA GENERAL POST OFFICE.

1094. *Kunwar Hajee Ismail Ali Khan (on behalf of Shaikh Fazal Haq Piracha) : (a) Will Government be pleased to state the period for which the posts of Accountant and Head Clerk (Correspondence) in the Simla General Post Office have been held by Hindus during the last 10 years ?

(b) Are Government prepared to order that the posts of Accountant and Head Clerk (Correspondence) should be held by Muslims and Hindus, alternatively, every three years ?

Sir Hubert Sams : (a) Throughout the last ten years.

(b) Postings are not made on communal consideration.

APPOINTMENT OF MUSLIMS IN THE SIMLA GENERAL POST OFFICE.

Appointment.	Hindu.	Muslim.	Total.
Clerks ..	69	7	76
Reserve clerks ..	14	1	15
Post-men ..	84	1	85
Officials of 45—85 grade ..	8	—	8
Inferior servants ..	80	3	83
Season servants ..	38	—	38
Runners ..	79	1	80
Sub-postmasters of time-scale ..	10	1	11
Grand total ..	382	14	396

(b) Will Government be pleased to state reasons for the above negligible proportion of the Muslim staff in the Simla General Post Office ?

(c) Is it a fact that the one Muslim postman out of 85 was confirmed after his having worked as a candidate for over ten years ?

(d) Is it a fact that the appointment of one Muslim postman is due to the fact that a Muslim was required to deliver letters in the Beef Market where no Hindu would go ?

(e) Are Government prepared to order that the posts referred to above should be filled up in rotation for three years by Muslims and Hindus ?

Sir Hubert Sams : (a) Information received from the Postmaster General shows that the composition is not correct, the actual totals of the categories of staff specified by the Honourable Member under the control of the Postmaster, Simla, being 305 and not 382 Hindus, 25 and not 14 Muslims, eight Sikhs and six others.

(b) The comparatively small number of Muslims is attributed to the difficulty experienced in the past in obtaining suitable candidates of that community in this place. The matter is receiving the attention of the Postmaster General.

(c) and (d). No. He was confirmed within a year of his joining the Department. Another Muslim has since been recruited to act as a postman and he will also be confirmed when his turn comes.

(e) No, postings are not made on communal considerations.

Sir Muhammad Yakub : Will the Honourable Member be prepared to take qualified Muslim candidates who come forward ?

Sir Hubert Sams : Yes, Sir.

NOMINATION FOR SELECTION GRADE OF CANDIDATES IN THE DELHI GENERAL POST OFFICE.

1096. *Kunwar Hajee Ismail Ali Khan (on behalf of Shaikh Fazal Haq Piracha) : (a) Has the attention of Government been drawn to an editorial note on pages 2 and 3 of the Postal Advocate, Delhi, September, 1931 issue ?

(b) Is it a fact that Rai Sahib Iqbal Nath, acting Postmaster, Delhi, nominated three Hindus, including one matriculate, for the selection grade examination ignoring several Muslim undergraduates and graduates including one Muslim M.A. fulfilling the conditions of the examination ?

(c) Is it a fact that some Muslims protested against the unjustified nomination of Hindus to the Postmaster General, Lahore ?

(d) Are Government prepared to inquire into the full facts of the cases and to call for fresh nominations of deserving officials of the Delhi General Post Office after cancelling the previous nominations ?

Sir Hubert Sams : (a) Government have seen the article.

(b), (c) and (d). Government have no information. The matter is within the competence of the Postmaster General.

APPOINTMENT CLERK IN THE DELHI GENERAL POST OFFICE.

1097. *Kunwar Hajee Ismail Ali Khan (on behalf of Shaikh Fazal Haq Piracha) : (a) Is it a fact that the post of Appointment Clerk of the Delhi General Post Office was held by Hindus for 18 years ?

(b) Is it a fact that according to recent orders the Appointment Clerk will in future be borne on the establishment of the Correspondence Branch instead of the Accounts Branch ?

(c) Is it a fact that a Muslim was entrusted with the duties of Appointment Clerk of the Delhi General Post Office only a couple of months ago ?

(d) Is it a fact that Rai Sahib Iqbal Nath tried to retransfer these duties to a Hindu in the Correspondence Section instead of transferring the present Muslim incumbent of the post to that section ?

(e) Are Government prepared to order that the charge of the Appointment Branch in the Delhi General Post Office is held by Muslims and non-Muslims in rotation for every three years ?

Sir Hubert Sams : (a), (c) and (d). Government have no information. The matter is within the competence of the Postmaster General, to whom a copy of these parts of the question is being sent.

(b) The orders are that appointment work should be done in the correspondence section of a post office.

(e) Government admit no claim to the charge of a branch on communal grounds and cannot undertake to make the order proposed by the Honourable Member.

ALLEGATIONS OF COMMUNAL BIAS IN THE BALUCHISTAN POSTAL DIVISION.

1098. Kunwar Hajee Ismail Ali Khan (on behalf of Shaikh Fazal Haq Piracha) : (a) Has the attention of Government been drawn to an article entitled "Hindu Rajia in the Postal Department of Baluchistan" published on page 5 of September, 1931 issue of the Postal Advocate, Delhi ?

(b) Is it a fact that several Muslim applicants for leave were asked to pay the travelling allowance of their substitutes owing to stringency of funds in 1930, whereas several Hindu officials were granted leave in the same year at Government expense ?

(c) Is it a fact that the Hindu officials named in para. 3 of the said article have either never served at any of the out-posts or not completed their term, whereas the rules were strictly enforced in the case of Muslims ?

(d) Is it a fact that since the assumption of charge of the Baluchistan Division by Mr. Giyan Dave and his Hindu Head Clerk not a single Muslim has been made permanent ?

(e) Are Government prepared to inquire into the allegations of communal bias against Mr. Giyan Dave, as contained in the said article and take suitable action in the matter ?

Sir Hubert Sams : (a) Government have seen the article.

(b), (c) and (d). Government have no information. If any person connected with the Department has a grievance, it is open to him to represent it through the proper official channel.

(e) Government will take cognisance of representations made through the prescribed channel.

COMMUNAL COMPOSITION OF POSTAL STAFF IN CERTAIN POST OFFICES.

1099. Kunwar Hajee Ismail Ali Khan (on behalf of Shaikh Fazal Haq Piracha) : (a) Has the attention of Government been drawn to the tables of communal composition of postal staff in the Karachi, Delhi and Calcutta General Post Offices and in the Bengal Circle as published in the September, 1931 issue of the Postal Advocate, Delhi ?

(b) Will Government be pleased to state whether the figures given therein are correct, and, if not, will Government please state the correct figures ?

(c) What steps do Government contemplate to take to avoid a preponderance of non-Muslims in the said offices and Circle ?

Sir Hubert Sams : (a) Government have seen the tables.

(b) Government have no information.

(c) Orders are in force for the adjustment of communal inequalities in new recruitment. Promotions and postings are not made on communal considerations.

PAUCITY OF MUSLIMS IN GOVERNMENT SERVICES IN THE NORTH-WEST FRONTIER PROVINCE.

1100. Kunwar Hajee Ismail Ali Khan (on behalf of Shaikh Fazal Haq Piracha) : (a) Is it a fact that the Muslim Association of Peshawar Cantonment has recently brought to the notice of the Private Secretary to H. E. the Viceroy, the fact of Muslim paucity in the Government services in the North-West Frontier Province ?

(b) If the reply to the above is in the affirmative, will Government be pleased to state the action, if any, taken on the said representation and state the gist of the reply sent to the President of that Association ?

Mr. E. B. Howell : (a) The representation to which the Honourable Member is presumably referring related to the more general question of the employment of educated Muslims in Government service in the Punjab and North-West Frontier Province.

(b) It was transferred to the appropriate Department of the Government of India for disposal.

PREPONDERANCE OF HINDUS IN APPOINTMENTS IN THE NORTH-WEST FRONTIER PROVINCE, SIND AND BALUCHISTAN.

1101. Kunwar Hajee Ismail Ali Khan (on behalf of Shaikh Fazal Haq Piracha) : (a) Will Government be pleased to state the correct interpretation of the term minority community in its application to provinces like the North-West Frontier Province and Sind and Baluchistan as promised by the Honourable Sir James Crerar in reply to a question by Sir Sahibzada Abdul Qaiyum ?

(b) Are Government aware that the present procedure of reservation of every third vacancy for all the minority communities, including the Muslims, has not proved effective in checking the predominance of the Hindu community ?

(c) Are Government prepared to order that until such time as a certain percentage of a certain community is not reached, recruitment of members of the other communities which preponderate should be stopped ?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar : (a) and (b). I would refer the Honourable Member to the reply given on the 28th September, 1931, to Maulvi Sayyid Murtuza Saheb Bahadur's starred question No. 1038.

(c) No.

APPOINTMENT OF MUSLIMS IN THE PESHAWAR GENERAL POST OFFICE.

1102. Kunwar Hajee Ismail Ali Khan (on behalf of Shaikh Fazal Haq Piracha) : (a) Will Government be pleased to state the periods for which the posts of Accountant and Head Clerk (Correspondence) have been held by Hindus during the last six years in the Peshawar General Post Office ?

(b) Will Government be pleased to state whether the Deputy Postmaster and all the Assistant Postmasters in the Peshawar General Post Office are Hindus ?

(c) Is it a fact that the Sub-Postmaster, Peshawar City Post Office, the only selection grade office in the town, is held by a Hindu ?

(d) Is it a fact that the Muslims constitute 95 per cent. of the population of the North-West Frontier Province ?

(e) Is it a fact that the Town Inspector of Peshawar City Post Offices is a Hindu ?

(f) Are Government prepared to keep at least two-thirds of the important posts in Peshawar General Post Office to be filled up by Muslims ?

Sir Hubert Sams : (a), (b), (c) and (e). Government have not the information and do not propose to call for it for the reason stated in the reply to the following parts of the question.

(d) and (f). Even if the facts are as stated by the Honourable Member, Government cannot undertake to act as proposed by him, because postings are not made on the basis of communal representation.

APPOINTMENT OF MUSLIMS IN THE ACCOUNTS BRANCHES OF CERTAIN POST OFFICES.

1103. Kunwar Hajee Ismail Ali Khan (on behalf of Shaikh Fazal Haq Piracha) : (a) Will Government be pleased to state separately the total clerical strength of the Accounts Branch of Lahore and Amritsar General Post Offices ?

(b) Will Government be pleased to state separately the number of Muslim clerks working in the Lahore and Amritsar General Post Offices in the Accounts Departments ?

(c) Will Government be pleased to state separately the periods for which the posts of Accountants have been held by Hindus in the Lahore, Amritsar, Ambala, Rawalpindi and Simla General Post Offices ?

(d) Are Government prepared to order that at least half of the posts of clerks in the Accounts Branches of the above offices should be filled up by the Muslims to learn accounts work enabling them to qualify for the accounts examination ?

Sir Hubert Sams : (a) to (c). Government have no information.

(d) The matter is within the competence of the Postmaster General, Punjab and North-West Frontier to whom a copy of the question is being sent. It may be mentioned, however, that postings and transfers are made according to the exigencies of the service and not on communal considerations.

REPLACEMENT OF HINDUS BY MUSLIMS IN CERTAIN APPOINTMENTS IN THE RAILWAY MAIL SERVICE, DELHI.

1104. Kunwar Hajee Ismail Ali Khan (on behalf of Shaikh Fazal Haq Piracha) : (a) Is it a fact that according to the rules, an official of the selection grade should not hold charge of a particular post or office for more than three years ?

(b) Will Government be pleased to state the periods for which the present Head Clerk and the Head Record Clerk of the office of the Superintendent, R. M. S., 'D' Division, Delhi, have held charge of their present posts and whether their transfer is overdue ?

(c) Is it a fact that the present Head Clerk of the office of the Superintendent, R. M. S., 'D' Division, Delhi, has been in the same office for over ten years ?

(d) Will Government be pleased to state separately the periods for which the posts of (i) Head Clerk, (ii) Head Record Clerk of the office of the R. M. S., 'D' Division, Delhi, have been held by Hindus during the last six years ?

(e) Are Government prepared to order transfer of the existing incumbents of the posts, replacing them by Muslims for a like period ?

Sir Hubert Sams : (a) No, the rule is that certain specified posts of Head Clerks should not be occupied by the same official continuously for more than three years at a time.

(b), (c) and (d). Government have no information. A copy of these parts of the question is being sent to the Postmaster General, Punjab and North-West Frontier.

(e) Whatever the facts may be and whatever action may be taken by the Postmaster General under the rules, postings are not made on the basis of communal representation.

APPOINTMENT OF MUSLIMS TO THE OFFICE OF THE DEPUTY ACCOUNTANT GENERAL, POSTS AND TELEGRAPHS, DELHI.

1105. Kunwar Hajee Ismail Ali Khan (on behalf of Shaikh Fazal Haq Piracha) : (a) Will Government be pleased to state the communal composition of the undermentioned staff in the office of the Deputy Accountant-General, Posts and Telegraphs, Delhi ?—

(i) Superintendents, (ii) accountants, (iii) First Division clerks, (iv) Second Division clerks, (v) inferior servants.

(b) Will Government be pleased to state the communal composition of the above cadres of the staff entertained in the office of Deputy Accountant General, Posts and Telegraphs, Delhi, during the last three years ?

(c) Will Government be pleased to state the communal composition of the above cadres of the staff employed as temporary establishment in the office of the Deputy Accountant General, Posts and Telegraphs, Delhi ?

(d) Are Government prepared to order the increased entertainment of Muslims in the office of the Deputy Accountant General, Posts and Telegraphs, Delhi, to avoid preponderance of any one class or community ?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster : Enquiry is being made and a reply will be sent to the Honourable Member in due course.

DEFALCATION OF EXCESS FARE MONEY ON THE EAST INDIAN RAILWAY.

1106. Kunwar Hajee Ismail Ali Khan (on behalf of Shaikh Fazal Haq Piracha) : (a) Will Government be pleased to state if it is a fact that one Mr. Duff, an employee of the Crew Department of the East Indian Railway was convicted in Howrah Division for a defalcation of Rs. 1,500 of excess fare money ?

(b) Is it true that he was an ex-convict before being employed in the Crew Department ?

(c) During how many days was this amount recovered by him ?

(d) Who was held responsible for slack supervision in failing to see that he regularly deposited the money and what punishment was accorded to him ?

(e) How was this money accounted for ?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons : With your permission, Sir, I propose to reply to questions Nos. 1106, 1107, 1108 and 1109 together. They are the first intimation that the Railway Board have received of certain allegations against employees in the recently abolished crew system. I will certainly have enquiries made as to the truth of these allegations if the Honourable Member can give me an assurance that facts have come to his notice suggesting that there may be some truth in them. I should add that in all cases any action to be taken will apparently be within the competence of the Agent without reference to the Railway Board.

CONVICTION FOR CHEATING OF A CLERK IN THE CREW DEPARTMENT, EAST INDIAN RAILWAY, CALCUTTA.

†1107. Kunwar Hajee Ismail Ali Khan (on behalf of Shaikh Fazal Haq Piracha) : (a) Will Government be pleased to state if it is a fact that one Kidar Nath Day was convicted by the Chief Presidency Magistrate, Calcutta, for cheating certain candidates on promise to secure appointments for them in the Crew Department ?

(b) Is it a fact that he was a clerk in the Crew Department attached to the Head Office, Calcutta ?

(c) Is it a fact that he granted pro-notes for the money thus recovered from the candidates ?

(d) When was he arrested ?

(e) When was he convicted ?

(f) When was he suspended ?

(g) When was he dismissed ?

(h) Is it a fact that the Magistrate in his judgment remarked that he had been the tool of larger fry ?

(i) Is it a fact that the Magistrate sent certain papers along with his judgment to the Agent, East Indian Railway, for information ?

(j) Will Government please lay on table a copy of those papers ?

(k) Did Government take steps to find out the larger fry ?

(l) Who were found connected therewith and what punishment was accorded ?

SALE AND DETECTION OF USED RAILWAY TICKETS AT GAYA AND PATNA.

†1108. Kunwar Hajee Ismail Ali Khan (on behalf of Shaikh Fazal Haq Piracha) : (a) Will Government please state if it is a fact that a few of the Railway employees were convicted at Gaya and Patna for re-selling used tickets on the area where the Crew system was under operation ?

†For answer to this question, see answer to question No. 1106.

(b) Is it a fact that these cases were detected by the staff not belonging to the Crew Department, i.e., Crew recruits, but by the staff deputed by the Chief Commercial Manager of the East Indian Railway ?

ALLEGATIONS AGAINST CERTAIN INSPECTORS IN THE CREW DEPARTMENT AT LUCKNOW.

†1109. Kunwar Hajee Ismail Ali Khan (on behalf of Shaikh Fazal Haq Piracha) : (a) Will Government please state if it is true that Messrs. Sams and Homes, Inspectors of the Crew Department, Lucknow, were convicted for travelling in a ladies' compartment while on duty ?

(b) Were they discharged for this conviction ? If not, why not ?

(c) Are they still in service on the East Indian Railway ; if so, in what capacity ?

(d) Is it true that one Inspector of the Crew Department was found under the influence of liquor while on duty on Howrah station and arrested by the Railway Police ?

PREVENTION BY CREW STAFF OF PASSENGERS FROM BOARDING TRAINS.

1110. Kunwar Hajee Ismail Ali Khan (on behalf of Shaikh Fazal Haq Piracha) : (a) Will Government be pleased to state if it was the primary function of the Crew not to allow a person to board the train without a ticket and on this fundamental principle this system was started on the East Indian Railway ?

(b) Will Government please state if, in view of the above fundamental principle, it was not the function of the Crew staff to collect excess fare but to divert the passengers to the booking offices ?

(c) Will Government please state if entry into a compartment without a ticket is an offence ?

(d) Will Government please state if any railway servant is empowered under the Indian Railway Act to prevent a person from boarding the train without a ticket ?

(e) Under what law was this power invested in the Crew ?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons : (a) and (b). Yes.

(c) to (e). I would refer the Honourable Member to Section 68 of the Indian Railways Act, 1890 which reads as follows :—

“ No person shall, without the permission of a railway servant, enter any carriage on a railway for the purpose of travelling therein as a passenger unless he has with him a proper pass or ticket.”

EMPLOYMENT OF CREW STAFF ON OTHER THAN THEIR LEGITIMATE DUTIES.

1111. Kunwar Hajee Ismail Ali Khan (on behalf of Shaikh Fazal Haq Piracha) : (a) Will Government please state if it is true that Crew staff was often utilised in other than their legitimate duties such as guards, office clerks, etc., etc. ?

†For answer to this question, see answer to question No. 1106.

(b) Will Government please state if it is true that a circular was issued by the Chief Operating Superintendent, East Indian Railway, prohibiting this; if so, when?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons : (a) In times of pressure, staff ordinarily employed on certain duties are utilised elsewhere where the need for their services is considered to be greater, but Government have no information of the extent to which the crew staff were utilised, if at all, for other than their ordinary duties.

(b) Government have no information.

CONTROL OF TRAVELLING TICKET EXAMINERS AND CREW STAFF ON THE EAST INDIAN RAILWAY.

1112. Kunwar Hajee Ismail Ali Khan (on behalf of Shaikh Fazal Haq Piracha) : (a) Will Government please state clearly on what grounds the control of the Travelling Ticket Examiners of Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway was transferred from Operating to Accounts Department in 1909 or so?

(b) Will Government please state if the Public Accounts Committee decided in 1929 to transfer the control of the Crew system from Operating to Accounts Department and why it was not acted up to on the East Indian Railway?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons : (a) No records are traceable in the office of the Railway Board bearing on the question of the control of the Travelling Ticket Examiners on the old Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway system. I am unable, therefore, to give the information required by the Honourable Member.

(b) The Public Accounts Committee in their report on the accounts for 1927-28, merely suggested that the Railway Board should consider whether it would not be more appropriate to place the crew system under the control of the Accounts Department instead of under the Traffic Department. The latter part of the question does not, therefore, arise.

CONTROL OF TRAVELLING TICKET EXAMINERS AND CREW STAFF ON THE EAST INDIAN RAILWAY.

1113. Kunwar Hajee Ismail Ali Khan (on behalf of Shaikh Fazal Haq Piracha) : (a) Will Government please state why the control of the Travelling Ticket Examiners has been kept now under the Operating Department of the East Indian Railway?

(b) Will Government please state why the ticket checking department, especially the Travelling Ticket Examiners, responsible for detection of illicit travelling are not kept under an independent officer like the Watch and Ward and Government Railway Police Departments?

(c) On what grounds has the Accounts control not been thought proper?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons : (a) to (c). I would refer the Honourable Member to paragraphs 59 to 68 of the report dated 5th August, 1930 of the Committee appointed to enquire into the working of the crew system of checking and collecting tickets on the East Indian Railway, a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

TICKET CHECKING ON THE EAST INDIAN RAILWAY.

1114. Shaikh Fazal Haq Piracha : (a) Will Government be pleased to state if it is true that Messrs. Moody and Ward, officers of the Crew Enquiry Committee, were asked by the Railway Board to submit definite proposals as to what system should be adopted in future to prevent persons from travelling without tickets?

(b) Will Government please state why sanction has been given to adopt the present system of one or two Travelling Ticket Examiners per train as suggested by the said officers? Is it purely a detective measure like the Travelling Ticket Inspection system?

(c) Will Government please state whether after the abolition of the Crew system on the North Western Railway in 1924 a modified system of two men per train was started and in terms of the officers of the Crew Enquiry Committee "died its natural death"? If so, why has this modified system been introduced on the East Indian Railway now which is called "Moody-Ward" or "Modified Crew system"?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons : (a) Yes.

(b) The present system has been adopted to check illicit travelling. Under this system, the chances of passengers without proper tickets escaping detection are so small as to make the system act as a deterrent to passengers who might otherwise entrain without proper tickets.

(c) It is presumed the Honourable Member is referring to paragraph 6 of the Moody-Ward Committee report. The scheme which is referred to as having died was the crew system of ticket checking as introduced in 1923; but it was found that the scheme could not be worked by two men per train. The system recently introduced on the East Indian Railway is not the crew system in force on the North Western Railway in 1924.

TICKET CHECKING ON THE EAST INDIAN RAILWAY.

1115. Shaikh Fazal Haq Piracha : (a) Will Government please state whether the officers of the Crew Enquiry Committee, in paragraph 39 of their report, stated as under:—

"Comparatively low pay of the crewmen is probably the main cause of this tendency to slackness and corruption....."?

(b) Is it not a fact that the grades of the Travelling Ticket Examiners in the Moody-Ward system are very much similar to those of crewmen and Crew-in-charges as given below:—

Moody-Ward System.			Crew System.
Designation.	Pay maximum.	Allowance.	Designation.	Pay maximum.	Allowance.
T. T. E. grade First.	95	20	Crew-in-charge	90	20
T. T. E. grade Second.	64	15	Crewman ..	50	15

- (c) Is it a fact that in the said report it has also been stated :
 " Little or no work goes on if the crew are left to themselves ",
 " a marked difference is noticeable in the work of the crews if no officer or Inspector is in the vicinity " ?
- (d) Will Government be pleased to state the number of supervising staff of the crewman, i.e., Inspectors, Assistant Inspectors and Crew-in-charges on four Crew Divisions ?
- (e) How many Inspectors are there now over the same area as sanctioned by the Moody-Ward report ?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons : (a) Yes.

(b) The Honourable Member has only quoted the maximum pay of the categories affected. The minimum pay of a Travelling Ticket Examiner is Rs. 55 and while the minimum pay of a Crewman is Rs. 35.

(c) Yes.

(d) and (e). I am calling for certain information from the Agent, East Indian Railway and will communicate with the Honourable Member on its receipts.

TICKET CHECKING ON THE EAST INDIAN RAILWAY.

1116. Shaikh Fazal Haq Piracha : (a) Will Government be pleased to state if it is a fact that the officers of the Crew Enquiry Committee in paragraph 39 of their report stated :

" A better policy in our opinion would be to decrease the numbers but improve the pay.... "

(b) Will Government be pleased to state :

(i) the number of the Travelling Ticket Inspectors under Accounts Department on the whole of East Indian Railway ;

(ii) leave-salary of the Travelling Ticket Inspectors ;

(iii) number of Travelling Ticket Examiners in the Moody-Ward system ; and

(iv) leave-salary of the Travelling Ticket Examiners ?

(c) Will Government be pleased to state why as opposed to the suggestion, referred to in (a) above, the number of the Travelling Ticket Examiners has been increased and the salary of the Travelling Ticket Inspectors reduced ?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons : (a) Yes.

(b) and (c). I am calling for information from the Agent, East Indian Railway and will communicate with the Honourable Member on its receipt.

TICKET CHECKING ON THE EAST INDIAN RAILWAY.

1117. Shaikh Fazal Haq Piracha : (a) Will Government be pleased to state if the Agent and the Chief Operating Superintendent of the East Indian Railway, in their reports on the working of the Crew system, mentioned from year to year that the system had achieved a great success and recommended it to be confirmed and extended all over the East Indian Railway ?

(b) Will Government be pleased to state whether the officers of the Crew Enquiry Committee reported in clear terms that the Crew system is an impracticable measure and recommended that it should be abolished ?

(c) Will Government be pleased to state if it is a fact that the Agent and the Chief Operating Superintendent both agreed with the above opinion of the officers of the Crew Enquiry Committee ?

(d) If the reply to part (c) be in the negative, will Government please state what opinion was expressed by the said officers on the Moody-Ward report and whether it has been sanctioned in accordance with or against their will ?

(e) Is it a fact that the Crew system was totally condemned by the officers of the Crew Enquiry Committee and has since been abolished ? If so, will Government be pleased to state why no correct opinion was submitted by the Agent and the Chief Operating Superintendent earlier on the working of this system ?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons : (a) A recommendation for the confirmation and extension of the crew system was made by the East Indian Railway Administration in March, 1928, on such information as was available at the time. In January, 1930, however, when more experience had been gained of the crew system, the East Indian Railway Administration reported that they were not satisfied with it.

(b) Yes.

(c) and (d). The East Indian Railway Administration did not express an opinion on the Committee's report, beyond agreeing with the view that the crew system should be abolished and the arrangement recommended by the Moody-Ward Committee, adopted.

(e) A reply to the first part has been given in my answer to (b) and in view of my reply to (a) the second part does not arise.

TICKET CHECKING ON THE EAST INDIAN RAILWAY.

1118. Shaikh Fazal Haq Piracha : (a) Will Government be pleased to state the total sum spent on the Crew system of the East Indian Railway from 1st August, 1926 to 31st May, 1931 (on all items separately under each head) ?

(b) Will Government be pleased to state what is the annual expenditure on the present Moody-Ward system, East Indian Railway, under the following heads :—pay, allowance and uniform of the staff ?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons : (a) Government regret they cannot undertake to collect the information required as it would entail a disproportionate expenditure of time and labour.

(b) The information available is given in paragraph 56 of the Moody-Ward Report a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

TICKET CHECKING ON THE EAST INDIAN RAILWAY.

1119. Shaikh Fazal Haq Piracha : Will Government be pleased to state if it is a fact that the expenditure on the Travelling Ticket Inspectors was less than on the Travelling Ticket Examiners under the Moody-Ward system in the East Indian Railway? If so, will Government please state why this expensive measure has been undertaken under the present state of economic depression?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons : I presume the Honourable Member's reference to the expenditure on Travelling Ticket Inspectors is in connection with the arrangement in force prior to the introduction of the crew system. The arrangement now adopted has been considered necessary to safeguard revenue, as it is believed that it will be more effective in detecting passengers travelling without a proper pass or ticket than the arrangement in force prior to the introduction of the crew system.

TICKET CHECKING ON THE EAST INDIAN RAILWAY.

1120. Shaikh Fazal Haq Piracha : (a) Will Government be pleased to state if the Moody-Ward system on the East Indian Railway is a temporary measure or a permanent one?

(b) If temporary, why have the permanent staff been discharged and the salaries of the remaining lot curtailed?

(c) If a permanent measure then why have the temporary men not been confirmed?

(d) If this system is a temporary measure, will Government please state why a permanent measure has been replaced by a temporary one?

(e) If it is a permanent one, will Government please state why it has been confirmed without trial?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons : (a) to (e). I have called for certain information from the Agent, East Indian Railway and will communicate with the Honourable Member on its receipt.

ALLOWANCES OF TRAVELLING TICKET EXAMINERS ON THE EAST INDIAN RAILWAY.

1121. Shaikh Fazal Haq Piracha : (a) Will Government be pleased to state why no mileage allowance is given to the Travelling Ticket Examiners of the East Indian Railway when they come under the category of the running staff like the guards and the drivers?

(b) Why are they paid an allowance of only annas 10 and 8 per day for long hours of journey and halt at out-stations? Is it a fact that for such journeys and halts the other running staff would earn several times more than the Travelling Ticket Examiners?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons : (a) and (b). Travelling Ticket Examiners are treated differently from guards and drivers on account of the difference in the character of the duties.

ALLOWANCES OF CREW STAFF ON THE EAST INDIAN RAILWAY.

1122. Shaikh Fazal Haq Piracha : (a) Will Government be pleased to state if it is a fact that the following permanent travelling allowance was paid to the Crew staff of the East Indian Railway?

Crew-in-charge

Crewman

Rs. 20 per month.

Rs. 15 per month.

(b) Will Government please state if it is a fact that under the rules a permanent travelling allowance is admissible all the year round whether a subordinate leaves his headquarters or not?

(c) Will Government please state if this permanent travelling allowance is admissible on casual leave or leave on average pay?

(d) Will Government please state if it is true that the following three different ways were adopted by the East Indian Railway in respect of the payment of the said allowance to the crew staff:

Howrah Division.—No allowance was given when a man was on station duty and did not leave his headquarters even for a day and was not paid on casual leave or on leave on average pay.

Dinapore Division.—Allowance was paid whether a man left his headquarters or not for any period and also during casual leave.

Lucknow Division.—Allowance was given on station duty provided a man left his headquarters once a week and was not paid during any kind of leave?

(e) If answers to part (d) be in the affirmative, will Government please state:

(i) why different methods existed on one Railway;

(ii) which of them is the correct method; and

(iii) who is responsible for adopting the wrong method?

(f) Do Government propose to draw up an arrear list of payment for the staff affected by the wrong method of payment? Was it carried on for five years on either of the three Divisions?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons : With your permission, Sir, I propose to reply to questions, Nos. 1122, 1123, 1124, 1125, 1126, 1127, 1130, 1131, 1132, 1133, 1134 and 1135 together.

I am calling for certain information from the Agent, East Indian Railway and will communicate with the Honourable Member on its receipt.

ALLOWANCES OF CREW STAFF ON THE EAST INDIAN RAILWAY.

†1123. Shaikh Fazal Haq Piracha : (a) Will Government be pleased to state why no consolidated allowance was given to the ticket collectors who were designated as crewmen and Crew-in-charges in the crew system on the East Indian Railway?

(b) Will Government please state if it is true that under the rules they were entitled to this consolidated allowance?

(c) Do Government propose to draw up an arrear pay sheet for those ticket collectors who worked in the crew system and were not paid this allowance?

ALLOWANCES OF TRAVELLING TICKET INSPECTORS ON THE EAST INDIAN RAILWAY.

†1124. Shaikh Fazal Haq Piracha : (a) Will Government be pleased to state if it is correct to exclude all kinds of leave, rest days, holidays in calculating average mileage?

†For answer to this question, see answer to question No. 1122.

(b) Will Government please quote the State Railway rules with illustrations on the subject?

(c) Is it true that wrong method of calculating average mileage of the Travelling Ticket Inspectors was adopted by the Operating Department of the East Indian Railway, which resulted in a regular monthly loss to them?

(d) Will Government please state if it is also correct that the Travelling Ticket Inspectors appealed against this and after about 20 months correspondence the average mileage was re-calculated and majority of the Travelling Ticket Inspectors were paid the arrears?

(e) Will Government please state the cause of this delay?

(f) Will Government please state why, in re-calculating the average mileage, period of recorded leave was only excluded and rest days, holidays, and casual leave were not excluded?

(g) Is it correct that during casual leave, rest days, holidays no mileage was drawn by Travelling Ticket Inspectors whereas during recorded leave they were paid average mileage to the extent of 75 per cent. of their pay? If so, why were those days not excluded during which they did not draw any mileage?

(h) Will Government please state whether in the case of guards periods of non-working days are excluded or not?

(i) Do Government propose to compensate the loss sustained by the Travelling Ticket Inspectors while in the crew as a result of this wrong calculation of average mileage inasmuch as the period of all non-working days should have been excluded, which was not done?

TICKET CHECKING ON THE EAST INDIAN RAILWAY.

†1125. Shaikh Fazal Haq Piracha : (a) Will Government be pleased to state whether as a consequence of the abolition of the crew system, which was a temporary measure, the pay of the Travelling Ticket Inspectors has been reduced, mileage allowance abolished and future increments stopped?

(b) Will Government please state the total number of Travelling Ticket Inspectors utilised in the Moody-Ward scheme and how many of them have suffered a loss in their leave salary?

(c) Has the cause of this heavy reduction in their salary been assigned to the abolition of their post? If so, will Government please state in what respect the post of the Travelling Ticket Inspectors has been abolished?

(d) Will Government please state whether the functions of the Travelling Ticket Inspectors are the same as that of the Travelling Ticket Examiners of the Moody-Ward system, and if so, how the post of the Travelling Ticket Inspectors is said to have been abolished?

(e) Will Government please state if the Travelling Ticket Inspectors and Travelling Ticket Examiners are in general terms described as Travelling Ticket Checkers?

†For answer to this question, see answer to question No. 1122.

(f) If there is any difference in their function, will Government please lay on the table a comparative statement showing a comparison and contrast of the duties of a Travelling Ticket Inspector and a Travelling Ticket Examiner?

(g) Is it a fact that train ticket checking staff were designated as Travelling Ticket Checkers, then Travelling Ticket Examiners and after amalgamation of the East Indian Railway and the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway, they were designated as Travelling Ticket Inspectors?

(h) Will Government please state if the transfer of Travelling Ticket Inspectors' control and change of designation from Travelling Ticket Inspectors to Travelling Ticket Examiners is not a new thing but an old one?

(i) Will Government please state why Ticket Collectors—preventive—and Travelling Ticket Examiners—detective bodies—have been placed under one head? Is it not a fact that long ago it was thought necessary to keep them under different departments?

(j) Will Government please state why the Watch and Ward Department and Government Railway Police are independent of the Operating control?

PROMOTION OF TRAVELLING TICKET INSPECTORS ON THE EAST INDIAN RAILWAY.

†1126. Shaikh Fazal Haq Piracha : (a) Will Government please state whether, when the Travelling Ticket Inspectors of Dinapore Division of the East Indian Railway appealed against the appointment of outsiders over them on high pay, the following reply was given to them by the Chief Operating Superintendent in his letter No. 40/O.D./Crew of 7th August, 1928 :—

“.....If encouraged by considerate procedure, they are going to make this a lever for getting higher appointments, for which they are not fitted, I am afraid it may lead to a revision of the decision arrived at.”

But, when Moulvi Mohd. Yakub asked in the Legislative Assembly on the 16th March, 1929 (Question 1110) :—

“Will Government please state on what basis the opinion was formed that the old Travelling Ticket Inspectors were not qualified for higher posts in the Crew Department?”

the following reply was given :—“No such opinion was formed”

(b) Will Government please state now as to which of them is the correct answer?

DISCHARGE OF TRAVELLING TICKET INSPECTORS ON THE ABOLITION OF THE CREW SYSTEM ON THE EAST INDIAN RAILWAY.

†1127. Shaikh Fazal Haq Piracha : (a) Will Government be pleased to state why and how many Travelling Ticket Inspectors have been discharged due to the abolition of the crew system on the East Indian Railway?

†For answer to this question, see answer to question No. 1122.

(b) Will Government please state their names, length of service, and cause of their discharge from service ?

(c) How many of the recruits of the crew system belonging to the category of Inspectors and temporary in service were discharged from service as a result of the abolition of the crew system ?

(d) Will Government please state whether it is not a fact that permanent men were discharged and temporary men retained ? If so, why ?

QUALIFICATIONS AND SERVICE OF CERTAIN EMPLOYEES AND THEIR PAY AFTER ABOLITION OF THE CREW SYSTEM ON THE EAST INDIAN RAILWAY.

1128. Shaikh Fazal Haq Piracha : Will Government please state the departmental qualifications and the length of service of the following staff, and whether temporary or permanent, and the pay offered to them after the abolition of their posts in the crew system on the East Indian Railway.---

Messrs.

- (i) A. Latif, Chief Inspector, Howrah.
- (ii) A. H. Kuraishi, Senior Inspector, Howrah.
- (iii) A. Ghaffar, Senior Inspector, Howrah.
- (iv) G. T. Shivi, Junior Inspector, Howrah.
- (v) C. E. Chambers, Assistant Head Ticket Collector, Howrah.
- (vi) Dufold, Assistant Head Ticket Collector, Howrah.
- (vii) Day, Assistant Head Ticket Collector, Howrah.
- (viii) Kitchlu, Head Ticket Collector, Allahabad.
- (ix) J. W. Parratton, Head Ticket Collector, Moradabad Division.
- (x) K. M. Asghar, Head Ticket Collector, Moradabad Division ?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons : With your permission, Sir, I propose to reply to questions Nos. 1128 and 1129 together.

The Railway Board are not in possession of the information with regard to the individuals mentioned in these questions for which the Honourable Member asks and are not prepared to call for it from the Railway Administration. If any of them feels aggrieved at any action which may have been taken, he has a right of appeal.

SERVICE, QUALIFICATIONS, LEAVE-SALARY, ETC., OF CERTAIN DIVISIONAL INSPECTORS AND TRAVELLING TICKET INSPECTORS ON THE EAST INDIAN RAILWAY.

†1129. Shaikh Fazal Haq Piracha : (a) Will Government be pleased to state the length of service, departmental qualifications, leave-salary (on which Income-tax and Provident Fund were deducted and which was paid during leave) of the following Divisional Inspectors of Travelling

†For answer to this question, see answer to question No. 1123.

Ticket Inspectors and the Travelling Ticket Inspectors on the East Indian Railway ?

Messrs.

1. J. S. Roberts, Divisional Inspector of Travelling Ticket Inspectors.
2. J. Marshall, Divisional Inspector of Travelling Ticket Inspectors.
3. Bhagat Ram, Divisional Inspector of Travelling Ticket Inspectors.
4. Judge Ally, Divisional Inspector of Travelling Ticket Inspectors.
5. C. Benjamin, Travelling Ticket Inspector.
6. T. V. Liddle, Travelling Ticket Inspector.
7. Springett, Travelling Ticket Inspector.
8. Raja Bahadur, Travelling Ticket Inspector.
9. Shakir Ali, Travelling Ticket Inspector.
10. Syed Mahmud, Travelling Ticket Inspector.
11. S. N. Chakraverti, Travelling Ticket Inspector.
12. G. D. Dass, Travelling Ticket Inspector.
13. Shaikh Mahmud Hussain, Travelling Ticket Inspector.
14. Farrukh Hussain, Travelling Ticket Inspector.

(b) Will Government be pleased to state what pay has been offered to them now in the Moody-Ward system ?

PAY AND ALLOWANCES OF TRAVELLING TICKET INSPECTORS ON THE EAST INDIAN RAILWAY.

†1130. Shaikh Fazal Haq Piracha : Will Government be pleased to state whether rules regarding the pay and allowances of the Travelling Ticket Inspectors in the Crew system on the East Indian Railway framed in 1927 gave them the choice to elect to retain the scale of their Travelling Ticket Inspectors' post plus average mileage or accept the Crew scales ? If so, why were their claims not considered on their pay plus average mileage ?

PROMOTION OF TRAVELLING TICKET INSPECTORS, ETC., ON THE EAST INDIAN RAILWAY.

†1131. Shaikh Fazal Haq Piracha : (a) Will Government be pleased to state if it is true that seniority has been based on pay only in allotting various posts in the Moody-Ward scheme on the East Indian Railway ?

(b) Is it a fact that the Agent O. D. in his letter No. 40/Od. Crew, dated 7th August, 1928 said "It is unwise to base selection purely on pay" ?

†For answer to this question, see answer to question No. 1122.

EXAMINATIONS FOR TRAVELLING TICKET INSPECTORS ON THE EAST INDIAN RAILWAY.

†1132. Shaikh Fazal Haq Piracha : (a) Will Government be pleased to state why the Travelling Ticket Inspectors in the Crew system on the East Indian Railway were compelled to appear at Crew Examinations?

(b) Is it a fact that the Instructor Crew Training School, Fyzabad, is one of the old Travelling Ticket Inspectors possessing the same qualifications as the other Travelling Ticket Inspectors?

(c) Will Government please quote the syllabus of the Travelling Ticket Inspectors and Crew Inspectors' Examination?

UNIFORMS SUPPLIED TO CREW STAFF AND TRAVELLING TICKET EXAMINERS ON THE EAST INDIAN RAILWAY.

†1133. Shaikh Fazal Haq Piracha : (a) Will Government be pleased to state how much blue colour summer uniform cloth was purchased for the Crew staff on the East Indian Railway?

(b) When was it purchased and what was the amount spent?

(c) If a large stock is still lying, why so much surplus cloth was purchased when the Crew system was temporary?

(d) Are Government aware of the fact that the use of the cloth caused numerous skin diseases to its wearers?

(e) Is it a fact that even the cloth of chaprasis' uniforms is higher in price than the one which was supplied to the Crew staff?

(f) Is it true that the same stuff is going to be supplied to the Travelling Ticket Examiners?

(g) Will Government please state if the Travelling Ticket Examiners are going to be supplied with knickers and half sleeve shirts? If so, will Government please state why the Travelling Ticket Examiners are going to be supplied now? Were the Travelling Ticket Inspectors strictly prohibited the use of knickers?

(h) Why do not Government supply them the same uniform which was supplied to the Travelling Ticket Inspectors and which is supplied to the other railway officials?

(i) Will Government please state why no waterproof coats are supplied to the Travelling Ticket Examiners like the other running staff?

NUMBER OF TICKET COLLECTORS AT CERTAIN STATIONS AND CHECKING OF TICKETS AT ROAD-SIDE STATIONS.

†1134. Shaikh Fazal Haq Piracha : (a) Will Government be pleased to state if it is a fact that the officers of the Crew Enquiry Committee stated in paragraph 53 of their report :

"By common consent the number of the ticket collectors in the old days was inadequate"?

(b) Will Government please state the strength of ticket collectors at the following stations before and after the introduction of the Moody-Ward system :—

Howrah, Asansol, Gaya, Dinapur, Moghalsarai, Allahabad, Cawnpore, Tundla, Aligarh, Benares Cantonment, Lucknow, Bareilly, Moradabad, Hardwar and Dehradun?

(c) Are Government aware that at road-side stations there is one Assistant Station Master who on arrival of the train has to perform various important duties and the passengers have either to stay in order to deliver their tickets to the Assistant Station Master when he is free or they are collected by illiterate menial staff or the passengers clear off without handing them over, as there is none to take the tickets immediately on arrival of the train?

(d) Will Government please state the number of such stations on the East Indian Railway and those having ticket collectors?

(e) Will Government please state how many per cent. stations are there on the East Indian Railway which have got fencings to keep back trespassers?

(f) Why are no arrangements made to protect the station premises from unauthorised entry?

(g) Is it a fact that tickets are not checked at the checking stations now-a-days as it was done before the introduction of the Moody-Ward system? If not, why not?

(h) If this work is proposed to be checked by the Travelling Ticket Examiners booked with the train, will Government be pleased to state if they have considered whether it is possible for one Travelling Ticket Examiner to finish checking in the limited stoppage at the station?

TICKET COLLECTORS DISCHARGED AND REDUCED ON THE EAST INDIAN RAILWAY.

†1135. Shaikh Fazal Haq Piracha : (a) Will Government be pleased to state why and how many ticket collectors of permanent cadre were discharged on the introduction of the Moody-Ward system on the East Indian Railway?

(b) Will Government be pleased to state whether any and if so, how many permanent ticket collectors have been reduced to Rs. 95 from Rs. 120, their length of service, and their term of service as Head Ticket Collectors?

(c) Will Government please state the length of service of those posted in their place and the pay offered to them?

(d) Will Government be pleased to state why this grave injustice has been done to these men?

APPOINTMENT OF ACCOUNTS CREW INSPECTORS ON THE EAST INDIAN RAILWAY.

1136. Shaikh Fazal Haq Piracha : (a) Will Government be pleased to state whether an establishment of Accounts Inspector, Crews, was maintained on the East Indian Railway to have a super-check over Crew working from the Accounts side?

†For answer to this question, see answer to question No. 1122.

†For answer to this question, see answer to question No. 1122.

(b) Will Government please state the grades of these Inspectors ?

(c) Will Government please state the names of these men and the sources from which these men were taken and their length of service on the Railway before being taken as Accounts Crew Inspector ?

(d) Will Government please state their railway qualifications and whether they were temporary or permanent before appointment as Accounts Inspector ?

(e) Will Government please state why a few Crewmen on Rs. 35 pay were taken as Inspectors of Accounts Crew and one of them was a discharged Travelling Ticket Inspector ?

(f) Will Government please state why Travelling Ticket Inspectors' claims were overlooked who were Accounts hands ?

(g) Will Government please state if the Travelling Ticket Inspectors sent appeals on this subject to the Chief Accounts Officer ? If so, why were their claims overlooked even then ?

(h) Will Government please state whether with the abolition of the Crew system their post was automatically abolished ?

(i) How many of them were discharged ?

(j) Will Government please state why most of them have been retained for Accounts Super Check over Operating Travelling Ticket Examiners ?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons : With your permission, Sir, I propose to answer to this and the following question together.

I regret I cannot undertake to make the very laborious enquiries which a reply to the Honourable Member's questions would entail.

ACCOUNTS CREW INSPECTORS ON THE EAST INDIAN RAILWAY.

†1137. Shaikh Fazal Haq Piracha : (a) Will Government please state if all the Accounts Crew Inspectors on the East Indian Railway were served with a notice regarding the termination of their service from 31st May, 1931 ?

(b) Is it a fact that afterwards it was withdrawn ?

(c) Will Government please state whether it is true that they did no work in June 1931 because sanction for their post came in July, 1931 ?

(d) Will Government please state if their service will be counted as continuous and whether they have been paid for June, 1931 ?

(e) Will Government please state who from amongst them are related to the officers of the Accounts Department and other Railway officials ?

(f) Will Government please state why Travelling Ticket Inspectors' claims have again been overlooked for this post as well ?

(g) Is it a fact that practically all of the Accounts Crew Inspectors are Bengalis with the exceptions of only a few ? If so, will Government please state why minorities' claims have been overlooked ?

(h) Will Government please state :—

(i) the number of such posts, and

(ii) the number of Hindus, Muhammadans, Sikhs and Christians ?

†For answer to this question, see answer to question No. 1136.

TICKET CHECKING ON THE EAST INDIAN RAILWAY.

1138. Shaikh Fazal Haq Piracha : (a) Will Government please state whether Inspectors of various departments of the East Indian Railway are authorised to check tickets ? If so, why ?

(b) Why have they not been asked to qualify first in the checking duties ?

(c) Are they allowed to check in private dress instead of in uniform ? If so, why ?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons : With your permission, Sir, I propose to reply to this and question No. 1139 together.

I am asking the Agent, East Indian Railway for the information required by the Honourable Member and will communicate with him when it is received.

TICKET CHECKING ON THE EAST INDIAN RAILWAY.

†1139. Shaikh Fazal Haq Piracha : (a) Will Government please state if it is a fact that every railway employee has been authorised to check tickets, even illiterate menial staff, on the East Indian Railway ?

(b) If so, have Government considered that it will give a chance to bogus persons to impersonate as Travelling Ticket Examiners ?

(c) Are Government aware that it will be harassing to the public to have so many men demanding tickets every now and then ?

(d) Is it a fact that a regular staff has been maintained exclusively for checking purpose, and if so, what is the necessity of having these other men for checking purposes ?

ADMISSION OF RAILWAY MAIL SERVICE CLERKS TO THE ACCOUNTANTS' EXAMINATION.

1140. Maulvi Sayyid Murtuza Saheb Bahadur : (a) Is it a fact that the clerks in the Railway Mail Service in the grade of Rs. 35 to 135 are not allowed to appear at the Accountants' examination, whereas the clerks in the same grade employed in the Postal Department other than the Railway Mail Service are allowed to appear at the said examination ?

(b) Do Government propose to allow the clerks in the grade of Rs. 35 to 135 employed in the Railway Mail Service to appear at the Accountants' examination ? If so, when ? If not, why not ?

Sir Hubert Sams : (a) The examination referred to is the Post Office Accountants' examination, which, as its name indicates, is with reference to the accounts of post offices, which are not the same as those of the Railway Mail Service. Accordingly, only Post Office clerks are eligible to appear for it.

(b) No, for the reason stated in reply to part (a). The remaining parts do not arise.

†For answer to this question, see answer to question No. 1138.

CREATION OF AN ADDITIONAL SELECTION GRADE POST IN EACH RAILWAY MAIL SERVICE DIVISION.

1141. *Maulvi Sayyid Murtuza Saheb Bahadur : (a) Is it a fact that there is a selection post in the grade of Rs. 160 to 250 in each Division of the Railway Mail Service ?

(b) Is it a fact that in some Divisions the said post in the selection grade is held by Head Clerks in the offices of the Railway Mail Service Superintendents, while in other Divisions it is held by the Accountants of the head record offices ?

(c) Are Government prepared to consider the question of creating one more selection grade post in each Division of the Railway Mail Service and in each Railway Mail Service Division to fix one such selected post for the Head Clerk in the Railway Mail Service, Superintendent's office and another such post for the Accountant of the head record office ? If so, when ? If not, why not ?

Sir Hubert Sams : (a) and (b). The fact is not as stated by the Honourable Member. In each Railway Mail Service Division there are a number of selection posts in the grade of Rs. 160—250, the number varying according to the importance of the Division. To the office of each Superintendent of a Railway Mail Service Division is attached a post on Rs. 250—350 and a post on Rs. 160—250. The former is always held by the Head Record Clerk, who forms a part of the Superintendent's office establishment, and the other may be held either by the Head Clerk or by the Accountant of the office according to requirements.

(c) No, in the circumstances stated in the reply to parts (a) and (b) and in the present financial circumstances there can be no question of the creation of further posts.

ADMISSION OF RAILWAY MAIL SERVICE CLERKS TO THE SELECTION GRADE EXAMINATION.

1142. *Maulvi Sayyid Murtuza Saheb Bahadur : Is it a fact that "junior" clerks in the grade of Rs. 35 to 135 as well as "senior" clerks in the same grade in the Railway Mail Service were admitted to the selection grade examination of 1930 in all the Railway Mail Service Divisions except the "J" Division ? If so, why were not the "junior" clerks from the "J" Division admitted to the said examination ?

Sir Hubert Sams : Government have not the information. The matter of selection was entirely within the competence of the Postmaster General.

PAY AND ALLOWANCES OF STAFF OF THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA SECRETARIAT AND ATTACHED OFFICES.

1143. *Mr. B. N. Misra : (a) Is it a fact that there is a difference in the pay and allowances of the staff of the Secretariat and attached and subordinate offices ?

(b) If so, will Government please state the reason for such difference ?

The Honourable Sir James Orerar : (a) Yes.

(b) The reasons are stated in my reply to part (d) of the Honourable Member's question No. 938, on 24th September, 1931.

CURRENCY WITHDRAWN FROM CIRCULATION AND THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA'S NEW LOAN.

1144. *Sirdar Sohan Singh : (a) Will Government be so good as to place a statement on the table showing the amounts that have been withdrawn from circulation within the last five years ?

(b) Will Government be pleased to say when the new loan is going to be closed and if they have considered the question as to whether the new loan is likely to operate against agriculturists and depress credit and prices ?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster : (a) The attention of the Honourable Member is invited to the statement on pages 20 and 21 of the Report of the Controller of the Currency for 1930-31.

(b) Government have not decided yet when the new loan will be closed. As stated in the notification, it will remain open until further notice. Government do not consider that the loan is likely to operate against agriculturists or depress credit and prices. On the other hand it offers an attractive opportunity to small investors which the returns, of subscriptions indicate is being considerably appreciated.

RECRUITMENT OF GOANESE IN DEPARTMENTS IN THE EAST AFRICAN COLONIES.

1145. *Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh : (a) Are Government aware that about 80 per cent. of the non-European staff in the various Departments of the East African Colonies consists of non-British subjects, i.e., Goanese ?

(b) Are Government aware that due to trade depression heavy retrenchment is in progress in those colonies and many Indians with several years services have been turned out ?

(c) If the answers to parts (a) and (b) be in the affirmative, do Government propose to take necessary steps for replacing the non-British staff by British subjects and stop further recruitment of Goanese ?

Mr. Ram Chandra : (a) and (b). Government have no information.

(c) Does not arise.

EMPLOYMENT OF COOLIES ON THE GREAT INDIAN PENINSULA RAILWAY.

1146. *Rao Bahadur B. L. Patil : (a) Is it a fact that all the hamals (coolies) working in the Great Indian Peninsula Railway stations, and particularly in the Victoria Terminus, Bombay, were dismissed and a contract has been given to supply hamals ?

(b) Are Government aware that the contractor is making huge profits and is it a fact that the hamals have made representations to the railway authorities and to Government complaining against the methods of the contractor ?

(c) Is it a fact that the hamals are mainly from the Konkan Districts that have recently suffered from heavy floods ?

(d) Has any action been taken to restore the status quo ?

Mr. A. A. L. Parsons : The Railway Board have received no representations on this matter which is one of those left to Agents of railways. I am sending a copy of the Honourable Member's question to the Agent, Great Indian Peninsula Railway.

NON-INCLUSION OF KANARESE IN THE LANGUAGES PRESCRIBED FOR THE INDIAN CIVIL SERVICE EXAMINATION.

1147. Rao Bahadur B. L. Patil : (a) Is it a fact that Kanarese is not included in the Indian languages prescribed for the Indian Civil Service examination that is now held in India and also for the probationers' course in England as notified in the Gazette of India, dated 2nd June, 1931, in Notification No. 162 of 1931?

(b) If not, what are the reasons for this discrimination?

(c) Are Government aware that Kanarese is one of the languages prescribed for the various examinations in Arts for higher degrees in the Universities of Bombay, Madras, Calcutta and Mysore?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar : (a) Kanarese is one of the languages that may be offered in the compulsory section of the examination for the Indian Civil Service in India. It is not one of the languages prescribed for the probationers' course in England.

(b) Only the most widely spoken vernacular languages of the province to which a probationer is allotted are prescribed for the probationary course.

(c) Yes.

UNSTARRED QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

LACK OF MEDICAL FACILITIES FOR PRESS EMPLOYEES IN NEW DELHI.

127. Mr. S. C. Mitra : (a) Will Government be pleased to state if it is a fact that no medical facilities have been provided for the employees of the Government of India Press, Delhi, in their new quarters at Barakhamba?

(b) Is it a fact that there is no dispensary nearby and are Government aware that the Press workers and their families consisting of about 2,000 persons are suffering great privations in this malaria season?

(c) Is it a fact that nearly 75 per cent. of the Press population is at present down with a severe type of malaria and dysentery is prevalent in an epidemic form and no medical aid from Government is available for them?

(d) Is it a fact that the Combined Hospital is too far from the Press quarters and the employees cannot take advantage of it?

Mr. J. A. Shillidy : I propose to deal with questions Nos. 127 to 130 together. The majority of the press employees, like other Government servants on a pay of Rs. 15 to 149 per mensem, can, in case of illness, call in a Sub-Assistant Surgeon at their house free of charge. A first aid medical chest is also maintained in the premises of the Press for emergencies. The Government of India consider these facilities to be adequate and as the Combined Hospital in New Delhi is not at any great distance from the site of the press, they do not consider it necessary to provide a separate dispensary exclusively for their use. No separate dispensary was also provided for the press employees at old Delhi, because the Balak Ram Hospital happened to be near at hand and was utilized by them.

The Chief Engineer has been asked to submit through the Chief Commissioner, Delhi, his proposals for constructing a primary school for the children of the press employees. These proposals will be considered by the Government of India on their receipt.

LACK OF MEDICAL FACILITIES FOR PRESS EMPLOYEES IN NEW DELHI.

†128. Mr. S. C. Mitra : (a) Is it a fact that medical facilities enjoyed by the Government of India Press employees for the last 19 years in old Delhi have been withdrawn with their transfer to New Delhi?

(b) Are Government aware that with the transfer of the Government of India Press population from Timarpur (Old Delhi) to New Delhi there is no necessity for two medical officers in the Balak Ram Hospital? If so, why one doctor cannot be provided to staff a dispensary for the Press employees? Is it a fact that the Manager of the Press has reserved a "B" type quarter to be used as a building for the dispensary?

LACK OF EDUCATIONAL FACILITIES FOR THE CHILDREN OF PRESS EMPLOYEES IN NEW DELHI.

†129. Mr. S. C. Mitra : (a) Will Government be pleased to state if it is a fact that there were two Primary Schools for boys and girls at Timarpur for the education of the children of the Government of India Press employees at Delhi?

(b) Is it a fact that no schools have been opened in New Delhi for the children of the Press employees since the move of the Press from Old Delhi to New Delhi last month? If so, is it the intention of Government to deprive the children of the Press workers of all the previous facilities for education?

LACK OF EDUCATIONAL AND MEDICAL FACILITIES FOR PRESS EMPLOYEES IN NEW DELHI.

†130. Mr. S. C. Mitra : Will Government be pleased to state if it is a fact that the Government of India Press workers at Delhi have been deprived of all facilities for education and medical attendance and that the Royal Commission on Labour recommended better facilities for the education and medical attendance of industrial workers?

QUARTERS ALLOTTED TO PRESS EMPLOYEES IN NEW DELHI.

131. Mr. S. C. Mitra : (a) Will Government be pleased to state if it is a fact that the Manager, Government of India Press, Delhi, has allotted "F" and "Duffry" type quarters to the clerks of his office?

(b) Is it a fact that in the Government of India subordinate offices and Public Works Department quarters lower than "E" type are not allotted to clerks? If so, why inferior type of quarters have been given to Press clerks?

†For answer to this question, see answer to question No. 127.

(c) Are Government aware that great discontent is prevailing amongst the Press clerks owing to the treatment meted out to them?

(d) Is it a fact that according to the allotment rules made by the Manager himself junior clerks were entitled to "E" type quarters? If so, why is the Manager not giving effect to the rules framed by him and approved by the Controller of Printing and Stationery?

(e) Is it a fact that Press clerks have brought their grievances to the notice of the higher authorities, but no action has so far been taken to redress their grievances?

Mr. J. A. Shillidy : (a) to (e). Residential quarters attached to the Government of India Press at New Delhi have been constructed with due regard to the pay and status of the employees of the Press including clerks. Rules regulating the classification and allotment of these quarters are still under the consideration of the Government of India and pending their issue allotments have been made on a provisional basis.

APPOINTMENT OF A LAND AND DEVELOPMENT OFFICER IN THE PUBLIC WORKS DEPARTMENT, NEW DELHI.

132. Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh : (a) Is it a fact that a new officer has been appointed as Land and Development Officer in the New Delhi P. W. D. this year?

(b) Is it a fact that before this officer was appointed, the duties of Land and Development Officer and P. A. to the Chief Engineer were carried on by one officer?

(c) Is it a fact that the officer is still on probation?

(d) Is it a fact that a considerable number of poorly paid clerks of the Delhi P. W. D. have been retrenched and turned out of service recently, whereas this highly paid appointment of Land and Development Officer has been created? What is his pay?

(e) What is the justification for the appointment?

(f) Is it a fact that the works in New Delhi P. W. D. are nearing completion?

(g) In view of the acute financial stringency, do Government propose to dispense with the services of the Land and Development Officer? If not, why not?

Mr. Ram Chandra : (a) A whole-time Land and Development Officer for New Delhi, who is directly under the control of the Chief Commissioner was appointed in October, 1930.

(b) The Personal Assistant to the Chief Engineer performed the duties of Land and Development Officer in addition to his own from the 1st April, 1928 to the 17th March, 1930.

(c) Yes.

(d) Notices for termination of service have been given to a certain number of temporary staff—gazetted and non-gazetted, and on various rates of pay—in the Central Public Works Department. The Land and Development Officer draws a pay of Rs. 800 per mensem plus a motor car allowance of Rs. 100 a month.

(e) The Honourable Member's attention is invited to paragraph 39 of the Standing Finance Committee's proceedings, dated the 22nd January, 1929, a copy of which is available in the Library of the House.

(f) Yes.

(g) The question will be considered in connection with the recommendations of the Retrenchment Advisory Committee.

DHABI GHATS PROVIDED FOR PRESS EMPLOYEES IN NEW DELHI.

133. Mr. S. C. Mitra : (a) Will Government be pleased to state if it is a fact that for every 25 quarters one big dhobi ghat has been constructed in the Press quarters recently built at New Delhi for the Press staff?

(b) Is it a fact that nearly 12 such dhobi ghats have been built for a staff of about 270 employees living in the quarters? If so, what was the necessity of building so many dhobi ghats and what is the amount of expenditure incurred in constructing and fitting water pipes in those dhobi ghats?

(c) Who will pay the cost of filtered water supply in those ghats?

Mr. J. A. Shillidy : (a) and (b). No. There are in all only six dhobi ghats to serve over 400 employees. Together with their families, there are estimated to be 1,500 persons on the Press estate.

(c) Bills for the water consumed will be sent to the New Delhi Municipal Committee for payment. It is understood that they make certain recoveries from the dhobies in the form of a licence fee.

QUARTERS PROVIDED FOR PRESS EMPLOYEES IN NEW DELHI.

134. Mr. S. C. Mitra : (a) Is it a fact that in New Delhi one "B" type and three "C" type standard size quarters were sanctioned by the Government of India for the high-paid Reading Branch and supervising and clerical staff of the Press employees? If so, is it a fact that the Engineer-in-Charge of the project has built an inferior design of quarters, triangular in form, in place of the standard type? If so, what is the authority for that?

(b) Have Government compared the plans of the standard type of quarters with the ones actually built for the Press employees noted above; if not, why not?

(c) Is it a fact that a room four feet square is called an 'Entrance Hall' in the plan of the so-called "B" and "C" type quarters and many doors and fittings have been fitted? If so, why?

(d) Is it a fact that the doors fitted to the quarters are so small that beds and furniture cannot be taken in without dismantling them?

(e) Why have the said "B" and "C" quarters been constructed adjoining duffry type quarters?

(f) What is the name of the engineer or architect who has designed these quarters and what are his qualifications?

Mr. J. A. Shillidy : (a) The reply to the first part is in the affirmative. As to the second part, the quarters actually built were naturally designed to suit the new site. The accommodation provided is somewhat less than that allowed in the standard "B" type of quarter but is greater than in the case of the "C" type quarters.

(b) Government have not themselves compared the plans but they were approved by responsible authorities.

(c) No. The room in question is 6' 6" square and no unnecessary door has been put in.

(d) The doors are of the same size as in the standard type of quarters.

(e) The architect was asked to place these quarters as near as possible to the main Press building and they therefore adjoin the duffries' quarters but are divided off from them by walls.

(f) Mr. R. M. Love, A.R.I., B.A.

BUNGALOWS FOR THE MANAGING STAFF OF THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA PRESS, NEW DELHI.

135. Mr. S. C. Mitra : Is it a fact that two gazetted officers' bungalows have been built for the managing staff of the Press, although there is only one gazetted officer in the Press? At what rate is rent recovered for these bungalows?

Mr. J. A. Shillidy : One "C" class bungalow and one "D" class bungalow have been constructed for the Manager, who is a gazetted officer, and for the Assistant Manager, who holds a non-gazetted post. The latter class of bungalow is not reserved for gazetted officers only. The Manager of the Press is entitled to rent-free quarters. The question of the rent to be charged from the Assistant Manager is under consideration.

PLAN OF QUARTERS PROVIDED FOR PRESS EMPLOYEES IN NEW DELHI.

136. Mr. S. C. Mitra : (a) Will Government be pleased to state if it is a fact that the open spaces called squares provided in the Press quarters are considerably smaller than those in the Secretariat quarters?

(b) Is it a fact that even the small space in the Press quarters has been occupied by building dhobi ghats and places for dumping night soil called pail shutes and there is no open space left for the children to play?

(c) Is it also a fact that in the Press quarters all the latrines face towards the squares and standing in the squares one can see nothing but rows of latrines, dhobi ghats and pail shutes for night soil?

(d) Is it a fact that the squares and quarters have been designed by an architect specially brought out from England for the purpose? If so, what are the name and qualifications of that architect and what pay is given to him?

Mr. J. A. Shillidy : (a) The areas at the back of the Press quarters are certainly smaller but they are not intended as playgrounds. There are open spaces in the front of the quarters for this purpose.

(b) Yes. This is the purpose for which they were designed.

(c) Yes. The conveniences referred to have naturally been placed at the back of the quarters and not in front of them.

(d) For the name of the architect please see the reply to part (f) of the Honourable Member's question No. 134. He was not engaged specifically for this work. His rate of pay is Rs. 1,275 per mensem, plus £30 Overseas' pay.

RENT FOR BUNGALOWS RECOVERED FROM THE MANAGER AND ASSISTANT MANAGER, GOVERNMENT OF INDIA PRESS, ALIGARH.

137. Mr. S. C. Mitra : Will Government be pleased to state whether any rent is recovered from the Manager and the Assistant Manager of the Aligarh Press for the bungalows occupied by them? If not, why not?

Mr. J. A. Shillidy : Both the Manager and the Assistant Manager of the Government of India Press, Aligarh, have been granted rent-free quarters as they are required to live in the premises in connection with their duties in the Press and the Postal Workshop.

RECRUITMENT TO THE CLERICAL ESTABLISHMENT OF THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA SECRETARIAT AND ATTACHED OFFICES.

138. Mr. S. C. Mitra : (a) Is it a fact that ministerial branch selection examinations are held by the Public Service Commission, when necessary, with a view to select suitable candidates for appointment to the ministerial establishments of the Government of India Secretariat and its attached offices?

(b) Is it a fact that appointments are made in the Third Division of the clerical establishments of the Government of India Secretariat and its attached offices from the list of candidates who have passed the Public Service Commission examinations?

(c) Is it a fact that in declaring the results of the examinations the Public Service Commission have due regard for the redress of communal inequalities?

(d) Is it a fact that all the qualified Third Division clerks of the minority communities, including those who were declared qualified on a communal basis at the last two examinations of the Public Service Commission, have been provided for in the Departments of the Government of India and their attached offices, and that in spite of this the Home Department have issued orders recently to the effect that unqualified Muslim clerks and lady clerks should be employed in preference to the qualified candidates in certain vacancies in those offices? If so, why?

(e) Are Government aware that the orders referred to in part (d) are calculated to defeat the object for which the Public Service Commission ministerial selection examinations are held and have caused a good deal of discontent and resentment amongst the successful candidates on account of those orders? If so, do Government propose to consider the question of cancelling those orders?

(f) If the reply to part (e) is in the negative, will Government please state the reasons which render it necessary that recruitment to the clerical establishment of the Government of India Secretariat and its attached offices should be made through the examinations conducted by the Public Service Commission?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar : (a) and (b). Yes.

(c) The redress of communal inequalities is a matter for Departments of the Government of India who are charged with the responsibility for preventing the preponderance of any one class or community. The Public Service Commission only supply the names of candidates of minority communities when they are asked for such candidates by the Departments.

(d) The reply to the first part is in the affirmative. As regards the second part, I would point out that the orders are to the effect that unqualified ladies and Muslims may be employed temporarily in vacancies earmarked for those categories until qualified candidates of the respective categories are available for appointment.

(e) and (f). Do not arise.

ELECTION OF MEMBERS TO THE ADVISORY PUBLICITY COMMITTEE.

Mr. President : I have to inform the Assembly that the following seven Members have been elected to the Advisory Publicity Committee, namely :

1. Mr. Arthur Moore.
2. Mr. P. G. Reddi.
3. Nawab Major Malik Talib Mehdi Khan.
4. Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Lal Chand.
5. Mr. Badri Lal Rastogi.
6. Mr. M. Maswood Ahmad.
7. Muhammad Azhar Ali.

RECOMMENDATION OF THE INTERNATIONAL LABOUR CONFERENCE RE PREVENTION OF INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENTS.

Mr. J. A. Shillidy (Secretary, Industries and Labour Department) : Sir, on the 7th July 1930, a Resolution moved on behalf of Government was adopted by this House recommending that the Governor General in Council should examine the possibility of giving effect to the Recommendation concerning the prevention of industrial accidents adopted by the Twelfth International Labour Conference, 1929, and that the results of this examination should be placed before this House within 18 months from that date.

In pursuance of this Resolution a letter was addressed to all the major Local Governments and the Chief Commissioner of Delhi asking for their views. The replies have now been received, in the light of which the Government of India have undertaken a further examination of this Recommendation.

While there is a general agreement with the principle underlying the Recommendation, there is considerable criticism of the details. The Recommendation is divided into four parts and comprises no less than 23 Articles covering a very wide field of activities. The preamble to the Recommendation extends its application "to agriculture, taking into account the special conditions of agricultural work". The general view of Local Governments, with which the Government of India are in agreement, is that in some respects the Recommendation goes beyond what is possible or necessary in the existing stage of industrial development of the country. In particular it is considered that, even with the proviso contained in the preamble, the application of this Recommendation in any form to agriculture would be inoperative in practice. The use of machinery in agricultural operations is in its infancy throughout India and it would be impossible to take any effective action which would ensure that legislative or administrative orders were carried out. Moreover, it is pointed out that both Parts I and II of the Recommendation presuppose an amount of co-ordination and co-operation between the three parties concerned, namely, Government, the employer and the employee which cannot be expected in existing Indian conditions. Labour in this country is still to a large extent migratory, illiterate and insufficiently organised to be able to undertake the various duties which are implicitly required of it by the Recommendation. In addition, there are certain proposals, particularly those relating to industrial accident insurance, psychological and physiological research, which postulate the existence of organisations and agencies which are either non-existent or still imperfectly developed.

On the other hand, the replies from Local Governments indicate that many of the items in the Recommendation are already in operation in varying degrees and that, in certain directions, further progress is possible and desirable. Indeed, many of the details involved in the Recommendation also find mention in the report of the Royal Commission on Labour. Thus, although the terms of the Recommendation cannot be accepted as immediately practicable, they may be regarded as forming a standard which employers, employees and inspecting authorities may gradually work up to in the future. Of the four parts into which the Recommendation is divided, Part III dealing with the legislation which each State Member should undertake is the only one on which definite action can be taken by Government. For the remaining parts, Government are dependent on persuasion and must first secure the co-operation of private organisations and associations. So far as legislation is concerned, Government are anxious that it should not be undertaken piecemeal. The Royal Commission on Labour have examined the working of the Factories Act and the Mines Act which are the principal Acts concerned and have made recommendations for their amendment and revision including proposals for industrial safety. The Recommendation of the International Labour Conference will need to be re-examined in the light of the Report of the Royal Commission on Labour, which has only lately been published. The examination of the Report is at present being pursued, but until this is completed, Government will obviously not be in a position to take any action. It may also be mentioned that the last reply from a Local Government to the Government of India's circular letter regarding this Recommendation was received only towards the end of June last, and, in view of the numerous criticisms of the details, the time available has been inadequate for arriving at any definite conclusions. As the Report of the Royal Commission on Labour covers the same ground as the Recommendation, the Government of India propose to proceed with the consideration of the latter simultaneously with the former and to give effect to it so far as may be practicable.

Mr. B. Das (Orissa Division : Non-Muhammadan) : Do I take it that the Government of India, in the light of their examination of the Labour Commission's Report and also these Recommendations, will themselves bring forward legislation without our applying pressure on the Government ?

Mr. J. A. Shillidy : I think I explained once before in answer to a question that there were a great many of these Recommendations of the Labour Commission, the decision on which would rest with the Local Governments. There were other matters in regard to which either the Local Governments or the Central Government could take action by executive order. As regards the legislation which the Honourable Member refers to, we are at present engaged in examining the recommendations of the Labour Commission. Some of these recommendations as I said will have to go to Local Governments. There are other recommendations which we have previously examined, the results of our examination having been given to the Labour Commission, and on these we shall certainly try to take action and prepare legislation as soon as possible. I can assure the Honourable Member that no pressure will be required from this House on Government to undertake that legislation.

Mr. B. Das : Does the Honourable Member expect that he will bring in such legislation at the winter session at Delhi ?

Mr. J. A. Shillidy : I would be most unwilling to give any promise, but our hope at the present moment is that there will certainly be certain legislation in the Delhi Session.

THE INDIAN PRESS (EMERGENCY POWERS) BILL—contd.

Mr. President : The Assembly will now resume further consideration of the Press Bill. Does any Honourable Member wish to move amendment No. 41 ?

Mr. B. Das (Orissa Division : Non-Muhammadan) : Yes, Sir. I move :

"That in sub-clause (1) (b) of clause 4, before the word 'directly' the words 'subject as above' be inserted."

This amendment has been given in pursuance of the note of dissent of the minority in the Select Committee. I may refer to their note of dissent which says :

"Particularly in clause 4 (b) the closing lines to the effect that any printing press which directly or indirectly expresses approval or admiration 'of any person, real or fictitious, who has committed or is alleged to have committed any such offence' are too wide and might expose a person who incidentally comments upon the merits of the offender unconnected with the offence and without detracting from its gravity to the penalty of the section. We think that the clause should be made subject to the dominating purpose of clause (a)."

With that object in view, this amendment has been moved.

The Honourable Sir C. P. Ramaswami Aiyar (Law Member) : Mr. President, if my Honourable friend would realise that the word "such" occurs in two places in clause 4 (1) (b), he will see that what he really has at heart is carried out by this sub-clause, because if "subject as above" means anything more than that, it is superfluous and may lead to ambiguities. What I am saying is this : my Honourable friend wants to insert the words "subject as above" before the word "directly", so that it would read "subject as above, directly or indirectly express approval or admiration of any such offence or of any person, etc., who is alleged to have committed any such offence." The word "such" is correlated to what precedes and therefore there ought to be no real difficulty in the matter.

Mr. President : The question is :

"That in sub-clause (1) (b) of clause 4, before the word 'directly' the words 'subject as above' be inserted."

The motion was negatived.

Sardar Sant Singh (West Punjab: Sikh) : Sir, I beg to move :

"That the words 'or indirectly' appearing in sub-clause (1) (b) of clause 4 be omitted."

The object of this amendment is this. As I submitted to the House yesterday, the clause vests a vague and very wide power in the hands of the executive. The word "indirectly" embraces a very wide range of subjects, and as the use of the power rests in one hand, probably on the report of the C. I. D. or of some member of the C. I. D., it is absolutely necessary that this power should be circumscribed and the words "or indirectly" be omitted. Sir, I move.

The Honourable Sir C. P. Ramaswami Aiyar : Mr. President, from the observations of the Honourable Member, it would appear that he is apprehensive lest the word "indirectly" should be extended unduly, but it must be remembered that the object of this Bill is to strike at a certain movement which is extolled or encouraged. Now, very rarely does it happen that the encouragement or eulogy is a direct eulogy—very rarely indeed does it happen that a newspaper article says that such and such a murder is an excellent thing or such and such an assassination is commendable. What they often do,—to cite an example,—is that a story is narrated, a kind of serial story in which it is stated that a certain lady, a queen in this case, strangles a General. She goes on to say, "As I have strangled so and so, let all the white people be strangled." But then another person says that is not right, so on and so forth. That is an extract which I have in mind, one out of these extracts which are before the House. My contention therefore is that if you want to hit this particular evil, if you want to combat this trouble, you cannot restrict your activities to direct eulogy or commendation, because no newspaper is indiscreet enough to indulge in such, and therefore this amendment is out of place.

Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh (Muzaffarpur cum Champaran: Non-Muhammadan) : Sir, I want to ask just one question. A newspaper publishes certain court proceedings in which an accused, say in a conspiracy case, has made a statement that he has murdered or wants to murder a particular individual. Now, will not the use of the word "indirectly" bring him under the purview of this section ? I want only to know this.

The Honourable Sir C. P. Ramaswami Aiyar : My Honourable friend proves too much. If the publisher is perfectly accurate in what he has published, he will not come within the scope of this Bill, because if a newspaper publishes a comment of some proceedings in a court in which an accused person has made certain very dangerous statements, that would not be direct approval, and that is not the intent of this clause, because the whole question is whether the report of the proceedings has got the object or the effect of inciting or encouraging. If a newspaper publishes accurate reports of the proceedings of a court and confines itself to that, no Magistrate or High Court would say that that is itself incitement. But cases might easily be conceived of where, under the guise of publishing these proceedings, something more is sought to be done which will come within the purview of this section. The elimination of the word "indirectly" will not improve matters.

Mr. President : The question is :

"That in sub-clause (1) (b) of clause 4, the words 'or indirectly' be omitted."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. S. C. Mitra (Chittagong and Rajshahi Divisions : Non-Muhamadan Rural) : Sir, I move.

"That in sub-clause (1) (b) of clause 4, the words 'real or fictitious' be omitted."

My contention is that the word "real" is redundant and unnecessary, because the person is a real person. But as regards the word "fictitious" my argument is based on a still stronger ground, because they make indictable even the eulogy or admiration of a fictitious person supposed to have committed murder or violence, even if he does not incite or encourage murder or violence. One could understand if the admiration or eulogy of the fictitious person, who is supposed to have committed a murder, resulted in incitement or encouragement to some kind of violence, because there would then be some justification for the use of this word. Now, the clause is already too wide, because it covers indirect incitement to murder. Will the Honourable the Law Member explain why Government have put these words "real and fictitious" in this clause also, because it will endanger persons delineating historical narration or writing a book or fiction. There may be a description of supposed murders and there may be reasons to admire their conduct, but if it does not lead to incitement to murder or violence, I do not know how it can come within the purview of this Bill at all. Sir, I move.

Mr. D. K. Lahiri Chaudhury (Bengal : Landholders) : Sir, I rise to support the amendment which has been moved by my friend Mr. S. C. Mitra, and the reason for my supporting my friend is this. In the Statement of Objects and Reasons to the Bill it is stated, "This Bill reproduces the first Bill as amended by the Select Committee". When the Honourable the Home Member made the motion for referring this Bill to the Select Committee, he said that Government have not sought to go one inch beyond the actual necessities of the case, but, Sir, I find in practice that the Home Member is not only going beyond one inch, but is going beyond one yard and more than that, because it has been definitely stated by my friend Mr. Mitra that the word "real" is redundant. There is also sufficient ground for us to oppose the placing of the word "fictitious" in this measure. I want to draw the attention of the Honourable the Law Member to one point. He just observed on the amendment which was last moved in connection with the omission of the words "directly or indirectly" that really papers which extol murder or violence cannot be brought within the purview of this measure and therefore it is necessary to retain the word "indirectly". I think the words "directly or indirectly" cover all the points, and the words "real or fictitious" need not be put on the Statute-book. I hope the Honourable Member will see his way to at least accept this small amendment. With these words, I support my friend Mr. Mitra's amendment.

Mr. Amar Nath Dutt (Burdwan Division : Non-Muhamadan Rural) : Sir, I do not rise to support my friend's argument in the hope that it will receive that amount of attention from the Treasury Benches that it ought to. During the last three days we have been debating about the necessity or otherwise of this measure, and I have come to know sufficient of the mentality of the Mover of this Bill, so that I think it useless to stand up to support any amendment that may be proposed by my friends on this side. Now, if I rise to support my friend's amendment, I once more reiterate that it is not in the hope that it will be accepted by the Treasury Benches, but with a view to point out to them their error in endeavouring to kill not only the Press of India, but the literature of India. And if it falls upon deaf ears on the other side, as it will, I am sure there is a wider public which will condemn this portion of the Bill at least, if not the other portions, with the same voice and with the same unanimity as we have done on this side of the House.

Sir, open the pages of any of the books of our literature in Bengal. I yield to none on this side of the House about the glorious literature that we in Bengal have put forth during the last century, not excepting the Tamil literature which is as old as 2,000 years. (The Honourable Sir C. P. Ramaswami Aiyar : "4,000 years.") But at the same time, I think that at the present time, of all the living languages in India, we in Bengal can boast of a literature which no other language of this country can boast of. Begin from some of the books written, say, 70 or 80 years ago, for example, that great poem called Britra Sanghar, wherein there is certainly an approval of the murder of Daityas. Now, Sir, I hope my Honourable friends on the other side—Sadhus—are not so many Daityas. Sir, if that book is not an incitement to the murder of the Daityas, i.e. the demons, I think if my Honourable friend is a real Sadhu, he will join with me in having those demons killed. They are a blot on the civilisation of humanity and human history. Then I shall cite before you only one or two other books from the literature of my province. Let me mention, Krishna Kanta's Will,—one of the best works of fiction which not only my literature possesses, but I think it can rival any of the best works of fiction in the world. There Rohini, that dissolute woman, was murdered, and therein you will find the approval of the murder of that dissolute woman. Will you ask our authors, will you ask our novelists, not to write in that strain? Then, again, there are historical facts, about which there are poems. Take for example Kurukshetra—and I do not refer to Palasir Juddha by Nabin Chandra Sen, who was a servant of the bureaucracy which sits here on the opposite Benches. The very same author wrote Kurukshetra, and therein you will find an approval of murder. You will strike at the source of all literary activities if you really bring in the words "real or fictitious" in that way. Unless you have lost reverence for all the products of intellect, unless you have lost respect for human culture, and may I add human morality, you will not introduce such words here. My Honourable friend on the other side observed that, by taking away the words "directly or indirectly", you will render the section innocuous, because he said that no newspaper incites to murder directly but by an indirect way. I say here you are not only indirectly gagging our literature, but you are striking at the very fountain source of the intellect of the nation. You are trying not only to kill the Press but our literature also. We do not care if they go away from this land and thus enable our literature to flourish. In fact, before the introduction of printing press we had our Vedas, we had our Gitas, and the wisdom contained in those great books was handed down from sire to son, and it is still a source of inspiration to the millions in this country. Take away the Press, I won't grudge it, but in the name of taking away the liberty of the Press and forfeiting the same, don't gag the literature of this country, don't gag our poetry, don't gag the source of our inspiration for all that is great and good in human nature. Sir, I know that the Government will not accept this amendment. I will not add any words which may incite you to abuse us as you have been doing for the past few days. I know the reason of those abuses, and in fact, as you have a bad case you have no other argument than the argument of the fish woman. I wish that you had still some good sense left in you not to press for the retention of the words "real or fictitious".

Mr. B. Sitaramaraju (Ganjam cum Vizagapatam: Non-Muhammadan Rural): I rise to support the amendment moved by my Honourable friend Mr. Mitra. Here we have got the word "incite" which is capable of covering both "directly or indirectly" and "real or fictitious", because "incite" is a much wider term and it is capable of covering all these things. By adding these words we are putting a wrong emphasis on them. With these few words I support the amendment.

The Honourable Sir C. P. Ramaswami Aiyar: I rise with some trepidation because it has been suggested that the addition of this particular word "fictitious" might involve either the condemnation or the destruction of very valuable literature. If I really felt that the glorious specimens of literature to which allusion had been made by my Honourable friend opposite would be hit by this addition, I should be very loathe to support it. But, Mr. President, I am afraid that there is a little confusion about this matter.

The word "person" has been defined in the General Clauses Act of 1897, and if it stood by itself, it would eliminate all possibilities of any document coming within this clause, which by a dexterous use of pseudonyms might serve the same purpose as the use of the real name but yet be outside this clause. Let me illustrate this, but before doing so, let me preface my statement by at once remarking that it is true that there are a great many works of literature in which killing has been referred to and generally extolled or eulogised. As a matter of fact, the Gita, which my Honourable friend on the other side and myself both regard as revelation, suggests that on the field of battle, physical or spiritual, you should not flinch from destroying your enemies. That class or category of work is really dealt with, Mr. President, by the Explanation which makes it abundantly clear, "No expression of approval or admiration made in a historical or literary work shall be deemed to be of the nature described in this sub-section unless it has the tendency described in clause (a)".

Mr. Amar Nath Dutt: The sting lies in the tail.

The Honourable Sir C. P. Ramaswami Aiyar: Most of the insects which have stings have them in the tail. What I am trying to prove is that that category of real literature is excluded in that explanation. Suppose for a moment that the words "or fictitious" were omitted. There is nothing to prevent exactly the same thing which will be dealt with if real names were mentioned escaping beyond the ambit of the section by putting in asterisks or using some other device and then asserting that no real person has been referred to and so it does not come within the meaning of this clause. We are not all Sadhus and I do not know what particular advertence was made when my friend opposite referred to Sadhus. I am not a Sadhu myself, but at the same time we are all anxious that works of pure art or literature should not be proceeded against. There is no doubt that pure art or literature might be so twisted as to come within the scope of this Bill. Suppose a person wrote a wonderful poem which extolled murder definitely. There is no doubt that it would come within this Bill. The attempt is to combine the two things, firstly, to except literature unless it has that specific tendency referred to in this Bill, secondly, to make it clear that no devices or evasions by substitution of fictitious names for real names should exempt persons who are otherwise guilty under the Bill.

Mr. B. Das: Will it apply to literature already existing or to new literature?

The Honourable Sir C. P. Ramaswami Aiyar: Apart from the general non-retrospectivity of Acts, it is impossible to conceive that suddenly the publisher of the Gita should be prosecuted under this Bill.

Mr. B. Das: The printers of the Gita might be prosecuted.

Mr. President: The question is:

"That in sub-clause (1) (b) of clause 4, the words 'real or fictitious' be omitted."

The motion was negatived.

Sardar Sant Singh: I beg to move:

"That in sub-clause (1), of clause 4, for all the words beginning with the words 'the Local Government may, by notice in writing' and ending with the words 'wherever found in British India to be forfeited to His Majesty' the following be substituted:

'the Local Government may apply to the High Court for the local area in which such press is situate stating or describing the words or signs or visible representations which in its opinion are of the nature described above. The High Court shall decide in the manner hereinafter provided if the newspaper, book or other document in respect of which the application is made did contain any words, signs or visible representations of the nature described above'."

I want to draw the attention of the Honourable Members as to how the clause will read after making the amendment I suggest. I am not objecting to part (a) or (b), but I want all the words beginning from "the Local Government may, by notice in writing" up to the words "forfeited to His Majesty" deleted, and the words I have read out to be substituted in their place. My submission is that, in moving my amendment, my object is to judicialise the proceedings from the very beginning. I shall recall to Honourable Members what I said yesterday in moving my amendment to clause 3. I was not surprised when the executive authorities opposed the principle of judicialising the proceedings, but my surprise was greatest when I found the Honourable the Law Member getting up and defending the executive action. I am reminded of the story of Mansur who was punished to be stoned by the public. He was taken through the town and everybody threw brickbats at him under the orders of the executive. As he was passing along, a friend of his who knew him and understood his teachings threw a flower at him in order to conform to the order. Mansur retained his self control and seemed to be indifferent to the shower of stones that hurt his body, but when the flower of his friend touched his body, he began to cry aloud. His custodians asked him what the matter was. "Why should this flower pain you more than the brickbat?" they enquired. He replied, "The other people did not know what they were doing, but this friend knew me—his flower hurts me more than the shower of stones." One can understand the executive trying to grasp and keep the power in its own grip, but one fails to understand, and to appreciate a gentleman who is not only an eminent lawyer himself but has risen to his present position on account of his ability and application of legal principles during his life, and probably his present position due to his intellectual gifts in the forensic field solely. I refer to the Honourable the Law Member. (Laughter.) I may add that he has got qualities of heart also! But when he got up to defend the theory that the rule of executive should be substituted for the rule of law, it pained me a good deal—and not only me, but I am expressing the sentiment of the whole country when I say that this is a very painful affair. Now this makes me put my case rather more vehemently than I should have done. In spite of the knowledge that we have got very few votes at our command, and in spite of the fact that we know that we shall be defeated, we have the consolation of feeling that there is the larger audience outside to judge between us and the executive, and that larger audience is fit to appraise the merits and demerits of this Bill. My submission is that, in order to convince my friend, I think I should bring a very high authority to bear upon my arguments; so I have decided to read out a certain portion from this book, "The New Despotism", written by no less an authority than the Lord Chief Justice of England and published as late as 1929.

Mr. Amar Nath Dutt : This is not a new despotism—it is an old despotism!

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer (Rohilkund and Kumaon Divisions : Non-Muhammadian Rural) : Are you not satisfied with your yesterday's quotations?

Sardar Sant Singh : It is at page 24 :

"Dicey, in his classical work on the law of the constitution, enumerates three distinct conceptions which are involved in the statement that the English constitution is characterised by the supremacy of the rule of law. The statement means, first, that in England no man can be punished or can be lawfully made either to suffer in his body or in his goods except for a distinct and definite breach of law, established in the ordinary legal manner before the ordinary courts. It means, secondly, that in this country not only is no man above the law but that every man, whatever his rank or condition may be, is subject to the ordinary law of the land and the jurisdiction of the courts. And, finally, it means that the general principles of our constitution are mainly the result of judicial decision determining the rights of private persons in particular cases brought before the courts."

This, then, is the conception of the rule of law. Sir, the Honourable the Home Member, while replying, referred to certain exceptions existing in England even and he was pleased to illustrate his position by referring to the obnoxious trades and other matters. Well, to my limited intellect I cannot understand what he means and how the analogy holds good. When the executive is given power by the Legislature to pass a certain Bill, certainly despotism takes a different form. What was the old despotism? The despot sat in his place, and with the advice of his ministers or without the advice of his ministers, issued a decree or an ukase, and that was binding upon every individual. What is the new despotism? Under it, you establish a majority and by that majority you place before the Legislature a Bill and say, "Here is a law we want you to enact", and instead of issuing a decree without the sanction of the Legislature behind it, you pass it by the help of the mere force of numbers. What difference does it make? The old despotism is changed into the new despotism by the mere change of form,—nothing more. It remains there in substance. The real point, Sir, again brought forward by the Lord Chief Justice in England is, as he says :

"To summarise the matter, it may be said that the rule of law comprehends and denotes the following principle. No one can be lawfully restrained or punished or condemned in damages except for violation of the law, established to the satisfaction of a judge or jury or a magistrate in proceedings regularly instituted in one of the ordinary courts of justice. The rights of personal liberty and of freedom of speech, the liberty of the press and the right of public meetings are all the result of the application of this fundamental principle. Secondly, every one, whatever his position, minister of State or Government official, soldier or statesman, is governed by the ordinary law of the land and personally liable for anything done by him contrary to that law and is subject to the jurisdiction of the ordinary courts of justice, civil and criminal."

Now some Honourable Member may get up and say that there is the Judicial Protection Act for the Judges and there are certain other exceptions to this principle, meaning thereby that the rule of law as it is found in England does not find the same place in India. I know it that the exceptions have been created and that the executive has armed itself with the power to punish without reference to the procedure they ought to adopt, but it does not mean that, because there are exceptions already existing, therefore we should go on adding to them. If this country is to be governed by public opinion and with the aid of public opinion, then in that case it is absolutely necessary that the executive should move in response to public opinion, not in contravention of it. Therefore, my submission is that the present clause 4 offends against this rule. Further on, the learned Chief Justice has given the advantages which will follow from placing the matter in the hands of courts of justice instead of in the hands of the executive. He says :

"The work of a court involves many important ingredients, as for example :

- (i) that the judge is indemnified and is personally responsible for his decision ;
- (ii) that the case, subject to rare exceptions, is conducted in public ;
- (iii) that the result is governed by the impartial application of principles which are known and established ; and
- (iv) that all parties to the controversy are fully and fairly heard."

In other words, the decision of a court in every important respect is sharply contrasted with the edict, however benevolent, of some hidden authority, however capable, depending upon processes of reasoning which are not stated, and the enforcement of a scheme which is not explained. The administration of the law of the land in the ordinary court presupposes at least personal responsibility, publicity, uniformity and the hearing of the parties. These are the advantages of public trial. How can the Honourable Members on the Treasury Benches come forward and say that the Indian Press will not have those fundamental advantages guaranteed to them. The European Press will be free to write and say anything they like, but the Indian Press will be muzzled and bound down by an order passed behind their back. That is the position. If the thing is to be placed before the ordinary Judges and everything is to be done in public under the same procedure which is applied to the ordinary criminal, then everybody has a right to judge whether the culprit has been treated fairly or in a partial manner. Therefore my submission is that my friend the Law Member's position is not certainly clear to me when he says that there are occasions when the executive should be given the opportunity, and he claims that this opportunity should be given in this particular case because it is an emergency measure. What is the emergency measure? If this is an emergency measure, I would advise him, as the state of the country is going from bad to worse every day, to suspend all laws and all courts. After all we are in want of money. Disastrous taxation is facing us at the present moment and savings have to be made. Why not do away with the Magistrates, High Courts and all the paraphernalia that exist in the land and let the executive Government do as they please? Why not introduce legislation to the effect that for two years to come there will be no courts, no Magistrates, no Judges? That will be very much better. And here I am reminded of an article written in the Statesman which probably out-Herods Herod. In this article, dated the 27th September, the Editor writing under the caption "More Violence" says:

"It is the duty of an elected legislature to secure as far as possible that the innocent cannot suffer from the law. Since the Government must desire the same it has found no difficulty in creating a water-tight Bill by substantial alterations in title, preamble and text which clearly define the scope of the measure."

This is after the Bill came out from the Select Committee. Then it says:

"A murderous Press is a disgrace to the profession and we fail to understand the excessive enthusiasm for license which makes some prefer that incitement to murder should continue and the guilty go unpunished and undeterred rather than everybody should have a chance of defeating the object of the law to provide work for the lawyers."

This is the complaint, Sir, that the amendments that have come from this quarter are due to the excessive zeal of the lawyers; and the Honourable the Home Member was pleased to remark yesterday that we on this side of the House are merely pleading as lawyers without responsibility for the welfare of the country. After all we are the chief residents of this country; our sons will live in this land; our grandsons will enjoy the benefits that are conferred by us. It is not the Englishmen who will live in this land. The Englishmen will go away some day, does not matter when, but they are not permanent residents of this land. Therefore the interests of this country are more sacred, more real and more genuine for Indians than for Englishmen. Therefore to put forward the plea that we on this side are not actuated by a genuine desire to protect the interests of this country is not true at all. We are not here to provide work for the lawyer or to plead as persons with briefs. But we are really here to discuss whether you are transgressing the fundamental principles of law or not. If you transgress the fundamental principles of law, my submission is that you must be prepared to meet opposition from this quarter of the House. Then, further on, the Editor of the Statesman has a very good fling at those who have tabled motions of amendment. He says:

"They emanate from quarters which cannot be suspected of sympathy with terrorism or with the dubious left wing of the Congress."

The implication behind this is that because we sympathise with the terrorist movement, therefore we have tabled these amendments. Is that fair play? Is that the sort of Press which is to be protected?

"We find the active opposition of some Muslims extremely difficult to understand."

Here is a lesson for our Muslim friends. Here is an attempt made, the thin end of the wedge thrown in, to create discord among the two communities in this House. This has been the game of the Statesman all along, and it has not been given up yet. Proceeding, he says that the respectable press should not be afraid of this Bill. Let us calmly examine this plea. My submission is that in its working no Indian press will be safe, and I will illustrate my position by referring to that very paper which Mr. Arthur Moore in his speech the other day described as quite safe and that paper is the Tribune. There was an anniversary of the late Bhagat Singh to be celebrated at Lahore and a notice was issued. The Tribune published that notice after striking out the objectionable passages which the editor thought should not appear in print. But in spite of that, in spite of the fact that the paper did not contain anything beyond the news, the particular issue of the Tribune was confiscated under the Ordinance which is the predecessor of this Bill. My submission is that no paper can be safe if the language employed in the Bill is so vast that it can net in anybody and everybody. My Honourable friends on the other side have refused to agree even to the most reasonable amendments proposed by this side. "Indirectly tending to incite or encourage"—this is the vast net thrown wide, and every possible article or criticism can be brought under the purview of this. In spite of this vast power given them under the law, they are not agreeable to place the matter in the hands of the court. My submission therefore is that it would be most dangerous to hand over the power to the executive. The same authority, the Lord Chief Justice of England, thus describes the mentality of the executive:

"An agreeable writer, collecting from the pages of Boswell and elsewhere individual opinions expressed by Samuel Johnson, has compiled and composed a kind of Johnsonian creed or soliloquy, which sums up concisely the essence of his faith. If a similar method were applied to the ardent bureaucrat, the amateur of the new despotism, his reflections might perhaps be indicated in some such creed as this:

1. The business of the executive is to govern.
2. The only persons fit to govern are experts.
3. The experts in the art of government are the permanent officials, who, exhibiting an ancient and too much neglected virtue, 'think themselves worthy of great things, being worthy'.
4. But the expert must deal with things as they are. The 'foursquare man' makes the best of the circumstances in which he finds himself.
5. Two main obstacles hamper the beneficent work of the expert. One is the Sovereignty of Parliament and the other is the Rule of Law.
6. A kind of fetish-worship, prevalent among an ignorant public, prevents the destruction of these obstacles. The expert, therefore, must make use of the first in order to frustrate the second."

[2ND OCTOBER 1931.]

[Sardar Sant Singh.]

--this is a maxim which is particularly being followed in introducing this Bill--

"7. To this end let him, under Parliamentary forms, clothe himself with despotic power, and then, because the forms are Parliamentary, defy the Law Courts.

8. This course will prove tolerably simple if he can: (a) get legislation passed in skeleton form; (b) fill up the gaps with his own rules, orders, and regulations; (c) make it difficult or impossible for Parliament to check the said rules, orders, and regulations; (d) secure for them the force of statute; (e) make his own decision final; (f) arrange that the fact of his decision shall be conclusive proof of its legality; (g) take power to modify the provisions of statutes; and (h) prevent and avoid any sort of appeal to a Court of Law.

9. If the expert can get rid of the Lord Chancellor, reduce the judges to a branch of the Civil Service, compel them to give opinions beforehand on hypothetical cases, and appoint them himself through a business man to be called "Minister of Justice", the coping-stone will be laid and the music will be the fuller."

Is not the same mentality visible in the provisions of this Bill? Therefore, Sir, my submission is that my learned friend, for whom I have the greatest respect, should reconsider his position. Then I will read this passage on page 102 of this book, "The New Despotism":

"But vital as the independence of judges has always been, there never was a time when it was more manifestly important than in these latter days, when the effect of the Executive does or permits is to render it difficult for the Courts to maintain the rights of the individual. The method of attack, to be sure, is subtle enough. In Tudor and in Stuart times much was attempted in defiance of Parliament. The attempts ultimately failed, and failed signally. But despotism may be no less sinister, and perhaps even more mischievous, if it acts under the cloak of Parliamentary forms than when it seeks to act in direct opposition to Parliament. Let it be granted that there may be acute and well-intentioned persons who have persuaded themselves that the rights of individuals are perfectly safe in the hands of Government departments, and may properly and economically be left to be determined behind the back of one of the parties, by officials of the Executive, upon principles not to be explained sufficiently well known. Meantime, however, judicial decision may often appear to be a stumbling-block in the way of the zealous official. The official course might be so much more smooth, and the official arm might be so much more powerful, if there were no troublesome Law Courts to stand between the Executive and the individual, the Crown and the taxpayer."

Herein lies the reason, Sir, why the rule of law is more necessary in cases where the administration of infliction of penalty is to be more speedy. In the present clause you will find that the penalty imposed comes in certain cases to the extent of Rs. 3,000 and to the forfeiture of the press which may be a lakh of rupees or so in value. Again, Sir, in this case the opinion of the journalists who are directly concerned with the matter has expressed itself very strongly. They suspended publication for a day as a protest. Yesterday such news came from Bengal and to-day the news comes from Madras that Madras papers have closed their offices for a day as a protest against this measure. Therefore, my submission is, is it not high time that the executive should pause and reconsider their position? What is this power which is being asked for the executive? My Honourable friend in replying to yesterday's debate said that the onus is not thrown upon the aggrieved person. I have to differ from him in this reading of the Bill. The words, according to clause 25, as it stands are:

"If it appears to the Special Bench on an application under sub-clause (1) of section 23 that the words, signs or visible representations contained in the newspaper, book or other document in respect of which the order in question was made were not of the nature described in section 4, sub-section (1), the Special Bench shall set aside the order."

The Honourable Sir C. P. Ramaswami Aiyar: It may be useful for my learned friend to refer to clause 23, sub-clause (1), where it is stated "shall decide if the newspaper, book or other document in respect to which the order was made did or did not contain any words", and so on. Those were the expressions I referred to.

Sardar Sant Singh: I am very grateful to my Honourable friend for pointing out to me this provision, "did or did not contain any words".

These are the two words: so at the utmost, straining the language to the breaking point, I will say that what the Bill says is that the onus is thrown on both parties.

The Honourable Sir C. P. Ramaswami Aiyar: Quite so.

Sardar Sant Singh: Not on one party, but on both parties, while the principle of criminal jurisprudence is that the onus shall be upon the prosecution, upon the Crown, not upon the other party. That is why in my amendment I use the expression.....

Mr. President: May I know how long the Honourable Member is likely to go on? As to-day is Friday, I wish to adjourn early?

Sardar Sant Singh: I will take only five minutes more, Sir. That is why in my amendment I say "in respect of which the application is made did contain any words". I have omitted the words "did not". "Did" throws the onus entirely upon the prosecution, and this is the principle of law on which I insist. The object of this amendment is further illustrated by this fact that I do not want that a man shall be punished first and then should be asked to establish his innocence in a High Court by applying to the court. What I want is that the Local Government which is aggrieved that the Law has been violated should be called upon to move the High Court for the purpose of establishing that a certain press has offended. With these remarks I beg to move the amendment.

The Assembly then adjourned for Lunch till a Quarter Past Two of the Clock.

The Assembly re-assembled after Lunch at a Quarter Past Two of the Clock, Mr. President in the Chair.

Mr. President: Further consideration of the amendment moved by Sardar Sant Singh.

Rao Bahadur Chaudhury Lalchand (Nominated Non-Official): Sir, the object underlying the amendment proposed by my Honourable friend, Sardar Sant Singh, is a laudable one. He has taken very great pains in framing his amendments and has put his case very lucidly before this House. But he has forgotten one thing. Yesterday, while replying to one of his amendments, the Honourable the Law Member made it clear to him that speediness of action was the essence of this Bill, as this was an emergency measure, and unless speedy action was taken the Bill was of no use. Since then the House has given its verdict once for all on a previous amendment for referring things to judicial courts rather than to the executive. Therefore, after that verdict, it was not fair for the Honourable the Mover to press his case for judicialising the procedure, even from the initial stage under this Bill.

Much has been made again of the liberty of the Press. Liberty of the Press, as I said the other day, has its limitations, like limitations on our liberty in every other walk of life. As an example everybody has a right to walk on the public road, nobody can be prevented from doing so. But supposing, somebody takes it into his head to exercise his right of occupying the whole of the road. Supposing he takes a spear in his hand and goes on the road attacking everybody that comes in the way, can that be called a due exercise of his right to walk on the public road? Will not the executive be justified in catching hold of him at once and send him to the nearest lunatic asylum? They would not, in fact they cannot wait for the judicial courts; they could not afford to let him proceed on his march and injure people on the ground that they must consult the Criminal Procedure Code to find out whether his offence is a cognisable or non-cognisable one, whether a formal complaint should be filed or the police should take that man away. The executive alone can deal with this man at once and take the necessary action. The present measure is exactly on the same footing. It is an emergency measure, and as such it can only be handled by the executive. If you take away these powers from the executive, you do away with the Bill altogether.

Then, Sir, we need not press this judicial versus executive controversy too far. Supposing a house is on fire, and there are 50 other houses in the same line and there is a danger of the fire spreading to the other adjoining houses. What will the executive officer do in such circumstances? He will at once come forward and give orders to demolish one of the houses with a view to break the line in order to save the other houses. If you want this case to be dealt with by a judicial officer, he will come and frame issues first. Supposing he is sensible enough not to make any inquiry into the causes of the fire at this stage, the least he will do is to have an estimate of the house, that was going to be demolished, prepared, for, there might be a suit for damages lodged against the Government and the price may have to be determined. He will then ask for the services of an expert engineer. Well, the engineer prepares the estimate of the house that is proposed to be demolished,—mind you all the while the fire is raging in all its intensity,—then they will say that the owner of the house that is to be demolished should be consulted, and the owner must naturally be given some time to object to the estimate prepared by the engineer. Well, suppose the owner is near by, he comes forward and gives his consent, but at the end of his statement he says that last year he had mortgaged the house for Rs. 15,000 to a man residing in Calcutta. In such circumstances, what is the judicial officer to do? Well, these are the difficulties in a judicial procedure. I do not mean any disrespect to the judicial procedure. (Mr. B. Das: "You are only libelling it.") It is dilatory and can never take the place of executive decisions. The functions of the two are different. Sir, I am only trying to point out that this is a case in which the executive alone could take prompt action. The amendments of my Honourable friend are quite good, but they are good for a pucca Press Bill which probably will have to be brought forward when the new Swaraj Government comes. For, I cannot believe that any Government could sit with folded hands when such pernicious propaganda is going on in the press. With these few words, I oppose the amendment.

The Honourable Sir C. P. Ramaswami Aiyar : Mr. President, I realise that time is precious, and that it is the duty of every one on all sides of the House to be as brief as possible, and therefore, although I should have normally succumbed to the temptation of dealing with the many points so comprehensively dealt with by my Honourable friend opposite who moved this amendment, I propose to restrict myself only to two or three aspects. In the first place, let me at once dispose of what may be termed the personal argument. A very impassioned appeal was made to me, and it was suggested that there was something inappropriate or indecorous in my getting up and opposing amendments such as these, and something was said with reference to my career, and also very kindly, to my alleged qualities of head and heart. All that I can say is that I feel absolutely sure that my friend and his confreres, when they occupy these Benches, as I hope and trust they shortly will, will pursue exactly the same line as I am pursuing having regard to the immediate history of this particular act of legislation. For, let it be remembered, Mr. President, that two things were made abundantly clear at the outset of these discussions, firstly this was regarded, as my friend just now stated, as an emergency legislation, which is temporary in character, and it was therefore found necessary to arm the executive with certain initiatory or inauguratory powers. But care was taken at the same time to see that those powers when they entrenched or were likely to trespass upon the domain of private rights, should be subject to a careful scrutiny and an exhaustive investigation by the courts of law. It appeared to me, listening to the appeals and the arguments of my Honourable and learned friend, that he had omitted to realise the existence of clause 23 altogether, that he had omitted to see that there was a recourse to the High Court, and the procedure of the High Court is also indicated in the Bill. What is contemplated by this provision and clause 23 taken together is that the first step is to be taken by the executive, but that the rightness or wrongness of that step should be tested and exhaustively tested in the High Court.....

Sir Hari Singh Gour (Central Provinces Hindi Divisions : Non-Muhammadan) : Exhaustively?

The Honourable Sir C. P. Ramaswami Aiyar : I adhere to the expression exhaustively because—thanks to the labours of my Honourable and learned friend opposite—certain objections which were raised to clause 23 and which were very forcibly formulated in the course of the earlier discussions have been surmounted, and that is why I again reiterate and use the word exhaustively. Then a great deal was said with regard to the new despotism which it was asserted was being copied from England and enacted in the shape of this Bill, and copious extracts were forthcoming from Lord Hewart's book on "The New Despotism". As passage after passage was read, there flashed across my mind another passage which I remembered to have read from the same book some time ago, and so I took the liberty of asking my Honourable friend to lend me his book. Let me read that passage, and from that you will find exactly what the evil was which was inveighed against by Lord Hewart. What he says is this :

“ A little inquiry will serve to show that there is now (in England) and for some time past has been a persistent influence at work which, whatever the motives or intentions that support it, may be, has the effect of placing a large and increasing field of departmental authority beyond the reach of the ordinary law.”

Sir Hari Singh Gour : May I ask the Honourable the Law Member whether that is not what the Lord Chief Justice condemns and whether it was not in consequence of statements of that kind that a Committee was appointed for the purpose of going into the question as to how far the executive had encroached upon the rights of the Legislature ?

The Honourable Sir C. P. Ramaswami Aiyar : I am deeply obliged to my Honourable and learned friend for recalling to this House all those incidents as I was going to make remarks very similar to those which have emanated from my Honourable and learned friend. What I was anxious to point out and reinforce was this that in England it was found that gradually departmental authority, or what may be called the reign of bureaucracy, was tending to encroach on the domain of law and keep itself above law, above the ordinary activities of the ordinary courts of justice, and therefore, Lord Hewart gave a great lead in that book “The New Despotism”. But mark what follows. In that passage which I have read out, what he strongly protests against is departmental action which is placed beyond the reach of ordinary law. I state that so far as this measure is concerned, executive action or authority or exercise of authority is not placed beyond the reach of ordinary law but is subject to the scrutiny and investigation and decision of the ordinary courts of law. Now, it is an interesting commentary upon that Committee to which reference has been made by my Honourable and learned friend—executive upon judicial authority—that to-day England is living in a reign of Orders in Council following upon an Act of Parliament consisting of one section (Laughter), but that is perhaps neither here nor there. The only thing that I wish to say is this, that even in England, that home of liberty, whose institutions we are endeavouring to copy, and I hope will successfully copy, we have these Orders in Council or executive dictates and one comprehensive section to cope with an emergency, and in order to meet that emergency such powers have been taken by the executive with the unanimous consent of the three great organised parties of the State.

Mr. President, what I desire to add is this, that the Honourable gentleman, Sardar Sant Singh, is perfectly consistent and perfectly logical. What he desires to do is to get rid of the executive action ab initio, get rid also of what may be called the limited scope of the authority of the High Court, institute a procedure closely assimilated to the criminal trials from beginning to end and give to the High Court all the powers which it would normally and ordinarily have in a criminal trial. That is his object and intention, and I realise that I have interpreted his intention correctly because I see his approval manifested. That being so, the difference between this side and the other side, or that portion of the other side which is really represented by my Honourable friend is this. Are you going to have speedy executive action subject to judicial cognisance afterwards, or judicial action ab initio ? That is the only matter, that is the narrow issue before the House. I have attempted elsewhere and on earlier occasions to point out what the object of this Bill was and why it was considered essential to have judicial cognisance with those safeguards superadded to preliminary executive action.

Mr. S. C. Mitra : I have heard with great attention what the Honourable the Law Member has said. He thinks that executive orders should be substituted for judicial proceedings. I know as a lawyer he is bound to espouse any cause with which he is entrusted, and I am quite sure that he would have made quite a different speech had he been to-day sitting on this side of the House.

It is difficult to fight this mighty Government on the part of poor press owners and publishers once the executive orders are passed, and I crave your permission to read a certain passage to show how the executive mind works. They have taken trouble to publish this big volume, from which I will show what passages they consider will come within the purview of the Bill that is before the House. Mr. Arthur Moore, the Leader of the European Group, quoted extensively from that book, and I hope you will excuse me also if I read some passages from the same. I know the remarks are strong, but I invite the House to tell me how they incite or tend to incite to murder or acts of violence. You will see for yourself that the remarks are very strong against the Anglo-Indian community and the Anglo-Indian Press at whose instance the Honourable the Home Member has thought fit to bring in this measure. (Mr. E. Studd : “ Question.”) I read from page 54 :

“ Liberty (Calcutta) of the 2nd August, 1931, writes :

“ It is regrettable that Anglo-India, almost the whole body of it, has started a dishonest, a cunning, a spurious agitation over recent violent outrages. It is neither surprising nor disconcerting that Anglo-Indian exploiters of India should have mainly sought to make political capital out of tragedies which ought to move our humanity deeply and give to statesmanship food for serious reflection. For panic and foolishness we should make ample allowance but for perversity and mischief there is none so poor in spirit as to offer pity. It is not for us to allay a storm deliberately raised for political exploitation. It is not for us to show up shameless pretenders and obstinate hypocrites. An earlier generation set up a howl against a conciliatory Viceroy and packed him off. The plan is more comprehensive to-day. Anglo-India is out to wreck the prospects of peace in India and to deceive her out of the goal of freedom. It has asked the Government ‘to govern or go out’—(that is what the Statesman says)—if the existing Government cannot discharge its functions—at the dictation of Anglo-India—they must prepare means for finding another !”

Lashed into fury by outbreaks of violence and lawlessness, these bullies would take the law into their own hands ‘to drive out terrorism by terror’. They threaten ‘the gravest events’ if the Congress which is ‘guilty of murder’ which has ‘fresh blood upon its hands’ is admitted into the Round Table Conference. A Conservative backbencher, one Bracken, in spiritual affinity with the Anglo-Indian pack, has blamed Mahatma Gandhi for assassinations and said that ‘the Government of India should have tried him for incitement instead of inviting him to St James Palace’.”

I shall make no apology for reading another passage to show to the House that that it is not against incitement to murder or acts of violence that this Bill is intended. From the selections that have been made in this volume you will see that those newspapers are against murder. I have carefully read through every selection, and they condemn violence, not to speak of murder, but wherever they criticised the Anglo-Indian press, it was taken as though they criticised the Government of India. You will therefore excuse me if I read some more passages to show that this Bill is intended not against any incitement to murder or acts of violence, but only to crush the press the Honourable the Home Member intends this Bill. Let me read from page 53 of these Selections :

"A meeting of the European masters of this country was lately held at the Dalhousie Institute. All the people of this country are now regretting the unjust murder of Mr. Garlick. All thoughtful men in the land believe that these acts of lawlessness put serious obstacles to the progress of the nation. But one's mind is embittered by the bitterness of feeling displayed in resolutions adopted by the European Association. Nobody holds the entire European community responsible for the agony inflicted on the oppressed coolies by tea garden managers. No revolt was proclaimed against the whole English race because of the fiendish Jallianwala Bagh massacre by Dyer. For the daily persecution of the black by the white only individual justice has been demanded and the people of the country have never been mad enough to start an attack on all whites in consequence. The need of an explanation from the Viceroy or the Premier has never been felt for the lives of the people of the country taken by police shots, with or without reason in this country."

I wish I could read other passages because this House has been prejudiced by reading extensively by Mr. Moore, passages from unknown papers, but these are the more responsible papers, which I quoted. This book is in the hands of all Honourable Members and they will find that incitement to murder and acts of violence have all along been condemned by the Indian Press. Now, the cat is out of the bag. The Honourable the Home Member wants to crush fair criticism and the liberty of the Indian Press, so that there may be no spirit of nationalism kept alive. My friend, Sardar Sant Singh's amendment is only for the substitution of judicial proceedings instead of executive orders. Why should Government be anxious to pass this Bill without changing a comma or a semi colon. The Home Member is determined to have his pound of flesh. Yet the country knows how unreasonably the provisions of section 124-A. have been interpreted so that everything can be brought under it. Why should you be afraid of a judicial proceeding in a court of law? The Honourable the Law Member says that judicial proceedings will come later on. In clause 3 you will find the word "may" instead of "shall", so it is permissive. You don't find any provision that reasons should be given for demanding security. In those circumstances what will the High Court do? If there are no reasons stated on the demand for security, the High Court is helpless. As has been shown in the Comrade case, even the judicial procedure that is being talked of so loudly is really a farce. It will give no protection. As I have shown, Sir, the passages I have read out to you are really strong criticisms but were never intended to incite murders or violence. Sir, I support the motion of my Honourable friend, Sardar Sant Singh.

Mr. B. N. Misra : (Orissa Division : Non-Muhammadan) : I would not have opened my mouth, but as we are proceeding I feel that the Government are bent upon suppressing and oppressing the Indian Press. If their only object is that incitement to murder must be stopped, we are all agreed to stop this incitement. If that was the only object, you do not want to a three day's discussion of this Bill. Now, Sir, I ask, why do you find so many people against the Treasury Bench? We in these benches have cried ourselves hoarse and why should the time of the House be wasted like this? Really we feel that the Honourable the Home Member wants to institute a system of slavery. I think that most of the Members of this House have experience of our Magistracy. I have practised in the courts for a quarter of a century, at least 27 or 28 years. I shall quote a specimen of a Magistrate in order to make my point clear. In the early part of 1904 or 1905, I appeared before a Magistrate of ten years standing. When I appeared in the first case, he had to acquit my clients and he then admired me. He said, "During my ten year's magistracy I have never acquitted a man, especially if it was a police case". Even in private cases when there was a medical certificate held by the complainant, he always convicted the accused. In my case the complainant had a medical certificate and he had to acquit the accused. That is the mentality of Magistrates. They take their orders from the superior officers like the District Magistrate or Police Superintendent. They are told they ought to have an elastic conscience. The District Magistrate's advice to him was that his conscience must permit of everything. He must carry out the orders of the District Magistrate. Even now a days the something is happening. If our Magistrates were really administering justice, there would not be any grievance at all. The Subordinate Magistrate simply has to obey the orders of the District Magistrate, which proceeds from the Commissioner of the Division or the Local Government or the India Government. That is the kind of mentality of our Magistrates. I do not know whether the Honourable the Home Member has practised in the law courts but he must have been a Magistrate in his younger days. All our fears are due to the mentality of our Magistrates. The law is not administered except according to the whim of the superior officers. I should say our Magistracy are not human beings. They are slaves who have to carry out the orders dinned into their ears by the Police Superintendent or the Magistrate of the district. That is the mode of the administration of justice by the Magistracy.

Now, Sir, I come to the motion of my friend, Sardar Sant Singh. Sir, my friend is asking that the Local Government should apply to the High Court. Now, where is the objection to that? If the Government are afraid because the High Court will be independent and will administer impartial justice to people and, that is perhaps the only ground on which they can oppose giving them this power because they will be in difficulty. But illustrations like, "Oh, the house is burning", "The British Empire is dwindling" are more dreadful illustrations. But as a matter of fact I do not think, none of us believes, that the house is really burning, or that the British Empire is crumbling, and so forth. Sir, the house is not burning, and the British Government will continue for long. So that this kind of alarmist argument is unreasonable and simply sophistry. Sir, we have amongst ourselves what are called Astikas and what are called Nastikas, believers and unbelievers in God. The latter class do not believe in God in spite of all his manifestations on earth. They do not see the real state of things. Now, please consider, why there are so many people who differ from the Government Bench? If they think, Sir, that we are so many mad people, and they think that they are the only sane and wise people, then why not send us to the lunatic asylum (Laughter)? If, however, they think we have some sense, some reason, then I tell them that, after reconsideration, after thinking over our objections, they should not persist in the error of their ways. Their action, instead of suppressing murders or putting a stop to incitement to murder, will recoil on them tenfold, and there will be ten times as many murders as are committed in the country to-day. (Hear, hear.) (Laughter from the Official Benches.) Sir, this is not the way! What is the real way? Sir, there was a time when the Europeans, were welcomed almost as Gods. I remember my old father saying half a century ago that he had implicit faith in these white people and that he had no faith in the dark people of this country, but, Sir, he had reasons for that, because that was the real state of things in those times,—I may tell you, that the Pandas of Jagannath welcomed even the Europeans and offered them free into the temple. But now, Sir, their crookedness and their avarice have soared very very high, and their behaviour....

Mr. President : The Honourable Member must address the Chair.

Mr. B. N. Misra : Why do they put themselves in the position (An Honourable Member : "Look towards the Chair") of enemies? Do they think it is a human thing to commit murders, is it natural that human beings should commit murders? I think you have experience and you know. (Laughter.) If a child cries, any one picks up the child out of sheer human sympathy? Sir, unless one's mind is abnormal or deranged, one never commits these murders. Then why do these people commit murders? I say, for their sins, for their actions: and they must think over their past karma, and their past actions.

Mr. President : The Honourable Member must address the Chair.

Mr. B. N. Misra : I am addressing the Treasury Benches through you, Sir. The Government officials must realize what their duty is; they must recall their own past actions and their own past deeds. Sir, somehow or other it is always beneficial to calculate our own actions, and to review our own sins and actions: I say those Government officials—who fall victims to these attacks. It must be due to their unreasonable and passionate actions and behaviour. They must think of it and should take a lesson from the consequences of their actions. The position, then, is that the present amendment proposes that the Local Government should apply to the High Court. That is an obviously reasonable motion which I think the whole House ought to carry.

Mr. Ram Prashad Narayan Sahi (Bihar and Orissa : Nominated Official) : On a point of information, Sir, may I ask the Honourable Member whether in the instance he previously gave us of the purport of his conversation with a Magistrate, the Magistrate was in his senses when he told him what he has told us?

Mr. B. N. Misra : I personally was told. I believe in their sober moods. (Laughter.)

Mr. President : The question is :

"That in sub-clause (1) of clause 4 for all the words beginning with the words 'the Local Government may, by notice in writing' and ending with the words 'wherever found in British India to be forfeited to His Majesty' the following be substituted :

'the Local Government may apply to the High Court for the local area in which such press is situate stating or describing the words or signs or visible representations which in its opinion are of the nature described above. The High Court shall decide in the manner hereinafter provided if the newspaper, book or other document in respect of which the application is made did contain any words, signs or visible representations of the nature described above.'"

The motion was negatived.

Sardar Sant Singh : Sir, I beg to move the following amendment which stands in my name :

"That in sub-clause (1) of clause 4 for all the words beginning with the words 'the Local Government may, by notice in writing' and ending with the words 'wherever found in British India to be forfeited to His Majesty' the following be substituted :

'the Local Government may authorize any person to file a complaint before the magistrate having jurisdiction in the place where the press is situate stating or describing the words, signs or visible representations which in its opinion are of the nature described above to proceed against the keeper of such a press. The magistrate thereupon shall proceed to try the accused in the manner provided in the Trial of Summons Cases in the Criminal Procedure Code Act V of 1908.'"

Sir, I am not going to make a speech in support of this amendment except to speak a few words. I know the Treasury Benches are not prepared under any circumstances to give power to the judicial authority to determine the question of guilt or innocence of the person proceeded against. The only justification which has been put forward is that it is an emergency measure and as such speedy action is required; and secondly they say that I have omitted to take into consideration the provisions of clause 23 providing for the examination and scrutiny of the acts of the Local Government by the High Court. To these two points my reply is this.

Mr. President : Order, order. I should like to invite the attention of Honourable Members to the manner in which the discussion is proceeding. It is a well recognised practice that when an alternative amendment is moved the old ground is not allowed to be covered because that is repetition. The Honourable Member has made a certain change in the second amendment which he is now moving, and he will be allowed to address the House to the extent of the new matter which is introduced in the alternative amendment. The Honourable Member in his first amendment wanted that the Local Government should be authorised to apply to the High Court. In the alternative amendment he says that the Local Government may authorise any person to file a complaint before a Magistrate. This is the only new matter he introduces; he will be required to restrict himself to such new matter only.

Sardar Sant Singh : I bow to the ruling of the Chair and I accept the suggestion. Therefore, I do not intend to make a speech as my suggestion is in the amendment itself. Sir, I beg to move.

The Honourable Sir C. P. Ramaswami Aiyar : Sir, I do not propose to say more on this point than that the amendment suffers from the same infirmities to which I have already drawn attention in the earlier parts of the discussion.

Mr. President : The question is :

"That in sub-clause (1) of clause 4 for all the words beginning with the words 'the Local Government may, by notice in writing' and ending with the words 'wherever found in British India to be forfeited to His Majesty' the following be substituted :

'the Local Government may authorize any person to file a complaint before the magistrate having jurisdiction in the place where the press is situate stating or describing the words, signs or visible representations which in its opinion are of the nature described above to proceed against the keeper of such a press. The magistrate thereupon shall proceed to try the accused in the manner provided in the Trial of Summons Cases in the Criminal Procedure Code Act V of 1908.'"

The motion was negatived.

Sardar Sant Singh : Sir, I beg to move the next amendment :

"That in sub-clause (1) of clause 4 for all the words beginning with the words 'the Local Government may, by notice in writing' and ending with the words 'wherever found in British India to be forfeited to His Majesty' the following be substituted :

'the Magistrate having jurisdiction in the place may by notice in writing to the keeper of such printing press shall call upon him, stating or describing the words, signs or visible representations which in his opinion are of the nature described above to show cause why in cases where security has been deposited such security or any portion thereof should not be declared to be forfeited to His Majesty or where no security has been deposited why his declaration under section 4 of the Press and Registration of Books Act, 1867, should not be annulled'."

I beg to move.

The Honourable Sir James Crerar (Home Member) : Sir, for the reasons explained already by my Honourable colleague, I cannot accept this amendment.

Mr. President : The question is :

"That in sub-clause (1) of clause 4 for all the words beginning with the words 'the Local Government may, by notice in writing' and ending with the words 'wherever found in British India to be forfeited to His Majesty' the following be substituted :

'the Magistrate having jurisdiction in the place may by notice in writing to the keeper of such printing press shall call upon him, stating or describing the words, signs or visible representations which in his opinion are of the nature described above to show cause why in cases where security has been deposited such security or any portion thereof should not be declared to be forfeited to His Majesty or where no security has been deposited why his declaration under section 4 of the Press and Registration of Books Act, 1867, should not be annulled'."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. S. C. Sen (Bengal National Chamber of Commerce : Indian Commerce) : Sir, I beg to move :

"That part (ii) of sub-clause (1) of clause 4 be omitted."

This clause is an innovation of the Select Committee, to whom the last Bill was sent for consideration. This was not in the original Press

3 P.M. Act of 1910 which was passed at a time of very great emergency and when the anarchist movement was at its height. The Legislature at that time did not think fit to put in a clause like that. Then after the lapse of some twenty years, the Press Act was introduced in the shape of an Ordinance by His Excellency the Viceroy. In that also this clause was not put in. That Ordinance was the most recent experience of the administration of this law in this country, but I do not think that up to now any complaint was made either by the Local Governments or by the Government of India about the absence of this clause. In the Bill which was again introduced in the Delhi Session, this clause was not also put in. That shows conclusively that the Government did not feel embarrassed by the absence of this clause. If so, why should this clause be added now ? No reason has been given why this clause should be added. In the report of the Select Committee we find this passage only :

"The latter portion of sub-clause (1), therefore, provides for the case where security has been deposited, and also for the case where security has not been deposited. In the latter case, as there is no other means of making the order effective, we have provided that the press itself may be forfeited. An application to the High Court will lie against this forfeiture."

Now, Sir, what was the state of things when the old Press Act was in existence or, when the Ordinance was in existence ? Did they feel any embarrassment because there was no such clause ? They say here, "There is no other effective means of making the order effective". Why ? The effect of this is that the keeper of the press would be debarred from carrying on his own business. To understand this let us see what was the preventive which they had and what is the preventive which they want now ? The same thing. Nothing more than that the keeper of the press would be prevented from carrying on his business. Moreover, there is another objection to this. If I pay the security, then I shall be entitled to invoke the aid of clause 13 of the Bill which says :

"Where any person has deposited any security under this Act and ceases to keep the press in respect of which such security was deposited, or, being a publisher, makes a declaration under section 8 of the Press and Registration of Books Act, 1867, he may apply to the Magistrate within whose jurisdiction such press is situate for the return of the said security ; and thereupon such security shall, upon proof to the satisfaction of the Magistrate and subject to the provisions hereinbefore contained, be returned to such person."

Now, there is that remedy. If I pay the security, I can come under this provision, that I do not want to keep the press. I want my license to be cancelled and therefore the Magistrate would return the security to me. In the other case if I fail to pay the security because it may be abnormal, beyond my power and I do not wish to carry on business, I cannot go before the Magistrate and my only remedy lies by an appeal to the High Court. Under these circumstances, I submit that this clause should be deleted.

Mr. S. C. Mitra : I cannot understand why, instead of for a fixed amount, the Government is for the forfeiture of the entire press. In fact a big press may cost a lakh of rupees or more and in that case it means a fine of a lakh of rupees, while for a small press which costs only Rs. 200, it means a fine of only Rs. 200, though the offence and its gravity may be the same in both the cases. I do not see why there should not be a fixed sum as contemplated in other clauses of the Bill. This means unequal punishment on different persons committing the same offence. I think that Government will even now consider whether they should not fix the amount and exclude the provision for the forfeiture of the press. I, therefore, support the amendment.

Pandit Satyendra Nath Sen (Presidency Division : Non-Muhammadan Rural) : Sir, we have watched with amazing interest how the Honourable the Home Member, sometimes backed by his worthy colleague, the Honourable the Law Member, has been unrelenting in regard to all the previous amendments that have been moved by us. But still I make bold to stand up to support this amendment and I do it not in the manner of a drowning man catching at a straw, but fully conscious of the fact that this is the most cruel and severest part of the Bill. Sir, I implore the Honourable the Home Member to give his best attention to this part of the Bill and I hope he will not object to this clause being deleted. I want to put one question to the Honourable the Home Member point-blank. Should we go on moving our amendments simply to be told by him that he has already given his best attention to these amendments in the Select Committee and he is not prepared to give further consideration to these amendments ? Sir, I doubt very much if the Honourable the Home Member or any other Honourable Member is in order when he refers to a Bill which is not before the House and the details of which we are not supposed to know, and I refuse to admit that a comparison with the original Bill is the criterion of propriety. Sir, I hope the Honourable the Home Member will yet see his way to accede to our request at least in this case.

The Honourable Sir James Crerar : I propose to reply immediately to the question which was put to me by the Honourable Member opposite, but to restrict myself entirely to the amendment which is before the House. I had occasion once before to point out to Honourable Members that on every amendment on which I have hitherto spoken in the course of the debate I have been able to show that, in the course of discussion, important changes had been made by Government in response to criticism which was being passed. We were able to do so even in the present case. If Honourable Members—and in this context I wish to refer to another clause of the Bill—if Honourable Members will refer to clause 5, which will come under consideration, they will see that a very important change is being made. The original clause 6 of the Bill provided that in certain circumstances both the security and the offending press should be forfeited. Now this is a very important change. The present clause which is now under discussion makes provision for two circumstances. If security has been deposited then that security is liable to forfeiture and in respect of that forfeiture an application can be made to the High Court. If security has not been deposited, then this clause enables the press itself to be forfeited and against that forfeiture too, an application lies to the High Court. But it is perfectly obvious that if the keeper of a press contumaciously refuses to obey an order of deposit, the deposit cannot be forfeited and therefore to give effect to the order, the press should be forfeited. This clause provides for it; the keeper of a press who desires to preserve his press from forfeiture can always do so by complying with the order to deposit security. If that security is forfeited, he has got his remedy before the High Court. I submit that not only does this clause comprise a perfectly reasonable provision, but it is a provision the omission of which would clearly be vital to the whole purpose of the Bill so far as presses are concerned.

Pandit Satyendra Nath Sen : I want to know one thing; will the press owner be allowed to make his deposit when the order of forfeiture has already been passed?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar : He has every opportunity of making his deposit when the order to deposit security has been made and he is given a reasonable interval to do it.

Mr. President : The question is :

“That part (ii) of sub-clause (1) of clause 4 be omitted.”

The motion was negatived.

Mr. S. C. Sen : Sir, I beg to move the next amendment which stands in my name, namely :

“That in the Explanation to sub-clause (1) of clause 4 the words ‘unless it has the tendency described in clause (a)’ be omitted.”

I move this because I have not understood the Explanation itself. It is suggested in the Report of the Select Committee that they have added this explanation as a safeguard for bona fide literary and historical writings. I do not see where the safeguard comes in. It says, “Unless it has the tendency described in clause (a)”. I do not understand what is the object of putting in these words, if you want books of this character to be published. The tendency described in clause (a) is, “incite to or encourage”—I do not comment on that—“or tend to incite to or encourage the commission of any offence of murder or any cognizable offence involving violence”. That is the tendency referred to in this clause. Now tendency has a much wider meaning than mere encouragement or incitement. Therefore, if under clause (a) incitement or encouragement have not been put in but only the words “tend to incite or encourage” a person reading such things, that would be sufficient and that would cover everything wanted by the clause (a). By adding these words “unless”, etc., you have taken away with one hand what you have given with the other. Under these circumstances I think it does not give any safeguard to the publisher of a book or historical writing, and I do submit these last words should be deleted if the Government are earnest and sincere in their desire to create a safeguard for the publishers of these books. Even the Gita would come under the definition; even a history about Shivaji would come under this. It would be impossible for any person writing a historical book to write it in such a way as will not, although he may not intend to do it, come within the purview of this clause.

Mr. Lalchand Navarai (Sind : Non-Muhammadan Rural) : Sir, I had no intention of speaking to-day, especially as I have not been well since yesterday; but I get up only to give a bit of advice to Members on this side of the House. It is no use. My advice to them is not to get up and move any more amendments. We have seen since yesterday what is happening. Government are passing this Bill in any way they like; they do not want to agree to any amendment that we have given notice of; we gave in 116 amendments, but I do not think that even one amendment will be accepted or passed. We realise on this side how few we are now and on the other side how many there are. But I thought I might say a word or two in order to tell the Government how all these arrangements are at their complete mercy and how they may be exercising their sense in agreeing to certain amendments which are very necessary. You are not asking for the amendment with regard to clause 3. With regard to this clause you are giving with one hand and taking away with the other. Read the Explanation for yourself; the Explanation says :

“No expression of approval or admiration made in a historical or literary work shall be deemed to be of the nature described in this sub-section unless it has the tendency described in clause (a).”

Up to the words “unless it has the tendency” it is all right. You are providing this Explanation in order to see that no approval or admiration is made punishable, but then you take it away with the other hand by saying “unless it has the tendency”. That means that it will be twisted in every case to mean that the admiration or approval has the tendency described in clause (a). I would therefore submit these few words as I am going away to-day and I think many other Members are also leaving to-day.

Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh : Sir, I do not want to make a speech, but I would seriously ask the Government to realise the reasonableness of this amendment, because in the speech which my Honourable friend the Law Member just made he was anxious to protect literary and historical writings. Now the retention of this expression "unless it has the tendency described in clause (a)" will effectively do away with the protection which the Government seek to afford. I will quote an instance. Suppose a print of the Gita is made by a printing press, and as my Honourable friend the Law Member himself has said, in the Gita or elsewhere in some historical or literary books, murder has been extolled under certain circumstances. If that particular book is printed from a particular press, and if it is followed by a murder elsewhere of some person, Indian or European, will it not, under these words, be quite open to the District Magistrate to say that this particular murder has been committed as a result of the publication of this book by the printing press? I want to be satisfied only on that, because as it stands it is liable to be misused and misapplied by some of the Magistrates. I hope under the circumstances the Government will see the reasonableness of this amendment and will agree to delete these words. They must seriously think over the matter. We know we are fighting a losing game; we have only to count up our losses, for gains we have had none; but I feel strongly on this point, and in order to protect documents of historical or literary value, I only make this appeal to the Government to think carefully before negating this motion.

Mr. Amar Nath Dutt : Sir, I wish to say a few words to the Honourable the Law Member to whom, I am sure, the Gita is as much sacred as to any Hindu on this side. Probably being far away in the South, he does not know the woeful tales in Bengal when there was a recrudescence of anarchy in my unhappy province, that there were repressive measures and indiscriminate searches made in the houses of several respectable gentlemen in my province, and the main target in those days of these myrmidons of the bureaucracy was this very sacred book the Gita. Wherever the Gita was found, it was snatched away. Probably, my friend the Law Member could not hear all about our sufferings and the oppression and the tyranny that was perpetrated upon the people of Bengal in those days.

The Honourable Sir C. P. Ramaswami Aiyar : I was Secretary of the Calcutta Congress of 1917.

Mr. Amar Nath Dutt : Then I think he should know more of the tyrannical misdeeds of the Government of those days in Bengal, and if he can convince us that the Government of the present day have improved their methods and they have really become a little more moral, and a little more respectful of truth and less vindictive than they were in those days, we shall not have much quarrel with him. But, Sir, I think during the short tenure of his office as Law Member, my friend must have seen how this Government are constituted, of what material they are made. If the material that constitutes the Government which makes these laws is of this type, one can imagine what their subordinates in the provinces are likely to be. If these people here show some sympathy, their subordinates when they get back to their provinces undo what is done here, people are afraid of them more than Yama the god of death. No doubt, some of them have some sympathy for us. In any case, I must frankly say, Sir, that Honourable Members opposite have not shown any wisdom whatsoever in the passage of this Bill. I submit considering the history of the bureaucracy for the past in this land, considering how they have acted, I think my friend the Honourable the Law Member should advise his temporary colleagues. . . .
 (An Honourable Member : "Permanent colleagues.")—I wish they were his permanent colleagues, but that permanency cannot last, because the Honourable Sir James Crerar might be appointed as Lieutenant-Governor of Bihar and Orissa, and Sir George Rainy as Governor of some other province. . . .

Mr. President : The Honourable Member should confine himself to the amendment before the House.

An Honourable Member : There is no Lieutenant-Governor for Bihar and Orissa. There is a Governor for that province now.

Mr. Amar Nath Dutt : Oh, I meant Governor, and not Lieutenant-Governor. What I was submitting was this, that the present Government are very ill-advised in launching a measure of this character. Really I wonder how, under the Law Membership of the present brilliant luminary of the Madras Bar, such an unhappy specimen of legislative draftsmanship as this could come before this House. I was really surprised, but I saw the Roman hand of some one else behind him, and probably he too was powerless to amend and alter the Bill as it ought to be. I hope, Sir, the Honourable the Law Member will see his way to persuade the Government to accept some of the amendments at least that have been moved, that he will be able to persuade the Honourable Member to accept some of them at least. With these words, I support the amendment.

The Honourable Sir C. P. Ramaswami Aiyar : Mr. President, I do not propose to follow the biographical excursions of my learned and respected friend, nor do I propose to deal more than is necessary with the subject matter of this particular amendment. The first remark that I wish to make is to invite the attention of Honourable Members to the minute of dissent penned by stalwart lovers of the freedom of the Press. It will be noticed that with reference to this particular clause, the Report of the Select Committee says this : "We have also added an Explanation which safeguards bona fide literary and historical writings". That is the Report of the Select Committee. The dissenting minute, succinct and admirably terse as it is but comprehensive with regard to the points on which it concentrated itself, is significantly silent on this matter, and therefore I am entitled to assume that the Leader of the Opposition and those who were associated with him in writing this minute did not think that this particular clause was obnoxious to all those charges which are levelled against it. I will leave the matter at that. But let me analyse the clause. It will be noticed that the main criticism of the Honourable Member who spoke first was with reference to the expression tendency in clause (a). "Tendency" there has reference obviously to the expression "tend to incite to or encourage". It is that expression which must be correlated with "tendency". Now, what does the Explanation say?

"No expression of approval or admiration made in a historical or literary work shall be deemed to be of the nature described in this sub-section unless it has the tendency described in clause (a)."

Surely, it cannot be said that a historical or literary work merely because it is historical or literary cannot have that tendency. What is sought to be done is to meet those words alone which have a tendency. As for the Gita, I have again to repeat what has already been stated that if Honourable Members will scrutinise (a) and (b), they will find there is absolutely no danger of any real classical book of that kind being used for the purpose which my friend fears. I do not wish to repeat what I have already said, but I submit that the fact that the dissenting minute does not refer to it shows that Honourable Members on the other side are as perfectly safe in their minds with regard to this matter as we are.

Mr. President : The question is :
 "That in the Explanation to sub-clause (1) of clause 4 the words 'unless it has the tendency described in clause (a)' be omitted."
 The motion was negatived.

Sardar Sant Singh : Sir, I am not moving this amendment.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad (United Provinces Southern Divisions : Muhammadan Rural) : Sir, I do not want to move this amendment as I want to withdraw it in favour of No. 51.

Sardar Sant Singh : Sir, as amendment No. 45 has been defeated, and this amendment No. 51 depends entirely upon the previous ones, I do not think there is any use in moving this amendment.

Mr. President : The question is :

"That clause 4 stand part of the Bill."

The motion was adopted.

Clause 4 was added to the Bill.

Mr. President : The question is that clause 5 do stand part of the Bill.

Sardar Sant Singh : I beg to move :

"That in sub-clause (1) of clause 5 for the words 'not being less than one thousand or more than ten thousand rupees' the words 'not exceeding double the amount which the keeper of such press has been previously ordered to deposit' be substituted."

Most of my Honourable friends do not realise the principle underlying this amendment. The point is this. In clause 3, the words as modified by the Select Committee are these :

".....may be required by the Magistrate before whom the declaration is made, for reasons to be recorded in writing, to deposit with the Magistrate within ten days from the day on which the declaration is made, security to such an amount, not being more than one thousand rupees....."

All the intervening words have been deleted by the Select Committee. Now, what is proposed in the present clause 5 is to demand security "to such an amount, not being less than one thousand or more than ten thousand rupees"; that is to say, discretion is given to the Magistrate to demand security, even 5 times, 6 times, or sometimes 20 times, the security demanded in the first instance. Supposing in the first instance the keeper of the press was called upon to deposit Rs. 500, and next time he is called upon to deposit Rs. 10,000, that amounts to 20 times, the original deposit required under clause 3. What I propose is that, instead of giving this discretion to the Magistrate, it should be restricted to double the amount originally deposited, the reason being that the guilt of the man has not been determined by any judicial authority; it is by executive action that it has been done, and therefore the discretion of the Magistrate should be restricted. With these few words, I move my amendment.

Mr. D. K. Lahiri Chaudhury : Sir, I rise to support the amendment moved by my Honourable friend. I have read the speech of the Honourable the Home Member who said that the Government were not anxious to have too drastic provisions and that they were anxious to provide for a course of action which should attain the ultimate purpose of the Bill without too much hardship or too much inconvenience. Is this the way in which the Honourable Member carries out his own statement made when he was moving that the Bill be referred to a Select Committee? If you wish to punish a man you can do so but in this case the punishment is so much heavier that it strikes one's conscience. With these words I support the motion of my friend Sardar Sant Singh.

Mr. S. C. Mitra : I support the motion of my friend Sardar Sant Singh. We think it our duty to put before you how the whole country will view these provisions. We know we are not in a majority. That should be no ground why we should not voice the feeling of the country as expressed in the Indian Press throughout the length and breadth but that each time the deposit should be doubled. Government have so much faith in their Magistrates and yet they do not trust them and consider that there must be a minimum beyond which they cannot go. That shows the mentality that is working in the official brain. As regards the amount it is really very heavy. Rs. 10,000 really means that the paper will cease publication. I think it will be still possible for Government to accept the very reasonable amendment of my friend Sardar Sant Singh.

The Honourable Sir James Crerar : In considering this amendment I should ask Honourable Members to compare the provisions of the Bill as introduced and the Bill as it is now before them. They will see, as I have already explained, that the original Bill provided in sections 5 and 6 of that Bill for the circumstances in which it should be within the discretion of the Magistrate to forfeit both the security deposited and the press. In response to suggestions which were made, we have agreed to abrogate in this particular context provision for the forfeiture of the press, and we have simply maintained the maximum amount of Rs. 10,000 prescribed in the original Bill. I must remind the House once more that that is a maximum and I am glad to see that my Honourable friend, Sardar Sant Singh, in explaining the principles of his amendment, assumed that the Magistrate would ask for a small amount in the first instance. In other words, he assumes that the Magistrate would use a reasonable discretion. Let him assume equally that, in taking security under this provision subject to a maximum of Rs. 10,000, the Magistrate will in accordance with his own hypothesis equally exercise a reasonable discretion. For these reasons I must oppose the amendment.

Mr. President : The question is :

"That in sub-clause (1) of clause 5 for the words 'not being less than one thousand or more than ten thousand rupees' the words 'not exceeding double the amount which the keeper of such press has been previously ordered to deposit' be substituted."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. Lalchand Navalrai : In view of the fate of the previous amendments and of the hopelessness of any amendment being carried, I do not move this* or any other amendment.

Mr. President : The question is that clause 5 stand part of the Bill. The motion was adopted.

Clause 5 was added to the Bill.

Mr. President : The question is that clause 6 stand part of the Bill.

Sardar Sant Singh : As this amendment depended entirely upon the previous amendments, I am not moving it†.

Mr. S. C. Mitra : Sir, I move :

"That in sub-clause (1) of clause 6 for the words 'declare—

(a) the further security so deposited, or any portion thereof, and

(b) all copies of such newspaper, book or other document wherever found in British India to be forfeited to His Majesty' the following be substituted :

'require to deposit with the magistrate within whose jurisdiction the press is situated a security in amount not more than five thousand rupees in money or the equivalent thereof in securities of the Government of India as the person making the deposit may choose'."

My main object is that there should be no forfeiture of the press. It seems, the law has really no concern with the enormity of the crime. The man having a larger press suffers more. I think in justice there should be an amount prescribed as fine every time and not forfeiture, irrespective of the capacity of the man. Even for a small crime, a big press might be forfeited altogether. This clause offends against the principle of law that the punishment should be proportionate to the crime. Sir, I move.

The Honourable Sir James Crerar : I think that if the Honourable Member will examine his amendment in the context of the clause which he seeks to amend, he will agree with me that it is somewhat misconceived. The proposal to enable the Local Government to require the keeper of a press to deposit security appears to presume that no security had already been required. I think the Honourable Member, in an earlier part of his remarks, observed that he was opposed to the principle of confiscating presses. Now what would the Honourable Member's amendment really effect? The relevant words of the clause as they would stand would read :

"If after security has been deposited the Local Government may require him to deposit with the Magistrate security of not more than Rs. 5,000...."

Now if action is to be taken under this section at all, it is that, upon the appearance of offending matter, the security which has already been deposited should be forfeited. It would be quite meaningless, to say that after the deposit of such security—which may in accordance with the provisions of the previous clause be in excess of the amount suggested by the

*"That in sub-clause (1) of clause 5, for the words 'ten thousand', the words 'four thousand' be substituted."

†"That in sub-clause (1) of clause 6, for all the words beginning with the words 'the Local Government may' and ending with the words 'to be forfeited to His Majesty' the following be substituted :

'the Local Government may proceed in the manner described in section 4, sub-section (2) '."

[Sir James Crerar.]

Honourable Member—it would be quite useless and meaningless to suggest that the only further action that the Government could take would be to demand a further security, without having already forfeited the security deposited. The Honourable gentleman made a great point of the amount of security demanded being reasonable proportionate to the merits of the case. But I must point out that the amount prescribed is the maximum, and the Magistrate and the Local Government have precisely that discretion which the Honourable Member urges ought to be provided for. I think that after this explanation the Honourable Member may perhaps be disposed not to press his amendment.

Mr. President : The question is :

“That in sub-clause (1) of clause 6 for the words ‘declare—

(a) the further security so deposited, or any portion thereof, and

(b) all copies of such newspaper, book or other document wherever found in

to be forfeited to His Majesty’ the following be substituted :

‘require to deposit with the magistrate within whose jurisdiction the press is situated a security in amount not more than five thousand rupees in money or the equivalent thereof in securities of the Government of India as the person making the deposit may choose’.”

The motion was negatived.

Clause 6 was added to the Bill.

Mr. President : The question is that clause 7 be added to the Bill.

Mr. S. C. Mitra : Sir, I move :

“That in sub-clause (1) of clause 7, after the word ‘newspaper’ occurring in the first line the words ‘if he is not also a keeper of a printing press’ be inserted.”

Sir, my point is that if a man is to start a newspaper, necessarily he must have a press also. By this clause it seems that he is required to deposit two securities ; and I think if the Government are not to be unduly oppressive on the new publishers of newspapers, they should accept my amendment. Sir, I move.

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer : Sir, this is a very important amendment ; and if only we had concentrated on a few amendments the previous day, I am sure we would have concentrated on this amendment. Sir, in Select Committee we urged upon the Government that it would be very improper to punish twice the same person, when the same person happens to be the keeper of the press as well as the publisher of a paper. In the old Press Act this thing was quite unknown, and in this Press Bill I think the Government need not unnecessarily have made it harsher by introducing this double security demanded from the keeper of the press, who generally also happens to be the publisher of a newspaper. Sir, if the Honourable the Home Member were to call for information as to how many newspapers there are in the country and who are the publishers of the newspapers and who are the keepers of presses, he will find that in the large majority of cases the keeper and the publisher happen to be one and the same person. I still urge upon the Government that they should concede this demand, this very legitimate demand that the Opposition have put forward, and I do hope they will not insist on and persist in doing what will ultimately be a double wrong to the keeper of a press when he also happens to be the publisher.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad : Sir, I had put down a motion to express the same object as this amendment seeks to do. My amendment is No. 78,* and I will not move my amendment but shall say what I have to say under this clause. Sir, I pointed out when we had the first discussion on this Bill, that this Bill violates five fundamental principles, and one of them was that one and the same person should not be punished twice for the commission of the same offence—once in the capacity of the owner of a printing press and a second time as a publisher. This is an entirely wrong principle, and I hope the Honourable the Home Member and the Honourable the Law Member will realize the difficulty and will agree to this very important amendment. Some Honourable Members suggest that the Government, under the intoxication of commanding a majority of the votes, will feel that we are talking nonsense, and whatever we may say, it will not have the slightest weight with them. Of course, they have their chance now ; but we also will have our chance in the next session.

Mr. D. K. Lahiri Chaudhury : Knowing the results of the amendments moved so far, I know, Mr. President, quite fully that there is no chance of getting any amendment passed by the House. Still I do protest.

An Honourable Member : Why are you then wasting the time of the House ?

Mr. D. K. Lahiri Chaudhury : Just wait and hear my arguments. The Honourable Member may think it mere waste of time, but there are occasions in human affairs when even a dumb mouth makes its futile protest. Sir, there are no human beings in the world who in any constitution of law can be punished for the same offence twice, at the same time in the same case, but it has been definitely laid down in this Bill that the printer of a press has to deposit a huge amount. Sir, it has been definitely pointed out by my Honourable friend that, even in Select Committee, the matter was discussed, and it has already been pointed out that in many cases the publisher and the pressman are the same. Under these circumstances I hope the Honourable Member will at least concede this point and will support this amendment.

The Honourable Sir James Crerar : Mr. President, I quite agree with my Honourable friend opposite, Mr. Ranga Iyer, that this is an important amendment. It is an amendment,

4 P.M.
Sir, to which Government have given careful consideration. It was considered very carefully in the Select Committee ; but I think a good deal of misapprehension exists as to what the precise position under the Bill is as compared with the original position. The original Act of 1910 prescribed that :

“Every publisher of a newspaper who is required to make a declaration under section 5, etc., shall at the same time be required to deposit with the Magistrate a sum not less than Rs. 500 or more than Rs. 2,000 as the Magistrate may in each case think fit to require : Provided that if the person registered under the said Act as printer of newspapers is also registered as the keeper of the press where the newspaper is printed, the publisher shall not be required to deposit security so long as such registration is in force.”

Now, Sir, the second clause of the same section went on to make certain prescriptions as to the second deposit of security by the publisher of a newspaper. Honourable Members if they examine the provisions of that

“That to clause 7, the following proviso be added :

‘Provided that no security will be demanded if the publisher is the owner of the press from whom security has already been demanded under clause 4’.”

[Sir James Crerar.]

section, will see that the effect is that the exemption provided in the first sub-section of the section to which I have referred did not extend to established newspapers. Consequently the effects of that clause and the exemptions so far as they exist were only for new newspapers. Honourable Members must recollect in this connection also that under the provisions of the original Bill, which followed in this respect the provisions of the Act of 1910, the Magistrate was required to take the deposit of security except when for special reasons he thought fit to dispense with it. That provision has now been changed and it has a very important bearing upon the present case. Secondly, we have provided in an earlier clause of the Bill for a provision that, if at the end of three months, the keeper of a press or publisher has not been responsible for the issue of any offending matter, his deposit is returned and he attains the position of the keeper of an established press or the publisher of an established newspaper. Now, I suggest to the House that this makes a very important change in the position. We have indeed taken great pains to provide, as far as possible, for the difficulties to which the Honourable Member has referred, and I must point out now that, if the amendment were accepted, the results would be as follows. It would lay itself open to a very plain and palpable means of evasion, because all that would be necessary for a publisher, who intended to publish objectionable matter and who wished to avoid the pains and penalties which the Bill would otherwise entail upon him, would be to proceed as follows. He could arrange with the keeper of some press which has already made a declaration and deposited it is a common practice with the kind of newspapers and presses which we wish to restrain.—I am glad to say they are a very limited number—to put up fictitious persons as publishers or keepers. The dummy editor and the dummy keeper are perfectly familiar to anybody who has studied this question. That is a means by which the provisions of this clause can be completely nullified, and in view of our experience of dummy editors and the like, there can be no doubt whatever that that expedient would be resorted to. Not only would this amendment permit of that easy and palpable means of evasion, but it would quite clearly and positively ensure my Honourable friend Mr. Ranga Iyer will agree with me—that the registration of the publisher of a newspaper should be properly effected. To be a publisher of a newspaper is a very responsible office. The law provides that he shall be rightly and correctly registered and for various other provisions of the law it is necessary that that registration should be a good and valid registration. Consequently I think we should be acting entirely wrongly if we adopted an amendment which invades very seriously a plain and reasonable proposition. The man who undertakes to be the publisher of a newspaper should, in accordance with the law of the land which is in existence independently of this Bill, carry out a true and valid registration.

To sum up, therefore, my objections to this amendment are three. Firstly, it infringes very seriously the purpose and the plain necessity and propriety of having a valid and correct registration of the publisher of a newspaper. Secondly, it provides a plain and palpable means of evasion which, having regard to the kind of newspapers which are mostly likely to come within the danger of this Bill, could not be allowed, as it would provide an expedient to which the controllers of such newspapers would certainly resort. Thirdly, I have already stated the position and explained that the effect of this clause, read with the other relevant clauses of the Bill, is to provide a very large measure of remedy for the particular trouble which is apprehended by the Honourable Members who support this amendment.

For these reasons I am unable—though I much regret it—to accept this amendment.

Mr. President : The question is.

“That in sub-clause (1) of clause 7 after the word ‘newspapers’ occurring in the first line, the words ‘if he is not also a keeper of a printing press’ be inserted.”

The motion was negatived.

Mr. S. C. Mitra : Sir, I beg to move :

“That in sub-clause (1) of clause 7 for the words ‘one thousand’ the words ‘five hundred’ be substituted.”

I think that after all our previous amendments have failed this amendment now stands even on a stronger basis because, when starting a newspaper, the owner of the press shall have to deposit Rs. 1,000, and it may be possible for Government now at least to diminish the amount so far as the publisher of the newspaper is concerned. As a matter of fact, if anybody has to deposit Rs. 2,000 on two accounts, once as owner of the press and again as publisher of a newspaper, it will be really killing the future enterprise of starting any newspaper in India.

I should just like to say one word as regards the point raised by my friend Kunwar Ismail Ali Khan about the waste of time. He may think so, but I think, Sir, it lies with you to consider whether it is really any waste of time. If he reads the constitutions of other parts of the civilised world, he will find that, after the election, it is always found that one party is in a majority and the other is in a permanent minority; and the duty of the constitutional opposition is always to put before the House and the country, Sir, their view point. It is not so much that we win a division, but we have to represent truly our constituencies, and as such you will allow me to propose all my amendments if I think it to be in the best interests of the country. I find that the Honourable gentleman is not in the House now, but I do not think it is a waste of time at all and I consider it my duty to press all the points that I think should be raised in the best interests of the country.

The Honourable Sir James Crerar : Sir, I must point out that this amendment, except that it refers to a newspaper instead of to a press, refers to circumstances which are practically identical with those which we have already considered in sub-clause (1) of clause 3; and I do not therefore propose to recapitulate the arguments used on that occasion.

Mr. President : The question is :

“That in sub-clause (1) of clause 7 for the words ‘one thousand’ the words ‘five hundred’ be substituted.”

The motion was negatived.

Mr. S. C. Mitra : Sir, I beg to move :

“That in the proviso to sub-clause (1) of clause 7 for the words ‘three thousand’ the words ‘one thousand’ be substituted.”

[2ND OCTOBER 1931.]

[Mr. S. C. Mitra.]

I know my argument will be more or less the same as I put forward on the last motion, but I fear the Honourable the Home Member could not catch my point. I say that once you have by the previous clauses the right of full demand of Rs. 1,000, the present clause stands on a weaker foundation. It is an additional demand for a newspaper publisher. The publisher of a newspaper shall have to pay as the Government demand under this clause. It is different now because there will already be a deposit with the Government by the owner of the press. So in the case of the publisher they should consider whether the amount may be diminished at least to a certain extent.

Sir, I move.

The Honourable Sir James Crerar : I have nothing to add to what I have said on the previous amendment.

Mr. President : The question is :

“ That in the proviso to sub-clause (1) of clause 7 for the words ‘ three thousand ’ the words ‘ one thousand ’ be substituted.”

The motion was negatived.

Mr. President : The question is that clause 7 stand part of the Bill.

The motion was adopted.

Clause 7 was added to the Bill.

Mr. President : The question is that clause 8 stand part of the Bill.

Sir Lancelot Graham (Secretary, Legislative Department) : I have a formal amendment to move under clause 8 to the following effect :

“ That in sub-clause (1) of clause 8 for the words ‘ deposited as required by ’, the words ‘ ordered to be deposited under ’ be substituted.”

The reason for this formal amendment is the amendment of sub-clause (1) of clause 7, by which 10 days’ grace was provided in the case of a new newspaper. A similar amendment, Honourable Members will remember, was made in sub-clause (3) of clause 3 in respect of new presses, and in pursuance of that amendment, an amendment was made in clause 4 in the language which I have now proposed to be used in clause 8. It is needless to say that the amendment which I am now proposing ought to have been included as a consequential amendment in the Report of the Select Committee. It was actually noted for inclusion, but by some oversight it was omitted. Honourable Members will see that the amendment is necessary because you now have two classes of presses. You have presses which have deposited security, and you have presses which have been ordered to deposit their security but have not yet deposited it. It is, therefore, incorrect in clause 8 to deal only with persons whose security has been deposited. You have also to deal with cases where deposits have been ordered to be made but the deposit has not been made. That is the purpose of the amendment.

The motion was adopted.

Mr. President : The question is that clause 8, as amended, stand part of the Bill.

The motion was adopted.

Clause 8, as amended, was added to the Bill.

Mr. President : The question is that clause 9 stand part of the Bill.

Sardar Sant Singh : Sir, I beg to move :

“ That in sub-clause (1) of clause 9 the words ‘ or any other newspaper which is the same in substance as the said newspaper ’ be omitted.”

Sir, my reason in moving this amendment is that this amendment aims at protecting the indiscriminate exercise of discretion on the part of the Magistrates. These words “ which is the same in substance as the said newspaper ” are so vague and so general that almost every newspaper can be covered by this phrase. Now suppose a particular paper has been penalised. A person comes forward with a declaration in the name of a newspaper ; this person is different, the press is different and the name of the newspaper is different from the one penalised. Thus everything is changed. But how on earth can any Magistrate say that in substance it is the same unless there is something in the mind of the Magistrate which nobody can fathom ? This will give a handle to the Magistrate to refuse declaration. Therefore, my submission is that we should keep the dignity of law and use words which are capable of some meaning. I know that reason does not hold good in the discussion of this measure. I know that in carrying forward all their wishes, the executive are bent upon using any language by which they can kill any person they like. By person I do not mean actual physical person, but his trade and profession. Therefore, I submit that there is something like judicial honesty which is at stake. What is the meaning of these words, “ which is the same in substance as the said newspaper ” ? Unless the power of reading the minds of others is given to human beings, this power will be exercised in the most tyrannous manner possible. Therefore my submission is that there should be some decency left in the Bill.

The Honourable Sir James Crerar : I think it will be apparent to the House, Mr. President, that the particular words objected to in this amendment have been inserted and were indeed contained in the Act of 1910 in order to provide against a very simple evasion. If these words or words with this purport were not inserted, it is possible for the publisher of a newspaper to make some purely formal changes in the title, formal and general get up of his newspaper, but continuing nevertheless on precisely the same old lines and yet plead that he was not the publisher of a newspaper which had been found to offend.....

Sardar Sant Singh : May I know who will be the judge of whether it is in substance the same old paper ?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar : In the first instance it will be the Magistrate who will be the judge, and he will probably be most familiar with the antecedents of the newspaper, and therefore I suggest that he is the proper person to judge. I maintain therefore that the substance of this phrase in the clause is quite essential. I do not myself see any objection to the particular phraseology employed, which has passed the scrutiny of several generations of draftsmen ; but if it is merely a question of verbal amendment and not a question of substance, I regret that the Honourable Member has not himself suggested some feasible alternative. If it is on the question of substance that he stands, then I also must stand on the question of substance.

Mr. President : The question is :

The motion was negatived.

Sardar Sant Singh : Sir, I beg to move.....

The Honourable Sir James Crerar : May I point out to the Honourable gentleman before he moves this amendment* that, contrary to what has been imputed to the Government Benches, I have accepted the Honourable Member's amendment already and incorporated it in the Bill.

Mr. President : The question is that clause 9 stand part of the Bill. The motion was adopted.

Clause 9 was added to the Bill.

Clauses 10 to 17 were added to the Bill.

Mr. President : The question is that clause 18 stand part of the Bill.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad : Sir, I beg to move :

"That in sub-clause (1) of clause 18 after the word 'Whoever' the word 'knowingly' be inserted."

My object in moving this is to protect illiterate newspaper boys who will be hit very hard by this clause. They are the people who sell and they do not know what they are selling, and it is rather hard upon them if they are to be punished without their having knowingly committed any offence. With these words I move my amendment.

Mr. D. K. Lahiri Chaudhury : I rise to support this amendment, Sir. My reason is this : for instance these little boys who sell papers do not know the law. Of course ignorance of law is no excuse, but still in the case of these little boys and illiterate hawkers, they should not be punished unnecessarily. I support the amendment.

Sardar Sant Singh : Sir, I do not agree with the word "knowingly" being placed before the word "makes"; but I do agree with the principle underlying this Bill (Laughter from the Government Benches.)—I mean the principle underlying this amendment. We can see that very wide powers are given and a criminal offence created by this clause. Suppose for the sake of argument that an unauthorised newspaper is published and sent to me by post and it is lying on my table and there the clients have access to it. I am an offender under this Act because I publicly exhibit a paper without even knowing whether it is published as an unauthorised or authorised publication. Under the circumstances you will be punishing a man not for committing an offence, but for not being careful enough to know that an offence has been committed by another person without his knowledge and he happened to keep the incriminating paper on his table.

Mr. K. Ahmed (Rajshahi Division : Muhammadan Rural) : Ignorance of law is no excuse.

"That in sub-clause (1) of clause 9, after the words 'in securities of the Government of India' the words 'as the person making the declaration may choose' be added"

Sardar Sant Singh : But ignorance of fact is an excuse. This is a mistake of fact, and if you have ever cared to study the Penal Code, you will find the distinction there between a mistake of fact and a mistake of law. There are two phrases used in the criminal law. This is a mistake of fact and not a mistake of law, and as such a mistake of fact is always excusable. This amendment proposes that this mistake of fact should be excused and not made punishable.

Mr. S. G. Jog (Berar Representative) : Sir, we have practically reached the middle stage (Honourable Members : "The last stage.") of the battle, or rather the battle of words that was begun six months ago. Fortunately there was a truce for some time, but in this session the battle has been reopened again. We have reached the middle stage now—and probably we will reach the end very soon—and it is a foregone conclusion on which side the victory will lie. But how far the victory would be ugly.....

Mr. President : The Honourable Member should restrict himself to the amendment that is before the House.

Mr. S. G. Jog : I may bring it to the notice of the House, and especially the occupants of the Treasury Benches, that in the criminal law there is a principle and a very important principle which is known as the mens rea. This expression, I think, must be familiar even to the Law Member. (Laughter.) The words "mens rea" mean criminal intention. In any act, in any offence, whatever that may be, there must be that criminal intention in the mind of that man. Unless that criminal intention is there, or unless that criminal intention is established in a proper court of law, no man can be charged with any offence.

Mr. K. Ahmed : What is the meaning of "knowingly" ?

Mr. S. G. Jog : Knowingly means one who does an act knowingly.

Mr. President : Order, order : please continue your observations.

Mr. S. G. Jog : Very well, Sir. This is the first elementary principle of law, and I think an attempt has made to give a go-by to this elementary principle of law in this way. I will give the House a typical instance. Take the grocers' shops. Sometimes these papers are purchased as waste paper in bundles. You buy some article, the grocer packs it up in one of those authorised or unauthorised papers, and hands over the article to you. Would that grocer come under this law or not ? As the clause stands, I am afraid the grocer will certainly come under this, and he will be punishable. If this law is made, then you will punish innocent people. I do not know what to call this law, whether to call it a law or a lawless law. I submit that the amendment proposed is absolutely necessary, and I think the Mover of the Bill will be kind enough to accept it.

Mr. S. C. Mitra : Sir, I support this motion. I did not give notice of this amendment because I thought that it was implied in the clause itself that, when there is any such sale or distribution, it necessarily connotes that the man is punishable only when the criminal intention is proved against him, but when the question has been raised, I find that Government are not in a mood to accept it. I think they now intend to punish anybody and everybody who may sell or distribute or who may happen to have a copy of any of these unauthorised publications. So if the Government oppose the amendment, I think it is necessary to make it clear that the criminal intention, as in all other criminal cases, should be proved against the man before he is found guilty under this section. Sir, with these words, I support my friend.

[2ND OCTOBER 1931.]

The Honourable Sir C. P. Ramaswami Aiyar : Sir, my Honourable and learned friend opposite said that even the Law Member must be aware of what he termed "mens ree". I take it that what he really meant was "mens rea", which is a criminal intention. I have the good fortune or misfortune of knowing what mens rea indicates in law, but without wasting more time on the discussion whether the Law Member is aware of this term or not, I shall go to the substance of the matter at once. It will be remembered that these provisions relate to unauthorised news-sheets or newspapers, and the mischief of these news-sheets or newspapers lies in the fact that they are circulated largely and they gain a certain amount of hold upon people, and it is therefore necessary to deal with that evil. Now, how is that evil to be dealt with? In the first place, some remarks were made with regard to exhibiting or keeping. If Honourable Members will look carefully into clause 18, they will find that it is stated there—"Whoever makes, sells, distributes, publishes or publicly exhibits or keeps for sale.....", the disjunctive construction is the one which is indicated by the way that sentence runs, so that those Honourable Members who are afraid that their clients may look at some papers on their tables and that on account of that information percolating to the police they may be arrested, need not be under any such apprehension.....

Sardar Sant Singh : May I draw the attention of the Honourable the Law Member to the word "publishes"?

The Honourable Sir C. P. Ramaswami Aiyar : "Whoever makes, sells, distributes, publishes or publicly exhibits.....". A lawyer keeping a pamphlet on the table does not publish it, and it is well known what publication either in the law of libel or otherwise connotes, and I take it that a lawyer keeping that pamphlet on his table does not publish it. That apart, the whole question is this. It will be noticed that this is only a clause which defines an offence. It does not mean that a news-boy who runs about is necessarily to be punished. It means that a prosecution is permissible in cases where it is called for; it will not be called for in such cases. But I will put the other side of the case for the moment. Supposing a person having been responsible for these pamphlets simply hands them over to a hundred different people and asks them to go round the city to make them public, what is the remedy? If Honourable Members will realise that, they will see that the object of this section is only to make a thing punishable and not to make it obligatory on Government to start a prosecution.

Mr. President : The question is :

"That in sub-clause (1) of clause 18 after the word 'Whoever' the word 'knowingly' be inserted."

The motion was negatived.

Sardar Sant Singh : Sir, I beg to move :

"That in sub-clause (2) of clause 18 for the word 'non-bailable', the word 'bailable' be substituted."

The Honourable Sir James Crerar : The Honourable Member will perhaps pardon me if I interrupt him. It might perhaps save the time of the House if I point out that this is another occasion on which I have accepted the amendment proposed by the Honourable Member, and it has been incorporated in the Bill before the House. I am afraid he has not gone through the Bill very carefully. The amendment has already been made in the Bill.

Sardar Sant Singh : Have you already incorporated it in the Bill?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar : Yes, Sir.

Sardar Sant Singh : Thank you.

Clause 18 was added to the Bill.

Clauses 19 to 22 were added to the Bill.

Mr. President : The question is that clause 23 stand part of the Bill.

Sardar Sant Singh : Sir, I do not wish to move this* amendment.

Mr. B. Das : Sir, I beg to move the following amendment :

"That for clause 23 the following be substituted :

'23. Any person against whom an order calling upon him to give security has been made and any person interested in the press which is ordered to be forfeited may appeal to the High Court for the local area in which such order was made to set aside such order.'

Sir, this seems to have been drafted in a much better manner than the drafting in the Bill. One thing that we want to safeguard is that if any press is encumbered, then the person to whom the property is mortgaged, should be allowed to appear and appeal to the High Court for recovery of his dues. For that reason I move this amendment, and I hope the Honourable the Law Member will accept it.

The Honourable Sir C. P. Ramaswami Aiyar : The Honourable Member is not surely pressing this, because he will realise if he scrutinises it, that if this amendment be carried, there would be no recourse to the High Court if there was a forfeiture of security.

Mr. President : The question is :

"That for clause 23 the following be substituted :

'23. Any person against whom an order calling upon him to give security has been made and any person interested in the press which is ordered to be forfeited may appeal to the High Court for the local area in which such order was made to set aside such order.'

The motion was negatived.

Mr. S. C. Mitra : I am afraid my amendment No. 95 is barred by the previous motion, but if you will allow me to move it, I shall do so.

Mr. President : The Honourable Member may move it. The question will be considered if a point of order is raised.

Mr. S. C. Mitra : I beg to move :

"That in sub-clause (1) of clause 23 for the word 'sub-section' occurring in line three the words 'sub-sections (1) and' be substituted."

My amendment really gives power to the High Court to revise any order that is passed by the District Magistrate. There is some provision in the earlier clauses that the Magistrate, while giving notice for security, should also put forth his arguments. It may not be a judicial trial, but if my amendment is accepted, it will give the High Court power of revision to go through the order. The Magistrate may not be bound to give reasons, but if any reasons are given, then the High Court will be in a position to see if there are adequate grounds for passing such orders. Sir, I move.

"That Clause 23 be omitted."

The Honourable Sir James Crerar : The Honourable Member was commendably brief in moving his amendment, and he asked the House to approve of the proposition that an order made under sub-clause (1) of clause 3 should be made subject to an application to the High Court. When we were debating clause 3 of the Bill, that particular question was exhaustively scrutinised, and I shall imitate the Honourable the Mover's brevity by recalling very shortly to the House what the contentions then advanced were.

It was pointed out that a Magistrate proceeding under sub-clause (1) of clause 3 naturally was not acting upon matter which offends under clause 4 of the Bill. We have provided remedies against any inconvenience or hardship that might be occasioned, firstly, by requiring the Magistrate to record his reasons for passing an order of that kind, which makes it liable to the scrutiny of the Local Government, and secondly, by the other proviso to that clause, more particularly the provision that if the keeper of the new press has not offended within three months of the declaration, his deposit will be automatically returned. In short, the general grounds of my opposition to the amendment are those which have already been indicated. If the keeper of the press fails and his security is forfeited, then at that stage recourse to the High Court becomes both admissible and practicable. I oppose the amendment.

Mr. President : The question is :

"That in sub-clause (1) of clause 23 for the word 'sub-section' occurring in line three the words 'sub-sections (1) and ' be substituted."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. S. C. Sen : I beg to move :

"That in sub-clause (1) of clause 23, after the words 'the High Court shall decide' the following be inserted :

'whether the notice for deposit of security or of forfeiture was given in strict conformity to the provisions of this Act and '."

Sir, both under the Act of 1910 and this Bill, certain provisions have been made regarding notice calling for security and of forfeiture. In both the enactments, it is provided that a description of the words complained of, a description of the figures complained of, etc., should be given in the notice. Lord Sinha, then he was Mr. Sinha, in supporting the Bill of 1910, considered this provision as one of the most valuable safeguards against official zoolum. In this House also, if I remember correctly, the Honourable the Law Member considered that it was obligatory on the Local Government to describe the words, etc., and he also regarded this provision as one of the safeguards. How is this safeguard to be provided for? Supposing the Local Governments, as they have hitherto done, do not describe in the notice the words complained of, what would happen then? No provision has been made to meet such a contingency. As a matter of fact, Sir Lawrence Jenkins in the well known Comrade case held that having regard to the language of the Act, his hands were tied and he could not do anything in the matter, that he could not enter into the question whether the notice was good, bad or indifferent. Let me quote his words :

"The notification, therefore, appears to me to be defective in a material particular, and but for section 22 of this Act, it would, in my opinion, be our duty to hold that there had been no legal forfeiture."

That was his opinion. He felt constrained to find that, although the notice was bad, although the notice was defective and did not comply with the express provisions of the Act,—which the late Lord Sinha considered to be a safeguard—he could not do anything in the matter. I want to provide against that. It may be said that you should leave the matter to the discretion of the Local Government, that you should not consider that the Local Government are so bad that they would not frame their notice in the manner provided in the Act. But from the report of the Comrade case you will find that not only the notice was bad but the Advocate General of Bengal was instructed to take this point and to oust the jurisdiction of the High Court to consider whether the notice was good, bad or indifferent. Again, if it be held that the notification was invalid, there would be in fact no forfeiture. Moreover the High Court has no jurisdiction to inquire into the validity of the forfeiture for two reasons. First, it is barred under the corresponding section, to clause 30, and secondly under section 17, under which this application is made, the High Court is given power to set aside an order of forfeiture on the one narrow ground, namely, that the newspaper or book or other document in respect of which an order was made did not contain the words, etc. Clause 30 and again clause 23 which we are now considering, show that the matter which the High Court should take into cognisance is that the High Court shall decide if the newspaper or other document in respect of which an order was made did or did not contain any words, etc. The only function of the High Court in this case would be to consider this particular question and no others. Again under clause 25 :

"If it appears to the Special Bench on an application under sub-clause (1) of section 23 that the words, signs or visible representations contained in the newspaper, book or other document in respect of which the order in question was made were not of the nature described in section 4, sub-section (1), the Special Bench shall set aside the order."

The only question which the High Court can decide is the question whether the articles complained of or the book complained of contained these words or not. If so, the very salutary provision which was put into the Act of 1910 and which Mr. Sinha considered to be of vital importance and a safeguard to the accused and which the Law Member here also considered to be necessary cannot be gone into by the High Court having regard to the provisions of the Bill. Therefore I move my amendment. I have also similar amendments to clauses 25 and 30. These are amendments standing in my name, Nos. 103 and 114.† Moreover having regard

† "That in sub-clause (1) of clause 25 after the words and figures ' of section 23 that ' the following be inserted :

'whether the notice for deposit of security or of forfeiture was given in strict conformity to the provisions of this Act and '."

"That in clause 30, after the words ' has taken place ', the following be inserted :
'provided the notice of forfeiture was made in strict conformity to the provisions of this Act '."

to the express provision made in the Bill and to the declaration made by the Honourable the Home Member, it would not look nice for the Government now to contend that, although these words are necessary, that notice should be given in accordance with the provisions of the Act, still we will not allow the High Court to enter into this question. If the Government are really sincere, they ought not to object to the addition of these words which I have suggested in my amendment.

Sardar Sant Singh : I rise to support this amendment. Its necessity has become greater on account of the defeat of all the amendments which attempted to judicialise the proceedings. The executive are required to comply with the forms of procedure at any rate as they themselves propose. If they do not want to accept this reasonable amendment, it means that the executive do not want to comply with the provisions of this Act. A case like this may arise. Without notice or a single word a press is forfeited and taken away. There is no remedy. The person who has suffered will not be given an opportunity to understand what were the words or expressions which he used which were considered objectionable by the executive. Of course he will have a right to go to the High Court. The High Court will not look into the question whether the notice was good, bad or indifferent. The High Court says, "Here is a newspaper. If the executive have not chosen to point out the words, signs or visible representations which are objectionable in their view, then we will not look into it". The Public Prosecutor will get up and say "I press the point. Page 5 is objectionable and the forfeiture was justified". The High Court says, "No, the words on page 5 are not objectionable". Then the Public Prosecutor will say, "There are some more objectionable passages in other pages". So, I say, Sir, that this will make the Act very loose and the executive will act in a high-handed manner. I therefore strongly urge that this portion should be included in the clause. I support this amendment.

Mr. Amar Nath Dutt : I think my friend the Law Member will not deny that it is an elementary principle of law that the accused should know the charge against him.

5 P.M.
In civil cases also there is the provision that a plaintiff should disclose a cause of action so that the defendant knows what the case is against him. And the plaintiff is also given a chance of knowing what the defendant has to say against the plaintiff's case. If that is so in a civil case, it is all the more necessary in a criminal case, which deals with the life and liberty of the people. That being so, the man who is going to be fined under the provisions of this Bill ought to know from the very beginning the facts upon which the executive bases its charge. Those who have experience of the subordinate Magistracy know too well how often notices under sections 107, 108 and 110 have been declared invalid by superior courts. I believe in many cases invalid notices are intentionally issued. I do not say that Government keep in service Magistrates who do not know the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code. The only other conclusion to which we will be entitled to come to is that Magistrates intentionally prostitute their office and do not make mention of the real facts under which these men are hauled up. I think the Honourable the Home Member held the office of a District Judge for some time and I think he had on several occasions to set aside the order of the subordinate Magistracy and I trust the Honourable the Law Member had experience of the fact that notices were often given which were not according to law, and the party aggrieved had not the means to know what the real charges against them were, and, Sir, as my Honourable friend, Sardar Sant Singh, has been pleased to observe, they can, without giving proper notice, without going to the High Court, simply say, "The offensive article is found on page 1 or 2 or 3 or 4 or 5 and so on". That being so, if the Government really do not want to invest Magistrates with further powers of oppression and tyranny, they ought to have safeguards at least for those proprietors of presses who are entitled to ask that, "At least let us know what you complain of, so that we may prove beyond the shadow of a doubt that we are not guilty". If your intention is that everything is to be done by executive order, of course we have nothing to say; but if you are really sincere, after our having pointed out to you these facts, you should not object to the motion.

Mr. S. G. Jog : Sir, if one can see through the provisions of the Bill, he will see that it is a double-object Bill. With one object an attempt is made to control the Press; and another hidden object is to control the powers of the High Court. The fact is that the executive authorities now somehow or other are losing confidence in these High Courts, and they think that if they must do the job in their own way, they must curtail and control the powers of the High Court by such legislative measures. As regards the question of notices—how the processes are issued, how they are manipulated in the offices, through whose hands they pass, and what sorts of irregularities are done, that is a matter which is within the common knowledge of those who have to deal with courts. There are a number of irregularities committed in the issue of notices, in the service of notices; and if an adverse order is passed which goes against the interests of the printer or publisher, what is he to do? Now after the chapter of the executive processes is finished, we enter upon the powers of the High Court which were described by the Honourable the Law Member the other day. Now the High Courts have to exercise their powers; but this Bill says, "No, you shall not look into the whole matter carefully but your powers are restricted; you must only decide this much and no further; you are not to go behind all this". I say, Sir, what propriety is there for curtailing the powers of the High Court in this way? If an irregularity is done, does the executive authority mean that the High Court should be powerless in setting aside orders which have not been passed in conformity with the provisions of law, and that there should be no remedy for that, and that even fetters should be put on the powers of the High Court? Sir, this is an attempt to encroach upon the ordinary powers of the High Courts, and I submit that the amendment moved should be accepted.

The Honourable Sir C. P. Ramaswami Aiyar : Sir, let us analyse clause 3, sub-clause (3) and clause 7, sub-clause (3), which are the two clauses dealt with in section 23. Clause 3, sub-clause (3) says that certain persons should be given notice by the Local Government stating or describing such words, signs or visible representations and so forth. Therefore a notice has first of all to go to the keeper of the press, under clause 3, sub-clause (3), indicating clearly what the words, signs and visible representations are which are supposed to be obnoxious to the law. Under clause 7, sub-clause (3), there are practically identical provisions. Then we come to clause 23. It is to the keeper of the press who has been ordered to deposit security under sub-section (3) of section 3; to the express provision made in the Bill and to the declaration made by the Honourable the Home Member, it would not look nice for the Government now to contend that, although these words are necessary, that notice should be given in accordance with the provisions of the Act, still we will not allow the High Court to enter into this question. If the Government are really sincere, they ought not to object to the addition of these words which I have suggested in my amendment.

Sardar Sant Singh : I rise to support this amendment. Its necessity has become greater on account of the defeat of all the amendments which attempted to judicialise the proceedings. The executive are required to comply with the forms of procedure at any rate as they themselves propose. If they do not want to accept this reasonable amendment, it means that the executive do not want to comply with the provisions of this Act. A case like this may arise. Without notice or a single word a press is forfeited and taken away. There is no remedy. The person who has suffered will not be given an opportunity to understand what were the words or expressions which he used which were considered objectionable by the executive. Of course he will have a right to go to the High Court. The High Court will not look into the question whether the notice was good, bad or indifferent. The High Court says, "Here is a sign or visible representations which are objectionable in their view, then we will not look into it". The Public Prosecutor will get up and say "I press the point. Page 5 is objectionable and the forfeiture was justified". The High Court says, "No, the words on page 5 are not objectionable". Then the Public Prosecutor will say, "There are some more objectionable passages in other pages". Sir, this is an attempt to encroach upon the ordinary powers of the High Courts, and I submit that the amendment moved should be accepted.

The Honourable Sir C. P. Ramaswami Aiyar : Sir, let us analyse clause 3, sub-clause (3) and clause 7, sub-clause (3), which are the two clauses dealt with in section 23. Clause 3, sub-clause (3) says that certain persons should be given notice by the Local Government stating or describing such words, signs or visible representations and so forth. Therefore a notice has first of all to go to the keeper of the press, under clause 3, sub-clause (3), indicating clearly what the words, signs and visible representations are which are supposed to be obnoxious to the law. Under clause 7, sub-clause (3), there are practically identical provisions. Then we come to clause 23. It is to the keeper of the press who has been ordered to deposit security under sub-section (3) of section 3; that is, it is to the man to whom notice has been given, as indicated already, in which notice are contained those words and visible representations, etc., that it applies. Supposing it applies, then the High Court has to consider and decide if the newspaper, book or other document in respect of which the order was made did offend—it is not to wander at large from page to page, as was stated. A specific order should have been made, which is complained of, and that order has to describe, under clause 3 and clause 7, the particular signs or visible representations, and the High Court has to decide if that order was within the law or not. If, on the other hand, there have been such fundamental irregularities, the order would not be within the law and would not have been held to have been passed under the relevant clause as the High Court would say. "There is no such word or sign or representation as you are supposed to have uttered, and there is therefore no order which you have infringed, and you are acquitted". That I submit is the answer to the question put.

Mr. Amar Nath Dutt : Then what is your objection to have it put down more clearly ?

Mr. President : The question is :

"That in sub-clause (1) of clause 23, after the words 'the High Court shall decide' the following be inserted :

'whether the notice for deposit of security or of forfeiture was given in strict conformity to the provisions of this Act and ...'

The motion was negatived.

Clause 23 was added to the Bill.

Clause 24 was added to the Bill.

Mr. President : The question is that clause 25 stand part of the Bill.

Mr. S. C. Mitra : Sir, I move :

"That in sub-clause (1) of clause 25, for the words 'the order shall stand' the words 'the opinion of the Chief or Senior-most Judge shall prevail' be substituted."

The clause at present runs thus :

"(1) Where there is no such majority which concurs in setting aside the order in question, the order shall stand."

Now the ordinary procedure in High Courts in cases where there is a difference of opinion and there is equality of opinion on both sides, is that the opinion of the Chief or senior-most Judge prevails. My argument is that where the senior Judge of the High Court differs from his brother as regards the guilt of a person, the rule is that the accused gets the benefit of doubt ; I do not see why the general and ordinary procedure should not be followed in these cases, where it is supposed that a High Court Judge is in the position of holding that the person concerned is not guilty ; and I do not see why the opinion of the Chief or senior-most Judge should not prevail in such cases also.

The Honourable Sir James Crerar : Sir, I think the Honourable Member's amendment has been moved under some misapprehension. All the High Courts and Chief Courts of India and nearly all the Judicial Commissioners' Courts have got at least three Judges, and consequently the position in which there are only two Judges to consider an application could not arise except I think in the one case of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of the North West Frontier Province. Therefore the provision he proposes would in any case have an exceedingly limited application. On the merits, my position is this. Even supposing that such a position arises, it would be reasonable that the matter should be left in the status quo in which the application came to the court. Firstly, there would be the opinion of the Magistrate, secondly, of the Local Government and thirdly, at least one of the Judges supporting their views. In all these circumstances I think it would be reasonable that in the few number of cases in which this contingency might arise, the status quo should prevail, just as when the opinion in this House is equally divided, you in the exercise of your Presidential functions maintain the status quo.

Mr. President : The question is :

"That in sub-clause (1) of clause 25, for the words 'the order shall stand' the words 'the opinion of the Chief or Senior-most Judge shall prevail' be substituted."

The motion was negatived.

Sardar Sant Singh : Sir I beg to move :

"That in sub-clause (1) of clause 25, for the word 'stand' the words 'be set aside' be substituted."

In moving this amendment, I have in mind the reply which the Honourable the Home Member has just given to the previous amendment which has been lost. The reason given on the other side is that the opinion of the Judge is corroborated by the opinion of the Local Government or of the Magistrate, as the case may be, and hence there is a majority on the other side and one Judge's opinion should not prevail. My submission is that here is another assault on criminal jurisprudence. The rule of law in the administration of criminal justice is that the benefit of the doubt goes to the accused and not to the prosecution. The benefit of having at least one Judge on the side of the newspaper or the keeper of the press is really a benefit over which the executive should submit their judgment to the judgment of the one Judge. If the doubt arises and if the publisher or keeper can carry with him one Judge of the High Court, he is certainly entitled to hold that his words were not of that objectionable nature which the executive say they were. Therefore my submission is that, taking into consideration the principle of giving the benefit of doubt to the accused, it is absolutely essential that the judgment of even the one Judge should carry the day, and it should not be in favour of the Local Government.

The Honourable Sir James Crerar : Sir, I must oppose this amendment on the same grounds as the previous one.

The motion was negatived.

Clause 25 was added to the Bill.

Clauses 26 to 29 were added to the Bill.

Mr. President : The question is that clause 30 stand part of the Bill.

Mr. B. Das : Sir, I beg to move :

"That in clause 30, after the words 'as against all persons' the words 'other than bona fide encumbrancers' be inserted."

[Mr. B. Das.]

Sir, when a property is mortgaged, the mortgagee has the right over that property under the law. I do not know very much of law, but I think this is common sense. If that is so, then I want to safeguard the right of bona fide encumbrancers. It will not interfere with the principle of the Bill or with the object which the Honourable the Home Member has in view. I hope, therefore, he will accept the amendment which I move.

Pandit Satyendra Nath Sen : Sir, some time ago I rose to support the amendment No. 47, which I thought had reference to the most cruel part of the Bill. If that amendment referred to the most cruel part, this amendment refers to the most irrational part of the Bill. Does it stand to reason that "A" should suffer for the offence of "B" and for no fault of his? This amendment is most reasonable, and I hope the Honourable the Home Member will relent a bit this time, although he may be afraid that it will go a great way to damage the good reputation of his being possessed of an exceptional equanimity of mind with which he has kept tight so long to the wonder of this House and, for the matter of that, to the wonder of the whole country.

Mian Muhammad Shah Nawaz (West Central Punjab : Muhammadan) : Mr. President, this amendment has considerable force and in my opinion encumbrances created before the passing of this Act should be protected. A man who took a mortgage of a press before the commencement of the Act did not know that the Press Bill was to be passed and brought on to the Statute-book. He certainly did not know that the press after the first bite would be forced to deposit security, and if it were not deposited within the specified time, the press was liable to be forfeited. Now, Sir, it is a fundamental principle of law that a man who has taken a transfer for valuable consideration before a certain enactment comes into force must be protected and it is also equity, justice and good conscience. It is the duty of the Legislature to protect all bona fide encumbrances which were made for valuable consideration before the commencement of the Act. The case of a man who has sold his press on a hire and purchase contract is directly in point. The transferee does not become absolute owner of the press until the last instalment is paid and the transferor has a lien on it to the extent of the unpaid amount. Surely the Government should not be allowed to destroy a lien created before the enforcement of the Act. Sir, I agree that encumbrances created after the passing of the Act need not be protected, because the press being under a cloud, the Government have every right to forfeit it. But the right of the Government to forfeit should be subject to a lien if the encumbrance is created before the passing of the Act. I do not know of any principle of law under which the Government are entitled to forfeit the property over which a lien in favour of a third person was created by a mortgage before the passing of the Act. The point is too obvious and in my humble opinion the Government in equity, justice and good conscience should accept my suggestion. Sir, I may be allowed to move this amendment to the amendment of my Honourable friend Mr. Das. (Applause.)

Sardar Sant Singh : Sir, to me this clause 30 has been drafted without any regard to the interest of anybody except the State. My objection to this is this. I will give an illustration. Supposing I advance money to a keeper of the press or the owner of the press and I get a decree against him and in execution of that decree I get the press attached and the press is actually under attachment. Then the auction takes place, but the money is not yet given to me. Meanwhile at this stage the Government forfeits the press. I want to know whether I am protected at that stage or not. What right has been left in the owner of the press or the keeper of the press which the Local Government wants to forfeit? There is nothing. Another extreme case is this. Supposing a charge is already there on the press by a mortgage. Now the Government come in and forfeit the press. Why should my rights be taken away? There is no reason. Therefore, this amendment is a fundamental amendment which goes to the root of the whole thing and I support it.

Sir Lancelot Graham : Sir, we are appealed to in the name of justice. We desire to deny justice to no one. But there are great difficulties attached to the possibility of acceptance of the amendment now before the House. I am not quite sure whether it is suggested that we have forged a new weapon of repression in this clause. But I do notice that not a single one of the speakers has made any reference to the fact that this clause 30 actually only reproduces the contents of the corresponding section in the Act of 1910.

Sardar Sant Singh : Is that a justification?

Sir Lancelot Graham : I expected that from my acute friend, Sardar Sant Singh. That does not necessarily justify the existence of this clause. I agree with him. But I do say that the fact that the clause had been in operation for 12 years is worth taking into consideration.

Mian Muhammad Shah Nawaz : The clause was condemned by Sir Lawrence Jenkins and the Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Stephens of the Calcutta High Court in the famous Comrade case.

Sir Lancelot Graham : As regards the rights of the mortgagee?

Mian Muhammad Shah Nawaz : As regards the rights of the previous mortgagee, the Government has absolute right under this clause to forfeit those rights. My contention is that the bona fide mortgagee, or one who held a lien over the property before the commencement of the Act should be allowed to establish it before a civil court. As the clause stands now the Government's right to forfeit is absolute against all persons including the bona fide mortgagee who took the mortgage long before this Bill was contemplated.

Sir Lancelot Graham : I entirely agree that is the position and I have suggested nothing else. But what I do understand is, that my Honourable friend, Mian Shah Nawaz, for whose opinion I have the greatest respect, said that he would support action of this kind, confiscation in respect of the press being mortgaged if the mortgage had not taken place before the passing of this clause. But I do not find that the amendment on the paper makes any such distinction. I think it is a great pity if my Honourable friend, Mian Shah Nawaz, holds such definite views, that he should not have tabled an amendment himself.

Mr. B. Das : May I ask if I can move an amendment in line with what the Honourable Member, Sir Lancelot Graham, has suggested and whether that will be accepted?

Sir Lancelot Graham : I am not suggesting any amendment, Sir. I am criticising the position of my Honourable friend, Mian Shah Nawaz. My friend, Mr. Sen, on the other hand, said that "A" should not suffer for the sake of "B". As I understand the purport of this amendment, it is that a press, though it be the instrument by which the offence is committed, is not to be forfeited, if people can come forward saying, "I have a mortgage and consequently cannot have the forfeiture". It is opening the way to confusion and merely putting in the word bona fide is not going to ensure the proper working of the amendment. It will be possible for proprietors of presses to take refuge behind their mortgages and in that way evade merited forfeiture. My friend, Mr. Das, said he wanted to be kind to mortgagees. We do not wish to be unkind to mortgagees. But we have to look to the activities of the press and not to the feelings of the mortgagees, and for that reason, I think this clause is essential in its present form. I do not say it was impossible for the Opposition to devise something which might have been acceptable, provided it did not interfere with the effectiveness of the provision for forfeiture. Forfeiture is absolutely essential when the press or the newspaper has contravened the provisions of this Bill in such a way as to require the passing of an order of forfeiture.

Mr. B. Das : After hearing the Honourable Sir Lancelot Graham's speech, may I suggest an amendment acceptable to him, namely, the protection of such encumbrances which are declared before a Magistrate at the time of encumbrance.

Sir Lancelot Graham : That would not help us in the least.

Mr. S. C. Mitra : May I suggest that we might add all encumbrances before the passing of this Act?

Sir Lancelot Graham : That does not solve the trouble either.

Mr. S. C. Sen : I do not know whether Sir Lancelot Graham is willing to take any suggestion.....

Sir Lancelot Graham : I am afraid not.

Mr. President : Government do not seem to be inclined to accept any suggestion on those lines. The question is :

"That in clause 30, after the words 'as against all persons' the words 'other than bona fide encumbrances' be inserted."

The motion was negatived.

Mr. S. C. Sen : Sir, the amendment which I wish to move reads thus :

"That in clause 30, after the words 'has taken place' the following be inserted :

'provided the notice of forfeiture was made in strict conformity to the provisions of this Act'."

I know, Sir, the opinion that has been expressed by the Honourable the Law Member, and I do not expect any mercy from the Government. I know that the Treasury Benches will not accept this amendment. The opinion of the Honourable the Home Member is not only wrong, but it is against the considered opinion of two Chief Justices and four Judges of the High Court. With these observations, I move.

The Honourable Sir James Crerar : I think, Sir, that in substance the Honourable Member's amendment is practically the same as the one which has already been dealt with. It has been dealt with in full by the Honourable the Law Member, and I have nothing to add to what he said, except that in this context the same considerations will apply.

The motion was negatived.

Clause 30 was added to the Bill.

Clauses 31 and 32 were added to the Bill.

Mr. President : Clause 1.

Mr. S. G. Jog : Sir, we have practically reached the last stage of the battle, and if we fail here, we will fail in the battle, subject of course to the position at the third reading of the Bill. My amendment is that the provisions of this measure shall not be operative in any province unless the Local Government of the province makes out a case for the application of the said Act and takes the sanction of the Government of India or the Governor General in Council. When I sent in this amendment, I was a bit doubtful about the propriety of this. Somehow or other I find that I am not supported by anybody else, and I stand by myself, and I have to fight my own battle. Fortunately to-day I find there is a similar amendment moved by my friend, Mr. Thampan, and I think I have only to depend on him for supporting this amendment. Over and above that, I find that a leading newspaper of my province has also taken the same view as I have taken in this matter. That paper has suggested that it is admitted that terrorist organizations exist in some parts of the country, and so it asks why cannot the Bill be restricted to the same parts in the first instance, giving power to the Local Governments to apply it to other areas if necessary. I must congratulate myself that I belong to a province which fortunately is not in the list of "bad boys". I observe from the brochure that has been supplied to us showing the statement of offences and crimes in all parts of India, that there is not a single case of terrorist movement or incitement to violence and such like things in my province. I will not take the highest number first, but I shall take the lowest number, and I would ask the Honourable the Home Member to point out any terrorist crime in my sub-province or head province under which my province is. There is not a single case of terrorist movement or any incitement or any leaflet published calculated to incite people to murderous activities, or any charge of that sort in my province. (An Honourable Member : "Which is that province?") Berar. As regards the Central Provinces, I find that there is only one case, and that case is the finding of a bomb in the house of a sonar in a certain village, and a certain quantity of chemicals and communist and revolutionary literature was recovered from that goldsmith's house. The suspicion is that that the bomb was being prepared for political purposes. Whenever a bomb is found it is always suspected that it is for political purposes. This is the only case which is referred to. As regards the other provinces, take Burma, and I find no case there. The United Provinces, there is one case, Indian States, one case. So my point is that in those provinces in which there is no such terrorist movement, or where the newspapers have not taken to bad ways or to those bad measures as are described in some of these pamphlets, I do not see any reason why these drastic provisions of the law should be applied. On the contrary, if this law is applied indiscriminately to all the provinces, it will be practically keeping a sword hanging over the heads of those provinces. I say there is absolutely no necessity to apply this law to other provinces where there is no terrorist or other kind of anarchical movement. If Government still insist that this law should be applied to other provinces also, then I shall have no hesitation in charging Government with carrying this poison to my province and to other provinces where there is no terrorist movement in existence and if anything happens, it will be due to application of this law where it is not necessary. Therefore, my submission is this. You pass the general law, and if any recommendations come from the Local Governments, or if there are any cases of such a nature as to render the application of this law necessary, those Local Governments should make out a case and the Government of India should be satisfied that there is necessity for applying the provisions of this law, and then this law could be applied to such provinces. Sir, with these words, I move the amendment.

Mr. S. C. Mitra : Sir, I support the amendment of my friend, Mr. Jog. I do not know whether Government will accept this amendment or whether it will be supported by other Members who pose as free thinkers and are guided only by the consideration of justice and equity. Now, from the very beginning I was under the impression that this Bill was really meant, not for suppression of incitement to murder and the like, but its real purpose was to suppress the nationalist Press. If the Government are of that opinion, let them say so now. Mr. Jog is speaking of provinces where there are no cases of terrorist or other revolutionary activities, and Government, even from their own book, could not cite a single case in some provinces of incitement to murder or violence. Now, the law will be there, and, only if any Local Governments want it, they can apply to the Government of India. If the real purpose of the Bill is not to suppress the Press, then Government will see their way to accepting the amendment.

The Honourable Sir James Crerar : I think the Honourable the Mover of this amendment, if he reflects a little, will come to the conclusion that this amendment is misconceived. In the first instance, I should point out that its form is quite inadmissible, and would be, for example, entirely inconsistent with sub-clause (3) of the clause. But what I imagine the Honourable the Mover had in mind was this, that the Bill, when it becomes law, should not be generally in force in the whole of British India, but should only come into force with the sanction of the Governor General in Council on the motion of the Local Government concerned. I will deal with what appears to me to be the principle behind the Honourable Member's amendment, though I could not in any case accept it because of its extreme defect in form. But let me get down to the question of principle. He suggests that if in any particular province no terrorist crime has taken place, that will be a good case for not having the Act in force in that province. Sir, I may point out that the Bill is directly aimed against incitement to and encouragement of murder and other acts of violence and not the original offences themselves, which, of course, are dealt with by other provisions of the law. My point is that the principle of my Honourable friend's amendment is quite misconceived. It is also based upon a misapprehension of facts, because in point of fact the recent Punjab Mail train murder took place within the territories of the Central Provinces, and it was found....

Mr. S. G. Jog : The matter is sub judice.

The Honourable Sir James Crerar : And within the jurisdiction of the Courts of that province.

Mr. S. G. Jog : It is the Central Provinces.

Mr. J. F. Dyer (Central Provinces : Nominated Official) : One of the accused persons did come from Berar.

Mr. S. G. Jog : The matter is still sub judice.

The Honourable Sir James Crerar : Sir, it is a relevant fact that in the course of that trial references were made in evidence to the influence of inflammatory literature. That, therefore, I think, disposes to a very large extent of the allegations of fact on which the Honourable Member bases his case. But the principle goes really much further. It is quite clear that a measure of this kind, if it is to be effective, at all, must be applicable to the whole of India because if the provisions of this law are not applicable to one particular province, it will be perfectly open to the offending Press to invade that province and carry out its propaganda from there. It is essential in order to prevent the circulation and dissemination of undesirable matter from one province to another that the law should have general applicability. For these reasons, both on the point of form and on the point of principle, I must oppose this amendment.

Mr. President : The question is :

“ That in sub-clause (2) of clause 1, after the words ‘ Southal Parganas ’ the following be added :

‘ but it shall not be operative in any province unless the Local Government of the Province makes out a case for the application of the said Act and takes the sanction of the Government of India or the Governor General in Council ’.”

The motion was negatived.

Mr. S. C. Mitra : I move :

“ That in sub-clause (3) of clause 1, all the words occurring after the words ‘ for one year only ’ be omitted.”

My purpose is to restrict the operation of this Act to one year only. As a matter of fact, I know that such a drastic measure with wide scope, under which anything may be netted, was accepted by many Honourable Members as a emergency measure, which means that it will last only for a short period. If the Honourable the Home Member is not afraid of this House when it will be in full session, if he is not afraid that in a fuller House he may not get the opportunity he has now, and that it may not be such plain sailing for him, I hope that he will accept this suggestion of mine that the Act should last for a period of one year only, and if any necessity arises again thereafter for such a measure, it may be re-enacted at the proper time. Sir, I move.

The Honourable Sir James Crerar : I am afraid I cannot accept this amendment. I think that it would be idle to suppose, in the circumstances with which we are confronted, that a period of one year would be a reasonable period within which to expect that a definitive effect would be produced upon this evil. The Government have already gone a long way in reducing the period from three years to two years, and if we go beyond that I think we should be failing in our duty.

Mr. President : The question is :

“ That in sub-clause (3) of clause 1, all the words occurring after the words ‘ for one year only ’ be omitted.”

The motion was negatived.

Mr. President : The question is that clause 1 stand part of the Bill.

The motion was adopted.

Clause 1 was added to the Bill.

Mr. President : The question is that this be the Title and Preamble of the Bill.

Sardar Sant Singh : Sir, I am not moving amendment No. 3,† but I beg to move amendment No. 5 which runs as follows :

“ That in the preamble to the Bill, before the word ‘ violence ’ the words ‘ cognisable offence involving ’ be inserted.”

The provisions of this Bill are confined to cognisable offences involving violence, and therefore those words must be added. It is only a formal amendment and I hope it will be accepted.

† “ That in the preamble to the Bill the words ‘ or encouraging ’ be omitted.”

The Honourable Sir James Crerar : I think this is quite unnecessary. The operative part of the Bill is in clause 4 ; and the preamble is not an operative part of the Bill. It does not purport to give a precise statement of the detailed provisions of the Bill, and the preamble as it stands is a succinct and quite adequate expression of the general contents of the Bill. For these reasons I do think that the amendment will be entirely inappropriate.

Mr. President : The question is :

“ That in the preamble to the Bill, before the word ‘ violence ’ the words ‘ cognisable offence involving ’ be inserted.”

The motion was negatived.

Mr. President : The question is :

“ That this be the Title and Preamble to the Bill.”

The motion was adopted.

The Title and Preamble were added to the Bill.

Mr. President : I should like now to ask Honourable Members whether they wish that the motion to pass the Bill should be taken up now.

The Honourable Sir George Rainy : I should like to say, speaking not so much on behalf of the Government as on behalf of what I believe to be the wishes and convenience of a great majority of the Members of this House, that the arrangement which would be most convenient would be that we should proceed to the third reading of the Bill now. I wish to make it quite clear that it is not a question of the interests of Government or the consideration that sometimes arises over other Bills, but I do believe that there is a very strong wish amongst the majority of Members of this House that, if possible, the session should be closed to-morrow and I do not see how that is possible at all unless we can clear off the work to-morrow.

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer : I endorse every word that the Honourable the Leader of the House has said. I very much wish that we should sit up and finish this Bill, especially, judging from the thin attendance in the House, which reveals that there is no desire to prolong the discussion of this Bill on this side of the House.

Mr. S. C. Mitra : We do not agree with the Honourable the Deputy Leader of the Nationalist Party. If it is a question of the thinness of the House, we could have gone away a couple of days earlier. If the Government want to take advantage of the thinness of the House, let them do so but the Opposition must have its say. I should like you, Sir, to adjourn.

Mr. President : The point on which I wish to consult Honourable Members is whether the third reading of the Bill should be taken up now or whether it should be taken up later. If it is not taken up to-day, it will be open to Government to take it up to-morrow or on Monday. Having regard to what Mr. Ranga Iyer has said, I want to know the feeling of the House.

Sir Lancelot Graham : It is on the Agenda Paper for to-morrow.

Mr. President : Will those Honourable Members who want the debate to be adjourned rise in their places ?

(A number of Honourable Members stood up.)

Mr. President : Having regard to the lateness of the hour, it would be preferable to adjourn the meeting now.

The Assembly then adjourned till Eleven of the Clock on Saturday, the 3rd October, 1931.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

Saturday, 3rd October, 1931.

The Assembly met in the Assembly Chamber at Eleven of the Clock, Mr. President in the Chair.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

RETRENCHMENT IN THE HOME DEPARTMENT.

1148. Bhagat Chandi Mal Gola : (a) Will Government be pleased to lay on the table a statement showing the number and names of persons employed in the Home Department and its attached and subordinate offices who are on the verge of retirement, having put in nearly 29 or 30 years' service ?

(b) In view of the impending retrenchment, are the Government of India prepared to instruct the Home Department, as the administrative department, to consider the advisability of taking the initiative in retiring the above mentioned persons and employing men on lower scales of pay as their successors ? If not, why not ?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar : (a) I regret I am unable to supply the information.

(b) The question raises a matter of general policy affecting all Departments of the Government of India and not merely the Home Department. It will doubtless be considered on its merits along with other methods of retrenchment.

Sardar Sant Singh : Will the Honourable Member please translate it for the benefit of the person who put this question ? (Laughter.)

Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh : You know Persian—you can translate it ? (Addressing the Honourable the Home Member.)

Kumar Gupteshwar Prasad Singh : I think the Honourable Member has passed the departmental examination in the vernacular or in Hindi ?

Mr. President : Order, order.

RETRENCHMENT IN ACCOUNTS AND AUDIT OFFICES IN BENGAL.

1149. Mr. S. C. Mitra : (a) Is it not a fact that the Auditor General in his letter No. 1474-E.441-A-25, dated 26th March, 1926, to the Accountant General, Bengal, ordered that the temporary assistants in the Experimental Accounts and Audit Offices should be borne on the cadre of the Accountant General, Bengal ? If so, what action, if any, was taken on the letter ? If not, why not ?

(b) Is it not a fact that the same orders were re-iterated in para. (3) of the Auditor General's letter No. 736-N.G.E.344-30, dated 21st April, 1931, in which he laid down that these men should be considered for confirmation in the office of the Accountant General, Bengal, in exactly the same way as the temporary men working in the said office? Was any action taken on this letter? If not, why not?

(c) Are Government aware that due to the fact that the circular letter No. 1474-E.441-A-25, dated 26th March, 1926, of the Auditor General was not given effect to by the Accountant General, Bengal, clerks of much longer services in the Experimental Offices are still styled as quasi-permanent or temporary, while much junior men in the Accountant General's Office have been made permanent?

(d) Is it a fact that at the time of some retrenchment in the office of the Accountant General, Bengal, a junior man of the Experimental Accounts Offices was discharged to provide for a senior man from the Accountant General, Bengal's Office? If so, do Government consider the clerks in both the Accountant General, Bengal's Office and in the Experimental Accounts and Audit Offices, in the same cadre?

(e) Will Government please state whether at the time of present retrenchment, the clerks of both the Accountant General, Bengal's Office and the Experimental Accounts and Audit Offices in Calcutta will be treated on the same level, and length of service will be treated as the criterion for discharge, irrespective of their being permanent, quasi-permanent, or temporary?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster : Enquiry is being made and a reply will be sent to the Honourable Member in due course.

SHORT NOTICE QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

INVESTMENT OF PROVIDENT FUNDS IN SINGLE PAYMENT STERLING INSURANCE POLICIES.

Mr. S. C. Mitra : (a) Is it a fact that Government officials are withdrawing large amounts from the Provident Fund and utilising these amounts for purchasing single payment life insurance policies?

(b) If reply to part (a) be in the affirmative, will Government please state how they are treating these transactions for the purpose of sale of sterling and whether such transactions are being treated as those for genuine trade or domestic purposes?

(c) Is it a fact that when the exchange situation offered similar scope in the past this very method of buying sterling was adopted by officials?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster : (a) This part of the Honourable Member's question apparently refers only to the present or I presume to the short period which has elapsed since the promulgation last Thursday of Ordinance No. VII. So far as this period is concerned, I can tell the Honourable Member that, according to my information, there has not been any occasion on which the facilities which Government as currency authority now offers for the sale of sterling have been applied for to Government on behalf of officials for the purpose referred to in the question.

(b) The question contained in part (b) has not therefore, so far as Government are aware, yet arisen.

(c) I do not quite understand this part of the question. There has not been any period in the past when the conditions applicable to it were in force.

Mr. B. Das : May I inquire if such withdrawals as are referred to in part (a) of the question come to a very heavy amount per annum?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster : I have already, in answer to the question, stated that since the 21st September, there have been no applications of this kind dealt with by Government.

Mr. B. Das : May I inquire of the Honourable Member as to what is the normal annual sum of withdrawal previous to the 21st of this month by Government officials for the purpose of purchasing such single-payment life policies?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster : I am afraid I have no statistics on that question.

EXPORT OF GOLD FROM INDIA.

Mr. R. K. Shanmukham Chetty : Sir, with your permission, I would like to ask a short notice question.

Will Government be pleased to state :

(a) the total value of gold bullion exported by means of private export from India since 21st September, 1931 ;

(b) whether Government propose to prohibit the private export of gold from this country ; and

(c) whether Government as currency authority propose to buy gold at a rate which will be approximately in parity with the sterling-dollar exchange.

The Honourable Sir George Schuster : Sir, according to my information, the value of gold exports up to Tuesday last was about 150 lakhs. I have not yet got returns from the Controller of Currency since Tuesday last, and any subsequent information which I have on the subject is contained in Press notices.

As regards parts (b) and (c) of the question, Government have the matter under their consideration ; and that I think is all that I can say at the moment.

Mr. R. K. Shanmukham Chetty : Sir, in view of the fact that evidently people who are exporting gold want currency, does not the Honourable Member think that this will be a good opportunity for the Government as currency authority to purchase gold more in accordance with the prevailing market rate and thereby take this opportunity of increasing their gold reserves?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster : My Honourable friend is asking me a rather difficult question. Government naturally are reluctant to interfere with the ordinary operations of private trade. On the other hand, if Government purchased gold in present conditions, that would raise a very difficult question. Government are at present under an obligation to buy gold at a price which of course is entirely out of parity with the present price. I would like to know whether my Honourable friend considers that it is against the public interest that gold should be exported by private individuals at present.

Mr. R. K. Shanmukham Chetty : When the monetary gold available in the country goes out, I consider, Sir, that it would be wise on the part of Government, especially when their gold reserves are very small, to take that opportunity to purchase gold and increase their gold reserves. Incidentally, this will result in the expansion of currency very much indeed for trade purposes.

Mr. Arthur Moore : May I ask.....

Mr. President : Let Mr. Chetty's question be answered first, Mr. Moore.

The Honourable Sir George Schuster : I think my Honourable friend hardly asked a question ; but in answer to his remarks, all I can say is that I shall give the fullest consideration to the argument he has put forward.

Mr. R. K. Shanmukham Chetty : I did not put it in the form of a question, but I was merely replying to a question which the Honourable Member himself put to me.

Mr. Arthur Moore : May I ask, Sir, whether the Honourable the Finance Member is considering the possibility of an embargo upon the export of gold, in order to prevent this heavy export of gold by private persons ?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster : I think I have dealt with that as far as I was able to deal with it at the present moment, in answering the original question. I said that the Government have the whole matter under their consideration, but that it raises very difficult issues.

Sir Hari Singh Gour : Did not Government have this matter under their consideration before the issue of Ordinance No. VII ?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster : It was one of the points which we naturally did consider.

Sir Hari Singh Gour : With what results, Sir ? Have they been as expected ?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster : With the result, that we decided that we had better wait and see !

Mr. B. Das : Has not the Honourable Member received representations from the various Merchants' Chambers urging him to take this opportunity of expanding his currency in order to stop the export of gold ?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster : I have received certain representations from various Indian Merchants' Chambers ; and as a very prominent member of the Federation of Indian Chambers of Commerce has, according to the Press reports, been himself the largest exporter of gold, I am prepared to suggest to them that they might perhaps themselves take some action in the matter. (Hear, hear.)

Mr. B. Das : Is it not a fact that that prominent member of the Federation is also a business man and from a business point of view he has to handle any business that brings in profit ?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster : I quite agree with my Honourable friend that in the life of a business man his motives as a business man and as an Indian patriot, may often come into conflict. (Laughter.)

Mr. B. Das : Is it not a fact that England has passed an embargo on the export of gold and should we not follow the same practice in India ?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster : As far as I am aware England has passed no embargo on the export of gold.

Mr. R. K. Shanmukham Chetty : As my Honourable friend suggests that there is such a big difference between the price of gold at which the currency authority will purchase it and the market rate, and also a difference between the price of gold in India and the price of gold in other countries, will the efforts on the part of an unofficial body like the Federation have such effects as control by Government in placing an embargo on gold ?

The Honourable Sir George Schuster : I am not suggesting that any individual action can have the same effect as an embargo by the Government on the export of gold. But an embargo by the Government on the export of gold is a very drastic measure and requires very careful consideration before Government can adopt it.

THE INDIAN PRESS (EMERGENCY POWERS) BILL—contd.

The Honourable Sir James Crerar (Home Member) : Sir, I move that the Press Bill, as amended, be passed.

Sir Hari Singh Gour (Central Provinces, Hindi Divisions : Non-Muhammadan) : Sir, I know that what I am going to say will not have the slightest effect upon Government, who have carried clause after clause yesterday and the day before by their ruthless majority, in spite of the criticisms of the Members of the Opposition. Sir, this is one of the Bills upon which the public at large have expressed their views in no uncertain terms and it is one of those Bills in which five Members of the Opposition serving on the Select Committee had recorded their respectful but emphatic protest against certain clauses which they thought required amendment. The other day I pointed out to the House that those clauses were of the very essence of the Bill, and amendments were necessary for the purpose of safeguarding the Press and public rights. In spite of our appeal to the Honourable the Home Member and to those who sit behind him, we were not able to force to a successful division any of the clauses. The fact remains that the Bill as it emerged from the Select Committee, in spite of its numerous defects, is about to become law and we sitting on this side of the House, though few in numbers and on the eve of a dissolution of the Assembly, shall be failing in the discharge of our duty as the spokesmen and representatives of the public if we allow this motion to pass without a protest. I know, Sir, it is now too late to ask the Honourable the Home Member to reconsider his decision, and even if we were not too late, I know his mentality and it would be futile to ask him to once more exercise his reason in the interests of the public, in the interests of the Press, and indeed in the interests of the established Government itself. For what has been the result of this Bill and what would be the result of this Bill ? The dissentient Members pointed out that the most operative clause, clause 4, was extremely defective in its wording and Honourable Members pointed out that sub-clause (b) of clause 4 was so largely worded that it would neutralise in many cases the effect of the dominant clause (a).

[Sir Hari Singh Gour.]

Honourable Members will remember that that clause punishes a person who :

“directly or indirectly expresses approval.....of any person who has committed or is alleged or represented to have committed any such offence.”

Sir, I can visualise to myself the case of a soldier of the Crown who by his gallantry on the battle-field has, let us say, earned the well-coveted decoration of the Victoria Cross. In a moment of misguided frenzy he commits a murder. The Press says that this man has committed a murder and is, therefore, likely to suffer the penalty of the law, but at the same time it must be remembered that he was a man who had served his country and the Crown by his services on the battle-field. That statement unconnected with the murder, recounting a mere statement of fact would be exposed to the penalty of sub-clause (b) of clause 4 (1). I am quite aware of the explanation that has been added to clause 4, but as Honourable Members have pointed out, that explanation is shorn of its effect by the last words, which lay down that even a work of literary or historical importance may be exposed to the penalty of the section if it has the tendency described in clause (a). Sir, the Honourable the Home Member remembers that in the well known works of the greatest poet in the English language, we have plays like Julius Caesar and Macbeth and we have the statement of Brutus who justifies the murder of Julius Caesar on the ground of public necessity. That statement, Sir, and the whole play of Julius Caesar would be exposed to the penalty of this section.....

The Honourable Sir James Crerar : Including Mark Antony's speech ?

Sir Hari Singh Gour : Sir, it will be left to the tender mercies of the Home Member to exempt the passage of Mark Antony if he wishes, but the whole play would come under the provisions of clause 4 and the explanation because it has a distinct tendency to counsel the murder of tyrannical rulers. Take the case of Macbeth and the statement of Lady Macbeth. That play itself would come under the provisions of this clause under this explanation. I am quite sure that in his multifarious preoccupations the Honourable the Home Member must be occasionally casting a glance at that classical work by Thomas Carlyle on the French Revolution. I recall to him the statement contained in that work on the storming of the Bastille and what a vivid passage occurs there :

“Oh sons and friends of France, lovers of liberty, you by your blood and by your steel prepare the dawn for the liberation of your country !”

That, Sir, would be one of the most obnoxious classical works having a tendency to tell the people of France, and through the people of France the people of the world at large, that if you wish to end tyranny it can only be by applying the doctrine of blood and iron. That is what Thomas Carlyle in his History of the French Revolution so vividly depicts. Sir, all these works, the greatest classics in the English language, would come under the provisions of this clause which is, I submit, so largely worded that it is entirely left to the executive to say as to what shall be printed and what shall not be printed. Sir, I am sure that if the Honourable the Home Member had left the decision of this question to the free vote of the House, if he has said that this is a highly controversial Bill brought at almost the close of the Session and that it will affect a very large body of the public, namely the Press and through them the public at large, I am quite sure, that the result would have been very different. Because I see before me Honourable Members who are pledged to support the Government. But if they were free to vote according to their conscience, they would have hesitated in doing so and I am sure my Honourable friend, Sir Lancelot Graham, would have been the most vocal in exclaiming, following the example of his half namesake, Launcelot Gabbo, “Certainly my conscience will serve me to run away from this clause, my master”. (Laughter.) But, Sir, disciplined as they are under the crack of the whip, it is not for them to reason why but to march blind-fold to the lobby that the Honourable Member may point to them, and therefore, I say that the Honourable the Home Member cannot congratulate himself upon his achievement in placing this reactionary measure upon the Statute-book. Whatever may be the view of the Honourable the Home Member, we as representatives of the people have no duty but to assist the Government so far as the Government were right and to oppose them when it is found that they were wrong. Because we feel that the necessity for a measure of this kind had been made out, we immediately and willingly served on the Select Committee and there we gave our unfettered opinion as to what we considered to be necessary for the purpose immediately in hand. We were defeated in the Select Committee and we have been defeated in the open House. But we have one satisfaction, that whatever may be the result of this Bill, Honourable Members on this side are unanimous in supporting the dissentient view of their representatives and of the country. Sir, if it were the only clause, it would be a serious blot upon the Bill. But there are other clauses equally obnoxious to the plain provisions of the Statute law both in England and in this country. I do not wish at this late hour to tire the House by referring in greater detail to those clauses, but I cannot help feeling that the amount of security that is demanded from the keepers and publishers of these petty presses, who are the main offenders, if not the sole offenders, according to the view of the Government, is not only excessive but even prohibitive. Presses worth Rs. 100 or 200 or 300 may be called upon to deposit a security to the tune of Rs. 10,000. Sir, it would have been kindness indeed if the Honourable the Home Member had retained the clause regarding forfeiture. Forfeiture in that case would have implied forfeiture of small presses, perhaps a small lithographic press, which a man is able to put in a gunny bag and carry upon his shoulders. But that has not been the case. The substitution of fine or security has been out of all proportion to the value of the press.

Sir, dealing with the powers of the High Court, I pointed out at very great length that the power that is given to the High Court in the Bill in many cases would be illusory. The High Courts in India constituted as they are, are the custodians of the people's rights and liberties, and with all their defects, the people still look up to them as the palladium of the people since they stand at are expected to stand between the Government and the people when the Government go wrong and the people have a right to safeguard. But the power that has been given to the High Court of merely deciding as to whether the security was rightly demanded is a power which, I submit, would not be conducive to the ends of justice. For, the High Courts may find that while the security was rightly demanded, the amount of security is excessive. In that case, the High Court will be powerless to act. Sir, I am not despondent, because after what I have said in this House, I am quite sure that this clause of the Indian Legislature is likely to be challenged in a court of law because it contravenes section 107 of the Government of India Act and of the Letters Patent to which I made reference the other day. Whatever you may do, if your power is ultra vires, whatever you may do if you have not expressly amended the Letters Patent, the powers of the Chartered High Court would remain unimpaired. That is my small consolation in referring to this clause.

There is one more point and it will be the last, illustrative of what I have got to say on the subject. The clause which condemns the press to forfeiture, takes no note of the fact that that press may be subject to bonâ fide encumbrances. Case after case occurs in this country in which a poor man either purchases a press on what is known as the hire purchase system or he mortgages the press in anticipation of starting it. In all these cases, the mortgagee or the encumbrancer knows nothing at all about the purpose to which that press might be put. There are cases now when you find that illustrated articles appear in the papers. The illustrations are taken from one press that specialises in producing illustrations. In such cases the language of the clause is so widely worded that both the presses are liable to come within the penalties of the Bill. I, therefore, submit that this is one of those clauses upon which the Government should have given way. In the Select Committee as I pointed out to this House, the question of bonâ fide encumbrancers was supported by the majority of the members, but the Honourable the Home Member would not accept the view of the majority. Whatever may be the case, we pressed upon the Government the desirability of doing this small justice to bonâ fide innocent encumbrancers and charge-holders. Even that appeal fell flat upon the Treasury Benches and why? If this Bill had been introduced in this House in the earlier part of the Session, instead of my going over to the Home Member and cajoling him to accept these clauses, you would have seen the spectacle of the Home Member coming over to me and cajoling me to accept some reasonable compromise. That.....

The Honourable Sir James Crerar : May I point out that the original Bill containing this provision was introduced on the very first day of the Session?

Sir Hari Singh Gour : The Honourable the Home Member reminds me of that unsavoury chapter in which he has taken so conspicuous a part. A Bill was introduced on the first day; a few days after, that Bill was gone and another Bill was introduced. What is the good of referring to the introduction of a Bill earlier in the Session? This House was never given an opportunity of criticising the Bill after it emerged from the Select Committee and by the time it came before this House from the Select Committee the Session was practically at an end. That, I submit, is the grievance of the Members of the Opposition. The majority of them finding that the work of the Simla Session was over and that highly controversial measures would be held over for the Delhi Session, left the place: others, who had other engagements had to leave Simla, with the result that we see the few Members left to constitute the Opposition. That is our grievance. All I say is that the Honourable the Home Member has taken a mean advantage of the absence of a majority of Members of the Opposition: he should have held over this Bill.....

Mr. Arthur Moore (Bengal : European) : On a point of order, Sir, is the Honourable Member in order in saying that the Home Member has taken a mean advantage?

Sir Hari Singh Gour : I think the Statesman uses stronger language even than that.

Mr. President : Stronger language may be used outside in the Press; but that is no justification for using it in the Assembly. The phrase "mean advantage" is a very offensive expression and I will not allow it.

Sir Hari Singh Gour : I do not think the Honourable the Home Member himself objects: he thinks it is very common. If he objects I withdraw it.

The Honourable Sir James Crerar : It is not a common expression on this side of the House.

Mr. President : The Chair objects to that expression.

Sir Hari Singh Gour : All right, Sir. The Honourable the Home Member has taken undue advantage of the thinness of the Opposition.

Mr. President : The Honourable Member must withdraw the word "mean".

Sir Hari Singh Gour : I have withdrawn it, Sir. I say he has taken undue advantage of the thinness of this House, and the result is that he had a walk-over upon all clauses which we considered to be the most offending features of this Bill. It is useless to cry over spilt milk. The Bill is now going through, and within a few moments it will become law. But let not the occupants of the Treasury Benches go away with the impression that they have passed this measure with the concurrence of the elected representatives of this House. Let them go away with the solatium that if this Bill had come before this House earlier in the Session when contested and controversial questions were being agitated, this House would have fought these clauses inch by inch and prevented their entry into the Statute-book. That is the assurance we wish to give to the Honourable the Home Member. He may enact this measure; he may impose it, but he will never find any support either from the Members of the Opposition or from the public outside who are watching the work of the Legislative Assembly. The other day the Honourable the Home Member was pleased to characterise this Assembly as having deteriorated into a debating society. I do not wish to retaliate.....

The Honourable Sir James Crerar : On a personal explanation, Sir. If the Honourable gentleman will refer to what I said on the occasion, he will find that his interpretation of what I said is entirely incorrect. All I said on that occasion was that the speeches of some Honourable Members opposite might indicate that they were taking part in a debating society instead of in a Legislative Assembly.

Sir Hari Singh Gour : I leave the Members of the House to draw their own conclusions as to the effect of the language used by the Honourable the Home Member. But judging from the pressure that has been brought to bear upon me from all sides of the elected portion of this House, judging from the indignation which was felt by the Members on this side of the House when the Honourable the Home Member used the expression which he said he did—he also characterised the arguments of some Members on this side of the House as absurd and ridiculous—that I submit is the position into which this House has been brought and had to submit because this Bill was taken towards the far end of the session. If these expressions had been used when the House was in full force, this House would have known how to vindicate its rights and its privileges. That time has gone.....

Mr. Amar Nath Dutt (Burdwan Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural) : Do it during the Finance Bill.

Sir Hari Singh Gour : My friend tells me "Do it during the Finance Bill". That would not be the occasion to do it. This is the occasion, when the Press Bill is under discussion ; and as soon as the Press Bill is passed we forget and forgive the Members of the Treasury Benches for what they have done and for what they have accomplished. (Applause.)

Mr. Amar Nath Dutt : We can forgive but cannot forget.

Sir Abdur Rahim (Calcutta and Suburbs : Muhammadan Urban) : Sir, I wish to register my protest against the passing of this double-faced measure in as few words as possible. I call it a double-faced measure because it professes to be one thing while its provisions are something very different. It professes in the title and preamble to be a Bill to control writings which incite to crimes of violence and murder ; while if you examine the provisions of the Bill, as we have examined it on this side of the House, you will find that it is perfectly clear that what the Government aim at and what they have secured is control of the entire Press of the country. Clause 3 gives them that control and the wide powers vested in the executive Government emphasise that control. But that is not the title and preamble of the Bill. It is a deceptive measure and on that ground alone we are entitled to enter our emphatic protest against it. We all know that the Press in this country is divided into two sections. One which is conducted by the Anglo-Indian community mainly to support Government, and the other I claim represents true Indian public opinion. When you vest the control of the Press in the Government so that it is to find whether certain sections of the Press have or have not offended against the provisions of clause 4 of this Bill, it really means that the Government will exercise that control, as we know from past experience, against the Press which criticises its measures and it will not apply those provisions to that section of the Press which carries on propaganda in favour of Government.....

Mr. Arthur Moore : When you were in the Bengal Government, you controlled the Press ?

Sir Abdur Rahim : I had nothing to do with the Press. Certain friends on this side have pointed out that there is a paper which calls itself as the friend of India, but which repeatedly acts against India's interest.

Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh (Muzaffarpur cum Champaran : Non-Muhammadan) : Save us from such friends.

Sir Abdur Rahim : That paper, I understand, is represented by my Honourable friend, the Leader of the European Group here. Sir, I take no objection to that. I think if my friends on this side of the House knew the mentality of what is called the European Group, they would realise at once that there is a distinction between being a friend of India and being a friend of the Indian people. Sir, that paper pretends to be the friend of India. That does not mean that it is a friend of the Indian people.

India, we know, is the property and possession of Britain, and so in that sense an Anglo-Indian paper can always say, "We are befriending our own possession", but that is a very different proposition from befriending the people of India. As regards this European Group, I should like to challenge the very name of this group. Do they represent here France, Germany, Poland, Russia or do they represent here Britain ? Why then this false name ? Why do they claim to represent Europeans ? If they said that they represented Britain, if they said that they represented England, Wales and Scotland or Ireland or South Africa....

Mr. John Tait (Burma : European) : On a point of order, Sir. Has what the Honourable gentleman says about the European Group got anything to do with the Press Bill ?

Sir Abdur Rahim : It only requires very little judgment to find out the connection. I do not know for whose benefit this misnomer has been adopted. Is it for the benefit of Europeans or for the benefit of Indians ? Surely the Europeans generally are not deceived ; they know they have no interest in India. Then why this assumption of a false title on the part of my friends who sit on the other side ?

Sir, a great deal has been said about the way the Government secure their majority. They know that very well. They have their own block, the solid official block, the silent block, which is carried along with them wherever they go. They have then a certain number of men, gentlemen who are extremely anxious, much too anxious to assume the responsibility of office. They see visions every day of the mantle of some office falling on their shoulders. Is it then very difficult for the Government to carry such people with them ? Most certainly not.

Then, Sir, as regards the manner in which the Honourable the Home Member has conducted the Bill through this House, I must say once again that it has left a very bitter taste in our mouth. He has not improved either his own position or that of his Government. Sir, the Bill will be passed in a few moments, but I can assure the Honourable the Home Member that the Bill as it has emerged now, will never be acceptable to the country. There will be a chorus of protests throughout the land, because the Bill goes far beyond its object and scope. The Government had no business to widen its scope in the effective provisions of the Bill, and that is exactly what has been done. They have also tried to stifle absolutely certain branches of the business of printing. We have asked them repeatedly, and none of them could justify that provision, why those printing presses which have not offended against clause 4 of the Bill should be called upon to furnish security, why there should be forfeiture without a proper inquiry. Here is a Bill which cannot be justified from any point of view. I could justify under certain circumstances executive measures pure and simple for purposes like these, but not a measure of this mixed character. You know, Sir, there is a dish known in India called kitchri. That is exactly the sort of Bill which has been introduced and which is going to be passed in this House.

Mr. Arthur Moore : Sir, the Honourable Member who just sat down challenged the title of this group. I do not propose to follow his example, because I think that the Honourable the Leader of the Independent Party has chosen the title of his party very well. He in particular is extremely independent. He is independent of all the trammels and restraints that would fetter most men who had held the positions in public life that he has held. The Honourable Member has been a Judge of the High Court ; he has been a Member of the Bengal Government.....

Sir Abdur Rahim : But not a slave. (Applause.)

Mr. Arthur Moore : He was a member of the Bengal Government. I have never accused any Member of the Bengal Government of being a slave, and my Honourable friend was a Member of the Bengal Government when they introduced a far more sweeping Ordinance than any that exists at present, one extremely rigorous in character. Then my friend used very different language. He attacks what he calls the Anglo-Indian Press, and what is the head and front of the offending of the Anglo-Indian Press ? It has not changed its attitude towards Indian aspirations. He did not complain of its support when he was a Member of the Government. But now the whole head and front of its offence is that it attacks violence, for otherwise that Press stands exactly where it stood.

Sir Abdur Rahim : No doubt about it. (Laughter from the Nationalist Benches.)

Mr. Arthur Moore : It is now taking a definite stand against the outbreak of terrorism in this country and in the Honourable Member's own province, and he comes to this House and uses language of that character. Sir, I think that opposition to the Bill, which is based upon such specious pleas, should not be treated very seriously. As regards the remarks that were let fall by the Leader of the Nationalist Party, I cannot help saying that I have never seen a more elaborate and artificial attempt to manufacture a grievance. What are the facts, which are perfectly well known to the Honourable Member opposite ? The Bill was introduced at the very beginning of this Session..... (Sir Hari Singh Gour : " This advantage of the mistake of the Assembly Department to manufacture a grievance. He knows perfectly well that the Bill was introduced at the beginning of this Session,—this Bill before it was revised by the Select Committee. The Bill was revised by the Select Committee at the earliest opportunity after full debate, and the Bill as revised by the Select Committee was before this House for over a week before it came up for discussion. I may have been wrong, but I understand that he agreed with the procedure that was finally adopted in order to obviate that mistake ; and I do not think that my Honourable friend is justified at this stage in making that a grievance or in pretending that this Bill has not had the very fullest discussion in this House.

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer (Rohilkund and Kumaon Divisions : Non-Muhammadan Rural) : The Honourable the Home Member the other day compared some of the speakers on this side to amateurish debaters and he was reminded almost of an amateur debating society on this side of the House. It is mainly the fault of the Montagu-Chelmsford constitution that this side of the House has no more power than to debate, and it is because it is deprived of the power to carry on the administration of the country even if it happens to be in a majority that this side of the House is not adequately represented to-day in this debate. Wise men on this side thought that silence would be golden, and therefore, they do not want to indulge in silvery words of opposition. Sir, I believe we do not take our stand on the fact that the opposition on this side has not represented its strength on the floor of the House as it should have done on this Bill and in this debate. I am willing to concede that the Government introduced this measure at the very beginning of the Session. I am willing to go further and say that they introduced the measure at the Delhi Session. I agree with the Honourable the Leader of the European Group that we are not here to take advantage of an unfortunate mistake, which is not the mistake of the Assembly Department alone (Hear, hear). My Honourable friend, Mr. Amar Nath Dutt, remarks that it is a mistake of the Select Committee..... (Mr. Amar Nath Dutt : " Of the Chairman of the Select Committee ")....and he says of the Chairman of the Select Committee, Mr. Arthur Moore. I say it is a mistake of every one of us present in this House (Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh : " No, no "). My Honourable friend, Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh says, " No, no ". I say, " Yes ", because the Gazette is supplied to us and we are supposed to have read the Gazette and we are supposed to have seen the thing and brought it to the notice of the Government then and there for the issue of a correction in the matter. Therefore, every one of us is to blame (Mr. B. Das : " Including the Government "),—including the Government of course, because the Assembly Department is part of the Government..... (Mr. B. Das : " Why did not the Honourable the Home Member read, and why did not Sir Lancelot Graham read, the Gazette ? ") Yes, Sir, Sir Lancelot Graham is as guilty as myself in this matter, and the Honourable the Home Member is as guilty as my Honourable friend, Mr. B. Das. (Laughter.) All of us are guilty in this respect, and the less the fault of the Assembly Department is mentioned in this House the better. I see because of this mistake the Statesman of Calcutta through its special representative has already had a fling at the Assembly Department, which was unworthy of the Statesman, especially as the Editor of the Statesman happens to be the Leader of the European Group and the representative of the Statesman happens to enjoy in the Press gallery the hospitality conceded to him by the head of the Assembly Department.....

Mr. Arthur Moore : On a point of order, Sir. Is the Honourable Member justified in making allegations of this kind which cannot be refuted on the floor of the House ?

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer : I am going to prove it presently. My justification is this. The Statesman of Calcutta-Delhi three days ago published a statement that, because of the separation of the Assembly Department owing to Mr. Patel, therefore this mistake was committed (Cries of " Shame ") ; otherwise it would not have been committed. (Cries of " Shame ".) And Mr. Arthur Moore does not read his own newspaper. It is time he read his own paper and prevented it from indulging in such mischief. I did not want to rub it in. I was very polite, but the Honourable gentleman had the audacity to rise on a point of order, forgetting the mischief that his own paper had perpetrated.

Sir, I would follow the example of my Honourable friend, Sir Lancelot Graham, who on that occasion when the matter was brought to the notice of the House, and said with a sincerity and sportsmanship for which I have known him ever since I entered this Assembly, and very rightly said, that as Secretary of the Legislative Department he sympathised with the Secretary of the Assembly Department. I wish that that point of mistake had not been made in the course of the debate, and I for my own part would treat this Bill as one that was introduced at the beginning of this Session, because as I have already said, it was only a very unfortunate error which could not be helped.

Sir, the Honourable the Leader of the European Group, while levelling his attack against our esteemed friend, the Leader of the Independent Group, said that his criticism of the attitude of the Anglo-Indian Press was not justified. It is justified by the fact that, long before this Bill was introduced, the Anglo-Indian Press carried on a raging, tearing campaign asking for the introduction of a Bill of this kind, and, but for the support that the Government had received from the Anglo-Indian Press, they might have not been perhaps in the same hurry to introduce the Bill which they introduced in this House, and, but for the work that we did in the Select Committee, the Bill would not have been so radically altered as it has been. If the Anglo-Indian Press and their representatives had their own way in the matter, judging from their writings in the newspapers and their speeches on the floor of this House when the Bill was first introduced—if they had had their own way in the matter, this Bill would not have been altered as it has been altered. Sir, the Honourable the Leader of the European Group said, and very rightly said, that the Anglo-Indian Press stands to-day where it stood, say 150 years or 100 years ago.....

Mr. Arthur Moore : I said nothing of the kind.

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer : The Honourable gentleman was trying to interrupt me in the middle of the sentence, and therefore, I must repeat what he said. He said that the Anglo-Indian Press stands where it stood, I say 100 years ago, opposed to terrorism. So, are we opposed to terrorism. He said the Anglo-Indian Press do not want terrorism, and if by that he insinuated—I hope he did not insinuate that we were in favour of terrorism, he is only misrepresenting us as the Anglo-Indian Press has been endeavouring to misrepresent the Opposition on this side of the House. We are opposed to terrorism and if we do not support this measure, it is because we are convinced that it will not be wholly directed merely to newspapers which encourage terrorism or adore the terrorist for there are grievous defects, very serious defects in this Bill. It was not adequately dealt with in this House. The clause relating to violence was quite unnecessary for the purpose of this Bill, for we are only concerned with terrorism and the terrorist and if I had been convinced that this Bill as it stands to-day would not be abused, I would at any rate have thought it my duty to support this Bill, if I could at the same time be convinced that the passing of this Bill would stamp out terrorism. I am perfectly convinced that this Bill will leave the terrorist untouched. The very fact that all over the country responsible newspapers have been suspending publication of the paper for one day as a mark of protest at the passing of this measure ought to convince the Honourable the Home Member and the European Group that the passing of this Bill is resented by responsible organs of constitutional agitation.

Sir, I must now turn my attention to the Honourable the Home Member. Throughout this debate, I regret that the Honourable the Home Member did not accept even one or two of our important amendments because he considered that they were so vital to the Bill, amendments such as the asking of a double security from the printer and the publisher, when the printer and the publisher happened to be one and the same, amendments such as putting the old press and the new press on the same footing, amendments in respect of demanding an advance security from the new press should the Magistrate think that such a security should be demanded. If in these two matters he had agreed, we might not have pressed so much the judicialising of the procedure. I knew it was more difficult for him to accept the motion relating to the judicialising of the procedure. If the Honourable the Home Member had only some imagination, if he had only thought what a tremendous weapon the Press would be on his side if he had judicialised the procedure, I am sure he would not have taken up an attitude which he in his responsibility to his executive in this country, thought proper to take up.

Sir, the other day the Honourable the Law Member in his very powerful advocacy of the Government cause said that he would be a better supporter of the Press than myself on this side of the House and he thought that the Press exercised much greater influence in the country than I thought it did. Sir, I differ from the Honourable the Law Member, and at this final stage of this Bill, I repeat my difference with his judgment in this matter and with the pronouncement that he made on the floor of this House. When the Law Member and I differ what are we to do? We can only appeal to one of his predecessors in office, a distinguished predecessor, nearly as brilliant and almost as competent. I refer to Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru who presided over the Press Laws Committee. Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru and his Committee made the following observations which I have since discovered and I think they are in agreement with me more than the Law Member. They say :

“We believe that the more direct and violent forms of sedition are now disseminated more from the platform and through the agency of itinerary propagandists than by the Press and no press law can be effective for the repression of such activities. In our opinion therefore it must be admitted that the Act has not been wholly effective in securing the object which it was enacted to achieve. We observe that one witness before us went so far as to say that it has been both futile and irritating.”

And what, Sir, was the purpose of that Act? If only the Honourable the Law Member reads the speech of a distinguished predecessor of his, a great man whom the whole country held in adoration in his day, I refer to Lord Sinha who was an honour to the profession to which the Honourable the Law Member has the honour to belong, he would find that the principal purpose of that Act was nothing short of this—to stop terrorism in the country. Lord Sinha then said in his speech in the old Imperial Legislative Council that the principal purpose of the Press Bill was to cut off the fuel that fed terrorism. It is in the same strain that the Honourable the Law Member and the Honourable the Home Member have spoken throughout this debate. Their purpose is to stop the newspaper Press, should it be inclined to support terrorism and to adore the terrorist. When this Bill is passed, they will find that terrorism will not be affected by it at all and if the Magistrates are so inclined, they will follow a policy of using this measure to suppress the legitimate and healthy activities of the civil disobedience Press.

I hope that the Honourable the Home Member, now that he is in sight of victory, will not abuse the fruits of his victory and that the Government of India will issue instructions to Local Governments to see to it that this Bill is not in any way applied to any of the newspapers which carry on a policy of bonâ fide civil disobedience or constitutional agitation. That instruction must be definitely issued to Local Governments in view of the misuse and abuse of the old Press Act. It was said of Hannibal that he knew how to gain a victory, but not how to use it. Let it not be said of the Honourable the Home Member, now that he is in sight of victory, that after achieving victory, he did not know how to use it, and that instead of getting the constitutionalists on his side, he forced them to go to the other side of the fence. I hope the Home Member will be inclined to take this advice of mine.

Lastly, Napoleon once said "four hostile newspapers are more to be feared than a thousand bayonets". It is the Napoleonic view that the Honourable the Law Member took the other day, but I would while admitting that the Press was the Archimedean Lever which moved the world, while it had great strength, it was occasionally inclined to abuse its strength. Still there is greater strength on the part of the Government, now that this Bill vests authority in the Government and it becomes the duty of the Government to see to it that while the Press Act gives them the strength of a giant, they do not abuse it like a giant. With these words I once again appeal to the Honourable the Home Member to see to it that this Bill does not create mischief which the Government will have to deplore. I may also say incidentally that we on this side of the House propose to take every step in future to see that this Bill is repealed or at any rate sufficiently modified, and I do hope that Honourable Members on this side of the House will take the earliest opportunity of introducing a repealing measure in the Legislative Assembly when it meets at Delhi (Applause). Sir, lastly, I am reminded, though in a contrary sense, of an old saying of a fellow-countryman of the Honourable the Home Member. "The Scots wear short patience and long daggers." On the other hand, the Honourable the Home Member has shown himself to have a long patience, beginning from the Delhi Session, and a short dagger—the one dagger that went home to this side of the House and which drew forth many a long dagger from this side. Sir, I would like to compare this Assembly to something like a tennis court, in which it is the duty of the Opposition to hit the Government as hard as it can, and it is the duty of the Government to return the ball with the same vigour. Incidentally, we develop the sporting habit. (Applause.)

Sir Muhammad Yakub (Rohilkund and Kumaon Divisions : Muhammadan Rural) : Sir, I need congratulate myself that after all I have succeeded in catching the eye of the Chair towards the end of this Session.....

Mr. President : I should like to ask the Honourable Member whether he wishes to insinuate that the Chair deliberately did not see him earlier in the Session ?

Sir Muhammad Yakub : Nothing of the sort, Sir, but the next sentence which I wanted to utter would have cleared the situation ; I was just going to say that I need not however make it a cause of complaint when I find that I have got my seat at the farthest end of this big hall. Sir, after the Bill has been discussed for so many days and after all the arguments in favour of and against the Bill have been exhausted, it would be very difficult for me to contribute fresh arguments on the subject. Sir, I am prepared to concede that the Bill under discussion is bound to place some control on the freedom of the Press. But, Sir, all the laws in this world, whether religious or secular, are meant to control the actions of human beings. My religious laws restrict the liberty of my actions. The Bible restricts the liberty of action of Christians. The Vedas control the liberty of action of the Hindus, and other religious books of those who follow them. In the same way the secular laws control other actions and liberty of the people.

Mr. K. Ahmed (Rajshahi Division : Muhammadan Rural) : What about the quotation from the Bhagavad-Gita already cited ?

Sir Muhammad Yakub : Yes, the Bhagavad-Gita does restrict the liberty of those who believe in it, but not of unbelievers like my friend, Mr. K. Ahmed, who does not believe in anything, religious or secular, and who has no decorum or decency.

Mr. K. Ahmed : That is rather irrelevant.

Mr. Amar Nath Dutt : Sir, I submit that no Member should indulge in such personal remarks against an Honourable Member who has been in this House as long as he has been, and who is a member of the Calcutta Bar !

Mr. K. Ahmed : Yes, I am much older than he in the Assembly, in experience and he does not know that ; nor has he the experience and knowledge of Parliamentary etiquette, though he was President for only a week !

Mr. President : Order, order.

Sir Muhammad Yakub : Sir, it would be better if I ignored my Honourable friend's remarks altogether, and treated them with the contempt they deserve. (Hear, hear.) I will now proceed with my speech. I was saying, Sir, that all the laws in this world are meant to control the liberty of action of human beings, and it is quite clear that unrestricted liberty is not conducive to the well-being of mankind, and no form of government in any country and no civilization can endure and prosper until some restrictions are placed on the illegitimate liberty of the people. I am fully satisfied, Sir, that the writings in some of the irresponsible journals have to a great extent contributed to the encouragement of assassinations and murderous assaults which have assumed very alarming dimensions during the last 12 months. Not only the material which has been supplied to us by the Government, in which only very extreme cases have been mentioned, but a perusal of other papers, both vernacular and English, will go to prove that these murderous assaults have received certainly a great deal of encouragement from these papers. Sir, do we not see every day that murderers are described as martyrs and saviours of their country ? (An Honourable Member : "Some are".) Do we not see that their photos are put in papers like the photos of heroes and leaders of people ? Do we not know that hartals are preached and observed on the days of their execution and processions are carried in the bazaars ? Well, all this propaganda, is carried on through the Press, certainly it encourages sensitive youths and creates a desire in their minds to become saviours of their country in this way. If this is so, then something ought to be done to stop this sort of propaganda. I am prepared to admit that the measure under discussion will not succeed in eradicating the evil of communism from this country. But there are certain other laws, and probably we will have to adopt more drastic measures, in order to eradicate the evil. However, the present enactment will certainly control the encouraging impetus which is given by certain irresponsible papers to the commission of these crimes.

Sir, I say that the Bill in the form in which it appears before the House now, is greatly improved. All those features and provisions which were calculated to bring extra hardship upon moderate papers have been removed. (An Honourable Member : "Not all".) The preamble of the Bill has been changed. The indefinite provisions of clause 4 have been restricted. The duration of the Bill has also been curtailed ; and with all these improvements, I do not think this Bill, when placed on the Statute-book, will bring extra hardship on the moderate journals and presses in the country. Sir, I am as keen on the preservation of the liberty of the Press as any other Honourable Member on the opposite side (Laughter from some Non-Official Benches), and I think that the liberty of the Press is very useful for the creation of a healthy opinion in the country (Hear, hear) ; but when liberty is misused, whether by the Press or by the people, it becomes a menace to mankind and a source of destruction of society : and therefore, it is necessary that some restriction should be placed on it when it is fully proved that liberty is being misused in certain directions. Sir, we are now on the threshold of responsible government, and it is therefore very desirable that the future executive of the country should be armed with all the weapons that would be necessary for the protection of the country's constitution. History tells us that after each change in the government of a country irresponsible people, irresponsible journalists, and irresponsible papers grow up and try to create chaos in the country, and therefore, it is just the proper time, as I said, when the future constitution of the country should be armed with weapons to stop these vagaries of irresponsible people.

Sir, I have finished what I had to say, but before I conclude, I should like to make two points more. One is that it has been frequently remarked by many Honourable Members that Government are taking advantage of the thinness of the House and that this Bill is being rushed through at the fag end of the session. On this question I should like to submit that the present session of the Assembly commenced on the 7th September and the Bill which, in a modified form, is now before the House was introduced on the very same day that this present session commenced. In fact, if I am not guilty of divulging any secrets, I may say that the Government took care to take the responsible Leaders of the House into their confidence even before this session of the Assembly commenced, and therefore, it is not right for the Honourable Members to say that this important measure was taken without giving them due notice. Then, on the same day that the Bill was introduced in this House, the Leader of the House indicated that on Friday, the 11th September, the motion to refer the Bill to Select Committee would be made. Then, on the 11th, two full days were spent in discussing the Bill before it was sent to Select Committee. After realising the importance of this measure, after knowing that this Bill would bring hardship to the Press in this country, there was no excuse for the Honourable Members who have left to leave the House and not to realise their sense of responsibility. They cannot afterwards say that the Bill has been brought at the fag end of the session or that sufficient notice was not given to the Members of the House that this important measure was coming before the House. The meetings of the Assembly are convened only twice a year and if important measures are not brought up during the course of certain sessions, I do not think it would ever be possible for this Assembly to transact any important business.

The second point to which I should like to refer is that reference was made by Mr. Misra and some other Honourable Members about the executive in this country and it was said that the powers vested by this Bill would be exercised by the Magistrates in a reckless manner. Sir, we are all aware that the majority of the executive in this country consist of Indians, and if educated Indian Magistrates are liable to abuse their power in this way, as my friend, Mr. Misra and other Honourable Members think they do, then our claim for responsible government and self-government for this country falls to the ground.

Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh : They were condemning the system under which these Indian officers work, and not the officers themselves.

Sir Muhammad Yakub : No, they did not condemn the system ; they only said that this law will be abused. I would not have raised any objection if they had said that the law is defective. They did not condemn the system, but they said that the people who administer the law will abuse it. That is to say, they attack the educated Indian young men in whom the future hopes of the country lie, and I would like to lodge a strong protest against this wanton abuse of the educated people of the country who will in future govern this country to the credit of the Indians and everybody concerned. With these remarks and for these reasons I support the motion that the Bill be passed.

Mr. President : Mr. Mitra.

Mr. K. Ahmed : Sir, reference has been made to the Mahabharata, which was alluded to by the last speaker and my Honourable friend, Mr. Amar Nath Dutt.....

Sir Muhammad Yakub : I never alluded to the Mahabharata or to anybody.

Mr. K. Ahmed : Mr. Amar Nath Dutt when he was speaking yesterday.....

Mr. President : The Honourable Member is now making a speech.

Mr. K. Ahmed : I am not doing anything of the kind which is not allowed.

Mr. President : The Honourable Member will get his turn, if he wishes to speak. I have called Mr. Mitra now.

Mr. K. Ahmed : Before he speaks, I have a right to make an explanation.

Mr. President : The Honourable Member cannot offer an explanation of a speech delivered some time ago. Mr. Amar Nath Dutt has not spoken yet.

Mr. K. Ahmed : The last speaker has spoken and I am entitled if you will allow me.....

Mr. President : The Honourable Member can only rise to a point of order. What is the point of order ?

Mr. K. Ahmed : The point of order is this. It is the practice in Parliament and in this Assembly also that when the last speaker has made a reference.....

Mr. President : Order, order. The Honourable Member cannot take up the time of the House unless he raises a point of order. The way in which he has started does not indicate that he has any point of order. What is the point of order ?

Mr. K. Ahmed : The last speaker has made a reference to certain allusions made in the speech, to him, when it was mentioned to him what about certain extracts which were quoted last time by Mr. Amar Nath Dutt that he will go to heaven if he kills a man ; and the last speaker was not intelligent enough or probably he did not follow the interjection in spite of answering the question that it is not irreligious or that religion did not allow to say so, it was not right for Mr. Amar Nath Dutt.....

Mr. President : I cannot see that there is any point of order in the statement which the Honourable Member has made so far. I cannot allow the time of the House to be occupied in this way. Mr. Mitra.

Mr. S. C. Mitra (Chittagong and Rajshahi Divisions : Non-Muhamadan Rural) : Sir, I oppose the Bill, though I must say that, had it been the object of the Bill to suppress incitement to murder, I would have supported the principle of the Bill. Before I make my own arguments, I would like to meet two points that my Honourable friend, Sir Muhammad Yakub, has raised. He said that there was sufficient notice. I think my Honourable friend forgot that the notice from the Legislative Assembly Department said that the Session was to last till the 24th of September. Now, to-day we are on the 3rd of October. So I think he could not make much on that point.

Sir Muhammad Yakub : It was never said so. It was only a tentative programme.

Mr. S. C. Mitra : It may be for you. When the notice comes from the Assembly Department we can see only what is contained in it. As an ex-President you may have other information.

Then the other point was with regard to the Magistrates. His soft heart was very much aching for the Magistrates. My point is that if we say something, it is not against the persons. If we say something here against the Government, we do not mean that it is Sir James Crerar or Sir George Rainy. It is the bad system under which the bureaucracy is working, that we blame. It is against the principle that we fight. It may be a good and intelligent man like Sir Muhammad Yakub that may be the Magistrate. But he has to work under the existing system and that is what we are fighting against. The Indian National Congress has been fighting for the separation of judicial and executive functions and it has been accepted even by Government that it is a good principle. But yet Government could not see their way to give effect to that principle. We say that the executive orders should never take the place of judicial proceedings. If my Honourable friend has not realised it, after so many years of practice in the courts, I cannot help him.

Then, as regards the point raised by the Leader of the European Group, I very much agree with my Honourable friend, Mr. Ranga Iyer, that every Member is as much to blame. But if there is anybody who is more to be blamed, I think it is our Honourable friend, Mr. Arthur Moore himself, because he was the President of the Select Committee and it was his bounden duty, as the President of the Select Committee to see whether proper publication was made in the Gazette.

Mr. Arthur Moore : On a point of personal explanation, may I say that I did not use the word imputed to me by Mr. Ranga Iyer. I did not say anything about the fault of the Assembly Department. I merely used the word which you used, that it was a mistake. We all recognise that it was merely a slip.

Mr. S. C. Mitra : I do not specially find fault with my Honourable friend. If anybody is to be blamed more, it is the Chairman of the Select Committee whose business it was to see that the proper publication has been made.

Then, I come to the points which I wish to raise. I admit that there is a frequency of these political assassinations, which it is the duty of the Government, whether it is an alien Government or a national Government, to stop. But you must make a proper diagnosis of the situation and apply the proper remedy. It is no use applying quack remedies when you cannot really destroy the root cause. You know that discontent has been prevailing in the country now for a long time. I admit that in writings in the Press there may be passages where you can see a lurking sympathy with these political assassinations. It is no use saying that these are misguided youths. I do not agree with Sir Muhammad Yakub in saying that they are all misguided youths.

Sir Muhammad Yakub : I never used the word "misguided". I said sensitive.

Mr. S. C. Mitra : My point is this. Some of these young men are graduates and really intelligent people. They are taking recourse to assassinations. It is a very serious thing to be seriously and calmly considered. It is not so much due to the ephemeral writing in the Press that these political assassinations are taking place. That was the main argument all along, that by passing this measure, Government will put an end to these things. But I do not think so. That was the reason why I said you are applying a false remedy by which you will not succeed in your object, while you will kill and suppress—as my Leader said—the liberty of the Press, the freedom of fair criticism and put an end to all enterprise in the printing business. It really requires a higher statesmanship to realise where the true defect in the body politic lies. India is no longer an inorganic State, people being unconscious of their political status. I may tell the Government that they cannot stop these things by these quack remedies. They are to look for a remedy for the real evil. I know that now Sir Samuel Hoare is at the helm of affairs, a Conservative Minister, and the Viceroy has declared himself to be a constitutional Viceroy. But I very much appreciate the position of a constitutional Viceroy when there is a responsible Ministry. But where the Ministry is irresponsible, as my friend, Mr. Ranga Iyer, styled it, I think the Viceroy also will have to see through these things and not rely entirely on the absolute tyrants that might be sitting on the Treasury Benches.

Then, as regards the principle, it has been said that killing itself is not always bad. If it had been bad, then why should there be so much praise of war and soldiers ? Why should people recruit soldiers ? They are not brought under this law for inciting to murder. The best fighter will perhaps get a Victoria Cross for killing the enemy. So killing by itself is not necessarily bad. The motive must be found out. I agree that in any Government these political assassinations cannot be allowed. But we have to find out the real remedies against all these evils. Enacting repressive measures one after another is no remedy, and I think, Sir Muhammad Yakub suggested more coercive measures still. By suppressing the feeling you will not kill the disease. As I was going through this typical collection made by Government, I see what Government are now aiming at. I shall actually read two or three passages if time permits. No body can say that there was nothing for admiration in the motive of these political assassins. If I remember right, in the old days in Bengal the public Press used to condemn these dastardly crimes. It was the Pioneer from Allahabad that first said that there was the other side of the shield also, namely the high motives that actuated these people. That is also a matter for consideration. I find even in the judgment of one of these cases, Justice Buckland refers to the motive of the crime and recommends Government to consider about the sentence. The remedy is not by repressive legislation, but by helping the Indians to attain full and complete Swaraj, and if you do that you really remove the causes that lead to these political assassinations.

Before I finish I would like to say a word about my friend, the Leader of the European Group. I am just quoting from the writing of another European gentleman, Mr. B. G. Horniman, who writing in the Daily Herald about the European Group and its Leader says :

“ Mr. Moore made the further demand that the Frontier Crimes Regulation should be applied to Bengal.

We should welcome this measure if we thought that the Government would have the sense and the courage to apply it exclusively to dangerous aliens of the type of this utterly un-English representative of the European community in the Legislative Assembly.

Men of the type of Mr. Arthur Moore are infinitely more dangerous to society, we suspect, than most of the so-called ‘ dangerous revolutionaries ’ locked up in detention camps. They exercise an unhealthy influence over a Government that is over responsive to the cries of panic-mongers.

More than that they do more than a hundred so-called incitements to crime in the vernacular press to stir up feelings of revolt and revenge in the minds of young men against conditions and a system which make it possible for a foreigner like Arthur Moore to insult Indians in the press and in the Legislature.”

Sir, I oppose the Bill.

Sardar Sant Singh (West Punjab : Sikh) : Sir, I stand to oppose the third reading of this Bill. I will not take a long time in making my speech, but I will emphasise certain points which I tried to make clear when I was pressing my amendments for the acceptance of the Honourable the Home Member. It is claimed that the 20th century is an age of reason and rationalism finds a better place than brute might with which we are familiar in the 16th and 17th centuries. I wish might had not been the right, but that reason had taken the place of might. But to my utter surprise I have found that in the discussions that have been going on on my amendments, reason was utterly thrown aside, and that might was used to crush and defeat all my amendments. I may make it quite clear I am entirely at one with the declared object of the Bill, that it aims at crushing the anarchical movement in the country. I certainly want to assist the Treasury Benches in the attainment of that object ; but at the same time I will insist that in eradicating one evil, you should not be perpetuating another evil. One sinful act cannot be eradicated by another sinful act. You are welcome to eradicate the evil of assassination, but you are certainly not to be supported when you yourself take up the role of assassinating the juristic principles that are prevailing in this country. The whole aim of my amendments was that the principles laid down in the criminal jurisprudence of the country should be allowed free play, and even an assassin who kills an individual simply because he happens to belong to a different school of politics than himself, should not be treated on the same principles which were followed by the assassin himself. What I mean is that even a murderer, a ravisher, a dacoit and a robber has a right to be heard. If you want to muzzle the Press in this way by punishing the keeper of the press, printer or publisher, without giving him an opportunity to be heard, why not go ahead and say that every assassin who is guilty of political murder should be hanged straight away ? That would be much better. I would certainly prefer that course to this of punishing an innocent person without giving him a chance of clearing himself. My submission is that throughout my amendments I tried to take away the power from the executive and place it in the hands of the judiciary. My object was that the rule of executive should cease and the rule of law should find a place in this country. I tried to explain it and to emphasise it when moving my principal amendments ; but I entirely failed to carry conviction to the other side. The Honourable the Law Member, who has disappointed me a good deal, has put forward the justification that this particular Bill was an emergency measure and it called for a speedy remedy. My submission is that if you had looked at the amendment to clause 3 which I proposed, I did not overlook this fact. As a matter of fact when a person was to be called upon to deposit security, I made it a provision that during the time the trial lasts or during the time he is called upon to show cause, the Magistrate should have the authority to call upon him to deposit security or to be bound down that he would not do anything of the sort which is sought to be prevented by the introduction of this clause. But even that point has not been considered. Therefore, my submission is that the battle in which I was engaged to fight the other side raged round this one crucial point, that is, whether there should be a rule of law in the land or whether there should be a rule of executive in the land. As the Treasury Benches have succeeded and probably in a few minutes will come out triumphant and the rule of executive will have crushed the rule of law in this land, so I want to record my protest on this point.

Lastly, I wish to say a few words upon the speech of my Honourable friend, Sir Muhammad Yakub. He said that even the religious books of the Hindus, of the Christians and all other religions do control the liberty of action of individuals. Probably my friend forgets that the word “ liberty ” has a distinct connotation from the word “ license ”. If he had kept the distinction before him, he would not have used the language which he used. Liberty is defined like this : you are free to act provided you do not transgress the similar freedom of another citizen of the land. Control is placed upon us because the liberty of every individual is sacred, not the individual liberty of one person only ; and that is the distinction between liberty and license. The second point he took was also objectionable. He said that we are not fit for Home Rule because we are not willing to trust the Indian Magistrates. Of course in one of my arguments I did say that Indian Magistrates more often than not, with rare and noble exceptions, act according to the hints they receive from the District Magistrate : not only do they act like that but at the time of pronouncing judgments they declare it before the accused as well as the counsel, " We are helpless ; you know we are helpless." And certainly we know that they are helpless. Not that they are not able to administer justice or that they do not understand the law, but because they are part of a system which system is bad in itself. Therefore, my submission is that the present system which combines in one both the executive and judicial functions is such that it takes away the liberty of the subject. Therefore, Sir, if this Bill is passed in its present form, it will curtail the liberty of the Press, if not entirely ruin the freedom of expression and freedom of comment in this land. With these remarks I oppose the third reading.

Mr. Muhammad Anwar-ul-Azim (Chittagong Division : Muhammadan Rural) : Sir, I am obliged to you for giving me an opportunity to say a few words on the third reading of the Bill. Those of my friends who followed me on the last occasion must have known the logic with which I couched my story. As one coming from the farthest corner of India, and as one who more or less directly or indirectly has passed through great vicissitudes of Press tyranny, I think it will be wrong on my part if I do not say a few words on the third reading of this important measure.

I am really surprised, Mr. President, that a gentleman of the calibre of my friend, Mr. S. C. Mitra, should say here on the floor of the Assembly things under the cloak of section 67 of the Government of India Act, which really go to support the guilty. I hope I have not misunderstood his arguments, but what I feel is this, that perhaps on occasions more than one, some of us seem to take advantage on the floor of the House of section 67 of the Government of India Act, which allows the Members of this House some sort of freedom of speech. As I said once before, I think the encouragement which the Press and the public get from the speeches made by some of us in the House go a long way to further add to the excitement. I do not propose to read any homily to my friends on the right, but when they profess to condemn lawlessness and disorder, on the face of that and on the face of their condemnation of criminal acts of terrorists, how do they logically and consistently say that they by their words on the floor of the House are not encouraging things which Government are attempting to put down ? We have heard from all sides of the House that most diabolical crimes have been committed against European officials of the Government. I do not mean to hold any brief for the officials nor for the non-official European Community. I have many European friends in this country, but why blame the officials and non-official Europeans for asking the Government to bring in a measure of this kind ? None of my friends on the right care to face facts. It has been repeatedly stated before the House as to how Government came to introduce this measure, and it has been repeatedly pointed out that chaos and anarchy is reigning in certain parts of India. The law-abiding citizens, people who have a stake in the country, approached Government from all parts, and Government realising that they had a duty to perform to the law abiding citizens and to allay the fears of such law-abiding citizens, have brought forward this piece of legislation. If my friends on the right want to be logical, I venture to say that the explanation given by Government to justify the introduction of this Bill should satisfy them. Sometimes our lawyer friends on my right ask how is it that such a responsible Government as the Government of India do not care for the rule of law ? Of course, there is only one answer to that question, and that is, if my friend Sardar Sant Singh and his supporters have read legal literature, they must have noticed that the rule of law is and has been prevailing in all civilised countries and it prevails in this country also. But I am really surprised that they do not care to come to that part of the story where the rule of law is a predominant factor all the time, but it is to a certain extent compromised on account of an emergency. My friends must have noticed that there was during the time of war in England a measure called the Defence of the Realm Act, or what in popular parlance is known as the D. O. R. A., and would my friends argue that, because D. O. R. A. was enacted as an act of emergency, England absolutely demolished or did away with the system of the rule of law of which we hear so much.

Then, Sir, I join issue in connection with the attacks on my friend on my right, Sir Muhammad Yakub, who has been so much heckled from the right wing of the House. My humble request to my heckler friends is this, they must have patience, they must respect the viewpoints of others ; if they do not like the viewpoints of others, even though they are plain truths, my friends must bear them patiently. There is no alternative. Inconsistency in conduct does not look well.

Lastly, I wish to say only one word with regard to what fell from my friend, Mr. Mitra, with regard to his praise about sharp shootings. Yes, even Mr. Mitra will praise skill in sharp shooting and archery, as a theory expressing courage and valour, but if anybody praises these sharp shootings against officials on the floor of the House, my impression is that such commendations go a long way to create further mischief outside. No one for a single second discourages valour and chivalry, but where they are likely to be distorted, it is better that they should not be uttered. The time is very critical. The fate of India is hanging on the balance—I hope and trust that my friends on the opposition, will not add any more fuel to the already over heated atmosphere in the country. This measure is a temporary one, and the Assembly will always have a say in its modification. With these few words, I support the third reading of the Bill.

The Honourable Sir James Crerar : Mr. President, at this advanced stage of the Session and after so many days' debate of this Bill, I do not think that the House expects from me any very long speech now. I think everything that was worth saying with regard to this Bill has been said. Perhaps a good deal has been said which need not have been said ; much has been repeated which was not worthy of repetition, and I do not wish to incur any of those censures myself.

[Sir James Crerar.]

I do, however, desire very briefly indeed to reply to one reproach which has been made against me and the Government and against which I must protest as not being a justifiable reproach. As regards the Assembly having been rushed over this measure, a full reply has already been given by other Members who spoke on this debate. The point on which I wish to make a few remarks is the suggestion that Government have been entirely impervious to reason and to reasonable criticism of this Bill, that because they accepted very few amendments on the long list of amendments placed before the House, therefore that is a reasonable proof of their rigid impermeability to any reason. Sir, I think those Honourable Members who are prepared to regard this question with candour will agree with me that between the form of the Bill as it was introduced and the form in which it is now before the House there are very serious changes. The Honourable Mr. Ranga Iyer, who was a member of the Select Committee, has had the candour and the justice—which here I do desire to acknowledge, though on some of the issues we necessarily differed—I do desire to acknowledge the general candour and justice with which the Honourable Member has addressed himself to the question, and he will, I am sure, agree that during the course of those discussions, the Government did give very careful, very sympathetic consideration to all the suggestions. If on certain broad issues we had yielded, the vital structure of the Bill would have been destroyed, and it was solely on that ground that we dissented and were compelled to stand our ground. Therefore, when the Honourable and learned gentleman opposite imputed to me an entire failure to respond to reason, I on my side must point out that the main points which he mentioned were points which were entirely inconsistent with the structure, the principle and the purpose of the Bill,—the structure, the principle and the purpose of which have twice been approved by the votes of the whole House. I should like to illustrate it by one particular point; longer than that I will not delay the House. The Honourable and learned gentleman opposite instanced as a particular case of unreasonable attitude on the part of the Government the fact that we were unable to accept the particular amendment relating to so-called bonâ fide encumbrances. Now, Sir, while that particular amendment was under discussion, I observed that my Honourable friend was not himself present in the House. I will not pursue in detail the merits or the issues of that amendment, because the House has recorded its decision. But the point I do desire to make is this that even if the Honourable Member who moved that amendment had good reason of thinking that some appropriate provision should be made regarding legitimate and innocent interests in confiscated property, no attempt was made to explain to us what was a bonâ fide interest in the forfeited property. Someone might have been accommodating enough to lend money to the keeper of the press. He might be sympathetic towards methods by which the press or the newspaper was conducted. If the money were returned to him under this amendment, he would presumably be accommodating enough to give it back to the keeper. We were not given any solution of that, nor indeed of any of the other difficulties. The amendment, in its present form, is simply thrown at our heads and no remedy is provided for the obvious difficulties that would arise, because it is quite clear if the amendment stood in that form without any qualifications and reservations,—of practicability of which I remain unconvinced,—the whole purport of that clause would have completely disappeared, and in consequence a greater part of the structure of the machinery of the Act would become ineffective. Now, I do not think that it is a reasonable reproach to levy against Government when amendments are put forward in that crude, ill-considered fashion, in a form which in other respects also would destroy the machinery of the measure,—I submit it is not a fair imputation upon Government to say that they have been indiscriminate, rigid and unyielding in their consideration of the amendments. That is practically the last word I have to say. We on our side of the House, however, much we may differ in our views with regard to the main issues on this subject,—and I thought in the earlier discussions in the House the main issues had been accepted by Honourable gentlemen opposite and I built upon the assurance that many of them gave that they held to those main issues—we on our part do not desire to return any of those reproaches, but I do venture to say when Honourable Members consider the long progress of this Bill, when they consider the great changes with the Government have consented to make, those charges and those reproaches are not justified. (Applause.)

Mr. President : The question is :

“ That the Bill to provide against the publication of matter inciting to or encouraging murder or violence, as amended, be passed.”

The motion was adopted.

The Assembly then adjourned for Lunch till Half Past Two of the Clock.

The Assembly re-assembled after Lunch at Half Past Two of the Clock, Mr. President in the Chair.

DEMAND FOR SUPPLEMENTARY GRANTS.

The Honourable Sir George Schuster (Finance Member) : Sir, I beg to move :

“ That a supplementary sum not exceeding Rs. 2,63,000 be granted to the Governor General in Council to defray the charges which will come in course of payment during the year ending the 31st day of March, 1932, in respect of ‘ Expenditure in England under the control of the Secretary of State for India ’.”

Mr. President : I should like to draw the attention of the Honourable Member, Mr. Misra, to the fact that he has included in his grievances two items, one relating to the Orissa Boundary Commission and the other to the Round Table Conference. There is no provision in this demand for any expenditure on the Boundary Commission for Orissa. Therefore, that grievance cannot be ventilated on the present occasion. I, therefore, call upon the Honourable Member to move his amendment only in regard to the non-representation of Oriyas on the Round Table Conference.

Mr. B. Das (Orissa Division : Non-Muhammadian) : Sir, I am afraid this motion was already moved in connection with the previous grant, and so it cannot be moved.

The Honourable Sir George Rainy (Leader of the House) : The point is this, Mr. President. Precisely this grievance was ventilated on the vote for expenditure in India. This is now a vote for expenditure in England. I cannot say that the motion is substantially the same ; but, if this were in the form of a Resolution, it would be precisely the same.

Mr. President : I had asked my office to go over all the amendments of which notice had been given, and I have disallowed Nos. 1 to 7 on that ground. This is really No. 8, which I am told has not been previously discussed. That is a question of fact which requires to be looked into.

The Honourable Sir George Rainy : I think, Sir, my Honourable friends, Mr. B. Das and Mr. Misra will both recollect that we did discuss the non-representation of Orissa, and I certainly made a speech on the subject.

Mr. B. N. Misra (Orissa Division : Non-Muhammadian) : I had discussed only one part, but the other part I think was ruled out.

Mr. President : The Honourable Member's motion seems to be out of order on both grounds. Mr. Das moved item No. 4 on the first supplementary demand and ventilated the grievance of the non-representation of Orissa at the Round Table Conference. I do not see any difference between the non-representation of Orissa and the non-representation of Oriyas (Laughter).

Mr. B. N. Misra : Sir, we have a grievance.

Mr. President : Very well, I want to hear the Honourable Member.

Mr. B. N. Misra : Sir, as regards the Orissa Boundary Commission...

Mr. President : I have already ruled that that is out of order.

Mr. B. N. Misra : As regards our non-representation at the Round Table Conference.

Mr. President : That has already been discussed.

Mr. B. Das : I submit, Sir, that this sum is allotted for expenditure in England. There is no Oriya Member of the Round Table Conference at London—so he will not be able to share what expenditure is incurred in England.

Mr. President : That is a purely technical point. The subject matter of the grievance has been fully ventilated, viz., that the Province of Orissa has not been represented at the Round Table Conference. Whether it has been done under one head or under another is immaterial. If no motion had been made under the first head, I would have certainly allowed it on this motion.

Non-representation of Nationalist Muslims in the Round Table Conference.

Mr. B. N. Misra : Sir, I beg to move :

“ That the demand for a supplementary grant of a sum not exceeding Rs. 2,63,000 in respect of ‘ Expenditure in England—Secretary of State for India ’ be reduced by Rs. 100.”

Sir, probably you will be wondering as to why, of all people, I should come forward with a motion on behalf of nationalist Muslims.

[Mr. B. N. Misra.]

First of all, let me be not misunderstood that I have put this motion at the instance of my party or anybody. I have brought this motion forward because the nationalist Muslims go unrepresented in this House. Sir, it is not foreign to Hindu culture that we should consider it our duty to espouse an unrepresented cause. (Hear, hear.) You know, Sir, from the Mahabharata that Vishma was a great hero, but he was a bachelor, he was issueless; and therefore, we Hindus, particularly I am now speaking of my Brahmin community, always offer sradh for him; it is incumbent, according to our Hindu ideas, that sons must offer pindas to their father. Of course if a Hindu has not a son, certainly the belief is that he must be given a son by somebody else; and therefore, the Brahmins undertake it as their first duty to offer their pinda to Vishma, who was a great hero but a bachelor and issueless. Therefore, I move this motion on account of the non-representation of nationalist Muslims at the Round Table Conference. Sir, whatever may be said by others, probably you have been reading in the papers, and particularly we get messages from London, that the Round Table Conference cannot proceed further on account of the absence of Dr. Ansari, so well-known to this House and I think to you also, Sir. Sir, on account of the absence of the nationalist Muslims, that Conference cannot go on. Of course, when I say this I do not thereby cast any reflection on any others, but I say that the Government are well aware of this view,—and so the work is being delayed in London. I, therefore, request the Honourable Members on the Treasury Benches that they should not make it a party question or a Government question, and I would request my Honourable Mussalman friends of this House also not to oppose my motion; and I would request the Treasury Benches to leave this question to the free vote of this House, without themselves taking any part in it; and then I think the House will agree to this motion.

Sir Muhammad Yakub (Rohilkund and Kumaon Divisions: Muhammadan Rural): Sir, my Honourable friend, Mr. Misra, has not done justice to the Mussalmans when he says that nationalist Muslims are not represented on the Round Table Conference or that the nationalist Muslims are not represented in this House. Sir, I claim for myself and for my other Muslim friends in this House that we are as much nationalist as any other nationalist in India. Sir, we are not an inch behind any person in this country in claiming the freedom of our country.

Mr. B. N. Misra: Then my Honourable friend cannot object to my motion at all.

Sir Muhammad Yakub: We in this House, as well as the Muslims outside this House, have always fought shoulder to shoulder with the other communities in this country for obtaining the freedom of our motherland. In the same way my friend is not right when he says that nationalist Muslims are not represented on the Round Table Conference. Can any one say that there can be a greater nationalist Muslim than Mr. Muhammad Ali Jinnah himself? He is the man who unfurled the flag of nationalism in this House, the man who taught nationalism to many nationalists in this country, the man who has ed all ideas of communalism and has fought against his own comrades for nationalism. When Mr. Jinnah is in the Round Table Conference can anybody say that nationalist Muslims are not represented? Sir, we have got another great nationalist Muslim in Sir Ali Imam, an who presided over the Nationalist Muslim Conference at Bombay, and is the accredited representative of the Nationalist Muslim

When Sir Ali Imam is there, can anybody say that the nationalist Muslims are not represented at the Round Table Conference? Then Sir Sultan Ahmed. He has always been in the front rank of nationalists in this country; and when all these gentlemen are represented, to make it a grievance that the nationalist Muslims are not is absurd. And to say that the work of the Round Table Conference is being hindered for want of one individual is an argument with which no reasonable man can agree. Probably it is an excuse for not going to any proper settlement with the Muslims. If "A" is present, next day it will be said that "B" is not there, and therefore, work cannot go on; "C" is not there and therefore, the work cannot proceed. Sir, the question of representation at the Round Table Conference has been made a sort of lame excuse in the country; I am not invited therefore the Mussalmans of the United Provinces are not represented; because my friend, Mr. Amar Nath is not there, therefore the Bengalis are not represented; because my friends are not there therefore their case has not been represented.

There are hundreds and thousands of sects and communities in the different sects in India, and if a claim is made for the representation of every community and sub-community and every caste in the Round Table Conference, I do not know what will be the dimensions of the Round Table Conference, when they will finish their work, and how much money will be spent upon these people who enjoy the hospitality of the British Government in England. So I say that it is a super-grievance to say that the nationalist Muslims are not represented for these reasons I am obliged to oppose the motion of my friend Mr. Misra.

r. B. N. Misra: Sir, I was trying for the unity of India and my Honourable friend says that there is no difference.....

r. President: The Honourable Member cannot speak again unless withdrawing the motion.

r. B. N. Misra: Yes, Sir, I am withdrawing it after clearing the air. I think any one reading the papers will find that on account of the absence of Dr. Ansari.....

unwar Hajee Ismail Ali Khan (Meerut Division: Muhammadan Rural): Sir, on a point of order, when the Honourable Member has asked to withdraw his motion what is the use of making a speech?

r. President: He is not in order in making a speech, but he can briefly explain why he is withdrawing it.

r. B. N. Misra: Yes, Sir, I am not making a speech. I was speaking in the interest of the unity of India and of Muslims. It is regrettable that there are communalists and nationalists. If my friend were to be a nationalist Muslim, why should he object to another man speaking there? After all so many people have been included.....

Mr. President : The Honourable Member is again making a speech.

Mr. B. N. Misra : No, Sir, I will not make a speech but I beg leave of the House to withdraw the motion.

The motion was, by leave of the Assembly withdrawn.

Mr. President : The question is :

“ That a supplementary sum not exceeding Rs. 2,63,000 be granted to the Governor General in Council to defray the charges that will come in course of payment during the year ending the 31st day of March, 1932, in respect of ‘ Expenditure in England under the control of the Secretary of State for India ’.”

The motion was adopted.

RESOLUTION RE EXPENDITURE ON ROADS.

Mr. J. A. Shillidy (Secretary, Industries and Labour Department) : Sir, I beg to move the following Resolution :

“ That this Assembly recommends to the Governor General in Council that, in view of the present financial stringency, and notwithstanding anything contained in the Resolution on roads which was adopted by this Assembly on the 4th February, 1930, the apportionment made among Governors' provinces and minor Administrations in the road development account, may, in special circumstances, and upon the advice of the Standing Committee on Roads of the Central Legislature, be made available, as a temporary measure, for expenditure on the ordinary maintenance of roads, on the condition that the Local Government or Administration undertakes, when conditions render this possible, to provide any sums which may have been so applied to maintenance for expenditure upon schemes of development approved by the Governor General in Council on the advice of the Standing Committee on Roads of the Central Legislature.”

Sir, I do not propose to take up the time of the House at any great length, but I would remind Honourable Members of the Resolution which was passed by this House on the 4th February, 1930, whereby certain arrangements were made for the allotment to the provinces, in the ratio of consumption of the amounts of the extra petrol tax. That Resolution contemplated that these sums would be available as a block grant for expenditure on road development. After a time, we received applications from several Local Governments asking that this money might be made available for maintenance and not merely for construction. We went into this question very carefully and we came to the conclusion, having regard to the financial circumstances of the Local Governments, that it was unreasonable to suggest or to insist that they should build more roads while they were unable to maintain their existing ones. We were under the impression in the Standing Committee that we had power to do so under the terms of the Resolution as it stands. We were however advised that this was not so and therefore it has been necessary to come to this House for an amendment of the Resolution. The plain justification for this amendment is, as I have said before, that it is no use asking a Local Government to construct new roads when it has not the money to maintain its existing ones. You will however notice that this diversion, or as some call it this raid on the Road Fund, is not to be a permanent one. First of all, the Standing Committee will have to be satisfied that the Local Government has made out a good case ; secondly it is to be a loan, and this loan is to be repaid as soon as the financial circumstances of the Local Government permit.

I think, Sir, that the Resolution is one which should commend itself to the House.

Mr. S. G. Jog (Berar Representative) : Sir, it is really a very rare phenomenon that a Member of this House has got to rise to support a Resolution moved by a Member of Government. It appears to me that an emergency adjustment of the Fund is necessary and I have purposely risen to say that for all reasonable proposals even if they come from the Government side, this side of the House will give entire support. We have to show that we are reasonable provided the Government are also reasonable, and I heartily support the Resolution moved by the Honourable Member, Mr. Shillidy.

Mr. B. Das (Orissa Division : Non-Muhammadan) : Sir, in giving my approval to the Resolution moved by my Honourable friend, Mr. Shillidy, I would suggest to him that every year, before the Standing Committee on Roads, he will bring forward a statement shewing the sums that the Local Governments appropriate for the maintenance of roads from the Roads Fund, and also he will place statements before the Standing Committee on Roads from year to year showing that sums thus spent on revenue account are credited by the Local Governments to the capital account of expenditure on roads. If he does that I will be satisfied. I will only bring to his notice a local matter of the Kalka-Simla road for which the Standing Committee on roads granted a large sum of money to the Government of the Punjab.

Mr. S. C. Mitra (Chittagong and Rajshahi Divisions : Non-Muhammadan Rural) : It is not correct. The Standing Committee on Roads did not grant any money for this road. It is a provincial road.

Mr. B. Das : It is not correct ? I will draw the Honourable Member's attention to the fact that we live in the Members' quarters on the Cart Road, which is under the administration of my Honourable friend, Mr. Shillidy. My friend allows a large number of motor cars to pass via that road and when Honourable Members come to this House, we come in a dust storm. Either he will stop the motor cars at the place where the medical examination takes place or he will grant sufficient money from the reserve fund accumulating to the Government of India, so that that road may be properly paved and there may be no dust storm when we come to meet here and to reply to the Honourable Member on his Resolution.

Mr. L. V. Heathcote (Nominated Non-Official) : Sir, this Resolution has all the appearance of being a harmless one. But actually I am afraid that I am not in love with it. The only justification that I can find for this Resolution is the sympathy which all of us feel in this House for the hard plight of Provincial Governments. But I do think that we should not allow our sympathy to run away with our reason. It is to be remembered that this additional annas 2 tax which was put on petrol for the purpose of finding funds for road development is a Central revenue and it is the responsibility of this House to see that a tax which was enforced for a particular purpose is used for that purpose. We also have a further responsibility to the person who pays that tax, and the motorist is taxed to a degree which I do not think many Members of this House realise. So the question arises whether there is anything that we can do which is going to bring it to the notice of the Provincial Governments that this money which is proposed to be given to maintenance is to be regarded as a loan. I considered the possibility of tabling an amendment which would to some extent fix the time when the loans were to be repaid, but it was pointed out to me that when the time came and conditions had improved so that we might expect these loans to be repaid, the constitution is likely to be an entirely different one, and whatever conditions may be made now, they would not have an application several years hence, and so the question then arises, is it safe to put the provinces on their honour, because that is really what it comes to, and I am perfectly prepared to do so. In fact I prefer to do so rather than try to invent some formula round which the Local Governments might not be able to get. The only reason which makes me to speak on this Resolution at all is that in the Provinces, the local Legislatures have not yet realised the real importance of roads. Roads is the Cinderella of the transferred Departments. Money is spent on education and health, but it seems to me that little consideration is given to the possibility of improving the roads leading to schools, and so enlarge the area served by the school. Large sums are spent on hospitals but what is the use if the poor villager coming to the hospital dies before reaching it on account of the jolts he receives. And so I would like an assurance from the Honourable the Mover of this Resolution that, in passing on the terms of this Resolution to the Local Governments, he will lay all emphasis he can on the fact that this diversion is a loan and that we rely upon the provinces to repay it to the Road Development Fund.

Mr. J. A. Shillidy : Sir, I would like to thank Mr. Jog for approving of the reasonableness of my proposal and for the promise that he is always ready to support anything reasonable from these Benches. But as all our proposals are entirely reasonable, I think he might cross the floor at once. Then, Sir, turning to Mr. Das, I am quite prepared to accept the suggestion Mr. Das has made that we should inform the Standing Committee of sums which are spent by the Local Governments on maintenance and that we should do so every year. Certainly I shall undertake to do it. As regards the Kalka-Simla road, we discussed it before. But the Standing Committee of this Legislature, I may say the Sub-Finance Committee consists of Members of this House, and they decided that it was a provincial road, expenditure on which must be met from provincial revenues. I shall be glad to hear that Mr. Das has succeeded in his agitation, but I cannot hold out any very great hopes in view of the previous decision of the Standing Committee.

Turning to Mr. Heathcote's remarks, there is of course only one justification for the Resolution, I have proposed, as I said before. It is that Local Governments have got no money at present. They cannot maintain their roads and it is not much use asking at least those Governments which cannot maintain their existing roads to construct new ones. That is the full justification for my Resolution. I am quite prepared to accept Mr. Heathcote's suggestion that, in passing on our orders to Local Governments, we should emphasise, and emphasise very heavily, that this grant or that this diversion to maintenance is only a loan and that we do expect them to repay it as soon as possible.

Mr. President : The question is :

"That this Assembly recommends to the Governor General in Council that, in view of the present financial stringency, and notwithstanding anything contained in the Resolution on roads which was adopted by this Assembly on the 4th February, 1930, the apportionment made among Governors' provinces and minor Administrations in the road development account, may, in special circumstances, and upon the advice of the Standing Committee on Roads of the Central Legislature, be made available, as a temporary measure, for expenditure on the ordinary maintenance of roads, on the condition that the Local Government or Administration undertakes, when conditions render this possible, to provide any sums which may have been so applied to maintenance for expenditure upon schemes of development approved by the Governor General in Council on the advice of the Standing Committee on Roads of the Central Legislature."

The motion was adopted.

RESOLUTION RE PURCHASE OF THE BENGAL AND NORTH WESTERN AND ROHILKUND AND KUMAON RAILWAYS.

The Honourable Sir George Rainy (Member for Commerce and Railways) : Sir, I move :

"That this Assembly recommends to the Governor General in Council that, in accordance with the recommendations of the Committee appointed by the Assembly on the 1st April, 1931, to consider what action should be taken when the opportunity to purchase the Bengal and North Western and Rohilkund and Kumaon Railway systems occurs on the 31st of December, 1932 :

- (1) the Government should enter into negotiations with the two Companies to obtain from them an option to purchase the lines on the most favourable terms on the 31st December, 1937, subject to one year's notice, or, if possible, on the 31st December of any earlier year, again subject to one year's notice ;
- (2) the question whether the working of the Tirhoot Railway should be entrusted to the Bengal and North Western Railway Company during the 5 years (or shorter period), for which it is suggested that the option to purchase the Bengal and North Western Railway should be obtained, should be determined by the terms on which it is possible to obtain this option and to arrange with the Company for working the Tirhoot Railway during this period ;
- (3) the question whether the working of the Lucknow-Bareilly State Railway should be entrusted to the Rohilkund and Kumaon Railway Company during the 5 years (or shorter period) for which it is suggested that the option to purchase the Rohilkund and Kumaon Railway should be obtained, should be determined by the terms on which it is possible to obtain this option and to arrange with the Company for working the Lucknow-Bareilly State Railway during this period ;
- (4) in the event of its proving impossible to reach agreement with the Bengal and North Western and Rohilkund and Kumaon Railway Companies on the terms recommended in (1), the Government should explore other lines for reaching agreement which would ensure to the Government the opportunity to purchase on reasonable terms ; and the Government should again consult a committee of the Assembly for the purpose of re-considering the position as regards the management of the Tirhoot and Lucknow-Bareilly Railways."

This is a somewhat lengthy Resolution, but I do not propose that my speech should be adjusted to the length of the Resolution, for I am afraid in that case it would be a very long speech indeed. The Resolution is the result of the unanimous report of the Committee appointed by this Assembly, and as the Report of the Committee has been in the hands of

[Sir George Rainy.]

Members for some time, it is not necessary, I think, for me to go into great detail on the question. As Honourable Members know, we can by giving notice before the 31st of December, 1931, exercise the right which we have under the contracts to purchase these railways with effect from the 31st December 1932. The sum we should have to pay is just over £10 millions sterling in the case of the Bengal and North Western Railway, and something less than £2 millions in the case of the Rohilkund and Kumaon Railway. And of course as Honourable Members already know—and it is clearly brought out in the Report of the Committee—the great practical difficulty which exists in the way of our exercising our option to give notice arises from the financial conditions now prevailing. As is pointed out in the Report of the Committee, “The Finance Member emphasised the fact that in present conditions a very large sterling sum, nearly £12 millions, required to purchase the railways could not be raised without unduly straining India’s credit with possible detrimental effect on existing securities, or without reducing the power of the Government to finance new expenditure in other directions”. I think that every member of the Committee realised that the difficulty was a very real one and that Government could not possibly, at the present stage, undertake to raise that sum in London.

Another point to which the attention of the Committee was drawn was this—that taking account of the terms on which the Government of India is in a position to borrow money, and taking into account also the probable increase of expenditure on the line which would result if Government took it over, and finally taking into account the existing depression in trade, it was not at all likely that as a business proposition the purchase of the line would be a good bargain. That in itself might not be decisive at ordinary times, but taken in conjunction with the practical impossibility of raising the sum required, the difficulty becomes very formidable. The unofficial members of the Committee, however, held very strongly that due account must be taken of the strong feeling on the subject in the areas served by the two companies that the lines ought to be purchased at the first possible opportunity. The Government were in no way disposed to under-rate the force of that line of argument; and therefore the Committee came to the conclusion that the best course we could recommend in the circumstances as regards the purchase of the two lines was that we should endeavour to obtain from the companies an extension of our option to purchase for a period of five years in the hope that during that period the financial conditions might improve and that it might prove possible to raise the money before the end of the period. The Government members of the Committee found it necessary to point out that all the probabilities pointed to the conclusion that by private arrangement, and apart altogether from the contract, it was likely to be possible to purchase the lines for a considerably smaller sum when the time came when we had funds to spend for that purpose. On the other hand, neither myself nor the Finance Member found any difficulty in concurring in the course recommended by the majority of the Committee, namely, that we should do our very best to secure this option. As Honourable Members, I think, know, if we do not exercise our option now, then we shall not be able to purchase compulsorily until the year 1981, and although we believe that, when funds are available, it would be possible by private arrangements, apart from the contract, to purchase more cheaply, nevertheless we see no harm whatever in securing the extension of this option if the companies are willing to give it to us. That, Sir, covers the first clause of the Resolution.

The second and the third clauses are concerned with the arrangements to be made in respect of the two State-owned railways which are managed by the companies, that is the Tirhoot Railway and the Lucknow-Bareilly Railway. As regards both of these, we shall have a free hand after the 31st December 1932. The contract relating to the working of the Tirhoot Railway terminates on the 31st December 1932 whether Government purchase the Bengal and North Western Railway or not. A new contract will therefore be necessary whether we purchase that railway or not. The position is not precisely identical in the case of the Lucknow-Bareilly Railway; the contract does not terminate automatically unless we purchase the Rohilkund and Kumaon Railway line, but after the 31st December 1932 we can terminate the contract by giving 12 months’ notice. What the Resolution recommends about that is that, provided we can arrange satisfactory terms with the Bengal and North Western Railway and the Rohilkund and Kumaon Railway Company, then the management should continue with these Railways. It is impossible at the present stage to make a more definite recommendation, because the question of the terms will have to be discussed with the two companies concerned. These two clauses, however, assume that we shall be able to get the option to purchase extended for a period of five years and they do not cover the future management of the two State-owned lines except for such period.

Finally, we come to clause 4, which contemplates that it may prove impossible to reach agreement with the Bengal and North Western Railway and the Rohilkund and Kumaon Railway Companies on the terms about extending the option, and the Resolution recommends that in that case Government should explore other lines for reaching agreement which would ensure to the Government the opportunity to purchase on reasonable terms, and in the second place that the Government should consult the Committee of the Assembly for the purpose of reconsidering the position with regard to the management of the Tirhoot and the Lucknow-Bareilly Railways. I lay some little stress on the point that these two recommendations are made on the assumption that we are unable to obtain an extension of the option. There is no difficulty, as the Resolution stands on the paper from the point of view of Government, in recommending either or both of these courses. We are quite ready to explore what other means may be possible for the purchase of the lines when financial conditions improve. Nor have we any difficulty about consulting a Committee of the Assembly as regards the future management of the Tirhoot and Lucknow-Bareilly Railways, because as I have explained, after the 31st December 1932, we shall not be bound by any contract, and we shall have a free hand.

Perhaps it might save the time of the House if I were to refer here to an amendment which is on the paper and of which notice has been given. That amendment is to omit at the very end of clause 4 the words “as regards the management of the Tirhoot and Lucknow and Bareilly Railways". I am not quite sure that I know fully what is in the mind of the Honourable Member who has given notice of that amendment. If it merely means that when in the course of the year 1932 or later we should consult the Committee of the Assembly about the future management of the Tirhoot and the Lucknow-Bareilly Railways we should also be ready to consult in 1932 about the whole position, then I have no objection. But as the Resolution is drafted, if the amendment were adopted, it might very easily be read as binding Government to consult the Assembly before our option to purchase the Railways expires on the 31st December 1931. I could not promise to do that because there is not sufficient time. The negotiations with the two companies will take up time, and I cannot give any promise of that kind. But I have not the least doubt that, whoever may sit in the seats where we sit to-day, this question of the possibility of purchase on reasonable terms will come before the Assembly at the end of two or three years. So far as that is concerned, and as regards future consultation from 1932 onwards, if that is what is meant, then I should have no difficulty in accepting the amendment. I have only mentioned this point as it may shorten the discussion.

[Sir George Rainy.]

Mr. B. Sitaramaraju (Ganjam cum Vizagapatam : Non-Muhammadan Rural) : Sir, that in clause (4) the words "as regards the management of the Tirhoot and Lucknow-Bareilly Railways" be omitted is the amendment I propose. At the very outset I would like to emphasise once again the desire on the part of the Opposition as well as on that of the country to terminate, as far as, and as quickly as possible these contracts with the companies generally, and in particular with this company, in favour of State management. Having said that, I should like to draw the attention of the House to these words that occur in clause 4 limiting the scope of the consultation. I have heard with great relief the speech of the Honourable Sir George Rainy that if it was my desire in moving this amendment not to handicap the Government with regard to the exercise of the option, but only that the Assembly should be consulted after the end of 1931, he was prepared to accept my amendment. I only wish to submit that the Assembly should be consulted as early as possible in view of the desire so keenly felt and so often expressed that the railways should not be left under company management. I realise of course the difficulties which the Committee had to face when they had to recommend this five years extension on account of the financial stringency with which we are cursed. It is also a great relief to me to note that the five years is not a period finally fixed but they have also provided that if it is possible, if the financial circumstances permit, at an earlier date these contracts should be terminated and they give power to the Government to negotiate on that basis. I entirely agree with those conditions. I wish only to repeat once more that it is not my intention to handicap the Government in their negotiations, but only that the Assembly should be consulted on all these matters. With these few words I move my amendment.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad (United Provinces Southern Divisions : Muhammadan Rural) : The position about these lines now under discussion is this ; we have four lines, (1) the B. & N. W. line, secondly, the R. & K. R. line, thirdly, the Tirhoot line, and fourthly, the Lucknow-Bareilly line. As regards the B. & N. W. line, the contract is that we ought to give notice by the end of this year. If we do not give any notice, then automatically the contract will extend for another period of 50 years ; that is, up to the end of 1982. The Tirhoot line which is the most paying of all belongs to us, and we have handed over its administration to the B. & N. W. line, and it is open to us to take over that administration at any time we choose. As regards the R. & K. R. line, it belongs to the company, and the Lucknow-Bareilly line belongs to us which is given to the same company to run. Sir, if we do not give notice by the end of this year, then the contract with the B. & N. W. line will automatically extend to 1982, and the same is the case with the R. & K. R. line. But it will be open to us to give the contract for managing the Tirhoot and Lucknow-Bareilly lines to the same lines or we may undertake its management in our own hands. I tell you frankly what is at the back of our minds. We have got the very sad experience of the Assam Bengal Railway. Last year the Honourable the Leader of the House brought forward a motion that the terms of contract with this line should be extended for another ten years, in other words, that no notice should be given before 31st December 1931. The Assembly, on the motion of Mr. Fazal Rahimtulla, resolved that the period of contract be extended by one year only, but we were told very definitely by Mr. Parsons in reply to questions on the point that the Government cared nothing about this Resolution. The Government did not give the notice which they ought to have done on the 31st December 1930, with the result that automatically the contract has been extended for another period of ten years, and this was done against the explicit wishes of the Assembly. We are afraid that the same thing may be repeated in this case also, that is, that the railway authorities, the Government of India and the Secretary of State may ignore the fact and take no notice whatever of what we say, and automatically the contract may be extended by another 50 years. It is against all the principles on which the railway administration in India ought to be carried on.

Sir, I start with the fundamental principle that we take the earliest opportunity to purchase each and every railway in India, and as soon as the contract of any company is going to expire, we should not let the opportunity slip away, but we should take into our own hands the administration of all the railways in India. This is the principle on which I stand, and I challenge any person who may advocate any other principle contrary to this one, and I will give some of my reasons later on. (Mr. S. C. Mitra : "Where to get the money from ?") My Honourable friend, Mr. Mitra, asks where is the money to come from. I never cared for it ; if a thing has to be done, it must be done. Supposing there is a war to-morrow, then the Honourable Sir George Schuster will find money somehow or other. The question where the money is to come from depends very much upon the importance of the matter, and we must not sit idle saying, where is the money to come from ?

Now, if we remained silent, the Government might allow time to lapse, and automatically the terms of the contracts will be extended for another 50 years. This is a thing that we do not want, but realising the financial difficulties of the country at the present time, the Committee which was appointed by the Government from the various groups of this House, considered this question very carefully, and they recommended that, owing to the financial stringency, the utmost that they could do was they might be willing to extend the period of contract for a period of five years. If the B. & N. W. Railway company is willing to undertake the extension of this period and modify the terms of the contract accordingly as they have already done more than half a dozen times, we on this side of the House, at least and the members of the Sub-Committee, see no objection to an extension for another five years, but they do have great objection to extending the period of another 50 years,—it is an absolutely impossible problem. Supposing the B. & N. W. Company does not agree with this offer of extension for five years, what are we going to do?

In the first place, I should ask the Government to consult the Assembly or a Committee of the Assembly immediately before allowing the option to lapse altogether, and in that case, I would advise the Government to immediately take possession of the Tirhoot and Lucknow-Bareilly lines and manage them themselves. If the companies treat us indifferently, there is no reason why we should entrust the most profitable part of our railways into the hands of these companies. If they are not reasonable to us, I do not think we should be charitable to them. That is the first thing that I would submit if they do not agree to our terms. We should immediately take possession of the Tirhoot line and the other line which according to the contract you can do.

One reason among many others for which I very strongly press the immediate purchase of these railways is that I and probably some other Honourable Members know the working of these lines very well. I approach my constituency by this line, that is, the B. & N. W. line, and I know its working perhaps better than the Members on the Treasury Benches, including Mr. Parsons. I have travelled extensively on this line, and it is impossible to describe the inconveniences of the passengers even in the first and second classes, not to speak of the third class at all. There is no light at night, there is no sufficient water to be had, no refreshments at stations, and no sheds of any kind whatsoever. I went to Chauri-Chaura and made enquiries. The Station Master there is paid very little, perhaps not more than Rs. 100 a month, but his extra income is Rs. 4,000 a month. I will be quite willing to resign membership of the Assembly if the Honourable Member in charge of the Railways will make me Station Master of Chauri-Chaura. The reason why they run it economically is that the official pay is small but the employees make very high incomes from back doors. They neither pay any taxes on the back door income nor is there any chance of retrenchment. That is really the root cause of the troubles of the passengers. Though on paper they show that their working ratio is very small, the money that comes out from the people's pockets by the back door, is really enormous, and this money ought to be debited to the working expenditure of that particular railway. If the Government purchases this railway, then all these troubles will cease to exist.

There is one other story I want to tell about this railway. If you give the guard two sugar canes you can have the train stopped, during the sugar cane season. This happens in the Gorakhpur district. The quicker this company administration is finished, the better. It is really a scandal and, a source of great inconvenience to the people. There is one other story which I may tell here. The ticket examiners on this railway do not know the difference between single and return tickets. Once a ticket examiner punched my ticket in the middle when I told him that it was a return ticket. He said, "Hallo, I did not realise this". This is the knowledge and intelligence of the people who are employed on this line. I do not waste the time of the House by telling stories. I could write volumes. My point is that we should take immediate possession of this railway. If the Railway Company is unreasonable then we should collect the money some how and purchase it at once. I can suggest two ways by which money can be obtained. The railway has got a substantial sum in the Depreciation Fund. The Depreciation Fund must be invested somewhere, and I am given to understand that this Company is paying 19 per cent. The Railway Administration will have a very good investment if the Depreciation Fund is invested in this particular railway. My next suggestion is this. If the Finance Member raises a loan for this specific object, the money will be subscribed immediately. I see no difficulty if the desire to purchase it is not wanting.

Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh (Muzaffarpur cum Champaran : Non-Muhammadian) : As one of the signatories to the Report of the Sub-Committee which was appointed by this House, I should like to make one or two observations. In the first place I should like to voice the feelings of the people generally from my part of the country that the entire B. and N. W. Railway system should be purchased by the State as soon as possible. The Acworth Committee Report laid down the principle that, on the termination of the lease of a Company-managed railway, it should as a rule be taken over by the State. This House also in one of its Resolutions has confirmed that principle. If the financial situation of the country had not intervened, I would certainly have recommended the immediate purchase of this railway. As we discussed this matter at great length in the Sub-Committee which was appointed by this House, and as we had the advantage of listening to the arguments advanced by my Honourable friend the Finance Member, we came to the conclusion that it was out of the question, however, regrettable it may be, to purchase this railway in the immediate present. Therefore, we unanimously gave authority to the Government to negotiate with this railway to purchase it within a period of five years at the maximum, and our recommendation has the support, I am glad to say, of public opinion in my part of the country. The Indian Nation which is the leading organ of Indian Nationalism at Patna in its issue of the 16th September 1931 observed as follows :

"The suggestion of the Committee appointed by the Assembly to go into the question that option should be obtained by negotiation with the companies to purchase the lines on most favourable terms within five years hence seems a happy one. The companies should be given a year's notice which is only fair. We hope the suggestion of the Committee will be adopted by the Government of India, and efforts will be made to secure its acceptance by the companies concerned, so that the purchase of the lines may not be deferred to 49 years hence."

Now, Sir, there is one point about B. and N. W. Railway which I may mention. Its rates and fares are lower on the whole as compared with the rates and fares of any other existing railway system in the country. From the Railway Board's Report for 1929-30, Vol. II, pages 97-98, I cull the following :

"The average rate per mile is :—In the first class it is 13.7 pies on the B. and N. W. Railway, while it is 16.7 on the Eastern Bengal metre gauge ; on the second class it is 8.01 on the B. and N. W. Railway and 9.72 on the Eastern Bengal Railway ; on the inter class it is 3.47 on the B. and N. W. Railway, and 3.90 on the Eastern Bengal ; on the third class it is 2.29 on the B. and N. W. Railway, while it is 3.11 on the Eastern Bengal Railway."

So far as the goods traffic is concerned, we find also that the average rate in pies per ton mile is 7.34 on the B. and N. W. Railway as against 8.45 on the Eastern Bengal Railway.

Mr. B. Das : Why discuss fares now ?

Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh : I would not have mentioned it but for the observation made by my friend Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad. I do not know whether all the observations that my friend made were pertinent to the present motion. He might have reserved some for the Railway Budget.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad : I have enough for that occasion.

Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh : I do not want the rates and fares to be increased in these hard times. When I signed the Report of the Committee, I understood that, considering the extreme financial situation in the country, we were giving the Government the option to negotiate with the B. and N. W. Railway for the purchase of the entire system within a period of 5 years at the utmost. We can purchase it earlier, but 5 years is the maximum. If the railway does not care for this extension, then the whole position ought to be reviewed by this House and a committee may be appointed, not necessarily the same committee, and then we might come to whatever conclusion we like on the point, but we are definitely against the extension of the lease beyond five years. If we do not exercise our option, then the lease will automatically extend to 50 years. We are definitely opposed to this long extension. We are agreeable to purchase the lines within a maximum period of five years, failing which they should come to this House for necessary sanction in the matter. That is all I have got to say.

Mr. S. C. Mitra (Chittagong and Rajshahi Divisions : Non-Muhammadan Rural) : Sir, all the three previous speakers who spoke on this Resolution from this side were members of the Select Committee. I was not a member of the Committee, but I understand that the Resolution, though worded in so many lines, simply means that the Government should try its best to get the best terms available from the Company, and that we should try to let them have a year or two's extension or at the maximum five years. All this had been pointed out at the Delhi Session, but what we now want to know is how these negotiations are proceeding. We know that the financial condition of the country is not such that the Government of India may be in a position to afford so much money as to purchase the whole line, but there are the other points brought out by my Honourable friend, Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad, that there is every reason for the Company to become reasonable because two or three of the Government-owned branch lines are now being managed by the Company, and they are the most paying—yielding very high dividends. But the learned Doctor is under the misapprehension, though he is a great mathematician, that we have a very big Depreciation Fund lying idle in the treasury for the railways ; I am sure it is known to the House that the whole fund of Government reserves on different accounts is a consolidated fund, so that if there is a deficit money is drawn from the consolidated fund and the railways may not always draw upon that fund as they desire.

The other question that the learned Doctor referred to was about the fate of the Assam-Bengal Railway ? But that was only an extension for ten years, and we can afford to let the Company have their time, but here the period being a very long one, 50 years, I think we can expect that the Government will now tell us how the negotiations have been proceeding during all these months and, now that there are barely three months left, whether there is any chance for the Government to come to any agreeable settlement with the Company.

Mr. Muhammad Azhar Ali (Lucknow and Fyzabad Divisions : Muhammadan Rural) : Sir, as one of the members of the Committee, there are two complaints which I have to make as regards the position of these railways. The first is that this motion by the Government to acquire these railways came very late during the last session of the Assembly. The Government knew that if the contracts were not finished by December 1931, the contracts would extend to another fifty years. I am making this point that, knowing that this matter would have to come before the Select Committee and before the Assembly, and that it is such an important matter involving Rs. 12 or 14 crores, the Government ought to have brought this matter up at least last year or year before last so that they might have been left some time to discuss this question and to examine it very carefully. Now on the eve of the expiry of the contract, the matter is placed before us, and we are in a fix. The other point I make is that the deeds of contracts which were made and which were placed before the Committee were so very much involved with one another and that for a very long time different concessions were made to the Companies one after another, that the result was that it was very difficult for anyone to examine their full import. The wording of the contracts which were entered into, time after time between the Government of India and the Company were ambiguous, besides no copy of the full contract was given to us which could give us the true condition in which we were at present in relation to the Company. Thus two facts were very prominent—one, that the Company was getting an income of 19 per cent. as dividend, and the other, that it was very difficult to acquire it unless notice was given by the 31st December, 1931. There is another fact too that the Company has invested about £3 million, and they have got more than £3 million as Reserved Fund. Looking to the income which the Company is making, if we ask the Government to go into the question earnestly, in the interests of the Indian exchequer and of the Indian people, I think we shall not be asking Government anything which is very embarrassing or to the detriment of the interests of the country.

Now, Sir, the amendment moved by the Honourable Mr. Sitaramaraju is only this, that the Government should carry on negotiations with the Company and this House should be consulted. There should be an undertaking given by the Government that some sort of settlement is sure to come out of these negotiations, and unless we are assured on this side of the House that some understanding is bound to come, we think it will be simply beating about the bush. My Honourable friend, Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad, pointed out, and we all know already, as to what was the fate of the Assam-Bengal Railway. In case the contract terminates in December 1931, and if the Company does not come to any understanding with us, it is no use my saying that the 50 years' lease is bound to remain where it is. Sir, to say that there is no money and therefore you cannot purchase it, is not right. In the Committee we suggested that some sort of arrangement should be made either by floating a special loan for the purchase of these railways, or by means of debentures which may also be floated by the Government of India. I think in that case, instead of these big and fat dividends going to Europe or to other countries outside India, at least the money will remain in my own country. So, although it is a matter for those people who know finance well, still these suggestions from laymen are worth considering, viz., that debentures or some sort of shares may be floated, and the Government should try to buy these railways so that they may become State railways.

Mr. C. S. Ranga Iyer (Rohilkund and Kumaon Divisions : Non-Muhammadian Rural) : Sir, I do not want to make a long speech ; but coming as I do from the Rohilkund and Kumaon Divisions and knowing as I do all about that railway,—I have given expression to my opinion about it on previous occasions during previous debates—I think I must speak a word or two now. I would, Sir, very strongly put it to the Honourable the Railway Member to exert all his influence with the Railway Company and to see to it that it agrees to his terms. As it is, the contract expires on the 31st December, 1932 and during this period unless the Company agrees to sell this railway to the Government it might be open to it not to sell it at all in another 50 years. I think the Company will agree to the Honourable the Railway Member's terms and leave it open to us to buy the R. and K. Railway within the next five years. Sir, it is absolutely necessary that the Rohilkund and Kumaon Railway must be bought by the Government, and I need not give reasons for that because there is no difference between that side of the House and this with regard to the reasons. Nor need I go into the various aspects touched upon by Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad in his criticism of the Railway. Many of them were exaggerated and some of them were incorrect.

The Honourable Sir George Rainy : Sir, I have only a few words to say at the close of this debate. My Honourable friend Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad suggested that, before the option to purchase finally expired, Government should consult the country. What else, Mr. President, have Government been doing for the last nine months ? We got a committee of the Assembly to express an opinion from the more central point of view, and we got expressions of opinion from the Legislatures of the two provinces concerned from the more narrow local point of view. If that is not consulting the country, I really do not quite know what method the Honourable Member would have us employ.

There are two small points I want to make plain. One is this : we cannot of course be quite certain,—we never can in these things,—whether the Companies will give us the extension of the option that we want or not. I hope they will, but clearly it is not in the power of Government to compel them to do so. The other is, that as far as I can see, it is as certain as anything can be that we shall not be in a position to give notice before the 31st December. My Honourable friend Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad said that the Finance Member should try and collect money somehow or other from somewhere. That is the pursuit in which my Honourable colleague is at present engaged, and I have no doubt that if the reception of his efforts in this House next month is cordial and appreciative, he will do his very best to follow out my Honourable friend's suggestions. But still I must confess to a remaining doubt,—and indeed I am afraid I must say, a remaining certainty,—that do what we will, it will not be possible in the coming year to get that sum of 12 million sterling in the London market. That is all I need say because I think all the speeches were in support of the Resolution.

I think, Sir, I indicated in my opening speech that I was prepared to accept this amendment.

Mr. President : The question is :

“ That in clause (4) the words ‘ as regards the management of the Tirhoot and Lucknow-Bareilly Railways ’ be deleted.”

The motion was adopted.

Mr. President : The question is that the Resolution, as amended, be passed.

The motion was adopted.

RESOLUTION RE DRAFT CONVENTION ON FORCED OR COMPULSORY LABOUR.

The Honourable Sir James Crerar (Home Member) : Sir, I beg to move the following Resolution :

“ That this Assembly, having considered the Draft Convention and Recommendations concerning Forced or Compulsory Labour, adopted by the 14th session of the International Labour Conference, recommends to the Governor General in Council that he should not ratify the Draft Convention.”

Though this Resolution may at first sight appear to be of a somewhat formidable character, I hope, without detaining the House very long, to be able to convince it that the point involved, though important, is really a very simple one and that in the special circumstances which affect our case in India it is really impossible for us to take any other attitude than that which is set out in the Resolution. I do not intend, except in the most concise terms, to go into the previous history of this question and will deal in a few words with that aspect of the matter.

At the time of the conclusion of the peace when the Treaty of Versailles and the Covenant of the League of Nations were entered into, Honourable Members will recollect, certain territories, which had formerly been in possession of the enemy powers, were transferred under the ægis of the League of Nations to certain of the allied powers under a mandate. These territories were called mandatory territories and they were for the most part inhabited by primitive races many of them in a barbarous condition ; and the practice of slavery or of customs which practically amounted to slavery were either prevalent or were believed by the authors of these treaties to be of such a character that stringent precautions ought to be taken against them. Consequently, it was enjoined upon all the mandatory powers that they should, among other principles of administration, adopt the principle of suppressing the slave trade and slavery in all its forms. I mention that because it is interesting and important at this stage to observe that the Draft Convention which we have at present to deal with arose originally out of a consideration of something totally different ; that is to say, of conditions either actually amounting to or approximating to slavery. A Slavery Commission was appointed, and it reported to the League in 1925 and among other recommendations it made, one was that the principles which they themselves arrived at with regard to slavery and forms of compulsory labour tantamount to slavery should be adopted as general international principles. The discussion was carried on for some time on these lines and then was laid before the 12th session of the International Labour Conference, a Report on Forced Labour prepared by the International Labour Office, containing a summary of the legislation and practice concerning forced labour in all countries. A questionnaire was issued and finally the Conference decided to place the question on the agenda for the 14th session of the Conference and to consider a draft Convention.

Now, Sir, at this stage the Government of India expressed its views on the subject. Our views were that we in no way objected to the main principles of the Draft Convention but from our point of view it would be necessary that the terms of the Draft Convention should be very carefully scrutinised in order that they should not be made to cover the kind of compulsory labour or work which is executed in such cases as the criminal tribes' settlements or, for instance, in the case of reformatory schools and certified training schools to which children and young persons are sent under the various Children Acts in force in India. During the course of the discussion, I regret to say that for some reason or other the views which the Government of India wished to impress upon the Conference were not apparently sufficiently clearly expressed. Two of our delegates did indeed point out the essential facts of the case as I have briefly recited here. One of the Indian representatives, either had not completely studied his brief or had completely misconceived the position. It was, however, made clear that if the relevant portion of the Draft were adopted in the form proposed, our practical difficulties would be so great that it would be impossible for us formally to accede to the Convention. Now, Sir, the particular passage in the Draft. The only part which is immediately relevant to the present discussion is as follows :

“Article 2.—Definition of ‘forced or compulsory labour’.”

I shall read only the strictly relevant words :

“For the purposes of this Convention the term ‘forced or compulsory labour’ shall mean all work or service which is exacted from any person under the menace of any penalty and for which the said person has not offered himself voluntarily.

Nevertheless, for the purposes of this Convention, the term ‘forced or compulsory labour’ shall not include :

- (c) any work or service exacted from any person as a consequence of a conviction in a court of law, provided that the said work or service is carried out under the supervision and control of a public authority and that the said person is not hired to or placed at the disposal of private individuals, companies or associations.”

I must point out to the House at this stage that we must either ratify this Convention wholly or we must decide not to ratify it at all. It is not open to us to ratify with any reservation or qualification, and we must apply the actual terms of the Convention with the strictness of the terms of statutory law. I must, therefore, now ask the indulgence of the House while I very briefly explain to them what is the position with regard to our main difficulty, that is to say, the effect which the ratification of this Convention would have upon the work now carried out among criminal tribes under the Criminal Tribes Act, 1924. The position, Mr. President, briefly is this. Under the Act to which I have already referred, section 16 empowers the Local Government to “establish industrial, agricultural or reformatory settlements” and any criminal tribe in respect of which a notification has been issued under section 11 may be placed in any such settlement. The Act further empowers the Local Government to “establish industrial, agricultural or reformatory schools for children”. The rule-making power in section 20 empowers Local Governments to “make rules for the management, control and supervision of industrial, agricultural or reformatory settlements and schools” and likewise for “the works on which, and the hours during which persons placed in an industrial, agricultural or reformatory settlement shall be employed, the rate at which they shall be paid”, and the like. There is a further provision which is important, section 22, which is obviously essential for carrying on this work. It imposes a definite penalty for breach of the rules on the part of a member of the criminal tribe settled in one of these settlements.

Now, Sir, it is quite clear that when a Local Government takes action under this clause, that is to say, when it first registers criminal tribes, when it institutes a settlement or a reformatory school or the like, it is not taking penal action. That is to say, no sentence is passed on any person concerned. Consequently, though it is necessary that work or service should be exacted, it cannot be said in the terms of the Convention that it is exacted as the consequence of the conviction in a court of law. That is the legal position. But as I have myself always taken a great deal of interest in this work of criminal tribes the House will perhaps bear with me if I endeavour to give them a clearer picture of the facts than the recital of the provisions of law can possibly give. There are at present in India some 61 settlements which have been set up under this Act. They have a population of something over 30,000 people at the present time. In addition to members of criminal tribes who are in settlements formed under sections 16 and 17 of the Act, there are, more particularly in the Bombay Presidency, certain free settlements, that is to say colonies which have been set up by the criminal tribes settlement organisations which are not in any sense part of the settlements actually coming under the Act. This is a question of the reclamation of the criminal tribes, and I hope the House will follow me a little bit closely when I endeavour to explain to them what the intention of this body of legislation is, how it is carried out and what the results so far have been. In dealing with the stages of dealing with the criminal tribes, there are necessarily in the first instance measures of registration and restriction. The second stage is that of institution of settlements, reformatory schools and the like. The third is a very important development, that in which free settlements are formed which pass out to the normal and useful occupation of citizens—a large number of persons who have passed through the previous stages. When I speak more particularly of the work which is being carried out in the Bombay Presidency, I hope that will not be interpreted as any disparagement of the work carried out in the other provinces. I merely wish to give my personal experiences to the House of that which I myself have seen and observed. In the upland plains of the Deccan, as you ride on past the normally settled habitations, you will come across the encampments, large or small, of one of those tribes, may be the Haran Shikaris, the Mang Garudis or the like. They wander about and practise their only means of subsistence which is the habitual commission of crime. Some of them mainly make their living by such offences as coining. It is rather an extraordinary thing that primitive tribes of this kind should practise an offence of this character. Nevertheless, it is true. Others make their livelihood by house-breaking, theft and ordinary depredations. Most of them however have some particular form of crime which they have inherited and which they carry on. In these circumstances they wander about, themselves in the deepest depths of misery, penury, squalor and immorality, committing depredations upon the peaceful inhabitants of the country, making themselves an intolerable nuisance and danger to their fellow-citizens and living in the greatest misery themselves. Nothing is more striking, having seen the raw material, than to go to one of these large settlements, at Bijapur for example, or Hubli, and see the results. Instead of filth, instead of crime, instead of immorality, you see people passing through the phases of reclamation which I have mentioned. In these settlements they are taught agriculture and various useful trades; those that are settled near industrial towns in process of time take their place in the ranks of free labour and carry on the ordinary work of a labourer in conditions very different from those from which they have emerged. What is perhaps an even more beneficent part of this great work are the schools to which the children are sent. It is the invariable practice to attach schools to these settlements: sometimes for obvious reasons children are taken away from their parents and are sent to separate schools. These schools contain provision for the treatment of ailments; boy scouts and girl guides associations are instituted and what is rather a remarkable fact, as those who have had personal contact with this work can testify, is that the children of these unhappy parents very frequently in these schools show an adaptability and intelligence and quickness to learn a degree greater than the normal population of the country.

I do not wish to weary the House for I have already spoken at some considerable length. But I think that I have said enough to convince Honourable Members firstly that work of this kind must necessarily be carried out under conditions of discipline. What is the real remedy if we are to reclaim these criminal tribes with their long traditions of centuries of living by preying upon the community? You will not do it solely by police work, by convictions in courts of law, by long terms of imprisonment. There is one way by which you can reclaim these people permanently and profitably both to themselves and to the country as a whole. You must educate them; you must for that purpose place them under some measure of discipline; you must teach them useful arts and crafts; you must enable them to take, as useful and good citizens, their proper part in society. By that process you will not only add to the number of useful citizens, but you will reduce the number of those who are a danger and a nuisance to the community as a whole. The results on the actual criminal statistics of those provinces in which the work has been carried on most intensively are very striking. I do not wish to weary the House with lengthy statistics, but I hope that they will accept it from me that the result of the work now going on in these criminal tribes settlements is to pass out from year to year large numbers of men, women and children who are really qualified to take a useful part in the body politic. The statistics of crime, more particularly of the kind of crime to which these criminal tribes are addicted, have fallen very effectively, more particularly in the Punjab and Bombay.

But it is perfectly clear that as these are obviously the only sound and sensible and human methods by which this work can be carried out, it must be carried out under discipline. There must be in the last resort some means of enforcing discipline. Consequently we cannot accept the express provisions of this Convention. Either we have to refuse to adopt this Convention, or we have to abolish all this great humanitarian and philanthropic work, the most important work in my humble opinion of that character which is now being carried out in India.

I could speak at very much greater length on the subject of criminal tribes and their methods, but I do not propose to do so as I think I have established my point. It will be apparent to the House that a strict application of the terms of this Convention would operate equally destructively upon the work which is now being carried out in reformatory schools devised for children and youthful offenders. The provisions of this Children Act are designed expressly to avoid the passing of a sentence. These children are sent to reformatory schools; they are subjected to discipline and so forth; but the application of the strict letter of the Convention would similarly prevent this work from being carried out. Therefore it is quite impossible for us to ratify this Convention without the most serious consequences on all beneficent activity. I should like to assure the House that except so far as work of this kind would be interfered with or completely stopped, we have no objection to the general principles involved in the Convention. We are quite prepared to adopt them and to apply them so far as possible provided that our position with regard to these various forms of social enterprise and beneficent activity is left untouched.

Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh (Muzaffarpur cum Champaran : Non-Muhamadan) : Sir, I beg to move that the word "not" occurring between the words "should" and "ratify" be deleted. The Resolution which my Honourable friend the Home Member has just moved relates to the Draft Convention and Recommendations which were adopted by the Fourteenth Session of the International Labour Conference.

(At this stage Mr President vacated the Chair which was taken by Mr. Deputy President.)

The other Resolution which stands lower down in the list in the name of my Honourable friend, Mr. Shillidy, also relates to a Draft Convention and Recommendation of the same session of the International Labour Conference. My Honourable friend Mr. Shillidy brought his Resolution in the Delhi Session, and on my motion, it was adjourned to this session. I should like in the first place to ask my Honourable friend the Home Member as to why this Resolution was not brought forward in the Delhi Session along with the Resolution of Mr. Shillidy. I will attribute to him no motive that this Resolution has now been brought forward in view of the thinness of the House.

I regret that those of our Honourable Members who took part in the International Labour Conference at Geneva are not here with us to give us the benefit of their views on the subject, like Mr. Joshi. I find that Mr. Joshi and Sir Henry Gidney opposed the Resolution of my Honourable friend Mr. Shillidy when it was brought forward before the House in the Delhi Session. But confining myself to the present Resolution, I should like to point out that there is no reason why we should not ratify the Recommendations adopted by the International Labour Conference. India, Sir, is an original member of the League of Nations; and on humanitarian and other grounds of practical utility, I am of opinion that the draft conventions concerning forced or compulsory labour adopted at the 14th session of the International Labour Conference should be ratified by this House. With your permission, Sir, I should like to point out some of the Articles dealing with the subject.

Article I recommends that each Member of the International Labour Organisation which ratifies this Convention undertakes to suppress the use of forced or compulsory labour in all its forms within the shortest possible period. Now, forced or compulsory labour has been defined to mean "all work or service which is exacted from any person under the menace of any penalty and for which such person has not offered himself voluntarily". There are certain exceptions to the employment of forced or compulsory labour, and these exceptions will go a great way to meet the objections which have been raised by my Honourable friend the Home Member. The following services have been exempted from the operation of this Convention:

"(a) Any work or service exacted in virtue of compulsory military service laws for work of a purely military character;

(b) any work or service which forms part of the normal civic obligations of the citizens of a fully self-governing country;

(c) any work or service exacted from any person as a consequence of a conviction in a court of law, provided that the said work or service is carried out under the supervision and control of a public authority;

(d) any work or service exacted in cases of emergency, that is to say, in the event of war, or of a calamity or threatened calamity, such as fire, flood, famine, earthquake, violent epidemic, or epizootic diseases, invasion by animal, insect or vegetable pests, and so on."

Now, Sir, these are very exceptional occasions on which forced or compulsory labour may be utilised, but we find that in many Indian States as well as in British India forced or compulsory labour which is known as the begar system is in vogue on very common occasions. I asked a question on this subject some time back, and I understand that when His Excellency the Viceroy travels by train, villagers are taken out of their homes and are compelled to stand and guard the line, for which they are not paid anything. I do not know whether the visit of a high official could be described as falling in the same category as the visitation of a flood, fire or other calamity. I am of opinion that the use of forced or compulsory labour on an occasion like the one I have described, and to which I drew the attention of the House two or three years ago, should be immediately stopped.

Then, Sir, another Article in these Draft Conventions provides that there should be no imposition of forced or compulsory labour for the benefit of private individuals, companies or associations. Before the employment of forced or compulsory labour, the following points will have to be carefully looked into, namely:

"(a) that the work to be done or the service to be rendered is of important direct interest for the community called upon to do the work or render the service;

(b) that the work or service is of present or imminent necessity;

(c) that it has been impossible to obtain voluntary labour for carrying out the work or rendering the service by the offer of rates of wages and conditions of labour not less favourable than those prevailing in the area concerned for similar work or service; and

(d) that the work or service will not lay too heavy a burden upon the present population, having regard to the labour available and its capacity to undertake the work, and so on."

It has also been provided in one of the Draft Conventions that only adult able-bodied males, who are of an apparent age of not less than 18 and not more than 45 years, may be called upon for forced or compulsory labour, and that ordinarily they will have to be examined by a medical officer to find out that the persons concerned are not suffering from any infectious or contagious disease and that they are physically fit for the work required and for the conditions under which it is to be carried out. There is also exemption provided for school teachers and pupils and of officials of the administration in general. Exemption will also apply to the maintenance in each community of the number of adult able-bodied men indispensable for family and social life, and respect for conjugal and family ties. Sir, I do not find in any of the Articles to which I have referred anything to which any legitimate exception could be taken, and my Honourable friend the Home Member has not taken exception to any of the Articles provided in this Draft Convention. Then again the maximum period for which any person may be taken for forced or compulsory labour of all kinds in any one period of twelve months shall not exceed sixty days. Now, Article 18 of the Draft Convention provides that forced or compulsory labour for the transport of persons or goods, such as the labour of porters or boatmen, shall be abolished within the shortest possible period. What legitimate exception can be taken to a provision like that unless we concede that it is the right of a Government servant, or of any officer for the matter of that, who goes to villages to exact forced labour for carrying his own luggage and other belongings?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar: I am very reluctant to interrupt the Honourable Member. I think his present argument is somewhat beside the point. I pointed out the particular difficulty arising out of the criminal tribes settlements and the analogous case of the Borstal schools. We do not take exception to the other provisions of the Convention though we could not ratify that, because we must ratify either all or none at all, but the other provisions we are prepared to accept and give effect to them, where necessary, as far and as speedily as possible. My Honourable friend has misrepresented my position.

Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh: I am glad to have this assurance from the Honourable Member for which I thank him; but what I want to point out is this, that the objections he has mentioned are for the most part illusory, because some of the objections are covered by some of the Draft Conventions to which I have referred.

Article 25 provides for the illegal exaction of forced or compulsory labour and it shall be punishable as a penal offence. In view of the fact that the Honourable Member generally speaking has not taken objection to the Draft Convention as it stands, I will pass on to the objection which he thinks is insuperable in the way of our ratifying this Convention. He referred, Sir, to the existence of certain criminal tribes settlements in some of the provinces in India under the Criminal Tribes Act.

[Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh.]

Now, the total number of persons on these settlements is about 32,000 or 35,000, but how much forced labour affects the vast millions of persons who have to undergo that. I will not refer to the numerical strength of these people who have settled on these areas in different parts of the country, but I will merely refer to the opinion expressed by the Criminal Tribes Settlement Officer in the Bombay Presidency, and which has been endorsed by the Bombay Government themselves, and it is this. This officer says :

" I do not know if the existence of the settlements is the only difficulty in the way of the Government of India ratifying the Convention, or the amount of pressure which will be exercised upon it to ratify the convention regardless of difficulties.

If the pressure is serious and if the existence of the Criminal Tribes Settlement is the only difficulty in the way of ratification it is possible that modification in the Criminal Tribes Act might be made to bring the Criminal Tribes Act within the terms of the convention."

The Honourable Sir James Grerar : That is not possible.

Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh : I will go a little further into the details. What do the Government of Madras say in their report on the settlements in that Presidency ? They say this :

" In practice, however, the measure of compulsion is very small.

In the three settlements managed by the Salvation Army the conditions of labour are hardly different from those under which ordinary free labourers work. The wages paid by the Salvation Army are what are usually paid to labourers in the neighbourhood. They get their usual daily wages like any other labourer outside and no compulsion or force is used."

In the circumstances, may I know what difficulty there is in our ratifying the Convention ? The Criminal Tribes Settlement Officer of Bombay has made the following remark :

" If it be agreed that the spirit of article 2 (c) would include persons detained in schools established under Children's Acts or Borstal Acts cannot it also be argued that settlements too are meant as training grounds ? "

The Inspector General of Police in the United Provinces has made this remark :

" The settlers cannot be said to be forced to work ; the work is there for them to do but they can if they wish take a ' day off ' and suffer a loss of wages as do labourers elsewhere. The work in settlements is not regarded as forced labour by the settlers themselves."

The Government of the Punjab say as follows :

" In the opinion of the Governor in Council the term ' forced or compulsory labour ' is misleading when applied to the conditions which obtain in the settlements established for the reclamation of criminal tribes. The labour which is done is not for the pecuniary benefit of the employer."

The opinion which my Honourable friend the Home Member has expressed on this point is somewhat at variance with the opinion expressed by the Government of the Punjab. In Bihar and Orissa there is only one little place in Champaran where there is a small settlement. With regard to the maintenance of these settlements and the work which they are doing, I have nothing, but commendation, but I find that the work is under the supervision of the Salvation Army. I do not know whether the Salvation Army is an organisation of Christians. If it is not, I have nothing more to say. But if it is a part and parcel of the Christian religion, I object in the first place to our people, whether they are Hindus or Mussalmans or belong to any other community, being subjected to the discipline of a propagandist organisation of a different denominational character like the Salvation Army. There are so many other institutions, philanthropic institutions, maintained by the Hindus and Mussalmans, and members of the other communities, and I object strongly that under the garb of humanitarian work.

Mr. President : Order, order. The Honourable Member's time is up, but having regard to the importance of the subject, I will allow him five minutes more.

Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh : Thank you, Sir. As I was saying, there are so many other organisations belonging to different religious communities. I should like at this stage to record my protest against the fact that insidious proselytizing influence should be brought to bear upon our people under the garb of training them to be good citizens of the country.

Sir, criminal tribes are not confined to India alone ; there are criminal tribes in other parts of the world as well, but if there is no such difficulty for the other Governments to ratify this forced labour Convention, I do not know why the Government of India should experience any insurmountable difficulty. India is, as I have said, an original member of the League of Nations. She was a signatory to the Treaty of Versailles, and we are always told that India should not be thought to be lagging behind any other country in the matter of international obligations. So far back as 1921, Sir Atul Chatterjee, in addressing the Council of State, stated as follows :

" We have just entered upon a new constitutional era in this country. The eyes of the world, of the democracies of every country in the world are at the moment on us. I am convinced that the Council has a full sense of responsibility for the good name and the dignity of India in international councils. We do not want to be considered a backward nation always and for ever."

It would look rather awkward if India as an original member of the League of Nations fails to ratify this labour Convention on the sole ground that there is in existence in this country a small scattered population which has been termed as criminal tribes. I think that the Criminal Tribes Act could be suitably modified so as to bring it under the terms of the labour Convention. With these words, I move my amendment.

Mr. President : Amendment proposed :

" That the word ' not ' occurring between the words ' should ' and ' ratify ' be deleted."

Mr. B. Das (Orissa Division : Non-Muhammadan) : I beg to move.

Mr. President : I am not asking the Honourable Member to move his amendment now. The procedure I have suggested is this. Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh's amendment is to ratify the Convention. The original Resolution is not to ratify it. I will put after discussion Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh's amendment to the vote. If the House decides to ratify the Convention, then both the amendments of Mr. Das and Mr. Sitaramaraju fail. If that amendment is rejected, then I will call upon Mr. Das to move his amendment, and after that, if necessary, Mr. Sitaramaraju will be called to move his amendment. That is the only procedure which I think will be suitable in this case.

Mr. B. Das : Then I will only say a few words on my Honourable friend Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh's amendment. I thought he would not press his amendment because under the Convention of the International Labour Conference no Convention could be ratified if it was to be modified by the Legislature of any particular country.

Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh : I do not want it to be modified.

Mr. B. Das : My Honourable friend does not want it to be modified, but I find my Honourable friend the Home Member and the Government of India want it to be modified. Sir, I was a member of the International Labour Conference at Geneva in 1929 when the problems on Forced Labour were discussed in the first session and when these questionnaires were drafted. Mr. Shiva Rao and myself were on that particular Committee, and Mr. Clow represented the Government of India. At that time I never thought nor did Mr. Clow think that the Government of India would raise objections which would not be included in the exceptions to Article 2. But I find in the Fourteenth Session of the International Labour Conference that both Mr. Shiva Rao, who represented the Indian workers, and Mr. J. K. Mehta, who represented the Indian employers, went against the Government of India's suggestion for certain exceptions. The Government of India's representative pointed out that they could not recommend the Assembly to ratify, because there were still laws which were at work, and if my Honourable friends Messrs. Mehta and Shiva Rao thought that those laws should be repealed and thereafter Government of India should ratify the Convention, their proper course would have been to accept these things there, and through their representatives here, proceed to repeal the enactments. Within eighteen months after a Convention is adopted at the International Labour Conference, the Government of each member body must bring it up before its Legislature. To repeal these two enactments, whether through our efforts or efforts on the other side—I know the Government are not willing to repeal those two or three social enactments—it will take a long time and in the meanwhile the Draft Convention on Forced Labour will be shelved. Although I have a good deal of sympathy with what the Honourable the Home Member said, I think even if we ask the Government of India to ratify, they will not ratify because they want certain special exceptions under Article 2 of the Draft Convention. I would rather co-operate with the Government so that certain positive action is taken on this Draft Convention and Recommendations.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad (United Provinces Southern Divisions : Muhammadan Rural) : Sir, I support the original motion, though for reasons quite different from those advanced by the Honourable the Mover. I am sure that neither the Members on the Treasury Benches nor the Members on this side will sympathise with me in some of my arguments. I stand by myself. A few years ago I took a very great interest in the work of the League of Nations. I thought at one time that perhaps the League of Nations would be able to find out a solution of the minority problem which is troubling the mind of every politician in India. I took a very great interest in the work of the League of Nations Union in London and its Secretary, Dr. Garnett, who happened to be a close friend of mine, introduced me to its literature. I had a long talk with him and he also gave me references to various organisations at Geneva. I went to Geneva and spent three weeks there, not as representative of the Government and not in any official capacity but purely in a private capacity, and since I could speak French, German and Italian, I had no difficulty in talking with people of all nations from all countries, and I found that the League of Nations was the greatest humbug going. They are trying to do a thing which they are not capable of doing. They have not got the power behind them. Really speaking, there is one good work before the League of Nations now and that will be the test whether the League of Nations is really useful or not. And it is this, at present, America and France have cornered all the gold intended for circulation and left all the nations of the world to look after themselves. If the League of Nations is to be a reality, they ought to have a small authoritative currency committee and it should announce "We don't care anything about gold. We ourselves have made a Convention, that for the value of the paper money, there must be so much gold reserve in the bank". We should then say good-bye to this Convention. I think the exchange value of the paper money of each country ought to be fixed by the League of Nations, so that all the non-gold countries of the world may combine together against the gold countries of the world, i.e., France and America. If the League of Nations will come forward and do a thing of this kind, then I say that is a thing on account of which they can justify their existence. About this particular labour question, I had a talk with the representatives of labour and capitalists, and I found some representatives of labour were really sincere in their efforts. They really wanted to give some relief to labour, but the position of the majority of the people who represented the Government and the capitalists was very different. What they wanted was that the people in other countries should not do sufficient work, so that they may not be able to compete with the countries which manufacture articles. For instance if labourers in Germany did more work than other countries, they would be able to produce articles at a cheaper cost and the other countries would not be able to compete with Germany, and therefore they said that this should be forced on all countries. I went to Germany three times after the war and since I had been a student in German universities I had every facility to enter into the details of this question. Germany was required to pay 175 crores a year for an indefinite period as war indemnity after the war. I asked their representatives in various walks of life how they would be able to pay and they all told me that, by doing more work, for 10 or 12 or even 14 hours a day, they would produce sufficient wealth to pay the war indemnity. The result was that they were able to produce articles cheaply and the other countries were not able to compete with them. India, they all know, is a cheap country. We all know that we have got no machinery, that our labour is not so intelligent as in Europe. If we really want to produce articles at a cheaper cost compared with other European countries, we should not be tied down to 7 or 8 hours. This is all well on paper. This movement is started by capitalists who do not want India to compete with other countries. This movement is not a philanthropic movement. If these capitalists were really sincere, if they had the benefit of labourers in their mind, they ought to have moved an amendment that the labourers should derive proportionate benefit from the wealth which they help to produce. The profit should not go exclusively into the pockets of the capitalists but should be shared by the labourers as well. I told the representatives of labour at that time in Geneva. I tell the champions of labour now that if they want contented labour, they should pay a bonus from the profit to every person engaged in a particular trade or factory. If all the profit goes into the pocket of the capitalists, then it is but natural that labour should have some resentment. They will not be inclined to do the same amount of work, as they would be if they got benefit for the extra work they did.

Mr. B. Das : My friend seems to be speaking on the next motion to be moved by Mr. Shillidy.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad : As my friend seems to be anxious to speak, I shall stop here and reserve my other remarks for the second Resolution.

Mr. B. Sitaramaraju (Ganjam cum Vizagapatam : Non-Muhammadan Rural) Mr. President, I am afraid that the Mover of this amendment, the Honourable gentleman from Muzaffarpore, has not appreciated the difficulties in the way of ratifying a Convention like this. Honourable gentlemen are aware that under Article 405 of the Treaty of Versailles, a condition has been laid down that in proposing these Conventions and trying to apply them to countries other than European countries, due regard should be had to the conditions of those countries. In spite of that direction, year after year, Convention after Convention, has been passed without due regard to the conditions of certain countries whose conditions are different from the European standards. The representatives of both the workmen and the employers who assemble year after year at Geneva made it abundantly clear that the Conventions as drafted at Geneva could not apply in toto to the conditions in India. But the rule is that when a Convention is passed, it should be ratified either in toto or it should be rejected; we cannot ratify it half and half. Under these circumstances I was surprised very much to listen to my Honourable friend, Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh, asking us to forthwith ratify this Convention, not knowing what conditions we are going to legislate upon, and what those conditions actually are, and what are the difficulties in our way. I understood the Honourable the Home Member to say that, so far as the principle of compulsory or forced labour is concerned, he was entirely at one with us in saying that there should be no slavery of any kind or degree or form. I must also emphasize the same view, not only to this audience but also to the world outside, that we on this side of the House as well as the Government on the other side are at one now in saying that there shall be no form of slavery in this country. (Hear,hear.) So far as the principle underlying the Convention is concerned, we agree that it should be supported. The Honourable the Home Member said that the definition in Article 2 is such that it is possible to bring under it conditions of service which the Government of India are not prepared at the present stage to give effect to, particularly in view of the fact that the Criminal Tribes Act and other legislation has to be enforced in this country. I am not very much concerned with the Criminal Tribes Act; but I am concerned with the language of Article 2 which appears to be loose. I shall not be a party to the ratification of this Convention unless I am clearly given to understand what exactly it is going to do and what class of labour it is going to cover. The definition, so far as I can see, is this, that forced and compulsory labour shall mean all work or service which is exacted from any person under the menace of any penalty or for which the said person has not offered himself voluntarily. Now the difficulty is this, that forced or compulsory labour, as I understand it and as I also believe was the intention of the representatives who were parties to this Convention, is slavery similar to that which was prevalent in some colonies where labour was exacted by force and without being paid for. There are forms of service in this country which cannot be strictly called "forced or compulsory" labour, but if this definition is allowed to stand as it is, in its present form, it is very difficult to exempt them from the operation of this clause. Take, for instance, the practice in vogue in the villages in the south, where there are certain communities who are expected to do a particular kind of service without being paid for it. Tradition and custom demands that service. There is a penalty for non-service attached to that custom. It cannot be said that it is a service which the person liable to perform it has himself voluntarily agreed to do. It has been from time immemorial the custom for them to do that particular kind of service without being paid for it. For instance, in the south there are in the villages a certain class of persons whose duty it is, if they belong to a particular community, to drag the cart of the village god through the streets on particular occasions without being paid for it. That is labour which they are bound to do and for which they are not paid. If they do not do that service, then they are liable to suffer the penalty of being outcasted in the village. Then, there are certain kinds and forms of labour performed by the agriculturists in our part of the country, on the farm of the land-owner during certain periods of the agricultural season in a year. It is no part of their written contract, to do that service. The said person cannot be said to have voluntarily agreed to do it. It is incidental to his tenantry. If he does not do it, then there is also a penalty attached to that in that he would be liable to lose the land. Therefore I am afraid the definition as it is drafted would apply to them also. It is clear to my mind that this kind of service should not be treated as compulsory or forced labour. That kind of service would not amount to an abrogation of the liberties of men. I do not think it is the intention of the framers of this convention to bring in that kind of service which is not the kind of slavery prevalent in some colonies which they were anxious to suppress. We are all at one with them in their desire to suppress that. But the difficulty is that we do not know to what extent the operation of such a clause as this can be worked and what practical difficulties it would give rise to. Now that the Honourable the Home Member has given us the assurance that he supports the principle on which this Convention is based and that he will do his best to give effect to as many recommendations as possible under this Convention, I do not see any reason why my Honourable friend, Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh, should think that this Convention should be ratified forthwith regardless of consequences. There was no question that these exemptions should not be exemptions, but the difficulty is, what else should be treated as exemptions; and therefore I say that this amendment should not be supported.

The Honourable Sir James Crerar : Sir, I will only say a very few words in reply to the amendment moved by my Honourable friend, Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh. I think his amendment shows some misconception of the position, and I am afraid he has not done me the honour of following my arguments at all closely. He refers to the merits of various other provisions of the Convention. I do not disagree with him there. He also suggested that the exceptions under clause 2 were of a character which would enable the work of reclamation and reformation to be carried on. But he entirely failed to realize the cardinal point on this issue which had been emphasised by the Honourable gentleman who has just resumed his seat, viz., that we cannot accept this Convention piecemeal. If then we accept it as a whole, we accept definitely Article 2; and if we accept Article 2, we must to a large extent cease our work among the criminal tribes' settlements and the various other schemes. It is quite impossible to amend these Acts—unless the Honourable Member suggests that in order to bring work of that kind within the scope of the Convention, we should pass a law requiring Magistrates to pass convictions either upon the persons confined in the criminal tribes settlements or upon the children there, while the very object of our legislation is to enable them to escape the penalties of a conviction under the law. The Honourable Member has entirely failed to grasp both the legal and the practical part of the question. So far indeed from disapproving or withholding approval from other provisions of the Convention, I am perfectly prepared to accept the amendment of which notice has been given by my Honourable friend, Mr. B. Das, in substitution for my Resolution.

Mr. B. K. Shanmukham Chetty (Salem and Coimbatore cum North Arcot : Non-Muhammadan Rural) : On a point of information,—was any attempt made by the Government of India delegates at Geneva to lay before the Conference fully the special conditions in India and to have an exemption clause, as they did in the case of the Washington Convention?

The Honourable Sir James Crerar : Yes, Sir,—as regards this particular question, the particular points which I have explained were put by the Indian representatives, but not I fear with sufficient clarity or sufficient force or sufficiently elaborately. Moreover certain other arguments were used, based on an entire misconception of the facts which seem to have misled the Conference. I think they were labouring under an entire misconception as to what we had in mind, what conditions we had to contend with; in fact there prevailed much misconception from beginning to end, and it is very unfortunate that the views of the Government of India as expressed through their representatives did not prevail.

Mr. President : The question is :

“That the word ‘not’ occurring between the words ‘should’ and ‘ratify’ be deleted.”

The motion was negatived.

Mr. B. Das : Sir, I beg to move :

“That for the original Resolution the following be substituted :

“While considering that the Draft Convention on forced labour cannot be ratified until Article 2 thereof is modified so as to exclude labour exacted under the Criminal Tribes Act, the Good Conduct Prisoners' Probationary Release Act and other similar social legislation in force in India, this Assembly recommends to the Government of India that they proceed to take action on all other provisions contained in the Draft Convention and the Recommendations as soon as may be practicable.”

The Honourable Sir James Crerar : Sir, I am prepared to accept this amendment.

Mr. B. Das : But I want still to say something about this Resolution. I was present at Geneva along with my Honourable friend Mr. Chetty.

We both took part in these debates and we found that the Government of India did not help us properly in the matters that we raised at the International Labour Conference at Geneva and we were contradicted. And because the Government of India had the right of reply at the end we could not give them a reply. I then told a delegate of the Government of India, Dr. Paranjpye, that I reserved my right to reply to them two or three years afterwards on the floor of the Assembly. I have got that opportunity to-day and I will do it.

Sir, I will first quote an extract from my friend Mr. Chetty's speech where he made a declaration on behalf of the Indian employers about our attitude to forced labour and also long-term contract labour and about things prevalent in the Indian States. My friend Mr. Chetty said :

“It is a question of national importance because a very large number of our fellow Indian subjects find employment both in Asia and in Africa often under conditions of slave labour. Indian employers therefore stand unreservedly for the complete abolition as soon as possible of every kind of slave labour in the world. We therefore heartily support the work of the International Labour Organisation and of the Conference in this matter, for we are anxious to see labour placed on a free basis throughout the world at the earliest possible moment.”

Sir Atul Chatterje who was the leader of the Government delegation refuted that, and subsequently Dr. Paranjpye refuted a similar statement made by me and Mr. Shiva Rao at the International Labour Conference. I will quote Sir Atul Chatterji's speech :

“There is one small point to which Mr. Chetty referred and to which I must make very brief allusion. That is the question of the position of Indian States in regard to the Draft Conventions and Recommendations passed at this Conference. I think Mr. Chetty has overlooked the fact that this is a matter which has received very anxious and prolonged consideration from the Indian Government, and the position was fully explained in a communication made to the Secretary-General of the League of Nations about two years ago.”

And I will give you the reply which the Director Mons. Thomas made to this statement of Sir Atul Chatterjee :

“First of all within the framework of the organisation itself there is the problem of the Indian Native States. Will the work partially, but still considerably, accomplished in British India for the protection of labour survive if competitive industries develop uncontrolled in the Native States? Mr. Chetty exempt from all social charges develop uncontrolled in the Native States? Mr. Chetty has expressed the concern of the employers; Sir Atul Chatterji has explained the difficulties connected with the introduction of protective legislation in the Native States. He recalled the dilemma with which Lord Birkenhead wished to confront us in 1927. Either the ratifications will apply to British India only or we shall not ratify at all. We cannot believe that this will be a final solution.”

I want the House to note this carefully. Mons. Thomas says :

“We cannot believe that this will be a final solution. We believe that we shall receive help from all quarters in the necessary endeavour to obtain a generalisation of just and humane working conditions in the immense communities of India.”

Sir, while I am grateful to the Honourable the Home Member for accepting every Article in the Draft Convention except Article 2 as to work connected with the Criminal Tribes Act and similar social legislation and also the Recommendations, I want a statement either from him or from the representative of the Department of Industries and Labour present as to what steps Government have taken since 1929 to bring the Indian States into harmony with India and whether the Indian States have fulfilled the expectations that the Director of the International Labour Conference expressed. I should also like to know what further negotiations have taken place between the Government of India, the High Commissioner and the office of the International Labour Conference in this matter. Sir, at Geneva I did point out that I strongly resent that Indian Princes should represent India at the League of Nations and I did suggest that a representative of India should challenge their credentials because they do not allow Conventions that are passed in the International Labour Conference to be ratified in their States. Of course we know that in the present circumstances the Government of India have special power and they have reserved power to deal with the Indian States, but I cannot accept any Indian Prince or ruler as my equal or as my representative in international problems when he cannot accept the conditions of work that are laid down at the International Labour Conference. Sir, I hope I will get a reply, or if the Government have slept over it since 1929 I hope they will proceed further in the matter before the reforms are settled at the London Round Table Conference.

Sir, I did mention at the beginning that I told Dr. Paranjpye that I would challenge him on the floor of the Assembly—although he would not be present here—because he was the mouth-piece of the Treasury Benches at the International Labour Conference and tried to mislead the nations of the world gathered there. My friend Mr. Chetty, Mr. Shiva Rao and myself all alluded to the long-term contract labour to which Indians are subjected not only in Assam, but in the Malay States, in Ceylon, in Africa and other places; and I made a statement that Indians thus employed do not find humane conditions of living or proper wages. Dr. Paranjpye made a statement which showed that he was not properly coached by the Government of India. Coming from the province of Bombay,—I know it is your province, Sir,—and being, as he has been all his life, engaged in educational activities, he did not know the conditions of labour to which millions of Indians are still subject though these are not under penal conditions. I can never say that these were under penal conditions. But I know these long term contracts by which thousands of Oriya labourers go to Assam and spend all their life there in poverty and want and they cannot save sufficient money to come back even to their homes. I know also thousands of labourers from Southern India leave their native places and go outside India and cannot return to their homes and Dr. Paranjpye showed an amount of ignorance by picturing glowing conditions of labour, and I will ask the Government of India to be more careful in their future choice of delegates. They should not select men who are not properly conversant with Indian conditions. Dr. Paranjpye twitted the Assembly and spoke as a Member of the Treasury Benches in that International Labour Conference. He stood up to refute what I said. He referred to me and said :

“ He said that the Indian workers are vitally interested in this problem because there are millions of workers affected by it in India, in the Malay States, in Ceylon, and in South Africa, and in other parts of the Dominions where their conditions of work are not human. I do wish that he had been more accurate in his statements, for, so far as Assam and South Africa are concerned, there are no indentures at present, and penal sanctions have been abolished for several years,”.....

I did not speak of indenture nor of penal actions :

“ and in fact there is no recruitment now; there is no long term recruitment in South Africa at all. In the case of Ceylon and Malaya, there are no indentures under penal sanctions, but emigration is allowed by the Government of India only on the advice and with the sanction of the Legislative Assembly, of which my friend Mr. Das is a prominent member. In fact, the Legislative Assembly is keen on seeing that any country to which emigration from India is allowed treats its labourers in no inhuman way, but keeps them in decent and tolerable circumstances.”

Sir, these are matters of opinion. Opinions differ, and Dr. Paranjpye knew that it is a human function. I must ask the Government of India not to send their representatives on international work who are not properly acquainted with facts. I think, such choice does definite harm to India. I do not want to quote Dr. Paranjpye's speech any further. But I have one request to make to the Honourable Members of the Treasury Benches. In future, I do not mind the High Commissioner being the leader at the International Labour Conference. But his advisers, both Indian and European, should be persons who are acquainted with the actual conditions of work in India. Otherwise they make statements which at times resemble the bureaucratic observations coming from the Treasury Benches. I am glad that the Honourable the Home Member accepts this amendment. It will save our face before the world and shows that we are bringing humanising conditions to our workers and are prepared to abolish slavery or forced labour in all forms both in British India and Indian States.

The Honourable Sir James Crerar : I accept this amendment and I have no further observations to make.

Mr. President : The question is :

“ That for the original Resolution, the following be substituted :

“ That while considering that the Draft Convention on forced labour cannot be ratified until Article 2 thereof is modified so as to exclude labour exacted under the Criminal Tribes Act, the Good Conduct Prisoners' Probationary Release Act and other similar social legislation in force in India, this Assembly recommends to the Government of India that they proceed to take action on all other provisions contained in the Draft Convention and the Recommendations as soon as may be practicable.”

The motion was adopted.

RESOLUTION RE DRAFT CONVENTION REGULATING HOURS OF WORK IN OFFICES, HOTELS, ETC.—contd.

Mr. President : Further discussion of the following Resolution moved by Mr. J. A. Shillidy on the 1st April, 1931 :

“ This Assembly, having considered the following Draft Convention and Recommendations adopted by the Fourteenth Session of the International Labour Conference :

- (1) Draft Convention concerning the regulation of hours of work in Commerce and Offices ;
- (2) Recommendation concerning the regulation of hours of work in hotels, restaurants and similar establishments ;
- (3) Recommendation concerning the regulation of hours of work in theatres and other places of public amusement ; and recommends to the Governor General in Council that he should not ratify the Draft Convention nor accept the Recommendations.”

Mr. B. Sitaramaraju (Ganjam cum Vizagapatam : Non-Muham-madan Rural) : At the very outset, I desire to say that I yield to none in my desire to see that the employees get that necessary leisure which we all desire that they should have and which is so essential to their well being. But this Convention, instead of providing for any great relief to the employees, has provided for a maximum control by Government and minimum relief to the employees. It is not the fault of the International Labour Office that the Convention is as it is, because the original draft which was prepared by them was such that it would possibly, without alteration, have benefited the employees. But the delegates who were representing the Government, as well as the delegates of the employers, have combined together and whittled down the provisions of this Convention to such an extent that we find that this Convention, which provides for some relief to the employees, in fact does not provide such relief as we wish them to have. On the other hand, it provides for the entertainment of a large inspecting staff which must be a great burden to the country to maintain without giving adequate relief to the employees. The number of exceptions are so many that one is tempted to believe that they have become the rule. You know, Sir, that in this country most of the labour is agricultural and there is very little labour employed in commercial offices. Added to that, we have in this Convention the provision that all offices of the Government are exempt from the operation of this Convention, that is to say, all Government offices including quasi-Commercial offices like the Posts, Telegraphs and the Railways are all exempt from the operation of this Convention. Then again, Sir, intermittent workers are exempted from this Convention. It must be remembered that when we passed the Railway Act, 1931, we provided for the intermittent workers also, but under this Convention even the intermittent workers are exempt. Not only the offices of Government are exempt but also offices in which the staff is engaged in connection with the administration of public bodies, such as municipalities and local bodies. Then the third exemption is family business which forms the major portion of commercial business in this country. Then confidential servants who work in trade, and in commercial workshops are likewise exempt. Having made so many exemptions to this Convention, it remains to be seen what is the intention of the framers of this Convention and what are the classes of employees which this Convention is expected to cover. The Honourable the Mover of the amendment, Mr. Joshi—I am sorry he is not present here to-day—made an observation in the course of his speech, that the Government which is given also the power to exempt certain classes of private offices, stated that offices which do not contain more than 50 employees need not be brought under this Convention and that Government have got the power to exempt them. I would like to know to what offices the Honourable gentleman meant the Convention should be applied when he said that as it is possible under the Convention for the Government to exempt small offices they may do so where employees less than fifty in number are employed. I would like to know how many commercial offices there are in this country which have got more than 50 employees in their offices. Therefore, if we take the said exceptions and if we take also the advice of Mr. Joshi, and exempt offices where less than 50 employees are employed we find that the number of offices to which this Convention can be applied will be so small that it would not be worth while to ratify a Convention so limited in its scope. In this Convention overtime is not prohibited. It appears that it is almost impossible by legislation to prohibit overtime. Then there is the question of the minimum wage, a subject which is closely allied with this hours Convention. Some time back there was the minimum wage Convention which was brought before the Assembly. On the motion of Mr. Kunzru it was postponed for consideration till the Whitley Commission Report was published. I do not know why that has not been brought before the House now because the Whitley Report has been published. That Report has stated that it is not possible for this country to fix any minimum wage. When we have the authority of a commission to state that it is not possible under the present conditions of this country to fix a minimum wage, it is very difficult to see how we can fix a Convention for hours, because wages and hours of work go together. If the option is given the employee prefers more cash even if he has to work for an extra hour or two in the absence of a wage Convention. Under these conditions it is very difficult to pass any legislation fixing hours of work which can be effective in their case. It is a known fact that, even in European countries where there are powerful combinations of employees, it is always found possible to purchase from them these rights by the employers. Here in this country when our labour organisations are in their infancy it is very difficult if a convention of this description is brought into existence to give effect to such legislation. Further, if we ratify this Convention, we have to employ a staff very much like the factory staff, which means a heavy expenditure. In the present circumstances of the country it is very difficult to find the necessary money to employ such a big staff. Mr. Shillidy, the Mover of the Resolution, remarked that village officers may be requisitioned for these purposes. But I am afraid the question of village officers does not arise in this case at all, because as I have already stated big commercial houses where more than fifty men are employed which are to be covered by this Convention will be so few in the country and none in the villages for any inspector to go and check. He has also stated that the local bodies should give their help. I do not think it is possible for the local bodies to give any help of this description. I venture to submit that under these circumstances it is very difficult for us to ratify the Convention, which gives us only Government control without giving any relief to the people for whom it is intended to legislate. With these few words I oppose the amendment and support the Resolution.

Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad (United Provinces Southern Divisions : Muhammadan Rural) : Sir, I support the original motion ; and continuing my speech in connection with the last motion, in the first place, I would recommend very strongly to the General Purposes Sub-Committee that they ought to retrench substantially if not altogether our subvention to the League of Nations, because as I said it is a society which is not doing very useful work, and the one work which I just suggested I am sure they would not do. As I said in my last speech, the sympathy for labour is not based really on humanitarian grounds, but it is really on account of trade competition. I am really convinced of that from my conversations at Geneva with the people who proposed to represent labour interests. India is a country where living comparatively is very cheap, where people are accustomed to hard labour. Go to any village and you will find that the farmer and cultivator in India is really a very hard working man. Nobody ever came forward among the sympathisers of labour to say anything about the condition of poor cultivators. They spoke about labour in factories and railways, but not a single word has ever been said about the labour employed in agricultural operations, in spite of the fact that they form the preponderating majority. The thing is that if you give an option to any labourer in India and say, "Would you like to have eight hours' work and rest, or would you like to do more work and get a bonus for the extra work you do ? ”, I am positively certain that in India almost cent. per cent. will say, “ We are willing to do more work and you will please pay us the bonus ”. The really serious objection is this ; that the poorer people are required to do the extra work not for their benefit, but for capitalists and the money which they earn goes into the pocket of the capitalist. That is the trouble ; but if a portion of the money which these poor people earn also goes into their own pockets, then I am certain that the question will never arise from the side of the labourer. I think the International Conferences at Geneva and elsewhere will do really a very great service to the world if instead of taking up the cause of labour from the point of view of comfort, they press the labour problem from the other side, and insist that the capitalist should be allowed to have a profit not greater than the bank rate of interest in that particular country ; and any profit which is earned over and above that bank rate of interest ought to be shared proportionately by all who help to produce the wealth—the capitalist will have a share, the manager will have a share and the labouring people will have their shares. This is really the point which the people there ought to press and this is the only way which will induce the labourer to do hard work with contentment and try to produce things cheaply in order to stand the competition of the world. If we merely stop the labourer doing full work in one place so that another country may be able to produce cheaper in the world's market, it will be no help to the country and no help to the labour. It is a very selfish thing to do ; and from what I have seen I strongly oppose it. We have seen this question of the Labour Convention applied on the railways ; it has cost enormous sums of money to the railways ; and I think if they had distributed this sum of money which we are spending on account of the Convention among the people for whose benefit it is made, they would appreciate it better.

Mr. S. G. Jog (Berar Representative) : Sir, I am very thankful to the Chair for giving me an opportunity to speak, but I shall not detain the House very long. I am rising under a certain pledge given to the Honourable the Mover of the amendment, otherwise I would not have intervened in this debate at all. On the last occasion when the Resolution was being discussed,—and I must point out that it was discussed at the fag end of the session—there was no proper discussion, and it was thought fit that the matter should be discussed at the Simla Session. The Honourable the Mover of the amendment, Mr. N. M. Joshi, has left this as a sort of legacy. I know that generally legacies are left by the dead, but I do not view this legacy in that sense. Mr. Joshi, who is busy with other important work at the Round Table Conference, was very anxious that his amendment should be passed, and in that I feel that a certain sanctity attaches to the Mover of the amendment. On this side of the House we must see that his cause does not suffer in his absence. I am surprised to find that the Government Member should bring forward such a Resolution as this and that he should not be prepared to give effect to the Recommendations of the League of Nations. What are the Recommendations ? The Recommendations are really very small matters. The Recommendations ask Government to make investigation into the conditions of life and work as regards hours of work in the case of employees of hotels and restaurants. In fact, I feel there should have been two Resolutions, but somehow both the Resolutions have been combined into one, and it has caused some confusion. However, I am concerned only with the Recommendations, and hey are that investigation should be made within a period of four long years—there is no particular hurry about it. It is not a thing which is to be reported within two or three months. I know the Government have got a big agency at their disposal, and if they are really serious, they can certainly collect the material. The difficulties which my friend Mr. Shillidy referred to are in my opinion somewhat exaggerated, and that is done with a view to shirk responsibility. The Government agency is very strong. If they want to find what articles there are in my house or in the house of any villager, they can certainly find all that out ; if they really want to do so, but if they don't want to do anything they can create all sorts of difficulties in your way and say that such and such a thing cannot be done. I do not see any reason why the existing agency should not be utilised for collecting such information which the League wants before taking any further action. This is only spade work, a sort of preliminary or preparatory work ; we are only to collect information before any action is taken. This in short is the recommendation of the Convention, and I see no reason why the Government Member should bring forward any difficulties and lower the credit of India in the eyes of other nations. When we make recommendations there, when our representatives sign the Conventions, they are in a way morally bound, and even the Government of India are morally bound, when their representatives attest their signature to the Convention, and so I think the Government of India should at least make an honest effort to carry out the Recommendations. This, I think, is the position which the Government should ordinarily take. Instead of that, I am surprised to find that some obstructive methods have been adopted by the Government. I believe the Government have taken to Swarajist ways.

Mr. J. A. Shillidy (Secretary, Industries and Labour Department) : Sir, I do not think it is necessary for me to make a long speech at so late an hour in the session. I can summarise very briefly the objections to the Convention. They are that the Convention is so wide in its terms, that it comprises a great many different kinds of businesses working under different conditions and that it is not really practicable to devise a convention so wide in its terms which will be practicable in application. The next objection is that it recommends a 48-hour week for those particular offices which are covered by the Convention. Now, in India, so far as factories are concerned, there is a 60-hour week, and for mines a 54-hour week. The Labour Commission after most exhaustive examination have suggested a 54-hour week for factories. Is it reasonable for us to go straight into a 48-hour week for commercial offices when we may still have a 54-hour week for factories ?

Then I come to the third point. If we accept this Convention we should have to put up a very large inspection staff. That point has already been made by my friend, Mr. Sitaramaraju. He however seems to have misunderstood me in one remark. He seemed to argue as if I advocated inspection by village officers. If he will look up my speech, he will find that I said rather the opposite, that unless Government were going to use village officers for this, they would have to employ a very large new inspectorate, but I asked the House if they considered village officers would be a suitable inspectorate for work of this kind. That I think was somewhat different to what he thought I said.

I will just turn to one further point. Mr. Jog raised the question of the Recommendations, and asked why did we not inquire into the different professions to which the Recommendations relate. I think he rather misunderstood the question. The Recommendations are to inquire into the professions named in order to see if the Draft Convention can be applied to them. But if you do not accept the Draft Convention, then what is the use of making an inquiry to find whether that Draft Convention should be applied to other professions or not.

Mr. S. G. Jog : Where is the objection to accept it ?

Mr. J. A. Shillidy : The reasonable and practicable objection that we have decided to take no action in regard to the Draft Convention.

There is only one other point I would like to make before I sit down. In the course of the debate in the last session, one of the speakers said that the Government of India had been very backward in ratifying Conventions. Now it may interest the House to know that India, with the exception of one country, has ratified more Conventions than any other overseas country—Australia, Canada, South Africa, Japan, China—these are the few names that occur to me, and it gives the pride of place only to Cuba. And, Sir, if anything further has to be said as to whether our work has been appreciated or not, I would just like to read out a few remarks which have been made about the work of India in this connection. The Director of the International Labour Office wrote :

“ I should be much obliged if you would convey to the Government of India the gratitude of the International Labour organization and its great appreciation of the manner in which the Government of India is fulfilling its obligations and of the conspicuous example of social and labour progress which she is thus showing to the world.” (Applause.)

This is a somewhat old report I may say, but I can carry it to a later date. The Director's report further recognises the efforts of India in the following paragraph :

“ The action taken by the Government of India with regard to the ratification of the Washington decisions may be regarded as the just tangible results in the East of the ideals inspiring paragraph 13 of the Treaty of Peace.”

The Belgian workers' delegation in 1927 in supporting the nomination of Sir Atul Chatterjee said :

“ I have another reason for supporting his candidature namely that he represents a distant country which from the beginning of the work of this organization has taken a great interest in it. His country has ratified many conventions, and I see in his nomination a sign of collaboration which already exists between European countries and countries in other parts of the world.”

The Italian representative also supported him because he was the representative of an important overseas country, and “ the first overseas country, I believe, to ratify the Washington hours of labour ”.

Mr. Gaya Prasad Singh : Any other testimonial ?

Mr. J. A. Shillidy : I have got another testimonial. Miss Bondfield in 1926, speaking at Geneva, said :

“ We do place on record with great thankfulness the improvements which have already taken place in India and Japan as a result of the work of the International Labour Conference.”

And she went on to say later :

“ I wish to join with those who have already appealed to the Government of Japan. Japan occupies a middle position. It is behind what has been accomplished in India and is ahead of China.”

She says again :

“ I trust India in the same way and I feel very relieved to find that India has not let me down.”

I merely make these statements because it has been said from time to time that the Government of India have been very slow in ratifying the Conventions. Here are statements made by impartial people about our work, and I would only remind this House that at the last Geneva Conference the representative of the Indian employers sounded a word of warning that we were going far too fast ; at the same time, the representative of the workers said that we were going much too slow. Sir Atul Chatterjee not unnaturally said to the Conference, that the Government of India was attacked on both sides, and probably it was on the whole fairly well right.

Sir, I have nothing more to say.

Mr. President : The question is :

“ That the word ‘ not ’ occurring between the words ‘ should ’ and ‘ ratify ’ be deleted and the word ‘ and ’ be substituted for the word ‘ nor ’ occurring between the words ‘ Convention ’ and ‘ accept ’.”

The motion was negatived.

Mr. President : I now put the original Resolution. The question is :

“ This Assembly, having considered the following Draft Convention and Recommendations adopted by the Fourteenth Session of the International Labour Conference :

- (1) Draft Convention concerning the regulation of hours of work in Commerce and Offices ;
- (2) Recommendation concerning the regulation of hours of work in hotels, restaurants and similar establishments ;
- (3) Recommendation concerning the regulation of hours of work in theatres and other places of public amusement ; and
- (4) Recommendation concerning the regulation of hours of work in establishments for the treatment or the care of the sick, infirm, destitute or mentally unfit, recommends to the Governor General in Council that he should not ratify the Draft Convention nor accept the Recommendations.”

The motion was adopted.

Mr. President : The only thing that remains now is to consider to what date this session should be adjourned. Honourable Members are aware that the Finance Bill remains to be considered by the Assembly, and Government have given an assurance to Honourable Members that they will agree to the session being adjourned to meet in Delhi, on such date as would enable the Assembly to go through the procedure legally necessary in regard to this Bill. The matter has formed the subject of very careful consideration, and the Chair has tried to consult some of the Honourable Members on both sides of the House. The problem of fixing the date is complicated by the fact that the Diwali holidays intervene. It has therefore been suggested that the Assembly should adjourn to the 4th November and take up first the consideration stage of the Finance Bill, which may take three days or perhaps four. Then, there should be a short adjournment for Diwali holidays and the consideration of the Bill, clause by clause, should be taken up either on the 10th or the 11th, in order that the whole process may be completed within the time allowed. Honourable Members are aware that, as soon as a Finance Bill is introduced, certain taxes begin to be collected, and unless the Central Legislature sanctions such taxation within sixty days, the amount collected would have to be refunded. It is therefore essential that both Houses of the Legislature should arrive at decisions in regard to the Finance Bill within 60 days of its introduction. If consideration of the Finance Bill, clause by clause, begins, say, at the latest on the 11th, then there will be only a very few days left to deal with it by both the Legislatures. It is therefore proposed that when once consideration clause by clause begins, the House should meet if necessary during all the six days of the week, and if that is not sufficient, to meet for longer hours during some days. I am sure Honourable Members are agreed that there should be no delay in coming to a definite conclusion one way or the other in time to obviate the risk of being called upon to refund the taxes collected. I therefore take it that the House agrees with me in the programme which I have suggested and that they further agree that I should adjourn this Assembly to the 4th November, 1931, to meet at Delhi. This session is now adjourned to the 4th November, 1931, at 11 o'clock at Delhi.

The Assembly then adjourned till Eleven of the Clock on Wednesday, the 4th November, 1931, at Delhi.

RULING(S)—Bill(s)—

A motion to refer a — to a Select Committee is perfectly in order without previous publication of the — in the Gazette of India, but no Report of the Select Committee can be made or considered by the Assembly without such previous publication. 1183-84.

When an alternative amendment is moved the old ground is not allowed to be covered because that is repetition. 1429.

Demands for Supplementary Grants—

Honourable Members are entitled to say that they will give only one rupee against a — made by Government but in that case they will have to deal more with the financial aspect than with a particular grievance. 1228.

If the — does not contain a provision for any item, that item cannot be discussed under that particular demand. 1245.

The fact that a motion appears on the Order Paper does not mean that the Chair has allowed that motion. A point of order can always be raised when a motion is attempted to be moved and it is always open to the Chair to rule that motion out of order. 1245.

Indian Press (Emergency Powers) Bill—

All the amendments of which notice had been previously given to the Indian Press Bill which had since been withdrawn, would be allowed to be moved in respect of the —, with such modifications as might be called for. 1277.

Miscellaneous—

An Honourable Member may read a few extracts to support the point of view which he holds, but he cannot be allowed to read elaborate extracts in the course of the debate. 321.

An Honourable Member should resume his seat when a point of order is raised. 325.

As soon as any unparliamentary expression is used, it is open to any Honourable Member to call attention to it. 1350.

Honourable Members are not entitled to speak again, but they can briefly explain the reasons for withdrawing their motions. 1495.

If an Honourable Member quotes an extract in refutation of another Honourable Member's argument, it is not a personal explanation. 331.

In making personal explanations, Honourable Members must restrict themselves to them only and should not make a reply. 1226.

It is only the Chair that has the right to call Honourable Members to order. 317.

The expression "mean advantage" is very offensive and is not allowed. 1473.

Question(s)—

Honourable Members are entitled to ask — in regard to legislation which stands on the Indian Statute-book and any supplementary — which deals directly with that legislation is admissible. 990.

RULING(S)—contd.Question(s)—contd.

Honourable Members giving notice of short notice — should be in their seats to put them. The Chair cannot allow any other Honourable Member to put that —. 427.

There is no rule or Standing Order which compels Government to give answers to —. Honourable Members on the Treasury Benches are entitled to say that they want notice of a — put as a supplementary —. 600.
